To Broadcast From New Studio

The new radio building is completed and ready for use. Although the 1000-watt equipment is not yet ready, the new studio will be occupied for the broadcasting of regular Tuesday and Thursday evening programs, beginning January 6. A feature of the first program broadcast from the new studio will be an address by President Frederick M. Smith.

It is hoped that weather conditions will permit erection of the new antenna and installation of the old 250-watt radiocaster in the new building in time for the christening of the new studio.

Work on the 1000-watt equipment has progressed rather slowly, largely due to delays in receiving certain necessary materials. During the past week several important pieces of apparatus have been received, including meters, rheostats, and motor-generator storage battery charging equipment. The new Western Electric amplifier panel is now in operation, and many reports have been received commenting upon the improved transmission.

Before the new station is operated it must be licensed by the Government as a Class B Broadcasting Station. This means that the equipment must pass rigid inspection and tests by Government inspectors. There is possibility of some delay in having an inspection made, because of the insufficient number of radio inspectors for the vast amount of inspection work to be done.

The radio campaign committee asks that those who have not already made final reports on radio collections do so as soon as possible. Anyone who has not contributed towards the erection of the new station and who desires to do so should send their donations to Radio K F I X, Independence, Missouri.

We Are Workers Together With God.—No. 1

One of the illusions is that the nearer men get to God the less work they will have to do. Heaven has been pictured as a place of eternal rest, the monotony of which is relieved only by angelic symphonies when the hosts of heaven sing peons of praises to God forevermore.

I recall a boyhood experience. It came during a religious revival service. The preacher in eloquent and impassioned terms was illustrating the future state of the ultra good. He drew a picture of a great white throne, upholstered and bejeweled, on which God sits, forever and forever—never vacating for one brief instant.

And around the throne were other thrones, similar yet inferior, in ever-widening circles, on which were seated the saints who had come up through much tribulation. Each had a harp in his hands. The one occupation of the redeemed for a never-ending eternity was just to sit and play and sing. The highest realization for eternity was one continuous songfest with no intermissions.

The picture changed. The minister then attempted to reveal the final condition of the damned. He told us how the lost souls were in a place of eternal activity, where men never ceased to work; just continued on, and on, and on. They were eternally doing something.

I recollected from the illustration. I thought that either I had not heard aright or else the minister had his story crossed. I rebelled at the idea of thrones—metal, cushioned, material thrones. I shuddered as I contemplated an eternity of idleness and music. I said, “If this presentation is true, I’d rather take my chances in Hades, working, than sitting and singing, in Heaven. Music has its legitimate place in time and in eternity, but a never-ending chorus is without attraction to real men and women.

I cannot conceive of God sitting, forever sitting, on a material throne, content in receiving the continuous applause of sycophants and time servers—adulations of individuals content to thank God throughout eternity that they are better off than less-favored souls. I cannot conceive of God sitting... at all in the sense in which we would use the term. God reigns—yes. And he occupies a throne. But how does he reign? And where is his throne? Is his an external government? And is his throne isolated and apart from his universe? Is it lifted up and separated from its creatures?

God's throne is within and not without his universe. He is enshrined in the hearts and lives of men and women—in the creative impulse of all living things. His throne is in brain, and brawn, and mind, and heart; in sun and stars; in towering peak and winding stream; in growing shrub and waving grain; in the cooing of a babe and the warble of birds. His glory is the conscious and voluntary response and cooperation of all sentient things. He reigns in a universe of intensified and manifest energy.

Whittier in his poem, "The brother of mercy," aptly illustrates the absurdity of the sectarian heaven. Pierro, the monk, is nearing the end of a long and eventful career. His lifelong effort has been to serve and minister to the needs of his fellows. He has been impelled by but one ambition—to work, and for others. He has never wearied in doing good. Now he is old and decrepit. His feet no longer carry him to service, and his hands fail him in an effort to minister. The will is strong, but the body is weak. A fellow monk comes to comfort him. Pierro, in retrospect, speaks thus of his earthly ambitions:

I loved the work. It was its own reward.
I never counted on it to offset
My sins, which are many, or make less my debt,
To the free grace and mercy of my Lord.

And the monk gave answer:
Thou shalt sit down
Clad in white robes and wear a golden crown
Forever and forever.

And Pierro replied:
I am too poor for such grand company;
The crown would be too heavy for this gray
Old head. And, God forgive me, if I say;
It would be hard to sit there day and night
Like an image in the tribune, doing naught
With these hard hands, that all my life have wrought,
Not for bread alone, but for pity's sake.
I love my fellows—the worst I know
I would do good to. Will death change me so
That I shall sit among the lazy saints.
Turning a deaf ear to the sore complaints
Of souls that suffer? Why, I have never yet
Or ass o'erladen. Must I love man less Than dog or ass in holy selfishness?

Mistaken Identity

Thrice within three days from points two thousand miles apart there have come to our office inquiries concerning a document which purports to report a "prophecy given at the Stone Church, Independence, July 6, 1924, by Elder S. A. Burgess." These statements all agree in stating that a revelation will be given to the church through the President of the church at the coming General Conference; that power will be poured out upon the church, and peace shall come to the church as a cherishing fountain.

There evidently has been an error some way and possibly a confusion of names, for I did not at the Stone Church, July 26, 1924, nor at any other time or place, give this purported prophecy.

Together with others I have felt very marked impressions of spiritual power, especially the past two or three years, but I have been very careful with regard to making any public statement, as I have rarely felt commanded to say anything publicly. (Rarely, that is, in comparison with the evidence which it has pleased our Father to give me from time to time.)

It has happened many times in the past twenty-five years that I have received evidence that a revelation would be given the church, and an intimation as to its nature, which has later been confirmed in a rather startling manner. But I have always considered that such were given for the purpose of confirmation, and have never at any time made such evidence public in advance. Proper courtesy and a desire for order promotes such an attitude.

Furthermore, that which is presented to the church rightly should receive earnest and prayerful consideration; when and where it is presented. This is a duty as well as a privilege.

In the third place, inspiration has always seemed to me to be for the purpose of increasing our understanding, not as a substitute to relieve us of responsibility for meeting the issues which squarely confront us. The glory of God is intelligence, and revelations can come only to a thinking, praying people. A communication may be received by the prophet, but it is not a revelation to the members of the church until they are able to understand it and have evidence of its truth and divinity. A revelation is not a specie of magic nor a substitute for thought, but is a message from God, to the intelligence of his people. To receive it rightly, means we must thoughtfully and prayerfully consider the problems before us. Then when the Lord speaks we are ready by prayer for faithful consideration and to receive the divine assurance of its truth.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Then there is a fourth reason, worthy of at least brief mention, and that is the very character of the present problem. Our late president and prophet, Joseph Smith, said and repeated that the Lord always reserves to himself the right to act independently. The record of the past shows many instances when he has done so. Especially has this been true when the prophet is himself attacked or is a party to the difficulty. This does not relieve us of our responsibility but does give an assurance of righteous peace under God.

It may be safe to add that we have felt a spirit of peace many times in the past three years, despite the seriousness of the situation; and an assurance that the power of God will be made manifest, and that in his own way peace in a wonderful measure will be brought to his church, to those who deserve it, who come up, if need be, by tribulation. The purposes of God cannot be frustrated. His purposes cannot be achieved by those who harbor ill will or fear toward their brethren. The love of God is infinite. We have for several years foreseen the glory of his approaching coming like a glowing dawn before the rising of a summer sun.

We should pray, but we should also study out in our own minds the problems before us and seek through the law of God to learn the truth. Zion would doubtless have been redeemed ere this if the church as a whole, each of us, were truly ready; and if each of us were seeking with profound humility and even through humiliation, if need be, to learn and do the will of God; to seek to do the law and to him who gave it, so that with brotherly love righteousness may prevail.

We believe firmly in the gift of prophecy through the Holy Spirit. The Lord has comforted many of his people. Our faith will abide in him, seeking through the law and to him who gave it. But for this particular publication the undersigned is not responsible in any manner.

May peace with truth and righteousness cover the church as a mantle the coming year.

The Spirit of the Song

At one of the reunions of the past season there was a marked effort on the part of the song leader to avoid music which could not be understood or interpreted by the congregation. From day to day the half hour or quarter hour of song service preceding the preaching services became more interesting, drew larger assemblies, and prepared the people to listen attentively to the preaching. This was particularly commendable, because this particular song leader understands and loves the classics in music and was denying herself that the people might have the benefit and become fused by the spirit of songs they could understand and sing. We comprehend this as intelligent service.

How different is the effect when a small group of accomplished musicians present productions difficult of interpretation, because there are a few pairs of trained ears which can understand! And have you noted how these who have been fed by the classical song seem to have had all they want and depart the service ere the preacher begins to deliver his message? Of course there is a place in our church services for a solo, duet, quartet, or anthem by the choir, but the character of these selections should be such as will feed the congregation, and not the few. We criticize the elder who delivers a sermon which is “over the heads” of his hearers and feel that he lacks judgment, even though there may be another elder or two present who gather comfort and great good from his sermon. The same criticism is merited by the music director who persistently directs or permits the song to be rendered which is beyond the comprehension of the body of listeners.

We meet the elder who likes to preach “big” sermons, if we are wise, by calling the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons together, or summoning a specially selected congregation, that he may say what he chooses and in the manner he chooses, and a large percentage of his hearers may get benefit. Should not we also get for the musician, who feels himself uncalled to speak in the language of the bulk of the congregation, the select body of hearers?

Perusing a news letter from Brother J. L. Williams, of Bevier, Missouri, we find appended his opinion on a similar consideration, in the following language:

“The installation of a 1000-watt broadcasting station contemplated by the church at Independence is one of the most important moves ever made by the church. If we could only be assured that at least one service in the week, preferably the Sunday night service, would use exclusively for the song service songs of our own, or other familiar gospel hymns, it would be splendid. Most of these hymns are sermons in themselves and fit a person to enjoy and get full benefit of... the sermon which follows. That is the reason Station WC BD, Zion, Illinois, is the most popular station on the air. Their sacred concerts are one hundred per cent good old familiar hymns. With nearly six hundred other stations broadcasting classical music nearly every hour of the day and night, it is a relief to hear some of the good old hymns that never get old, and never die. Even jazz is a relief to the continuous, unmelodious, nonunderstandable, ever-persistent classics. The same talent devoted to the familiar hymns would appeal to the thousands, whereas the other music will appeal to only about one in a thousand. After listening to one of these ultra-classical programs preceding the sermon, one is not in the mood to listen to the sermon.

After all, we can only get benefit from that which we understand. A certain apostle who has always had a wide influence in the Christian church expressed himself in these words:

He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church. I would that ye all spake with tongues, but rather that ye prophesied: for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret that the church may receive edifying. . . . If I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine? And even things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle? So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak it into the air.

We believe that the spirit of the song and of the sermon is important, and we know that the great majority of people interpret the spirit by the words, and if harmony of tone can be made to assist in the interpretation, let this agency be used. Let us study to become of like understanding, both by song and sermon, using the things we can interpret to lead us to those which we at present are not able to understand. The apostle’s reflection might also be our conclusion:

I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all: yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.

The New Los Angeles Church

Elder Walter W. Smith writes from Los Angeles that the new church building is completed. They are now in the act of installing furniture and hope to have the building ready for formal opening about February 1. Meetings are being held at present in the Sunday school room. This is not the largest or most commodious church building that the church has, but it is probably the most modern and best equipped. The building committee has covered itself with credit, having completed the building some seven thousand dollars under the first estimate of cost. This is so unusual in the building enterprise as to attract attention and deserves commendation. Brother Smith also reports that in addition to the central church they are maintaining five separate missions in the city and vicinity.

Burning of Des Moines Church

The evening Tribune, Des Moines, Iowa, for December 29, contains a few words about the fire which destroyed the Saints' church building located at 715 East Twelfth Street, mentioned in the Herald for December 31.

From this account we glean that the church’s interior is entirely destroyed, and the outer walls are mostly standing, though the south wall collapsed; and when it did so, George Purinton, a fireman, was thrown from a twenty-four-foot ladder and severely injured. B. W. Weaver, another fireman, was injured by falling plaster.

The loss is given as from $20,000 to $25,000, and the insurance in force as $3,500. The newspaper also makes this statement:

Only a few seats and the piano were saved, according to Reverend David E. Dowker, pastor of the church, who announced that $3,500 insurance was being carried. A new $30,000 church will be built soon, according to Bishop O. E. Clark, who had just finished services in the church yesterday, a short time before the fire broke out.

A letter from the pastor, Brother David E. Dowker, states that the blaze started about half past twelve o’clock, Sunday, December 28, near the flue. The branch met on Monday, December 29, and appointed a building and finance committee. Strong interest was manifested. They await adjustment of fire insurance, when serious work on a new building will be undertaken. The old church is a complete loss.

Know the Law
BY BISHOP ISRAEL A. SMITH

As stated in former articles, it has been our desire to have the present controversy decided after the members of the church have been advised as to the issues involved and the law bearing thereon as found in the standard books of the church and as interpreted by the established procedure of the Reorganization.

The discussion has taken a wide range—quite as wide as the discussion had before the council of April last. However, the April council has this extenuating circumstance to offer, and that is the discussion there grew out of various topics, but here it has been supposed to be limited to the supreme directional control resolution which, it is expected, will be presented in some form for adoption at the next General Conference.

Theocratic democracy, common consent, priesthood rights of the Presidency and their right to interpret the revelations, and numerous ramifications have been included by different writers. There is very much indeed wherein there is no real division, in my opinion. Men have different mentalities and hold different views or envisage the same things in different ways or colorings.

And out of it all no doubt there is some misunderstanding as to what others really believe on account of unfortunate methods of expression or misrepresentations carried by word of mouth. The writer may have done others some injustice, and he may possibly have failed to put himself in exactly the position he has desired.

But "getting down to brass tacks," in Dawesian parlance, there is no necessity for extended arguments and duplication of articles to prove that the Presidency has general oversight and general direction of the work of the church in all of its departments, when that has never been denied and has, in fact, been specifically admitted. To some this general oversight and direction is carried to the point where this quorum has powers of supreme administrative control (which means dictation), to the overriding of any and all officials, quorums, or councils who may differ from it, either as to the wisdom or legality of the things proposed.

To others, who grant to the Presidency the large powers of direction and control given in the law and the established practice of the church, as does the writer, this directional authority cannot be interpreted or applied as meaning that all other offices, officers, quorums, and departments are in all things subordinate to the Presidency, and that in case of any differences of opinion between officers, quorums, or departments in the course of the administration of their work the Presidency shall have the final word or decision in all cases.

My emphatic denial of supreme directional control to the Presidency applies also to the Presiding Bishopric and all other quorums and offices. My position simply is that in all matters affecting temporalities, the organic law, conference resolutions, and the practice of the Reorganized Church have placed upon the Bishopric the responsibility requiring the exercise of discretionary powers, which would be nullified by an ever-present supreme directional control over them by another office or quorum—hence the primary right of decision on these matters is properly lodged with the Bishopric, subject to such appeal in case of error of judgment or improper use of discretion as the nature of the case might require, in order that the interests of the church shall be conserved.

If the church is soon to decide the issues according to "the law and the testimony," it is incumbent upon all who would teach to meet squarely the material issues which now keep us apart.

The editorials on "Authority in church government" by A. B. Phillips are, we believe, representative of one side of the controversy. In order that Herald readers may more closely examine and compare, we herewith present some thoughts from another viewpoint which are relevant and we believe important to a proper understanding of our situation.

We hold ourself answerable to the church for the validity of every argument, claim, or position taken by us in these columns, and believe that the works of others should be subject to close scrutiny without any thought of the personalities involved. For the reader's convenience we shall take up the points at issue as nearly as possible in the order in which they appear in the editorials. It should be understood, however, that space does not permit us to do more than touch briefly upon the more material points.

Is Common Consent Required?

Let us first notice the brother's position on common consent—a subject which has been quite well exploited in the past two or three years, we admit, but is still doing service. On page 1190 it is strongly implied that supporting the priesthood is common consent. After reference is made to the fact that God took Moses and the holy (Melchisedec) priesthood from the midst of the Israelites because of the “hardness of their hearts,” the brother states:

This history proves that the authority of the holy priesthood may be taken from the midst of a people who refuse their support, the common consent which God asks of his people in this respect.

This has the tone of a threat. It is a weapon commonly used to exalt priesthood authority but has never been given a place in the Reorganization. Every member in this church by his very act of fellowship pays tribute to the authority of priesthood. Admitting that “hardness of fellowship pays tribute to the authority of priesthood,” the brother states:

Every member in this church by his very act of fellowship pays tribute to the authority of priesthood. Admitting that it is a foundation stone upon which the church stands, we certainly must demur to any interpretation of common consent by which it is not just as legitimate and honorable to refuse to support the priesthood, under certain conditions, as it is to support supinely all that may come from this source. God has a special work for the ordained men to do, but this church loses its identity when it indorses the “living oracles” and “obey counsel” doctrine so popular in Utah. All—“ALL are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together ... for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.”—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8. All are called and all have access to the throne of grace through Christ’s intercession. In our humble judgment, the power and progress of this work is not dependent upon a royal priesthood and a subservient laity. Neither do we incline to the idea that God’s wrath will be so enkindled by a failure of common assent that the “little stone, which was cut out of the mountain without hands,” shall be taken from the earth.

The Argument of “Rank”

After quoting the Doctrine and Covenants on precedence of authority in meetings where no previous organization exists and also among the “standing ministry” (122:9), the brother by a parity of reasoning places bishops seventh in rank in church government. The “law” cited for this “fact” is found in the Articles of Incorporation. Preceding them in the list are: (1) Presidency, (2) twelve, (3) high council, then the quorums of (4) high priests, (5) seventies, and (6) elders.

The editorial then states:

It will be seen that in these articles the temporal jurisdiction of the bishops is placed in the seventh rank, and is subject to “higher church authorities.”

This is a strange argument! By it we learn that a quorum of elders ranks higher in “temporal jurisdiction” than the Presiding Bishop, and that the trustee-in-trust is also subordinate to the quorums of seventy, high priests, etc. By the process of inductive reasoning the argument would have been conclusive had it gone one step farther and shown that “God has set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, and after that miracles ...” (1 Corinthians 12:28)—thus making the teachers third in rank in church government and giving the bishopric no rank whatsoever. If this does not follow, then in order to give the Presidency control over temporalities a rule of logic is applied to the Articles of Incorporation which is not permissible in interpretation of the Bible.

We seriously doubt that the Articles of Incorporation were ever intended to interpret the organic relationship of general church officers, but even if they did, why does the editorial read, “subject to higher church authorities,” when the articles clearly state, “said bishops having temporal jurisdiction subject to the general direction of the church, and higher church authorities”? The brother’s silence upon this provision in the Articles of Incorporation, that the bishopric is subject to the general direction of the church, happily avoids any conflict with the recently expressed position of the President that General Conference “should not presume to issue orders to any man or officer.” Consistency still demands that the “rank” be observed and that the secondary jurisdiction of “higher church authorities” should not be given supreme powers in direction. The “open letter” affirms the primary authority of the church which makes its expression through General Conference, and we have already admitted the general direction of the “higher church authorities,” so that our position is in full accord with the Articles of Incorporation.

In passing let us remind you that the Articles of Incorporation provide specifically as shown in our former article, that the “temporal jurisdiction” of “trustees-in-trust is vested in the Presiding Bishop and his counselors and not in quorums of elders or other quorums, “it being understood that no person can be trustee of said corporation except the Presiding Bishop of said church and his counselors.”

Why have these patent facts been ignored when it is so important that the membership should KNOW THE LAW? (To be continued.)

Optimism is the motive power of a successful life. Without it labor lacks incentive and endeavor has no goal. Optimism is a form of faith—a faith in the possibilities of the future, a faith in the ability to overcome and achieve.

Optimism destroys suspicion and doubt. No height is too steep, no reward too great, to be won by youthful energy if it be impelled by the magic touch of optimism. Look forward. Look upward and press onward with the hope and confidence that all will be well.—Glad Tidings.
Get Right With God.—No. 1

BY EDWARD RANNIE

The human family will never be free from difficulties until that "which is perfect is come"; and so it will be with the church as an organization. We should not complain about them; they are not to be pushed aside, but are to be solved, and if we do not solve them we admit our inability or our unwillingness so to do. We can solve them only in God's way, so our effort should be to get into cooperation with him, or, in other words, get right with God.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly of heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. —Matthew 11: 29.

Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock.—Matthew 7: 24.

It would be a pleasure to any of us as members of the church if it could be truthfully said of us that we were "wise men," and we are told how we can earn such words of commendation. It will be because we do the things that our Lord commands us to do, many of which are recorded in the sermon on the mount.

If we are right with God we will have the mind of Christ (Philippians 2: 5), and when we are in that condition we will not cause contention or take part in it and hinder the work of the Lord as was done by the early Saints, which was one cause for their being driven out of Jackson County in 1833. (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 3.)

And no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be instructed to his care.—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

Charity (love) is kind. Have we been kind for several years in our church troubles? Do we behave unseemly toward each other? (1 Corinthians 13: 4, 5.) If we do not keep the law of love, Paul says we are nothing, and Jesus says we cannot assist in the Lord's work. Would not that be a sad condition in which to find ourselves, not being permitted to assist in the Lord's work, being outcasts, and some one else taking our place?

The good King Benjamin preached a sermon to the Nephites a short time before he died. It occupies eleven pages in the Book of Mormon. When he had finished his wonderful sermon, he asked the people if they believed what he had been preaching to them, and the answer was:

And they all cried with one voice, saying, Yea, we believe all the words which thou hast spoken unto us; and also, we know of their surety and truth, because of the Spirit of the Lord Omnipotent, which has wrought a mighty change in us, or in our hearts, that we have no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually.—Mosiah 3: 2, 3.

Those people were right with God. What a happy condition to be in! No jarrings or contentions; all moved by the same love that caused Jesus to give his life for the world. When shall we be like those Nephites were?

My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted and sorely chastened.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 2.

They were not right with God. Jesus says if we will not forgive the trespasses of our brother, God will not forgive us (Matthew 6: 15). The things that we say and do indicate the condition of our hearts, and though they may be small and appear to be trifling matters, they are a sure index of our spiritual condition and tell whether or not we are right with God.

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.—John 13: 35.

Love expresses itself in what we do; and if we do not do the things Jesus commands us to do, people will not know we are his disciples, and when in that condition we are not right with God.

The Holy Spirit will guide us into all truth (John 16: 13), and it is given to those that obey him. (Acts 5: 32.) Then we will be the light of the world. Then we will be right with God. The great work of the Lord cannot be accomplished without God's help, and he will not help us unless we walk humbly before him, and our righteousness must exceed that of the world. (Matthew 5: 20.)

Unless we are right with God, we will not make good use of our material wealth; we will be selfish, and it will be a poison to our souls and destroy our spiritual life, and so we will become completely separated from God.

We cannot carry into effect the law of stewardships and establish Zion, and have equality and so eliminate poverty and have no poor, unless we are right with God.

We cannot carry on in a successful manner our missionary work and reach the nations with the glad message of the gospel unless we are right with God.

Unless we are right with God, our pleasures will destroy us financially, and so we will have no money to carry on the Lord's work; and the end will be spiritual ruin and moral decline—we will lose all interest in the Lord's work.

If we do not get right with God and keep in that condition, he will do with us as he did at Nauvoo—cast us out and find another people to do his work. The Lord is patient and long-suffering, but he will not allow the world to sit too long in darkness, waiting for his people to stop their foolishness and get

busy and do the work they covenanted to do when they entered the church.

The fact that nearly ninety-four years have passed since the church was organized and we have not reached the world with the gospel message, not even since the church was organized and we have not put it into practice immediately and lived in that way for about one hundred and sixty years, and poverty was banished from the land. There were no poor among them, and they were the happiest people in all the world.

Get right with God should be our slogan, and our difficulties will disappear before the next General Conference.

Who Shall Lead Us?

BY JOHN PILLING

The articles on church government published in the SAINTS' HERALD a few months since have been very interesting to me and have caused me to think about the church and its work and my attitude towards it. We have many different views, showing a lack of agreement and harmony, where peace and good will should prevail. So far as I am concerned I do not care whether the church government is autocratic or democratic, or whether it is a democratic-theocracy or a theocratic-democracy. The vital question with me is, Are we making progress? Are we moving towards the objective of the church—the establishment of Zion in reality?

There must be many things that hinder the progress of the church: One of them is the failure of the people to accept the counsel and wisdom of its authorized leader. Another is to place upon our leader such restrictive limitations as make him a follower and not a leader; and one of the surest signs of the lack of a leader, or the lack of following the leader, is for the church to resolve itself into a body of worshipers spending their time in differences and disunion.

I cannot imagine there is in the church one member who questions the right of our President to occupy his office, or that anyone can question his integrity or his character; but it seems to me that some think the President is not in close touch or communion with that divine power that leads and guides into all truth.

All of us acknowledge Jesus Christ as the head of the church, and that he has commissioned men in these last days to represent him, and that our President is commissioned of Jesus Christ to be the head of the church upon the earth at the present time; and as such he is surely entitled to divine guidance and direction for the progress and uplift of the church; and whosoever heareth and doeth his sayings and teachings, when they are not out of harmony with divine law, buildeth his house upon a rock; and they that seek to make his words and works of no account, are building their house upon the sand; and it appears to me that a number of very competent men have lost their love for the work of the church in the past few years.

We are taught that bread alone is not sufficient to sustain life physically and spiritually, but we must have the word of God coming to us now, and the word must come through the appointed one. God has spoken in times past, and we believe he will speak in the future, but it is very hard to believe he is speaking now, especially when we are determined upon doing our own way. Some of us are quite carried away by an oratorical display that is preceded by, “Thus saith the Spirit,” and overlook wise suggestions and directions that are likely to be of more value to us than the transient visitation of prophetic power.

The Lord knows the beginning and the end; and when we are counseled to do certain things, there is a necessity for them, and we are supposed to do, and not spend our time in arguing the matter. The Lord does not thank us for doing his word, because it is the best thing to do, and it is ourselves that need to be thankful for the way being shown to us, to demonstrate first and argue last.

The manager of a large corporation where I work sends word to the help through representatives, and the help must act accordingly, no matter if they have opinions of their own; and the person who does not obey the managerial word is considered to be hindering the progress of that corporation; and we may hinder the establishment of Zion because we refuse to do the things we are directed to do by Jesus Christ, through the President of the church. I have listened to great numbers of sermons about Zion, and I have sung the songs of Zion so much that I do not need to use a hymn book, and while these inspire hope, reality must come by direction.

The Book of Mormon teaches me that the gospel way begins in “mists of darkness” and ends at the tree of life. My scant knowledge of natural law leads me to believe that the church cannot rise any higher or go farther than its head, and if we are satisfied to remain in an indefinite, indeterminate condition of mind, we may be very happy in our innocence; but remaining so will not get us anywhere. And how shall I know or how shall you know which direction to go to the tree of life or to Zion unless we are directed by the appointed one?

I do not want the opinion of our President, ex-
NEWS AND LETTERS

The Work Is Onward in New Zealand

We have Brother H. Peisker stationed with us to help establish the gospel, and although he has done much tracting and cottage preaching, there have not been any signs of an increase. We pray the seed sown will some day bear fruit. There are so many different forms of religion prevalent these days that people are becoming careful with whom they associate themselves, and others regard the churches as money-making concerns, so that they would sooner spend their time and money in pursuit of pleasure than be associated with them.

We have Sunday school at 19 Coleridge Street, Sydenham, every Sunday from eleven to twelve, and sacrament every first Sunday in the month.

We have preaching service every Sunday evening at the home of Sister Sanders, which is situated at the north end of the city. Mr. Sanders is not a member of the church, but is very favorably inclined to the cause, and we hope that some day he will yield obedience. Their four children come to Sunday school every Sunday, and they are to be complimented on their attendance, for they are also members of a Sunday school close to their home. We also have two other pupils who come quite a distance, and it is necessary for some one to bring them, as they are too young to come all the way by themselves.

We have commenced holding prayer meeting in our place every Thursday night, when all participate in testimony and prayer, from which we all benefit.

Brother Peisker visited the Saints at Lemuka, one hundred miles south, recently, and held a week’s mission in a hall; but it was a failure, for the people would not attend, although he canvassed the town and advertised in the local papers concerning it. Yet they will crowd to hear a Hickson or a Wigglesworth, and we wonder why. Well, this gospel has to be preached for a witness to all the world, and we have to do our best to present it to the people; we can do no more.

We are pleased at the advancement the church has made in spreading the gospel via radio, and we hope some day to be able to tune in and hear the programs broadcast by K F I X. Our two boys have recently installed a crystal set, and they are able to listen to the concerts broadcast locally; but they are not satisfied with it and are looking forward to having a tube set and loud speaker so that all can hear at once.

Mr. Bell, in the South Island (L A A) of New Zealand, has been the first to get in touch with America both ways, and also with England. This will mean a great advantage in the commercial field, and as the church is the pioneer of sermon broadcasting, we should keep ourselves in advance of all and present programs which are of the best, edifying to all who hear. I am sure the ones in charge will do so. Success to the radio.

We have given much thought to the controversy which has arisen and is ventilated in the HERALD of late, and trust and pray that before the next conference all differences of opinion will be obliterated and the machinery of the church in good running order again, oiled and directed by revelation from God and not left to be directed by human agency. I believe that the ones involved should follow the advice of Brother Griffiths in his last letter, and let God manage the affairs of this church as directed. We should not follow the tactics of the world in settling disputes; rather, we should come and reason (not argue) together.

Maybe God allows these controversies to arise so that the membership will make themselves conversant with his laws and revelations. We are going to commence a close study of the Doctrine and Covenants, and as we have a good and studious teacher in Brother Peisker, we mean to benefit thereby.

A person is never too old to learn, as one old lady told me in the shop the other day when I was telling her something, and it is a true saying.

We are trying hard to procure a hall or building for our services, but it is difficult to get one handy. We have one in view in one of the suburbs, but have not decided on it yet. I have invited an Adventist to our place on Monday night to talk over the Sabbath question, and we hope much good will come of it, for we are asking some of our neighbors in to hear it and have asked him to bring some of his members along.

I have the Book of Mormon loaned to a pastor of the Pentecostal assembly, the same people the Italian members of Philadelphia belonged to. We were pleased to hear of their acceptance of the truth when it was presented to them. I have forwarded my subscriptions to the Standard office for the renewal of the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. I hope that it reaches you in good time, so that I shall not miss any of the papers. We always look forward for the American mails, as there is always something good in the church papers and periodicals for us to read and enjoy.

I ever pray for the advancement of the latter-day glory, and that peace and harmony may prevail in the leading quorums.

Your brother in Christ,

J. C. BRADLEY.

SYDENHAM, CHRISTCHURCH, 19 Coleridge Street, November 16.

Owen Sound, Ontario

December 15.—For the benefit of the many who are acquainted with Elder J. L. Mortimer, we will say that he has been confined to his bed for the past two weeks. He is very weak and seems to be gradually failing. The doctors have no hope for him and think he cannot live long.

The branch is expecting Elder J. H. Yager to visit here in the new year. We hope to have a good time with him.

The membership of the branch are taking a deep interest in the coming annual business meeting. We are hoping our forces will become so organized that our branch will be more active in trying to reach those who are honest in this city.
Denver to Columbus

My first stop after leaving Denver was at Independence, where I remained for a week. I was kept quite busy during my sojourn in the city of Zion; delivered three stereopticon lectures in the brick church on the south side to large audiences, and the people present seemed to appreciate the same. The writer was blessed with a good degree of the Spirit in the presentation of these lectures. Brother R. J. Lambert, who has oversight of Church affairs there, gave me a kind reception and rendered what assistance he could to make the meetings a success.

I preached on Sunday morning at the Stone Church and also had charge of the social service there that day. During the Sunday school hour I was requested to make a speech to one of the large classes of young people in the Hodrickite building on the Temple Lot. Preached in Walnut Park's new church in the evening, which church is a great credit to the people who erected it. I was greeted by a full house and felt at home in their presence. I felt greatly blessed of the Lord in all my weak efforts that day to encourage and stimulate the Saints to continue in the grand work of the Lord in which we are engaged.

I met with hundreds of old friends whom I had met in different parts of the world; i.e., Australia, England, Wales, Canada, and different parts of the States. It makes one feel good to grasp the hands of those with whom he has been associated for so many years. Both young and old extended me a glad hand, and I truly appreciated the kindly feeling that was manifested towards me by those of like precious faith. We may disagree and criticize one another at times, but after all, there is no people that seems so near and dear to our hearts as those in gospel ties. The best of all is that we are very dear and precious in the sight of our blessed Lord and Savior, who intercedes for us daily at the right hand of his Father. How happy we should be to know that we have such a dear friend, who loves his Saints and, when he comes to earth as King of kings and Lord of lords, will receive them unto himself, that he can be with them and they with him through the millennial reign. Such a hope as we have as a people should inspire us to be very humble and faithful in performance of the duties he has enjoined upon us in his service. We ought to be able to say with the poet from the depths of our hearts, “It is good to be a Saint in latter days.” “Storms may howl and clouds may gather; all must work for good to me.” We must not lose sight of the fact that God must have a tried people and that those who will cling tenaciously to the rod of iron will be the ones who will have access to the tree of life in the midst of the paradise of God. In all this warfare and trying times that we are called upon to pass through, we must exercise requisite faith in God and in his precious promises and possess our souls in patience. In the darkest hour, if we will put our trust in God, there will appear a silver lining. Let us, therefore, trust implicitly in the promises of God.

My next stop was at Hamilton, where I preached one sermon and met our worthy brother, Richard Ballard. The next day Brother Snider took us in his automobile to Far West, where we visited with old friends and brethren. While standing on the corner stone, I was reminded of the mass meeting that was held there forty-six years ago this last summer, and of the wonderful sermon that was preached by William B. Smith, who was one of the first apostles in the church, and a brother to Joseph the Martyr. His subject was “The temple.” I never heard such a grand sermon on this topic before or since.

Brother John M. Terry and I spoke on that occasion, standing on the same corner stone. It was a great gathering. The people living there were the descendants of the mob that drove the Saints away from Far West. Very few, if any, remain there now, because of death entering in or having moved away. There is now a new class of industrious people occupying the county.

I was instrumental, in company with Emsley Curtis, in opening up the work in Daviess County, where fourteen Saints were thrown into the well by the mob. Also organized a branch on the other side of the Grand River and one on the Croket. However, both branches have ceased to exist. Subsequently traveled with Brethren Alexander H. Smith, W. Bozarth, and others throughout that country. Many changes have taken place there since those days. We now have a number of branches in what is known as Far West Stake, and many good Latter Day Saints are to be found in the land from which the early Saints were driven. This is in part fulfillment of the prophecy that God would build up the waste places of Zion.

Preached one night on my way home at one branch in Chicago, the name of which I do not call to mind at this time. Brother Baldwin met me at the station and took me to his home. I spent the day with him. I enjoyed my visit with him and the Saints with whom I met at the church that night. Sorry that I could not remain in Chicago over the following Sabbath, as I was anxious to meet Saints in the other two branches. I had received word that one of my daughters was quite ill, and felt it my duty to get home as soon as possible. Found her much improved, and she has been gaining in health ever since.

Since coming home I have been kept very busy. Attended a priesthood conference at Cleveland and a young people’s convention at Lock Four, Pennsylvania, both of which were a success. Have visited Canton, Akron, Barberton, Creola, and McDermott.

At the latter place, on last Sunday, Brother James E. Bishop and I dedicated their new church. There was a large crowd present, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. Much credit is due the people at this place for the effort they have put forth, as they have a very commodious building to worship in. They generally have a good many outsiders attending their meetings. The prospect of an ingathering of people there is very bright. Brother Clarence Current, branch president, is a faithful man, and he has associated with him a real active priesthood. So I say, we are looking for good results here, at McDermott. There were several present from the Pleasant Valley Branch, which is seven miles away; also a good number from Ironton Branch, forty-five miles distant. There was a splendid spiritual sacramental service in the forenoon; also a priesthood meeting. All seemed to enjoy themselves, notwithstanding it rained all day.

I arrived at Ironton Sunday night in time to preach in the beautiful new church that they have erected during the past year. The people there merit great praise for the accomplishment. It is an attractive building, both on the inside and out. This is an evidence that our people are trying to build up our church in the localities in which they reside.

Preached last night and will preach again to-night. Will leave in the morning for Syracuse, where one of the first branches was organized in these central States, where my parents, I have been told, were thrown into the well. The branch on which I was blessed in 1861. I remember seeing Apostles W. W. Blair, James W. Gillen, James E. Blakeslee, and other leading men in the church who visited us when I was a boy. The men named herein were young men in those days, all of whom have passed over the great divide. I am calling at Syracuse to see my brother William Henry’s grave. He died sixty-five years ago. Hence to Parkersburg, Moundville, Wheeling, Wellsburg, West Virginia, Bellaire, and Steubenville, Ohio; then home to spend Christmas with my loved ones.
My loving companion passed away one year ago to-day. This has been a great loss to me and my church work. It has made me feel very sad to-day, though I realize that her spirit is at rest in the paradise of God, and that she has been freed from the great suffering she had endured for many years. How blessed it is to die in the Lord and to leave an example to the world that is worthy of imitation and that stimulates associates in this world to live the life of a Saint. I wish all a Merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS

Santa Ana, California

Thanksgiving found the Santa Ana Saints with many things to be thankful for, which they evidenced by their early attendance at the eight o'clock prayer and praise service at the church on Thanksgiving Day. The latter-day gospel, a free government, health, and the friendship of Saints were among the blessings mentioned in their testimonies.

After experimenting many months on various lesson subjects the Religion has once more taken up the study of the Book of Mormon, ordering the new quarterlies for that purpose. The story of God's dealings with the ancient Americans will ever be fascinating to the people of our faith, and it well deserves to be.

Severe colds seem to be passing the rounds here like an epidemic. Brother Panky and his stepson, Dair Johnson, have just passed through a three weeks' siege of it, and are now nicely recovering.

When the young people's Sunday school class start anything they can always be relied upon to finish it—with credit. Not long ago they concluded that the Christmas offering and the social spirit of the branch needed a boost. A chicken supper was decided upon. Committees got busy—and set the pastor busy too, running errands because he couldn't be relied upon to make a chicken pie—with the result that about ninety people flocked to the church basement for a supper unexcelled and afterwards a fine entertainment. We cannot measure the social benefits, but nearly twenty-four dollars was added to the Christmas offering.

Santa Ana sends Christmas greetings to the other branches of Southern California; and may this spirit spread and intensify throughout the church. May the Christ spirit of peace on earth, good will to men fill the place of controversy.

Foraker News

WEBB CITY, OKLAHOMA.—Brothers Earl D. Bailey and James Thomas were the guests of Foraker Saints over the night of Tuesday, October 25. Also Brother Hubert Case and Apostle E. J. Geazer were with us over Thanksgiving, Brother Geazer preaching Wednesday night, Thursday morning, and again that night, to audiences who greatly appreciated the messages he brought to them.

Thursday afternoon, after dinner had been dispensed with, a branch was organized by Brothers Geazer and Case. This includes the Saints living about six miles southwest of here in a group, also the scattered members of the oil fields, in what is known as "Burbank's District." This included members from Shidler, Webb City, Denoys, Cooper, and Burbanks. The branch was given the name of Foraker, as that was formerly the nearest town, although Shidler and Webb City are nearer, and Lyman is about the same distance.

Brother F. F. Wipper came to this place and started the work about four years ago and is kindly remembered by many. Next Brother Alvin Christensen opened up the work here and baptized eight. He was then joined by Brother Hubert Case, and with their united efforts twenty-one were brought into the fold.

At the organization of the branch, Brother Christensen and Brother Case each spoke about fifteen minutes, giving expression to the joy they felt at seeing this organization brought about. A roll call was next in order, and it was found that there were more than sixty charter members. Priest Edward Workman was ordained an elder, and Renben Workman a deacon. Both are fine young men. Elder Workman was chosen to take charge, with Brother George Swain as teacher, Sister Laura Storms secretary; Sister Mabel Workman organist. Elder A. Slover was sustained as elder and was recommended by Brother Geazer to labor at Webb City and Shidler as time would permit.

Brother Slover and Brother Edward Workman have labored faithfully the last six months among this people. They have held services every Sunday and have built up an interesting Sunday school and Religion of about forty members. We feel that their work has been conducive of much good.

Thanksgiving night we had with us the Montague family of young people from Burbanks, also Sister Frances Wheeler from Hominy, who taught her first term of school at this place several years ago. She was gladly received by former patrons and pupils. Also Brother James Thomas returned with the Montagues and had charge of the singing, accompanied by Brother and Sister Christensen on the violin and flute, and Brother Workman at the organ. There were also present a Brother and Sister Defreeze, from Jenks, Oklahoma, and Brother and Sister Newman, from Washumia.

We feel that this was a day long to be remembered by the Saints who are now known as Foraker Branch.

Lamar, Colorado

December 11.—Wiley Branch recently enjoyed a visit from District President Bruce E. Brown and his wife. While they were here we observed the annual College Day by presenting an appropriate program. Four of Graceland's departments were creditably represented, and the numbers were favorably accepted by all present. Later in the week a pie supper was given for the benefit of the college.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards made a short stop here on his way to Denver. We regretted that he could not stay longer. Thanksgiving Day services were held at the church, and a turkey dinner was served to about one hundred, including Brother J. R. Sutton and wife, who were with us several days.

Conference at Syracuse

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK.—Our district president, Brother P. L. Weegar, has been conducting institutes at several places in the State, and Syracuse was selected as one.

On October 4 and 5 Saints from Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Rochester, Sherrill, and Fulton, gathered with the Syracuse Saints and made successful Syracuse's first conference. We held meetings in our hall on State Street Saturday afternoon and evening and all day Sunday. Through the kindness of one of Sister Eleanor Whitehead's friends, all were permitted to get their meals at the same restaurant at reduced prices, having the banquet hall to ourselves without cost.

Brother James Pycock has been conducting a series of meetings here, meeting at the different homes. None can afford to miss his sermons, is all we can say. There was something worth while every time. He made his home with Brother and Sister Morris E. Whitehead for two weeks.

Brother Eugene C. Cole, eighty-two years of age, underwent a very serious operation a few weeks ago and was not expected to recover, but he was administered to by Brother Frank Mesle, and at this writing he gets out for a walk every day. All consider this a very wonderful thing.

Our departments are all working hard to keep "the ship sailing." Instead of holding their regular business meeting in October, the Department of Women invited all the Saints and their friends to the home of Pastor Arthur Richardson, to be entertained by Miss Elsie Elms, an Indian girl who is lecturing on "The true American." She entertained us by solos, readings, and a very interesting talk, after which the sisters served ice cream and cake. Miss Elms gave her program free of charge, as she is very much interested in the church and wishes to join our local department.

Young People's Convention at Rock Island, Illinois

The convention for Kewanee and Eastern Iowa Districts was held November 27 to 30.

We were very fortunate in having as our principal speakers, F. M. McDowell and Sister Blanche Edwards, who were with us throughout the convention and to whom we are indebted for the wonderful inspirational lectures we received, accompanied by an outpouring of the Spirit of God.

On Thursday evening, at the opening service, a musical program was given and enjoyed by all; also five-minute talks by representatives of the various branches were encouraging and foretold a good convention.

At half past eight each morning we were led in excellent prayer meetings by Brothers E. A. Curtis, F. M. McDowell, and E. R. Davis. With such themes as "Putting God into everything we do," and "Conservation," these services will long be remembered as spiritual milestones in our lives, for the Spirit was with us to a very marked degree.

At a quarter of ten Brother F. M. McDowell attempted to "steal Sister Edwards's thunder," as he called it. On Friday and Saturday mornings he delivered two excellent lectures on the "Social principles of the gospel," which outlined a life of service which would measure up to the stature of Christ. "Aim, problem, method, and principles," were the skeleton upon which he based his talk.

"What was the aim of Christ? He came that we might have life and have it more abundantly. Seek first the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness. Do we have that more abundant life now? Is the kingdom of God within you as well as among you? 'Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven,' we pray, but is it done here? We stress too much the kingdom of heaven above as a selfish reward, but if the kingdom of God hereafter comes to me as a reward or gift without any relation to what I do for you, I do not want that kingdom. I could not be happy in it, for it is not possible for a man to be saved alone. Why do you call that man good? Whom has he saved? What has he done for some one else?

"The gospel of Christ has got to help this world to-day. In the last generation the world has been revolutionized, and people have been taken by millions and piled up in tenement houses, and children have been turned into the streets. If this gospel is to be of any use, it must meet the problems of to-day; it must solve the labor and capital problems, the international problems, etc. Some of the things we like in this world are modern improvements and inventions (some Latter Day Saints think we have a monopoly on conservation, but if they could appreciate the sacrifice and life toll of some of the inventors they would value them more highly), religious freedom (which has cost the lives of thousands of people), educational opportunities, scientific knowledge, etc., all of which have cost a nameless price. Some of the things we do not like are: vice, selfishness, disease, war, class conflict, etc. Has this church anything to do with this? Have we a right to discuss unsolvable questions in our Sunday school classes while the world is dying? The world has made the wrong use of the good things, the power, the wealth, etc., and as a result millions suffer; but by the right use of these things we can revolutionize the world. Our task, the social problem, seems to be the getting into the hearts of men the attitude which will cause them to use their powers for the establishment of the kingdom of God and the establishment of a better world. We can make this earth a hell or a kingdom of God, according to the use we make of wealth, power, etc.

"I want to harness the powers of the young people, their faith and vision and zeal, to make a better place out of this world. This church has not yet shown the way of human living together. When we do that, we need not worry about proving by Old Testament scriptures that our church was organized at the correct time.

"Christ gives us a program for the regeneration of the individual through faith, repentance, baptism, etc., for the changing of the attitude, the whole heart, into love. The secondary or social principles in this great game of living together are: Human life is sacred; men belong together and must work out their salvation together; private ambition must spend itself in the interests of humanity, and in service to it; and private power, property, and talent must be used to build a better world."

At eleven o'clock on Thursday and Friday mornings, Sister Blanche Edwards spoke on the subject of religious education. After a very interesting and enlightening talk upon the history of education in all ages of the world, with its varying objectives, such as culture, athletics, mental training, chivalry, etc., she gave this definition: "What life at its best and fullest demands from the individual, that education seeks to supply."

"It shall train their affections, their love, and their hatred, eliminate the bad qualities and develop the good. Do you want an education so you can get more pay for less work? This world is selfish to the core, and education must develop not only the intellect but the emotions and the will-power, and character strong enough to stand firm and true.

"What is religion? It is surely something more than rites and ceremonies and the recitation of prayers. I like to think of it in the terms of the life of Christ, the life of God in the souls of men—"Called to be colaborers with God." Religious education is not a substitution for this divine feeling, the essence of religion. Some who can quote passages of scripture from all the books and discuss the organization of the church so easily have missed this divine essence of religion, because they have no patience with youth or love for humanity. Religious education is to so purify conditions everywhere that a child will have a chance of living right from childhood unto old age in unbroken reverence to God. Conservation, rather than conversion, as the Salvation Army has proved, is far better; for a child kept from evil in the right way can render a service incomparable to that rendered by one who, after the wild oats have been sown and the best part of his life wasted, is converted unto the right. Other people out in the world have been giving this problem their study; they are agreed that never in the history of the world was there such a need as there is to-day for a definite, organized plan of religious education, and they have not received the call which has been placed upon us, to consecrate, to qualify, to do!"
The Saints’ Herald for January 7, 1925

“The horrible facts in regard to crime, immorality, divorce, capital and labor quarrels, immigration, etc., are even more terrible when we realize the apathy of the American people. Is it of any use to hide our heads in the sand and say the problem doesn’t exist? Some say that when this generation rises up, these things will be removed by education, but will they? The results of a most heartless, disinterested, scientific test of the school children of Indiana indicates they will lie, cheat, steal, if they are given an opportunity. They are little experts in biology, etc., but in morals they are falling farther and farther back. Is it not a great task?

“The solution of this problem lies within the province of our intelligence. All around us there are agencies that we can use if we will, and one of the finest of these is the school, not only the narrow education of now, but that which will cause the children to face their problems and solve them in terms of Christ. The Indian test has a very hopeful ending; for after deciding that something was radically wrong, they began a system of education and training in Christian principles and honest living, and then they were secretly tested again, and ninety per cent qualified this time as ethically sound and morally correct. Children can be taught to be religious and to live as Christ would have them live, and this fact places an added responsibility upon our shoulders, for it is up to us to see that it is done.

“Another most wonderful agency in this great work is in the home. To the women has been given a wonderful responsibility, and some of the most important work of the world has been given to women, and no matter how efficient the church with its departments, and however capable the day school and college are, they can never do what the home can do. There is our great opportunity.”

On Friday evening Sister Edwards gave a wonderful lecture on the theme of “Finding happiness.” Even when children were disappointed if our fairy tales did not end in happiness for the hero and heroine, and we felt cheated if our stories did not have a happy ending.

At a round table talk on Saturday afternoon Brother McDowell impressed us with the thought that it is not sufficient to forbid our young people to engage in harmful recreation; we must supply them with wholesome and interesting play and direct their surplus energy in the paths of right. Sister Edwards also suggested in an impressive talk that our Department of Women should meet the needs of the home, and while sewing, etc., the conversation should be above the petty gossip so common and destructive. So many beautiful things are within our reach to discuss and ponder that these busy hours can be made a source of inspiration and joy.

“Youth is the time to choose, a period of infancy, of growth. God has given a man twenty-one years of plasticity, and in those twenty-one years he can get lower than the beasts of the field, yet at one time he was a beautiful babe in his mother’s arms. Happy is the man who chooses right—woe to him who chooses wrong. We must choose, for he who chooses not to choose has chosen. What you are ten years from now will be largely the result of your own choice. Young men and women have fought their way through college with every drawback in the world, poverty and physical disability, yet because of their choice and grit they have succeeded.”

“There was a time when I hated the thought of being a girl. With the greatest of rebellion I gave up my tomboy ways. I could hardly be reconciled to being a girl and fought for every inch of my girlhood. My folks understood my keen desire to do something, and they influenced me to read the lives of great men and women and to realize that the poor, despised members of our branch were the salt of the earth. My reading caused me to see that behind every great man, often lurking in the shadows, there was a woman, supplying him with inspiration, with encouragement, hope, and strength, and then I began to realize that, in making me a woman, the Lord had chosen the better part, and I want to prove worthy of the great trust imposed in me. . . .

“What are our girls worth to the church, to this locality? England says, ‘The wealth of England does not lie in her ships, her commerce, or in her industrial system, but in the purity of her girls.’ What are they worth to God? To him who gave them that perfect body, alert mind, and wonderful soul? He only had one Son, yet he was willing for him to come down and suffer for the sake of these girls, that they might know a more abundant life. Then what are they worth to us? Just a little bit of sacrifice, of encouragement, of consideration, a chance to improve some of their possibilities? They are but human, but the majority will be true and loyal and will give back to you all that is within them.”

Brother McDowell gave a soul-searching examination on Sunday afternoon, which caused us all to realize how far we were from measuring up to the stature of Christ.

At the Sunday night service, Brother McDowell was confronted with a full house. The audience contained many new faces and a large percentage of nonmembers who gave undivided attention to the speaker. On Monday night Brother McDowell spoke at Kewanee to a very attentive audience, and Sister Edwards addressed an interested audience at Galesburg.

We feel that the Kewanee District has been very fortunate this past year in having Apostle Gleezer at our June conference, and to make a tour of the district following the conference. Then at the reunion we had Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith, Bishop J. A. Becker and wife, Missionary L. G. Holloway, and departmental worker, Mrs. J. R. Lentell. At the October conference we had Apostle J. F. Garver, and at the recent young people’s convention, F. M. McDowell of the First Presidency and Sister Blanche Edwards, general superintendent of the Department of Women. Besides the above, we have had Missionary E. A. Curtis and District President E. R. Davis with us during the year.

Shellbrook, Saskatchewan

December 9.—Now that the days of strenuous farm labor have ended and sleighing is good, the meetings are again well attended, and both church and social activities are entered into with zest.

The social and bazaar planned to be held in November was postponed until a future date, owing to the lack of time to properly prepare for it. However, it has not been given up, and the members hope to make a much bigger and better affair of it by having it later.

Sacramental services were held last Sunday, followed by a good prayer and testimony meeting. Our pastor, Brother Roy Bowerman, spoke words of admonition to the members of the priesthood present, advising them to study more diligently the word of the Lord. He also gave much good advice and counsel to the Saints.

A joint meeting of the branch and Department of Women will be held Wednesday, December 17, at ten o’clock for the purpose of electing new officers.
Home-Coming Great Success

DES MOINES, IOWA.—At nine o'clock a. m., December 14, the building on East Twelfth Street, where the Saints meet to worship, had within its walls more than three hundred men, women, and children—met for Sunday school and the annual home-coming. Soon were heard those many voices and many musical instruments raised in praise to our great King and Lord of lords and in honor of the gladsome occasion. The orchestra and choir did homage to their able leaders, Brother William Evans and Sister Evelyn Finch, both morning and evening. They are doing a great work, and it is hoped that they will be a part of each and every service during the New Year, for God is surely pleased with such noble service of music and song.

After the usual songs and prayer service, those of the primary department marched into their rooms, and Sister Vida E. Smith of Lamoni, granddaughter of the Martyr, spoke to the seniors and juniors in the main auditorium, using as her subject and quoting from our great inventor, Thomas A. Edison, “If the answer is easy, it’s wrong.” Her address was quite inspirational, and at times she held the audience spellbound. In closing the service of the hour, we sang that song given us by Sister Vida and loved so dearly by the Saints, “The old, old path.”

At eleven o’clock our audience had increased to about four hundred and fifty people. Messages had come from some of the different ministers who had labored here in the past. President Elbert A. Smith preached to us, his subject being, “Workers together with God.” And after the sermon one could hear spoken among the auditors such words of appreciation as, “He spoke as if God had inspired him”; “That was the greatest sermon I ever heard”; “To hear Brother Elbert, you can’t help but feel that he is God’s servant,” etc.

At noon all were invited to the basement of the church, where Sister Bessie Oline, chairman of the social committee of the Department of Women, and her loyal assistants served a most wonderful dinner. All were asked to remain and partake of this feast, and most of them did so; and as is the general custom of Latter Day Saints, all made it a part of their purpose and duty to get acquainted with each other and to welcome all visitors, and all had a most pleasant time.

At half past two in the afternoon we went into a song, prayer, and testimony service, and the Spirit was present in great power. Many of the Saints told of the wonderful blessings God had bestowed upon them, and we were made to rejoice in their blessings. We were especially moved by the testimony of Brother E. K. Patterson, who resided in Chicago at the time Brother David E. Dowker was laboring there. He told of the time when he was called overseas in the World War and how Brother Dowker had spoken to him in prophecy and told him of the dangers ahead of him and of narrow escapes he would have, but said he would go through and return home unharmed, which he did. Later Brother Dowker told of a time when he had obligated himself to pay a certain sum of money, and the due date came and he did not have the money nor did he know where to turn for it, but a special letter from Brother Patterson, from a far distant city, brought the exact amount, with word that the Spirit had told Brother Patterson that Brother Dowker needed that particular sum of money. Patriarch Ammon White spoke to us by the Spirit, and later President Elbert Smith spoke to us by the Spirit, and as a consequence the Des Moines Branch is in closer relationship, and the spirit of calm satisfaction rests upon the church here.

For the Religio hour, Brother Stephen Robinson had arranged a wonderful program of special numbers, which were ably executed. His mother, Sister Elizabeth Robinson, sixty-nine years of age, sang a Welsh song in the vernacular, which was greatly enjoyed by the audience, and Sister Vida E. Smith addressed us again, using as her subject, “What does it mean to be a good sport?” offering us some wonderful and valuable suggestions as to our attitude in life. Doctor J. E. Slocomb, of Webster City, then spoke to us, his subject being, “Lengthen your ropes and strengthen your stakes.” His remarks were delivered in a manner which commanded great interest. Brother Ammon White delivered the evening sermon. His subject was “The Restoration,” a subject which Brother White so ably handled that we were all anxious to hear more, which we were promised as Brother White is to preach for us during the next five nights. Thus came the end of what seemed a perfect day.

The mother-daughter banquet held Friday, December 12, was a red-letter day for the womanhood of the Des Moines Branch, as it marked the cementing of a closer relationship between our women and girls. The banquet was held at the Harris-Emery Tea Room under the direction of Miss Mabel Mussell, head of the department of girls in Des Moines.

Covers were laid for one hundred and ten guests, and a splendid program was enjoyed. Sister Bertha Emslie, our retiring president of the Department of Women, addressed us on “Motherhood and women’s work”; and Sister Estelle Lentell sang “Little mother of mine”; Sister Margret Davis introduced the guest of honor, Sister Vida E. Smith, who gave us a truly inspirational talk on “Motherhood and womanhood.” She touched upon the giving of “red roses” while mother is yet alive to appreciate them; and from her short stay with us in Des Moines, it is easy to understand why the young folks at Graceland love “Aunt Vida,” for she endeared herself to all who heard her here.

Sister Thelma Dowker read for us “A woman’s heart,” by Sister Vida Smith, after which we listened to a quartet, representative of the four chapters of Orioles and Temple Builders in Des Moines, who sang “Sing along.” Brother David E. Dowker made a short talk, and in conclusion, “The old, old path,” written by Sister Smith, was sung en masse.

Evangelist Ammon White at the Annual Home-Coming

RUNNELLS, IOWA.—Sunday, November 30, was the beginning of a week’s series of revival services at Runnells, the first day being the home-coming service to which all district membership was invited. A large gathering of Saints, representing almost every branch, was present to partake of the “feast” of good things which had been prepared.

The light and power of the Holy Spirit were present in the preaching of the word, also bearing witness to the hearers the necessity of keeping the law. In no uncertain way Brother White showed that we place a value upon everything. He told of a man who sacrificed the church and its opportunities for wealth and position but lost his family as a consequence. The children married nonmembers who never became interested in the church. The man made $100,000, but lost his family in the trade for it. He had named his price.

The near approach of the coming of Christ was emphasized, and many of the revelations of modern times explained from Brother White’s personal experiences and the spirit of revelation. The counterfeit religions were exposed, and all Saints warned that Satan would work harder from this time until the end to deceive the people.

The prayer service was a spiritual feast, and many took the opportunity to rededicate their lives to the ideals of Zion as taught by the Presidency of the church and explained by Brother White.

Dinner was served to all in the basement of the church, a very excellent menu being provided.

Many times during the discourses of Brother White, we were admonished to make haste in our preparations for the gathering, for out of the chaotic conditions that now seem to prevail there would eventually come a people who would be united in purpose and spirit.

During the week several nonmembers attended, some who were acquainted with Brother I. N. White, Ammon's father, who first preached the restored gospel in the Des Moines valley, some forty years since.

Five Weeks of Meetings at Innan, Nebraska

Elder P. R. Burton closed a five-week series of meetings at the Saints' church, Innan, on Sunday night, December 21.

We think much good was done, though none as yet have united with the church. A great variety of subjects was discussed. Perhaps his six lectures on the habits, traditions, religion, and origin of the American Indian created as much interest as anything presented, and laid a good foundation on which to build an argument supporting the claims for the Book of Mormon.

Until the snow came, making travel by auto impossible for a time, the house was well filled every night. The last two weeks it was difficult for those in town to get to and from church.

A baptismal font has been installed in the church, and we hope when Elder Burton returns as planned, within a couple of weeks, there will be some ready to take the important step that will make them members of the "fold."

We ever pray for the success of the work.

LEVI GAMET.

Spokane, Washington

December 24.—The Saints from this section send the season's greetings.

We are glad to report that things are moving along very nicely in Spokane.

Our district conference was held here. We had the good fortune to have Apostle Roy S. Budd with us, and he gave us some good advice; preached the kind of sermons that if applied to our lives will bring us closer to a Zionic condition; and I, like many of the priesthood, felt that he left an impression for good with those who heard him. We want to say to Brother Budd, The latchcord hangs on the outside.

The local Religio furnished an excellent program of thirteen numbers; some real talent was exhibited.

The Sunday schools of Portland, Oregon, Spokane, and Seattle have entered into a contest; points are gained from attendance of main school, attendance of teachers, officers, collection, Christmas offering, and birthday offering. This has started quite an interest in our school.

Our Religio is on the increase. There has been some improvement since we have had the quarterlies, and the signs are that we are going to have a bigger and better Religio. We have a fine lot of young people who are interested in the church, not by say-so, but by doing-so; and I do not know of anything that is more encouraging than to see them get on the side of their God, for they need him in every conflict.

Cosmopolis, Washington

The work in Gray's Harbor Branch is still progressing in numbers and spiritual growth, and the attendance at Sunday school and preaching is steadily increasing.

The sisters of the branch have organized themselves into a branch of the Department of Women and are busy raising funds for a church. Their first effort was to make a quilt for the Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Elma, Washington. The plan was for each member to solicit money from their friends, and they in turn have their initials inscribed on the quilt. They gave a bazaar December 6 at the community hall in Hoquiam, where a number of games were played and the Saints enjoyed themselves. About $27.15 was realized above expenses.

Brother S. P. Cox of Centralia preached a fine sermon December 7, which the Saints enjoyed.

While the work is progressing nicely, we are wondering why the missionaries still think that Gray's Harbor is not on the map. A Christmas program is being prepared, to be given Christmas Day. There will also be a Christmas tree, and the Saints expect to enjoy the occasion.

Fort Collins, Colorado

December 31.—The choir gave a Christmas pageant Sunday evening, December 21. There were ten people in the play and hidden chorus, and ten grown people and nine children in the audience. The music was good, the parts in pageant were played well, and the entertainment really merited a larger crowd. The sentiment was fine, setting forth the true Christmas spirit that should pervade the whole atmosphere at this season of the year, and it is hoped that those who participated, as well as those who listened, were made to appreciate more keenly than ever before the true import of the celebration of this day of days.

Colorado has been having some real winter weather, and for this reason the services have not been well attended lately.

After several attempts to hold a business meeting proving unsuccessful, it was thought best to have election of officers for the branch on Sunday morning, December 28. Brother K. G. Brolliar was elected branch president, and the following were elected heads of departments: Sunday school, Sister Emma Savage; Recreation and Expression, Brother Clifford Cable; Departments of Women and Music, Sister Letha M. Tilton.

The monthly Religio Review continues to fill the place of the program hour at Religio the last Sunday of each month. There are about as many contributing editors to this paper as the Herald has, and of course the subjects are varied, though perhaps not so enlightening as articles of other magazines.

Saved by a Nail

A little boy whose mother had warned him not to go on the woodshed roof disobeyed her and went anyway. He began to slip and in his fright prayed: "Please, Lord, don't let me slide off this roof. Never mind, Lord, I got caught on a nail."

How like life! We often find ourselves slipping, and we think that if we ever get out of the rut, we'll never do it again, but as soon as we "catch on a nail" we go back to our old ways. It is a good thought to remember that there will not always be some nail to prevent our slide.—Exchange.
Pensacola, Florida

December 29.—A Christmas program was given December 23, and many expressed themselves as having thoroughly enjoyed it. The committee selected worked diligently to make it a success, and we are sure they feel well repaid for the efforts put forth.

Brother Bullard, of Independence, visited with us for a few days, and we surely feel benefited for having had him with us. He delivered a beautiful Christmas sermon Sunday, December 21, which seemed to increase the feeling of the blessed Christ spirit.

We also received a visit from Brother Rasmussen, of North Dakota, who proved to be a very interesting visitor. Stories of ice, snow, and the personal experiences of others always prove interesting, but on the other hand we surely must have interested him with our warm country and God's work here, as he is thinking of locating near here.

Sister Hollis Sandiford gave a very nice entertainment at her home for the church benefit. Pie and cake were sold, and lemonade was served free. Many enjoyed the affair, and it is hoped she will favor us with many others as enjoyable as this one.

We are expecting Brother J. Charles May to be with us soon, and we hope that the meetings we expect to hold will be the means of putting the gospel before many, as the need for the light of the one true gospel is greatly felt here. We pray that these meetings may be the means of bringing those into the church who so greatly need it.

On December 28 we elected Sunday school officers for the coming year, Brother L. J. McBride being chosen as superintendent and Brother Rudd senior teacher, other teachers to be appointed. The officers that served in 1924 did well, and we can look back and see the good things that were accomplished. We feel grateful and hope that the new year will be so filled with blessings that the Saints as a whole will be filled with rejoicing to see the beautiful work go onward so that at the end of this year we can say it has been a year of peace and good will.

Clitherall, Minnesota

Battle Lake, Minnesota, December 30.—There have been no meetings held in Union Branch since the latter part of November, when District President George W. Day made a short visit. It is very unlikely that any other services will be attempted until spring. The best that can be hoped for is time to read the church papers and study the quarters, with the slim possibility of hearing a sermon over a neighbor's radio.

The branch president was much gratified a short time ago by learning of a neighbor's hearing a sermon by Brother Elbert A. Smith.

As the year draws to a close, it is natural to look back over the past months and count the losses, the failures and the disappointments, and to wonder what the incoming year will bring. To those who are overburdened by family cares, by labor that taxes their physical strength to the limit, and by the responsibility of church duties, the outlook is sometimes discouraging. If the success of the work rested entirely upon the efforts of weak humanity, the future would indeed be dark. But this is God's work, and he will not let it fail on account of the failure of his servants. His power and resources are without limit; he rules and overrules; and his work will triumph.

Visit to the Sunflower State

By permission of the Presidency I left home November 17, with my cousin who lives in Topeka, and we wended our way westward by auto to his home. While there he helped me hunt up the Latter Day Saints. I spent some time visiting with different ones and believe I fulfilled all of my promises except one, and that was a visit to Brother Lasley, if I get the name correctly.

I enjoyed myself well as one could who has to be dependent after years of active service, and never had to ask to be taken here and there, but went when I got ready and was a good walker.

During my sojourn I spoke in Topeka a number of times and enjoyed fair liberty. If the prayer of Jesus to the Father could be realized in our time, what a great blessing would come and how this church would grow in numbers! But, alas, we have not learned to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, and it is unfortunate.

Jesus said, "If ye are not one ye are not mine," but sometimes we are like some married people, we keep up a fight, sometimes all our lives, to find out which is the one. It is too bad, and that is saying it mildly. We have the best organization and system of religion that ever graced this old world, and why can't we live it and make it effectual?

It makes one fearful, when he finds discord, of inviting his relatives to associate with our church people, and yet most of those are members who are business men and are well thought of, and people whom you cannot help but like and love. But what will an outsider say if he finds that we perpetuate discord? And especially when they have been disgusted with their own churches on the account of that affliction.

Topeka has a fine class of Saints, but they are like the rest of us—need help to make the grade that is before them. It makes but little difference who does the work, if we can agree and give the honor to him to whom it belongs.

And what I say in my report of this trip, is spoken with the best of feeling and gospel love for my brethren and sisters in Topeka. I hope they may make the grade that they are trying to climb and will be able to interest my relatives who live there. My people who live in that State are all Methodists, and as a rule so far as I learned are trying to live a good life, and in some respects set an example for those who make larger claims.

May the good Lord help us to get a vision of our calling and give us that strength and fortitude to demonstrate the working powers of this church. That is the thing that is most needed just now to make our work a success. It is certain that we need individual supreme directional control, of ourselves, if not made to feel it anywhere else. It is the all-important composition in making live Saints, and when that system is inaugurated by each individual there will be no backbiting or evil speaking or faultfinding, but love in its purity will flow from heart to heart, and God will be glorified and the world will have a chance to be saved.

"Be ye one" means more than just belonging to the same church. May the good Lord help us to see that is my sincere prayer.

A. H. Parsons.

Elder Daniel Dierks, of Edgemont, South Dakota, came to the Sanitarium early in December, underwent an operation for the removal of tumor, and was discharged from the institution December 26. He is far recovered and is now convalescing nicely, but will remain in Independence until about January 10.
Sandwich, Illinois

December 21.—I thought I would let you know of some of the activities of the Department of Women here.

About two months ago we decided to have a bazaar, so we set to work to accomplish the work that was necessary to make it a success. With the aid of some friends and Saints from Plano, we had a very nice display of fancywork, comfortables, and rugs.

We held our supper and bazaar December 17. Although a terrible sleet storm came the night before, we were very much pleased with the outcome, clearing a little over one hundred dollars. There are still four quilts and some rugs to dispose of.

We are very grateful to God for our success.

ELIZA WRIGHT.

Nauvoo, Illinois

January 1.—Sunday morning, December 28, was the coldest day of the season; the thermometers ranged from 20 to 24 degrees below zero. A solid mass of ice over a foot thick connects Nauvoo with Montrose, and automobiles are driving back and forth across Lake Cooper.

The Nauvoo boys returned home from Graceland to spend the Christmas holidays, bringing with them George Meeley and George Lewis of Australia, and Thad Howland of California, grandson of Emma Burton. The Australians had never seen snow before, so enjoyed it to the fullest extent. The first day after their arrival they walked across the ice to Montrose, blissfully ignorant of air holes. The young people initiated them in the joys of coasting, and although the guiding of a sled looked simple enough, they found to their dismay, when they tried it, that it was impossible to reach the foot of the hill without landing in the ditch.

The week was one round of festivities for the boys. They partook of two Christmas dinners on Christmas Day and were royally entertained at the different homes during the week. At the close of the Wednesday night prayer meeting, the young people were all invited to attend a watch party at the Lutheran church, where they had a very enjoyable time.

The Sunday before Christmas, evening services were dispensed with that the Saints might attend the pageant given at the Methodist church, entitled “The Nativity.” On Tuesday evening the Christmas concert was given at the Saints’ church, and the Methodist minister, who is blind, attended, and declared that he had received great good. The theme of the evening was the worship of the Infant King and was carried out in songs by the Junior choir under the direction of Sister August Lee, and in the exercises and pageant entitled “Offerings of the year,” given under the direction of Sister A. L. Sanford and Sister L. H. Lewis. The Graceland boys assisted with their talent; Thad Howland giving a violin solo, George Meeley a piano solo, and Bertram Lewis a reading taken from Ben Hur on the visit of the angels to the shepherds, at the time of Jesus’ birth.

The following Sunday evening the Graceland boys furnished the program for Religio. Under the direction of Sister Irene Layton they gave the Graceland song, two piano numbers, a talk on Australia, also a talk on the benefits to be derived from Graceland, a reading from Hiawatha, and an amusing sketch entitled, “And hour in one of the dormitorys.”

At the annual election of officers Elder Amos Berve was sustained as pastor; Brother T. J. Henderson as Sunday school superintendent; and Brother A. L. Sanford was elected president of Religio. Sister Berve was also sustained as president of the Department of Women.

At a recent business meeting in Kookuk, Elder A. L. Sanford was chosen pastor of the Keokuk Branch. This necessitates a twelve-mile drive every Sunday morning for Brother Sanford. The Keokuk Saints have a nice little church building, but are few in number, and there are none holding the priesthood.

MABEL A. SANFORD.

Moorhead, Iowa

January 1.—The Sunday school at the Jordan Church has been discontinued for the winter on account of bad roads and cold weather.

But few changes were made at the Sunday school business meeting at the late election of officers. Brother Glenn Wilson was sustained as superintendent, to be assisted by Brothers Charles Hield and Charles Davis. Brother Chester Davis was chosen as president of the Religio, to be assisted by Brother Hield. We hope that both officers and teachers will be prepared to take up their duties at the opening of the New Year.

A fine Christmas program was given at the church Christmas Eve. It was made much more interesting by the help received from several of the young people who were home from their school and college work.

Brother Irvin Clark and family have moved from their farm near Moorhead to the farm of Brother T. O. Strand, north of Moorhead. The Saints here will be glad to have them in their midst again.

Among our young people who are spending their holiday vacations at home are Sister Anna Larson, who teaches in Des Moines; Sister Nellie Larson, teacher at Humboldt, Iowa; Sister Helen McDonald of Magnolia; and Sisters Frances Strand and Fern Wilson, and Brothers Lloyd McIntyre and Arnold Adams, who are students at Graceland College.

Many are suffering with the grip during the last week. With sickness and the month of severely cold weather, the attendance at services has fallen off considerably.

The home of Brother and Sister Charles R. Hield was gladdened December 5 by the arrival of a fine little daughter who is known by the name of Shirley Jean. Sister Effie Hield, Brother Hield’s mother, has been spending the last month with her son and family helping the little granddaughter to get a good start in life. She left Wednesday for Mondamin for a short visit with her brother, C. B. Woodstock, before returning to her home in Wisconsin.

The Department of Women held a very successful bazaar December 13 which resulted in quite an addition to the funds of their treasury. Also the young people of the church held a social gathering at the home of their Religio teacher, Brother Glenn Wilson, on the evening of December 15. The evening was spent in playing games, after which refreshments were served. The same group also held a watch party at the home of T. O. Strand on New Year’s Eve. It was also a surprise on their daughter Frances, and Miss Fern Wilson. A fine time was enjoyed by all present.

Brother and Sister Charles Blackman and son, of Oakdale, Washington, who have been visiting friends and relatives during the fall season, are spending the last few weeks with a sister of Sister Blackman in Nebraska.

A quiet but beautiful wedding ceremony was performed December 25 at eight o’clock, by which Dorman Blair Jensen, only son of Brother and Sister Mark Jensen of Moorhead. and Delia Helen Schreur, daughter of Brother and Sister Dirk Schreur, of Gaylord, Michigan, were made husband and wife. The wedding took place at the home of the bride’s parents, her father, Elder Schreur, officiating. At midnight the young people left Gaylord, reaching Moorhead Saturday noon. Receptions were held for them on both Saturday and Monday evenings at the home of his parents, in which about seventy-five relatives and friends participated. Many useful and beautiful gifts were presented the young people by Gaylord and Moorhead relatives and friends, as well as the best of wishes for their future happiness. The young people left Wednesday for Lamoni, Iowa, where they will make their home for the present, Blair to resume his work as instructor in the high school, and his bride to continue her studies at Graceland College.

Cherokee, Iowa

December 29.—Services this month have been well attended until the last two Sundays, when severe cold weather has kept many of the Saints at home. The Saints here have been wonderfully blessed by the absence of illness in our branch, for which we are very thankful.

The close of the year finds us as a branch still striving earnestly for the good of the Master’s work. We can look back and see some mistakes, but we do not intend to let them be stumbling blocks in our path. We hope rather to profit from them and begin the new year with greater zeal than ever. We believe we have advanced some in the work the past year and are determined to make the new year a banner one for the branch. We have been promised great blessings if we are faithful, and we expect to see the promise fulfilled by obedience to the word.

Brother A. R. Crippen has been elected as branch president for another year. He has served in this office over twenty years and desired to be relieved at this time, but his good work in the branch cannot be dispensed with at present, as the unanimous vote for him indicated.

Brother Vernon Spence has been chosen superintendent of the Sunday school to succeed Sister Evans, who has served several years so successfully that she was given a hearty vote of thanks for her good work. Brother Spence is young and energetic, very earnest in his work, and will make a good leader for Sunday school work.

For the Department of Recreation and Expression, Brother Albert Haynes, who has served several years, was again chosen president.

The Sunday school gave a very fine program Christmas Eve under the able direction of Sister Ella Spence. The little folks did their parts well and were deserving of the praise they received. Santa Claus came and delighted the children as well as some of the older ones by his jolly antics.

Brother and Sister B. F. Creel, of the Nebraska Indian Mission, spent a few days here in the interest of the new church to be built on the reservation in the near future. The Department of Women and the Sunday school sent a box of toys and one of cookies to Brother and Sister Creel for the Indian children for Christmas. A box of cookies and candy was also sent to the Children’s Home at Lamoni.

Elder E. L. Edwards, of Pomeroy, Iowa, preached for us Sunday morning, December 21.

We wish all the Saints a happy and prosperous New Year, and all the blessings that God may bestow upon his faithful children.

Woodbine, Iowa

December 31.—As the faithful old clock is about to strike the old year out and the new year in, we take a retrospective view of past improved and unimproved opportunities and wonder if our record for 1924 will receive the passing grade. Will our experiences of the past year strengthen or weaken us for service the coming year? Have we laid a foundation on which we can safely trust our future building? If we feel we have not done all we should have done, nor been all we should have been, as the New Year lingers on the threshold in her spotless white robe, may we resolve that as individuals and as Saints of God we will labor more strenuously and pray more earnestly that human weakness may not longer hinder the progress of the greatest work that has ever been committed to men. This is not man’s work; God has simply intrusted it to our care. What shall we do with that trust?

As a branch, we are yet striving in our weakness to hold high Emmanual’s banner, that disturbed and discomforted humanity may see, perchance from afar or through a glass darkly, its beauty, which may draw them nearer and nearer to the Master until they, too, may come under its folds and rejoice with the children of God.

Among those who have spoken to our edification during the past few weeks are Brethren Joseph Lane, district president; S. Phillips, a student of the Iowa University; Charles Putnam, whose missionary labors have been extensive; and the local priesthood, who have with liberty preached the word.

We are pleased to report that our aged brother, Joseph Seddon, who has been ill for several weeks, is very much improved in health, and we hope to soon see him at church.

Two of our young brothers, Howard Reynolds and Frank Fry, have recently been called to occupy in the office of priest. May our faith and prayers sustain them in their new responsibilities.

An item in our last letter should have read “George Young and Oscar Deal were ordained to the priesthood,” instead of “George and Oscar Deal.”

Bevier, Missouri

December 30.—The past two Sundays, and in between, we have been having some real old-fashioned winter weather, with the mercury registering nineteen below December 28.

The annual business meeting of the branch was held December 29, at which time officers were chosen for the coming year. The election resulted in the election of Brother Ben S. Tanner as branch president, Brother Carl Weeks superintendent of the Sunday school, and Brother F. L. McKane president of the Religio. It was learned that the branch has spent over seven hundred dollars for repairs and improvements the past year, having paid all but $50. The Sunday school Christmas offering was $166, considerably less than half what it has usually been. This condition was caused by the closing of the mines ten months ago. Coal mining is the chief industry of Bevier, and many of the Saints have gone away—some permanently, while others will return when better conditions prevail.

It has been decided to hold the Wednesday evening prayer services in the homes of the Saints for the rest of the winter. The “Messiah” broadcast from Independence, came in good and strong, but with much distortion and interference from other stations. There were four different stations besides K F I X, all close together, with only one degree difference on the dials.

Independence

Stone Church

At the regular business meeting of the city of Zion held Monday night, January 5, delegates to the General Conference were chosen. Nominations were made from the floor, and the vote was taken, but the results could not be obtained for this issue of the Herald. The names of the delegates will be given next week.

The following nominations for pastors in the various churches were ratified: C. Edward Miller and R. V. Hopkins, to assist the First Presidency at the Stone Church; R. J. Lambert at Second Independence; J. M. Baker, Liberty Street; Glaud A. Smith, to be assisted by Bishop B. J. Scott, Walnut Park; J. E. Warne at Englewood; W. J. Brewer, Enoch Hill; John Soderstad at Spring Branch; and A. H. Parsons at East Independence.

Ordinations were provided for as follows: Elmer Tier, Glen Davies, F. W. Chappelow, and Marion Schafer, priest; John H. Miller, elder; and Henry A. Moriarty, sr., Everett Bowen, Samuel Edmunds, Delbert McClain, and Douglas Byrne, deacon.

The business meeting adjourned to the first Monday in February, when the remaining business will be taken up.

Next Sunday will be Book of Mormon Day at the Stone Church. Elder Joseph Luff will speak in the morning on "The New Covenant," and in the evening a sermon will be given on "Prosperity in Christ." The whole day will be devoted to subjects pertaining to the Book of Mormon.

The Department of Women will hold their open monthly meeting Friday, January 9, at half past two. Mrs. Lora H. Strachan and the acting pastor of Zion, Brother C. Ed Miller, will be the speakers for this occasion. Sister Strachan will speak on the subject of the Kirtland Temple and Brother Miller on the outlook of the work of the coming year. Special numbers of music will be given. Special announcements will be made. The meeting will be in charge of Sister Alice Cowan, superintendent of the work of the women in Zion. All are invited.

Bishop Roderick May invites Independence Saints to attend the series of meetings being held in Lees Summit this week, especially those who can help with the music. Elders J. Charles May and Wilfrid D. Tordoff are the speakers.

The S. R. S. basket ball team, who are leading the state league, will be in Lees Summit this week, especially those who can help with the music. Elders J. Charles May and Wilfrid D. Tordoff are the speakers.

A musical program was given, and the watch party held at the church New Year's Eve, sponsored by the Silver Wing Chapter of Temple Builders and the Sons of Zion, served two purposes, as it was made the occasion for the celebration of the pastor's birthday. The watch party was preceded by a prayer service in charge of the priesthood.

At the close of the prayer service, with due ceremony a large birthday cake was presented to Brother Baker, which was decorated with the proper number of candles. Refreshments of cake, fruit, and candy were served, and all had an opportunity to sample the very fine birthday cake.

A musical program was given, and Elder John Peterson showed lantern slides of the South Sea Islands, where he was a missionary for some time. These pictures were much enjoyed and were attractively presented by Brother Peterson.

Just before midnight Brother Lewis Resch presented Brother Baker with a purse of $35, the gift of the congregation.

On New Year's night the history class gathered at the home of Foster Baker, son of Pastor Baker, and went in a body to help their teacher celebrate his birthday. The evening was passed in conversation and music, and readings by the little granddaughters of the Bakers. Then a cake, again decorated with candles, was presented to Brother Baker, and as Sister Baker also has a birthday soon a second cake was presented to her. They also received a copy of the Saints Hymnal and Zion's Praises bound together in flexible leather, with their names stamped on the front in gold.

A good crowd was present at the first sacramental service of the year. Because of much illness and bad weather, making it impossible for some of the older ones to be present, the sacrament was sent out to quite a number on this day.

Apostle J. A. Gillen preached in the evening on "Going to the Father." The congregation was large and unusually attentive.

Gleazer spoke in the morning, and the Walnut Park Saints enjoyed a sermon from him Sunday night, January 4.

The recital given at the church last Friday night by Brother James R. Houghton, assisted by Miss Emma Snead, was very good, though the attendance was small. Those who did not attend missed a treat such as is not often offered to the people of this vicinity.

Sister H. B. Sterrett passed away on December 31 after an illness of some duration. She was born in Provo, Utah. The funeral was held at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon, January 4, with burial in Mound Grove Cemetery. She leaves her husband, Hosea B. Sterrett; her daughters, Mrs. Flo Whittimore, Mrs. Ida Crow, Mrs. Susan Story, and Miss Beulah Sterrett; two foster daughters, Mrs. Mable Williams and Miss Ruth Mikel; sisters, Mrs. Henry Carlow, Mrs. Laura Jenkins, and Mrs. E. E. Richards; and brothers, M. J. Phillips and Heber Phillips.

The wedding of Mrs. Minerva R. Smith and Edward F. Yerrington was solemnized at the Nurses' Home, 1215 West Van Horn Road, Saturday evening, January 3, Elder Ralph Farrell officiating. The bride was attended by Miss Doris Nelson, and Mr. George Gates, brother of the bride, served as best man. The home was decorated with palms, ferns, and premier roses, a bank of which formed an altar in the library. About sixty guests were present. Mrs. Yerrington has had charge of all the patients' records and has assisted with laboratory work at the Independence Sanitarium for the past three years. The couple will make their home in Dallas, Texas.

Apostle J. A. Gillen preached in the evening on "Going to the Father." The congregation was large and unusually attentive.
Second Church

Our baptismal font has been in frequent use of late. Sunday Elder H. E. Winegar brought a candidate for baptism.

The lower auditorium has been redecorated, Elder S. H. Fields donating his services and improving the appearance of the room very much.

Elder William Bath gave the people one of his best sermons Sunday evening on the restoration of the gospel, or the gospel in the last dispensation. His proofs were abundant and handled masterfully, filling the entire hour to the enlightenment of all.

Sacramental service at eleven o'clock under the direction of A. K. Dilley was one of good spirituality and great interest. Bishop Becker's presence and strong testimony added much to its interest.

Sister John Eggun of Utah was in the congregation Sunday morning and spoke in testimony appreciative of the conditions which she found in Independence. She is en route for Holland to join her husband, Elder John Eggun, at present doing missionary work there.

East Independence

The first sacrament of the year was well attended, and the Saints were very much encouraged and strengthened. Quite a few visitors were present. Elder J. J. Teeter spoke in the evening to a fairly good-sized audience.

Next Sunday Elder W. H. Kelley will speak both morning and evening. After the morning service a priesthood meeting will be held, at which time they will be addressed by Brother C. Ed Miller.

Since becoming one of the local congregations of Zion, the Saints of East Independence feel greatly strengthened and encouraged through the services of the brethren at the central place. The Religio seems to have taken on a new spirit, and Sunday night there was a good attendance, and a very nice program was given.

Sister Gladys Teeter, who is attending school at Graceland College, spent the holidays with her parents, but has now returned to Lamoni to resume her school work.

Englewood

There was a splendid attendance at sacrament service Sunday morning, January 4, to enjoy the meeting, which was in charge of W. H. Dean and J. V. Roberts. Brother Roberts preached in the evening to an attentive audience. The attendance at Religio was also very fine. Not many have been coming to church the past few weeks because of the bad weather. The church is old and poorly built, so it is cold and uncomfortable to attend church in the winter. The Saints are working hard to raise funds to build a new church.

The women will hold their first meeting after the holidays next Wednesday.

Spring Branch

The new officers have taken their respective places for the new year, and with the cooperation we have had in the past we are expecting our present year to be better than the past has been.

Brother Winslow served as superintendent of the Sunday school over three years, and under his supervision the membership has grown from a few to about ninety. The school presented him with a gift to show their appreciation of his work. Brother John Soderstadt, our worthy pastor, was also presented with an appreciation gift from the group.

The year has been quite successful financially. Our goal was to raise $100 for Christmas offering, and $119.34 was collected.

Frances Tankard and Mildred Reynolds were the only two with a perfect attendance for 1924. The superintendent of the Sunday school surprised them by presenting each with a gift.

Wednesday we had a good prayer meeting, also good attendance. The sacrament service was also well attended, a good start for the new year. The evening of January 4, Brother Rolle delivered an interesting sermon which was much enjoyed.

Brother Bean, one of our earnest workers, has gone to Saint Louis, we hope only temporarily.

Lamoni Stake Items

LAMONI, IOWA, January 3.—The low temperature of the last two weeks in Lamoni has established a new record, the mercury going the lowest in thirteen years—27 below zero. The ground was covered with snow, and Christmas was in every way a typical one.

The Christmas program by the Sunday school was given on Sunday evening. A mixed program was rendered this year, principally by the beginners and primaries, and a variety of splendid numbers were given.

The local post of the American Legion, of which Brother H. H. Hopkins is commander, had charge of the community tree. The large electrically lighted tree shed rays of cheer from December 15 to January 2. The four-degrees-below temperature of Christmas Eve made it necessary to dispense with most of the program planned.

An octet bravely battled with the elements in an effort to entertain the crowd which had gathered with Christmas carols, but the jingle of bells soon supplanted the music and old Santa arrived in his sleigh with the treats for the kiddies.

Many homes in Lamoni were made happy by the return of husbands and fathers from their missionary fields for the holidays. Among them we note C. E. Harpe, E. E. Long, G. R. Wells, E. R. Davis, D. T. Williams, J. F. Garver, J. D. Stead.

Elder L. G. Holloway recently returned from holding a series of meetings in Bucknell, Iowa, where he reported a splendid interest and attendance. Brother Holloway baptized three adults, all of whom were very influential citizens and left a number of others investigating the work.

On account of a broken tube the services last Sunday morning were not broadcast, which was doubtless a disappointment to many who are in the habit of listening in. They missed a splendid service. Elder Holloway preached on the development of character necessary before the individual can appreciate the gift of eternal life. Two very fine solos were rendered by Lena Wells and Fields Jones, both of whom were here for the holidays. Lena is teaching in Norway, Iowa. Mr. Jones is a former Graceland student, now enrolled in the Horner Institute, Kansas City.

Elder E. R. Davis was the speaker in the evening. President McDowell is spending his vacation in the Sanitarium at Independence where he underwent an operation. Elder W. E. Prall of the Lamoni stake presidency is also at the Sanitarium for physical examination.

Brother Oscar Anderson leaves next week for Des Moines to take his seat in the Iowa Legislature. He was elected last November on the Republican ticket as representative from Decatur County.

At a Sunday school business meeting held recently the following officers were elected for the coming year: A. M. Carmichael, general superintendent; A. E. Lewis, superintendent senior department; Roy Cheville, superintendent intermediate.
Help This Saint Get Employment He Needs

FAIR OAKS, INDIANA, January 2.—If there are any Saints out West who know of a place for us to locate near a branch where we can attend services and work on a farm, please let us know, as we have to change climate on account of our two small children. We are going to sell out here next month and want to go some place where we can work in the country, on a farm if possible.

When writing please tell us what wages my husband could receive. He has farmed all his life and can do anything there is to be done on a farm, and he can give the best of references. He is working for John Lawler on a large ranch now.

MRS. CHARLES THOMPSON.

Kingston, Missouri

The New Year has rolled around once more, with its snow and zero weather. The extreme cold has lessened our attendance some, but nevertheless our annual business meeting was held and officers were chosen for the coming year. Brother Charles Wood was chosen president, in which office he has served faithfully for several years.

The budget plan proved to be quite a success with us the past year. The church, Sunday school, Relief Society, and Department of Women funds were all made a common fund throughout the year, which has proved to be a success in many ways.

Our Christmas entertainment went off nicely, and all seemed well repaid for the efforts made to please the little folks.

Our holidays were saddened by the death of Mrs. Charles Cravens, who had been a sufferer for years.

Fargo, North Dakota

January 2.—The annual business meeting of the branch was held New Year's Eve, Elder E. E. Weddle being sustained for branch president. Other officers were elected at this time for the branch and Sunday school. After the business session the Saints were invited to the home of Sister C. M. Brown where a watch party was held. The evening was pleasantly spent and delicious refreshments were served at midnight. All went home feeling desirous of living more faithfully during the new year in order to accomplish more for the Master.

Brother George Day, district president in Minnesota, spent Sunday, December 7, here, making all feel more faith and interest in the work by his earnestness and encouraging words, both at the communion service where the Spirit was richly felt, and at the preaching service in the evening.

On Sunday, December 21, Elder J. E. Wildermuth, of Aurora, Illinois, visited the Saints, delivering an interesting Christmas sermon. He seemed happy to meet with old-time Saints.

A Christmas program was given by the Sunday school Friday evening after Christmas, which was followed by an address from Elder Thomas Leitch, our district president.

Sister Emma Oakes of Canada has been a visitor for a few weeks. Saints were made to rejoice to find her still strong in the faith after being isolated for fourteen years.

Sisters Walter Harper and Dora Harper, of Audubon, Minnesota, were visitors Sunday, December 28. The Saints are always glad for a visit from isolated members.
Conference Notices

Lamoni Stake, at Lamoni, Iowa, beginning Thursday evening, January 29, and continuing through February 2, 1925, Ethel A. Lacey, stake secretary.

Seattle and British Columbia, semiannual conference, at Centralia, Washington, February 14, to continue over Sunday, Auxiliaries will meet Friday, February 13, at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. Branch clerks will be furnished necessary blanks on which to report membership number including December 31, in due time. It is urgently requested that all who have done missionary work within the district during the six months ending December 31 will promptly report direct to the undersigned immediately after Sunday school, and not until their arrival at the conference. Do not include in this report work done in the branch as a branch official. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 406 North Thirty-sixth Street, Seattle, Washington.

Southeastern Illinois, at Mount Vernon, February 6, 7, 8, beginning Friday evening with an entertainment. General Conference delegates will be chosen Saturday. Regular services will begin all day Sunday. All are cordially invited and urged to be present on Saturday for the business meeting. We are expecting an apostle to be with us. Every branch in the district should send a statistical report to the secretary, Arthur Henson, district secretary, Mount Vernon, Illinois.

Southern Missouri, at Springfield, February 7, at 10 a.m. Sunday school convention will convene February 6. We hope to have a good report from that convention. General Conference delegates are to be chosen and district officers elected. All reports should be in the hands of the district secretary, Benjamin Pearson, Tigris, Missouri, not later than February 1. J. C. Christensen, district president.

Northern Montana, at Bozeman, January 31 and February 1, 1925. A good attendance is desired. Mrs. R. M. Esgar, district secretary.

Kirtland Auditorium

A person designating herself as "a sister in the one true faith," and with "Boxholder, Rural Route No. 3, Wheatland, Missouri," as the only and insufficient address, sent me two dollars in currency. This evidently was meant for the Kirtland Auditorium Fund. We would like to hear from this sister so that we can give her credit and send receipt.

James E. Bishop, treasurer of Kirtland reunion committee, 226 Edgar Avenue, Steubenville, Ohio.

Southern Ohio District

At the last district conference action was taken looking to the preservation of the Old Pine Church. This building is a landmark in the history of the church in this district. There are no members living near to it now, but it is thought wise to keep the building in repair, with the hope that some day soon it can be used again. The Bishop of the church has been consulted, and he took the matter up with the Bishop's agent of our district, with the result that I, the undersigned, have been appointed to collect moneys to be used in repairing the church. All items will be receipted for and recorded, and a report made to the Bishop's agent and by him to the district conference. All who have anything to donate, please forward same to T. R. Beatty, Route 1, Richmond Dale, Ohio.

Regarding Joseph Smith's Trusteeship

A WORD OF EXPLANATION

Many comments have been made on the articles entitled "The true philosophy of church government." I have no intention to review these in detail, at least not at present.

However, one misunderstanding may require correction. In my third number I mentioned the fact that at one time Joseph the Martyr was trustee in trust for the church, i.e., was appointed by the church and recognized by the State to hold church property in trust for the church. This remark came in quite incidentally in the beginning of an argument to the effect that the church does not recognize an arbitrary line between the spiritual and "temporal" affairs of the church, the latter to be administered by an entirely independent executive. The fact that the church appointed Joseph, the chief spiritual authority, as trustee in trust in "temporal" matters went to establish that argument, and was cited for that purpose and no other.

This incidental remark seems to have been taken up by writers in the HERALD as indicating a desire to displace the Presiding Bishop and put the President in his stead as trustee in trust. It is made the excuse to recount the Kirtland Bank failure, to assure us that under the trusteeship of Joseph Smith the church went into the bankruptcy courts, etc.

After referring to my remark, together with the statement that Joseph the Martyr did handle some of the biggest financial undertakings of the church (quite other than the Kirtland Bank), one of the writers in the HERALD for November 26 says:

While not directly asserting that the President should be trustee in trust for the church as well as supreme director, a precedent is cited that could mean nothing else.

The reasoning in the foregoing quotation is faulty, and the conclusion wrong. To illustrate: I now remind you that for a period of time the church had no trustee in trust at all, and possibly had no property to hold in trust. When I have cited that historical fact and precedent, can anyone logically affirm that I "can mean nothing else" than that the church should dispense with trustees, and possibly property? The conclusion would be as logical in the one case as in the other and equally wide of the mark.

I did not say or think, nor do I now say or think, that the President should supplant the Bishop as trustee in trust. And I can join Bishop I. A. Smith and his esteemed father in the conclusion that the properties of the church should not be held by one man as an "unlimited and irresponsible agent." I doubt the propriety of the great bulk of church property being held in the name of one man, whether president or bishop.

It is not at all necessary to make the President trustee in trust in order to secure directional control in executive matters. That argument is gratuitous. The trustee in trust of any institution accepts his trust to be executed in harmony with the law of the institution. The trustee in trust of the church holds trust subject to any power of direction that the chief executives of the church may have. That is common sense; and the late President Joseph Smith was wont to say that law is but common sense applied. A missionary is a trustee, a steward, responsible to God and to the church for the execution of his trust—that does not mean that he is answerable only to General Conference and would violate his trust if he were to be directed by the responsible church officers.

Since no one to my knowledge has proposed that the President shall supplant the Bishop as trustee in trust, that matter is not in controversy, and the drollery items relative to Joseph the Martyr have no bearing on that point, at least, and might well have been spared.

Nor was it really pertinent in any event to recount the Kirtland Bank failure. Even though a president may have been involved in failure in certain business ventures, would that argue that he should not have been trustee in trust? and that no one of his order should not be trustee? If so, how about failures involving bishops? Will they bar bishops from trusteeship? The Kirtland Bank is not the only ventured in business that has either failed outright or lost the church money. The brethren have drawn a sword which is very sharp on both edges. It will cut both ways. I suggest that it be returned to its seabbard. Let us discuss principles; not alleged failures of the brethren, living or dead.

It is not necessary in our own paper to leave Joseph the Martyr in a bad light when it may be somewhat relieved. The "anti-Mormon" press, even the Ladies' Home Journal, will do that without expense to us. It is only fair to add to the many matters cited regarding the Kirtland Bank, one fact for some reason not mentioned, i.e., that Joseph withdrew from it and severed his official connection with it some time prior to July 7, 1837. (See Church History, vol. 2, p. 93.) Moreover, he indicated very plainly that matters both within the banking association and in the community were being run, not according to his advice, but exactly contrary to it. Read carefully what he said on that point:

At this time the spirit of speculation in lands and property of all kinds, which was so prevalent throughout the whole nation, was taking a deep root in the church. As the fruits of this spirit, evil surmisings, faultfinding, disunion, disension, and apostasy followed in quick succession, and it seemed as though all the powers of earth and hell were combining their influence in an especial manner to overthrow the church at once, and make a final end. Other banking institutions refused the "Kirtland Safety Society's" notes. The enemy abroad and apostates in our midst united in their schemes, flour and provisions were turned towards other markets, and many became disaffected towards me as though I were the sole cause of those very evils I was most strenuously striving against, and which were actually brought upon us by the brethren not giving heed to my counsel.

No quorum in the church was entirely exempt from the influence of those false spirits who were striving against me for the mastery; even some of the Twelve were so far lost to their high and responsible calling as to begin to take sides, secretly, with the enemy.—Millennial Star, vol. 16, p. 11. (Church History, vol. 2, p. 93.)

He should not be held altogether responsible for the ultimate failure of an institution from which he had withdrawn, particularly when things were being run contrary to his counsel.

As to the alleged bankruptcy of the church under his trusteeship, we may at least remember some mitigating circumstances. The church had recently been driven from Missouri. They had lost practically all. Their properties had been confiscated. They came as ragged outcasts to Illinois. Emma, the wife of the prophet, crossed the ice-bound Mississippi River on foot, with "Little Joseph," later to be the president of the church, clinging to her skirts. She fairly well typified the condition of the whole church. To get a foothold again and a place to rest and live, they obligated themselves for the purchase price of lands, materials, and provisions, and set about building anew in the midst of poverty and sickness. Under such conditions Joseph was made trustee in trust. One writer in the HERALD of November 26 says that the record does not show the reasons for such selection. May it not then be fair to presume that there were reasons? Who can judge them when by his own confession he does not know them? In any event, is it any great wonder that the church did come to the verge of bankruptcy within one year after Joseph was appointed, as is alleged? Probably the condition was no worse than at the time of his appointment; or at other previous times under the trusteeship of the bishop.

The brother, did not cite his authority for the statement that the church was in the bankruptcy courts. An account is found in the Utah Mormon publications, which are not always considered good authority; but accepting them as being, so far as we know, correct on that point, we might note some of the reasons that they quote Joseph as assigning:

Whether I would or not, I was forced into the measure by being robbed, mobbed, and plundered, and wasted of all my property, time after time . . . thereby having been obliged to contract heavy debts to prevent the destruction of myself, family and friends, and by those who were justly and legally owing me, taking advantage of the same act of bankruptcy, so that I could not collect my just dues, thus leaving me no alternative but to become subject again to stripping, wasting, and destitution, by vexatious writs, and law suits, and imprisonments, or take that course to extricate myself, which the law had pointed out.—History of the Church (Utah), vol. 4, p. 595.

In consequence of the utter annihilation of our property by mob violence in the State of Missouri, and the immense expenses which we were obliged to incur, to defend ourselves from the cruel persecutions . . . we were reduced to the necessity of availing ourselves of the privileges of the bankruptcy law.—Church History (Utah), vol. 4, p. 600.

But there is a brighter side. Under his trusteeship and presidency they came to a degree out of their penury and want and built a fine and populous city (as the times went), surrounded by well-tilled farms wrested from the wilderness. A prejudiced nonmember visited Nauvoo in 1844, just a short time before assassination ended the Martyr's trusteeship, and was so impressed by what he saw that he wrote the following to the Times and Seasons:

When I was told that this place was five years ago a wilderness, with only about a dozen log cabins, scattered over the whole extent, I could scarce believe my senses. On every side I saw extended around me the beautiful cottages, the smiling flowers, and the well-cultivated gardens of the enterprising inhabitants. Here and there I saw the lofty mansions of the more wealthy, towering like the oaks of the forest, above their more humble rivals; and giving a beautifully variegated appearance to the entire place. Over the whole of the vast city of four miles square, I saw the beautiful mansions (mostly composed of brick) of its twenty thousand inhabitants. It is indeed a beautiful place and viewed from... the river makes a most splendid appearance. The prairie also, for many miles back, is cultivated almost like the Garden of Eden, by its industrious inhabitants—and all this the work of five years! I could scarce believe it; and yet my eyes could not deceive me. History records no parallel; a few despised, persecuted, banished people, flying from the terrors of religious intolerance, manifested by some of the citizens of this boasted republic, to commence, carry on, increase, and build up such a city as this in so short a space of time almost exceeds belief.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 548.

The failure or success of Joseph as trustee has little bearing on the question as to whether president or bishop should be trustee. In fact, over a period nearly twenty times as long as that covered by his occupancy as trustee, and under several successive administrations, the Utah Mormons have demonstrated that a church can keep out of bankruptcy with its president as trustee in trust. But their example means little to us as precedent, and on quite other grounds I should consider the question and not advocate supplanting the bishop and making the president trustee in trust. The matter need not to be discussed in the Herald in the light of detailed reports of alleged failures on the part of Joseph the Martyr, or President F. M. Smith, or Bishop E. L. Kelley, or Bishop B. R. McGuire. Such a discussion could only confirm in the minds of nonmembers their already poor opinion of Joseph Smith and his people: and might in time even nauseate ourselves.

As to those gone on before, let us of this generation, whose contribution to the welfare of this church is yet to be weighed in the balances of history, step lightly on the graves of our dead. They worked amid persecutions and distresses not known to us. And to that man who ran the gamut of joy and grief, from the glory-crowned Hill Cumorah, through the Gethsemane of Missouri and Illinois, to the bloody cell at Carthage Jail and an unmarked grave at Nauvoo—to that man, Joseph the Martyr, we may well say, Rest thou in peace.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

It is the selfish man who dislikes to pay his bills. "The safest way to secure honesty," said John Locke, "is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves."

According to this, the kindergarten offers "the safest way to secure honesty," for there children are trained "early in liberality," and they learn to enjoy sharing their most precious possessions. Are the little children of your community building this safe foundation for honesty? If there is no kindergarten to which they can go, why not have one opened?

Junior Department Mount Zion Sunday School, Independence, Missouri

On Sunday morning, November 30, 1924, we were permitted to visit the junior department of the Mount Zion Sunday School, at Independence, Missouri, which is held in the Institute Building on the large campus recently acquired by the church. The ages of the children meeting here are about nine, ten, and eleven years.

This is another one of the newer movements in religious educational circles of the past few years. The children meet at a quarter of ten and are held straight through to a quarter of twelve o'clock.

When we arrived they were having a teachers' meeting. We understood this teachers' meeting is held every Sunday morning from a quarter after nine to a quarter of ten. The grade sheet which is used by the school was being talked about, as I gathered, when I entered the room. The Mount Zion Sunday School is experimenting upon a quite elaborate system of grading and reporting to the parents. We commend to anyone who is interested in this question of sending reports home, that he write to Brother C. B. Hartshorn, Box 256, Independence, Missouri, who is superintendent of the Sunday school, to inquire about their method. We were permitted to speak a few minutes at this meeting and used the time in talking over the problem of encouraging worship upon the part of the children themselves in the classroom.

At the beginning of the school the children gathered in the large room on the third floor for opening exercises. From here they separated, each class to its own room, about fifteen in all. They spent almost an hour in the classroom before returning to the assembly room. We were taken around to each room by the department superintendent, Brother Thiel, to spend a few minutes in each. These indeed were interesting moments for us. Each teacher was busy; not a moment was going to waste. In one room we found ourselves falling into the calamity of being asked, "Who made God?" Some bright boy was wanting to know the cause of the Cause. We were afraid that he might chase us too far and so we begged off.

In one room the girls were intensely interested in looking at some pictures of Kirtland Temple. In another room the boys were building up a chart containing names of the books of the Bible in order. In the last room we attended, which we understood was the youngest class which had just been promoted from the primary department across from the Stone Church, the class consisted of both boys and girls. Heretofore all the classes had been separated.
Brother Thiel told me that they were attempting to experiment with such a class to see how it worked out.

This is indeed a problem which we answer too largely by our prejudices rather than by really valuable experience. It is hard to trace through every reason why the Sunday school is more prone to divide these children than does the week-day public and private schools, but it does seem to be.

One could not help but be impressed with the great opportunity which these teachers had and, too, with the great responsibility. Childhood is indeed a short time in which to pass on the religious heritage of our race and church to him in order that he may as soon as possible take up the burden and carry it further than we have. We are wanting the ongoing of the race. Nowhere do we hear people saying to the child, "The church does not need to progress. It is good enough as it is, so take it as it is." The quiet presumption in every classroom is that the child must go on to perfection and that he must carry the race on. Oh, that we could sense this responsibility more and more! This is a day of preparation. Not only should the teacher know the rules of pedagogy, but he must also know the content of his lesson. This every teacher can do, whether he knows anything about pedagogy or not. He can store his mind with many, many experiences of himself and of the race, which he can pass on to the child in an interesting and story-telling fashion, if in no other way.

But let us turn to our narrative, after this digression to speak upon the responsibility of teachers. At the end of the class hour, the children were marched back to the room upon the third floor for a general program. Here several classes gave contributions to the program by readings and piano solos. This occupied about a half hour and seemed to be well enjoyed by the children. We were again permitted to talk a few minutes. We spent our time emphasizing the Golden Rule Sunday which was to be had the following Sunday. The first Sunday in December was specially set aside to give donations to the oriental waifs.

The discipline of the whole school was very good. Every one of the classes seemed to be in very good order, and while there were the usual fitful moments of non-attention on the part of some of the children in the large assembly room, the superintendent, Brother Thiel, seemed to have things very well under his finger. Both he and the assistant superintendent, Sister Strachan, seemed to be on to their jobs. Most likely their chief task is that of keeping up the morale of the children and encouraging and inspiring the teachers to greater and greater heights. Indeed, the great job of church supervisors today is that of training for leadership. This is not the task of any one Sunday school superintendent or any one Religio superintendent in any given local. It is a task for all agencies, Sunday school, Religio, Department of Women, and the church to combine upon. Everywhere would we encourage our department workers of all the departments to study, to enter into classes themselves in order to prepare for their task, and personally we would encourage the constituency of the department in Zion to insist upon having the full time of a man or woman to help them carry on their work. The boys and girls of that place are worth it. Unless we can keep King Immanuel's banner floating there with our children, we can't expect to do it any other place; and in Independence, when all is said and done, we feel that the chief emphasis is not so much upon proselyting the outsider as that of passing on our religious heritage to our children.

Workers Together With God.—No. 2

There come to mind some western Iowa experiences of a quarter of a century ago. The early pioneers of that virgin country were under the necessity of taking the land in its raw state, and by dint of hard and continuous work, transforming it into meadow, and field of grain, and hay, and growing things. They worked early and late. They looked forward to the time when their work days would be over and they could retire to the city and live in ease and rest.

And in due time this hope was realized. The children grew to manhood and womanhood. They married, secured land, built homes, and set out as their parents had done. The old home farm now seemed too large for father and mother. There was too much work. But they were out of debt. They had money in the bank. They could afford to retire. And they did. They rented the farm, secured a town home with modern conveniences, and settled down to rest. The wife who, throughout the years had attended to all of the household duties, now hired a maid who waited on her as she had waited on others in the old days. The husband, relieved of the care of stock and all the multitudinous duties incidental to farm life, was free to follow his bent.

All went well for a time. And then the monotony of the thing began to pall on them. They got tired of doing nothing. Life lost its charm. Their step lost its elasticity. The gladness went out of their lives. Idleness brought its train of physical ills, and these two healthy people, who could work the day long on the farm, now became invalids. They might have continued active and full of vigor until they reached a ripe old age had they continued the old life, but within a few years they were laid away in the city on the hill.

Those who form the flotsam and jetsam of life, the misfits and the discontented, dream of a day when the struggle for existence will be over, and when, by some sort of miracle which they cannot explain, the essentials of life will be forthcoming without effort, and work will be a thing of the past. Many of us visualize a Zion of rest and perpetual enjoyment, where all the luxuries of life may be obtained for the asking and life will be one long sweet rest.

Life is action. Life is expression. Repose is but an incidental compliment. Inaction is death. Living things move. Dead things lie still. Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."—John 5: 17. David, the sweet singer of Israel, exclaimed, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork."—Psalms 19: 1. And "O Lord, how great are thy works." "Thou hast made me glad through thy works; I will triumph in the works of thy hands."—Psalms 92: 4.

If you think that God does not work, go out into the open some bright moonlight night. Hie away as far as you can from the habitation of man—the farther the better. If it is possible, go into the desert, where the hush and the silence of the uninhabited place will make you feel as though you already are in eternity. Then lift your eye to the sky and study the teeming universe of stars, and planets, and solar systems, all the work of God, not only in creation but in continued activity, and portraying, as they do, the tireless energy and activity of God.

Go afield in the springtime, when all creation seems aglow with life. Note the growing bush, the unfolding grain, the budding fruit, and then answer the question, Does God rest? Solomon knew the value of labor when he said:

Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise; which having no guide, overseer, or ruler provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest.

In the preface to the Holy Scriptures, God is represented as saying to Moses:

Wherefore, look, and I will show you the workmanship of mine hands, but not all; for my works are without end, and also my words, for they never cease... The heavens they are many, and they cannot be numbered unto man, but they are numbered unto me; for they are mine; and as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof, even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works; for this is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man.

God is at work in the bloom, the bud, and fruit; in the blade, and stalk, and grain; in the vegetable deposit, and the mold, and the coal, and slate, and stone; in the molten heat, and the chill, and then the precious metals. Oh! God works and his works never end. Work and existence are synonymous with him. And one of the imperative commands from God to man is that he work out his own salvation.

And will God exact works for time in order to fit us for an eternity of idleness and inactivity? Is do-nothingness the inspiration of service? Must men work, and moil, and toil, and sacrifice, and serve in order that in the sweet by and by they may be lifted up and elevated to a place of idleness and be served rather than serve? Will men work for time in order that they may be idle for eternity? Will men work so that they may later be idle? or is not work, constructive work in the now, but preparation for more extended service later?

John the Revelator indicates that men in time and eternity are going to be judged and rewarded according to their works. He states:

And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.—Revelation 20: 12.

My Father works. And I work. Work out your own salvation. T. W. WILLIAMS.

K L D S Call Letters for New Broadcaster

A telegram from President Frederick M. Smith advises that he has been successful in obtaining from Mr. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, the desired call letters for the new 1000-watt church broadcasting station. It is fortunate that the church has been able to secure call letters which are of such vital significance to our organization.

Permission has been received to operate the new broadcasting equipment on a reduced power of 500 watts until such time as the inspection of the station can be arranged and Class-B license granted.

Many people have entered the new "Slogan Contest," and not a few of the slogans suggested consisted of words beginning with the call letters K F I X. These slogans cannot, of course, be considered, and the Slogan Committee requests that all who would like to suggest slogans using the call letters K L D S, send them as soon as possible to the Slogan Committee, Radio K F I X, Independence, Missouri.

Know the Law

BY BISHOP ISRAEL A. SMITH

Our last article set out the following points:

1. That neither the Presiding Bishopric, the Presidency, nor any other quorum, has supreme directional control of the matters coming under their jurisdiction, for there exists a right of appeal to appropriate councils.

2. That the common consent which God requires of his people does not mean the same thing as majority assent, or to support all that the priesthood does or proposes.

3. That the Articles of Incorporation do not prove the subordination of the Bishopric or determine the rank of general church officers.

Authority to Officiate Depends on a Proper Calling and Setting Apart

In numbers 1 and 2 of the series of articles under consideration, a number of quotations from section 104 of the Doctrine and Covenants, upon the subject of priesthood, are presented:

Two Heads

2. All other authorities, or offices in the church are appendages to this priesthood; but there are two divisions, or grand heads—one is the Melchisedec priesthood, and the other is the Aaronic, or Levitical priesthood.

Melchisedec Priesthood

3. . . . The Melchisedec priesthood holds the right of presidency, and has power and authority over all the offices in the church, in all ages of the world, to administer in spiritual things.

4. The presidency of the high priesthood, after the order of Melchisedec, have a right to officiate in all the offices of the church.

Aaronic Priesthood

8. The second priesthood is called the priesthood of Aaron. . . . The bishopric is the presidency of this priesthood, and holds the keys or authority of the same. No man has a legal right to this office, to hold the keys of this priesthood, except he be a literal descendant of Aaron. But as a high priest of the Melchisedec priesthood has authority to officiate in all the lesser offices, he may officiate in the office of bishop when no literal descendant of Aaron can be found, provided he is called and set apart and ordained under this power by the hands of the presidency of the Melchisedec priesthood.

The foregoing is used as authority for the following claim in support of supreme directional control:

That authority over every office in the church, and the right to administer in all offices of the church, is held by the First Presidency.

Even if this conclusion be granted, still it will not support the claim of supreme directional control, or that the Presidency is supreme or absolute over any one or all other quorums. All that anyone can reasonably get out of what has been presented from the Doctrine and Covenants is that the Melchisedec priesthood (not confined to the Presidency alone, but including all quorums therein) has power and authority over all the offices in the church, provided there is a proper calling, setting apart, and ordination unto such power.

For example, an elder may, by virtue of his higher priesthood calling, officiate as a priest, teacher, or deacon, provided he is properly delegated to exercise such powers. But this provision in God's law does not authorize every elder to exercise supreme directional control over the work of every priest, teacher, or deacon. There must be some bestowal of authority supplementing the priesthood calling before a member of the higher priesthood may officially function in an office in the lesser priesthood. I have found no rule in the law or practice of this church authorizing an officer of the higher priesthood to dictate (or exercise supreme directional control) over the normal functioning of the work of an officer of the lesser priesthood—not even by the Presidency of the higher priesthood over the presidency of the lower priesthood.

Does Authority to Ordain Give Power to Direct?

Remember every presiding bishop of the church has been a member of the high priesthood, which priesthood (not the First Presidency alone) has "power and authority over all the offices in the church." The fact that the Presidency may call and ordain a member of the high priesthood to officiate in the office of bishop, when no literal descendant of Aaron can be found, is poor argument to prove that the Presidency is supreme over all the administration of the bishopric. The authority to ordain, following a proper call, does not carry with it the power to exercise supreme control over the future work of the one thus ordained. If so, then members of the Quorum of Twelve or of the High Priests' Quorum who ordain the Presidency should consistently be advanced to prove supreme directional control by the Quorum of Twelve, the seventies, or the high priests.

The Doctrine and Covenants says all the quorums of the high priesthood, following a proper call, setting apart, and ordination, may exercise power and authority over all the offices in the church; the supreme directional control document presumes what the Lord never intended when it says that the First Presidency alone, and in its own right, has supreme direction and control over all the offices in the church.

Revelations for the Church

On page 1210, HERALD of December 17, considerable space is devoted to answering an assertion "recently made that the right of revelation does not inhere in the First Presidency, but in every member of the church." The editorial then apparently tries to make the one thus partially quoted, whose identity is not disclosed, affirm the "notion" that any member may receive revelations for the church.

The brother has no difficulty in discerning here a "grave error," and he attacks fearlessly. The reader has already noted, doubtlessly, that receiving revelations for the church is not mentioned in the partial quotation, so that there seems to be much ado about nothing. At any rate, it is a mistake to suggest that those who are opposing the introduction of supreme directional control are seeking to deny the President the exercise of an established function of his office in receiving revelations to be presented for the action of the church.

Surely, the entire church can stand unitedly upon the following testimony by President Joseph Smith in the Temple Lot Suit:

...The right of revelation did not inhere in the First Presidency, because the right of revelation inhere to every member of the church who is possessed of the gift, but the gift to receive revelations for the church and its guidance inhere in the Presidency of the church, and whatever purports to be revelation is still tested, as has been the custom; that is, whatever purports to be revelation for the doctrine or government of the church, or affecting either in any material issue, before it becomes authority, must be presented to and acted upon by the presiding quorums of the church—the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy especially.—Page 72, Transcript of Record.

In our judgment there are two extremes which the church should avoid. The brother in the editorial under consideration has called attention to one. The other is to attach divine significance to all that emanates from priesthood sources, or to accept as revelations to guide in the government of the church that which does not follow the prescribed course; that is, be tested in the quorums, as affirmed by the one who for fifty years received and interpreted the revelations for the church.

"All Are Called According to the Gifts of God Unto Them."

Bishop Phillips, on the grounds of efficiency or "safety," has indicted as a fallacy the position of those who have "assumed" that in departmental functioning the head of a department is safer than the head of the entire organization. I have no hesitation in tying myself up to this alleged "fallacy," as I haven't been convinced that it is not sound philosophy. When I travel on a railroad, I would much prefer to have the regular train dispatcher or an experienced engineer in control of my train than have it taken over by the average railroad president. If our position is a fallacy, why have department heads with special callings, qualifications, and training?

The second alleged "fallacy" which it is said we "assume" is that one who is not safe if placed over a department, may properly function as the head of the whole church. This is too far fetched. We have said nothing to suggest it. Carrying along our comparison in the previous paragraph, we cannot imagine anyone saying that because a railroad president is not to be trusted in dispatching trains or running an engine, that he, therefore, is unqualified for the responsibilities of his high position.

"Scope" of Conference Resolution Is "Confined"

In this connection General Conference Resolution No. 386 is introduced by Brother Phillips as follows:

That the Presidency is the leading quorum in the church. That the duty of presiding over the church devolves on that quorum. That it is the prerogative of the president to preside over the whole church, to bear the responsibility of the care and oversight of the work of the church, in all its different departments, and through the constituted officers of the church in their various callings, according to the laws, rules, and regulations in force and recognized by the church.

Here is a statement taken out of the middle of a document, and, because of its very general provisions, it is used in support of a proposition that goes far beyond its wording. In addition to this criticism, we invite attention to paragraph four of this document, the same being a report of action of joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and High Priests:

4. The scope of the present council is confined to an inquiry into the calling, duties, and prerogatives of the First Presidency, Twelve, and High Priests.

Now I submit that our brethren are not justified in taking a general statement of this kind from a document dealing with matters wholly foreign to the work of the Presiding Bishopric, wherein neither they nor temporalities are mentioned, and giving it a construction relating directly to them. Since the "scope" of that council was "confined" to other questions, we object to their action being interpreted to include the work of the Presiding Bishopric. As officers of that council, we have Joseph Smith, He man C. Smith, and Henry A. Stebbins, every one of them being on record in no uncertain terms as against the "supremacy" of any quorum of the church.

Furthermore, please note that the Presidency's "care and oversight" is to be exercised through the established order of quorum and official powers, but now comes Supreme Directional Control which, for the first time, makes the bold claim that one quorum is "supreme." Opponents of supreme directional control freely admit and will honor and sustain the Presidency in their "care and oversight of the work of the church . . . according to the laws, rules, and regulations in force and recognized by the church."

Presidency of 1894 Claimed No Supremacy Over Temporalties

What were the rules and regulations in force and recognized by the church when this resolution was passed? I refer you to the General Conference Minutes of the following day (April 13, 1894,) when the Presidency, Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair, and Robert M. Elvin, secretary of the High Council, submitted a recommendation from the High Council, which clearly indicates that when Resolution No. 386 was adopted the officials of the church did not "recognize" any one quorum as being supreme:

"It is evident that the Lawgiver intended that there should be in the church such a distribution and equipoise of authority (right to act) and powers, that the people, the membership, the mass of the believing body of the church should be afforded ample safeguards against such assumption of right to dominate and dictate as would result in leading the church into unrighteousness, sin, bondage, and destruction."

For this purpose, the leading quorums of the church hold check and countercheck on each other, holding equal authority in decision, subject to the decision of the whole array of quorums in General Assembly; each equal decision, however, having relations to such subjects of consideration and determination as belong to their co-equal jurisdiction and action; matters which lie within the immediate sphere of each quorum respectively, being free from the interference and domination of the others.

This care of equalization of powers runs, also, into the relation of separate branch, district, and stake authorities, where immediate jurisdiction lies with local councils, in local affairs, thus preventing injury from an undue dictation on the part of separate church authorities, as is clearly shown in the sections of the law cited as authority in this paper . . .

JOSEPH SMITH, W. W. BLAIR, Presidency, ROBERT M. ELVIN, Secretary.

The above interpretation of the law recognized by the church, having been presented the day following the adoption of Resolution No. 386, should forever silence anyone from endeavoring to interpret this General Conference action as meaning that one quorum is "supreme" or "absolute" above all others in both spiritual and financial affairs. All through its history the church has recognized certain "equalization" of quorum powers and the divinely established system of checks and counterchecks governing quorum and official powers, but now comes Supreme Directional Control which, for the first time, makes the bold claim that one quorum is "supreme."

Trusteeship for Benefit of Entire Church

We think the Saints should be asked the question, and they should give the answer careful and prayerful consideration:

Do the tithe-paying members of the church desire that there shall be no check upon the use of the tithing and other funds?

If they believe a check should be provided, in the name of reason, I ask, shall the funds be placed under the control of those who under the law are responsible, or under the control of those upon whom there is not a line or word in the law to show that financial responsibility has been placed? Who is the most apt to exercise a sound and wise discretion in such matters, they who could be held to account for a wrongful use, or those who are strangers to the trust? In this connection, it is well to bear in mind that the trustee is responsible to his beneficiary—in this instance, the church—not one of the church officers or quorums.

If the church believes that it is wisdom to give the Presidency supreme power over its funds, then, in the name of consistency, let it be attempted in the only way that may be open—make the Presidency the trustees, giving them presiding bishopric functions, and change our charter provisions and conference resolutions in accordance with such change, as well as the Doctrine and Covenants, if it can be done.

Checks and Balances in Government

We have always believed there were checks and balances in our church government. We still believe there should be, but if this rule is adopted there will be at least one quorum without restraint or check in any way—it will be "supreme" and can dictate in all matters, spiritual and temporal. Without in any way discrediting those who constitute the Presidency, may I say that I do not believe the man lives upon whom some sort of check is not salutary where rights of others are involved. It is the universal experience that checks should be provided in institutions where humanity has a part to perform.

We are told that God raised up wise men to found the American Government, which has been provided with very effective checks and balances. Our chief executive is President of the whole United States and has large powers of direction and control, but he is not "supreme" therein. Should he undertake to clothe himself with "supremacy," the attempted innovation might receive the support of some of our citizens, but it would surely be met with formidable opposition from other sources who would arise in defense of the established order of government. Whatever the result might be, all will admit that such a change could not now be made without destroying the system of checks and balances in the Constitution which God raised up and inspired wise men to write. Then the question which we should ask ourselves is, "Would not God provide for the government of his church on earth even a finer system of checks and safeguards?" I believe he would, and I believe he has.

Are All Laws Spiritual Unto Us?

I wish to deal briefly with an argument made by at least two, if not more, of the proponents who have written articles in support of supreme directional control. The authors of "True philosophy of church government" and "Authority in church government" have set up Doctrine and Covenants 28:9 to prove that all the work of the church is spiritual and none of it temporal, as follows:

Wherefore, verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, . . .

If I were not convinced of the entire good faith of these my brethren for whom I have always had the greatest respect and admiration, I might be inclined to classify this attempt as quibbling. In all sincerity, have these brethren considered the qualifying words at the end of the first printed line of this quotation? If God did not intend to take away from the general statement some portion of its universal application, why did he use the words "unto me"?

I answer this as follows: Surely God, being spiritual, can give nothing that to him is not spiritual; all he does and says is spiritual and eternal; but to hold on this slender thread that God has not provided a law for temporal application is most remarkable, indeed. He has referred in revelation to the divisions of his work as "spiritual and temporal"; also "The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law."—Doctrine and Covenants 129:8.

Has the Lord left one "division" of his work entirely unprovided for? The Prophet Nephi says:

I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men, save he shall prepare a way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he commandeth them. 1 Nephi 1:65.

Has the Lord directed the church to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law when there is no temporal law for the bishopric to interpret or the people to obey? The attempt to bolster up supreme directional control by arguments of this character is virtually a confession of the poverty of their cause.

Brethren, read the Lord's statement again. Most strange is it that for us poor mortals, bound and fettered on every hand by conditions relating to time—not eternity—God has made no provision! Personally, I do not think much of our brethren's argument on this score. I will admit, however, that when time is no more, Gabriel has blown his trumpet, the dead in Christ have arisen, and he reigns whose right it is to reign, then, then there will be no temporal law unto us.

"What the World Needs"
BY FRANK B. ALMOND

Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? why then is not the health of the daughters of my people recovered?—Jeremiah 8:22.

The world is full of problems and panaceas. From every side we hear discussions of momentous political questions, of important civic affairs, of labor troubles, and the general social unrest. From pulpit, platform, and press the latest statistics on divorce, vice, and crime are flung at us. No orator of any importance can keep from assailing us with the phrase, "Never in the history of the world were conditions so tremendous in their import as they are to-day," and then giving us a long string of figures, showing that in practically every activity of man the present generation has reached a high-water mark. To all of which, of course, we agree.

The church is continually being urged to meet the challenge of the time; to arise in the might of her divine appointment and lead the world to a higher social unity. Everything is talked of in terms of "the group," the "social unit," "society," "the parliament of man, the federation of the world!" Instead of the individual call to each individual to repent—he, himself—of his own sinful life that he might be saved; we are hearing of a new gospel, according to the newer ideals of to-day, calling on men to amend each the whole world's wicked existence and be saved by making a new constitution! A thing, as Carlyle says, different and distinct altogether.

Doctor Charles E. Jefferson expresses this idea so well that his words will stand reiteration:

Preaching in many pulpits has grown increasingly impersonal. Sermons have become more and more discussions of social questions. To urge upon the individuals in the congregation an immediate surrender to Christ as Lord, seems to certain preachers somewhat irrelevant and to others quite ill-mannered. It is a problem-loving age, as the magazines and plays and novels testify, and it is hardly to be wondered at that the pulpit should be swept along into this roaring torrent. The subjects uppermost in current literature climb into the pulpit, and before the preacher is aware of it he has become a professor of economics, a lecturer on sociology, a writer of pulpit editorials, a social reformer, a clerical philanthropist, an instructor in the literature of modern movements, or a practitioner in the art of mental healing. His favorite subjects are Trades-unions, Socialism, Immigration, Child Labor, Juvenile Courts, Democracy, Industrialism, Sanitation, Labor and Capital, Trusts and Syndicates, Factory Legislation, Civic Reform, Overcrowding, Sweatshops, Conservation of National Resources, Woman Suffrage, Christian Science, and Old Age Pension. Men all around him are discussing these matters, and the preacher feels that he also must make his contribution. The individual counts less and less, and the world booms more and more. The preacher is interested in man, but not in men; in humanity, but not in the particular persons into whose faces he looks on the Lord’s Day.—In the Building of the Church, page 84.

There is danger, grave danger, here. To become so enamored with the “big” plans for saving the world, that the worth of the individual soul is lost, and a man is thus looked upon as a straw, a grain of sand, an infinitesimal spot in the plan of world engineering—this is to lose the very hope for which the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ was revealed to us. It makes us liable to the terrible indictment of which a poet writes:

Who thought to take the world upon my back,
To carry it o’er a chasm of social ill,
And end by letting slip through impotence
A single soul, a child’s weight of a soul,
Straight down the pit of hell!

I venture to assert that the world to-day needs more than a social program; more than a League of Nations; more than a new system of laws governing the relations of capital and labor; more, even, than a perfect economic system. The world to-day needs the power of the word of God! And I dare to add that the world is rotting away morally and politically to-day, because men have lost the preciousness of the Bible and are more concerned in solving the latest cross-word puzzle than in discovering what God has revealed to them concerning his will.

Build your man-made plans for world redemption, if you please! Elaborate all your vain schemes for the alleviation of poverty and the banishment of war! But have we forgotten the age-old cry of the prophet, strengthened by a thousand years of later experience? “O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps.” —Jeremiah 10:28.

In our self-congratulation on the marvelous steps we have taken in modern discovery and achievement; in our restless hunting for more worlds to conquer; for bigger, swifter, and more easeful ways of living—would it not be well to pause for a moment and take our directions afresh? Are we really on the right road? Are we indeed on the highway of peace, and is life satisfying to any of us?

Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls.—Jeremiah 6:16.

Back to the Bible

Twenty-five hundred years ago there ruled over Judah a king named Josiah. He began to reign at the early age of eight, and it is recorded of him that he walked uprightly before God and “turned not aside to the right hand or to the left.” At the time he ascended the throne, the world powers of his age were profoundly agitated, and the political atmosphere everywhere was surcharged with the sultry premonitions of coming storm. Egypt was restless, and was seeking foreign alliances against threatening foes. Nineveh was being crushed by Cyaxares and Nabopolassar. Gog and Magog were emerging on the field of history in the north, nomad Scythians, from whom later on were to descend Genghis Khan and Tamerlane with blood and fire and every conceivable horror stalking in their train. Judah itself was torn by moral dissensions and by public and private corruption. Everywhere, even in the temple in Jerusalem, were exhibited the marks of the depths of religious depravity and uncleanness into which the nation had sunk. Idols and vessels of service to Baal and Asherah stood upon the sanctified altar of Jehovah, and sacrifices the most horrible and filthy were offered up to them.

It was then, when righteousness had reached its lowest ebb, that Hilkiah came to Shaphan and said, “I have found the Book of the Law in the house of the Lord.”—2 Kings 22:8. No more memorable discovery was ever made in the annals of human history. The restored book was carried to the king and read aloud in his presence. Josiah was startled by the contents of the revelation. He put on sackcloth and ashes, called the priests and the people together, and standing on a platform “read all the words of the book of the covenant which had been found in the house of the Lord.”

The result of the reading was a solemn agreement to walk in the ways of Jehovah. The temple was cleansed, the emblems and symbols of their idolatry were destroyed, the sun-chariots were burned in the fire, the altars on the hills and in the groves were thrown down, and the shrines of Moloch and Baal were swept away. A new enthusiasm swept over the people, and for the first time since the death of Solomon, Israel found its self-respect and honorable place among the nations.

Here on a small scale we have revealed what the Bible has done and is yet capable of doing in the history of men. It has quickened and intensified religious activity, has stimulated and prompted national reform, has inspired and kindled literary genius, and has aroused the energies and ambitions of multitudes. Such was the case with the rising of Luther and the Reformation.
Picture, if you can, the Stygian blackness of the dark night of apostasy. For one thousand years the word of God had lain in the musty dungeons of Rome, a sealed book, in the indecipherable hieroglyphics of a language unknown to the common people. In its place had developed a system of worship as gross, as immoral, and as depraving as that of Baal and Asherah in the groves of ancient Judah. Trial by ordeal, the pernicious doctrine of predestination, auricular confession, the sale of indulgences, the burning of heretics, adoration of images, the invocation of saints, vice and pomposity among the clergy, worshipping toward the east, and infant baptism—these and a score of other like practices had made of Christianity an evil and deadly thing. Here was indeed the fulfillment of the prophecy of Amos:

Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord; and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it—Amos 8:11, 12.

Here was another period when the sacred books were hidden, shut up, practically lost to mankind. But they had not perished; they were found and restored again. One of the pictures of the early Reformation which I enjoy is that old picture of Martin Luther standing before a copy of the Scriptures carefully chained to a wall in a crypt. I am of the opinion that it was not the fastening of his denunciating Theses upon the cathedral door that opened the flood gates of the Reformation, but the translating of the Bible into the language of the common people, Wyclif, Tyndale, Erasmus, Reuchlin, Luther, Melancthon, and the Westminster divines—these are they who found the Old Book in the temple, rescued it from an enormous rubbish heap of traditions and decrees, and restored it to the world. And from that great work modern history dates its beginning.

Those, indeed, were great days! When men and women counted it a privilege to die at the stake or on the block for the sake of the old Bible. With bloodthirsty malignity the evil genius of Rome used all its powers to keep the Bible a sealed book. It organized its Inquisition with its octopus-like tentacles reaching into every home, stretching fair maidens upon the rack of torture, and using every means that devil-inspired man could devise to keep the restored revelation from fulfilling its mission. But, compared with the power of the Bible, their efforts were vain and futile. The light was not to be quenched; it was to rise on and on until the dawning of the day when the restored gospel should be revealed in all its pristine glory.

To-day no Inquisition threatens; no deadly menace prevents men from reading and distributing the Bible. The attempts to destroy it are of a different and a deadlier nature. Lofty indifference, modern interpretations, scientific theories, expository works, and the crowded, rushing life of to-day which keeps not one single moment for the quiet contemplation of the things of God—these are the rubbish under which the Scriptures are hidden to-day. Where is the home that has its family altar and the daily reading of the Bible? Where is the individual, who, harassed and torn with trouble and distress, still turns to the Old Book for comfort and guidance? Where are the great religious leaders who have not yet succumbed to the temptation of preaching politics and philosophy and are still weaving their sermons from the rich gold of the sacred Word? Where is the church that is calling men back to the old paths, to the paths of loyalty and steadfast devotion to the divine plan as revealed in the Scriptures?

The Bible Will Not Be Superseded

In this modern age, when “of the making of many books there is no end,” when every allurement is placed before us to spend our time in a thousand ways other than the reading of the Bible, it would be well for us to know that:

The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand forever.—Isaiah 40:8.

For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope.—Romans 15:4.

These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name.—John 20:31.

Hope, life, and peace—in a weary, disillusioned world! In a world that is expectantly waiting for the next war to break upon us, the horrors of which shall have had no comparison! Quietness and assurance—in a world that is all bustle and noise! Hope—in a world that has lost all hope, whose one purpose is to “eat, drink, and be merry; for to-morrow we die!” Life—in a world that is burning the candle at both ends! These are the rich promises the Bible holds out to us to-day! Are they not worth the taking?

O builders of modern civilization; philosophers seeking for the golden secret of knowledge; politicians, with your schemes of world betterment; inventors and scientists, searching for the means of making this short span of earthly life a little more comfortable and easy to those who have money; men and women laboring for the pittance of cash that shall stave off the day of death which comes to you soon at the longest—can you not hear from the dim and distant shades of time the voice of the Master of men?
If thou hadst known, in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace! . . . Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away."

 Though the sun and moon and stars shall cease, And the beauty of the earth decay, Yet the word of God—O blessed be his name! It shall never, never pass away.

May I not, then, appeal to the home folks who shall read these words, to take the Old Book from its long resting place in the corner, dust its worn covers, turn its faded pages, and read therein the things that shall bring peace to your souls. In it you shall find consolation in the hour of trial; in it you shall find the inspiration and the vision to see beyond these earthly years; in it you shall discover the secret of the power to overcome. It shall be to you as the “light which shineth in a dark place, until the day-dawn, and the day-star arise in your heart.”

Cooperation

In a family containing a henpecked husband or boss-ridden woman there will be neither success nor happiness, and they are headed for the divorce court. Success and happiness are found in the home where the spirit of cooperation exists, and their absence is a sure indication that to the world they are man and wife and to themselves they are strangers to the spirit of love which is the basis of family life.

In our Government, where cooperation does not exist between the officers, there will be strife and contention; the people will be the sufferers, and the benefits to be obtained through the operation of the Government in a great measure will be lost. It is not enough to follow the letter of the law; unless we are in the spirit of it, great loss is sure to follow.

When Abraham Lincoln was removed from the office of president by death, he was succeeded by Andrew Johnson, and in a short time there was strife between him and Congress. Bills were passed by the latter, and the President vetoed them because he believed they were inimical to the people of the South who had recently been in rebellion against the Government; that they would foster the spirit of hate and so delay the time of good will and fellowship between the two sections. Congress repassed them, and they became laws of the Nation. The result was far-reaching, and the whole Nation is the loser to-day because of it. Both acted within their lawful rights; Congress had a right to pass them, the President had a right to veto them, and Congress had a right to repass them. “The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life”—there was no cooperation between them and so the whole Nation suffered because of the obstinacy manifested by both of them, Congress and the President. A more recent manifestation of the same spirit occurred between President Wilson and the United States Senate. Under the Constitution, the President had a right to negotiate a treaty with foreign nations, and under the same Constitution the Senate had a right to reject it. Both sides were obstinate, the whole Nation was in a state of turmoil, and four years after it happened we find ourselves as a Nation not free from the results of that contention. What was the trouble? There was no cooperation between the two branches of the Government. A little more forbearance, a little more consideration for the feelings of others, a little more of that Spirit of Christ that he manifested towards his brethren and the world, would have saved our Nation and other nations a great deal of worry and anxiety and trouble.

It is just as true in regard to our church work. If in the spirit of Christ we cannot cooperate in our work, we cannot accomplish the great program that our heavenly Father has marked out for us, and we are more than a generation behind now. The First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric are the chief actors in the great drama, and the remainder of the priesthood and the people take sides according to their knowledge or prejudices.

There are two conditions of unity necessary for cooperation; unity in thought, and if that cannot be attained, then unity of action. William Jennings Bryan made the statement, “Where two men always agree at all times on all questions, they must be idiots.” Men do agree in many things; in fact, it would be hard to find a person that did not agree with us in some particular thing. When men agree in things, it should be an easy matter to work together, but the supreme test comes when men do not agree in all things, that then they can work together harmoniously and accomplish the task committed to them. It can be done. Yes, it has been done. Abraham Lincoln had three men in his cabinet who in some things were against him and even intrigued against him to defeat him for the presidency the second time he was up for election; and on one occasion two offered their resignations, and he would not accept, and told them to continue at their work. Lincoln’s great ambition was to save the Union, and he knew the other men were just as much concerned as he was; they were men of ability, and he wanted their service, and a difference of opinion in some things was not a sufficient reason to lose their great ability and service in saving the Union.
The late President Joseph Smith was another wonderful example of active unity; he worked with men, but in all things they did not agree, and sometimes the lines were quite sharply drawn. But it did not separate him from the brethren, and no doubt he often thought that if the Lord could work with them, and he knows all about them, surely he (the President) ought to do the same thing.

Jesus worked with men that were not only weak, but were also wicked. He did not try to get rid of Judas; he ate his last supper with him, and when Judas had his work finished he went and hung himself. And ardent, impetuous Peter, who cursed and swore and denied his Lord, was not turned out by Jesus. Oh, no! He knew the integrity of Peter's heart, and he also knew his weakness. Jesus trusted him, with all his faults, and when his work was done he wore a martyr's crown and no doubt was hailed by his Master as one worthy to be with him. How strange, how different we are from Jesus! The more the brethren showed their human weaknesses, the more they stumbled, the more he loved them, because then they needed his love. And with us poor weak creatures, when we disagree with our brother we drive him out and perhaps do not give him even a pleasant look. Paul said, "For we are laborers together with God." Does he not know what kind of men they are when he calls them? Would he have called them unless he knew they could work together? If we refuse to work together, what does it show? Why, most certainly that we are not right with God.

A Crisis

There have been two serious crises in the church, and we are facing the third one now, and if we cannot pass it successfully the Lord will have to call others to do the work he asked us to do.

The first one was when polygamy crept into the church and destroyed it so completely only a small remnant could be found to begin reorganization. (See biography of Joseph Smith in Life of Joseph the Prophet, by Edward Turridge, pages 798, 799, 800.) The Lord had forewarned the church of the evil power creeping in to destroy the church, "a thing which is had in secret chambers, to bring to pass even your destruction, in process of time" (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4). The Lord trusted to the priesthood of his church to protect it from the evil he saw coming, but they failed to measure up to the standard of courage and righteousness, and so the evil foretold overthrew the church.

The second was when the Lord wanted to bring about the Reorganization. The Lord had told one or more of the elders that when they met in the General Conference on April 6, 1853, they should organize the church. Zenos Gurley, sr., in writing of those days, said that for two days they had tried to organize in obedience to the Lord's command, but they could not—each one was determined to have his way or no organization would take place. Men who before had worked together were now opposing each other. Elder Gurley said he became so sad and discouraged that he prayed to God to take him out of the world. They continued to fast and pray, and finally God came to their rescue; angels ministered to them, the Holy Spirit was given to them in great power, and they accomplished the task that the Lord had given them to perform. He also told them that he had withheld his Spirit from them to let them know that they did not have wisdom of themselves to do the great work intrusted to them. A full account of what happened and what was done is found in Church History, volume 3, pages 218, 219, 220. It was a great crisis through which the little band had passed successfully, and so started the Reorganization with the Lord's stamp of approval upon it. It was on their knees that they conquered and in the spirit of humility that had possession of their souls while they made the heroic struggle to save his church.

We are passing through a crisis; it has been on for several years. Are we going to be as brave and humble as was that little band at Zarahemla, Wisconsin, or will we let our folly, pride, and contention destroy the strong organization and self-sacrificing army of loyal men and women who have given their all on the altar of sacrifice? To your knees, O Israel, and plead with our blessed Lord that he will come to our rescue and save us from the sad fate that overtook the church in an early day. We need his help to get right with him so we can safely ride through the storm.

The Power of Influence

No stream from its source
Flows seaward, how lonely soever its course,
But some land is gladdened! No star ever rose
And set, without influence somewhere! Who knows What earth needs from earth's lowest creature? No life
Can be pure in its purpose and strong in its strife,
And all life not be purer and stronger thereby.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Sacramento, California

December 31.—Our branch has had much activity in the various departments this fall and winter. Our city mission­ary, Elder George H. Wixom, delivers splendid gospel sermons and has maintained a good attendance, especially Sun­day evenings.

The Department of Women gave a jolly costume party on Halloween, with prizes, games, and refreshments.

A pleasant surprise planned for the birthday of our aged Sister C. W. Blair during the Sunday school hour early in November had to be indefinitely postponed on account of her illness, but the lovely basket of flowers was sent to her at her home. She has passed the crisis now and is improving slowly.

The junior church has been established here for the eleven o'clock service each Sunday excepting sacrament Sunday, for over two months now and seems to be an excellent venture. The junior choir, with the branch chorister, renders an anthem, and two or more program numbers are provided, fol­lowed by a sermon by Brother Wixom or, in his occasional absence, by one of the local brethren. Apostle D. T. Wil­liams has visited us twice and also ably occupied his time. All our young people over twelve years are asked to sing in this junior choir, if only for the song service. This reaches some who cannot attend the rehearsals and gives all a part in the service. A few of our girls are doing nice solo work, both vocal and piano. The Zion's Praises is used for congrega­tional singing. The juniors also sing with the adult choir in the evening service, and though not taking part in the anthem, they are becoming familiar with the hymns used from the Hymnal.

A Christmas tree party for Orioles of the past and present, and their friends, which included all our young people from twelve to middle age, with girls' leader, Sister Zayda Hook, as hostess, was given recently. Each one brought a small gift for the person whose name was previously assigned him, with a bit of original poetry attached. These were placed around the tree, and after a brief community sing Santa Claus arrived, and as the names were called the recipient had to unwrap the gift and read the poetry. Much fun was oc­casioned by the various toys and verses. Refreshments were then enjoyed. Toy balloons were sent home to the youngsters under twelve.

Our choir of adult and junior treble voices gave the Christ­mas cantata, "The awakening" (Balnes), with the chorister, Sister Birdie Clark, directing, and with organ and piano ac­companiment, on Sunday evening, December 21. Many ex­pressions of appreciation were received. Brother Wixom spoke on "The wise man of the east," showing in a brief sermon how we may become wise men of the west.

On Tuesday evening, December 23, the Sunday school chil­dren gave the cantata, "The Christmas secret" (Lorenz), un­der the direction of Sister C. H. S. Bidwell. Clever scenes and costumes, and parts well done, with Santa Claus, a beau­tiful tree, and pop-corn balls for all, made a delightful even­ing.

Our Department of Women have made a splendid show­ing with their bazaar this year. Sister Pauline O. Napier had full charge of this work, taking it up about eight months ago. Free space was secured in a prominent down-town loca­tion for three days, and they cleared close to $270 for our building fund. The sisters from Rocklin Branch joined us one day and also did well.

All elections have been held this month with the following elected as leaders for the new year: Elder George Daley, pastor; Elder C. E. Ball, Department of Recreation and Ex­pression; Mrs. C. H. S. Bidwell, Sunday school; Mrs. J. A. Austin, Department of Women; Miss Zayda Hook, historian and branch correspondent.

Two district officers here, Elder W. H. Dawson, vice presi­dent, and Sister Birdie Clark, chorister, plan to attend the rally at Stockton next Sunday. They with a few others at­tended the splendid two-day Arbor meet at Irvington, so ably written of by Brother Elbert Smith. Brother Dawson has purposely given up much of his local work that he may de­vote more time to his district work.

Our faithful and efficient pianist, Sister Ella Knox, has been quite ill over the holidays but is expected to be with us again soon.

Sister George Dahl, a faithful little mother of five of our bright Sunday school girls and one cradle roll boy, is con­fined to the hospital through an operation for gallstones and has requested the prayers of the Saints that she may be re­stored to her family.

Brother Wixom is spending the Christmas holidays with his family in San Bernardino.

Elder C. W. Hawkins of San Jose has been visiting with Sister Hawkins at the home of their daughter, Mrs. W. H. Dawson, for several weeks. Sister Dawson is quite recovered from her long illness and is again attending the meetings with her family.

El Reno, Oklahoma

We start the new year with our sails set for the breezes of advancement of peace, headed for Zion fully redeemed. Surely El Reno will be represented among the wise virgins.

The wings of some of the northern storms have reached us and given us ice and snow and zero weather—rather se­vere—just with our natural gas and coal we keep warm. None of our services have been omitted for any cause.

The last night of the old year was spent in a very spiritual and enjoyable combination meeting. The first forty minutes were occupied in earnest prayer and testimony; then the meeting was changed into a budget business meeting, at which officers were elected for the branch, the Sunday school, and the Religio. Altogether it was a meeting of unusual unanimity and spirituality. Brother Gath C. Lewis was unanim­ously continued as Sunday school superintendent. He is doing good work. Brother Louis Dalton was put in charge of the Religio. He ranks among our best workers in willing­ness and ability.

Our Sunday school gave us a splendid program on the night of December 23 to avoid interfering with our prayer service. The program was well adapted and unique, some numbers being very fine. Sister W. A. Connell had the gen­eral arrangement in hand, willingly assisted by others.

Considering the fact that we are few in number, our branch has done well financially, having sent $150 to the Bishop for Christmas offering besides meeting other heavy expenses.

Brother James M. Needham was baptized on December 17 and confirmed under a good spirit. When he heard the Good Shepherd's voice, he followed, and the Saints gave him a hearty welcome into the sheepfold, where he feels at home.

Brother Eugene Connell, who is taking a course at Stillwater College, is home on a vacation, highly enjoying the church services and home associations. He returns to complete his course.

There is a general urge here to a higher and better life during the coming year, a general determination to labor harder for perfection made manifest here.

We greatly appreciate the scores of tokens of gospel friendship and Christmas cheer received by us during this Christmastide. Truly the work is the Lord's and will triumph.

J. M. Terry.

San Francisco, California

December 29.—The committee who has charge of the building of our assembly hall on the rear of the church are earnest and active. They gave a dinner December 4 which was well attended and which added considerably to the amount on hand for that purpose.

We had our regular sacramental meeting December 7 and had among our visitors that day Brother Frank Rushton, son of Apostle John W. Rushton. He is a sailor on the Submarine 31, now anchored in our bay.

On December 14 Elder George S. Lincoln was the speaker in the morning. District President J. D. White, and a number of other visitors were present. Elder John B. Carmichael, president of Oakland Branch, preached for us in the evening.

Our regular priesthood meeting was held December 8 and adjourned until the 15th, as much matter of interest was being considered.

The regular business meeting and election of officers was held December 17. Brother John A. Saxe was elected president for another year, and Brother Nelson was chosen as president of the Religio.

On December 19 the Sunday school had the annual Christmas tree. The church was beautifully decorated, and the tree was decorated with the usual lights and trimmings. The entertainment was first class. Brother Ben Parks was Mrs. Santa Claus, dressed in the height of fashion. His acting of the part of a woman was splendid and was greatly enjoyed by all.

Elder E. B. Hull, who has been sick with a bad cold, is almost well again and has resumed his church duties.

Rhodes, Iowa

January 7.—The home-coming of the Rhodes Branch on December 21 was a happy, peaceful occasion. Notwithstanding the extreme cold weather and bad condition of the roads, there were a goodly number in attendance.

Sister Bessy Laughlin, who is now a resident of Magnolia, with her daughter and son, was in attendance; also the young people of the branch who are away attending school came home, bringing with them other young people whose homes were too distant to go home for the holidays. Allan Houghton, of Madison, Wisconsin, came with Roy Cheville; and Ada Roush, of Wray, Colorado, came with Ruth Richeson; also Blair Roush, who is attending school at Iowa City, came to spend the holidays with his wife and babies at the home of his father-in-law, C. M. Richeson. Sister J. B. Roush, sr., of Wray, Colorado, spent one week with her son and daughter at the home of C. M. Richeson. These were all out-of-the-district visitors. There were also several visitors from Des Moines, among whom were District President Henry Castings, Stephen Robinson, district superintendent of the Religio, Pastor David Dowker and family, and Doctor Frank Hull.

Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker both morning and evening. A warm dinner was served by the sisters of the branch in the basement of the church, of which about one hundred partook. A very spiritual social meeting was held at two o'clock, there being many inspiring and uplifting testimonies borne. Brother White remained over Monday with us and preached a wonderful sermon that night, a sermon calculated to inspire faith and confidence in the ultimate triumph of the work. Preceding the sermon, Leo Holmes, of Montour, a very worthy young man, was baptized by V. G. Lents. We thought this, together with the wonderful sermon, a fit ending to our home-coming services.

At our annual business meeting December 29, all the old officers and heads of departments were sustained except the Sunday school and Religio superintendents. Fred Cheville was chosen as president of the Religio and Walter Pitcher as Sunday school superintendent.

There has been considerable sickness in the branch the past month. Brother C. M. Richeson was called to Montour to administer to old Mr. Butler on December 8. Mrs. Butler is a member of the church, but her husband is not. However, he has never opposed the work. Brother Richeson stayed with him all night, and when he took leave of him the next morning the old man whispered, "When I get well I will be baptized." But it was too late; he passed away the next day.

Elder Leonard Houghton, missionary, made a flying visit to Rhodes to see his son Allan, who was spending his vacation with Roy Cheville. We regretted very much that he could not remain over Sunday with us, but he was anxious to get back to his field.

A splendid sacramental meeting was enjoyed by the Saints the first Sunday of the new year. The Holy Spirit was present to a very marked degree. One of our brothers, whose health has been failing for more than a year, was administered to, and while he was not healed we feel that God recognized and approved the act by the wonderful presence of the Spirit that rested upon the brethren and the congregation during the administration and throughout the meeting. The doctors give him no hope, and if our heavenly Father does not see fit to heal him we thank him for a faith that can take denial and remain steadfast. Brother Luing holds the office of priest and has always been a faithful worker in the church.

We ask the Saints to pray for him that the Father may rebuke the disease and prolong his life for future usefulness in the church.

It was with deep regret and sympathy that we learned of the destruction of the Saints' church in Des Moines.

Fremont District

Tabor, Iowa, January 1.—Fremont District is still alive, though we have not reported much of late. The various locals celebrated the Christmastide with appropriate programs and festivities. Here at Tabor the young people gave us "The wondrous night"; and the tableau presented of "The shepherds on the hillside," "The Three Wise Men," and "The Christ Child," gave us vivid pictures of that occasion so long ago and what it has meant to the whole world, making us realize anew the gospel light and the wonderful opportunities we have as a church. We and our children learn much from dramatizing these scenes from the life of Christ.

New Year's Eve Elder A. M. Chase gave us a treat with his lantern pictures and lecture of the Passion Play. This brought out a nice congregation of Saints and nonmembers who seemed to thoroughly enjoy the program.

Immediately after this the annual branch business meeting was held, one feature being the election of officers for the

branch and the departments for the coming year. A good spirit was present, and we think our corps of workers accepted their various duties with renewed vigor and good resolve.

An hour following the business meeting was occupied with appropriate recreational activity, and a program in which all, from the children to adults, took part with much enjoyment. Light refreshments, consisting of hot cocoa, wafers, and popcorn balls, were then served. This brought us to the last half hour of the old year. All took their seats, forgetting their fun, and a brief time was spent in a devotional service, in which all felt the impress of the Spirit, and a nonmember child called for the singing of his favorite hymn. For closing, the old familiar hymn, "Joy to the world, the Lord will come," was sung, during which the doors were opened to speed the Old and welcome the New Year. After benediction and hearty handclaps, and good wishes for the New Year, all went to their homes, feeling that the time had been profitably spent.

MRS. A. M. CHASE.

Wichita, Kansas

January 7.—One of our Sunday school classes, composed of a group of sisters, under the leadership of Sister Bertha Kanady, has been organized into a real working class. Feeling that something more was necessary than just meeting in class on Sunday—their plan being to do some real constructive work—they are now meeting once monthly outside of Sunday school to discuss problems that arise and might arise daily. They have set aside the time between nine and half past nine when the entire class, and all others that care to, unite in secret prayer to God for wisdom and a greater vision of the work that lies immediately before us and for an earnest and fervent desire to accomplish the work as it pleases Him in whose work we are engaged. This class has also purchased a number of copies of The Call at Evening, and are placing them in circulation; sending them any and everywhere they might be read.

The writer is very much interested in the young of the church and had longed for the time to come when we could have a young people's day in our branch. Finally our ambition was realized, and all officers of the branch consented to give their hour to the young people on November 30. We had an early prayer meeting at half past eight, in which we felt the spirit of devotion and consecration. The Sunday school was in charge of a young person, and just before the closing one of the girls from the junior department read a paper on the apostasy which she had written in connection with her class work.

The eleven o'clock hour was used by two young people, the writer being in charge. The speakers were Sister Zelia Cook, who gave us a thirty-minute talk about "The girl in the church." Her talk was much appreciated by all. The second speaker was Brother Byron Jennings, who gave a thirty-minute talk on the boy problem. This talk was also very beneficial.

The Religious hour was in charge of the young people, and a program was rendered which everyone present enjoyed.

At eight o'clock two more of the young people occupied. Sister Helen Hague gave a talk on "The ideal junior department of education," and Brother Lawrence Brockway spoke on "The ideal department of education."

This was the first young people's day ever had in this branch, but we hope it will not be the last. We are planning now for a young people's convention of the Southwestern Kansas District.

On December 5 a banquet was held in the basement of the church. This was the first of its kind we have had in the branch and was made possible by the Department of Women, under the able supervision of Sister Bessie Dace, superintendent. Our regular quarterly business meeting followed, and the four young people previously mentioned, with others, were elected to responsible positions in the departmental work. Apostle F. Henry Edwards was with us for the banquet and remained a couple of days, preaching each evening. Apostle E. J. Gleazer also stopped over at Wichita and preached a fine sermon a short time ago.

There seems to be an increasing desire among the membership of the branch for knowledge and learning. With the help of our pastor, T. S. Williams, the Department of Women is meeting weekly and studying the church history. A study class has also been organized which meets on Thursday morning, and another class will be organized in the near future which will meet on Thursday evening for study. Much credit is due our pastor for the organization of these classes. We can remember when there was very little interest along organized educational work, but under faithful leadership we have advanced to higher grounds and feel a keen desire to continue until we shall reach perfect manhood in Christ Jesus.

Under the supervision of Sister Williams, a Temple Builder circle has been organized. They are using their weekly meetings for a study class. We also have one Oriole circle here. On Christmas Eve the Temple Builders gave a pageant at the church which was greatly appreciated. A treat of candy and fruit was given the children.

Stella Brockway, who is attending Graceland College this year, was home for the holidays.

All of the departments are moving along nicely, and we look forward to a year of growth and development.

TOPEKA, KANSAS

THE EXTREMELY COLD weather the latter part of December and the early part of January has reduced our attendance somewhat, but not to a very great extent.

Bishop C. J. Hunt was with us Sunday, December 14, speaking both morning and evening. He also conducted a round table meeting before the evening services. Brother Hunt's chief topic of discussion was the financial affairs of the church. He is a very interesting speaker and presented us with many financial facts and figures regarding the church.

A good crowd was present for the first sacramental service of the year, and all enjoyed the very fine talk by Brother Surridge, from Bevier, Missouri, who is with us for a while. It is hoped he will bring his family and make his residence in Topeka.

It has been decided to hold the Wednesday evening prayer services in the homes of the Saints hereafter, at least during cold weather. Two meetings will be held, the membership being divided according to their location. One group will meet at the home of Brother Deller and the other group at the home of Brother Whipple. It is thought this will be an advantage in several ways.

A splendid Christmas program was given at the church the evening of December 21. It was greatly enjoyed by a large crowd, although the weather was bitterly cold. Those giving the program appreciated the very fine support given, which is necessary to make any effort a success. The committee in charge of the program deserves great credit for the results obtained, considering the limited amount of time used in preparation.

Appointments of Sunday-school teachers for the coming year were made January 4. There are at this time three classes studying the senior quarterly, the young people's class being the largest, several nonmembers attending, whom we are glad to have with us. The Sunday school is considering furnishing the rooms over the church to be used for classrooms. These rooms are vacant at present and could very well be used, as the church is crowded. It looks very much as if Topeka Branch will have to have more room if the attendance increases, as we hope and believe it will during the coming year.

A city-wide religious census was conducted in Topeka one day early in December by a committee comprised of members from practically every denomination represented here, our branch furnishing two canvassers. In all there were about seventeen hundred canvassers who spent two hours' time collecting data on the religious preference of about sixty-seven thousand people. The names of parties canvassed were then turned over to the pastors of the various denominations, according to the denomination specified as preference. Several names in this manner were thus turned over to us, out of which it is thought we may locate some members. But it seemed impossible to keep our list separate from the Utah list, so it is not yet known how much benefit we will derive from the campaign. However, if we locate but one, it will be worth the effort.

We are pleased to report at this time a great improvement in the condition of Brother Leonard Filsenberger, who has been seriously ill for several weeks. He seems to be on the road to recovery, and we hope he will be able to meet with us again soon.

We wish a progressive and prosperous new year to all the Saints, and a great advancement for the cause of Christ in 1925.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

January 6.—The sacramental service last Sunday was a wonderful meeting. District Missionary Curtis and District President B. E. Brown were with us during the holidays, for which we were indeed grateful.

On November 29 the Saints planned a surprise for Brother and Sister Brown. The Saints gathered at their home while they were out calling; then they were called home on the telephone. They hurried home, and when they entered the house Brother Brown could almost have been knocked down with a feather. Sister Brown went on into another room where another surprise awaited them, for the Saints had given them a shower of groceries. All reported a fine time.

The Tuesday evening before Christmas the Sunday school gave their Christmas program, which was indeed very appropriate for the occasion, and all who took part in it deserve high commendation.

On the 29th of December the young people gave a surprise party for Sister Lola Rogers, who has since left for Independence to enter the Sanitarium to train for nursing, carrying with her a beautiful ivory comb and mirror to remind her of the young people of Colorado Springs. Work is progressing as fast as possible on the new church addition, though we have been handicapped by the extreme cold weather.

We are sorry to report the loss of Sister Thelma Gardner, who has moved to Denver, where Mr. Gardner has found employment with Brother E. J. Williams.

Brother R. S. Salyers, Jr., was with us during the holidays. Those who know him will be interested to know that he is improving to the extent that he will soon be well again.

We have been exceptionally blessed and pray that others may, enjoy the blessings of God as we have. May all of God's people enjoy a happy and prosperous New Year is the prayer of the Saints at this place.

Kirtland, Ohio

It is nearly three months since the writer came to Kirtland, the Gateway to Zion, to take up the work of the bishopric in this district. We have found the field an inviting one, with a host of splendid Saints, most of whom are showing their faith by their works to the honor of the cause which they have espoused.

Brother and Sister Pitt left early in November for Florida, but visitors continued to come to see the temple until nearly Christmas, when cold weather checked their coming.

The Kirtland Auditorium has been in frequent use of late. A father and son banquet was held in December under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., which was a real community affair. Ex-State Senator Kimball of Ashtabula was the principal speaker, and Brother T. G. Neville sang. The Department of Women also gave a banquet and bazaar just before Christmas, which was a financial success, and which with other receipts enabled them to pay $400 and interest on the branch's part of the auditorium fund. The building has also been opened for recreational activities.

Recent elections have placed Brother Ebenezer Curry as branch president to succeed Brother John Lewis, who because of business cares felt unable to continue; and Brother John Collins as Sunday school superintendent to succeed Brother Ernest Wilson.

Sunday services are held in the temple, and the quiet order observed is refreshing and inspiring. Few fail to feel the divine presence there. Saints everywhere in their assemblies should learn that lightness of speech, with noisy confusion, is incompatible with the Spirit of God. A splendid sacramental service was held January 4, in which Brother Robert Miller, president of the Lakewood, Cleveland, Branch, assisted.

For some time a mission has been conducted by the local brethren at Geneva, where there are about four families of Saints and an interested group of nonmembers, some sixteen or more. It is planned for the entire mission to attend the temple service here on the 11th. Two are ready for baptism. Brother T. Thomas has charge of the mission.

District President T. G. Neville has visited several times among the branches of late and will soon make a trip to Barberton. He and his family have charge of the Kirtland Hotel.

Plans are already being laid for the great reunion to be held here beginning August 13. The committee met here January 3 and continued its sessions on the 4th. Present: F. J. Ebeling, chairman; James E. Bishop, secretary-treasurer; W. J. Sherman; Robert Miller, T. G. Neville. By invitation Bishop Charles Fry met with the committee, and action was had which placed him on the committee and elected him secretary-treasurer, subject to the approval of the reunion.

The responsibilities of the reunion were divided as follows: Dining hall in charge of F. J. Ebeling; refreshment tent, T. G. Neville; tents and camping, R. Miller; music, T. G. Neville; advertising, E. A. Webb and C. Fry; recreation, J. A. Jaques; to arrange program for spiritual and educational work, James E. Bishop and Charles Fry.

The Doctrine and Covenants class at the temple is now following a course of lessons outlined by the bishop of the district.

The bishop has had considerable to do in hearing court cases of late, having heard two at Barberton, Ohio, and one at Grand Rapids, Michigan. There are others pending.

Many are looking forward to attending the General Conference in April and are hoping for an adjustment of all difficulties and a forward movement for the work. May the Lord's blessing rest upon the church.

Charles Fry.
Holden Stake News

Atherton

Brother W. S. Macrae was with us in our business meeting December 17. Brother George Blackmore was chosen pastor; D. R. Hughes, superintendent of the Sunday school; Noble M. Wilkensen, superintendent of Recreation and Expression; Sister Post, superintendent of the Department of Women, and Sister Schwab, director of music.

A farewell party was held at the home of Brother and Sister Schwab last Monday evening. They are leaving Atherton for new fields of labor. The Saints appreciate the assistance of Brother and Sister Schwab in the upbuilding of the work at this place. What is our loss will be others' gain.

Some of our members attended the institute held at Holden, and all are well pleased with what was accomplished at the meeting.

Lexington

Since our last items appeared in the Herald, we have had some fine services. We have been visited by Brother R. E. Burgess of Knobnoster and Brother Richard Bullard of Independence, but most of our preaching was done by the local priesthood, Brethren W. T. Beard, Finis Beebe, J. E. Johnson, and J. A. Brendel having occupied.

Brother Macrae, of the Holden stake presidency, was with us when we held our election of officers for this year. The following were elected as heads of departments: J. A. Brendel, pastor; W. T. Beard, superintendent Sunday school; Fred Farness, Religion superintendent; Lola A. Johnson, director of music; and Priscilla Irvin, superintendent of the Department of Women. We are expecting a record-breaking year in 1925.

The mines are working here now, the first time since April 1. This has much to do with the work here, because most of our people are miners. We had a wonderful Christmas program entitled, "White gifts for the King," by Jessie Brown Pounds. The gifts that were given through the program were given to eight different families. This is our first program of this kind and was a real success. The Judean drawing and setting was by Irvin Gaffin, one of our boys.

We had a fine sacramental service January 4. The Spirit was poured out upon almost everyone present, and all rejoiced because of its influence. Brother Brendel spoke at the evening hour.

Knobnoster

We have recently received visits from Elders F. A. McWethy, of the stake presidency; I. M. Ross, of the stake bishopric; D. R. Carmichael, president of the Religion; and C. L. House, of Houstonia. An increase of spiritual power is evident at the various services of the church.

Three cases of scarlet fever are reported in the group. The cases reported are the two eldest sons of Doctor and Sister Lloyd Cunningham have a new son added to each of their households, the former on December 11 and the latter on January 2.

The Saints gathered at the home of Mr. and Sister Connelly to help them celebrate their fifth wedding anniversary on December 13.

Marshall

D. J. Krahll, president of the Holden Stake, was with us Sunday, December 28, at our annual election of officers. Levi Phelps was again elected pastor. Walter Smith, superintendent of the Sunday School Department; Will Ridge, of the Religion Department; Sister Clara M. Thayer, clerk; Sister Ralph M. Ridge, publicity agent. Brother Krahll delivered a very edifying discourse in the evening, which was enjoyed very much. We wish he would come oftener.

Brother Alvin Knisley returned to his home in Independwork. Apostle E. J. Gleazer is announced to begin a series of meetings here on next Sunday, the 11th.

Bishop C. J. Hunt was with us Sunday, the 4th, assisting in the communion service of the morning. In the afternoon he delivered the sermon at the funeral of Sister Kate Urfur.

Bradner, Ohio

January 6.—Christmas was observed in the usual manner at the local church on Christmas night. A splendid program was given consisting of two cantatas entitled, "All aboard," and "Open heart," both of which were beautifully carried out. There were also several songs, recitations, and dialogues by the little folks. Brother and Sister E. L. Ulrich and Brother and Sister T. Slye form a quartet second to none, and their rendition of "Silent night" was most impressive. Brother Casper Bihn, our blind Saint, sang several solo parts in the cantatas in a most pleasing manner. A generous treat was given all who attended.

Individually and collectively the local Saints have made a New Year resolution to work with more zeal than ever before for the upbuilding of the church and Zion, and to dwell in perfect unison one with the other, that the Spirit of God may ever dwell in our midst.

The Department of Women, with Sister Franklin Slye as president, has given its pledge for service the coming year. The department is putting forth every effort to establish a library at the local church, and the work has progressed slowly. We hope in the near future to see our efforts rewarded.

Our prayer meetings are impressive and well attended, and the many testimonies are from the heart.

Religious is held each Friday evening. After the study of the lesson from the Book of Mormon a short program is usually given. The program committee has decided that among other diversions a number of debates will be held, that they may give added interest to our young people.

Our local missionaries, Elders E. L. Ulrich and Walter Wirebaugh, have again entered their respective fields of labor after spending the holidays at home with their families. Brother Ulrich is at Springfield, Illinois, and Brother Wirebaugh at New York and vicinity.

Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

January 2.—On New Year's Eve quite a number of the Saints held a watch party at the home of Patriarch A. D. Angus. The time was spent in short talks by Brothers Angus, Walter Lewis, and Robert Clubston; a recitation by Sister Thomas Jones; songs by Sister Clagston and Thomas Jones; and a violin solo by Lillian Lewis. A short season of prayer was had also.

Brother Angus was forced to retire from the active ministry owing to rheumatism which is still very bad at times. For the last three years New Year's Eve has been spent in this way with our disabled brother to try to cheer him in his affliction. The blessings were mutual.

Haverhill, Massachusetts

January 1.—The work here is in good condition, and all are taking an active part in the work. Everyone is looking forward to the coming year being a very successful one.

At the annual business meeting of the branch the following officers were elected: L. E. Jordan, president; H. A. Thayer, S. Pouls, and F. E. Hatch, priests; A. Wengel, teacher; B. O. Randall, deacon; Susie Jordan, organist; and Ella Thayer, chorister.

