There is yet another blessing of physical healing that was mine. In the summer of 1930, I went to the Upper Peninsula to scale logs in Elder D. Schreur's camp twelve miles from Newberry. I had a little sore on my temple which began to give me much discomfort. A doctor told me that it was cancer and wanted to cut it out. But I objected. On sacrament Sunday, June 1, 1931, I was administered to by Elders Whitehead and E. Loomis, and the sore disappeared.

These are but a few of the miraculous blessings that have come to me and mine. To those who suffer illness and affliction let me say that I am sure if you comply with the ordinances of the gospel, God will not leave you comfortless. Do not forget to pray as the brother of Jared prayed. Have faith as Alma taught. Continue faithful as Jacob did, and I am sure that you will receive a blessing and can sing, "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth."

Opportunity for Missionary Work

Progress in church work in Des Moines District is apparent. There is much to encourage us in the way of increased attendance at services and interest in the gospel in most places. From unexpected sources men and women are taking their places and assisting in the carrying on of the work. Some who have been indifferent for years have come back to the church and are carrying on in a commendable way.

The work of President F. M. McDowell and Elder Henry Castings is having a good effect among the priesthood members in an increased desire for activity in their several callings.

Our district president is a spiritual leader and a tower of strength to both priesthood and lay members. He did not have the privilege of attending school in his youth, but he has a spiritual insight that has made him a great leader among men, and enabled him to direct the course of the district through the more troublous days with small loss in priesthood and membership.

From experience and observation I have learned that the common people of the earth still receive our message gladly, and I am thankful that we have men in our church who can take it to them. We who labor in the out-of-the-way places find that the people high and low are hungering for the true gospel and many doors are being opened to us by both the educated and the uneducated. The opportunities for preaching and teaching are more than we have men to fill, and they are increasing.

The honest in heart know the voice of the good shepherd when our ministry go out filled with the Holy Spirit, their minds having previously been stored with the word of God as found in the three standard books of the church.

We who have not had school advantages feel our handicaps keenly, but many of our best educated men do not come in contact with the class that we are ministering to. We are glad then that there is a place that we can work and win souls to Christ.

I find that there is still a world of opportunity to do missionary work in the old way, in schoolhouses, halls, churches, home, crossroads, stores, and wherever people are living.

We feel that our district presidency and other officers are doing all that they can to evangelize the world and to Zionize the church. May God help us to labor together with him until the end.

The Readers Say---

A New Member Writes His Appreciation of the Church

Although I have been counted as one of the Saints but a short time, I have been made to know that this is God's true church. I enjoy reading the letters in the Herald, and wish to add my testimony so that it might help someone else.

Many were the other organizations I investigated before hearing our doctrines, and always as I looked for the effects of the teachings of these organizations on the members, I was not satisfied with what I found. I was looking for results, and when I met with the Saints I found a difference, a power and brotherly love which were not manifest in other groups. I learned if I would apply myself to God's laws, and strive to please him, he would show me, personally, that he is with his people. I have tried to keep his commandments, and be a worthy child, and he has blessed me bountifully and given me of his Spirit.

Prayers have been answered for me, and I have been healed by the Great Physician, so that it is a pleasure for me to say that this is a marvelous work and a wonder. In these last days while we are going through trying times, it is encouraging to know that if we will put forth the effort to do as God wants us to do, and have faith, he will give us some of the blessings with which he says his hands are heavy laden.

I am very thankful for the opportunity of attending church services regularly, and of becoming acquainted with some of our apostles, missionaries, and other church officers. I have learned much from the talks, sermons, and visits I have had from them, and it is my desire to do much for the work. They are wonderful men, and I have great confidence in our leaders and hope to be able to follow their leadership.

May we all have a greater brotherly love, and become of one mind and be able to carry out the will of our heavenly Father. It is my wish to so live that each tomorrow finds me farther than today.

Experiences of Unusual Blessing

I wish to express my appreciation for God's goodness to me. While living at Winnipeg, I had a terrible cold, and was unable to work for two days. My cold kept getting worse, until I could neither sit nor lie down with comfort.

One night, after several attempts to sleep, I went to Brother Henderson for administration. After Brother Henderson had administered to me, I moved about four feet and sat on another chair, and while moving this short distance, the pain left me. I walked about two hundred yards to the street car. Home again, I went immediately to bed and had a good sleep. The following morning when I arose, my cold had left me. I returned to work the next day, and was in the best of health.

Another time, when I had indigestion and had been unable to work for several days, I was administered to by Elder W. I. Arnold and another elder, whose name I have forgotten, and the following morning I went to work feeling fine.

I wish to relate to you an experience I had while at Winnipeg. I happened to get into a discussion with some learned gentlemen. I was asked a number of questions each time a man finished talking, and as soon as they were asked, I could see the answers as if someone had written them on a blackboard. I was able to answer all questions correctly. However, when the discussion ended, the questions and answers vanished from my mind.

I have a desire to live the true gospel.

God Hears and Answers Prayer

While I have never seen any great manifestations of the Spirit, I know that God hears and answers the prayers of his children, and is ever mindful of us.

At times I have felt the sweet influence of his Spirit and I know that he is watching over us.

We are isolated from church privileges and miss the association of those of like faith. Four years ago my husband's health suddenly failed, and the doctors held no hopes for him, but I knew that God would help him.

I ask the prayers of the Saints in his behalf, that he may be healed and be given the spirit of cheerfulness and fortitude to bear his sufferings.

Like a Letter From Home

Reading a letter in the Herald from someone I know is like getting a letter from home. It helps me greatly.

I love the gospel and am lonesome without the association of Saints. Our closest branch is that at Great Falls, a considerable distance away. I pray that the way may open up and we shall be able to move near a branch. I also pray that if I am worthy such a wonderful blessing, God will permit me to live to see all my children come into the church and be of service to Christ. I have five sons and daughters and three belong to the church.

I hope that Elder L. O. Wildermuth will visit us sometime this summer or fall, and stay awhile to preach. I believe I could get the schoolhouse for his meetings. The best preaching time here would be the latter part of September or the first part of October.

Thank You!

We thank our readers of this department for their very generous response to our invitation to write, issued some weeks ago. We appreciate every letter that came, and we plan to publish every one that is usable. So many arrived that we will be some weeks in catching up, and if your letter is not used immediately you will understand why. Many fine quality letters have been received and we regret that we have not more space at this time to devote to this department. We are always happy to receive your letters, and we know the readers appreciate them too. THE EDITORS.

Request Prayers

Sister Ollie Coin, of Fresno, California, requests the prayers of the Saints in her behalf, that she might be healed. She has been in ill health for the past two months, and the doctors advise an operation. Sister Coin feels that if she has the faith and the prayers of the Saints that she might be healed.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

What is the meaning of "hell" in Matthew 16:18 and Revelation 20:14?

Both of these texts use the Greek term hades for hell. It means the unseen state, place of departed souls, or hell. In one place the King James version has rendered it grave: "O grave, where is thy victory?" (1 Corinthians 15:55), but this is not supported by most modern versions. The texts cited by the questioner clearly indicates something besides death or the grave. For instance, the phrase in Revelation is: "death and hell were cast in the lake of fire."

The same word hades is used in Luke 16:23 and translated hell. It says: "in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments," and it is also used in Luke 10:15: "And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell." The classical Greek writers used hades to denote the infernal regions. The Jews used an equivalent term, sheol, meaning the separate state of the souls of the dead, but they did not agree as to the nature of that state, hence the division into two parties, the Pharisees and the Sadducees.

Should Saints join penitents at the altar of other sects to pray for them?

Our message is distinctive from all others, and it means that to us has been committed the restoration of the gospel, which the others did not have. For us to pray with them in meetings where prayers are made for their own converts is to confuse their minds as to our message. We should have sufficient faith in our message to keep it undiluted from contaminating influences of error, and if we want to lead men to Christ, we shall present our message when proper opportunity exists, rather than assist the work of leading them further into error. It would be a mistake to associate in a work of that kind, if I understand the meaning of the questioner.

How did Joseph Smith obtain the Book of Abraham?

In 1836 a traveler who visited Kirtland exhibited what were said to be Egyptian mummies and a roll of manuscript which had been found with them. Subsequently they were placed in the Chicago Museum, where they were burned in the great fire which occurred there afterward. Joseph Smith for a time obtained possession of the manuscript and attempted a translation, which he called the Book of Abraham. It was published some time afterward in the Pearl of Great Price, but had previously been published in the Times and Seasons. It is not an authoritative work of the church, however.

By what names has the church of the Saints been called, and which were adopted?

At the first organization of the church, April 6, 1830, which was then termed the "Church of Christ," the conference by unanimous vote designated the name as "The Church of Latter Day Saints" (Church History volume 1, page 454). A revelation given at that period (section 17) used the term "the church of Christ," but it was not there designated as the full official title, but appears to have been informally so used. In December, 1837 certain members attempted to establish a body with this latter name, of which Joseph Smith wrote:

"This dissenting band openly and publicly renounced the Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints, and claimed themselves to be the old standard, calling themselves the Church of Christ, excluding that of saints."—Church History volume 2, pages 120, 121.

On April 26, 1838, a revelation was given designating the name as the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" (Ibid, page 151, footnote.) This name remained until the disintegration of the organization after the Martyr's death in 1844. In 1852 a preliminary reorganization occurred and it was termed the New Organization at first, but soon became known as the Reorganization. At a conference held in September, 1872 Articles of Incorporation were adopted, in which the church was designated: The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Owen Sound Adopts Zion's Christian Legion

Among the activities of the annual reunion of Owen Sound District was the conducting of a class every morning in the interests of Zion's Christian Legion by Apostle D. T. Williams. This class was well attended, all the young people being present, as well as many older ones. Considerable interest was shown in the aim and object of this organization.

When the district conference convened, there was no hesitation concerning the organization of a division of the legion. Several were nominated for the office of divisional commander, and in the end Brother Alex Cadwell, of Guelph, Ontario, was chosen.

Guelph Branch has already organized locally, the first branch in Ontario to do so. Brother Arthur Dunn, of Fergus, Ontario, was chosen secretary, and the duties of treasurer were given to Elder Fred McLean, of Arthur, while Sister R. J. Farthing, of Grand Valley, was placed in the position of director of solicitation. The next officer chosen was director of socialization which fell to the lot of Sister Harry Davis, of Warton. The director of publicity is Mildred Miller. This filled the official corps, and the division is now ready to go to work.

Owen Sound District is the first district in Canada to organize Zion's Christian Legion, and if true to the tradition of this district, will no doubt move along successfully in its activities.

Sylvania, Ohio

One of the busiest and most spiritual days ever witnessed in this branch was held in the form of a priesthood all-day meeting, July 15. Saints from the six branches of the Northwestern Ohio District, Toledo, Bradner, Saint Marys, Oak Harbor, Lima and Sylvania, were present.

Fourteen of the Melchisedec priesthood were on the rostrum during the prayer service in the main auditorium at 9 a. m. with Elders R. F. Slye, district president, of Bradner, Ohio, and William M. Grice, of Crosswell, Michigan, in charge. Truly God met with them by His Spirit and power in this service and throughout the day. After a few short prayers, many, and especially the youth, bore their testimonies of seeing the necessity of living saintly lives, that they might rise above all other churches of today, building miniature Zions in their homes and branches and better qualifying themselves to assist in the goal, the Zion of tomorrow.

They were blessed with the gifts of the gospel, making them feel that the Lord had given them a spiritual feast. Some of the Saints expressed themselves after the service, "I wish the service would have lasted much longer because of the spirit of good fellowship and humility which was used in seeking closer contact with the Holy Spirit."

Elder William M. Grice was the speaker at the next service commencing at 11 a. m., Elder W. R. Wirebaugh in charge. After his absence of about three years, the Saints were especially happy to see and hear Elder Grice.

Then lunch at noon was served to all in the cool basement by the Sylvania women's department.

At one-thirty singing was enjoyed under the direction of the district musical director, Sister Hazel Smith.

At 2 p. m., Elder Tally, of Saint Marys, took charge of the meeting in which there were talks to the priesthood by Elders W. M. Grice and R. F. Slye. Continuing and blending into the closing service of the day, a twenty-minute round table was held.

The Saints of Northwestern Ohio District feel that God's Spirit is returning to this part of his vineyard and that there will be a wonderful work accomplished in the near future.

Conference of Western Colorado District

Saints in the Western Colorado District gathered at Durango, July 7 and 8, for their annual district conference. Over two hundred people attended the entertainment given by the young people of Delta, Sand Junction, and Durango Friday night.

Attendance at the Sunday services was not large, but the Spirit of the Master was present. The local ministry spoke at the different preaching services and conducted three prayer meetings and the sacrament service.

The outstanding young people's meeting was held Sunday, July 8, an early morning prayer service. They gathered on the mountain top about two miles from the city.

Members of the Western Colorado District are trying to further the Master's work and to improve their district and local branches.

Guelph, Ontario

Elder King Cooper, pastor of this branch, is ably carrying on the work. Much progress is noted. During the past year these Saints have been visited by Elders Njeim, Boos, Dayton, McLean, Shields, and St. John, and Apostle D. T. Williams.

Brother and Sister Hockaday, jr., were happy to announce the birth of a daughter, Irene Valda, March 16.

Ila Batchelor and Lloyd Cooper were united in marriage in the Proton church, by Elder James McLean, March 28.

These Saints were saddened by the death of John Demmons, April 3. His funeral service was conducted by Elder James Pycock, of Toronto.

A number of young people were privileged to attend the young people's convention at Hamilton, June 10. The services of the day were inspiring.

Apostle D. T. Williams was a guest of Guelph, June 12. His invitation to organize a Zion's Christian Legion met an enthusiastic response, and this branch is the first in Canada to organize a company.

This congregation was made happy by a visit from Elder William I. Fligg, July 21. He spent a week with these Saints before going on to the Lowbanks reunion.

Roseville, Michigan

Saints in Roseville are enjoying God's Spirit while they are trying to do his will and keep his commandments.

The church school is largely attended, and much interest is manifested. Although these Saints are somewhat handicapped financially, they are continuing to carry on the gospel work.

Prayer meetings each Wednesday night are well attended, as is the women's meetings each Thursday. The women have quilted more than fifty quilts during the past year.

Vinalhaven, Maine

Twenty-six Saints attended the conference of Western Maine District held at Stonington, June 14 and 15. A fine spirit was enjoyed and a profitable time was had. The trip down and back in the small power boat was also much enjoyed, there being good weather both ways.

Members of this congregation pitched a tent on "the common," July 4, in which they sold peanuts, ice cream, and lemonade. They are at present selling freshly baked peanuts and are trying to earn money in various other ways.

The suppers which are held every other Thursday by this branch, have been resumed during the summer months, in the hope of earning enough money to enable a fine group of young people to attend the Maine reunion, at Brooksville, August 11 to 19.

Vinalhaven Saints were sorry to hear of the illness of Elder Newman Wilson and are praying for his speedy recovery.

Christian Legion at Hammond, Indiana

Interest in the Christian Legion seems to be growing with the increased number of activities in this phase of church work. The Saints of Hammond Branch are busily preparing for the dedication of their church home and are engaged in activities sponsored by the Christian Legion. All seem to be fired with a desire to do all in their power toward the accomplishment of the ideals for which the Christian Legion was organized, the good of the general church financially and spiritually. At the last branch gathering of the Christian Legion it was the concensus of opinion that they had done well in the past, but with the knowledge and experience gained, it is possible for them to move forward to greater accomplishments.

The company commander and the director of socialization are continually making new plans for the building up of the group spiritually, mentally, and socially, while the director of socialization is busily engaged in the directing of captains and solicitors in the financial affairs of the legion. A report from the director of solicitation shows that with an increased interest in the legion comes an increased effort financially.

Although this branch is not one hundred percent legionnaires, the legion members are very nearly a hundred percent tithpayers and the goal of the legion is "Every member of the branch a tithpayer."

On July 4, a picnic was sponsored by the legion and well attended by an enthusiastic crowd. The legion also has sponsored an attendance contest in the branch, using the church colors, purple and gold. This has created considerable enthusiasm.

Portland Young People Enjoy Hilltop Meetings

Several early morning prayer meetings have been held by the Portland young people on a beautiful hilltop near the church during the past month. These have been a source of inspiration and beauty such as no other form of worship could provide. Reminiscent of last year's prayer meetings at the Northwest reunion at Silver Lake, and looking forward to gatherings of the same kind this year, these meetings have been well attended.

Elder J. L. Verhei has been in charge, assisted by leaders of the Portland young people, Clifford Bryson and Floyd Soneson. The last meeting before the reunion was held July 31, and a week later this group, joined with young Saints from Seattle, British Columbia, and Spokane, will meet in the grove on the hill near the reunion grounds.

Anyone who has been privileged to be with this group under the leadership of such men as President F. M. McDowell, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, and others, does not soon forget. All are invited to attend.

Missionary Activities

Since last General Conference I have participated in five series of meetings besides doing some cottage work in Kansas City Stake.

These meetings have been held at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, Mount Vernon, Illinois, Scammon, Kansas, and Thayer, Missouri, where we are now engaged in a missionary effort in the city park. Elders W. E. Haden and W. W. Christensen, of the Southern Missouri District, are also here.

Baptisms have taken place in every series of meeting held since conference, and twenty-one have been inducted into the kingdom by the writer and others at these points.

Two united with us here Sunday before last, and others joined the following Sabbath.

We are pleased to find the local ministry in most of these places carrying on the work and manifesting missionary zeal in a commendable way.

J. CHARLES MAY.

Holdenville, Oklahoma

Active in Good Work

Saints of this congregation have been busy throughout the year, and a summary of their work is given.

In January, Brother Howard Harpham held a three-weeks' series of meetings, which was followed by a short visit from Apostle Roy S. Budd. These Saints were happy to see Brother Budd, and invite him to return again.

The Sunday school and young people's organization together gave a cantata Easter Sunday night, which was enjoyed by the members of the branch.

Four children were baptized on Children's Day in the afternoon. Elder Charles E. Goss was in charge of the confirmation service which followed the baptisms.

The young people held an ice cream social June 21, on the church lawn. The evening was spent in playing games with several special musical numbers.

Members of this congregation enjoyed a short visit from Elder E. A. Stoff, July 1.

Brother and Sister J. S. Meyer and Brother and Sister Mitchell motored to Oklahoma City, June 24, to be present at the dedication services. They enjoyed the sermons and also the dinner, which was served at noon.

The women organized the women's department, February 11, for the purpose of raising money with which to help pay off the church debt. Under the leadership of Sister Meyer, president, they raised thirty dollars by holding various sales. The women planned a sacrifice period to last for ten weeks, giving ten cents a week throughout the remainder of the hot weather.

Although these Saints are few in number, they are continuing to carry on the work of the Master.

London, Ontario

Observe Special Days

The activities on Children's Day proved to be very successful. A program given by the children was carried out in harmony with the occasion. Preceding the church school hour three candidates were baptized, Elder J. E. MacGregor and Priest Arlo G. Hodgson, officiating. The platform around the font was beautifully decorated and furnished the setting for the baptisms. The candidates were confirmed during the evening service under the hands of Elders J. E. MacGregor, Gray, Hardey, and Harrison. The charges to the candidates and congregation were given by Elders Gray and Hardey, respectively.

The church school orchestra is proving a help during the services. They recently presented a successful program under the direction of Brother Raymond Neal.

A successful garden party was held on the church grounds, recently, under the auspices of the women's department. The orchestra provided music, and Sister Margaret Alford rendered a pleasing number by request.

Inspirational sermons have been delivered during the past few weeks by Bishop J. C. Dent, Elders MacGregor, Gray, Alford, and Farrow, and Priest Arlo G. Hodgson.

Several of the Saints motored to Erie Beach, to be in attendance at the Reunion held there.

A large crowd was in attendance at the church school picnic at Springbank. The weather was ideal, and a program of races, ball games, etc., was enjoyed by all.

This church was the scene of a pretty summer wedding, recently, when Bishop Dent officiated at the marriage of Madeline Verlyn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas G. Timbrell, to Doctor Darrell A. Campbell, son of David Campbell. Mrs. C. S. Abell, sister of the bride, acted as matron of honor, and Miss Clara Timbrell, as maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Babe Timbrell, another sister of the bride, and Mabel French and Jean Brookes. Ring bearers were Bille and Bobby Moore, and Doctor Gordon Holden attended Doctor Campbell. After a short wedding trip, this popular young couple will make their home in this city.

Independence

Saints of the Gudgell Park congregation were the special guests Sunday evening, at the campus service. Elder Herbert Barto assisted President Elbert A. Smith during the evening, while Elder Harold C. Burgess directed the congregational singing.

President Smith chose for his subject, "Resurrection." After his sermon, a fifteen-minute worship program was held, at which time the picture of Christ and his disciples was thrown on the screen, while the congregation singing, "An Old, Old Path." The candles were lighted by Lois Jean Williams, sister of the bride, and Betty Lou Mills. Paul Haller acted as best man for Mr. Carpenter, and the groomsmen were Earl Page and Lawrence Weir. The flower girls were Maxine Gould and Janice Schutt, and the bride was attended by Miss Mary Nigh, maid of honor, and bridesmaids were Miss Opal Williams and Miss Margaret Bowen. The double ring ceremony was read by Elder John F. Sheehy. Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter will make their home in Independence.

At the close of the primary Sunday school hour the baby of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Edmunds was blessed by its grandfathers, Elders Charles Edmunds and E. E. Thomas. Mrs. Edmunds has worked in the primary department for a number of years.

Sacrament service was opened by an organ prelude played by Mrs. Sam Inman. Pastor Will Inman was in charge. Two babies were blessed, the child of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Collins and that of Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Thomas, Elders C. E. Blodgett and A. K. Dillee officiating. The oblation talk was by Elder Sam Inman, and Elder W. Odom gave the communion talk. A special prayer was offered by Elder Frank Veenstra.

Pastor W. N. Inman, wife, and daughter, Nadine, left Sunday afternoon for a two-week vacation at Colorado Springs.

M. Smith officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Merle Quick. Her sister, Miss Florence Chrestensen, was maid of honor, and another sister, Mrs. Arthur Clow, was bridesmaid. Gerald Seibert was best man and Arthur Clow, groomsman. Little Anna Lou Radnall carried the rings. The reception followed at the home of the bride's mother. A week ago Friday the boys' volley ball team won four games out of five from Englewood team. Last week they lost all five games to Enoch Hill, but they still have the spirit of winning by keeping on.

East Independence Church

Last Wednesday evening several East Independence members went to Enoch Hill for a special prayer service for Sister Mary Minton. This prayer meeting in her behalf was in charge of Arthur Peer, assisted by Thomas Thatcher.

The women's department met Thursday at the church, Sister Florence Minton in charge. Little Eldene Peer sang a solo, "Starry Lilies," and Doris Lee Thatcher played a piano number.

Sunday morning the sacrament service was in charge of Elder Clare Austin assisted by Elders Harry Friend, Sam Smith, and Frank Minton. The last part of this service was devoted to prayer and testimony, and the Spirit was there in abundance. Brother Hatton, who lost his eyesight a few months ago through an accident, was administered to. He needs the prayer of the Saints.

Gudgell Park Church

Local Saints appreciated the presence of Elders A. K. Dillee and Walter Self at their July sacrament service.

Quite a number of people have gone away on vacation trips this summer, and they have been missed at church services. Home folks have been glad to welcome Sister Joy Sherman Harris, now of Story City, Iowa.

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of the pastor recently when Alice Williams, a local girl, became the bride of Clyde Howe, of Wisdom, Missouri. A reception was given at her new home near Wisdom, many friends from Independence attending.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey was the speaker July 8, and on the fifteenth, Elder G. W. Eastwood talked on "Why I Am a Latter Day Saint." The following Sunday Elder C. A. Kress gave a timely sermon on the condition of the world today and made a call for repentance.

July 29, Elder W. A. Smith spoke on the reality of God. Brother Smith has spent thirty-nine years as a missionary without a furlough. Though he was superannuated last April, he still intends to carry on and is leaving soon for a mission to Nebraska.

The girls of the two Sunday school classes spent an enjoyable two days at the fresh air camp last week. The Salvation Army people made them welcome.

The great grandson of Sister Anna Haslett, of West Jefferson, Ohio, Charles Deibel, was blessed by Patriarch J. E. Matthews, assisted by Elder R. E. Madden, July 1, at the regular sacrament service.

At the evening hour the twin boys of Brother and Sister William Standard were blessed. Paul Richard, by Patriarch J. E. Matthews and Daniel Edward, by Elder R. E. Madden.

The church school held its annual picnic July 4, at Hempy's Park. All who attended enjoyed the day.

The women's department met July 12, in the social room of the church. A paper on "Charity" was written by Vera M. Hunter and read by Edna Jackson. A very good historical paper was read by Margaret Drago.

Visitors here for the month were Brother and Sister T. R. Burke, of Circleville, Ohio; Sister Anna Haslett, of West Jefferson, Ohio; Elder C. W. Clark, pastor of First Church, Elder A. E. Anderson, district president, Elder John R. Grice, and Mrs. Derbel.

Both sermons and prayer meetings in the past have been very inspirational.

Third Church, South Wheatland Tabernacle

The sacrament service the first of July was a peaceful one, the Spirit of the Master being deeply felt by all present. A goodly number were present and were well paid for their efforts. In the evening, Elder George Ferguson, of the First Church, occupied the pulpit.

The Sunday school entertained with a picnic July 4, at West-gate Park, where there was a nice grove of shade trees and swings for the children. Lemonade and ice cream were served.

On the evening of July 12, a lawn fete, sponsored by the Gleaner's Class of young men and women, was held at the church. This was held to help pay off the church debt.

Lewis M. Waltus occupied the stand July 29, in the morning. Brother Waltus has been a member of the church for seventy years, and was a member of the first branch organized in Ohio, the Syracuse Branch. He was ordained a priest in 1876, and has been a faithful member of the Third Church since its organization.

The afternoon of the twenty-ninth, Elder Welsh and Priest Dougherty went to the home for the aged and held services. Brother Harry Hoffman, of the Second Church, opened the meeting with prayer and gave a short talk. Sister Mary Welsh assisted throughout the service at the piano. Sisters Welsh and Dougherty were also present.

Speakers for this congregation during the month of July were Elders Welsh, Vickeroy, and Scharfenberg, and Priest Dougherty.

An Impressive Wedding Ceremony

Before an altar banked with flowers and greens, Miss Ella M. Doty, daughter of Elder and Mrs. B. H. Doty, became the bride of John W. Wiley, son of Elder and Mrs. Glen Wiley, of Summit City, Michigan, Sunday morning, June 24, at the local church.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, J. Cecil, was attended by her sister, Miss Maxine Doty, and Paul Robinson, of Mount Pleasant, Michigan, attended the bridegroom. Doyle Doty, nephew of the bride, was ring bearer.

Elder B. H. Doty, father of the bride, performed the ceremony, assisted by Elder Glen Wiley, father of the bridegroom, who pronounced the paternal blessing. A fifteen-minute recital of wedding music was played by Miss Ruth Buell, who also played the wedding march. Preceding the ceremony, a girls' quartet sang, "I Love You Truly."

Both bride and bridegroom are graduates of the Traverse City High School. Brother Wiley is a priest, and an active church worker, as is his bride. Brother Wiley is teaching at Belding, Michigan, where they will make their home after September 1.

Far West Stake

Cameron Branch

Extreme heat has not held down the attendance during the month of July. The Wednesday evening prayer services have had exceptionally good turnouts.

Bishops Henry L. Livingston and Elder Ward A. Hougas, of Saint Joseph, were present with the Cameron Saints, Sunday, July 15. Brother Livingston gave the morning address to a large congregation. At noon a basket dinner was served in the basement of the church. At two o'clock, Brother Hougas preached to a well-filled church. Far West, Kingston, Oakdale, and Richmond branches joined in this regional meeting.

The women of this branch held an ice cream social, July 26, on the church lawn. In spite of the coolness of that particular evening, a nice sum was realized from the social.

A group of thirty-five young people spent the day at Far West, Haun's Mill, and other points of interest to church members, July 29. The young people of Oakdale, Kingston and Far West branches joined in and spent a profitable time together. A few from Independence were also able to enjoy the trip with the other young people. At noon a basket dinner was served in the grove near Stoner's bridge, which is located about three-fourths of a mile from the site of the temple lot at Far West. Brother Henry L. Livingston, the new bishop of Far West Stake, gave the morning discourse. He stressed the devotion the old pioneers of the church had for the Latter Day work and urged the youth to press forward toward the building of Zion. The group journeyed to Haun's Mill about two o'clock, but because of the threatening weather started back to Cameron soon after their arrival at that historic spot.

Three young people were added to the church during the past few weeks. June Etta Gaines and Gladys Wilson, of Cameron, and Gerald Hancock, of Maysville, were baptized at an impressive afternoon service and then confirmed in the upper auditorium of the church.

The young people of the branch now hold their O. T. Z. meetings on Monday evening instead of Sunday. This is being tried out for a time to see if the change is beneficial. The first meeting at the new time found a large group present for the meeting.

Miss La Verla Daniel and Emerson McCord were united in marriage at eleven o'clock, June 1, Sunday. Brother Thomas Fiddick read the ceremony. After a ten-day honeymoon, they went to Stewartsville, where the bridegroom resides and where they will continue to farm.

Miss Eileen Turner and Merle Newcom, of Cameron, were married Sunday, July 29, with Elder Meyers, of Deloit, Iowa, performing the sacred rites. Brother and Sister Newcom will reside in Stewartsville, where the bridegroom will operate a barber shop. Both young people have moved to Cameron in the past year, Brother Newcom, coming from Iowa, and his bride, from Kirksville.

Toronto, Canada

Progress Noted in All Departments

During the last week in May, the women's department, under the leadership of Mrs. Mary Wilson, served meals for the Church of Christ during their Dominion-wide Convention. Many compliments were heard regarding the splendid meals served, the accommodation and the feeling of friendship shown them. From this effort, the women realized a little over $100 which goes toward the interest on the new church debt.

Children's Day was fittingly observed this year about the middle of June. After the regular branch prayer meeting, the junior department took charge of the special program presented by the children. A short cantata was given under the direction of Mrs. Elsie Castle, assisted by Miss Esther Prentice, at the piano. Toward the end of the service, twelve children were baptized by Bishop A. F. McLean.

Recent speakers for this congregation have been Elders Percy Farrow, George Njeim and Apostle D. T. Williams, in addition to local men.

The young people have been endeavoring to meet at the church at least one night a week for recreation. The lower auditorium is very convenient for indoor sports as it is cool even on the warmest days.

In the recent Provincial Election, Pastor J. L. Prentice was the Liberal Candidate in Parkdale Ryding. He was defeated by the Honorable W. H. Price, former attorney-general, with a small majority of votes. These Saints feel that he made a very fine run considering this was his debut in politics and that Mr. Price has been a member of this Ryding for twenty years.

The women paid the interest on the church mortgage for a six month period, July 1, amounting to a little over $926. The men paid $500 on the principal and the young people lessened the organ debt by $65.

Cherokee, Iowa

Saints of Cherokee feel keenly the loss of Sister Laura Kudrle, who with her husband and family, moved to Sioux City, Iowa, where she is carrying on her work in the church. During the last six months, she has been in charge of the women's department here, and is succeeded by Sister Avis Merrell.

On Mother's Day, as well as Father's Day, an appropriate sermon was preached by Elder W. W. Reeder. Vocal solos were sung by Brother Merle Chiles, director of the music.

The district conference was held at Sioux City, June 30, and July 1. Brother Albert Haynes and family, and Brother E. M. Chiles were privileged to attend the conference for one day. The name of Brother Chiles was approved by the conference for ordination to the office of teacher.

At the sacrament meeting, July 1, the little son of Brother and Sister Donald Julius was blessed. A beautiful and impressive blessing was given by Pastor A. R. Crippen, assisted by Elder S. T. Spence.

Large Number of Priesthood Assure Successful Meetings

All-day services were held at the home of Brother and Sister E. E. Barnard, three and one half miles east of Kingsley, Michigan, July 10, with Saints from various places in the district in attendance. The large number of the priesthood present, enabled the meetings to be a success.

At 9:30, services began with a fellowship meeting in charge of B. H. Doty, assisted by Patriarch James Davis. A marked degree of the Spirit was present.

Elder B. H. Doty was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour, which was followed by a pot-luck dinner, served by the women.

Preaching again at one o'clock, by Elder Leonard Houghton, was followed by a thirty-minute talk by Elder R. D. Davis.

All Saints present enjoyed the meetings, and feel strengthened and encouraged to press forward with greater zeal than ever before.

Brother D. E. Saxton was administered to by Brothers Glenn Wiley and James Davis.

The following is a list of the priesthood present at the services: Missionary Leonard Houghton, and District President Buell Shelley, Free Soil, Michigan; Walter Scott, Manistee, Michigan; Willard Marsh, Bendon; Syras Doty, H. A. Doty, B. H. Doty, J. C. Doty, and Ray Dick, Traverse City, Michigan; Alvin R. Ellis, R. D. Davis, and Patriarch James Davis, South Boardman, Michigan; Harry Davis, Pontiac, Michigan; Frederick Ellis, Ann Arbor, Michigan; Glenn Wiley, Summit City, Michigan; John Wiley, Belding, Michigan; E. E. Barnard, Kingsley, Michigan.

Many Enjoy Stereopticon Slides

Elders C. Ed Miller and the writer visited Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, July 21. Our coming had been well advertised by the pastor, Earl H. Brennan, and a good crowd was present at the Sunday morning service to hear Brother Miller. In the afternoon we went to Mahoning Creek where one adult and three children were baptized. In the evening these were confirmed, and C. Ed delivered his lecture on "Church History" with stereopticon pictures, to a church well filled with strangers and members, some coming over a distance of forty miles.

The next day we called at the home of Sister Daisy M. Shenkel, who with her husband lives on a farm near Johnstown, Pennsylvania. This was the first visit from a Latter Day Saint she has had at her home in seven years, and she is the only member of the church in this locality that we have knowledge of. During the summer the neighbors have been in the habit of gathering at her home on Friday nights, where they have entertaining features in their large barn, which has been swept clean and put in order for such a use. This barn is over seventy-five years old and is built in the old-fashioned enduring way. We asked if it would be possible to get the farm people out to a preaching service. Our Sister said she would try, and soon the telephone was working over time. In the evening a goodly number were seated in the barn and C. Ed delivered his "Church History" lecture with pictures. This was a new experience for Brother Miller with his lantern, but the audience, composed of Protestants and Catholics, were attentive and expressed their appreciation in hearing the true history of the coming forth of the Latter Day Saints, their early trials and present growth. Brother Miller is making a lot of friends in this district in visiting various places with his stereopticon slides. People still like pictures.

Elder J. C. McConnaughy and Brother Arthur Howes have been holding services at Paisley, Pennsylvania. Brothers J. W. Winters and James P. Marsh have been going to this place, also Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and as a result, five were baptized at Paisley on the fifteenth, some from Dunbar, where the brethren go occasionally. Brethren Winters and Marsh help the colored Saints in Uniontown with visits occasionally. Elder William McCune, pastor of the New Castle, Pennsylvania, Branch, holds meetings at Darlington, Pennsylvania, with good results, as some have been baptized. So the good work goes on.

E. B. HULL.

Lennox, California

Children's Day was appropriately carried out June 10, when four young people were baptized at Central Los Angeles Church, by Elder W. J. Nuckles. Confirmation services were held June 17, and the candidates were confirmed by Elder W. J. Nuckles and Doctor A. W. Teel. Those baptized were Ernest Owens, Vaughn Root, Arnold Root, and Marcine Steffens.

Saints of this group were saddened by the death of Brother Alfred M. Irvine, June 9, at his home, in Hawthorne, California. Funeral services were conducted by Elder W. J. Nuckles. Brother Irvine was formerly of Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

The women of Lennox recently held a bazaar and food sale. They also conducted a carnival, Friday evening, July 20.

All departments of the church school are working together, and attendance is steadily increasing.

Recent speakers have been Brother J. W. Scott, and Doctor A. W. Teel. Their sermons were very much enjoyed.

Many of the Saints of this congregation are planning to attend the district reunion at Huntington Beach, August 17 to 26.

Plano, Illinois

Work is still under process to make the Stone Church, a landmark of the Old Church built in 1868, a more up to date structure. Work has been done on the basement for the past two years, preparing it for the time when it can be fully completed.

Saints and friends have bent their efforts in moving the hundreds of yards of dirt and stone, placing beams and shoring them, running concrete for a portion of the floor to set the furnace on, and also a new chimney.

Classes are giving benefits and socials, earning money to complete the project.

For the first time in sixty-six years, the first time since the Stone Church was built, strangers going through Plano are able to tell what building it really is. A number of years ago, Elder C. H. Burr made a bulletin board and placed it on the side of the church. Children soon mutilated it and it was taken down. About two weeks ago a scaffold was seen leaning up against the building, and in a few hours the name of the church was found on the arch above the door, with the seal of the church inscribed on the keystone. Elder Marion Blakely did the lettering and inscription. Some time ago he made a name place for our church in Sandwich, Illinois, where he is pastor.

June 24 was a day of special service in Plano. At the close of the church school hour, the service was turned over to the leader of the children's department, Ilah Blakely, and they immediately entered into a junior worship service. Laying on of hands and ordination was explained, and at the close of the service, Marion Moroni Blakely was ordained to the office of elder.

Midland, Michigan

The Midland choir under the direction of Harry Runkle, has been making considerable progress during the past two years. With twenty-seven voices blending harmoniously, they have earned a commendable reputation through the rendering of special anthems, cantatas, etc., at various district meetings as well as locally. Early in the spring, trips were taken by the entire choir when they sang in as many as three towns in one day. The Midland Branch feels that they should be proud of the work done by Brother Runkle in building up such a choir.

The Central Michigan District Choir, which is also directed by Harry Runkle, is developing a large amount of talent in the line of music. Special practices are held in different parts of the district at regular intervals and a choir of about sixty-five voices has responded.

During the Central Michigan Reunion, to be held at Edenville, August 10 to 19, the different choirs in this district will sing special songs at the evening and Sunday services. Sunday, August 19, a special concert will be given by the district choir when they will sing: "Lead, Kindly Light," "New Every Morning Is Thy Love," "The King of Love My Shepherd Is," "Send Out Thy Light" and "Listen to the Lambs." This concert will be held in the afternoon and all those familiar with the above selections are invited to join in and sing with the choir. All those having the above music are requested to bring their own copies.

The Central Michigan Orchestra, consisting of twenty-five pieces, under the direction of Willis Shrock, of Beaverton, will also take part in the concert to be given Sunday afternoon.

Each day during the reunion, beginning, Saturday, a musical instruction class and choir practice will be held at 1

p. m. Sister Louise Evans, state musical director, is expected to spend some time at the reunion and will undoubtedly aid in giving instruction at this class service.

All-day Services Held at New Canton, Illinois

The temperature up to one hundred and twelve degrees did not stop the Saints from having an all-day meeting, July 22. A large crowd was in attendance at each service throughout the day. Brother and Sister Thomas and family, of Beardstown, were present, as also twenty-eight members of the Nebo, Illinois, Branch.

Six classes were conducted under capable leadership at nine-forty-five, which was followed by preaching at eleven o'clock by Brother Thomas. Brother Guthrie, of Nebo, spoke to the congregation in the afternoon, while Brother Thomas occupied again in the evening.

Sunday services at New Canton are well attended. The Saints feel that there is a big work to be done, and they are doing to their best to carry forth the gospel message.

Gladstone, Michigan

Saints of Gladstone were made happy, July 8, when two young men, Keith Campbell and Donald Swain, were baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by Elder Edward R. Carter. The candidates, talented and fine examples of true manhood, were confirmed under the hands of Missionary J. J. Ledsworth and Pastor Warner Acker.

This congregation welcomed the visit of Brother and Sister Gordon Brown and daughter, Marlien, of Lansing, and Sister Louise Evans, of Grand Rapids, Sunday, July 29.

I would like to close with a reference to a great passage in one of Chesterton's books where he describes the two cups. In this hard world of ours, we are often tempted to take one cup, that of unbelief and self-indulgence, when the better one is available.

There is the cup of Omar Khayyam and it is offered to you. Drink, says Omar, for the stars are cruel and the world is as idle as a humming top, and heaven is deaf to supplication and blind to pain; drink, for there is nothing worth loving and nothing worth trusting.

And at the high altar of Christianity stands another figure holding up his cup. "Drink, for this is my blood of the new covenant; drink, for the trumpets are blowing for battle and this is your cup; drink, for I know when you came and why; drink, for I know when you go and where."—Adam W. Burnett, in "The Man Who Nearly Let Go," Church Management.

The Majesty of Moses' Choice

Scripture reading, Hebrews 11: 24-26. This reading gives us the background of Moses' choice. We read: "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward."

Faith is not credulity. It is assurance and evidence of things not seen, the power of the soul to grasp great things and realities though they are not visible. Faith looks to the future and does today what it sees will be recognized later as proved values.

Moses possessed a forward moving faith. He used his intelligence, was faithful in the use of all his faculties, and became acquainted with Christ.

Rameses II, the great builder of Egypt, expressed his life in a material way—erecting colossal monuments and statues of himself. These now are crumbling away and many lie prostrate and broken.

But Moses looked to the future. He cast his lot with the people of God. He clearly understood Christ for he prophesied of him unto the fathers: "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you." (Acts 3: 22.)

The glory and pomp of Egypt's elaborate funerals such as was given to Tutankhamen, meant little to Moses, but he was deeply interested in the significance of the empty tomb of Christ. He was ready to set aside royalty for his Master. It meant the privilege of taking part in the building of the kingdom of God, and gathering his people into the land of Canaan.

The opportunity that came to Moses to make a supreme choice, comes to every one of us today. As in the case of Moses, acceptance of Christ will enable us to apply to our task the touch of a master's hand. Form an unbroken contact with God, formulate a program, love much, and faithfully perform your task.

Envy is the daughter of pride, the author of murder and revenge, the beginner of secret sedition, the perpetual tormentor of virtue. Envy is the filthy slime of the soul; a venom, a poison, a quicksilver, which consumeth the flesh, and drieth up the marrow of the bones.—George Wharton James, in Quit Your Worrying!

Conference Notices

The semiannual conference of Arkansas and Louisiana District will convene August 31 to September 2, at Fisher, Arkansas. Apostle Roy S. Budd will be in attendance. Sister Gordon expects to have a program for the evening of August 31. Branch secretaries and all members of the priesthood who are unable to attend the conference, please send reports to the writer at Bald Knob, Arkansas, not later than August 29. Everyone is urged to attend.—Seth P. Harbour, district secretary.

Request Prayers

Friends of Harold Braidwood of Detroit request the members of the church to pray in his behalf, fasting where possible. This young man has experienced a series of trials and disappointments which have proved too great for his strength, and he has broken under the strain. Sickness, family distress growing out of the depression, and other things have played their part. His first suffering was of a mental nature and now he is in physical danger. All are urged to remember him.

Sister Lizzie F. Strong, of Hancock, Michigan, requests the prayers of the Saints in her behalf that she may recover from sciatica. Her suffering at times has been almost unbearable.

Conference Minutes

HOLDEN STAKE.—A special conference of Holden Stake was called by the First Presidency and assembled at Holden, Missouri, Sunday, June 10, at 2 p. m., Elbert A. Smith and F. M. McDowell of the First Presidency presiding. This conference was called on account of an emergency created by the ill health of W. S. Macrae, stake president, who soon after General Conference, presented his resignation from that office. This had been accepted by the First Presidency, and they had appointed Amos E. Allen to act as president. The conference approved this appointment by formal vote. Then Brother Allen paid tribute to the character and record of the retiring stake president. He nominated James A. Thomas as first counselor and asked time for consideration of the other counselor. This nomination was approved by the conference. To fill the vacancy created in the stake bishopric by the election of Amos E. Allen as stake president, Bishop J. A. Koehler nominated Earl T. Higdon, and the conference approved. The conference then acted unanimously to sustain the stake presidency as at present constituted, also the stake bishopric. G. R. Wells having resigned as director of religious education, President Allen nominated Earl T. Higdon, and the conference unanimously approved. The stake recorder, Miss Myrtle Carr, having moved out of the stake, Mrs. Mildred Lundeen, of Atherton, was nominated by President Allen, and this was unanimously approved. The stake director of music having resigned, Brother Allen presented the name of Sister Bernice Hampton, of Holden, and this also was unanimously approved. The chair stated that a special assignment had been given G. R. Wells, that of pastor to the scattered members of the stake. The following, in order named, were recommended for ordination by the stake presidency, the names having been previously approved at a meeting of the stake council: Robert Thistlethwaite, of Sedalia, to the office of priest; Clyde Johnson, Warrensburg, priest; Max Constance, Warrensburg, priest; Charles Johnson, Warrensburg, deacon; Elmer Moody, Holden, deacon. The resolution of appreciation which follows was presented and its adoption moved: "Resolved, that we the members of Holden Stake in conference assembled, convey to our retiring stake president, W. S. Macrae, this expression of appreciation of his dignified and sacrificial ministry during the years of his presidency. We regret the circumstances which make it necessary for him to retire from the field in which he loved to serve; we feel that the privilege of resting for a period from his labor has been dearly earned; and we cherish the hope that both nature and nature's God will be kind to him, and restore him to health, and thus extend the period of our profitable association, and permit him opportunity to enjoy here and now some of the rewards which arise from a labor of consecration to the cause of the Master." This was unanimously adopted by a standing vote. An ordination service for the setting apart of the brothers approved by the conference, was announced for the first Sunday in July at Warrensburg. President Allen stated that the matter of a stake budget, previously referred by the conference, is still under consideration and further time must be had before reporting. He stated also that the question of a stake reunion, previously referred to stake officers and council, is still under consideration. A unanimous vote of thanks to Holden Saints was carried for their hospitality to the institute and conference. The conference closed with a dedication service. President E. A. Smith read Doctrine and Covenants 11, a hymn was sung, and the invocation was by Bishop J. A. Koehler. President McDowell stated that the setting apart of the new stake officers approved by the conference, was not to be regarded as a new ordination, but a blessing or dedication to the service to which they were now assigned. Officers dedicated to their new responsibility were: Amos E. Allen, stake president; James A. Thomas, first counselor to stake president; E. T. Higdon, counselor to stake bishop. The chair stated that it was the intention of the First Presidency and stake president to give careful consideration to the filling of vacancies in the stake council. By usual motion the conference and young people's institute adjourned. President Elbert A. Smith offered the prayer of dedication and dismissal.

OWEN SOUND.—The eighteenth Owen Sound district conference convened at Port Elgin, Ontario, July 8, District President Elder H. A. Dayton in charge, assisted by Apostle D. T. Williams. A half-hour prayer service preceded the conference, presided over by Elder H. A. Dayton and Apostle D. T. Williams. The business session began at 10 a. m. Minutes of last conference were read and approved. Reports from the following officers were read: District president, treasurer, bishop's agent, and missionaries. A motion was passed that "no one be ordained to the ministry who uses tobacco or strong drink." Another motion was introduced regarding the dividing of the district into Northern and Southern Owen Sound Districts, and the conference finally decreed that it be left in the hands of the northern branches. Adjourned at noon to meet again at 2 p. m. A motion was passed that free meals be served next year, as this proved a success at this reunion. This is in charge of the district presidency. preaching the sermon. She was laid to rest by the side of her husband in Coal Hill Cemetery.

DELLENBAUGH.—Maurice L. Dellenbaugh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lester Dellenbaugh, of Meridian, Idaho, was born at Kidder, Missouri, May 22, 1915, and passed away June 30, 1934, at the Veterans' Hospital, Boise, Idaho, of infantile paralysis. He came to Idaho in 1919, residing in Boise until January, 1929, when with his parents and sister, Lois, he moved to Meridian. He was a splendid student in school and a lover of clean sports. He was a member of the football and basket ball teams, and possessed a lovable disposition which won for him a place in the hearts of both classmates and faculty. Maurice was baptized into the church June 8, 1924, by Elder Earl F. Hoisington, in which faith he lived and died. In April of this year, Maurice enlisted in the Civilian Conservation Corps on the North Fork of the Boise River. He had been ailing for a day or so and was brought to the camp at Idaho City, where he was taken violently ill with complete paralysis of the respiratory organs June 30, and was rushed to the hospital, where physicians, nurses and firemen worked incessantly with a pulmotor and every means known to science to save his life. He passed away with the family and relatives at his bedside. Private services were conducted at the Meridian Cemetery by Elder Roy E. Hewes, who is also Chaplain of the Idaho Civilian Conservation Corps.

FRESHOUR.—Bernadine Freshour, daughter of Mrs. Owen Porter, of Wabash, was born October 14, 1911, in McCleasboro, Illinois. Having been ill during the past year, she slowly grew worse, until Monday evening, July 30, 1934, she passed away at the Lutheran Hospital, in Fort Wayne, Indiana. She leaves to mourn her husband, Ralph Freshour, of Fort Wayne, her mother Mrs. Owen Porter, and the following brothers and sisters, Leland Bond, of McCleasboro, Mrs. Clyde Barnes, of Fort Wayne, and Pauline Bond, of Wabash. Mrs. Freshour was a faithful member of the church since her baptism, March 12, 1933. Interment was in the Fairview Cemetery, Wabash, Indiana.

HAIN.—Amelia F. Reynolds was born in Cass County, Michigan, February 11, 1850, daughter of Edward M. and Sarah Reynolds. When nine years old she moved with her parents to Calhoun County, Iowa, where she grew to womanhood. October 20, 1867, she married David Hain, who also moved to Iowa from Michigan. On a farm in Jackson Township to which she came as a bride, five children were born to them: Philip M., who lives in Arizona; Jennie, who died in 1914; Emma, of Waterloo, Iowa; George, who died at two years of age, and Verna E., of Oklahoma. She adopted a baby boy, Johnnie, who died when a few months old. Besides her three living children, she is survived by fifteen grandchildren, eight great-grandchildren, one great-great-grandchild; two brothers, Albert, of Lake City, Iowa, and Levi, of Long Beach, California, and a host of friends. She passed away July 5, 1934, at the home of her brother, Albert, at Lake City, after years of suffering from ills incident to old age. Her death marks the passing of another Calhoun County pioneer. She and her husband joined the church July 4, 1876, and through all the changing years remained loyal to the faith. They gave freely of tithes and offerings. She was a leader in singing, and in every movement for good was an earnest helper. Her home was the mecca of elders in the early days. She was a friend to the sick and the needy, a true and loyal wife and devoted mother. Her hands were never idle until failing sight compelled her to give up the things she loved best to do. She never entirely gave up her household tasks, however, until the last week of her life. The funeral was held July 8, at Cottonwood Union Church near Lake City, Elder George Juergens in charge, sermon by E. Y. Hunker. Interment was in Cottonwood Cemetery.

HASELTINE.—Emma Clough Haseltine was born January 25, 1889, at Canon, New Hampshire, and departed from this life July 4, 1934, following an operation and several weeks of illness. She was baptized a member of the church August 1, 1901, at Silverlake, Massachusetts, by Elder Richard Bullard. Funeral services were held from the home at Stoneham, Massachusetts, in charge of Elder M. C. Fisher, Apostle Paul M. Hanson preaching the sermon. She was laid to rest beside her only daughter, who had preceded her in death several years. She leaves to mourn a beloved husband, two sons, Stephen and David, an aged father and one brother, Roy Clough, of Kirtland, Ohio. A wealth of flowers bespoke the esteem in which she was held by her friends and neighbors.

KOHL.—Emma Dora Hartman was born in Canada, September 22, 1860, and departed this life in Santa Ana, California, July 17, 1934. In August, 1877, near Bayport, Michigan, she was united in marriage to Henry Kohl, and lived there for thirty-six years. In 1920, they moved to California and settled in Santa Ana, on a little ranch near the river. It was there that the husband passed away in 1924. To this union were born seven children, four of whom survive her, Charles, of Soap Lake, Washington; Henry, of Bayport, Michigan; Mrs. Lilly Kraft, of Anaheim, California, and Mrs. Alice Holve, of Fullerton, California. Forty-eight years ago, in 1886, she became a member of the church, being baptized by Elder J. J. Cornish. Her life was the life of a Saint. She was a good mother, and will be missed by all who knew her. Funeral services were held from the Hilgenfeld Funeral Home, Anaheim, California, Elder Louis J. Ostertag officiating. Interment was in the Anaheim Cemetery.

LONG.—Ernest William Long was born in Bruce County, Ontario, Canada, December 6, 1874, and departed this life June 29, 1934, at Nokomis, Saskatchewan, Canada. He was baptized by Elder John Shields March 21, 1898, and the same year was called to the office of priest, and an elder, June 21, 1903. He was president of the Chatham Branch for a number of years. In his early life he taught school and later was manager of the Gas and Electric Light Company, of Chatham, which position he held for seven years. It was in 1897 that he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Powell, of Elsinor, Ontario, Canada. In 1909, he moved to Nokomis, and conducted a general store. In 1916, he started farming quite extensively. Brother Long was an accountant by profession and was an exceptionally well read man. Besides his wife, he leaves a sister, Mrs. George Bell, of Regina, Saskatchewan. Funeral services were held at the home Sunday, July 1, Elder Jordon, of Prince Albert, officiating, and the remains were laid to rest in Nokomis Cemetery.

MULVANE.—Paul Meyer Mulvane, beloved son of Ralph P. and Emma Meyer Mulvane, of Seattle, Washington, was born in Tacoma, Washington, May 2, 1915, and died at Firland Sanatorium, near Seattle, July 22, 1934, at the age of nineteen years. Besides his parents, he is survived by an uncle, Elder Joseph S. Meyer, of Holdenville, Oklahoma. Paul was graduated from the Lincoln High School, in 1933, a few days after his baptism by Elder Monte E. Lasater, June 11. His illness began September 13, 1933, with bronchial influenza, followed by pneumonia and tuberculosis. He was rated among Seattle high schools as their finest sousaphone player, and also played the bass viol and piano, and sang in the Lincoln High School Chanters. In athletics he excelled in high jumping. He was an Eagle Scout and served as assistant scoutmaster in Troop 120, sponsored by the Seattle Branch, of which his father is scoutmaster. He played POWELL.—Sarah Elizabeth Patterson, daughter of Captain Henry and Martha Patterson, of Matamoras, Ohio, was born September 18, 1852. She was united in marriage to Doctor T. P. Powell in September, 1879, and moved from Ohio to Nebraska in 1884. They homesteaded in Oklahoma territory in 1892, twelve miles southeast of Geary. To this union were born eleven children, nine of whom are still living. They are Winfield, of Guymon; Gale, of Shawnee; Doctor Goss, of Seminole; Abner, of Calumet; Henry, Doctor T. V., and Eddie, of El Reno; Mrs. Martha Inman, of Clinton, and Mrs. Scott Waller, of Geary. One son, Jesse D. Powell, passed away October 27, 1928, and one son died in infancy. Mrs. Powell was one of the oldest pioneers of Oklahoma and besides rearing her family she assisted her husband, Doctor T. P. Powell, in his extensive practice. She united with the church in the year of 1884, at Mendon, Nebraska. Doctor and Mrs. Powell were the first members of the church in the Canadian County. Brothers Crawley, Montague, Hubert Case, and J. F. Curtis were among the early day missionaries who preached in this vicinity. The Calumet branch was organized as a result of these laborers and is an active branch at the present time. Mrs. Powell was laid to rest by the side of her husband, July 5, in the Sunny Hill Cemetery.

SWAIN.—Sarah Matilda Green, daughter of John and Rebecca Green, was born near Vanessa, Ontario, Canada, March 26, 1866, and passed away June 26, 1934, at Ontario, California. She was united in marriage to Joseph S. Swain, December 31, 1885, at Delhi, Ontario, and to this union four children were born, three boys and one girl, who died in infancy. She, with her husband, united with the church February 20, 1892, at Vanessa, Ontario, and she was faithful unto the end. In 1907, they moved to Ontario, California, where they have since resided. ### ■ Notes From Our Diary

The Managing Editor is having a vacation from regular Sunday assignments. . . . Last week attended the Communion Service at Enoch Hill, where Pastor E. A. Thomas is doing a fine work. Brother and Sister Thomas are on their way to Kirtland, where they were married twenty-six years ago, to attend reunion.

Spent this Saturday and Sunday in Albany, Missouri, as the guest of an old friend of Lamoni days, Reverend Vincent Gray. . . . Mrs. Gray was Hope Grenawalt. . . . And they have added a fine baby boy to their household. . . . Met other friends and church members from Lamoni at the band concert in the square. . . . A fine community, quiet and law-abiding. . . . Invited to speak in the Presbyterian church, and addressed a congregation composed of that faith together with Baptists and Methodists as well as a few L. D. S. . . . That part of the state has suffered much from the drouth, more than Jackson County has. . . . Home feeling happy, and the weather man rolled up some clouds and gave us a fine shower.

■ "A Little Child Shall Lead Them"

By C. J. Lant

Little Bobbie had been attending summer camp, since school had been dismissed for vacation; and he had met quite a crowd of other children. His teacher for the camp summer school happened to be a church school teacher as well as a kindergarten teacher, and her time was spent mostly in giving her charges some light about Jesus and the Bible.

After returning home, his mind seemed to dwell on the things he had heard and learned while at camp. One day he came running breathlessly into the house and asked his mother the blunt question, "Mamma, do you and daddy know that there is a God?" The mother was stunned for a moment, she afterward told my companion.

Did she know there was a God? And her having been reared in the church, and before her marriage had been a devoted church worker and a leader of girls. It put her to thinking and her father and mother as well, and for the first time in several years they are reading the Bible and attending church.

Some five years ago I made the father of this mother a present of a Book of Mormon; now at night it is Bobbie's request that grandmother will teach him about God and Jesus, and for the first time she is reading the Book of Mormon; and until he falls asleep grandma reads to him. Then after he has fallen asleep she continues to read until the wee hours of the morning.

Fathers and mothers, will your son and daughter hear of the God of the Bible in a summer camp, or in their own home?

■ Real Modesty

The most modest letter received in our office in the last two years contained a clever and amusing sentence. We had asked a certain brother for a picture of himself, and here is what he replied:

"I had quite a bit of difficulty. . . . We used up a couple rolls of film and had a fine picture of our dog and house and also our church building, but my face was a different thing; the camera just simply 'couldn't take it.'"

For Our Young People

Not many of the young people who were graduated from high school last spring have jobs. Starting this fall, a good many of them must either go to college or remain idle.

Those who must remain idle will be discouraged and will suffer from exposure to temptation and despair, as well as creating problems for their parents. Even the best of them will suffer a severe loss in wasting some of the best of their youth and opportunity for learning in merely marking time.

The other day we talked to a young man who said he had wanted to go to college, but his parents had discouraged him so he was going to work instead. The day may come when the parents will very greatly regret their unfortunate influence in their son's life, and their son may also have reason to regret.

At this time of year, there are some who have determined to go to college and have made provision to do it. We need not worry about them. There are some who, unfortunately, cannot possibly go, and it is sad that we can do nothing for them. But there are numbers who are undecided and who might be able to go but who are afraid to make the necessary sacrifices. We urge the parents of these young people to consider well what a decision means at this time. A decision not to go to school means untrained powers, unrealized opportunities, and a future of hopeless mediocrity.

No matter how many college students there may be without jobs, the value of an education should never be in doubt. The trained young men and young women always have the best chance to get a job when there is any. They always have the best chances to succeed when they are given a trial.

Graceland, our church college, opens her doors to the freshmen on the seventh of September. These young people will be given a little preliminary help in making ready for the school year. The young men and young women who go there are opening the way to many opportunities. They will be among the nation's teachers, leaders, and professional people. They will serve society in the higher capacities and in the better ways.

Will your boy and your girl be among them? To everyone that can come, Graceland offers a welcome and a special opportunity for a high type of training under conditions that are socially congenial and spiritually safe for the development of the best powers of mind and soul for our young people. L. L.

BROTHER W. A. TEAGARDEN, president of the San Bernardino Branch, sends to the Presidency a copy of his report to the district conference which has so much of interest that we are passing a part of it on for the benefit of the readers of the Herald.

He indicates in his report a gratifying condition reflected in the finances of the branch in the amount they have been able to contribute regularly to the general church, which amounts to approximately $100 per month. The women report two hundred eight friendly visits and have an average attendance at their weekly meetings of twenty-five. He is especially proud of the report which comes from the young people indicating a fine contribution both spiritually and temporally on the part of the young people. He adds that the past six months has witnessed the greatest spiritual growth of the branch since his installation as pastor in February, 1931, and feels that opportunities for service in the next six months will be great.

We congratulate San Bernardino on the evidences of progress.

BROTHER GEORGE G. LEWIS in one of his reports on the activities of the priesthood in Australia tells of difficulties had in one of the branches because of division over some contentious questions and in concluding he makes this significant remark:

"Priesthood classes have been instituted to take the place of meetings called to discuss branch troubles."

We predict that if these priesthood classes are kept up an interest will be developed which will finally result in members of the priesthood being busy with constructive measures, and we are sure this will solve the difficulties of the branch indicated. I think it is safe to say that in a majority of instances where trouble occurs in a branch and where divisions result, the agitation of the difficulty, in by far the majority of cases, is by some member of the priesthood who is not busy at his calling but has developed a spirit of carping criticism.

BROTHER E. R. DAVIS, writing from Moline, Illinois, tells of the Rock Island District having had rains nearly every day from the Fourth of July for about ten days. Since then the weather has been hot and dry and crops are again threatened. Rain must come soon if they are to be saved. Then he adds quite significantly:

"We are certainly living in the times spoken of by former and latter day prophets, and the Saints will do well to stand in holy places if they would escape the conditions that are coming on the world."

We are glad that Brother Davis is alert to the import of the signs of the times and trust this is true on the part of members throughout the church.

ELDER A. J. WEEKS writing from Spokane, Washington, and telling of the improved conditions, says:

"Many of our elderly people, who have not felt so kind one toward another in years past, now have patience, charity, and fraternal regard for one another. For this we are very grateful and we give God the thanks, honor and glory."

It could well be wished that more of our people would learn that the presence of fraternal regard is a promoter of peace and happiness.

Brother Weeks speaks of the baptism of some fourteen persons and tells of a sacrament service preceded by a confirmation service which was very impressive and added much to the pleasure of the Saints.

He closes his letter by saying,

"I know it is impossible to put into words the spirit that is helping the men of the priesthood in the ministry of the branch in the way of encouragement to you. I desire to convey to you this happy message, that our people are moving out and striving to do their part in the gospel work. May this be an encouragement to you, and may you remember that we as a branch and as individuals remember you often as the prophet and leader of this people in these the latter days."

Marginalia

SOME PEOPLE, when speaking of the church, say "they" and other people say "we." This indicates a difference in the quality of members. A "they" member still feels that he is on the outside of the fence, so far as the church responsibility is concerned, but when it comes to blessings and advantages, he wants to be inside the fence. They are the members who are neither "hot nor cold," of whom John the Revelator wrote; they are likely to find themselves someday belonging neither to the world nor the church, and outcast and despised by both. When we join the church, we become a member of the family and should quit saying "they" and should begin saying "we." "We" members are an asset to the church; "they" members are a liability.

A FRIEND was telling us lately of two girls who were talking about their churches. One had studied the history and doctrine of her own church, and was able to tell the good things about it. The other, a Latter Day Saint, had not studied. She had been baptized, but her membership meant very little more than that. How much good would the doctrine and the scriptural organization of our church do that girl? Was she any nearer saved than the other girl? She would have done well to follow the instruction, "know your own church."

A PRAYER MEETING GROUP was singing "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus." One stood with shoulders hunched forward, pivoting on one hip, and with the other knee bent. Another person clung to a chair to keep from falling. Another one shuffled from one foot to the other. One party didn't feel well and remained seated, but sang anyway. Perhaps Jesus, looking at this little group, must have smiled.

A NEIGHBOR was looking at the garden in the back yard. He approved of the shrubs, the flowers, and the lawn. Peering around he looked behind the garage and saw a pile of discarded tin cans and other refuse. Pointing to them he asked, "What flowers are they?" The host replied, "Those are the Cantanas!" But the pretty name did not conceal the fact that they were an ugly sight. Nothing ugly is ever helped very much by a pretty name, but the pretty name may soon become offensive to those who hear it.

Wherever God erects a house of prayer,
The devil always builds a chapel there;
And 'twill be found upon examination,
The latter always has the larger congregation.

The Great Commandment

(Or the Art of Living Together)

By Charles Fry

CHRISTIANITY consists in establishing and maintaining right relations with the true God, and right relations with all mankind.

The gospel defines what those relations are, points out the method of their establishment, and provides means for their maintenance, and is expressed in the following primary commandments:

The first and great commandment is "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God."

The second is like unto it, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

All law applying to human conduct springs from these two fundamental laws, and defines what human relations should be toward both God and man. The system of law governing these relations has been given of God by revelation through his Son Jesus Christ, and is applicable to all men according to their knowledge and opportunities.

A very large part of the revelations and commandments of God have to do with the second great command covering the relations between man and man. In the Ten Commandments four deal with man's relations to God and six with his relations to man. Of about 43 points touched upon in the Sermon on the Mount the proportion is 18 to 25, and in the law given to the church in the Doctrine and Covenants section 42 it is 5 to 18. Man's dealings with his fellows are by no means of minor concern to God.

Right relations with man involve and are dependent upon right relations with God. The man who is unwilling to acknowledge the Lawgiver, and who refuses to abide by the law governing his relations with God, will not and cannot fulfill the law governing his relations with man, for the law is one, comes from one source, and has one purpose, viz., the perfecting of souls to the attaining of complete happiness. Hence the "first and great commandment."

Like the first the second is "great" or fundamental—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." It covers all human inter-relations of every phase, whether in the home, in business, in state, or in church. It likewise covers the relations of groups and organizations. It is designed to have universal application.

The simple measure given by Christ to help men gauge their conduct is "as ye would that men should do to you," which means the same as "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Love is to be the governing principle in all action. Love leaves no room for any conduct that would cause directly or indirectly pain or loss to any individual or people.

HOME RELATIONS

The family, which makes the home, is the primary organization in human society, and ideals and standards of conduct of necessity have their determination and application here. No higher ideals will be operative outside than within, for the family is the spring from which society flows. The integrity of the family determines the integrity of the whole social structure. If the one declines so does the other. They rise or fall together.

The law of God specifically provides for the proper setting up and perpetuity of the home. All that is really home springs from love—the mutual and willing love of one man and one woman for each other, which love being constantly manifested in all family relations between husband and wife, and between parents and children, binds all together in one compact and indissoluble union; and thus with others of like nature forming an integral part of an enduring society. Without the cohering power of love both family and society become an aggregation of discordant elements which in time of stress must fall to pieces.

There are privileges and confidences and relationships within the family which are divinely sanctified to the building up of a proper home life and to the developing of an acceptable society which the law of God does not admit of being carried outside. Like every other law, love has its bounds and conditions, and that phase of love which the divine law has limited to the home if extended beyond its bounds to the outside, is thereby perverted, and is disastrous both to the home and to society, and is destructive of the basic love itself by which alone these latter hold the right of existence. Neither home nor society can have permanent existence when the divinely ordained laws governing home relationships are flagrantly and persistently violated.

Revealed law is definite and makes no allowance for suspension. Under it monogamy is the rule governing in the home, the tie forming the union being legally unbreakable until severed by death. Love and mutual respect and benevolence are to characterize home life. This law grants no place in the home for more than one companion in wedlock. nor permits illicit alliances outside. It goes so far as to require the lustful thoughts shall be kept from the mind and lustful desires from the heart, and that right attitudes be maintained toward all.

As in all organizations the primary organization of the home must have system and order. It is not a perpetual motion machine which runs itself, but a semi-personal organism which must be given constant direction according to a definitely planned purpose, and according to the divine law. There are many self-restraints which must be imposed, and many high ideals carefully chosen and assiduously striven for if the home is to fulfill its divinely appointed mission. The altar of prayer set up at the beginning with the altar of love, and maintained against all discouraging and hindering conditions is one of the strongest safeguards, and the place where the higher ideals are envisaged and strength found to incorporate them in personal and family life. The divine person sees in this altar a perpetual welcome within that home.

Under such conditions neglect, unkindness, variance, anger, harsh words, contention, bickering, complaining, and all such things will hardly find lodgment. The petty half-innocent evils that sometimes creep in unawares, but which in their cumulative effects become disastrous in time, may be readily discerned and checked. Love and every other good thing that go to make home, must be thoughtfully and purposefully safeguarded and nurtured to the making of the home the very best that is possible.

To the family God has said, "Thou shalt live together in love." To the husband, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else." To the wife, "Wives, love your husbands." To all he has said, "By love serve one another." Fulfilling the whole law lifts the home to the highest point of happiness and usefulness, bringing divine favor and benediction.

Children are required by the law to honor their parents, and to obey them. Parents sometimes become unwise or unjust in their demands but it is better for children to submit so far as possible rather than to become rebellious against parental authority. Parents are warned against provoking their children to wrath, and should they do so they become responsible before God for the sins which they cause their children to commit.

Woe must come to the person outside the home who by word or deed creates distrust, and sets at variance members of the family, thereby destroying the peace and unity of the home. Greater woe must come to the one who steals away marital affection and desolates the home of its sanctity and love, robbing the innocent of companionship, and the children of parenthood. Few sins are greater than this.

BUSINESS RELATIONS

Truthfulness, justice, honesty, equality of opportunity, equality of right in the natural resources designed of God for the common good, are principles revealed in the divine law as applying to all business affairs, together with consecration of all surplus wealth to the supplying of the common needs. These are the specific laws applicable in business growing out of the fundamental principle of love previously noted—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The law of love will not permit a man to take undue advantage of his fellows by which he is enriched and they are impoverished. What he desires for himself he will desire for them.

Love must govern in business affairs if human relations are to be just and right, and peace and happiness are to be preserved; otherwise inequalities, envyings, strifes, malice, robberies, murders, and wars, will ensue and take their toll of human happiness, wealth, and life. Lord Roberts, Commander of the British armies, said just before the outbreak of the world war, "So long as greed exists in the hearts of men, war will break forth among the nations." There is no escape from it so long as selfishness dominates business and commerce, but only through obedience to the law of Christ—the law of love. By this law will be fulfilled the angel song of "Peace on earth; good will to men."

Human standards of business ethics are far inferior to the divine. They are based not upon the divinely given fundamental law of love, but rather upon legality as determined by civil law. The business man usually counts himself upright if, keeping within the letter of the law, he, by keen methods, seeks and gains advantage over others. If he finds a fellow business man in straits through misfortune, he counts it no wrong to take advantage of the unfortunate circumstances to enrich himself thereby adding further distress to his brother. Vast aggregate sales are made possible through tricky, extravagant and misleading advertising, impoverishing the customer's pocketbooks, and in some instances their health, yet being clear of the law the advertiser counts himself a "successful business man." A man may legally collect a note and mortgage even though it may reduce the widow and orphans of the maker to a point of destitution and take from them their living. This the law of love would never permit, for "love worketh no ill to his neighbor."

A man may have just rights in property or just claims for payment of debt, but if his insistence upon these rights and claims has the effect of depriving the less fortunate debtor of rights which are far more vital and necessary to his subsistence, then under the law of love the rights of the former are swallowed up in those of the latter. Even under the law of Moses the debts of the impoverished were cancelled every sabbatic year, and lands lost by foreclosure were returned to the original owners when the year of jubilee arrived. A man's rights are to disappear, and if wars are to cease with their by those of his fellows. There are common rights which belong to all to which personal rights are subject. Under the law of love no personal rights can be asserted that will deprive others of their God-given rights.

When the law of love is operative these principles will have place in business relations. It is the spirit of the law that has superior application rather than the letter. The "Thou shalt" and the "Thou shalt not" of the Mosaic law may have served a good purpose in the government of stiff-necked Israel, but the law of Christ, which is the law of love, must be written in men's hearts if it is to find fulfillment in all business affairs. If peace and good-will are to prevail in the business world, if strikes and lock-outs are to disappear, and if wars are to cease with their consequent wildly fluctuating markets and devastating economic depressions, it can only be when business is ordered by the law of Christ—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

AFFAIRS OF STATE

Government primarily belongs to God, and whatever governments exist upon the earth exist by his appointment or sufferance. When Pilate boasted of his authority, Jesus quietly answered, "Thou couldst have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above." Paul says "There is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God."

Relative to the United States government the Lord said, "I established the constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood," and further holds that this constitutional law "should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles." The church has been advised that "honest men and wise men ye should observe to uphold" as officers of the law.

These revelations show a divine concern in the matter of government. God is concerned with the welfare and happiness of the people and since these conditions are determined largely by government he must concern himself therewith. He holds rulers and officers accountable for their official conduct. "Let no man think that he is ruler, but let God rule him that judgeth, according to the counsel of his own will, or in other words, him that counselleth or sitteth upon the judgment seat." Should officers of the law pervert their official powers to selfish and wicked ends, it is decreed that the Lord "in his time, will cut off these wicked, unfaithful, and unjust stewards, and appoint them their portion among hypocrites and unbelievers; even in outer darkness, where there is weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth."

Men who exercise the power of government are accountable to God for the manner in which they use that power. The same fundamental and universal law given of God as a guide to human conduct applies here. It is the law of love, love of God and love of man. That inspired document, the constitution, embodies this law of love in that it declares for the establishment and maintenance of justice, tranquillity, and the blessings of liberty. The servant of the government who serves according to the spirit of the constitution will be in harmony with the law of love, while he who yields to selfish ambition and does wickedly is undermining the constitution and destroying the liberties of the people.

The wild ambitions and the mad scrambles of politicians in striving for office and power, often with the expenditure of vast sums of money, and often with secret understandings with men of wealth and of business, together with the frequent revelations of corruption of public officials, do not speak well for our present-day conduct of government. That these and many other evils in the operation of government are today threatening the very foundations of the nation and leading on to a disastrous downfall, can hardly be denied. That is where the rule of selfishness, in contrast with the law of love, always leads.

The strength and stability of any nation is in the law of Christ. Liberty, justice, fair dealing, equality of opportunity, loyalty—not to faction or party with its questionable and changing principles and policies, but to the constitution with its righteous principles, and to the nation, are within the law of love—the law that brings peace, good-will to man. When these are sacrificed upon the altar of selfish ambition "the people mourn." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," is a safe and wise rule for the politician and for the office holder from the highest to the lowest, and any act which violates this rule will be without the approval of God, and the doer must stand condemned.

IN THE CHURCH

The world today holds the law of love in its full application to be impracticable. But the giving of the commandment to "love thy neighbor as thyself" implies in the mind of the Son of God the certainty of its practicability. (Continued on page 1039.)

JOHN W. RUSHTON

The recent death of Madame Curie—a victim to her devotion to science reminds us of the joint discovery of her husband Pierre, and herself of radium in 1898. Through this discovery much pain in the world has been eased. In 1911, she was granted the Nobel prize for Chemistry. In 1919 she became the Professor of Radiology at Warsaw, and in 1932 the "Marie Curie Sklodowski" Institute of Radiology was opened in Warsaw.

The Pope from the Vatican at Rome, recently sounded a call to Catholics throughout the world to offer a firm resistance to the "bad films," which are ruining "delicacy of conscience" and the "instinctive reaction against evil" which "are the sign and measure of virtue." In referring to this action, the London Spectator says: "How can we feel any confidence that films will be discreetly judged by the Catholic organization when we learn from Rome that all the works of Benedetto Croce and all the works of Professor Giovanni Gentile have been put upon the Index?" And further concludes: "That such action can only weaken the church's campaign against offensive films."

O. V. Grey, the secretary of the Cambridge University Appointments Board, stated recently that there will pass very soon, from the Universities of Great Britain about 15,000 men and women into the labor markets. Consultation with tutors of three Cambridge colleges shows that of the men "going down" in June, 1933, in April, 1934, they found employment as follows: in one case, 49 out of 49; in another, 53 out of 57; and the third, 61 out of 64.

In a letter to the London Spectator, May 18, the Archbishop of Canterbury after consultation with representatives of various Christian churches in Great Britain, makes an appeal to our fellow-countrymen and "citizens of other countries, to be willing to accept the principle of collective action of nations as members of one great commonwealth. . . . That when disputes arise a nation can no longer insist upon being judge in its own cause, but must be prepared to submit the issue to international judgment. And, to agree to accept that judgment when given and readiness to join in giving it effect. The hindrance is wide-spread fear, suspicion and mistrust.

A review of Katherine Mayo's latest work, Soldiers What Next? exposes the abuses which are the result of the lobby machinery of the American Legion. The following table illustrates her point:

	Killed or died in battle	Disabled by wounds in service
The United States . . . . .	130,128	192,369
France . . . . .	1,393,385	2,052,984
Germany . . . . .	2,050,466	4,202,028
Italy . . . . .	700,000	1,000,000
United Kingdom . . . . .	812,317	1,869,567

Numerical comparison of World War disabled men as of 1919 with World War pensions as of 1929:

	Increase %	Decrease %
The United States . . . . .	36 %
France . . . . .		48.80%
Italy . . . . .		78.50%
England . . . . .		73.08%

Miss Mayo writes: "Our American official estimate based on continuance of laws in effect in 1932 indicated a continuous increase of the budget up to and including the year 1958. Two years later in 1960, the English World War pension budget, by orderly decline, will be extinguished."

On May 22, John Buchan in addressing the Church of Scotland, gave a pertinent analysis of the prevalent psychology of today. The danger implied is a revolt against freedom, not for the love of manly criticism, but out of sheer failure of nerve. What Mr. Buchan calls "the impulse to huddle together and seek salvation in herds"; which marks some political and religious movements, in so far as it involves a surrender of the freedom of the individual spirit is inevitably a retrogression." "To attempt to impose unity at the expense of liberty has split where it has not emasculated the protestant church in Germany."

The Socialist League belonging to the Labor Party defined its program at the Annual Conference in Leeds in May. "A Five Year Plan" includes: Removal of the House of Lords; Transfer to the Community, the main points of economic power, viz; credit and monetary system and the land; nationalization of the key industries, coal, cotton, wool, iron, and steel, ship-building, transport, gas, electricity and agriculture; military and police forces of the Crown reorganized; overseas trade brought under state direction; worker's control established in industry. To deal with immediate issues as: Slum clearance, housing, raising of the school-leaving age, reduction of hours of labor, increase pension and relief for the unemployed on a scale of two pounds ($10.00) per week for a man, wife and two children.

The outlook for the Church of Scotland as reported by Reverend D. P. Thomson, May 25, 1934. Membership includes two fifths of the population and outnumbers all other religious bodies together. Union with the United Free Church of Scotland five years ago a pronounced success. Relations with other churches are cordial, though union with the Scottish Episcopal church or other smaller Presbyterian bodies not yet on the horizon. Major questions which will engage its attention for some time to come include: Position and work of women; credal revision; church extension; foreign missions; attitude of the Church to the whole question of war. The feeling among the younger ministers on this last question is very strong. The Church of Scotland Minister's Peace Association, in process of formation had over two hundred signatures to the recent manifesto: "Modern war is completely irreconcilable with the teachings, spirit and purpose of Christ." The signatories have renounced all active and willing participation in war.

Public education in Soviet Russia. Elementary education is now generally compulsory throughout the Union. In 1914, only 7,235,000 children were receiving instruction in elementary schools, and 565,000 in the secondary schools. At the commencement of the Five Year Plan, the number of children attending the elementary schools was four millions greater than in 1914; 11,279,000, 1927-8; this was the eve of the plan, and 1,409,000 attending the secondary schools; the quantitative growth of elementary and secondary schools has been followed by qualitative improvement in school work. The number of school work shops has grown considerably, and instruction in them is compulsory. In September, 1933, 25,000,000 children in the U. S. S. R. returned to school after the summer holidays. WILLIAM LEWIS

MISSIONARY TO WALES

Answering the call of the church to serve as a missionary, I accepted an appointment to Wales, and wife, and daughter Ruth, our youngest, and I left our home at Saint Joseph, where we had spent twenty-six years. On October 30, 1901, we bade farewell to our dear children and many of the faithful Saints of Saint Joseph who had come to the station to see us off.

We arrived in Chicago the next day, five hours late, then took the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern to Buffalo. There we had hoped that we would have time to call on Brother and Sister Winning who lived at Niagara Falls, but we were disappointed.

A STORMY OCEAN VOYAGE

On November 2, we sailed from New York on our way to Wales on board the Cunard liner, Campania. Also on board the Campania was Brother F. J. Pierce who was to be associated with me in Wales. We left New York Harbor at ten o'clock on a beautiful Saturday morning.

The Campania was a ship six hundred and twenty feet long and carried a crew of four hundred and forty men, twenty-two of whom were engineers; ninety-six firemen, fifty-seven coal shovelers and wipers. It had six engines, thirty thousand horse power, and the vessel had carried as many as sixteen hundred passengers.

That night we encountered a severe storm. Sunday morning we were out of sight of land. The waves were mountain high and our ship, the pride of the Cunard Steamship Company, was doing well considering the pressure of the waves. Very few passengers were out to breakfast; nearly all on board were seasick and my wife and Ruth were among the number.

Saturday night I had a very pleasant and impressive dream. I thought we had arrived in Wales; met Brother and Sister Thomas Gould, of Cardiff, to whom Brother G. T. Griffiths had referred us. I made the remark, "We have reached Wales in safety."

Next morning I went up on deck. There was a strong head wind, north-east. The white-caps were all around, the waves high. I had told my wife of my dream, stating that I thought I would know Brother and Sister Gould.

After getting settled on board the steamer, I had time to think of the wonders we had seen in the cities through which we had come, and the questions came to my mind, "Just what is there in life to compare with the wonders of the world and its pleasures? Is there really any enjoyment other than these? Am I foolish in giving up a good business, leaving home and loved ones, making all these sacrifices, and passing through this severe storm?"

My thoughts turned homeward. My wife and Ruth were still seasick, but I was quite well. Up till noon Sunday we had been out twenty-six hours and had traveled four hundred and forty miles; we should have made five hundred.

By sundown the storm was more severe, but my dream gave me much comfort. The waves came over the top deck, and the ship was at the mercy of the mountainous waters.

Further reflections brought an answer to my questions, "Yes, there is something far greater than these wonders which you have seen or will ever see, and that is one hour with Jesus, the Shepherd of the fold. Meeting with the Saints of God (who are really Saints) for even one hour, when the Spirit of the Master is present, is worth more than all this you have beheld."

I sat down and inspired by the feeling this comforting answer brought me wrote the first three verses of the hymn, "One Hour With Jesus":

"One hour with Jesus, the Shepherd of the fold,
I esteem of more value than silver or gold;
The peaceful communion sent down from above,
Makes clear to my vision his mission of love.

"The world and its folly, I bid them all adieu;
I find there no comfort that's lasting and true;
One hour with Jesus, that noble true friend,
Brings peace to my soul that will never more end.

"One hour with Jesus, a grand feast to my soul,
His burdens are light and his yoke easily borne;
Though hardships and trials I may have to meet,
The Spirit bears witness the end will be sweet."

The last two verses of the hymn were written some ten months later, at Llanelli, South Wales:

"One hour with Jesus, the true friend of the weak,
Is very consoling on land or the deep;
The path may be thorny or waves mountain high,
There's joy in the thought that my Savior is nigh.

"One hour with Jesus, the joy of my life,
Will cleanse from the heart all malice and strife;
And give me new courage to press my way on,
In sunshine or darkness, in calm or in storm."

Not feeling the poem complete, I waited some time before sending it to my nephew John Morgan, of Hiteman, Iowa, who composed the music to which the words are now sung by the Saints.

On Monday the storm was at its worst. I talked with one of the engineers and he said that they had had warning of the approach of a storm before leaving New York.

"Why didn't you wait?" I queried.
"We wait for nothing," was his answer. But this, in his opinion, was the most severe storm in the history of the Campania which had been plying between New York and Liverpool for nine years.

Because of the storm the engines had been turned off and the ship was tossed about like a rubber ball. One of the engineers said that it was better to turn off the engines than to try to plow through those great waves.

On Tuesday morning we saw the face of the sun for the first time since the storm overtook us, and all who were able to come on deck were very happy to see the weather clearing. My wife and Ruth were still sick—wife was ill about four days, but poor Ruth did not eat anything from Saturday noon until the following Friday and lost five pounds in weight. I was sick only an hour, and would have gotten along very well if I could have enjoyed a solid footing.

Brother Pierce was in the steerage and was only permitted to come on deck after the storm. For three days no one on board was allowed on deck because of the large waves. We had bought tickets in the third class or steerage, but we changed after coming on board and it was a blessing that we did. At that time the accommodations were very poor in third class, much more so than on the boats built ten years later. The Campania was built in 1892 and held the record of having crossed the Atlantic from Liverpool to New York in, the least amount of time, six days and twelve hours.

Before landing I again remarked to my folks and Brother Pierce that I believed I would know Brother and Sister Gould, and I described their appearance and clothing.

At Liverpool we were met by Mr. Williams, of the Gwalia House, who informed us that Brother G. T. Griffiths had been in the city the same morning, but had to leave for Manchester to fill an appointment. We stopped at Liverpool from Saturday afternoon until eleven o'clock Monday morning at which time we took train (the Great Western Railroad) for Cardiff, Wales.

We were very much disappointed with the train accommodations, no water nor toilets, and the passenger cars were divided into compartments, two seats in each compartment, facing each other, each holding five persons.

On leaving Liverpool I asked for checks for our baggage and for the first time was informed that the railroad companies did not give checks or receipts for baggage. All that was necessary was to have your name on your baggage, and at the end of your journey simply ask for it. "Such a careless way!" I thought. However, we arrived safely and with all our possessions.

WE ARRIVE SAFELY

As we were pulling into the station in the early twilight, two men came across the platform. One I pointed out as Brother Gould. So plainly had I seen him and his good wife in my dream that I could have picked them out of a multitude of people. Our dream was fulfilled for, notwithstanding the severe storm, we arrived in Wales in safety.

Here is a question I want those who do not believe in God nor in spiritual dreams to answer: How was I able to recognize Brother and Sister Gould whom I had never seen? No one had described them to me, and prior to that time I had not seen their photographs. By what power was my mind able to grasp a real and perfect impression of them even as to their complexions and their ages? One may say, "It was a wave of the mind." But what caused a wave to take my mind to where the objects were and why did it do this so perfectly while I was asleep?

When I have heard someone speak of certain people, read of them or corresponded with them, I have at times tried to do this when all my faculties were wide awake, however, when I come into their presence, I am invariably mistaken in all my calculations. But often when I have been asleep there has come to my mind perfect knowledge. The reason I assign for it is the fulfillment of the divine promise in Joel 2:28. It is the Spirit of the Lord that causes one to prophesy and another to see in dreams what he does not see when awake, and another to see the future in visions.

I thank the good Lord that I have been made to understand that he is and that he has in various ways communed with man, blessing him and directing his mind.

MY DREAM OF OUR RECEPTION AT GLEN NEATH

Some six years before I went to Wales on my mission I dreamed I was there and I was at my old home, Glen Neath. The row of houses and the surroundings had not changed in my forty years' absence. I thought the people were so prejudiced that they believed no possible good could come out of the Latter Day Saint gospel. They looked upon me as though I was a wolf and turned their backs toward me. I thought they were nicely dressed, intelligent, and led good moral lives.

I felt my mission there was a failure, and I found fault with the authorities for sending me to a people who did not want to hear the truth. I remarked that I could have stopped at home and found a welcome with those not of our faith.

While I was thus criticizing, a person spoke to me, calling me by name, "William, you must have patience. These people, in a measure, are justified for being so prejudiced, for when the gospel first came to this land the people received it by the thousands and the power of God, like a wave, went all over this land. But wicked men trampled the fair name of the church under their feet, and the honest-hearted people became disgusted with what was now called the Latter Day Saint gospel. You must have patience." I could see the wisdom of the position and the necessity of patience.

I thought I could see all the people standing with their backs toward me and not wishing to hear anything we had to say. At last I got down on my knees and prayed that the Lord would qualify me for the work and give me His Spirit, for without it the arm of man was too short to reach that people.

Arising from my knees, I walked to a mound by the roadside. I raised my hand heavenward and cried aloud, "What a great pity that wicked men have trampled the fair name of the Church of Jesus Christ beneath their feet!" Then I began to explain to the people that Brighamism was not the Latter Day Saint gospel, and they began to turn their faces toward me, one by one. When I explained the great apostasy and the power of the gospel they came up to me, some with tears in their eyes, and reached their hands out to me and bid me Godspeed in my mission. All this was a dream!

WALES A PROMISING FIELD

When I arrived in Wales again after my forty-seven years of absence, I found the house and surroundings just as I had seen them in the dream. The prejudice of the people was like a thick fog. I could not get their attention on the question of religion. But one by one they turned their faces as the mistakes of wicked men were made known, and when they found out that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was not responsible for the misdeeds of Brighamism.

Let the church appear in her true light in Wales and that little nation will yet be heard from in favor of this great latter-day work. God hasten the day of his power to that end for truly the arm of flesh is too short when left alone. Satan did gain a great victory in that land, and I am extremely anxious to see the day come when true and tried men, who cannot be bought nor sold nor enticed to do wrong, will stand upon the highways and in thunderous tones present the gospel in its purity and simplicity to the confounding of the powers of darkness. Then the blessed sunlight of truth will shine to all parts of the world and the Bride shall make herself ready for the Bridegroom, Jesus, the Christ! Let our wedding garments be the pure linen of righteousness! Come help us, Thou Holy One, to bring about this condition among our fellow men!

Here let me quote portions of a letter I wrote on New Year's Day, 1902, and which appeared in the Herald:

"This is the first day of the new year, and I wish to give the readers of the Herald a brief history of the work here, as I find it. There are but six branches of the church in Wales: Cardiff, Lydney, Nantyglo, Porth, Llanelly, and Aberaman. At all these places there are a few active workers, and they need help. . . .

"In some respects this is a good field for missionary work. First, because it is one solid mass of people, the traveling expense is not much. To give you some idea: We went from here to Cardiff, by way of Newport, to Merthyr, about thirty miles. Then we came back by way of Pontypridd, about thirty miles. Total, sixty miles. In all we will have passed through twenty-six good large towns on this line, over one million people. Why, it is all towns and people: and go out in some other directions and you find it the same. England, Scotland, and Wales are not as large as the State of Missouri, yet there are over forty million people, and I believe that here there are as many of the blood of Ephraim as in any part of the civilized world. It is true that they are at the present time hard to reach, but we can see good reasons for this when we look at the evils of Brighamism and remember that upon these isles the Salt Lake people have put in some of their hardest work, and their teaching was indeed disgusting to the honest. . . .

A Brown Wanderer Prays for Zion

OH, I COULD never tire of this!" Louisa cried, as they walked through the tiny island town. There were rows of neat little frame houses nicely painted; clean swept streets; a few quaint Chinese shops, and the most important building of all in the life of the community, the Latter Day Saint church.

Louisa loved the tiny house that was their temporary home also, even though she and Dan had but one room to themselves. The two young dancing women, Rahera and Tarai, did all the work, even preparing the meals under Louisa's supervision. Mr. Hunt did not want them to work, but they explained that it would be such fun to learn the foreign ways of cooking, and he relented for the time being. He also permitted the young folks to finish reading the Book of Mormon, as he thought it could do them no harm to learn more of the language; and also it afforded an opportunity for Robert to carry on his affair of heart with Lucy without arousing the suspicions of Lucy's family. Mr. Hunt wished if possible to remain friendly with all the natives.

But Lucy was not satisfied. She wished to have her share in managing the work of the household and learning to cook. To this desire Rahera and Tarai offered strenuous and jealous opposition. They quarreled all the time it seemed to Louisa. Mr. Hunt finally intervened: Rahera and Tarai were to prepare breakfast and dinner, while Lucy served. Lucy was to prepare supper. They could take turns doing the other housework for the next two months, after which none of them were to work at anything. Some other native women would be hired to do the work, and he could study these present "employees" in a state of "natural" idleness.

With the exception of the kettles, pans, and other utensils for preparing and serving food, the house was quaintly furnished. Each room had a bed with a much embroidered counterpane and huge hard pillows with cases also covered with embroidery. A peue, or grass mat, woven skillfully and painstakingly by native women, covered the floor. A little shelf at one side of the room was decorated with large pearl shells. Some enterprising native had "beautified" these by pasting over their glistening surfaces labels from canned foods, so that the shells advertised different brands of tomatoes, salmon, pineapples, and corned beef. Various small shells, in picturesque sizes, colors, and shapes, had been strung in long strings and draped like festoons of popcorn on a Christmas tree about the walls of the rooms, giving the place a festive air. There were no chairs. Mr. Hunt had noted that the natives usually preferred to sit "in a squat position" on the floor. That must be the natural way, then, and so chairs were forbidden.

The evenings they spent pleasantly conversing with the natives. Disappointing to Mr. Hunt, however, was the fact that these natives all believed in God, and for the most part belonged to the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church. They had high ideals and lofty desires from which he seemingly could not shake them. The only thing of interest to him was their belief in ghosts. He was afraid of the water, though, especially when he had only a small sailing ship on which to travel, so he decided to stay in this place and gather what information he could before considering another move.

DAN HAD been ordered to take the black box from the steamer trunk and place it on a shelf of their room. Louisa had made up her mind not to think of it any more, to be thankful that Dan was a real man and one to be trusted; but the sight of the box kept alive the irritating thought that Mr. Hunt had striven successfully to plant in her heart—her husband did not love her. The feeling of coldness between them grew greater as the weeks went by, until it seemed to Louisa that almost the only thing they held in common was their deep pity for Robert and Lucy.

For there could be no doubt but that Robert was suffering deeply, keenly. The Book of Mormon seemed to have made a tremendous impression upon his sensitive mind. When Lucy was not with him he spent his time in brooding and melancholy. When she was with him, he busied himself doing things for her. Small things they were, little gallant things that no girl anywhere in the world can be totally unaffected by. She loved him with a love fiercely passionate, yet tender. It was plain to everyone just what her feeling for Robert was. She loved his very name and said it over and over in her own soft tongue: "Ropati." Robert loved her, too, but his was more of a wistful love. It was as though he wanted to make up to her for some wrong he had done her.

The other natives were not slow to guess the state of affairs between the two young lovers. One day Lucy's father came to the door and asked if he could speak to Daniela, which was their name for Dan. At his request, Dan walked with him through a grove of coconut palms until they came to a lonely spot by the sea. The old man finally broke the silence.

"I desire to ask you about a thing. This Ropati and my little Lucy—is it true what the people are saying? They say she is sinning, and should be cast out from the church."

Dan said: "I am sorry for you. I think it is true."

"I was afraid so. Alas! If one could only know what was best. Last year I was about to arrange for her marriage to Paipai, a fine young man, but many people said, wait, she is still very young. So I waited, and now comes this foreign bad man—"

The old man's voice broke and Dan asked, not looking at him:

"How old is she now?"

"Emea fatata hoe ahuru ma pae matahiti—nearly fifteen years."

Fifteen years! Such a child. And this poor old father—an elder in the church.

"Robert would marry Lucy," Dan said then, "if you would consent."

He only shook his head. "The other relatives never would consent to that," he said. "You see, we have learned not to trust the foreigner too much in such matters. A stranger may come, marry a young girl and soon leave again, never to return. She cannot marry again without a divorce, and that is expensive. It is hard to know—"

"What can be done then?"

"They are talking of cutting her off from the church. It seems hard. My thoughts are greatly troubled. She will be able to assist no more in the services. And arawai rii she will not be happy with this man. She loves the church—this is truth I am telling you, Daniela—it is only that this foreigner has such soft ways to get at a young girl's heart—"

Dan's heart was born with the tragedy of the thing. They would not be long in Tikehau. Would Robert forget Lucy, even if he could marry her? What would happen to the poor child anyway? If she kept on with Robert, she would lose her church privileges. She would be missed. She was the only one in the congregation who could play the organ well; she led the singing many times in the prayer services; she taught a class of little folks in the Sunday school and the people had come to depend on her. Why did she have to become infatuated with Robert? He became aware that Lucy's father was again speaking to him.

"If you could only persuade this Ropati to leave her alone," he said. "The branch teacher is going to labor with her today; then tonight there will be a meeting to receive her decision."

"I will try," promised Dan. "But I don't know—I am afraid Robert loves her, also, and will not wish to give her up. But I shall do my best."

Dan had very little hope of accomplishing his purpose, however. Never having encountered such a situation, he did not know what was right and best under the circumstances. He only felt that something was terribly wrong in a world where such things could happen. As he approached the house he was aware of an unusual amount of confusion and noise coming from within.

A CROWD of young people had gathered there, and he could see Louisa standing at one side of the room. She seemed vastly amused at something. He felt a growing irritation against her. She could be so easily amused in the midst of great tragedy. As he entered the house, he saw the object of her amusement—an aged man who seemed unable to maintain his equilibrium, was continually losing his balance and falling over. In the brief intervals when he was able to balance himself, he swore great oaths in the English tongue.

Dan looked closely at the man. His face was deeply lined, his mouth sunken, his faded blue eyes vacant and watery.

"What is your name?" he asked.

"O Kanitoa vau," replied the ancient, striving to draw himself up proudly, but ending by falling in a heap on the floor; "I was born in a land very far away. I am King George's brother. Wait till he hears how these young fools tease me."

"He speaks English," smiled Louisa, with mirth in her eyes, and although Dan knew she was not consciously being unkind, he was angry.

"He speaks English all right," he said grimly, and Louisa's smile faded, as she turned and slipped out of the room.

Dan's anger turned upon himself. He knew he had hurt her. He seemed to be doing it all the time. Why was it? Sometime he would have a long talk with her—but she didn't want to talk seriously. Oh, well, he could only do his best. He would try to be kinder. He beckoned to Robert, who followed him out of the room and led him to the same quiet spot where he had talked with Lucy's father.

THEY sat down together and for a long while neither spoke, but watched the little waves lapping at the shore with a certain soft, indescribably sad music. Finally Dan broke the silence.

"Are you altogether satisfied with the way you are doing, Robert?"

"No—oh no!"

Dan had been prepared for a negative answer, but not for the mingled horror and grief that the exclamation contained.

"Then—why—please do not think I am trying to interfere where it is none of my business, but I hope you'll feel I'm trying to help you as a friend—why don't you give Lucy up, start life anew.

It would be much better for Lucy, too, though it might be hard to think so now. She could go back to her church work; win back her self-respect to some extent at least. Her old father would be spared much suffering—"

"And what about my suffering? And hers?" broke in Robert resentfully, "I suppose our suffering is not to be considered?"

"You brought it on yourselves. The others would suffer innocently, while you—"

"Easy for you to say. Easy for you to tell me to give up the only being who loves me, the only one who means anything in my life. You—happily married to the girl who loves you! How little you can know!" he broke off suddenly as though exhausted. "Well," he continued, at last, in a thin voice, "I'll do it. I'll tell her to go back to her people and her God. I'll tell her—"

Dan could not keep his astonishment from his voice.

"You will?"

"Yes. After all it's only right. You see, I've been reading—reading Lucy's books. Her father's books, I guess they are—the books of your church. They're true. There is a God. Your Book of Mormon—" He choked, swallowed several times, then cried out hysterically: "You've had it all you're life! You've had this wonderful gospel. I was your neighbor. Why didn't you tell me about it? Why didn't you ask me to Sunday school? You went along—"

"I didn't have the slightest idea you'd be interested," exclaimed Dan, "why—I—you—"

"How many other people did you or any other member of your church try to get to come out to your meetings? Not very many, I guess. You just went along, secure in your own spiritual safety—"

"But I—I never thought about other people actually wanting it—the gospel, I mean. I never dreamed—I—you see, I've always considered it a sort of cross, to belong to an unpopular church, I didn't think—"

"And yet you had the truth! The thing I've been hunting for all my life! You had it, I say—and you kept it all to yourselves! I wanted to be a king," he went on drearly, "A king! And now I know the only way one can be a real king in this life is to be like Jesus. I can never be like him in all this world. My life is so stained with sin and bitterness—"

"Don't say that, Robert. There is always hope. You are young yet—there are many years—"

"Yes I am young. But my life is nearly done. A doctor told me, a long time ago, back in Monroe, that I probably would not live long. I guess—that is why I've been so anxious to do something worth while, before death came. But now—I know the symptoms—my mother died of it—I know—"

"Perhaps you're mistaken—"

Robert shook his head. "But I can give up Lucy. I can do the little bit I can in the short time left me. I—I'd give—everything I've ever had if I knew I could ever see Christ's face!" He threw himself on the ground and wept until Dan felt his own heart would melt under the intensity of the remorseful sorrow. Was that the way your neighbors would talk to you when you met them in the great beyond? Would they say: "You had the truth; why didn't you tell us?" And would you feel as he felt now, burdened with their load of sin and suffering? Was that what was meant when you were told to warn your neighbor that your skirts might be clear of his blood? Dan wanted to say something to comfort Robert, to ease his pain; but he was inarticulate with agony over this wasted life for which to some extent he was to blame.

Robert pulled himself up and laughed tremulously. "No use to sit here when there's something I can do." Then in a lower tone: "Pray for me, Dan."

"I will," said Dan fervently, and wrung his hand.

Dan met Lucy's father about sunset. He seemed happier than he had ever been since Dan had known him.

"She is going to repent," he said in a glad voice, "Everything is all right. That taata api, that Ropati, he is not such a bad man after all. He urged Lucy to ask forgiveness and to keep in the church. He said he believed the gospel was true. Ah, tonight will be a time of rejoicing!"

Nearly everyone on the island gathered at the church that night. Robert sat in a rear seat. His face was corpse-like in its whiteness; the only animated thing about him was the expression in his large black eyes. There was a fire in them, a flame of despair that was consuming not only his body but his soul.

Several hymns were sung and a prayer was offered. While the chorister was choosing another hymn, old Kanitoa burst forth in song. It was an indescribably rude street song and seemed to have an indefinite number of verses. They endured it for a while, no one smiled and no one became angry; then two of the native elders gently piloted him out of doors. He was a stranger in the land, but they treated him with the gentleness and consideration of a brother. It made a good and lasting impression on Dan and Louisa.

Lucy's father was in charge of the service. She walked up the aisle without a glance toward either side and gave her written confession to her father. He made a happy little speech, then opened the paper and stared at it. He sat weakly down on the chair behind the pulpit and continued to gaze at the document as though he could not read his daughter's writing. Dan was sitting near a window close to the front of the church. It was so still in the building one could plainly hear every sound without. There was the dull roaring of the ocean and the

Acute Gastric Catarrh

By A. W. Teel, M. D.

ACUTE GASTRIC CATARRH is a term better understood by the laity but in recent years it is more commonly called by medical men, acute gastritis. The old time practitioners often called it acute dyspepsia, gastric catarrh or gastric fever, etc. The most frequent cause of acute gastric catarrh is some direct injury of the mucous membrane. This may be brought about by food too hot or too cold, by alcoholic beverages, over loading the stomach or the injection of improperly cooked, indigestible, or highly spiced foods and poisoning from all sorts of injurious substances. It is believed by some it may be due to exposure to cold and wet, and any kind of infectious fevers.

Special importance is attached to food residue left in the stomach by over eating or the congestion of decaying substances. Relatively severe forms of acute gastric catarrh are caused by the incautious use of tainted meat or fish. By using spices, chemicals and other substances, the hotels and other eating houses have been found guilty of deceiving their customers and this often has been followed by serious or fatal results. Inflammation of the mucous membrane of the stomach may be produced by decomposition of material acting as chemical irritants.

The disease varies greatly according to individual pre-disposition. Weakly children are very susceptible, also fever patients, anemic persons, chronic invalids, convalescents from severe diseases or any whose general nutrition and vigor are impaired. It may be brought on by anything that interferes with the physiological function of the stomach. In weakly and anemic persons, the secretion from the gastric acids almost entirely disappear, causing the digestive function to be considerably restricted. Added to this, the normal gastric secretions are rendered less vigorous by its inability to cause the normal contraction of the muscular coat of the stomach. And further, it is probable that the muscular fibers themselves may participate in the general debility. On account of this function, the undigested material undergoes abnormal decomposition by not having been properly carried on into the duodenum and where more damage is done by acting as a mechanical and chemical irritant.

In cases where there is any suspicion of acute gastritis being produced by poisoning, care should be taken to look for stains on the lips, the teeth, mucous membranes of the mouth, the face or clothing. If the poison should be nitric acid, yellowish discoloration, and wide-spread softening of the tissues is evident; if sulphuric acid, a blackish stain is produced; if carbolic acid, whities or corrugated stain; if it is caustic potash, wide-spread softening and maceration of the tissue; if corrosive sublimate whitish or glazed stain.

Where such poisonous agents have been accidentally or intentionally swallowed, it is commonly known among physicians as toxic gastritis. As soon as the poison has been swallowed or shortly thereafter there ensues a deadly nausea with severe burning and painful sensation in the region of the stomach, followed by rapid and persistent vomiting, consisting of food particles and blood clots and shreds of mucous membrane. The anxiety and depression of the patient is not soon forgotten. The skin is cold and clammy. The breathing is shallow and slow, and the pulse is rapid and weak. The intense thirst, the persistent and agonizing burning pain in the throat with the exhaustive purging, will bring about collapse if the patient is not amenable to successful treatment. The duration in mild cases, if they recover, is about a week or ten days, if there are no complications. Many cases of fatal heart attacks are brought about in comparatively mild cases of indigestion. It is well, therefore, with any one suffering from any form of heart disease to be very careful with regard to his habits and diet. Where destructive changes have been produced the patient may die from exhaustion and starvation. The cases that eventually recover may lapse into chronic gastric catarrh (dyspepsia).

Those cases brought about by the usual indiscretion in diet complain at times of lack of appetite and the disgust for food. If they care to eat anything at all they have an eager desire for piquant dishes, highly spiced or very sour. Thirst is often present, and a feeling of a dryness in the mouth, the tongue is heavily coated, the breath has a foul odor, nausea and sometimes vomiting first of undigested food, then mucous and finally bilious matter. Sometimes the patient is made conscious of the peristaltic movements of the stomach. He has "rumbling" of the bowels. Eructations of gas or liquid are frequent and a persistent flat or bitter taste in the mouth. This is frequently accompanied by flashes of heat with sensations of burning in the palm of the hands and soles of the feet. (Continued on page 1040.)

Talk:

In the early days of the Restoration Movement, when men wanted to know what qualifications for service were needed in the Kingdom, they were answered that devotion to God was first, and that faith, hope and charity with an eye single to His glory completed the list. These character-qualifications are the primary ones. It was after two years of labor under this spirit that the elders were told to study all things. The wisdom of the world, in other word, is foolishness in the sight of God, unless wise men shall first be good men. Apart from the Spirit of God, the wisdom of men is arrogant, impatient with others, and proud. With His Spirit, all knowledge is made to serve humanity, and each new vision of the Divine Mind, brings a new and deeper responsibility.

A wise servant will be harmless, because the wisest thing he knows is the love of God and his fellows. A wise man after God's wisdom will also be a servant of his fellows.

We ought, in all our hungering after the wisdom of the world and the learning of men, to seek to understand the law of love. Constant communion with our heavenly Father will help toward this understanding.

(S) Hymn: S. H., 94, verses three, four and five.

(S) Prayer.

FIFTH SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 30

Theme: "Teach My Law."

Instrumental Prelude: "Jesus Calls Us," S. H., 337.

Call to Worship: 1 Corinthians 2: 5, and Hebrews 2: 1-3.

"... your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

(S) Hymn: "O Happy Is the Man," S. H., 94; O. S. H., 107.

(S) Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Ephesians 6: 1-10.

Talk:

While the burden of teaching the law of God rests primarily upon the elders of the church, yet there is a sense in which all Latter Day Saints should teach. Personal testimony by each member is one form of teaching and this is absolutely essential to the spread of the Kingdom. Again great responsibilities have been laid on the parents of children to teach them the intelligence of heaven. This is also a teaching function of both elder and member.

What we say is important. The way we say it is also important. But, after all we may say, as well as we may say it, our teaching will be just about as effective as the way we live. There are certain facts about the gospel we should know. Others should know them also. These facts may be historical, or they may be theoretical. But more than these facts, is the truth we must teach by the way we live. The first and all-important qualification of teaching the law of God, either to nonmembers or to children, is to live it yourself. To the priesthood this advice came as a law in 1831; and in principle it is true for all who may have to teach, whether at home, to neighbor, or in Sunday school, or pulpit:

"And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible, and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of my gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings. . . ."

(S) Hymn: "Thou Must Be True Thyself," S. H., 300.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2; 85: 8; 64: 4.

"... Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial Kingdom. . . ." "... That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same." "... the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days. . . ."

(S) Benediction.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark

FIRST SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 2

Sacrament Service

SECOND SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 9

Theme: "Jesus, Friend of All."

Prelude: "Fairest Lord Jesus," S. H., 23.

Call to Worship: "O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness . . ." (Psalm 96: 9.)

Hymn: "Holy, Holy, Holy Is the Lord," S. H., 7; Z. P., 26.
Prayer. This should be offered by a junior boy, or the juniors in unison, using the Lord's prayer.

Scripture: John 21: 4-12.

Hymn: "The Children's Friend," Z. P., 179, or "Behold the Savior at Your Door," S. H., 238; Z. P., 152.

Sermon Talk: Whenever we think of Jesus as our friend, we should think of God, the heavenly Father, too. We pray to God in Jesus' name. (John 16: 23.) Give examples of prayer being answered. See "Answered Prayers," Stepping Stones, January 8, 1933; also page "The Readers Say," in The Saints' Herald. Jesus showed by his actions that he was a friend of all. Some people complained that Jesus was a friend of sinners. (Matthew 11: 19.) Jesus helped anyone who needed help. He healed the sick, fed the hungry and told the people how to live better lives. God and Jesus are our friends. When you think of that, doesn't it make you want to live good, pure lives so you will be worthy of friends such as they?

Story: "Jesus Among His Friends," page 54, Knights of Service by Emerson O. Bradshaw, or "Jesus in America," Book of Mormon, page 631, et seq. (Include in this story how Jesus healed the sick and blessed the children.)

Picture Appreciation: Use a favorite picture of Jesus healing the sick of "Hoffman's Head of Christ," (from "Christ and the Rich Young Ruler.") which may be purchased from David C. Cook Publishing Company, Elgin, Illinois, for 12c, size 15 x 20 inches, No. 6100-M. After a short appreciation of the picture is given, have the pianist play softly "Fairest Lord Jesus," S. H., 23, and then, if desired, the children may sing the hymn softly.

Stories: "How Jesus Showed He was a Friend to All," told by juniors. Suggestions:

"Feeding the Hungry People," Matthew 15: 13-23, Mark 6: 30-46, Luke 9: 10-17, John 6: 1-15.

"Stilling the Storm," Matthew 8: 23-27, Mark 4: 34-41, Luke 8: 22-25.

"Healing the Centurion's Servant," Matthew 8: 5-13, Luke 7: 1-10.

"Healing the Nobleman's Son," John 4: 46-54.

Closing Hymn: "I Have Heard the Sweetest Story," Z. P., 36, or "Savior, Like a Shepherd Lead Us," S. H., 263.

Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 16

Theme: "Friends We Read About in the Bible."

Prelude: "Take Time to Be Holy," S. H., 322.

Call to Worship: "O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness . . ." (Psalm 96: 9.)

Hymn: "Take Time to Be Holy," S. H., 322.

Prayer.

Scripture: 1 Samuel 18: 1, Ruth 1: 16.

Hymn: "I Would Be True," S. H., 294.

Sermon Talk: In the Bible we read about many friends. Jesus said, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." (John 15: 14.) Abraham was called "the Friend of God." (James 2: 23.) This was because Abraham served God to the best of his ability and was faithful to him. In the New Testament we read about twelve men who were Jesus' friends. (Matthew 10: 1-5, and other places.) Then we read about men and women who were faithful friends to each other, such as David and Jonathan, Ruth and Naomi, Queen Esther, who was a friend to her people, and others. These people set an example for us that inspires us to be faithful in our service to God and our friendship for each other.

Story: "Friends of Bible Times," told by juniors. Suggestions:

"David and Jonathan," 1 Samuel, chapters 18, 19 and 20; 2 Samuel, chapter 9.

"Ruth and Naomi," Book of Ruth.

"Elisha and his Friends," 2 Kings 4: 8-37.

"The God Samaritan," Luke 10: 25-37.

Dramatization: "The Bible Friendship Circle." (This dramatization may be arranged by the juniors. Each child may decide upon a Bible friend to bring with them to church school and may tell something about the friend he or she has chosen.)

Closing Hymn: "Marching With the Heroes," S. H., 229.

FOURTH SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 23

Theme: "A Friend Loveth at All Times."

Prelude: "There's an Old, Old Path," S. H., 260; Z. P., 207.

Call to Worship: "Blessed be the name of our God; let us sing to his praise, yea, let us give thanks to his holy name, for he doth work righteousness forever." (Book of Mormon, Alma 14: 88, page 398.)

Hymn: "Blessed Be the Name," Z. P., 113, or "Praise Ye the Lord," S. H., 27; Z. P., 87.

Prayer.

Scripture: Proverbs 17: 17a, 18: 24a.

Hymn: "We'll Scatter Good Seed," S. H., 220, Z. P., 115.

Sermon Talk: Let us think about our friends this morning. Sometimes we just take our friends as a matter of course, and do not appreciate them as we should. Do you remember going to a new school or playground where you did not have any friends? You felt lonely. Then someone spoke to you and was friendly to you. You felt a lot happier then. If you wish to have friends, you must be friendly too. Jesus showed he was a friend to people by being kind and helpful to them. If you have some happiness come to you, your friends will be glad with you. If you have a sorrow, your friends will sympathize with you and help you in every way they can. A person cannot be truly happy unless he has some friends. A true friend will help and encourage us to do right and will not try to get us to do things that are not right.

Story: "Gideon, a True Friend to His People," Book of Mormon, pages 262, 263.

Special musical number by junior choir. An appropriate song is "Give to the World the Best You Have," found in pamphlet, Promotion Day Program Material, published by David C. Cook Publishing Company, Elgin, Illinois, No. 7396-J, 5 cents.

Closing Hymn: "There's an Old, Old Path," S. H., 260; Z. P., 207.

Benediction.

FIFTH SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 30

Theme: "Friends to All of God's Children."

Prelude: "We Come With Joy the Truth to Teach You," S. H., 393; Z. P., 132.

Call to Worship: "Blessed be the name of our God; let us sing to his praise, yea, let us give thanks to his holy name, for he doth work righteousness forever." (Book of Mormon, Alma 14: 88, page 398.)

Hymn: "Praise Him, Praise Him!" S. H., 10; Z. P., 144.

Prayer.

Scripture: John 15: 12-15, Matthew 28: 19, 20.

Hymn: "Faith of Our Fathers," (Third and fourth verses.) S. H., 291.

Sermon Talk: Tell about Peter's experience, Acts, 10th chapter, and quote verses 34 and 35. God told his apostles to go into all the world and preach the gospel to all nations. "All are alike unto God." (Book of Mormon, page 148, verse 115.) All of God's children should be friends.

Tell about the missionaries in different countries. See Stepping Stones, April 9, 1933. We should remember that God loves all his children, no matter what land they live in. Sometimes boys and girls in school meet children from other lands. They should show that they want to be friends by treating the stranger kindly.

Story: "The Book of Mormon Story Told to the Indians," Church History, Volume 1, pages 179-182.

Hymn: "In Christ There Is No East Nor West," S. H., 342, or "The World Children for Jesus," found in many song-books.

(These stories should be told in a way that will interest the children in children of other lands, and not in any way arouse a feeling of superiority.)

Closing Hymn: "The Morning Light Is Breaking," (First, second and fourth verses.) S. H., 385.

Benediction.

The Bible Friendship Circle

(A Dramatization for Juniors)

CHARACTERS:

Several Juniors: Betty, Ruth, Mary, George, Ronald, Ormond, Don

Miss Margaret, their teacher

SCENE I

(Children are entering classroom.)

RUTH: Hello, Mary. Did you bring your Bible friend this morning?

MARY: Yes, I thought of just the one I wanted to bring during Brother Warren's sermon; he mentioned her name. Have you yours?

RUTH: Yes, mine is a favorite, I think. Betty is a visitor today, but if she can think of a Bible friend, Miss Margaret will let her sit in our friendship circle too, won't she?

MARY: Why of course she will. I'll tell you about it Betty. Last Sunday our lesson was about "friendship." We talked about what it means to be a friend, and Miss Margaret told us a beautiful story about two friends. Then she told us that she wanted each one of us to bring a Bible friend to class today. She meant for us to think of someone in the Bible whom we considered a good friend. In our class circle this morning we are to leave every other chair vacant, and we are each going to imagine that our imaginary friend is seated at our right.

BETTY: Oh, isn't that going to be interesting! I can think of a Bible friend right now. I think.

MARY: Sh—, don't tell now. Each one is to introduce his Bible friend in class, and tell in what way he was a friend.

SCENE II

(In the classroom)

MISS MARGARET: We are all anxious to meet our Bible friends this morning, aren't we? Is there anyone who forgot to bring a friend?

GEORGE: I forgot, Miss Margaret. I'm sorry; but if you will let me be last, I know I can think of one.

MISS MARGARET: That will be fine, George. My! What a large circle. Fourteen chairs! I know you are all as anxious as I, to learn about all these friends. Shall we start with Betty, and go right around the circle? Betty, you may introduce your friend.

BETTY: Miss Margaret, my friend is Miriam, the little sister of Baby Moses. I think she was such a loyal friend, for when Pharaoh decreed that all the baby boys of the Israelite people should be put to death, she helped her mother make a basket boat to put the baby in so they could hide him on the river. Then she watched close by until the King's daughter came to the river to bathe and found him. You know the rest of the story. I think she was a good friend to her little brother, and also to the Israelites, for Moses grew up to be their most wonderful leader.

RUTH: I don't know my little friend's name, but she is the little maid who waited on Naaman's wife. She was a true friend in a time of need. One day when she found her mistress sorrowing because her husband had that dreaded disease, leprosy, she told her about Elisha the prophet who lived among her people in Samaria. She knew he could heal Naaman because he was a man of God. He did heal Naaman too, and everyone was happy; all because of my little friend.

RONALD: Joseph is the name of my friend. He showed that he was a real friend when he forgave his brothers for the great wrong they did him. He gave them food and a place to live during the terrible years of famine.

MARY: My friend is older than I; she is a beautiful, good, young lady. Her name is Esther, and I have always loved her. Esther was a wonderful friend; not just to one, or a few, but to a great body of captive Jews. She saved them from being destroyed by the king of Persia. I should like to be such a friend as was Esther.

ORMOND: I don't know the name of my friend either, but you will know him. He is the boy who gave his lunch to Jesus to feed the hungry multitude. He was a friend to Jesus and to all those people. I expect he was as hungry as anyone there when he so unselfishly gave up his lunch.

DON: David is the name of my good Bible friend. He made people happy with his beautiful harp music. He helped his people to win in battles against the wicked Philistines. When he grew up he was made king over God's people and was a good kind friend to all.

MISS MARGARET: George, have you thought of a friend to add to this circle of wonderful friends of ours?

GEORGE: Yes, I have thought of several who are not with us, but I am just wondering—Miss Margaret, if I were to choose a friend from the Bible to sit in this chair by me this morning, I would choose Jesus. He was the greatest friend of all. It didn't matter if one were poor, or old, or wicked; Jesus helped them all. Yes, I think he is the best friend in all the Bible, and I want him for my friend this morning.

MISS MARGARET: All the Bible children you juniors brought this morning are very dear friends indeed. We are glad to add them to our circle; but, after all, Jesus is our very dearest friend, isn't he? We are glad that George thought to invite him into our circle. Shall we sing very softly, together, one verse of "Jesus is the Children's Dearest Friend"?

If any man thinks it may have been possible of fulfillment in ancient times, but because of the advance of civilization in modern times it is not possible now, he has but to read latter day revelation where the law is repeated. From the beginning of the world the Lord "gave commandment that they should love one another; and that they should choose me their Father." This law is practicable, but only in the way that God has designed. It cannot operate in conjunction with the contrary rule of selfishness.

The power to love another as oneself is dependent upon one's first loving God and getting in right relation with him, and partaking of the love that is of God. Only through a fulfillment of the first great commandment can the fulfilling of the second become possible. With the love of God in one's soul, love for one's fellows becomes practicable and normal.

It becomes apparent that the law of love can be fulfilled in a social way only within the church, the congregation of God's adopted children. It is here that Christ has intended that his law shall apply and that in its fullness, since it cannot become operative outside. It is one of the functions and responsibilities of the church to exemplify this law, and through it to reveal Christ to the world. The light of Christ must shine out through his people, and his glory from Zion. The verity of his truth must be manifested in its demonstration. In all these things the church is his chosen exponent, and there is no other.

As the family determines the character of society, so the members of the church determine the character of the church. The church cannot be better than the aggregate of its members. It follows then that the constructive work of building up a holy church in which the love of God shall be exemplified will consist primarily in building up individuals. That is where Christ began though his work was by no means individualistic. The temple of Solomon was built of stones every one of which had first been cut and fitted for its place before it left the quarries; and Zion, the perfect temple of God, will not appear until the living stones have been individually prepared by obedience to law and sanctification by the Spirit, and that in the local branches. The foolish virgins who lacked the qualifications for entering in with their Lord were not able to make a lightning transformation at the last moment, and were shut out; and the Lord has said that when the time comes for gathering to Zion that only "the pure in heart" shall come. Zion cannot be built with unworthy materials.

"Love is the fulfilling of the law" for all law is bound up in the great commandment. The measure of one's love is the measure of his obedience. To what extent has the law of love been manifested among the people of God? Just to the extent that the commandments have been whole-heartedly obeyed. Each man may judge for himself if he looks at the commandments which require that he do justly, love mercy, that he be loving, kind, chaste, courteous, peaceable, yielding (though not to sin), gentle, meek, humble, charitable, patient, forbearing, longsuffering, compassionate, forgiving, and without guile. These all come under the second great commandment.

Is there hatred? then love is dethroned. Is there revenge? then love is crucified. Is there selfishness? then love hides itself in shame. Is there unforgiveness? then love is in chains. Is there injustice? then love is imprisoned. Is there fornication? then love is sacrificed upon the altar of lust. Is there evil-speaking? then love is lost and forgotten. Love is always wanting in sin.

Love cannot operate under sin, neither can sin operate under love. The two are antinomic.

The task of fulfilling the great law of love is in the ultimate a personal one. The Lord may give gifts, and send the Spirit of light and love to give direction and support to one's efforts; the church may provide pastors and teachers, and literature, but these are only helps, and it still remains that the working out of one's salvation and the attaining of perfection of character are by the individual's own initiative and work. No other can do it for him. The heights of love are attained only by most painfully tearing from the heart the deceptively cherished idols of selfishness and other evils, and striving with grim determination for the higher ideals, for subduing sin is subduing self. An attitude of careless or languid indifference will not rid one of evil nor secure to him the good, but intelligent, diligent, and persistent effort is required. This is made clear in the great commandment that the love God requires of man shall be "with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength."

ing men in practical relationship, to their mutual advantage. Its greatest influence was felt through acts of legislators and administrators. It seems that it will now become less of a "settlement" and more of an educational and research institute.

The craze for speed in transportation is taking toll in Great Britain in an alarming way. The figures recently issued by the Ministry of Transport report that for sixteen weeks ending June 30, 2,087 persons have been killed and 71,298 injured, averaging 130 killed per week and 4,456 injured through automobile accidents. In contrast with this, Lieutenant Colonel A. H. L. Mount, the Chief Inspecting Officer of Railways, Ministry of Transport reports that in 1933 there were 282 deaths on British railways including cases of trespass and suicide. This is the lowest number in thirty years.

Viscount Snowden the famous Labor and Socialist leader of England and one time Chancellor of the Exchequer recently celebrated his seventieth birthday, and in a statement published in the London Daily Mail said: "Looking back I thank God for the developed Christian conscience and the enlightened self-interest which together have brought us thus far along the path of progress. This is the most hopeful sign of the times and the most encouraging change I have seen in my long and active life."

LEEDS, ENGLAND, July 21, 1934.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF WILLIAM LEWIS

"Since coming here and looking over the field I am convinced that thousands of good honest souls have passed away that would have been Latter Day Saints had it not been for the abominable dogmas of Salt Lake Mormons; but like Grandpa Roberts, they could not fall in with it, and I believe that there are many more living here who will yet see the light. . . .

"I do not wish to be too fast, but we need here in South Wales twenty active missionaries; and yes, we could use two hundred and keep them at work. . . . In my judgment for the next two years the church should make a special effort to supply this field. I hope that the report of Brother Kelley and Brother Griffiths will be in that line. Wales is in need of help so bad that I believe the angels of God will speak in our behalf. The spring, summer, and fall months are suitable for holding out-door meetings.

"We intend soon to go up near Merthyr, the old stamping ground of the church in early days, also of this in 1865 to 1870; but nothing is there now. I am informed that there are many old Saints that have left the Brighamites, and that there are hundreds of their children that stand off. I do not know how true this is, but will find out. Take it ten miles each way from Merthyr and it is a solid field of people, where there used to be thousands of Saints.

"I have just delivered, from door to door, five hundred notices of the time and place of our meetings and subjects to be considered. We shall hold the meetings as long as the interest is good. Brother G. T. Griffiths has promised to come and help us."

Having labored nearly two years in Wales, we started home July 3, 1903, aboard one of the largest ships afloat, the Cedric, a White Star liner.

THE DREAM OF A LITTLE CHILD

While in Wales our little girl, Ruth, was baptized in the sea at Llannelly, by Elder Gomer T. Griffiths, just as the tide was going out at nine o'clock at night.

When we made up our minds to come home, Ruth dreaded the voyage for she had had such a hard sick spell during the crossing. She was anxious to see her brothers and sisters, but the seasickness discouraged her, and she asked us to leave her in Wales with some neighbors.

One morning, however, she came downstairs and said that she would not mind going home if she could have as pleasant a time as she had dreamed. She said that she saw herself and some other little girls playing on the ship, running up and down the decks. One of the sailors took a rope and made a swing for them. They had very good times, and she was not sick at all. The child related the dream with great pleasure—she was but nine years old.

When we boarded the ship Ruth mentioned her dream. She saw some little girls and said: "Now if the sailor will put up the swing, my dream will come true." To her joy and ours, her dream was fulfilled. One of the kind-hearted sailors spent many of his spare minutes with the children and he put up the swing and otherwise entertained them.

One day the little girl came to us saying, "My stomach feels as if I was going to get seasick."

"Go and pray that the dream will all come true," I advised her. That was the last complaint she made. She did not suffer from seasickness.

THE NOMADS

whispering of the wind through the palms. When one looked out into the night he saw little fires that had not yet gone out over which people had boiled water and cooked their suppers. Now and then a bright tongue of flame leaped up and the surrounding vegetation flowered in new beauty. Once and again a slight smell of fragrant smoke drifted in.

Lucy's father was rising slowly, feebly. "I cannot read this, Lucy," he said, huskily. "You will please come and read it for me."

She came forward with no hesitancy. His fingers trembled as he held the paper toward her.

"Tete," he pointed out shakily, "This is a mistake. It should read: Te tatara-hapa nei au.—I repent."

"No, father," Lucy spoke firmly, "There is no mistake in the writing. I love Robert. I desire to be cast out."

Head held proudly and defiantly high, she walked down the aisle in a profound silence. She paused at the door and turned toward Robert. It seemed to Dan that she suddenly personified all the soft tenderness and yearning of the warm tropical night as she stretched her arms toward Robert. "Eopati, Eopati!" she whispered.

He rose like one in a dream and stumbled after her into the darkness.

Lucy's father finally gathered strength to announce the closing hymn and offer the closing prayer.

"Dear God our Father," he pleaded, "give us Zion—give us Zion e'er long—that city of holiness, that place of safety, that city of the pure in heart, where we may rear our children in righteousness before thee, where they may grow up without sin unto salvation—"

"When I get out of this," thought Dan, "I'm going to give my life to Zion. I shall work for Zion all my days. All the resources at my command shall go into the building of that city of refuge."

Louisa thought: "I'll surely be glad when I get back to civilization and don't have to come in contact with such sordid things. Oh, for a beautiful home, with nice refined associates and friends! And Dan is capable of earning enough to maintain a lovely home. How thankful I am!"

ACUTE GASTRIC CATARRH

Toward the end of the attack, "fever blisters" (herpes) may occur about the mouth. Jaundice may be present and slight fever also; vertigo and a sense of fullness in the head. Many of the ordinary cases recover without any treatment. The habits of the patient should be corrected and the Word of Wisdom obeyed.

In cases of poisoning (toxic gastritis), no time should be lost and the best remedy obtainable should be used to fight the tendency to death and get rid of the poison without delay. Quick action is necessary. A physician should be summoned at once and if it is a case of carbolic acid poisoning, alcohol and water should be administered, or if this is not at hand, vinegar may be of some benefit; if it is a mineral acid, olive oil, starch, white of egg, flour, milk, soda, chalk, soap or wall plaster in water; in sulphuric acid cases, avoid water, if corrosive sublimate the white of one egg, flour or milk.

I have not tried to give all the antidotes for poisons as I fear this article already too long. The layman should understand some of the common antidotes of poisons to be used until the arrival of the physician. In toxic gastritis, I cannot emphasize too strongly the extreme necessity for the calling of a competent physician.

If your morals make you dreary, depend upon it they are wrong.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Has the Reorganized Church ever called itself the "Mormon Church"?

In no instance known to me has the church ever so called itself, though it is probably true that some of its officials have used the term "Mormon" or "Mormonism," usually in quotations, as a term commonly employed by many who have no affiliation with us. In doing so, however, it has never been with a view to recognizing the validity of the term as being applicable to the church, but simply in recognition of the fact that they are the people whom others have dubbed "Mormons." The term is repugnant to the church principally because so commonly used to imply polygamy, which the ignorant suppose to be the real meaning of "Mormonism."

Informed persons know that the Saints were called Mormons at first because they accept the Book of Mormon as a true record of God's dealings with the ancient inhabitants of America. This fact does not mean that the church was founded on that book, or on any other particular book of the sacred word. A belief in the Book of Mormon is really incidental to the faith of the Saints, and the name of the church is not based upon a single incidental but upon its author, Christ himself. It would be just as consistent to call other sects the Judas churches because they accept the book of Jude (properly translated "Judas") as an inspired book of the Bible. By action of its General Conference the church declared concerning the term Mormon as a church name:

"We see no necessity for this conference to take other action than to discourage the use of such term in both writing and speaking."—Resolution 381.

Please explain Luke 9: 27.

This text is similar to Mark 9: 1 and Matthew 16: 28, except that the last named is more explicit and, some think, more difficult of explanation. For convenience the text in Mark is quoted below, as it is the same as Luke with the exception of the words "come with power," which Luke does not contain. It states:

"There be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power."—Mark 9: 1.

Views differ as to what this means. Some hold that it refers to the fact that the gospel should spread and produce a harvest of many converts within a few years, which of course actually occurred. Others think it refers to some divine manifestation or vision to be shown to certain of the disciples which would reveal the glory of the divine kingdom. The transfiguration on the mount eight days after the words of the text quoted may have been one such occasion (see Mark 9: 2-4 and Luke 9: 28-32). Another occasion may have been his ascension in the midst of angels (Acts 1: 9, 10), or the vision of Stephen when Jesus stood on the right hand of God (Acts 8: 56), or the visions of John as recited in Revelation 21 and other chapters.

Another interpretation suggested is, that some of the disciples did not die but are still living as ministering angels on earth. This is thought to be supported somewhat by Jesus' words concerning John: "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee" (see John 21: 22, 23), and the saying of the disciples afterward that "that disciple should not die," though John says Jesus did not say he should not die.

What is the seal of God? and what is the mark of the beast?

God's seal is referred to in Revelation 7: 3 and 9: 4 as being placed in the foreheads of his servants. In ancient times servants were often sealed with a mark by their masters. This mark or seal in the forehead appears therefore to symbolize the impressed character of the divine, the forehead being thought to show the character of the individual. In similar ways the mark of the beast was doubtless his impressed character in his followers (see Ibid. 13: 16).

God Hears and Answers Prayers

The brotherly love we of the church have for one another is a wonderful thing. Added to this we have the blessing of the Fatherhood of God. I read and learn that he is our Father, that he is ever near to help and protect us.

I know that God hears and answers prayers. Let me give an example of this. I prayed that I might have taken from me the craving for snuff, which I had used for fifteen years. He heard my prayer and answered, giving me strength to break this habit. In our every trial, if we will ask his assistance, he will help us. He has restored our children to health several times when they have been very sick, and has increased our understanding of many things.

It is my desire to rear our six children in the way God would have them go. All except the two youngest have been baptized. We have always lived close to a group of Saints or to a branch, and my prayers are for those who are isolated. It is a great blessing to associate with those of like faith, and I sometimes wonder if we who have this privilege appreciate it as we should. Will the Saints pray for me?

DRUMRIGHT, OKLAHOMA.

MRS. W. S. CARRIKER.

There Is Power in the Gospel

As I read of the works of those who have carried and are carrying the gospel into foreign lands, I am surprised how soon it was carried over the ocean after the church was organized. It makes me think—"And this gospel shall be preached to all nations and then shall the end come."

It is surprising how long this truth (God's word) has been taught and yet how the world goes on unheeding and the time is not yet for the end of wickedness.

I, too, get wonderful help and light from reading the pages of the Herald, the tie that binds all God's Saints together. Many of us isolated ones have no other way of hearing about the church and its leaders and the faithful ones who are still carrying on the work intrusted to their care. May each one of us add our mite to help encourage the weak, for the strong rope is made up of small threads.

Sometimes I feel that there is not much I can do for this cause, but I love the letters in the Herald. They take me back on trips into the past, and sometimes I see the names of people that bring back fond memories and help me to know where certain ones are and how hard and faithfully some are striving to keep the gospel fire burning.

We all have trials which are hard to endure, but God is at the helm and will take charge. When trials come it is he who helps us.

The worldly want something for nothing, and many are getting just that nowadays. But God's ways are not man's ways. He tells us to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling.

Where are our treasures? Are they in our hearts? Are we laying up treasures in heaven? I know that there is a place prepared for us on the other side.

I have labored hard to bring my family to see and obey the law, but the lights of the world are brighter as yet to them than the light of the gospel. We have never lived near a branch and only a few times was it my privilege to take my children to a Sunday school of any denomination. Many in the church who have all kinds of help from headquarters and missionaries, don't know what it is to hunger after righteousness. But I cling to the rod of iron hoping that the Lord will call my children and my husband and cause them to obey the gospel. They all know that there is power in this work for we have had blessings from the hands of some of the faithful servants. I had one child administered to who was close to death. He had suffered with a gathering in his head for weeks, and he got up and dressed before night and was free from pain.

There is no doubt in my mind but what we are on the right road and that this is the church Christ said he would build in latter days.

When I was sixteen years old I joined a popular church, but my eyes were watching for more light, and when I had a chance to read of the works of this church, I saw the brighter light and obeyed the gospel in 1919. I have been baptized into two churches, but I know that a thousand baptisms will not save one without faith and works. By our works are we known.

God has blessed me in many ways. He has spoken to me. He has healed us in sickness. He has answered prayer for me almost instantly. He has miraculously helped and blessed me.

When I read the Herald I feel as if I had found spiritual food. Pray that God will bless us in our undertakings and that our works shall be right in his sight; pray especially that my family will obey him in his due time.

I have a niece, Mrs. Homer Hansen, living near Phoenix, Arizona, whose address I do not have in full. If anyone should know her address and will send it to me, I shall be grateful.

Town Needs Latter-day Message

This beautiful city of Bloomington is sadly in need of the Latter-day message. There are only eleven members of the Reorganized Church here, but the Lord has not forgotten us. Through the efforts of the only family of members my family and I have been led into the kingdom. The efforts of this family combined with the help of Elder O. C. Johnson, of Decatur, Illinois, have made possible a number of excellent meetings here, and several investigators have been present. Illness, however, has prevented us from continuing our little Sunday school from which we gained so much. Pray for us, Saints, that we may be strong to encounter all difficulties, and solve our problems, and that there may be someone to help us.

Is there a brother who can visit us? Be sure of a hearty welcome. My home is available at all time for services. We have music, and all are willing to help, but we need a dependable leader.

Last fall I had an experience which I believe will encourage others who may be in doubt about the latter-day work. I was investigating the Reorganized Church thoroughly, its principles, its beliefs. I was disgusted with all churches. Elder Johnson was holding two Sunday services in my home, and I was very much satisfied with his message. After the evening service a friend asked me to have my little boy administered to, but it was only after Brother Johnson assured me it would be all right, that I gave my consent. The little fellow had a skin trouble which covered all of his chin. About five days later a neighbor asked of me: "What are you using on the boy's chin? I never saw anything heal so quickly." I explained that I had used nothing, but told what I had done. Two weeks from the administration there was not a sign of the trouble, no scar.

The Readers Say---

This is one of the least of God's mercies to us, yet is it not wonderful? The child had been sent home from school every day for a week with the command: "Tell your mother to do something for you."

Friends, I am happy to be a member of this great church. I believe and teach everything for which this church stands. This I cannot do in any other church. There is nothing I am ashamed to teach my boys and girls about the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Brothers and sisters, save all church books and papers. They will do a missionary work which will surprise you. Used Sunday school quarterlies are what we have been using. They are such excellent reading and study material that it seems a shame to destroy them. Even discarded hymn books often prove helpful.

Sisters, will some of you write to my friend, Mrs. James Lacy, 1613 West Illinois Street, Bloomington, Illinois? She is past seventy and gets lonesome for the church and its people. You will make her very happy if you will do this. Our great desire is to have a branch here, or to live where there is a church already established.

Any who find his way to Bloomington, please look us up. We need the encouragement of your presence. Let us keep the glorious latter-day message clear before us, remembering that the Lord always keeps his promises.

Am I My Brother's Keeper?

This question was asked many years ago by the Lord when he said to Cain, "Where is Abel, thy brother?" Remember the answer? "I know not. Am I my brother's keeper?" Cain asked a question also. The Lord answered that question thus, "Cain, what have you done? The voice of thy brother cries unto me from the ground."

I wonder if the Lord is asking us that question today? Where is our brother or sister? Are we not our brother's keeper? The echo answers, "Yes." To what extent? I verily believe if we can, by word of deed, say or do something to better our brother's condition, and we fail willfully, the voice of that brother will cry unto the Lord and he will hear. If on the other hand we willfully do or say something that will retard our brother's progress, spiritually or temporally, it will keep up from the blessings of God. Unless we repent we will surely receive our punishment. Some little word spoken, some little thing repeated may discourage a brother or sister and retard their development, and sometimes kill something within them and they try no more to develop. How careful we should be. As commanded: be slow to speak. Let us not judge our brother but help him. Let us be true to our ideals and God's blessing will come. On the other hand, if we fail to be true and kind to the least of God's creatures perhaps, like Cain, we will learn obedience by the things we suffer.

We are told in the word of God to do good to all men, especially the household of faith. We must be awake to our opportunities. Conditions are such that we cannot sit contentedly and not try to do something to help. Think of the girls in the sweat shops. The price some pay for a mere existence and many other things we hardly dare to mention. We are compelled to cry out, "Oh, Lord, how long until Zion is an established fact and not just idle talk?"

Sometimes I think we have too many social activities for our own personal pleasure. We fail in our true worship and service to our heavenly Father. Oh! that we might find ourselves and awake and worship God in Spirit and in truth and let us be more practical and do something that is really worth while. In learning obedience we do not want to say with Cain, "My punishment is greater than I can bear." If we could be more closely united we would advance more rapidly.

I have been thinking that if we sisters would let our adornment be the work of our hands as commanded, we may be able to work out a plan that would bring us, as a women's department, closer together and closer to God. Suppose we who can sew make our own clothing, those that do not sew pay a sister or the group a reasonable price. If there be any who can not pay, let's do it free. Or, we could sew as a group, or groups, and let our profit go to the church to do our bit in helping pay the church debt. We probably could help quilt a bit. Once we are united on this we will not be wearing cheap dresses made by girls in sweat shops; girls that pay a tremendous price to hold their jobs; that of a mere existence.

I trust we will pray over these things. If any one has anything to offer that will help in working out plans, we would like to hear of it.

Why Am I a Latter Day Saint?

This was the theme for a recent Wednesday evening prayer and testimony service and the one who presented the theme suggested such reasons as the spiritual message, social program, the challenge of the church, the invitation it presents to all to prepare and qualify for service, and these points were developed in setting the theme.

Another of the congregation arose and splendidly suggested that a few years ago at the age of twenty-one, he set out to prove that God really existed, and he then determined to prove which of the two churches making the claim, really possessed divine authority. In conclusion he was a Latter Day Saint because he was convinced that there was a God and secondly because he was convinced that the Latter Day Saint Church possessed divine commission.

Later another member arose and contributed to the service with an interesting testimony. He said, "One time in New England an aged brother while walking across a training ground had an experience and God talked to him. Throughout his life no one could tell this brother that he had not had such an experience." Likewise no one could change this speaker's mind in his belief that he had heard the voice of the Spirit, and it has made him steadfast and true to the church throughout the past few decades.

Another speaker had received a conviction of the truthfulness of the church when he was a very young man, but did not obey the call until he was a very much older man; he could not forget this conviction that had come to him. In brief he was a Latter Day Saint because he had surely received a conviction of the church and its purposes.

Such talks as the above were the types of testimonies heard at this prayer service. My friends, one requisite that every Latter Day Saint should have is a strong conviction that this is the church of God and that his influence and Spirit are with the church. If we have such an attitude then various reverses and discouragements may face us, but they shall be of no avail.

Central Texas Reunion

Attendance is Good in Face of Drought Conditions

Nearly a hundred Saints were camped on the grounds for the beginning of the reunion and conference at Hearne, Texas, July 13, coming from many points of the district, gathered to enjoy one of the best meetings of recent years. About seventy camped throughout the time, the week-end visitors boosting the number to over a hundred. Houston again led in attendance with thirty-eight at the peak which occurred the first Sunday.

Many of the Saints came prepared to do their own cooking in the interests of economy. This manner of getting along is not so convenient, especially for the women, but enjoyable, nevertheless. A good number enjoyed the service of the dining hall, which was efficiently managed by Frank Arnold, of Houston. Brother Frank was also responsible for the provision of an economical, refreshing drink, "snow," in various flavors, which could be had during the heat of the day between services. The district appreciates the many ways in which Brothers Frank Arnold, S. L. Dotson, Hardy Hay, and others contributed to the comfort of the Saints during the meeting.

The Saints were made happy by the arrival of Apostle R. S. Budd and Elder Lee Quick, Friday, for the opening of the reunion.

Friday evening, July 13, a program by the local church school opened the reunion, and this was appreciated by the large audience that filled the tabernacle. The talent, and especially the willingness, displayed, was inspiring.

Saturday morning a prayer service began the day's events, and was enjoyed by a very large number. The conference business meeting convened at 10:15 a. m. and was in charge of the district presidency in association with Apostle R. S. Budd and Elder Lee Quick. As the business could not be finished in the forenoon session, a meeting was called for afternoon at two-thirty to elect officers, etc. This meeting was in charge of Apostle Budd. District President C. W. Tischer was reelected for another term, as also were C. M. Mitchell, secretary, and A. V. Arnold, treasurer. Brother Tischer nominated Elders J. R. Allen and H. H. Davenport as his assistants, and they were approved unanimously by the conference. Sister Chattie Everett, of Dallas, was elected as director of church schools and Sister Nettie Tischer, of Houston, was chosen musical director. C. M. Mitchell, of Bryan, was sustained by the conference as bishop's agent.

Of the thirty-nine men of the priesthood in the district, thirty reported their ministerial activities. This department of the work has made considerable improvement. Five church schools reported and four branches made statistical reports.

Saturday afternoon, Elder B. A. Howard and family arrived from Erick, Oklahoma, to augment the force of reunion workers.

Elder Lee Quick preached at the evening service, beginning the series that were divided between himself and Apostle Budd through the following week until the departure of Brother Quick for the Bandera reunion. Everyone enjoyed having Brother Quick at the Central Texas meeting and look forward to his early return to this section.

Sunday morning, by the time of the close of the prayer meeting, the tabernacle was entirely full. Sister Everett was in charge of the church school hour. The preaching service registered the largest attendance of all, and Brother Budd brought a wonderfully uplifting sermon on "Love." In the afternoon a priesthood meeting under the direction of Brother Budd brought much good to that group. At 2:30 p. m. an ordination service was held, at which Brother C. W. Fisher was ordained to office of high priest. This was a very beautiful service and most impressive. Brother Budd arranged and directed the program. Brother Quick delivered the charge, and following this Brother Howard also charged the congregation with their responsibility in supporting an officer whom they have accepted. It was a time of dedication and rededication. The baby son of Brother and Sister Hardy Hay was blessed during this hour. Brother Quick preached to a large audience on "Faith" at the evening service.

The Reunion really got under way Monday morning. The daily program began with an 8:45 a. m. prayer service. Two class periods were held before noon and one at 2:30 in the afternoon. Elder Howard and Apostle Budd taking the morning classes and Elder Quick the afternoon. The class periods were limited to forty-five minutes, allowing time for relaxation before going into another service. This helped greatly to maintain interest, which continued unabated throughout the week. Special meetings were held from time to time, during the ten days, for the women, the men and young men. Sister Chattie Everett and Sister Virginia Williams were in charge of the little folks for an hour in the mornings and held their services in the dining hall. The older young people enjoyed four meetings in the woods, for prayer and testimony, Brother Howard being with them every morning and Brother Budd was with them also, in the last one. Good interest was shown in these meetings.

The hot, dry weather was made endurable by the cool breezes that blew night and day. Drought in this area is worse than your writer can remember it having been before, and the crops are extremely short. The vegetables which have been so generously furnished by the local Saints before, were lacking this year. Those watermelon feasts, which have been a feature in the past, were almost unknown, though there were a few melons that found their way to the grounds and were thoroughly enjoyed. Everyone seemed to appreciate the opportunity of gathering together and having the instruction of church workers, and other things were of secondary importance.

Recreational activities were not indulged in to a great extent. Horse shoe pitching was the principal game, though volley ball was played a little.

On Friday evening, July 20, the little folks, under the direction of Sister Virginia Williams, furnished a thirty-minute program before the preaching service. Between these services a surprise birthday gift was made to Brother J. M. Nunley, who has labored most of his life for the church in this district and in the mission field. Brother Budd made the presentation speech. We are inspired to go on by these who have spent long, faithful years in the service of the Master without regret.

Sunday, July 22, came the closing day of the reunion. The sacrament and testimony meeting at 8:45 was the best of the entire series of similar services. The Saints seemed to sense the import of the closing and were more eager to participate than before. The good Spirit was there in great measure and a much longer time could have been used than the program allowed.

Bishop and Sister L. F. P. Curry arrived from Dallas during the early part of the sacrament service and the Saints enjoyed having them. Brother Curry spoke at the eleven o'clock hour. His subject was "Individual Preparation for Zion." In the afternoon, at 1:30, a baptismal service was held at a stream about a mile from the grounds. Five young people being baptized. The confirmation service followed at two-thirty. Brother Budd was in charge, and Brother Howard made an appropriate talk following the confirmation.

Brother Budd preached a fine sermon to the church membership at the closing, Sunday evening.

Many were absent this year who attended last year, and were greatly missed. On the whole, attendance was good, considering the drought and other conditions. Every branch in the district, except one, had representatives there. From Cleveland, Ohio, Brother Harvey Spiller and family came to spend the most of the time in the meeting, and they brought with them Sister R. M. Salzman, and son, of Buffalo, New York. These Saints were residents and members of this district not long ago and were welcomed back "home."

The Saints' appreciation of the work of Brother Budd, Brother Quick, Brother Howard, and the district workers, grows, and they hope that they may meet with them next year.

President F. M. McDowell's Priesthood Work in Eastern Colorado District

Ministry Inspired With Enlarged Vision of Their Work

One of the finest things that have happened in Eastern Colorado District in a long time was the visit of President Floyd M. McDowell and his work among the priesthood, in three week-end meetings during the month of July.

The men of the priesthood were asked to meet at three different points in the district and to choose the place of meeting nearest their homes. In harmony with this arrangement, twenty-seven of the men attended the meetings in Denver, July 6 to 8; twenty-five attended at Wray, July 13 to 15, and eight attended at La Junta, July 20 to 22. Many of the men came from fifty to one hundred miles, or even more; and two of the men came three hundred miles. We felt much encouraged in the work to see the devotion of these men as evidenced in their sacrificial efforts to assemble at the places appointed.

Brother McDowell's classes, sermons, and personal interviews, given with much zeal and earnestness, sent the men back to their home branches and groups with an enlarged vision of the meaning of the restored gospel and of their own ministry. Many of them have stated that they will not soon forget the lessons learned in those priesthood meetings, nor the feelings of joy they felt as they joined with their brothers in re-consecrating their lives to the service of God.

In each meeting place at eight a. m. on Sunday, a priesthood prayer meeting was held. In all of these prayer services there was one hundred percent response, every man in attendance declaring his intention to try to work in his office and to magnify his calling. Under those conditions, as would be expected, the Lord blessed us abundantly by his Spirit's presence, and strong men were moved to tears.

On each of the three Sundays during the meetings (July 8, 15, and 22) the morning and evening preaching services were open to all, and the Saints came long distances to hear Brother McDowell. In his sermons he tied up the work of the wives, mothers, and all other members, to the great work of the priesthood. He helped all to realize the pressing need for the work of God, through his church, today; and also showed the necessity for united effort on the part of all, that the work may go forward.

A great amount of good has been accomplished by this work among the priesthood of Eastern Colorado District by Brother McDowell. Many of the men have been stimulated to work more diligently and earnestly than ever before, and also to study and prepare for yet greater service in the future. Many see more clearly than ever a vision of a prepared priesthood, receiving a divine endowment for their work, leading the way into the realization of the Zion of God on earth.

Our only regret is that more of the men were not able to attend; or perhaps, sufficiently filled with a desire to attend. Out of one hundred and two men holding priesthood in the district, Brother McDowell contacted sixty-two, having a personal interview with sixty-one of them. The desire of those of us who were privileged to enjoy these services is that we may, with God's help, be able to contact the rest of the men and save them to their ministry. In this way, yet more good may be accomplished by reason of Brother McDowell's efforts.

May this good work among the priesthood go on; and may the men whom God has called to lead, speedily enter in and occupy on the high plane of life and service which God intended they should occupy. Thus shall "His Kingdom come and His will be done on earth as in Heaven."

Little Sioux, Iowa

Church Activities and Interest Revived

Church work at Little Sioux, for many years, has been practically at a standstill. Interest was at such a low ebb that it was considered advisable to discontinue the branch and sell the church property and building, which is one of the oldest churches in what was formerly known as Little Sioux District.

In this building, almost every early leader of the Reorganization preached, and many faithful church pioneers worshipped. When Brother J. W. Lane learned that the church building at Sioux was being used by other denominations, he asked permission of church authorities to go and put forth an effort to revive the work.

Permission being granted, he in company with Missionary E. Y. Hunker, held a series of meetings. They visited many scattered families of Saints, with the result that during the last fifteen months, Saints from Mondamin, River Sioux, Orson, Onawa, and Whiting gathered at Little Sioux Church each Sunday morning for services. For several months Brother Lane devoted most of his time visiting among the Saints and occupying the pulpit on Sundays. By this means, the work has again been placed on a firm foundation.

A good work is being done by the music department, assisted by Sister Lena Jones, chorister, and Sister Levonne Lu-Shaw, pianist. The church school is being cared for under the leadership of Sister Anna Riley, assisted by Sister Lois Powell. Four classes are being taught by efficient instructors. Orioles are being organized, and a ladies' minstrel program is being sponsored to help financially. Services are held at ten o'clock each Sunday, with an enrollment of sixty-five, followed by preaching at eleven.

When it became necessary for Brother Lane to return to his home at Lamoni, he gained the promise of the following men to occupy the pulpit on certain Sundays of each month: Charles Wall, of Pisgah; Marvin Fry, of Soldier; Mark Jensen, of Moorhead; Emmet Purcell, of Missouri Valley, and W. R. Adams, of Logan. As Brother Fry later moved from the district, Brother Howard Reynolds, of Woodbine, was chosen to act in his place.

After the General Conference, Brother Lane returned and spent his time among the Saints as usual, preaching and visiting.

Following the services of June 17, the Saints of Little Sioux enjoyed a picnic lunch, with Mark Jensen, as their guest. Later in the day, they went to Smith Lake, near Little Sioux, where Brother Jensen assisted Brother Lane in a baptism and confirmation service. Four candidates became members of the church.

Southwestern Texas Reunion

Cooperative Effort Makes Gathering Possible—Six Baptized

Southwestern Texas district reunion, held at Bandera July 20 to 29, went down in history as one of the outstanding reunions of this region. Since it was the first one in almost six years, everyone was greatly interested and looked forward to its opening.

The first service was in charge of J. A. Robinson, of the district presidency, assisted by E. L. Henson, each of whom gave a short talk. Saturday morning at nine o'clock there was a prayer and testimony meeting with these brothers in charge. Elder Lee Quick arrived in time to occupy at the eleven o'clock hour.

Saturday evening at eight o'clock the reunion organization was effected. The

An Orchestral Family

Popular among group entertainers at the Southwestern Texas reunion, held at Bandera, July 20 to 29, was the six-piece orchestra of the Carl Wheeler family. The youngest player, nine years old, accompanied at the piano.

The Wheeler family also played an important part in making this reunion possible. Brother Wheeler and his boys with several other workers, devoted many hours to fencing the ground, erecting the tabernacle, and making ready all reunion facilities.

Happiness Is Conditional

The Restoration has demonstrated thus far that God can make men happy only if men themselves are willing and obedient.—Vernon Lundeen, in "Youth and the Restoration."

Man Must Work

I pity no man because he has work; if he is worth his salt he will work. I envy the man who has a work worth doing and does it well. The busiest person is frequently the happiest; the idler's hours are empty of joy. Man must work and struggle in order to grow; if he allows his faculties to become dull, and his powers to lie dormant, he withers and dies.—Theodore Roosevelt.

Elder J. W. Lane Revives Interest at Little Sioux

Elder J. W. Lane, veteran missionary, has played an important part in the reviving of interest and church services at Little Sioux, Iowa, where stands one of the oldest church buildings in what was formerly known as Little Sioux District.

Brother Lane and Elder E. Y. Hunter held a series of meetings in this community where the Saints are few and scattered. Regular Sunday meetings were begun, and Brother Lane devoted much time to visiting the members and speaking on Sunday. After General Conference, he returned to continue his visiting and preaching. In his work he enlisted the aid of priesthood in neighboring communities, and now Little Sioux is going forward in the work of the church.

district presidency associated with Apostle R. S. Budd and missionary Lee Quick, were chosen to preside. Carl Wheeler was selected to act as secretary and treasurer; Emma Jackson, music director, and Mrs. Mary Hall had charge of the recreational department. After the installation of these officers, a splendid program was rendered by members of the different groups of the district. Prominent among the numbers was a musical selection by Brother Carl Wheeler's family, an orchestra of six pieces; the youngest player, nine years old, accompanied at the piano. W. H. Mannering, assisted by the women of his group, sang "Reunion Bound" which he composed on the way to the gathering. This group came from Breckenridge.

Reunion prayer service was held each morning at eight-thirty, also a young peoples' prayer meeting. The primaries were entertained by Sisters Mary Hall and J. A. Robinson.

Brother Budd arrived Monday and occupied the stand that evening. He also held a round-table discussion or lecture each afternoon at two-thirty. Brother B. A. Howard, of Oklahoma, taught a class at nine-thirty in the morning. On several occasions his two young daughters contributed vocal numbers.

Saints came from San Antonio, Houston, Dallas, Oklahoma City, Tuff, Medina City, Kerrville, Breckenridge, Paintrock, and Alamo.

All are indebted to Carl Wheeler and Clyde Elem for making it possible to hold a reunion. Assisted by Brother Wheeler's boys, Brother Joe Calahan and others, they worked unceasingly getting cedar for posts both for fencing the ground and for pillars for the tabernacle. The land was donated by Sister Virginia Hay. Elder and Sister J. A. Robinson went up and camped on the grounds nearly a week in advance of the reunion, rendering all the help they could in clearing the grounds, etc. When the reunion began, the tabernacle was only about two-thirds covered, due to a lack of funds, but in a few days enough had been collected to finish it. Water was piped to the grounds from Mr. Frank Langford's well. The tabernacle was electrically lighted.

A wonderful spirit was felt throughout the meetings. The sermons were most helpful. Then the long drought was broken by a splendid rain. This was accompanied by wind which blew down some of the tents, compelling the occupants to take refuge in the church. Everyone was in good spirits, however, thankful for the long-needed downpour.

On the last Sunday the Lord's Supper was characterized by a splendid spirit. An afternoon business session was devoted to the election of district officers: President, G. R. Kuykendall; counselors, J. A. Robinson and E. L. Henson; secretary-treasurer, Fantley Hall; music director, Emma Jackson; supervisor of religious education, Mary Hall. The Saints voted to hold another reunion at Bandera next summer.

Some of the men furnished goats for a barbecue, and the last Sunday dinner was served on the ground to all who wished to remain. The closing sermon was preached by G. R. Kuykendall.

Six candidates were baptized by Elders J. A. Robinson and Carl Wheeler Saturday evening.

Holden Stake

Blue Springs, Missouri

These Saints were happy to renew their covenant, the first Sunday in July. In the afternoon, Pastor J. T. Smith called a meeting of the young people, at which time they meet their former leader, C. A. Joice, who was again put in charge of the young people. In the evening, Elder R. J. Stark preached, choosing for his subject "The Hope of the Gospel."

On the second Sunday of the month, George M. Shippy occupied the pulpit, speaking on "Fear God and Obey His Commandments." In the evening Elder C. A. Joice was the speaker, his subject being "All Truth."

Thursday evening, July 12, the young people gathered at the home of their pastor, for a social time. Sixty-five were present.

On the following Sunday morning Elder Gerald G. Phillips preached. The theme of his sermon was "Keep Unbroken Thy Marriage Covenant." At three o'clock, the same day, a few of the Saints and friends gathered at the Second Church, Independence, where six baptisms were performed. The candidates were two men, Jake Thatcher and Rex Hershman, of Blue Springs, and Eunice Willard and her three daughters, Geneva, Evelyn and Joyce, of Oak Grove. Elders C. A. Joice and R. J. Stark officiated at this ordinance. The confirmation took place in the evening, J. T. Smith, R. J. Stark, and C. A. Joice officiating. A sermon followed the ordinations, "The Promise Is Unto All Who Will Obey," by J. T. Smith.

The following Sunday morning, a special number was sung by the choir, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." Elder J. T. Smith was the speaker, his subject "In God's Way, Not Man's Way Shall We Inherit the Promised Land." As the scheduled speaker for the evening service was unable to be present, the pastor again occupied the pulpit, choosing for his theme "The Law of the Gospel."

A veteran missionary, S. S. Smith, was present for the morning and evening services July 29. The subjects of his sermons were "A World-Wide Evangel," and "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," with which he used a chart. At this time, a trio, C. A. Joice, and two nonmembers, played a special number on band instruments.

The Wednesday evening prayer services are well attended. The infant of Sister Oscar Story was taken away by death. Sister Story has been ill, but is now improving.

Frances Williamson is much better, and her father's health is improving slowly. Robert and Ethel Stark's little girl is very sick.

Keeps Missionary Work Going in Kentucky and Tennessee

Sees Need for a Trained and Consecrated Ministry

We just closed a ten-day meeting near Hickman, Kentucky, a new place for the gospel to be preached. I began the services under rather unfavorable conditions notwithstanding the fact that I had access to a community church building. Prejudice ran high, but with the Lord's help I was able, in the end, to overcome that.

On the first night about fifty attended, but this number grew until on the closing evening there were approximately two hundred and fifty there. Interest increased, and at the close I baptized a fine young man and two young girls. These girls were sisters, and I baptized their father and mother two years ago.

At the close of the services the people, without solicitation, responded nicely to my needs, and insisted that I return soon to hold another series.

We arrived at the district reunion which opened July 21, and found everything in good condition. Elder J. O. Dutton, who has attended our reunions for the past seven years, arrived and with him came Elder John R. Grice. These two work together like brothers and contributed much to our gathering, which was one of the best reunions we have ever held. The Saints came from far and near, and seemed to be lifted up in spirit.

I am packing my traveling bag to leave home for another missionary journey, and have plans of labor for the remainder of the year. There are more calls for the preached word than I can possibly fill, and I hope to see the time come very soon when the church can send out more men under conference appointment, men who have the means to serve and the ability to present the glorious gospel to a dying world with such power that it will draw many to it.

As I work I am led to see the great need for educated and trained men in the missionary field. I wish that I was completely qualified to meet the demands of the age. I have been occupying in the office of elder for about two years, and since we have no missionaries in this district and I see the work suffering for missionary efforts, I have given the most of this two years to district missionary work. I have baptized thirty-two souls into the church and have endeavored to help in various ways to forward Christ's cause. The Lord has wonderfully blessed me, but I realize that these blessings do not extend beyond my ability. If I had been better qualified I could have been blessed far beyond that which I have received. After two years of this kind of labor, I better understand Paul's admonition, "Study to show thyself approved," and Christ's "Learn of me." Through Joseph Smith came the divine injunction, "Study all good books."

I have been listening to Brothers Grice and Dutton deliver a series of reunion lectures. How beautiful their words and how easy to understand! I believe the priesthood of this district were inspired at hearing these men. I believe they have been led to see that the harvest is indeed great and qualified laborers are very few. Why not pray for more and better qualified laborers to be sent into the field? I hope and pray that the local men will help to uphold the work till conditions adjust themselves so that the church can send forth more men to lead this people to Zion.

I was reared in the church and all my life have believed its teachings. But while attending the 1934 General Conference I became more confirmed than ever to the church and am one hundred percent for its program. I fully believe its message, and want to do what little I can to hold up the banner of Christ until more able workers can relieve me.

O. S. CALDWELL.

Vancleave, Mississippi

Made Happy by Baptism of New Members

Vancleave Saints rejoiced because of the impressive services held July 29. Pastor A. N. Barner, of the Escatawpa Branch, was present. At the eleven o'clock hour, Brother A. G. Miller made an opportunity for anyone desiring to unite with Christ and his church to step forward. While the choir sang "God Is Marching His Army" Brother Scott Goff, his son, Floyd, and two daughters, Verla and Aarona, requested baptism. The father of another home, Ruble Moe, also wished to become a member of the church.

The baptismal ceremony was very impressive. The entire evening service was devoted to the confirmation service. A. N. Barnes gave the instructive talk. A. G. Miller gave the charge and covenant to the new members. Those officiating in the confirmation were A. N. Barnes, A. G. Miller, and W. C. Yocum.

A mission is conducted at Biloxi, Mississippi, where A. G. Miller meets once a month with these Saints. He meets with the Gautia members every third Sunday. Five candidates were baptized there August 12.

A membership of one hundred and twelve in Vancleave enjoy the five class periods during the week, and eight classes on Sunday.

God's Investment

The people of the church are God's investment. He has invested in us the power to become Sons of God, and besides investing it in us, He has invested in us to demonstrate to other people that we are the Sons of God. Therefore he says, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father in heaven."—Extract from a sermon by D. A. Oakman.

Independence

The appointment of Mrs. W. J. Burton as leader of women in Independence was announced by President Frederick M. Smith at the meeting of that department the afternoon of August 6. Mrs. Burton takes the place of Mrs. C. C. Koehler whose resignation has been accepted by the First Presidency. Mrs. Koehler gave the women of Independence more than a year of active and helpful leadership.

President Smith was also the speaker at the women's meeting, inspiring them with a new vision of the scope and significance of their work.

The women are now rounding out a program of activities for fall and winter months. They sincerely believe that there should be no idle in Zion. Mrs. J. S. Kelley is the organization secretary, and a council composed of the heads of the Campus, Harvest Home Festival, Commodity Shop, class work, and friendly visiting committees, will assist the officer in charge.

President Elbert A. Smith's theme Sunday evening at the Campus was "Eternal Judgment." A large crowd heard his splendid sermon.

And Sunday, Brother Anway began rehearsals with neighboring groups of singers, which he will continue to do until the next general rehearsal in the Stone Church on September 9. In the afternoon he met at Stewartville with the local choir, together with singers from Maple Grove, Cameron, Oakdale, Kingston, and Hamilton, Missouri, for a three-hour practice. That evening he directed Saint Joseph singers in another spirited rehearsal. He found both choirs enthusiastic, and their response splendid. The choir sang three numbers and Joseph Frick sang a solo, after which one of the local elders gave a talk on the value and place of music in the church. ## Wray, Colorado

Priesthood Meeting Takes First Place in Activities

Wray Branch, in Eastern Colorado, has been progressing under the leadership of Branch President H. A. Tabor. Considering the circumstances of some of the members who are scattered at a considerable distance from the church, the Sunday services are well attended.

Important among the outstanding events of the past months was the priesthood meeting held July 13, 14, and 15. The sessions were presided over by Glaude A. Smith and conducted by President F. M. McDowell. The priesthood were especially invited to attend all services, and other members were welcome at the Sunday meetings.

Almost every priesthood member was present for the first session Friday evening. On Saturday personal interviews were held with the men, twenty minutes being allotted to each minister. Saturday evening there was another service for the men.

The Sunday services started at eight o'clock with a priesthood prayer meeting. Church school at ten was followed by an inspiring sermon given in the form of a charge to the priesthood and their wives by President McDowell. A basket dinner was served in the basement at noon.

At two o'clock all went to the river only a few blocks away, where six candidates were baptized, three from Yuma, two from Otis, and one from Holyoke. This service was in charge of Brother Reno Ault, of Otis. Glaude A. Smith gave the charge and talk after the confirmation at the church.

Again Sunday evening President McDowell spoke to a full house. His sermons were very helpful, and everyone felt new enthusiasm and courage in the advancement of Christ's cause as a result of his visit.

The music was in charge of Sister Wilma Truman, assisted by her father Loren Truman, and there were several special numbers. Two women from Lamar sang a duet number Sunday afternoon.

Visitors came from Lamar, Nebraska, Goodland, Kansas; Yuma, Brush, Otis and Genoa, Colorado.

O. W. Okerlind Visits Saskatoon

Receives Enthusiastic Welcome

Although Brother O. W. Okerlind has spent seven years in Southern Saskatchewan, he visited Saskatoon for the first time July 20. He was delighted to see green fields and productive gardens after having come through a five-year period of drouth in the southern part of the province.

The Saints of Saskatoon were notified of the coming of Brother Okerlind, and a large crowd gathered for services, July 22. Following church school, Brother Okerlind preached a sermon especially for the young people. Sister Boland sang a solo, "Nearer My God To Thee," and the choir sang "Onward." At two o'clock, little Russel Beckman and Louis Cruce were baptized by Brother Alvin Beckman, in the Saskatchewan River, being confirmed in the following service by Brothers Beckman and Henry Piedt. A quartet, composed of Sister Boland, Audrey Wough, Harry Newfield, and Bert Lehman sang "There's a Wideness in God's Mercy." Another number, "Light of Life," was sung by the choir, Miss Helen Kent singing the obligato. Brother Okerlind was again the speaker at this service. In the evening, the quartet sang "O Love That Will Not Let Me Go," and the choir, augmented by visiting saints, sang "He Waits for Thee," after which Brother Okerlind discoursed on the gospel story.

After some persuasion, Brother Okerlind consented to speak again Monday evening in the city, going out to Floral for Tuesday evening's service. The members are looking forward to seeing and hearing him again in the autumn.

Apostle J. F. Curtis paid a flying visit to Saskatoon, the same week, being apparently quite recovered from his accident.

The young people are enjoying a sunrise prayer service fortnightly.

Dayton, Ohio

Move Forward in Local Endeavor

Under the leadership of the church school director, a picnic was held on Memorial Day. About seventy-five Saints were present, and a good time was the order of the day.

Elder Kirkendall was the guest speaker July 14, at 9:30 a. m. His subject was "Creation." A number of non-members were present and all spoke of the capable manner in which Brother Kirkendall handled his theme. At the church school hour the above speaker was in charge of the round-table discussion. A number of good questions were asked. Dinner was served in the basement of the church.

At 2:30 p. m. Brother Kirkendall spoke again. The day proved to be profitable to all who were present.

The church was the scene of a pretty wedding July 21, when Betty Joqua and Deacon Albert Griffin were united in marriage by the pastor, Floyd Rockwell. This young couple has the best wishes of the congregation.

Elder Helm, of Kansas City, was the speaker at a recent Sunday, occupying both the morning and evening hour. Special numbers were furnished by Sister Helm and Brother and Sister Ulrich.

A number of young people, from St. Marys, Ohio, visited this branch and after the services, a picnic was enjoyed at Eastwood Park.

Brother B. J. Reeves baptized one of his fellow workers, Brother Vaughn. Missionary work is progressing slowly.

Shidler, Oklahoma

Saints Take Part in Union Services

When the heat became intense this summer, four of the ministers of Shidler decided to hold open-air services, and secured the permission of Mr. Weaver to use his airdome each Sunday evening. Several musicians volunteered their services.

The Presbyterian minister preached July 8, the Christian minister, July 15, Elder E. E. Workman July 22, and the Methodist preacher, July 29. It was intended to alternate in this manner until cooler weather returned. But the speaker for August 5 was absent, and by request Elder Workman delivered the sermon. He addressed an audience of about two hundred people, and was given good attention. Many favorable comments of his effort were heard. The first night he spoke on "Faith," the second on "Repentance."

A small daughter of Brother and Sister Woodman was baptized August 5, by Brother Workman.

VAN DRAN.—Catheryn Comely Van Dran was born in Montrose, Iowa, June 11, 1861, and departed this life, July 30, 1934, at the age of seventy-three years. June 7, 1874, she united with the church, being baptized by John H. Lake. She was united in marriage to George W. Van Dran, at Plano, Illinois, December 21, 1882, by the Reverend Vickery. To this union three children were born, Mr. Louis Van Dran, of Collins, Iowa; Mr. George Van Dran, of Clinton, Iowa, and Mrs. Grace Reese, of Independence, Missouri. She also leaves to mourn one brother, William Comley, of Plano, Illinois; a stepson, Mr. Will Van Dran, of Kewanee, Illinois, besides other relatives and many friends. She came to Independence in 1905, upon the death of her sister, Mrs. Frank Crum. She made her home in Independence, from that time on, taking her sister's five children into her home and became their mother. Such service has always been characteristic of her life, giving herself in service for others. Always a frail little lady, yet a great source of strength and courage emanated from her to her friends and neighbors. Her husband preceded her in death three years ago, May 25, 1931. Funeral services were held in the Stone Church, Elder Amos Chase, in charge, Elder John F. Sheehy preaching the sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

KINDER.—Martha Ann Pottorff was born May 23, 1860, in Ringgold County, Iowa. She was married to Hibbert Kinder, July 15, 1877, in Ringgold County. Was baptized a member of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints' Church November 17, 1878, in Lone Rock, Missouri, Branch. They moved to Kingman County, Kansas, in 1883, and later to Saint Joseph in 1889, where they resided until her death July 24, 1934. Twelve children were born to this union, and five survive her, three daughters, Mrs. Walter Boschen, Mrs. R. A. Haden and Mrs. C. E. Haden, and two sons, Forrest and Curzon, all of Saint Joseph. Besides her husband and children, she is survived by six grandchildren and a host of friends. Funeral services were held from First Church, Elder Ward A. Hougas officiating, assisted by Bishop H. L. Livingston. Burial was in Memorial Park Cemetery.

STROH.—William Yvot Stroh was born March 23, 1883, at Coldwater County, Michigan. He was the son of the late Elder Samuel Stroh, bishop's agent, who preceded him in death October 3, 1920, and Mrs. Alta Corless Stroh, the present publicity agent of Coldwater Branch. At the age of eight years he was baptized into the church, walking three miles to perform that duty. A diligent and obedient lad, he grew to young manhood in the home community, graduating from Coldwater High School with honors. He entered Michigan State University, and graduated from that institution, receiving a degree of Chemical Engineer. He was united in marriage to Catherine Swartz, at Louisville, Kentucky, and to this union was born one son, Samuel, who survives. Brother Stroh invented a process for hardening steel, employing three men to guard his office during the time of perfecting the process and securing his right from the government. He organized the Stroh Steel Hardening Process Company, in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The commercial and scientific worth of his superior process is well recognized. Three years ago an insidious encroachment of sclerosis of the liver began sapping his strength. He bore its increasing discomforts with fortitude, often receiving blessings through the ordinances of the gospel. June 7, 1934, the scene closed, and he passed into the quiet of the just, with faith of living again. Funeral rites were conducted from Guseiharts Funeral Home, in Pittsburgh, Elder E. B. Hull, preaching the sermon. Saints attended in a body, others coming from Angola, Indiana; Detroit, Michigan; Youngstown, Ohio; Louisville, Kentucky; Altoona, Pennsylvania, and Rochester, New York. The committal service occurred in the Lake View Cemetery, Quincy, Michigan. Elder S. W. L. Scott, officiating. Early day friends and associate brothers and sisters of the church assembled and paid respect. Brother Stroh leaves in the shadow of sorrow, at his departure, the devoted, affectionate, and faithful members of his immediate family, wife, Catherine; son, Samuel; mother, Mrs. Alta Corless Stroh, and sister, Mrs. Steven Gallagher; also a wide circle of relatives and friends, who cherish the memory of one so kindly considerate, generous, and noble.

The Pigeonhole

Our Cover Picture

The Church at Colorado Springs

Our cover picture this week is from a photograph taken by Vance Eastwood on a visit there. The church is located at 513 North Prospect Street, and has about 160 members. J. E. Ebeling has been pastor for fourteen years and is now assisted by J. D. Curtis. Others prominent in branch work are Mrs. E. E. Conway, director of the church school, and leader of the women's department; and Floyd Engstrom, leader of the young people.

The city has a population of 41,370 and is located at the foot of the famous Pike's Peak. A correspondent writes:

"It is noted for its mild winters, cool summers, and an abundance of sunshine, making it an ideal city for the health seeker. As a vacation land it is ideal. For those who enjoy riding or hiking the mountains and foothills abound in interesting trails. Delightful picnic spots are many as are the lakes for those who enjoy boating and swimming. The mountain streams and lakes afford the fisherman . . ."

But we must discontinue reading this lovely description. We cannot get away from our job, and if we read any more it will make us unhappy.

The Eastern Colorado district owns a reunion ground here nine acres in extent. The reunion is being held there August 16 to 26.

■ Pigeon's Ideas on Money

"The love of money," said the Pigeon today, "may be the root of all evil, as the Scriptures say. I won't argue against it. But I'd like to add some observations of my own.

"Poor people can spend just as much time coveting it as the rich do, perhaps more.

"There is an inconsistency in the natures of many of us that makes us decry wealth in the prayer meetings. But when we reach the street we go trotting along in the trail of someone who has made money, seeking to court his favor.

"It will take money to pay the church debt. Until we can establish a zionic economic system of our own, it will take money to erect buildings, to acquire lands, to provide comfort, to pay for education, to gain culture, to travel, to support missionaries, to heat the church, to clothe the minister, and to carry on the work of the Kingdom. When we do get Zion we may find some satisfactory substitute for it. Until that time, we need money, the church needs money, and it takes money to carry on all the affairs of life.

"I get tired of hearing people say 'mere money' when they want it more than anything else in the world.

"An empty pocketbook is no sign of a flawless character. A carefully saved reserve is no sure indication of dishonesty.

"A lazy man will always be poor. Loafing on his cracker box, he will try to make his condition seem virtuous if he can.

"More thrift, earning capacity, and devotion are needed in the church. Society has enough liabilities. We need more people who are an economic asset."

"This Ministry"

IV.—THESE THREE LOOK TO US

The mother of a large family of boys said to me; "If the members of the priesthood realized how closely they are watched by young people, some of them would be more careful of their conduct." As a boy I was fortunate. Though few of our ministers visited the part of the country where we lived, those who did come with few exceptions were very exemplary men of God. They merited my confidence, they commanded it, they held it. They were such men as Joseph R. Lambert, Alexander H. Smith, the venerable W. W. Whiting, and the then youthful C. J. Hunt.

These men left in me a desire to be that kind of man when I grew up. They gave me a profound respect for the priesthood and a conviction that I should like to be such a minister. They were the finest sort of recruiting officers for the ranks of the ministry. To me they represented God, the priesthood, the church. They left me believing in God, respecting the ministry, revering the church.

Everywhere in all branches there are children and young people watching our ordained men. Some watch with critical eyes; they must be won. Some watch with the utmost confidence; they must be held. Upon all ordained men, elders, priests, teachers, deacons, apostles, rests the same responsibility that rested upon the early missionaries who came into my life and set me an example that left its permanent influence.

Then there are those of middle age: men and women who now bear the burdens and toils and sorrows and temptations of life. They look to us for a sustaining example of faith and rectitude. We must not go to them in any spirit of scepticism, voicing doubts and fears. They have enough of that to meet in their daily contact with the world. They expect us to come to them with something of the spirit of the prophet, making them feel that God is and that he is with his people.

These men and women of middle age do not need that we should come to them in pessimistic spirit and in discouragement, filling them with forbodings concerning the church and its future. They get enough of that in the current gossip of the neighborhood. They need that the ordained men shall come to them as Paul did, who in the midst of calamities and discouragements and distressing conditions in the church and in the world, stood up to say to his brethren, "If God be for us who can be against us? As for me, I press forward!"

For the sake of these men and women who toil and suffer and sorrow and are tempted the ordained men need to be strong, and wise, and courageous, and clean, and kind. God knows we cannot always help even our best friends when they are in distress, because of our limitations, and because of those conditions that hinder us; but the hindrance should not lie within ourselves or be on account of our spiritual poverty or our lack of the will to help them.

Finally there are the very aged. They are done with the toils of life and with the perplexities of church administration and crave peace. One of the saddest things that I ever saw was when certain men went into our church homes for the aged and into private homes where there were very old people and distressed them with tales of church difficulties local and general. Those aged ones were past the time when they could analyze those vexing problems and meet with strength the conditions reported to them. Those problems should not have been thrown into their lap to embitter their last few years. They needed the ministry of cheer and hope.

Especially does it seem to me that those venerable men, some of whom remain, while others have passed on,—those men who gave long years of unstinted service to the church, sparing neither mind nor body nor pocketbook—especially does it seem to me that those men look to the ordained men of today to carry on the work in which they invested their all. Such men of the past as Brother Joseph, Bishop E. L. Kelley, J. M. Terry, W. A. McDowell, look to us to carry forward the institution and the work in which they made such a notable investment.

These three look to the ministry of today: The young, the middle-aged, the very old. Under their steady scrutiny can we fail, or falter, or draw back?

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The Use of Riches

A strong point in Latter Day Saint thinking has always been our attitude toward wealth and our responsibility in the handling of property. We have always believed with the psalmist, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." We have believed that men hold property only as a stewardship, and that tithes should be paid on it, that possession of any property carries with it the moral obligation of using it not only for one's own satisfaction, but also for the benefit of his fellow men.

Along this philosophy has developed an attitude that is in some respects unfortunate. It is an attitude of suspicion and distrust towards those who have money or property. It has helped to keep many of our people from settling down anywhere and from accumulating any considerable amounts of property. It has encouraged a spirit of nomadism which has led people to move from place to place without conserving their gains for personal benefit or for the use of the church. It has put wealthy men, so to speak, "on the spot," making them objects of criticism.

There is a passage in the Doctrine and Covenants which, unfortunately, has not been listed in the concordance, but which very definitely should be there in order that more of our people could be acquainted with it.

"Firstly, the rich and the learned, the wise and the noble; and after that cometh the day of my power; then shall the poor, the lame, and the blind, and the deaf, come in unto the marriage of the Lamb, and partake of the supper of the Lord, prepared for the great day to come."—Doctrine and Covenants, 58: 3.

It has been our misfortune and perhaps the fault of our teaching that those who have more earnestly desired Zion have been the poor and the unfortunate. These people who should come second have come first, and neither they nor the church have been able to supply the physical equipment necessary to provide for their needs.

There are certain important implications which grow out of this text. We should not teach that it is sinful to own property or to work for it. We should not teach that it is more righteous to be poor than to be able to take care of one's self and family. From a practical viewpoint, one's first obligation to society is to be able to take care of one's self and his family.

It looks like a mistake to preach from our pulpit and teach in our classes that it is wrong to work for property and money. Obviously much of the present distress of the church is caused by a lack of money and by a lack of property that is free from encumbrances. It is not an advantage to own heavily mortgaged property, and it may be a disadvantage. The building of Zion will require righteousness and character. It requires people more than all else, but the people will continue to be embarrassed and handicapped and at the mercy of the world until they learn the importance of providing money for property for their own support and for the work of the church.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

ONE of our younger district presidents in sending in a recent report made some pertinent remarks relative to preparing for Zion which we quote with considerable pleasure:

"Attached you will find my quarterly report for the Mobile District. I feel that during the past six months we have made definite progress toward our ultimate goal, Zion. Though we are far removed from the center place, we are making an effort to zionize our present surroundings, especially as it relates to our attitudes toward each other and our heavenly Father. We hope to be ready to take our place in the great zionic structure and are preparing for it by growing into zionic people. I not only have faith that Zion shall be, but I believe that it is slowly but surely becoming a reality. Here as elsewhere we are handicapped because of economic conditions and are prevented from doing lots of things for the cause that we would like to do, but on the other hand we are led to do many things that we would not otherwise do, therefore it might be a blessing in disguise."

We are always glad to know that the Saints are working with Zion in view, and it is encouraging to hear this district president express the belief that we are surely, though perhaps slowly, moving toward the conditions that will make Zion possible.

I RECENTLY had occasion to write Brother John Stebel of Poland congratulating him on the success he is making in learning to write English. In reply to this he states:

"Yes, it is quite natural that an appointee of this church must know and use the official language of the church. I believe that by using the English language I can profit more in church work by reading the Herald and other literature and give more intelligent service to the church. I shall continue to study English so that I may be able to speak and write perfectly."

It is interesting to see this foreign brother determined to be able to write and speak English perfectly. In this ambition I am fearful that he has outdone some of our own English-speaking brethren.

He writes of having made a translation into the Polish of A. B. Phillips tract on "Latter Day Saints and What they Believe" and he feels that this will aid him in his work.

As an item of interest he adds that on the ninth of August he expects to go to Czecho-Slovakia for a four weeks' stay in an effort to carry the gospel to the people of Czecho-Slovakia. We shall wait news of his attempt with a great deal of interest.

J. F. Curtis, writing from Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, states that Brother George W. Thorburn has been "laid up" for a month with serious heart trouble. We know Brother Thorburn's many friends will be concerned about his welfare and will pray for his complete recovery.

More About "Without Purse or Scrip"

A SHORT TIME AGO an editorial appeared in the Herald entitled "Without Purse or Scrip." This aroused considerable discussion on one side and the other. Brother Elbert Smith came into the office and commented that our men do go out without money, depending upon the people of the church to receive and care for them as they should. In some cases, however, the people do not fulfill their part of the obligation and if the servant of the church does not wish to starve, he sometimes has to call upon the bishop for help. If there is any breakdown in the whole commandment, it is not the fault of the ministry. They are not obligated to starve in case that the people are not doing their duty and taking care of them. One member of the Quorum of Twelve has not called upon the bishop for financial assistance since 1930. Other members of the same quorum have likewise gone for a long time without asking for help. This is also true of a number of other men who travel in the service of the church. The only thing that seems to be necessary now for obedience to this command is that the people shall see to it when the missionaries visit them that their wants are cared for. Thus, it will be possible for them to carry on their ministry.

THE MAIN POINT of the whole situation is that the members shall love the church and be interested enough in its work to provide the means for missionaries to go out. The services of a missionary cannot be had for nothing. Somebody has to pay the expenses, if not through the bishop then through local people who meet the missionary. And sometimes the missionary must pay his expenses out of what he has made at other work. We believe that it is wrong to ask a missionary to go into his savings and his capital to meet expenses that should be paid by those whom he serves in the name of religion.

BROTHER S. A. BURGESS, Church Historian, called to give us some historical light on the conditions that existed in earlier days. The "circuit rider"—an itinerant minister who followed a schedule to bring the ministry of the church to sparsely settled and widely scattered communities—met the people in a single locality only once in several weeks. He was welcomed gladly and with a good many simple and practical gifts often home-made: food, clothing and other things. While he rarely had much money, he met a hospitable welcome everywhere and seldom lacked any real necessity. People stocked their homes bountifully in those days with home-cured hams, barrels of apples, serviceable cloth and other things. Something could always be spared for the minister. Now all that is changed. People live in kitchenette apartments where the wife has to leave the kitchen if the husband wants to enter it because it is too small. A spare bedroom is a thing unknown. There is no pantry; they buy ten cent's worth of hamburger for the next meal, and if the store is closed they have to eat at a restaurant or go hungry. Nothing is stored and there is nothing to spare for the minister or for anybody else.

The circuit-riding type of ministry is impossible today. Conditions have greatly changed in a hundred years, and even in less than that time. If a missionary cannot be maintained among friends and members of the church, how is he expected to fare any better among strangers and unbelievers? It would never occur to them that they were expected to care for him. He would be in a sorry plight depending on their charity.

SOME YEARS ago a minister of the church was called by a congregation to give a week's series of talks. He was housed and fed sufficiently but not luxuriously during his stay. He had traveled several hundred miles to perform this service and had to return by the same route. At the close of the last service a local officer made a short and indifferent talk about a collection that was to be taken to pay the expenses of the minister. They succeeded eventually in turning the sum of forty-three cents over to him, evidently thinking it was a generous gift.

PERMISSION to solicit funds for personal support once developed that great nuisance, the "begging sermon." Some ministers could be most eloquent when they were pleading their own poverty and need. General Conference Resolutions 320 and 321 were enacted to bring the soliciting and collecting of funds under some system of orderly control. Sending men out without support would be against the spirit of those resolutions.

This discussion has brought much interesting comment that has thrown light on the question from different angles. Our interest, however, is not chiefly academic, but practical. Missionaries must be sent out if the church is to grow and fulfill its destiny. Our attitude must be strongly missionary if we are to maintain our spiritual vitality. It is true that no missionary program can succeed which is motivated solely by that selfish purpose. Our main concern must be to tell the story of the gospel to other people, and to bring them to Christ.

How Should My Social and Recreational Activities Differ From Those of the World?

By Florence and Arthur Gordon

FIFTY YEARS AGO this question was not the problem it is today. Much time was consumed in those days in performing the labors of earning a living. Six days, and long ones, were occupied in laborious work. On Sunday, services were longer, and walking or riding to and from church practically consumed the remainder of the time and the excess energies of the people. The eight hour day, five days each week, is a fine innovation, but the problem closely connected with it is, how to use wisely the other eight hours per day, the vacations, holidays, week-ends, and the time during which we are not sleeping.

The church recognized the fact that every one needed social and recreational activities when, a few years ago, it organized a department specifically to fill this need. Young people especially, who have an abundant supply of spontaneity, enthusiasm, love of adventure, and ideas, must be supplied with activities which will form the right outlet for their energies. These activities unless controlled and directed, will mean the downfall and destruction of people.

Fortunate indeed are the branches in which there are leaders who can wisely direct and make interesting, sufficient social life for their people so that they will not have to go to the world, as we sometimes hear folks say, to find their pleasure. But because our branches cannot, or do not, supply enough social and recreational activities for their members, it seems that a choice of activities offered by the world is our problem. We are told that we must be in the world, but not of the world. Applying this statement to our subject, it seems that the activities of a social and recreational nature in which we participate with those of the world must be chosen with the idea constantly in mind, that we, as Latter Day Saints are striving to build Zion. To keep in mind this thought, each of us must ask himself frequently, before deciding whether or not he shall attend a certain movie, read this book, listen to that radio program, etc., will it help him to be a better member of this zion society, which we as Latter Day Saints are striving to build? A zion society is a society of right relationships. It is a society, engaged in right activities, under conditions of right social relations, the result, is the fulfillment of the purposes for which we were created. Each person must consider something like this:

MY ACTIVITIES should be governed by the principles of the gospel. They should be planned so as to produce a definite degree of development towards our ideals. My activities should be different from those of the world, because I desire different results. To determine how they should differ, I must first diagnose the activities of the world, by the results which they have produced. What do I see? Chaos. I see, destructive competition, discord, disunion, vexed minds, hate, misery, destruction by war, destruction by famine in a world of plenty, inequality of opportunity to develop, inequality in all things, insecurity of life and possessions, disease and suffering of all descriptions. I can deduce from these effects, that the world is governing its social activities by the laws which produce them.

Laws of destruction, lived, bring about destruction. The more abundantly these laws are lived, the more abundant is the destruction. In opposition to them are the laws of life. The more abundantly we live the laws of life, the more abundant life we have. The ideal of life is, life immortal, and eternal, in the celestial kingdom.

AS A LATTER DAY SAINT, I should desire the opposite effects from my activities, and to realize them, I must govern my activities by opposite laws. In choosing my social and recreational activities, I should have in mind the social ideals of the church, and ask myself the question: Will these activities produce the social effects which God and the church purpose and desire, and which I covenanted to help establish, when I covenanted to govern my life's activities by His laws?

What are the ideals which should motivate and determine the nature of my social and recreational activities? What are the social ideals of my church? They are founded upon the basic principle of love of God and our neighbor. When these ideals are realized, love is demonstrated. Some of them are: unity of understanding and purpose, equality of opportunity for development, equality in temporal affairs, cooperation, peace, security of life and property, enjoyment of the works of our creation, and a just standard of values. The fruits of the Spirit or the gospel must be produced in the lives of the people, the people properly organized, assembled, and functioning, to realize these ideals. My activities should differ from those of the world in that they harmonize with the will of God, glorifying his name, and his intelligence, in creating me.

MY RECREATIONAL ACTIVITIES should not merely be pastimes. The right to engage in recreational activities should be for those who have expended their creative energies and powers in useful, creative work, and therefore need to be re-creative, re-invigorated, created anew, or re-animated. In contrast to the world, I should not professionalize my recreational activities. I should not make them the major issue of my life, nor should they consume the major portion of my time. When engaged in with others, my motives should be, the mutual development of our physical, mental, and spiritual powers. Many of the world's activities are mutually destructive. Ours should be mutually constructive.

Assuming, that as an active member of God's church, I am striving to build Zion, I must assume the attitude of the church toward this phase of my life, and as Brother Floyd McDowell has taught us, "I must spiritualize my every activity." How can I spiritualize my so-called pleasure activities? The answer is: by receiving the sanction of the Holy Spirit on them, through prayer. I believe this spiritualizing of every activity is the principal difference between the social and recreational activities, which a Latter Day Saint would choose, and the choices made by those who have not the ideals of this church to live and work for.

Our church, I believe, teaches us that we are here for the express purpose of developing to the utmost every power within us. Therefore if listening to a certain radio program, reading a new book, or attending tonight's movies, tends to cause me to be more spiritual, stronger physically, or develops me mentally, then, I believe, I can be rightfully engaged therein, presuming of course, that I am honest with myself, that the ideals of the church are paramount to all others in making my decisions, and that I could not better use my time, more wisely in some other selected channel.

I BELIEVE the last session of General Conference has definitely discouraged two forms of social activity, as not tending to spirituality. I refer to dancing and card playing. I will admit that dancing will promote physical development under proper conditions, and that card playing does exercise the brain, but, in using my time over which I am to be a wise steward, I am not developing the

Educational Planning

By A. R. Gilbert

Director, Student Personnel, Graceland College

"What do you want to accomplish through education?" How different this question is from the question usually asked of a prospective college student some years ago—"What course do you want to take?"

Individualizing of services is the outstanding characteristic in college trends today. Having just completed a long period of standardization schools are now beginning to unstandardize. Painstaking research in the development of tests and techniques for measuring accomplishment and setting up standard goals has at the same time served to accentuate the fact that individual variation to a marked degree is the outstanding characteristic to be found among college students. In a single class, receiving instruction under the same teacher, may commonly be found students ranging in ability from very poor to near genius. From the doors of a single college may proceed both morons and intellectual giants. It has been a long road from the early individual "lesson saying" to standardized class methods. The pendulum has already started swinging back toward a recognition of the individual as a unit in the educational process. Meeting individual needs in mass instruction is the problem of the moment.

And hence the question, "What do you want to accomplish through education" rather than, "What course do you want to take?" Educational planning in terms of individual needs is particularly important in a junior college of a cosmopolitan nature. Graceland is a typical college in this class. Students entering the "Old West Door" each year usually come from approximately thirty different states and several foreign countries. They come not only with varied abilities and experiences but also with varied purposes, looking toward different goals and objectives. Large numbers go each year to other institutions of higher learning—Columbia University, the University of Chicago, Iowa, Michigan, Colorado, California, and others. These students will register in various curricula in which definite educational experiences are demanded by each of the universities concerned. Obviously, mass standard methods will not do for the junior college. Graceland must plan individually with each of her students.

Educational planning has valuable by-products for the student. An adviser appointed for a freshman student sits down with him for mutual consideration during the registration period and asks, "What are your educational plans?" That student must immediately face the future with vision and insight. He is forced into a consideration of purposes, motives, and values. He must look forward not only one day, one month, or one year, but must project himself into what he purposes to become three, four, or six years from now.

Take the case of student A, who approached his adviser with the statement, "I want to take a teacher's course." To the question "Why" the student gave quite satisfactory replies. Further questioning and discussion brought out that he desired to teach mathematics and physics in a high school. He also had an interest in coaching athletic sports. Two years collegiate preparation could be taken, after which it would be necessary to work before taking the last two years. Skills had already been developed through which as much money could be earned as might be expected from teaching in a grade school. Hence, a plan was formulated designed to fill in certain personal gaps for living a well balanced life while carrying the student along toward qualification for secondary school teaching in the areas indicated. Two years would be utilized in study in Graceland, the student would then work two years at his trade, and finish with two years at the University of Wisconsin. Through the formulation of a definite plan, every unit of energy was made to contribute toward the desired ends, incidental needs were met, and the student had something definite to work toward. This carries with it all the characteristics of "going some place" rather than "aimless strolling."

Student B had an interest in religious education and therefore wanted to take the religious education course. He also had interests and abilities in business with some tangible business connections promised for the future. The probabilities were that he could attend college for two years only. His formulated plan called for learning in certain areas of applied business, cultural fields, and religious education. Thus he was assured usable skills, increased usefulness and experience in the field of religion, and the possibility of continuing study in business administration at Kansas (Continued on page 1069)

Seeing Our Needs

By Lyle D. Flynn

A Talk Given at McKenzie, Alabama

LYLE D. FLYNN

I HAVE chosen for my few remarks an old familiar text to Latter Day Saints, "The day soon cometh that ye shall see and know that I am; for the veil of darkness shall be rent, and he that is not purified shall not abide the day; wherefore gird up your loins and be prepared." (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 2.) Also I wish to call to your attention a statement found in the Apostle Paul's second letter to the Corinthians (6: 2), ". . . behold now is the accepted time; behold now is the day of salvation."

As we look about and survey the past with its contributions so bountiful that have made life so meaningful and worth while to us, and then glance into the future at the great program that yet lies before this church, with all its allurements and opportunities, then lastly look at our present status, where do we find ourselves? Have we measured up to the expectations of those who have preceded, and also are we prepared for the tremendous tasks which lie ahead? Too, what is our attitude toward making the necessary preparation?

As a church we are in the middle of a long, long road. Behind us lie the efforts and struggles of all the prophets and dreamers, but before us yet lies the realization of their dreams and ambitions—Zion. Our task today is twofold: We must carry on the unfinished work of those who were not permitted to remain until its finish; and we must move out into fields that they were not able to reach, into the untried theories of social and stewardly living. We must do things that others have only dreamed about. We have reached the point in modern living when we must watch the past with its stirring tales of human adventure, its mistakes and misunderstandings, its efforts and sacrifices disintegrate, and we must watch rise phoenixlike out of the past a new and better and more Christian way of living. We must stoop and take up our time-worn tools and tested doctrines and set to work with new vigor. Ours is not a task of saving civilization, but of creating a civilization under zionistic influences.

The men and women in the early days of the church gave all they possessed in time, talent, money, and even life itself for the cause they had espoused and loved. The gospel to them was a living and vital force which transformed their whole lives. We today must sense the significance of the Restored Gospel as keenly as did Joseph and Hyrum, and the hundreds of others whose life blood was spilled for the advancement of the glorious work. It took the best blood of the last century to establish the work of the Restoration for us. And it will take the best living of this century to keep the work growing and redeem Zion, the Promised Land of modern Israel.

We as modern Israel look with pity upon the Israelites of old because it took them forty years to make a journey that, had they been obedient, would have lasted but a few months at most. I say we look with pity upon those folk, but remember that God sent a prophet to lead modern Israel toward the Promised Land. We have spent forty years, and another forty years, and a part of another forty years, and still we find ourselves somewhere outside the land designated as our inheritance. The crying need in the church today is a real awakening among the members as to the importance of the work in which we are engaged. There needs to be ever a rekindling of the desires to serve the best interests of the church by friendliness and harmonious cooperation.

We need to do the practical things of our religion. We must weave our belief into the ordinary texture of our daily living, so that the doctrines of the church will become practically effective. We must cultivate the habits of private prayer, of family altars, of grace at every meal; we need to set aside a time each day for religious study and meditation. We need to develop a thorough knowledge of the significance of the Lord's Supper, so that as month after month brings the opportunity to partake, there will accompany the Spirit which leads to a more abundant living during the days following. We need to be active and regular in our attendance at the services of the church, contributing to their success by previous study, prayer and meditation, and a definite assurance that this is the work of the Master.

As Latter Day Saints, we must be constantly on the alert for opportunities to improve our branch and community, making them a happier place in which to live. To do this, our ideas must be progressive, our policies (Continued on page 1070.)

Theories of Play

By Dwight D. W. Davis

DWIGHT D. W. DAVIS

THE CLOSE of the nineteenth century, and the beginning of the twentieth, saw many theories advanced in an attempt to justify play. Chief among these was the Schiller - Spencer theory commonly called the Surplus-energy theory of play. Play, according to Schiller, was act expressions of their motor needs. The young grow up in the same form of motor activity as did generations that have long preceded them, only to a limited extent, and if the form of every human occupation were to change today, play would be unaffected save in some of the superficial imitative forms." (5)

This leads us to another closely allied theory, namely, the instinctive theory of play supported by such men as James, McDougall, Kirkpatrick, and others. "The impulse to play in special ways," states James, "is certainly instinctive. A boy can no more help running after another boy who runs provokingly near him, than a kitten can help running after a rolling ball. All simple active games . . . involve imitation, hunting, fighting, rivalry, acquisitiveness, and construction, combined in various ways; their special rules are habits, discovered by accident, selected by intelligence, and propagated by word "instinct" is in ill repute among most modern tradition; but unless they were founded in automatic impulses, games would lose most of their zest." (6)

It should be pointed out at this point that the word "instinct" is in all repute among most modern psychologists and educators. Many writers have pointed out that it is highly doubtful if there is any play reaction that may properly be interpreted as an instinct. (7)

One of the best known theories of play was that advanced by the psychologist, G. T. Patrick. (8) Because of the stress and strain of modern life upon the human body man needs to play for relaxation, renewal and refreshment. In an article written for the Scientific Monthly he asks "why is it, since our whole modern life is so exciting as compared with former ways of living, that in our leisure time we seek exciting pastimes? . . . Fortunately the psychologists have worked out the problem for us and we now understand fairly well the psychology of play. We have learned that it is not excitement that we seek in play, but release from those forms of mental activity which are fatigued in our daily life of grind." (9)

The last of the theories that we shall consider here, namely the recreation theory of play, needs very little comment for to us it is perhaps the best known of all. The term recreation itself means "recreation." Through play activities something happens to the body and mind so that we feel refreshed

"the aimless expenditure of exuberant energy." (1) Herbert Spencer (2) took the same point of view but with a more extended elaboration. According to this theory play is simply "blowing off steam." After providing for the necessities of life we still have so much pent-up energy stored away within us that we simply cannot keep still, therefore we expend it in superfluous and useless exercise.

Karl Groos (3) believed that play is a "preparation for life." In his Play of Man, page 375, he stated that "play is the agency employed to develop crude powers and prepares them for life's uses." In other words all forms of play engaged in by children and youth are but a definite preparation for the pursuit of the more serious things of life.

Somewhat akin to the theory advanced by Groos was the recapitulation or inheritance theory of G. Stanley Hall. (4) Every child, according to Hall, relives the history of the race; each activity engaged in during one's life corresponds to the activities engaged in by the race during the various stages of evolution. To quote from Hall's own works will give the picture.

PLAY may be regarded as the "motor habits and spirits of the past of the race, persisting in the present, as rudimentary functions sometimes of and always akin to rudimentary organs. The best index and guide to the stated activities of adults is found in the instinctive, untaught, and nonimitative plays of children which are the most spontaneous and ex-for "further work, responsibility, and companionableness" as the case might be.

TAKEN ALONE each of the theories advanced is incomplete; each has its weaknesses. Play is too complex to be explained by any one formula. An amalgamation and synthesis of all the theories of recreation would be a closer approximation to the truth. Martin H. Neumeyer gives what I consider a splendid summary of all these theories.

"Play," he states, "is very complex. It involves individual and collective activities. The activities of play are of a pleasurable sort and carry their own drive, as over against work or drudgery which require a remoter drive and a reward beyond themselves. Play may be undertaken during any age period, although it is especially indulged in during childhood. Play involves or is conditioned by the organism, both biological and mental, but is also conditioned by the physical, and social environment in which it takes place. Play involves one's wishes, particularly the desire for new experience and adventure, as well as the desire for response and recognition. Play is also conditioned by one's attitudes, sentiments, habits, and disposition. These, in turn, are conditioned by one's experiences in the environment in which a person lives and by specific situations faced." (10)

But why, you may ask, devote so much time and space to theories of play? Simply because at a given time and place the prevailing conception held toward play determines in large measure the position and function of recreational activities in society.

Play was given an important role in the national life of the Greeks and the Romans. The mind and the body were considered to be inextricably interrelated; each exerted its influence upon the other. The goal seemed to have been "a sound mind in a sound body."

During the Middle Ages, and persisting down to the near past, the body was regarded as evil. To abash the flesh was to attain spirituality since the spirit was thereby left untrammelled. It is needless to say that such a conception of the human body relegated play into the background. But as Jesse F. Steiner in his Americans at Play, said: "The hard struggle to conquer the wilderness and provide the necessities of life was too severe to give much attention to play . . . under such conditions it was natural to develop a philosophy of life that would exalt labor and look askance at unproductive activities." (11)

The close of the nineteenth century witnessed the recreational institution begin to exert itself for an increasingly more important place in contemporary life. Simply because its place had not yet been recognized the various theories of play were developed in justification of leisure time pursuits.

The development of this institution has been concomitant with the urbanization and industrialization of this age. Complete appreciation and realization of this point will enable us to discern more understandingly the present day problems arising out of this field of human activity.

No longer need play activities be justified. Indeed recreation has become so thoroughly entrenched in the folkways of modern society, and so insistent has been this movement, that man has demanded and received more time for recreational pursuits. Now that he has achieved hours for leisure that half a century ago were undreamed of, what is he going to do with it? The problem, then, becomes one of wise and effective utilization rather than that of foolish and reckless dissipation.

Leads to Steady Nerves

A quiet intelligent use of the will is at the root of all character; and an unselfish, well-balanced character, with the insight which it develops, will lead us to well-balanced nerves.—Annie Payson Call.

The giving of money is one of the outward and visible signs of the Right Spirit moving inwardly in the hearts of the people who give it. Churchmen must realize that the question of money for the Church is not a material but a spiritual one.—Efficient Church Finance.

"Spot of Land Very Choice"

By R. T. Cooper

ABOUT a century ago the Lord said "buy land" in Jackson County. The special purpose—to be specific, among other things he said in August 1831:

"Let there be an agent appointed by the voice of the church, unto the church in Ohio, to receive moneys to purchase lands in Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 10.

At the threshold of the matter, the question arises, whether this command contemplated a purchase of land by the church for administrative purposes, to be held and owned by the church, as an institution, or owned and held by the members of the church, or both. Inasmuch as every man is legally presumed to "Know the Law," and the laws of Missouri permit churches to own land for three specific purposes only, church houses, parsonages and cemeteries (Sec. 10264 R. S. Mo. 1919 sustained by Supreme Court in case of Helpers of the Holy Souls vs Law 267 M. 667) it is not to be presumed the Lord would direct the doing of an illegal thing "He that keepeth the Laws of God hath no need to break the Laws of the Land," the conclusion is therefore inevitable in favor of the individual ownership of the lands so purchased, except for those three purposes, as clearly indicated in later revelations.

A little over two years later further instruction was given.

"Again Verily I say unto you, I will show unto you wisdom in me concerning all the churches, inasmuch as they are willing to be guided in a right and proper way for their salvation, that the work of the gathering together of my saints may continue . . . for the time of the harvest is come, and my words must needs be fulfilled. Therefore I must gather together my people according to the parable of the wheat and the tares.

"Therefore a commandment I give unto all the churches that they shall continue to gather together unto the places which I have appointed; nevertheless, as I have said unto you in a former commandment, let not your gathering be in haste, nor by fight; but let all things be prepared before you;

The author is a member of the Standing High Council, a member of the Bishopric, and a practicing attorney in Indiana. He says: "Not having contributed anything to the Herald since leaving California or during my sixteen years of residence in Jackson County, I thought I might offer a few ideas concerning present conditions that may be of interest."

"And in order that all things may be prepared before you, observe the commandments which I have given concerning these things, which saith, or teacheth, to purchase all the lands by money, which can be purchased for money, in the region round about the land which I have appointed to be the land of Zion, for the beginning of the gathering of my saints; all the land which can be purchased in Jackson County, and the counties round about and leave the residue in mine hand."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 9.

"Now, verily I say unto you Let all the churches gather together all their moneys; let these things be done in their time, be not in haste; and observe to have all things prepared before you. And let honorable men be appointed, even wise men, and send them to purchase these lands, and every church in the eastern counties [there were none west of Jackson County at that time] when they are built up, if they will hearken unto this council, they may buy lands and gather together upon them and in this way they may establish Zion."—Ibid 98: 10.

sent wise men, to fulfill that which I have commanded concerning the purchasing of all the lands in Jackson County that can be purchased, and in the adjoining counties round about; for it is my will these lands should be purchased, and after they are purchased that my saints should possess them according to the laws of consecration which I have given"—Ibid 102: 7, 8.

All this was preliminary and fundamental to his purpose, the establishing of Zion, on a Spot of Land, Very Choice.

"And now I will show unto you a parable that you may know concerning the Redemption of Zion. A certain nobleman had a spot of land, very choice; and he said unto his servants, Go ye into my vineyard, even upon this very choice piece of land, and plant twelve olive trees."—Ibid. 98: 6.

WHY SUCH A CHOICE SPOT

In lack of direct information, it would seem by analogy the spot of land must have been in some way related to events in the early history of the world, possibly the same locality where Adam prophesied "As he was moved upon by the Holy Ghost." Now this same priesthood which was in the beginning shall be in the end of the world also. (Genesis 6:7, 8.) Who knows but it might be the, or who can conjecture a more likely, place for the fulfilling of the "everlasting covenant," than this very choice spot of land?

"And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember the everlasting covenant, which I made unto thy father Enoch; that, when men should keep all my commandments, Zion should again come on the earth, the city of Enoch which I have caught up unto myself. And this is mine everlasting covenant, that when thy posterity shall embrace the truth, and look upward, then shall Zion look downward, and all the heavens shall shake with gladness, and the earth shall tremble with joy; And the general assembly of the church of the first born shall come down out of heaven, and possess the earth, and shall have place till the end come. And this is mine everlasting covenant, which I made with my father Enoch."—Genesis 9: 21-23 Inspired Version.

"And the Lord said unto Enoch, As I live, even so will I come in the last days, in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you concerning the children of Noah. And the day shall come that the earth shall rest. But before that day the heavens shall be darkened, and a veil of darkness shall cover the earth; and the heavens shall shake, and also the earth. And great tribulations shall be among the children of men, but my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven, and truth will I send forth out of the earth, to bear testimony of mine only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men. And righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out mine own elect from the four quarters of the earth, unto a place which I shall prepare; an holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle and it shall be called Zion; a New Jerusalem. And the Lord said unto Enoch, Then shalt thou and all thy city meet them there; and we will receive them into our bosom; and they shall see us, and we will fall upon their necks, and they shall fall upon our necks and we will kiss each other; and there shall be mine abode, and it shall be Zion, which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made; and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest."—Genesis 7: 67-72.

In view of apparent financial difficulties in the present almost prohibitive prices of land in this section, good farm land the last few years selling as high as $200 or more per acre compared with the original government price of $1.25 per acre, a hundred years ago; it should be remembered that land in the Atherton "bottoms" is good market and truck gardening land and potato land and often produced 150 to 200 bushels of potatoes per acre as well as good corn and wheat land and alfalfa land and with ordinary normal prices for produce the land prices were justified, in 1933 potatoes brought $1.50 per bushel loaded on cars. Land in Jackson County never did have the great boom to exorbitant prices experienced in many other parts of the country, not even those wonderful stock and dairy farms east and south of Independence.

However, this year 1934, Jackson County has had no exemption from the prevailing drought, withered crops, (except wheat), shortage of water, but even now a few men with money even from distant states are buying up choice tracts of land in Jackson County at prices which will doubtless return good incomes and large profits in the not distant future and to those of the church who believe and have faith in the Lord's work these disastrous times afford opportunities to "buy land in Jackson County" unequalled even by the Government price of $1.25 per acre 100 years ago.

"Let the privileges of the land be made known from time to time."—Ibid 58: 12.

Knowing that large life insurance companies held vast amounts of farm mortgages and had foreclosed them in large numbers, recently in company with Bishop Mark H. Siegfried a canvass was made at the Kansas City offices of several large Eastern Life Insurance Companies and to our surprise not one of these companies held a single farm in Jackson County, neither did the Federal Land Bank of St. Louis, which company publishes a 31 page booklet of farms in Missouri and Illinois, nor the Phoenix Joint Stock Land Bank, successor to Joint Stock Land Bank, of Kansas City, and this company distributes a list of 46 Missouri farms it has for sale, but none in Jackson County. Inquiry at banks in Eastern Jackson County disclose two farms and at Butler, Mo., one Eastern Insurance Company was found that has six farms in Jackson County and another Eastern Company has one farm together with one Independence owner of one foreclosed 400 acre Jackson County farm.

This remarkable scarcity seems to vindicate, even now, the great desirability of Jackson County farms and sustains their general reputation for all around corn, fruit, wheat, dairy and stock raising, mineral and coal, unequalled in the boundaries of the state of Missouri or any other state, a "spot of land, very choice."

For information of those who have faith to look beyond the immediate present difficulties and who still desire to "Prepare the Way" beforehand by buying land in Jackson County, there is available today within ten to twenty miles of the Auditorium in Independence several of these foreclosed farms, splendid tracts of rich land that can be bought at $65.00 to $85.00 or $95.00 per acre on reasonable terms that in recent years actually sold for, and were worth, $150 to $200 per acre. A group of five or ten congenial brethren anywhere, even in the distant islands of the sea, could combine their resources and purchase a tract of 160 or 200 or more acres of this

WHAT TO DO AT HOME AGAIN?

Before leaving Wales I saw in a dream that I had arrived home and was standing before the creamery on Eleventh and Frederick Avenue, Saint Joseph, Missouri. The landlord, Mr. Hubbard, came to me and pointing with his hand to the creamery building he said, "I would like it if you would go in there for these folks are not making the business pay." At that another person came up and said, "I want you to work for me." I inquired, "What doing?" He answered, "Selling flour." "What territory and what pay is there in it?" He said, "There is a good commission and the territory is from Saint Joseph east as far as Richmond, Missouri." While he was talking Mr. Hubbard stood there and had nothing to say. He seemed to show by his silence that this man had the best position and that he had more claim on me than Mr. Hubbard had.

Sometime before I arrived home, Mr. Hubbard was inquiring about me and saying that he wished I would come and rent that creamery. As soon as he heard we arrived, he called on me and suggested that I go back into the business. I gave him no satisfaction. In the meantime I had been appointed by the church to labor in Far West District, Saint Joseph the objective point, the territory extending from Saint Joseph to Richmond, not to sell the flour or bread that perishes but to distribute the Bread of Life.

Arriving at home July 14, 1903, I was not in good health as I was being troubled with my heart. However, I was improving.

At the reunion held at Stewartville in September, I asked Brother I. N. White's advice in regard to my leaving the active ministry and going into business. He advised me not to become entangled in business affairs; that I could do much good in church work.

But I was anxious to be self-supporting and to get my sons into business. There was an opening as the creamery doors were closed. I thought I could be a help to our sons; it would not be long before we could build up a business that the boys could run and then I could give my entire time to church work and still be self-supporting.

I gave the matter much thought and laid it again more fully before Bishop E. L. Kelley and Brother I. N. White. They, too, thought my idea was all right, so I went into business. I took our oldest son, Dan, in with me. Later on, I took Dave and Rob. This venture proved a mistake. I should have given heed to the dream. No need to ask any advice when I had been instructed what I should do. However, I felt that I could be self-supporting and do nearly as much for the church as I could in the active ministry. Later on, according to my figuring, this creamery business was to bring me sufficient revenue not to only support my family, but also others. Then I could give my entire time to the church.

I had to borrow some money, and began business in October, 1903. By March, 1905, we had paid back to Brother D. C. Kinnaman three hundred dollars with six percent interest. We had also paid the interest to Mr. Worrell. Besides all this we had bought and paid for three creamery wagons, four horses, the harness for them, some ice cream cans and tubs, and we had fitted up an ice cream parlor, having electric fans and signs. I bought a combined churn and butter worker and a 12-horse power boiler, and I partially paid for a Jensen pasteurizer.

MISSION TO PENNSYLVANIA

The business was getting along very well and my sons were taking an active interest in it. The church asked me to go on a mission to Pennsylvania with Scranton as the objective. After considering the matter, I decided to leave the boys in charge of the creamery. I had been laboring in Scranton for about a year when I was taken quite ill. When administered to I would be free from pain for a short time. A doctor was called, and after an examination told me that it was, in his opinion, inflammation of the bowels. I had fallen on the ice previous to my illness, and thought possibly the fall had something to do with the trouble; but the doctor thought not. He gave me some strong medicine to be taken every hour for seven hours. He repeated the seven doses, and from then on my stomach became very sick. For weeks afterward my mouth would fill with water and foam and the pain continued.

It was on the nineteenth of March, a cold stormy day, that we started home. I was still quite sick. Two days later we arrived home, and for four weeks I had the same pain and suffered greatly. I have always blamed the medicine the doctor gave me and feel that it was not the proper treatment for the trouble and that I did not need what he prescribed.

Improved in health, we returned to my mission field and I located my wife and Ruth in Philadelphia, renting two rooms upstairs from Brother and Sister W. Smith.

Brother Farnfield and I held tent meetings at Scranton. During June and July we continued our services with good success, baptizing a number of honest souls.

Then I received a letter from my son, David, and also one from my son-in-law, D. C. Kinnaman, saying that it would be advisable for me to return home to look after the creamery business. At my request, I was transferred from the Pennsylvania field to Saint Joseph and Far West.

In August, 1906, we returned, and I found that Rob had sold out his interest to Dave for some mining stock in Arizona without my knowledge or consent. I found also that the indebtedness had increased and that the boys had made mistakes and were spending money too freely.

EARNINGS OF A QUARTER OF A CENTURY ARE LOST

From the first of September, 1906, until May 8, 1907, I tried without success to sell the plant or trade it. Sometimes I thought it would be advisable for me to go back into business for the sake of those to whom the boys were indebted. I did suggest to D. C. Kinnaman that I was willing to try to build up the business, but in order to undertake it, it would be necessary for me to borrow at least four hundred dollars. He did not favor my leaving the ministry. He preferred to lose what he had put into the business. We advertised the business, including the equipment, for sale. I also consulted Bishop E. L. Kelley and President Joseph Smith, and they advised me to get out of it and to give my entire time to church work.

Before the sale—public auction—we sent notices of sale to all who were interested in that line of business in parts of Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, and south, and east as far as Saint Louis. I was hoping that from all of the surrounding territory someone would be interested and would buy the plant. But we were disappointed. We did not get a bid. No one from a distance was present at the sale. We sold at a private sale at a very low figure. In all I did not receive more than $650. Some of the things did not sell.

Sister Sally Worrell held a mortgage for $500, and D. C. Kinnaman $307. He held a mortgage on some things that Sister Worrell's mortgage did not cover.

As the administrator of my sister's estate, I had loaned $80 belonging to it to the creamery, and $200 belonging to my wife. Part of this sum my wife had earned by making bread, pies, and doughnuts. All this was gone, and still I could do no more than I had done. It was hard to see the earnings of more than a quarter of a century go to the wind and to be indebted to others, to say nothing of being indebted to members of my own family.

MAKING A CHOICE

When I was contemplating going back into business, I sought the Lord for light, and dreamed that I was leading three little girls into a river to baptize them. The water was very shallow. One of the girls was my own daughter, Ruth, who was already in the church. As we walked up the stream in search of sufficient water, I saw a party of men who were men of the world never giving the subject of religion a thought. All they cared for was to satisfy their appetites and to have what is generally called "a good time."

One of these men spoke to me saying, "Go up farther and you will find plenty of water." I thanked him for the information and found it just as he had said.

Leading Ruth into the water that was quite deep, I said, "Do not be afraid." At that I saw the wickedness in the world and how much these little girls would have to contend against. I was impressed to pray for them as follows:

"Heavenly Father, I come unto thee in behalf of these dear children who are about to enter into covenant with thee by baptism of water. Give them strength to keep it sacred and unbroken. Many are the pitfalls of sin in the world. Deliver them, I pray thee, from the snares of wicked men. Keep them in the hollow of thy hand; bid back the tempter, and when life's journey is ended, may they be worthy to enter into the rest prepared for the faithful. I ask it in the blessed name of Jesus Christ."

The earnest, simple prayer seemed to touch the hearts of the listening men, and I could see that they had never thought the wickedness of the world half so bad as it was; that they had never considered the necessity of prayer or its value, and that they were deeply interested and anxious that I should continue in prayer. Although they were men of the world, I could see that they had some noble traits, and having once heard the gospel, they could become a power for good. I could see by the faces of those strong, able-bodied men that there was an awakening in their hearts and that they wanted to seek for divine help so their own lives might be of benefit to others.

When I awoke from this dream words came to me: "Take your choice: labor for silver and gold, the bread that perishes, or devote your time to helping your fellow man to understand God and his truths, and to going among your brothers and sisters, encouraging them in the good work in which they are engaged."

"Lord," I said, "it is enough. I shall do all I can to help men within and without the church to worship thee!"

BACK TO MY EASTERN MISSION

Having been appointed to labor again in the Eastern mission, Scranton, Pennsylvania, the objective, I concluded to take my wife and Ruth with me. The church would pay my fare. The family's fare I would have to pay. How to do so, not having any means, was a puzzle. I was willing to go alone, but the branch in Scranton was small and I did not know whether there were any who would board and lodge me. So I wrote to the president, saying that I would come alone, or if they thought it best, I would bring my family; but that in either case, the branch would have to care for me. The Bishop also wrote the branch asking what they would do in helping to support a missionary.

The matter was presented to the branch, but no action for or against was taken. Under the circumstances we concluded that it would be best for me to take my wife and to ask the Bishop to help support me if the branch would not. I was being sent out in the interests of the church, and I had reason to believe that the way would be opened up for us to be cared for.

The train fare from Saint Joseph to Scranton was $28.50, so my wife's and Ruth's tickets cost $57, without Pullman reservations. Freight charges for some household goods which we thought advisable to ship (at our own risk which was cheaper than to ship at the company's) was $24. I had to pay a total of $81.

When we were ready to start on our mission I did not have sufficient funds. I dreamed that I dropped some money into a grate on the sidewalk and that it went into the cellar among some rubbish. I hunted until I was tired but did not find it. At last I found enough one, two, and five dollar bills to make a handful. I was very glad for I understood that someone had put them there for me.

Upon awakening, I told my wife that we were going to have some good news soon. She replied that to dream of finding money was not good. But I thought it was. We had some of the creamery machinery still on hand, and I thought someone might come to buy it.

A GOOD GIFT

The day passed and nothing came either good or bad. We were stopping with our daughter, Mrs. D. C. Kinnaman as we had given up house-keeping and were packed to start on our mission.

That night after all had retired but Brother D. C. Kinnaman and I, he inquired of me how much of the Morgan estate (my sister's) I had let the creamery have. I said that the sum was $250 but that all except $80 had been paid back.

"How much did your wife lose?"

"Two hundred dollars," was my reply.

"Well," he said, "here is a check for $80 to pay the Morgan estate, and here is one for $200 for your wife."

My dream came to me and I said, "Carl, you have lost so much in that creamery that I do not like to take this from you."

"But I don't want the Morgan estate to lose its money nor your wife to lose her $200," was his answer.

To say that I was grateful does not express my feelings. I went to the bedroom to my wife and told her what Carl had done. She could hardly realize what I was saying and wondered why Carl would do that after losing so much himself.

Next evening I said to Carl, "The Lord has certainly moved upon you to do this kind act and if I had not seen in a dream that some kind friend would help us. I certainly would not take the money." It was a Godsend to us for it helped us to get located in our new home and helped pay Ruth's school tuition. May he be blessed for this kind deed in his hour of need.

We left for our mission June 13, 1907, by way of Chicago, Buffalo, and Niagara Falls. We stopped off just one hour then proceeded to our destination, and arrived at Scranton on the fifteenth. There we were met by Brother Richard Hawkins and stayed in his home for nearly a week. Ruth stopped with Brother and Sister Fossie. We rented an apartment consisting of four rooms, bath, and two clothes closets for $12.50, which was too much for our pocketbook but not too much for the property. The location was pleasant.

WHEN DISSENSION AND INDIFFERENCE CREEP IN

We found the branch in poor condition. Elder Brown had labored hard during the winter and had given much time, but he had been hasty along certain lines. The branch had become divided and hard feelings had followed. In my judgment, both sides had overstepped their rights.

I found in this local an indifferent spirit toward missionaries and their work, and up to the date of August 19, 1907, the branch had taken no action to help support the missionary. From different ones I received about five dollars, half of this coming from nonmembers. I did much house to house work, talking with Saints and showing them their duty toward their brothers and sisters.

I held outdoor meetings two nights a week at Archibald, with some interest, and in everything I undertook solicited the cooperation of church members, old and new. (To be concluded.)

Silver Spoons

LOUISA was tired of Tikehau. Almost she was tired of life. For months they had been allowed to do no routine work. At first she had given herself up to enjoying the sound of the ocean, the soft winds, and the tropical beauty; but later this all became as commonplace as though she had known it forever. The only break in the monotony came when a ship was sighted in the quiet waters of the lagoon and they received a few letters. They were not permitted to read any papers or magazines.

She attempted to keep cheerful and happy for the sake of the child that was coming soon to them. She tried to keep in mind the fact that only six months remained of their contracted time.

Then they could have a real home. She could see it in imagination—a cozy little bungalow with a wide porch, banked with flowers without, and within all cleanliness and cheer. She tried to picture the nursery, too, and the baby, its dear little hands, its bright, happy face. It would be a boy, she felt sure, and often she dreamed of the wonderful future before him. He might be a famous doctor or some other type of great man and do much good in the world and be rich. She didn't talk things over with Dan any more. He seemed morose and silent. This baby was to recompense her for Dan's lack; he would be her very own, and she would get from him the responsive love and joy she might never have from Dan.

If she could have known the tender thought her husband had for her she might have felt differently. He too was building fine dreams around their baby. Only his were vastly different.

"Louisa is mainly concerned over material things," he said to himself, "she will not care so much about the baby's spiritual welfare. She will leave that to me. How I will love to teach the little fellow the gospel!"

He tried to pierce the future and paint pictures for himself of the son who was to be. The tiny baby dressed in pure white clothing in the arms of two of the elders of the church, being blessed and dedicated to God. The little boy with sweet pensive face who would confide in him and bring him all his childish troubles and problems. The laddie, in different mood, kneeling beside his earthly father while learning to pray to and trust a heavenly Father. The grown man—stalwart, firm for the right, seated beside him in the pulpit about to preach his first sermon for the church of God.

IT WAS INEVITABLE that Dan's dreams should become interwoven with the church ideals, for he had studied his church books carefully and prayerfully. He had attended the native church services and even assisted wherever he could, since Mr. Hunt seemed to have no objections. In fact, that old "seeker for truth" seemed to wish to avoid Dan; sometimes he appeared actually uncomfortable in the younger man's presence.

Dan was very thankful for this, for he never had enjoyed his employer's company. He preferred to be with his native brothers and sisters; to reflect upon how great things the Lord had done for them through the light of the gospel. For there was no denying the fact that the natives who had obeyed the gospel and tried to live by its principles were much superior to the others around them, and in deed because of their strong faith in God and his work restored in the last days, they might do credit to the church in almost any environment.

He recalled some things he had read concerning these people in a volume of Redpath's history; wherein the author pointed out that they originated on the American continent, and that they were the most magnificent specimens of humanity, in a physical sense, that remain in the world.

These people were still large of stature and well proportioned, but there were among them many signs of physical decay. Great numbers of them were very poor, and the only fresh foods they had were fish and coconut. Canned fruits and meats from the Chinese shops with a little white bread made up the rest of their diet. Their teeth were in a bad condition; and he doubted whether some of them ever had their hunger fully satisfied.

Civilization had brought them its worst in a physical way. But they had the gospel, civilization's best in the spiritual realm. Suppose they could gather to Zion soon before their physical decadence had progressed further. With this natural strength, their zeal for God's work, their abundant faith, could they not make a worthy and lasting contribution to the cause of Zion?

If only he could help! Soon he would be back in America; then he would bend every effort to prepare for service in the church as he had been told to do in his patriarchial blessing and his confirmation prayer.

As the days went by he grew worried and uneasy concerning Louisa. They were awaiting a boat which would take them to Papeete where they could secure the services of a physician. The boat had not yet appeared. He felt he could not bear it if anything should happen that his wife should be taken from him. There was one sailboat, Tiari Faniu, which belonged to a man who lived there. He might be persuaded to take them to Papeete if Mr. Hunt were to pay him something. Disagreeable as the task seemed, Dan resolved to seek Mr. Hunt's company and make the proposal. Surely he could not refuse.

AS HE APPROACHED the house he heard the sound of violent quarreling, but that was nothing unusual. The two dancing girls seemed to hate one another more fiercely every day, and expressed their feelings boisterously. Dan did not see how Mr. Hunt could endure the situation. The old man did not seem happy; he did not appear excited or enthused with life any more. He seemed almost to have forgotten his project.

Everyone shrank from him, and he was the most lonely person on the island. Robert and Lucy spent most of the day away from the little house, walking by the sea, or sitting apart from all else, content in each other's companionship. Robert was paler than ever and grew thinner, too, as the days went by.

"This whole venture was wrong from the beginning," thought Dan, "we should never have come. No good can come of it. If anything happens to Louisa—"

Steeling himself for the interview with Mr. Hunt, he entered the house. That worthy gentleman was trying to settle the difficulty that had arisen between the two women, and they had both turned the full force of their venom upon him. He had never learned to speak the language fluently, so he merely slunk away toward the door, and was glad when Dan asked him if he could talk with him awhile alone. They walked away from the village a short distance.

"I have been worrying about my wife," Dan began, "You see—no ship seems to have come for some time. There is no doctor here."

"I don't know what we can do about it," dully replied Mr. Hunt.

"There is Tiari Faniu. I thought perhaps—"

"We might just as well all go back to Papeete. We might just as well quit now as to wait the few remaining weeks. And you kids can go home if you want to. There isn't any use of your remaining longer."

"You mean your project is finished?" queried Dan politely.

The older man spread his hands in a gesture of despair.

"Finished as far as it ever will be, I guess. You see, things haven't gone just right. Some things have proved startlingly different from what I thought they would be."

"Indeed?"

"For instance, I have discovered that there actually are ghosts, or spirits, or something supernatural. I don't know what it is, but I've seen them—I've heard them. Do you think I'm crazy?" He ended irritably, "Well, think so, if you like—but I'm not crazy. There are supernatural powers, and I'd like to experiment along that line, but I'm—I'm afraid. So I guess my great search for truth is ended."

"There is another possibility, Mr. Hunt. Have you ever thought what might happen if you conducted your experiments with a view to finding God and going toward him, rather than in the other direction?"

"No religion in mine. I've known too many hypocrites that belonged to churches. I can't abide doctrines. I don't like even to hear about it. No—there is nothing left for me except to live and enjoy life as best I may. I have plenty of money and that's a great comfort. But I'll have to find something in which to interest myself, that's sure. I thought once that sin was exciting but I've found it is the most monotonous thing in the world. You don't get much enjoyment out of it—it has very limited boundaries."

"On the other hand," said Dan, "I've noticed that people who strive for self-mastery and attempt to lead righteous lives seem not only to increase their capacity for enjoyment but to have some sort of magnetic attraction for happiness. Of course—"

"It won't do any good to preach to me, young fellow. I've carved out my own road—I shall follow it to the end. No one shall interfere with me. I intend to interfere with no one else from now on." He paused a moment, a far-away look in his eyes, then spoke in a whisper as though to himself: "I think I am the most unhappy person in the world."

"You will see Punuari then about his boat?" Dan asked in a strained voice.

"Yes. Or stay. You can see him if you like. Now, right away."

"He wants me to go away from him," thought Dan pityingly.

He glanced back once or twice at the forlorn, lonely figure of the man who had spent his life in sin; and in attempting to prove that sin was natural and right.

"Verily I say unto you, my son, wickedness never was happiness," thought Dan as he recalled the statement of Alma to his erring son. There surged again over his heart that tremendous urge to do something for Christ and his church. He would have to tell Louisa, plead with her, if necessary, to let him carry ~~out~~ his plans. He could take his money and by economizing go on to school and learn more so that he could be a better workman in the gospel; then he would be called as he had been promised. He wanted to go into all the world and tell all people the way to happiness. He wanted to tell them that the way to find joy was to follow Christ; that while sin sometimes promised happiness the sinner would find only misery if he yielded. He drew himself up short. He must not dream so much. He must see Punuari without delay. No, he would go to Louisa and tell her the good news first. She was not happy here he knew, and was probably just as anxious to get home as he was.

Robert met him, panting, breathless.

"Dan! Where have you been? I've hunted for you—go to Louisa, quickly! She's—"

With fearful misgivings Dan rushed to the little house at the end of the street. A large crowd of people were gathered close to the building. He made his way into their room. Two of the native sisters were there. He flung himself down beside the bed and buried his face in his hands. Louisa put out a trembling hand and stroked his hair gently.

"Dear, you've been to church enough that you know about administration, would you care—would it be all right with you if I called two of the elders and had them administer to you?"

"Not if it would make you feel better. I think everything will be all right, but if you want to have them, go ahead."

The sacred rite was attended to with dignified simplicity. Dan felt much easier in his mind. Surely God would answer these prayers of faith.

"Don't you be troubled, Daniela," said the old woman who was nearest Louisa, "we shall take good care of your wife. We understand these things very well, and we know what to do. Now don't be troubled."

There never was a night that seemed longer and more wearisome than that. The only bit of comfort Dan had was that the native Saints knowing of his worry, had called a special prayer meeting in his wife's behalf.

And in the morning everything was all right. Only Dan would have to make some slight revisions in his dreams. The baby was a girl. The native sisters were almost as proud of her as though she belonged to them. It seemed they would never be through exclaiming over her.

"Aue te nehenehe! How beautiful! Ah, what loveliness!"

Dan was astonished at Louisa's appearance. He had expected her to be pale as death, but she looked as natural as ever.

"What's the matter, Dan?" she asked the question wistfully. "Are you disappointed that—the baby wasn't a boy—or—"

All the grief and worry of the long night overpowered him and he sank to his knees beside her and burst into tears.

Louisa raised herself on one elbow and gazed at him, speechless. Dan crying? She had never dreamed he could cry—at least she had never thought he would cry over her.

The native sisters were almost in tears, too. "Aue, Daniela, e! Aue te aroha!"

Louisa paid no heed to them. "Were you really so worried, Dan?" she asked, breathlessly.

Dan controlled himself with an effort. "Last night," he said in a low voice, "I prayed for you every minute. I told the Lord if he would let me keep you, I didn't think I'd ever ask him for anything else. I am so thankful—"

"He must really love me then," thought Louisa. "Perhaps—" Aloud she said: "You didn't need to worry, really. I was sure I'd be all right. I am strong." She laughed a little. "I remember once—it seemed like ages ago—before we were married—you'll laugh at this Dan—I made up my mind I was sort of a combination of Venus and Psyche. Strength and spiritual beauty."

"Don't compare yourself with heathen goddesses any more. There never was any goddess nor human being either, for that matter, who could be as beautiful as you are now."

Louisa caught her breath sharply. "You must really love me—quite a lot?" It was a tremblingly asked question, rather than a statement.

"I do love you—of course."

"As usual, he doesn't say how much he loves me—he never makes a statement about his love for me in the superlative." She closed her eyes for a moment fearing he might see the pain that had gone through her with knife-like poignancy. "We can soon go home, Dan," she brightly began, "and what a nice home we can have. We must give our baby every advantage—"

"And yet, in our own happiness, we must not forget others," Dan broke in with a far-away look in his eyes. "These natives, for instance. I keep feeling all the time we should do something for them—something practical—you know dear, they are really better than lots of people who feel they are so good. Last night they had a special meeting to pray for you—"

"The dears!" returned Louisa. "And these women who stayed with me were wonderful, too. One of them, that one they call Mamaruu kept telling me I'd be all right, that she'd had eighteen children and was still alive and happy." She laughed. "I've thought of several gifts we might send back when we get home. I'm going to send several of them some silver knives and forks and spoons. You know the poor things don't really have much to work with, and they like beautiful things the same as any other woman does."

"Silver spoons!" thought Dan. "Silver spoons, when they want Zion!" The idea was a shock to him. Could he make her see his dream? For the next half hour he tried desperately to do so. She listened with tears in her eyes. He could paint glowing pictures; but she had dreams of her own. Was it fair to ask her to give up all her dreams that he might realize his? If she believed fully in the church, and if Dan loved her as she wanted him to, she might possibly make the sacrifice. But as it was—why, that was probably why Dan was so intensely interested in the church and the hereafter—Elaine, whoever she was, had died; he could never find complete happiness again in earthly love; so he had to find his happiness working for religion.

"It sounds beautiful to hear you talk about it, Dan," she said, "but it isn't lost upon me that the main part of the hardship would fall to the lot of our children and me. I think it's selfish of you to ask it. And it says somewhere in the Bible that he who does not take care of his own is worse than an infidel, or something like that. I can't think it is required of us. I recollect some of the stories your mother told me about the hard times some of the missionaries in your church have had—"

"She says 'your church,'" thought Dan. He felt his heart would break with disappointment. She had seemed so much warmer toward him, so lovable, that he had hoped she might understand.

"There is an allowance," he said, "for the missionary's wife—"

"It's a miserly pittance though. I know that, because Brother Teasdale mentioned how hard a time his wife had to make ends meet—said it as though it were himself slaving at home—"

"It would be a sacrifice for the man, too, really—"

"Can't you satisfy this missionary instinct of yours in some more practical way? School teaching for instance? Old Laird did a lot of good, I'm sure. And he got two thousand dollars a year. We could have a pretty good home on a salary like that—"

Dan grasped at the idea eagerly. He would have to get his B. A. degree at least before he could make a salary like that, and maybe by that time she would see things differently.

"We could use our money for you to go on to school with," she said thoughtfully. "Wouldn't that really be better than trying to serve some church and not be able to give our children a chance in life?"

"That might be all right," said Dan slowly.

A long, drawn-out, pitiful wail reached them through the thin partition of the rooms. Then Lucy's voice:

"Aue, Ropati, Ropati! Ua Pohe Ropati! Aue! Aue!"

There is a wide distance between rudeness and reserve. You can be courteously polite and at the same time extremely aloof to someone who does not appeal to you, or you can be welcomingly friendly to another whom you like on sight.—Emily Post.

HOW SHOULD MY SOCIAL AND RECREATIONAL ACTIVITIES DIFFER FROM THOSE OF THE WORLD?

Godlike character which the church is supposed to help me to develop.

"Avoid even the appearance of evil," and, "We are our brother's keeper," we often hear quoted. I may have no wrong sex emotions, when dancing with any number of people, but how about our partners? Are we of the same mind and subject to the same temptations? I must consider these questions for I have entered into partnership with Jesus Christ and his church, in the life saving business, and to work in harmony, my activities must be of a life saving nature. I sincerely believe that I cannot afford to attend questionable sex alluring movies, dance, play cards, or constantly listen to jazzy, sensuous music, first, because these activities do not tend to spiritualize my thoughts, which in turn control the activities in which I participate, and second, because I believe that I am my brother's keeper, and that God will hold me responsible for the example which I set to all the people with whom I come in contact, as well as for my own acts.

As a Latter Day Saint I cannot afford to be heedless in deciding how I shall spend the time God has given me for my development, for I firmly believe that peril waits upon the heedless, grace upon those who try. I can learn to like the things which are best for my development, as easily and as well as I can the things which are not conducive to any development. It is simply a case of being willing. "God demands the heart, and a willing mind." It is a matter, as a member of God's kingdom, of deciding what is good, and like it, or learn to like it. I should learn to like the best books, the most educational radio programs, and the cleanest and most educational movies, and all other good activities. I mention these three forms of recreation because they are most common to all.

THERE CAN BE, and should be, a decided difference between my social and recreational activities and those of the world, especially on the Sabbath day. While the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath, yet, like all of God's creations, and the intelligent ones of man, it was created for a definite purpose or purposes, with definite laws governing the care, use and operation, in order to produce the result intended. If I want the result or blessing, intended for me by God in creating the Sabbath for me, and as a Latter Day Saint I should want it, then I must use and operate the thing created, by the laws, with which the Creator made the result of the thing, subject to. The letter of the law governing the Sabbath is expressly given in the Scriptures. In essence, it is to be a day of rest, (rest meaning cessation from motion or disturbance; quiet; repose; sleep; death; place of quiet or repose; interval or silence) a day for holy convocation, for the payment of vows, and for the offering of oblations and sacraments to the Creator. There is to be no servile work done, except to avoid waste, and our food is to be prepared with singleness of heart. The spirit of the law, which should govern my activities on the Sabbath, I think is best given in Isaiah 58: 13, 14, which reads: "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shall honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words; then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." If baseball, swimming, movies, and other sports and activities are my pleasure and recreation, then I will and should turn away my feet from the doing of them on the Sabbath. In doing which, my Sabbath activities will differ from those of the world, who set at naught the counsel of God.

In seeking social and recreational activities, I should be intelligently seeking to supply and gratify my needs. Wants are intelligent ones and are justified only when they fill a need. The test of a just want is that it fits a need. God has seen every need of mankind, and has provided for the same through the gospel. When the gospel is complied with in its fullness, there is nothing lacking in mankind. It is my task as a Latter Day Saint to seek first to establish the kingdom of God and its righteousness, and then all my needs shall be provided for. Therefore my social and recreational activities can, and should, differ from those of the world, in that they are suggested by, and are the result of, my kingdom building activities.

University if the opportunity should open in the future.

Student C just didn't know. He had several possible purposes but none of them definite. After consultation, a plan was formulated for two years college training, at the end of which the student might choose journalistic training, business training, or educational training for the last two years of undergraduate work without loss of time, contributing experiences, or credit.

Thus through educational planning a student's college work not only gives maximum returns but is given a significance, vitality, and pattern which make a tremendous difference in the student's approach to his educational tasks.

Of course, college freshmen are uncertain regarding desired educational objectives. The first educational plan formulated may not be the one eventually desired. This condition is best remedied, however, by attack with re-checks and re-statements rather than by haphazard and blind procedures. A purposeful plan, even though it may need modification, is immeasurably superior to no plan at all.

So Graceland is committed to a policy of educational planning based on individual needs, abilities and purposes. Theoretically, there are as many "courses" as there are individual students. The personnel program provides then for frequent checks and re-statements where needed, as well as individual assistance in working out the plan.

Educational planning with individual students is one phase of an answer to the problem of individualizing collegiate services.

SEEING OUR NEEDS

constructive, and our vision forward-looking. We must gain our ends through harmonious relationships with others, instead of defeating the ends desired by friction and contention. We must insure the progress of our work here by elevating ourselves to a higher standard of living, which is found in the zionic plan and organization and Christian type of life. Our church must call the community to righteousness and good will; it must impart motive and instruction for social living; it must provide funds and leaders for social reform; it must generate faith and courage to counteract social wrongs; it must carry the benefits of stewardly living to the people. The church must accept and nourish the teachings of the Master. All the tools of our organization, all the talents of our members, all the lands and possessions that God has given us, must be utilized to build the kingdom of God and establish righteousness.

Each one of us must become an evangelist for the Christ. Personal evangelism is the ability to present effectively the merits of our religion. Every one needs Zion; it is our duty to make that need a human want. This implies a thorough knowledge and understanding of the church, its program, its relationship to God and man. We need to understand human nature, the most fascinating study in all the world. We must learn to appreciate people, for in so doing we learn to realize that we are our brother's keeper. As personal evangelists, we become service representatives of God, having incorporated into our lives the Christian way of living. We will understand the meaning of the brotherhood of man, because we will recognize God as the Father of all men. Our brotherly relations to those about us is a natural outcome of understanding that God is our Father.

Let us pause to think for a moment. Have we arisen to the fullest of our manhood and womanhood to represent the church? Are we calling the community to righteousness? Are we doing the practical things of our religion? Do we "esteem our neighbor as ourselves"? Do men show by our daily lives that we represent God? Do we understand our church program to the extent that we are convinced of its practicability? Are we serving God as Latter Day Saints ought to serve him?

Friends, with the realization that we have not measured up to what has been expected of us, let us catch a new vision of the Christ. Let our faith be accompanied with forgiveness and repentance. Let us be active in our religious doings, becoming, indeed, service-representatives of God, that men and women, boys and girls, may be lifted out of the slough of unrighteousness to find their inheritance in Mount Zion. We must do these things now, for "now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation."

land and divide it among themselves, each man receiving his portion with a title in "fee simple" conveyed by "deed and covenant which cannot be broken" receiving their landlord's share of the crops produced until wanted for personal occupancy, not only preparing their own way beforehand but assisting to redeem the land by "purchase." God is no "respector of persons," and sends his rain alike "upon the just and the unjust," but his unchanging word has gone forth concerning a "Spot of Land Very Choice," "for the building of Zion" which shall "not be moved out of her place."

"But verily I say unto you, that I, the Lord, will contend with Zion and plead with her strong ones, and chasten her, until she overcomes and is clean before me, for she shall not be removed out of her place. I the Lord have spoken it.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 8.

Worry never solved a problem yet; worry muddies the water still further instead of clearing it; worry adds to the tangle instead of releasing it; worry beclouds the mind, prevents sane judgment, confuses the reason, and leads one to decisions that never ought to be made, and so to an uncertainty, as vexatious and irritating as is the original problem to be solved. If the worry pointed a way out of the difficulty I would extol worry and regard it as a bitter draught of medicine, to be swallowed in a hurry, but producing a beneficial result. But it never does anything to help; it invariably hinders; it sets one chasing shadows, produces ignes fatui before the eyes, and ultimately leads one into the bog.—George Wharton James, in Quit Your Worrying!

Christian Conversion

Scripture reading, Acts 26: 19-29.

There is a story of a man in a church testimony meeting, not a Latter Day Saint I am glad to say, who arose and recited some of the things he had done. Among these he confessed that he had taken the name of God in vain, had got drunk, and had beaten his wife. "But, thank God," he wound up, "I never lost my religion!"

Now an inquiry as to what constitutes Christian conversion would bring a great number of replies. One would say: "To be a follower of Christ." Another might state, "It means to believe the gospel of Christ." The question comes up: What does it mean to follow Christ? It would not be easy to state all that Christian conversion means, but there are some things which it includes that may be mentioned.

A truly converted person possesses a fine power of discrimination as to what is divine, what is human, and what is diabolical.

He cultivates more than the emotional side of his being. Man is made up of more than emotions. The emotions ought always to be under the control of the intellect.

Conversion includes the transformation from an unsocial to a social point of view. A child of God is interested in other people's souls. How can one be satisfied with the effulgent experiences of Christianity without desiring to share them?

A Christian gives a whole-hearted response to the call of duty.

He is broad in his sympathies.

He possesses the attitudes of Christ. If the things that troubled Christ, trouble you, then you are converted. If the things that interested Christ, interest you, then you are his follower.

A Christian is nice as well as good. Observe the courtesy of Paul before Agrippa in our Scripture reading. One who is converted to Christ is not satisfied with a mediocre intellectual standard, a defective moral standard, an unjust social standard, nor an unworthy spiritual standard.

He has courage. Christ possessed courage. He has humility—Jesus was humble.

Being a thoroughly converted Christian includes an outlook that leaves no room for an inferiority complex.

The Christian possesses the mind and Spirit of Christ. He is happy because he is conscious of the favor of the Father.

To be converted to Christ means to be baptized by one of his accredited servants: "As many as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ."

A child of God is one who keeps the divinely appointed goal before him, hoping that someday he will arrive at the fullness of the stature of Jesus Christ.

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Do the Saints believe no one could be saved since the time of the first church until Joseph Smith came?

Certainly not. We recognize that there was an apostasy from the faith during which no church as an organization was in acceptable harmony with the doctrines ordained as essential to the divinely instituted gospel plan. But this does not mean that no individuals could find acceptance with God, for "whosoever will may come." This period of apostasy is symbolized in Revelation (12: 6) by showing a woman who had fled into the wilderness (state of disorganization and obscurity) as a result of evil forces. But the text states that they should "feed her there" 1260 days, which are believed to be symbols of years. Hence those who remained faithful to God during the period referred to were to be divinely fed.

Does the Reorganized Church accept the baptisms of ministers of other faiths?

No, we do not. We teach a restoration of gospel principles which we recognize others do not believe, and claim to have been divinely commanded to so teach. We claim to be divinely commanded to baptize those who believe this restored faith, but not those who do not believe it. A baptism would not be valid in the sight of God unless accompanied by faith in his message and repentance from "dead works." We have no desire to unduly criticize those who sincerely think otherwise, but believe there can be but "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism" (Ephesians 4: 5), according to the word of God himself. When Jesus authorized his ministry to teach and baptize, it was upon condition that they teach all people "to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" (Matthew 28: 20). No others are authorized, we think, but are perfectly content to leave the matter between them and God, if any think otherwise.

Do you believe divine blessings are given to any except those of your church?

We have no doubt that this has been the case in many instances. Simply because some may not understand every gospel teaching that we hold would not in our opinion exclude them from divine influences and spiritual experiences, but the more fully one is in harmony with God the greater these experiences would naturally be. God reaches all of his creatures with divine love, and he is working in his great universe in countless ways unknown to us all, without doubt. The church has never taught that God cannot and does not work in other ways than through his visible church, but it believes that it has a special mission of truth and righteousness divinely intrusted to it, and that it is His chosen instrument of propagating the fullness of the gospel faith.

Did Peter ever go to Rome during his ministry?

Protestant students who discredit Catholic teaching that Peter was at the head of the church in Rome have endeavored to throw suspicion upon their claim by denying that there is sufficient evidence that he was ever in Rome. But the number of very early writers who refer to Peter at Rome would appear to strongly support it as at least probable. Dionysius of Corinth (fl. 138-161) is quoted verbatim by Eusebius as referring to Peter's ministry at Rome. The name of Peter is declared to have been in one of the cemeteries there, though this might be a misapplication of names. Eusebius states that he went to Rome after having visited Galatia, Bithynia, Asia, and other places, and states that it was said Peter wrote his first epistle to the first named places while in Rome, giving Rome the symbolic name of Babylon (1 Peter 5: 13).

The fact that Peter does not mention Rome in his letter, but writes as if from Babylon, seems to strengthen the view mentioned. It is known that Mark and Paul were in Rome, and not improbable that Peter may have visited there.

Life's Experiences Teach That God Does Answer Prayer

When I was a lad of about seven years of age, my sister who was five years older than I, was taken ill suddenly and seriously with appendicitis. Her life was for a time thought to be quickly drawing to a close. I was of course too young to realize the extreme circumstances. One morning about two o'clock, my mother, now over eighty years of age and still, as she was then, a devoted Latter Day Saint, came into my room and awakened me. "Son," she said, "I want you to get up and pray with me that the life of your sister may be spared, and that the sickness from which she is suffering may be removed." Together we knelt beside my bed; we opened our hearts to God in prayer. Sister still lives, she is well and happy today. The promise had been fulfilled, the "prayer of faith" had "saved the sick."

Four years passed, possibly, mother was walking in the garden one Sunday after returning from church services. She fell in a faint, an older brother and his wife were present, the first cry was "Send for the doctor." Quickly I got the bottle of consecrated oil from the cupboard, and I rubbed it on mother's forehead as she lay as if in death. The anointing was the first thing she knew. I prayed, how I prayed that she might recover! She still lives to be a blessing to her sons and daughters.

More years passed. I was now fourteen living in Western Canada. I was stricken with inflammatory rheumatism. For three years I suffered. Through administration the disease was checked and gradually left me, but the muscles of my arms and legs were gone. I might never walk normally again. I was compelled to use crutches or a cane for a long time, but my faith still held. My strength returned, and in 1911-12 I was able to take part in sports and to walk and run like other boys. The prayers of my mother, brothers and sisters were once more availing.