Southern Wisconsin District Conference

The conference of the Southern Wisconsin District met at Madison December 13 and 14. There was a good attendance, though it would have been greater had the weather continued mild and had sickness not been so prevalent.

Brother J. O. Dutton was chosen to preside over the conference, to be assisted by J. F. Garver and W. A. McDowell. The opening prayer was by Brother Garver, after which a special number was sung by Sisters Sylva Dennis, Mary Woodstock, and Minnie Carpenter. The usual order of business was followed.

Nine out of the ten branches in the district reported. Brother Dutton in his report as district president gave the condition of each branch and reported the general outlook to be encouraging, but on account of the small missionary force in the district, many calls for work could not be filled. A summarized report of the priesthood was read, which showed a fairly good degree of activity. Financial reports were read and accepted, together with the report of the auditor. These reports included the reunions of 1923 and 1924.

Brother Christy reported verbally for the Department of Women, owing to the fact that Sister Hield was not present and had been unable to prepare a report. Sister Christy had also been active in the women's work but was not able to attend conference.

The district Sunday school superintendent, owing to sickness in the family, was unable to attend or make her report in time for the conference. Brother N. E. Hield, district superintendent for the Department of Recreation and Expression, reported concerning the work and showed that great effort has been made to instill into the locals a greater understanding of the value of this work. Also as district librarian he reported an effort to get good reading into the hands of Saints and friends.

Two resolutions were passed as follows: Resolved, that hereafter we have no business meeting at the reunion other than the organization meeting at the beginning, and that all reports of the finances or other reporting be made at the following district conference.

The second was: Resolved, that we rescind our former action providing that the ministry report each month to the district president and that we return to our former rule that the priesthood report once in six months. This seems to be more satisfactory to the majority, and we believe just as good as far as the interest of the brethren is concerned.

The advisability of changing the place of the reunion for 1925 was discussed and a committee elected to decide the matter later on.

The election of the usual district officers was taken up, with Brother Garver in the chair by invitation.

The five delegates for General Conference were chosen as follows: Leonard Houghton, W. A. McDowell, J. O. Dutton, E. J. Lenox, Mrs. J. O. Dutton.

The June conference in 1925 will be held with the Soldiers Grove Branch, the time being left to the presidency.

Brother J. F. Garver preached in the evening.

Sacramental service was held Sunday morning at nine o'clock in charge of J. O. Dutton, H. W. Woodstock, and G. E. Noble. This service was followed by preaching by W. A. McDowell; at two by W. Christy; at a quarter of eight by J. F. Garver.

A vote of thanks was extended to the Madison Saints for their care of the conference.

Julia N. Dutton,
District secretary.
Independence

Stone Church

Sunday was Book of Mormon Day at the Stone Church, being sponsored by the Religio. The Religio has for some time been emphasizing the study of the Book of Mormon, which culminated at this time in a series of meetings. Brother John Lloyd, president of the Religio, presided, and in the morning Elder Joseph Luff preached on the Book of Mormon. In the evening Pastor C. Ed. Miller gave a lecture on the Book of Mormon, illustrated with slides, paying especial attention to criticisms that had been raised against the book and its teachings. Special musical numbers were also a part of the program.

The Presidency has invited the young people in Zion to attend a special meeting at the Stone Church on January 20, at which time items of interest will be presented. All should attend.

President F. M. Smith is still in the East, but he is expected to return soon. President F. M. McDowell is still in the Sanitarium recovering from an operation, but it is expected that he will soon be moved to the home of relatives in the city.

Apostle John F. Garver is resting in the Sanitarium under the care of physicians, treating for intestinal trouble which has appeared at different times before in his life, but which has not received proper attention. He is thought to be making good progress.

It is expected that the radio programs next week will be broadcast from the new studio. It will be some time yet before the new 1000-watt station will be put in operation, as some unexpected delays have been suffered. The aerials are completed, so all will be in readiness for the new station when it is completed and approved by the Government. The station has been given the new call letters of K L D S.

Several sad deaths have occurred in this community this week. Sunday evening Sister W. T. Rushton, mother of Apostle John W. Rushton, fell in her home, which resulted in her death Monday morning about eight o'clock. She had been listening over the radio to the sermon of Bishop James F. Keir, and was up later than usual. As she was preparing to retire she fell in some way. She was unconscious for some time after the fall but did not pass away till the following morning. She leaves besides her husband, Apostle John W. Rushton, her only son; and her daughter, Mrs. Frances Iscott, of Leeds, England.

About three o'clock Saturday afternoon the neighbors of Sister Abbie Horton found her lying on her bed dead. Evidently she had passed away several hours before. Sister Horton was eighty-eight years old and lived alone. When the neighbors saw no sign of fire in the house, they investigated to see if anything was the matter with her and found that she had passed away.

Mrs. Horton was born December 8, 1836, on Bunker Hill in Massachusetts, but came to Independence many years ago, where she has always been active in church work. Her husband was for many years caretaker of the Stone Church, and Sister Horton acted as secretary and historian of the Sunday school many years and was always active in other work. She was for many years considered one of the best singers of the choir and belonged to that organization until she was eighty years old. Two years ago she graduated from the Independence Institute of Arts and Sciences, and was very proud of her achievement. Sister Horton leaves no immediate family. Funeral services were conducted at half past two Tuesday, January 13, with interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The death of Sister Mary J. Warnky, seventy-six years old, widow of our old missionary F. C. Warnky, occurred Sunday morning at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. H. Murdock, in Kansas City. The funeral service was held from the home of her daughter in Independence, Mrs. William Erickson, 708 South Fuller, Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock. Sister Warnky was born in Council Bluffs, Iowa, but moved to California with her parents when she was a small child. She married F. C. Warnky December 18, 1865, and they came to Independence in 1878. Brother Warnky died four years ago. She leaves eight children, thirteen grandchildren, nine great-grandchildren, three sisters and three brothers.

Second Church

Young people to the number of sixty-five were in attendance at the eight o'clock prayer meeting, and they were active in testimony and song. This has come to be a precious hour to many of the young in Second District, and to some outside who visit there regularly.

Elder T. C. Kelley was the speaker at the morning hour, and he had a good hearing of appreciative Saints.

At half past one Elder Alvin Knisley brought two candidates, children of the Saints, to the church for baptism. These Saints reside between Raytown and Lees where Brother Knisley has been working recently. Confirmation was bestowed at the afternoon social service.

Before the hour for the evening service had come, the auditorium was filled with Saints and friends who desired to hear President Elbert A. Smith in his lecture, "Milestones in the life of Christ," which is illustrated by many fine pictures. Accompanied by songs from the balcony by our quartet of ladies' voices, this lecture had a strong appeal, and should be reproduced in many places.

Walnut Park

The Walnut Park Quilting Society reports for the year 1924: Membership, 13; receipts, $159.35; paid to building fund $100, choir music $5, radio $5, church debt $5, clinic $1.50, incidental expenses $35.04; balance $8.81; Mrs. Ellen Kepley, president; Mrs. W. H. Christie, secretary.

Apostle J. F. Curtis spoke Sunday morning, chiefly of what he had seen in Palestine, Egypt, and Rome during his recent missionary journey. In the evening Bishop A. B. Phillips spoke, giving us facts from his research in Bible history.

Group 27 will serve a chicken dinner in the church basement Friday evening, the 16th, from six to eight o'clock, to raise money for the building fund. They will arrange for a large crowd, and everybody is invited to an excellent meal. Tickets fifty cents and twenty-five cents. A program and social time will follow, where everyone in Walnut Park is expected to get acquainted with everyone else there, especially with the new officers.

Liberty Street

Sister George Gould is in charge of the organization of normal classes in this group. Two classes have so far been organized, one for the study of the Old Testament and one for the New Testament. The classes meet Tuesday night at the church, and any who wish to avail themselves of this opportunity are invited to attend, for if these classes become too large others will be organized.

Elder J. W. Peterson gave a very fine sermon Sunday morning on "The sealed book." He brought into his discussion some very interesting Indian traditions to support his argument. In the evening Apostle J. F. Curtis lectured on his trip through the Holy Land, which was very greatly enjoyed by a large audience.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
East Independence

Brother William Bath was the speaker Sunday morning. The Saints were glad to have him with them again. He will leave for his mission field the coming week, and in his sermon related some interesting experiences he had been having in his missionary work. Brother Joseph Stowell was the speaker in the evening.

Mildred Kathleen, the little daughter of Brother and Sister Frank Minton, was blessed at the Sunday morning service by Brothers J. J. Teeter and A. H. Parsons.

Spring Branch

Sunday morning Bishop J. A. Becker preached on the subject of the family budget, and in the evening Brother R. S. Salyards occupied. Both sermons were very interesting. All meetings of the day were well attended.

Sister Mattie Wells and Brother Irvin A. Hartley were married Saturday evening, January 10, Brother John Soderstadt, the pastor, officiating.

Englewood

Some very fine services were enjoyed by the Saints of this congregation Sunday. Brother J. E. Vanderwood was the speaker in the morning, and Elder William Bath in the evening.

Brother Joseph Farrow has been chosen as superintendent of the Sunday school, and all are looking forward to a successful year. Sunday morning Sister Eva Nelson was chosen as superintendent of the Department of Women.

Enoch Hill

Sunday speakers at Enoch Hill were Pastor W. J. Brewer in the morning, and Brother F. Nadin at seven o'clock in the evening. A goodly portion of the Spirit was felt, especially at the morning service, which the Saints greatly appreciated.

Shut-in Missionary Compares Former Days With Present

The 28th of December is an anniversary day with me; it is a day in the year 1877 which marked the beginning of my church life, having been baptized in Dodge County, Nebraska. Being a “shut-in” for the winter I will be a little reminiscent.

The church and the world are different; whether they are better or worse I will not discuss; people’s opinion will be largely based upon their prejudices or lack of knowledge rather than on known facts; and whether conditions are better or worse, our obligations to God are just the same, to abstain from doing wrong and to shun the very appearance of evil.

There were no telephones in 1877. This modern necessity was still in the toy age, and it was several years later that it came into practical use. There were no electric lights; the first I saw were four years later in a city of thirty thousand, and these just in one store. No electric street cars were in use; they came in the Central West about ten years later. No radio, automobile, or flying machine had been seen.

In the church we numbered about ten thousand, and a few missionaries were under General Conference appointment. But a small army of local men were doing yeoman service in their respective localities. The minutes of the General Conference of April, 1877, gives the names of thirty-nine that were appointed. At that time the Bishop made quarterly reports, and they were published in the HERALD. At that conference, for the three months ending March 81, the Bishop had received in tithes and offerings $1,318.78, a very small amount for sustaining thirty-nine men; about enough for one under present conditions.

What they lacked in money they made up in faith. Missionaries found their own way to their fields. Men going to the Rocky Mountain Mission would go to Omaha, Nebraska, which was the chief branch of the Northeast District, and would travel among the several branches, alone or in company with the district president, and when he had received sufficient financial help, some good sister would fill a market basket with good things to eat, and he would go on his way rejoicing.

It is different now. Was the missionary any better then than now? Did he have more faith? Was he more zealous? Let the Lord judge; I will not! Does the spirit of sacrifice belong always to the church, or is it only for pioneer days? What think you, reader?

During this span of life, amid all the changes in the world and the church, I have tried to do my “bit,” twenty-five years in local work, twenty-one years as a missionary, and one year and a half an invalid at home. During this time I have tried to carry the gospel message of good cheer and hope into the homes and hearts of the people; I have tried to discipline my own soul and compel it to conform its thoughts and acts to the ideals of Jesus Christ. What have I learned? First: that the individual or home that makes an honest effort to make their lives conform to the teachings of Jesus Christ will find happiness and peace and no heartaches because of regrets for a misspent life. Second, that in youth, middle age, and in old age the man that holds the priesthood who is diligent, humble, studious, full of love toward his fellow man, and has faith in God and his message will be blessed in his work, it matters not where his lot may be cast, and he will learn that God does not confine his blessings to times and places and official position, but to the faithful and diligent servant pursuing the path of duty.

In October, 1923, because of sickness I could not receive an appointment, and was a “shut-in” last winter and only partially recovered during the past summer, and on the 13th of December I had a recurrence of my trouble and will be a “shut-in” again this winter. I am not entirely deprived of the enjoyment of religious service, because we have a small radio set and so get the benefit of the Stone Church services.

To latter-day Israel scattered abroad in the world and my yoke fellows in the service of the Lord, after forty-seven years of service in the work of the Lord, I am still in the faith that I received in my youth. Edward Rannie.

Portland, Oregon

The men of the church at Portland, who call themselves “The Gophers’ Club,” have finished digging the basement of their church and have the cement work well under way. They expect to have the basement finished before conference. The Department of Women did valiant service by furnishing food for the diggers. They contemplate having a cafeteria or some other kind of dining room for the benefit of conference attendants.

A chicken dinner and bazaar was held by the Department of Women at the I. O. O. F. Hall Wednesday, December 17. About $80 was realized from the affair.

“Balancing the Christmas ledger” was given by the Sunday school Tuesday evening, December 23, in charge of the superintendency of the Sunday school. The parts were all well presented, and the entire program was very impressive. A large audience was present, and many expressed their appreciation and approval of the program.

Workers Together With God.—No. 3

In the previous numbers an effort was made to show that God works and Christ works. Evidence was given that work is the normal and universal order of the universe; that action is not only the inspiration but the goal of life.

Why does God work? What is he working for? Does he labor for reward or strive for self-exaltation? Is he stimulated to activity with a consideration that it will enhance his glory? Is God working for personal honor or emolument? Are his efforts directed to some personal realization or gratification? All will answer, No!

God works to bring about the full unfoldment of all his creations. He works that suns may shine, and trees grow, and men live. He gives of himself that others may have and become. He associates himself with the whole universe. His activities encompass all of his creations. He never thinks of himself, or by himself, or from all others. With God work is life, the very life of life.

God works for the whole group. He cannot, he will not, be happy alone. He is not a recluse. He is continually breaking in on man. He likes company. He yearns for fellowship. He wants to be with men. He desires to work with men. And he yearns for men to work with him; not for him, but with him. He is always reaching down and lifting men to his plane of living. And the great desideratum is found in this glowing recital of John: “And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.”—Revelation 21:3.

And God does not husband power or glory. He makes, and gives of himself in the making. He creates a race and is complimented in that men are like him.

And Jesus works. He works not for self. His inspiration of action is the salvation of the race. And this salvation comprehends, not immunity from work, but expression and life. Jesus does not spend his energy to develop idleness in man. Jesus has not “paid it all—all the debt I owe.” He works to bring others to work with him. He works to inspire men to “work out their own salvation.”

Jesus came to earth to make friends of fishermen, to have converse with Samaritans, to consort with publicans and sinners. A study of the life of Christ will reveal him as an indefatigable worker, a veritable dynamo of activity. He went about doing good. He was about his Father’s business. The boss who stands over a group of men with whip and lash and forces them to work does not emulate Jesus Christ. The man who rolls up his sleeves and sets to, with his might, saying, “Come on, boys,” emulates this Master Workman. I could adapt myself to a vision of God with his sleeves rolled up and with chisel and hammer busy at work, but I cannot grasp the idea of a God at rest.

If we are to be workers with him we must be like him. Men cannot work with Jesus Christ unless they work as he works. It then behooves us to study the life and character of this Master of Men. We may bear his name and still have nothing in common with him. We may claim to be his ministers and yet not know him. “Workers together” implies fellowship, brotherhood, palship. Men cannot work together unless they speak a common language. “Workers together” would dispense with the overlord and supply group consciousness and activity.

Henry Van Dyke illustrates this idea of working together with God in the following lines:

Every mason in the quarry,
Every builder on the shore;
Every chopper in the palm grove,
Every raftman at the oar.
Hewing wood and drawing water,
Splitting stones and clearing sod;
All the dusky ranks of labor,
In the regiments of God;
March together toward his triumph,
Do the task his hands prepare.
Honest toil is holy service;
Faithful work is praise and prayer.

T. W. WILLIAMS.
The Young People

There has been a great deal of discussion throughout America concerning the young people of to-day, reaching from those who apparently think the young people are depraved to those who would place them in charge of the whole world. This includes the repeated anecdote of the boy who was so impressed that he went home and told his parents they must not mind what he did, as he was suffering from adolescence.

But it has remained for Professor Calvin O. Davis, of the University of Michigan, to make the direct investigation of what the young people are really thinking to-day. He states, according to Collier’s Weekly, of December 13, 1924, that ten thousand students in one hundred seventy-five junior high schools in nineteen States, included in the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, have answered a questionnaire of some ninety-six questions, with interesting results.

The work was assigned as home work. No answers were signed. Each student was free to answer any question or not, as he or she chose. The answers to most of the questions were about evenly divided between boys and girls and included the expression of boys upon girls and girls upon boys and each upon themselves.

To the question, “If you were seeking a leader among the boys or girls of the school, what five qualities would you demand of your leader?” with both boys and girls “scholarship” led with fifteen per cent of the vote. (If each gave five qualities, then twenty per cent would be a maximum vote.) “Personality” received nine per cent and was second; third came “honesty,” with about eight per cent; “cleanliness,” “sociability,” and “a good mixer” ranked close to “honesty,” with about six or seven per cent for each.

The boys and girls were alike, writes William G. Shepherd who writes the review, in placing honesty third. Both agree upon the first three qualities. The boys put “cleanliness” fourth, and the girls “a good mixer” fourth. The boys put “character” fifth. The girls placed “cleanliness” fifth.

Mr. Shepherd comments on the low rank of honesty and the strange ideals of leadership. This shows why a well-dressed politician, a man with social grace, succeeds.

Another point that he does not make is in the placing scholarship first. We would not for a moment depreciate the great value of scholarship. But is it not possible that it has been overemphasized by our young people, and that President Elbert A. Smith is right when he calls attention to Paul’s classification, “Add to your faith, virtue, and to your virtue, knowledge.” The right kind of scholar will always add virtue to faith. The right kind of faith is after all fundamental in life and is the basis for character.

“What is the best thing that your school does for you?” Thirty-one per cent replied, “Education”; eighteen per cent “character.”

“What are the chief moral qualities exhibited by pupils?” Only forty per cent attempted to reply. Thirty per cent of them placed “honesty” first; the other seventy per cent were for “fellowship,” “clean habits,” “cooperation,” “good sportsmanship,” “high ideals,” and “courtesy.” According to this, only about one thousand three hundred voted honesty as the chief moral quality.

“Has your school a good moral tone?” Five thousand did not answer; eighteen per cent of those who did answer thought not. This included about one thousand young people. Eight-two per cent of those who voted, answered affirmatively. That included four thousand five hundred.

Ten per cent of the girls placed as the most regrettable practice of the boys, “swearing”; twenty per cent, “smoking too much”; four hundred, “crap shooting”; and only sixty-seven girls complained of immoral sex habits. About ten per cent thought the boys drank too much, and half that number complained of the “telling of vulgar stories.” With these figures, what the boys wrote on their own shortcomings agreed. Mr. Shepherd comments that the boys’ opinion of themselves agrees with the girls’ opinion of them, and vice versa. Apparently they know each other pretty well.

Ten per cent of the boys who dared to answer placed “profane language” as the most regrettable quality of the girls; twenty per cent of the girls said the same thing. An even number of boys complained of “smoking” by the girls, but still a larger number mentioned “cosmetics” as bad practice, while only one hundred seventy-two out of two thousand complained of “overdressing.” One hundred ninety boys thought the girls “ran out too much at night.” Three hundred eighteen, “too much flirting and petting.” Only fifty-four mentioned “drinking” or “vulgar stories.”

Of the girls, in speaking of themselves, forty-five out of over two thousand mentioned “drinking,” and one hundred, “vulgar stories.”

About ten per cent admitted that there were invidious factors in school that tended to undermine conduct. They mentioned “environment” and “discipline.” Forty-five per cent of both the boys and girls favored a course dealing with marriage, home, and parenthood. Fifty-five per cent of both were opposed. This out of a total of five thousand two hundred ninety-eight answering.

On the opinions of the ideal person of the opposite sex, the girls placed “a good mixer” first; second, “good morals”; third, “good habits” and “neatness”; and fourth, “honesty.”

The ideal girl, according to the boys, must be “good looking.” [This may account for cosmetics in excess, of which the boys complain.—S. A. B.] That was by far the leader. Second, we have “intelligence.” Third, “personality”; fourth, “honesty” and “truthfulness.” Mr. Shepherd makes the comment that, all the way through, honesty is always coming third or fourth. But we may well note that the replies are the direct result of teaching, which places high if not highest values in social consciousness, fellowship, cooperation, and thus naturally greater stress is placed by the young people there than in the old-fashioned virtues, like honesty and truth. It is even possible that such social ideals account for the vicarials or help in part in the consciousness of the young people for that for which the word character has formerly stood, modified, however, to bring its principal stress on the social aspect.

M. R. Werner in “Ladies’ Home Journal”

Many of the Saints are exercised over the history of Brigham Young now appearing in the Ladies’ Home Journal from the pen of M. R. Werner, and we have numerous requests for an exhaustive reply to the errors and inconsistencies of this so-called history.

We are advising the Saints to be patient about the matter, for it should be handled in the most effective way possible, so that the errors may have a wide and adequate correction. This is not the first time in the history of the church when misrepresentation has appeared in the public press, to the discomfiture of the Saints, and to become restless is likely to interfere with an opportunity for proper correction being made.

Let the Saints become conversant with what the Journal is permitting to pass through its columns; let them solve each question raised by this biographer who is so unfriendly to Joseph Smith and his work; let them improve every opportunity to correct these wrong impressions, but always in the spirit of Christian forbearance, remembering to revile not again, and when the proper officials of our organization are able to gain the best opportunity for a complete reply, the day of peace to your minds will come.

There is not a great deal of new ground taken by this man Werner, but it will make an excellent opportunity to rehearse some of the old and essential truths for the consideration of fair-minded people, of whom there are many.

Dawn

By James E. Yates

Expired the year! And time swings on;
Old days and doings now are done;
We've told the moments one by one,
And what to-day the tally?
The New Year dawned with portent fraught;
Its days await our deed and thought;
Shall we climb to heights we ought,
Or linger in the valley?
Behold the lights on yonder crest!
Behold a dawn, of all the best!
Its luster may surpass the rest
For the forward going;
For you its stars are all ablaze,
For you awaits its golden days,
For you its moonlit nights, and ways,
And all its suns are glowing.

Arise, and meet on-coming hours!
Arise, and know your master powers!
Be daunted not in sun or showers—
Descry yon newest light;
The New Year new achievement brings;
Afar, afiel, its glory flings,
While prospect's voicing fairly sings:
Gone, the distant night!

The Confidence of Christ in His Church

BY FRANK B. ALMOND

Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.—Luke 12: 32.

A sister in the Denver Branch recently returned from a visit to Independence. In relating her experiences among the Saints there, she said that while in the Stone Church during sacrament meeting she was struck with the marks of weariness and care-worn pain upon the faces of the leading men of the church.

The members of the Presidency, Bishopric, the Twelve, and local men of prominence in church affairs—all seemed haggard and worn as if they had passed through nights and days of unceasing, harrowing toil. Deep lines around the eyes, hair turning gray and thin, the mouth set in stern repression, shoulders stooped and bowed with burdens too heavy to bear—these are the marks our brothers in Zion are carrying to-day, showing the evidence of the crisis in the church.

The present controversy is no child's quarrel, to be patched up over night by a few smooth words, or pushed aside and pigeonholed for future generations to consider. On both sides one hears the general comment that the issues at stake strike at the very bedrock upon which the church was built. Both parties to the controversy confess that without a restoration church, fighting in the church is drifting into apostasy.

Some have even gone so far as to say, "As long as this contention continues I will not pay tithing or in any way support the church." God pity that man! Has he forgotten Peter, who denied his Lord in the hour when he needed him most? Is he also numbered with those who "all forsook him and fled" in the dark hour of the Master's trial? Cares he not for the commendation of his God, or is his faith built upon the shifting sands of human weakness? Has his vision become so stultified that he cannot see, even in this shaking and trembling condition, the almighty purpose of an unchangeable God? God pity him!

We need to-day, as we have needed in the past, men of simple loyalty to the cause of Christ; men who cannot be shaken by the storms of the latter day; who, in the midst of these troublous times within and without the church, can still see that Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch upon his own.

It seems as if to-day, from the dim and distant ages of the past, the voice of the prophet speaks once again to us:

Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart is my law; fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings.... I, even I, am he that comforteth you: who art thou, that thou 'shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass; and forgettest the Lord thy Maker, that hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth; and hast feared continually every day, because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he were ready to destroy?... But I am the Lord thy God, that divided the sea, whose waves roared: The Lord of hosts is his name. And I have put my words in thy mouth, and have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people.

This same prophet reminds us also that Jesus, who gave his life for his church, "shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth." He it is who stands before us contemplating his great work with perfect calmness and confidence; he, in spite of what men may do, is sure of himself and his work. "Fear not, little flock," he says; "I have overcome the world." Not will or may, but he has overcome the world. Here, then, is no cause for discouragement, but for courageous persistence in the work of the gospel. It is for us to recognize that the zeal of the Christ shall never be extinguished, nothing shall break his strength, until he has carried truth and right to universal sovereignty.

"Church of the living God! in vain thy foes
Make thee, in impious mirth, their laughing stock,
Contemn thy strength, thy radiant beauty mock;
In vain their threats and impotent their blows—
Satan's assault—Hell's agonizing throes!

The Centralization of Power

BY THOMAS S. WILLIAMS

The value of leadership in which the power of the group is centralized cannot be determined by looking for examples of failure. Their weakness may be due to a chief who had no capacity for leadership. The worth of leadership can be decided only by comparing group effort with and without leadership. A casual glance at history will show that groups without leaders never succeed; those with poor leaders seldom succeed; and those with good leaders usually succeed.

The abuse of leadership is no argument against it. While history will present many cases where authority has been misused, it will also produce a like number where good leaders have been rejected. Leadership in its final analysis is the focusing of responsibility. It is the centralization of power. It can be no less than supreme directional control. It is the place of the leader to vision the next step and to make its attainment possible. It follows that he must be a man of greater vision than the group to permit him to function as such.

This brings us to the question, Can the group lead? We have already pointed out that it is only the well-led group that wins. It is impossible for unity to be established without the directing hand of a powerful leader. While the Israelitish nation was under the leadership of men like Moses, Joshua, and Samuel, in whom the administrative power of the group was centralized, they were a people of unity and strength. Without a chief of this character, they were in bondage to other tribes.

The idea that one man is as good as another and equal in the sight of God is true so far as we as individuals are concerned. The most humble member stands as high in the love of God as the president of the church. But that idea carried over into the duties and prerogatives of the members and officers of the church is the taproot of division, disorganization, and anarchy.

People are so constituted they cannot follow a leadership diffused among two or three groups of equal authority. They must have that authority centered in one group as a nucleus around which unity may be concentrated. The triumvirates of Julius Cesar, Crassus, Pompey, and Octavianus, Antony, Lepidus, and the French Revolution show clearly the impossibility of several men of equal authority establishing unity. In each of the cases cited, we see unity brought out of chaos by the centralization of power in a great personality.

The idea that Christ, and he alone, is my leader may work all right when we “have all come to a unity of the faith.” But when we see so many differing interpretations of what the mind and will of Christ may be in a given situation, I am made to see the hopelessness of such a policy. Have not the Protestant denominations these many years been saying, “Christ and he alone is my leader”? Where are they to-day? The condition of our church to-day is sufficient argument to prove the need of a leader who will be the accepted interpreter of the mind and will of Christ. Even a mob, when its purpose is well understood by each of its members, must have a leader to lead them to their objective.

History shows a trend towards centralization of power. We find it in the political world and in the organization of business. Political history begins, first, with human groups gathered according to family ties and tribal relations; second, the uniting of tribes into small states, these states later being organized into great nations, as we have them to-day. The trend of the present points toward a sort of world court in which the political power of the whole world will be centered. Each of these forms of government have been established in the face of much opposition. We read in American history of the contender for “state rights,” and to-day the advocate of “America for Americans.”

The organization of business has gone through the same process; that is, small groups are united in great trusts and combinations. In all these the power of the group is centralized in the head of the institution. In the field of cooperative business, the tendency is towards delegated authority. While many of the failures in this field are due to misplaced confidence, yet a large number are due to a

For thou art built upon th' Eternal Rock,
Nor fear'st the thunderstorm, the earthquake shock,
And nothing shall disturb thy calm repose.
All human combinations change and die,
Whate'er their origin, form, design;
But firmer than the pillars of the sky,
Thou standest ever by a power divine;
Thou art endowed with immortality,
And can't not perish—God's own life is thine."

Let us, then, trust Christ with his church. Let us realize that under the turmoil and stress of the present hour the church is moving forward to the inevitable fulfillment of her destiny. That destiny cannot be hindered, “vain what man may think to do.” It is written in the irrevocable Word of God:

And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunders, saying, Hallelujah, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. Let us rejoice and be exceeding glad, and let us give glory unto him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

Blessed are they which are bidden to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

lack of confidence in the men directing the business. Says Henry Ford:

There is a tendency to mistake disorganization for democracy. Some people are so afraid of the misuse of authority that they are afraid to grant any authority—which is a big mistake. In business we find it best to grant complete authority and to interfere only when that authority is abused. Great wealth is not so likely to be ill used as is small wealth, and so it is with authority. In our own company we find most of the abuses of authority and petty injustices among the straw bosses and foremen. The justice which begins at the top sometimes gets distorted on the way down. All other considerations aside, it is simpler and easier to be just than unjust, and the busier a man is, the more responsibility he has on him, the less leisure he has to be unjust.—Collier's, July 26, 1924.

The source of our trouble is found in the spirit of the times, and not within the church itself. In all fields of human organization the same conflict rages: in the political field, in organized industry (the internal conflict in trade unionism is to be noted), and in the world of religion. The present conflict is an L. D. S. expression of the same struggle. We hear participants in the present church controversy using a vocabulary familiar to all groups: Constitutional and legislative rights; sharing of offices; appointment and selection of officials; remedies for their misconduct; powers of representation; rights of assemblage; free speech; free press; equality before the law, etc.

The spirit of the times finds expression, first, in the conflict between the old and the new. While the writer recognizes that precedent has had and will continue to have a very important place in church government, yet the solution of our present problem can only be realized by a common recognition that we are in a changing world and that change is and will continue to be one of the chief characteristics of a progressive civilization.

Revelation is fundamentally a basic principle of the Restoration. If progress is to be made, it must continue as such. The church is not only tied up to the past by conformity to precedent, but there must be an avenue through which present needs must receive consideration. Revelation offers that avenue. Revelation presents a wide place in the path of progress upon which the new must be built. Conformity, if carried too far, will limit the power and function of revelation as a means of growth, development, and progress. Those who raise the cry, "Back to the faith of our fathers," must not overlook the place of revelation in that faith.

The revolt against authority is another expression of this modern spirit. This is found in all institutions. It is the chief cause for the decay of all group organization. It is the principal reason for the weakness of family life which finds its expression in the adolescent crime of to-day. It is the dominant spirit of anarchy which is in evidence in propaganda against all organized society. It is the outstanding weakness of Protestant Christianity to-day. It is this same spirit which may prompt a man to say, "I have no superior officer." It is an attitude which fails to recognize social responsibility. It is a modern expression of the attitude which prompted men in Paul's day to say, "I have no need of thee."

The first requisite of efficient organization is leadership. Men of positive leadership have had a very important place in progressive civilization. Nothing progressive has ever been achieved without leadership. A group which recognizes growth as one of its fundamentals must have a leader of vision to lead the way.

With the growth of groups in number and complexity of organization comes the greater need for delegation of power. Centralization is not the malicious creation of an aspiring autocrat, but the natural result of a growing intricate organization. Where we have large groups, we must have delegated authority.

The evils of centralization can be safeguarded by the choice of men worthy of that power. The solution of our problem is not in the restriction of the power of leadership, but in the selection of men best qualified to act, and in giving them the prerogatives of leadership. The other course is opening the door to anarchy.

Apostle McConley Closes Work in Australia

From His Letter to First Presidency

Since Brother Ellis left, I have been assisting in a series of missions in the environs of Newcastle, associated with A. C. Barmore. Some interest, but nothing phenomenal.

Reports from different parts of the mission for the month are encouraging . . .

The new reunion ground at Tiona is being prepared for use by Elders J. W. Davis and S. W. Ballard, assisted by a corps of volunteer workers from among the Saints in the Northern New South Wales District. The jetty has been finished, a tram line built and installed on it, a 4000-gallon water tank installed, and a permanent cook house 24 by 24 with a cement floor is now under construction. Brother Davis has been the life of this project . . .

Know the Law
BY BISHOP ISRAEL A. SMITH

In our two preceding articles we set out the following points:

1. That neither the Presiding Bishopric, the Presidency, nor any other quorum, has supreme directional control of the matters coming under its jurisdiction, for there exists a right of appeal to appropriate councils.
2. That the common consent which God requires of his people does not mean the same thing as majority assent or to support all that the priesthood does or proposes.
3. That the Articles of Incorporation do not prove the superimposition of the Bishops or determine the rank of general church officers.
4. The right of the higher priesthood to officiate in a particular office is contingent upon a proper choosing and setting apart to so occupy.
5. The right to ordain following a proper call does not carry with it the power to exercise supreme directional control over the official functioning of the one ordained.
6. General Conference Resolution 386 does not support supreme directional control except by a strained and private construction.
7. The church would not act consistently to give the President supreme directional control over the Bishopric while the law of the church and the land hold these latter personally accountable as trustees of its properties.
8. While God has said "all things unto me are spiritual," yet he has given us the temporal law and also "that which was deemed sufficient for the time to govern the church and its ministers, both of the spiritual and temporal divisions of the work."—Doctrine and Covenants 129:8.

Need Our Standards Be Reinterpreted?

I have this confidence in my brethren on both sides of this question, that they are conscientiously supporting the major issue as they see it. Our chief difference in viewpoint arises over the recognition or failure to recognize and evaluate the evidence having a direct bearing. Possibly there is some over-weighting of evidence as well as stressing and overemphasizing some points to unwarranted proportions. We hope that those who are kind enough to read these articles will, for the work's sake, weigh carefully each paragraph and judge it by the word already received by the church, and the interpretations and practices of record.

On page 1210 of the HERALD for December 17, 1924, on "Authority in church government," now under examination, we find this language:

Clearly, no official or member has the right to impose his own notions concerning church laws, in opposition to the Presidency who are directed to teach the laws which govern the body.

Again,

He should not publicly force upon the church membership his adverse notions, thus causing confusion and disruption in the church.

Let us ask, whose "adverse notions" are causing confusion? Who are forcing or imposing their private opinions of church laws upon the church? Speaking for myself, and I believe I speak for my associates as well on this point, we stand unwaveringly upon the interpretation of our former President and the practice of the Reorganization.

In my judgment, this confusion referred to is the result of an attempt to reverse the recognized administrative policy of government by councils and by coordination of quorums, to one of absolutism or supreme control vested in one individual. (I say one individual because one of the First Presidency is on record against a tri-headed institution.) The administrative policy of this church has already been interpreted by conference action and years of practice, and we should expect the church will continue to stand by these interpretations so that our attitude of the future will square with our record of the past, and our trumpets shall give no uncertain sound.

If there is a "disruption in the church," as the brother seems to fear, the responsibility should attach to those who are advocating the new order of church government, and not to those who, in the "open letter," called upon the church to stand faithfully by its standards as heretofore interpreted. Which of the documents now before the church is the subject of contention? By their fruits ye shall know them. I do not recollect that the "open letter" has been the object of a single published attack up to the present time. On the other hand, the supreme directional control document has been a storm center of opposition and protest from all quarters of the church. As an assumption of power and control by one quorum over the others, it has brought about the condition against which the church was warned in the following prophetic declaration:

It is not in accordance with sound reason, that either quorum would have the right of absolute domination over the authority and jurisdiction of the other two ruling quorums, these all three having been made equal by organic law. The assumption of arbitrary power and control by either one of these three bodies, declared in the organic law to be equal, would give rise to opposition and active protest, and confusion would inevitably result.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, March 13, 1912.

Who Is to Have Charge of Temporalities?

Page 1238, the editorial under examination, after quoting from Doctrine and Covenants 68:2 says:

The fact that other bishops were in due time to be installed who should "minister according to the first" shows that the Presiding Bishopric were not given sole charge of the temporalities of the church, for the temporalities were to be under the charge of all the bishopric.

The language quoted will admit of an entirely different construction and one quite in harmony with past teachings and practices. The Reorganization has and does place its temporalities under the charge of the Presiding Bishop and his counselors, and has ever held them accountable for the receipts and disbursements of its funds as established by the following. The Lord authorized the Bishop to “choose and appoint bishop’s agents” (Doctrine and Covenants 117:10) who, with the several bishops, were to be “under a presiding head acting for the church.” (Doctrine and Covenants 129:8)

The church declared that the bishops or bishop’s agents of districts are responsible to the bishop of the whole church for all moneys or other properties received by them for the church; ...—Conference Resolution 81.

Also:

That they are ex officio agents for the bishopric, and should account to the bishopric; and in disbursing general church funds should do so by the direction of the bishop.—General Conference Resolution 238:5.

In view of these plain, uncontroversial facts, how can anyone teach that the statement, other bishops “should minister according to the first” means that they have equal responsibility with the Presiding Bishop? Webster defines according to mean: “Agreeing, in harmony, in conformity with.”

That is, those holding the office of bishop are to work “in conformity with,” or as the revelation says, “under a presiding head acting for the church.” All former leaders, both of the spiritual and temporal divisions of the work, are emphatically in accord with our position on this point in reference to temporalities. It is not longer open to interpretation. As an element in church government it has long been settled, though a new philosophy may, of course, creep in, as evidenced by the present attempt.

The Revelations to Guide the Bishopric

An instance showing the strained construction which must be put upon single passages of scripture to find support for this new theory—that the Presidency shall control the finances—follows the argument just discussed.

We give below the entire paragraph, but only the part in italics was quoted by the brother:

In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 126:10, April, 1902.

Continuing, the editorial says:

Some years later, in harmony with this instruction, “the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole,” resulted in the preparation by the Order of the Bishops of a book entitled, The Law of Christ and Its Fulfillment.

The eleven words in italics, just quoted, fit in nicely with the brother’s theory, but hardly do justice to the context. That which in the revelation is the object of the sentence in the brother’s explanation becomes the subject. The Lord said that something was to “guide the action and advice of the bishopric.” The editorial says “the bishopric, taken as a whole,” did something pursuant to this instruction. Taking such liberties with the word of God can hardly be justified in discussing authority in church government. The text does not say the bishopric taken as a whole but the revelations taken as a whole—quite a different thing. Possibly the brother has fallen into this error because he was seeking confirmation for his premise that one bishop has as much charge of temporalities as another. He would place the president in charge of finances, or give him supreme control over the bishopric. The fact that the Lord said: “that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop, under a presiding head” (Doctrine and Covenants 129:8), and the fact that General Conference has said (Resolution 81) that bishops and agents are responsible to the bishop of the whole church for all moneys or other properties received by them for the church; by some strange process of reasoning means to this writer equal authority of all bishops, with final responsibility and control centering in the President.

Let us follow the editorial one step farther upon this particular point. The brother says:

In harmony with this instruction, “the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole,” resulted in the preparation by the Order of Bishops of a book entitled, The Law of Christ and Its Fulfillment.

The index, at page 123, shows it to be the product of the Presiding Bishopric only, and with one exception all from the pen of Presiding Bishop E. L. Kelley. We fail to see this “preparation by the Order of Bishops” claimed by our brother.

“Subordination” Foreign to Spirit of Reorganization

In an attempt to prove that in temporalities the authority of the Presiding Bishopric is subordinate to that of the Presidency, the editorial cites Doctrine and Covenants 104:32:

Wherefore the office of a bishop is not equal unto it [president of the high priesthood], for the office of a bishop is in administering all temporal things; nevertheless, a bishop must be chosen from the high priesthood, unless he is a literal descendant of Aaron, etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32.

The word wherefore, at the beginning of this passage, indicates some reason before given. The preceding sentence is:

From the same [the high priesthood] comes the administering of ordinances and blessings upon the church, by the laying on of the hands.

Balanced against this the work of the bishop as he administers in temporal things is not of equal importance. To this we heartily accord. In the article printed in SAINTS' HERALD of August 6, 1924, entitled, “Let the facts be known,” we pointed out that the prime object of the church was spiritual—the redemption of man. Growing out of this, and collateral to it, is its temporal activities. The Lord took great care to distinguish between these divisions of the work. We take issue squarely with those who would erase the lines thus distinguished and identify all our business and social relations as equal with “the administering of ordinances and blessings upon the church, by the laying on of the hands.”

No one so far as I can learn has ever claimed that the bishop was equal to the president in spiritual matters. We emphatically deny, however, that this or any other passage in Doctrine and Covenants gives the president supreme directional control over temporalities, or that the Lord has made the bishop subordinate in his work to the presidency, as claimed by this writer. Both the word subordination itself and the spirit of it are foreign to the Reorganization. Should the “rank-and-file” army plan, where each is subordinate to the officer immediately above him in rank, come into the church under the cloak of “supreme directional control,” it will haunt us day and night as did Banquo's ghost.

“Proof” Which Does Not Prove

To further show the paucity of the evidence supporting the supremacy of the president in temporalities, we call attention to one more passage cited by this editorial which he claims “indisputably supports this position”:

Bishops can possess no authority which is outside of or superior to that which is exercised by the presidency of the high priesthood of the church.—Adopted unanimously by the Twelve, and sent to the First Presidency, March 25, 1918.

Our readers may be interested in learning more of the source of this citation. The right of an apostle to ordain a bishop was under examination by the Quorum of Twelve. An opinion was drawn up, and signed by Gomer T. Griffiths, John W. Rushton, Paul M. Hanson, committee. From the middle of the concluding paragraph and beginning at the middle of a sentence, this “authority in church government” finds something which “indisputably supports” the claim that the “presidency holds chief authority or directional control” over temporalities! We are quite willing to let the reader draw his own conclusions after reading the entire sentence:

The bishops being classified with the high priesthood, which is presided over by the First Presidency, and the First Presidency being ordained by the Quorum of Twelve, it would appear that the bishops can possess no authority which is outside of, or superior to that which is exercised by the presidency of the high priesthood of the church. We, therefore, conclude the Quorum of Twelve does have the constitutional right to ordain bishops in common with all other officers of the church.

Very clearly a question of priesthood ordination is involved. Not even a hint is made in this letter of the Twelve to establish the supremacy of the Presidency in the administration of finances. No “superiority” or “outside authority” is claimed or intended by past or present members of the Presiding Bishopric. This is some more proof which does not prove. Another instance of this kind is found in his use of a passage of scripture (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10) which directs that a joint council of “Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy” be appealed to, should it be thought that the bishop is guilty of maladministration. If his theory be sound, why should not the president be appealed to and he function in his high office to protect the liberties of the people, since the law, as seen by the brother, makes the president the supreme controller over temporalities? It is because God made no quorum supreme of itself, and his way is best.

The Millennial Star and Temple Lot Suit

An effort has been made to show that in publishing the “open letter” the general officers who signed it have not respected General Conference resolutions. We do not concede the point. But is the brother willing to be measured by his own standard? Under the rule Jesus gave to the accusers of the woman caught in the act of wrongdoing, we question the right of the brother to do any casting. We have already dealt with his position that one bishop has charge of temporalities as much as another, which is absolutely at variance with General Conference actions known as Resolutions 81 and 238. Your attention is now called to another instance of disregard of General Conference enactments. Note the language of General Conference Resolution 378:

Resolved, that in our judgment much of the church history contained in the Millennial Star and also in Times and Seasons is of extremely doubtful character, and cannot be safely relied upon; therefore it should not be employed as authority in matters affecting the government of the church.

Some purported history from the Millennial Star is next introduced to show that the Bishop of the early church was to act in joint council with the Presidency and High Council and pay certain orders "under the inspection of the First Presidency," and that they were to otherwise supervise finances.

The introduction of this discredited witness in contravention of the General Conference orders is hardly in order in an editorial on "Authority in church government," according to Resolution No. 378 just cited.

The Temple Lot Suit

The editorial under analysis also errs in trying to show that the Presidency directed the Bishopric in the Temple Lot Suit. On page 1234 of the HERALD for December 24, 1924, Bishop Phillips, in an effort to prove his position that the authority of the Presidency is supreme over the Bishopric in financial supervision, quotes as follows from the writings of the late Joseph Smith:

That we failed because the church did not begin soon enough, was not the fault of the Bishopric. Some blame may possibly attach to the Presidency for not urging procedure long before, but the Bishopric proceeded as soon as authorized to do so.—SAINTS' HERALD 45: 709.

Brother Phillips then follows with the question:

Had not Joseph Smith recognized that the authority of the bishopric was not equal to that of the presidency in temporal affairs, the blame must have attached to the bishopric instead of the presidency.

This identical argument has been advanced upon other occasions to justify the new doctrine of supreme directional control. Reference to the editorial by the late Joseph Smith clearly sets forth the fact that it was General Conference which directed the Bishop, and not the Presidency as alleged, and when seen in its true perspective this incident of history scarcely serves the recent use of it in supporting the claim of the Presidency for supreme powers in the administration of finances. If space would permit I would quote the whole editorial, but the following is sufficient to set forth the main thoughts presented:

The subject of the Temple Lot again came up on April 14, at the session for 1886, at Kirtland, when the following was adopted:

"Resolved, that the First Presidency and Bishop be appointed a committee to protect the interest of the church in the Independence Temple Lot property."

The Presidency was consulted by the Bishopric on all measures adopted and steps taken in regard to the Temple Lot, and the effort to secure the place, both before the death of G. A. Blakeslee and thereafter. The President was present at all the important consultations with attorneys, and at the trials both before the Missouri court, at Kansas City, and the court of appeals, at Saint Louis; and is satisfied that all was done that could have been done to secure a fair presentation to the courts of the claims of the church to the property in question. That we failed because the church did not begin soon enough, was not the fault of the Bishopric. Some blame may possibly attach to the Presidency for not urging procedure long before, but the Bishopric proceeded as soon as authorized to do so; and for the failure to succeed and the cost of that failure in money, the church as a whole is responsible, one as much as the other.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, November 9, 1898.

The part capitalized was omitted from the quotation given by Brother Phillips. Had the quotation not been ended in the middle of a sentence and had it started with the authorization of General Conference, there would be no basis for the claim that the Presidency's power and responsibility were supreme to the Bishopric in the prosecution of this suit. It was a delegation of authority jointly in regard to the matter.

Besides, there is this thing which distinguishes the Temple Lot Case from all other matters under discussion in regard to the Presiding Bishopric: The Presiding Bishopric were not and never had been trustees of the Temple Lot. This property had never been in the possession of the Reorganized Church, and since it was an action brought to get possession of something which had been held for many years by another organization, it naturally required General Conference action to authorize the institution of the suit.

Joseph Approved Himself Unto the Flock

The course of the editorial next gives consideration to the "special charge to the Twelve" contained in revelation 114, given October 7, 1861, in which it says "the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing..." Section 122: 5 is then cited to show that this was a temporary or special charge on account of the immaturity of the president. In the article, "True philosophy of church government," HERALD of November 5, 1924, this same line of reasoning is pursued. The author here concludes "that when he had approved himself he would have a voice in temporal matters." Let us examine the subject closely. The language, "in connection with the bishop," does not necessarily mean that one should have "chief directional control over temporal affairs." If so, it is a rather extraordinary "connection"—a patented product, so to speak.

This argument is based on inference and private interpretation of scripture. The same deductive process of reasoning would lead to the conclusion that seventeen years later when, at the age of forty-six years, Joseph Smith drew up the "Basis of adjustment" interpreting this very revelation (section 114) which provided that "discretionary power" over temporalities "must rest in the bishopric only, ..."
The President still had not approved himself. Or again, would the brother have us believe that when this was reaffirmed by General Conference in April, 1888; recognized and explained by the revelation of 1894 (section 122); and interpreted by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, of the last year named (Doctrine and Covenants 123:24), that the President in his sixty-two years had not come into his own place as having “chief directional control over temporal affairs”? To convince the brethren of their error we need but to quote a little more of the citation to Doctrine and Covenants 122:5 wherein it says “the end designed by it (revelation of 1861) having been reached.” Therefore, Joseph had approved himself on or before April, 1894.

The brother’s argument does not hang together, because it is wrong. Truth harmonizes with truth, but error cleaves apart. The late Joseph Smith, as president of the church, worked for a half century or more “in connection with the bishopric,” but not one day as chief directional controller, either before or after 1894.

According to the indictment of the article under examination, our interpretation and conclusion is a “farce.” I am happy to know, however, that my position harmonizes with that of my father, who had very decided views upon this very question. He said:

There was a greater element of danger to the general church in the way of putting its properties into the control of the President than in the Bishopric rule. The control of the finances of the church added to the spiritual control would be an element of mischief to the general body, if the President was an ambitious and unscrupulous man, as the rules applying to the care of the finances under the Bishopric would not apply to him, and he would in a way be an irresponsible agent.—Joseph Smith, The Saints’ Herald, May 29, 1901.

Since the element of time has been made a factor by these two writers, we take special note that this was written seven years after Joseph is said to have “proved himself” and came to “have a voice in temporal matters.”

As late as September, 1912, he wrote:

I do not control the church finances. . . . I do not have the right to do it. . . .—Zion’s Ensign, August 12, 1912.

We hold it to be self-evident that in interpreting his own duties, either before or after 1894, in the language of Saint Matthew, Joseph Smith speaks “as one having authority, and not as the scribes.”

Censorship of Press by Presidency Condemned

The fourth article on “Authority in church government” is a discussion about admitting controversial articles to the Herald columns, and the rights of the Presidency to determine what should be published. Reference is made to the action of the joint council of 1894, the minutes of which make up section 123 of Doctrine and Covenants. We believe that verse 25, which he quotes, as giving censorship powers to the First Presidency, is limited to the matter of tracts. This opinion is supported—

Firstly, upon the similarity of language and purpose in verses 14 and 25. Verse 14 setting out the object, “to write tracts on such gospel topics,” and verse 25 being an enacting clause.

Secondly, because of the Presidency’s interpretation and action since that date, as we shall soon show.

Thirdly, because it is in harmony with conference action Resolution 351 which states: . . . “editorial or other management of the Herald is not comprehended in their [Presidency’s] official calling, . . .” and Fourthly, for economic reasons. The publication and distribution of tracts is expensive. Only those most likely to be in demand should be published, and duplications should be avoided.

In support of our second proposition, we refer you to an editorial by President Joseph Smith published March 9, 1898, about four years after the joint council action cited. Under the title of “Controversial articles in Herald,” he writes:

Some of our readers object to anything of a controversial nature appearing in the Herald. This idea is, in our opinion, a greatly mistaken one, for several reasons. Truth does not suffer from investigation; error alone flourishes in the dark, and resists examination.

The policy of crying down discussion is one of the Devil’s favorite themes. He is pleased when people are willing to glide along easily and dreamily without knowing just where they are, what they are doing, or where they are going. It is the people who think and act from an understanding of law that he is afraid of.

Similar sentiment is expressed by President Smith eight years later in an editorial on the same subject. At the General Conference of 1907 he stated his position on the subject of approval of tracts at some length. Even in this matter of tracts, President Joseph Smith was inclined to give some degree of freedom to the ministry in the field, reasoning wisely that, “if they can be trusted to preach, why can they not be trusted to write? What is the difference?”

Again in 1909 he said:

The Presidency does not assume to dictate nor to interfere in such cases, reserving only the same right of criticism that justly attaches to other readers of such sermons, when printed.

The criticism made against the Board of Publication as we understand the language, “to seize control of the Herald and prevent this supervision, . . .” has been ably answered by the board in these

NEWS AND LETTERS

Young People's Conference in Pennsylvania

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA, December 14.—The first young people's conference held at Lock 4, Pennsylvania, November 15 and 16 has passed into history. At this time quite a few of the young of all ages assembled from the different branches of the Pittsburgh District, and we feel that the Lord was pleased with the effort shown and the desires expressed. We were honored by the presence of Brother Cecil Neville, who was holding meetings at Lock 4. Brother Charles Fry, who was the pastor of the Pittsburgh Branch for a number of years and who has not been in this district for a long time, was with us. And last, but I assure you not the least, Brother Gomer Griffiths, Daddy, as we call him, who confesses to the fault of being able to smell a conference for several hundred miles, was also here.

How we all love these men. Every good thing is of Him who is good, and blessed is the child of God who shall bring forth the good things of God, for he who doeth this is like the first small ray of the morning sun, coming on by leaps and bounds, and the good thing which he has started shall thunder on through the ages of time.

December 5 to 8 we were given a pleasant surprise by the presence of one of our loved brethren, James A. Gillen. This is the first time Brother Gillen has ever visited the Pittsburgh Branch, and those living here who had never met him said they felt as if they had met a long-lost brother whom they had always known.

Brother Gillen is one of those who, when we shake his hand, causes our hearts to beat a little faster; and as we bid him good-by, we can realize in a small way how the Lord must have felt just before he left this world, as he looked upon those he loved with a love that is beyond human imagination.

If all of these men could realize the desires and determinations that their presence and words give to God's children in these the latter days, they would look to the Lord and shed tears of joy. I feel the presence of the Spirit as I write this. Those who are to take part in the Christmas entertainment to be held Sunday evening, December 21, are very busy indeed. Last year the Sunday school in their entertainment gave us two very beautiful playlets, whereas this year's will be given more along the line of song, speech, and recitation programs. The Department of Recreation and Expression are also doing a wonderful work. They are giving the individual an opportunity for individual expression which will not only assist them in life's work, but will give them courage and desire to assist in the Lord's work, which is man's greatest goal.

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

December 25.—The Saints here were privileged to hear a good sermon from Brother Hubert Case on the 16th, also recently some very fine sermons from Brother Samuel Simmons, and last Sunday evening an interesting one by our pastor, Brother Edgar Dillon, who has been giving his time to church work and recently made a trip to Tulsa and other places in the interest of the church.

Sister Dillon, who is head of the Department of Women for this district, used the opportunity to do organizing in her department.

Brother E. L. Kemp, who some months ago came here from Wichita, Kansas, was elected president of this branch for 1925. Brother Kemp is a young man, and it is hoped he will be able to impart some of the vigor of youth to the branch.

Chatham, Ontario

Since our last letter election of officers has been held in all departments, and things are now squared for a good start in 1925. The old branch officers were all sustained, and all reports showed a good healthy condition existing. The only change in officers was in the Sunday school, where Royal Wood was chosen as superintendent, to be assisted by Joseph Clatworthy and Mansell Jones. The Christmas offering this year was twice as large as it was last.

The officers elected for the Department of Recreation and Expression are: Vernon Pritchard as president, with Thomas Vince and John Jones as assistants, Brother Jones to have charge of the work among the boys. At this meeting it was decided to change the name of the society back to Religio. It was also decided to take up the study of the Book of Mormon. Since the election of officers the attendance has increased remarkably, having an attendance of over forty at the last meeting, mostly young people. At the next meeting a mock parliament is to be held. A monthly paper is also being arranged for, to be read each month, or sooner, if enough news is available. The paper is to be called The Enlightener.

The annual Christmas tree was held under the auspices of the Sunday school December 23. A good crowd was present and enough was taken in at the door, in the form of a silver collection, to defray all expenses. Santa Claus was in attendance and distributed the gifts from the tree. The first Sunday of the new year, the attendance at Sunday school was very encouraging.

On December 17 occurred the marriage of Miss Anna Babcock of Chatham Branch, to Mr. Joseph Smart, of Merlin, Ontario.
Minneapolis, Minnesota

January 11.—The Minneapolis Branch started off the new year with a rush. The officers for 1925 are: C. A. Kress, branch president; Elders Lundeen and Darby, counselors; Robert M. Lister, branch treasurer; Leon Judson, branch clerk; A. M. Smith, Sunday school superintendent; Leslie Delapp, Religio superintendent; Sister Kress, head of the Department of Women; and Brother James Spargo, head of the Department of Music. The business meeting on December 29 was well attended, and a fine spirit of unity was manifested. Everybody seemed pleased with the work of the past year and sustained the ones who previously held the various branch offices, except that of leader of the Religio, where they selected Leslie Delapp, who has been doing so well in his work as teacher of the young people's class in Sunday school. Provision was also made for a committee to make local arrangements and preparations for the reunion next summer. The building committee reported that they are arranging for a loan to pay the bills which have come in because of the work of enlarging the church building, which is now completed.

The sacramental service on January 4 was a noteworthy one with which to begin the year. Two brothers, Leslie Delapp and DeWayne Fisher, who had been recommended to the branch at the business meeting for the office of priest, were ordained at the start of the service. Immediately they were called upon to perform their duty by taking part in the service of the sacrament. This was followed by a period of prayer, marked by the number, brevity, and appropriateness of the supplications offered. The Spirit was further manifested in the rapidity and earnestness with which the testimonies of the Saints were given. Many times several were on their feet at once, and hardly a moment dragged. The theme of the testimonies seemed to be, “I am thankful that some one crossed my path and brought me the gospel tidings.” They also recognized the great possibilities of the new year and evidenced a great desire to move forward and make the most of the opportunities that presented themselves, profiting by the failures of the past and looking forward with hope to the future.

The election of the remaining officers in the Sunday school and Religio took place at the regular sessions of those departments on that day. Sister William Shakespeare was chosen as assistant Sunday school superintendent, and Sister Sadie Johnson as musical director. The other offices were likewise well filled.

Elder William Shakespeare addressed the congregation on Sunday night, giving words of encouragement and enlightenment to all. Brother Shakespeare is the missionary for Minnesota District, and it is a pleasure to hear him speak whenever he is in the city.

A priesthood meeting was called for Monday night, and a goodly number were present. The discussion lasted over two and one half hours, and was participated in by nearly everyone with profit. Regular meetings of the priesthood are to be held on the first and third Mondays of the month, and plans are being formed for getting them organized for more effective service.

The cottage prayer meetings on Wednesday night were well attended and actively supported. Many were here able to pray and testify who would have liked to on the Sunday before, but were denied on account of the large number present and the limited time. These meetings are to continue this year as before, except that the central group, around the church, are to meet in the church every Wednesday, while one day out of the month the entire branch meets at the church. Missionary services are also being held in homes of Saints and others during the week; one on Friday night was certainly well attended, while Brother Kress spoke for two hours, explaining the principles of the gospel and the church.

Sunday, January 11, found another good gathering at the church services. Brother Kress spoke to the Saints in the morning, giving words of suggestion and counsel for the work of the coming year.

The young people's Sunday school class is becoming more active and is taking an increased interest in church work. There is a live bunch of young folks here, and great things may be expected of them, with the right kind of leadership, and that they have. Brother Leslie Delapp was reelected as the class teacher, Wesley Elvin was elected president, Carl Smith vice president, and Edith Shakespeare, secretary-treasurer.

The Religio meets at half past six on Sunday evenings, and in the study period has classes in the Book of Mormon and other subjects presented in the quarters, while in the latter half of the session a program of some kind is usually put on by Religio members, and occasionally outsiders. On the 11th, Leslie Delapp, the president, had all the newly elected officers on the platform with him and introduced each to the congregation, explaining the purpose and duties of each officer. Now they are all ready to move forward to a successful year in the Religio Department.

Mondamin, Iowa

January 12.—At a meeting of the Little Sioux district reunion committee at Logan, Iowa, on January 9, the 1925 reunion was located at Woodbine, Iowa, and the date fixed as August 21 to 30 inclusive.

By friendly agreement, considering the good of the membership of both districts, the joint reunion of the Gallands Grove and Little Sioux Districts has been dissolved and each will hold separate reunions this year.

At the next district conference, to be held at Logan, Iowa, in March, the consideration of a permanent location for the reunion will be a special order of business.

C. B. Woodstock

East Saint Louis, Illinois

January 5.—On Sunday morning, December 14, Elder Charles E. Smith talked on the Book of Mormon. He used the blackboard, and his charts and diagrams were very interesting and instructive. Branch President H. W. Brunkhorst was the speaker at the evening service. Elder W. C. Carl occupied the pulpit on Sunday morning, December 21, with Elder George F. Barralough in the evening.

The Christmas program was held on Christmas night, and it surely was worthy of the many nice things said about it. The entertainment was in the form of a play, “The Messiah cometh,” from the pen of Sister Elsie Barralough, who also was chief director. The scene of the play was in the home of a rabbi who lived in Bethlehem and of course had, as the chief feature, the birth of Christ. The work of Brother Prosper Carl, who took the part of the old Prophet Simeon, was especially commendable. Also was that of his wife, who played the part of Leah, the wife of the rabbi, and Sister Irma Smith who played the part of Ruth, wife of Jehoiakim. The young sisters Ella De Laney, Thelma Wright, and Loretta and Grace Carl also took their parts well. But why say this one or that one was good? They were all excellent. Santa Claus made his appearance after the play and gave candy to all present.

Brother Roy Stricklin preached on Sunday morning, December 28, and Elder George F. Barralough in the evening.
The young people of the branch all gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Barracough on Friday night, January 2, after Religio was dismissed, and enjoyed a very nice time.

Our sacramental service Sunday morning, January 4, while a little slow, was quite spiritual. Several of the young people testified and expressed their desire to move forward in the work. The little babies of Brother and Sister Roustio and Brother and Sister Robert Dickens were blessed by Elders Barracough and Smith. Elder W. C. Carl preached again Sunday night.

Central Chicago

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—This branch has taken a new lease on life. Work is being taken up with interest in all the departments, and new classes have been formed in the Sunday school with some of the younger girls as teachers.

Enthusiasm for a new church building is high, the young people in the choir offering to pledge themselves to give a hundred dollars each.

The annual business meeting was held last Monday evening, the Department of Women giving a dinner at six o'clock to assure a larger attendance. Between sixty-five and seventy members were served a splendid supper for thirty-five cents for adults and twenty cents for children. About thirteen dollars was cleared. One of the priesthood considered it such a success from a social point of view that he suggested we have another soon.

Brother J. J. Oliver remains our presiding elder for the coming year, with Brother Alfred Lester as presiding priest, Brother Carpenter as teacher, and Brother Kimball, deacon. Brother George Kerr was chosen branch clerk, Sister Nina Campbell chorister, Faye Bell pianist, and Mrs. Edward Thoman correspondent. The Sunday school superintendent is Stephen Lester, assisted by Sister William Bell, and Brother Keir is head of the Department of Recreation and Expression.

We extend our heartfelt sympathy to Brother Henry Keir, Sister Bell Simmons, and Sister Schram for the suffering which has lately been their portion. At the same time we extend congratulations to Brother and Sister Alex Keir on behalf of their little son, Gene Edward Patterson Keir, and to Brother and Sister Swanson, parents of little Shirley Swanson.

We are glad to have our missionary, Brother Baldwin, and his wife back with us. We pray that the year has passed much will have been accomplished in Central Chicago Branch.

Hutchinson, Kansas

January 14.—There are only five families of Saints in this place at present, but we are using our best efforts to keep the work going, hoping and praying that in the near future more will be gathered in.

Our branch officers for the coming year were elected on January 4, Brother E. E. Mettem being chosen president.

On January 4 we had the pleasure of having with us our district Sunday school superintendent, Brother Bedwell, and his wife, also Sister Haag and Brother Brockwell of Wichita. They left some very encouraging thoughts with us. May the Lord bless these young people and help them in their work.

Though we are only few in number here, we feel the Lord is blessing us for the efforts we put forth. May the blessings of love and charity remain with us, and may we all be found ready when the Master comes. Any Saints passing through this city will be welcome at 624 B West.

MRS. A. H. THOMPSON.

Omaha, Nebraska

January 14.—Our pastor, Peter S. Whalley, has received a few very pleasant surprises since our last writing, which he wishes the correspondent to tell of to the readers of the Herald. The first came in the nature of a purse of $134, which was presented to him by the members of the branch, to apply on the Ford coupe he had recently purchased. The members feel that this Ford car will be worn and spent in service to them by the good pastor and his wife.

In the midst of the Christmas playlet, put on by members of the Sunday school, good old Santa, rosy, red-cheeked, jolly, stopped in his lines, and with some appropriate impromptu words presented Brother Whalley and his wife with a purse containing twenty-five bright, new, shining silver dollars, in honor of their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary which happened to be on that date, December 23. As soon as his bewilderment diminished, Peter was getting ready with a speech of acceptance, but Santa, stepping back to the stage, went on with the play, which, by the way, was an unqualified success. Sponsored by Howard Elliott, Sunday school assistant superintendent, backed by Superintendent Rose Adams, coached by Sister Cloe Fleming, accompanied at the piano by Sister Anderson, and put on by a group of forty young people, it was witnessed by a delighted audience, somewhat smaller than usual, because of the severity of the weather. The proceeds, about twenty-five dollars net, were for Christmas offering.

Many church members come to our Omaha hospitals for treatment or operation. Brother Whalley wishes them to send him word of their presence here, and he will be glad to visit them, to administer or comfort, as they may desire. Phone Walnut 2439 for his home, or Harney 7954 for the church building, where he does much of his studying.

The La-Da-Sa Choral Society has had a month of great activity. Most of their attention was centered about the Christmas cantata mentioned above, though they have gotten a good start on the cantata “Daniel,” one part of which is to be given this month. On the evening of December 28, Brother Walter W. Head, president of one of our largest banks and last year president of the National Bankers’ Association, made a forty-five minute talk to the group, about fifty young people being present. Quite a number of older members came also and enjoyed Brother Head’s address. A man who has made a success in life, as the world, even counts success, must have for his guiding principles some fundamentals which, when explained to younger people, might also become theirs and contribute to a like success on their part. Brother Head counts the duty of the young threefold: first, to develop and maintain a sound, healthy body; second, to train and exercise a common-sense, alert mind; and third, to combine the use of all these blessings into a life of service to those about us. He is daily thankful for having been reared in a Christian home, not merely one which professes a belief in Christ, but one in which the teachings of Christ were taken as a daily guide to conduct and relationships. After Brother Head’s address, the choral society sang “I give my all to Jesus,” an anthem peculiarly expressive of our church beliefs regarding stewardship.

A New Year’s watch party was given the young people of the branch by Sister Ed. Edwards, at which time they were given opportunity to make the personal acquaintance of Mr. Hart Jenks, who last spring married Sister Ruth, daughter of the hostess. Mr. Jenks is a student and teacher of the dramatic art, and as an entertainer is very happily proficient. The young people enjoyed a rare evening of pleasure. Mr. Jenks had promised to give a talk on Shakespeare at the meeting of the La-Da-Sa Choral Society on Sunday, January 4, but, learning that his classes at the University of Nebraska were meeting earlier than he had expected, he could not stay over for the evening meeting. So arrangements were made with Sister Adams, our Sunday school superintendent, who is always ready to cooperate in any good thing, with the result that Mr. Jenks gave a most delightful talk of thirty minutes in the Sunday school period. From his close study of Shakespeare, he draws many valuable lessons of life, lessons which may become daily useful, as guides to conduct and thought. Mr. Jenks has promised to come again to us, and adults, adolescents, and children will welcome that event.

Sister A. W. Humphes and children of Independence are visiting her parents, Brother and Sister B. M. Anderson. Brother Hale W. Smith, who is now superintendent of schools in Little Sioux, Iowa, spent Sunday, January 4, with us and helped to preside over the sacramental service. This latter was of a very high order, a song by the Spirit, given through Sister Adams, being especially encouraging. The little church was filled to overflowing, as it is quite regularly, for the Sunday school sessions. This condition has brought about a unanimous movement among the members to center attention the coming year on an effort to build the upper auditorium. The teachers of the primary department are starting the ball rolling by giving a dinner at the church to-night, preceding the teachers' and officers' meeting and the prayer service.

Officers of the branch for the year are the same as last year, Brother B. M. Anderson president, and Brother Whalley acting as pastor. Sister Adams will conduct the Sunday school, with Howard Elliott and Cecil Burton as assistants. Brother Lee Borders, president of the La-Da-Sa Society, heads the Department of Recreation and Expression; and Sister Anderson is in charge musically. Department of Women elects Sister M. Anderson presiding, and Brother Whalley acting as secretary. Brother Anderson gave a most spiritual and effective talk in which he said that 1925 is to be a year of sacrifice and devotion on the part of the Saints. He also told them he had sacrificed many times to keep the work going the last two years in Sandyville Branch, and had felt greatly blessed in his efforts. He feels greatly encouraged in taking up the work for the coming year, and we feel that if the work is not successful it will be no fault of his, for he surely is an instrument in the hands of God, and we as Saints always feel strengthened and encouraged after having him with us. We hope and pray that each one of us will manifest the same zeal and courage to occupy in our place of duty to advance the work in this part of God's vineyard.

The Saints were made to feel bad when Brother Anderson told them he had lost his last summer's savings in a Des Moines bank that had failed. His little son, Howard, had $50 there also, which was lost. All who know him will deeply sympathize with him.

On account of bad roads, cold weather, and scattered members, we have not been having Sunday school and other services regularly this winter, so there is not much news. However, we are not discouraged and feel that this is the work of God which will be carried on over the head of every opposing element. Let us each work harder and pray and fast more and make this the most successful year of our Lord.

Ottumwa, Iowa

The evening of December 21 a pageant portraying The Nativity was given here, each scene being preceded by a vocal selection. The first scene was "The Annunciation"; the second, "The visitation"; third, "The manger." The second scene a robed procession bearing lighted tapers and singing "Adeste Fideles" was very effective. Preceding the pageant a very clever play was given by the children, entitled, "Santa's living toys," as well as several recitations and musical numbers. The newspaper gave the program half a column before the program and the results followed. The church was full at a quarter after seven and after that many stood up. The lighting effects added much to the effectiveness, and this was in charge of Brother Thomas Richards. The committee in charge of the program were Sisters Elizabeth Hughes, Margaret Epperly, Jemima Green, and Brothers R. E. Lewis, John Baker, with Lilyas McMickle and Lillian Baker as accompanists. All the narrators wore special costume. A silver offering was taken at the close of the program, which was turned over to the Christmas offering. Also each child received a special treat from Santa, which we felt they more than deserved because of the way they all played their parts. There were some nonmembers who assisted in the program, and all who took part deserve credit for its success.
At the election of officers for the Sunday school Brother John Baker was reelected as superintendent, with Brother Glen McMickle as his assistant. The Department of Women officers for the coming year also have been chosen, Sister E. Hughes being the leader. Just lately this department gave $200 to our building fund. They had a supper and bazaar in December which was a success. Also the day before Christmas some of the good sisters took full baskets to Saints who were in need, which brought joy to these homes.

This is the close of a fairly successful year in this branch. Thirteen were baptized, and the spirituality of the work has increased. We were able to show a balance of $50 on our budget after all expenses were paid. Some was given to the building fund.

The sacramental service this month was well attended and a good spirit was enjoyed. Brother Albert Erskin preached a sermon Sunday morning, January 11, which was enjoyed. The prayer services have been of a very high order of late.

The Saints of Ottumwa wish all the Saints a happy and prosperous new year.

Duluth, Minnesota

January 7.—The Saints of Duluth gathered on December 7 with that at-one-ment which invites the Spirit of God. Although no gifts were manifested, the spirit of unity was there, and many heartfelt prayers and testimonies were given which will help to sustain all through their journey of life. Pastor C. B. Freeman spoke the evenings of December 7 and 14, bringing the gospel to the Saints and friends in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

Brother George W. Day, our district president, was here and made a visit, speaking in the evening of December 21. Also Brother W. E. Shakespeare was with us, stopping off on his way home from Two Harbors.

The annual business meeting was held December 22, with Brother Day presiding, C. B. Freeman assisting. All of the officers were sustained, as also were the heads of departments, except that of the Sunday school, Sister Freeman, wife of the pastor, being chosen as head of that department. With cooperation on the part of the Saints, we are looking forward to a year of progress, striving to reach a higher standard of perfection.

Christmas Day the Sunday school gave a fine program, and the people were well repaid for the effort they put forth to come and attend. One tableau was presented by Eldon Ousgard, portraying the manger with Mary kneeling by the crib, four shepherds standing watch while one was kneeling to present a gift. All the lights but one were out. The one light was fixed to represent a star. The tableau was very fine, and Brother Ousgard is to be commended. Although young in years, he is willing to serve his Maker. May the young consecrate their lives to this noble work.

Our pastor spoke the evening of December 28, with Brother P. G. Schmucke holding forth in the morning. Sacrament service was held the fourth of January, when the Spirit was felt to the degree that unity was prevalent. Many prayers and testimonies were offered, with a desire to do better this year than last. May each one who has named the name of Christ stand ready to qualify for service, not only being hearers of the word, but doers also.

We wish God's people a prosperous new year, and one of love, hope, and charity, especially charity, which preventeth a multitude of sins; that contention might cease and all prepare for that great day of the coming of our Savior to claim his own.

New Westminster, British Columbia

January 8.—The Saints here are very much alive and are doing what they can in the Lord's work.

A little over a year ago the Department of Women of the branch undertook to purchase a lot on which to build a church. The price was $500. Needless to say, the goal was reached, and to-day the lot is the property of the church. This was not done without much hard work, but when the sisters undertake to do anything for the church, hard work is a pleasure, especially when it is done in unity and love.

Some may wonder what we did to raise the money. First an Easter concert was given. Then a refreshment stand was maintained on May Day at the crowning of the May queen. Following this there was a sale of home cooking, a dining tent at the fall exhibition, and a Thanksgiving supper and concert.

The branch is planning ways and means of raising money for the church building. A start will be made by having a Valentine tea and concert next month, which no doubt will be a success when we consider for what we are working. Some of the brothers have been spending their half holidays on Wednesday clearing the lot, which is a fine corner in a good locality. The men were also kept busy washing dishes at the dining tent.

We are fortunate indeed in having Brother Samuel Pope as our branch president, for he is an enthusiast in church work, and the priesthood are willing helpers, so the membership also are enthused.

Columbus, Ohio

January 11.—A joint sacrament meeting was held Sunday afternoon at half past two by the two Columbus branches. Brother Bishop, district president; Brother French, president of First Columbus Branch; and Brother Anderton, president of Second Columbus Branch, presided over the meeting. About one hundred and fifty were present, and all but a few bore interesting testimonies. The Spirit of the Lord was with us, and one prophecy was given, through a sister, to the church in general, telling of the great work we all have to perform on this earth.

There were present eight charter members of the first church organized in the city of Columbus. Brother French and Brother Matthews each spoke of the organizing of a branch in our city and of the trials and hardships they went through to get enough members to start a branch. Through the faithfulness and perseverance of these first few members Columbus now has two branches and one mission, with a mission also at Mount Vernon, Ohio, with about four hundred and fifty members in all.

The churches are all growing, and all are working for that one great end which we all hope to gain.

Successful Christmas Activities at Groton

GROTON, CONNECTICUT, January 8.—A large gathering of Saints and nonmembers were present at the Sunday school Christmas entertainment held at the home of Branch Priest Thomas G. Whipple, Friday evening, December 26. Decorations were of laurel, hemlock branches, crepe paper, and a beautifully decorated hemlock tree, under the branches of which were gifts for the children. An interesting program was rendered, consisting of recitations, a male quartet, piano solos, reading, songs, and, much to the delight of the children, a visit from Santa Claus. The role was enacted by Brother Charles Alves, branch deacon, who surely was thor-

DENVER, COLORADO.—The Mizpah Club and the Department of Women held a watch party New Year's Eve at the church. Among those present was Elder Bruce E. Brown, our district president. It was indeed a pleasant surprise, as not many knew of his coming.

The early part of the evening was given for prayer service, which was presided over by Elder Frank Almond. Numerous prayers and testimonies were offered in thanksgiving to the Lord. This was declared one of the most spiritual meetings that had been held in the whole year. The spirit of unity and good fellowship expressed was very inspiring, and all present felt greatly repaid for having been there.

After the prayer service all enjoyed an excellent talk by Elder E. J. Williams, our branch president. He gave a summary of last year's accomplishments and presented a constructive outline for the new year. It is hoped each and every one will do his part to carry out his plans, that we may improve over last year's record one hundred per cent.

We were next honored by a short talk from Brother Brown. He expressed his appreciation for the work the Denver Branch is doing and the efforts they are putting forth to spread the gospel. He desired to see us go into the new year with renewed vigor and integrity of heart, that we may enjoy greater success and have the Spirit of the Lord to be with us.

After this the meeting was turned over to the social committee and various games were played. Refreshments were served by the members of the Department of Women. After refreshments the new officers for the Mizpah Club were installed: James A. Morton, president; Gayle Noblett, secretary; Nellie Coven, corresponding secretary. They took the following pledge of office: "Relying upon divine help, I hereby promise to strive to be true to Christ in all things and at all times; to seek the New Testament standard of experience and life; to attend every meeting of the Mizpah Club, unless hindered by reasons approved by a good conscience, and to be of active service to the Master and my office at all times; to spread and promote the gospel as set forth by the Restored Church of Jesus Christ; to assist in building up the membership and attendance of the church and all its departments and to furnish whatever aid I may be called upon to supply; to consider it a privilege to serve the Master through the trust of my fellow members, and do therefore humble myself that I may go forth, trusting in the Almighty Father; to be a servant to him and for him in the presence of those about me, until I shall have fulfilled my term of office. I shall make every effort to fulfill and keep this pledge to the Father and my trust."

The Lord's blessing was then asked by Elder Brown, after which Elder E. J. Williams gave a talk on the young people's place in church work. It was a call for cooperation from the older members to promote the cause of the young people and help them find their place in the gospel service.

By this time it was a little after midnight and we were starting on a new year, so we were dismissed by Elder Clarence Bruno with the prayer that this year might be the happiest, the most spiritual and profitable in our experience.

NELLIE COVEN.

Fanning, Kansas

January 15.—The new officers have taken their places for the year, and with the cooperation of all we are looking for a better year in gospel lines.

Christmas was observed in the usual way. All pupils were treated to candy and nuts and oranges. The weather for the past month has been very stiff winter weather, and many say it is the old-fashioned kind. There has been good attendance considering the roads and the very cold weather. Many have to come several miles.

The Department of Women has been active and has helped quite materially along the financial line. Their leader for the year is Sister Emma Hedrick. At the business meeting it was voted to run on the budget system.

There is quite a good deal of enthusiasm expressed in regard to the basement of the church being finished and equipped with the necessary furnishings so as to hold the primary department of the Sunday school, also providing a place for socials, bazaars, etc. It is hoped that this can be done in the near future. Much of the work could be done by the membership.

Just before Thanksgiving Brother J. W. A. Bailey and Bishop C. J. Hunt, of Independence, Missouri, were here and delivered several sermons. Also two illustrated lectures were given by Brother Bailey, which were much appreciated.

Sister Vera Twombly, who is attending school at Kansas University, spent the holidays with home folks near Fanning.

Sister Sarah Blauer of Troy had the misfortune to fall on the icy walk, fracturing her right arm just above the wrist. She is getting along nicely.

Brother and Sister Samuel Twombly have been somewhat under the weather but are improving.

George Gater, a very old colored brother, has been confined to his bed for some time and is no better. He seems to be waiting to be called to rest. He is firm in the faith and feels that when the change comes all will be well.

Spiritual Meetings in Small Branch of Saints

ALLIANCE, OHIO, January 6.—On December 7 Patriarch A. R. Manchester with his wife and son, of Akron, Ohio, met with us. We had a very spiritual meeting. Through Brother Manchester a special blessing was given to our pastor, Elder R. A. Smith, also to Sister Leafey Gordon, to strengthen them for the work they are to do. We remembered a scene from the long ago, similar in many ways, when a few of God's chosen people withdrew themselves from the stress and worries of life and the turmoil of the busy streets of that great city, Jerusalem, into a quiet chamber and there waited upon God for the blessing which they had been promised. So we, a mere handful out of this city with its beautiful churches, were gathered in an upper chamber, and there God saw fit to own and bless us as his children, though few in number and our surroundings the humblest. Surely the words in the song of “Admonition” are true: “Unto honor I have called you, honor great as angels know;” and our desire is to “heed our Father’s counsel, and by deeds our purpose show.”

December 14 Elder Joseph Biggs, of Kirtland, district Sunday school superintendent, met with us. He gave us a very good talk after the lesson period, commending two. He also made some helpful suggestions. In the evening he was the speaker. He also met with us at our Wednesday evening prayer service. We enjoyed his visit.

Missionary William Patterson was with us over Sunday, December 21, speaking both morning and evening. Brother Patterson’s sermons are always a source of help. After his sermon we heard such remarks as, “Wasn’t that fine?” and, “I could listen all day to him.”

We had a short Christmas program in charge of our young sister Vida Smith. It was very good.

Our branch priest, Joseph Gordon, is busy and happy putting out Angel Message tracts and Books of Mormon. He is employed on the Pennsylvania Railroad and recently sold two copies of the Book of Mormon and a set of tracts to three of his fellow workmen. They are reading them and are favorably impressed. His foreman, who has a Book of Mormon, says he believes it is true and wants more in his possession.

Quite a number have expressed the desire to be baptized soon, and we are expecting the waters to be troubled in the near future in a good cause.

The annual Sunday school election was held recently, and a full set of officers was chosen for the year, so we expect to see the work grow.

The Saints of this branch wish to indorse the letter of Brother N. T. Chapman, of Long Beach, California, who asks the church leaders to come together in humility and settle their own difficulties. We believe they can do this better than the membership could do. We would be glad to see all in harmony before General Conference convenes, so that a peaceful conference may be had.

Stone Church

The Messiah Choir made the drive to Lees Summit Sunday night, January 18, to give the “Messiah” in the Memorial Hall. The effort seems to have been a success from every viewpoint. Over eighty singers took the trip, and there was a large crowd out to hear them. The choir made the trip on the invitation of the Saints in Lees Summit.

Sister Ethelyn Paul, wife of W. B. Paul who has for many years worked in the Herald Office, passed away Saturday morning after many years of suffering. Sister Paul was born in Coldwater, Michigan, but moved to Lamoni with her parents when she was still a child. She married W. B. Paul in 1899 at Lamoni and lived there till 1921, when they came to Independence at the time the Herald Office was moved to this place. She leaves besides her husband, her mother, Mrs. J. S. Roth of Lamoni; two sisters, Mrs. H. T. Turner and Mrs. C. E. Robinson, both of Independence; and a brother, Fred Harger, also of Independence. The body lay in state in the Stone Church Sunday from two o’clock until half past two, after which a short service was held. She was then taken to Lamoni for burial, where President Elbert A. Smith preached the funeral sermon. Sister Paul offered an example to others in the way she cheerfully bore her suffering.

President F. M. McDowell has improved so much that he was able to leave the Sanitarium January 20. He is hoping to be able to return home the latter part of the week. Apostle J. F. Garver is doing nicely, but has not yet been released from the Sanitarium.

Apostle John W. Rushton is in Independence, having been called here from California by the death of his mother. His nephew, Norman Issott, of Omaha, Nebraska, also attended the funeral of his grandmother.

Bishops B. R. McGuire and I. A. Smith went to Texas January 19 to look after church property. They will be gone a week or more.

Bishop James F. Keir was the speaker Sunday morning at the church, and his discourse was much appreciated by the usual large audience. In the evening Apostle J. F. Curtis preached another very fine sermon.

Miss Ola Stanton, of the Holden Home, spent two weeks’ vacation with Mrs. J. A. Becker in Independence.

Second Church

Young people to the number of sixty-five came to the prayer meeting again Sunday morning at eight o’clock. Attendance and interest at this meeting are increasing.

Bishop Charles J. Hunt was the speaker at eleven o’clock, and he had a large attentive audience, while the junior service in the lower auditorium was conducted under Brother Lane Bolt.

Elder J. D. Shower was the evening speaker. This was his first visit to South Side, but he had a good hearing and spoke highly of the attention given him.

Brother John Allison, who had been a sufferer for some time, passed away Monday morning. His funeral service occurred this afternoon, Elder H. W. Good being the speaker.

Walnut Park

The chicken dinner the 16th netted $125 for the local church debt.

Bishop J. A. Becker preached Sunday forenoon, and after his plain talk probably no one in Walnut Park felt exempt from owing tithing—either little or much.

In the evening Patriarch Richard Bullard was the speaker.

Luther Lewis of Kansas City, a fellow worker of W. B. Haskins, attended church here Sunday and was baptized in the font at twelve o’clock. This is the second convert Brother Haskins has brought over from his place of employment to unite with the church.

Liberty Street

Last Sunday night Patriarch F. A. Smith began a series of Sunday night meetings, his first subject being 1 Corinthians 13.

In the morning Pastor J. M. Baker outlined the program for 1925. Both sermons were much enjoyed.

East Independence

After the sermon by Brother A. H. Parsons Sunday morning a priesthood meeting was held in charge of Pastor C. Ed Miller from Independence.

Brother Harry Friend was the speaker Sunday night.

Englewood

The women of this group have decided to organize a study class, to meet Tuesday afternoon for the study of the Doctrine and Covenants. Sister Molly Davis will be the teacher. This work promises to be very interesting.

We had with us Sunday morning Elder Hubert Case, and a large crowd was present to hear his very fine sermon.

In the evening Brother John Ely gave us a good sermon.

Spring Branch

The attendance at our Wednesday night prayer meetings has been fine considering the distance some have to come and the inclement weather.

Pastor John Soderstadt was the speaker Sunday morning, while Brother Arthur Pocur occupied in the evening.

Sister Amos Joe, daughter of Brother C. E. Guinnard, passed away at the home about seven o’clock Monday evening, January 19. She had not been well for about two months, but she was not thought to be in a very serious condition. The funeral was held Wednesday morning from the Stone Church at half past ten. She leaves besides her husband a two-month-old child, father and mother, sister, and brother.

Manteno, Illinois

January 14.—The Department of Women of this branch gave a chicken supper in the hall Thanksgiving night which was a decided success, both socially and financially. After the sumptuous meal a short program appropriate to the occasion was given. The budget was helped out by the $25 received, but best of all was the presence of the Spirit of the Master and the good fellowship which characterized the entire evening. The Saints felt that this was one of the most enjoyable occasions of the kind ever experienced by the branch.

The Sunday school gave their Christmas entertainment on Tuesday evening, December 23. The night was ideal for the service, the earth being covered with ice and snow and gentle flakes still falling.

The hall was fittingly decorated in green and red, while the entire front of the building was transformed into a panoramic view of the City of Bethlehem, with additional panels showing a group of shepherds and the Wise Men.

The program brought out the Christmas story in song and recitation. The boys and young men of the Sunday school gave a short play entitled, “Cutting out Christmas.”

On November 30 Brothers Axel Edstrom and Henry Van Nieuwenhuyse of Chicago visited our branch, and each preached a helpful sermon. We have heard much favorable comment, not only concerning the sermons, but also the personal enthusiasm of the brothers for the cause of Christ.

In November the Deselm Saints were again called to mourn the death of another sister from Wilmington, Sister Henry Allott, who lived only two months after the departure of her daughter, Sister Jean Kahler. Sister Allott was a sufferer for many months preceding her death and bore her affliction with patience and a firm trust in the God of her salvation. Loving care was given her by her husband, her daughter, Sister Della Heinen, and other relatives. The passing of this sister leaves vacant a place none can fill.

An all-day meeting of the Department of Women was held at the home of the local superintendent, Sister Mildred Rogers, January 7. The husbands were guests, and all enjoyed the cafeteria dinner and program following.

The Sunday school, assisted ably by the home department, went over the top with the Christmas offering. The stakes were set at one hundred dollars, but one hundred and forty dollars were secured. Sister J. H. McGuire served as chairman of the Christmas offering committee and deserves much credit, along with the other members of the committee, Brother Albert Rogers and Sister Jennie Bell.

Brother and Sister J. H. McGuire, of Hammond, Indiana, were week-end guests of Deselm Saints January 10 and 11.

Lamoni, Iowa

January 16.—Lamoni has been very fortunate in the matter of sickness this winter. Chicken pox and influenza have made great inroads in schools, but no serious cases have developed. Helen, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Norris, granddaughter of D. C. White, has been the victim of a rather severe case of scarlet fever but is out of danger now and is recovering nicely.

On the first Sunday morning of the month, the time of the service after the passing of the emblems was mostly given over to the performing of sacred ordinances. One confirmation followed the baptism of Mrs. John Johnson, and their little daughter Doris was blessed. Mrs. Johnson has been spending the winter with her mother-in-law, Mrs. Mattie Johnson. Her husband is in the service of Uncle Sam, being a member of the marine corps. Two other children were blessed: Gretchen, little daughter of Brother and Sister Frank Harp; and William Clayton, son of Brother and Sister Alvin Ballantyne.

The monthly concert given by the Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society at half past seven in the evening was very fine and was followed by a sermon on “In his image,” by Elder C. E. Wight. Brother Wight takes the stand that these word-

Young People's Convention at Toronto

The young people's convention of Toronto District will be held in Toronto beginning Friday, January 30, at half past two and will close Sunday night, February 1. President F. M. McDowell and Elder H. A. Koehler will be in attendance. Other districts are cordially invited, and visitors will be cared for in the homes of the Saints. The church is located on Soho Street, near Queen, one block east of Spadina Avenue.

On Friday, class work, "Preparation for service," will be held at half past two in charge of President McDowell, who will also speak in the evening at eight o'clock, following a half hour song service.

On Saturday recreation will be conducted at two o'clock in charge of the Toronto local Religio. A banquet will be held at five o'clock, with Bishop A. F. McLean as chairman and Agnes McPhail, M. P., as toastmistress. Brother McDowell will preach again in the evening.

Prayer service will be held at ten o'clock Sunday morning, and Brother H. A. Koehler will give an address in the afternoon. Brother McDowell will preach in the evening.

The music throughout the convention will be in charge of the district chorister, W. M. Terry, and Elder H. A. Koehler, of London, Ontario. There will be solos at all sessions; also instrumental music and readings by the best talent.

Collections will be taken each evening, as the expense of the convention is to be met by voluntary contributions.

There is no age limit.

Phoenix, Arizona

January 13.—This branch had a pleasant experience last month in a visit from Apostle D. T. Williams. While here Brother Williams preached every night for a week on gospel subjects, and while the attendance was not as large as we could have wished, yet it was steady, and good interest was maintained throughout. All felt encouraged and strengthened by his efforts.

A bunch of our “Up-streamers," with their teacher, Sister Jennie W. Young, did their part in trying to keep Brother Williams young. Several auto loads went to Roosevelt Dam and visited the cliff dwellings, where they spent the night, comfortably and otherwise. On their return they all looked the part of having had a real outing, including Brother Williams.

In our recent elections our branch president, F. C. Coberly, succeeded himself. In the Sunday school Hubert A. Yates was elected superintendcnt, and in the Religio Ed McNindo was sustained as superintendent. A splendid spirit of unity was manifested in all, particularly so in the branch election.

We have enjoyed the association of several from the land of Zion this winter. Among them are Brother and Sister Dildine, of Independence; Sister Townsend and two granddaughters, of Beloit, Wisconsin. Sister Townsend's sister, Sister Wetherel, arrived here last winter. Brother Charles Eaton, who was for many years director of the Independence Stone Church Orchestra, with his wife and her parents, Brother and Sister Jolly, are here primarily for the benefit of the health of Sister Eaton. Brother and Sister H. D. Ennis, and son Kenneth, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, are cheering us by their presence. Walter and Clarence Davis and their wives of Independence have acted like a tonic on the young of our branch. The influence creeps into the hearts of older ones, too. Our orchestra, which is directed by Elva Sturges, has been greatly assisted by the splendid help of the Davises' cornet, trombone, and violin. We are glad they decided to move to Phoenix.

The latest addition to our already fine collection of "from abroad" is Brother and Sister Keith Rogers, most recently of Yuma, Colorado. These are old friends, having lived here before, at which time Brother Rogers was our branch president. We gladly welcome them, but regret that their return was made necessary by the illness of Sister Rogers. Brother Rogers has accepted a position with the Alabama Freight Company. We trust that Sister Rogers, with the aid of our violet ray sunshine and mild climate, may soon be well on the way to health and strength.

Ruth Yates Millard, with her husband and two small daughters, has also joined us from northern Arizona.

Those who are acquainted with our branch will be sorry to learn that our faithful sister, Mary A. Putman, has been confined to her bed for the past five weeks with a return of spinal trouble and is still in a serious condition.

Our choir is progressing nicely under the direction of Sister Pearl Brannon, who is one of our most efficient and dependable workers.

Christmas Eve a beautiful pageant of flowers was given by the Sunday school, followed by the usual treats; and on the following Sunday evening the pantomime, "The search for the King," was effectively rendered, Sister Pearl Brannon being the reader.

Sunday, January 4, we had with us again Apostle D. T. Williams, who was on route to southern Arizona. The morning communion service was a spiritual feast to all. The voice of the Spirit through Elder Jesse Johnson to Brother Williams and the branch in general brought encouragement to all. Brother Williams, as the speaker of the evening, gave us in his usual forceful manner much food for thought. At the close of the sermon Brother Hubert A. Yates was ordained to the office of priest under the hands of Apostle Williams, High Priest H. D. Ennis, and Elder F. C. Coberly. The ordination prayer was rich with promise of future usefulness to our young brother, if he will move forward in the duties of his office and calling.

Our normal department is wide awake and busy with its duties of preparation for active usefulness. Would that all might sense the need!
Experiences by the Way
By John F. Garver

I. Experiences in the Independence Sanitarium

I have often desired to write of experiences for the HERALD but have always been crowded for time, always on the go. Finding myself with plenty of time just now, I avail myself of the opportunity.

I am writing from my bed in the Independence Sanitarium. I am confined here three to four weeks, to allow the healing to weak, however, work in the field again in a few weeks; even though I do have to “take it easy,” so far as such may be possible to one of my disposition.

I am resting easy; had been distressed for some ten weeks, so it is I am appreciative of the freedom from pain. I am weak, however, from the rigidness of the diet I have been subjected to. This is my fourteenth day in bed and thirteenth on diet. It is a trial to remain idle, so I’ve secured the doctor’s consent to write a bit now and then.

Surely “Our Sanitarium” is a wonderful place. This is my third stay here. First, eight years ago, exactly, when I was broken health following overwork in the cause we all love so dearly. Second, one year ago, exactly, when some complications following the removal of my tonsils required me to stay on here for twelve days. And now for this present treatment.

The spirit of the institution, whatever the personnel, is always the same. Surely God abides here.

My present disability, by the way, is not my first experience with this same ailment. Eight years ago, and fourteen, I had like attacks. We are determined this time to get the best of it. Hence the days spent here in quiet under the doctor’s immediate observation.

A Lesson in Cooperation

Every experience has its lesson, and, preacher-like, I am sharing with friends this lesson in cooperation:

I have been hungry these days. So would you have been, dear reader, under similar circumstances. For the first two days, only one ounce of milk and cream—half and half—each hour of the day, seven to seven, inclusive—thirteen ounces in all. For the next three days, one half ounce more each feeding. For the next four, the same, with one egg and three ounces of cereal for the twenty-four hours. I say, you would have been hungry, too.

So it was, my stomach, torn to tears by hunger pangs, kept looking up into my face and crying out, “I’m hungry! I’m hungry!!!”

“I know you are hungry,” I would reply, “but lie down and be quiet, you simpleton. It is no worse on you than it is on me. I’m lying down, too, don’t you see, and being quiet.”

But it would be only for a moment till he’d up and at it again, “I’m hungry! I’m hungry!! Can’t you hear? I’m hungry!!”

Morning, noon, and night, and during the night it was the same. Like Banquo’s ghost, he just would not down. And finally, what from turning a listening ear to him and pitying myself a bit, I caught myself slipping. I, too, was about to rebel.

At this I rose up in my mind, and said, “See here, Mr. Stomach, who is suffering the most, you, or I, or Mr. Duodenum? Who is it that has this ulcer, anyway? Not you. Not me. It’s Mr. Duodenum. Don’t you think it is hurting him more than us? He is really sore. We are “sore” only figuratively speaking. Hadn’t we better think of him a bit?”

Turning his face, as it were, in the other direction for a moment, for there lay Mr. Duodenum right next him, Mr. Stomach lifted again his shrinking visage to mine to say, “Yes, he does seem to be somewhat distressed.”

“And whose fault is it?” I asked.

“Search me!” says Mr. Stomach.

“Haven’t I been searching you?” says I. “And haven’t I made a discovery?”

“Well, you needn’t look so cross about it,” he defended. “What have I had to do with it?”

A guilty conscience again needing no accuser. “What have you had to do with it?” I answered in rebuke. “Haven’t you been yelping for something to eat from the hour you were born? And haven’t you had it, sometimes in an amount and variety to make the whole body sick, duodenum included? And well or sick, hasn’t he had to handle the whole lot?”

“Needn’t lay all the blame on me,” he cried. “Haven’t you times without number shown yourself to be a man without sense when it comes to eating, as well as in many other things? Hasn’t your fool appetite, and your overanxious hostess, or both, been too much of the time your only guide? And haven’t you, since you were old enough to take solids, thrown the grub down at me like a bone to a dog, without so much as turning it over in your mouth? When have you ever consulted me as to my feelings? Anyway, ‘weeping and whimpering; I am only the weaker vessel!”

“Good for you, old man!” I called back to him in admiration. For I do like a good scrapper, even when he scores one on me. “Good for you! I was just coming to that. But, don’t you know, it’s not blame-hunting we are concerned with just now. It’s cooperation.”

“Well, what do you want me to do about it?” he growled.

Though I knew he was willing, he is just like his master—that crusty old stomach of mine. His bark is worse than his bite.

“I want you to look at Duodenum again. Poor fellow, he is in mortal agony, and with good reason. It is get well, or out comes a piece of him. He is a good sport, though. Just saws wood and not a word, as he has always done, for always and always it has been the same with him—taking whatever we gave him and passing it on to the next fellow. And I’ll leave it to you if under the circumstances he hasn’t done well. Cooperation is his middle name, at whatever the effort or whatever the cost. Always he has cooperated with us for our sakes. Now we must cooperate with him for his.”

And thinking it out a bit further, I added, “After all, it’s for our sakes, too.”

So we lay down quietly, Mr. Stomach and I, beside Mr. Duodenum. And now we three are working together diligently, each for the sake of all, and all for the sake of each. Neither of us could get along without the other. Neither two without the third. Together we can make a go of it. And it is when we are each hitting it up normally we can do our best. So it is that since Mr. Duodenum needed to come, but couldn’t come in here without us, we are here with him, Stomach and I. And we well know he will keep on urging about as he has always done with us. So here we lie quietly together now, for the sake of the great journey we shall finish together by and by.

And in our church work, don’t you know, it is to be the same. We are interdependent. No one of us can disregard another without injuring that one and all the others, including oneself. Again, beautiful thought, either of us regarding another helps that one and all the others, including oneself.

So in the church we suffer together that we may learn together, and serve together, and triumph together.

It is the cooperation of love that is to win.

I shall write in my next of “Late experiences in the field.”

To the Youth Who Love the Church

What Is Love?

To the youth who love the church intensely, we address ourselves. To those youth whose supreme aim in life is the betterment of the church; to those youth whose every activity is centered around the one all-inclusive motive of making our church the supreme expression of the will of God among men; to those youth whose selfhood is organized around the only value worth while for lovers, that of making the object of their love more worth while; to those youth whose greatest inspiration is the refining and the perfecting of the object of their devotion; to such youth we address ourselves. For does anybody really love the church unless he also burns with enthusiasm and is fired with activity to make the church better than it is?

Love does not exist for the church just because we have been born into its folds; love for the church has not commenced when we merely have accepted its ministrations, have passively permitted it to teach us its precepts, to give to us its stamp of morality, to determine our conduct and moral conceptions; love does not even begin when we feel that we would take the initiative in making the church better; love only commences when we individually and mutually become the actors, and not merely the ones acted upon, when we become the actors in making the church better. No one loves until he begins to make better the object of his devotion. Loyalty? What is loyalty? No one is loyal until he becomes the actor in making the object of his loyalty better. Let no one stand in the way of our becoming lovers! Lovers of our church we would be; lovers of our church we will be, many interferers notwithstanding. We shall go forward to refine the object of our devotion. Into the refiner’s fire we shall put it, and with the hammers of our individual and mutual intellects and spirits we shall ever refine it.

But to those youth who have supposed that they have loved the church because it has determined for them their moral concepts, because up to date it has been the guide for their feet; to those youth who have felt that they have loved the church because it may have in some instances provided them with “amusements”; to those youth who have supposed that they have been loyal to the church, because in some few instances some leaders have unconsciously if not consciously bought their supposed loyalty by providing “good times” (as if vital loyalty attaches itself so); to those youth who have felt that they love the church because they have docilely stayed within the boundaries of intellectual thought and socially purposeful activity which the church itself has provided them, and never wandered outside of its provisions for such intellectual thought and purposeful activity; to those youth who have felt that they have loved the church because they have never had the least doubt of any of its precepts; to those youth who have docilely and obediently accepted the limitations which it has put upon their “good times,” the limitations which it, or at least some of its members have been wont to put upon their freedom of intellectual thought and intellectual discovery, the limitations which it or at least some of its members have been wont to put on conditions of their fellowship with both people inside the church and people without the church, we would also address ourselves. But we would first beg of you to examine the grounds of your love.

Love does not commence until we have begun to identify the object of our devotion with ourselves. The object of our devotion becomes our self. “And they two become one flesh.” When we begin to act as if the church was ourselves, our self, us, then we begin to love, and the intensity of our love increases as we tend more intimately to identify the church, its fortunes, its mission, its progress, its betterment, its reconstruction with ourself. We are the church. Let no person think he does not come within the purview of this address and plea who is under one hundred years of age. This address is to all who love or feel that they love the church. Betterment of life, reconstruction of self and objects of devotion, love, is youth. Let us go back to our thought that love for the church constitutes an identification of ourself with the church, and of the church with ourself. The relation is reciprocal and social.

Let us stop for a moment to see what one does who loves himself, and hence what one does with the object of his devotion which he has identified with himself. Let us in the first place frankly admit that we are describing the activity somewhat dogmatically; but yet the activity which we will set forth as the characteristics of one who loves is to a considerable degree self-evidencing, we feel. One who loves, chooses an aim for himself, and for the object of his devotion which he has identified with himself. He struggles to attain that end. Even with the baby, self-feeling, self-regard, self-love begins with the setting out of an object to reach, an aim to attain, even though it is largely if not entirely unconsciously chosen.

But one who loves does not stop here; he does not stop with the attainment of an aim in life; he permits that aim to grow, to change, to be modified, to be amplified. With his increasing experience in attaining an aim, he constantly inspects the aim, analyzes it, criticizes it; in a word, is constantly re-valuing his aim. This is self-criticism; and love does not commence its growing until self-criticism commences.

Growth of love for the object of one's devotion does not commence until criticism of that object commences. But this inspection, analysis, and criticism of one's aims, or the aims of the object of his devotion, is very apt to result in the discovery and perceiving of new aims or ends. It may even result in the discovery and perception of aims for oneself, one's object of devotion, which are unprecedented, which have never before by any other lover been so completely perceived and comprehended. This new perception of aims involves a new analysis, a new inspection, and a choosing from among them. A struggle to attain follows. This process is repeated over and over. This in a nutshell is self-reconstruction, a reconstruction of the objects of one's devotion. Love is not static; love is dynamic. Love is not decay and stagnation; love is growth. Love is not mere conformity to what is; love is reconstruction.

What a grand outlook for us who really love the church; we whose supreme aim in life is the betterment of our love; whose every activity is to be centered around the all-inclusive motive of making our church the supreme expression of the will of God among men. And since there are so many of us who really do love the church, look what a great social motive we have; see what a great cooperative purpose we have to tie us together.

We Must Love Together

This brings us to another question. Since there are so many of us who have identified or are in the process of identifying the object of our devotion, the church, with our very selves, how is the common object of our devotion to be bettered with so many of us working at it, and apparently with so many of us with different views regarding the church, with different views regarding outside influences affecting the church, with different degrees of training, with different degrees of ability? What a hodgepodge this bettering the church might be, indeed; what a hodgepodge this bettering the church is proving to be, with so many of us working at it. It seems we also must closely inspect, analyze, criticize our methods of working together at bettering the church, at bettering ourselves, our very selves, if you please. If we are really lovers, we will do that; that is, inspect and criticize, refine and rechoose our methods of working together. Yet the process includes the very germ or nucleus of its own improvement. Working together! Together!! Indeed we must choose the aim of the church together; we must struggle to attain that end together; and if we would begin the growth of love for the common object, we must together permit that aim to grow; we must together inspect, analyze, criticize that aim; and thus will we together refine our aim; indeed, discover new aims, unprecedented aims; we will then together choose, and struggle to attain; we will together reconstruct. The mutuality of the process, the togetherness of the process is inescapable.

But there are different degrees or qualities of mutuality or togetherness. The ideal would be to permit each person to make his fullest contribution to the common process, each person training himself to his fullest capacity and then giving to the others his fullest capacity in activity and thought; each person willing to listen respectfully to every other person, even though he finds himself in disagreement with what the others may do or think; each person reverencing every other person for that other person's own sake; and finally, in other words, a great mobilization of thought in helping to determine the answer to our common problems. Every child who really loves the church wants his full opportunity to add his bit to the solution of the problems of the object of his devotion. But the mutuality, the togetherness, the mobilization is not complete unless each person so fulfills his opportunity that everyone else likewise can and may fulfill his full opportunity. And the mutuality, the togetherness is not effective, unless there is a mobilization. But on the other hand, the effectiveness of mobilization must not deter the freedom of each to make his fullest contribution. There must be freedom to inspect our common aims, analyze them, criticize them, revalue them; there must be freedom to discover new aims, new relationships; there must be freedom to choose and struggle to attain, and yet this freedom must be expressed mutually; there must be a "we-ness" about it all, not a "my-ness" and a "thy-ness," as set off against each other, but rather an "I-ness" and a "thou-ness" which are increasingly voluntarily organizing themselves around a mutual aim or value. But, alas, this is the ideal. It is very difficult to describe. To describe it fully is not our purpose in this article. We really do not even comprehend the process in all its completeness and perfection. We see but snatches of it, and yet we feel ourselves approaching it both in imagination and in actual practice at times. But yet as we approach it, it becomes clearer to us. It is all another way of stating the brotherhood of man acclaimed by Jesus. Love for one's brethren finds its expression in uniting with one's fellows in bettering a common object of devotion, one's home, one's family, one's church, one's country, when the union is effected upon the principle of permitting each to make the fullest contribution to the betterment. We are far from attaining this goal; but we are approaching it, at least in some quarters.

A. MAX CARMICHAEL.

Extensive Pueblo Ruins Discovered

The United Press recently sent over the country a daily press dispatch which may mean a great deal to Latter Day Saints and students of archaeology among our Book of Mormon workers. As the way is cleared to these ruins and the excavating progresses, it is likely that men interested in different branches of science will be on the ground. We wonder if it is possible that a live Book of Mormon believer could be placed in the party of explorers!

History Found in Sand of Nevada

LOS ANGELES, January 14.—Far back in the untraveled recesses of Nevada, near the junction of the Virgin River and Muddy Creek, a new buried city has been discovered—one which probably will prove among the greatest archaeological finds in North American history, according to Governor James G. Scragham, of Nevada.

Governor Scragham is on route to the little town of Saint Thomas, nearest village to the ruins, after conferring here with Governor Hunt of Arizona regarding construction of a road from the Grand Canyon of Arizona to the discovery.

"We believe we are about to open up the largest Pueblo habitats ever found on this continent," Governor Scragham said. "The ruins seem to stretch for six miles, fifty feet or so above the high water mark of the river. They are about a mile wide. The town's population probably was 15,000.

"Thus far, we have excavated forty houses; and eleven bodies, ten of them of women, have been exhumed. The man's body apparently was that of a high chieftain. Ancient pottery, estimated to be two thousand years old, was found with the remains.

"Walls of the houses were of adobe, plastered on woven rushes. The clay still retains the mold of tule leaves. The floors were paved with stones."

The Government of the Church.—No. 1

The Issues Clearly Stated

In the following treatise we propose, as far as possible, to confine analysis to essential features of church government over which there exist material differences of opinion.

After listening to a number of addresses and reviewing articles appearing in our church papers, it is quite apparent that there are, at least, two pronounced schools of thought in the church. These schools present divergent views as to organization, functions, methods, and objectives. The chief advocates of both schools are agreed on a number of minor and secondary issues. Fundamentally they are far apart.

Positions of the Two Schools of Thought

One school stands for sweeping changes in organization and methods and affirms that the government of the church is through priesthood among, and not of, the people. According to the program of this group, all administrative activity and directional power will center in one man. Quorums and departments will possess no inherent and independent power of action, but will become mere appendages to the President of the church as the executive head.

The other school is opposed to centralization of power and affirms the order of church government as set forth in the New Testament, Book of Mormon, and revelations to the church. The advocates of this group maintain that quorums and officials possess inherent rights which are not contingent on mere ipse dixit, even of the President of the church. They stand for the coordination of effort and interaction of quorums and departments as revealed through, interpreted and administered by, the late Joseph Smith.

The issue is not alone a question of interpretation or terminology. Temperamental differences play a part and prevent converse, but the things which divide are organic. These two groups cannot both be right. Both may be wrong. One may be right and the other wrong. Each may be partly right and partly wrong. There is no possibility of these two groups working together harmoniously unless one or the other is converted; or, if both are wrong, that each may sense its error and make necessary adjustments. Any attempts to camouflage differences will but aggravate and prolong our trouble. Compromise should not, under any circumstances, be considered. To compromise with error for the sake of peace is treason to the truth.

I have been a member of the church for nearly fifty years. I have been an active minister for thirty-eight years. Not until quite recently have I ever heard any representative minister advance the doctrine that the government of the church is by priesthood among, but not of the people, and that supreme directional control, which carries with it the power to effectively discipline any or all who do not at all times acknowledge this control, is vested alone in one quorum.

Position of the Reorganization

Against this kind of doctrine the representative ministers of this church have waged a relentless and victorious crusade to the present. The Reorganization was born of revolt against centralization of power. The Word of Consolation issued in 1854 was a clarion call for democracy in the church. It was a manifesto against the doctrine of government by priesthood. It championed the rights of the people as against one-man power and made righteous warfare against the autocracy of the living oracles.

We cannot afford to surrender and relinquish the advantages gained through a half century of consecration and struggle. I am reluctant to believe that a majority of the officials and members of this church will indorse this strange document on church government now championed by a majority of the Advisory Council and which harks back some four thousand years for precedent and would substitute monarchy for democracy, make assent take the place of consent, and thus divert the church from its original and divinely ordained purpose. This would be tantamount to apostasy and must result in the rejection of the church.

Should such a catalysis happen to the church, but one course remains open to all true Latter Day Saints. We must carry on in God’s own way and with a firm and steadfast faith that God, who restored the gospel in the beginning with all of its attendant powers and blessings and who sustained the remnant during the dark and cloudy day following the apostasy of 1844, will still maintain his own cause and continue to bless the labors of those who remain true to the faith once delivered to the saints.

The Issues of the Reformation

We are fighting over again the issues of the Reformation—the right of conscience—the right of free expression—the right to worship God without priestly dictation or official coercion. The situation calls for men courageous and unafraid, men who are willing to stand up and be counted, men who will maintain the truth without fear or favor, men who will not surrender their manhood or barter away their birthright for a mess of pottage, men who are willing to have their names cast out as evil and who will hazard everything, even to life itself, to preserve the rights of the people. Real men will be willing to endure all this, aye more, for the truth and the right to maintain it.

It is to be regretted that, in some instances, statement of fact and quotations have been assembled in such a way as to leave the impression with those who have not followed both sides of the question, that these were not indorsed by the other side. One of the well-known rules of debate is that one should not stress points of accepted truth as though contorted, and at the same time ignore or pass over lightly the actual issues in controversy.

Open Letter Advocates Not in Disfavor

So far as I know, not one of the “open letter” advocates has visited a Delilah, nor have we been shorn of the source of our power. No Philistines have, as yet, put out our eyes. The earth has not opened and swallowed us up, and we are still spared the scourge of leprosy. We are not so moved with frenzy or personal animus as to attempt to pull down the whole structure of church government upon our own heads and the heads of our friends in order to visit destruction upon a supposed enemy.

One writer was so extremely anxious to quote anything and everything as supporting supreme directional control that I would not have been surprised if he had included the twenty-third psalm, the sermon on the mount, the dissertation on love as found in Paul’s first letter to the church at Corinth, and the excellent analysis of the atonement by Moroni; but then, our brother evidently knows that all of the “open letter” advocates accept this much of the Bible and the Book of Mormon.

The reader should not conclude that because some writers in defending or making apology for supreme directional control have quoted copiously from the organic law and from the writings of prominent men without making rightful application of these quotations, that, therefore, the proponents of the “open letter” are opposed thereto. These quotations, taken in their proper setting, disprove rather than support the program of centralization now advocated by the radical school.
Admissions and Affirmations

Representatives of the group which would effect a complete change in our church government have made a number of affirmations and admissions which we herewith enumerate:

1. The church is a theocratic democracy.
2. The church is not of human origin and must not be subject to the caprice of men.
3. The church exists because God authorized it and not because man willed it.
4. The form of its government is of divine origin and determination, though it depends upon human cooperation.
5. To the church God speaks through the instrument of his selection.
6. The people may reject the message given.
7. The people may, at any time, reject the messenger.
8. The people may reject both message and messenger.
9. The people have the right, at any time, to initiate legislation.
10. The right of legislation is resident in every delegate, whether of the priesthood or the laity, male or female.
11. All proposed legislation should be freely discussed on the floor of the assembly and then decided by majority vote.
12. The command of God is authority to act. Divine direction is paramount.
13. The voice of God does not contradict itself.
14. There are recognized grades of official prerogative and responsibility in the church.
15. The Presidency is the leading quorum of the church.
16. The primary right of presiding over the whole church is resident in the Presidency.
17. It is the right of the Presidency to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of the church.
18. The presidency of the high priesthood after the order of Melchisedec has a right to officiate in all the offices of the church.
19. The President of the church is to be like unto Moses. He is to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet. He is to have all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.
20. That the Presidency is the leading quorum in the church. That the duty of presiding over the church devolves upon that quorum. That it is the prerogative of the President to preside over the whole church, to bear the responsibility of the care and oversight of the work of the church, in all the different departments, and through the constituted officers of the church in their various callings, according to the laws, rules, and regulations in force and recognized by the church.—General Conference Resolution, No. 386.

21. Inasmuch as the Presidency is responsible for the direction of the affairs of the whole church, it is obviously proper that all the departments of the church ministry should work in harmony with and under supervision of the presiding authority of the church.—Committee Report adopted by Joint Council May 1, 1917.

Although the foregoing points have been affirmed by some of those advocating supreme directional control, we propose to show that a number of these would be impossible of execution if the church adopts the document on church government presented to the Advisory Council in May, 1924. Government by priesthood among, but not of, the people and supreme directional control and effective discipline vested alone in the First Presidency is quite another program from the foregoing.

We wish also to emphasize that these twenty-one affirmations, associated as they must be with all the other provisions of the law, are not, and have not been, controverted by the proponents of the “open letter.” Others may have done so in the past. It may be possible that at some future time men may challenge even these. And they should have the unqualified right to do so without being subject to insult or contumely, or to have their motives impugned and their integrity assailed.

Affirmations Still Unanswered

The following points have been affirmed by us and thus far remain unrefuted and, in most instances, practically unchallenged:

1. The calling of the so-called Advisory Council composed of the First Presidency, members of the Twelve in America, and the Order of Bishops to transact business or to legislate in any manner for the church, was without warrant of law and is an invasion of the rights of legitimate councils and the General Conferences.

2. The action of the council in assuming questions of church government was irregular, unwarranted, and unlawful.

3. The attempt to impel general church officials to abide the decision of this unauthorized council was an invasion of their official and inherent rights and an unwarranted usurpation of authority.

4. This council had no official standing under the church law and was without any authority or jurisdiction to represent any quorum or quorums or the church as a whole.

5. The calling of this council, the introduction of the document on church government, the demand that the members agree to abide the decisions of the council, was intended to bring the members of the leading quorums into line with the centralizing program, and this without precedent or provision of law.

6. It has been affirmed by us, and admitted by the advocates of centralization, that it was intended to put supreme directional control into operation at once and without the formality of waiting until it would be ratified by the General Conference. As proof we present the statement of the majority members of the Advisory Council as found in the SAINTS’ HERALD, July 9, 1924:

“The chief executives of the church, the First Presidency, should not be discaccred in seeking to exercise functions in accordance with the above principles [found in document on church government] in harmony with the law as laid down in the standard books of the church, but should be supported by the faith and confidence of the Saints.”

7. It was not intended on the part of those in charge of the Advisory Council that the ministry at large and the general membership should know the content of the documents discussed and considered by the council, the President affirming that “it was understood that these documents should not even be loaned for reading outside, to say nothing about being distributed.” Secret councils are not contemplated in the law. The government of God cannot be carried on behind closed doors.

8. The law and procedure of the church provide for administration through designated councils and quorums and the body as a whole. God has clearly designated the councils having jurisdiction.

9. Supreme directional control abrogates quorum and official rights and makes councils and quorums nonessential in church administration.

10. Joseph Smith and Heman C. Smith were unequivocally opposed to supreme directional control being vested in any quorum or quorums.

11. The appointive power as now exercised and as it will be increased and extended under supreme directional control, is unwarranted, and subversive of the rights of the people.

12. Right of appointment when claimed by any official without the specific authorization of the church makes the one so appointed subservient to the one appointing and tends inevitably to one-man power.

13. Supreme directional control nullifies the coordinate rights and the interrelationship of the three leading quorums which the law specifically states are equal in decisions.

14. The bishop as trustee-in-trust is amenable to the law of the land and of the church under which the rights of individuals and the body are fully protected.

15. Supreme directional control over finances by the Presidency or any other official or quorum is illegal and invades the law of state and church as to trusteeship. It removes all safeguards as provided for in the law.

16. Attempts to place both spiritual and temporal control in the hands of one man or group of men have always resulted in confusion and jeopardized the rights of the people.

Major Points in Issue

Passing over, for the time, the minor points of difference, we present herewith the major points over which there are seemingly irreconcilable division:

1. The government of the church is by divine authority through priesthood.

2. The divine authority becomes operative through the consent of the governed—the common consent indicated in the law.

3. It is divine government among the people.

4. Supreme directional control resting in the Presidency as the chief and first quorum of the church.

5. Effective administration is imperative, and organic solidarity is maintained only by effective discipline. (Taken from Document on Church Government.)

The above statements are set forth by the majority members of the Advisory Council and are controverted by the "open letter" advocates. In contrast with the foregoing, the latter group affirm:

1. General Conference, the enactments of which combine both the inspiration of God and the will of the people, is the highest authority in the church.

2. To obtain the common judgment, and to insure the cooperation and support of the people, all general church programs and policies must be submitted to the General Conference for consideration and decision before being initiated.

3. The law recognizes two general divisions in the administrative work of the church, spiritual and temporal, and specifies "that the temporalities of the church are to be under the charge and care of the Bishopric." In temporal affairs the Bishop acts as trustee in trust for the church and is directly responsible to the General Conference.

4. All quorums, departments, and institutions within the church shall operate on budgets appropriated by General Conference. The Bishop shall limit expenditures to such budgets and General Conference appropriations.

5. We accept the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, which contain the constitutional law of the church, and recognize the rights and powers of the priesthood as therein defined. We declare for government in the church by lawful and orderly processes and hold that General Conference enactments are binding without exception upon members, officials, and quorums. (Taken from "An open letter.")

Growing out of the discussion, advocates of centralization have made a number of affirmations which we question. We will not enumerate these now, but will examine in later numbers.

The purpose of this series is to strip the discussion of all extraneous matter and to narrow down the issue to the vital points of difference.

Where God Is Found

BY J. E. VANDERWOOD

To-day I saw among the woods and hills,
The hand of Nature showing forth her power; I heard her voice come from the babbling rills; I saw her beauty in the full-blown flower.

I paused in meditation, quite profound, And scanned the superficial works of man; When from the woods I heard the sweetest sound; The song of birds chimed with the brook that ran.

I said within my soul, What further need Have we, of evidence that God doth live! For Nature offers us the richest meed; If we will search her, she will freely give!

I said within my soul as one of old, The fool, indeed, had said there is no God; For in the works of Nature, we behold The power of God, made manifest abroad.

As I beheld each leaf, each bud, each flower, And heard the melody of brook and bird; I said, The elements declare his power; And in the woodland, here, his voice is heard!

Each blade of grass his presence doth declare! Each leaf and bud reveals his matchless power! Each rippling stream pours forth his praises fair! Yes, reverently I view his works this hour.

For Nature in her opulence doth show The works of God, in wonders great and true; And he that views them thoughtfully must know That God is thus brought clearly into view.

Thus in these manifold phenomena, The presence of the God of love is seen; And he who studies well this book to-day Will cleanse his soul, in truth, and make it clean.

CONCERNING THE FAITH OF OUR FATHERS

I. OUR FATHERS ON LEADERSHIP

We must guard with jealous care the liberty with which our Lord has made us free. The principle of "common consent" so prevalently spoken of in the church to-day is a sacred gift from the hand of God. We are all agreed to its value and importance. We sometimes differ as to the means and manner of giving it expression. Our predecessors in the faith were zealous in their protection of this vital prerogative. In the heat of their zeal, however, for their God-given democracy, they did not forget their heaven-appointed theocracy. This we shall note in the following testimony concerning the leadership of the church.

Counsel Accepted

"We will do well," says one of the contributing editors of the HERALD, Apostle T. W. Williams, in the issue of June 11, 1924, "We will do well to review the experiences and practices of the fathers of our work, who builded well." In this we are agreed, and in accord with the invitation herein extended, we set forth, with limited comment, a few statements from history which indicate very clearly the mental and spiritual trend of the fathers of the faith.

This counsel is freely given, and we accept it in the spirit of its bestowal. We would be very happy were we able conscientiously to follow the lead thus established in all matters seeking confirmation through the fluent pen of the editor. It is always pleasant to agree with our friends; but even with these we find ourselves at times at variance.

Pertinent to this discussion engaging the attention of many in the church are the matters of leadership and directional control, including the relations that should exist between the Presidency and Bishopric. On these subjects our fathers have spoken with definiteness and clearness. We purpose in these articles to inquire as to what was their mind in relation to these matters.

First, in the present discussion, we deal with the faith of our fathers on the matter of leadership.

In a second article we shall see what they have had to say relating to directional control.

And in the third and concluding discussion we shall discover their mind on the relations between the Presidency and Bishopric.
will make no effort to defend the position taken in this conclusion. With other similar statements, we submit it only as an indication of what was the "faith of our fathers" on this question. If Christ was the "Leader, Commander, and Witness," then we submit that the earthly successor would, with the aid of divine guidance, assume that role as far as was humanly possible. If, on the other hand, there was no power given to James through which he might qualify for this high and powerful position, we must admit at the same time that it is possible even in this day for one called of God to prepare himself for the same great station.

In confirmation of the above statement by William H. Kelley, we set forth the following by our good brother, the contributing editor, who here pledges himself to the position maintained by Elder Kelley:

Relating to the question from Presidency and Priesthood, we have this to say: We feel assured that its author, William H. Kelley, is able to defend and maintain his position, and undoubtedly will do so in the proper time and place.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 40, p. 281.

An Accusation

The present President of the church has been brought to task by the contributing editor in a public way, because he has dared to refer to himself as the "leader of this people." In this connection, the following will perhaps be of interest. But before quoting, may we ask, by what strange magic does that which is proclaimed a virtue in the first and second generations, in the third become a vice?

Joseph the Martyr as a Witness

About eight o'clock [says Joseph, the first prophet of this dispensation] a flag was sent which was met by several of our people, and it was hoped that matters would be satisfactorily arranged after the officers had heard a true statement of all the circumstances. Colonel Hinkle went to meet the flag, and secretly made engagement—first, to give up their [the church's] leaders to be tried and punished.—Church History, vol. 2, pp. 255, 256.

Surely no one would contend that the following is not about as clear and strong as the English language can put it. The Martyr again testifies:

I thank God that I have the honor to lead so virtuous and honest a people; to be your leader and lawyer, as was Moses to the children of Israel.—Life of Joseph the Prophet, p. 420.

We here find the term singularized. Your leader, is not a pluralized term. In this instance and in others, we will find the leaders of this church speaking of their leadership in a very special sense. Surely, in the mouth of two or three such witnesses this matter should be established.

"Young Joseph" as a Witness

The following taken from an account of a vision had by the late Joseph Smith and written by his own hand, is significant:

In suitable niches, and on brackets carved and embellished, were pictures and statuettes, the pictures representing scenes in the life of the Savior, the apostles of the New Testament, and of the Book of Mormon; the statuettes the figures of covenant leaders of both continents, ancient and modern.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 25, p. 162.

Again the same witness speaks:

For two or three years past deputations have been waiting on me, urging me to assume the responsibilities of the leadership of the church; but I have answered each and every one of them that I did not wish to trifle with the faith of the people ... I have conversed with those who told me they would not hesitate one moment in assuming the high and powerful position as the leader of this people.—Church History, vol. 3, pp. 247, 248.

Does the above speak of a "leadership multiplied" as the contributing editor would have us believe? Does the "high and powerful position" spoken of by this revered prophet bring to mind the picture of many heads, or one? Is this the "pluralized" or the "singularized" form to which attention is called in the editorial? Let each make answer to his own soul, and conduct himself accordingly.

Again the Prophet speaks:

I have my shortcomings, but I trust as a leader I shall do nothing to lead astray.—Church History, vol. 3, p. 250.

And yet again:

Should you take me as a leader, I propose that all should be dealt by in mercy, open as to Gentile or Jew; but I ask not to be received except as by the ordinances of the church. Some, who had ought to know the proprieties of the church, have told me that no certain form was necessary in order for me to assume the leadership—that the position came by right of lineage; yet I know that if I attempted to lead as a prophet by these considerations, and not by a call from heaven, men would not be led to believe who do not believe now.—Ibid., p. 249.

Again we ask, what is it that transforms that which is a virtue in the first and second generations into a vice in the third? Surely the present testator should be considered in honor as were his fathers.

Frederick M. Smith a Witness

Is it at all strange that in the light of the above, the present Prophet and President of the church should refer to himself as the "leader of this people"? Surely his testimony is in harmony with the witness of the past. If in all other things he is as nearly in accord with the "faith of our fathers," we will need have no fear in following such leadership—if, indeed, as the contributing editor seems to maintain, the "faith of our fathers" is a proper criterion to guide us on our way.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The Editor Against Himself

The contributing editor referring to this belief in a leader says, "One is led to wonder, when other and strange positions are set forth, as to what will be the next move in departure from the faith once delivered to the saints."

It is apparently necessary to remind the brother that if such belief constitutes a "departure from the faith," he himself until of late has been leading in that direction; in proof of which we append the following from his own pen:

The established law of the Lord as regards leadership, provided that Joseph Smith's successor should be "called of God," "chosen by the body," "appointed and ordained unto that office."—"Latter Day Saints, who are they?" page 142, by T. W. Williams, one of "The Angel Message" series of tracts procurable at Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Our brother here established the fact that there is a leadership in our earthly communion. Moreover, he makes it very plain that the Great Leader in heaven places his insignia of acceptance upon that earthly leadership by himself calling the leader. The "law of the Lord," he tells us, provides for such "leadership."

Now in contrast with this, we find the contributing editor breaking down his faith of the past, and perhaps the faith of others with a statement such as the following:

The admission of such leadership ... is dangerous.

Since when, we ask, did it become so dangerous? If it was God-provided a few years ago, at just what period did the angelic presence assume such a forbidding and sinister aspect? When was our brother in the faith? When he believed in a God-appointed leadership of the church militant, or when he contended that there is no such leadership?

Or will it be contended that there is the office of leadership, as set forth in the brother's testimony, but no leader? Surely if such were argued, the great Socrates would turn in his tomb. Hear the great sage:

Did ever man, Meletus, believe in the existence of human things, and not in human beings? Did ever any man believe in horsemanship and not in horses? Or in flute-playing and not in flute-players? No, my friend, I will answer to you and to the court as you refuse to answer for yourself. There is no man who ever did.

Neither will our brother contend that there is in the church an earthly leadership, but no earthly leader; his logic is too sure for that.

W. W. Blair a Witness

Let us hear from another stalwart witness for the truth. The following passage is quoted for no other reason than to emphasize the faith of the fathers on the question of leadership, and the writer trusts that none will try to make an unfavorable application of some of its phrases to those to whom it may not in the same sense apply. Brother Blair says:

Has the Lord made a mistake in choosing the chief leader of his people? Do others in the church know and understand the authority, duties, responsibilities, and prerogatives of that leader better than does that leader himself? And has God called other men to lead that leader, to teach him what are his duties, and what are his prerogatives and move them to resist his official counsel and instructions!

The Lord never appointed a leader of his people, from the days of righteous Abel until the times of Joseph the Seer and his son Joseph, who did not have certain officious, conceited persons to oppose them, directly or indirectly, who assumed to know and understand the work of such leaders better than did those leaders themselves, and who privily, or publicly, sought to lead such leaders and teach them in respect to their official, ministerial work, responsibilities, and duties. Such parties are usually very forward and decided in following their own counsels, even if thereby they must ignore and reject the counsel of those whom the Lord has "set over" them in his church and kingdom. Is it safe for the ministry and the membership to follow the example of such parties and resist or ignore the official counsels of the leader God has set over them, and especially when they admit that that leader has been and is appointed of God? If the church has a chief leader, why not honor and follow and uphold him as such, instead of seeking to lead him? Christ's ministers and Christ's people ought to be consistent with their profession. We should examine ourselves in these matters and see if we are in the faith.

God made President Joseph Smith "the head of the church" on earth. (Doctrine and Covenants 27:2, etc., etc.) This is admitted (at least in word), by all the ministry and members. Is it not therefore wise and safe and consistent for them all to act in harmony with and follow their official "head," unless it be demonstrated that he has become corrupt, unsound, cranky, or in some other way incompetent? Is it not far safer and wiser to follow the counsel and admonition and direction and suggestions of "the head of the church" than others? Of what use is "the head of the church" to the body if the body is not under his direction and counsel?—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 40, p. 431.

Surely no one can mistake the tone of the above. Here is plainness and positiveness. Here, dear reader, is the "faith of our fathers." Does it not ring true? Which will you choose, the church with a head, a leader? or some strange and new-fangled creation without a head, and without a leader?

Summary

Whose testimony are we to accept? Certain it is that the conclusions of these prominent men, some of whom "being dead yet speaketh," will carry weight in the minds of thousands of honest-hearted Latter Day Saints. Consider, dear reader, as one who still believes in the teachings and testimony of the latter-day prophets, with which opinion would

In the next article we will discuss the matter of the faith of our fathers in relation to “supreme direction or trend of these claims is toward theocratic-democracy?”

Know the Law
BY BISHOP ISRAEL A. SMITH

The caption, “Know the law,” which has appeared as the heading of my various articles, has been used simply with a desire that the law given of God and interpreted by the church be carefully studied by the membership in order that intelligent action might be obtained when it becomes necessary for the church to make decisions. I do not set myself up as having a knowledge of the law to the exclusion of my brethren, for I believe that all can profit from an honest exchange, comparison, and analysis of views.

Personally, I have no desire to add to the law in regard to our governmental matters, either by changing the interpretation or practice. I firmly believe that the law in regard to the questions involved in the present controversy has been long settled and has been placed before the Saints by our predecessors in a much more able and satisfactory way than I could possibly have defined it.

During the weeks that I have considered the work of other writers, those who are proponents of supreme directional control, certain general considerations have been presented to my mind which I have incorporated in the following more or less fragmentary manner, and I ask the indulgence of a fair reading on the part of the Saints, with “malice toward none and charity for all.”

Theocracy in Church Government Operates in Definite Channels and Need Not Be Presumed Theocratic-democracy is operative in the giving and acceptance of revelation, but it is not necessarily operative in the administrative affairs of the church, unless the presumption be indulged that God’s Spirit dictates every opinion of the priesthood when acting in an administrative or executive matter. Once that presumption be indulged, it is an easy and almost insensible step to a point where one fears to question the act or opinion of the priesthood, thereby elevating the presumption to the dignity of a conclusive presumption, and then the foundation is laid for living oracles, obey counsel, and their concomitant evils, until priesthood is the dominant factor.

The literal meaning of the word theocracy is “God rule.” That God influences our thought and conduct as ministers and members is readily granted, but our contention is that when he would rule or govern the church as a body it is regularly done by revelation through the prophetic office, which becomes valid as the rule of the church only when it has been accepted by the quorums and by General Conference.

Let us consider the operation of supreme directional control in actual practice: Do the brethren advocating the supreme powers of the First Presidency believe that if the Presidency were of the opinion that the Auditorium should be built at an ultimate cost of $5,000,000, their decision should prevail because theocracy is involved? And that if their proposal should be questioned or resisted, those so questioning or resisting are repudiating God’s right to lead and direct?

The Saints at Independence met recently for the purpose of taking action in regard to the radio towers, and they did act in regard to them. Was there anything about it even hinting at theocratic-democracy? Was it not in fact a matter of pure democracy? Or will the brethren contend that this was a matter so far removed from legitimate controversy as not to be a governmental affair? We think it was a shining example of common consent. No, as we view it, these brethren seek to apply to all the affairs of the church a rule applicable to the giving and acceptance of revelations. Then they conclude that since the President is the channel through which revelation is presented, all the acts of the Presidency are of the same dignity.

We do not say the result will be identical, but the direction or trend of these claims is toward absolutism. Under almost identical claims of authority for their First Presidency, we have the picture of Utah framed in “supreme authority,” colored with the rosy hues of living oracles and obey counsel, but nevertheless labeled “the people rule.” The parallel is too plain to escape attention:

We quote from averments in the Reed Smoot case as follows:

Smoot’s answer:

This respondent admits that the First Presidency of said church is vested with supreme authority in all things spiritual and in all things temporal, so far as temporal things pertain to the affairs of said church, and not otherwise.—Proceedings, etc., Reed Smoot, vol. 1, p. 32, Amended answer.

I admit that the first presidency of the church has supreme authority in things spiritual and in things temporal relating to the property, business, and affairs of the church itself.—Vol. 1, p. 75.

I admit and aver that the president and his two counselors, constituting the first presidency, and they only, are supreme in the exercise of the authority of the church on all ordinary occasions.—Vol. 1, p. 75.

We now place these statements opposite the principal quotation from the April resolution, and ask its proponents to point out any material difference between these fundamental positions:

In organic expression and functioning, there must be recognized grades of official prerogative and responsibility with supreme directional control resting in the Presidency as the chief and first quorum of the church. This control it is presumed is beneficent.

Do our brethren believe that under the Utah practice based on the foregoing statement of authority, the control of their first presidency has been “beneficent” and that the common consent rule has obtained for lo these many years? What guaranty have we that under a similar statement of authority, our practice and procedure may not sometime become identical? Yet, brethren will devote pages to argument that because the people have the right to sustain or reject the presidency, their rights of common consent and (therefore) democracy are not violated.

Attorney Worthington, counsel for Reed Smoot, in closing argument before the Senatorial Committee of Investigation, tells us how the people rule in the Utah Church:

While I am speaking of the Mormon Church, let me say that it is true, as stated by President Smith when he was under examination here, that the Mormon Church is in fact one of the most democratic organizations in the world. In the Mormon Church it is absolutely true, not that the apostles are supreme, or that the presidency is supreme, or that the first five are supreme, nor even that the church is supreme, but that the people of the church are supreme. No fundamental proposition binding the Mormon Church or affecting them in anywise except as they may please to be affected, of their own free choice and will, can take effect until it has been submitted to the people assembled in one of their great conferences in the tabernacle there at Salt Lake City. Whatever in that regard the president or his advisers wish to have done in the way of changing the law of the church, must be submitted to that conference, and they must sustain it by their uplifted hands, or it does not become a doctrine of the church.

What Does Supreme Directional Control Mean?

There are those who have recorded themselves as favoring such control, but not dictatorial control. I am of the opinion that there is no such thing as supreme directional control without the power of dictation. It is, in its mildest form, the general supervision and direction generally accorded to the Presidency plus authorization to enforce their decisions. If I am wrong in this latter statement, I ask its proponents to explain in what manner will it be supreme in event the Presidency should meet with opposition or resistance that would not be withdrawn? Besides, if memory is correct, that is the construction placed upon the resolution by its proponents in the April council. They, at least, I believe, are pretty well tied to that position.

Of course, it may be in the minds of our brethren of the opposition that the directional control of the Presidency shall always be made effective by reason of the fear or refusal of all others to set up any contrary views or by an immolation of their best judgment and conscience, a spineless functioning which, like the aspen on the mountain side, simply bends to the ground at the onrush of the snowslide and allows it to pass over without material resistance. I do not believe upstanding men of God want directional control after this manner; besides, I am convinced it would be as dwarfing and twisting in its results to other officials and quorums as is evidenced by the appearance of the mountain trees.

President Cannot Be Supreme Without Power to Dictate

Supreme directional control reduced to the irreducible point means dictation. Dictation is the one thing without which it is not supreme. Perhaps it might be more accurate to say that the power to dictate is the one thing without which it cannot be supreme. If the Presidency does not propose to use this power of dictation on the grounds that it might be improper or unlawful to do so, then it is quite evident that the whole resolution is purposeless, so far as the control by the Presidency is concerned. If we are incorrect, if in fact power of dictation cannot by fair implication or otherwise be fastened upon the wording of the resolution, it is but “clouding” the record to place this resolution upon the books of the church. We are quite convinced that the just and rightful powers of the Presidency are already much better defined in the law as it has stood for many years.

We are quite sure that we are right in construing the resolution to mean that under it the Presidency have the power to force into operation anything they will to be done, even if other quorums never consent to it. It means that no opposition of the Presiding Bishopric who are the trustees of the properties and money of the church, even if persisted in to the utmost, would be of any avail; that their rights of discretion so plainly stated in General Conference resolutions would be taken from them by this resolution and placed with the Presidency, and their judgment and conscience held for naught. It means, if it means a thing, when carried into its legal, logical, and inevitable conclusion, that the people will have absolutely no check upon the will or the caprice of the Presidency in the expenditure of church funds.

Besides the foregoing, our belief as to what this resolution means is also supported by our firm conviction, based upon the experience of some years, that it is in harmony with what the Presidency (or at least the President) have in mind.

After all is said, after we have waded through all the thick and thin of the argument, while brethren reflect different viewpoints on various matters of church government, the crux of the matter, the gist, the issue, is whether the directional control of the Presidency carries with it the powers of dictation. The writer may have been guilty as well as others in talking about matters outside of this issue. Let us forgive each other and the score perhaps can be evened on that point.

Grant Powers Only Where They Lawfully Belong

As suggested in the foregoing, I am making this presentation on the theory that supreme directional control in the Presidency carries with it the power to dictate. I am not persuaded that any power should be granted to anybody, if it does not of right belong to him, on the inducement that he will not use it; and if the proposal to grant him the power carries with it the suggestion of the right of “effective discipline,” it is a double-handed threat. One is in danger of being run down and then prosecuted for being in the way.

The Presidency does not have the right to dictate to the Presiding Bishopric in their trusteeship because the law does not give it to them; on the other hand, as we have shown, it gives specific discretionary rights to the Presiding Bishopric which preclude dictation by others. By this we do not wish to be understood to mean that the Presiding Bishopric shall themselves exercise dictatorial powers. In addition to this we find in the law that not even when the affairs of the Bishopric are in disorder does the Presidency have sole jurisdiction to set in order. It must be done in conjunction with other quorums. The Lord says:

In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.

In what way can the Presidency claim greater powers in regard to the putting in order the work of the Bishopric than the Twelve and the Seventy? Some have advocated the supreme power of the high council in administrative affairs, but here again the law of God clearly inhibits such practice.

The high council could not in justice dictate to the bishop in direction in any of these matters and then try and condemn and punish him if he did not obey.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.

Will our good brethren explain how “in justice” the Presidency—who are a prominent part of the high council; in fact are empowered to write its decisions, hence to strongly influence and direct its actions—could “dictate to the bishop in direction” in any matters “and then try and condemn and punish [in other words, “effectively discipline,” I. A. S.] if he did not obey”?

The Presiding Bishopric have not shunned responsibility; neither have we sought conflict with the Presidency. When questions of our differences have been discussed, we have plainly stated to the President we did not wish to embarrass him, neither did we feel that he should embarrass us, by forcing us to take a final stand against his views where differences of opinion obtained. In that event we asked him for a council, either the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, or the High Council, where such differences of opinion could be composed in a way which becomes the dignity of all concerned. But our request was met by the assertion that whenever differences existed between the quorums, we should give way to the opinion of the Presidency. In this we feel that we did equity and believe that such a provision as requested by us would have promoted harmony and good-fellowship and tended to better conditions in our work.

Do our brethren contend that it is is lese majesty to differ with the Presidency as to the conduct of the affairs of our office? that divinity always actuates the Presidency to the exclusion of all other quorums? that in matters of opinion as to the wisdom of numerous matters proposed the Presidency is always functioning under their exclusive interpretation of the law?

Common Consent

Versus

Assent—or Failure to Dissent

What did God mean when he said, “Let all things be done in order and by common consent”? Did he intend that the deliberate will or judgment of the people should be exercised? or was it to be simply a sufferance or acquiescence? These questions are suggested by the arguments presented by recent writers on church government. By implication at least it is held out that by the mere act of sustaining an officer, the things already done by such officer are approved, common consent is thus operative and democracy triumphant. I can’t see it. It requires too lively an imagination. And the words so freely used by these proponents, consent and assent, lead to the inquiry as to their specific meaning.

God used the word consent, and if it differs from assent and if there is a reasonable doubt as to whether consent can be secured after the fact (the thing done), I am going to resolve the doubt on the Lord’s side, if I can determine which side it is.

I have no desire to emulate Hudibras who had the power——

“to divide

A hair ‘twixt north and northeast side”;

—but do have a desire to follow the plain intent of the law, and some of us of humbler intellect may be assisted in deciding the major proposition before us. In English Synonyms, Antonyms, and Prepositions, by Fernald, we read:

To assent is an act of the understanding; to consent, of the will. Assent is sometimes used for a mild form of consent.

The Standard Dictionary agrees with this verbatim.

In Crabb’s English Synonyms we read:

Assent is given by equals or inferiors; it is opposed to contradiction or denial: consent is given by superiors or those who have the power of preventing;

It must be admitted from the foregoing that the word assent, being but a “mild form of consent,” one in which only the “understanding” is involved, and not the “will,” is a weaker word. I here resolve the doubt, if any exists, on the Lord’s side, and believe that he desires the will—the judgment—of the people to be exercised in common consent. Can the will be exercised, so that common consent may obtain, if the thing or things have already been done? I say no. There is no democracy about such procedure.

It seems to me like trifling with the confidence of the people to suggest that their rights of democracy in all matters wherein the divine will is not directly concerned, are conserved to them where the thing is done before their “assent” is given. To argue that common consent is obtained and the people’s will secured to those things already performed by an officer in the mere act of sustaining him once a year, requires a mental agility far beyond my powers.

Let us take the historical event mentioned in the HERALD of October 29, 1924, by President E. A. Smith—the organization of the Independence Stake:

The President (Joseph) stated that he was authorized by the joint council (Presidency and Twelve) to present the name of one for the office of president of the stake. It was left with the people to accept or reject. If the nomination was rejected, he was authorized to present another. He presented the name of George Hulmes. . . . The nomination was indorsed by a unanimous vote.—General Conference Minutes, 1901, p. 432.

The brother follows this quotation by saying: “Here Joseph proposed, and the people assented.”

Let us see if the facts will bear out this allegation. Was not their free, deliberate will exercised prior to the action itself upon the proposal being made to them?

Let us suppose this case under “supreme directional control”; the history would have read about like this:

The Presidency stated that they had appointed George Hulmes president of the stake. He had accepted and was already acting in that office. Those who assent will raise their hands.

Quite a difference we confess, but a logical development of the absolute control now claimed under “government through priesthood.”

The splendid galaxy of men, named by this editorial writer in “True philosophy of church government” on page 1035, did nothing in the transaction recorded except to concur in a nomination to be made to the Independence Saints for their consent (“an act of the will”) by those “who have the power of preventing”) or election before anything was done about it. Wherein does the item of history so recorded support anything but the democracy of it? When fully examined it will be seen that this historical incident in no way establishes a precedent for the mere assent on the part of the people to what the priesthood proposes; neither does it deny the people the right to submit nominations of their own in filling elective offices.

We admit that when God speaks it is divine and should be accepted. Most certainly. We admit that government by revelation submitted to and accepted by the body is an exercise of theocratic-democracy; but in the thousand-and-one things in which the judgment, wisdom, and decisions of officers, quorums, and conferences are involved, that may and do follow our day-to-day existence, the democracy of our government as ordained of God finds its avenue of expression.

The following from the late President is pertinent on this point:

In treating of the rights of the membership—“the people of the Saints of the Most High”—it is safe to say that, all the rights not clearly delegated by commandment of God to the ministry, nor prohibited by it to the people, are reserved to the people. And that therefore their voice is made essential in the government of the church of God. And this is upon the principles that the Lord will have the people learn to govern themselves under his law and from the fact that, “it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right” (Mosiah 13: 4), and from the further fact that men are sometimes inclined to use their authority, opportunities, and powers, under the prompt-nings of blind ambition, selfishness, or other evil motives such as have corrupted some leaders in the past and thereby brought blindness, reproach, and ruin upon the people, as see Isaiah 3:12; 9:16; Jeremiah 23:11, 13, 25; Malachi 2:8; Acts 20:29, 50, etc., etc.

The ministry should be honored promptly and sustained thoroughly, when faithfully and lawfully engaged in their respective offices and callings, but they are the servants of the people for Christ's sake, and God's people are entitled to observe and judge of their ministrations to themward.—Editorial by Joseph Smith in SAINTS' HERALD, December 17, 1892.

Is the Church a Dragon?

God has specifically pointed out that the "temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric . . . under a presiding head acting for the church," and has said that there are both a "spiritual and a temporal division of the work." That the temporal division could have a head as well as the spiritual division has been held up to ridicule in zoological terms. Did God make a mistake? Has the interpretation of his will by our head as well as the spiritual division has been erroneous and he has suffered it to be so for sixty years? That Joseph the Martyr thus recognized the first bishop is shown by the following:

As Edward Partridge now appears, by revelation, as one of the HEADS of the church, I will give a sketch of his history.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 170.

Occasionally we hear it said that no business institution could hope to succeed with more than one head. When this analogy is applied to the church, it is open to criticism from two angles:

1. The church is not a business institution.
2. The statement as applied to business is not true in fact.

Our own experience as a church has shown it to be true that in "temporal things ye shall not have strength." We look with alarm upon any tendency to shift the emphasis from the truly spiritual work of the church to one which makes essential material prosperity. History clearly establishes the rule that the material prosperity of any church is in inverse ratio to its spiritual development.

It may be a matter of interest to our readers to learn that the general functional organization of many of the largest and most progressive industrial institutions of to-day are quite similar to the organic divisions of our church. Many of the largest and most progressive industrial institutions to-day. The president, responsible for the production and distribution, reports to the board of directors—the sovereign head (hydra-headed, if you please). The comptroller-treasurer, responsible for its financial affairs, reports to the board which very frequently consists of seven or nine members, and they are elected by, and responsible to, the stockholders.

While some industries, such as railroads, do not observe this functional division, the more modern large industries do. The railroads are our pioneer large industries, and it is hard to change the force of nearly a century of habit; then, too, they are more circumscribed by law and Interstate Commerce Commission rulings. In support of this position we quote from two prominent authorities to show the powers and limitations of the president, treasurer, and board of directors:

The treasurer is the official custodian of the corporate funds, and his primary duty is to receive them, care for them, and disburse them. Other duties assigned to him are usually in some way connected with or related to this primary duty. . . .

In the care and management of the corporate funds and for the discharge of any duties connected therewith, the treasurer is the active agent of the corporation and of its governing body, the board of directors. He is, therefore, subject to the direction of this board in all such matters, . . . Corporation Procedure, by Coryton, Bennett, and Pinkerton. President—His power to contract for the corporation.—The president of a corporation has no power, by reason of his office alone, to buy, sell, or contract for the corporation, nor to control its property, funds, or management. His duty is merely to preside at meetings of the board of directors, and to perform only such other duties as the by-laws or resolutions of the board of directors may expressly authorize. This is a rule established by the great weight of authority.—Cook on Corporations, vol. 3, p. 2483.

Long before the dawn of the era of industrial corporation, God revealed to Joseph Smith the organic structure of this church. That it should now be emulated by business science is a wonderful testimony to me that he was heaven inspired.

It shows, however, that God is always modern; man trails on behind. We should not be stampeded by false philosophy about business and hydra-headed beasts to change what God has revealed as his plan of organization.

The Effect of "Effective Discipline"

Dictation has no place in this church. Dictation and discipline—the latter as talked about and construed in discussion in the April council as "handling" men—belong to Catholicism and the German army. I say as my own opinion that, as to our work, no surer nor quicker methods of disruption and disintegration can be devised, because this is a work of sacrifice. Men are called to a loving service in which all are laborers together, and men's natures are such that they will not continue to toil and sacrifice and suffer the ordinary trials of ministerial service upon the display of rigid cast-iron authority and compulsion. We owe it to no man. Our Master calls us. We will give all of his servants a kind and honest consideration, support them when they are right, as God gives us to see the right, and, before that same God, refuse to carry out their policies when we believe them to be wrong.

Since this controversy began, I have frequently thought that some of the proponents of the April resolution have this attitude: They want the people to have their agency—most assuredly. They desire the people's judgment to be operative—but only in an affirmative way. Their mental hinges must work outward only. If they work in negation, then it is treason to priestly authority. That kind of exercise of God-given agency isn't worth much to me. It is a prostitution of their rights to say they must always give way to the presumption that deity is speaking. Thanks for rebuttal presumptions. I can yet weigh what priesthood presents, and if it does not stand the test I can reject it. God gave that right. I am going to exercise it. If my decisions are wrong, I will answer; but it would be as great a sin never to exercise it and much more weakening to my character.

I will not shift or attempt to shift the responsibility. I care not how much the commander assure me that he will assume the blame; if what he wants me to do is not what I have undertaken when I enlisted, I will not do it. That is my idea of how far my obligation requires me to go. My position on this is supported by the following:

The counsel of leaders may be sought, accepted, and acted upon if it is commended to the understanding and reason of the recipient; but no priestly domination or assumption of arrogant rule will be tolerated. Every man expects to answer to God direct for the faith he has and the priesthood he holds; and none accepts the belief that his manhood may be hidden in servitude to the extent that the servant may do what the human master bids him do, the servant to escape blame if the thing so done be wrong, and the master bear the punishment. The individual man cannot so change the point of responsibility. The human superior who directs the wrongdoing of his inferior, is deserving of the greater punishment; but he cannot remit the strokes which his subordinate deserves by wrongdoing, though such wrongdoing may be the result of advice, or command of the superior. We use the words superior and inferior, in an official sense only; for there are no superiors nor inferiors in the work of God—for they are all one in Christ Jesus—and he who would be greatest must become the servant of all.—Joseph Smith, in SAINTS' HERALD, August 29, 1899, p. 598.

Upon some of my readers may soon fall the solemn obligation of making legislation upon governmental matters. It will not affect us alone, but will likely influence the church for all future time. Principles and not personalities should control our judgment in such matters. It is from this viewpoint that we have been anxious you should know the law. Our responsibility before God cannot be evaded on the basis of other's bidding, and a decision formed out of personal considerations alone will fail in righteousness. No legislation should be enacted to fit one individual, and if it grant powers which would be dangerous in the hands of the least desirable ruler it should not be placed on our statute records. "Law is made for the law breaker," we are told, "and not for those who are righteous." Let us assume that centralization of power will be safe in the hands of the present administration. Let us assume that supreme control in its hands is beneficent. Yet we must not be unmindful of the fact that, to all intents and purposes, law is made for all time and should always be made to protect the people from the abuses which might come with the selection of new rulers. We concur in the thought expressed by President E. A. Smith (HERALD, November 5, 1924): "Do not attempt to trim principles to fit personalities you do not approve." Special charters or license for those we approve is equally bad in principle. This is not only law, but common sense. The same thought is expressed in other words by Mosiah (13:17-32), who declares:

Now I say unto you, that because all men are not just, it is not expedient that ye should have a king or kings to rule over you.

Supreme Directional Control in Practice

We will "suppose" a case. It may be bottomed on actual facts, but so far as principles are involved, a suppositious and hypothetical case will probably suffice.

Suppose the Presidency through the President, at a time when our financial trend was downward, in fact when we were actually facing a monthly deficit, would propose the immediate purchase of property within the city of Independence to be used for certain work. Now suppose also the following:

The Presiding Bishop (first) did not believe there was proper authorization for the work itself; (second) there was in fact no appropriation for the same; (third) there was no appropriation for the purchase of the property; (fourth) the price placed on the property, in the opinion of the Presiding Bishopric, was at least forty per cent too much; and (fifth) there were no available funds for any of the above purposes.

With these conditions we wonder under what application of the theory of theocratic-democracy, or that the Presidency has the right to set in order, or that in the administrative line they are supreme, or that they are the interpreters (the reference says "teach") of the revelations—under what specific claims of the proponents of supreme directional control, should the opinion of the Presidency have prevailed in this instance and the purchase of the property have been forced upon the church against the judgment and conscience of the Bishopric?
Can there be any question that supreme directional control would have deprived the Bishopric of their proper right of discretion in this matter? And in what way, pray tell us, would the Presiding Bishopric in refusing to purchase the property mentioned have questioned the established functioning of theocratic-democracy or the President’s right to interpret the revelations or his priesthood prerogatives in any way? We await their answer. May we have it in concise illustration and application of the practical workings of supreme directional control. Let us get away from so much nebulous theory.

Now we recognize in the Presidency the chief quorum in supervision of the work of the church, but we can never admit the right of that quorum to invade other quorums and dictate their work when such quorums are in order. When it is necessary to organize, or when in “disorder,” the Presidency in council with such quorum or in other councils provided in the law may “set in order.”

I believe there is a way in which the work can be carried on successfully, and that is by harmonious action, or a modification, or refusal to act until we can see “eye to eye.” This rule would develop good will and Christian fellowship. No other will stand the test. The driving through of proposals by bare majorities, trampling over respectable minorities who protest on grounds of illegality or irregularity are wedges of dissension, and if persisted in will in time effect the entire breaking up of our organization. I am strongly of the opinion that our experience of the last few years justifies this warning. I do not believe the common consent rule is obtained when minorities strongly object and protest on those grounds. At least an acquiescence or passivity by those not expressing their approval is essential to the common consent rule, in my opinion, and any other practice is but forcing issues upon the people that in time makes serious division.

It is well to remember that the injunction of the Lord is (1) that “all things must be done in order” and (2) by common consent in the church.” That which tends to produce disorder vitiates the primary and essential part of the command.

Take the present issue: there is no question but what a yea and nay vote by General Conference on the supreme directional control resolution will cause lasting dissension. It would have been better in my humble judgment for the April advisory council to have attended to the purposes of its calling, and it will be wisdom, in my opinion, if the whole question should now be withdrawn from consideration.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Dependable Church Attendants Are Life of Church

PERSIA, IOWA, January 14.—We have had some winter weather since our last report, and church going has been slick. However, we met every Sunday and had at least Sunday school. There is a class of Saints that can always be found at church when there are services.

There are some of this class living at Persia, so services can usually be held. If it were not for them the branch would die. They go if it storms, if the weather is fair, if they are able to get there. They have sufficient spirituality and never seem to be too tired for church work. They are willing to sacrifice if necessary.

An old man who had been a member in the old church said it is necessary for us to have enough spiritual strength for ourselves and some to spare for others. It is certainly true.

How the Work Has Grown at Andover

ANDOVER, MISSOURI, January 17.—Many years ago the following lines were sung in our little schoolhouse when Brother and Sister A. M. Chase used to come from Lamoni to establish the Sunday school work here:

Say, is your lamp burning, my brother?
I pray you look quickly and see,
For if it were burning, then surely
Some beams would fall brightly on me.

I have thought of them many times as a type of the many bright beams that have fallen on us from Lamoni, when the brethren and sisters have come to us with words of cheer, songs, and the words of life and salvation to preach to all who would come to hear.

Brother Moroni Traxler had charge of the work in 1909 and seemed to vision some of the future, for one night when he came to preach he said, “Andover will have a church.” A meeting was called and a committee appointed to get means, and before winter he, with help, made the cement blocks to build the church and also laid the foundation. The church was built in 1910, and when it was ready for use a happy band from Lamoni came to help in the opening service. In 1911 the officers saw fit to organize a branch among the Saints here, and some time later, when the church was out of debt, it was dedicated to the service of God. This was another enjoyable time to have the Lamoni Saints with us.

Ever since 1910 we have had regular services in the church. Sunday school is held at ten o’clock, and the first Sunday of the month sacramental service is held at eleven o’clock. The rest of the time preaching service is held at eleven. Just now we have Religio at seven o’clock in the evening and preaching at eight. Prayer meeting is held on Wednesday night.

If the names of the brethren who have come here to preach were listed, the line would be long indeed; and while I write I bow my head in reverence to the memory of the brothers and sisters who have come here to help in God's work and have since passed to the other side.

On December 21 was the regular business meeting, at which time officers were elected for another year. There are eighty-one people on the branch roll, but the members are scattered and are of different nationalities. Some never come to church, yet there is always a noble band who seek to make themselves approved of God, and we are hopeful that in the future we may be able to live so that out of our life work there may shine the character of Him who brought to us the perfect law of liberty, so that people who are watching us may see and understand and come with us into the paths of safety.

Kansas City Stake Items

The holiday period just passed was ushered in with genuine winter weather, plenty of snow for coasting, and ice thick enough for skating, which made it easier for meetings, and announcements were made for meetings at four o'clock, February 4, conference Sunday.

Central Church

The regular monthly men's and women's meeting was held as usual. The men spent the time in prayer and testimony, many very uplifting talks being made. The testimonies were preceded by some earnest invocations, making altogether a profitable session for the first of the year. The women were favored by an address by Sister Ruth L. Smith, setting forth the needs of the Independence Sanitarium and considering the tentative offer of the women of the stake to maintain a free bed there. Some discussion was had with reference to a maternity ward, which was a possibility if means could be secured. A representative attendance was had in both gatherings, and announcements were made for meetings at four o'clock, February 4, conference Sunday.

Quindaro

Brother William I. Fligg, stake missionary, has held forth in a special effort commencing Sunday, January 11, and will continue till February 1. He is very much encouraged, as a good attendance has waited on him each night, with the prospects for an ingathering.

Argentine

Patriarch Ammon White just closed a week's effort at which there was a fairly representative attendance, our own people being the ones principally appealed to. This brother has the faculty of endearing himself to the Saints and is hailed with a hearty welcome when coming on an errand of this kind; and as the people are built up and encouraged by his ministry, they reluctantly release him for his other appointments. He goes to Armourdale to-morrow night for a week's series, then to Second Church for another week.

Fourth Church

The Servo Club had for its guest and speaker December 11 Brother Henry Smith, church architect. He spoke on the subject of architecture and illustrated his lecture with slides, Brother W. O. Hands assisting. On the 10th Brothers Gray and Holsworth visited the prayer meeting, the latter relating some of his spiritual experiences to the encouragement of those present.

The bazaar, after weeks of preparation which required much sacrifice, was successful beyond their expectations, as the proceeds amounted to $180. Items mentioned for sale were: dinners, wicker work, books, fancywork, boys' grab bag, Oriole Girls' grab bag, cocoa, and merchandise.

Brother Fligg was the speaker at eleven o'clock December 21, and a Christmas program was given in the evening, a large congregation enjoying the beautiful pageant.

On December 28 Brother Gray of Independence was the morning speaker, and Brother John Dowker occupied in the evening January 4, associated with an orchestra from the center place, all of which was very much enjoyed.

Second Kansas City

The Saints here have been greatly blessed of late months, among which was the healing of Sister Elizabeth Evans who had been so sick that physicians gave the family no hope. In answer to prayer she is able to meet with us again, for which we are thankful.

Brother Francis A. Evans, our pastor, has baptized eleven, nine of whom attend here. We rejoice over the addition to our number of Brother and Sister Eugene Zink and their daughter Naomi. They had formerly been members of the Methodist Church, but are now actively engaged in telling others of this wonderful gospel.

Sister Alice Martin and family have returned after an ab­sence of twelve years, and are helping in the church work.
Her oldest son, Homer, was baptized a short time ago.

Brother P. J. Raw, as superintendent of the Sunday school, has been working hard to build up this department. A splendid Christmas program was given, besides many other things to encourage and interest the members, many of whom are not members of the church.

For three months Brother Fred Cleveland has preached every Sunday evening with good interest and attendance.
His sermons have been on the life of Christ, church history, archaeology, and the Book of Mormon, and have been illustrated by slides.

The time for some of the meetings has been changed for the winter. Our prayer meeting, which was held in the eve­ ing, will follow Sunday school, and there will be no morning sermon. The Religio, which formerly met Friday evening, will meet Sunday evening at half past six, the hour formerly occupied by the prayer meeting. Sister Elizabeth Raw, one of our young sisters who has always been active in the church, is now in charge of the Religio and is doing well.
She is trying to arouse an interest among both old and young in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants.

Sister May Graham is in charge of the choir work, and Sister Velma Dunan, as head of the Temple Builders, hopes to do some real work this year and get much more interested in the work. Sister P. J. Raw, as head of the Department of Women and Bishop's agent, has accomplished much and has many plans by which she hopes to raise funds for the church and draw the members closer together. Under her direction the study of the church books has again been taken up, and a class meets every Thursday at the home of Sister Zink to study the Doctrine and Covenants. All the regular meetings are well attended, and peace and harmony prevail.

Brother and Sister H. A. Higgins of Saint Louis visited friends and relatives here last week. Sister Higgins was for several years our Sunday school superintendent.

Bennington Heights

Since our last report several families have moved into our locality. The Sunday school has reached an enrollment of one hundred and twenty, with an average attendance of one hundred.

The spiritual condition of the congregation is noticeably better.

The Department of Women and the Dramatic Art Class raised $175.55 and $85 respectively, to be applied on the building fund.

Pastor H. W. Goold met with a severe and painful accident recently while operating a power saw, severing the thumb of his right hand at the first joint. He is improving, however, and will be at work before long.

Grandview

At the last quarterly conference it was suggested by the stake presidency that the young people of Kansas City Stake meet together once a month. This had its first tryout on Sunday, January 4, at Grandview. There was a prayer service at half past six, a song service at half past seven, and at eight o’clock President Elbert A. Smith delivered a splendid sermon to a full house. We believe these meetings will be a success, and ask the cooperation of all the young people.

The Grandview Saints gave a farewell social to Brother and Sister R. E. Browne Tuesday evening, December 30, at the church. A musical program was the principal event of the evening. After the program all were invited to the lower auditorium where light refreshments were served. Brother Browne is to have charge of the work at Argentine the coming year, and we wish for him all the success possible.

First Chicago Branch

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, January 18.—The patience of the Saints for the last month has surely been tried to the utmost. We little realized what a cozy, comfortable church we had until we were deprived of our steam boiler. It, like a good many Saints, “became weary of well-doing,” and cracked. The Saints responded to a call from our presiding elder, F. E. Bone, and soon demonstrated their willingness to remove what stood between them and the worship of God by obtaining a new boiler. With the arrival of the new boiler, committees were immediately formed by our new president, A. C. Edstrom, and the church was cleaned from top to bottom, which with the new decorating indeed looks pleasing and wholesome. Many of our members traveling a good many miles by street car were disappointed at finding it impossible to hold services, but they were agreeably surprised that sacrament was served the following Sunday.

Brother A. C. Edstrom preached the first sermon in the new year in the evening.

Sunday, January 18, was announced as Loyalty Sunday, and members and friends responded by filling the church, bringing their basket lunches with them in order to make it a day of continued service, and taking advantage of the long-sought opportunity to really get acquainted with Patriarch Richland Baldwin and his wife, who are members and friends assigned to Chicago as their field of labor.

The day opened with Sunday school at ten o’clock in charge of Brother Hadley, superintendent, Sister Baldwin giving a pleasing and interesting chalk talk for the children, which was enjoyed by all present. At fifteen minutes after eleven Brother Baldwin delivered a forceful sermon that was inspiring to stranger and member alike. His subject was loyalty. As a background for his discourse Brother Baldwin pictured to us a practical demonstration in the lives of such heroes of Great Britain and America as Lord Nelson and Abraham Lincoln. With this splendid setting of loyalty he again held up before us a still greater example in the lives of Jesus, Abraham, Moses, Joshua, and Daniel, stirring every heart present to a determination to honor the confidence Christ has in us and showing loyalty to the responsibilities placed upon us.

Following the preaching service luncheon was served, it being necessary to set three large tables to accommodate those bringing their lunches. At two o’clock round table talks on tithing were conducted by Bishop’s Agent Louis Gautchier, and a talk by Brother Baldwin on the work of a patriarch was much enjoyed. It was with reluctance that those in charge drew the meeting to a close, because of the intense interest manifested in the discussions, but no doubt they felt that it would be far better to go away from the table hungry than for them to be overfed.

At half past four we were pleasantly surprised with a program arranged by our musical director, Sister Ruby Newman, consisting of solos, violin selections, piano duet, mixed and male sextets, which were greatly appreciated.

After lunch at a quarter after five, Religio convened at six in charge of Brother Sidney Barrows, and we were permitted to listen to Mr. C. Houzak, characterologist, deliver an interesting, entertaining, and instructive lecture on character reading, Brother Henry Van Nieuwenhuyze humorously lending his assistance as a subject.

In the last service of the day we had preaching by District President J. L. Cooper, of DeKalb, Illinois. This was preceded by a baptism in charge of Brother P. E. Bone, when Maxine, the oldest daughter of Brother and Sister Van Nieuwenhuyze, was baptized. After listening to a splendid sermon, again on loyalty, chosen from Isaiah 59, with text from John 12: 5-9, which dovetailed nicely with the morning service, we were loath to have our “Beloved John” give way to wisdom and close his discourse.

Thus ended a perfect day, with a fitting climax in the ordinance of the laying on of hands, inviting the Holy Ghost to come and abide in the life of our little sister Maxine as an abiding comforter.

Our choir as usual lived up to its standard of excellence and loyalty. Our young brother, Everett Pettersson, who has undertaken the task of engineering and caring for the new steam plant, is to be commended for the comfort of the Saints, as well as others who assisted in this capacity during the day.

Many visitors and visiting Saints have had difficulty in locating the Saints in Chicago, so to those who may be interested in meeting this branch we invite you to take down this address and visit the First Chicago Branch: 4416 Gladys Avenue.

Salt Lake City, Utah

January 18.—On December 26 we had the children’s Christmas tree and entertainment. The program was ably rendered by the children and their friends, and it was duly enjoyed.

Ardella Jenson and Ruth Mudd, children of members, were baptized in the Christian Church, loaned to us for the purpose.

Sister Eggun and her two sons have left Salt Lake City to join her husband, who is in a mission in Holland. They have been very fine members in the branch here.

Brother E. L. Edwards, Pomeroy, Iowa, writes that his district has a tent for missionary or reunion work, size 40x60, too large for their demands, which they wish to exchange for smaller size. You may secure the particulars by addressing Brother Edwards as above.
Holden Stake

Knobnoster

The annual election of officers occurred December 4, and resulted in choosing F. L. Goode, pastor; Earle L. Ross, superintendent of Sunday school and Religio; Mabel Mortimore, superintendent of the Department of Women, and Emma Ross, musical director.

A spiritual sacrament and prayer service was held January 4. The voice of inspiration was heard in giving counsel, instruction, and encouragement. Our pastor has been confined to his home because of sickness the past week, but is slightly improved.

Our young people under the auspices of the Religio gave a fine presentation of “The pleasures of the world.” Much credit for the success of the play is due to the efforts of Sister R. B. Henderson, who served as director.

Lees Summit

We had a feast of spiritual meetings at Lees Summit from January 4 to 11. Brother Roderick May, our pastor, brought as speakers J. Charles May, a former missionary to the South Sea Islands, and W. D. Tordoff, a former missionary to the Isle of Pines and British West Indies. The attendance was very good, from seventy to eighty present every night, and many outsiders. Brothers May and Tordoff brought their guitars and gave us special music and singing. It surely was an awakening time and feast of spiritual good for the young people. Many comments were heard by those not of our faith.

Sisters of Lees Summit were blessed and favored by having heard and associated with our two young missionaries.

Grandview

December 7 the Saints enjoyed a splendid sacramental service. A beautiful uplifting spirit was present. At three o’clock in the afternoon the Saints met for the purpose of electing the heads of the different departments. C. V. Hopkins was recalled pastor; Charles Martin, superintendent of the Sunday school; W. T. Chipley, superintendent of Recreation and Expression; Sister Chipley, superintendent of Department of Women; and Sister Danforth, superintendent of music.

On the following Tuesday evening the remaining officers and various committees were elected.

Tuesday evening, December 23, we held our annual Christmas program. A large audience was present in spite of the heavy snowstorm. A treat was provided for the children, both young and old.

On the morning of January 4 we again enjoyed a splendid communion service, with the local priesthood in charge. In the afternoon a meeting of the officers and teachers of the Sunday school was held, in charge of Brother Charles Martin, our superintendent, which proved to be a very interesting meeting. For an hour and a half we discussed the best methods of teaching and the problems pertaining to the Sunday school work.

January 11 Brother C. J. Hunt was with us and gave us two splendid talks reminiscent of his travels during the past summer. He expressed himself as being well pleased with the marked increase in attendance at our services.

Tuesday evening, January 13, a social was held in the church basement; games were played, refreshments served, and an offering was taken for the purpose of buying shrubs and flowers to beautify our church lawn.

Sedalia

Elder R. D. Weaver will begin a series of meetings at Sedalia Sunday, the 25th. The Saints there are happy to have a new church home. Anyone having friends in Sedalia to whom they would like extended a special invitation to these meetings, will please write the pastor, Doctor G. W. Rodger, Sedalia, Missouri, Fourth and Ohio Streets.

Holden

“The Christmas quest” was given on Christmas Eve by the Priscilla Club in collaboration with the Sunday school. A large, appreciative audience was present. Those participating acted well their parts. A treat was provided for all, with the usual tree and Santa Claus. It was a happy Christmas Eve.

Our meetings conducted by Apostle E. J. Gleazer closed Sunday night, the 18th. Brother Gleazer was with us one week. We had anticipated a two-week series, but on account of other demands upon his time he was under the necessity of limiting his stay to one week. His theme was that of “Adjustment,” and his sermons were uplifting and constructive. He preached the latter-day gospel and pictured its ideals before the interested audiences which greeted him nightly. Even those without were impressed with the message, one of them stating, “Those last three sermons were the best I ever heard in Holden.” Brother Gleazer addressed the high school students and faculty Monday morning and the seventh and eighth grades Tuesday morning. Also spoke to the Saints at the Home Sunday afternoon. His sermons made Zion seem nearer and created a greater desire in the hearts of the Saints to heed the invitation, “Zion the beautiful beckons us on.”

Nauvoo, Illinois

January 23.—Nauvoo has been experiencing real winter weather. The thermometer has kept close to the zero mark ever since Christmas, and the ground has been covered with snow. The mud roads happened to be smooth when they froze, so have been like real boulevards. A plentiful harvest of ice has been taken from the river, the youngsters have had a good time skating, and much toll bridge fare has been saved by crossing the river on the ice.

A farewell party was held at the home of Brother and Sister Henderson in honor of Sister Emma Burton and her two daughters, Addie Matthews and Dora Howland, who left for Independence, where Sister Howland has built a comfortable home in the vicinity of the Stone Church. All felt sad at parting with these three sisters, who have been such a help to the branch here.

Sister Burton was always the first to lead out in prayer meeting, and her testimonies were an inspiration to all. Sister Matthews was a very successful teacher of the young people’s class in Sunday school. We are hoping they will get homesick for Nauvoo and return.

An oyster supper was given at the home of Brother and Sister L. H. Lewis by the branch and was well patronized by the people of the town. The proceeds go toward equipment for the basement of the church.

Elder G. S. Daniel and wife, of Burlington, visited Nauvoo one Sunday morning, and Brother Daniel occupied at the morning hour. He came to attend the reunion committee meeting, which was held at the Mansion House. Committees were appointed and arrangements made for the coming reunion.

Topical prayer meetings have been the order for the past three Wednesdays. First, the Presidency was made the topic and special prayers offered for them. Last Wednesday the Twelve, next Wednesday the Bishopric will be remembered. In addition to this Brother Verve asked that our prayers be continued during the week in their behalf.

Independence
Stone Church

It was learned at a meeting of the supervisors and pastors of Zion that the young people were not attending the group prayer meetings to the extent desired by the spiritual authorities of Zion, so it was decided by the Presidency to call a meeting of the young people of Zion to consider the matter. The meeting was announced for Tuesday evening, January 20, at the Stone Church.

The response by the young people to the call was in such large numbers that the lower auditorium was taxed to its capacity. The meeting was addressed by President Elbert A. Smith, who stated the object of the gathering, and by Apostle J. F. Curtis, President Floyd M. McDowell, Elder D. O. Cato, Apostle John W. Rushton, and Pastor C. Ed Miller. The song service was in charge of Harold C. Burgess.

A splendid spirit of enthusiasm and spiritual power was present, and at its height President Elbert Smith asked all the young people to stand who would pledge themselves to attend the Wednesday evening young people’s prayer services. The response was encouraging, nearly all the young people standing up who were not attending group meetings. The first meeting was announced for the following evening.

Wednesday evening a still larger gathering assembled in the upper auditorium. A beautiful spirit was present, and just before the service closed it rested upon President Elbert Smith, who spoke to the young people inspired words of encouragement and counsel. It has been planned to have Brother Smith give short addresses on early church ideals and history at the close of these services.

The attendance of the First Independence Sunday School has been increasing steadily since the first of the year, 1,299 being present January 25. At the suggestion of Brother H. C. Burgess, the new musical director, a program sheet containing the songs to be used in the main auditorium of the school has been distributed each Sunday during the month. A reception committee has been organized, and a representative stands at each of the four doors from nine o’clock till ten minutes after the school begins, to greet the members as they come and give them a program sheet. In addition to the songs this sheet contains words of greeting and announcements.

Some of the records made by the departments recently, as taken from these program sheets, are as follows: On January 11, seven perfect classes. Perfect departments (each officer and teacher present and on time), January 11, junior department; January 18, junior and senior departments; January 25, junior department. Each pupil in the junior department was on time. Sunday school offering, $37.50.

The goal for the Sunday school this year has been set as, “More fellowship, more Bible, more prayer.”

The junior department, which meets at the Institute Building, has its own sacramental service following the lesson period on the first Sunday morning of each month. These have been increasing in interest and spirituality, and at the January meeting the participation by the junior pupils is indicated by the report, which reads: “Five prayers; twenty-five testimonies.” The parents are invited to attend this service with their boys and girls. They are also glad to have visitors come to see the fine work that is being done in this department.

The Saints of the Stone Church congregation had the privilege of hearing Apostle John W. Rushton speak last Sunday morning. All enjoyed the characteristically fine sermon. Patriarch U. W. Greene was to have preached in the evening, but he was ill and unable to speak, so Bishop B. J. Scott preached in his place. The sermon was good and well received.

The conference in Zion will meet Monday night, February 2, to consider further necessary business. A representative attendance is desired.

President F. M. Smith returned to Independence Saturday and made a short trip to Omaha over Sunday. He was expected home January 27.

President F. M. McDowell was able to return to his home in Lamoni the latter part of last week, after having been in the Sanitarium some weeks.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson has improved considerably. He is now up and around the house most of the time, but has not yet been able to go outside the house.

Apostle J. F. Garver has so far improved that he expects to be able to return to Lamoni Friday of this week.

Brother R. C. Russell, who has been in Independence for some time, has been taken to the Sanitarium. He is suffering from nervous exhaustion, but his condition is not at present considered to be serious.

Second Church

Young people to the number of seventy-five met in the early morning prayer service, some uttering thoughtful testimonies as to their lives in the church.

Elder Richard S. Salyards was the speaker at eleven o’clock, and he brought to the Saints a fine spiritual experience in addition to his sermon. Brother F. W. Chappelow addressed the juniors at their eleven o’clock service with great profit to these young minds.

Sunday afternoon the Saints participated in the finest social service of many months, and the priesthood met and enjoyed an hour and a half of communion.

Elder William H. Kelley delivered a characteristic sermon in the evening on the nature of man, and the large congregation was much interested and pleased.

Liberty Street

Elder J. A. Dowker, on last Sunday morning, gave the first of a series of Sunday morning sermons. It was much enjoyed by a fair-sized audience.

In the evening Patriarch F. A. Smith continued his series of sermons. It has not been determined how long the series will last, but any who attend will be well repaid for their effort. His subject this time was the Restoration.

The Thursday evening choir practice has been changed to Sunday afternoon at four o’clock, following the afternoon prayer service. The Saints of this congregation now have a full day with young people’s prayer service at eight o’clock, Sunday school at half past nine, preaching at eleven, prayer service at half past two, choir practice at four o’clock, Religious at six, and preaching again at half past seven.

East Independence

The choir members met at the home of Sister Stockwood last Thursday evening and will meet there again next Thursday to organize.

Sunday morning Brother A. H. Parsons was the speaker, and Brother Albert Thatcher, Jr., occupied the evening.

Sunday afternoon the larger part of the congregation called on Brother and Sister Parsons at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Lind Stockwood, in honor of their golden wedding anniversary which occurred January 26. The afternoon was spent in visiting and singing songs appropriate to the occasion, among them being “Silver threads among the gold,” and “When you and I were young, Maggie.” Brother and Sister Parsons were married in Iowa, and he has spent forty-seven years as a resident of Stone Church.
years in the ministry. His cousin and wife, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Parsons, from Topeka, Kansas, were present. A pleasant time was had, and the Saints departed wishing Brother and Sister Parsons many more years of happiness.

_Enoch Hill_

The speakers for January 18 were Elder F. J. Lewis in the morning and Elder R. S. Salyards in the evening. The morning service on January 20 took the form of a young people's rally. There was a splendid attendance. Several talks were made by certain members of the priesthood, and it was decided to hold a meeting Tuesday, January 27, to take up the question of holding Wednesday night prayer meetings for the young people of the district.

The speaker at seven o'clock in the evening was Apostle J. F. Curtis, and he was welcomed by Elder W. J. Brewer, pastor at Enoch Hill, was enjoyed.

_Spring Branch_

The Sunday school here has a novel way of spending the time after the study of the lesson, as each Sunday some topic of interest is discussed by the body. These discussions have proved to be very profitable.

In order to arouse interest in raising Christmas offering, a banner has been provided, to be awarded at the end of the month to the class collecting the most offering during the month. The class will be allowed to keep the banner until some other class succeeds in a larger amount in a month. There is also a contest on for attendance that is creating an interest along that line.

The speaker Sunday morning was Patriarch F. A. Smith. He had arrived at the church in time to hear part of the Sunday school discussion, and in his sermon enlarged on the same subject.

In the evening the church was full, and an excellent sermon by Elder W. J. Brewer, pastor at Enoch Hill, was enjoyed.

_Englewood_

The class organized by the women for the study of the Doctrine and Covenants seems to have filled a need, for the attendance has been good, and all are interested. The sisters meet Tuesday afternoon for this class work.

Our Sunday speakers were Brother William Clow in the morning and Brother H. G. Lytle in the evening. Both sermons were pleasing.

The Saints of the Warren, Ohio, Branch held a two-day meeting January 3 and 4, at which time their church was dedicated. The speakers Saturday evening were Evangelist Richard Baldwin, Elders W. C. Neville of Canton, William Patterson of Australia, James McConnaughy of Barberton, and David H. Jones of Sharon, Pennsylvania.Sacramental service and Sunday school were held Sunday morning. The dedicatory sermon at half past two was by Brother Baldwin. At this time the deed of the church was turned over to the Bishop's agent. Preaching Sunday evening was by William Patterson. The meetings were enjoyed by all in attendance.

At the annual business meeting of the branch at Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin, December 21, Elder Arthur Davenport was declared president of the branch; Wesley Davenport, Sunday school superintendent; Charles Maybey, president of the Department of Recreation and Expression. At the business meeting of January 7 Sister Anna Davenport was chosen to have charge of the Department of Women for the coming year, while Nora Peterson was made leader of the Orioles. No report was made of work accomplished during the year.

Radio Flashes

Kansas City, Missouri.—We have been listening to your station since the time of old W E and thought it time to begin telling some of our stand-bys as well as the new stations.—Number 28 Kansas City Fire Department. (Signed) Arlo Martin.

Lamoni, Iowa.—We enjoyed the “Messiah” immensely. The soloists came in beautifully, with wonderful clearness. The piano was in a position where it came in too loud for soloists. The choruses were not clear—seemed to be an echo spoiling the effect.—Mrs. W. H. Blair.

Little Current, Ontario, Canada.—If your new 1000-watt station gets over in proportion to your 250-watts and 268 meters you will be a winner. Got your “Messiah” beautifully and wish to congratulate and thank all concerned. I remember Robert Miller, organist, and Mrs. and Miss Smith, soprano and contralto, particularly. This sort of broadcasting makes radio worth while.—John Young.

Portland, Oregon.—I received your program very clearly last Thursday, January 1. Your programs are very much appreciated. It is not very often that your station is heard out here on the coast, but think it an honor to hear your station so clearly. I receive Pittsburgh and Hastings very clearly also.—Robert Blodgett.

Kansas City, Missouri.—Allow me to express my appreciation of this evening’s program. I tuned in in time to hear the Irish songs which were sung by James Houghton, and the reading by Joseph Anway, to which I listened very attentively. The selection itself was wonderful and the delivery by far the best I’ve listened to. If you mention this word of appreciation to them, they will probably remember me best as Rosella Wightman of Lamoni. Not only the program this evening, but many others during the past year have been enjoyed by my husband and myself.—Mrs. David E. Frye.

Independence, Missouri.—We have enjoyed many programs from your station, but the “Messiah” given Sunday evening was most wonderful and came in clear and distinct.—Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Bridges.

General Conference Railroad Rates

We wish to announce for the benefit of those who are planning on attending the General Conference that arrangements have been made whereby the usual fare reduction of one and one half fare for the round trip will apply. This will be granted on the certificate plan and will be contingent on a minimum number of 250 certificates showing the purchase of one-way tickets from points from which the local one-way fare to Kansas City or Independence is sixty-seven cents or more. Notice giving full information touching this matter will be published at a later date.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Saints Attending General Conference

To Saints of Canada and Michigan: The Grand Trunk Railroad has promised special accommodation to conference delegates, leaving on Train Number 7 on Saturday morning, April 4. A special car will be added to the train at Port Huron for twenty-five passengers. Those coming from Toronto, Buffalo, London, Chatham, Port Huron, Flint, Lansing, and points west can join the party on the way. Arrangements will be announced later regarding special plans from Chicago to Independence over the Chicago & Alton. If you are interested, please correspond with the undersigned at 306 Eighth Avenue, West, Flint, Michigan, as we must guarantee the twenty-five for the trip. This will put us in independence on Sunday morning in time for the services.

Common Consent If—

A great deal has been written and said about common consent, democracy, that we should trust the people, appeal to the conference and let it settle the matter once for all, and so on. But now we hear another sort of suggestion, quite different. It is common consent if—. It means simply this, "Common consent is fundamental and safe and righteous if it agrees with me; but if it is against me it is apostasy." There is an element of danger here that the Saints may as well recognize before the propaganda goes further.

The signers of the Open Letter said:

General Conference, the enactments of which combine both the inspiration of God and the will of the people, is the highest authority in the church. . . . We believe that the coming General Conference, in full possession of the facts, should speak and settle this controversy in a definite, constructive manner. Only in such conference settlement can our people be reunited, confidence be reestablished, and the cause of the Master advanced. . . . We declare for government in the church by lawful and orderly processes and hold that General Conference enactments are binding without exception upon members, officials, and quorums.—SAINTS' HERALD, June 4, 1924.

Now comes the second signer of this document, and one of the most prominent signers, Brother T.W. Williams, and announces in the most public manner possible, in the HERALD for January 28, that if the majority at the coming conference shall be adverse to his judgment and in support of the joint council action he will scorn the decision. And he in advance puts the bitter, burning brand of "apostate" on those who shall dare to stand with that majority.

This proclamation would seem to put the other signers of the Open Letter in an embarrassing position. It is fair to presume that they meant and still mean what they said in the Open Letter; but if any of them now feel as Brother Williams does, we are entitled to know it before we go into the conference. Very respectfully, but very earnestly, I protest against such prejudgment and repudiation of the decision of the coming conference. And even more earnestly I protest against the tendency such a declaration has to split the church and lead to factional division—to minority rule, or to a chaotic procedure of every man a law unto himself. Well did Henry Ford say, "There is a tendency to mistake disorganization for democracy."

The declaration to which I referred in the beginning of this editorial is as follows:

I am reluctant to believe that a majority of the officials and members of this church will indorse this strange document on church government now championed by a majority of the Advisory Council and which harks back some four thousand years for precedent and would substitute monarchy for democracy, make assent take the place of consent, and thus divert the church from its original and divinely ordained purpose. This would be tantamount to apostasy and must result in the rejection of the church.

Should such a catalyst happen to the church, but the course remains open to all true Latter Day Saints. We must carry on in God's own way and with a firm and steadfast faith that God, who restored the gospel in the beginning with all of its attendant powers and blessings and who sustained the remnant during the dark and cloudy day following the apostasy of 1844, will still maintain his own cause and continue to bless the labors of those who remain true to the faith once delivered to the saints.—SAINTS' HERALD, January 28, 1925.

All that about the position of the Advisory Council harking back four thousand years, substituting monarchy for democracy, assent for consent, etc., represents Brother Williams's expressed and no doubt sincere judgment as it is to-day. It remains to be seen what the judgment of the whole church will be in the matter. But he has served notice on us that in this instance at least common consent means "assent" to his opinion. It means that common consent is authoritative and righteous if it supports his position—if not, it is apostasy.

Brother Williams was one of seven men who signed the "Protest against supreme directional control," SAINTS' HERALD, August 20, 1924. That article closed with these words: "Let the church decide."

In the HERALD for July 9 he said:

The accumulated intellect of the masses is greater than the heaviest brain that God ever gave to a single individual. . . . The combined wisdom of the entire group is greater than that possessed by any member of the group. . . . There is nothing lost when even a great man condescends to pool his wisdom with the mass.
Brother Williams should pool his wisdom with that of the conference and let the conference decide what is and is not apostasy. If the decision shall be adverse to him, he may take comfort in his own assurance that the accumulated intellect of the group is greater than his.

The appeal was taken to the people. The discussion was taken into the HERALD. The HERALD has carried the argument far and near into the homes of the Saints. They have read it and know what it is. Furthermore, the Publicity Department has sent voluminous literature on Brother Williams's side of the question into the hands of other thousands. For those not yet informed and some time ago settled in mind, there will probably be a restatement at the conference. He has told us again and again that we need not fear the judgment of the people. He can never, never, never repudiate their decision as expressed at the coming conference, and retain their confidence.

Indeed, judged by his own signed statement in the Open Letter, that conference “combines the inspiration of God with the will of the people, and is the highest authority in the church,” and its enactments “without exception” binding upon all, if he shall find himself in the minority it will be good evidence that he is wrong. And he had best admit it manfully.

Pardon my plainness of speech. It is plain but not disrespectful. It contains no ill will. For a long time I sought to find and suggest common ground. But now Brother Williams says, “Compromise should not, under any circumstances, be considered.” The church must vote on this matter as he says, or be declared in a condition of apostasy, on the road to rejection, the victim of catalysis, i.e., death, dissolution.

Joseph gave a timely warning against this very attitude:

The constant dread which seems to possess the minds of some of the teachers and writers in the Reorganized Church that there is, or is to be, an assumption of one-man power, seems to darken the horizon of their vision and cause them to see things in the light of such contingency; and this, too, where there is no justifiable reason for such apprehension. . . . Our warning is this: Be careful that in our speaking and in our writing we do not assume the position approaching the exercise of the one-man power against which we are so strongly opposed as individuals; for the exercise of this assumption in one individual is just as reprehensible as on the part of any other, no matter who the other may be.—SAINTS’ HERALD, February 3, 1909.

I thank God, brethren, that this propaganda which has been working privately is now in the open, so that you may see it and judge of it and its probable consequences. I do not fear your judgment.

Brother Williams, when repudiating the decision of the coming General Conference in the event that it does not support his position, does not say that he will then help lead away the minority if they will follow; so remember, I do not charge him with that intention at any point in that which I now say. But the effect of his words tends to incite others to do that thing even if he does not (and certainly he himself could hardly remain with a body of believers whom he had prejudged and advertised as being in apostasy or an equivalent state).

A young brother came to me and said, “It is rumored that in case the Presidency is not sustained they will rise up and say, ‘All who agree with us come and follow us!’”

I replied, “The Presidency will do no such thing. Neither the Presidency nor any member of it if not supported by the majority will divide the church and lead away a faction. Conceivably they might relinquish their present official position or be relieved of it; but they will not lead away a minority.” I had that pledge from President F. M. Smith during the conference of 1922, and he has renewed it since I began this editorial. In it I join. I can think of myself as leaving the Presidency and working in some humbler capacity; never as leaving the church, or dividing the church.

Moreover, if the conference shall decide against the administration and settle upon some other policy, I will not put a stone in the path of those who may be instanced to execute the will of the conference. For this deadlock must not continue. When conference has spoken, its will must be carried out by executives unhampered by interference, free to go forward next year on the path indicated by the decision.

Another came to me and said, “It is rumored that if the position of the Presidency is sustained, the minority will draw away and form a new faction, under the plea that the church has gone into apostasy.”

I replied, “Such a thing is incredible, as the signers of the Open Letter were first to appeal to the General Conference and pledge themselves to its decision.” Will I be forced to revise that answer? I trust not.

I am pleased to add that since the above lines were written the Presiding Bishopric, individually and collectively, have assured us that so far as they are concerned my answer to the above rumor was correct.

It is well to remember, too, since compromise has been repudiated and since the discussion touches on majorities and minorities, that the late President Joseph Smith ruled that a majority vote is an expression of common consent. He said: “Such consent, though the majority may be of but one in the assembly, would carry the common consent of the whole.”—SAINTS’ HERALD, December 25, 1895.
And to the argument that a majority should not impose its will upon a minority but wait until all see alike, which argument you will note reappears in last week’s HERALD, he replied:

Were such a rule to prevail, it would lie within the power of a factious minority to defeat any measure that the emergency might require, or the better sense of the well-meaning and trustworthy might suggest, and discussion with its real or supposed harmfulness be made interminable.—SAINTS’ HERALD, December 25, 1895.

It is said that if the trumpet give forth an uncertain sound, no man will know how to prepare for battle. There will be no uncertain sound in my appeal to you, brethren. No matter how kind your hearts may be toward individuals, I adjure you to set your faces like flint against any man or men who now or at the coming conference or at any time shall promote schism or seek to lead away a minority.

If the church should make an error in the decision, it will be corrected later by experience and inspiration. But its decision will be authoritative, and the presumption will lie that it is right—and more especially will that presumption lie with those who have affirmed that the conference combines the inspiration of God with the will of the people and constitutes the highest authority in the church, its enactments without exception binding on all.

Both common sense and the promptings of the Spirit powerfully move me to warn you and plead with you to maintain the organic solidarity of the church and to resist with your might any attempt to lead away a faction or promote the specious and unfounded propaganda that the great body of the church is in apostasy.

The appeal has been made to the conference. Who can reject the court of his own selection? My position is affirmative and constructive. The argument has been put before the people exhaustively. Surely we can trust their good sense. Let us also pray earnestly for divine guidance. I trust God to lead the church. I will therefore abide the decision of the conference, no matter how it may fall, as binding and authoritative and presumably right. I do not ask you to vote with me. I do call upon all men and women on both sides of the controversy to stand there with me when the vote is counted.

So shall we escape schism, disintegration, ruin, and shame. So shall we, as admonished through Joseph, “Be encouraged and press on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, sanctification, and glory.”—Doctrine and Covenants, 129:9.

With confidence in God and the church and the conference, and with great hope for the future, I remain, yours in gospel bonds,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Government of the Church.—No. 2

A Consideration of the Document on Church Government.—No. 1

We affirm and believe that we are in full agreement with our brethren on the following points:

(a) The church is not a human institution. It originates with God.
(b) It is the government of God carried on through human instrumentality.
(c) The provisions for this government are clearly indicated in the law.
(d) Men cannot act for God without a divine call.
(e) This call is not contingent on human caprice or selection.
(f) Priesthood comprehends specific and well-defined functions.
(g) Certain officials have larger powers and responsibilities than others.

But—

This document on church government adopted by the Advisory Council of April, 1924, goes far beyond this and excludes the membership who do not possess priesthood severally and together from the government of the church. The priesthood govern. The lay membership, designated as “the people,” are “the governed.”

Government, as here set forth, exists separate, apart, and independent in its expression, of the people. The government is not “of the people” or “by the people,” but “among the people.” The chief advocates of the document have so affirmed. To argue that the last clause of the document admits the people into legislative functions of government makes the document contradictory and its major premise ridiculous.

People No Part of the Government

The document clearly states:

(a) The government of the church is by divine authority through priesthood.
(b) The divine authority becomes operative through the consent of the governed.
(c) It is divine government among the people.

In the original draft presented by President F. M. Smith, and which it is likely more clearly represents his position, the first paragraph reads: “Its government is by priesthood, which is divine authority.” We have two classes here—the governing and the governed. The priesthood govern, the people are governed.

Please understand that government means more than administration. Crabb thus discriminates between government and administration:

Both these terms may be employed either to designate the act of governing and administering, or the persons governing and administrating. In both cases government has a more extended meaning than administration; the government includes every exercise of authority; the administration implies only that exercise of authority which consists in putting the laws or will of another in force; hence, when we speak of the government, as it respects the persons, it implies the whole body of constituted authorities; and the administration only that part which puts in execution the intention of the whole.

Government comprehends the mode or system according to which the legislative, executive, and judicial powers are vested and exercised. These three divisions exist in every well-organized government and are interdependent. Government "among the people" excludes the people as such from all participations in government.

Under the provisions of this Advisory Council document, the people or lay members have no part in either division of government, for the entire government of the church is "through priesthood" "among the people." True, the last clause of the document "holds General Conference as the instrument of the expression of the will of the people." But this, in no sense, grants to the people any right or part in the government. The will of the people may be one thing and the will of the government something entirely different.

Some have jumped to the conclusion that this last clause makes provision for the people as the legislative arm of government. Not at all, for the first clause limits the functions of government, and the people are not included. And if the people are not a part of the government as stated clearly in clause one, and General Conference is only "the instrument of the expression of the will of the people," then General Conference is not a part of the government of the church. And this is borne out by the statement of President Smith, "General Conference, being legislative, should not presume to issue orders to any man or officer." A body which cannot issue orders to any man or officer certainly is no part of the government.

One writer has gone to great pains to show that the membership of the church hitherto have possessed legislative powers of government. This we cheerfully admit and affirm. And it is for this especial reason that we are now objecting to this new idea, which excludes them from the government. We cannot understand why the necessity of change. It is impossible to adjust the statement of the document with the past practices of the church.

Slaves Assent to Government

If the membership as such are not the government, nor yet any part of the government, as set forth in paragraph one of this document, and if "General Conference, being legislative, should not presume to issue orders to any man or officer," the "expression of the will of the people" becomes nothing more than what a body of slaves might exercise in expressing their wishes to the government. Slaves give assent to the government under which they live. If they did not, "effective discipline" would be administered. Freemen always are included in the government.

Let me again emphasize that under the provisions of this new Bill of Rights the people or membership are, in no sense, any part of the government of the church. They possess no legislative, administrative, or judicial governmental functions. The General Conference becomes merely the medium through which they may express their will. The determination as to whether that will is to be executed, or, if acceptable to the government, how or when it will be put into effect, rests solely in the hands of a graduated priesthood converging in one man holding supreme directional control, and which, in fact, constitutes the government of the church. The document in question presents a concrete statement of a monarchical form of government, in which there are no real elements of democracy.

If language means anything, we can form no other conclusion. And, if the people are in any sense a part of the government, or if they possess any governmental legislative powers, then the assertion that "government is through priesthood" "among the people" is contradictory and abortive. In every government of which I have any knowledge, where there is even a semblance of democracy, the people and the legislative branch of government do have the right to issue orders to any man or officer within the government.

People Should Instruct in Administration

In all modern governments the legislative branch may instruct, and, under certain conditions, possesses power to deal with and supervise administration. If his right does not exist, the executive may set at defiance all legislation which is not acceptable and thereby become a law unto itself, and the legislative branch has no redress. At one time Queen Victoria refused to sign an enactment of the House of Commons, remarking, "I want you to understand that I am the Queen." And Gladstone, that peer of men, replied, "And I wish you to understand that I am the People." And she signed.

President F. M. Smith who, by the way, is the author of this document on priesthood, does not admit that the membership are any part of the government proper. He does concede that the General Conference is the legislative forum of the people, but even then the people may be no part of the government. He does deny to the conference, and which, by the way, embraces priesthood and people, any jurisdiction over administration which he confines to priesthood with himself as the sovereign head.

In reply to a letter of inquiry from M. H. Siegfried and published in the SAINTS' HERALD, November 5, 1924, page 1058, President Smith speaks of the “fine balance had when the three divisions into legislative, judicial, and executive are recognized and maintained.” He does not here state that the people or membership are included in the legislative division of government. To do so would conflict with the first clause of the document. He does affirm the directional control of the Presidency “for the purpose of carrying out the policies which have been determined by prophetic instruction with legislative approval and legislative enactments in harmony with constitutional law and divine command.”

Who Decided on the Constitutionality of Law?

There is nothing in the foregoing which includes the people in government, but admitting, for the moment, that the people do possess legislative powers of government, who then is to determine whether General Conference actions are based on constitutional law? We have no supreme court to pass on legislation. Under the administration and rulings of President Smith, neither the Twelve nor Seventy possess this power; and if the conference, which embraces all of the priesthood as well as representatives of organized districts throughout the world, does not possess the right and power to determine whether its enactments are in keeping with constitutional law and prophetic instruction, and has no right to instruct or supervision over the administration of law, then indeed the people nor yet the General Conference is any part of the government of the church. If the conference does possess the right to legislate for the church, to pass upon the constitutionality of law, and to direct in the administration of law, then the whole contention of the advocates of this new theory of government falls to the ground. When this point is determined, then will we know where the real government of the church exists.

If the President of the church should, at any time, decide that any General Conference enactment is not based on the constitutional law, will he be justified in refusing to execute? Has he the right to set up his opinion as against the deliberate act of the conference? Which is greater in legislation and administration, the General Conference, comprising as it does the membership through their representatives and all grades and quorums of the priesthood, or the President or Presidency? If the President, or Presidency, or any administrative group has the power to set aside a General Conference action, this in itself supersedes the General Conference, and its enactments become in fact only “the expressed will of the people” who are the governed, and a graduated priesthood converging in the President becomes the real government of the church.

Limitations of the Standing High Council

Reference has been made to the Supreme Court of the United States and its power to declare unconstitutional any act of Congress. By analogy it is urged that our Standing High Council has similar powers. The point is not well taken. There is nothing in our law which vests the High Council. The attempt to lodge administrative, legislative, and judicial rights in the High Council is subversive of true government. The President of the United States does not have the power to set aside acts of Congress. He may register his veto, but Congress can pass it over his head, and he is obligated to execute. There is nothing in our law which vests the High Council with such powers. The right to interpret law by this council is limited to judicial procedure. The Standing High Council nor yet the President of the church can declare any conference action unconstitutional.

It may be urged that the right of the people in the legislative functions of government has always been recognized. This argument is now advanced by proponents of the new order. It is begging the question to read into this document an interpretation which will nullify its major premise. I am glad that some of our brethren still cling to the old order in argument. But these writers are representing themselves. Whatever private opinions they may harbor, nothing can be done with the interpretation of the document when enacted into law. The law will then speak for itself.

We cannot accept this document as it is and preserve the rights of the people in any branch of the government. If the authors of the document when they refer to government mean, in fact, administration, then let them amend their instrument and thus limit the powers of the priesthood. It is certainly inconsistent for one to defend the rights of the people in legislation and at the same time affirm that the “government is by divine authority through priesthood,” by the “consent of the governed,” “among the people.”

Views of Joseph Smith

The late Joseph Smith clearly anticipated this very point now in controversy when he wrote:

In treating of the rights of the membership—"the people of the Saints of the Most High"—it is safe to say that, all the rights not clearly delegated by commandment of God to the ministry, nor prohibited by it to the people, are reserved to the people. And that therefore their voice is made essential in the government of the church of God. And this is upon the principle that the Lord will have the people learn to治理 themselves under his law, and from the fact that “it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right” (Mosiah 13:4); and from the further fact that men are sometimes inclined to use their authority, opportunities, and powers, under the promptings of blind ambition, selfishness, or other evil motives such as have corrupted some leaders in the past and thereby brought blindness, reproach, and ruin upon the people. . . . The ministry should be honored promptly and sustained thoroughly, when faithfully and lawfully engaged in their respective offices and callings, but they are the servants of the people for Christ’s sake, and God’s people are entitled to observe and judge of their administration to themselves.—Editorial SAINTS’ HERALD, December 17, 1892, p. 806.

Again, in referring to the position of Joseph the Seer, he wrote:

His administration is fully in accord with the highest, best conceptions of government—“a government of the people, by the people, and for the people”—a government founded on the revealed will of God, yet reserving to the individual and the body the right and duty of exercising their personal agency free from official usurpation, dictation, or coercion.—Editorial SAINTS’ HERALD, March 29, 1890, p. 194.

We have not urged, nor do we now urge, that the government of the church should be an exact counterpart of the United States Government. We do affirm that in the church the organic law originates with God. And we most emphatically assert that there should not exist within the church anything which will do violence to, prevent the expression of, or abridge the religious and political rights of the people or, in any sense, invade that freedom of thought and action vouchsafed in the Constitution of our country.

God Always for Democracy

It would be strange, indeed, if the Lord, in order to further his purposes, would inspire men to discover and people this land, raise up wise men to write the Constitution, and then set up a government “of the people, by the people, and for the people” when, at the same time, he had in preparation the organization and establishment of his church which would consist of a government of a part of the people, by a part of the people, and for all the people. I cannot conceive of the Almighty fostering a political democracy and furthering a religious monarchy.

Frederick M. Smith Stands for Monarchy

Objection may be made to this term monarchy, but we are not responsible for its use. President Smith in an address before the priesthood of Independence in 1923, said:

Our system of government and administration should be so flexible as to enable us to meet every emergency. As our work develops there must be ever-increasing power placed into the hands of the priesthood, for when Christ comes the kingdom must be in that shape that it will be ready to turn over to him.

Subsequent to this the following question was submitted to him:

Regarding the remainder of the paragraph, which refers to the church or the kingdom being made ready for the rule of Christ, does this mean that the members of the kingdom become better acquainted in theory and practice with the essentials of true teamwork, and thus become better disciplined, that a greater respect and reverence for authority will make it possible to place greater power of direction into the hands of the priesthood, and thus in every sense make the church or kingdom more and more monarchial, as it will be under Christ?

Your letter of July 17 shows you have quite grasped the meaning of the statements you quote from some of my addresses. It seems to me it should be clear that for us to be ready to enter into the monarchy or kingdom of Christ, our looked-for golden age, we should steadily grow towards the conditions to obtain there.

We have no desire to distort the meaning or attempt to make this language obnoxious, but the statement is clearly made and accepted by President Smith that the church or kingdom will become “more and more monarchial” in form of organization, working towards the perfect form of monarchy “as it will be under Christ.” This is identical with his statement to me in 1923, but which he would not allow me to repeat in the conference? Why?

It follows if the position of President Smith means anything at all, that the movement of the church is away from democracy and towards monarchy. And this is running counter with the evolution of government, religious and political. It is a renunciation of the elements making for civilization in all ages and among all people.

Divine Impulse Always Away From Monarchy

The divine impulse has been away, ever away from monarchy, and towards, always towards democracy. The children of Israel suffered under the Egyptian oppression, and God heard their cry and sent Moses to their deliverance. And he led them away from monarchy and towards democracy. The return to monarchy was not of God’s ordering but was due to the perfidy of the people. God desired that they should have judges, but the leaders among the people said, “Give us a king.” And God gave answer in substance: “Have a monarchy if you will, but remember it will prove your national undoing.” Their adoption of a monarchical form of government was a rejection of the divine order.

There were people in that time, no doubt, who said: “We must have a strongly centralized form of government. This government by judges is too much like mob rule. What we need is one man pos-ossessing supreme directional control who will do our thinking, determine our course of action, tell us what to do, and possess sufficient discipline to make us do it. Give us a king." And others, "We have too much democracy. God's government is monarchical, and it will become more and more monarchical until Shiloh comes."

Jesus Christ Against Monarchy

Monarchy flourished when Christ came. While he did not inspire revolution, yet he lived his life, and not by word or deed did he give his indorsement to this form of government. He taught the people the doctrine of agency, and equality, and democracy, and justice, and fellowship; and from that day until the present, monarchy has been receding. Christianity and monarchy are incompatible.

When the Almighty selected a group from the Old World to raise up a righteous people unto him, he directed Nephi to set up a government which did not have any of the elements of monarchy, and, although this people finally emulated their fathers, yet every prophet and every righteous priest throughout their history placed his disapproval on monarchy and pointed the way to democracy. There is not one exception. This was true with the Pilgrim Fathers. It was true with the men who, under God, founded this latter-day work. History reveals that monarchy is a failure, and revelation points the way to democracy and freedom.

The desire for the visible embodiment of authority has always been the curse of humanity in church and state from the beginning, and when consummated has eventuated in slavery. It is only slaves who cry, "Let us have priests to do our praying, and a hierarchy to do our thinking." It was Philip who said, "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." But Jesus, declaring once for all to show the fallacy of external authority, said:

> Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father. . . . I am in the Father and the Father in me. . . . The Father which dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.

God's government is internal, not external. He rules by love and not by force. He draws men; he does not drive them. He says, Come, work with me. He exercises his directional power by coming down and working with men. He has never assumed directional power over men.

A Strongly Centralized Government Proposed

In 1920 President Smith said:

> If Zion is to be redeemed, if Zion is to be established, it is going to demand a strongly centralized government. I say that advisedly. I would like to burn that into the heart of every Latter Day Saint. It is going to take a strongly organized, strongly centralized government.

Recognizing that the statement savored of despotism, he sought to remove the asperity by saying:

> So long as the glorious rights of democracy are preserved and the people themselves say what are the laws to which they shall be compelled to yield obedience, there is absolutely no chance for that man to become a despot. . . . You determine what are the laws that he executes, even if he becomes absolute in his power as administrator of the law.

President Smith has denied the right of the people to direct him as the administrative head; he even goes further and asserts that the General Conference should not presume to direct him or any other official. He claims that all power of direction centers in him. And what then becomes of the "glorious rights of democracy"? To grant such an assumption places the church at the mercy of one man without any form of redress except to put him out of office. We would have no control over him while in office. Such a position is unscientific, unsocial, unsound, un-American, and unchristian.

Government Confined to Class Subversive of Liberty

The doctrine of government by or through priesthood among the people is class government, and is therefore subversive of liberty. It is in conflict with the purpose of the Almighty, and runs counter with human experience. To surrender to such assumption is to renounce the victories won during the centuries when men fought for the right of conscience and the privilege to determine for themselves under divine guidance the how, what, when, where, and why of service without the dictation of priest or the directional control of any man on earth. To applaud democracy and at the same time affirm the right of one man to be absolute in directing the affairs of the church is inconsistent to say the least.

> You cannot well think in terms of monarchy in things religious and be true to the principles of democracy as enunciated in the Declaration of Independence and our national Constitution. In heeding the cry for a strongly centralized government converging in one man, we are traveling step by step back towards paganism. The basis of true religion is always in the mind and heart of the whole people. True religion comprehends humanity doing things for itself rather than in having things done for it. Christianity is God working through and with men and does not contemplate men exercising supreme directional control over other men.

The question at issue is whether the source of power is in one man acting for God and dominating the group, or is it the people working with God for the common expression of his will? The unity and growth of the people of God depends not so much on the power which one man or a group may have over them as on the spirit which is in them. It is the (Continued on page 117.)
Where Shall We Begin to Save?

BY WILFRID D. TORDOFF

A wise man, from whose writings we have often quoted with pride, wrote down these words: "A fool and his money are soon parted."

I think that I can safely say without fear of successful contradiction that there are very few of us who have not exchanged gold for that which at least seemed to glitter, and come home poorer in pocket but richer in experience.

Experience, then, is sometimes gained at the expense of the other fellow, and is at least partly detrimental to ourselves. As an instance: A father may buy something he at least imagines that he needs, while meantime his family goes without their daily sustenance. Would this be right?

The spending of money is an index to character. What we spend for, shows our deepest likes and dislikes. The question forces itself upon us as a people: How are we spending our (?) money?

Can we see over the hill a splendid valley we desire, after buying which, we are determined to pay the Lord his share? There are many of us just that way. After we have completed a certain thing, and begin to live as good as others, then we are going to pay the Lord that which is due to him.

If there ever was a time when the church, speaking generally, needed steam-power Christians, it is to-day. There always have been the kind of members who simply were hangers-on, always hoping that everything would eventually be all right, and then they would be ready to give their all to humanity.

The American Digest gives the following table to show how we Americans, as a whole, are disposing of our earnings, and incidentally this may include the readers of the Herald:

Of each dollar which we spend, the following items are the average proportion:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Item</th>
<th>Percentage</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Living costs</td>
<td>24 1/2%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luxuries</td>
<td>22%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Waste</td>
<td>14%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miscellaneous</td>
<td>13 1/2%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Investments</td>
<td>11%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Crime, court costs, etc.</td>
<td>8 1/2%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Government</td>
<td>4 1/2%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Schools</td>
<td>1 1/2%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Church</td>
<td>%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

That list does not describe every one of us, but the average of all of us.

Our fathers spent more of their income for living and very little for luxuries. They spent less for crime and its punishment. They spent more for the causes of religion, that is, a higher percentage of their earnings.

In other words, we are spending three times as much for luxuries as we are for government, schools, and church. Is not this appalling? We are spending two and a half times as much for crime than we are for church and school. There was a time when the chief concern of the church was to play the Good Samaritan—binding the wounds of those who had been set upon by thieves and sending them on their way. But I hope that the church will realize more than ever before that the great need is to police the road to Jericho so that the thieves can be eliminated.

Doctor J. W. Holland asks the question, "How long will the moral life of America be preserved, sweet, clean, and wholesome, if that proportion of things continue?" as the statistics show they are to-day?

If these statistics are true, we, as a church must begin to teach ourselves and teach our children the sacredness of the law of God; and above all, to teach our children, by our example, that the law of tithing is as much the law of God as baptism is.

If economics means anything to us, it is by no means improbable that the next twenty-five years of history will determine the trend of the next five hundred years. How necessary that we as a people begin now to give ourselves wholly to the service of the church, not as nurses, missionaries, or pastors, necessarily, but begin from where we are, regardless of where that might be.

I plead for the work of Christ. I have no other end in view. God needs every man, woman, and child in this church as true citizens of the kingdom of God. I plead for a reversion of the list of statistics above. Let us spend less for luxuries and more for Christ.

Let us remember the burdens of the Bishopric. Are we satisfied with about one hundred and fifty missionaries? Unless we put more money into the things that save and preserve us, we shall soon begin to write the tragedies of another people who have gone the way of Sodom.

May God bless his people. May he give them a deeper desire to put their all on the altar of sacrifice. Without sacrifice we might well enter into the world with all its follies. As a church, we need men to-day who are willing to sacrifice, and forget the weaknesses of men, and trust in the strength of God.
Concerning the Faith of Our Fathers
BY D. T. WILLIAMS

II. OUR FATHERS ON SUPREME DIRECTIONAL CONTROL

The tranquil waters of our ecclesiastical sea have of late months been agitated by a disturbing gale. Just at this writing, however, the lowering clouds seem a trifle less ominous. It may be, after all, the grand old ship of Zion will survive the grilling tempest without serious complications, and with the closing benediction of the next General Conference will sail joyfully if not quietly on her voyage of love.

Our Fathers on Supreme Directional Control

The "faith of our fathers" who have sailed upon this worthy ship throughout the years has been repeatedly appealed to by some of our sailing mates. The appeal is not without a pleasurable response upon our part. We have already accepted the gauge thus extended and once more bring to your consideration some items of vital interest recorded in the log book of experience.

Apostle William H. Kelley Speaks

President Smith announced at Amboy, Illinois, when he united with the Reorganization, that he would not be "dictated" to by any set of men. He has not forgotten this: and without doubt is in no mood to change. Neither has he lost strength of decision or backbone, and members of the quorum, whether they be few or many that make the attempt, will find that they will not dictate to him now, but will stand a splendid chance to be humiliated themselves before it is ended.—From a letter dated Lamoni, Iowa, August 27, 1909.

President W. W. Blair Testifies

Paul, "a wise master-builder," presents to us the order of God's government under the figure of the human body. All of this shows the interdependence of the parts, one upon another, the lesser being under the management and control of the higher, from the feet to the head, thereby securing unity of action, mutual edification and mutual prosperity, the lesser being in willing and helpful subjection to the higher, and receiving in return the care and aid, and blessing of the higher, for the good of all the body.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 40, p. 414.

Again says President Blair:

Of Adam, Michael, who was the first presiding high priest of our race (Doctrine and Covenants 83:2; 104:18-28), it is said there was "given unto him the keys of salvation under the counsel and direction of the Holy One" (Doctrine and Covenants 77:3). And this counsel and direction is ordained of God to go from "the head of the church" on earth to the various grades of officers in their respective order and calling, each minister to "stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling" (Doctrine and Covenants 83:21).—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 40, p. 432.

Again Brother Blair speaks:

It follows, therefore, that his counsel (the president of the church), his advice, his admonition, his teachings on the word of God and all church matters, are of the highest authority and of first importance with and to the ministry, and are only second to the revelations of God.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 40, p. 415.

The Late Joseph Smith as a Testator

In thirty years there have been very few instances in which I have been compelled to exercise dictatorially the authority of the office of the church.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 40, p. 194.

The following by the same witness needs no interpretation to those who know how to read the English language:

I wish to say that I have come here not to be dictated by any man or set of men. I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me.—Church History, vol. 3, p. 247.

Again the venerable Prophet speaks:

It appears from this revelation that the primary right of presiding over the church, and of regulating and setting in order all the affairs of the same, is resident in the First Presidency; and that the true philosophy of the organization is, that if others should be appointed to those duties, these rights and prerogatives inhere in them in a secondary sense, to be exercised under the direction and counsel of the First Presidency.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 281.

The same witness again:

On May 2, 1835, a "Grand Council of the priesthood was held in Kirtland," in which President Smith defined with clearness, fullness, and much emphasis, the respective and relative powers, duties, and authorities of the Twelve, Seventies, High Councils and Elders. (Millennial Star, 15:261, 262.) President Smith's decision and instructions on these occasions were official, like that of James. (Acts 15:18; Galatians 2:12).—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 40, p. 147.

The following from the dying statement of the late Joseph Smith is significant, addressing his son, Frederick M. Smith:

You are the man for the occasion. The Lord has ordained it so. Oh, some one to take hold whose hands will not slip on the rein! nor tremble in the emergency. . . . Fred a great opportunity lies before you. . . . Fortunately I was in favor of the Divine One and received instruction, and you will be, my boy, you will be. That small Spirit that filleth the breast and giveth warmth and color and brightness and intelligence will open before you subjects that are necessary for you to decide upon, and leave no dubiety nor things open to controversy.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 62, pp. 129, 130.

Is there nothing here concerning direction and control? Do these words, "whose hands will not slip on the rein," mean nothing to those who proclaim their faith in the prophetic mission of this good man? Pray, what is the rein for, if it is not for direction and control?

It seems quite evident who it was that was to be in possession of the rein, which was to be the instrument of this directional control; quite evident, indeed. "You are the man for the occasion," says this venerable father and prophet to his son and successor.

Was this great prophet in favor with the "Divine One" at this moment? or at his passing was he under the darkness of a false inspiration? Let those proclaim their doubt who will, As for the writer, he is of the opinion the prophetic vision of this servant of the Lord was clear, and that the words, "You are the man for the occasion," was the language not simply of a dying man but a dying prophet.

Continuing under the divine insight, he says in the next sentence, "The Lord has ordained it so." What has "the Lord ordained"? What, indeed! This true servant of modern Israel informs us that the Almighty has ordained that the reign of government should pass from his aged hand to that of a strong and stalwart son. If this present crisis is "the occasion," then we have the leader, one whose hand will not "tremble in the emergency." The prayer of Israel should be that God will give that hand the needed strength.

Again we ask, Was not the illumination of eternity upon the mind of the prophet when he said, "Fortunately I was in favor with the Divine One, and you will be, my boy, you will be"?

This was said to the man who was to hold the reign of direction and control over the church of God on earth. Do you, dear reader, doubt the fulfillment of this prophetic statement? I am sure you do not; and the great body of the church is in no frame of mind to encourage those who do doubt it.

Joseph the Martyr

David Whitmer, Leonard Rich, and others have been in transgression, but we hope that they may be humble, and ere long make satisfaction to the church, otherwise they cannot retain their standing; therefore we say unto you, beware of all disaffected characters, for they come not to build up, but to destroy, and scatter abroad. Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel, or introduce an order of things, other than those things which ye have received, and are authorized to receive from the First Presidency, let him be accursed.—Millennial Star, vol. 16, p. 76.

Fear of Autocracy

There are some who seem to fear that autocracy is going to crush with a ruthless heel the church of Christ. That they and their brethren are about to be herded into spiritual bondage by those whom they think are fostering unholy schemes for the gathering of such power. This same fear was held by our forbears under the ministrations of the first president of the church, as the following will testify, the same being taken from a letter written by Orson Hyde and Hyrum Smith by command of a conference at Kirtland, and accepted by that conference as an expression of its opinion:

At the time Joseph, Sidney, and Newel left Zion, all matters of hardness and misunderstanding were settled and buried (as they supposed) and you gave them the hand of fellowship; but, afterwards, you brought up all these things again, in a censorious spirit, accusing Brother Joseph in rather an indirect way of seeking after monarchical power and authority. . . . We are sensible that this is not the thing Brother Joseph is seeking after, but to magnify the high office and calling whereunto he was called and appointed by the command of God and the united voice of this church. It might not be amiss for you to call to mind the circumstances of the Nephites, and the children of Israel rising up against their prophets, and accusing them of seeking after kingly power, etc., and see what befell them, and take warning before it is too late.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 273.

Each of the presidents of the church has had this same fear to contend with in his endeavor to administer the affairs of the kingdom of God. For such was the case with the late Joseph Smith, as well as with the present President of the church, and with the first Joseph.

The following in this connection is taken from the letter referred to above, written by W. H. Kelley, dated Lamoni, Iowa, August 27, 1900:

Just why members of the Quorum of Twelve should assume so much in the way of being public guardians, as to rise in their strength to steady the ark, attack the President of the church, and stir up strife lest the General Conference should do some foolish act against itself at next session, i.e., rob itself and the Quorum of Twelve of their God-given rights, by setting up a one-man power, and in order to avert such recklessness, bars must be put up now by the quorum in order to defeat its possible action, does not appear clear and conclusive to my mind.

President Frederick M. Smith, then, is not in bad company, nor is he under new accusation in the following:

The President's theory of government, while he terms it a theocratic-democracy, under analysis proves to be a theocratic-autocracy.—Saints' Herald, August 20, 1924.

It is strange how matters change. It was but a few years ago that one of the signers of the above statement, Brother T. W. Williams, had reason to resent a similar attack made upon the President of the church by a "disaffected character," R. C. Evans. Our champion at that time hurled the falsehood back into the face of the accuser in these terms:

Mr. Evans charges that Frederick M. Smith is an "autocrat," a "base hypocrite and debauchee." But these charges lack definiteness, and there is a notable absence of a single concrete instance or specific fact cited.—Bishop R. C. Evans vs. Mr. R. C. Evans, p. 18.

I am of the opinion that Brother Williams was right, very much right. And of course, to be logical with ourselves, the same character of proof demanded by us through our minister to Canada at that time must be demanded now of those who accuse the President of the church of being an autocrat. We must ask where is the “single concrete instance or specific fact.”

Again we quote from the pamphlet above referred to. Beginning with page 22, Brother Williams says:

As a fitting tribute to the character of President Frederick M. Smith we append the address of Congressman W. P. Borland. . . . “I have had the pleasure on frequent occasions of working with your distinguished President, Reverend Frederick M. Smith. I regard it, my friends, as a privilege to say to you that no man stands higher in my estimation for a clear-cut, transparent, manly character, a man of influence in the community, and in the Nation, than Frederick M. Smith, of Jackson County, Missouri. Whatever I have had the honor to receive in the way of communications from him, has had my unbounded, complete, and perfect confidence in its reliability and in the fact that it represented the highest type of citizenship and moral attainment in the community. I am glad to find that he represents an element which is aggressive for the good of mankind; he is always on the moral side, on the betterment side of every proposition. He has always felt free to consult with me upon any question of public importance; I have found that his sympathies are broad; they are nation wide and world wide; . . . they have always touched with a healing hand in every enterprise in which they have engaged. I want to renew to him and to you my feelings of the deepest sympathy and cooperation, and tender to you upon every occasion my own services along lines which I know, in advance, will be for the betterment of humanity.

This, Brother Williams asserts, is a “fitting tribute” to the President of the church. We think so; although the language seems a little strange for a democrat to use in eulogy of one having the disposition to seek after autocratic power.

Too Bad

It seems too bad that the church should be torn with the discussion of such topics as this. It is sad that the faith of those who are weak should be further dissipated by carrying into their homes the spirit of indecision and contention. A number of years ago Brother T. W. Williams gave some splendid advice, which seems to suit the present occasion so fittingly that we cannot resist the desire to quote it for the benefit of our readers. Says our brother:

This discussion could as well be made in “solemn conclave” as in public sessions and would save us from unenviable ridicule by worldling scoffers, and at the same time not shake the faith of those who may be tender or young in the faith. Some measure should also obtain making it a breach of trust for any officer of the church to go among the Saints, and in private or public to dwell on the differences between the quorums, thus feeding the spirit of division which the Devil is seeking to bring into the church.—SAINTS’ HERALD, vol. 43, p. 109.

Our brother is quite right. This carrying into the homes of the Saints either by word of mouth or by letter the spirit of division and dissension is the Devil’s business, and God never designed the leading officers of the church to indulge in it. Isn’t it about time the spirit of repentance was doing its more perfect work, and that we were seeking after the old paths, such as are pointed out in the above quotation? Surely such excellent advice should not have been so soon forgotten? The Saints are crying for relief from such as this. Why not heed the call?

Our next article will deal with the “faith of our fathers” in the matter of the relationship of the Presidency and Bishopric.

BY EDWARD RANNNIE

Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion among the members. The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation, from time to time.—Doctrine and Covenants 122:1, 2.

In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 122:10.

The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with other revelations given to the church, which had been before given, the church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed. Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and the pure in heart.—Doctrine and Covenants 129:8.

We learn from the above that the First Presidency and Bishopric are our teachers in reference to the law of the Lord. We also learn that unless we pay heed to their teachings there will be misunderstanding, confusion, disappointment, and a withholding of the promised blessings. And the further instructions are that they are to teach the revelations given to the church.

Fellow missionary, how many sermons or lectures have you ever heard from the brethren named as our teachers touching the vital questions that mark the dividing line between our church and all other churches, and that make us a peculiar people? How can the ministry teach the people unless they are first taught? and it is a physical impossibility for our teachers to travel among all the branches and the world. So the missionary force and local men must reach the masses of the people. The task to teach the ministry by the brethren whom the Lord has named may be a difficult one; nevertheless it was given to them, and to fail to perform it simply delays the Lord's work until it is done. Men, because of their shortsightedness and vanity, may outline an elaborate program and give it up before they make a good start. But not so with the Lord; his program may cover several thousand years, but his purposes will be accomplished, his word will not return to him void, his prophecies and promises shall all be fulfilled. Learning is not accomplished by waving a magic wand over the head of the student, but by patient study under the care of a teacher who loves his task and also his students. The way to avoid confusion and misunderstanding is to see things alike, and that condition is brought about by teaching; and when the teacher and pupil are right with God, the Holy Spirit will be with both, and unity of purpose and understanding will be sure to follow.

Only a minimum of effort has been made to give light on the basic problems of our church, and how to solve them. The meagerness of our preparation is an assurance of our defeat in whatever we may undertake to do. We had lectures for eight years preceding the General Conferences, and the writer missed only two, and whatever may have been the amount of good received they did not fill the measure of our needs. A better and more thorough understanding of the ideals of Jesus Christ and how to apply them in our lives is what the ministry needs, so that by correct teaching and practice we can convey to those whom we minister among the very beginning of the church, the "school of the elders" or "school of the prophets," whichever may be the correct designation, was organized; and for several winters preceding the dedication of the Kirtland Temple on March 27, 1836, the time was spent in instructing the ministry. When the endowment was given they were in a condition to carry the gospel message to the world, and it is a historical fact that from that time on until Joseph Smith's death there was an average of about eighteen thousand a year baptized. Being taught by each other may be a seemingly slow process to bring unity, but it is God's way, and his way is the best way.

In Conclusion

For the delegates and ministry to come to the next General Conference cocked and primed, like a lot of hard-boiled politicians, and one side win over the other will not bring peace and unity; that is not the Lord's way of doing things. His way is to increase our faith, intelligence, and love, for no one can assist in his work except "he is full of love." Our great effort should be to bring about that condition, and it would be time and money well spent if the ministry were in session for three months before the General Conference and spent their time in prayer, meditation, and instruction. Being in proper condition before God and each other, the Lord would come to our rescue and speak peace to our distracted souls and restore the whole church to that happy condition we have enjoyed in the years that have come and gone.

Roman Catholics have a constituency of 250,000 Negroes. They have started an institute to train in the lines of farming, housekeeping, and many of the industries, in addition to the usual academic courses. The religious side of education will, of course, be emphasized. The name is Cardinal Gibbons Institute, and it is located at Ridge, Saint Mary's County, Maryland.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Central Columbus Mission Specially Blessed

COLUMBUS, OHIO.—At the close of 1924 I cannot refrain from expressing appreciation of God's watchful care for us. Since June, 1924, we have been blessed by the Holy Spirit in our meetings almost beyond expression, and many times we have been encouraged by the words, "This is my work, and if you remain humble I will continue to bless you, and many in due time shall be added unto you." We recall the prophecy given through Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths seventeen years ago, when at that time we did not have even a church building in Columbus. We were told that the Lord had a people in the central part of Columbus and that a great work would be accomplished. Now there are two branches besides the mission. Brother T. S. Williams, a priest, opened up the work with cottage prayer meetings, which were followed with cottage preaching services, then a Sunday school, and later the mission was started by Brother Floyd Rockwell, former president of the Southern Ohio District. We rented a hall and have gone ahead since, six having been baptized while others are interested.

Brothers L. Boone, G. Myers, and J. T. Williams have been splendid workers and were always there when needed. We have more than enough to demand a branch, but for the present we desire to continue as a mission.

The children of our Sunday school gave an entertainment at Christmas time. Some of them were on the platform for the first time, but they did well.

On the first day of the New Year we had a wonderful demonstration of God's answer to prayer. One of the Saints' boys was seriously ill, his neck being swollen to the choking point. A special prayer service was called, which turned out to be a Pentecostal shower. Before singing the last hymn, "How many times discouraged," the family was called over the phone and instructed to listen. After the song and benediction we were informed that the swelling had broken ten minutes before. His neck had previously been lanced six times without result. The Saints wept at the good news, and our hearts rejoiced at the promise of God which came anew to us: "If ye remain humble I will continue to bless you." We recall the beautiful words of Isaiah:

"The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever."

There were some young people present who had planned to be at a party, but they thought the prayer service was more important and after the meeting stood with tear-washed faces, glad they had come.

"That you remain steadfast in your minds in solemnity and the spirit of prayer in bearing testimony to all the world of these things which are communicated to you." This is our desire. We expect opposition, even as Joseph the Martyr did; sometimes from those of the household of faith. Pray for us.

Lansing, Michigan

January 14.—Lansing Branch is still on the map and again resuming activities under the new department heads elected for the coming year. Several interesting entertainments are planned ahead, such as skating and sleigh-ride parties, radio parties, musical entertainments, etc.

We were recently favored with a visit from Patriarch and Sister Davis, of South Boardman, Michigan. To meet such worthy Saints is an inspiration, and encourages one to do the best that is in his power for the church.

Our Brother Clarence Dudley is singing by radio from here next week. Watch for him.

Sister Martha Luce and husband have returned from Ann Arbor, where Mr. Luce has been receiving medical attention. The doctors pronounce his case anemia. We solicit your prayers in his behalf.

We were sorry to lose our Brother Backus and family from the Lansing Branch; but we realize that Lansing's loss is Benton Harbor's gain this time. DONNA MANNING.

Columbus, Ohio

January 13.—Second Columbus Branch held its second anniversary services the first Sunday of January. Early in the morning the young people had a prayer service which was well attended, and a good spirit was present. Sacrament service was held in the morning, and the Lord was there in power. In the evening the service was given over to the choir, which presented musical numbers. There were also two short talks, making a very enjoyable program. At this meeting an offering was taken, in the nature of a sacrifice donation, and an unusual amount was received toward lifting the church debt.

The boys of this branch have organized a basketball team under the leadership of Chester Carey and have entered the Church League of our city. Their first game was played Thursday, January 8, and won with a score of 20 to 16. They played against boys quite a bit older and larger. The next game is to be this Thursday, and everyone is anxiously awaiting the date to see if we can win the championship of the Church League.

Fall River, Massachusetts

January 13.—The Christmas season was an occasion of happiness at Fall River. The Sunday evening preceding Christmas a service of story and song was given by the choir, called "The light of a Christmas candle." Gladys Coombs was the reader, and Mabel Daniel, Joseph Cliff, and Alma Coombs were the soloists. A silver collection was taken for the benefit of the Christmas offering.

Christmas Eve about fifteen singers went from house to house singing Christmas carols. Over fifty-five dollars was given them for branch expenses. Margaret Henderson, the chorister, was unable to lead them because of an accident that week.

Christmas afternoon the Sunday school had its tree and cantata, "Cinderella's party." There were visitors from Boston and Attleboro Branches. All received candy, an apple, and an orange. The attendance was large. The cantata was very pretty, given under the direction of Margaret Henderson.

December 30 the children met at the home of Margaret Henderson, bringing their little safe deposit boxes for the Christmas offering. Bessie Wilkinson had the largest amount, more than seven dollars, and was given a box of candy.

The Sunday school had its regular bank breaking January 1. Three hundred and forty dollars were received for the Christmas offering. A program was given by the members of the school, and refreshments were served.

The business meeting of the Sunday school was held January 5. All officers were sustained for the new year. The branch business meeting was held January 12, the present officers being sustained.

Elder William A. Sinclair and family were again at Fall River for the January sacrament service. Brother Sinclair’s remarks are always suited to the needs of the listeners.

Elder Abram Law of New Bedford was the speaker at both services January 11. From now until the reunion at Onset the different branches of this district will have two visiting speakers each month. January 18 T. J. Elliott of Providence will speak here.

The local pastor, Elder James W. Heap, visited his father’s family at Attleboro last Sunday. Brother Heap is suffering a great deal from rheumatism.

The Department of Women sent flowers and plants to the sick and aged ones at Christmas.

Eldorado Springs, Missouri

January 21.—The roads here have been so icy that quite a number have been unable to get to church for two or three weeks.

At our branch business meeting Paul R. Davis was chosen as president of the branch, also president of the Religio; John T. Wood, Sunday school superintendent; Pearl Davis, clerk.

The women of the branch are organizing a Department of Women, with Sister Carrie Blystone as superintendent.

Sister Mary Rittenhour and Mr. Charles Costin were married January 15 at the home of Elder R. T. Walters, who officiated. The bride is the daughter of Brother and Sister J. M. Rittenhour.

The young folks have enjoyed several coasting parties in the last two weeks. However, the prayer meeting at the home of Sister Nona Reynolds last Wednesday night was well attended.

The Religio program committee is preparing a program for February 1.

Elder Paul R. Davis went to Veve Branch the second Sunday in the month to administer the sacrament to the Saints there.

Birmingham, Alabama

January 20.—Although we are few in number we enjoy our association together very much. There are nine of us, and we have our Sunday school and church every Sunday morning. So far as we know, those living here now are Brother and Sister C. J. Clark, Sister Carroll, Brother and Sister V. R. Chandler, Wilbur and Elbert Chandler, and Brother and Sister Booker of Bossemer and their two children. We are endeavoring to do what we can and hope others will come to swell our numbers. If there are others of our people living in this community, we hope they may read this letter and respond accordingly.

Brother Chandler has been here since June 12, the family joining him August 1, but they were unable to locate any of our people.

On Sunday, December 7, Brother Clark and his wife called, our names being given them by Brother T. C. Kelley.

That evening the first preaching service was held in Birmingham, the sermon being delivered by Brother W. D. Bullard, of Independence, Missouri. He was stopping here on his way to Florida.

Any coming through Birmingham will certainly be welcome to our services, which are held at the home of Brother V. R. Chandler, 419 Fulton Avenue, Sunday at half past ten, with Brother Clark in charge.

Central Michigan District

BEAVERTON, MICHIGAN, January 6.—The branch at Beaver­ton has chosen Elder Emery Fultz for their pastor for 1925. Brother Fultz is a very fine man and bears a message to the people by the life which he leads. He has a large staff of officers for his associates.

The Saints are looking forward to the liquidating of the indebtedness on their church so it can be dedicated at the fall conference.

Brother S. W. L. Scott, of Coldwater, Michigan, was with us in a short series of meetings in December. These services were very much enjoyed, and we are in hopes that Brother Scott will soon come again.

Our Sunday school is presided over by Brother Eugene Harder, and he is a very able man for the work, which is shown by the interest he takes in the school.

The branch at Farwell is in very good working condition. Brother Harvey Deeger is their pastor, a very fine man. He was aided in the past season by Elder Tomlinson in a series of meetings. Brother Tomlinson gave the Saints very valuable aid, which will not soon be forgotten. Two men were called and ordained, Brother McGuire and Brother Armstrong, the former a priest and the latter a teacher. Brother Armstrong is now superintendent of the Sunday school.

There is a very lively little band of Saints at Clare, of which Brother Fred Newsom is the leader. They have a very fine Sunday school, and all seem greatly interested. They have prayer meeting twice a week, and the main feature manifested is that each one nearly always bears testimony.

The reunion committee of the district are making plans for the reunion, which will convene in August. Patriarch George W. Burt was called north of Gladwin to preach a funeral sermon. Elder Tomlinson, of the missionary force, has returned to his home in Canada for the holidays, and Elder S. T. Pendleton has started north to Whittemore and Prescott to hold a series of meetings. Matthew Umphrey is laboring in Bay City. We hope that every Saint in this district will put forth every available effort to advance the cause the coming year. May God help each one to be a rock and an oak in every storm, a vine and flower in every sunshine.

Burlington Busy Raising Building Fund

BURLINGTON, IOWA, January 19.—Every church member in Burlington is working earnestly to raise money for our building fund.

The Department of Women, under the leadership of Sister Lulu Rayser, has started its campaign anew for the coming year. They have divided themselves into groups of two, each group being assigned a month in which to raise as much money as possible. Dinners, food sales, and various other methods are used. The months of July and August have been given to the Temple Builders for their time to raise money. A plan similar to this was used last year, and it proved very successful.

Our cottage prayer meetings have proved quite a success during the winter months. They are well attended, and the Spirit seems to be present with all. The Wednesday evening before sacramental service we have our weekly prayer service in the church.

Tuesday evening, January 13, the Temple Builders gave a skating party at Lake Starker in Crapo Park. The ice was very good, with the exception of a few cracks, which would invariably catch the unwary, resulting in a tumble. Everyone there spoke of having a good time.
Experiences by the Way

By John F. Garver

II. Late Experiences in the Field

These few experiences over late months are here set out from many others, in the hope and with the prayer they may be encouraging and helpful to HERALD readers to whom they may appeal.

A Heavy Heart

It was with a heavy heart the writer, late in June, left his home in the quiet and even-tempered community of Lamoni, Iowa, for the 1924 reunion season.

Heavy rains for days had crippled the railways, necessitating a drive over bad roads to Benton, Iowa. Leaving Elder L. G. Holloway here, by whose kindness I had made the forty-mile trip by auto, I took my way northward. Changing cars at Des Moines, it was on northward into a night of thunder and lightning and rain and danger; for the earth was soft, streams out of banks, and washouts not infrequent.

I say, mine was a heavy heart. It was not, however, the turmoil of the elements, nor the imminence of physical danger that disturbed me. It was the turbulence within my church—the great cause for which I had given all, greater than my own life, here and hereafter.

I had gone out from the April council with a hopeful message. Really believing a better day had dawned, and understanding this was to be the message and effort of all, I had visited a number of communities, and so reported and urged. So it was like calamity from a clear sky the break-up greeted me.

"Who, now, would believe my report?" Discredited, disheartened, the cause apparently endangered, under spiritual clouds more lowering and more foreboding than the clouds of the stormy night, I lay in my berth, not to sleep, but to cry out against the storm sweeping my soul, whipped on as it were by the beating of the rain on the windowspane at my car.

One who has since written has it right. Some of us have something to learn. And this lesson I worked out in part during the dragging hours of that awful night. It was not, however, as suggested by our brother of the pen, a lesson in church government. It was a lesson in the interests and purposes of men. A lesson in heart reading.

The Light Breaks

It was under this spirit I came to Sykston, North Dakota, my first stop. The weather was cloudy and cold. The camp was small, not above seven or eight living tents. Only three families residing in the village, as I recall. Little interest on the part of the Gentiles. And of course, I had to preach the first night! only about three hours after reaching the place.

I went apart for a talk with the Master. I asked for nothing for myself, but how I did feel for the isolated Saints there assembled. My prayer for their sakes was answered. The Lord blessed.

So it was through the remaining days at Sykston, mine was a heavy heart, but for the sake of the people, the Lord continued to bless.

From there I journeyed to Chetek, Wisconsin, for the Northern Wisconsin reunion, on the banks of beautiful Lake Chetek. Added to my already burdened spirit, was difficulty awaiting adjustment. Blessed when before the people, I was still left alone when alone. And when I felt it had been enough—for it is always my way to bear the heaviness when it comes, feeling as I do it is for a purpose—when I felt it had been enough, I sought out the quiet places, apart and alone under the sweet silence of the stars of heaven; and there God came to me in rich abundance, lifting my drooping spirits, and making me alive again in Christ Jesus our Lord.

I went back into the meetings with renewed vigor. And as God will testify to the believing reader, I came immediately under an endowment of the Spirit the like of which I had never before experienced in my public work. Light, intelligence, prophecy, interpretation, discernment, a power truly from heaven enveloped me. And it followed me, too, when alone and apart, with a peace of mind and a confidence that in contrast against the dark days I had before experienced was as hell giving way to heaven.

Under this same spirit I moved on to Minneapolis, Lamoni, and Delta, Colorado, and Colorado Springs. (For while not assigned to Lamoni reunion, I had no appointment these dates, which left me at home, for the first time in many years, more a man of the pew than of the pulpit. And I assure you it was a delight and a blessing.) And in numerous conferences and elsewhere since the reunion season it has been the same. Truly have I been privileged to walk with the Master. And can join Brother Elbert A. Smith in the sentiment expressed some few weeks ago in the HERALD, and others of my brethren in the solemn testimony, that never in all the years of my ministry have I known God and his power as I have done these late months.

And I may say, the brethren of the general ministry have not been alone in the enjoyment of these things. Not a reunion and hardly a conference but what the local men and Saints have joined to say, "It's the very best reunion we have ever had." "The best conference attended in the district." This is true of each of the reunions I attended, and of practically all the conferences. The Saints have been lifted up, and patiently bide the time of the Lord for the deliverance they confidently expect.

And surely it is a good omen when so many of our men and Saints can thus speak, over so wide a territory, of the nearness of the Father of light and of deliverance.

Again, as I write flat on my back, this the 19th day of my stay in the Independence Sanitarium, the Lord alone knowing how many more I shall have to be here for the healing of an ulcer of the duodenum—I say, as I lay here writing these lines, the same spirit of peace, and trust, and hope, and confidence, and of power is with me in abundant measure. The Lord be praised!

Both Heaviness and Light

And yet in the midst of joy, I have had sorrow. For dark days have been the portion of many of my brethren and people. They, too, have suffered, and some do yet. That through which we have yet to pass may bring us unpleasantness and heaviness of spirit. The presence of God, however, buoys us up and carries us on. And in him shall peace come with prosperity.

Oh, that we may all learn the beauty and the power of the admonition of the disciple John, "Beloved, let us love one another." And when it is so, fellowship like a cherishing fountain will come in to us, and with it a beginning in Zion building as fair as the sun; as far flung as earth's remotest bounds, and as potent as eternity.

I shall next write of some of the successes in the mission field during the year.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 19, 1925.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Des Moines, Iowa

January 17.—Our five nights of after-home-coming services were quite successful, the spirit of devotion being with us in great power. Brother Ammon White preached each evening up to and including Friday, December 19. His words and sermons were to the Des Moines Saints as new green fields to the herds. He told us the same old story, but in a way that we were caused to catch a new vision—the vision of unity in God’s work. Brother White surely proved his love for our Lord, in that he obeyed the command, “Go feed my sheep.”

On Sunday evening, December 21, the primary department of the Sunday school, under the direction of Sister Edith Smith and assisted by Sister Mary Dockstader and the Panedelphia Chapter of Temple Builders, and others, rendered a splendid Christmas program. There were songs and readings by the children; Sister Evelyn Finch sang, “Birth of the King”; Sister Ardith Kirkwood sang, “The birthday of a King”; Sister Bertha Deskim gave a reading, “The birth of Christ,” assisted with songs by the Panedelphia Girls. Then the Panedelphia Chapter sang, “The Star of Bethlehem.” The house was filled to overflowing, and everyone seemed to enjoy the program immensely. It was a great time for the children who took part in the program. At the close of this service all were presented with a bag of candy and then proceeded to enjoy a good visit as Latter Day Saints are wont to do.

On Sunday, December 28, we enjoyed a glorious meeting. Brother David Dowker preached an inspirational sermon, using as his text, “As ye sow, so shall ye reap.” He pointed out the need of a new, larger, and more modern church house and explained that we could easily build such if we would only do so. But little did we realize that perhaps at the very moment of that exhortation by Brother David, the old church house was on fire, and not all the congregation was out when the blaze began to eat through the ceiling; and in the bitter, biting cold of the great outdoors, for it was a bitter cold day, many of us watched and waited, but of no avail. In just a few hours, despite the fire fighters of the Des Moines Fire Department, who rendered excellent service, and the watching of the Saints and others who stood shivering there, all that was left was the gutted shell of what had been to us as Saints our humble little home. Then with sadness in our hearts we parted and wended our ways to our several habitations.

The day continued cold and the clouds hung low, giving all things a dreary aspect and making our loss more keenly felt. But during the few hours those who knew best were busy, busy looking for a place for us to meet, a place to worship that evening. Our good Brothers Lilly offered the use of their funeral parlors at Twelfth and High Streets until we could get better located, and the Saints who could be reached by telephone were all notified, and we met there that same evening, seemingly a fitting place for the funeral and forgetting of our dead, the destruction of our home.

Brother Benjamin F. Creel, from the Indian Reservation at Omaha, met with us on this occasion. He told us of the effort being put forth to erect a house in which the Indians could worship. He made us feel somewhat at home by explaining that he was quite accustomed to meeting and worshiping with a people with no church house—without a home. We sincerely hope the Indians at Omaha will soon have their building completed.

We have since engaged as a place of worship the Presbyterian Church’s building at the corner of East Ninth and Filmore Streets; and while it is far too small for our congregation, we are having some spiritual meetings there.

On Sunday, January 4, both morning and evening services, we were honored by the presence of the Presiding Bishop, Brother Benjamin R. McGuire, who preached to us in the evening, his subject being, “Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God will shine.” He gave us some wonderful suggestions and they were timely in that they blended right in with our homeless, dependent position. We now have the problem of getting money for a building of our own which, by the help of Him who does all things for the best, we hope to accomplish before the year is past.

Byron, the little son of Brother Lehi Wilkinson, has been dangerously ill for sometime and is in need of God’s blessing. May we each pray God to bless the boy and comfort the parents.

Vinal Haven, Maine

January 4.—The Saints enjoyed a good spirit at the sacramental service with Elder Archie Beggs presiding, and all express a desire to see the work grow and develop this year, trusting it may be a banner year in the ingathering of souls to the kingdom of God.

The Vinal Haven Branch still works in the service of the Lord, but at this season the attendance is not so large, due to some of the Saints moving to other places for employment. Also many live so far from the church it is hard to attend. However, we always find the faithful few, especially Pastor Archie Beggs, who, it seems, never loses one service. He is a live wire for this branch, and has just been reelected branch president for the-coming year.

The Sunday school has a good record in its development under the supervision of Sister Agnes Minton.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is still alive and going ahead under the direction of Brother Ralph Candage.

The Department of Women has discontinued holding supper every fortnight for the winter season.

We wish all the Saints a happy new year in the service of the Lord.

San Jose, California

January 15.—During the holidays the different departments of the church put on a Christmas program which was thought by some to be the best ever had in the branch. It was enjoyed by a full house. Of course a Christmas tree was had in connection with the program.

On the evening of January 4 Apostle Roy S. Budd and District President J. D. White dropped in on us unannounced, and of course gave us a very happy surprise. Brother Budd gave us a splendid sermon, which was timely and to the point. Brother Budd and Brother White were again with us on January 13 at the election of our branch officers. At this time Brother B. R. Gilbert was called and ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood, Brother J. D. White assisting in the ordination. This ordination was duly recommended by the branch, after which Brother Gilbert was chosen to preside the coming year. Elder C. W. Hawkins, the retiring president, will continue his work as a missionary in the district during the remainder of the conference year.

Last evening a very spiritual prayer meeting was held at the church in charge of the new branch president. One sister remarked that it was a one hundred per cent meeting, as every one present took part in the service.

A reception is planned for to-morrow evening in honor of the retiring president and his wife.
Holden Stake

The speakers at the church January 25 were Elders F. A. McWethy and C. F. Scarcliff. Elder John Lovell spoke at the Home.

The young people of Knobnoster, with Brother Earl L. Ross, superintendent of Religio, in charge, visited Holden the 23d and rendered “The pleasures of the world” in the auditorium at the Home. The participants did exceptionally well in their parts, which reflected credit on the Knobnoster Saints, and on the good work of Sister R. B. Henderson, who had the play in charge. A silver offering was received to be applied on redecorating Knobnoster church building. The Holden Orioles conducted a candy sale and turned over their receipts to the same fund. We are pleased to note this spirit of cooperation which prevails among the Saints throughout the stake. May unity and mutual interest continue. A ladies’ quartet composed of Sisters E. L. Ross, Ella Norman, Neva Martin, and Ruth Cook sang a beautiful selection, and Sister Tressa Weeks rendered a very pleasing solo. Sister Earl L. Ross was pianist.

Charles Edward, infant son of Brother and Sister Orion Urfer, died January 26, having graced their home a little less than a month. Services were held at the Goodman Funeral Home, sermon by Elder D. J. Krahlf, Elder I. M. Ross assisting. The little form was laid away beside that of his grandmother who preceded him a few weeks ago.

A number of new babies have taken up their abode with us of late: a son at Brother and Sister Basil Lycaun’s; a son at Mr. and Sister George Dillon’s; a son at Brother and Sister Howard Johnson’s; a daughter at Mr. and Sister James Stuckey’s; a daughter at Brother and Sister T. J. Bradbury’s; and a daughter at Mr. and Sister E. Warren’s. Our cradle roll superintendent, Sister George Taylor, has been unusually active enrolling the new members.

Sedalia

Elder R. D. Weaver is with us again for a series of meetings beginning January 25 with two splendid sermons and a good attendance, with a number of nonmembers. At the evening service a special musical number was rendered by Sisters Graham and Verbal Weaver and Brothers Rodger and Graham.

Brother I. M. Ross, of the bishopric, is with us for a few days. The Religio Department elected officers Friday night: Assistant superintendent and boy leader, W. H. Graham; second assistant and girl leader, Blanche Thistlewaite; secretary, Charles Ferguson; treasurer, Elbert Mock; pianist, Iona Weaver; chorister, Myrtle Moorman. Their meeting will be held at 6 p. m. Sunday, during the series of meetings. Brother M. A. Ferguson is superintendent of this department.

Warrensburg

With the ushering in of the new year comes renewed activities in the church and the departments.

A course of study, including a series of lectures by Mrs. Doctor Bolton, is being planned by the Department of Women. The attendance at Religio is increasing since the time of meeting has been changed to 6:30 Sunday evenings, and two large classes are taking up the study of the social program of the church as outlined in the senior quarterlies for 1924. The choir will soon be more fully organized, and a movement is on foot to organize an orchestra among the younger members. We appreciate the attendance and assistance of the young people from out of town who are students in the college.

On the retiring of R. W. Farrell, W. S. Macrae was chosen pastor, and the annual election of officers resulted in the choice of the following departmental heads: Sunday School, Walter Johnson; Women, Mrs. Minnie Harring; Music, Blanche Morgan; Recreation and Expression, Edgar Raveill.

The placing of a question box conveniently, with request for suggestions, questions, etc., and the holding of an “Everybody’s meeting” to exchange thoughts, discuss methods, etc., resulted in a very interesting meeting and was considered a success, with requests for another. Brother R. Bullard visited amongst us recently and preached three splendid sermons. Sister Joseph Sterling and daughter Matilda, for many years residents of Vernon County, near Eldorado Springs, have bought a residence and moved here. We welcome them to our fellowship.

The report of the budget committee, which asked for $278.89 to finance the church activities for the year 1925, was approved by the body. One treasurer handles the finances of the entire branch, including the departments, and a fine spirit of cooperation is manifest among the Saints. Warrensburg has worked under a budget system for a number of years and finds it both satisfactory and economical.

Independence

Stone Church

Monday night the adjourned meeting of the January conference in the City of Zion completed the conference work. The delegation reported in the Herald was approved. This list will be found on page 66, Herald of January 21.

Bishop J. A. Becker’s annual report, together with the suggested budget for 1925 was considered at length and finally adopted. The reported general deficit of $2,985.82 for 1924 was the basis for agitation that new or additional activities be organized, and the Saints were of the conviction that no good work be discontinued, but that we raise the funds to broaden our work wherever it is found desirable. The new budget calls for expenditures of more than $14,000.

The following resolution was adopted: “Whereas, the Saints are admonished to study the Book of Mormon; and whereas, in Zion and many other branches throughout the entire church, the Zion’s Religio-Literary Society has been reorganized to meet more fully the demand for the study of the Book of Mormon; and whereas, the work of these societies has been a source of comfort and strength to the Saints; be it resolved, that the Saints of Zion in conference assembly hereby petition the coming General Conference to express itself in favor of these worthy movements by authorizing the reorganization of Zion’s Religio-Literary Society for the primary purpose of the study of the Book of Mormon wherever demanded.”

The Laurel Club held twenty-four sessions in 1924 and spent the time in business and social pursuits. A Saint Patrick’s social and a Halloween Party were given. The club had charge of part of the concessions July 4 and were thus enabled to contribute $212.98 to the upkeep of the grounds. Two banquets were served during the year; one to the Sunday school and one to church officials.

A new carpet was furnished for the Stone Church at a cost of $503.75; furnishings for rooms and hall at Campus, $261.49; Sanitarium, $25; the regular donation to the library.

The proceeds of the annual December bazaar were $215.09, much smaller than usual.

The eighteenth anniversary of the club was celebrated May 13 by forty-two Laurels and six guests, and will long be pleasantly remembered.

Work has been handicapped by many removals, much sickness, and one death among the membership.
The regular communion service was held Sunday morning in charge of Pastor J. M. Baker.

In the evening President Elbert A. Smith gave an illustrated lecture on the life of Christ which proved to be an unusual treat to these people. The Second Church quartet assisted President Smith. Pastor C. Ed Miller will give an illustrated lecture next Sunday night, to which all are looking forward with interest.

There has been so much sickness in the congregation recently that many of the usual activities have been almost at a standstill.

East Independence

The Department of Women met at the home of Sister Laura Minton last Thursday to elect officers and plan their work for the year. Sister H. B. Roberts was sustained as superintendent of the department, Sister David Steppe to be her assistant. The class for study will meet each week at the home of Sister Minton. They are studying the Mothercraft Manual, which they believe will prove to be very helpful.

The sacramental service Sunday morning was well attended, and a good spirit was present. The request from the Presidency in regard to prayer was read.

Brother J. J. Teeter was the speaker Sunday evening.

Spring Branch

The debate held last Friday night was a success in that several resolved to devote more time to study in order to be prepared when their time comes.

This being the first month in the new year, the superintendent of the Sunday school announced that we already have twelve dollars towards the Christmas offering for next year. If this record is maintained the goal of $100 for this year's offering will be more than reached.

The sacramental service last Sunday morning was quite well attended, also the Wednesday night service, which was very good. Brother Juliff, who preached in the evening, also had a representative audience.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

The Christmas programs given by the three branches in Council Bluffs were very good. The one given at Central Church was by the departments of the Sunday school. The beginner department opened the program with a number by the "Beginner Orchestra." The little folks were led by one of their own number and kept almost perfect time with their rattles, clappers, drums, etc., with piano accompaniment. A song by the Beginner Choir was very good, also led by one of the little girls of the department. A number of recitations completed the contribution of this department.

The primaries were represented by a play by the boys and girls, which brought out very clearly the meaning of Christmas. The junior department gave a dialogue and song, and the Girls' Chorus closed the program with a Christmas carol. The talent of these young folks promises much for the progress of the "church of to-morrow."

The program of the Riverside Branch was of exceptional merit.

The Belmont program consisted of a play entitled "A rummage sale of Hickory Hollow"; the rummage sale being given for the purpose of buying an organ for the village church. Some musical numbers and recitations finished the program.

A number of Christmas parties were given, which helped to arouse the Christmas spirit. The Girls' Chorus was entertained by the leaders at the home of Helen Anderson, on

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Monday preceding Christmas. A mock wedding, games, and music furnished the fun for the evening, after which the members of the chorus gathered around the table which was decorated with a huge snowball as a centerpiece, with red streamers from the ball to the places, which were marked with place cards. Just before the second course the leader and her assistant were made to stand in a corner, and the president of the chorus, with an appropriate speech, presented them with lovely gifts, which of course were truly appreciated by the recipients. We are all very proud of this chorus, as they have rendered fine service to the branch in various ways, and are developing their talents so as to use them in ever-broadening avenues of service of God.

The Hiawatha Chapter of Temple Builders held a Christ­mas party at the home of the branch girl leader, Mrs. W. T. Spanswick. Games, music, a grab bag, and the initiation of two new members furnished the amusement. Refreshments and the singing of carols finished the evening.

The Vava-Win-Go Chapter has had two meetings since the first of the year. They are preparing a play to be given in February.

The Chrysalis Chapter, girls from the Riverside Branch, were entertained at the home of Sister Spanswick the evening of January 20. They are studying “Home furnishings” and find it interesting.

The Wu-Ho-Lo Chapter enjoyed a wiener roast at Fair­mont Park one evening not long ago. They met at the home of their monitor, Sister Bessie Mattison. Mr. Mattison took them to the park in his car. After they arrived at the park, a fire was built in the brick stove and preparations made to roast the winiers, when to their horror they found they had forgotten them, so their faithful servant, Mr. Mattison, was sent back after them. A few games were played, after which they climbed into the car and returned to the Mattison home where more games and music were enjoyed.

The Oak Leaf Circle of Orioles was entertained at the Christmas party at the home of their mother, Sister Grace Kern, December 29. A feature of the evening was a large Christmas tree, upon which each girl had placed a gift for another.

The Department of Women held its regular business and social meeting Thursday, January 15. The meeting was in charge of the newly elected superintendent, Mrs. O. A. Currie. Reports of the different departments were a source of encouragement. One interesting item noticed in the reports was the enrollment of one hundred babies in the cradle roll. Election of officers took place at this meeting, resulting in the choice of Sister Bessie Mattison as assistant to Mrs. Currie. The employment bureau, in charge of Hattie Hall, is a new department added this year because of the serious need of this kind of work. A welcome committee of six was also elected, three to act the first six months of the year, the other three to act the last six months of the year. They also appointed a dish committee and an invitation committee. A very fine spirit of cooperation and willingness to serve was manifest at the meeting. About seventy-eight were present.

The Department of Recreation and Expression has had some very interesting programs of late. A series of three contest programs was started by the Pyla Class when they presented four of their members in a debate. The second program was a Christmas play given by the Alethean Class, a class of girls of 15 to 19 years. The name of the play was “Aunt Sabriny’s Christmas.” Between the scenes Kathryn Skinner gave a Christmas reading. The play was very well presented and taught a good lesson in kindness. The third program was given by the boys of the Co Mor Class and represented a “Rube Band” from “Punkin Center.” The costumes and “quips” were indeed clever. A vocal quartet also presented two selections. The programs were judged by three members of other classes who decided in favor of the Aletheans, which resulted in the members of that class being honor guests at an oyster supper and New Year's watch party given by the Pyla and Co Mor Classes.

At the branch election in December Brethren Roy Epper­son and Roy Murphy were chosen to have charge of the Central School for this year. They have departmentized the school quite completely, keeping the beginner, primary, junior, intermediate, senior, and adult departments distinct, with a superintendent in charge of each. These six department heads constitute a cabinet or council to the superintendents of the school. The superintendent, with this cabinet, are to determine and outline the policies of the school and arrange programs for the teachers’ and officers’ meetings.

Young girls are being used as secretary and organist in the beginner, primary, and junior departments, with a view to developing them for future leadership. One young ladies’ class has taken up the Gracland normal course, and another is taking up the study of the beginner and primary quarters from the standpoint of the teacher, seeking the best methods of presenting the lessons to the little folks. We hope to see some real teachers develop from these classes.

At the beginning of the year the school started on an excursion on the C. B. C. (Council Bluffs Central) Railway, the train to stop each Sunday long enough for the school session and then resume its journey. Each of the six departments has a coach, the object being to see if the number of passen­gers can be increased each time the train starts out, and which department can have the largest percentage of its enrollment aboard. Considerable interest seems to be manifested in this excursion, also in the move complete department­izing of the school.

The music department has passed through its reorganiza­tion period, and in all the groups of the branch, those connected with this department are cooperating for a successful year. Everything is in good condition, and little by little improvement is shown. In the very near future, it is the plan of the director, Brother Roy Murphy, to have a get­together meeting of all vocalists and instrumentalists at Central Church, when a general outline of the work will be presented to this organization. Also it is the plan to have an entertainment on the 17th of March, and then about every three months one evening will be devoted to entertainment. A great work is ahead of this department, and with cooperation from every member it will be successful. The music department consists of about one hundred and fifty members and is divided into six groups, Central Branch Choir, Belmont Choir, Riverside Choir, Orchestra at Central Church, Girls’ Chorus, and Young Men’s Glee Club. Besides these groups there are choristers for three Sunday schools and three Religo societies. In the near future it is planned to organize the band, and with new talent coming into the church, it will no doubt be a reality. A class for leaders will be organized soon also. From time to time concerts will be given by the orchestra and possibly by all the choirs, but during the fall months a concert will be given by all choirs combined into one large chorus which will be assisted by the orchestra.

Brother J. F. Martin is now holding a series of meetings, and much interest is manifest, especially among the young people. The meetings started Wednesday, January 21, and will continue until the first of February. On Friday evening, January 23, an entertainment and social was given at Central Church. A program was given in the auditorium after which the people retired to the basement for “fun.” Brother Martin proved himself a very good entertainer as well as a good preacher. Refreshments were served after the games.
were glad to see a large number from the Riverside and Bel-month Branches in attendance.

Sunday morning the sermon was especially for the children, and was a splendid illustration of baptism and its purpose.
Brother Martin illustrated his sermon with blackboard work and objects, and we are sure the children will not soon forget the lessons. A young people’s choir filled the choir platform, and the Girls’ Chorus rendered the special anthem. Brother Martin wins the hearts and confidence of the people, and is a source of inspiration to the young.

Sioux City, Iowa

January 23.—At the mid-monthly priesthood meeting on January 20 officers were elected. It was decided by the members to study the Doctrine and Covenants at these meetings.
Prayers were offered in behalf of the membership who are ill. Refreshments were served by the Department of Women, and all expressed themselves as enjoying the event. A number of the priesthood attended a meeting of that body in Council Bluffs on November 30. They report a good spiritual meeting. President Smith’s talk on “Stewardship” was well received, resulting in a broader vision of this important principle.

Elder Amos Lawson and family have moved to Wagner,
South Dakota, where a new branch will soon be organized.
Missionary Charles J. Smith has just returned from there and reports favorable conditions.

Sunday school officers for 1925 were elected the second Sunday of December, at which time Jay E. Keck was chosen superintendent. For the Religio, Milo O. Hall was chosen president.

The Christmas program was enjoyed by a well-filled church.
Much credit is due Brother Charles J. Smith and the several committees who were responsible for its success. Brother Robert Sheetz, acting as the children’s Santa, was the center of attraction, as he and his corps of Boy Scouts distributed the many presents and the bulging bags of candy, apples, and nuts. We feel it was a success because of the desire each had to give the true Christmas spirit, and that all the little hearts were made glad. About a dozen baskets were distributed Christmas Day under the supervision of the Department of Women.

Bishop J. A. Koehler, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, and Elder Charles B. Woodstock, of Mondamin, Iowa, were among the speakers in our local the past month.

N. O. Calhoun, Charles J. Smith, and Mrs. Bessie Johnson attended the quarterly conference at Missouri Valley January 2 to 4. They reported good spiritual meetings. This conference was of an educational nature, as only very necessary business was transacted. The district presidency was instructed by this conference to consider the advisability of a young people’s convention in June or July, to include neighboring districts. Forensics and track will be included in the program.

The annual election of officers resulted in the choice of W. W. Baker as pastor.

J. E. Keck, superintendent of the district Religio, visited the Logan local January 11. The reunion committee, in a one hundred per cent meeting, has designated August 21 to 30, at Woodbine, as the time and place for the Little Sioux district reunion.

The semiannual election of the Department of Women resulted in the choice of Mrs. W. W. Baker as president.
The Temple Builders injunction Maude Dickey for their leader.

According to the reports of the Sunday school, three hundred and fifty-nine visited that department during 1924.
The Christmas offering was over $255.

Utleyville, Colorado

January 19.—Brother H. L. Bausell, our branch president, has been doing his work nobly since the organization of the branch in November. As the remainder of those holding the priesthood were only recently ordained, it has been his lot to carry practically the entire burden.

While Brother Bausell was ministering to a group of Saints about twenty miles east of here, where he has an appointment each month, Brother M. L. Beebe preached splendidly for us here at Utleyville, on the subject of Zion.
Many points were brought out which were helpful to the Saints. This was his first sermon, and we believe that God has indeed blessed the effort which he has made, and we can see in him the qualities which promise a successful ministerial career.

We have received much encouragement and strength through the Wednesday night prayer meetings which have recently been started, and our highest ambitions are that we may so conduct the work here that this branch may receive the wonderful promises which were given it through prophecy at the recent district conference at Colorado Springs, upon condition that we were faithful to our Master.

Des Moines Has $27,027 Pledged for New Church

Sunday, January 25, the Saints of Des Moines had a financial rally for their new church, as their church was completely destroyed by fire on December 28. The Saints of Des Moines Branch pledged $25,060, and Saints outside of the branch, but inside the district, pledged $1,967, making a total up to date of $27,027 pledged for the new $50,000 church edifice.

Chairman William Robinson had charge of the meeting and used as a slogan on a large chart, “How did they build Kirtland Temple? By sacrifice.”

Doctor G. F. Hull gave a good talk on “Faith” and told how some of the great church leaders left all to preach the gospel, having faith that God would help if they did their part. District President Henry Castings also gave a talk on “Sacrifice,” in which he outlined the sacrifice of great leaders of the past, and also the sacrifice that the Saints of Des Moines and the district were making. He told of a young lady making only thirty dollars a month who had saved four hundred dollars in the last five years, and she had pledged one hundred dollars for the new church. She was not a mem-er of the Des Moines Branch, either. He also told of a man seventy-nine years old who is still working for a living. He pledged twenty-five dollars, and he, too, is not a member of this branch.

A wonderful spirit prevailed throughout the meeting, which lasted over two hours. Short statements were also made by Pastor David E. Dowker, Elder J. L. Parker, Anderson White, Carl Nitz, F. A. Deckstader, Evan Lilly, Elder L. E. Ande-son, J. W. Rudkin, Joe Johnson, and others.

Brother Castings had charge of raising the pledges, and many rejoiced as the pledges were made and saw the Spirit of God working with His people. There was no opportunity for the Saints of Des Moines to subscribe less than one hundred dollars, but this privilege will be granted later.
It seems evident from what has been pledged to date, and what will be pledged by the Saints of the branch, the district, and Saints and friends outside the district, as well as by business men of the city, that the new $50,000 church will soon be built.

Former Saints of Des Moines, and other Saints and friends wishing to subscribe, may do so by sending their subscription

to District President Henry Castings, 1311 East Ninth Street; to Chairman Will Robinson, 1311 Twenty-First Street; to Branch Treasurer R. D. Williams, 1316 Buchanan Street; or Pastor David E. Dowker, 1102 East Twelfth Street, all of Des Moines, Iowa.

The Saints here are now holding meetings at the east side Presbyterian church, located at East Ninth and Filmore Streets. The district conference will be held here February 6, 7, and 8, convening Friday, February 6, at nine o'clock in the morning. Meetings for February 6 and 7 will be held at the church, but on the 8th they will be held at Hopac Grotto Hall, Eighth and Locust Streets, third floor, with entrance on Eighth Street.

May we have the prayers and support of the Saints that our new church may soon be dedicated to God?

Fresno, California

At the annual business meeting held January 7 for the election of officers, Brother A. S. Vocaw was chosen branch president to succeed Brother Samuel Wood, who tendered his resignation. J. B. Fugate was elected superintendent of the Sunday school, to be assisted by Henry Johnson, while Sister Lullie Jennings will act as president of the Religious Society. No changes were made in the building committee, headed by Brother Wood. Mrs. N. Crane will preside over the Department of Women.

On January 18 Brother Wood preached his farewell sermon, addressing one of the largest audiences attending the local church in the past year. To Brother Wood is due the credit for undertaking the rebuilding and redecorating of the church. For this and other untiring devotion to his congregation, he received a vote of thanks at the business meeting.

The church at Fresno is located at 2414 East Ninth Street.

Denver, Colorado

January 19.—We have been having a long siege of cold weather, the mercury going as low as thirty below zero in some localities. The building business, which is the principal industry in Denver, has been at a standstill for several weeks.

The Sunday school Christmas entertainment was a success, but the cold kept some away.

Sunday, January 4, there was a large congregation present, it being sacramental service, and also a special fasting and prayer service for Brother Byron Shupe. He has been under the doctor's care for several months, and they have not seemed to be doing him much good. His disease is a peculiar one and one the doctors know but little about (Hotchkiss Disease). We are glad to say that since the fast meeting he seems very much better, and we are still hoping and praying for his complete recovery.

Sunday, the 11th, Elder Frank B. Almond was the speaker both morning and evening.

Sunday, the 18th, Elder Clarence Bruno spoke in the morning and Elder E. J. Williams in the evening.

We have to thank a couple of young men not of the church for their assistance in the Sunday school orchestra, the McMillian brothers. They play different instruments and are a great help in Sunday school music.

The Department of Women has taken up class study of child welfare and other interesting subjects. There seems to be a renewed interest in this department.

The L. D. S. Mizpah Club came out to Littleton recently to play basket ball with Littleton high, but returned concluding they did not know much about the game, the way Littleton beat them.

Sister Francis Shuall of Monte Vista, who is attending Agricultural College at Fort Collins, and Brother Everett Shupe, who is attending Colorado University at Boulder, came down for the week end, and to worship with the Saints Sunday, the 18th.

sensing of things in common, the feeling of fellowship and patriotism, rather than a force or a strong personality above them which calls out the best in men and holds them together. The real distinctiveness of Christianity consists in the ability to diffuse power and to enable every man to express his latent abilities to the full. The real wisdom of the church and that which is of the greatest value in its progress does not emanate from some supermind, but is compounded in the common experience of the group.

Government through priesthood among the people is turning back the dial of progress thousands of years and surrendering to paganism. It is a concession that Catholicism and Utah Mormonism have the right concept of government.

Government through priesthood among the people establishes a religious aristocracy and confirms the saying that some men are born to rule and others are only competent to be ruled.

Government through priesthood among the people means that the people are not capable of self-government and must be governed by those capable of doing so.

Government through priesthood among the people is a renunciation of the principles of democracy and freedom as set forth in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and all the revelations of God, ancient and modern.

Government through priesthood among the people is an invasion of the rights guaranteed in the Declaration of Independence and our national Constitution.

Government through priesthood among the people will result in a surrender of the rights of conscience which have come down to us as a heritage of centuries of conflict and struggle.

Government through priesthood among the people is a repudiation of the ideals, hopes, and purposes of Christians throughout the world in all ages and among all people.

Government through priesthood among the people overthrows that fine spirit of comradeship and brotherhood which characterized the ministry of Jesus Christ, establishing in its place that form of church government which crucified him.

The Problem of What We Should Eat

Probably there is no one subject upon which there is wider divergence of opinion than the diet we should follow. One school of extremists would condemn the use of all animal food, including lard and butter, and even refuse baked goods in which such articles are used as shortening.

Another class refuses anything which is cooked, subsists upon raw fruits, vegetables, and grains, and sees nothing in nature to justify any other course.

And from these extremes to the other, which admits to the menu any article of food with an acceptable aroma and flavor, without question as to its source of production, there are so many shades as to make classification next to impossible.

We are of the opinion that the physical conditions and needs of individuals have considerable bearing on the right or wrong of the use of many articles of diet, for it is wrong to eat and drink those substances which do not build up, but rather are impediments to the development of body and mind.

Is it not true, also, that there are few, if any, circumstances under which unclean, filthy, decayed, or quasi-poisonous substances may be used for food, and that use be legitimate? We think so.

Outside the wonderful revelation known as section 86 of Doctrine and Covenants, there are others which indicate a medium and conservative ground, independent of any organized school. Refer to Doctrine and Covenants 49:3, where the following language is found:

Whoso forbiddeth to abstain from meats, that man should not eat the same, is not ordained of God; for, behold, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance. . . . And woe be unto that man that sheddeth blood and hath no need.

Of certain principles we may be very sure, and for our own course it should not be difficult to arrive at safe conclusions. We are quite sure that the excessive use of animal food is not good for man. God’s word says so in no uncertain words, and the experience and research of good men with open minds give it support. Total abstinence from animal foods is not borne out by the great majority of men engaged in research along this line, and is not supported by the word of God. General care to avoid extremes, adulteration, stimulants, intoxicants, opiates, is dictated by refinement, reason, science, and God’s word.

Recently we received from a sister a lengthy letter on the general subject, and from it we gather some rather unusual bits for consideration. The one on the feeding of animals to be used for human consumption is not new, having been presented by Lord Shaftesbury years ago, but it is pertinent. She says:

People feed tankage (a rank poison) to their hogs and chickens. The smell of this stuff bears witness to the filth contained in it. There is no doubt but it produces influenza, worms, fever, and likely cancer. A tankage egg will not keep; it is spoiled to begin with, and you may obtain evidence of the fact upon smelling its contents when you open the shell. A visit to the place of the manufacture of tankage should be enough to condemn its use in any way.

In one of the large cities a man brought his wife, two children, and his niece, to an expert eye physician. They all wore glasses, their eyes were sore, their throats inflamed (in the month of May), and the doctor asked, “Do you live on a farm?” “Yes.” “Feed tankage?” “Yes.” “Well, sir; that is the cause of your trouble. Tankage is rank poison; it breeds fever and disease. You eat the meat, and the poison goes to the weak points of the body.”

Now, why not our people eat good dried sweet corn, hominy, dried or evaporated fruits, vegetables, and home-canned stuffs? Hominy is a good substitute for meat, . . . dried sweet corn cannot be beaten for food value; evaporated carrots, turnips, celery, cabbage, etc., are nice and good food. Write me personally if you want to investigate this, or to get recipes.

The sister is Nellie Martin, 1116½ Second Street, Perry, Iowa. We are interested in her viewpoint, and believe that good will come of a consideration of her suggestions.

God has not left his children without guideposts, and those who would learn wisdom may find a starting point and foundation in the Word of Wisdom, section 86 of Doctrine and Covenants. R. J. L.

The Two Optional Philosophies of Life

Indeed, young people, we have but two directions to travel, either toward a society in which we join more and more intimately in solving the world's problems, in which each individual is more and more permitted to make his fullest contribution to the solution of our social problems, our common problems; or toward a society in which but few and ever fewer are permitted to enter in upon the task of solving the world's problems, and who dictate to the rest of us just how we shall act during moments of exigency. There are two directions toward which society can travel, either toward democracy or toward oligarchy, either toward love or hate. There are indeed those among us who would travel oligarchy-ward, largely because they feel that the world's problems can best be solved by the contribution of the select few, and the rest following in militaristic obedience. It is a rather interesting situation when we contemplate the fact that those who are traveling oligarchy-ward see no other cure for the evils of society than to travel faster toward oligarchy; while those who are traveling democracy-ward see no other cure for the evils of society than to travel faster toward democracy. What a difference one's point of view has in determining his philosophy of life. But on the whole we feel the world is traveling democracy-ward. The democratizing process is on the increase. And Youth is going to be permitted more and more to enter in upon the project of having an object of devotion in common with adults and of expressing his love for that object by bettering that object mutually with one another. By mutually bettering our object of devotion, we express our love for our object, and indeed increase our love for it; by mutually bettering our object of devotion, we increase the experience of love between ourselves. So intricately is the experience of love involved in our lives.

That this process of increasing love is on the increase is seen in the family life, when children are increasingly taken into the family council to determine what the family shall do; it is seen in the state when youth has more and more experience in actually joining in with adults in putting over community projects; it is seen in our international relationships, as evidenced by the League of Nations. Of course all along the way there are those who become fearful of the process and feel that it is being pushed faster than it should and would check its increase. This is evidenced by the American Nation determining itself that Japanese shall not enter its borders without taking the Japanese into the conference mutually to determine what should be done. But these people who would forever stop the process at some one point have only two recourses; either that of keeping the rest of us ignorant whom they do not want to have part in mutually loving, or of killing us off. To satisfy us in the meantime they provide us with "amusements." If we want to keep the Japanese from desiring and demanding a right to make a contribution to the solution of our problems, we should never have permitted Perry to enter their harbor nor should we have permitted their young men and women to enter American universities. Knowledge stimulates this desire to share in the mutual evaluation of the world's problems.

Those of our fearful church members who would restrain us from taking an active part in reconstructing our church, those of our church who are fearful of love, will some day discover that there is only one way to get the youth of the church to love the church, and that is to give them an increasing share in helping to determine the answer to the problems with which their beloved object, the church, is concerned. They will learn that the loyalty and love of the youth for the church is not built up and retained by such artificial stimuli as by "compromising" them on "amusements"; activity that drains their energy and turns their mind from the creative purpose of bettering the object of their devotion; "amusements" which provide them with a succession of exciting pleasures and satisfactions, thus keeping them from the eternal satisfaction of having a big object of devotion and of trying to make it better. They will finally discover that there is only one way to keep our youth from running away from the church, and that is to provide us with a great social creative purpose toward bettering our social relationships; a purpose toward making our church the supreme expression of the will of God among men; a purpose so big, so comprehensive, so appealing, so all inclusive as to claim our every energy, and provide us with a value that is big enough to attract our every interest and use our every talent; a purpose so big and socially comprehensive as to provide us the deepest of satisfactions in life, the satisfactions which come from having a vast purpose, an eternal purpose, upon which we can all join whole-heartedly, ever more mutually, ever with increasing love. They shall find that then we shall spurn the artificial stimulants which some of them, fearful of our love, would have us take in order to narcotize us.

Oh, for the possession of that great creative social purpose of making better the object of our devotion. But happily, young lovers of the church, we are a long way toward the possession of that great social purpose. That’s just what our Zionic project offers. But some seem to think that Zion means that we will reconstruct the world and not the church. Primarily the Zionic project by necessity involves the reconstruction of the church, and then secondarily the reconstruction of the world as a resulting corollary. Of course it does not mean the first one and then the other, as the reconstruction of the church and of the world will go along simultaneously, but rather primarily one and secondarily the other. Our chief fear is that some, fearful of the principle of love in its application and fearful of our intellectual integrity, will not want to give us the opportunity to express ourselves in this Zionic project; but in order to protect the past from change, in order to keep the church from being changed, and hence from being reconstructed, they will want to devise a system of education that as suggested above will keep us momentarily and continuously happy with frivolous play and activity.

We Must Grow Into the Activity of Love

True, as long as we have inexperienced children, parents cannot permit them to enter on the basis of full fellowship in evaluating the problems of the world; but parents who believe in increasing the brotherhood of man can easily adopt a system of education that will permit and indeed prepare the child to enter very soon into the process of mutual evaluation of our common problems. True, as long as we are youth and lack the experience of our fathers, we must not expect the full fellowship with them, perhaps, in the process of bettering our church; nor perhaps need we expect full fellowship with our minister, whom we have set apart to especially spend his efforts in solving the problems of taking the church ever toward increasing human brotherhood. But we by no means should be satisfied with what they are doing or have accomplished. Those in our church who would restrain our youth from having a share, a free share in making our full contribution to the solution of our church problems, do not have a right to adopt a system of education which will keep us as coming adults unduly from this opportunity to make our fullest contribution to the solution of the church’s problems. In fact, we shall contend for a system of education that will as fast as possible free us from the incapacity and inexperience of childhood, and thus permit us to have a share in expressing our full bit of devotion to our church.

Youth, in these days of struggle over whether we shall be permitted to thus exercise our love toward some great dynamic social creative purpose, as a church might provide us, a church which names the name of Jesus, there is only one thing for us to do. That is, to prepare. The main essence of that preparation is the practicing of the very process of mutual evaluation upon those purposes which society will permit us to have. Let it never be said of us that we were not willing to listen to one another’s views with the greatest of respect, whether we agree with them or not; let it be said of us in the future that less and less conferences of the church are absorbed with crises that are raised because we do not listen one to another; because we have conflicting views, and are not willing to enter upon a process of mutual evaluation. Let us enter, to the limit that our church fathers will permit us, on great social purposes. Let the woof and warp of our activity be dyed through with an undying devotion to some great cause or causes. Let our play, our recreation, be factors in the accomplishment of these great social purposes. And while we are waiting patiently for our church fathers to acquire a faith in us, let us prepare in study to take up the great purpose of bettering the church when some day it is ours, and we are permitted by virtue of the passing years, and our attaining adulthood to identify the church with our very selves, our self, us. Let each prepare in his place to his fullest capacity. Let each prepare to his fullest. Let us study the activities of all men that are relevant to the purposes of our church which we now conceive. Let us study the past, the history of nations and peoples; let us associate with men of the past, Moses, David, Socrates, Plato, Cicero, Thomas Aquinas, Martin Luther, Savonarola, Gladstone, Lincoln, and even Napoleon—men of all walks of life—in order to find what they have to contribute to the solution of the problems of modern society, and hence our church, if it wishes to help modern society solve its problems. Let us study the Bible from every angle; let us study it in its historical setting, in its literary setting, in its prophetic setting, in its inspirational setting, in order that we make our Bible give its fullest contribution to the reconstruction of our common object of devotion, our church. Likewise, let us study the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. Let us associate with contemporaneous men, especially those of great minds in all the constructive activities of mankind, both within and without the church; let us even associate with great minds with whom we do not agree; for, perchance, they may have something quite valuable for us. If we are honest seekers after truth, we cannot but hope that honest minds who are opposed to our view will have the best opportunity to put their views before us in order that those views may be tested, both on the anvil of logic and of experience. Let us also cultivate the spirit of the prophet in looking ahead, in looking down the stream of time, imagining the type of society that we are going to assist our church in making; let us imagine in ever-increasing display the brotherhood of man, in which we are permitting ever increasingly every man to make his fullest contribution to the solution of the world's problems; and with the use of our intellects, let us go about to struggle to attain that increase.

Also let us commune and associate with our fellow adults within the church, to get the advantages of their experience. We children were not born into a world of children, all of whom are inexperienced; but we were born into a world made up mostly of adults whose experience we must acquire should we at all desire to better the world. We youth were not born into a world of youth inexperienced relatively with adults; but we were born into a world of adults, whose experience is richer than ours. With these we must work; to these we must give respect because of their larger knowledge and richer experience.

One of the ailments with us youth is that we do not associate with adults enough. We do not join cooperatively enough with them on life's projects. But above all, let us very frequently commune with the Great Creative Purpose and Goodwill, which is bigger and inclusive of all of ourselves, God, who is going along with us and working along with us as a loving Father. From him we shall receive a newness of life and purpose when apparently insurmountable obstacles seem to loom up in our pathway toward increasing Love.

We shall make our mistakes, of course; but if we ever remember that love means a close inspection, a close analysis, a close criticism of what our aims and methods are; if we ever remember that love permits us to refine our aims, even to discover new and unprecedented aims, as all the holy prophets of the past have done, if we remember that love permits us to choose new aims, and to struggle to attain them; if we ever remember that love demands that we use our intellects and our emotions to accomplish our purposes; we shall cast out all fear from the hearts of those who feel that the way of Jesus is not the way for mankind. Thus will our Lord be vindicated. He shall not have died in vain.

K.L.D.S Adds to Broadcasting Schedule

Beginning next Sunday, February 15, K.L.D.S will broadcast, in addition to the two preaching services, a special sacred song service, starting at five o'clock in the afternoon. This new schedule will be of the nature of a vesper service, and will consist of sacred music, principally familiar hymns, and a short talk.

At the hour chosen listeners should experience little if any interference, there being very few stations on the air between five and six o'clock. The great number of broadcasting stations using wave lengths similar to that employed by K.L.D.S has created a condition of exceedingly bad interference, and many members will welcome the new schedule.

Elder Ralph W. Farrell has been obtained to give the first series of talks for the radio vesper service. He is well known throughout the country for his radio talks and sermons and will be welcomed as the first speaker for the new radio cast schedule.

Those in charge of the radio vesper service are anxious to make it just what our church listeners want it to be. Suggestions will be gladly received. Special request numbers will be sung or played whenever possible. Communications regarding this service should be addressed to Director Radio K.L.D.S, Independence, Missouri.

A Brother Disappears From His Detroit Home

From Elder G. R. Kuykendall, 5021 Commonwealth Avenue, Detroit, Michigan, we have the following:

Brother Thomas Forbes, of Detroit, recently left home at the customary hour for his work at one of the hospitals, where he is chief electrician, but did not report for duty and has not been seen since by any of his family, consisting of a wife and little children. This was more than a month back. A few years have passed since he once before disappeared, and noting an account of his disappearance in the newspapers, he realized what he had done and returned home.

He is about six feet tall; is thirty-six years old; is of dark complexion, with straight hair; weighs around one hundred and sixty pounds. Is quiet, unassuming, capable, and well behaved. He suffered an injury some years back, but is also believed to be undergoing severe mental strain.

Communicate with Brother Kuykendall if a stranger should visit your branch who might be Brother Forbes.

The Glory of Lincoln

Who builds of stone a shrine to bear his name
Shall be forgot when months and years have flown;
Who writes his name upon the scroll of fame,
The centuries shall find to men unknown;
But who for fellow men endured the shame
Shall have eternal glory for his own.

The Question of Authority

BY O. SALISBURY, PRESIDENT OF FAR WEST STAKE

It was my pleasure on the evening of September 11, 1924, to hear one of our apostles preach a very splendid sermon on the above subject. It was handled in a way that the children seemed to grasp the import of the message. The sermon was clear and did not antagonize even those not of the faith. The brother very ably showed that only those who held official rights could act for God. The next day, while traveling, I attempted to carry the line of argument into all our church work.

I first pictured an apostle in this church and a minister of another church, both scholastic men, contending; one claiming that only those called of God, and set apart, can act for God; the other with equal zeal and earnestness contending that a desire to work for God and the Bible gave him the right to act for God.

I said to myself, This difference plainly sets out that an apostle has rights and privileges not enjoyed by others. In other words, the apostle is superior in the work of God to the other minister.

Which of these two shall we follow? You say, The apostle. All right; if we do, he, to that extent, becomes our leader.

I said, Apostle D. T. Williams and High Priest O. Salisbury both hold the high priesthood. Does my brother have priesthood rights that I, as a high priest, do not have?

Directional Control No New Thing

I recall Doctrine and Covenants 104:17:

It is the duty of the twelve in all large branches of the church, to ordain evangelical ministers, as they shall be designated unto them by revelation.

As a high priest, I cannot do that.

It is the duty of the twelve to ordain and set in order all the officers of the church, agreeably to the revelations, etc., reads Doctrine and Covenants 104:30. A high priest cannot do that unless authorized to do so by higher authority.

A brother apostle enters Far West Stake where I am presiding, and differences arise. The apostle is called in, and he differs with the stake presidency. How shall the matter be settled? Is there nothing in our law that gives some one the superior right or, in other words, the authority to settle the difference? Yes; the Lord has spoken. Turn to Doctrine and Covenants 120:4, which plainly states that the apostle has the official right to make the final decision, subject to appeal. This law, therefore, makes my brother apostle my superior officer; and in this matter, for the time being, he has the supreme directional control. He is, then, for the present, my leader.

If differences arise as to the meaning of certain parts of our law, to whom shall I go? Determined to follow out the principle set out, that I must go to the proper authority, I search the record, and what do I find? General Conference Resolution number 386: That the members of the Presidency are leading interpreters and teachers of the law and revelation of God, and are of right presidents of the General Assemblies of the church. This unequivocally places the First Presidency in this matter at the supreme head, giving them under the law the supreme authority in the matter of interpretation of the law. I, therefore, must go to that quorum for the information as to the interpretation of law when serious differences arise.

This carries out the idea that there is supreme directional control in at least some departments of our work. It is well, then, to examine and see to what extent this quorum, known as the First Presidency, has jurisdiction; just how far and in what way are they the chief leaders of the church? Going to Doctrine and Covenants 105:12 we read:

For unto you (the twelve), and those (the first presidency), who are appointed with you, to be your counselors and your leaders, is the power of this priesthood given, for the last days and for the last time.

This law places one quorum over the other, making the First Presidency the leaders. This points out still further directional control. Let us now read Doctrine and Covenants 107:39:

I give unto you my servant Joseph, to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer, and prophet. I give unto him for counselors my servant Sidney Rigdon and my servant William Law, that these may constitute a quorum and first presidency, to receive the oracles for the whole church.

You notice that the chief quorum of the church is to preside over the whole church; no stake, no district, no department of the church is exempt. Webster says preside means, “To occupy the place of authority, of control, as of president or chairman. To exercise superintendence, guidance, or control, as God presides over man’s destiny.”

In Doctrine and Covenants 104:42 we read, “And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church.” Does this mean that this president is to be in directional control of one part and not another part, when the law says the whole church? Let us now notice Doctrine and Covenants 122:2:

The burden of the care of the church is laid on him who is called to preside over the high priesthood of the church, and on those who are called to be his counselors; and they shall teach according to the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and as they shall be directed by revelation from time to time.

To preside over, is to occupy the place of authority or control; so says Webster's Dictionary.

Directional control, then, is not a new theory but a doctrine established by revelation and approved in the regular order by common consent. You will now notice General Conference Resolution number 238:

The Bishops were created by and responsible to the church for the proper administration of their duty, should not, in justice, be made finally responsible to the Twelve, in any other sense than all other church officers are responsible to the same quorum; that is, by proper charge and adjudication before the general church officers, or by decision of General Conference.

Discretionary power to receive and disburse church funds, and dispose of church property for the uses of the church, according to the laws of the church, must rest in the Bishops only, as, by law, the Bishopric only are legal custodians of such properties;

It is likewise the duty of a teacher to see there is no iniquity in the church (Doctrine and Covenants 17); but all agree that he does his work under the direction of superior officers.

It is likewise contemplated in the law that the Bishopric is under the First Presidency. It is so understood by the majority. Read General Conference resolution 386:7:

That the Presidency is the leading quorum in the church. That the duty of presiding over the church devolves on that quorum. That it is the prerogative of the President to preside over the whole church, to bear the responsibility of the care and oversight of the work of the church, in all its different departments.

Does the law provide that the Presidency is to have any supervision of church finance? Read revelation of 1861, Doctrine and Covenants 114. Nothing there that speaks directly on the question of the presidency, but it has its bearing as explained in revelation of 1894, Doctrine and Covenants 122:5:

When I said unto mine apostles, "The twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing; and let them before God see to it, that the temporal means so obtained is truly used for the purposes of the church, and not as a weapon of power in the hands of one man for the oppression of others, or for purposes of self-aggrandizement by anyone, be he whomsoever he may be"; the one whom I had called to preside over the church, had not yet approved himself unto the scattered flock; and I gave this command unto the quorum next in authority in spiritual things that the scattered ones, and those who had been made to suffer might have assurance that I would not suffer that he whom I had called should betray the confidence of the faithful, nor squander the moneys of the treasury for the purposes of self. And for the reason that the law of tithing was but little understood, and would not be observed, unless it should be taught, and enforced by the precepts of the chief missionaries of the church. It was not then intended, nor is it now, to burden them with the duty of looking after the disbursements of the moneys in the treasury, or the management of the properties of the church; except as it may be at times necessary to do so in council with the presidency, the high council in case of exigency, the bishopric, bishops, or bishop's agents abroad, or the conferences; and in accordance with the agreement hitherto made. Whatever burden the quorum may have felt rested upon them in this regard, they are now absolved from, the end designed by it having been reached; except that should it become apparent to the quorum that there was abuse in the administration of the temporal affairs of the church, they shall at once make such inquiry and examination through the proper officers of the church as will correct the evil and save the church from injury.

You note the revelation of 1861 and the one of 1894 are closely related, the latter explaining the former. Due to the existing conditions as explained, the President at the time, 1861, has not proved himself to the flock; hence the burden was partly transferred, for the time, to the Quorum of Twelve. But it was not intended that the Twelve should look after disbursing the moneys except as it becomes necessary to do so in council with the Presidency and other officers. The Twelve could not sit with the Presidency to counsel with the Presidency in financial matters, if the Presidency did not have something to do with church finances. But note in this council of Twelve, Presidency, and others in case of exigency, the Presidency is recognized as the head over all, again centralizing directional control, thus making the Presidency over the financial arm as the General Conference stated in the resolution cited.

This full right under the law, however, President Smith is not claiming. His position as stated before the April council, quoted in the Herald of August 27, 1924, page 824, by six members of the Quorum of Twelve, is as follows:

I do not claim the right to dispense the funds of the church. My contention is not that in this matter I am supreme. It is that the Bishop is not supreme. I hold that no man has the right to spend the money of the church, obligate the church to pay, or otherwise order important temporal affairs of the church, only as the church in General Conference shall direct, or as in emergency between conferences the proper councils shall of necessity determine.

This, the position of President Smith, is amplified by Elbert A. Smith in the Herald for November 5, 1924, as follows:

I am in sympathy with the statement made by the President before the council when the article was under discussion: That neither he nor the Bishop should have the individual right to either invest or expend church money without authorization. He held that regular current expenses should be authorized by General Conference. (The annual budget.)
Extraordinary expenses and investments occurring during the year should be authorized by some competent council. This accords with section 114; that the finances of the church may not be used as a “weapon in the hands of one man for the oppression of others, or for the purpose of self-aggrandizement, be he whomsoever he may be,” the President, the Bishop, or any other man.

We believe the brethren in discussing adversely the document on church government would do well to keep in mind this statement of President Smith’s and amplification by Elbert A. Smith, which makes the HERALD of November 28, and elsewhere, that President Smith aspires to displace the Bishopric by assuming the sole trusteeship of the church.

The President of the church did at one time at least take full charge of church finance. Read Church History, volume 2, page 518: “President Joseph Smith was made the sole trustee in trust for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.”

According to the revelation of 1894, the burden of finances had been temporarily shifted from the President of the church to the Quorum of Twelve. So when the end designed was reached, and without instruction from the Lord, the responsibility would naturally revert to the President, or Presidency.

Doctrinal Tracts

The next question of authority we consider is church literature. We call attention to the law in Doctrine and Covenants 123:14:

Resolved, that the members of the quorum of twelve and the presidency be requested to write tracts on such gospel topics as each may select, all of which shall be placed in the hands of the presidency for examination; said tracts when approved, to be placed in the hands of the board of publication to be issued as soon as possible.

The Presidency must approve before printing: this places the printing of tracts under the supreme directional control of the First Presidency.

According to Doctrine and Covenants 123:25:

The HERALD editors were, by vote, advised to call for articles from any who might be disposed to write upon leading gospel topics, said articles to be subjected to the inspection of the committee as heretofore named [the First Presidency, 123:14], and to be accepted or rejected at its discretion.

Whether this sort of arrangement meets my approval or not, it remains a fact that the law makes the First Presidency a censor board to say what is to go into the HERALD columns. In other words, in this department, the law gives the Presidency supreme directional control. It must be remembered of course that this committee is governed in all their duties by law.

And I call your attention to the fact that the taking from the Presidency, as was done last June, of the editorship of the HERALD and all supervision thereof, and the turning of the same to another, brings those responsible for said divestiture of the Presidency from the HERALD face to face with Doctrine and Covenants 123:25 in a clear violation of the law. Now turn to Doctrine and Covenants 70:1, where we find that the President of the church and others were made stewards over the revelations, etc.; and in 72:4 the Lord says:

And, again let my servants who are appointed as stewards over the literary concerns of my church have claim for assistance upon the bishop or bishops...

We note from Doctrine and Covenants 41:3 Edward Partridge had been called to the office of presiding bishop in February, 1831, nine months before section 70, designating certain ones as stewards over the literary concerns of the church; but Edward Partridge, the Presiding Bishop of the church, was not named among these stewards. This committee, however, was to have claim on the bishopric, so that the revelations might be printed.

We have no alternative. The law is clear that the Presidency of the church has the oversight of the entire church in all its departments. We must recognize God-given authority in church government, as well as to go to one having authority to be baptized.

The idea that the First Presidency being the chief quorum in which is resident the authority to direct all departments of the work is not a new philosophy. Joseph Smith, the President of the church, and Heman C. Smith, the church historian, editors of our Church History, volume 1, page 281, give their idea in the matter.

It appears from this revelation that the primary right of presiding over the church, and of regulating and setting in order all the affairs of the same, is resident in the First Presidency; and that the true philosophy of the organization is that if others should be appointed to those duties, these rights and prerogatives inhere in them in a secondary sense, to be exercised under the direction and counsel of the First Presidency.

President Elbert A. Smith used the above quotation in his article on “The true philosophy of church government.”

Bishop I. A. Smith in reply argued this can refer only to men directly appointed by the Presidency to do specific work, who would then be their agents and so naturally subject to their direction. He then immediately proceeded to warn the Saints against permitting the Presidency to make appointments; the people are to nominate and elect. So, very ingeniously, he makes Joseph and Heman to say that only those appointed by the Presidency are to be directed by them, and since they are not to be allowed to appoint, their power of direction is reduced to zero. This may be very pleasing to some, but evidently it is not what Joseph and Heman meant. Men are appointed in various ways, and their argument was that any man who regulates and are appointed in various ways, and their argument was that any man who regulates and sets in order the affairs of the church does so under the direction of the First Presidency. Let it stand as they wrote it.

I wrote the foregoing article about the middle of September, and I have reconstructed it in the light of later development, and so as to leave out all personal matters. I think it a serious mistake to bring in personal matters, which I have endeavored to avoid. I pray that our differences may soon be adjusted and the work of the Lord may go forward. With kind feeling to all, I patiently wait and earnestly pray.

Irreconcilable Positions

BY ISRAEL A. SMITH

The late President Joseph Smith served the church for more than fifty-four years. On April 12, 1912, the General Conference, by a rising vote, presented him with a memorial of appreciation on "behalf of the entire" church. That resolution contained among other things appreciation of his "keen perception, mental acumen, and penetration," his "clear grasp on questions of general interest," and his "unmistakable evidence of divine grace and blessing."

It seems to us a strange thing that men can so soon turn their backs on their "sacred heritage"—so soon after the death of the late President take unto themselves new doctrines and strange and unknown theories of church government.

It has become unquestionably apparent that the proponents of the April resolution have not one single statement in the law of the church or one single interpretation of anyone who "spake as one having authority," that says anything like supreme directional control. The wording and logical meaning of the resolution now proposed to be adopted as a theory of church government goes far beyond the authorities quoted in its support.

Surely, our friends are in a sore predicament! Why not meet the issue squarely and admit that they want to change the law and then try to support the proposed change?

The prophet, seer, and revelator of the church has the right to interpret (teach) the revelations. Very well, we admit as much. But what parts of the revelations bearing upon the questions involved in the present controversy have not been interpreted and adopted specifically or by practice for many years? We await the answer.

Now, I am going to place in juxtaposition certain statements of the late Joseph Smith, which truly reflect his interpretation of the law, and the statement from the resolution of the April council to which we object:

... we presume that the Saints have about concluded that we are not likely to die with millions of the Saints' moneys in our hands, for the Church and our heirs to quarrel about; for it must be seen that we do not control either the moneys of the Church, nor the Bishopric. They are men who think for themselves, and act upon their own judgment; men who are willing to confess that they are human and may err; men who are willing to counsel with their brethren, but who will not, (and may God bless them for it,) submit to arbitrary human dictation, nor obey dishonest counsel. With such men the monetary interests of the Church are safely trusted; and the missionary laborers will be sustained to the extent that the treasury is supplied.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, May 1, 1880, p. 143.

... The monetary affairs of the Church are under the personal control and inspection of a quorum of men, who are so far as they can be removed from suspicion of domination by the spiritual heads of the Church. Besides this the three leading quorums of the spiritual authorities, hold as we have elsewhere shown, independent supervision of its own affairs, with the right of inquiry, and should be by reason of their position, free from suspicion of desire to dominate the monetary arm of the service.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, September 1, 1880, p. 268.

Instead of being by virtue of their position free from suspicion of a desire to dominate the monetary arm of the service, the present Presidency now openly demand the right to do so as a prerogative of their office.
Behold the very antipodes of interpretation!

We demand that the proponents of supreme directional control must either harmonize their position with that of the late President of the church, or prove he was wrong, or show justification for this change in the law which will take us in another direction. To be honest with the church they should do one thing or the other.

Should this new rule in church government be adopted without harmonizing it with the interpretations of our late President Joseph Smith or frankly acknowledging it is a change of governmental practice, its supporters will not only "tread upon the grave" of our past leader, but literally trample on the law at the same time.

An Explanation

BY JAMES F. KEIR

In the HERALD of February 4, page 98, President Elbert A. Smith makes it appear that the Presiding Bishopric indorsed his answer to the question therein set forth.

The meeting with the Presidency referred to was only three days prior to my writing this article, and we have no recollection of such a question having been discussed nor his answer to it made known to us.

We were told of a certain rumor to the effect that if the General Conference should indorse the document adopted by the April Council that an action would be started in the courts of the land to prevent the Bishop from turning over the property of the church and that papers were already prepared looking toward such action.

The Presidency were told that, so far as the Presiding Bishopric knew, no effort in this direction was being made, and that if any papers were drawn up it was news to them. However, I added that I had been approached by members on two different occasions suggesting the advisability of some legal action being necessary, but that I had given them no encouragement.

It will be seen plainly that we could not have consistently said that such a thing was so remote as to be incredible, and if our brother thought so, why spread the alarm by writing a lengthy editorial upon it?

My attitude upon the rights of a minority who adhere to the law is quite clearly set forth in the following from the late Prophet Joseph Smith:

It is a well-known and long-established principle in law, both ecclesiastic and secular, that where a church, or a number of believers have become members of a recognized body, having a name and a confession of belief, and rules of organization and procedure, no change can be made in confession of faith, or rules of procedure, by which those rules and principles of faith are denied, reversed, changed, or abandoned, against the wish, knowledge, and consent of the membership. And if any number, few or many, choose to retain the faith and practices at first obtaining and under which they became members of such body, those persons thus remaining true to the original faith are, and of right ought to be held to be the original body, or church. This is good law and is plain common sense. It agrees with the revelation of God to the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, given in May, 1829:

"And now, behold, whosoever is of my church, and endureth of my church to the end, him will I establish on my Rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against him."—Doctrine and Covenants 9:17; Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, April 8, 1896.

It is a principle well known in civil law, and ought to be in ecclesiastical circles, that whenever a church is founded, its principles of faith formulated, its traditions fulminated from the forum, pulpit, and press, those declarations become the constitution of its corporate and legal existence. If in the history of such church, anything out of harmony with, or antagonistic to that constitution is introduced, or a change is sought to be made in the creed and government, which is opposed and resisted, or denied by any of the members of the church, such portion of the membership as remains in adherence to the faith as it was before the change was attempted or made, is the church. Nor does it make any difference in law how few this adhering portion may be, or how numerous the changing membership, the church is that part of the members remaining true to the original tenets.

Saint Jerome anciently said: "Wherever the true faith is, there is the church."—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, December 16, 1903.

Self-Control

BY JAMES E. YATES

The word control is so entirely foreign to all that pertains to God in his attitude towards mankind, either in his dealings with men or his revelation as to how they are to deal with others, that even the word itself is not to be found in any book, chapter, verse, paragraph, or line in the Bible.

God gave man the power of self-control and expects him to use it.

The word supreme appears only once in the Bible; and refers to a political monarch to whom the saints were enjoined to submit, as those who "endure grief, suffering wrongfully." (1 Peter 2:12-18.)

The word supreme occurs in Doctrine and Covenants 104:1, referring to the supreme Being. But either the word supreme or control, as applied to God's control of men, or man's control of men, is a framed vocabulary entirely foreign to the revealed word of the Lord in the three standard books of the church, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants.

Self-control, with the Holy Spirit as the directional power, is the Lord's way, as revealed in his word.
Concerning the Faith of Our Fathers

By D. T. Williams

[Editor's Note: An error crept into last week's article by Brother Williams. On page 105, quoting Joseph Smith's language, it should read, "In thirty years there have been very few instances in which I have been compelled to exercise dictatorially the authority of the office of the President of the church." The italicized words were by mistake omitted.]

III. OUR FATHERS ON THE RELATIONS BETWEEN THE PRESIDENCY AND BISHOPRIC

In calling the attention of the church to the "faith of our fathers," the writer of these articles is not seeking to set up the words and ideas of men as an ultimate guide for the "body of Christ." But since those who choose to attack the action of the now historic council of last April have repeatedly made appeal to this criterion, we welcome the consequences of the challenge thus extended.

What we have said in previous articles we have tried to say in the spirit of Christ and with the hope that good would be consequential. The same spirit, we trust, will characterize our present discussion and turn all of our efforts to the glory of God and to the eventual good of all his children.

Our Fathers on Relations of Presidency and Bishopric

In discussing the rights and prerogatives of these officers, we should not allow the principal official figures of the controversy to overshadow the people whom they are delegated to serve. For after all, though occupying in positions of prominence and trust, they are nevertheless the servants of the church of Christ and should be so considered. Nor should it be forgotten that each is an administrative officer empowered to administer the law in behalf of all the people as his office and its prerogatives may indicate.

The point we wish to make clear to the reader in this article is that in relative powers of administration, the Presidency of the church is and should be superior to the Bishopric; that the President of the church is the President of the "whole church," which of course includes the department of the Bishopric. What, then, we ask, is the "faith of our fathers" on this question?

Position of W. W. Blair

Let all the different branches of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in all the world call meetings in their respective places and tithe themselves and send up to this place to the trustee in trust, (President Joseph Smith) so that his hands may be loosed and the temple go on, and other works be done.—Times and Seasons, vol. 8, p. 715; Millenial Star, vol. 19, p. 88; Saints' Herald, vol. 40, p. 342.

In referring to the above matter, Brother W. W. Blair says, Saints' Herald, volume 40, page 342:

A word of explanation will now be in place as to why the titheings and donations for the temple, etc., etc., as above mentioned, were placed in the custody of President Joseph Smith. The history of the church, and the oral testimony of some of the leading men in the church in Far West up to 1839, as also facts coming to light within the last ten years, go to show that Bishop Edward Partridge did not minister wisely and acceptably as the Presiding Bishop of the church, failed to labor in harmony with those placed over him in authority....and now lest some may think that President Smith exceeded his official authority in accepting this position, we remind them that the law of the Lord, in Doctrine and Covenants 104:4, provides that "The Presidency of the high priesthood have the right to officiate in all the offices in the church" (when occasion demands), and may therefore perform the duties pertaining to the Bishopric as did Melchisedec (Genesis 14: 19-29, Inspired Translation), and as Joseph and Sidney were appointed of God to do in Doctrine and Covenants 44:3.

Again says President Blair:

And besides this, the law requires that the properties of the church shall be in the hands and be disposed of by the Bishopric and higher officers of the church, as in Doctrine and Covenants 42:8; 9, 10, 19; 87:5; 104:4, etc. The High Council of the church, including the First Presidency, with the Bishopric, were those who had the immediate control, management, and custody of church properties, as provided for by the law of the Lord, and as is confirmed by the facts of church history.—Saints' Herald, vol. 40, p. 343.

The Late Joseph Smith's Position

As might be expected, the Bishopric was required to act under the counsel and advice of the Presidency in respect to locating and arranging for the Saints in the gathering, for each person was to do in these matters "as is appointed to him by the Presidency and the Bishop of the church, according to the laws and commandments which ye have received, and which ye shall hereafter receive" (Doctrine and Covenants 48:2), and church history records that this order was observed with fidelity, generally, thereafter.—Leading Editorial, Saints' Herald, vol. 40, p. 146.

The first Prophet of the church issued instructions to the Bishop in matters concerning this department of church work, clearly indicating the Presidency had rights of direction. This was done aside from the direct word of revelation, and came not as a prophetic utterance, but as a presidential direction. This cause is set forth by the late President of the church, Joseph Smith, as follows:

We now appeal to the history of the church for testimony as to how these laws of the church were interpreted and applied under the direct administration of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and President of the church. June 25, 1833, the First Presidency, in Kirtland, wrote to Bishop Partridge, in Missouri, in respect to consecration, thus:

"The matter of consecration must be done by the mutual consent of both parties: for to give the Bishop power to say how much every man shall have, and he be oblidged to comply with the Bishop's judgment, is giving to the Bishop more power than a king has; and, upon the other hand, to let every man say how much he needs, and the Bishop be obliged to comply with his judgment, is to throw Zion into confusion, and make a slave of the Bishops. The fact is, there must be a balance or equilibrium of power, between the Bishop and the people, and thus harmony and good will be preserved among you. Therefore, those persons consecrating property to the Bishop in Zion, and then receiving an inheritance back, must show reasonably to the Bishop that he wants as much as he claims. But in case the two parties cannot come to a mutual agreement, the Bishop is to have nothing to do about receiving their consecrations, and the case must be laid before a council of twelve High Priests, the Bishop not being one of the council, but he is to lay the case before them."—Times and Seasons 6:801; Saints' Herald, vol. 40, p. 178.

And the order of church government set out in the articles of incorporation of the Reorganized Church, dated June 6, 1891, is the same order of church government as that set out in the King James Translation of the Bible, which was introduced in this case, marked Exhibit C.

I do not know of any difference between the two; if there is any, it has escaped my attention.—Abstract of Evidence in Temple Lot Suit, p. 50.

Under Joseph Smith the Martyr

The First Presidency, High Council, and Bishop's Court assembled at Far West, to dispose of the public properties of the church in the hands of the Bishop, many of the brethren having consecrated their surplus property according to the revelations. Moved, seconded and carried unanimously—9d, That the Bishop be authorized to pay orders coming from the East, inasmuch as they will consecrate liberally, but this is to be done under the inspection of the First Presidency. 4th, That the First Presidency shall have the prerogative to say, to the Bishop, whose orders shall or may be paid by him in this place, or in his jurisdiction.—Millennial Star, vol. 16, p. 204.

If the appeal is to the faith of our fathers, then we have here a direct statement of the first Prophet's faith through an official act setting forth his position.

It is quite evident that the first revelator and interpreter of the law understood that the President of the church was to have something to say concerning the temporal affairs of the church, which is our only purpose in quoting the above; for the writer does not advocate that the President should displace the Bishop as trustee in trust. There may be those who conclude that the leader of the church is to have no power to direct in temporalities, but with this we cannot agree, in the light of the faith of our fathers, and in consideration of the law and usage of the church.

Frederick M. Smith in Accord

Again we discover that the present Prophet of the church is in full accord with his predecessors in this matter of presidential responsibility in temporalities. In his message to the conference of 1919 at Lamoni, Iowa, on page 2697 of Conference Minutes, he says:

There should be an immediate establishment of a fund for the purchase of large tracts of land in the regions round about needed for the establishment of Zion, and in this connection it is well to say there should be a closer supervision by the Presidency over the entire work of the General Bishopric.

Agreeing again with his forbears. Please remember that his father said that the Bishop was to work "under the counsel and general supervision of the First Presidency." The definition of supervision given by Webster is: "Act of overseeing, inspection, superintendency."

Here, then, we have Joseph, the first Prophet of the church, as the "President of the whole church," extending his supervision over the Bishop and his department, in giving instruction as to what should and should not be done.

The late Joseph then comes as a witness, saying that this supervision is according to the law.

Last of all, and in keeping with the "faith of his fathers," comes President Frederick M. Smith, advising us that this supervision, this "overseeing," if you please, by the First Presidency, should now be in operation.

To whom are we to give heed? Is the testimony of the three latter-day prophets to be set aside as unworthy of our consideration? Most certainly the church is going to be careful not to set aside the counsel of the First Presidency, who are according to the law of the church the "leading interpreters and teachers of the law and the revelations of God." (General Conference Minutes, 1894, p. 32.) Our fathers in the same conference decided that the First Presidency was to have "oversight of the work of the church in all its different departments." Of course this includes the department of the Bishopric.

President Smith is not in apostasy; neither is he supervising a "departure from the faith once delivered to the Saints"; nor yet trying to set up a "theocratic-autocracy," as some of the brethren would have us believe. He is instead quite in harmony with both his predecessors in office.

A restatement of his position in his own words may not be out of place just here. We quote from a letter to M. H. Siegfried:

For efficiency of administration to be had, supreme directional control must lodge somewhere. Our law clearly places this with the Presidency, as the April Council has expressed. And this directional control is for the purpose of carrying out the policies which have been determined by prophetic instruction with legislative approval and legislative enactment in harmony with constitutional law and divine command. It is of course not presumed or assumed that supreme directional control shall be exerted outside the purposes of the church as determined by the law and the objective of endeavor.

In this the rights of the people are wholly protected. Directional control is only to be exercised according to “prophetic instruction with legislative approval and legislative enactment” of the people. Does this sound like an autocrat? Hardly!

It seems that there has been a great and hurtful tumult stirred up over a matter that should have been considered in the quietude of the council chamber and General Conference. Much grief has been inflicted upon the hearts of the children of God that they need not have been burdened with. Confidence has been broken down where it should have been built up. The advice of Brother W. H. Kelley, at the time the president of the Quorum of Twelve, is not without propriety in this connection:

When members of the quorum join, take the lead and become the chief agitators and critics, and inflaming the people in public and private, and by petition, to carry on a hostile movement against the President, division and want of confidence may be expected. It is the fruit of such work. Besides, said members, if they persist in this agitation, will stand a splendid chance to render themselves obnoxious to right-thinking people, for leaving the work intrusted to them and becoming partisans and agitators in matters that they should let rest.—From a letter dated Lamoni, Iowa, August 27, 1900.

Here again is the faith of our fathers. We think it is worthy of every consideration.

The position of the Presidency in this matter of relation of Presidency and Bishopric is further set forth in a statement of six of the Quorum of Twelve, in the HERALD for August 27, as follows:

With reference to the direction of the funds of the church, the President of the church stated before the council in effect: I do not claim the right to dispense the funds of the church. My contention is not that in this matter I am supreme. It is that the Bishop is not supreme. I hold that no man has the right to spend the money of the church, obligate the church to pay, or otherwise order important temporal affairs of the church, only as the church in General Conference shall direct, or as in emergency between conferences the proper councils shall of necessity determine.

Again, Elbert A. Smith speaking along the same line for the First Presidency, in the HERALD of November 5, says:

I am in sympathy with the statement made by the President before the council when the article was under discussion: That neither he nor the Bishop should have the individual right to either invest or expend church money without authorization. He held that regular current expenses should be authorized by General Conference. (The annual budget.) Extraordinary expenses and investments occurring during the year should be authorized by some competent council. This accords with section 114: that the finances of the church may not be used as a “weapon in the hands of one man for the oppression of others, or for the purpose of self-aggrandizement, be he whomever he may be,” the President, the Bishop, or any other man.

Is not this interpretation reasonable? We think so. Is it not safe, conserving the rights of the people? We think so.

Summary

The faith of our fathers testifies in no uncertain terms:

First, That leadership, divinely appointed, is a requisite to successful church government; that such leadership was by them accepted as a gift from the hand of God.

Second, The witness of the fathers stands unre­servedly committed to supreme directional control resting with the chief executive quorum in all administrative matters.

Third, The fathers are again logical, and consistent with themselves, in the conclusion that the Bishopric in the administration of their office are subject to the directional control of the First Presidency.

It is to be hoped that the next General Conference will see the settling of all these problems that now confront us. And let it be remembered that humility and prayer are prerequisites to this desired accomplishment. May God bless even this trial to the perfecting of his church, should be the position of each and all.

We rest the cause for the present, expecting to have somewhat more to add in course of time.

Outside

The little stray lamb had climbed to find
An herb more sweet and rare
Than all the ninety-and-nine could know,
Or driven hoofs would dare.

The little stray lamb had paused to drink
Beside a stream too deep
To stay the complacent certitude
Of heavenward-stepping sheep.

The ninety-and-nine had passed her by
And housed them from the cold,
Puzzled that one should venture outside
Such safe and proper fold.

Sad was the little stray lamb’s sad heart,
Unloved of all the rest,
But oh, how bright the unfathomed stars,
How warm the Shepherd’s breast!

Chain Links of Spiritual Bondage

BY JAMES E. YATES

Supreme control by priesthood, and effective discipline by the same authority, is a very choice doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church.

It is an outstanding mark of their departure from the ways and teachings of the One Man in history whose superior and princely authority was manifested to the world through a simplicity of humility that made its grandeur supreme—the Man of Galilee.

That this supreme control, and effective discipline to enforce the control, is one of the main spokes in the wheel of Roman Catholic doctrine, none can successfully deny.

Latter Day Saints know, and well-informed people in all Protestantism know, that the Mother Church in her doctrines and practices fulfills the scriptural prophecies of apostasy with a completeness that is nothing less than startling. This is conclusive to those who will take the pains to compare Catholic doctrine and history with the written word of the Lord.

The strength of the Reformation under Martin Luther and his noble successors, was grounded in the fact that there had been a spiritual departure, a falling away, an apostasy wrought out by the rulers and overseers of the Mother Church; and that the Spirit of God was calling for a departure from her iniquitous ways and a return unto the Lord.

The restoration of the primitive order by an angel from heaven to Joseph Smith and his humble associates would have been without right or reason unless there had been an apostasy. All must admit that. But as an undeniable setting for the great latter-day revelation and restoration of the church, the historical and modern background of the Mother Church in apostasy stands in massive fact.

And now the restored church is asked to accept some of the very doctrines which are most outstanding in bringing the early church into its thrall of apostasy.

This supreme control and effective discipline doctrine, so old to both monarchical history and spiritual disintegration, and yet so new to the Latter Day Saint's philosophy of spiritual government that it stirred a controversy such as the church has not before known, is set forth by Catholic writers in such language as the following:

The holding of councils implied the existence of authority, and when this authority represented or received the suffrage of the Universal Church, all regarded it as conclusive and infallible. . . . She (the church) had either received from her Divine Founder the right thus to govern the church with supreme authority, [5:4 emphasis mine.—J. E. Y.] or else in the days of her very first existence, when her confessors were languishing amid chains, and her martyrs were bleeding for her doctrines, she had already usurped supreme authority, changed the pure doctrinal principles of her constitution as settled by her Founder; altered the rule of Faith; annihilated the supreme authority of God's written word, . . . effectively overturned the whole work of Christ, and substituted a system which, in its operation, soon brought "all Christendom into a state of error, usurpation, and damnable idolatry."—Right Reverend J. McGill, in Our Sunday Visitor for November 9, 1924, a national Catholic weekly published at Huntington, Indiana.

The above is a very frank statement by this Catholic writer; and while not intended so, to the most of us it reads almost like a confessional.

The Catholic brother says that Christ either gave supreme control to the church, or that she "usurped" those powers and thus "altered the rule of faith." Being assured by the word of the Lord as revealed in the Scriptures and historical facts that the Mother Church would, and has, altered the rule of faith, until as a church body she was rejected of the Lord, we may also be made equally sure by a careful survey of the facts that this supreme control doctrine was one of the vital changes in the "rule of faith" and was, in the very nature of the case, a usurpation without which a complete apostasy of the primitive church could not have been effected.

If the Holy Ghost, in the hearts of the whole church body, had been left in supreme control, instead of the rulers usurping that authority, there would have been no apostasy possible.

Note the "strongly administered discipline" phase of the Catholic doctrine in the following reading from the same author and article as quoted above:

For without an unerring authority, those positive decisions, enforced as they were by solemn ecclesiastical censures, and spiritual anathemas and excommunications, would have been most bold and destructive usurpations.

Here we have the confession, or at least admission, that the mandates of supreme control were necessarily "enforced." Such a doctrine can be made effective in no other way. It is a doctrine of force and compulsion.

That feature alone marks it as an alien to the gospel of Jesus Christ. It puts the blessed gospel of service because of love, in complete reverse. It substitutes the motive of service, because of fear, Its promoters would not wish to do that, but under its sway there is no escape from it. Under its rule it is as natural that men will come to be driven to a so-called service by fear of anathema, and the lash of discipline, and by thirst for place, where a little discipline may be wielded on one's own part, as it is for smut to blacken things. It is most certainly no part of the gospel or government of Christ. Those who may believe it to be so, are in error, as time will surely prove.

There are three inseparable links in this supreme control chain of bondage. There are others, but these three are first to shackle. Accept the first one and you cannot escape the others. The first link is supposed beneficent supreme control lodged in human hands of a chief, or of chieftains. The second link is welded into the first and cannot be logically separated from it; namely: "strongly administered discipline."

Discipline is the complement of authority. The hand that holds supreme authority must also have power to wield the lash of discipline, or else his supremacy of control is meaningless. If it is a human hand in supreme authority, it must be human discipline. We concede that the church body has power to discipline with a strong fiat in select human hands according to the proposition that is submitted, it cannot be denied that we would then be in a nicety of accord with the leading doctrines of the Catholic Church in this important matter; and therefore in major accord with the very forces that served to disrupt the primitive church and corrupt the original rule of faith.

And the third link in this chain of apostasy, and the one which logically follows and did not fail to make its appearance when the control and discipline idea seized the early church, is that of inerrancy of decisions and infallibility of supreme authoritative pronouncements.

For, finally to admit that supreme authority and mandatory discipline may be excelled in rightness of decision by others in whom said authority is not vested, would be a challenge to their supremacy and a flat contradiction of terms. Therefore, supreme control must have power to discipline with a strong hand and must finally come to be regarded as infallible.

It has worked to that end in the Catholic Church and can reach no other end wherever this chain is allowed to fix its links upon the people. For the point is soon reached where even to question any enactment or mandate of authority is reprehensible and a sufficient cause for official denunciation.

Note the terrible boldness of this third shackling link as it is here stated by our defender of Catholicism:

Through the whole course of revolving centuries, the undisputed existence and exercise of an authority considered infallible or unerring, are seen in the history and the progress of the church.

Brethren, Saints, all, let us not deceive ourselves, or be deceived by this chain of bondage. It may have some attractive appearances to a few, but the history of its thralldom is before us and should not be ignored.

In justice to those who see no danger in the patterning of this historic chain from a corrupted system, for the church of the restoration, let us observe that practically every advocate of the control chain in the past, whether a patron of the doctrine of political or spiritual monarchy, every ruling advocate of compulsion, and, of course, every ruling adherent to the terrible heresy of infallibility, all, all, have believed, or tried to believe their rule and discipline and supposed superiority of decision to be "beneficent."

But their thinking it so, lacked much of making it so, even when they succeeded in securing such common consent as impels the great body of Catholic people to-day to submit to government by priesthood regardless of flagrant departures from the scriptural rule of faith. They are not even charged to study the Scriptures.

Should the church to-day lodge supreme directional control in select human hands according to the proposition that is submitted, it cannot be denied that we would then be in a nicety of accord with the leading doctrines of the Catholic Church in this important matter; and therefore in major accord with the very forces that served to disrupt the primitive church and corrupt the original rule of faith.

The language of the Lord Jesus as recorded in Luke 22: 25 has a very direct bearing upon this modern question of supremacy in control, and certainly reveals the mind of the Master upon such questions. Let us hear him:

The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so.

He did not say: If you think your control is beneficent, go ahead. He said those in control were "called benefactors." He did not concede that they really were, but warned against all such by saying, Ye shall not do so. His system of rule was different—let him who would be greatest be in supreme control? No; that is not the Christ way. "He who would be greatest, let him be the servant of all."

Surely the well-being and safety of the church concerning any or all proposals for human supremacy of control or supposed beneficent royalty in management will be best conserved by our giving heed to the words of the Master:

"Let it not be so among you."

NEWS AND LETTERS

Express Gratitude for Christmas Greetings

Letter to Office of Quorum of Twelve

I want to express my thanks to you for the Christmas greetings and word of encouragement that you sent to me. When one is out on the firing line, far removed from his homeland, he is grateful, especially at the Christmas season, to be remembered with good wishes from those at home. The knowledge that we have the church in general behind us with its good will, best wishes, and prayers, is an incentive to us to give the best that is in us for the upbuilding of the work of God in this land to which we have been sent.

The announcement that your letter contained, that nearly four thousand souls had seen the light of the gospel during 1924, who had not seen it before, came as good news to us. We were made glad to know that we had had a part even though it was small, in that great work. With you we trust and pray that this new year will bring a larger ingathering of souls than the past year has done. May God bless us to this end.

My work during December has been performed in three different towns, namely: Kragerø, Stathelle, and Porsgrund. I arrived at Kragerø on December 1, on my way from Arendal where I had been to conduct the funeral of an aged sister who was buried on November 29. I remained at Kragerø a week, preaching three times, as well as taking charge of a sacramental service the first Sunday in the month. I enjoyed a goodly degree of the Spirit, especially in two of my sermons, which was evidence to me that God still has a work to do in that place.

Stathelle is a little town not far from Porsgrund. To my knowledge, the restored gospel has never been preached there. I discovered it was possible for me to rent a hall in which to hold meetings at a reasonable price. Wishing to give the people of this little town, as well as so many other towns as possible, an opportunity to hear the gospel in its fulness, I rented the hall and arranged to go there to preach. On the first night I was greeted by a good audience and enjoyed much light and liberty in the presentation of the word. It would have been a pleasure to me to have continued each night, as we do in America, but that can hardly be done with success in this country, and as the hall is used for other purposes several nights in the week, I had to be content to wait until the next week before returning for my second effort. As the Christmas season was near, the people were very busy, which prevented many from attending. The attendance was smaller, but we had a very good little meeting for those who were present. It was thought best to wait until after the holidays before returning to continue the effort.

The work in Porsgrund is not progressing as we would like to see it. It is difficult to arouse an interest or to attract many people to our meetings. Nearly everyone belongs to one religious denomination or another, of which there are at least ten in Porsgrund. The people are occupied with their own church services, as well as things of a worldly nature. But we have not given up, and are of the opinion that when the time is ripe God will perform a work in Porsgrund as well as other places in Norway. Surely God has some sheep among the many good people we see around us.

Yesterday, New Year’s Day, we held two services: a prayer meeting in the morning and a preaching service in the afternoon. If these meetings are a sample of the meetings we shall enjoy during the year, I can assure you we have many good things in store for us. At the prayer meeting God’s Spirit was present in power. Nearly everyone was melted to tears by its presence, and all took part with prayer and testimony. The meeting was a great blessing, and encouragement was given with which to begin the battles of life in the new year.

In the preaching service I enjoyed that blessed experience of being able to present the message with much ease and freedom, and this without any preparation beforehand as to what I would present. I did not have the opportunity to prepare in advance, but it has been my experience that God always comes to the help of his people in emergencies.

I enter this year in the best of health and good spirits, and trust that it will be a wonderful year for the church in America and in foreign lands. May it bring many rich blessings to the individual member as well as peace and harmony to the church in general is my sincere prayer.

Novel Christmas Festivities in London

LONDON, ENGLAND, January 9.—A very sociable evening was spent here at the home of our branch president on New Year’s Day by a number of the Saints of the neighborhood. Young and old were present, and all but twelve of the crowd were young people from outside. Games were played, and by the help of Brother and Sister Worth and their daughter the evening passed pleasantly.

The best of the evening came last in the distributing of the toys on the Christmas tree. This was done in quite a novel and amusing way. The names of all present were written on slips of paper, which were folded and put in a glass. As Sister Worth took the presents from the tree, bottom up, Brother Worth took a slip from the glass and called the name written on it, and the toy went to that person. This was very amusing, because some of the older people received little things that caused much merriment on the part of the young people present. Our worthy branch president received a small doll and dummy.

The names were called about five times to clear the tree of the toys, after which the older people shared what they had received with the younger ones.

The Saints here are indebted to Brother and Sister Worth for the pleasant time that evening.

While writing this I am picturing to myself how nice it would be if all the people we get to come to our social evenings, young and old, would come to Sunday school and other meetings. I believe this could be done if we plan our social evenings in a way that will appeal to our friends. Then they will want to know more about us and how it is we have such jolly times. It is through these social evenings that we draw people nearer to the truth of the church, but they must be planned beforehand in a way that will appeal to them.

Not only this, but we must ask ourselves whether our heavenly Father is pleased with what we are doing, because in our pleasure as well as in the more serious side of the work of God will be with us if we let him. By doing this God will bless us, and our friends will desire to take part with us in the spiritual things as well as the social. “By your works men shall know you.”

The Saints here are still without a place to hold meetings, but we are looking forward to progress in the new year. We ask an interest in your prayers, that God will prosper us.

We are all looking forward to the conference to be held at Enfield on January 17 and 18, and hope to enjoy a good spiritual time.

The London Branch wishes a happy and prosperous New Year to all the Saints. May God bless you and help you to be humble and faithful in this one great work.

ARTHUR H. HICKS.

From a Blind Brother

I feel like writing to the HERALD once, hoping I can drop a thought that will be of interest to some one.

It seems to me that I have done very little for the work, but I am willing to help in any way I can. As my health, also that of my wife, has been poor for a year, I have been unable to get out on the road to sell pencils and sing and play a French harp. I ask no one for a penny, but hold my cup or hat, and if anyone drops anything in I thank them.

We have had preaching services in our home, which was the means of one more sister being brought into the fold. I would be pleased to hear from any of the Saints who feel like writing to me. I just received four letters from the last one I wrote to the HERALD.

I notice an account of paying tithing. I understand some are holding their tithing back for fear that the church will fail, and that is just what will make it fail. One asked me, "How do you pay tithing?" When I make a dollar clear of all expenses and debts, one tenth of that I pay to the church. I have been praying to my heavenly Father that if he wanted me to pay tithing to bless us with health and strength till I could leave home, and then I would make an effort. I sincerely ask the faith and prayers of the Saints in our behalf.

On October 17 the sisters held a prayer service at our home, and my prayer was that we might have a good spirit in our home when they came. The sisters said they felt a good spirit the minute they stepped to the door. We had a wonderful prayer meeting in which eight prayers and fifteen testimonies were offered, out of an attendance of fifteen, and a wonderful degree of the Spirit was felt.

I will be pleased to add a small testimony. About fourteen years ago my arm was operated on, and two inches of the bone was taken out between the elbow and the shoulder. The next afternoon Brother T. W. Williams and another traveling elder came to see me at the hospital. My arm and shoulder and spine were paining me very much, and I asked the head of the bed and laid his hands on my head and he was sent for, so the children had set in. They did not have any oil, so the brother said he would pray for me. He stepped around to the head of the bed and laid his hands on my head and prayed for me. Inside of a few minutes after he finished I did not have an ache or pain, and my arm has not hurt me from that day to this, for which I thank my heavenly Father.

I have love for the church. I will be pleased to get a letter from any brother or sister who feels like writing to me.

Your blind brother in the gospel,

JOPLIN, MISSOURI, 1209 Iowa Street.

J. C. POWELL.

Local Elder Pleases His Hearers

CAMERON, MISSOURI, January 25.—I just came home from Far West Church where I heard a good sermon on "Love, unity, and work," by Brother T. Fidick. I was glad to hear him talk, and believe all were.

We have had our midweek prayer service regularly so far this winter, besides the four regular services on Sunday: Sunday school at ten o'clock, preaching at eleven, Religio at half past six, and preaching at half past seven.

The Zion Workers, the ladies of Far West, have helped very much with the finances of the branch lately, for which we are thankful.

L. K. GERMAN.

Thirty-Seven Years President of the Branch

FULTON, IOWA, January 7.—Last Sunday we had a very good sacramental meeting, in which the sweet influence of the Spirit was present. Business meeting was held after the service, and I was again elected president of the branch. One brother said it would not seem right to have another over them, as I had been president since the branch was organized in 1888.

Wife and I are the only charter members left. I was ordained priest at the organization, nearly thirty-seven years ago. Life grows brighter as I grow older.

As the meeting was dismissed, my son called for the Saints to remain in their seats and asked me to come back to the platform. Then Brother Jackson came in from the outside with one large pasteboard box and one small one. He paused and said that there are three most eventful times in our life—birth, marriage, and death—but they did not want to wait till death to give their flowers; would give them now so they could be enjoyed. Then my wife was presented with a box of candy and $18, while I received a good, warm overcoat. It surely was a surprise to us, as we did not even dream of anything of that kind. We surely appreciated the gifts we received and the good will expressed by them. We pray that we may always live in a way to merit the love of our brothers and sisters, and those of the world as well.

Yesterday wife and I went to Anamossa, where I was called to administer to Sister Robinson and Sister Hart. I was called in December, 1915, to administer to this same Sister Hart, who had broken her hip by being thrown out of a buggy, and other complications had set in. Some of the neighbors had been called in, so the children would not be alone, as they thought she would soon be passing away. However, a short time after the administration she got better. The house was full, even the Methodist minister being present, who said to me as he left, "God bless you in your work." Sister Hart looks fine now and is over eighty years old.

Surely God works wonders among the children of men. Could we but grasp the promises of our Father, we would be more faithful and make greater sacrifices for the gospel.

Wife and I used to take many trips with team and buggy and would often be up as late as two o'clock and work hard the next day. But now, with the fast mode of travel, we can crowd into a day what it used to take two or three days to accomplish. We surely are living in a fast age. We have a nice, active lot of young Saints and hope we can keep them in the right channel, working for the good of the Master.

I hope and pray the new year may prove to be all that we would like to have it. May every Saint aim to please the Master, and see how the work will prosper.

JOHN HEIDE.

Brother Leotis Quick Drowned

MAPLETON, KANSAS, January 24.—It is with sad hearts that we write of the death of our young brother, Leotis Quick, son of Elder Lee Quick. He, in company with some of the neighbor boys, went out hunting, and the dogs had something treed across the river near a bridge, over which the water was running about three feet deep. Two of the boys were riding a pony which belonged to Leotis, and they started across the river on the bridge. Leotis, who was riding a mule, called to the boys to hold to the pony and it would take them across. He was trying to keep his mule from following, but could not. It was carried off the bridge and went into water about thirteen feet deep. His body was recovered about one o'clock this afternoon. The accident occurred about ten o'clock yesterday morning.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Brother Quick is so well known throughout the church that all will be sorry to hear this news.

Leotis was ordained a priest a short time ago and promised a good, useful life in the church.

Sister Quick is very ill. The doctor has been working with her all day. She has been in poor health for some time, and her condition is very critical. They fear she may not be able to survive the shock.

Flint, Michigan

January 19.—The closing of the old year found many social functions planned and carried out by various departments of the branch. The young people's department held a surprise reception on the president of the branch, Elder Arthur DuRose, on December 18. About fifty members of the department were present, and after an evening spent playing various games, George D. McNamara, president of the Y. P. O. tendered to Elder DuRose a present as a token of the love and respect of the young people.

The response of Brother DuRose was followed by short speeches by Elders Matthew W. Liston and Joseph Yager, who with his wife was returning to his home at Coleman, Michigan, to spend the holidays. To see Brother Yager enjoying himself with the young people made the gathering seem like a home-coming, as he left Flint to enter upon the work of the mission field some ten years ago. This gathering was planned and carried out by Brother and Sister Dewey McNamara.

On the 30th the Department of Women held a surprise reception on Sister Ida Robertson, the retiring leader of the city for 1924. The evening had been planned to be spent with the Temple Builders, which was a blind to throw Sister Robertson off her guard. It did not dawn on her that she was being made the guest of the evening till the time had been well spent. She was presented with a Boston bag and a picture, “The lure of the woodland,” by Gibson.

New Year's Eve the monthly young people's prayer meeting was held at the First Church. After the prayer service an impromptu program was rendered. Short speeches were made by various members of the ministry, which was followed by a radio concert. Luncheon was served at eleven o'clock, after which the gathering was called to order for a short prayer service. Thus the old year passed, and the new year dawned with the membership of Flint in a union prayer service.

Elder DuRose disturbed the waters on the 21st of December, when Sister Fenton of the Third Church was baptized. On January 4 Elder John R. Grice started a week's series of meetings at the Third Church and baptized a lady who will be valuable in the musical interests of that church. On the 12th he preached at the First Church, and at the close of the service a reception was held for him in the basement. Elder Joseph Yager, returning to Canada, was present, he having preached on the evening of the 11th at First Church. He closed the meeting by preaching at the First Church again on Tuesday evening, the 13th.

The financial condition of the Flint Branch shows some very interesting figures. While not all figures are available, yet it is gratifying to note that in spite of hard times here during the last year, progress has been made in this department as follows: Tithing and offering, $3,625.31; budget, $1,837.96; building fund, $16,129.94; Christmas offering, First and Second Sunday school only, $474.33; First Sunday school offerings, $287.19; First Religio, $83.26. The figures of the Second and Third and Sunday school and Religio were not available at the time of writing. This shows a grand total of $7,869.92. The Department of Women placed $765.21 at the disposal of the building committee and the budget committee.

The closing of the year found seven hundred and nineteen names on the branch record. The departments have entered on the new year with increased zeal, and there seems to be a growing determination to make even better strides in 1925 than in 1924. To this end the branch is working, and endeavoring to carry out the program outlined.

San Antonio, Texas

January 6.—The sacramental service held on the first Sunday was well attended, there being the largest crowd we have had in some time. A goodly degree of the Spirit was felt in the prayer and testimonies, and everyone seemed glad to renew his covenant and begin the new year with resolutions to live better lives and do more for the gospel than they had done in the past.

We are glad to welcome Brother and Sister E. L. Henson to our branch, they having recently located here. Brother Henson was formerly pastor of the San Antonio Branch.

A bazaar was given under the auspices of the Department of Women on December 18, which netted them about $28. They expected to hold it three days, but owing to the sudden drop in temperature they were compelled to close after the first day, as the bazaar was being held in an open hall.

The San Antonio Saints are still expecting a visit from Bishop McGuire, who promised to be here in the latter part of November or the first of December to help us solve the problem of remodeling our church.

On Christmas Eve the Sunday school gave a nice program, with a tree for the children. The program was in charge of Miss Robinson. Before the presents were distributed, the children from sixteen down were asked to line up for a peanut hunt. The one finding the most peanuts was awarded a prize—a nice book. Cary Smith was the lucky boy. A box of bonbons was given to the one finding the smallest number, which was received by Madeline Desmuke.

Election of officers in all the departments was held at the latter part of November. All were ready to begin their official duties at the beginning of the new year.