In 1912, I was injured in a fall from a building, took spinal curvature and suffered torture for weeks. The curvature left my right leg paralyzed, but prayer and faith again prevailed, I walk now, I run, I go about my daily duties as a normal man.

During my illness last referred to above, I was administered to under the hands of Daniel McGregor. I was told that the Lord had a special work for me to perform, and that he had spared my life to this time, and instruction was given to prepare for this work.

In 1925, our little girl was seriously ill. I was called home from work and all the way home the hymn was brought to my memory:

"Mid scenes of confusion and creature complaints,
How sweet to my soul is communion with Saints."

I called the president of the branch and asked him if he would have a special prayer service of the Saints prior to administering to the child. It was arranged. We met in the church at Nevada, Iowa, and afterwards went to the house and Brother Wolf administered. The child was dangerously ill, convulsion following convulsion. The crisis came the next morning and the battle was apparently lost. The nurse on the case said the child was dying. My wife and I stood by unable to do anything but to pray. Breathing stopped, still we prayed. Then our prayers were answered, the breath returned and the child lives today, a normal girl and a Latter Day Saint.

In 1930, I was called and ordained by Apostle J. F. Curtis to the office of elder. I was told by him in prophecy during my ordination that it would be my privilege in my service to see the sick healed under my hands.

In 1932, in the city of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, I was called to administer to a fifteen-year-old girl, who was not a member of the church, her sister who was a member, calling me. The girl was not expected to live, being the victim of peritonitis and the doctors in charge of the case having given her up. I administered as requested. In three weeks she was out of the hospital and home.

There are countless other incidents which I could recall showing the power of prayer coupled, of course, with faith. God still moves, sometimes his ways are not as we might wish them, but he does hear and answer our prayers. My testimony remains the same, I believe in God, in the angel message, in his Son Jesus Christ. May we be permitted to serve more fully in whatever way pleases him.

PRINCE ALBERT, SASKATCHEWAN. GEORGE A. JORDAN.

How I Found the Gospel

I came into the church about three years ago under what seemed to me rather remarkable circumstances. As a child I attended the Methodist Sunday school and heard about prayer. Though I had never been taught to pray I tried of my own accord to do so, and especially between the ages of seven and nine I often knelt at my bedside and prayed for divine blessing and guidance. Later I joined a popular church. After I had grown up I became acquainted with and eventually married a Latter Day Saint, and occasionally attended the services of that church though I never seemed to get very far in understanding the doctrine, until the summer of 1931, when I heard Elder W. A. Smith a number of times. Then the gospel was made very plain to me though I did not offer myself for baptism.

On July 25, 1931, while working for an oil company in Topeka, I was severely injured in an accident, the broken pieces of a five-gallon glass jug cutting my arm most seriously and severing three arteries, causing extreme loss of blood. Barely alive I was carried to the hospital and put on the operating table for emergency treatment. My only prayer was, "Lord be with me." As the ether was administered, I imagined myself sliding from the table, and immediately found myself in a brilliantly lighted room, the light being vastly greater than any I had ever before seen. While I was fully conscious of being in that place, yet I was not conscious of having a body for I seemed to be neither standing, sitting nor lying down.

No one appeared to be in the room except myself but I overheard two persons talking together in conversation. They were speaking of me. One said:

"I want him."

And the other replied, "No, he's not bad enough for you."

The first then said, "He's not good enough for you either."

And the second replied, "Then I'll put him back on earth so that he can make himself good enough for me, and if he does not do it then you can have him, and if he does I have something for him to do."

For days I was too weak to offer much hope of recovery, but one night I prayed that the Lord would show me what to do that I might make myself good enough for his service. The next morning Brother G. G. Cadwell, pastor at Topeka, came to visit me. His employment required him to work at night, and he slept in the daytime. He told me that he had been awakened, and directed of the Spirit to come to the hospital at once. He read from the Bible and instructed me in the gospel, and I was shown my duty. I was particularly impressed with the promise, "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

Some time later I was taken to Kansas City for a further operation for the restoration of my arm, and by December 1, I was able to return to my work. During the time of my convalescence I had ample opportunity to continue my study of the church and its doctrine, reading many books and papers, and just before returning to my work I was baptized by Brother W. A. Smith. I am still rejoicing in the true gospel, and am striving to fit myself for worthy service for the Lord.

First Elder's Visit in Twenty-two Years

I have been a member of the church since 1906, at which time I was baptized by Brother J. W. Smith, at Clitherall, Minnesota. My husband was baptized by Brother Penn Martin, at Frazee, Minnesota, in 1916. I thank God for the Sunday school privileges I had at Clitherall with Sister Eleanor Whiting as superintendent, for it was then the foundation of my faith was laid. I trust I shall be instrumental in helping others.

It was our pleasure to have Brother O. W. Okerlind with us last week, the first time we have been visited by an elder during the twenty-two years we have lived here.

During his short stay, we arranged for a meeting at the Conquerville Schoolhouse, which is eight miles from our home. The schoolhouse was crowded and Brother Okerlind remarked that he had never met a more interesting crowd of nonmembers. We hope he can be with us again in the near future, although his territory includes the Province of Saskatchewan.

On Sunday morning we motored to Skiff, a distance of forty-eight miles to visit Sister Smith and her son, Wayne. In the evening, another meeting was held in the schoolhouse, in which Brother Okerlind delivered another of his instructive sermons.

We would appreciate having any of our missionaries visit us while traveling through Southern Alberta.

We enjoy reading the Herald very much, and our prayers are for the upbuilding of God's kingdom here on earth.

A Singular Blessing

I should like to relate an incident which happened during the last General Conference and shows the watch care of God over those of us who could not attend.

My husband left on Thursday with others from here to attend conference, and on Saturday the children, Sister Lewis, and Sister Brooner and I went to Sapulpa, to spend the day. I left my two and four-year-old sons in the car alone while Sister Lewis and I went into a shop. When we came out only the baby was in the car. Several people were gathered there, and they told us that Preston had climbed out of the car, started across the street, following us, no doubt, and a car had struck him. He was now on his way to the hospital.

The child was on the operating table when we arrived. His leg was broken between the knee and ankle, collar bone broken, and his right eye was swollen shut from a place just above it where he had hit the pavement when he was knocked down.

The doctor set the broken bone and had X-ray pictures made of it and of his head. From these we learned that the skull was fractured, and the physician advised me strongly not to take the boy away from the hospital for several days as it might require an immediate operation to save his life.

I hardly knew what to do. I did not want to call Bill from the conference as it was the first one he had ever attended. But I knew that I must get at least one elder as soon as possible, and so I left Sister Lewis with Preston while I called Tulsa. With Sister Lancaster's help Brother O. A. McDowell was informed of our need, and came to our assistance in a few hours.

Before the administration one could see the pulse beat in the fractured place on his head, and the child would ask us to take "that" off his head when there wasn't anything on it. But afterwards one could not see the pulse beat, and he never complained of his head again. He said that it did not hurt.

The relatives insisted that I send for my husband, and it was late Sunday afternoon when he got here. Preston had been wanting to go home all day. So Monday morning we brought him home. If it had not been for the broken leg he would have been out playing the next day. The doctor put the leg in a cast to protect it, and the child would scoot around all over the place. His right eye does not open quite as wide as the other, but outside of that one cannot tell that he was hurt.

I am very thankful for this and other blessings. But it seems to me that the real test of our thankfulness and appreciation is the way we conduct ourselves after the blessings have been given. I often wonder if I am really doing the best I can. We have five children to rear for future usefulness in the great work, and it is our hope and prayer that we may do our work well.

Know the Church in Oregon and California

When my wife and I first came into the church we took the Herald. That was nearly thirty-five years ago and we lived at Monterey, California. We continued to take it when we moved to Milton, Oregon. I wrote a letter to it soon after we arrived in our new location, and this was noticed by Brother Albert Carmichael who wrote us a personal letter. He was especially interested in us as Monterey was in his field of church work; he had met us there.

We have enjoyed a branch at Walla Walla the past three years with Brother Robert Chapman as our pastor, but previous to that time we had had little organized connection with the church for a number of years. Yet the spark had remained in our hearts holding us to the faith and not allowing us to unite with any of the many denominations with whose members we mingled.

After we arrived in Oregon we were soon sought out by missionaries of the church, and many were the elders and other church officers to whom we gave hospitality among them Brother and Sister Keeler, Brother Fordham, Brother Tom Chapman, and others.

Brother and Sister Keeler authorized us to organize a Sunday school which we maintained for many years, but we were never organized into a branch at Milton. If my memory is correct Brother and Sister Keeler authorized us to organize a Sunday school at New Monterey, California, soon after we joined the church, I having been elected superintendent there as well as here.

In California we had the pleasure of meeting many old-time representatives of the church which it might be of interest to name for the benefit of members who were contemporary with them if not personally acquainted with them in the work. Besides the Keelers there were Brothers Scott, Daily, Frank Sheehy, Fred Lawn, Albert Carmichael, and others who names I cannot now recall.

Our pastor and wife drove to General Conference this spring and on their return trip came through a good part of Missouri and of Iowa, Brother Chapman's native State. They are enthusiastic about that being a desirable country for the Saints to live in. Another husband and wife, Brother and Sister Percy Howard, recently united with the church and also made the trip to conference by train. They, too, were greatly inspired by what they saw. Brother Howard is our Sunday school superintendent.

Grateful for Divine Protection

I can look back over my life and see where God has directed my footsteps and has been mindful of me; in times of danger he has protected me and my family.

One time nearly two years ago as we were driving from Iowa to our home here in the Ozarks, we unexpectedly struck ice and crossroads at the same time. A car was coming at about the same distance from the crossroads as we were. The driver evidently applied his brakes as we did ours. Both cars turned around—the other fellow's turned twice—and missed each other in turning. Such an escape, without the slightest jar, seemed impossible. My heart went out to God in prayer and thankfulness. Through no other power could we have been saved injury and possibly death.

I hope to live worthy God's continued protection and care.

I had the burning desire to know God's will and to do it, to know God personally, to feel his Spirit permeating my life. I have found that if I do not walk near him in my everyday life, joy and peace elude me.

I pray that I shall reflect Christ in my life to such an extent that I may help to bring in the honest in heart who are seeking the fullness of the gospel.

Help and Comfort From the Lord

During a sick spell my ten-year-old son, Clayton, became irrational one night with high fever. I was alone and was frightened, but the thought came to me to pray. After a brief prayer, I looked at him and knew that my prayer had been answered; he looked and acted naturally, turned over and went to sleep.

A few weeks later the boy was again sick, having a very sore throat. My husband said that I had better see a doctor, but I told Clayton that I felt the Lord had a blessing in store for him if we would do our part. After he had taken some of the consecrated oil, and I had prayed for him, he got up, and that afternoon went to school.

My older son, Cletous, who will soon be fourteen years old, had worn glasses and taken treatments since his fourth year, to straighten his eyes, until last September when he broke his glasses. He has not worn them since, and we feel that a blessing has come to him through the faithful use of the consecrated oil. He was released by the eye specialists who was unable to do him any good.

One morning while about my work, the back of my head and neck began hurting, gradually growing more severe, and I realized that I would not be able to accomplish much that day. Again came the thought to pray, and I arose from prayer with the pain almost entirely gone, and spent a happy day.

During the late General Conference I enjoyed a wonderful spirit even though I could not be present at the sessions. With the closing of this gathering, however, I became depressed. I have longed to be and have my family among the Saints, but in answer to earnest prayer a divine message was given to me through a faithful Saint, telling me that my work in this place is not yet finished. My preparation is not yet accomplished, I have been told; and I am being molded for a greater work.

About the time I received this message I was asked to teach a primary class and to be pianist for that department of the Christian Church where the boys and I attend. How much I realized the truth of the words of our President who said in part, "When God has a task for a man to do, that man is tried; tried to the limit of his powers." I am praying for strength to prepare for the work the Lord would have me do.

Will Help Isolated Members or Friends

Wife and I hope constantly that the good work is on the upward trend, and that the Saints are deeply interested in the government of God. As a people we should be very much concerned about telling the old, old story to those who are honest in heart.

We are living in remarkable times, times when the children of God should be awake to their duty, alert in talking of and preparing for Zion. We should make the most of our many opportunities.

Due to coming here for my wife's health, we have lost much by being absent from a branch. However, her condition is improving, and we are hoping that we shall be able to return sometime this summer and resume our responsibility in the district. Will the Saints continue to remember her in prayer?

If there are any Saints or friends living in this part of the country to whom we might be able to give assistance in holding meetings, please drop me a line. I am an elder, and having no secular work to do at this time; will be glad to help the gospel cause in any place that I can.

D. C. CLEVINGER.

He Leads Us Through Trials

The letters in the Herald teach me that others have trials and temptations even as I do. My home is not all I want it to be, but it is improving. I have seven children and three of these belong to the church. It is my prayer that the others will soon come in. I try to live the best I know, openly, frankly, sincerely, and I thank God that there is an all-seeing eye watching us. The Lord knows all things, and he judges our hearts.

My prayers have been answered many times. My baby was healed through administration which makes me know that we have a living God. He helps us through our temptations and trials. I trust the Lord will ever be with me and help me. Will the Saints pray that I may be healed of my afflictions?

Thankful for Blessings

I enjoy reading the Herald, and I am happy that I can once again take it. I am so thankful that the Lord answered my prayers, and sent an elder to my home to administer to my son. Although he was taken from us, we feel that he received relief through the administration.

Through the help of Sister Brown, the following elders were with us, Brothers Waller, Lincoln, Oakman, Nelson, and Levitt. May the Lord bless his ministers in their work.

Missionary Activities in Western Michigan

Finds Devoted Saints There—Prospects Good for Future

It was a considerable surprise to me at the conclusion of last General Conference, to learn that I had been appointed to labor in Western Michigan District. The reading of the missionary appointee list at the close of each General Conference, brings anxious moments to each minister of the gospel. Some are made happy and some are sad as the list is read.

After thirty-eight years of missionary work, laboring in eight different fields, mostly in the north central part of the United States and in Manitoba, Canada, I had my first experience this year in traveling by water. I crossed Lake Michigan from Milwaukee, Wisconsin, to Ludington, Michigan.

On my way home from the conference, I spent a few days at Muscatine, Iowa, a former place of labor. I was happy to meet with the Saints there and to offer them the good cheer of the late conference. There I preached a few sermons and visited in the homes of as many as time would permit.

After spending a little time at home, I began arranging to start for my new field. At Milwaukee I stopped several days, preaching the funeral sermon of Sister Hazel Couey. Sister Hazel was a kind young mother and a good member of the church. She left several young children, her husband, other relatives and many friends. I also preached for the Saints at Milwaukee and was pleased to know that the members there are eagerly struggling on, trying to keep the gospel light burning.

Leaving that city on one of the large lake boats, we traveled about six hours before we arrived at Ludington. This was a quiet, pleasant journey.

After some delay I was able to find the home of Brother and Sister John Randall, and remained there till the next day when they took me to Freesoil to the home of Brother Buell Shelley, district president. He is a pleasant, kindly man, honest and faithful in his church work, one who has seen much sorrow in the last few years. His loyalty to the church is earnest and sincere.

After one day at Brother Shelley's home, we went to Bendon, sixty-five miles away, to attend an all-day meeting which was marked by good attendance and enjoyment. There I was pleased to meet Brothers Byron Doty, and R. D. Davis whom I had met in other years; also good Brother James Davis, long-time missionary of the church in Michigan, and his wife.

Leaving Benden after a week in which we held some good meetings, I went to Traverse City to become acquainted with the members there. June 9 and 10, I attended the district conference at Cadillac, where everyone seemed to enjoy the meetings. There I remained for ten days holding meetings most of the time. I was pleased to find some earnest, kindly Saints in that city who did all they could to make my stay pleasant, and gave good assistance in the meetings.

Later I held a week of meetings at Freesoil and became better acquainted with the Saints. While there I stayed in the home of Brother and Sister John Bennet, also some of the time at Brother Shelley's home a few miles from town.

July 8, we had a very good all-day meeting near Kingsley. Scattered families who do not have the privilege of attending regular meetings, were present at this service.

Saints also came from distant places to attend the all-day service at Marion July 15. Before going to the reunion at the Park of the Pines, I spent most of a week holding meetings at Marion.

There are many devoted Saints in this district, and the prospects for future development are good. May God bless all his Saints and hasten Zion's redemption.

Kirtland, Ohio

Temple Is Scene of Happy Activities

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Anderson and daughter, Margaret, of Iowa City, Iowa, and formerly residents of Lamoni, have been recent visitors among old friends at Kirtland. Mrs. Anderson, daughter of Apostle William H. Kelley, lived with her parents at Kirtland for a number of years and greatly enjoyed meeting old friends.

Patriarch and Sister F. G. Pitt were recent visitors in the William F. Webb home. Brother Pitt reports the birth of his eighteenth great-grandchild. He has fifteen grandchildren also.

Recent visitors at the Temple have included two students from the Architecture College of the University of Illinois, also Doctor Young and wife from the University of Kansas.

Elder and Sister E. E. Closson and son were visitors here recently, and Brother Closson's mother and sister were with them. They were visiting Sister E. E. Closson's brother and family, Professor R. Travis, of Western Reserve University, Cleveland.

Patriarch and Sister John F. Martin and daughter, Frances, former residents of Kirtland, are living here again.

Many mourn the passing of Sister F. T. Haynes, of Cleveland whose burial was in Kirtland Cemetery. She was a noble woman, kind and patient, and she did a good work in Kirtland District.

Sister Rosa B. Webb's funeral was also held from the Temple. Her home was at Lorain, Ohio. She leaves two brothers, Frank C. and Earnest A. Webbe, and many friends to mourn. Interment was in the Euclid, Ohio, Cemetery.

In recent months there have been three weddings of interest to Kirtland members and their friends. In the latter part of April Sister Ruth Davies, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Davies of Kirtland, became the bride of Arthur Burt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Burt, also of Kirtland. The wedding took place in Kirtland Temple, Elder John L. Cooper reading the marriage lines. Only the immediate families and a few close friends were present. Harrison Davis, brother of the bride, acted as best man and Miss Mary Ellen Burt, sister of the bridegroom, was bridesmaid. Both young people are graduates of Kirtland High School, and they are now making their home at Indianapolis.

The Temple was the scene of another pretty wedding June 12, when Miss Geraldine Vivian Van Den Burgh, of Cleveland, and Brother Neland A. Wilson, of Kirtland, were married. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Van Den Burgh, and the bridegroom, a Kirtland boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Whitcomb. Elder John L. Cooper officiated. The bridal pair are now at home in Cleveland.

Sister Mary Belle Gill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Gill, of Kirtland, and Brother David Milton Lewis, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Lewis, also of Kirtland, were married July 8, in the Temple, Patriarch F. G. Pitt, of Orlando, Florida, officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her father, and was attended by her twin sister, Mrs. William F. Webbe, as matron of honor, by Miss Maxine Lewis, sister of the bridegroom, maid of honor, and by Mrs. Nephi Brain, of Cleveland, another sister as bridesmaid. Little Janet Wells, daughter of Doctor and Mrs. H. S. Wells was train

Among those who ministered to the success of the Western Montana reunion which closed August 5, at Race Track, were Elder Ward L. Christy and Patriarch George W. Thorburn. It had been thirty years or more since these two veterans in the gospel had labored together in the missionary field.

Although weak in body from recent illness, Brother Thorburn was able to be present during the reunion, and occupied the pulpit on the first Sunday morning. Brother and Sister Christy are making many friends in the West to which field of labor they came from Saskatchewan. At this reunion they endeared themselves especially to the young people.

Summer Program Holds Interest for All

A play, "The Challenge of the Cross," was presented Sunday morning, July 15, which deeply impressed the congregation. As the opening number, Sisters Hazel Thomas, Ruby Angus, and Brothers Wayne Thomas and Hal Rennels sang "The Way of the Cross." Then Sister Madge Thomas gave a descriptive pantomime of "Rock of Ages," assisted by the quartet. Sister Anna Cramer took the leading part in the play which followed, being supported by Madge Thomas, Mary Cramer, Marian Angus, Anna and Maud Esther Watkins and Edith Ress.

Preceding this service the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. David Thomas at Baltz-blessed by Elders John D. Carlisle and William L. Goudy, and given the name, Marion Eugene.

Evening church services have been discontinued during the summer months and Pastor Carlisle has been spreading the gospel in surrounding communities.

The women's department enjoyed an all-day picnic and meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Davis Thomas at Baltzley Valley July 18. A pleasant time was spent in games, hymn singing, and conversation. Group pictures were taken. Twenty-four enjoyed this occasion.

Recent events in the young people's department include a steak fry held at the summer home of A. B. Klar June 24, and an early morning devotional service at the historic log church at Schoenbrunn, in charge of their supervisor, Elder William L. Goudy.

Saints of this branch wish to offer deepest sympathy to the family of Sister Elenora Haynes. She was a visitor here on several occasions, and all were sorry to hear of her death.

Announcement was made recently of the marriage of Sister Grace Robson and David O. Briggs jr., which was solemnized September 13, 1933, at Wheeling, West Virginia, by Elder Louis E. Serig.

Kirtland Temple provided the setting for the marriage of Elder William L. Goudy and Mrs. Florence Maurer, of New Philadelphia, solemnized July 28, by Elder John L. Cooper. Following the ceremony they left for a trip to Niagara Falls and other points of interest.

Local Saints are much interested in Kirtland reunion which opened August

9. Some have been able to attend sessions there.

Sacrament service August 5, was well attended. Elders John D. Carlisle and Charles Cramer were in charge.

Denver, Colorado

Full Program of Activities Elicits Interest of All

At the evening service, June 3, the religious drama, "These Things Shall Be," was presented, with the following members in the cast: Audrey Bennett, Howard Sheehy, Dorothy Jones, Edgar Jones, Vernon Young, Fred Kemp, Farr Kemp, Donald Graybill and Burrell Shupe. This was the play given by Denver young people in the Religious Drama Tournament sponsored by the Colorado Council of Religious Education, and it was directed by Mrs. Fred Black. The play was well staged and acted, and won second place in the group on the night it was given.

June 10 being Children's Day, the eleven o'clock service was devoted to them, with the following program: Organ prelude; trumpet solo, Billy Radcliffe; hymn, "I Love to Tell the Story"; prayer, Raymond Robertson; vocal solo, Betty Ann Green; children's pageant, "Out of the Bible," directed by Sisters Myrtle Smith and Elsie Harper. Thelia Alvina, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Williamson, was blessed by Elders Glaude Smith and E. J. Williams.

Elder C. L. Bruno administered the rite of baptism to Juanita Coffee and Marjorie Starks, June 17. The little son of Mr. and Mrs. Hayden Dow was blessed by Elders Glaude Smith and E. J. Williams and given the name Robert Hayden. The child is the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Coven.

Tuesday evening, June 26, the young people held a wiener roast in North Turkey Creek Canon. The weather was fine and a large crowd enjoyed the outing.

The following report of activities of the Loyal Workers, who are the older women of the adult department, is a creditable record of diligence and devotion.

Mrs. Ella Brannan writes: "We have held twenty-six full-day sessions, spending the time in quilting and discussion. On three of these days social meetings were held and covered-dish luncheons served, and guests, including our older members who do not attend regularly, were invited. We worked with the Columbins on the bazaar and the quilt display. We have contributed to the storehouse and have visited among the sick and others. During this period we have earned $102.49, which sum has been used in carrying on the work of the branch."

Sacrament service Sunday morning, July 1, with the pastor in charge, was well attended. Special prayers were offerred for the sick, followed by a number of brief testimonies.

In the evening the newly-elected officers of the branch were installed. The sermon by Brother Glaude A. Smith was devoted to the duties and responsibilities of the officers and members, with a plea to "put on the whole armor of God." He pointed out many ways in which service might be rendered and the meetings made more uplifting. There are many in the branch who have talents which they might use for the good of all.

Denver Saints and those of surrounding territory were happy to have a visit from President Floyd M. McDowell, July 6, 7 and 8. While most of his time was spent among the members of the priesthood, all who heard his two sermons on Sunday, July 8, were blessed by his ministration, and received much food for thought.

Brother McDowell was accompanied on this trip by his wife and a daughter.

Western Montana District Reunion

Daily Program and Good Workers Contribute to Inspiration of This Gathering

Western Montana district reunion is over. The earlier date this year found the local residents very busy in the harvest fields; nevertheless the attendance was a little above that of previous years, especially at the evening services. The reunion opened July 27 and closed August 5.

The daily program was prayer meeting in the morning followed by class work; lecture in the afternoon and preaching in the evening, except on the two evenings designated by the district officers and reunion committee for entertainment. Arrangement had also been previously made by the above officers for a half-hour of program work preceding the evening sermon. These programs consisted of religious plays and vocal and instrumental music. This helped considerably toward the success of the reunion.

The Saints of this district believe that if the responsibility of carrying on the work of the church is to rest upon the shoulders of the boys and girls of today, now is the time to begin the preparation. When the opportunity of helping in the services begins, the development is more rapid.

Brother and Sister Ward L. Christy were delegated to assist in the reunion this year. Brother Christy chose, "The Scientific Basis of Immortality," for his subject in class work, using the work of President E. A. Smith, and Billingsly in his outlines. Sister Christy gave splendid instruction on how to teach religion in the home by the use of story and song.

Brother and Sister Christy endeared themselves to the young people by an interesting way in which they handled the early morning devotionals. One morning the prayer meeting was held out in the open away from camp and afterward everyone helped make breakfast over the campfire. Another morning the devotional was held in the church building after which the young people went on a hike while Brother and Sister Christy with the help of the cooks made breakfast and took it to an appointed place. Everyone gave an account of what interested him most on the hike, and several decided that nothing was more interesting than the breakfast.

The people attending the reunion greatly enjoyed the special musical numbers contributed by Brother and Sister Christy. The duet, "Have You Counted the Cost?" was especially beautiful and they sang it a second time on request.

Junior church was in charge of Sister Thorburn assisted by Frances Matheson and Bertha Beck.

Thursday afternoon was given over to the women's group for a program and social time. After an interesting and varied program ice cream and cake were served. Sister Thorburn was in charge.

Considerable improvement was made on the grounds this year in the way of building sleeping quarters to accommodate visitors and also building a permanent stage and equipping it with curtains. Several of the members spent much time and labor in getting this ready. Special credit is due Brother Perrin, of Deer Lodge, who not only contributed his time and labor, but also considerable building material.

The preaching services were conducted by Brother Christy, Elder L. O. Wildermuth, and Elder Gomer Wells, who is visiting in the West.

Special mention should be given the sermon by Patriarch George W. Thorburn. Although weak in body because of recent illness, he was blessed by the Lord with sufficient strength to be present almost the entire time of the reunion. He occupied the first Sunday morning using, "Have Faith in God," as his subject. It has been thirty years or more since he and Brother Christy labored together in missionary work, and he felt a strong desire to occupy in the pulpit once more with his early comrade in gospel work. He bore a strong testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel and stated that if the knowledge should suddenly come to him that all was ended with this life, he would go on living as he now is because of the comfort and satisfaction he received here. His testimony in regard to his conversion, his work in the church, and his faith in its final accomplishment was strengthening to all who heard it.

After eight days of enjoying the hal-lowed influence of the Spirit to a marked degree in prayer services, sermons, and class work, the reunion closed with a conference at which time the following officers were sustained to serve during the coming year: District president, N. P. Coleman, of Great Falls; coun-

Mobile Branch Grows Numerically

Mobile, Alabama, Branch is making 1934 an outstanding year in numerical growth. Pastor Franklin Steiner has baptized fifty candidates this year, and others are near the kingdom. He expects this number to be greatly enlarged before the year is out.

Local Mobile priesthood members, fired with missionary fervor, are conducting three missions in neighboring vicinities, Bayou La Batre, Orchard, and Whistler.

Seeks Our Prayers

Miss Helen Stevenson, of Concordia, Kansas, seeks the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed of a bad case of blood poisoning in her hand. Though not a member of the church, Miss Stevenson has faith in the power of divine healing. She wishes to unite with the church at her first opportunity.

The 1934 Reunion Season

The two months of reunion season, now gone, have to their credit a series of outstanding gatherings in different parts of the United States and Canada. Though in some cases reunion crowds have been smaller than those in previous years, the spirit of the gatherings has been rich in fellowship, understanding, and peace. Reunion programs have brought new and helpful experiences in worship, class work, sermons, and recreation to the Saints and their friends. The last reunion of the season, that of Eastern Montana, at Fairview, will close September 2.

selors, Doctor F. L. Casey, of Polson and E. E. Eliason, of Great Falls; secretary, Mrs. Eva Meagher, of Deer Lodge; church school director, Mrs. Victoria Thorburn, of Deer Lodge; bishop's agent and treasurer, N. P. Coleman, and musical director, Mrs. Jessie Kendall, of Anacanda.

The conference voted unanimously for a reunion next year.

A rising vote of thanks was given Brother M. G. Perrin, of Deer Lodge, for his untiring work and his donation of lumber to make rooms which were used as sleeping quarters.

The Sunday morning worship began with an inspiring prayer and sacrament service in charge of Elders Ward L. Christy and Gomer Wells. Admonition to the members, especially to the young, was delivered by the Holy Spirit through Doctor F. L. Casey. The Spirit of God felt in abundance at this meeting, continued in all the day's services.

In the afternoon eight persons were baptized by Elder Ward L. Christy: Jean Eliason, of Deer Lodge; Rose Davis, of Helena; Mildred Davis, of Helena; Marjorie Golden, of Missoula; Mrs. Forrest Davis, of Helena; Mrs. Guy Davis, of Helena; Roann Threet, of Great Falls, and Walter Peterson, of Race Track.

In a district such as this much of the work must be carried on through personal evangelism. The result of a long, saintly life of faithful service was manifested on this day when two daughters and two granddaughters of Sister Margaret Davis entered the waters of baptism.

After the confirmation service in the afternoon, a sermon was delivered by Elder L. O. Wildermuth.

In the evening a play, "The Gate Beautiful," was presented by the young people, of Race Track, after which Elder Ward L. Christy gave the closing sermon.

Kansas City Stake

Sister Emma Bramwelt, of Kansas City, and Brother Jesse Mincher, of Sabetha, Kansas, were united in marriage by Elder Henry F. Davis, recently. This couple has the best wishes of the Saints here.

Elder and Sister Henry F. Davis are happy to announce the birth of a daughter, Alta Marie.

Elder T. C. Lentell, of Mount Washington, has been with these Saints for several Sunday evenings. His sermons have been forceful and convincing. These services have been held on the lawn of Brother Lawrence, and despite the heat, many have been present.

Elder Henry F. Davis has given a series of sermons recently, on "The Immortality of the Soul."

Sister Bramwell has been ill recently, and also George Binney. They desire the prayers of the Saints in their behalf.

Independence

The Stone Church Boy Choir, with their conductor, J. Glenn Fairbanks, left Saturday morning in motor cars for the Century of Progress Exposition, in Chicago, where they are to sing tomorrow afternoon. Other programs have been given along the way.

Saturday night the choir sang at the Saints' church at Plano, Illinois, and there the boys spent the night in the Boy Scout camp. Early Sunday morning the caravan pushed on toward Chicago, where the choir gave a concert at the eleven o'clock hour at First Chicago Latter Day Saint Church, and in the evening at Central Church. Their program at the exposition will last from 5:45 to 6:30 o'clock. Yesterday and today the choir spent sight-seeing at the Fair.

This choir organization was formed more than two years ago, Brother Fairbanks being its sponsor. At intervals he has been assisted by other directors. The choir gave a concert at the Stone Church, July 27, and took an offering to help defray the expenses of this trip.

"Spiritual Gifts" was the theme of a most interesting sermon delivered by President Elbert A. Smith at the Campus Sunday night. This was another of his series of sermons delivered to the united congregations of the church in their out-door auditorium on the Campus grounds, and a large congregation gave him an attentive hearing. Saints of the Mount Washington Church, Kansas City Stake, were guests for the evening, and their pastor, Elder W. F. Bolinger, assisted in the stand.

Preparation among the singers of the Harvest Festival Chorus continues with much interest. Brother Anway, the director, met with representatives of Holden Stake in Holden Sunday afternoon, in a very spirited rehearsal. The unusual interest and enthusiasm with which all singers seem to be carrying on, portends a fine rendition on October 7. On this Thursday, August 23, Brother Anway will meet with all Kansas City, Missouri, singers at Central Church.

Stone Church

"Conscience" was the subject of the second of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington's lectures on Sunday morning, to a large Stone Church congregation. Next Sunday he will give the concluding one of his three talks.

Music for the morning program was furnished by soloists of the Stone Church Choir. Mrs. Pauline Arnson, soprano, sang "The Lord Is My Shepherd," and Virgil Woodside, baritone, sang "Spirit Divine." George Anway led the congregational music, and Mrs. Hazel Withee was the organist.

At the close of the preaching service, the congregation was asked to remain seated and the wedding ceremony of Edith Beebe and J. Charles Magargee, of Independence, was solemnized, Elder D. O. Cato officiating. Preceding the reading of the marriage service appropriate solo numbers were sung by Pauline James Arnson and Velma Brocaw Nunn, Hazel Scott Withee accompanying at the organ. Both the bride and the bridegroom are members of the Stone Church Choir.

Among those who have passed away in recent days have been several elderly members of the church. Sister Laura Ann Bear, ninety years of age, died at her home August 9. Sister Deloria Jane Coil, seventy-six years old, passed away August 4. Sister Mary N. Light, seventy-seven years, died the night of August 5, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Hattie Echternacht, and the interment was at Hastings, Nebraska. Sister Margaret Louise Wilke, seventy-one, passed away August 15, at her home in Independence, and burial was in Saint Joseph. Sympathy is extended to the bereaved families of these deceased members.

Second Church

Elder Vernon E. Reese, the eleven o'clock speaker, Sunday morning, chose for his subject Alma 17:65, from the Book of Mormon. Special music was furnished by the quartet, solos being sung by Mrs. Sam Inman and Mrs. Lawrence Nave.

Richard Dillee was in charge of the junior service. The speaker, Archie Davis, chose for his subject "The Bible." Marie Knight sang a solo after which a short play, "The Baby Moses," was given. A pantomime, portraying the Sunday school hour, followed the play.

Walnut Park Church

The Walnut Park Church School Orchestra for some time has been recognized as the leading Sunday school orchestra of Independence. During the past week this group, under the direction of Brother Orlando Nace, went to Kingston, Missouri, to take part in a State-wide contest sponsored by the Fox Hunters Association, and placed fifth, returning with a cash award of fifty dollars. In addition to numbers by the orchestra the program given included special selections by Delta Nace, Mildred Burrough, and Lois Jean Williams, together with numbers by a mixed quartet composed of Delta Nace, Evelyn Phillips, Arion Chapman, and Milford Nace, and by a brass quartet including Joe Countryman, Henry Countryman, Fred Mollison, and Sanford Downs.

Sister Thelma Countryman played a piano number for the church school following the class period Sunday morning. Evangelist Albert Carmichael has been making instructive talks to the Galilean Class for several Sundays, and will continue the series for some time.

Evangelist Carmichael was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour Sunday morning, the congregation greatly enjoying his sermon on "Inheritances." "Bless the Lord, O My Soul" was sung by the choir preceding the sermon. The junior service in the lower auditorium heard talks by Sister E. E. Moorman and Kenneth Morford and a story by Sister John Lentell.

The program for the Religio Sunday evening was a concert by a new band under the direction of Brother Fred Mollison. This was the first public appearance of this band since its organization, and their numbers were greatly appreciated by the audience.

Enoch Hill Church

Funeral services for Billie Hursh, who passed away August 12, were held at the George Carson Funeral Home August 13, Elder A. M. Chase in charge. Billie made his home with his grandmother, Mrs. Bert Green. He was the son of Mrs. Vera Fabyunkey, of Fairmount, Missouri.

A meeting was held following the joint prayer service Wednesday, regarding the Harvest Festival. A committee was chosen to attend to the details for a booth. This is composed of Sister Irene Roberts, Velma Jones and Leonard Roberts. These three are leaders of young people.

God is good, and it is His pleasure to help those who are seeking to help themselves. Or to put it in a way that even our agnostic friends can receive, Nature is on the side of the man or woman who is seeking to live naturally, that is, rightly.—George Wharton James, in Quit Your Worrying!

The opening sacrament service at Far West Reunion

Far West Stake Reunion Opens at Stewartville

Four hundred people were present for the opening service of the Far West Stake reunion Thursday evening, August 16, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Several years ago this service was considered an innovation in the opening of reunion, but now the people look forward to it and come out in full attendance. A piano prelude "Holy, Holy, Holy" was followed by a color ceremony by the Boy Scouts, then the service launched into the regular communion hour.

This is the forty-fifth annual reunion to be held in Far West stake and district, and its theme is "Now the Opportunity Time to Be a Latter Day Saint." Stake President Ward A. Hougas, in his opening talk, emphasized the need of members' going beyond the minimum requirements of church membership and growing into full sainthood.

In charge of the reunion this year are Elder Hougas, stake president; Elder Frank Hinderks, his counselor; Henry L. Livingston, stake bishop; Elder E. Y. Hunker, guest speaker, and Evan Ehlers, chorister.

Recent showers had helped to cool the temperature, and the grounds were in fine condition for the reunion. Seventy tents were erected and occupied on the first day, and this number grew until after Sunday.

On Sunday the musical numbers included several selections by a young girls' chorus, the Dulcianas, organized last June by Sister Ruth Hayden at Saint Joseph.

Tabor, Iowa

Appreciate Works of Devoted Pastor

Children's Day was observed July 8, at Tabor. A program was given by the boys and girls under the direction of Miss Maurine Green, at the eleven o'clock hour. Immediately afterward, the Saints drove into the country and five were baptized by Elder N. L. Mortimore. They were confirmed by Elders H. P. Larsen, N. L. Mortimore and C. W. Forney. That evening at eight o'clock the sermon was delivered by Tabor's pastor, Elder H. P. Larsen, of Council Bluffs.

Brother Larsen has been pastor of Tabor Branch for nearly three years. Although he lives at Council Bluffs, he and his wife and daughter have missed few Sundays meeting with members here, a distance of sixty miles round trip. Many Sundays he has driven more than one hundred miles when visiting Saints before he returned home; this branch takes in a large territory. He is happy in his work and is making a real contribution. Brothers H. N. Pierce and C. W. Forney are his associates.

July 15, was district day and an all-day meeting was held at Tabor church, a good crowd being present. At 10 a. m. devotional service was led by Elder O. A. Currie, of Council Bluffs, the theme being "Stewardship of Time and Talent." At eleven o'clock Elder Lee Landon, of Council Bluffs, preached. Basket dinner at noon was served in the park. Then at 2:30 p. m. the members met again at the church where special numbers were enjoyed and the sermon was by Bishop W. T. Wellman, of Omaha. That evening Elder Amos Graybill, of Council Bluffs, brought the day to a close with another good sermon.

They are planning a tournament with the men's class of Central Church. The men's class is the largest class in the church school. Brother Frank Almond, their teacher, has been giving some very interesting lectures.

Sister Leeds Nelson, recreation leader, was in charge of the games.

An impressive wedding ceremony took place June 17, at which time Irene Woods was united in marriage to Marvin Adams. The ceremony was read by Elder H. H. Sevey, at the home of the bride's sister. Garden flowers and ferns were the decorations, and a wedding luncheon was served at noon.

Mason City Saints enjoyed having District President Henry Castings and President F. M. McDowell, of Des Moines, with them June 22. Both elders occupied the pulpit, preaching helpful sermons. Sister Smith opens her home every Sunday for Sunday school and preaching services.

Park of the Pines Reunion

Northern and Western Michigan Members Enjoy Outstanding Reunion

The fourteenth annual reunion of the Park of the Pines was held August 3 to 12. The reunion was outstanding because of the type of class work which was attended quite consistently by a fairly large number. The class work was divided into five sections, the junior church and kindergarten, under Miss Mary Schreur's supervision, with Beryl Scott, Ella Wilson, and Mrs. B. H. Hewitt, of Toronto, assisting; young people's classes, under Elder B. H. Hewitt; adult group class on "Stewardship," under Elder J. Charles Mottashed, and the adult women were taught, "Religion in the Home," by Sister Nellie Mottashed.

The musical contributions were of a high order, the vocal, under Miss Louise Evans, of Grand Rapids, and the instrumental music in charge of Elder B. H. Doty, of Traverse City.

Preaching and prayer services were sources of refreshment and encouragement to those attending. The entire reunion period was one of religious association in all of its activities.

One outstanding feature of the reunion was the camp paper, called "The Whispering Pines," edited by Miss Arliss Dick, of Traverse City. The paper contributed much to the merriment of the camp, and yet it did not neglect the more dignified phases of the work.

The General Conference appointees, who were present and who made a substantial contribution to the success of the reunion, were Apostle D. T. Williams, Elder J. J. Ledsworth, Elder A. C. Barmore, and Elder Leonard Houghton.

The dining room was ably managed by Sister Sarah Schreur, of Gaylord, Michigan.

Elder Allen Schreur, of Gaylord, in this reunion as in previous ones, was the focal point of activities until he was called away through the sickness and death of this sister. Apostle D. T. Williams served in his place during his absence.

The Saints left the reunion reconsecrated to the service of God. Visitors were present from all parts of Michigan, as well as Toronto, Hamilton, Sault Ste Marie, and Windsor, Ontario. Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, Illinois, and Wisconsin were also represented.

Baltimore, Maryland

Young People Prepare for Autumn Program

The young people of Baltimore had a delightful time July 28, when their organization sponsored a wiener roast. Hymns and old songs were sung around the campfire, and several of the boys gave humorous sketches. A good swim was part of the program of entertainment. Among those present was their leader, Brother Arthur Edwards who enjoys the good times of the young and sincerely leads them to a consideration and study of the good things of the church.

Since vacation time is almost past this group is endeavoring to establish a better attendance record. They are going to retain present officers: President, Grace Edwards; counselor, Audrey Gernon. New officers are elected every two months. A new merit system is being adopted. Everyone is to be graded according to actions, conduct, and willingness to take part.

The young people's organization meets for study, every Sunday evening at six-thirty, and they have also an evening of recreation every two weeks. Study on a play will start soon, the production to be given in September.

Elder Adolphus Edwards and wife have returned from their vacation. They tell of having a happy time visiting old friends and relatives in the State of Ohio.

A business meeting was held August 9, for the discussion of plans for building a church home. The majority of Saints are in favor of having a church building and even those not in favor are willing to give time and labor to the good of the cause. If unity continues to mark the undertakings of this group, no task will be too great for them.

Eldorado, Kansas

Five Are Baptized

Eldorado Saints, few in number, are led by Elder Clyde Baker, and despite the fact that they have no church home, sacrament services are enjoyed each month.

The women are studying the Doctrine and Covenants, under the capable teaching of Sister Clyde Baker. Sister Charles Merrill, leader of women, is accomplishing much. They sent a check for fifty dollars to Bishop G. L. DeLapp, as an offering, also one for ten dollars as Christmas offering.

Brother C. L. Allen, of Blue Springs, Missouri, visited there recently. While in Eldorado, he stayed with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Allen, and July 15, baptized them along with his sister and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Covert, also his sister-in-law, Mrs. Raymond Allen.

The daughter of Brother and Sister Covert was blessed on the same day, and Collene Allen, daughter of Brother and Sister Raymond Allen.

The family of C. L. Allen has moved here and been welcomed by Eldorado members.

Spring River District Reunion

Large Numbers Attend—Spirituality Is Marked

A consciousness of the task confronting members of the church of the living God was brought with great spiritual force to the Spring River District Saints at their reunion held at Columbus, Kansas, from August 3 to 12. A disappointment at not having President F. M. Smith present as had been announced, was overcome under the leadership of President F. M. McDowell, Elder John F. Sheehy, and Elder Amos T. Higdon, all having what seemed to be the very presence of God with them to supplement their human efforts. A change of life was radiantly reflected in the testimonies and action of hundreds of Saints, both young and old, during the closing days of the reunion.

An increase of over fifty percent in the number of tents in the camp at the American Legion Park was noted this year over last year. Also the spirituality and expectancy of the Saints were in greater proportion to what they had been for some time. A number of missionaries and church workers from other districts attended many of the services and partook of the spiritual blessings with which the camp was endowed.

Not only in theory but in actual practice, the program of the priesthood was beautifully taught from time to time. The seriousness of such church ordinances as blessing little children, baptismal services and confirmation services was forcibly brought home when they were administered by the leaders in charge. Few had realized before just how beautiful and meaningful these services could be made until Brother McDowell, under the influence of the Spirit, had performed them as a witness and an example for the ministry to follow and for the edification of the Saints. Miss Fern Chambers, of Pittsburg, was baptized at sunrise Thursday morning in Spring River, ten miles east of the camp, and the infant son of Elder and Sister Ira O. Waldron, of Webb City, was blessed preceding the confirmation service.

The Saints of the district sensed their responsibility to such an extent that they manifested by far the greatest interest they ever have in asking for credits for their class work. A large percentage of them were anxious not only to have their credits recorded but to take work from now on for credit whenever the opportunity is provided.

Class work was provided each morning with Brother McDowell as teacher. At eight o'clock he taught a class in "The Church and Leisure Time," and at ten-forty-five in "Revelation and the Church Today." At 2 p. m., he taught the priesthood and Brother Sheehy taught the women. All of the classes were exceptionally well attended from the first session until the last one.

Brother Sheehy preached each night at eight o'clock at which time a number of people from outside the church were present. He had a good attendance with all eager for the message he had to present. Several came a distance of thirty miles each night to hear him.

Music added to the inspiration of the meetings. Many special numbers and sacred selections were given under the most capable leadership of Brother Victor L. Krucker, of Miami. Special musical programs were presented on both Sunday afternoons.

Social and recreational activities included volley ball and baseball each afternoon, a swimming party Thursday afternoon at Miami, a Graceland College program Thursday night, a watermelon feast Friday night and group games, stunts and illustrated songs each night following church services.

The prayer meetings were of a high plane with all of those taking part using wisdom and having regards for the time so that many participated in each meeting. Prayer meetings were held in the morning at nine-fifteen o'clock except for the last Sunday when it was held at eight o'clock. A group of one hundred and twenty-five young people left the camp at 6 a. m. on the last Saturday in cars and trucks for Spring River where they had a devotional service, cooked their breakfast, and held a prayer meeting on the bank of the river.

Haileyville, Oklahoma

Visits of Church Officers Help Them

Apostle Roy S. Budd made a hurried visit here during May, preaching one sermon and confirming Gladys Miller and Mary Cox who were baptized by Brother Howard Harpham during his series of meetings here.

The Saints were strengthened and encouraged by a short visit from Elder Lee Quick who preached some fine sermons. He is always a welcome visitor at Haileyville and all are pleased that he has been sent back to Oklahoma to labor. They hope that he will be able to come and hold a series of meetings in the fall.

Several local members were permitted to attend a series of meetings conducted by Brother Quick at Wilburton during June, through the goodness of Sister Winslow who furnished a truck for transportation.

enson, of this branch, during the meeting.

Brother H. L. Dollins, sisters Ora Dollins and W. P. Hubble attended General Conference in April, and reported a wonderful time. A special meeting was held at the church, on the night of April 15, so that the Saints could hear a report of the conference.

Brother A. E. Stoff, of Wichita, Kansas, now district president of Central Oklahoma, preached two fine sermons here the first of July.

Brother Ed Yerrington, bishop's agent for this district, and Brother Ralph Vickery, of Oklahoma City, made them a short visit on their way to Wilburton.

Brother W. W. Bunch, of Oilton, Oklahoma, who has been working for the Dollins Chevrolet Company of Hartshorne had the misfortune to injure one of his eyes. He has returned from the Saint Anthony's Hospital in Oklahoma City, after several weeks of suffering, and is able to return to work. Brother Bunch who holds the office of teacher, has preached several sermons while at Haileyville. It is hoped that he will be able to move here so that he can help carry on the work.

The women under the leadership of Sister Janie Winslow, meet each week on Thursday afternoon in the homes. On June 21, a package sale and a quilt drawing were held at the home of Sister Winslow, the proceeds going to have the church piano repaired and tuned. They are now working to help with branch and district expenses.

The young people, under the supervision of Sister Ora Dollins, meet each Tuesday night at the church. They are studying one of the Sunday school series of studies for young people, "Religion in Life."

Since the last report from Haileyville, the Misses Lilac and Violet Jagers, twin daughters of Sister J. S. White, became the brides of Lynn Puckett and Pat Osborne, of Fort Smith, Arkansas.

Mrs. Mary Crowder died at McAlester, Oklahoma, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Bob Willard. Interment was in Elmwood Cemetery at Hartshorne. She had been a member of the Haileyville Branch for several years.

A baby boy arrived at the home of Mr. and Sister Bershinsky, August 6.

A birthday surprise party was given Brother W. E. Parham, July 14, and also one for Sister H. T. Hampton, July 20. A good time was reported at both places.

Conference Minutes

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.—The conference of the above district convened with the Lansing Branch, Saturday and Sunday, July 7 and 8. The first meeting was a prayer service at 9:30 a. m. At 10:30 the conference was organized, the district presidency being chosen to preside, while in the absence of the regular secretary, E. J. Hayden was selected to act as secretary pro tem. At 11 a. m., Elder A. J. Dexter preached. At 2 p. m., Elder W. F. Ryder, district counselor, presided at the regular business session. At this time the reunion committee chosen at the last conference, consisting of E. C. Evans, Ernest B. Blett and W. E. Aelick, reported. Their report was favorable to a resumption of the reunion providing enough money could be raised to start the movement. Reports from the various branches as to their willingness to underwrite the reunion in a sufficient amount were not enough to warrant its immediate renewal. This report was received and the committee discharged, but another committee, consisting of the district presidency and the bishop, was appointed to consider further the reunion question. The election of officers resulted as follows: District president, A. C. Barmore; counselors, Elders W. F. Ryder and A. J. Dexter; secretary, Myrtle E. Perry; treasurer, Bishop E. C. Evans; chorister, Louise Evans;

Elder A. J. Dexter was re-elected as director of religious education and as head of Christian Legion. Provision was made for new branches at Benton Harbor, Jackson, Fort Wayne, and Wabash. The name of Maurice Baker, of Lansing, was passed on for ordination to the office of priest, and his ordination was provided for. At eight o'clock, an educational institute was held, which consisted of the following items: "The Educational Life of Our Young People," Elder A. J. Dexter; "The Social Life of Our Young People," Bishop E. C. Evans; "The Spiritual Life of Our Young People," Elder Ernest B. Blett; "The Work of the Christian Legion," Elder Gordon Brown, and "The Work of the Women of the Church," Mrs. Ernest Blett. Sunday opened with a prayer service at eight-thirty, Elders Macey Ellis and David Young in charge. At 10 a. m., the regular school session was held. At eleven o'clock, J. M. Baggerly preached, Elder F. E. Myers in charge. The speaker at 2 p. m. was Bishop E. C. Evans. At 4 p. m. there was a ministerial institute which consisted of the following parts: "The Duties of a Branch President," Elder John A. Luce; "The Duties of an Elder," Elder Philemon Pement; "The Duties of a Priest," Claire Easlick; "The Duties of a Teacher," P. N. McCarty, and "The Duties of a Deacon," Bruce Douglass. At 7:30, Elder Philemon Pement was the preacher, Elder A. J. Dexter in charge. The district president presided at the ministerial institute, but did not preach, preferring to give his attention to the execution of the general program. Meals were served in the basement of the church by the women of the branch at branch expense. Thus passed a profitable conference, the next one being left to the district presidency, with reference to time and place.

■ The Physician of Souls

Once upon a time there was a very young man who lived on a large island off the coast of the mainland. All the people on the island were very poor and they obtained their living by fishing. There was no doctor, no school teacher, nor any minister among them, and they had to shift for themselves. When any of them were sick, they had to be sent to the mainland, and some of them died before a doctor could be reached.

It was this boy's ambition, not to leave his people, as many another young man had done, to lose interest in them, and succeed and then forget them. He wanted to go to the mainland and train himself in order to return and help them. It was his belief that he could help best by becoming a doctor. There would be no money in it, but he would have the satisfaction of helping his people.

When his years of training were over, he returned to the island. For ten years he was their physician, administering to their bodily ills and trying to stamp out disease. At the end of that time he was thinking seriously of his work, and he observed that although he had brought disease under control, his people were still not a well nor a happy people.

"The trouble with these poor people is their ignorance. They need a teacher," he said. So he brought in a young doctor to take care of the sick, and he changed his career and became a teacher. For ten more years he served them, teaching them the laws of hygiene and health, giving them a knowledge of culture, teaching them until they had learned to read and write and could figure accounts with arithmetic. At the end of the second ten year's time, he saw that his people were still not a well nor a happy people.

"The trouble of this people," he said, "is not disease nor ignorance. Their trouble is a lack of the will to do right. What they need is a preacher to minister to their souls." So he brought in a teacher to take his place, and he became a preacher and built a church for them. And in the next ten years, he worked side by side with the doctor, who was ministering to their bodies, and with the teacher, who was ministering to their minds, while he himself undertook to minister to the hungers of their souls.

■ Gratitude

It is a rare person who can do something for you without expecting gratitude. A demand for gratitude is the humiliation of the person you help. Often one would rather not be helped at all, even when he is in need, than to owe the inordinate debt of gratitude that he knows will be expected of him.

A real friend is one who does something for you, and says, "There it is, and we are done with it. Let us now forget it and be comfortable and good comrades again. I will expect nothing of you in return for it."

When you have helped a friend, that was your gift—your voluntary gift. Let his gratitude be his gift—his voluntary gift.

Our Pulpit Ministry

It seems to be much harder to save souls in a big expensive church than it does in a little plain one. The great city church with its tall spires, its large nave, its costly chancel, and its richly beautiful stained glass windows is able to attract the tentative loyalty of a few rich people, but it is the little church that reaches the souls who need Christ.

Any congregation is able to hold loyally together, forget all differences and overcome obstacles while they are building their church home and paying for it. Once this objective is accomplished and the purely physical equipment obtained and paid for, there follows a slump in interest, a decrease of attendance and the pastor finds to his dismay that he and his congregation have nothing in particular that they want to do and no place to go. The business of building the Kingdom of God, of creating a spiritual condition among people, which is so vastly more important than erecting a church building, arouses no enthusiasm and attracts few supporters. This is the sad story behind the decadence of many a splendid church.

The long list of churches that have been abandoned makes a sad story, and the even longer list of churches that are struggling along with pitifully small congregations, tells an even sadder story. We look for causes and explanations, and one may find plenty of them. A small congregation in a large church often indicates a lack of vitality and truth in its pulpit.

This reveals the pulpit ministry as the most important single feature of a church and its service. The church is a school whose purpose it is to teach people a better way of living. It is not a social club nor a lecture platform, nor primarily a place for beautiful music to be sung and played. These things are incidental. The pulpit is the teacher's rostrum in the main classroom of God's school, the church.

The minister, if he is fulfilling his duty, is God's teacher, and he has God's great message to convey to the people. Certainly he can never lack for a vigorous, strong message. Certainly he can never be found wanting for something important to say. Certainly he has no time to play with platitudes and pretty phrases. If he is about his Father's business, as Jesus was, he will bring to the pulpit a fiery leadership that will keep the people awake and make them interested.

Formalism and perfunctory speaking, patting the backs of the great and wealthy sinners and ignoring the slips of the little ones, have all contributed to the decay of pulpit influence.

There are five things that every minister should seek to bring to his congregation: comfort, knowledge, admonition, inspiration, and correction. Many a great pulpit has dropped all efforts to convey anything except comfort and satisfaction to the congregation. The minister, hoping by thus pleasing and pampering his congregation to keep them attending, often misses his objective and finds them losing interest. A friend once said, "I like to hear the kind of a sermon that makes me glad I'm a Latter Day Saint." That kind of a sermon is a vicious sermon because it leaves people as they are and points no way forward to improvement. A real sermon should make one sorry that he is not a better Latter Day Saint.

What does a preacher preach with? A fine large vocabulary? Ready made outlines? Beautiful quotations and borrowed ideas? No, those things are not enough. No amount of training, no amount of study of speech and the mechanics of preaching can make a great preacher nor build a great pulpit ministry. A great pulpit ministry is built upon knowledge, spirituality and authority.

Many a minister rises to address a congregation with texts that they have heard many times before and with which they are thoroughly familiar. In fact, some of these sermons are so trite that intelligent members of the congregation could arise and predict with an astonishing accuracy everything that the preacher is going to think and say.

No minister ought ever to enter the pulpit to address a congregation without having studied not only the available Scripture texts on his subject, but also other material as well. While his sermon should deal with old truths, it should also present to the congregation the rich gatherings of original thought. There is hardly a quotable text in the Bible but has behind it some knowledge and some information that have never before been presented by any preacher or understood by any congregation. The most familiar and most frequently used of scriptural texts offer opportunities for thought and investigation that can make the sermon which is built upon them both an intellectual and spiritual adventure.

We must preach the old truths and the established principles, but we must preach them with new applications to current problems and to modern conditions of life. Only so will the minister fulfill his destined role of greatness and give to the pulpit the vigor and strength of a leadership which will win souls to Christ and keep the people faithfully attending.

Blue Pencil Notes

SARCASM is the poison gas of argument. The Latter Day Saint who has a gift of sarcasm should not be proud of it. He should not cultivate it. If allowed to grow in him it will rob him of his friends, and then of his happiness.

BROTHER D. T. WILLIAMS tells of a small boy in whose home there had recently been entertained one of the "Twelve" and still more recently one of the "Seventy" who made solicitous inquiry of his father: "Daddy, what is your number?"

AT THE out-of-doors Campus services in Independence Sunday evenings we have visitors from as far away as Cape Cod and California—but of course they do not come that far especially for the Campus service. However, last Sunday evening we had people present who drove one hundred and forty miles, or a round trip of two hundred and eighty miles to attend the one meeting.

IREMIND my hearers at the Campus that we shall probably have a different speaker for next summer. When Brother Floyd McDowell speaks on the Campus it almost invariably rains—one sermon is good for one rain any time. But the more I preach there the dryer it gets; only one Sunday evening rain in two seasons. So it looks like Brother Floyd would be the logical speaker for next year.

CHANCELLOR ADOLPH HITLER is said to be a strict vegetarian. He eats no meat, does not smoke, and drinks no alcohol, not even beer. He has demonstrated that on a vegetarian diet a man may develop enormous energy and endurance. However, he seems not to support the old theory that meat eating makes one fierce and truculent while fruit and vegetables make him mild and tractable—at least if meat eating makes a man more combative the Jews and Communists will hope that Hitler never takes to meat.

THE OLD ADAGE says, "Cast your bread upon the waters and after many days it will return to you." My good old father-in-law, Asa Cochran, used to add, "It will return to you well soaked." Once in a while the old saying is vindicated in a splendid manner. More than forty years ago Miss Anne Sullivan with vast patience and love led the blind and deaf Hellen Keller into a new world. She taught her to read and converse. Miss Keller's gratitude extended over the years. Today the former teacher is old and is losing her sight. And now Miss Keller is caring for her and patiently teaching her to read by the Braille system for the blind. The pupil has become the teacher; the beneficiary has become the benefactor.

THIS SUMMER with the sun blazing down upon us relentlessly week after week, and the land parched with drouth, we could appreciate the challenge that the Lord threw out to Job:

"Can you lift your voice up to the clouds,
That a flood of waters may cover you?

Can you send forth the lightnings that they may go

And say to you, 'Here we are'.

Who counts the clouds by wisdom?

And who tilts the water-skins of the heavens,

When the dust runs into a mass,

And the clods stick together?"

—From "The Short Bible."

LONG AGO Wendell Phillips proclaimed that the age of bullets had passed and the age of ballots had arrived. He seemed to have been over sanguine. Today in such countries as Germany and Austria there is confusion and so many parties and factions that government by clear cut majority is difficult to arrive at. A majority can be had only by coalition of parties. These coalitions have within them warring elements that soon lead to disruption. So there has grown up a feeling that the only way out of anarchy is for some strong and militant party, though in the minority, to seize the reins of government, abolish parliamentary forms, muzzle the press, prohibit free speech, and enforce its rule by stern punitive methods, ruthlessly "liquidating" opponents by massacre. Each party thinks itself the one to do this job. "Despotism tempered by assassination" comes back as prominently as in the days of the Czars. It is not a hopeful process of devolution that society thus enters. The age of ballots seems to give way to a recurrence of the age of bullets.

IN THE United States we have preserved the traditional two party system, in form at least, ensuring a definite majority back of the government, in theory. In fact both parties are shot through with lines of cleavage. "Blocs" have developed representing special interests, the farmers, the war veterans, vested interests, Wall Street, the radicals; and so on. Sometimes these blocs are powerful enough to defeat the clear will of the majority. Given a few more of them, a growing disregard for Constitutional government, a little more confusion, more of a leaning toward bullets and away from ballots and the danger that is now fully developed in Europe would menace democratic government in America. Under such conditions a man of Huey Long's type, plus a few brains, would be a national menace. E. A. S.

New Priesthood Journal Proving Popular

The first issue of the new Priesthood Journal is now receiving subscriptions in a very satisfactory number. The material for it, which has been contributed by President F. M. McDowell, with the assistance of others, brings to us a very important series of articles for the priesthood. It is important not only for the members of the priesthood who are holding positions of responsibility, but also for all young men who are looking forward to careers in church work. The Journal is not a magazine in an ordinary sense. It is a library of permanent material, issued periodically, which will have permanent value. The subscription price is one dollar per year. Subscriptions should be sent to the First Presidency, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Pastors, Attention!

A number of the branches of our church, especially in large cities, are not listed in the city directories. In smaller towns it is easy for a stranger or a visiting church member to find a church by inquiring, but in a large city, it is practically impossible. This matter has been called to our attention by numbers of people visiting in large cities, who find themselves unable to locate the church or its officers. Our pastors are urged to consider the necessity and the importance of seeing that each church is listed in the city directory. It will help many members to find the church.

We find it impracticable to print the addresses of our churches in each issue of the Herald. There are too many of them. Furthermore, it is feared that the printing of such a list would subject our people to annoyances from undesirable persons who would go from church to church creating difficulty or soliciting funds. For this reason, we have refrained from printing a general list of addresses.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

In a letter from Sauble Beach, Ontario, Brother M. J. Perkins recently told of a conversation with a business man of the world who when they were discussing the probable future condition of the people stated that he believed that fifty percent of the next generation is likely to be found carrying the burden of looking after the other fifty percent who be in asylums, and this reminded our brother of the expression of Thomas Paine in 1776 when he said, "Oh, receive the fugitive and prepare in time an asylum for mankind." With our brother the question arises, How long, O Lord, how long, before Zion will be redeemed! And he recalls that we have been commanded to organize ourselves, and he is wondering if it might be said of us that in our slothfulness in obeying the commands we would not obey the commands of the Lord. Others beside Brother Perkins are thinking seriously of what the signs of the time indicate and are wondering how long it will be before our place of safety is prepared.

The following note was discovered in a copy of the magazine Ranch Romances which was forwarded to us. It will be of interest to those who witnessed the ordination of Brother Irby Mundy at the recent General Conference:

A recent story in the Kansas City Star came as a surprise to all who follow the rodeo game.

Irby Mundy, well-known rodeo-ist, was ordained as an Elder in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, of Latter Day Saints, at the ordination services at Independence, Missouri.

Irby has always spoken well of everybody, and has thousands of friends in all parts of the country. He has never been known to use any cuss words, but always has a cheery howdy for all.

F. M. S.

Music in the church renders an unique and indispensable service. It has the widest appeal of all the arts. In any country—or the strangest land—there is something familiar, and to which one will unconsciously respond, if music is heard, though it may be only the beating of a "tom-tom" or the clanging of tambourine or cymbals. It becomes our uplift and stay in times of need. Frequently it has been known to touch and reach hearts that sermons have failed to move. . . .

Sacred music breaks down the barriers, encourages fraternity, fellowship, and faith, and will help the Christian world to get closer together, for though men differ or disagree, even to the point of anger possibly, in theology, they unite again in the songs of Zion . . . Our great hymns and songs of the church express the spirit of praise, love, duty, worship, thanksgiving, joy, comfort, communion consecration, prayer, warning, aspiration and assurance.—Earl L. Wolslagel in "Music—A Human Necessity," Church Management.

Christianity is the religion of hope and cheer. Infidelity, agnosticism and atheism have no song or nothing about which to sing. Music is God's gift and one who has a talent to sing or play should not hold it as one's exclusive possession.—Earl L. Wolslagel, Church Management.

Youth's Forum

Ideas, Discussion and News for the

1934 Nauvoo Young People's Camp

About ninety young people from seven States camped at Nauvoo, August 6 to 17. A staff of eight leaders made up the faculty; E. E. Closson, camp director; Mrs. W. H. Blair, hostess; Roy Cheville, program director; Anne Morgan, supervisor of girls; Mrs. Julia Closson, girls' athletics; Delbert Sears, boys' athletics; Mrs. Nell Cheville, camp nurse; and Almer Sheehy, camp projects.

This camp is sponsored each summer by the leaders of the young people's division of the Department of Religious Education of the general church. It is directed by a general camp committee of three, G. L. DeLapp of the Presiding Bishopric, E. E. Closson, director of young people's division, and W. H. Blair, who is the business manager and the treasure of the camp. The Nauvoo House serves as headquarters.

The daily program is made flexible in order to adjust to weather conditions, special interests, outings, etc. In general, the order for this year was something like this: Rising bell, 6; flag raising, 6:45; breakfast, 7; inspection, 8:30; class in personal social problems for boys and for girls, 9; assembly, 10:30; dinner 12; committee and practice period, 1; athletics, 2; swimming, 3; supper, 5:30; flag lowering, 7 and camp circle, 7:45.

Many variations came in to give color to camp life. One day was given to a picnic in Bluff Park across the river, and another to an excursion to Keokuk Dam and the city. There were evening boat rides on the launch and the ferry, Wednesday night prayer meetings, the camp dinner, etc. to replace the usual camp circles.

Two central and related ideas developed as the camp progressed. One was an emphasis that for the young people the church is "Our Church" now, not at some distant future date, and that this "our-ness" calls for some fitness for and participation in the shaping and carrying out of its program. The other was the conviction that the church is essentially a pioneering movement in social, economic, educational, and other lines. This implies a challenge to lead out as pioneers of the Restoration. These dominant lines of thinking were especially developed in the assemblies where youth's views of the task and methods of the church were frankly and constructively discussed.

On Sunday morning the campers were guests at the local Nauvoo Church, providing the music and the sermon. At four-thirty in the afternoon a vesper service was held on the river bank, following the theme, "Feeling God in Nature." In the evening the camp presented with two short rehearsals a pageant, depicting the work of the church that yet shall be. It was written for the camp in order to fit into the theme of the camp thought.

The climactic service was the one held on the closing day of the camp in memory of the martyrs and pioneers of the church, whose graves lie on the river banks. The first part of the service was held close to the river under the shade of the locust trees that fringe the bank. Here the principal theme was the call to youth in 1934 to carry on the work begun by these leaders of an earlier day. Then in a stately line the camp marched to the inclosure in which the graves are located. At the head went the American colors. As the small chorus hummed "The Unknown Grave" the wreath was placed by Nona Walker of Madison, Wisconsin, chosen for this honor by the campers. A prayer of dedication was offered by Delmar Jones, of Taylorville, Illinois. Then with bowed heads the campers stood while the chorus sang, "Take My Life and Let it Be Consecrated Lord to Thee," allowing each to make his own personal dedication.

The closing camp circle was held by the bank of the river on Friday night. As expected the mood was serious with reflections of the camp, yet happy in the newly developed fellowship. The "Camp Log" was read, a few short songs of friendship were sung, moving pictures taken of the camp were shown, and then E. E. Closson, camp director, fittingly summarized the work of the camp and offered the benedictory prayer.

This year's camp carried a heavier load in the fields of finance and health than any previous gathering. At its close, however, it ranks as an outstanding convocation of young people. Probably more was achieved in constructive thought and sound spiritual revival than is realized in most of our conventions. The maturity and sincerity of the campers made possible a frank and searching analysis of youth's thought, attitudes, and activities with relation to the church of today. The work of the Nauvoo Camp will reach into many a branch of the church.

Visitors at the Camp who helped to shape its trend and tone were J. F. Garver, apostle in charge of the central mission; Blair Jenses, president of Lamoni Stake; E. Y. Hunker, of the seventies, and Jerome Wildermuth, bishop of Lamoni Stake. The consistent courtesies of the custodians of the Mansion House, Brother and Sister James E. Page, and the efficient and energetic labors of the camp director and wife should be mentioned as factors in promoting the success of the camp.

The Value of Spare Time

Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time for time's the stuff life's made of.—Franklin.

"If I only had time!" is the cry of thousands of unhappy young men and women of today.

Yes indeed! Time is a very necessary factor in doing things. Just stop and think, how much time did you waste yesterday? How much time are you wasting today? The many little seconds lost in time count up into minutes, and minutes, into hours.

It is true today, as it has been in the past, that "they can who think they can." When to begin, however, is the stumblingblock in the way of most people. There is but one time to do a thing, and that time is now! To delay a day or a week may bring misfortune.

Spare minutes have helped many an industrious young man on his way to success. Watt learned chemistry and mathematics while working at his trade of a mathematical-instrument maker. Darwin composed most of his works by writing his thoughts on scraps of paper whenever he thought of them. Hundreds of similar examples could be given in which men have accomplished distinction by improving their spare minutes which other people waste.

Do It Now!

If you have a task worth doing,
Do it now!

In delay there's danger brewing,
Do it now!

Don't you be a "by-and-byer"
And a sluggish patience-trier;
If there's aught you would acquire,
Do it now!

If you'd earn a prize worth owning,
Do it now!

Drop all waiting and postponing,
Do it now!

Say, "I will!" and then stick to it,
Choose your purpose and pursue it,
There's but one right way to do it,
Do it now!

All we have is just this minute,
Do it now!

Find your duty and begin it,
Do it now!

Surely you're not always going
To be "a-going-to-be"; and knowing
You must sometime make a showing,
Do it now.

Does the Bible Teach Predestination?

By C. B. Hartshorn

THERE ARE passages in certain books of the Bible from which the doctrine of predestination may be inferred quite easily. "Since God is all wise and knew everything from the beginning," (omniscience) says the predestinarian, "events must be certain to occur and ultimate outcomes definite, else even God could not know them. For that which is uncertain of occurrence may change at the moment; therefore all events must have determined outcomes which are known to God."

This view is supported by such passages as this one from Isaiah's pen: ". . . I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, my counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure: . . ." (Isaiah 46: 9, 10.) Luke also declares; "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." (Acts 15: 18.)

"HIS TIME HAD COME"

After a fatal coal mine accident, I asked a miner's wife if she were not afraid to have her husband return to his treacherous work. "No I just think that if it is his time to go, he'll go; if it isn't his time, he'll be all right."

It has been my duty and privilege to stand with the families of Saints when death had claimed a loved one and heard expressions like this: "We must be resigned to God's will. John must have a work to do on the other side or God would not have taken him from us."

Many people call this doctrine by the name of fatalism. The philosophy is frequently stated in this maxim: Whatever is, is best. To be unsubmitive to the conditions "known to God from the beginning" is to rebel against the divine will. Paul is said to support this doctrine when he said of Christ: "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestined according to the purposes of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." (Ephesians 1: 11.)

Suppose the reader tests himself at this point with these questions: Do I characteristically think that there is a certain time when death will come to each person? That no matter what I do my doom is sealed when that day comes? Do I find myself reconciling the disasters which have come upon me, upon my loved ones, or which have afflicted the nation, with this type of reasoning: "Oh well, it was just supposed to be that way, I guess, so we'll have to make the best of it?" If you do, then know that the leaven of predestination has been working in your thought processes and warped your whole philosophy of life by it.

DIVINE SOVEREIGNTY AND CALVINISM

The doctrine of predestination, or "election," is based on the postulate of God's sovereignty. Our heavenly Father is creator and ruler of the universe. On this premise John Calvin (1509-64), said to be the first real theologian, taught that the elect of God were predestinated to eternal salvation, and all others were eternally lost. At the age of twenty-five, he wrote his Institutes in which he set out both unconditional election and its logical companion, unconditional reprobation.

Paul once wrote to the Ephesians: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." (Ephesians 2: 8, 9.) This

C. B. HARTSHORN

Calvin construed to mean that man had no ability to alter his course through life or to save himself. It was absolutely by grace; that is, unmerited favor. God's sovereignty was held to be so complete that all things which happened must be according to the divine will. In a day when a cunning priestcraft had developed many ecclesiastical appliances for salvation; such as arduous penance, and grants of indulgence (for a price); Calvin's theory of grace versus works (of those kinds) was indeed wholesome.

NUMBER TO BE SAVED WAS DETERMINED FROM THE BEGINNING

Perhaps the most familiar statement of this dogma is found in the Westminster Confession of Faith, the standard of the Church of Scotland and of the various Presbyterian churches of Europe and America. From it I quote: "God from all eternity did by the most wise and holy counsel of his own will freely and unchangeably ordain whatsoever comes to pass; . . . By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life and others fore-ordained to everlasting death . . . and their number is so certain and definite that it cannot be either increased or diminished." (Barnes' Dictionary of the Bible, page 303.)

Several attempts have been made by Calvin's followers to modify the harsh and indefensible conclusions which logically arise from this doctrine. The picture of a loving heavenly Father just does not fit in with the Westminster concept. The more consistent and vital message of John Wesley and his coworkers made the need for modification quite obvious. They point out that predestination destroys moral distinction, and renders all our effort useless; since our part in life's drama is unchangeably fixed. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house." (Acts 16: 31) This became the salutations of the Wesley evangel.

CHANGING CONCEPTS OF THE MEANS OF SALVATION

It is interesting to note the shifting emphases on the plan of salvation throughout the ages. Ancient Israel had their hope in a racial salvation. "We be of Abraham's seed," (John 8: 33) was their cry of faith. In the early centuries of Christianity, salvation was made contingent on church membership. "Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven," was the dominant note of the ministry of that day. The Reformers, naturally, minimized the importance of the institution and won their following on the plea that salvation was by the grace of God and "Whosoever believeth on him [Christ] should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) The Restoration evangel gave to each of these notes a place, but stressed the gospel as the "power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, but also to the Greek." (Romans 1: 16.)

The Latter Day Saints have never stumbled on the matter of man's "foreordination unto everlasting life" or death. Joseph Smith epitomized our philosophy on this point in these words: "We believe that through the atonement of Jesus Christ all mankind may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel." (Church History, volume 2 page 570.) Hence, we may become the elect of God by our own choice. This is the doctrine of free moral agency.

IS MAN AN INSTRUMENT OR AN AGENT

Once God has offered salvation to men upon gospel terms, he cannot deny the reward to those who pay the price. ("I the Lord am bound when ye do what I say . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 3.) On the other hand, if all the acts of man are predetermined, he is merely an instrument and not an agent. It matters little whether the source of that determination be exterior or interior, so long as it controls him. If the nature bestowed upon his spirit determines him to a particular act, excluding every alternative, then he is not the agent in the act. He is a machine, the real agent being the bestower of his nature. To charge responsibility to such a person would be as absurd as "to condemn a clock for striking at a point where its dynamics exclude every other alternative," as Henry C. Sheldon has so aptly stated. He rightly concluded that, "Unless the acts of a person are determined by his reasons and his feelings they are irrational and characterless." (System of Christian Doctrine, page 295, 8.)

PASSAGES USED TO SUPPORT PREDESTINATION

Let us look more closely at the teachings of the Bible on this subject. If you are a predestinarian, you will insist that I deal with Paul's statement in the Roman epistle (8: 28-30): "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called:" All who respond to the call of the gospel are "called according to his purpose" in Paul's philosophy. As God knew beforehand that some would obey, he bound himself by a promise (predestinated) that the obedient should become like Christ, the perfect example.

PAUL ADVOCATES FREE AGENCY

All of Paul's teachings and the very fact that he went out to proselyte, bear unfaltering testimony to his faith in the doctrine of man's free agency. To the Roman saints he once wrote (Romans 6: 16): "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" In his Philippian letter he wrote (Philippian 2: 12): ". . . work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." It seems unmistakably clear that Paul did not believe in an "unconditional election." The texts above and many others teach that man can choose for himself, that he is the architect of his own (Continued on page 1101.)

Changes in Graceland's Faculty

MRS. COLIN FERRETT has resigned from the faculty at Graceland and will be located in Los Angeles, California with her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Ferrett drove to the coast with Mr. Ferrett's parents in May and have been living there during the summer. Mr. Ferrett has been fortunate in finding employment so they will remain in the west indefinitely. Mrs. Ferrett will be greatly missed on the Graceland faculty both for her ability as an instructor and for her wholesome influence.

Graceland has been fortunate in securing the services of MRS ANNA T. CARREL of Cleveland, Ohio, for the vacancy. Mrs. Carrel comes with an unusual wealth of training and experience. She secured her Bachelor of Music degree from the Conservatory of Music, at Oberlin, Ohio. Since that time Mrs. Carrel has studied two years with one of the world's greatest piano teachers, Sigismund Stojowski, of New York City. She has also had two summers under the renowned radio and concert artist, Ernest Hutcheson, at Chautauqua, New York.

Her teaching experience is as broad as her musical studies, having served in the following institutions: Co-director of Music at Flora MacDonald College, Red Springs, North Carolina; Director of Music at Martha Washington Seminary, Washington D. C.; and Professor of Piano and Director of the preparatory department at Wooster College, Wooster, Ohio. In the recent past Mrs. Carrel has been employed as church organist in one of the large churches of Cleveland. She is a member of the famous American Guild of Organists with a degree of A. A. G. O. which alone is a test of her thorough musicianship.

During the past summer Mrs. Carrel has been taking advanced work at the Juilliard School of Music, New York City. Graceland and Lamoni are indeed fortunate to have the services of this splendidly trained and experienced woman.

Another strong faculty member to come to Graceland in September is MISS MAXINE GODFREY of Fresno, California to replace Mrs. Julia A. Closson and Miss Beulah B. Reed both of whom have been part time instructors for the past several years.

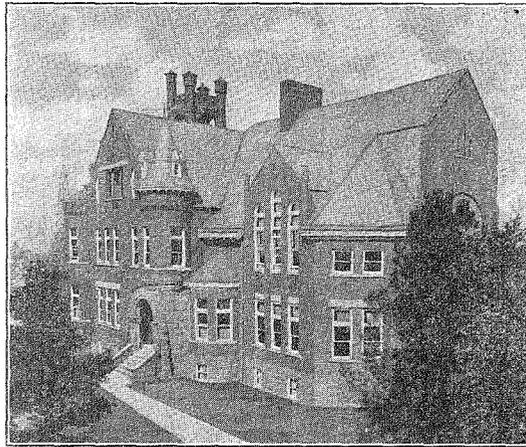

They asked to be released this year but both will continue their residence in Lamoni, Mrs. Closson to preside over her home enabling her to minister better to the needs of her husband and their four year old son, Ed, and Miss Reed will preside as Mrs. Alonzo B. May in his newly established home in Lamoni. The college and the community are to be congratulated on the continued residence of these two ex-faculty members in our midst.

Miss Godfrey had her college preparation in the State Teachers College at Kearney, Nebraska, the State Teachers College at Fresno, California, and the State University at Berkeley, California. With that very fine educational background and experience as a teacher in the two state colleges where she was a student she will make a real contribution to Graceland student life.

Miss Vida E. Butterworth, the very efficient college nurse of last year returns to her duties at the Sanitarium in Independence.

Her place is to be filled by MISS ARDELL SCHNEIDER of Belleville, Illinois, graduate of the Nurses' Training School of the City Hospital in Saint Louis with several years exceptional experience as a member of the Saint Clair County Emergency Relief Committee and in the Essex County, New Jersey Isolation Hospital. She will bring great strength to the services Graceland is able to give her students.

There is one class of people I do not hear whining about whether life is worth living. They are the people who are sacrificially spending their lives in human service. They are too busy serving the needs of men and God to stop to ask the question. Imagine Paul going about his missionary journeys asking, "Is life worth living?" Imagine Jesus walking in and out of Nazareth and Capernaum and Jerusalem fretting, "Is life worth living?" Imagine William Booth working in the slums of London whining, "Is life worth living?" It simply did not happen that way. It simply could not happen that way.—Frank B. Fagerburg, in The Sin of Being Ordinary.

Newspaper Articles Helpful to Church Services

By Raymond E. Troyer*

Newspapers have become one of the chief means of forming public opinion. As such they can be made a factor in the spread of the Gospel if the Saints will recognize the service and take advantage of it whenever possible. Some of the branches are using the newspaper columns in the most efficient manner but not nearly so many are doing it as could. Often it is through unthoughtfulness that we neglect our responsibility to the local or district newspapers by not reporting to them those items of church news, church services or special programs that are to be given. Most newspapers are anxious to get well written articles of special church services and in some cases editors have felt slighted because our people have not reported the services to them.

There are several reasons why we should take advantage of the newspaper columns. By getting church news before the public it will help to alleviate the prejudice that has been formed in past years against our people. It will show to anyone who is looking for a progressive church that our church is on the job and moving forward. To our own members and those who sympathize with our faith, it will let them know about the service and encourage them to attend not only the one that has been told about in the news story but to attend other services regularly.

The story should be typewritten double spaced, if possible, and not just told about to a reporter. This will help to rectify errors which often occur in news stories. The editor may re-write it but he can do so more intelligently if it is presented to him in written form.

The first paragraph of the story should include some important fact concerning the meeting, the name of the particular meeting, the date and time of the meeting, the name of the church and its address if the meeting is to be held there. In writing the story it is always profitable to include as many names as possible of leaders and people taking part in the service and if they are from different cities their home city should be mentioned. Newspapers are always interested in stories that concern a large number of readers so the number of people attending the meeting or expected to attend should be told if it is a large number.

Other things to include in the story are:

The program for the service or for the different days of the services in case of a conference or series of meetings.

Any special numbers, with the names of soloists, quartets, choir leader, or orchestra leaders.

Any election of officers.

Characters taking part in plays.

The numbers and the names of the ones taking part in it when an entertainment is to be held.

Where some outstanding leader of the church is to talk, his office should be mentioned and some of the qualifications that make him outstanding or that qualify him for the particular message to be presented.

Subjects of sermons or talks.

Short extracts from special sermons in which some vital problem of the day has been touched.

Often it is possible to have pictures of prominent church leaders published with the news article. Where this is desired the cut of the person and the story should be taken direct to the managing editor and not just to a reporter or a person of less authority.

Ordinary news articles should be given direct to a reporter and not left at the office desk. If it is tactful to do so, the person taking the article in should wait until the reporter has read it over so that he may answer any questions that might arise concerning it. He must also remember that news is news but once and promptness will count as much as anything else in reporting.

Many times the church reporter is disappointed at the way in which the editor handles his articles. This should in no way (Continued on page 1101.)

The Place of Youth in the Church Today . . .

By Goldie R. Bell*

YOUTH is the strength of the church. Youth is the hope of the church. Youth is the living, pulsating, dynamic power that, properly motivated and directed, will bring forth the Zion that is to be. But youth must recognize her place while youth is still youth, and not waste the time of her greatest opportunity, not stand idly by waiting for some time in the far distant future when we shall be "called upon" to serve, when we shall be better qualified; not vaguely expecting that "some day we'll do something."

Now, as never before, youth needs the church—and the church needs her youth, and it is possible for each to save the other. But just what is youth's place? That is the question. Just where will youth find expression for the devotion, the ability, the talent, the latent power, the strength, the enthusiasm, the loyalty, that are the natural endowment of youth.

Youth must choose to consecrate her all to the service of God, and, having chosen, must find the place in the church that will afford the broadest and the deepest expression of the fulfillment of that choice. Youth's place is where youth can serve most and best in the bringing to pass the kingdom of God on earth.

FIRST of all, it seems to me, it is youth's place, youth's great opportunity, to prepare for that fuller expression of our ideals and aspirations, to prepare for the greatest service that we can render. The problems confronting this church and this people today and that shall still confront us in the tomorrows to come, demand, and shall demand the best that youth can give in preparation, in devotion, in loyalty, in consecration, in service.

It is youth's place to learn, and, having learned, to live "the whole law." So youth should study. We should heed the admonition to "study all good books," and particularly the three standard books of the church, for in these is found "the gospel in its fullness," "the whole law," "the way of life."

The young people of any branch should be keenly aware of the fact that now is their time for preparation. They should be keenly alert to their possibilities for study and training and should make the most of those opportunities. Various study courses that have been prepared by "super experts" in the field are provided by the church. It is largely up to branch leaders to put these programs of study into operation and to provide the best teachers available, and then it is youth's place to keep them in operation and to make of their study a real preparation for a life of consecration and active service in the church.

The task of the ages is before the youth of today and its accomplishment will require the best that youth can give in effort, time, study, preparation, ability, loyalty, and devotion. The obstacles before the church were never greater—the temptations leading souls away from God never more numerous nor more alluring. But neither were the opportunities for accomplishing our purposes ever greater than they are today. Youth, to assist in the accomplishment of these purposes, must be not only fully consecrated to the work of God, but must be prepared also; must be thoroughly conversant with the doctrines and principles and working program of the greatest movement in the earth today. The place of youth is in the ranks of the students, consistently, persistently educating themselves to lead the way, to live the law, to teach, to do active missionary work at home and abroad, to find their work and to do that work to the best of their ability throughout their lives.

THE IDEALS of youth are largely formed and subsequently governed by the things they study, so there probably is no phase of preparation of more vital importance than that of proper study properly guided. Youth must recognize the fact that every day and every hour we are making our preparation for life and service. Be that preparation what it may, our activities what we will, nevertheless we are preparing. Upon that preparation rests the whole cause of Zion.

But study and learning are not all—far from it. Daily, active participation in the entire branch and church program is another phase of preparation that is entirely fundamental and the value of which cannot be over-estimated. Youth's place is that of active participant in all church services: the church school, worship services, prayer services, the music department, the department of recreation, dramatics, and social program. All of these have their place, and in each of these youth has her place, and any branch may be dormant or keenly alive in direct to the interest, activity, and participation of its youth in the entire program. Participation in strictly young people's activities is not enough. Any live group of young people in any branch or group in any locality will have a well rounded program of worship, study, recreation, and social activity for their own group. But if young people stop there they have not found their place in the church—but only in one phase of its program, for the young people's program, regardless of its scope and development, is just one of the integral parts of the great program of the church as a whole. Young people, when they find their place, will be active in their own department, and from that department will cooperate with every other department of the entire church.

ONE of the biggest and also one of the most important fields of service for the young people of any branch is that which may be called "home missionary work." Each and every young person should be a greeter's committee of one to welcome all visitors and new-comers to their church, as well as to greet and welcome our irregular members, our older folks, and our faithful, loyal members who are always with us. I know of no one thing that will make a greater or more lasting impression for the creation of friendship and a feeling of good fellowship for a branch than the real enthusiastic interest shown by young people in all who come into their church.

A young girl of fifteen, who had recently lost her mother, went to a city that was quite new and strange to her, to make her home with an aunt and uncle who had served our church long and faithfully in the missionary field. The girl, however, was not a member of the church and was not more than slightly interested. Of course her aunt and uncle were much interested in having her attend services that she might become more interested, that she might find her place with the young people and with the help of their friendship and influence come into the church. But imagine the feelings of the girl and the disappointment of her aunt and uncle, when, upon being asked how she enjoyed her first visit to what is known as one of our healthy, live branches, the girl replied: "I didn't enjoy it at all. I don't like your church. I was there for all of the morning services and not one single young person spoke to me or paid even the slightest attention to me. I don't ever want to go back."

Could you blame her? How would you feel under like circumstances? The young people of that branch had overlooked a golden opportunity for a little social missionary work. They had failed to find their place. And this happens all too often; not from lack of desire to do, not even entirely from lack of interest, but simply from failure to recognize the need.

The young people of that branch were asleep to one of their greatest opportunities for service in the church.

Another instance:

Some girls on a summer vacation did the unusual thing, as doing things on vacations go. They went to church on Sunday morning! Before and after services, not one, but a dozen or more of the young people made it their business and their pleasure to greet these girls, to give them a warm welcome to their branch and to introduce them to someone. They were happy to have the girls visit their church and they let them know it! The visitors were cordially invited to join the young people at a luncheon and get-together in one of the city's beautiful parks that day, at which, needless to say, everyone had a most enjoyable time. In addition to this the Temple Builders of the branch planned an impromptu party for the following evening to which these visiting girls were invited as guests of honor. About fifteen girls attended this party and all unanimously agreed that they had a "perfectly lovely time." The guests returned to their homes that week with a mighty warm feeling in their hearts for the young people who had entertained them so graciously and for the branch as a whole, and they expressed the wish, in no uncertain terms, that they wanted to come back, and certainly would do so when opportunity offered again.

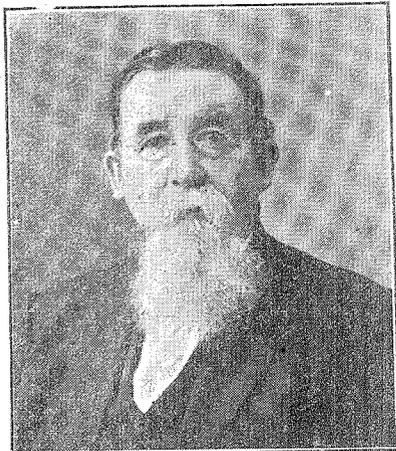

What a difference! To use the business man's expression: "What a whale of a difference!" In the first case, absolute injury done to the cause of Zion, by sheer indifference and thoughtlessness. In the second, a power for good and the embodiment of the principles of good fellowship and brotherly kindness put into action by a group of young people truly consecrated to the work of God and serving in the place where they were needed. In the final analysis the difference in the reception of the girls in these two instances was simply this: In the first case, the young people were asleep; in the second, they were vitally awake and active.

One of the most interesting facts connected with these two little stories is that both of these instances took place in the same branch! The young people have now awakened to the recognition of a need for their interest, their cooperation, and their service.

But to make the first story complete, I want to tell you of the happy ending. The girl did come back, purely due to the influence of her aunt and uncle. Her experience on the second Sunday was the same, except that one girl greeted her cordially, welcomed her to the church, introduced her to several young people, and invited her to join the young people in their activities. In a short time she felt that she was one of them and (Continued on page 1101)

(At this point the author discontinued the writing of his autobiography, though it is evident that he planned later on to revise the manuscript and finish his life story. While he was in Scranton, the church called Brother Lewis to take a second mission to Wales, the country of his birth. With him again went his wife and daughter, Ruth. Here we let Brother Lewis tell the story of their ocean trip and arrival in England and Wales as he wrote it to the Herald years ago. It was printed in the Herald, July 22, 1908.—Editors.)

A SECOND JOURNEY TO WALES

Myself, wife, and daughter, Ruth, bade farewell to the Saints and friends of Scranton, Pennsylvania, on May 29, at two o'clock in the morning. Several accompanied us to the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western station, and waited to see us leave for New York. The last six months in Scranton had been of such pleasant character, that it was truly a task to say good-bye. We did so, however, with the promise that if all were well, we should call on our return home to good old Far West District, State of Missouri, which, by the way, we hope will be organized into a stake before that happy day (our return) comes.

Prior to our departure from Scranton, I had heard that many of the Saints had concluded to see us off at the station. The hour being late, or rather, early, I advised at our last prayer meeting that they bid us good-bye at our stopping-place, which was at the welcome home of Brother George Morris and wife. The advice was heeded by all, with the exception of ten.

We arrived in New York City, at seven o'clock in the morning. A cold, chilly rain was falling, and the city looked as though it were deserted. We were the first of our little party to arrive, but all were in ample time to find their quarters on board the Carmania, which is one of the most comfortable boats afloat, built for comfort and not so much for speed, as it takes usually from seven to eight days to make the journey from New York to Liverpool, a distance of about 3,195 miles, which is about two hundred miles farther than the central, and three hundred miles farther than the northern course.

From the first of May to October 1, the large liners take the southern course, which is one hundred miles south of the Banks of Newfoundland. They do this to avoid icebergs, which are numerous in the summer months along the central and northern courses. We did not see any, but were informed there were some not a great distance away. For two days overcoats and wraps were in demand on deck.

Experienced seamen can tell when they are near the icebergs, for as they say, they tell it by the smell and taste of the atmosphere. Still, the officials in charge of the ships do not trust to that method alone. They take samples of water, and if the thermometer shows changes, indicating cold, they take their samples quite often, every thirty minutes. More often in the night and during a fog, and if the indications are such that they are close to the icebergs, they slacken their speed one half.

TWELVE LATTER DAY SAINTS ABOARD

There were twelve Latter Day Saints on board the ship: Brother J. W. Rushton, James Baillie, missionary to Scotland; Rees Jenkins and wife, missionary to Wales; Brother Daer, on a visit to Scotland, and Brother Truman to England on a visit; Brother and Sister Giesch, and daughter, Louise, on a visit to Germany; myself, wife, and daughter, Ruth, to Wales.

At three o'clock in the afternoon, May 30, the Carmania started on her journey. She ran aground on some soft mud, but, fortunately, her twenty-one thousand horse-power engines succeeded in getting her into deeper water without calling for other help. The Carmania is 675 feet in length; 72 feet and 6 inches in breadth; depth to the boat deck, 80 feet; gross tonnage, 20,000 tons; crew, 450 hands; number of tons of coal consumed every twenty-four hours, from 450 to 500 tons. She is a triple-screw turbine.

During supper time, six o'clock in the evening, May 30, we got into what the sailors call the "swelled sea," and the boat began to heave, not bad, just enough to cause a person to feel that the floor was giving way from beneath his feet, and the head began to get dizzy. Several had to leave the dining room, and wife was one of the first, followed by Sister Giesch. Wife was unable to go alone, and I was of little support to her. Still, I was not sick, but I staggered, and not with strong drink. We were making poor headway towards our room, when one of the waiters came to our assistance, and we reached our comfortable quarters none too soon; for in this case, the signs did follow the believer, for wife and said she believed she would be sick.

Ruth and Louise were numbered among the unbelievers, for they said they were not going to be sick, and after supper they both went up on deck to breathe the refreshing air of the Atlantic; but, about dark, they both had to follow in the footsteps of their mothers. I called at their room, and found the four in a very humble position, doing the best they could under the circumstances. They all agreed that riding on the ocean wave had brought about a very unpleasant experience. For about two days they were paying tribute to Neptune.

The men folks, with the exception of Brother Rees Jenkins, were more fortunate. They were always ready to answer the sound of the gong (calling to meals).

We were four in a room, Brothers Rushton, Baillie, Giesch, and myself. The rooms are eight by ten, four single berths, two closets for clothing, two wash-bowls, and electric lights, and everything highly polished. Pressing on the button brings to the room the steward or nurse. There are baths with fresh or salt water, free.

The dining room is very large and neat, and the table well supplied. First call for breakfast at seven; lunch, at half-past ten, consists of beef tea and crackers, served on deck or in the drawing room; dinner at twelve-fifteen; candy (butterscotch), at three, passed to all on the deck and in the drawing room; tea, at half-past five; supper at nine, consisting of tea, coffee, cocoa, lemonade, oatmeal gruel, crackers, and cheese. There was a fine orchestra that played from half-past ten to half-past eleven in the morning and from half-past three to half-past four in the afternoon. There was a religious service Sunday morning, conducted by the minister of the Church of England. Music and singing were good, reading from prayer-book; too much form for me.

Brothers Daer, Giesch, and Baillie have been discussing along gospel lines with some of the passengers, and one Plymouth Brethren minister in conversation with Brother Baillie tried to impress the people with the idea that all the Saints, or Mormons, as he called them, were one. But he did not succeed. Friends were made to the truth.

There were on board two Japanese; one of whom took passage in the first-class, and one on the same as us (the second). The one in the second is the general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Japan. He has been to the United States to learn more about Christianity. He said that "the Christians disagree too much." He was given some of our literature, and Brother Rushton exchanged addresses with him. He is a bright, well educated young man.

There was a concert one evening in the dining room of the second-class, admission free, at the close of which a collection was taken for the benefit of the Seamen's Orphans' and Widows' Homes in Liverpool and New York. Brother Rushton, being asked if he would take part in the program (he might sing a song if he felt so disposed), answered, "I am no singer, but here is one," pointing to Brother Baillie, whose name was immediately placed on the program as one of the volunteers. He sang, "I Am Going Back to Old Ireland," which, using a common phrase, "brought down the house." He was called back; the audience would not take "No," for an answer. He then sang a Scotch favorite, "What Is the Use of Repining?" There were eighty-five dollars collected in the second-class for the orphans' homes. On the following evening two concerts were given for the homes, one on third and one on first. During the year 1907, 1,165 children received the benefits of a home in these institutions.

THE LANDING

Sunday morning, June 7, we were on deck bright and early to have a look at the land of our birth, Wales. It is a beautiful sight, Ireland on one side, and Wales on the other. Sailing vessels of every description were numerous, and the sight was one not soon to be forgotten.

Just eight days from the time we left the land of our choice, the United States, we arrived in Liverpool at three o'clock in the afternoon. Here our company scattered to their respective fields. During our voyage eleven of us sat side by side at the table during meals. On entering the boat, each one was assigned to his room, and given his number at the table, which he held during the voyage. Brother Rushton had arranged it so that we could all be together at one table, which was much appreciated.

On June 9, we left for Aberdare, Wales, intending to locate there or in Merthyr, but could not get suitable quarters, houses being scarce. Plenty for sale, but not for rent. We stayed overnight with Brother and Sister Silas Evans, of Aberaman. Came on the next day to Cardiff.

The Pennygraig Branch gave a reception in honor of the return to Wales of Brother Rees Jenkins and wife and myself and family. After feasting on the sweet things prepared by the sisters, we were entertained by reciting and singing in English and Welsh. There have been added to this church during the last year several bright, intelligent young people, who are active in the interests of the cause. I was pleased to see the friendly feeling that existed among them all.

CLOSING YEARS

The above autobiography was found more than six years after the death of my father. It had never been completed as he led a very active life and never seemed to find the time in which to revise and finish it.

The last year of his work at Scranton, proved quite successful, and it was with sadness that he left there for a mission to Wales, as the church requested. He sailed May 30, 1908, and mother and I accompanied him.

Bishop Kelley secured passage for us and also for several others going to various parts of Europe: Brother John W. Rushton was going to England; Brother and Sister Albert Giesch and Louise Giesch to Germany; Brother Truman and Brother Baillie to Scotland; Brother and Sister Rees Jenkins to Wales and later to Jerusalem. Brother Jenkins died in Jerusalem after being taken captive during the World War.

We located in Cardiff, Wales, renting the same apartment we had occupied when we were there in 1901-1903.

SERVING AS A PATRIARCH

Mother and I returned to the United States in December, 1908, because of illness, but father remained until the following spring when he also was called home because of sickness in the family.

In the spring of 1910, father was ordained a member of the order of evangelists. At that time there were few active patriarchs, and his duties called him to various States and to Canada. His experiences in this office were sometimes marvelous. Some of them he wrote to the Herald years ago.

Having been appointed to labor in Far West with Cameron as the center, father bought property there in 1910, and made his home there until the winter of 1918, when he sold the home property.

It was after he had been ordained to the office of patriarch that one day while at home in Cameron I heard father singing words that were unfamiliar to me. "What are you singing, father?" I asked. "Oh, some words that are just the way I feel."

They were verses of his own composition, and today we have that hymn in the Saints' Hymnal, "Come, Holy Spirit," number 199. My cousin, John L. Morgan, also wrote the music for this hymn.

Father wrote a great many things a large part of which have never been printed. He liked, when he found the time, to keep a record of happenings and of his thoughts and meditations.

Prior to the sale, however, he was actively engaged in his line of duty in Kansas City Stake. When walking down one of the resident streets one day in December, 1918, he suffered a slight stroke which knocked him to the ground. However, he was able to get up and looked around to see if anyone had seen him fall. He said he felt "rather foolish" for falling when there was nothing that tripped him. When he returned home to Cameron, he suffered another slight stroke which partially disabled his left arm. Mother was ill at the time and her oldest daughter, Mrs. D. C. Kinnaman, went out to Cameron and took them both to Saint Joseph with her.

The week preceding this he had sold the home and was anxious to go up to Saint Joseph which had been his home for nearly fifty years.

One stroke followed another, but they were so light as to be hardly noticeable. During this illness he had several remarkable experiences. Four different times he called me to get my tablet and pencil, that he had a message to give, but each time the flesh was too weak and it was never written.

Nevertheless, father did tell me of trouble that would come not only to the world, but to the church in general, and he declared that only those who were steadfast would be able to endure. "For there are many things coming which will cause men's hearts to fail them, and only those who cling closely to the rod of iron will endure to the end." He also mentioned a wonderful dream he had in which he saw our present Auditorium, and described it as minutely as if he were living when it was built. He described it as "not the temple, but a large building to house General Conference crowds, church offices, etc." We often wonder why that dream should have come to one who passed on a few years before it was built.

A few days before his passing away, father asked to sit at the desk—he wanted to write something. Humoring his every wish, we helped him to the desk. He was so weak that he wrote just a few words. We thought he just scribbled something and did not look to see. He passed peacefully away March 29, 1919, at 11 p. m. The next day I hunted up the tablet on which he had scribbled a few days before. It was just an ordinary school pencil tablet, nothing in it; but about the middle of the tablet we found the words, "Seventy-two hours extension of time."

We counted from the time he had written that until his death. It was seventy-two hours.

"Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life"

ROBERT'S DEATH, although not entirely unexpected, came as a shock to everyone. Nearly all had something good to say about him—he had been gentle and kind to all the natives. He was buried in the cemetery where many of Lucy's relatives were buried. His grave was marked by a small board, painted white, and thrust endwise in the ground; but Mr. Hunt promised Lucy he would obtain a better headstone e'er long.

Dan and Louisa visited his grave again before they left for Papeete. Fastened to the piece of board was a paper on which something was penciled in a none too steady hand.

"What does it say?" asked Dan of Louisa as she bent over to inspect the writing.

"Born to be a king—died a pauper," she read, and wiped her eyes.

"He must have written it himself—in those hours just before he died. He must have asked Lucy to put it there. It's too bad—oh, I know it can't hurt him now—but he changed so—he was really better than he'd ever been, in some ways—"

"I know. Let's find Lucy. She probably doesn't know the meaning of these words—"

"You find her if you like," said Dan, "I'll go back and care for the baby and finish the packing."

"If you don't mind, Dan, I'd just as soon you'd leave the packing for me. I'd know where baby's things are. I won't be long."

She hurried away. Lucy lived with a relative in a tiny house at the very outside of the village.

Yes, she had put the paper on the board at the grave. She had promised him to do it and had fulfilled his wish.

"It doesn't matter what the paper says," she said, "Nothing can hurt him now. I'm sure he is happy."

"I'm sure he is—if there is any happiness there. And he wouldn't want you to be unhappy."

"I am not very sorrowful any more, Louisa. I still want him and miss him, but I know he is better and happier, so I try to keep my heart from being too sad. And he did not leave me entirely alone. I shall have his baby with me—"

"Lucy! But what will you do? How will you care for it?"

"I shall marry Paipai. He wants me. He came on the boat that you are sailing away on. I shall marry him, be baptized, and bring the little one up to believe in the gospel. Robert would be happy if he knew."

"Yes, but—this Paipai—how do you know he'll be good to the child?" Louisa realized the question was a rather tactless one, and she went on to explain how that sometimes in other countries a step-father or stepmother does not always have a great love for the child. "Of course," she added, "that is not always true."

"Ah, but the taata maohi is different." Lucy said it with a faint touch of pride in her voice. "To us, a little child is from God, no matter whose it is. If a child's parents die, there are many arms reached out to receive the little one and care for it. Paipai will be good to my child. And I shall no longer have to remain away from the church; I shall no longer be a stranger in my father's house."

"I wonder shall I ever see her again?" thought Louisa as she hurried back to finish the packing. She didn't want Dan to do the packing—not altogether for the reason she gave him—but she dreaded knowing whether or not he would still value that black box enough to take it home. She hated herself for being foolish over so small a matter when a little native girl like Lucy could bravely bear so much greater a load of trouble.

"But I just can't help it," she told herself, "and I don't understand it. If it were something more tangible, it would be easier to face."

SHE TOLD herself she ought to make it tangible; she ought to tell Dan honestly and squarely how the thing bothered her and have him explain it. But she dreaded finding out the truth. She dreaded it more every day. It had become magnified in her mind until it hung over her like a great dark cloud. No, she couldn't face it. She would find an opportunity to slip the box into the trunk unnoticed; then a glance at the shelf where it had been would tell Dan she had packed it up and nothing need be said about it.

Strange though, the name "Elaine" didn't seem to mean anything to him. She had suggested that they name the baby Elaine but Dan had said no, he never had liked that name; he wanted to name the child Dorothy Jane after his mother and hers. And he had added that next to Louisa they were the two best women he knew. If she were to have her way about their future lives, he ought to have something to say about the children.

"I don't understand it," she said to herself for the thousandth time. "And the funny part of it is, I can't seem to keep it out of my mind even for a day. I can't forget he asked me not to talk about it, and it makes me cross with him, right when I don't mean to be at all. And I ought to feel sorry for him, if he's as sad as it seems he is sometimes." There seemed to be no one near, so she indulged in a few tears.

"What's the matter?" Dan asked as he came in the room. "You look tired. You just sit down and rest. I can do the packing just as well as not."

"Oh, no, no! Please Dan. Get me a drink of water, will you? Then maybe I'll tell you where to put some of the things."

He looked at her queerly. What was there about packing a few things in a trunk to be so vehement about? But he went for the water, and while he was gone she hastily plunged the black box under some things she had already placed in the trunk. When he returned, she said:

"It doesn't matter much where you put the other things. Put the baby's things in this suitcase. I have the things we'll need on the boat in the steamer trunk already."

THE JOURNEY to Papeete was like a dream. Like a dream, too, was the hotel where they had secured their meals when they first came to Papeete, and the greeting of the waiter who remembered them: "Bon jour M'sieur-Dame."

They were to do some shopping in Papeete. Mr. Hunt supplied them with plenty of money. In fact, it seemed he could not do enough for them. Louisa could not take much interest in the buying though. It was Dan who bought all the souvenirs to take home at the suggestion of Mr. Hunt. A sort of apathy seemed to have settled over Louisa. She found great comfort in the baby, and clung to the little one as if fearful it might be taken from her. Once in a Chinese shop they had encountered a Chinese woman with an infant in her arms.

"Tamaroa anei?" asked the Chinese shopkeeper pointing to little Dorothy.

"Aita," replied Dan, "it's a girl."

"No good!" replied the Chinese with such severity that Louisa laughed, but sobered when she saw the expression of the little mother's face, as her arms tightened about the child. They too had a little girl, and the father was evidently much displeased. Louisa shuddered. Perhaps the father was even then thinking of giving the little one away! How cruel the world was! She would be glad when she got back to civilization and didn't have to meet up with such things. She would always remember them though, and they would hang over her like a shadow along with the thought of the black box. She remembered the poem that had so disgusted her the night after she had graduated from high school.

"This life is full of numbness and of balk."

Was that true? No, surely, back in civilization she should be able to mold for herself a little world of happiness and peace.

The journey home did not seem to take long. It was thrilling to think they were going back to America. Everybody was glad to see land again. A little French girl grew very excited over the sea gulls.

"Oh, mama! she cried, "Que-ce que ce-la? Que-ce que ce-la?"

"We have been in a foreign land," thrilled Louisa, "and we're going home. over there somewhere is the American flag!" She drew closer to Dan's side.

"Isn't it thrilling to be going home, Dan? We've been real nomads, haven't we?"

"We are nomads," he corrected her somberly, a look of wistful sadness in his eyes, "strangers and wanderers."

Louisa drew away from him again. Chilled. That was the way it always was she thought. Whenever she made any spontaneous remark, he could always think of something to subdue her feeling. Very well, she would try to be more silent.

IT WAS A COMFORT to be back home in Monroe. People made quite a fuss over them in a detached sort of way. Almost everyone had forgotten, though, why they had gone. Several had to be reminded where they had gone to. Funny how unimportant one really is in the scheme of things. Life for Monroe had evidently flowed on smoothly enough in their absence. There had been changes. Some of the older residents had died. A building or two had burned. Mrs. Miller had improved the home place until it did not seem so much like home as Louisa had thought it would be. But Mrs. Miller herself had not changed. She was the same swift worker and Louisa spent many minutes contemplating her activities in silent wonder. She decided her mother was one of the most cheerful women she had ever met.

"I'll be glad when I get into my own home and have a little work and responsibility of my own," she remarked one day.

"It's the only way to be happy," replied her mother emphatically. "Now you take that prize I won on my asters at the flower show—I got real joy out of that—knowing I had made a definite contribution to the world's beauty."

The younger brothers and sisters had changed. They seemed almost strangers and Louisa found herself thinking funny, confused thoughts as she listened to their rather "grown-up" conversation.

Dan's father and mother thought it a capital idea for him to continue his educational work, and so it was not long until they were planning definitely on going to Chicago. Mr. Eldon had always wanted his son to go there.

"Be sure and look Helen up," said Mrs. Martin, who happened to meet them as they were about to get on the train.

"Write me a card with your address on it and I'll send you her address. I can't remember it off-hand. I never was any good at remembering. But Helen has a smart shop in Chicago and is making good.

"I'll write her the card," thought Louisa, "but I won't look Helen up. She'd want to know all about us; she'd ask whether I'm happy or not, and nobody is going to know the intimate things about my life."

She intended to live to herself. Chicago was such a big, impersonal place. Perhaps if she were alone all day, day after day, with her work and the baby, she might be able to get things straightened out in her mind.

They secured a two-roomed, furnished apartment on Prairie Avenue. There were plenty of windows in the large room, and a clothes closet at one side. A large skylight made the kitchen bright, but Louisa wished there had been windows. It would seem more home-like. There was a nice bathroom and hot and cold water always on tap. It was altogether a cozy little place, tastefully furnished.

But her work did not take nearly all the day. She tried to spend the rest of the time thinking, but could put her mind upon nothing but her own troubles and difficulties. The whole world seemed bent upon keeping her thoughts upon that little black box and the idea that Dan did not love her.

Salesmen seemed to have a knowledge of her one vulnerable spot. She signed on the "dotted line" at the behest of a sewing machine salesman when he said: "Surely your husband loves you enough to pay seventy-five cents a week to keep you young and cheerful." She knew they could not afford all the new electrical devices just at that time; that it would take every cent they had to give Dan the schooling he must have if he were to secure the good position he wanted at the end of his study period. Yet it seemed that whenever a salesman made that suggestion, she lost her head in an effort to prove that Dan did love her.

She tried reading magazines, also with little success, in an effort to free her mind of unpleasant thoughts. The conspicuous advertisements shrieked at her: "Do you love your wife? Send her flowers on anniversaries." Dan never sent flowers, and he had never remembered her birthday nor any other important day. They were all alike to him. Or there would be a bright colored ad which blared: "Do you want to hold your husband's love? Buy our perfume, illusive, sweet, fragrant. He will respond to your allurements as never before." This thing of winning and keeping your husband's love seemed to be a serious—nay, almost impossible business if you did not have plenty of money with which to buy. Her mind told her that this was just advertising; that she should not allow these things to effect her so seriously. But the idea was repeated so often and so suggestively, so insidiously, the idea that a man's love for his wife was an unstable, undependable thing; that, in fact, if a woman did not spend her husband's money freely for those things which would enhance her physical beauty, she could expect his admiring eyes to wander toward some other woman who had been wiser and kept her skin soft and smooth, her teeth white as chalk, and her hair in just the right condition. Louisa realized that good grooming is a thing to be desired, but all these suggestions left her with a feeling of dissatisfaction with herself.

She tried reading biographies with little better results. She found small inspiration in them. It seemed that authors were trying to tear down one's belief in anything of a noble character. She turned from reading of the lives of men whom she had formerly been taught to admire with a feeling of nausea, a sense of having been betrayed. Whom could one believe in? Whom could one trust?

She had felt safe when she found they were not far from a great hospital. But now she began to wonder. She read many things in an effort to discover just what was best for Dorothy Jane. Hygeia, Physical Culture Magazine, Nature Cure Magazine, The Journal of Osteopathy, and The Chiropractor. She began a correspondence course in nursing sponsored by prominent allopathic physicians.

Secretly Dan was delighted at the interest Louisa was manifesting in nature cure doctrines and other such health philosophies, for he felt they were somewhat in line with the teachings of the church and the Word of Wisdom.

"I don't understand," she told him one night, "why all these different schools of healing should be eternally flying at each others' throat, so to speak. It seems to me that each of these schools has a great degree of valuable knowledge which is rather incomplete without some of the knowledge the other schools have. Now if somehow this knowledge could be coordinated; if they could stop fighting and sort of get together—"

"Louisa, that's the dream of the church. I heard one of our ministers say so once. A system of medicine comprising the best from every method of healing, based on the Word of Wisdom. I wish you'd read that some time, dear. It's section 86 in the Doctrine and Covenants."

"Oh, all right," carelessly. "But it really is hard to know what to believe in destiny. Any correct interpretation of Paul's philosophy will be consistent with this thesis.

TRANSLATOR HAD DOCTRINAL BIAS

A passage from Luke's writings is often used by predestinarians as favoring their position. "And when the Gentiles heard this they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed." (Acts 13:48.) The translator rather than the author is responsible for the foreordination element in this passage. The original text in the Greek language (Westcott and Hort's Edition) reads quite differently. A literal translation is: "And as many as believed (then follows the passive voice: asan tetagmenoi) they were being set in order (or ordained) unto eternal life." This agrees with the rendering in the Inspired Version. Undoubtedly, Luke wished to make our salvation conditional on the act of belief in harmony with Jesus' commission: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. . . . (Mark 16:16.)

Lyman Abbott has said (Commentary on Matthew and Mark, page 26) that various of the older manuscripts of the Bible, "present varieties of readings. A few of these varieties consist in what was probably a deliberate edition or a mutilation of the text for doctrinal reasons." The King James translation of the Bible was made in a day when the vogue of religious thinking was predestinarian.

DIVINE INTERPOSITION

There are times when, and conditions where, God can and does act by special dispensation, setting aside the laws of nature and overruling the will of man. If such were not the case, he would be neither true nor sovereign. Prayer would be all in vain. In his fatherly wisdom he may bless or withhold; however, the general rule is that he "sendeth the rain upon the just and the unjust." The laws of nature have no power of ethical discrimination.

DOES GOD KNOW EVERYTHING?

One point of difficulty remains to be met; that is, God's omniscience. Since God knows the end from the beginning, the end must be certain, argues the predestinarian. We grant that the ends which are certain he knows, but it also follows that those acts which he has left to be determined by the agent, man, he does not know; because they are unknowable. Since the laws of life work with unvarying consequences, what the gospel will do in the lives of men who obey it is predetermined. In the same way, the end of the world has been decreed. If the exact day or hour has been set, it is known to God alone. (Matthew 24:36.)

When we affirm that God cannot know all the exploits and caprice of the individual will, we do not deny his omniscience nor his sovereignty; we simply affirm that he is bound by his promise that we may be agents to choose for ourselves. (This is plainly taught in Doctrine and Covenants 58:6, and 2 Nephi 1:99, 118, 119.)

FROM THE SUBLIME TO THE RIDICULOUS

The fallacy of the predestinarian position against free moral agency is best met by the well known debating device of reductio ad absurdum. Let me illustrate with a story I heard in Washington, D. C., this summer as told by Doctor W. A. Sutton, of Atlanta, Georgia.

"My father had two former slaves on his plantation, when I was a boy, who were preachers. Brother Mose was a Presbyterian exhorter, while Brother Morton was of the Methodist persuasion. Each day as they were at work in the cotton field they would argue religious questions. Always it would get around to the question of predestination. Mose would contend that he was saved because God knowed just what he was going to do from the foundation of the world, for God knowed everything. This would generally floor Brother Morton. However they would both be ready to go all over the matter the next time met.

"One day Brother Morton put Mose to silence with this bit of philosophy: 'Now suh, if God knowed everything from the beginning, he knows what I's goin' to do next, don' he?'

"Being sound in the Presbyterian faith, Brother Mose came right back, 'He sure does.'

"'Now do you 'spose,' began Brother Morton, drawing a plug of tobacco from his pocket, 'that God knew from the beginning of the world that old Mort would take a chaw of tobaccer at exactly fifteen minutes to eleven on June the seventh?'

"'He sure did,' replied the faithful Mose.

"'Well then,' declared Brother Morton as he transferred his plug to his left hand and put it back in his pocket, 'here's once that I fool him.'" discourage him however, because the editor's problem of any publication is satisfying his readers and handling the articles is an immense one. Perhaps the next item turned in will be handled in a much more satisfactory way.

Articles should not only be taken to the local paper plant but to district paper offices which are located in the town. Where a district paper is distributed in a town and no local office is maintained, the articles should be sent direct to its place of publication. The Saints throughout a district can make their special services known to each other by use of the district newspaper.

With these thoughts in mind it would be well for the branch and district publicity agents to study the problem which confronts them in their locality and take advantage of any opportunity which they find for constructive newspaper publicity. By doing so the church work can be helped along and often a great deal of good can be done for the church both locally and in general.

in just a few weeks she was baptized—in the very church to which she "had never wanted to go back!" Why? Partly because the young people had found their place and were influential in helping this young girl to make the greatest decision of her life. But the real influence that saved her to the church was that of her aunt and uncle, for had she been living in anything but a Latter Day Saint home the chances are that she "never would have come back."

WHAT VAST POSSIBILITIES for the accomplishment of good are within the power of young people if they are really interested and eager to take their place in this one (too often ignored) phase of church work. We never know how great a factor in the making of a right choice—or a wrong one—a cheery greeting, a welcoming smile, a warm handclasp, may prove to be, particularly in the lives of younger young people. These, and lesser things, have been the turning points that have made—and wrecked—lives. Are we awake to our opportunities? Are we awake to the crying need of humanity for love and true friendship and to the realization of the need for our interest and our influence in the lives of others? Certainly this is one of youth's greatest opportunities, one of youth's largest fields for active service in the church today, particularly in this age when every urge away from the church and away from God is clothed in glamour, smiles, fascination, allure, and there is room and need for the willing, active participation of all. The place of youth is in the home missionary ranks of the church.

Another large and fertile field for the service of young people is in the visiting work of their branch. There is nothing more gratifying or more cheering to our older folks or to those who are ill and shut-in than to be visited by several happy, cheery young people. Young people like to be visited, too, as also do older young people. Ten minutes of social visiting in the home means more to the average newcomer looking for a church home than a dozen formal meetings in church.

I suppose the young people of every branch have done some visiting. If not, they have missed not only a great opportunity for service to the church and to their fellow creatures but they have missed some real thrills themselves, thrills that can come only from the consciousness of having made someone happy, of having brought joy into a life that was sad and burdened with care. They have also missed the thrills of some mighty grand, good times visiting with members of their own group to whom their fellowship and association mean much.

Young people may enjoy visiting singly or in couples, which is fine, but it has been my experience to learn that group visiting is most effective. Would you like to go with me in memory on one of the most worth-while visits a certain group of young people ever made?

Early in August, a year ago, seven young people met at their church one Thursday evening to go visiting. They decided first to visit a sister who had been ill for months and for whom there was little hope of earthly life, then to visit some comparative newcomer of their own group who had been to church on several occasions but with whom none of the young people felt very well acquainted. Later, if there was time, they would make still another visit.

In view of the sick sister's serious condition they questioned the advisability of making that the first visit but decided that they would go to her home and then be guided by what they learned there. Upon arrival they found that she had recently suffered a rather severe heart attack and so told her husband that they would not come in then but that they would come again some other time. However, the sister had learned that they were there and, weak and ill though she was, insisted that they come in, that she wanted to see them, and that their visit would do her more good than all the doctors in the world. So they accepted her invitation and each one greeted her warmly. How she was cheered by those sincere heartfelt greetings! Feeling that it was not wise to visit long or talk much, one of the girls asked the sister if she would like for them to sing for her. She joyfully said that she would love to hear them and named her favorite hymn. And as those seven young people, in that home where sickness and suffering had known a place so long and whence earthly life was soon to flee, sang softly and reverently, "The Old, Old Path," they experienced the unspeakable joy, the indescribable thrill of seeing that dear sister's face light up with heavenly bliss as a sweet peace stole over her countenance, driving the pain and suffering from her worn, weary body, as she listened to the words of the hymn she loved so well. After the hymn a young priest of the group offered prayer in which all joined in sincerity of heart, lifting their hearts to God in our sister's behalf. Then the young people departed, with the full consciousness of having given supreme happiness to one who had suffered much and to whom their brief companionship in her hour of need had meant more than they could ever know.

During their brief visit they had learned that the sister was to celebrate her birthday anniversary the following Saturday and she told them that she had prayed that God would let her live just that long, at least, and then she would be ready to go. So before they stepped into their cars to go to the next home some definite plans were quietly made and on the following Saturday the sister was the recipient of a small birthday card shower and a beautiful bouquet of flowers. We never saw her again for she lived for only a few days, but we were told many times that our visit and our remembrance had done much to brighten and cheer her last hours, that she had been gladdened and helped more than could be expressed, by the thoughtfulness and companionship of a few young people at the time she needed it most.

Young people, your place is in the ranks of the church visitors and if you want some real thrills, go and visit the sick and afflicted among you, and, when you can, do something more for them than just visit.

In accordance with their plans the young people went on to visit the newcomers to their branch, simply picked them up and took them along, and went on to make another visit at the home of one of the branch officers, where, all unwittingly, they arrived almost on the birthday of the head of the house, so, of course, this visit turned into an impromptu birthday party with ice cream and cake, and everything. A most happy time was had by all, and the newcomers felt no longer like newcomers when they returned home that evening, but rather that they were definitely a part of the young people's group of the branch, and such they proved to be during the remainder of their stay in that city.

This evening's visiting experiences were among the first for most of these young people and they went to their homes with the full realization that they had found a very real and very large field for their services, and one in which they themselves were the greatest beneficiaries.

Young people need never feel (as they so often do) that they do not know how to visit, that they do not know what they should do or say, for whatever they may lack in "technique" is fully compensated for in their frank friendship, their honest interest, and their lively enthusiasm. And there is nothing more soul-cheering and more inspiring to those who are old or ill than the bubbling enthusiasm, the sparkling vivacity of youth. When you want something really worth while to do, go and visit someone who needs to be visited.

Youth's place is in the music department of the church, lending and developing their talents in both vocal and instrumental music. These units of church work cannot only be helped or hindered by the cooperation of the youth of the branch, but they may actually be made or broken by youth's interest and activity—or lack of it.

And last, but not least, the place of youth is with those who give their financial support to the church as well as their service. Zion cannot be built without means and it is the place of Youth to keep the financial law that thereby they may convert temporal means into spiritual wealth, that by the consecration of this wealth as well as by the consecration of their lives they may be "Workers together with God" in the bringing to pass of His purposes in the earth.

The greatest tasks, the greatest problems, that have ever confronted the youth of any church of any age, confront the youth of our church today. There never was a time of greater opportunity for youth's service and there never was a time of greater need for that service than today.

Youth is called, each according to his talents and opportunities, to the service of God and His Church. The hope of the church is in her youth, and if Zion is to be we need trained youth, sacrificing youth, devoted youth; youth of vision, who are willing to pledge their lives, their all, to the building of God's Kingdom on earth—youth who are willing to do the things that come to their hands to do, who are willing to start right now, from right where they are, with just what they have, and, putting their faith and trust in God, and seeking His guidance and direction in all things, and with the help and inspiration of those whom He has placed in His Church as its leaders, go forward.

When the youth of the church find their place, when they occupy that place to the very best of their ability, when they learn to live "the whole law," when they are willing to dedicate their lives, their talents, their all, to the work of God, and under His direction and inspiration and under the guidance of His chosen leaders, go forward, fulfilling their part of the great program of this great church, the Zion of God shall be.

every line of endeavor. So many intelligent people have ideas that are so widely different. Of course there are doubtless many honest and sincere people in the world, but I can't help wondering sometimes if there isn't some commercial idea back of the intense loyalty manifested to some of our institutions. And I wonder if an unreasonable loyalty might not really hamper progress and learning—"

"That's just it," Dan paced the floor, delighted at the way her mind seemed to be leading her, "and there is where stewardship would greatly benefit the human race. If we had stewardships, a young

The Christmas Offering

By C. B. Woodstock

The spirit under which the Christmas offering is gathered through all the year is unique. The oblation is a special offering, representing a sacrifice, given in the name of our Lord as we come to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The oblation offering is used to bring relief and help to those who are distressed and in need. There are other offerings of a special nature called for to meet the needs of the local congregation, or to sustain the funds of the general church. But the Christmas offering requires no special call: it is not made because there is a demand which must be met. Nor is it limited to any set time or occasion. All through the year, beginning early in January and climaxing in the Christmas season, the Christmas offering is a continual expression of our love for the Master and the Cause he came to serve. The promise of the Christ was, "Lo, I am with you always."