Lucasville, Ohio

January 7.—Since our last report the Sunday school has held its election of officers, which resulted in the choice of James F. Crabtree as superintendent, with Brother Walter Culp as his assistant. We hope this year will be the greatest in many.

On January 4 sacramental and prayer service was held, at which time several from McDermott were present.

We are sorry to say that Brother James Shope of McDermott passed away after a long illness. The funeral was preached at our church by Brother F. May, of Vales Mills, Ohio, with the service in charge of Clarence Currant of McDermott.

Brother May will begin a series of meetings at our branch Sunday night, January 18, and we hope much good will be done.

Business meeting will be held January 31 to sustain our officers. We hope and pray the Spirit of the Master will be present.

May God bless and protect all who may read this letter.
The Winter's Work in Ogden, Utah

Last September I began to wonder what sort of a program I would arrange for the winter months. I felt that I should concentrate my efforts in one place for the greater part of our winter season. Not desiring to work and devise a program on my own limited resources, I made it a matter of prayer, asking God that he might direct.

As the result of my dependency on him and wanting him for a partner, I was given to know in the still hours of one night by the inspiration of God the sort of program to undertake. I was directed to begin a series of lectures on the history of the church; also to take current topics and speak on them, making an application of the gospel. I was impressed to begin this work in Ogden. I had the branch president call a meeting of the priesthood, and I laid the matter before them. A special meeting of the members of the branch was called, and we asked them to consider the plans. They suggested that Tuesday evening be used for the current lectures and that Friday evening be used for the church history, as it would give a chance for more of the young people to be present; Sunday morning a sermon for the Saints, and Sunday evening a missionary service. This plan suited me very well, as it gave me a chance to do some research work, which I wanted to do for the lecture portion of the program.

The first week in November we began our work in Ogden, attempting to work our plan. As we proceeded with our work, interest seemed to grow. Especially was this true with our church history lectures.

Questions were being asked that took considerable time to answer, so we converted our Tuesday night service into one dealing with the several questions. We spent six Tuesday nights on the question, "Why the necessity of a reorganization of the church?" This was of interest to those who were desirous of knowing the truth. Each evening we answered other questions that would be asked.

There were other men who were brought into town from the University of Utah in Salt Lake City to lecture on church history, and because of statements made it gave us more subjects to deal with. One Sunday evening we lectured on the subject, "Joseph Smith, an uncompromising foe of polygamy." We treated this subject because of one lecturer saying that evidences pointed to the fact that Joseph Smith practiced polygamy.

Also another speaker in the city (not a Mormon) said that "Joseph Smith was a dreamer." We took for our theme the following Sunday evening, "Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God or a dreamer?" We made friends among our Mormon neighbors again and were commended by both Mormon and Gentile. It has seemed that the community has furnished us with more subject material than we could deal with, owing to our lack of time.

I endeavored to carry our church history lectures to the Malad City Branch one night a week, but our work in Ogden increased until it took up our time, and we had to cancel that point. We are contemplating going there in February.

After we finished answering our questions, we gave a few talks on the social phase of our gospel.

Though we did not add to our church numerically, we feel that the members and others who knew our work in a casual way have become better informed and appreciate our cause so much that they are near admittance into the fold and will be with us soon. I did have the privilege of baptizing a splendid young mother, formerly a member of the Mormon Church. She received a wonderful blessing in her confirmation and has entered wholeheartedly into the work. She will be a blessing and a help to the Saints here. I was glad to hear her say, after a sermon I preached Sunday morning, "Well, I am going to give this church a chance to do something for me." She is entering into the work in such a way that I am sure God will repay her in great abundance.

We have endeavored to do our work in a constructive manner, and not in a controversial way. We find that we do not have the excitement that we would have otherwise, yet we believe our work more effective, and we have friends in the end. We find a good number whom one could not reason with under any condition, and others who are reasonable and ready to search out the truth of the matter.

I have been blessed in a wonderful manner by the Spirit of God, not only in preaching and lecture work, but in administering to the sick. I give to God the praise and honor.

This week I go to Provo and later to Malad City to carry on our work. We have some noble people out here in the valley of the mountains, and they are patiently struggling to keep the banner floating and looking forward to the redemption of Zion.

May the blessing of the eternal Father accompany his kingdom here on earth.

G. P. Levitt.

Ogden, Utah, 1501 Washington Avenue.

Stockton, California

On Sunday, January 4, was held one of the most spiritual and uplifting all-day meetings we have had, invitations having been sent to other branches of the district to join with us in the day's services.

The sacramental service at eleven o'clock was one of the largest attended in the history of the branch, there being present Saints from Modesto, Sacramento, Oakland, and Irvington. A goodly degree of the Spirit was present, and all were made to feel its influence. We had with us Apostle Roy S. Budd, District President J. D. White, and Elder W. H. Dawson. Each gave us words that were edifying and encouraging.

At noon a sumptuous dinner was served in the basement of the church by the Department of Women. The Orioles did their part by waiting on tables. This hour was also made use of by springing a surprise on two of the retiring officers, the branch president and the superintendent of the Sunday school. Each was presented with a token of appreciation for faithful service.

In the afternoon Apostle Budd delivered a wonderful sermon, the words of which still ring on to comfort and encourage all who heard.

We are starting on the new year with an encouraging outlook. A spirit of unity and good fellowship prevails throughout the different departments. The Sunday school, Religion, Department of Women, Temple Builders, and Orioles are all active and show evidence of increased interest.

Tulare, California

January 14.—The branch, Sunday school, and Department of Women held their election of officers in December, and all the officers were sustained for the coming year. The Department of Recreation and Expression made some changes. The following officers were elected: superintendent, Iva Powell; assistant superintendent and superintendent of Boys' Department, Durward Harper; superintendent of Girls' Department, Iva Powell; secretary, Gomer Snively; treasurer, Annie Walker; chorister Edna Snively; pianist, Mary Snively.

During Sunday school on December 21 an appreciative audience witnessed a very pretty Christmas program. Each pupil was given a box of candy and nuts by the class teacher.
In the evening the junior girls put on a tableau, "The birth of Jesus."

Tuesday, December 23, the Department of Women held a food sale of dressed chickens, cakes, pies, cookies, Spanish beans, and canned fruits. The sale was a splendid success, which netted $17.07.

Sacramental service was well attended January 4, and a good spiritual meeting was had.

In the evening the junior girls put on a tableau, of which netted $17.07.

The sale was a splendid success, and was considered an auspicious beginning for the winter.

The election of officers for the year for the Sunday school resulted in the old officers, tried and true, being retained, with the exception of a new assistant superintendent, Brother Joseph Bates. All the former branch officers were sustained.

The baby boy arrived December 21 at the home of Brother Howard Allison and wife. Also a wee boy arrived on December 30, the proud parents being Brother Edwin F. Chase and wife.

The young people had a very enjoyable time at a party January 13 at the home of Sister Margaret Allison. Games, puzzles, music, songs, and stories were the order of the evening, then bidding their kind hostess good-by, they fared forth into the frosty air, realizing that the best way to enjoy a Canadian winter is to go out often. The young folks are planning several more parties this winter.

Sisters Florence and Lillian Bates entertained Sister Doris Lockyer and her brother John from Ruthilda over Christmas, after which Brother Edmund Bates and Sister Eva Cornish accompanied them home and spent an enjoyable ten days.

Some New Methods in Branch Work

Waterloo, Iowa, January 19.—Elder Leonard Houghton, our district missionary, was with us last Sunday and preached a very soul-inspiring sermon on making sacrifices for the gospel's sake, a subject to which all should give earnest heed.

Our branch officers have adopted some new methods for increasing efficiency in local missionary work. A visiting card, which has been printed for the priesthood, is mailed to the Saints suggesting a certain time for the priesthood visits. If this date is inconvenient for the Saints, they are requested to let the priesthood know and suggest a convenient time for them to call. Also a small directory of the branch is printed which gives the branch officers, Sunday school officers, Department of Recreation and Expression officers, and those in charge of the Department of Women, besides a schedule of the church services.

The Sunday school is improving, both in interest and attendance. Officers, teachers, and members all want to make a more successful effort in this work.

The Religio has planned a series of special entertainments for the coming year that will, we believe, prove of great benefit to the church work here.

The Department of Women keeps pace with the others, and takes the lead in some respects. It will be a great help to the branch in many ways.

Senlac, Saskatchewan

January 14.—The Christmas tree and program held on the evening of December 23 was pronounced a success. The hall was comfortably filled, yet there would have been many more there if it had not been that several children had whooping cough, and others were not well enough to be out.

Elder W. J. Cornish returned from a tour among the branches of the district on December 24, being just one night too late to hear the Christmas program of his own branch. During his absence, the speakers were Elder J. J. Cornish, E. Leslie Mogg, Joseph Bates, Thomas Bates, and Elder John Tomlinson.

The custom in this branch is to have prayer meeting in the afternoon during the extremely cold weather. We commenced to-day at the home of Brother Richard Cornish. It was a very spiritual one, with a goodly crowd in attendance, and

Santa Ana, California

Santa Ana is all set for the race with 1925. Sister Olive Clapp, whose devoted and consecrated to gospel service is of the highest order, was again chosen superintendent of the Sunday school. Sister Olive Thurston, recently from Ontario, California, and proving herself a capable worker, was chosen assistant.

Brother David Carmichael was re-elected superintendent of the Religio, with Sister Mildred Calkins as assistant. Sister Calkins is another new worker in our ranks. These two are good leaders; may the rest of us prove as good assistants.

On January 7 the branch re-elected L. S. Rhodes branch president. Would it not have a salutary effect if our ministry would more often think of themselves as shepherds and pastors, and less often as officials with certain "powers"?

David Carmichael was called and recommended to the coming district conference for ordination to the office of priest. The business meeting was well attended, and yet never in the experience of the writer has there been a better spirit of unity than at this meeting. So far as we can recall, every vote taken was unanimous upon the question involved.

On the Sunday of January 11 Brother J. W. Rashdon gave us two of his excellent sermons, which were well attended and enjoyed by many. We were indeed sorry to learn of the death of Brother Rashdon's mother.

By the efforts of the young people of the branch, a series of special Sunday services on the fundamentals of the everlasting gospel was begun the 18th, to continue till March 15. The first three sermons by the pastor were "The everlasting gospel," "Believe," and "Cease to do evil." Last evening, January 25, Brother D. T. Williams arrived from San Diego and gave the fourth sermon of the series, "Ye must be born again." Brother Williams who is on his way to the district conference at San Bernardino, January 31, will also preach to us Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights of this week. Brother William's sermons are always spiritual and helpful.

Whatever is wrong with the church must also be wrong with the majority of its individual members. Surely an increase of humility and desire for spiritual guidance will increase our unity of purpose and eventually result in unity of understanding.

Leonard S. Rhodes.
Mount Vernon, Illinois

January 10.—On October 15 Sister Sparling, district organizer for the Department of Women, organized the sisters of our branch with Sister Cora Henson as superintendent, Sister Ida Feltman, treasurer, and Mrs. M. F. Lowry, secretary.

As we had no funds to start with, we took up a collection of $1.84 and decided that the monthly fee should be twenty-five cents a member. The men then decided to help by paying monthly dues also. We now have thirty-five members and are studying the Doctrine and Covenants. We want to raise money to build a new church, as our membership is outgrowing our small place of worship.

To begin with we bought five yards of unbleached muslin for aprons. At our first meeting we stamped the aprons and worked different designs on them. These aprons sold for $1.25 each, and by January 1 we had sold forty dollars worth of aprons. We sold twenty-seven aprons of one design, also a number of dresser scarfs and pillowcases. We have a name quilt started. We have taken in $90.02. Four of the sisters took a few quilt scraps for the older sisters to work, and out of the few scraps we got enough to piece four sets of quilt blocks. Two of them will soon be ready for sale. We also took our old rags and stockings and expect to make several small rugs to sell by house-cleaning time. We keep our ladies supplied with material to work with. We now have on hand $72.17, besides twenty yards of muslin, eleven pairs of pillowcases, nineteen scarfs, one bedspread, besides our embroidery floss and thread. We have at least ten non-members, and some of these are our best workers and pay their dues regularly.

We do not want to forget to mention the box of fruit which was sent to the Sanitarium for Christmas.

We feel that we have been blessed in our work the last two months, and hope we may be able to do still more the coming year. We do not like to think of the time when Sister Sparling will have to leave us, as she has been a noble worker. We all look to her for instructions. MRS. M. F. LOWRY.

Special Nights in Wellsburg Campaign

Last week was a very interesting one at our campaign here at Willsburg. Three special nights were observed: Neighbor’s night, young people’s night, and family night.

On neighbor’s night a year's subscription to the Ensign was given to the person bringing with him the largest number of neighbors who were not regular attendants at our services.

Young people’s night a year's subscription to the Autumn Leaves was given to the young person bringing the largest number of young people who were not regular attendants.

Family night a year’s subscription to the Ensign was given to the largest complete family present.

This idea surely accomplished the purpose intended. Our church house was literally packed every night. Some had to be turned away as they could not even find room to stand. Young people’s night the winning party was a twin sister who brought eighteen young people to the service. Several others were near that mark.

We have secured the use of the Baptist church, which is just across from ours, in which to give our steeptoration lectures, for it seats a much greater number of people. We are to give another one there to-morrow evening.

I am sure that much good is to be accomplished. THOMAS L. CLARK.

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA, JANUARY 15.

Atchison, Kansas

January 28.—Again we are starting out on a new year, which we hope will be entered into with a feeling of deeper consecration for the work of the Master. Our newly installed officers are taking up their work with a zeal and zest which should result in much good being accomplished in the various departments of the work.

Brother Gilbert Hedrick was elected superintendent of the Sunday school, and Sister Vivian Gillispie president of the Religio.

Brother C. J. Hunt spent Sunday, January 25, with us, and his round table talk and sermon were enjoyed by all. Brother Hunt always has an encouraging message for all who are interested in this latter-day work.

Brother Roy Whipple of Topeka, our district superintendent of the Department of Recreation and Expression, has launched the idea of a district paper, gathering news from the various branches. We feel this is a good move on the part of our brother and wish him success in the undertaking.

On December 28 we had a visit from Brother L. M. Dyke, of Eagle City, Oklahoma, who spent the day with us. He spoke both morning and evening and had an interesting message to present both times.

We trust this will be a prosperous year for all engaged in the Master’s work.

Uhrichsville, Ohio

January 24.—To-day I received my third copy of the SAINTS’ HERALD. It is always good news to my wife and me, for in it we find so many interesting letters from different cities or branches. These letters are always good to read as they bring the news of the Saints from so many parts of the country, so I believe some of the Saints would like to hear from us. I also think it plays a good part in keeping up the interest among the Saints in church work. It also keeps us in touch with the progress of the work.

We belong to the New Philadelphia Branch but live in Uhrichsville about ten miles away. My wife has been in the church about twenty-eight years; I was baptized in July, 1924.

I never had much faith in the Latter Day Saints, believing like many others in the world to-day, that they were Mormons, but after I had attended some of the services and learned about their organization, I became interested in it. I believe he will be the second coming of Christ; Destiny of man.

The Lord has blessed us here. We have had business in the church about twenty-eight years; I was baptized in July, 1924.

I have had much faith in the Latter Day Saints, believing like many others in the world to-day, that they were Mormons, but after I had attended some of the services and learned about their organization, I became interested in it. I believe he will be the second coming of Christ; Destiny of man.

We are praying and looking forward to the time when the Lord will establish a branch here, and we believe he will answer the prayers of his people. At the present time there are twelve or fourteen members living here.

We ask the prayers of the Saints that God will bless the work here. We have cottage prayer meetings each week, and the Spirit of God is with us, both in testimony and prayer.

Let us all pray as one that God will make this a prosperous year in the church. ROBERT E. MASON.

Apostle Ellis in the Islands

(From letter of Clyde F. Ellis to the First Presidency, from Papeete, Tahiti, November 23, 1924.)

I left Sydney, Australia, on the 6th of November on board S. S. Mauungoni, and reached Papeete, Tahiti, on the morning of the 17th. I found Elder and Sister Farthing and several Saints at or on the wharf to greet me. We had a very good voyage, with the exception of two or three days just after leaving Sydney and Wellington, when we experienced considerable wind. A day and a half in Wellington, New Zealand, and a few hours in Rarotonga broke the monotony of the trip.

The usual reception was given me on the evening of the day I arrived, and if the natives can be believed in their expressions of joy in my returning, they are very appreciative of my proposed short call and work among them. I am sure Brother and Sister Farthing were glad to see me, as they have been here alone since I left last March.

They have worked hard, and that, too, under disadvantages which have not been experienced by the average man and woman in coming to this field. They have done exceptionally well. Besides the routine work of the office and mission in general, Elder Farthing has written the Book of Mormon into the Tahitian the children's quarterly which was written by Sister Farthing in English. This has meant a great deal of work and study, both in research and study for the subject matter of the lessons, as well as intense study of the language and customs of the people.

We are leaving to-morrow on the two-masted schooner Parkes for the island of Kaukura, where we will stay about ten days, and from there to Arutua for another ten days, and then on to Apataki, where the conference will convene on the 20th of December. We are not anticipating a very large gathering, but a fairly good representation will be present from some of the distant islands.

(From letter of Clyde F. Ellis to the First Presidency, Kaukura, Tuamotuan Archipelago, French Oceania, December 5, 1924.)

Elder R. J. Farthing, wife, and I left Papeete, Tahiti, on the afternoon of the 25th of November on board the schooner Parkes, and arrived here early on the morning of the 27th. We were met on the reef and shore by the Saints, who gladly received us in their midst. Our voyage from Papeete, a distance of 180 miles, was not a very unpleasant one, although I cannot say it was enjoyed very much. The best on these boats is no class at all on a steamer. We had for our cargo, besides the common cargo of canned foods, etc., four horses and two automobiles. These, together with the large passenger list of natives and half-castes, crowded our deck to its capacity.

Since our arrival here we have been working on church land titles, mission statistical work, translation of songs, settling difficulties, and preaching. To-night I shall preach in our chapel here. And so each day opens with the same tasks and closes with much less accomplished than we had anticipated.

I find it a great advantage to me to be able to come among the people here with an understanding of their language. I think I can handle the native better than I can English. I preached last Sunday noon with wonderful liberty and power, which was felt by all present. I think I shall be able to accomplish more in three months this time than I did the first year I spent among them from 1914 to 1916.

I regret that it will be impossible for me to get back to Tahiti in time to catch the January boat. I will not get another one until March 7, 1925. It cannot be avoided. I think this mission is the most inconvenient one, when it comes to travel, that we have in the church. I am trying to get back in time for the March boat to San Francisco, which I am sure of catching, and possibly in time to catch a tramp boat in February, if one happens to come by Tahiti on its way north.

Apostle D. T. Williams Visits Bisbee and Douglas

BISBEE, ARIZONA, January 19.—From January 7 to 11 the Bisbee Saints enjoyed each evening and Sunday morning, some very helpful and inspirational sermons by Apostle D. T. Williams, who arrived on the 6th from Phoenix. Brother Williams proved himself to be not only an interesting and talented speaker, but as a result of his encouraging talks, the Saints expressed themselves as having received renewed strength and an added determination to move forward in the work. We were glad to have a number of the Douglas Branch members with us on several evenings, who motored up for the occasion.

Sunday, the 11th, was a busy day for Brother Williams, for in addition to preaching twice we were favored with his being in charge of a priesthood meeting in the afternoon and in charge of the annual meeting for election of branch officers. Form 1 was adopted at this meeting, so the Sunday school and Religio Department election was deferred until the 18th. The following branch officers were elected: Henry Goldie, president; Sister Daisy Short, clerk; C. F. Rehwald, treasurer; Sister T. R. Davis, organist.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings Brother Williams preached to the Douglas Saints, leaving Wednesday morning for Tucson where he expected to preach that evening and then leave for Phoenix and the coast.

On the 18th, Sunday school and Religio officers were elected as follows: Sunday school: Daisy Short, superintendent; Minnie Enyart, assistant superintendent; Harold Webster, secretary; Sister T. R. Davis, organist. Religio: T. R. Davis, superintendent; Brother Hammil, assistant superintendent; Reese Davis, secretary; Sister D. L. Evans, organist.

Janesville, Wisconsin

January 18.—We may not have great things to record, but the fact that we are still willing to be led by the Master in his way means much.

Janesville Branch, though small in numbers, is very united in purpose. We meet at the homes of the Saints for services. The first Sunday in the month we met at the home of Brother Hield and had sacrament and Sunday school, and in the afternoon Brother N. E. Hield of Madison gave us a short address on stewardships, which was appreciated by all.

We are all very glad to have Brother and Sister Christy with us again. They have been laboring in other parts of the field for some weeks. He addressed us Wednesday evening and left a very profitable and cheering message. Southern Wisconsin certainly should appreciate such workers. I have known him to address an audience in Milwaukee in the morning, Janesville in the afternoon, and Beloit in the evening. Such self-sacrifice should be rewarded.

Ever praying for the uplift of the gospel,
Sister Baker.

Good Conference in England

It is so seldom we can get the English press to give us anything in the nature of favorable comment, that it is with pleasure I send you the inclosed copy of the Manchester Evening Chronicle for Thursday, January 1, 1925. One of the representatives of this paper had been to interview Brother G. W. Leggott, one of the associate presidents of the Northern District, and the short article under the heading “Other Latter Day Saints” was the result.

We have just had what the writer considers to be one of the finest conferences ever held in the Northern District, and I wish to commend the work of Elder W. H. Chandler and High Priest G. W. Leggott, who are associated together in the presidency of this district. These men seem to have grasped the secret of success in district work and are bringing about a wonderfully beautiful feeling of brotherhood, a feeling which has evidently met with the approval of our heavenly Father, for both at the business session and also during the services of the Sabbath Day, the sweet spirit of peace prevailed. I want to stand by these men to help in keeping this wonderful condition of things ever present.

The hand of the reaper has been busy with many members of this district during the past year, taking away from us some noble and zealous workers, and there is no question whatever about the fact that we miss them. Our sympathy goes out to the ones who are left behind. May God bless and comfort them. There are many sick, and our hearts were made to feel sad to hear the news on Sunday, that a granddaughter of Brother Leggott has been given up by the doctors, having only a month to live. How sore the hearts of the parents must feel as they look upon the pain-stricken face of their dear one, watching day by day for the end. As I looked into the face of the mother, I was filled with emotion to see the look of anguish in her eyes, and I prayed that God would give her strength and fortitude to meet what has been declared to be the inevitable.

Bradford, Yorkshire, was organized into a branch during the last quarter by Apostle P. M. Hanson. The writer and the Northern District president were present. These are a devoted and loyal set of people, to use the words of Apostle Hanson himself, and I have great hopes for their future. I believe that under the hands of Elder George Aldridge, who has been elected president, the work in that part will progress. No one can come into this branch without feeling the deep sincerity of these Saints.

The officers are men of intelligence and are filled with zeal, and the members are truly Latter Day Saints; as also are the men chosen to lead them. Brother Aldridge is ably supported by his brother Percy, who is also ordained to the eldership, and they, with Brother Proctor as priest and Brother Harry Aldridge as deacon, make a splendid combination that ought to do a good work, and I believe we shall hear of their continued success.

One branch of this district, the North Manchester, has been unfortunate in the fact that they are now without a meeting place, consequent upon an accident that befell the same. The writer was present, and when just immediately after a lecture we were conversing around the fireplace, a terrible ripping noise was heard, and the whole place was plunged in darkness, and the beams, laths, and plaster fell right into the room, one huge beam just grazing the writer’s back, who happened to be nearest to the fall. Because of the lights having failed as a result of the fall, it was impossible for us to see one another, for, in addition to the darkness, the whole place was filled with clouds of dust.

Several of the sisters, in an attempt to get clear, caught their feet in the furniture, and were thrown headlong to the floor. We extricated them and asked them to leave as soon as possible. Of course they were anxious to get clear, but they had left their umbrellas, which English sisters are always forced to have with them, and also their bags containing their moneys. Being afraid there might be another fall at any moment, I advised them to leave the room, and getting a light, I advanced into the debris to rescue the umbrellas, purses, etc., and just as I had lifted these articles, and had them safely in my arms, there was another ripping and tearing, and down came another length of beam, etc. I need hardly say we were glad to get into the open.

We hope that before long the members of this branch will have another home in which to meet and worship God. They have the sympathy of the whole of the other branches.

May God bless the Northern District.

ABEL HALL.

[From Manchester Evening Chronicle:]

Other Latter Day Saints

A strange position often arises in Manchester, where, in addition to the Mormons, there are seven churches in the district of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. The members of this organization, who number about five hundred, are frequently mistaken for Mormons, whom, actually, they strongly oppose.

“We are the followers of the original Joseph Smith,” said Mr. G. W. Leggott, the president for the Manchester District, “The Mormons are the followers of Brigham Young, who evolved the ideas that Adam was God, of blood atonement, and polygamy, all of which tenets we strongly oppose. If we hear of any activities on the part of the Mormons we set about to neutralize them.

“Our center is at Independence, Missouri. The Mormons have about one hundred fifty missionaries in England, and they seem to be most active with the womenfolk.”

That the Mormons are paying greater attention to this country there seems little doubt. They claim to have sent missionaries to every civilized nation in the world. Their Manchester president remarked that it was their intention to gain converts here so that in England a Mormon temple may be erected.

Haverhill, Massachusetts

January 24.—On the evening of January 22 the branch held a well-attended social, the main event of which was to see who could eat the most pie. There certainly was plenty of pie of all kinds to be eaten, and the cooks here are of the best. The children also enjoyed a number of games. Among them were two which tested their powers of observation. These socials are held once a month during the winter months.

The work in this part of the vineyard is in good condition, with everyone doing his part towards its success. Among our recent speakers we are pleased to note Brother Edmund Fisher of Boston. His talks are always greatly appreciated.

Two of the brethren have new charts of a very interesting nature. They have given us several talks which have been illustrated by their charts.

We pray always for the success of the work in the world.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania

January 22.—The holiday season is past, and we feel as if the house had just been cleared of company, which allows us to settle down for quietness and thought.

In the hustle and bustle of the world, the human does not take time for those beautiful thoughts which can come only by quiet thought and peaceful surroundings, and it is possible that the holiday season is not having the beauties for mankind, for these particular reasons.

Brother James Bishop was with us a few days the first of this month. Brother Bishop lived in Pittsburgh some years since, and seems like a big brother who left home, but who does not forget us as he pays a flying visit once in a great while.

During the month one of our families, Brother E. C. J. Swanson, wife, and two sons, Gerald and Winston, left us to live in Columbus, Ohio. Brother Swanson was our superintendent of Religio, and we'll look a long time to find another one of the Columbus branches will be enriched by their presence, and we wish them success in their new location.

Brother Gomer Griffiths, whom every one in the church knows, was with us January 11 to 15. Daddy, as we call him, is indeed a father in Israel, and his fatherly advice and beautiful thoughts leave us with a greater determination to live as Christ would have us. We all love him, and by the example he has set may we follow.

The branch held its semiannual business meeting on January 14. Brother L. F. P. Curry of 1518 Grandin Avenue, Dormont, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, was again elected president, a fine man for a man's place. With but few exceptions the same officers were reelected. We are indeed glad for the harmony that exists, and when one is told of the old business meetings in which it took all evening to transact the business of only one department he will see advancement by knowing that all the departments of the branch did their business in about one and one half hour's time.

When in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, we hope all will make this branch their church home. To get to our branch when in the city, board a number 42 Beechview car at Fourth Avenue and Wood Street and tell the conductor you wish to go to Realty and Tomah Avenue; the car stop is one square from the church. We welcome you, and you will be blessed by the Spirit by having worshiped with the Saints of Christ.

Owen Sound, Ontario

January 20.—An impressive and appropriate event of the season was the Christmas entertainment entitled, “The coming of the King,” presented by the Sunday school, assisted by the choir of the branch. The program was under the direction of Brother George T. Furness, with Sister Margaret Gilchrist at the piano throughout. A special setting was arranged, transforming the front of the auditorium of the church into a panoramic view of a miniature city of Bethlehem, and the plains. Special lighting effects were used, giving a very realistic effect to the program.

Our annual business meeting was held January 7 in charge of Elder D. B. Perkins, district president, whose efficient manner of conducting the meeting was much appreciated. A branch president was elected, also a presiding priest, teacher, and deacon. Department superintendents were chosen by the general assembly, they in turn to elect their staff of officers in their department. The financial department was placed in the hands of a committee of three, the branch treasurer to be the chairman. The budget system was adopted, the budget to be drafted by the superintendents of the departments and the finance committee and then submitted to the branch for ratification.

A pleasant event of the season was made possible by the kindness of Brother Leslie Silverthorn, who entertained the boys and girls of the Sunday school to a sleigh ride around the city, after which they were served cake and coffee by the Department of Women. A hearty vote of thanks was extended to Brother Silverthorn and the ladies for the enjoyable evening.

Sister Lizzy Morrison of Holstein, who is visiting at the home of Elder J. A. Morrison, was stricken with a paralytic stroke January 4. She is recovering and has regained the partial use of her limbs.

Elder J. L. Mortimer, who has been confined to his bed for some time, has been gaining strength and is able to sit at his bedside for some time each day.

The branch has been highly favored with a visit from Patriarch John Shields, who remained over a week, holding services in the church and giving kindly exhortation and relating experiences that were very helpful. He also visited the homes of the members, giving encouragement and anointing and praying for the afflicted.

Elder Frank Jordan and wife, of Viceroy, Saskatchewan, are visiting friends and relatives in this city.

Alexander, Kansas

We are holding Sunday school sessions each Sunday, but have had no preaching services since around December 1. Our attendance is small, averaging about nine, so we are sometimes discouraged, for we think of five years ago when we were having from forty to seventy-five in attendance.

We sometimes permit ourselves to think of the five wise and the five foolish virgins and become discouraged because we see this parable worked out in present times, but we hope the ones having no oil will wake up in time to enter in.

Many of our faithful ones have removed to Zion, and the fact that things are discouraging in some of these outlying districts impels all the faithful to desire a move in that direction.

We greatly miss Sister O. E. Thompson and her four daughters, as they were very regular attendants at all the church services. However, they got the gathering spirit and will now be found at 718 North Cottage in Independence.

Our president lives twelve miles away from the branch meeting place, and with such roads and the cold weather it is no wonder we have not been able to see his smiling face for six weeks.

The fact that we find no church papers on the reading tables of some of our branch members, while we do find secular papers galore, tends to the conditions which exist, causing some of our members to drop out in their allegiance to the church. All should have the HERALD, the Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. The branch solicitor, Sister John Teeters, is ready to send orders for any who desire them. We exhort the Alexander Saints to subscribe for these blessed church papers, to order tracts and books and keep them in their homes during the year 1925. God will surely bless those who make this effort to align themselves and become more involved in the church movements. If you will leave off five or six picture shows or a few treats of candy or nuts, or weed out some indifferent or harmful papers and put these in their places, your children will become interested in these, which surely will uplift them, and when warm weather comes will want to jump in the family transportation vehicle and start for the Alexander church.
Our young sister, Trelia Ebert, has returned from Hay
City Hospital after an operation for appendix trouble.
Sister John Teeters is about recovered from a sickness of three months which was ushered in by an attack of flu, fol-owed by a serious relapse.

Grandmother Coddington has been very ill at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. J. Thompson. She is improved a little at this writing.

Elder J. A. Teeters and family enjoy the radio these cold winter evenings, and their friends come in and listen also.
At present they cannot get K F I X, but they hope the new apparatus will enable them to get K L D S. We recently heard Volva, of Zion, Illinois, preach that anyone claiming visions or revelations in these days are liars. He certainly has overlooked the prophecy of dear old Amos which reads:
“Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secrets to his servants the prophets.”

Catholic, Iowa
January 25.—We are very much encouraged with the prospects for this year’s work in our branch, for every department of the work seems to be in a better condition than ever before.

The Sunday school is showing the greater action under the supervision of Brother Vernon Spence, and to-day’s record was every officer and teacher present, with the best attendance of the year. A Doctrine and Covenants class has been organized with Brother Reeder as teacher. Sister Mary Yarrington has been appointed choir leader, and she makes singing a feature of the Sunday school work.

The prayer services are a great help to us, and the interest and attendance at the services have been very good. The week ending January 17, a cottage meeting was held every evening, the object of our prayers being the success of the special meetings which are now in progress. On December 31 a fine prayer service was held at the home of Brother Albert Haynes, after which the Saints and a few friends gathered at the home of Brother and Sister W. W. Reeder for a watch party. The evening was spent by the young in playing games, while the older ones visited. A dainty lunch was served by the ladies. As the Old Year departed the party became silent, and prayer was offered by Brother Haynes. We can think of no better way to begin the new year than in prayer to God. After exchanging New Year’s greetings all departed for home, feeling they had spent a very profitable evening.

Brother F. T. Musell has been here since January 18 and is certainly giving us some wonderful sermons. The town has been well canvassed, and some new faces are seen every night. The attendance of the Saints has been fair. Slippery walks and roads are keeping many away who wish to come.

The evening of January 17 the banquet promised to the winners by the losers of the recent Sunday school contest was served to about seventy members. Brother Albert Haynes, assisted by Sister Myrtle Reeder, had charge of the banquet, while Brother Vernon Spence acted as toastmaster in a very able manner. The tables were set in the form of a cross and were decorated in red and green over white. The old and new officers of the school and the branch officers occupied places at the head of the table. A special table was provided for the little folks as guests of honor. A program of music, readings, and short talks was given by members of the school. The Greens were pleased at winning, but were glad to divide the honor for a better Sunday school with the Reds, who lost by forgetting to attend Sunday school after they had gained the most new members.

The contest in the Sunday school developed a great get-together spirit in our branch, and all are working together for the good of the work in this place. To-day we had a wonderful attendance at the morning service to hear the very fine sermon by Brother Mussell. The young people are assisting greatly by their interest in making the song service a success.

Our Christmas offering for 1924 was a disappointment to us, but for this year Brother Albert Haynes has been appointed as Christmas offering superintendent, and he will push this part of the work with vigor. Some classes already have a good start.

Brother and Sister Paul Gross, who have been living in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, have returned here to make their home again.

Davidson, Oklahoma
January 24.—The work at this place is still moving onward.
Although we have had some bad weather and sickness, our attendance has been very good at all meetings.

The Sunday school gave a Christmas program on the evening of December 22. The tree was beautifully decorated and was loaded with those things which help to make Christmas the happiest time of the year.

One of our young men, Brother Zenas Renfro, was ordained to the office of priest a few weeks ago. We are all very happy to have some one else help to carry on this great work. Brother Renfro is one of our teachers in the Sunday school, and is also the leader of the young people.

Brother S. S. Smith stopped here on the way to his mission field and preached a few nights for us. The attendance was not large, but all who came enjoyed his sermons. Brother Smith addressed the students of the Davidson high school, and both the student body and the faculty appreciated the address.

Brother Jesse Simmons, a former missionary in Eastern Oklahoma District, has located with his family here. We are very glad to have them with us. The young people are especially glad to have their daughter Fern help in the orchestra.

East Saint Louis, Illinois
February 2.—At the branch business meeting held on January 12, Elder George F. Barraclough was elected branch president, with Elders W. C. Carl and Henry W. Brunkhorst counselors. Brother E. C. Sellers was elected Sunday school superintendent and Clinton Dickens, Religio superintendent.
On Sunday, January 11, Elder Benjamin Bean was the speaker both morning and evening. Elder W. C. Carl spoke on Sunday morning, January 18, and Elder Barraclough in the evening.

We had no services other than Sunday school on January
25. This was on account of district conference at Saint Louis, which many of the East Saint Louis Saints attended.
Apostle E. J. Gleazer was present and preached two grand sermons.

Our Religio is planning a Valentine program for Friday, February 13, and in cooperation with the Women’s Department a George Washington program for Friday, February 20.
Graceland Chats

President Briggs spent several days of last week in Des Moines attending an educational meeting. Of especial interest to him was a lecture by C. Grant Robertson, president Birmingham University, England, on the subject of "University ideals."

Everyone was glad to meet President F. M. McDowell on his return to Graceland. While only meeting with classes on half time as yet, Brother McDowell is met with pleased students and faculty members. The principal concern has been that even half time might mean too much for his physical well-being.

The gymnasium is so far finished that students are using it in pursuance of physical studies according to state requirement.

On January 15 occurred the final intersociety debate, the question discussed being, "Resolved that Congress shall by a two-thirds majority vote be empowered to override decisions of the Supreme Court." The affirmative was supported by the Alpha Pi Sigma represented by Francis Leeka, Kelley Anderson, and Roy Henderson, while the Victorians defended the negative with Jack Gardner, George Lewis, and Allan Houghton winning the decision for their society.

Visitors to the college do not often get farther than up the first flight of stairs in the Administration Building. Now really the next flight would take one to places of especial interest. Go up this flight and land before a window from which the eye may reach a beautiful panorama of farm and woodland, stretching away to the eastern horizon. If one loves the prairies, here is delight when spring has come or when summer clothes all these hills in shining green corn or meadow quite as fair. But come to the right and up a few more steps to the Art Department, where Miss Mabel Carlile teaches the art of paint and song. Here turreted room is picturesque and inviting, if busy scenes are inviting to you. From the western door one looks down upon "the hills that lie close round about," and on the little town of Lamoni itself. Miss Mabel herself in "artist smock of painter's blue" will welcome you and lead you into the mysteries of beautifying the home, or it may be training teachers for high school music, or she may be drilling a duet or quartet for radio program or Sunday evening service. If I were to lead you to the twin of this romantic upper room, under the low-set rafters, I'd say, Come down and over to Recitation Hall, down into the basement room where Miss Mabel's school friend, Miss Lulu Porter, reigns supreme. The Domestic Science Department is companion for that upper room, interesting and practical and possessed of a spirit at once pleasing, a sort of happy, homey spirit. Here they learn to cook, and this semester they are learning sewing, beginning with pillowcases and completing it all with dresses. Down here the girls may give little dinners or suppers, doing the cooking themselves. The charge is small, just enough to cover cost of light and cooking gas. They are required to finish and be out of the rooms by the usual study hour, 8 p. m. excepting on Friday evenings.

The evenings of one week in each year are given to a series of gospel services, held in the Brick Church. On these occasions, practices are not permitted to keep students from attendance, and faculty and student endeavor to hear the sermons. This year Patriarch Richard Baldwin was the speaker, during the week just closed. Brother and Sister Baldwin met a score or more of young people with whom they were friends in the Eastern States and in England, and they were royally welcomed and entertained by these friends, as well as others. Brother Baldwin spoke to the student body in the chapel service on Friday afternoon.

The Tuesday chapel hour has been given over to a series of lectures on slides, picturing famous scenes in the world. Faculty and student share in delivering these lectures. The Tuesday just passed was the occasion for the Philippine lecture. This Mr. Briggs gave, with much interest attaching because of his occupancy in the islands for several years. What magic lies in actual experience, when a lecturer stands to present a subject. Nothing quite supplies such qualification. Not even much book learning.

Bevier, Missouri

January 26.—The branch and all the auxiliaries have begun the new year with more enthusiasm than has been manifest for some years. A much better feeling has prevailed, and better cooperation is being given by all the departments since the branch and auxiliaries went back to the old mode of election in vogue prior to 1919. Greater initiative is being manifest by those at the head of the different departments.

Sister Ethel Harris of Saint Louis and Brother and Sister Rhodes Burton of Huntville were recent visitors. Brother Burton is a recent addition to the church and bids fair to become a useful member.

Brother Ivor Surridge has recently returned from an extended visit at Coffeyville and Topeka, Kansas. He attended meetings of the Saints at both places.

Brother and Sister Samuel Perry's two little girls have been seriously ill with scarlet fever. Owing to medical skill and the administration of the elders, both are now convalescent.

While Sister James Hamer and husband were in Bevier shopping on January 24, their fine country home, two and one half miles southeast of Bevier, caught fire and was entirely destroyed, leaving them nothing but the clothes they wore. The building and contents were insured for less than half of the value.

Ottumwa, Iowa

January 31.—The church work has made a good start for the new year, and there seems to be a great desire to be forward. The pastor has stressed the need of a greater vision of the work before us.

At the recent priesthood meeting the pastor spoke on "What constitutes a pastoral visit." The Spirit of the Master met with us.

January 27 the Saints had a surprise party for Brother D. T. Williams on his seventy-seventh birthday. There were twenty-seven present. Refreshments were served, and a gift of money was presented to our brother. He welcomed the visitors and in his talk he told us he had been a member of this church fifty years. We regret to say that our brother has been unable to work for some time, and it is truly uplifting to see the demonstration of the love of the Saints for him. We are proud of him because he has given to the church his sons, Apostle D. T. Williams and Elder E. Williams, and because he is still able to bear his testimony of the divinity of the work.

Sister E. Santee gave birth to a very fine boy on January 25.

The Department of Women held a home-food sale January 31.

Brother Baker gave a sermon recently on government, which was much enjoyed. We are happy to have with us Brother E. H. Lewis from Chicago.
Independence

Stone Church

The junior church, which meets in the basement, is having some very interesting and profitable programs, and the young people who are not attending these services are missing something they would enjoy. The service is held every Sunday morning at eleven o'clock. Sixty-seven were present last Sunday, at which time Miss Lillian Williams told a beautiful story, “Cherry Blossom.” Also Mrs. A. E. Terryberry described in detail the Shredded Wheat Factory, at Niagara Falls, New York, which was very fine.

The Department of Women held an interesting meeting Friday, February 6. An address was given by Mrs. D. J. Krailt, “Do our social conditions meet our social needs?” in which she spoke of the wonderful work done by Judge Lindsey, of Denver, Colorado, in helping the boys and girls to live a better life, that he had the opportunity to help many who were afraid to go to their parents. She gave a list of books suitable to read to the children. Mrs. B. F. Creel gave a talk on her work as missionary among the Omaha Indians. They are taking the gospel to them as well as teaching them to live in a civilized way. Pastor C. Ed Miller spoke on “The efficiency of prayer,” and Bishop Becker discussed our financial problem. A few vocal numbers were given by Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Norman.

A one-day institute for the W. C. T. U. will be held Tuesday, February 17, at the Stone Church, commencing at half past ten in the morning and half past one in the afternoon. The county president, Mrs. W. H. Johnson, will be in charge, and Mrs. Fannie L. Taylor, president of the Federated W. C. T. U., of Kansas City, will conduct the institute work. There will be special musical numbers, and the programs are free. The public is invited. Plan to attend and show these people that we are glad to welcome them to our church and are in favor of the good work they are doing. An especially nice luncheon will be served for thirty-five cents at a quarter after twelve by the Department of Women.

President F. M. Smith recently went to Taylorville, Illinois, to attend the conference of the Central Illinois District. At the same time President Elbert A. Smith attended conference in Rich Hill, Missouri, returning Monday.

Sunday evening the Saints had the opportunity of hearing a sermon from Elder W. R. Farrell, who is a missionary in Warrensburg and vicinity. The pastor, C. Ed Miller, spoke in the morning.

Second Church

Sunday morning Elder Joseph Luff was the speaker, and despite the rain there was present a large and attentive congregation.

The evening speaker was an old-time friend of the Second Church, Elder E. A. Davis, for whom there are always requests to come and preach.

The priesthood of the section will meet next Sunday evening at six o'clock for parliamentary practice and the discussion of the work of the year.

Brother Charles Koehler and family are completing the building of a home on West South Avenue, and we will welcome them to our congregation and list of active workers.

Brother Henry Campbell, who was so severely hurt early in December by an automobile running him down, is again getting out to the church, and all are glad to see him.

East Independence

Sunday morning the Saints enjoyed having Brother Harry Friend for their speaker. A sermon from Brother Joseph Stowell was enjoyed in the evening.

The choir met this week to elect their officers, so they will soon be ready for good hard work.

Liberty Street

The Liberty Street Saints have been saddened by the sickness of Brother V. W. Gansolley, who has for some time been their leader along musical lines, having had charge of the orchestra for many months, and conductor of the choir since fall. On Sunday special prayers were offered for him in the general congregation and in the separate organizations as well. All are hoping and praying for his speedy recovery.

Sunday morning Brother J. A. Dowker gave a pleasing sermon on “Faith.”

At the evening service C. Ed Miller, pastor in Zion, gave an interesting talk on “God's masterpieces,” illustrated. All enjoyed this treat, but Brother Miller was unable to complete the full lecture in one evening. It is hoped that at some time it may be continued. There was a large crowd in spite of the stormy evening.

On Monday evening the Temple Builders of this organization held open house for their mothers, older sisters, aunts, and grandmothers, and about forty visitors were present, making a total attendance of more than sixty. At this meeting Sister M. A. Ettenhouzer gave a splendid lecture on “A good inheritance,” using the blackboard to assist her in illustrating important points. Several applications for membership were received.

Walnut Park

Elder Evan A. Davis was the eleven o'clock speaker, and as a preacher he was pronounced “a regular old-timer.” He left no one in doubt as to the message he wished to present—the fact that Saints must have humility, faith, hope, charity, and love in order to endure the conditions prevailing. His faith in the triumph of the work is strong.

A good-sized audience braved the elements in the evening and enjoyed a sermon from Brother A. K. Dillee.

The young people's Wednesday evening prayer meetings will be held hereafter in the south wing of the church auditorium.

Brothers C. Ed Miller and J. A. Becker met with Walnut Park officers and department heads Monday evening, and a quite thorough organization for the year's work of the district was completed.

Enoch Hill

Apostle John W. Rushton was the speaker at the night service February 1. In his inimitable way he preached a sermon which in power and quality was very marked.

Saturday afternoon the funeral service of Robert Gubser was held. Owing to the limited capacity of our own church building, the service was held at the Walnut Park Church. A very large crowd attended, many having to stand. This young brother, only sixteen years of age, was highly respected by all those who knew him. He is sadly missed. Amos E. Allen had charge of the services, and Elder W. J. Brewer preached the sermon. Music was nicely rendered by a mixed quartet, men's quartet, and Sister Mareine Smith. The floral tokens were both numerous and beautiful, showing the regard which was felt for the young brother.

Young people's prayer meetings have been recently started in our district and are proving very interesting. Good attendances are the rule.

The speakers last Sunday were well received. In the morning our Elder J. V. Roberts occupied. In the evening Elder W. H. Kelley renewed acquaintances with us and preached a very eloquent sermon.

The Enoch Hill Religio is thriving. The attendances are keeping up, and splendid programs are being arranged and presented. The study of the Book of Mormon is the dominant feature, and all are very much interested in the research into this wonderful book.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Our Sunday school is enjoying also the spirit of advancement. On January 25 it set a new record for attendance, the numbers present being 225 out of an enrollment of 254. We are thankful the Saints in this locality are alive to the great importance of the Sunday school. As a church department it ranks high in concern for the souls of the young.

Spring Branch

Brother R. W. Farrell gave a very fine sermon Sunday morning, and in the evening Elder Charles Edmunds, of Second Independence congregation, visited us and preached an interesting and inspiring sermon.

The bad weather made attendance at church difficult, but those who were able to be present enjoyed the services of the day.

Englewood

Attendance at church has been increasing of late, so there was a large attendance at the sacramental service the first of the month. There was also a good crowd out to hear Apostle J. F. Curtis Sunday morning, in spite of the fact that it was raining hard.

Interest and attendance are increasing in the women's study class that is being held every week. A short business session is held after each class, and they are planning some interesting activities for the near future.

Lamoni Stake Items

February 8.—The Lamoni Branch enjoyed a series of sermons last week by Evangelist Richard Baldwin, of Chicago, who preached each evening except Monday. Brother Baldwin is rich in experiences, having recently returned from the British Isles Mission and having traveled in many parts of the United States as well during many years of missionary labor. These experiences served him well in a reevaluation of the fundamental principles of righteous living, which was the basis of his nightly talks.

The musical talent of the branch and college, represented in the many lines of activity gave splendid cooperation and added much towards the success of the meeting. There were solos, duets, quartets, and choruses by the Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society, selections by the Lamoni-Graceland Orchestra, and the A Capella Chorus, and an evening of song by the Junior-Intermediate Chorus. On the last Sunday evening, the senior organizations gave a thirty-minute concert, which was exceptionally fine.

On Saturday and Sunday of the same week the stake conference convened. The business sessions were characterized by some rather stormy debates. The first was over a motion to rescind the action of the stake conference of 1917 which authorized the presidency to nominate the delegates to General Conference. The motion to rescind was made by E. E. Long, who argued in favor of nomination by the body. The motion was lost, and the list of delegates nominated by the presidency was chosen, there being no nominations made by the body. The delegates are: F. M. McDowell, C. E. Wight, W. E. Prall, J. F. Garver, A. Carmichael, L. G. Holloway, J. A. Gansolley, Mrs. I. A. Monroe, Fred Condit, C. F. Church, G. W. Blair, Nellie Hogan, H. H. Gold, Lydia Wight, J. E. Anderson, E. F. Downey, David Koehler, J. O. Leeper, E. Dewey White, W. T. Shakespeare, R. A. Ballantyne, William Wilson.

At the morning session the ordination of Brother L. G. Kelley to the office of priest and Brother Robert Campbell to the office of teacher were ordered by the body upon recommendation by the presidency. These ordinations were attended to Sunday morning at the sacrament service.

In the afternoon, routine work, such as sustaining the officers, reports of various branches of the church activity, appointment of assistant workers in several departments, etc., was attended to. Two nominations for stake president were made, C. E. Wight and Ward L. Christy. This question brought forth a prolonged discussion which was ended by a motion to sustain the present members, which was carried by a big majority.

The Sunday services were as usual, with Brother Baldwin preaching his closing sermon in the evening. The evangelist was kept busy during his spare time giving patriarchal blessings.

A number of social functions were arranged for Brother and Sister Baldwin during their stay. The Easterners, sponsored by Misses Ruth Fisher and Hazel Shank, met with other friends at the home of J. A. Gansolley after church one evening for a pleasant hour.

A dinner party was planned by the English people, but through some misunderstanding ended in a party without guests. The embarrassing situation was overcome by clever impersonation of the guests by members of the party, and Miss Edwards said they had heaps of fun and sandwiches.

In the death of Sister B. J. Stevenson, which occurred at the Independence Sanitarium Saturday, the Thompson Branch west of town lost one of its most faithful and efficient workers. She had an especial talent in working with the young, and it was to her they looked for the introduction of new ideas which eliminated the usual monotony of the small branch. The entire community mourns.

Moorhead, Iowa

January 28.—Moorhead Branch is still active, although the cold weather and the scattered condition of the members have hindered the attendance.

During the last month the Department of Women held its election of officers at the home of Sister Emma Mann. Sister Perry Mann was elected president of the department, to be assisted by Sister T. O. Strand.

The young people have held several social gatherings recently at the homes of the Saints, but the social evening spent with Brother and Sister T. O. Strand on January 29, in which both old and young participated, was most largely attended. Appropriate games, visiting, and refreshments of gingerbread, doughnuts, and milk, occupied the time. More of such gatherings would help to strengthen the ties of good fellowship among us.

Sister Ella Jennings visited last week with her children at Boone and made the acquaintance of a new grandchild.

Our district president, Brother Joseph Lane, spent about a week during January visiting among us, and occupied the pulpit twice while he was here.

The influenza has been visiting this part, and several of the Saints have had their portion, but it seems all are on the road to recovery at this writing. Brother David Purcell was taken to Onawa on January 26, where he could receive necessary medical treatment.

Brother Hale W. Smith, superintendent of the Little Sioux schools, brought his basket ball boys and girls up one evening last week for a game with the boys and girls of Brother Charles Field's school here.

Brother and Sister Perry Mann attended the quarterly conference at Missouri Valley and visited at the home of their son Claude.

Preparations are being made by Moorhead and Pisgah...
Religious a debate to be held in the near future. Pisgah will be represented by Charles Van Eaton and Bernam Silsbee, while Charles Hield and Harold Mann will represent our local. This is the first debate of these locals, and we hope it may be the means of developing future progressive programs.

A radio receiving set is to be installed in the church here.

Fargo, North Dakota

January 27.—Elder W. E. Shakespeare began a series of meetings at the Bungalow Church Sunday, January 25. Such spiritual sermons as Brother Shakespeare delivers ought to arouse every Saint with the missionary spirit, to try to bring in those who are outside the fold, that they may listen and learn the way of salvation. By each one doing his part, satisfaction will be brought to his soul, accompanied by God's blessings.

The Saints were recently surprised by a visit from Elder William Sparling of Minot, who preached several sermons during the week and on Sunday, sermons to awaken the Saints to their duties, instilling a greater faith in this great work of God. At the prayer service a time of rejoicing was had when Brother Sparling spoke, in prophecy, words of comfort and counsel which ought to give each one renewed strength and courage. How good God is!

The Department of Women met with Sister C. M. Brown last Wednesday afternoon, enjoying a social time. Sister Worth Coney is superintendent of this department, and the sisters have decided to take up the study of the Doctrine and Covenants and American authors. They will meet each week. Eight of our young sisters have had their names enrolled.

The Religio, with Sister Ferne Shackow, is doing well. The program for last Sunday evening consisted of a spelling match, with words taken from the Book of Mormon, which is being studied in the Religio.

The Saints have been quite well this winter, with the exception of some influenza. Many are out of employment, but are still in the faith and desirous of saying, Let's go! The weather has been very cold here this winter.

Tawas City, Michigan

January 24.—Christmas passed very quietly in our branch. A few special exercises were held, the teachers of the primary, junior, and intermediate classes invited their pupils to the home of Brother and Sister G. A. Pringle, where lunch was served to about thirty. After lunch, songs and recitations were the order, and a pretty tree held gifts for each pupil, with a treat of candy, nuts, and pop corn. The tree was furnished by the Sunday school. The children enjoyed every minute of the time.

On January 15, Sister L. Jameson, who is a member of this branch but lives nine miles away, gave an oyster supper and radio party for the benefit of the church building fund. About eleven dollars was raised. Several of the Saints from Whittemore attended.

Sister Sarah Lake, of Mikado, Michigan, was in town this week, having been called here by the death of her sister, Sister I. Bowen.

On January 18 Elder M. A. Somerfield visited the Saints in Oscoda and spoke for them. Elders Somerfield and Pringle have been quite busy lately speaking at funerals.

The total eclipse was in evidence here this morning, it being so dark in the house one could hardly see another for a few minutes.
Radio Flashes

Minnor, North Dakota, January 28: Your program this Tuesday night came in much better than ever before. The address by Doctor Stevens was very plain and the orchestra grand. I enjoyed it all very much.—Mrs. J. A. Newman.

Deer Creek, Minnesota, January 21: We were very glad last evening to be able to hear your program so much louder than before. We had almost given up trying to get you. You were so easily drowned out that it was often impossible to hear you at all; however, we found last night that you were so much stronger you were able to drown out the others. The program was good, but we were disappointed not to hear Brother F. M. Smith; shall look forward to that another time. The music was fine.—Mrs. Frank Tucker.

Petersburg, Alaska, January 20: We wish to thank you for the pleasure we had in listening to your program of the evening of January 20. The trombone solo, "Rocked in the cradle of the deep," came in clear as a bell over loudspeaker. You announced that your new station is to be 1,000 watts. Here is a couple of fans who will be listening for it.—Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Worth.

Traverse City, Michigan, January 28: Picked you up last night for the first time. Twelve of our young people were over, and we were glad to get you. We are anxious for the 1000-watt station to get into operation.—H. A. Doty, district president.

Bristow, Oklahoma, January 27: To-night I tuned in your station and found you announced the call letters K L D S instead of K F I X as I have known you heretofore. Several talks and solos were given which were very clear and loud. You asked how you were being received. One of my guests said, "Tell him, like a house afire."—John E. Millar.

Detroit, Minnesota.—We have been listening in on your program to-night with a Neutrodyne set. The first part of the sermon came in fine until K F N F, Henry Field, interfered. A little later K F K B, Brinkley-Jones Hospital Association, came in on practically the same dial settings and just made a confusion of sounds. We could hear music faintly and the announcer, but couldn’t separate it from the other station. We could hear you much better last winter on your shorter wave length as it kept you farther from K F N F and K F K B. Perhaps when you get your new antenna up it will be better. We are very anxious to hear your wonderful programs as we have no church privileges.—Bruce Mathewson.

Saints Attending General Conference

To the Saints in the East and in Canada: The Chicago and Alton Railroad has promised special accommodation to conference delegates. Their train will leave Chicago Saturday evening at eight o'clock, April 4, Train No. 9. This train arrives at Independence about eight o'clock on Sunday morning. A special car will be provided for the conference delegates.

Their agent has informed me that all who hold clergy permits will be given a free pass. Also presidents of branches will be accorded the same courtesy. And as mentioned in the Herald of January 28, the usual conference rate of one and one half fares will be allowed to any delegate using their line.

This is a special concession, and the Chicago & Alton Railway, on President Smith’s recommendation, has asked me to act as their agent in making arrangements and securing the names of all those who will be passing through Chicago on their way to the conference. Please immediately notify me, in order that arrangements may be made without delay. My address is 6823 Yale Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

“We certainly are well pleased with the Reliance Radio”

“We have been told by many that it is the best looking radio in town,” writes L. O. Myers, of Hornick, Iowa. “Last night was the first time we have been able to get K LDS. It came in clearly and strong. President Smith’s voice sounded as plain as if we were in the room with us.”

A Reliance Radio Will Please You, Too

The reason is that Reliance sets are carefully designed to efficiently receive all broadcast wave lengths. Mr. Myers has an exceptionally good set—but you can buy one just like it.

The Best Radio You Can Buy
—a Reliance “Super-Eight.”

I have designed the “Super-Eight” to give best possible results without regard to cost. Yet the price is less than usually asked for 5-tube sets.

“The “Super-Eight” uses no aerial, yet no radio surpasses it in dependable long distance reception. It does not require acid storage batteries to give satisfactory independent reception; it employs ordinary dry batteries.

With a “Super-Eight” you actually set the dials for the stations you want—the stations’ call letters are printed on the two dials.

The “Super-Eight” is marvelously selective. At Independence it clearly tunes through K LDS and other powerful Kansas City stations, bringing in K FFV (Greeland College, Lamoni, Iowa) with astonishing clearness.

If you want the best radio you can buy write me to-day for photograph of the "Super-Eight" together with detailed information and prices.

ARTHUR B. CHURCH
1315 W. Walnut St. Independence, Mo.
A Call to Prayer

This church began in prayer. Joseph Smith in the simple faith of boyhood went to the forest to pray for divine guidance, and the Lord met with him and there began the great work of restoration. That which began in prayer and with heavenly answer and guidance must in the same manner go forward.

We doubt not that at the present time prayer rather than debate will reach our heavenly Father's ear and gain his pleasure. The church needs and must have his blessing and guidance. Human wisdom is insufficient.

The Presidency has already called the young people of Zion to prayer, and they have responded nobly. We have called upon the older Saints to rally to their midweek prayer services. We have advised the Saints in Zion to improve the time between now and General Conference with public and private devotions.

We now extend the call to prayer to the church beyond the borders of Zion. Let the Saints everywhere intercede at the throne of grace that the will of God may be wrought out in behalf of his church; that obstacles external and misunderstandings internal may be overcome and the church go forward unitedly in power and light.

Please do not bring matters of current controversy into your prayer meetings. Come instead with the spirit of prayer and with testimony to the goodness and power of our heavenly Father and his Son Jesus Christ, and the divinity and truth of the latter-day work; that we may progress, "press on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, honor, sanctification, and glory." (Doctrine and Covenants 129:9.)

May peace with blessing be yours.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

The Christmas offering up to and including February 14, amounts to $39,803.61. The books for this year's Christmas offering will be finally closed on February 28, so any who have not yet sent in their offering should plan to have it in by this date.

Important Notice to Members Attending General Conference

A reduction to one and one half fares for the round trip on the "certificate plan" will apply for members (also dependent members of their families) attending the General Conference to be held at Independence, Missouri, beginning April 6, 1925.

The arrangement will apply from the following territory: United States and Canada.

The following directions are submitted: Tickets at the normal one-way tariff fare for the going journey may be bought on any of the following dates (but not on any other date):

From Colorado (except Julesburg), Montana, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Oklahoma, Texas, April 1-7, inclusive.

From Arizona, British Columbia, California, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington, March 31 to April 6, inclusive.

All other authorized points in United States and Canada, April 2-8, inclusive.

Be sure when purchasing your going ticket to ask the ticket agent for a certificate. Do not make the mistake of asking for a receipt. If, however, it is impossible to get a certificate from the local ticket agent, a receipt will be satisfactory and should be secured when ticket is purchased. See that the ticket reads to Independence or Kansas City. See that your certificate is stamped with the same date as your ticket. Sign your name to the certificate or receipt in ink. Show this to the ticket agent.

Call at the railroad station for ticket and certificate at least thirty minutes before departure of train.

Certificates are not kept at all stations. Ask your home station whether you can procure certificates and through tickets to the place of meeting. If not, buy a local ticket to nearest point where a certificate and through ticket to place of meeting can be bought.

Immediately on your arrival at Independence, present your certificate at the office of the First Presidency, as the reduced fare for the return journey (Continued on next page.)
EDITORIAL

Abraham Lincoln

Though Lord Charnwood completed his biography of Abraham Lincoln in 1916, and the book was published the following year, 1917, it still is of sufficient interest to justify a present review. It is refreshing to read such a review of American history from one who not only is not an American, but who belongs to the nobility, a special class, even though of a most democratic nation.

His treatment is certainly sympathetic and friendly, and he appreciates perhaps too keenly his own limitations. He presents as a test of impartiality not that the historian should avoid a clear-cut opinion, but rather that he should suppress no facts which in his judgment do not agree with his opinion or which may seem to controvert. So presenting Abraham Lincoln as one of the greatest men of his age, he presents also much of tribute and also shows how his greatness rises above his personal limitations and the limitations of his environment.

The story is not told in the ordinary way, beginning with birth, but includes a summation of the whole history of America, the conditions leading to the Revolution, the social and other conditions existing in the Middle West in the early nineteenth century. The leading men of the time are brought to the front, and particularly are the leading men of Lincoln's cabinet evaluated, and such men as Judge Stephen A. Douglas.

The book, therefore, not only presents the man Lincoln, but also presents Illinois from 1830 to 1860, and the Middle West and America as a whole.

The following few extracts should prove of interest:

Moreover, as the sentences which have just been quoted may suggest, the maxim that has once hit the occasion, or the new practice or expedient once necessitated by the conditions of the moment, has been readily hallowed as expressing the wisdom of the ages. An Englishman will quote Burke as he would quote Demosthenes or Plato, but Americans have been apt to quote their elder statesmen as they would quote the Bible.—Page 19.

The greatest evil in the repeal of the Missouri Compromise was the laxity of public tone which had made it possible. “Little by little, but steadily as man's march to the grave, we have been giving up the old faith for the new faith.” Formerly some deference to the “central idea” of equality was general, and in some sort of abstract sense slavery was admitted to be wrong. Now it was boldly claimed by the South that “slavery in the abstract was right.” All the most powerful influences in the country, “Mammon” (for “the slave property is worth a billion dollars”), “fashion, philosophy,” and even “the theology of the day,” were enlisted in favor of this opinion. And it met with no resistance.—Page 129.

And so people in the North, who could hardly stomach the doctrine that slavery was good, yet lapsed into the feeling that it was a thing indifferent, a thing for which they might rightly shuffle off their responsibility on to the immigrants into Kansas. This feeling that it was indifferent, Lincoln pursued and chastised with special scorn. But the principle of freedom that they were surrendering was the principle of freedom for themselves as well as for the Negro. The sense of the Negro’s rights had been allowed to go back till the prospect of emancipation for him looked immeasurably worse than it had a generation before. They must recognize that when, by their connivance, they had barred the door upon the Negro, the spirit of tyranny which they had evoked would then turn and rend them. The “central idea” which had now established itself in the intellect of the Southern was one which favored the enslavement of man by man “apart from color.” A definite choice had then to be made between the principle of the fathers, which asserted certain rights for all men, and that other principle against which the fathers had rebelled and of which the “divine right of kings” furnished Lincoln with his example.—Page 129.

Again, it is far from being the case that the Cabinet had little influence on his action. He not only consulted it much, but deferred to it much. His wisdom seems to have shown itself in nothing more strongly than in recognizing when he wanted advice and when he did not, when he needed support and when he could stand alone. Sometimes he yielded to his ministers because he valued their judgment, sometimes also because he gauged by them the public support without which his action must fail. Sometimes, when he was sure of the necessity, he took grave steps without advice from them or anyone. More often he tried to arrive with them at a real community of decision. It is often impossible to guess what

No refund of fare will be made on account of failure to either obtain a proper certificate, or on account of failure to have the certificates validated.

It must be understood that the reduction for the return journey is not guaranteed but is contingent on an attendance of not less than 250 members holding regularly issued certificates from ticket agents at starting points showing payment of normal one-way tariff fare of not less than 67 cents on the going trip.

If the necessary minimum of 250 regularly issued certificates are presented to the joint agent, and your certificate is validated, you will be entitled to a return ticket via the same route as the going journey at one half of the normal one-way tariff fare from Independence or Kansas City to point at which your certificate was issued up to and including April 27, 1925.

Return tickets issued at the reduced fare will not be good on any limited train on which such reduced fare transportation is not honored.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

acts of an administration are rightly credited to its chief. The hidden merit or demerit of many statesmen has constantly lain in the power, or the lack of it, of guiding their colleagues and being guided in turn.—Pages 250, 251.

In this month, September, 1862, he composed for his own reading alone a sad and inconclusive fragment of meditation which was found after his death. “The will of God prevails,” he wrote. “In great contests each party claims to act in accordance with the will of God. Both may be and one must be wrong. God cannot be for and against the same thing at the same time. In the present civil war it is quite possible that God’s purpose is something different from the purpose of either party, and yet the human instrumentalities, working just as they do, are of the best adaptation to effect his purpose. I am almost ready to say that this is probably true, that God wills this contest, and wills that it shall not end yet. By his mere great power on the minds of the contestants, he could have either saved or destroyed the Union without a human contest. Yet the contest began, and, having begun, he could give the final victory to either side any day. Yet the contest proceeds.”—Pages 322, 324.

He meant to insist to the point of pedantry that, by not so much as a word or line from the President or anyone seeming to act for him, should the lawful right of secession even appear to be acknowledged. Some men would have been glad to hang Jefferson Davis as a traitor, yet would have been ready to negotiate with him as with a foreign king. Lincoln, who would not have hurt one hair of his head and would have talked things over with Mr. Davis quite pleasantly, would have died rather than treat with him on the footing that he was head of an independent confederacy.—Page 403.

If he had a theory of democracy, it was contained in this condensed note which he wrote, perhaps as an autograph, a year or two before his Presidency: “As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master. This expresses my idea of democracy. Whatever differs from this, to the extent of the difference, is no democracy.” —A. Lincoln.”—Page 456.

Lincoln saw the fight for the freedom of the slaves as part of the great fight of humanity for justice and for democracy. To permit the enslavement of the black man would lead to discriminations and enslavement in time of the white. The principle was wrong, and marked a clear drift away from the ideals held by the fathers when the Constitution was formulated. The book in fact centers around that one great theme of human slavery as opposed to the principles of righteousness and democracy.

To-day we are confronted with other forms of slavery. Political freedom was secured through the Revolutionary War. Religious freedom has been enjoyed in a large measure; but eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. The black man has also been freed from peonage, but the laboring man is still in a form of wage subjection. Then there remains the problem of intellectual and moral freedom.

The problem that Lincoln solved belongs now to the past. The principles that he utilized are needed to meet the new problems that confront us.

S. A. Burgess.

Special Radio Announcement

Sunday evening, February 22, President Elbert A. Smith will deliver the first of a series of three Sunday evening sermons dealing with the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, the early ideals of the Saints, their position on marriage, and kindred topics.

These sermons will be broadcast from the Stone Church, by station K.L.D.S. Tune in. Make it a point to invite your friends to listen in. In that way do a little missionary work.

This will be the first of several efforts to get the early church before the people in its true light; to counteract misrepresentations appearing in popular magazines as well as to meet long-standing prejudices. Radio puts a new servant at our command to get the truth before the people. Let us use it.

The Government of the Church.—No. 3

AN ANALYSIS OF SUPREME DIRECTIONAL CONTROL

During the past few months I am quite sure most, if not all, of us have repeatedly and prayerfully reviewed the entire church problem, so far as we have been able, to discover, if possible, the cause or causes of our trouble. And I am quite sure that each of the brethren, regardless as to which side of the controversy he has been on, has resorted to introspection and individual analysis and discipline in order to determine wherein he may be wrong and his fellows right.

Conviction plays havoc sometimes with unity and harmony, yet “peace at any price” is a delusion and a snare. If a man cannot be true to his own convictions though he stand alone, he is not much of a man. We must respect the man who dares to assert his position. And because some of my fellows hold opinions the very opposite to my own does not necessarily indicate that they are less honest or less devoted to the truth than those who may agree with me.

Despite what I believe has been an honest intent on both sides to confine analysis to principles, still personalities have crept into the discussion. It is well-nigh impossible to canvass the situation without personal reference. This is due to the close personal relations which the principal actors have to the question under consideration. It is impossible, in some instances, to separate the man from the things for which he stands.

But there has been little, if any, acrimony. Our discussion has been of a high order. And our people have come to know more about the church and its laws. And the coming years will disclose that the present conflict, depressing as it may appear to some, was essential to our growth. The right kind of friction is vital to life. The frictionless way is the way of death. A stagnant pool may be tranquil, but it is the tranquillity of disease and disintegration. Storms clear the atmosphere and make for health and longevity.

Conflict, the Way of Progress

Some people seem to think that all religious expression should be in the nature of a prayer meeting—a sort of personal admiration expression where men agree to agree whether they agree or not—but this is not religion. It is self-hypnotism. It is an imitation of the ostrich. The storm is there, but he refuses to see it. He thinks that by burying his head in the sand that he is immune. He is mistaken. We must all face the issue. We do not see eye to eye, that is true. Humans never have, except in very rare instances. And we never will until we arrive at the truth. All of us see through a glass darkly. We must expect to have conflict and discussion and differences of opinion. This is wholesome and the only road to progress.

It was Max Muller who said:

All truth is safe, and nothing else is safe; and he who keeps back the truth or withholds it from men, from motive or expediency, is either a coward, a criminal, or both.

And Thomas Jefferson has well said:

Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it.

Truth Is More Precious Than Peace

Truth is more precious than peace, and discussion more Christian than suppression of the truth or a surrender to wrong. Civilization is the outgrowth of research, analysis, and discussion. The church decreed that the earth was flat. Galileo said, “The earth is round, and I can prove it.” And the church gave answer: “It is not proof that we want. We have settled this by fiat. What we want and what we will have is obedience.” But the truth was mightier than the church. It always is. Galileo was weak and recanted, but the truth went marching on.

Luther, on the steps of the Wittenberg church, defying the pope and burning the bull of excommunication before the whole world, manifested far more real religion than those who counted their beads and repeated their prayers, content to allow others to do their thinking. The apostle has enjoined us to “Prove all things.” And this can be done only by subjecting everything to the acid test. Theories and propositions which will not stand the closest scrutiny are unworthy the support of any man. Let us have the truth. To secure it we must always pay the price.

In order that I may reach the heart and mind of as many Latter Day Saints as possible, I will endeavor to confine analysis of this doctrine of supreme directional control to a definition of terms by recognized authorities and the exact statements of the men who are defending the same.

Proper Rules for Discussion

Some one has said that it is well-nigh impossible to criticize a man’s work without his thinking you are opposed to him personally. I have no desire to deal with the personal life or honor of any man in my consideration of the proposition before us. The rules of debate impose this restriction:

The disputants should mutually consider each other as standing on a footing of equality in respect to the subject in debate; each should regard the other as possessing equal talents, knowledge, and desire for the truth, with himself, and that it is possible, therefore, that he may be in the wrong and his adversary in the right.

A Statement of Supreme Directional Control

The document on church government, which was adopted by a majority of the Advisory Council in April, 1924, affirms that:

In organic expression and functioning there must be recognized grades of official prerogative and responsibility, with supreme directional control resting in the Presidency as the chief and first quorum of the church. This control is presumed to be beneficial. Protection against prostitution of this power is amply provided for in the law.

It will be well, at this juncture, to seek a definition of the terms supreme, directional, and control. A reference to Webster gives:

Supreme.

1. Highest in place.
2. Highest in authority and power.

Hence, He that is supreme king of kings—Shakespeare.
3. Highest in degree; complete; extreme; greatest.
4. Ultimate. Supreme Being. A god who dominates all the other gods and demons of the pantheon and who is generally conceived to be the creator of all.

Directional.

This is a mathematical term meaning “of or pertaining to space.” We presume it is intended here to mean “to direct.” We accept it in this light.

Control.

1. Power or authority to control; superintend; government.
2. One that serves to control.
   (a) Restraint.
   (b) A check.

In the light of the foregoing, supreme directional control means:

Highest in place, dominant, overruling, complete, extreme, greatest possible, ultimate power or authority to control, direct, check, or restrain.

One writer claims that all there is to this is that “it is supreme in its sphere.” Reference is made to the Supreme Court of Missouri. But this court is supreme as a court in that State, is it not? And, pray, what is the sphere of this supreme directional control of the Presidency? Does it not embrace the entire administrative function of church government? Does it not comprehend the government as a graduated priesthood converging in the Presidency of the church holding supreme directional control?
And even though we limit this control to the admministrative line, does it not center all power of direction in the Presidency and thereby subordinate each and every quorum, department, and official to the supreme directional control of the Presidency?
Does it not, thereby, substitute subordination for coordination?

What Will Follow Adoption of This Document

The moment this document is enacted into law, the church in its entirety and in all of its parts, so far as administration goes, becomes amenable to the supreme directional control and effective discipline of the Presidency, and from this there is no administrative appeal. All orders of the Presidency will then become absolute. These orders may issue to any and every official, who will have no choice but to obey or be subject to effective discipline. There is no escape from this conclusion. Any other interpretation will make supreme directional control a meaningless thing.

This document makes the power and authority of the part greater than that of the whole. According to its provisions, the Presidency possesses a directional control not possessed by or in conjunction with any other quorum or official or even the General Conference itself. It suspends and abrogates the interactive power and relation of the three leading quorums, Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. It places the Presidency above and superior to the entire church in an administrative way.

Shall the General Conference Surrender Its Rights?

If the General Conference by its vote acknowledges that the Presidency possesses this power (for according to logic it could not confer that which it did not possess), it thereby abdicates and renounces for itself any directional control within the church, for "the General Conference, being legislative, should not presume to issue orders to any man or officer." If supreme directional control inheres in the office of the Presidency, it does so without the action of the General Conference. Any action of the conference, therefore, can, at best, be only an acknowledgment of this inherent right.

It is urged by the authors of this document that this control is presumed to be beneficent. But this is at best only a presumption. The statement suggests that it may be other than beneficent. We must, therefore, draw on the past to determine whether it will be or not. History furnishes overwhelming proof that never have such powers been granted or acknowledged by any people when they have proven beneficent. There is no exception. Such large powers of direction have never been exercised in the government of God either in the days of Christ or since.

But lest some may think that we are speaking without warrant, and possibly placing an extreme interpretation on his document on church government, it will be well to let the proponents give their own definition.

Genesis of the Doctrine in the Reorganization

In a sermon delivered by President Frederick M.
Smith at Lamoni, Iowa, January 25, 1908, and which was published in the SAINTS' HERALD in its issue of February 11, 1908, there are some very significant statements which give the key to this whole proposition. The subject of this address was "Obedience."
In quoting I will try not to separate any extract from its rightful context. President Smith said.

When the Lord has commanded a certain person to do a certain work, so long as this person is in the discharge of that work, his voice should be obeyed, when it is given in his name as though it was from the Deity himself. Mind you, I say that so long as he is in the office of his calling that person in the discharge of that work should receive the same implicit obedience by those who are presumed to obey, as though the Deity himself were speaking.

By no kind of reasoning can this be made to apply to the receiving of revelations. By divine provision, revelations are subjected to the closest scrutiny and examination before they become binding on officials or the membership as a whole. When a revelation is given, we are under the necessity to decide if it is God speaking. This precaution will be waived if we accept the foregoing, for the voice of one who has been intrusted with the responsibility of doing a certain work should be obeyed by those who are presumed to obey as though Deity himself were speaking.

This is the logical definition of supreme directional control, without any ambiguity or modifying.
President Smith has stated the case. Articles have been written to show that supreme directional control does not mean control, but at most only suggestion, or, "Come, work with us!" Such interpretations are not warranted. We prefer to accept the statement of the case as set forth by the author of the document on church government.

Who Shall Decide the Point?

Suppose, for argument's sake, we admit that this is the right of the Presidency. The question then arises, Who is to decide when such an one is in the discharge of his heaven-appointed work? Evidently

www.LatterDayTruth.org
not those who are presumed to obey, for this would make abortive the authority of the one supposed to command or direct. It follows, therefore, that the one claiming this power alone can decide when he is in the office of his calling. Else any man who did not accord to or conform to the order could instantly raise the point as to whether it was divine or not, and thereby hold up the order.

Our brother was arguing here for what he was disposed to designate as “blind faith” and “blind obedience.” He took Abraham offering up Isaac as a type, and said:

But did he hesitate? No, he went with blind faith and blind obedience and fulfilled that command to the very letter as far as all practical purposes are concerned. And that is why to me it seems that this is one of the most striking examples of obedience. . . . And I am of the opinion, that only in so far as we manifest obedience somewhat similar to this, will we be profited or benefited in our religious life. It seems to me that this faith that shall impel always to obedience is the one chief principle that shall finally win for us eternal glory and bliss.

Here is a straightforward statement from President Smith defining his idea of obedience. I do not think I am doing him an injustice in saying that, according to this interpretation, if supreme directional control is to become the rule of the church, then as the one who has been selected to do a certain work his voice should be obeyed, when it is given in his name as though it was from the Deity himself, and in that all the administrative work of the church each and every official and quorum will be asked to subordinate his judgment to that of the Presidency, who must per se have the last word.

The Church Compared to an Army

Our brother goes farther in his elucidation of this doctrine of obedience and says:

Let us look at the army for one brief moment. We see an army commanded by one man, who represents a country, a principle, a power. Under him we have other men, such as generals, major-generals, colonels, and a number of officers that I could not now enumerate. They run right on down until we find captains, lieutenants, sergeants, corporals, privates. The main body of the army are the privates, of course. “Let us then be valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord.” What does it mean? Does it mean that when we receive a command we should say, “I do not know whether or not to obey that command. It does not appeal to my intelligence, that man did not know what he was talking about”? Is it the right of the soldier to rebel and say, “I will not do that because I know that the consequences will be bad”? No, he simply goes ahead and does it, and in doing what is the mistake of another man he wins glory. But if he rebelled it would cost him his life, that is if he persisted in that rebellion. He has no right to say, “I do not feel that I can comply with that command because it does not appeal to me; but if he considers that that officer has made a mistake, what should he do? Go to those who are in charge of that officer and complain; or enter the complaint in a proper way and bring it before the proper authority.

Here, again, we have a clear statement which goes far, indeed, to indicate the position of President Smith as to the government of the church. He compares the church to an army and applies to it the rigid discipline of army life. Agency and volition of action, so far as any “subordinate” is concerned, are practically eliminated. Each officer or quorum in the church becomes a mere cog in the machinery of government to carry out the orders of the Presidency.

In this case “orders are orders,” and are to be obeyed. And when orders are issued, or should they take the form of suggestions to some, the relations remain that of superior and subordinate. Service takes the form of “blind faith,” “blind obedience.” Subordinate officials must obey or be subjected to effective discipline.

Members of the Quorum of Twelve, or the Bishopric, or any other department, when receiving such an order or suggestion must not reason as to the consequences of the act. Even though the order violates their own judgment or sense of right, they should unhesitatingly go ahead and execute and thereby win glory, though the order and the act should prove a mistake. The one to whom the order is issued would sin only in refusing, or in failure to comply. The responsibility for the action must rest with the one issuing the order and whose voice should be obeyed as though Deity himself were speaking.

No Opportunity for Appeal

Under supreme directional control a member of the Quorum of Twelve, or the Bishopric, or any of the general representatives of the church acting under the immediate direction of the Presidency, would have no opportunity for appeal. Such could not “go to those who are in charge of that officer and complain.” Under supreme directional control no power would be in charge of the President of the church in an administrative way, not even the General Conference.

As if to leave no doubt as to what was intended, our brother continues:

There comes a time in the life of every man when he must be led absolutely by faith, blind faith.

I have no desire to make odious comparisons. I do not wish to make any strained interpretations. I will not question motive. I believe that in the foregoing President Smith has set forth, in unequivocal terms the rightful definition of supreme directional control. He may be right, and many of us may be entirely wrong. The decision is with the church. I am frank to say, however, that if this is the right position on the government of God, then, indeed, have I misrepresented it throughout all the years of my ministry, and, so far as I know, every man with whom I have labored has done likewise.

Our Reasons for the Stand We Have Taken

And this is the reason why some of us have taken such a definite stand in this matter. It is not a personal issue. No one that I know of is trying to discredit President Smith or to eliminate him. We are dealing with issues which will exist long after we are dead and gone. We are legislating for the future. This doctrine of supreme directional control is either true or false. And its truth or falsity does not impinge on the integrity of any man. Its verity is not determined by personality. Personal likes or dislikes should not figure in decision.

With this picture of supreme directional control as painted by the pen of the President in mind, let us now turn to another setting. In a series of articles on "The true philosophy of church government," another member of the Presidency presents quite a different view. Here Brother Elbert says:

The declaration on "supreme directional control" I can accept when given a reasonable interpretation. I could not accept it if given the extreme interpretations that some of its opponents have applied. . . . I could not advocate "dictatorial control."—SAINI'S HERALD, November 5, 1924, p. 1057.

Here is an admission that this important document is subject to two widely divergent interpretations, "reasonable" and "extreme." It is inconceivable that President F. M. Smith would give an interpretation which does not conform to his views as repeatedly expressed from 1903 to date.

Brother Elbert has so modified and toned down the terms of the document, and so hedged it in with concessions and restrictions that one is not certain at all times whether he is attacking or defending.

One of his articles (theocratic-democracy) carries with it the avowed sanction of the President, but certainly a man who holds the views of army discipline in church government, and "blind faith" as a saving ordinance, could not possibly have approved the entire series of articles.

It surely would be interesting to the church to know just how far these officials find common ground. Will President F. M. Smith indorse the other three articles on "The true philosophy of church government"? Does President E. A. Smith find the foregoing commitments, by the President, himself, to be in the character of "reasonable interpretation" which he can indorse? No miracle of literary art could reconcile those heterogeneous views, and no sound philosophy would urge the acceptance of a document by the church in which so much is left to individual interpretation and at the same time make one office so "supreme" as to burn the bridges of successful appeal from its decisions and acts.

In contradistinction to the foregoing I submit that the true oneness of the ministry of Christ and the unity of the people of God must always depend upon the spirit which is in them rather than the power which is over them. The unfoldment of the Christian life comes through volition and the right of interpretation and action rather than in being a mere echo of some dominant mind. Men can only grow into the Christ life through a conscious realization of the justness of every act. Men cannot blindly follow Christ. God always makes men conscious of the justness of his commands. He will have no following which is not intelligent and voluntary.

It was Abraham Lincoln who said:

No man is good enough to govern another man without that man's consent.

And,

It is easier, as all human experience shows, to educate a democracy to govern itself than to train a "better class" to rule the rest of the people.

And,

Power is corrupted except when diffused.

Lyman Abbott has truly said:

For one man to govern another man, to take charge of him, determine what are his interests and control his actions, is despotism.

A Constant Appeal for Loyalty

President Smith has persistently plead for loyalty on the part of the ministry and membership towards the Presidency. We believe in loyalty. We believe that every official and member should be loyal to the church and its officials. But we believe that this loyalty should be reciprocal. In President Smith’s message to the General Conference in 1919 we find the following:

We have created a splendid organization, with the strongly centralized control necessary to efficiency, but emasculate the whole system by spreading discontent, suspicion, envy, jealousies. To lustily and even feelingly sing, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet to guide us in these latter days," is easy, but to furnish the warm, living flesh and blood of confidence and support to the skeleton of our organization is more than a matter of music. To hail the leader in glad acclaim is somewhat at variance with the process of fettering him for fear he will lead astray.

Again in his sermon on loyalty which was delivered in the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, December 3, 1922, and published in the SAINTS’ HERALD, November 5, 1924, p. 1057.

Concerning the Faith of Our Fathers
BY D. T. WILLIAMS

IV. GOVERNMENT THROUGH PRIESTHOOD IN THE LIGHT OF THE DEMOCRACY OF OUR FATHERS

Appeal to the democracy of our fathers of the state has repeatedly been made by those refusing acquiescence to the document on church government issued by the April council as a statement of its faith and what it understands to be the faith of the Saints. Such an appeal has virtue and should have sincere consideration by the great body of the church.

The world's experience in government ought to be of inestimable worth to us in our endeavor to find a sure foundation upon which to rest our hopes. For surely the Lord is anxious to have us learn and accept the lessons of experience as well as the truths of revelation in our effort to reach the great goal towards which he is leading.

We therefore accept this appeal to the democracy of our fathers of the state with the surety that truth has nothing to lose but everything to gain. Right and truth should be the burden of our desires. That is, it is elected from the ranks of the governed, government, and, second, that it must be a limited government. These two principles are, first, that it must be representative government, by the people, but, the government is by the people. In other words, the people are the authors and creators of the government. By them it was originally set up; by them it is revitalized and reofficed. Yes, the government is “by the people,” but not the governing. The governing is of necessity by the government.

Rights of Franchise Recognized

We trust none will misinterpret the thoughts here set forth in such a manner as to make it appear that the writer desires to withhold or withdraw from any the rights accorded them in the gospel. The franchise of the people must be protected and respected. In this principle we possess a safeguard which must be held inviolable and sacred. Our democracy should not be invalidated by overemphasis of our theocracy; on the other hand, we must not profane our theocracy by laying undue stress upon our democracy. There is a golden mean which should be dis-covered and maintained. It is to be hoped that out of this controversy there will come to the church that happy conclusion, and that unity will take the place of disunion, and order the place of chaos.

Government Among the People

It (priesthood) is divine government among the people, for the people, and for the glory of God and the achievement of his purposes toward ideal conditions.—Document on Church Government, by the April Council, 1924.

There appears to be a decided difference of opinion concerning the principle herein enunciated. Some seem to think that divine government is not to be exercised “among the people,” but in the people, or by the people. In attempting to prove this contention, those who so hold cite that immortal statement by Lincoln, “Government of the people, by the people, and for the people.” A very beautiful and forceful statement for the end for which it was intended; and which by the way was not that to which it has been put by our friends in this discussion, as we shall soon see.

In the first place, let us make it plain that the people themselves cannot govern; nor does this statement by Lincoln in any way sustain the contention that they should. If every citizen were to become a ruler, he would rule according to his own fancy. That would be anarchy. Anarchy is not civil but individual government, and very little of that. Let us examine this truly great statement which has become the bulwark of civil liberty.

The government, says Lincoln, is “of the people.” That is, it is elected from the ranks of the governed, and governs “among them.” The government is “by the people.” Please bear in mind, dear reader, that this does not say that the governing is by the people, but, the government is by the people. In other words, the people are the authors and creators of the government. By them it was originally set up; by them it is revitalized and reofficed. Yes, the government is “by the people,” but not the governing. The governing is of necessity by the government.

Constitutional Government

This truth is very clearly set forth by John W. Burgess, Ph. D., Ju. D., LL. D., in the following:

Genuine constitutional government rests upon two fundamental principles, principles without which, whatever else it may be, it is not genuine constitutional government. These two principles are, first, that it must be representative government, and, second, that it must be a limited government. That is, first, there must be back of government a more ultimate authority [the people.—D. T. W.] which decrees the organization of the government, vests it with powers, and imposes upon it limitations. This body or organization we denominate in political science the sovereign. Now in genuine constitutional government this body (the people) must not govern. If this body should govern, such government would necessarily be absolute and unlimited, since as the original and most ultimate authority in the order of authorities there would be nothing back of it which would control or restrain it.—The Reconciliation of Government With Liberty, p. 370.

So while the government is by the people, the people themselves "must not govern." The government is among the people, governing for them, and if it is a righteous government it will govern "beneficently." If the government becomes corrupt and dishonest, it becomes the duty of the people through the process of their rights of franchise to set up a government which will give expression to their higher ideals.

Government Among the Saints

This truth in world democracy has application as well in the democracy of the church. But here the further fact must be considered that in the church God selects the class from which the officers are to be chosen, while the people simply consent to or disent from the proffered selections. Those who are elected to places of specific trust in the kingdom of God must be chosen from among this great body of God-appointed officers. Here we have a demonstration of our theocracy. Since this limitation is set by the law on the choice of the people, the selection of those who are to govern must be from the ranks of the priesthood. Government through priesthood, then, becomes a necessity in the fulfillment of the revelations of God.

Can any intelligent Latter Day Saint imagine, under orderly direction, a sane member of the congregation arising to nominate Sister Brown for president of the branch? or Brother Jones who holds no priesthood as priest of the branch? Can you conceive, dear reader, of a branch knowing so little of the law as to accept such nominations, and electing the nominees? "Certainly not!" I hear you say. And why not? There is only one answer for Latter Day Saints: They do not hold the priesthood, and government is through priesthood. This divinely appointed government is "among the people," governing "for the people," and "for the glory of God."

Democracy Again

Let us turn once more to the democracy of our fathers, that we may discover whether it is the people or the government that is to govern. Again Burgess says:

In the first place, the influence of the people over the government, when the principles of popular sovereignty is the basis of the government, cannot be advanced to the point of the people, as sovereign, actually governing, without destroying the limitations of governmental power, that is, without making government absolute, without setting constitutional government aside, since constitutional government means nothing at all unless it be representative limited government. The line between influence and control must be correctly and carefully drawn. The sovereign must not be substituted for the government.—The Reconciliation of Government With Liberty, p. 374.

This, one of the most distinguished scholars of political science, sees and sets forth the truth. That is, that government must be by those selected for the task. The selection is by the sovereign.

And who is the sovereign in the kingdom of God? A pertinent question this. The answer, however, should be a matter of ease to Latter Day Saints. The sovereignty is here divided, in the condescension of God, between himself and his people. God is, however, preeminently the sovereign. It is his to direct and control through the divinely appointed channels, channels accepted and sustained by the sovereignty of the people. If full sovereignty were to rest with the people, we would not have left even the shadow of our theocratic democracy. God is preeminent as sovereign.

Let us answer just here a question propounded by the proponent of other claims: "Can the people be trusted?" Our answer is emphatically, Yes, the people can be trusted with their part. But no people, no matter how numerous or how just, can be trusted with God's part. Let the people arrogate to themselves God's part in the divine government, and dissolution and death will follow closely upon the heels of such usurpation. May the Saints of God be saved from so serious a calamity.

The Choice of Government

Please note in the above quotation from Burgess that "popular sovereignty . . . cannot be advanced to the point of the people . . . actually governing." This being a truth in the government of God, as well as those of men, the choice of a government is a self-evident necessity.

But if we are to choose a government, how is the choice to be made? Shall this end be accomplished simply by the expression of the popular will? If such were to be our determination, we would, when the selection was concluded, have only a representative government of purely human origin. This is all we can have if the people are to be the only consideration in the power of choice. But to Latter Day Saints who still cling to the "faith of our fathers," there is another and most important consideration in the selection of such a government. That other consideration, as we have set forth above, is no less a personage than God himself.

If God takes part in the establishment and sustaining of this government, he will, without doubt, nominate the officers who are to be the spiritual governors of the Saints, and as such their servants.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The part of the people in the matter of this selection will be that of consenting to or dissenting from the expression of revelation.

Government Is Through Priesthood

Now, if God so condescends to choose for us, how are we to classify, or what are we to denominate those so chosen? To those believing in divine government, the answer is axiomatic: Those thus selected are we to classify, or what certainly the Saints will not allow their faith in God's government, they will be thus known. God's government, then, is "through priesthood"; "divine government among the people." And most certainly the Saints will not allow their faith in God's intervention as here manifested to be broken down.

Government Not the State

Turning again to the democracy of our fathers, we quote the words of an authority of note on American Government:

> It must be borne in mind that government is no more the state than the heart and lungs of an animal are the animal itself. The government is the chief set of organs of the state—the agent that carries out its will.—The American Federal State, by Ashley, p. 14.

Here again we have testimony that the government is "among the people," governing for them. As the heart and lungs are in the midst of the body, functioning for the body, making for regularity and therefore for life, so the government is operating among the people, holding at bay anarchy and dispensing justice. So, too, the government of God is functioning in the kingdom of God for the salvation of his children.

The principal combatant in the ranks of those opposing the action of the Joint Council of last April, "I am dead against government through priesthood." Strange doctrine! Will some one volunteer the information as to who should wield the power of government in the kingdom of our Christ, if it is not to be a heaven-appointed ministry? If we refute this divine interposition, what better is our church than any other church? Upon what basis can we conscientiously invite the world from their sectarianism to the church which we represent as the Church of Christ? Ah, no! Latter Day Saints will carry on in this vital matter. Government through priesthood will continue to be, as it has ever been, the faith of the Saints.

Priesthood a Gift of God

If I did not believe this, my friends, I would not long be a Latter Day Saint. Thousands, yea, tens of thousands of honest-hearted people have left their previous church affiliation because of their conviction that in this church God himself was governing through his heaven-appointed priesthood. And what could these people do, if there were snatched from them this fundamental? They had just as well hie them back to their fruitless sectarianism, or their damning skepticism. Surely this church, with its angelic message, would never, never, never throw into the gutter of inappreciation this pearl of great price!

Certainly to you, my fellow Saints who read these lines, as well as to thousands of others, the following eloquent description of the restoration of the priesthood has a meaning of profound import and carries a message of spiritual invigoration:

The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us, while the vail was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked for message and the keys of the gospel of repentance! What joy! what wonder! what amazement! While the world was racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard. As in the "blaze of day"; yes, more—above the glitter of the May sunbeam, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature! Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, "I am thy fellow servant," dispelled every fear. We listened—we gazed—we admired! 'Twas the voice of the angel from glory—'twas a message from the Most High! and as we heard we rejoiced, while his word enkindled upon our souls, and we were rapt in the vision of the Almighty! Where was room for doubt? Nowhere: uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled forever!

But, dear brother, think, further think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed, (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said, "Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon the earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness!"

I shall not attempt to paint to you the feelings of this heart, nor the majestic beauty and glory which surrounded us on this occasion; but you will believe me when I say, that earth, nor men, with the eloquence of time, cannot begin to clothe language in as interesting and sublime a manner as this holy personage. No; nor has this earth power to give the joy, to bestow the peace, or comprehend the wisdom which was contained in each sentence as they were delivered by the power of the Holy Spirit! Man may deceive his fellow man; deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may have power to seduce the foolish and untaught, till naught but fiction feeds the many, and the fruit of falsehood carries in its current the giddy to the grave; but one touch with the finger of his love, yes, one ray of glory from the upper world, or one word from the mouth of the Savior, from the bosom of eternity, strikes it all into insignificance, and blots it forever from the mind! The assurance that we were in the presence of an angel; the certainty that We will not say to God, the natural order of the value! And through it we will continue to govern.

Love our church government in action, a government thanks be to them, our respondents in this discussion have so eloquently if mistakenly made appeal.

This is not to be our answer to the condescending God who revealed the glory and promise of the Father who gave it.

"He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it," are well-weighed words that cannot fail.

Government Shall Continue Through Priesthood

What, then, will we Latter Day Saints do? We will continue to count this priesthood as a gift of value! And through it we will continue to govern. We will not say to God, "This thing of government was good enough for Moses’ day, and for the pack of slaves that made exodus from benighted Egypt under the sting of the taskmaster's whip, but for us, oh, no! for us it will not do. We live in the twentieth century. We are enlightened. We are no groveling brickmakers bowing beneath the burden of bondage. We are not serfs cringing under the crack of the slave driver's scourge. Government through priesthood echoes the savagery of a past darkness. No, dear Lord, we want nothing to do with such." This is not to be our answer to the condescending God who revealed the glory and promise of the priesthood as above recorded. No, a thousand times no! Latter Day Saints will answer in accord with the past experience of the church and revelations of God:

He comes the gospel to reveal
In fullness to benighted man;
Restore the priesthood, long since lost,
In truth and pow'r as at the first.

Yes, from these made holy by the divine touch of God as just noted, we shall continue to select under him those who are to constitute in their labors of love our church government in action, a government among us, chosen by God and us, and for us and the glory of the Father who gave it.

And in it all we shall be true to the democratic principles of our fathers of the state, to which, thanks be to them, our respondents in this discussion have so eloquently if mistakenly made appeal.

I shall speak next of centralized power in the administrative arm of government, in the light of the democracy of our fathers.

Self-preservation is not the first law of the kingdom of God; self-consecration to a great cause and self-surrender to Jesus Christ precede it. But when the natural order of the kingdom is observed, we are made conscious that self-preservation is cared for. "He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it," are well-weighed words that cannot fail.

"Supreme Directional Control."—Part 1

BY PAUL M. HANSON

The late Prophet of the church, Joseph Smith, wrote:

I like an honest man, though he may not think as I do. I do not like a hypocrite, a time-server. I think more of a man who frankly differs from me and tells me so in kind language, than I do of a man that simply accepts a thing because I say it.—SAINTS' HERALD, April 25, 1906.

He revealed excellence of soul when he penned the following:

We can but hail with gladness the evidences daily accruing, of an early return to right ways of thinking, when men will, in their desires for the advancement of the cause of God, dare to counsel together freely and fairly, without fear of censure or hate, or the exercise upon them of arbitrary power, wielded by their fellow men.—SAINTS’ HERALD, vol. 16, p. 338.

Many servants of the church have spent much time this year endeavoring to persuade the church to accept the doctrine of "supreme directional control" and that the government of the church should be "through priesthood . . . among the people."

Under the title "Contention for rights and prerogatives," President Elbert A. Smith wrote:

It is only when we are in a degree of darkness that we begin to contend one with another about that question and to become unduly anxious regarding our rights and prerogatives as officers or members in the church. When there is love, unity, humility, and courtesy among the ministry they can labor together without a jar. When love, unity, humility, and courtesy are absent, the question of authority, of preeminence, of presidency arises to disturb their serenity, and no conference resolutions can ever be drafted grading their priesthood and authority so explicitly and outlining their rights of precedence so nicely that they can work harmoniously. It is the Spirit that maketh alive. When brethren prefer one another there are no acrimonious struggles for preeminence such as occurred on the road to Capernaum and at times since that day.—SAINTS’ HERALD, July 14, 1909, p. 652.

The following from the late Prophet Joseph Smith may with profit be studied:

Before any new and false doctrine, though advanced by the presiding elder of the church, could be accepted to any great extent, to the subversion of the faith of the many, thus endangering the leading away the church, it is subject to challenge from any one who may deem it important, and then must pass the ordeal provided in the church articles.

There are three bodies of judges who may pass upon the matter: the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy; and while these quorums are filled with reasonably fearless and independent thinkers, there is little danger of any serious schism, by reason of ambitious leaders.—SAINTS’ HERALD, July 15, 1880.

From what is given from the authorities cited above, it is clear that in authorizing the organization of the church, the Lord provided an ample safeguard against imposition upon the people from the improper aspiration of any of the leading authorities of the church, by establishing three quorums as checks and counter checks upon each other, the three being equal in authority in matters of importance, neither one of the three being paramount to overriding the authority of the other two.—SAINTS' HERALD, March 13, 1912.

A Strange Doctrine Among Us

Why did the April Advisory Council ignore the procedure above outlined in launching the doctrines now troubling the church? Why was their action taken in the interim between General Conferences? Why did it act without even the signatures of a majority of the Twelve?

Silence is not a satisfactory answer.

The development of religious crises is no new thing. In the conference of the church described in the fifteenth chapter of Acts, when an attempt was made to attach certain features of Judaism to the church, there was "much disputing." It was an inevitable result. Devotion to principles, not to men, led to resistance.

He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.—Jesus.

The name Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints carries food for thought.

The Reorganized Church has been an active and monumental witness against the teachings and practices which culminated in the latter-day apostasy. From its origin it has stood against blind obedience to any leader, and in unflinching opposition to the theory that the membership should follow a leader, whether understood or not.

It is well for all to know now that if supreme directional control is incorporated into the Reorganized Church as a governmental principle of action, the Utah Church can effectively argue that the Reorganization was a long time, too long, finding out the merits of the system of government which has been operative in the Utah Church since its origin. They could point out that if the doctrine is true they were scores of years in advance of the Reorganization getting light on the subject. "Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery."

But the main question is, Are the new doctrines sound in law as contained in the standard books of the church, and interpreted in the practice of the Reorganization from its beginning?

A Gradual Development

There has been much said in recent years about cooperation and coordination; now an appeal is being made for subordination of all departments of the church—quorums and all—to one man. The next stage appears to be elimination through "effective discipline" of those guilty of "individual caprice, or rebellion"—rebellion to one person controlling or dictating the affairs of the church. Let it be remembered that cooperation is not subordination, and coordination in meaning does not dovetail into elimination. A strange evolution, or development! Cooperation—coordination—subordination—elimination.

The doctrine of "supreme directional control" was crystallized by the President into words and under peculiar conditions accepted in the Advisory Council—a doctrine that was not a part of the church when I was baptized, nor was it heard of by me in the governmental working of the church when I was ordained into the Quorum of Twelve in 1913.

Such language as the dogma is couched in is not found in any of the three standard books of the church. The words employed by the Lord which are plainer, truer, and safer, should be preferred. In this respect those originating and formulating the doctrine have set aside the law of the Lord.

Should Practice What Is Preached

If all members of the Advisory Council had refrained after adjournment of the council from expressing adverse opinions of the doctrines, as was urged in the council, it is clear the membership of the church would not now be in possession of facts they are entitled to know.

Councils and press in supreme control of one quorum, or one man, does not give one a lasting impression of security.

In the chief organ of the church, members of the council in this manner counseled the church:

That since it seems the matters in controversy are to be brought before General Conference, it will be well for the Saints and delegates to study further the law and weigh matters presented for their consideration, reserving final judgment until the conference meets to hear the cause. And most assuredly none will finally reach conclusions from the basis of unanswered reasoning or statements, publicly or privately made.—SAINTS' HERALD, July 9, 1924.

This counsel, expressed in well-chosen words, was timely and praiseworthy. Yet some of these members, after attaching their signatures to the document, and the names of their respective offices, giving the church implicitly to believe that what they counseled would be by themselves observed; and that the general church should heed what was written, have gone here and there in parts of the church winking at and encouraging the binding of delegates to the General Conference to the doctrine of "supreme directional control."

It is scarcely necessary to add that in proportion as the final vote may be influenced by this irregularity, it will have been the result of misleading, signatories giving the church to believe one thing, and themselves not observing what was counseled.

Before such action was taken, there should have

www.LatterDayTruth.org
been a published repudiation of what had appeared over their signatures.

Truth is contented with a straight course.

Dangers to Our Peace and Safety

The following is excerpted from an editorial by our late President Joseph Smith:

Priority of right, or authority, has been hitherto a frightful source of trouble. Why should this be, when Christ says that "he that would be greatest among you, let him become the servant of all"?

None who love and seek for the emoluments of official position, as such, is really worthy of confidence and esteem as an ambassador for Christ; hence when we find a man chaffering for place and the recognition of his rights and the exclusion of others, or overly tenacious of what are, or may be his indisputable rights, we mark him as a dangerous man to his own peace and the peace of his neighbors.—SAINTS' HERALD, December 1, 1888, p. 170.

The Reorganized Church may well analyze and ponder these words of the late Prophet:

I believe that God inspired wise men to write the Constitution of the United States; that in his purpose in working out the destinies of the world, he directed the making of the laws under which this Nation is administered. We can have no king here; but republican institutions must prevail until the coming of Christ.

How many of you [in the Utah Church] dare to stand up in your congregations and publicly oppose one of your leaders for a known violation of law? Are your men and women free? Do you dare to task the highest officers of your church? You will never be free until you have the American right to vote "No" in accordance with the course of your convictions without endangering your church and rendering yourselves liable to the social and spiritual ostracism that comes now on those men who dare to bring accusations against their church leaders.—SAINTS' HERALD, October 4, 1905, p. 950.

The following is full of present significance:

The history of all the past, remote and recent, teaches us that intelligent comprehension of conditions by the masses, and the exercise of watchful discrimination with a view to insisting upon strict conformity to law in the interest of all concerned, upon the part of the representatives, administrators, and executives of the people, in church and state, are strictly necessary to preserve the liberties of the masses and to insure their further development and entire emancipation.

While those chosen to act for the people should be given loyal support, the support should not degenerate into unquestioning support. Their acts and general policies should be inquired into, with due respectfulness; but the inquiry should not be neglected.—SAINTS' HERALD, October 4, 1899, p. 634.

Forcing the Issue

Veteran servants of the church have been written to, requesting information as to whether they stood with the "opposition." The purpose of the inquiry is clear.

All this is being done when the doctrines are new to the Reorganization, mooted, and before the General Conference has convened to express an opinion in the controversy!

It was the pushing of new doctrines, some questionable in character, not passed on by General Conference, and rendering men unpopular who opposed them, that contributed in a large measure to the tragic conditions in the old church.

What follows, set forth by the late Joseph Smith, is encouraging to all supporting the true faith:

It is a well-known and long-established principle in law, both ecclesiastic and secular, that where a church, or a number of believers have become members of a recognized body, having a name and a confession of belief, and rules of organization and procedure, no change can be made in confession of faith, or rules of procedure, by which those rules and principles of faith are denied, reversed, changed, or abandoned, against the wish, knowledge, and consent of the membership. And if any number, few or many, choose to retain the faith and practices at first obtaining and under which they became members of such body, those persons thus remaining true to the original faith are, and of right ought to be held to be the original body, or church. This is good law and is plain common sense.—SAINTS' HERALD, April 8, 1896, p. 230.

On the same subject he further writes:

It is a principle well known in civil law, and ought to be in ecclesiastical circles, what whenever a church is founded, its principles of faith formulated, the traditions culminated from the forum, pulpit, and press, those declarations become the constitution of its corporate and legal existence. If in the history of such church, anything out of harmony with, or antagonistic to that constitution is introduced, or a change is sought to be made in the creed and government, which is opposed and resisted, or denied by any of the members of the church, such portion of the membership as remains in adheren to the faith as it was before the change was attempted or made, is the church. Nor does it make any difference in law how few this adhering portion may be, or how numerous the changing membership, the church is that part of the members remaining true to the original tenets.—SAINTS' HERALD, December 16, 1903, p. 1171.

Appealing in remarkable power to the reason and heart is the following from his pen under the heading of "Authority—its use and abuse":

... Let us who are in authority honor our trust by considering respectfully the feelings and opinions of those over whom we preside, and thus insure good government, permanent influence, and divine favor. Let no absolute commands be given without consultation, advice, and consideration, and confidence will increase, respect for authority will be secured, and good government be insured. At least if there are exceptions they will be of the lawless and unruly class, and not those whose noble spirits revolt at oppression and servitude. Let it not be truthfully said of us: "Man, vain man, clothed in a little brief authority, plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven as makes the angels weep."

We unconsciously partake more or less of the nature of the government in which we live, and are influenced to some extent by our surroundings. Hence scattered as we are, and subject to so many and so various conditions and influences, we must expect that difference of opinion will exist; but let us remember that absolute authority to dictate in matters of duty is a relic of the Dark Ages, and to enforce it is an impossibility—a sham; and the fabric built upon it has no foundation, and must therefore fall, for the reason that its products are rebels and not loyal subjects; and what is worse, causes the best and truest element in the body to revolt. Let us then govern in love, in equity, in justice, consideration, and respect for all; and thus secure fealty, fellowship, and divine approbation. Let no man fear that his authority will not be recognized unless he prominently and persistently asserts it. This is weakness, not strength, and betrays incapacity to rule. Alexander, Caesar, Herod, Napoleon, and others made this mistake, and to-day there are none to do them reverence. Christ founded his kingdom upon love, and in tender considerations for his subjects, and now, though he died a felon's death, thousands would die for him, and his authority is still supreme.

Those who bear authority in the church do so by his appointment and favor, and must rule as he ruled, or come to shame and confusion.—Saints' Herald, April 6, 1898, p. 210.

Let no man fear that his authority will not be recognized unless he prominently and persistently asserts it.

Under the caption “Free men revolt,” our late President wrote:

The drawing of personal authority reins over free men is always fraught with danger. If drawn too tight, they prove to be galling, the rule irritates and vexes, and those sought to be restrained by them finally break from their control and refuse allegiance.—Saints' Herald, July 28, 1897.

Such a rule in its operation invariably results in the creation of fearless rebels and fawning sycophants.

He exercised his pen as follows in favor of untrammeled investigation:

... It will not do for these one-time champions of what was once called Mormonism, to take shelter under that flaming screed, “Truth is mighty and will prevail,” seeking under its cover to avoid investigation. For, Truth is aggressive and will not submit to error, is equally as correct an axiom. So, buckle on your armor, ye elders of the angel's message, as the same was delivered from 1827 to 1844, and give no quarter to the error and wrong under the influence of which so many made shipwreck of their faith.

It is an insult to the intelligence of freemen to say to them, Do not go and hear. Keep away from these men. Do not discuss. Do not offer opportunity for the public asking of questions.—Saints' Herald, September 29, 1897, p. 614.

A Theo-Autocracy in the Making

In a leading editorial of the Saints’ Herald, January 27, 1904, by Joseph Smith, the following is found in a letter of William Marks:

During my administration in the church I saw and heard of many things that was practiced, and taught that I did not believe to be of God; but I continued to do and teach such principles as were plainly revealed, as the law of the church, for I thought that pure and holy principles only would have a tendency to benefit mankind. Therefore when the doctrine of polygamy was introduced into the church as a principle of exaltation, I took a decided stand against it; which stand rendered me quite unpopular, with many of the leading ones of the church. I was also witness of the introduction (secretly) of a kingly form of government, in which Joseph suffered himself to be ordained a king, to reign over the house of Israel forever; which I could not conceive to be in accordance with the laws of the church, but I did not oppose this move, thinking it none of my business.

It should be clear to all that there is no room for real expansion for any autocratic, kingly, or similar form of government, civil or religious, within the borders of the United States.

These words from our late President on the subject “Obedience to counsel,” are enlightening:

The reason for not trusting in man is obvious—they are fallible, they are liable to err. To this all history agrees. Priests, apostles, and prophets may turn away from God. They have done so in the past, and may do so in the future. “The word of God,” the law of the Lord, is alone infallible, is alone to be fully and entirely trusted. The word of God is infinitely greater than the priesthood. The priesthood are subject to the word, and are to administer it with carefulness and faithfulness.—Saints' Herald, February 20, 1892.

Heman C. Smith, church historian, wrote:

A careful perusal of the minutes of the so-called trial of Sidney Rigdon does not sustain the charge of treachery. The minutes of that trial disclose a disposition on the part of Brigham Young and his associates to dominate and bring all departments of church work under their dictation.—True Succession in Church Presidency, p. 167.

Great men are they who see that the spiritual is stronger than any material force.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Is not the following from our late Prophet to the point?

And if we ever get nearer together it must be by a mutual bending toward each other. It must not be by an exercise of supreme authority, or anything of that kind. That never will bring men nearer.—Saints' Herald, April 26, 1905, p. 416.

An able writer has recently expressed the following:

Unlimited power first commands interest, then attention, then scrutiny, then distrust, then questionings—and the fall of the house is not far off.

God's Will—Not Man's—Be Done

It has been suggested to me from no low source, if I could not work in harmony with the Presidency, I should resign. My conscience does not approve pursuing such a course. If I were antagonistic to the standard books of the church, or General Conference enactments, or unsympathetic to Zion ideals, the situation would be different. Most of the twenty-five years of my active ministry have been spent away from home. I was not called to my office by man, nor am I an employee of any one man; so, naturally, I prefer to have no human opinion enter into my release. With this thought, I continue to magnify my calling as an apostle of Jesus Christ.

One-man power is not safe anywhere—not in the Food for Thought
BY W. E. PEAK

What I have to say I say from a feeling of compulsion. I feel I would say it if it were the last thing I did on earth. And if it would accomplish the results that I desire, I would be willing that it should be the last thing I did on earth.

I believe to be one of the duties of the Presidency to unify the high priesthood. We are presidents of the high priesthood first and, in a way, because of that, of the church. I say I believe it to be one of our duties to unify the high priesthood. We have not yet succeeded in doing that. Perhaps we are not good in unifying. Perhaps you are hard to unify. Perhaps both are true. But it seems to me that if presently there does not come more unity the time will come when we of necessity must step aside and permit you to select some one else who can perform that work.—President E. A. Smith, Minutes of General Conference 1922, p. 3246.

The above quotation is worthy of careful consideration. It was said from “a feeling of compulsion.” This “feeling of compulsion” was so strong and the demand so great, that it would have been said “if it were the last thing” the speaker “did on earth.” He saw the need of unifying “the high priesthood.” He realized it was the duty “of the Presidency to unify the high priesthood,” and unless it was done “presently” the Presidency “of necessity must step aside and permit you to select some one else who can perform that work.”

If this “feeling” was produced by the Spirit of God, it was a message of vast importance. It predicts a change in the Presidency, if unity does not come “presently” to the church. If this prediction is of God, it will be fulfilled. Are we prepared for it?

If this statement was simply the opinion of the speaker, he makes a suggestion that the Presidency should “step aside and permit you to select some one else,” unless unity comes. Should we consider this suggestion?

Has “More Unity” Come to the High Priesthood Since 1922?

Let us consider the following quotations. They not only present conditions, but methods of procedure. The Bishop requested President Smith to call the joint council as shown by the following:

Regardless of what methods of procedure or plan of reorganization was adopted, we feel the matter should be given immediate consideration by the Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, and urge that a meeting of the Joint Council be held at the earliest possible date.—Quoted from Bishop Benjamin R. McGuire’s letter to President F. M. Smith.—SAINTS’ HERALD, June 18, 1924, p. 578.

This request was not granted. But “the President of the church issued a call for the members of the Quorum of Twelve in America and the Order of Bishops to meet in Independence April 15, which they did, as was indicated in our recent editorial.” (President F. M. Smith, SAINTS’ HERALD, June 18, 1924, p. 578.) We quote the following account of the procedure of this council:

The chairman [President F. M. Smith] stated among other things that the council was purely advisory to the Presidency, and had been called to consider the condition of the church upon the letter of the Presiding Bishopric, but in the first speech made impassioned charges of a general character against the Presiding Bishopric, alleging that they were responsible for all the ills of the church and with having set up a resistance to the Presidency and frustrating their efforts.—SAINTS’ HERALD, August 6, 1924, p. 754, article by Israel A. Smith.

It is a serious “charge” to assert that the Presiding Bishopric is “responsible for all the ills of the church.” Will the presidency “unify the high priesthood” in this way? The following presents the situation quite clearly:

The Open Letter was not published until after President Smith had given publicity to the document on church government and publicly stated that there were two groups in the church—that anyone who had not allied himself with one camp or the other undoubtedly would be called upon to do so, and urged the priesthood of Independence to discuss the matter thoroughly.—Benjamin R. McGuire, James F. Keir, Israel A. Smith, John W. Rushton, T. W. Williams, A. V. Karsstrom, R. May.—SAINTS’ HERALD, August 20, 1924.

Again we read on July 6 at the Campus by the President of the church:

I cannot yield to the voice of the opposition, so I am in the fight, and it will undoubtedly be a finish fight. Either the opposition which has asserted itself is going to become supreme and the rest of us eliminated, or vice versa.—SAINTS’ HERALD, August 6, 1924, p. 756.

The President declares there are “two groups in the church” and that he is in the fight, and it will undoubtedly be a finish fight. He gives all to understand that if his group marches to victory, the other group will be "eliminated." Just how long this process of "elimination" has been in operation, or the methods which have been used, is not clear. But this is significant:

We want the church to know our position: the attack made on us [the Bishopric] by the President of the church before the council of last April was unwarranted in law and unjust in method. It seems to have been premeditated, though no indication of it had been given beforehand.—Israel A. Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, August 6, 1924.

Early in the council, when the President made his charges against the Presiding Bishop, he used language similar to the following: "If I am right I want this council to say so; if I am wrong and this council says so, I have the decency and manhood to get out, to resign"; and the other things from which, in connection with the words quoted, we could conclude nothing else but if Bishop McGuire was decent and had manhood he would get out, resign. These facts should be known.

If President F. M. Smith should resign as threatened above, do we, as a church, know how to proceed? Are we hopelessly tied to one man? Does the law make provisions for a successor? If so, how?

Certainly upon my statement before that council calling attention to the attempt to drive the Bishop from office, if there was no such attempt or desire upon the part of the Presidency or of the President, then was the supreme moment for denial. But no denial has been made, then or since that day, and I do not believe they can ever be heard now to deny it.—Israel A. Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, August 6, 1924.

Has this brought unity? Will such a method unify the high priesthood?

Again:

President Smith insisted that the members of the council as they went out should agree to abide by the decision of the council. It was even urged that any member of the council not willing to abide by the actions of the council should be man enough to resign. This statement in effect was repeatedly thrown out in the council speeches, by those who were favorable to the theory of "supreme directional control."—Benjamin R. McGuire, James F. Keir, Israel A. Smith, John W. Rushton, A. V. Karlstrom, R. May.—SAINTS' HERALD, August 20, 1924.

How Should a Successor Be Chosen?

President E. A. Smith in his statement said, "and permit you to select some one else who can perform the work." For "you to select" the successor, is in conflict with the theory that the President is to appoint his successor by revelation. However, President E. A. Smith said "from a feeling of compulsion" that you, the church, were "to select" the one "who can perform this work." This is in harmony with the Doctrine and Covenants and the sworn statement of the late President Joseph Smith.

In the Temple Lot Suit Joseph said under oath:

I could have been properly ordained under the laws of the Reorganized Church to the office I now hold (President of the church) without a revelation to that effect from my father. Yes, sir, you understand me correctly; I claim I could properly be ordained and qualified and put in the possession of the office which I now hold, without a revelation to that effect to my father. I make that claim.—Plaintiff's Abstract, p. 63.

Joseph's statement is in harmony with the law and facts, and it is not necessary to write a long article to prove his position. We accept it. His theory will stand the test. Pray for light, brethren, and God will lead us out of this turmoil and confusion.

What Constitutes a Seer?

BY LOUISE PALFREY SHELDON

In the HERALD for September 24, 1924, under the caption, "The Book of Mormon and the present status," I took the position, first, that a seer is one who has the Urim and Thummim and the gift to use it. Second, that the ability to be a seer is a gift, not an office, and the gift does not necessarily belong to the one who may be acting as the presiding high priest over the Melchisedec priesthood. My reason for writing on the subject which forms the title of this article is because the above conclusions are disputed in an article appearing in the HERALD for December 3, 1924, pages 1169, 1170, and the subject is of sufficient importance, I think, to justify further consideration.

The earliest description of the Urim and Thummim and its use is found in the first chapter of Ether. When the brother of Jared had received the revelation of "all things," he was commanded to write it in a language that could not be read without the use of an instrument consisting of "two stones" which the Lord would give him. This instrument was to be sealed up, with the revelation, which revelation was not to come forth until the Lord willed. (Verses 86-93.) Obviously the instrument was prepared for the translation of the revelation.

Mosiah translated the records on the plates of gold which were found by the people of Limhi by employing an instrument. Let the record tell the story:

And now he translated them by the means of those two stones which were fastened into the two rims of a bow. Now these things were prepared from the beginning, and were handed down from generation to generation, for the purpose of interpreting languages. . . . And whosoever has these things, is called seer, after the manner of old time.—Mosiah 12: 18, 19, 21.

If the Urim and Thummim were ever put to other use among the Nephites than to translate, we are not told about it. Indeed, there are only two instances of the use of the instrument at all; one, the translation of the twenty-four gold plates; the other, when the first Mosiah translated the characters engraved on a “large stone” that was brought to him which gave an account of the last Jaredite king, Coriantumr, “and the slain of his people.” (Omni 1: 35, 36.) In the nature of the case, the use of the Urim and Thummim for purposes of translation is not a common thing, since occasion for such use has occurred but a few times in the known history of the world. There could be but one reason that would justify seership being a permanent gift, and that would be the need of the instrument for receiving revelations. Since no such need exists when the higher priesthood is manifest among men, the use of the Urim and Thummim must be governed by occasional demand, which is of rare occurrence.

While it is reasonable to conclude that the ability to be a seer is a gift, the Book of Mormon plainly tells us that it is. Not anyone who might chance to have the privilege of looking through the Urim and Thummim could translate. Even our latter-day seer could not do so at all times. He was dependent upon the Lord for the power to use the instrument; hence to say that a man translated an unknown language by the use of the Urim and Thummim is equal to saying he did so by the gift and power of God. Omni exhorts men to believe in, among other things, the “gift of interpreting languages.” (Omni 44.) The first Mosiah was able to interpret the engravings on the stone, we read, “by the gift and power of God.” In his enumeration of the gifts which God bestows upon men as their faith and the needs require, Alma specified, among other things, “and the gift of translation.” (Alma 7: 31.) Ammon told Limhi:

I can assuredly tell thee, O king, of a man that can translate the records; for he has wherewith that he can look, and translate all records that are of ancient date: and it is a gift from God.—Mosiah 5: 72.

The Bible says little about a seer. The subject is one regarding which we need the Book of Mormon to inform us more fully. When Israel became estranged from God and the law was placed under the administration of the lesser priesthood, the Lord was approached by the Aaronic presiding priest through the Urim and Thummim. While it seems the instrument was primarily intended, in Israel, for the lesser priesthood, we are not justified in assuming that its use was limited to that priesthood by law. If it can be shown that Moses, Samuel, and others were seers in the specific meaning the Book of Mormon gives the term, it furnishes additional evidence to place alongside the fact stated in the Book of Mormon that Mosiah translated the twenty-four gold plates, and not Alma, who was the high priest over the church.

Latter-day revelation has not provided that the president of the church, only, may be a seer to the church. In section 87: 3, Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams “are accounted as equal” with Joseph; and later, in section 107: 39, Sidney Rigdon and William Law are associated with Joseph “to receive the oracles for the whole church.” If there be any question as to whether it was intended that these men might enjoy the gift of a seer as well as Joseph, the language in paragraph 29 of the same section leaves no doubt. It plainly states that it was appointed unto Hyrum Smith to be “a prophet, and a seer, and a revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph.”

The Rank of a Seer

It was Limhi who said that “a seer is greater than a prophet.” (Mosiah 5: 76.) Ammon added “that a seer is a revelator, and a prophet also.” This, of course, is necessarily true, while, on the other hand, it does not follow that a prophet is a seer. True, both see, but the means is different. The seer employs an instrument; the prophet does not. Things are revealed to both the prophet and the seer. To the seer, they are discerned through the Urim and Thummim. The prophet sees without the use of an instrument. The distinctive function of a seer is to translate unknown languages.

The word prophet is often employed in a general way by secular writers and speakers, as is also, though less frequently, the term seer. We are aware that the Old Testament sometimes speaks of a prophet as a seer, especially in 1 Samuel 9: 9, but a number of terms are used in the Bible in a general sense as well as in a specific sense. Without the Book of Mormon we should not know what the peculiar work of a seer is. To call a prophet a seer is to leave us without any specific name by which to designate the peculiar work of a seer, and we are indebted to the Book of Mormon for showing that the title is not a superfluous word whose meaning is covered by the term prophet.

After saying “that a seer is a revelator, and a prophet also,” Ammon says, “and a gift which is greater, can no man have.” (Mosiah 5: 77.) Is this not true? Does not Isaiah refer to the translation of the Book of Mormon as “a marvelous work and a wonder”? Ammon does not say that the gift to be a seer is the greatest gift, but he says there is no greater, and surely, as a manifestation of divine power, it ranks with the miraculous.

After a survey of all the evidence, we can come to no other conclusion than that a seer is one who has.
the gift to use the Urim and Thummim. Since the gift is useless without the instrument, it follows that it takes the instrument, also, to make a seer. If any more evidence were needed to support this position, we have it in the words of the angel to Joseph Smith, jr.:

Also that there were two stones in silver bows, and these stones fastened to a breastplate constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim, deposited with the plates, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted seers in ancient or former times, and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 13.

Human Minorities and Divine Majorities

BY JAMES E. YATES

One with God is always a majority.

The proposal of, and conflict with, great heresies in all the past has afforded ample reason for just condemnation of wrong majorities, and has ever glorified right minorities. Who will deny that?

What other attitude could consistently be taken towards a wrong majority in major and vital issues than to continue to be opposed to it?

Is there no proper qualification to be placed upon the usual rule that the minority should submit to the decision of the majority? If not, why should the Thirteen American Colonies not have submitted to parental authoritative control? How could the Nazarene and his few followers have been justified in resisting and supplanting religious authority? Why should Joseph Smith not have joined some popular creed and kept still about the minority doctrine of the Restoration? Why was a nonplussed minority justified in seceding against the strange doctrines and strong discipline of Brigham Young?

Where is the man who will stand up and deny that, at the proposal of great heresies, assent to the sweep of human majorities has proven to be a vice rather than a virtue? Is it not only in the minor matters, or in matters that are not vital to the life of the body, that right minorities can afford to yield to wrong majorities? And in the last analysis, is not every man responsible, and to be held to account for his own judgment as to just where fair right ends, and vital wrong begins?

Does God expect you to say that every human majority, even in the church, is right because it is a majority, regardless of the best judgment that God has given you to the contrary? Has not every progressive thing the world has ever seen been born of divine minorities among men refusing to bow down before mandatory human majorities? Who will deny it?

Who does not know that an issue as vital to the church as the air we breathe is before the church at this hour? Some may feel very confident now that they are sure where the majority will be when the conference speaks again. Time will tell. But shall we arise at this moment and condemn beforehand any who in this human transaction may determine that their only possible place to stand in this crucial issue is with a right minority rather than with a wrong majority?

Nine hundred and ninety-nine men opposed by a thousand and heresy may be a human minority; but one man and God is always a divine majority, though not always recognized as such among men. The weaklings of the world, following the course of least resistance, have ever been easily swept along with the current of wrong human majorities. Have not the most courageous ever won laurels for every righteous cause by daring to stand for and to fight with minorities until they have won majorities to the cause of right?

Leaders of “Supreme Control” Are Courageous Minority Men

Have the Saints observed that proponents of “supreme directional control” are even now minority reactionaries? None can justly accuse these, our brethren who are advocating “strongly administered discipline” and its attendant features, with the cowardice that swings with some majority because of its numbers. For since the last General Conference they have courageously stood with and fought most manfully for the cause of the minority, proved to be the minority by vote of the last General Conference, when the conference rejected one of the major moves of the supreme control doctrine and denied exclusive nomination to office by priesthood. They have challenged the majority! They are the courageous minority leaders of the hour! Should they be discredited for it? Certainly not, if they consider it vital that the church must have this “control” doctrine attached! All should respect them in their daring attempt to show the church and the conference where it was mistaken when it voted that it did not want government by priesthood exclusively nominating itself to office, etc. They have the right, as any sincere minority should have, to protest the majority action, and to try to get the body to change its mind to make it accord with their views. But in our opinion it would have been better, and would have resulted in less confusion to the church had their efforts to convert the majority been confined to the conference rather than by the initiatory innovation of an advisory council between conferences.

Let it be remembered that last General Conference acted upon one of the most important features of the doctrine of government by priesthood when it denied the proposed plan to give the priesthood the only power to nominate for office. Let it be remembered how fondly that feature of government was striven for. Let it be remembered how determinedly every possible modification of any proposed measure was pressed in order to make the final conference action give the largest powers to government by priesthood.

As soon as it became evident by the general temper of the people in their attitude towards the proposed exclusive nomination by priesthood doctrine, that it could not carry, every effort of its proponents seemed to be to get an enactment just as near to that kind of government by priesthood as would be possible. And why should they not? They believed it that way, and very naturally, if they could not get the majority to see it that way at once, they would labor for as near an approach to that kind of "control" as possible. Let the church remember who these good and determined brethren are, and the full text of all that has been proposed for the government, control, discipline, etc., and there can be no question as to who have been dissatisfied with majority decisions, or who minority leaders are, and just what measures are responsible for the sharp controversy which has been made necessary.

The "control" proposition submitted to the church in the language formulated in the advisory council of April, 1924, is unquestionably a minority movement engendered in disapproval of the real spirit and genius of the conference action in rejecting such government by priesthood as the exclusive nomination privileges asked for would have established at a single stroke.

Honest and sincere leaders in minority thought and action should have their rights, and should be respected in them; but frenzied and clandestine movements made in any effort to regain lost ground, are not helpful to any cause or to any body.

So it would seem that the minority leaders in the present effort to get the conference to change its mind on the question of government by priesthood should have little to say as to how soon any possible minority should hush, after the next vote is taken. If it was justifiable for them, as the minority, not to hush when their cause was defeated before, they may need to be accorded the same privilege again. For honest minorities are honorable, even when, in a vital cause, though defeated, they remain still unyielding.

But if it be not vital to the life of the church that this harrassing supreme directional control and government by priesthood system be installed, then the better part of valor, to say nothing of good judgment for "harmonious working," would be for the minority which has been so in disagreement with the action of the General Conference to just lay this "control" notion aside, and let us all join hands for the glorious consummation of the work of the Lord comprehended in righteousness, peace, and spiritual liberty.

To lay this very choice, but very disturbing doctrine on the table for good and always, and for the church to proceed as she did before she ever heard of this thing, would doubtless be very difficult for some of our brethren to do, or to see done; but if there is any other way to prevent the most serious and permanent cleavage asunder of this church that its fellowship has ever seen since the Reorganization, such a way is surely not clear at this hour.

I move, brethren, that we lay this whole proposition on the table and proceed to the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ for the salvation of souls. If, in the confusion of the moment, the chairman of the meeting can speak with a clear enough voice to put such a motion, there is hope, and we believe it will carry overwhelmingly.

May it be so.

Another View of Democracy
BY EDWARD RANNIE

"Democracy is that condition of society wherein the members have a voice in its business and government." That is not all democracy means, but it is sufficient for my purpose in this paper. The important thing is that the reader understand the writer.

Democracy in the home means that the husband and wife and children, when they are old enough, work together for the welfare of all, without a boss, but a leader made so by common consent because of ability to lead.

Democracy in the church means a voice in its affairs expressed in an orderly and lawful manner.

Democracy in the state means a participation in the affairs of government in the manner provided for in its organic law and done in an orderly way.

Democracy is not a fiat issued by Deity simply because he has the power, as does an autocratic ruler, but because it is a divine principle, a holy law by which the blessings come to mankind that our Creator desires to bestow upon his children. The nearer men approach the ideals of Jesus Christ in thought and act, the more anxious they become to govern and be governed by the spirit of democracy. Jesus said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Jesus did not take it; the Father gave it to him because his character was so perfect that he did "those things that please him."

George Washington, the founder of our Nation, who had supreme confidence in the overruling power of a divine Providence, had bestowed upon him by the Continental Congress almost the power of a dictator. He did not ask for it; he did not want it; it was given because of his character, and that was of a divine Providence, had bestowed upon him by Lincoln, the savior of the Nation, had more power given to him by the Constitution and by Congress than any other President from Washington until the present day; he did not ask for it. Because of the confidence of the lawmakers in his integrity, his honesty, and his love for justice and mercy, they felt safe in bestowing it upon him. The historian does not record any act in that either one of the men referred to ever abused the trust reposed in him.

There are three reasons why unlimited power should not be placed in the hands of men individually, except in isolated cases, which will be noted later.

First: No man knows all that can be known of any one subject. All knowledge does not come within his grasp of things. His experience does not give him all knowledge of any subject. If he does not possess all knowledge, some one else may know something of the subject that is helpful in the solution of the problem under consideration, and without making use of that knowledge some loss must occur and perhaps defeat the end sought.

Second: No man is so good that he is not influenced by friendship. He is blind to the faults of his friends and cannot muster courage to say no when the welfare of the church or state is in the balance. He cannot see their lack of ability, the weak places are overlooked, and a trust in good luck or Providence is substituted for the good judgment that is the basis of accomplishment. The call of friendship is louder than that of God, and so sometimes it occurs that one whose ability and manner of life does not warrant it is clothed with the garb of priestly honor. Friendship hides a multitude of faults.

Third: All men are influenced by prejudice, religious, racial, color, and class, and in forming a conclusion their judgment will be affected by their prejudices. It condemns the innocent; it robs the friendless of justice; it condemns religious societies and causes the ban of society to be placed upon them; it is an enemy of progress and hinders the work of the Lord in his effort to bless mankind.

The above pessimistic view of man is not intended to discourage us in our struggle upward, but rather as a measurement of what we are. It takes hard and continuous work to polish a rough piece of marble; the oak starting from an acorn stands the storms of many winters before it is fit for man’s use. Man is a crude piece of material, making a heroic struggle to get where God wants him to be, “a little lower than the angels”; and while he is engaged in that conflict he needs restraint, encouragement, and guidance to help him reach the goal.

It is because of these conditions that we need the spirit of democracy in all our affairs. In the home, the church, and state, where groups of people are considering their welfare, there will be found some one who will discover the weak places in the structure, of whatever nature it may be, and with such knowledge the structure can be made more perfect, and with it will come a realization of the scriptural injunction that in a multitude of counselors there is safety.

We should not condemn each other because of our imperfections, but with patience work together, guided by the law of love. Democracy will help us perfect our characters, and if we try any other plan we will fail. It restrains the impetuous and encourages the timid and backward. The greater development we make under the rule of democracy, the more power can be placed in our hands without fear of our abusing it; and when we have attained a perfect character all power can be placed at our disposal, and if we are tempted to use it wrongfully we will have power as Jesus did and say, “Get thee behind me, Satan.”

“Popular Radio” Corrects Error

Several people have called to my attention the article that appeared in the November issue of Popular Radio Magazine. This article published a picture of Wilbur Glenn Voliva, overseer of Zion City, Illinois, stating that he was the head of the Latter Day Saints, which operated broadcasting station W C B D and taught several peculiar doctrines and beliefs, including that of the earth being flat.

After calling this error to the attention of Kendall Banning, editor of Popular Radio, he immediately made reply that he had corrected the error in the January issue, and he inclosed the following clipping:

On page 436 of Popular Radio for November appeared a picture of Wilbur Glenn Voliva, of Zion City, Illinois, broadcasting from Station W C B D. The religious sect which Mr. Voliva heads and which owns that station was erroneously referred to as the Latter Day Saints, whereas (as a reader kindly points out), it should have been referred to as the “Christian Catholic Apostolic Church.” The “Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints” owns and controls Station K F I X at Independence, Missouri.

The Mormons of Utah, who erroneously call themselves “Latter Day Saints,” have a station also, reports the editor’s correspondent, Mrs. M. D. Graham, of Burlington, North Dakota.

NEWS AND LETTERS

Off to Tiona Reunion

It may be known to at least some of the readers of the Herald that Australia has of late years gone in for its first reunion. The matter was under consideration for some time. Discussion resulted in a resolution to purchase a tract of land in the vicinity of Tuncurry, one of our oldest branches. This tract consists of eighty acres, for which the sum of £2 ($10) per acre was paid. It is beautifully located, being between the beach (that of the Pacific Ocean) and a lake connected with the sea at another point, and which bears the name of Wallis Lake. Being affected by the sea, its waters furnish both bathing and fishing facilities. The grounds are connects the cape with the inland country.

This tract nishes both bathing and fishing facilities. The grounds at first were in the woods (or, as Australians say, “the bush”), hence much work was required to make the first gathering possible. Even then everything was in a very crude state. Nevertheless, we had a splendid reunion, the time being the holiday season, the same as this time. Already Tiona has become a watchword among Australians, say with spiritual enthusiasm and the young with bated breath, “Meet me at Tiona!”

Having had a taste of last year’s meetings, I was anxious to go this time. Hence, Friday, December 19, the anniversary of my spiritual birthday of 1887, I wended my way to the Sydney Railway Station, accompanied by my niece, Miss Nance Dixon, who helped me carry my baggage. Sisters Chennowith and Langley of Adelaide met me at the station, in care of Sister Velt. It was my duty to deliver them at Newcastle, where they were to leave the train and take an automobile for an overland trip. I had twenty minutes in which to effect their transfer. I was relieved of all anxiety when Sister Essie Roberts, Bishop Lewis’s daughter, met the train and took care of my charges. The train trip was without any special incidents except that the passengers were quite sociable and shared their lunches with each other very freely, which, by the way, is common in this country.

We arrived at Taree, which is twenty-one miles from Tuncurry, at 6.45 p. m., having seen lovely country all the way. Upon alighting from the train, we found the Tuncurry auto bus awaiting. In a short time we were speeding away to Tuncurry, where we arrived just before 9. Had a belated supper at Brother Ernest Wright’s, where I stayed for the night. The next day at 10 a. m., I crossed Wallis Lake with a number of other Saints in a launch which was running for this special purpose. The launch landed us at Tiona just in time for lunch at 12.30.

It was the intention to organize at 2 p. m., the 20th, but we did not get that far until 7.30 p. m., at which hour Apostle M. A. McConley was chosen as president and Elders G. H. Parker and A. J. Corbett as his assistants, these two being the presidents of Northern and Southern New South Wales Districts, respectively. Curtis Argent was chosen as secretary and W. J. Haworth, A. C. Barmore, and the secretary as press committee; Elders H. I. Velt, E. J. Haworth, J. H. Jenkins, and N. Williams as administration committee.

Sunday, the 21st, the following services were held: 8.30 a. m., prayer service in charge of Elders Jenkins and Mansell, sermon by Elder J. W. Davis at 11 a. m. and by Elders M. A. McConley and A. C. Barmore at 3 and 7.30 p. m. On Monday these: 8.30 a. m., prayer service in charge of E. J. Haworth and W. H. Gammidge; 9.45, an educational departmental session in which Elder Barmore spoke on teamwork in the general church activities, and G. H. Parker on Sunday school work. At 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m., Elders A. V. Robinson and W. J. Haworth preached. Tuesday, the 23rd, this program was rendered: 8.30 a. m., prayer service in charge of Elders H. I. Velt and A. C. Barmore; at 9.45 a meeting of the Department of Women was held in charge of Sister J. W. Davis, assisted by Sister Mansell and Sister Blanche Flood, the superintendents of the women’s work for the Northern and Southern Districts of New South Wales; at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. the people were addressed by Elders E. Nixon and A. J. Corbett.

So far the prayer meetings have been uplifting and the public speaking terse and inspirational; altogether the services have given great satisfaction.

Elder J. T. Gresty, the mission chorister, has not yet arrived, so W. H. Gammidge was elected as assistant chorister and now has the choir in charge. A special feature is the singing of a reunion hymn, the words of which were composed of Elder W. J. Haworth. It runs as follows:

COME TO THE TENT AT TIONA

(Tune: “The church in the wildwood.”)

There’s a tent by the seaside in the bushland,
Where the young and the old love to meet;
Where the word of the Lord is dispensed,
And we bow low in prayer at His feet.

CHORUS:

Oh, come to the tent at Tiona,
Oh, come, worship Godneath the tree,
For the Lord will be there at Tiona,
In His tabernacle close by the sea.

The birds sing His praise at Tiona,
You may come, too, and join in the song;
There you’ll meet with God and his people,
Far remote from the world and its wrong.

The sea worships God at Tiona,
You may join in its murmuring praise
To the Almighty God of creation,
For the gospel of these latter days.

So with birds praising God, and the ocean
Booming forth its deep message sublime,
May the people of God in devotion
Draw near to their Maker divine.

It may seem strange to some that we should be holding a reunion at this season, but it should be remembered that we are living in the Southern Hemisphere, hence our December is equal to the northern June. This is the only reunion held by the church in this hemisphere.

Our complete postal address is: Tiona Park, via Forster, New South Wales, Australia.

Woodbine, Iowa

January 30.—New officers having been installed for the year, the departments are busy getting their work lined up. Fred A. Fry was again sustained as president of the branch, he choosing Joseph Seddon and D. A. Holcomb as his counselors. Our priesthood force at present numbers sixteen, some members having removed to other localities during the past few months.

At the Department of Women meeting on January 8, Brother Fry gave a very interesting and timely talk on the need of cooperation in our work. The Christmas entertainment was a real success, the children doing their parts well. And the young people's watch party, held in the basement of the church, brings pleasant memories to the participants. They resolved at that time to make a greater effort to render service to the church the coming year.

Our young people are also doing commendable work in school. Three young sisters recently won honors in the annual declamatory contest, and others were close competitors.

We were pleased to see Sister Ada, wife of Elder Charles Putnam, at her post as teacher in the Religio last Sunday. The serious operation to which she was obliged to submit some weeks ago has been the hindering cause of her absence from church services.

Old Man Flu again entered our little city as an uninvited guest, and many of the Saints, to their utter disgust and discomfort, have been forced to entertain. However, all have survived under his pressing sociability and are looking with pleasure on his retreating footprints.

Shellbrook, Saskatchewan

Church work at the Shellbrook Branch seems to be reviving somewhat after the busy fall and early winter season. The business sessions for all departments have been held, resulting in the reelection of practically all officers, the only change being the election of Brother Fred W. Smith to succeed Brother Andrew Filby as superintendent of the Sunday school. Brother Bowerman was retained as branch president, for which work he seems especially blessed.

Brother Roy Land, who has recently united with us, will be associated with him for what time he will be with us. Brother Filby is again our priest, with Brother Walter Cossey as teacher. Associated with Brother Cossey is Fred W. Smith.

Two new families of Saints have united with us recently: Brother Roy Land and family and Brother and Sister Harper and family. With the latter family came Sister Harper's sister, Miss Eva Land. We welcome this addition to our little band.

Again this winter we are holding our meetings from house to house. This year the Religio work will be primarily the study of the Book of Mormon. Brother Harry Parks is again superintendent, with Fred W. Smith continuing as Book of Mormon instructor. We have a very large and interesting class.

Another large, enthusiastic class which seems to be trying earnestly to comply with Solomon's admonition, "Study to show thyself approved," is the senior class of the Sunday school, which is studying the lessons outlined in the quarters. This class is taught by Brother Bowerman, who has proved himself a very successful teacher.

We regret that distance and bad roads prevent the Saints living in the town of Shellbrook from being with us regularly, as they can only be present when the weather will permit. Also our teacher, Walter Cossey, is mechanic for a large lumber company in The Pass, Ontario, and cannot be with us often. We miss all these enthusiastic Saints.

We would not feel that this month's letter were complete if we did not mention our elderly Sister Parks. Patiently confined to her bed, she is an earnest Latter Day Saint who bears an inspiring testimony to the truth of the work. Her words of encouragement are: "I know this work is of God." We are thankful that God sees into the heart and blesses these earnest witnesses, withdrawn from the world though they may be.

Minden City, Michigan

January 26.—The number of Saints here is small compared to some other branches, but they are thankful that the promises are extended to the twos and threes when they meet in His name. This promise has been verified to us in the past many times, for which we are thankful.

At present we have as our leader, Elder Williard Parks, a young man, a live wire, who came into our midst about five years ago. We fully believe he will be able to help us come up higher if we will heed his counsel and advice.

The past year we have gained two by baptism and two by letters of removal. Some have moved away, and one sister was taken by death, also the infant son of Brother and Sister Albert Volz, who was permitted to stay with them only a short time. Also Sister Arthur Leverton passed away November 30. Her loss is deeply felt by all, and her death takes from us also Brother Leverton, who returned to Canada to his children, after being here almost fourteen years. They are surely missed by all here, as they seemed like a father and mother to the flock, and Brother Leverton's years of experience in the work had been a great help to us. We hope that our loss will be the gain of some one else. May God bless him in his declining years, and may he help us as his children to so live that we may meet the ones gone on before.

Topeka, Kansas

January 30.—Everything here is going along quietly with fairly good attendance considering the cold weather, which has been quite protracted for this part of the country.

The pulpit has been occupied this month by local members of the priesthood. Our pastor, A. P. Crooker, gave us a very good sermon on the Book of Mormon on January 11, which was greatly appreciated by those who heard it, as we do not hear as many talks on the Book of Mormon as we would like.

The Department of Recreation and Expression, under Brother Holman, is getting along nicely, though its support by more of the members would be appreciated, and it would be time well spent, on account of the study of the Book of Mormon and other subjects of interest. This department meets at the church at half past six Sunday evening, and will continue to do so at least for the rest of the quarter.

The cottage prayer meetings adopted a few weeks ago have been hardly so well attended as it was hoped they would be, but it is believed it will improve as the inclement weather subsides.

The meetings of the Department of Women have been well attended recently, and the members have done some very creditable work in sewing for those who greatly needed their help. They are considering plans for holding a bazaar to assist in clearing the church indebtedness here, which has been considerably reduced the past year.
Bay Port, Michigan

January 25.—The work here is progressing under the care of consecrated leaders. At the annual branch business meeting under the coordination plan, the old officers were sustained for the new year. Brother Harvey G. Dutcher is the pastor; George W. Harder, superintendent of the Sunday school; Archie Harder, head of the Department of Recreation and Expression; Mrs. Pearl Dutcher, leader Department of Women.

During the past summer the branch was visited by several Independence Saints who formerly resided in this vicinity. A week's meetings were held during the fall by Elders William Davis and Myron Carr. Brother Carr preached the funeral sermon of Sister George Pitcher, which was said by some nonmembers to be the best sermon they ever heard.

The branch was also favored with a visit from Brother Vincent Schaar, field worker for the Sunday school and Religion, who gave an excellent talk to the children. Sister Engel, district organizer for the Department of Women, paid us a visit and addressed a goodly gathering at the church on women's work. The latter department recently held a bake sale at the ice cream parlor, placing a small quantity of bazaar goods, netting over sixty dollars. The women meet every two weeks for the study of the Red Cross textbook, Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick, after which the time is spent in sewing.

There is a fine group of Temple Builders who meet once in two weeks to study Mary Read's Mothercraft Manual, and to enjoy a social time. The Temple Builders are nearly all high school students.

In the Department of Recreation and Expression the present study is the Book of Mormon quarterly, followed by a program. Occasionally a social evening is enjoyed.

The Sunday school, as usual, presented a miscellaneous program at Christmas, with the usual tree. The church was crowded.

At the business meeting held recently, a committee was appointed to estimate the cost of putting a basement under the church, as it is greatly needed.

Glasgow, Montana

January 25.—The branch has been saddened by the death of Sister Irene Page, wife of Branch President James C. Page. She was ill for two months in the hospital, and died December 17. The funeral was conducted from the Baptist church December 19, in charge of Elmer D. Chase, with sermon by William Sparling; of Minot, North Dakota. Though it was very cold, the church, the largest in the city, was full, and the floral offerings were many. Sister Page was a faithful member of the church and was held in high esteem by the community. She taught in the Sunday school and the Religion and was the district superintendent of the Department of Women.

The business meetings of the different departments of church work recently held resulted in the selection of the following to serve the coming year: James C. Page, branch president and superintendent of Sunday school; Georgia Wilcox, president of the Religion. All the new officers have taken hold of the work with zeal and earnestness, which will mean success if the spirit continues throughout the year. The finances showed about one hundred dollars ahead in the three treasuries.

The new superintendent of Christmas offering, Theo Brecher, has started out with pep and has secured pledges to almost equal the amount we raised this year.

It is often remarked that the attendance at Sunday school is good just before Christmas and then falls off afterwards. This has not been true of the Glasgow Sunday school this year, for January will show almost one hundred per cent attendance.

Arthur Ritter, priest of the Fairview Branch, and member of the district presidency, stopped a few days in Glasgow the first part of January on his way to California and thence to General Conference. He preached January 11 on “Jesus, our perfect pattern.”

Bishop's Agent Earl Wilcox has hung in our meeting place a bulletin containing information sent out by the Presiding Bishop.

Pensacola, Florida

February 3.—The work in Pensacola Branch is still progressing nicely. Several of our members are much more attentive to their church duties now than they have been in the past. It seems that the new year has surely brought glad tidings for us, for we can see upon its horizon gleams of things for which we have earnestly prayed.

One of the many things we have learned by the assistance of our able teacher is the value of the Inspired Translation of the Bible. The members were asked to bring their Bibles, and in comparing the versions we found a remarkable difference between the two, which only goes to prove that man cannot do anything perfectly without God's help.

Our work here is not very great compared to other branches we know of, but it seems that all are cooperating, and more unity and peace are prevalent than ever before.

Brother Arthur Rasmussen of North Dakota has located here and expresses himself as being very thankful to be where there is a branch, as he and his family have been isolated for several years.

Our church building is all completed except the painting of the inside, and all expenses are paid. This is something for which we have diligently worked and prayed, and we feel that we have been greatly blessed in being able to make the progress we have made in so short a time. Now we hope to see the day when it will be filled with good, spiritual Latter Day Saints.

San Francisco, California

February 1.—The Saints here were made sorrowful recently by the death of our much beloved Sister M. E. Saxe, wife of our branch president, J. A. Saxe. She passed away December 28. She had been afflicted for a long time, but the Saints had no idea her departure was so near. She was buried December 30 at Irvington, her old home. The flags of the town were placed at half mast for her, for she was known and loved by all. She was an active member in the branch, taking part in all our affairs. For years she was superintendent of the Sunday school and a good worker in the Religion. Her loved ones have the sympathy of all. Funeral services were in charge of Elders E. B. Hull and Virgil Etzenhouser, with sermon by George S. Lincoln.

Our meetings are well attended, and we often have visitors. Last Sunday we had with us a sailor boy, Brother H. C. Valentine, from Philadelphia. He is on the Colorado.

We have been preaching by Elder Virgil Etzenhouser, C. Hawley from Oakland, H. E. Simpson, J. A. Saxe, George S. Lincoln, and Emery Parks.

The choir is doing good work in uplifting the members and inspiring the speakers. The Religion and Sunday school are also doing well. A good spirit prevails in the branch.
Sherrill, New York

February 3.—While the membership is small, the going and coming during the summer affects the attendance in Sherrill as in larger places. For Children's Day in June our people spent the day in Syracuse, and the program was given by the two schools. We like to visit Syracuse and like Syracuse to visit us. In October we had a successful chicken supper at the Comfort Home, under the auspices of the Department of Women. A roast pork supper held at Sister Dunn's shortly before was not so well patronized, there being too many other affairs on at the same time.

The conference at Syracuse was held in October, mention of which was made in a recent HERALD by the Syracuse correspondent. The program for conference arranged by our district president, Doctor Weegar, was worth while, as were all the programs followed at the two-day meetings at Rochester, Sherrill, Fulton, Greenwood, and Niagara Falls. Owing to an infantile paralysis scare here, our institute was postponed from September 6 to October 18. The ground was well canvassed, the points well made; it remains to be seen how much we all profited by it. All departments are working but not to their full capacity. Brother James Pycock arrived the night of the first date set for institute, not having heard of the postponement. He preached for us next day, both morning and evening, we holding our sacramental service prior to evening service.

The day before Thanksgiving we held an apron and food sale at the Sherrill drug store. It made a strenuous day coupled with Thanksgiving dinner preparations, but the receipts warranted the effort. Some friends not of the church as usual assisted us. Donations from a Malone sister and a sister in Ticonderoga were gratefully received. Owing to the depression in business, funds for payments on our church debt have not been forthcoming. Our Department of Women sent out baskets of fruit, nuts, cake, and candy to several shut-ins for Christmas. Besides helping to make ends meet financially, the Department of Women have done some study work, trying Old Testament and then Farrar's life of Christ.

Our Sunday school held Christmas exercises and tree on Christmas Eve. The children did very nicely, and the decorating committee made our little church look pretty.

We have elected our officers for the branch and all departments during January, the branch remaining practically the same, only three of the priesthood to act: President, F. C. Mesle; Elder Floyd Rathbun, still of the branch, but removed with his family to Morrisville, acting as the priest; and J. O. Montgomery, deacon. Sunday school is presided over by Sister Agnes Comfort. We also continued her as our Department of Women president. Sister Effie Dunn is chorister for church services and Religion. Sister Esther Montgomery is home from New Haven, Connecticut, a full-fledged nurse. She plays the organ for us in Sunday school and teaches the primary class, also sings alone sometimes. Sister Zetta Montgomery heads the Department of Recreation and Expression. We are studying the Book of Mormon. We were to have had a sleighride party and general good time last Saturday, but we were hindered by a snowstorm which arrived on Thursday night, said to be the worst since 1888. Our local trolley line is still buried in snow and bids to remain so for some time. The horse becomes a necessity now in city and hamlet. Utica and Syracuse are both in similar condition, and no connection by third rail between the two cities this the fifth day.

We were hoping we might have a call from President Smith while he was in the East. We like to show our friends our city and the plant of the renowned Community Plate, and we like to show our Sherrill friends some of our representative church people.

On the first Sunday night in January, our Oneida Indian girl friend, Elsie Elms, gave her lecture in the new Methodist church, the opening and closing act under the auspices of the Queen Esther Circle. We attended and felt proud of Elsie. We sort of feel she belongs to us. She was accompanied at the piano by Sister Ada Davison, coming from Syracuse with her. The Methodist minister invited our pastor, Brother Mesle, into the pulpit to make the opening and closing prayer. This pleased Elsie and all, needless to say.

We expect Brother A. E. Stone this week, being in Syracuse at present, his trip to Sherrill being delayed by his being called to Brooklyn for the funeral of Sister Squire's mother.

We have a city paper since last summer, the Sherrill Sentinel. Notice of services appear in it each week, and an occasional extra write-up. We get treated very kindly by the press; are on good terms with all the reporters. A brother to Sister Elizabeth Butler of New Bedford spent the day with us a week ago last Sunday; we hope he can settle in Sherrill later on. He is not a member of the church, but is friendly, and his mother who died lately belonged as well as his sisters.

Modesto, California

February 2.—Since the last report the Saints here have been progressing in a fine manner. Attendance seems to be increasing, and all departments are doing splendidly. Sister Lottie B. Rose is in charge of the Department of Recreation and Expression, and Brother A. E. Frazier is superintendent of the Sunday school. The Department of Women is making a special effort to raise money for the church debt, and all are cooperating splendidly. The Department of Music, under the direction of Sister Anna Howe, is doing good work, and the junior choir will soon renew their activities. There has been some sickness in the branch, but all are recovering.

Modesto was recently visited by Apostle Roy S. Budd, who gave a very fine and instructive sermon.

Brother E. B. Hull is expected to be with this branch for a while to see if the warmer climate will improve his health. It is drier here than in San Francisco.

All are working together for the advancement of the work in this place, and we hope to make a great improvement this year.

Tabor, Iowa

Two of the distinctive features of Tabor are its wonderful park and the college. The park is one of the finest in southwestern Iowa. John Brown camped at this place during his proslavery activities, in commemoration of which, in the northwestern corner, stands a large tablet with his name and the date of his encampment upon it. The park is called “The John Brown Park.”

The college has a sightly location across the street from the park, which serves as its playground. The college is under auspices of the Congregational Church of southwestern Iowa; and the pastor and president of the college, Doctor McCleod, we have found to be above the average in friendliness. On different occasions he has asked Brother A. M. Chase to occupy the ten o'clock chapel hour in talking to the students, and last week, in his absence, he asked Brother Chase to conduct his Bible class one day.

Our Sunday school is gaining in numbers and interest. It has now two capable sisters in charge of the cradle roll and

the home class work. A regular teachers' and workers' meeting is held, in which Sunday school business and problems are discussed and institute work conducted. We have a Bible normal class at our home Tuesday evenings, at the conclusion of which recreational stunts and light refreshments are enjoyed.

District President A. M. Chase is instituting a system of changing pulpits with the local pastors of the district, and although the roads for some time have been almost impassable, this change was made last Sunday with Brother Charles Forney of Thurman, which seemed to be appreciated by both congregations. Our little Overland had to pull us through quite early, as my mission was especially in the interests of the Sunday school work. Brother Mark Leckha has this work in charge at Thurman and is deserving of great credit for the capable way in which he keeps this Sunday school alive and active. MRS. ELIZABETH CHASE.

Independence

Ten Are Ordained

An ordination meeting was held in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church at half past two Sunday afternoon, during which those who were recommended for ordination on January 5 presented themselves. This meeting was carefully planned to add dignity and solemnity in keeping with this sacred ordinance, and after the opening exercises in charge of Pastor C. Ed Miller, the work of setting these men apart for their offices was placed in the hands of President Elbert A. Smith.

President Smith offered a dedication prayer in which he presented the men as consecrating their lives to God and his work and accepting the high responsibility of ministers for Christ—a very impressive and simple prayer. Pastor C. Ed Miller offered the charge to the men, and the following named were ordained to the offices designated: John H. Miller, elder; Elmer Pie, Glen Davies, F. W. Chappelow, Marion Schafer, priests; Henry A. Moriarty, sr., Everett Bowen, Samuel Edmunds, Delbert McClain, and Douglas Byrne, deacons, by various elders called to do the work by President Elbert A. Smith.

Special music was furnished in the form of sacred songs by the ladies’ quartet of Second Independence church, and the occasion will long be remembered as one of refined spirituality and dignified simplicity.

Stone Church

It has been arranged to broadcast a “vesper service” from the new station each Sunday evening at five o'clock, which promises to be a decided success. It is planned to make these programs distinctly Latter Day Saint, in which our own music and musicians are to be used as far as possible. Most of the time will be given to music, chiefly our hymns, with a short talk on some subject of vital interest to the Saints. The first service was broadcast last Sunday and many favorable reports have already been received.

One hundred seven attended the junior church service last Sunday in the basement of the Stone Church. One of the most interesting features of the program was a talk to the children by Sister Emma Burton, in which she told of receiving a visit from one of the three Nephites when she was a child of ten. These programs are always interesting and should be, largely attended by the young people.

At eleven o'clock on February 15 Elder J. A. Dowker continued his series of Sunday morning sermons, using repentance for his subject at this time.

Brother L. E. Hills was present in the evening and gave an exceptionally fine talk on “The Message to the Jews.” The Saints appreciated having Brother Hills with them and hope to hear more from him in the future.

Second Church

More than ten per cent of the entire membership meets as a young people’s prayer meeting each Sunday morning. Sometimes this attendance runs as high as seventeen per cent. This makes a splendid percentage when calculated on the basis of the young membership.

The junior meeting in the lower auditorium at eleven o'clock is a successful movement, and is now in its third year. Brother F. W. Chappelow will address the juniors next Sunday.

At eleven o'clock Sunday Elder J. W. A. Bailey preached a powerful sermon on the theme of freedom in the truth. In the evening the sermon was delivered by Apostle J. F. Curtis, and the main floor was entirely filled and some were located in the balcony. Both sermons were given the best of attention and were enjoyed.

Brother W. V. Greene is to be the speaker at eleven o'clock on February 22.

The priesthood was added to Sunday by the ordination of F. W. Chappelow and Glen Davies as priests; Samuel Edmunds as deacon; J. H. Miller, who was a teacher, as elder. A meeting of the priesthood will occur Sunday at six o'clock in the evening.

Walnut Park

Pastor Glaud A. Smith was the morning speaker, giving his preferred definition of religion—“the love of God in the soul of man,” and enlarging on the subject in his usual plain and helpful way.

In the evening Bishop Mark H. Siegfried preached, impressing his hearers with the great need of our being awake and ready to answer to the extent of our abilities to calls for help in various ways in the church.

East Independence

There was a large attendance at the services Sunday morning. It had been announced before that the deacons would speak at this time. Talks were made regarding the financial condition of the branch, and it was decided by a unanimous vote to adopt the card system and thus let the deacons know what could be expected of each family.

The choir, instead of meeting at the church for practice, is trying the plan of meeting at some of the homes. Their object is to try to get more interest in the choir work.

Brother J. J. Teeters was the speaker Sunday evening.
Not so many were in attendance, but all enjoyed the sermon. At the midweek prayer service a good spirit prevailed, and the Saints felt strengthened.

Englewood

Sunday morning the Saints of this congregation were visited by Brother George Harrington, who gave a most pleasing sermon. In the evening we had the privilege of hearing Brother J. A. Roberts.

The women did not meet for class work last week because of the illness of their teacher, Sister Mollie Davis. Work will be resumed after this week.

The prayer meetings on Wednesday night have again been taken to the church, thinking thus to increase attendance. Attendance is not very good yet, but it is hoped that renewed interest may be awakened.

Spring Branch

On last Friday evening Pastor C. Ed Miller gave an illustrated lecture, using slides of southern California scenery, which was very fine. After the pictures all joined in a Valentine party. Delicious refreshments were served, and a general good time was had by all.

On Sunday night, February 8, Brother Charles Edmunds was to have addressed the Saints, but because of bad weather there were not enough present to hold services, so Brother Edmunds came back and preached Sunday morning on the 15th. His sermon was exceptionally good. The day was fine, so a large crowd was present to hear him.

The women of this group meet every Wednesday at the home of Sister Waterman for the study of Mothercraft, with good interest and attendance. Our numbers are increasing because of families continually moving into the vicinity.

Holden Stake

Atherton

Last Sunday the morning hour was filled by Brother D. R. Hughes. In the evening we had Bishop A. B. Phillips, who gave us a splendid sermon. He was accompanied by Brother and Sister B. C. Harder of Independence. Sister Harder very beautifully sang a solo, "My task," which was in keeping with Brother Phillips' sermon.

The Saints were made to rejoice on January 11, when Brother R. D. Weaver spoke both morning and evening. We have had with us since the beginning of the year Brother Worth, Brother Self, and Brother C. B. Hartshorn of Independence.

Brother William Ware and family, formerly of Woodbine, Iowa, have recently moved into the house vacated by Brother Schwab, Brother Ware holds the office of priest. We welcome him in our midst.

Lexington

We have had some wonderful meetings of late on account of the great manifestations of the Spirit of God, which has been with us. Our sacramental service on February 1 was a spiritual feast to all present. The voice of the Spirit being heard to the consolation and blessing of the Saints. Brother R. E. Burgess was present at this meeting and was the speaker at the evening hour. On Friday evening, Mrs. S. G. Shickles was baptized by J. A. Brendel and confirmed by J. E. Johnson and J. A. Brendel. On February 8, Miss Glena Orndoff was baptized by W. T. Beard and confirmed by J. A. Brendel and J. E. Johnson. This makes a membership of one hundred and thirty-five.

Brother D. J. Krahl was with us since our last items, and his stay was enjoyed.

Sister W. W. Snell has returned home from the Sanitarium, where she underwent an operation.

Brother Finis Beebe was the speaker at the morning hour February 8, and the pastor, Brother Brendel, at night.

Buckner and Sibley

The Saints at Buckner and Sibley are striving to let their light shine and prepare for the coming of the Lord, who has often acknowledged us as his children by words of cheer, instruction, and correction, for which we are very thankful.

The interest and attendance at our meetings are much better than ever before. We hope to go on and prepare for the coming of our Lord. That we may have oil in our lamps at that time is our hope and prayer.

Brother A. H. Parsons was the speaker Sunday morning. The pastor, Brother R. B. Cook, occupied in the afternoon at Sibley.

Kansas City Stake Items

Armourdale

Patriarch Ammon White held a series of meetings commencing January 19 and continuing for six nights. The interest was fairly good, and as a result the Saints seem to be strengthened for the year's work.

On January 25 Patriarch H. O. Smith made a good talk on the subject of virtue, and on Tuesday evening Brother E. A. Curtis was the speaker. At half past seven on Wednesday Patriarch F. A. Smith gave one of his characteristic sermons.

On the 25th Sister Roy E. Newkirk organized our girls into a Temple Builder chapter, with Cecil Routh as their leader.

Since the first of the year the enrollment of the Sunday school has increased from 88 to 100.

The Department of Women is very active, and the outlook is bright for the coming year in Armourdale.

Fourth Kansas City

Speakers of late have been Elders Ira G. Cluter and Thomas Newton, Patriarch Ammon White, and Pastor J. O. Worden.

We had a splendid first Sunday, and the following pace was set for attendance: Sunday school, 119; sacrament, 119; Religio, 110; evening service, 150.

An unusually fine program was given the evening of February 4, when the Walnut Park orchestra gave a concert. It made the people here want an orchestra, so the chairman of the music department is busy organizing available forces.

It is the plan to make the first Sunday in the month a special day. In addition to the morning sacrament there will be something especially attractive for the evening services. The music department will provide a song service at a quarter of eight, which has been appreciated and well attended in the past.

Quindaro

At the recent series of meetings held by Brother W. I. Fligg they had a very successful and spiritual experience. The crowds and interest were fine all through, and as many as forty-five outsiders were counted at one meeting. The work received the best advertising, and many expressed the belief that this was the best series of meetings ever held there.

The good among the Saints cannot be told in words. Old sores were healed, bridges of differences were gone over and made right, and the departments with new heads are united for work. There were five baptisms after the series last Sunday night, and Brother John Tucker baptized one more.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Brother Fligg is starting a series now at Group 2, and expects to continue the rest of the month. He hopes February will be as successful as January has been.

Grandview

The choir from Central Church repeated their Christmas cantata, "The Prince of Peace," for us the evening of January 18. The soloists were Mrs. Alice Smeeton, Mrs. Helen Dunn, Mrs. Stella Moore, Miss Marecne Blankenship, Miss Straceey Edwards, Clayton Wolfe, and Fields Jones. The choir and their leader, Mr. Dunn, are to be highly praised for the beautiful program.

On January 25 we had the pleasure of hearing Apostle J. F. Curtis, who has just returned from the old country. He told us something of Palestine and its people. We await with interest another visit from him in order to hear more of that country.

Bishop F. B. Blair delivered a splendid sermon Sunday evening and then gave a report of our financial standing. After all expenses were paid we had quite a sum to apply on our building fund. We hope to do still better in 1925.

The kodak department, under the direction of Brother Shippey, took its first outing and motored to Swope Park Sunday afternoon. They reported a splendid time and a profitable trip.

Bennington

The Sentinels of Zion Class in the Sunday school is giving a supper and entertainment in connection with the religious work to work up a greater interest among our people.

Bennington is trying to get all the different heads of departments to working again. The pastor, Brother Goold, is back again after his accident.

We have had with us Brothers F. A. Smith and J. A. Gillen this month, both of them giving interesting and inspiring sermons.

Graceland Chats

Graceland's museum attracts immediate attention of visitors because of its unusual and valuable display. For a small college the museum is rich, and the variety is exceptional. A visitor during the agricultural short course appreciated our collection and presented an offering of old coins from different countries—United States, Canada, Mexico, and Italy. The college will thus remember Mr. John Ledgerwood.

The library has been remembered, too, and that by a Lamoni man. Representative Oscar Anderson presented the college with a complete set of Senate and House Journals which will be of especial benefit to candidates for State teachers' certificates, since the law requires all teachers to have a course in national and state government. Brother Anderson will not likely forget Graceland should other opportunities present themselves to benefit her.

Professor Roy Mortimore is seldom missing from his post of duty in the classroom, but last week was spent by him in Independence packing the X-ray machine donated by the Sanitarium to Graceland. Brother Mortimore appreciates the value of any addition to the college equipment and especially of this addition to his own department.

The basketball boys, not to be outdone by anyone, have been giving the college some fine records in winning games. One from Saint Joseph Junior College, one from Park College, and one from Kansas City University.

Miss Lulu Porter, of the domestic science department, spent the week in Ames, being accompanied by Miss Blanche Edwards, of the Department of Women. They attended the short course in home economics. Business Manager N. Ray Carmichael was also a visitor at the State Agricultural College, taking in the annual agriculture short course on Friday and Saturday.

The declamatory contest has been the cause of much personal perturbation and society anxiety, about forty students entering the preliminary race. The try-outs relieved the extreme anxiety of all participants but six. Their time is to come later. Those winning out for the final contest are: Dramatic, Florence Juergens, Alpha Pi Sigma; Hazel Shank, Alpha Pi Sigma; Velva Williamson, Kappa Delta. Humorous, Loren Cochran, Alpha Pi Sigma; George Gates, Alpha Pi Sigma; Oscar O'urth, Niketes. Oratorical, Frank Holmes, Alpha Pi Sigma; Bertram Lewis, Niketes; and John Stage­man, Alphi Pi Sigma.

Sometimes visitors run in for the week-end. Among those late were Brother Keith Harder and wife, Myra Nelson Harder, and Miss Betty Maxwell, and Pauline Roberts of Ames.

On Thursday, February 12, Miss Mildred Cheville, a student staying at Patrones Hall, became suddenly ill and was hurried to Leon for special care, but life went out before the day was done. The body was brought back and lay in state for two hours at the White-Smith undertaking parlors; then it was placed in the chapel, where but lately Mildred's sweet spirit had worshiped with this beloved group. The rich velvet curtains around the white draped platform for the first time were background for a dead student. Hushed and saddened the students and faculty gathered in the sacred place, where white and still she lay in her narrow couch, while the A Capella Chorus sang sweet old hymns and Miss Ruth Fisher read "Sometime." This was followed by prayer by President F. M. McDowell, and then resolutions of sympathy and love and hope were read, the students standing for one moment in silent prayer at the close, attesting their sincere approval. Again the melody of the A Capella Chorus and the voice of benediction by Elder Lonzo Jones. Mildred's casket was then borne by six fellow students down the aisle and out in the February sunshine, followed by her brother, Elder Roy Cheville, with his friend, Allan Houghton. Brother Houghton accompanied Brother Cheville on his sad journey to the home in Rhodes, Iowa.

The parents drove down at all possible speed, but were too late. They immediately returned, leaving the college people this opportunity to express their love and respect for Mildred and their love and sympathy for Roy and the other members of the family.

Such events are sad, but the school feels the sanctifying influence, as if angels had passed in song where death's sable niche in the places that have known them, and a hope, sweet and eternal, of a future reunion with them.

Fred and Henry Moore, in their fifteenth and sixteenth years, write from Texarkana, Arkansas and Texas, 1518 Jefferson Street, as to the need of a church in that city. They say: "This is a large twin city, very much in need of a church building. It has more small factories than any other town of its size. We are asking all members to donate one dollar for the construction of this church. One person promises to give one hundred dollars in the future. By the help of God, we hope to carry out our plans. Pray for us, that with the help of God, we may have a church."

HERALD, January 10, 1923, we find the same general thought:

Loyalty to Jesus Christ demands loyalty to his organization. Is not this logical? And since loyalty to the organization that Christ placed upon the earth is demanded of us, the next thing follows as an inevitable consequence, that it also demands loyalty to those who carry the responsibility in that organization. And that loyalty can consistently and justly be demanded by those who are carrying the burden of standing as representatives of Christ and taking the responsibility of working in his organization.

Loyalty to Be Maintained Must Be Reciprocal

We find this expression running through the writings of President Smith throughout the years. Is it not possible that there is a legitimate reason for the conditions which our brother complains of? I wonder if I shall be considered guilty of les majeste if I quote from a modern writer on this point! I do so in the spirit of Christian cooperation and solely with a helpful spirit:

A great manufacturer in New York City complained about his assistants, "Why is it, I wonder, I have never been able to achieve loyalty in my organization?" And he went on to tell about men after whom he had paid great salaries—sometimes as much as $50,000 a year—who had proved disloyal to him in the end. One could not have the heart to tell that man the truth—it would have done no good—he was too old. But the answer is perfectly plain. He himself has been essentially disloyal. He hired men, paid them highly, looked upon them with suspicion, and tossed them out. How could he expect them to grant him loyalty when he had none to give? For as surely as the sun rises you will in general surround yourself with men in whom you will find the qualities you have in yourself.—American Magazine for August, 1922.

I use this in no partisan sense. I am conscious of the indictment it places on the whole group. It does point a moral and suggest how loyalty may be maintained. Another quotation will not be amiss here. This is also taken from the American Magazine. The article is by Edward W. Decker:

One of the things I like to see is a man at the head of a business with a lot of strong men around him. If a man will not select strong assistants, possibly for fear they will displace him or not do as he says, he is not a big enough man to be the head of a big business. Strong men will not always do just as they are told, to be sure. But it is not easy to run a business to-day with a convention of parrots. In a vigorous, growing organization, a great many important decisions have to be left to men in subordinate positions. You can't have a healthy big business in any other way.

And this man expresses the universal experience of the ages. And this is the reason why supreme directional control will not work. In his sermon on loyalty, President Smith continues:

When the Son of Man cometh again, he will find on the earth a body of people loyal to his ideals and organization, following those leaders that have been placed in positions of responsibility?

The great desideratum for the coming of Jesus Christ is not a group of people incapable of self-determination and incompetent of self-discipline and dominated by some master mind, but rather it is a body of men and women intelligently carrying out the teachings of Jesus Christ and working together as freemen—fellow comrades for the ushering in of the kingdom of God. It is not a monarchy where one commands and the rest obey, but a fellowship where voluntary service dominates the group and is the criterion of all action. It is not an army where one must "do or die, nor ask the question why," but a brotherhood where men lovingly work together without constraint. It is not an organization of superior and subordinates, but equals working hand in hand for Zion's weal.

In the Stead of Jesus Christ

Our brother goes much farther in the elucidation of his thesis and suggests that the President of the church is the physical representation and official embodiment of Jesus Christ. He says:

Hence Christ, being not in our midst to lead us in person, has delegated the leadership to others, and loyalty to Christ will demand that we shall be loyal to the leaders that he has appointed. So when these leaders are trying to lead us towards Zion and we can realize that Christ is Zion, and that Zion will be the social expression of Christ, then we have no place for disloyalty to Christly leaders. ... To revolt against properly instituted leaders at the instigation of self-appointed or aspiring leaders is not independence, it is not safety, but it is just the opposite of both.

This, we believe, is assuming far too much for any man. Jesus Christ still leads. He has not abdicated. The President of the church does not take the place of Jesus Christ on earth. Jesus said the Comforter should come and be the manifestation of God in the flesh after Jesus departed. And it is the Comforter which is to guide us into all truth, not any man.

Position of the Open Letter Group

I feel safe in saying that there is no disposition on the part of the Open Letter group to deny to the Presidency every right and prerogative and power guaranteed in the divine plan. We believe that the leading officials of the church should possess large powers of execution and thus be free to carry out the measures instituted by the body. But there must be coordination of effort. There must be interdependence of quorums and all officials. We must observe the checks and counter checks provided for in the law. The people must constitute a part of the government of the church. And the priesthood must be in very deed the servants of God and the people.
For priesthood is the point where the mind of God and the will of the people converge. The only power which any man holding the priesthood should ever exercise is that of a gardener who will assist but never suppress expression.

In order that we may further elucidate this doctrine I will now present the following question, which was propounded to President Smith in July, 1924, and his reply:

Question: Section 104:42 reads as follows: "And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and be like unto Moses."

Would it be correct to interpret the above as meaning that all other offices, officers, quorums, departments, etc., are subordinate to the president of the high priesthood, and that in case of any difference of opinion between officers, quorums, or departments, in the course of the administration of their work, that the chief officer, or the president of the high priesthood shall have the final word or decision in all cases? Would not this method, in your opinion, make for organic solidarity?

Answer: I am quite disposed to think that you have reached a right conclusion in regard to 104:42. You will also find in the HERALD for June 18 that the Joint (Advisory) Council practically takes the same attitude.

President Absolute in Administration

In President Smith's address published in the SAINTS' HERALD for March 3, 1920, he speaks thus of administration:

If Zion is to be redeemed, if Zion is to be established, it is going to demand a strongly centralized government. I say that advisedly. I would like to burn that into the heart of every Latter Day Saint. It is going to take a strongly organized, strongly centralized government.

After outlining the position of the church in regard to the rights of the people to pass upon revelations, he proceeds to state that this centralization shall be absolute.

You determine what are the laws that he executes, even if he becomes absolute in his power as administrator of the law.

May I ask that the reader carefully consider the propositions set forth by President Smith and then compare with the provisions of the law as set forth in the standard books of the church?

T. W. Williams.

This year's annual convention of the Religious Education Association will be held in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, April 22 to 25, and the main theme is to be, "Religious education and religious experience." An attempt will be made to determine whether the newer types of religious education can produce a religious experience commensurate with the production of the older types.
MISCELLANEOUS

Appointment of General Church Auditor
Owing to the resignation of Brother A. H. Knowlton as General Church Auditor, the First Presidency desires to announce the appointment of Brother G. W. Eastwood to succeed Brother Knowlton in this office. All concerned will please take notice.

The FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Day of Fasting and Prayer
To the Saints of the Kewanee District, Greeting: The Saints of the Kewanee District are asked to join us in observing Sunday, March 1, as a day of fasting and prayer in behalf of the coming General Conference, petitioning the Lord in behalf of his church, that his Spirit may be present to direct the activities of the conference. E. R. Davis, district president.

Notice of Appointment
It being necessary to accept the resignation of Floyd Burt, secretary of the Central Michigan District Sunday school, because of his leaving the district to attend college, Sister G. E. Burt, 2000 Clinton Street, Saginaw, Michigan, has been appointed secretary for the balance of the conference year. G. C. Tomlinson, sr., superintendent.

Ministerial Conference
To the Priesthood of Detroit District: The regular ministerial conference of the district will be held at Pontiac, Sunday, March 1. Prayer meeting at 8:30, quorum sessions at 10:30, mass conference at 2:15. Apostle E. J. Gleazer will be present and will preach the closing sermon at 7 p.m. Places have been provided for the meeting of the quorums. Branch presidents are asked to postpone the sacramental service of March to March 8, because of this conference. The brethren from other districts are invited to meet with us. M. W. Linton, district president.

Conference Notices
Southern New England, at Somerville, Massachusetts, March 14 and 15. Reports of district offices and branch secretaries should be in hands of secretary by March 1.

Election of officers and delegates to General Conference. Susan E. Sinclair, district secretary, 166 Pearl Street, Winter Hill 45, Massachusetts.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Saturday and Sunday, March 14 and 15. The main items of business will be the election of all officers and delegates to General Conference. All reports should be sent to the district secretary promptly. Business for Sunday school and the Department of Recreation will be transacted at this time. First meeting Saturday at 3 o'clock. J. A. Jaques, district president, 1424 Alton Street, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Far West Stake, at Saint Joseph, Seventh and Farson Streets, beginning at 8 p.m. Thursday, March 5, lasting over Sunday. Election of General Conference delegates at 3 p.m. Friday, March 6. O. Salisbury, stake president.

General Conference Reception and Entertainment Committee
We wish to announce that Bishop J. A. Becker and Elder C. Edward Miller have been appointed as a committee to provide for lodging and entertainment of visitors attending the General Conference. We urge you to make application to this committee, at the earliest time practicable, for such accommodations as you will need.

The FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Young People's Convention
Central Michigan, at Midland, February 28 and March 1. Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elder J. R. Grice will be with us. Everybody is welcome; no age limit. Otto Bartlett, Box 1153, Midland, Michigan.

For Holden Home
The matron of Holden Home, Sister Edith Carr, tells us that a number have expressed a desire to make things for the Home if they knew what could be used and what was most needed. We take this means to advise the Saints for her that the greatest need of the Home at the present time is for pillowcases and sheets. The latter should be 92x72 or 93x71 inches.

If individuals or groups of Department of Women workers wish to assist the Home in the manner suggested, they should mail the articles direct to the Holden Home, Holden, Missouri.

B. R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Educational Conference
New York, at Buffalo, March 14 and 15. Delegates to General Conference will be elected. Anna M. Lloyd, district secretary, 164 Congress Street, Buffalo, New York; P. L. Weegar, president, 1721 Main Street, Buffalo, New York.

The Controversy Over Church Government

More than ten months have gone since the document on church government was adopted by a council convened at Independence.

At once the discussion of the document began, and for almost nine months this discussion has been carried forward in the columns of the SAINTS’ HERALD. It would seem this is a long time for the discussion of one subject, but the justification lies in the far-reaching points of doctrine involved, and the wide range it has been necessary to cover.

Some contributions have been denied entrance to the columns because of their relative lack of importance; and a very few because the matter was not of a nature which was proper or just to present to the body of the church. Again, precedence has been given to contributors because of their official position—principals to the discussion have been given preference to some extent. Some also have not gained publication because of lack of literary quality in the presentation of their arguments.

It has been the object of the editor to get the principals to the discussion to present the most important points and fundamental principles, and there has been sufficient time in which to present the cause of each.

Now that there are but five issues of the HERALD to come before April 6, and there has been such abundant opportunity for the presentation of evidence, we are going to ask that no new matter be presented later than March 6, for publication in the issue of March 11. Three numbers will then be reserved for rebuttal before the date of the opening of General Conference.

As during the entire discussion, we shall endeavor to put forward the best from each side of the question. We request those who expect to use space to be very careful to economize, for we shall be compelled to deny space to many, it is likely.

No new matter will be permitted publication after March 11. Govern yourselves accordingly.

RICHARD J. LAMBERT.

Approve Radio Vesper Services

The new five o’clock Sunday radio cast schedule has met immediate enthusiastic response. Many reports have come to the radio department since the broadcasting of the first radio vespers service on February 15.

Nonmembers as well as Latter Day Saints enjoyed the hymns of Zion sung by a mixed quartet composed of Sisters I. A. Smith and Josephine Smith, and Brethren George Anway and Frank A. Russell. The violin and piano numbers by Sisters Lillian Green and Pauline Becker Etzenhouser were also well received. The talk by Elder Ralph W. Farrell has been the subject of much favorable comment. “F. M. S.” announced the numbers and “K L D S, of Missouri, at Independence.”

Interference from other stations using wave lengths similar to K L D S was reported less than at any other broadcasting schedule. The hour chosen seems to have been the best that could be selected under present conditions.

In response to the announcement that request numbers would be sung on future vespers schedules a number of listeners-in have sent in the names of their favorite hymns that they want to hear from K L D S.

It is impossible to print all the reports received on the first radio vesper service, but a few of the representative ones follow.

Bevier, Missouri.—I was waiting for you when you came on the air yesterday at 5 p.m. The program came in fine right up to the end of Brother Farrell’s sermonet and part of the hymn, “God is marshaling his army.” Then W B C N, Chicago, 266 wave and 500 watts, came in, and I could not get either of you. W B C N came on at 5:30. The quartet singing was very good and the selections the best ever. I believe more of this kind of programs will be appreciated by all the radio fans. I was intimately acquainted with both the writer and composer of “One hour with Jesus.” John L. Morgan was one of my old pals, and what little I know about music, he taught me. He was a natural musician; could play the organ, piano, violin, and any instrument in the band or orchestra, and could read and write music as easily as some can read a book or paper. He wrote many compositions. Father and he took great delight in composing music. Father has six hymns in the Hymnal, one in the Praises, and about twenty in the old Harmony. Both father and Morgan were coal miners and often wrote music on the back of a miner's shovel, or on a piece of slate in the mines. Both are now deceased. I would like to hear your quartet sing No. 81 in the Praises, "The Lord knows why." I listen in about every time you are on the air, but there is such an awful lot of interference that I get very little of your programs.—J. L. Williams.

Mount Washington, Missouri.—Your five o'clock program yesterday came in fine. It was the best we ever got over our little crystal set. We heard it better than any of the stations in the city. The K L D S quartet was great. Let us have more from it.—Mr. and Mrs. John Masters.

Rhodes, Iowa.—I heard part of your vesper service this evening and enjoyed it very much. The quartet was fine, and F. M. Smith's voice came in clear and strong when he announced. Hear your 7.30 p. m. service with remarkable clearness. Brother Harrington's talk on health was excellent. I enjoy your programs very, very much and send my wishes and thanks to all who take part in them. Am anxious for the new 1000-watt station to get in full operation, as I am sure we will be able to hear you with less interference.—Odessa Hampton.

Saint Joseph, Missouri.—Just now we are enjoying the song by McCullough, to the tune of "Aloha Oe." We heard the church service this morning and enjoyed it immensely. The sermon by Ralph Farrell was inspiring. We have listened to church services from Omaha, Kansas City, Des Moines, Chicago, and other stations, but none have as yet compared to those broadcast by K L D S. We get Lamoni, but find it more difficult to get them than Independence, and I enjoy your programs very much, and send my best wishes and thanks to all who take part in them. Am anxious for the new 1000-watt station to get in full operation, as I am sure we will be able to hear you with less interference.—Odessa Hampton.

Kansas City, Missouri.—This evening at five o’clock I listened in on a homemade crystal set to your vesper service, and I surely did enjoy those old hymns. It was a feast of good things. It seems to me that sacred music is what we should hear over our K L D S radio. We just crave those old songs we so dearly love to hear. I could tell Brother F. M. Smith's voice very well. Yours for the good old sermons and songs to spread the precious gospel to the world over the radio.—Mrs. E. M. Beaman.

Bartlett, Iowa.—The first time in two months that we have had our Crosley, we tuned in and waited for you to come on the air, and how happy we were when we could hear, by careful tuning, K L D S. K F K U interfered until 5.30 p. m., then W B C N of Chicago. Brother F. M. Smith came in clear as a bell and could be heard all over the house on loudspeaker. Am sure that when you use the 1000 watts every thing will be O. K. at from 5 until 6 p. m. Your songs were fine. "Nearer, my God, to thee," was the only one we knew, and I could feel the power of God when that was sung. Could "Redeemer of Israel" be sung next Sunday? All the world will hear the truth.—Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Eyler.

The Government of the Church.—No. 4

SUPREME DIRECTIONAL CONTROL UNDER THE MICROSCOPE

Every man has the right of decision. The opinion of one man is entitled to the same respectful consideration as that of any other other. In contrasting men's views, personal honor is not necessarily involved. An otherwise good man may espouse an error. The determination, therefore, as to the verity of any proposition is by analysis and comparison.

At this juncture we wish to compare the statements of supreme directional control advocates with the wise and far-seeing utterances of the late Joseph Smith and leave the same, without personal aspersion, for the church membership to decide which, in their judgment, is the most wholesome and trustworthy. It would seem that if supreme directional control is right, then Joseph Smith was in error throughout his entire ministry. If Joseph Smith was right, then supreme directional control is wrong. Joseph Smith, has declared himself as against supreme directional control.

Supreme Directional Control Will Never Bring Unity

The advisory council has affirmed:

In organic expression and functioning there must be recognized grades of official prerogative and responsibility with supreme directional control resting in the Presidency.—SAINTS' HERALD, July 9, 1924.

In direct contrast with this we have the following clear statement from the pen of Joseph Smith:

If we ever get nearer together it must be by mutual bending towards each other. It must not be by an exercise of supreme authority, or anything of that kind. That will never bring us together.—Editorial SAINTS' HERALD, April 26, 1905.

Joseph Smith here states that the exercise of supreme authority will never bring us together. Frederick M. Smith, on the other hand, takes the position that supreme directional control resting in the Presidency is imperative to organic expression and functioning. Joseph Smith may have been wrong. Frederick M. Smith may be right. We suggest that Joseph Smith was president of the church for fifty years. Frederick M. Smith has been president for ten years. Experience should count for something. But which policy, dear reader, do you think has been the most prolific in Christian progress and unity? Has there been more unity in the last ten years than in the former fifty? Let the records answer.

No Prophet, Seer, or Revelator Has Absolute Authority

Frederick M. Smith in 1920 made a vigorous and emphatic plea for a "strongly organized, strongly centralized government" and continued:
You determine what are the laws that he (the president) executes, even if he become absolute in his power as administrator of the law.—SAINTS' HERALD, March 3, 1920.

And Joseph Smith many years before anticipated and answered:

Hence he who undertakes to exercise authority by edict or force brings to his support the cringing hypocrite and coward, while he sows the seed of rebellion in the noblest and best of his fellows. His authority wanes, and no matter how justly nor righteously he may have become possessed of his authority, the government is impotent and must fall.—SAINTS' HERALD, September 28, 1898.

Second, the authority which directs in or stimulates to duty can never be arbitrary or absolute. To attempt such a thing can but result in failure. Absolute authority in either church or state was never vested in man by divine right. It has been exercised only to enslave and degrade. Examples of it in matters of state can be traced on every page of history where an absolute monarch has reigned. Its tendency in church is plainly visible in the East, in so far as it has been vested in the Pope at Rome; and in the West in so far as it was vested in Brigham Young.—EDITORIAL SAINTS' HERALD, September 28, 1898.

Again:

Absolute authority to dictate in matters of duty is a relic of the Dark Ages, and to enforce it is an impossibility—a sham; and the fabric built upon it has no foundation, and must therefore fall, for the reason that its products are rebels and not loyal subjects; and what is worst, causes the best and truest elements in the body to revolt.—SAINTS' HERALD, September 28, 1898.

The drawing of personal authority reins over free men is always fraught with danger. If drawn too tight they prove to be galling, the rule irritates and vexes, and those sought to be restrained by them, finally break from their control and refuse allegiance.—EDITORIAL, SAINTS' HERALD, July 28, 1897.

In the light of the foregoing are we going to allow the President of the church to “become absolute in his power as administrator of the law”? Let the General Conference give answer.

Authority Derived From God and the People

Elbert A. Smith in his editorial, “The true philosophy of church government,” ridicules the idea that in the church of Jesus Christ any authority is derived from the people, and concludes:

If we trace authority back to the congregation (to man, no matter how greatly augmented by numbers,) “it is of men.”—SAINTS' HERALD, October 29, 1924.

Joseph Smith, on the other hand, recognized that authority is derived from God and the people, and within the church this authority must converge. Here is his statement:

Each officer, and each quorum of officers, has always regarded the law of the Lord to be the rule to be observed, and has always been ready to answer to the church, the people, for the proper performance of duties performed by them in pursuance of the authority derived from the people as the body of Christ, the church.—EDITORIAL SAINTS' HERALD, September 28, 1898.

Right of the General Conference to Direct Officials

Frederick M. Smith has affirmed that General Conference, being legislative, should not presume to issue orders to any man or official.

Joseph Smith recognized the right of supervision and direction on the part of the General Conference of all official administrative work of the church and that no officer is exempt from review or direction.

Each officer and each quorum ... has always been ready to answer to the church, the people, for the proper performance of duties performed by them in pursuance of the authority derived from the people.—EDITORIAL SAINTS' HERALD, September 28, 1898.

An officer who seeks to exact more recognition than his office warrants will, in a short time, be likely to receive loss. Every organization, whether general, district, or branch, is greater in its entirety than in any one of its parts, and possesses the right to reverse or annul, at will, any procedure instituted by its parts without its consent.—EDITORIAL SAINTS' HERALD, March 20, 1895.

It is the privilege and duty of the organization to veto the movement of its president, should the movement be ill-advised or improper.—EDITORIAL SAINTS' HERALD, March 20, 1895.

A presiding officer is the servant of the body over which he presides. His duty is to execute the will of that body, and when he is no longer willing to do so, he should resign and thus permit the selection of one who has a better conception of such an official duty.—EDITORIAL SAINTS' HERALD, March 20, 1895.

Arbitrary Discipline a Menace to Liberty

The advisory council has said:

Organic solidarity is maintained only by effective discipline, which is consonant with the beneficent purposes of the church, but yet strongly enough administered to prevent the purposes of the organization being frustrated by individual caprice or rebellion.

The tying up of this declaration on discipline with the claim for supreme directional control has an ominous suggestion. The law of Christ provides for all necessary Christian discipline. And this is the only discipline contemplated by Jesus Christ. It has been urged that “the time has come to place the scourge in the hands of one who knows how to administer it.” There is no place for a “scourge” in the hands of any man in the church of Jesus Christ.

The lodging of the power of discipline in the hands of one man or quorum in the church is, in itself, an invasion of liberty and a dangerous procedure. It is an unjust exercise of authority and should be resisted. When men betray their trust or violate the law of God, there is ample provision made for redress. But to grant to the Presidency or President the right to discipline ministers by silencing them or by the use of any other form of official ban or restriction, without giving the individual an opportunity to appear before a proper court, to meet his accusers and, if possible, to establish his innocence, is subversive of right, inimical to justice, and a violation of the Christian ethic.
Joseph Smith clearly shows that austere authority or rigid disciplinary methods are prolific causes for rebellion. He expresses himself in the following direct and emphatic language:

Abuse of authority, or the usurpation of privileges not justly attaching to one in whom authority is vested, has brought as much woe and disorder into the world as unwarranted rebellion. Both are wrong, and should be suppressed. Rebellion against the just exercise of authority should receive no favor. Unjust exercise of authority should be resisted. They are equally dangerous to good government, and subversive of the best interests of society. He who rashly or unjustly exercises authority is a tyrant; he who submits is a slave. He who resists the proper exercise of authority is a rebel; he who condones it is a traitor.—Editorial SAINTS’ HERALD, April 6, 1898.

Supreme Directional Control an Invasion of the Organic Law

Our main argument against the doctrine of supreme directional control is that it is in direct conflict with the organic law as found in the standard books of the church. If the church adopts the document on church government, then it will be necessary to delete several of the revelations found in the Doctrine and Covenants.

The advisory council document provides for “supreme directional control resting in the Presidency.” F. M. Smith contends for a condition where the President “becomes absolute in his power as administrator of the law.” If the President is “absolute in his power as administrator” and the Presidency possess “supreme directional control,” then the position set forth in section 104 of the Doctrine and Covenants is certainly out of joint. We quote:

Three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church.

The twelve traveling councilors are called to be the twelve apostles, or special witnesses of the name of Christ, in all the world; thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling. And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned.

The seventy are also called to preach the gospel, and to be especial witnesses unto the Gentiles and in all the world, thus differing from other officers in the church in the duties of their calling; and they form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve especial witnesses or apostles, just named.

—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11

Joseph Smith, commenting on this, gives the following interpretation:

The Presidency, composed of three, who are presiding high priests, are also apostles, and in matters of grave importance to the church, coming within their administration, hold a similar jurisdiction to the Twelve and Seventy, so that in case of serious disagreement, or maladministration by either quorum, the safeguards of the church are provided for in the fact that the other two quorums may decide in opposition and overrule the one.—Editorial SAINTS’ HERALD, September 28, 1898.

In the Temple Lot Case Joseph Smith, under oath, gives the views of the church which were put forward as evidence that the Reorganized Church was the church in succession. If we were the church in succession because we held the views set forth by Joseph Smith, will we be the church in succession if we adopt the views of the advisory council which are in direct opposition? Let the General Conference answer. Joseph Smith testified:

Now there is one item of the law that requires or states, that the three leading quorums of the church have what may be called concurrent jurisdiction, and the decision by either one of them is equivalent to a decision by either of the others, thus exercising or maintaining a neutralizing power in cases of conflict, so that the rights of the people may be kept free from imposition by false doctrine or theory by anybody; and also in the rules of the Doctrine and Covenants, which require that matters of that importance shall be submitted for their action, for approval or disapproval, at the conferences held from time to time when they meet.—Plaintiff’s Abstract, p. 86.

Joseph Smith is right in saying that the law provides for concurrent jurisdiction. The word concurrent means:

Possessing joint or equal authority or claims. Existing or happening at the same time.

According to the foregoing the three quorums, Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy have “equal authority and power” as quorums, and this authority and power is concurrent. It is also inherent. It is in no sense contingent.

If the entire Quorum of Presidency was removed by death or transgression it would not lessen or abridge one whit the power and authority of the Twelve or Seventy. This power is held of right by each quorum and is not subject to abridgment or modification by the Presidency of the church. This power and authority is derived from God and the people.

If the Twelve and Seventy possess joint and equal authority with the Presidency, and if this exists concurrently as stated in the law, how say some among you that the Presidency possesses supreme directional control? The decision of one quorum is of equal importance and power with either of the other two quorums. Where two of these three quorums are agreed these can overrule the decision of the other. The Twelve and Seventy acting together can overrule the Presidency.

And please understand that this is not confined to legislation. This provision relates to administration. And this quorum right and power is always operative. And in all of the administrative work of the church should the Twelve and Seventy agree against any decision of the Presidency they could override and overrule the Presidency, and the Presidency would have to submit.

This is the law. It is clear and specific. And under the law supreme directional control is impossible. Concurrent jurisdiction by three quorums and supreme directional control by one quorum are directly opposite in their purpose and work. And while taking this position we recognize that the Presidency of the church possesses under the law large powers of administration which we are not disposed to controvert.

Are All Institutions With Two or More Heads, Monsters?

Elbert A. Smith makes merry and would laugh the Open Letter advocates out of court. He remarks:

Power of direction must be focused. Two or more heads belong to monsters, freaks of the zoo, or dragons of Revelation. The church in Revelation had one head, crowned with twelve stars. Her opponent that sought to destroy her and failed had seven heads. Too many heads.

It is a long, long way back to the Apostle Paul but, under the circumstances, I trust I will not give offense if I choose to accept the apostle's serious and impregnable statement in preference to this flippant and irreverent pleasantry of our brother. Paul wrote:

But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ; and that the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God.—1 Corinthians 11:3. And he Christ is the head of the body, the church.—Colossians 1:18.

Here we have God the head of Christ, and Christ the head of the church, and Christ the head of the man, and the man the head of the woman. Will our brother here exclaim, "Too many heads—monsters—freaks of the zoo"?

And are there not two personalities at least in the Godhead? And speaking of the divine government, does it not say that God is the head of Christ and Christ is the head of the church? And does this not give us two heads in the divine government? And though they are one, still there is more than one person.

Our brother continues:

I cannot think of the church having several heads, or even two heads, one to direct the temporal leg of the church, the other to direct the spiritual leg, and pray God they may not split the body.

The analogy is not apt. The thought, however, is in direct conflict with the Doctrine and Covenants which affirms:

There are two divisions or grand heads. One is the Melchizedec priesthood, and the other is the Aaronic or Levitical priesthood.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:2.

And the Doctrine and Covenants states that a literal descendant of Aaron has a legal right to the "presidency of this priesthood." And the law also provides that where there is no literal descendant, a high priest may be set apart to this office.

Edward Partridge was called to the bishopric in 1881. Joseph Smith in writing of him and his call said:

As Edward Partridge now appears, by revelation, as one of the heads of the church, I will give a sketch of his history.—Times and Seasons, vol. 4, p. 368.

The Open Letter says on this point:

The law recognizes two general divisions in the administrative work of the church—spiritual and temporal, and specifies "that the temporalities of the church are to be under the charge and care of the Bishopric." In temporal affairs the Bishop acts as trustee in trust for the church and is directly responsible to the General Conference.

This is fully in keeping with the law and is not to be laughed out of court by odious comparisons. And when we speak of more than one head or a division of responsibility, there is no intention to overlook the specific rights and prerogatives of each and every quorum in the church.

Recapitulation

1. The general church is greater than any of its parts.
2. The General Conference has the right to instruct and direct all the administrative officers of the church.
3. The General Conference can reverse or annul any administrative act of any officer in the church.
4. A presiding officer is the servant of the body.
5. The Twelve and Seventy possess concurrent administrative rights with the Presidency.
6. The Twelve and Seventy acting together can overrule and supersede any decision of the Presidency.
7. The Twelve and Seventy possess inherent authority and power.
8. Institutions do have more than one head, prominent men to the contrary notwithstanding.
9. The bishopric is the head of the temporalities of the church.
10. Supreme directional control will never bring unity.
11. Absolute authority in church or state was never vested in man by divine right.
12. Priesthood authority should not be arbitrary or absolute.
13. Absolute authority is a relic of the Dark Ages.
14. It is impossible to enforce absolute authority in the church of Jesus Christ.
15. No prophet, seer, or revelator under God ever exercised absolute authority.
16. Arbitrary discipline is a menace to liberty.
17. Arbitrary discipline is unjust and should be resisted.
18. To submit to the unjust exercise of authority is slavery.
19. Supreme directional control is in direct violation of the law.
20. Authority is derived from God and the people.

Executives in Church Government

It will doubtless be conceded by every person of normal mind that every government, civil or religious, must have properly designated executives to carry out the purposes of the law on which the government is based; and that the relative authority of these executives must be defined if orderly government is to be maintained. In other words, there must be different grades of administrative authority in a well-coordinated government. The church is sometimes called the government of God, because God is presumed to be at its head, gives the laws in general, and selects the administrative heads or chief executives. In the History of Joseph Smith, written by himself, the importance of these grades of office is mentioned:

Another subject of vital importance to the church, was the establishing the grades of the different quorums.—Millennial Star, 15: 840.

After explaining that the presidency of the Melchisedec high priesthood are over the church, and that "revelations of the mind and will of God to the church are to come through the Presidency," Joseph states:

A high priest, is a member of the same Melchisedec priesthood with the Presidency, but not of the same power or authority in the church.—Ibid.

Joseph then proceeds to explain why a bishop is taken from the high priesthood, in the following words:

A bishop is a high priest, and necessarily so, because he is to preside over that particular branch of the church affairs that is denominated the lesser priesthood, and because we have no direct lineal descendant of Aaron, to whom it would of right belong.—Ibid.

This fully agrees with the law of God to the church concerning the office of bishop, and in that law is found the provision that he must have counselors in order for him to act, unless he be a literal descendant of Aaron; but a literal descendant of Aaron can act without counselors, as follows:

But a literal descendant of Aaron has a legal right to the presidency of this (Aaronic) priesthood, to the keys of this ministry, to act in the office of bishop independently, without counselors, except in a case where a president of the high priesthood, after the order of Melchisedec, is tried; to sit as a judge in Israel.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 34.

If, then, a revelation should come to the church in which a literal descendant of Aaron should be designated as bishop, he would have the right to act in the office and exercise his authority as an executive without counselors. If his executive power were not subject to the directional control of the Presidency, his power would be much greater than that of the President, who must have counselors in order to fully exercise his responsible powers.

The Grades of the Quorums

Prior to the events previously mentioned, Joseph states that the several quorums met and "were organized according to their official standing in the church." After being thus organized, he states that resolutions were presented and passed upon by each quorum separately, beginning at the president of the deacons and his council, after which:

It was then thrown before the presidents of the several quorums, and their council, in the following order, and in the same manner as before: viz, the teachers, priests, bishop of Kirtland, bishop of Zion, elders, high priests, seventy, high council of Zion, high council of Kirtland, the twelve, and, lastly, into the hands of the presidency of the church, and all the quorums and received their unanimous sanction.—Millennial Star, 15: 647.

It will be seen that the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy are here placed in the reverse order of their importance as quorums, their official decisions being provided for in the law, as has been pointed out by various writers. The bishops also, being officers appointed to act in an Aaronic office, are placed between the elders and the priests.

"On the twenty-seventh of the same month (March, 1836), in the course of dedicatory and other meetings held in the temple at Kirtland, the matter of sustaining officers of the church was presented by Joseph. Concerning the sustaining of the bishopric he states:

I then called upon the quorums and congregation of saints to acknowledge and uphold by their prayers, the Bishops of Kirtland and Zion, and their counselors, in all the authority of the Aaronic Priesthood, which they did by rising.—Ibid., p. 710.

While the Millennial Star is not to be used as authority in church doctrine, the objection recently urged against quoting it is a mistaken one. It is entirely proper to quote it and show what the early church did, though only the three standard books of the church constitute its final authority as doctrine. The very quotation that was objected to is quoted in an editorial by one of the presidency in volume 40 of the HERALD. The work is also extensively quoted in our Church History, and by Joseph Smith and many other leading officials of the church. It is solely for lawful purposes that quotations from it are made, the facts there shown being in many cases very important and constituting one of our chief sources of church history.

Presidency Counsel and Direct Bishop

That the bishop should be counseled and directed by the general authorities as occasion requires is clearly shown both in the law and in the history of the early church. As late as 1909 this procedure continued to be recognized by the Lord, who gave...
Instructions in regard to carrying out the provisions of the law, as follows:

The bishop should be directed and authorized to proceed as soon as it shall be found practicable by consultation with the general authorities of the church who are made the proper counselors in spiritual and temporal things to carry out the provisions of the law of organization which are by the law made the duty of the bishop.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 9.

The argument that the general authorities are counselors only in spiritual things is proven to be a mistaken idea by this revelation. They are clearly declared to be counselors in temporal things also, by which the bishop was to be "directed and authorized to proceed." It ought to be clear that an executive officer who has the right to direct is presumed to have the power conferred upon him to see that his directions are heeded.

If God exercises directional control over his people and their religious activities, which he will do if they are faithful to his will, it is clear that he acts through his chosen representatives authorized to direct in his work on earth. A people not subject to divine directive control can have no religion higher than themselves, and have no claim upon God. This church does not teach the heresy that "the voice of the people is the voice of God," nor that there is no authority higher than mortal man. It was through a divinely appointed Presidency that temporal direction was had by the first bishop of the church, Edward Partridge:

June 25, 1833, this quorum (Presidency) appointed Isaac Morley and John Corrill to be bishops, and advised Bishop Partridge as to who he should select as his counselors, and also as to how he should administer the law of consecration.—HERALD, 40: 146. Millennial Star, 14: 449.

Meaning of Directional Control

If opposers of the document on church government affirmed by the April council continue to insist that it means what its supporters plainly state it does not mean, it is well to remember the long-established principle that a document should be interpreted by its friends rather than by its enemies. It has been repeatedly urged, and without warrant, that it would place the Presidency above the authority of General Conference and above all quorums and councils. The irresponsible nature of such extravagant assertions seems to be largely due to a failure to distinguish between executive and legislative bodies. The executive function is measurable the outgrowth of legislative enactment and is to be in accordance with it. This was distinguished several years ago by President Frederick M. Smith in lectures to the priesthood, as follows:

For effective work the Presidency must have your confidence and support. The right to sustain or not to sustain rests with the body. If not sustained by the body, where can the President go for recourse? Where under God lies appeal? It is your privilege and your duty not to sustain them, if you think the interests of the work are jeopardized. But, so long as they remain in office, the supreme rights of the executive arm of the church lie in the Presidency. But do not forget to draw the line between the legislative and the administrative or executive arm of the church.—HERALD, April 25, 1917.

Why should not this principle be received to-day as it was published by the HERALD editors? who were Elbert A. Smith, Samuel A. Burgess, and Edward D. Moore, and issued to the church the following comment:

It was in these meetings that President Smith stood forth so plainly as a leader, more so than ever before, both spiritually and intellectually. We expect to give a resume of the third and fourth lectures next week.—Editors.—HERALD, April 25, 1917.

Executive Control Is Subject to Law

It was clearly stated in the April council and repeated elsewhere that the directional control provided for must be according to the law and General Conference enactments. No other power of direction has ever been even suggested by the Presidency in support of the document, and it was explained:

It is of course not presumed or assumed that supreme directional control shall be exerted outside the purposes of the church as determined by the law and the objective of endeavor. That is to say, the directional control shall be in harmony with law and General Conference enactment based on the constitutional law, but in the executive line shall be supreme.—Quotations on Church Government. Also HERALD, p. 824, 1924.

The language of the Presidency has been so unmistakable in the various statements that have been published on this point that it really is inexcusable to assert that the President holds himself superior to the General Conference of the church. He has stated, however, that as your chief executive it is his right to insist upon having all departments carry out the work ordered by the law and the enactments of the church, and his directional control is particularly for that purpose, as the following authoritative explanations show:

And this directional control is for the purpose of carrying out the policies which have been determined by prophetic instruction with legislative approval and legislative enactments in harmony with constitutional law and divine command.—HERALD, 1924, p. 1058, (from letter of President Smith).

This directional control must be within the limits of the constitutional law. It must accord, first, with the revelations already approved by the people; second, with the legislative enactments of the people. It is not a wild, free handling of power by one man. If one man attempt such use of power he may be disciplined, by censure or removal from office: "effective discipline" applies to all.—Ibid., p. 1058.
Was Stated at the April Council

These statements by the Presidency are in accord with the frank explanations made by President Smith in answer to inquiry at the April council, and the nearly unanimous adoption of the document by the council shows that it held no ambiguity in the minds of these foremost authorities of the church. His position and that of his associate on the editorial staff was further set forth last year as follows:

The people in General Conference may at any time themselves initiate legislation. Not "assent" alone, but originate. Furthermore, any member of any local congregation may initiate legislation to be carried up from the local business meeting or the district conference to the General Conference for approval and enactment as law to the church.—HERALD 1924, p. 1.

Let me be challenged on the statement that we affirm the right of the people to initiate legislation, I will say that during the council meetings President Smith stated clearly that he had always admitted that right.—Ibid.

When opposition writers ignore these clear affirmations in regard to the operation of directional control in church affairs and urge that grave danger menaces the church if the Presidency is conceded this right, is it not possible that the danger lies in the other direction? We think it does. Just as the human body cannot be coordinated for effective work without the directing power of its one head, so the body of Christ cannot have several heads, which would bring division of purpose and opposition to a coordination of its activities. One head attempts to proceed in a certain manner, and another head proceeds to work contrary to such purpose. We cannot reach proper Zionic conditions, world without end, by such methods.

The church is essentially a spiritual organization every department of which is subject to its purposes. The primary purpose of the church is not to gather and disburse funds, but the use of funds is entirely subordinate to the spiritual aims of the church. The President could not have power to see that the spiritual work of the church is performed, if he could not insist that the temporal means be used to perform the required work. Even if the law did not clearly so specify, this fact alone shows that supremacy in executive matters rests in the Presidency. Extreme attitudes on democracy in religion may lead to disruption and apostasy. To such some of the Bible warnings are sometimes interpreted as threats; but note the ancient inspired instructions:

And if any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed.—2 Thessalonians 3: 14.

Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief.—Hebrews 13: 17.

The significance of the calf of gold that Aaron made and to which the people turned, having so soon forgotten the great spiritual purposes of God, is not to be lightly disregarded. We cannot afford to elevate the temporalities of the church to a place of independence of spiritual guidance, for they must be consecrated for the very purpose of spiritual accomplishment.

A Check on Church Funds Wanted

For the bishop to refuse compliance with directions given by the chief executives authorized by conference to direct, is for him to disregard the authority of conference which appointed such executives. In this connection we examine the inquiry issued in the HERALD recently by one of the Presiding Bishopric, and second the suggestion that careful and prayerful consideration be given by the Saints to his query:

Do the tithing members of the church desire that there shall be no check upon the use of the tithing and other funds?—HERALD, 1925, p. 12.

This question is followed by argument that infers that directional control by the Presidency would mean that no check upon the funds of the church would then exist. The facts are just the reverse of that conclusion. If the chief executives of the church should have no directional control over the temporalities of the church, the Bishopric, being also the trustees, would not be subject to any immediate direction as to the use of funds between conferences. As the Bishopric also keep their own books, the manner of handling items on the books would be entirely at their disposal, though some general directions might be issued by conference, unless superior officers should have sufficient supervision of the temporal affairs to place a check upon the temporal department, having a right to know all important transactions contemplated.

If effective check upon the use of funds is not provided, the Bishopric would become supreme between conferences in the handling of properties worth two and a half million dollars net. The Bishop could obligate the church by his signature, even contrary to the advice of the Presidency, or without their knowledge. To see that temporal means are used for spiritual purposes only must either devolve upon chief executives, or the Bishopric become more powerful than the Presidency, hence a department independent of the chief executive of the whole church. Such an organization would be a monstrosity and a menace to the safety and spiritual growth of the church.

Let the Bishopric of the church remain trustees and administrators of the funds of the church, subject to the right of the Presidency to place such check upon that department as will insure proper application of the funds and safe procedure in handling them, and all should go smoothly and well for every interest of the body as a whole.

President Not to Dispense the Funds

As we have seen, any extreme meanings given concerning directional control by the Presidency are entirely unwarranted. The word directional itself indicates the nature of the control intended. The charge that the Presidency desire to personally dispense the church funds is far-fetched in the extreme. As was explained by President Smith in the April council and stated by members of the Twelve, no such idea has been advocated. The statement is:

The President of the church stated before the council in effect: I do not claim the right to dispense the funds of the church. My contention is not that in this matter I am supreme. It is that the Bishop is not supreme. I hold that no man has the right to spend the money of the church, obligate the church to pay, or otherwise order important temporal affairs of the church, only as the church in General Conference shall direct, or as in emergency between conferences the proper councils shall of necessity determine.—Herald, 1924, p. 824.

It cannot be argued logically that the Presiding Bishop as lawful trustee of church funds is not subject to the direction of the Presidency. The fact that he admits being subject to General Conference, is equivalent to an admission that he is subject to the Presidency who are authorized by General Conference to direct the work of every department in the church. We read:

That it is the prerogative of the President to preside over the whole church, to bear the responsibility of the care and oversight of the work of the church, in all its different departments, and through the constituted officers of the church in their various callings, according to the laws, rules, and regulations in force and recognized by the church.—Resolution 586: 7.

Inasmuch as the Presidency is responsible for the direction of the affairs of the whole church, it is obviously proper that all the departments of the church ministry should work in harmony with and under the supervision of the presiding authority of the whole.—Joint Council Record 4, p. 71.

The bishops being classified with the high priesthood, which is presided over by the First Presidency, and the First Presidency being ordained by the Quorum of Twelve, it would appear that the bishops can possess no authority which is outside of, or superior to that which is exercised by the presidency of the high priesthood of the church.—Adopted unanimously by Twelve and sent to the First Presidency March 25, 1918. (See Herald, 1925, p. 57.)

I quoted this formerly as it appeared in print, but later found that the printed matter did not begin with the first words of the sentence. The meaning of the part quoted remains the same, however,

The Study of Stewardships

A student at one of the universities who is preparing a thesis upon the subject of "Stewardships in rural communities," requested a member of the Presiding Bishopric to furnish him with some suggestions.

The following outline based principally upon the Doctrine and Covenants has been prepared and while not complete, owing to the limited time available for its preparation, no doubt it will be helpful to others who are making a study of this subject.

Sincerely,

Benjamin R. McGuire.

1. Its Origin Divine:
   (A) Promised D. C. 38: 7, "There I will give unto you my law."
   (B) Fulfilled, D. C. 42: 8-19.

2. Its Purpose:
   (A) Altruistic. Every man seeking the interest of his neighbor. (81: 4.)
   (B) For their security for food and raiment, for an inheritance. (70: 4.)
   (C) For salvation. (77: 1; 31: 1; 81: 3; 101: 1.)
   (D) To establish equality. (118: 14.)
   (E) That the church may stand independent of all other creatures. (78: 3.)
   (F) To provide for poor—it is my will to provide for my Saints. (101: 2.)

3. Fundamentals:
   In our interpretation of the economic law, we should see that such interpretation is:
   (A) Universal in its application.
   (a) Every man. (42: 9.)
   (b) I make every man accountable. (101: 2.)
   (c) Let none deceive self that he shall not account. (118: 4.)
   (d) None exempt. (70: 3.)
   (B) Does not violate man's agency.
   (a) I gave unto children of men to be agents unto themselves. (101: 2.)
   (b) I gave unto him (Adam) to be an agent unto himself. (28: 9.)
   (c) Intelligence independent to act for itself. Here is man's agency. (90: 5.)

and agrees with the foregoing quotations on the presiding and directional rights of the Presidency over every department of the church. To say these quotations do not apply is to say in effect that the work of the bishopric is not a department of the church, and we are confident that such a claim cannot be maintained.

(b) Book of Mormon and Scriptures given of me for your instruction. (32: 3.)
(c) Give heed unto revelations. (19: 2.)

(D) It must be in harmony with the laws of the land.
(a) Verily I say unto you, concerning laws of the land. (95: 2.)
(b) Let no man break laws of land. (58: 5; 128: 7.)

(E) Any system which stifles initiative in any direction and does not furnish incentive or arouse effort in another direction of equal or more value to the individual and society is to be deprecated.
(a) Idler shall not eat bread of laborer. (42: 12.)
(b) Shalt not idle away time nor bury talent. (60: 3.)
(c) Parable of talents (God expects men to increase their powers). (81: 4.)

(F) A plan which protects private interests to the detriment of group interests is wrong, and vice versa.
(a) "For benefit of themselves and their fellow church members and whole body." (128: 1.)
(b) You shall do business in your own name and in your own names. (101: 9.)
(c) Men left free to act; "these things are in his own hands." (63: 12.)

4. How Accomplished:
(A) In God's way. Through stewardships.
(a) It must needs be done in mine own way. (101: 2.)
(b) Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward. (42: 9.)
(c) Let none deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me. (118: 4.)
(d) Expedient I should make every man steward over earthly blessings. (101: 2.)

5. Definition of Stewardship:
(A) Steward: One who manages the business or affairs of another. In the case of a gospel steward the true owner is God. We are his stewards. "The earth is the Lord's." "All these properties are mine." (101: 10.)

(B) Ship: "A termination denoting state, office, dignity, profession, art, as lordship, chancellorship, relationship, stewardship."—Webster's Dictionary.

(C) Stewardship: Is a status or relation (not a material thing) which arises out of the recognition by an individual of the supremacy of God. His ownership of all things and the confidence reposed by God in man in conferring upon him spiritual endowments, mental abilities, physical powers, material possessions (the legal title to which may or may not be vested in the individual), and the corresponding responsibility and willingness to use, and the use of and the accounting for such spiritual, mental, physical, and material blessings to the realization of God's purposes in man. The things over which a man is steward may sometimes be spoken of as his stewardship.

6. The Goal of Stewardship:
(A) Creation of, and consecration of surplus for social betterment.
(a) Thou shalt stand in the place of thy stewardship... if obtain more than thy support, give to storehouse. (42: 14.)
(b) Remember poor and consecrate of thy property. (42: 8.)
(c) If you receive more than is needful, give to storehouse, and the benefits shall be consecrated unto inhabitants of Zion. (70: 2.)
(d) According to law every man that cometh up to Zion to lay all things before bishop. (72: 3; 58: 7.)

7. Surplus Defined:
(A) That portion of our possessions not needed in the support of our dependencies nor in the conduct of our business.
(a) "The Presidency are of the opinion that the word should mean, when used by the ministry and the church, that part of a man's possessions, whether of moneys or properties, of which he has not present or immediate need; the word need being determined by the man's position, sphere of action, his business, and his dependencies. Not all have a surplus, many may have; the widow standing before the treasury giving her two mites did not give her surplus, she did consecrate of her living. Many widows and dependent women, hard-working, self-sacrificing, give of their labor a consecration, yet all may give of that which they have if they choose who may have no surplus under the general laws, either as tithing, free-will offering, or consecration." (Taken from action had at a meeting of the Joint Council of Twelve, Presidency, and Bishopric, April 17, 1909, Lamoni, Iowa.)
(B) That part of our possessions which is in excess of our inheritance.
(a) Part retained to provide for needs, called inheritance—remains private property according to law of land. Stewards hold title to same, but have no claim on part given away as surplus. (51: 1.)

8. Surplus Becomes Common Property:
(A) Of church.
(a) He shall have no power to claim that portion consecrated. (51: 1.)
(B) Consecrate of thy properties for their support... with a deed and covenant that cannot be broken. (42: 8.)
(C) "And let not any man among you say that it is his own." (191: 12.)
(D) To become the common property of the whole church. (81: 4.)
(E) After given cannot be taken from church. (42: 9.)
(F) Thou shalt give it unto my storehouse. (42: 14; 51: 4.)
9. Surplus (uses of):
   (A) Residue (surplus) shall be kept to minister to those who have not. (42:10.)
   (B) Purchase of land for public benefit, building up of New Jerusalem. (42:10.)
   (C) To help stewards in conduct of their stewardship when members of an organization of stewards. (101:12.)
   (D) You are to have equal claims on properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardship. (81:4.)

10. Surplus—How Determined:
   (A) By individual and bishopric. (42:8.)
   (B) For according to law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before bishop in Zion. (72:3.)
   (C) By mutual consent (Church History, vol. 1, p. 300, 301), with appeal to high council in case of disagreement between steward and church officers.
   (D) Harris an example. This is law unto every man that cometh to Zion. (58:7.)

11. Inheritance Defined:
   (A) “The term inheritance includes not only lands and tenements which have been acquired by descent, but every fee simple or fee tail which a person has acquired by purchase may be said to be an inheritance because the purchasers have may inherit it.”—Bouvier’s Law Dictionary.
   (B) Tentative definition of inheritance under the law of stewardships.
      (a) For the present, until we have a more authoritative pronouncement by some council of the church or by some action of General Conference upon this, we would say, That an inheritance is that amount of real or personal property which we hold in our own name, and which, when we die, goes to our heirs by process of law. It might also be in part a right, such as a government pension, or patent, or a franchise. It might also be a right to dwell in a certain location or enjoy certain privileges because of having subscribed to certain rules of conduct.

12. Inheritance: Where steward has accumulated wealth beyond his needs he should tithe the whole of his possessions, commonly referred to as the increase, and also consecrate the surplus, retaining that portion of his possessions, as an inheritance, that would adequately provide for the needs and just wants of himself and of his dependencies and his business.
   (A) Part retained (inheritance) to yield just wants and needs.
      (a) To Martin Harris: “Impart a portion of thy property; yea even part of thy land and all save the support of thy family.” (Inheritance.) (18:5.)
      (b) The above is an example to all: “My servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his monies before the bishop of the church. And, also, this is the law unto every man that cometh unto this land to receive an inheritance. . . .” (58:7.)
      (c) “. . . every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property [inheritance], . . . inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.” (42:9.)
   (B) Support of Patriarch Joseph Smith to come from his inheritance over which his son Joseph was made steward.
      (a) Patriarch, Joseph Smith.—Inheritance was for his support. “And again, let my servant Gazelam have appointed unto him also the inheritance upon which his father now resides, and this is the beginning of his stewardship . . . behold I have reserved an inheritance for his father for his support. (101:8.)

13. Inheritance: Men are stewards over their inheritances. An inheritance is not something separate and apart from a stewardship, but something which is always a part of our stewardship. The inheritance is the thing. The stewardship the responsibility of managing or caring for the thing.
   (A) “Let my servant Sidney Rigdon have appointed unto him the place where he now resides, and the lot of the tannery for his stewardship for his support.” (103:3.)
ing on which the storehouse stands; and also the lot which is on the corner south of the storehouse; and also the lot on which the school is situated, and all this have I appointed unto my servant N. K. Whitney for his stewardship."

14. Inheritance: May be more than house and lot and will vary in size and valuation.

(A) Numbers 23: 53-56: “Lord spake unto Moses, saying unto these, (children of Israel) the land shall be divided for an inheritance according to number of names.”

(B) Deuteronomy 15: 4: “For the Lord shall greatly bless thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.”

Burial Lot Became Inheritance

(C) Joshua 24: 32: “And bones of Joseph ... buried they in Shechem in a parcel of ground which Jacob bought ... for one hundred pieces of silver, and it became inheritance of children of Joseph.”

Proverbs 19: 14: Houses inheritance of fathers.

John Johnson’s Farm Land Referred to As Inheritance

101: 6: “And again, let my servant John Johnson have the house in which he lives, and the inheritance all save the ground which has been reserved.” This was about 103 acres.

Farm Land Referred to As Inheritance

57: 1: “It is wisdom that land should be purchased by the saints; and also every tract bordering by the prairies, inasmuch as my disciples are enabled to buy lands. Behold this is wisdom, that they may obtain it, for an everlasting inheritance.”

15. Inheritance—How obtained:

(A) By gift.
   (a) From parents—if parents have not whereas with to give them an inheritance. (82: 2.)
   (b) From others.

(B) By process of law.
   (a) By will.
   (b) As heirs of an estate.

(C) By purchase.

(a) Church History; vol. 1, p. 381. Copied from Evening and Morning Star, July, 1833: “The disciples of Christ blessed with immediate revelations from him, should be wise and not take the way of the world nor build air castles, but consider that when they have been gathered to Zion, means will be needed to purchase their inheritance.

(b) 63: 13: “He that sendeth up treasure unto the land of Zion shall receive an inheritance in this world, and his work shall follow him....”

16. Inheritances Are Private Property and Owners Hold Title:

(A) 51: 1: “Appoint unto this people their portion ... when he shall appoint unto a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion that he shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance ... but shall only have claim on that portion which is deeded unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land.”

(B) Jeremiah 32: 18: “For the right of inheritance is thine ... and I subscribed the evidence and sealed it, and took witnesses, and weighed him the money ... so I took the evidence of the purchase both that which was sealed according to the laws of the land.”

(C) Church History, vol. 1, p. 381. (letter of Joseph Smith to Edward Partridge): “As respects giving deeds, I would advise you to give deeds as far as the brethren have legal and just claim for them, and then let every man answer to God for the disposal of them.”

(D) Every man a steward over his own property. (42: 8.)

17. Equality Established by Law of Stewardships:

(A) Equality does not mean an equal distribution of wealth. The measuring rod of equality under the law of stewardships is needs and just wants.

(a) Appoint unto this people their portion—equal—according to wants and needs. (51: 1.)

(b) Every man steward over his own property inasmuch as it is sufficient. (42: 9.)

(c) Stewards not to give profits either to church or world only when they exceeded their needs. (70: 2.)

(d) In your temporal things you shall be equal. (Verse 3.)

18. Factors:

(A) In creation of wealth.
   (a) God—Without me ye can do nothing.
   (b) Steward—We are laborers together with God.
   (c) Neighbor—Let men of business and work labor together with God. (119: 8.)

(B) In distribution of wealth.
   (a) God—One tenth belongs to God. (Leviticus 27: 32.)
19. Organization of Stewards:

(A) Those who have secured their inheritance and who have surplus or who are creating surplus.
(b) Steward—Needs and just wants. (81:4.)
(c) Neighbor—Surplus to be consecrated unto inhabitants of Zion. (70:2.) All who have need to be assisted from surplus. (42:10, 11.)

20. Purpose of Organization:

(A) In regulating (by assisting to manage the surplus) and establishing (by contributing the surplus) the affairs of the storehouse (treasury) for the benefit of others. (77:1.)
(b) For the benefits of managing the concerns of your stewardships. (81:1.)

21. Other Helpful Organizations:

(A) Stewards of lesser financial ability, those who were in the process of securing their inheritance could organize for mutual benefits, provide other organizations or associations—industrial associations. (128:6.)

Stewards—Paid consideration and received deeds for property appointed unto them as stewardships. The word appoint used in the revelations does not connote a free gift.

At Kirtland—as shown by the records—titles in fee simple were passed for a consideration to the various parties named in section 101 within a few days after the giving of the revelation.

We submit transcript of the records as furnished us by Bishops A. Carmichael and M. H. Siegfried, viz:

Newel K. Whitney to Sidney Rigdon, book 18, page 488, April 30, 1834, to his heirs and assigns forever, in fee simple part of a lot. Consideration $100.

Newel K. Whitney to Frederick G. Williams book 19, page 203, April 30, 1832; to his heirs and assigns forever, in fee simple part of lot 1. Consideration $550.

John Johnson to Joseph Smith, Jr., President, etc. Book 18, page 478, May 4, 1834; parcel of land in Kirtland, in trust for the church or his successors; (from the description this is doubtless the land on which the Temple stands and a part of which is used for a cemetery.)

John Johnson to Oliver Cowdery, book 18, page 479, May 5, 1834, in fee simple to his heirs and assigns forever, part of a lot. Consideration $110.

John Johnson to Joseph Smith, Jr., book 24, page 100; this deed was given to correct a deed recorded in book 18, page 478.

Newel K. Whitney to John Johnson, book 22, page 497, September 23, 1830, in fee simple to his heirs and assigns forever, a tract of land lying north of the Temple and burying ground and near the Old Mill pond and the brick house owned by Newel Kelley Whitney. Consideration $5,000.

Newel K. Whitney to Orson Hyde, book 23, pages 449 and 450; deed recorded February 11, 1837; part of lot 17, quit claim deed. Consideration $400. Another deed, the consideration being $2,500 in fee simple, recorded April 22, 1837.

John Johnson to Miranda N. Hyde, recorded April 24, 1837, in fee simple to heirs and assigns forever, part of lot 17. Consideration $1,050.

Supreme Directional Control.—No. 2

BY PAUL M. HANSON

Does the “Faith of Our Fathers” Provoke This Controversy?

Who among the dreamers dreamed ten years ago that the doctrines couched in such phraseology as "supreme directional control"; government "through priesthood . . . among the people"; "effective discipline" to prevent "individual caprice and rebellion," would now be seriously offered to the Reorganized Church by some of its leading ministers?

If these doctrines were a continuation of the faith of our fathers, who believes they would be provocative of the controversy now in the church? The claim is not complimentary to the intelligence of the church.

Let those who assert that the doctrines were the faith of our fathers, harmonize them with the unvarying editorial sentiments and official pronouncements of the late Prophet Joseph Smith and the practice of the Reorganization through all its years. The eagerness to avoid this task is very noticeable.

Arguments have been presented by the Utah Church in support of their president exercising supreme control of all affairs in their church as plausible as have been advanced thus far by writers of our church pleading for the President of the Reorganized Church to exercise “supreme directional control” in all of its departments; and about the same kind of philosophical treatment of the subject has been indulged in by the writers of both churches.

Right to “Preside Over” Does Not Give Supreme Control

The calling of the “president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church.” (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42.) This is reverently believed; no one disputes it. What does it mean? It does not mean the President possesses “supreme directional control” of the church’s press, quorums, boards, temporalities, etc. Presiding power does not carry with it such meaning.

Presiding authority is much the same in its operation, whether exercised by the president of the church or by the president of a branch, district, or stake.

The thing now most emphasized—“supreme directional control” by one quorum, or one man—one man being a sort of sole earthly proprietor of the church of Jesus Christ—is the thing not mentioned at all in the New Testament or Book of Mormon. Isn’t that slightly queer? With these records, the Doctrine and Covenants, correctly interpreted, agrees.

Are we to have something different from the New Testament church, with which we have ever affirmed that our church is in harmony in organization, faith, doctrine, and practice?

To preside rightfully, whether over branch, district, or general church, is to preside in a manner recognizing every officer in his office, and safeguarding all the rights of all the officers and members all the time.

The principle contained in the following words of revelation is true in its application to all presiding officers:

Should my servant Frederick M. Smith prove unstable and unfaithful, another may be chosen, according to the law already given.—Doctrines and Covenants 127:8.

These words direct all eyes of the church to rest in scrutiny on the President, and then to act in harmony with his faithfulness or unfaithfulness, stability or unstability; all of which reveals a profound regard on the part of heaven for the rights and welfare of the membership of the church. Is not this the rule of procedure applying to presidents of branches, districts, and stakes?

The Lord in the above words reveals that the church must be presided over in accordance with right, mercy, justice, fairness, church law, and the statutory enactments of the General Conference. On no other foundation can peace, harmony, and confidence come in blessing either to local organizations or to the general church.

Respecting the receiving of revelations, it is written:

Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words, and commandments, which he [the president] shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me.—Doctrines and Covenants 19:2.

The words I have italicized should not be overlooked. Any other course than the Lord here commands would be followed by confusion, if not disaster.

A Lesson From History—Temporal Labors

It has been argued in defense of supreme directional control that the “work of the whole church is spiritual.” The revelations definitely refer to the “spiritual and the temporal divisions of the work” of the church. (Doctrines and Covenants 129:8.)

The Lord said to the first prophet of the church:

In temporal labors thou shalt not have strength, for this is not thy calling.—Doctrines and Covenants 23:4.

Some now offering themselves as pilots apparently would have us believe that these words mean that in temporal things he should have strength, and that this was his calling as well as in spiritual things! Therefore, the president to-day should have “supreme directional control” of temporal affairs.

“Truth is a knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come”; note: a knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come. Truth, the supremest thing in the world, sometimes makes one a little uncomfortable, but it makes one free.

A student of history sees in the failure of the first President of the church to heed the words, “In temporal labors thou shalt not have strength,” the cause of much of the disappointment and sorrow of the old church.

Who will deny that great was the loss in spiritual power to the church after he became involved in the Kirtland Bank, became mayor of Nauvoo, judge of the municipal court, lieutenant-general of the Nauvoo Legion, an officer in the Masonic Lodge, trustee in trust for the church, involving technical knowledge in handling of real estate, and allowed himself to run as a candidate for the Presidency of the United States?

The rejection of his church by the Almighty is a serious matter—entailing woe from generation to generation—and the causes contributing thereto deserve to be thoroughly studied and made known.

The person who turns from facts is moving towards a fool’s paradise. What is more valuable than a knowledge of our church history in helping the church on to-day in its mission, avoiding past rocks, and guiding its course toward a smooth sea? History—ancient and modern—proclaims a thousand lessons to the church to-day.

President W. W. Blair wrote in an editorial:

In this one case alone we have a clear refutation of the claims of the Utah leaders. Joseph stood highest in the priesthood, and his calling was to the spiritual concerns of the church; but in temporal affairs he should “not have strength.” This clearly means that he should not, in temporal matters, have skill and wisdom. It certainly did not mean that he should not have physical—bodily—strength, for in physical ability he was unsurpassed.—Saints’ Advocate, p. 26, October, 1880.

The late Prophet of the church, Joseph Smith, wrote of his own refusal to exercise supreme directional control of the business affairs of the church as follows:

It may be that the overshadowing sentiment, “In temporal things he shall not have strength,” has had its influence in preventing the rise of an ambition to control in such affairs; and it is certain that the disastrous failures of similar ventures in the past, passing under our observation, have been a constant warning against doing business upon other people’s means gathered under the veil of spiritual standing and value. We have always known that the business world did not deal in spiritual assets and that such were not quoted as of marketable value.—Saints’ Herald, October 1, 1902.

There was a greater element of danger to the general church in the way of putting its properties into the control of the President, than in the Bishopric rule. The control of the finances of the church added to the spiritual control would be an element of mischief to the general body, if the President was an ambitious and unscrupulous man, as the rules applying to the care of the finances under the Bishopric would not apply to him, and he would in a way be an irresponsible agent.—Sainns' Herald, May 29, 1901.

Truth Is Harmonious—No Conflict in God's Law

Certain rights, powers, and prerogatives inhere in the apostolic office, which neither the President nor anyone else has authority to set aside; and this truth applying to the Twelve extends to all other quorums.

There are peculiar rights and prerogatives attaching to the Bishopric, embodied in the law, as is proven from the following:

In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be accorded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums the church were, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy—Doctrine and Covenants 128:10.

And again, I have called my servant Edward Partridge, and gave a commandment, that he should be appointed by the voice of the church, and ordained a bishop unto the church, to leave his merchandise and to spend all his time in the labors of the church; to see to all things as it shall be appointed unto him in my laws, in the day that I shall give them.—Doctrine and Covenants 41:8.

The Spirit saith further: The attention of the church is called to the consideration of the revelation, given in answer to earnest supplication, with regard to temporal things. The word has been already given in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the church, that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations. The word which has been given at a late period should not have been so soon forgotten and disregarded by the church or any of its members. "I am God; I change not," has been known to the church and the eldership since the coming of the angel with the message of restoration. Under it the church has sought the Lord and received from time to time that which was deemed sufficient for the time to govern the church and its ministers, both of the spiritual and the temporal divisions of the work. The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with other revelations given to the church, which had been before given, the church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed. Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and the pure in heart.—Doctrine and Covenants 129:8.

These words do not warn the church to conform to the doctrine of "supreme directional control" of temporalities by the Presidency. Far from it!

The late President Joseph Smith wrote in a leading editorial:

President Brigham Young had a successful way of providing men with a chance to work; but it was not by a cooperative system of which the people were the originators, benefactors, managers, and beneficiaries; the whole was dominated by the direction of the church officers, President Young first, the bishops next.—Saints' Herald, p. 453, July 21, 1897.

That is what some now are pleading for in the Reorganized Church; the Presidency first—the bishops next in control of temporal concerns. Such is the strange voice that is now heard in the Reorganization. The Lord in the words quoted says that the "temporalities of the church are to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head," and declares the church had sought the Lord and received from time to time that which was deemed sufficient for the time to govern the church and its ministers, "both of the spiritual and the temporal divisions of the work." The church is directed to "accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law," and is told that "until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with other revelations given to the church" the "church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed."

I do not believe the Reorganized Church has forgotten the teaching sounded along the years through its corridors: "To the law and to the testimony."

The law provides that unless the liberties of the people of the church are in jeopardy, the "application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to." It does not direct that the "application of the law as stated by the bishopric," under supreme directional control of the Presidency, should be "acceded to"—and then in case of a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, under the operation of such "control," the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, should sit in judgment on the conduct of affairs in the Bishop's office.

Imagine the Presidency sitting in such a council of appeal, when all the time they had exercised supreme directional control" of the temporalities!
Liberty According to Office and Calling

“Supreme directional control,” on the part of the Presidency, of the Bishop’s office, makes void the law of God.

Instead of nullifying what is written, the duty of the Presidency is to safeguard and defend all the privileges and prerogatives of the Bishopric, provided for in the inspired language relating to their work. Presidency, rightly exercised, safeguards all.

How plain are the provisions of the divine words bearing on the subject! How unmistakable the interpretation of the law by the late prophet! The practice of the Reorganization relating to temporalities—harmonious and unvarying!

Listen to the following words from an editorial of the late President of the church:

> But why should we continue a profitless controversy over the name under which the Bishop must undertake and carry on his work of looking after the finances of the church? Is it not better to leave each department at liberty to carry on its work according to the law and the light, wisdom, and direction of the Spirit to which as officers of their calling they are entitled? We certainly think so. —Saints’ Herald, p. 1148, November 26, 1902.

The question arises: Who is right, the Prophet Joseph Smith, who presided over the Reorganization for more than half a century, signally blessed of the Lord, or those who without any pronounced revelation from God are now endeavoring to lead the church along a different path?

Government “Through Priesthood” Ignores Democracy

Reasonably interpreted, the sister doctrine of “supreme directional control,” i.e., government “through priesthood . . . among the people,” means the membership of the church cannot institute or propose any measure bearing on the government of the church. If they can institute such measures, why talk about government “through priesthood . . . among the people”? The doctrine means, unless words are added to the phraseology, that to approve or disapprove of what is offered to them by the priesthood, is their highest privilege as citizens of the kingdom of God in participating in its governmental conduct.

If the church were a pure theocracy, its government would be by ecclesiastics only. Our late president rightly defined it as a “theocratic-democracy.” Therefore, democratic rights must be upheld as well as theocratic privileges.

The government of the church, not being “through priesthood . . . among the people,” the members of the church have a legal and moral right in all of its deliberative assemblies to influence, direct, and regulate, by instituting and urging measures which they deem necessary to the welfare of the church. Through themselves, or their delegates, they exercise a legislative and controlling power, which is governmental power. The government of the church, consequently, is not “through priesthood . . . among the people.”

Since the church is a theocratic-democracy, its government is maintained by the mass of the people, with all the channels left open for divine revelation and profit provided by the Lord. Theocratic privileges are respected, and the democratic rights of the people are not ignored.

In this manner the virtues of a theocracy and of a democracy become blended.

Quorum of Seventy Not Heard

The advisory council, which did not even give consideration to the Seventy whom the law clearly provides should be recognized in case the affairs of the Bishop’s office are called in question, attempted to set some of the prerogatives of the Bishopric aside; desiring henceforth to recognize the Presidency as being in “supreme directional control” of such department. This is the origin of what may appear to many of the membership to be an innocently worded phrase: “supreme directional control.”

For the Faith Once Delivered

“Who can harmonize the action of the council with the revelations through the late President of the church, his official pronouncements, and with the practice of the Reorganization from 1860 to April, 1924?”

The rights, powers, and prerogatives of the Bishopric, as set forth in the standard books of the church and enactments of the General Conference, and the rights of members in exercising a controlling and governmental power and authority in the church, cannot in truth be set aside.

Apart from right, facts, and law, real authority does not exist.

The law of God relating to the Bishopric and other quorums, and “common consent,” remains clarified and reinforced by the interpretation and practice of the Reorganization from its beginning.

Most sincerely do I say that what will speedily bring peace, good will, and united action in the church is not an increase at the present time of questionable presidential power, but a wise, kindly, and just exercise of powers already possessed.

Those who have given their lives to the cause of Christ represented in the Reorganization, can support enthusiastically the principles of government which have without interruption marked its progress. All should be willing to support such principles. Why not? For that faith we contend. On such a basis is a better ground for united action, than attempting to force through an advisory council having no official standing in the law, dogmas which the Utah Church has been practicing from its origin.

Why not let the Reorganization continue to move on the foundation and along the illuminated highway on which it was placed by Almighty God and our fathers?

Is not this the fervent desire of the church?

Concerning the Faith of Our Fathers

BY D. T. WILLIAMS

V. CONCENTRATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE POWER IN THE LIGHT OF THE DEMOCRACY OF OUR FATHERS

Some would have us believe that ecclesiastical democracy in this church is waning to its death; that the brilliant star of a past freedom is about to be hidden in its course by the black clouds of superstition and authoritarianism; that God has deserted his ecclesia; that we are tending toward apostasy; and that “the church,” as one of our responsible ministers is reported as saying, “is going to hell.” Indeed, it has been said that if the articles on church government, are adopted, our apostasy will be complete.

An exceedingly sad picture of this, exceedingly sad, indeed, if by any means it can be proved as portraying the truth. Comparisons are said to be odious. They are, however, at times, just as useful as they are annoying, and may help us in this instance to arrive at the facts in the case. We wish, therefore, since our brethren have thought it wise to make a serious appeal to the democracy of our fathers of the state, to consider the similarity, or dissimilarity as the case may be, between the democracy of the church and that of the state, with special regard to the question of centralization of power. And we speak in these articles of concentration in the administrative department of government only.

And as observed in our last, we are more than glad to pick up the gage thus laid down by our opposing brethren—the democracy of our fathers. It will serve us well.

What Is Democracy?

What is democracy? Here we have a vital question; and one which has vitally to do with the problem presented in the issues now before the church. Before we as a people can give an intelligent answer to the quandary now confronting us, we must ponder well this question.

Some seem to believe that democracy has its demonstration only when each member of the community has equal power or authority with every other member, be he officer or citizen; or when the untried philosophy of “no superior officer” is enforced by the inveigling eloquence of the popular orator.

Such doctrine may have an enticing sound to the ears of some who have made only a shallow study of the laws of government, but to those who have delved into the past with a profound desire to learn the lesson of history, there is no such delusion. These know that order can be enjoyed only when the people have delegated their powers to certain persons, while they become the rulers of the people, are at the same time their servants as well: Who sense the virtue of a legitimate and well-guarded centralization of power.

Those, upon the other hand, who are pleading that no power be concentrated in the hands of any man or quorum, are making a plea tending to anarchy and its attendant evils. It would be altogether unjust to say that any of the brethren want anarchy, but the answer to their prayer if granted could mean only that.

The writer said at the last General Conference that any organization, be it great or small, must have some centralization of power. When we dismiss the principle of representation from our democracy, which is concentration of power, we thereby bid farewell to stable democratic government. Out of such a situation only one of two things can evolve: either anarchy or autocracy.

In light of this thought, it can be plainly seen that those who are championing complete decentralization of power are themselves seeking a change of government, disquieting and unsettling to say the least.

“Complete decentralization of power” is a high sounding definition for anarchy. On the other hand, a complete centralization of power would spell autocracy. We must beware that we do not allow ourselves to be inveigled by the alluring phrases of the one, or wrecked by the deceitfulness of the other. We must not sacrifice liberty to government; nor should we sacrifice government to license. There is somewhere a golden mean, which if discovered will conserve the good of the church and the welfare of all its people.

Is Centralization Un-American?

Writing on the subject under discussion, a contributor to the HERALD of December 24, 1924, sets forth his faith in the following eloquent manner:

From the above and for many other reasons the writer is of the opinion that supreme directional control and a centralization of power in ANY official or quorum of the church is wrong in principle, unscientific in practice, un-American in character, and unwarranted in the law of God.

“Un-American in character.” Here is the appeal to the world democracy. Similar appeal has been made by others standing in positions of greater trust. Such an appeal must not go unheeded, and we are glad, very glad that the opportunity is thus granted to set before HERALD readers the faith of those who cannot accept such philosophy as the foundation of their hope. For we do not so read the democracy of our fathers of the state.

“A centralization of power . . . is un-American in character.” This is a strange political science, indeed. What an indictment is here registered against the grand old fathers of the Constitution! The Father of his Country, the mighty Washington, is labeled “un-American.” The great Hamilton, who fought so courageously in the constitutional convention for concentration of power, is found guilty without so much as a hearing. The generous Lincoln, the Savior of his Country, and a golden pillar of political liberty, is peremptorily dismissed without an opportunity for defense. What would these men say if they were alive and permitted to speak for themselves? How would they answer the charge of being “un-American”? We can only answer this by an appeal to the history of their experience.

The Power of the President

Ashley, a recognized student of American Government, speaking of concentration of power in the hands of the President says:

He controls absolutely the executive department, not so much because the constitution vests him with executive powers, as for the reason that all executive officials are directly or indirectly appointed by him, can be removed at any time, and are responsible to him in the performance of their duties. That is, the executive department is the most completely organized part of the United States Government, every inferior civil officer being directly subordinate to the President, in whom is centered all power.—The American Federal State, pp. 284, 285.

“In whom is centered all power” is a strong phrase. It is Ashley, however, who makes it, one of the best-informed writers on American Government. For this strongly centralized government Hamilton fought with all the fervor of his wonderful genius. And Washington, when it was established, though he disdained to wear a crown, gave his acquiescence to the new government. By accepting the position of centralized power, Washington signified his pleasure with the consummation of the Constitutional Convention’s endeavor, and served for eight years in this position of stupendous trust. At no time did he say there was too much power vested in the hands of the President. On the contrary, he sponsored the courageous efforts of Hamilton and his colleagues to the end of establishing such power. Moreover, those who have studied the history of our great civil struggle know that Lincoln did not hesitate to use the power extended in this grant to the limit of its possibility.

The Single Executive

To those who are of the opinion that centralization and democracy are not consonant with each other, the following should bring some enlightenment:

Unlike state governments, the national government is so organized as to concentrate power and the responsibility of enforcement of the laws in the hands of a single executive. Those who are charged with aiding him in carrying out the government are his own appointees, and their responsibility is to him alone.—Government in the United States, by Garner, p. 301.

Some of our brothers have eulogized the Constitution of the United States, and well they may, for it was formulated by “wise men raised up unto this very purpose.” But it is hardly consistent for them to eulogize the framers of this great document and laud their creation in one paragraph, while in the next they decry the fruitage of their efforts and cry aloud for a complete decentralization of power.

These, our American fathers, centered in one man the greatest power ever held by any constitutional ruler in the world. Macy and Gannaway, speaking of the powers vested in the Presidency of the United States, say:

Its occupant does not hold merely an ornamental position, useful only in a social way, but is the real head of the Nation, with powers and responsibilities greater than are those of monarchs in the Old World countries.—Comparative Free Government, p. 36.

President Smith Is Right

A great ado is made over the fact that the President of the church should say: “You determine what are the laws he (the president) executes, even if he becomes absolute in his power as administrator of the law.”

We note the President does not say he is absolute. His only affirmation is that upon the executive officers of the church is imposed the task of administering and enforcing the law. Anything wrong with that? In the light of the words of God, there is nothing wrong with it, who has said, “Mine elders shall see that the law is kept.”

This administration of the law by the executive officers, including the President of the church, as President Smith has a number of times been quoted as saying, must itself proceed lawfully, or, to use his own words, “in harmony with the law and General Conference enactments.”

President Smith and Obedience

Nor will the discerning be led into any camp of sophistry under an effort to go back to a sermon of twenty-two years ago for the genesis of the document on church government, and to substantiate the charge that President Smith in this later document deliberately lays a foundation from which to demand obedience to men as if to the veritable words of God himself. Especially will they not be so misled when they discover this attack in the HERALD of February 18, to which these lines refer, has left out of consideration the primary statement of President Smith predicated in the introductory remarks of his discourse of so long ago. President Smith had reviewed the faith of Abraham in offering Isaac, after which he said:

There is one thought that I wish to draw from the three stories; and if I can get that one thing, or one lesson, before you, I shall be satisfied; and that is the lesson of obedience, obedience which is the result of absolute faith or confidence in God. . . . God places a high estimate on obedience, that is, faithful obedience, obedience that comes from the heart, or that is impelled by faith, and not simply by this intelligent compliance that we have sometimes heard of. Let me read a few passages that will support this, I believe. In the 5th of Acts, 29th verse, we find this language: "Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, We ought to obey God rather than men."

The fundamental thing here is obedience to God. Strange, indeed it is, that even a prejudiced cause should so strain both the record and itself in an endeavor to establish a point thought to be to its advantage.

American Administrative Power

With respect to the argument of our brethren, since their appeal is to democracy, and to the American democracy in particular, let it be remembered that just this is the power of the President of the United States. He has absolute control in the matter of administering the law, subject to impeachment in case of abuse of office. He is the head of the administrative department, and as such has centralized in him full administrative authority. As Ashley puts it, "In the President was vested the whole executive power."—American Federal State, p. 108.

Surely those who would make the officers of the church as powerless as its members by this unthinkable program of decentralization based on their interpretation of the democracy of our fathers, and call that program democratic, have forgotten their grade school civics.

It is well to remember that the people of this the greatest democracy the world has ever known, elect but one administrative officer. That officer is the President of the United States.

And let it be remembered, moreover, that this officer so elected is given the power to appoint, either directly or indirectly, all the other executive officers of the Federal Government.

This is a stupendous concentration of trust, for as Hart in his Actual Government informs us: There are in the American Government 3,850 officers only who are not under the direction of the President; while there are 236,000 who are under his direction and control. The former are legislators and judges and their various assistants, while the latter are those who assist the President in the administration of the executive affairs of the Nation.

Hart emphasizes the greatness of this centralization of power in the following quotation:

By his (the President's) general appointing power he designates foreign ministers and consuls, judges of the supreme court, and all other important officers. This power combined with the power of removal which does not require consent of the Senate, centralizes and unifies the whole hierarchy of executive officers.—Actual Government, by Hart.

These things seem to signify a centralization of power. As the writer has remarked before: We must have centralization of power, but it is for us to determine as to what degree we, the people, are prepared to centralize it. It is evident that common consent and centralization are consonant factors in the democracies of the world, and common sense would seem to certify that such would be true in the church as well as in the nation.

Suppose we were to conclude, as some of our brethren avow, that democracy and concentration of power are each the antithesis of the other; would we not then, to be logical with ourselves, if we discovered in the United States Government a centralization of power, have to conclude that it was unfit to be named among the great democracies of the world—not worthy to be called a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people"? Such would seem to be the only sane conclusion. Yet this concentration of power in the government is not a matter that is kept hidden from the people. It is taught to our children in all the public schools.

A Fear Without Foundation in Democracy

A feverish, fearful cry has gone forth in the church. Those raising the discordant note seem to be obsessed with the thought that we are about to lose our valuable and God-bestowed franchise. And these have appealed particularly to the American democracy. Now, I dare say that if the writer or anyone else were to rise in the General Conference and move that the President of the church be granted like powers in the administration of his ecclesiastical trust as those delegated to the President of the United States by our votes as citizens of the Nation, there would be a great storm of opposition by those decrying our serious loss of democratic rights, and a hue and cry about autocracy. In the President of the United States we have the manifestation of democracy centralized. If this is a virtue in the nation, by what strange twist of logic can it be transformed into a vice in the church? And what comes of the appeal to democracy?

If there are those who doubt this opposition, let me call your attention for a moment to just what such a move would mean.

Would Increase President's Powers

Such an action if made law by the General Conference would very materially increase the administrative power of the President of the church. And of course this would be right, according to the reasoning of some, who are crying aloud for democracy, for it would be in full accord with the well-tried principles of popular sovereignty. Such a grant of power would give to the chief executive of the church many more prerogatives and much more latitude than is now his privilege to enjoy.

This increased trust would give to him the right to veto any measure passed by the General Conference for the regulation of the affairs of the church. To pass such a measure over that veto would take a two-thirds vote of all the representatives of the entire membership in conference assembled. When the President of the United States determines to wield this privilege, he brings into action one sixth of the voting power of the whole nation—or something over nine million votes. Yet we hear the cry that centralization of power is "un-American." No student of American history need be reminded that the Presidents of the United States have not hesitated to use this concentrated control. About six hundred times has this power been utilized, in our history, by the head of the administrative hierarchy. The anathema "un-American" will have ample opportunity for application here.

Theodore Roosevelt, the breaker of trusts, was the greatest tyrant of them all. Forty-two times did he wield this "big stick" of "autocratic power." Dear reader, you are quite sure, undoubtedly, that "Teddy" would be "delighted" to hear that he had been branded "un-American." Ah, my friends, to prove "a centralization of power un-American," it becomes necessary to condemn as "un-American" the greatest statesmen and the most brilliant heroes America ever produced; and what proves too much proves nothing.

A Challenge

And now what about this? Are our brethren, who are anticipating a supposed loss of democracy, ready to give to the President of the church the power of a democratic ruler? I doubt it very much. But why not? Having made an insistent appeal to democracy, isn't it but right that they should follow it to its logical conclusion? Shall we move forward when the hand of democracy beckons us on? Ah, no, my friends; we will not insist that you go to too great lengths in this matter. (But all of us surely see that when the appeal is to a sword that has two edges, it may "cut asunder both joint and marrow.")

We should, however, be ready to give to the Presidency of the church the power necessary to administer their great trust. This is in keeping with common sense. And in this we ask only what we understand the law already allows.

Appointing Power

Again, if we were to grant to the President of the church such centralized power as is wielded by the chief executive of the Nation, we would give him the authority to appoint, with the ratification of the General Conference, all the administrative officers of the general church. Such rights bestowed would mean that the conference thereby gave up all privileges of nomination for these places of trust. Bestowal of such power would leave with conference in this matter only the right to accept or reject the appointments made by the First Presidency. Conference could only refuse to ratify the appointment and return the name and wait for a new name to be suggested. Just this is the power of the American President.

I am not suggesting that this church should grant this power to its President and Prophet. I would, however, ask what would be the reaction of many in the church who are now making an eloquent appeal for democracy if the appeal were heeded and such a suggestion made? The varied cries of: "Centralization!" "autocracy!" "monarchy!" "one-man power!" etc., would be raised to the very vaults of heaven. But why so? We have been appealing for democracy, and here it is. Yet, again, I say, we are not asking for these powers for our Presidency. It is only to show up the inconsistency of the opposition.

When we go to the polls we willingly vote for such power to be placed in the hands of a man receiving no appointment of God; but when it comes to acknowledging to one who is God-appointed and a prophet of the Almighty the necessary authority to administer his trust, some of us refuse to bestow our confidence. How inconsistent we mortals are!

British Testimony

Concentration of trust is not contrary to the democracy of the great British Empire as the following quotation makes manifest:

But the experiences of England for a century seem to show that under proper restraint, centralization of power may be an unmixed benefit.—Ashley, p. 329.

Does this centralization of power make for autocracy, or democracy? Let us put our ear to the political door of the greatest empire the world has ever known, and get the lesson English statesmen have to teach:

Three principal advantages are claimed for parliamentary government. (1) It concentrates power. The government has but one policy: that of its leaders. No time is lost in friction between the different departments or the separate houses. Every part of the government works in perfect har mony with every other, showing the existence of a single source of authority. In a word, the government is efficient.

It may be that this "perfect harmony" is what we are afraid of. But surely if a recognized concentration holds promise of any degree of peace, we should be willing at least to give it a trial. The great Brit ish Empire has stood long a firm factor in the world of politics; and has been one of the strongest pro ponents of democracy that ever fought for the rights of the common people. The above is the lesson she would teach us. Is her contribution worth nothing?

Switzerland's Testimony

Switzerland is said, by men who know, to be "among the freest and most democratic of states." If, then, a reasonable centralization of power is the right hand man of autocracy, we would naturally expect to find Switzerland the courageous foe of any such principle. But what is her testimony? Hear it:

The popular uprisings of 1848 found the country already prepared to yield local privilege and to become a democratic nation, and since that date centralization and democracy have gone hand in hand.—Comparative Free Government, p. 615.

One would be led to think, by some articles ap pearing in the HERALD of late, that centralization and democracy were the most deadly enemies. But here in little freedom-loving Switzerland, these chil dren, one of everlasting light, and the other, as some would have us believe, of eternal darkness, romp hand in hand.

The Prophets and Centralization

So when the President of the church comes for ward telling us that centralization of power is a ne cessity in the kingdom of God, he may even yet be the greatest enemy of autocracy, and the most con sistent friend of common consent and democracy.

His father, "Young Joseph," whom we all honor and love, at one time said:

Those who now fear the concentration of power, would do well to make a more thorough examination of the objects of church association, and study to a better conclusion the theory of the gospel, as applied to human associations. There can be no possible better guaranties given to a people for the maintenance of their liberty, than those assured to the people of the church in their organic church law; and it is only necessary that it be known that any one entrusted with the liberties of the people is proving recreant to his trust, to apply the remedy. Concentration is only to be feared when the power of applying the remedy is denied, or the law by which it is guaranteed is ignored.—TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 18, pp. 743, 744.

This same position is assumed by the son. Presi dent Frederick M. Smith, speaking of this concentra tion of trust says: "Protection against prostitution of this power is amply provided in the law."—THE SAINTS' HERALD, July 9, 1924, p. 651.

Stoning the Prophet

The present President of the church is accused of being an autocrat, while his father was a democrat;
a pope, while his father was a prophet; of teaching heresy, while his father taught the truth; and last but not the least, of trying to inveigle the people into bondage, while his father fought always to give them freedom. It has ever been the failing of humanity in dealing with prophets to scandalize the living and eulogize the dead. We have not overcome, it seems, this weakness so common to mankind. Each of our prophets has received the same fate at our hands. Good Joseph, whom we now hear lauded to the very gates of heaven, was during his lifetime subjected to the same tongue of scandal with its loveless inv ective as that now scourging his son.

Hear what this servant of God and the people had to say concerning this matter:

It seems to be a favorite mode of attack upon us, to as sert that we are teaching contrarily to what our father taught; denouncing what he upheld, and upholding what he de nounced; practicing what he forbid, and condemning what he practiced.—TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 18, p. 565.

Nor were people always content to call in ques tion the ministerial teaching and practice only of the late and most worthy President Joseph Smith. He was betimes assailed with accusations of a more grave nature. And these continued, as we shall see, to near the time of his passing to his well-earned reward. No less an authority than President Joseph Smith himself, we have on record in this regard, who in the General Conference of 1911 made men tion as follows of certain of his accusers, and the things with which they charged him:

You may say, President Smith has never been assailed.
This is a mistake. President Smith has several times de fied the action of men who were disgruntled and who pur posed to make the church suffer and the President with it, by cases of defamation of character in the courts; and I have been accused very grievously too, of very grave errors, and what would be accounted as crime if they were abso lutely true. The case was put into the hands of the Presi dent of the stake at Independence, and would have gone to trial so far as I was concerned. I simply notified the Bishop that I was ready whenever the court said.—General Con ference Minutes, pp. 1500, 1501.

Indeed, it is the old, old story of garnishing the

www.LatterDayTruth.org
tombs of the dead prophets, while at the same moment we stone the living ones. 'It is not strange, thinking of it from the standpoint of humanity, but the facts are that some of the same hands that a few years ago cast missiles at the head of the late prophet, are now stretched forth with the brush of laudation to paint in glowing colors his tomb, i. e., when not engaged in the stoning of his son and present prophet. How long shall we engage in such practice?

Let the People Speak

The cry in the present controversy has been, To the people! To the people!! Let the people speak!!! "General Conference," recite the signers of the open letter, "the enactments of which combine both the inspiration of God and the will of the people, is the highest authority in the church." Let the conference speak and once for all settle this question of administrative authority.

So say we, Let the people speak. Nor do we purpose to be drawn aside at this late date, as our friends are endeavoring, allowing certain insinuations against us to stand unanswered; and the problem of late years unsolved, and to continue to trouble us. Neither are the people in a mood to allow it. The people desire to speak. Let the people speak.

The Saints Will Acknowledge Administrative Authority

Nor is there any question as to what the people will say about this matter of centralization of administrative power; which is no more nor no less than to leave free the administrative officers of the church all along the line, to carry into effect the laws and the orders of the body.

As citizens of the world democracies, the membership of the church is not adverse to centralizing in the hands of one man or a small group of men a tremendous power. As members of this great commonwealth, the United States, we vote into the hands of a single individual at every general election a power that we would hesitate to extend to the President of the church. Allow us once more to observe that we are glad to give, in this matter, it may be to an unregenerate man, and it may be to an infidel, what we withhold from one called of God to a great and honorable trust in the church. A Coolidge, a Harding, a Wilson, a Taft, is to be trusted and considered worthy of our favor. Is not the President of our church, is not the prophet of God to be considered equally worthy, and entitled to receive if not so much of administrative power, then that portion allowed in the law, and necessary to an efficient administration of the office, and affairs of the church?

We know full well the hearts of the people in this regard. And that their representatives in the coming conference shall be found of the same heart, we have no doubt. To the First Presidency we shall express our confidence of their worthiness. And the law we shall construe as continuing the grant of administrative function necessary to an effectual response to the trust thus imposed.

We Shall Be True to Our Fathers

And by these same tokens shall we be found running true to that glorious democracy of our illustrious fathers of the state to which our brethren have again and again made appeal. For democracy and centralization of administrative power are handmaidens to-day, even as they have been through all the days of the past. Indeed, without concentration, no democracy can either function or perpetuate itself; for how else can the will of the body be carried forth and executed? Yes, we shall be true to our fathers of the state.

And as we have seen in former discussions opening this series, we shall be true also to our fathers in the faith for the last time delivered to the saints. These our fathers in the Restoration built well; recognizing as they did in the First Presidency the chief and directing quorum in administrative matters. In so acknowledging, we are therefore quite in keeping with "the faith of our fathers" of the church.

Let Us Move Forward

Shall we not then move forward, even as admonished by our loved Brother Elbert A. Smith in a late Herald, quoting the words of the great God through our late and revered Prophet Joseph Smith, shall we not "press on to the consummation designed of God—unity, honor, sanctification, and glory?" Yea, verily, it shall be so. The hand of the Father is extended usward. Let us move up and grasp it for the march Zionward with the promise of which our hearts have swelled these many years.

And under Him it shall be so. For his great church is to continue on in the earth, and accomplish the purpose for which he sent it.

The American Bible Society has recently opened a new home agency in the city of Washington, where local societies will cooperate with the larger body in the distribution of the sacred volume. Other home agencies are located in New York, Philadelphia, Richmond, Cincinnati, Chicago, Dallas, Denver, and San Francisco.

Let the People Rule

BY J. F. GARVER

I. LET THE CHURCH CONTINUE INTACT

The writer has taken no part in the HERALD discussion of the document on church government, leaving that to able hands. Nor would he presume to claim space now, only to throw the weight of his influence against any and every tendency towards a split. The church, whatever the action of the conference, must continue as one—in the right, if right; to correct its wrong, if in the wrong.

We do not say our brethren, or either of them to be herein referred to, would on losing in the coming conference lead or participate in a movement away from the church as then constituted. We only say the words of some of them would lend encouragement for such an occurrence. We speak only of the principles involved. And then only from the deepest feeling that the interests of the cause have been put in jeopardy.

That this suggestion of a split in the church has been clandestinely creeping about in receptive quarters for some considerable time, we have known. It is the handmaiden of the brand apostate, the irons for which have already been forged. It is well that it has at last stepped boldly into the open, that it may be seen by all of us in all its ghastliness. For now with the support of the Saints we can deal with it as its insinuations deserve.

Words Suggesting a Split

With the following words came Elder T. W. Williams in the HERALD for January 28, the logical sequence of which is that should the document proposed by the April council touching church government be adopted by the conference, the church would be in apostasy; the only thing remaining for those dissenting therefrom being to withdraw from the majority, to stand fast till God delivered his cause from another “dark and cloudy day.” He says:

I am reluctant to believe that a majority of the officials and members of this church will indorse this strange document on church government.... This would be tantamount to apostasy and must result in the rejection of the church.

Should such a catalysis happen to the church, but one course remains open to all true Latter Day Saints. We must carry on in God’s own way and with a firm and steadfast faith that God, who restored the gospel in the beginning with all of its attendant powers and blessings and who sustained the remnant during the dark and cloudy day following the apostasy of 1844, will still maintain his own cause and continue to bless the labors of those who remain true to the faith once delivered to the Saints.—SAINTS’ HERALD, January 28, 1925.

This charge of apostasy and suggestion for a split we would have been well content to let rest, in the light of the dignified and powerful protest and warning as issued by President Elbert A. Smith in the HERALD of February 4, but for its having been renewed. For in the very face of this masterpiece from President Smith against any and everything inclining toward a split, comes now in the HERALD of February 18, Elder James E. Yates, a recognized and intimate confere of Elder Williams, and whose words by indirection renew the threat. He says:

One with God is always a majority.

The proposal of, and conflict with, great heresies in all the past has afforded ample reason for just condemnation of wrong majorities, and has ever glorified right minorities. Who will deny that?

What other attitude could consistently be taken towards a wrong majority in major and vital issues than to continue to be opposed to it?

Is there no proper qualification to be placed upon the usual rule that the minority should submit to the decision of the majority? If not, why should the Thirteen American Colonies not have submitted to parental authoritative control? How could the Nazarene and his few followers have been justified in resisting and supplanting religious authority? Why should Joseph Smith not have joined some popular creed and kept still about the minority doctrine of the Restoration? Why was a nonplussed minority justified in seceding against the strange doctrines and strong discipline of Brigham Young?

Shall the Church Split?

In the first instance, this suggestion for a bolt was a matter grave enough. In the second, its repetition in the face of the warning of President Elbert A. Smith carries even more weight than at the first. And it creates a situation of such potentiality that wise men of faith will prepare for the worst, even while they pray it does not eventuate.

These latter words, as the reader will have observed, only state in another way the sentiment expressed by the former.

Say the former, in the event the conference apostatizes by indorsing the document on church government, those dissenting must “carry on” with the faith God will “still maintain his own cause,” “through those who remain true”—the dissenters, of course; for adoption by the conference “would be tantamount to apostasy and must result in the rejection of the church.”

Say the latter, since the church will have gone into apostasy, as if following the example of the American Colonies, the minority must rise up in rebellion against the majority, which is to say, set up an independent government.

As Joseph Smith withdrew himself from the sectarianism under which was effected his conversion, so must they dissociate themselves from the conference and the church.

As Christ did, so they must set up a new church. As the Reorganization did in its reaction against the claims of Brigham Young, in the forties, and fifties, and sixties, so must the minority in 1925 set up their counter claims as the church of Christ in succession.

A Bit of a Stumble

Just here our brother stumbles a bit. It is when he speaks of those dissenting from the usurpation of Brigham Young, to describe them as a “non-plussed minority.”

It has been our unbroken claim from the beginning hour until now that only a small fraction of the some two hundred thousand of the church went off with Brigham Young. That his usurpation was perpetrated at a point under the circumstances far removed from the church, and without due notice. That it represented a minority action, illegally taken, against which the faithful protested by refusing to follow.

This, the position of the church, we have perpetuated for posterity in the clear and ringing statement of no less an authority than Elder T. W. Williams himself, who in his tract, Latter Day Saints, Who Are They? sets it forth as follows:

On December 5, 1847, a council of seven of the twelve apostles was held at Winter Quarters, where the body of those who adhered to Brigham Young’s claims had repaired, on their way to the West. Here “Brigham Young was nominated to be the first president of the church, and he nominated Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards to be his two counselors.”—Millenial Star, vol. 10, p. 114. These quotations are made from their own works. Besides the three who were personally interested, but four others of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles were present to vote on this important matter.

This action was presented to these members at Winter Quarters and adopted December 24, just nineteen days later. Was this “seasonable notice”? Brigham Young’s ardent supporters do not claim over one thousand people at this meeting. The general church numbered about two hundred thousand. Was one thousand members a representative portion of the entire body? Considering the means of communication and transportation at that time, was nineteen days “seasonable notice,” to all of the church then scattered over two continents? . . .

This assumption of power demoralized the majority of the church. They were like sheep without a shepherd, refusing absolutely to listen to Brigham’s assumptive plea.”—Latter Day Saints, Who Are They? pp. 140, 141.

Joseph Smith Would Have Stood With the Church

Joseph Smith, so often appealed to in this controversy, is again called as a witness, and his words used as if to encourage a schism. And as has been the case in numerous other instances, so anxious has been the desire to score a point, the words of the Prophet are overplayed.

Let us revert to the words of Joseph Smith:

It is a well-known and long-established principle in law, both ecclesiastic and secular, that where a church, or a number of believers, have become members of a recognized body, having a name and a confession of belief, and rules of organization and procedure, no change can be made in confession of faith, or rules of procedure, by which those rules and principles of faith are denied, reversed, changed, or abandoned, against the wish, knowledge, and consent of the membership.—SAINTS’ HERALD, April 8, 1896.

Who purposes to do anything “against the wish, knowledge, and consent of the people”? Has not the cry from the first been, To the people! Let the people speak!! “Let the church decide!!”

This premise demanding recognition of the voice of the people, Joseph Smith laid down in his statement of 1896. Nor are our friends to be allowed to intimate that since in his statement of 1903 he did not reiterate the statement, he therefore casts it out of our consideration. The words, then, “against the wish, knowledge, and consent of the people,” interpret his language of 1903. They stand, furthermore, his words to-day, in the midst of the present controversy. And most certainly misapplied when sought to be used as heretofore quoted.

President Smith in the HERALD of April 8, 1896, and December 16, 1903, was dealing with the apostasy of Brigham Young and party, and with the consequent justification for the Reorganization. Our friends, then, have no right to quote these his words with the implication intimated, unless it can be established as a fact what their use here insinuates—which is that Joseph Smith, were he alive, and did the conference adopt the document on church government, would declare the church under like condemnation with the apostate Utah Church, rejected, and the situation demanding a reorganization.

Indeed, the parallel does not run. The situation is the direct opposite. Brigham Young drew off a minority, and at Winter Quarters, away from the church, without due notice, the prophet and president whom God had chosen being dead, as a self-appointed leader he perpetrated his purpose by asserting his assumed leadership, thus entering upon his apostasy. Now we purpose, after due notice, in the open conference, by the voice of the people, for months in preparation to speak—we come to the conference not to set up a self-appointed leadership; not to begin a work of apostasy; not to drag in damnable heresies on an unsuspecting people; and grave crime in the name of religion; but to interpret our law of administrative government. And to sustain the man God has appointed as president and prophet, as worthy to carry forward our understanding of the law touching the matter of administrative government.

We, too, knew Joseph Smith. And most of all, we remember his moderation and his tolerance. From this intimate acquaintance and fond memory we are.
as qualified as are our friends to judge as to what he would think, and feel, and do, were he alive to-day.
And most unhesitatingly we say—and all the people who knew him will say Amen—Joseph Smith if alive to-day would not bolt the conference. Nor would he encourage others to bolt the conference.
For he would not hold the church to be in apostasy;
and that there was justification for a reorganization, like as followed the usurpation of Brigham.

And with every bit as much confidence we suggest what Joseph Smith would do were he alive to-day.
He would bide the voice of the people. And he would say to his brethren dissenting: Brethren, be considerate. Do not bolt the conference. You have taken your cause to the people. The people have spoken.
If not satisfied, leave your cause "to the arbitrament of time." For if the people have erred, they will in time reverse the action. Or God will speak to us in correction. Stand here with me, brethren, in the midst of the people.

Yes, we know full well what Joseph Smith would do. He would set his face like flint against any and every encouragement for a split; and most vigorously against every effort in that direction.

Our friends have quoted the words of Joseph Smith in vain. Joseph Smith would take his stand with the people.

Who Dares to Speak Out?
The Presidency have said before time they will bide the voice of the people. We join the Presidency before time to say, If the voice of the people be lifted up against us in denial of the document on church government, and though they adopt what we have not approved, yet the voice of the people we purpose to obey.

Who dares as openly say beforetime, I will not obey the voice of the people!

Who dares say beforetime, I will lead out of the conference in a split!

Who dares say beforetime, I will leave the church, and lay claim to the property of the church!

Who dares even say, I will stay with the church, but I will go to the civil courts in an endeavor by injunction to defeat the will of the people!

Sunday, March 22, has been the date for raising funds to erect a home for the aged at Bridgeport, Connecticut, as a memorial to Fannie Crosby, the famous blind writer of evangelical songs. Doctor S. Parkes Cadman is chairman of a nonsectarian organization to do this work.

NEWS AND LETTERS

The Des Moines Conference a Spiritual Feast
The annual conference of this district was held at Des Moines February 6, 7, and 8, with a record attendance. Elder Roy Cheville of Graceland College was in attendance at the Friday sessions, taking an active part in the program.
Apostle E. J. Gleazer was also present and assisted in presiding over the conference sessions.

Besides being the largest conference of the district, it was the most spiritual. The Saints met in the old Presbyterian church at East Ninth and Filmore Streets, and on Sunday in Grotto Hall on Eight and Locust Streets.

At the opening of the Friday evening entertainment Evangelist John F. Martin appeared, much to the surprise and joy of his many friends who were congregated there. The program had been arranged by Stephen Robinson and was very excellent in every way.

The business of the conference was disposed of expeditiously and with very little friction. The district officers were sustained with the exception that Brother Box of Pershing was elected chorister, and Margaret Wilkinson, secretary. The Packard Branch was ordered disorganized, and a recommendation adopted that a branch be organized at Pershing. General Conference delegates were elected in the usual way. A resolution was adopted asking the presidency of the conference to name the nominating committee, which resulted in the appointment of E. O. Clark, C. M. Richeson, and C. Malcor. Their nominations were accepted with the exception of Estella Lentell, who was added to the list in place of one of the visiting brethren.

The sermon Saturday night was by Brother Martin, who in his clear and humble manner presented the truth.

At seven o'clock Sunday morning the priesthood found their way through a dense fog to Hopac Grotto, where Brother Gleazer lectured on the subject of "Laborers in the vineyard," showing that we could not make the excuse that no man hath hired us. A young people's service followed at a quarter after eight, with George Orr and William Robinson in charge.
Several of the young people took part.

Sunday school was called at half past nine. Three large classes were formed of the adults, and the elementary classes were divided according to age. Three hundred were counted by the secretary.

At eleven o'clock Brother E. J. Gleazer announced as his subject "The matter of adjustment with regard to steward­ ships." He gave much that will keep the Saints busy for months to come.

Dinner was served in the large banquet hall by the sisters.
Suffice it to say that all pronounced themselves well fed.

The prayer service at a quarter after two was filled with good testimonies on the theme of service. The spirit of truth was present and filled the room, many partaking of it to a fullness. The Saints were admonished as well as comforted; fear was banished from our hearts, and we were made to feel that that which was troubling the church would soon pass, and we would go onward to victory.

At 6.15 the Religio met to hear a seventeen-year-old boy perform on the xylophone, and listen to Judge Hubert Utterback speak. Needless to say, this program, which included other features also, was well received.

Brother Gleazer's evening sermon was a continuation of his morning subject and was exceedingly instructive. Service was the watchword of the conference, and nearly all entered into the sessions with a feeling of fellowship that was good to experience, and all felt that they had a part in the work.

Bishop McGuire Visits San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, February 10.—There has been a great deal of sickness in southwestern Texas this winter, as influenza and pneumonia are very prevalent. Brother and Sister Will Adams lost their youngest daughter, Eideth, as a result of the influenza. Our pastor’s mother, Sister Lydia Jett, has been very low, but at last report she was improving some.

On January 25 we were favored by a sermon from Bishop B. R. McGuire, which was very much appreciated by the Saints in attendance. We had been looking forward for some time to this visit as we hoped to get some advice in regard to remodeling our building or erecting a new church. Work has not yet started on the building, but we hope to get started soon.

After the sacrament had been served the first Sunday of the month, the remainder of the hour was spent in a sermon from Brother E. L. Henson, who had been requested to preach for the benefit of some who could not attend the evening service. He talked on the life of Christ and the great sacrifice he had made in giving his life for those whom he loved, admonishing all to follow in his footsteps. This was the first sermon Brother Henson had preached in about five years, but it had the old-time ring, and all who were privileged to hear him were edified. Last Sunday he preached in the evening, using for his subject, “Faith.” The meeting was well attended, and we are sure all felt repaid for the effort made in coming out.

The morning hour was occupied by Pastor T. J. Jett, jr., his theme being unity among the Saints. His talk was both instructive and edifying. He requested that the Saints fast and pray on next Sunday, that they might be more united as a branch and that the leading quorums might become united.

The Sunday school is increasing in attendance, and the new officers, Brothers Rouss Eastham and Theodore Dorow, are trying to bring our school to the front. We have already started on the Christmas offering for 1925.

The Beligio hour has been changed from Friday evening to six o’clock Sunday evening, and the change seems to bring better attendance. Sister Laura Buck, who is the president, is doing all she can to make it interesting.

Quite recently Sister Pauline Davis was united in marriage to Mr. Allnutt, Pastor T. J. Jett, jr., officiating. The Saints wish them a long and happy life.

El Reno, Oklahoma

February 10.—Our sacramental service ranks among the best in attendance and spirituality. An inspired message gave warning against carelessness and the terrible consequences of a disregard for the work of the Lord. A gradual advancement is being made in spirituality, yet as we recount the flock closely we find some absent. Would that all could appreciate the value of this wonderful work which my companion calls, “The pearl of great price.”

On December 17 Brother James M. Needham was baptized, being fully persuaded of the truth of the message. He came in humility and found peace and happiness in the gospel message. Also on January 29 Brother William A. Reeves knocked at the door of the church, and “John” the porter opened unto him, and he entered with joy into the fold. His first testimony was: “I have not been so happy in forty years.” Ice had to be removed for the last baptism, but nobody suffered from the cold. These baptisms occurred in the same place where Brother Case baptized so many at his tent meetings here—because there is “much water” there.

We find in Brother W. A. Connell a willing helper in the work. He is the teacher in the Beligio, and gives general help all around, occasionally preaching one of his characteristic sermons. Sister Connell is the leader of the singing.

The Sunday school is in a prosperous condition, full of life and energy. Brother G. C. Lewis is superintendent, with Brother Louis Dalton as assistant. Both are alive in the work.

Times are quite dull here in the industrial world, which occasions unrest with many. Some of our members are on the move, some have moved, all of which is felt in our services, but we hope the scattered seed will retain the life germ, the active saving truth.

We have a great variety of weather down here, such as is had from California to Missouri. At present it is cold and windy.

Rich Hill, Missouri

February 3.—The cold weather has kept some away who wished to attend church, but now that the weather is improving we are expecting more of the Saints at our services. At our last business meeting Brother August Dellar was elected president of the branch, and we are looking forward to a successful year.

Brother Ralph Murdock has moved to Cross Timbers, Missouri, and while we regret the loss of a good, hard-working brother, at the same time we wish him the best of success in his new field.

Brother H. E. Moler has been with us for the last ten days. We have enjoyed the meetings very much, and quite an interest has been shown. We would like very much to have some one here later in the spring to hold meetings, as we feel some will accept the gospel, and that is surely the aim for which we are striving.

If any of the Saints are not taking the HERALD, they are missing one of the easy ways of keeping themselves informed on the big issues that are confronting the church to-day.

We trust that the work of the Master will go on to completion.

Special Meetings by Harvey Minton

VINAL HAVEN, MAINE.—Sunday, February 8, Elder Harvey Minton opened a series of meetings on the important subject, “The solid foundation,” and had a large gathering and a wonderful flow of the spirit of the heavenly Father.

Tract committees have been organized, also committees for entertainment, prayer, building, and others, and the Saints entered into a drive of several weeks without any doubt that souls will be won for Christ. Their desires, as expressed in the service Sunday, are that they may put their shoulders to the wheel and do their very best that others may enjoy the blessings of the gospel as they are enjoying them every day.

Brother Minton is a live wire in delivering the message for Christ, and the Saints in this part of the vineyard are proud that such a man, with keen and alert mind, has been sent to labor with them.

We ask the Saints everywhere to pray for the success of these meetings. We need your cooperation, and will remember you in our prayers.
Independence

Stone Church

On February 17 the officers and teachers of the First Independence Sunday school met in the dining hall for the third annual reception. The orchestra furnished music for the first forty-five minutes, during which time each one was urged to get acquainted with his neighbor. This was facilitated by means of an identification tag which each one wore, showing name and place in the Sunday school. Following this, each of the six departments contributed some entertaining feature which did not exceed ten minutes in length. These were of a pleasing variety, and many clever means of entertainment were introduced with the object of securing as large a participation of the officers and teachers in these programs as possible. This fact contributed very largely to the success. After this the interesting facts in connection with the Sunday school were presented to the audience by means of lantern slides especially prepared for the occasion by the superintendent. A ten-minute sing followed, in which the musical director, Harold C. Burgess, introduced considerable action as well as the use of their vocal powers. After refreshments were served the assembly was dismissed with prayer by the pastor.

February 22 was observed by the Sunday school as good citizenship day. Special programs in all departments emphasizing qualities of good citizenship both in church and state were featured. Alden Russell made a five-minute talk before the main school on this subject, and the singing was of a patriotic nature. The spirit of temperance was also combined in this program, which lays a basis for good citizenship. The temperance department of the W. C. T. U. chapter of the Stone Church combined with the school in fostering the movement.

The junior department meeting at the Institute Building is continuing to emphasize the "bring your own Bible" movement. About one hundred out of one hundred and thirty in attendance Sunday brought their own Bibles.

A new officer has been added to the executive committee to function as financial secretary. Elder Roy Young is to do the pioneering work in this field, of teaching religion of giving and also the religious aspect of giving; also to acquaint the various departments with the purposes for which we are to give and the needs of the Sunday school and the church.

The entire priesthood of Zion were called together by the Presidency Monday evening. The lower auditorium of the Stone Church was practically filled by the various members of the priesthood.

At the conference of Zion held February 2, the budget providing for the operating expenses of the eight churches in Zion, was approved. The priesthood Monday evening practically unanimously agreed to use their influence to try to raise the budget of $14,500 by April first, $1,800 being subscribed by those present.

Mass meetings will be held in the eight churches Monday evening, March 2, to receive cash and pledges to apply to the budget. A canvass will also be made following the mass meeting in each of the forty-three groups.

Second Church

Our priesthood was present to a man Sunday afternoon and participated in the general priesthood meeting called by the Presidency.

Sunday morning the Saints had the privilege of hearing Elder U. W. Greene, the first time for many months. Sunday evening Elder John A. Dowker preached with splendid liberty to the congregation assembled, which was small in number because of the hard rainstorm.

Walnut Park

Sunday speakers, morning and evening, were W. H. Kelley and B. J. Scott. Apostle J. F. Curtis spoke at the close of the Sunday school class period, giving a short temperance lesson, and at three in the afternoon Sister Blanche Edwards from Lamoni talked on home building.

These services all furnished much food for thought, and we are surely required to be better men and women because of our opportunities to learn from these gifted and experienced speakers.

Liberty Street

The Saints of Independence, and especially those of Liberty Street, were caused to mourn February 18 when Howard Settles, the sixteen-year-old son of Sister Joseph Westwood, was killed at Junior High School when a part of the iron flag pole fell and struck him on the head, fracturing his skull. He was taken to the Sanitarium but could not be saved. The funeral was held Friday afternoon from Liberty Street Church, with the sermon by Elder J. M. Baker. Howard was a general favorite among his associates, so the loss will be greatly felt.

Because of the reception being held Monday night for Sister Blanche Edwards, the Temple Builders had their meeting on Saturday evening.

The attendance at Sunday school is steadily increasing, and the building now is very crowded for Sunday school. Sunday morning Brother J. A. Dowker continued his series of sermons, and in the evening we were glad to hear from Elder Arthur Allen, who spoke on the Presidency's call to prayer.

Enoch Hill

Sunday, the 15th, Kenneth Morford, one of our local young men addressed us at the morning hour. In the evening service Elder J. W. A. Bailey gave an inspiring talk to a very appreciative audience. Sister Fannie Pender should have been with us to recount her experiences in the Isle of Pines, but she was called out of town at the last moment. Brother Bailey very nobly responded at short notice.

Our young people's prayer meetings on Wednesday nights are proving very attractive. Good attendances are the rule, and the young of this vicinity are enthusiastic. Brother Joseph Martin has charge of the services.

Last Sunday Elder L. E. Hills addressed us and delivered a very fine discourse on the Book of Mormon and its relation to the Jews. At 7 p. m. Elder J. M. Baker addressed us, and we were very glad to have him with us. He preached an interesting sermon.

At 8 p. m. Monday the choir members and several friends gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Claude Gouldsmith, and, having induced their choir leader, Brother Charles Warren, to come over, they surprised him with the presentation of a birthday gift in the form of a nice baton. Brother Warren has faithfully led our choir for a number of years and on this occasion those who had benefited under his leadership desired to show that they appreciated his work and devotion to this branch of church activities.

East Independence

The work on the new church is in progress again with a view to finishing the basement so that services can be held there.

Sunday morning the Saints enjoyed hearing the pastor, Brother A. H. Parsons. In the evening Brother Albert Thatcher addressed us. On account of the storm not many were present. The speaker urged us to have a willingness for service.

The total enrollment of the Sunday school is seventy-five, and the average attendance for February was about sixty.
On February 8 all officers were present, and on the 8th and the 15th all teachers were present. A cradle roll class has been organized the last month with Sister Stockwood in charge during the Sunday school hour. Sister J. J. Teeter was placed in general charge of the cradle roll work by the Department of Women. There seems to be a good interest in the Sunday school, and this department is moving onward.

Several of the priesthood attended the priesthood meeting at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon.

Lincoln, Nebraska

February 11.—The faithful few still carry on to the best of their ability.

The Department of Women, under the direction of Sister Martha Gammon, closed a successful year's work in December. They held a bazaar in that month which brought the year's earnings up to a nice little amount. If it were not for the help this department is able to give in a financial way, we would be at a loss to know how to meet all the demands.

Sister T. J. Chapple is the leader for the coming year, but she is at present in Omaha, so no plans have been laid out for future work.

The Christmas entertainment was given the Sunday evening before Christmas and was in two parts. The first part was provided by the Temple Builders, who gave "Aunt Sabina's Christmas." This playlet was well done, and some of the parts were so real that many were moved to tears. The second part of the program was given by the children of the Sunday School. All did well, and it certainly was an evening much to be enjoyed. The Christmas offering for the year was $100. An entirely new corps of officers is in charge of the school for the present year, and we wish them success and abundant cooperation.

Brother G. R. Wells, our pastor for the past few months, has been obliged to give up his work and go home because of his wife's health. He will be greatly missed. Brother Marcus Bilyue is acting as president of the branch.

The church is undergoing some needed repairs, and the upper room is being re-decorated. It will seem nice to see it all fresh and clean once more.

Sister Lillie Allen, who had the misfortune to fall and break her right arm some time ago, is recovering nicely, but it takes time.

Lincoln and the Southern Nebraska District went over the top on the radio drive.

Midland District Reunion

BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND, January 30.—The Midland district reunion convened in the Saints' meeting room, Leicester, January 10 and 11, 1925. A little time on Saturday was spent in business, the chief item being the appointment of Sister Blanche Edwards and Brother Voas Meredith as delegates to General Conference. The work of the Department of Recreation and Expression was in charge of Brother H. Meredith. Short talks on the subject were given by Brothers T. Bailey, Newport, and Abel Hall. Sisters A. Meredith and Norton occupied the time allotted to the Department of Women, and Brother Willis, the scoutmaster, gave a talk along the line of scouting. Owing to the absence of Brother Rawling, the health superintendent, Brother Norton occupied the time with a talk on first aid. The Orioles were in charge of Sister N. Schofield.

Sunday began with prayer service, which was followed by preaching by Brother G. Willis. At half past one priesthood meeting was held, a goodly number attending.

A good portion of the Spirit was felt in the testimony meeting at half past two. The Sunday school took charge at four o'clock, with Brother T. Bailey as the speaker.

Preaching service was again held at six o'clock, at which time a quartet sang, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," the singers being Brother and Sister Newport, Sister I. Norton, and Brother T. Norton. Brother A. Hall was the speaker of the evening, and he gave a fine sermon on "Let no man despise thy youth."

The whole theme of the reunion seemed to be, "Catering to the young." MAVIS MEREDITH, District Secretary.

William Grice in Successful Meetings

APPLEGATE, MICHIGAN, February 5.—Elder William Grice, of Croswell, Michigan, closed a very successful series of meetings at this place, with large crowds and the best of interest and order. The Spirit was present in power every night, and many are believing. Also many friends were won to the cause.

Some, who have always contended, are against the work, but the Saints are encouraged and happy and are anxiously awaiting warmer weather, when Brother Grice has promised to return. We feel sure there will be an ingathering here.

Elder William Davis preached two splendid sermons and helped in other ways for a week. It has been almost impossible to arouse an interest here before, but we believe the time has come for a grand work to be done and are praying to that end. Brother Grice said he never felt better in the work than here, and the Saints stood by him loyally.

OLIVE L. SMITH.

Central Chicago

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The branch here is enjoying the new spirit of zeal which has taken hold of its members. Our sacramental service on the first was a wonderful one, and the benefits derived therefrom were many.

Many healings have been experienced in the branch in the past few weeks. Last Sunday we had two baptisms, for which we are thankful.

We have had with us the past week Brother and Sister Shepherd from England and Brother Hayer from South Dakota, all of whom we enjoyed having with us. Brother Wildermuth visited us Sunday evening, and we are expecting Apostle E. J. Gleazer next Wednesday.

Possibly the most noticeable growth is that of the Sunday school. Sister Hattie K. Bell, assistant superintendent, keeps in touch with all of the classes, and her enthusiasm is quite contagious. Brother Roy Healy has a large class of young people, and their presence in a body in the front seats at sacramental service was inspiring. They gave a reception to the branch last month and are now planning a Valentine party. Old and young are invited to these affairs, and they are truly enjoyable.

One of the Religious entertainments worthy of special mention was a scene laid in the home of Brother and Sister Keir ten years hence. Some of the young people were gathered there and were looking over some old HERALDS and AUTUMN LEAVES from "away back in 1926" and as one would read an article others would make comments such as, "Why, I remember that! That was before the new church was built," etc.

Last Friday we had a playlet written and dramatized by our own young people. Brother Roy Hurst was the playwright, and the sparkling wit was greeted with peals of laughter.

Brother H. P. W. Keir and Brother and Sister Baldwin are the teachers of the three classes in the Religious Book of

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Mormon class, the young people's Book of Mormon class, and the children's class.

The Department of Women is meeting every week for singing and by way of intellectual development and recreation are doing a little chorus work. Sister Bell Simmons is head of the department and director of the chorus.

The choir, under the direction of Sister Nina Campbell, is growing in many ways. It is twice its former size.

An open priesthood meeting was held last Sunday afternoon, at which Brother Hayer was the speaker.

With grateful hearts for the increased activity, we are trying to press forward.

First Chicago Branch

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The unusually warm weather we have been experiencing here lately, together with the spiritual food offered by the brothers, has been an incentive to activity on the part of the membership. Elders Harry Passman and L. V. Butterworth occupied the pulpit for the day on January 25, each being especially blessed in the delivery of the word. Brother Passman read from the second chapter of Revelation, choosing as his topic, "Our first love." His talk was very instructive and interesting, made more so by his recent experiences in the Holy Land. Brother Butterworth delivered one of his best sermons from the topic, "The church militant operative," as recorded in John 15. Our brother surely spoke as one having authority, placing special emphasis upon the word operative.

At the hour for the Department of Recreation and Expression we were agreeably surprised by having with us a full-blooded Lamanite, Brother C. W. Hare, from Wagner, South Dakota, who gave a short and instructive talk relative to the Indian. Brother Hare was very earnest and sincere and expressed admiration and appreciation for the work of Sister W. L. Coffman in Wagner. The Saints here feel to acknowledge her efforts by quoting the Master, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

A beautiful morning greeted the Saints on February 1, and the Sunday school started the day with an eighty-two per cent attendance. Following this service we experienced one of the best sacrament meetings, with Pastor A. C. Edstrom in charge, assisted by Elder F. McDonald. The remainder of the priesthood, twelve in number, occupied the choir loft. With an attendance well over the one hundred mark, there were seven prayers, twenty-one testimonies, and the sacrifices made, but that there were yet present those who had to purge and purify their lives and by so doing the Father would bestow more and greater blessings. Our Lamanite brother was also instructed to study and prepare for greater responsibilities. In the evening service Pastor A. C. Edstrom was the speaker, instructing us in the establishing of Zion.

At the evening meeting we learned of the death at half past four in the afternoon of Sister Elizabeth Cox, grandmother to Sister Grace Johnson, and better known as "Grandma Cox." Our sister was baptized in the early days of the Reorganization and lived to the ripe age of ninety years. She was one of the most patient, lovable, and spiritual characters to be found anywhere, being molded by her Savior and Friend with whom she talked and confided daily. Her funeral was held at the church in charge of John Cooper.

The morning of February 8 Brother F. McDonald retold the story of the rebuked tree, as it was presented by the Savior in Judea two thousand years ago, and as recorded in Luke 18, drawing from it a forceful lesson in faith. In the evening Patriarch Richard Baldwin introduced a young couple, Brother and Sister Shepherd, who have just arrived from Clay Cross, England, and are on their way to Grace-lund College. Brother Shepherd spoke for a short time at the Religio service, telling in an entertaining way of his first impressions of America. Brother Baldwin preached in the evening, using as a basis for his discourse Matthew 16:18. We are surely glad Brother and Sister Baldwin were sent to help us in this big city. We were also favored at this service with a duet from Brothers Hadley and Barrows, who played the guitar and violin.

At the close of this service were again informed of the death of another of our aged sisters, Sister Polla Thomas, who was eighty-two years old. She was one of our most faithful members and actively supported the Department of Women in her declining years. The funeral was held at her home in charge of Brother Baldwin, after which the Eastern Stars, of which she was a member, held a short service. Sister Thomas leaves a daughter and two stepsons.

Brother William Salander has just returned from Edoni, Ohio, where he buried his aged father. We extend to him and the relatives of our departed sister our heartfelt sympathy.

The Department of Women held its first meeting this year, electing Sister Hattie St. John as president. The ladies brought their lunches and spent the day in service.

Referring to the last paragraph of our news item of January 27, let us say that some of the Saints visiting Chicago had difficulty in locating our branch, so we place the address of the church at the end of this article, that others might not have the same difficulty. The address is 4416 Gladys Avenue.

An Uplift at Brockton

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS, February 9.—Brother Orval Thompson has just completed a series of meetings here, and they have been very well attended. The instruction received was beneficial, and we feel the greatness and responsibility of God's work more than ever before. One thought which our brother impressed upon us was the fact that we are rendering service more because we love to do it than from a sense of duty. His voice among us has encouraged all, and although he has left for a season, the kind words he has spoken and the spirit which accompanied them will always remain with us to urge us on to our goal.

We have been blessed wonderfully of late, and everyone desires to labor together with God and each other to carry out the great commandments of God.

The Department of Recreation and Expression is working very nicely through socials and program work. The Sunday school also is accomplishing its purpose here. Almost everyone seems to realize the importance of teamwork, and when we arrive at that point we are sure to go on with the load.

We have one feature in the form of a program at each Religio hour every Sunday night at six o'clock, when an exhibition of debating skill is allowed on different subjects relating to our work. We also have solos, duets, recitations, and instrumental selections. In this way we get more people out to the Book of Mormon study under the direction of an old authority on the subject. This also helps to make the evening preaching service a success.

We trust that as a branch we shall do our part in the interest of this work.
Radio Flashes

(Some reports recently received at K F F V.)

Somersworth, New Hampshire.—I was agreeably surprised last evening to tune in your station just before you signed off. When I heard you report that letter from New York, and say that you seldom received reports from that section, I thought you would be glad to know you were heard here in this city, and very plainly, although I had to tune so closely to get you that considerable noise came in with it.—Henry C. Seams.

West Brome, Quebec, Canada.—Picked up station K F F V last night (Monday) at 9.05. Heard Jolly Four Quartet singing "Water lilies," also heard letters and Ekko cards acknowledged. Transmission clear, but weak.—W. Gordon Durkee.

Boston, Massachusetts.—Last night I heard you express pleasure at an acknowledgment from New York, hence I thought you might be interested to know that I listened to K F F V's program from 8.55 to 9.15 p.m., E. S. T., February 2. Tell the Jolly Four Quartet of Lamoni high school that their singing reached Boston in fine shape.—Erving N. Fox.

Exeter, New Hampshire.—About 8.50 p.m. to-night I picked up your signals and heard a reading followed by a piano duet. It was quite clear.—Charles J. Haley.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Enjoyed your program of February 2 so much. Will be listening in again next Thursday and Monday.—Doris Kay.

High Priests, Attention

Brother A. B. Phillips and I have been asked to put on a parliamentary drill as part of the program for the High Priests' Quorum for the coming conference. We would be glad to hear from the members of said quorum in regard to their needs along this line. Are there any problems you would like to have solved, or special matters connected with their work of presiding that they would like to have us take up in this drill? Any suggestions that would aid us in making the drill of benefit to the quorum will be gladly received.

HYRUM O. SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 711 South Fuller.

Conference Delegates

In answer to the many inquiries that have come to us in regard to the free transportation for those holding clergy permits, and for branch presidents, over the Chicago & Alton Railroad, would say that all holding clergy certificates, either Eastern or Western, will be granted free passes. These passes will be issued for transportation from Chicago to Independence, and return to Chicago. The Chicago & Alton people have promised that they will put on standard tourist cars, and the berths will cost $2.25 for lower, and $1.80 for upper. Those wishing berths will please send in their order immediately, stating whether they wish lower or upper berth.

So far we have received applications only from the ministry for free passes, and you must know that in order to obtain these free passes, we must have also a fair representation of the conference delegates who will travel by this road from Chicago. We would, therefore, urge the ministry and those who have already sent in their applications for free passes, to do everything they can to forward us the names of delegates. And we would also make our appeal to the delegates to send in their names, for if we obtain free passes for our ministry it will mean a great saving of money.

In going to Independence the trains leaves Chicago at eight o'clock Saturday evening, April 4, and in coming back to Chicago, the delegates may come whenever they wish, of course observing the Presidency's instructions in the Herald of February 18, in regard to time limit.

Address: Richard Baldwin, 6823 Yale Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Third Annual Young People’s Convention

The Third International Young People's Convention will meet June 4 to 14 at Lamoni, Iowa. At first there was some doubt as to whether the convention should be held this year on account of General Conference coming in April, but inquiries of the young people concerned revealed the fact that they are very anxious to have another convention this year because there are many, especially school-teachers, college and high school students, who could not attend General Conference.

No definite plans have as yet been made, but announcement of them will be made in the HERALD as soon as possible. Some interesting changes in the program are under consideration, making the convention this year more like a school—more instructive and more adapted to the needs of those who come.

Although the new Convention Hall and Gymnasium is not yet completed, it is hoped that it may be completed in time for use, as it will prove to be a great advantage in many ways. Enthusiastic responses are being received from the young people, and from all indications the convention will be highly successful this year.

A Further Explanation

In his article, “An explanation,” appearing in the HERALD for February 11, Bishop James F. Keir seems to feel that I have misrepresented the position of the Presiding Bishopric. I understand that the part of my article in HERALD of February 4, to which Brother Keir refers, is as follows, and the part to which he objects is the last paragraph:

A young brother came to me and said, “It is rumored that in case the Presidency is not sustained they will rise up and say, ‘All who agree with us come and follow us!’”

I replied, “The Presidency will do no such thing. Neither the Presidency nor any member of it if not supported by the majority will divide the church and lead away a faction. Conceivably they might relinquish their present official position or be relieved of it; but they will not lead away a minority.”

I had that pledge from President F. M. Smith during the conference of 1922, and he has renewed it since I began this editorial. In it I join, I can think of myself as leaving the presidency and working in some humbler capacity; never as leaving the church, or dividing the church. . . .

Another came to me and said, “It is rumored that if the position of the Presidency is sustained, the minority will draw away and form a new faction, under the plea that the church has gone into apostasy.”

I replied, “Such a thing is incredible, as the signers of the Open Letter were first to appeal to the General Conference and pledge themselves to its decision.” Will I be forced to revise that answer? I trust not.

I am pleased to add that since the above lines were written the Presiding Bishopric, individually and collectively, have assured us that so far as they are concerned my answer to the above rumors was correct.

The paragraph in question was written and inserted after the balance of the editorial was in the hands of the editor. I thought it truly represented the position of the Bishopric, and in a favorable light. For no matter how poorly the paragraph may have been worded, it was intended to convey my impression resulting from the conversation that the bishops had not been, neither expected to be, parties to any factional movement; hence I considered my statement correct that so far as it “concerned the bishops” the rumor was not to be credited.

If I have misrepresented the bishops it is due to a misunderstanding on one side or the other, or possibly both. It is clear from Brother Keir’s article that he did not understand at least one very important point raised by the Presidency during the conversation. He evidently feels on the other hand that the bishops were misunderstood. To argue further about the incident might not be profitable. To quarrel would not become either of us.

Hence, since my statement is questioned, and recognizing clearly the right of the Bishopric to represent its own position, I can only ask Brother Keir if he will join me in some such pledge for his Bishopric as I have made for the Presidency.

A clear-cut statement of intention to abide loyally by the decision of the coming General Conference will clarify and stabilize the situation.

Such statement of intentions might well clear up several questions. Bishop Keir admits that he has:
been approached at least twice by "members" "suggesting the advisability of some legal action being necessary." The church may wish to know more about this proposition. If legal action to tie up or alienate church property is contemplated, we may as well know about it before conference, rather than after.

Again, though Bishop Keir explicitly states that he gave them no encouragement (which was eminently right, and what we would expect of Brother Keir and his associates), he does nevertheless close his article with some significant quotations, which he says set forth his own "attitude upon the rights of a minority who adhere to the law."

My observation is that every minority claims to adhere to the law. Who is to decide? We had thought conference was to decide. Was your thought? After all, is the minority to decide?

These quotations set forth that a minority that adheres to the law may declare a majority in apostasy, etc., etc. (However, there is one important point in the quotations which may be brought out at a later date, and is vital to their meaning.)

I do not presume to say what the purpose was in using these quotations; but we are at liberty to judge of their probable effect. And used at this particular time and in this particular connection they seem eminently calculated to give aid and comfort to a dissatisfied minority which might think to draw away a faction.

It comes back to the question raised in the HERALD of February 4: Are we going into the conference committed to common consent, or to common consent if—?

We had understood that it was agreed that this is such a question as can be without reservation properly and safely committed to that august body for decision. But if there is any disposition to question the decision, let us know it now rather than after the conference.

Surely democracy has not lost her lovers, nor her loveliness. She is only some months older, though perhaps wiser than when the discussion began; but she is essentially the same. How then can we be told, as I have been told, that the Presidency can safely commit themselves to the democratic expression of the voice of the people at the coming conference, while others had best not commit themselves until they see how the vote reads?

It has been urged that the Presidency can safely and properly commit themselves to the action of the conference, since if the document on church government is adopted they will get what they want; while if it is not adopted things will be exactly as they were before the discussion began—nothing lost. No, indeed, after all that has been said, and the many charges that have been made against those taking part in the advisory council as majority members, things cannot be exactly as they were if their position is repudiated. This was carefully considered when making the pledge for the Presidency.

Again, when a document goes to conference no one can safely predict what will emerge. A substitute or an amendment may be adopted quite changing the meaning and making it objectionable to the original movers. This too was considered. We have not asked of others to undertake jeopardy of personal opinion in the interests of the whole without taking similar risk.

It has been said that this is a side issue and should not detract from the discussion of the main question. But the statement made and published that the adoption of the document on church government will be "tantamount to apostasy and must result in the rejection of the church" has raised the issue. Sometimes an incidental question supersedes the main question until settled. We have discussed the main question for months, expecting it to be submitted to the conference in good faith for settlement. Now when the decision of the conference is challenged in advance it may indeed raise a "side issue," but it becomes a very important "side issue."

Naturally the delegates and ex officio members will use their best judgment. That is one source of safety. Naturally they will heed the "call to prayer" that has gone out and will seek divine guidance. That is another source of safety. Naturally, too, the great majority of them will go into the conference determined to hold together in the bonds of fellowship, trusting those bonds, though at times they be strained, and determined to abide loyally by the decision of the conference. That is still another element of safety. "A threefold cord is not easily broken." (Ecclesiastes 4: 12.)

Yours in gospel bonds,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Flint Branch History in Daily Press

A recent issue of the Flint Daily Journal contains a rather extended history of the work of the church in Flint, Michigan, since 1894, giving due credit to a number of men who have been instrumental in the development of the work there to its present efficient working basis.

We note the membership has increased until now the Saints number 724, which could be made a nucleus for a very large branch of the church. Uniformity of program in the three churches of the city is also announced. The growth of Flint Branch from the small dimension of twenty souls in 1899, the date of its organization under the direction of Apostle E. C. Briggs, is gratifying.
Executives in Church Government. No. 2

When Joseph Smith edited the HERALD there appeared in the issue for March 25, 1893, an editorial from which we have previously quoted as showing the position then set forth, that the administration of temporal affairs was subject to the supervision of the First Presidency, as follows:

After the First Presidency, in point of time in the order of their calling, came the Bishop and his counselors, officers who were appointed to have charge and direct administration of the temporal and financial affairs of the church, under the counsel and general supervision of the First Presidency, the High Council, the conferences, and the immediate word of revelation.—Page 177.

An admission which does not tally with objections urged, nor does it agree with the general attitude held, is that the general direction of the higher church authorities in temporal things has been admitted. Yet it is denied that they are subject to the direction of the Presidency when they do not desire to follow the directive advice given. This means the admission of a direction that cannot direct, an impotent sort of supervision that cannot supervise further than agrees with the ones said to be supervised; in other words, no supervision at all in the last analysis.

Any department head who refuses to acknowledge the directive rights of the Presidency becomes responsible for the necessity of taking steps to have the matter decided by church authorities or other lawful means, however reluctant the chief executive may be to be compelled to protect the interests of the church in such an emergency. Attempts to belittle the President in maintaining his lawful position by saying that Joseph Smith never asserted his authority dictatorially are not supported by the facts, to accept his own word in the matter. He does state, however, that there were but few instances when he was compelled to do so, largely because of willingness to recognize his authority. But hear him:

All are necessary in their places. To me the conflict between men in regard to office has always seemed an unseemly one. In thirty years there have been very few instances in which I have been compelled to exercise dictatorially the authority of the office of President of the church. I attribute this largely to the willingness of the people to recognize the authority, and I being a man who did not hold myself in reserve, and not being an unduly dignified man, in my apparent simplicity being of easy approach.—HERALD, 1893, p. 194.

The Higher Church Authorities

One opposing brother recently objected because I did not dwell on the "general direction of the church" instead of calling attention to "the higher church authorities," which for some reason he seemed not to relish. This was because he and others had evidently dwelt upon the former to their satisfaction, while the latter had not been so fully recognized. I do not desire to slight any part of the matter in the quotation, however, and will note a phase of the statement not so fully emphasized before. It is part of a carefully drawn document to give the legal status of the officers in the church government, and was approved by former President Joseph Smith and former Presiding Bishop Kelley, stating in definite order the rank of bishops and the degree of their authority as follows:

Seventh.—Bishops, consisting of a Presiding Bishop, and associate or local bishops—said bishops having temporal jurisdiction subject to the general direction of the church, and higher church authorities.—Church History, vol. 8, p. 709.

We note first, that "said bishops," not the Presiding Bishop alone, have temporal jurisdiction. This is in agreement with the law of God given to and accepted by the church, which says:

The word has been already given in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the church, that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations. The word which has been given at a late period should not have been so soon forgotten and disregarded by the church or any of its members.

—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

It should not be assumed, therefore, that the Presiding Bishopric alone have temporal jurisdiction, and not even the conference should attempt to pass an order to that effect, so long as God has spoken and his word has been accepted as church law. This paragraph of the Articles of Incorporation is in harmony with the divine law in this respect.

We note secondly, that this "temporal jurisdiction" of bishops is subject to the general direction of the church. A part of this general direction of the church states that it is the general authorities of the church who are made the proper counselors in spiritual AND TEMPORAL THINGS (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 9), and that the President is to BEAR THE RESPONSIBILITY of the care and oversight of the work of the church in ALL ITS DIFFERENT DEPARTMENTS, and through the constituted officers, etc. (Resolution 386: 7.) Even though the President works "through the constituted officers," he must bear the responsibility. This is one reason why the carefully drawn Article concerning the temporal jurisdiction of bishops, including the Presiding Bishop, states that they are subject to the general direction of the church, and higher church authorities, the conference having designated the President as the chief of these higher church authorities, and declared that he is to bear the responsibility of the work of the church in all of its departments.
It is perhaps to be expected that one who overlooks the purpose of these rules and laws should express doubt that these Articles adopted by the church properly "interpret the organic relationship of general church officers." (HERALD, 1925, p. 6.) Is not the work of the bishopric one of the departments of the church? Or does the objector hold that it is outside of "all of its departments" to which these church laws and rules refer? If not outside the meaning of the term all, it must be subject to the Presidency.

Official Standing of the April Council

One who endeavors to destroy confidence in the standing of the April council is not supported by the law of the church or the facts in the case. It would appear consistent for the "presiding head" to ask for a council that would include all of the bishops in the consideration of the unusual state of temporal affairs in the church, instead of excluding them from the council desired by him. As they share the "temporal jurisdiction" provided for in the law of the church, they had a right to participate in the deliberations in such circumstances.

In a previous article I have stated that the Order of Bishops is provided for under a presiding head, and quoted the revelation making the provision. (HERALD, 1924, pp. 1191, 1233.) Supervision by the Presiding Bishopric of temporalities concerning general church affairs which must naturally be dealt with by them at church headquarters is cheerfully recognized, subject to the direction of higher church authorities. However, the fact that the law gives both the Presidency and the Twelve the right to investigate temporal matters when the conditions require, shows that the April council was lawfully constituted, and was in fact the most proper council to deal with conditions as they existed.

Not the Presiding Bishopric Alone

The law, as we have shown, clearly discounts the tendency to confine temporal jurisdiction to the Presiding Bishopric and to interpret the term Bishopric to mean only the Presiding Bishopric. On this point General Conference has definitely spoken and has directed how these terms should be employed:

The term The Bishopric, as used in the revelations to the church, refers to the Presiding Bishopric, and also to the association of men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head; therefore, 1. Be it resolved, That when reference is made to the Presiding Bishop and his counselors, the term The Presiding Bishopric be employed. 2. Be it further resolved, That when reference is made to the bishop of a stake and his counselors, the title Stake Bishopric be used. 3. Be it further resolved, That when the association of all the bishops and their council is referred to, the term The Bishopric, or Order of Bishops be applied.—Resolution 710.

While it is true that bishops may appoint agents to act in certain places, such permission extends only until bishops are appointed, and the bishops are to be appointed by the Presidency (Doctrine and Covenants 104:8). The rule that the agent is subject to the appointment of his principal applies here, and the fact that the Presidency both appoint bishops and have directional control of the work of that department is entirely consistent with the rest of the law.

These provisions of the law all harmonize with the fact that the quotation in regard to the bishopric made in my previous article, to which objection is urged in the HERALD for January 21, page 56, was correctly applied by me. I here repeat that portion objected to, which answered Joseph's inquiry by stating that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; etc.— Doctrine and Covenants 126:10.

In the HERALD last referred to it was denied that this revelation says "the bishopric, taken as a whole," and it was also objected that it was not by the Order of Bishops that it was prepared. My article does not state that it was written by the entire order, but it was certainly by the "advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole," supported it appears by the conference. The prefatory page of the book in question states that it was:

Whoever wrote each chapter, which the book seems to show, the Order of Bishops evidently were primarily responsible for the book being compiled and issued.

Appeal to Quorums

While it is true that "a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people" would warrant an appeal to the three quorums whose decisions are provided for in the law (Doctrine and Covenants 126:10), the objection that I did not quote this part of the revelation can hardly divert the fact that the advice and action of the bishopric are there referred to, and not the Presiding Bishopric alone. The error of limiting the revelation so as to include only the Presiding Bishopric is also proven by the revelation given a few years later, which places temporalities "under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church," etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 129:8.)

This revelation mentions in particular the word given in a "late period" to the church, and evidently refers to the word in section 126 which we have quoted, the church being admonished:

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The word which has been given at a late period should not have been so soon forgotten and disregarded by the church or any of its members.—Ibid.

This application also agrees with a revelation given to the church at the same time as section 129, which says concerning the organizing of certain work in the gathering of the Saints:

The work to be done belongs to those who are by command of God made the custodians of the properties of the church; and these by their appointment are empowered to prosecute the work of caring for and using such properties as are confided to their care to accomplish the end designed. The bishop and his counselors, together with the other bishops of the church, and such other officers as the bishop may call together, with whom he may confer in council, are authorized to devise the methods of procedure.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 2, 3.

These provisions of church law agree in the two outstanding facts, that the charge and care of temporalities is placed upon the bishopric as a whole, and that this work is under the directional control of the Presidency. Had the late President Joseph Smith found a disposition to disregard this right, he doubtless would have added one more instance to the few wherein he states, “I have been compelled to exercise dictatorially the authority of the office of President of the church,” the fewness of such instances being largely due to the fact that his associates usually were willing to recognize his authority.

A Dangerous Doctrine

Is it true that because God says “all things unto me are spiritual,” they are therefore not spiritual unto us? When one uses this sort of argument in order to escape the conclusion that the Presidency hold directional control over the temporal department, it is well for us to consider where this new doctrine leads to.

As incidental to the examination I quote again the word of the Lord in regard to the spiritual nature of all his work, which informs us:

Wherefore, verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam your father, whom I created; behold, I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him; for my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.

Our mentioned objector indicates that he is almost inclined to consider it but quibbling to affirm that the laws given to us are spiritual (HERALD for January 14, page 33), and he argues that they are not spiritual unto us. I am frank to say that, whatever the laws of God may be to him, to me they are spiritual. It is divinely clear and beautiful to realize that the things termed temporal in the world are spiritual when employed in the service of God for spiritual purposes, and there is no more certain or more salient truth than that all of the Lord’s law to his faithful people is spiritual. The work of God, being spiritual, comes under the directional control of the “higher church authorities,” for they are over all departments of church work. The use of the word temporal and the word financial conveniently express certain phases of our incidental activities, which are helps and subordinate to the spiritual supervision of the whole work of God on earth. It is a new and dangerous doctrine to affirm that the spiritual head on earth may be disregarded by the temporal department at its will, and it is a doctrine that leads towards apostasy from the spiritual direction that God has provided for his church. By conversion to God’s work we become spiritual and recognize the spiritual nature of the law, as Paul states:

For we know that the commandment is spiritual; but when I was under the law, I was yet carnal, sold under sin. But now I am spiritual; for which I am commanded to do, I do; and that which I am commanded not to allow, I allow not.—Romans 7: 14, 15, Inspired Version.

Other Revelations on Supervision

Not long after the first bishop of the church had been appointed, a revelation was given directing that certain men be appointed to purchase lands and commence a city. Here the Saints were to gather under the direction of the Presidency and the Bishop:

every man according to his family, according to his circumstances, and as is appointed to him by the presidency and the bishop of the church, according to the laws and commandments, which ye have received, and which ye shall hereafter receive.—Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2.

The supervision of the Presidency in connection with the work of the Bishop is here clearly required. Nor is this supervision confined to the work here mentioned, for it extends to all other “affairs of the church,” and is one of the chief duties of their office, including both presiding and setting in order. On this point we note the following command to the President:

And now, verily I say unto you, I give unto you a commandment, that you continue in the ministry and presidency, and when you have finished the translation of the prophets, you shall from henceforth preside over the affairs of the church and the school.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

The meaning of the word preside, in this connection, is to exercise superintendence, guidance, or control. This commandment to the Presidency is therefore strictly in accord with the revelations previously quoted, and the document approved by the April council agrees with them, being of the same tenor also as the language which follows in the same revelation, which proceeds to state:

www.LatterDayTruth.org
And this shall be your business and mission in all your lives to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom.—Ibid.

By what sort of reasoning anyone can persuade himself that the things pertaining to the work of the bishopric are no part of the affairs of the church, has not yet been made clear. Inasmuch as the Lord has said to the Presidency, that to preside over the affairs of the church is their business, who will be so presumptuous as to say that it is not their business? Is it not disputing God to insist that the Presidency ought not to preside over more than a part of the affairs of the church, when He has stated clearly that they are over all of its affairs?

Concerning Quotations Used

Objection to two or three of my quotations has been urged upon the ground that, as the brother ingeniously puts it, I begin (or end) at the “middle of a sentence.” But the one objecting had done this, and also other things of a still more objectionable nature. I had not intended to note these matters, but do so now to “let the facts be known.” I am not even now objecting to his doing so if he so prefers, but he should not condemn in others what he had repeatedly done. I ask only that his objections be compared with my articles, and shall be glad to have his articles compared with my references to them.

In all of the following citations to the brother’s work he has either begun or ended his quotation at a comma or semicolon, or has left out of the midst of his quotation matter that modifies its meaning, or has placed in his quotation certain words not found in the work from which he quotes. I am not making lengthy comments at this time, but as he thinks these matters should be noted, I present a few of them. Kindly compare his quotations with the original sources in the following instances:

In the Herald, page 752, the brother ends his quotation at a semicolon, or as he would put it, “in the middle of a sentence.” In doing so he omits words which show that the Twelve should exercise “supervisory jurisdiction” concerning certain work of the bishopric. (See Resolution 238: 7.)

One quotation begins at a comma, page 1089, and stops at a semicolon, but uses a period in doing so. He leaves out the words “of the bishopric” before the words “taken as a whole,” and directly applies the modifying clause contrary to the wording of the revelation. Since then he has accused me of “taking liberties with the word of God,” when I quoted this passage as it is in the revelation, but seems to have previously taken liberties with it himself. (See Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.)

On page 1088 he incorrectly quotes President Smith in the April council, and does not fairly represent either the atmosphere or the occasion of what was said. A considerable number of the council testify to this fact, though no official record was kept of what was said. One who has since circulated against President Smith and the action of the council certain representations had urged that all be free to speak there without being reported, and this request had been complied with by unanimous consent of those present.

On page 1136 he drops out of the midst of a statement quoted from Joseph Smith certain words indicating the possible necessity for other trustees to be appointed than the Bishopric, fails to include Joseph’s statement that he had “nothing to say to condemn the action of the church in appointing President Joseph Smith trustee,” that so far as he knew the people lost nothing by so doing. In fact, he does not include anything to show that Joseph was discussing the matter of trustees. (See Herald, 1901, p. 433.)

On page 1137 he quotes concerning “those” who are “custodians” and offers the explanation that those and custodians refer to “the Bishop.” If those custodians are, is, the Bishop, please read Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8, and also 128: 2, 3.

On page 1138 he again omits from his quotation all after a semicolon (where he had omitted words from his quotation on page 1136), and continues silent as to the fact that Joseph was speaking of trustees; this omission again occurs on page 59 of the Herald this year, hence could not have been by accident, it would seem.

On page 30 (1925) he drops out of the midst of his quotation a clause stating that the priesthood of Aaron is an “appendage to the greater, or Melchisedec priesthood,” and in order to do so places a period after a word which has a comma in the original text. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104: 8.)

On page 56 his first quotation adds several words not found in Resolution 81, which he cites. His second quotation is placed directly following the first, and he adds to it several words which seemingly make it refer back to matter in the first quotation. To do this he not only added words not found in the resolution cited, but dropped out of the sentence nineteen words, without indicating any omission. (See Resolution 238: 5.)

The foregoing instances are representative, but do not constitute one half of those that might be mentioned. Some of them he may have made by mistake, as an oversight is possible with anyone, but not all can be accounted for in this way. These references are not intended to censure the brother, but simply to present the facts in brief so as to include points on which he criticized my work.

A MESSAGE IN THE INTEREST OF THE ZION’S RELIGIO-LITERARY SOCIETY

"Seek Ye Out the Old Path and Walk Therein."

Prepared and Arranged by John M. Lloyd

ONWARD AND UPWARD

The following resolution was passed by a very substantial majority at the last Zion Conference in Independence.

This resolution positively has but one intent, and that is to reestablish an organization which the Lord declared was of his “own right-hand planting.”

Brother and Sister Delegate to General Conference, please give this matter your serious thought. If possible get an expression from your branch or district.

Remember, this resolution has no bearing whatever on the Department of Recreation and Expression. No one denies that recreation is legitimate and necessary in its proper time and place, but we think that a study so important and paramount to all Saints should not be placed under the head of a department for physical pleasure.

THE RESOLUTION

To the Saints of Zion in Conference Assembled,

Greetings:

Mr. President and Members:

Whereas, the Saints are admonished to study the Book of Mormon, and whereas, in Zion and many other branches throughout the entire church, the Zion’s Religio-Literary Society has been reorganized to meet more fully the demand for the study of the Book of Mormon, and whereas, the work of these societies has been a source of comfort and strength to the Saints; be it resolved that the Saints of Zion in conference assembly hereby petition the coming General Conference to express itself in favor of these worthy movements by authorizing the reorganization of Zion’s Religio-Literary Society for the primary purpose of the study of the Book of Mormon wherever demanded.

At different times when the study feature was receiving the necessary attention, divine blessings were promised the Zion’s Religio-Literary Society. We were told that the society was of the Lord’s right-hand planting; that he would use it in establishing Zion, and that from among its members many would be prepared and called to carry the gospel of peace to the nations of the earth. This great commission has never been canceled, and the Saints at Independence and many other places throughout the church believe that the organization should be reestablished with the primary purpose as before, that of promoting the study of the divine record which has been called the ensign of the restoration.

Has the Religio helped you? If so, it will help others. If it was a blessing to the church years ago, it will bring blessings now.

OUR RELIGIO WILL NOT NEGLECT GOD’S GREAT GIFT

The Religio was organized to promote the study of the Book of Mormon. On that foundation and purpose it prospered, and the Lord commended. Let our constant purpose be to teach the strange record of ancient America.

Unnecessary Misunderstanding Over Supreme Directional Control

By H. W. Savage

It seems to me that there is much unnecessary misunderstanding and worry over the supreme directional control document. It is urged that the President does not intend to interpret this proposition in the extreme dictatorial manner that some others interpret it. We grant, for the sake of argument, that these benevolent views are in the heart and mind of the President.

What is the reasonable conclusion that follows? Naturally this: Supreme directional control with power to enforce the same with effective discipline is not what the President wants. It expresses altogether too much; that is, as defined by Webster. It says more than is in the mind of the President. Then why misrepresent his good intentions? Why put him in a bad light before the church and the world? Why say that he wants something when we are told that he does not want such powers and will not use them?

Why force a lash into the hand of the President and an unwelcome papal crown upon his head and make him ridiculous? Why cry, "Hail, Supreme Directional Controller! For he has Effective Discipline in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge the church of all those who oppose him," when he has no such intentions? Some of the articles written and the hasty action of the Advisory Council of last April must be very embarrassing to the President if he does not want these sovereign powers.

It is urged that the President ought to have the right to interpret his own words. Granted; so long as they remain his own words. But if we adopt the words they become our own words. And if they are so ambiguous as to becloud the situation so badly as to bring us into serious trouble, such as they have brought to the President and the council, requiring endless and elaborate interpretation to show what they do mean, it would seem better to discard them altogether and use words that do express just what is intended.

Happily we are told that the President has interpreted these words. It is reported that the President has stated that he does not claim that in temporal matters he is supreme, but that the POINT is that the Bishop is NOT SUPREME. This is fortunate for all of us, including the President. Now we have the POINT before us. The bishops have all said the same thing, so we can say it altogether: THE BISHOP IS NOT SUPREME. The bishops will most certainly join us in singing this, since they have no document before us claiming supremacy.

Let the second stanza be agreed upon next. The President has said that in temporal matters he is not supreme. We all agree with him. Altogether now: THE PRESIDENT IS NOT SUPREME. Now the third. The Lord has said that certain quorums, including the Presidency, viz, the Twelve and Seventies, are EQUAL. (Doctrine and Covenants 104.) Very well, let us now sing: NO QUORUM IS SUPREME.

Let the chorus be agreed upon next. God is supreme, isn't he? Yes, we all agree. GOD IS SUPREME, and he DIRECTS us by his Holy Spirit, and we are all brethren. Let us sing that always. Let it be a song of praise in our hearts; ever praising God for his goodness and mercy to us, his wayward and imperfect children.

Away with political word juggling and arguments about who is greatest. If there is any doubt in the minds of any about the Bishopric being brethren with us and not supreme, let it be said plainly. Let us not violate the law of God by making some other quorum supreme in an effort to say that the Bishop is not supreme. Why make a pope of one in an effort to prove that another is not a pope? Why say blue is black in an effort to prove that white is not black? Why say that Mary is a bad woman in an effort to prove that Martha is good and virtuous?

Why not say what we mean? Why not say that the Bishopric are the official custodians of the temporalities of the church, but they are not the SUPREME DIRECTIONAL CONTROLLERS of the same? Why not say that they are to be directed by the General Conference and the revelations of God to the church and that they may be called in question by the various quorums as set forth in the law if such exigency should occur? This is the law as quoted over and over by both sides of the controversy.

Why talk about effective discipline among those who are engaged in a sacrificial labor of love? Let us table this document on church government which provides for supreme directional control with effective discipline strongly enough administered to prevent rebellion. When a brother is found in a fault, let us restore such an one in love lest we be found guilty of the same misdeed. To tell a brother he ought to be disciplined drives him away from us. To say to him, "I love you and want to help you," wins him back to the fold. That is Jesus' way. Let us admit to each other that we are imperfect, weak, erring mortals; objects of God's mercy, or we would not be here. Let us spend our time in telling of God's mercy to us and of his love to all.

The 18th chapter of Matthew is good reading for anyone who feels called upon to discipline his brethren. See also Mark 9: 33-37; Luke 9: 46-48. This last ought not to be read by any but the brave and strong; for it is terrible.

Luke 22: 24-26 might be read with safety to some, but it is hard to be understood in the light of this generation. Matthew 23: 1-12 is absolutely out of harmony with the spirit and genius of our modern system of education; especially the twelfth verse.
But Latter Day Saints ought to be fearless enough to read that and take it to heart. We ought to be fearless. Perfect love casteth out fear. Let us love and learn of God.

What Is a Conference?

BY E. K. EVANS

When one or more persons have one or more problems which they are anxious to solve to the mutual welfare of each and every one of them, they get together and confer, and that is a conference. That should be the only purpose of a conference.

If they come together as an organized body they have previously agreed upon some purpose for the accomplishing of which they are thus banded together. There must be something agreed upon as to how they shall proceed and how they shall determine what the result of the conference is, and how its result is to be put into effect. This agreement is constitutional in its nature and always is to the effect that the things determined in the regular orderly way agreed upon is to determine the conduct of each and every one concerned. It carries with it an agreement upon the part of all that no matter what prevails as an outcome of the conference each one will remain faithful to the group. To separate from it because some proposition is determined contrary to the judgment of one or more individuals, or to fight against it after it has been determined, is a breach of faith that at once brands such individuals unworthy of confidence. They break a covenant they made with their fellow men. Usually the only thing that can be done is to let them go; or if they remain and fight, the method is to expel them. If it is less than a national organization, force cannot be used to compel them to remain. Civil law, however, can be evoked to compel faithful fulfillment of obligations of certain kinds and to protect property or money previously accumulated.

It is quite customary and right for men to come together for conference with well-defined ideas as to what they think should prevail when they are through with conferring, but they should never come unwilling to confer, nor unwilling to abide the result of the conference. One unwilling to abide this result should not enter into the conference. If he does enter into it he does so determined to exact from his fellow men if they (the fellow men) lose what he is not willing to give if he loses.

We are to have a conference in April—perhaps.
Whether it is to be a conference or not will be determined by our conduct. If we confer it will be a conference. Many of us have reached certain convictions on ex parte evidence—possibly on all the evidence thus far available. Some of us are willing to hear some more, and when we have heard all available; then we will make a final decision to the best of our judgment and render a decision by our votes, always with the determination to abide the result of the final count.

Some of us, I fear, have reached unalterable conclusions. If all should do that, and all have a right to do it if some have, then a conference is a farce.
It is not in fact a conference. We might better without discussion cast our votes and go home.

We should not come together to get some measure through at all cost. If that is the determination of anyone, then he has not come to confer. He has come to win, not to ascertain what is right.

If any of us come to make great, long speeches down to the thirty-secondly, we have not come to confer. Such a man is an egotist. He assumes supreme directional control over the thoughts of the people assembled, but he always fails to get much more than his firstly before his hearers. They fail to listen. If there is an important matter that a man thinks ought to be presented to the assembly, let him give his firstly and then let some other men give the other numbers. Others know something, too. Others are just as logical or illogical and should also be given an opportunity to show themselves to be wise, or otherwise, as the case may be. If we try to do it all we are likely to be estimated as otherwise.
Why not let others enter into the work of the conference? We break faith with our fellow men when we take time that properly belongs to them. We take what is not ours. When our speech becomes long, or bitter, or contentious, we do not confer—we stop the conference. We waste the time that should be better occupied. If we waste one minute of 3,000 people, in the aggregate we waste fifty hours.
Transform that into money to suit yourself, and then multiply it by the minutes wasted at conference.

It is more than likely that every problem we have could be solved satisfactorily if we could meet, not for a talkfest, not for a war of words, not to win, but to confer.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
All of which means that we ought to hold a real conference in April. The last few years the word conference has been a misnomer. This year it should be true to name.

"Choose You This Day Whom Ye Will Serve."
—Joshua 24: 15

BY J. N. YORK

It would seem that under existing conditions in the church the above quotation would apply to the people of God with all the force that the language implies, because of the crisis through which we are passing as a church body; and the writer firmly believes that it is the duty and also the privilege of every Latter Day Saint to study carefully the issues of the present controversy, and weigh and measure the issues by and with the law given to govern the church by the Lawgiver. Do not prejudice your mind by taking sides for or against any man or men, but try to attain that attitude wherein you can truthfully and honestly say: “Lord, in reaching my decision in the present crisis, I promise you that thy law shall have supreme directional control.”

No Compromise With Error

To remain passive under the conviction that the matter under controversy will be compromised by both sides and a unity of opinion reached at the coming General Conference, is, to the mind of the writer, only deceiving ourselves; for the reason, the issues involved are too sharply drawn. One side of the controversy must be wrong; it may be possible that both sides are wrong, but it cannot be possible that both sides are right. Hence, if one side is right and the other wrong, it should be a shock to the conscience of every Latter Day Saint to even intimate that truth should compromise with error.

As further proof that the matter will be and is narrowing down to a decisive issue, parties on one side of the controversy issue the following ultimatum: “It is a fight to the finish.” “Those who oppose us will eliminate us, or vice versa.” A writer on the other side states: “We have come to a parting of the ways.”

The issues involved are of such a nature that they will sooner or later affect every member of the church; hence, in reaching an analysis, the only safe guide to follow is the law given by the Lawgiver under which he intended that his church should function. Under this law we have the privilege of comparing every principle or theory advanced, and the attitude of the one presenting the same, with the law; and if we find they are in harmony with the law, it is our duty to sustain both principle and party; on the other hand, if we discover they are not in harmony with the law, it is equally our duty to sustain neither the principle nor the party; for it is by the law that we are to be judged, and this rule will apply with equal force to the church as a body as to the individual.

The Question to Be Solved

To avoid entering the field of personalities and to confine ourselves to the issues, we will designate the respective sides of the issues as “A” and “B” and state the issues as we understand them:

“A” reasons that by virtue of their position, the First Presidency is vested with and does have "supreme directional control" over the church organization, more particularly in the executive or administrative branches of the organization.

“B” reasons that no quorum in the church has or can have “supreme directional control” over the organization; but that the duty of each officer or quorum is outlined and clearly defined in the law, and each official or quorum has the right to function as provided by law in his or their respective office.

If the camouflage be removed from the term supreme directional control, the issue narrows down to one word, with all that the word implies, namely: dictator. The definition is. “One invested with absolute authority.” So that one may more fully comprehend the issue, the definition of absolute is: “Free from limits or conditions; complete; unlimited; unrestricted by constitutional checks (said of a government).” The word supreme used in connection with the words directional control means “highest; greatest; highest authority or power.”

Thus, when the atmosphere is clarified, the issue under controversy stands out as follows:

“A” reasons that by virtue of their position the First Presidency is vested with the highest authority or power, being vested with absolute authority and control over the church organization.

“B” reasons that no man or quorum in the church is vested with absolute authority or power over the church organization, but that the power and duty of each officer or group or quorum is outlined and clearly defined in the law, and that each officer should have and does have the right to function in his respective office.

The question to be solved is: Does the law as given by the supreme Lawgiver vest in the First Presidency the authority as outlined by “A”? If so, then “A” is right. On the other hand, if the law does not vest authority in the First Presidency as outlined by “A,” then “A” is in error and the position taken by “B” is right.

As proof that the above is a correct statement of the position taken by “A,” the following is cited:
No Quorum Has Absolute Control

The writer knows of no Latter Day Saint who does not believe that the church organization to properly function must have the officers as outlined in the divine law; the duties of each officer or quorum being outlined; and a perfect working of each quorum with the others would result in consummating the work the gospel was intended to accomplish; but when one group or quorum assumes that they have supreme directional control over the other groups or quorums, they are acting clearly without authority of the divine law.

It would be folly to assume that one quorum could have supreme directional control over all other quorums, when the other quorums are equal in authority and power to the one assuming such position. They may have concurrent control, but never supreme or absolute control, as the following amply proves:

The twelve traveling councilors are called to be the twelve apostles, . . . And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned. The seventy are also called to preach the gospel, . . . and they form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve special witnesses or apostles, just named.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:11.

While the constitutional rights of every member of the church can and may be affected by the law of supreme control, if this rule should prevail, for the reason that it can mean nothing more nor less than centralization of power in one man or quorum, the storm center of the controversy seems to be centered on an issue between the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric; and as we understand the issue, the First Presidency assumes that the Presiding Bishopric is subordinate to them and are under their direction and control. That the temporal means are to be subordinated to the spiritual activities of the church; and those activities are under the direction and control of the Presidency . . .—Saints' Herald, December 17, 1924, p. 1211.

We make the assertion that the church of Jesus Christ is theocratic only in the sense that the Supreme Being is recognized as our Lawgiver, and Christ will be recognized and received as our King when he comes to reign on the throne of his Father; in all other respects the church organization is purely democratic; of, for, and by the people, to be maintained and sustained as provided for in the divine law. And it is the privilege of the body to comply with and adhere to the divine commands or to reject them. To place any other construction on the status of the body would do violence to the principle upon which God presents his law to man, namely: Man's free agency to accept or reject the law. This rule applies to us both collectively and individually and affects the official with the same force it does the member.

The People's Rights Safeguarded

The Bishopric assumes that their powers and duties are clearly outlined and defined by the law; that in administering the temporal law, so long as they follow the law given for their guidance, they are not subordinate to the First Presidency. See the following:

... and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern.—Doctrine and Covenants 126:10.

And it may be well to call attention to the following in this connection.

In case of transgression in his office the bishop should be called in question before the council which is provided for in the law, to which court all general officers of the church are to be subject.—Doctrine and Covenants 126:11.

By reading the above one can plainly see the Lord never intended that supreme directional control should vest in the First Presidency, the Bishopric, or any other one quorum; for the provision is wisely made: “In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people [not the Presidency or the Bishopric], the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to.” What constitutes this joint council? The Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy; each being equal in authority and power. These and these only can constitute the joint council, if the law is complied with. Thus we have concurrent control, joint control as one of the fundamentals in the operation of the law, but never supreme control or power vested in any one man or quorum. Another lesson one may draw from the above quotation, at least so far as financial or temporal matters are concerned, is: The Lord seeks to safeguard the interests of his people; and not the interests of the First Presidency, Bishopric, or any other quorum, as such.

The Lamp of History

After Christ had established the gospel plan, history reveals:

That as the organization grew in numbers it became necessary for the church to meet in council concerning the general work of the church, and as an act of courtesy the elder or bishop of the larger church was called on to preside over the assembly. In time, this privilege of presiding which had been granted as a courtesy came to be demanded as a right. Yielding to the temptations of Satan, who had himself fallen through self-exaltation, the leaders began to seek their own glory rather than the glory of the Master. They claimed it as their right, by virtue of their office, to exercise a controlling influence over the affairs of all the churches in their territory, to select their officers and ministers for them, and to be recognized as the ranking officer in that territory. This was a development of the spirit manifested in the time of the apostles, exemplified by “Diocletian, who loveth to have preeminence.”—Bible Prophecies Unfolding, p. 84.

“Supreme directional control” and “Loyalty to your leaders” seems to have been the slogan of those holding the priesthood at that time; and we of today point to the fact that, the church was led into apostasy. After the gospel was restored in these the last days, and thousands heard and obeyed the gospel message, men holding the priesthood began to seek preeminence; “supreme directional control” and “loyalty to your leaders” again was taught the people; and we of the Reorganization say the church was led into apostasy. Is it possible that history is going to repeat itself?

Even Leadership of Angels to Be Questioned

It is a regrettable fact that in the past the people have been prone to follow their leaders rather than the law, upon the theory that their leader, being called of God, is in closer touch with the divine, and his counsel should be followed. This is a dangerous attitude for the individual to assume if taken by itself. The presiding officer of a church certainly cannot be in closer touch with the divine than an angel, and Paul says:

But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.—Galatians 1:8.