The Christmas offering is distinctively a gift to Christ through the church school. It is fitting that each Sunday, or at least on one or two Sundays a month, provision be made for the gathering of this offering. One may be able to give only small coins, or even pennies, but the spirit in which it is given blesses and multiplies the gift. Certainly one should give in the measure of his ability and of his appreciation of the blessing the Master has brought to his life.

It is recognized, of course, that the payment of one's tithing and consecration comes as a first financial duty. This is required by the law of all who would share in the work of the Lord. Then from the nine tenths of the increase remaining we may make acceptable offerings in the spirit of self-denial and sacrifice.

Each year the Christmas offering brings in thousands of dollars from all parts of the world, to help the bishop carry on the work of the Lord through the ministry of the church. Last year for the first time in many years the Christmas offering was a little less than twenty thousand dollars. One year (1921) it was over one hundred thousand dollars. Already this year, in a time when the funds of the church are low and money is needed to keep its work going, more than a thousand dollars a month has come to the office of the bishop as Christmas offering. What a splendid contribution this will make by the end of the year! Naturally, as the Christmas season approaches we increase our gifts. And they must be more than doubled for the rest of the year if we would have the total Christmas offering reach $25,000 in 1934. This is our goal.

Is the Christmas offering regularly gathered in your branch? Are you helping by making such offering as you are able? Have you a definite plan to insure that your Christmas offering will be all that it should be by December 25? What is the total Christmas offering of your branch so far this year? What is your goal?

mother could bring her baby to a doctor and ask what food it needed without being afraid he might recommend something that would give him a nice profit without sufficient regard for the baby's welfare. Under the present system, a man, whether a doctor or not, must take care of his wife and family by some means or other; nobody else has any interest in them, cares whether they live or die. We know there are honest men in all lines of endeavor and I think physicians as a whole are a superior class of people, but we read in the papers quite often of men who are required to give up their licenses because of wrong practices. Under the plan of the church, there would be no chance for graft, therefore no incentive for that kind of wrongdoing, and this in turn would increase confidence in the people—"

"Really Dan, sometimes you almost interest me in spite of myself. I really would like to know what is best for little Dorothy. I've done my best—I've followed this baby book the doctor recommended to the letter, and even yet she doesn't seem to gain as she should," she ended anxiously. "But your church's school of medicine isn't a reality yet; and we're a long distance from your Sanitarium."

There was a knock at the door. Dan opened it, then stepped back surprised. "Good evening, Mr. Eldon," said a suave masculine voice, "I hope you will pardon my liberty in coming to see you without a special invitation. I often get lonely, and I thought—"

Dan recovered his self-control. "Why, of course—come right in, Doctor Forward. We were just speaking of different schools of medicine. Louisa, Mr. Forward is doing advance research work in the medical school." Louisa did not like him. Something about him reminded her of Mr. Hunt.

The Measure

"Large is the life that flows for others' sakes,

Expend its best, its noblest effort makes;

Devotion rounds the man and makes him whole—

Love is the measure of the human soul."

The destiny of the church is in the hands of the youth. In a few short years the burden of establishing the kingdom will be theirs. Of the older ones some have made ready, some have planted, some have watered. The fields are white unto the harvest. Youth, now is your time to prepare for the task. We are depending on you.—Elder H. W. Woodstock, pastor of Madison Branch, Wisconsin.

Healing of Little Daughter Brings Him Realization of Divine Goodness

MURIEL WILLIAMS

Though a member of two different churches, and the recipient of many blessings from heaven, I did not realize the goodness and mercy of God until 1925, when our little girl, Muriel Williams, then five and one half years old, was taken sick with measles, whooping cough, pneumonia, and trouble in her ears. She would cough until her body was almost tied in a knot, and finally she injured her heart from much coughing.

It would be useless for me to try to describe the aches in my heart as I watched beside her bed. She never complained, but was fading like a little flower wilting for the want of water.

After having four of the best doctors we could secure, all of whom shook their heads and said that nothing could be done, my companion said to me, "If I knew where Brother Ullom was, we might have her administered to."

I did not believe in divine healing, but on the night of April 14, 1926, after lying down beside our little one, it seemed there was something I must do. I arose from my bed and got the Bible, but I couldn't read as my suffering was so great. I took my burden to the Lord and his Spirit was present. I felt that I would do anything he wished; I was willing to be his servant the rest of my days. But the Spirit made known to me what a selfish prayer I was making. I gave in and said: "Lord, not my will but thy will be done. If it is thy will to take my little girl home, help me to be a better man, that I may see her again." I had made a solemn vow with the Lord; I did not belong to myself any longer. But the Lord gave me assurance that our little girl would live if we complied with the Scriptures where in James we are told to call the elder for the sick.

Brother Ullom, of Bellaire, Ohio, was called, and he administered to her. The child arose, dressed, and did not go back to bed again except for her regular sleep. The leakage of the heart was gone.

I am sending her picture. The Lord has blessed her with musical talent, and she is now thirteen and a half years old.

For nearly eight years now, having been led by the Holy Spirit, I have been a member of the church. I hold office in the priesthood. It seems only a short time that I have belonged to His church and I have done so little. But my blessings have been great, and I can say as did Peter of old that I know this work is true. Saints, remember me and my family in your prayers.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

Praises Bishop L. O. Wildermuth

We have been having hot dry weather for a long time. Many wells have gone dry, including one of mine, and gardens and crops are suffering. Last Sunday some men asked me what to do, and I told them to quit swearing and pray, that they could not expect God to help them when they were swearing all the time. I think conditions are not as bad as they were in 1864, when a sack of flour cost sixty dollars. My people then lived in Linn County; but my father and his family, his brother and family, and many others left Iowa and traveled through the mountains to California. My father drove a four-horse wagon and my mother drove a two-horse wagon all the way.

Last Sunday I walked a long way to see and hear our new bishop, L. O. Wildermuth. When he began to quote the Doctrine and Covenants, I knew something good was coming. Getting my book and pencil, I wrote down a few lines as follows: "No one can assist in this work except he is humble and meek and full of love. . . . Love for our fellow men." "God loveth a cheerful giver." "God gave each one of us something for the benefit of others." "One tenth belongs to the Lord." "What are you going to do with the other nine tenths? You are to use it as you please only as it pleases the Lord. The first great commandment of God was to love God and to love your neighbor. God is love and mercy."

I hope and pray that God will help us all to improve, to be more faithful, more kind, and to have the patience that Job of old had.

Prophecy of Seven Years Ago Is Fulfilled

In the year 1925, while visiting at New Philadelphia, Ohio, I was spoken to in prophecy by Elder Charles Cramer, and told, along with other things, that I would "walk up to life's border three times and be led back by the Savior for a purpose, and that my voice would be heard in many places and that my testimony would be a strength to the Saints."

In the fall of 1929, while living at Akron, Ohio, it was necessary for me to undergo a serious operation. After I was taken to the operating room in the hospital, I lay there talking to the nurses while we waited for the doctor to come to administer the anæsthetic. I prayed mentally asking, "Oh, Lord, if thine angels are near, let me see them." My spiritual eyes were opened, and I saw two messengers, clothed in white standing beside the operating table. I was led to know that one had the authority to take my spirit or to save my life. This was about one o'clock.

At the close of the operation, I was taken to a private room with a nurse, who was instructed not to leave my side, while the nurse in charge of the emergency room was told to be ready to receive my body soon. My brother-in-law, Elder E. M. Knight, was waiting; he asked to administer to me and receiving permission, did so, and left the hospital. The nurse in charge of the emergency room went off duty at seven o'clock, and since my body had not been sent down, she came to my room to see what had happened.

To her astonishment, I talked to her and said, "I never knew anyone could undergo such a serious operation and feel so well." She replied that she had never seen such skillful work by a surgeon. It seemed as though his hands were guided by some supernatural power.

The Readers Say---

In 1931, we moved from Akron, Ohio, to our present address, New Plymouth, Ohio. In December, 1931, I took suddenly sick and was suffering untold agony. Elder A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, Ohio, was called. During the administration, the Savior appeared with outstretched hands, and the suffering ceased instantly, only to return again soon. Again, the Savior appeared and asked me, "Can you drink of my bitter cup?"

A physician was called, and he said if I would go to the hospital, perhaps my life could be saved by an operation; if not, I had a very short time to live. Upon my arrival at the hospital three doctors were called and held a consultation. Two said it was too late, but the third was willing to try.

Again my spiritual eyes were opened and the veil of the great beyond was drawn aside, permitting me to see the messenger who was waiting instructions to come down and lead my spirit from the earth. I asked if I would be permitted to come, but was told that the time had not yet arrived for me. For days my life hung in the balance. By the fasting and prayers of Saints and loved ones, and the administrations of Elders A. B. Kirkendall, E. M. Knight, William Brown, and A. R. Manchester, I was restored to health and strength, much to the astonishment of physicians and nurses. One physician said I had crossed over to the other side and come back. I feel this was the second time the Savior led me back to life.

Again in March, 1932, I took the flu. I was hemorrhaging from the lungs. The attending physician said my heart was giving away. I was too near gone to take more medicine. Elder E. M. Knight was called by long distance. He and his wife and my mother drove two hundred miles, arriving at my bedside about one o'clock.

He administered to me and left me in the Lord's hands. I immediately began to recover, and was soon fully recovered. For the third time I was led back from life's border, thus fulfilling that part of the prophecy given over seven years ago.

"All That Thou Sendest Me"

Some years ago my companion and I were passing through a trial which, to me, seemed more than I could bear. One evening, kneeling at my bedside, I could not put my feelings into words though my very being cried out to God that I was too weak to bear this heavy burden; I wondered why I should be thus tried.

As I knelt, I heard the sweet voice of God's Spirit sing the words of only two lines of our well known hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee," "All that Thou sendest me, in mercy given." As I heard them, the Spirit rested upon me, giving assurance that all would be well, together with such a beautiful realization of our heavenly Father's tenderness and sympathy for us in our times of trial, that I felt like a new woman, full of faith and courage.

Twice since that time, when I have been especially tried, and weary of the struggle, those words have been brought to my remembrance by the Spirit, and with the same effect upon me. I wish that I were able to put into words the comfort I have had when meditating upon this. I have been made to realize that it is not always as a punishment that God permits our hard, sometimes bitter experiences to come, but that in mercy he seeks to purify us by this means.

I once heard one of our elders make a statement something like this: When we reach the beyond, we shall be able to look back over the events of our lives here on earth, and realize the good that has been wrought for us by what we have suffered, and we will bless God's name for experiences which made our hearts bleed while we were passing through them.

Have we faith enough to take to ourselves the comfort to be found in that statement? I believe it is true. Paul says that all things work together for good to them that love God. So I am trying to bear patiently all that he sends. The hard as well as the pleasant struggles have a place in his program for our development.

Teach Us to Pray

A recent experience taught me much concerning prayer. I had prayed many times before, and thought I knew how to pray, yet I had often wondered if I knew that particular thing regarding prayer about which the disciples asked the Master. Though many joys and blessings had come to me in answer to prayer, never before had the Lord dealt with me in such great measure of protecting care as on this occasion that I am about to relate.

In a daily newspaper I noticed the statement, "In prayer do not spend all your time asking for things!" This I thought a good suggestion. In considering it and taking an inventory of myself, I found that I was wanting in the giving of thanks for the blessings I had already received. I believe that it is well to ask the Lord for those things which are needed in our prayers, but care should be exercised not to ask selfishly but to ask for others rather than for ourselves. This is more righteous, and it is written: "Build ye the righteousness of the kingdom and all these things shall be added unto you."

One night about ten o'clock I began to question myself whether or not I had disconnected the iron at the tailor shop where I work. I could not decide whether I had or not. The uncertainty of the situation filled me with concern not so much about my job or any loss to myself, but about the possible loss to others. In my prayer I said to the Lord, "If there is really danger of loss, cause that loss not to be so great but that I can make it good."

In the morning I arose early, and as I came near the shop, I found everything looking natural. At once my anguish left me and I was glad. I thought that I or someone else had disconnected the iron. When I entered the room nothing unusual was apparent. But here is where the surprise came. As I was ready to work and reached for the key to turn on the iron, I found the key already turned—the iron was hot. I inquired to make sure that no one else had used the iron, or had turned on the electricity that morning. The current had gone through the iron for twelve hours and the heat of the iron was just the same as when I left it the night before.

For two days I considered the evidence in this matter, and the more I thought, the more I became convinced that the hand of the Lord had intervened and stayed the heat from causing loss. Had this experience occurred to one more worthy than I, I should not have doubted it a moment; but that I should enjoy such a blessing and evidence of the Lord's dealing with his children, I could scarcely understand. I was told by a local priesthood member that the blessing was due to the unselfish prayer I had uttered, praying for others more than for myself.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Is it narrow to hold that our church is right and that others are wrong?

It depends upon what definition of the word narrow is used, and also what is included in holding such a view. To insist upon holding to that which Jesus taught, and to hold that those who do not adhere to his teachings are wrong, would not be narrow in the sense of being "illiberal or bigoted," which is one definition of the word. But it would be narrow in the sense of being "close, accurate, or exact," which is another definition of the same word.

But narrowness in the latter sense would be quite commendable in the view of Jesus himself. The Christian faith must of necessity be what Jesus taught, and he repeatedly warned believers not to be too broad, but to closely observe "all things" which he commanded (see Matthew 28:20.) He declared that his way was both strait (strict) and narrow; and enjoined it upon his followers:

"Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."—Matthew 7: 13, 14.

To believe our church to be right, or at least more right than others, is a very good reason for uniting with it. That which is not truth is of necessity error, and Jesus taught that it is the truth which sanctifies, while error is always harmful. No one would call John the Beloved Disciple a bigot because he said: "We know we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness." To hold fast all that Jesus taught is not bigotry, but loyalty and integrity. He who does not believe he is right, should seek to get right. If we hold the truth, that which conflicts with it is error, and error always leads astray. Christians cannot be broad enough to hold false doctrines and still remain Christians, in the sense of representing Christ.

Does the Reorganized Church believe in the personality of God?

Certainly; it is a fundamental belief of the church. We believe God actually appeared to men, as stated in the Bible many times. We also believe he is a personal God in the sense that all may become his children by adoption, and that the time will come when his righteous people will be permitted to see him and to worship in his presence, which is promised in the sacred word.

Was there a Sabbath before the time of Moses?

In answering this question it is well to remember that the word Sabbath as used in the Scriptures means a cessation or intermission. The word itself does not mean a cessation of any particular duration, unless it is used in connection with some specification to that effect. Hence we have, first, a Sabbath in which God rested from his creative work. The duration of this Sabbath or cessation is not definitely known, though it was after six "days" of labor. But the days of the creation could not have been those regulated by the sun, because it was not until the fourth creative day that the sun was set in the heavens to regulate the earth.

But this does not prove that God established a Sabbath to be observed by human beings at that time. The text in Genesis 2: 3 is used by some to support the theory, but a careful reading does not lend such support. The Inspired Version shows, what is perhaps generally admitted, that Genesis is an account given by Moses. Hence when he stated that God sanctified the seventh day because in it "he had rested," it is an explanation by Moses to Israel to show why one day in seven was set apart to them for a Sabbath, instead of some other relative portion of time. The appointing of a Sabbath as a memorial of the people is not mentioned until the time of Moses, and the word Sabbath itself is not found until the book of Exodus, though the word "rested" in Genesis 2: 3 is a primitive root of the word Sabbath.

Was Judas a devil when chosen by Jesus?

Jesus called Judas a devil (John 6:70) about the second year of his ministry. But whether or not he became one after beginning his ministry, or was thus when chosen, is not stated. A. B. PHILLIPS.

Reunion of the Northwest at Silver Lake

Large Assembly is Instructed by Voice of the Spirit

Words cannot express the feelings of several hundreds of Saints who, while attending the reunion at Silver Lake, Washington, August 3 to 12, received from the Lord through numerous channels the light and instruction that will cause to be required of them a closer walk with God and a richer radiation of soul warmth than they have hitherto achieved.

It was early apparent that the spirit of expectancy and the desire to be better acquainted with the Master's will would bring together larger numbers of people than had assembled at Silver Lake before. Previous to assembling, the publicity agents throughout the three districts secured space for news of the reunion in the newspapers of their various localities. In these it was pointed out that the Reorganized Saints have no affiliation with the Utah Church but are presided over by President F. M. Smith, grandson of Joseph Smith, founder of the church, and that the Reorganized Church, with headquarters at Independence, Missouri, is the church declared by the courts of the land to be the true successor of the original church organized in 1830. The Saints appreciate the generosity of news editors.

From the first day of the reunion, large numbers were ready for all meetings. Nearly two hundred attended the first preaching service, and two hundred and twenty were at the prayer meeting next morning. One hundred twenty tents and some cabins were already occupied. Numbers rapidly increased until one hundred and sixty-six tents and all available cabins were utilized. At times nearly six hundred were congregated in the big tent and close around outside. An average of over two hundred young people came together for class work and prayer meetings from time to time, and reports from many other age group activities indicate not merely good sessions but enthusiasm born of worth-while experiences. Ideal weather prevailed throughout the reunion.

Apostles E. J. Gleazer and F. Henry Edwards were used as mighty instruments of power in God's hands, especially in class work and through the exercise of the spiritual gifts. Others also exercised the gifts from time to time. The Lord revealed his will often through the gifts of prophecy and admonition, at first admonishing the members to prepare for the blessings He desired to bestow upon them before they should leave the grounds, and finally, after great efforts of preparation on their part, pouring out his Spirit in power, bringing them down to the very depths of humility while they listened to his voice telling them of the terrible distresses soon to come upon the earth. Some were commended, others sternly rebuked, while all were made to realize that while the Lord is not pleased with past progress, they have a long way yet to go towards the desired condition of nearness to him if they are to merit his directing influence and protecting grace in the midst of scourges and terrors which must come. They were made to know that equality in temporal things must come to pass among them if need be by the things they suffer. No promise of returning prosperity to the world was to be heard, but much to the contrary. Zion, it was said, is to be redeemed by sacrifice, and riches of thoughtfulness, genuine love and Christlike fellowship are in greater demand for the redemption of Zion than temporal riches. In times of prosperity, many of God's people had neglected their consecration of service to him; they were not willing to deny themselves. But now they were admonished to search their hearts, for Zion's redemption waits upon a people who are willing to lose sight of themselves in love for their fellowmen.

The Saints of the Northwest have gone back to their several activities, feeling that their souls have been enriched by association with those whose sacrifices made possible such experiences, who made possible also the health and comfort of the camp, who worked with them, played with them, worshiped with them, and under the power of God's Spirit, wept with them. Under this Spirit they are determined to carry on to final victory.

Calgary, Alberta

Saints of Calgary and surrounding districts were privileged to enjoy a three-day reunion at the church, from July 13 to 15. Although they were disappointed at the failure of Apostle J. F. Curtis to be present, they are anticipating a visit from him before he leaves the Province. Elders Berham and Wildermuth were in charge of the reunion, and several fine talks and illustrated lectures were enjoyed.

On the final day, Sunday, July 15, a lunch was served by the women.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Reunion, Young People's Camp and Other Special Services Are Happy Experiences

The Saints met in fasting and prayer at the opening of the Nauvoo reunion and the Lord, recognizing their humility and their need, gave the assurance that their gathering would be of an outstanding nature. The promise that the people of God would be preserved, and should not want for the necessary things of life, cheered the hearts of the discouraged in this drouth-stricken area.

The reunion was one of the best ever held in this historic place. "Is it Important?" was the slogan. Class work was conducted the first period by F. T. Mussell on "The Church," covering such themes as "Why the Church?" "The Church and Society," "The Need of a Specific Church," "Why a Member Should Support This Church," "Church Investments," etc. The second period was occupied by Patriarch Richard Baldwin on "Discovering God in the Beautiful." The first class was conducted by Sister Baldwin on Sunday morning with "Beauty in Music" as the theme and was followed during the week by Brother Baldwin's classes on "Beauty in Nature," "Beauty in Pictures" and "The Supreme Beauty of the Life of Christ." These classes were well attended and very inspirational. Class work for children was in charge of Sister Baldwin with Mildred and Jack Sanford assisting.

A prayer and testimony service followed the class period, and the rich experiences promised were fully realized on more than one occasion. Words of commendation and encouragement were spoken to District President F. T. Mussell, Almer Sheehy and Mildred Sanford; Brother and Sister Layton, one of the veteran couples of the church, were commended for their long and faithful service. The entire assembly was promised more light and help by reason of the devotion and zeal manifested. On Friday morning the children met with the older ones in a unique testimony service. Each one present was asked to tell of a kindness shown them. There were seventy present and seventy testimonies were given in forty-five minutes.

The last Sunday of reunion opened with a prayer service for the young people at 8 a. m. followed by the church school and the sacrament service. The building was packed to its capacity and many were turned away. A social serv-

Report of Flood in Poland

"The late flood in Poland was the greatest in one hundred and twenty years," writes Elder John Stebel, missionary to Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. "More than one hundred and fifty lives were lost, and the loss of homes, farms, and other property was tremendous. Some villages and towns may never be restored because of general depression. The flood occurred in the southeastern part of Poland. Our church people are living in the western part of the State which was free from the flood."

Request Our Prayers

F. W. Corson, of Elk Hill, Virginia, seeks the prayers of the church in behalf of his little son, Joseph Frederick, born July 25, who is afflicted with spasms.

Six Baptized at Bantry, North Dakota

Missionary P. T. Anderson spent two weeks with Saints at Bantry, preaching some wonderful sermons. Six candidates were baptized, two adults and four children. Four babies were blessed, and the sick who were administered to, received wonderful blessings of healing. The Saints are hoping for more missionary meetings in the future.

John R. Grice Wins Esteem of Southern Young People

Elder John R. Grice, of Ohio, was guest speaker and helped at the young people's convention of Alabama, Florida, and Mobile Districts, held early in August at Mobile. He conducted two classes each day and won a place in the hearts of all. The services were well attended, there being an excellent delegation of young people from Alabama District, and the spiritual quality of the services was high. Classes were also conducted by R. L. Booker and Anna Mae Hough.

Agents Unto Themselves

Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

ice was held in the afternoon and the reunion closed with a sermon in the evening by Bishop C. A. Skinner of the Kansas City Stake. Other speakers during the week were Patriarch Fred A. Smith, Patriarch Richard Baldwin, Elders F. T. Mussell, and E. R. Davies.

Visitors were present from Omaha, Kansas City, Independence, Lamoni, Rock Island, Beardstown, Decatur, Taylorville, New Canton, Quincy, Bevier and Plymouth, Massachusetts.

The music was in charge of the district chorister, Sister Darrell Smith, of Dallas City, whose faithfulness was worthy of commendation. Special music was rendered by the Burlington Orchestra and by Sister Verne Thomas and family, of Beardstown, and others.

The district president was happily surprised on Saturday evening when five members of his family arrived from Des Moines. The two boys, Lee and Lloyd were immediately enlisted for a trio with Jack Sanford and their melodious voices were much appreciated at the worship service the following morning.

All the services were held in the church building, while sleeping rooms were secured at the Nauvoo House, the Mansion House and the homes of the Saints. Meals were served at a nominal cost at the Nauvoo House under the management of Elmer Sherman with Sister John Smith as cook.

Two children were baptized and confirmed on the last Sunday of reunion, Donald Booz, of Nauvoo and Patty Cornes, of Keokuk.

Although the heat had been terrific up to reunion time, the weather was comparatively cool during that period and a delightful breeze was enjoyed the closing Sunday when a large number assembled from far and near. The following day the temperature began rising steadily again until the peak of 112 was reached and maintained for several days. However the activities of the young people's camp which assembled immediately following the reunion, are going forward unabated. Ninety boys and girls are enjoying camp life. Their prayer service held on the river bank on Wednesday evening was outstanding in the experience of many present. Many similar experiences doubtless will be theirs before the camp closes.

The young people of Nauvoo District met in Nauvoo for the sacrament service the first Sunday in July and the church was filled to its capacity with an enthusiastic group of young people. In a get-together meeting in the afternoon plans were discussed for organizing. Another meeting was held during reunion when the organization took place and Jack Sanford was elected president, Pearl Herrick vice president and Ruth Shippy secretary-treasurer. These with E. R. Williams and Arnold Ourth form the council of the organization. At the council meeting which followed, various activities were planned for the near future.

A memorial service was held on the Homestead grounds on the afternoon of the first Sunday in June commemorating the ninetieth anniversary of the martyrdom. Prayer was offered by J. W. Layton, J. C. Page gave the memorial address and Sister Darrell Smith led the singing. A trio, "Twill Matter Little" was sung by Brother and Sister Smith and daughter Pauline and "I Saw a Mighty Angel Fly" was sung as a quartette by Sister Smith, Mildred and Jack Sanford and Harold Smith.

Bertram Lewis and Linda Clark, of Vermont, were united in marriage in the chapel of the Presbyterian Church of New Rochelle, New York, June 28. Their attendants were Elizabeth Clark, sister of the bride and L. H. Lewis, father of the bridegroom. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Doctor Clark. The couple are spending the summer motoring through the western States and Canada and will return to New Rochelle in September where they will continue teaching in the New Rochelle High School.

Two more excursions of Utah people were recently served breakfast, dinner and supper in the Nauvoo House by the women's department under the direction of Sister Sophie Lee.

Detroit, Michigan

First Church

Sunday morning, August 5, saw a large group of Saints (for this season of the year) assembling at the 9:45 hour for the church school. Inspiring lessons were enjoyed by all. At 10:45 the order of the service was changed and the congregation arranged themselves to partake of the Lord's Supper.

Two baskets of beautiful flowers were on the rostrum. One had been placed there by former members of the Highland Park Group in memory of Sisters Lucas and Blysiath.

Elder David E. Dowker presided and associated with him were Elders George Booth, Benjamin McGeachy and Richard E. Ulman. The brothers who served the sacrament and received the oblation were on the rostrum, with Sister Mona Knight at the organ. Brother Ulman offered a thoughtful prayer, after which Brother Dowker read the Scripture and then spoke relative to the purpose of the oblation. Brother Booth then arose to speak concerning the sacrament and stepping to the table where the emblems were arranged, asked the congregation to bow their heads in a moment of silent prayer for the purpose of receiving from the service the blessing the Lord had for them.

As Brother Booth in a clear and definite way began to explain the purpose and beauty of the sacrament, the power of God rested like a mantle over the congregation, and all present felt its soothing and inspiring influence. At the close of his remarks he read the following lines that he had written the same morning especially for this service:

If this mind shall think no evil
Then this tongue shall speak no guile,
And within God's sacred portals
I shall sit and rest awhile.

With our souls and bodies lifted
Far above the things of strife,
God, impart to us this morning
Of thy never ending life.

Father, lift us high this morning
Cleanse our souls from stain of sin
Make our lives each day bear record
Of the Christlike love within.

As we reach forth now together
May thy Spirit be our guide;
May we walk with Thee forever
From each morn till eventide.

After the serving of the sacrament, Brother Dowker felt directed by the Spirit to speak to those present who were being so wonderfully blessed because of the obedience, humility, and devotion manifested in their service to him. Others who may have been careless and indifferent were admonished to avail themselves of the opportunities, now, to serve.

Many hearts were made lighter and many souls were encouraged because of the experience of this service.

Plans are now in progress for more effective accomplishments through the coming fall and winter season.

Happy to Meet Church Officers—Local Program Goes Forward

This congregation was happy to have the opportunity of meeting President F. M. Smith, July 15, when he met with the members of our district at Hagerman. Brother John Culley took about twenty members in his truck, who otherwise could not have gone. About two hundred were present, and listened to the words of wisdom from the President, and felt a greater determination to heed the admonitions given.

They were also glad when Apostle E. J. Gleazer and family stopped over with them on their way to Seattle, and Brother Gleazer preached one night. They regretted to have Brother McConley sent to another field, but feel that Brother Gleazer will fill the vacancy to the satisfaction of all.

On Children's Day, a delightful program was given by the children, under the direction of their supervisor, Sister Mary Clark. Then all were taken to the park at Milner's Dam, about twenty-five miles distant for picnic dinner.

The young people have suspended the study period on Friday nights during July and August, and play volley ball instead. Their leader, Orval Baker, has been away all summer in his work on the railroad and the young men of the priesthood have been substituting.

The adult department was studying the Book of Mormon each Friday night, Pastor W. A. Connell directing. This also was suspended through July and August as quite a number living on farms could not attend regularly. The last Friday night of each month was given to social gatherings, light refreshments being served.

Through the winter months, the young people's department and adult department alternate to give a program on the last Sunday of each month.

For many weeks local Saints looked to the reunion held at Hagerman, August 15 to 19, as a time for spiritual refreshment and association with members of other branches. Again Brother Culley with his truck transported those who otherwise would have had no means of attending.

District Missionary, J. L. Sandidge, was with us for several days recently, and preached some inspiring sermons.

Most of Rupert members have their hearts turned Zionward, and are anxious for the way to open up that they may move to the land of Zion.

The peaceful Spirit of God was manifested at their sacramental service August 5. Brother Sandidge gave a talk on the significance of the Lord's Supper. Sister Ethel Godfrey, of California, who is visiting here, sang a solo. Helene Connell played a meditation softly during the period of silent prayer. In accordance with instructions from church officials, they have dispensed with the prayer and testimony meeting following the sacrament.

Bradner, Ohio

Special Services Help Here

Mother's Day was appropriately celebrated at the morning and evening hours. The mothers held the seats of honor on the rostrum, and took part in singing, after which William Smith, pastor, presented each of them with a lovely carnation. In the evening, a play was given under the direction of Sister Hazel Smith, "Mother Blessings' Job."

A number of Bradner Saints attended the district priesthood meeting, held at Sylvania. Elder William R. Grice, of Crosswell, Michigan, was present at this meeting. A large crowd was there, and a good many uplifting talks were given.

Elder W. S. Hettrick returned from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he had been seeking employment. The Saints of Bradner have enjoyed his presence, especially at the midweek prayer services.

A number of members from Bradner are attending the Kirtland reunion, at Kirtland, Ohio.

The women's department had a concession booth at the recent carnival, and cleared a nice little sum.

Minnesota Young People Fix Goals

To make the filing of their inventories one hundred percent, to memorize songs of the church, to prepare a one-act play in each branch, and to be thoroughly and strictly about their heavenly Father's business—these are some of the goals young people of Minnesota District have fixed for themselves. They will report their progress toward these goals to President F. M. Smith at the Duluth conference in September.

Sister Mary E. Gillin Passes Away

Sister Mary E. Gillin, of Peoria, Illinois, writer of prose and verse for the Herald, Steppings Stones, and other papers, passed to rest August 14, at the home of her sister.

For many years Sister Gillin was a teacher in Sunday school and Religion. She served Kewanee District (now Rock Island) as secretary and historian. Always she was an earnest Bible student and a student of the law and history of the church.

Sister Gillin was a sufferer from spinal trouble, causing neuritis, and this confined her to her home and made her an invalid for the last fourteen years of her life. But during this period she tried to be brave and patient, and kept her mind and hands busy. It was then that she wrote many of her most beautiful poems.

Memorial services were held August 16, and interment was in the family lot in Brenton Cemetery near Piper City, Illinois.

Make This Year Outstanding in Numerical Growth

The many varied activities of this branch are being conducted by local men and women. So much to be done has no doubt worked a hardship on some at times, but the joy that comes to them when they see the cause of Christ move forward makes it possible for them to forget the trials and discouragements of the past and look forward with eager expectancy to the next task.

Mobile officers are making an effort to meet the needs of every age group. The church school, presided over by R. L. Booker, provides study classes for all. The junior department under the direction of Mildred Booker is giving to the younger children the necessary instructions in spiritual life and worship. The faithfulness and efficiency of the supervisor and her teachers are being evidenced in the number who attend and their interest. Mrs. Effie Parker is assistant supervisor of this department and Irene Day, Vera Smith, Ila Powell, Verna Booker, and Vida Earle Steiner are teachers. Fanny Hough is secretary and Julia Black assists at the piano.

The prayer services have been of high spirituality in recent months, and attendance averages more than four times that of a year ago. The young people are active in these services.

The Genial Gleaners Girls' Club is filling an important place in this branch, providing activities for the unmarried young women.

The Boy Scouts under R. L. Booker and Ray Cannon, are entering their work with earnestness, and will be heard from later when they are further advanced. This new project bids fair to become an important one.

Mobile Branch maintains three missions in charge of local elders. The Bayou La Batre Mission is in charge of Elder Oscar Tillman. About twenty Saints live there, and Pastor Franklin Steiner, of Mobile, recently baptized ten others. A regular church school is conducted by Delbert Tillman. Alma Tillman, recently ordained a priest, is assisting with the work in his office. This mission is located about twenty-six miles from Mobile.

The Orchard Mission is located about fourteen miles west of Mobile and is in charge of Elder Henry Hough. Five were added by baptism last Sunday.

Elder James Cooper presides over the Whistler Mission. Six were recently baptized there and a good work is being done.

These men are to be congratulated on their good work.

From a standpoint of numerical growth this has been the outstanding year in the history of Mobile Branch. On April 1, Pastor Steiner baptized seven; June 10, nine; July 1, two; July 22, sixteen; July 29, six; August 12, five, and

MRS. WILLIAM E. SAMES

Sister Sames is secretary of Los Angeles Central Branch, and enjoys the opportunities for service this office presents. Los Angeles Central with a widely scattered and constantly moving membership has secretarial problems such as only a few of the larger branches in the church present. Sister Sames is faithful and up-to-the-minute in her office for she believes that secretarial work in any branch can be of great value to the local branch and to the general church recorder if time and care are given to the work, and of considerable grief to all concerned if it is neglected.

August 19, five. Many others are near the kingdom, and this number will be greatly enlarged before the year is out.

The young people's convention for the Alabama, Florida, and Mobile districts was held at Mobile, August 1 to 5. Elder John R. Grice was here and won a place in the hearts of Saints and nonmembers alike. All services were well attended and the spiritual uplift enjoyed was gratifying. Elder Grice conducted two classes each day and R. L. Booker and Anna Mae Hough one each. A splendid group of young people attend from Alabama District, but there was no representation from Florida.

Though they are far removed from the center place, their vision of Zion is becoming brighter day by day, and the gathering and all phases of stewardships are being given consideration by the Saints of the South.

Missionary Work in Kentucky

Good Spirituality at Reunion—Meetings at Crab Orchard

It was my pleasure to attend the Kentucky and Tennessee District reunion this year for the sixth time. By the appointing powers, Brother John R. Grice and I were associated for the first time, and I found him a very agreeable collaborator in reunion work. Saints of that district are true lovers of the social hour and the prayer meetings.

A prayer meeting began the services of the day, and the Lord blessed us with his Spirit, through tongues, the interpretation of tongues, and the spirit of prophecy. There are better days for people here if they will remember what the Lord has told them to do, especially the young people.

Following the reunion, the writer came back as far as Lebanon Junction, and over to Crab Orchard, Kentucky, where there is a branch of about fourteen members. Acting on the advice given by Apostle M. A. McConley that the officers of Southern Indiana District look after this branch, I began holding meetings out of doors, July 31. The congregation began with about fifty, but it soon grew to one hundred, and on to one hundred and fifty. During the two weeks, it rained only one night. Most of the Saints came on foot, some walking as far as three miles. Others came in buggies or on horseback.

This portion of Kentucky has been well favored with rain, and their crops are in fine condition. The last Saturday there, I baptized two, one young married woman, and a girl of twelve years. Elder Charles L. Oliver is the president of the branch, and Brother Frank Oliver is a teacher. All are active in the work of the Master.

Brother Charles Oliver will continue the meetings, beginning Wednesday, and we hope for his success. He is a man who is respected in the neighborhood.

There is a large portion of Kentucky that has no missionary work under way. We need more men to find the honest in heart and feed them the restored gospel with power and authority from God.

Sister W. H. Burwell, of Louisville, who has been in a very critical condition for a number of weeks, together with her husband, who is pastor of the Louisville Branch, desires that the Saints remember her in their prayers, that she may be restored to health.

I am now at Derby, Indiana, where our district conference will convene next Saturday and Sunday. May the blessing of God attend his work everywhere.

JASPER O. DUTTON.

Independence

Independence and Kansas City Saints will unite next Monday in a mammoth Labor Day picnic on the Campus. A day of fellowship and friendship is looked forward to. Many hundreds of church members will enjoy the day's entertainment—supervised recreation, basket lunch at noon, a band concert, baseball, playground ball in charge of the O. B. K.'s and the Independence Young People's Council, contests, volley ball games croquet, ping pong, a tennis tournament, horseshoe pitching, and at eight o'clock in the evening a moving picture. All members of Kansas City and Independence congregations are invited to come and take part in the Labor Day activities.

A large congregation listened to President Elbert A. Smith's Sunday night sermon at the Campus, "Witnesses for the Book of Mormon." At the conclusion of three more Sunday evening services on the Campus, President Smith's series will be closed. The Saints are urged to give their whole-hearted support to the remaining meetings.

President Smith was assisted throughout the services by President F. M. McDowell, in charge, Pastor John F. Sheehy, directing music, and by Apostle F. Henry Edwards, who offered the invocation and benediction. By special request Miss Anita May sang a solo. Miss May was graduated from Graceland College last May, taking high honors in the music department.

Stone Church

"The Mechanisms of Misrepresentation in Human Behavior," was the concluding theme of Doctor G. Leonard Harrington's series of Sunday morning lectures to the Stone Church congregation. A large crowd was present to hear him.

Music for this service was furnished by soloists of the Stone Church Choir. Mrs. Nina G. Smith, soprano, and Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, contralto, sang solos, also a pleasing duet number. George Anway led the congregational singing, and Hazel Scott Withee was the organist. Elder J. S. Kelley was in charge of the service, assisted by Priest Everet Elliott.

Weekly prayer meetings in Stone Church groups, both those held on Sunday and those on Wednesday evening, have the interest of many Saints. Where facilities afford, the services in the groups have been held outdoors during the summer months. Inspiration and encouragement have come from these gatherings.

Attendance at the young people's Wednesday night prayer service last week was larger than for some time. Lynn Smith, younger son of President Elbert A. Smith, spoke to the group, and a season of good prayers and testimonies followed.

Brother Lynn has been awarded a fellowship by the Kansas State Teachers College at Pittsburg. He will assist there this winter in teaching algebra and working in the accounting department. He will leave early in September.

Other young people will also be leaving this district early next month, some to attend college, some to teach school, and some to find their place in other fields of work. Their help in church services this summer has been appreciated.

Brother Carroll L. Olson, church statistician, has received word that he passed his bar examinations taken last June. Brother Olson this year was a member of the graduating class of the Kansas City School of Law, which he attended at night.

The Stone Church Choir will resume activities this Thursday evening, after a month's vacation. Their first appearance will be next Sunday evening, in a radio performance, during the regular ten o'clock studio hour over KMBC.

Second Church

An organ prelude by Billy McPherson opened the eleven o'clock service Sunday. Elder Harvey Minton, the speaker, used for his theme, "Living the Celestial Law." Special numbers were a vocal solo, "Nearer, Still Nearer," by Edward Stowell and a selection by the quartet

Gordon Cable was in charge of the junior service. The speaker was Cecil Walker and he used for a subject "Reverence for God's Word." The special number was a vocal duet by Helen Willoughby and Alberta Queen. Several Bible stories were dramatized.

September 5, there will be a business meeting for the election of officers of this congregation at the church.

Walnut Park Church

Following the early morning prayer service Sunday, two candidates for church membership were baptized by Elder W. T. Gard. They were Nelson Orlando Gard and his wife, Bessie Elizabeth Gard. They were confirmed by Elder Gard and Pastor Frank McDonald at the eleven o'clock preaching service.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the speaker in the upper auditorium Sunday morning. The junior service in the basement was devoted to a prayer service presided over by Elders Welton Wood and C. G. Closson. Sister Fern Weedmark, of Topeka, Kansas, a general church officer of the children's division, was present at this service.

The priesthood meeting at two-thirty was devoted to a prayer service. The members had been requested to come fasting in behalf of the work at Walnut Park for the coming church year. The service was in charge of the pastor.

The program at the Religio Sunday evening consisted of two numbers by a brass trio composed of Joe Countryman, Henry Countryman and Fred Mollison. They played the "Lorene Waltz" and "Monmouth March." A cornet solo, "Little Blue Bird of My Heart," was played by Harold Dillee. Thelma Countryman accompanied all the numbers.

The Crusader Class, taught by Fred Fish, had a party Friday evening, August 17, at the home of Opal Horn. Twenty-two members were present. The evening was spent in playing games and refreshments were served.

Liberty Street Church

The Liberty Street Choir, under the direction of Fred Friend, visited the Saints at Atherton, Missouri, August 19. The choir also sang one night at the series of meetings on Enoch Hill. Although most choirs either dwindle to a small attendance or disband altogether during the hot summer months, the attendance of this choir last Thursday night was thirty-five regular members, and ten visitors.

A picnic was held by members of Group 30 last Friday night, at the home of C. J. Bridges. Group Elder J. E. Cleveland arranged the picnic, and Cecil Walker and Mayble and Ruth Tignor were in charge of the games.

At the church school Sunday, August 26, all regular teachers in the junior and intermediate departments were present. Three classes were perfect in attendance. At the junior service Elder Sam Thiel was the speaker. Elder E. T. Atwell preached upstairs at the regular eleven o'clock service.

The members of the Doctrine and Covenants Class are enjoying interesting and beneficial sessions. Section fifty-one is at present being discussed. Pastor John R. Lentell is the teacher.

Fred Friend, chorister, led the practice of the Las Favoritas Chorus of Liberty Street, Monday night, August 20, because of the absence of the regular leader, Sister John R. Lentell.

Last Wednesday, at the midweek prayer service, one of the most spiritual meetings of the year was held. There was a large attendance and many of the Saints took an active part. Pastor Lentell's prophecy at the August sacrament service, and Patriarch Ammon White's prophecy, Monday night, August 20, at the meeting on Brother E. T. Atwell's lawn, are other recent occasions when those attending enjoyed the spiritual communion.

Enoch Hill Church

Early Sunday morning prayer services are well attended by this congregation.

Pastor and Sister E. A. Thomas have returned from Kirtland reunion where they enjoyed a spiritual season.

The boys' department was in charge of the worship period of the church school Sunday. Robert Young played a piano number; David Jenkins, Billie Cox, Harold Inman, and Dickie Bullard read the Scriptures; Myron Warren played a violin solo. Brother Willis Young, one of their teachers, gave a talk on the origin of hymns. Frederick Young sang

"A Song Gift." The theme of the morning was "Music Appreciation." Brother Bert Rogers, another teacher of the boys, offered the benediction.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey was the Sunday morning speaker, and the young ladies' quartet sang. Brother Bailey preached missionary sermons at the church each night last week, but Sunday he talked directly to the Saints living in Zion. He will continue his series this week, and everyone is invited to attend.

Enoch Hill extends thanks to Liberty Street Choir for their contribution to the services Friday evening, August 24.

The young people of this congregation were the guest volley ball players at Gudgell Park last Tuesday evening. Attendance at their church school class, taught by Elder H. E. Winegar, holds up well.

Englewood Church

Sunday, August 19, Elder George Hiles was the speaker. Sunday, August 26, Elder A. M. Chase preached. At this service Brother D. S. McNamara sang, "Yes, I'll Be There," accompanied by Sister Stella Howery.

August 19, the marriage of Erma Ruth Willis and James Allen Jurden was solemnized by Elder Perry Hiles. On the twentieth, the young people of Englewood gave them charivari at their home, Northern Boulevard and Van Horn.

The Y. P. A. service has been going strong all summer and each member brings new enthusiasm for the future. Recently the young people selected new officers for the next six months. They are as follows: Mary Hiles, president; Delmar Goode, vice president; Inez Toulouse, secretary and treasurer; Elbert McConnell and J. R. Closson, recreation and personal development; Marie Wyatt and Ruth Taylor, program. Brother Arthur Welch is the young people's counselor.

Several of the members of Englewood, both old and young, have been attending the reunion at Stewartsville.

East Independence Church

Sunday services, August 19, were well attended. The meeting at nine-forty-five was in charge of James Stowell and Laverne Spease. A number of classes are being conducted with good interest.

The eleven o'clock service was in charge of Pastor Frank Minton, assisted by Elder Sam Smith. Sisters Roberta Jackson, Jennie Butler, and Katherine Friend sang, "Take it to the Lord in Prayer." The speaker, Elder Chester Constance, read part of the fifteenth chapter of first Samuel, using as his text the twenty-second verse, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice."

Services Sunday, August 26, were most impressive. Elder John F. Sheehy was the morning speaker. The choir sang, "Oh Jesus, Thou Art Standing."

These Saints were happy to have Elder Clare Austin and family back after an illness in their home.

North Dakota Pioneers Observe Golden Wedding

Elder and Sister Frank G. Spaulding, of Minot, North Dakota, passed their fiftieth wedding anniversary May 1, this year; but on that date it was impossible for all their children to be with them. A family reunion honoring the faithful pair was planned for June 25, and all the sons and daughters were present.

ELDER AND SISTER FRANK G. SPAULDING

The Spaulding family includes seven children: Mrs. Lillian Kingsbury, Mrs. Pearl Asplund, and Clarence Spaulding, of Long Beach, California; Mrs. Eva Watson, of Duluth, Minnesota; Mrs. Hazel Jackson, of Minneapolis; Homer Spaulding of Leeds, North Dakota, and Mrs. Frances Glesne, of Minot.

Brother and Sister Spaulding were pioneers in the State of North Dakota, where they have lived for fifty-one years. They endured the hardships of early days. For many years their home has been the stopping place of the missionaries. Elders James Caffal, I. N. Roberts, Swen Swenson, Fred A. Smith, and William Sparling have been their guests of former years, and more recently Elder P. T. Anderson, Apostles J. F. Garver and J. F. Curtis, and others.

May God bless this devoted pair for their hospitality, and continue to favor them with good health, that they may assist in spreading the gospel in North Dakota.

There is no education which one can get from books and costly apparatus that is equal to that which can be gotten from contact with great men and women. Instead of studying books so constantly, how I wish that our schools and colleges might learn to study men and things!
—Booker T. Washington.

Minnesota District Young People's Rally

Hope to See This Movement Grow Into Permanent Feature

That the "Gathering" means something to the young people of Minnesota District was evidenced by the way they gathered from all parts of the district to Mille Lac, July 28 and 29. The spirit of cooperation under difficulties and the determination to make this meeting a success were gratifying to their leaders.

Fourteen cars brought seventy-one people together from Duluth, Clitherall, Two Harbors, Princeton, and Minneapolis. A program of play and work was carried out so that not a moment was lost and much good was accomplished. It is hoped that by next year this meeting can be turned into a young people's institute lasting several days, perhaps to become a permanent part of the district program.

To mention the names of those who helped most would be to list the name of each one attending. Since food is an important part of such an outing the committee in charge deserves special mention, Mrs. Winnifred Lynch, of Minneapolis, Mrs. Robert Zuelsdorf, of Duluth and Mrs. Julius Stabnow, of Clitherall. They were aided materially by their good husbands and Mrs. Arthur Bundy, of Duluth. Robert Zuelsdorf used his trailer as a "portable pantry" to good effect.

Following Saturday afternoon recreation of swimming and volley ball, the first camp meal was served. A big bonfire gathering on the beach was the special event for the evening. At this meeting L. S. Wight on behalf of the district presidency welcomed the young people of the district. Sister Cora Kjolvik, of Minneapolis, responded with some effective suggestions as to what should be the ideals of the young people. Wesley Elvin had charge of the games and kept the crowd busy.

The high point of the trip was the sunrise prayer meeting on Sunday. It was marred by a sudden cold wind, but the young folks expressed the thought that overcoming this would be one way of overcoming obstacles in the way of being about our Father's business. At this meeting a special message was read from Elder C. H. Johnson, pastor of Minneapolis Branch. The meeting was opened with a number from a Duluth girls' quartet followed by a poem prayer by Elroy Bundy, of Duluth. After the opening song the prayer was given by Kenneth Olson, of Minneapolis. Brother Malcom Whiting, of Clitherall, read the Scripture lesson from Luke, the story of Jesus telling his parents that he must be about his Father's business. Then Brother Julius Stabnow, of Clitherall, read the story of Joseph Smith's efforts to find the way to be about his Father's business. The formal part of the service was concluded by Allen Olson, of Minneapolis, who in an effective way explained why each one of us should feel responsibility for "being about our Father's business."

After breakfast Robert Zuelsdorf had charge of a class of younger people discussing their reasons for being Latter Day Saints. At the same hour Mrs. L. S. Wight conducted a class on goals for young people. At eleven the entire group assembled for a round-table discussion. E. J. Walters, pastor of Duluth Branch, talked to the young people at their meeting and messages were read from sister Adah Carlson, young people's leader; Brother and Sister Bosshardt, of Bemidji, pastor and young people's leader; Lester Whiting, district president, and from President F. M. Smith.

President Smith unwittingly gave the young people an extra challenge. While the meeting was held at "Hazel Glade Beach," a typographical error in his letter made it read "Hazel Grave Beach." In answering his request to set up some attainable goals and to report to him at the Duluth district conference in September, they agreed that they would show him also that they are not yet ready for any "grave." Besides deciding to learn some songs by heart and to prepare a one-act play from each branch, the young people decided to make the filing of inventories their big goal. They intend to report one hundred per cent on this when President Smith asks them for a report in September.

Wesley Elvin found some use for his first aid kit, the most serious case being a leg wound which befell W. C. Stauty, from Duluth.

By four o'clock Sunday afternoon everything was packed, the grounds were thoroughly cleaned and everyone on the way home was planning to be about his Father's business and to be at the meeting again next summer.

Coldwater, Michigan

Interest and Good Attendance Continue Through Vacation Period

During the past season church activities have been conducted with increasing interest, and on a high plane of religious experience. Class work in the departments is proving more interesting, and a larger attendance is noted. Sisters Scott and Wicks, alternating as directors of the church school and school of expression, are to be commended for their work. Sisters Fish and Peer, as chorister and pianist, are contributing much to the services in the line of music.

The pulpit has been occupied by District President A. C. Barmore, Apostle D. T. Williams, Elders Dexter, Peer and Hayden Scott, sermonizing, taking charge, and administering ordinances. God's Spirit has been present to approve and to bless.

The anniversary days of notable men, of the State and of the church, have received the honor due in uplifting programs and addresses.

A fine group of Saints cheered Sister Edward Fish, at her cottage at Coldwater Lake, and Sister Maude Corliss, at her farm home, north of the city, recently.

"A Mother in Israel," was dramatized in the church by outside talent from the Fisher rural district. A fine lesson was presented to a full house, and the event netted forty dollars, twenty of which is to be given to the church. "The Pearl of Great Price," was a drama well rendered by the juniors of the branch.

Elder S. W. L. Scott has ministered in quite a number of outside funerals.

Sister Stroh, publicity agent for Coldwater Branch, is continuing her work with much interest. During the past years, she has accomplished much. Her brother, who was hurt in an automobile accident, is improving, and will soon be removed from the hospital to the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. J. Parker, of Dowagiac, Michigan.

The August sacrament service was encouraging. Elders Peer and S. W. L. Scott were in charge. The large number of young people, together with the group of visiting Saints, made the service successful.

The work at Coldwater, Michigan, has not been interrupted by vacations. The branch has been able to carry on by consecrated effort, members fulfilling their obligation to the church according to the grace furnished in the gospel.

Sister Ethel Gallagher, who has been confined to her bed for eight or nine weeks, has convalesced, and is up.

Sister Catherine Stroh, and son, Samuel, who accompanied the remains of husband and father from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to Quincy, Michigan, recently returned to the former city.

Brother and Sister Ben Anderson and daughter, of Lamoni, Iowa, paid a brief visit to these Saints, in July. Sister Anderson's father, Apostle W. H. Kelley, and her uncle, Bishop E. L. Kelley, resided here in 1883. She visited the homes both occupied, taking pictures of buildings and premises. Bishop E. L. Kelley was a student of law here in the office of the late Judge Legg.

The Zion's Christian Legion was organized April 8 at Coldwater by Elder Alva J. Dexter, of Lansing. The following officers were elected: Company commander, Doctor John C. Parker; secretary, Dorothy Sweet; treasurer, Grace Peer; director of solicitation, Sister Mary Wickes; director of socialization, Sister Nettie Corless, and director of publicity, Edgar Peer. Officers are interested in having all members of the branch assist the work of the legion. The district legion convention will be held at Coldwater in October. Organized class activities are held here every two weeks.

Financial reports from the district bishop agent, Elmer C. Evans, indicate the good work that the legionnaires are doing.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

An interesting feature has been recently instituted at the morning worship period in which two members of the congregation gave personal responses to the morning Bible reading.

Pastor C. E. Wight began a series of sermons, August 19, on "The Pastor Looks at His Job." During the summer months the choir and officers have given their untiring services and the congregation has appreciated them.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Faler announce the marriage of their daughter, Doris, to Mr. William Rowe, of Oklahoma, which took place July 20.

New London Branch, Connecticut

Eventful Year Brings Help From General and Local Forces

Many things of interest have occurred in New London Branch during the past year, bringing courage to the members. Evangelist and Sister J. A. Gunsolley visited them in March, accomplishing much good through preaching, visiting and giving patriarchal blessings.

Missionary E. F. Robertson stopped there on his way to General Conference in April and preached several times. The Saints and friends who attended the services witnessed a high priest endowed with divine power which brought liberty, light, and blessing. One Saint who had prevailed upon a nonmember relative to come to church, was "just tickled" (using his own language) to hear and see the manner in which the gospel was meted out, for well he knew that his guest had never heard the gospel preached that way before.

District President E. L. Traver arranged for a regional meeting which was held in the southern part of the district at New London, July 15. Saints from Westerly, New Haven, and Norwalk met with them. From the last-named city they came by automobile a distance of ninety-five miles and arrived in ample time for the prayer service which convened at 9 a. m.

The good Spirit met with them, filling their hearts with appreciation. The church school made the hour a profitable one. Bishop E. L. Traver and Apostle Paul M. Hanson spoke at eleven o'clock. At twelve a basket lunch was enjoyed. This made it possible for the local sisters to attend all services held for the laity. At one-thirty the priesthood heard a profitable talk by Brother Hanson and he spoke again to sixty-five persons in the afternoon service. Many favorable comments were heard concerning the meeting, and all look forward to another regional gathering.

The church school picnic was held July 4, in a natural park. Swimming and baseball were enjoyed. The beautiful surroundings and congenial associations rested one's soul, and the day was rounded out by a prayer and testimony service under the white birches on a high bluff overlooking the Thames River.

Pastor Alma T. Whipple as well as the laity was made happy as three promising young men were called to the priesthood. Arthur Kuhn was called to the office of priest, John Whipple, teacher, and Hiram Simmons, deacon. Arthur and Hiram were ordained at the Onset reunion in a special ordination ceremony along with another young brother who has consecrated his life to divine service. Arrangements were made for John to be ordained at a later date.

For some years the pastor has prayed for reinforcements in the priesthood group, but according to his admission, he did not look at first for help from the local congregation, but had expected some good man already ordained, to move into the branch. Brother Whipple welcomes these three young men to his side and prays God's richest blessing on them in their labor.

Senlac, Saskatchewan

Appreciate Help of Visiting Officials

Apostle J. F. Curtis, Elder O. W. Okerlind, and Elder Ira Benham, of Alberta District, held a two-day meeting here July 31 and August 1. In the morning prayer meetings in charge of Apostle Curtis, a spiritual time was enjoyed by a good assembly. Elder Ira Benham gave good advice and encouragement in his sermons which immediately followed the prayer services. Elder Okerlind spoke in the afternoon to large and attentive audiences. Before the afternoon service Wednesday two babies were blessed. Again in the evening Apostle Curtis spoke to a full hall.

Under the direction of Brother E. L. Mogg, chorister, a fine choir is being built up.

On May 13, Elder and Sister Ward L. Christy made Senlac a farewell visit before their departure for Utah. The all-day services held on Sunday were well attended, and their talks and sermons as well as several duet numbers beautifully rendered, were enjoyed by everyone. During the years of their work in this district, Brother and Sister Christy made many sincere friends who were sorry to see them go.

A good program was given by the children on Children's Day, but the baptisms were not administered until the following Sunday when the weather was warmer. On June 17, the candidates were inducted into the kingdom.

On July 4, a nice service was held in the hall by Elder Ira Benham, president of Alberta District.

Two days later a Sunday school picnic was enjoyed at Harper's Lake. This Branch and the Michigan Branch joined in the day's entertainment, and the ladies' aid society sold candy and peanuts, making a nice sum.

During the week of July 16 to 21, Brother and Sister Vawter took the junior Sunday school class to a camp on Dilberry Lake. With swimming, boating and soft ball the week proved a most enjoyable outing.

Although the crops in this region are not all that could have been wished for, a good harvest will soon be reaped.

August 5, three young men allied themselves with the church. The baptisms occurred at a nearby lake directly after the morning service.

Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch

Nauvoo, Ohio

Having no place in which to meet for worship, Saints of this branch are experiencing a struggle to maintain their usual spiritual high plane. They gave up their meeting place some time ago, and have not held a Wednesday prayer service for some weeks. At present no services are being held.

The men of the branch, however, are working on the basement of the new church which will be situated on Russell Street and Columbia Avenue, Nauvoo.

The steel mill here is not running, and this puts several of the brothers out of employment, and has made the financial part of erecting the church a more pressing problem.

The women's department is working to pay for the lot purchased by the branch. They are quilting, and they prepared a three-act play which was staged at Lucasville, Ohio, July 5, and a few nights later at Pleasant Valley. Sister Nellie Rexroad is the women's leader.

The Bulletin Board

Pastoral

To the Saints of Central Oklahoma District: Upon reviewing the records of this district, we find there are five hundred isolated Saints scattered in a hundred and fifteen towns. To write each one would be quite expensive. However, we are anxious to contact as many as possible in order that we may correct our mailing list, call on you and make your acquaintance when traveling in your vicinity, serve you in any way that we can, and develop the Lord's work in this part of his vineyard. While it is our wish to reach personally as many as possible, we are of the opinion that the nurture and sustenance of the isolated Saints can best be handled through the local pastors and their priesthood. However, these names do not appear on the branch membership lists, hence we are anxious to correct the files and get a list to each pastor. We desire to see a larger percentage of our members actively engaged in spreading the gospel and living the zionic law in its fullness, thereby realizing the major objectives of the church—evangelizing the world and establishing Zion. Therefore, will each one who reads this article please get in touch with those Saints in the immediate vicinity and send us the name of someone of that group with whom we may correspond in regard to an appointment for visitation? We also solicit the cooperation of the Saints in the various branches, and any information you can give us concerning names and addresses or conditions at any point will certainly

DEAVER-DARLING. — Miss Beatrice N. Deaver, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Deaver, of Webb City, Missouri, and John R. Darling, son of Mrs. Ida J. Darling, of Cherryvale, Kansas, were married August 4 at 4 p. m., at the Webb City church, Elder Amos T. Higdon officiating. Miss Daisy Black, of Stewartville, Missouri, acted as bridesmaid, and the bridegroom was attended by A. Neal Deaver, brother of the bride. The ring bearer was Addison Waldron, and Sylvia Kathleen Oehring was the flower girl. After the ceremony the couple left for a trip to the Ozarks.

BOOKER-KOHLMAN.—On the evening of July 18, Aaron M. Booker and Leslie W. Kohlman, of Houston, Texas, were married in the Graceland chapel, Lamoni, Iowa, the ceremony being performed by Elder Roy Cheville. The bride and her parents, Elder and Sister N. L. Booker, have traveled extensively during their several years of missionary work for the general church. Both bride and bridegroom spent three years at Graceland College, majoring in music and social science, respectively. Attendants were friends of college days, Maurine Green, of Tabor, Iowa, Clara Hobbs, of Carthage, Missouri, Donald McCormick, of Houston, Texas, and Jack Sanford, of Nauvoo, Illinois. Music was furnished by Charles Ballantyne, violinist, and a trio composed of Mabel Carlile, Grace Muceus, and Anne Morgan. Following the ceremony, a reception was held at Arbor Villa, the home of Mr. and Mrs. N. Ray Carmichael. Mr. and Mrs. Kohlman are at home in Houston, Texas.

Our Departed Ones

LIGHT.—Mary Ann Borley was born April 30, 1857, at Montrose, Iowa, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Frank Echter-nacht, at Independence, Missouri, August 5, 1934. She was united in marriage to George H. Light at Montrose, Iowa, February 15, 1877, and to this union three children were born: Hatty Eliza, now Mrs. Frank Echter-nacht, of Independence, Missouri; Willie Frederick, who died in infancy, and Ila Vina, now Mrs. Fred Brueningsen, of Hastings, Nebraska. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, June 16, 1872, at Nauvoo, Illinois, and was faithful and loyal to the end of her life. The family started housekeeping at Boston, Iowa, and in 1878, moved to near Wood River, Nebraska, where they occupied a homestead. In the spring of 1892, they moved to Shelton, Nebraska, where she lived until the death of her husband, December 16, 1918. Since then she has lived with her children. She leaves to mourn her passing two daughters; four grandchildren; other relatives, and a host of friends. Funeral services were held from the George Carson Funeral Home at Independence, Missouri. Elder Elbert A. Smith preached the sermon, assisted by Elder Mark H. Siegfried. Interment was at Wood River, Nebraska.

WILKE.—Margaret Louisa Powell was born October 19, 1863, in Box Elder County, Idaho, and departed this life August 15, 1934, at her home in Independence, Missouri. She was the daughter of David J. and Ann Powell, who were among the sturdy pioneer folk of the Western Country. Her father, in company with his wife and family, was in the first freighting outfit to leave Omaha, Nebraska, for Billing, Montana, with horse-power threshing machinery for use in that territory. She was united in marriage October 25, 1883, to Herman E. Wilke, who passed away February 19, 1933, only a few short months before their fiftieth wedding anniversary. Mrs. Wilke was a charter member of the Violet Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, located at Galesburg, Illinois, where her home was for many years. She was baptized into the church June 27, 1874, by her father, D. J. Powell. She leaves to mourn her death the following children, Doctor David C. Wilke, Pittsburg, Kansas; Arthur T. Wilke, El Paso, Texas; Mrs. Violet J. Box, Tulsa, Oklahoma; Miss Margaret E. Wilke, Independence, Missouri. One son, Herman, died in infancy. There also survive her three grandchildren; a brother, Joseph E. Powell, and three sisters: Jennet Lewis, of Stewartville, Missouri; Martha Voorhies, Saint Joseph, Missouri, and Mary E. Davis, Independence, other relatives, and many friends. Funeral services were held Friday, August 17, at Independence, and Saturday, at Saint Joseph, Missouri. Burial was in Memorial Park Cemetery.

■ A New Beatitude

There is a dearth of kindness in the world. We have enough things that inflict pain, cause sadness, spread disease, injure body and mind, and betray us. We suffer from a shortage of the raw material of peace, and a positive drouth of fraternal love among peoples. The machines that hum and pound and roar in our ears day and night have not yet produced happiness on any large scale. We have invented all kinds of gadgets, but we are far short of developing a technique of goodness and joy.

Some prophet may yet arise who can write a new beatitude into the Sermon on the Mount: Blessed is he that giveth happiness, for he shall be called the friend of men.

After a day of heartaches and disappointments, it is hard to keep one's balance. When everyone misunderstands you—when the world forgets all the good you have tried to do and sees only your mistakes, then takes a malicious delight in magnifying them out of all proportion to their small importance, it is hardest to be patient. One feels like letting the top of his head fly off and declaring war on the whole human race. Annihilation would seem too good for their ingratitude.

Yet we must not let go. "That way madness lies; let me shun that," Shakespeare has the poor distracted Lear say in a lucid moment.

All hurts and injuries can be healed, all lumps of bitterness melted, all sorrows wiped away, our peace and happiness restored, if we can kneel at the end of the day and ask forgiveness for our mistakes and then make a vow to ourselves, "Tomorrow I will be kinder."

A Prayer

By Carrie A. Baird

Dear Lord, Thou are a patient God,
 And one who understands
 The weaknesses of human hearts;
 The frailty of our hands;
 Our tendency to err, and walk
 The broad and primrose way;
 Our aptness to forget Thy love
 And mercy shown each day.

Forgive us, Lord, we humbly pray,
 Our weaknesses and sins.
 We need Thee every precious hour
 To keep our feet within
 The straight and narrow path of life
 That leads to lofty plane
 And lustful race for gain.

Help us to walk the path of truth
 And righteousness each day;
 Let charity and kindness
 Be strewn along the way.
 Oh, help us to be humble, Lord;
 Good sheep within Thy fold;
 Good stewards o'er the talents
 Thou hast given us to hold.

Preparing the Way to Zion

That not a few of our people are feeling keenly the pressure of untoward conditions brought about by the industrial depression made worst by severe drouth over a large expanse of the United States, is evidenced in various ways. That our people as a consequence are thinking more earnestly and sincerely upon the need of a place of safety to which to flee in times of distress is also evidenced in a variety of ways. Can it be said that our faces are turned more longingly and prayerfully towards our Zion? At least we can say there is an apparently larger number of the Saints who are expressing not only a willingness but a determination to move into Zion or the regions roundabout. Are we being forced to gather? Well for us if in the days of greater prosperity we had displayed greater willingness to heed the Divine admonitions which not only pointed to the troublous times in which we now find ourselves, but gave clear indication of our duty to prepare the way before us by purchasing land in definite places, and building up the social solidarity necessary to achieve our purposes and the goals of the church. We, like others in the past, must needs learn obedience by the things we suffer.

Many, many times have the editors of the Herald and the members of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric called the attention of the Saints to the admonitions and directions or instructions of the Spirit to prepare the way before those who contemplate coming up to Zion or her curtains. At no time should these instructions be more punctiliously observed than now. Those who come up to Zion will perforce be of several classes: those possessed of worldly wealth in goodly degree, those of moderate means, those barely above the line of self-support, and the needy; those possessed of large ability and talents, those of mediocre attainments, and some dependent upon others for direction in labor and efforts. But to accomplish the will of the Lord it must needs be that all shall come in harmony with the law and Divine instruction and admonition. Let the way of those coming to Zion be prepared before them.

The preparation needed should at least cover the conditions of the Saints where they are, while traveling to Zion, and after they come. In making them it demands the cooperation of individuals and church officers in the region from where the Saints start, while enroute, and those in Zion and her stakes.

A prime essential in locating anywhere if there is to be permanency in the movement, is the securing of land or lands. And locating the lands necessary is or should be the joint task of the incoming Saints and the general and stake authorities.

What has been said in the foregoing is but a repetition of what has often been said before, and would not now be necessary if it were not for the fact that those who are coming do not always heed the admonitions given. In searching for lands for location purposes of the Saints will do well to contact the department of the Bishopric first, and be governed by their advice before contacting real estate men. Real estate men, even when members of the church, and however earnestly they may be interested in Zion and her stakes, are likely to have the selfish interests of profits or commission in mind, and may be lacking in information touching either the welfare of the Saints coming or the group interests of the place from which they come or to which they hope to go, and all of these are necessary factors for consideration in deciding location and purchase.

To the problem of the gathering the Presidency and Bishopric are giving greater and greater attention as the gathering gathers impetus; and in meeting these problems we ask the prayerful and faithful cooperation of the Saints who desire to gather or are moving in that direction. In preparing the way to Zion it is of first importance to establish and maintain contact with the Bishopric in locating land.

Let us make faithful effort to heed the admonitions divinely given us in the past.

F. M. S.

Staying Power

We are all acquainted with the people who give enthusiastic support to any new movement. They sit on the front row. They are first to sign on the dotted line. They accept office with a flourish. They commandeer everyone to get to work. Inside of a week they cool off. In two weeks they are yawning over their task. And in three weeks they have forgotten all about it. Then the faithful workers—who sat quietly in the background during the feverish organization period—must take up the work where the others have dropped it. They are the dependable ones; they have the staying power; they see the thing through. If it were not for them, there would be no hope for the realization of the Kingdom.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

BROTHER MARCUS H. COOK, one of our old-time missionaries and stand-bys, has for a number of years had as his hobby the making of violins, and so we were interested in reading in one of his recent letters the following:

"I had been working for some time at intervals on that violin that I wrote you sometime ago that I was planning to build. I had the different parts made and assembled them last week, and the results are very gratifying. I used some very old wood that had been carefully seasoned for about thirty-five years. I took plenty of time because I didn't want to make a mistake on such choice wood. I used the Joseph Guarnericus model and it will be a handsome looking instrument when I get it varnished. The tone has unusual power and a very fine quality. If it comes out of the varnish the same as most of my instruments do I think that so far it will be my masterpiece. If it comes out all right (which is a problem with all instruments until after they are varnished) I will probably keep it for my individual use, and if I am able to attend the General Conference in 1936 I will probably show it to you."

I shall be interested in seeing this masterpiece of Brother Cook's hobby.

THERE recently came to my desk from Brother Harry S. Lawton of San Francisco a picture of Niles Canyon which is unique, for he took the picture at a time when the famous Burlington train "Zephyr" was passing through the canyon over the rails of the Western Pacific. Brother Lawton is an old-time photographer, and has an eye for the beautiful as well as the unique.

BROTHER ALLEN SCHREUR, in a recent letter to me, speaks of the Park of the Pines reunion as having been a distinct success, and adds that one careful observer reached the conclusion that the reunion this year was at least one third better in spirituality, cooperation, and conduct of the campers than any reunion so far had. Then Brother Schreur adds:

"In our district there seems to be a greater earnestness on the part of the membership. They are desirous of improving their lives and preparing themselves for better service in the church. This was manifest very much in our last reunion."

We are always glad to have these evidences of continued spiritual growth by our people.

A LETTER from W. S. Macrae, one of the old-time defenders of the faith, expresses thankfulness for progress made in the recovery of his health but is still chafing under restraints necessarily imposed upon his activities because of debilitated strength. Brother Macrae has always been one of the men upon whom we could depend to do all that his strength, talents, and time would permit him to do. He still has a desire to do church work to the limit of his strength. We appreciate the services of such men as Brother Macrae.

Men in Business

A very interesting letter came to President Smith which is closely related to the subject matter treated in a recent Herald editorial. A part of this letter gives so clear and fine a statement of the attitude of the business man in the church, that we are reproducing it here:

I am a business man and I believe that my calling is just as honorable as any other. While there are some of the wrong kind of men in business and some of the wrong kind of businesses, the same thing applies to everything, even to preachers. There seems to be a feeling among some that a man either has to be a preacher, poor man, or striving with some unimportant laboring job in order to be able to understand and follow the Divine Law. I think that the occupation of a business man is honorable and that any business man can, if he so desires, live as honorable a life and have every reason to look forward to the future with as much hope as a man of any other type. Most businesses are based on the principle of rendering a service needed to a given public and by performing this service acceptably a profit is looked for which is legitimate and honest. I would much rather see our organization encourage men of this type to become interested and believe that they are welcome and can be a part of our program. I hope when young men and women read . . . articles in the church paper that they will not be influenced to get the wrong opinion and have fear of men and women engaged in business occupations more than any other occupation.

I hope someone may have the occasion and from time to time keep before the organization, especially the younger minds, that a business occupation is as honorable as any other calling, and generally speaking, is followed by men and women of high calibre and with as fine intentions as will be found in other undertakings.

Church people must recognize that men in business are as clean in character, as worthy in motive, as high in ideals, and as much needed for the work of the church, as men in any other occupation.

Wealth in itself is neither good nor bad. It is a form of power which can be used for good or evil, and it is a form of power which seems to be indispensable in promoting any kind of project for the betterment of the condition of society. Wealth in the hands of righteous men serves God, but in the hands of evil men, it serves evil purposes. Everything depends upon the character, the intelligence, and the spirituality of the man who acquires and controls it. As this writer suggests, our young men and women should have the proper attitude toward business and business activities, so that they too, with all others, may make their contribution to the building of the kingdom of God.

The Priesthood Journal

To the Members of the Priesthood:

For many years there has been apparent need for a journal addressed to the needs of the priesthood. An effort to supply this need has been made in issuing the Priesthood Journal, the initial number of which has made its appearance. In order to make this Journal meet the needs it will be necessary for the members of the priesthood to support it financially. The subscription price is within the reach of all, and the subscription list should eventually contain the names of all who hold priesthood. It is the determination of the editors to make the Journal helpful, instructive, and informative in matters pertaining to the work of the priesthood. To discharge our responsibilities in "teaching, preaching, exhorting, and inviting all to come to Christ," study, deep study, continuous study, is necessary; and in this task of study we can be reciprocally helpful. A medium of this needed helpfulness will be the Journal.

No Adult Quarterly for 1934-35

Church History Study in Its Place

There will be no regular adult grade Gospel Quarterly for the year beginning October 1, 1934, ending September 30, 1935.

This book and its study guide will probably not be ready for distribution at the same time as the regular quarterlies. Announcements will be made a little later as to time they will be ready for mailing, also regarding prices.

The Harvest Festival Chorus

Singers to Be Present at Last Rehearsals

Information comes to us from George Anway, director of the Harvest Festival Chorus, that more than eight hundred people in the various stakes of the church have been rehearsing for the concert at the Harvest Festival. By the date of this printing, it is hoped that plans will have been carried out for a combined rehearsal of Independence singers.

Two very important rehearsals are planned at which it is expected that every member of the chorus will be present: the first at 3:30 p. m. Sunday afternoon, September 9, at the Stone Church, and the final one at 3:00 p. m. in the Auditorium on Sunday afternoon, September 30. All choirs and singers are urged to cooperate to make this effort a success.

Assisting the large chorus will be the Clematis Chorus of girls, directed by Mrs. John R. Lentell, the Cantanina Chorus, directed by Mrs. H. C. Burgess, and the Wahdemna Choral Club, directed by Paul N. Craig.

Success operates on the self-service plan.—Detroit's Beacon Light.

Problems of Young People

By Paul M. Hanson
of the Quorum of Twelve

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them."—Ecclesiastes 12: 1.

The greatest thing about a young person is his chance to grow. His life is before him and all of his faculties are awaiting development. What a wonderful world in which to develop!

What makes a thing right? No, not custom always, nor mere pleasure, nor legal enactments. A thing is not always right simply because you feel it is right. But the divine law of God gives us a fixed standard of conduct. A thing is right or wrong as to whether it respects divine law.

How can a young man or a young woman maintain a perfect mental, moral, and spiritual balance while all kinds of influences are actively operating upon him or her? Look to the standards of divine law in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and you will find your balance in the life of him who is the Son of God.

Is it a religion for youth? Christianity is for youth because it is for all races, all peoples, and all ages. For those younger than youth Jesus said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me." To the young man who came to him to talk over matters relating to the developing of his life, the Master said, "Come and follow me." And to all ages, these words apply: "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."

My religion now is what it was when I was a boy. My religion, taught me in my home by the servants of God, enabled me to perceive good and evil; that is what my religion does today. It gave me a clear sense of justice and injustice; my religion gives me that sense today. It developed in me a respect for authority; Christianity continues to develop that in me. It enabled me to grasp the significance of love and forgiveness; my religion continues to do that. The religion of my youth gave to me a sense of appreciation and obligation; it instilled in my soul, "you ought," resulting in certain high standards. Life was impressed upon me as being full of value and dignity. Christianity is doing that for me today. The certainty of truth and the beauty of goodness were put into my heart, and today they appeal to me as great verities. The religion of my youth came enriching my imagination, leading to energetic living; my religion does that today.

The religion that was mine when a boy is my religion as an adult, and here

Elder Marion Moroni Blakely

Brother Marion M. Blakely was ordained to the office of elder June 24, this year, at Plano, Illinois. The ordinance was a part of the junior service that morning, and the gospel principle of laying on hands for ordination to priesthood was explained to the boys and girls.

Brother Blakely, twenty-eight years old, served as a priest at Plano for three years. In 1930, he was asked by the general church and Northeastern Illinois District to take the pastorate at Sandwich, Illinois. Since then, his efforts have been devoted to the building of that branch, and he has been given the hearty assistance of members living at Sandwich. Early in 1933, Brother Blakely was ordained to the presidency of the priests' quorum of Northeastern Illinois. He and his wife, Bernice, are well known throughout the district for their helpfulness and their musical talent of voice and instrument.

is to be found a solution to that question: What will bring about perfect balance in the mental, moral, and spiritual powers of man so that he can successfully meet life's issues?

Life is full of a great many things that will cause the question to arise many times in the mind of youth; Is life a series of difficulties? Youth finds, sooner or later, that there is joy and sorrow in life. There is heard the wedding march and the "Dead March From Saul," but with the gospel of the Son of God and with faith, it is possible for life to impress one as a series of opportunities!

We must live with our fellows, and in facing the issues of life find a solution which enables us to look upon life as a series of opportunities. Christ's religion is one that supplants "Can't" with "Can."

Christianity teaches one to believe that all things are possible with God. It gives us high ideals, and with these ideals come the feeling that they can be realized.

What of God? The Bible does not argue about his existence. It does say: "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." Its opening chapter begins, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." It relates what he did. I feel deep down in my soul a certainty of God almost more than I feel sure of my own existence. All things proclaim his existence. The heavens declare it. You are a miracle of creation.

When is the best time for a young person to think of life seriously. As a boy I reasoned: If there is a God, then he is my God all the time. If that is true, then why wait until old age has come, or health is gone, or prosperity has fled? I knocked at the door of the church when about fifteen years of age, and I doubt if a happier boy ever lived than when my knock was answered and I entered the church through baptism. When childhood is past, it is time to do away with toys. Young people are capable of thinking of serious things.

Remember—if you choose God, he chooses you. You have your laboratory experiments and demonstrations. Try this out and see, when you obey his laws, if you are not the recipient of the blessings in his promises. Have you not read the words of Jesus: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you" (Matthew 7: 7.)

That which is right is revealed in divine law and given to us in the gospel. How much longer shall there be waiting? The Holy Spirit is yours if you ask for it. It doesn't matter what your experience, get away in secret from all the distracting things of life. Humble yourself. Exercise your faith, and believing in the existence of God, ask for the Holy Spirit. And when you are given this blessing, a great many problems relating to your leisure time and your associations will trouble you no longer. Let a part of the Godhead into your own life and then you will not be troubled with what to do with your time, but you will be wondering how you can get the time to do all the things that arise in your heart to do.

But on the other hand, if our ideas are set in cement and the door of our heart is locked, fastened with a padlock, God

Zionic Stewardship

By L. S. Wight

THERE is no more important word in Latter Day Saint philosophy than stewardship. Nor is there any other word less understood. If we ever attain our zionic goal it will be because we not only learn the full meaning of stewardship through careful study, but because each member recognizes his stewardship and develops it to its maximum productive capacity.

As a high school graduate I was full of ambition and hope. I had been persuaded that selling nursery stock to farmers would give me the best chance to earn enough to go to Graceland. As soon as I was out of school I went from Lamoni to central Nebraska to work. After checking in at the hotel where I planned to make headquarters, I discovered to my dismay that another man was already there doing the same work for another company. I thought my employers should be advised of this, and that it would be best for me to move to some other section. I wrote my manager immediately and got his answer at once.

As long as I live I will never forget the lesson I learned from that answer. He instructed me to go to work without giving any thought to a competitor. He also wrote that if I wanted to work where I would find no competition, his only suggestion would be a territory on the planet Mars. My stewardship at that moment was to sell fruit trees where I was. If I had been permitted to move, I would have found competition no matter where I went. My job was to work my way ahead from that point, not to ask someone else to remove the obstacles. I wonder how often we are guilty of asking the Lord to remove obstacles which we should look at as stepping stones. Development comes only in proportion to our use of individual initiative.

In a conversation a good doctor friend some years ago told me that at one time he was in a city on the Mississippi River. A tramp approached him and asked for a dime for bridge fare. The doctor asked him why he wanted to cross the bridge and he said that he wanted to get to the other side of the river. Then the doctor said, "Well, when you get across you will be as bad off as you are now, won't you?" To this the tramp answered in the affirmative. "Then," said the doctor, "What difference does it make which end of the bridge you are on?" He did not give the dime to the tramp.

To ask the Lord to help us across the "bridge" of our troubles is merely asking him to do for us what we should be willing to try to do for ourselves. We must find our own way to cross these bridges, so that when on the other side we will be in a position to continue from there with our own initiative. Many times have I heard good Latter Day Saints bemoaning the fact that they have no chance. They say that if the Lord would only open up the way for them they could do great things for Zion. The fact is, bitter though the lesson may be, we must find our way to our goal from where we are. We must develop the means for growth and progress so that we may attain our Zionic goals. Our abilities, our talents, and our wealth, are the tools with which we must work. Their use is our stewardship.

Stewardship is the means to an end. It is not an end in itself. Stewardship is something we have no matter what or where we are. It is not something to be handed to us by the church. Every man or woman living today already has a stewardship whether he knows it or not. That is a general rule applying to everyone in or out of the church. Those of us in the church have a bigger stewardship than those out, because we have a bigger opportunity. The important thing in connection with a consideration of stewardship is to recognize that no matter what we are, what we are doing, or where we may be, we already have a stewardship. Ordinary stewardship is our job or the use of our talents whether or not we recognize it as such. Recognizing it as an opportunity to help develop the zionic program is the first step toward creating a zionic stewardship. This recognition includes a determination in the mind of the steward to use his stewardship as a means to the end of accomplishing our zionic goals. The zionic steward differs from an ordinary steward in attitude.

When each church member recognizes this definition of zionic stewardship we will be on our way to Zion faster than we realize. We will be so busy trying to make the most of our opportunities that we will have no time to worry about incidental details. Nor will we stop to ask God to do for us what we must do for ourselves. We will ask for courage and strength to do the tasks which we find in our stewardship. We will want to do those tasks well enough to enlarge our stewardship on the basis of results accomplished. God is still on the job and he will give us strength to overcome our obstacles if we have faith enough to tackle the job ourselves and to ask for the extra help we may need.

If Graceland did nothing else for me it did firmly fix in my mind a desire to discover the full meaning of stewardship in church work. To me there was a challenge in this theory which opens the way for a demonstration of practical religious life. My interest in the church was developed by the discussions of this problem. For several years in Lamoni I had the privilege of membership in a young men's class taught by Bishop Albert Carmichael. As a result of his teaching this principle became vital to me. However, most of us who participated in the class discussions did not have an appreciation of the full meaning of stewardship. We could not keep our discussions above the plane of incidental problems.

One of the favorite topics of discussion or perhaps I should say "argument," was ownership of property. There were those who argued very strongly that no steward should own the property over which he was the manager. There were those who were just as sure that we could be stewards in the fullest sense and still have the right to own property in fee simple. I was a part of the latter group, but I was unable to prove to my full satisfaction that my ideas were correct, although I could find passages in the Doctrine and Covenants to justify my belief. Those who opposed this basis could also find passages to back up their opinions as well as dictionary definitions to prove their contention. Most of us, who were intensely interested in this problem, failed to realize that our arguments to settle incidentals were preventing our getting the full vision of the principle of stewardship. We were also failing to interest others to whom this problem should have been vital. There were many who were not inclined to get interested in a controversial problem. We could not see that we were defeating our own purpose.

My earliest recollections of sermons by our bishops carry with them the memory of adverse comments on such subjects as "tithing" and "consecration." The burden of their thoughts were naturally on the financial affairs of the church. Some people would even absent themselves from these sermons. They didn't want to hear suggestions which they said were merely expressions of a desire to get their property. Probably their consciences were bothering them because they knew they were not doing what they should. But at the same time they had an honest fear because of so much misunderstanding being engendered by the arguments such as I have already suggested.

There were also too many whose attitude is best expressed in the story of Pat and Mike, who were discussing socialism. Pat was trying to persuade Mike what a wonderful thing it would be when they could share in the possessions of their richer neighbors. Mike thought this a fine idea as he had visions of what he would "get." Pat followed through by suggesting that they put the theory to work at once between themselves, and that Mike should give him one of the two pigs he owned. Mike's enthusiasm cooled immediately as he said, "But Pat, you know I have two pigs and you have none."

While I frankly admit that the class of young fellows were at fault in not getting a clear picture of the meaning of stewardship, we were not entirely to blame. Too many of our leaders were doing the same thing. One with whom I had a close contact actually advised me to not waste time on such problems because they could not be solved until Christ comes. But it seemed to me that we could not expect Christ to come until we are willing to do our part. Therefore I decided that I would do all I could to help solve these problems now.

My interest was intensified by the sermons of President Frederick M. Smith when he came to Lamoni. For years he preached about Zion and frankly said he would keep it up until the people recognized the need of making zionic development. He fired my enthusiasm to the point that I determined to stick to the job. And in spite of severe set backs on top of my mistakes, my interest is still at high pitch. I want to do my part to develop a full understanding of stewardship and to help make Zion a reality.

Stewardship is a bigger thing than property. When we think of it in terms of property we are putting a barrier in the way of a full understanding of this wonderful principle. It is the machinery of life which God has given us with which to reach our goal, Zion. It took a good many years for me to understand what I am trying to say now. My start toward rational thinking on this subject came as a result of a rude jolt some time during the spring of 1922. I spent a few weeks in one of our larger cities and was given the privilege of preaching several times. My good friends in that city may never know how much they did for me. At that time I had preached very little and I was in need of a chance to practice on someone. Not being very well acquainted with me they were willing to take a chance.

During one of those sermons I was enthusiastically talking about stewardship. I thought I was developing a real interest. After the service one sister came to me and told me she enjoyed the enthusiastic way in which I presented my subject but she could not agree with me. She said she could not be interested in any of these "new-fangled" notions. She did wish that our preachers would talk on fundamental principles of the gospel and quit injecting such subjects as "stewardship" into their sermons.

What a jolt! And to me this was a real blow. I was intensely interested in this subject which I thought meant so much (Continued on page 1133.)

The Church and Recreational Costs

By Dwight D. W. Davis

DWIGHT D. W. DAVIS

DURING the past four years we have had our attention directed repeatedly toward the church's dire need for money—on the one hand, to alleviate immediate obligations; on the other, to retire the general church indebtedness.

Four years of "financial repetition" should have accomplished one from the sacred obligation of filing either our inventory or our statement, as the case might be, with the Bishopric.

My tithing is so small that there's little use in my worrying about it, is another prevalent attitude. Just this failure on the part of thousands to pay regularly their portion, small though it may be, is prolonging the day when the church shall be free to move forward.

Ten billion, one hundred sixty-five thousand, eight hundred and fifty-seven dollars is the estimated annual cost of recreation in the United States.<sup>1</sup> This does not include expenditures for such items as newspapers, candy, chewing gum, hard and soft drinks, tobacco, etc. Counting in these luxuries the annual cost is estimated to be twenty-one billion, forty-five million dollars.<sup>2</sup> In 1929, seven hundred million dollars were spent on cosmetics and beauty parlors alone.

There are few, if any, Latter Day Saints who fail to contribute toward the mounting cost of our annual recreational bill. "An important characteristic," said Dr. Steiner, "of present day recreation in comparison with that of the past is the heavy burden of expense that goes along with its enjoyment."<sup>3</sup> Elsewhere Dr. Steiner states that "a significant aspect of modern recreation is the trend away from the more simple pleasures to activities that require considerable outlay for facilities and equipment for play. With few exceptions the most popular games and sports are those that make heavy drains upon family budgets."<sup>4</sup>

Perhaps undue emphasis is placed upon financial costs—it seems to be an American weakness—and not enough stress laid upon the human costs of recreation. "What doth it profit a man though he gain the whole world but lose his own soul" is the thought we should seek to comprehend.

Dr. Jacks wonders how people will use their increased leisure and raises some very pertinent questions. "Will they take as the model for their leisure the sort of life now most favored by the 'idle rich' and get as much of that sort of thing as their means enable them to procure—display, luxurious feeding, sex excitement, gambling, bridge, golf, globe-trotting, and the rest? or will they spend it in the way the idle poor—by whom I mean the unemployed—are now spending the leisure forced on them by the industrial crises, which consists, for the most part, in just stagnating (Continued on page 1134.)

thing above all others; namely this: developed an intelligent awareness of the need and necessity for every Saint complying with the financial law.

Despite the Bishopric's reiterated statements to the general effect that our hands, as a church, are tied behind our backs and we are thwarted on every hand in discharging our divinely delineated commission to evangelize the world and establish Zion, we have failed as individuals to become aware of the need.

Emphasis should be placed upon "every Saint's" compliance. Too often we are prone to associate Sainthood with Adulthood. This attitude is quite prevalent among the ranks of both youth and age; yet it should be remembered that a child who is baptized at eight is as much a member of this church as one who has been in it for one or more years. After the years of accountability, age excuses no one from a full compliance with the commandments of God.

Commensurate with ability every member of this church, then, should be doing his part to abide "by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom."

All too frequently we are duped by our own fallacious reasoning. Our financial statement is not filed with the Bishopric because we have no tithing to pay, is a statement often heard; yet we are not able to determine the tithing due the Lord unless we have kept an adequate accounting of our income and our expenditures. Even should the accounting show us to have no tithing we are not thereby released

The Tempo of Our Congregational Hymns

By Mabel Carlile*

IN AN EDITORIAL this spring, President Smith called our attention to the very poor congregational singing he found in many of our churches. No matter how well trained our choirs or soloists are, we cannot overlook poor congregational singing. Enthusiastic hymn singing is far more indicative of the spiritual tone of our people than the finest rendition of an anthem by the choir. The complaint has come from many districts that the singing of the people is deplorable.

While the music director cannot take the entire blame for the poor singing to be found in our congregations, he should look to himself for at least a part of it. Certainly a large share of the director's trouble lies in his poor choice of tempi. How can we get into the spirit of a hymn that is sung at a speed entirely out of keeping with its style? Many of our directors sing all their hymns as though they were fox-trots; others favor the funeral method of procedure. It is hard to say which is most exasperating to the congregation. In general, I have noticed that most young directors have the former fault. Probably it is a reaction against the dirgelike singing which characterizes many of our prayer services.

It should be borne in mind that hymns are very varied in character. We have the joyful song of praise, the martial type, the meditative type, the prayerful hymn, and others too well known to mention. They all call for a different mode of treatment.

The mere notes of a hymn give the director little or no clue as to how it should be sung. It might be fast or slow, light or heavy, and solemn or joyous. The words are a far better guide than the bare notes, and yet we have other aids for the selection of our tempi. The general rate is often indicated by such words as allegro, meaning fast; andante, meaning leisurely; or adagio and largo, meaning slow. But even with this help there are so many differences of opinion as to what really constitutes slow or fast singing.

Realizing all this, the editors of our new hymn book have attempted to standardize our congregational singing by establishing a metronomic speed for each hymn. These should be studied carefully.

A metronome is simply a clocklike instrument with swinging pendulum which can be made to tick at any speed. This is accomplished by adjusting a weight on the pendulum, to the position desired on a scale similar to that of a thermometer. For instance, when the weight is set at 60, the pendulum will tick exactly sixty times a minute. With the weight set at 90, there will be ninety swings a minute.

If you will observe your new hymn book, you will see that each metronome marking is given with reference to a note. Hymn No. 201 is designated, "quarter note-60", while the hymn below it, (No. 202) is marked, "half note-60." This simply means that in the first hymn we give one beat to every quarter note and sing them at about the rate of sixty per minute. In the second hymn, No. 202, we give one beat to each half note and sing these at the rate of sixty beats a minute also. If you do not have a metronome you can time these two hymns exactly as your watch ticks. If a hymn is marked 66 take it a little faster than your watch ticks or 58 would indicate a slightly slower speed.

The standard metronome costs around five dollars but it is very helpful to every director. Instead of the expensive clock-work metronomes, a very simple and yet quite accurate one can be made from a tape line. Secure one of these tape measures that come in a little round case, in which the tape can be pulled out by a tab and flies back in, when a spring is pressed. The case itself will act as a weight and you can hold the tab of the tape to set it in motion. About thirty-eight inches of tape will swing sixty times a minute; twenty-eight inches will swing seventy times; twenty-one inches, eighty times; eighteen inches, ninety times; twelve inches, one hundred times; and eight inches, one hundred and twenty times. These figures are not strictly accurate, but they are near enough for ordinary purposes. You can get the exact length by testing the swings with your watch.

We hope that our directors will either secure a metronome or make one of the tape line variety and "check up" on themselves. Without being aware of it, we can fall into

New Quarterlies for Use in October, 1934

By C. B. Woodstock

There are now available at the Herald Publishing House free copies of a neat, eight-page folder of the Course of Study for the church school for the year beginning October 7. Copies are being sent to each church school director whose name and address we have on file. Others who wish them should make request.

We submit below a brief statement concerning the current quarterlies from which supplies will usually be ordered. In all the departments from the kindergarten to the senior, inclusive, quarterlies are printed in cycles, that is, this is the first year of the kindergarten two-year cycle, the second year of primary, junior, intermediate and senior three-year cycles, and the fifth year of the older young people's five-year cycle. Adult quarterlies are not in a cycle, new material being made available each year. In most cases the quarterlies of other years in each cycle are also available at the publishing house. The few cases in which quarterlies are sold out are clearly indicated on the course of study folder, which should always be consulted in ordering.

The quarterlies being printed for use beginning in October are as follows:

Kindergarten, ages 4 and 5.

Leading Childhood to God, by Myrtle Weber. Numbers 111 to 114. Lessons the same as used two years ago.

Primary, public school grades 1, 2 and 3.

Learning to Live as God's Children, by Mildred Goodfellow. Numbers 221 to 224. Second year lessons slightly revised and edited.

The former "History of Christianity for Youth," by Christiana Salyards, a full year of splendid lessons telling the story of the Christian church from Christ to the Restoration will still be available. But in order to provide in one year a study of church history which shall include the story of the Restoration and the history of the church down to the present, two quarters cover the history from Christ to 1800 A. D., quarters 3 and 4 are devoted to our own church history. These are wonderfully inspiring lessons taken from the most dramatic incidents of the history, well suited to give a background of knowledge and appreciation of the enduring purposes of God in all ages and among all men.

Older Young People, approximate ages 18 to 24.

The Bible in Daily Living, an Introductory Bible course by Roy A. Cheville. Numbers 611 to 614. This will give young people and others a splendid opportunity to spend a year in Bible study under the guidance of the instructor in Bible in Graceland College. There can be no inner peace without sharing. Hear the Mayo brothers of Rochester, Minnesota as they make their gift of two million dollars to the University, "We never regarded this money as ours. It came from the people, and we believe that it should go back to the people. That was our father's attitude in life." These men know that the heart that will not share is doomed to a barren, fruitless existence like the Dead Sea. Because of what we are, because we belong to God, because we are made to be brothers, we must share. Listen to Livingstone: "Don't talk about my sacrifices." He had found the joy of sharing.—Arthur E. Cowley in "We Must Share," Church Management.

Are We Easy to Live With?

By Lyle D. Flynn

LYLE D. FLYNN

There are plenty of daily evidences on every side to denote that people and nations are hard to live with. Americans look with pity and scorn upon the European situation, where nations are gnashing teeth and drawing swords at each other. Internal strife and civil uprisings are wrecking national progress in the principalities of Europe.

But what of America? Guns in our own native land, the "land of the free and the home of the brave," are flashing everywhere. Strikes in all industries, bombings of business firms, raids, massacres, organized crime, martial law, all evidences that Americans are not easy to live with. What of the American home? Husbands killing their wives, and vice versa, boys shooting their fathers, and girls poisoning their mothers, divorce courts filled, sweethearts forming alliances to kill each other! All are added witnesses that folks have not learned to live together.

Let's take a look at the church. Are there no divided branches, no priesthood factions, no family difficulties, no divorces?

This problem of human living-together (or human not-living-together) is not so new. Cain couldn't live with Abel. A great orator once said men were crying "peace, peace, when there is no peace." The banner of peace hangs hypocritically over nearly every world capital today, but there is no peace, and will be no peace until there is a change in the hearts of men. Nations cannot be expected to be at peace with each other, when the homes which make up the different nations are divided. In order for the great leaders to become real statesmen (men who think of the next generation and not just the next election), they must be reared in the best of home environment. The leaders of the nations, the industrialists, the financiers, the mercantile group, the laborers, the agriculturalists, all must be developed under the best environment of cultured homelife if they are going to understand the ideal for the nations. Men and women who cannot maintain a happy and congenial homelife cannot maintain such a condition among the peoples and nationalities of the world.

In the church homes of today must be reared the presidency, the apostles, seventy, evangelists, high priests, elders, priests, bishops, teachers, and deacons of tomorrow. In many of the homes must be reared the young women who will accompany the priesthood of tomorrow, and help make them ideal homes. In the church homes of today must be developed the stewards of tomorrow. Just what kind of officers and stewards we will have to forward the gospel tomorrow depends upon the environment that surrounds the young in the church today. Abiding spiritual values do not exist and develop in broken homes.

Our Master elected twelve special disciples to accompany him and to dwell with Him in his work. Speaking in commendation to those disciples, He said, "Ye are they which have continued with Me in My temptations." They found in Him the highest sense of companionship. There is not an event or a word to indicate that the sublimity of His character, the seriousness of His spirit, or the momentousness of His mission made it difficult for His personal attendants to get on with Him. He was ever lovable, and ever loved by them, until one, yielding to covetousness, fell from loyalty. There was no friction between the disciples and their Lord, but they who knew Him most intimately regarded Him with the tenderest affection and sincerest reverence. Patient, condescending, free, He dwelt amongst them, talked with them, chided or soothed them, until He became the object of their enthusiastic admiration, confidence, and love. They enjoyed his delectable fellowship.

Are we easy to live with? This is an essential test of the genuineness of character. The way we appear to society is a small matter, for that merely means the estimate of people who do not know us; but the way we appear to those who live with us is a very significant matter, and needs our closest attention and study. A few shallow, hollow courtesies will do to secure popular favor and praise, but only worth while and sterling character persuades those who live with us. Our Master had builded into the tenure of His life those qualities that made it an easy matter for Him to live with people and them with Him. As the individual units of society, church, and home, we need to imbibe more of the spirit of our Lord, for therein lies the cure for the social unrest among all peoples of the world. If when we finish our friends can (Continued on page 1134.)

Which Voice to Heed?

LOUISA wondered what it was about Doctor Forward that reminded her of Mr. Hunt. He was much younger, taller, and straighter; he was immaculately dressed, a gentleman of the world in speech and manner.

"I suppose it is his eyes," she said to herself, "that hard glitter in his blue eyes." She was not surprised to find that he believed in philosophies similar to those held by their former employer.

He seemed to have scant regard for womankind in general. He had been married, divorced, and his wife had remarried. He felt as Mr. Hunt had, that the chief reason for woman in the world was to care for the children and administer to the physical wants of their husbands and families. He could see no reason for higher education for women.

In spite of his seeming lack of respect for her sex, he addressed most of his conversation to her rather than to Dan. She did not discourage him. Dan seldom made close friends, and it might seem she did not want him to have any at all. She resolved to learn something from this man, if possible.

"Do you believe in drugs?" she asked him. She knew that she made an appealing picture, sitting there intensely alert, as though she thought him the highest authority in the world.

"Yes, and no," he laughingly answered. "You see, I don't use many strong drugs myself. I take exercises, I don't eat much meat or other stimulating foods; I don't drink coffee or tea or other stimulating drinks; I eat coarse breads made of whole wheat and the like, and lots of vegetables and fruits. Pills and such will never give you the feeling of exuberance that comes from moderate living."

"The pills, I gather," laughed Louisa, "are for your patients. If they could know just how you felt about it—"

"If they knew how I felt, they'd go to the next doctor. I'd simply lose the money and they'd still have the pills. The public want pills, you know—they won't be bothered with moderate living."

"Couldn't they be taught?" began Dan, but Doctor Forward waved his hand impatiently.

"I tried missionary work once," he said lightly, "but the devil beat me, and I'm off that for life."

Louisa laughed as though she thought him very clever. She wanted him to tell her the truth in answer to her next question. She was truly troubled in her mind about it.

"Do you believe in vaccinations and serum injections, and the like? I've read so many things. Some schools of healing, which are licensed by the State, say that these injections are extremely harmful; that people have even died from them. I personally know of one man who lost his arm after vaccination, from blood poisoning, and I read in the paper where a bunch of school children died from taking diphtheria antitoxin that had somehow become contaminated, or was not good. Schools which are against the vaccines, bring a long list of statistics which look like facts, to prove their points. Then the medical doctors, also licensed by the State, present an equally convincing array of figures to prove that vaccines and serums are of great benefit, that they have saved thousands of lives, and that any mother is little short of criminal who will allow her child to run the risk of taking some of these so-called preventable diseases. I wish I knew, really, what was right. Please tell me the truth, do you believe in them?"

"Well—I have vaccinated people. Yes. It never seemed to do any of my patients any great harm."

"You gave them pills, too," put in Dan, "and you didn't believe in them for yourself. Just as friend to friend, now, were you ever vaccinated yourself?"

"Yes. I had to be. But as friend to friend, I will tell you this. I treated it as I would treat a snake-bite—that is, I bled the wound, treated it antiseptically, and fasted a few days. I don't think vaccines do any great harm as a rule, but there is just a chance in a thousand—"

"And my child might be that thousandth one," thought Louisa; "but suppose that even this man is mistaken? Suppose that vaccines are really harmless in spite of his or others' opinions? Am I doing wrong not to have all these things injected into little Dorothy to save her from these diseases?"

"Won't you tell us something about the interesting work you are doing in research, Doctor Forward?" Louisa realized suddenly that they might have been impolite in urging their guest into all this "shop talk." So she added, "That is if you don't mind talking about it."

"Well—I wouldn't mind, if it were really interesting. But it is not interesting to me. I picked out a subject in which I was vitally interested for my Ph. D. thesis, but the head of the department wouldn't o. k. it. Some of my mental perambulations on the subject hadn't been exactly orthodox—" thought research—especially advanced research—was to discover truth. I supposed that truth would never be rejected—"

"If it would upset the present order of things too much, Babe in the Woods," laughed Doctor Forward, "you wouldn't have a chance to get your degree. You see, my idea in the present instance is to discover some new facts to substantiate theories already accepted. Any such truth will be accepted gladly, and I shall proceed with my career, which I hope will some day land me in a 'chair' in some university, as department head, perhaps."

"But—but—if every one does that—what chance is there for absolutely new truths to be discovered?"

"Oh—there will be some progress, and perhaps the progress will be safer than if it were along faster—research, I mean—but of course, I must admit that if one were unhampered, one could accomplish more. We are just a part of a great machine, and our cogs must fit in or we are pushed out. And I, for one can't afford to be pushed out. I am approaching the time of life when it is almost impossible to turn back and start all over again—I'd never make the grade. I haven't the money—"

"Is it time for the baby's bottle, Louisa?" asked Dan as the child awakened and began to cry. "Never mind, you sit still—I'll go fix it."

"Do you know," said Doctor Forward as Dan left the room, "it is not unusual to meet a really intelligent man, but I have seldom had the pleasure of meeting so intelligent a woman. It has been a real pleasure to meet you. I have been wondering—you know," he continued sadly, "I have no real home. A home is not a home without a woman's hand in it someway, and yet—I can never marry again. I love children. I have leased a nice big apartment with maid service and all, and still it is not home. I am wondering, wouldn't you and your husband care to share it with me? I'd love to teach the baby—children now-a-days should be taught ethics and morality, instead of religion. The world is undergoing a great feeling of disillusionment with regard to religion and needs ethical instruction of some kind to take its place. I'd love to teach some child—"

His eyes had lost their hard glitter and something half way between a caress and an appeal had taken its place. Louisa shrank from him inwardly, but skillfully concealed the panic and disappointment she felt. She had been so much in need of a real friend in the medical profession, on whom she could depend for the truth. "But he is not good, he is not good," her intuition told her; "I could not trust him." Aloud she said, laughingly:

"You must not be a very good business man, Doctor Forward, or you would not make such a sudden proposition. You see, you don't know me at all."

"I know you appeal to me more than anyone I've known for a long time."

"I argue," replied Louisa naively, "I'd drive you crazy. For instance, I don't agree with you about religion. Somewhere there is probably a true religion which would supply you with ethics backed by power. Ethics alone don't seem to work. I have met people who have tried out your ideas in practice and I know they don't work. You wouldn't like to have an arguing woman around all the time, would you?"

"I'll have to confess I wouldn't," admitted the man reluctantly. Then irritably, "I don't see why women have to meddle with these things that really belong to the field of higher learning. If they'd care for the home and the children, and leave these other things to the men—"

"Just why should they do that?" asked Louisa, displaying what she knew was an annoying amount of vehemence. "Women have been endowed with brains, and I see no reason why they shouldn't use them."

"I agree with my wife," put in Dan who was now engaged in feeding little Dorothy her bottle, "I want my wife to have the same opportunity to develop mentally, to grow and expand with the years that I have. To my mind it is unfair for a man to expect his wife simply to keep his house up to standard and satisfy his physical needs while he monopolizes all the opportunities for higher things. Life should be a growth, a development, an unfolding for everyone, women as well as man."

How wonderful Dan was, and how she loved him!

THE REMAINING PORTION of the evening was spent in rather hot debates over a variety of subjects; and though carefully polite, Louisa knew she was managing to be extremely disagreeable.

She laughed a bit nervously as they entered the front room again after their guest's departure.

"He won't come again, Dan," she said, "If you are sorry, I am too; but if you don't like him very well, then I'm glad, because I don't like him."

"I don't care for him either," replied Dan thoughtfully, "but I have talked with him several times, and he seems to have some good ideas on health. They interested me on account of being similar to what I think is meant in the Word of Wisdom."

"Oh, Dan, I wish I knew! I wish I knew what to believe! How can you tell, Dan, what is best to do? How can you know whom to trust?"

"Louisa, I don't know," responded her husband slowly, "but I do know this: if the church had the money and the backing from the people to put forward our health ideals, we might have somewhere to go in our doubt and despondency. We might have a wonderful laboratory where the subjects of medicine, dietetics, and biochemistry could be studied, not from the viewpoint of supporting present theories, but from the viewpoint of taking what is already proved to be true and going on prayerfully and honestly from there. It would be a daring thing, but we are supposed to be the light of the world, and light is never fearful. And the people working on these things, they would be doing it, not for the reward or the salary—because they would receive their just wants and needs, and would need have no fears in an economic way for either the present or future. They would be working there because of their love for the work, because they were adapted to that sort of thing, and because they wished to serve humanity. They could experiment with modern theories, and when a young couple wished to know what was best for their children they could believe the results as reported. Oh, I wish you could see, dear, how much we need Zion!"

"It would be wonderful to have something like that one could depend on. But it is only a dream yet. It doesn't help us with our problem—to know what to do with our baby."

"But we could help make the dream come true, Louisa," huskily pleaded Dan, "we could give our lives to it. It would take a lot of pioneering. A lot of suffering and pain will have to be gone through by many people before the dreams of the church will be realized. But think what it would mean at the end, not only to members of the church, but to all humanity! Wouldn't it—"

"It doesn't help me now," she said dully. She had not yet learned to think of other people excepting as their lives, and acts affected her. It seemed to her that Dan's one weak spot was this fruitless dreaming about Zion.

"Where is today's paper?" he asked.

"I expect it's at the bottom of that pile of magazines. Not many places to put things in this apartment—"

"Here it is. Here is something I saw today that's in line with what we were talking about. In the health column, edited by one of the greatest present-day physicians. A man writes in a question:

"My doctor tells me to wear a hat as it is not good for one to go bareheaded. You advise going bareheaded as an aid to growth of hair. Which advice am I to take?"

"Answer: Dear Sir: I still think going bareheaded is a very good thing. Your doctor must have shares in a hat factory."

"There it is. A real example, even if slightly humorous, of how commercialism is eating at the heart of our great country—and all others for that matter. It's not the fault of doctors, nor of any other class; but it is because of the competitive system, and all its attending evils. People are losing confidence in everything they've ever had confidence in. Dear, can't you see how necessary Zion is? How the world is crying for it?"

"I'm tired to death, Dan. Let's go to bed. Everything is confusing to me. Zion isn't a reality yet and can't help me now."

"Will you promise me something?" His voice sounded queer, and she thought there were traces of tears in his eyes.

"If it's anything I can do, Dan."

"In all your reading, if you do not find satisfaction, anything to answer your questions, will you try reading the church books? I know you've not been enthusiastic—"

Louisa laughed. "Oh, I suppose I might as well read them first as last. I remember the Book of Mormon didn't have anything bad in it—and I know all the church books are all right from a moral viewpoint, but I don't think there's anything in them that could excite me. I'll read them, though, Dan, if you'd like me to so much," she ended earnestly as she noted the pained look on his face.

THEY PREPARED SILENTLY for retiring; Dan turned off the lights, and as was his custom, knelt in silent prayer beside the bed. Louisa stood by the window. There was a third story apartment, and she could see a part of the sky and some of the stars, even though it seemed they did not shine so brightly as they had shone in other places.

"I suppose it's the smoke," she thought idly. The usual night noises drifted up from the street. Automobiles, honking of horns, distant sound of street cars, voices of pedestrians, the occasional cry of a child. All these things meant that a great world of people was still awake, busy, working. And yet when she thought of them all, she did not think of them as human beings with thoughts and emotions similar to her own. She thought of them all as simply part of her environment; an environment to be considered only when she had to deal with it directly.

She looked up at the stars again. She had never so felt the need for someone to pray to.

"Oh, if there is someone up there somewhere in the blue heavens," she whispered, "help me to take care of my baby!" Then she turned away, a little smile on her face. What nonsense! If you got help, you had to get it yourself, somehow. She'd have to think her own way out. She mustn't worry so much. Other people reared their children successfully to manhood and womanhood by taking the advice of the learned men of the world.

"But the advice of which learned men?" came back the tantalizing

Worship Suggestions for October

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "THE STRENGTH OF THE KINGDOM"

FIRST SUNDAY, OCTOBER 7

Theme: "Seek Me Often"

Instrumental Prelude: "Dear Lord and Father," S. H., 243.
Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 90: 1 and 85: 16.

"Verily, thus saith the Lord, It shall come to pass that every soul who forsaketh their sins and cometh unto me, and calleth on my name, and obeyeth my voice, and keepeth my commandments, shall see my face, and know that I am, and that I am the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. . . ." ". . . draw near unto me, and I will draw near unto you; seek me diligently and ye shall find me; ask and ye shall receive. . . ."

(S) Hymn Response: "Come ye apart," S. H., 108.

Scripture Reading: Alma 16: 218-222.

Hymn: "Take Time to Be Holy," S. H., 322, verse one.

Suggestive Meditation: God loves each of us. He desires to bless us. We should seek his help in our homes. We should ask him to bless our loved ones.

Hymn: "Take Time to Be Holy," S. H., 322, verse two.

Meditation: The Lord says, "Put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good, yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, This is my Spirit."

Do I conduct my business in that Spirit? Are all my activities suggested by its influence? How can I make it a part of my life? Am I free from the Spirit of competition in my business and at all times? Am I as eager for the welfare of others as I am for my own welfare? Do others see God in my business affairs?

(S) Hymn: "Take Time to Be Holy," verses three and four, S. H., 322.

(S) Benediction.

SECOND SUNDAY, OCTOBER 14

Theme: "Worship Me Together"

Instrumental Prelude: "O Savior, Precious Savior," S. H., 34.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2. "That thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High."

Group Response: Isaiah 2: 3. "Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths."

(S) Hymn: "I was glad and my heart did rejoice at the sound," S. H., 67; Z. P., 119.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2-4. (Beginning with "Remember that on this, the Lord's day . . .")

Hymn: "Lord, may our hearts be tuned to sing," S. H., 45; O. S. H., 69.

Period of Prayer: The basis for the prayers should be our thankfulness for the church and for the cause of Zion which the church hopes to achieve, for our friendships in the church, and for a greater degree of the spirit of unity.

(S) Hymn: "Our Father who in heaven doth dwell," S. H., 315; O. S. H., 112.

Benediction: "And may the Lord Jesus Christ grant that your prayers may be answered according to your faith; and may God the Father remember the covenant which he hath made with the house of Israel; and may he bless you for ever, through faith on the name of Jesus Christ. Amen." (Suggested by Alma 18: 17.)

THIRD SUNDAY, OCTOBER 21

Theme: "Bring Forth the Cause of Zion"

Instrumental Prelude: "Jerusalem, the Golden," S. H., 358.

(S) Call to Worship: "Lord, we come before thee now," S. H., 71; O. S. H., 352.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 11: 1-3.

Talk (very brief): A great vision makes a great people. A great cause is born from a great vision. No more wonderful opportunity is offered any people than that offered to us. The cause of Zion has been born of the vision of God. Nothing more worth while has ever been born. As we devote our strength to this cause we shall become strong in its strength and great in its greatness.

Hymn: "Take my life and let it be," verses one and two.

Story of Israel Rogers: Church History, volume 3, pages 781-783.

"In 1866 the General Conference ordered the preparation and publication of the Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures. Special contributions and subscriptions were called for, but these did not equal the expenditures. However, Brother Rogers continued to meet all demands, and when the conference of 1870 came around it was found that the account was overdrawn about four thousand dollars. Then he arose in the assembly and said that he would balance the debt by giving it to the church. In this day it seemed a large gift; and, indeed, it was a very important matter, a very valuable gift. He carried the church through in the day it needed financial help, not only then, but also at other times."

Hymn: "Take My Silver," 307, verse four.

Scripture Reading: Romans 12: 1, 2.

(S) Hymn: "Take My Will," 306, verses five and six.

(S) Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, OCTOBER 28

Theme: "Growing in My Likeness"

Instrumental Prelude: "Savior, I follow On," S. H., 268.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 45: 2.

"Hearken, O ye people," down to ". . . I came to my own, and my own received me not. . . ."

Congregational Response: John 1: 11, 12.

"He came unto his own, and his own received him not.

"But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God; only to them who believe on his name."

(S) Hymn: "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," S. H., 33, verses one, three and five; O. S. H., 92.

Scripture Reading: The Beautitudes, Matthew 5: 1-14.

(S) Prayer: Conclude with the Lord's Prayer.

Talk:

We must become as babes before we can enter into the kingdom of God. This means, among other things, that we must have the ability to grow up. Little children "become" men and women. The fact of spiritual growth is essential to the coming of Zion. Unless we become like Christ in all things, our communion with God is ineffective.

As the people of the church become more like God, so more and more power will be given to us. This strength will finally break down every barrier—social disunity, personal uncleanness, ignorance, pride, and sin. We can become like him, by living in his presence, and by cultivating a nearness to him. Prayer and growth are truly inseparable.

(S) Hymn: "Draw Thou My Soul," S. H., 316.

(S) Commission: 2 Nephi 12: 34, 35. (S) Benediction.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Fern Weedmark and Mildred Goodfellow

FIRST SUNDAY, OCTOBER 7

Sacrament Service

SECOND SUNDAY, OCTOBER 14

Theme: "A Citizen of God's Kingdom Should 'Pray Always.'"

Prelude: "Did You Think to Pray?" Z. P., 105; S. H., 327.

Call to Worship: ". . . Remember the words of your God; pray unto him continually by day, and give thanks unto his holy name by night." (Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 6: 103, page 112.)

Hymn: "Take Time to Be Holy," S. H., 322.

Prayer: "The Lord's Prayer." (In unison.) Matthew 6: 10-15; Inspired Version.

Scripture: This should be given by juniors.

When shall we pray? Psalm 55: 17, Luke 18:1b.

Where shall we pray? Matthew 14: 23, 26: 36, 1 Timothy 2: 8.

How shall we pray? 1 Thessalonians 5: 17, Matthew 21: 22, 6: 5, 6.

What shall we pray? Psalm 92: 1, Matthew 26: 41, James 5: 13, 15, 16, Psalm 19: 14.

Hymn: "Did You Think to Pray?" Z. P., 105; S. H., 327.

Sermon Talk: One day one of Jesus' disciples said to him:

"Lord, teach us to pray." Then Jesus taught them what we call "The Lord's Prayer," the one we prayed at the beginning of this service. (Luke 11: 1-4, Matthew 6: 9-13.)

It is important that we pray to our heavenly Father often.

We need his help every day; we should ask him to guide us, protect us and help us to do right. When we are sick, we call for the elders, who lay their hands on our heads and pray to God, asking him to heal us. Then, let us be sure and remember to thank God for his blessings. Many people seem to know only one kind of a prayer—an "asking" prayer. We should often pray a "Thank you" prayer. Tell the story about the two angels who went out to gather up prayers. (See article "Asking and Thanking," Stepping Stones, November 20, 1932.) When you have an opportunity, read some of the Psalms, and note how many of them are prayers of thankfulness and praise.

Stories: Told by two junior boys.

"Alma and Amulek." (Book of Mormon, Alma 10: 73-83, pages 355, 356.)

Hymn Appreciation: "One Hour With Jesus." (See "Autobiography of William Lewis," page 1029, The Saints' Herald, August 14, 1934.)

Hymn: "One Hour With Jesus," S. H., 325. (First verse.) or Picture Appreciation: "Christ in Gethsemane." (A large copy of this picture, 15 x 20 inches, sepia, may be purchased from David C. Cook Publishing Company, Elgin, Illinois, for 12 cents.) After the appreciation, have either "Take Time to Be Holy," S. H., 322, or "Nearer My God to Thee," S. H., 317, played softly.

Story: "A Boy Who Prayed," (Joseph Smith) or "Answered Prayers," by J. Charles May, Steppings Stones, January 8, 1933, or "That Bible Verse," page 35, Seventy-five Stories for the Worship Hour, by Margaret White Eggleston, or "How the Lieutenant Won His V. C.," which will appear in Stepping Stones, October 7, 1934.

Closing Hymn: "I Would Be True," S. H., 294 (last verse).

Benediction: "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my redeemer. Amen." (Psalm 19: 14.)

THIRD SUNDAY, OCTOBER 21

Theme: "A Citizen of God's Kingdom Can be Depended on to Do His Part."

Prelude: "We'll Scatter Good Seed," Z. P., 115; S. H., 220.

Call to Worship: ". . . Remember the words of your God; pray unto him continually by day, and give thanks unto his holy name by night." (Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 6: 103, page 112.)

Hymn: "Holy Is the Lord," Z. P., 26, S. H., 7.

Prayer: This should be offered by a junior boy or the juniors in unison.

Scripture: James 1: 22, 1 Corinthians 3: 9, Luke 6: 31.

Hymn: "We'll Scatter Good Seed," Z. P., 115, S. H., 220.

Sermon Talk: Text: Proverbs 20: 11. See Sermonette, "Doing More Than We Are Paid For," by Cecil R. Walker, Stepping Stones, November 6, 1932; also "In Times of Need," page 39, Junior Quarterly, Part Four, July, August, September, 1934, by Hallie M. Gould. Tell of people in Bible times who were ready and willing to do their part. Joseph Smith and his five associates were ready and willing to do their part, and as a result, the church was organized April 6, 1830. The officers and missionaries of the church can be depended on to do their part now, and the gospel is being carried to people in different nations. Each and every one has a part to perform. Can the church depend on you to do your part?

Stories: "Boys and Girls Who Could Be Depended on in Bible Times." These stories should be selected and told by junior boys and girls. (Suggestions: Miriam, Exodus 2; Joseph, Genesis 37; Samuel, 1 Samuel 2: 18-20, 3: 1-21; Captive maid, 2 Kings 5; David, 1 Samuel 16: 14-23; 17.)

Special musical number by junior boy or girl.

Story: "Just the Right Word," Stepping Stones, March 20, 1932, or "The Form of a Servant," Stepping Stones, May 22, 1932, or "Juliette, the Little French Girl," Stepping Stones, June 10, 1934. (This story may be adapted slightly by omitting the reference to Children's Day.)

Closing Hymn: "Loving Each Other," Z. P., 83, or "Work for the Night Is Coming," S. H., 222.

Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, OCTOBER 28

Theme: "A Citizen of God's Kingdom Should Be an Example to Others"

Prelude: "Fairest Lord Jesus," S. H., 23.

Call to Worship: "Remember the words of your God; pray unto him continually by day, and give thanks unto his holy name by night." (Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 6: 103, page 112.)

Hymn: "Fairest Lord Jesus," S. H., 23.

Prayer.

Scripture: Deuteronomy 6: 18a, 1 Peter 2: 21.

Hymn: "Dare to Do Right," Z. P., 79, or "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," Z. P., 71; S. H., 218.

Sermon Talk: Text: ". . . Be thou an example . . . in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." (1 Timothy 4: 12.) Mention the different things in which we should be examples: Honesty, truthfulness, kindness, helpfulness, loyalty, the way we talk, living pure lives, etc. Boys and girls should set an example before their friends and playmates; they are not too young to decide to stand for the right. Mention some of the things boys and girls should avoid, among others, tobacco and alcohol. Quote what the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants say about strong drink: (Book of Mormon, page 122, verse 92; Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1.) also what the Doctrine and Covenants says about the use of tobacco. 86:1, 119: 3.) We should keep our bodies pure, so God's Spirit will be with us. (Book of Mormon, page 431, verse 235.)

to the program of the church. I was doing my best to pass on that feeling to others, only to find that in one case I had failed completely. I wondered how many others felt as this sister did. Why had I failed? What had I done or said that could make her feel as she did? Why couldn't she see that stewardship means so much? Was it because she was too blind to see it or had I so failed to paint the correct picture of stewardship that she thought I was simply wasting my time on nonessentials? Thanks to this sister's frank criticism, I did some introspective thinking. My first conclusion was that she was one of those to whom salvation is only an individual problem. Having submitted to certain rites as steps toward her goal she felt that she was assured of a place in heaven. Therefore there was no use of worrying about things which seemed to her so unnecessary.

That there are many in the church who still think on that basis we all know, but whose fault is it? Many have been brought into the church as a result of arguments or comparison of creeds and doctrines. Having decided that this church is the right one, because our plan of organization is that given by Christ, they stop right there. They want the preacher to tell them only those things which will "tickle their ribs," and give them a feeling of satisfaction. They do not want to worry any more. Now that they have found the right road, they want just enough encouragement from the leaders to keep them jogging along in a contented sort of way. All they want is an assurance of the reward for which they are looking.

While it is true that there are some who cannot or will not think beyond this point, I could not use such a condition as an excuse for my failure to reach this sister. I concluded that the fault was mine. I had failed to catch the real vision of stewardship. Therefore I had failed to put the picture of its possibilities in the mind of at least one member. The correct picture might have aroused her enthusiastic interest to the point where she would have said she could see a new field of opportunity. It might also have created the urge to learn more and to do more. The responsibility therefore was mine. It was my job to find out why I had failed. With that thought in mind I set about trying to find the real basis for a correct understanding of the wonderful principle of stewardship. I found that my mind naturally went back through the channels of thought that had been developed in my discussions in that class in Lamoni. If my method of forming conclusions was wrong I must find a way to increase my understanding and to formulate correct conclusions. In other words I must increase my vision in order to see the entire picture of stewardship. I must not permit my sight to be so limited that I can see only a part of that picture. I cannot afford to be like any one of the blind men who described the elephant after touching only one part. One said it was like a fan as he had felt the ear. Another insisted it was like a great wall because he had felt of its side. Each one described it to fit that part which he touched. None had felt of the entire body so no one had a correct picture of the animal. So must each of us be sure we have a correct picture of stewardship in its full meaning. We cannot get a vision of its possibilities by limiting our view.

As a starting point I set out to study some one problem to see if I could find a way to develop rational thinking. The old problem of ownership of property came to my mind at once. Why should there be two schools of thought when there should have been unity of understanding? Why should there be such a difference of opinion on a problem which after all is only incidental? Those who contended that a steward should not own the property of his stewardship apparently based their opinion on the dictionary definition of stewardship. It indicates that a steward is a manager of that which belongs to someone else. They also apparently believed that since God is the creator and owner of the earth, we could not in good grace claim ownership of our stewardship.

The first reference in the Doctrine and Covenants to the question of "steward" or "stewardship" is in paragraph 9 of Section 42, considered the constitutional law of the church and reads as follows: "And it shall come to pass that after they are laid before the bishop of my church, and after that he has received these testimonies concerning the consecration of the properties of my church, that they cannot be taken from the church, agreeable to my commandments; every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family." Here we find the clear statement that every man shall be a steward over his own property. How could that be unless he does in some way "own" the property in question?

property has to do only with the relationship of one man to another, not the relationship of man to God. Therefore, the form of control, whether it be "fee simple," or "trust" involves only relationship between men, and is a form to protect that relationship. Consequently I can "own" property as far as my brother is concerned, and at the same time recognize God's ownership of all things. There should be no misunderstanding or confusion about such a thing as private ownership of property. It has its place in the social relationship of men. It is like everything else which has great power for good, in that it has an equal power for harm if improperly used. Our aim should be to teach man to recognize their ownership of property as a stewardship; to get them to develop the right attitude toward such stewardship; to get them to think of their property as a tool with which to build a zionic community. We should not waste time trying to change the manner or method of holding the tool.

With that problem cleared in my mind my next move was to eradicate any other false notions. I had thought of stewardship as a job or opportunity which the church would give to me. In solving the property ownership problem I had discovered that stewardship is a principle of life. Therefore it must be something I can recognize without waiting for the church to give it to me. It didn't take long to conclude that I had been as near sighted as grandpa, when he looks all over the house for his glasses, while they are right on top of his head. I already had my stewardship! It was my job, my work. I had been looking past it hoping the "church" would give me something I already had! All I needed to tell anyone else was that this is the situation with each one. Each of us has his stewardship in one form or another from babyhood to manhood and on into eternity.

In telling the stewardship story to others I need only to cause them to see what I have seen, that they may recognize the stewardship which they already have; to urge them to develop it, to use it, and to make it work for them. The first thing each one must do is to recognize it. That applies to everyone, including the children. In the stewardship of parenthood one of the important things is to so train the child, that he can easily understand that he has a stewardship. Teach him to recognize it. Each one of us must be willing as well as able to recognize our stewardship responsibility. That is the vital thing.

My stewardship may be changed in many ways. After recognizing it, my responsibility is to develop it, to use it, and to increase my capacity to handle a larger stewardship if I want to progress. I need not go to Mars to find that stewardship for it is already with me. There is no need for me to ask for help to cross the bridge only to find that I would have to do on the other side what I should be doing right here on this side. In other words unless I can develop the way to cross the bridge I will be as well off right here until I do find the way to make that development.

To get to Zion we must go from where we are. Every step of the way must be the result of our own initiative. True there will be many who cannot take such steps without help, and included in the stewardship of those who can, is the responsibility to lend a helping hand.

We must not permit ourselves to get so dependent on the Lord that we ask him to give us needed tools which are already in our hands. We must be willing to do the hard work necessary to discover and perfect these tools. We must each make the most of his stewardship before we can expect larger opportunities. A spiritual attitude toward an existing stewardship, plus a determination to use that stewardship for zionic purposes is what makes stewardship zionic. Each member of the church can if he will, so spiritualize his attitude in using his stewardship to further the purposes of the church that he will develop his ordinary stewardship into a zionic stewardship.

To the extent that we are willing to recognize our stewardship, whether it be that of leader or follower and to the extent that we are willing to use and develop it, will we see ourselves progressing to higher standards of living. Zionic standards can be reached only by those who actually express in daily lives, the principles of life as given to us by Christ. We can move toward Zion from any point this side of the bridge if we make up our minds to do so.

physically, mentally, and morally? Or will it be a mixture of the two—stagnations relieved by whatever doses of external excitement people may have the cash to purchase?"<sup>5</sup>

In the April, 1934, Recreation, Earnest Elmo Calkins seems to be thinking of the same thing. He feels as though people are "apt to mistake excitement for recreation, and in pursuit of the former turn in greater numbers to the oldest diversions of the human race—alcohol, gambling and sex. They have yet to learn there is no continuing satisfaction in self-indulgence, that the only recreations that are worth while are those that do not pall and sate, but continually open new vistas which not only recreate but also re-create."<sup>6</sup>

Still another. Doctor Jesse Frederick Steiner, who wrote the chapter on Recreation for former President Hoover's epoch making "Recent Social Trends," in the February Recreation raises a question that cannot be treated lightly. "It is not without significance," he states, "that the extension of leisure and legalized liquor are entering upon the stage of American life at the same time. One of the problems we face is the role hard drinks will play in the leisure-time activities of the people."<sup>7</sup>

In his essay on Taste and Morals, Mark Hopkins said, "Beware how you spend your leisure hours, your character and destiny in life will turn upon it."

How very true! And the character and destiny of this church will turn upon the manner in which the membership spend their leisure time. Ours is a holy calling, for we have been commissioned with the task of becoming the "light of the world." In discharging this sacred trust we cannot afford to falter; ours cannot be a case in point of the blind leading the blind.

Our life consists in large part of the choices we make. These choices lead us either toward or away from the Kingdom of Heaven; therefore, when we anticipate recreational expenditures, whether they be financial or human, let us think of the church and its calling.

very bad habits. Perhaps our congregations have seen it and we have not. Try the hymns for a while at the speeds suggested in the new hymn book and see if your congregational singing does not improve.

In an early article in the Herald we will have further suggestions on the conducting of hymns.

The young people of the church are the church of tomorrow in process of growth. No matter what forms of organization or of worship we may develop there is no church of tomorrow without them. In proportion as they are born again, so will the church of tomorrow be the church of Jesus Christ.—Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

AFTERGLOW

The day died in a flood of crimson flame
That bathed the hills in beauty richly rare,
And all the world bowed, and I, too, came
To stand in wonder and to worship there.

And then a small voice seemed to question me:

"When death shall come and I must gladly go,
Will there be one to love my memory?
O Lord, shall I, too, leave an after-glow?"

thought in her mind. "Their opinions differ in so many ways—"

"I'll listen to my doctor," she said to herself fiercely, as she crept into bed. "I'll try to be more careful to get her bottles exactly on time and all the other things, and I'll try to spend the whole afternoon in the park with her every sunny day.

A light from an electric advertisement on the next street corner shone into the room and filled it with a ghastliness Louisa did not like; and yet if she pulled the shades down the baby could not get what fresh air was available. Even if you got all the fresh air you could, you didn't have much. There was the odor from the many cars, coal smoke from somewhere, and a persistent and nauseating, though faint odor of escaping gas.

Louisa raised herself on one elbow and gazed upon the baby. Such a great responsibility it was to be given the care of that beautiful little girl! And before many months there would be another child to care for. She felt depressed, weighed down, buried under the load of worry, the endless search for the best things to do for them.

The baby did not move. Her features were lovely in their regularity, and there was a suggestion of fragility about her that caused her mother's heart to beat wildly, with a fear she had never known before the little one's birth. Louisa reached out tremulously. In her little white crib, with the white nightgown, the child might have been a wax doll somehow shorn of all color. She touched the tiny cheek lightly. It was warm, and a little wakeful sigh proved her still alive and breathing.

Louisa fell back on her pillow with a smile. "You silly thing," she told herself, "she's all right." And another voice seemed to whisper to her antagonizingly: "Yes, she's all right—yet." She raised herself again and looked into the tiny crib tearfully.

"Oh, baby, baby!" she cried under her breath, "you are so little and helpless—and your mother is just about as small and helpless as you are."

Ours Must Be a Positive Message

By Mrs. S. C. Bethel

In the early church men went out two by two to preach repentance unto the people. They had that assurance that the message they bore was from the true and the living God. With the strength and power that came through such assurance they went forth fearlessly to do the will of God.

Those who would preach in many of the churches of the world today must have a pleasing personality and be able to present interesting entertainment for their listeners. If they did not, they could not hope to hold their position that brings to them a comfortable living and many of the luxuries of life.

We still have that knowledge and assurance and need not resort to pleasing entertainment, but are able to bring to the world a positive message of the gospel of Christ. We still have men today who go forth fearlessly to present this message to a sin drenched world.

Now as never before there is a crying need for a presentation of a positive message to the Saints. Not a message of faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands and eternal judgment, but a better and more thorough understanding of the laws and the commandments—the will of God.

There has been a marked degree of development spiritually in the last year. There could be even a greater spiritual progress if more of the Saints knew and understood the will of God more fully. There are hundreds in the church today who know very little of what is contained between the covers of their Doctrine and Covenants.

Have our local priesthood followed after the pattern of the world and tried to present pleasing entertainment or possibly used the signs of the times in an endeavor to frighten a people into faithfulness? I have heard both. I have also heard messages presented by men who fearlessly taught the laws and commandments given to the church.

After such a discourse one sister said to another, "Brother so-and-so sure gave us a rakin' over the coals." The other sister answered, "He did tramp on our toes quite a bit, but we needed it." The first sister spoke again, "Well, I can take it pretty well from Brother —. He at least lives his religion."

There are two points that these sisters brought out in their conversation that can well be stressed. One thing our ministry must be examples of righteous living. Then, too, it behooves each and every one to take the lessons presented to us as admonitions of the Lord and not as "rakin' over the coals" or "tramping on their toes." We must be willing to heed the lessons taught us. We must be a law-abiding people or our goal will never be reached.

This condition not only influences the priesthood in the pulpit, but to a great extent the visiting priesthood as well. It takes a great deal of wisdom and tact on the part of the ministry to teach the Saints, whether from the pulpit or in their homes.

While visiting a branch in another city I had dinner with a family of Saints. The conversation led to the unusual capabilities of two of the men of the priesthood of that place.

The one was very reserved and intelligent. As the sister expressed it, he was a very able leader. Everyone liked him. But she said, "If he tried to present some of the things that Brother X does, he would have everyone up in arms against him. Now this Brother X can tell the folks here what to do and what not to do, and they like it."

After meeting this Brother X a few times I understood why he was able to accomplish so much among the Saints, especially among the young people. His attitude toward everyone with whom he came in contact was of a kindly nature. The very nature and character of Christ seemed to be present in this brother.

So men of the ministry using wisdom, tact and kindness born out of brotherly love and humility as instruments in their work, can bring to the Saints this positive message and help greatly to realize our ideal—to reach our goal.

Sowing and Reaping

Text: "Be not deceived: God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6: 7.

What a marvelous thing is time! It is one of the most mysterious of things—time. One of the great purposes of Christ's coming into the world was to assist man in sensing the relationship of time to eternity and the effects of our conduct now upon the life that is to be after death.

In the land of the north, within the Arctic Circle, where the midnight sun does not set for two or three weeks, I sensed as never before the mysterious nature of time.

I went out to a vantage point on the seashore, and there I stood looking at the sun. Between me and the sun was a row of islands with mountain ranges that enabled me to follow the circular course of the sun. There I stood from 10 p. m. until 1 a. m. Ten o'clock, eleven, eleven-thirty, twelve—midnight! The sun, above the horizon, for a moment seemed to hesitate whether to drop below the horizon. Then amid beautiful clouds, it resumed its upward course. Twenty-four hours of sunshine in the day. Time—ever present, and yet we seldom think of it!

Time is unending. It dovetails into eternity. Just as far back as we can go there was time, and in the future as far as we can look, we find time. Time has its effect in relation to eternity. This is why God sent his Son into the world—to make known the way of life and to teach us that what we do in this life has its effect on what we shall have in futurity.

Heaven and hell are not arbitrary terms. If justice is to be carried out, there must be a heaven and a hell. In each person is the possibility of salvation or damnation. The depths to which one may fall enables us to gauge the heights to which one may rise. Man has his agency.

There are essential truths familiar to all that no one will deny. A garden left uncared for grows up in weeds. A mind undeveloped will become the possession of one known as an ignoramus; a soul that goes uncultivated will degenerate to a lower order of life. A man is destined to make a poor contribution to God who interprets Christianity as the power of God among men simply designed to bring a series of thrills. In all churches, it seems to me, including our own, there has been too much emotionalism. Jesus says: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment." Unless that is the guide to our sowing, the reaping is not going to be what we may be anticipating.

What a field lies before the people of God—the great world with all its problems. It is our task to give to all people a knowledge of their sowing so that the reaping time will bring joy.

What can we sow? Let no one forget to use all his faculties in the sowing. God has a program for every one of us, and he who enters into this program, and gives his best, will find One who will help him complete the program.

God builds on life at its highest expression. One is never happier than when one moves along affirmatively, positively, constructively. Isaiah says he heard a voice in heaven cry: "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory." If we but remove the obstacles, glory will burst in on us from all sides. Is it not time for us to plant seeds in the garden of our souls?

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him."—Jesus.

Is Pleased With Park of the Pines Reunion

I have often desired to attend the Park of the Pines reunion in Michigan, and might have done so last year with Elder A. J. Dexter had I known of his intended trip and he of my desire to go. This year I made sure of the journey in advance, and wife and I went to his home at Lansing in time to join him for the trip August 4. Our party was composed of Brother Dexter, Sister Nina Harper, Elder J. M. Baggerly, and wife and I.

The reunion program was planned to serve the interests and needs of all. There were prayer services, class periods, sermons, impromptu programs. On the last Saturday the week-day program was changed so as to include a reunion business meeting in the afternoon. Musical activities, in charge of Sister Louise Evans, added attractiveness to the regular services and intervals throughout the reunion. On Friday, the tenth, a concert was presented.

Elder J. J. Ledsworth opened with a sermon on Thursday to the few campers already there. He was followed the next two days by Elders C. J. Mottashed and B. H. Doty. On Saturday Apostle D. T. Williams arrived, and occupied that night. On the first Sunday, the fifth, the following speakers were heard: D. T. Williams in the morning, C. J. Mottashed in the afternoon and Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith at night. During the week the following spoke in the order named: Elders Leonard Houghton, R. Kapnick, J. J. Ledsworth, A. C. Barmore, B. H. Hewitt, D. T. Williams, Allen Pohly, F. A. Smith, E. Carter, B. H. Doty, and on the second Saturday night, D. T. Williams again. On Sunday, August 12, speakers were C. J. Mottashed, D. T. Williams, and B. H. Hewitt.

I must mention also the regular daily lecture at 10 a. m. by Elder Mottashed, which was largely devoted to stewardships and church history. This series of lectures was one of the outstanding features of the reunion, though I would give first place to the music. The women were taught by Sister Mottashed.

As a sermon I would give first place to that of D. T. Williams from the text: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth." The application was not made to the literal fulfillment of the text from the prophetic standpoint, but to the general subject of vision, that is, ability to see the new thing and profit by it. His other sermons were characterized by the use of history in stressing the gospel message.

Elder Ledsworth spoke on first principles in the manner of a pioneer missionary which he is. His stress of his district Northern Michigan, regarding its high standard in baptisms and its low standard in tithing, was evidence of the fact that the instruction of the Saints in their duties had not kept pace with the missionary work. He did not make this application, but I make it as the logical outcome of the situation; or probably those baptized were not such as could qualify as tithe payers.

Elder B. H. Doty's sermons were peculiar because of their intense spirituality interspersed with flashes of humor. Elder Mottashed emphasized the subject of Zion and the other onward movements of the church. Brother B. H. Hewitt's sermons were distinctly zionistic. His main thought gathered about the words of Isaiah: "Then shall thy light break forth as the morning and thine health shall spring forth speedily," which, of course, was dependent on the observance of social religion as taught in the whole chapter (the fifty-eighth).

Patriarch F. A. Smith spoke on the patriarchal work of the church much of which was new to the Saints. Allen Pohly spoke from the words: "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." The classic and fabled story of the dipping of Achilles in the River Styx while held by the heel, was used to illustrate the fact that every person has a vulnerable spot or besetting sin.

E. Carter stressed the need of a standard from the words: "See thou do all things after the pattern shown to thee in the mount." He has been a railroad man a good part of his life, and so illustrated his topic by showing that a railroad man must not depend on himself, that is, he is not allowed to carry out his train schedule from memory, but has a copy of his time table before him continually.

Elder Leonard Houghton spoke on the general work of Restoration after the manner of our pioneer missionaries, and Elder Kapnick spoke instructively on loyalty from the standpoint of its three levels, loyalty to the individual, to the church, and to the truth.

These reunion grounds are the most pleasing of any I have seen with the possible exception of Tiona reunion grounds in Australia. The grounds are on the shore of Charlevoix Lake. They approach the lake in terraces, the first one being the recreation ground, the second the location of the various reunion buildings with some of the tents, while the third is occupied by tents, and stretches down to the lake front. There is another terrace out in the lake where the depth of water suddenly increases from very shallow to fifty and a hundred feet. This I noticed one morning when I went out fishing with the caretaker Brother Odell. I was told that the ground on the other side approaches the lake in the same way.

The timber is almost wholly pine though there are a few birch trees. I have heard that there is some talk of cutting out the birch; but I think this should not be done, for they lend pleasing variety.

Brother Odell and I had no luck in fishing, but one afternoon he caught a Mackinac trout that weighed eighteen pounds. He allowed everyone over fifty years of age to have a piece of this trout one evening for supper. I have always made it a rule in dealing with any lady friend to remember her birthday and forget her age, but this time every woman on the grounds who had reached a half century and probably some that had not, "fessed up."

The health of the camp generally was good. Elder Houghton and I were the administration committee, and we had little work to do.

Finds the Truth After Years of Searching

My mother, Mrs. Alice R. Corson, belonged to the church, but I would not listen to her explain the doctrine. She had nine children and I was the next to the youngest. Most of us joined some church in our early life, but not knowing anything about Christ's plan of salvation as taught in the beginning, we were led into darkness and some into bitterness against the truth.

Mother was not prominent among church people because of her faith, and we children, therefore, wished to belong to some church in which we could have many friends. Eventually our hearts and minds turned against our mother's faith.

I read the Bible a great deal and taught the Sunday school class, led the singing and took an active part in all church affairs. But when I became acquainted with their teachings, I found that they did not correspond to the teachings of Christ and his apostles. Then I decided to look for a church which did teach the doctrine of Christ.

The Readers Say---

But in all my wanderings from one church to another, I met with disappointment. Then I began to pray earnestly to God to lead me in the way I should go. One day after spending much of the day in prayer, I was led to a little mission where I had never before been. When it was time to go to the altar, the preacher asked us to make full surrender to God, holding back nothing, and to let him have his way. I went to the altar and started to pray, but there seemed to be a wall in the way so that my prayer was not heard. In this experience a voice spoke to me: "He that is ashamed of me before men, him will I be ashamed of before my father in heaven." Then I said aloud: "Never, Oh Lord, will I be ashamed of you. Let the world laugh at me. Let mother, brothers, sisters, wife, children, neighbors, or anyone else turn against me, I care not only if you will accept me into your kingdom." In this spiritual experience I was taken to see the sufferings of our Lord and Master, and other wondrous things.

I kept attending the services of this little mission for a time, and the minister wanted me to unite with them, but the Spirit showed me flaws in their teachings, and kept me from joining. So I continued to study the different doctrines, and find that now I love what once I thought I hated. I am with the teachings of Christ. This continued until after my mother's death.

Then as I wondered about her spiritual welfare, I began to read some of the church papers. After reading and comparing them, I sought more. I also read the standard books, and find that now I love what once I thought I hated. I am thankful to God for his goodness to me, his guidance and his watchcare. I am telling the story of the gospel to my children and they are enthusiastic over it. I have told them that I want to visit a branch of the church and join the only church which teaches the gospel as it was delivered to the Saints two thousand years ago.

An Experience of Death Unto Life

I enjoy reading how the Lord has helped others, so I expect others will like to know how he has blessed me. I have received many evidences of God's guidance and power which make the gospel very dear to me. Many times I have observed that this work is the greatest thing in all the world, providing we live humbly and love God. Otherwise we are condemned, and die spiritually.

Here let me relate an experience that was mine in 1918. You remember how the flu took its toll of lives that year? Well, Brother George Morris was here and fell sick. After a time he grew better and got up. Then he fell sick again. I was visiting him one evening after work and before I left he said, "I wish you would administer to me." "Have you any oil?" I inquired. "No, let's just pray together." This we did. Brother Robert Walter was with me and he also prayed. Then we said goodnight and left. Brother Walter's wife was downstairs talking with Sister Morris, and so the three of us left the house together.

As we reached the walk I met the angel of death, and was so overcome that I could not stand without steadying myself by a tree. In that experience I was told that Brother Morris would die. As soon as I could speak, I told my companions, "Go back and tell them if he gets worse in the night to let us know right away." I thought the sufferer would die soon.

But he was better after that and several of his friends came to see him. Among them was Richard Hawkins, of Scranton. "How did you feel about Brother Morris?" I asked Brother Hawkins. "All right," was the answer.

A few days later I was called from work to administer to him in company with Brother A. D. Angus. On this occasion I could not exercise faith, but I performed my duty. I asked of Brother Angus: "How did you feel in praying for him?" His reply assured me that he felt good. So it looked as though I might be mistaken; still I was sure that Brother Morris would leave us. I had been divinely told that there was no help for him. In a few days he grew rapidly worse and they sent for me.

I went and a sad sight met my eyes. He was struggling to stay not willing to leave his wife who was pleading for him not to leave her. I took Sister Morris into another room and reasoned with her. I admonished her to be brave, to have faith. This calmed her, and we returned together to the bedside. There she took his hand, asked him if he wanted to go, and he nodded. So she kissed him and said goodnight, and he was gone. This good woman was made strong for her trial by the Spirit of the Master.

Dear Saints, I have had many such experiences which strengthen me in my work of Christ. I know that God is in it, and I want to continue faithful to the end.

An Instance of Healing

The Herald has been in my home for thirty-eight years, and it was in my father's home for many preceding years. I have received wonderful blessings of healings, and I wish to thank my heavenly Father for them.

I wish to relate one blessing which came to me recently. My only son became seriously ill from sea-sickness. He was taken to a sanitarium, and remained there for one and one-half years. Instead of improving, his condition became more critical, and even though he had never been baptized, he asked for administration. At that time, he weighed only one hundred and seven pounds, but when two weeks had passed he had recovered so that he was at his work again, feeling much better.

Looking back over my life of eighty-four years, I find many other instances of healing. I rejoice with other Saints in the wonderful blessings of the Lord.

Keeping On Each Day

I have been a member of the church for seventy years, having been baptized when I was eight years of age. I am looking zionward every day, and trying to help the good work along.

While in Columbus, Ohio, one day, President F. M. Smith told me to keep on working and that I would find my pathway brighter. It takes persistent effort to keep on going each day, but with the help of my heavenly Father, I am doing my part.

I have two sons who are members of the priesthood. They, too, are trying to further the gospel work. My prayer is that I may ever be found willing to do my part.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Should tithing be paid on the money that is paid as tithing?

The money to be paid as a tithe should be a tenth of the value of one's increase, if tithing has previously been paid on what one possesses. But that which is thus taken to pay as a tithe, the tenth, is not tithable separately from the whole value of the possessions or increase thereon, as the case may be. To illustrate: Suppose I am worth $1,000 and decide to pay the tithe. I find that one tenth of the amount is $100, which I pay as a tithe. This hundred dollars was originally a part of the thousand on which I owed tithing, but after I pay the hundred as a tithe, I have only nine hundred left. This nine hundred has been tithed, and if kept by me it would not have to be tithed over again, though any increase upon it would of course be tithed at the proper time.

How may I know that I have received the Holy Ghost?

In one respect this question may easily be answered, but the answer itself might need careful consideration in order to make it explicable in each case to which it applies. Jesus declared that when the Holy Spirit is come it shall testify of him. But in what sense it shall testify of him is not specified in that text. From various other texts we may learn that the Spirit is manifested to each according to the individual case concerned. This makes it difficult to prescribe any general rule that might be clearly understood by all, as manifestations vary greatly.

Some receive the gift of faith by the Spirit, but do not appear to obtain any outward or perceptible sign of the gift aside from its exercise in the life. Others obtain gifts of prophecy, tongues, healings, discerning of spirits, and various outward or visible manifestations. But these of themselves might not give the knowledge referred to by the questioner, at least in many instances. Some have received the divine influence so that it was sensed as an invisible and holy power filling the soul or resting upon the person so that it seemed like a physical contact with some heavenly being. But others have felt it as a wonderful light to the mind, guiding, as Jesus promised, into the truth. I know of no better way to describe it than in the words of Paul when he explained that it comes at the divine will "dividing to every man severally as He will."

Please explain Romans 8: 28.

This text contains two important points that perhaps need explanation. One is the overruling guidance of God, and the other is the call of his people. It says:

"All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose."—Romans 8: 28.

The first point probably has been misapplied by many because they fail to note that it applies only to "them that love God," etc. The next verse shows that it applies to those whose love and faithfulness are foreknown by God and who for this reason are called "to be conformed to the image of his Son." This is a very important provision of the text. Perhaps it may be stated in other words to mean that those who in love and faithfulness seek to become like Christ shall finally be glorified, and that all things shall be overruled for their good. This does not mean that such will have no trouble in this world, but as a result of what they suffer or endure here, a more exceeding weight of glory shall be added in God's due time, so that all shall result in increasing their blessings at last, if not in their earthly career.

Why does the child inherit mental traits from parents?

The laws of heredity are but little known, though schools of thought differ as to the application and scope of the principle. From a scriptural view, however, we seem warranted in the thought that the spirit of man was preexistent, as was Christ, and that there is an eternal relationship, or at least one that passes down through the mortal life, so that what we are affects our posterity with certain tendencies, which are passed on to be dealt with by the inheritor.

Growth at Saginaw, Michigan

Sunday Attendance Boosted by Pastor From 75 to 300

The Saginaw Daily News, in a July issue, printed the story of the recent growth of Saginaw Branch and the work of Pastor L. E. Grice. Herewith is reproduced the newspaper story:

Probably no church in Saginaw has grown as rapidly during the past nine months as has the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Since the Reverend Lewis E. Grice took over the pulpit of the church on South Jefferson Avenue, the average attendance at the Sunday morning service has grown from fifty to one hundred fifty and church school attendance, which was small, now averages about one hundred-fifty each Sunday. Mr. Grice credits the unusual growth of the church to the fact that an effective organization has been built up and every member of the congregation has taken an active part in seeing that the church membership grows each month. A successful campaign was waged to get all former members back on the active list.

Thirty-five members signed their names to a program sheet headed "Saginaw Missionaries," and their slogan is "We will save one." Mr. Grice is sure that the work of the pastor is to supervise and furnish opportunity for the members to assist not only financially, but in the missionary work of the branch.

Another great help in the growth of the church, in the opinion of Mr. Grice, was a fire which damaged the building shortly after he became pastor of the church. With the insurance money, the church was remodeled and redecorated, a job that probably would not have been accomplished so soon had it not been for the fire.

From a series of smaller organizations, Reverend Mr. Grice has built up a church organization that functions as a unit. While the adult department of the church is being conducted upstairs, the junior church, composed entirely of young people, is conducted in the basement.

Once each month juniors and adults meet together in the main auditorium and a lesson demonstration is conducted by the pastor. These lessons are probably the most talked of services conducted in the church.

The Sunday school meets after the church service is over. The Bible class which formerly had six or eight attendants now has an average attendance of more than forty. It is taught by Mr. Grice. Other organizations in the church are the women's department, the young people's society, and the Christian Legion.

Ralph Brown is director of the adult department, while the junior department and the church school are supervised by Mr. and Mrs. Frank McCray. John Wade has charge of music and dramatics. Mrs. William Grinnell directs the women's department and her son, Orrie Grinnell leads the young people's society. A music culture class, fostered by the music department, is ably conducted by Mrs. Northrup, and gives members, young and old, an opportunity to become efficient in music. A full afternoon is used for this activity. Carl J. Larson assists the Reverend Mr. Grice and directs mid-week services.

The church, situated in the 1500 block on South Jefferson Avenue, originally was built by a Methodist Episcopal parish at Washington Avenue and Hess Street. It was purchased later by the Seventh Day Adventist and moved to the present site. The Latter Day Saint congregation purchased the church in 1916.

Occupying the pulpit have been Elders Bruce DeWolfe, Thomas Forbes, E. S. White, Alex Seymore, Floyd Burte, Carl J. Larson, John Wade and Clinton Loomis, all of whom were appointed by the district conference. The three pastors, Reverend John Blackmore, Reverend G. E. Burt, and Reverend L. E. Grice, have occupied the pulpit.

The church is a member of the Central Michigan District. There are four districts in the State of Michigan, comprised of more than eighty churches. The Reverend Mr. Grice is also counselor to the Reverend Hubert Case, president of Central Michigan District, and district director of solicitation for Zion's Christian Legion. He acts as director on the Saginaw District School Board. He was formerly manager of Wilson and Company Packers and Provisioners, but for a time is acting as commercial traveler for them.

All people make mistakes. That's why erasers are put on pencils.

Joplin's Priesthood Do Missionary Work

The ministry of Joplin Branch, Missouri, are alert to missionary needs in their part of the State, and are finding time from local responsibilities, to serve those who live outside of Joplin. L. N. Wyatt holds services near Lanagan, Missouri, two Sundays a month. S. N. Gray recently conducted a series at Galesburg, and preaches occasionally at Carthage.

"If Men Would Think"

If men would think, they would not fight. If we would build up our armies, we must keep the men from thinking.—Frederick the Great.

Desire Us to Pray

Brother George A. McNutt, of Chederville, Alberta, requests the church to pray for his wife who is an invalid with a spinal disease that she may be restored to health.

Brother Gerald Stickley, of Ottawa, Ontario, asks the Saints to fast and pray in behalf of a friend, Cyril Lemon, that he may be restored to normal health and strength. He was electrocuted, and fell fifty feet from a tree. Now he suffers from a seriously injured spine, bad burns, and partial paralysis. On August 22, his temperature was 107 degrees, and he was not expected to live. That evening the Saints held special prayers for him, and at midnight he took a change for the better.

It Might Work

We have always harbored a sneaking suspicion that Christianity might work if ever men and nations had the courage and goodwill to try it.—"Baltimore Sun."

Wealth

There is no wealth but life—life, including all the powers of love, of joy, of admiration. That country is richest which nourishes the greatest numbers of noble and happy human beings; that man is richest, who having perfected the functions of his own life to the utmost, has also the widest helpful influence, both personal, and by means of his possessions, over the lives of others.—Ruskin.

Frankfort, Wisconsin

A home-coming was held at Frankfort, June 18, to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the branch. A program was given on the preceding evening by the young people. Services were held Sunday forenoon and afternoon. Brother Wesley Elvin, of Minneapolis, was the speaker. Lunch was served by the women's department.

Thirty-eight members of this congregation attended the reunion at Chetek, July 1 to 4.

Branch business meeting was held July 24, and Brother Manly Shedd was reinstated as pastor. It was decided to raise funds for the new songbooks.

Hymnals for branch use.

Elder Roy Smith, of Hammond, Indiana, and Pastor Manley Shedd officiated at the sacrament services held August 6. Music was furnished by the young people's choir.

Friday, August 4, the young people met at the church and organized a club. They are now engaged in helping to raise funds for the new song books.

The Sunday school is well attended and is capably managed by one of the young people, Amos Livingston, who has been superintendent for three years.

The young people are taking an active interest in church work, holding several offices in the branch and in church school.

East Bay Church

Berkeley, California

In the early summer the young adults served a Word of Wisdom dinner in the lower auditorium of the church and from it much of teaching value was derived. Brother Myron Schall, a physical culture teacher at Stanford University, was the guest speaker.

Preaching services continue to be of a high spiritual caliber and the congregation is making a fine response.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer was in charge of the sacrament service, July 1, and occupied the pulpit that evening, delivering a dynamic sermon which held a message for every thinking Latter Day Saint.

The reunion of Northern California District at Irvington, was one which will bring pleasant memories to all who attended. A fine program of preaching, classes, prayer meetings, etc., was carried out with results that will show in the lives of both the young and old who attended.

The women of the church continue their work of quilting, church school endeavors, and visiting. Elder Arthur Oakman conducted a class on Thursdays with the gifts and fruits of the Spirit as his subject, and as a result the women have a much clearer conception of their blessings and likewise their responsibilities.

Constructive classes for the youth of the church are being held each Tuesday night at the church. A poster class is being taught by Marjorie Smith, and one in leather work is being taught by Freda Browning. Robert Hawley also has a class at his home in manual training.

The sacrament service of August 5, was outstanding in attendance with a marked degree of God's Spirit present. As an added blessing a word of encouragement and counsel was received through Elder Guy P. Levitt. Brother Gene Miller was ordained to the office of deacon at this service.

A beautiful service was conducted in the children's department the morning of August 12. This included the blessing of Vivian Fae Collins, baby daughter of Brother and Sister William Collins.

A play, "That Home in Nazareth," given that evening, made a strong appeal to all who saw it.

Missionary Services Near Caraway, Arkansas

Missionary A. M. Baker began a series of meetings near Caraway, July 23 and ended August 5. Fairly large crowds attended most of the nights, giving splendid order and attention.

Brother Baker preached the gospel with such force and power that he not only brought some into the kingdom, but encouraged the Saints to enlarge their vision of Zion and their ideals of Christ-like living.

August 5, Sunday school was had at 10 a. m., preaching at 11 a. m. baptismal service at 3 p. m., and confirmation service at the beginning of the evening preaching hour.

Of the three conducted into the kingdom two were adults, Mr. Burl Crabtree and Mrs. Wilson. The third candidate was Mrs. Wilson's son, Paul.

During Brother Baker's stay, he spoke to the Saints of the need for a better organized unit. He believes they can do better work with a more effective organization. He and Apostle R. S. Budd are expecting to visit them in the near future for the purpose of helping them organize.

Lake Orion, Michigan

An impressive service was held at the Saints' church at Lake Orion, August 12, when the theme of the sermon was "The World of Today." Brother Lloyd Heaviland, of Detroit, assisted Brother V. D. Schaar, who delivered the discourse, presenting the intolerance of the age, the lack of knowledge and understanding, and the absence of peace.

A piano and organ prelude by Miss Verlyn Janrow and Mrs. R. J. Knight, both of Detroit, preceded the service. Special musical numbers were a vocal duet, "Whispering Hope," by Miss Janrow and Miss Harryette Scharr, and a vocal solo by Miss Janrow. Congregational Bible reading added to the inspiration of the hour.

Toronto District Reunion

Excellent Representation and Program

This reunion, held from July 28 to August 12, at Lowbanks, had a larger attendance than for many years. Members were present from every branch in the district, from the other districts of Ontario and from Western Canada; also from New York, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, and Missouri. James V. Clark had every tent full and every available room in the community.

Keen interest in every activity, conducted under able leadership, made this one of the best reunions ever held at Lowbanks.

Elder James Wilson, district president, was able to be present some of the time, though his long illness prevented him from being as active as in the past. Elder James Pycock, acting district president, was chosen to preside associated with Apostle D. T. Williams the few days he was there.

These days were busy ones for Elder Williams, and the campers regretted that his other engagements compelled him to leave so soon. Elder E. H. Hewitt, in charge of class work, also felt called upon to leave with him. Both these men were active in teaching, preaching, and recreational work.

Class work was continued by Elders George Njeim and W. I. Fligg. These ministers, with Elders Percy Farrow, M. J. Crowley, and James Pycock, presided over the prayer meetings, and preaching services.

On Sundays there was the usual family worship conducted by Elder Fligg; prayer meeting 9 to 10:45; preaching at 11 a. m., 3 and 7 p. m.

On week days, there were family worship, prayer meeting, class work, preaching, and other forms of services. One of the features this year was giving special days to the different departments, also holding different branches responsible for certain programs.

Afternoons and some time after the evening meetings were given to recreation, entertainment, camp fires etc., and to the reading of the camp paper edited by Mr. Ernest Newton. The civic holiday Monday was used for recreation all day.

The children had Sunday school, class work, etc., provided for them by Mrs. S. G. Clark and her helpers.

Mr. Bert Gozzard had over thirty boys under his care, and Mrs. Rohlig looked after the girls. Some of the boys were given reduced rates and assisted by generous members to give them this outing.

S. G. Clark, district chorister, conducted the music provided for all the services as well as special musical services.

Mrs. Wilson had charge of the meals, and Mrs. Faulds was kept busy in the refreshment booth.

With the assistance of Ralph Swainson a new water system was installed this year which provided plenty of pure water. It is impossible to mention the many who seemed to vie with each other in doing all they could for the comfort of reunion members.

While every part of the reunion was a decided success, the high point was reached at the sacrament service on the middle Sunday. This service, a special arrangement by the reunion president, was carried out by him with the assistance of the elders present. The worshippers cooperated. This brought unity that made possible divine recognition. It was a sublime service.

Three were baptized and confirmed and other church ordinances were performed during the reunion.

Four Corner Mission

Near Ava, Missouri

Church school under the leadership of Brother Ralph Wilt, is progressing. Sunday, August 19, the baptism of two school members, Aaron Fuller, son of Pastor D. A. Fuller, and Winifred Dry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dry, caused these Saints to rejoice.

Brother S. W. Simmons, pastor of Tigris Branch, and missionary for many years, met with these Saints in the afternoon of Sunday, August 5. He spoke during the religio hour. After an inspiring and encouraging sermon, he administered to several sick ones. The members were happy to extend to Brother Simmons their good wishes on his eighty-second birthday.

Brother Clark Hursh is supervising the religio meetings. Some weeks ago Walter W. Chrestensen, associate district president, met with members of this congregation, and organized a missionary class, appointing Brother Walter Bullard instructor.

Recently, Brother and Sister J. N. Sherwin, of Independence, joined this group, and are now giving their time to activities in the mission.

Music at Park of the Pines Reunion

One of the special features at the Park of the Pines reunion this year, was the choir, which was composed of over fifty voices from various parts of Michigan and Ontario.

Through the untiring efforts of Sister Louise Evans, of Grand Rapids, who is the leader and sponsor of the greater Michigan choir movement, and also choir leader at reunion, several beautiful anthems were rendered. Those who took special solo parts were Sister Blanche Cavanaugh, of Grand Rapids; Sister Clara Farrow, of Ontario, and Sister Maxine Doty, of Traverse City.

The experience of the choir this year, as in past years, is but a demonstration of what can and will be accomplished throughout Michigan, if all who sing will

Graceland Begins Class Work September 11

This week Graceland College, at Lamoni, is preparing to begin the thirtieth year of her history. Class work will begin September 11. Freshmen will register September 7, and will gather for their first assembly at 9 a. m. in the chapel. September 10, the sophomores and juniors will return.

Students coming to Graceland this year, according to the Lamoni Chronicle, will find the task of registration and adjustment much simplified. Each student will be deferred to a faculty member, who will act as advisor for the student in making registration, arranging schedules, etc.

The prospects are for a good year at Graceland, with an enrollment equal to that of last year.

Pray for Her

Ethel Kennett, of Springerton, Illinois, desires the church to pray for her mother, Mrs. Josie Kennett, who is afflicted with tuberculosis.

Madison Well Represented at Nauvoo Camp

Seven young people represented Madison Branch, Wisconsin, at the recent Young People's Camp at Nauvoo, and took home with them a new vision of the work of the church. On the Sunday night after their return, they gave a campfire program at the church, telling of their experiences at camp, spiritual educational, and recreational. The following went from Madison to camp: Ora Miller, Ora Carpenter, DeWayne Miller, Helen Richardson, Carson Richardson, Herbert Dutton, and Nora Walker.

Harvest Festival at Independence

Regardless of the drouth in this section of the country there will be a Harvest Home Festival at Independence. It will open October 2 and close October 7, T. A. Beck in charge of events.

While there will be few vegetables and fruits from the Central States, the reports from places in the Northwest and Southern States indicate large displays of produce.

Two new features of the festival this year will be a hobby show and a display of products manufactured at Independence.

The concert October 7, by the Harvest Festival Choir, will be the crowning event of the festival.

join the greater choir movement, and cooperate with those who have it in charge.

Our aim is a six-hundred voice choir, made up of voices of Michigan and Ontario, two hundred of which we hope to take to the 1936 General Conference. How many singers will help make this possible? Answer by responding to the call of your branch chorister or; if isolated, write to Louise Evans 240 Travis Street, N. E., Grand Rapids, for particulars.

The time has come to settle down to a more intensive work than before. Let us do this with a determination to perform our part in making a singing church, a church in which we all will sing with the spirit and with understanding.

E. H. DOTY.

Joplin, Missouri

Active in Missionary Undertakings

Missionary work is being done in Joplin by the local priesthood. L. N. Wyatt has been holding services two Sundays each month near Lanagan, Missouri. On the last visit there he was accompanied by District President Amos T. Higdon. Irene Braden and Mary Karlstrom, assisted them with special music. Elder S. N. Gray held a series of meetings at Galesburg, Missouri. He also preaches occasionally on Sunday nights at Carthage.

W. H. Smart has been confined to his bed for about four months with a fractured hip. Brother Smart served as a missionary in the church for several years.

The women meet in class study every Thursday afternoon. Sister J. A. Graves is supervisor.

Among the important activities of the young people are the early morning prayer meetings held on the third Sunday of each month. Three of the meetings have been held at McClelland Park, with an average attendance of twenty-five or thirty. At the meeting in May, District President Amos T. Higdon was present, and at the June meeting, Brother Savage, of Independence, Missouri, attended. Following the meetings, breakfast was served and the young people returned to the church for the morning services. Jimmy Daugherty, who was recently baptized, is president of the senior young people's class, the Zion Builders, and Sister S. N. Gray is the teacher. David Sheppard is president of the N. N. C. class, the younger young people, and Elder A. A. Farris is teacher. Sister Grace Lohr is supervisor of young people.

The local work is in charge of Elder O. C. Karlstrom, pastor, with Elders S. G. Carrow and A. A. Farris assisting. The priesthood are holding two meetings a month, one for regular priesthood work, and the other for class study. During the winter months cottage prayer meetings were held in the homes of several members, which greatly increased the attendance at the regular service. Many young people attended and took part.

Immediately after the morning services on Children's Day, the membership accompanied fifteen candidates to the water's edge for baptism. There were five adults and ten children. After the confirmation services, the members gathered at McClelland Park to enjoy a basket dinner. At night a colorful pageant, "Zion Redeemed," was presented by the children. Since Children's Day, six others have been baptized.

Joplin Branch was well represented at the district reunion at Columbus, Kansas.

Kentucky and Tennessee Reunion

A fine spirit characterized the annual reunion of the Kentucky and Tennessee District at Foundry Hill Branch, four miles south of Puryear, Tennessee, July 21 to 29. Elders John R. Grice, of Ohio, and J. O. Dutton, of Galva, Illinois, were the speakers.

Prayer services were held each morning at nine-thirty, followed by class study at eleven, Elder Grice in charge. Elder Dutton conducted class work in the afternoon, and at the same hour, Mrs. C. B. Gallimore instructed a class for children. Recreation at three-thirty was in charge of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Hoofman. Doctrinal sermons by Elders Grice and Dutton were given each evening, following a thirty-minute song service.

The Saints returned to their homes as a result of this gathering, determined to carry on the work of the church.

The reunion committee is planning to improve the camp grounds before reunion time next year. A fine tile well now furnishes water for the campers.

Reunion at Brooksville, Maine

Districts Combine for Successful Gathering

The reunion of the two districts of Maine, August 11 to 19, will be remembered as one of the very best of the always good reunions held there. Thanks to the generosity and persistent effort of a few of the faithful Saints, most of the material necessary to the erection of a permanent tabernacle, to take the place of the tent formerly used, was contributed, and the building so far completed as to be available for use at the reunion. Also through donations and volunteer labor, two fine big stoves were installed in the kitchen, an electric pump was contributed, and hot and cold water were made available in the sink at all times.

Attendance from the two districts was as good, if not better than ever before. And there were also visitors from afar, some coming from States as far distant as Missouri and Iowa.

Those chosen to preside were Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Bishop E. L. Traver, Evangelist U. W. Greene, and Elders Newman M. Wilson and E. F. Robertson. The last named two are presidents respectively of eastern and western Maine districts.

Owing to recent serious illness, Elder Wilson was not present at the first part of the reunion, which caused much regret among the Saints. There was general rejoicing when he stood in their midst on the closing day, and bore a wonderful testimony of the manifestations of providential love he had received during his sickness.

Following the morning prayer service, two class periods were observed daily, except Saturday and Sunday, Apostle Paul M. Hanson teaching the Bible, and Evangelist U. W. Greene the Doctrine and Covenants. Both handled the theme in a masterful manner.

Elder Archie Begg and Bernard Holland had charge of the young people, being assisted also by Don Chesworth. They hiked to some point away from the camp for two morning prayer meetings, held a special church school session each Sunday morning, and conducted games and recreation. Sisters Gertrude Robertson and Jessie York were in charge of the children of twelve years and under. They had daily class periods, and during their lessons some of the children were brought to a decision to be baptized.

The preaching at the reunion was of a high order, the sermons of Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Evangelist U. W. Greene being appreciated for their human interest, their educational value, and their spiritual appeal.

Bishop E. L. Traver gave an inspirational talk at the eleven o'clock hour on the closing day, the Saints being encouraged concerning both temporal and spiritual aspects of the work. Bishop Traver also led eight souls into the waters of baptism on that day.

Among the visitors from a distance, may be mentioned Doctor Charles F. Grabske and Brother Will Smith, of Independence, with their families, and Elder Oscar Anderson with wife and daughter, from Iowa.

Doctor Grabske preached at the afternoon service, Sunday, August 12. In the course of his sermon, which all enjoyed, he spoke of the coolness of the Maine climate, contrasting it with the extreme heat of the Middle West. And, indeed the weather during the entire time of the reunion was delightful. Days were bright and sunny, but cool enough for comfort at noon-time, and so cool as to necessitate the closing of doors in the evenings. Men were seen wearing overcoats at some of the evening services.

Meals were served at ten cents, the same as in recent years. This was made possible by cooperative effort, the Saints from various parts drawing upon their gardens or other sources of food supply to make donations, and dealers willingly sacrificing profits on such groceries as they had to buy. Brother Wilson, who formerly had charge of the work in the cooking department being incapacitated by sickness, Brother Pearl F. Billings very successfully substituted for him. Good food was served in abundance, and a tidy sum remained in the till, as profit, when all the bills were paid.

The wonderful climate and beautiful scenery surrounding the camp, together with cheap accommodations, excellent preaching and class work, with the recreational advantages always furnished, make the reunion at Brookville a very attractive place in which to spend a week's time.

Central Michigan Reunion

Blessed With Spirit of Unity and Fellowship

Central Michigan reunion held at Edenville, August 10 to 20, proved highly successful in many respects.

On the night prior to the date set for the opening of the camp there were eight tents pitched. This number increased to eighty-seven on Thursday and Friday. On the last Sunday about eight hundred people were on the grounds.

The entire reunion was permeated by the spirit of unity and fellowship. During the sessions the people enjoyed an outpouring of the Spirit of God.

The daily program started at six o'clock in the morning with the blowing of the bugle. A young people's prayer service was held every morning at six-thirty and followed at eight-fifteen by a general prayer hour. The class period was at ten o'clock. One of the outstanding features of the reunion was the junior teaching demonstrations given by Sister Blanche Northrup, of Saginaw. Elder Percy Farrow, of Ontario, and Henry Methner, of Missouri, had charge of the class work for intermediates and young people. Sister McCray, of Saginaw had charge of the junior and primary departments. There was preaching at the eleven o'clock hour.

Afternoons were devoted to choir practice, women's meetings, priesthood sessions, and recreation.

A short program followed the evening preaching services. This program always included the reading of the camp paper, "Running Waters." On two evenings during the week there were campfire gatherings where young and old joined their voices in singing many old songs. Taps echoing over the camp at ten-thirty, closed the day.

Among those visiting the reunion were Patriarch F. A. Smith; Elder J. J. Ledsworth, missionary of Northern Michigan District; Elder A. C. Barmore, of Southern Michigan; Elder James Baggerly; Elder B. H. Doty, of Traverse City;

Elder Percy Farrow, of London, Ontario; and Apostle D. T. Williams was there for the last two days. Elder Hubert Case, district president, presided.

People throughout the district donated food and money so that the meals might be served free of charge.

On the last Sunday Mr. Frank Wixson, who donated the use of his grounds and buildings to the reunion, was presented a billfold.

Sixteen people were baptized during the reunion. All meetings were characterized by high spirituality. The Saints received much instruction and encouragement to carry back to their home branches.

Fort Collins, Colorado

Women Organize Marietta Walker Circle

A young people's devotional service was held in the open August 5. The Spirit of the Master was present in the sacrament service which was held later in the morning. The Saints welcomed Brother and Sister Charles Gregory to this service. They were former workers in this branch, and now are of Lomita, California.

The attendance at all services has increased during the past few months. New interest is being manifest.

The women of the adult division met August 9, with the largest attendance in many months. A number of nonmembers were present. At this meeting, they adopted a name which should prove an incentive to the organization, The Marietta Walker Circle. The first meeting of the Marietta Walker Circle occurred Thursday, August 9, at the home of Mrs. M. P. Tilton, with Mrs. K. G. Broliar and Mrs. T. S. Moore assisting the hostess.

A number of Fort Collins Saints are attending the reunion at Colorado Springs, Colorado, August 17 to 26.

The priesthood continue to hold monthly meetings, and the church work is rapidly moving onward.

Jackson, Michigan

Interest Revives—All-day Meeting Gives New Impetus

The regular branch at Jackson, Michigan, due to several causes, faded away a number of years ago. Recently, however, Elder Ray Frisbie and his wife, moved there and started the work anew. A successful group is now found there.

As a means of promoting local interest, an all-day service was held, July 29, ten miles from Jackson, at the home of Brother and Sister Tong, a pair of genuine Latter Day Saints. Elder and Sister J. W. Davis, Elder A. J. Dexter, and Elder A. C. Barmore were present.

The day began with a prayer service at 8:30 a. m., in charge of Brothers Frisbie and Andrews. A sermon by Elder Davis, presented as a text Psalm 50: 2.

Elder A. C. Barmore addressed the congregation in the afternoon, at two using for his text Psalm 66: 16. At three-thirty, Elder A. J. Dexter spoke in his usual quiet way, giving expression to his humility and trust in God. At four-thirty, Elders Barmore and Davis occupied jointly, their subject being, "My Australian Experiences." They dwelt largely on their missionary work there, while Sister Davis followed up with an interesting talk on the customs and manners of the country.

Holden Stake

One Hundred and Fifty at Regional Meeting

"Rise up, O man of God! the church for you doth wait!" So President F. M. McDowell challenged one hundred and fifty Saints and men of the priesthood at Lees Summit Sunday afternoon, August 26. The occasion was a regional meeting of the stake, bringing together for one day members of seven of the groups in the stake.

President McDowell made an earnest plea for development of kingdom-building material, men and women, and urged the Saints to follow the standards for church people presented in recent numbers of the Herald.

At an earlier meeting for the priesthood, under the supervision of Stake President Amos E. Allen, Brother McDowell spoke to about twenty-five men, and presented the high points of the church-wide program for the priesthood. With Brother Allen he led discussion of class work for ordained men. The group voted unanimously in favor of class work, or institutes.

"All right, we'll take you men at your word," said Brother Allen. "We expect to begin holding priesthood institutes this fall, and we will expect you to attend as well as you voted."

A few items of business were considered at the close of the eleven o'clock service. Brother Allen and other stake officers virtually promised the Saints a Holden Stake reunion for next year, for which many of the members in the stake have been asking. The next Holden stake conference was tentatively set to take place the last week-end in October.

Elder J. A. Thomas, counselor to Brother Allen, at the morning service spoke to the Saints of the necessity of having "An Undivided Heart," which well followed the theme of the church school, "Ye Are Called to the Work." The stake director of religious education, Earl T. Higdon, planned and conducted the church school session at the conference. Brother Thomas taught the adult class, while the young people discussed with Bishop J. A. Koehler the "Democratic Elements in Our Governmental Set-up." Sister J. A. Koehler supervised the classes for primary, junior, and intermediate members.

At noon a basket dinner was held, the members from the different groups bringing their own baskets of food and putting them all together.

The Holden Stake Clarion made its first appearance at the regional meeting. This is a monthly newspaper and official bulletin of the stake, heretofore issued in typewritten form, one copy to a branch. Its first publication in mimeographed form was announced at the meeting, and copies were distributed. Preparing and editing the paper is a project of the stake young people, with Clifford J. Long as editor. This is used as a medium for official communications and bulletins to the Saints by the stake officers.

Wedding at Warrensburg

Miss Elsie Andes and James Doig, of Menard, Montana, were married there Sunday morning, August 19. Mrs. Doig is the daughter of Brother and Sister S. M. Andes. Brother Andes is our pastor at Warrensburg.

The bride's brother, Ammon Andes, performed the wedding ceremony under a pink and white arch in the church. The bride was given away in marriage by her father. Irene Andes was bridesmaid, and Ralph Andes served as Mr. Doig's best man.

Eloise Higgins played the wedding march. "The Rosary" and "Traumerie" were played on the violin by Gomer Cool. Mrs. Jerome Andes, sister-in-law of the bride, sang "Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms" and "I Love You Truly."

After the ceremony the bridal party and guests were entertained with breakfast at the home of the bride's parents, Brother and Sister S. M. Andes. The new couple will make their home at Menard, Montana.

Good Attendance at Strasburg Mission

We have been having some interesting services, and attendance has kept up remarkably well through the heat and drouth.

Recently the Saints were delighted to have Elder Earl Page, of Independence, speak to us. Miss Opal Williams came with him and gave a reading, "Take Your Place," which was appropriate to the sermon.

Sunday, August 5, it was their good fortune to have Brother Amos Allen, stake president, and Brother Earl Higdon, bishop's counselor and stake director of religious education, both with them. Brother Higdon came for church school and remained throughout the day, making appropriate talks both at church school and at sacrament service. At the close of the service they had a basket dinner on the lawn.

Brother Allen joined them from Holden at dinner, and remained the rest of the day. At two-thirty Brother Higdon gave a wonderful sermon which carried a challenge to the youth of the church. Following that, by request he held a financial law class for the juniors, which many adults also attended. After a basket supper Brother Allen gave a splendid discourse, using as his text the quotation from Joshua, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Sister M. A. Goodfellow, Bob Goodfellow, Vera Riley, and Margaret Pooler furnished the special music for the day.

Two young men attended the Nauvoo Camp. They are M. R. Swift and Bert Essex. Both have given thrilling reports of their activities.

This mission has been having a series of short talks on selected subjects by various members of the young people's department at the eleven o'clock hour. They not only furnish a means of development for the young people, but have greatly benefited the older ones by the many interesting thoughts expressed. Some of the subjects have been: "The Objective of the Youth of the Church," by Morton Swift; "What Part the Young Women Have to Play in the Church," by Margaret Pooler; "Zion Building," by Heber Hoover.

Members of the junior class, under the leadership of Sister Frank Payne, are filing their inventories. They are also working on a slogan for their department.

Sunday, August 12, they held regular services with Pastor C. T. Pooler speaking to them at the evening hour. He took his text from Acts 2: 41-47.

They are making valiant efforts to keep step with the church, and feel that they have met with a measure of success. The members are alert and interested, and are faithful in attendance.

Lees Summit Welcomes Pastor

On Wednesday night, August 8, Saints of Lees Summit met for an informal reception and welcome of their new pastor, Elder Earl F. Hoisington, and his family, of Independence. A strong spirit of hopefulness and willingness to cooperate with the new pastor was apparent in talks by heads of the various departments, by their pledge of support to him.

The Saints regret the loss of their former pastor, Elder J. T. Smith and family, who have moved to Blue Springs, where Brother Smith has since become pastor.

The music department, supervised by Sister Ella Mengel, plans to participate in the Harvest Festival Chorus at Independence in October.

While a number of families have moved away in recent months, the work here has been strengthened by new families, including those of Brother Fred Good, from Minneapolis, whose home was in Lees Summit three years ago; Brother and Sister H. W. Wilson and family, from Blue Springs, and Brother and Sister Henry Savage and family, from Bates City.

At the women's business meeting in June, the members devoted part of the meeting to a commemoration of nearly eleven years of service on the part of their leader, Sister C. W. Childers.

Madison, Wisconsin

Local Activities Win Good Response From Saints

Elder and Sister Amos Berve were made welcome, and worshiped with the Saints, May 13. The church school hour was given over to a Mother's Day program, which was presented by the children, followed by a welcome to the mothers and a presentation as a token of appreciation by Ormand Kimball. Brother Berve was the speaker in the morning, and also during the evening hour, using for his subject, "Right Relationship With God."

A district priesthood meeting was held the first Monday in June. Those in attendance were from Janesville, Evansville, and Milwaukee.

Brother J. Maas, of Milwaukee, occupied the pulpit at Madison, May 20, and Elder Henry W. Woodstock preached in Milwaukee, in place of Brother Maas.

Sister Louise Johnson and Wayne Hallet were united in marriage, May 20, Elder H. W. Woodstock reading the ceremony.

A special ceremony was performed July 1, at which time three babies were blessed, the daughter of Brother and Sister Dorman Duncan, born May 23; the son of Donald and Grace Root, born May 27, and the son of Brother and Sister Bernie Taylor, born May 9. A baby of Catholic parents was also blessed. Two children of the same family wish to be baptized into the church. Edith Griswold was confirmed at this service, having been baptized earlier in the day, by her father, Floyd Griswold.

Children's Day in the branch was celebrated July 1, at which time the church was beautifully decorated.

A number of Madison Saints were happy to be able to attend the Chetek reunion, at Chetek, Wisconsin.

The young people presented a pageant, "Youth and the Church," written by Roy Cheville, of the Graceland College faculty, the last Sunday in July. Saints came from Janesville, Evansville, Beloit, Watertown, and Lake Mills to see the pageant presented.

The women sponsored an ice cream social on the lawn of Floyd Carpenter, on a hot night in July.

H. W. Woodstock preached at Beloit, in the morning of August 12, and at the farm home of Sister Dutton in the evening.

Those who attended the Nauvoo Camp from this congregation were Ora Miller, Ora Carpenter, Dewayne Miller, Helen and Carson Richardson, Herbert Dutton, and Nora Walker. They brought home a vision of the work of the church. The Sunday night after their return, they gave a camp-fire program, at the church, telling of their experiences at camp, spiritual, educational, and recreational.

The class of Doctrine and Covenants, taught by Robert Brigham, for credits, has completed its program. They are now planning to study further which will give them a better understanding of the laws of the church.

Independence

Among Independence young people of the church who are this week entering college, the following are going to Grace-land: Edmund Allen, La Von Budd, Mary Elizabeth Gooch, Phil Weeks, Marie Borman, Velma Resch, Ethel Thomas, Joy Harder, Vera Sheehy, Bernice Higdon, Robert Burgess, Elinor Smith, and Dorothy Ruth Resch.

Those entering other institutions of higher education include Billie Green, Junior College, Kansas City, Missouri; G. L. Harrington, University of Kansas; Frederick Schweers, University of Missouri; Onalea Sherman, Business College, Tulsa, Oklahoma; Frederick Sherman, University of Tulsa; Donald Smith, Central Missouri State Teachers' College, Warrensburg, and Edwin Snead, Junior College, Independence. Edmond Gleazer, whose home until this summer was Independence, has moved to Seattle, Washington, and this winter will attend the University of Washington.

Rob Kelley, son of Sister Audentia Kelley, of Lamoni, was brought to the Independence Sanitarium, August 25, following an automobile accident near Cameron, Missouri, in which his traveling companions, Vincent Allison and Mrs. Hazel Harrison, of Kansas City, were killed. Examination revealed that Bob was suffering from three fractured vertebrae, bad head cuts and bruises. The funeral of Vincent Allison was held at his home, Taberville, Missouri, Elder John F. Sheehy the speaker.

The young men were hitch-hiking from Lamoni to Independence when Mrs. Harrison, a nurse living at Kansas City, picked them up. Shortly thereafter her car struck a truck loaded with steel concrete forms. Vincent Allison is the son of Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Allison, of Taberville, Missouri; he was twenty-three years of age.

Shidler, Oklahoma

Shidler Branch was pleased to have District President A. E. Stoff, of Wichita, Kansas, and Elder J. E. Lancaster, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, there August 19. Elder Stoff was in charge of the morning service, assisted by Elder Lancaster.

Frederick Clyde, infant son of Brother and Sister Edward Workman, was blessed, and Orien Adair was ordained to the office of teacher and R. E. Mullins to the office of deacon. Brother Stoff delivered the charge to the candidates, and Brother Lancaster the charge to the congregation, and a special charge was given the wives of the candidates for ordination. This was a most impressive service.

In the evening Elder Lancaster preached to a union congregation, there being present to hear him, Methodists, Christians, Presbyterians, and Latter Day Saints. These have been conducting joint services for the past two months. Brother Lancaster's theme was "The Prophetic Kingdom." The meeting was held in an outdoor theater. Brother Lancaster had good attention, and more than two hundred were present.

Shidler Saints appreciate the efforts of these two ministers, and hope they will return at an early date.

Eastern Michigan Reunion

Many Attend Excellent Services

Sunday, August 26, brought to a close the best district reunion held in Eastern Michigan for several years. Services began Saturday, August 18, continuing throughout the week with a large group of Saints on the grounds. Fifty-two campers' tents, and four house-cars were on the grounds, besides from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty family cars, which drove in each morning and home again at night.

A young people's prayer service was held each morning, and was followed by class work at eleven o'clock. Elder Earl Diem was the head of all the class work, and the children were under the direction of Mrs. Harold Muir, who chose assistant teachers. Nine classes were conducted each day. The preaching services both afternoon and evening were attended by spiritual power. A recreation period was provided for the afternoons. Mrs. Charles Whitferd, of Port Huron, and Louis Bender, were in charge of the music.

Prominent speakers making a contribution were Patriarch F. A. Smith, of Independence, Missouri; Apostle D. T. Williams, of Lamoni, Iowa; Missionary John R. Grice, of Columbus, Ohio, and District President William M. Grice of Crosswell, Michigan. Many local ministers added to the sermons.

A vote of thanks was extended to Mr. George Cash, of Cash, Michigan, for donating the use of his grove. The 1935 reunion will also be held in this grove.

Following the close of the reunion, Patriarch F. A. Smith went to Valley Center, where he spoke to a full church for a few nights before going to Akron, Ohio. A social evening was held in his honor, by the local congregation and visiting members at the home of Mrs. Ada M. Green.

Announcement was made by the district president to the effect that the Eastern Michigan district conference, representing eighteen branches, about two thousand members, will be held at the Valley Center Church, September 22 and 23.

HELPS FOR PASTORS

A Different Kind of Sunday Morning Service

An interesting experiment with the Sunday morning service has just been described to us by Brother Ray Lloyd, for years the pastor of Malvern Hill Church in Kansas City Stake and now serving as associate pastor under H. R. Higdon.

Although Sunday school was well attended, many slipped out in the intermission leaving a congregation for the eleven o'clock service that became smaller and smaller. This continued in spite of the fact that speakers were brought in to bolster up the service.

A fault found with the plan of having a different speaker each Sunday was that it gave no continuity to the pulpit ministry and the people were not especially interested.

It was decided by the pastor and his associates to try having class instruction instead that should be short, and end at eleven-thirty sharp. The intermission between the church school and the special course was eliminated, and the members invited to stay.

In seven months the program only went past eleven-thirty twice. The class instruction, conducted by Brother Lloyd, permitted a systematic educational program which has built attendance up to three times its former strength.

The first studies were based upon the booklet by President Elbert A. Smith, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About God." Two, three, and once four Sundays were spent upon a single lesson, covering the material thoroughly. These lessons did not interfere with the regular sacrament services. Brother Lloyd has secured copies of Brother Smith's new booklet, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About Marriage and the Home," and will continue the plan as before. This plan may offer suggestions for other churches.

The problem of giving an educational program to the pulpit is a delicate one, with some urgency behind it. There is no thought of regimentation but it is clear that local churches need a clearer guide in presenting the program and teachings of the church rather than the random subjects which may occur to a succession of speakers.

He who has a suspicious mind is ever the prey of worry. Such an one is to be pitied, for he is tossed hither and yon, to and fro, at the whim of every breath of suspicion he breathes. He has no real peace of mind, no content, no unalloyed joy, for even in his hours of pleasure, of recreation, of jollity he is worrying lest someone is trying to get ahead of him. —George Wharton James, in Quit Your Worrying!

will not intrude. He will influence, persuade and lead, but not coerce. "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock:" says our Lord, "if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him." The term, "any man," includes young people.

God has worked marvelously with young people. We have many such examples. And he is pleased and anxious to work with youth today. In this connection read Psalm 37: 1-5 and Philippians 4: 8. One follows the thing that one holds in mind, and in the mind is where success is achieved before it is manifested in the material realm. Material things are the expression of ideas.

Pigeonhole

■ Bad Opinions

The Pigeon was in a reflective state of mind. He shifted from one foot to another and fluttered a wing before speaking.

"I've learned never to accept anybody's bad opinion of anybody else," he said, "until I find out for myself. A good many times I learn they are much better people than they are represented to be. In general I find that good opinions of people are trustworthy, although there are exceptions. But bad opinions are very often wrong."

How often we have disliked and distrusted people because someone else has disliked and distrusted them. We stay away from them, talk to them shortly and only when we must, and leave them as soon as possible. Perhaps we have been told they are proud, aloof, or snobbish, and we are foolish enough to believe it.

Then the day comes when, quite independently, we discover that they are good people—modest, reserved, and quiet—living a clean life and possessed of personal charm and fine character. And we regret that we have wronged them for so long. We revise our opinions of them. We are delighted by their thoughts and their company. And we can only come to the conclusion that the false report was based on something with which we have no sympathy and in which we cannot share.

A bad report of a person is a comment on two people: of the person who speaks, as well as the one of whom he speaks.

■ Responsibility

He is such a little fellow, God,
With whose life Thou hast entrusted me.
I, to guide his feet in the paths I've trod,
I, who've walked them so uncertainly.

I am fearful, Father; sore afraid.
Help, O help me not to fail him, for
I am frail; and sad mistakes I've made.
What if with this trust I shall make more?

Thou hast often seen this little one
In bewilderment, reaching out to me,
Just so, I, perplexed and frightened, come
Father, reaching out my hands to Thee!

—The Gleaner.

■ Pigeon Says:

"As long as we attack others, we have no right to be indignant when they attack us. We can expect to get from the world what we send out into it."

"After all the drouth and hot weather we had this summer, I'll never again kick about too much rain and cool weather. And I'm going to be mighty careful about complaining of the cold next winter!"

There are some parental sins that should be labeled "unforgivable." One is failure to tell children about sex; another is to tell them in such a way that it engenders fear and anxiety.—Doctor Joseph Collins, one-time president of the American Neurological Association.

"This Ministry"

V.—SEARCHING OUT AND HELPING TIMOTHY

Men of the ministry, like all other men, grow old and pass on. It is essential to the perpetuity of the church that the ministry shall constantly be recruited by the addition of young men. Men in responsible positions in stakes, districts, and branches should be alert to search out and develop young men who are of promising material, and presently to perceive the mind and will of the Spirit when certain of the men thus tutored shall be ready for ordination and the time ripe for the call of God to be voiced.

An occasional man holding official position seems to view with a certain alarm any outstanding development and advancement of any particular young man in his group. He may have an entirely subconscious fear of being himself displaced. At any time he is disposed to rap every young head that shows itself above the common level.

The attitude of Paul toward Timothy sets a fine example. The aged Paul found the keenest pleasure in his protege and friend the young Timothy; his old heart was cheered his own spirit rejuvenated by that friendship. No doubt he often said to himself: "Any help, any good counsel, any good example, any good ideas that I may now pass on to Timothy will be at work twenty-five, perhaps forty years after I am gone. Here is my chance to carry over into the future the otherwise limited range of my personal ministry."

Generally there is no jealousy on the part of the older men toward younger men. Sometimes, however, those in charge drift on, not realizing the needs of the situation. They grow old themselves, boys grow up unnoted, mature, drift away, and the branch is left with a ministry of men of advanced years who presently will be gone.

This problem was discussed at some length by the Joint Council at the late General Conference. It is discussed in the Priesthood Journal for July. On that point President McDowell wrote:

Many of our branches and districts are almost devoid of leadership. The average age of the priesthood in such places is often as high as fifty-five or sixty years. In some branches where a correction of this deficiency has been attempted there are a few young newly ordained men but where are the stalwart, trained, experienced men of thirty-five to forty-five years of age, who should carry the burden just now in the present crisis in the church? They are not to be found now because they were not found, enlisted and trained fifteen to twenty years ago. This mistake must not be repeated—Priesthood Journal, July, 1934.

On the same subject, Elder George Mesley of the Kansas City Stake wrote:

We all realize that leaders of tomorrow are not developed in a day. And when we think of our young men we realize that much of their preparation must precede and lead up to any priesthood calling.

Some may object that we do not know who will be called to office three to six or ten years hence. All that is true. We do not always know in advance the specific young men whom God will call but we do know what type of young men God wants to call. Here are some of His natural requirements:

1. Men who are clean in thought, habit and person.
2. Men of ability to function in the office to which they are called—trained ability as well as native ability.
3. Men who have sensed and are feeling deeply the purpose and mission of the church.
4. Men of devotion and willingness to serve in the office to which they are called.
5. Men who have received a properly authenticated call to service.

Men in all positions of executive responsibility need to be developing this type of men—for God.—Priesthood Journal, July 1934.

It is not intended to develop a "hand picked" ministry. The old principle still remains that God must select his own ministers. "You have not chosen me; but I have chosen you and ordained you." "No man taketh this honor upon himself save he is called of God as was Aaron." But we are told that the call is to be "by the spirit of wisdom and revelation." Responsible general church officers, men in charge of stakes, districts and branches need not leave the calling to be voiced by irresponsible men. Theirs is the first right to receive evidence of the call.

First they are to keep their eyes open for the type of young men mentioned by Brother Mesley. They are to discern young Timothy in the making. They are to render him such help as lays within their power as teachers, leaders, and exemplars of the flock, and by intimate personal contact as friend and counsellor. Then they are to keep mind and heart open prayerfully to perceive the call and voice it in the own good time of the Lord, if and when he shall chose a certain man.

When I was young in the ministry I visited one of our large reunions and preached a sermon that happened to be well received. After I had gone to my tent I could not help hearing through its thin walls the arguments of some older men outside who did not know of my presence. Some of them were disturbed by the favor shown a young man. One of them remarked to the veteran missionary James E. Moler, who was among them, to this effect: "You will have to look out or these young men will get ahead of you and crowd you clear off the map."

Brother Moler replied; "I do not care how many young men get ahead of me I will get behind them and help push all that I can." That cheerful, brotherly voice lifted me out of the gloom that the others had induced. Thus Paul, who might have overlooked or rebuffed the youthful Timothy, rather chose to speed him on his way.

Our Relations to Other Churches

For a hundred years our church has been motivated by the statement recorded by Joseph Smith concerning the other churches, that their creeds are an abomination in God's sight. This statement is taken from a record of his first vision, and in the spirit of this statement, our missionaries have met the representatives of other churches. Naturally a statement so strong as this has aroused antagonism, and it is quite possible that such a statement and the attitude engendered in our church people by it has been responsible for some of the persecution that our people have suffered from the beginning up to the present day.

It is notable that young Joseph, who guided the destiny of the Reorganized Church for more than half a century, pursued a policy of peace, proclaimed peace, and lived at peace with his neighbors. This policy of peace finds its authority in one of the early revelations given to Joseph Smith. Section 16 of the Doctrine and Covenants was given to him in June, 1829. Among other things, we see in paragraph four, the following statement: "Content against no church, save it be the church of the devil. Take upon you the name of Christ and express the truth in soberness."

For purposes of emphasis we cut the quotation short. In this brief passage, we have given to us a policy to govern our attitude towards other churches. We are not to attack, we are not to contend with other churches. They are bold indeed who think that they can identify the church of the devil. These words may mean the cult of organized evil, sin, and corruption in the world.

The second element of this policy is our duty to testify of Jesus and to express the truth concerning him.

This message places upon us the obligation of bearing an affirmative message and ministry to the world, not dwelling upon the faults and the sins of others, but rather by pointing to Christ and the Kingdom of God, to win them to a love for the truth and a loyalty to the gospel work. L. L.

He who sips of many arts drinks of none.—Fuller.

Harvest Festival Notes

The Sunny South Club is the first Independence organization to request the publication of an announcement concerning the Harvest Festival. Mrs. Gela C. Moorman, the secretary, brings us the invitation of the club asking all Southern Saints to send whatever they can exhibit in the line of foods, needle work, or other hand craft for use in the club booth. All shipments should be made to Mr. William Hartley, 1112 West Maple. Independence, Missouri. All shipments should be prepaid.

Other clubs are expected to be in action soon and will be interested in receiving exhibits of hobbies, art work, hand craft, and food stuffs for the exhibits. Persons interested should watch the Herald for future announcements.

Meetings for Manhattan, Kansas

A letter addressed to the First Presidency and signed by W. E. Connel, offers the opportunity for meeting for members and friends of the church in or near Manhattan, Kansas. We are glad to print the extract below from Brother Connel's letter. Those interested are invited to get in touch with him.

"I will appreciate it very much if you will insert this notice in the Herald to the effect that if there are any Saints or others interested, living in or near Manhattan, Kansas, who would like to have regular group meetings started at that place, let them get in touch with me."

The Legion Speaks on War

It is no news when a military organization speaks in favor of armaments. It is no news when an association of the ministry speaks against war. But it is news when a military organization declares against war.

The Missouri Department of the American Legion has taken a surprising but commendable position with reference to war at their meeting in Kansas City recently. While they stand firmly, like all other organizations of their kind for adequate defensive armaments, they have supported resolutions which show a changing temper in the minds of their membership with regard to their attitude toward war. The following statement from one resolution indicates this change:

"The American Legion says that war is caused by stupidity, lack of understanding, by cheap and incompetent statesmanship, and by the sinister forces of greed."

A more surprising stand, but an entirely logical one, is reflected in another section of the resolution. It has long been the custom of governments to conscript men for service in war and for the sacrifice of their lives in defense of the country. At the same time men who held property were exempt from making enforced contributions to the defense of that property.

The attitude of the Legion on this aspect of war is reflected in a further summary of the Legion resolutions as reported in the Kansas City Star:

"The resolution demanded universal conscription of both men and wealth in the event of war. The conscription would include all able-bodied men of the nation, regardless of age, to serve in industry, transportation, communications or other vocations at the same rate of pay as soldiers on the battle field. It called for conscription of income for war purposes and the fixing of prices of commodities by law in time of war.

"Such universal draft of both men and wealth, the resolution state, would be a powerful deterrent of war by taking the profit motive out of war. It demanded that the conduct and profits of munitions makers be investigated in war, and that results of such investigation be made public."

If the resolutions of the Legion are representative, they indicate a healthy change of attitude on the part of men who saw service on foreign soil. The disillusionment and disappointment in the work of diplomacy in the post war period has undoubtedly influenced the men who fought, and has made the fighting power of the nation less willing to be drafted for service at any place beyond our own borders.

We need a new evaluation of the patriotism which leads men to defend their country. We need a patriotism that is more intelligent. We need to be sure that this most commendable virtue of our citizens is not exploited by the holders of great quantities of property or the makers of munitions for advancing their interests. There is no reason why one man's son should die in order that another man's son might live in luxury. It is to be hoped that the time is coming when the American people can no longer be duped by the false glory of war.

Coming Out of Love

Sometime after Lincoln became President, an old friend from Illinois paid him a visit. After they had chatted a while, Lincoln said, "Well, what can I do for you?" "Nothing, Mr. President," said the man. "I just came to tell you I love you and believe in you." Lincoln sprang to his feet, his face aglow, and exclaimed, "You're the first man who has come to see me who didn't want something of me."

May it not be that our Father is glad at times to have His children come and talk to Him, not because they want something, but because they love Him and believe in Him and want to tell Him so?—William P. Merrill in The Way; The Macmillan Company.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

ELDER AMOS T. HIGDON writing from Miami, Oklahoma, after speaking of other activities and efforts says:

"There was a baptism at Fairland a week ago yesterday; so that makes fifty-one baptisms for the district this year. That is, I know of that many. It is possible that there may have been some that have not been reported to me."

Under Brother Higdon's leadership the Spring River District seems to be moving forward.

Brother W. A. Teagarden, district president of the Southern California District in writing of the reunion just closed says:

"Our reunion just closed, and without doubt it was an outstanding event, and some claim the activities in general were on a higher plain and the reunion the best in the history of our district. We did have a fine attendance. Saints were there who had not been there for years and most all of the old-time Saints were there. Brother Backer and his good wife, all the Van Fleets, Brethren Garner, Ballard, and others were in attendance and it certainly did my heart good to see them so happy and blessed in their taking part."

After commenting upon the good work of Brethren Gleazer, Oakman and others of the attending ministry and how they were blessed in their work and leadership, he adds:

"To me the spirit of the reunion indicated a rededication of our lives, and a closer observance of the ordinances of the church. Too, we received nothing that would make us believe that our burdens would be lightened. I was selected to act as district president again, and have chosen Brethren Milner and Sorden as my assistants. Indications are that the district at large is ready for work, and we want to assure you brethren that every reasonable effort will be made upon our part to keep in 'Forward march.'"

We are always glad to hear such good reports of reunions and of the work of the brethren and congratulate the Saints of Southern California on their successful meeting.

F. M. S.

The Christian course is not a 100-yard dash, it is a long distance test. All the enemies are not subdued in a brief hour, nor are all the opposing obstacles to our course surmounted thus. Our dispositions do not change for the better in a single conference, or meeting, or a single church service any more than an apple ripens and its juice sweetens by a single sunny day or a single sunbeam. Our moral personality is not built up while we sleep in a single night, we do not become strong, pure-minded, generous, constant all at a jump. It is in your patience ye shall win your souls, and therefore Paul says to the impetuous young man Timothy, who is taking on the work and to whom he is handing the torch that is dropping from his hands, O Man of God, sow ever patience. It is the master virtue of them all.—J. Stuart Holden in "The Patience of Christ," Church Management.

Big Freshman Class Enrolls at Graceland

Class of 112 Nearly Equals Best Year

The Freshman Class at Graceland College is larger this year than any preceding year, except one, according to information by long distance telephone from N. Ray Carmichael. In the 1929-30 school year there was a freshman enrollment of 120, a record that has only been rivalled by the registration of 112 this year. The significance of these figures will be realized by comparison with last year's freshman enrollment of eighty, and the figure of sixty the year before.

Lamoni young people have been busy over Saturday and Sunday entertaining the new students, and they report they have had a happy time of it. Sophomores and juniors are finding a happy surprise awaiting them as they come in a little later. Townsfolk will be busy fitting the students into the social, church, and cultural life.

Out on the campus the faculty are expressing great satisfaction at the upturn in attendance; for there's only one thing more discouraging than a class too large—that is a class too small. Everybody from the President and the Business Manager down to the Custodian of the Keys and Brooms is happy. It's going to be a good year. There's rejoicing on the Campus this fall!

What Is Your Niche in the World Today?

By Molly Richmond

What is your niche in the world today—
Could it be filled should you pass away?
Are you upholding justice and right,
Flaunting Truth's banner all through the fight?

What is your niche in the world today—
What would be said if you'd pass away?
Do you befriend those really in need,
Bringing back smiles by your kindly deeds?

What is your niche in the world today?
Would you be missed if you went away?
Do you send out gladness and cheer,
Making folk glad because you are near?

It's what a man is, regardless of birth,
It's what a man does that proves his own worth.

The emptiness left should he pass away—

Now what is your niche in the world today?

REED M. HOLMES

This week we present the portrait of Reed M. Holmes who was graduated from the High School at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho this year. Brother Holmes passed his seventeenth birthday early this year and was ordained a priest in July. He preached his first sermon on the third Sunday of the latter month. He is a leader of young people and is admired by older people as well as the young for his adherence to Christian standards of conduct.

Which Are You?

Perfect society is composed of those who have tastes and thoughts in common. Friendliness also exists between those who have like occupations.

The highly cultivated cannot very well find pleasure in the company of the illiterate; and cultivation may mean social and ethical culture quite as well as scholastic erudition. It is the superior who is bored, but by politeness he is barred from showing his boredom. Therefore he withdraws, often bringing upon himself the resentful epithet of snob, which is not at all deserved.

A snob is a person who is always animated by the impression he wants to make, and the exalted regard in which he strives to be held by others. The discriminating person cares nothing whatever about the opinions of others, and

Father, Son & Co.

A late story tells of how a young man succeeded when it looked as if failure was certain. He was a window dresser in a large city department store. He was let off. Because of low wages he had no financial reserve and he was soon faced with want. A wife and child were solely dependent upon him. There was no place for him to turn except to his father, and he hated to confess failure and do that. But finally he was forced to do it.

His father had a little stationery shop in a poor section of the city. At best, it made only a bare living. It was hardly possible that it would support the son too. But the son finally had to take his little family and go home.

Monday morning he went down to his father's shop. The windows were covered with fly specks and there were layers of dust on the stock. Only a few customers drifted in for a cheap pencil, a scratch pad, and a postage stamp. Business was like that all day.

But the son's mind was busy. Soon he went to work. He cleaned the windows, dusted the stock, arranged some attractive exhibits, and persuaded the father to put a special bargain sale on some items.

It was not long before new customers were coming in. Trade picked up. New stocks had to be ordered. Business was thriving. There was enough to support both families in comfort before very long.

Now the son doesn't wish to go back to his old trade or work for wages. He desires nothing better than to be in business with his father. They are making great plans, and both families are very happy.

chooses his interests and his companions according to his personal taste and inclination.

Between being really a snob and merely reserved and selective is the entire distance between being contemptible and admirable—between worst and best.—Emily Post in Etiquette.

If your community is to give you admiration and honor, it is merely necessary to be admirable and honorable. The more you put in, the more will be paid out to you. It is too trite to put on paper! But it is astonishing, isn't it, how many people who are depositing nothing whatever, expect to be paid in admiration and respect?

A man of really high position is always a great citizen first and above all.—Emily Post.

Stewardship of Time and Talent

By L. S. Wight

A FOUR-YEAR-OLD girl asked her mother a question. The mother quickly gave the answer. Then the little girl said, "Mamma, I know everything, don't I?" She did know everything she had discovered or learned about, but she didn't realize that there was much yet for her to learn. There have been some church members too much like this little girl. They know a few things about the church and conclude that they know all they need to know. If they have an interest in stewardship it is expressed in waiting for the church to give them one. The little girl didn't know that life is a great uncharted sea, over which she could sail successfully only in proportion to her own efforts to discover and solve the basic problems of life. Each of us faces exactly the same problem during the time yet ahead, regardless of our age today.

Stewardship is whatever our job happens to be. Our first move is to recognize this fact. Our next move is to get to work. We must make the most of our present opportunity whether it is good or bad, satisfactory or unsatisfactory. If we are willing to use every resource, every tool, all our energy and all our faith, we can go to God in prayer and ask for help.

THERE are two types of stewardship: temporal and spiritual. Every individual has both stewardships for which he is responsible, although far too many never recognize this fact. It is not so hard to see our temporal stewardship, because if we should forget, it doesn't take long for the stomach to remind us that food is needed. Our first needs are food and shelter. We could if necessary exist without anything else. Even clothing is an artificial need which at one time in the world's history would have been classed as a luxury. However, as we developed in civilization our habits and modes of life changed. Many things have been developed to supply various wants, which have become needs. The classification of such articles was changed from luxury to necessity. Our temporal stewardship is the responsibility of supplying these temporal needs and comes first. Too many of us become so engrossed in this stewardship responsibility that we forget we each have a spiritual responsibility or stewardship.

Temporal stewardship can be so spiritualized by proper attitude that it may become in effect a spiritual stewardship. Perhaps the best example of this is in the stewardship of motherhood. Some mothers have spiritualized their work in the home to such an extent that the very feeding of the child seems to have a spiritual significance. Homes presided over by such mothers have an influence for good which cannot be measured. They represent the type of home which should be our goal for zionist homes. Children from such homes cannot help but carry a picture in their minds of the beauties of that home and will determine to create the same kind themselves. Such homes also clearly illustrate how the temporal and spiritual stewardships may be made so much a part of each other that every activity comes to have a spiritual significance.

For purposes of classification we should keep in mind that there are the two kinds of stewardship. A man's first responsibility is to take care of his family. That is his temporal stewardship. He should if possible get his job so under control that he can give some time to study for spiritual development. Such effort will enlarge his understanding and appreciation of life, which is a distinct gain in itself. He also increases his ability to accept and make the most of spiritual stewardships in priesthood responsibility. This is where the beauty of Latter Day Saint philosophy stands out so strikingly.

The plan of priesthood organization gives each man a specific responsibility or stewardship in addition to his temporal job. It gives him an avenue as well as a spur for self-development. It makes possible a growth that can come in no other way. Intelligent organization of individual efforts creates a machinery through which expended energy can be controlled and fully utilized. In that way only can the developed energies of the individual be so directed that group needs are fully recognized and satisfied. In other words, God's plan of stewardship is the only way in which humanity can build a society where every individual will not only be fully protected, but will have unlimited chance to develop life to its fullest.

Some of our men are called to give up their temporal work and devote full time to spiritual stewardship. Provision in the law is made to take care of those men whose entire time is given to such stewardship. The stark reality of our situation today, however, is that we are not able to properly take care of these men. Neither are we able to keep as large a number in this type of work as we should. We are failing to make rapid progress Zionward because the members of the church are not expressing their individual stewardship responsibility as they should. If this is a correct statement of the problem each member should make every effort to make his present stewardship so active and productive that those who are called on to be responsible for the exclusive spiritual stewardships can be freed from temporal cares. We could then have a larger number of men in this type of work. We must accomplish this or our zionic dream will be a hopeless goal.

OUR FIRST PROBLEM is to find the way to make our stewardships productive. Is it a big problem? Of course it is. But we should face it squarely and find the way to solve it. We like to talk and sing about Zion as the solution to our many problems. The discouraging conditions under which we have been working during the depression have made many of us more seriously anxious to see zionic conditions established. But to get to that condition we must go from where we are. No matter how hard the path we must find a way. We have failed to make the most of our stewardships in the past, consequently the job will be increasingly harder for some of us. Such a problem is the one which faced our church forefathers who could not in their human judgment see the answers to it. But with the sturdy fighting qualities of the pioneer and a real faith in the promises of God they set out to do his bidding. They failed in many ways, but they kept going and set up the beginning of the organization which is ours today. Shall we have any less faith than they? Are we less willing to suffer as they did or to go on with the job which they started?

There is a starting point to the solution of any problem. In this one of creating productive stewardships we must start with the individual. My problem then becomes one of finding out the way to make my energies count for most. When each church member does that, group energies will show a definite accomplishment. Almost the first thing we think of in the question of individual stewardship is money; not because money is a goal, but because money is a medium of exchange, a measure of created or expended energy, and if we can keep this attitude toward money we can make the use of it very effective in developing stewardships. One man has said that money is the most purely instrumental of all human values, while character (the result of successful stewardships) is the most intrinsic of values. I know that some of us have almost forgotten what money looks like during the depression period, and many have been forced to use other media of exchange. In our effort to find a solution to our stewardship problems we refer to money as the accepted medium of exchange.

The attitude which we should have toward money is expressed very clearly in the following quotation: "The solution of the personal money problem lies neither in saving nor in not saving; the true solution is to forget money utterly and to concentrate all one's thought and energy upon the wise spending of time, upon that chosen work which seems interesting and important regardless of reward. If the spending of time is handled with common sense, the smaller problem—the money question—which is inescapably involved in it, will be settled at the same moment. Any simpleton can save up his dollars, but the wisest of men cannot save up opportunities—they must be used as they come." (From an anonymous article in Harper's.)

Latter Day Saints should stand out from the world as a group of people who know how to use time wisely. If each one of us will make up his mind to so arrange the spending of his time that it be balanced and productive we will not need to worry about other problems. We will discover that they will automatically be solved as a result of the wise spending of time. I doubt if there is a single member of the church who has achieved the distinction of reaching a wise balance in the way he spends his time. Some cannot, and some will not. Those who cannot, either do not know how to wisely budget their time, or else are hampered by conditions over which they have no control. In this latter group we could include perhaps most of the faithful workers in the church whether they be general officers, missionaries, local priesthood, or that usually most dependable of all groups, the women.

Too often the accomplishment of some program of work means that some must give time and energy out of balance to other members or to their own other needs. We must always expect this condition because we are dealing with human nature in our church and social relationships. Those who will not balance their time and spend it wisely are those who have not been able to conquer themselves. They cannot give up habits which are harmful to a well-balanced development. It is to these people that we must ever appeal, to paint such a picture of the happy results of wise living, that they will yield to common sense and follow the rules of balanced living.

All of us are familiar with so many incidents in our own lives which show the lack of balance in the planning of our time, that it seems almost unnecessary to give such an incident here, but one such is so striking that I use it to show to what levels a lack of balance can push a man down. This incident happened at a depot where I have seen many wandering men congregate. In one of these groups one man had an accordion which he could play exceptionally well, and as he played many people stopped to listen. Another hobo joined the group, and when the accordion player started "My Wild Irish Rose," this disheveled, dirty bum started singing in a beautiful (Continued on page 1165.)

Bishops and Bishop's Agents Stress the "Keep the Law" Program

During the last year continued emphasis has been placed on the need for the Saints keeping the financial law of the church. Many of our financial workers throughout the church have caught the spirit of the program as well as its importance.

Bishops, bishop's agents and solicitors have given splendid cooperation. In some districts, tithes and offerings have been increased because of the consistent and systematic work in spite of the additional obstacles that have come in the way during recent months. In other districts our financial representatives, while not increasing the income over a year ago, have by diligent effort offset the effects of drouth and unemployment.

Typifying the work of some of our financial representatives are the letters printed herewith which were received in response to our request recently made for a report on their activities for the year. For obvious reasons the names of those reporting and the districts represented are omitted. We trust, however, the spirit manifest will be an inspiration not only to those engaged in the financial work of the church, but to all members who have not yet complied with this phase of church law. Surely workers such as these merit support.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,
By G. L. DELAPP.

"The Presiding Bishopric,
"Dear Brethren:

"This will acknowledge receipt of your circular letter dated July 31, 1934, addressed to bishops and bishop's agents, pertaining to the check up and furtherance of the 'Keep the Law' campaign.

"Each solicitor in _____ and _____ districts were on the job for this check up and are still campaigning to have every member keep the financial law.

"The following answers are given in connection with the five points mentioned in your letter:

"Item 1. Each solicitor of _____ and _____ districts are under constant surveillance and they are visited from time to time and given encouragement and instructions as needed. I have not an indifferent or inactive solicitor. They all resigned the first two months of my office.

"Item 2. My solicitors have been instructed from time to time to visit each member and explain and urge the necessity of filing their inventory and keeping it up to date from year to year; paying their tithes and offerings as best they can.

"Item 3. The larger and better branches in my territory are using the duplex envelope system. I am encouraging its use in each branch.

"Item 4. I have a complete list by branches of every member who is contributing to the general church; those who have filed their inventories and those who are keeping them up to date. I go over this list every few days to see how each branch and member are keeping their pledges. In most cases this will require time as the last two years have been hard ones for some of our members.

"Item 5. A strenuous effort is being made in each branch to have each members keep the law, including the financial law, by filing their inventories. This campaign has been going on for eighteen months and it will continue as long as I have any ammunition.

"In regard to the number of sermons that have been preached on 'Keep the Law' since 1934, I wish to advise that this is a difficult question to answer, but in my opinion, there has been 150. I have personally given 24 and we have an understanding that there will be at least one each month in each branch. In _____ and _____ branches there has been more than one each month.

"Very sincerely yours."

"The Presiding Bishopric.
"Dear Brethren:

"I have your general letters of June 13 and July 31/34 re check up.

"I keep constantly in touch with solicitors and with one or two exceptions I believe each one is doing all they can.

"Have also kept in touch with branch presidents and district presidents and they too have cooperated and I believe have seen to it that every member of the district has been visited.

"I have preached 26 sermons since January 1, on 'Keep the Law' in _____ and _____ districts combined.

"I have carried the burden in _____ district and helped all I could in _____ district to assist Brother _____, the agent.

"I would have been glad to have accomplished more good and realized a greater return for the church.

"This year the rural part of the district (_____) has been very hard hit by drouth and consequently does not brighten the outlook.

"Yours respectfully."

Our Christian civilization is too frequently glutted with standards that are hostile to the kingdom of God and indifferent to the causes of poverty and crime. Theoretically, we hold to the brotherhood of man—a kind of creed which we repeat; but practically our standards of success are wrong. These standards must be displaced by the standards of personal righteousness that shall spell brotherhood in economic terms. In his time, Jesus condemned the world; in our day we are confronted either with condemning a Christianity that allies itself with the world or allying ourselves with a Christianity that has conformed to the world.—Peter Ainslie in Some Experiments in Living.

Proposed New Standard for Certificates in Religious Education and Leadership

By C. B. Woodstock

For the Department of Religious Education

In the report of the Department of Religious Education to the General Conference of 1934, as published in the Daily Herald, page 21, occurs this paragraph:

"The Certification Plan was instituted in 1926. After four years the requirements were raised to the present level in 1930. Now, after another four years of development, it is proposed to again raise the standard and to make the requirements more specific, that the total plan shall be more effective. The proposed change in standard will be made only after it is indorsed by representative church school leaders in all the church."

The proposed new standard was presented at a representative group of church school people at the conference and received ready endorsement. The details of the plan have been further developed under the suggestion of prominent church school leaders who have given the matter consideration.

We now present below the requirements of the standard as it is proposed to go into effect on January 1, 1935. It will be observed that the total class hour requirement has been raised from 150, 300 and 500, respectively, for the three grades of certificate to 300, 500 and 800. This permits of the specific requirement of certain subjects considered essential for the work of the teacher. This now seems reasonable because many of these specific subjects are available for credit study in local classes using adult and certain young people's quarterlies. The former allowance of institute, college and experience credit will still hold, but one will be limited in the total points allowed for such credit to those under "in institute and other credits" in each case. The new standard will place special emphasis upon credits earned through personal study and effort in credit class work and in correspondence courses.

Students who may be able to complete the former requirements before January 1, 1935, will be granted the regular certificates as usual. The attention of district and local church school directors and all church school workers is called to this proposed raise in standard. We will be glad to consider the advice of any who wish to urge points we may have overlooked in the plan.

Christian Training at College

By Blair Jensen*

THE poet has so truthfully and so ably stated:
 Destiny is not without thee, but within;
 Thyself must make thyself.

The aim and ideal of Christianity has been, and is, to prepare the individual most adequately for harmonious and righteous living together, for the development of a social structure wherein men are governed by principles of righteousness, and are diligently and efficiently giving of themselves in efforts which tend to alleviate the maladjustments which are so evident in human society today.

These efforts and these attempts to attain and to overcome conditions and situations, as well as attitudes and customs, similar to those against which Christ lifted his voice and directed his ministry, constitute today as they have constituted in the past the Christian's responsibility and obligation. He who would live a Christian life must know himself. Self knowledge is essential; it is basic in the Christian life. Only from such knowledge can the individual gain and develop the power sufficient to make the weight of his personality felt affirmatively in the balances of the modern social fraternity.

There are no short cuts and abbreviations that prepare one adequately for Christian living. There are no short courses offered that can even approximate the successful development of the well rounded Christian character. A successful development must catch together all knowledge and truth gleaned by previous generations and, interpreting them rightly in terms of the present, weld them into tools and implements that will not only care for the harvest of a given day but will also efficiently prepare the seed bed for the morrow.

Great leaders of the church have always recognized the need of educating and qualifying the rising generation.

I quote from Sidney Rigdon, one of the pioneer leaders of my faith who a century ago stated:

"Next to the worship of our God, we esteem the education of our children and the rising generation; for what is wealth without society or society without intelligence? And how is intelligence to be obtained? By education. Education is that which forms the youthful mind; it is that which renders society agreeable, and adds interest and importance to the worship of God. What is religion without intelligence? An empty sound. Intelligence is the root from which all true enjoyments flow. Intelligence is religion, and religion is intelligence, if it is anything. Take intelligence from it and what is left? A name—a sound without meaning. If a person desires to be truly pious in the sight of God, he must be purely intelligent. Piety without intelligence is fanaticism, and devotion without understanding is enthusiasm.

"The object of our religion is to make us more intelligent than we could be without it; not so much to make us acquainted with what we do see, as with what we do not see. It is designed to evolve the faculties—to enlighten the understanding—and, through this medium purify the heart. It is calculated to make men better by making them wiser; more useful by making them more intelligent, not intelligent on some subject only but on all subjects on which intelligence can be gained."

BLAIR JENSEN

The American college came into existence as a result of a sensing of this need upon the part of those great pioneer forefathers of ours who so ambitiously carved homes out of a vast wilderness, erected altars upon the slopes, and builded a nation founded upon ideals and principles of Christianity. Rightly we can assert that the American college was born of the church. It came into existence because these deeply religious forbears of ours had the great and enlightened vision of the social responsibility of the individual. They gave the college birth and nurtured it in order that their youth might more adequately be steeped in an understanding of this responsibility, and be most efficiently trained in the arts and sciences, and be given the working equipment sufficient for the efficient acquitting of their Christian responsibilities and obligations.

There is today a marked interest pointing toward the church college; that is, the college that is fostered and sustained by the church. Parents are asking themselves the questions—

"But His Father Married Outside the Church."

DANNY JOHN ELDON, Junior, was not like his sister. He was robust and hearty from the date of his birth; and at two months he could have won first prize in any baby contest in the land.

Dan was extremely proud of his son. His dreams for the boy occupied all the mental time he could spare from his studies. He meant to bring the children up in the church. He was quite sure Louisa would not be very enthusiastic, but neither would she oppose him. She was simply indifferent.

Louisa was also delighted with the wee baby. For one thing, she had more to do, and could keep her mind from troublesome thoughts. The afternoons were the hardest. For every day when the weather permitted she put the children in the large baby carriage and took them to the park. She tried to work up a healthy fatigue; then she could sleep better at night, without so much wakeful thinking. But sometimes she was too tired for so much walking. Then she would choose a quiet spot and put Dorothy Jane on the grass to play while Danny John slept in the buggy with a mosquito netting to protect him from the flies.

Dorothy Jane did not greatly care for play, however. She seemed to find sufficient delight in just watching things. She smiled at the flowers, the trees, the sunshine, but most of all she loved the fountains of water.

Most often Louisa chose to sit beside a certain piece of wonderful sculpture-work which had been inspired by the idea: "Time stays—we go."

On one side of the elongated fountain of water stood Old Father Time, his cycle in his hand. On the other side of the water, pressing forward, came the representation of a multitude of people of all ages, classes, and conditions. Little children, young men and women, mothers with babes in their arms, old men and old women. All pressing forward toward some uncertain goal until at the end they turned and looked back with despair, supplication, wonder, and regret.

She could remember when she was but a small child herself, that she and her mother used to ride places behind a spirited team of horses. She could hear herself ask her mother:

"Look—look how fast the earth flies past us!" And her mother's laughing reply: "We're moving, dear—not the earth."

But it still seemed to her that the earth were somehow moving, too. How much of life was illusion? Was it possible that the changes occurring in our bodies and in things round about us, the changes in the nights and days, and years and months gave an illusion of measured time, when it was only us moving all the while? She could recall old Father Eldon's voice in prayer meeting:

"Change and decay in all around I see—Oh thou who changest not, abide with me."

THERE might conceivably be an eternity with no end, and an eternal God. You could scarcely explain the marvelous universe in any other way. She had read some of the science books Dan had brought home, and Dan had taken pains to explain some things to her; he had a purpose in it, she knew, but at times she was interested in spite of herself. She knew there were solar systems so vast and worlds so great that it almost took one's breath away to think of them flying about at tremendous speed through space and still not bumping into each other—or what was a more appalling thought—they never collided with her own world. Then there were objects so tiny one could scarcely conceive of their existence at all and in it all and through it all there was power of some kind. Electricity, magnetism, powerful light rays, all kinds of energy: How could they exist without a source; and how could there be a source? Were human minds limited, too, by this non-understandable thing called time, by some illusion of life, until they could not comprehend infinity?

"I've got to quit this kind of thing," Louisa said to herself angrily, "or I'll go crazy, or think myself sick, or something. I think I'm alone too much. I've got to get away from books, and baby schedules, and religion and black boxes, and get some friends. I know where Helen lives; I'll look her up and have some good times. She was always jolly. And after all, I don't need to tell her my most intimate thoughts."

Taking the mosquito netting from the buggy, she went to get Dorothy, who had been sitting under a tree, running her hands caressingly over the smooth grass.

"Whas'at, Mama?" she asked, pointing to the shadows of the leaves moving over the grass.

"Shadows. Now, come, dearie, we're going to see a nice lady. Going for nice walk."

"Don' wanna see lady. Wanna shadow." Louisa laughed amusedly. That's what the child had been doing, all this time—trying to pick up the shadows on the grass. How cunning! She must tell Dan.

Picking the little one up despite her protestations, Louisa placed her comfortably beside her little brother.

"Wanna sadow—wanna sadow," pursued the tiny girl, as the young mother marched them rapidly away. "Me wanna sadow!"

LOUISA laughed heartily, then sobered. Was that what she herself had been doing in trying to find happiness? Was there no happiness only in imagination—was it but an illusion, so to speak? Would Dorothy and Junior have to pass through life to the very end crying for shadows? No, no! Dear God in heaven forbid! She must find some way—something to bring happiness and contentment to them. She quickened her steps angrily. What was the matter with her? She must quit thinking about such things.

Helen's shop was on Forty-seventh Street. Louisa could not walk all the way. Dan would be home by this time. She would get him to go with her on the street car. Helen must see the babies. Now that she had made up her mind to see her old school chum she could hardly wait.

Helen was waiting on a customer when they entered the establishment. It was indeed a nice little place. Louisa was delighted with the air of success about it. Helen herself might have been justly named "Gladdener of the eyes." She had a beauty which was enhanced by the studied simplicity of her clothing and her dignified, gracious manner.

She came toward them exhibiting her best businesslike air. Then she stopped, astonished. "Why, it's Dan and Louisa! And such darling children! But why—why haven't you come before? Mother said in her letter that she had sent you my address; and then she sent me yours; but you didn't come, and I didn't know whether you really wanted to see me or not, so I didn't look you up."

"Silly!" cried Louisa, happily, "Of course I wanted to see you—but part of the time I haven't been very well, and the children take a lot of care, and when I get a minute of time I feel more like resting than doing anything else. But I'm delighted with your shop. It's really quite an establishment."

"Oh, this isn't all of it. I have two other rooms on the other side here."

"You mean you sell those perfectly lovely hats next door, and those wonderful baby clothes?"

"Why not? I'll have the money to enlarge my place again soon," she said carelessly.

"You must be happy," said Louisa, "doing so many interesting things." She hoped she had succeeded in keeping the trace of envy from her voice.

"Well, as to that," laughed Helen, "I can't say. I thought I'd be happy when I added my hats, then I got to thinking of hand-made baby things, and felt that I had to have them on my list of stuff. Now I want to start a department for home-made candies. The old-fashioned kind, made with real cream, sugar, nuts, and so on, put up in little boxes made to look like log cabins. You see, I'm never what you'd call satisfied. I guess I'll always be chasing the shadows of happiness without finding it, but I'm having a lot of fun doing it anyway," she ended blithely.

"Wanna sadow," piped little Dorothy, "Me wanna sadow."

"What is she talking about, Louisa?"

"Oh, she tried to catch the shadows out in the park this afternoon, and has been crying out for one of them ever since," laughed Louisa, a dull ache tearing at her heart, "I suppose she heard you use the word and started to cry for it again."

"Well, how cute." Helen excused herself, waited on another customer and came bearing a scarlet balloon.

"Here, honey, is your shadow," she said, "My goodness, if she starts chasing shadows at this tender age it will be too bad. A person should at least have an illusion of happiness in childhood. But what ails you, Louisa? I've noticed that look on your face ever since I recognized you this evening. We've been talking about me—now we'll talk about you awhile. You don't look extremely happy yourself. Haven't you been good to her, Dan? I know you have been though—you always did worship her."

Louisa's heart beat fast. She didn't want the conversation to take this trend. How could she bear it if Dan, in his honest open way, were actually to speak of that strange Elaine?

"I remember," Helen, half-teasingly addressed Dan; "I tried to get you to notice me once, but you never saw anyone but Louisa. And she was so accustomed to being noticed in a more conspicuous fashion that she didn't realize you worshiped her. But you always did."

"I guess that's right," laughed Dan. "I guess there could never be anyone in my life but Louisa."

Did he mean that? Or was he just being gallant? But, after all, his statement was rather vague.

"No, I think you two were meant for each other—if there is such a thing as two beings being meant for one another. But as for me—well, my married friends don't seem a bit happier than the ones who remain unmarried, so I keep a motto hanging in my bedroom to remind me of it when I'm a little tired than usual, or have met some man who seems a little bit more attractive than the usual run of men."

"What is this motto?"

"Anticipation is better than realization," laughed Helen. "That sets up a long string of thought and I start thinking of my business again."

DANNY JOHN, Junior, stretched in his father's arms, yawned, and opened his eyes. Helen bent over him rapturously.

"Oh, that darling, darling baby! And such big bright brown eyes, just like his mother's. Have you had him christened yet?"

"Why, I expect we'll have him blessed in Dan's church one of these days. It makes little difference to me. You know how I've always felt about religion."

"Say, listen. Wait a minute. I've got the sweetest outfit for the occasion you ever saw. It was just made for this baby. I'll get it."

Dan was very serious. "You know, Louisa, we just can't afford expensive things right now. It won't be long now, if all goes well until I'll have a good position and you can buy things then, but right now—"

"It won't do any harm to look at them. We don't need to buy. You're always afraid I'm going to buy too much."

"You must know by this time," he said not unkindly, "that you aren't very good at resisting high pressure salesmanship."

That was an unfortunate remark, for it brought up many painful memories. And heading the list, floating before them all, the black box with the word Elaine in gilt letters. "Every thoughtful husband who loves his wife will be glad to buy our product." "If your husband loves you, I know he'd want you to buy this."

A wild irritation welled up within her against Dan. If he wanted to conceal his past life from her, if he could not love her as she wanted him to, certainly she ought to get something out of life. She had given her money into Dan's keeping and most of it had gone to help him with his higher education. And yet he wanted to tell her just what she ought to believe, what she ought to do, what she ought to buy. All at once it seemed that she saw him in a new light. He was selfish, egotistical, dictatorial. He wouldn't get by with it any longer.

"If I want to buy a dress for my baby, I guess I can do it," she said in such an unusual tone that Dan was thunderstruck. He could not see that anything he had said should make her feel that way toward him.

"I didn't mean—" he began miserably, but just then Helen tripped in with a box in her hands singing a little tune.

"I just know you're going to be wild about this," she told Louisa, "you always did recognize good clothes when you saw them—always had good taste and all."

"They are exquisite," murmured Louisa, softly. "I imagine they are pretty expensive."

"Well, they would be to most people. Did you ever see anything embroidered so daintily—and it's all done by hand. See how all the tiny seams are finished, too. But they won't cost you a cent if you'll humor me in a whim of mine."

"What is that?" asked Louisa. She was going to have these things for the baby, no matter the price. Dan wasn't going to have his way always. She was always giving up things for him—

"It's like this. Louisa, we were like sisters all through high school. I adore babies, and I've simply fallen in love with this tiny mite here—let me have a sort of interest in him spiritually anyway. Let me attend to the christening. I'll arrange with Father LeGreme—"

"You mean—have him baptized into the Catholic church?" Louisa was wide-eyed with astonishment.

"Why not? I'll bear all expenses, and furnish him a lot of these lovely clothes besides the ones needed at the christening. I'd just love to do things for him, really. And I know it wouldn't matter to you—and a man usually doesn't care what you do if it's a good business proposition. I'll see that Dan feels repaid." She laughed lightly, "I'll tell you—"

"All right," Louisa breathed, "I believe I will. It'll be a lot of fun—and fun is what I need, I've been alone so much—"

"Louisa." Dan's face wore such a stricken look that her heart failed her for a minute. But that was the way it always was. She loved him and he didn't care much for her, and she was always giving everything up to him because she couldn't bear to hurt him. She'd not give in this time—let him have a little suffering in his life—

"When will it be, Helen?" She ignored Dan entirely.

"I'll let you know. And, say—why couldn't you come to my party tonight? You and Dan—"

"You'll have dancing and cards, I suppose, as you did back home?" Helen nodded.

"What's a party without dancing and cards?"

"Well, I can answer for Dan. He won't go, but I'll be glad to come. I'll enjoy getting out again. And we'd better be going home right away so as to get the babies to bed. When does the party begin?"

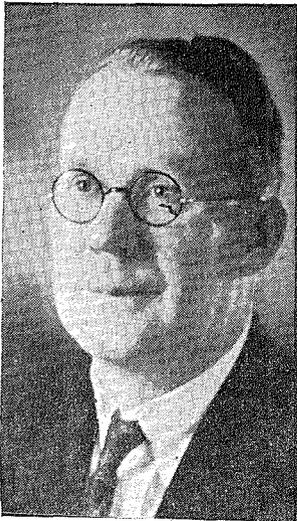

"The sooner you come the better it will seem to me. The official beginning of the grand performance is eight o'clock."

Louisa talked rapidly until they had made their way to the corner where they waited for the street car. To her surprise Dan was silent. She had expected him to fly into a rage.

An Authorized Ministry

By Amos T. Higdon

AMOS T. HIGDON

RELATIVE to the authority of the ministry, the Master of men said: "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." (Matthew 18: 18.)

When some people hear this thought expressed, they are inclined to say, "Why, that is the teaching of Catholicism." Our answer is: That is the teaching of Christianity.

There is no doubt that the abuse of ministerial authority had a great deal to do with the attitude held by many of the reformers. They could not condone the acts of the leading men of the Mother Church; therefore they repudiated the idea of an authorized ministry. The attitude held by the reformers has continued among a majority of Protestants.

Because some have exercised authority that is not in harmony with the teaching of Jesus, that is no reason why we should deny a true principle. We should weigh carefully any proposition presented to us that has scriptural support, and not allow ourselves to be influenced simply because someone else believes or disbelieves it.

On account of the greatness of the authority given to the ministry, they should ever walk in humility and meekness, and not assume an attitude of superiority. Jesus expressed this thought in these words: "And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant." (Matthew 20: 27.)

As we make a study of the men of the ministry in the early Christian Church, we learn that their ministerial acts were recognized by our heavenly Father, while the acts of others were not. Those baptized by John the Baptist, Ananias, Paul, and others of the New Testament ministry had no need for rebaptism; but on the other hand we read of several who had been baptized by unauthorized people had to be rebaptized.

AUTHORITY GOD GIVEN—NOT MAN MADE

Before his conversion the Apostle Paul was a Pharisee, and practiced baptism; yet when a true servant of God came to him, the servant commanded him to, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.) Thus we learn that the baptism of the Pharisees was not recognized in heaven.

There were several earnest people in Ephesus baptized by some unauthorized person, but when the Apostle Paul came and taught them the right way they were rebaptized (Acts 19: 1-5). Please note that those people were honest and conscientious in what they had done; yet that was not sufficient. In order for their baptism to be valid, it was necessary for them to be rebaptized.

There are some who think those Ephesians had been baptized by John the Baptist; but they made the statement that they had been baptized "unto John's baptism," and not "by John." When they were asked the question, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?", they answered, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost," which is proof conclusive that John had not baptized them, because he preached that the Holy Ghost would be given to those whom he baptized. (See Mark 1: 7, 8.)

The authority to cast out devils or evil spirits was given unto the ministry by Christ. (See Mark 6: 13; Luke 10: 17.) This gift was used to the comfort of many people. There were some not authorized to do this who tried it with dire results. This incident is recorded as follows: "Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth. And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which did so. And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye? And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded." (Acts 19: 13-16.)

From these three incidents, we learn that authority is not enjoyed by just any one who might wish to exercise it. One must first be called of God if his acts are to be effective.

AN AUTHORIZED MINISTRY GOD'S MOUTHPIECE

While on the road to Damascus, Saul of Tarsus saw the Savior in a vision, who commanded him to "go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." (Acts 9: 6.) Jesus could have told him then and there, but thought it best to have one of his ministers do it. (Continued on page 1165.)

What Shall We Preach?

By A. M. Chase

A. M. CHASE

“AND the voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field: the grass withereth the flower fadeth; because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it; surely the people is grass. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand forever.”—Isaiah 40: 6-8.

“Say nothing but repentance to this generation.”—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 4.

“The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. But if any man love God, the same is known of him.” (1 Corinthians 8: 1-3.) And this same writer, in his letter to Timothy, gives us the object of The Commandment (in fact of all the Gospel commandments) in these words, and this after saying, “As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine, Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith: so do. Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned.” (1 Timothy 1: 3-5.)

It is always an uplifting experience to sit in the congregation of the Saints while the elder, under the inspiration of the divine Spirit, preaches of “those things which are revealed,” which make for “charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned”; but if he yields to the lure of his urge to tell us of some of the wonderful things which his speculations have revealed to him, we are always somewhat wearied, and feel like referring him to Paul’s resolve to “know nothing but Christ, and him crucified.” And sometimes we feel like referring him to a letter written “To the brethren of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, living on China Creek, in Hancock County—and signed by Hyrum Smith. It is found in Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 474. In this epistle he declares:

“And again I say unto you, an elder has no business to undertake to preach mysteries in any part of the world, for God has commanded us all to preach nothing but the first principles unto the world. Neither has any elder any authority to preach any mysterious thing to any branch of the church unless he has a direct commandment from God to do so. Let the matter of the grand councils of heaven, and the making of gods, worlds, and devils entirely alone: for you are not called to teach any such doctrine—for neither you nor the people are capacitated to understand any such principles—less so to teach them.”

“But,” asks one, “do you never indulge in speculation?” Yes, occasionally, but never in the pulpit. If we are called to be witnesses, then it is the things that we know that we are under obligation to teach, and these things are the things revealed.

A number of years ago I was in charge of a branch of people, and chose one to act as my assistant—assistant pastor, we would call him now. He took the first opportunity to tell me of some theories that he held concerning the hereafter which were not exactly in (Continued on page 1167.)

our children forever, that we may do all the works of this law.”—Deuteronomy 29: 29.

Perhaps there is nothing more tempting to our preachers than the inclination to preach our theories, or speculations concerning the mysteries of creation and immortality. And sometimes we give way to this urge until we are convinced that these speculations are gospel truth. The field of actual knowledge is so limited, and the corresponding areas of speculation so broad, that we sometimes give way to the urge to explore these mystical fields, inviting our audiences to accompany us in these expeditions into the realms of fancy instead of giving them “meat in due season,” and expect them to grow thereby; and then we wonder that the flock seems weak and ill fed.

I think Paul sensed this danger, and gives us a glimpse of this difficulty and his solution thereto when he says, “And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified.” (1 Corinthians 2: 1, 2.)

Surely Paul was well equipped to lead us afield in his theoretical knowledge, but he had realized, under the wonderful revelation of knowledge to him, that came with the manifestation of Jesus Christ, that we could only “know in part,” and that we must wait until “that which is perfect” should come, before we could see “face to face.”

Someone has written, “A little knowledge is a dangerous thing,” and it was with a realization of this danger that this apostle wrote, “Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. And if any man

Priesthood

Authority is always essential to the successful carrying out of every scheme devised among men, either for their good or evil, to benefit or to injure.

Priesthood is but another name for authority, and should mean an intervening power. The priesthood rightly considered signifies a body of men rightfully holding power to administer in the name of Jesus Christ for the conferring of spiritual blessings upon men; nor should it ever be conceded to mean a class of men holding power from God to contravene the laws which have been given of him for the government of all, or to that which places in jeopardy or destroys the people and their liberties.

None talk more constantly about the priesthood than Latter Day Saints; none should understand more fully what is meant by, and comprehended in it than they. None should respect the authority of the priesthood more than a people who profess to be governed by laws emanating from God, given to the priesthood, and interpreted by the same.

The day was, we trust it will never be again, when it was thought by many that the priesthood could do no wrong; when the authority with which they were clothed was an unchallenged guarantee that all acts done by them were but the reflected light of wisdom divine.

Whatever other mischief this thought did not work, this much we have grave reasons to believe that it did; it engendered haughtiness and pride in the men who made up some considerable body of the priesthood; and made suspicious and selfish the men who were administered to by them. The loss of confidence followed as a matter of fact.

There is in the principles making the priesthood a necessity to the success of the Church of Christ, nothing that provides for such a result where men called and ordained to the exercise of its duties, and blessed with its prerogatives, conduct themselves in accordance with the design of its inception and object. These require an unselfish devotion to the performance of those duties, that looks only to the end, the good of man; the means, a personal and continued service; an enjoyment and exercise of those prerogatives, not as personal requisites that attach to the individual by reason of some innate and latent worth, but because of the labor performed and the fidelity with which it is done.

If the army of elders composing the priesthood have ever forgotten that they are men chosen for the accomplishment of a specific design had in view by him who called them, and that this calling gave no authority, and conferred no dignity not found in direct accord with the design, then has that army become deficient in the principal aid to their success; and every portion of it that persists in thus forgetting what they should certainly remember, disgraces this calling, and should be discharged from service.

The power of the priesthood, of which we have in times past heard so much, are conferred for no other purpose than the salvation of man, and are continued only in the just exercise of them in pursuit of this object; hence any act of any man called unto this calling performed with any other intent, or attended with a different result is not authorized of God, and hence does not bind the powers of heaven.

Balaam's ass spake once by the will of God, but remained ever after an ass still, with no powers of speech more than others of his kind. In him was found no assumption that his natural utterance became the oracles of God, because he did at one time speak by virtue of God's power. We have sometimes thought (we ask pardon therefor), that some men have not been so wise as men, as this ass was as an ass; for they have presumed to act as if having been empowered and directed of God to say and do certain specific things, all that they henceforth did and said must be of God.

We have heard men use the words, "By virtue of the Holy Priesthood vested in us," when we knew that it was not by virtue of that priesthood that they spake, but by reason of a commandment either of the Spirit, or the law.

This arrogating to man that which belongs to God, in such boastful and inconsiderate ways, has been the means of turning some away from the truth, who loved the truth but failed to recognize it in such guise, and some have been so much hurt and disgusted that they have disliked to hear the words "holy priesthood," so conscious have they been that the authority conferred was abused, and a boasting spirit lying beneath the language used. The formula of words suitable to each case is not specifically given; but Christ and Paul in the New Testament, and the former in the Book of Covenants, charge the elders to seek, and do what they do in the prosecution of their ministry and in pursuance of their calling "in the name of Christ," and not in the name, or authority, or by virtue of the priesthood.

Political oppression has been fostered in the name and influence of the divine right of kings to rule; social oppression in the name of fashion, and religious oppression in the name of the priesthood, until men who hate oppression have loathed the name of all three of these tyrants; although God gave men kings; fashion is the reflex of public opinion, vox populi, vox Dei; and priests have been and should be still sent of God.

It was the abuse of the statement made to Peter, "whatsoever ye bind on earth shall be bound in heaven," that gave rise to and made possible the inquisition, and caused Luther to protest against iniquities to be found at Rome; it was an absurd assumption upon the part of the then Evangelical churches that all were as but one church in the sight of God, that led Joseph Smith to ask of God, "Which one, O Lord, is acceptable to thee?" And the abuse of the power conferred by which the "first elders" were to "cry repentance" to this generation, that led many into the bondage of men who had vitiated the priesthood and who have made the sacred ordinances a mock to thousands. Let us be warned in time.—Saints' Herald, volume 24, page 168.

God Is So Good to Me!*

I cannot doubt my dear Savior's love
As on the mount I stand,
And looking back I plainly see
The leadings of His dear hand.

Chorus

God is so good to me.
God is so good to me.
I'll love and serve Him faithfully;
He is so good to me.

Walking with Christ is sweeter to me
Than all the world's vain charms;
Though rugged be the path I tread
I'm leaning on His strong arm.

He is so good to me every day,
Keeping me in His care;
His blessed sunlight floods my way.
My burdens and joys He shares.

I'll cling to Him whatever may come
And through eternity,
Round the white throne where praises ne'er cease,
I'll tell of His love for me.

AN AUTHORIZED MINISTRY

We read of another incident where the Lord directed a man how he might come in contact with an authorized representative: Cornelius was a very devout man; one who desired to do the right thing. Upon one occasion while in prayer, he saw a vision in which an angel brought him a message of cheer, comfort, and instruction, using these words: "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God. And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter: He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side: he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do." (Acts 10: 4-6.) The angel could have told him what he ought to do; but because the Lord had respect for His earthly representative, direction was given where he could be found. Thus we learn that God delegates authority to men here on earth, and has respect for them.

AUTHORITY IS TAKEN AWAY

The acts of the early Christian ministry were recognized by God; but as time continued a dark night of apostasy swept over the church, and the authority to administer the sacred ordinances of the gospel was taken from its representatives. We read of this incident presented to us in allegory in the following language:

"And there appeared a great wonder in heaven: a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars. And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. . . . And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up to God, and to his throne."—Revelations 12: 1, 2, 5.

The "woman" was representative of the church; the "man child" of authority. This "man child" was to rule. It takes authority to do that. Please note that the authority was taken from the church, and caught up into heaven. Therefore, if there is any authority to administer the sacred ordinances of the gospel on earth today, it must have been restored. We verily believe that this has been done, and that it came about in harmony with the Scriptures. John, the Revelator, tells us about it thus:

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell upon the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

MINISTERIAL AUTHORITY IS RESTORED

In our study we learned that authority was taken from the church and caught up to heaven. The angel brought it back.

We learn of the restoration of this authority (the messenger called it the priesthood) from the two upon whom it was bestowed in these the latter days. In writing of that event, Joseph Smith said:

"We still continued the work of translation, when in the ensuing month (May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine) we on a certain day went into the woods to pray and to inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the plates. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, 'Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth until the sons of Levi do offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.'"—Church History, volume 1, pages 34, 35.

Oliver Cowdery's account of that experience is as follows:

"But, dear brother, think, further think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said, 'Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon the earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.'"—Church History, volume 1, page 38.

Thus we learn that although the church went into apostasy, and the authority was taken away; yet in God's own due time, and in His own way that authority was restored unto the children of men.

From our study of this subject, we have learned that the authority bestowed upon an authorized ministry is great; that at times God directs people to his chosen representatives; or that the men of the ministry are directed to certain people; that they are to be meek and humble; and that their acts are recognized by our heavenly Father, while those of others are not. We have also learned that there was an apostasy in which the authority was taken away, but in the "hour of his judgment" it was restored.

Thus we have learned that there is a need for an authorized ministry. Our advice to all is to seriously consider this fact before they have any of the gospel ordinances performed.

May the directing influence of the Holy Spirit be with all who are seeking the way of eternal life.

STEWARDSHIP OF TIME AND TALENT

tenor voice. By this time a passenger train had stopped, and those who got out for a "platform stretch" were drawn to this music. The singer asked the player if he could play "Silver Threads Among the Gold," and when he responded the singer almost stopped all work at that depot. His singing touched the hearts of those people as nothing else could do, yet there was that beautiful talent hidden in a condition that was so out of balance that it was impossible for either the performer or the listeners to get the most out of it. There is no end to the good which could come from the proper use of such talent if only the other part of the life of its owner could be put in balance. No wonder God has told us to cultivate the gift of music, but he has also urged us to learn how to keep our entire lives in balance.

OUR IMMEDIATE CONCERN in the discussion of this problem is to find the way, the practical way, in which each Latter Day Saint may bring about the desired balance in his life. Surely there is some rule or plan which each of us can use, even though it may be necessary to change some details to fit individual differences. We find the answer to this problem as we fulfill one of the fundamental laws of the church, the law of tithing. Undoubtedly one of God's purposes in giving this law of tithing was to give us a measuring stick which would guide us in the spending of our time and energy. He has told us that one tenth of our increase should be used for spiritual work. If each one of us had his life under the right kind of control the tenth of the increase each year would support many more men giving full time to spiritual stewardships. We would also have many more producing a surplus each year. This surplus turned over to the church, through proper channels, the Bishopric, would give us more capital to create additional temporal stewardships. This would open the way for a constantly increasing number of Latter Day Saints to prosper. With our lives under strict control, giving us such results we would find that many would want to give of their necessities, which is the offering part of the tithing law. They would do this to speed the church Zionward.

What a plan! It gives us three avenues through which to give the church the benefit of our energy! The tithe, which is a debt; the surplus, which is capital; the offering, which is giving from our needs. The plan is simple and plain, and covers every possible contingency in the development of a social group. We have never needed to add to or to detract from this plan in any way as God, in his wisdom, has presented a simple, practical plan which can be used by each member no matter what his situation may be.

While it is true that we have never needed to make any change in the plan, we do have much to learn in its application. The unfortunate part is that so far we have had to depend too much on the offering part of the plan because too many members of the church have not yet learned how to determine the tenth of their increase, and comparatively few apparently have been able to create a surplus. As long as this condition exists it will be necessary for us to continue depending on drives, sacrifice periods, and other such stimulating efforts to increase the offerings, in order to cover the barest of necessities.

Some years ago I received a letter from one of our bishops in which he said he hoped the time would come when the Lord would define a tenth of the increase as a tenth of income. Then it would be easy for us to take one dollar out of each ten to pay as tithing, or perhaps I should say it would be easy to figure how much we should pay, even if not easy to pay it. This bishop said he felt that the Lord never expected us to use a plan which would make bookkeepers out of each member. I presume he had formed this opinion from constant contact with so many people who guess at what they owe as tithing. Perhaps he is right, but I cannot speak from experience. However, I cannot reconcile myself completely to a belief that the way to build Zion is to use a plan which causes the least effort on the part of the individual.

I believe that it will be only through learning from hardship and harsh lessons how to correctly balance our personal and home budgets that we shall learn the real lesson of how to balance our lives. I know from actual experience that it is hard to do that. It is only in constantly striving for a certain goal that we can have any hope of either reaching it or getting part way toward it.

In spite of the fact that it seems almost a hopeless task to get a large number of our people to fully learn the lesson of budgetary control I still believe that we should set that as our standard. We should constantly strive to reach it even though a comparatively few ever do actually succeed. I have had my share of discouragements yet I have tried to discipline myself to do what I believe should be the accepted standard. I should like to emphasize that there is little excuse for any Latter Day Saint or member of such family to ever say that he has spent either time or money without being able to account for that expenditure. How often do we hear people say that a certain period of time has gone by without getting anything done, or that they have spent a certain amount of money and haven't the slightest idea what they did with it.