Thus we see that it is possible that one may have been in close touch with the divine and yet teach contrary to the law. Paul in the above quotation is addressing himself to the people, members of the church, and the only conclusion one can reach as to the meaning of this admonition is: Study the law, and follow your officers only as they follow the law.

It seems very strange, to say the least, that during the time the late Joseph Smith occupied, and during which time the church grew from a mere handful to thousands in numbers, the position taken by “A” was never advocated by him; but when this spirit of preeminence would show itself he very quickly affixed his stamp of disapproval upon it; never seeking glory for himself, but rather seeking the welfare of the Lord’s people and the glory of his Master; during all this time always seeking to follow the command of his Savior, “But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness,” paving the way for the redemption of Zion by pointing out the divine plan that all are coworkers for Christ; all must be one; all must be pure in heart; as a means to bring about the result, rather than “supreme directional control,” “centralization of power,” “transforming the church into a commercial institution” as a means of Zion’s redemption. And during this time, he, at divers times, received divine commands and directions for the church from the One who alone has “supreme directional control,” receiving the approval of the Supreme One in his administration of the law. And now a change in methods of administration is sought. Can it be possible that the Lord, Joseph, and the church were wrong all those years and the mistake was never discovered until recently?
How Shall We Choose?

When we all appear before the judgment bar to be judged by the law according to our deeds, and are awarded our rewards or punishments as the case may be, can you imagine the Judge will say, “Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord,” if, perchance, you were asked to explain some of your actions or deeds, and you should offer as a defense the following: “Lord, there are times when people must follow a leader with a faith so sublime that they will say: I do not see all the steps that are required of me according to the plans of this leader, but from the exercise of all the intelligence I have and from the exercise of all the powers you have given me; from the exercise of all the degrees of spirituality that I could command, I, in analyzing the program, could reach no other conclusion than that that leader was leading us toward our goal; therefore, I did follow”?

As for the writer, I would much rather be in position to say: “Lord, I have kept the faith to the best of my ability; I have not relied on the arm of flesh; I have followed no leader but you. When I have lacked wisdom to rightly construe your law, I have relied on you to lead me aright by thy Spirit.”

“Choose you this day whom ye will serve.”

The Presiding Bishop “Controlled” by Law

BY ISRAEL A. SMITH

Discretionary power to receive and disburse church funds, and dispose of church property for the uses of the church, according to the laws of the church, and subject to inquiry by the Twelve and the church, must rest in the Bishopric, only, as, by law, the Bishopric only are legal custodians of such properties...—General Conference Resolution 238.

The question is, To whom has the authority been delegated?

We have been told that all powers not granted specifically or by fair implication to quorums or officers, have been reserved to the members of the church. Has there ever been a specific or express granting of powers of direction and control to the Presidency over the work of the Bishopric?

We say, No.

On the contrary, the church through its constitutional and statutory law has endowed the Presiding Bishop with powers of direction, control, and discretion. By this we mean such authority as excludes the exercise of the same powers by other quorums. There is no logical warrant for the contention of the proponents of supreme directional control on this point. The unequivocal terms of statutory enactment cannot be refuted by any amount of argument by comparing the powers of the President of the United States with the authority of the President of the church. There are too many differences to make them sufficiently analogous to warrant definite conclusions; but we earnestly contend that the President of the United States does not have authority where Congress has delegated to others the responsibility. He has large powers of direction. He is the “chief executive.” He has taken oath to see that the laws are kept; but there are departments of the executive branch of our Government in which the President has no voice whatever in their regular and ordinary conduct. Only in the event that the laws concerning that department are not kept, can he interfere, and then only to “set in order,” according to regular procedure. Those in charge are not his agents, but the agents of the Government. He cannot take over the work of the department, nor can he dictate or dominate it arbitrarily in any sense.

The President may under certain circumstances delegate to a representative the powers conferred on him by Congress, and then, and only by such delegation, may any other become the agent of the President.

The Supreme Court has disposed of any monarchical claims for the President, and when that high court has spoken, argument is closed. There is nothing left to discuss.

The executive power is vested in a president; and so far as his powers are derived from the Constitution, he is beyond the reach of any other department, except in the mode prescribed by the Constitution through the impeaching power. But it by no means follows, that every officer in every branch of that department is under the exclusive direction of the president. Such a principle, we apprehend, is not, and certainly cannot be claimed by the president. There are certain political duties imposed upon many officers in the executive department, the discharge of which is under the direction of the president. But it would be an alarming doctrine, that Congress cannot impose upon any executive officer any duty they may think proper, which is not repugnant to any rights secured and protected by the Constitution; and in such cases, the duty and responsibility grow out of and are subject to the control of the law, and not to the direction of the president. And this is emphatically the case, where the duty enjoined is of a more ministerial character.—Kendall versus United States, 12 Pet. (U. S.), 524, 610, 9L., ed. 1181.

This is good law and good sense, and the analogy here is a correct one. In the work of the Presiding Bishopric, we are controlled and directed “by the law and not by the” Presidency, and their duty, outside of an advisory oversight, is confined to seeing that the “law is kept.” Whenever it appears to them that the work of the department is not in line with “the law,” or is in “disorder,” the law, as found in Doctrine and Covenants 126, provides how the corrective measures must be taken.

It is a legal and logical paradox to hold that the powers granted by General Conference to the Presiding Bishopric can be exercised by anybody else.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Divine order and law are here apparent. Shall it be preserved? "Supreme directional control" by the Presidency will destroy the balance intended in the law.

I would like to ask our brethren to explain why the Lord in Doctrine and Covenants 126 has provided that the Presidency (in conjunction with other quorums) should set in order when in disorder if, as they allege, they, the Presidency, are always in control of the work of the Bishopric? Has the Lord done such a useless and unnecessary thing?

In closing I restate the proposition:

In the work of the Bishopric the Presiding Bishopric are directed and controlled by the law and not by the Presidency, adapting the words of the Supreme Court of the United States.

And in this work can the Presiding Bishop become supreme? Assuredly not, because as the very words themselves suggest, the law is supreme, as it always and ever ought to be in every department of the church.

Concerning the Faith of Our Fathers

BY D. T. WILLIAMS

VI. OUR FATHERS AND FINANCES

The appeal in this discussion by those in opposition to the document on church government has been to democracy. We have taken up the gauge thus laid down by them, and have sought to apply to the situation the pure principles of democracy in all their significance. We spoke in our last of government through priesthood, in the light of the democracy of our fathers of the state. We speak this week of the democracy of our fathers as applied to finances.

In the HERALD for October 8, 1924, appears the following statement:

The Constitution of the United States ... separate(s) the department of the chief executive from the department of financial administration.

This statement, to say the least, is very misleading. Not that the author who is eminent among us wrote with the intent to deceive, not for one moment would we suggest such. The effect, however, is the same. It has deceived. It seems, therefore, that an examination of this statement will prove fruitful for good. Any endeavor to dissipate error and establish truth will be welcomed by all desirous of the good of the church. May the Lord guide our minds and enlighten our souls in these matters, ought to be the prayer of each and all.

Even a superficial study of American civics makes evident the fallacy of the above proposition. The fact is, such a study sets forth exactly the opposite: there is no separation of the executive and financial departments of the United States Government. True, there are divisions of responsibility with regard to national finance. The legislature, the judiciary, and the executive, each has its part. But when we speak of the financial department of the United States Government, we quite naturally have in mind that department presided over by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is a member of the President's cabinet.

A God-Inspired Constitution

The insistent appeal in this instance as well as in others is to world democracy. Our brother says, and in this matter we are agreed, the United States Government "was manifestly ordained of God and established under His overruling providence." Again, our brother avers, and once more we are in agreement:

It is clear that God inspired men to formulate the Constitution, and that as a system of government it contains eternal truth designed to affect the condition of men in time and in "futurity."—SAINTS' HERALD, August 20, 1924.

Here a very worthy compliment is paid to the framers of the Constitution of the United States. Now, if we discover that this Constitution allows the Department of the Treasury to become the direct responsibility of the President, we will have established the fact in accord with the above testimony, that in the demonstration of democracy, God expects that there should be no separation of the "department of the chief executive from the department of financial administration." If this can be proved as being true, it will be evident that no great damage can come to our theocratic-democracy if the President is identified with the collection and distribution of church moneys.

And in this entire consideration, let it be held in mind we do not claim for the President of the church the powers resident in the President of the United States. We rest our cause as already cited a number of times in the HERALD. And again cited as follows, since our brethren in opposition have again ignored these words, to interpret the position of President Smith according to their first reprefentation, which was a misrepresentation. The language of President Elbert A. Smith thus we again quote as follows, and which is our position, and the position of President Frederick M. Smith as stated before the April council:

I am in sympathy with the statement made by the President before the council when the article was under consideration: That neither he nor the Bishop should have the individual right to either invest or expend church money without authorization. He held that regular current expenses should be authorized by General Conference. (The annual budget.) Extraordinary expenses and investments occurring during the year should be authorized by some competent council.
This accords with section 1:14; that the finances of the church may not be used as a "weapon in the hands of one man for the oppression of others, or for the purpose of self-aggrandizement, be he whomsoever he may be," the President, the Bishop, or any other man.—SAINTS' HERALD, November 5, 1924.

The brother whom we quoted in our last article made a strong appeal to political democracy. The brother whom we now cite comes forth with a similar desire. He lauds the Constitution of the United States' representative community, inspired wishing to uncontrovertibly establish their positions. The first proposition, "A centralization of power is un-American," we have examined, and portrayed its weakness. The second which affirms that the President of the United States has nothing to do with government finance, we will seek to prove as being also erroneous.

What Are Departments of Government?

Quoting once more from the writer above mentioned, we have this language in the HERALD of October 8, 1924:

The President of the United States cannot set aside or assume the functions of other departments of government; neither can the Presidency of the church legally ignore or encroach upon the rights and duties of other departments of the spiritual government.

Taken in its proper perspective, this is quite true; but here is one reason for misunderstanding. What departments of government are they over which the President of the United States can assume no governmental functioning? The Treasury Department is a department of the executive service, and not as the writer would have us believe, a general department of government. If we were to count such departments as the treasury departments of government in the sense it is made to appear, we would have at least ten departments, for there are ten secretaries in the President's cabinet, each the head of a department. Now, there are only three general departments of government. So, speaking proverbsially, "what proves too much proves nothing."

Speaking of these three departments, Macy and Gannaway say:

The theory of the separation of powers is easily stated. There are three great functions of government—legislative, executive, and judicial. The powers to discharge these functions should be lodged in different departments. Each department should be supreme in its own sphere of action. Each is coordinate with the others and as far as practicable should be independent of them. Each, therefore, is confined in its work to the exercise of the powers that have been specifically given it. If it steps beyond the limit set by the Constitution into the field of another department, its acts are void. Only by separating the powers of government in this way, [not in some other way, D. T. W.] and as far as possible keeping them separate, can the liberties of the people be adequately protected.—Comparative Free Government, p. 25.

The Treasury the President's Trust

The Treasury Department of the United States Government is and ever has been under the direct control of the President. Its head is his immediate appointee, and can be dismissed at his pleasure, without responsibility to any person or body for his action in the matter.

What will those who assert that the President has nothing to do in the question of financial administration say to the following:

With, however, the increase of federal administrative functions in number and variety, the exigencies of administrative efficiency have impelled Congress to grant direct administrative control to the President and have compelled the courts in many cases to recognize the existence, even in default of expressed statutory authorization, of this power of the President to issue orders to federal administrative officials, obedience to which will be compelled by writ of mandamus. In fact, moreover, the President's position as administrative chief is rendered possible by summary right of removal from office which he possesses—a right which it is practically certain may not be limited by Congress. The dominating control possible of exercise by the President by this means was established once for all by President Jackson at the time that he obtained the withdrawal of federal funds from the state banks, by removing the Secretary of the Treasury who refused to do this, and appointing a secretary who would.—Cyclopedia of American Government, vol. 3, p. 6, article by W. W. Willoughby.

Surely no intelligent person with even a superficial knowledge of the above incident could conscientiously assert that the President has nothing to do in the matter of financial administration. The heads of the various executive departments are responsible to the President for their cabinet trust, and to him alone. With this matter Congress has nothing to do. These under executives are the servants of the President, as the following clearly sets forth:

Secretary of Treasury President's Servant

In the performance of his duties, the President was to be aided by officials merely mentioned in the Constitution as heads of departments; but these men were nothing more than the servants of the President.—The American Federal State, p. 108.

It should not be forgotten that one of these servants of the President is the Secretary of the Treasury—the leading financial officer of the United States Government. This officer and his department, under the direction of the President, it is likely, handles more money than any other department of financial service in all the world. The following will indicate some portion of the service rendered by this servant of the chief executive in the administrative department of government. Moreover, it will make clear the fact that his service is not for Congress, but for the President:

Through the Secretary of the Treasury he (the President) must inform Congress just how much money will be needed to keep the Government going during the next year, and when Congress appropriates these funds that action is not completed until the President has scrutinized and signed the appropriation measure.—The American Government, by Haskin, p. 2.

Here it is quite evident that the President has the constitutional right to state to Congress through his secretary the financial needs of the Nation, and through such statement suggest the appropriate legislation. But this is not all. His power in connection with this matter is still more important. Please note that having suggested the necessary appropriations, if Congress feels inclined to cut any item set forth in the bill, the President has the privilege of vetoing the entire measure. To, then, pass the matter over his veto will necessitate a two-thirds vote of both houses—a majority which is seldom obtained.

President's Power in Finance

It necessitates a vivid imagination to arrive at the conclusion that the chief executive of the Nation who appoints the head of the Treasury Department and whom he can dismiss at his will, has no connection with the financial interests of the Government. To conclude that while the President has the official right, nay more, the arduous responsibility of suggesting the necessary appropriations for the Government, which amounts to billions of dollars yearly, that he has no power in the matter of finance. Ah, dear reader, it is contrary to the facts to state that "The Constitution of the United States ... separates the department of the chief executive from the department of financial administration."

If other authority is needed to substantiate the position here taken, we direct attention to a statement by Forman, a recognized student of American Government:

In 1921 Congress passed an act known as the "Budget and Accounting System," which provided that the President shall transmit to Congress on the first day of each regular session a budget which shall set forth in summary and detail estimates of the expenditures and appropriations necessary in his judgment for the support of the Government during the ensuing fiscal year. The Budget Law created the Bureau of the Budget, at the head of which is a director appointed by the President. This bureau is charged with the responsibility of ascertaining the needs of the various departments of the Government and making recommendations to the President so that he can recommend to Congress the expenditures that he regards necessary.—Advanced Civics, p. 279.

President's Power Greater Than Secretary's

The above makes it very clear that the President has more power in the matter of financial administration than any other individual in the whole Nation. Moreover, we discover that the same person has a hand in actually expending the billions of dollars yearly drawn from the pockets of the people by the processes of taxation. Note this by Henry Litchfield West:

A golden stream flows through the White House to the remotest corner of the country. It springs from the national treasury. Under present conditions, any President of the United States has the power to divert this stream where and whither he will. . . . If money is the lever that rules the world, any President can dispense it with a largess that is startling. He can stand beside the public treasury, with one arm plunged deep into its vaults, while the other distributes the golden store to a horde of officeholders. . . . Statistics compiled by the Civil Service Commission show that on June 30, 1917, . . . 125,129 persons . . . came within the presidential power of appointment or were directly or indirectly named by heads of departments selected by the President. The annual salaries paid to these appointed employees would certainly aggregate a quarter of a billion dollars. The spoils of office which figured solargely in Andrew Jackson's administration were as a tiny rivulet compared with the mighty patronage of a president at the present time. The hand which controls this enormous output of national wealth is a hand of power.—Federal Power, pp. 154-156.

And yet some of our brethren have contended that the President of the United States is completely divorced from any control of government finance. What a tremendous mistake! Surely it could be none other than this. Our brethren would not make a premeditated effort to deceive. We are positive that when the error is pointed out, those responsible for the misinformation will hasten to correct their wrong.

The President as a Collector

What we have said thus far has application to the question of the disbursement of funds. Let us now look to the matter of tax gathering, to discover if we can the relationship of the President to this portion of government responsibility. In this connection we quote from Haskin:

Congress may appropriate billions of dollars a year, but the President must execute the laws by which these vast sums are raised, as well as those by which they are spent.—The American Government, pp. 52, 53.

This writer goes on to say that "In recent times the government revenues and expenditures have been in the neighborhood of four billions." Please note that the vast responsibility of these enormous collections, as well as expenditures, do not belong to the Secretary of the Treasury, but to the President. The only responsibility the secretary has in these matters is that of acting as the servant of the chief. executive. He must obey the President's orders or be relieved of his trust. Of course, where Congress has placed a specific task upon the secretary, aside from his regular administrative responsibilities, he must in this matter be subordinate to Congress. Such instances, however, are few. The great burden of his responsibilities and his primary duty is to the President, and not to Congress.

Again, we assert that if our brethren insist upon the appeal to democracy, this is democracy with its demonstration. And if they continue to implore the church to pay heed to national democracy, are they prepared for the church to accept their proposition, and make the Bishop the servant of the President? To impose upon the president the responsibility of collecting and disbursing of moneys, and to empower him to act through the Bishop as his agent? I ask our brethren, insisting upon such an appeal to democracy, are they prepared for its logical conclusion?

May Ask Treasury Head to Resign

The power of the President in these matters is clearly seen in the following:

The President also harmonizes the administration and thus supplies the government solvent which is lacking in the state governments. For instance, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Commerce cannot have different policies with regard to the import trade, because the President sees to it that they act on the same principle or that somebody resigns. —Cyclopedia of American Government, vol. 3, p. 3, Article by A. B. Hart.

Why, if the "Constitution . . . separates the department of the chief executive from the department of financial administration," does the President see that the Secretary of the Treasury acts upon the policy he approves or that he "resigns"? Why, indeed? Can our friends who are proponents of decentralization, and of emasculation of the Presidency, answer why?

There is only one answer to this whole question, and that a simple one. All these governmental matters of our Nation belong to the department of administration and are under the one head, the chief executive. If world democracy, to which those who are opposing the document on church government have taken their appeal, is to be the standard, then let it be heard: "The President sees that they act on the same principle, or that somebody resigns."

Keep in mind that this has not been the appeal of the proponents supporting the action of the Joint Council of last April, but of those waging war against it. Our position is as above cited in the words of President Elbert A. Smith. This is the appeal of the signers of the "Open Letter." Are they ready to go all the way in the application of their lauded democracy? Surely they would not lay claim to the right to choose only that portion which suits their purpose, or proves their case, and demand that the rest be cast into the scrap heap!

Three Departments of Government

Once more let us be reminded that there are three departments of government—the legislative, the judicial, and the executive or administrative. And, moreover, let us keep before us the fact that in the department of administration there is but one elective officer, the President. And this is true despite the fact that in this department there are ten employees to one in any other department of government service. This huge task, in spite of the possibility of abuse, is trusted by the people of the United States to the hands of one man, and that man the only man elected by the people in his whole department. All others are his appointees, either directly or indirectly. This is what some of our brethren are pleading for with their appeal to world democracy. Will they continue the plea?

President's Ordinance Power

Again, to prove that the President has the responsibility of financial administration we quote from Graner's authoritative text:

For convenience in collecting internal revenue taxes, the country is divided into some sixty districts, not by act of Congress as is the case with customs districts, but by the order of the President.—Government in the United States, p. 222.

Of course the President gives his orders to the Secretary of the Treasury, through whose department the work is done.

The Chief Executive has, also, what is known as the "ordinance power." As a consequence of this power his official word possesses the binding quality of legislative acts. This is true regarding the collection of government moneys as well as in other matters, as is certified in the following:

Under the legislative functions of the President may also be included what is known as the ordinance power, that is, the power to issue certain orders and regulations having the force of law. Such are the regulations for the government of the army and navy, and those relating to the postal service, patents, pensions, public lands, Indian affairs, the customs service, internal revenue service.—Government in the United States, p. 316.

How great then is the fallacy that the department of financial administration is separate from that of the chief executive! Here it is clearly set forth that the President has the authority to issue orders and make regulations regarding the gathering of government moneys. And these regulations have the "force of law." In other words, when the President issues a pronouncement under this power upon the question of finance, it carries the same weight and is just as binding as though the ninety-six Senators and the three hundred and forty-five Representatives composing the United States Congress had issued their legislative decree. Yet some say that "centralization of power is un-American"—that the President has no authority in financial administration.

The Climax

If there are still doubts in the minds of any as to the presidential power in these matters, perhaps the appended quotation will dissolve them:

Perhaps, after all, the climax of federalism is to be found in the so-called Federal Reserve Act. Under this law, which has reformed the currency system of the country, a Federal Reserve Board has been appointed. It consists of seven members, of whom two are the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency. [President's appointees.—D. T. W.] The other five are named by the President and confirmed by the Senate. As all the national banks are required by the law to enter the Federal Reserve System or forfeit their charters, with the privilege of similar affiliation accorded to State banks and trust companies, the entire monetary system of the country is thus placed under the superintendence of seven men, all of whom are in turn appointees, and to that extent creatures of the President. The total capitalization of the 7,579 national banks thus brought together is over $1,000,000,000. Their deposits reach the tremendous aggregate of $22,882,000,000 additional, and this amount will be enormously increased by the receipts of the Government, which are now deposited in the reserve banks instead of the Federal Treasury. Here, then, are seven men located in the National Capital, agents of the Federal Government virtually holding many billions of dollars. While the wisdom of legalizing this enormous power seems now unquestioned, it is appropriate to recall the memorable fight made by Andrew Jackson against the bank of the United States. There is a difference, of course, between that institution and the Federal Reserve Board has been appointed. Yet the latter are directly under government control.—Federal Power, 128, 129.

Continuing, the author speaking of the vast responsibility laid upon these appointees of the President, says:

Upon these seven men there rests a great responsibility. They can use the Federal power, as no other men can, to press the sensitive money nerve of the Nation; and yet it must again be emphasized that this power was granted by the representatives of the people.—Federal Power, pp. 130, 131, by West.

With the President's servants in such places of high financial trust, who would feel justified in affirming that "The Constitution of the United States . . . separates the department of the chief executive from the department of financial administration"? Who is willing to again assert that "a centralization of power is un-American"? One who has the authority to appoint seven men to a task of such magnitude, and when appointed has the power to dismiss them at his pleasure, surely cannot be said to be without some rights in these matters.

Here Then Is Democracy

The United States Government "was manifestly ordained of God and established under his overruling providence," say our brothers. And the argument is that we should have the same degree of liberty in the church as we have in the world. We have set before the reader in this article in a small way the liberty we enjoy. How many are ready to put into operation the same degree of executive power in the church?

The framers of the Constitution were anxious above everything to reserve the liberties for which they had so courageously fought. They granted certain powers and imposed certain restraints, to the end that this freedom might be passed on as a heritage of blessing to their posterity. Is it not strange that some who are so fully satisfied with the liberty they enjoy in the Nation, and call that liberty democracy, are dissatisfied with greater liberty they have in the church, and call it autocracy?

Again, our brother avers, "It is clear that God inspired men to formulate the Constitution, and that as a system of government it contains eternal truth designed to affect the condition of men in time and in futurity." We take it for granted that the effect of which our brother here speaks is that of giving liberty—making free. If then such is the effect in the Nation under the specifications of the Constitution, what is it that transforms the angelic presence of light and liberty of national freedom under the same arrangements into a cloud of darkness and dismay in the church?

Our friends who have been praying for democracy will not be frightened, we trust, at its form. Freedom is not to be preserved without delegation of great powers. This is true in the church as well as without. Let us pray that the same God who inspired men in the framing of the Constitution will be with us in our endeavor to establish ourselves upon the firm foundation of truth—that while we have liberty, we will have also efficiency of administration.

And while we pray, let us recognize the administrative function of our church government as centering in the office of the Presidency all our activities as a people. And let us rest assured that in the matter of finances we need have no fear, under a system of administration as advocated by President Smith who, as cited by six of the Quorum of Twelve present, stated it before the April Council as follows:

I do not claim the right to dispense the funds of the church. My contention is not that in this matter I am supreme. It is that the Bishop is not supreme. I hold that no man has the right to spend the money of the church, oblige the church to pay, or otherwise order important temporal af­fairs of the church, only as the church in General Conference shall direct, or in emergency between conferences the proper councils shall of necessity determine.—SAINTS' HERALD, Au­gust 27, 1924.

Has Supreme Directional Control Boundaries?

BY LEONARD S. RHODES

The various articles appearing in the HERALD for and against supreme directional control suggest some questions that, if answered, might tend to clear up some points to the mutual satisfaction of both sides to the controversy. In this article we are pointing them out, not so much in the hope of strengthening either side as in presenting lines of reasoning that may lead to a unity of understanding.

It is urged by the Presidency and others that the doctrine of supreme directional control is confined in its application to the administrative function of church government; and that the Presidency is not supreme in a legislative or judicial sense. They urge, too, and we think consistently, that this doctrine should be interpreted in the light of the con­stitutional law of the church and not in the extreme sense so many insist upon.

The Bishopric, while not so clear in their conten­tions, seem to argue that the church should operate under two administrative heads: the Presidency at the head of the spiritual, and the Bishopric at the head of the temporal division of the work. They hold that the Presidency may not dictate or disci­pline, but only advise or persuade; and furthermore, that there are bodies in the church government with administrative powers superior to both Presidency and Bishopric.

They seem to fear that if supreme directional control is conceded as the right of the First Presi­dency, it will lead to absolutism and autocracy, eventually overshadowing and absorbing the legis­lative and judicial functions of our church govern­ment. For this reason, we believe that if those sup­porting the supreme directional control document had directed their major efforts towards pointing out the safeguards in the law against this kind of abuse it might have tended to assure their oppo­nents and thereby encourage harmony. When this is done, it may develop that our differences are largely a matter of definition.

One Source of Confusion

Probably all students agree that the functions of government fall into three divisions: namely, legis­lative, administrative, and judicial. But a consider­able source of confusion lies in the fact that in our church government these functions seem to run to­gether without any distinct lines of demarkation. Every member of the high priesthood may under proper circumstances function in either a legis­lative, judicial, or administrative manner. The Presidency, Twelve, Seventy, and Bishopric, while they are primarily administrative bodies, may each at times function in a judicial manner. The high coun­cils are primarily judicial bodies, but appear to have limited administrative duties (see Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10; 122: 6); besides, their individual members are usually engaged in administrative work when not sitting in council. In the Aaronic priesthood, only bishops have any special judicial powers, the work of this priesthood being almost wholly administrative.

It is for this reason that we should be very care­ful to distinguish between administrative and judi­cial functions when discussing the prerogatives of any official or quorum. We believe that here lies a big source of confusion and misunderstanding when discussing the question of supreme directional con­trol. Let us now proceed to the consideration of some phases of this question, which, when viewed in their proper settings, may find us approaching una­nimity instead of struggling for mastery.

How Much Power Has the Presidency?

What distinctive work of the Presidency makes it in reality the First Presidency? If the First Presidency and all other quorums are at most but advisers to the Presiding Bishopric, then is not the latter in fact another presidency? Which presi­dency, then, is in fact first? Or, why do we call one the First Presidency and the other the Presiding Bishopric? Is there any significance in that word first, or is it just a coincidence?

If the Presiding Bishopric, in administering the affairs of their office, need not submit to direction from the Presidency, but must yield to direction from some other council, the latter would of course be over or in control of the Bishopric. But may this council be said to be over the Presidency also? And if over the Presidency, is not this council in fact the First Presidency? What is a first presi­dency, anyhow?

It is a fact that there are two councils to which under certain circumstances the Presidency must submit; and yet the latter is called, and rightly, we believe, the First Presidency. Right here is where our conflicting interpretations of supreme direc­tional control arise. Some fear that it means, or may come to mean, unbounded and unlimited con­trol or dictation. Others hold that the Presidency cannot by any legitimate interpretation of this phrase assume powers not already theirs in reason Decision is defined as

The act of deciding; a fixed intention; decisive result; settlement; judgment of a court. The quality of being positive and firm; determination.

A further indication that it is judicial functions that are being defined in 104:11 is found in the fact that they are also made equal in authority to the high councils in Zion and her stakes (104:14, 15), which quorums appear to be primarily judicial in their functioning. Keeping the above in mind, let us see how it works out in the light of the law given later, and how it affects supreme directional control.

If Supreme Directional Control Is Abused

Let us suppose a case. Suppose it is generally understood and conceded that supreme directional control of all church departments is lodged with the Presidency. Suppose, too, that the people through General Conference have ordered the erection of an auditorium to cost one million dollars. Suppose, further, that the Presidency directs the Bishopric to build an auditorium costing two million dollars.

Under circumstances like these, is there sufficient protection against such a "flagrant disregard of the rights of the people"? Is there no court having jurisdiction to which an honest, conscientious Bishopric may appeal?

Why, certainly, some one may reply; to the court of the people in General Conference! That might be all right, unless it be too far in the future; but is that the course provided in the law? Let us be reminded that General Conference is a legislative body, the supreme legislative body of the church, and is not organized to properly hear and determine justice between disputing parties. This is clearly a case for judicial action; and our law provides the source of appeal:

In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, the seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 126:10.

One of the definitions of determination is Judicial decision; authoritative opinion or conclusion.

The only instance, other than above, in which the law mentions the decisions of these three quorums is found in 104:11, where it also speaks of them as being “equal in authority.” This clinches the argument that the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy are equal as quorums when meeting as a court or judicial council.

But it may be objected that the law quoted above applies only to the trial of a bishopric disregarding the people's rights. It is true that this paragraph is directing the course to pursue with an erring bishopric; but is it not also laying down a principle of procedure with all powerful bodies or departments that may be jeopardizing the liberties of the people?
It seems illogical to conclude that this court of high dignity is created exclusively to try a single department head. A careful reading of the last sentence of 126: 10 and of 104:11 discloses no hint of such limitation, but broadly speaks of "decisions," how they may be reached, and how they may be appealed from. Surely, then, it may try a Presidency abusing supreme directional control or pursuing any other policy in which grave matters of far-reaching concern are at issue.

If it be objected that the Presidency could not or should not sit on a council trying their policies, we reply that this is not identical with questions of guilt or innocence, and that the policies of a quorum should have equal power with those of conflicting quorums. When it is a question of transgression, the president, bishop, or other officer is tried before the high council, but does not sit as a part of the council. A further indication that it is right for a Presidency to sit as a part of the council trying his policies is evidenced by the fact that appeal may be made from the decision of the three quorums to the general assembly of all the spiritual quorums of the church.

Therefore, in the event the Presidency, while exercising supreme directional control, directs the Bishopric to build an auditorium in excess of the amount voted by conference, or gives any other direction which if obeyed would endanger the rights and liberties of the people, appeal may be had to the court of the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy; and if their decision is made in unrighteousness, appeal may be carried up to the general assembly of all the quorums of the high priesthood. This is one of the fortified boundaries of supreme directional control.

On the other hand, supposing the Bishopric are the ones who conclude to build a two-million-dollar auditorium, ignoring the will of the General Conference and directional control by the Presidency.
There is no less reason for them to disregard laws than there is the Presidency. It would clearly be the duty of either the Presidency, Twelve, or Seventy, and it might be the duty of others also, to appeal to the three quorums in judicial council, and later, if necessary, to the general assembly.

The Meaning of Supreme Directional Control

Does recognizing and utilizing our judicial councils, as in the two hypothetical cases above, so limit supreme directional control as to disprove it? Is supreme directional control greater in its powers than these limitations permit? Whence can it become dangerous while these limitations are permitted to exist and are utilized?

Some have argued that because certain councils are over the Presidency, or the Bishopric, therefore supreme directional control does not belong to the Presidency. They have overlooked the fact that these councils are judicial in function, and consequently permit supreme directional control but not supreme control.

Too many, stumbling at supreme directional conthral, have lost sight of that important word, directional, which is defined as

Pertaining to governing, ordering or superintendence; administrative,

—and which therefore limits the supreme control to the administrative line or function of government.
Supreme control is, of course, synonymous with dictatorship; but no man can claim the powers of a dictator until that word, directional, is eliminated.

One writer appears to conclude that because the law (122:6) will not permit the high council, of which the Presidency is a part, to "dictate to the Bishop in direction," therefore the Presidency, apart from the council and as executives, may not "dictate to the bishop in direction." By the same process of reasoning we can assert that because the Presidency is one of the three quorums that may try—he says,
"set in order"—the Bishopric, therefore the Presidency may "in justice dictate to the Bishop in direction." But this is not correct reasoning, because the High Council and the council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy are both judicial, not administrative councils, and therefore neither one can "in justice dictate to the bishop in direction." But the High Council can try a bishop or a president for transgression; the three quorums in council may try the Bishopric or the Presidency for jeopardizing the rights of the people; and the Presidency may direct the Bishopric in the affairs of his office.

Discipline or Disorder: Which?

Many appear to see something ominous in effective discipline. It makes them uneasy. But their fears are based upon a misconception of the meaning and purpose of effective discipline. They imagine it to be a club in the hands of one or a few men to force people into submission. Or perhaps they believe this is the Presidency's interpretation of it.
They seem to feel that without discipline we can have freedom of conscience, growth, development.
In imagination they have pictured the humble Saints subdued and exploited by harshness, sternness, in­ consideration, injustice, domination, extreme measures, and an iron hand—as if they could be—and a dictator cracking the whip!

But first of all, discipline is a tool, neither good nor bad of itself. It may be exercised by a band of thieves or a Sunday school class. Tyrants have used it to their advantage; so did Jesus Christ, and great men like Washington, Lincoln, and others. Without it comes disorder, and eventually disintegration and anarchy. That effective discipline is essential is, or should be, self-evident.

While discipline may at times carry a threat of punishment, it also means training in orderliness and obedience to law; training in respect for authority; education; nurture. Discipline and discipline are related words. Followers of Christ should practice, drill, and be nurtured and educated continually in obedience to law; above all they should have respect for proper authority, both civil and ecclesiastical.

The deacon is expected to maintain order in church services, even to the extent of arresting and taking the offending party before a civil justice, if necessary. Shall we abandon this form of discipline? A teacher, though he may never prefer charges, may be an excellent disciplinarian in his ministrations as peacemaker. A skilled presiding officer brings discipline and order to the assemblies of the Saints, unless they persist in ignoring him. Apostles and seventies are disciplining when they are setting the branches in order. Training men for missionary work is disciplining them. All the courts in the church have power to discipline. Shall we abandon all these and other forms of discipline and choose chaos; or shall we see to it that the power to discipline is in proper hands and administered wisely?

No matter which side you are on, you will admit that had there been better discipline in the church there would have been less or none of this confusion and controversy. Our leading men would have known where to take their differences and how to compose them without scattering them broadcast to the church and to the hurt of its work. Effective discipline, we pray, shall some day grace the directional activities and the legislative and judicial assemblies of our church; and when it does, they will not interfere with each other’s work, and we shall have peace, harmony, prosperity, and progress.

Safeguarding Temporal Means

If the position of the Bishopric be correct, they have had liberty of action in the temporal affairs since the beginning of the Reorganization. In all that time they have never been expected or obliged to yield to directional control by the Presidency. To bring confidence to the scattered Saints, the Lord, in 1861, directed the Twelve to “see to it that the temporal means so obtained is truly used for the purposes of the church, and not as a weapon of power in the hands of one man for the oppression of others, or for the purposes of self-aggrandizement by anyone, be he whomsoever he may be.” (114: 1.)

Nearly thirty-three years later the Lord informed the church that he gave this command to the Twelve because he whom the Lord had “called to preside over the church had not yet approved himself unto the scattered flock.” In other words, the Lord directed the Twelve to watch the Bishop because the President had not yet made good. Or did he mean that the Bishop of those days was a weakling whom the President might intimidate?

But by 1894 the president has “approved himself,” so the bishop no longer needs to be watched, except it should become apparent to the Twelve that there is “abuse in the administration of the temporal affairs of the church”; in which case the Twelve are to make investigation and take appropriate action. Does all this mean that the Bishopric are to have liberty of action in temporal affairs so long as abuse is not apparent? Is it not more reasonable to conclude that the Presidency has sufficient control over church temporalities to warrant the command in 1861 to safeguard it?

It would be unsafe and unwise, we believe, for the Presidency to have trusteeship and custody of the church temporalities. But we believe it to be fully as unsafe and unwise to leave the Bishopric with discretionary control of church temporalities—the right they now claim. It gives them power to dictate to the presiding quorums of the church. And although they disclaim that they “shall themselves exercise dictatorial powers”; we, with their spokesman, do not believe that “any power should be granted to anybody, if it does not of right belong to him, on the inducement that he will not use it.”

It will be much more assuring to the church if they know that the quorum on whom rests the chief burden of responsibility for carrying out the projects, spiritual or temporal, authorized by the General Conference is unhampered by an otherwise-minded Bishopric. It will be assuring to the church to know that while the Presidency can direct the expenditure of church money for church purposes in harmony with a well-thought-out and unified plan, they do not have actual possession of the money and must therefore keep their activities above question and suspicion on the part of the Bishopric. It will be assuring to the church to know that while the Bishopric must submit to policies of the Presidency which they may at times question the wisdom of, the Bishopric can immediately call a halt on the spending of money for purposes of self, or unauthorized and fraudulent purposes. It will be assuring to the church to know that the Bishopric themselves cannot misspend, misdirect, or misuse the funds because they must be constantly ready to submit to inspection by an overseeing quorum in control. It will be assuring to the church to know that these two departments work in harmony, yet serve as checks and counterchecks to each other, instead of two independent heads with the ever-present possibility of working at cross purposes and consequent friction and loss of motion. These conditions will not only safeguard the temporal means, but also the peace and confidence of the members of the church.

The Limits of Supreme Directional Control

Let us in charity refrain from accusing either side of this controversy of consciously seeking to change the church law or government; and thus avoid the methods of the common street agitator. We are not running in directions that lead to opposite and conflicting conclusions so much as we are approaching a problem from opposite viewpoints. It is not a question of choosing between black and white so much as it is a question of how much power the Presidency are entitled to under the law.

A few hasty-minded ones have declared their intention of leaving the church if this dispute is not settled their way. The water is shallow, and there are rocks among the breakers; let us anchor our hope with confidence and courage because in your opinion the church is bounded on the one hand by legislative and judicial departments of government, and on the other hand, if this church had by the powerful tribunal or council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, with right to appeal to the general assembly—the judicial arm. Supreme directional control is not supreme control; but in relation to the legislative and judicial departments of government, it is limited control. Why not bring contention to an end?

to the whole church, but without control or management, that having been provided for in the revelations and by General Conference resolutions.

I believe the pith of the whole matter lies in the idea of supreme direction without control. As before stated, we need common consent. The Lord made that wise provision. It must stand, or the church may fall. The Lord also gave us the one to bring us the knowledge of his will. We need both the Presidency of the high priesthood and the law of common consent. Both are necessary. Both have a legal aspect and a helpful influence. Both can be exercised for righteousness; both could be used for unrighteousness. Let us hope and pray that it will not be the latter.

The judgments of the Lord must break forth soon on this very wicked world. Let us hope his judgments will not commence at his house. I fear for Israel. If the Lord has to redeem Zion by judgment, alas for the foolish virgins.

We hope that wise counsel may prevail and an ample settlement fair to both the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric may be had. It seems to be accomplished on the basis presented here, without waiting for General Conference.

Six Baptized at Beardstown

Beardstown, Illinois, February 7.—Brothers E. L. Ulrich and E. J. Lenox, missionaries to Central Illinois District, visited Beardstown and held a series of meetings which lasted two weeks. As a result six were baptized, four children and two adults. Brother Lenox has recently been assigned to this district, so he left after the first week to visit other branches before conference. Several families became interested in the gospel during these services.

Several of the Saints from here attended the district conference at Taylorville February 7 and 8, it being the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of that branch. President Frederick M. Smith was present and preached two sermons on his favorite subject, the stewardship plan.

The Department of Women is planning to have a bazaar at Easter time, so they are busy making things to sell. They meet every Thursday, and last week they had three dresses to make for a little daughter of one of the Saints.

The Sunday school is planning an Easter program, and rehearsals will doubtless be started this week.

Building Committee Appointed and Active

Milwaukee, Wisconsin, February 16.—Since our last letter to the Herald some important things have happened in our branch. We report with keen regret the removal of Brother William Murray and wife to Syracuse, New York. In our many years of experience in this branch we have never seen a more enthusiastic Sunday school worker than Brother Murray. We trust that in his new field of labor the same opportunity may come to him for the expression of his talent along this line of duty.

At the business session held last fall, a resolution was passed that a building fund committee be elected to solicit funds for the eventual purchase of our own building. The committee was duly appointed and immediately began work on a definite schedule for the raising of these funds.

The Department of Recreation and Expression has been started again, and a fine interest is being manifested. A box social was held on the evening of Valentine’s Day, which was attended by many of the members. The evening was spent in games, and later each of the men drew from a pack of envelopes one which held the mysterious number of a box brought by one of the ladies, she to be his partner for lunch.

Good interest is shown in all meetings of the branch, and we feel very much encouraged. Some of our youngest members have found places to work and are finding keen enjoyment in service.

Anniversary Date Celebrated

Traverse City, Michigan, February 15.—As is the custom each year, the Traverse City Branch observed the anniversary of its organization. January 28 was its twenty-second anniversary, but since that date came on Wednesday the anniversary service was held on Thursday night.

Music was furnished by the church orchestra of ten pieces. The concert lasted from six to seven o’clock, after which all were summoned to the dining room, which had been beautifully decorated in blue and gold. Five long tables had been prepared, the centerpiece being a woman robed in white with a white crown and stars on her head, representing the church in its purity.

When the crowd had been seated at the tables, they were bountifully served with chicken and all that goes with it to complete a banquet. After this course a toast was given by Brother H. A. Doty, who has been president of the branch for many years and who is ever ready when duty calls him. Then letters of greeting from former members of the branch were read, after which Sister Florence Richardson favored us with a solo and Sister Myrtle Conklin read a paper recalling many happenings of the years gone by. Sister Ida Norton gave an interesting reading which was followed by talks from Brothers Doty and Pilbeam setting forth some of the trials and blessings of the early days of the branch. At the close of the program sherbet and assorted cakes were served.

About eighty were present to enjoy the evening.

After supper a social hour was had, after which all repaired to their homes feeling that the time had been most profitably spent and that to meet with brothers and sisters in the gospel far exceeds the pleasures of the world.

Dorcas Curtiss.

Tulare, California

February 11.—The Temple Builders have chosen Sister Iva Powell as their leader. They held an election of officers Sunday, January 11, and the following were chosen: Sister Greta Harper, monitor; Anna Walker, secretary; Eleanor Snively, treasurer. Each Saturday afternoon the girls meet at the home of Sister Iva Powell. The monitor is teaching the girls enamel painting, and they enjoy the work very much. Many beautiful things will be made for a bazaar to be held before Easter.

A new member was added to the branch by baptism Sunday, January 25. Brother Woodard, of Lindsay, California, walked a distance of eleven miles in the rain in order to meet with the Saints and be baptized. Baptism was administered by Elder A. J. Damron at the home of Brother E. Renaud immediately after the morning service. The brother was confirmed at the evening service by Elder H. C. Snively.

Sacramental service February 1 was well attended, and a very good meeting was enjoyed.

Many of the Saints from here motored to Fresno February 8, to attend their rally. Brother Virgil Etgenhouzer of Oakland was the speaker for the day. A spiritual feast was enjoyed at the prayer and testimony meeting held at eleven o’clock. A cafeteria luncheon was served by the Department of Women. The day was happily spent visiting with the Saints at Fresno.

Independence
Stone Church

The Department of Women was pleased with the successful outcome of the convention held under the direction of Miss Blanche Edwards, general superintendent. Four meetings were held, which were largely attended.

The first meeting was held Sunday, February 22, at eleven o'clock in the Stone Church, at which time Sister Edwards spoke on home and the responsibility of parents. Music was in charge of Paul N. Craig.

At three o'clock in the afternoon a similar meeting was held at Walnut Park for the benefit of those attending local churches who could not be present at the Stone Church in the morning. Miss Edwards, in her usual forceful manner, appealed to the parents to recognize the great responsibility resting upon them. Home building is the greatest work in life, and parenthood should be considered a copartnership with God. We must have a vision; without vision the young will perish. A solo was sung by Miss Margaret Card.

The next meeting was held Monday, February 23, at two o'clock in the basement of the Stone Church. At this time Miss Edwards spoke to the supervisors, leaders, cradle roll and young girl workers, and all other officers interested in the subject of leadership and supervision. Everyone caught the spirit of her inspiration. At the conclusion of the address a round table was held in which all were invited to take part. This meeting held until five, and then many were loath to go.

The invitation was then extended for them to go to the dining hall, where refreshments were served. Some remained for the evening program which commenced at half past seven. Over three hundred young girls and their leaders assembled in the dining hall for this service. The house was called to order by Mrs. Alice Cowan, superintendent of the Department of Women in Zion, and “America” was sung for opening, followed by prayer by Mrs. Lora Strachan. Miss Edwards commenced her address by asking everyone to sing, “Your friends are my friends, and my friends are your friends.” She then gave a selection from David Copperfield and one from the Merchant of Venice. Mrs. R. Barnhart, on behalf of the Orioles and Temple Builders, presented Miss Edwards with flowers. After the service all joined in play games, after which light refreshments were served. This meeting was a fitting climax to the conference, and the young people enjoyed the evening exceedingly.

The Department of Women will meet in regular monthly meeting next Friday, March 6, at half past two in the Stone Church. After the opening exercises Mrs. C. R. Smith will speak on the need of spiritual training in the home, and Mrs. Nina Smith will sing “Zion of latter days.” Also Patriarch Ammon White will give an address on the redemption of Zion. All are urged to be present. Following this meeting a business session of the W. C. T. U. will be held.

Last Sunday night President Elbert A. Smith gave the second of a series of Sunday night sermons. This series will continue until March 15, when Patriarch John F. Martin will begin a series. These meetings are very fine and should have the support of all.

President F. M. Smith was in Eastern Colorado last week but has now returned to the office.

Bishop Ellis Short recently returned from attending the conference of the Western Oklahoma District, at Sperry. There was a large attendance, and he found good interest and splendid people. Good work is being done by Brothers Hubert Case, James Thomas, and Earl D. Bailey. Fifteen delegates to General Conference were chosen.

Second Church

Sixty-eight young people enjoyed the eight o'clock prayer meeting Sunday morning, conducting a wonderful social service.

The main floor was fully occupied at the eleven o'clock session, when the Lord’s supper was served, a babe of Brother and Sister Chappelow blessed, and a half hour spent in prayer and testimony.

The cold and storm of Sunday evening did not prevent a good audience coming to hear Elder E. A. Curtis.

On February 26 the Department of Women of Group 28 gave a pie social in the basement of the church. Although the weather was disagreeable, a good crowd came out to enjoy the good time, and eighteen dollars was cleared by the ladies.

Liberty Street

In celebrating their first anniversary, the Temple Builders will give a pie social and apron sale on March 6 at the home of Sister Ballenger, 1220 North Liberty. A special gathering for the intermediates and juniors will be held the same evening at the home of Henry Moriarty, 902 North Lynn. The price of pie for the children will be within the reach of their purses.

The sacramental service Sunday morning was well attended and held till a late hour. In the evening Brother J. W. Metcalf gave an interesting sermon on the blessings of healing.

Sister J. M. Baker has been chosen assistant chorister for this branch.

Englewood

On February 22 the Sunday school occupied the eleven o'clock hour with a program in honor of Washington’s Birthday, which was very fine.

The sacramental service Sunday morning was well attended, but the weather in the evening was so bad and the church is so cold that few came out to hear Brother John Ely. Brother Warne gave a splendid talk to the young people at the morning service regarding the choosing of proper associates. His timely advice was much appreciated.

The evening of February 24 about forty of the Saints went to the home of Brother Warne and gave him a birthday surprise party. He was presented with a quilt on which were embroidered the names of the Saints of his congregation, made by the Department of Women. After several games were played, ice cream and cake were served. Everyone had a good time, and Brother Warne extended a hearty invitation for their early return.

A supper was served by the women February 19 at the church. Only a light lunch was served, but they succeeded in clearing around twenty dollars. This proved to be quite a success considering the small number of Saints in that locality.

East Independence

There was a good attendance at Sunday school and also at the sacramental service Sunday morning. Brother Harry Friend was the speaker Sunday evening.

Quite a lot of work was done on the new church last week. The cold weather hindered some, and work will have to be discontinued until warm days arrive.

An interesting debate was held at Religion Friday evening. Those taking part in the debate were from the junior class, and the judges were selected from among the juniors. The question was, Resolved that the horse is more useful on the farm than the tractor. The judges decided for the affirmative.
Spring Branch

Apostle J. F. Curtis visited our branch on February 22 and gave a very fine sermon in the evening. The morning of the same day Brother George Harrington contributed the sermon. He first gave a brief sketch of the life of George Washington, then devoted the rest of the time to a talk on temperance.

Last Sunday evening Bishop C. J. Hunt gave one of his characteristically good sermons.

Walnut Park

The funeral of little George Herbst, nine-year-old son of Brother and Sister George Herbst, was held at the church Sunday at half past two, Elder Lurett Whiting preaching the sermon. George has been confined to his home since October. Though the family have no relatives here, the Saints from Michigan who knew them there as well as their neighbors have tried to be real brothers and sisters during this long and severe trial and keenly sympathize with them in their loss. At the funeral a quartet sang "Precious Jewels," and Mrs. Oser Campbell sang "A little pink rosebud," besides numbers by the choir.

Brother R. S. Salyards was the evening speaker, and though the night was very cold those who attended felt well repaid by hearing an unusually good sermon.

The business meeting on Monday night was not so well attended as it should have been, but those attending pledged what they could toward our year's budget and others will be given another opportunity.

Holden Stake

Sister James A. Scott died February 8, after an illness of several months. The funeral service was held at the church on the 5th, Elders Moler and Scarcliff assisting in the service and Elder D. J. Krahl giving the sermon.

Evangelist Richard Bullard has been visiting points in the stake. He was with us at our communion service on the 1st and delivered the evening sermon. While here he gave a number of blessings and conducted services at the Home for the aged.

This month we have listened to sermons by Brethren Ross, Moler, Scarcliff, and Krahl.

The stake conference meets at Lexington, Missouri, Saturday the 7th at 8 o'clock in the morning. The first meeting will be a prayer service. Delegates to General Conference are to be chosen.

Sedalia

Elder R. D. Weaver is still in our midst and laboring with us in the interest of this work that is so dear to us. Brother Weaver has indeed been blessed with the Spirit and has delivered some of the most wonderful sermons ever heard in Sedalia. Nonmembers have wept together with the Saints on account of the abundance of the Spirit. Brother Weaver was not able to attend the morning service Sunday on account of affliction. Elder C. L. House occupied in his stead. He spoke with power, and both the preacher and many of the audience were made to feel the great degree of the Spirit. At a quarter after six a special prayer meeting was held in behalf of Brother Weaver and the meetings. We ask the Saints to remember him in their prayers, and also the work here, for we feel that good will yet be accomplished if he can remain for a time. The Saints are united in this effort as they have realized they must be to accomplish results. We are also glad to have Sister Weaver with us.

Three children were blessed Sunday and one during the week. Some have given their names for baptism, and we believe others will follow. Considerable publicity has been given these meetings, and people are finding out that at least we are not Mormons, as they have been told, and that we have the interest of the community at heart.

Sibley

The Saints of Sibley are rejoicing in their hearts because they have been led by the Holy Spirit to know that God is watching over them—that he has heard their prayers of faith and is remembering them. After they have learned their lesson of patience, he will give to them the things they have long pleaded for, i.e., a house in which to worship.

We are progressing slowly, meeting at our prayer service Thursday night and at our Sunday School on Sunday afternoon of each week. Only one family among us has had any serious illness so far this winter. Many have had small ailments, but we have much cause to thank God for his watchcare over us. We have been strengthened from time to time by visiting members of the ministry from Independence. We wish to take this opportunity to thank them and express our appreciation of their services.

To our pastor, Brother R. B. Cook, we are especially grateful. He lives at Lovasy and is burdened with a multitude of duties, having charge of the Buclner group as well as this one, yet nothing but sickness prevents him from coming to our services.

We feel to rejoice at the nearness of the coming of our Lord and Savior, for his glory already seems to permeate our beings. We are trying to cast out of our hearts all evil toward one another, trying to stop faultfinding, and to let only love (God) reign among us. May the same spirit reign in the hearts of all our sisters and brothers throughout the entire church is the prayer of the Saints at Sibley.

Lees Summit

Bishop A. B. Phillips gave us a splendid sermon in the morning February 8. Special music was rendered by the choir. Apostle J. W. Rushton interpreted a part of one of John's letters—we should do right not because we are afraid of wrongdoing hurting our character or reputation, but because we love to do good, to be thoughtful and serve God. The few that were present surely enjoyed his sermon.

The young people's prayer meetings are attended by a number of young people. We are interested in doing all the good we can to help to build up Zion. The Wednesday night prayer meetings are well attended. The attendance at Religio is increasing. The lessons are taken up and discussed, after which a short program is given.

Brother Lee Quick sends the following to readers of the HERALD: "I wish to thank the many kind friends for the kind letters they have written us since our boy was drowned January 23. Many I have not been able to answer, so I take this means of letting you know we received your letters. They were truly a great help in time of need. Everyone has been very kind to us, and, oh, how I wish the nonmembers could see the light of the gospel. We have so many dear friends outside the church. May the Lord bless them so they may see. We ask your prayers for the health of my wife."

Apostle Edwards Organizes Branch

COFFEYVILLE, KANSAS, February 25.—Sunday, February 22, was a red-letter day for Coffeyville, as a branch was organized at that time by Apostle F. Henry Edwards and District President John Blackmore.

We have long felt the need of such an organization, and since God has seen fit to call men to offices that made it possible, we have great hopes that thus united we can accomplish much.

Brother C. R. Walton was ordained to the office of priest and Brother James Reynolds to that of deacon. We feel both men will work to the advancement of the cause.

Visitors from Independence, Cherryvale, Nowata, and Parsons were with us to enjoy the day, and we were especially pleased to have with us Brother Lane and Brother Anderson, of Independence, Missouri. Early morning prayer service was held at nine o'clock, followed by Sunday school with an attendance of one hundred and twenty-five. At the eleven o'clock hour Sister Blackmore conducted a junior church service, which both old and young enjoyed.

Following this service was the organization of the branch and the ordination of the two brothers. Brother Cadwell was elected president of the branch, Sister James Reynolds secretary, and Miss Margie Pitcock chorister. At noon a bountiful dinner was served, all bringing well-filled baskets.

At 2:15 the Saints assembled again. Interesting and instructive talks were given by Brother Grey of Nauvoo, Brother Blackmore. Following these talks Apostle Edwards gave us an inspiring sermon. Religion was held at 6:30 in charge of Superintendent C. R. Walton, and at 7:30 p.m. Brother Cadwell spoke to the Saints, admonishing them to be faithful and pointing out to them their duty and the need for faithful workers.

Nauvoo, Illinois

February 25.—Beginning the first of the month, the thermometer rose steadily, the fine boulevards disappeared, and Nauvoo became a sea of mud. A heavy downpour of rain on Sunday afternoon made it necessary to call off the evening service. The ice in the river is breaking up, making it unsafe to cross, so the mail goes to Keokuk and is brought through by truck. Nauvoo looks forward to the building of the state road. If it is built along the river, it will be one of the prettiest drives in the country.

In spite of unfavorable weather, the branch is able to report almost a one hundred percent attendance at all services. Brother Berve has been calling upon the local priesthood to occupy at the morning hour, and topical prayer meetings have been in order on Wednesday evenings. Brother Layton was asked to choose the topic for last week, and he announced the Sunday before that it would be “Faith in God and in his work.” The young people were asked to take the lead next Wednesday night, and Florence Sanford chose the topic, “Service.”

Although the majority of the basketball games are played on Wednesday evenings, our young people are always in attendance at prayer meeting. The other churches find it impossible to hold their young people and wonder how we do it. One of our girls said, “They think our parents are awfully strict to make us go to prayer meeting. They can’t understand that we like to go.” It is well known throughout town that it is useless to hold an entertainment on Wednesday evening and expect an attendance of Latter Day Saints, so this fact is always taken into consideration.

Nauvoo is proud of the fact that two of her boys won honors in the declamatory contest at Graceland, Bertram Lewis winning first place in the oratorical contest and Oscar Outh second place in humorous.

The Religio is playing an important part in the branch. The Book of Mormon is studied in all four classes and is being strongly featured. Programs are announced in advance from the stand, and up to date no one has refused to respond.

The primary class, under the leadership of their teacher, Sister Fusselman, gave the program last Sunday and demonstrated the fact that children of this age enjoy the study of the Book of Mormon. Beginning with the first chapter in the book, they took turns in relating the story of Nephi and his brothers from the time they left Jerusalem up to the death of Lehi. Our president, A. L. Sanford, announced that for the next few weeks each class in turn would provide the program.

Wichita, Kansas

February 16.—The people of the Wichita Branch are moving forward. If the enthusiasm continues, which seems to be with the workers in all departments at present, we have many reasons to look forward to a profitable year.

The Sunday school under the direction of Brother Lawrence Brockway is making progress. February 15 we had 107 present, the largest attendance for some time. January 25 Wichita had its first junior church; the second meeting was held February 8. This week, under the direction of Brethren R. Bedwell and Lawrence Brockway, assisted by a number of young people, is a decided success. The success of these meetings gives us good reason to believe that the junior church is a permanent institution in this city. The order of the program consists of short stories, Bible readings, songs, etc., all centering around a theme which is previously arranged by those directing the work. Opportunity is given the children to take part on the program by previous arrangement; spontaneous participation by the children is also part of the program. The number attending has been about thirty-five. This, when we consider the size of the branch, is very encouraging. It is planned to meet twice a month for the present. It is thought later to meet each Sunday excepting sacrament Sunday, when all will meet together in that service. It has been noted that when the time came for the junior meeting to begin the children were all in their places, ready to start. A good example for the older people.

The Religio, under the direction of Brother Byron Jennings, is doing well. An effort has been made recently to increase the attendance by putting on a contest between the young people and the older folks. (We have no “old people” in this branch.) This was undertaken with considerable zest. Each group had two nights each. Since I am to sign my name to this item, I will not express my opinion regarding the programs rendered. However, both were good.

A report from Wichita which did not include a word concerning the work of the Department of Women would be decidedly incomplete. This department, under the direction of Sister A. A. Buechow, is continuing the work of last year with considerable enthusiasm. They are functioning in two ways. The class work instituted some time ago is continuing as before. Two classes are being conducted at present. Thursday morning eleven of the sisters meet to study Robinson’s Mind in the Making. Some interesting discussions are had in this class. Due to their influence, another mixed class meets on Friday evenings to study this same book. Friday afternoons the department meets to study church history. They also have been doing some excellent work in a financial way. Recently the rostrum of the church has been furnished... with new pews through their effort. Their next objective will be to complete the basement. An oyster and chilli supper was held in the basement February 13. This was followed by a social hour in which a number took part. A good time was enjoyed by all and a nice sum was realized from this effort.

Sunday morning, February 15, we had the pleasure to baptize four young people. These were Edna Cook, Doris is a young man, about twenty-two years of age whom we expect to be a real help in our work. Another baptism is planned for Sunday, March 1.

We are planning for the district conference to be held here March 7 and 8. Thomas S. Williams.

Des Moines, Iowa

On Sunday evening, January 11, Brother Norman Anderson preached to the Des Moines Saints in our borrowed home at East Ninth and Filmore Streets. His subject was, "A righteous aim." Brother Norman called us up by the Spirit, as it were, and taught us patience, perseverance, and faith. He admonished us to make all necessary preparations and have but one goal, perfection, and to run life's race of service and sacrifice on the track of perfect obedience with patience and perseverance, looking unto Jesus Christ, the Author and Finisher of our faith. Brother Norman was born and raised in England, and by using as his illustrations the habits and customs of English life, he held the attention of the audience and taught a wonderful lesson.

Sunday, January 18, we had two hundred fourteen present in the Sunday school, which is about normal. This was the day of our semimonthly prayer service. Many special prayers were offered in behalf of our little brother, Byron Wilkinson, whom we mentioned last month as being seriously ill. He received a wonderful blessing that same afternoon. His condition is somewhat improved at this time, but he is still quite serious, and we would ask that Saints remember him in faith and prayer, and also his good parents, Brother and Sister Lehi Wilkinson, that they may all be blessed abundantly. In the evening Brother D. E. Dowker preached to us, and he inspired us to continue on in the footsteps of our Master.

On January 25, Iowa State Representative Brother Oscar Anderson, and Sister Anderson, were in attendance. There was a rally meeting, Brother William Robinson presiding, having as its purpose the increasing of our building fund. Doctor G. F. Hull delivered an inspirational address on the subject of "Faith," followed by Brother Henry Castings, district president, on the subject of "Sacrifice," explaining to us the efforts and hardships of the pioneers in giving to us the church in its present form, and that we must be willing to sacrifice if we would do the things pleasing to God and make progress in the church. Brother Castings took the pledges which range from $1,500 down to $100 and reaching a total of over $27,000, and there were left many others whose pledges will come later. We believe that shows unity in the Des Moines Branch.

At the evening service D. E. Dowker preached on the subject, "Religion of Christ," teaching us that to be able to make a complete sacrifice, pleasing to God, we must be in close communion with Him. To us this seemed a fitting text and lesson at the close of so nearly a perfect day.

Tuesday evening the 27th, Sister Vivian Castings, thirteen-year-old daughter of Brother and Sister H. Castings, gave a piano recital at the church, to further increase our building fund. This program was a real treat and consisted of ten splendid numbers.

On Sunday, February 1, we enjoyed the usual service to our Maker, partaking of the sacrament and engaging in song, prayer, and testimony. In the evening for the Religio hour and after the classes, Dale Finch, president of the Religio, presented a wonderful program which had been previously prepared. Among other numbers, Anne Dugal, soloist, sang for us, accompanied by George Deskin at the piano; our own new male quartet, consisting of Alfred Taylor, Addison Brown, G. F. Hull, and Lee Mussell, sang, "Come where the bright waters play," and "Sleep on thy pillow." One must hear them to appreciate just what an inspiration their songs are to our service. Brother H. Castings preached to us, on the text found in Romans 12: 9.

On Friday, the 6th, the Des Moines district conference opened in the little church house at East Ninth and Filmore. Roy A. Cheville spoke on "Making up a course of study"; Sister C. T. Kirkwood spoke on "Where is our work"; Sister J. E. Lentell spoke on "What woman has done"; Roy A. Cheville spoke on "Junior methods in church school." We had vocal solos by Verba Parka and Howard, the little son of Brother and Sister Norman Anderson. In the evening we were favored by a wonderful program arranged by Stephen Robinson, district president of Religio, consisting of selections by the orchestra; and saxophone solo by Opal Baye, assisted by Pearl Baye at the piano. Then a one-act comedy entitled, "Surprised desires," directed by Bertha Deskin and presented by Stephen Brewster (Lloyd Dalbey), Henrietta Brewster (Lorn Wilkinson), Mabel (Masile Dalbey). This was a real treat, after which our male quartet favored us with several numbers.

Saturday morning at 9 o'clock we had prayer and testimony meeting. Business meeting at 10.30 which was continued into the afternoon. At 7.45 in the evening Patriarch John F. Martin preached for us. Our borrowed home being too small, we had previously rented the Grotto Hall at Eighth and Locust Streets for the Sunday services, which were indeed glorious gatherings. After a priesthood meeting, young people's prayer meeting and Sunday school, the hall was filled with several hundreds of people, and Apostle E. J. Gleazer preached to us on "Stewardships." Dinner and supper had been prepared by Bessie Oline and her faithful assistants and was served in due time, during which the Saints took much pleasure in visiting as well as eating. At the Religio hour Stephen Robinson had previously arranged a splendid program, consisting of a piano solo by Vivian Castings; xylophone solo by Beryl Pattison; violin duet by John Ferguson and V. L. Deskin; lecture by Judge Hubert Utterback, of the district court; whistling solo by Charlotte Bateman, followed by preaching by E. J. Gleazer, continuing his discourse on stewardships. Thus closed a grand spiritual feast.

Clarksburg, West Virginia

February 10.—Clarksburg Branch was very fortunate in having as their visitor and speaker Brother J. A. Gillen, president of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles.

Although Brother Gillen remained in Clarksburg only four days and preached but three sermons, the Saints certainly appreciated the words of cheer and comfort which this man of God was permitted to leave with us.

It is seldom that the stronger men of the church are permitted to visit the small branches of West Virginia; therefore, when a man of God with the eloquence of Brother Gillen makes a visit to the West Virginia District, it is a rare treat.

Brother Gillen preached Thursday, Friday, and Sunday evenings, to small but very attentive and intelligent congregations. The three sermons only stirred the appetite for rare Gillen makes a visit to the West Virginia District, it is a therefore we are entitled to as much as though God's word and left us hungering for more. We hope that many. From here journeyed to Moundsville.

Brother Gillen came to Clarksburg from Parkersburg and from here journeyed to Moundsville.

God's speed and protection are extended to Brother Gillen in his further work of building up the kingdom of God.

Brother and Sister J. B. Stockdale, of Milford, Utah, write that they would like to have the Saints and missionaries lock them up when they are going through.

Radio Flashes
Stewartville, Missouri.—We wish to congratulate you on the broadcasting of your first 5 p. m. sacred song service. It came in loud and clear. The announcer was very clear and distinct. We have been listening to you for over a year. Your broadcasting is the best we have heard from any station. Be sure and continue your speaking and sacred song services. Our prayers will be, God bless those that shall broadcast the gospel message, the sacred songs and music services.—Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hamann.

Grasston, Minnesota, January 28: I wish to inform you that the music came in better from your station last evening than any other station we could get. I believe it was just as strong in our house as it was in the studio. The music was exceptionally fine.—F. H. Martin.

Paola, Kansas, January 22: Your programs are always of a high order.—Jazz, but have been improved with your recent additions. We are looking forward with pleasure to your installation of the 1000-watt transmitter.—Reverend R. L. Gress.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Bishop George P. Lambert Dies

Bishop Mark H. Siegfried has received a short telegram from Elbert Lambert, Ferris, Illinois, announcing the death of his father, Bishop George P. Lambert, the morning of March 9, and that the funeral would occur Wednesday, March 11.

Bishop Lambert was born December 5, 1858, and has been a member of the church since childhood. He was chosen for the office of bishop during the lifetime of President Joseph Smith and was ordained to that office by Frederick M. Smith, June 11, 1904, since which time he has been active in Nauvoo District, in Illinois and Iowa.

The Immediate Question

WHAT IS THE LOGICAL MEANING OF SUPREME DIRECTIONAL CONTROL?

Like many other readers of the Herald, no doubt, we have been following with considerable interest the discussion now before the church. It is apparent that a fair consideration would require articles on many different topics, but the immediate question before us would appear to be the document on government which was accepted by a majority of those attending the April council meeting.

The immediate question before the church is not the legality nor the right or wrong of such a council meeting, nor is it the approval or disapproval of any officers, but it is the document itself. It is not even what may have been the intention of those who accepted it. We are quite willing to accept at once the assurance from both sides of their good intentions, that it was not the intention of the majority, those who accepted or who proposed this document on government, to make a material change in the law; that their intention was to propose something entirely in harmony with the constitution of the church.

We are willing to go further and note that one of the Presidency assures us of his wholly innocent intentions. We may also recognize that two amendments were made; hence that in the original drafting of the document infallibility was not claimed. It is quite proper in considering the document to ascribe to the one who proposed it the most honorable of motives, and personally the writer further believes that it was his intention to propose something that would resolve the existing difficulty and that he did not consciously desire to claim any powers beyond those which appeared necessary. This is a conservative statement—a minimum of presumption. The writer would go much farther in his personal confidence and good will.

But this does not raise any presumption whatever that the document itself now before us is either constitutional or in accordance with the legislative acts of the church in the past. Its constitutionality is exactly the question before the church. If it is adopted, it would modify or rescind any legislative act not consistent with it, and as the latest act it would become the governing law of the body, and if in any respect inconsistent with that which has gone before, would supersede the existing law. Yet if it does not in some respect modify the existing law of the church, what reason would there be for such stanch insistence upon its adoption; an insistence which has been the basis of discussion for the past nine months?

Personal interpretation, or the intention of those adopting, might be considered at a proper time and place. The interpretation to be given it by the executive officers of the church may also be separately considered at a proper time. If there has been any breach of the law by any, there is a proper time and place to consider personal dereliction. But the immediate question is the rational meaning of the document in detail and as a whole. It claims to define the powers, not to be given to one of our brethren, but declared to be the powers belonging to a certain office and, according to the argument, to have always been inherent in that office.

We Favor Centralization

We may as well state here that the writer has long been numbered with those who favored administrative centralization. Eighteen years ago, as general librarian of the Religio, we suggested the loss of efficiency through duplication of work and that the library work for the church should be handled as a unit. As a result, a library commission was started. Eight years ago the writer prepared the motion and presented it to the Religio on which the coordinating committee was formed. This seemed to us to rest upon very clear grounds, that there should be such a relation between the departments and the church as to insure that the departments had before them not each a separate goal, but the common goal of the success of the work of the church as a whole; that there should be such knowledge or general oversight on the part of the church and its officers as to make possible this closer cooperation. It is true we have seen this movement carried rather further and given a construction not at first intended. What was intended was cooperation. No emphasis was placed then upon subordination.

World Conditions Affect Us

We have followed critically the literature of the existing conditions in the present civilized world. We are aware of the strong emphasis placed upon the danger of bolshevism, have noted the decline of democracy in Europe and the establishment of dictatorships; have noted the claim of large military powers advanced by premiers who formerly acted upon a democratic basis, that is, a basis of equality with their associates. In confronting the situation, strong men in many places have asked that power be given them; have felt that it was necessary that they exercise extensive powers in order to protect society and their own particular national government.

We have also read excellent philosophical analyses of the spiritual life of America to-day and the fact that in America more than in western Europe there has been since the war a tendency to suppress independence of judgment. Statements have been made not only by radicals, but in such conservatively philosophical magazines as Hibbert’s Journal, that there has existed in America direct propaganda against bolshevism with the purpose of increasing power of government and the control by unelected elements of government, and the arousing of a spirit of nationalism, as though America were in grave danger, and therefore powers of exclusion of immigrants and control of discussion must be maintained.

There exists at the same time a very strong group urging social reconstruction and continually increased powers in the government and in governmental bureaus for the protection of society and the people and thus narrowing continually the limits of individual freedom. On the other hand, such conservative men as leading members of the American Bar Association have discussed with grave concern the increase of bureaucratic government, and men like Doctor John W. Burgess, in his book, The Reconciliation of Liberty and Government, have objected to the income tax, the Initiative and Referendum and Recall, the extension of government over the Philippines or any external powers, because of the contention that government should be not only representative, but limited in a very strict sense, leaving the liberty of the individual untouched as far as possible.

From such reading, we are able to approach the question before the church with open minds and consider fairly any evidence that may be produced in favor of a monarchial form of government, or in favor of democracy, and endeavor at least to consider how far the various principles of government apply or can apply in the government of the church.

There are in the church at least a few, though they may be very few, who frankly believe that the kingly form of government is best and strongest; that the bestowal of absolute powers are essential to the establishment of Zion; and who are willing to bestow such powers to gain so desirable an end. There may be a few, though probably very, very few, if there are any, who desire a pure democracy. The writer knows there are some of the first class. He does not know of any of the second class.

The Document on Church Government

There are then before us two immediate questions. The principal problem is naturally, “What is the system of government of the church?” The second question is, “What is the natural, impartial construction to be placed upon this document on government?” What would it mean one hundred years from now if the Lord should so long delay his coming? What would it mean in the hands of entirely different individuals than are now members or officers of the church of God? Taking up the second question first, it will pay us to reread carefully this proposed document:

This church, as defined by the late Joseph Smith, is a theocratic-democracy—not man-made, but of divine appointment and origin. (Matthew 16: 18; Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5; 17: 7; 1 Nephi 8: 221; 3 Nephi 10: 1.)

The government of the church is by divine authority through priesthood. (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4; 104; Acts 20: 28.) The government in its objective is beneficent, and its purpose is betterment of human conditions. The divine authority becomes operative through the consent of the governed—the common consent indicated in the law (Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1; 27: 4). It is divine government among the people, for the people, and for the glory of God and the achievement of his purposes towards ideal conditions.
God directs the church through clearly indicated channels (Doctrine and Covenants 43: 1, 2; 27: 2); and his voice is the directing power of the church; but to this the assent of the people must be secured.

In organic expression and functioning there must be recognized grades of official prerogative and responsibility (Doctrine and Covenants 104; 122: 9); with supreme directional control resting in the Presidency as the chief and first quorum of the church (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 2, 9; 104: 45). This control it is presumed is beneficent. Protection against prostitution of this power is amply provided in the law.

To carry into effect the purposes of the church, effective administration is imperative, and organic solidarity is maintained only by effective discipline, which is in consonance with the beneficent purposes of the church, but yet strongly enough administered to prevent the purposes of the organization being frustrated by individual caprice and rebellion. Authority to be effective must be respected.

This view of the organization of the church affirms the interdependence of departments and coordination of action and holds General Conference as the instrument of the expression of the will of the people.

In the above there are two points which especially stand out and have been several times referred to. "Supreme direction control in the administrative line," and maintained by effective discipline." It is true there are many fine passages in it and good expressions, but the special question that it now becomes our duty to consider is, "What is its logical effect and meaning?"

Theocratic-Democracy

The first paragraph declares the church to be a theocratic-democracy; the second paragraph, in the first sentence, would limit it to a theocracy, and that in the poorer definition of theocracy. The primary definition is "government by God"; the secondary definition, "by a priesthood." It is by or through a priesthood which may possess a greater or less degree of divine authority, but its tenure rests entirely upon the presumption of divine authority.

This divine authority, it is stated, becomes effective through the consent of the governed. This statement may imply a measure of popular control of the government, though not clearly so; and especially in view of the closing sentence of this paragraph. The government by the priesthood is called divine government. It is among the people and for the people and for the glory of God. But it is not of the people or by the people, though these terms have been used in connection with the church government with approval in times past. In fact, theocratic-democracy is government by God and the people. If the people do not share in the government, it is not a theocratic-democracy.

The words here are so strikingly similar as to remind us of the position taken by the kings of Prussia, and especially the definition of enlightened despotism as given in the high school history used at present in Independence, which is as follows:

Royal Benevolence.—Prussia was a paternal state. To the foregoing attributes of Prussian monarchy should be added the tradition, slowly evolved, of a kindly and fatherly interest on the part of the Hohenzollern kings in all their subjects. The predecessors of Frederick the Great saw to it that justice was meted out harshly but evenly, and that the agricultural and industrial welfare of the country was fostered.

This book, Modern History, by Hays and Moon, states that in the eighteenth century autocracy became enlightened. Frederick the Great was an enlightened ruler.

Frederick the Great, for example, regarded himself as but "the first servant of the state." "The people do not exist for the sake of the rulers," he wrote, "but the rulers for the sake of the people."

The first weakness of enlightened despotism is stated to be ambition of the rulers.

Another grave weakness of enlightened despotism was the contemptuous attitude of the "enlightened despot" towards his "unenlightened" subjects. He believed that he knew what was for the good of his people better than they knew themselves, and accordingly he forced reforms on them, whether the reforms were popularly desired or not. As a result, few of his changes were permanent, and popular ingratitude was frequently his reward. In other words, enlightened despotism was government for the people, but not by the people.

A final weakness of enlightened despotism lay in the fact that its perpetuation depended upon every able sovereign's being succeeded by a sovereign equally able. This seldom happened. When, for example, Frederick the Great died in 1786, he was succeeded on the Prussian throne by his nephew, Frederick William II (1786-1797), who had neither character nor ability; he meant well, but his weak rule undid much of Frederick's work. The same thing happened in other countries; weakness succeeded ability, extravagance wasted the fruits of economy, and corruption paralyzed reform.—Modern History, Hays and Moon, pp. 217, 218.

Note that enlightened despotism is government for the people. All such governments claim a measure of divinity and to govern for the glory of God. They claim also to be beneficent. The presumption of superiority was a direct cause of defeat. He did not take the trouble to secure popular support nor proceed with the people, so his work had no substantial basis.

The same theme is discussed in the Journal of the American Bar Association in the fall of 1924.

For but Not by the People

But the federalists never dreamed of the grandeur of Madison's formula for democracy—"The progress of all through all, under the leadership of the best and wisest." Assuming the validity of the term progress, we have three elements to consider in this formula. The third element is "the leadership of the best and wisest." This is the glory of the federalists; such a group of leaders has never been in the world before or since—men who were both great and good; there were giants on the earth in those days. And under their able and unselfish leadership, "the progress of all" was reasonably assured—the first element of Mazzini's formula. But these two are perfectly consistent with a benevolent despotism, with the sincere and patriotic purposes of a Frederick the Great or a Peter the Great. The second element is the true touchstone of democracy, "the progress of all through all"—doing things social and political for yourself, not having others do them for you; intelligent independence; manly civic self-reliance. Everything fundamentally American is here involved—the responsibility of the individual citizen; his rights and duties; his ambitions for his children; his hopes; his faith in the principles of the republic, that government of the people, by the people (as well as for the people) may not perish from the earth. And when the great generation of the Revolutionary Fathers had passed off the scene and the people were thrown on their own resources, most happily they had been so taught (and not least by Jefferson) that they could face the future with courage and say:

"'Tis well! from this day forward we shall know
That in ourselves our safety must be sought;
That by our own right hands it must be wrought;
That we must stand unpropped, or be laid low,
O dastard, whom such foretaste doth not cheer."

The third paragraph declares that "God directs the church through clearly indicated channels; and his voice is the directing power of the church; but to this the assent of the people must be secured." For a deliberate enactment, is this a sufficient statement? Is "assent" enough, or is prayerful consideration and consent to that which is found to be divine needed?

In the discussion which has followed, the power of the priesthood has been clearly emphasized, but in no instance by the proponents of the document on supreme directional control has the spirit of service been emphasized. For years the writer has been preaching that priesthood is not something to stand between man and God, but that the true priest is the mediator who would reconcile man to God and that the better he carries out this purpose the greater will be the reconciliation between man and God. His duty is reconciliation of man and God—with every man assured the right of approach to the Father.

This intimates correctly that the revelations for the direction of the church should be presented to the church by the President. But that is subject not only to the right, but also to the responsibility upon other members of the priesthood and various quorums, to consider carefully and prayerfully and humbly, so that they too may receive the divine evidence and righteously and with the Spirit upheld or not as the Spirit may direct. This principle, as heretofore set forth in the church, means something more than assent.

Yet we would not object strongly to this paragraph were it not for the strict limits placed by the proponents on this right of assent. Also this document must itself be considered as a whole and with relation to its parts, for the fourth paragraph immediately follows with its grave and official prerogative, "with supreme directional control in the Presidency." That the Presidency are the chief or principal executives we at once concede, but that they possess or should possess supreme executive authority or absolute executive powers, as has been repeatedly suggested, is the particular point in issue. This document would recognize such absolute authority of power in the administrative line. The statement is made that there is protection in the law against the abuse of this power. But unfortunately these safeguards have been challenged.

The Safeguards of the Law

The provisions of the law as plainly laid down are, First, the equal authority of the three quorums, the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy (Doctrine and Covenants 104:11 and 126:10), which has been declared to be concurrent in articles of our late President Joseph Smith, many times quoted. These would have practically no meaning if this means only equal as a legislative committee, for they are not equal even in legislation. This check or concurrent jurisdiction has been called in question.

A second check is the right of the general assembly to review the action of any and of all these quorums, and in the absence of the assembly the right of General Conference to legislate and to direct how its actions shall be carried out, and to consider how they have been carried out. Some have even called in question this right of the conference to consider the acts of the administration.

Third, The right to sustain or refuse to sustain any officer. This one check is the only one that has been stated by proponents in favor of this supreme control. But the simple right to vote to sustain at the close of conference in fact has become a very formal matter and does not provide any adequate check or supervision. No real check exists here at present however, while it may once have been or may still be in theory.

A fourth check or protection is the courts of the church, but the court in this particular instance is a matter of dispute. However positive may be our personal opinion, high officials of the church have declared and insisted that Doctrine and Covenants 104:37 provides for trial by the high council presided over by the Bishop. Others note that if the common council is taken to be the high council in this paragraph, then the statement is clearly made that the common council shall be assisted by twelve

high priests, hence they state that there must be the high council and twelve other high priests or twenty-four high priests. A third explanation offered is that of our late President Joseph Smith in the Herald for 1908, page 100, in which he plainly declares that the common council is the Bishop and his counselors and they are assisted by twelve high priests. He further declares that it would be manifestly improper for the High Council to attempt to sit to try a president of itself. But in view of this challenge even this protection of the law is weakened.

Discipline

When we come to consider the last paragraphs, we may well ask what protection even such laws could give, if once this document were placed in force. For the fifth paragraph provides for effective discipline, evidently in the hand of the supreme executive authority. Though the word beneficent is used, yet it is clear that this authority is presumed to be so strongly centered as to be effective to prevent any individual “caprice or rebellion.”

If we consider this document without the influence of kindly personal feelings, consider it as it may appear fifty years from now, in the times of our children and grandchildren, certainly a strong man who understood the science of government could under this document censor, remove, or retire those who did not give the personal implicit obedience he required or desired. A man thus subject to discipline would naturally be obedient and submissive as the only alternative would be resignation or effective rebellion.

This interpretation of arbitrary removal without hearing or charges is quite in accordance with the action proposed by the Presidency in 1917, and presented to the conference by the Presidency and Twelve, which provided for trial in case of immorality, but left ministerial standing to be terminated by the administrative line. If ministerial standing could be thus taken away, there would be no further occasion for trial except for membership in an elders’ court, or at most a bishops’ court, as a common judge.

President Elbert A. Smith interpreted this action in 1917 logically—as follows:

Certain things will be noted from a reading of the foregoing. First, there is no longer any church rule requiring that one imposing silence should bring the matter to the attention of a court. Where a minister is guilty of, or charged with immoral or unchristianlike conduct, natural charges are preferred and brought to the attention of a court, and this action automatically places the individual under silence. However, as stated in the resolution, ministerial standing involves many other factors, which may include general reputation, ability, personal appearance, and matters publicly presented in preaching, the general effect of one’s ministry upon the church, and so on.

Where a minister is silenced for reasons other than unchristianlike conduct or immoral conduct, there is no provision in the resolutions that the matter should be heard before a court. The whole matter is entirely administrative, and the recourse of the brother silenced lies in appeal along the administrative line; as for example, from the branch officers to the district officers, and from the district officials to the First Presidency, where naturally the appeal ends. (Of course this is only an example. A general officer would not ordinarily be silenced by a branch president, hence his appeal would begin higher up.) This is all that is provided for by the General Conference Resolution. However, in some instances of more or less magnitude where it was felt the Presidency might be prejudiced they have on their own volition referred the matter of silence to a court, which court was authorized to investigate thoroughly and report back to the Presidency its judgment as to the righteousness of the act of silence, as a guide to the Presidency in final action.

We trust that a rereading of the resolution above republished will clarify the minds of those who have been laboring under the impression that it was immediately necessary to bring matters of silence to the attention of a court; and that those endeavoring to analyze this question will not fail to draw the line between administrative and judicial functions. The matter of oversight of ministerial work is wholly administrative, and it is not ordinarily the function of court to either silence an individual or restore him his right when he has been silenced. A court may consider the ministerial standing on the request of those in administrative authority and report back in an advisory way to the ones referring to them that matter.—SAINTS’ HERALD, May 4, 1921, pp. 410, 411.

This document on government very evidently carries the same principle farther.

With such authority it would be easy to direct the courts. It would be exceedingly difficult to provide any adequate check. We are not stating for a moment that the present members of the First Presidency would exercise such power, nor even that they desire to exercise such autocratic powers; but in view of the fact of the repeated declaration that they do not so desire, where remains the reason for bestowing upon them this supreme directional control, which is defined elsewhere in the discussion in the Herald as absolute administrative authority?

If ever there should arise one desiring to exercise such powers, such a resolution adopted by the church in General Conference would give the authority to do so, and with this power of direction, control, and even dictation, which has been plainly shown in the discussion, it is not a long step, in fact it is not a step at all, for authority by this document is immediately bestowed by which the Presidency could direct the expending of finances and draw from the treasury the money which they individually or collectively desire. We are not raising this as a bugaboo or as a forced construction, nor that any member of the April council meeting intended such a... construction. We do contend, however, that this is within the ordinary meaning of the words, and is the logical meaning of this document. Considered even in the most favorable way all that can reasonably be said is, there exists ambiguity, and an ambiguity that could readily be interpreted to mean absolute powers.

There is another contingency to remember which will be taken up in another article if time and space permit, a comparison of the government of the church with other governmental bodies. For the present, suffice it to point out that there is no hard or other kind of a line drawn shutting off the executive from the legislative and judicial departments in the church, because the Presidency hold very high powers in each of these divisions. Absolute power of administration combined with great powers in the legislative and judicial departments, as the history of the past has frequently shown, makes easily possible an enlargement in both of the other fields so as to constitute an unlimited government in every department.

The assurance has been made and repeated that the Presidency do not desire supreme directional control over finances; then what reason can possibly be urged why the church should give them such authority, since they do not desire it, placing undesired authority in their hands to be exercised by their successors in years to come?

If at the conference it is shown that the legitimate rights of the President have been denied, let us with care consider and apply a remedy to meet the conditions. But what reason can there exist for bestowing an unlimited power? It is true that to vest all authority in one man and delegate to him all authority in the church would give him authority to correct many minor differences, but is this either a necessity or a possible element leading toward the establishment of Zion?

While we stand firm for due organization, while we long for leadership, while we are ready to support in accordance with the experiences of the church the resolutions heretofore adopted in connection with the authority of the President, giving them in every case a reasonable construction, the construction which they have heretofore received; despite the many beautiful statements and acceptable statements taken singly in this document on government, our present conviction is firm that it should not be adopted by the church unless it is so modified as to protect not only the prerogatives of the President but also to protect the responsibilities of the people, and of the other officers of the church, who also have been called of God to a responsible work.

S. A. BURGESS.

Executives in Church Government.—No. 3

In considering this subject, no personal motives or attitudes should actuate any of us. Private whisperings may at times reach our ears which, if permitted to sway our judgment, would lock our minds against charity, reason, and fairness toward others. Only my deep and abiding conviction of a duty that I ought to perform has caused me to make defense of the action of the April council in the HERALD, where it was attacked. It is my firm conviction that the discussion should not have been injected there, but it would be unfair to the church if we remained silent where the attack was made, hence it became not only a right, but a duty, to defend the law.

I fully believe that when the wrong applications of the law, the incorrect interpretations of things presumed to have been said or done, and the mistaken attitudes held toward the document approved by the April council are set aside, objectors will be able to see that the work of the council was a move in support of both progress and the law. When one is too easily satisfied to construe something against the President, his reasoning will probably show his attitude, but whether or not it does so, his conclusions will be weak. This seems to me to be one of the chief sources of our differences.

On page 1089 of the HERALD one objector states his belief that the document adopted by the council "had its genesis" prior to the council. The council had requested the President to prepare the document, and he did so. Still the objector thinks his suspicions are proven to be correct because the President had asked the council to deal with the question of jurisdiction between the Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric, on which they had disagreed. To an impartial mind this is by no means a necessary or probable conclusion, but the objector seems to consider it to be a proven fact, for he boldly asserts:

This refutes the claim that the document on supreme directional control was the outgrowth of a request coming from the council.—HERALD, 1924, p. 1089.

I feel sure that the brother would not want one to judge him by such a flimsy so-called refutation, if he were the one concerned. They appear to be unjustified suspicions, which in his mind apparently become a conviction to be accepted as proof.

Supremacy of Temporal Heads

The desire that the Presiding Bishopric be established as a separate quorum of equal and even superior authority and power to any other quorum in the church, having indisputable executive control of all funds, finances, and temporalities, is a dangerous ambition for the head of the temporal department to foster. The spokesman for this position argues that the primary right of interpreting and applying the temporal law rests in the Bishopric (which according to him means the Presiding Bishopric), and can be overruled by the three leading quorums only subject to higher appeal, of which he says:

The Bishopric may, under certain conditions, be called in question by the joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, but even this council is not supreme. An appeal may be taken from their decision to the General Assembly or to General Conference.—HERALD, 1924, p. 1091.

If the Bishopric could not be controlled or interfered with in the management of temporalities except by calling together all three of these quorums, and even then only “under certain conditions,” then the temporal department heads would be much more powerful than the Presidency of the whole church. This is not only a dangerous doctrine in its unqualified presentation, but has been shown to be a wrong construction placed upon the law, and contrary to its specific requirements.

Within less than a year after the church was organized a revelation was given which showed that it was the Lord’s will for the Bishop to work with the Presidency in important temporal matters. When provision was made for the work of establishing Zion, the Lord also provided that the Presidency be a directing power in that work, as follows:

...and then ye shall begin to be gathered with your families, every man according to his family, according to his circumstances, and as is appointed to him by the presidency and the bishop of the church, according to the laws and commandments which ye have received and which ye shall hereafter receive.—Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2.

It is clear that the Presidency come first in authority in these activities, and early history shows that the Bishop did not maintain independence of the Presidency in the early church, but was under their supervision as those who presided over all the affairs of the church.

Joseph Smith Speaks

While Joseph Smith stated that the “church finances, and the custody and care of the properties of the church, were by the direction of the revelations of God assigned as duties to the bishopric,” this care was in a subordinate sense and was also subject to church laws. He continues:

The objects to the furtherance of which the means of the church in moneys and properties, gathered into the treasury and storehouse, are clearly stated in the church articles and covenants, and are not dependent upon the desires, designs, whims, or caprices of either of the leading quorums of the church, or of the Bishopric.—HERALD, 1903, p. 426, editorial.

That the leading quorums or the Bishopric could not handle temporal affairs contrary to the church laws is here clearly indicated. The powers of discretion accorded the Bishopric, with which the leading officials are not to “improperly” interfere, are here clearly implied as subordinate, otherwise they could not interfere at all. The subject of Joseph’s article is “Dowie and Finance,” and after remarking upon the eminent success of Dowie, who held entire control of finances, Joseph sorrowfully says: “The contrast with our own poverty as a body of believers is a pitiful one.” He asks the question:

Why then should there be such a contrast between faith and performance as is afforded by a comparison of our condition as regards our work with the condition of Mr. Dowie and his fellows?—Ibid.

It has been argued that a statement should not be applied to a body outside of that for which it was provided. In this case we must recognize that the document growing out of and seeking to adjust differences between the Twelve and Presiding Bishopric should not be made to apply to the rights of the Presidency. By making this comment the opposing writer concedes that the document submitted by the Twelve and Bishopric, as found in Resolution 238, could not exclude the presiding rights of the Presidency over temporal affairs, as the language applies only to relative rights of the Twelve and Bishopric, as follows:

Discretionary power to receive and disburse church funds, and dispose of church property for the uses of the church, according to the laws of the church, and subject to inquiry by the Twelve and the church, must rest in the Bishopric only, as, by law, the Bishopric only are legal custodians of such properties.—Resolution 238: 7.

A Later Revelation Explains

This resolution (of 1881) was known as the “Basis of Adjustment” between the Twelve and Presiding Bishopric, in 1878, and grew out of a difference of opinion as to the meaning of the revelation given to the Twelve in 1861 (Doctrine and Covenants 114), which directed them to exercise certain supervision of the temporal department. Some years after the resolution just quoted was adopted, however, the Lord spoke to the church and explained the matter, authorizing the Twelve to make examination in case the temporal affairs were improperly conducted (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 5). If further proof were needed to show that this resolution does not attempt to speak on the rights of the Presidency to direct in temporal affairs, it is found in the resolution itself, which limits the right to “dispose of church property” to the “Bishopric only,” and could not be construed in conflict with the revelation given in 1894 which specifically states that the high council was over the affairs of the Bishop’s office only in an “advisory manner,” and further specifies:
nor was it designed that the high council should dictate in the matter of purchasing lands, building houses of worship, building up the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the people, these last named being within the province of the presidency, the twelve as a quorum, the councils or other officers of the branches or stakes where houses of worship are to be built, the conferences and the general assembly of the church, and the direction of the Lord by revelation.—Doctrine and Covenants 122:6.

The resolution therefore does not in the least imply that the Presidency shall not exercise directional control over the temporal department. The past history of the work of the Presidency from the earliest days, the conference enactments, and the revelations accepted by the church all harmonize with the fact that directional control over the temporal department is a function of the office of the Presidency. Arguments to the contrary lead to confusion in interpreting the law, leave the temporal department without proper safeguards, and become involved in a hopeless tangle, instead of bringing coordination and cooperation in all departments of church work. The present diversity of purposes and methods, as well as the opposition to the coordination of the temporal department with the chief administrative office in the church, is itself a sufficient illustration of this fact and the need of an executive control that shall be over all departments.

Executives and Church Press

The Saints’ Herald belongs to the church, and is intended to be the official mouthpiece of the church, regardless of what printing house may issue it. The chief executives, the Presidency, should therefore have oversight of the matter to be published in it. The Lord has also directed that doctrinal matter, either in tracts or submitted for the Herald, should be submitted to the Presidency before being published. This is in accordance with past procedure. As early as October, 1861, the following was submitted to General Conference as the action of the Twelve:

It was stated that the Quorum of the Twelve had resolved that President Joseph Smith, with others whom he may call to his aid, have examination and supervision of the matter going into the Herald.—Herald, vol. 2, p. 155.

This right of supervision (Isaac Sheen was then editor) was never taken from him till the time of his death, though attempts were made by certain ones to do so it would appear. Even when the Herald was published at Cincinnati and Isaac Sheen was editor, while Joseph lived in Nauvoo, doctrinal matter was not admitted into the Herald until it had been passed upon by him, and the following notice was published to that effect:

Communications on doctrine, for the Herald, must be sent to President Joseph Smith, Nauvoo, Ill.—Herald, July, 1862, p. 24.

The word must was emphasized in this notice and in subsequent issues. The church thus not only recognized the right of the Presidency to supervise the issuance of doctrinal matter in the Herald, but it also has directed that the discussion of certain matters are not to be admitted to the columns of the Herald. It has said that some things may be discussed, but that certain things may not be discussed there.

The Right of Discussion Limited

Considerable has been written by the opposition to show that discussion is a good thing. This may be granted and even affirmed, provided attempt is not made to put into the Herald the very kind of discussion that the church has ordered excluded therefrom. It is therefore beside the point to say that Joseph Smith or any leading official believed in discussion. Will those who belittle the order of conference as to what shall not be discussed in the Herald justify themselves on the ground that their judgment is above that of General Conference? Let us note what the church has ordered kept out:

That where radical differences of opinion occur between leading representatives of the body, the discussion of them should take place in quorum capacity, and not through the columns of the Herald.—Resolution No. 298:3.

Had this resolution been adopted last June it could not have applied more clearly to the controversy thrown into the Herald at that time by the opposition. Radical differences of opinion occurred between leading representatives, but one side to the discussion obtained control of the Herald and not only forced the matter upon the membership generally, the young and inexperienced, the newborn babes in Christ, but sent it broadcast over the world in disregard of the very body to which they claimed to be subject.

Not Ku Klux Klan

For some reason, perhaps because of my signature appearing at the end of an article in Saints’ Herald for November, 1924, several at different places reached the conclusion that the undersigned belonged to the Ku Klux Klan. This is an error. I have never belonged to any secret organization of any kind at any time, and have never at any time even applied to any secret organization, not even a collegiate fraternity or Greek Letter Society; hence of course do not belong to any such organizations at present.

Let the People Rule

Let the People Rule

BY J. P. GARVER

II. LET THE PEOPLE SPEAK

The appeal in this controversy has been to the people. Confidence has by both sides been expressed in the judgment and integrity of the people. All have thus with one accord forsworn themselves for the voice of the people. Let the people speak.

That the document on church government adopted by the April council was to go to the people in General Conference was the general understanding of the brethren of this council at adjournment. And by the April council was to go to the people in General Conference that the people might vote. June 4 succintly put the cause in this wise:

"The People May Speak, If—"

It has been asked by one of the leading advocates of this most excellent philosophy, "Can the people be trusted?" Evidently not, i.e., not when it appears they may vote against us.

So it is that to these former questions we thought settled, we shall now have to make answers in the light of this late answer, and other recent developments, so modified as to read as follows:

1. Does the present situation in the church "demand serious consideration" to a conclusion? Yes; if that conclusion is to agree with us!

2. Is "the coming General Conference" the place to so consider? Yes; if it will forswear itself to agree with us!

3. Having so disposed of the matter, is the conference to be yielded to as "the highest authority in the church?" Yes; if it agrees with us!

4. Will this its enactment "combine the inspiration of God and the will of the people"? Yes; if it agrees with us!

5. Will it "settle this controversy in a definite, constructive manner"? Yes; if it agrees with us!

6. Will our people in such settlement be "reunited, confidence reestablished, and the cause of the Master advanced"? Yes; if it agrees with us!

7. Will this particular conference enactment be "binding without exception upon members, officers, and quorums"? Yes; if it agrees with us!

Yes, by all means, let the people speak—provided of course they agree with us. Otherwise, Let all the people keep silence.

Let the People Speak

But who, pray, is to determine what is to be a "definite and constructive" enactment? Binding alike on "members, officials, and quorums"? Not those who now seem to intimate conference enactment might not be constructive. For this is the very matter they themselves as well as we have committed to the conference, "the highest authority in the church"! What lesser authority, then, can prevail against the conference action? or say the conference should not speak? since it might speak destructively! Where do these men stand, in the light of their own construction of the rights and finality of conference? And in the light of their appeal to its judgment?

We thus call our brethren to book of their own making. They have said, Let the people speak. We have joined them, and have said, Let the people speak. And it shall be so. For we do not propose to be stampeded by some fear the conference will not be constructive. Nor are the people made of the stuff to be stampeded by such a fear. The peopeople do not fear themselves. And since Brother T. W. Williams has said, "Compromise should not, under any circumstances, be considered," let the people vote up or down the document on church government. Let the people speak.

And this we will do, unless we have lost faith in the people.

A Word of Consolation

So late as August 20, 1924, Brethren B. R. McGuire, J. F. Keir, I. A. Smith, J. W. Rushton, T. W. Williams, and others declared in the Heralds:

We believe that God will be mindful of our needs in this present crisis, as he has in times past, and we have faith in the integrity and judgment of our people. Let the church decide.

Surely our brethren will not so soon have lost faith in the "integrity and judgment of our people." At any rate, not in the integrity of the people. So, shall they find the judgment of the people against them, let their consolation be in the integrity of the people.

And they may be further consoled in the words of the Book of Mormon, quoted in the preamble to their resolution on common consent proposed to the conference of 1928:

Now it is not common that the voice of the people desire anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right; therefore this shall you observe, and make all your laws by the voice of the people.—Mosiah 15: 35, 36.

When the vote is taken, the people will have decided. And however the vote, the presumption will run the people are right, and an opposition wrong.

And should this be finally found to be one of the uncommon occasions when the people have been wrong, then can the people right themselves, or be righted: by reversing their action, or by accepting the word of God.

Again, we must say, however, the strong presumption will run that the people are right.

So in all these considerations our brethren may have consolation indeed.

We Take Our Stand With the People

That the people will speak, we have every confidence. That they will speak with clearness, we have every assurance. That they will speak in wisdom; we have every reason to believe.

The Presidency have before time assured the church they will at the conclusion of the vote stand with the people.

We have given like assurance to the church, and we do so again. We will stand with the people.

Can anyone after committing the proposition to the people say he will not stand with the people?

Who dares say, I will not take my stand with the people!

The Two Theories of Church Government in Contrast

By John W. Rushton

Since the discussion of church government or administration has been in progress, a number have attempted to explain the meaning of the two documents which represent the two positions—the one entitled "Supreme directional control," the other "An open letter." During the discussion in the Saints' Herald since the beginning of last June, many things have been stated which do not seem to be relevant; some other things stated and implied which are without foundation in fact and misleading. Indisputably, one may challenge and discuss the nature and functions of administration without being disrespectful to the government or any of the officials. It does not necessarily follow because the method or the way in which leadership may be expressed is subject to examination or adverse criticism, the leader is repudiated. Further, while it is true that the end of all government should be "the betterment of human conditions," or, in the language of the late W. E. Gladstone, "to make it easier for men to be good and do good and harder for men to be ill and do ill," yet the means through which such a desirable end is to be attained may not be perfect or even the best. All questions of government involve two considerations; that of "ends" or "purposes" and of "means" or "method." Students of human affairs must admit the possibility of error in fixing wrong ends or selecting and using wrong means, even though the leaders may be never so wise, humane, and skillful. The history of the race is the tracing of progress in man's effort at self-government.

We shall not consume time to deny or explain some of the things which have been alleged and implied by those who have been termed "administrationists" or their supporters against those who have been termed "oppositionists" and their supporters, but shall call attention to the things which stand out as being clearly important and significant.

To indulge in personal feelings and prejudices not only obscures the real issues but renders those who do this thing unfitted for passing proper judgment and of reaching proper conclusions. Human nature as long as it is unchanged is prone to do this. However interesting personalities may be, they are relatively unimportant; the church should not be much concerned with persons, but must be and is deeply concerned about and interested in the truth as found in facts and principles. It is well to remember truth is equally authoritative no matter who may speak it, or what the source of its origin. Let us not forget also, that while man has mastered many forces and solved many problems, the task of self-government still is baffling us. No problem during the war and since its close has caused such difficulty as this one; so in the field of such vast and complex a character, let us maintain good temper and approach our difficulty with patience.

We have seen in this discussion already, to what lengths men who normally are kindly and generous will go when principles are lost sight of and personal- ities are made the chief concern. We may be sure that the problem which is challenging us cannot be downed by methods of harshness or by shutting our eyes to the obvious. The elimination of certain men on either or both sides will not settle the trouble, as we must see by examining the course of the church since 1919. The problem must be solved either by us now or by others later. In any event appeal should be to the reasoning judgment rather than to passion or prejudice.

So far two facts are worthy of notice:

First, the document in which supreme directional control in the hands of the President is advocated is the center of controversy. This controversy engages the whole church, arousing suspicion and alarm to such an extent that elimination of one group or the other is threatened; and again, another one in high position reads into the opposition to supreme directional control the menace of schism. That such conclusions are hysterical would readily be agreed under normal conditions, and while not indorsing them, we use them to show that the situation is serious and the consequences not pleasant to contemplate.

Second, the document entitled “An open letter,” stating the nature of the government characteristic of the church, most certainly has not occasioned controversy, nor have its principles been challenged or questioned.

What do these facts signify?

There is only one meaning. Whatever may be said of “supreme directional control,” a large number of stable and experienced people of the church whose loyalty and integrity apart from this never have been questioned, find it a strange doctrine quite incompatible with their experience in their church life. One, perhaps the most persuasive advocate and champion of this doctrine, employing all of his literary skill to garnish it and make it palatable, admits that it is susceptible of more than one interpretation, and that it could be interpreted to make it disagreeable to him:

The document on church government I could never defend if given the extreme and unconstitutional interpretations that have been put upon it by adverse critics. I can support it when given a reasonable interpretation.—SAINTS’ HERALD, 1924, p. 1011.

This writer may be able to enjoy the raspberry jam with which he can successfully hide the “bitter aloes,” but others cannot accept the camouflage even though in delectable form, for the “pill” is not miscible because of their previous experience. A document which is capable of being interpreted extremely and unconstitutionally should be challenged and that very vigorously.

Several have made the effort, through a number of quotations, to show that supreme directional control is neither new nor incompatible with the past experience of the church. Without commenting on this at length we are satisfied to observe that the misuse of their writings would cause surprise if not indignation to the authors whose names and writings have been thus employed. If this doctrine is neither new nor incompatible, then what good purpose can be served by attempting to force it upon the church when it is disagreeable to so vast a number and is causing so much unnecessary strife? To be sure, if there is nothing new in it, its authors will gain nothing even should it be adopted, while should it be adopted many would be aggrieved because it is disagreeable.

Briefly let us analyze the two documents. First the one entitled “Supreme directional control.”

It contains four essential features:

First; the nature of church government, which is described as “theo-democratic,” God, the priesthood, and the people being the factors in government.

Second; the priesthood is a body of men holding positions of graduated authority, shading off from the lesser to the greater until the greatest or highest one is reached.

Third; the General Conference has only the right of assenting or consenting to whatever this graduated priesthood may initiate.

Fourth; the right to enforce the will of the priesthood by effective disciplinary measures in the hands of the President.

Upon its face, unless “interpreted” or interfered with by those who would modify it, we have here such centralization of power as can only be termed autocracy.

One of the advocates of this document has claimed to represent the President of the church in his interpretation of it, and several imply that they also know what he means. These claims might be authentic, of course we do not know, and it is only necessary to remark that others perhaps as well qualified to speak because of experience, and with equal sincerity, state that the President means exactly opposite to what the advocates of the document aver. In the meantime it is significant that President F. M. Smith is silent upon this question of meaning, though none will doubt his ability to express his meaning without hesitation or terminological inexactitude if he so desired; and, the columns of the church paper are open to him as to all.
Fortunately, we are not left without definite testimony on this question of either newness, change, or meaning, for as late as January of 1923 in the Priesthood Journal, I believe President Smith's official organ, he states clearly some things he has in mind, which, whatever else may be said of them, certainly do not witness to the accuracy of these advocates who assure us that there is no change intended and that the fear of autocracy and centralization is quite groundless:

Efficient organization demands centralized control and abuse of such power is a potential danger; but in benevolent control lies potential blessings. And why spend time and energy in guarding against possible abuse of power instead of helping and supporting the benevolent control?

Personal progress is made by breaking up bad habits and forming better ones, and no individual makes radical change in his habits without a period of confusion; so sometimes confusion may indicate progress.

As with individuals, so with groups; radical changes in customs may create temporary confusion, and confusion may be the concomitant of progress.—Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 11.

If radical change in our church customs and habits is not contemplated, then such language is platitudinous, if not worse. If progress and confusion go together, then our development in ratio to the law, are recognized.

Let us now consider the "open letter" and the principles of government therein stated.

First; the nature of the church government comprises three factors; viz, God, the priesthood, and the people.

Second; the priesthood consists of those men whose duty it is to carry out the divine intent for the benefit of the people according to the laws found in the accepted standard books.

Third; the duties of the priesthood according to these books and the customs and habits of the church, are divided into two grand divisions; viz, the "spiritual" and the "temporal," the first being under the immediate care of the "Melchizedec" and the second under the immediate care of the "Aaronic" priesthood. The Presidency is the "head" of the former, and the Presiding Bishop the "head" of the latter, as categorically stated in the law.

Fourth; while all authority is from God, yet the General Conference is the means through which the people validate the acts and duties of the officers, quorums, and departments through recognized processes of legislation. The church requires that all should report to these conferences, as all are authorized and sustained in their office and service by the conferences.

It is not necessary to argue that the "open letter" does not deny either the office of the First Presidency or the rights of leadership which belong thereto. It is a matter of surprise that some of those who have defended the document on supreme directional control evidently have overlooked the fact that distinctly, specifically, and plainly the rights and prerogatives of the First Presidency, as defined in the law, are recognized.

Certain rights are "inherent" to each grade of the priesthood, while others are "contingent" upon circumstances and authorization by higher officers. Discriminating between the "inherent" and the "contingent" rights has been a source of controversy, as it still is.

Let us now note that the two documents each contain the same factors in the government of the church; namely, God as the source of inspiration, the people as the beneficiaries, and the priesthood as the instrument.

God is not governing his church directly and immediately, but mediately through the human instrumentality—the priesthood. Upon these two important points the two documents seem to be in essential agreement.

The differences between the two are intimated in the following:

Supreme directional control as stated in the document and supported by the arguments and actions of President Smith, clearly implies that the graduated priesthood naturally shades off from the lesser to the greater until in case of disagreement the President has the power to cancel the views and opinions of all others. Thus, the only right remaining to the officers and the people is that of consenting to what the President proposes. Besides the quotations already given in which this demand of a highly centralized control is made, together with the presumption that it will be benevolent, we call attention to another statement made by President Smith in the Priesthood Journal for November, 1922, volume 8, number 11, page 164, as follows:

To guarantee harmony in work, those having the responsibility must be sympathetic workers; and this being true, it follows that a course must be pursued which will give the one holding the chief responsibility a chance to indicate his choice, while at the same time protecting the rights of the superior department officers as well as of the people.

The prime factor to be kept in mind in efforts to coordinate is harmonious working, and any "plan" followed to reach this desideratum should not be stinted or inflexible. We should secure harmonious working by the shortest cut.

It is easy to account for some things which have happened in the light of this philosophy of casuistry, for the end justifies the means. This Jesuitical process never has set well with the Protestant conscience, and we never expected to see that it would be introduced in this church as a "short cut" to desired ends. Short cuts which invade the sacred precincts of conscience and reason are dangerous. One can easily see that, granted to the head of the church the right to secure submission to his will and harmonious working among all officers by the adoption of any plan or short cut that will gain this end, "effective discipline" will be needed. There is the reason why he may say, If you do not agree with me, why don’t you resign? Again, there is not room enough in the church for you and me together, could be said to anyone who for conscientious reason dared to withstand the President because he might be at fault. Can it not be seen that such a position can only be classified with the papal claim to infallibility?

The claim of such supreme directional control, together with the denuding of the conferences of any power but that of consenting or assenting to the will of the President, easily shows that “caprice and rebellion” can be charged against any one or all who may not consent to the President’s “function of coordination.”

In the light of this, what does the “ample provision against abuse of this power provided for in the law” mean? So far, the law giving such protection has neither been quoted nor cited. Obviously, there is no protection, for the President according to the logic of his own position can adopt any “plan” or any “short cut” which will bring him his “desideratum.” The only thing which the President says can be done in case any should feel they have been abused is to “depose him from his office.” Think of it! The only “control” which the church has of its highest and chiefest “servant” is, if you do not like what he is doing, “put him out.” Surely we shall have peace, but it will not be the peace of contentment; there will be “harmony,” but it will not be the harmony of coordination. However, if the promises of “supreme directional control” are granted, then logically any short cut to his ends is justifiable; all who disagree with him or his methods should resign, and there can be no way of holding him accountable, for he is accountable only to God; then, if the church does not like his policies or methods, refuse to sustain him.

It seems difficult to believe that such a position could be held seriously by religious people in this twentieth century.

History reveals that this is a very dangerous form of government. However well intentioned men may be, none have as yet been able to exercise such powers and avoid the perils of a dictatorship with its consequent excesses and abuses. The Magna Charta and the American Constitution were born as a protest against this practice on the part of the sovereign. The Reformation was the revolt of the conscience against this same doctrine as claimed and practiced by the pope.

It is absurd to say that Joseph Smith and other defenders of the Reorganization were sympathetic to this doctrine and there is no difference between what is claimed by the present incumbent and the late President. To do so not only misrepresents the history of the past sixty-five years or more, but shows either a lack of information or carelessness in reading President F. M. Smith’s language at least during the last decade.

The “open letter” in contradistinction to this position places the highest authority, humanly speaking, with the people, the conference being the instrument through which that power is expressed. This expression includes the will of God which is recognized as the “voice of the Good Shepherd” and is made law through processes of discussion and education. The inspiration of the Almighty pervades the conscience and reason of the whole. The “open letter” also provides that all ministerial groups have certain defined and inherent rights, and in the exercise of their powers all are equally responsible to God and his people for the faithful discharge of their respective duties and functions. It also clearly insists that the government of the church is the concern of all and the enactments of the conferences shall be respected by all, which includes the idea that the whole is greater than any one of its parts, be that part minister or layman, quorum or department. Further, because the people must find the money to carry on the work, and their interests both here and hereafter are affected by what may be done or attempted, they have the right to know of the programs, policies, and activities which are contemplated. Not only so, but to discuss them, criticize, or even reject them and substitute others in the stead of what may be proposed. And all of this without being obliged to adopt the revolutionary method of deposing the President or any other officer to secure lawful and orderly control of their affairs.

That this course is in harmony with the New Testament scarcely needs to be mentioned. The same principle was the justification of the Reorganized Church and the ground of its invincible defense before the courts of the land.

To surrender this principle will be treason to the racial conscience and a betrayal of the greatest heroes whose struggles have given us the freedom which is ours.

Two terms have been popularized in the church of late years, principally because of President F. M. Smith; and in these two terms there is that which in no wise can be reconciled with supreme directional control. These terms are “pervasive inspiration” and “coordination.” By pervasive inspiration is meant “continuous revelation,” which is the basic principle of the church. This inspiration permeates the whole so that each member may have for himself a knowledge of God and a testimony that he lives; and, that Jesus is his personal Savior. This it is which Christ defined as the foundation upon which he would build his church. He asked his disciples, "Whom say ye that I am? Peter answered: Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. Jesus said: Blessed art thou, Simon Barjonah; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Fa ther which is in heaven. And upon this rock I will build my church." When Paul spoke of the unity of the Spirit as being the bond of peace, it was the spiritual oneness which our Lord had in mind when he prayed "that they may all be one; even as thou Fa ther, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us: ... that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them, and thou in me, that they may be perfec ted into one."

Any "plan" or "short cut" to his desired end which would interfere with the "will to be moral" would have destroyed morality and forever have prevented that "oneness" which is "spiritual unity."

When the Galatian saints were being "troubled" by Judaizing Christians, Paul's letter was a magnificent repudiation of those claims to power based upon the accidents of nationality or special privileges, and he commands the Galatians to "stand fast in the liberty" wherewith Christ had made them free.

The "open letter" accepts the principle of "pervasive inspiration," but insists that the one who assumes to "speak as the voice of God and be like unto Moses" shall establish that message in the authority of the truth which is already ours. What is meant by President Smith when he speaks of "pervasive inspiration" is the same thing we mean when we say that the word of God shall be "socialized" or "democratized." We mean, it must be "shared in" by the people through processes of discussion and education.

That this is the purpose of the constitutional law providing that all purporting to be "inspirational direction" shall be submitted to the various quorums of ministry and finally to the people for their consideration and indorsement, before becoming law, cannot be doubted. When the church was being tested in the famous Temple Lot Suit, this was especially emphasized by such men as Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair. Speaking of revelation Joseph Smith said:

It cannot become law and be binding as law until it is submitted to the quorums and indorsed by them, and approved by the body; but it may be a revelation without such acceptance and indorsement, but before it can be binding upon the church as a church, it must be acted upon and accepted. That was the doctrine of the church prior to the death of Joseph Smith, in 1844.

Again:

The right of revelation did not inhere in the First Presidency, because the right of revelation inheres to every member of the church who is possessed of the gift, but the gift to receive revelation for the church and its guidance inheres in the Presidency of the church, and whatever purports to be revelation is still tested, as has been the custom; that is, whatever purports to be revelation for the doctrine or government of the church, or affecting either in any material issue, before it becomes authority, must be presented to and acted upon by the presiding quorums of the church—the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy especially.

Joseph Smith gives a good reason for this custom and habit:

A man may be mistaken, even though he be the president of the church as to the genuineness or authenticity of revelations claimed to have been received.

This he further elucidates as follows:

This is not a new mode that has been introduced into the church since the Reorganization. The Reorganization has endeavored to follow the teachings and precepts of the old church from its inception.

Now there is one item of the law that requires or states that the three leading quorums of the church have what might be called concurrent jurisdiction, and the decision by either one of them is equivalent to a decision by either of the others, thus exercising or maintaining a neutralizing power in cases of conflict, so that the rights of the people may be kept free from imposition by false doctrine or theory by anybody; and also in the rules of the Doctrine and Covenants, which require that matters of that importance shall be submitted to the body for their action, for approval or disapproval, at the conferences held from time to time when they meet.

It may be that some of the confusion which has developed in recent years is a necessary concomitant to progress because we have been attempting a radical change in these methods. But in the light of the record made by this man who for fifty years or more guided the destinies of this church on earth, we are not persuaded that the customs and habits were "bad." Another one whose word now "speaks out of the dust," whose name and contributions to the Reorganized Church are a treasured memory, is William W. Blair, and here is what he says in 1885:

We claim that the church is the highest interpreter of the law and has a right to interpret it in applying it to these matters. I mean that the church, the organized body of the church in conference, is the highest authority and has the only right to interpret the law. Yes, sir, I mean the Reorganized Church. In respect to our affairs, we claim that the conference assembled is the highest authority or tribunal that can possibly be in the church. That was the law in the original church, and the usage too. I do not know that it is higher than revelation, but in order for revelation to be binding on the church, it must be accepted by the church.—Saints' Advocate, vol. 7, No. 10, p. 535.

How can "supreme directional control" be reconciled with "pervasive inspiration"?

Consider also the meaning of "coordination"—equality of rank, mutuality of function and relationship, not subordination, for the accomplishment of a given end. If there is a word that describes the relationship of the Christian ministry, that word is coordination. Here is the definition of Christ:

Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them. But so shall it not be among you: but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister: and whosoever of you will be chiefest, shall be servant of all.—Mark 10: 42-44.

To harmonize the word coordination with supreme directional control in the hands of the President would tax the ability of the profoundest philologist. The further demand for power to employ effective discipline creates a suspicion that supreme directional control is foreign to the Christian ethic and spirit; it suggests the “lordship of the Gentiles which Jesus repudiates. We prefer the definition of Christianity which finds the homologue of the church in the human family, and insists that the true relationship is that “all ye are brothers.” We feel sure also, that the “plan” which will bring about unity and harmony is not the sword of Damocles suspended in constant menace, but that of which Paul writes to the Romans: “Love is the fulfilling of the law.” And it is interesting to keep in mind that he is discussing the problems of government when he writes this. Whatever love and fellowship cannot win for the church of Christ is not worth having. Uniformity may be gained by such measures of effective discipline, but we shall not have the garden of the soul whose beauty is that of variety in harmony, but an unnatural uniformity which will be the evidence that whatever such a church may be, it cannot be the living body of Christ.

The frame may stand without a breach
When life and warmth have fled;
And still she speaks her wonted speech,
But every word is dead.

Hitherto the courts of the church have been regarded as sufficient to maintain effective discipline. We are not disposed to think that such a provision in the divine economy is ineffective, and do seriously believe that such power in the hands of one man is too great a temptation.

As we examine the demand for supreme directional control in the hands of the President, it will be seen that it carries us farther and deeper than appears on the surface. In its very essence, this new theory of government cancels the inherent rights of conscience and reason in the individuals and lodges authority in some externality; thus, this church would become another example of mechanical authoritarianism of which the Roman Catholic and the Mormon Churches are outstanding. Heresy hunting would become a profession, and the “bitter burning brand of apostate” would be the fashionable method of ostracism. The limit and nature of effective discipline so far as methods are concerned would be conditioned and limited only by the law of the land. Let us not forget that the history of yesterday is the prophecy of to-morrow.

Theo-democracy is a term which seems to be agreeable to both sides in the controversy. It is used to combine the outstanding features of two diametrically opposite forms of government, with both of which humanity has had experience in some degree. The first, theocracy, is the oldest form of government we know anything about; democracy is the latest, and as yet is in its experimental stages. So far as the document on “supreme directional control” is concerned, democracy seems to serve no other purpose than that of verbal millinery. The logic of the document forces us to “theocracy,” pure and simple; for the people have no rights but that of consenting to what the highest member of the hierarchy proposes. According to its author, the benefits to be secured through supreme directional control, briefly stated, are precisely what theocracy guarantees: A theocracy recognizes no difference between church and state. Through the priesthood the unseen powers of divine pleasure and displeasure are controlled to force submission to their will. It inevitably demands centralization of power, spiritual, moral, financial, and political. Its supreme authority is unassailable. It inspires intense devotion and loyalty.

The remnants of theocracy can be found among the Jewish people, Hinduism, Mohammedanism; and among modern churches we have mentioned the Roman Catholic and the Mormon.

With the daring which seemed to characterize him, Joseph Fielding Smith, the late president of the Mormon Church, summarizes the tendency of this sort of government in a speech he delivered in the Salt Lake Tabernacle, which was reported in the Deseret News April 25, 1896, as follows:

The fact of the matter is, when a man says you may direct me spiritually, but not temporally, he lies in the presence of God, that is if he has intelligence enough to know what he is talking about.

Think of the price which will have to be paid for this form of government. It has fatally checked the growth of many nations; some it has ruined. It tends to uphold the external and unspiritual idea of divine favor and displeasure, which applied to external events leads to a false political philosophy, as no doubt the students of political economy can well testify. It fosters misunderstanding and hatred towards those who differ from them. It stimulates a narrow and bitter patriotism: “My country, may she ever be right; but my country, right or wrong.” In victory there is the disposition to be cruelly intolerant. Under this sort of an attitude it is almost impossible for a theocratic people to learn anything from other people. It cannot adapt itself to new conditions or profit by new acquisitions of knowledge. Conduct rests upon authority, not conscience; such a morality has no means of reforming itself. It argues "from the truth" and not "towards the truth." I will quote a final passage from Dean Inge who discusses the philosophy of government in the second series of "Outspoken Essays":

There is another defect in theocracy, as a form of government, which has had very serious consequences. Every government rests ultimately on force, though at ordinary times the force is kept in the background and the machine runs itself, kept going by habit and custom, and by a measure of general good will towards constituted authority. . . . But under a theocracy there is no material power to fall back upon; the authority is spiritual and unseen. For some, theocracy provides fear and superstition—tabus. In the Middle Ages the popes exercised a real power by excommunication and interdict. But the time comes when this spiritual authority is called in question, and then the theocracy is at once threatened. It is obliged in self-defense to resist any change in the mental condition of its subjects which will cause its authority to be undermined. . . . A religion of this kind seems to have the fatal power to kill off all other religion in its neighborhood. . . . It is extremely difficult for a modern theocracy to reform itself; for it has probably shed many naturally religious persons by its methods of dealing with the uneducated, and as the pressure increases, it has to depend upon a lower and lower clientele. . . . A heavy price has to be paid by a civilization which calls in an ambitious priesthood to save it.

These words of gravity from this renowned philosopher-theologian have peculiar significance; even in our limited organization and short experience we discern the very things of which he writes in process of development. Surely the criticism of the document advising the church to so reactionary a form of government is fully justified. In the light of all the experience in history this attempt to revive a theocratic government under the domination of a hierarchy all subordinate to the chief executive or hierarch has no more hope of final success than King Canute did when he strove to sweep back the incoming tide of the German Ocean with a broom.

Let it be clearly understood that when the "open letter" stresses democracy, it is not advocating a pure democracy. Neither do we accept all the definitions and explanations of which the "administrations" have delivered themselves. We are quite aware of the suspicion which is widely held in some quarters that democracy has failed, but we do not believe that because of the experimental condition of democracy in which mistakes and probably excesses can be discerned, reversion to one-man rule is a proper corrective. The people must be allowed to make their mistakes, as President Coolidge sagely said. The fundamental thing about democracy is, it puts the seat of authority within the individual. Especially is this truth brought out in the Reform movement in religion in which "the conscience and spiritual experiences of the individual are the foundation of faith and morals. . . . The center of gravity in religion has shifted from authority to experience." In education and in morals the tendency is not to place the burden on individuals as leaders, but to educate the mass to know the good, the beautiful, and the true; and to cultivate the will to love the lovable, admire the admirable, to do the right because of the love of right, and in the language of the great Immanuel Kant, to "do one's duty for duty's sake." This is the end of real democracy.

While democracy may be criticized, and the common people spoken of with contempt, it is well to remember that the Anglo-Saxon culture is distinctly democratic, and it is the highest and noblest we know. The late Woodrow Wilson spoke with the prophetic afflatus when he said that the object of the great war was to keep the world safe for democracy.

We commend the following definition of the inner meaning of democracy by Doctor J. H. Muirhead, of Birmingham, England, as being worthy of careful consideration. It surely presents an ideal of government which is immeasurably superior to the one we are criticizing.

The ground of my faith in democracy is that it seems to me to stand for two ideas which are bound up with the essence of the human spirit. It stands in the first place for self-government in the sense of the freedom of a man to choose his own ends and to direct his own course in the effort to realize them. To a being, to whom no good can be real good except in so far as it is self-chosen, no determination is of any value which is not self-determination or which is such as to lead to it in the end. Whether we are speaking of the individual or of society as a union of individuals, self-determination is a birthright of the spirit which it can never, except in a moment of aberration, barter away for any mess of pottage that dictators whether of the old or new order can promise. In the second place, democracy stands for the idea of equality, not in the sense of any qualitative or quantitative identity of actual goods, but in the sense of the equal right of all to the development of such capacity for good as nature has endowed them with. This also follows from the nature of spirit. It is of the essence of a spiritual whole that there can be no development of any one of the members which does not carry with it new possibilities of the development of others; no failure in the development of one which does not reflect itself in failure of development of others. Bringing these two points together and applying what has been said of equality to the development of liberty, there can be no real freedom in any section or class in a community so long as any other is in bondage.—Hibbert Journal, vol. 22, No. 3.

There can be no mistaking the spiritual unity of these conclusions with the ideal of "solidarity" expressed by Saint Paul all through his writings to the Christian church. The interests of all are interrelated: "When one member suffers all members suffer with it; when one member is honored all are honored." It is also in the memory of some who have listened attentively or read with ordinary care what President F. M. Smith himself has strongly advocated in what he calls the "social program," that as long as one is involuntarily poor none has the right to be rich; while one is involuntarily miserable none has the right to be happy." How can one advocate a social program based upon the essential intellectually and sincerely "pervasive inspiration" as a desirable governmental policy?

It is clear also that no argument is needed to show that this definition harmonizes with what has been said of "pervasive inspiration" and "coordination."

In looking over the past experiences since 1915, we can appreciate the "saturation" which has been in process and is now focalized in this document on "supreme directional control." We can no longer say this is what the church has been used to and is the same policy which brought prosperity to the cause under the late Joseph Smith without advertising either ignorance or perversity. Those who make such a claim certainly should see that if it is true that this doctrine is not new, then the controversy is not only meaningless but suicidal.

In conclusion, let us look at the doctrine and its probable effect from the pragmatic point of view, that is the demonstration of the truth by the working results.

Through the form of government in vogue up to the time of the death of the late venerable President, the church was lifted out of obscurity, converted from an inchoate mass into an orderly, articulated whole, the membership multiplied many times, missionary and local enterprise opened new fields and established congregational activity under the devoted and loyal services of able and self-sacrificing men. The corps of workers at home and abroad made impressive gains, souls were being added to the church, and the kingdom was making steady gains. There was among the brethren a spirit of good-fellowship and buoyant faith; unity and confidence among the ministry and laity pervaded the whole; all eagerly responded to the call to "Come up higher." At the very time the present incumbent took his revered father's place, the following editorial from Zion's Ensign is indicative of the condition of the church:

Never before has the church shown such unity of purpose under stress of circumstances than [as] it shows at the present time. The Presidency of the church has been reorganized, and the procedure taken in changing from the former officers to the new ones has had the whole-hearted support of the church, the leading quorums having acted in confidence one with another and with a careful regard for the law of the church and the will of Christ. No one has manifested any aspiring tendencies or personal ambitions, but all seem to have sought only to carry out the mind of Christ as revealed through the Spirit.

What a contrast is this with the conditions in 1844 when the first President was removed by death! Then a score of men arose aspiring to be leaders of the church by whom the body was divided into factions. Most of them disregarded the law, and selfish ambition became their ruling spirit, leading them into many errors and sins. To-day the church stands united. Not a protest has been raised against either of the men now chosen to lead. The church holds its leaders in confidence and the policies now before it find general support in both ministry and membership. Should such a condition be maintained the progress of the work is assured.—Ensign for May 13, 1915.

Contrast the situation as we know it now in the light of a statement by a member of the Presidency in the October conference of 1922:

I believe it to be one of the duties of the Presidency to unify the high priesthood. We are presidents of the high priesthood first and, in a way, because of that, of the church. I say I believe it to be one of our duties to unify the high priesthood. We have not yet succeeded in doing that. Perhaps we are not good at unifying. Perhaps you are hard to unify. Perhaps both are true. But it seems to me that if presently there does not come more unity the time will come when we of necessity must step aside and permit you to select some one else who can perform that work.

Sad, but true it is, "more unity" has not come. Indeed, the fissure seems to be wider and deeper than ever. In ten short years the transformation between the condition described in the editorial referred to and the pathetic confession quoted above truly shows that the attempt at the "radical change" has produced "confusion," but the "concomitant" progress is conspicuous by its absence.

In the light of what has happened, together with the philosophic meaning of the document on "supreme directional control," the immediate outlook before the church is anything but cheerful. Elimination by the one who has the power to eliminate may be an apparently easy "short cut" to the desideratum, but it seems to me it will be a lonely kind of victory, and the Nemesis of memory will mock with hollow echoes as names and vacant places will crowd into the lanes of reminiscences.

Not only is "supreme directional control" an anachronism, but what is still more vital to us as a church is the further fact, our identity with the original church was established, and the title, rights, and properties made ours in legal right by virtue of the principles of the "open letter." On the other hand, the Mormon Church was proved to be in apostasy because it indorsed the principles of the document on "supreme directional control," which as we have seen means one-man power, in the final analy-sirs. Note this in the decision of Judge Philips in the Temple Lot Suit:

It [the Utah Church] has introduced societies of a secret order, and established secret oaths and covenants, contrary to the book of teachings of the old church. It has changed the duties of the President, and of the Twelve, and established the doctrine of “obey counsel,” and has changed the order of the Seventy or Evangelists.

In conclusion, it is not necessary to say more than this: that a church which has insisted so strenuously on “ancient landmarks,” and always has taken its stand on “the law and the testimony,” will do well to consider the meaning and tendency of these “radical changes” contemplated. We are not yet convinced that the “customs and habits” of our fathers in the previous years of our history were and are “bad.” It may be that the system had its defects, as all things with human alloy must have, but “better the evil we know than those we wot not of.”

We are sure that all that is safe for any officer to have by way of control is guaranteed in the “open letter.” The church cannot afford to grant more, either for the good of the officer or for the welfare of the people.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, February 24, 1925.

Changes of the Past Few Years
BY JOHN K. HANSEN

Peace and unity is the hope of the people of God. To differ with brethren whom we have learned to love is not a pleasure, but to sacrifice principles in order to have oneness is a price that we cannot pay. The privileges and environments of youth and young manhood have brought to the writer some lessons that compel him to stand out in opposition to the introduction of measures which materially change the principles of the faith.

A body of men meeting between conferences and adopting measures giving to one quorum “supreme directional control” is surely something new, and although we are frequently being told that such is not the case, that the Presidency have always had this authority, yet if this were true, it would hardly be necessary, after all these years, to have a measure of this kind passed.

Heretofore General Conference has been recognized as the highest authority, but now the President of the church declares that this body should not “presume to issue orders to any man or officer.” This is assuming a right that is not granted in the law. In Doctrine and Covenants 58: 13 and 73: 1 it is clearly indicated that the “voice of the conference” does have something to say in the direction of this work.

Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6: And further the Spirit saith unto you, that “with the Lord one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as a day”; therefore, the law given to the church in section 42, over the meaning of some parts of which there has been so much controversy, is as if it were given to-day; and the bishop and his counselors, and the high council, and the bishop and his council, and the storehouse and the temple and the salvation of my people, are the same to me now that they were in that day when I gave the revelation; nevertheless, that portion of that commandment which made it the duty of the high council to assist in looking after the poor and needy of the church, was not intended to put the high council over the bishop in the administration of the affairs of his office and calling, except as they might do so in an advisory manner, and in such way that no one of the poor and the needy should be neglected; nor was it designed that the high council should dictate in the matter of purchasing lands, building houses of worship, building up the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the people, these last named being within the province of the presidency, the twelve as a quorum, the councils or other officers of the branches or stakes where houses of worship are to be built, the conferences and the general assembly of the church, and the direction of the Lord by revelation. The high council could not in justice dictate to the bishop in direction in any of these matters and then try and condemn and punish him if he did not obey.

This paragraph informs us that the High Council is not over the Bishop in the administration of his office only as they might do so in an advisory manner, and reference is made to the fact that the conferences and General Assembly have something to say about the work of the Bishop. It seems from this that the General Conference is within its right, should it issue orders to man or officer.

Section 129: When branches and districts are organized, they should be so organized by the direction of the conference, or by the personal presence and direction of the twelve, or some member of that quorum who may be in charge, if practicable.

According to this instruction, if General Conference favors the organization of a district, it is within the power of that body to provide for such organization and instruct its officers accordingly, and no quorum is higher than the body.

The words supreme, superior, subordinate, are certainly new terms in gospel work. No one denies that the apostolic authority carries with it certain rights and privileges that others do not have, but that fact does not make them superior, but increases their responsibilities as servants of the body. In the past the members of the various quorums have been regarded as coworkers, and in Doctrine and Covenants 122: 16 we are told:

Ye are equal in worth of position and place in the work of the church; and if in honor ye shall prefer one another, ye will not strive for precedence or place in duty or privilege.

A wonderful organization brought about in the wisdom of God wherein no one man or quorum has “supreme directional control” and where every man and officer is subject to the will of the body.

The writer chances to be the son of a man who spent the best days of his life as a missionary of this church, many years of which were spent in the valleys of the mountains defending the claims of the Reorganization, and as a child I learned that the principle of democracy was in this church. Well do I remember upon one occasion a certain representative of the church in Utah was attacking the prophetic calling of the late Joseph Smith, and ridiculing the memorable speech made at the Amboy conference, when he pledged himself to that people to promulgate no doctrine that should not be approved by them. This opponent of the Reorganization said this was evidence that he was a false prophet, having not the courage to present that which had not the approval of the people. Years have passed since that time, but I have not forgotten, and will not, as long as I retain my memory, the influence that attended the effort of my father in making answer to these charges. Attention was called to the fact that God forces no measures upon his people, that he always recognized the rights of the membership of this church to “approve or disapprove.” Then, when with my own ears I have heard the present President say, “This church is not a democracy,” and I have observed his contention for “supreme directional control,” “that conference should not presume to issue orders to any man or officer,” do you wonder that I am unable to harmonize the present with the past?

The statement, “The government of the church is by divine authority through priesthood,” contains a principle that our early elders of the Reorganization had to meet, and how earnestly they plead with the people, whom we regarded as apostates, to appreciate the “law,” and refuse to be governed “through priesthood.” It is strange that with the passing of a few years, efforts should be made to adopt some of the things which in the early days of the church we opposed. It would be far more consistent with our record of the past to affirm the government of the church shall be in accordance with the law, than to defend a principle which has made shipwreck of the faith of many and brought sorrow and disappointment to many souls.

It occurs to the writer that in the midst of our contention on supremacy, we can do well to pause and read of the time when another body of disciples were having “strife among them” upon the question “which of them should be the greatest,” in Saint Luke 22: 24. To quiet these men Jesus said, “He that is greatest among you let him be as the younger, and he that is chief as he that doth serve,” and he told them, “I am among you as he that serveth.”

These thoughts are written that my brethren may have a few of the reasons why I refuse to give my indorsement to the changes that are being introduced. I want to be cheerful, and full of hope, and yet I am reminded that to be so optimistic that I am blind to error, is dangerous. In the Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 12: 31, we are told: “Woe be unto him that crieth all is well,” and that same will be saying, “All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well.”

With a deep appreciation for the fundamental principles of this gospel which has been born into my soul through many sweet spiritual experiences, the memory of which inspires me with courage, I long for the day when peace and unity shall be reached, yet am confident the goal can be attained only through proper procedure. The presentation of Zionic ideals and questions directly related thereto will never bring unity. We must build upward, upon a sure foundation.

Effective Discipline

BY LEON A. GOULD

Little has been said by the advocates of “supreme directional control” as to what is intended by that part of the document relating to “effective discipline” for the suppression of “individual caprice, or rebellion.” Some more or less clearly defined statement as to what was intended, coming from those responsible for its appearance, might be of value to those who are expected to vote upon its acceptance at the coming General Conference. Some of us, of course, are already instructed to vote for it without necessarily knowing anything about it, and to such an explanation would be useless. Our job is already cut out for us. No need to read, study, think, or pray about it, or listen to long-winded arguments upon the conference floor. All we need to do is to “vote ’er straight.” But some of us are expected by those whom we represent to gain a partial understanding of the subject if we may, and know something of what we are voting for before we stand up to be counted.

By some it has been supposed that the law already covered the whole ground of disciplinary procedure touching any individual in the church, from the highest to the lowest; and to such it seems that we should have a care how we put into the hands of any additional powers, or take any action which might open the way for anyone in the future to exercise the right to discipline his fellow man through the exercise of his mere personal whims or “individual caprice.” For “caprice” may as easily crop out in the one disciplining as in the one disciplined. Doubtless the man (aside from the Master) never lived who did not at some time give way to a spirit of "caprice, or rebellion." Even prophets are not immune—Jonah for instance, both before and after his great prophetic mission to Nineveh. But when I think of Jonah's faithful performance of duty, even these imperfections could not interfere with a heartfelt rendering of "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet." I could sing it of Jonah, and of the prophetic office to which all the prophets of God past and present have been called, without in the least binding me to accept his manifestation of human weakness upon the hillside as a divine impulse, or to condone, apologize for, or accept as divine the human proclivities that may crop out from time to time. Neither does it bind me to a blind faith in or unquestioning obedience to any man, nor the acceptance of his teachings, prophet though he may be and recognized by me as such, until I can harmonize them with already accepted truth. If "caprice" and "rebellion" are dangerous to society when manifested by the ordinary, how much more so should it actuate one to whom had been delegated the sole right to act as a dispenser of discipline!

We have read of peculiar methods of discipline in the past, not provided for in the law, such as "whittling" objectors out of Nauvoo, and the "destroying angels" to discipline those who dared protest the corruption of Utah, or sought to escape from the sway of tyranny. We may be persuaded that nothing of this kind was intended by the document. But what was intended? Perhaps no more than the threat of official disapproval if one dared accept an appointment by a body already authorized by the church to appoint. But even that is going too far. Absolutely! It is astonishing to think that it could be tolerated by a people who have a vestige of freedom and democracy clinging to them.

We are at a loss to know what could be added to the law, as we already have it, to make for more effective discipline and at the same time guard to the maximum the rights of the individual. "Authority to be effective must be respected" to be sure. But authority by force is never respected. It may be feared, hated, endured, and for a time seem to be effective, but its very nature assures eventual disaster. A shining example may be cited in the fate of the "Little Father of all the Russians." Possibly no regime could have been better equipped to enforce authority, with its hordes of officials, spies, and agents, but it failed to win respect at home or abroad.

Authority that is respected, and therefore most effective, is the authority that seeks to extend in full measure the rights of any and every person who comes under its rule, even the most humble. When authority shall so far forget itself and its own importance, especially the "big I" and the "little you" of place and position, that it shall first seek to convey to the membership at large all that is referred to frequently in the initiatory exercises of the church, i. e., "I confer upon you all the rights and privileges belonging to a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," instead of seeking to restrict those rights—but rather to enlarge if possible, freely extending to them, as expressed in the words of the late Joseph Smith, "All the rights not clearly delegated by commandment of God to the ministry, nor prohibited by it to the people, are reserved to the people," then will authority come into its own as to place and position, and be loved, honored, and respected. Certain it is that authority that seeks to abridge the rights of the people in order to arrogate to itself additional powers, never wins respect and allegiance, except possibly of a few who wish to take part in such a subversion of rights and share the favor of those initiating the departure, and the benefits supposed to be derived therefrom. No truer words were ever uttered than those of the Master, "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased." (Luke 14: 11.)

To many the discipline provided for in the law seems amply sufficient. It covers the whole range of activity, from the admonition that "the elders shall see that my law is kept," to the provisions made for dealing with refractory bishops, apostles, and presidents. Of the matter of elders' and bishops' courts, it is not the purpose here to enter into an analysis. A word as to dealing with "higher-ups" may not be amiss.

Equality of the Quorums

The law seems to provide for a number of quorums of equal authority, power, and decision. These quorums are named in Doctrine and Covenants 104 as follows:

1. The Presidency, "chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church."—Paragraph 11.
2. The Twelve. "And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned."—Paragraph 11.
3. The Seventy. "And they form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve special witnesses, or apostles, just named."—Paragraph 11.
4. The standing high councils at the stakes of Zion. They "form a quorum equal in authority, in the affairs of the church, in all their decisions, to the quorum of the presidency or to the traveling high council."—Paragraph 14.
5. The high council in Zion. It "forms a quorum equal in authority, in the affairs of the church, in all their decisions, to the councils of the twelve at the stakes of Zion.”—Paragraph 15.

The decisions of these quorums or any one of them to be of equal force or validity one with another must be by the unanimous voice of the quorum. Furthermore, these decisions are to be rendered in all righteousness, in holiness and lowliness of heart, meekness and longsuffering, and in faith and virtue and knowledge; temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity. . . . And in case that any decision of these quorums is made in unrighteousness, it may be brought before a general assembly. . . . otherwise there can be no appeal from their decision.—Paragraph 11.

It is hardly to be presumed that the language setting forth the order and equality of these various quorums is to be construed to mean that, while these quorums are in order, each actively functioning in its proper place, any one of them could assume to enter upon the duties of any other. The Seventy could not assume to enter in and perform the duties of the Presidency; nor could the Presidency rightfully step in and perform the duties of a stake council, under normal conditions. The four pistons and connecting-rods of a properly working Ford motor have equal force and power, each in its place; but let one try to get into the position occupied by the other, and there is a jam, a crash, and the whole works are gummed up.

Courts of Final Decision

In addition to the foregoing quorums of equal decision, there seems to be provided, also, a number of courts of final decision, authorized to act in special matters that come before them.

1. The Presidency assisted by a council of twelve high priests. To try the bishop, also matters coming before it on appeal. “And after this decision it shall be had in remembrance no more before the Lord; for this is the highest council of the church of God, and a final decision upon controversies, in spiritual matters. There is not any person belonging to the church, who is exempt from this council of the church.”—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 85.

2. The common council. In case of the transgression of the president of the high priesthood, the common judge or bishop (see paragraph 32) shall preside over the common council (see paragraphs 34 and 37), consisting of the bishop and his counselors (if any) and a council of twelve high priests. “And their decision upon his head shall be an end of controversy concerning him.”—Paragraph 37. Thus the decision of this common council consisting of the bishopric plus twelve high priests, becomes equal in its finity, to the decisions of the presidency plus twelve high priests in matters properly coming before them.

3. The “general assembly of the several quorums which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church,” in case of an appeal from any decision rendered in unrighteousness by any of the quorums of equal decision before mentioned. (Paragraph 11.)

It seems to be plain that there are at least these three courts of final decision provided for. There may be others. And when the machinery of the church is working in an orderly and efficient manner, no inharmonious working of its parts, the means of discipline provided for reach every individual in the church.

Thus, none shall be exempt from the justice and the laws of God; that all things may be done in order and solemnity, before him, according to truth and righteousness.—Paragraph 37.

Unfortunately, it is possible for disorder to creep in. Did you ever have your Ford motor cease the pulsing rhythm of well-nigh perfect operation, and begin to cough, spit, and backfire, apparently in the very throes of disorder? You found all the leading parts there? Yes. All properly organized and assembled? Yes. But possibly an ignition wire had loosened from the timer, or the roller brush in the timer become loose upon the cam-shaft. But disorder certainly. No great progress ahead until the disorder is corrected. None of the leading parts able to do effective work in their places so long as the disorder remains. So may not the church fall into disorder? All the leading parts in their places? Yes. Properly organized? Yes. But disorder nevertheless; and hence the spitting and the back-firing, and all the other symptoms of an apparent terrible condition of things. No progress ahead. Leading parts unable to perform their duties properly. What shall we do?

In Case of Disorder

Should the church fall into disorder, or any portion of it, [head or foot] it is the duty of the several quorums of the church, or any one of them [italics mine] to take measures to correct such disorder; through the advice and direction of the presidency, the twelve, the seventy, or a council of high priests, in case of emergency; and in case the presidency is in transgression, the bishop and his council of high priests, . . . and the presidency and high council if the bishop, or his counselors, if high priests, are in transgression.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 10.

Is the church in disorder? Quite so. Is there an emergency? Most emphatically. The Presidency and Bishopric being parties to the cause, become in this matter quite ineligible to act as courts provided under normal conditions, or even in the special provision cited above; the Twelve more or less involved, to such an extent perhaps that they too would be barred. How about the Seventy? “Quorums of the church, or any one of them to take measure.” The Seventy is “one of them,” and the largest in point of members. All right, then, the Seventy, “through the advice and direction of . . . a council of high priests.” We have seen heretofore that the Seventy forms a quorum equal to the Twelve or Presidency in authority, power, and decision; therefore, in an emergency, and for a specific purpose, the Seventy plus a council of twelve high priests becomes a court of final decision equal to the Presidency plus a council of twelve high priests, or to the Bishopric plus a council of twelve high priests. In either case (of the Presidency or Seventy with their councils) it is but the doubling up or combining of two bodies of equal authority to form a court of final decision.

Is there anything better than this provided in the law? Is it not sufficient? Is it not right? Is it not safe and sane? Then why not take this whole question of maladministration in office of President, Bishopric, or Twelve, and the usurpation of powers and privileges not belonging to them, all the charges of insubordination and what not, and countercharges that have grown and may grow out of this muddle, before this court of the Seventy plus a council of twelve high priests, as provided by the law in case of the Presidency or Seventy with their councils) it is but the doubling up or combining of two bodies of equal authority to form a court of final decision.

Some one might suggest that the Seventy are divided in their sympathies, part on one side and part on the other. I should hope so. I should not like to see the matter go before them with their minds all made up on one side of the question. Listen! The law provides that the decision must be by the unanimous voice of the quorum. "That is, every member... must be agreed to its decisions." Only the exercise of the virtues heretofore mentioned as required of such a court, coupled with the inspiration of the Almighty, could accomplish such a thing, and with such a decision we could be content. When we go at it as the law provides we demonstrate that we are still one body, intact.

Or would you prefer to have the whole thing aired before the General Conference, thus advertising to the world the glory of a house divided against itself, and then "settle" the matter by a delegate vote of say 256.8 for, to 256.7 against either proposition? Can the General Conference settle it? We wonder! The conference said, Close a certain institution till the debt is paid. A minority said, We won't close it, and carried the day. The conference said, Start no new buildings, except, etc. A minority said, We'll start one anyhow, and did, and carried the day. The conference said, We'll stand by the law which says, "All things shall be done by common consent in the church." But a minority said, We'll secretly inaugurate a new law of "supreme directional control" and "effective discipline," and the people shall know nothing of it till it is in operation; then we'll spring it on them at General Conference and carry the day again. In the face of all this and much more, we are certainly optimistic if we imagine that a majority vote at General Conference is going to control an unconverted minority between sessions.

There is talk of a split in the church. Why should there be a split? What would you think of the mechanic to whom you took your Ford motor for the correction of the existing disorder, should he say, "The thing will never run this way. Tell you what we'll do. You hold this chisel and I'll wield the maul, and we'll divide the thing; then you can go on with the rear half, including the balance wheel and transmission, and everything will be all right. The main trouble seems to be in the front end, anyway." That is about what those who talk of a split are proposing. Divide the thing by a General Conference vote; one half run off with the crank and the timing gears, the other half with the balance wheel and transmission. But that is not the way of progress. Best go at it as the law provides. It will tend to unity and solidarity rather than division.

We most assuredly may thank God for the prophetic office in the church, and for a prophet to occupy; but the church needs to keep him in the place made for him by the law of God, and always shall as long as man is human and liable to be swayed by human impulses and seek to discipline by official disapproval those who are acting in good faith entirely within their rights. All history, past and present, warns us that we cannot safely put "supreme directional control," and "effective discipline" into the hands of one or a few without the utmost certainty that human desires and "capital price" will eventually enter in with disastrous results.

A church that hasn't a lot of earnest souls in it who are vitally interested in the welfare of the community, and especially in the young people of the neighborhood, hasn't much excuse for living.—Carl Proper, in People's Popular Monthly.

What Does It Mean?

BY F. M. COOPER

After fifty-six years in this church and over fifty years as a general church representative, you may know that the crisis which, we are told, now confronts the church holds for me much of interest and concern.

Brethren, go back with me in memory to the days not so long ago when the ministry of this church were called by the voice of Jehovah to leave their ax in the forest or the plow in the field to carry the gospel message to the world. We went in faith, trusting God to supply our insufficiency. That the church has increased from ten or fifteen thousand to its present size is evidence that the Lord stood by his servants and that we spoke as his Spirit gave us utterance. I do not mean by this to put a premium upon unpreparedness, but with hundreds of my brethren, I bear witness to the fact that as we did our part as best we could to serve God, even though it was in weakness, his promise, “Lo, I shall be with you alway, even unto the end of the world,” was abundantly fulfilled.

Early in this present year I conceived the idea of testing the inspiration behind the “document on church government” by submitting a similar set of questions to each of the brethren in the council of last April who indorsed it. I felt that the Spirit which had moved in the past and caused us to speak alike, boldly and fearlessly, affirming the truth as we saw it, would again give assurance of Immanuel or “God with us.” I hope my readers will not think me too literal or old-fashioned because of this method I have used to judge the source and power of this document under discussion, nor hold me responsible for the conclusions drawn from the experiment.

On January 16 I sent to each of the brethren indorsing the document now before the church the following letter.

Dear Brother: Being deeply interested in present discussion on church government, and as you are one of the signers of the resolution adopted by the majority of the April advisory council, I am writing to you submitting the following questions which I would appreciate to have you answer at your early convenience.

1. In signing the resolution on church government, was it your understanding that the government of the church would be through priesthood only?

2. Should the membership aside from the priesthood participate in the governmental affairs of the church; for example, should they have equal participation with the priesthood in legislative matters, and in nominating and electing officers, in local and district conferences and also in General Conference when sent there as delegates?

3. The document says, “This view of the organization of the church . . . holds General Conference as the instrument of the expression of the will of the people.” Do you understand from this that General Conference actions shall continue to be the official expression of the will of the church and binding upon all; or shall the enactments of General Conference be viewed as the “expression of the will of the people,” which expressions the government through priesthood is to pass upon before they become binding upon the church? To make it plainer, may I ask, Will “government through priesthood” give to the priesthood the right to veto the acts of General Conference?

4. In recommending to the church the adoption of supreme directional control, was it your understanding that it means in case differences of opinion arise between officials, quorums, and councils in the administrative affairs of the church, that the Presidency shall have the final word and decision in all cases?

5. Is it your understanding that supreme directional control means that the Presidency shall at all times have the right and power to dictate to all other officers and quorums in administrative affairs?

Knowing the many demands upon your time, I have tried to arrange these questions so that they may be readily answered, perhaps some of them by “Yes” or “No.” So many interpretations are given of the proposed resolution on church government that I should like to have your opinion as one of those who originally signed it and recommended it in the Herald for adoption by the church.

Ever praying and working for the advancement of the cause we all love and are trying to serve, I am,

In gospel bonds, (Signed) F. M. Cooper.

It is now seven weeks since twenty-five of the above letters were sent out, and only eleven of the brethren, or approximately one half, have extended the courtesy of a reply, and of this number only two really attempt to give me direct answers to the questions propounded. The others show great reluctance in expressing their views. It might be that the brethren had good reason for this reticence. If it was considered presumptuous of me to ask for this information I urge in defense of my act a sincere desire to “know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I [they] speak of myself [themselves],” according to the good old Latter Day Saint criterion. Brethren, I wanted to know. I have read in the columns of our official paper recently divergent views which are said to emanate from the chief and leading quorum of the church (and the statements have not been challenged), and doubtless many others are left to wonder, just what DOES it mean? For instance, one of the Presidency in speaking of supreme directional control said he “could not accept it if given the extreme interpretation,” making it synonymous with supreme dictatorial control; while another member of this same quorum has interpreted the situation in this language: “all other offices, officers, quorums, departments, etc., are subordinate to the President,” and that in case of differences of opinion he "shall have the final word of decision."

It certainly should be considered pardonable presumption in me under these circumstances to want a clearer understanding and interpretation of this important matter. I knew of no better way to arrive at this understanding than to ask the proponents of the measure, What does it mean?

One of these my fellow ministers replied that he regarded my letter as "a real frame up"; however, he signed his name and I can forgive him for the implication of those candid words. Two of the replies were to the effect that they did not care to give any "private statement" or interpretation, and thought it wisdom to "await the action of the General Conference." Two referred me to their writings in the HERALD for my answer.

The two replies containing direct answers to my inquiries have helped me to understand the viewpoint and direction of the document; however, they fail to meet the essential requirements or specifications of my test. For instance, in answer to question number five, regarding the administrative au-tority of the Presidency, one brother answers:
"The Presidency are the spokesmen for the church, and in the administrative line I hold that they have the last word, when such a last word is needed, in shaping any administration policy in any department of church activity." While his colleague tells us: "Within its own legal sphere each officer or quorum or General Conference is free to act, and acting according to its legal rights those acts cannot be set aside."

Three of the most recent replies contain the information that an effort is now well advanced to formulate one official reply and ask each of the twenty-five members of the council, who signed the article published in the HERALD of July 9, to subscribe to it. This move, which initiates "from the office of the Twelve," may result in giving the membership an exegesis of merit on a mooted subject.
We really think the church has been too long without some such an authoritative statement. It fails, utterly, however, as a criterion of an inspired minis-tory. It is one way of tuning the bugle so that it will send forth no uncertain sound. We shall anxiously await this contribution, hopeful that in spite of the mechanical, centrifugal method in which it issues to the body, it will not give us an altogether metallic sound. To inspire confidence and hope, it must ring true to the spirit and genius of the early church ministry.

The Unbroken Chain
BY THE PRESIDING BISHOPS

A council of members of the First Presidency,
Quorum of Twelve, and Order of Bishops, in April, 1924, by majority vote adopted resolutions advocating changes in church government. To these proposals the Presiding Bishopric formally objected.
Soon afterwards the document was made public by the President of the church, and study and discussion of it was urged by him.

The particular bearing of these resolutions upon the official relationship, duties, and responsibilities of the officers of the church, particularly those of the Presiding Bishopric as a quorum and as trustees of the church, demands that the membership be informed as to the opinion of the undersigned, together with some of the reasons in brief upon which it is founded.

We can all stand unitedly upon the premise that if the church in its zeal for progress should in any measure lose sight of the divine guideposts, "the law" and "the testimony," it must get back to the tried and true paths of governmental procedure before any worth-while and lasting progress shall be possible.

Upon this scriptural premise we shall first present quotations from the organic law of the church bearing upon the questions in issue, and then follow with extracts from the testimony as recorded in the resolutions of General Conference, the practices and usages of the church, and the official statements on record interpreting and establishing the governmental principles which have been so distinctive of the Reorganization and which, for the work's sake, we believe should not now be discarded.

To the Law

And now I give unto the church in these parts, a com-mmandment, that certain men among them shall be appointed, and they shall be appointed by the voice of the church; and they shall look to the poor and needy, and administer to their relief, that they shall not suffer; and send them forth to the place which I have commanded them; and this shall be their work to govern the affairs of the property of this church.—Doctrine and Covenants 36:8.

And again, I have called my servant, Edward Partridge, and give a commandment, that he should be appointed by the voice of the church, and ordained a bishop unto the church, to leave his merchandise and to spend all his time in the labors of the church to see to all things as it shall be appointed unto him in my laws in the day I shall give them.—Doctrine and Covenants 41:9.

And the duty of the Bishop shall be made known by the commandments which have been given, and the voice of the conference.— Doctrine and Covenants 72:1.

All other authorities, or offices in the church are appended to this priesthood; but there are two divisions, or grand heads—one is the Melchisedec priesthood, and the other is

www.LatterDayTruth.org
the Aaronic, or Levitical priesthood.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 2.

. . . Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests . . . form a quorum of the presidency of the church.

. . . The twelve traveling councilors are called to be the twelve apostles. . . . And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned. The seventy . . . form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve especial witnesses, or apostles, just named. . . —Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing; . . . —Doctrine and Covenants 114: 1.

Referring to the command in 114: 1, the Lord later said, It was not then intended, nor is it now, to burden them, the Twelve, with the duty of looking after the disbursements of the moneys in the treasury, or the management of the properties of the church; except as it may be at times necessary to do so in council with the presidency, the high council in case of exigency, the bishopric, bishops, or bishop's agents abroad, or the conferences; and in accordance with the agreement hitherto made. Whatever burden the quorum may have felt rested upon them in this regard, they are now absolved from, the end designed by it having been reached; except that should it become apparent to the quorum that there was abuse in the administration of the temporal affairs of the church, they shall at once make such inquiry and examination through the proper officers of the church as will correct the evil and save the church from injury.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 5.

. . . That portion of that commandment which made it the duty of the high council to assist in looking after the poor and needy of the church, was not intended to put the high council over the bishop in the administration of affairs of his office and calling, except as they might do so in an advisory manner, and in such way that no one of the poor and needy should be neglected; nor was it designed that the high council should dictate in the matter of purchasing lands, building houses of worship, building up the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the people, these last named being within the province of the presidency, the twelve as a quorum, the councils or other officers of the branches or stakes where houses of worship are to be built, the conferences and the general assembly of the church, and the direction of the Lord by revelation. The high council could not in justice dictate to the bishop in direction of any of these matters and then try and condemn him if he did not obey. — Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.

In regard to the gathering and the work of the Bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.

The work to be done belongs to those who are by command of God made the custodians of the properties of the church; and these by their appointment are empowered to prosecute the work of caring for and using such properties as are confided to their care to accomplish the end designed.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 2.

The bishop should be directed and authorized to proceed as soon as it shall be found practicable by consultation with the general authorities of the church who are made the proper counselors in spiritual and temporal things to carry out the provisions of the law of organization which are by the law made the duty of the bishop.—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 9.

The Spirit saith further: The attention of the church is called to the consideration of the revelation, given in answer to earnest supplication, with regard to temporal things. The word has already been given in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the church, that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations. The word which has been given at a late period should not have been so soon forgotten and disregarded by the church or any of its members. "I am God; I change not;" has been known to the church and the eldership since the coming of the angel with the message of restoration. Under it the church has sought the Lord and received from time to time that which was deemed sufficient for the time to govern the church and its ministers, both of the spiritual and the temporal divisions of the work. The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with other revelations given to the church, which had been before given, the church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed.—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

To the Testimony

On April 17, 1878, the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric met in Plano, Illinois, at the home of Brother Joseph Smith. There having been a misunderstanding for some time between the Bishopric and Twelve on financial matters, the First Presidency submitted a paper on the subject from which we excerpt the following:

The Basis of Adjustment

The Bishopric are the legal custodians of all the temporalities of the church, upon whom devolves the duty of gathering, safely keeping, and disbursing the moneys and properties of the church, in keeping with the law, and agreeably to the rules mutually agreed to by the Twelve and the Bishopric.

In the receiving and disbursing of church funds, all persons who may be entrusted therewith are in fact, or ex officio, agents for the Bishopric, and should account to the Bishopric; and in disbursing general church funds should do so by the direction of the Bishop, or in accordance with an agreement and understanding with the Bishopric pro-viciously had; specific, in regard to objects before determined upon; general, in regard to objects incidental to the prosecution of missionary labor, for which, in the nature of things, no specific direction can be given.

The Bishopric being created by and responsible to the church for the proper administration of their duty, should not, in justice, be made finally responsible to the Twelve, in any other sense than all other church officers are responsible to the same quorum; that is, by proper charge and adjudication before the general church officers, or by decision of General Conference.

Discretionary power to receive and disburse church funds, and dispose of church property for the uses of the church, according to the laws of the church, and subject to inquiry by the Twelve and the church, must rest in the Bishopric only, as, by law, the Bishopric only are legal custodians of such properties; . . .

The foregoing is still a part of General Conference Resolution No. 238. It was first approved by the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric in 1878. adopted by General Conference in 1881, reaffirmed by the Twelve and Bishopric in 1888 and by the General Conference of the same year, and its continued application commanded by the Lord in the revelation of 1894:

And in accordance with the agreement hitherto made.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 5. (See Doctrine and Covenants 122: 24 where “the agreement hitherto made” is seen to have reference to the historic “Basis of Adjustment.”)

Thus the Basis of Adjustment, which affirms the discretionary powers of the Bishopric as legal custodians of the church properties, as yet stands approved by the church in General Conference Resolution and by the Lord in the Doctrine and Covenants.

A Chain of Testimonies

The first Presiding Bishop of the Reorganization (Israel L. Rogers) subscribed his name to the principles of the Basis of Adjustment in 1878 and continued to discharge the functions of the office in accordance therewith.

The second Presiding Bishop (George A. Blakeslee) subscribed to the document when it was reaffirmed in 1888, and the records indicate that his administration was conducted accordingly.

The third Presiding Bishop (Edmund L. Kelley) carried forward the work of the Bishopric on the foundation which had been laid. The following statements over his signature in the SAINTS' HERALD of March 7, 1894, and July 30, 1924, clearly declare the rights and prerogatives of the Bishopric as recognized during the twenty-five years Brother Kelley occupied as Presiding Bishop.

The bishop was not to be directed by the President or any other individual in the church at will, but by the law of God; and he is held responsible to God for his actions under that law; and it would be my duty to disregard any counsel in the church that I thought was contrary to the law of God. . . . When I say this, I am not arguing that we should disregard or treat lightly the counsels and opinions and advice of the Presidency, the Twelve, or any other body. . . . So I do not stand here ready to disregard the teaching and sentiments of my brethren; but if in my opinion they are contrary to the law of God, the law of God does not say that I shall hold to their opinion.—SAINTS' HERALD, March 7, 1894.

I do not believe that the law makes the Bishop subordinate to the President in the direction of church finances, but they should confer and work together so that the policies of neither one will interfere with the work and practice of the other, so far as possible. It was not so interpreted, nor was any effort made to put into effect such a system of interdependence of departments during the twenty-five years I acted as head of the temporal division of the church.—SAINTS' HERALD, July 30, 1924.

The fourth and present Presiding Bishop stands firmly for the principles advocated by his predecessors in office and observed by the church from its beginning to date. In the midst of the trying scenes of the recent advisory council the following reply was made by the Presiding Bishop to a question as to his attitude towards the “supreme directional control” resolution:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 25, 1924.

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH,
Office.

Dear Brother: Herewith reply to your request that I declare myself as to the position set forth by you claiming for the Presidency supreme directional control of the church in all departments.

During my eight years in the office of Presiding Bishop my attitude has been to seek the counsel and advice of the Presidency and other quorums and councils of the church as the necessity of the case and opportunity for counsel would permit. I intend to pursue this course in the future, as I believe it to be in harmony with the letter and spirit of the law upon which the conduct of the affairs of this office should be based.

In cases of controversy, where to my mind the responsibility of my office demands it, I claim the right to exercise the powers vested in me by the organic law of the church as trustee-in-trust for the church, and to refuse to pursue a course which I cannot justify as a servant of the body which has intrusted me with the responsibility of guarding and promoting the temporal interests of the church.

It is my firm conviction that when General Conference sustained the officers and quorums of the church, it did so with the understanding and confidence that, as representatives and servants of the body, they would do all within their power to honor and sustain the laws of the church.

Deep conviction to principle, therefore, will not permit me to comply with your demand which, for the first time in the history of the church, seeks to place “supreme directional control” of the temporal affairs in the hands of the Presidency.

To my mind, compliance with this demand would be tantamount to a betrayal of the confidence and trust reposed in me by the people of the church and a violation of the law.

From its inception the Reorganized Church has consistently stood for the coordinate functioning “of the spiritual and temporal divisions of the work.”
If a change is to be made, why not wait till the next General Conference and then place the matter squarely before the people for decision?

I feel it my duty to God and to the church to discharge the functions of my office in accordance with the law and usages that have obtained in the Reorganization for over half a century.

(Signed) Benjamin R. McGuire.

Links Welded by Spiritual Authorities

Volumes might be quoted, but the following is sufficient, when linked with what has already been presented, to prove that the trumpet of the Reorganization has given no uncertain sound as to the dangers of permitting any man or quorum of men to exercise supreme powers of administrative control over all the spiritual and financial affairs of the church.

The testimony of the spiritual authorities and the testimony of the temporal authorities have been one in God's hands, binding together in the labor of love the forces which have established and developed our beloved church.

Heman C. Smith

(The historian of the church sets forth the philosophy of the revelations as being opposed to the assumption of “supreme” powers by any one quorum.)

Now if there is one thing that I have admired more than another, in the philosophy of the revelations of the last days, it is this, that when you examine the law that governs the church, as found in the revelations of God to us, there can be found no body of men, associated with the general body, in which is the balance of power. I find no quorum, for instance, when I come to apply the law to them, which can have more power in its decision than some other quorum. I read that one quorum has the same power as another, and their decision has the same weight. And so on around until I undertake to put my finger where the balance of power rests, and I cannot find it. There is no such place.—Saints’ Herald, June 24, 1908.

Joseph Smith

The late President Joseph Smith condemns the Presidency’s “control of the finances of the church added to the spiritual control” as “an element of danger.”

There was a greater element of danger to the general church in the way of putting its properties into the control of the President, than in the Bishopric rule. The control of the finances of the church added to the spiritual control would be an element of mischief to the general body if the President was an ambitious and unscrupulous man, as the rules applying to the care of the finances under the Bishopric would not apply to him, and he would in a way be an irresponsible agent.—Leading Editorial, Saints’ Herald, May 29, 1901, Joseph Smith, Editor.

Presidency Does Not Control Moneys or the Bishopric

Such long and persistent carefulness must show to all, even the most skeptical, that the strictest integrity rules in the councils of the Bishopric; and we presume that the Saints have about concluded that we are not likely to die with millions of the Saints’ money in our hands, for the church and our heirs to quarrel about; for it must be seen that we do not control either the moneys of the church, nor the Bishopric. They are men who think for themselves, and act upon their own judgment; men who are willing to confess that they are human and may err; men who are willing to counsel with their brethren, but who will not, (and may God bless them for it), submit to arbitrary human dictation, nor obey dishonest counsel. With such men the monetary interests of the church are safely trusted; and the missionary laborers will be sustained to the extent that the treasury is supplied.—Joseph Smith, Saints’ Herald, May 1, 1880, p. 143.

Three Leading Quorums Should Be Free From Suspicion of Desire to Dominate Monetary Arm

... The monetary affairs of the church are under the personal control and inspection of a quorum of men, who are so far as they can be removed from suspicion of domination by the spiritual heads of the church. Besides this the three leading quorums of the spiritual authorities, hold as we have elsewhere shown, independent supervision of its own affairs, with the right of inquiry, and should be by reason of their position, free from suspicion of desire to dominate the monetary arm of the service.—Joseph Smith, Saints’ Herald, September 1, 1880, p. 268.

Law Makes Bishop Trustee in Trust of Church

The law of the church, as found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, provides that the property of the church should be held by the Bishop; and the Articles of Incorporation provide that the Bishop shall be the trustee of the church, in direct harmony with the rule in Doctrine and Covenants, and any other manner of holding the property is not in harmony with the law of the church.—Editorial, Saints’ Herald, vol. 40, p. 422, July 8, 1893.

Bishopric Have Powers of Discretion, Are Responsible to the Church, and Are Not Controlled by Presidency

The Presidency has not at any time assumed to claim control of the finances of the church, or attempted to direct as to the expenditures of the means gathered into the public treasury. Nor has the Presidency ever claimed or exercised the right to receive and hold the properties of the church as trustees.

The Presidency has always understood that the church finances, and the custody and care of the properties of the church, were by the direction of the revelations of God assigned as duties to the Bishopric, officers pointed out and chosen by the spirit of wisdom and revelation; who were responsible to the church for the rightful and righteous discharge of the duties imposed upon them.

The objects to the furtherance of which the means of the church in moneys and properties, gathered into the treasury and storehouse, are clearly stated in the church articles and covenants, and are not dependent upon the desires, designs, whims, or caprices of either of the leading quorums of the church, or of the Bishopric. In the prosecution of the objects thus defined in the law, the Bishopric has the right to the exercise of certain powers of discretion, and is to be aided by the counsel of the leading officers in the spiritual lines of work, when such aid is needed, or requested. But these are not authorized by their calling to improperly inter-
Duty of Bishop made known by the commandments which have been given and the voice of the conference. (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.)

This shall be their [the bishops] work to govern the affairs of the property of this church. (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 8.)

The Lord himself has said there are two divisions of the work—spiritual and temporal. Temporalities of church under charge and care of bishopric. (Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.)

Discretionary power to receive and disburse church funds must rest in Bishopric only. (General Conference Resolution 238.)

By law the Bishopric only are legal custodians of church properties. (General Conference Resolution No. 238.)