A statement of that kind makes my Scotch blood boil! In my intense interest to find a solution to this problem I have kept a record of family income and expenditures. For years with the help and cooperation of my family we know exactly how much has been used for each kind of expenditure at the end of each year. I do not intend to convey the idea that what I have done has always been right or wise. The record shows too many errors of judgment, as well as a lack of wisdom. The point is that the record shows what and where they are. More than that such a record shows the cost of every move, right or wrong. It is the best guide for any one to have to help plan future moves. If we are to make the most of our time and talents we must use them intelligently and wisely.

Many women have said that the stewardship of motherhood entails so many changeable details that it is impossible for them to keep up any system of control such as a man might be able to do with his work. My suggestion is that that is the very reason why some plan which will measure the expenditure of energy in the home should be developed and adopted by each mother. Many have actually done it. The training of her children should include the practical lessons on how to wisely control the expenditure of time and energy. Hard? Of course it is hard, but what worth while lesson in this world is not hard to learn? Are we to quit trying because the problem is hard? If that is to be our attitude we may as well quit wishing any further for a Zion, because Zion will be made up of people who have solved the problems which "could not be solved" and who have done the things that "could not be done."

To prove to the women readers that I do have a sympathetic interest in, if not a complete understanding of their peculiar problems, let me relate here a comparison of two incidents. One of these I saw on a train, the other the same type of incident, was described in an editorial written by Bruce Barton, in the Red Book some years ago.

I saw a mother traveling with two small boys. They could not move a finger or turn sideways without her excitedly commanding them to sit as still as a couple of posts. They looked browbeaten and cowed, and actually looked as if they wished life could end. I can not recall any other instance in which I have seen a mother act so unlike a mother as this woman did. She was so unreasonable and unfair that she aroused the ire of most of the passengers on the train. I know that if it could have done any good I should have enjoyed giving her a little of her own medicine, but if I had she would merely have taken it out on the boys and nothing could have been gained. This woman may have suffered the physical pain of becoming a mother, but there it ended. She had no conception whatsoever of the stewardship of motherhood.

In contrast to this situation was the one described in the above mentioned editorial by Mr. Barton. His purpose in putting this incident in an editorial was to answer the query in the minds of many men as to why it is that women talk so much. We know that many of them do, but it is a God-given talent, at least so I felt after reading about this little incident. This mother was holding her baby so it could see out the window and watch the rainfall. She kept pointing to the rain, and kept repeating to that baby the word "rain" with a patience and persistence that is possible only in women. No man could have sat there and patiently drummed the word "rain" into that little one's mind as did this mother who showed a high conception of the stewardship of motherhood. She was making her time and talent count in achieving constructive results. These two incidents illustrate similar situations. In each case a mother had the opportunity to use her time and energy wisely. One failed, the other succeeded.

Since reading Mr. Barton's editorial I have been less anxious to condemn woman's talkativeness, which I repeat is a God-given attribute. Without that ability in mothers no man could have learned the primary lessons of life. Therefore, men should be very careful in what they say about this virtue or fault in women. However, the fact that it is a God-given trait should be no excuse for a woman to keep talking without saying anything. The ability to talk is one of her stewardships. If misused, it results in unwise spending of time. It is a fact that an immeasurable amount of energy is wasted by some women who have failed to direct that talent. Such women have failed to make this talent subservient to constructive purposes.

It would not be hard to believe that the first of these two mothers had never learned the first lesson about the wise use of time or talent. If she had, she certainly would not have abused those two boys as she did. Undoubtedly the second mother had learned some such lesson for she was taking advantage of the rain and letting other things go to teach that little lesson to that baby. No woman in justice to herself or her family should think that because of her type of work she should be exempt from the responsibility of wisely using her energy. Nor should any man think that he can be free from his share of such responsibility.

It is a problem which faces each one as an individual, no matter what age and no matter what our family situation may be. That is the point to be driven home to each one of us. This again is an individual responsibility. There is a way for each one to apply this truth to his own life even though the application may be hard. But it can be done. We can go to Zion if we want to. The question is, just how much do we want to go?

Is the college today a Christian institution?

Can the college satisfy Christian interests?

Does the college train Christian leaders?

These questions are brought more forcefully before us today because of the great unrest, the unprecedented social upheavals, the crash of long held moral standards, the general uncertainty that pervades human kind everywhere. To these questions we unhesitatingly reply:

The church-sponsored college of today is a Christian institution. It does satisfy Christian interests and it does train Christian leaders. It has as its major task the training and the fitting of young individuals to live effectively in society. It gives understanding to aims and ideals. It is a means of equipping one with the implements essential to life. It gives one zest for his endeavors.

A college education, in itself, cannot cause one "to arrive," as the saying goes. At best its only intent and purpose is to assist one in finding his way, to more readily direct his feet and lighten his pathway.

These things cannot be attained in a day, they cannot be acquired by merely sipping. They shall come as the result of desire, a desire that calls forth effort and endeavor on the part of the one who is desirous of patterning his life after the example of the Great Teacher and dedicating himself to the furtherance of His cause.

Such an individual with understanding and appreciation plucks the gem from the one of understanding soul who wrote:

"A little learning is a dangerous thing,
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring:

There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again."

The cause of Christianity challenges you, my friends, to use intelligently your influence to place the youth of America within the benign influence of the church college, to there drink deeply of those draughts that tend to develop Christian characters and personalities, sufficiently strengthened to cope with Christianity's needs of tomorrow.

THE NOMADS

"I expect you are angry with me," she said irritably, as they settled themselves in the street car.

"Not angry," he answered through stiff lips. "Just pained—and surprised."

"Why should you be?"

"Well, I had—sort of thought—dreamed he would grow up in the church—I mean the Latter Day Saint Church. You see, two of his great-grandfathers and his grandfather held the priesthood and I sort of hoped—"

"But his father married outside the church," Louisa said, lightly. "Sometimes you forget I am not a member of your church, and do not participate in all your dreams. That old priest won't hurt him, the water won't hurt him, and you can have him baptized into your church later—if you can get him to believe in it sufficiently. He'll get a lot of the most wonderful clothes—honestly Dan, you'd have to pay a tremendous price for those things—it would just about take your breath away to know just what they're worth."

"I'll pay it," said Dan, tersely, "I'll pay anything. Just call this foolishness off—"

Louisa shook her head. "It would hurt Helen's feelings terribly and I just can't do it, Dan. I need a friend. I've been so lonely that I'm nearly crazy. I just suddenly realized it this afternoon. I just must have a little companionship, excitement, and fun."

"I expect it has been lonely for you. I know I'm dull company—I'm not very jolly nor—"

"You'd be all right, only for your everlasting harping on religion. I can't stand it. It sets thoughts going in my brain that I can't endure. I just can't—"

He wet his lips. "I'll try—try not to offend you again."

Queer how you got your life into such a mess when you compromised your principles. He might just as well give up his dreams. He held his little son close to a heart which seemed that it would almost break with aching. He loved his wife though. He couldn't feel badly toward her. "She is like a Madonna," he thought, "and Dorothy Jane will be like her."

The little girl stirred in her mother's arms. She groaned softly. There was a little color in her face but it was not the flush of health.

"Me wanna sadow," she said, opening her eyes, "Wanna sadow."

Louisa touched her forehead lightly and the old fear gripped her. "Dan—she's hot! Just feel—"

"Probably just a bit upset because of the excitement of seeing so many strange people this evening. You know, dear, we've not been many places with her since we've been here—that's probably why you've been lonely."

It seemed to Louisa they would never get home. The child grew more restless as the minutes passed. When at last they were again in their little apartment, she lost no time in taking the baby's temperature. She looked up from the thermometer with a white face. "Get the doctor," she said thickly.

WHAT SHALL WE PREACH?

harmony with some theories that he had heard some of our elders preach. After listening to him I remarked, "I do not see anything in those theories that will make against your Christianity. If I did, I might object to them. I expect you have as good a right to your theories as I have to mine, as long as those theories do not spoil your Christianity, but we are not expected to preach theories, nor do I ever do so. In the pulpit we preach the simple truths of Christ and him crucified." Nor did I ever know of him undertaking to preach anything that was not pertinent to the message of "Christ, and him crucified."

On another occasion, some years later, after giving a talk to the priesthood of another branch (this in Hawaii), and stressing our obligations to confine ourselves to the simple things of the gospel in our message, I was invited to go out with a priest of the branch to a private home where he had a request for a sermon, I listened to this brother preach on the parable of the leaven and the three measures of meal. It was amusing to me, yet rather tragic. The brother gave us an hour's talk, wherein he presented the three measures of meal as the three books, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. Whatever opportunities for preaching further sermons in that home, or further desires to hear more of our message was effectually shut off by that sermon, the host declaring, "It is too deep for me." I thought he was mistaken, for I thought it too shallow for anyone to swim in.

John declares, when speaking of the final triumph of the saints over the accuser of the brethren, "They have overcome him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony"; and I am persuaded that if we finally triumph in our work of warning the world and building the kingdom it must be by reason of our testimony—not of things speculated about, but of things revealed. We can all agree on these things revealed to the church, from faith to the promise of the final judgment, and we may be able to convince the hearers of our competence as witnesses for Christ by this agreement; and if we do succeed in this effort, then there will be obedience to the things we have taught, and other witnesses will be added to our ranks, and the kingdom established never more to be destroyed. But this never can be done in any other way.

The Readers Say---

Revive Interest Where Once There Was a Branch

I recently closed a fourteen-day meeting near Lexington, Tennessee, at what was once Liberty Hill Branch. That branch was disorganized, but there are a few faithful Saints living in that community, and they have not heard the gospel preached there in many years until I went there last fall and held a series of meetings. I saw that some good could be done there, and that the Saints and their friends were anxious to hear the gospel. I pledged myself to return, and kept my pledge August 1.

Brother Don Dortch, and C. R. Reynolds accompanied me there. The latter remained only a few days, but the former stayed throughout the series. We had profitable services. Many of the sick were administered to with good results. In the case of Sister Kelley, seventy-six years old, we were given a special blessing. When we came to the community, they were expecting her to die. The doctors had given up all hope, but we were called to her bedside, and administered, and she received relief. We were called the next day, and on the day following the second administration, she arose and prepared the morning meal. She has been ill for a month.

We blessed some children, and at the close of the series, I baptized six fine people into the church, five men and one woman. Among these candidates is fine material for leadership. At the close of this series, we organized this group into a Sunday school, and they are also holding prayer meeting. We promised to visit them once each month.

I reached home Saturday, August 18, at 2 p. m. and left there at 4 p. m. for Dickson Grove Branch, fifteen miles away, to begin meetings there in the evening. Have enjoyed good interest thus far, and prospects are for a profitable meeting.

Have You Visited the Grove?

"After I had retired into the place where I had previously designed to go, having looked around me and finding myself alone, I knelt down and began to offer up the desires of my heart to God."—Joseph Smith.

Have you ever visited a grove? I believe I hear a majority of affirmative replies. But let us proceed—What was the purpose of the visit? Were you seeking comfort and consolation, were you seeking inspiration and endeavoring to commune with the Deity and Nature? I fear the answer to this, but trust it continues to be an affirmative response.

The writer is facing a grove now. Time and time again the experience of Joseph the Prophet, in the grove, is recalled, and I would to God that our people would visit a grove and establish their altar of prayer and meditation.

About us we hear of turmoil, trouble of all varieties, we see a changing and weakening of our societal "mores" to the extent that our major problem appears to be Social Relationships both within and out of the church. Recently our young people discussed the oft quoted phrase of "being in the world but not of it" and today we see sufficient reason for such a statement in scriptural writings, for it indeed comes to us as modern admonition. Is it true that too many of us are failing to be careful of our lives, and likewise failing to keep them as holy temples for the dwelling place of the Spirit of God?

Have you visited the grove? The Master of Men did in his most trying moments and communed with God. Joseph did in Palmyra, for it was necessary in order to bear his burdens and re-establish the Church of God. Recall also the life of David Smith, recall his inspiring compositions that remain for our benefit. Visit with me, if you will, "David's Chamber" a grove in old historic Nauvoo and feel anew the Restoration in all its splendor. Most of the successful men in our history have visited their grove at some time or other and sufficient inspiration has come to aid them. Oh how often we foolishly feel strong enough without this aid, and fail to have communion when it is necessary. Take an example from great men and worth-while lives.

There are moments in the lives of most people, I would venture to say, when they could go to the grove, be alone, and seek that inspiration which would draw them nearer to the Deity, and consequently to His church. How would we approach God, you ask? "Just as we are, with no reserve and no delay, we come to thee." What a beautiful consecration that would be. We need such an activity as the above in our curriculum for it is important to round out our lives. Then with an individual conviction and resistance against wrong built up within us, might we not venture to say we are ready with our answer to the question that has been asked, "Watchman what of the night?" We shall be prepared.

Young people, more than old, listen to the admonition given in Latter Days, contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, read the church law in Section 42, and read the admonition contained in Section 86. Know your church and know the way of life for yourself. Think of the lonely, but beautiful grove where young Joseph prepared for his tasks and found God. How often we have been told to seek Him in our youth and we would have Him always, take Him into the solving of our problems, and live a fuller and happier life.

Have you visited the grove?

DONALD O. CHESWORTH.

Dream—Then Do!

Yes, we can make our dreams come true. How often many of us have dreamed of ideals and then wished they were possible.

We dream and dream some more, but we always awaken and let the dream slip from our minds. Perhaps as a people, we see much the same ideals and longings, in many dreams. We may forget them with the press of another day, letting our desires and wishes pass by without the least effort to realize them.

We can dream—then do. Great men and women have become great in their positions, because they looked ahead toward a goal, a standard, and then they worked with all that was in them until they reached that goal. Are not our goals worth working for? Our ideals can never be made real by magic. We are the people of God. The Kingdom is our goal; Zion is our dream. The church is our gate way to these realizations. The Holy Spirit is our guide to keep us going onward until we are satisfied with our position. The harder we work, the more we shall appreciate the beauty of Zion.

We can easily dream, but the hard test comes in doing what we dreamed of doing.

Gospel Sermons Encourage Isolated Ones

Our hearts rejoice when we see the fruits develop from seeds sown by the servants of the Master.

Brother Wyatt and wife, of Joplin, Missouri, have been coming to the little community of Honeylake, near Anderson, every two weeks for the past two years, holding services at the homes—more often at Brother Clyde Penn's. Nice crowds attend each meeting. Brother Wyatt and wife have endeared themselves to these people because of their patience and love. The community is earnestly inquiring about the gospel plan.

July 22, a basket dinner was held at Brother Penn's and two services held. Elder Amos T. Higdon, of Independence, Missouri, officiated at each service. A splendid sermon was given at eleven o'clock on the "Unchangeable God." A bounteous dinner was served at noon in the shade of the big elm tree to fifty-four persons. At two-thirty we listened to another wonderful discourse on "The Restoration of the Gospel." Brother Higdon is an able speaker, precise in his speech, and having a pleasing manner. Sixty-nine attended the afternoon service.

It gives us great pleasure to attend these meetings, and we feel uplifted each time we are permitted to hear a real gospel sermons which is not often since leaving Tulsa. May God guide us—and we surely need Him as a guide, during these troublous times.

It Pays to Write to the Herald

The following incident proves that it pays to write to Herald. Through Sister Olive Andes' recent letter to the Herald, a gentleman from Ovalo, Texas, learned of our mission at Breckenridge, and came a distance of eighty miles to hear the restored gospel preached. He had not heard the good word for fifteen years.

After hearing two sermons, he followed a little girl into the waters of baptism and bore his testimony at the social service of the same day. His wife, who is affiliated with another denomination, publicly asked our prayers for light. Her mother, sister and brother-in-law, who came with them over the long road revealed a deep interest in religion and in the songs of our meetings.

The services referred to were held Saturday and Sunday, August 18 and 19.

Another faithful little girl who lives here was baptized June 10, Children's Day.

In Memory of Sister Elenora Haynes' Active and Saintly Life

I noted a short while back the announcement of the passing at Cleveland Ohio, of Sister Elenora Whiting Haynes. Sister Haynes was truly a Latter Day Saint in life and character, smiling and unselfish always. I first met her during the World War when I was stationed in the training station at East Boston and on my first Sunday's leave found my way to the Somerville Branch, where I was invited to the hospitality of the home of Sister Haynes' brother-in-law and her sister, Brother George Sinclair and wife.

Sister Haynes was then Miss Elenora Whiting and many times I have heard her beautiful voice in practice numbers and at the Somerville church. She told me of her love for this latter-day gospel and how she chose between a lucrative position in the musical world and the humble service of her musical talents for the Master. Her name with its two first syllables alike, En-En-Ora, was given to her mother by a heavenly messenger, and no doubt today in the haven of rest with the Master, she knows the real significance of her heavenly name.

During repeated visits to the Sinclair home, the true Latter Day Saint life of this sister left a lifetime influence with me. This testimony will be borne out by the many who knew Sister Elenora and came under her ministrations and association.

I met Sister Haynes and her husband at the Kirtland reunion twice after the World War and heard of her good work in the Cleveland district. May the true love of the gospel find its way into our hearts as it did in Sister Haynes, to the glory of God and the upbuilding of his kingdom here on earth.

Blessed in Time of Illness

I was baptized into the church May 5, 1905, in the Stone Church font. The following November, I became seriously ill, and was forced to remain in bed for some time. In March, 1906, while I was in bed, I fell into a sleep. Some neighbors came in, but did not waken me. I slept about two hours, and it seemed as though a man came to see my companion, who was out looking for work. He told who he was, and when I learned that he was an elder, I asked him to administer to me. I requested him not to anoint my head, as it was sore, and as he placed his hands on my face and prayed, I thought I had never heard so beautiful a prayer as that. I aroused up and felt much better. The neighbors thought I did not know what I was doing, but I arose and put on my clothes, and although I was weak, I felt no pain.

When I told the neighbors who had administered to me, they informed me that the man was in California. I knew then that God had wonderfully blessed me.

Greetings to Sister Jordan

I send greetings through the Herald to Sister Mary H. Jordan whose picture was in a recent Herald. Sister Jordan was once my Sunday school teacher, and I had not heard of her for years. Perhaps you can imagine my delight in seeing her sweet face in the Herald and learning that she is still living. She will remember me only by my maiden name, Emily Brown. If you read this, Sister Jordan, please send me your address.

Grateful for Blessings

The Herald brings much joy and comfort to me each week, and I thank my heavenly Father for the privilege of reading it. I am grateful to the kind one who sends the Herald to me.

I have received many, many blessings from God, and I thank him for them. Even though trials and difficulties may surround me now, I can remember past blessings and pray for future helps. Pray for me that I may continue faithful.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Does the church approve of going to ball games and picture shows on Sunday?

While this question is not answered in exactly this form by the church, yet its statement of duty on the Lord's day clearly implies a negative answer. Two revelations touch upon the question, and are as follows on that point:

"The Saints are to observe the first day of the week commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest: as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments. And on this day they should refrain from unnecessary work."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 7.

"But remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart."—Ibid., 59: 2, 3.

It is easy to become careless, and then indifferent, and finally callous in regard to those duties which put a measure of restraint upon us. Yet this is most necessary to the building of integrity and strength of character. In this age of short hours, frequent holidays, and weekly half-holidays, increasing tendencies are manifest toward disregard of spiritual things and sacred duties. It ought to be otherwise, for there is even less reason to slight or shirk Christian duty than when long hours and incessant labor exhausted physical and mental powers. Too many examples are beckoning away from Christ, but spiritual strength comes to those who follow Him. However, I do not understand that this question refers to pictures of a religious or moral nature used as a part of the regular church preaching or lecture service.

What is meant in Genesis 49 where Jacob blessed his sons?

A detailed analysis would require too much space here, but much of the language used is figurative. A lion's whelp (verse 9) implies growing strength and kingly station. The ass (verse 14) represents the characteristics and future station of a tribe quite different from Judah, implying more subservience. The serpent (verse 17) shows the traits of treachery and vengefulness. These figures are intended to symbolize qualities and tendencies which would mark the tribes to which they relate, and also in some instances to portray in a measure their future. Thus Joseph, as a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall (verse 22), would greatly multiply and spread over the waters or sea, implying other lands.

Explain the "daily sacrifice" and the "abomination" mentioned in Daniel 12: 11.

This is believed to refer to the temple sacrifices that were of daily occurrence as required by the Mosaic law, and to the desecration of the temple at the time it was used by the conquering enemy for idolatrous purposes. Opinions differ as to the time of the event, some holding it to have been the desecration of the temple during the Maccabean period of the second century B. C., while others believe it to have been fulfilled by the Romans after the crucifixion of Christ.

What would be the destiny of one whose married companion hinders obedience to the gospel?

Those who are legally under the control or guardianship of another are not responsible for being coerced or forced against their will or conscience. Such control does not admit of free agency, and one who thus exercises legal power must be held responsible to God for doing so. But simply because one is not favorable to the gospel does not of itself take away responsibility on the part of the companion who may occupy in the marriage relation. At law, the wife is in many jurisdictions more subject to the husband than in others, and this would be a factor. The church position in this matter is as follows:

"It is not right to persuade a woman to be baptized contrary to the will of her husband, . . . We believe that all persons who exercise control over their fellow beings, and prevent them from embracing the truth, will have to answer for that sin."—Doctrine and Covenants 111: 4.

Far West Stake Completes Reunion

The 1934 Far West Stake Reunion opened officially on the evening of August 16 at the large reunion ground adjoining Stewartville, Missouri. Some four hundred Saints met for the purpose of observing the Lord's Supper at the beginning of their ten-day encampment. Following a color ceremony in which both the American and church flags were presented by the Boy Scouts, the congregation joined in singing "Redeemer of Israel," and moved into the sacrament service. Stake President Ward A. Hougas presided and presented the reunion theme under the caption, "Now—the Opportune Time to Be a Latter Day Saint."

Friday morning found class work and devotional services of all types begun in earnest with outstanding numbers in attendance. The camp was large this year with approximately one hundred tents on the ground, many of which housed surprising numbers of campers. From far and near came Latter Day Saints for this annual event. Many visitors were present from adjoining stakes as well as some from far distant points.

With the exception of one or two rainy days, the weather was ideal. Attendance at all meetings ran considerably ahead of that of former years, and a spirit of devotion and intense interest was manifested by most of those in attendance.

The first Sunday saw the peak crowd of the reunion when about fifteen hundred gathered for the big day. The day started with the young people's prayer service at eight o'clock, followed by the general prayer service at eight-forty-five. The general prayer service was marked with a remarkable manifestation of the gift of prophecy through the stake president in which the Saints were admonished to recognize their duties as a stake and to busy themselves with the problems of development and organization pertaining to the work of a stake.

President Frederick M. Smith was the speaker at the eleven o'clock and two-thirty periods. The morning service was preceded by a cantata presented by the combined young people's choirs of Maple Grove and Stewartville Branches, under the leadership of Leonard G. Ehlers. The afternoon service was preceded by a concert by the Dulciana Chorus of Saint Joseph, directed by Mrs. C. E. Haden.

President Smith, in his usual masterful manner, discussed the meaning of baptism, interpreting it in terms of real Latter Day Saint living and service. Elder E. Y. Hunker was the evening speaker through the entire series and was followed on Sunday evening by a dramatization, "The Half of My Goods," as presented by the Stewartville O. T. Z.'s.

The second Sunday was of the same general type with Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry as the speaker, and a prelude presented in the morning by the First Saint Joseph Choir under the direction of Stake Chorister Evan J. Ehlers. The afternoon prelude was by the Cameron Orchestra under the direction of Professor Tracy. The closing service of the reunion was held at five o'clock Sunday at which Brother Hunker completed his series and the reunion adjourned at six-fifteen, August 26.

At the general prayer service the closing Sunday, the gifts were again manifested through Apostle J. F. Garver, who spoke not only by way of encouragement but by way of instruction to the people, and at some length and with considerable detail dealt with problems peculiar to the stake as well as problems of vital interest to the lives of many present.

The Far West Stake Reunion this year was a picture of well-organized effort in day interested from one hundred and twenty-five to as many as one hundred and ninety on week days and larger crowds on Sunday. Not only was attendance high but activity was in proportion to attendance, and at no time from the first prayer service until the last, was there a moment when someone was not waiting to occupy.

On Wednesday an early morning prayer service was held at Maple Grove Church, four miles from camp, where one hundred and seventy met at an early hour for devotional service. Here the gift of prophecy was manifested through the stake president in words of instruction to the young people, reminding them of their responsibilities as to membership in a stake of Zion. The prayer service was followed by a breakfast and the group returned to camp in time for the ten o'clock classes.

On Friday the two prayer services met together as a joint service.

The general prayer services were held each morning at eight-forty-five under the direction of Elder F. L. Hinderks. Attendance this year ran nearly double that of 1933, and much encouragement came to those in attendance.

Three divisional classes were presented which the special needs of virtually every group were cared for as well as ample provision made for congregational worship in which all participated. One of the dominant factors of the reunion was the O. T. Z. division in which the young people of the stake found opportunity for expression and class work in a way which ministered to their particular needs.

Following these divisional classes each day, a general class was held in charge of Bishop Livingston. Class work was of high char-

L. O. Wildermuth at Columbia Falls, Montana

Four fine people were baptized by Elder Lester O. Wildermuth who recently conducted missionary meetings at Columbia Falls, Montana, near the Glacier National Park.

Brother Wildermuth reports excellent interest there with three others talking of baptism in the near future. The meetings were marked by a wonderful spirit of fellowship and friendly inquiry.

On one Sunday all-day meetings were held with three baptisms, four children blessed, two preaching services, and picnic dinner.

A splendid group of young people is to be found at Columbia Falls, and they are cooperating with those of older years in group activities. They are now engrossed in a special study of the Book of Mormon, programs on Friday night and regular Sunday school and preaching on Sunday. They are led by Priest Guy Anderson.

Signs and Faith

There are those among you who seek signs, and there have been such even from the beginning; but, behold, faith cometh not by signs, but signs follow those that believe. Yea, signs cometh by faith, not by the will of men, nor as they please, but by the will of God. Yea, signs cometh by faith, unto mighty works, for without faith no man pleaseth God.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 3.

acter throughout and considerably over half a hundred enrolled for credit together with some three hundred others who attended the classes regularly but did not enroll for credit.

In connection with the O. T. Z. class, Sister Olive McLean, of Saint Joseph, developed a series of five biblical dramas, dramatizing some of the material presented by Brother Hougas in his class work. This proved to be a fine feature, and the five dramas were presented at the pleasure hour on the closing Saturday of reunion.

The afternoons were given over primarily to recreation at which oftentimes several hundred were found participating.

Work for the children was conducted from ten to twelve o'clock each day under the direction of Mrs. H. L. Livingston, assisted by Mrs. G. Scott Daniel. Special services were held also afternoons and evenings including the regular evening campfire and illustrated lectures under the direction of Brother Preston Hinderks. This became a very popular feature with the youngsters.

The Boy Scouts were on the job and not only took active part in the various services but conducted their own camp, and were to be seen participating in the various services during the entire reunion. The Orioles likewise added color to the congregations with their uniforms. They also camped in groups and became a helpful part of the reunion.

Visiting campers came from far and near and added to the number of regular attendants day by day.

Evangelist Milo Burnett was present during the reunion, and in his patriarchal labors administered to a large number, particularly those of the young people. His advice and counsel make him a valuable man in any reunion.

Brother Hubert Ehlers represented the Herald Publishing House and reported heavier sales than have been reported in several years despite the drouth which had moved over the entire stake.

The gasoline station, commissary, refreshment stand and other conveniences added to the welfare and satisfaction of those present.

Women's activities were conducted throughout the reunion under the direction of Sister Mayme Ru'off, stake director of women.

The O. T. Z. pleasure hour staged each evening at nine o'clock proved itself an important feature of the reunion again this year as it has in times past. The Maple Grove O. T. Z.'s opened the series on Friday night with a comedy. Kingston-Oakdale groups followed on Saturday night with Stewartsville presenting a religious drama on Sunday night. Guilford and Fortescue entertained with a miscellaneous program Monday night. Cameron was on the stage Tuesday night followed by a pageant on Wednesday night presented by Second and Third churches of Saint Joseph. Thursday night was circus night with the stake

O. T. Z. director managing a modern three-ring circus. Friday night First and Fourth Saint Joseph churches presented a religious drama, and the pleasure hour series ended Saturday night with the presentation of five religious dramas which had been produced during the reunion by the young people's class.

Everything moved like clock work throughout the entire 1934 reunion. Tents were in order, stages decorated and everything complete for the opening service. At the close of reunion, with the same clocklike precision, the camp was torn down and long before noon of the following day, everything was cleared and packed away awaiting the next annual event of this type.

One thing stood out definitely in the reunion experience of Far West Stake and that was a more thoroughly definitized program of activity and responsibility for those comprising the membership of the stake. Combined with this was a much keener realization of these responsibilities together with an expressed willingness on the part of many to go forward as never before. Truly 1934 is the opportune time to be a Latter Day Saint.

Zion's Christian Legion was organized in this branch by Apostle D. T. Williams some time ago, with the following officers: company commander, Mrs. Glenn H. Foster; secretary, Geneva Genson; treasurer, Mrs. Richard Hammond; publicity director, Mrs. Kleber Hill; solicitation director, Loretta Chadwick; socialization director, Margaret Genson; Brother John Brockhaus is captain of the young people's group and Sister K. Hill is captain of the adult group.

Several of the Saints attended the church school institute held recently at Freesoil.

Brother U. E. Grovenburgh is much improved in health, and has been able to attend church services again.

Brother and Sister Glenn H. Foster and daughter, Gloria, attended the Park of the Pines reunion, and they report a splendid spirit of cooperation during the ten days. Meetings were of a high spiritual order. Brother Archie Walters and wife also attended the reunion for a few days.

Loretta Chadwick was united in marriage to Edwin Mitchell, of Manistee, Sunday, August 3. Elder John Randall was the officiating minister. The wedding took place at the home of Brother and Sister John Randall. Brother and Sister Mitchell are at home to their many friends at Manistee.

Edwin Mitchell was baptized Sunday, July 29, by Elder John Randall, and was confirmed by Elder Randall. Miss Helen Chadwick will be missed by her junior friends, as she will make her home with her sister at Manistee.

The Saints enjoyed meeting the district missionary, Elder Leonard Houghton, in prayer service Wednesday, August 15. He was on his way home, having attended the Park of the Pines reunion, and after caring for his missionary work for the past three months throughout the district.

District President Buell Shelley, of Freesoil, was the speaker Sunday evening, August 12. He used as the basis of his discourse Psalm 37. The Saints were encouraged by his message.

Des Moines District Reunion

All Organized Groups of District Are Represented—Spirit of Devotion There

It had been three years since Des Moines District had attempted to have a real camp-meeting reunion, and this year it was with some trepidation that the committee yielded to the importunities of some of the people to have one. The place selected was a shaded hill top on the State Fair grounds. It is high above the city of Des Moines and the vistas of tree lined streets, wooded hills and the majestic State House in the distance added to the beauty of the camp. The fear of the committee that the people in this drouth stricken area could not attend reunion seemed to be entirely unfounded, and all rejoiced when on the first morning of the ten-day services, there were thirty-seven tents already occupied on the grounds. This number increased to more than fifty before the reunion was over, and numbers from Des Moines attended constantly although some did not camp.

The spirit of the reunion from the beginning was friendly and auspicious for its success. The district presidency were in charge assisted by E. Y. Hunker. The days were filled as reunion days usually are with prayer services, classes, planned recreation and pleasant social intercourse. The prayer meetings brought the members near to each other and they sat many times at the feet of the Master. The Lord spoke to them admonishing, encouraging, and challenging. The first Sunday the gentle urge of the Spirit of the Master seemed to be drawing them to him from the early morning prayer meeting when they were spoken to through Patriarch Richard Baldwin, pleading for purer, better service, through to the evening service when the choir with perfectly blended voices sang the anthem, "What Shall It Profit a Man If He Gain the Whole World and Lose His Own Soul?"

All organized groups in the district were represented on the grounds. Branch presidents and leaders of all groups except two attended all or part of the time.

The first class of the day was in charge of Stephen Robinson of the financial law. This was presented with new strength and beauty, and Bishop J. A. Koehler's presence at the last three classes added interest.

The second class of the day was taught by Richard Baldwin who took for his subject "Discovering God in the Beautiful." These lessons brought out beautifully the art of worship in our services, and the church school workers and priesthood carried away much inspiration and helpful material.

The children were ably provided for by Sister Richard Baldwin and her assistants. They were divided for their worship into three groups according to age, and suitable leaders selected for each age group. If the interest and enthusiasm of the children was any criterion of their success, they were successful indeed. Sister Baldwin took part of her time on Tuesday afternoon to talk to the women on "The Wise Use of Leisure Time," and presented many helpful thoughts. Brother Baldwin talked on "Worship in the Home" on Thursday afternoon.

The evening sermons in the early part of the reunion were preached by E. Y. Hunker. He was blessed in the preaching of the word, and the message that he brought seemed to penetrate the souls of those who listened. They were sorry to have him leave on Thursday. At seventhirty that morning a large group of young people went down to the station to tell him good-by for he had endeared himself to old and young by his integrity, his friendliness, and his sincerity. The same group went down at noon that day and sang "How-do-you-do" to a weary, dust-stained Brother J. F. Garver. After lunch at the Castings home, he arrived on the grounds with all his old enthusiasm.

On Friday afternoon more than two hundred campers and visitors gathered round a large sunken concrete tank on a tree shaded slope near the large tent, while Elder Fowler, of Webster City, administered the rite of baptism to six people. It was a beautiful ceremony that initiated Beatrice and Howard Stillwell, of Webster City; Audry Wilkinson, of Melcher; Mrs. Carmen Shally, of Nevada; Pauline Miller, of Valley Junction, and David Lewis, of Des Moines, into the church. On Sunday afternoon the tank was again filled and Herman Greenfield was baptized by Doctor Slocum, of Des Moines.

The last Saturday evening service began at seven o'clock when during a swirling dust and windstorm, the Graceland students with a clever little skit, initiated two prospective Graceland students (and incidently the entire audience) into the delights of life at Graceland College. Immediately following this, Apostle Garver preached, and it is due to his magnetic personality and unusual oratory, that he held the attention of that tent full of people while the air was filled with particles of dust and the billowing tent top threatened to snap the taut guy ropes.

Eventually the storm blew itself out and sweet cool air cleared the atmosphere of the tent. At the close of the sermon the platform was cleared and Miss Clara Mayer sang, "I Love You Truly." To the strains of the Lohengrin Wedding March, played by Miss Vivian Castings, Sister Naomi Meek and Brother Willis Hoakenson marched in accompanied by their bridal party, and were united in marriage by Elder Verne Deskin. The service was then dismissed, and the entire group gathered in a cleared space across the road where the campfire was lighted, and where the evening recreation and song fests had been held during the week. Here a short program was given and followed by the reading of the Camp Cricket.

The "Cricket" closed with an article written by Brother Deam Ferris, "High Lights of the Reunion." He wrote:

"If with all your hearts ye truly seek me, ye shall ever truly find me." It will not be with empty hearts that departing Saints shall go once more to their tents and seek their separate abodes. We have been afforded during this short time a foretaste of the greater association which we hope shall sometime be.

"Those who attended the morning prayer meetings and heard the prayers and testimonies of the Saints will realize that as individuals and as a church God's people have been truly seeking him with all their hearts, and true to the heavenly promise have not sought in vain. Last Sunday through the lips of his servant Brother Hunker and Brother Baldwin the Saints received admonishment to greater prayer and recognition of their faith. As an abiding comforter, the Spirit was also felt through all the prayer meetings.

"The young people's meetings were well attended and an excellent hour of devotion was spent each time. The testimonies were enthusiastic, and many young soldiers of Christ dedicated themselves to greater work."

Fulton, Iowa

Mrs. May Rudd, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Elder John Heide, of Fulton, were united in marriage Sunday, August 5, by Elder Amos W. Heide, son of the bridegroom, in the pastor's home. The couple was unattended. Mrs. Guy Johnson, of Deloit, sister of the bride, played the wedding march. Immediately following the ceremony, a wedding dinner was served to thirty-six relatives, all of them children and grandchildren, including four great-grandchildren of the bridegroom.

Brother Amos Heide, who officiated in the ceremony, and his wife, were married thirty-three years ago, by the former's father. The bridal couple are making their home on a farm, at Fulton.

Miss Ruth Heide has been spending several weeks with her sister, Mrs. Brooks, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Miss Heide went with several other young people from Milwaukee, to attend the young people's camp at Nauvoo, Illinois. She will be at home soon to take up her duties as teacher in the rural schools.

The women of this congregation will hold a picnic at Caves State Park. The Sunday school also held its picnic recently.

Mrs. Elvin Heide was elected teacher of the young people's class to take the place of Gladys Brooks, who is now living in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Lamoni Stake

Reunion Is Index of Spiritual Progress and Bouyancy

The activities in Lamoni and throughout the stake during the past six weeks have been most inspiring.

The opening of the stake reunion, July 27, and continuing through to August 5, in the church park at Lamoni, marked a season of intellectual and spiritual uplift, which was recognized by church officials as a result of a spiritual growth which had been moving the people for the past few months. This, together with the proper emotional balance, resulted in a reunion which was considered by the ministry in charge to be the best reunion held in this stake for a number of years.

The gift of prophecy was manifest on several occasions, admonishing and encouraging the Saints in the performance of their duty in keeping their covenants in this period of stress.

Visitors were present from seven states, with various districts and all the stakes represented.

The entire reunion was planned meet the needs of all groups. A diversified program of class work included religious education, dramatization, nature study, and other subjects suitable to all ages.

President F. M. McDowell conducted a class each day for adults on the program of the church applied to Lamoni Stake. He also preached the first Sunday afternoon, making a powerful appeal to the people.

The first Sunday a simple but impressive ordination service was held at the eleven o'clock hour. Ross Mortimore and Hale Stevenson, of Lamoni, were ordained deacons, Maurice Spillman, of Allendale was ordained a priest; Byron Roberts was ordained an elder, and he and Walter Johnson were set apart as counselors to Bishop J. F. Wildermuth.

Elder E. Y. Hunker delivered a series of missionary sermons each evening. These sermons were characterized by a well thought-out and intelligent preparation blended with a deep spiritual warmth. His frankness and sincerity carried his message with conviction to the large group who came every night to listen throughout the series.

The last Sunday morning prayer meeting in charge of the stake presidency and Apostles J. F. Garver and M. A. McConley, was one long to be remembered. The Lord spoke to the people through two of his servants, the president of the stake, Blair Jensen and Apostle Garver.

This service was followed by the serving of the Lord's Supper to over seven hundred people.

Consecrated musicians and leaders in various fields gave willingly of their services in the spirit of true consecration.

Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley was present, and was kept quite busy giving blessings.

Since the close of reunion Blair Jensen has contacted all parts of the stake. He reports that the people have never been in such financial straits as they are at present, but that they are demonstrating a spiritual power which is carrying them through.

Bishop Wildermuth was in attendance at the Des Moines reunion several days also the Far West reunion.

The Nauvoo camp followed immediately after reunion with twenty-six young people and seven leaders from Lamoni attending. The same social and spiritual uplift was apparent in the camp, which was made up of ninety young men and women from seven States. They were there for the purpose of learning about their church and applying the principles to their everyday problems.

"Learn to Live by Living," is the slogan of the Nauvoo Camp, and at the close of camp these young people went to their homes fully determined to take to their branches some of the good things that were brought out in the highly intellectual discussions of the assemblies.

The Lamoni young people who attended, conducted the first Sunday evening's service after their return. They told something of the atmosphere, purpose and results of the camp.

The next Sunday throughout the stake, was observed as "Young People's Day."

They had entire charge of the services of this day. The theme for the morning devotional service at Lamoni was "Not Then, Now." In the evening they carried their theme farther into "Practicing Living Together, Now." Several young workers gave talks on sub-topics of the theme.

Sunday, September 2, the worship service was in charge of the older people of the branch. Musical numbers and a talk by one who is well along in years told of the gratification of the older generation at seeing the young people making preparation and actually taking over the burden of the church work.

Lamoni has taken on new life with the opening of the public schools and Grace-land College.

Friday was registration for the freshmen on the college hill, with a twenty percent increase in enrollment over last year, according to President G. N. Briggs. The upper classmen will probably be about the same as last year.

Tuesday was the opening day set for the opening classes, with everything pointing to a successful year.

Kansas City Stake

The monthly pastors' meeting was held at Swope Park, August 27, at 7:30 p. m., and included the associate pastors and their wives. A picnic banquet was spread on a long table, and a very enjoyable time was had. After the meal, Stake President C. E. Wight introduced the business at hand, announcing the perfecting of the missionary effort mentioned some time ago. This endeavor is to enlist all the adult membership of the stake in a missionary service to commence at once and continue as time and zeal allow until January 1. After that a missionary effort will be conducted each week at each local church until Easter. A card eight by ten, inches, headed "We Have Enlisted to Invite Our Friends to Our Regular Services," is to be posted in each home. Each member will be asked to sign a card, four by six inches, headed "I Enlist," giving full name, address, telephone number, etc. This will be filed in the stake office. Announcement was also made concerning the stake leadership school which will be held at Central Church from September 10 to 21.

Argentine Church

Attendance during the extremely hot months of the summer was beyond the expectations of officials. Church school, O. B. K.'s, and regular services made a good showing. The O. B. K.'s usually provide the first Sunday evening service of each month.

Recent speakers have been Pastor R. E. Brown, Church School Director W. S. Brown, Elders Ammon White, J. A. Gillen, J. A. Holsworth, H. W. Goold, C. G. Lewis, H. A. Koehler, L. W. Hayes. These and others assay the task of forging ahead in Zion's cause.

Quindaro Church

In spite of the extremely hot weather the Quindaro congregation, under the direction of their pastor, H. A. Higgins, has been intensely engaged in forwarding the zionic movement of the church.

The women's department, headed by Rebecca Green, and the men's department, lead by John Gross, for the past three months have been doing outstanding work, and have accomplished great results in helping to meet the financial needs of the Quindaro group as well as Kansas City Stake.

As a result of Brother Higgins' feeling it necessary to tie the younger O. B. K.'s together in a more spiritual and social way the young people from thirteen to twenty have been functioning as an organization known as the T. A. D.'s for more than three months. Their leaders are, Victor Hill, president; Terrel Southard, vice president; Buelah Wilkinson, secretary, and Edith Galloway, treasurer. These young people have been doing outstanding work for the church and at the same time they have been developing their several talents by spending their leisure time in earnest efforts to prepare their lives for usefulness in the church.

The O. B. K.'s whose officers are Victor Hill, counselor; Donald Graham, vice counselor; Martha Gaunce, secretary, and Mona Gross, treasurer, have contributed immensely to the successful work being carried on in the group. Their outstanding contribution to the church the past summer has been the regular Sunday evening young people's forum. Myrtle Luke, assisted by Dorothy Bland, has been responsible for the success of these meetings. To these young sisters is due much credit for the splendid manner in which they have helped the O. B. K.'s of Quindaro to appreciate the church and to have a more thorough understanding of its doctrine.

Independence

At the end of the first three days of school last week it was reported that a total of 4,312 students were at work in classes at William Chrisman High School, Junior High School, and the eight ward schools of the city. School began September 4.

The Latter Day Saint Tabernacle Choir, of Salt Lake City, will visit Independence September 17, and will give a concert from five-thirty to seven o'clock in the Auditorium. Following the concert, a banquet will be served to the choir and people of Independence by the Laurel Club in the basement of the Auditorium. A large number of the Harvest Festival Choir members of the Reorganized Church are planning to be present both for the concert and the banquet. The Salt Lake City Choir is a guest group of singers at the Century of Progress, Chicago, from September 10 to 16.

Rain prevented the holding of the closing Sunday evening service on the Campus September 9. But the congregation gathered at the Stone Church and listened with interest to President Elbert A. Smith's sermon on "The Second Coming of Christ." Congregational singing was led by Pastor John F. Sheehy, and Mrs. John Isaacks, soprano sang, a solo.

The people of Independence have greatly appreciated Brother Smith's series of sermons at the Campus this summer, and as they return to services in their own congregations on Sunday evenings, they take with them new courage and strengthened convictions regarding the truth of the latter-day message.

A tragic railroad crossing accident the morning of September 6, brought instant death to two school girls of Independence, Nelda Lee Hancock, fourteen years old, and Marguerite Berry, seventeen, and serious injuries to two boys, Wesley and Dan Bilquist, eighteen and fifteen. These four were on their way to school in Independence when they crashed with a fast Santa Fe train at Atherton. Nelda Lee Hancock, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Hancock, was a member of the church at Atherton, and Lamoni, Iowa, was previously her home. Her funeral was held at the Atherton church Saturday afternoon.

Stone Church

"The Truth Shall Make You Free" was the theme of Bishop J. A. Koehler who preached Sunday morning at the Stone Church. This was the first of a series of four Sunday morning sermons under the general theme. "The Authority of the Restoration Movement." Next Sunday Brother Koehler will speak on "The Authority of the Priesthood."

After a month's vacation the Stone Church Choir again took its place and supplied the musical program. Under the direction of George Anway the choir sang "Salutations" by Samuel Richards Gaines and "As Pants the Hart" by Spohr. Miss Lillie Belle Allen sang the solo to the second anthem. Robert Miller was at the organ.

Monday afternoon the funeral of Irving E. Jenkins, son of Elizabeth C. Jenkins, was held at the Stone Church, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Brother Jenkins, thirty-two years old, died at Los Angeles, California, September 6. For a number of years he has been known to the people of Independence as a musician, a friend, and a helper. He was baptized into the church just this year. The sermon was preached by Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

Among the early autumn weddings of Stone Church young people was that of Miss LaVelle McClain, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. McClain, and F. Jewell Beal, son of S. A. Beal. The ceremony was solemnized at the Stone Church the evening of September 7, Elder T. C. Kelley officiating. Brother Kelley also officiated in the marriage of the bride's parents. The bride was given in marriage by her father and was accompanied by her sister, Miss Myrell McClain, as maid of honor and Mrs. Blair McClain and Mrs. Louise Main, bridesmaids. Zoe Ann Fisher, of Kansas City, was flower girl and Harry McClain jr, of Coolidge, Arizona, carried the ring. Sanford Beal acted as best man for his brother, and the groomsmen were Blair McClain and Louis Main. Ushers were Merle Quick, jr., Thomas McCarroll, and Harold Johnson. A reception followed the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents. After a honeymoon trip the bridal pair will be at home in Independence.

Second Church

Elder A. K. Dillee gave the communion talk and special prayer September 2, at the sacrament hour. Bishop J. A. Koehler was present to speak concerning the oblation. Pastor W. N. Inman was in charge of the service, and a baby was blessed by Elders F. L. Freeman and Will Grubb.

Election of officers for this congregation was held at the church September 5. President F. M. McDowell was assisted in charge by Bishop J. S. Kelley. Elder A. K. Dillee was elected pastor, and he chose as his assistants, Elder W. N. Inman and Elder B. C. Sarratt. Elder Sam Inman was chosen bishop's agent and custodian. Following the election a worship service was held, and President McDowell gave a splendid talk on "The Prophecies of the Kingdom." Mrs. Katherine Inman and Mrs. Gladys Inman sang a request duet number.

Sunday, September 9, at nine-thirty o'clock, church school officers were elected. Roy Settles was elected church school director and Pearl Myer, secretary.

Elder W. N. Inman was in charge of the eleven o'clock service, and Elder R. D. Weaver began a series of missionary sermons, using for a text, "He that drinketh of this water shall thirst again." For two weeks Brother Weaver will conduct services, speaking every night except Saturday.

The choir resumed its rehearsals on September 6, and sang on Sunday, giving effective renditions of "Fairest Lord Jesus," and "Tenderly, Tenderly Lead Thou Me On."

Richard Dillee was in charge of the junior service downstairs, and Gordon Cable was the speaker. His subject was "Friendship," and "The Gospel Friendship Circle" was dramatized.

Walnut Park Church

Following a period of several months in which almost no weddings occurred among Walnut Park young people, the past two weeks saw three local young couples take the vows looking to the founding of new homes.

On Thursday evening, August 30 Zelma McConnell and Paul Anderson were united in marriage by the pastor, Elder Frank McDonald. The wedding took place at the pastor's home. The young couple was attended by Richard Coble and Genevieve Allen. Brother Anderson has been quite active in local church affairs, serving as assistant librarian, helping in Boy Scout work, and recently serving as president of the Swastika Class of the young people's department. While Sister Anderson has lived outside the Walnut Park district, she has attended the church school quite regularly, for the past two or three years.

On Friday evening, August 31, Delta Maurine Nace, daughter of Brother and Sister Orlando Nace, who have long been leaders in musical work at Walnut Park, and Arlon Blair Chapman, son of Brother and Sister D. T. Chapman, of Enoch Hill, were married at the Walnut Park Church by Elder W. T. Gard. Elder Gard had taught both of these young people throughout most of their experiences as young people in the church school. Preceding the ceremony an organ recital was played by Drexel Mollison, following which a string ensemble composed of Mrs. Ada G. Stout, Miss Eloise Higgins, Miss Mary Alice Hardin, Milford Nace, and Drexel Mollison played "Serenade" (Drigo); "Through the Years" was sung by Marion Ruth Beal, seven-year-old cousin of the bride and members of the Village Choir, a group of KMBC radio singers, sang "O Promise Me." This group of singers also sang the "Bridal Chorus" as the wedding party entered. The bride's attendants were Mrs. Louise Griffin Baker, Mrs. Fern Price Van Horn and Miss Gladys Carr, and the bridegroom was attended by Fred Chapman, Alfred Waters and Rayburn Baker. Flower girls were Rebekah and Rachel Stout, and Richard Duane Anderson and Robert Bruce Flanders acted as ring bearers. A reception was held following the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents.

Elsie Lee Hartley and Gomer Stowell were married, also on Friday evening, the wedding taking place at the future home of the bride and bridegroom, 306 South Grand Avenue in Independence. Elder O. W. Sarratt performed the ceremony. The bride was attended by Mrs. Lindon Wagener and the bridegroom by Mr. Wagener. Following the ceremony, refreshments were served to the few near relatives who were present. Brother Stowell, for the past two years has been one of Walnut Park's representatives on the Independence Young People's Council and has also served as president of the Swastika Class of young people.

All the Saints at Walnut Park join in wishing these three young couples success in their great undertaking.

The A. W. Z. Class held a party Thursday evening, August 30, at the home of Virgie and Vernon Sackman. About thirty-five members of the class attended. In addition to the games which were played, a mock wedding was held as a part of the evening's entertainment. After the "wedding," refreshments were served.

Sacrament services Sunday morning, September 2, were in charge of the pastor, assisted by Elders George Bullard and Benjamin Bean. A talk regarding the importance of the oblation offering was made by Elder Bean, and the opening remarks were by the pastor.

The local young people's council met at the church at two-thirty Sunday afternoon, and some reports were received. This was the last meeting before the election of new representatives to serve during the coming church year.

The annual congregational election for Walnut Park was held at the church Tuesday evening, September 4. Pastor Frank McDonald was re-elected, along with the following other officers; Bishop's agent, Fred Horn; custodian, John Reynolds; church school superintendent, Clairice G. Closson. The meeting was in charge of Apostle F. Henry Edwards, assisted by Pastor in Zion John F. Sheehy and Evangelist F. A. Smith.

This election was followed on Sunday morning by the election of the remainder of the officers of the church school for the coming church year. Those chosen were: Assistant superintendent, Odess Athey; secretary, Violet Chase; librarian, Erwin Moorman; assistant librarian, Leonard Curtis, jr., adult superintendent, B. O. Grimes, young people's superintendent, Kenneth Morford; assistant leader of young people, Ruth Bryant; superintendent of children's division, Sister Edith Barwise. Sister Barwise was granted the privilege of choosing her assistants for the junior and cradle roll departments.

The devotionals and program of the church school were in charge of the third year intermediates, the invocation being by James Gunzel; the Scripture reading by Jack Green; a reading by Thalona Cook; a solo, "My Jesus, I Love Thee," sung in German by Dorothy Drigalla; and the benediction by George Harrington.

The Crusader Class of young people chose their officers for the year Sunday morning. They are President, Robert Butterworth; vice president, Eddie Butterworth; secretary, Fritz Drigalla; treasurer, Mary Elizabeth Mosier; and social chairman, Fred Chappelow.

At eleven o'clock the pastor spoke, his sermon being in the nature of a charge to the new officers and the congregation, asking each member to devote his talents to the work of the church. It was based upon the parable of the talents as delivered by Jesus.

Liberty Street Church

The boys' choir, which has been rehearsing for two months under the direction of Fred Friend, made its first appearance at the church school hour September 2. The twelve boy singers are from ten to twelve years of age. Joseph Frick is the accompanist.

The September sacrament service was well attended by the Saints of this district, and the Spirit felt in the early morning prayer meeting was present also as the emblems were administered.

Last Sunday the girls' chorus, directed by Sister Ann Crick, gave an excellent program during the church school hour. They sang "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say." The chorus was organized last spring by Sister Hurshman.

Donald Home, one of the active young people at Liberty Street, is in the United States Veterans Hospital at Fayetteville, Arkansas, where he has been confined for some time. He fell ill eight weeks ago at the Government C. C. C. Camp, then located at Ozark, Arkansas. Prayers for his recovery have been requested by friends who have been corresponding with Don. At the last meeting of the choir, the members wrote him notes of good will and encouragement.

The choir made its last missionary trip of the season Sunday afternoon. The branch at Lexington was visited. Notwithstanding the fact that it started to rain when the basket supper was being served, the members who made the trip in Brother C. A. Mills' truck, had an enjoyable time. Many points of historic interest were visited before supper time. At the church a warm welcome was extended to the visitors and the experience of the chilling rain was forgotten. The choir sang two numbers, "Remember Now Thy Creator," and "The Woods and Every Sweet-smelling Tree." Joseph Frick sang a tenor solo and Mayble Tignor and Edith Roberts sang a duet. Cecil Walker was the speaker. Bernard Hurshman is the business manager of the choir, and is to be commended for the enjoyable trips he has arranged. The first visit of the season was to the Goodwill Industries' Camp. Branches visited included Lees Summit, Bates City, Blue Springs, Atherton, and Lexington.

Enoch Hill Church

Brother Roy Hill, of Chanute, Kansas, visited this congregation Sunday, September 2, and partook of the sacrament. His son, Lloyd Hill, is attending high school in Independence.

Elders E. A. Thomas, Joe Martin, and C. E. Beal were in charge of the communion hour September 2. A duet, "It Was for Me," was sung by Sisters Edith Roberts and Mayble Tignor, from Liberty Street.

The two weeks of missionary services closed Friday, August 31. These were conducted by Elder J. W. A. Bailey, who was generously assisted by the musicians of this and neighboring districts.

The junior department is doing nicely under the supervision of Sister H. E. Winegar, assisted by Sister May Worth and Sister Rilla Johnson. Each Sunday a theme is followed out. Brother Lawrence Martin gives a sermon, and stories are told by such willing workers as Sister Clara Frick, Sister Nellie Mae Kramer, Sister Ruth Hayes, or Dorothy Winegar. Sister John Jones is in charge of the beginner department, assisted by Sister John Johnson and Sister Millard Pace. Sister Johnson has taken care of the cradle roll for several years.

Elder H. L. Barto was the speaker the morning of September 9, and his text was "Man that is born of God does Not Continue in Sin."

Harold Inman is home from the Navy for a time, and was back in his place in Brother H. E. Winegar's class. Sister Lulu Whitsitt, secretary of the church school, is leaving for California the last of this week. Edmund Allen left last week to attend Graceland College.

Spring Branch Church

At the close of the church school hour Sunday, September 7, Mildred Reynolds gave a short talk on the Far West Stake reunion at Stewartsville.

The sacrament service was in charge of Pastor M. C. Jacobsen, and Brothers Andes, Fish, and Tankard assisted him in the stand. A trio, Alma, Imogene and Gladys Dixon, sang "My Task." The talk on the oblation was by J. S. Andes, and the talk on the emblems was by A. J. Tankard.

Wednesday evening prayer services in both groups have been well attended throughout the summer.

Quite a number from this district attended the reunion at Stewartsville each Sunday, and some were present the entire week. Everyone enjoyed a spiritual feast there.

Gudgell Park Church

Elder H. Arthur Koehler was here August 5, and made the opening sacrament talk. At this service Shirley Enid, baby daughter at Brother and Sister Melvin Atwell, was blessed by Elders P. A. Sherman and Walter Chapman.

Elder Walter Self was the morning speaker August 12, and Elder J. E. Vanderwood occupied August 19, stressing the need of the Saints being taught of God.

On August 26, many from this congregation attended the Stewartsville reunion. Those who remained enjoyed a sermon by Elder H. E. Winegar.

The September sacrament service was well attended, and the Saints felt strengthened by a spiritual talk given by Elder R. D. Weaver. A fine spirit prevailed.

East Independence Church

Last Wednesday night the prayer service was in charge of Elder Clare Austin and Elder Coleman, and the number present was double that of the preceding week.

On Thursday the women's meeting was in charge of Sister Florence Minton. The workers agreed to try to have family prayer, worship, and study. This will build the district spiritually.

Bishop B. J. Scott was the speaker Sunday morning.

Next Sunday this congregation will go to Far West. All will meet at the church at 6 a. m. and will take basket dinner.

Brother and Sister Lloyd Pypher lost all their possessions when fire destroyed their home Saturday. They were in Independence when the disaster occurred. The branch is taking up a collection of clothing, bedding and money to help them. They expect later to collect furniture.

From now on the women will meet on Wednesday instead of Thursday.

The sacrament service for September was in charge of Frank Minton assisted by Elders Sam Smith, Clare Austin, and Harry Friend. Sisters Jennie Butler and

Nina Austin sang "He Suffered, Bled, and Died Alone."

September 13 is the date set for the election of district officers for the coming year.

Brother and Sister Donald Stark are the parents of a son born September 9. Sister Stark was formerly Elizabeth Friend, daughter of Brother and Sister Harry Friend.

Spring Branch volley ball teams played East Independence team last Friday night and proved themselves good losers.

South Bend-Mishawaka Indiana

In May, 1934, Apostle D. T. Williams came here and organized Zion's Christian Legion. They meet once a month for business session. About four weeks ago they had an ice cream social which was greatly enjoyed. On Sunday, September 23, which is rally day, they will give a good program. The organization is planning a social time once a month during the winter, and hopes to carry forward every phase of legion activity. They feel that this organization has both a challenge and an appeal for their young people.

Longview-Kelso Branch, Washington

The Saints under the leadership of Brother Willard Becker, a loyal and faithful worker, are striving hard to carry on the cause of Christ. They are holding prayer service Wednesday evening and church school every Sunday.

On July 28, most of the members with their families and friends gathered at a pleasant spot a few miles out of town and spent the evening playing games, later enjoying a wiener roast.

Brother and Sister Becker, stanch members of this branch, with their sons, Milton and Willard and daughter, Mollie, attended the reunion at Silver Lake. Hearing them tell of the experiences and meetings they enjoyed has helped and encouraged those who were unable to go.

Sister Marjorie Whiting, another faithful member, has returned from visiting her folks in Minnesota. Her father, Brother Anson Sherman, baptized in Longview about a year ago, made the trip East with her, and while there, took sick and passed away.

The branch enjoyed a picnic on Labor Day.

A man may think that the world is a jig-saw puzzle, but he can go on with it if he can believe that somehow the total picture will be incomplete without the little piece of the puzzle he represents.—Frank B. Fagerburg in "The Sin of Being Ordinary."

The Bulletin Board

Michigan Choir Movement

This includes all the choirs in Michigan and Ontario and, of course, any others who wish to join with us; also includes all interested in music who are not fortunate enough to belong to a choir. With vacation time over, there will be increased interest in branches, and we are hoping that the choir work will not only return to normality, but will venture into untried fields of endeavor. One of the many aims of this choir movement is to seek out latent talent and put it to work. This is often found in the most unlikely places. With proper coaching, such prospectives will greatly help not only themselves, but be a credit to the church. Encourage the older and experienced members to continue in their good work so as to help the less experienced. In this way only can we ever hope to accomplish the final goal of a choir of six hundred members. At this juncture it would seem presumptuous to compete with the many wonderful choirs that are springing up all over the world. We fully realize that ours will not be distinctive only as we develop a high degree of spirituality. To this end we all must labor. No strife must enter our ranks. There will be mistakes undoubtedly, but all must be charitable toward one another if we expect to develop the project. There are two intermediate goals before us. Plans are well in hand to take a two-hundred-voice choir to the 1936 General Conference. Reduced rates will enable us to take part in this. Begin to prepare for this by becoming acquainted with the music and in any other way that may be necessary for you to attend this gathering. At a recent meeting of the executive committee of Zion's Christian Legion it was decided that the Michigan Choir Movement is to play an active part, and we desire a two-hundred-voice choir to sing at the June convention, which aims to be one of the largest and best planned gatherings ever held in this State. Many have complained that our church does so little. Now big things are being worked out and an opportunity given to every one to prove just how much "big things" are desired. The invitation to join with us is extended to all. Do not wait for a personal urging, but rather show your good spirit by letting us know that you want to get in the Michigan Choir Movement. We are taking it for granted that the majority have learned the 1934 anthems and if not this ought to be attended to at once. The following selections are to be practiced for the remainder of this year and 1935: "Repent Ye," Scott-Deis; "Turn Ye Even to Me," Harker, and "Send Out Thy Light," Gounod. By forwarding forty-one cents to Lyon and Healy, Chicago, Illinois, these three numbers will be sent to you promptly. Do not procrastinate, but let us make things move. Local choristers need to begin work on these selections in their choirs and district directors can accomplish much by having combined choir work at all district gatherings and using these anthems. We will be glad to hear from those interested in this choir movement, telling us what you think of it, what you can do for it, giving helpful suggestions, or presenting your problems so that together we might meet the task of building up a six-hundred-voice choir; two-hundred-voice choir for the 1936 General Conference and a two-hundred voice choir for the Zion's Christian Legion convention to be held June, 1935, in commemoration of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.—Louise Evans, 240 Travis Street, Northeast, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Rally Meeting at Vales Mills

Vales Mills Branch in Southern Ohio District, invites all who can attend to meet with them on September 22 and 23 and enjoy a spiritual feast. This is one of the old branches in the district, and they are making progress under the leadership of young men who are devoted to their task. There will be preaching on Saturday evening, September 22, and the services on Sunday will commence at 9:30 a. m. with a prayer service, preaching at 11 a. m. and 2 p. m. A basket dinner will be served at noon on Sunday. Come and enjoy a good spiritual time at this meeting.—A. E. Anderton, district president.

Home-coming and Rally Day Postponed

The home-coming and rally day of Southbend-Mishawaka Branch, Indiana, previously announced for September 16, has been postponed to Sunday, September 23.—F. E. Myers, pastor.

Conference and Harvest Home Festival for Central Michigan

Conference and harvest home festival of Central Michigan District will be held at Beaverton, October 6 and 7. Exhibit booths will be in the basement of the church, and each branch is to decorate its own booth, bringing such fruits and vegetables as they desire to give to the storehouse for the needy. Saturday morning prayer meeting will begin at nine o'clock. Business sessions at 2 p. m.; general priesthood meeting at 4; preaching at 7:15, and program at 8:15. Sunday a full day's program will begin with prayer meeting at 8:30 a. m. President Elbert A. Smith will be with us, and we very much desire a full house with all the branches represented.—Hubert Case, district president.

Conference Notices

Toronto district conference will be held in Toronto church, Saturday and Sunday, October 6 and 7, commencing at ten o'clock Saturday morning.—James Pycock, vice president; A. Lillian Farthing, secretary.

London district conference will convene at Stratford, October 27 and 28. James Winegarden, district president; Percy Farrow, district missionary.—Clara Schlotzhauer, London district secretary.

Portland district conference will convene at Portland, Oregon, September 14, 15 and 16, with Apostle E. J. Gleazer as speaker. The conference will open at 7:30 p. m. Beginning Saturday morning, the following program will be carried through: 10 a. m., meeting of the women's department of the district; 2 to 5 p. m., class work under the direction of the district officers; 7:45 p. m., preaching service, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, speaker; Sunday morning, 8 to 9:30 a. m. prayer service; 9:45 to 10:45, church school; 10:45 to 12:00 m., preaching service, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, speaker; 12 to 2 p. m. basket lunch in the lower auditorium; 2 to 3:30 p. m. district business meeting; 3:45 to 5 p. m. ordination service, and 7:45 p. m. preaching service, Apostle E. J. Minnesota district conference will convene at Duluth, Minnesota, at the church, Sixtieth Avenue, West, and Bristol Street, September 21, 22, and 23. President F. M. Smith and Apostle J. F. Curtis will be there to instruct. The church building of Duluth Branch will be dedicated to the service of the Master on this occasion. It is now free of debt, thanks to the tireless efforts of the leaders of the women and their active workers. President F. M. Smith will officiate at the dedication service. Those contemplating attending the conference, kindly drop a line to A. C. Bundy, 318 North Twenty-seventh Avenue, West, Duluth. He is chairman of the reception committee. Advise him how many men, women and children are in your group, that we may be better prepared to care for your comfort during your stay at conference. The women's department will serve meals in the basement without charge, but have asked that those coming bring articles of food. This will be appreciated.—W. C. Stauty, district secretary, 3203 Chestnut Street, Duluth, Minnesota.

Southern Ohio District will hold its fall conference at Dayton, October 5, 6, and 7, the first service being at 7:30 p. m., October 5. Apostle M. A. McConley will be present and will be the speaker at the first service Friday evening, and will occupy again. We feel that we can promise all who attend a splendid spiritual time, and Dayton Saints want all who can to be present. The services on Saturday will commence at 9 a. m. with a prayer service and preaching at 11 a. m. The business session will open at 2 p. m. and a resolution of interest to all will be presented. The services on Sunday will commence at 8 a. m. with the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and the day will be busy with devotional exercises. This is a delegate conference, and will each branch select three delegates, sending their names to the district secretary, E. H. Caldwell, P. O. Box 67, Lancaster, Ohio, at once? Give the delegates credentials to be presented to the credential committee. Everyone is invited to meet with us, and we would like all who can do so to fast the morning meal on October 7, Sunday. Come in the spirit of devotion and God will bless you. Come and meet our new apostle. Dayton Church is located at the corner of Woodward and Howell on the west side of Dayton.—A. E. Anderton, district president.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, semiannual district conference will be held in Fayette City, Pennsylvania, October 13 and 14. Apostle Paul M. Hanson is expected to be present. Business session on Saturday at 7 p. m. Branch presidents and secretaries please send reports to B. L. Cooper, district secretary, 200 1/2 Meadow Avenue, Charleroi, Pennsylvania.—E. B. Hull, district president.

District one-day meetings will include the following: Marlette, September 16, Crosswell, September 30; Owendale, October 7, and Sandusky, October 21, the young people's rally.—William M. Grice, Crosswell, Michigan, district president; Herbert C. Swoffer, Crosswell, district secretary.

■ Helping the Pastor

A good sister arose in a testimony meeting following the testimony of the pastor to the effect that he came to prayer service to obtain strength from the testimonies and prayers of his congregation. "I am made to realize" she said "that we sit week after week and drink in from the strength and resources of our pastor and I'm wondering how many of us really make any definite effort to help him to get some encouragement and strength in return. I fear that many times we don't even bother to pray for him to say nothing of helping in other ways," she continued and then closed her testimony with these words, "With the help of God I'm going to try to give back to my pastor as fully as I can some of the strength and encouragement which I receive from him."

■ Spiritual Aspirins

Every city street is full of people who are spiritually unborn, ill, or dying. Many of these are counted in the ranks of the church, people whose spirituality is at a low ebb, whose private lives do not come up to the standards of Christian living.

In the confusion of a machine and commercial age, we think too seldom of spiritual things. For these things we substitute the acquiring of property, politics, ceaseless social activities, pleasures. We take a "vacation" from the church. We stop paying our tithing. We forget the earnest words Paul wrote to the Roman Saints: "They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit." Day by day, week by week, we stifle the thing in our souls that would reach up and claim kinship with God; we are gorging ourselves with spiritual aspirins.

As if to make amends for our spiritual starkness, we go to church empty-hearted, empty-handed. We partake of the sacrament—how often unworthily! We rise to our feet and speak when our lives do not accord with our words. We throw ourselves into activities, trying to forget our own shortcomings and uncertainties. In all things we seek to palliate our lives. More spiritual aspirins. We are deadening the ache in our hearts and the knowledge in our souls that all is not well; we are falling short of the high calling in Christ Jesus.

■ Pigeon Says—

"No hatred ever made anybody a better Christian. Even he who spends too much time hating sin is faced in the wrong direction, for he will soon be hating sinners, which is no part of the Christian duty."

It is part of an all-wise, all-loving Father's plan for us that we all have equal opportunity to know and do his will. But how many times, to our faulty, shortsighted vision, our own will and our own way seem far superior to his. So we choose to please ourselves instead of him.—Lora E. Clement, in The Youth's Instructor.

Cynicism is sentiment turned sour and trying to counteract its own bitterness with a little humor.—Literary Digest.

The 1934 Harvest Festival

October 2 to 7 Inclusive

Despite the great drouth which reduced the volume of agricultural products in the country, the Harvest Home Festival is to be held as usual. The dates this year are October 2 to 7, inclusive.

An announcement comes to us from the First Presidency that T. A. Beck is to be in charge of all arrangements for the festival. All shipments should be consigned to him at the Auditorium. Questions, announcements and requests for space should be addressed to him. It is particularly emphasized that all shipments should be sent prepaid no matter by what means of transportation they may come. If the shipments are to be used for a particular club, group, or exhibit, the fact should be plainly stated on the package close to the address.

Because the time is short, speed is necessary. Branches and individuals who are sending in materials for the festival should get in action immediately.

Brother Beck informs us that in spite of the drouth all of the usual amount of space for exhibits has been reserved.

In addition to the usual Harvest Home Festival there is to be a Stake Hobby Show. The stakes near Independence are invited to participate in this for the reason that exhibitors can make provision for the return shipment of their exhibits. Items which are wanted for the Stake Hobby Show will be lent, but generally not contributed for charitable purposes. The following things are wanted: hand manufactures, products of arts and crafts, wood carving, lace, pictures, coin collections, stamp collections, or anything else in the way of a hobby from which an exhibit can be made.

A second new feature of the festival will be a special exhibit for Independence industries. This exhibit will be open to all articles manufactured on a commercial scale in Independence.

Exhibitors are very earnestly requested to observe the following rules:

What to Do:

1. Be sure that shipments are well packed.
2. Prepay the freight or express.
3. Print name and address plainly.
4. Have shipment reach Independence not later than Saturday, September 29.

Don'ts;

1. Don't box fancy work with jelly, fruit, perishables, or glass. In case of damage, the fancy work is ruined.
2. Don't send perishable food stuff unless they are in a condition to keep until the festival is over.

Observance of these rules will very greatly assist Brother Beck and his helpers to carry on the heavy work involved in the Festival. We are glad that the Festival will continue this year in spite of adverse conditions.

Blue Pencil Notes

DEACON GOODENTART says: "When Solomon was young he accumulated wisdom—later he switched to wives."

A poet in the Brunswick Pilot writes:

"I sometimes think that I shall never see
A grafter who is working on a tree."

HERR HITLER has assumed the role of prophet in addition to his other duties. He says "there will not be another revolution in Germany in a thousand years." That is a long range forecast and if a revolution should come in nine hundred years Hitler would be beyond the reach of embarrassment; the situation will be different if one comes nine hundred and ninety-eight years sooner than he expects.

A FRIEND of mine by the name of Ronald G. Smith hands me a newspaper clipping with the comment, "Now abideth faith, hokum, and charity." The clipping in question reports a "charity" ball given by the Atlantic Beach Club the proceeds of which were to be divided between four designated charities, one of which was St. Joseph's hospital at Far Rockaway, New York. The expenses of the ball were $1,866.20; leaving a profit of $20.88 to be divided among the four charities. In round numbers one thousand, eight hundred dollars went for food and drink and fun for the club members (a stuffed club) and twenty dollars for charity; or twenty dollars for charity and one thousand eight hundred dollars "hokum." At that, St. Joseph's hospital refused to take their share of the donation because at the ball Joan of Arc (a Catholic saint) was represented by a girl in a very brief bathing suit; a bit unreasonable we should say—for had the club bought her a full length costume there might have been a deficit instead of a profit of twenty dollars and eighty-eight cents on the investment of close to two thousand dollars for sweet charity.

CHRIST said that as a sign of his coming there should be on earth "distress of nations with perplexity." What a significant phrase as viewed in the light of current events. Dr. Dan C. Brummilt, editor of the Central Christian Advocate, who has recently returned from Great Britain writes: "Europe today could afford to offer any conceivable prize for a man whose brain was equal to this hour. But there is no sign of his coming."

"Memoirs" of the Late President Joseph Smith to Be Published in the Herald Beginning November 6

Herald readers have a treat in store for them in the publication of the Memoirs of the late President Joseph Smith. We are making a special memorial issue of the Herald of November 6, which is the anniversary of his birth 102 years ago, and falls on Tuesday, the day of the week he was born.

In order that subscriptions may reach us in time, we are endeavoring to have all new subscriptions come in during HERALD SUBSCRIPTION WEEK, October 14-21. Orders sent during this week, or on the Monday following Sunday the twenty-first, will reach us in time to insure a copy for everyone. We cannot promise that orders coming in later will receive the first issue, although remaining copies will be distributed as far as they will go.

This is a great event in the publication history of the church. It should be advertised to every member. Every family should receive a copy of the Herald, at least during the time that the Memoirs are being published.

The Memoirs, rather voluminous in their original form, have been edited and condensed by Audentia Anderson, the daughter of the late president.

Fancywork and Needlework Wanted for Harvest Festival

Donations of fancywork and needlework are requested for the Harvest Festival, also dish towels, aprons, pillow slips, quilts and other similar materials. These are to be sold and the proceeds will go to the Harvest Festival fund. All persons who are interested in this kind of work will probably have a number of pieces that they can give for this charitable purpose.

All packages should be addressed to T. A. Beck, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. All express or freight charges should be prepaid.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

A LETTER recently came to hand from a pastor who had made efforts to improve the character of the sacrament service. He experienced some trouble and opposition from some who felt that the order of meetings should not be changed without the sanction of the membership. In some places this idea seems to have obtained, but it can obtain only when we have lost sight of the fact that this church is based on an authoritative priesthood, and the instructions which come from Divinity are that the meetings shall be conducted according to the direction of the Spirit working with those of the priesthood who are in charge; so that when in the wisdom of the members of the priesthood the order of meetings has been changed, people should remember that this is their right and prerogative. Unless the rights of the people are infringed it is well for the order, as suggested by those in authority, to be tried out.

THERE was recently held in Honolulu the first young people's convention of the Hawaiian Mission. It was held on August 17 to 19. At the business meeting an organization of the young people of the Hawaiian Mission was effected by the election of a full corps of officers and they seem to be carrying on with some degree of zeal and determination. In a letter dated the 23rd of August, Jacob J. Kilfer, who signs himself as president of the young people's league of the district of Hawaii, among other things says, "Other officers of this new organization are: Brother R. L. Macrae, young people's supervisor; Sister Lilly Yap, vice president (Chinese Branch); Brother Keizo Tsuji, secretary (Hilo Branch); Brother Yoshio Matsumoto, treasurer (Japanese Branch)."

The readers of the Herald will discern from this extract from Brother Kilfer's letter that the officers of the organization are American, German, Chinese and Japanese, which indicates a district cosmopolitan character.

In regard to this variety of races represented by the officers, Brother Kilfer says: "In spite of these racial differences there is harmony, as we all realize that our gospel is cosmopolitan in every aspect, and we endeavor to make the rest of humanity see it in the same light or nearly so."

We shall watch the development of this Hawaiian league of young people with keen interest and wish them every success.

Thoughts for Today

Lies That Turn the Wheels of War

The great World War had not been closed by the Armistice very long before Americans began to suspect that some of the barbarities of which the German armies were accused were unfounded in fact, and it became apparent that they had been hoodwinked in order to enlist their national sympathy, men, and money in favor of "bleeding" Belgium and France. Our utmost hatred was stirred up against the armies and citizens of Germany, and was also extended towards peaceful citizens of German ancestry who lived in our own country.

One of the most revolting and terrible charges was that of the mutilation of women and children. These atrocity stories, of course, were encouraged by the propaganda bureaus of every nation in order to arouse the people to fighting fury. We were fed on lies by the governments with which we were associated in fighting Germany, and it is quite possible that we were also deceived, sometimes unintentionally, by some of our own men.

The hatred built up by the lies told by the propaganda bureaus will be generations dying out. Those hatreds prevent a peace from being established in Europe today. The people are still poisoned by those deceptions. We are reprinting below a passage from a book by the celebrated Peter Ainslie, indicating the origin of one of those atrocity stories and revealing how false it was.

It was reported at the outbreak of the World War that the Germans had cut off the hands of little children in Belgium. Many cases were described in detail. Pictures of actual cases were shown. Indignation like a fire swept around the world. On the basis of a personal letter from one of the most distinguished knighted Englishmen—a man of pronounced Christian integrity—I made an address in my city, reading the letter and commenting on the case cited by my English friend. One of the most outstanding preachers in New York—a man of prestige and of rare eloquence—made a tour of the country, making addresses on this lie and others like it, and stirred the nation to the deepest resentment. I was in Europe in 1919, the year after the war, and purposely made a trip to Belgium to see some of the handless children, for by that time I was becoming skeptical of this phase of war propaganda. When I went to the office in Brussels from which this propaganda had been sent, I was laughed at because of my inquiry, and a leading churchman said:

"There was never a child's hand cut off by the Germans so far as we know, but we had to do some manufacturing in order to get the sympathy of the world, and we got it."

When I asked a well-known reporter of one of the leading daily papers of my city how much of war news was regarded in his office as dependable, he said:

"About one-tenth or less."

After careful research into this subject, I have come to the conclusion that any statement that comes from the war department of any country in time of war regarding the enemy should never be taken on its face value. Perhaps there may be a fragment of truth in it, but it is safe to say that it is largely falsehood, if not entirely so. It is not difficult to turn men, inflamed by false propaganda, into beasts.—Peter Ainslie in Some Experiments in Living.

The people of America ought to determine now in the time of peace that they will never again in any future time of war be misled by stories of atrocity designed to create hate, that they will never again believe them or be influenced by them. When we see what a terrible cycle war creates we are appalled. Hatred is built upon lies, murder is built upon hate and the whole thing breaks out into the unquenchable flames of war and disaster until nothing short of a holocaust of destruction of property and life will make us pause and come to our senses.

The pollution of the stream of news with malicious and harmful statements, possibly manufactured in contradiction of the real facts, to mislead and betray the readers of the newspapers, is one of the greatest sins that can be committed by a modern government. People act on the basis of what they believe to be true. They have a right to know the truth from their own governments and news agencies. If the truth is not good enough as a basis for conducting war, then it is an unholy war, and ought not to be carried on at all. A cause—even the cause of "bleeding Belgium"—which must present its case to the world with lies, is not worthy of support.

There are inaccuracies enough in a country that preserves the freedom of the press, but the mischief done in the countries of the dictators where censorship is the rule is incalculable. The last refuge of liberty is a free and unafraid press, and we must never relinquish it for any party or any government.

Don't worry about other people's salvation. It may be they are nearer saved than you are. No man can be "worried" into accepting anything, even though you may deem it the only Truth. I have known men whom others regarded as agnostics who had given more study to the question of personal religion than any ten of their critics.—George Wharton James in Quit Your Worrying!

Every right action and true thought sets the seal of its beauty on person and face.—Ruskin.

Ideas, Discussion and News for the Young People of the Church

A. V. CARRIKER

Parents Have Rights!

Emerging into manhood and womanhood, young people often experience a "strain on the family tie" that leads to some dissatisfaction and even temporary unhappiness. The young people want to be free; they don't like to take orders. Older people still regard them as children and wish to continue controlling them.

Young people sometimes make the mistake of talking about these matters outside the home, and criticizing their parents before other persons. This is a mistake for several reasons. It sometimes causes other people to interfere and increase the friction between parents and children. There are people in the world who, because they like to have young people around them, will try to break down the loyalty to parents which seems to stand in the way of attaining their desire.

Further, young people may misrepresent their parents, without intending to do so, and so hurt the reputation of the whole family. This will eventually react against the young people themselves.

Leaders of young people should be careful not to encourage tattling among their young charges. They should not interpose in family difficulties in a way to weaken the bonds of family life. They are very rarely in a position to take care of the young people they may cut adrift from their homes.

Parents, as one writer said, "are people." They have rights that must be respected. They have a right to know that, when outside parties are in charge of their young people, the young people are not telling disparaging stories about them, and that leaders are not encouraging the practice.

A. V. Carriker

Brother A. V. Carriker, of Borger, Texas, was ordained to the office of priest at the Colorado Springs reunion. He is also group solicitor for the church at Borger, Texas. Brother Carriker has been a member of the church eight years and has been instrumental in helping a number to accept the gospel. His reputation for work and dependability has given him a high standing among those who know him. In secular work he has been connected with the Western Carbon Company for a number of years.

Recompense

All that I say returns
The bitter word or sweet;
Days, weeks, or years may intervene,
But soon or late
The spoken word and speaker meet.

All that we do returns:
The deed that's true, or base
We may forget, but all unseen
And parallel
The doer and the deed keep pace.
—John Richard Moreland.

The Three F's of Entertainment

There are three helpers that can always be counted on to contribute a measure of success to young people's gatherings: food, fun, and friendship.

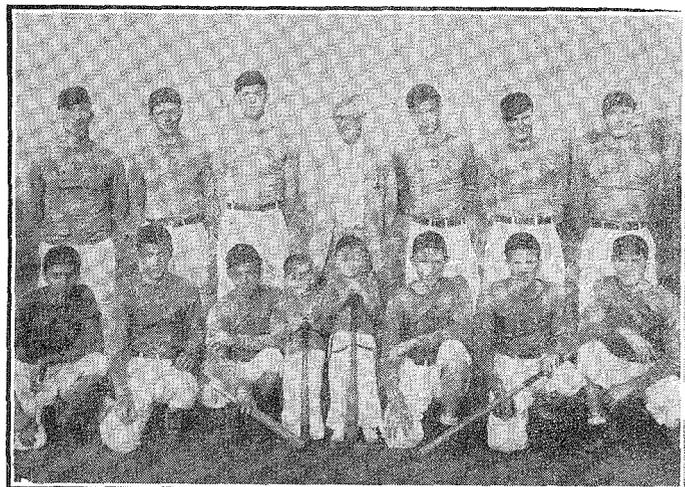

At an outdoor gathering you'll generally want something warm and refreshing to eat and drink. Your hike, motor trip, or other outing will be long remembered if you have something to satisfy the hearty appetites that one gets in the open air.

While it is true that no gathering of young people should devote all its time to aimless and useless activity, one should see that there is a liberal measure of fun at the meetings. Dramatics, especially good comedies, lively songs, stunts and other activities serve to provide the fun and interest that hold a crowd together and bring them back again. You can't keep a crowd of young people together by making them study all the time.

And then, of course there's friendship. Be sure that your crowd doesn't gather into little cliques when a stranger comes, or he will never return. Conversation should include something that he can understand. A real friendly feeling will not leave him out in the cold. Small cliques will kill your group. Every person in your crowd must drop his own preferences temporarily and mingle with the whole group.

The "Smallpox" of Local Priesthood

Indifference—Neglect—Drifting

By President F. M. McDowell

THE church has launched an intensive program in the interest of its priesthood. The objectives of this program have been expressed as "A Priesthood spiritually alert, divinely endowed, efficiently trained, at work in all diligence."

If we are to judge from the word of God as received through prophecy at various reunions and district gatherings; from the continued urging of responsible general church officers; from the reaction of an overwhelming majority of the members of the priesthood with whom we have personally conversed, and from our personal observation from coast to coast in the United States and various points in Canada, we may conclude that this is the most necessary and timely effort the church could possibly undertake. In this repeated assurance, both divine and human, we find encouragement. We are convinced that we shall never have a Godly government until we have Godly men and that we shall never have Godly men until men are transformed by the impact upon their lives of other lives in whom the word has become flesh. A Godly priesthood is imperative, and as a matter of fact when priesthood ceases to be Godly it ceases to be priesthood. If the powers of Godliness are not manifest there is no priesthood. Our problem therefore becomes one of making sure that priesthood "so-called" becomes priesthood "in fact."

The first issue of the Priesthood Journal outlines some of the steps which the church proposes to take in carrying out this program for priesthood. Basic to all of these objectives and methods, however, is the one which states, "Men of the ministry must be awakened to a consciousness of the serious and divine import of the position which they profess to occupy as ordained men of God."

Some treatment must be found for the "Smallpox" of priesthood, that dread disease which finds its manifestation in indifference, carelessness, neglect, inactivity, drifting, a disease which is so dangerous because it is so subtle. Its attack and deadly work may be accomplished without the patient being aware of its presence.

The Priesthood Journal outlines a method of attack on this disease. Because this problem is of such vital interest to the church members as well as the ministry we present below a reprint from the Journal dealing with this problem:

AN APPROACH TO THE PROBLEM

A branch president recently classified his priesthood as follows:

"Over one third, or about thirty-five percent of the able-bodied men of the priesthood are doing little or nothing toward the discharging of the responsibilities of their offices.

"One third, or about thirty percent, are in some respects functioning along the lines of their duties.

"Over one third, or about thirty-five percent, are doing all that anyone could reasonably expect under the circumstances."

On the desk as I write is a letter from a district president. He says:

"Our last report shows approximately twenty-five men on the inactive list. Will try to learn what the attitude of these men is toward the varied offices they hold. We expect to offer each man the alternative of working or voluntarily surrendering his rights. This problem of getting the men to take more than a passing interest in the work of their office is one that has caused me many anxious moments and sleepless hours."

Those familiar with the situation know that the deadly enemies of the priesthood are indifference, carelessness, neglect, inactivity, drifting. Here is represented the "smallpox" of our local ministry. Would that we knew how to vaccinate against the disease.

The problem is fundamental. It underlies practically all other problems which have to do with an effective ministry. Undoubtedly no one approach to the problem can hope to be successful. The plan presented in this issue represents an attempt to attack this problem upon several fronts at once.

FUNDAMENTAL CAUSES

Some of the fundamental causes for indifference and inactivity among the priesthood may be given as follows:

Lack of any real conversion.

Lack of knowledge and convictions about God, Christ, the church and its purposes, etc.

Lack of definite instruction as to the work of the priesthood.

Lack of sympathetic guidance.

Lack of definite organization and administration.

Lack of definitely assigned tasks.

Many causes require many remedies. Some of these remedies are suggested elsewhere in the program outlined in these pages. The suggestions offered are based upon varied experiences and a relatively wide observation. They are presented merely as an approach to the problem. Most certainly it is not the only approach.

THE PERSONAL APPROACH

At heart the problem of the indifferent minister is a personal one. This would suggest at once the value of a personal approach. During the past several months the writer has had opportunity to visit a wide variety of branches, districts, and stakes, giving special attention to the work of the priesthood. The method used may be characterized for the most part as a personal approach to the problem. Wherever possible this method involved five phases:

1. A personal efficiency report on each individual man of the priesthood by responsible branch or district officers.
2. Inspirational appeals to small groups of priesthood.
3. A personal interview with each man of the priesthood.
4. A prayer and testimony service.
5. Ordination and dedication services.

Since the problem of indifference and inactivity is primarily a personal problem the personal interview constitutes the heart of this method. Since the men of the ministry are perhaps average, normal human beings subject to the same problems, discouragements, and vicissitudes in life, with a need for God and souls to be saved as other men, here is really in the last analysis a work of personal evangelism. Here is required therefore:

The zeal of the evangelist.

The love of man and devotion to God and his kingdom, such as should characterize a true follower of Christ.

The tact, wisdom, and zeal of the expert salesman.

The kindness, sympathy, and appreciation of a father and brother.

Needless to say then the approach to the individual member of the priesthood should be kindly, sympathetic, understanding, appreciative. Consultations should be characterized as earnest, frank, affirmative. Petty quibbling or fruitless argument should be avoided. The individuality and personality of the man should be respected. His is a soul to be lifted up; here is a child of God to be saved, a minister for Christ to be stirred to the magnitude of his opportunity and task.

A PERSONAL APPEAL

Central to the various aspects of this approach is a personal appeal. Through it the minister is led to see himself as an element in the background of a picture. Because of his voluntarily assumed priesthood, he occupies a very significant place in that picture. In that picture also are many other significant elements. There is God, the kind of a God that Christ revealed to us. There is the Christ who died upon the cross. There is man, a child of God, a brother of his fellow men. There is a clearly revealed purpose of God in the salvation of all men. There is love, a great uplifting and redemptive power. There is the divine commission, "Go ye and teach." Having of his own volition received ordination as an ambassador for God, the minister stands in a position unique among men. The import of this position, its opportunities, obligations, and responsibilities are not limited by anyone's attempt to define or explain them. They are inherent in the nature and purpose of God and in the nature and needs of man. They should not be lightly assumed. They cannot in honor be neglected.

Here is an appeal that should stir the soul of any ordained man. Presented under the influence of the Spirit of God it will move men. The writer knows that hundreds of men with whom he has talked will so testify. Space will permit but the briefest suggestion in each case.

An appeal based upon the significance of the Restoration Movement:

To believe in the Restoration Movement is to see running through all the ages of time one on-going and unfinished purpose. To believe in the Restoration Movement is to see ourselves as factors in this great drama, this story of the ages. By such belief we profess to be playing parts similar to God, Christ, the prophets and martyrs. Into our hands he has committed the task of writing a chapter in his unfinished story. Should this not stir a professed servant of God?

An appeal based upon the meaning of priesthood:

"What we mean by the power of the priesthood, therefore, is this quality of character in which the one who truly possesses it, because of his consecrated life, draws near the Divine Presence himself and then becomes the leader of the people on the Highway of Holiness, marching always in the van, until the people who shall follow him, his teachings and examples, are made the citizens of that Kingdom over which God rules, and whose legislation is righteous and just, whose great ideal is truth. Surely we can appreciate Carlyle's wonderful statement, 'Higher task than that of priesthood hath God given to no man,' and 'as a priest is the noblest and highest of all men, so is a sham priest the falsest and basest.'" (From an editorial in Unity, January, 1915.)

An appeal based on the covenant of priesthood:

The man who accepts ordination to the priesthood makes a covenant with God, the Eternal Father, to magnify his calling as a servant of God. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 6.)

To the man who fulfills this covenant is given an amazing promise, "All that God has shall be yours."

For those who break this covenant and altogether turn aside from their responsibilities there is no forgiveness either in this world or in the world to come.

The appeal of the need of the church:

The divinely organized and established church of God today faces the greatest opportunity of its existence. To meet such a need there is under general church appointment but a mere handful of men, only a fraction of the number annually appointed ten years ago. A large proportion of the total load of the church rests upon the shoulders of the local ministry. Certainly if the church is to go forward it must do so because of the sacrifice and devotion of the local priesthood. "Rise up, O men of God. The church for you doth wait."

The appeal of the Saints for spiritual ministry:

Next to the love of God, the love of man should stir any professed minister to activity. Christ knew and loved persons when he earnestly pleaded with them to "feed my sheep." Throughout the church the Saints are today crying out for the spiritual ministry of the priesthood. They need encouragement, inspiration, instruction, leadership, Godly example. It was basically this appeal that led Christ to give his life.

The appeal of youth for leadership:

Throughout the church there is a rising army of young people. Never before has the church so needed its youth. Never before has youth so needed the church. Never before has the appeal of the world been so attractive, so clever, so continuous, and unrelenting as now. The youth of the church must have an intelligent understanding, a sympathetic, attractive leadership, and must receive this from the priesthood of the church. The church of tomorrow demands it.

The appeal of the conditions of the world:

With revolutions on every hand—political, economic, social; with the wisest of statesmen concerned, groping, uncertain; at a time when the hearts of strong men fail them for fear; when the cry of humanity is for light, is this not the day for ambassadors for God to come into their own?

The appeal of the unfinished work of the kingdom:

The purpose and love of God, the incomparable sacrifice of Christ, the devotion of the martyr, the faith of our fathers—do these not point to the final establishment of the kingdom of God. Is this love, purpose, devotion, sacrifice to be in vain? Does not the kingdom of God await the ministry of the professed servants?

The appeal of the best interests of one's own manhood:

We asked a busy, hard-working man of affairs how he could afford to give so much time to the church, for he was both branch president and district president. He replied: "The church has been the making of me, for the development I have received from church service has made it possible for me to be recognized and promoted in my business."

The remarkable development of this young man during recent years stands as an eloquent testimony of the truth of this statement. Nothing that a man can do will so contribute to the development and enrichment of his life and personality as the magnifying (Continued on page 1196.)

Stewardship and the Budget

By L. S. Wight

AN ARTIST has the ability to reproduce a beautiful sunset or a flower because he knows his colors. He knows how to select them and how to put them together. He can rebuild on canvas what he has seen in the sky or in the flower garden. The successful business man knows how to measure the amount of work done or energy expended by himself or his employees in terms of costs. He can use his bookkeeper's figures to make the record of each business move. The successful artist knows his colors, the successful business man knows his figures. The temperaments of each may be so different that in no other way are they alike but in this respect they are very much alike. One is rebuilding the picture of nature's production, the other is building a picture of business activity. Since neither the artist nor the business man can succeed in his own field without knowing how to do these things it has always been a puzzle to me why so many individuals expect to succeed in life without applying the same principle, each in his own personal work. Yet there are many people who haven't the slightest idea of what they have done after doing it. They do not know how to be real artists of life by using little bookkeeping figures, each in its proper place to paint a picture of their own activity.

Like many other men today I am saying that the next depression will not catch me unprepared, that I will do this and I will not do that. But what excuse have I for not having more carefully used the principles of budgetary control before the emergency? Like many individuals as well as the church as a whole, I permitted my ambition to get the best of my judgment and planned too large a part of my program on anticipated income. When the income dropped, the inevitable result was a breakdown of plans and a loss. This could have been prevented by more conservative and careful planning or budgeting. I have recently drawn a figure picture of several years' personal activity, possible because I had available a lot of little bookkeeping figures set down as moves were made during those years. Those figures record a story of income and outgo as definitely as if that story were written in words, or painted on canvas. They make up a picture of past activity which is a guide to my future plans. They show very clearly what happened when I permitted my judgment to give way to zeal or ambition. They give me a basis on which to make my decisions in future moves. With such a guide I will have a chance to keep my promise to myself. The important thing is that this picture clearly shows the use or misuse of money or created energy over a given period of time. And because I have done this myself I want to emphasize again that every Latter Day Saint can, if he wishes, develop some kind of plan which will picture to himself the use of his time and energy.

MANY PLANS have been suggested for family budgeting, and many people have given up in despair. Some of these plans are so complicated that no one but a highly trained accountant can understand them. Putting into practice the principle of controlling time and energy presents some difficult problems, but it can be done. No matter what standard of living any family is accustomed to, there is some way for that family to keep a yardstick to measure their activities.

With few exceptions the early members of the church dug their own living from the soil. Tools with which to work were scarce. It took a great deal of creative ability and ingenuity to build livable homes. This work was done with very little interchange of money, that is, compared with the way we do business today. The leaders of the church set the example by finding a way even in those conditions to balance their work. Otherwise they would not have had any time to give to developing the new church. They found ways and means to do both temporal and church work. We must find ways and means to do the same thing.

It may be well to consider the conditions surrounding some of the situations in which our problem solutions must be found. Today we have many kinds of family life among members of the church. Some people think that budgeting does not apply to them, but may be all right for others. I have heard some say they would be willing to try it when "better off." But they cannot improve their situation without some kind of control. This principle of control of time and energy can be put into practice in the humblest home as well as in the mansion. Let us not forget the point we are considering here, for we are considering our present situation. If it needs changing in order to attain the ideal condition, we must determine how and where to make the changes. Let's not worry about what we will have after getting to Zion, until we are actually on the way out of our present situation. Facing the situation as it is now we must recognize that we have all types of people and homes. The farmer creates and uses a large part of his living supplies without much interchange with his neighbor. The laborer may at times be dependent on odd jobs to make the money with which to buy his needs, and of course there is a fluctuation in the income which comes to his home. The "white collar" man, who may be working for either private industry or the government, has a fixed income. The salesman who in nearly every case today is working on a commission basis, receives a fluctuating income. The industrialist or owner of business whether small or large in normal times can figure on a somewhat regular income but lately has had more loss than gain. These are some of the various situations we must consider. We must also recognize various types of individuals. Any suggested plan to control the spending of time or money must stick to fundamentals. It must also be flexible enough to allow for differences in individuals.

To make the general assertion that a thing can be done is vastly different from working out a simple, sensible method of doing it. If I cannot suggest a way which will be in accord with divine plans, practical in its application and yet simple enough to be easily understood, I will merely prove that I have no foundation for the assertion. In presenting the following suggested details as to how this goal can be reached I wish the reader would keep in mind the above basic restrictions.

Besides qualifying under these conditions any plan must also recognize individual agency as a basic principle. Under no circumstances should we set up a standard of any kind which will interfere with the right of every individual to make his own choices on things affecting his own life. This should apply to husband and wife, and to each child in a family. The family unit as expressed in successful homes is and must continue to be the very cornerstone of Zion. The easiest and surest way to make the family a strong unit, bound by powerful ties of love and mutual respect, is to recognize fully the individual rights of each member. This applies to the children even when small. I am firmly convinced that there would be fewer broken homes if every newly wed couple would make this principle a vital part of their relationship with each other, and later with their children. A full recognition of it will save endless misunderstandings and make it possible for them to continue their relationship on an ever increasing basis of mutual understanding. Neither should try in any way to control the personal rights of the other. Such an attitude can only result in misunderstanding. Lack of definite planning also contributes to much misunderstanding. If we substitute specific plans for guess work and uncertainties, we automatically remove the basis for most misunderstanding. Budgeting money, time, and energy is the only way in which we can do this successfully.

A MAN'S FIRST RESPONSIBILITY is his temporal stewardship; in other words, the feeding of his family. He should know the cost in time and energy to provide the family necessities. He should know what his job or business will produce. He should know how to divide his salary or profits so as to keep a balance in the things he must buy. In discussing such a problem as this it is hard to do so without bringing out the family skeletons. Let us attack it by setting up an ideal. Then we should find a way to fit our own activity to the ideal. If any one has reached the ideal there should be no argument about whether or not it can be done. The only argument is with one's self to decide whether or not he will do what has been done and therefore can be done again. Suppose we follow the progress of a bride and groom as they start to build a home and as they meet the various situations of family life.

We will assume that the groom has some kind of steady income, that he has saved a little toward the home they want and that his bride has provided her "hope chest." Even though his income may be steady he knows that it is subject to some changes, so he must provide for them. They decide to start out in a rented house until plans for the future may be more definite. The first deductions from the pay envelope must be for food, rent, clothes, and other items classed as necessities. Church obligations, education (which should be a continuous item of expense throughout life), savings or investment, gifts to friends, recreation, etc., should be next. These items should all be anticipated and provided for. If there is not enough to provide all desired, the least essential should be cut off first. But the cutting should be done in such a way that a balanced living condition results. It is not necessary that they be bookkeepers to do it. If they are not able to keep any kind of record, they can allot a certain amount for each purpose as they receive their income, and if necessary they can put these amounts in glass jars or tin cans, each labeled for what the money is to be spent. Then when any jar or can is empty there is no more available for that item until the next supply of revenue is received. Of course if this couple can keep some kind of record they can leave their money in one account. When their figures show that the amount allotted for any item has been spent they will simply desist from any further expense under that heading until fund is replenished. ## Carbon Monoxide Poisoning

By A. W. Teel, M. D.

CARBON MONOXIDE is found in combination with coal gas, illuminating gas, and the exhaust of gasoline motors. All investigators have found that this is a cause of many chronic and obscure diseases. It has become such a great menace that it covers our cities like a blanket and finds its way in homes, factories, and all public buildings. This surcharged air keeps out the sunshine, makes the nights darker and the days gloomy. This trouble started when man built his first fire and now on account of his speed mania and mechanical devices, he has brought about a condition that will probably plague him all his life and shorten it. The canyons made in our city by the building of high buildings and the constantly increasing number of motor cars makes the problem more difficult from a health viewpoint.

Doctor Lewis I. Harris, health commissioner of the city of New York, suggests that while "it may seem costly and visionary," he believes that tunnels for pedestrians and other tunnels for trucks and pleasure cars may have to be built and each tunnel being mechanically ventilated, something like the main trunk lines and laterals of our present city sewer systems. Chemically pure air would have to be forced through these tunnels. Added to this menace, many people are being reported daily by the newspapers of fatal accidents and suicides from the exhaust of automobiles. It is to be hoped some genius will invent some kind of filtering apparatus to be attached to the exhaust of the automobile that will neutralize the fumes of this poison. Medical investigators have traced many cases of eye strain, obscure headache and intestinal trouble, resulting from this source. From history records we find that about 200 B. C., during the Punic War, that carbon monoxide gas was a means of exterminating human lives. It is stated that "the commanders of the allies and Roman citizens were seized and fastened in the public baths for guarding, where the glowing fire took away their breath and they perished in a horrible manner." In crowded rooms such as we have in our cities where there is a lack of ventilation the danger of gas poisoning exists to its greatest extent. More precautionary measures should be taken for the proper ventilation of our homes and factories. The person who sleeps with his window open is preserving his health by combating this danger. Often I look with pity at the traffic policeman who is compelled to stand in a busy intersection in some of our large cities, as some of these places are virtually blanketed in such a way as to hold down these gases.

At the time of the Armistice, Brooklyn contained 212 tons of carbon to the square mile; Manhattan contained 371 tons. In some of our large cities the streets and sidewalks are almost continuously wet on account of the high buildings creating city canyons that shut out the sunshine, preventing the natural earth vapors from escaping by evaporation. If this condition keeps up it will seriously interfere with the parks and play grounds. I might say a great deal more concerning this menace, but on account of fearing my article is already too long, I will say in conclusion, that never allow your motor to run any length of time with the garage door closed as it will overcome anyone who comes in contact with it and may lead to sudden death. Always see to it that the windows and doors are open, regardless of the weather. If it is too cold for so much ventilation, an extension hose may be attached to the exhaust pipe sufficiently long enough to conduct the fumes out of doors. If all car owners would take the necessary precautions, fatalities could be reduced. The timely warning given out by the Department of Public Vehicles is commendable. When anyone is found overcome with this gas, the city fire department should be summoned without delay as they are usually supplied with the necessary apparatus for resuscitation of such cases, commanded by men who are familiar with their use.

An apparatus of this kind is extremely dangerous in the hands of excited and inexperienced operators. For the inexperienced person the Schaffer method of resuscitating is the best, which imitates the normal physiology of respiration; it consists of alternately compressing the chest for expiration and releasing it for inspiration, which every one should be familiar with. Administration of drugs is another method of resuscitation, but should be used only by a physician.

Study religion, consider it, accept it, follow it, earnestly, seriously, and constantly, but do it in a rational manner, seeking the essentials, accepting them and then resting in them to the full and utter exclusion of all worry.—George Wharton James in Quit Your Worrying!

Junior Stewardship Club

By Fern Weedmark

FERN WEEDMARK

MUCH has been said in recent months about junior stewardship. It is becoming a regular part of the program of the church in many branches. As an educational project for young people of the church from eight years up it has no equal. But its plan must be carefully laid and followed up persistently if the young people are to enjoy the experience and build its ideals into their natures. Much, very much, depends upon the initiative, the vision, and the spirit of the sponsor and the cooperaton of the parents.

Best results are being obtained where the juniors are encouraged to form a club and to enter into group activities of a stewardship nature. While some time will be taken at each stewardship meeting in which to check over the children's budget books, there will always be time for other worthwhile activities. At these informal meetings leaders will have the long-wished-for opportunity of directing the children's interests and efforts in worthwhile projects that cannot possibly be accomplished during the short lesson period on Sunday morning. This will afford a splendid time for the boys and girls to put into actual practice the lessons of the church school hour. Just how far reaching or life centered the values received from such group activities may be, will depend upon the preparation, faithfulness, and leadership of the sponsor and helpers. The hearty cooperation of the parents is also essential.

We should be interested to know about the activities of the stewardship clubs now active. We are sure that you will find joy in sharing your ideas and plans with junior stewards who are just organizing. Address reports to the Department of Religious Education, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

On request from the above office, mimeographed copies of many helpful suggestions will be sent to sponsors of junior stewardship. A stamp will cover postage. These are gathered from various sources and may be adapted to local needs and conditions. The following are now ready:

1. "Junior Stewards of the Bible." A plan for the use of splendid stories illustrating the stewardship principle. The book by Wallace costs 75 cents. Order from the Herald Publishing House.
2. The "Valmar Stories." As a steward "Valmar" takes a most interesting journey as he searches for the beautiful city, "Zion." The plan includes much free expression. The book, "Building a Christian Character," by Carrier and Clowes, costs two dollars. Order from the Herald Publishing House.
3. Stewardship posters. A unique plan for the making of posters in groups, illustrating stewardship.
4. A year book. A plan for a loose-leaf book to be made, one sheet at each meeting of the Stewardship Club. This may take the form of a personal record of activities, gems, items of interest, snapshots, etc.
5. Dramatization. Stewardship themes dramatized with scenes from the Bible, Book of Mormon, Church History, and character-trait stories.
6. Service projects. Scrap books, joke books, seasonal posters, and party plans.
7. Junior stewardship songs and slogans. A fine list of songs and slogans are now on hand, sent in by various junior groups. We will be glad to send these for your use. Each club should be working up its own materials to add to the list.

Religion should be a joyous thing, the bringing of the son and daughter into closer relationship with the Father. Instead, for centuries, it has been a battle for creeds, for mental assent to certain doctrines, rather than a growth in brotherhood and loving relationship, and those who could not see eye to eye with another deemed it to be their duty to fight and worry each other—even to their death.—George Wharton James in Quit Your Worrying!

Most people are like some pictures. You have to look at them long and steadily, shifting your angle, your vision and giving both them and yourself a chance before you weigh the beauty that is there, and then you wonder why you did not see it at once. That is how Jesus looked at people.—J. Stuart Holden in Church Management.

A Shadowed Threshold, Dark With Fears

AFTER Dan had gone out to telephone the doctor, Louisa stood panic-stricken beside her little daughter. The child was quiet now, but her eyes looked strange—she did not recognize her mother. Her facial muscles twitched convulsively.

"I must get hold of myself—I must think." What was it her books in nursing had said about spasms? A child often had them when for some reason he had not been properly nourished. The condition was very frightening to the mother, but the child usually recovered. She forced herself to be calm. She would give Dorothy Jane an enema, a wet sheet pack, put a cold cloth on her forehead. That's what the books said to do. The little girl went to sleep in the pack, but her breathing was abnormal, and her face was now absolutely colorless. There was nothing else Louisa could do. She must wait for the doctor.

Dan burst in at the door breathless. "I couldn't get Doctor Gray," he said, "so I went to a drug store and they recommended another doctor. He'll be here in a few minutes."

"Oh, I wish you could have got Doctor Gray," Louisa cried. "He knows all about her condition—he'd be able to tell us more."

"I did my best. I thought you'd want someone right away."

"That's right. Yes. That is best."

Somewhere down the street a car back-fired noisily. A bit farther off and coming nearer shrilled the siren whistle of a fire engine. Dorothy Jane started up wildly.

"Wha's 'at Noi'?"

"Only the fire engine, darling. You know—the fire engine. You've seen them lots of times. Pretty fire engines."

Dan placed his hand gently on the little one's head.

"Daddy is right here, Dorothy. Daddy will take care of you."

SOMEONE knocked at the door. "That's the doctor," Louisa said, in a relieved tone as she sped to bid him enter. He was a tall man, clean shaven, self-possessed, with an air of success about him; and although his bearing reassured her to a certain extent, she did not like him so well as Doctor Gray.

"Well, well, so we got sick, did we?" He said as he stood looking meditatively at the child. "What have you done to her?" He felt the wet sheet as he ran his hand under the blanket that was tightly wrapped around the little body.

"She—she was having a sort of spasm, so I gave her a warm enema, and hot sheet pack. Then she dropped off to sleep—"

The doctor nodded approvingly. "The best thing you could have done for her. We'd better take her temperature." The blankets and sheet were unwrapped.

"Um." He looked at the thermometer, puzzled, walked nearer the window and scrutinized it again. He looked up at Louisa.

"Have you any idea what this baby's temperature is?"

"Yes. I took it just before we sent for you."

He picked up the little hand and his skilled fingers felt for her pulse. The child roused from her stupor again and stared about wildly. She screamed.

"Oh, daddy! Whas' at noi'?"

She screamed again, a fearful, unearthly scream, and her body bent backward until only head and heels rested on the bed.

Louisa stood as if transfixed then turned supplicating eyes to the doctor.

"Oh, do something for her quickly! Please, please—"

THE DOCTOR pushed her kindly into a chair. "It's you who must remain calm and answer my questions. Your child isn't going to die right away, you know."

"I'll—I'll try."

"That's the stuff. Now tell me—has she had any infected wound—or even a slight scratch that has taken a long time to heal?"

"Not a thing of that sort," answered Louisa, but the doctor was already subjecting the child to a close examination.

"Um." He was silent a minute, then:

"What have you been feeding her?"

Louisa enumerated the items. "I've fed her exactly according to the baby book Doctor Gray gave me."

"Doctor Gray. Um."

"What do you think I should feed her?" asked Louisa, after a short pause.

"Well—nothing but boiled water and a little orange juice or something until she gets better. Then I wouldn't feed her anything but milk and fruit juices for quite a while. I think you've been giving her too many eggs and too much meat, perhaps. You see—"

"But I've done just like the book said."

"Every child is different to some extent. Your little girl is not strong enough to digest such heavy food."

"But Doctor Gray said—"

"Doctor Gray is an old man. I know him. He is a fine man, too, but he hasn't kept abreast of the times, perhaps. If you wish to take his advice, all right—" but you called me and I cannot but give you my candid opinion."

"Don't be angry." After all, perhaps this doctor was right. Dorothy hadn't thrived under the care of Doctor Gray. "The main thing I want now," she continued, "is for her to get well. Please don't spare my feelings—tell me what you think is the matter with her?"

"I don't know. Now—I suppose you will think it peculiar that I admit that I don't know—but I have a habit of telling the truth, which is one reason I am not a more popular physician. We'll have to wait a day or two and see what happens."

"But—but to wait—with her little body in such pain—can't you give her something to ease things, some way?"

The doctor was not unmoved by the pleading face of the little mother who stood beside him. He nodded.

"Yes, I could. I could give her a drug I know of that would quiet these spasms and make it easier for you. But her heart is in such shape, and her body isn't very strong—the drug might—might prove too much for her endurance. Shall I give you the prescription or not?"

"No," said Louisa, miserably, weakly, "of course not." Then, "Do you really think she is in such bad shape, Doctor?"

"As I said before, I don't practice lying. You've got a mighty sick baby there. But I can't say what's wrong. It might be typhoid fever—it might be meningitis. Or it might possibly be from food poisoning of some kind. You can't tell a disease until you observe the symptoms awhile. So many diseases act similarly at the outset, and the symptoms of diseases sometimes vary somewhat with individuals."

THEY ALL stood quietly awhile watching the restless child. She was sleeping now, but tossed about and moaned a great deal.

"Isn't there anything—anything we can do? Oh, it seems I can never live through the night without doing something for her—" Louisa sank into the chair again and it seemed to her that all the sobs and unshed tears of all her past life came tramping to the surface now when she most wanted self-control.

"Now don't take on like that, little woman. We might as well take life philosophically. If the child is going to get well—and there is a chance she will—why she will get well. But if she is going to die, she will die and you or I or anyone else can't help it."

"That's the strangest thing I ever heard a doctor say."

"It is strange, isn't it? Perhaps I'm having my last fling at the noble practice of medicine tonight—perhaps that's why I'm saying such things. For tomorrow I bid my profession adieu. I become a real estate dealer. I have been working up to the point where I could quit for a long time. I have such a fatalistic sort of philosophy that I can't enjoy my work in medicine. You see I feel sort of superfluous, as it were."

"Isn't there a thing we can do for her?"

"Well, if she were my child I'll tell you what I'd do. I'd give her a good dose of castor oil—cleanse the digestive tract thoroughly; I'd continue the boiled water and fruit juice until her present symptoms get decidedly better in a little while I'd take her to a Nature Cure hospital I know of. They combine the systems of healing and have good results."

"What is their address?" Dan breathed excitedly. "I think I could have confidence in them."

"I'll write it down for you. It's up near the Loop—I mean their town offices are there." He wrote something rapidly on a card.

"There you are. And now, good-bye and good luck."

"Perhaps we'd better settle with you now, doctor. If you'll tell me how much we owe you—"

The doctor waved his hand with a grandiose air. "Not one buck, not one iron man, not a penny." He leaned most unprofessionally against a door jam and lighted a cigaret. "I've gotten thrill enough out of my last case—letting some of my disillusionment color my advice—to more than pay for the time I've spent here. So long, now. If you ever want to buy a home in the nice healthy suburban areas look me up." He flipped a card on the table and walked out of the apartment.

"Oh, Dan, what will we do? Can we trust anyone? Can we believe in anyone?"

"I think I'd better go and telephone the doctor at this address he gave me. I just feel maybe they can help us."

"But—how do we know? We never saw this doctor before. Maybe he isn't any good."

"The drug store recommended him. He must have been considered all right. Of course, I'll admit he talked rather funny for a doctor—"

"And these other people may be quacks—"

DAN SHOOK his head. "I've seen their ad in some of the magazines—I think it has been in the Physical Culture magazine too—funny you didn't notice it."

"Let me see the address." She took the paper in trembling fingers. "I believe I do remember that name. Listen. Let me look in the last Physical Culture. Yes, here it is—and a picture of their large sanitarium and it is licensed by the State. It must be all right—at least in its way. Why—why—they're the one's that publish the Nature Cure magazine.

I guess I must be just so crazy with worry I don't know a think when I see it. Well, they won't hurt her anyway—because all of their treatments are mild. And since the doctor said she probably could not stand drugs—"

"All right. I'll go telephone them." At the door he paused. "Louisa—we might call up some—some elders and have her administered to. You know—I've been thinking of it all evening. I was brought up in the church, and while my folks tried to do all they could themselves when anyone of the family became ill, administration was the first thing we thought of."

Louisa lighted the gas under the kettle, and put Danny John's bottle to heat. Dan watched her and waited anxiously for her answer.

"Dan—I just can't have faith in those things. It seems—such an impractical thing. You see, we never even prayed at our house, and I could never depend on prayer as you can. Let's do all we can in a practical way."

Dan sighed as he went out the door, then brightened again. If this school of healing were a sort of combination of the different schools of healing it would be built somewhat along Word of Wisdom principles, the child might recover and it might help to interest Louisa in the Word of Wisdom. He felt that if he could interest her in even one phase of the gospel, he might be able to build up her faith until she believed in every part of it and shared his dreams and ambitions.

He remembered too that this was Wednesday night. He called the branch president of the South Side Branch and asked them to pray for little Dorothy.

"Well, did you get them?" queried Louisa as he entered the apartment again.

"Yes. They usually close their city offices at six o'clock but they have two appointments for this evening for men who are coming from a distance and will be there until late. They said to bring her right down any time. So get her ready and I'll get a taxi."

THE OFFICE they entered was imposingly large, attractively furnished, and immaculately clean. The doctor who took them in charge was a large genial man who seemed to have no fears whatever that the baby would not recover. He placed her on a large table and gave her a gentle massage. Louisa knew something of massage; she had studied about it in her course in nursing. It inspired confidence in her mind. Perhaps this doctor did know something about healing. He seemed particularly interested in the child's spine. What was most encouraging of all, the patient seemed brighter and more normal after the treatment.

"Do you think—think there is anything terribly serious the matter?" asked Louisa, tremulously.

"Well—of course she's in a rather toxic condition, you can tell that. But if you'll follow my directions exactly, I think you needn't worry but what she'll get well."

"I'll do anything!" fervently.

"I'll give you a mild herb laxative of our own manufacture; you might give her another warm enema if she has any more convulsions—but I don't think she will. Get her digestive tract clean by means of this laxative; give her nothing but boiled water and orange juice for two or three days—and don't be afraid that she'll starve to death, for you'll be surprised how much stronger she'll get —"

"And after that? What shall I feed her? She hasn't gained as she should."

"What have you been feeding her? You've been following a baby book I expect?"

Louisa nodded. "Aren't they usually all right? Most babies—"

"Yes. Quite a number of these books are full of good common sense advice about caring for babies, but some babies require individual treatment. Now if this baby were mine, as soon as she recovered sufficiently I would start her drinking diluted fresh raw milk—certified, of course. Then in a few days I would gradually increase the proportion of milk until she is getting whole milk. Then twice a day I would feed her, seeing that she ate slowly, a cereal made of whole wheat with top milk and a little pure honey. Through the day at the regular times you've been giving it, give fruit juices. Once a day give a well-cooked fresh leafy vegetable. Keep her diet simple like this—shun meat and eggs and heavy protein foods. This baby can't digest them properly."

Dan had felt a thrill through his whole being as he had watched this doctor and listened to him.

"Mild herb laxative, whole wheat, fruit, honey—this advice might well have come straight from the Doctrine and Covenants," he was thinking. "Some day the church will have a big place like this where you can go and natural treatment in line with the word of God. The Sanitarium is a wonderful start—but some time we'll have our own medicines, our own school, our own research and experimentation to depend upon also. We can be surer then—"

"How much do we owe you?" he heard himself say.

As the doctor took the money, he said pleasantly. "I'm sure the child will be all right. You may be interested in knowing that we have a store where we sell health foods, including a wonderful stone-ground whole wheat flour, ideal for cereal purposes as well as bread-making. We have other things, too, you might like to look over."

"Thank you," said Dan, and followed Louisa into the vestibule and down the stairs. Once again in the taxi, Louisa lifted her face to Dan. By the glare of the street lights he was surprised to see

Gleanings From European News

By John W. Rushton

RECENTLY Doctor Winnington Ingram, the Anglican Bishop of London, celebrated his jubilee, and was presented with a volume containing two thousand two hundred and five names of those whom he has ordained during that period. The Archbishop of Canterbury, in felicitating Doctor Ingram, said, "He came to the east end preaching the gospel of the love of God, and wherever he went captured the imagination and heart of London."

IN A NEW BIOGRAPHY, Carlyle in Old Age, by David Alec Wilson and D. Wilson MacArthur, some light is thrown upon Carlyle's religious views. In answering a correspondent who wanted his views on "Prayer," Carlyle wrote, "Prayer is, and remains always, a native and deepest impulse of the soul of man. . . . No prayer—no religion; or at least only a dumb and lamed one! Prayer is a turning of one's soul, in heroic reverence, in infinite desire and endeavor, towards the Highest, the All-Excellent, Omnipotent, Supreme. The modern hero, therefore, ought not to give up praying, as he has latterly all but done. . . . Prayer is the aspiration of our poor, struggling, heavy-laden soul towards its eternal Father; and with or without words, ought not to become impossible, nor, I persuade myself, need it ever. Loyal sons and subjects can approach the King's throne who have no "request" to make there except that they may continue loyal. Cannot they?"

AT MIDNIGHT, July 31, a peal of bells tolled at Saint Botolph's Church, Bishopsgate, London, to celebrate the moment one hundred years ago, when slaves in the British dominion were set free. Seven hundred thousand slaves were freed then. It is commented that two forces were responsible for this: (a) The movement of ideas; (b) British Evangelical teaching. An impressive feature in the social life of Great Britain is the shifting of a large amount of the nation's riches to the so-called "masses." At the recent National Savings Assembly at Lowestoft, Lord Lothian, the chairman stated by way of contrast that in 1913 there was deposited in the post office and trustees savings banks two hundred and eighty-five millions of pounds (one billion four hundred and twenty-five million dollars) with the one billion one hundred and nineteen million pounds (five billion five hundred and ninety-five million dollars) deposited today. Adding to this sum the investments in such institutions as building societies, the small investors of Britain possess two billion five hundred million pounds (twelve billion five hundred million dollars) in savings.

AUGUST 4, twenty years ago, the great War broke out. The similarity of the conditions in Europe today fill the student with alarm. The recent happenings in Germany, the swift vengeance by Hitler upon those who were regarded as his foes and traitors to the government, followed by the assassination of Doctor Dollfuss, and the passing of President von Hindenburg with the assumption of dual powers as president and chancellor by Hitler, all are matters which keep the European mind in a state of unrest. In summing up a hurried survey of the twenty years intervening between then and now the London Spectator says: "What may we conclude? Many ideals have faded, and many hopes have failed us, but, in spite of all losses, our race can still claim for itself a delight in physical and even mental energy, a humorous aspect even of calamities, an unyielding resolution to maintain our freedom of thought and expression against the benevolent behests of dictators or doctrinaires, and an inborn disinclination to display in public the depths of our emotions, our courage, or our religion."

Sometime ago the Saints' Herald touched upon the question of War Debts, the following view of the British may therefore not be inapropos. Without emphasizing the gains to the United States in industrial advantage accruing because of war, there is a feeling that the present condition so far as it affects Great Britain is that of "inequality" and "inequity." Great Britain has received "nothing, on balance, from its creditors whilst it has paid three times as much to the United States government as the latter has received from all the other governments put together, in consequence has a burden of taxation far higher than that imposed upon America—for most of the time twice as high. The United Kingdom with one third of the population of the United States has had to meet the charges of war advances of 7,800 millions of dollars without any net receipts against these charges; the United States, against her 10,050 millions of dollars advanced, received 2,703 millions of dollars, of which 2,025 millions came from the United Kingdom—or nearly half the amount originally lent to her. This latter sum was largely advanced to the United Kingdom to be lent to their allies. While the U. S. has refused to recognize any connection between Great Britain's payments to the U. S. and receipts from Europe; it was a hard reality to Great Britain. In the Balfour note it was declared that Great Britain would not demand more in payment of debts and reparations than was necessary to meet payments to the U. S. As long as Europe paid it was possible for Great Britain to meet her obligation to the U. S. In 1931 through the intervention of President Hoover a moratorium was arranged, and it became impossible for Great Britain to collect her debts from Europe, it was felt proper for Great Britain to ask America because of this action, a more equitable arrangement. To provide an atmosphere favorable to such settlement, the British government in December, 1932, paid in gold the full installment due. If further attempts to enter upon negotiations with a view to revision have failed, it is not Great Britain's fault.

The position became one of deadlock. The British government recognizes the dilemma. On the one hand a debt is a debt and the country must not shirk its debts, besides it is a matter of supreme policy for Great Britain to maintain friendly relations with the United States. On the other, is the conviction that to attempt to revive the whole system of international payments would add to European chaos, and that for Great Britain to pay without being paid would destroy prospects of recovery.

While Great Britain has taken this, the only course open to it when it decided against the immediate discharge of its full obligations, it has announced its intention of not repudiating them. However enlightened opinion inclines to the conclusion that Great Britain should carry out the terms of the Hoover moratorium agreement which involves a payment of four million pounds for a period of ten years. This would not prevent the United States declaring Great Britain in default, but it would have put Great Britain in the position of carrying out the terms of a new agreement which was the starting point of a new situation. Thus the Spectator analyzes the matter.

IN THE BEGINNING of June the Conference of the "Confessional Synod of the German Evangelical Church" held at Barman in Westphalia, "may well prove a decisive event in the struggle of diffident pastors against the regimentation of the German Protestant churches by the Reich bishop, Dr. Muller," says the Spectator. One hundred and forty representatives from all over Germany met without any interference. In a simple declaration of faith the conference rejected various untenable claims by those who desire to subject the ideals of the church to the ideals of the state. An item of news August 9, announces that Reichbishop Bueller becomes the virtual "Dictator of the German Evangelical Church." He proposed the passage of two laws to his Nazi followers: (a) A law ratifying all acts of the church Government since Bishop Mueller's appointment. (b) A law giving the Church Government, headed by Bishop Mueller, not only legislative and executive powers, but also the power to change the church constitution.

This action will give the Reichbishop power to intervene in such Church State Governments as those of Wurtemberg and Bavaria, where the Lutheran churches have declined to remove their bishops or to carry out the order of Bishop Mueller.

It is further declared that all collections shall require the approval of the State.

Coincident with this news it is announced that the house of Rev. Karl Koch, of Oeynhausen, Chairman of the Opposition Synod, was raided and searched last week and many of his papers confiscated. Dr. Jaeger, assistant to Bishop Mueller, conformed a report that in future the churches would not be allowed to fly their customary evangelical flag, and that all pastors must swear allegiance to Herr Hitler.