Church directed to accede to rendition of Bishopric with respect to temporal law. (Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.)

In case flagrant disregard of rights of people, joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy should be appealed to. (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.)

Bishop should consult general authorities of church who are counselors in spiritual and temporal things. (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 9.)

High council cannot dictate to Bishop and try and condemn if he does not obey. (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.)

Three leading quorums should be free from suspicion of desire to dominate monetary arm. (Joseph Smith.)

Greater danger in control of properties by President than by Bishopric, as rules would not apply to President, and he would be an irresponsible agent. (Joseph Smith.)

It is thus seen that the principles of the Basis of Adjustment are indelibly written in the law, practice, and history of the Reorganization. As an unbroken chain they have endured, notwithstanding changes in official personnel. It is well called the basis of agreement, for such it has proven to be. Principles are eternal. So if these rules of church government which have stood the test of over three score years are now reaffirmed and adhered to, surely they will promote agreement, harmony, and unity, of which the church stands in such sore need at this hour.

\[\text{The Old Paths}\]

The Lord said to former-day Israel, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, we will not walk therein. —Jeremiah 6: 15.

Will latter-day Israel continue in the old paths of governmental procedure, commanded by God and established by our forefathers, or

Will the church, after all these years, abolish the divine system of checks and counterchecks in church government and make one quorum supreme in both spiritual and temporal affairs?

To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them. The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with other revelations given to the church, which had been before given, the church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed.—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

Our controlling desire is to be faithful to the official trust which God and the people have imposed in us. The whole controversy in regard to the rights, powers, and prerogatives of quorums is unpleasant to us. We much prefer the paths of peace and unity of effort in constructive work, but above all we must be true to the right as God enables us to see it. We are, therefore, endeavoring to preserve, as we believe it our duty to do, the principles which have governed the temporal division of God’s church on earth. We are grateful to our predecessors in office for the consistent course they have pursued with the law of God as their guide. In turn we hope to be able to carry forward the burdens of the office in a straight course towards the goal set by God, so that those who may follow us in the office may receive the trust unharmed. To this end we do not want it said of us that we remained silent when we should have spoken. We therefore set forth the law as we see it, and the church must assume the responsibility of the decision it makes with the facts before it.

Sensing the present situation as we do, and from our observation in official circles of the tendency of recent years to depart from the established order of things, we plead with the church to pay heed “to the word which has been given,” because only by so doing will we “receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed.”

Your servants in Christ,

James F. Keir,
Israel A. Smith.

A Partial Analysis of the Advisory Council

BY J. W. PETERSON

It appears from published statements that the Presiding Bishopric has made several requests of the Presidency to call the usual Joint Council of the Presidency, Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric, to consider the financial outlook of the church as a result of after-war stringency. One of these requests was made about the time of the last General Conference, when all eighteen of the members were present. These requests were unheeded, and the Bishop’s S. O. S. for help was ignored. Another call was made in the following January. After four months’ delay—April, 1924, the old High Council was called together to advise the Presidency whether or not he should call the Joint Council, as the Bishop had requested.

Three opinions developed in the High Council, after it was decided that the Bishop needed help. First: Should the regular Joint Council be called? Or, second: Was the matter of sufficient importance to call the Joint Council of the Presidency, the Twelve, and the entire Bishopric be called to advise the Bishop in his matters of difficulty? The last opinion prevailed, but there was no authority given or suggested to the proposed advisory council to consider any other matter. All else the advisory council did was without authority from the High Council.

We think the High Council erred in considering the matter at all; for it verged dangerously near an inhibition in the law forbidding the High Council to “dictate to the Bishop” in direction in any of these matters, and then “try and condemn and punish him if he did not obey.” (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.) Advice is dangerously near “direction,” whether given by themselves or their agent, the advisory council. At least, if the advice given by the High Council or its agent was rejected by the Bishop, it would prejudice him in the eyes of that council in case of a future trial involving those same matters. At any rate, what right had the High Council to suggest to the Bishop as to the council he should appear before for advice?

They erred again in providing a council not mentioned in the law and substituting it for one that was provided, and which could have legitimately considered the matters of the Bishop—i. e., the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy. The High Council cannot escape their share of the blame for instituting this new and strange advisory council, nor for ignoring the one provided for in the law. But they must not, in any way, he held for the after results of the advisory council, for much they did they had no authority at all to consider, either from the High Council or from the law.

I trust that all are sufficiently acquainted with the law so that a mere reference to it in most cases is sufficient, and thus save valuable space in the HERALD. (See Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10; 122: 10; 129: 8.)

We think the Presidency erred in calling the old High Council in contravention of the order of the last conference. The sense and judgment of that conference was to the effect that only the men selected by a committee of five should act on the Standing High Council. And even they should not choose its members from among the Twelve, the bishops, or the stake officers. That committee of five was designated by revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 9) as, one of the Presidency, two of the Twelve, and two of the High Priests, of whom the president of the Twelve and that of the High Priests were to be two. Here is the conference order:

Resolved that no member of the Quorum of the Twelve, Order of Bishops, and Stake Presidencies shall be eligible to appointment to the Standing High Council.—Conference Minutes, 3492.

The president of the High Priests, inhibited by this order, was retained as one of the High Council in this case, who was at the same time president of one of the stakes. Twice disqualified to act. An administration in sympathy with the act of the General Conference would have called that committee of five before any case should come up, and would have chosen the new members who were to sit on the High Council from then on. This was not done, but the will of the conference was evaded and the old council retained, with one or two exceptions; the substitutes also being selected in contravention of the above conference order. One member of the High Council is also a member of the Presiding Bishopric, but was requested by the President not to act, as the matters to come before the council in this case would doubtless pertain more or less to the Bishopric, the member of the Bishopric also acquiescing or suggesting the justice of that request. But, as matters developed, some of the matters which came up pertained to the Presidency, so they should have absented themselves also. In opposition to the conference order, one member of the Twelve, one stake president, and four or more of the bishopric acted on the High Council in this case. Half the council acting in opposition to the will of the people is not productive of peace.

A council with these errors chargeable against it was bound to produce contention and to result disastrously.
The Advisory Council Itself

This council, resting on a faulty high council, had a poor beginning, and matters grew worse to the end. First of all, the Presidency stepped down from the highest council in the church to preside over a lesser one, so that now there is no appeal to either one. Also the Bishopric being more or less involved, neither they nor the Presidency can, in justice, be tried by either of these two councils, nor yet by the Bishop's court of high priests. All important courts of the church are tied up because of this move.

As soon as the advisory council was organized for business, the President of the council launched an attack not only on the policies of the Bishop, but also on the Bishop himself; but the law declares a Bishop can be tried only before the High Council in personal matters and only before the joint council of the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy in matters of administration. (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10, 11.) The President at the same time pleaded his own supposed rights before the council over which he was presiding, and which was expected to settle, at least temporarily, the differences between himself and the Bishop. The injustice of this may be seen at once. There was present on this advisory council at least four of his own High Council who also had stepped down from the highest council in the church to act on a lesser one.

The Presiding Bishopric was merged with the body of bishops in this council, and lost its identity as a quorum, but the Presidency was not merged with the High Priests but preserved its identity as a quorum. Many of the bishops were adverse to the policies of the Presiding Bishop and also to the standard faith and rules of the church as practiced for half a century. This was known by many before the advisory council was called, and could not have escaped the knowledge of the Presidency. Some of the local bishops were installed in office without the consent of the Presiding Bishopric, or a vote of that quorum itself. This cannot, or should not, be done in any quorum of the church. If men were to be installed in the office of the Presidency without the consent of the President himself, and indeed, objectionable to him, he might then understand how it appears to others.

These men of foreign opinion have hindered rather than helped the work of the Presiding Bishopric, and a division which cannot be healed has been engendered. It is noticeable that men who hold adverse ideas to the Bishop are selected to oppose him in his own house. Is there anyone who cannot see that would be a good way to force the Bishop to resign or to change his policies? But being in harmony with the law, and the practice of the church for half a century, he cannot honorably change his policies and forsake the truth; and being called of God, he cannot honorably resign and give up the fight for the standard faith of the church.

If the Bishop's policies were not in harmony with the law, then the matter should have been referred to the three apostolic quorums provided for in the law. But the advisory council ignored the Seventy, as did the High Council. The main points of the law are as follows:

In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric ... I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church. ... To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric ... and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. ... the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.

Why was this provision of the law evaded and an unheard-of advisory council substituted in lieu of it? But this was not their only fault, for, whereas the advisory council was authorized by the high council to advise the Bishop in his troubles and that only, they went ahead and transacted much other business for which they were lacking authority.

On this newly created council there were eighteen local bishops, three Presiding Bishops, eight of the Twelve, and three of the First Presidency. According to the vote, sixteen of the local bishops, six of the Twelve, and three of the Presidency, favored the new and strange policy. Three of the Presiding Bishopric, two of the local bishops, and two of the Twelve still had faith in the standard faith of the church. The sixteen local bishops held the balance of power in every vote and could have swung the result either way, the President not voting.

Twenty-seven resolutions were adopted by this council, most of them written out by the President, most of which were beyond and outside the advisory council to consider, and more especially the eighteen bishops. The council went beyond the authority given them by the High Council in most of the resolutions they adopted. The work the bishops did on this council was quite as contrary to the law and order of the church as would be a deacon baptizing or a teacher administering to the sick. (See HERALD for June 18.) Only nine resolutions out of the twenty-seven pertained to finances. These only they were authorized to advise the Bishop upon. Eight of them pertained to the auditorium, which they had no authority from the High Council to consider, but the law specifically says: "Nor was it designed that the High Council should dictate in the matter of purchasing lands [and of course not in selling them], building houses of worship,” etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 122:6.) But on the advisory council four or more of the members of the High Council acting in a double capacity directly the Bishop both as to “houses of worship” and the selling of “lands.” Here is their resolution with regard to the latter: “The High Council and the Presiding Bishopric shall designate the list of properties to be sold.” Certainly if the High Council “cannot buy lands” just as surely they cannot sell. Here is a very peculiar mix-up of authority. The High Council authorized the advisory council to advise the Bishop, and then the advisory council authorizes the High Council in certain matters.

Three of the resolutions adopted by the advisory council pertain to the publication of “books and tracts” and to “literature on our social ideals,” and that they be issued “without delay”; directing the “missionary program” and what the traveling ministry should teach and “stress”; our “educational program” and “vocational training.” Where do the twenty-one bishops (the financial arm of the church) get the right to speak on spiritual affairs and that to bind the entire ministry of the church? They seemed to stop at nothing, as if they were the whole church. From whence comes the authority of the bishops to advise the traveling ministry what to teach or write or what to stress? Where do the Bishops get the right to establish “our missionary program”? Have the high priests, seventy, and elders no voice in the very matters they are called to teach, both to the church and to the world? Has this large and majority number of the priesthood no voice in the financial affairs of the church, seeing the law declares that the Bishop is to be governed in part by the voice of the “conference,” of which they form the principal part? (Doctrine and Covenants 58:12.)

The advisory council was all out of joint. It was a mixture of officers called to separate works in the church. What one group had a right to do the other had not, and vice versa, and all of them plunged into matters which the High Council did not in any sense commission them to consider.

Six of their resolutions pertained to the interpretation of terms and to church government which the high priests, elders, and seventy had just as good a right to pass upon as they; in fact, more right than the financial arm of the church. Had the bishops the right to resolve upon the whole priesthood authority of the church and to decide as to the “dependence” or “interdependence” of all departments of the church? Surely the High Council did not authorize them to act on many of these matters, and just as surely the law did not. This council went far afield and regarded neither gates nor bars.

Under the Mosaic economy those who labored in the financial affairs of Israel were the priests with a literal descendant of Aaron at their head. When a literal descendant of Aaron is again designated (Doctrine and Covenants 104:34), it is certain he will not have the right to preside over members of the higher priesthood, therefore all the bishops and all agents and assistants must be of the Aaronic order, as formerly. If this advisory council is to be a criterion or precedent for that time, then a council of all the bishops and helpers, meeting with the Twelve and the Presidency, or others of the higher priesthood, would hold the balance of power over the higher priesthood, much as the bishops held the balance of power in the advisory council. We should be careful how we establish such a precedent.

In view, therefore, of the fact that the old High Council was inhibited by conference enactment; that the substitutes were chosen contrary to the wish of the people; that the High Council could not authorize their agent to do what the principal could not do; that the President, who was a party at interest in both councils, presided over both; that the council resolved upon matters beyond their right by law; that they superseded their commission from the High Council; that they were a mixed council of officials called to separate work in the church; that the advisory council was an interloper in church councils; that both councils ignored the Seventy and other of the traveling ministry and one third of the Twelve; that the precedent is likely to work injury in the future; that it has divided the church into two hostile camps; that their resolutions place too much power in one man’s hands; that in the new scheme there is no appeal from administrative delinquency; and that the people’s rights are invaded; therefore all pertaining to the advisory council should be firmly voted down.

No one can imagine Lincoln dignifying with his presence a gathering like the so-called “enlightenment dinner” held recently in New York, where the guests demanded as their right the repeal of laws necessary to enforce the Constitution.

Lincoln foresaw the perils of this day. His words denouncing disrespect for law ring like phrases from the Old Testament. He urged patriotic citizens to swear never to break the law nor to tolerate its violation. He branded as perjurers those who prevented the passage of statutes essential to enforce the Constitution. He refused all compromise where great principles were involved.—From a speech by Wayne B. Wheeler.

Is It a Change?
BY VERNON A. REESE

Before a revelation shall become binding upon the church, the rule is that first it must be submitted to and accepted by the quorums, and if it hits no snag there it shall then be presented to General Conference for further comparison with that which has previously been given and accepted to govern the church. Regulations for the government of the church may also originate by resolution and be passed upon by the conferences in the usual parliamentary manner. Any purported revelation or proposed resolution which proves to be in conflict with what the church has adopted as divine instruction must be forthwith voted down. If a resolution violates previous enactments of General Conference so as to change the practices and usage observed from the inception of the church, overwhelming evidence must be presented to those who believe in the inspiration of the past in order to justify its adoption. This attitude is founded upon the belief that our forefathers did not walk in darkness when they established the government foundation of the Reorganization.

We are of late constantly reminded that presumptive inspiration should attach to certain official acts. This brings forth the question, If the interpretation of the present incumbent of the prophetic office should conflict with the clearly expressed interpretations of his predecessor, which are we to accept? To say that we must always give way to the present incumbent is virtually advocating the theory of the living oracles. If they differ, one is certainly wrong. But between the two, until sufficient proof is presented to the contrary, are we not justified in the presumption that the first is of divine inspiration, especially so if it has been accepted by the church and observed since its beginning? Presumption of regularity attaches to what the church has been doing rather than to a proposed change. Those who would change should first prove their cause, so that the church will not be tossed about by every wind of doctrine or governmental theory.

Revelations have been received and legislation enacted upon governmental principles until it has been generally thought that our system of government was fairly well established and in working order. The divinely revealed system of checks and balances, in which no officer or quorum stood supreme over all others, has been a most cherished heritage of our faith, as it has promoted confidence and given assurance that no one man or a few men could easily succeed in leading the church astray, as happened during the tragic days at Nauvoo.

Burden of Proof

After all that has been given for the government of the church, together with the interpretations approved by General Conference, and after years of operating thereunder, now comes the April, 1924, advisory council which, by majority vote, recommends for adoption by the church a document which will increase the legislation on church government. The burden of proof is always upon those who affirm. Therefore, upon the advocates of the supreme directional control document rests the burden of proving:

First; that it is in harmony with the organic law; General Conference resolutions, and the practices and usages of the Reorganization;

Secondly; that General Conference should adopt the resolution and add it to the rules and regulations now governing the church; or

First; if it is thought that the past procedure of the church has not been in accordance with the organic law, then to make such a declaration and submit evidence to substantiate it;

Secondly, to prove that the principles of the supreme directional control resolution are more in harmony with the revelations of God than have been the rules of government in effect from 1860 to date.

Questions

The questions at once arise, Why should the supreme directional control document be passed?

Is legislation so lacking as to make it necessary?

Does it add to, take from, or change the established order of things?

What is meant by a government through priesthood?

Will it increase the power of the priesthood and diminish the rights of the people?

Why are not the people clearly given the rights they have heretofore exercised?

Why does the document provide for the people only as a tant to the acts of the priesthood?

What is meant by General Conference being only the expression of the will of the people?

Will the so-called priesthood government have the power to approve or disapprove the conference expressions of the “will of the people”?

Will the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy be equal in power of decision, as per Doctrine and Covenants 104:11?

Will the Bishopric be subject to regulation by the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, in joint council (not by the Presidency alone), as per Doctrine and Covenants 120:10?

Safety First and Last

The Reorganization came forth with no uncertain declaration of its doctrine and government. Especially emphatic has been its denouncement of

1. Priesthood rule.

2. The membership having only the governmental function of assenting to the actions of the priesthood.

3. One office being vested with supreme authority in the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church.

Many of us now in the church have had handed down to us a heritage from our parents and grandparents on account of the sufferings heaped upon... them after the above changes were put into operation in the early church organization. The sermons and publications of the Reorganization abound with warnings against the introduction of the principles of government which made shipwreck of the faith once delivered to the Saints.

It is difficult now for many of us to throw discretion to the winds. The supreme directional control resolution is not sufficiently self-explanatory. Even its leading proponents disagree as to its meaning. The way it is worded opens the floodgates for changes in governmental procedure and usages. As far as the Reorganization is concerned, “supreme directional control” is an untried and experimental compass. With it we have no assurance that the ship of Zion will sail in the straight course charted by God.

Many of us are alarmed at the effort to throw overboard so much of the safety ballast, especially certain equalities of power among the leading quorums and the system of checks and balances of governmental administration. We fear the ship may become top heavy, and we much prefer the even balance of power and authority throughout the structure which has steadied the vessel thus far. Some of us do not believe that the people’s “assent” to the acts of the priesthood will make as good an anchor as the tried and true principle of “common consent.”

The hand of “supremacy” which now seeks to seize the helm may be endowed with exceptional strength and steadiness, but the big question is, Can one officer or quorum be safely substituted for the distribution and equalization of quorum powers, with the divinely given checks and balances in the hands of the priesthood and the people, which for sixty-five years have directed and controlled the course of the Reorganization through both calm and storm.

Warning by Late Prophet

No proposed legislation in the history of the church has been productive of so much contention and confusion as have followed the introduction of the present supreme directional control resolution. There is a cause for this effect. The late Joseph Smith gave sufficient warning which, had it been heeded, would have averted the unhappy situation in which the church now finds itself:

It is not in accordance with sound reason, that either quorum would have the right of absolute dictation over the authority and jurisdiction of the other two ruling quorums, those all three having been made equal by organic law. The assumption of arbitrary power and control by either one of these three bodies, declared in the organic law to be equal, would give rise to opposition and active protest, and confusion would inevitably result.—“A Letter of Instruction” by President Joseph Smith, SAINTS’ HERALD, March 18, 1912.

Referring to the document from which the above is taken, President Joseph Smith upon his deathbed said, “... as I look back over the history and the revelations that have been given to the church, and are on record since I have been presiding, they show me very clearly that a great many things which have been left open to misunderstanding have been cleared up in the revelations and in the letter of instructions. I regard that letter as one of the most important documents that has ever been presented to the church.”

SAINTS’ HERALD, November 22, 1921, p. 1124.

Does the letter of instruction represent the generally understood and authoritative position of the Reorganization? If so, then no legislation can now be passed in harmony therewith which makes one quorum supreme over the “authority and jurisdiction” of all others. As long as such an “assumption of arbitrary power and control” is maintained, can the church expect other than the ever-present fulfillment of the prophetic declaration of “opposition and active protest, and confusion would inevitably result”?

For years we have been accused by our religious neighbors of being under the absolute domination of one man or leader. This charge has been resisted by showing that the organic structure and legislative actions of the church preclude any such dogma or practice. We have pointed with pride and satisfaction to the provisions for the people’s initiation and participation in the government and for the even balance of power established between the leading quorums preventing any one office from exercising supreme authority. Must we change this answer in the future?

Government Not by Priesthood Only

Doctrine and Covenants 125:9 forever commits the Reorganization against a government in which only the priesthood participate:

The only qualification for delegates chosen by the branches or districts should be membership and good standing, it being given by the Spirit that those other than the eldership should be represented in this way.—Doctrine and Covenants 125:9.

There are three divisions of government—legislative, executive, and judicial. As long as the people participate with the priesthood in the enactments of local, district, and general conferences, they will be a part of the government of the church. Why should anyone now want to force through, regardless of opposition, a resolution which, according to its actual wording, bestows all governmental power upon the priesthood and gives the people only the privilege of assenting to the acts of the priesthood government? Included in this is the innovation of one quorum of the priesthood being supreme in power and authority over all others, so that in the final analysis it is seen to provide for a government by one quorum.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Historical Background

There is a historical background in the history of the Restoration for the apprehension which some of us feel towards the present effort to make the priesthood the government and to give one office of the priesthood supreme powers over the other offices.

President Joseph Smith has clearly stated his understanding of the relationship in church government between the priesthood and the people:

In treating of the rights of the membership—"the people of the Saints of the Most High"—it is safe to say that, all the rights not clearly delegated by commandment of God to the ministry nor prohibited by it to the people, are reserved to the people. And that therefore their voice is made essential in the government of the church.

The ministry should be honored promptly and sustained thoroughly, when faithfully and lawfully engaged in their respective offices and callings, but they are the servants of the people for Christ's sake, and God's people are entitled to observe and judge of their ministrations to themward.—Editorial Saints' Herald, December 17, 1892, vol. 39, p. 806.

The Reorganized Church has not set a seer, prophet, or revelator as of supreme importance and rule in and over the church to the belittling or exclusion of the Twelve, Seventy, or any other of the officers which the government of the church makes necessary. No such thought or disposition has ever been manifest in the governmental affairs of the church. No effort has been made to place one man, or one quorum in the supremacy, one over the other in any absoluteness of rule. And each officer, and each quorum of officers has always regarded the law of the Lord to be the rule to be observed, and has always been ready to answer to the church, the people, for the proper performance of duties performed by them in pursuance of the authority derived from the people as the body of Christ, the church. The executive functions of the church devolve upon the leading quorums, the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy; in stakes and districts, they devolve upon the presidency of the stakes, and districts as in the branches they devolve upon the branch presidents.—Elbert A. Smith, Zion's Ensign, April 14, 1921.

The authors of the document now demanding a government through priesthood with supreme power over all the priesthood vested in one quorum, in both spiritual and temporal matters, have in times past clearly expressed themselves upon the very questions now in issue. They should not now condemn some of us too severely for defending as part of our faith the principles which they once so convincingly proclaimed.

So long as the people retain in their hands the lawmaking power, they are comparatively safe. The first act of a despot is always to assume the privilege to make the laws and to take that right from the people. That was the reason that Brigham Young reduced the general conference in the West to a farce, so that he and his followers could stand in the pulpit and tell the people, "It is proposed, so and so; all in favor say aye," and not any negative vote or legislation from the floor. But with us it is different. Any member of the assembly having a right to a seat in the assembly as a delegate, man or woman, black or white, ordained or unordained, may arise at any time and say, "I move so and so," and if he can get the vote of a majority of the people, his motion will carry and become the will of the assembly.

The executive functions of the church devolve upon the leading quorums, the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy; in stakes and districts, they devolve upon the presidency of the stakes, and districts as in the branches they devolve upon the branch presidents. —Editorial Saints' Herald, September 28, 1898. Joseph Smith, editor.

Some statements by President W. W. Blair have been used in such a way as to give the impression to a casual reader that he favored supreme control by the Presidency over both the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church. This witness has declared himself upon this very issue in such emphatic language as to leave no doubt as to what he stood for:

October 6, 1844, at Nauvoo, before the snows had mantled the graves of the martyrs, Brigham Young entered upon the role of dictator to the Saints. Hear him:

There never was a prophet on the earth that dictated to the people, but he dictated their temporal affairs as well as spiritual.—Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 693.

This is not the voice of Christ, but the voice of the "Autocrat of all the Russias!" the voice of Pope Hildebrand, in the midnight of Papal despotism!!

Priestly dictation in "temporal affairs as well as spiritual!" This is the imperious extreme of the most absolute despot! This is the Calvary upon which millions of confiding souls have been crucified by blind and ambitious bigots; and here the Saints have been allured, and robbed, and crushed, and destroyed. Priestly dictation is priestcraft.

Is It Apostasy Now?

Contrary to the revelations, they disobey its laws; they have broken their covenant to the country; they engage in temporal affairs in behalf of themselves and the church; they take tithes for purposes not appointed; the bishop is not the custodian of the tithes; they make no accounting to the church; the law of common consent has been nullified; and the coordinate jurisdiction of the leading quorums has been distorted until one officer stands alone in his supreme power.

If the leaders will not repent, shall the people remain with them in apostasy? —Article by Frederick M. Smith, in Salt Lake Tribune, July 28, 1905, addressed to the people of the Utah Church. See also Saints' Herald, August 9, 1905.
If it was apostasy in the Utah Church for the Presidency to control the tithes, and for the Presidency to exercise "supreme power" over the other leading quorums, thousands of Saints are wondering what it will be in the Reorganization should similar changes be made in our church government? One of the points upon which Judge Philips awarded the Temple Lot decision to the Reorganization was that the Utah Church "has changed the duties of the President."

Supine as a Dead Body

Words could not express a stronger condemnation of the policy of drilling the people to submission to the priesthood and of one office in the priesthood exercising "absolute control" over the others, than we find in the following:

To the younger and the progressive element in the Mormon church this blunt teaching of the doctrine of submergence of individuality and intelligence in an abject obedience to those holding the priesthood who may occupy positions which are considered as higher ones, may be shocking, and we hope it is; but that it has been so taught ever since the Mormons came into this valley cannot be successfully denied.

To all intents and purposes, then, Reed Smoot, the apostle, or Reed Smoot, the senator, must be as supine as a dead body, to be moved at the will of his ecclesiastical superiors. It is not a question whether they will move him to do good or to do bad for this Nation; the charge is that he is under absolute control and he cannot truthfully take the oath of office as prescribed.—Frederick M. Smith, in Salt Lake Tribune, December 25, 1905, reprinted in Saints' Herald, January 3, 1906.

The two statements quoted from the Salt Lake Tribune make it clear that under absolute control "the coordinate jurisdiction of the leading quorums has been distorted until one officer stands alone in his supreme power."

The analogy is very striking: Absolute control gives the Utah presidency supreme power over all other quorums—then supreme control will give our Presidency absolute power over all other quorums. It appears to be another example of things equal to the same thing being equal to each other.

If under the operation of "absolute" control by the Presidency of the Utah Church a "subordinate" official is "as supine as a dead body, to be moved at the will of his ecclesiastical superiors," what assurance have we that "supreme" control by the Presidency of the Reorganization may not sometime (perhaps by a future administration) tend to have a similar effect upon our own ministry?

All will agree that the mission of the church of Christ is to develop upstanding men of God who will perform their work under the spirit of their office and calling without fear or favor of their fellow workers. A principle of government which does not promote this development is foreign to the spirit and genius of the Restoration.

Is It Possible?

Is it possible that supreme directional control means a government by the priesthood and the people, as per Doctrine and Covenants 125: 9, with the equality of power and authority among the quorums as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11 and 126: 10?

Do the proponents and opponents of the document really want the same thing; that is, the established order of church government? If so, nothing will be gained by forcing the wedge branded Supremacy through the platform of checks and balances of quorum powers.

Should the church refuse to indorse the proposed resolution, the Presidency will lose no powers or prerogative belonging to them, nor will the authority of any other quorum be increased. The widespread fear of a change in church government will then be removed, and all can unite upon a declaration to work together upon the principles which have carried the cause forward to its present advancement. All being anxious to build upon the foundation laid by our forefathers in the gospel work, it should be possible for words to be chosen clearly expressing such a common intention, so that he who runs may read. It is evident to all that the supreme directional control document has signally failed to accomplish this desirable and happy result.

Prove All Things

If the supreme directional control document, which has provoked so much confusion and division within the church, involves changes in the established governmental procedure, does the church want it?

If it does not involve any change, but all things shall continue as heretofore, does the church need it?

Majorities may not always seem right to the man in the minority. Lincoln set the example of obedience to laws he did not approve and whose repeal he sought by legal and orderly methods. When the majority disagreed with him he obeyed its will. Until he had altered the sentiment of that majority he obeyed its will expressed in law.

Foreseeing our present problems, Lincoln said to Major James B. Merwin: "The next great movement will be the overthrow of the legalized liquor traffic. I prophesied twenty-five years ago that the day would come when there would be neither a slave nor a drunkard in the land. I have seen the first part come true."—From speech on Loyalty by Wayne B. Wheeler.
NEWS AND LETTERS

Gallands Grove District

Cherokee

February 25.—February 1 was a great day for the Saints here. District President F. T. Mussell was present and presided over the sacramental service, which was a spiritual feast indeed. One young brother was called to the priesthood, and a prophecy through Brother Mussell confirmed the call. At the evening service Brother Mussell gave the closing sermon of the series of meetings he had conducted the previous two weeks. One lady was baptized, and the spiritual aid given the Saints was well worth the effort put forth. Attendance at these services was very good. We hope Brother Mussell will be permitted to return, as he has won sincere love and affection.

Elder E. I. Edwards of Pomeroy was the speaker the morning of February 8 and at the monthly meeting of teachers and officers of all departments in the afternoon.

Elder A. R. Crippen attended a meeting of the reunion committee at Denison February 19, speaking to the Saints in the morning. He went to Dow City in the evening. Brothers Albert Haynes and W. W. Reeder filled the appointments here.

The Department of Women met with Sister Lulu Bannister February 19 and surprised her by taking lunch and spending the afternoon in visiting instead of the regular meeting. Sister Bannister is moving to their farm in the country.

The Book of Mormon class of the Department of Recreation and Expression furnished a fine entertainment Sunday evening, February 23. They were assisted by Harold Reeder and Ella Spence in musical numbers.

Elder William Shore is off duty with a severe case of heart trouble. Elder J. T. Spence is suffering with lumbago. Sister Ellen Gundry, seventy-eight years old, had the misfortune to fall and break three ribs.

We are receiving much good from our cottage prayer meetings. Saints are being reached in this way who could not come to the church.

Mallard

While the branch here is small, the Saints are alive and trying to do their part.

Sunday school is held every Sunday morning, in which two hours are given to the study of different phases of church work. Preaching services are held every Sunday evening, and prayer meeting meets Wednesday evening.

Friday night the Department of Recreation and Expression meets for class work on the Book of Mormon, teacher training, young people's church history, and children's handwork. The social committee gave a social at the clubhouse February 18, at which a short program was given, followed by refreshments. A collection was taken to be used in purchasing books. Sister Agnes Cockefer is the leader. February 20 a very interesting debate was held on the question, Resolved that play is of more importance to character building than study.

Brother B. F. Creel visited us one Sunday in December and gave some good talks on his work among the Indians. We also had interesting sermons from Brother E. L. Edwards two Sundays in January.

The midweek prayer services are a source of strength, and our prayers have been answered many times. We have received many blessings and want to be able to do some good to those around us.

Fanning, Kansas

The work here is moving along quietly, but effectively we hope. Brother B. F. Creel, our missionary to the Indians of Nebraska, was here in January and preached twice for us. He was raising funds to finish a church now under construction at Walthill for the Indians. He is a very interesting speaker and related many things of interest in regard to the Indians. We hope he will visit us again.

Brother Roy Whipple of Topeka visited here February 8. He is still talking of writing up a paper by the young people of the district, to be read at the quarterly conferences.

Our district president, Samuel Twombly, sustained an injury to one of his feet last week and will be laid up for some time as a result.

Last Sunday was promotion day at the Sunday school and a fitting program was given. In spite of the bad weather there was a good crowd present, and all were cheered and felt repaid for the effort made to attend.

Brother C. E. Schmid and family of Troy have moved to Saint Joseph, Missouri. They will be missed by the Saints at Troy, but we are sure they will find work to do for the Master, and what is our loss will be others' gain.

Brother Moroni Traxler, of Lamoni, Iowa, visited with the Fanning Saints February 15, preaching morning and evening to the edification of all present.

We are pleased to hear K L D S so well. Several in this part hear the sermons and are pleased with the way they come in. One person said he heard the five o'clock vesper service and wanted to applaud the speaker and the singers for their excellent program.

Duluth, Minnesota

February 1.—The faithful few here can still be found at the regular services. We seem to have our share of contention, but if the hope the Saints have in Christ is cherished, all will become stronger citizens in the kingdom of God if they rise to higher levels and strive to reach a higher rung in the gospel ladder. The local priesthood is holding forth, preaching the word of God, exhorting and expounding the Scriptures in such a way that the Saints are encouraged to rise higher and gather a wider vision of the power of the gospel.

The morning of January 18 District President George W. Day dropped in from his home at Bemidji and spoke to the Saints, in his clear and sincere manner, at the eleven o'clock service. The Saints were greatly encouraged by his visit.

The inside of our church has been redecorated, giving to the whole edifice the appearance of a new building. The Saints here are thankful they have a place in which to worship, and hope that all who have named the name of Christ will realize they are called into this glorious work for a purpose and give such talents as they have to further the work.

Brother Thomas Leitch, president of North Dakota District, went through here with Brother W. E. Shakespeare on January 24. They were on their way to Two Harbors, where there are about thirty Saints. The Saints were glad to see Brother Leitch again on Sunday, when in the afternoon he gave them one of his good gospel sermons, laying much stress on the fact that the Saints should not follow in the ways of the world. He leaves Monday morning for the West to fill an appointment.

On February 1 the Saints gathered to partake of the emblems, only a few being able to attend because of much sickness and the bad roads. The Spirit was manifest in a marked degree, and many prayers and testimonies were Brother Robley bought paper with his nickel and painted Christmas post cards, which he sold for five cents each. With the proceeds he bought cardboard and painted calendars which sold for one dollar each. This money was reinvested in small Testaments, and he finally raised $10.48. If Christmas had not come so soon, some would have been selling real estate and Ford cars. We are going to start early this year. Plans are not yet matured.

A nice Christmas concert was given, mostly by the children, and the play, "The Christmas spirit," was nicely given by the young ladies.

The Religio is doing good work, and an effort is being made to make it interesting as well as educational. We are meeting in the different homes for the winter months, having short programs after the lesson. Impromptu speeches, Bible quotations with selected words in them, recitations, piano solos, violin and flute solos, and singing go to make up the programs. Good fellowship prevails, and we hope to progress this year under the direction of Brother William Hadath.

The Department of Women is small in number, but all are active and enthusiastic. They expect to present a play soon in one of the big schools. Sister Emma Hadath is president. In 1924 $178.50 was raised, which was applied on paving, a piano, and necessities for the missionary, good cheer, and flowers for the sick.

Mrs. A. E. Case.

Kingston, Missouri

Our branch is moving along in the usual manner. The bad roads are hindering those in the country some, but there are enough of us in town to keep the camp fire burning until we are reinforced by the others.

We aresorry to lose Brother A. M. Peek and family. They are moving to Curran, Illinois. We hope they may be able to return to us in the near future.

The Department of Women is preparing a friendship quilt which is proving to be quite a success. They are reading the Doctrine and Covenants in their meetings.

All are pleased with the ready response in the Religio programs. One program recently was made interesting by a talk from every lady over sixty. Several responded by telling of the experiences they have had, two sang songs, and another gave a reading. One aged sister said that was her first appearance before an audience since she was fifteen. She told an experience and then sang a song for the little folks. We feel that the Religio programs are not especially for the gifted, but are to develop the weaker ones as well, so we are trying to use all. We certainly are encouraged with the ready response. People are not asked if they will appear, but the program is placed on the board two or three weeks ahead, and very seldom does anyone refuse. The next program is to have a solo by each man over thirty-five. In these programs many talents have been discovered which were hidden before.

The Sunday school is also worthy of mention, as it is thriving well under Brother Albert Place, who has been superintendent for years. He has been relieved a few times for six months, but is soon put back again. He seems to fit in that niche so satisfactorily that all seem perfectly content to have it so. His loyal wife has stood by him all these years too, both trying to advance the work to the best of their ability.

The branch president and his wife have also labored diligently for years. Our branch has had its ups and downs, but we are holding to the rod of iron and feel to commend our president for his faithful service. The priesthood also deserves commendation. They are loyal servants for Christ, all working for the same goal.

Winnipeg, Manitoba

January 30.—The annual meeting for the election of officers for the branch and its auxiliaries was held January 6, at which time Elder G. W. Robley was chosen as branch president. We are glad to report that our young people seem to be taking greater interest in the work, and we notice by their lives and endeavors that they are trying to come up higher. We are hoping for a successful year, both spiritually and financially. Our branch is not great in numbers, but we are great in hopes and aspirations.

In the Sunday school Brother William Hadath was chosen as superintendent, to succeed Brother William Pratt, who had served for three years in succession and asked to be excused from serving further, because he had to be out of town most of the time in his business and therefore could not do justice to the work. We were sorry to lose him as he has served devotedly and well.

We were a good deal behind in our Christmas offering, so Brother Robley handed each one who would take it a nickel, with instructions to increase it. About $48 was raised in six weeks, which furnishes a very interesting story. Joseph Hadath, aged twelve, took two cents out of his five, bought a cardboard, and made two calendars which he sold for ten cents each. He invested this twenty cents in shoe strings, safety pins, and other notions, and with his nickel made $2.35.

Sister Anna Henry works in the hosiery department of a large store. She bought sugar with her nickel and made candy, reinvesting her money in hosiery for men and women. In all, she sold fifty-two pairs, making over $8. Others bought handkerchiefs, matches, celery, life-savers, fancy pins, needles, etc.

The Saints testified to the truthfulness of the gospel, and gave thanks for the privilege of being able to partake of the emblems and to renew their covenant with their heavenly Father. May God's people realize the sacredness of this sacramental service, that when they partake of the emblems, they may strive for mastery over self and apply the gospel to their lives, daily gaining and placing themselves on a higher level in life, letting contention and strife cease, thus becoming disciples of Christ in thought and deed.

All the departments are forging ahead. The Sunday school is having a contest for attendance. The losing class is to give thanks for the privilege of being able to partake of the emblems and to renew their covenant with their heavenly Father. Baptisms Deferred for Lack of Water LUCASVILLE, OHIO, February 13.—Since our last report Brother F. May, of Dayton, Ohio, has been with us, preaching some very spiritual sermons. Owing to bad weather there was very small attendance, but Brother May never failed to deliver a plain statement on the Bible. The evening of January 20 he preached on the signs which follow the believer. He made it so plain that the least could understand. He also preached on baptism, making the many passages of scripture very plain. After the preaching he announced there were some who had asked baptism, which would be taken care of the following day. However, owing to the fact that the thermometer stood at twenty degrees below zero, they could not find water deep enough to perform the ordinance.

The evening of January 30 Brother May preached on the subject, “Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting.” This he made so plain that some not of our faith remarked that the sermon was wonderful.

Sunday school was held at one o’clock February 1, and sacramental service followed at two o’clock. The attendance was good, and the Spirit of the Master was present. Many prayers were offered asking God to help in every way, and the Lord blessed through prophecy, speaking both to individuals and the body as a whole. Brother May affirmed that the prophecy was of God, and all felt thankful for the good they had received. Brothers Thomas Crabtree, William Culp, and Richard Sharp, all of McDermott, were present at this service. We are always glad to have the Saints from other branches with us.

On the 7th the melting snow and ice furnished plenty of water for baptism, and three were added to our number, Brothers John Lewis and Richard Right and Sister Ella Altman. We thank God for this blessing.

At the business meeting held Friday night, February 6, in charge of J. F. Crabtree and F. May, Brother Crabtree was chosen president, and most of the other officers were sustained. This branch was organized February 7, 1907, with three officers, priest, teacher, and deacon. Many others have been called and ordained since, but some have been lost through death, while others have moved away. Brother May had to leave for Chillicothe, Ohio, on the 6th, which we regretted, but we thank our heavenly Father that we have such a servant to labor among us.

On February 8 the Sunday school attendance was fifty. The house was again filled for the prayer service. There were many prayers and testimonies and the Spirit was manifested through Brother Mark Crabtree to the branch and priesthood.

Brother Mark Crabtree was recommended to the conference at Columbus for ordination to the office of priest. He is a live wire, and we feel he will render great service to the branch.

Growton, Connecticut

February 5.—A series of meetings was held at the home of the branch priest, Thomas G. Whipple, with the district missionary, Orval L. Thompson, as the speaker. The first service convened January 11, and the unusually fine instruction and inspiration which spiritually characterizes Brother Thompson’s sermons was received with interest.

Brother and Sister Tourtellot celebrated their crystal wedding anniversary January 12, at which quite a number of Saints were present. All joined in the genial festivity of the occasion. Refreshments were served generously, and all enjoyed a pleasant time. Brother and Sister Tourtellot were the recipients of beautiful and useful gifts.

Brother Thompson stayed until January 14, leaving that night after prayer service. The Saints hope to welcome him again in the near future.

Bishop M. C. Fisher met with the Saints here January 25, and preached at the morning service.

Saints of New London Branch had a fine view of the recent eclipse.

The Department of Recreation and Expression gave a program Thursday evening, January 29. The program consisted of piano solos, several piano duets, mandolin-harp duets, old folk songs, and recitation. Following the entertainment was a peanut hunt, games, etc. All enjoyed a very pleasant time.

Wiarton, Ontario

February 13.—This winter we are having the benefits of worshipping in a brick church that has a good furnace. It is quite different from a frame building partly plastered without. This has caused better attendance, and on Sundays we have a good attendance of Saints and nonmembers.

The Saints here observed the special Sunday set apart for fasting and prayer on behalf of Brother J. T. Thompson and are glad to report that he is improving. We hope he will improve faster as the days come and go.

The church choir has again been started and some special choir music has been purchased, which we think will help the service considerably.

We have been listening over the radio for K L D S, but so far have not had the privilege of hearing it. We will be glad when the power is increased. We have heard Waco, Texas, but not Independence. If the static is as bad in listening to K L D S as the controversy is in reading the Herald, we can at least say; We hope our people will not get discouraged trying to discover good from bad, and bad from worse.

M. J. PERKINS.

Rhodes, Iowa

February 23.—Nineteen from this branch attended the district conference at Des Moines February 6 to 8. Those attending reported a good conference, with a good spirit prevailing throughout.

Patriarch John F. Martin was in attendance and spoke to the Saints on Saturday night; also Apostle E. J. Gleazer who spoke Sunday, both morning and evening. Both these brothers are too well known to need special comments on their splendid instructions to the Saints.

Of the business transacted, Packard Branch was disorganized, and the Pershing group was organized into a new branch. No changes were made in the district officers, with the exception of Brother Joseph Baux, who was elected to succeed Sister Evelyn Radkin Finch as chorister. The following delegates to General Conference were chosen: Henry Castings, C. E. McDonald, E. O. Clark, Stephen Robinson, D. E. Dowker, J. R. Lentell, Mrs. J. R. Lentell, G. F. Hull, George Orr, C. M. Richeson, William Robinson, E. C. Kibbey, and N. V. Anderson.

Brother George Luing, who went to Iowa City to take treatment for cancer of the stomach, thought he was not being benefited by the treatment so came home about three weeks ago. He then went to Osceola to the Abbott Hospital, where he has since been taking radium treatments. The doctors there offer him little hope, as the disease was too far advanced before he began treatment. However, we feel that he is not beyond the reach of the Great Physician, and we are praying that it may please the Father to bless the means that is being used to restore him to health.
The branch and the entire community were shocked by news of the death of our young sister, Mildred Cheville. She was the baby and idol of her family. The father was out of town when the message of her critical illness came; the mother and brother made all possible haste to reach her, but were too late. They returned to their lonely home the next day, where the broken-hearted father had preceded them. A number of Saints and friends gathered at the home to meet them, and others came in to do what they could to comfort the stricken family until the midnight train arrived bearing Roy and the remains of his sister.

The funeral was held in the Methodist Protestant church Sunday at two o'clock, as the Saints' church was far too small to accommodate the crowd. Elder D. E. Dowker preached the sermon, which was full of sympathy and comfort. Elder Roy Parker, who baptized Mildred, her mother, her brother Roy, and her sister Cora, was in charge. The Methodist Episcopal choir furnished the music, and the girls of her class in high school acted as flower girls. The floral offering was large and very beautiful.

After Mildred graduated from her high school class in 1923 her parents thought it best for her to rest from her studies for a year before entering college, which she did, entering Graceland last September, where she desired to fit herself for teaching. But she has entered a higher and better school than earth could give, where we believe her preparation will continue.

Foraker Branch

WEBB CITY, OKLAHOMA, February 12.—The Saints of this branch were made glad recently by the coming among them of District President E. D. Bailey who held services for one week. He gave the Saints who are young in the faith much admonition which was kindly received. The last night he admonished the Saints to render service for the Master by a daily righteous walk and conversation. Brother Bailey made many warm friends while he was here.

The Sunday school and Relief are still very much alive. Brother A. Slover and Brother Edward Workman still preach at their regular appointments.

On February 7 Sister Emma Swain returned from Independence, where she had taken her daughter Alberta for treatment at the Sanitarium.

Brother Madden from Arkansas City was with us and preached one Sunday in January. All were pleased with his message.

Sister Margaret Stons came home from Arkansas City, where she is attending business college, to be present at the funeral of a friend.

Regular Meetings in Birmingham

BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA, February 15.—Birmingham is now on the map as one of the places where Saints meet regularly for Sunday school and services every Sunday morning. Our regular time of meeting is half past ten. Fourteen were present at our last service, thirteen of whom were members of the church.

We have been having services regularly since December 7. So far as we know the first preaching services in Birmingham were held on that date at the home of Brother and Sister V. R. Chandler, where services are still being held. Brother W. D. Bullard delivered the first sermon while stopping here on his way to Florida to visit the Saints.

Those living here are Brother and Sister C. J. Clark, Sister Carrol, Brother and Sister Chandler and their family, and Brother John Chandler. Brother Lewis Dockstader, of Des Moines, Iowa, and Lehi Wilson, of Hiteman, Iowa, are with us for the present at least. Anyone coming to Birmingham or passing through are more than welcome at our services. The address of our meeting place is 419 Fulton Avenue until April 1.

We ask an interest in your prayers for the success of the Lord's work in this part of the vineyard.

V. R. CHANDLER.

Moorhead, Iowa

February 25.—Bad weather and roads still hinder our attendance. Sunday evening there were no services. Local talent has done all preaching since last report.

As the debate between Pisgah and Moorhead locals failed to materialize, we have selected a second debating team and are planning for a debate in our local.

The monthly social for the membership of the Relief was held at the home of Brother and Sister Perry Mann. A fine time is reported by those attending.

Brother and Sister Irvin Clark are rejoicing over the arrival of a baby boy at their home last week. Brother Clark received the sad news of the death of his mother in Canada this week. She was well known here, and all sympathize with Brother Clark.

Brothers T. O. Strand and Mark Jensen spent two days recently at Missouri Valley assisting in church work.

The Sunday school has decided that four hundred dollars should be our Christmas offering for this year, and hope to be able to go over the top.

Sister T. O. Strand went to Mason City last week to visit her daughter. This week we had Sister C. B. Woodstock with us, visiting at the home of C. R. Hield.

A Valentine program was put on at the Relief February 15, which was very interesting and drew quite an attendance. Old-fashioned garments were searched out from their hiding places and put to use as costumes for characters representing Miles Standish and Priscilla, Martha Washington, Betsy Ross, a little Dutch girl, etc. Each stood in a frame decorated with lace and large red hearts while appropriate songs, readings, etc., were given. We feel that we are justifiably in feeling proud of the interest that is manifested in the Relief programs, as it seems that all are interested in helping to make them a success.

Quite a number of the Saints have had attacks of influenza, but we are pleased to report that all are improved at present.

New Canton, Illinois

February 16.—The Saints will be glad to know that the few members here are still striving to keep the Lord's work going.

We have a graded Sunday school here, and although it is not large all are regular in attendance. Attendance averages from forty to fifty every Sunday.

The Department of Women is active and keeps busy quilting and sewing. Just recently they served lunch at a sale and cleared $26.38. They are now planning a bazaar for the last of March.

Brothers E. L. Ulrich and E. J. Lenox were with us a few days before district conference. We are always glad to have them preach for us. All were sorry when they had to leave. Brother Elmer Woodward was added to our number through baptism.

ALMEDA COLLIER.
February 17.—Since my last communication to your periodical, I have visited a number of branches in three of our districts, attending priesthood conferences and rally day meetings, besides other work I have tried to do which I thought essential and in the interest of our cause.

The Spirit was present to assist me in my weak efforts to encourage and build up the Saints in our most holy faith.

I regret very much to write that many of our brothers and sisters have suffered themselves to become discouraged over the controversy going on in our Herald, and have relaxed their hold on the gospel rod.

It is apparent they haven’t had a knowledge as to the divinity of the work, or they would not surrender so easily to discouragements. Such people ought to keep in remembrance the admonition given by the Savior, who told his disciples who were to be his ambassadors in the world, “Blessed is he who endures to the end.” Christ knew that conditions would arise in the experiences of all his people that would put their faith to a test.

I wish to call attention to the demise of Sister T. U. Thomas. I think it proper and due her memory as a true and faithful Saint. She accompanied her husband in his ministry while he served as missionary in this country, and sacrificed his association while he was in the British Mission. She was beloved by all those who knew her, because of her untiring efforts to make the work a success, and was very kind and considerate to the missionaries whom she entertained at her home, notwithstanding she had to live on a small pittance. She and her companion labored faithfully in Youngstown, Ohio, for many years, and accomplished a good work, and with the assistance of others was instrumental, through hard labor, in paying off the church debt.

Her death came through an accident after long months of suffering. As she was shaking a rug on the front steps of the church, she slipped and fell over the banister to a concrete walk several feet below. I am confident that all who knew her, and because of her untiring efforts to make the work a success, and was very kind and considerate to the missionaries whom she entertained at her home, notwithstanding she had to live on a small pittance. She and her companion labored faithfully in Youngstown, Ohio, for many years, and accomplished a good work, and with the assistance of others was instrumental, through hard labor, in paying off the church debt.

She leaves her companion, one daughter, an aged mother, several sisters and brothers, one of whom is Richard Baldwin, to mourn. I would to God that we had thousands upon thousands of earnest workers such as our sister, who was ever willing to sacrifice and put forth the best efforts for the interest of the church.

Recently I visited Toledo and Oak Harbor, where we held some very successful meetings. Brother W. G. Kimball took me to the latter place in his auto, and on the last night as we were returning home to Toledo, we met with a serious accident. A man passed us driving a large truck with a crete walk several feet below. I am confident that all who knew her, and because of her untiring efforts to make the work a success, and was very kind and considerate to the missionaries whom she entertained at her home, notwithstanding she had to live on a small pittance. her way to Independence.

Sister Cora Dehn, superintendent of the Sunday school and teacher of the intermediate class, entertained her pupils at her home Friday evening.

A few numbers were given by the children at Sunday school February 22 in honor of Washington’s birthday.

The Temple Builders, with Sister C. M. Brown as monitor, are planning to do sewing for the Sanitarium.

Pastor E. E. Weddle gave an interesting sermon on repentance on February 22, using the parable of the prodigal son.

Several of the Saints listened over the radio with Brother Courtney Rotzien one evening to a lecture given by President P. M. Smith, which was very good.

Sister Emma Oakes, who is now in Dunseith, was so ill that the doctor despaired of her life, but after administration she felt so well she got right up and dressed. This has caused people to wonder at that place and is another testimony of God’s power and love.

Sister Mildred Weddle has gone to Topeka, Kansas, to attend school. She will stay at the home of Brother and Sister Palmer Anderson, formerly of this place.

District President Leitch was called to Burlington, North Dakota, to administer to Sister M. Graham who has had ill health all winter. The Saints are glad to hear she is much improved.
Herein Lies Our Opportunity

In 1882 the church was reproved for its failure to study the Book of Mormon. Section 83: 8 contains a message of great importance to the work in which we are engaged. Read it slowly and carefully.

"And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them; not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, . . ."

Recently the church has been urged to unite upon some one task. We have been told that the blending of our energies towards the accomplishment of any worth-while purpose will promote unity and cause misunderstanding to vanish.

In the light of what the Lord said to the early church, what more promising task lies before us than the study of this record, this gift? What will bring greater blessings to the church in this hour of need than the proper study of this NEW COVENANT. Were we not told years ago when the Religio was prospering in its study that if the people would be diligent in maintaining the auxiliaries divine blessings would attend and there would come a manifestation of unity and power never known before?

Is it unfair to ask you, Brother and Sister Delegate to General Conference, to consider carefully the Resolution for the reestablishment of the Z-R-L-S? Is your branch or district in need of this unity of spirit? If so, herein will lie your opportunity to restore it in the Lord's own way.

Our Religio has but one intent, and that is to promote the study of the Book of Mormon, and for this reason we DO NOT want to DIVIDE our efforts.

THE BOOK OF MORMON

Is Inseparable From Our Faith and Organization

It is the voice of God speaking out of the earth! It is the stick of Joseph confirming the Bible! It is the plain teacher of the gospel! It is the witness that will reconcile the Jews! It is the record for which our martyrs died! It is endowed with the spirit that converts its honest readers.

Did Zion's Religio-Literary Society ever do any good in your branch? Do you think you need it in your branch again?

Our Religio Will Not Neglect God's Great Gift

The Religio was organized to promote the study of the Book of Mormon. On that foundation and purpose it prospered, and the Lord commended. Let our constant purpose be to teach the strange record of ancient America.

Stone Church

John F. Martin, evangelist, will commence a series of meetings in the Stone Church Sunday morning, March 15, to continue each evening during the week except Saturday. Brother Martin will close the series Sunday morning, March 22. Brother Martin's sermons are spiritual and uplifting. His subjects are: "The valley of humanity," "What the world needs most," "Christ the universal Savior," "The heavenly vision," "The church and the young man," "The church and the young woman," "The call to prayer," "A quest of happiness," "Taking Christ in earnest."

The committee having in charge the provision of rooms for conference visitors report that many inquiries are being received, but very few have reported the number of rooms they will have available for these visitors. All Saints having rooms that can be used for this purpose please notify Bishop J. A. Becker or C. Ed Miller, Box 255, Independence, or phone 2082. This matter should not be delayed until the last minute.

The speakers at the Stone Church Sunday were Apostle Roy S. Budd in the morning and President Elbert A. Smith in the evening. Brother Smith at this time closed his series of sermons which had lasted for three Sunday nights.

President F. M. McDowell is in town for preconference work with the Presidency. Several general church men attended stake conferences over Sunday, President Elbert A. Smith spending Friday in Saint Joseph; Apostles Roy S. Budd, J. F. Garver, and J. F. Curtis meeting with the Saints in Lexington, Missouri, Sunday; while F. Henry Edwards attended the conference at Nebraska City over the week-end. Apostle D. T Williams is here for a few days on his way home for conference. J. A. Gillan is still in the East, and M. A. McConley is in America on his way to conference. Bishop I. A. Smith is in North Dakota and Canada looking after church property at various places. He will be gone several days.

Independence Saints were called to mourn Monday to learn of the death of Brother E. W. Barrett, who was killed instantly at the Sears-Roebuck plant in Kansas City. He was working on a tower about sixty feet high which fell, causing his death. Brother Barrett leaves his wife and five children.

Second Church

Elder George Jenkins and Apostle Roy S. Budd were the speakers Sunday morning and evening, and both had large and attentive audiences.

Choir practices have been resumed and are interesting. A men's chorus is being worked out, and a Sunday school orchestra under the leadership of Sister Harvey is making progress.

The priesthood met in prayer session Sunday evening and enjoyed an hour of earnest communion under a spirit of consecration so great as to be rare.

Proceeding the Sunday afternoon prayer service, Brother John T. Curtis baptized Rosabelle Redding, and she was confirmed during the service.

All are interested in the announcement of a chicken dinner from half past five to eight o'clock Friday evening in the church basement, under the direction of Temple Builders. A splendid program will be given in the upper auditorium at eight o'clock. Fifty cents gives you dinner and an evening's entertainment.

Liberty Street

Mrs. Carl E. Willis suddenly passed away about three o'clock Friday morning of heart trouble. She had not been well for some years, but had not seemed to be any worse than usual. She came to Independence with her husband and family several years ago and was the only member of her father's family who belonged to the church. The funeral was held from the Liberty Street church Sunday afternoon at half past two. The body lay in state at the church from two o'clock, during which time the Sons of Zion, of which Brother Willis is leader, stood at attention on each side of the casket. The service was in charge of Brother J. B. Barrett, with the sermon by Pastor J. M. Baker. Sister Willis leaves, besides her husband, seven children, the youngest being four years old. Her loss will be greatly felt by the congregation as well as by her family.

As Brother J. A. Dowker was unable to present to continue his series of sermons Sunday morning the sermon was by Brother C. J. Hunt. Though the crowd was not large, all present enjoyed his sermon. In the evening Elder J. W. Metcalf preached on baptism.

The pie social given Friday night under the auspices of the Temple Builders proved to be a success, and a nice little amount of money was raised from the sale of aprons and pie. In addition all enjoyed a good social evening.

East Independence

Work on the new church did not progress very rapidly last week, but a special effort will be made again this week if the weather permits.

Sixty-four were present at Sunday school this week. At the close of the lesson study Sister Alice Cowan, who is superintendent of the Sunday schools in Zion, gave an interesting and instructive talk that was inspiring and encouraging. We wish her visits could be more frequent.

At eleven o'clock Brother Parsons spoke on faith, and at three in the afternoon the visiting nurse in Zion spoke to the women. Only ten were present besides the leader and the speaker. She urged the need of caring for the children in a physical way so they can be strong in body. The morning speaker urged us to care for their spiritual and intellectual needs. If we care for them in these various ways the children of to-day will be stronger and more capable of doing the work the Lord would have them do. In the evening Brother Joseph Stowell gave us good food for thought.

The Saints were glad to welcome Sister Susan Mauzy at the services Sunday. She has been away for some months caring for some aged people. After visiting with relatives and friends a short time, she expects to return to her work.

Walnut Park

I. N. White was the morning speaker. He has a wonderful store of spiritual experiences that are always strengthening to the Saints. In the evening Elder C. E. Miller taught us God's plan for true, spiritual happiness.

The cafeteria dinner given the evening of March 3 was a pleasant affair, and Group 28 thereby cleared $91.50 for our building fund.

Englewood

Sunday speakers here were Pastor J. E. Warnes in the morning and L. W. Fike in the evening. Attendance at Sunday school was up to the standard. The Sunday school attendance is always especially good.

The women's class is taking up the study of Zion for their class work. The evening of March 20 a box supper will be held at the home of Brother Lyman Fike, 1401 Hardy, the proceeds to go to the building fund. A program will be given following the supper. All are invited.

Spring Branch

Elders U. W. Greene and R. S. Salyards were the speakers at Spring Branch Sunday, both having a good hearing. The crowds are nearly always good, but the attendance was es-especially good this week both at the Sunday services and at prayer meeting and Religio.

Next Friday night a special program will be given at Religio by visitors from the Stone Church, and a week from Friday night the Spring Branch Religio will give the program at East Independence.

Lamoni Stake Items

LAMONI, IOWA, March 6.—Since our last report the Lamoni Branch has been going along about the same as usual. Two weeks ago the speaker of the morning was the pastor, C. E. Wight. His discourse was designed as an introduction to a special health campaign planned by the Department of Women. He talked on the value of a sound body and of the necessity of observing the laws of health, quoting from the sacred books and emphasizing especially the timely and purposeful warning known as the Word of Wisdom. The women of the groups expect to cooperate with the public school authorities in an endeavor to reduce the number of undernourished and otherwise physically deficient children.

The evening speaker was Elder J. D. Stead, who gave us an interesting discourse of the meaning of the spiritual birth. A special fast was called for last Sunday morning, preceding the monthly sacramental service. A large congregation came together and experienced one of the most spiritual meetings we have had for some time. Many splendid testimonies were given, much hope being expressed for the future peace and progress of the church. Brother J. F. Garver was the speaker in the evening.

The A Capella Chorus made a week-end concert tour last week, visiting Omaha, Council Bluffs, and Underwood. At each place they were greeted by large and enthusiastic audiences. The concert rendered at each place consisted of choruses, both accompanied and unaccompanied, ladies' and men's quartet numbers, and solos by Miss Doris Gieselman, voice instructor of Graceland, and Miss Allene Brackett. Miss Florence Thompson also added to the musical program a number of splendid readings. The entertainment was of a very high order, and the visit of the chorus made many new friends for Graceland. The young people went in cars, returning Sunday, most of them arriving in time for choir rehearsal at four o'clock.

The second home talent number of the Lyceum Course was given Tuesday night by the Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society, assisted by Master Merlin Kirby, boy soprano soloist of the Grace Episcopal Church of Chicago. The chorus was at its best after a winter of splendid work under their director, Miss Mabel Carille, and rendered very efficiently three numbers. Of course Master Kirby was the outstanding feature of the evening, who, though only thirteen years of age, is an accomplished musician. His ability to sing was more marked because of his boyish simplicity and unaffected manner, taking his high C and other difficult parts as though it were the easiest thing in the world and afforded the performer as much pleasure as his hearers. He is a prodigy indeed. A pleasing number of the program also was a violin, cello, and piano trio by Emma Snead, J. H. Anthony, and Thelma Lane. Ladies' quartet and A Capella Chorus numbers were also included in the program.

Lamoni is looking forward to another musical treat next Sunday, when a number of choirs from the northern part of the stake expect to drive down and join with Lamoni in a sacred concert at the regular evening service. The visiting choir includes singers from Hiteman, Lucas, Centerville, and Chariton, who have been practicing under the direction of Stake Chorister Mabel Carille. She, accompanied by a bunch of Lamoni singers to assist them, has made the trip to Hite-m has made better through his service and in the humanitarian principles that through his efforts have been preserved. Having lived according to the principles of Christ, may he not live on in the promises of the blessed Master. In the words of Stevenson: "He is not dead, but gone some trifling steps ahead and nearer to the end.

Ottumwa, Iowa

March 2.—The Saints have been kept busy during the month of February. The brothers gave a supper, all cooking and serving done by them. It was well attended, and the ladies gave their assistance by donating pies. All enjoyed themselves, and a small sum of money was raised. Brothers Albert Erskin and John Hunt did the cooking.

The Department of Women has had two cooking sales and given a fine Valentine party at the home of Brother and Sister John Green. The party was well attended, and enjoyed. After all had drawn valentines, the pastor was called to come and get another, which contained a message from the Saints in appreciation of his services to them. He also received a gift of money from the Saints. He was much surprised, but succeeded in expressing his appreciation. Refreshments were served by the ladies.

The sisters gave a George Washington party at the home of Brother and Sister Fullmer. A good program was given and refreshments were served.

The Sunday school is still alive and is making progress. Superintendent J. Baker's method of reviewing the school is very successful.

Sister Annie Scott is in poor health. She has been confined to her home for some time. Brother J. Jones has also been ill.

Prayer services are good. Our beloved bishop, G. P. Lambert, preached fine sermons February 21 on "Confidence" and "Tithing." Both were well received and brought results, as many inventories were taken. He left a fine impression.

Missionaries will find a welcome at Ottumwa, and we hope they will not fail to call. The church is on Fairview Avenue, West End, and Pastor F. C. Bevan lives at 230 Grand Avenue, West End, phone Black 2951. Visiting Saints are welcome.

Brother Griffiths and wife, of Lucas, Iowa, are now living in Ottumwa.

Many are taking the Herald here.

Twenty-Seven Baptized at Wellsburg, West Virginia

March 1.—Sunday evening, February 15, was the conclusion of our missionary campaign at Wellsburg, which has been in progress since January 4.

The Lord graciously blessed us with his Spirit in the presentation of our distinctive message, and in the social services the Saints were blessed with the Spirit's gifts, which brought strength and comfort. We were favored with a full house most every evening, and on some special occasions we had to turn some away, for lack of standing room.

During the six weeks there have been twenty-seven baptized, mostly adults. The Saints of Wellsburg greatly rejoiced in the privilege of welcoming these good people into the fellowship of the branch. They are all people of stability, whom I feel will prove to be a valuable asset to the branch, as also to the church in general. The men who were baptized fully counted the cost of true discipleship, and ceased such habits as tobacco using, etc., before associating themselves with the church. If I ever saw real, true, and thorough conversions it has been during this campaign.

I am satisfied that the work in Wellsburg is on the upward way, and if it only can be given the attention that it should have by the general church ministers the sky only will be its limit. They have a lot, and are making plans to erect a fine church building.

The Saints of this place are as loyal and true as I have ever found in my travels; and when it comes to entertaining and supporting a missionary, they cannot be excelled. May the comforts of earth and the blessings of heaven ever attend them all is my earnest prayer.

MISCELLANEOUS

Special Conference
North Dakota, at Minot, 128 First Avenue Northwest, March 22, for the election of delegates to General Conference to take the place of some who cannot go. Thomas Leitch, district president.

Rooms for Conference Visitors
Conference visitors should apply for rooms to J. A. Becker or C. Ed. Miller, Box 255, Independence, Missouri.

All Members of the Quorum of High Priests
The secretary of the quorum, Brother A. H. Knowlton, has submitted his resignation and is now located in Los Angeles, California, and to date we have been unable to locate any address list that is sufficiently perfect so that we could reach the members of the quorum by personal letter, hence we are asking you to secure a general ministerial blank, issued by the church for the priesthood, and make your report on that for this past year, as near as you can, and send the same with your correct address to Brother A. H. Parsons, 218 Building, Independence, Missouri. Please do not neglect this, for we have a very short time in which to receive your reports and tabulate them for the quorum sessions.

J. A. TANNER, Quorum President.

Southeastern Illinois District
Appointment is hereby made of Brother O. C. Hensen, of Mount Vernon, Illinois, as Bishop's agent of the above district. We solicít for him the confidence and loyal support of all the Saints. There is nothing which tests our fidelity to the Lord's work more than our willingness to support it in a financial way, for as has been stated in the scriptures, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." May God's people learn to prize this pearl of great price.

We wish to express our appreciation of the faithful services of Brother Charles Weener.

Sincerely yours,
BENJAMIN R. MCGUIRE, Presiding Bishop.

Requests for Prayer
Mrs. Al Hardman, Smithville, Missouri, asks the prayers of the Saints that if it be the Lord's will she may be healed and live near to Him.

Notice of Convening of General Conference
The General Conference of the church will convene at 10 a.m., April 6, 1925, in the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri. For the first session at least, and afterward if needed, the upper auditorium will be reserved for ex officio members and delegates. All ex officio members and delegates are expected to register with the Credentials Committee, and receive badge and credentials, as admittance will be by badge and credentials.

The seating arrangements will be as follows:
First Presidency, Twelve, High Priests, Order of Evangelists, Order of Bishops, and Presidents of Seventy, on the rostrum and in choir loft; Seventy in first seven rows of seats of center section; elders in east wing and east section; delegates in west section and west wing; and as much of gallery as is needed.

All reports and conference papers should be placed in our hands as soon as possible.

Arrangements are being made to have all speakers or delibbaeors stand before a microphone, which will connect with amplifiers in the basement of the church and the dining room, so that visitors can follow the proceedings of the conference. If it is found that there is room to spare in the main auditorium, this will be made available to visitors.

We suggest that April 5, Sunday, be observed as a day of fasting and prayer.

FIRST PRESIDENCY.

EDITORIAL

“Carry On in God’s Own Way”

Our Slogan for the General Conference

The HERALD for February 4 carries a scarifying editorial under the caption, “Common consent if——.” It is a problem story, a sort of politico-religious romance. The author blends fancy and theory as a painter does his colors. The plot is purely hypothetical, unencumbered by things so prosaic as facts. If thrills, and tragedy, and crisis be a criterion, it is the most sensational contribution of the year.

Few people will question the exceptional power of imagination of this writer. His excursions in the realms of fancy have ofttimes enlivened an otherwise dull evening. If this flare-up of his concerned only myself, I would treat it as another bit of droll humor, intended only to entertain children and amuse men and women who delight in a story with a villain and a hero, and let it go at that. But there is a principle involved. And others are concerned.

This appeal is a reaction, not to what was said, but to what our critic fears may happen. It appears as an ingenious attempt to submerge the intellect, to capitalize this fear, and thereby stampede the group. It is an exceptional appeal to prejudice, passion, and mob psychology. The attack is, indeed, clever. Some one has said, “Clever things are not always good.”

The Casus Belli

This editorial writer is very much distraught because an individual signing himself “T. W. Williams” has said:

We must carry on in God’s own way with a firm and steadfast faith that God, who restored the gospel in the beginning with all of its attendant powers and blessings and who sustained the remnant during the dark and cloudy day following the apostasy of 1844, will still maintain his own cause and continue to bless the labors of those who remain true to the faith once delivered to the saints.—Editorial, SAINTS’ HERALD, January 28, 1925.

Fear often causes people, who in every other respect are quite normal, to see things which do not actually exist. I recall that in a former editorial our critic speaks of “monsters” with “two or more heads”; “freaks of the zoo”; “dragons of Revelation.” He now comes forward with lurid visions of men coming to the General Conference “to promote schisms”; “attempts to lead away a faction”; “fractional divisions”; “tendency to split the church”; “chaotic procedure of every man a law unto himself”; and trailing off into hazy suggestions of “schisms, disintegration, and shame.”

The Purpose of the Editorial

An attempt is made to isolate one lone Open Letter advocate, hold him up to contumely, brand him as a fomenter of schism, proclaim him as the arch conspirator, and thus make him the “goat” for the sacrifice. The whole thing reads like burlesque, yet behind the scenes there is spiritual tragedy. Noble, God-fearing men and women, by the fireside, in the closet, and in the woods are pouring out their souls to God for help and guidance, all of which make demand that we put away childish things and, with an eye single to the glory of God, strive for the eternal verities.

What I Actually Said

In the editorial which has so frightened our critic I said:

1. I am reluctant to believe that a majority of the officials and members of the church will indorse this strange document on church government now championed by a majority of the advisory council which would:
   (a) Substitute monarchy for democracy.
   (b) Make assent take the place of consent.
   (c) Divert the church from its original and heaven-ordained purpose.

2. To divert the church from its original and heaven-ordained purpose:
   (a) Would be tantamount to apostasy.
   (b) Must result in the rejection of the church.

3. But even though the church should be rejected, still only one course remains open to all true Latter Day Saints:
   (a) We must carry on in God’s own way.
   (b) We must carry on with a steadfast faith that God will still maintain his own cause and continue to bless the labors of those who remain true to the faith once delivered to the saints.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
What My Critic Accuses Me Of Saying:

(a) That if the majority at the coming General Conference shall be adverse to his judgment, and in support of the joint council action, he will own the decision.

(b) That at least common consent means "assent" to his opinion.

(c) That common consent is authoritative and righteous if it supports his position—if not, it is apostasy.

Doing:

(a) He in advance puts the "bitter burning brand of apostate" on those who shall dare to stand with the majority.

(b) Would seem to put the other signers of the open letter in an embarrassing position.

(c) Is guilty of prejudget and repudiation of the decision of the coming conference.

(d) Attempting to institute minority rule and the chaotic procedure of every man a law unto himself.

(e) Putting out privately and through questionable secrecy propaganda which is now forced into the open.

I have noted carefully each stricture made. Without aspersion let me say that this writer reads into the text motives and purposes of which I know nothing. He has (possibly unwittingly) garbled and distorted the language beyond license. I deny his implications. I now reiterate and reaffirm the statement without modifications.

The fact that our critic ignores entirely our argument and issues an inflammatory editorial dealing exclusively in personalities is a compliment to the correctness of our general position. He is alarmed, and rightly, too, for the fate of supreme directional control is concerned with the truth. We should be able to consider this question without misinterpreting motives or misrepresenting facts.

Our Appeal to Officers and Members

Our critic comments thus:

The signers of the open letter were first to appeal to the General Conference and pledge themselves to its decision.—HERALD, February 4, 1925.

We did not publish the open letter until after the advisory council had committed itself to the supreme directional control doctrine and official pressure had been brought to bear to bring leading church officials into line, and this without any conference action. To have remained silent would have been cowardice on our part.

The open letter was addressed to "The president, ministry, and membership of the church." It was submitted as a basis for discussion during the year. We affirmed, "There are fundamental issues which must be decided before peace can come to the church." We said:

We believe that the coming General Conference, in full possession of the facts, should speak and settle this controversy, in a definite, constructive manner. Only in such conference settlement can our people be reunited, confidence re-established, and the cause of the Master advanced.

And this is our position today. But what has happened in the interim? District conferences without "full possession of the facts" and without free and full discussion have indorsed the document on church government. We are now confronted with delegations who may not listen to argument, who are impervious to reason and revelation, and who have no volition but to vote as instructed, and this with the full knowledge and concurrence of the Presidency of the church! Under such circumstances the General Conference may not represent the majority, and it is even possible that its actions may be a travesty on common consent.

"Bitter, Burning Brand of Apostate"

Our critic continues:

He in advance puts the bitter, burning brand of apostate on those who shall dare to stand with the majority.—HERALD, February 4, 1925.
He gratuitously assumes that the majority are going to vote for supreme directional control. We await the action of the conference. No individual can declare another an apostate. This right belongs to God or a proper tribunal. And every man should have the privilege to answer for himself. It is, however, not only the right but the duty of an apostle to warn the church against apostasy. And every not the right but the duty of an apostle to warn the church against apostasy. If this had been done prior to 1844, there might have been no need for a Reorganization.

The Apostle Paul said: "After my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock; also of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them."—Acts 20: 29, 30. Will our critic rail at the Apostle Paul because he dared to suggest that the majority of the church would go into apostasy?

If our critic is serious in his castigations of our effort to warn the church of possible contingencies, does not an apostle have as much right as one of the Presidency to warn the people of what seems to him to be the tendency to depart from accepted principles? Is it a virtue for the President of the church to call apostles "instruments of Satan" and a vice for an apostle to call upon the church to "carry on in God's own way"?

Is it not true that this same writer was unmoved, silent, and complacent, when his "superior" officer in a public sermon in 1922, and through the church press in 1923, issued a blanket statement denouncing leading ministers of the church, and this without the courage of naming them, as "weapons in the hands of Satan," "self-appointed and aspiring leaders," "that would have led the church into apostasy"?

And is it not true that this attack was made shortly after the leading men representing both majority and minority groups had come together and agreed to put forward an affirmative effort throughout the conference year? And was not this attack made while those who were traduced were at work in their various missions trying to build up the church and strengthen the faith of the Saints? And was not this charge reiterated at the last Southern California reunion? Let the records decide.

Here was an instance where men, who with their wives and families had sacrificed their all in the service of the church, were held up to obloquy and derision, their honor besmirched, heralded to the world as apostates, and together with their loved ones placed under suspicion and reproach. This unjustifiable attack has never been righted.

No Cause for Complaint

At no time has our critic lifted his voice or wielded his pen on behalf of these men who have been so grossly maligned. It ill becomes this man who has upheld his associate in putting the "bitter burning brand of apostate" on fellow ministers, and without cause, to complain when we say that "to divert the church from its original and divinely ordained purpose would be tantamount to apostasy." The mote and beam illustration of Jesus is applicable here.

I did not brand the majority in advance as apostates. On the contrary, I expressed confidence in the integrity of the group in these words: "I am reluctant to believe that a majority of the officials and members of the church will indorse this strange document on church government." I reiterate. And I wish to add: If the majority, or the minority, or a single individual will seek to divert the church from its original and divinely ordained purpose, this will be tantamount to apostasy. And I here state a principle and indict no man.

Judge Philips on Apostasy

Judge Philips in the Temple Lot Suit decision gave as among the reasons why the Utah Church was not the church in succession and was in apostasy:

It has changed the duties of the President, and of the Twelve, and established the doctrine of "obey counsel," and has changed the order of "seventy" and "evangelists."

It would be interesting to know what some able jurist would say concerning the doings of the late advisory council limiting government to priesthood, lodging supreme directional control and the power of effective discipline in the Presidency, with the numerous unauthorized innovations which have been introduced in the last few years wherein the duties of the President, the Twelve, and the Seventy have been changed and where "obey counsel" has become the rule.

Prejudgment and Repudiation

Our critic protests against what he conceives to be the "prejudgment" and "repudiation" of the decision of the General Conference. Strange, indeed, is it not, that he was not at all disturbed when several districts officially decided the question for themselves, thereby prejudging and repudiating the combined wisdom of the whole church?

And who is responsible for the introduction of prejudgment and repudiation? Not the open letter group. We have only to refer to the President's message for 1919 and his later assault on the integrity and character of his fellow ministers in 1922-23 to find the real genesis of prejudgment and repudiation. What is the following but prejudgment and repudiation?

I cannot yield to the opposition, so I am in the fight, and it will undoubtedly be a finish fight.—F. M. Smith's address to the Independence priesthood, July, 1924.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
The President here gives notice that the issue must go his way. He indicates that if the majority at the coming conference shall be adverse to his judgment that he “cannot yield to the opposition.” Is it not strange that our critic has never raised the slightest objection to this utterance of his colleague? If he thinks the President is right in this attitude, why does he find fault with others? If he thinks the President is wrong in this, why has he not had the courage to say so? None of the open letter group have issued such an ultimatum.

Who Desires Elimination?

And who is responsible for this repudiation and elimination which has been going on in the church? Certainly not the open letter advocates. We have been working to bring the forces together without the loss of any. This was our purpose in issuing the open letter. Yet leading ministers of the church have bluntly told: “If you do not agree with the Presidency, why don’t you resign?” and, “There is not room enough in this church for you and me together.” This same thought was expressed during the advisory council when the President said:

If I am right I want the council to say so. If I am wrong, and the council says so, I have the decency to get out, to resign.

And in his sermon on “Obedience to law” the President said:

If you feel that you cannot be loyal to the laws of this land or this state or this government and uphold them by your voice, your act, and by your cooperation, you have the choice of going to other lands and giving your selective loyalty to other governments.—SAINTS’ HERALD, June 4, 1924.

This is tantamount to saying: If you cannot be loyal to the President of the church and government through priesthood among, but not of, the people, and uphold them by your voice, your act, and by your cooperation, you have the choice of going to other institutions and giving your loyalty to other church governments. Thank God that membership in the church of Christ is predicated on loyalty to God and the truth and to those who abide therein!

The foregoing suggestions are ominous. No one can hear or read them without being convinced that there is a process of elimination going on in the church. The President aims to possess supreme directional control and the power of effective discipline. All others will be expected to get in step or get out.

Tendency to Split the Church

Our critic continues:

I protest against the tendency such a declaration has to split the church and lead to factional division—to minority rule, or chaotic procedure of every man a law unto himself. —SAINTS’ HERALD, February 4, 1925.

The fact that this writer does not call attention to what he regards as a “danger,” and a “tendency to split the church,” until he himself feels aggrieved, and raises no protest concerning those on the side of the controversy which he champions and who have abused the men of the opposite group, reflects an unfortunate biased attitude.

If our critic is so much concerned that the church maintain its official solidarity, why did he not protest this statement made by the President of the church before the priesthood in Indepedence, July, 1924?

I cannot yield to the opposition, so I am in the fight, and it will undoubtedly be a finish fight; either the opposition which has asserted itself is going to become supreme and the rest of us eliminated, or vice versa.

This spells a split church. It makes a bid for a split church. It proclaims that a split is inevitable. There is no middle ground—no compromise. It is a fight to the finish. And this is put forward by the President of the church! And did our critic raise any objection to this statement? Not that anyone knows of. Why?

On the other hand, those who are opposed to supreme directional control are not contending for a split. We are not giving of our energy to develop factions. We are, in fact, compelled to fight against a minority faction who are trying to deflect the church from the path wherein the majority have elected to travel. The advocates of supreme directional control are those who have tried between conferences to make abortive the action of the last General Conference and to force the church into new fields.

It Has Been the Purpose to Effect Radical Changes

Those who have kept tab on the developments of the past few years know that the President of the church has definitely stated that changes were contemplated and that the church should be prepared for same. As early as 1916 he said:

You who have been alert to conditions in the church know that it has been passing through such a period of confusion, that we have been breaking up some old habits in the process of forming new. . . . the church must readjust itself to changed conditions, and must reform its ranks. . . .

You know when an army has been engaged in battling, there come times when it must reform its forces, rearrange its lines, readjust its plans, and then go on fighting for the same cause. . . . Such a time or readjustment has reached us. —SAINTS’ HERALD, November 28, 1917.

No individual makes radical changes in his habits without a period of confusion; so confusion may sometimes indicate progress. As with individuals, so with groups; radical changes in customs may create temporary confusion, and confusion may therefore be a concomitant of progress.—Priesthood Journal, vol. 8, No. 1, January, 1925.

He intended to make radical changes and knew it was inevitable that confusion would follow. He sought to reassure the people by saying that confusion was sometimes an evidence of progress.
Changes multiplied have come, confusion has followed, but are we justified in believing that progress has been made? Let the present condition of the church give answer.

And herein is the source of our trouble. An institution which lays claim to continuous revelation should not be under the necessity of experimenting.
It would be illuminating, though tragic, to review the history of these various ventures and changes, and failures, and the consequent effect upon the church during the last few years.

Landmarks Have Been Removed

In this era of change, old landmarks have been removed, guideposts have been torn down, well-defined trails have been obliterated, new surveys have been made without the use of chart or compass, and these have been revamped, discarded, or proved impractical until to-day we have no definite policy, no clearly defined goal. Unrest, incrimination, reincrimination, surrender, and mutiny characterize what was intended to be a united group of Christian workers.

You cannot make errand boys of apostles, rubber stamps of bishops, echoes of the general and local ministry, and an "aye, aye" chorus of the conference, and register either peace or progress or maintain our claim to being, in fact, the church of the living God.

Executives in Church Government.—No. 8

New Move Subordinates General Assembly

In thus violating the law of the body which the signers of the "open letter" claimed obedience to, they did not act according to their public announcement. Having disregarded the rules of the church concerning the HERALD, they proceeded to affirm that General Conference "is the highest authority in the church" (HERALD, 1924, p. 531), and that its enactments are "binding without exception upon members, officials, and quorums" (Ibid.). They thus become leaders of another move contrary to church law, for conference itself has repeatedly recognized that the General Assembly is the highest authority to which appeal may be made concerning the law of the church, and the only lawful appeal to be made from a decision of the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. Of such a decision the law says:

...it may be brought before a general assembly of the several quorums which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church, otherwise there can be no appeal from their decision.

—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

The new move that would make conference higher than the General Assembly is thus seen to be contrary to the law adopted by conference and repeatedly referred to in its enactments. There is an abundance of further proof on this point. This confusing conflict with their own affirmations and with the rules of the church is only one of the harmful results of using a tactical advantage to remove the supervision of the Presidency over the HERALD in doctrinal publications. If they had waited till the conference could hear and make proper disposition of the matter, it would have inspired greater confidence as to the lawfulness of their methods, whether or not their cause had been found worthy of support.

Another Ultra-Lawful Appeal Advocated

Continuing this misconception of the law, it has also been affirmed by one of the chief advocates of this procedure that instead of appeal from these three quorums being open only to a General Assembly, as the Lord states, another appeal from them to General Conference is to be permitted. He says, in the language already quoted:

An appeal may be taken from their decision to the General Assembly or to General Conference. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.)—HERALD, 1924, p. 1081.

But the Doctrine and Covenants cited by the brother does not support his statement. Instead of supporting him it disproves his affirmation, and says:

And in case that any decision of these quorums (Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy) is made in unrighteousness, it may be brought before a general assembly of the several quorums which constitute the spiritual authorities of the church, otherwise there can be no appeal from their decision.

—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

He thus advocates a doctrine in further conflict with a fundamental law of the church as adopted by a General Assembly August 17, 1835. It can be seen that these attempted departures from the law of the church are all of similar nature in that they pave the way for independence of the Presidency or any other officers having power to supervise the procedure of the Presiding Bishopric.

Temporal Control of Presidency and Twelve

We have shown that the revelations place the spiritual authorities over temporal affairs also, giving power to direct the heads of the temporal department in accordance with the law and conference enactments. It was largely for this reason that before Joseph had approved himself as president, it was the Twelve, "the quorum next in authority," that the Lord directed to supervise the work of the Bishopric for a time. However, the Twelve still

www.LatterDayTruth.org
have a contingent responsibility that they may be required to exercise at times in looking after temporal affairs, in council with the Presidency or other officers of the church. This is shown in the revelation releasing the Twelve from the temporary responsibility placed upon them, as just mentioned, which release is subject to exceptions there stated, as follows:

It was not then intended, nor is it now, to burden them (Twelve) with the duty of looking after the disbursements of the moneys in the treasury, or the management of the properties of the church; except as it may be at times necessary to do so in council with the presidency, the high council, in case of exigency, the bishopric, bishops, or bishop's agents abroad, or the conferences; and in accordance with the agreement hitherto made.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 5.

This revelation shows that the need may arise for the Presidency and Twelve to look after the “disbursements of moneys” or the “management of the properties” at times; and while the Twelve were released from the temporary control given them by the revelation of 1881 (Doctrine and Covenants 114), an exception to this release also is named:

Whatever burden the quorum may have felt rested upon them in this regard, they are now absolved from, the end designed by it having been reached; except that it become apparent to the quorum that there was abuse in the administration of the temporal affairs of the church, they shall at once make such inquiry and examination through the proper officers of the church as will correct the evil and save the church from injury.—Ibid.

Further Safeguard Provided

Instead of the Presiding Bishopric having no superior officers, and instead of being subject only to the law, which they claim the right to interpret, the law itself shows not only that they are subject to the Presidency, but even this additional safeguard is not all; should there be abuse in temporal administration, either by collusion of the Presidency and Bishopric or otherwise, the Twelve are authorized to investigate and through the proper officers correct the evil. Who these officers should be would depend upon the nature of the case, as the law clearly states.

The argument that the Bishopric are subject only to the advice of higher officers is not in accordance with the Articles of Incorporation or other provisions of the law. The law makes them subject to “direction,” not simply advice, stating:

... said bishops having temporal jurisdiction subject to the general direction of the church, and higher church authorities.—Church History, vol. 3, p. 709.

... the Bishop and his counselors, officers who were appointed to have charge and direct administration of the temporal and financial affairs of the church, under the counsel and general supervision of the First Presidency, etc.—Editorial, Herald, 1898, p. 177.

The most important business of the church, and the most difficult cases of the church, inasmuch as there is not satisfaction upon the decision of the bishop, or judges, it shall be handed over and carried up unto the council of the church, before the presidency of the high priesthood.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 55.

And this shall be your business and mission in all your lives to preside in council and set in order all the affairs of this church and kingdom.—To the Presidency, Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

That it is the prerogative of the President to preside over the whole church, to bear the responsibility of the core and oversight of the work of the church, in all its different departments, etc.—Resolution 386: 7.

Executive Departments Under Executive Head

To say that the Presiding Bishopric are independent of the Presidency and subject only to the law (which they say they are to interpret) between conferences, is to ignore the law which places the Presidency over all church affairs, and over all its departments. While this supervision is directional and the Presidency do not directly administer in the temporal department in person, the prerogative and responsibility of directing the Bishopric places a corresponding obligation upon the Bishopric to be subject to the direction of these “higher church authorities,” which direction is to be in harmony with the law and purposes of the church.

On the part of the Presiding Bishopric it is protested that they do not ask for supreme power in their department, but while supreme power is not claimed under that name, the actual power which they assume they possess is equivalent to all that is claimed for the Presidency under the term “supreme directional control,” if the claims for the Presiding Bishopric mean what they say. These claims are, first, the right to interpret and apply the law, which is stated concerning Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10 to mean:

This clearly establishes the primary right of interpreting and applying the temporal law with the bishopric.—Herald, 1924, p. 1091.

Their acts would in this case be subject to no superior executive direction between conferences, and the supremacy of the law would itself be subject to their own interpretation, with no superior officer over their department. That this correctly represents their position is indicated by the following:

In the work of the Bishopric the Presiding Bishopric are directed and controlled by the law and not by the Presidency.—Herald, 1925, p. 230.

The Law Does Not Enforce Itself

In executive work there must be authority to see that all departments proceed according to the law.
Such authority must be above the department itself, otherwise it is impotent to enforce the law. This authority is executive and is held by the chief office in the church, that of the Presidency. In an executive capacity it is supreme, but is subject to the law and legislative requirements. This executive supremacy, under another name, is claimed by the Presiding Bishopric, so far as the temporal department is concerned. Though disclaiming the use of the word “supreme” in this connection, they claim substantially the same right which the word means in the document to which they object, so far as it relates to their department.

The spokesman for the claims of the Presiding Bishopric asserts that the reason why they are not supreme in their department is that the law is supreme, hence the logical conclusion is that in an executive sense they consider themselves supreme, for the law is not executive but provides for executive functions. His argument is:

And in this work can the Presiding Bishop become supreme? Assuredly not, because as the very words themselves suggest, the law is supreme, as it always and ever ought to be in every department of the church. —Herald, p. 230.

If on the assumption that the law is supreme there were to be no directional control over any department in the church, we should have the ridiculous spectacle of a First Presidency appointed over all the affairs of the church, and over all its different departments, charged with the prerogative of the responsibility, the direction, and the supervision of all departments, yet unable to perform his work because each department head recognizes no superior except the law, which he himself interprets. A church operated on such a plan would soon become disaffected, disjointed, and dissolved.

The Executive Function Distinguished

The executive function of the Presidency does not interfere with the judicial or legislative councils and quorums of the church in the performance of their duties as defined in the law, and the right of such interference has not been claimed. But in directing executive work the superior decision rests with the Presidency and not with the Bishopric, but is subject to the appeal provided for in the law. This is the proper course of the Bishopric in cases where they believe the directions given by the Presidency are in conflict with the laws and provisions of the church. But to allege that an executive department, as is that of the Bishopric, is not subject to direction by the executive head of the entire body, is to set up a conflict with the law of the church.

New Station to Go on Air April 7

Formal opening of the new church broadcasting station at Independence will take place on the evening of April 7. A special two-hour program will be radiocast from the new studio.

The new broadcasting equipment will be used, barring unforeseen delays, with a power output of 500 watts. In event a special inspection can be arranged by the Government radio inspector it may be possible to use full 1,000 watts. Permission has already been obtained to use 500 watts until inspection for Class B license can be made.

Unless a special inspection is made and the new equipment approved by April 7 it will of course be impossible to get a change in wave length for that date. It is probable therefore that the present wave length of 268 meters will be employed in broadcasting the formal opening program.

Arrangements have been made with the Western Union Telegraph Company to have an operator on special schedule at Independence, so that it will be possible to acknowledge all telegrams from those listening to the program. It will be greatly appreciated by those in charge of the radio work if listeners will either telegraph or telephone reports on this radiocasting. All such messages with the names and addresses of senders will be read during the program.

It is possible that this program will begin at 7.30 or 8 o’clock instead of the usual 9 o’clock hour. Announcements concerning the exact time of the program will appear in the Herald and Ensign the week preceding the program.

Many delays have attended the construction of the new station. It is no small task to build a 1000-watt broadcasting equipment, and more time has been required for this work than originally was contemplated. Since the station has been first planned, Government requirements for stations of such power have been made more stringent. Fortunately the funds campaign for the new station has gone over the top sufficiently not only to take care of the necessary increased expenditures but also to buy a very fine grand piano for the new studio.

Upon its completion K L D S will be one of the foremost stations in the country, and with its central location should reach well up into Canada, as well as to both coasts.

Every Latter Day Saint will want to tune in K L D S on April 7, and it is hoped that every hearer will report reception from the new station.

Let the People Rule

Let the Majority Rule

In the premises the minority have their right conserved. And the assurance of eventual right and righteousness.

Let Us Leave It With God

With all due respect to the conviction of our brethren in this connection, we suggest that it be left to God, where he is to take his stand. And despite all that has been said in the HERALD of February 18 about wrong majorities—human majorities—and right minorities—divine minorities—we yet express the hope that even though the church adopt the document on church government, God will still be found with the church.

At any rate, the strong presumption is he will be with the church. Our friends of the open letter have themselves said, Conference enactments “combine both the inspiration of God and the will of the people.” The very strong presumption is, then, God will still continue on with the church.

The Rights of the Minority

But if certain after conference action feel the said action is in error, where, then, lie the rights of this minority?

A fair question, and fairly answered:

If adopting the document on church government, the church shall have been found in error, then the church in a later conference can and will correct it. And Saints and brethren will not need the assurance those now holding for this document will be among the first to declare against it, shall its principles have been demonstrated in practice to be subversive of the rights and liberties of the people.

In the premises the minority have their every right conserved. And the assurance of eventual right and righteousness.

Who Is in the Minority?

A labored effort is that in the HERALD of February 18 to put in the minority the Presidency and those who agree with them:

Have the Saints observed that proponents of “supreme directional control” are even now minority reactionaries? None can justly accuse these, our brethren who are advocating “strongly administered discipline” and its attendant features, with the cowardice that swings with some majority because of its numbers. For since the last General Conference they have courageously stood with and fought most manfully for the cause of the minority, proved to be the minority by vote of the last General Conference, when the conference rejected one of the major moves of the supreme control doctrine and denied exclusive nomination to office by priesthood. They have challenged the majority! They are the courageous minority leaders of the hour! Should they be discredited for it? Certainly not, if they consider it vital that the church must have this “control” doctrine attached! All should respect them in their daring attempt to show the church and the conference where it was mistaken when it voted that it did not want government by priesthood exclusively nomin-
Our brother passes rather lightly over the record of the 1923 conference. The reason is obvious.

The record shows not ours, but his own party bringing a document to the conference touching the matter of nomination for offices in the church, affirming the right of the people to nominate, but ignoring the right of executive officers to nominate, which document failed of a majority, as we shall see.

It further shows in the preamble to this document just described, a thrust at "one-man power."

It shows an amended substitute submitted by our party and adopted by the conference, sweeping away this preamble and resolution just mentioned; and which amended substitute as adopted reaffirms the right of both people and executives to nominate.

It shows no word in either substitute, amended substitute, or reported speech as from us, claiming the right to nominate as being the exclusive right of the executive. Nor did those taking the floor for us, or any one of them, so hold. For all and each of them have from the beginning and do now concede the right of the people to nominate.

The record does show something else. It shows that failing in the opening wedge hidden away as it were in their preamble as above cited, its proponents made a second effort. For immediately after adoption of the resolutions on common consent reaffirming concurrent rights of nomination as just noted, the record shows them in this attempt:

Resolved, This General Conference hereby express disapproval of centralization of power by any administrative officer or officers, and maintains the right of full expression of the will of the people.—General Conference Minutes, p. 3464.

And it shows this resolution was tabled without a word of discussion (the people clearly believing in adequate and proper centralization under the law).

The record shows again that immediately following this attack by indirection on the administration of the Presidency, another was brought up charging certain dire dangers in connection with Forms One to Five.

It shows this resolution and matter was also immediately laid on the table without discussion.

Counting it a day, the conference stood adjourned.

The record shows that the next day the opponents of centralization tried it yet again, in a milder form, through a resolution reading:

Whereas, controversy has arisen over the propriety and working of "Forms" one to five (1 to 5), as set forth in the SAINTS’ HERALD of November 8, 1922,

Be it resolved, that we, as a General Conference, declare ourselves uncommitted to the measure.—Ibid., pp. 3479, 3480.

It shows that, to quote the minutes, "After discussion the matter was laid on the table by vote of 236 to 157."

By the way, it is interesting to note just here that Elder T. W. Williams played a leading part in the drawing up of these Forms One to Five; his being the second signature attached thereto, as published in the HERALD of November 8, 1922.

Again reverting to the conference, it is clear in the memory of all present that when one arose in the session a couple of days later and attempted what promised to be a review of certain acts of President Smith, objection was made this was a cause which could not be lawfully brought before the conference, the conference by a decisive vote declaring it did not want to hear the matter. Nor did it listen to another word of it.

On these several occasions we voted with the majority.

Who, then, is in the minority?

We Need Have No Fear

operate in a manner to assure the church against divisive tendencies after conference action.

We need then have no fear.

The Law of Succession

For some reason not revealed, there has been projected into this consideration of church government the law of succession in the Presidency. Since this claim which has been for some considerable time passing itself around in certain quarters now protrudes itself here also, it may be well to take note of it.

Reference is made to a statement of President Elbert A. Smith, to interpret it quite apart from the law, and the known conviction of Brother Elbert. Then, using this forced interpretation as a premise, the writer plucks from out the Plaintiff's Abstract an affirmation of the late Joseph Smith, to interpret it also quite apart from the law and the known convictions of Brother Joseph. So by this devious process is suggested a theory for the selection of a president of the high priesthood by ordinary nomination and vote; which is to say, without revelation from God—even as the church might select a secretary.

The words of Joseph Smith as quoted are these:

> I could have been properly ordained under the laws of the Reorganized Church to the office I now hold (President of the church) without a revelation to that effect from my father. Yes, sir, you understand me correctly; I claim I could properly be ordained and qualified and put in the possession of the office which I now hold, without a revelation to that effect to my father. I make that claim.

That Joseph Smith might have been chosen president without a revelation through his father, Yes. But that he might have been so chosen without revelation at all, No.

But lest my opinion might be regarded as prejudiced and incompetent, we call again to the rescue Elder T. W. Williams, who in his "Latter Day Saints: Who are they?" says on this point:

As to the organic form of the church, we have shown that Brigham Young was a usurper, while Joseph Smith, the first President of the Reorganized Church, was ordained according to law. The established law of the Lord as regards leadership provided that Joseph Smith's successor should be "called of God," "chosen by the body," "appointed and ordained unto that office."—Page 142.

And in showing up the usurpation of Brigham Young, Elder Williams had before said in this same tract, quoting "their own words," Millennial Star, volume 10, page 114, the italics being his:

> Brigham Young was nominated to be the first president of the church, and he nominated Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards to be his two counselors.—Page 140.

And Brother Williams adds further down the same page: "Thus Brigham Young, by the confession of his own historians, was nominated by men. —Page 140.

These wise words of Elder Williams are much appreciated at this time. May their timeliness impress us, one and all, and reestablish us in the law.

If anything further is needed to establish us in the law, we have it in the following clear statement and interpretation:

> The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged in his administration, by the voice of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 99: 6.

Indeed, the author of the article in the Herald of February 18, advocating this nomination-by-man theory, himself said in the Herald of November 4, 1908, quoting from this same section 99, "The President of the church ... is appointed by revelation."

Let the Majority Rule

Reverting to the discussion engaging us, we again call the Saints to witness, this present discussion had its rise in the rights of the majority. In the rights of the majority it must have its conclusion.

And that the people shall speak wisely, we firmly believe. For we most heartily join our Brethren B. R. McGuire, J. F. Keir, I. A. Smith, J. W. Rush- ton, and T. W. Williams in the conviction as quoted in our last, "We believe God will be mindful of our needs in this crisis, as in times past."

When the conference speaks, the presumption will run it has spoken as God would have it speak.

When the conference speaks, it must be obeyed. Any other course is not a course, it is chaos.

Let the majority rule.

Why Worry About a Split in the Church?

By C. E. Guinand

There are those who seem greatly worried because they say Brother T. W. Williams has suggested a split in the church; they seem to fear that the people will grab the idea and run away with it.

Do our friends fear that Brother Williams's influence is greater than President F. M. Smith's? They did not seem troubled in the least when President Smith on July 6, 1924, said, "I cannot yield to the opposition. I am in the fight, and it will undoubtedly be a finish fight. Either the opposition which has asserted itself is going to become supreme and the rest of us eliminated, or vice versa."

Evidently, President Smith expected a split in the church; "a finish fight and elimination" certainly suggest a split much more plainly than anything found in Brother T. W. Williams's article. Men do not generally fellowship after a "finish fight" and when they have been "eliminated." They then have no choice but to "carry on in what they believe to be God's way," as Brother Williams has suggested.

Now comes Brother Garver and extravagantly lauds Brother Elbert Smith's article in which he attacks Brother Williams, hinting that he is trying to lead away a faction of the church. Brother Garver says Brother Elbert's article is a "masterpiece, and dignified." It does not look that way to me, and if it really is so "dignified" for Brother Elbert to hint or suggest that Brother Williams is trying to "lead away a faction of the church," would it not have been equally dignified for Brother Elbert to have "lifted the warning voice, and powerfully proclaimed" against Brother F. M. Smith's suggestion of a "finish fight and elimination"? We are brethren; we should not show partiality. That which would cause consternation or apprehension on the part of church men should not be regarded as less because of place or station in the church. We should not have men's person in admiration because of advantage. (Jude 16.)

There are at least three places in Brother Elbert's article in which he leaves the impression that he believes Brother Williams is trying to lead away a faction of the church, without saying it in so many words. That is unfair to Brother Williams and can serve but one purpose, viz, to discredit him in the minds of the Saints. This is a convenient way of disposing of some one whose argument you are unable to meet in a direct manner. I have talked much with Brother Williams, and I do not believe that he has a wish to lead away any part of the church; any more than I believe his critic wishes to lead away from the church, and I certainly do not believe he has such desire.

Brother Elbert says, "Certainly he [Williams] could hardly remain with a body of believers whom he had prejudged and advertised as being in apostasy, or an equivalent state." I will say, Certainly he could not remain with a body of unbelievers after a "finish fight" in which he had been "eliminated."

President Smith has not hesitated to scathingly denounce those opposed to his supreme control plan. In the event that he shall become supreme, there are but two ways open to those who do not honestly believe in his supreme control; one is, to yield like cowards and sycophants to a rule they believe to be wrong, and kiss the hand that wields the scourge; or, as Brother Williams has suggested, carry on as they believe the Lord would have them to do. Which shall we do?
to a council or conference a resolution demanding for themselves powers and prerogatives heretofore exercised by another or other quorums—suppose these changes were so far-reaching as materially to alter the form of our church government—would hesitancy or objection be manifested towards joining the Bishopric in a similar pledge to the one now advanced to support supreme directional control?

I have unbounded faith in the ultimate decision of the church, second only to my faith in the revelation of God’s will. The normal functioning of the General Conference is to combine the inspiration of God and the will of his people. I subscribe to the principle stated in the Book of Mormon:

Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right; therefore, this shall ye observe, and make it your law to do your business by the voice of the people.

Before I could conscientiously subscribe to the pledge to abide by the council and conference decisions of the future, I would have to force myself to accept the Book of Mormon statement when altered to read as follows:

Now it is never that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is always that the lesser part of the people desire that which is not right.

Our brother raises the question as to whether democracy has lost any of her lovers. NO! but we fear she has been kidnapped, and when she puts in her appearance at the conference, we wonder to what extent she will be blindfolded and gagged by districts which have been encouraged to send their delegates instructed so that her acts will not be free and unhampered; and under these conditions will her acts not be “against the wish, knowledge, and consent of the membership”?

A three-fold cord of safety has been pointed to—one is that the delegates will use their best judgment; secondly, they will seek divine guidance; thirdly, they will be determined to hold together in bonds of fellowship. We agree that this is a cord of safety, but according to reports it has been tampered with.

Some evidently have not felt that their cause was secure with this cord of safety. So they have used another cord to bind the delegates to vote a certain way regardless of reason or revelation at the General Conference, thereby severing two strands of the cord of safety.

In the HERALD of February 20, 1907, Brother Elbert convincingly points out the dangers of district conferences instructing delegates to General Conference:

We believe in divine guidance. At any General Conference a revelation may be given to the church touching important questions; and there is no assurance that its provisions will be in line with the instructions which we may have given our delegation.

At the General Conference a broader discussion obtains than can be hoped for in the district or stake conferences; yet if we instruct our delegation we cut ourselves off from any benefit that might result therefrom. We thus narrow ourselves down to the information and light obtainable in our own district or stake.

It is often the case that only a few of the elders are present at the district conference. Possibly there is one of the number who is possessed of unusual eloquence and power in debate. He is sincere but he presents only one side of the question and the other side has no proper presentation. We may instruct our delegates and at the General Conference they may discover that there is another side to the question with able representatives who have the facts back of them. In such an event our delegates are bound to vote against their convictions. We have delegated them to represent us, but they cannot properly represent us because they cannot make the change which we would if we were there to vote in person.

After a passage of a few years, now comes the same writer in the HERALD and bravely challenges me to pledge myself weeks in advance to “abide loyally” by whatever decision may be reached by majority vote when methods such as pictured above, together with other methods contrary to the spirit and genius of our work, have been resorted to in selecting and instructing delegates.

I have tried to be loyal to the church and to the decisions the church has made in its General Conferences. The record I have made will prove whether or not I have so far failed that a pledge is now necessary to give assurance of my loyalty. The divine forces which have guided the destiny of our beloved Reorganization since 1860 are able to bring us safely through another General Conference if their operation is not inhibited by previous commitments as unalterable as the law of the Medes and Persians.

My answer to this challenge briefly stated is:

I do not look for General Conference to take any action by which I cannot “loyally abide.” But until after the coming General Conference reaches its decisions, the only intelligent pledge I can take is to abide by the constitutional law and the decisions which General Conference has already made.

Brother Elbert says:

A clear-cut statement of intention to abide loyally by the decision of the coming General Conference will clarify and stabilize the situation.

How about abiding loyally by the decisions of the past General Conferences? Let us see then that we are loyal to the resolutions we already have, before loudly proclaiming our loyalty to those unborn.

I have not felt unduly alarmed as to the final outcome of the present controversy. The church has had grave problems confronting it in the past, and it will have them in the future. As long as we have the human element as a factor in our religious experiences, we will have differences of opinion, but if we can hold these free from bitterness, in the spirit of toleration and brotherly consideration, we can hope that out of them we shall gather strength. I believe that this work was brought forth by command of God and that he watches over it with a jealous eye. Naught can frustrate his purposes. With this faith burning in my bosom, I move hopefully forward.

Let the Lord Rule

BY JAMES E. YATES

This thing of saying, "Let the people rule," and then asking the people to sum up all their ruling power in one lump budget and deliver their full, final, and last supreme spasm of rulership into hands that demand centralization of supreme control, has its incongruities to say the very least.

Yet, under the plea of willingness to "let the people rule," some are urging the dear people to walk right up to the General Conference polls and vote their platform of ruling rights entirely out from under themselves by conceding what control forces ask for, that thereafter they, the people, will NEVER "presume to issue orders to any man or officer"!

That kind of rulership by the people, where their rule is all wadded up in one gigantic, all-spent, popgun shot, would certainly be a spectacular specimen of government "among the people"!

A writer in HERALD for February 25, under a criticism of my position against such a questionable method of "letting the people rule" as is proposed by men dominated by this dominant control notion, uses these words:

The church whatever the action of the conference must continue as one—in the right if right; to correct the wrong, if in the wrong.

Is this a twin idea to the quotation that might be paraphrased as follows: "The church, may she ever be right; but right or wrong, the church"?

If we get to the place where our distorted loyalty to an organization called the church is greater than our real loyalty to right, then we shall be in danger of fawning before a power which may have been, or may be, to a limited extent an instrument for the Lord and of denying our allegiance to the Lord himself. Think of it! Here the people are urged to stand with whatever action the delegates they send to the conference may take, right or wrong; in the hope that if wrong upon such a vital question as this the wrong may possibly be corrected at some distant, future time!

Here is our brother's argument: Give over supreme control as is asked for, even if it is wrong, if a majority of the delegates can be persuaded to vote for it, and if it is wrong we will hope to "keep on a keepin' on" with the wrong as our powerful working companion in the hope of correcting said wrong in the indefinite sometime! One would surely have to be blessed with a most magnificent development of the organ of hope to be able to hope that a wrong grasping for control, being graciously helped into the saddle under a plea of "Let the people rule," might, later on, relinquish its seat and spurs by the polite invitation: Won't you please come down? Please do!

Such a phrenological hope bump would be as abnormal as it would be unfounded in reason or sanity.

Our brother in referring to the position taken by Elder James E. Yates mentions him as an "intimate conferee" of Elder T. W. Williams.

We submit that to be associated in the fellowship of brotherhood with one whose masterly presentation of a great cause against certain odds of office and position has made him a target for those who misunderstand him, is a matter of some personal pride with the writer; but that there has been a conferring with Apostle T. W. Williams, or any other man, as to the writer's position against this control invasion, is hereby wholly disclaimed. And as with the Apostle Paul when God had made certain things plain to him, I can say that when the matter of this new doctrine began to appear, "immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood" in any of these things. While we are setting our faces like flint against men who may be supposed to be doing this, or that, is it not high time we should also set our faces with as stern a flint against doctrines that have wrought needless disunion and that are potentially destructive? And should such dire doctrines receive the gracious support of those who detect their ingrained wrong, merely because they might possibly be driven in with a naked and possibly unfairly gotten majority? Never!

Our brother proceeds to quote our statements that:

One with God is always a majority. . . . The proposal of, and conflict with, great heresies in all the past has afforded ample reason for just condemnation of wrong majorities, and has glorified right minorities, etc.

But his criticism did not undertake to dispute that, the vital point of our argument. Instead, some needless taking of space is occupied with the minor question as to whether Brigham Young was a minority rider when he secured the Presidency's saddle for his apostate ride to the West. But the fact remains that of those thousands present, or adjacent to the scene of action, all minority opposition to Brigham's sway was nonplussed and the control saddle and spurs were tendered to him.

The people who refused to follow this wrong move, as Joseph Smith says, whether few or many, were the church. And those who were true, waited for the Lord to lead. Were they not right in that? Surely.

Our brother cries against a "split" and regrets that such a thing has been mentioned. We go further: We regret all that with him, and then regret, too, that this control wedge has been forced and driven as far as it has!

None can withdraw this splitting instrument but those who set it, and avert the deplored split. Yet our brethren bemoan the split and continue to pound on the wedge!

Setting Up an Independent Government

We do not know of any who wish to "set up an independent government" as is charged. We do not know of any who propose or desire that, "As Christ did, so they must set up a new church," as the brother charges.

That is a gross misapprehension. If there are any who have desires for increased leadership, it seems most reasonable to believe that they would be asking for increased control rather than for larger democratic liberty.

We believe the Lord should rule, and we pray for grace to obey him, regardless of contrary orders by any man or men. We believe that if the fair and untrammeled expression of the people of this church can be obtained, they will affirm the faith of the old paths and reject these new infractious monstrosity doctrines, and that the church will be blessed in promulgating soul liberty and spiritual peace.

"Who Dares Speak Out?"

Hundreds, brother; here for one!

Our brother states: "The Presidency have said beforetime they will bide the voice of the people."

If the President has said he will continue to serve if he cannot have his own way on the question of control, we have not heard of it.

"Who dares openly say beforehand: I will not obey the voice of the people?" asks our brother. We believe this church is largely made up of folks who will dare to say now, or at any other time, that if they can know the will of the Lord in the matter, they will do it regardless of the voice of any people, "few or many"!

And as to "daring to say, I will lay claim to the property of the church," etc., to insinuate that anyone desires to do such a thing is an unwarrantable surmising. We can conceive that decisions by courts of justice _might_ be necessary to determine where church property rightfully belongs, but to raise the hue and cry that any would desire to employ the civil courts "to defeat the will of the people" is a more serious charge than any of heresy, and of apostasy, that cannot but be considered.

In any event, we plead: _Let the Lord rule_, and follow no way but his way. We dare to declare a determination to do that, whether that means to stand with the "few or the many."

Constitutional Law Again

BY R. S. Salyards

The HERALD of March 4 contains an article, "Our fathers and finance," in which the author misstates the ground taken by me in a series of articles on constitutional law in the Government and in the church. His misstatement of my position is used as a basis upon which to build his thesis. His basis being in error, his argument and conclusions are erroneous. He says:

In the HERALD for October 8, 1924, appears the following statement: "The Constitution of the United States ... separate(s) the department of the chief executive from the department of financial administration."

He avers that this statement "is very misleading"; "it has deceived"; etc. My statement was not as he renders it. It was this:

The Constitution of the United States and the constitutions of the several States separate the department of the chief executive from the department of financial administration. The legislatures make laws and provide appropriations, and the specified departments of government execute the same.

The words omitted by the brother are in italics. Why did he omit them? They have material bearing; they are not irrelevant nor incidental, but vital to the entire meaning. They are part of the statement and were explanatory of the very words upon which the brother bases his criticism. Anyone may build up a criticism upon a clause separated from its connection in a sentence and thus make "much ado about nothing." Is not that method "very misleading"? Has it "deceived"? Does truth require such methods in controversy? Should not the statement have been taken in its entirety? The brother takes but part of what I wrote, ignores its connection, and makes it apply to the Federal state alone, and to but one department of that.

To be frank, the words department of financial administration taken alone and from their setting might be understood to refer to the Treasury Department of the United States. Thus construed they would be faulty. But did I not use the qualifying words, the specified departments of government execute the same?
I did make clear that the law, both national and state, did not place the finances of the Government subject to the supreme directional control of the executive—that was the substance of my statement. The statement, "The legislatures [plural, including those of States] make laws and provide appropriations and the specified departments of government execute the same," is qualifying. It is but a half-statement the brother selects upon which to base his mistaken theories and conclusions and waste his time. My meaning was clear in the light of my complete statement.

But more: My preceding article on "Constitutional law in the United States," HERALD, September 24, after setting forth the division of power into departments, said this:

The division of departments such as War, Navy, Justice, Treasury, etc., are headed by members of his cabinet, who with many government officers are nominated by the President, subject to confirmation by the people through the Senate.

Without doubt the brother read all this in the series; and this was the article referring to government law. Why did he not take my clear meaning and represent me correctly? I did not say that the Treasury Department was not part of the executive department; I did say it was a part of it. I did not state, quoting the words of the brother, "that the President of the United States has nothing to do with government finance." In this he greatly misrepresents my entire articles. I stated the exact contrary, in these words:

It is clear from the revelations that the First Presidency constitute the head of the executive department, having oversight of the entire church. This is acknowledged. But it is also clear that, like the executive Presidency of the United States, their functions are strictly defined and limited and to be exercised according to and strictly within the laws and regulations adopted by the body. Here is a statement and rule signed by President Joseph Smith:

"That the Presidency is the leading quorum in the church. That the duty of presiding over the church devolves on that quorum. That it is the prerogative of the President to preside over the whole church, to bear the responsibility of the care and oversight of the work of the church, in all its different departments, and through the constituted officers of the church in their various callings, according to the laws, rules and regulations in force and recognized by the church.—General Conference Resolution No. 386, par. 7."

The President of the United States cannot set aside or assume the functions of other departments of the Government; neither can the Presidency of the church legally ignore or enroach upon the rights and duties of other departments of the spiritual government.—HERALD, October 8, p. 971.

In opposition to the position taken by the April council, my series of articles made this clear: That before the time of Magna Charta some of the English kings oppressed the people by exacting revenues at will, but that the charter granted that no taxes should be imposed "save by the Common Council of the realm." The big thing was the taking from the king supreme control of state resources, and providing that grants of state moneys should be provided for by Parliament; that from Magna Charta constitutional governament was developed in England; that its later development in America included as its chief and leading feature division of power into departments with accompanying checks and counter-checks, with the legislature, and that body only, granting government finances. It was in this sense, and in this sense only, that my article stated that government finances were safeguarded and made secure from supreme executive control. Both legislative and executive functions were set forth in my treatment of the financial feature of government. The brother himself says:

That is what we aver, hence that no one department is supreme.

The state constitutions, almost if not without exception, provide for direct election of treasurer and auditor, and in instances some of such state officers are elected at different periods, thus removing them entirely from appointment by the executive. The provisions of state constitutions and of state laws are very clear and strong in protecting state finances from executive control.

In refutation of the dogma of supreme directional control we also quoted copiously from Cooley on constitutional law, a recognized authority, cited by attorneys and accepted by courts, and whose texts are used in law schools. We repeat some of the matter formerly presented as making clear our meaning, in refutation of the brother's article:

... The exercise of governmental authority begins with the making of laws, and the other departments execute and administer what the law-making department enacts. For this reason the Constitution, in enumerating the powers which shall be exercised by authority of the general government, confers them in terms upon Congress. But this in legal effect is conferring them upon the United States, and by implication a corresponding executive and judicial power is also given, though to a large extent the exercise of these powers is left to be provided for in the discretion of Congress.—Cooley, Constitutional Law, p. 55.

Appropriations.—The provision that no money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, applies with peculiar force to the President, and is a proper security against the executive assuming unconstitutional powers.—Ibid, p. 120.

... When money is to be paid by the United States, they can be appropriated by Congress alone.—Ibid, p. 175.—HERALD, September 24, 1924.

The brother errs, and seriously, in this statement:
Now, if we discover that this constitution allows the Department of the Treasury to become the direct responsibility of the President.

That is just what the Constitution does not do; it does the very opposite: It makes a provision that is vital to the liberties of the people, and that for which the English people contended—it involves the real point at issue in the present church controversy, viz: The Constitution lodges in the Congress all authority to provide for and to regulate the finances of the Government. Under its constitutional powers Congress created the Treasury Department and enacted the laws which govern its administration.

Of this Cooley says:

Much of the executive authority comes not from the Constitution, but from statute, and what is thus given may at any time be taken away.—Cooley, p. 177.

Is the President supreme in executive authority, under this provision, when much of his power is by grant from Congress?

The Congress is thus authorized by the Constitution:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States.—Art. 1, Sec. 1.

But my statement, even as rendered or misquoted, is still correct. The Constitution of the United States does separate the financial administration from the department of the chief executive, in this:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.—Art. 1, Sec. 7.

The Congress shall have power, to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts . . .

To borrow money on the credit of the United States . . .

To coin money . . .

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.—Art. 1, Sec. 8.

No money shall be drawn from the treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law.—Sec. 9.

The Constitution does not place with the executive department any of the powers named above; it places with Congress the power to provide and the enactment of laws to regulate the collection and disbursement of all finances.

The law is thus supreme, not any department or officer. The Constitution provides this oath or affirmation shall be taken by the President:

I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.—Art. 2, Sec. 1.

He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.—Sec. 3.

The Congress has created the executive departments, Treasury, War, and others and has prescribed the methods of their administration. Thus the chief executive in the administrative line is limited by regulations.

Beard, in American Government and Politics, says:

Whatever may be the theory about the separation of powers and the independence of the executive, it remains a fact that the executive departments and their principal officers "are the creatures of the laws of Congress, exercising only such powers and performing only such duties as those laws prescribe."

The Cabinet is not the mere retinue of the President; the Cabinet taken as a body is not merely the official family of the President. We impose duties every day during the session of Congress by law upon the Cabinet officers which it is beyond the power of the President by any instruction of his to pretermit obedience to. The Constitution recognizes Cabinet officers. It deals with them or characterizes them as "Heads of Departments." It authorizes us—and when I say us, I mean Congress—to vest in them the appointment of inferior officers; and in the discharge of that function they are as independent of the order or control of the President, theoretically at least, as if they were entirely independent of the President in other respects. The statute books are full of duties imposed and orders made by the Congress to be executed by this member of the Cabinet, or that member, or the other.—American Government and Politics, pp. 200, 201.

The brother continues to err egregiously; one of his subheadings is this: "The Treasury the President's Trust." He says:

The heads of the various departments are responsible to the President for their cabinet trust, and to him alone. With this Congress has nothing to do. These under executives are the servants of the President.

How is the Treasury the President's trust? Is it responsible "to him alone"? Congress created it as a department and provides regulations to govern it. The Supreme Court also decides matters affecting the Treasury. It is rather the trust of the Government. The Senate joins in appointment of the Secretary of the Treasury; the President's responsibility in appointing is divided with the Senate.

United States Statutes

Let us see what the United States Statutes provide, under "Executive Departments." Section 234 of Compiled Statutes for 1918 provides a salary for the "head" of each department. Section 235 reads:

The head of each department is authorized to prescribe regulations, not inconsistent with the law, for the government of his department, and the conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use and preservation of the records, papers and property appertaining to it.

Time does not permit close scrutiny, but casual search of the entire chapter on "Executive departments" fails to disclose more than one or two references to the President, and that relating to vacancies. There is nothing that favors the idea that the whole personnel are servants or agents of the President. On the contrary, reason and common sense say they are servants of the Government.

Section 258. The disbursing clerks authorized by law in the several departments shall be appointed by the heads [secretaries of the cabinet] of the respective departments, etc.

Nothing here about the President being in absolute control; and even bonds for faithful performance, etc., are to run to "the United States," and in such amounts as "shall be directed by the Secretary of the Treasury," etc.

In section 275 we find that the "head of each department shall make annual report to [the President? No.] Congress," a detailed statement.

How about the brother's theory, "With this matter Congress has nothing to do"? But we continue:

And he shall require of the disbursing officers, acting under his direction and authority, etc.

Section 283 A to the end of the chapter are war measures enlarging the powers of the President, which expired six months after termination of war, hence do not apply. The second section makes numerous provisions authorizing the Secretary and in some instances gives him right to delegate to other employees "the control and expenditure of various appropriations"—no mention that he is to be controlled by the President.

On the contrary we quote section 381, "General duties of Secretary":

The Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, digest and prepare plans for the improvement and management of the revenue, and for the support of the public credit; shall superintend the collection of the revenue; shall, from time to time, prescribe the forms of keeping and rendering all public accounts and making returns; shall grant, under the limitations herein established, or to be hereafter provided, all warrants for money to be issued from the Treasury in pursuance of appropriations by law; shall make report, and give information to the President? No.] to either branch of the legislature in person or in writing, as may be required, respecting all matters referred to him by the Senate or House of Representatives, or which shall appertain to his office; and generally shall perform all such services relative to the finances as he shall be directed to perform.

The mention of the various divisions indicates the importance and variety of the duties coming under this department. The Secretary is charged with the entire management of the national finances. He submits annually to Congress estimates of the probable revenues and disbursements of the Government, prepares plans for the improvement of the revenue and for the support of the public credit, and superintends the collection of the revenue. The Comptroller passes upon all claims against the Government and accounts received from the auditors. Six auditors examine and adjust account relating to the expenditures of the various branches of the Government.—Right and Duties of American Citizenship, Willoughby, p. 221.

Section 382. Collection of Duties.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall direct the superintendence of the collection of the duties on imports... as he shall judge best.

Section 386 provides that he shall make annual reports to Congress. Other sections provide for other officers, Comptroller, etc., to be appointed by the President, some on recommendation of the Secretary, when appointed to be agents of and to be under direction and control of the Secretary, and not under the President.

We are not acquainted with all the writers quoted by the brother, but we could quote from some of them to the detriment of his views. We are quoting the statutes of the United States, not school texts on civics. The United States Statutes are authoritative and direct. The brother has drawn unwarranted conclusions from his authors. Very probably they were not confused, as the brother is, between the limited constitutional grants to the President and the specific grants made by Congress. The Secretaries of departments are by no means merely servants of the President. They are agents of the Government, functioning under definite laws; and the power of the President is confined to his constitutional right to "take care that the laws are faithfully executed," and to that only, unless Congress has given him specific duties in regard to the work of the departments.

He cites a work on American Government to the effect that the President executes the law by which revenues are collected, etc, and concludes that the President collects them. If he does, which we deny, it is according to statutes under the direction of Congress, and not by direct constitutional provision. For example, section 492 of the statutes reads:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have general superintendence of the assessment and collection of all duties and taxes now or hereafter imposed by any law providing internal revenue.

After this, is it not astonishing to read this statement of the brother:

Please note that the vast responsibility of these enormous collections, as well as expenditures, do not belong to the Secretary of the Treasury, but to the President. The only responsibility the Secretary has in these matters is that of acting as the servant of the chief executive. He must obey the President's orders or be relieved of his trust. Of course, where Congress has placed a specific task upon the Secretary, aside from his regular administrative responsibilities, he must in this matter be subordinate to Congress. Such instances, however, are few. The great burden of his responsibilities and his primary duty is to the President, and not to Congress.

In the light of the evidence already presented, almost every statement in the foregoing is directly contrary to the facts or the law in the matter. It indicates how far from the truth in letter and in principle is the theory of supreme directional control—how misleading it is. We have shown the powers of Congress in the matter named, and which entirely refute the foregoing statement.

In juxtaposition to the brother’s statement, we quote the following decision by the Supreme Court:

The executive power is vested in a President; and so far as his powers are derived from the Constitution, he is beyond the reach of any other department, except in the mode prescribed by the Constitution through the impeaching power. But it by no means follows, that every officer in every branch of that department is under the exclusive direction of the President. Such a principle, we apprehend, is not, and certainly cannot be claimed by the President. There are certain political duties imposed upon many officers in the executive department, the discharge of which is under the direction of the President. But it would be an alarming doctrine, that Congress cannot impose upon any executive officer any duty they may think proper, which is not repugnant to any rights secured and protected by the Constitution; and in such cases, the duty and responsibility grow out of and are subject to the control of the law, and not to the direction of the President. And this is emphatically the case, where the duty enjoined is of a mere ministerial character.—Kendall versus United States, 12 Pet. (U. S.), 524, 610, 9 L. ed. 1181.

That is our position. In this connection we quote from Washington’s Farewell Address:

Towards the preservation of your Government, and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite not only that you steadily discontinue irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking, in a free country, should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres; avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism.

He errs again and misses the mark in regard to the new budget system. The writer whom he quoted, Advanced Civics, in the first words used by the brother, says: “In 1921 Congress passed an act,” etc. How can he err in the light of such plain statement? Certainly the President has powers concerning the budget system, because Congress so provided.

Appointments and Removals

He proceeds to inflate the powers of the President by arguing that he controls the vast sums paid to government employees, because, forsooth, he has appointing powers to office and place. As shown above, the President nor anyone in the departments can authorize the payment of one cent unless by law enacted by Congress. Political power he has, but actual and real control, personally, over the funds of Government, he has none whatever.

He seeks to maintain his extreme views by reference to the appointing powers of the President, under which he concludes that the President may remove any officer appointed by him.

To be brief, the President nominates an enumerated list of officers “by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.” The Senate is thus joined with the President in such appointments, for an official nominated is not appointed until confirmed. Has this branch of Congress “nothing to do” in this matter? Thousands of government officers and employees are now appointed under Civil Service laws passed by Congress to correct abuses in appointments, for the Constitution states:

Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. (Art. 2, sec. 2.)

Has Congress “nothing to do” in this matter of persons appointed to department positions? Are they “responsible to the President for their cabinet trust, and to him alone”? Are they “servants to the President”?

Congress has not only provided the laws governing administration of the executive departments, but it continues to investigate and to regulate them. The Senate committees on Foreign Relations, Judiciary, Commerce, Finance, Appropriations, etc., and the House Committees on Ways and Means, and others, have “to do” with all departments. The Senate Committee which investigated the great oil scandal connected with several departments forced the resignation and removal of members of the cabinet. The House is at the present time investigating “claimed fraudulent procedure in the Bureau of Engraving of the Treasury Department.” “Comprehensive audit of the public debt was recommended to-day by a majority of the House Committee”—Washington press item, March 3.

Much is claimed by the writer concerning power of the President to remove appointive officers. Of this Cooley says, previously quoted by me:

The President has power to fill all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session. But he cannot by removals make vacancies in order that he may fill them.—Cooley, p. 119.

The question of removal from office by the President is an open question. It is now under consideration by the Supreme Court, according to a Washington item dated January 3, which we cite. It is the Myers case, now pending before the United States Supreme Court involving the right of the President to discharge or summarily

remove from political office any official whatever. . . . Because the case involves the right of Congress to participate in the designation and removal of public officials through confirmation of presidential nominations by the United States Senate, it is possible that the Supreme Court will be asked to hear an argument made on behalf of Congress before the case now pending is decided . . . . Senator Albert B. Cummings, of Iowa, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said to-day that Chief Justice William Howard Taft had called to his attention the bearing of the case on the power of the Senate to approve or reject presidential nominations, and that later Attorney General Harlan F. Stone and Solicitor General James M. Beck had discussed the question with him, etc.

The time limit has required haste in making up this paper, which could be greatly strengthened. Suffice it to say that the quotation that the President "can stand beside the public treasury, with one arm plunged deep into its vaults, while the other distributes the golden store to a horde of officeholders," and the stream of millions of money flowing through the White House, etc., and the inference concerning the Reserve Banking System, an institution authorized and regulated by Congress—all this is far-fetched and beside the point at issue. It belongs to the realm of dreamland and not to that of fact. It is both raw and overdone, and thus defeats its purpose.

Willoughby, Rights and Duties of American Citizenship, says this:

The essence of constitutional government is, then, the strict legal accountability of public officials for the manner in which their public authority is exercised.—Page 80.

It is found by experience that it is a natural tendency and desire of those in power to extend their authority to its utmost limit, and that if too much authority be given to any one official, he will be able either to use his power corruptly and oppressively without danger of being brought to account, or he will be sufficiently strong to seize absolute control of the government, disregard all constitutional limitations, and transform himself into a despot. Furthermore, it has been demonstrated that lawmaking bodies, even though elected by the people, and responsible to them, and actuated by good intentions, cannot always be trusted to act wisely . . . .

For these two reasons—the danger of despotism, and of hasty, unwise legislation on the part of the legislator, there have been introduced in all modern constitutional governments systems of what are called "checks and balances."—Page 82.

In the light of the very extreme views of the brother concerning the centralizing of great power in the head of the executive department, it is interesting to note one of his closing sentences:

And while we pray, let us recognize the administrative function of our church government as centering in the office of the Presidency all our activities as a people.

He follows this with a statement of assurance which by no means assures. The statement quoted is very significant indeed!

Since writing the foregoing, Washington press items report extensive investigations of the Income Tax Bureau of the Treasury Department by a Senate Committee headed by Senator Couzens, of Michigan. The discussion has resulted in sharp and sensational differences between the Senate Committee and Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, which are attracting national attention. Senator Couzens states that the matter will be probed to the bottom. Senator Carter Glass, author of the Federal Reserve Banking System Act, and former Secretary of the Treasury, has come out in favor of the Couzens committee.

Further: In one of the most striking debates in years, on the subject of confirmation of a nomination by the President, the Senate, on March 10, after repeated consideration, refused to confirm the name of Charles B. Warren, of Michigan, nominated by President Coolidge for the cabinet post of Attorney General. Thus this question is before the Government at the same time it is being considered by us. How about the theory that with such matters "Congress has nothing to do"?

The High Council and the Problem

Inasmuch as my promised article on the High Council has been crowded out by demands upon the HERALD, I state in brief some leading principles in an answer to an article in HERALD of September 24, 1924. The writer states that the issues involved in this present controversy should be decided by that council, for these reasons, among others: That Doctrine and Covenants 104: 35 provides that "the most important business of the church" should be decided by the High Council. That it is "the supreme court of the church." That Joseph Smith the Seer stated in his history that, having organized the High Council, he should be taken away, the mind and will of the Lord could be obtained through it upon all important matters pertaining to the building up of Zion.

Section 99, Minutes of the High Council, makes the High Council the final court of appeal in such "cases" to which it specifically refers—cases between parties, tried by lower courts. In this function the High Council is the supreme court. It has jurisdiction also in trial of certain officers named (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 11).

The statement in 104: 35 itself makes clear the words, the most important business of the church, by the words which follow. The statement of the law is this: "The most important business of the church, and the most difficult cases of the church, inasmuch as there is not satisfaction upon the decision of the bishop, it shall be handed over and carried up to the council of the church," etc. It is clear that the business referred to is business that has been in litigation before the bishop's court—not such important business as is now before us.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

It was claimed by some in 1892-1894 that the High Council should direct the Bishop in his administration. But when the Lord spoke he said:

Nevertheless, that portion of that commandment which made it the duty of the high council to assist in looking after the poor and the needy of the church, was not intended to put the high council over the bishop in the administration of the affairs of his office and calling, except as they might do so in an advisory manner, and in such way that no one of the poor and the needy should be neglected; nor was it designed that the high council should dictate in the matter of purchasing lands, building houses of worship, building up the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the people, these last named being within the province of the presidency, the twelve as a quorum, the councils or other officers of the branches or stakes where houses of worship are to be built, the conferences and the general assembly of the church, and the direction of the Lord by revelation. The high council could not in justice dictate to the bishop in direction in any of these matters and then try and condemn and punish him if he did not obey.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.

If the council could not thus dictate, its presidents could not do so. If it was not permitted in 1894, it should not be permitted in 1925. In that statement the Lord himself settled the question of supreme directional control.

The High Council does not pass upon the constitutionality of law enacted by the General Conference, as does the Supreme Court upon law enacted by Congress. It is not denied that it decides points of law involved in matters which it adjudicates. The three presiding councils, the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, and the General Assembly "decide concerning the law in the church articles and Covennants." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11; 117: 9; 119: 7; 120: 4; 122: 6, 9, 10; 124: 4; 126: 10, etc.)

Joseph Smith the Seer is credited with the statecment cited from the history, under date of 1834.
Later in the history he is quoted as stating that inasmuch as his life had been preserved, other work was required at his hands. The Quorums of the Twelve and Seventy had not been brought into existence in 1834. Before the institution of the traveling, presiding councils named, the High Council as an advisory council could have acted as stated by the Seer, in an emergency. But when the Twelve and Seventy were constituted, in 1835, those quorums functioned with the Presidency in matters of general importance involving decision, as above.

FAITHFUL WORK BEING DONE IN ENGLAND

Faithful Work Being Done in England

ENFIELD, MIDDLESEX, ENGLAND, January 31.—The year
1924 has now passed into history, and like most other years it has left its mark behind it. During the past year the branch has made great strides along spiritual lines, although our numbers are small. Out of a total population of 60,000 inhabitants in Enfield, which number is increasing yearly, our branch numbers only 42, some of whom are disinterested and do not attend our meetings. However, God has promised that the time shall come when our little hall will be filled.
While looking forward for that time we realize much depends on us to hasten it. The ministry must sow and reap while there is yet opportunity.

The musical side of our work in this portion of the vineyard has given us no cause for worry, and we are reputed to have some of the best singers of any of the branches in the British Isles. We thank God for this, for we realize that he has bestowed upon us these talents.

We have a small orchestra, consisting of three violins and organ, which plays regularly at our services. For this we are indebted to Brother William Goullee, who has put his whole heart into the work as district chorister. His efforts have not been without their reward, for although the orchestra is small and they have not reached perfection, we feel that God looks upon it with favor. We are now endeavoring to form a choir.

We mean to go forward at Enfield and endeavor to serve God more fully than in the past. We trust that God's Spirit may rest upon all his people, that they may be found with their lamps trimmed and ready.

The conference of Southern England District convened at Enfield January 17 and 18, and resulted in spiritual blessings to all who were permitted to attend. Our visitor for two days was Elder Abel Hall of Manchester.

The business session was held on the 17th at six o'clock, at which time the usual business was transacted, including the election of various officers. Three brethren were chosen to represent the district at the coming General Conference.
A good time was spent, and we adjourned until the following day.

Sunday will be remembered by all as a splendid time spent in God's house. At the morning service Mr. Tucker, a young man of much promise, was baptized by Elder J. A. Judd.
The speaker was Brothet A. T. Trapp of Gloucester, who delivered a very interesting address to the Saints.

In the afternoon a prayer and testimony meeting was held, which proved to be a spiritual feast. The confirmation of the baptismal candidate took place, and later in the meeting this brother testified that he had received the Holy Ghost.
The sacrament was partaken of in the spirit of unity, and the prayers and testimonies of the Saints proved that one and all been blessed.

At the evening service the time from a quarter after six to a quarter of seven was devoted entirely to music. The small Enfield Branch orchestra, under the able leadership of Brother Goullee, played several selections, while vocal num-ers were sung by Brothers Arthur Oakman and William Worth. The preaching which followed was by Brother Hall, and was powerful and inspiring.

Altogether the conference was a very enjoyable one, and the Spirit of God was with us all through.

DOVER ALMA JUDD, Secretary.

West Pullman Branch Dedicates Church

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, February 18.—After holding services in a hall for over twenty-five years, a small number of Saints have created a one-story frame building on cement foundation with a basement. The ladies' aid has sacrificed much and labored patiently and untiringly for many years. This little branch has passed through many trials and stormy periods, and we are truly grateful to our heavenly Father that a few have by their faithfulness been able to pass through it all.

Our church was dedicated February 15, and our hearts were filled with pride and satisfaction that the time had come when we could open our new building. Services were held all day, with a splendid program arranged by the district president, John L. Cooper. The sermons morning and evening were delivered by Patriarchs Richard Baldwin and W. A. McDowell. They certainly were blessed with the Spirit of God, and large audiences were present at both services. Central Branch nobly responded in the call to come over and help us, bringing their full choir with them. Many Saints from the First Branch were also with us; also some visitors from DeKalb, Mission, and Plano Branches. The beautiful spirit that was present during the whole day truly demonstrated that the Lord was pleased and is mindful of his people.

At the prayer and testimony meeting in the afternoon the Lord spoke through Brother Baldwin to Brothers Cooper and McDowell, and also to the Saints.

At the Religio session Sisters Baldwin and Shea gave short talks, and at the different services several beautiful solos were given.

After the evening service six adults and three children were administered to under the hands of Elders Baldwin, Cooper, Keir, and Oliver.

Large crowds were present at all the services, and the church was packed.

We pray that the Father may watch over us and that the spirit of unity and love may abide with us.

CHARLES E. COTTON.

Fall River, Massachusetts

February 18.—All felt the influence of the Spirit of God at the February sacramental service. The membership was spoken to in prophecy, also several individuals and one non-member.

Prayer services are at present being held in the homes. Last week the meeting was at the home of Moses Sheehy, and this week at Pastor James W. Heap's. Only a few have attended these services during the winter.

The priesthood meetings will be held from now on the first Sunday of each month, previous to the evening meeting.

The visiting speakers for the month have been: Bishop M. C. Fisher and Patriarch John D. Suttill. Brother Fisher spoke to the primary department and to the individual classes of the main school about the law of tithing. Several children have commenced to pay their tithing as a result of this talk. Brother Fisher's sermons were appreciated by all. In the evening he spoke longer than usual, because his train did not leave until ten o'clock. He thought it more profitable to speak to the people than to wait at the depot. All enjoyed listening to him. During the afternoon he visited as many of the sick and aged as possible.

Brother Suttill was the speaker the evening of February 15. He was unable to come in the morning, but promises to give us a full day later on. Some were heard to say that he was a good old-fashioned gospel sermon. It was stormy that night, so there was not as large an attendance as usual. Brother Suttill is well liked in Fall River.

Pastor James W. Heap, Elder John E. Rogerson, and Deacon Alma M. Coombs have been recent speakers at New Bedford, Massachusetts. James, the oldest son of the pastor, has been very ill with appendicitis but at this writing is improving.

The Temple Builders are preparing a play to be given in April. Class 3 in the Sunday school will give a supper March 7 for the benefit of the Christmas offering. Doctor John Gilbert is the teacher.

Eastern Michigan District

The few Saints in Huron Center Branch are still striving to do the work of God in this part of God's vineyard. We had a wonderful meeting on February 8. Being unable to meet at the church, we gathered at the home of Brother and Sister Lewis Richards. The Spirit was there in abundance, and several were spoken to, and upon leaving all felt encouraged to press on. We can surely say that God has blessed us in the days that are past and gone. Often when we have gathered in our little church for worship, he has come from his high dwelling place to speak to us, for which we have been thankful. It makes my heart glad, for it gives me greater desire to serve my Master.

There are several young people in our branch who are surely striving to do God's will. We started having young people's prayer meeting, which we all enjoyed, but on account of the bad roads we were unable to meet together, as the Saints here are scattered. All will rejoice when we can meet together again at the church.

We hold Religio for the young people, the Oriole Circle for the girls, and the Department of Women in our branch, and although we are few in number, we hope to be faithful and so live before our associates that they may be led to a knowledge of the gospel.

I am a girl sixteen years of age. I have been in the church four years and have never regretted the step I took, though I do regret that I have not been as faithful as I should have been. I want to press on and strive to be more pure before God in the future than I have been in the past. I desire an interest in the prayers of the Saints to this end. Pray also for the Saints of our branch, that all may ever strive to do God's will and be united.

Ella Carpenter.

Fresno, California

A very good local attendance was materially increased by visiting Saints from Tulare, Dinuba, and other surrounding territory on February 8, when Elder V. B. Etzenhouser, pastor of the Berkeley Branch, came down and conducted a rally day meeting at Fresno.

Following the regular Sunday school, which was conducted by the local officers, the rally day services proper were opened with a very fine prayer service presided over by the local and visiting elders, Brother Etzenhouser occupying the president's chair and giving the opening address.

At noon, as well as in the evening, an excellent lunch was served in the dining room by the sisters of the congregation, which was provided by themselves and visiting members in an old-fashioned manner. The lunch was free.

At two o'clock Brother Etzenhouser's sermon on "A new religious concept" was greatly appreciated by an attentive congregation. After this service a priesthood meeting was held in the dining room, where important local matters were discussed and a better understanding had.

In the Religio service at six o'clock Sister Lillie Jennings

and her coworkers did themselves proud in furnishing entertainment for the rally day occasion.

As a fitting close to the day's services Brother Etzenhouser, in an enthusiastic and forceful manner, launched forth into the social and economic phases of our religion. He first called attention to the failure of various colonization schemes, attributing such failures to the fact that God had not been associated in these cooperative endeavors. He also declared that "sons of God" functioning under the law of God, which is the law of stewardships, must and will ultimately establish a condition which will bring peace, happiness, and salvation to mankind—Zion.

Gray's Harbor Branch

ABERDEEN, WASHINGTON, February 21.—The work of the Lord is progressing nicely, and the attendance for a year has increased wonderfully. Saints are trying to obey the commands of the Lord to warn their neighbors as they have been warned, and as a result numbers have been and are to be added to our flock.

We have all the departments organized except the Department of Recreation and Expression, and it is planned to organize this work as soon as possible. The Oriole girls held an entertainment in the community hall in the city of Hoquiam the evening of February 14. An enjoyable time was had despite the fact that many of the Saints were preparing to attend district conference.

Four carloads of Saints from this branch attended the conference of the Seattle and British Columbia District at Centralia February 14 and 15. It proved to be a spiritual treat for the Harbor Saints to hear Apostles Roy S. Budd and D. T. Williams. The Department of Women there served free meals to all the visitors. The hospitality of these Saints is hard to equal.

Chatham, Ontario

February 23.—Our branch prayer meetings since the last report have been of a higher order. The branch president, Brother Clatworthy, has been conducting meetings personally and has been impressing on the Saints the necessity of praying and testifying vocally. The Saints have responded very well, and as a result our prayer services are getting better each week. Brother Clatworthy also has requested the Saints to come fasting each Sunday, and this, too, has had its effect.

The Religio had an attendance contest between the Reds and the Blues, the men being Reds and the women the Blues. The women won out, with the result that the men have to treat them next Friday evening. The attendance has been fine, there being seventy-five present last meeting. We have a Religio paper called The Enlightener, which is read each month. Instead of an editorial, some member is asked to write an autobiography of his life, which has proved to be very interesting. The Religio also has a court, with a judge, prosecuting attorney, and all the other officers. Members who commit offense are brought before the judge, and after the case is argued the judge sentences the party to take part in the program the following Friday evening.

One week ago the Religio had a Book of Mormon crossword puzzle drawn on the blackboard, which was very interesting. All the words were taken from the Book of Mormon, and it proved to be a fine way of conducting the lesson.

On February 15 the district officers held a meeting in Chatham, at which Brother J. C. Dent of Bothwell was the speaker.

The Sunday school is also progressing, an average attendance of seventy-five or eighty being maintained. Christmas offering to the amount of $121.55 was raised last year, and we expect to increase it this year.

A baby boy, Gordon, has come to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Vernard Pritchard.

Toledo, Ohio

February 23.—We are still striving to labor for the Master. On February 1 one of our former elders, Brother Wismer, from Windsor, Ontario, came, remaining about two weeks. He did much good in advising and strengthening the Saints where possible.

We were favored with a visit from Brother Gomer T. Griffths on February 8, and he preached both morning and evening. Monday he went to Oak Harbor, Ohio, but returned again Wednesday evening, at which time we had preaching instead of prayer service. At this time he gave several new pointers on the Word of Wisdom, for which we are thankful. We hope that February 11 found him in Bradner, Ohio, since this was according to his schedule.

Brother Halb, district missionary, was with us last fall for a little over a week, but poor attendance forbade his staying here longer. We were sorry he could not stay, for this was the first series of meetings we have had since Brother J. F. Curtis was here in December, 1922.

We also were visited by Brother J. A. Gillen when he was in these parts, and his presence and sermons were very much enjoyed.

Great interest is being shown in Religio than has been for some time. We are glad to note this, and find the Book of Mormon very interesting under our able instructor, Brother Bethel.

Bevier Branch Mourns Death of a Friend

BEVIER, MISSOURI, February 24.—Our heart is filled with grief and sadness as we write this letter, for Doctor Lee O. Mason, with whom we have made our home for many years, died very suddenly February 23. Thursday night he suffered a complete collapse while attending a patient in his office. He was carried to his home and then had to be taken to hospital. He suffered another attack from which he died instantly. Probably none in the history of this community has the death of any person caused such universal sorrow. He was noted for his big-heartedness and his generosity to the poor and those in distress. It is the verdict of all that he gave his life for suffering humanity, responding to calls in all kinds of weather even when not in a physical condition to go. During his twenty years of practice here he was the first to greet some two thousand souls on their arrival in this world. His breakdown began during the influenza epidemic of 1918, when for three weeks he scarcely had time to remove his clothes.

Doctor Mason was not a member of the church, but he was always a defender of it. His wife was raised in the church, being a daughter of Elder John T. Williams, whose hymns are familiar in the church. He was known to many of the missionaries of the church who have enjoyed the hospitality of his home, and many in Kansas City and Independence, as well as other places, will remember him.

The funeral was held at the Congregational church, which is the largest building in town, Elder J. W. A. Bailey conducting the religious service and the Knights Templar the fraternal services.

The names of Elder W. B. Richards and wife and son David have been transferred to Kansas City Stake. All were among our most active workers in all departments. Sister Ellen Tanner was transferred to Des Moines, Sister Mary Wild to Chicago, and Sisters Bessie Howell and Ethel Cooley and the latter's son to Macon.

J. L. WILLIAMS.

San Bernardino, California

To say that the Saints of the San Bernardino Branch are enjoying their church life in a blessed sweetness of spiritual association is not an exaggeration.

The Spirit of the Lord is surely blessing us in the fellowship of his holy communion. The people here have not been unattentive to the issues of the lively controversy which is before the whole church but have not permitted this to separate in fellowship or to impede our work together here.

The Southern California district conference was held here on Saturday, January 31, and Sunday, February 1. There was a healthy discussion of all matters of importance coming before the conference. Active minorities plead zealously for their views on matters under consideration, and every debated measure was carried to its conclusion by large majorities.

A free and untrammeled delegation was elected to represent the district at the coming General Conference. Some who are instructed delegates from our sister district on the north were nominated to represent the Southern California District also, but the people here preferred an un instructed delegation and therefore did not elect these nominees.

Provisions were made for the organization of three new branches adjacent to the Central Los Angeles Branch.

After the business of the conference was all over, the high mark of spiritual sermons and services that followed, and the liberal free will offering of over seventy dollars, registered the expression of good will and general good feeling that prevailed.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

February 24.—Philadelphia has enjoyed for two weeks past a great spiritual feast in a series of meetings at which the principal speaker was Apostle J. A. Gillen. These meetings were well attended. He is a most forceful speaker, and many were impressed by his eloquence and earnestness, and were made to realize as never before the importance of the work of the Master and the necessity for them to do their share. It is regretted that a larger number could not hear the message, and while nearly 6,000 tracts were distributed at the homes near the church, and window cards were placed in prominent places, it seems as if worldliness is so rampant that comparatively few people are interested in the serious things of life. However, the Saints are not discouraged, and compared with previous special meetings, those just held were a great success.

The choir deserves mention for the creditable way they attended in numbers each service and furnished anthems and special features.

On the Saturday and Sunday immediately following this series the regular conference of New York and Philadelphia District was held, February 21 and 22. Attendance was good from different sections of the district, and there were also present Patriarch A. E. Stone, Missionary W. R. Wirebaugh, and Elder J. A. Jaques on Sunday. Considerable business was transacted by the conference, and officers for the coming year were elected, Brother Ephraim Squire again being chosen president. General Conference delegates were chosen: John Zimmermann, sr., C. E. Irwin, A. E. Stoft, Minnie D. Gates, A. E. Stone, R. J. Hawkins, W. R. Wirebaugh, A. McIntosh, Anna D. Zimmermann, John M. Cumming, Samuel Worrel, and Thomas Carr.

The Department of Women had charge of furnishing meals for visitors, and under the able direction of Sister Zimmermann, supervisor, was most successful.

Bradner, Ohio

February 26.—Elder Gomer T. Griffiths, of Columbus, Ohio, began a series of illustrated lectures at the local church on February 21, continuing for one week. Brother Griffiths has traveled extensively during his service of sixty years, having crossed the ocean seven times, visiting nearly all of the foreign countries and islands of the sea. His lectures were mostly on historical facts and places spoken of in ancient history. Old songs were sung and beautifully pictured on the screen at each meeting. We were sorry he could not remain with us a longer time.

The Department of Women will open their new library with appropriate services Friday evening, March 6, at the local church. District President Franklin Slye will make the address.

Elder E. L. Ulrich returned to his missionary work in Illinois on February 24, concluding a two-week visit with his family here.

Kirtland District Conference Peaceful

Saturday, February 28, the conference of the Kirtland District convened at Barberton, Ohio. The District President, Elder T. G. Neville, called the assembly to order at 11.30, and after the regular preliminaries the organization of conference was expeditiously completed. The presidency consisted of T. G. Neville, Charles Fry, and G. T. Griffiths.

Following the routine business of the district, the following delegates to General Conference were chosen: T. G. Neville, G. T. Griffiths, A. E. Stone, A. R. Manchester, Charles Fry, F. J. Ebeling, E. A. Webbe, F. H. Kelsey, James McConnaughy, and William Patterson.

Selection of the district officers resulted in the choosing of the following: District president, T. G. Neville; secretary-treasurer, Sister Edna Rhodes; chorister, Charles Romig; superintendent of Department of Women, Sister Bes sie Neville; superintendent of Recreation and Expression, Brother Gintz; superintendent and assistant superintendent respectively of Sunday school, Elders J. W. Sherman and Ira Kelsey.

The main speakers at the conference were Bishop Charles Fry and Evangelist G. T. Griffiths. The former spoke to a capacity house Saturday evening on the principle of eternal judgment. He pointed out the universality of law—its blessings and retributions. In his very characteristic manner Elder G. T. Griffiths addressed a large gathering of Saints Sunday morning.

Standing room only remained at half past two Sunday, when the presidency took charge of what proved a very beneficial sacramental service. An assuring peace pervaded the assembly. Two children who had been baptized in the forenoon were confirmed at this service.

Preaching at the Sunday evening service was by Elder William Patterson.

The gift of music and song was greatly evidenced throughout the conference. Brother Romig of Barberton wielded the baton, and under his leadership the congregational singing, orchestra numbers, and choral renditions were both pleasing and inspiring. The vocal solos were musical sermons delivered by cultivated voices. We feel to speak especially of the vocal renditions of Sister E. Haynes, of Lake-wood, Ohio, and Brother Clifford Green, of Canton, Ohio. The latter has a promising baritone voice, which we hope will be further cultivated and offered as a contribution to the church.

The visitors are very appreciative of the Barberton Saints for the royal entertainment received. Meals, which were prepared in the basement, were served by the local members and paid for on the voluntary offering plan.

Glasgow, Montana

March 1.—Splendid activity continues in all lines of church work in this branch. The Religio programs have been attractive, and the attendance peaked 102 on February 20. At this time the girls' dramatic class, in charge of Mrs. Grace Dow, gave the program—two one-act plays, with a reading and a quartet number.

Since the first of the year one night a month is given to social activities. The evening of February 27, 67 were present in spite of the fact that a musical recital was being given at the high school.

On February 14 a Valentine and radio party was held at the home of Branch President James C. Page. A general invitation to all members and friends of the church was extended, and a good many responded.

The preaching during the month has been done by three local brothers of the priesthood: Elders E. D. Chase and James C. Page, and Priest Joseph Sandidge. The attendance has been above the average.

The Sunday school is keeping well apace. Teachers' meetings are held every Sunday after Sunday school except the first Sunday in the month, when sacramental service is held. The branch officers are doing more visiting of late, and good results are evident. Our branch president expects to attend General Conference.

The correspondent has asked a nonmember to write the news report next month, so HERALD readers will have an opportunity to know what one of our friends has to say of us.

Springfield, Missouri

March 3.—Perhaps it would do your readers good to know that the Springfield Branch is awake to the possibilities that lie before us.

Our last district conference held at Springfield was the best we have had for some time, and we were favored in having with us Patriarch F. A. Smith, who remained two weeks; and through his visit we feel all have received a new vision of the work, and the fruits have especially developed in the prayer meetings.

It is indeed gratifying to see the young people of the branch take active part; and we feel we are blessed in having with us Brother J. B. Ansley as pastor, who fits in all departments of the church work and is loved and honored by all who know him; and all felt the perfect leadership shown by his untiring efforts, in which he devoted his entire time during those two weeks to making the meetings a success.

We cannot help but think of the wonderful possibilities that lie before us in the Southern Missouri District, in the coming of the good roads to Missouri. Springfield is located in a network of roads connecting all parts of the State, which will make it possible to get to the different branches in a few hours by automobile; and to almost any part of the State in one day. We expect some day to have the best reunion grounds in the church, centrally located in the district. Our climate, scenery, and other gifts of nature are especially attractive to tourists in the summer. The Ozark region is known as the playgrounds of the Middle West, the Land of a Million Smiles, and it is estimated that 40,000 tourists pass through Springfield each year.

Francis Bishop.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

Central Branch

March 2.—On Thursday evening, February 5, after choir practice, a number of choir members surprised Brother J. F. Martin by stopping in at the home of Sister Mattison, where he was spending the evening, and serenading him. A very pleasant hour was spent in music and readings, Brother Martin contributing his share to the entertainment. Brother Martin has won the hearts of the Council Bluffs Saints, especially the young people, and will be very welcome whenever he finds opportunity to visit us.

Another welcome visitor was Bishop C. J. Hunt, of Independence, Missouri, who spoke to us at the Central Church Wednesday evening, February 4, in place of the usual prayer meeting, and again on Sunday. His visit was enjoyed and was of much profit to the Saints.

Sunday afternoon, February 8, the officers and teachers of the different departments met at the Central Church in charge of O. A. Currie, superintendent of the departments of the entire branch, for the purpose of considering the closer cooperation of the departments. The directors of each department gave a general outline of the work, after which Brother Currie summarized, and brought out the connecting link of one department to another. In this the Sunday school was emphasized as the Religious Education Department, from which material is drawn to help the Department of Recreation and Expression to develop its members. The Music Department furnishes talent for all other departments, as well as the church services, and the Department of Women does its share in such ways as educating homemakers and relief and service workers, not only to the membership but to the public as well. They also assist in raising money for the branch budget, and help in many other ways. All these departments work together for the purpose of educating, supervising, and developing the body, mind, and spirit for service to God and humanity.

A visiting outline was presented by Brother Currie, placing visiting officers for each department in each section of the several groups of the branch. The plan met approval, and will be put into immediate operation.

The Department of Women is growing in membership, and their meetings are very interesting. The monthly business meeting for February was held at the home of Sister Waterman, Thursday afternoon, February 19. The Relief and Service Department is worthy of note, as they are doing much good work among the needy. Besides the visiting of the sick and shut-ins, they provide clothing and food for many who suffer. This work is especially needed in the winter months and is administered to members and nonmembers. When a needy family is found that are not members of the church, the immediate needs are provided, and they are reported to either the Red Cross or the Welfare Board of the city; but if they are church members they are reported to the branch deacon. Sister Hazel Stewart is in charge and is tireless in her efforts to further the work of bringing relief.

Members of the Social Hour Study Class surprised their teacher, Mayor (Elder) Jack Harding with an impromptu party last month. Brother Harding was presented with a fountain pen in slight token of their regard for him. This class is much interested in the Book of Mormon.

The Oriole and Temple Builder Circles are active. The Hiwatha Chapter enjoyed a very good time at the home of Sister Rebecca Nolan, when she entertained at a Valentine party February 16.

The boys of the Pyla Class of the Religio entertained the girls at the home of Brother and Sister Lloyd Graybill. The girls of this class are planning on returning the compliment March 17 in the church basement.

Another good time was had by the Alethean and Co-Mor Classes of the Religio, Saturday night, February 21, when they entertained at a "hard time" party. The "rube band" was a feature of the evening's fun.

Belmont Branch

Belmont Branch is progressing nicely. The Religio is larger than it ever has been before, having a membership of about sixty, and two new classes have been organized since the first of the year, one junior and one young people's history. There are three committees, and those who are not serving on the committees give good service by getting a newspaper ready for each month, known as the Belmont Banner. There is not an idle in this branch. The programs have been of a very high order. On February 1 Sister Grace Epperson of Central Branch gave a reading entitled "The old, old story," which was very much enjoyed. January 25 they had a debate. February 6 a box social was held; the proceeds were used to pay for a new choir platform. The choir is composed of about fifteen young people and is doing very commendable work. The Wednesday evening prayer meetings are worthy of note, as they are very well attended, averaging about twenty-five each evening.

Riverside Branch

Riverside Branch is making gratifying progress. The interest and attendance of the Sunday school are growing; the average attendance is eighty. Beginners and primaries contributed $17.66 to the Christmas offering this year.

The Religio averages about sixty in attendance. They have three Book of Mormon classes recently organized, as well as others, and render very interesting programs each Sunday evening. Their prayer meetings are well attended and of a very spiritual nature. The choir is doing splendid work among the young, being directed by one of our young musicians who is consecrated to the work. The Chrysalis Chapter of Temple Builders, composed of girls of this branch, is studying table etiquette.

A Capella Chorus

Council Bluffs Branch and friends enjoyed a real musical treat Thursday evening, February 26, when the A Capella Chorus from Graceland College rendered a concert at the Central Church. Their music, as noted by the name, was largely unaccompanied. Their work showed remarkable thought and training, both on the part of the director and chorus. Among the parts worthy of special mention were those by the soloists, Misses Ailene Brackenbury and Doris Gieselman. The voices of these young ladies show remarkable tone quality; they also have very charming personalities and were well received. Miss Florence Thompson entertained with a number of dramatic and comic readings. The chorus was of more than passing interest because of the fact that the director was Miss Mabel Carlile, well known to many people of Council Bluffs and vicinity, having many friends and relatives in this city. Also one of our own boys sang in the chorus, Roy Henderson, now a student of Graceland. We hope they will favor us again very soon.

Graceland Chats

Sister Vida E. Smith, more affectionately known as "Aunt Vida," has been part of the Graceland life in such an intimate and yet far-reaching way for so long that the college seems incomplete without her. During the early part of the year, however, Aunt Vida had a severe attack of rheumatism. We are grieved to say that she suffered intensely, and her doctor strongly advised that she move from the college dormitory at Bide-a-Wee to the more comfortable and restful seclusion of her own home in town. We feel that under the circumstances this was wise advice. Accordingly, after careful deliberation, Aunt Vida decided to leave Graceland. We are very happy to report at this time that she is recovering very satisfactorily and is regaining her normal strength. It is unnecessary here to speak of her work in connection with this institution, since that is so well known all over the church. We miss Aunt Vida in the dining room, in the dormitories, at chapel, and in many other places, but since the change is for her good, we are content that our loss shall be her gain, and hope that she will speedily be quite well again.

This, of course, brought a great change to Graceland. For a time the students, rising to the emergency in the splendid way they have, carried on their dormitory life and activities under a system of self-government. Later, however, Miss Tess Morgan, of Hiteman, Iowa, was appointed dean. Miss Morgan has already proved her ability to cope with the situation, and we congratulate the girls upon their good fortune, and wish for the new dean much happiness and success in the performance of her duties.

It seems rather late to report on the inaugural address, but it was such an enjoyable and thoroughly interesting program that a few words will not be out of place here. On the morning of Wednesday, March 4, the students gathered in the chapel, where Mr. Mortimore had installed a loud speaker. The announcer gave very interesting details as to the weather, the general construction of the White House, the order of the procession, gathering of the crowds, etc. Quite plainly we heard the selections played by the Marine Band and were fortunate enough to hear quite distinctly, as plainly as if the speaker were actually in the room, every word of President Coolidge's address. This was a real treat and an occasion not easily to be forgotten.

It is a great pleasure to bring to your notice the fact that one of the members of the faculty at Graceland, Mr. Roy H. Mortimore of the Science Department, has been offered the privilege of becoming a member of the renowned Scientific Society, Sigma Psi. We rejoice with Mr. Mortimore over this, and are happy to know that his work has been recognized and appreciated in this national way.

March 3 the Lamoni-Graceland Oratorio Society gave a lyceum number in the Brick Church. The building was packed, and the society scored a decided success if we are to judge by the spontaneity and vigor of the applause. One of the great attractions offered on the program was the boy soprano, Master Merlin Kirby, of Chicago. Master Kirby is a boy about thirteen years of age, and he soon won the hearts of choristers and audience by his modest, boyish, and unaffected manner, as well as by his excellent vocal work. He sang easily and naturally, taking his high C's as if these were an everyday occurrence. He handled difficult and intriguing arias with a facility that was truly surprising. It is not to be wondered at that again and again his hearers demanded encores.

It is the opinion of many able critics that the chorus had never offered better work. Their opening number, "He watching over Israel," from the "Elijah," showed technical mastery and spiritual insight that spoke volumes for the work and devotion of the choristers. "The Americans come," by Ray Foster, and "Liberty," by Eaton Fanning, two dramatic numbers, were equally well done, while the "Italian street song" and the "Inflammatus" were splendidly received. These last numbers showed Master Kirby handling the arias easily. We are indebted to Miss Mabel Carlile for her splendid work in training the society. She has a very high ideal for their achievement and is patiently and strenuously working towards making it a reality.

In the light of recent events, the friends of the college may well join with her in rejoicing over her musical victories. To Sister Carlile and Brother J. H. Anthony more than ordinary credit is due, for they have given of time and talent without stint for the development of music, which is not accomplished without sacrifice and consecration for real service. The parts of the chorus and the orchestra all deserve unqualified praise, but the inspiration of a leader in action, impelled by the spirit of their calling and the joy of working, imparts something that nothing else can give. These leaders have invited cooperation from every source, because they encourage camaraderie in their work, merit is recognized, and honor is divided, which makes the young people eager to go into the music and stay. Graceland has others, too, but this is the time to acknowledge the good our musicians are doing and cheer them on to further good work. It is a joy to hear them and will be a joy to remember—and what of the good to Graceland?

During this last week great excitement has reigned on the campus, for the intersociety basketball games have held sway. Every evening, one, two, or three games have been played off. Enthusiasm has been high and partisanship keen, but always the partisanship of good sportsmanship rather than of society against society. The games have shown a cleanness of spirit and a skill that is very commendable. At the present time the Niketes men lead in the first and second teams, Alpha Phi Sigma men coming second, Kappa Delta coming third, and Victarians fourth. The women's teams show the Kappa Delta leading, with the Niketes second, Alpha Phi Sigma third, and Victorian fourth.

On the evening of the 13th, the girls from Patroness Hall held their annual Saint Patrick's banquet. The dining room was very prettily decorated in green and white, with masses of ferns and flowering plants. The tables carried a color scheme of green and white, and the whole was lighted by a quantity of white candles in green holders, while floor lamps cast a subdued light over all. Four interesting and amusing toasts were offered, one on behalf of the boys to the girls by Mr. Robert Roush, the reply being given to the boys on behalf of the girls by Miss Altabeth Willard. Mr. Roy A. Cheville offered the toast "Graceland," and Miss Tess Morgan replied with "Our mothers." The themes for the toasts were respectively, "When Irish eyes are smiling"; "It's a long way to Tipperary"; the "Graceland song" (set to the tune of an old Irish air), and "Mother McCre." A very happy time was enjoyed, our only regret being that in the rush of busy academic life here on the hill, so little time is permissible for functions of this kind.

A new form of contest is presented in the program for Saturday, March 14, when the several societies will contend for honors in music. This has kept several groups very busy the past few weeks and will develop musical talent heretofore unnoticed and unsuspected—at least that is the hope.

Two popular students were called home by reason of illness in the family: Miss Leona Rabi, to her home in California, and Miss Sue Barnes to New England.

President F. M. Smith and Church Architect Henry C. Smith spent a busy forenoon on the hill recently.

Lamoni Stake Items

LAMONI, IOWA, March 15.—The concert by the combined choir of the Lamoni Stake held here last Sunday evening marks the beginning of a new epoch in the musical activities of the church. So far as we know, it is the only stake choir in existence. Fifty singers from Hiteman, Chariton, and Centerville drove down and joined with the Lamoni musicians in singing anthems on which each group had drilled under the direction of the stake chorister. The large platform was filled to overflowing with singers, the pulpit being taken off for the occasion. The concert was the realization of a dream conceived several months ago of the possibility of a stake choir which could function at the stake reunions. It has materialized through much effort on the part of the leader and others from Lamoni who made a monthly trip to the northern part of the stakes to aid the musicians there and through consecrated service of the members of all the individual choirs. The combined chorus sang well together after only one rehearsal. The solo parts in the anthems were taken by Misses Doris Gieselman and Aliene Brackenbury. A baritone solo by Job Neglem, a trombone solo by John Jones of Chariton, and a number by the A Capella Chorus were pleasant additions to the work of the chorus.

At the close of the concert Brother C. E. Wight gave a short talk, reviewing the history of the music work of the stake and including a list of "the things worth while."

Elder H. H. Gold was the morning speaker last Sunday, his subject being "The use of a talent."

Another musical treat of the week was given last night at the high school building, when the department of band and orchestra music, under J. H. Anthony, gave a recital. The Lamoni school boasts the largest department of this kind in a school of its size in the State. There are one hundred and twenty-five students enrolled this year. A splendid school orchestra of twenty-three pieces, an equally good band of eighteen instruments, a violin ensemble numbering forty, and a beginner class in wind instruments took part in the exceptionally fine program.

Elder L. G. Holloway has been holding a series of meetings in Minneapolis, Minnesota, the past week. The roads around Lamoni are so bad that some of the rural branches are unable to hold their regular services.

Davis City

The people of Davis City were very fortunate in being permitted to enjoy a concert by the Lamoni-Graceland Orchestra the evening of March 9. The orchestra contains some splendid talent this year, and is doing very effectual work under the leader, Brother J. H. Anthony. Besides the ensemble numbers, Mrs. Frances Norris rendered several very pleasing numbers, and a trio by Sisters Emma Snead, Thelma Lane, and Brother J. H. Anthony was well received. Following the program, which was enjoyed by a full house including many nonmembers, the members of the branch served a delicious luncheon to the orchestra, there being about one hundred present. This social function was greatly enjoyed and assured the young people and their leader that their efforts to afford the people of Davis City a musical treat had been appreciated.
Creston

The Creston Saints have been greatly encouraged the last few months by members of the priesthood from Lamoni and elsewhere, who have visited them and brought words of inspiration and uplift. Patriarch John F. Martin spent the week of February 15 to 22 here, and his wonderfully spiritual sermons made the Saints more desirous of living as becometh Saints.

The Department of Women held a church supper at the home of the leader, Sister Estella Franklin, Thursday, March 5, thus furnishing a pleasant social evening for the members and their families, and adding a nice little sum to the treasury. It is the custom of this department to turn over to the local building fund all money above regular operating expenses.

The Bishop's agent reports branch tithing receipts for 1924 as almost double what they were for 1923, showing the Saints are alive to the privilege of tithing and are anxious to render to God that which belongs to him.

Another encouraging item is the interest the young people are showing in the general work. Out of their class, "Let's Do Something," composed of twelve young people of high school age, there is Sunday school superintendent, secretary, chorister, and librarian; also teachers for beginner and primary classes. Thus they are laying early in life the foundation for true Zion builders in learning the joy of service. The L. D. S. Class very pleasantly surprised their teacher, Mrs. A. M. Hogan, at the close of the lesson period last Sunday by presenting to her, Concerning the Prophet Frederick M. Smith, written by his wife.

Holden Stake

Holden

The Department of Expression and Recreation gave a playlet, "City versus country," at their regular session on March 1. Those taking part were Daisy Spense, Arline Weir, Bernice Hampton, Paul Baker, Oren Bowers, and Chilton Ross. The young people showed advancement in their work of expression, and the audience appreciated the truths presented.

Elders G. F. Baker and C. F. Scardiff were the speakers at the church the 8th. Elder G. W. Beebe spoke at the Home. On the 1st a very peaceful spirit prevailed in our sacramental service. The pastor read the First Presidency's call to prayer, stating that it was one thing in which all could unite. We truly need divine power and direction in our coming conference. May we all thus pray.

Two children were blessed of late, Ernest Elmo, infant son of Brother and Sister Basil Lyeac, by Elders Krahle and Scardiff; and Mary Lou, the baby daughter of Mr. and Sister James Stuckey, by Elders H. B. Thompson and G. F. Baker.

Sister Daisy Spense was the successful contestant in the declamatory contest of the Holden high school. She will take part in the county contest at Warrensburg on April 3. Elder H. E. Moler conducted services at Rich Hill a few weeks ago.

Marshall

Brother R. E. Burgess has been with us for a short time. We very much regretted to have him leave. Hope he will be back soon. His labors were of much benefit to us. Through him cheer and comfort have been brought. We enjoyed two very spiritual meetings of late.

The Saints of Marshall held a birthday surprise party on Brother and Sister Levi Phelps February 17, it being the birthday of each. An interesting volunteer program was given. A good talk was given by Brother T. L. McCormick, and a present was given by those attending.

Blue Springs

Apostle J. F. Curtis was with us March 1 and held two meetings in the Liberty Theater, the object being to counteract misleading statements appearing in popular magazines. The weather was very unfavorable, but we believe some good was accomplished.

Our regular attendance has been maintained, even in the severest weather, and with the coming of spring we are hopeful for an increase numerically as well as spiritually.

Knobnoster

Knobnoster Saints have recently been favored with a visit from Patriarch Richard Bullard. He has delivered some very fine sermons, and his fatherly advice and counsel have been encouraging.

Brother Hugh Poort and Sister Neva Norman were quietly married January 26 at the home of our pastor, Elder F. L. Goode, who was the officiating minister. Brother Bert Norman and Sister Bernice Holland were married at Warrensburg February 7 by Elder J. M. Smith.

Our choir recently organized a music club, with Sister Emma Ross director.

Lees Summit

February 22 Brother Wilfred D. Tordoff was chosen pastor. Brother D. J. Krahle was with us at this meeting.

Sunday morning, March 1, was sacrament meeting. Earnest prayers and testimonies were offered; a spiritual feast enjoyed. At the close, a business meeting was held. We appointed the heads of each department for the following year. Those chosen were Brother E. F. Brace, superintendent of Sunday school; Brother A. B. Willey, superintendent of Religion and branch treasurer; Sister C. W. Childers, superintendent of Department of Women; Brother W. D. Tordoff, superintendent of music.

Sunday night our pastor began a series of sermons to be given each Sunday night in March. A number of nonmembers were present.

Sedalia

Brother R. D. Weaver led three into the waters of baptism February 22: Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Reeceland and Elda Mary Farber. These were confirmed at the evening service by G. W. Rodger, J. M. Ross, and C. L. House. J. M. Ross occupied Monday night, talking on stewardships and the gathering. This was well received.

The attendance was rather light at all services March 1, owing to sickness. After Sunday school and a gloomy morning, the sky cleared, while the Saints went to the water's edge with three more souls to be baptized. They were Mr. and Mrs. James Reno and Mr. Napier. Mrs. Napier and two others were prevented from going on account of illness. These were confirmed by Elders G. W. Rodger, A. A. Weaver, and R. E. Beazle. At the same time Elder C. L. House blessed the little child of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Curry (nonmembers) who are regular attendants at Sunday school.

At half past seven Brother R. D. Weaver gave a splendid discourse on the Book of Mormon. The meetings will close this week.

Atherton

February 15 the Atherton Saints had the privilege of hearing Brother H. O. Smith and Brother J. W. Peterson, Brother Peterson told of his experiences in the islands, and the talk was greatly enjoyed by all.

February 22 we were all made happy to have with us Brother C. J. Hunt, who was for so many years bishop of this stake. As is characteristic of him, he spoke only that which is encouraging, and gave the Saints courage to press onward. In the evening Brother F. A. Rowe occupied.

Our sacrament of this month was of a very spiritual nature. In the evening Brother U. W. Greene occupied, and so very acceptable was his sermon that he was asked at the close of his sermon if he would again occupy soon. He very kindly consented to come the following Sunday evening, which he did. At this hour he spoke of his experiences in the Holy Land.

Last Sunday morning we were fortunate in having Brother L. E. Hills speak to us on the Book of Mormon.

Independence

Stone Church

Sunday morning Evangelist John F. Martin, of Kirtland, Ohio, began a series of meetings which are continuing through this week. He is the youngest evangelist in the church, having been ordained at the age of thirty-one, at the General Conference of 1922. He is a pleasing, forceful speaker, with the true evangelical spirit, and has been greeted with good crowds. The church was full Sunday night, many wanting to hear his sermon on “The world’s greatest need,” which was handled in a masterful way. The evenings are devoted to subjects for the young people. Special musical numbers, appropriate to the theme of the evening, are being provided each night.

Next Sunday afternoon President F. M. McDowell will conduct a round table for the young people at half past two where subjects of vital interest will be taken up. He will also be the speaker in the evening.

On Friday, March 13, the Laurel Club gave a Saint Patrick’s party at the Institute Building. A very fine musical program was given, and the large crowd present fully enjoyed the evening’s entertainment.

On March 12 the deacons held a social meeting at the Institute Building to check up on the drive to raise funds for the year’s budget and to organize more efficiently to raise the remaining amount. They found that nearly fifty per cent of the required amount had been raised and fully believe that the remainder will be in sight by General Conference. A delicious luncheon was served, and all enjoyed the spirit of good fellowship that prevailed. Besides the deacons there were in attendance President Elbert A. Smith, Bishop B. R. McGuire, Pastor C. Ed. Miller, and Bishop J. A. Becker.

Second Church

A meeting for organization of the Boy Scout movement on Tuesday evening, March 10, at Curtis Hall resulted in a goodly number of boys making their appearance, but the men were not there. Commissioner George A. Gould adjourned the meeting after some good work had been done by the boys from visiting troops, and another meeting was appointed for March 17. The boys are interested and should not be denied this activity.

Elder J. W. Wilson died quite unexpectedly March 10, at his home on South Cottage. The day previous he had visited a niece sojournning at the hospital in Kansas City, but had been stricken on the street while returning to his home. The officers of the street took him to the city hospital, where he was found late that night and returned to his home. In the afternoon he again lapsed into unconsciousness and very shortly passed away. He leaves six children, twenty-four grandchildren, and three great grandchildren, and a wife near his own age, being past seventy-three years. His son, H. W., one of the three sons now living at Fort Worth, Florida, was in attendance at the funeral Sunday afternoon, when Elder J. W. A. Bailey preached the sermon. The bereaved family have great sympathy from the community in the loss of their beloved.

Sister Sadie Cameron, who has been suffering from tuberculosis for many months, died Monday morning at the home of her aunt, Sister Zona Walker, of 820 South Pleasant Street. Sister Cameron was in her twenty-fifth year and will be much missed. Funeral services were held March 17, Elder D. A. Whiting preaching.

The chicken supper Friday evening under the direction of the Temple Builders drew a good attendance, and it appears that nearly one hundred dollars was cleared. The entertainment of readings, songs, and instrumental music which followed the dinner was of a high order. Sister Alice Cowan delivered the address, stressing the work of the Orioles and Temple Builders.

Sunday morning Elder T. W. Williams was the speaker, and Sunday evening Elder W. H. Kelley delivered the sermon. These sermons were much appreciated by our people.

Choir work is showing results, and the singing is much improved, for which the congregation shows appreciation.

Walnut Park

At eleven o’clock Sunday B. J. Scott preached, and in the evening President Elbert A. Smith gave his illustrated lecture on “Milestones in the life of Christ,” a ladies’ quartet in the balcony adding to the effectiveness of some of the pictures by appropriate hymns. Large congregations were present to enjoy both services.

Next Sunday President F. M. McDowell has promised to speak at eleven; and at half past seven Patriarch John F. Martin will begin a series of meetings to continue through the week.

The women of Group 28, who pledged $300 on the local church debt, still owed $135 six months ago. Their late report shows that by making and selling quilts and comforters and giving a dinner and bake sale, they have been able to pay in the $135, with $15 additional for good measure. This group is studying church history, with Sister O. M. Carpenter as teacher. The visiting committee and leader have made sixty-three visits to the sick and needy. Laura Mosier is leader.

Enoch Hill

The speakers on March 8 were Elder Ivor Davies in the morning and Brother Charles S. Warren in the evening. Last Sunday morning we were pleased to have Sister Fannie Pender with us. She gave a splendid lecture on her experiences in the Isle of Pines. In the evening Brother Amos E. Allen gave us a very fine sermon on tithing.

Our young people continue to manifest great interest in their Wednesday night prayer services. Large crowds are the rule, the various homes being almost too small to accommodate them.

The Sunday school is arranging for rally day exercises Sunday, March 29, during the Sunday school hour. It will consist of an effort to stimulate greater interest in Sunday school work. Orchestral and vocal music, with talks, will be special features.

Liberty Street

The Saints here were pleased to have with them Sunday morning Elder George Jenkins, who preached on Ephesians 3:21, “Unto him be glory in the church of Jesus Christ throughout all ages, world without end.” In the evening Elder J. W. Metcalf continued his sermons, using for his subject, “The laying on of hands.”

Monday night a demonstration of the new method of cooking without water was held at the church under the auspices of the Temple Builders. A large crowd was present, thirty-eight families being represented, thirty-five of them mothers in this congregation. This new method of cooking will help to solve the problem of church attendance, as the mothers can put their food on to cook and go to church, finding the food cooked ready to serve when they get home.

East Independence

There was a large attendance at both Sunday school and church Sunday morning. The Saints were glad to have with them Bishop E. R. McGuire, who urged the need of developing in our lives those qualities that will show we are partaking of that more abundant life.

Brother J. J. Teeter was the speaker in the evening, and the Saints afterward felt encouraged to press forward in the gospel life.

Spring Branch

A good crowd was out to hear Elder J. W. A. Bailey Sunday morning, and were rewarded by hearing a good sermon. Brother J. W. Weston spoke in the evening.

The weather was so bad last Friday evening that the program to be given by Stone Church visitors was postponed. It will be given a week from Friday night. Only twenty-five were present.

Brother Benjamin Bean, who has been working in Saint Louis, has been home for a short visit.

Central Chicago

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—God still blesses us with his Spirit. We have had some wonderful prayer meetings, and four entered the waters of baptism last Sunday.

We had with us on February 11 Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Brother John L. Cooper. The house was full, some investigators were present, and we had a splendid sermon.

About ninety people attended the Valentine party given February 12 by the young people's Sunday school class at the home of Brotheer Lester. Games were played, refreshments were served, and a general good time was enjoyed.

February 13 Brother and Sister Baldwin gave the Religio program, with the aid of two children of the branch. They successfully portrayed the average family with all its faults at the dinner hour, then the ideal was brought out in such a manner as to touch the heart and make the audience long for Zionic conditions.

On February 18 the Saints from this branch attended the opening services in the new church of West Pullman Branch. A wonderful day was spent, the Spirit being present in power.

We had with us on February 25 Brother Bohn from the West Side in the morning and Brother Baldwin in the evening.

Brother and Sister Ray Hurst are the proud possessors of another little girl.

Union Branch at Clitherall

BATTLE LAKE, MINNESOTA, February 24.—This branch as a body has done nothing since last fall, not having met together since cold weather.

Some of the individual members have had some profitable experiences that have demonstrated the practical value of prayer. One of the most satisfactory of these is the successful operation undergone by the branch president, Elder Lester Whiting.

Some of the isolated and shut-in members are very active in distributing the church papers.

MISCELLANEOUS

All-Day Meeting

At Ionia, Michigan, in I. O. O. F. Hall, March 22, on Main Street. All welcome. J. J. Russel, 540 North King Street, Ionia, Michigan.

First Quorum of Seventy

Members of the First Quorum of Seventy will bear in mind a report is due, giving account of their ministerial labors since last report. A motion prevailed last General Conference, "that our reporting year be governed by the time of the meeting of the General Conference"; so these reports should be made to include all the labor performed from October 1, 1923, to March 1, 1925, a period of eighteen months.

Should any of the brethren have occupied as pastors, branch presidents, or district presidents, it should be stated. Those laboring in foreign missions should so state. The latest home address should be included. The usual blank for reporting should be used. Any extraordinary event of divine intervention should be reported to the quorum, and we assure you, any letter giving account of events, labors, and especially blessings will be gladly received. Send reports to your home address, Route 6, Box 78 B, Independence, Missouri.

S. S. SMITH, Secretary.

EDITORIAL

Notice to the Priesthood

The First Presidency requests the members of the priesthood to meet in Independence in their various quorums and orders April 2. Matters of importance to come before the General Conference will be submitted to them for a preliminary consideration. The priesthood will also be requested to meet in periods of prayer, the first of these to be April 2 at 10 a.m. in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. Let us all not only seek for that measure of divine guidance which may be necessary, but also for the requisite self-control and wisdom to help us preserve Saintly deportment at all times during the conference.

Very sincerely,
THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Sundry Items in Rebuttal

I. THAT QUESTION OF APOSTASY

Before entering upon the subject, permit me to say that I have carefully read Brother T. W. Williams’s editorial in HERALD for March 18 in reply to mine of February 4. The personal element I desire to dismiss with a few words. It should have little place in this discussion. Among the many brilliant and able ministers of the days of my probation as a missionary, Brother T. W. Williams, himself a young man, was in the front rank of those whom I greatly admired and respected. Because of frequent personal contacts over a long period of time, I well know the winning and lovable traits of his character—they are not few in number.

But it seems to have been our lot, especially of late years, to see things from different viewpoints, and our opinions clash. This is no source of happiness to me, but rather the reverse. I would it were otherwise. I have not challenged his zeal, or his sincerity, or his motives; but rather his judgment and the positions taken from time to time. Since he has with the very greatest frankness possible to imagine and at some length attacked positions taken by the joint council, reaching a climax in the assertion that their teachings lead to apostasy and rejection, we should be free to reply with some plainness and not stir resentment. When he characterizes my editorial as “this flare-up of his, and pictures it as a sort of ‘politico-religious romance’; a “clever” but “not good” attempt “to submerge the intellect and capitalize fear”; to “appeal to prejudice, passion, and mob psychology,” etc., he is not at his best.

By What Right Is Conference Action Challenged?

Forgetting the personal element, let us proceed. In the HERALD for November 10, 1924, Brother T. W. Williams said:

Under such interpretation the Presidency would possess the power now held by the United States Supreme Court, to declare any legislative act unconstitutional. This we deny.

This denial must refer to future legislation, as the Presidency has never to my knowledge declared any past act of conference unconstitutional. And with equal plainness, and not less kindly, I deny the right of Brother Williams to declare the action of the coming conference unconstitutional, “tantamount to apostasy,” in the event it shall be adverse to his judgment.

Is it, then, to be presumed, that when the law is given to the church, by which it has been created; and the law which has wrought so much has in it a provision defining a tribunal which is to declare the construction to be put upon the law by which the church is to be governed; that every man is to be the power by which such construction is to be declared constitutional or not. . . .—Joseph Smith in HERALD, February 1, 1868.

The Charge of Apostasy

The following statement was made in the HERALD for January 28, 1925:

I am reluctant to believe that a majority of the officials and members of this church will indorse this strange document on church government now championed by a majority of the Advisory Council and which harks back some four thousand years for precedent and would substitute monarchy for democracy, make assent take the place of consent, and thus divert the church from its original and divinely ordained purpose. This would be tantamount to apostasy and must result in the rejection of the church.

In the HERALD for March 18 the same writer says:
"I now reiterate and reaffirm the statement without modifications."

No one can make such extreme statements in the official organ of the church and think that there will not be a powerful reaction from many quarters. And the protest when voiced is none the less earnest and heartfelt because it is expressed in courteous language. It cannot be dismissed as a "flare up" or a clever "political" ruse to sway the people. That protest finds echo in nearly every home where the Herald is read.

Such is the reaction of those who do not believe the statement to be correct. Those who do believe it are moved, if at all, then to another course of action. And remember that I was at pains to make no charges against Brother Williams's personal intentions, not knowing them then or now, but I felt entirely free to judge of the effects of his words. This is what I said on that point:

Brother Williams, when repudiating the decision of the coming General Conference in the event that it does not support his position, does not say that he will then help lead away the minority if they will follow; so remember, I do not charge him with that intention at any point in that which I now say. But the effect of his words tends to incite others to do that thing even if he does not.

An Over-Inflated Argument

Again, this propaganda has gone out into the field in personal and circular letters, numbers of which I have seen; one of which says:

And if this document wins [the action of the joint council] the only consistent thing for the church to do will be to confess that we have been wrong all these years and then ask the Utah Church to accept us into fellowship with them, for there will be no difference between the two churches on the question of church government.

An over-inflated argument like an over-inflated balloon bursts at a touch. And thoughtful readers of the Herald know that such arguments are of that class.

Reorganization Versus Mormonism in Legislation

A good brother was kind enough to quote me in the Herald for March 11, as follows:

So long as the people retain in their hands the lawmaking power, they are comparatively safe. The first act of a despot is always to assume the privilege to make the laws and to take that right from the people. That was the reason that Brigham Young reduced the general conference in the West to a farce, so that he and his followers could stand in the pulpit and tell the people, "It is proposed, so and so; all in favor say aye," and not any negative vote or legislation from the floor. But with us it is different. Any member of the assembly having a right to a seat in the assembly as a delegate, man or woman, black or white, ordained or unordained, may arise at any time and say, "I move so and so," and if he can get the vote of a majority of the people, his motion will carry and become the will of the assembly. . . .

The executive functions of the church devolve upon the leading quorums, the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy; in stakes and districts, they devolve upon the Presidency of the stakes and districts, as in the branches they devolve upon the branch presidents.—Zion's Herald, April 14, 1921.

The first paragraph quoted sets forth a vital difference between the Reorganized Church and the Mormon Church in procedure in legislation. In the second chapter of "The true philosophy of church government" (read and indorsed by President Frederick M. Smith) was affirmed the right of the people to not only consent to but also to reject or modify proposed legislation and to initiate legislation themselves, this right belonging to membership and priesthood alike.

The second paragraph quoted names various executive officers. Among all these, from branch president to First Presidency, who is first or supreme in the executive field to carry out the program approved by the people. The document on church government names the First Presidency. If the endorsement of that position shall divert any man's course from us into the Utah Mormon Church that will be his misfortune—our loss, if any, we may appraise later.

President Smith's Sermon on Loyalty

Coming now to another matter. I am called to account for the sermon by President F. M. Smith on loyalty, in which he referred to "self-appointed leaders," etc., as though that had somewhat to do with my editorial of February 4. I am in the clear on that matter. I wrote to President Smith from Onset, where I was at the time, protesting that sermon. That was my right as a counselor. It will be remembered that others rebuked him in the Herald, and pointedly and at some length in the conference of 1923, and also in a twenty-nine page personal letter copies of which were circulated on the conference grounds; so one who joined in that denunciation can now hardly claim comfort or shelter as under his example and precedent, especially one who, if we do not misunderstand his position, has renounced human leadership.

That Question of Elimination

Again I am taken to task for purported sayings of President Smith:

If our critic is so much concerned that the church maintains its official [organic] solidarity, why did he not protest this statement made by the President of the church before the priesthood in Independence, July, 1924?

"I cannot yield to the opposition, so I am in the fight, and it will undoubtedly be a finish fight; either the opposition which has asserted itself is going to become supreme and the rest of us eliminated, or vice versa."

Who reported and published those words? Was it by a friendly hand? For whose service were they reported? Were they ever submitted to President Smith for verification? What was the context? I have heard President Smith say in the presence of a number of reliable witnesses that the words as quoted and used do not at all correctly represent his position.

In order to support his own position the brother must not call me to account for the words of President Smith; particularly when they were published without his sanction and verification and interpreted in a way which President Smith assures us is entirely different to the meaning that he had in mind.

Joseph Smith on Utah Apostasy

Two or more writers have referred to the Utah apostasy to find fitting comparison (as they thought) to the condition of the church at present in case the document approved by the council of Presidency, members of the Twelve in America, and Order of Bishops shall be approved.

President Joseph Smith has been quoted as though to assume that he would hold this present situation comparable to that in the dark and cloudy day, and would advise a minority who may not be pleased with the decision of the coming conference that they should consider the church in apostasy.

The language quoted from his pen is also part of a tract for many years in circulation, entitled “The rejection of the church.” The part used is taken from the middle of the editorial and is preceded and followed by very interesting matter.

Joseph was considering the apostasy under Brigham Young, and made the statement quoted in connection with the following facts set forth by him:

The vital element of apostasy was in the change of faith. In his first paragraph he said:

> Whenever that which is contrary or adverse to the revealed word and rules given to the church at its origin was introduced into its formulated creed, or its well-understood faith, the elements of disorganization entered in with it.—HERALD, December 16, 1893.

Associated with very radical changes in the “creed” or faith of the church, which will be cited later, Joseph noted the act of Brigham Young in rebaptizing and reconfirming his immediate official associates August 6, 1847, and the later general wholesale rebaptism and reconfirmation of all church members, in 1856-7, and the working out of that which Joseph considered a “new church.” (Ibid., pp. 1170, 1171.)

Brigham Young, a self-appointed leader, not called of God to that office, was elevated to the office of president and prophet.

This was done at a special conference after only nineteen days’ notice and in an isolated spot, and according to Joseph, “less than a twentieth of the number of the church estimated to be at Nauvoo, and vicinity, and less than one hundredth of the entire membership, as estimated at the death of Joseph, were present when the vote was taken.” (Ibid., p. 1170.) This was a minority movement, and thus Brigham was selected by men.

And most important of all, Joseph says they introduced into the faith depraved doctrine quite the reverse of those held in the beginning. Polygamy was introduced, and he says had been practiced secretly for some time. And polygamy, or rather “celestial marriage” was made the principle through which salvation and exaltation came—a denial of the primitive gospel principles of faith, repentance, and baptism. Furthermore, it was stipulated that any sin in the catalog of sins except shedding innocent blood would be forgiven those entering the “new covenant” of celestial marriage, and they would pass by the gods and angels to their exaltation. Blood atonement and Adam-god worship were taught, and some believe practiced.

An Unfortunate Comparison

Now I submit that it is an unfortunate imagination that sees a similar condition to-day. And it is an unfortunate propaganda that projects such charges into the HERALD and into the mission field for our enemies to use against us for fifty years to come.

Observing all the items mentioned by President Joseph Smith, who can believe that he would hold that his words, used in connection with the work of corruption, polygamy, and murder in Utah, have application to the coming conference, or anything that it shall do or approve of?

What Would Joseph Do Now?

Perhaps I can claim to have been a friend to Joseph, having been one of his counselors for some years, and associated with him a long time in editing the HERALD, and I do not believe for a moment that he would sanction the cry of apostasy now raised. Rather would he defend the solidarity of the church and the authority of her decisions and abide by them as he did when he was overruled on at least two important questions, and as I shall hereinafter show was his custom under like conditions.

Apostasy No New Cry

The cry of apostasy is no new thing. Almost from the day of his ordination to the day of his death Joseph had to meet that charge and kindred complaints regarding alleged “departure from the faith of the fathers.” So early as 1866 he was met with the charge that the whole church was in disorder because “the head was sick.” That propaganda then current was aimed directly at him as head.
In 1868 he made these statements in the HERALD:

One class urges there is a departure from law and precedent, in recognizing the priest as the next in authority, in a branch government, to the presiding elder; another class urges grievous dereliction of duty, in not observing to keep as the Lord's Holy Day, Saturday; another departure from orthodox "Mormonism," the hostility of the spiritual authorities against the doctrine of sealing; another charges departure, for not holding circumcision as an essential feature of the faith of the church; another class, urges it as positively necessary to the prosperity of the church and eternal welfare of the leaders of that which comes within the direct pale of their authority as the Lord's Holy Day, Saturday; another rank, needless contention; recognizes, endorses, and accepts the revelations, acts, and consequences of this, that, and the other man; while yet another class insist upon a new dispensation altogether. . . .—HERALD, February 1, 1868.

How Did He Make Answer?

And he answered the several charges thus:

We, in common with all the rest of the Saints believe, or profess to believe, that God demands an actual, intelligent submission to authority; else we should never meet at the outset with the saying, "rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft"; nor yet the apostolic injunction, "be subject to the higher powers." (Romans 13: 1-5.) While then we are of this belief, and truly desire Zion's good, we will neither cause division by needless contention; nor yet betake ourselves to an outside rank, and then bespoil the work of God, by spitting upon it the emanations of our roiled and destempered minds. For, as the spiritual authorities of the church are set as such to be watchful and vigilant, they should be supposed to know of that which comes within the direct pale of their authority under the law; and their construction of law is, by the organic law of the church, the rule, until reversed, changed, or modified; either by themselves or the revelation of God; and more especially is this the case, where no essential feature of the plan of salvation is infringed; no material infraction of personal rights attempted; no great and abominable evil sought to be ingrafted; no heretical leading away from the fold of Christ solicited; and no wickedness commanded, or counseled. . . .

We have written upon this matter before; but there is either a failure on our part to write plainly, or a willful misunderstanding upon the part of some whom it was intended to benefit; if the latter—mend, brethren, mend—if the former—we will amend.—Joseph Smith, HERALD, February 1, 1868.

Little Herald, Pause a Moment

People are not often satisfied with the man whom God selects for prophet, but imagine some better one. The propaganda that "young Joseph" was not the man for the place and that his younger brother should be the prophet reached such proportions (not alone in Utah but also among our own people) that David H. Smith felt impelled to insert this message in the HERALD:

"Little Herald stop a moment
Ere you journey on your way;
I have something of importance
That I wish that you would say,
Unto those who not contented,
With the leader God hath sent,
Still declare that I shall lead them,
Though I gave them no consent.

"Go and tell them I am loyal,
To the counsels of the Lord;
Tell them I have no desire
To dispute His mighty word.
Joseph is the Chosen Prophet,
Well ordained in God's clear sight...

Wandering From the Faith of His Father?

Some years later Joseph wrote:

It seems to be a favorite mode of attack upon us, to assert that we are teaching contrarily to what our father taught; denouncing what he upheld, and upholding what he denounced; practicing what he forbid, and condemning what he practiced.—HERALD, vol. 18, p. 565.

The picture of former days appearing in a recent HERALD: "There was among the brethren a spirit of good-fellowship and buoyant faith, unity, and confidence among the ministry and laity pervaded the whole," leaves out some details which must be reckoned with if we are to make comparisons with the present, which seem to be the purpose. Note the following:

How can I, with the gift of discernment in me, stand side by side with men of whom I know they would desert under peculiar circumstances? How could I do it? And yet, my dear brethren, I have stood face to face with difficulties which required me to know the men by whom I was surrounded and with whom I was associated, and I have been hurt to the quick, knowing that those who have been working with us and with whom I have been associated are frequently found covertly finding fault with us. I am sorry.—From an address by President Joseph Smith at the closing of conference, 1912, SAINTS' HERALD, May 1, 1912, p. 416.

And again note the following:

I have been under a fearful pressure this year. I have had my ears filled with all kinds of reports, some of them verging on calumny. Some of them to my way of thinking were absolutely contemptible, and below the dignity even of commonplace men, and it has been a source of worry, trouble; and to tell the exact truth, I could not, under the condition of things, go confidently to God and ask him to interfere.—General Conference Minutes, 1902.

It is within the memory of many that his positions were from time to time opposed by strong and influential men, some of whom now say, "He was right; I was wrong." But also the revelations as they came to him from year to year were challenged and opposed and sometimes put on probation. And we were diligently told by some that he had forfeited the right to speak and that God must seek some other channel.

What Lens Are You Using?

If we fancy that division is something exclusively of current experience, we are mistaken. And again, if we think that the charge of apostasy and the declaration that the church is going to his Satanic Majesty was not heard in Joseph's day we are mistaken. If we wish to know how he met the charge, we have the following specific statement:

I have heard since I began the conference that the Devil was here in Lamoni, and that things were all going wrong in the church, and the Devil had his ascendancy in our midst. I do not believe a thing of the kind... I do not know that I could express it in the language of another, but the substance is this: that our judgment of that which is outside comes from that which is within... through the lens through which we gaze at it, a distorted vision.—Address to General Conference, 1905.

It must indeed be a distorted lens that depicts a recurrence of the apostasy under Brigham Young. We come together not as Brigham's small minority, without due notice or discussion and at a remote place; but after long discussion and with both sides agreed to submit the matter to the conference, the church will soon stand at the time and place of her own selection to cast her ballot.

We come not to do any one of the several things that Joseph named—neither to organize a new church, nor to put a man-made prophet in the President's seat; not to change the creed, nor to bring in polygamy or any other dark heresy in the place of the gospel which we all believe and love.

We come to consider a question of church government, mainly of administrative right and procedure, as the church has often done before. And neither the rejection nor the adoption of the proposed document will be tantamount to apostasy.

The foregoing items are mentioned only to show that humanity in its efforts to carry on the work of God has always been more or less in turmoil and at cross purposes, and the impatient have very often cried "apostasy" and "departure." At no time, so far as I can discover, did Joseph sanction this cry excepting in the case of the well-defined apostasy under Brigham, which he analyzed as shown.

Extreme Interpretations

Complaint is made that I have not attempted to defend the Document on Church Government but, it is said, have "written a number of apologies which are calculated to pull the fangs, but this is not defense."—HERALD, March 18.

The articles, "The true philosophy of church government," are now in pamphlet form. Read the pamphlet and judge. The trouble is that some of the brethren for some months past have been making or listening to such statements as the above about "fangs," suggesting poisonous reptiles that we seek to loose upon them; or like the following from the San Bernardino Bulletin, February 15:

There must be no yielding to vicious or dangerous heresy. ... May the sword of truth not be sheathed until this terrible Control Monster from the dark Monarchal Jungles of the past shall be captured, and its unfortunate votaries and victims rescued and converted.

Now naturally after such word pictures, any thoughtful, reserved, constitutional interpretation of the document adopted by the Presidency, members of Twelve in America, and Order of Bishops would sound like an apology. We could not come up to expectations and defend some "terrible Control Monster from the dark Monarchal Jungles"—the beast is not ours.

Who Would Limit Power of the People in Conference?

Not one man among all those supporting the Document on Church Government with whom I have talked or even heard of desires to limit the power of the people in legislative matters in any such way as has been charged from week to week with a persistence only equaled by our patience in denial. On that point I have talked with President Smith at length within the past forty-eight hours and find him in perfect agreement with the rest of us in recognizing the right of the people to consent to, reject, modify, or originate in matters of legislation.

Indeed he pointed out that the only proposition to limit the right of the people so to do comes from those who propose to make the General Conference entirely ex-officio (of the priesthood) or at the least to make it much more of that character by greatly reducing the number of delegates to which the people are entitled. And who makes that proposition? Not the Presidency, nor yet the other brethren who support the document on church government. Rather does it come from some of the most ardent opponents of "government through priesthood." The Presidency proposes that the people shall retain every right in that regard that they at present have.

The Right to a Friendly Interpretation

The strange and strained interpretations put upon the document by some of its critics, which have been set forth in language calculated to make it appear repulsive and vicious, neither do justice to the document nor yet to the brethren back of it. That I positively know to be true. And perhaps most of all they do not do justice to President Smith and his positions and intentions. This I am certain of from long and searching conversation with him. And so too I trust you will be before the conference ends.

The sacramental wine is prepared by the hand of a friend. The content of a document and the intent of a council is best poured out by a friendly hand. Possibly no document has ever been drafted that was not subject to two interpretations, one extreme, the other legitimate. The men who voted for the Document on Church Government have set forth a temperate and they believe constitutional interpretation.

Judge the document and the men themselves in the light of that interpretation. And do not be too receptive to the cry of apostasy; it is a recurrent cry, without justification, and neither helpful nor necessary in this discussion. ELBERT A. SMITH.

Who Wrote the Church History

It has been with much surprise that we have noted lately the Church History being quoted, first as being written by President Joseph Smith and Heman C. Smith, and then by one writer the contents ascribed directly to Joseph Smith alone.

It is true that the Board of Publication appointed Joseph Smith and Heman C. Smith as editors to write the history of the church and that both names appear on the title-page. This was done by the Board of Publication, no doubt believing that it would produce a better sale for the history by so doing, and assure its having the approval of President Smith.

We have supposed, however, that all those prominently connected with the church were aware that the work was actually done by Heman C. Smith, though we are informed by a member of the revising committee that the manuscript was submitted to President Joseph Smith prior to its being submitted to the other members of the revising committee.

Since others evidently had a different understanding, it appeared advisable to look the matter up. As a result we find in General Conference Minutes for 1906, page 919, the following in the address by President Joseph Smith:

I call attention to the fact that the history is being written by Brother Heman C. Smith as historian. I know my name is associated with him. He has done the work. I have been only a secondary help. I do not want to take credit that does not belong to me. I am on the revising committee, or was, and I have done what I could to aid him and assist him, and he has consulted with me when it was necessary.

Again in 1913 some misunderstanding had evidently arisen, but not between these two men, as they appear to have worked in entire harmony. On this occasion, General Conference Minutes, page 1774, Heman C. Smith made the following statement:

I wish to make a statement right here, and would be glad if it goes on record. I have been asked by several delegates since the conference began in regard to something that has been reported in different parts of the country affecting President Joseph Smith and myself. You are all aware of the fact that we were associated together in writing and compiling the history. The story has gotten out somewhere in some quarters, that I put into the manuscript some things that reflected on the character of the father of Joseph Smith (Joseph the Seer) and that President Smith demanded of me that I take it out before the matter was submitted to this committee on revision. I wish to say that no such thing ever occurred; that Joseph Smith never made any demand of me to remove anything from the manuscript that I had written, prior to its going to the committee. I have no idea how it started, but I want you to understand that it never happened.

Joseph Smith at once confirmed it in the following brief statement:

I wish to confirm this statement made by Brother Heman C. Smith, that no such occurrence ever took place. I never asked him to take out a scratch that he had written. No matter who said it.

There are no doubt other authoritative statements which may be found published or in unpublished letters: But the above should be sufficient.

Other work of the Presidency prevented Joseph Smith giving personal attention to this work. Elder Heman C. Smith found himself in an anomalous position, acting as an apostle and also as church historian; but in 1906 in the same paragraph from which we have quoted the above, President Joseph Smith spoke very strongly on the need of the Church History, and that Heman C. Smith gave to it the attention necessary. — SAMUEL A. BURGESS.

Faith That God Will Provide

I was impressed years ago by the great faith several of our bishops manifested in their work of gathering funds with which to sustain the church. The work of the church membership had considerable knowledge of the wonderful degree of faith and hope possessed by a former presiding bishop, Brother Edmund L. Kelley. One of his contemporaries, Bishop William Anderson, at one time called me to the office where he handled the funds for Lamoni Stake and said something about like this:

We need $1,100 to meet the urgent demands of the stake, and we have less than $150. The elders' families and those whom we help each month should have this money to-morrow. I called you because I want you to join me in prayer that God will turn men's hearts to the work of the Lord and we may be able to protect our people.

I made several suggestions as to how to raise the required funds, but he disposed of my suggestions kindly and finally, saying he had tried everything now but prayer. I had seen the sick healed; I had witnessed the gifts of the gospel; but never had I witnessed the raising of funds through prayer, and my faith in this direction was not strong. But I respected our stake bishop, and we went to the little room used for private consultation and both prayed. I shall not soon forget the result. Within forty-eight hours we had a surplus of nearly $600 in the treasury, and both of us were stronger in the faith than before. Men who had not been tithepayers had contributed the bulk of our receipts.

Recently there has come into my hands a copy of a letter written by Bishop James F. Keir, in answer to a sister's inquiry, and we quote almost the entire communication that the Saints may get the benefit of the faith there registered. We believe this faith is contagious. Bishop Keir wrote:

Dear Sister: I have your letter of recent date, asking me to relate some of the experiences which I have had in my church work. As you doubtless know, I have never been engaged in missionary work. For a number of years I labored as a local elder in Chicago, but in 1915 in answer to a prayer that God would show me that present-day revelation was a true principle, he answered my prayer by pointing out the work that I would do in the future in his church. It came to me in a dream, and on awakening next morning I told my companion of what had been shown to me in the dream and made the remark that it looked very much as if I would be ordained a bishop. To my surprise she replied: “Well, isn’t that strange? I was shown the same thing in a dream last night,” although I had never made known to her the fact that I was asking the Lord concerning the doctrine of present-day revelation. After I came to Independence, in another dream he showed me that I would become a member of the Presiding Bishopric.

Just about a week ago my mind was greatly concerned in regard to our financial needs as a church. It is a source of considerable anxiety to know that on the first of every month hundreds of missionaries’ wives are looking to us and expecting that a check will be forthcoming to take care of their needs while their husbands are out preaching the gospel. I took the shovel and threw in some more coal.

Imagine how happy I felt next morning when the mail came in, to find about $12,000 had come to us from an unexpected source. This came at an opportune time and puts us in shape so that our allowances will go out promptly on the first of next month. The little children and the grown-ups to whom you will read this letter will be the ones the Lord will use in sending to the Presiding Bishopric the fuel to keep our church fires burning.

Many which reading the above will suggest and recall, we have enough of encouragement to help us past places which might otherwise seem too difficult for our passage. R. J. L.

General Conference to Be Reported in the “Daily Herald”

The principal reports to the conference; the sessions of the various organizations within the church; the educational and business sessions of the General Conference; the personnel, and the social occurrences of importance, will all be reported by members of the Daily Herald staff.

On the evening of April 6 the first issue will be placed in the mails, and each succeeding evening, excepting Sundays, an issue will be mailed to subscribers who have remitted thirty-five cents to the Herald Publishing House.

We cannot overemphasize the importance of getting your subscription into the hands of the publishers before the conference opens. Mail your order now. Print your name and address, or write them with entire plainness, enclose your remittance, and we will do the rest.

Address your orders to Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

“Autumn Leaves” for April

The church magazine for April will contain a review of the work of Robert Browning on “The miracle of the resurrection,” which is engrossing to those who wish to study this subject—one that never can grow old. The serials now running are “Our Bonnie Scotch lassie,” and “My turned-down pages,” two works of great value in spirituality. A pictorial history of the growth and development of the church, using eight good half tones which illustrate and entertain. One of the most entertaining and instructive considerations of the work of science in its battle against epidemics appears from the pen of the editor under the caption, “How Nome was saved.”

Sister Blanche Edwards presents The Parthenon; President Floyd M. McDowell’s Department of Recreation and Expression should be read by every young Saint, and by those who are interested in the young. Our Young People contains “The alma mater of Sister Marietta Walker,” written by Vida E. Smith. Sister Walker will soon be ninety-one years of age; has been a figure in the church for more than half a century, and still reads and digests the matter presented in the church periodicals, and offers beneficial criticism from time to time. The editorials from the pen of Sister Christiana Salyards are of such a nature as to wield a lasting and refining influence upon the reader.
“Carry On in God’s Own Way.”—No. 2.

Our Slogan for the General Conference

Our critic in his editorial, “Common consent if——,” further challenges the integrity of those who will not accept, without question, the proclamation of the Presidency. He says:

I thank God, brethren, that this propaganda which has been working privately is now in the open, so that you may see it and judge of it and its probable consequences.—SAINTS’ HERALD, February 4, 1925.

May we join with him in such thanksgiving, because, without committing ourselves to the unfair and unwarranted implication this statement involves, we also rejoice that we have “in the open” the policy and its meaning which he approves. But this with no credit to him nor yet to the other advocates of supreme directional control.

This advisory council was held behind closed doors. The work of the council was irregular. The general church was not apprised of what was taking place. The President would not even allow minutes to be kept. When some of us, who questioned the wisdom of such secrecy, supplied members of the general ministry with copies of documents considered and passed, we were curtly informed:

It was understood that these documents should not even be loaned for reading outside, to say nothing about being distributed.—Letter of Frederick M. Smith to T. W. Williams, June 18, 1924.

Let us all thank God that this propaganda for supreme directional control “is now in the open, so that you may see it and judge of its probable consequences,” for, when it is referred to the whole people we, too, “do not fear your judgment.”

Minority Rule

We have not attempted to “institute minority rule.” Our critic and his associates have, and are, attempting this very thing. Government through priesthood, among, but not of, the people, is minority rule. Nominations confined to presiding officers is minority rule. Nominations of delegates without free exercise of this right by every member is minority rule.

And we are opposed to any system of church government where “every man is a law unto himself.” We are equally opposed to any system of church government where even one man can become a law unto himself and which is contemplated under this doctrine of supreme directional control.

For Unity, Not Division

Our critic calls the Saints to unity, yet at the same time projects thoughts and stirs up feelings which cannot help but make for division. Instead of trying to “split the church” or to “lead away a faction,” we are trying to assure the people of the impregnability of the work of God, and to urge them not to lose heart but to “carry on in God’s own way” and to trust him, believing that, if we do, all will be well.

We do not propose that the church shall be diverted from its heaven-ordained purpose, its principles perverted, or its government changed. We stand for that order of church government which is clearly revealed in the word of God and will strenuously oppose any attempt at change. And we do maintain our unwavering loyalty to the true church and will stand with one or a million in maintaining its identity.

Is it not a strange anomaly when those who are contending for the regular order of church government are charged with attempting to “split the church” and to “start a faction” while those who would discard chart and compass and direct the church into “uncharted seas” arrogate to themselves the title of “Defenders of the Faith!”

Where the Church Exists

The late Joseph Smith has well said:

If any number, few or many, choose to retain the faith and practices at first obtaining and under which they became members of such body, those persons thus remaining true to the original faith, are, and of right ought to be held to be the original body or church.—SAINTS’ HERALD, April 8, 1896.

Again:

If in the history of such church anything out of harmony with, or antagonistic to that constitution is introduced, or a change is sought to be made in the creed and the government, which is opposed and resisted, or denied by any of the members of the church, such portion of the membership as remain in adherence to the faith as it was before the change was attempted, or made, is the church. Nor does it make any difference in law how few this adhering portion may be, or how numerous the changing membership, the church is that part of the members remaining true to the original tenets.—SAINTS’ HERALD, December 16, 1903.

This is precisely what we meant in the editorial under review. And here is where we stand to-day! The open letter advocates are contending for the order of church government which has obtained throughout our church history. We insist that no unwarranted departures be made. Let those who advocate “change” talk of “fractions,” and “division,” and a “split in the church”; we will abide the divine order and seek to maintain the “one body.”

The advocates of supreme directional control cannot successfully maintain that changes are not contemplated. We have shown by the President’s own words that he believes that changes are necessary. The junior counselor of the President has said that the church must be “forward-looking” and move into "uncharted seas." And the document on church government, if adopted, will revolutionize the order of church government.

And the men who are contemplating these changes may as well understand that we will exhaust every legitimate and possible means to prevent any departure from the law; and any man, regardless of position, must be made to understand that there are enough people in the church who are loyal to the original faith to "carry on in God's own way" and preserve the church as, we believe, God would have it be.

The Test of Inspiration

The supreme directional control document comes to the church with the unqualified indorsement of the First Presidency. It deals with matters of constitutional law. It projects interpretations and proposes application at variance with the well-established practices and usages of the church. It is more far-reaching in its provisions than any document coming from, or through, the present President, and even those for which inspiration has been claimed.

The most ardent supporters must concede that, if this document becomes law, it will involve a revision of the generally accepted understanding of the law already given. Before passing upon it, the church should insist on knowing its origin. We may, therefore, properly inquire: Is this document human or divine? At no time, to our knowledge, has the Presidency claimed inspiration for it.

If it is human, we should not accept it with less caution and scrutiny than we apply to what may emanate from the Almighty. And if inspiration is claimed, it should be subjected to the test for inspirational documents. We cannot afford to give entrance to any document of human origin dealing with church government on terms where we would exclude the divine.

Truth never conflicts with itself. And when we discover conflict between any document, whether inspiration is claimed for it or not, and the accepted word of God, we should hesitate long and prayerfully before committing ourselves thereto. Herein lies the test of inspiration:

A Thorough Examination From All Angles

He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him.—Proverbs 18: 13.

Compromise With the Word of the Lord Already Given

To the law and the testimony, if they speak not according to this it is because there is no light in them.—Isaiah 8: 20.

Cannot Frustrate the Divine Purpose

The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round.—Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1.

"Even a Prophet May Be Mistaken"

Remember, remember, that it is not the work of God that is frustrated, but the work of men; for although a man may have many revelations, and have power to do many mighty works, yet, if he boast in his own strength, and sets at naught the counsel of God, and follows after the dictates of his own will, and carnal desires, he must fall and incur the vengeance of a just God upon him.—Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1.

Presidency Should Unify the Priesthood

The first counselor to the President of the church during the General Conference of 1922 said:

I believe it to be one of the duties of the Presidency to unify the high priesthood. . . . But it seems to me that if presently there does not come more unity the time will come when we of necessity must step aside and permit you to select some one else who can perform that work.—General Conference Minutes, 1922.

It is the duty of the Presidency to unify the high priesthood and, for that matter, the whole church. They have not done so. Conditions have grown continually worse instead of better. Inasmuch as the methods of the last few years have made for division instead of unity, may we suggest that the Presidency discard these innovations which are responsible for this division and let us get back to the divine order?

Most if not all of our trouble, has arisen over changes in church government introduced by President Smith. And ten years is long enough to experiment and in which to demonstrate that there is something radically wrong with the methods employed. If the Presidency will discontinue these innovations, sweep the slate clean of all moves not clearly indicated in the law, mayhap they will find the work of unifying not so difficult.

Compromise, Under No Circumstances

I have been quoted as saying:

Compromise should, under no circumstance, be considered;

Here is what I really said:

Compromise should not, under any circumstance, be considered. To compromise with error for the sake of peace, is treason to the truth.

Why separate the sentences? The reason is obvious.

Our critic makes the following statement, and I am led to wonder whether the wish is father of the thought. He says:

He [Williams] can hardly remain with a body whom he has prejudged and advertised as being in apostasy or an equivalent state.

The careful reader will know how specious this reasoning is. I have prejudged no man. However, in view of the President's statement, "I cannot yield to the opposition," I am justified in asking: Where will he and his apologists stand if the opposition is in the majority? They will either have to back down from this position or "dare to say, I will not obey the voice of the people!" And if President Smith stands adamantine on this point, whether he wins or loses, how will he appear in the light of the statement of his colleague?

Is it not an anomalous situation when we have Frederick M. Smith saying:

I cannot yield to the opposition, so I am in the fight, and it will undoubtedly be a finish fight; either the opposition which has asserted itself is going to become supreme and the rest of us eliminated or vice versa.

and Elbert A. Smith gives answer:

I will therefore abide the decision of the conference, no matter how it will fall, as binding and authoritative and presumably right.

According to Frederick M. Smith, if the opposition wins he cannot yield, and he will therefore eliminate himself. Elbert A. Smith says he will abide the conference no matter how it will fall. He therefore will remain with the church, right or wrong. Why talk "fight to a finish"? Why suggest "elimination"? Why go to the other extreme and pledge ourselves to stand by any action, right or wrong? Both statements are extreme and untenable.

Leading a Faction

Our critic disavows charging me with the purpose to lead a faction, but suggests that my language will incite others to do so. He disavows for himself and his colleague any such intent, but speaking for the Presidency he says: "Conceivably they may relinquish their present official position." Why? Are we to gather from this, if the action goes against their wishes, that either or both may relinquish their official position? There would be no other occasion, that we know of, for doing so.

President Smith has said, "I cannot yield to the opposition," and if either or both of these men insist on having their own way or else relinquishing their office, would they not be guilty of the very thing for which our critic would indict others? And why should this counselor exact a double pledge from the President of the church that he would not lead a faction? Was he fearful that without this pledge the President would do so? I have not charged that either of these men will lead a faction, and I am entitled to the same consideration.

Trusting the People

Our critic continues:

He has told us again and again that we need not fear the judgment of the people. He can never, never, never repudiate their decision as expressed at the coming conference and retain their confidence.—SAINTS' HERALD, February 4.

I have not said that I would repudiate the decision of the conference. I do not fear the judgment of the people when that judgment is unhampered, stimulated by reason, influenced by revelation, and based on facts. What is to be feared is that the judgment of the people may not be expressed, and for the following reasons: prejudgment of minorities in district conferences; delegates instructed without full discussion of both sides of the question; delegations named by presidents of stakes or committees without the order of open nomination from the conference floor.

Numbers Not Always Infallible

Numbers are not always a proof of the verity of a position or else the Catholic Church and the Mormons are right. If our Pilgrim Fathers had reasoned as our brother does, they would have remained under the rule of the king. At the risk of being again misrepresented, let me say: We are going to try in every possible way to maintain organic solidarity, but not by stifling conscience or closing our eyes to the facts. We do not believe in the infallibility of majorities. Majorities may be wrong. Minorities may be right. A man should pool his wisdom always with the mass in a search for group converse. But in the finality, reason and conscience must dictate the attitude of each individual. And no man should be made to suffer because of the exercise of this right. As J. S. Mills has aptly said:

If all mankind, minus one, were of one opinion, mankind would be no more justified in silencing that one person than he, if he had the power, would be justified in silencing mankind.—Liberty, p. 33.

We will stand with those who remain true to the revelations of God, for there are some things which the majority in a theocratic-democracy cannot do and remain in favor with the Almighty. They cannot overthrow the divine order. They cannot divorce the people from the church government. They cannot substitute assent for consent. They cannot place supreme directional control in the hands of one or three men without changing the order of church government.

A Pledge to Abide the Conference Action

Our critic makes the following pledge:

I will therefore abide the decision of the conference, no matter how it will fall, as binding and authoritative and presumably right.—SAINTS' HERALD, February 4, 1925.

The whole argument of the writer is to make it appear as the imperative duty for minorities always, and under all circumstances, to submit to majorities. We have never committed ourselves to such fallacy.
We are not prepared to admit that there are no extremes to which the General Conference could go and still represent the church. The law of God does not tolerate religious suicide.

If minorities have always to submit to majorities, it would be intensely interesting to hear this writer’s defense of all the movements which have made for progress and which were born of exactly this progress. Nearly every prophet of the Old Testament was a minority which disturbed the peace of the majority. Christianity itself was the protest of the minority against the wrongs of the majority. So was the Reformation, so were the Pilgrim Fathers, and Joseph Smith, and the Latter Day Saints.

And What of the Reorganization?

Where would our critic have stood had he been in Nauvoo when the majority of the church in that place became the victims of the seducing spirit of that time? Would he have supported the dominant government of the church and contended that the decision of the majority was “binding, and authoritative, and presumably right”? If he would not, then his whole house of cards comes tumbling to the ground. And, if he would, then he is out of place in the Reorganization, and his place is with the church in Utah. Let him take whichever horn of the dilemma he may elect.

It is schoolboy logic to argue that the Reorganization represented the majority of the old church. When the church broke up at the death of Joseph Smith, the great bulk of the membership held aloof and dissolved. The majority of the active ministry and membership went with Brigham Young, and it was a very small minority, indeed, which held out against the organized body. Would our critic have attached himself to this majority of active members?

According to this man’s reasoning, the men and women who stood out against the majority at Nauvoo were in the wrong. They should have remained with this majority and abided the decision as “binding, and authoritative, and presumably right.” If it had not been for a few men like William Marks who had a different conception of loyalty to that set forth by our critic, the Reorganization would never have materialized.

If this writer had been in Nauvoo in 1844, would he, too, have united with the majority in saying that “Brother Marks is lying; he is apostatizing,” because he revealed certain facts and stood for the original teachings of the church and refused to follow the lead of those who urged that changes should be made in the progressive march of the church? His logic so suggests, and his words tend to incite others to blind their eyes to the truth and to swallow anything and everything which a “superior” officer or a majority may hand to them.

If our critic is correct, then William Marks and Emma Smith and others should have remained with the majority in Nauvoo and abided its decision with the assumption that it was right. This was exactly the position of thousands who followed Brigham Young to Utah. But, thanks be to God, there were some loyal souls who had the courage of their convictions and who felt that loyalty to truth superseded loyalty to men singly or collectively, majorities or minorities, and to such we owe much that is worth while in our religion to-day.

Maintain the Organic Solidarity of the Church

Our critic urges:

Maintain the organic solidarity of the church ... abide the decision of the conference, no matter how it may fall, as binding and presumably right.—Saints’ Herald, February 4, 1925.

And I seem to hear the high priest and rabbis of Jewry crying out to the church in their day:

Maintain the organic solidarity of the church and resist with your might any attempt by this man Jesus, who is a fomenter of schisms, to lead away a faction or to promote the specious and unfounded propaganda that the great body of the church are in apostasy.

And again, I hear the pope at Rome sending forth his Bull of Excommunication when Luther, under God, was moving for the truth. And still again we hear the priests of Protestantism calling upon their votaries to remain by the church and repudiate this so-called prophet of the nineteenth century who asserts that the majority of the people are in apostasy.

And then we hear Brigham Young and his associates in 1844 urging the people on with the specious argument to abide the decision of the majority and follow the priesthood wherever they may lead. But such was not the cry of the prophets and apostles and servants of almighty God throughout the ages! If we brush aside mere sentiment and emotion long enough to calmly analyze the term loyalty, we will find that what some call treason is the quintessence of loyalty. The man who cannot be loyal to the truth for truth’s sake is a weakling, wherever he stands. And the man who is true to his convictions, though he stands alone, is the only man who, in the finality, can be true to any man.

Majorities and Minorities

The possibility of a minority being right and a majority being wrong has been ridiculed by several writers recently in Herald articles. This is certainly a shifting of positions by the advocates of supreme directional control. Last summer we heard much concerning the “proneness of the people to wander” and were pointed to such examples as the demand of the people for a golden calf when Moses was temporarily called from their midst. We were also reminded of the people’s cry, “Away with this man Jesus; we want Barabbas!”

Such things then signified in the minds of the advocates of supreme directional control the need of a strong leadership over the people, as they were not able to govern themselves. Now, after representatives of government through priesthood have had a free hand to visit the districts throughout the church while at the same time the official channels of contact were closed to those holding different official views, we hear another plea: “We will abide the will of the people. Let the people rule!” “The majority is presumably correct.” “The minority cannot decide that the majority is wrong.” “Who dares say, I will not take my stand with the people?”

The self-appointed spokesman for Joseph Smith cannot find that this great man ever indorsed either of these extreme positions. Our late prophet tried to point out principles of truth and paths of safety. He was careful to make it plain that the majority of the people could be led astray, yet for this reason he did not advocate the exclusion of the people from the government. He combined the voice of the people with the will of God. His philosophy was safe and conservative and the very opposite of the principle of supreme directional control by one or a few.

My Church, Right or Wrong

Loyalty produced by the beating of drums and bugle calls and an appeal to the emotions is not always safe and sound. It finds its reaction in that age-old sophistry, “My church, may she ever be right; but my church, right or wrong.” “My church, right or wrong,” puts blinkers on men’s eyes so they cannot see aright. It materializes the shadow and would annihilate the substance.

Abiding the Decision of the Conference

Some are making a great hue and cry to abide the decision of the coming conference, and yet these very men have violated and ignored the actions of previous conferences. The last General Conference declared that certain officers because of their responsibility should not act on the Standing High Council, yet one of the men who has been most vociferous in crying, “Who dares?” has ignored and violated this order of the conference.

Where We Stand

We are not in favor of change in church government. We do not favor a fight to the finish. We are not working for the elimination of any man or group. We have obligated ourselves to maintain the constitutional law of the church as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, and to recognize the rights and powers of the priesthood as therein defined. In the light of the present confusion we have the right to ask, and to expect, that the advocates of this document on church government will repudiate this strange doctrine and not precipitate church chaos.

To talk about the possibility of a “split church” is to ignore facts. The church is already divided over supreme directional control. If the majority should decide for or against it, this in itself, would not convince the minority that the majority is right. A majority either way will not solve our problem. If this thing is forced into action by a bare majority, the responsibility for results must rest with its proponents. And may I ask: Are you justified in crowding this proposition, which bears no evidence of divine origin, to such dire ends?

Unity is not in organization, nor in government, nor in forms, nor in machinery, so much as in attitudes and relationships. The institution may dissolve. The majority may follow off after other gods, but the kingdom of God remains. This kingdom is an historical fact. He who said, “Upon this rock I will build my church,” knew whereof he spoke. The true church will abide on the rock, and regardless as to whether the majority or the minority departs, the truth remains that those who are builded upon the rock are, in fact, the church.

And now let me reassert and reaffirm, without modification, the statement which has produced this emotional appeal of our critic, and say to the ministry and membership of the church:

We must carry on in God’s own way with a firm and steadfast faith that God, who restored the gospel in the beginning with all of its attendant powers and blessings, and who sustained the remnant during the dark and cloudy day following the apostasy of 1844, will still maintain his own cause and continue to bless the labors of those who remain true to the faith once delivered to the saints.

Our slogan for the coming conference: Let us carry on!

T. W. WILLIAMS.

Correction: Wrong Name as Author

In the HERALD for March 11, page 266, is an article whose authorship is given as John K. Hansen. The author of this article, “Changes of the past few years,” is Elder John A. Hansen, of Weston, Iowa, well known in that part of the church.
Do We Need Another Department?

BY F. M. McDOWELL

In recent issues of the HERALD there appear certain very conspicuous advertisements addressed to “Brother and Sister Delegate to General Conference” and in support of a resolution which is to be presented at the coming conference, asking that Zion’s Religio-Literary Society be reorganized for the primary purpose of the study of the Book of Mormon.

Were it not for the fact that the assertions made in support of this movement are so far-reaching and in some cases even misleading, and furthermore that the results of such a movement would interfere seriously with the present departmental program, we would be inclined to let them pass without consideration in the columns of the HERALD. As it is, we believe that it is only just and fair that the authorized departments of the church be permitted to reply to the assertions of those who support this movement.

It will be the purpose of this article to show:

1. That the arguments advanced in support of this resolution are based on assumptions and inferences that do not find support in facts.
2. That the movement contemplated would be decided unwise, since experience has already proved it impractical and since it would overlap upon the work of departments already established and be a source of confusion throughout the church.
3. That the move is absolutely unnecessary, since everything asked for in the resolution is already adequately provided for by existing departmental programs. This applies not only to present needs, but also contemplated growth.

The Original Purpose of Zion’s Religio-Literary Society

It is repeatedly said that Zion’s Religio-Literary Society was organized to promote the study of the Book of Mormon. This statement is not supported by the facts. The preamble of the original constitution of this society states:

Feeling the need of a systematic and united effort to do good to others, as well as to mutually improve ourselves in the principles and practice of morality and Christianity, and also to secure to ourselves social and intellectual development; we adopt the following for our organization and government.

In this same constitution the object of the society is stated as follows:

The object of this society shall be to interest and enlist the energies of the young in the field of Christian usefulness before them; to promote sociability and the spirit of brotherly solicitude and helpfulness among them and to help them to qualify themselves, spiritually and intellectually, for service in the church.

Nowhere in this constitution nor in the discussions that immediately followed its adoption do we find the study of the Book of Mormon mentioned as the specific purpose of this society.

Our contention finds further support in the columns of the church papers during the years following the organization of the society. In Autumn Leaves of April, 1894, under the title, “What think ye?” Elder J. F. McDowell, editor of the Department of Correspondence of Zion’s Religio-Literary Society, says:

What were the primary objects had in view by the founding of the Religio-Literary Society? Are we to understand that it is to be a “one idea” institution? Was religion alone to be found discussed at its several meetings? Were the “textbooks” of the church to be the only books whose contents are to be scanned? If it is simply confined to religion, then “tis no better than the “Y. P. S. C. E.” or the “Epworth League.” We require something broader, and superior by virtue of praiseworthy diversification.—Autumn Leaves, vol. 7, p. 278.

In December, 1898, J. A. Gunsonley, president of the society, writes:

One of the main objects of our work is to cultivate social pleasures for our young people. What is “proper” social pleasure? Assuredly any pleasure is proper which has for its object the uplifting of humanity, and which does in fact in its effects beget nobler aspirations, worthier ambitions, and holier desires; and anything less, or the opposite to this, is admittedly improper. One of our efforts, therefore, is to bring our young people together in that kind of social relationship which will cultivate an acquaintance with each other characterized by frankness and devotion to the truth.

In Autumn Leaves for September, 1902, Elder J. F. Mintun, who was for a number of years an active worker in the Religio, discusses its purpose and sphere at some length. Among other things Brother Mintun states:

Another asks, Is not the Religio occupying a part of the sphere designed to be occupied by the Sunday school? We answer, If the study of the Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants, were the prime object to be attained by the Religio, then truly, Yes; but that is not the case, and has not been so understood by those who were moved upon to suggest, and to assist in the organizing of the society. The Religio came into existence to meet a demand existing among the young people, and should be made to satisfy that demand. The demand exists among social, intellectual, and spiritual lines, all of which are comprehended in the Religio.—Autumn Leaves, vol. 15, p. 421.

In the February, 1898, Autumn Leaves there is quoted a paper prepared by Louise Palfrey for a Sunday school institute held at Saint Joseph, Missouri, the preceding December. This paper discusses at considerable length the value of a definite and systematic course of study for Religio workers, presenting the difficulties of attempting too much, and finally concluding that the society should take up either church history and revelation or Book of Mormon and archaeology. The paper concludes with this significant question: "Shall church history and revelation or Book of Mormon and archaeology be studied?—all of them, I should say, as we come to them." At the conclusion of the paper some one asked Sister Palfrey to give her opinion as to which of the studies should be taken up first. She replied that as to the importance of the subjects themselves there might be no preference, but that she preferred the Book of Mormon and archaeology because of its availability to church members at less expense and because the items of archaeology necessary to the study of the lesson could be published in the Religio Department of Autumn Leaves. (Autumn Leaves, vol. 11, p. 69.) What a golden opportunity for the sister to have said that the Religio was organized for the purpose of studying the Book of Mormon, hence there could be no issue as to its course of study. The reason she did not answer thus is obvious.

It is further of interest to know that in the revision of the constitution of the society in 1898, the original preamble and purpose were inserted word for word, and furthermore that this constitution provided for the following committees: Program, Look-out, Relief, Social, Good Literature, Temperance, Calling, Music, Missionary, and Flower. This indicates something of the breadth of the program of the society. Nowhere in this revised constitution is the Book of Mormon mentioned.

It should be added that in the convention of the society held in April, 1897, it was decided that the work of the society be divided into four departments, i. e., Religious, Literary, Temperance, and Historical. Here we find the Book of Mormon mentioned as the course of study to be taken up under the religious department only. Each of the other three departments was to provide a program which was evidently considered of equal importance.

Other Assumptions

It is not at all difficult to find that other assumptions and inferences of those who support the resolution are equally at fault, e. g., it is asserted that a certain prophecy given in 1900 shows that the society met God's approval, the inference being that this approval was given because the work was limited to the study of the Book of Mormon. It is very interesting to note that this prophecy was given just two years following the revision of the constitution which provided for the activities mentioned above. It is also worth noticing that in the issue preceding the one in which the prophecy is quoted, Sister Louise Palfrey finds it necessary to encourage literary programs and calls attention to the fact that "writing papers, reading, reciting, giving talks, rendering music, etc., should not be neglected," and that however interesting lessons are, they should stop on time so as not to interfere with the above activities. Clearly, the society that received approval from God was doing more than conducting class work in the Book of Mormon.

Again, it was inferred that the study of the Book of Mormon cannot be carried on successfully with other activities. We happen to have at hand the reports to the twenty-second annual convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society, held in 1916. At this time the society was publishing two grades of quarterlies, both dealing with the Book of Mormon. The total membership as given was 12,596. In this same convention the vice president reports with pride that the various locals have held "264 outdoor games, 27 outdoor excursions, 5 sportings, 20 outings, 9 excursions, 5 receptions, 43 socials, 11 parties." This same report includes lengthy statements in regard to the work of the temperance department, the normal department, gospel literature bureau, social purity board, and library commission. Certainly the Religio was not in 1915 limited to the study of the Book of Mormon, nor can its success of that year be said to be due entirely to the study of that one subject.

Again, it is inferred that the departments at present do not provide adequately for the need mentioned in the resolution, i. e., study of the Book of Mormon. Since this contention will be discussed later, we believe it is only necessary to mention here the fact that the Department of Recreation and Expression is at present printing over six thousand Book of Mormon quarterlies of the senior grade and has expressed its willingness to print double the number if necessary to meet the demand. Furthermore, at least fifty district superintendents in reply to our specific question have said that all the locals in their districts have had ample opportunity to study the Book of Mormon if they so desire.

Space will not permit a further consideration of these erroneous inferences. Suffice it to say that it is perfectly clear that Zion's Religio-Literary Society was not organized for the specific purpose of the study of the Book of Mormon; that its activities have never been limited to that study, even in its most successful years; that in the nature of the work carried on by this society there has been comparatively little change, even when the name has been changed; and finally that the departments as now organized are supplying adequately the demands for the study of the Book of Mormon. Any inferences to the contrary are most certainly not supported by the facts.

Would Such a Move Be Wise?

The second reason why we find it necessary to oppose the movement to reorganize Zion’s Religio-Literary Society is that we believe that such would be definitely unwise.

1. The experience of the Religio shows conclusively that it is unwise to attempt to limit a department to the study of one subject. In spite of the enthusiasm for Book of Mormon study, it was found that after a few years it was necessary to take up the Doctrine and Covenants. After a few years of study of the latter subject, it was found advisable to change back again to the Book of Mormon. There is every reason to believe that such would be the experience again.

When the interest in the study of the Book of Mormon was at its height, it was found necessary to carry on a wide range of expressional and recreational activities. In support of this, permit me to quote from the first Book of Mormon quarterly prepared by Louise Palfrey for use beginning October, 1902. Speaking of programs Sister Palfrey says:

The object of the programs is to give us practice in the use of what we know; to awaken, develop, and train our talents to usefulness by exercising them in thinking, speaking, writing, reciting, reading, debating, and cultivating musical gifts, vocal and instrumental, in channels intellectual, ennobling, and spiritual. It will be seen that the program feature of our work is very important, and the time allotted it should not be infringed on. It affords our young people opportunities to practice in the mere imbibing of knowledge cannot do. It teaches them to contribute towards the general advancement; to take part; to become active constituents in the progress of the work, and meet the larger needs of the maturing minds and unfolding natures of our young people, who can no longer be held and satisfied with class work only.

In this same quarterly the editor discusses at some length the great value of a wide range of committee activities. The extent and nature of these committees has already been referred to in this article. In view of his, may we ask the proponents of reorganization if they expect to carry on the work formerly carried on by Zion’s Religio-Literary Society? If they do not, they can hardly claim to be the old Zion’s Religio-Literary Society; and if they do, then they at once trespass upon the field now covered by the Department of Recreation and Expression.

2. The move would be unwise because it would establish a precedent which would seem to say that at any time a group desires to study a single subject it may organize a department for that purpose. If the claim of the supporters of this move is just, then why not organize a department for the study of the Doctrine and Covenants, and another for church history?

3. The move would be unwise because it would of necessity be a source of much confusion in the various branches throughout the church. A large percentage of the locals are already studying the Book of Mormon. Practically all of this is carried on in connection with the Department of Recreation and Expression. This in connection with Sunday school work and the classes carried on by the Department of Women would seem to be sufficient for most if not all of our branches. There is every reason to believe that the addition of another department would bring confusion, misunderstanding, duplication of effort, and be a constant source of contention. Anyone spending a week in the offices of the general departments at present and noting the type of problems that already arise and the difficulty in keeping the present three departments from infringing upon each other’s territory would be convinced of the absolute folly of organizing another department to do the same work.

Is the Move Necessary?

In view of certain very significant facts which can be presented but briefly here, we are obliged to oppose this movement to reorganize as one that is absolutely unnecessary.

1. The outline of departmental activities which has been adopted by all three departments and finally approved by General Conference we believe to be still in force. This outline, known as the Report of the Coordinating Committee, was adopted by the Religio, by a vote of 124 to 5. This report specifies clearly the special work of each of the departments. We quote in part:

1. The Sunday School, primarily concerned with religious instruction.

2. The Religio, primarily interested in social and recreational development.

3. The Woman’s Auxiliary, primarily having to do with the interests of the women of the church.

Under such an outline we hold it absolutely unnecessary to organize another department for a single subject of study.

2. The need mentioned in the demand for a reorganization, i. e., that of the study of the Book of Mormon, is being adequately provided for by present departmental machinery. We believe it will be safe to say that all of the officers of the departments have understood that the transition from “auxiliaries” to more highly specialized “departments” would of necessity be slow. Consequently, we have found it wise to urge as a part of Religio work and later as a part of the work of the Department of Recreation to take an interest in the study of the Book of Mormon, and to cooperate with the schools in its study.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
Recreation and Expression, that systematic class work be carried on and that courses of study be prepared to meet this demand. Going forward under this conviction, the executive officers of the Religio in April, 1921, approved by a unanimous vote a program of editorial work outlined by the writer which provided for quarterlies in social problems, child study, economics, civics, and kindred subjects. The object of this move was to provide a wide range of subject matter from which our people might choose.

Was such a program far removed from the original broad purpose of the Religio? Was such an effort in conflict with the divine command, “Study all good books?” Could such an effort be interpreted as being sufficient proof that we were not in favor of the study of the Book of Mormon in the Religio? Are such studies entirely out of harmony with the program of the church? The answer to these should be obvious, yet some of our church people have in each case drawn the wrong conclusion.

We were in the midst of this program of preparing courses when we were obliged to reprint some earlier Book of Mormon quarterlies to meet a rather sudden demand for courses in that subject. Since we were not able to finance two courses for senior classes at the same time, we discontinued the regular quarterly and for the past year have been furnishing only the reprint of the Book of Mormon quarterlies. This has given every local that cared to do so a chance to study the Book of Mormon. The number of quarterlies printed has been each quarter determined by the demand. As far as we know, no one has been prevented from taking up this course if he cared to do so. Certainly, it is not necessary to organize another department for this purpose!

A Program Authorized and Needs Being Met

For a number of years we have been conscious of a growing demand for a revision of the Sunday school courses of study in harmony with our growing knowledge of pedagogy, and to more adequately meet our needs. Consequently in 1919 a “consulting board” was provided for this purpose. To make a long story short, the facts are that when this board took up this work it soon found that it would not only be wisdom, but in harmony with both economy and sound pedagogy, to plan a great variety of courses of study for various ages and needs. This necessitated a policy of close cooperation with other departments, and such was readily assented to by the departments. Consequently, the consulting board has entered upon a program of editorial work not only with the approval of the three departments, but of the general church as well. (See General Conference Minutes.)

In October, 1923, in his report to General Conference, the general superintendent of the Sunday school called attention to the need of a course covering the Book of Mormon and urged that this need be among the first to be met. (See General Conference Minutes, 1923, p. 3373.) In harmony with this recommendation the consulting board secured an editor and put him to work preparing a systematic course in the Book of Mormon. As mentioned above, however, a rather insistent demand for quarterlies in the Book of Mormon made it necessary for the Department of Recreation and Expression to reprint without revision a former series. Since this series covered a period of two years, it was thought wise for the time being to stop work on the Book of Mormon lessons and put the above mentioned editor to work on another subject.

The above explains the present situation in regard to the Book of Mormon courses. What of the future? The consulting board, acting upon the authority of the three departments and the General Conference, has employed editors and put them to work preparing a variety of courses. It is planned that these will cover a wide range of subjects, including the three standard books of the church, and that they will be suitable for various ages and needs. It is planned that these courses will be available for any and all departments or groups which desire to conduct systematic study. It is understood by the three departments that this work will include:

a. Courses for the Sunday school.
b. Courses for an additional study hour such as now used by the Religio or Department of Recreation and Expression.
c. Courses for a more extended study work in groups or classes of various kinds. Many of these would undoubtedly be used by the Department of Women.

May we repeat that it is the intention of the board to prepare suitable courses in the Book of Mormon at regular intervals or as the need arises. The writer is certain that he represents the opinion of the board correctly in this and also in the conviction that the organization of another department for the preparation and supervision of courses in the Book of Mormon alone is absolutely unnecessary.

In addition to the above, the Department of Recreation and Expression is committed to a policy of:

a. Encouraging systematic study.
b. Providing courses of study to meet demands not immediately met by the consulting board.
c. Continuing in our endeavor to furnish adequate direction and supervision of recreational, social, and expressional activities.

This department is now printing between six and seven thousand senior quarterlies dealing with the Book of Mormon, also nearly two thousand copies of... the junior quarterly in that subject. If the demand arises we shall print double that number.

Under these conditions we repeat that we consider it absolutely unnecessary to organize another department which would have as its sole purpose the preparation and supervision of courses of study in the Book of Mormon. This need is now being met and will be met. Why have the confusion and expense of wholly unnecessary machinery?

Does the Name Justify the Change?

About the only prop remaining for the proponents of a reorganization of Zion’s Religio-Literary Society is their feeling that it does not seem proper to study the Book of Mormon under the direction of the Department of Recreation and Expression. We have already called the reader’s attention to the fact that Zion’s Religio-Literary Society always has maintained a more or less varied program of social and expressional activities, together with its class work. Since when has it become a sin to mix the two?

Again, the present administration is not responsible for the name “Recreation and Expression.” Now we have it, however, we are inclined to believe that it would do more harm than good to make another change, at least in the immediate future. There are several good departmental workers on each side of this issue. Many have no objections to the use of the name “Religio” as applied to locals, even under the present organization. Certain it is that a very large number of the locals have continued to use that name. In a leaflet prepared by the general superintendent and widely circulated during the past year we find the following:

The General officers have no objection to the use of the name “Religio” if the local prefers that name. The important thing after all is not name, but work accomplished.

As a matter of fact, the work carried on by the present department of Recreation and Expression is in every respect practically identical to that carried on by the Religio Department for the past few years.

There is one point, however, upon which practically all departmental workers are agreed—a reversion to the term “Religio” or the adoption of a new name must not mean a cessation of our efforts to furnish proper supervision and direction to recreational and expressional activities. Departmental workers are also agreed that the Department of Recreation and Expression should continue to furnish courses in the Book of Mormon as well as in other subjects until the consulting board is ready to meet these needs.

In view of the above, we respectfully ask, Why this hue and cry about Book of Mormon study? Wherein the justice of the claim that such study is now in strange company, or that it is being sadly neglected? Why overlook a program that has been approved by the departments and by General Conference and has already been partially carried out? Why cause confusion and unnecessary expense by duplication of effort? Why organize a new department to meet supposed needs when these needs are already provided for? Why? we ask; and echo answers, Why?

Where Would Joseph Smith Have Stood?

BY ISRAEL A. SMITH

In a recent article a writer has undertaken to tell where the late President would be standing to-day as to the present controversy were he yet living, and the subject was introduced by the following language:

Joseph Smith, so often appealed to in this controversy, is again called as a witness, and his words used as if to encourage a schism.

It is my understanding that the words of Joseph Smith were used to prevent any possible schism by emphasizing the necessity of all adhering to the principles controlling in the affairs of the Reorganization since its inception. Here is one of the quotations which speaks for itself:

It is a principle well known in civil law, and ought to be in ecclesiastical circles, that whenever a church is founded, its principles of faith formulated, its traditions fulminated from the forum, pulpit, and press, those declarations become the constitution of its corporate and legal existence. If in the history of such church, anything out of harmony with, or antagonistic to that constitution is introduced, or a change is sought to be made in the creed and government, which is opposed and resisted, or denied by any of the members of the church, such portion of the membership as remains in adherence to the faith as it was before the change was attempted or made, is the church. Nor does it make any difference in law how few this adhering portion may be, or how numerous the changing membership, the church is that part of the members remaining true to the original tenets.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS’ HERALD, December 16, 1903.

Since the above principle “ought to be known in ecclesiastical circles,” why should the repetition of it in the HERALD columns now lay our brethren open to the charge of encouraging a schism?

The one making this accusation, on page 208 of the HERALD of February 25, 1925, bases considerable argument upon the phrase “against the wish, knowledge, and consent of the membership,” which appears in the midst of one of the two statements quoted from the writings of Joseph Smith. The emphasis placed upon his expression tends to justify and license any change in doctrine or government which might by any means receive a majority vote.

Had the brother quoted the sentence which immediately followed the phrase “against the wish, knowledge, and consent of the membership,” there would have been no basis for his argument. The sentence omitted reads:

And if any member, few or many, choose to retain the faith and practices at first obtaining and under which they became members of such body, those persons thus remaining true to the original faith are, and of right ought to be held to be the original body, or church.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, April 8, 1896.

Upon other occasions Joseph Smith stated clearly his understanding of the rights of majorities and minorities. It is very likely that if he were here now he would be found defending the same principles:

There are those who are of the opinion that our present system of obtaining the common consent is not effectual; and by some it is thought that the absolute decision of the graver matters rest with the few, and that common consent is a myth and a mistake. We are not of this class, however; for this reason, the intuition of the Spirit is vouchedsafe to all, under like conditions; and when acting in an assembly the unity of the spirit should more than compensate for any difference of mere opinion, or the influence of self-interest and personal influence exercised upon the part of individuals. It may sometimes be that a wave of erroneous understanding may sweep over an assembly and lead the majority astray; but this will seldom occur; and in a body like the church, acknowledging the supremacy of God and the right of Christ to rule, and the absolute governing of divine intervention, there is an assurance, almost amounting to a guarantee that a mistake made by a majority will not be permitted to fatally injure the work for the intended good of the whole. When personal influence, ambition, and private interest secure the popular voice and assume the control the majority may be led astray; but it will be a minority influence that leads. Where such a thing occurs there are safeguards in the law whereby the rights of the minority can be preserved and with them the liberties of all be preserved. Such a case as this has already occurred, and the minority are slowly forging their way to the front against almost overwhelming odds in numbers and power. That the truth, in this case represented by the minority, will prevail, we have not a doubt.—Joseph Smith, editorial in SAINTS' HERALD, December 25, 1895.

One way in which “the majority be lead astray” by “a minority influence” is by the latter canvassing the church in the presentation of their views and using their official influence to encourage the instruction of the delegates so as to bar the exercise of reason by them at the General Conference; or further guidance by revelation. I do not believe that the “wish, knowledge, and consent of the membership” is truly expressed when delegates are selected to represent them and so bound in advance that they cannot make the change which the membership would if they were there to vote in person.

Temple Lot Decision

Furthermore, the Reorganization has heralded to the world the famous Temple Lot decision by Judge Philips. It has been put in tract form and widely distributed. The following extract therefrom may profitably be compared with the quotations from the writings of our late President to see what Joseph Smith actually meant when he undertook to give the civil law as to the rights of majorities and minorities:

In case of disorganization and factional divisions, of an ecclesiastical body, the settled rule of the civil courts is that the title to church property—is in that part of it which is acting in harmony with its own law, and the ecclesiastical laws and usages, customs and principles, which were accepted among them before the dispute began, and the standards for determining which party is right.” The right of ownership abides with that faction, great or small, which is “in favor of the government of the church in operation, with which it was connected at the time the trust was declared.”

The courts will adjudge the property to the members, however few in numbers they may be, who adhere to the form of church government, or acknowledge the church connection, for which the property was acquired.

Justice Caton ... aptly states the rule to be, “that where a church is erected for the use of a particular denomination or religious persuasion, a majority of the members cannot abandon the tenets and doctrines of the denomination and retain the right to the use of the property, but such secessionists forfeit all right to the property, even if but a single member adheres to the original faith and doctrine of the church. This rule is founded in reason and justice—those who adhere to the original tenets and doctrines, for the proscription of which a church has been erected, are the sole beneficiaries designed by the donors; and those who depart from and abandon those tenets and doctrines, cease to be beneficiaries and forfeit all claim to the title and use of such property.”

The quotation used from Joseph Smith is good law and will continue to be such for all time. The partial quotation used by the brother did not do justice to the context.

The implication that the quotation was used by our brethren in an effort to show what Joseph Smith would do, if living, in the event General Conference should adopt the document on church government proposed by the April Council, is unfair and unwarranted.

Who Is Authorized to Speak for Joseph Smith.

In the article, “Let the church continue intact,” page 208, the author sets himself up as a competent witness by saying:

> We, too, knew Joseph Smith. And most of all, we remember his moderation and his tolerance. From this intimate acquaintance and fond memory we are as qualified as are our friends to judge as to what he would think, and feel, and do, were he alive to-day.

www.LatterDayTruth.org
And having thus qualified himself to give opinion evidence and without opportunity for any to object, he proceeds to tell "understandingly" what the late President would do in the premises. And he says: "We say—and all the people who knew him will say Amen—"

But not all the people who knew him do say "Amen" to this presumption. I myself do not and would not presume to "say" what the deceased President would do. I could guess only. My guess would probably be as good as that of any other, and I may venture one before I close.

I say to the proponents of supreme directional control. If you believe in the divinity of your document, do your supremest to support it by solid law and argument, let the result be what it may, but let the issue be decided by reason and not sentiment. Let truth prevail even if the heavens fall.

I protest on other grounds. I object to anybody attempting to speak for the late President upon a certain subject who has turned his back upon and repudiates the specific, clear, and penetrating interpretations of law thereon which that prophet gave to this church. If anybody presumes to put words in his mouth, let it be done by those who are fully in sympathy with the principles which he labored fifty-four years to establish.

It must be apparent to all that when writers in the HERALD will indorse these words from the late President Joseph Smith, then their claim to act as his spokesmen in the present controversy will come with better grace:

Against Government by Priesthood

In treating of the rights of the membership—"the people of the Saints of the Most High"—it is safe to say that, all the rights not clearly delegated by commandment of God to the ministry, nor prohibited by it to the people, are reserved to the people. And that therefore their voice is made essential in the government of the church of God.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, December 17, 1892.

Against Supremacy of Any Man or Quorum

The Reorganized Church has not set a seer, prophet or revelator as of supreme importance and rule in and over the church to the belittling or exclusion of the Twelve, Seventy, or any other of the officers which the government of the church makes necessary. No such thought or disposition has ever been manifested in the governmental affairs of the church. No effort has been made to place one man, or one quorum in the supremacy, one over the other in any absoluteness of rule.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, September 28, 1898.

Against Spiritual Authorities Dominating Temporal Affairs

The monetary affairs of the church are under the personal control and inspection of a quorum of men, who are so far as they can be removed from suspicion of domination by the spiritual heads of the church. Besides this the three leading quorums of the spiritual authorities, hold as we have elsewhere shown, independent supervision of its own affairs, with the right of inquiry, and should be by reason of their position, free from suspicion of desire to dominate the monetary arm of the service.—Joseph Smith, SAINTS' HERALD, September 1, 1880.

Did He Speak in Vain?

The brother says:

Our friends have quoted the words of Joseph Smith in vain. Joseph Smith would take his stand with the people.

I agree in part—in part only. I agree that we have quoted Joseph Smith in vain to the extent that what we have quoted from him remains ignored and unanswered; and if supreme directional control in the Presidency be indorsed by this church, then I say not only have we quoted in vain, but in vain did he ever use them in the first place, and all his efforts to save the church from absolutism have come to naught.

We agree thus far. But I would not concur in the thought that he would unreservedly pledge himself to "stand with the people," because he recognized it was possible that "the majority may be led astray" by a "minority influence." I much prefer to believe he would have stood with God and his law, whatever the people should do. "Who would dare?" Why, Joseph Smith would dare to stand by the right as he saw it, if he stood alone.

"The Presidency have said before time they will bide the voice of the people." Why not—why should they not? Will their status be changed one whit by a refusal of General Conference to adopt this strange doctrine which has been so much explained by its friends and yet so little understood by anybody? But if adopted, can any rational person stand up in our midst and say it is the old order? Certainly not. It is a change which elevates the Presidency to the throne of "supremacy" and belittles other quorums to the status "servants" of the Presidency.

The Presidency accepted service under the established order. Of course the Presidency would not cast a cloud upon their record by refusing to continue if they do not get the added power they are now seeking.

Now, in closing, I quote from the brother's article:

Yes, we know full well what Joseph Smith would do. He would set his face like flint against any and every encouragement for a split.

I honestly believe he would, but he would have started earlier, nor would he be driving through the "wedge" which is the cause of the present condition.

In the first place, if Joseph Smith were alive, in my opinion—and I think I am as competent a
The Reasonable Interpretation

One of the early affirmations of the "Contrast" is:

A document which is capable of being interpreted extremely and unconstitutionally should be challenged and that very vigorously.—Herald, p. 250.

Brother Rushton should have been present when the "Faith of our fathers" was in the making. Would he have challenged "very vigorously" such doctrines as the following, which is certainly "capable of extreme and unconstitutional interpretation"?

Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words and commandments, which he shall give you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his words ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith; for by doing these things, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; yea, and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good, and his name's glory.—Doctrine and Covenants 19:2.

The most sublime delineations of Christian idealism are "capable of extreme and unconstitutional interpretation." Opposition to the latter-day evangel is based on just such extreme and unconstitutional interpretation." As is claimed in the "Contrast," the writings of the late venerable President of the church are capable of the same mal-interpretation. But neither of these admitted facts is sufficient to justify us in challenging "and that very vigorously" either the words of the Master, the divinity of the church, or the fidelity to truth of the mission of the church, or the fidelity to truth of the writings of Joseph. The "inalienable right" of every pronunciamento is to the "reasonable interpretation" which we ask for the document on church government.

Any document is best interpreted by its friends. The friend of this document who is best qualified to state what it is intended to convey is President Frederick M. Smith, and he has said:

In the church, as in all organizations where a form of efficient government is needed there seems to have been provision made in the law for the fine balance had when the three divisions into legislative, judicial, and executive departments are recognized and maintained. For efficiency of administration to be had supreme directional control must lodge somewhere. Our law clearly places this with the Presidency, as the Joint Council has expressed. And this directional control is for the purpose of carrying out the policies which have been determined by prophetic instruction with legislative approval and legislative enactments in harmony with constitutional law and divine command. It is of course not presumed or assumed that supreme directional control shall be exerted outside the purposes of the church as determined by the law and the objective of endeavor. That is to say, the directional control shall be in harmony with law and General Conference enactment based on the constitutional law, but in the executive line shall be supreme.

It is abundantly clear from this definite statement that the document is to be interpreted in harmony

Reviewing "In Contrast"

BY F. HENRY EDWARDS

Since the publication of the "open letter," many of the Saints have eagerly awaited the appearance of a statement of the genesis and purpose of this document, which was tendered by a group of brethren of heterogeneous church responsibility in substitution for the thoughtful summary of principles of church government prepared by the Presidency of the church and approved by so large a majority of the council of the Presidency, members of the Twelve in America, and the Order of Bishops.

The brethren who signed the "open letter" thereby constituted themselves an unofficial council of advice to the Presidency and to the church. It is therefore somewhat surprising that they should object to any other advisory council, however constituted. Yet even though each "side" questions the legal status of the opposing advisory council, everyone will welcome the discussion of "The two theories of church government in contrast," by the senior spiritual authority of the "open letter" group.

And surely some lasting good should result from the discussion in question. If examination shows the "contrast" to be logical and fair, we will all readily acclaim the principles which the writer claims to have vindicated. But so experienced and talented a proponent violates the most elementary rules of logic in making this contrast, what can we think of the cause he represents?

guesser as this brother—my guess is, there would be no supreme directional control resolution before us for consideration. Perhaps there are several things running back a number of years that would not have happened. I can say this much to lend warrant to my guesses, wherein the brother in committing Joseph Smith to an indorsement of his document (if conference affirms) is quite barren, and that is, such things did not happen in his lifetime. They have been projected by others since his death.

No one can speak for Joseph Smith. His body rests in Mound Grove awaiting a glorious resurrection, for he was just. His lips are closed to mortals, except as they spoke while among us; but this much I believe I can say with reverence and propriety, because of my great and abiding faith in his righteousness: If he were alive now, whatever the church might do, I believe he would be found acting in harmony with the principles he advocated and adhered to during his lifetime. Can anyone say more than this with justice?
with the constitutional law and General Conference enactment, and that no attempt is being made to aggregate to the chief executives of the church rights which properly inhere in the General Conference.

The difficulty with the opposition to the document on church government, prepared by those who are acknowledged to be the leading interpreters of the law (the Presidency), is that this opposition is based on “extreme and unconstitutional” interpretations. To discover possibilities of such interpretation has apparently been the chief endeavor of some of our friends. The logical and reasonable attitude, however, would be to seek the reasonable and constitutional interpretation, and proclaim this as the necessary meaning of the document. Such a course would be in harmony with our well-established principle that whatever is enacted by the church shall be interpreted in consonance with the constitutional law of the church. And this is the position of the friends of the document, as just cited.

Who Shall Speak for President Smith?

This attitude of extreme interpretation is maintained throughout the article, and becomes more pronounced with repetition. Without mentioning President Elbert A. Smith by name, reference is made to his claim to represent President Frederick M. Smith, and we are assured that:

... others perhaps as well qualified to speak because of experience, and with equal sincerity, state that the President means exactly opposite to what the advocates of the document aver.—HERALD, p. 259.

Unfortunately for this argument, the law has stated that there is no one in the church but himself “as well qualified to speak” for the prophet of the church as his First Counselor, President Elbert A. Smith. Hear the law on this point, to Oliver Cowdery, the “second elder”:

No one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church excepting my servant Joseph Smith, jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses; and thou shalt be obedient unto the things which I give unto him, even as Aaron, to declare faithfully the commandments and revelations, with power and authority unto the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 2.

To Sidney Rigdon, counselor:

I will ordain you unto this calling, even to be a spokesman unto my servant Joseph; and I will give unto him power to be mighty in testimony; and I will give unto thee power to be mighty in expounding all scriptures, that thou mayest be a spokesman unto him, and he shall be a revelator unto thee, ...—Doctrine and Covenants 97: 3.

The Lord who called the Prophet and President as he called Moses, has ordained that he should be the chief interpreter of the law. The same Lord has called and ordained his counselor that he might “hold up his hands,” “write for him” (Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5), and “be mighty in expounding all scriptures, that he” may be “a spokesman unto him.” (Doctrine and Covenants 97: 3.)

No other man is called so expressly to defend President Frederick M. Smith as President Elbert A. Smith and President Floyd M. McDowell, although it is not without significance that the majority of the Twelve, seventies, high councilors, stake presidents, high priests, bishops, etc., join in this defense.

It will be well to hearken, then, to one appointed to speak for President Smith, for he can represent him correctly.

A Vindication of President Smith

It was to be expected that the senior counselor of the President would furnish the reasonable interpretation of the presidential theory which was anticipated by its friends. The unexpected is provided, however, when Brother Rushton himself supplies the next step in favor of this reasonable interpretation.

Leading proponents of the open letter have assured us that the presidential document is in complete harmony with the ideas and ambitions of President F. M. Smith as expressed throughout his public ministry. Elder T. W. Williams goes back to 1903 to demonstrate this, and the writer of the “Contrast” refers us particularly to President F. M. Smith’s language at least during the last decade. (Page 261.) And yet he gives four columns to the praise of “pervasive inspiration” and “coordination” which he says:

... have been popularized in the church of late years principally because of President F. M. Smith, ...

Still again we are told that, “President F. M. Smith himself has strongly advocated ... what he calls the social program” which is “based upon the essential or spiritual solidarity of the whole.”

This “popularization” and strong advocacy of “pervasive inspiration,” “coordination,” and a “social program based upon essential or spiritual solidarity,” at a time when all agree that President Smith was working according to the theory of government he now advocates, speaks well for the theory, does it not? And does it not indicate the strong probability of a reasonable interpretation of that theory?

Of course, it is not the purpose to thus vindicate President Smith, but to show that the presidential ideals and governmental theories are incompatible. Yet in actual fact it is only shown that President Smith’s ideals, which Brother Rushton applauds, are incompatible with the Rushtonian “extreme and unconstitutional interpretation” of the document on church government.
Personal Rights Socialized

Another outstanding error apparent throughout the “Contrast” is the failure to differentiate between individual and social right. This weakness is common to practically every defense of the open letter. The right of the individual Saint to have for himself:

- a knowledge of God and a testimony that he lives; and that Jesus is his personal Savior (pages 261, 262) is willingly and happily admitted. But this personal experience of Christ eventuates in the realization that:

> God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3: 16.

Individual experience of Christ always results in missionary zeal. One implies the other. This is the basis of the social program of President Smith to which Brother Rushton gives his approval. In the “Contrast,” however, the essential togetherness of missionary Christians is entirely unprovided for, since the principle of a unifying leadership in corporate testimony is unemphasized and even decried. In his anxiety to stress the right of the individual to free expression, untrammeled by external guidance or direction, the writer neglects the right of untold millions not yet in the church to an adequate corporate presentation of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. The Saints are eager to bear this corporate witness. The purpose of the church is to make this corporate witness possible. But this witness must rest upon a dual solidarity, the solidarity of a common experience of the Saviorhood of Christ Jesus, and the solidarity of organized endeavor which alone can make this common experience socially fruitful.

This organized testimony was in the mind of the Master when he said, “I will build my church.” “To carry into effect the purposes of the organization,” he set the various officers of the church in their places. The recognition of the authority and prerogatives of these officers is no negation of the personal rights of the Saints. On the contrary, it is the only safeguard of the socialization of those personal rights.

The Presidency may require that other officers of the church shall accept presidential executive direction, since God and the people have so provided. The members of the priesthood need not accept this direction, but for the fact that the terms of their appointment specify that they shall do so.

I may believe what I will, but I cannot teach what I will and still represent the church. I may teach the church message; but I must not teach it in a way subversive of the will of the church and still pose as a loyal church representative. I can teach what the church teaches, in the way that the church desires it to be taught; but I cannot teach it in a place where the church has said that another minister can teach to better advantage, and still protest my loyalty. The Lord has said:

> My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7: 16, 17.

The same Lord has also said:

> The Twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven, to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12.

> The Seventy are to act in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the Twelve, . . .

These are not incompatible. Personal freedom in the gospel is actually secured by authorized official direction.

Liberty Through “Overseers”

Brother Rushton presents a citation to show Paul’s “repudiation of those claims to power based upon . . . special privilege.” But this very repudiation by Paul is based upon the particular “special privilege” against which the “Contrast” is directed—the privilege of authorized apostolic ministry. We are informed that Paul “commanded” (Elder Rushton’s word, not mine) that the Galatians should “stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ had made them free.” But our brother neglects to mention that this exhortation had been prefaced by a statement of Paul’s official authority to so exhort:

> Paul, an apostle (not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead; (Galatians 1: 1) and by a further reference to the official recognition of his work by the “pillars” of the church. (Galatians 2: 9.)

The Galatian letter is not only a repudiation of the special privileges advocated by the Judaizing Christians, but also a reminder that it is Paul in whom centers the special privilege of apostolic ministry to the Gentiles.

It is true that Paul desired the maintenance and perpetuation of the liberty of the saints, but he knew that this could only be guaranteed to them as they were protected by their “overseers” from such as should arise even from among themselves to “speak perverse things” and to “draw away disciples after them.” (Acts 20: 28-30.)

This is still true:

> And by the keys [authority] which I have given shall they be led, and no more be confounded at all. . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 34: 6.
Occasions for Surprise

Throughout the article runs a thread of resentment against the “effective discipline” mentioned in the following paragraph from the document on church government:

To carry into effect the purposes of the church, effective administration is imperative, and organic solidarity is maintained only by effective discipline, which is in consonance with the beneficent purposes of the church, yet strongly enough administered to prevent the purposes of the organization being frustrated by individual caprice and rebellion. Authority to be effective must be respected.

This resentment will be particularly surprising to members of the Joint Council at which the paragraphs were discussed, and where Brother Rushton stated in effect, I am quite favorable to the principle of discipline involved, but I do not think it is wise to incorporate it in the document under consideration. It is poor psychology.

He did not object to the operation of the principle of discipline, but to the effect of stating it in the document.

The members of the April council will be no less surprised by the attempt of the writer of the “ Contrast” to interpret the document as guaranteeing the power of discipline to the Presidency only. There is no such limitation expressed in the document. Such limitation was definitely repudiated during the council. Brother Rushton says:

Hitherto the courts of the church have been regarded as sufficient to maintain effective discipline. ... Page 263.

But the General Conference has decided:

Ministerial or official influence involves such factors as reputation, ability, etc. Upon the authorities of the priesthood and church officers rests the duty of protecting the interests of the church when necessary by withdrawing representative or ministerial rights, these rights or interests of the individual concerned being safeguarded by appeal through the administrative line.—General Conference Minutes, 1920: 2497.

There is complete harmony between this General Conference resolution and the document on church government. Brother Rushton’s present position, which is representative of the supporters of the open letter, cannot be reconciled with this conference action.

The Lines Are Well Laid

This brief survey of some of the inherent weaknesses of the open letter, weaknesses which peep out in spite of the literary ability of so able an apologist as Apostle Rushton, we think has prepared us to answer the writer’s first query:

So far two facts are worthy of notice:
First, the document in which supreme directional control in the hands of the President is advocated is the center of controversy. ... Second, the document entitled “An open letter” ... most certainly has not occasioned controversy, nor have its principles been challenged or questioned.

What do these facts signify?

All the facts are not presented here. There remains to be said, that the advocates of the open letter contended themselves in the main with its publication, immediately thereafter turning their major guns on the document on church government. The advocates of the latter have been quite content in having their document thus complimented. Indeed they have noted with growing appreciation it has continued the “center of controversy.” It has been about the only thing discussed, and we are willing it should have been so.

This shows where the interest lies, where the discussion should center in the conference. The fundamental lines of contest.

We could not have chosen better.

Let the People Rule

IV. God Will Not Reject the Church

It has been said (SAINTS’ HERALD, January 28) the adoption by the General Conference of the document on church government “must result in the rejection of the church.”

It’s a Bit Late

The affirmation comes a bit late.

The call from the beginning has been to the people. It has been, “To the fundamental law of common consent!” It has been, “Let the people speak!” It has been, “Let the church decide!!!” After untrammeled debate, Let the conference once for all declare itself on this important matter of church government.

That the conference is competent to speak on the matter at issue, has been conceded by both parties. That the conference should speak, has been agreed by both parties.

That the presumption runs the voice of the people as expressed in the conference will be in harmony with the will of God, has been the confidence of both parties.

That in thus speaking the conference will have established a basis for unification of effort in the great work of God in this age, has been the assurance of both parties.

That in the event the conference has erred in judgment, it can right itself, either by itself reversing its action, or having it reversed by revelation, has been clear to both parties.

Now comes the affirmation that shall the church in conference speak in adoption, it will be to be rejected of God.

A bit late, this warning. A bit late to be effectual. For one who has gone to the people with such an expression of confidence when he has felt sure of the standing of his cause before the people, can hardly at this late hour move the people with the cry, "Rejected of God!" when he has come to doubt the standing of his cause before the people.

A bit late, the cry, Apostate! Rejected of God!!

God Will Sustain the Church

That God would reject the church for the adoption of the document on church government, we have said is but an affirmation. We might negate it, with as much show of reason, which would be to throw the debate back as before, as if the affirmation had not been made. I say, we might negate this affirmation, but it is not necessary: For those who have for so long and so enthusiastically been one with us in expressing confidence in the competency of the people to speak, and the need for the people to speak, cannot now impress the people seriously with the suggestion that speaking affirmatively in the matter of the document on church government, the people will stand outside the favor of God, rejected, and no more worthy to be called his.

That God would thus withdraw himself from his church when it had made its best effort, and acted on its best judgment in endeavoring an interpretation of the law looking to unification of action for the advance of the cause intrusted to its care, the people do not believe.

That God would turn his face for all time away from the church as now constituted, for no more than an earnest effort to answer the call "Know the law," the people do not for a moment believe.

That God would reject his church for no more than this is but vain imagining, to which the people do not give credence.

A Time for Plain Talk

I speak plainly, I know. It is because of the feeling the time has come for plain speaking.

There should be no trifling with the people.
The people have been appealed to. The people desire to speak. They purpose to speak constructively, as they shall be given light to understand. And when they have spoken, they expect to be obeyed.

It is for the good of the cause they love better than life, the people are in preparation to come up to the conference to express their will for a forward march of the army of the Lord.

Let him beware, who would defeat the people in their purpose: who would after all this agitation and appeal, withdraw the whole matter from before the people: or move to lay the whole matter on the table in the presence of the people.

The People Would Go Forward

The people would go forward in the work of the kingdom of God.

The desire of the people is set on the redemption of Zion, and the preaching of the gospel in all the world.

This is why the hearts of the people have been bruised, that so much time and energy should have been dissipated, the while the redemption of Zion and the preaching of the gospel await the unification of the ministry.

And yet the people are full of faith, and hope, and charity.

Our representatives have during late months been in touch with thousands of the people. The desires of the people, their aspirations, their prayers, their endeavors as never before are for the achievement of the task set for their hands.

The people would move forward.

Incident to this moving forward in the great work committed to them in these last days, the people are demanding that the present controversy eventuate, not in a stalemate, not in an endless discussion to no purpose, but that it eventuate in a settlement. And they demand it reach a settlement now, in the present conference.

The people demand that the discussion work itself out in the conference. And that at the adjournment of the conference, the men of the general ministry get back into the field, and our editors and writers back into the press, for a constructive, aggressive, forward-looking program, carried out in unity of effort, and with all the power of the priesthood restored.

The people would go forward.

A Word of Encouragement

This is why the people respond as they do in every place, to every word of encouragement. And it is why in every place they are blessed of God, as thousands upon thousands are glad to testify is the case.

And it is for the sake of these, as well as for the sake of others who will believe, that this further word of encouragement is here set forth:

When I joined this church in 1897, it was because I believed it to be the church of God, destined to prosper and do God’s purpose in the earth. I have since learned much of the weakness of men, but still I find this to be the church of God, and as I firmly believe, still destined to achieve in the earth the divine purpose.
This is not the first time of crisis the church has seen since it has sheltered my soul and fired my devotion.

Well do I remember the comforting and reassuring words of Joseph Smith when I was a young man and disturbed greatly in spirit, when in addressing the conference of 1900, in a time he spoke of as a “time of crisis,” he said:

Let us not forget that God has before time watched over the interests of his work and has finally brought it to completion; he has determined that no weapon formed against his work shall flourish, shall be allowed to be successful, and if our faith is not of sufficient character, strong and steady in its nature to abide under the cloud, pray, what profit is it, and what honor is it to abide in the sunshine?...

If I should undertake to answer the voice of inspiration at the present moment, I should predict this for the men who listen to me, that those who keep their vessels clean, and who minister in humility of heart in the field where they are called to labor in the office to which they have been ordained, they shall find those places pleasant to them, and there shall open to them light and instruction when it shall be needed by them, when they are called upon to stand in the difficult places and minister for God.—General Conference Minutes, 1900, pp. 295, 296.

And so through the intervening years, mine has been a faith sustaining in cloud as well as in sunshine. That God’s church would triumph, I have had every assurance. I have no reason for now feeling otherwise.

And with particular reference to the latter verse just quoted, as never before many of us through late months have found the prophetic insight of Joseph Smith to be true.

We found ourselves in the early summer of 1924, in the fields to which we had been appointed, with heavy spirits. We had consolation, however, in the sentiment just quoted. For true in 1900, it would be true in 1924.

We tried to the best of our ability to minister in humility of spirit.

We trusted God to supply light and instruction in every place and hour of need.

And in every place he has verified to us the promise through his prophet. Even the hard places have been made pleasant. And it has been a delight to serve.

Our souls have been moved as never before in our church experience. Never has such power come in our ministry. We have marveled at God’s goodness to his children. For it is for their sakes we have been blessed. And that the Saints have been blessed under our feeble ministry, many are ready to testify.

God Blesses Honest of Heart

Why do I recall here these wonderful scenes and days? These testimonies from every land? It is that I may say the more effectually, God will not withdraw from his people. God will not cast out of his heart an honest and a humble ministry. God will not reject an honest and a humble people. God will not reject his church in an honest search for the true way.

Let Us Go Forward

Let the Saints lift up their heads in faith. Let them know that God lives. Let them believe his overruling providence shall reign in the conference. And let them rest the cause when the church has spoken; which so far as they are concerned, we know they will do.

God is working in his church. He will continue to work on in his church. Through his church he will do all his purpose. Let his church go forward.

And with the help of God it shall be so.

Facts About Northern California District Conference Reaffirmed

Apostle T. W. Williams in his almost nine column article in SAINTS’ HERALD of October 29, 1924, utterly failed in his attempt to discredit the statement of facts set forth in the article entitled “Facts about Northern California District” published in SAINTS’ HERALD, October 22, 1924, to which we again invite attention. The undersigned do hereby reaffirm as indisputable facts the matter therein contained.

Common Consent Not Supreme Directional Control

The assertion before made “that supreme directional control was not in operation, but that common consent prevailed at our district conference” is correct. Editor T. W. Williams in commenting upon this statement infers that we do not know the difference between “common consent” and “supreme directional control.” In this he is mistaken. There is as much difference between these two principles as there is between the powers of the President of the United States and the powers of the National Congress. Being conscious of this difference, we nevertheless contend that there is no antagonism between the two. “Supreme directional control” is consonant with “common consent.” The editor is here making the common error so often made by persons much less informed. It should be remembered by all that common consent did prevail at our conference. It is well understood that the function of “supreme directional control” is that of administration or the execution of law.

The conference at Irvington was a legislative, not administrative body. This distinction should be clearly drawn in the minds of all. “Supreme directional control” was not in operation at the Northern California district conference; common consent was; and the two are not in conflict.

Majority Decides

Our brother infers that the majority membership of our district conference claim "superior powers." Our majority members do not make any such claim. They do believe, however, that they hold, and rightfully so, the privilege of expressing themselves upon the question of church government with the same degree of sincerity that he claims and exercises for himself and associates. The majority and not the minority rule, we believe, should prevail in all our deliberative assemblies.

Right to Instruct Delegates

While people may differ as to the wisdom of instructing delegates, the district was within its right to so instruct, as from time immemorial districts have instructed when they chose to do so. That was their right and their business.

President Elbert A. Smith has been quoted as against instructing delegates. But if our readers will carefully examine his quoted argument they will find that he did not challenge the right of a district to instruct. Knowing him as we do we feel that he would neither challenge us in that right nor abuse us for exercising it. We feel that the contributing editor, having nothing to do with the work of our district, and being a prominent party to the present church controversy, is in poor position to challenge us for instructing delegates adversely to his position.

Law Respected

The criticism of the editor regarding the consultation (not "purported conversation" as he infers) had with members of the Quorum of Twelve officially assigned to this territory, with reference to dispensing with spring conference needs no consideration other than to refer HERALD readers to the law, wherein the divine suggests that the counsel of such officials should be sought and respected when given. (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4.)

Ignoring His Own Counsel

If we needed only to call HERALD readers' attention to legitimate argument, we would be happy indeed, but we must of necessity notice the evident unfairness of the editor's tactics. We sincerely believe that he owes a frank apology to the reading public.

 Forgiving our brother and trusting that God who is abundantly more merciful will extend his gracious pardon.

New times have come and with them new discoveries, new science, and new religion. Because the old country doctors gave only quinine and calomel is no reason why we should not resort to modern surgery, or why we shouldn't have our teeth X-rayed or our blood examined. You can find the newest of everything if you will go after it and look for it.—Burris A. Jenkins.
A Correction

BY J. A. GUNSOLSEY

In the HERALD for March 4, 1925, appears an advertisement, "The pathfinder," that contains a misstatement of fact, wherein the statement is made: "The Religio was organized to promote the study of the Book of Mormon." The same claim is made in the following issue of the HERALD in "Herein lies our opportunity."

I trust it may not be thought immodest of me, since I was president of the Religio from February, 1894, to April, 1916, and was one of the committee that prepared the plan of organization and constitution and by-laws, and helped revise it and write leaflets, and as a member of the executive committee was largely responsible for lesson material that went into the Religio Quarterlies from 1902 to 1916, to attempt to set out the facts as to the purpose for which the Religio was organized.

Since the appearance of the advertisements above referred to, I have refreshed my memory by consulting the original publications and am sure whereof I speak.

Very briefly, then, the purpose was:

Feeling the need of a systematic and united effort to do good to others, as well as to mutually improve ourselves in the principles and practice of morality and Christianity, and also to secure to ourselves social and intellectual development.

—Preamble to Constitution, General Society.

The object of this society shall be to interest and enlist the energies of the young in the field of Christian usefulness before them; to promote sociability and the spirit of brotherly solicitude and helpfulness among them and to help them qualify themselves, spiritually and intellectually, for service in the church.—Art. II, Object.—Constitution of Local Societies.

During the whole time of the society up to 1916, and as well as since, this purpose was the goal of all effort. To reach this goal the following activities were provided for by means of various committees: study, entertainment, recreation, and service.

In 1897 the Book of Mormon and archeology were adopted in a recommendation of a special committee, to be the basis of the study in the religious department, one of the four departments of work adopted by the convention, the other three being, literary, historical, and temperance. This was the first action in regard to the Book of Mormon entering as a study, four years after the society was organized. The convention of 1902 authorized the publication of a lesson quarterly and adopted the Book of Mormon as the basis for the lessons, and the first quarterly was issued in October, 1902, the beginning of the study of the Book of Mormon as the main study. This was nine years after organization. The quarterly provided eight lessons on the Book of Mormon, four prayer meeting programs, and one parliamentary program each quarter. Occasional lessons on temperance and social purity were provided. Later the Book of Mormon was laid aside and the Doctrine and Covenants was made the basis of study for several years, afterwards going back to the Book of Mormon. How say some, then, "the Religio was organized to promote the study of the Book of Mormon?"

All this time the various kinds of activities were promoted as indicated above, some locals giving more attention to one and some to another, governed by the judgment and desires of the different groups, ever in keeping with the purposes and object as set forth in the constitution. Just as is the case now; all these phases of activity are engaging the attention of the various locals, and the fact that six or seven thousand quarterlies providing Book of Mormon lessons are now in circulation proves that any local is privileged to regulate its activities according to its judgment and desires, some giving more attention to one, and some to another, and all leading to the same goal as set up at the beginning.

If a separate organization be needed for the study of the Book of Mormon, how about another organization being necessary for the study of the Doctrine and Covenants or church history? It seems that the present organization, or plan, admits of the widest latitude.

It would be too bad if anyone, or group, whether large or small, should be misled by the mistaken understanding of the real purpose for which the Religio was organized.

Words and Definitions

BY LEONARD S. RHODES

In a first-class dictionary many words, perhaps most words, have more than one definition; and the definitions are numbered 1, 2, 3, etc. Anyone seeking the definition of a given word used in a certain way knows that all the definitions to that word do not apply; he therefore selects the definition which his intelligence tells him does apply, and acts accordingly.

For illustration, in the sentence, "He paused at the spring for a drink," most anyone knows that in defining spring the definition, "2. Elastic quality or energy," does not apply. He readily selects, "7. A flow or fountain, as of water; hence any origin of continued supply." He knows, too, that drink does not mean alcoholic liquor; but is more apt to mean water.

Recently we had access to the New (unabridged) Standard Dictionary, 1924, which is clearer, more (Continued on page 356.)
NEWS AND LETTERS

Death of Elder J. L. Mortimer

In Owen Sound on February 20, there passed away from this life, one who for many years was a stalwart defender of the faith. Born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, April 2, 1888, he was baptized near Grand Valley, Ontario, on July 30, 1888, by Elder John Shields. In September, 1888, he was ordained an elder and later a seventy, in which office he labored long and faithfully until released from the arduous tasks of a missionary, after which he labored locally, and for some time previous to his death had acted as counselor to the district president.

He was a man of unbounded faith and confidence in God, and he who keepeth watch over Israel never failed him. On many occasions he bore testimony that he had heard with his ears and had seen with his eyes as great things as he ever read in the Bible. In his earlier days in the church, while crossing Lake Rosseau in northern Ontario in a small boat, his son, a lad of about ten years of age, was with him. A storm came up, the lake got very rough, so much so that a large tugboat in use by a lumber company had to seek shelter. The white caps were breaking over the small boat, and it seemed that nothing could save them. But while the father rowed he was praying, and He who had called him to his service and ministry, whose voice had stilled the waves on the Sea of Galilee, heard the prayer of his servant, and the son noticed a change coming over the water, and drew his father's attention to it. For about twenty-five feet all around the boat, the water was calm; beyond that the waves were breaking high. The water about the boat remained calm until they reached shore.

Again, when laboring in western Canada, preaching to a number of Russians, the younger folk understood the English, but the parents could not speak or understand a word of it. Yet when he finished speaking, the parents said they "heard every word in their own language."

These instances showing the power of God working through his servant could be multiplied many times, and probably at a later date a more complete and detailed history of his labors will be given.

Of him it can truly be said, "Now the warrior's task is o'er." Possessed of a large amount of Scotch grit and stick-to-ittiveness, he stayed with the task assigned him when many less courageous men would have given up. He gave himself unstintingly to the work he loved. No sacrifice was too great for the gospel. His passing will be mourned by a host of Saints and friends in Ontario and the Western Provinces, where he accomplished a great work.

Experiences by the Way

By John F. Garver

III. Recent Missionary Success

Much has been written of late months suggesting a dearth in the church of the good things of the past. Of division, and fear, and danger. This is not all the story, for God is moving with power in his great church. My last letter testified of the power of the Spirit in the work of my ministry among the Saints, who themselves in every place shared the same presence of divine grace. I am now ready to speak of the nearness of God in missionary work. In this regard I shall speak of the work of others rather than myself. And indeed has God been with the brethren and Saints in these States of the Upper Mississippi Valley, in which Brother E. J. Gleazer and myself have been associated with the missionary arm of our ministry for the conversion of the world to the gospel. I speak of rewards of our endeavors since the 1923 Conference. Of these good things I am pleased to write. And on them as well as on the discouraging, the Saints will do well to dwell in thought now and then.

At Council Bluffs, Iowa

Much has already appeared in the church press referring to the remarkable success attending missionary efforts at Council Bluffs, Iowa. At this place we have, both through the general ministry and local forces for many years, maintained an able and a persistent effort to increase and build up our membership. These additions to the faith, with removals to Council Bluffs, have increased our membership to something like eight hundred; and our people here have been organized and developed to a comparatively high order. The missionary spirit also runs high. Some three or more missions are maintained, the financial and moral force of the entire church community being back of each effort and group.

As a result of this devotion, among other like places, what is known as Riverside Mission has been developed. We have here a good church building, and a group of energetic workers, many of whom are young as to membership.

Concentrating at Riverside last September, and ably assisted by the Saints of the entire city, Brethren T. W. Williams and C. F. Putnam in a gospel series of some weeks were privileged to receive into the kingdom thirty souls, if I recall the correct figures.

(Continued from page 355.) to the point and up to date than is Webster's. From it we define the following words:

Supreme. Adj. 1. Highest in power or authority; holding the highest place, as in government; as, the supreme court.

Control. N. 1. The act of controlling; guidance. 2. Regulating power; restraining or governing influence; check; regulation.

Direction. N. 3. The act of governing, ordering or ruling; superintendence; administration; as, they are under my direction; to assume the direction of an enterprise.

6. Instruction how to proceed; command; order; as, the superintendent's directions are explicit.

7. The executive board of an institution or business enterprise; directorate.

The word directional is here given as the adjective form of direction, to be used when it is intended to limit or qualify the application of a noun or nominal phrase. In the phrase, supreme directional control, definition number 2 of control, and number 3 of direction applies; the other definitions simply help to get a better understanding of these words.

Supreme directional control is therefore defined as:

The highest administrative power or influence.
The highest superintending power or influence.
The highest ruling power in a guiding or regulating sense.

It was my privilege to spend some time with the Saints of Council Bluffs around Thanksgiving in a few meetings, and to attend the conference of Pottawattamie District there the first Saturday and Sunday in December. Than Council Bluffs we have no more fertile field in all America for proselytizing. Systematic, intelligent, spiritual work here, with the aid of the general ministry, would result in the baptism of hundreds. Our people stand well in the community. No place in America do they stand better. Our good brother, Elder Harding, is popular in his first term as mayor of the city, elected by a decisive majority. We expect much good to come out of Council Bluffs.

At Gallands Grove, Iowa

At Gallands Grove, Iowa, we have been blessed with a success more remarkable than that at Council Bluffs. Old Gallands Grove, renowned throughout the church as an early gathering place of the Reorganization, where once the Saints and their friends came together by the thousands, first for the fall General Conferences, and later for the world reunions, the first reunions in the church.

Gallands Grove, once so teeming with activity, how low hast thou fallen! For as we understand, regular services were despaired of here. It had been a long time since anything to quicken the pulse had occurred in our church community. Came here last autumn alone our good missionary, W. A. Smith. There was not much to encourage. A beginning with the few Saints was made, however, and the work continued in faith.

And lo, when he came to Mallard to the district conference November 7 and 8, Brother Smith could and did fairly beam in the Saturday early morning prayer meeting, in telling us the glad news that thirty-two had been baptized.

In this connection I may tell a tale of the glory of sacrifice. Brother Smith on closing his meetings at Gallands Grove had an opportunity to go by auto with friends to Independence, Missouri, where without expense he could be with loved ones a few days. At first he decided to go, or was about to do so. Then he felt impressed to stay on at Gallands Grove, that he would be needed there. And on the Wednesday following, which was the Wednesday before the Mallard conference, he baptized fifteen, making the total of thirty-two.

No wonder Brother Smith beamèd! And enjoyed the conference. May God give us reapers for Western Iowa. It is ripe unto the harvest.

At Casey, Illinois

Again, more remarkable yet is the success attending the efforts of E. L. Ulrich, at Casey, Illinois. We had one family here, as I understand, that of Elder H. M. Curtis, cousin of J. F. Curtis. Brother Curtis was assistant superintendent of a union Sunday school. The family stood well in the community, they had the missionary spirit, and had done what they could for the cause there. Our Brother Ulrich, a young missionary, went there and undertook to further establish the work, single-handed, save for what assistance the one family could render. An interest developed. It grew. People began to ask for baptism. So it continued until twenty-five had been baptized, giving us a membership at Casey of some thirty.

An interesting sidelight on this achievement at Casey is that the people baptized were practically all from the Sunday school in which the Curtises were enrolled as workers, which certainly speaks well for the devotion and character of this family. And if I understand aright, the said Sunday school is now ours by conversion, organized, operating, and affiliating with us.

Brethren Ulrich and E. J. Lenox, Brother Lenox having lately been transferred from Northern Wisconsin to Central Illinois, have the work at Casey under consideration, with a view to a branch when an organization is thought to be justified.

In Central Oklahoma

Hubert Case has met with very great success in Central Oklahoma District. At Jenks, alone, thirty-four were baptized prior to September 1. A good work was also reported at Fosaker and at Perkins.

The interest at Jenks justified an effort to erect a church building, which has been built and opened for services.

In this district there is further interest among the Indians, with prospects quite as large as our ability to care for the work.

Elder Case has baptized a good many others, though I do not have the figures.

Eastern Colorado

Eastern Colorado for a number of years has been a fertile field for our missionaries. At Utleyville, especially, the past season we have had a very excellent interest. J. D. Curtis, as I recall, baptized at Utleyville and vicinity something like seventy people.

A few weeks ago a branch was organized at Utleyville, by F. Henry Edwards and Bruce E. Brown. A fine interest is here manifest, and the cause is expected to prosper.

An excellent interest is also in evidence at Denver, where under the able leadership of E. J. Williams, in cooperation with our genial city missionary, F. B. Almond, the Saints are endeavoring to do their part in missionary effort. Results are sure to follow this sustained endeavor.

In South Dakota

I may speak also of Wagner, South Dakota, some one hundred and fifty miles northwest of Sioux City. We had here a few Saints, without church privileges. Through the sacrificing efforts of Elder George Vandell, president of Sioux City Branch, and others of the local men there, and the endeavors of Charles J. Smith of the missionary force who resides at Sioux City, a goodly number have been baptized. Two elders have recently moved to this place from Walthill, Nebraska, who with their families tend to stabilize the work. Regular meetings are being held in a rented hall with encouraging results. The work has thus assumed proportions which the Saints feel justify the suggestion that a branch be organized. The matter will be looked into in due time, after the coming General Conference.

At Minneapolis

I cannot close this letter without some reference to Minneapolis. A wonderful city is Minneapolis. And ours are a wonderful people. I know of no place more alive with the missionary spirit. Baptisms as a result of local effort are not infrequent. The church has just been enlarged, and with this renewed home and the vigor they show, the Saints of Minneapolis have a wonderful opportunity in missionary endeavor.

The departments here are alive. Cottage prayer meetings draw Saints and friends together in constant association. Cottage missionary efforts supplement the work at the church. And the hospitality and fraternity manifested by the Saints in general draw good people to them and the work they so love and so diligently serve.

To think of Minneapolis is to desire to return to the wholesome spirit and people of that thriving place.

The Lord Surely Blesses

If I have overlooked items of interest at either of the above places, given incorrect or incomplete figures, or have failed to speak of other points deserving of mention, I beg to be forgiven. I am writing from memory, save for a very few and incomplete items in hand. And if I have said more of some of the places than they deserve in comparison, it is because I remember more. Any injustice I am sure will under the circumstances be overlooked.

Surely the Lord has in a marvelous way blessed in this mission the past year and more, both to the ingathering of the honest of heart, and to the upbuilding of the Saints. And many glad hearts there are out of which the same fervent testimony is borne.

All is not darkness. Indeed, the light shines in abundance for those who will believe and seek it. May we all so come to the Father as to receive for the church the grace needed, and for the world the witness we owe as light bearers to the age.

The above was written from Independence Sanitarium, January 23, with the expectation it would follow consecutively former letters, two in number, this number three to be followed by others. Herald space has, however, been claimed by the discussion concerning church government. I am now through the kindness of the editor permitted to make this explanation of my failure to appear as per statement I would do so, and to say that under the circumstances I shall ask for nothing further at this time.

I have since writing this letter sufficiently recovered from the illness that required me to go to the Sanitarium, to take on again my work, in moderation. I am grateful to God for his goodness, and to the many Saints remembering me for their kindness. I long for the day when I can again engage unreservedly in the cause which fully claims the best of all of us.

Tiona Reunion—Bulletin No. 2

It may be asked as to why we have used the above name. For the benefit of the uninformed we give this explanation: Tiona is a word in the Tahitian language which means Zion, and is the name of a piece of property owned by the church in the Society Islands. It was chosen as our name because of its significance in reference to an assembly of this kind. The reunion method, however, is not the same as that pursued in America. "Tiona" is a corporation governed by a board of directors. These directors number seven and at present are Bishop George Lewis and Elders W. J. Haworth, J. W. Davis, G. H. Parker, Ernest Wright, W. J. Swain, and Amos Ballard. The church is not directly responsible for the maintenance and management of the reunion, although the stockholders are members; indeed none are accepted who are not, and the directors are all officers of the church. The shares are £1 ($5) each, and no one can be elected to the office of director unless he owns at least five shares. The grounds are the best for the purpose of which I have ever seen or heard. Although still in a wild state, they are much better improved than last year. We expect they will be a beauty spot when fully improved. Trees not native to this country have already been planted as a means assisting to this end. The native trees will be preserved and carefully cultivated.

Wednesday, December 24, the services were continued, the following being the program: 8.30 a.m., prayer service in charge of N. Williams and J. T. McLoughlin; at 9.45 a departmental meeting was held at which Elder W. J. Haworth delivered a lecture on child training and amusements. It excited much interest and was discussed at great length. At 11 a.m. and 7.30 p.m. Elders H. I. Velt and G. H. Parker preached. That night about 12 o'clock the carol singers began their rounds under the direction of W. H. Gammidge and continued their serenade until about 1.30. They passed back and forth along the long avenues of tents until no one was missed. At the conclusion of their march Elder McCon­ley wished the singers "A Merry Christmas on behalf of the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve," while Elder J. W. Davis chose to say that under the circumstances "on behalf of the Quorums of Seventy," upon which I took it upon myself to wish them "the compliments of the season on behalf of the whole American Nation," not doubting of course my right to do so.

Christmas Day dawned bright and fair. It is known to Herald readers that in this country the Christmas season is often very warm. I have seen the thermometer at 115 in the shade on several Christmas Days; but this time the weather was moderate, being neither hot nor cold; indeed, it was an ideal day. Some days were sunny, but the adjacent sea and lake made them deliciously cool. At 8.30 a.m. there was the usual prayer meeting in charge of Elders McConley and Corbett; at 10 a.m. a Christmas program was rendered by a committee consisting of Mrs. J. W. Davis and Mrs. Ernest and Mrs. Stanly Wright, Elders Barmore and McConley presiding and Elder Corbett acting the part of Santa Claus. Although the program was impromptu, it was well done, and well received, the chief feature being the Christmas tree. All were amused when Santa Claus called up "Myron McConley" to receive a toy balloon and "Little Alma Barmore" to receive a sack of candy. Each was complimented for having been "a good boy," and affectionately patted on the head, like the other children, and exhorted to remain good.

At night there was an illustrated lecture on "The life of Christ" by Elder Barmore, Elder McConley being in charge, while Elder Davis operated the machine. At this service a collection was taken in the interests of the missionaries present, fourteen guineas (nearly $75) being realized.

Friday, the 26th, the 8.30 prayer service was in charge of Elders A. V. Robinson and H. I. Velt. At 10 a.m. the mission conference convened. Apostle McConley was chosen to preside, assisted by the district presidents in attendance, who were Elders A. J. Corbett, G. H. Parker, and E. Nixon, being the presidents of the Southern New South Wales, Northern New South Wales, and Queensland Districts in the order of their names. Elder G. H. Parker, the mission secretary, was chosen as secretary; and the press and administration committees of the reunion, also the choristers, were made those of the conference. W. H. Gresty was chosen as organist, with Arline Ballard and Lily Parker as assistants. A recreation committee, to act both for conference and reunion was chosen, which consisted of the following: H. R. Ballard, A. V. Robinson, Curtis Argent, Fred Spencer, Mrs. Ernest Wright, and Ethel Watson. There being a dearth of deacons, the following priests, with two exceptions, were selected to act as ushers: Glaud Bowden, Alvin and Hazel Ballard, Arthur Monroe, and Aubrey Robinson, the first and last being deacons.

Adjournment was had at 12 o'clock, and another business session was held at 2.30. So far nothing but routine matter claimed the attention of the conference. At night Bishop Lewis spoke on the financial law.

Saturday the prayer service of 8.30 was in charge of J. W. Davis and A. J. Corbett. Mission conference convened again in business session at 10 o'clock. This was also a routine session, with the exception of the questions of when and where the next conference should be held, which was settled in favor of Tiona Park for the Christmas season of 1925.

The business transacted may be summarized as follows: Sister J. W. Davis resigned as mission Sunday school superintendent, and J. R. Harrison, of Melbourne, Victoria, was chosen to take her place. Sister Parker was sustained as assistant mission secretary, Mr. George Lewis was elected mission president, and Mr. E. Nixon, of Melbourne, Victoria, was elected mission conference president. The election of members of the mission conference was not discussed at great length. At 8.30 p.m. the conference adjourned.
mission head for the Department of Women, and Gland McLaughlin as head of the Department of Recreation and Expression; while J. T. Gresty, G. H. Parker, W. J. Haworth, and N. Williams were continued as mission chorister, secretary, statistician, and auditor respectively. Bishop Lewis, W. J. Haworth, and A. J. Corbett were sustained as the Board of Publication.

Reports were received from the mission president and secretary, with the addition of the district presidents before mentioned and Elder S. L. Harvey, the president of the Victoria District. The following General Conference appointees also reported: J. W. Davis, J. H. N. Jones, A. C. Barmore, E. A. H. Peisker, A. Loving, H. L. Velt, A. V. Robinson, J. T. Gresty, W. J. Vaughan, and S. W. Ballard. All these reports were intensely interesting and were characterized by deep humility and implicit trust in God. Reports were also received from Bishops Lewis and Craig. In some parts of the mission the financial situation is fair; in others poor.

At night the tent was beautifully decorated, as the result of an afternoon's work, and the recreation committee put on a concert which gave satisfaction to all concerned. A collection was taken for the reunion funds which amounted to £12 10s (about $62.50).

We have now reached the high watermark of the reunion. About this time the attendance was at its height. Actual count showed eighty tents used for living purposes, with two service tents, one for dining and the other for preaching. One of the living tents served a double purpose, since the first room was used by the Standard Publishing House, the usual church publications being on sale. In addition to the tents, two flat boats, anchored in the lake near by, and one auto truck were used for living purposes. My count showed two hundred and sixty people in camp. There were probably a few more than that, because of some who came for a short time and went away before the count was taken. At most there were not over two hundred and seventy-five in camp. Those who were in attendance at the services but did not stay over night would amount to as many more. The campers, with those who came and went as the meetings continued, would reach about five hundred. Last year we had a fair number, but this year we may say that the reunion was fully grown. I know of reunions in America which have taken a quarter of a century in reaching what we have attained in two years; and we have had a great handicap in the great distance the grounds are from many of our people. Most of the visitors who camped were from the north coast of New South Wales, though there were quite a number from Newcastle and Sydney.

From other parts of the mission we had what may be called a delegation, these having come largely because of the mission conference, there being Brother and Sister Alma Robinson from West Australia; Sisters Chenoweth and Langley of South Australia; Thomas Walker of Victoria; and Elder W. H. Gresty and Mrs. H. G. Gresty from New Zealand.

Sunday, December 28, was admittedly the red-letter day of the reunion. The day began with a young people's prayer meeting with Elders H. L. Velt and S. W. Ballard in charge. Forty-five were present, and a refreshing time was had, the hour being 6. At 8.30 the usual morning prayer service, Elders Gresty and Ley in charge. At 10.45 a communion service, the presidency of the conference presiding. At 2.30 a splendid sermon was delivered by Elder J. W. Davis. In the morning a baptismal service was celebrated in the Pacific Ocean, Elder W. J. Haworth officiating, there being three candidates. These were afterward confirmed by Elders J. T. Gresty, W. J. Haworth, and J. W. Davis. In the afternoon Elder McConley baptized one in Wallis Lake, Elders H. L. Velt and G. H. Parker confirming. By experience it was found inconvenient to baptize in the ocean because of the waves' constant beating in on the beach, there being no quiet pools near the camp. From now on the lake will be patronized for baptismal purposes. At night Elder McConley addressed a large assembly. In opening his address, he took occasion to express his appreciation for the manner in which the stage was decorated for the concert of Saturday night, the Stars and Stripes being displayed in company with the Union Jack. That, however, is a common practice.

In addition to the foregoing, a Sunday school session was conducted under a natural canopy of trees known as "The Bowery," by Sister J. W. Davis, and meetings of the quorums of elders and priests were held by their presidents, Elder Robert McLaughlin and Priest Ernest Hind. These quorums represent the States of New South Wales and Queensland and the Dominion of New Zealand.

Monday the program was as follows: 8.30 a.m., prayer service in charge of C. Dickinson and W. J. Swain; at 9.45 there was a session of the Department of Recreation and Expression in charge of H. R. Ballard and F. Spencer; at 11 a "Tiona" meeting was held, Elders W. J. Haworth and J. W. Davis presiding. This last was not a business meeting, but was for the purpose of imparting information and soliciting for new shares. At night Patriarch J. T. Gresty, who arrived the 26th, preached an interesting sermon.

Tuesday the 8.30 prayer meeting was in charge of S. Mansell and M. J. Ballard. At 10 a.m. the conference of the Northern New South Wales District, which was postponed from the 23d convened. The following is an epitome of business: Elder McConley, assisted by the district presidency, presided; Curtis Argent, the district secretary, acting in his office; the chorister and press and administration committees of the reunion and mission conference retained; election of officers resulted as follows: President, G. H. Parker; counselors, E. Wright and A. W. Ballard; heads of departments: Women, Sister Mansell; Sunday school, Sister Parker; Recreation and Expression, H. R. Ballard; delegates to General Conference, Elders McConley, Davis, Rushton and Hanson, and Sister Davis. The only change in officers was the substitution of A. W. Ballard for S. Mansell in the district presidency. The time and place of next conference were left to the district presidency. A special item of business was the passage of the name of M. J. Ballard for ordination to the eldership; he was ordained by Elders G. H. Parker and E. Wright; and I may mention here that three baptized in Wallis Lake on Monday by Elder J. W. Davis were confirmed by J. W. Davis, H. I. Velt, and S. W. Ballard. At night Elder A. V. Robinson preached an interesting sermon.

The closing day of the reunion was Wednesday, December 31. This day the writer missed because of leaving for home in the early morning. The listed program was as follows: 8.30 prayer service in charge of N. Williams and J. T. McLaughlin; 10 a.m., "Tiona" business meeting; 7.30 p.m., sermon by W. J. Haworth.

My return journey was in a Dodge car owned and driven by W. H. Gresty. The other occupants were J. T. Gresty, W. J. Swain, and G. H. H. Baker. We came as far as Wallsend, in the Newcastle District, about one hundred miles, the first day. Stayed over night with members of the Bishop Lewis family. The next day we finished the trip, about one hundred and sixty miles, arriving home in time for early tea. The trip as a whole was lovely, since we had a good car and passed through delightful scenery, traversing, as we did, the Myall Lake country and crossing the Hunter River at Hexham, and the Hawkesbury River at Wiseman's Ferry. Those who have toured Australia know what this journey is like.

A Message in the Interest of the Zion’s Religio-Literary Society

Building Firmly on That Which Is Past

Brother and Sister Delegate, please read carefully the following message from one who is known throughout the church for his stability and integrity.

A MESSAGE

Brother S. A. Burgess, church historian, kindly sends us the following:

"Those who were active in the Religio work ten and twenty years ago will never fail to appreciate what this society has done for them. I know it was there I first learned from practical experience how to speak in public. The study of the principles of elocution and public speaking is not enough, but practical experience before an audience is necessary, if one is to learn to think on his feet.

"Then the Book of Mormon makes an especial appeal to the youth of the church. It is a time when we are looking for further evidence. I well remember going through the Book of Mormon fifty pages at a time some twenty-six or twenty-seven years ago. At the time I was taking equally large doses of the subjects studied in college. This was followed advantageously with a more intensive study, and then by topical study of this book, and thereby our interest in the Bible as the word of God was confirmed. There are many plain and precious things in the Book of Mormon. Its careful study in the early days would have kept the church from much of its trouble. The Book of Mormon offers another witness for Christ. It offers a serious religious study as a complement to the Sunday school work, but this study has never in the Religio taken the place of recreation, or socials, gatherings, public speaking, nor of music. We want to go forward, but go forward building firmly on that which is past."

THE TRUE HISTORY OF THE RELIGIO IS

That after 1898 to 1900 when this society adopted the Book of Mormon for its study course it began to prosper and flourish and the Lord commended it—DO YOU WANT THIS COMMENDATION?

RELIGIO PROGRAMS

Through the programs it is intended to develop our young people to a place of usefulness to the church, as well as to arrange programs that will enrich the soul.
Independence

Stone Church

Last Sunday morning Patriarch John F. Martin gave the closing sermon of his series at the Stone Church, having preached every night throughout the week except Saturday. Good crowds attended every night, and all were enthusiastic over the good sermons presented. The congregational singing was in charge of Brother Francis Holm, and some special musical numbers were given every night.

In the afternoon at half past two a round table for the young people was held under the direction of President F. M. McDowell. The fact that the young people were interested in this meeting was manifested in the large number in attendance. In the evening Brother McDowell preached, taking for his subject, "Sir, I would see Jesus." The sermon was forceful and commanded the undivided attention of the audience.

Another of the old warriors in the church passed away March 20 in the person of Brother William Clow. He was born in 1851 in England, but came to Canada when he was a young man. Later he came to the vicinity of Kansas City, where he has since lived. He was one of the early leaders in the Sunday school work at the Stone Church, and took an active part in all branches of religious work. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Hannah Clow; six children, Mrs. Edith Koehler, of Saint Joseph; Mrs. Nettie Eastwood, of Independence; Mrs. Carrie Weeks, of Ottawa, Kansas; Harold and William Clow, of Independence; and Alfred Clow, of Denver, Colorado.

The funeral was held at the Stone Church at one o'clock Sunday, with sermon by Elder R. J. Lambert, who quoted a part of a sermon Brother Clow had delivered at one time. Brother Lambert was assisted by Elder W. H. Garrett. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Another well-known resident of Independence passed away Sunday morning, Brother Thomas King. His death is said to have been caused by over-exertion some months ago. He was born at Madison, Wisconsin, but had lived in Independence twenty years. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Eva B. King; a daughter, Mrs. Pearl Sherman; and two brothers. Funeral services were held from the home at three o'clock Tuesday afternoon, with burial in Mound Grove Cemetery.

The committee having charge of the assigning of rooms to General Conference visitors are anxious to have all available rooms reported to them. Call Independence 2052, or address Pastor C. Ed. Miller or Bishop J. A. Becker at Box 255, Independence. Many requests are coming in for rooms, and every possible room should be made available for the accommodation of these visitors.

Second Church

Commissioner Gould and Scoutmaster Carpenter got a good attendance and a fine interest among boys, supported by a few good men, and on Tuesday evening met in Curtis Hall, taking preparatory steps for organizing a scout troop.

Sisters J. A. Curtis and Frank Good, and Brother Earl Audet are building up a good interest in singing and are securing a good attendance Thursday evenings. If you want to sing, come to the church Thursday evenings for practice.

Sunday morning's sermon by Evangelist Ammon White is highly spoken of by many of the hearers. Sunday afternoon at half past three occurred the funeral of Elder Robert Warnock, conducted by H. W. Gould and M. F. Gowell, old friends of our respected brother. The body was interred in Mound Grove Cemetery. Brother Warnock had been a man of outstanding qualities of mind and body, a man of strong faith and kind heart, and he leaves children of good promise as useful members of society, himself having finished a long and active career.

Sunday evening's sermon was by the pastor, R. J. Lambert.

Liberty Street

A very interesting event occurred on March 9 when Sister D. J. Krall spoke to the Temple Builders on social hygiene. The Temple Builders now meet at the church because there is not room for them in any private house.

Sunday morning Elder William I. Plogg, missionary in Kansas City Stake, spoke on "Ye must be born again." As usual, his sermon was enjoyable and instructive.

In the evening Elder J. W. Metcalfe continued his series of Sunday evening sermons, using "The resurrection" for his subject.

Walnut Park

The eight o'clock morning prayer meeting Sunday was an especially good one, and more of the Saints should be in regular attendance.

The eleven o'clock junior meeting in the basement was dispensed with, and the children and their leaders marched upstairs at the opening of the service to listen to President F. M. McDowell, they occupying the north section of the room. The service was in charge of the Sunday school superintendents, Chester Constance and Doctor P. B. Griffin. Brother McDowell's sermon, on "Keeping the faith," was forceful, spiritual, and strength giving, impressing his hearers with the necessity of "finishing the course we have begun," and "being obedient to the heavenly vision."

Patriarch John F. Martin began his series of sermons in the evening, his first subject being, "What the world needs most," which is, as he believes, love. He easily kept the undivided attention of a full house.

East Independence

The Religio from Spring Branch church gave an excellent program last Friday night. Apostle J. F. Curtis was the speaker at the Sunday morning services. The Saints enjoyed having him with them. At the close of the services three children were blessed. They were Myrtle May, John Arthur, and Juanita Ellen, children of Brother and Sister Ralph Crabb.

Brother and Sister Harvey Minton, who have been doing missionary work at Vinal Haven, Maine, since last General Conference, have returned. Brother Minton was the speaker Sunday evening. The Saints were indeed glad to listen to his words of counsel and advice, urging us to strive to know God and his laws and be obedient to them.

Good progress was made in the work on the new basement for the church this week.

Spring Branch

Elder Joseph Luft, from the Stone Church, preached Sunday morning, telling what we must do to become like Christ.

At half past six in the evening those interested in organizing a choir for this congregation met at the church. About twenty were present, and an organization was effected under the direction of Brother J. A. Dowker who is to have charge of the music. The people are interested, and the prospects are good for a successful choir at Spring Branch.

In the evening Brother J. W. A. Bailey lectured on the archaeological discoveries made recently. Brother Bailey is enthusiastic over his subject and has a pleasing manner of presentation.
Kansas City Stake Items

Central

An earnest, cheerful people and ideal weather conditions combined to make our stake conference held on the 15th and 16th of February a success. Sunday school had an attendance of about three hundred in its various departments, all officers and teachers being present. The sermon at 11 o'clock was by President Elbert A. Smith, on the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, in regard to whom he said that a prophet was more than a foreteller of future events. He gave to the world the idea of monotheism, the one living God. A God that speaks rather than God who did speak. He early proclaimed against the doctrine of predestination, that taught some were wholly damned and that others were eternally saved, and infant damnation. He taught the doctrine of healing and tithing; looked ahead of the other religiousists. Many men, though not joining the church, have adopted the things he advocated. The plan of Joseph Smith in regard to stewardships is a great big growing idea, many great characters of the world seeing the necessity.

At the same hour a service was held in the interests of the children in the church parlors. This service has solved the problem of the little tots during the regular services. At 1.30 the elders and Aaronic quorum meetings were held. At the 2.30 prayer service the fervency of the prayers and testimonies was more pronounced than usual; the gift of tongues and interpretation was present, to the instruction and edifying of the attendants, they acknowledging the gift of God with tears and with promises of more faithful service. The young people's meeting at the same hour in the north room was blessed by a spiritual admonition to prepare for greater service and sacrifice, with promises for divine help. There is work for everyone to do.

At 4.15 the ministry of the stake were addressed by W. I. Fligg, using as a basis for his remarks, the word "Build," stating that we were building for eternity, not for time. At this time the Department of Women held forth in the auditorium with a good attendance and were addressed by Stake President J. A. Tanner, using the subject, "Reasonable Service," Romans 12: 1, as one that mothers could well adopt, for it suited them especially in the service rendered in cases of sickness and death. He said the pulpit should be used more in the interest of the mothers. Take more time for recreation. Go to the park. Leave the knitting and books at home; go for recreation only. On this suggestion an outing is to be arranged for the women and girls of the stake as soon as possible. Missionary W. I. Fligg was the speaker at 7.45.

The quarterly business meeting was held Monday evening at 7.45, stake presidency J. A. Tanner, S. S. Sandy, and C. D. Jellings in charge. A report from the presidency was read. The financial report of the bishop for the year 1924 was read; summary as follows: Balance January 1, 1924, $5,102.47; receipts, $42,498.80; total, $47,601.27. Expenditures, $45,109.98. Nominations for Sunday school superintendent and chorister by the Northeast Mission, deferred at annual conference in November, were for Henry F. Davis and Bertha Davis, respectively. A motion that we hold the four regular services on each Sunday, with prayer meeting on Wednesday and Religio on Friday nights in all the churches of the stake was ordered laid on the table. A nomination from the Department of Women that Sister R. E. Newkirk be leader of the young people of the stake was ratified by the conference. A motion prevailed that a leader be appointed for the boys in the stake. Brother W. O. Hands was chosen as leader, with power to choose assistants.

It was moved and seconded that it be the expression of the body that the name "Religio" be retained as designating what is now known as the "Department of Recreation and Expression." This was laid on the table. A committee was asked for to choose location and look into the matter of building a new church for the Central congregation; this was laid on the table. The stake presidency was ordered to appoint an auditing committee of three, as the general church incumbent who looked after these matters had resigned. Much spirituality is being cultivated among the children at Central by virtue of the splendid work done in the junior church under the direction of the Misses Media Deaver and Maude Gunsolley, as superintendents, and Mrs. Mac Liddle as musical director. Prayer and solo work by the boys and girls center around a worth-while theme developed each Sunday. A benefit program was given Tuesday evening, March 3, by Sister Myrtle Wamsley, dramatic soprano, and Miss Lenore Anthony, interpretative reader. The program was a great success and was enjoyed by a large crowd. The proceeds will go to the church building fund.

Grandview Church

Sister Fern Harrison and Mr. Walter Wilson were united in marriage at the church Tuesday evening, March 10, Elder J. A. Harrington reading the service. The church was beautifully decorated with palms and potted plants. A series of meetings began Sunday evening, March 8, with Stake President J. A. Tanner as speaker, who was able to hold forth only two evenings on account of illness. They were continuing the meetings for the full two weeks as originally intended, getting substitutes for speakers, in which they have been very fortunate, Brethren R. S. Salyards and J. E. Vanderwood and others consenting to occupy. The choir entertained them recently with a musical program. Each number was beautifully rendered and was well received by those present.

Second Kansas City Church

March 6 Brother Fligg closed a series of meetings lasting four weeks. They were enjoyed by all those who attended, and we believe much good was done. The attendance during the four weeks was splendid. Our own members here did well and were helped by visitors from other places. We are very grateful to Sister Griffith and Davison for the beautiful songs rendered by them and the assistance they gave us in the musical line. Three were baptized, Mrs. Francis J. Raw and Mrs. Francis A. Evans, jr., who are twin sisters; also Mrs. Minnie Johnson, who had been investigating for some time. We rejoice over these and welcome them to our midst. Many more nonmembers attended many of the meetings, some of whom we believe will later unite with us.

Our Sunday school is doing well, and our attendance is increasing. Our superintendent, Brother P. J. Raw, has arranged for a short program each Sunday, using such Bible topics as prayer, thanks, and praise, and he expects to use others of a helpful and educational character. So far these programs have been interesting and instructive. Expect to occasionally have those who are qualified to do so give the school some Bible stories.

The Religio is alive and growing. The Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are studied, and the programs are good. Although there is much sickness in the city, our membership here have been blessed with health, our meetings are well attended, and the Spirit of the Lord is often with us. Peace and harmony prevail in our midst, for which we praise God.

Fourth Church

On January 14 the Progressive Club started again to serve dinners each Wednesday evening, thereby enjoying a good social time before the prayer begins at 7.45. Twenty cents is charged.

Since last items the following have been the speakers: B. J. Scott of Independence, S. S. Sundy, E. W. Lloyd, Pastor J. O. Worden, F. O. Brannam, George C. Johnson, Morris Worden, L. E. Babcock, Earl Raveill, A. R. White, and D. J. Kennedy. The Servo Club has had for speakers Mr. J. K. Nast, on new city charter; T. J. Madden, lawyer, on sunshine and shadows; and Duncan Harvey, humorous and serious reader, assisted by R. H. Richardson, soloist. The pastor has had a siege of la grippe but is around now attending the numerous calls, as is his wont.

First Chicago Branch

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, 4416 Gladys Avenue, March 14.—Sunday dawned bright and clear, bringing out a good attendance at the first service, Sunday school. The superintendent, Brother Hadley, arranged a nice program for the Christmas offering, Brother and Sister Baldwin taking the part of traveling missionaries with their suit cases all packed for a journey. The questions and answers of the children brought out vividly the need of Christmas offering.

We were surprised to hear that the stork had brought a little girl to the home of Brother and Sister Henry Van Nieuwenhuize.

Patriarch Richard Baldwin occupied the morning preaching hour and delivered an inspiring sermon from John 10:10: "I am come that they might have life and have it more abundantly," referring to the lives of Samuel, Moses, and Job.

In the evening Elder Harry Passman gave us a doctrinal sermon on faith, which was enjoyed, as that is something we all lack.

After the Sunday school service on March 1 Brother Baldwin baptized four young people: Charles Healy, Brother Batten, Sister Helen Batten, and Sister Ellen Batten, all from the Central Chicago Branch. The sacramental service which followed was in charge of Brother Baldwin and District President John Cooper. In the reading of the scripture it was suggested that love be the topic for the morning. After a very spiritual meeting the Spirit brought a message of good cheer and comfort to those assembled, following which a direct message came to our young presiding pastor, Elder A. C. Edstrom, which should be a source of comfort and encouragement to him.

In the evening we were favored by hearing Brother Cooper speak, and under the same Spirit present in the morning he was able to inspire the minds of those present.

At the Religio hour Brother Aaron Israelson gave a very interesting and educational talk.

The morning of March 8 found Patriarch Baldwin again occupying the pulpit, answering the question asked so many times, Why were the former days better than the latter days? Our brother made quite plain what to his mind should be considered the best, quoting Solomon, "Say thou not that the former days are better than the latter days." The program furnished at the Religio hour consisted of solos by Eric Edstrom and Sister Hazel Randall, and current events by Brother Butterworth.

We were agreeably surprised and pleased to have District Missionary Jerome Wildermuth from Aurora as the speaker in the evening, and our brother refreshed our minds with a doctrinal sermon from the first and second chapters of Paul's epistle to the Romans.

Apostles Budd and D. T. Williams Visit Salt Lake City

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, March 16.—We had a visit from Apostles D. T. Williams and Roy S. Budd on February 26 and 27, preaching on alternate evenings. The Saints greatly enjoyed their visit. They were on their way to Provo to attend the district conference February 28 and March 1.

The conference was an enjoyable one, Brothers Williams and Budd being in charge and preaching each day. Elder R. L. Fulk preached in the evenings. The Saints of Provo provided a substantial dinner for all on Sunday.

During the month Elder R. E. Davey has been giving some very helpful addresses, which have been appreciated. Some useful work has also been done at a place close by, Magna, by Brother Davey.

Pray that God's blessing and presence may be with us.

Persia, Iowa

February 18.—We plan to hold services, preaching and Sunday school, every week, but sometimes the preacher fails to come. We should all be glad when Sunday comes, and instead of wondering how we can spend it, plan to see how much we can do to revive interest in the members and in other ways benefit the church. Doctrine and Covenants 17 contains a command that the priest shall visit the homes of the members and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, he to preach, teach, and expound, inviting them all to come unto Christ.

On the first of this month a funeral was held at the church with Elder Joshua Carlile of Underwood preaching the sermon. The funeral was that of a six-month-old child, the infant son of J. H. Wetzler, professor in the public school. He died the morning of January 31.

Mindem City, Michigan

March 3.—The Saints here are striving in their weak way to keep the gospel banner floating in the air. Attendance has been somewhat small the past month, as some have been away visiting and some have had sickness in the home. The Religio was largely attended in January and February, having increased from ten to thirty-three. Nonmembers have taken real interest in the lessons, as well as in the programs and social good times enjoyed after the regular session.

The Junior class in the Sunday school has entertained with a guessing contest and a fishing pond to raise money toward the Christmas offering.
Women and Young People Are Active

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—It is indeed a pleasure to report the work here as long as we are doing something, for then we know we have good news for all.

Every department is busy. The “Earnest Workers” are trying in every way conceivable to help pay off the church debt, and without the aid of these few faithful ones we certainly would have had a hard struggle. Again the ladies came to the front with a nice new organ, obtained by sewing fancy articles and selling them at a local store. These sisters are also known as the “Good Cheer Club” and are worthy their name.

It might be interesting to note that a group of young people have been having weekly meetings which are of much social benefit. They are planning to make up a string orchestra consisting of guitar, ukelele, steel guitar, violin, and piano.

The Sunday school is progressing nicely with most everyone interested. We have taken up the teacher training course as outlined by Graceland College. The Spirit is still manifest in our meetings, and we know as long as God approves our work it will not come to naught. We sincerely hope the Spirit is moving all over the church as it is here in this part of the vineyard.

Writs of Successful Missionary Work

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA, March 2.—The activities of the past year in Tula County have been a continuous harvest of souls. There have come some inquiries as to the cause of the success thus attained. The answer is easy. The instructions of the President of the church in 1920 have been literally followed out to the letter. Teamwork, whole-hearted teamwork, intensifying our efforts has brought this to pass. We have stayed with an interest and built as we went, rather than jump from place to place. There has come as a consequence the very thing the prophet of God said would follow, increased spiritual power, light, peace of mind, and a joy in the service surpassing any past experience.

There is a ripe harvest at hand for the man who will do as asked and follow the vision of 1920. I am here appearing as a witness to this fact. Read the results. Three meetings in the county total 110 baptisms, and in the district at three others 105; this with just half the equipment we need for doing teamwork, as I see it now. I hope to see our missionary workers fully equipped to make our work grow as it should.

As I wrote once before, the Lord advised that we should let contention cease. I shall work and pray to this end, that our workers will now come to their senses as men of God and build Zion.

Your brother,

HUBERT CASE.

Comments on Church Controversy

BLOOMSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, February 27.—A small company of Saints left Bloomsburg for the New York and Philadelphia conference on Saturday, February 21, traveling over the rugged country of the coal regions. The continuous range of hills, dotted with mines and their appliances, gave a somber aspect at this time of year, but underneath men dug the bottled sunshine amidst many dangers to warm the homes of the people and to fire the great and small horses of industry.

We reached the great city of Philadelphia at noon. It is the greatest textile city in the world, with streets and avenues called after the English towns, cities, and villages. It gave us reminders of London, Yorkshire, Lancashire, and Wales. Here we met Brother Richardson of Leeds; Brothers Piton, Mann, and Bowen, from Wales; and Brother H. H. D. Edwards, who had baptized me in Wales twenty-nine years ago. Brothers Gillen, Wirebaugh, and Stone represented the missionary force, and a good time spiritually, musically, and mentally was spent. Delegates to General Conference were chosen and are being sent without instructions on the crucial question before the church.

At a priesthood meeting the sentiments of the prayers were on behalf of all the brethren who have been and are still engaged in the present controversy. We trust that there will be a greater preparation than ever before with the leading quorums of the church, so that they may adjust their desires in accordance with the laws, customs, and usages in operation since 1860. Contention, agitation, cannot increase our spirituality or faith in each other and the Lord. There is a burning desire for peace in the hearts of God’s people; not peace at any price, but the peace that ought to come after men have had their coats off, so to speak.

We pray that there will be determination in the hearts of all God’s servants to the end that the spirit of healing may sweep the minds of all and the spirit of reconciliation melt the people of God into an indissoluble union, that the message may be sent to gladden the souls of mankind.

THOMAS JONES.

Burlington, Iowa

March 18.—The annual Sunday school banquet was held February 28. It was well attended, and Brother Amos Berve, of Nauvoo, Illinois, was the speaker for the occasion. He gave an excellent talk on Sunday school work. Sister G. Scott Daniel and Brother Theodore Kunz each favored us with a vocal solo, and Brother Henry Bromann played a violin number. A pleasant evening was enjoyed by all. The proceeds from the banquet went to the building fund.

District President Amos Berve met with us on March 1. A good sacramental service was enjoyed, Brother Berve speaking by the Spirit to the Saints in general. He said the Lord was well pleased with our effort in the past, and that we should continue to receive his blessing if we remained faithful. It was a meeting that brought comfort and encouragement to all.

Foraker, Oklahoma

March 20.—Brother and Sister George Storm, Elder E. Workman and wife, Brother Reuben Workman, and Sister Ellen Adair were permitted to attend the district conference at Sperry, Oklahoma, February 21 and 22. This was the first time the “new” Saints had had the pleasure of attending a conference.

The sacrament was well attended, and a very spiritual prayer service followed. Services also were held at night.

The Sunday school is still quite well attended. The Religion is moving on.

Brother Arthur Slover’s work has been so arranged that he is not permitted to meet with the branch as often as in the past. Brother Oziem has purchased a car, which enables his family to attend church more regularly. Their home is in Cooper. Their help is much appreciated.

Sister Grace Grossman and Sister Ellen Adair are now permanently located at Shidler, Oklahoma. Any Saints passing through Shidler will find us in the west part, on the “Sinclair” just north of the Prairie Oil and Gas Company offices.

MATHESVILLE, ILLINOIS, February 18.—I came to this little coal-mining town on January 19, presided at the annual business meeting and election of officers that night, and started a series of meetings the following night, continuing every night except Saturday for twenty-three nights. The average attendance was forty, about half of which were non-members. The Saints say it is the best series of meetings from the standpoint of interest and attendance this branch has ever had.

I had the privilege of baptizing two of the most prominent and respected ladies of the town, who decided after careful investigation to join us. These two new sisters ordered over $13 worth of church literature, which speaks well for their determination to know the truth. We believe that Brother Sackfield, the branch president, will have several others to baptize soon.

Sister Jacobs, with her tireless efforts and her faithful orchestra of young people, furnished the music for every service. They deserve great credit for their faithfulness.

I made my home with Brother and Sister George Sackfield, where my wants and comforts were provided for with a most willing spirit. Their home has become the home of many a missionary during the past twenty years. These good people deserve praise for the way they have let their light shine, which has made a host of friends for the cause.

Space will not permit mentioning the names of the Saints who loyally supported these meetings and contributed to the comforts of the missionary. May the Lord's blessing rest upon them. They are anxious that I should return in the early part of the summer and continue with the interest which has been awakened here. I go to Galesburg from here, where I am billed to start a series of meetings February 19. The field is ripe and ready to harvest, but the laborers are few.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he may send forth laborers into his harvest."

March 19.—The junior classes of the Sunday school are preparing an Easter program of songs and recitations which will be given Easter morning. In the evening the intermediate classes will give a cantata.

Elders Hale W. Smith and Joseph Lane have visited us during the past month and ministered to the Saints at the Saints' Home meetings. The subject of tithes is being discussed at our mid-monthly priesthood meetings.

Brethren Ed Lowe and Paul Wight of Council Bluffs have been in this city for the past two months in the interest of their respective companies. The Wiltse and Simmons families, of Luton, formerly of Piscataway, Iowa, also have visited us.

Mrs. Polly Hunt died February 17 of senility. She was eighty-eight years of age. For about twelve years she had been afflicted with blindness, but through administration under the hands of the elders she was permitted to see a few hours before she passed to her reward. "Great and marvelous are his works."

"Grandma" Phoebe Higgins is with us again after a year's absence in California and Independence. We are glad to welcome her into our midst.

On February 15 Walter W. Baker, youngest son of Elder Warren Baker, and Miss Dorothy Boltz were married. The event celebrated Walter's twenty-first birthday. On March 1 Sister Delilah Deitchie and Mr. Clinton Brooker, of Adel, Iowa, were married at the bride's home. They have gone to Adel, where they will make their future home.

The Religious program on Sunday evening, March 8, consisted of music—vocal and instrumental solos, duets, trios, and numbers by the orchestra. The program the evening of March 15 was slide pictures of the "Pilgrims." The picture machine was presented to the Saints free from any incumbrance, and was received by the pastor with well-chosen remarks.

Many of the Saints' homes have been visited by the mumps and influenza epidemics, but there have been no casualties. The elders go out amongst us, fearless and tireless, at the call of the Saints both day and night, and their prayers are heard. Surely it is a day when we must put on the whole armor of faith and trust in the love and mercy of a living God.

Report of secretary showed present membership to be 800. It was voted to hold the 1925 reunion at Galesburg, Illinois. A motion carried to hold a young people's convention at Rock Island Thanksgiving time, making it a twin district affair. Following delegates to General Conference chosen: E. R. Davis, E. A. Curtis, Charles L. Holman, E. R. Sartwell, Edward, R. Jones, George Sackett, J. G. Cole, L. W. Stiegel. The following ordinations were performed: Ambrose King of Dahinda and Harry Jones of Kewanee, elder: Elbert Holmes, priest. One child, Joseph David Williams, was blessed. All district officers present except the secretary, Mary E. Gilliam. Winfield Douglas and A. H. McCormac acted in his place. Mary E. Gilliam, district secretary.

Our Departed Ones
LAMBERT.—George P. Lambert was born near Adrian, Illinois, Deember 5, 1858. Died at his home near Adrian, March 9, 1925. Married Harriett Buell, of Koshkonong, Iowa, October 28, 1891, to whom three children were born: Elbert W., Leland G., and Mrs. Grace Salibury, who, with his wife, are left to mourn his sudden departure. Leaves also two sisters, Mrs. Ellen Pitt, of Burnside, Illinois, and Mrs. Hattie Red crodt, of Independence, Missouri; and two brothers, Joseph R., of Independence, Missouri, and Alex F., of Independence. Other close relatives. Baptized April 2, 1871, and remained a staunch and active mem-er, having been an official for many years, holding successively the offices of priest, elder, high priest, and bishop. His health had been failing for several years, and in August, 1924, he underwent an operation after which he seemed to improve until his recent attack, similar to the one he had before the operation, which took him after a very brief illness. His death was a shock to the entire community, for he was held in high esteem by all who knew him. He was born on the farm and in the same house where he died. In his family circle it is said he was always lending a helping hand and was never known to refuse to help, or complain because they asked him to help. Not only is this true of his family, but of his neighbors, and the community has lost a neighbor and friend indeed, and the church a faithful, honest, consistent worker. He was true to his covenant with man and with God, and the esteem in which he was held was manifested by the large attendance at his funeral, when few dry eyes were in the house, and when strong men who have known him for a lifetime would view the remains and turn with tears streaming down their faces, it was a wonderful indication of the love and esteem in which he was held. He was very tolerant and kind in his association with his felelows. Funeral services were conducted at Fort Madison February 5, by G. Scott Daniel.

Closing the Controversy on Church Government

With this issue of the SAINTS’ HERALD we are closing a controversy in which large numbers of men and a few women of the church have taken part. It is upon a subject of far-reaching importance and of many ramifications; one of the most difficult upon which to preserve a broad and impersonal attitude; yet during the more than nine months since it was opened we are impressed by the small proportion of personal matter introduced, and by the evident effort to avoid the petty and the technical and to attain fundamental truth. Please remember that the preceding sentence is indited by the one person through whose hands has passed each and every article which has been published. We are willing to wait the sanction of the church as to the statement, if time be allowed in which to get the true perspective.

By rereading the short statement of the managing editor upon assuming the work, it will be seen that he regarded his position as largely that of an umpire or referee, and it has never been his desire to avoid the disagreeable responsibility attaching to such a position. If he had received approval and no adverse criticism from adherents of the document on church government or of the open letter group, it would have been a matter of deep concern, for a referee is not chosen to receive laudation, but to be trusted for fairness and at the same time closely watched. He is not particularly aided by expressions of approval, but by criticism of his acts and rulings.

During the controversy there has been a uniform expression of confidence in fundamental integrity, and intermittent attacks as to lack of judgment, courage, keenness, and as to possessing bias. We wish to express appreciation for the help thus afforded.

In justice to the disputants, and in order to put the responsibility where it belongs, we herewith state that no influence because of position in the offices of the church, by any party on either side of the controversy, has been brought to bear to secure the publication of matter. The Board of Publication asked the incumbent to assume the duties of editor in chief of the SAINTS’ HERALD, placed in his hands the policy they wished carried out, and we have not had any interference or advice from them since that time. They have asked no favors for themselves or for others; they have not been used as advisers, except as to the making of additional room in the added pages to care for the closing arguments of a few principal disputants. The First Presidency have not sought to advise or control. What they have asked for they have received.

Several times during the controversy we have consulted those who have contributed articles, asking that certain modifications be made, and notwithstanding the fact that the writers have considered the matter in question as important, adjustments have been made without misunderstanding or loss of confidence, so far as we know.

Many matters of news, much doctrinal, and some educational matter have been delayed or denied publication because of the amount of controversial matter which has been submitted. There has been more impatience, amounting to intolerance in some instances, over delay in the publication of those matters, than has been detected among the disputants because their contributions have not found publication. A close scrutiny, however, will disclose to all that more columns of church news have been published, regularly representing the happenings in more points of the church, than previous to the opening of the controversy. We have built up and have intact a good organization for the reporting of news. Only a very few strong branches are not regularly represented, and these are absent from our columns because they refuse or neglect to report their doings.

We believe the subject of church government, from the particular angle of the present hour, has had all the consideration its importance demands, and should now be discontinued. It would be manifestly unfair to permit criticisms and comments upon the controversy to occupy any considerable place after closing the controversy. An open press would indicate this decision to be correct, for the press could not be open to other subjects if it should be monopolized by one.

Our faith in the angel's message is stronger to-day than at any former period in our lives. We believe more than ever, because we have given it greater consideration, that no fundamental principle of truth can be submerged sufficiently to cause its death. Our comprehension of truth may increase or diminish, being somewhat dependent upon the action of our wills; we may believe for a time because we desire to believe; but out of these stilled conditions and surroundings the fullness of God's truth shines for the humble and the contrite, and these shall be saved by it, even though environments may hinder rapid consummation.

Discussion is necessary, and should not be decried. It has always been an aid to the end of securing sound judgment and correct verdicts. To some it would appear that one place is proper and another improper. To others the reverse might be correct. We can afford to be magnanimous about declaring ourselves in this. It does seem, however, that when questions assume such proportions as to be productive of general inharmony, or ministerial schism, knowledge of the letter and of the spirit of that law, which operates in the church which bears his name, and the many steps in a forward direction will doubtless receive self-control and wisdom to help us preserve Saintly deportment at all times during the conference.

Very sincerely,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Notice to the Priesthood

The First Presidency requests the members of the priesthood to meet in Independence in their various quorums and orders April 2. Matters of importance to come before the General Conference will be submitted to them for a preliminary consideration. The priesthood will also be requested to meet in periods of prayer, the first of these to be April 2 at 10 a. m. in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church. Let us all not only seek for that measure of divine guidance which may be necessary, but also for the requisite self-control and wisdom to help us preserve Saintly deportment at all times during the conference.

A Closing Word

All of the important points brought forward in defense of supreme directional control have been thoroughly and successfully met. There remain a few minor points which we now note.

D. T. Williams, one of the younger apostles, has written a series of articles to show what was the "faith of our fathers." Unfortunately, he seems not to be able to differentiate between the accepted "faith" of the group and the opinions of the individual. Surely he would not expect any man to accept all of the opinions of all of the fathers on all subjects!

Jesus Christ Our Leader

This writer isolates portions of a sentence from one of my editorials, forms an unwarranted conclusion, credits me with the opinion expressed by another, introduces a witness, and then repudiates his own witness, and winds up by making me affirm, "We have no leader." My position on this point is clearly set forth in the editorial which he criticizes. I said:

One of the writers of the Book of Mormon states that the chief purpose of the book is the "convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ." This is essentially Christian. And to do this involves making the mind of Christ the mind of the church. Jesus Christ is at once our Leader, our Witness, our Commander. He is our only leader. There is place for but one Leader in the church of Jesus Christ. All others are, at best, but followers. We may, and do, have many, many great men within our communion, but they are our brothers. Together we follow Jesus Christ. We dare not follow any man, however great and wise and good.—SAINTS' HERALD, June 25, 1924.

There is nothing in this statement . . . which, in any sense, detracts from or minimizes the powers and prerogatives of men who, under Christ, hold responsible and very important positions in the church.—SAINTS' HERALD, September 10, 1924.

The foregoing is its own defense. The more it is studied the more impregnable it becomes. I regret exceedingly that my brother is under the necessity to detract from the leadership of Jesus Christ in order to further his advocacy of supreme directional control. This is added proof that this doctrine is a mistake. As to the statement that James, the Lord's brother, succeeded Jesus in office, I have not indorsed, nor do I now indorse this position. This is essential, however, to the theory of supreme directional control. And I can well understand why the writer introduced it. I affirm that no man can, in any sense, succeed to the place of Jesus Christ in the Christian economy. Jesus stands alone as "The Leader" of the church.

Where the Fathers Stood

In a lengthy communication, the chief characteristic of which is a redundancy of words and a paucity of facts, this same writer attempts to show that the three successive presidents of the church, and W. W. Blair, W. H. Kelley, and T. W. Williams agree that "we have a leader." Good! As Brother Savage might say, "Altogether now, 'We have a leader.'" I am sure that if we could call to the witness stand these illustrious leaders of the church who have gone on before, that each one of them would accord to my statement that "Jesus Christ is our Leader—our only Leader."

Brother D. T. Williams is privileged to follow whomsoever he may elect. As for some of us, "We will follow none but Jesus." There is provision for leadership in the church on the part of men, but not in any sense such as that possessed by Jesus Christ. He is perfect man and perfect God in divine blend. And we follow Him, not any man. D. T. Williams affirms supreme and unquestioned leadership in one man. This we deny.

Fear of Autocracy

In order to discredit the men who oppose supreme directional control, this same writer quotes from the church history to show that some individuals in the days of the late Joseph Smith suggested the possibility of monarchical power creeping into the church. The situation is quite different to-day. Joseph Smith never affirmed or attempted to exercise monarchical power. Frederick M. Smith, on the other hand, has, over his own signature, affirmed that the government of the church is monarchical in character and will become more monarchical until Christ comes.

Williams Versus Williams

Elbert A. Smith, John F. Garver, and D. T. Williams have quoted extensively from my earlier writings in an attempt to show that I am in conflict with myself. By no possible interpretation have they been able to show an indorserment of supreme directional control. What they have quoted is in keeping with my present position. I would not be so foolish as to claim inerrancy for all of my writings. I would not claim that in all things I have been consistent. Emerson has well said, "Consistency is the quality of little minds."

American Constitutional Law Against Concentration of Power

One of these writers has devoted several long articles and quoted from leading authorities on constitutional law to prove that government should be centered in the President of the United States. One is amazed that any man should form such a conclusion. This is out of keeping with practically every recognized authority on constitutional law in the English-speaking world.