THE UPPER HOUSE of the Convocation of York during the month of June gave decision against the action of the Bishop of Liverpool, Dr. David, who a year before had invited Dr. L. P. Jacks, the editor of the Hibbert Journal to preach three sermons in the Liverpool Cathedral. Lord Hugh Cecil had challenged the bishop's act and called it a "scandal in the face of Christendom."

The resolution of the Convocation, which was endorsed by all the Bishops, excepting Dr. David who refrained from voting—disapproved of invitations to preach at special services being extended to any person who does not hold, or who belongs to a denomination which does not hold the "common Christian faith" in Jesus Christ as "Very God of Very God, Who for us men and for our salvation came down from Heaven and was made man." Canon J. K. Mozley in commenting upon this action denies any disposition to "heresy-hunting," no censorious judgment upon the religious standing of an individual. It does recognize that on certain fundamental points the Church has no right to allow any misunderstanding of its witness and teaching, most particularly when a congregation is gathered together for prayer and worship. The Deity of Christ is not an open question for the Church of England.

The Unitarians may accept the "divinity" of our Lord. But the Church of England believes in the "Deity of Jesus Christ."

ONE THOUSAND DELEGATES attended the fifth Baptist World Congress which opened in Berlin, Germany August fifth. Sixty countries were represented.

AMONG THOSE who were honored recently by the British Sovereign on his birthday was Dr. F. G. Banting, the discoverer of "Insulin." He is now a knight.

THE OXFORD CORRESPONDENT of the Spectator reports that preachers at St. Mary's in the after dinner services include a number of laymen, the Headmaster of Merchant Taylors; Dr. Souttar, the distinguished surgeon; Sir Josiah Stamp; the Lord Justice Slessor. The church was crowded and the addresses made a great impression. "To bring home the truth and importance of religion lies in part in finding new ways of approach adapted to the present generation."

of his calling as a servant of God. We have hardly begun to receive the light, intelligence, and power that could be ours as servants of God in the ministry of this church.

The appeal of the best interests of one's family:

Usually it is thought that activity in the priesthood means a sacrifice of one's family. From one point of view it does. But from a truer point of view a man can do nothing more wonderful for his loved ones than to give his life in an unwavering allegiance to ministry for Christ. Ask those who know. Observe the spiritual disaster that often befalls the families of our careless and indifferent ministry. Strong men have shed bitter tears when they have at last come to a realization of the tremendous cost of indifference and neglect as paid for by their own loved ones.

A Personal Testimony:

I have journeyed thousands of miles, I have interviewed hundreds of men of the priesthood personally. After having been moved upon by the Spirit of God and thrilled by seeing men of the ministry turned again to their task, I dare to present here a personal testimony. I know it is true. It is this: "Those men of the priesthood of the church who find themselves moved by this appeal and who move forward in a sustained allegiance to its impulses and give themselves without reserve to their ministry—such shall be blessed with a light, power, and intelligence far beyond their fondest expectation. Just as surely those who do not respond, those who pass by unheeding the call of this hour, the greatest in the history of the church and the history of the world—such we know shall speedily drop out of the picture and no longer upheld by the uplifting Spirit of God be dragged down by the forces of their environment and the strength of the impulses within them. Unquestionably this is the choosing time for our priesthood. The hour has struck. The church is compelled to ask each member of the priesthood to choose. In fact each man will choose and the results of his choice are certain.

The following incident is a good example of what I mean: In the allotment of their expenditures, a young couple had allowed a certain amount for recreation, including picture shows. One evening another couple called to see if they could go to a certain show which all had expressed a desire to see. The answer of the young wife was that she would see if there was any balance in the recreation fund. When she found that it had all been used, she asked the other couple to come over and spend the evening in some other way. They could have "borrowed" from another fund in order to satisfy the desire to see this particular show. But if they did that they would go beyond the bounds decided on as the limit for this expense. Borrowing would also rob the next period of its allotment. Therefore they did the common sense thing by carrying out a prearranged plan, by which they had allotted the spending of their time and energy. Since they could not do the thing they had suddenly wanted to do, they were able, in taking this sensible view, to use the time for other purposes. This is a simple, practical application of the wise spending of time and energy.

HOW CAN our ideal couple start out to make each member of the family an independent unit? In making their plans they decide how much each can have for items which are peculiarly his own. They agree to let each spend that money without suggestion or dictation from the other. I don't care how devoted any couple may be, the feeling of individual freedom is absolutely essential. It can be developed under any kind of conditions. The principle can be carried out in conditions which make it impossible to plan or provide ahead, even when it is hard to get enough for the barest of necessities. History tells us that there was a time when woman was considered the same as property, and men treated their wives as such. The wife had no individuality or right. Whatever she got was what he decided to give her. I have seen some incidents myself which indicate that the old tradition or idea, or whatever you want to call it, still exists in the minds of some men. I have actually seen a man dole out money to his wife as if he were being very generous in giving her a little after she had told him exactly what she wanted it for. And, believe it or not, I have heard of husbands who buy everything for their wives, even their clothing, as well as for each member of the family. Probably they could not even trust them to pick out their own hats. It is hard to believe that in our supposedly enlightened age any man could be found who could treat his family with such lack of trust and confidence. It is even harder to believe that any man who professes the gospel of Christ could find any justification for such treatment of his family. He may think he believes the gospel, and he may think the church means something to him. Actually he is proving that he has not yet recognized the principles of the gospel nor found the way to put them into every-day use.

I realize what the Apostle Paul said about women keeping their place, but that was said under different conditions. Paul also emphasized many times that we should study and develop ourselves to recognize truth no matter where nor how we might find it. One of the truths that our civilization has taught us is that there should be no difference between the sexes when it comes to respecting the rights of each one in developing his own individuality. In criticizing men for their failure to recognize the rights of each member of the family, it applies to women as well. If a woman assumes a dictatorial attitude she is just as bad as the man. I met a man in Nebraska once who was so henpecked that he had to bring his weekly wages to his wife. She made him beg for every penny he wanted. She would not even let him buy his own clothes.

OUR CONCERN about this problem of spending time and energy should be to find the way in which it can be done for the best interests of each individual. Therefore, the discussion of any details is merely to find the means to an end. In the case of our ideal couple they will decide what each can have for clothes, for instance, and then each will let the other, if he desires, spend that money without suggestion or interference from the other. When there isn't any available they will simply do without. Both will be more than willing to do without when they know that if it were available they could handle it as they chose. Instead of this freedom becoming a wedge between this couple, it will make their bonds that much closer. It creates a basis for mutual understanding. This result will be possible because they will have faced the issue on a common little problem of routine. They will plan ahead and carry out the plan on the basis of mutual trust and confidence. In other words, they will succeed because they are big enough to see that little figures, handled carefully, become a guide to the big things in life. And what Zion building problem is more important than the building of happy homes?

The next step in developing individuality presents itself when children come into the home. When our ideal couple become parents they have new problems to solve. For a long time that first baby will not be able to develop any individuality as far as money problems are concerned. However, that time will not be as long as most parents believe. The child will often put the parent to shame in his understanding of basic principles if he is given a chance. The reason for this is that the parent is a product of faulty environment. He does as a parent what he saw his parents do. He may not have taken preparation for parenthood seriously. He arrives at that point before he is ready for it. Then he finds the stress of parental responsibility so great that he can't take the time to make proper preparation.

WE KNOW that a child does not have to be very old before he likes to feel that he is doing what he chooses. If the parents let him feel that he is helping the church by paying his pennies, perhaps one out of every ten as tithing, giving these pennies himself to the bishop or agent and getting a receipt in his own name, he has the feeling of being a part of the church. He has a feeling of recognition. Helping the child do his own planning and paying is giving him a practical start in budgeting. If the child learns to stand on his own feet, to make his own decisions, to make his own plans as a growing child he will become a Zion builder. He will know how to plan or budget the use of his time and talents so they will be used wisely. I can't help but believe that this is vital and that it should be developed more than it is. Too many parents aren't big enough to let the child get ahead of them, so they hold him in the background. That only causes resentment which if fostered will take that child out of the church as quickly as he becomes big enough to control his own actions.

The following incident shows clearly how we can let the technical interpretation of the law stand in the way of accomplishing the very thing for which the law was created. On a Sunday morning many years ago I visited one of our larger outlying churches and dropped into a Sunday school class which was discussing church finances. The question of payment of tithes by children was being discussed, and the decision by the teacher raised a serious question in my mind. This man was at one time one of the most active missionaries in the church. He has done wonderful work in helping build the church during a period of hard struggle. But he was of the school which believed in the law for law's sake. He was not to be blamed entirely for his interpretation. I took exception to it while he admitted that children should be encouraged to pay their tithing but he said we should be careful how it is done. As a church we are instructed to obey the law of the land. Since that law designates the parent as the guardian of the child until the child is of legal age, therefore to make such transactions legal, no matter how small, the bishop should write out the receipt to the parent as guardian of the child. Perhaps technically this interpretation is correct, but what have we gained by being so careful to live up to such a technicality? The child cannot feel a complete independence, he cannot fully understand such intangible things as guardianship, but he can understand handing his penny to the bishop, and he can understand what it means to see his name on his receipt. By forgetting the technicality of the law we use it to develop the child's idea that he is getting full recognition as an individual. He feels as if he is a part of the church because he wants to be. It creates in his mind a much closer tie to the church. He will cherish this feeling as he grows regardless of his ups and downs. Later when he settles down to the serious business of life the memories of those little incidents will come back and grow in importance as he grows in years. The tie to the church resulting from the feeling that he was recognized as an individual will bring far more loyal service to the church, when he is grown, than any memory of technically correct procedure.

In other words, in dealing with the problems of the individual human being, which after all is the basic work of the church, we should use common sense. When children are negligent or careless parents should keep tithing receipts for them. They can use a little scrap book if necessary. Later on, perhaps, even after the child is married, if the parent would present that little record of a faithful adherence to a vital principle, the average individual would prize it as one of his choicest possessions. And what an influence it would be as an anchor for that person as he makes his mature decisions in budgeting his time for what he wants to do; especially as far as his church relationship or spiritual stewardship is concerned.

tragic despair written on it. She did not share his hopefulness.

"Oh, Dan," she half-sobbed, "They have stuff to sell, too. How can we know, Dan?"

"I think we'll be safe in taking his advice," said Dan blithely, "because it's in line with the church books. They're our standards, to judge things, you know—" he stopped suddenly; he had forgotten she did not have faith in these things as did he.

"Everybody has something to sell," went on Louisa drearily, "and even when they talk so wonderfully, and so benevolently, they are thinking mainly about their own pocketbooks—"

"That is just why I'm so enthused about Zion," Dan interrupted, "Can't you see how it's needed—"

He was startled at the electrical change in his wife. She sat suddenly upright, and her voice, when she spoke, was charged with such anger as she had never before manifested.

"You're always thinking and talking about Zion. You don't love me, and you don't love our children! If you did, you'd think a little more about us, and a little less about your fine philosophies. You don't care what happens to us—"

"Louisa," cried Dan, hoarsely, "that's not true. I do love you."

But how could he explain that the great longing he had for Zion really grew from his suffering, which suffering came because of his love for her and the children? How could he make her understand? Their viewpoints were too widely divergent. How could he tell her that because he loved her and the children so greatly, his heart had been wrung with the pitiful conditions existing over the whole world? That he saw not only their suffering, but the suffering of thousands of other mothers and babies, yes, and fathers, too, all over the land; people who had lost confidence in institutions because of a sordid commercialism burrowing into and undermining the splendid superstructure of civilization as termites sometimes undermine a lordly house? How cruel she was—and yet she did not mean to be cruel. He had married her, knowing she did not belong to the church. She could not understand. In spite of his own pain he must be good to her. He reached his hand to her and touched her gently. She did not even feel his touch.

She was like one drowning—in a sort of stupor she could see her whole life floating before her. The ambitions, the burning fire of youth. "You can if you think you can." "This world is full of numbness and of balk." "He would not suffer them always to take happiness in sin." The black box. The love of little children. Sickmess. Possible death. Pain worse than death—sorrow without hope.

"Oh, I am so alone," she thought, dimly. "I have tried so hard to find peace, but there is none. No friend, no happiness, no hope. Nothing but a vast emptiness."

Care in Cooking Prevents Loss of Vitamins

Loss of vitamins during cooking takes place in several ways. They may be destroyed by heat and oxidation, or they may dissolve out in the cooking water which is later discarded. The exact extent of these losses depends upon the length of time of cooking, upon the presence of air, and upon the solubilities of the vitamins concerned, says the Bureau of Home Economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

Vitamins B, C, and G are readily soluble in water. Vitamin C is easily destroyed by heat and oxidation. Vitamin B is destroyed by long-continued heating but undergoes little destruction when heated at the boiling point of water for as long as one hour. Both vitamin B and vitamin C are more rapidly destroyed in an alkaline medium than in an acid medium.

Vitamin A is only slightly soluble in water and is not readily affected at the ordinary temperatures of boiling and baking. It is destroyed, however, at higher temperatures such as those that obtain in frying. It is also destroyed when heated in the presence of oxygen. Vitamins D, G, and E, are fairly stable to heat and are not destroyed at ordinary cooking temperatures.

The value of any cooked food as a source of vitamins depends largely, of course, on its original value in the natural state. Tomatoes are an excellent source of vitamin C even after they have been cooked. This is explained by the fact that during cooking the acidity of the tomato preserves to a great extent its naturally high vitamin C potency.

In general, the destruction of vitamins is less when foods are heated at high temperatures for short periods, than when they are heated at low temperatures for long periods. There is also less loss when a small quantity of water or no water at all is used. For this reason it is recommended that foods be cooked as short a time and in as little water as is practical. If any cooking water is left it is so strongly flavored that this is out of the question. Steaming is one of the preferred methods for cooking since the time required is short and little water is used.—Scientific American, July, 1934.

Divine Healing

Scripture lesson, Luke 9:1, 2: "Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases. And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick."

Probably there has not been sufficient emphasis placed on the commission of Jesus to his disciples to "heal the sick."

There are many people who are not clear as to the origin of disease. They are sometimes prompted to wonder why the Lord has so afflicted them. At other times they blame their malady on the devil. Thought should be given to the question of one's individual responsibility for the condition of body and mind that exists.

A little study will show that the subject of divine healing has a great many angles from which we may review it with profit.

Man, the noblest of all creatures, often goes moping around, complaining of headache, nervousness, and a thousand other ills. Some people resign themselves to illness as their lot in life, but how much good does sickness do you or your church or your community?

God stands in favor of health. If he does not he would not have said for his servants to go preach the kingdom of God and heal the sick. Jesus himself healed many people. James, the brother of Jesus, enjoined: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray for him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." In the law given through Moses to Israel was instruction to segregate those having certain diseases; the Lord did not want disease to spread. He is always interested in the conserving of human life. Such segregation was entirely in accord with what man has later learned in scientific and medical research. The Lord named for Israel certain clean and unclean things to eat. He has given to his church of latter days a revelation bearing on health known as the Word of Wisdom (section 86 of Doctrine and Covenants).

The influence of our church's teachings concerning divine healing has gone far beyond the confines of our own organization just as our teachings of Zion and of the second coming of Christ. One has a right to expect the New Testament order of healing to be reproduced in Christ's church today, the healing not to be a sporadic thing in the life of the members, but a normal experience.

We can no more separate God from his creations than we can an author from his works, therefore let us give the sick the benefit of Nature's laws. Not all disease is the result of sin, but there has been a violation of law somewhere. James said: "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deeds." I believe one of the blessings will be health resulting from a harmonizing of one's emotions, instincts, and sentiments, and faith in the ordinance of the church.

Where should we expect the miraculous power of God to operate in healing? In the removal of ills springing from a failure to keep the Word of Wisdom?

I know of no promise that healing shall be instantaneous. It might be. The promise is, "and they shall recover." A thousand and one healings, I have no doubt, take place in the church every year and little is heard of them simply because they come about so naturally that even those who are blessed do not realize the miracle that has occurred.

Would it not be a good thing if before the elders are called to administer to the sick by the laying on of hands, the sick would think very thoroughly over the matter and pray? It appears to me that the exercise of the miraculous power of God is to be enjoyed when man has exhausted all the things he knows ought to be done. Then let God's divine power supplement man's effort.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Can branch members who refuse to contribute and rarely attend vote against the workers and for their friends?

One who refuses financial support for his branch when well able to contribute, and who will not attend its meetings except to elect his own friends, does not appear to possess the attitude of Christian fellowship which his covenant with the Lord and the church requires of him. In such instances, it might be well for the proper officers to labor with him in the spirit of charity and kindness and seek to secure his proper support. Possibly he feels aggrieved over some matter and has become perverted in this way, and therefore may need the help of a true friend.

One who will not perform his obligations to the church is usually unfitted to choose wisely those to be elected, for his personal bias moves him more than the desire to serve the church, and thus he hinders the work. However, so long as a member is in good standing—against whom no official complaint has been made—he may vote as he sees fit, whether his choice be wise or otherwise.

This is a figure of speech believed to symbolize both the fruitful inheritance of Asher and his peaceful and prosperous relationships with his neighboring tribes. Oil is often used in the Scriptures to represent joy, gladness, peace, and fruitfulness. It is also used in other symbolic ways.

Of what quorums is a joint council composed?

A joint council is not always composed of the same officials. Some joint councils have included the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. Others have been composed of the Presidency and Twelve, or the Twelve and the Seventy. Some have been formed of the Presidency, Twelve, and the Bishopric or the Presiding Bishopric, as the nature of the case demanded. Conference Resolution 386 came from a joint council of the Presidency, Twelve, and High Priests. Any quorums suitable for the matter to be considered might be chosen and designated as a joint council.

Will forgiveness of "all manner of sin" give celestial glory to one forgiven?

To forgive sin is to remit the penalty that otherwise must be paid. But this does not determine the glory of the one forgiven. Jesus declared that all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven, but he did not say that every sin and blasphemy would be forgiven. The difference is obvious, and is based upon the attitude and state of the sinner. He who repents would be forgiven of a sin that would not be forgiven in another who did not repent.

Celestial glory is offered those who not only repent of their sins but reform so completely that their lives become righteous. There is no celestial glory promised those who do not turn to righteousness. This does not necessarily mean that one becoming righteous will never again make a mistake or commit a sin, but it does mean that such a person will not remain in sin.

Will hell ever be destroyed? If so, when?

Hell is an intermediate state for the wicked, a place of punishment, restraint and confinement where the unrepentant and disobedient are kept for purposes and times determined by the wisdom of God. When these purposes have been achieved, the need of hell will doubtless no longer exist. This is indicated in part by the following texts:

"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works."—Revelation 20: 13.

"Wherefore, death and hell must deliver up their dead, and hell must deliver up its captive spirits."—Book of Mormon 107: 28.

After this judgment of those who are delivered up from hell, which is to be after the millennial reign, hell itself is to be abolished, apparently, for we read:

"And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death."—Revelation 20: 14.

Locating Saints in Panhandle

Through the columns of the Herald we have been able to find several families of Latter Day Saints and others who attend our church. We think there might be others in and around Borger, Amarillo, and Pampa, who might be interested. If any Herald readers know of members or nonmembers who are interested, in this region, we should be glad to hear from them.

We have been greatly encouraged at the interest shown in our meetings. We have another member added to the priesthood, Brother A. V. Carriker who was ordained to the office of priest at the Colorado Springs Reunion.

Would Be Efficient Home Missionary

I am making a scrapbook of all important things I learn about our church and its doctrine. This I plan to loan to nonmember friends. The Herald, with its fine articles and pictures, is helping to make my scrapbook attractive.

Although I live where I cannot regularly attend church, my thoughts frequently center about the Saints and their activities. Always I hope and pray for the success of the workers. I love to help but it seems there is little I can do. I have two small children whom I hope will some day do their part for the church. Will the Saints pray for me and my family that we may overcome our difficulties and live so that at the close of each day, we will be proud to look back over our record? I am reading and studying as I can so that I shall always be able to meet the issues which come before me and be a better home missionary. I lend my Herald to four families to read, and my books to all who are interested.

Life's Experiences Teach Appreciation of the Church

I was born in Missouri, but at a very early age, with my parents, moved to Texas, where we lived until I was about fifteen years, at which time we went to make our home in Nebraska. I attended high school there, and also received my first pay check in that community. During the summer months, I visited my grandparents, Brother and Sister George Jones, at Webb City, Missouri. Elder Richard D. Weaver, at that time, was holding meetings near my grandfather's home, and most of his talks were based on the Book of Mormon, which appealed to me as it brought to my mind school studies of old Babylon, and of the wars of the Saracens and Crusaders. At the end of the meetings, I was baptized by Brother Weaver, whom I have continued to hold in the highest esteem.

After vacation days, I returned to Omaha. The Saints were meeting out on Ames Avenue at that time.

I was employed in Dallas, Texas, and for a good many years, I did not use church privileges as much as I should; but when I began to realize that I was the loser, I started to attend.

From Tulsa I went to Tampa, Florida, where there is no branch. I found it very difficult to be satisfied under such conditions, and always since then, I have had great sympathy for earnest, isolated Saints. At present, my husband and I are members of the Hot Springs, Arkansas Branch.

Sunday, August 19, the women's department gave a social sponsored by Sister Dora Pittmen and Sister Bertie Hampton, at the home of the latter. A goodly number were present, and the spirit of good fellowship was there.

In a recent Herald I noticed a letter of thanks from Mrs. Lorraine Fuller, formerly of Dallas, now of Missouri. I can testify to the good works and earnest faith of this kind sister, and pray that she may be abundantly blessed.

My brother, Frank Brown, is here now from Texas, and is enjoying church privileges for the first time in many years. He is grateful for having heard Apostle R. S. Budd, and Bishop G. L. DeLapp since coming here. I hope he may hear our missionary, Elder A. M. Baker, before long.

We have just had a drenching rain for which we are thankful. Our crops are gone, and I believe our well is the only one in the neighborhood holding out, even for drinking water. We live about fifteen miles from the church, and the drouth through here has been very severe.

I am thankful for my many blessings, especially the gospel. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may have the strength and will to overcome and to be steadfast and loyal.

Recovers Through Prayer

Last fall I was taken very ill with sugar diabetes and a doctor was called. I was in a coma when he came, and he advised immediate removal to the hospital. Another doctor was called for consultation, and they held no hopes for my recovery.

On Wednesday evening, Branch President William Patterson had special prayers for me at the church. For five days I lay unconscious, and was administered to several times. Then came a turn for the better, and soon my recovery was assured.

The doctor could not understand my marvelous improvement. But I told him that my church believed in prayer and that if it had not been for the prayers of my brothers and sisters I knew that I would not have lived.

I thank God for his watchcare over me and my family, and pray that I shall remain always faithful and true.

Wants One Hundred Percent Tithe Paying Group

I have been striving to make our little group a one hundred percent tithe paying group. There is just one in our group who has not complied with the law of making out their statement, but I hope that it will be done soon.

In my soliciting work, it also gives me a chance to tell the Saints about the Zion's Christian Legion. My husband and I took a membership card, and one more in our group wants to join us.

Why not lay aside jealousy and everything that is hindering anyone from serving the Master? Arise, Saints of God, and let us be of one heart and one mind and work together. Zion will be our Zion when we redeem it, and not until then.

Can we older ones afford to stand back and do nothing, and let the young people redeem Zion? Why stand back and wait? The harvest is great but the laborers are few. May God bless his people with one heart and one mind.

Visit Group at Casey, Illinois

Returning from Kirtland reunion this year, we felt a keen desire to visit a small group of Saints at Casey, Illinois, and fulfill a promise made to them. Brother Ulrich during his missionary activities, went to Casey about nine years ago. Brother H. M. Curtis and family, the only family of Saints living there, were ready to help spread the gospel and assisted him.

A series of six-weeks of meetings resulted in thirty or more baptisms, and many friends were made for the church. The blessings of visions and dreams and wonderful healings confirmed the believers. The Saints organized a branch, purchased a small church building, moved it into town, and were left to continue under the leadership of Brother Curtis, the only member holding the priesthood. But in a short time Brother Curtis found it necessary to move away from Casey. Since that time this little flock without a shepherd, has struggled along through the stress of the times and persecutions.

But we were happy to hear their strong testimonies in defense of the gospel. Many of the boys and girls baptized several years ago are married now and anxious that their husbands, wives, and children shall know the truth of the gospel. Brother O. C. Johnson and family and several others from Decatur, also Sister Lane from Charleston, came to meet with us. The sacrament was served. Brother Ulrich preached Sunday morning and afternoon then conducted a round-table discussion there being a number of nonmembers present, one a minister, who became quite interested.

We sang several duets. Among them was "It Pays to Serve Jesus."

"It pays to serve Jesus,
It pays every day.
It pays every step of the way.
Though the pathway to glory may sometimes be drear,
You'll be happy each step of the way."

Brother Johnson brought his slides on the Book of Mormon and lectured in the evening. Decatur Saints drove all the way over in the rain, and it rained all day except right at noon. Arrangements had been made for us to eat dinner in the grove and the rain slacked up so that this was possible; but as soon as the meal was finished, it began again.

Many came to the services and some said these were the first Latter Day Saint sermons they had heard in four years. It had been a long time since they had partaken of the sacrament. Some suggested that we have a reunion this time again next year, and this was unanimously voted for. So an organization was affected, and we expect to return again to what is to be known as "The Good Hope Reunion."

The Saints were made happy through the voice of the Spirit, and indications were that the Lord will raise up one among them to be their leader. Several months ago when they were quite discouraged and were holding no meetings, a good Sister Randolph whose husband, now deceased, was an elder, moved into their midst. She brought the Saints together and organized their Sunday school again. She is past seventy years old, but is doing a fine work among these people, and they love her. Herald readers who have church papers to throw away, don't do it, please send them to Miss Opal Wright, Casey, Illinois. In visiting around on Labor Day Brother Ulrich found a number of prominent citizens still friendly to the church. How true it is that the harvest is great, but the laborers are few. May we have the courage to serve the Master.

DAYTON, OHIO, 1117 McLain Street MRS E. L. ULRICH.

Isolated Nearly Forty Years

I have been isolated nearly forty years. In 1896, I was working in the Riverside Tube Works, at Benwood, West Virginia. I was interested in the Adventist church, thought I had the truth in full, and I was going to show Brothers A. M. Thomas and Louis Serig that I was right, but it was not long until I was persuaded that I was wrong. I took the matter to the Lord in prayer, and was given a wonderful spiritual experience which convinced me of the truthfulness of the gospel, as restored to the earth in latter days. I was baptized a few weeks later and God confirmed his promises to me concerning the truth.

I know that there is greater power in the church than that which comes of mortal men. I have been given evidences that cannot be denied. I have realized the truth of the statement: "If any man will do the will of the Father, he shall know of the doctrine."

We have not had the privilege of meeting much with the Saints. Since we left Wheeling in 1897, Brother Francis Ebeling baptized me, and Brother G. T. Griffiths baptized my wife. She passed to the other side some years ago. My second wife was baptized at North Platte, Nebraska, by Elder W. A. Smith, of Independence, Missouri. Please pray for us that we may overcome our weaknesses and be worthy to be called Latter Day Saints.

C. W. NOICE.
GOTHENBURG, NEBRASKA, 1014 EAST 18TH STREET.

Isolated But Not Lonely

Though I am the only sister in the church here at Melville, I do not feel alone. God is near me and sends me many blessings. I am trying to spread the gospel here. I read the Bible to those who will listen.

I am glad that I have found the true gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation. Many times I have been healed of physical suffering, and the Spirit has blessed me. I have prayed for the sick and God was near with the blessing he promised.

I want to live the best I know how and do all I can for Jesus; but I can never repay him for what he has done for me.

May God bless us all and help us up to Zion. How we need him to help us overcome the darkness of the world, that we maybe a light to those in darkness.

MRS. MARGARET A. REILLY.
MELVILLE, SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA.

Would Serve Fellow Men

I try not to live for myself alone, but for service to my fellow men, for I believe that is one step toward Zion. I want always to go Zionward. I try to keep the law the best I can.

I wish to be remembered in your prayers that I may be found faithful to the end, to do the next thing at hand, and to have a pure heart and clean hands worthy and willing to do God's will at all times.

The Herald is a great blessing and enjoyment to me, and I read it each Sunday afternoon.

Reunion of Eastern Colorado District

Fine Fellowship Prevails—Six Baptized—Five Ordained

The Saints of Eastern Colorado District, convening for a reunion after a lapse of three years' time, had ten full days of good fellowship, instruction, and worship, in their reunion this year, August 17 to 26, at Colorado Springs. The advisability of holding a reunion this year was questioned by some; but the fine reunion enjoyed has convinced all that it was vitally needed and a great help to the work in the district.

Thirty-seven tents on the grounds provided temporary dwelling places for one hundred sixty-five people. Many other members and their friends lived in cottages nearby. All of these folks having come for the ten days with the purpose of seeking things that would contribute to their spiritual uplift and growth, the result was a fine gathering, marked by the spirit of harmony and peace. Even the district business sessions were characterized by that beautiful spirit usually associated with prayer and testimony. Attendance at all classes and other services was exceptionally good, and interest was outstanding.

Every morning at six o'clock the young people met at Stratton Park for prayer service, with an average attendance of sixty-one. Harold A. Tabor was in charge of these meetings, each day selecting other members of the priesthood to assist him. Many of the young people in those early services rededicated their lives to the service of the Master.

Friday, August 24, at 4:30 p. m., at Colorado Spring Church, Brother J. D. Curtis, a member of the district presidency, baptized four fine young people; Genevieve Bullard, of Wray; Brother Ray Webb's son, from Uteville; the young daughter of Brother C. M. Miller of Lamar, Colorado; and a young sister by the name of Gettys, from Borger, Texas. The confirmation of these new members was made the order of service at the prayer service hour, 9 a. m., on Saturday, August 25. Two others, a young man and his wife who live in Colorado Springs, were baptized in Prospect Lake on Sunday morning, August 26, at eight o'clock, and confirmed afterwards by Brother Curtis and J. E. Ebeling, making a total of six new members added to the ranks during the reunion.

The classes of the reunion were conducted by Apostle R. S. Budd and Elder B. A. Howard of Erick, Oklahoma. Brother Howard's first class was at 8 a. m. on the subject, "Fundamental Beliefs of the Church"; and his second class, at 11:10 a. m., dealt with "The Gospel Plan of Salvation." Brother Budd's class, at 10:10 a. m., brought the subject, "Sin—and God's Plan of Redemption." These classes were very well attended and a fine interest was shown in them from first to last. During the week there was an average attendance at all classes of about eighty, with a great increase in attendance on Sundays.

In addition to his class work, Brother Budd conducted a series of evening services on missionary subjects which also helped the member to consider seriously the fundamental principles upon which the latter-day faith rests. Brother Budd was assisted in the preaching services by Elder J. D. Curtis and Elder G. A. Smith, of the district presidency, and by Elder Z. Z. Renfroe, President of Western Oklahoma District, these men giving stimulating sermons.

Each morning, from nine o'clock until noon, the children were given instruction by a corps of workers made up of young people under the direction of Sister Mary Williams. The fine interest and ready response made by these children to the work offered them brought joy to those who worked with them. Their activities consisted of class work, worship, nature study, and handwork. About fifty children participated in these activities.

The kitchen was presided over by Sister Nora Berry, of La Junta, whose hard work and the work of those women who so willingly assisted her, provided good meals for all who sought them at the reunion cafeteria. In this work that always attends the providing of meals, the response of the women was altogether as fine and consecrated as in any other phase of the reunion.

Afternoons were given over to recreation, rest, and special activities. Volley ball, horseshoes, and soft ball, attracted a major amount of attention. Once again, Colorado Springs won over the rest of the district in a soft ball game on Saturday afternoon, August 25. A wiener roast one evening after the eight o'clock service; an interesting line-up of group games on another evening; group singing which was much enjoyed by all; all of these things helped to balance the program and added to the joys of fellowship. These things were directed by Brother Floyd H. Engstrom, district director of religious education, assisted by Z. Z. Renfroe and George Fletcher.

On Friday afternoon, August 24, the women of the district met under the leadership of Sister Letha M. Tilton, of Fort Collins, and combined a social good time and the serving of refreshments with the more serious thoughts of what the place of the women is in the work of the district and what they may do during this year to help in the big task before the Saints. The women became so enthused over the idea of uniting their efforts throughout the district that they passed a resolution requesting that the district conference approve their choice of Sister Letha M. Tilton to act as their leader. This request was approved by the district conference on Saturday, and all local leaders in women's work in the district are invited to get in touch with Sister Letha M. Tilton, Fort Collins, Colorado, so that the unity of effort which the women desired may be brought about.

The response of the singers and musicians of the district to the reunion needs made it possible for them to have a musical program each evening preceding the preaching service. Sister Tilton, acting chorister of the reunion, assured them that it was no trouble at all to get musical numbers for the half hour of music each evening, since so many musicians and singers freely offered their help. On the two Sundays, the music was given a special boost by Sister Alice Milligan and the Denver Choir who gave some excellent anthems, with other singers assisting them.

Three short religious plays were given in connection with the evening services: "These Things Shall Be," by Denver young people, on the first Sunday evening of the reunion; "Lydia, Seller of Purple," by Fort Collins young people, on Friday evening, August 24, and "Faith," by Colorado Spring young people, on Saturday evening, August 25.

On Thursday afternoon, several carloads of the Saints took advantage of a trip sponsored by the recreation committee and viewed the Royal Gorge.

At the business meeting Saturday, 10 a. m., the following officers were elected: District president, Claude A. Smith; associates, J. D. Curtis and E. J. Williams; secretary, C. D. Liggett; treasurer, Ralph E. Vincent; director of religious education, Floyd H. Engstrom; chorister, Inez Schrunck; librarian, Sister

R. C. Harrison; historian, E. F. Shupe; bishop's agent, Ralph E. Vincent (sustained); auditors, Paul Diefendorf and R. S. Salyards, jr.; budget committee, E. J. Williams and Ralph E. Vincent.

In view of the fact that there is the necessity of renting, setting up, and preparing for services, a large tent, each year at reunion time, a resolution was proposed at this conference that they raise the money necessary, get workers to do the work, and erect a permanent tabernacle for services on the reunion grounds. This resolution received hearty approval from the conference. The trustees of the reunion grounds, together with the district presidency, were designated as a committee with power to act in providing such a building. A sum of about four hundred dollars was pledged during the reunion toward this project and a fourth of these pledges was paid. Unless unforeseen circumstances hinder, there will be a permanent tabernacle at Colorado Springs for the reunion in 1935.

A fitting climax to the reunion was the communion and ordination service on the last Sunday morning at which time five young men were ordained: Floyd H. Engstrom, elder; Von Carriker, priest; Ray Ebeling, priest; Willard Cummings, priest; Harold DeCoster, teacher. About two hundred fifty people were present at this meeting to be inspired by the spirit that prevailed. As Brother R. S. Budd delivered the charge to each man in turn, members of the priesthood throughout the audience felt renewed within them their determination to serve faithfully in their offices, and all of the members had opportunity to see again the heavy responsibility that falls upon the man who accepts priesthood and also the necessity there is that these men be supported by the membership of the church in their heavy tasks. Some folks were heard to remark that this was the most impressive service they ever attended.

Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose the good we oft might win by fearing to attempt.—

Springfield, Missouri

Springfield Branch is located on Dale Street between Pierce and Kellet streets, in Springfield, Missouri, the heart of the Ozarks. Elder C. E. Wilson presides as pastor of this alert and active congregation. They invite all Saints visiting in the Ozark region to stop and worship with them.

In the past year they have been blessed with a number of visitors, especially those of the priesthood. Elders S. A. Burgess and A. M. Chase were vacationing near them and spent Sunday at Springfield to the profit of all concerned. Other priesthood members whose contributions have been gratefully received were: Apostle J. F. Garver, President F. M. McDowell, A. T. Higdon, high priest; Lee Quick, seventy; Elder J. A. Gillen, Elder Stephens, from Dayton, Ohio, and Earl D. Bailey, high priest, from Tulsa, Oklahoma.

The branch is fortunate in having Elder Henry Sparling in its midst. Brother Sparling, a missionary for the church for many years, is now physically unable to do a great amount of work for the church, but he is active mentally and is deeply concerned in the church and its work. Even when bedfast he expressed a desire that the Lord would permit him yet to be able to attend services and perhaps to preach again. This opportunity has been granted twice already. Each time Brother Sparling has given a wonderful sermon. Though unable to stand, and compelled to sit in a comfortable chair on the platform while delivering his discourses, his words were none the less effective and appealing. The Saints are eager to hear more of these sermons.

The priesthood of the branch have been working as harmoniously during the past year as any group of men could work, and as a result of their labors the branch has grown spiritually and numerically.

The young people are very active. On September 7, 8, and 9, they entertained the Spring River District young people's convention, a highly helpful gathering.

on the corner opposite from the church.

On July 15, death claimed the granddaughter of Brother and Sister Richard Hawkins. The child, two and one half years old, ate something while out playing, became violently ill, and died almost immediately.

Sunday July 22, they were honored with a visit from the new district president, D. J. Williams, and Bishop's agent Sam Worrel. Brother Williams preached and Brother Worrel opened with prayer. Brother Robley, who is always a welcome visitor to Scranton, was also pres-ist with Sister Florence Swales as an assistant; director of religious education, John Jenkins; chorister, William J. Davies; correspondent, Sister Elzetta Hughes; caretaker, John Williams, assisted by John Morgan.

Recent visitors to Scranton were Brother and Sister D. J. Williams, of Philadelphia.

The young people between the ages of sixteen and twenty-four meet every Thursday night. They have a very fine organization. John Swales is supervisor and he is also scoutmaster.

A number of Saints attended the district conference held at Elk Mills Maryland, September 1, and 2.

Chico, California

Because many of the local Saints are away at work, Sunday school and sacrament the first of each month are the only services regularly held.

Jimmy Hutler, youngest son of Brother and Sister Hutler, suffered a broken hip not long ago when run over by an automobile. He must lie in the hospital a month or more, and at present there are weights on his legs. Nevertheless, Jimmy is cheerful; he eagerly greets his friends who call, and the Stepping Stones help him to pass weary hours.

Some of the Saints from Chico are still rejoicing that they were able to attend General Conference last spring. They are thankful for the church and its splendid working organization. They, too, want to give their best to the redemption of Zion.

Two Are Baptized

Members of this branch were made happy Sunday, August 26, when Miss Rita Mae Morse and Gene Wilder were baptized into the church. Both these young people are willing and active workers.

Mrs. Bessie Mitchell who is now living at Bryan, Texas, was operated on there August 25, and is reported to be improving nicely. Mrs. Nettie Tischer, her sister, went to Bryan to spend a short time with her.

Miss Pearl Arnold has been spending the past month visiting relatives and friends in Chicago, Saint Louis, and Kansas City. She expects to return to Houston in the near future.

Mrs. Crete Arnold is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Vandel, at Alliance, Nebraska. On her return trip she expects to stop at Colorado Springs, to visit with Brother and Sister W. B. Root who were formerly located in Houston.

The young people are planning a beach party at Galveston in the early future with bathing in the Gulf and supper on the beach. The recent storms in the Gulf have made it uncertain just what date this will be.

Everyone Busy Here

July 1, communion Sunday, was in charge of the newly-elected pastor, Elder Ernest Davies, assisted by Elder Richard Hawkins. Brother Hawkins has been the pastor for many years, and has gained the respect of all who come in contact with him. For sometime now he has lived at Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, and because of other duties, he has asked to be released as pastor. He is still a faithful attendant of Scranton branch.

The priesthood are actively engaged in visiting the members and assisting in the work of the branch. Four of the men painted the outside of the church last month, the paint having been donated by Sister William Hawkins. Sister Mary James also donated one hundred dollars so that the interior of the church could be decorated. To these two sisters the Saints are grateful, also to the men who painted the outside of the church. A beautiful junior high school now stands ent, and preached the evening sermon. He extended his visit and preached again Monday night. Then he went to Kirtland reunion.

Sister Margaret Swales and Sister Maude Hedglin recently underwent serious operations. Both are now recovering and their friends are glad to welcome them back to church.

The Sunday school chartered a bus July 31 and had its annual picnic at Rocky-Glen. They left the church at 9:30 a. m. and returning, left the park about 7 p. m.

Brother and Sister Ernest Davies were visitors at Kirtland reunion, and with them went Brother Alfred Jones and wife and Brother and Sister Cristy Dipple, of Archibald Branch.

The members wish success for their new pastor, who has given many years of faithful service in the church. Other officers elected were Priest William J. Davies, associate pastor; Thomas Watkins, secretary; Sister Laura Williams, treasurer; Sister Maude Hedglin, organ-

First Church, C. W. Clark, Pastor

Many Saints of this congregation attended Kirtland Reunion, and returned with renewed spirituality and a keener desire to be of service in building up the kingdom of God.

Sarah Ann, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Lewis, was blessed at the evening service, August 26, by Elders C. W. Clark and L. C. Lewis.

The Saints here were glad when Apostle and Mrs. Myron A. McConley visited them on their way to their new home in Mobile, Alabama. He preached that night and everyone enjoyed his sermon.

Members of the Willing Workers Class held a picnic August 28, by the river. The class is studying the Book of Mormon, and after the supper A. E. Anderson taught the lesson. Outdoor games were then played.

The midweek prayer service, one of the best ever held in this branch, was enjoyed by many. The sacrament service on Sunday was also a spiritual gathering, one well attended.

Superintendent Homer Owens recently entertained the officers and teachers of the church school with a chop suey dinner. A short business session followed.

A red and blue booster contest started in the church school on a recent Sunday to continue to December 9. Esther Gates is captain of the Blues, and Helen Ferguson captain of the Reds. The membership aim is two hundred and twenty-five pupils, and toward this goal the boosters are striving.

Elder and Mrs. John R. Grice, daughters, Vivian, Vida, and Wanda, and son, Billy, returned home to Columbus from Michigan where they had been visiting after attending Kirtland reunion.

A group of Saints between the ages of fifteen and fifty years has been attending a class taught by Pastor C. W. Clark on Friday nights. They are studying the doctrine of this church compared with doctrines of other churches.

The women's department and Loyal Club held their meeting September 4. Sister Grice, president of the women's department, gave gleanings from the reunion which proved interesting. A paper, "Following the Bishop as Leader in Matters of Finances," was read by Sister Lillian Ash. Sisters Lola Miller, Ruth Marks, Winifred Myers and Tora Lindsay were hostesses.

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Street

The August sacrament service was one of encouragement. As a result each member felt more determination to press forward to the goals of the church.

Thirty-nine members of this branch were privileged to attend Kirtland reunion, part or all of the time. They returned home spiritually stronger and with a clearer vision of Zion.

The junior choir rendered some beautiful anthems at the church services during the month of August. Their music was greatly appreciated by the congregation.

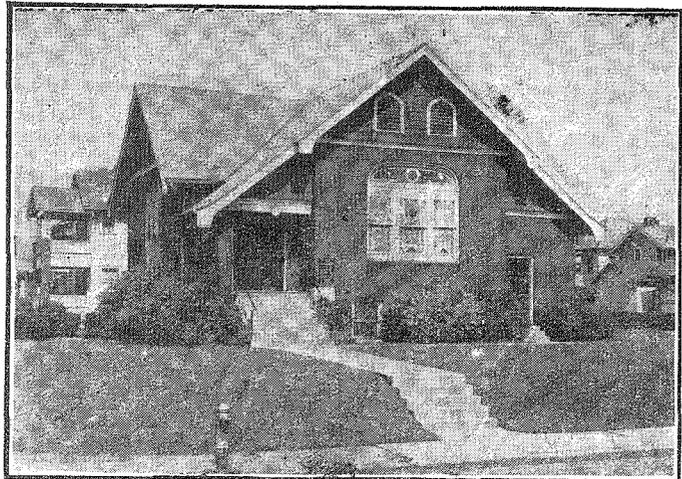

A social was given at Washington Park Thursday evening, August 23, the proceeds being used for the department of recreation.

Tuesday evening, August 28, at the church, Kathleen Swisher and Walter Linter were united in marriage by Patriarch J. E. Matthews. They were attended by Arlene Cramer and Janet Gillenwater, bridesmaids, and Donald Pendelton, best man. Vera M. Hunter played the wedfrit attended the reunion the twelfth. Each came back filled with the spirit which prevailed there and with a new determination to consecrate himself to the church.

During the absence of Elder Welsh, Elder William Vickeroy was in charge of the branch. Brother Lewis Walters occupied the stand in the morning and Elder Vickeroy in the evening. Elder Scharfenberg and F. D. Welsh were speakers the following Sunday.

The evening of the twenty-third the women's department had a kitchen shower for the church. Ice cream and cake were served for refreshments.

ding march, and Margaret Dragoo sang "I Love You Truly." This couple has the best wishes of the congregation.

Third Church

On the first Sunday of the month a wonderful sacrament service was enjoyed by those present. The spirit of testimony filled each person with a greater determination to accomplish a work for the church.

In the evening Colonel D. N. Osyer, a Civil War veteran, gave a talk of his experiences during the war. Colonel Osyer was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, and listened to the famous debate between Lincoln and Douglas. He is very active for his years.

On the evening of the ninth of August a surprise shower was given in honor of Brother and Sister William Welsh who recently were married. Many nice gifts were given them and a happy social time was had.

Elder Vickeroy occupied the stand the morning of August 12, and in the evening Elder George Ferguson, of First Columbus Church, was the speaker.

Members of this group attended Kirtland reunion August 19. Those going included Elder F. C. Welsh, wife and daughter, Edna; Sister William Albright and son, Robert; Sister C. R. Dougherty and son, Theodore. Brother Guy Elli-

This department sponsored a potluck supper at the church August 30, and the price of admission was determined by the length of the person's foot, one cent being paid for one inch.

Sermons and prayer meetings have been inspirational here.

Outstanding Conference for Northeastern Nebraska

General church officers present at the Northeastern Nebraska conference held at the Indian Mission church, five miles northwest of Decatur, September 9, were President F. M. Smith, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and E. Y. Hunker. District President E. M. Oehring was in charge, and the branches of the district were well represented.

The day's program consisted of church school, pulpit service, picnic lunch, and business session.

The way in which the church school was conducted was unique. Bishop DeLapp taught the adult class which filled the church. He presented the necessity of compliance with the financial law. The work of the church school was under the direction of Sister Mary Larson, district director of religious education.

President Smith delivered a prophetic sermon at the preaching hour, admon-

Hawaiian Young People Are Active

The young people of the mission in Hawaii are now organized and active. In the latter part of August they held their first young people's convention. On this occasion a District Young People's League was organized and officers were chosen. This will include young people of the four branches in the mission, three in Honolulu and one in Hilo.

This organization sponsored a fine oratorical contest on the closing evening of the convention. The judges gave first place to Puarose Mahi, Main Branch, Honolulu.

Honolulu boasts a new organization of younger young people, the Thirty-up Club, which is increasingly active, with Brother Ellis their president.

ishing the Saints to heed the instructions which had been given, that they might possess the right attitudes, working not for self but for others, so that the work intrusted to them might be completed without further delay.

The business session was characterized by a keen interest and fine spirit. All officers were sustained.

A fine spirit prevailed throughout the day's activities. The year to follow promises to be outstanding in cooperation and service for this district.

Kansas City Stake

This stake is happy to announce that eleven of its young people entered Grace-land College this fall, seven of whom were from one Sunday school class at Central Church. The following students are now at Lamoni: Vivian Alter, Elwyn Alter; Jack Burlington, Norman Anderson, Iris Rush, Hugh Bland, and Eleanor Sandy, Central; Del Sears and Gertrude Taylor, Chelsea; Violet Coakley and Edith Foley, Grandview.

The annual stake leadership school which is being held at Central Church is now in progress and will continue for another week. Judging from the large attendance each night, it is evident that the fine courses offered are being greatly enjoyed and appreciated.

All the choirs in the stake are participating in the rehearsals of the Harvest Festival Choir, and on October 7, will be a part of the great group of singers to present the festival concert. Some excellent musical work is being done in Kansas City Stake.

North East Church

The women of this group spent September 7, canning vegetables for the Harvest Home Festival. In past years these women have grown and canned many vegetables for the festival, but this year their gardens yielded nothing, and Bishop C. A. Skinner furnished the produce and jars for their work.

The infant daughter of Pastor and Mrs. Henry Davis and the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Chriseman were blessed by Elders J. O. Worden and E. W. Lloyd at a special service the evening of September 2. Elder J. O. Worden gave a splendid talk on the sacred ordinance of blessing children. This impressive service also included songs by the small daughters of Sisters Burdge and Admire, by Sisters Hazel Burdge and Virginia Binny, and violin solos by Ona Comer. It was planned by Elder George Mesley.

Elder T. C. Lentell gave an instructive sermon at the evening service September 9, and began a series of sermons on the Book of Mormon September 16.

Eastern Montana Reunion at Fairview

Last Reunion of Season a Success in Every Way

The last reunion of the season, that at Fairview, Montana, August 30 to September 2, closed Sunday night with a large attendance of local Saints and friends. Numbers were present from Western Montana District and other parts of Montana and western North Dakota.

The preaching services were of a high order, lectures and sermons of Apostle J. F. Curtis being especially well received, also discourses by Missionary L. O. Wildermuth and Elder N. P. Coleman, of Great Falls, Montana.

The prayer services were spiritually uplifting and comforting.

Four were baptized by Elder L. O. Wildermuth.

Three were ordained to the priesthood, Brother Verne Dittan to the office of priest and Brothers Briggs and Arthur Reynolds to the office of teacher.

Though eastern Montana and western Dakota have seen several years of drouth, the Saints were cheerful and hopeful, and enjoyed the presence of the Lord.

An impressive wedding ceremony was performed Friday at the close of the preaching service when Sister Vick and Brother Rogers, of Opheim, Montana, were married by Apostle Curtis.

Much credit goes to Elder Walter Hillman and the orchestra under his direction. They gave programs preceding several of the sermons. District President Arthur Ritter also deserves commendation for his management of reunion affairs, and the women's division for their efficient work.

The reunion was a success in every way, and all present and taking part were blessed.

Wells, Michigan

Visitors From Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, Give Good Help

Elder William Bushila and family and Sister George Walsh, of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, paid Wells members a visit one week-end recently. Though not all the members at Wells were personally acquainted with these visiting Saints, they had heard of their labors and steadfastness, and gave them a glad welcome. A busy day had been outlined for Sunday, regular services and a funeral in the afternoon, but to give everyone opportunity to meet and rejoice with the visitors, a service was called for Saturday night, too.

Some Wells members had been away on vacation and had just returned. They had missed hearing Apostle D. T. Williams while he was here, and so the pastor engaged Elder Bushila to preach three sermons. These were sound messages laden with encouragement and good thoughts for Saints and nonmembers. Many have asked when Brother Bushila will return to speak again.

Among the many worth-while Saints at Sault Ste. Marie is Elder George Walsh, for years an invalid. During this period he has had to go to and from his shop in a wheel chair, but he has been active and has provided a comfortable home for many of the ministry. He and his companion preach the gospel in their daily lives. A number of others have endeared themselves to members living in Wells Branch.

On a recent Sunday this branch completed its organization of Zion's Christian Legion.

Irene and Helen Denio are two sisters who have much musical talent, and they are generous with their help on local programs, both for the Saints and for neighboring churches. At the funeral before mentioned the Denio sisters sang, Elder Bushila offered prayer, and the sermon was by A. M. Boomer. It was held in a new locality, and several requested the speaker and his helpers to come and hold meetings in their school-house.

Holden Stake

Election Held This Month

Amos E. Allen, stake president, and Counselor J. A. Thomas are visiting all of the groups in the stake this month, to conduct the annual business meeting of each group. By the end of the month the stake officers expect to have visited all of the branches and have all of the business meetings taken care of so that new or reelected branch officers may take their places in October.

Saints of the stake extend their sympathy to Brother and Sister F. M. Hancock, of Atherton, whose daughter, Nelda Lee, died at a railroad crossing September 6. Another girl, Marguerite Berry, was killed, and Wesley and Dan Bilquist are in the Sanitarium at Independence. Wesley is expected to go home soon, but Dan will be confined for a long time yet.

Funeral at Atherton

Pastor J. A. Thomas conducted the funeral services for Nelda Lee Hancock September 8 at the Atherton church. Brother Amos E. Allen offered prayer at the beginning of the service. The theme of Brother Thomas's sermon was "The Rose Still Blooms Beyond the Wall."

Nelda Lee, almost fourteen years old, died at a railroad crossing in Atherton, September 6, while on her way to school in Independence. Besides her parents, the young Saint left a brother, Cyril, of the home, and two sisters, Mrs. Earl Sallee and Mrs. Vernon White, both living in Atherton. She is also survived by Mrs. Z. H. Hall, of Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. Alma Ball, Warrensburg; Mr. and Mrs.

Willis Hancock, Holden; Mr. and Mrs. Simon Gress and son, Richard, and Mrs. Alta Gress and son, Harold, of Kansas City, Kansas, and Mr. and Mrs. Silas Hancock, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Young, Mr. and Mrs. William LeGrece, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rogers, all of Independence.

Nearly four hundred relatives, Saints, and friends attended the funeral. On the next day, Sunday, September 9, over a hundred Atherton Saints attended the funeral of the other girl killed with Nelda Lee Hancock, Marguerite Berry. Services for her were conducted at the Six-Mile Baptist Church.

Wednesday evening, September 5, the Atherton group held its annual business meeting. Brother J. A. Thomas was reelected pastor. Brother Ray Curtis was sustained as solicitor, and Mrs. Arthur Haus was reelected music director. The post of director of religious education now is filled by Wendell Van Tuyl, with Nina Amundsen, associate director. Sister D. R. Hughes was elected branch secretary, and W. P. Mitchell made treasurer. Bessie Stephenson was reelected librarian, and John Beebe was made second auditor.

Sunday night, September 9, Bishop J. A. Koehler was with the Atherton Saints, and spoke to them about the "Authority of the Priesthood."

Baptisms at Blue Springs

In the evening service of August 5, R. J. Stark occupied the pulpit, using "Music" as his subject. The theme was appropriate for this service particularly, for the choir of Liberty Street Church, Independence, was there to give some fine special numbers.

On the afternoon of August 12, two young women were baptized, Norma Campbell and Estella Livingstone. Alma Campbell performed the ordinance at the Second Church. The candidates were confirmed the following Sunday under the hands of C. A. Joice and J. S. Livingstone. At this service the choir sang "Lead Thou Me On," and J. A. Thomas, of Atherton, spoke using Nehemiah 6:3 as a text.

The Sabbath school starts ten minutes earlier now, at 10:10 a. m. Brother Gerald Phillips, the superintendent, is giving the extra time to others to develop their talents by way of giving Scripture readings, short talks, and other items.

Thursday evening, August 16, the young folks gathered on Oglevie's lawn. They played many games, and then went to the home of Brother and Sister Phillips for refreshments. Many Saints and friends attended.

No services were held in Blue Springs on the last Sunday of August. The Saints there met at Lees Summit with members of six other groups in the stake in a regional stake meeting. Amos Allen, stake president, was in charge.

Seven Baptized at Dallas, Texas

Seven candidates have been baptized at Dallas in the past few months. They are Betty Jane Davenport, Lois Bellert, Robert Bellert, Charles Clark, Helen Thompson, Mrs. Hazel Davenport, and F. O. R. Keeney. These have been made welcome in the branch.

Sad Sequel to New York and Philadelphia Conference

Priest Walter Scouten died very suddenly of a heart attack, after his arrival at his home at Delair, New Jersey. He had just attended the fall conference of New York and Philadelphia District at Elk Mills, Maryland, September 1 and 2, with Sister Scouten, and had assisted in serving the sacrament on Sunday afternoon. In his passing, Philadelphia Branch loses a humble and devout member of the priesthood.

Desire Prayers

Bridget Marglin, of Wilburton, Oklahoma, desires the prayers of the church that she may be relieved of her affliction.

R. L. Macrae Family Returns to the United States

Elder and Sister R. L. Macrae and daughter, missionaries to the Territory of Hawaii for several years, are returning to the United States so that Brother Macrae may be with his father, Elder W. S. Macrae, who lately retired from the Holden stake presidency because of ill health.

The Macraes have done a good work in the islands, and the Saints there are resolved to show their appreciation by carrying on the work which they started. They helped to organize the Young People's League and the junior choirs of the Chinese and Japanese branches. They sailed from Honolulu September 1, on the "Lurline."

Promise

He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.—Jesus.

Independence

Two weeks from today the Harvest Home Festival will open its doors to the public, and the people of Independence are now busy planning and arranging booths and accumulating produce for the exhibit. Elders T. A. Beck and Charles C. Koehler are general supervisors this year, and the harvest home festival committee is composed of John F. Sheehy, J. S. Kelley, and T. A. Beck. Considerable interest is being shown in the two new features this year, the hobby show, and the display of Independence manufacturing concerns.

The Harvest Festival Choir will present its concert at 3:30 p. m., October 7, the closing day of the festival, in the Auditorium, under the direction of George E. Anway. Enthusiastic rehearsals have marked the past few weeks for all groups of singers. Next Sunday Independence and Kansas City singers will rehearse at the Stone Church at 4 p. m., and on September 30, the entire choir will assemble in the Auditorium at 3 p. m. for the final rehearsal. Every singer is urged to be present.

Clubs of Independence are beginning their fall and winter program. Now that Paul N. Craig is home from a month's vacation in Colorado the Wahdemna Choral Club will hold its first rehearsal of the fall months this evening, opening its ninth season of work. The Æolian Chorus will meet Friday under his direction. Brother Craig directed the Stone Church Choir Sunday.

The White Masque Players held their first meeting Monday evening, September 17, at the home of the club president, Miss Margaret Sturges. This year will be devoted to the study of religious drama.

Walnut Park Church

The class of second year intermediate girls taught by Fern Van Horn made a historical trip to Richmond and other points of interest in the early history of the church Sunday, leaving immediately following the church school session. This trip was in the nature of a reward offered in a church attendance contest conducted among the classes of the intermediate department during the months of July, August and September. Elder John F. Sheehy accompanied the girls and lectured on the various places of interest which they visited.

At eleven o'clock Sunday morning Elder Amos Chase was the speaker in the upper auditorium. The anthem by the choir, which preceded the sermon was, "More Love to Thee, O Christ." In the lower auditorium the juniors heard a story by Sister Edith Barwise, a travelogue by Ruth Bryant, and the principal talk was by Ben Kramer.

The religio was entertained Sunday evening at the program period by a band concert under the direction of Fred Mollison. Following the class period and preceding the program the three elective representatives of Walnut Park in the general young people's council were chosen. Those selected were Duane Fish, Vernon Sackman, and Ruth Bryant. These, together with the young people's leader, Kenneth Morford, comprise Walnut Park's allotment of four representatives in the council. Ruth Bryant and Duane Fish are new members, taking the places of Violet Campbell and Gomer Stowell, who have served during the past two years.

Pastor Frank McDonald was the speaker Sunday evening, taking his text from the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, and building his sermon around the story of the ten virgins. This was the first Sunday evening service after the return from the Campus meetings and a nice crowd was present.

Second Church

"The Unfinished Task," was the theme of Elder R. D. Weaver at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, and Pastor A. K. Dillee was in charge. A quartet sang, "Though Your Sins Be as Scarlet."

Finis Beebe was the speaker at the junior service, and "Friendship" was his theme. Bernice Wisemore told a story, Nadine Inman sang a solo, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," and Frances Freeman told the story, "The Good Samaritan."

Elder Weaver was again the speaker in the evening, and his theme was "Did God Create in Vain?" Preceding the sermon, Elder Earl Audet conducted a short song service. There was a vocal solo during the evening services by Mrs. Sam Edmunds, "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say."

The missionary services held last week by Elder R. D. Weaver were greatly enjoyed and well attended. He is continuing his sermons this week.

Enoch Hill Church

The Saints met Monday, September 10, and approved the appointments presented by the First Presidency: Pastor, Elder H. L. Barto; bishop's agent, J. C. Alexander; church custodian, Neal Crandell. The Presidency has other work for E. A. Thomas who served the congregation as pastor during the past year.

The midweek prayer services are being held in the different homes. The young people met with Group 32 in the home of Sister Esther and Nellie Kramer.

Thursday evening after a short choir practice, members and other friends went to the home of Brother and Sister Robert Whitsitt and surprised Lula with a farewell handkerchief shower. She left for Los Angeles, California, Friday.

The Dorcas Class composed of women, has grown so that it has been deemed advisable to change places with another class in the choir loft. Sister Henry Hartman is the teacher of this group.

Elder H. E. Winegar talked to the church school Sunday and was also the eleven o'clock speaker, his topic being "Baptism." William Worth sang "Hushed Was the Evening Hymn."

Elder Joseph Martin was the evening speaker, and there was a good crowd present, although several from Enoch Hill went to the Stone Church to hear Mr. Harry Friedberg present the theme, "The Jewish Gathering."

Spring Branch Church

The eight-fifteen prayer meeting Sunday morning was young people's service, and Pastor M. C. Jacobsen was in charge. Opening remarks were by Elder F. A. Cool. The young members were very active.

A duet, "My Jesus, I Love Thee," was sung at the eleven o'clock service by F. A. Cool and Gomer Cool. The speaker of the hour was Brother Hendirks, and for the basis of his talk he used, "God Speaks."

Attendance Sunday evening proved that everyone was glad to be back home for the service. A goodly number attended both the evening church school and the sermon. At the church school hour the new teachers for the year were selected, then a program followed: Duet, "Gently He Will Lead Us On," was sung by Gladys Dixon and Frank Robinson; a talk, "The Value of the Church School to the Group," by Benson Brown; a second talk, "The Value of the Church School to the Individual," by Alma Dixon, and a duet, "Jesus Leads," by Francis and James Tankard.

At the sermon hour a chorus of young people sang "Oh, Happy Day." All the Saints were glad to have with them Patriarch Ammon White at the eight o'clock hour. He is holding a week of services on the lawn of Brother and Sister Reed on Walnut Street.

The Saints were pleased to witness on Sunday the wedding of Arlene Copeland and Woodrow Howe, Elder J. S. Andes officiating. Preceding the ceremony a piano recital was given by Imogene Dixon followed by a song, "I Love You Truly," by Alma Dixon. The bride's attendant was Velma Jones, and the bridegroom was attended by Lawrence Jones. A reception was held following the ceremony at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Jones.

Spring Branch held their yearly election Wednesday evening, Elder John F. Sheehy being present and speaking on "Time" before business matters were taken up. Elder F. A. Cool was recommended and elected as pastor for the coming year. Elder M. C. Jacobsen was recommended and elected assistant pastor.

Englewood Church

Sunday, September 2, the young people held a prayer meeting at eight o'clock. Attending the Stewartsville reunion has given them great enthusiasm.

Five or six bore testimonies of their desire to serve.

At the sacrament service Elder A. G. Hougas was in charge. Elder S. A. Burgess gave the communion talk. After the sacrament had been partaken, Elder Ward A. Hougas gave a short talk.

Elder A. G. Hougas was the speaker Sunday, September 9, at eleven o'clock.

Elder T. A. Beck, to be Englewood's new pastor, spoke at eleven o'clock, Sunday, September 16. At seven-thirty, music was furnished by a quartet composed of: Alba Sims, Katherine May, Glenn Closson, jr., and Ralph Dunlap. Also Brother and Sister Corliss McConnell sang a duet, accompanied by Sister Stella Howery. These numbers were adventitious to the theme, "Christ's Teachings," a splendid sermon delivered by Brother R. W. Howery, the speaker of the evening.

There has been an increased attendance at the midweek prayer meetings, and as a consequence a greater number of testimonies are given.

East Independence

Thursday night of last week this district held its annual election of officers in charge of the local pastor, Frank Minton and the general pastor, John F. Sheehy, assisted by Herbert L. Barto. The following officers were reelected: Pastor, Frank Minton; assistant, Clare Austin; custodian and bishop's agent, Thomas Thatcher; church school director, Clare Austin.

The bake sale held last Saturday by local workers brought them a sum of almost fifteen dollars which will be used toward decorating the interior of the church.

Sugar Creek Mission

At the September sacrament this mission had as guests Elder R. L. Goold and family of Argentine, Kansas. The occasion of their visit was the blessing of the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Beil.

Elder W. B. Paul, in charge of the service, was assisted by I. G. Clutter, R. L. Goold, Jack Lehman, and Otto Beil. This was a splendid meeting of prayers and testimonies, and the blessing of healing was given through administration.

There is no better way to cultivate taste in words than by constantly reading the best English. None of the words and expressions which are taboo in good society will be found in books of proved literary standing.—Emily Post.

Fisher, Arkansas

The Arkansas district conference was held there August 31 to September 2. Although there were not many out the first two days, Sunday brought together the largest crowd of Saints ever had in this city. They came from Hot Springs, Caraway, Bald Knob, Black Oak, Jonesboro, and Hardy. It was a busy day with church school at ten o'clock, preaching by Apostle R. S. Budd at eleven, dinner at the church, and sacrament at two in the afternoon. At this service Clark Carty, a member of Fisher Branch, was ordained to the office of teacher by Brother Budd. ### IN THESE TIMES

When people are looking for hope, faith, encouragement and inspiration there is One dependable Book for men and women, young and old, with the assurance that it will help them. That book is the Bible.

Through the centuries no one knows how many disheartened people it has given new strength to "carry on." Today many are turning to it for the first time in years, discovering with amazement that it has not lost one whit of its power.

ing Saints had returned home. A non-member remarked that this was the best sermon she had ever heard. When Brother Budd was there at another time, the professor of the high school remarked that it must cost the Saints quite a sum to get such a speaker.

District Missionary and President A. M. Baker was called away Sunday morning to preach a funeral sermon. Members were disappointed not to have him with them.

The branch is taking on new life. There is good attendance at the church school and almost half those who come are nonmembers. If the Saints would all come as they should, the church would be too small. The women's department is busy again but does not have their program fully planned for the winter.

There are ten Oriole girls in this local, but soon one will be moving away. Sister Helen Ziegenhorn is moving to Dexter, Missouri, with her parents, Brother and Sister Charles Ziegenhorn. Helen has been the branch organist. Some of these girls did all the work of giving the Children's Day program.

Our Departed Ones

GRUBBS.—Martha Jane Miller was born near Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, June 14, 1839, where she grew to womanhood. December 18, 1862, she was married to Charles W. Grubbs. To this union three children were born. Her husband passed away in 1869. She remained in Pennsylvania until 1904, when she moved to Bonesteel, South Dakota, where she had since made her home. She joined the church, May 12, 1908, and was a devoted follower of the Master until her death which occurred July 1, 1934. She had been in good health and sound mind and was able to attend to lighter house duties and gardening tasks until last year when she fell and injured her hip. Since then she had not been able to get around, and was cared for by her daughter, Mrs. May G. Ayres, with whom she made her home. She is survived by her three children, Mrs. Ayres, of Bonesteel; Will C. Grubbs, of Lincoln, Nebraska, and Fletcher T. Grubbs, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; nine grandchildren, ten great-grandchildren, two great-great-grandchildren, one sister, two brothers, others relatives and many friends. The funeral was held from the Saints' church at Bonesteel, Charles Soderstein, of Clearwater, Nebraska, conducting the funeral. Interment was in Bonesteel Cemetery.

■ Once Upon a Time

This is no fairy story. It is about a very unhappy man. He was so conscious of his own imperfections that he thought other people knew as much about them as he did. And that, of course, made him angry. So he began to dislike people very much.

To relieve his discomfort, he retaliated against other folk for what he thought they thought about him. He started a whispering campaign against them. He never said much at a time, and what he said was often remote from his purpose. His little tales and venomous sayings spread dissension and distrust in his neighborhood. Old friends began to pass each other on opposite sides of the street. There were no open quarrels, but relations were strained.

Strange to say, this retaliation did not bring him the satisfaction he craved. He was unhappier than ever, and he went even further in his defamations and became more reckless in his statements.

Neighbors can be deceived a little while, but not all the time. They saw inconsistencies in his stories and statements. His bitterness crept more boldly into the open, and they became disgusted by it.

One day there was an informal meeting at which the troubled man was not present. The neighbors all made up when they discovered the cause of the difficulty. It was a happy occasion when they understood each other again.

One man spoke up: "We ought to call Bill in. He ought to be told." They all agreed and Bill was called in. When he saw the friendly gathering of those he had been setting against each other, his face reddened, but he couldn't escape.

"Bill," said the spokesman, "we know what kind of things you have been saying against us, and we know what you have been doing. We took you on good faith for a long time, but now we have found you out." The speaker hesitated a bit as if groping for words to express his next thought. Then he came out with it: "We think you might want to apologize."

At first Bill was very angry, and he thought to bluster out of the situation; but when he looked at their strong, calm features and the half amused expressions of his neighbors' faces, he couldn't. Then he confessed and apologized. Strangely, he felt much better. Then he asked their forgiveness all around. The men all shook hands with him.

When the spokesman came to him he said, "Bill, I hope you won't do it again."

"I won't," promised Bill shakily.

And he never did.

■ The Animal Kingdom

"Our neighborhood," says the Pigeon, "is rapidly becoming animal conscious. Everybody seems to love animals. One family has been half feeding a cat all summer. The cat is very thin but in spite of neglect he remains faithful to them. At another home the children are mauling a pup to death. There are all kinds of animals in our community in various stages of neglect and starvation. People just will express their love for animals some way. We have everything but a cow and a donkey and it looks as if somebody will think of them soon. I am about ready to change the name of our place to the Animal Kingdom."

"This Ministry"

VI.—THE MAN WHO TALKS EASILY

The gift of ready address, of ease in conversation, is one that may be very helpful to its possessor. It is one that I have sometimes coveted, because it is invaluable in what we term "fireside preaching." And "fireside preaching" has been the means of many conversions—those intimate talks with people met on the train or in the field or in their homes. In the old days many such conversations were carried on far into the night.

Speech came slowly to me. In my younger days I talked only from force of necessity. I said, "Yes," or "No," or "Please pass the bread." "Bread, please," was even more economical, and usually sufficed. So it came about that I have always had a great admiration for the man who can talk fluently and entertainingly to anyone anywhere at any time on almost any subject.

However, easy speech has its dangers. Indulged in too freely it ceases to be entertaining. It then bores people and turns them away. The ordained man should check up on himself at that point. Indulged in without sufficient thought or conviction, a free use of words, may raise a question as to sincerity. It is better to be silent at times rather than to "make" talk back of which is no real feeling or fundamental faith.

Then there is a consideration even more to be reckoned with: the ordained man, if a visiting officer, a pastor, or a missionary admitted to the homes and lives of the people will hear and observe many things that he had best not report abroad. He will see and hear many fine things that he can relate to others helpfully; but there will be other things that he should forget, or at least keep to his own mind. The man who sees all things hears all things and tells all things is more than a nuisance—he is dangerous. The male gossip carrying the credentials of the church, going from branch to branch and home to home may do more damage than all his preaching can undo. It is a safe thing for the minister to keep away from rumors and scandals and gossip as much as is possible in his conversation. At that point the reticent man has some advantages over the man who talks easily. The latter will need to put an especial guard upon his lips.

The ministry will receive many confidences from the Saints. These are what the term implies, "confidences,"—evidences of confidence. They may be trivial—they may be exceedingly important, even tragic —confidences the confidant would die rather than to have them made public. Some tragedies of betrayal of such confidences have occurred in the past. The man or woman thus betrayed can scarcely forgive the betrayal, and may even be turned against the church by reason of the laxity of the church's representative. True, some of these confessions must be reported, but only to the right persons and at the proper times, as indicated under the law.

In the guarding of confidences the minister needs a fine sense of honor, of fitness,—a good judgment. Physicians receive such confidences, and as a class are very closed lipped. It is a matter of honor and professional ethics with them. The standards of the ministry should surely be no lower. At this point the man who talks easily must be on his guard. In moments of geniality, of expansiveness, of intimate conversation with friends, he may be prone to "spill out" such matters to his later regret. He should resolutely set a double lock on that part of his mind where such matters are filed away, and "on his lips the law of kindness;" the law of kindness at that point says, "Silence. There are other things to talk about."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Salt Lake City Choir Sings at Auditorium

On their return from Chicago where they sang at the concession of the Ford Motor Company at the Chicago Fair, the Tabernacle Choir of Salt Lake City arranged a stop on their homeward trip in order to visit Independence. This fine choir, containing more than 250 voices including some excellent solo artists, was accompanied by Heber J. Grant, President of the Utah Church.

Through the kind offer of Elias Woodruff, President of the Central States Mission of the Utah Church, the members of the two churches as well as many other citizens here were given an opportunity to hear this famous choir. The Auditorium easily accommodated the audience of more than four thousand people who were present on the occasion.

The program consisted of selections from sacred, operatic and popular numbers to suit a wide variety of tastes. The program was very greatly appreciated by those who heard it.

In an interval between parts of the program, President Grant gave a short inspirational address concerning the ideals of his church. President Frederick M. Smith spoke in behalf of the Reorganization near the close of the service.

The visitors were cordial and friendly and responded generously with encores when the applause indicated the desire of the audience to hear more. In spite of the fatigue of travel, they were in good spirits and a friendly time was enjoyed after the concert at a banquet served by the Laurel Club.

The Church New Year

(The article below is by Verne L. Deskin, president of the branch in Des Moines, Iowa. Because of its character and the time, we are sharing it with our readers and church workers in these columns.)

October first ushers in our church New Year. Hot weather, vacations, reunions are now history. We begin to think of increased activity. Our church school quarterlies are arranged in three year cycles commencing on that date. Our younger people are now busy in school. Our church new year is upon us. What shall we do about it?

Well might it be a time for new resolves, for increased activity, extended missionary zeal, higher Christian living. The call of the church is ever to come higher. The time to answer that call is Now. Every one of us can increase his interest and his active participation in every phase of church life. We can further our studies. We can extend our loyalty and deepen our devotions. Greater heed can be given the command to "warn our neighbors." And we dare not boast of one member whose quality of Christian living cannot be improved. If perchance you have gained one star, look beyond—there is another brighter and more wonderful. Hasten to gain it also, and another, and others—until the goals are reached.

If tomorrow finds us where we are today we have been unwise and slothful servants. We have done nothing to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Let it not be so with us. Let each day reveal to us a record of greater achievements and a lessening of the distance to our Christian goals. This alone means progress. Our membership might well be divided into two classes—those who achieve and those who fail. One group continuously climbs to new heights and upon it rests Divine approval and all of the promises of the gospel. The other travels the lower road and is crushed by sin and all the curses of hell.

Lost moments of the past can never be found—but the coming church year is full of wonderful and precious opportunities for all who choose the high way of life.

It is your privilege to have a vital part in the greatest movement in modern history. The goals are yet beyond. Their attainment awaits your approach toward perfection. Let your response be yea. When shall you and I begin? Not tomorrow, but now.—The Church New Year.

Herald Subscription Week, October 14-21

We are setting aside the week from October 14 to 21 as Herald Subscription Week. In this interval, we are hoping to have all expired subscriptions of the Herald renewed through the efforts of branch publicity agents and friends of the Herald. A good many subscriptions are not renewed simply because people forget, or neglect to take care of the matter. This week should serve as a reminder to all that Herald subscriptions should be renewed.

We have a very fine special treat for those who are taking the Herald beginning the week of November 6. We are beginning the serial publication of the memoirs of the late President Joseph Smith. The memoirs will be filled with reminiscences of important personages and events during past years.

If church members will renew their subscriptions during Herald Subscription Week, they will get their orders to this office in time to receive the first number of the memoirs and thus will miss no issue of the Herald.

The publication of the memoirs is a great literary event for the church and we believe that members will be very happy to have the Herald and read these chapters as they come through each week.

Read Advertising Carefully

This Will Save Delay and Expense

Considerable trouble and annoyance, not to mention the delay and expense involved, are caused when people do not read the advertisements carefully. Orders come to the Herald Publishing House for goods which are advertised by other firms simply because the people who order the goods have failed to read the advertisements carefully.

For the Herald Office, this is an expensive thing. Fully half of our correspondence is entailed because people have read too hurriedly and inaccurately, and have failed to provide correct information, addresses and other details.

We urge our patrons, for their own protection and convenience as well as for our own interests, to read advertisements carefully and read them clear through before ordering.

We always do our best to help patrons whenever possible and we can help them best when they help us by being sure of their information.

ACROSS THE DESK

By F. M. S.

Informal Chats From the Office of the President

AT THE COUNCILS of the church there have been in recent years a number of discussions relative to the Scandinavian Mission and its continuance. The worthwhileness of this field as one of missionary endeavor is indicated in an interesting bit of information made available through the Christian Science Monitor. In this article Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, United States Minister to Denmark, states that adult educational activities in Denmark have been so eminently successful that Denmark has the lowest percentage of illiteracy of any country in the world, and this is largely attributed to a progressive educational system which has been operating since the middle of the 19th century. Among the Scandinavian people, in particular the Danish, there has been great social and economic progress in the last few decades and this progress has doubtless been fostered by its high standard of education.

These facts are all significant in the light of our own efforts to maintain missionary activities in this interesting group of countries.

ARTHUR OAKMAN recently wrote us telling of the activities at the Southern California reunion and commenting upon the excellent work done by various brethren together with some of the outstanding features of the reunion which seems to have been greatly enjoyed by all who attended. After speaking of the numbers of people who had discussed with him and with Brother Gleazer some of their difficulties and troubles and tribulations, Brother Oakman remarks:

"I believe, Brother Smith, that Zion will be born out of adversity but believe also that strength and power will be given to us in proportion to our faith in the prophetic vision. I am sure that the time is now in process when only those who have the Spirit of the Almighty will be able to stand. I know this is true in my own life."

IN a recent number of the Kansas Citizen, a publication by the Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City, which has passed over my desk, I note that the population of Kansas City for 1934 is officially estimated by the Bureau of the Census at 412,600. This is a gain of 12,854 since the Federal census of April 1, 1930. This gain is somewhat less than in previous decennial periods but is larger, proportionately, than that of some of the other cities in this section. The gain in Kansas City for the four-year period was 3.1%, compared with 1% for St. Louis, 1.3% for Kansas City, Kansas, and .005% for St. Joseph.

This will be of interest to Herald readers who are interested in Jackson County matters and the regions round about.

MANY of us have wondered how Brother Gilbert J. Waller of Honolulu accomplishes so much, both in secular as well as in church work, but the answer is found in the way he systematizes his time as well as his work and this systematization is indicated in an extract from a recent letter of his to me, which I quote:

"I am still keeping very busy in my business work as well as in the church work. Yesterday, Sunday, I had a busy day. Starting with the Japanese Branch in the morning, I taught in the Sunday school class and afterwards preached. Then I went to the Chinese Branch and preached there and afterwards to the Main Branch where I also preached after confirming the little boy adopted by Brother and Sister Etzenhouser who had been baptized by Brother Etzenhouser the day before. In the afternoon I gave a blessing to a young man who was recently baptized, and who was really converted through my preaching. In the evening, I visited a sick young sister who is a school teacher on the Island of Molokai and who is now home in Honolulu in bed, resting on account of being threatened with tuberculosis. Later in the evening I taught a class at the Department of Recreation at the Japanese Branch and then preached in the Main Branch at the evening seven-thirty service."

It was my pleasure to visit Brother Waller in Honolulu some years ago and I saw him through some of his activities and then learned that his regularity of life, steadiness of habit, and close systematizing of time were the answers to the question, "How can he accomplish all the work he does?" We appreciate Brother Waller's devotion to the church and the splendid ability he brings to the solution of the problems that he finds in church work.

Training for Careers at Graceland

Improved Service in Charting Courses

They're training for careers—not alone for college graduation—this year at Graceland. College graduation is not too difficult for a young person of normal intelligence and ambition; but a successful career is more difficult to attain. Graceland is concerned about careers, and is giving more detailed help to students in planning them than ever before.

The new enrollment plan entails individual interviews with each student by faculty advisers. Graceland has ever been an institution with a reputation for careful thought and planning to aid each individual. This new step makes the individual-attention offering of the school even more valuable. The student who is "Not quite sure" is given wise direction best aims for later years are discussed, thorough investigation of meeting the requirements of graduate schools is made, so that by the time the student is actually enrolled he has not just a course mapped for the year. He has a vital year's plan that will mean the greatest aid and value in his future life.

Enrollment week at Graceland College this fall was characterized by several far reaching changes. The method of enrollment had been revamped to better meet the needs of the students, the administration building held a new office layout, and the new freshman group composed of one hundred-twelve seriously threatened the highest record, one hundred-twenty, in the history of the school.

The new quarters made in the old Administration Building have greatly increased the possible service of the administration to the student body. A. R. Gilbert, director of student personnel, E. E. Closson, director of student activities, J. C. Bergman, registrar, and A. Neal Deaver, business manager are now stationed in a new and more accessible office in place of the former small individual rooms. The former library, which had been the museum for the past two years, has been remodeled and converted into a general business office of ample size and adequate means for quick communication and office efficiency.

The office that was formerly Mr. Bergman's is now used as a private conference room and a door has been cut through the wall making it readily accessible to the desks on the west side of the general office. An adequate student waiting room adjoins the general offices.

The bookstore has been moved to the room next the former business office. It is planned to construct a rest room and added facilities in the basement.

Hence, viewed from all angles, the new academic year at Graceland points to greater profit to all students, and greater facilities for efficiency and service on the part of the administration.

My Solace

For rest, God gave me the deep silent night,

For peace, the moon's calm glow;

For guidance, He gave me the morning light,

For joy, the day bestowed.

For music, He gave me the song of the birds,

For thirst, the sparkling dew,

For truth, He gave me His own Holy Word

For solace, He gave me you.

For perfume, He gave me the sweet scented flowers,

For shade, the branches high;

For strength, He gave me the wind's mighty power,

For beauty, the sunset skies.

For harmony, the voice of nature did blend,

For colors, the rainbow's hues;

For comfort, He knew I'd need a true friend,

That's why he gave me you.

Zion's Christian Legion Organized at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario

Under the direction of Apostle D. T. Williams, of the Quorum of Twelve, a group of young people at Sault Ste. Marie met recently, to discuss the organization of Zion's Christian Legion.

Following a brief explanatory talk by Apostle Williams, it was decided that a company be organized, Elder G. A. Edwards being elected commander. Other officers are Elizabeth Brecher, secretary; Brother Brown, treasurer; Brother F. Miller and Mildred Miller, directors of solicitation and socialization, respectively; Irma Sanderson, director of publicity.

This is youth's church. It was so established. The dreams, the vitality, the progressiveness, the enthusiasm and the faith of youth, tempered with inspiration and fortified by the devotion of our forefathers, demands the challenge—"WE WILL NOT FAIL!"—Bishop N. Ray Carmichael.

Has Seen Five World's Records Broken in the Stanford Stadium

Elder Myron R. Schall, an assistant director of physical education of Stanford University in California, piloted a crowd of Latter Day Saint young people over the Stanford campus during the Northern California reunion in July. Among a number of other interesting places he took them to see the Stanford Stadium and athletic playing fields.

The stadium seats 90,000 people. Its turf was smooth and green like a velvet rug. Brother Schall has seen five world's records broken on the turf and the running track of the stadium.

Stanford's Ben Eastman broke the world's record in the 440-yard run on one Saturday afternoon, and came back just two weeks later to the same track and broke the world's record in the 880-yard run. The late Eric Krenz of Stanford broke the world's record in the discus throw, and Phi Beta Kappa Johnny Lyman broke the world's record in the shot put out on the turf. In 1928 Bud Spencer of Stanford broke the world's record in the 400-meter run. On the football field Stanford teams have defeated such teams as West Point, Army, Dartmouth, Pittsburgh, Minnesota, Washington, and California.

Brother Schall is president of the San Jose Branch and counselor to the district president of Northern California.

My Wish

I ask but this—
To keep my eyes
On yonder star,
Nor care to know
How far it is:
To walk with God,
And He with me,
To know what is
Was meant to be,
To realize that I am His!

—Pat L. Miller, in Call to Worship (Madison).

Many men fail in the fruit business because they put the lemons up front. Many men fail in life because they do the same thing.

You cannot believe little things and do great things. You cannot believe in half successes and accomplish whole ones. A man's faith sets the boundaries of his work. Back of all free action lies some conviction.

A Voice From the Past

Letters written by Almira (Mack) Covey between 1835 and 1844

Presented through the courtesy of Mr. Frank Whittemore of Ann Harbor, Michigan, and prepared for publication by Audentia Anderson

MOTHER LUCY SMITH as the mother of the Prophet Joseph Smith was affectionately called, had a brother, Stephen Mack, who became a pioneer settler and very influential man in the territory of Michigan, particularly in the region of Detroit and Pontiac.

Last winter it was my great privilege, in company with my daughter, Sister Bertha A. Hulmes, to visit in Ann Arbor, Michigan, a great-grandson of this Colonel Stephen Mack. This gentleman, Mr. W. Frank Whittemore, in the course of our visit, brought out a sheaf of old letters which had been the property of his grandmother, Harriet (Mack) (Hatch) Whittemore, and came into his possession after the death of that lady.

Mr. Whittemore, very kindly and generously, copied four of those letters for me and gave me permission to pass them on to the readers of the Herald. The latter will, I am sure, find much of interest and much of encouragement and inspiration, in this "voice from the past" which bears so valiant a testimony to the Restored Gospel, even while raised in the midst of sore trial and persecutions. We have tried to preserve the quaint spelling we found in some instances, but on the whole feel a great admiration for the culture, refinement and education reflected in this daughter of the frontier, so long ago.

In her valuable little book, Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, Mother Lucy Smith first mentions her niece, the writer of these letters, in the following connection:

"About the first of April of the same year in which the Book of Mormon was published, Joseph came again from Pennsylvania, and preached to us several times. On the morning of the sixth day of the same month, my husband and Martin Harris were baptized. . . . On the same day, April 6th, 1830, the Church was organized.

"Shortly after this, my sons were all ordained to the ministry, even Don Carlos who was but fourteen years of age. Samuel was instructed to take a number of the Books of Mormon and go on a mission to Livonia to preach and make sale of the books if possible. Whilst he was making preparations to go on this mission, Miss Almira Mack arrived in Manchester from Pontiac. This young woman was a daughter of my brother, Stephen Mack, whose history I have already given. She received the gospel as soon as she heard it, and was baptized immediately, and has ever since* remained a faithful member of the Church."

*Lucy Mack Smith began her book late in 1844 and it was copyrighted in January, 1846. Later on she describes, in some detail, a visit she made to these relatives in Detroit and Pontiac, her niece Almira accompanying her. This was in the early 30's, after the death of her brother Stephen. Stephen Mack's widow joined the church and was with her daughter Almira in Nauvoo, as will be seen by the following letters which, with this preliminary explanation and others which I shall introduce in the form of footnotes, I am happy to present.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Letter No. 1

Liberty, Missouri, June 9, 1835.

Dear Sister:

I received your letter together with John's<sup>1</sup> and Mrs. Cooper's,<sup>2</sup> with much satisfaction, being very glad to hear from you all. I have also received one from Almon<sup>3</sup> and Mrs. Dort's<sup>4</sup> family.

When I wrote you last my health was poor but I think it is gaining slowly. I feel well satisfied with this country and am well contented, but still I should like it much better if my relatives were all here. And I hope that we shall see the day when we shall meet again.

I think you would be pleased with this country. It is pleasant, and it is a good place to get a living. There is a plenty of grain of all kinds, a plenty of meat, milk, butter, &c, and we have a plenty of hackberries, blackberries, strawberries, gooseberries, mulberries, blue grapes, little wine grapes, priscimons, black and red haws, paupaus, raspberries, wild plumbs, hickory nuts, walnuts, chinkipins, pickans, and some apples and sweet potatoes; but I must say that the Society of the Missouriians is not so agreeable as I have seen.

When I speak of the Missouriians, I mean the old Inhabitants, which are mostly Southern people, and their living is mostly bacon and dodgers; perhaps you may be as ignorant about the dodgers as I was, but I will tell you what they are. They are a sort of Johnny Cake made of cornmeal; this they eat in preference to wheat, which makes it much better for our Eastern people who like wheat best.

Our people that came from Michigan are all well except some of Br. Fosdick's family which have had the ague. Mary is with them and I am with L. Curtis.

I saw a man a few days since that saw N. W. Mack a short time ago at Boonsville, about 100 miles from this place, he mentioned our family to him, he said he was well acquainted with us and that Father was his own Uncle; he told him that he would write to me soon. When I get the letter I will send you the news. The man said that Mr. Mack was trading in that place and was doing well.

Br. O. Houghton started last week for Michigan and he promised me that he would call and see you all. Remember me to Richard<sup>5</sup> and tell him that his Aunt Almira often thinks of him, and was much surprised to hear that he was again married, so soon.

If you have heard from Stephen<sup>6</sup> I wish you would let me know where he is, for I have heard nothing from him, and I do not know where he is so that I can write to him. Tell Mr. Whittemore<sup>7</sup> that when you write I should like to have a line from him, if he can afford it, and also from the children.

Tell James<sup>8</sup> I want to know how his leg gets along, and if he can walk without crutches, and ask George<sup>9</sup> if he wants to see somebody.

Tell Mother<sup>10</sup> that I should like another letter from her and tell her that I hope to see her in this Land, if the Lord spares our lives. I have learnt by the papers that Michigan has declared war against Ohio, but I do not know as this information is correct. If it is so, you will probably know, and I wish you to write me about it.

Charlotte wishes to be remembered to you and all inquiring friends; and I presume that Mary would, if she knew that I was writing. Charlotte says if you know anything about Delia she wishes you to write it when you write to me.

Give my respects to Mr. Stanley's<sup>11</sup> and Mr. Buckland's families, and also to Mrs. Comstock, Mrs. Newcome, and all who take the trouble to inquire for me.

Now, Harriet, I do not know what else to write about unless it is about Mormonism (as many call it), and perhaps you will think this to be an old story; but if it is with you it is not with me. My faith is as strong as ever in this thing, and I rejoice that the Lord has suffered me to live in this day when this work has come forth to the children of men; for it ever has been my desire since my remembrance to be prepared to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but how to obtain this blessing I did not know until I heard the ways of salvation preached by this people, who are reproachfully called Mormons. And if I hold out faithful unto the end I shall have reason in Eternity to praise the Lord for sparing my life to this day; but I am liable to go astray and I may yet prove unfaithful, and be numbered with the foolish Virgins and be cast out of the Kingdom.

But if I am, I alone shall be to blame, for I have had great privileges, and the Lord has given me much light and bestowed many spiritual blessings upon me. Therefore, it depends on my faithfulness if I obtain a crown of Celestial Glory.

Perhaps some may think me deluded and feel to pity me; but they will soon know the truth of these things, for great things await this generation. And it is for this reason that I feel so anxious for you and the rest of my friends, for behold, the coming of our Savior is nigh at hand, and this generation shall not pass away until he will appear in his glory! And we ought to be prepared for that day! Although we may not, either of us, live to see that day, yet if we wish to be happy we must be prepared for it, that whether in life or in death we may abide the day. For when he comes, his Saints who have slept in death will arise and come with him, and live on the Earth a thousand years; while the Wicked have to remain in their graves until the thousand years are expired. Then they will have to appear before the judgement seat of Christ.

Harriet, I want you to write to me what you think about these things, for I do think it is time that you were preparing for death, judgment and Eternity; for we do not know how soon we may be called to leave this world.

Remember me to Mrs. Bent, if there; tell her Mary is well. Tell Sister Kellogg that I am looking for a letter from her every mail. She requested Mary to write about Little Bathia Fordham; tell her she is with me, and is well, and a good girl, and often speaks of her and little Mormon.

I should like very much to have you here to eat strawberries and mulberries with me, for they are now ripe and a plenty of them. The mulberries grow on very large trees and look and taste like blackberries.

I wish you to write to me often, and accept of this, from your Sister,

Almira Scobey
To Harriet Whittemore.

The Church in this land lives in peace at this time, the inhabitants of this and the surrounding Counties are very friendly except the people in Jackson; they are now selling their slaves thinking that this will soon become a free State.

Notes. The supernumerals I have put in the above letter refer to the following individuals:

<sup>10</sup>Almira's mother, born Temperance Bond. She was then (1835) living, a widow, in Pontiac.

<sup>11</sup>Mr. Stanley and Mr. Buckland were brothers-in-law to Almira, her sister Ruth having married the former and her sister Rhoda the latter. They were twins.

Letter No. 2

Commerce, Ill. Jan. 19, 1840

Affectionate Sister:

After a long silence I once more taken my pen to write a few lines to my absent friends; and it was not because I had forgotten you that I did not write. It was partly through negligence, and also that I had more cares involving upon me than what I formerly had when I wrote you so often.

Mother<sup>1</sup> wishes me to acknowledge the receipt of 20 dollars which she received in your letter dated November 15th. Your letter gave us much satisfaction as it always does to hear from our absent friends and to hear that they are well.

As for our healths, they are gaining. We have all of us been very sick through the Summer. Mother has had several attacks of the chills and fever<sup>2</sup> this Winter but they did not last long and now I think she is about as well as usual. My children have the ague very little, while Brother Dort's<sup>3</sup> family are all well. He has a young daughter, five weeks old. Fanny Dort<sup>4</sup> has lived with me most of the time since they came here. She is now to be married, a week from today, to Mathew Casto. I am not acquainted with him, but it is thought that she will do very well.

We have been requested in several letters to give a history of the proceedings of the mob in Missouri, but this is more than I can do! It is more than I can do to paint to you our feelings when surrounded by a wicked mob, not allowed to even go out of home to our farms without leave from that wicked crew! You can better judge what my feeling was than I can tell, when seeing my husband taken away to prison with about 50 others. And for what? Nothing but our religion! He was kept there three weeks and then released, as they could find nothing against him.

Mother bore her trials very well. She said she never wishes herself back to Michigan; and I can say, for one, that I have never as yet repented of uniting myself to this persecuted people, but feel willing to suffer for Christ's sake. But, Harriet, it is no small trial to see your houses surrounded by a wicked mob, threatening your lives, and even killing some, and we not knowing, when we laid ourselves down at night, but what we should all be massacred before morning! For this was the orders from the Governor of Missouri!

I could not on one sheet of paper give you an account of the sufferings of this people, but there is a correct history, from the beginning, to be printed, then you can learn the right of the story, for I presume you hear many things that are not correct.

I have not heard anything from Henry<sup>5</sup> and have not had time that I could write to him, but I should like to have him come and make us a visit. Carlos Buckland<sup>6</sup> has been to see us twice. The last time he came as a commander of a company belonging to the mob! I talked very plain to him about coming to drive his Grandmother, Uncle and Aunt from their home. He did not like it much; he has been in the place since, but did not come to see us.

I want you should remember me to all of my Brothers and Sisters as one, for I think of them all and want to see them, but I do not know what to say about going there next summer. We have so many disappointments that I know not what calculations to make. By your writing I see that you feel uneasy about us for fear that we suffer for the necessities of life; but give yourself no trouble about that, for we have enough to eat, drink, and to wear.

Mother says to remember her to Mr. Whittemore<sup>1</sup> and Harriet,<sup>2</sup> and to all enquiring friends. Remember me to all of your Children. Tell brother John<sup>3</sup> that I feel to sympathize with him in his loss.

You must excuse me for not writing more, for it gives me the sick head ache to write, and this is one great reason of my not writing oftener.

Enoch<sup>10</sup> says he wants to see Aunt Harriet; he very often gets out the team and starts to Michigan to see the boys.

I want you should write as soon as you receive this, and accept of this from

Sister Almira Covey.<sup>11</sup>

Addressed to Mrs. Harriet Whittemore, Pontiac, Oakland County, Mich.

The numerals in above letter refer to the following:

<sup>1</sup>It is not clear when Stephen Mack's widow went to the Missouri settlements of the Saints, but it is evident she went through the persecutions incident to their removal therefrom.

<sup>5</sup>Henry Hatch was a nephew, being a son of her sister Harriet by her first marriage. Her father was Rufus Hatch. "At the time of this letter he was working for a stage company near Ottawa, Ill. In 1850 he went around the Horn to California during the gold rush. My father writes in his diary in 1866 that they had just heard of him—the first time in 8 years—had supposed him dead." So writes Mr. Frank Whittemore.

<sup>7</sup>Mr. Gideon O. Whittemore was well liked by the Mack family. When Lucy Mack Smith and her son Hyrum and others visited Detroit, he was very kind to them and introduced them to the pastor of his church, and others.

<sup>10</sup>Her own son—a little fellow, who only played at hitching up horses and starting for Michigan.

<sup>11</sup>Some time between the date of the former letter (from Missouri) and this one Almira had changed her name from Scobey to Covey.

Letter No. 3

Nauvoo, Ill. Feb. 24, 1842

Dear Sister:

With pleasure we received your letter last evening, which you wrote while in Detroit. We were very glad to hear from you, for Mother had got almost tired of sending to the post office. It is not long since I wrote you and put in the mail. I have also written you a line by Mr. Barlow and he said he would call and see you.

Our family are well at this time, excepting myself. Yesterday I had a turn of the sick headache and I have not got over it yet. So you must excuse me if I do not write much. You said you would take care of Almon<sup>1</sup> while I wrote. I wish you had him long enough to have a play spell with him for he is very well and playful. He is now sitting on the floor by his grandmother. Enoch<sup>2</sup> and Joseph are out doors husking corn!

Mother's health has been better this winter than it was last; her hands have troubled her but very little this winter and she has not felt the cold as much. We have had a very warm and pleasant winter, more so than I have ever before experienced.

Aunt Lucy's<sup>3</sup> health is better this winter than it was when you was here.<sup>4</sup> Joseph's wife has had a babe but has buried it.<sup>5</sup> She is getting very smart again. Hyrum's<sup>6</sup> family are well and he talks of going to Michigan this next summer.

You wrote that you should expect Mother and I out there this next summer, but I think I shall hardly get there so soon. It takes money to go with, and that does not grow on every bush, But if Mother can find company to go with I think she will go and make you another visit.

You wanted me to write you about Fanny,<sup>7</sup> but I cannot write much about her for I do not know much about her. She was here this Winter and staid two weeks, and since I have heard that her husband has moved her home.

You must remember us all to Harriet<sup>8</sup> and Mary,<sup>9</sup> and Mother says remember her to Mrs. Raymond and all enquiring friends. Tell Mrs. Phillips that two of her Grandchildren live in the same yard with us, by the name of Asaph and Harriet Rice. They are well, and we see her son very often; they are well.

You appeared very anxious in your letter for Mother to have a room by herself. This has always been my wish but it was not in our power to have it. If we had been suffered to remain in Missouri and our property not destroyed we could have done very differently, for there we had a valuable place and everything around us to make us comfortable. But we had to leave it. But I am not discouraged; the most I care about is on Mother's account—that we cannot make her as comfortable as we would wish in her old age. Mr. Covey said he would finish off a room in this house for her but she says she would rather he would build a new one, and there is a valuable lot here to be sold very cheap, and Mr. Covey tells her that if she can get the money for him to buy that lot he will put up a good brick house on it this summer, and have her a good room in it where she can be away from the noise of the children; and he will let her have the house in her hands for her security until he pays her the money again. She requests me to write to Mr. Whittemore about it, and request him to send by Mr. Barlow all the money<sup>10</sup> that he could get, if Mr. Barlow does not leave there before you receive this.

And if you cannot send by him she wants you to send it by mail, as much at a time as you think it prudent; but she would rather you would send it by him if possible, for he is a man to be trusted. He said he could go to Pontiac for us but his business was at Superior, with Mr. Rice, son-in-law to Mr. Phillips.

We were very glad to hear from Uncle Jason's<sup>11</sup> people, and I wish you would send the name of the place where they live that we may know where to direct a letter. I wish you would write as soon as you receive this, and accept of this from Your Sister,

Almira Covey.

Mr. Ira Rice, living in Superior about 7 miles from Ypsilanti, is coming here this spring to move his family, and if Mr. Barlow does not go to Pontiac you could send by him. He can receipt the money to you and can bring it here, he expects to start in April.

Addressed to Mrs. Harriet Whittemore, Pontiac
Oakland County, Mich.

Numeral references are as follows:

<sup>2</sup>Enoch was born 26 Aug. 1837, and Joseph was born 2 March 1839; hence Enoch was 4½ years old when this letter was written, and Joseph nearly three: "Some sturdy corn huskers!" comments Mr. Whittemore.

<sup>4</sup>Mr. Frank Whittemore remembers his father telling of being taken to Nauvoo, on a visit when he was a child, and of sitting on the Prophet Joseph's knee. The latter was his mother's cousin.

<sup>5</sup>This is the unnamed child of Joseph's and Emma's which is mentioned in the Prophet's diary but which seems to have dropped out of the family records kept by various historians.

<sup>6</sup>At Mr. Whittemore's home it was my privilege to read a lengthy letter written by Hyrum Smith to his cousin Harriet, as he acted in the capacity of amanuensis for his aged aunt, her mother. It is beautifully and evenly written, looking almost like script.

<sup>7</sup>Fanny Dort, niece to Almira; referred to in a former letter as about to marry Mathew Casto.

<sup>11</sup>Lucy Mack Smith writes of her brother Jason as being a missionary-healer who spent a life of devotion in ministering to the sick. I believe he lived in Nova Scotia.

Letter No. 4

Nauvoo, Ill. July 18, 1844<sup>1</sup>

Dear Sister:

Mother has just received your letter which informed us of the death of your little George,<sup>2</sup> which was painful news to us, for you know he was our favorite. We cannot face his loss as you do, for there is no one that knows a parent's feeling at the loss of a child until he is called to pass through the same scene. Yet we feel to sympathise with you in your affliction. I had anticipated seeing him again on earth, but he is now gone beyond all trouble and we shall meet him again where parting is not known. Yes, we shall meet our little ones in Eternity, where sorrow is not known.

Your trouble, you think is as much as you can bear, but it is not like Aunt Lucy's! What must have been her feelings at seeing two<sup>3</sup> of her sons brought into the house dead—murdered by wicked men! When your little boy was sick you could be with him and administer to his wants, and when he was gone you could bury him with decency; but this privilege she could not have, for they were murdered, yes cruelly murdered, in prison, when waiting for trial—trial for crimes of which they were not guilty. Yet, to satisfy their accusers, the Governor requested them to give themselves up for trial, and pledged his honor, and also the faith of the State, that they should be protected until they could receive a trial according to law.

They were placed in an upper room in Carthage jail. The Governor had several hundred troops with him, but he dismissed all but two companies. One company he took along with him and came to Nauvoo, and the other company he left to guard the jail where the prisoners were confined. There was but 8 men placed at the prison to guard it, and the others were a quarter of a mile distant.

In the Governor's absence there was a mob of about 200 men rushed upon the jail, overpowered the guard, and there committed the blackest crime that can be found upon the pages of history since our Savior was hung upon the cross.<sup>4</sup> There two of the noblest men on earth were slain, and for what? Was it for crimes they had committed? I answer, No; but it was because they professed the religion of Jesus Christ! They were Prophets of the Lord; and they here laid down their lives as did the Prophets in ancient days!

Yes, they have sealed their testimony with their blood, and "greater love hath no man than to lay down his life for a brother." They have done this for to save this people, for had it not been done, this city would have been in ashes and its inhabitants exterminated! For there were those that thirsted for blood! And they are not yet satisfied, for there are more that they wish to slay; but may God forbid; for they have shed the blood of the Lord's Anointed, and may this satisfy!

It appears from observations that Hyrum and Joseph both made before they left for Carthage that they were aware of this thing, but we knew it not; neither did their families, for had it been they could not have let them go! Joseph returned the third time to bid his family farewell, it seemed that he could hardly leave them!

But he did it, to appease the wrath of a wicked people. He has told us heretofore that he would lay down his life for us, but little did we think that he would do it so soon!

While they had the prisoners in Carthage their accusers were heard to say, a number of times, that they were not guilty of any crime, that they had not transgressed the laws, therefore "if we let them come to trial they will surely go clear, and so they must be assassinated!" This I had from a gentleman from Burlington who was present and heard it! He was with Joseph through all the excitement until the day before the murder, when he came to Nauvoo on some business. He was not a member of this Church, yet he, together with several other gentlemen, rendered us all the assistance in their power, and their names will long be held in remembrance for their kindness in the time of trouble.<sup>5</sup>

The number of prisoners was four: Joseph, Hyrum, Mr. Taylor, and Mr. Richards. The mob rushed upon the door, shot balls through it, and stuck their bayonets through it. They then burst it open and a bullet entered Hyrum's head and he fell, saying, "I am a dead man!"

Joseph attempted to escape out of the window but was shot from within and without at the same time, and fell out of the window. Then they fell upon him with their knives and bayonets like hungry tigers upon their prey. They both received four bullets. Mr. Taylor was also wounded with four bullets, but he is yet living. Mr. Richards escaped unhurt, but he said the bullets were like hailstones about his head.

This took place on the 27 of June, between 5 and 6 o'clock P. M. The next day the bodies of Hyrum and Joseph were brought to Nauvoo to their families, and such a house of mourning as was that I never before beheld! There was the aged mother, the wives, the children, the brothers and sisters, the more distant relatives, friends, and thousands of other people that assembled to take the last look at two innocent men that had stood between us all and that band of ruffians, and had laid down their lives for us.

You can judge what were our feelings better than I can tell them; but this much I can say—that a dry eye I did not behold that day among that large assembly of people! It was enough to rend the heart of a stone to behold two Prophets of the Lord laid prostrate by those who were once their friends!

On the 29th we attended their funeral, but they could not be buried with that honor and respect the Saints would have been glad to pay them at that time, on account of the excitement that existed at that time; for the mob were lurking around us in every direction, and we knew not how soon they would come to finish their work. The Governor sent us word to defend ourselves until he could go and get assistance for us; but a poor way we had to do that for before this we had given up all our arms, according to the Governor's orders;

Harriet, these were serious times, for when our husbands were called out on duty we knew not but what they would be slain or we be massacred before they could return.

Perhaps this question may now arise in your heart: "Almira, after all this, will you still believe in this doctrine? Do you still believe that Joseph was called of God to do this work?"

I answer, "Yes! My faith is stronger than ever, for they have given their testimony and sealed it with their blood, and what more could they do? This shows that they were true shepherds of their flock. We have testified to you a great many times that this is the work of God, and now, if any more of us should be called to lay down our lives to seal our testimony as they have done, let it be remembered by

How Shall We Direct Our Hymns?

By Mabel Carlile

In a previous article we discussed the use of the metronome. In case this instrument was not available, suggestions were given for the making of a simple, inexpensive type, that is accurate enough for most ordinary uses. If you plan to purchase a metronome, it would be well to investigate the new pocket size instrument that sells at about four dollars. It is cheaper and more convenient than the old pyramid type.

A young man from one of our distant districts wrote for information regarding the directing of nine-eight time. This problem has bothered so many that it seems well to give a little help in the Herald columns. Six-eight, nine-eight, and twelve-eight time are known as triple rhythms. Although they are sometimes given six, nine, and twelve beats, it is very rare in hymn style. Six-eight time is usually directed in two beats, nine-eight in three beats, and twelve-eight in four beats. The problem need not trouble you in our new hymn book, if you understand metronome markings. Always give the note that appears in this marking one beat. Thus "Come Ye That Love The Lord," No. 5 in six-eight time, should be directed in two beats because the metronome marking (dotted quarter note-60) indicates that a dotted quarter note is the beat note. The hymn, "Oh, Happy Is The Man Who Hears," No. 94, with exactly the same time signature is directed in six beats, because the eighth note is the beat note. Following this same idea, "Onward To Zion," requires three beats and "Come Learn Of The Meek and Lowly," four beats.

Possibly we have thought that four-four time is always directed in four beats. It seems that it should be, but nevertheless in music usage, it is not always so. A good example of this variation will be found on pages 293 and 294 of our new hymn book, No. 293, "Unto God Who Knows Our Every Weakness," is written in four-four time and directed in four beats, because the marking indicates that a quarter note is the beat note. It further tells us to take this hymn at the speed of 58 quarter notes a minute. The hymn across the page, "I Would Be True," furnishes a striking contrast. Although this hymn has a time signature of four-four, it must be directed in two beats. This is indicated by the metronome marking half note-50. If a half note is the beat in this hymn, it will be clear that only two beats to a measure can be used. This hymn takes a simple down-up beat to each measure. Try it in four beats and then see how much nicer it is in the two beats. Another hymn of this type is No. 198, "Spirit of God."

If you study the hymns carefully, you will see that a wide variety of tempi is needed to interpret them properly. For instance, "The Old, Old, Path," requires 84 quarter notes to a minute, while "What Fruit Have You Gathered," written in the same time is twice as fast, or 116 quarter notes to a minute.

The uses of the following figures have become customary the world over for directing time. Two beats are done in a down-up figure; three beats, down-out-up; four beats, down-in-out-up. These figures apply for both hands and in this way, give contrary motion. The cradlelike beating one often sees when the left hand follows the right hand on "in and out," motions is not used by trained conductors.

If our directors will just take the time to study these matters out and "check up" on themselves I am sure that President Smith will soon notice a fine improvement in our congregational singing.

Great standing armies and great armaments are the indications that the nations are not thinking. The presence of armaments is a declaration of fear. The world was never so small before. Nations jostle against each other every day. We must think in terms of new adjustments. Two paths lie before us: disarmament and friendship or armaments and war. The conclusion of each is as clear and definite as the solution of a mathematical problem, and is sustained by history. The American colonies disarmed and became the United States of America; the nations of the world maintained their heavy armaments and brought on the World War. My country armed, any country armed, is not a friend in the sisterhood of nations, in spite of all high-sounding phrases of friendship. It is as impossible to reconcile the coming of a battleship with open guns in the waters of another country as an expression of friendship, as it is to receive on terms of friendship a man with drawn pistol at your door. —Peter Ainslee in Some Experiments in Living.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper

By C. B. Hartshorn

C. B. HARTSHORN

BY common consent this service is accepted by Latter Day Saints as being the most worshipful, or the most "spiritual" of all our public meetings. Because of this general feeling, which has been built on personal experience, it is the best attended of all our gatherings.

ITS ORIGIN

As the scene of our Lord's earthly ministry draws to a close, Jesus was following the Jewish custom of eating the annual Passover feast. The Twelve had accompanied him to Jerusalem. Luke (12: 8) records that Peter and John had been selected by the Master to go to a certain upper room and prepare the feast. Doubtless the ceremony common to Jesus' day was carried through with its washings and blessings. On the table was the paschal lamb, the unleavened bread, bitter herbs and sauce. As the Jewish ceremony drew to a close, Jesus announced the presence of his betrayer. Then he took bread and broke it saying: "Take, eat, this is in remembrance of my body which I give a ransom for you."

Likewise he took a cup of wine and gave thanks and bade them drink. "This is in remembrance of my blood of the new testament which is shed for as many as shall believe on my name for the remission of their sins."

Then he announced: "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it anew in my Father's Kingdom." After singing a hymn, they went out into the night of earth's greatest sorrow.

EARLY CHRISTIAN PRACTICE

In the writings of Justin Martyr and others in the second century, we learn that the early Christians were reproached with the term "cannibal." Eating the body and drinking the blood of our Lord must have played a prominent part in their worship of these times.

Though this sacrament superseded an annual Jewish rite, it is clear that it was observed more frequently. "When ye come together unto one place is it not to eat the Lord's Supper?" Paul inquires of the Corinthians. It is possible that some communities partook of the sacrament daily. (See Acts 2: 46.)

That it was served at the close of the evening meal is evident from Paul's letter to the Corinthian saints, (1 Corinthians 11: 21, 22.) rebuking them for their excesses of eating and drinking. Some were gluttonous and drunken. Others were humiliated in the church of God because they had nothing and had to go hungry.

HOW AND WHEN SHOULD IT BE OBSERVED?

Joseph Smith relates an experience which came in August, 1830, as he was on his way to procure wine for serving the Sacrament. (Church History, volume 1, page 115.) He was met by a heavenly messenger who commanded him: "You shall not purchase wine, neither strong drink of your enemies; wherefore you shall partake of none, except it is made new among you."

In the Herald of May 1, 1870, the late President Joseph Smith gave some "plain teaching respecting this ordinance." He says that good, sweet bread and pure wine of the grape, if wine is used, otherwise water. The sacrament should be served once a month, and may be served as often as once a week. "The Saints should gather together in the spirit of solemnity and should avoid rudeness and laughter either in going to or coming from the meeting. They should go in peace and pray for its continuance. They should forgive trespasses and pray for forgiveness."

ORDER OF THE SERVICE

The American Protestant revolt against ritualism and formal worship, has led to the conception that whatever is simple and direct in the matter of devotion is in greater favor with God. Yet human nature is much the same everywhere at its core, and we can become just as formal and distant in our simplicity as do those who have a liturgical communion. Perhaps we can lose the "spirit which giveth life" just about as quickly in one as the other.

Conflicting Loyalties

DOROTHY JANE was growing well and strong. Louisa followed the instructions of the doctor at the Nature Cure Hospital, not because she had faith in him, but because his advice was about the only thing left that she had not tried. Dan felt that the baby's rapid and complete recovery was due in part to the prayers of the Saints; but Louisa did not wish to believe in prayer. She did not realize that she was fighting the impulse to believe in prayer; she simply knew that rather than admit such a belief she would prefer to concede that the advice laid down in the Word of Wisdom was good and true.

"But that doesn't mean I accept all the church doctrines as being true," she hastened to add. "After all, the Word of Wisdom, as you call it, is just about in line with the best science in modern dietetics. I shall pay more attention to our food from now on. I shall read every book on dietetics I can get my hands on."

Dan merely smiled at her. She knew what he was thinking. "Isn't it rather queer that the Word of Wisdom was printed long before modern dietetics became the exact science it is today? How do you explain that, if it is not of divine origin?"

The thought troubled her more than she cared to admit. When Dan was gone she would be pulled as though by a sort of magnet toward his church books. She read the Book of Mormon again. She read and re-read the Word of Wisdom.

"And I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them."

IF ONLY she could believe in that fully, without accepting all the rest of the gospel! What a comfort it would be, to believe that if you cared for your children according to the simple instructions given, you could feel sure that the "destroying angel" would in reality pass by. Gone would be the wakeful nights of suspense when you wondered whether you were doing the right thing by them or not; whether they might not die suddenly; or be taken suddenly and seriously ill.

But to accept the whole gospel? Never. If she accepted it, she would try to live up to the church's teachings. That would mean putting away all frivolity and actually working at religion. She wasn't ready for that. Maybe she never would be. Anyhow, she didn't know that the gospel was true. She had no way of knowing. God had never spoken to her, or revealed himself to her in any way.

But she couldn't escape the fact that the Word of Wisdom seemed to produce results. Since she had been trying to serve simple, natural foods to her little family she could observe noticeable improvement, not only in their physical health, but in their dispositions. She felt better herself, in spite of the fact that she still clung to her habit of drinking coffee in the morning. She felt she couldn't give that up. Breakfast wouldn't be breakfast without it. But if only a few weeks of partial observance of the Word of Wisdom produced such a change for the better, was that not a proof of its truth? And if one of these revelations were true, why weren't they all true?

Louisa simply couldn't accept all the church ideals. Dancing and card playing would make up the social activities of the town where Dan had secured a position—as in all other places. She could help Dan in his career by taking part in these things he considered worldly, and therefore did not indulge in. She could make and keep influential friends. She could scarcely wait until they could go. School wouldn't begin until the second week in September, and Dan would have classes until the last of August.

She must see Helen Bartin. Louisa had not been to Helen's store since Dorothy Jane's illness, although she had called her up by telephone and explained why she had failed to attend the party. Helen would think that she did not appreciate the offer about the christening of Danny John. Louisa had made up her mind to give up that idea. It would be almost too much for Dan to live through, on account of his firm beliefs in his own church.

SHE FOUND Helen as busy as ever. Admiringly she watched the movements of her old chum as she waited upon the women who came to buy. Beautiful and well-groomed as she was, she might have been one of her own wax models suddenly come alive.

"Well—and how's everybody now?" she asked, as she came toward Louisa. "That darling little girl! I've wanted to get over, but business life certainly keeps one tied down. Besides—shall I admit it? I don't enjoy domestic scenes. I'm afraid you and Dan would seem almost too happy for my own good—I might become dissatisfied. You see, I know myself pretty well," she ended a bit ruefully.

"Oh, I guess you wouldn't find us so happy as all that," laughed Louisa, "We have our ups and downs, too. Although right now we are feeling pretty good. You see, Dan has a position—"

"My dear! I'm glad. Tell me all about it. Where are you going? How much salary will he get?"

"It's a poetic sounding name—Wild-rose. Not such a great distance from here. And he'll get twenty-five hundred dollars."

Helen gazed at her in astonishment. "They don't pay teachers very well, do they? I mean—of course I might have known they don't pay them much—none of our old teachers caused a run on the bank when they drew out their deposits back in old Monroe. But it rather amazes me that Dan isn't going to get more. You see—everybody said he had more brains than anyone else in school. That's what Laird said time and again: 'That Dan Eldon will do something worth while in the world, just see.' And you know, with just a little prodding from you, he could go into business for himself, and you'd have a small fortune in a short time. Why—with my small mental capacities, I made five thousand dollars last year. Of course, my father gave me a start," Helen added, "but it wasn't anything compared to what I'm making now. If you could get his father to make him a loan—"

"But you see—teaching is sort of a compromise," confessed Louisa. "What he really wants to do is to work for his church—be a sort of missionary. I could never endure that. So we compromised on teaching. That will give him an outlet for his missionary tendencies, and it also provides enough income for us to live decently and educate the children."

"Well—of course—it depends on what you call a decent living, I suppose. You've given up a lot for him, haven't you? How about this christening? I suppose he'll have his way in that, too. I could see he wasn't at all sold to my idea."

"That—that was one thing I wanted to mention. I—I just have not the heart to make him suffer that way. And he would suffer—he is so conscientious about his church. You know, I do appreciate your offer."

Helen laughed shortly. "Well, it's your funeral, not mine. But I'll tell you, a woman makes a mistake when she starts giving up everything for her husband. The more you give up for a man, the more he expects. You have to use psychology on the creatures."

"Dan is very good to me, and very thoughtful," Louisa said.

Helen nodded, smiling wisely. "Oh, of course. He would be. But still he's a man—and they're really all about alike. At least my friends seem to think so. The most of my friends know how to manage their husbands. It's a real art—"

Louisa forced herself to laugh lightly. "I'll just have to get back," she said. "I have several garments to make yet before I start packing—and you have your customers to take care of. I really should not take up your time this way in business hours; but I did want to see you again before we went."

"Well, good-bye and good luck," said Helen, extending her hand.

"Good-bye," murmured Louisa and slipped out of the shop.

BEFORE they had gone to the islands, Helen had kissed her good-bye.

There was real warmth in their friendship then. What had happened? Was Helen displeased because she had not accepted all her suggestions? Or did Helen feel that a person who never hoped to have a big income was simply not worth retaining as a friend?

"Oh, well—I'll probably never see her again," she thought. "Life is like that. I'll make other friends." But the pain in her heart ached on. The things her friend had said about Dan hurt, too. Was she too easy with Dan? Did you have to prod your husband into doing his duty by his family? She had given up a lot of her plans just to please him, she admitted to herself. She felt that he never gave up anything for her sake. Well, she was going to have a beautiful home, anyway, artistically furnished. She would see that the children had plenty of simple, nourishing food, and the right kind of clothes. She would study, too, books about child-rearing, psychology, and the like, so that they would have proper mental attitudes; they must grow up without any dwarfing complexes, inhibitions, fear-thoughts. She would lose herself in the children, in her social life and in her home. Dan could have his career and his black box.

She walked part of the way to their apartment, partly for the exercise and partly to get her mind away from Helen. A huge card in a window bore the sign:

"Your Wife Will Know You Love Her," and in smaller print beneath: "When she gets this present from you." The words referred to a kit of beauty articles. The containers which held the perfume and the powders were lovely in their ornate way; and the other toilet articles were cleverly and enticingly exposed. Their colors were exquisite and dainty. They had formerly sold for twenty dollars, but were now marked down to a mere ten-fifty for a few days only.

A laundry advertisement demanded: "Is your wife still a slave, or do you send your wash to the Zuber Brothers' Laundry?"

"We shall have a modern electric washing machine," thought Louisa. "That is one of the first purchases we'll make."

She was quite happy and she sang about the flat while preparing to leave for their new home. Dan was really going to get a pretty good salary for a school teacher; she could manage to do a lot of things with that money. They would get good furniture and pay for it the modern way—by installments. Yes, she was happy now.

Happy, too, she was the first few weeks in the cozy little cottage they had succeeded in renting in Wildrose for forty dollars a month. There were all modern conveniences, and the landlord was very obliging. He put new linoleum on the kitchen and bathroom floors, and made several minor changes which, to Louisa's mind made the place more homelike.

Things had cost more than she had thought they would though. "You just let me attend to all these things, Dan," she had said. "You can go ahead with your school work and never have a worry about other things."

There was an expensive overstuffed suite in the living room besides a few odd pieces of furniture to make it look less formal and more like home. The dining room was charming in its arrangement and she bought things she had always dreamed of; a massive table, a chest of drawers, and a china cabinet of a period design; chairs more comfortable than most of the people back in Monroe had in their living rooms. The kitchen and laundry were perfect joys to behold and thrilling to work in. By the time she had finished purchasing the rugs, pictures, material for curtains, and bedroom furniture—she had to skimp on that, too—she began to see that she would have to quit. As it was the installments would loom terribly high and carry through many months to come.

DAN WAS appalled. He knew they had to furnish a home but had never dreamed that it would cost so much. They would need a car, too, by and by, Louisa had told him. He supposed they would. Everybody else in their situation had cars. He had thought perhaps they could save a little, and he had dreamed of sending a small check for tithing to the bishop. He saw now that this dream would have to be abandoned along with his others. There would be very little of his check left for groceries and clothing, as it was.

Even Louisa was frightened when she began to figure how to meet all current expenses. There were so many things she had not foreseen. In the city their rent had been quite high, but they had had hot water, heat and gas included so that no extra expense was necessary for these things. Here they had had to buy coal and start the furnace in September because the fall months began with an abnormally cold wave. Electricity, telephone, gas, milk, groceries, installments. Dan had to subscribe for a school paper. They were expected to help all the charitable institutions; the churches needed a little for this and that worth-while enterprise. A few dollars here, a few there. The children needed new shoes. Dan would soon need another suit.

Nevertheless Louisa felt quite happy during those first few weeks. She loved the little home, and took pride in keeping it as pretty as when the new furniture had first come. The only thing that troubled her was that Dan did not seem very happy.

"Dan," she said to him one night in the late fall, "tell me, what is the matter? You seem so—so unhappy." The living room seemed to her more beautiful than usual that night. It was spotlessly clean; the radio played soft music; the heat from the furnace comforted them with its warmth; a small blaze in the fireplace added to the cheer; the beautiful little daughter lay curled up on the davenport with her dolly beside her; through the double doors that opened into the room beyond one could see Danny John asleep in his little white crib. Louisa knew she was not unlovely herself. She wore a gay house dress that suited her vivid beauty perfectly; she had had her hair bobbed in a style she knew was very becoming. What more could a man ask of life than a home like this?

Dan smiled, but there was only weariness in his eyes.

"I am not unhappy that I know of. Why should I be?"

"I—I don't know. But I like this—all this—so much. I guess I am sort of domestic by nature. I like even the odor of cooking food. They say it isn't proper to let the odor of food penetrate into your living rooms, but I love it. It seems like home. Smell that bread. That's whole-wheat Parkerhouse rolls, Dan, made as you like them. And that vegetable soup. Don't you love to smell that?" She ran her hand through his hair. "Dan, please tell me—don't you like me—and our home?"

"You little silly thing—of course I do!" He grabbed her in his arms, sank into a chair and placed her on his knee. "You are a fine little wife—the most wonderful girl in the world; and if I'm cross looking I ought to be spanked."

"But you haven't answered my first question. Are you as unhappy as you look sometimes?" If he were still brooding over that black box, she ought to try to get up enough courage to ask him about it. Could she carry it through? She waited breathlessly for his answer, but none came. He sat, instead, looking pensively at the leaping flames of the fire.

"Now it's quite a while until Christmas," said a suave voice from the radio, "but not too early to consider what you are going to give to your wife or mother in order to make the day perfect for her.

Any modern woman will appreciate our—"

"Dan, tell me—" she whispered.

"I'm not—it's nothing. At least nothing that would interest you." He would not talk about religion any more. What was the use? How could he explain to her that he felt he had sold his birth-right for a mess of pottage? That he felt his soul would always be in pawn for that pottage as long as he lived? That all these physical comforts still left him with a hungry craving, unsatisfied? That his loyalty to her and his loyalty to the church were wrecking his peace of mind, were undermining his health. Conflicting loyalties. How he loved her—and how he loved the church! He couldn't love them both forever—their pull was in opposite directions—and now, since he had married her, the church would not countenance his leaving her. Even if he would—even if he could. And he wouldn't if he could—she was so dear, so sweet. He would have liked to confide in her—but she would never understand.

"You're funny, Dan," she said in a grieved tone. "I try to do all I can—and still you're not happy."

The telephone rang; she was glad of an excuse to escape from him. In another minute she would have been crying.

"Hello. Yes. . . . Why, I don't know. I'll ask him." She laughed a little, then continued: "No, I guess it's of no use to ask him. He never goes to parties where there are dancing and cards. So I guess you'll kindly have to excuse us, Mrs. Moore. But I do appreciate your invitation—" Another pause. "What is it? Pardon me, I didn't hear. . . . Oh, I'll ask him. Just a minute."

"Dan, Mrs. Moore wishes to know if I can come to her party tomorrow night. It is rather informal—they're inviting people by telephone. I knew you wouldn't want to go, but she wants me to come with Mr. and Mrs. Brown. I know Mrs. Brown really well, and I know she'd be glad to stop for me," she ended a bit wistfully.

"You are your own free agent," said Dan, "You can choose for yourself."

Louisa went slowly back and picked up the receiver.

"I shall be glad to come, Mrs. Moore."

"Dan," she said thoughtfully, as she came back to him, "You said I was my own free agent. I think that one reason I don't wish to believe in your church is because it takes away so much of one's freedom. Now, take yourself for example. You don't feel free to engage in any of these things the world calls fun—"

"I heard a quotation once that I like, Louisa. 'Obedience to law is liberty.' And it is—indeed it is. The gospel is rightly called 'The law of liberty.' If one exercises self-control, forces himself to obey higher laws, he soon finds that he has developed new powers—he has a new freedom—he can soar to heights before undreamed of. While he who indulges himself and breaks laws reaps only misery in the end. Remember Mr. Hunt, Robert, and all the others we have known. Self-indulgence didn't make them happy. The only thing that will bring happiness in this world is obedience to the highest laws of all—the laws of God."

The telephone rang again, and again she was glad to escape from her husband's presence.

The frequency of administering, the time of day and the nature of the service, as well as the worthiness of the communicants and those who officiate in the ordinance, have all given rise to serious questions of procedure. Some have emphasized the supper aspect, and the late afternoon service was their rule. Others thought only of the symbolic worship as suggested in the injunction; "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come."

On January 17, 1836, Joseph Smith's diary records that a sacrament service was held at the close of an afternoon meeting where three couples had been united in marriage. A few weeks later he tells that the ordinance was administered at the close of a meeting at which the President of the Seventy had spoken.

If you assume, as does the writer, that the sacrament is a symbolic service which our Lord designed to help us keep prominent in our thinking the power of his sacrificial love, then "contention is unseemly" about the time and method. The important thing is that we have "sincerity of heart and purity of purpose," as a late revelation says.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

If the sacrament is served as a part of the prayer and testimony meetings, as is common in our smaller branches, then the prohibition (Doctrine and Covenants 119:5.) on the use of musical instruments would apply. If it is served in a setting of its own, or as a part of a preaching service, there is no scriptural restrictions on their use.

It seems that there could be no particular virtue in the plain simple service which is so common among us as to suggest thoughtlessness on the part of those administering the ordinance. I have been able to excuse some things in the order of some sacrament meetings which I have attended only on the grounds of carelessness or ignorance which is quite different that a studied simplicity about which there is pardonable pride. My own feelings is that that which lends orderliness and beauty to the service, will contribute to the spirit of reverence and worship.

OBLATION AND CLOSE COMMUNION

The oblation or "thank offering," is associated with the sacrament from the earliest time, according to the writing of Paul and the early church fathers. The revelation of August, 1831, (section 59), specifically and inseparately joins the two. "Remember that on this the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments unto the Most High . . ."

Many of the early historians reveal that "unbaptized persons, as well as those under church discipline as well as others not in full communion, were excluded from the assembly before the celebration of the Lord's Supper." (See Barnes Dictionary of the Bible.) The Book of Mormon makes it very emphatic that "unless a man repents and is baptized" we shall forbid him to partake. (Page 653 Authorized edition.)

SUMMARY

"Do this in remembrance" is the key note of this ordinance. In remembrance means meditation; it means personal communion. This is often defeated by confusion, by projecting foreign thoughts through inappropriate testimonies, prayers or hymns. "There is a time for all things," the Scripture tells us. Where else shall we provide a place and time for meditation and silent devotion in our public worship unless it is when we sit around the Lord's table.

Aspiration

My task:

To help some weary brother day by day,
To show to wondering souls the Savior's way,
To live that he at last may only say,
"Well done."

My Hope:

To do the little things that he would do—
To show that to His teachings I am true—
To see that though clouds are gray, the sky is blue
To know that when life's battles all are through I've won.

My wish:

That I may some day see my Savior's face—
That I may know the fullness of his grace—
That I may sometime win life's bitter race—
And find I'm fitted for that heavenly place—
Heaven won.

Notice to Directors of Solicitation

IT WAS SAID of Jesus that he "went about doing good." (Acts 10:38.)

This quotation gives a beautiful picture of Christ. His kindly face reflected the compassion of his great heart, as he happily went about doing good. Jesus was "no respecter of persons," and served not only his followers but those that would have gladly put him out of the way. Apparently he loved the out-of-doors, and as he passed through the city gate he paused to give a word of cheer to the surprised beggar. At his command the lame leaped with joy in their physical freedom; with a caress of his hand, the blind saw; he fed the multitude; he changed the water into wine—the happy festival should not be marred by the lack of it. He lifted and soothed a sobbing child; he visited the homes, raising the dead. Jesus was never in a hurry, nor too busy to talk with people. We see him entering the home of Martha and Mary; Jesus loves to come there and explain his Father's mind and will because his word was gladly received here. Day after day we find him doing good.

He "went out" indicates that Jesus sought out the needy and ". . . healed all that were oppressed. . . ." He didn't wait for them to come to him. From childhood he had been "about his Father's business." This was his objective in life and he urged his followers to take up that same task. Broken laws had caused all this misery. Nevertheless he went out unto them healing their infirmities, and teaching by precept and example the new law of love. They had heard much of law from the many priests of the land. They were weary of the letter of the law. But Jesus was different. He spoke as one having authority and they gladly listened. Human beings sense more than they can express. A good spirit cannot be hidden from the discerning. Day after day he continued in doing good works among the children of men—routine duties but always fresh experiences in the serving of those whom he loved. He never wavered in his God-given tasks. He courageously pushed through life working for others.

WHO CAN MEDITATE upon such a life and not wish that he too might go about doing good? The directors of solicitation can make their wish come true. Day dreams can be realized. You are responsible for a certain number of families. Was there ever a greater need for home visitation among our members than at the present time? In the most unlikely places there will be found trouble and anxiety, loneliness, illness, spiritual blindness, temptations and struggles of various kinds. Be no "respecter of persons" but make frequent visits to all, rich and poor alike. While you may not be able to perform great miracles as the Master did, you can, by cultivating his Spirit, perform minor miracles by bringing cheer and hope into the lives of your brothers and sisters, which quite often is the remedy for their many ills. Let us not waver in our task, but like the Master, keep constantly at it. Fresh experiences will create interest and enrich our lives.

It is an easy matter to take a little bouquet to not only the sick, but to the well; by lending a good book you may help to offset the taste for trashy literature; some little dainty often creates a happy heart; a chat about the gospel often is the answer to a hungry heart; just a little attention frequently brings a family back to church attendance. One never knows what kind of miracles are being worked under the spirit of brotherly kindness. You, too, may have it said about you, he "went about doing good." "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Will you serve as a solicitor in more than name only?

The Legion is primarily interested in the welfare of people, but knowing that that welfare is dependent upon the establishing of Zion, it has several objectives which are immediate goals. Paying off the Auditorium debt looms up in the forefront. No institution, from the home up can make progress under such a handicap. Therefore this must be taken care of soon as possible. Again we urge diligence in your collections. The members themselves much prefer regular paying of dues at short intervals. Kindly do not let this run until it gets to be a large sum, which only tends to make a burden for all concerned. All money should be turned over to your local treasurer, as this in turn is to be forwarded to Bishop Evans by the fifteenth of every month. It is to our advantage to persistently cut down the interest on our debts. Systematic paying will do just this thing.

Because of the increasing work of Bishop Evans, the distribution of tithing cards will now be cared for by the undersigned. Again let us not become weary in going about "doing good."—S. Gordon Brown, director of solicitation, 215 North Seymour Street, Lansing, Michigan.

In all my teaching I have watched carefully the influence of the toothbrush, and I am convinced that there are few single agencies of civilization that are more far-reaching.

Destruction of Trees by the Dutch Elm Disease

Fine old elm trees, of which the eastern States are so justly proud, are now succumbing to a renewed attack of the Dutch elm disease at the staggering rate of two hundred a day.

The ravages of this affliction have become so serious that Congress appropriated $150,000 now being used for the work of checking the blight. Already the death knell has rung for 3,027 shade trees in the region around New York.

The greatest loss has been suffered by New Jersey, where the mortality of elms to date is 2,456. And each day new cases of the disease are discovered. The only check which has been found is to chop down and burn the trees the moment tests have shown them to be infected.

The Dutch elm disease first appeared in 1920 in Holland. It waged a destructive war against European elms and then proceeded to cross the ocean in the holds of ships carrying elm logs for the furniture industry. It made its first appearance in a flank attack in Ohio three years ago, but not seriously as only nine elms were felled and immediate action checked further damage.

In the last few months, however, it has stabbed the heart of the elm region around the port of New York. A small bark beetle, Scolytus, carries the infection in the form of a fungus known as Graphium ulmi which attacks the smaller twigs and withers whole branches of the tree.

None of our native elms seem to be immune, although an oriental variety is not infected. This tree, imported from Asia, can nevertheless be a harbinger of the disease and should also be destroyed if it is found to be bearing the fungus.

When queried as to whether this epidemic will have the terrible effects of the blight which years ago stilled the whistles of so many chestnut vendors, the investigators of the United States Department of Agriculture state that it is equally serious from its present aspect. Whether a wholesale slaughter of elms will take place in the future can not yet be foretold.—Science, July 20, 1934.

Which Way?

We are church-goers, church-members, many of us. People are watching us. They are following us. They are being guided by what we do and what we do not do, everywhere, in our daily manner of living.

Which way are you leading them?

Paul says to young Timothy, "Be an example of a real believer in your way of living!" That is an important thing in your church. You cannot have a good church, with good influence, unless the members are good examples in daily life, at work, at school, at play.—Howard K. Williams in Young People's Leader.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST

you all, that we have borne witness to you that this is the work of God! And do not any longer resist it! This now is a great call to you as well as to all the Inhabitants of the Earth. It is something more than many are aware of. We never read of a Nation being destroyed or becoming ripe for destruction until they begin to slay the Prophets that God sends among them; for He will not destroy a Nation until He warns them of their danger and gives them a chance to repent.

We receive persecution, which is very unpleasant, but we do not wish to deny the work of God in order to shun it; instead we wish to stand firm and unshaken, and greater will be our reward in Heaven. There is no one that need think that he can overthrow the work of God; although they may slay the Prophets and even all this people, yet they cannot destroy His work. He will show to this generation that His wisdom is greater than the cunning of the evil one!

Mother has stood all her trouble well and was glad that she was here. She was about starting for Michigan when this took place; she was only waiting for the roads to get better, for it has been extremely wet here this season. Whether Mr. Murry will now go or not I cannot say, but if he should, Mother will go with him, if she is well enough. Her health has been as good as we could expect this Summer. She is now with a lame side.

My family are well except little Hyrum<sup>6</sup>; He is cutting teeth. Fanny was out a short time since and made us a visit. She and the boys are well. Harvy and family are well.

Aunt Lucy is as well as we can expect considering her trouble. Joseph's wife is not very well<sup>7</sup>, the report you heard about her being turned out of doors is false; there never could a man use a wife better than he has her! I presume you hear a great deal that is not true; but what I have written you is correct. But I cannot write much; if I could see you I could tell you the whole story but I cannot write it.

I wish you to give my love to all of our friends and tell them to accept of this letter as one to them, for I cannot write to each one separate, for it gives me the sick headache to write. I have had one day of it since I began this letter.

I wish you to write often and try to come and make us another visit. Tell Harriet<sup>8</sup> I wish her much joy with her Son and Daughter,<sup>9</sup> and would like to have her come and show them.

Please to accept this from

Your Sister,

Almira Covey.

Addressed to Mrs. Harriet Whittemore

Pontiac, Oakland County, Michigan

Postmarked: Nauvoo, Ill. July 25.

Numerical references in above letter are as follows:

<sup>1</sup>Notice the date of this letter—just three weeks after the tragedy at Carthage! Surely an early recital of those events!

<sup>2</sup>George Whittemore, second son of Harriet (Mack) (Hatch) by her second marriage. He was born 15 March 1831 and died 5 June 1844.

<sup>3</sup>Six weeks later, Lucy Mack Smith buried a third son, Samuel Harrison Smith, who died of a fever contracted in hiding out overnight from the same mob that killed his brothers. But this death, of course, did not occur until three weeks after this letter of Almira's was written.

<sup>4</sup>Perhaps an extravagant statement; but the writer had for fourteen years been closely associated with the leaders of the Church, by ties of blood as well as of staunch faith, and in the newness of this grief and loss, she felt deeply.

<sup>5</sup>Too bad Almira did not, in this letter, reveal the name of this friend, that it might be held in grateful esteem among us today.

<sup>6</sup>Another addition to Almira's family, arrived since the third letter was written.

<sup>9</sup>"Son" was George B. Mathews, born 1842. He was a soldier in the Civil War; married, and had 2 children.

"Daughter" was Frances Helen Mathews generally known as Fannie. She married after the War, Lieutenant Lewis Drake. They had one son—a doctor in Pontiac. "Lieut. Lewis Drake was confined in a Southern prison several months, or until the close of the War" opines Mr. Frank Whittemore, to whom I am indebted largely for most of these explanatory footnotes that help us so materially in understanding these letters, now of such historic interest to us all.

War

War is the most wasteful business in history. Most of the soldiers come from respectable homes, where boys have been trained to make a contribution to society. Care, affection, hope, and money have been spent by parents, who have regarded the training of children as the greatest God-given trust that has ever been committed to mankind. A war breaks out, and millions of these boys are butchered like cattle in the slaughterhouse. Other millions are wounded for life, some becoming life-long charges upon the society which they had expected to help to higher ideals. Among the murdered may be a Moses, a Socrates, a Phidias, a Raphael, a Mozart, a Browning, a Jefferson, an Edison, a Tolstoy. This loss is so great to a nation's life that it is irreparable, some nations not recovering for a century or more blackened.

Take the World War as an instance—the most stupid and cruel of all wars. There were 4,355,000 Americans under arms; 126,000 died or were killed in action. The total American casualties came to 350,000 or 8 percent of the American men, who suffered less than any other with, perhaps, the exception of Japan. But take the Allied and Central powers combined. They had 65,038,810 men under arms and of these 8,538,315 were killed and millions more died later from wounds and disease. The casualties from the whole affair came to 34,494,188 or 57 percent. Thirteen million soldiers' graves! Thirteen million civilian graves! Nine million war orphans! Twenty-five million families bereaved! If it be a matter of money, the World War cost the United States alone fifty-one billions of dollars, according to the secretary of the treasury, which amount, according to the same authority, less than fifty years ago could have brought the whole United States with everybody and everything in it. This sum, if invested now would yield $100 a month to 2,125,000 broken down workers, practically abolishing poverty. Instead, here is war laying upon us the penalty of economic damnation, for world depression is inescapable after a world war. Why such a waste of life and money? That waste of talent, of possibility, of service, of personality, and of money furnishes an indictment against this civilization which at once raises the question as to its sanity.—Peter Ainslie, in Some Experiments in Living.

Not that I have already obtained or am already made perfect, but I press on toward the upward calling of God.—Paul.

A Testimony

SARAH CRAIG

I was born in Hyde, Cheshire, England, January 6, 1843, the eldest child of James and Ann Woolley. My father and mother, three brothers, and I left England in September, 1853, on the sailing ship Prime Hendrick, booked for Geelong, Australia.

We arrived at Melbourne in April, 1854, and went to Geelong and settled in Chillwell, about a mile from where I now live with Brother and Sister Ballard, late of the Society Islands.

Ever since I was ten years of age I have liked to be with godly people. I attended the Methodist Church in Noble Street, Chillwell. I married John Craig, a farmer, of Moolay, on December 10, 1863. To us ten children were born, eight sons and two daughters, and they have all been a great comfort to me. Nine of them have been baptized into the church.

We attended the Methodist Church at Moolay, where I played the organ for years. But in July, my brother, Ashton Woolley, from Hastings, brought Brother Joseph Burton to our home to teach us the restored gospel. Brother Burton stayed with us a fortnight, preached first in our home and neighbors' homes, then in a hall. On July 25, he baptized my husband, one daughter, Sarah Ann, myself, Brother and Sister Woods, and Miss Woods in Reedy Lake. A few years after that Sarah Ann was married to Apostle C. A. Butterworth. After Brother Trembath and family accepted the gospel, Brother Trembath was ordained an elder. Brother and Sister Wiffen and son, William, of Drysdale, were baptized, and we held meetings at the three homes alternately on Sundays for about eight years.

My husband passed away July 26, 1904, at Moolay, and was buried in the East Geelong Cemetery. About eighteen months afterwards we went to live in Geelong, and meetings were held in our home and in Brother Trembath's home, sometimes in the halls and on the streets. This went on until the Saints' church on Saint Alban's Road was built chiefly by Brother C. A. Butterworth and Brother Foster. There I attend services when able to go.

This photograph was taken when I reached the age of ninety years. I have been greatly blessed. Still have the use of all my faculties, can read, write, sew, etc.; but I cannot walk far.

I am pleased to bear my testimony to the latter-day work. Before Brother Burton left us, he told me that if I wanted a testimony of the truth of the work, I should pray for it. Soon after he left us, I felt troubled, and before retiring for the night, I prayed for a testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel. But this did not come until after I had retired and prayed a second time. Then I felt myself wafted away to the home of a Mr. Richardson, about half a mile from our home. There Brother Burton held his last meeting in a large room speaking to a congregation of about forty people. I saw myself sitting in the same seat, and the others were arranged as they had been at the meeting. Brother Burton stood before us with a halo over his head, and I said, "He is a servant of the Lord. We have done right. This is God's church!" I am satisfied and I still rejoice in the faith that was once and for all delivered to the Saints.

A Spiritual Reunion at Edenville

The Edenville reunion of Central Michigan District was held August 9 to 19, but the writer and party did not arrive until August 13, having remained at the Park of the Pines reunion until its close.

While on the way to Edenville we passed through a kind of natural zoo where some buffalo and bear are kept. Elder A. J. Dexter was driving the car and Sister Barmore sat by his side in the front seat while J. M. Baggerly and I were in the back seat. A half-grown bear approached the car while his keeper stood nearby. Brother Dexter offered him some cookies, but the animal caught the odor of peaches which Sister Barmore carried, and at once leaped into the car. This excited Sister Barmore and her excitement prompted Brother Dexter to push the bear back. Peeved because he was thwarted in his quest, the bear turned on Brother Dexter and gave him a couple of bites. They were not serious, however, though the keeper, an old-time Buffalo Bill fellow, insisted on applying antiseptic treatment.

The reunion grounds at Edenville are well suited for reunion purposes. The owner, Mr. Wixom, was favorably impressed with Elder Hubert Case and our people as a whole. On one occasion he called at the meetings, and was introduced to the people by Elder Case. He made a speech in response to the introduction, expressing his pleasure at our presence and deputation and offering the grounds for our future use. Mr. Wixom has been a show man all his life.

The order of meetings was as follows: Young people's prayer meeting, 6:30 a. m.; adult prayer service, 8:15; educational lecture given by various instructors, ten o'clock. While the adults were being thus served, Elder and Sister Percy Farrow were meeting the needs of the young people. At eleven o'clock there was a sermon. In the afternoon there was priesthood meeting at 1:30, women's meeting at 2:30 and preaching at eight, the latter being followed by an impromptu program.

Beginning on Friday Elders Case and Grice were opening speakers, followed by Patriarch F. A. Smith on Sunday, August 12. The following speakers occupied during the week: Elders Priddy, G. W. Burt, A. C. Barmore, J. J. Ledsworth, B. H. Doty, Percy Farrow, F. A. Smith, Hubert Case, J. M. Baggerly, Lewis Grice. Sunday morning Patriarch F. A. Smith spoke again, preaching the banner sermon of the reunion. His theme was timely and dealt with the home life of the Saints, especially parental responsibility.

Apostle D. T. Williams came on Saturday and on Sunday afternoon and night preached the closing sermons. All speakers acquitted themselves well. They also did well in priesthood assembly conducted by Elder Case and the writer.

The music was well rendered under the baton of Harry Runkle, assisted by B. H. Doty, and others.

This was distinctly a spiritual reunion, and I would give first place to the prayer services. From the beginning of the young people's prayer hour to the end of the adult service no time was lost. On Thursday and Friday there was a remarkable outpouring of the Spirit. Thursday Elder Ledsworth spoke to Elders Case and Barmore with the gift of tongues, also to the adults and young people. At the same service Elder Case spoke in prophecy to Elder Farrow. On Friday Elder Farrow addressed the assembly in prophecy, delivering special messages to Elders Ledsworth and B. H. Doty. On Sunday, Brother Lambkin spoke in prophecy to the Saints in general and to the priesthood in particular.

Elder Hubert Case, district president, carried the burden of the reunion management, being assisted, of course, by other members of the committee. All meals were free, provisions in cash and foodstuffs being provided by members of the district. From latest reports, the district broke even on the effort financially, collections being liberal. A good feeling prevailed throughout and the reunion was worth much to the district.

Now Is the Harvest

The summer just gone was for me a splendid spiritual feast and the reward of the hard work which preceded it. Our very excellent meeting at Beaverton celebrating my forty years of missionary life was one of the most complete days of spiritual happiness in my life. Added to this were interesting visits and meetings over the district. All-day meetings were fraught with district-wide effects and results, especially the one at Gladwin. We had fasted and prayed for rain, and the night of that meeting our drouth was broken. Two good rains followed that and as a consequence there were good crops in most of the district.

The meeting followed three weeks at that place, and many heard the word which came in power and much assurance. Some splendid people were baptized.

Then came the meeting at West Branch where the endowment of power attended the preaching of the word in our new church builded by earnest workers. Brother Gussman has done most of the work so far, and Brother Fred West is stoning the church so that it will be an attractive cobblestone building. The women have been the money hustlers to put over this undertaking as they are in most places of the church.

Great power has attended the local men in their efforts during the summer, and the work is moving forward.

The reunion at Edenville was the climax of our efforts. I never saw a meeting bear such fruits of blessing and vision to so many people, children, young folks, and older ones. All went home with the knowledge that they had been with the Lord. Now they appreciate his church and work as never before in their lives. Angels visited the Saints as they fasted and humbled themselves before the Lord, and they heard his voice in tongues, and prophecies.

The reunion program was well balanced, emphasizing the spiritual education of the Saints. Mr. Wixom invited us back to his splendid grove and park for next year, and so we ask the Saints of the district to begin now to prepare for the next gathering. The free board was a decided success, the cooking excellent.

Summer is past and fall is here. It is the reaping time, the harvest. Let everyone read sections 4 and 11 in Doctrine and Covenants, and thrust in his sickle and reap while the day lasts.

We hope to see a large gathering at the conference and harvest home festival October 6 and 7. Come and bring your dinner baskets filled with good things, and better than that, bring your hearts humble and full of love, and you will surely assist in the Lord's work.

HUBERT CASE.

We Should Be Busy—There Is No Time to Lose

The Herald not only encourages but leads us to a higher plane of living. We know that its writers have the inspiration of God's Spirit, and that we should heed the admonitions and instructions given.

Many Saints seem to be sleeping. They do not take the Herald but other reading matter, which leads them away from the things they should know. When we see the vast throng of people about us, without the gospel, we, who are the children of the Lord, should be busy, telling the gospel story to our neighbors. The time is very short for all that is expected of us, and in the end, we will be called to account for the way we have spent that time.

I am happy to be a Saint in latter days. I feel that there is no time for sleeping or reading those things which do not help us. Brothers and sisters, let us cause our lights to shine in the darkness of the world. We are rich, not in worldly things, but in the blessings of the Spirit. We must work with the leader of the church, give him our support, help him carry on the duties and responsibilities which are his. If Zion is to be built, we must labor together. May God bless the leading men of the church, so that the gospel will be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people.

We are thankful for the gospel and its gifts and blessings. Our family has been wonderfully blessed. We live twenty-eight miles from Benton Harbor, and try to meet with the Saints once each month, taking members from Hartford with us. Although they are handicapped in some ways, Benton Harbor Saints are alert, and are trying to sow the seed of truth. We hope to see a branch there in the future.

LAWRENCE, MICHIGAN, R. R. 2 MRS. BURT C. ADAMS.

Have We Learned Real Obedience?

I know God's promises are true, but we must do our part before we can expect to receive a blessing. My patriarchal blessing tells me to move forward and occupy when opportunity permits, and the Lord will bless me.

I have found this promise to be true. I have been blessed in many ways, and especially spiritually, by grasping the opportunities of service. My thoughts go now to the eighty-sixth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, known to all Saints as the Word of Wisdom.

I have read testimonies at different times, how Saints have been healed or relieved of some sickness by obeying the Word of Wisdom. I thank God for such testimonies.

That should be a lesson to us all, to learn obedience to the Word of Wisdom before we become sick or diseased. It was given for the good of God's people, and I wonder how many members of the church have learned real obedience.

BUCHANAN, MICHIGAN. G. W. SEYMOUR.

Will the Saints of Long Beach, California, visit Alan Emerick, 430½ West Ninth Street, who is ill with heart trouble? The request comes from his mother, Mrs. Mary Emerick, Montrose, Iowa. Brother Emerick is a member of the church.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Was man here 50,000 years ago? If so, does it disprove the Bible?

No exact date is possible in seeking to trace the origin of human life on the earth, so far as science is concerned. But it is commonly recognized that man has been here for at least many thousands of years longer than the chronology of Ussher provides. This view is approximately stated in Pemberton's work:

"It is believed by many that man existed as man certainly as early as the pliocene period of the Tertiary. This period was thousands of centuries ago—a short time only in the infinitude of the past."—The Path of Evolution, page 314.

Various tentative dates have been given with respect to individual discoveries that pointed to respective ancient activities of man. Some of them, however, are comparatively recent when contrasted with the time that must have been required to bring man to the state of civilized developments and extensive activities which these discoveries reveal. Baron Bunsen, on the basis of a common origin for language, sets the period at not less than 20,000 years, and Sir John Lubbock seems to agree with Dr. Prichard, who says it is universally recognized that:

"After abstracting all that is apparently mythological from the early traditions of the Indians, Egyptians, and some other nations, the probable history of some of them seems still to reach up to a period too remote to be reconciled with the short chronology of Ussher and Petavius."—Pre-historic Times, pages 385, 386.

Careful students of biblical chronology, considering certain variable meanings of ancient words, recognize the impossibility of fixing the date of Adam's period. Able authorities vary many centuries in their attempt to give dates approximating anything definite in the more remote eras. What seems to the novice a perfectly simple task, is found to contain undreamed-of difficulties. For such reasons as these it cannot be said that science disproves the Bible.

Does the Bible show where the red and brown races came from?

The Bible does not treat of the red and brown races as such, but concerns itself in this respect to tracing what are supposed to have been the origins of the human family, in which nothing is said as to differences in color, except such as may be inferred from the meaning of the names ascribed to certain persons. For instance, the name Adam in old Hebrew is derived from a word meaning ruddy, red, or showing blood, perhaps impliedly in the face. The name Cush (same as Ethiopia) signified black, or burnt faces. Ham indicates hot, warm, or swarthy. Japheth signifies fair. But to trace the descendants of these men according to these meanings would be quite another matter.

The original types of the human family so far as traced were the Semitic, the Aryan, and the Turanian, which are more or less traced to the three sons of Noah by some students. The Semites are divided into northern and southern, of which the Babylonians, Hebrews, Aramaeans and Syrians are some of the northern, while the southern include most Arabians, Abyssinians, and Sabeans. The Aryan or Indo-European type include Latin, Greek, Persian, Sanskrit, Keltic, Slavonic, and German peoples. The Turanian type include Finnic, Hungarian, Tartar, Turkish, Mongul and some other peoples.

Was the Inspired Version translated from original manuscripts?

Strictly speaking, there are no original manuscripts of any portion of the Bible. Manuscripts now in existence, so far as known, are either copies of more ancient manuscripts or translations into other languages. The Inspired Version was not a translation in this sense, but was made by reading a copy of the Authorized or King James Version and correcting it by making such changes as were claimed to be directed by inspiration. Hence it is more properly termed the Inspired Version, rather than an inspired translation from manuscripts.

When was the last book of the Old Testament, Malachi, written?

The name Malachi means "my messenger," and hence some think it may not be the name of the prophet who wrote it. The date when written is uncertain, but most students place it at a time between 460 and 420 B. C.

Honolulu, Hawaii

Events Win Enthusiastic Response From Four Branches

Loyal workers of the Hawaiian Mission have been making progress in their endeavors to further the cause of the mission of Christ here in the islands of the sea. Last Easter, the combined junior and senior choirs of Honolulu Branch, under the leadership of Sister Emma Kaawakauo, sang a beautiful cantata which brought joy to the hearts of all. Likewise, the Sunday school made very good showings on such occasions as Easter, Mother's Day, and Children's Day. Sister Thompson, one of the oldest mothers in the church, was chosen queen of the mothers. The most touching scene of the day was when her little grandson presented her with two beautiful carnation leis. On Children's Day, from each of the three branches in Honolulu several children united with the church through baptism.

Brother Tsunao Miyamoto, the new branch treasurer, was ordained to the office of deacon some months ago. His faithful service is proving his worthiness of that honor.

The Thirty-up Club, a new organization of older young people of the church, recently gave a rummage sale and netted a sum of over thirty-seven dollars which is being used to help defray local expenses of the branch. This club meets every two weeks with Brother Ellis, their president, and Sam Toomey, the secretary. Sam Toomey and Robert Etzenhouser are the two newest additions to the church.

Last July, the three Honolulu branches celebrated Patriarch G. J. Waller's home-coming with a rally day gathering at the main branch. Close to two hundred people attended the sacrament service that morning. This was the second rally day held there and such occasions help to encourage the membership to take up their responsibility in carrying on the work.

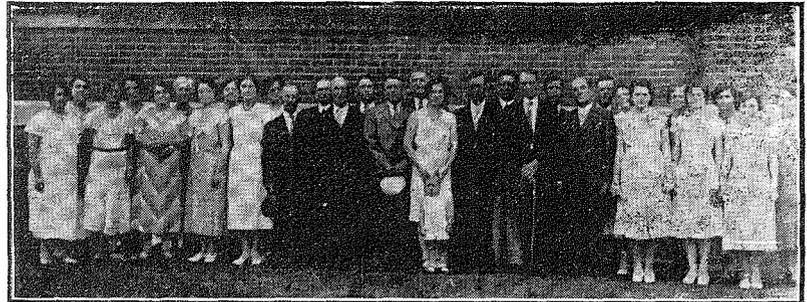

In answer to the appeal of President F. M. Smith for better prayer meetings, sacramental services, preachings, etc., changes have been made in conducting local services. They like the change, for they are detecting a noticeable, spiritual growth among the members.

The Young People's League of the Main Branch made over fifteen dollars from a recent jelly and jam sale. This money will be used to buy playground equipment. The young people are proving themselves capable of taking up their responsibility in the work of the church. They have been actively assisting by singing in the choir, giving plays, cleaning the church, decorating, and so forth. Their new job will be to help the branch solicitor sell the branch bundle.

The young people of the district met for their first convention at the Main Branch in Honolulu, August 17, 18, 19. This outstanding event of the church has paved the way for more activities, greater interest, and growth among the young people. It has brought them closer together. Heretofore, they were somewhat isolated, and all activities were carried on within the sphere of their own branches. Seeing the need of greater unity and better cooperation from the young people, R. L. Macrae, acting president of the district, sponsored this convention, and with the cooperation of others carried it through.

Following the dinner, Peter Ahuna, of the Chinese Branch, Brother Taira, of the Japanese Branch, Kaniu Hapai, of the Hilo Branch, and Thelma Sproat of the Main Branch spoke on different topics. Leilani Hapai, who had charge of the music for the convention, entertained the crowd with several musical numbers. Saturday's activities began with a sunrise prayer service in Punchbowl Crater at 5:30 a. m. About two dozen young people attended it and all four branches were represented. With the sunlight blazing forth from the left, the glorious rainbow before them, and the beautiful scenery all around, it would be a pity if any came down that hill that morning without added admiration for God's handiwork and also imbued with the spirit of inspiration to go forward and onward. Those who gathered at the service there were doubly rewarded. They not only enjoyed the

It began at 10 a. m. Friday with V. B. Etzenhouser in charge. The speakers for the opening addresses were Patriarch G. J. Waller and Elder R. L. Macrae. After lunch, V. B. Etzenhouser spoke on "Youth and Worship," followed by a round-table discussion. At 3 p. m. recreation was enjoyed at Waikiki Beach where the water was found to be refreshing. That evening about one hundred and fifty people attended a social dinner in the Sunday school room of the church. Everybody enjoyed eating the poi (Hawaiian cooked taro), laulau (pork cooked under ground), lomilomi salmon (ice-cold salmon with tomatoes and onions), sweet potatoes, and pine-

Spirit of God but also a wholesome, outdoor breakfast prepared by Brother Jacob Kiefer.

At 9 a. m. the young people again convened at the church auditorium for a class discussion period with V. B. Etzenhouser and R. L. Macrae in charge. Brother Etzenhouser spoke on "Youth and Leisure," and Brother Macrae on "Youth and the Financial Program."

An important event of the day was the organization of a District Young People's League at the business session. The officers elected are as follows: District supervisor, R. L. Macrae; president, J. J. Kiefer, Main Branch; vice president, Lily Yap, Chinese Branch; secretary, Keizo Tsuji, Hilo Branch; Yoshio Matsumoto, treasurer, Japanese Branch.

At 7:30 p. m., it was encouraging to see all the young people gather at the church anxiously waiting to be entertained with many musical numbers and plays to be given by the local branches. The Japanese Branch presented "The Secret to Happiness," a play. The Chinese Branch presented "The Talents."

Everyone waited with glad anticipation for Sunday to arrive, for on this last day of the convention, the most exciting events were to take place. The day was begun aright with a young people's prayer service at 8 a. m., over thirty-five attending. R. L. Macrae had charge of the church school period at 9:30 a. m. He portrayed the need of a progressive church school with teachers well qualified for that service. A play then was given by Hilo Branch members

Hapai is to be congratulated for the two anthems which the combined choirs of the district sang at the eleven o'clock service.

At 2:45 p. m., the gathering separated to several group meetings. The priesthood took charge of the men group; Sister Macrae, the unmarried women, and Sister Etzenhouser, the married women. All took up topics of particular interest to their respective groups.

At 6 p. m., a large crowd gathered in the auditorium of the church waiting for the oratorical contest to begin. Each one was anxious to know who would be the winner in the finals. The competitors were the winning contestant from each of the four branches. The judges for the contest were Patriarch G. J. Waller, and Elders V. B. Etzenhouser and R. L. Macrae. After the contest, Sam Toomey, the chairman, announced the following the Main Branch, had the honor of receiving it.

At 7:30 p. m., came the closing address of the convention given by Patriarch G. J. Waller.

Shenandoah, Iowa

Five Are Baptized—Help of Visitors Is Appreciated—Ten Receive Patriarchial Blessings

Sunday, August 12, was "District Day" in Shenandoah. The district presidency and bishopric were present and conducted all-day services in such an interesting and worshipful way that it was a spiritual feast to all. A continuous devotional service was greatly enjoyed from 10 a. m. until noon. The theme was, "Keeping in Touch With God," and there were short talks by District President Amos Graybill and Lee Landon, of the bishopric.

A basket dinner was then served. The afternoon speaker was Bishop W. T. Wellman, of Omaha. Brother H. P. Larsen, of the presidency, was the evening speaker.

They were favored with a visit from Brother Casimer Nickel, August 19. He is a promising young man of Council Bluffs, and he delivered an inspiring sermon at eleven o'clock on "By Their Fruits Ye Shall Know Them."

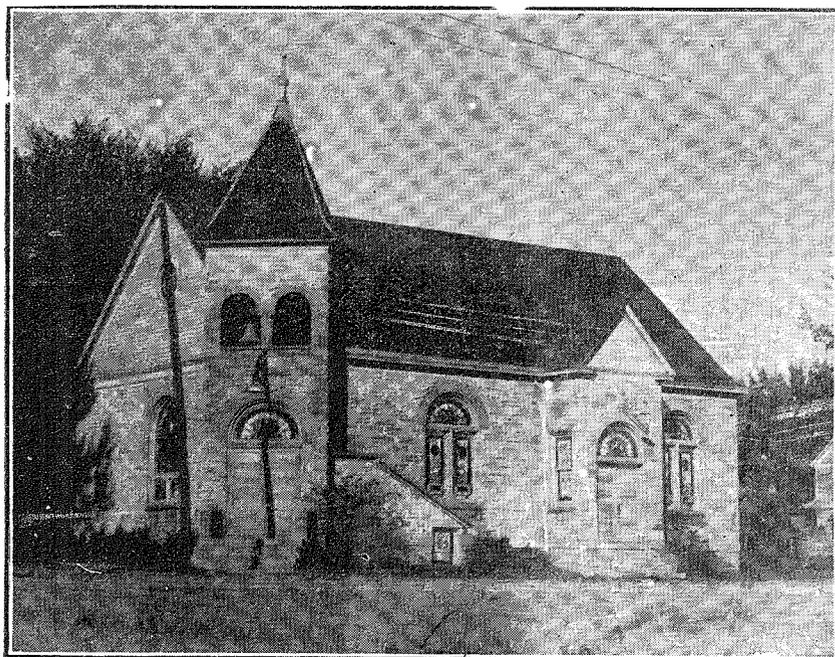

Special business meeting was held at 2:30 p. m. for the purpose of raising the necessary funds to complete payments on the church building for the branch year ending October 1. A fine spirit prevailed and the results were gratifying.

Then five splendid young people, four from Shenandoah and one from Red Oak Mission, were baptized and confirmed. All rejoiced in the experiences of the day.

On the following Sunday, August 26, local members were made happy when two patriarchs, J. A. Hansen, of Weston, Iowa, and J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, were present. Brother Gunsolley was the morning speaker, and he recalled many pleasant memories of days spent at Shenandoah in his young manhood. The members rejoiced to have him and to listen to his counsel on the theme, "Present Your Bodies a Living Sacrifice."

Brother Hansen spoke in the afternoon, giving one of his characteristically uplifting discourses. Ten young people received their patriarchial blessings.

The Saints enjoyed a marked degree of God's Spirit through prophecy during their sacrament service, September 2, giving them timely encouragement and counsel. They feel that the Father has been very good to them through the year and especially in the past few weeks, and they are grateful. They pray that he will help them as his priesthood to lead and as his children to follow so that he will see less and less of their weaknesses and more of their progress in righteousness.

SAINTS' CHAPEL AT BEVIER, MISSOURI

A picture of this church is among the exhibits of Macon County in the State Capitol Building, Jefferson City, Missouri. It is considered one of the most beautiful church edifices in that county.

This picture was sent to the Herald by Brother J. L. Williams who says that the building is located on one of the finest sites in Bevier. All the common labor in the erection of the edifice was donated by members, and some of the skilled labor.

who exhibited what talents they possess and the fine cooperative spirit they enjoy. In this play, "Faith," the imperative importance of paying tithing was brought forth.

At 11 a. m., Pastor V. B. Etzenhouser preached an inspiring sermon.

At noon, Sister Molly Antone, of the women's department, took charge as usual with a basket lunch for the hungry crowd. Two hours later, there was a song fest in charge of Leilani Hapai. Sister results: Puarose Mahi, Main Branch, first place; Lily Yap, Chinese Branch, second place; Masae Uyeda, Japanese Branch, third place; Cyril Directo, Hilo Branch, fourth place. This contest was sponsored by the priesthood of the district, who also furnished the prizes, consisting of our three standard books bound in leather with the winner's name stamped on the cover. To the branch whose contestant took the first place, a pennant was given. Brother Etzenhouser, pastor of

Dahinda, Illinois

Sister Elizabeth Meece passed away at the home of her son, William, near Dahinda, August 18. The funeral service was held at the church, Elder E. R. Davis officiating. She had been a patient sufferer from cancer for several months.

Theda West has been out of town visiting relatives, and also on business trips with regard to school work. Miss West attended Graceland College last year.

The Sunday school picnic will be held soon at the home of Brother and Sister Burt Hopkins.

Members of this congregation are looking forward to the visit of some of the priesthood. It has been some time since anyone has visited them, and they are anxious to meet Brother Roscoe Davey.

A good spirit prevails always in the services which are well attended.

The people of Dahinda expect a coal mine to be opened in the near future. This will bring many new miners into the community, and the Saints are praying that they may avail themselves of this opportunity to spread the gospel.

Dallas, Texas

Growing in Numbers and Spirituality

Dallas Branch, under the leadership of H. H. Davenport, is progressing. Attendance has held up fairly well considering vacation time and the long hot summer.

The pastor saw the need of a font, and in a very short time one was installed. Betty Jane Davenport, Lois and Robert Bellert, Charles Clark, Helen Thompson, Mrs. Hazel Davenport, and F. O. R. Keeney have been inducted into the kingdom.

Elder W. R. Standifer looks after the mission at Fort Worth. Brother Standifer and wife are fire-side missionaries. Lately he baptized four in outlying districts.

Dallas Branch was without a teacher, and the Saints took this matter to the Lord in prayer. Shortly after W. W. Holsworth was called to the office of teacher, then Brother F. A. Peterson and wife moved there. Brother Peterson also is a teacher. The Saints are glad to see these officers discharging their duty.

J. E. Nicoll who has been very ill has returned to his office.

This branch hopes in the near future to have Apostle R. S. Budd and Elder Lee Quick hold a series of services.

The church school under the direction of Sister Chattie Everett is not to be excelled. Attendance is good and many nonmembers are enrolled. The adult division, Sister Mattie Williams, supervisor, has been working hard to build classrooms. Their most profitable project has been in the making of doughnuts. The division is planning to have a stand at the State Fair next month.

F. O. R. Keeney took the junior choir to Fort Worth Mission to assist in the music there September 9.

Mrs. J. E. Nicoll has organized the Orioles. These girls held an ice cream social at the church several weeks ago. Dallas also has a lively band of Blue Birds and Mrs. F. O. R. Keeney is the monitor.

Church services have been helped and talent discovered through the efforts of Mrs. Frank Wilson, the director of music.

The branch is planning a home-coming day, September 23, and the Saints hope to see old friends and helpers.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Milwaukee Branch has a progressive group of young people, and they feel especially blessed to have such a helpful Sunday school superintendent as Eddie Ford.

Two from the young people's class attended Nauvoo Camp, Marlan Moe who took in his car a group from Madison and Janesville, and Ruth Heide, of Fulton, Iowa, who was spending her summer vacation in Milwaukee, went with him, too. They reported a spiritually and morally helpful ten-day camp, and highly commended the group there.

Mrs. Cone, the women's superintendent, was greatly helped by the prayers of the Saints during her recent operation at the hospital in this city, and many more feel God's divine watchcare every day of their lives.

Martha Vanderhooff is absent from high school suffering from rheumatic fever and for her prayers are asked.

Elder Leonard Houghton was one of the recent speakers, and he delivered a helpful sermon. Brother Dryer who has been absent from the branch for some time was a speaker September 9.

The Saints hope and pray that they may all work together for the progress of this wonderful work.

Gaylord, Michigan

The Zion's Christian Legion at Gaylord, was organized last May, and has met with success both financial and social.

In addition to lending its help to pay off the Auditorium debt this group is sponsoring many "good use of leisure time" activities in the community. A baseball team was organized early last spring, and played every Thursday evening during the summer. This furnished worth while activity for young and old, and interested many nonmembers who came to play with them.

The Gaylord Legion Team challenged the East Jordan Legion Team to a soft ball game which was played the evening of July 19, Gaylord winning. A return game was played at East Jordan July 26, and East Jordan won. This tie was played off August 8 at the Park of the Pines, and again East Jordan won.

The legion sponsored a roast at Otsego Lake, August 24, which was a success in spite of cold weather.

A farewell party was given August 31, at the home of Elder and Sister Elmer Parkes in honor of five of the young people who are leaving soon to attend various schools and colleges.

The church people of Gaylord are very enthusiastic about the Christian Legion and are eager to see it grow. One idea which has stimulated the membership was a contest between the adult department and the young people's department to see which could get more charter members (those paying dues from May 1). The young people's division won and they are awaiting the party at which the charter members will sign the framed charter.

Cherokee, Iowa

Pastor for Thirty-two Years Retires

A beautiful and soul inspiring service was enjoyed Sunday, September 9. District President Gerald Gunsolley, and Elder Will Adams, district bishop's agent, were present and took charge. Brother W. W. Reeder was chosen to succeed Brother A. R. Crippen who has served the branch as president over thirty-two years.

After a short business session, the district president requested Brother and Sister Crippen and Brother and Sister Reeder to occupy seats on the rostrum, and gave both couples a charge. Then Brother and Sister Crippen were given a special blessing by the laying on of hands, that the remaining years of their lives might be spent enjoying the Spirit of God, ministering to the people, and visiting and counseling with the younger leaders of the branch.

Brother and Sister Reeder were consecrated and set apart by the laying on of hands to carry on the work.

Throughout the service which lasted nearly two hours the Spirit was there in great power. Surely with a start like this and the Spirit continuing with the members, Cherokee Branch will see much progress during the coming year.

Other branch business will be taken care of at the yearly election of officers.

Tribute was paid Brother Crippen as his responsibility was passed to younger shoulders. The leadership at Cherokee was given to him when there were but six members in the branch. He was called from the mission field to take charge of that group. Under his hands the branch has grown and prospered, and now numbers more than one hundred fifteen. They have a consecrated priesthood of nine members.

As a witness to the progressive spirit of Brother Crippen the last piece of work while he occupied the office of pastor was to lead four candidates into the waters of baptism, William and Robert

Elder Frank Veenstra Sails for Holland

Elder Frank Veenstra sails from New York for Rotterdam, Holland, today, on board the "Statendan" of the Holland-American line. Brother Veenstra is well known to the Saints in that country, having served as their missionary in previous years. Some eighteen months ago he returned to America from abroad, and during the intervening time has served as missionary to Utah.

Sister Veenstra who accompanied her husband on his last mission to the Netherlands, remains at home in Independence, Missouri, this time.

Not Sufficient

To say there is no life after this certainly is a very narrow explanation of present life. Life on earth isn't sufficient.—G. Rehnstrom.

Elder A. R. Crippen Retires From Pastorate

After thirty-two years as pastor of Cherokee Branch, Iowa, A. R. Crippen has retired. In an impressive ceremony September 9, Brother and Sister Crippen were given a special blessing by the laying on of hands, that the remaining years of their lives might be spent enjoying the Spirit of God and ministering to the younger leaders and Saints of the branch with counsel and advice.

Thirty-two years ago Brother Crippen was called from the mission field to take charge of a group of six Saints at Cherokee. Under his faithful leadership, the branch has grown until it now numbers one hundred fifteen.

Elder W. W. Reeder succeeds Brother Crippen as pastor. District President Gerald Gunsolley and Will Adams, bishop's agent, were in charge of the service of blessing and tribute to the retiring pastor and blessing and welcome to the new leader.

Death to Religion

A religion soon dies when it loses the power to assimilate new truth, and to adapt itself to new circumstances.—Kirsopp Lake, in "The Religion of Yesterday and Tomorrow."

James Weatherholt Honored by His Friends

The eighty-second birthday anniversary of Brother James Weatherholt was celebrated August 26, at his home in the Millstone community, according to a story in The Cannelton Telephone (Perry County, Indiana), with a basket dinner, attended by fifty guests. The picnic meal was eaten out of doors, and a big birthday cake was presented to "Uncle Jim," the honor guest.

Shove, and Viola Ballantyne, of the children's division, and Mrs. Gladys Ballantyne. These baptisms took place at 10:30 a. m., just prior to the above-mentioned service. The candidates were confirmed at the evening hour. Following the confirmation service three children were blessed: Bonnie Lou Harroll, Merlin Edward Ballantyne, and Yvonne Marlene Spence.

This service concluded a wonderful day of spiritual feasting. With the consecration and unity shown by both priesthood and membership, Cherokee Branch is saying "Onward to Zion."

Reunion at Regina, Saskatchewan

Saints by the score gathered from many points in South Saskatchewan to participate in reunion activities at Regina, August 24, 25, and 26. Apostle J. F. Curtis took charge of the reunion. His inspiring sermons and thought-provoking lectures were enlightening to all. Elder V. H. Fisher, pastor of Winnipeg Branch, depicted, with the aid of a large hand-painted chart, the shortcomings of the present economic system with its millionaires and its paupers. Elder W. J. Fisher followed up with a sermon of suggestions as to the correction of these ills of modern civilization. Elder William Hadath, also of Winnipeg, with Elder A. C. Fisher, missionary to North Saskatchewan, and Elder C. Bruder, of Regina, contributed sermons of interest.

On Sunday morning Apostle J. F. Curtis led three candidates into the waters of baptism. These new members were confirmed at the hands of Apostle Curtis, Elder V. H. Fisher, and Elder C. Bruder. Later Apostle Curtis blessed two infants. Brother Nelson Henry, of Winnipeg, was called to occupy as a priest of the Aaronic order.

Meals were served to visitors in the basement of the hall. Sleeping accommodations were also provided within one block of the building in which the reunion was entertained. South Saskatchewan has suffered five successive crop failures, and drouth, wind, and grasshoppers have exacted a toll. In spite of adverse financial conditions Saints from all parts of the district and from Winnipeg showed a zionic attitude in cooperating to make the reunion possible by contributions of foodstuffs, produce, and cash.

In the middle of July Regina Branch opened a building with seating capacity of approximately two hundred as a house of regular worship. Elder A. C. Fisher, who had labored with pleasing success at an outpost in northern Manitoba during the first half of the year, was brought to Regina to carry on missionary work. There is prospect of progress in that city and it is hoped that the branch may build a strong missionary center to aid in preaching the restored gospel throughout Southern Saskatchewan.

Birmingham, England

Birmingham Saints are thankful for past blessings and rejoice in the Spirit of the Lord which continues with them, directing their path and protecting them from danger.

June 10 was Children's Day or anniversary services. Under their musical director, Brother A. Munslow, a fine program was given. Sister Jean was invited from the local Methodist Church, and was the speaker for the afternoon service on "Our Mothers."

The young people's prayer service continues to be full of life and interest. In connection with this several rambles have been organized and happy times have been enjoyed.

The church school outing took place in July. The pupils were taken by bus to the Lickey Mills, and young and old spent a pleasurable day amid the beauties of nature and lovely surroundings.

The members gladly welcomed the return of Apostle John W. Rushton and were delighted to meet Sister Rushton. She was already acquainted with some, and she was welcomed to Birmingham with a beautiful display of flowers. In the evening she was presented a bouquet of carnations.

Brother Rushton spoke to a crowded church. Their appreciation of him is sincere and true.

On the first Sunday of August a reading desk was presented to Pastor P. S. Whalley. It was the work of Brother Sam Meredith and a sound piece of furniture constructed in such a way that it can be taken to pieces and packed in a small space. Brother Meredith's mother, Sister May Meredith, shared in this gift, providing the wood.

Castroville, California

Under the leadership of the pastor, Doctor A. R. Lawn, the little branch of Castroville is showing renewed life. For some time just a handful of the Saints remained faithful in spite of discouraging conditions. Now a quickening of the Spirit is felt by all and attendance is steadily increasing. The weekly prayer meetings held at Sister Heatherington's home at Salinas are growing in attendance and spirituality, and a fine interest is being taken by the young people.

A business meeting and election of officers are to be held September 26, Elder Arthur Oakman, of San Francisco, presiding.

Hester and Helen Emerick, eleven-year-old twin daughters of Sister J. Emerick, were baptized on the afternoon of August 26, by Brother J. Jones and confirmed that night at a special meeting, by Doctor Lawn and Brother John D. Wiles, of Modesto. Brother Wiles had been at Castroville since August 19, preaching at the church and special meetings held in the homes of Saints. He has returned to Medesto now and the prayers of the Saints go with him.

Northern England Young People Have Convention

Youth and Age Rejoice in Church Heritage

"Workers Together With God" was the theme of the young people's convention of Northern District, England, held at Farnworth, August 26. This was initiated and worked up by Elder Fred O. Davies, director of religious education in the British Mission, and his associates included Cyril Chorlton and Harold Barrington, of North East Manchester Branch.

The services were well attended, the church being literally packed. The ministers and members of Farnworth Branch gave excellent hospitality to the visitors, and the meals were served with promptness and economy. This branch is the oldest in the Reorganization in England, and has a very interesting history. Recently they acquired the Old Grammar School premises, and by hard work and sacrifice they have renovated the buildings and groups so that they have one of the best equipped church plants in the mission.

It was greatly regretted that Brother Davies was not present. He was in Belfast continuing the missionary work which he and Brother Taylor have been doing for a number of weeks, conducting open-air preaching services and tracting. As a result of this work three had requested baptism and Sunday was the only day when the baths could be secured for this purpose. The convention program was a testimony to the effectiveness of the preparation and to the splendid cooperation of the assistants, and everything went on with dispatch and satisfaction.

All of the numbers, musical selections, essays, speeches and the devotional parts of the services were of splendid quality. At the opening of the afternoon session, Brother Leggott, beloved pastor of North East Manchester Branch, gave an impressive and inspirational message in which divine approval of the efforts of the young people was expressed. The speakers ranged from the youth of George Wilson thirteen years old, upwards; the singers from Miss Edith Noble and John Schofield, about the same age, up to the Preston family, of Stockport.

During the services the sick ones were not forgotten, and a season of fervent prayer on behalf of Sister Bertha Schofield in the Crumpsall Hospital, Manchester, was very moving. It was good to see many of the seasoned veterans of the church such as Brother S. F. Mather, the "little giant," Brother Thomas Brien, Brother Fenney and aged Sister James Spargo with many others enjoying their grandchildren and great-grandchildren as they showed that under God's blessings, they were preparing to carry on the work which is their heritage.

Congregational singing was under the guidance of Brother James Schofield whose long years of service in that department witness his fidelity to the work. He was assisted at the organ by Brother Harold Hope, of Farnworth.

Brother Abel Hall, pastor of Beresford Road Church, and Brother Black, pastor of Stockport Church, were in attendance, also Bishop A. T. Trapp and Brother Holmes and family of Midland District. Miss Kathleen and Raymond Holmes were just back from a month's tour through Denmark as members of English school groups which had been visiting as guests of the Danish schools; next year scholars from the Danish schools will be guests of English families. Congratulations were in order for Kathleen and Raymond because of their passing examinations with high credits.

Altogether the day was a very happy one and when the president of the district, W. H. Chandler, whose genial and efficient work is highly appreciated, asked if it was desired to renew the convention and would they accept the invitation of Beresford Road Branch to make that place the rendezvous next March, there was unanimous consent.

One felt that the future of the work is in good hands, and that the quality of service coming to the church in the near tomorrow will be of richer and riper talent than that which has preceded them. The future of the work in Northern District is bright with promise. It is the hope and the expectation of the director of religious education and the minister in charge to make these conventions popular in the three districts, and through them to send a stream of vital, spiritual power surging through the whole of the body in this land.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Northern California Reunion

High Spiritual Tone Is Blessing to Many

Northern California reunion was held at the Irvington reunion grounds July 20 to 29. The Saints met and worshiped, and now they have returned to their own branches, taking with them the spirit of joy and fellowship which characterized the reunion gatherings. This spirit is acting as a stimulus to those in charge of the work that God has called them to do.

The reunion grounds were filled to capacity, and at the close of the gathering the Saints were reluctant to "break camp" and go back into the world of selfishness and sordidness. It was good to be there on the grounds and have a clearer vision of what brotherhood means when all are of one heart and mind.

The spiritual activities of the reunion were conducted by trained and experienced leaders. Apostle F. Henry Ed-

William I. Fligg at Redickville, Ontario

Elder William I. Fligg brought three weeks of missionary meetings to a close at Redickville, Ontario, a short time ago. Though crops were heavy in that region, and it was harvest time with threshing and other activities, evening found the Saints' stone church well filled. Three baptisms resulted from this effort, and two were called to the ministry, one elder and one priest, through the district president, Elder H. A. Dayton.

Seek Prayers

Mrs. E. J. Lankford, of Burnside, Illinois, has not been strong since she suffered an injury to her back in April, 1933. She asks the Saints to pray that she may be restored to health and strength.

Mrs. Fern Lovett, of Camas, Washington, asks prayers for her mother, Mrs. C. M. Dobson, of Chelan, Washington, who has heart trouble.

Mrs. H. D. Morrill, Linwood, Kansas, wishes the church to pray for her son who has suffered a nervous breakdown.

Mrs. L. H. Hays, Port Burwell, Ontario, requests prayers, that she may be able to accomplish the work she has set herself to do to the glory and honor of Christ's cause.

Heartlessness

Capone and Dillinger are no more heartless or bloodthirsty than those who make arms and munitions for the disemboweling of human beings. They break down governments. They kill human beings—and they do it for nothing but sordid gain.—William E. Borah.

Young People Resolve To Be Gospel Pioneers

The theme of the all-day meeting of Central Illinois young people, September 2, was "Be Ye Pioneers." Splendid services, prayer hour, short talks on the day's theme, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, dinner in the basement, discussion meeting, and vesper service, filled the day with inspiration for all. District officers and friends of the young people gave generously to the success of the event.

wards held an eight o'clock priesthood meeting each morning. This was followed by a union prayer service. On some occasions their young people held their own prayer meetings. The prayer meeting was in charge of Apostle E. J. Gleazer. Elder Arthur Oakman held a daily class in worship. Brother Gleazer conducted a class on missionary work, and Sister Elva Sturges taught a class on religious education. In the evening just prior to the preaching service, Brother Oakman presided over a class in hymn appreciation. Apostle Edwards ably handled the preaching service each evening.

The young people were in charge of Sister Gladys Carmichael, of Berkeley. She planned a full day of enlightening and interesting activities for them. Included among these were early morning prayer meetings, forum, class work, athletics, and campfire entertainments. She also sponsored an afternoon trip to the nearby Stanford University campus. After accompanying them to the Stanford Memorial Church, she turned them over to Brother Myron Reed Schall who besides being the president of San Jose Branch is an assistant director of physical education at Stanford. Acting as their guide and informer, Brother Schall took them to visit the new girls' dormitory, their beautiful new gymnasium and recreation hall, their outdoor swimming pool, and their playing fields. They walked through the "quad" (quadrangle of class rooms, etc.) to the Administration Building and thence to the Art Gallery. After looking through Stanford's spacious library, they retired to the Memorial Church for the afternoon organ recital. This program of events required most of the afternoon, but they had time to catch a glimpse of the Herbert Hoover home on San Juan Hill, view the home of the president of the University, Doctor Ray Lyman Wilbur, and the Stanford Stadium which seats ninety-thousand people, and athletic playing fields.

The kindergarten, primary, and junior groups were actively engaged under the supervision of qualified leaders.

Other activities in evidence were a district choir, an orchestra, and the cantata, "David," was given on two occasions under the direction of Sister Lillian Simpson. Sister Rood and her daughter, of San Francisco Branch, assisted Sister Simpson. Another group of consecrated workers who deserve honorable mention are the Idola Club of Sacramento. They efficiently directed the cafeteria.

The Alumni Association of Graceland College of Northern California District was on the job. They had a tent on the grounds and it was filled with appropriate literature and informants concerning the church college. One of the evenings was given to the Gracelanders, and their speaker was Brother Roy Weldon.

Last but not least, the young people circulated an up-to-standard, penny-a-copy, mimeographed daily newspaper. Among others Sister Heinrich and Brother Arnold Bockover deserve commendable mention.

The prayer meetings were of a high spiritual nature. The gifts of the gospel blessed the experience of many.

Brother Myron S. Schall was called to serve in the Melchisedec priesthood. His wife was blessed with an open vision, and before the reunion was over Brother Schall baptized her and two other candidates into the church and into his branch. Brother Oakman also baptized a candidate on the closing Saturday afternoon.

Elder John Francis Weston

For sixty-one years Brother Weston faithfully served the church. In 1905, he and his wife came to make Independence their home for the rest of their days, and here he magnified his calling of eldership, responding always to the call of the Saints. He visited the sick, held services at the Sanitarium for several years, presided as elder of groups, and took charge and assisted in the afternoon prayer meetings at the Stone Church. He was blessed with the gifts of the Spirit, and many were blessed by his ministry. Brother Weston went peacefully to sleep September 1, at his home, being eighty years, ten months, and twenty-two days old.

A man who greedily seeks wealth is like a child who eats honey with a knife, scarcely has he tasted the sweetness when he finds he has cut his tongue.—Buddhist Saying.

Holden Stake

Priesthood Institutes in Progress

With forty members of the priesthood attending, a priesthood institute is being conducted this week at Blue Springs for ordained men in the western part of the stake. Last week an institute was held at Holden for Holden and Warrensburg priesthood, with about twenty-five attending.

The institute this week is being held every night for five nights, as the one at Holden was held. Stake President Amos E. Allen and his counselor, Brother J. A. Thomas, are in charge. President Floyd M. McDowell was able to conduct classes only one night at Holden, but is leading every night this week at Blue Springs.

Each night is divided into two class sessions, Brother McDowell taking at least one of the sessions every night this week. The other classes are devoted to "Standards for the Saints," and "Standards for the Priesthood," by Elder Thomas; "The Authority of the Priesthood," by Bishop J. A. Koehler; "The Financial Law," and "Study of the Word of God," by Bishop's Counselor Earl T. Higdon; "Methods of Visiting," by Brother Allen and Brother Thomas.

Two songs are being used as themes of the institute sessions—"Come Ye That Love the Lord," and "Send Me Forth, O Blessed Master."

"The immediate purpose of these institutes," says Stake President Allen, "is preparation for an increased devotion among the Saints of the stake, in which the priesthood must take the lead. This increased devotion is to be helped and encouraged by a series of rally services, followed by a series of missionary services, which are to start soon.

"The ordained men are making a splendid response to the institute sessions and materials."

Southeastern Illinois Reunion

Southeastern Illinois reunion was held at historic Brush Creek Branch, where the district has permanent equipment for gatherings of that kind.

For various reasons they had not held a reunion for two years, but this year, after it had been decided to meet, Brush Creek Saints and friends of the community went to work with a will, cleaning the grounds, painting the buildings, and doing other necessary work.

On account of drouth in this area the reunion was not so well attended as some of the previous gatherings, but the people of the community came out to the evening services in great crowds.

The reunion committee which consisted of the district presidency, L. G. Holloway, and R. E. Davey, did all it could for the comfort of those who attended. Brothers Holloway and Davey alternated in class work and preaching, and their splendid work was greatly appreciated.

The children were ably provided for by Sister Glenna Jackson and her assistants. Sister Edith Allen had charge of the girls of the early teen age and if their interest was an indication of the success of their gatherings, they were a great success.

The music was taken care of by Sister Floy Roberson, assisted by Ammon Roberson.

Recreation was supervised by Brother Davey, and was enjoyed by old and young.

The prayer meetings were of a high order of spirituality. Earnestness, humility and a desire for unity in the work of the Lord seemed uppermost. The Lord spoke to his people through Brother Holloway, giving comfort, courage, and admonition.

Four children were baptized on the last Saturday by Brother Holloway.

Kirtland Reunion

A Most Successful and Outstanding Gathering

Splendid experiences were the order of Kirtland reunion August 9 to 19, and the Saints who were there are still rejoicing.

The ninth of August found a greater gathering of people than had ordinarily assembled so early in the reunion, all anticipating a shower of good things from the Master's hand, and they were by no means disappointed. During the organization meeting, directed by Apostle M. A. McConley, peace and harmony existed, and a good start was had toward the objectives of the reunion and the church. One part of the picture was not complete, however, for the genial leader, Elder James E. Bishop, who had been the one to call the Saints together for their first service for many years past, found it impossible to be present. Not being under church appointment now and finding it necessary to remain at his post of secular employment, Brother Bishop was unable to attend the major portion of the reunion.

The first prayer service carried an omen of good for the entire reunion, and the Saints were by no means disappointed by any lack of outpourings of the Spirit. People who had not the privilege of attending the reunion heretofore are full of praises of it, and have resolved to return again next year, God being willing. What wonderful testimonies were born by those visiting the Temple for the first time! How wonderful their experiences while on the road to be in attendance! God's divine power was felt at each and every service as young and old assembled and bore testimony of his goodness to them and of their renewed determination to serve him in faithfulness.

After the experiences of Friday and Saturday morning prayer services in which the Father spoke many times to the Saints, the teachers of classes entered into their first day for accrediting Saturday at nine-forty-five. This same good spirit attended throughout each class period, each preaching service, and each lecture period of the reunion.

Apostle McConley taught a class for "Zion Builders" in the lower auditorium of the Temple. Sister McConley taught a class, "Organization and Administration of the Church School," at the same hour in the dining hall across from the Temple. Brother McConley has been blessed in securing a companion who is not only devoted to the cause, but able in the presentation of those things which have to do with effectiveness in administration. They make a fine, devoted pair who will go far in assisting to build up the kingdom of God and establish righteousness among men.

In the upper auditorium of the Temple, Brother John R. Grice taught a class for youth, his subject being "Youth and Life, or the Call of the Restoration." Each class period was well attended and many came regularly in order to secure credits.

Each day, also, Paul Booher cared for the junior church and had fine attendance and interest. Sister Margery Williams, of Ironton, Ohio, and her assistants, cared daily for the younger ones in the town hall, and the little tots were just as eager to get to their classes as the older members.

The committee feels that this reunion was not only the largest, but in many ways the most successful had in a number of years.

First of all, the Spirit of God was present in abundance, and under its softening, mellowing influence workers could work together in harmony. Second, able men were in charge. Brother McConley brought to the reunion the experiences gained from a period of years of strenuous missionary service in many fields, and with a desire to see things carried out efficiently directed to the best of all concerned.

Elder William Patterson, of Port Huron, Michigan, made a splendid contribution in preaching.

Brothers John L. Cooper and A. E. Anderton were in charge of the cafeteria and dining hall, and John Cooper, jr., of the refreshment tent. These with their assistants fed the reunion good meals at reasonable prices. People well fed are generous in their praise of other things as a rule. Though Brother Cooper did not have the elastic step of former years, due to his recent illness, yet with serenity he carried his load and praise is due him and his helpers. Indeed credit goes to all who contributed to the success of the reunion.

The more elderly brothers made a splendid contribution, too. Brothers F. G. Pitt, G. T. Griffiths, George Robley, and C. Ed. Miller preached, counseled, and helped wherever asked in a very commendable manner. These men have the prayers and respect of all for their genial spirits and their fatherly advice.

The musicians, under the direction of Sister Amy Glassford Axelson and her assistants, made a splendid contribution to the reunion. The reunion choir was a decided success. It was composed of singers from different parts of the districts represented at the reunion. The choir of Kirtland Branch, led by Sister Householder, made its usual splendid contribution, and the Youngstown Choir though small is talented and efficient, Sister Axelson director.

The reunion business meeting August 18, resulted in some changes in the personnel of the reunion committee. Elders James E. Bishop and J. L. Cooper who have served long and efficiently, were released with honor from the arduous tasks and Brothers Earl Curry and John Lewis, both of Kirtland, were added to the staff in their place. Composing the present committee are H. E. French, John R. Grice, A. E. Anderton, of Columbus, Ohio, and Earl Curry and John Lewis, of Kirtland.

Sunday evening, at the close of the reunion, several items of business were cared for. Among them a vote of thanks was given the men retiring from the committee, also to each one of the workers for his contribution.

Independence

Stone Church

Saints of this congregation are thinking and acting in terms of the Harvest Home Festival. Many are devoting extra hours to the erection of a variety of booths and exhibits at the Auditorium. All are eager to see a fine festival display in spite of drouth conditions in this region during the last season.

The Stone Church Choir proved itself a faithful help in the church services Sunday, singing at both the eleven o'clock and the seven-thirty preaching services, and broadcasting the musical program over KMBC at ten o'clock. Paul N. Craig directed and Robert Miller played the organ. Their music was appreciated. Sunday was a full day for these singers, for in addition to their three programs, they met with the Independence unit of the Harvest Festival Choir and the orchestra for rehearsal from four to six o'clock at the Stone Church, Director George Anway in charge.

Sunday morning Bishop J. A. Koehler continued his series of sermons, giving a very clear and definite sermon on "The Authority of the Church." In the evening Bishop M. H. Siegfried opened a five-night series, and preached a discourse which stressed the regeneration of individuals as the means of building the kingdom of God on earth.

Second Church

Pastor A. K. Dillee delivered a stirring sermon Sunday morning on the general work of the church. Music was furnished by Mrs. Sam Inman and Mrs. Will Inman who sang a duet number.

Downstairs the juniors listened to a talk by Gordon Cable on "Being a Friend at All Times." Mrs B. C. Sarratt told the story, "Gideon, a Friend of the People." A special number by a chorus of girls directed by Mrs. Maudell Sellers, added to this service.

In the evening Elder H. E. Winegar, of Enoch Hill, was the speaker, taking his text from John 3. A solo was sung by Earl Audet, accompanied at the piano by Louise Sarratt.

Walnut Park Orchestra

Officers of the church school were busy Sunday morning preparing for promotion day next week. A new mixed class of young people will be formed, to be composed of members of the two classes which complete the work of the intermediate department this fall. This new class will be taught by Duane Fish. The Swastika Class, a part of the young people's department for the past several years, has been consolidated with the A. W. Z. Class taught by the pastor. The program Sunday morning consisted of a special number by the orchestra, under the direction of Sanford Downs.

Evangelist Frederick A. Smith was the speaker at eleven o'clock, his subject being, "Our Present Needs." The music by the choir was in two parts, "Cast Thy Burden on the Lord," and "Blest Be Thou, O God of Israel." Preceding the sermon, Charles Alvin Thompson, jr., small son of Brother and Sister Charles Alvin Thompson, was blessed by Elders S. S. Smith and B. R. McGuire. The juniors meeting in the basement heard a story by Sister Erwin Moorman and a talk by Elder Welton Wood.

After a period of depressed attendance during the summer months, the religio is staging a comeback in attendance and interest for the fall and winter months. Two new classes, one in vocal music under the direction of Brother Edwin Moorman, and one in young people's church history taught by Kenneth Morford, were formed Sunday evening, and another on comparative religions, to be taught by Elder J. W. A. Bailey, will be organized in the near future. The program period Sunday evening was devoted to the reading of a religio paper under the title, "The Singing Kettle," by its editor, Helen Moorman. In addition to a good editorial by the religio president, Duane Fish, and several helpful articles on religious interest, there were several bits of humor about local people which furnished considerable amusement to both young and old. The paper will be made a periodical event.

The speaker at seven-thirty Sunday evening was Bishop B. J. Scott.

The Victoria Society sponsored a quilt and needlework display in the basement of the church, Thursday, September 20. There was also a fine display of antiques gathered from the district. About sixty quilts, some very old and some very new, were displayed. This society, which was formerly the Walnut Park Quilting Society, is composed of thirty-five expert needlewomen, and they meet every Thursday all day in the basement of the church to quilt and sew. Through their efforts many improvements to the church have been made and they hope to continue in this good work. Sister Leona Jones is president of the society.

Liberty Street Church

Two babies were blessed at the eleven o'clock service September 16. They were Grace Marie, daughter of Brother and Sister Fred Inman, and Shirley Ruth, two-months-old daughter of Brother and Sister Elbert Mock. Elders John Lentell and John Soderstadt officiated. Cecil Walker was the morning speaker.

Evening services began at the church on the same Sunday. The first service was in the form of a musical program presented by members of Groups 13 and 25 as a result of a recent attendance contest at the series of meetings held on Brother E. T. Atwell's lawn. Pastor J. R. Lentell acted as master of ceremonies.

The Religio has changed its meetings to Sunday evening. This includes the Doctrine and Covenants Class. Such an arrangement leaves Tuesday night free for other activities such as play practices and group development projects.

At the religio Sunday after the study period, Basil Stobaugh gave a short talk, Fanita Anthony sang a soprano solo, and Alice Zion gave a reading. Pastor Lentell has taken complete charge of the religio development, and after the program he delivered an inspiring sermon.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards spoke to the Saints of Liberty Street District last Sunday morning.

Enoch Hill Church

The young people met with their supervisor, Elder H. E. Winegar, for mid-week prayer service. They also sponsored a chili supper during the past week.

There were a number present for the eight o'clock prayer service Sunday morning. The room was much more comfortable than on the previous Sunday. The furnace had been completely gone over by men of this district.

Elder H. E. Winegar made an interesting talk on "Values" at the church school hour.

Elder C. S. Warren was the eleven o'clock speaker Sunday. Sister J. Jones, Millard Pace, and C. S. Warren sang "Come Unto Me, Ye Weary."

Patriarch F. A. Smith was the evening speaker.

Spring Branch Church

Patriarch Ammon White was the morning speaker Sunday, and he closed a week of missionary sermons, and the young people's chorus furnished a musical number.

At the close of the study period of the church school the remaining officers for the year were chosen. New officers for the coming year are: Pastor, F. A. Cool; assistant pastor, M. C. Jacobsen; bishop's agent, Robert Fish; women's superintendent, Bertha Miller; superintendent church school, A. J. Tankard; assistant superintendent, Ira Weeks; secretary, Ada Tankard; superintendent adult department, J. C. Andes; superintendent junior department, Sister C. J. Dixon; superintendent primary department, Grace Smith; chorister, Sister Jalmer Nelson, and young people's leader, Irene Roberts.

Brother White held preaching services last week on the lawn of Brother and Sister Reed's home. Because of rain one service was dismissed and one was held at the church. Attendance was good considering weather conditions.

Church school was very well attended. There was no intermission between that and church services.

Lois Krause and Bessie Krause, of Vesta, Minnesota, were baptized by J. S. Andes Sunday, and confirmed by Brother Andes and M. C. Jacobsen.

The wedding of Mrs. Dorothy E. Davenport and James P. Roark, of Kentucky, took place at the home of the bride's uncle, Elder A. J. Tankard, September 20. Preceding the ceremony two violin solos were played by James Tankard, "Juanita" and "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," accompanied by Frances Tankard at the piano. A solo, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," was sung by Frances Tankard. The bride was attended by Mrs. J. N. Ganson and the bridegroom by Mr. Ganson. Elder Tankard officiated.

Gudgell Park Church

September 9, Elder James D. Gault was the morning speaker.

Elder John F. Sheehy and Bishop J. S. Kelley met with this congregation on Tuesday evening for the annual business meeting of the district. Elder Walter Chapman was reelected pastor; Brother Clarence Martin, bishop's agent, and Keith Tucker, church custodian.

On Wednesday evening, September 19, at the close of the prayer meeting, a short business meeting was held to complete the election of officers. Pastor Chapman named as associate pastors Elders C. A. Kress and P. A. Sherman. Kenneth Sherman was chosen Sunday school superintendent, to be assisted by Milton Martin and P. A. Sherman. Joyce Tucker was elected secretary. Religio officers are: Milton Martin, superintendent; Virginia Camp, secretary. Sister Nina Tucker will head the women's department, and associated with her are Sister Roy Sherman and Sister Walter Chapman. Sister Esther Hook is director of music. Sister Esther Sherman is superintendent of harvest festival work; she was also reelected historian. Sister Alpha Martin is the publicity agent.

A new office was created at this meeting and given to Roy Sherman. Workers have made a plan by which they hope to stimulate a more complete and regular attendance at all services. Brother Sherman is the new attendance superintendent.

Patriarch Ammon White spoke the morning of September 16, and that night they resumed evening meetings, Elder Vernon Reese the speaker.

Elder A. M. Chase delivered an excellent sermon the morning of September 23, and in the evening Patriarch Albert Carmichael preached from the text: "Have faith in God."

East Independence Church

Wednesday the women met at the home of Sister Florence Minton, a good crowd being present.

Brother George Carlyle is moving to East Independence District from Logan, Iowa, and the Saints are happy to have his family among them.

Patriarch A. Carmichael was the speaker Sunday morning and his theme was "Inheritance." Carlos Smith sang a solo at this service.

At 3:30 p. m. this congregation held a baptismal service at Spring Branch. Marjorie Wagener and Sherman Henry Hatton were baptized by Frank Minton.

They were confirmed at the evening service, in charge of Pastor Frank Minton and Sam Smith. Elder Harry Friend, the evening speaker, talked on soberness.

Southern California Reunion

A Spiritual and Numerical Success

Southern California District closed the most successful reunion in many years August 26. All of the branches in the district were represented together with a number of visitors from Arizona and other places in California. Close to four hundred camped near the grounds and in the town while the week-end attendance exceeded six hundred. There was a particularly large and fine group of young people present, more than one hundred and fifty.

Cooperation was the keynote of the whole session in the performance of services, large and small. The teaching and preaching were inspiring, Apostle E. J. Gleazer and, Arthur Oakman, seventy, sharing these responsibilities.

Classes were held by these men for adults and young people separately. Apostle Gleazer's subject was "The Ordinances of the Gospel," and Brother Oakman's, "Divine Revelation." There was a large and consistent attendance in all class sessions with a large proportion asking for credit. The discussions and truths presented in the classes and in the daily discussion periods on various phases of the missionary problem gave new light to the relation of the individual to the church.

Each morning the day was started with prayer service. Some of the meetings were conducted separately for the adults and young people, and there was a joint service on other days. The Sunday services were especially fine, and the communion service on the last Sunday gained in significance because of the discussion of the ordinances in the class work. An outpouring of the Spirit was received numerous times with admonitions, warnings, and counsels.

The children were taken care of under the leadership of Sister D. B. Sorden with her assistants. They had daily junior church services and handwork classes. On the last Saturday they enjoyed a party with special games.

Besides beach recreation and games in the afternoon, every evening during the week, following the preaching service, there were campfire gatherings.

Other special services included a series of three health lectures by Doctor A. W. Teel; baptismal service; ordination and confirmation service; musical programs; Graceland program; a reception for all the women on the grounds; departmental round-table discussions; a religious play presented by San Bernardino Branch, and there was a standing committee for administration.

Rules were not mentioned, nor were they necessary. Peace and harmony prevailed. The Saints were lifted to such heights that they were reluctant to return to their daily tasks. Bishop Carmichael reported that final surveys showed the reunion to be financially clear. Everyone left the holy place determined to bring back an evidence of personal and group progress to the meeting next year.

Yakima, Washington

Yakima Branch began its meetings again September 9. Because of an epidemic of infantile paralysis, all public meetings were requested not to convene for a month. The branch hopes to go forward with renewed vigor and determination.

Mother's Day was observed by a group of pageants depicting episodes in a mother's life. The scenes were depicted by mothers in whose lives these episodes are occurring, and Claire Van Eaton read an appropriate poem or a song was sung for each.

The activities of the young people during the month of May included a horseback riding party, and a swimming party.

On May 27, a bridal shower was given at the Nutley home for Miss Ruby Clay. The gifts were presented by Shirley Van Eaton in the guise of a tramp peddler. Refreshments were served, and the remainder of the evening was spent in singing old songs.

The program on Children's Day was given by the younger classes. Nancy Claire Nutley sang a solo, "I Think When I Read That Sweet Story of Jud"; Jean Malcolm played a clarinet solo; Frances Malcolm spoke a poem, "Gifts for Jesus"; and the primary class sang songs.

Mrs. J. H. Van Eaton, Shirley Van Eaton, and Paul Anderson were privileged to attend the Silver Lake Reunion the whole ten days. Others of the branch attended for a few days. They received much encouragement and spiritual enlightenment which they brought back to share with those unable to attend.

On the evening of August 23, the large candlelighted living room of the Nutley home was the scene of a beautiful wedding. Miss Ruby Clay became the bride of James Wallace Adams, of Seattle. The wedding party included Miss Pearl Allen as bridesmaid, and Jack Nutley as groomsmen. Immediately preceding the ceremony Miss Claire Van Eaton sang, "O Promise Me," and "At Dawning," accompanied by Mrs. B. E. Nutley. The marriage ceremony was read by Elder B. H. Van Eaton. After the ceremony, refreshments were served to about thirty relatives and intimate friends. The young couple will make their home in Seattle.

■ The Narrow Way and the Broad Way

The narrow way is straight; you can see ahead.
The broad way is crooked; you don't know what is around the bend.

The narrow way is governed by law every inch of the way.

No law is enforced on the broad way. You can do as you please.

Moderate speed is the limit on the narrow way.

Everybody travels fast on the broad way.

It is not crowded on the narrow way.

The broad way is jammed.

There is an iron rod at the side of the road on the narrow way, to which one can hold in case of storm or fog.

On the broad way there is nothing to cling to.

You do not feel afraid in the narrow way.

Your nerves are on edge when you travel the broad way.

All are equal in the narrow way. They travel in the gospel car.

There is everything on the broad way from battered old wrecks of vehicles to the most expensive high powered cars.

There is home and rest at the end of the narrow way.

There is sorrow and regret at the end of the broad way.

I think I will stay in the narrow way. It still looks pretty good to me.—B. S. Lambkin.

■ Let's Take Time to Live

By Molly Richmond

Why rush and hustle all through life,
Why miss the joys He gives;
Why bind yourselves to ruthless strife,
Why not take time to live?
Why hedge yourselves with earthly things,
And stem the thoughts of dreams?
Nay,—Let them soar on freedom's wing

Why veil your eyes with gold's harsh scales,
And shut His beauty out?
Beside His treasures, gold doth pale
And greed is put to rout.
Nay—fashion thoughts of loveliness—
The hills in folds of gray—
Such lovely things He gives to bless
Our paths along our way.

Oh! let's take time in life to live
As He would have us to;
Enjoy the pleasures nature gives
Her beauties, ever new.
Lives that are made of simple things
Has dreams that reaches far;
And in their hearts contentment sings
No matter where they are.

With the advent of Jesus came the exploring of God. Moses, Plato, and others, made explorations toward God; but Jesus became the door of the world—left wide open to all time and closed to none.—Peter Ainslie, in Some Experiments in Living.

The Quiet Life

A Plea for the Home

The old home still stands in Concord, Massachusetts, where Amos Bronson Alcott and his family conducted their joyous but precarious family life. One of the daughters, Louisa May, achieved fame as the author of Little Women and other books. The house for all its honest New England stanchness and its plain economy, had a roominess about it that really permitted the family to live. There was a garret where the children could play; there were cozy rooms and little retreats where one could retire for study or whatever kind of meditation he chose. The home may have been modestly furnished and the larder was often bare, but within those walls the children had an opportunity for richness of living that reflected in their later lives—an opportunity that is denied to many children of families in modern homes.

It is easy to believe that people will be no better and no greater than the homes that they live in, although we must recognize that the walls and the building are only a half of what it takes to make a home. A great part of the home influence comes from the spirit that rules within it.

But there was something about the roominess of the old-fashioned homes, many of which are still standing, that afforded room not only for little bodies to stretch their limbs but also for young minds and souls to expand.

The older Spanish homes also recognized the need for retreat and seclusion which is so important at times when persons in the home have something to settle with their souls. There was often a little shrine, and in the larger homes, a chapel. The family had its private worship. To these places, members of the family would often go alone for thought and prayer.

Even a modern business office has its conference room where people may go to escape recurrent interruptions from visitors and so accomplish a particular piece of work.

Many of us can remember, in some old-fashioned homes, the chamber of horrors known as the "parlor" which every family felt duty-bound to maintain. It was a place always cold, dark, and musty. It contained furniture that could not be sat on; curtains that could not be raised; ornamental china that could not be used; and pictures on the walls that could hardly be looked at. A visitor from a foreign country, looking at such a room and seeing the gloomy portraits that hung on the walls, might have concluded that Americans were a nation of ancestor worshippers. They seemed to have no other household gods but the pictures of those who had departed this life.

Whatever the inconvenience and inadequacy of the homes of the older times, they were superior to many of our modern homes in that they recognized the need for a special place not devoted to the ordinary uses of life, but for retreat for thought in times of unusual stress. In the modern homes, the old-fashioned fireplace has disappeared. In its stead we have only a thumping steam radiator or a rattling hot air register.

Yet the human need for the quiet life persistently manifests itself and the time will come again when people will build homes with a view to satisfying the spiritual and intellectual requirements of life as well as the bare physical necessities.

Much of the strain in modern homelife can be traced to the fact that the houses throw the whole family into each other's collective presence with no chance of relief or escape. Tensions develop, quarrels break out, and sometimes irreparable trouble ensues.

Much could be done for our homes if we recognized this need of ministering to the spirit and intellectual growth of the family in the home as well as the physical needs. Every home should have a quiet place where members of the family can study; where during free hours of the day they can pursue their own hobbies undisturbed and free from the constant faultfinding and criticism of the rest of the family. The room or rooms could be devoted to library, studio, work shop, music room, or other things, according to whatever the predominant interests of the family might be.

Of course it will cost money to provide such things for our families, more money than we can immediately afford, but when one takes the view that he is devoting a lifetime to the building and arrangement of his home, he can look forward and plan for this sort of thing. Certainly such features of homelife cannot be provided in the modern cracker-box apartment—but then, apartment life is not homelife anyway. A real home sits on its own soil, surrounded by its own gardens and flowers, protected by its own trees and shrubs, and leaving room for the addition of those things not provided for by the original architect. Part of the basement can be transformed into a recreation room; a section of the attic into a library or study. These features incorporated into the dwelling provide a place of entertainment for the young people that will make it unnecessary for them to continue to go out on the streets to find their recreation, and that will permit them to bring their friends into the home.

With the proper planning of homes and the proper attitude towards homelife, much of the present dissatisfaction between parents and their children would disappear as if by magic.

Zion must be built in the homes of church members before it can be built in the community. We cannot have the kingdom of God in the church or the nation until we have it first in the homes.

College Day

Sunday, October 21

We hereby designate Sunday, October 21, as College Day and recommend that on that day special programs and services shall be arranged in the various branches of the church in the interest of Graceland College, this in harmony with the practice of the church for many years.

This is Graceland's fortieth year of service to the church. Certainly she has made an outstanding contribution to the work and progress of the church during those years. We are happy to receive the report that there is enrolled at Graceland this year the second largest freshman class in the history of the institution. This, together with the fact that the financial situation throughout the country makes it difficult for worthy students to continue their education, serves to emphasize the opportunity which the Saints now have of extending the services of our church college. A small investment in Graceland will bring satisfaction to the donor, extend opportunity to some worthy young man or woman, and enhance the contribution to the progress of the church as a whole.

The Saints' Herald in its issues of October 9 and 16 will give additional information concerning the work and needs of Graceland.

Your Neighbor's Subscription

Your own subscription to the Herald is probably paid up. We know you are looking forward to the beginning of the late President Joseph Smith's Memoirs on November 6 and that you are seeing to it that your subscription will not lapse and leave you without any single issue of this important and interesting document.

But how about your neighbor? Are he and his family reading the Herald? Do they know about the good things that are being printed in it every week, and about this special treat that we are providing for our readers?

Every Latter Day Saint family should have the Herald, not only because it is the official organ of the church but as well because it is essential to an informed and cooperative participation in church work. Perhaps a word from you would get your neighbor to take it. Perhaps your branch publicity agent needs to be aroused to his duty. How many people in your branch are taking the Herald? How many are not? Perhaps you can help by dropping a suggestion to your neighbor whose subscription has lapsed.

FAITH

By Bruce E. Brown

"Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

FAITH has been referred to in many sermons and articles as being one of the "first" principles of the gospel, as well as being a fundamental principle of life. It perhaps would not be considered an extravagant statement for me to say that everything human stands on this footing. There is seldom, if ever, an analysis of what faith as an essence actually is. The word is so rich in meaning and is used in so many different senses that it is only natural that there should be some confusion of thought. The word has almost endless shades of meaning because it is such a universal human quality.

What some call faith others of us would call credulity and sometimes superstition. Rider Haggard tells a story of the Reverend Thomas Bull whose point of view began early as a child. When the children in the nursery had to take medicine he said to his weaker sisters, "Don't think: gulp it down," a principle which he applied all his life, especially in theology. Of another type is the use of the word for varied sorts of acceptance by the mind of some truth. We say we believe something that is proved to us by observation, or by experiment, or by credible witness. We believe what we consider facts, or a deduction from facts. The sum total of the propositions we accept as true we call our faith. But faith is not exhausted, or explained, as the intellectual assent to truth, or even as the speculative knowledge, of great principles. Much confusion is caused by the failure to distinguish between faith and beliefs. Beliefs are plants that grow out of the soil of faith.

Faith is a spiritual attitude of welcome to what we accept as truth. It is not a purely intellectual act, but an affair of our whole nature. It is practical, rather than speculative. Faith is an attitude of soul in which it makes a venture in the world and life, throwing one's self on an unseen spiritual order, and by the very act it becomes the "assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." The word that comes nearest to describing the very essence of faith is the word venture. We put the whole weight of our life on an assumption, and risk everything on it. Everything worth while in life rests on this tenuous foundation—a venture on the imponderable and immeasurable.

I have said that everything human stands on this footing. The solid world of business, on which we all depend, looks the most material structure erected by man. When we ask our leaders of industry on what it rests they reply that it is a system of credit; and credit, like creed, is credo—I believe. They will add that business needs public confidence—that is fides, faith. The most important development of modern business is the creation and managements of what is called "trusts." The demand which business men are always making on each other as colleagues is for loyalty and fidelity. Trust means confident reliance on integrity, or veracity, or some such quality.

All our social life also is of the same character. We are held together in groups—in families, cities, states, nations—in no other way. We may think these forms of society have other sanctions, but when we investigate we discover that once again we are in the region of the imponderable. What holds the United States together? We say the flag, but we do not mean the silk or cotton of the fabric or the number of the stars and stripes. The flag is the symbol of something that cannot be defined or even put into exact words. Or what holds the far-flung British Empire together? Men say the King, but once again they mean the King as a symbol of something else so unsubstantial that the only word to approach its reality is the word faith. The symbol stands for home, and hearth, and liberty, and law, and order.

Even our whole intellectual life roots itself in faith. Sometimes a scientist of a narrow type will speak as if, while ordinary people might walk by faith, he is a man of science. He does not inquire how much he takes for granted before he begins his science. He takes the world for granted and himself, even the accuracy of his thinking machine, which is a mighty big assumption sometimes. He takes for granted great principles, which he leaves to philosophers or theologians to break their teeth over, like causation and the uniformity of nature, etc, etc.

I have never done any worrying over the so-called conflict between science and religion. There will always be conflict between some kinds of science and some kinds of religion. Lord Kelvin and Louis Pasteur were two of the greatest scientists that ever lived, and they both were sincerely and profoundly religious. If a scientific man is religious he is so in the same way and for similar reasons as other religious men. If a (Continued on page 1260.)

How Worthy Shall We Be to Bear a True Testimony?

By Almer Sheehy

We as young people are proud of our church, and we have reason to be. It is the greatest religious body in the world. It is the organization of God, being divinely instigated, developed, and guided.

We believe the world to be in turmoil, in a sea of wickedness. Many are lured to destruction by the world's enticements, and few obtain eternal life. The only way to find God and life eternal is through God's own plan of salvation, the church, and of his church we are privileged to be members. Yes, we have reason to be proud of the church and thankful for our affiliation with it.

And yet there have been times when my pride in the church was not so great. For as long as I can remember the church membership has numbered around 110,000, fluctuating by a few thousand. And when I read in the church history that in the first fourteen years of the church's existence in latter days, it had a membership of approximately 225,000, I regret that the church today is no greater numerically and spiritually than it is. What are we as young people doing about this? Are we working to win souls to Christ? Are we concerned about the missionary aspects of the church program? Have you, or have I, converted anyone to accept the gospel?

Many of our church buildings are far from beautiful. We have upon occasions been ashamed to invite our nonmember friends to attend services held in some of these buildings. But what have you and I done to improve the appearance of any of the church properties?

Many of our members and our ministry are untrained in academic scholarship, in cultural education, or in rhetorical and oratorical fields. Without casting reflection on any who have given their lives in service to the church, we can say that few of our people have stood out in brilliancy or genius. Are you training yourself for efficient service in the Master's cause? Are we as young members taking seriously the admonition of Paul to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God"?

There are many young people in the church today. Fifteen years from now when we are middle aged, shall we be able to point out where we have helped the church, where we have told the gospel story to good effect, where we have increased and beautified the church properties, where we have brought to the service of God talent made the more effective by rigorous training? Shall we?

It needs the overflow of heart

What will our testimonies be when we are older? Shall we be worthy to bear testimony to the goodness of God and the truth of his church?

We know the laws of the church and those things expected of us. Are we trying to walk the pathway Christ trod? First, let us seek a better relationship with God, ever strongly feeling our need of and dependence upon him. Second, let us seek a righteous and working relationship with our fellows, never feeling superior or inferior to them. Upon our relationships to God and our fellow workers is based the foundation of peace, progress, and success—Zion!

Having established the foundation, there are two important things for us to do.

Achieve great things. In order to do great things, goals must be set high. Seek world fame if such is not the end of your seeking. Be world renowned and of world reputation in your chosen fields of endeavor, but always direct those trained talents and their fruits toward the good of the church. Such a gift on your part and on mine will make possible an increase in church membership, a growth which, perhaps, we have not dreamed of. It will increase our strength as the body of Christ, make beautiful, well-arranged, and inspiring church buildings, produce brilliant and stirring thinkers and preachers in the church, and bring a surplus to the treasury of the church.

Tell the message of the church. It is divinely worthy the telling. Present it with conviction and effect in public and in private. We need not wait until we have achieved success and our great goals to relate the gospel story to our neighbors. We can tell the story of Jesus now as we prepare to be of greater service in his cause. Our ability to tell the divine message should constantly and consistently increase, and we can tell it with conviction only when we live according to his teachings. Having an intense desire to tell it will be an incentive for us to live it.

Fifteen years from now these things should not be dreams but realities. As the years pass will they find us firm in the faith, on the upward path, and worthy in every way to bear our testimony of Christ and his church.

Young People of Nauvoo District Are Organized

By Roberta Lewis

The young people of Fort Madison Branch, Iowa, were hosts to the Nauvoo district young people's organization, September 14. The meeting was well attended, and proved to be a beneficial and wholly enjoyable experience to all.

The program included a rendition of "Rock of Ages" by the Fort Madison Choir; two cornet solos by Harold Smith, also of Fort Madison; a playlet, "When Mothers Meet," by Lillian Williams and Emma Broman, of Burlington; a talk concerning aims and future plans of the organization by the president, Jack Sanford, of Nauvoo, Illinois, and a short inspirational address by Apostle D. T. Williams. Brother Williams urged the young people to dare to do big things.

After the program, the group enjoyed a social hour in the basement of the church, climaxed with appetizing refreshments.

The youth of Nauvoo District, feeling a need for a unified directed channel as an outlet for their religious endeavors, under the leadership of E. R. Williams, of Burlington, were organized at a meeting held in Nauvoo August 5, 1934. They chose the following officers: President, Jack Sanford; vice president, Pearl Herrick; secretary, Wilma Gunn. Monthly meetings are to be held at each branch in turn. A play contest is among the plans of the officers.

Stewardship Accounting

By L. S. Wight

EVERY CHILD, as well as adult member of the church should learn to recognize his stewardship responsibility. His individuality (agency) should also be developed and protected. If we teach him to account for the spending of his money, time, and energy, will that accomplish our purpose? Will it fit the divine pattern? Is it a practical plan? Can it be made simple in application?

The best answers to such questions are to be found in personal experiences and I want to relate one here, to show how quickly children will grasp fundamental truths if they have a chance. A seven-year-old boy wanted to have his own spending money. His parents were not able to give him much, so suggested to him that he ought to plan his spending carefully. It was agreed that he should have a weekly allowance provided he would do his part by keeping a record of what he did with it. Childlike he agreed to anything to get the money. He had no idea of what it would mean to keep a record of his money. Some parents might have thought it a waste of time to try to get him to do such a thing. But here was a good chance to prove or disprove a theory, so his parents made the effort.

To illustrate to him the idea of record keeping they used the story of a certain man who wanted to be a storekeeper. He had had no training for such work. He later explained his bookkeeping system as follows: "What I gets, I put on the left side, and what I spends, I put on the right side." He had the basic idea even if he did not know how to use or explain it properly. Any child who gets this fundamental idea clear in his mind can keep a record that will fit his needs. The seven-year-old boy bought a five-cent notebook out of his first allowance quarter, and the first thing he did was to mark down his quarter on the left side. He knew then that whatever he spent his money for would be marked down on the right side. His first cash credit entry was five cents for the notebook. From then on whatever he marked down was a result of his own decisions, since the parents decided to leave the spending of his money entirely to the boy's own decisions. That money was his. His individuality should be recognized by permitting him to feel that he was his own boss as far as that which was distinctly his own was concerned. He was very careful to make every entry in this little notebook until the novelty wore off, when he quit. The parents were ready for this, because the giving of the allowance was on condition that the record be kept. When he quit, the allowance was automatically stopped.

SOME TIME LATER he asked for the allowance again. He was told that he could have it if he would find his record and start keeping it again. Here is where the interesting and important thing in connection with this incident happened. When the boy found his book he took it to dad to get some help in checking it over. He found to his dismay that he had spent all his previous allowance for things he did not need. In most instances, if an entry was not "candy and gum," it was "gum and candy." The total expenditure for the six or eight months was a little more than four dollars when he added it as one sum. It looked big to him. To think that he had spent that much for gum and candy rather appalled him. He turned to his father and said, "Gee whiz, dad, did I spend all that for gum and candy?" His father answered by merely suggesting that his record showed him the answer. He did take advantage of the chance to illustrate what it means to plan our expenditures so that we get the proper balance in all that we do. When the importance of doing his share to keep up the church work was shown, the boy could see that instead of helping, he had wasted all of his money-energy. He had had the privilege of making his own choices and he was worried when he realized his error. After some thought he voluntarily said, "Well, I won't do it any more." There was no parental dictation, or suggestion. He was making the decision himself because he felt that he was being given full privilege to do as he pleased. And the interesting result was that his later records proved that he carried out of his own free will the very thing he said he would do. A year later, in one of the spring months, he came to his father and said, "Well, dad, I'm seventy cents ahead on church over candy so far this year." When a child can do that in a simple way, certainly every member of the church should be able to control his spending. He should know at any time whether the amount of energy he is spending for recreation, for instance, is out of proportion to that which he is using to help keep up the church, or for other necessary or productive work.

AFTER we decide upon some plan of dividing and controlling our energies, our big problem is to keep it up, to be consistent. And that is hard. I know from my own experience, and from the experience of others. However, a determined effort will overcome this and will make it possible for all those who want to do it, to keep up some form of permanent control of their lives. That is the important thing. The purpose of this suggestion is not merely to keep a record. It is to show the necessity of having some kind of record of individual or family activity, in order to see clearly at any time whether or not those activities are in balance. If our ideal couple will carry on as their family is growing they will be surprised to see how the children develop a sense of balance which will make them voluntarily want to do what the parents wish without the parents asking them to do such things. We hear many suggestions as to what should be done to strengthen the home and to increase its spiritual influence. Some believe there should be more and better parental control. Some believe that family worship will solve the problem. These are wonderful principles which should be recognized and used. But fine leadership, church principles, parental authority, maintenance of the family altar, nor any other thing can accomplish the desired results unless they are backed by some kind of family plan or system which enables each family member to properly balance his life. Therefore, we should see to it that each member of the family learns how to account for his activities, and that he gets the habit of keeping up his plan.

To drop the plan of control because of what it shows is absolutely inexcusable. Do you think I am exaggerating when I suggest that this has happened? Two incidents which have come to me in my experience will show to what extent some people will go to get what they want. And when they let a selfish attitude rule them they put themselves in the class of those who "will not" try to conform to group needs. Several years ago a friend of mine who is a church member and interested in the church program laughed at me because of my intense interest in keeping a record of my activities. I answered in kind, as he was a bookkeeper, and told him that if anyone should be in a position to know at the end of each month or year what he is doing, he certainly should be that one. He saw the point and promised to try it. Some months later I met him and asked if he was still keeping his record. He answered that he had for a while, but had dropped it. In response to my insistence to know the reason he admitted that he always had spent quite a bit of money in the barber shop, as he did like to keep up his appearance. When he kept a record he found to his dismay that far too much was going for his appearance costs. Since he did not want to quit the expense, he decided to quit keeping the record. It showed him how much of his developed energy was going into looking nice. When he discovered why and how much his living was out of balance he quit doing the very thing that would have helped him to get back in balance. His only excuse was that he wanted to continue the expense without knowing its cost.

Some time ago I talked to a certain business man, and in our talk about government costs and budgets, we drifted to the question of personal budgets. He told me that he had always been careful to keep an accurate record of his personal affairs just the same as he did of his business activity. But there are two items which he never records. They are cigarettes and gasoline. He said he likes to smoke and to drive his car, and does not want to know what either costs him. My purpose in repeating these incidents is to show how necessary it is for each individual to have some way of controlling his activity. Even in those cases where the individual is doing some thing he wants to enjoy without knowing the cost, he will find that unless that activity is kept under some kind of control it will upset his entire plan to keep his life in balance. And we may as well learn first as last that it is impossible to get the fullness of life promised by Christ unless we first learn how to keep our entire lives in balance.

To go back to our ideal couple, the habits they develop by keeping their family life under control will help them to take advantage of opportunities, and they will find that they can improve their situation. As income or business increases, they will find their family obligations increasing also. But with some kind of control they can keep a happy relationship between themselves. They will find that they can pay their tithing regularly. They will have a little surplus each year. Sometimes they can give up a planned pleasure and will add the money provided for it to their church offerings. This is intelligent sacrifice. The system of keeping every move under control makes it easy for them to know what they are doing. They can increase their church offerings more intelligently. It takes the guess work out of their family life. It reduces the possibility of misunderstandings which lead to endless trouble because nothing is left to chance.

Let me emphasize that those of us who do not keep any kind of record of the money we spend would be extremely surprised at what a record of one month will show up. If someone would try to tell us that part of our energy is being wasted as an accounting would show, we would not believe them. But after looking at the record we will be forced to say as the boy who checked up his candy expense, "Gee whiz, (Continued on page 1260.)"

Our Leisure Time Activities

By Dwight D. W. Davis

DWIGHT D. W. DAVIS

AT THE Seventy-fifth Conference of this church, April 12, 1932, the spiritual authorities adopted a document that urged an educational and spiritual approach to the problem of leisure time activities. As a people we are just beginning to appreciate the futility involved in trying to legislate righteousness now or in the future.

Professor Steiner, in writing about the undesirable forms of amusements, states the approach to be taken in this language: "Perhaps this aspect of our leisure-time problem can be dealt with more satisfactorily by the promotion of wider recreational opportunities than by more drastic governmental control. The indirect attack upon undesirable amusements by creating interest in more wholesome forms of recreation seems in the long run to be the wisest course to follow."<sup>1</sup>

In the broadest sense of the term, then, the approach must be educative and positive. It is not surprising, therefore, that we find the following resolution proposed by the Quorum of High Priests at the Seventy-sixth Conference, April 12, 1934, and adopted by the conference assembly:

"Be it further resolved: That the pastors, members of the priesthood, and all others (especially parents) having direction of the activities of the Saints reaffirm their belief in the wisdom of restraining our activities so as to exclude any and all form of amusements and uses of leisure time which in any way tend to break down our moral standards or which would hinder our spiritual development and that we further be urged and trained to give special attention to developing creative interests and abilities which will lead to the realization of ideals of the church in the daily lives of its members."<sup>2</sup>

As a church, both individually and collectively, we might just as well become cognizant that this problem is our problem. President McDowell states that it is one "of choice." While the ministry, upon whose shoulders the teaching burden devolves, can do much to direct and train, we must ourselves be willing to be led. Such willingness implies that we make some conscious, intelligent effort at self education along these lines. We must convince ourselves of the necessity for a godly evaluation of the varied recreational stimuli that impinge themselves upon us.

Not one of us, I trust, is so credulous as to presume that leisure and its use is a modern problem. One ancient Greek philosopher, Aristotle, said that "the whole end and object of education is training for the right use of leisure." Leisure, however, is a modern problem in the sense that never before have the mass of people possessed so much time for the enjoyment of recreational activities.

The consumption of this leisure is like the utilization of the automobile: a source of production and joy in the hands of the intelligent; a source of destruction and sorrow in the hands of one whose faculties have been deadened by the influence of alcohol and pernicious drugs.

Cecil North believes, and rightly so, that since leisure is time to do what we want to do, "the provision for play becomes one of the essential criteria of a people's culture." But he hastens to add that "many leisure-time activities, particularly those usually called play, are not without their dangers, both to health and to character. Under the conditions of modern life, particularly, play is attended by many chances that the person will find his satisfaction only at too great a price. One of the most serious problems of modern society is to throw about play safeguards against personal disaster. Adventure will be found. It remains for an intelligent society to see that it is found under those circumstances that provide the satisfactions without the disasters."<sup>3</sup>

How familiar this sounds to those acquainted with the sixth chapter of Galatians where the Apostle Paul admonishes us to "be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

For many the new leisure will be as a toy placed in the hands of a child: ineffective until taught how to use it. Many others will be content to just kill time and complain that nothing exciting ever happens. These are they who must somehow be reached and taught to make their leisure a living, vital thing.

Lewis E. Lawes, Warden of Sing Sing, emphatically warns against any attempt to kill time for he traces 97 percent of more than 40,000 cases that have passed in review before him to aimless leisure. He states that "boys do not get into trouble during school hours or when they are at home. Spare time and leisure have become the serious periods of every boy's life. The way ultimately to cut down the great overhead in penal institutions and to reduce the number of those who are being sentenced by the courts is to provide supervised leadership and regulated leisure."<sup>4</sup> Again he sounds the warning that "unless we plan to supervise the spare time of youth in this modern day when there are so many incentives to draw boys away from the quality of character and rectitude, society will be in a hopeless tangle in the days not so far ahead."<sup>5</sup>

In his opening address at the Youth Conference held in Lamoni, Iowa, June 18, 1933, President Frederick M. Smith warned the youth of this church (and it is a warning that adults might well heed for they, too, are in need of it) that they must "discount the pernicious advertising continually promoted by interested concerns over the radio, in the movies, and through the newspapers."<sup>6</sup>

In 1929 one and one-half to two billions were spent on advertising in the United States. Commenting on this fact we find the official summary issued by the President's Research Committee on Social Trends in the February, 1933, issue of the Recreation. The committee states that "Advertisements set forth what our forefathers would have called temptations. We are urged to yield to their enticements by notions of human nature which differ radically from those entertained even in our own childhoods. . . . Business, with its advertising and high pressure salesmanship, can exert powerful stimuli on the responding human organism. How can the appeals made by churches, libraries, concerts, museums, and adult education for a goodly share in our growing leisure be made to compete effectively with the appeals of commercialized recreation? Choice is hardly free when one set of influences is active and the other set quiescent."<sup>7</sup>

And still there are those who believe all that they read in the advertisements!

In a recent book, Delisle Burns, an English writer, made the statement that "leisure is the opportunity for exploration in new fields of living."<sup>8</sup> The reader can recall acquaintances who are thus capitalizing on their leisure.

I know a young man, a close friend of mine, who, deprived of the opportunity of finishing his education, has availed himself of the books I have used in my own University work. Much of his leisure time is spent in heeding the admonition of latter-day revelation "to study all good books." He is doing much to keep his personality from growing crabbed and his mind from rusting.

The church of tomorrow is dependent upon the manner in which the membership capitalizes upon its increased leisure today. What we shall explore and how we shall do it, is our problem. Let us make our choices with care.

"To every man there openeth
A high way and a low;
The high soul climbs the high way,
The low soul gropes the low.
While in between on the misty flats
The rest drift to and fro.
To every man there openeth
A high way and a low,
And every man decideth
The way his soul shall go."

Take Him Seriously

A young professor in an American college said of the brilliant, lovable, but erratic president of the institution, "I admire that man more than anyone else I know. But I wouldn't follow him across a turnip patch."

Is not that the way we too often think of Jesus? We admire Him beyond words. But we would not be such fools as to do actually what He says. We modify, explain, dilute, His sayings. We call Him "Lord," and then do as we please. Then we wonder why Christianity is so weak.

What is needed is not to take Him and His words literally. It works havoc always to take a poet literally; and the Master is preeminently a poet. We must keep our common sense and our imagination working in full play if we are to take Him and His words aright.

But we must take Him seriously. The faith needed today is that Jesus knew what He was talking about, and meant what He said.—William P. Merrill in The Way; The Macmillan Company.

Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean

By M. H. Morgan

HISTORY indicates that events, both great and small, fall into a natural sequence, moving unitedly toward a certain end; and their apparent inevitability suggests an overruling, directing Power. Link the man with the hour and one sees the reason for his birth.

Columbus was probably not mistaken when he believed himself under divine direction, even though he died with a false idea of what he had really discovered. All the early navigators—Italian, French, Portuguese, Spanish—were trying to find an ocean route to the treasures of far-famed Cathay (China), Cipango (Japan), and India. The Turks had closed the Asian overland route, which at best, was hazardous and expensive. Too few of the heavily-laden camel trains, skirting the asphalt pits of Central Asia, and traversing its bandit-infested deserts and mountainous tablelands, ever reached their destination. But so he was known, and so much feared, about the vast oceans that stretched beyond the knowledge of man, that it required courage of a high order to venture upon their deeps. Navigation of sorts had extended over hundreds of years, even long before the birth of Christ; but as Europe lay west of China, a water route to China meant a trip around the globe, into oceans at that time absolutely unknown.

Eighteen hundred years before Columbus' time, Aristotle had advanced the idea that the earth was round; and navigators naturally concluded that beyond the far horizon they would reach the edge of the curve and drop off into space; or, as ships of that age were sailing vessels, propelled largely by wind and ocean currents (both of which flowed away from their home land, the possibility of running counter to them and ever getting back again seemed meager. Then, too, they feared the fabled Mountain of Lodestone, located somewhere beyond their knowledge, which might draw the nails from their ships; or there was the boring worm that perhaps might pierce their keels. Added to these were the known and unknown hazards of great sea monsters—all of which tended to discourage extensive navigation.

Passing by the very first discoveries of the continent of North America by Norsemen and others—since we really know so little about them—we come down to the time of Columbus. It is a matter of history that in the fourteenth century B. C., Moses led his adventuring Israelites in that epic journey out of Egypt to their Promised Land; and in the fourteenth century A. D. Columbus opened the way to another Promised Land, a land Isaiah, in the seventh century B. C., spoke of as "shadowing with wings." The Americas roughly resemble two great wings, outspread, the eagle being the symbol of the United States.

However, Columbus never touched the shores of North America, but discovered first the Bahaman Islands, which he thought was China; and Haiti, that he mistook for Japan. In 1498 he reached the mainland of South America, and in 1502, the eastern coast of Central America.

In 1497, the Italian Cabots, father and son, sailing under the banner of King Henry VII of England, reached the shores of Labrador, claiming that land for England. Adventurers of these early days sold their services to the highest bidder. Because of this, we find Italian navigators claiming land discovered by them for England; or French sailors planting the standard of Spain.

In 1501 Amerigo Vespucci, another Italian, reached the continents of the Americas, and it is from him they take their name—the triple continents of North, Central, and South America.

In 1524 a fourth Italian, Verrazano, under the standard of the king of France, charted part of the eastern coast, from what is now North Carolina to Newfoundland; and in rapid succession thereafter, Jacques Cartier in 1534, Sir Martin Frobisher in 1576, Gilbert in 1566, and Raleigh in 1585, moved on and off the scene of the eastern coast.

FOR TWO CENTURIES after America's discovery, however, the idea back of all exploration was not to find a new continent—they had no idea there was such a thing—but to reach China, Japan, and India by a water route; the voyagers constantly expecting each American lake or river to prove an opening to China. America as another world was simply in the way. But in the early part of the fifteenth century, gold having been accidentally discovered, the Spaniards took over much of the exploration of the continent on a greedy quest for this valuable metal; and from then on, for a period of many black years, early American history was a bloody panorama of fiendish butchery, broken faith, ravishment, and bigotry.

For gold and conquest, with the further concomitant of establishing his religion, Cortez in 1519 invaded Mexico; Pizarro in 1531 entered Peru; Balboa, crossing the Isthmus of Panama from Haiti in 1513, discovered the Pacific; Ferdinand Magellan, a Portuguese, passing through the Straits at the extreme south of South America which bear his name, sailed up the Pacific in 1519; Cabeza de Vaca in 1528 scoured the southwest; about 1539 DeSoto stood on the banks of the Mississippi; Coronada in 1540 traveled all through the Middle West in a search for the seven fabled cities of gold; Ponce de Leon in 1514, started on his quest for the Fountain of Youth, supposed to be somewhere in China, and he fancied himself in China when he was in Florida; in 1577 Sir Francis Drake, under the English standard, became a pirate of note, and was the first Englishman to circumnavigate the globe. He discovered Cape Horn and the Antractic Ocean, and he traveled up the western coast of what is now the United States.

But none of these adventurers established colonies of any permanency. As with David of old—known as a Man of Blood—who could plan, perhaps, but not build, the Temple of the Lord; or as Moses, the slayer of an Egyptian, permitted to see but not to enter the Promised Land; so with these men, who, having blazed a trail of tragedy and destruction, were, because of that, unfit to establish the permanent homes of men.

While this was moving forward in the southwest, the Atlantic coast in the fifteenth and early part of the sixteenth centuries, saw an invasion of men desiring to colonize—fur hunters and fishermen wishing to establish homes in the new land—French first; then English and Dutch.

As early as 1524 the Italian Verrazano, as already noted, discovered the Gulf of Maine, calling it New France. Then the Frenchman Jacques Cartier sailed up the Saint Lawrence in 1534. From the Saint Lawrence, trappers, traders, and priests later ventured even into the great central plain of the United States; among whom were Champlain, in 1608; Marquette in 1673, Joliet in 1673, LaSalle in 1669, Frontenac in 1672, Hennepin in 1680, and others; all of whom attempted to hold their territory for France.

From Quebec to Mobile, Alabama (as they are now called) they established missions and trading posts, but neither they nor the Spanish were good colonizers. In what is now Florida the French Huguenots (protesters against the Catholic religion) established a colony in 1565, which colony was soon taken over by the Spaniards, who, in 1565, founded what is called the oldest city in the United States—Saint Augustine.

It was not until England, attempting to plant colonies in 1588, created a semblance of permanency. Sir Walter Raleigh in 1585, Sir Humphrey Gilbert in 1566, and Sir John Hawkins in 1568, obtained grants from the king for this purpose; but even their colonies were not really permanent. In 1606 King James I granted charters to two companies: the Plymouth Company in upper Virginia, and the London Company in southern Virginia; the Virginia of that day (named after Queen Elizabeth) extending from Cape Fear on the southern point of our present South Carolina, to the Bay of Fundy on the northeastern coast of Maine. In 1607 the London Company founded Jamestown (named for James I), the first really permanent English colony within the United States; although it, too, might have gone down to defeat if it had not been for the hardihood, the intelligence, and the capacity for leadership displayed by Captain John Smith, who, about 1608, took charge of its destiny.

The Plymouth Company held a charter for that part of the "Virginia" lying between Long Island and Nova Scotia, and attempts at settlement were made by Gosnold in 1602 (who named Cape Cod and Martha's Vineyard); Martin Pring, who entered the Penobscot in 1603; and George Weymouth, who, in 1605 visited the coast of Maine. But as with the London Company in the south, with whom there was no successful establishment until Jamestown; so with the Plymouth Company in the north, no colony took root until the arrival of the Pilgrims in 1620.

Subsequent to the secession of the Church of England from the authority of the Pope in 1534, and a recognition of King Henry VIII as the head of the church there, forming what we know as the Church of England, there grew up within the church a body of Protestants known as Puritans, who felt dissatisfied with their religious affiliations; and out of this Puritan group came another known as Separatists or Independents. James I, ascending the throne in 1603, harried these Separatists out of England, until about 1608 when they took refuge in Holland. In 1620 they decided to found a colony of their own in the new land, planning to enter it at Jamestown, but instead, in December, reached, through accident, the inhospitable shores of Plymouth, Massachusetts, in Cape Cod Bay, about thirty-seven miles southeast of our present Boston, where they have been known to history as the Pilgrim Fathers.

The third English colony left England under the captious reign of Charles I about 1630, and they were the original Protestants, the Puritans, who established themselves on the shores of Massachusetts Bay, with settlements at what later became Boston, Charleston, Dorchester, Roxbury, and Wampanoag.

A Rich Man's Home

WELL, here we are at the Moore Mansion," announced Mr. Brown, as the car stopped in front of a monstrous brick house. A maid conducted them through a beautifully wide and warm hall and up a spacious stairway. Mrs. Moore would welcome them presently. In the meantime Louisa could not resist gazing about over the richly-appointed rooms. She recalled Helen's statement:

"It depends upon what you call a decent living." Her own home seemed suddenly insignificant, small, and plebian in taste. She had seen many luxurious appearing public buildings in the city, of course; but never in her life had she been a guest in such a magnificent private dwelling.

"How do you like the way I've furnished this room?" asked the hostess, as Louisa and Mrs. Brown inspected their reflections in a giant mirror. "I got most of these things from my people who live in Boston; this old bed and these chairs have been in the family for years. My grandmother made this large hooked rug. Of course this stuff doesn't fit in well with the rest of the furnishings of the house, but then this room is sort of off by itself and I couldn't resist having one colonial room."

"It would satisfy my taste all right," laughed Mrs. Brown. "I could never find any fault with your ideas in house furnishing, I know. I should think you'd be perfectly satisfied here—"

They had gone through another long hall and were descending broad, sweeping stairway. One could see the vast and splendid reception room below. Great ferns and cut flowers banked the sides of the room; an orchestra played at one end; guests were already dancing on the waxed floor that glistened with mirror-like smoothness in the soft lights.

"As to being perfectly satisfied," Mrs. Moore's low voice seemed half immersed in musical laughter, "I don't know that I ever shall be that. I am always planning changes. I am thinking of getting rid of that thick large rug in the drawing room and also the one in the music room and putting in hardwood floors. I don't think there's anything quite so beautiful as well-kept hardwood floors. I shall have two or three small rugs in each room instead of the large ones."

LOUISA soon felt quite well acquainted with different guests, but she did not look forward to the dancing as much as she had thought she would. It reminded her too much of those girls in the South Sea Islands who had danced, and Mr. Hunt's gloating, ogre-like eyes as he watched them. She could hear again his voice in memory: "Of course all dancing is more or less based upon the sex instinct."

As she watched these people she could not make up her mind whether the old man was right or wrong. These couples embraced each other closely and their cheeks touched. Something about it seemed indecent to her, nauseating. She could not say just what it was.

"You don't care to dance, either, I guess," spoke a coarse but not unpleasant, masculine voice at her side. She glanced about quickly. A tall, muscular man, well built, good-looking, wearing a business suit. Something about him reminded her of Dan. He had black eyes. Dan's were blue. His features were coarser than Dan's and his voice gruffer. But there was something boyishly sincere and genuine about his entire personality that gave her a pang of loneliness for Dan.

She smiled at him. "What makes you think I don't care to dance?"

"Such as you don't park on the sidelines because they have to."

Louisa laughed. "From your first remark, I gather you don't care much for it yourself."

"It seems sort of savage, to me. I'm here because my wife wanted me to come," he ended candidly. "That's my wife—that girl in the bright red dress. That blond girl."

"I don't see any blond girl in a red dress. You mean—oh, you don't mean blond, maybe." Men got things so mixed up. "The only one in a red dress I see is—well her complexion seems fair enough for a blond, but her hair is black, and her—"

"Uh, uh. She had it dyed. It used to be a pretty gold color, I used to tell her it was exactly like a rich autumn sunset. That was before we were married. I got interested in making a living and a home for her after we were married and forgot to rave about how she looked." He chuckled a bit, but his eyes were serious. "She imagined I didn't love her any more or something and went and had it dyed. Women are funny."

"Do you really think so?" Louisa found his blunt way of speaking extremely amusing. It was not so much his words, as his manner of saying them. "I suppose we are funny. We all want happiness, and there are so many voices that tell you exactly what to do and especially what to buy in order to be happy, that we don't know which way to turn. So some of us make a mess of life in general. I have that feeling sometimes—as if I had made a complete failure of things—but I hope to live a fairly normal life—if I can't be happy."

"But it seems there ought to be some way of living that would bring one happiness and satisfaction. If there is, I haven't found it." He sighed. "I tried to find a religion once, that would satisfy certain longings within me, but I didn't succeed."

"I wish my husband were sensible enough to see that religion won't bring happiness. He's mad about his—can't keep still about his church for five minutes if any chance word leads up to the subject."

"What church does he belong to?"

"The Reorganized Latter Day Saints."

"You mean—aren't they the Mormons?"

"That is a nickname they are sometimes called. They are also confused with the people of Utah, who are sometimes called by a similar name."

"But—but I don't see how any intelligent person who reads the Bible carefully, particularly the New Testament, could endorse polygamy. Such a thing would be extremely repulsive to me."

Louisa laughed. "I wish Dan could hear you say that. He'd be right at you in a minute with more proofs than I could remember in a year—proofs that his church doesn't believe in such things as that. And he'd explain all about how polygamy and such things happened to be mixed up with the word 'Mormon' in people's minds; how his church never had sanctioned such a thing, etc. He'd preach you a regular sermon."

The man frowned. "I thought your husband was a school teacher. I understood someone to say so. You're Mrs. Dan Eldon, aren't you?"

"Yes. He would have liked to do some kind of work for his church, but I didn't believe in it very strongly, so we compromised on school teaching. You see—"

"Ah! And is he happy in his work chosen for him by his wife?"

Louisa flushed a little. Was there criticism in this strange man's tone? What right had he—

"I don't think he is so extremely happy," she answered truthfully. "But a man certainly owes his family a decent living. As it is, Dan is capable of earning much more than he is making now. If he'd only get his mind on making money and providing things for his family instead of thinking of some ethereal vision of Zion."

"Zion? What do you mean? The Jews have a zionic movement, but I didn't know anybody else—any other church had."

"Oh, yes," Louisa spoke carelessly. She hoped she could bring the conversation to a close soon. The girl in red had been quite boisterously hilarious when Louisa had first began to converse with the man, but now she seemed subdued and was continually casting anxious, hurried glances toward them. Louisa Eldon had no desire to carry on even the suggestion of a flirtation with anyone; also she had suffered sufficiently that she did not have the slightest desire to inflict pain upon anyone else in the world.

"Yes," she continued. "They have a Zion—a land of promise they call it, too, where they think they're going to gather after a while and form an ideal society based upon the early Christian church and its teachings. They have everything organized exactly like the church of Christ's day, and they believe all of Christ's teachings literally—that you ought to be baptized by immersion, etc."

"Say—do you suppose—my name is Benson, Mrs. Eldon—I guess I should have told you before—I'm just a salesman and have had very little education in schools—but do you suppose your husband would tell me about his church some evening? I—there's something about your description that gets me interested somehow. I'd be very grateful—"

Louisa laughed. "I should say that about the best thing I could do to give him a pleasant evening would be to invite someone like you who really wanted to hear him talk about it. How about next Wednesday? About seven o'clock in the evening? Could you come then?"

"I'd be delighted."

Louisa had named Wednesday because she would not be home then to listen. The Neighborhood Club were having a card party.

THE GIRL IN RED was coming toward them and attempting to make her approach seem casual. Within her soul, however, all was tempest and storm, Louisa felt. She was beautiful in an artificial sort of way. Her make-up had been artfully applied, the intense blackness of her hair shone with an unnatural luster; her blue eyes, unusually large, might have been lovely had there not burned in their depths such an intense flame of emotion. The red dress typified the fire within her; but how could one be on fire and still have such a somber look? She was like a whole page out of the past for Louisa. She was a little of Yvonne, a little of Robert, and something of Lucy. She brought back such poignant memories to Louisa that her heart went out to this strange woman in pity.

"You are Mrs. Benson, I guess, aren't you?" said Louisa, pleasantly, extending her hand. "Your husband has been asking me about my husband's church. I told him all I could but I don't take such a great deal of interest in religion myself. I told him if he'd come over next Wednesday night Dan would be glad to talk with him about it." On an impulse, she added, "I'm invited to a card party in our neighborhood that night, but if you can come with Mr. Benson I'll be glad to stay home. I'm sure we'd enjoy having you both."

Mrs. Benson gazed at her keenly, then sighed. "Oh—I'd like to, but I have an engagement, too—a sort of rendezvous with death, maybe, but still a lot of fun. I—"

"My dear," Mrs. Weston Moore's voice called Louisa amusedly; "You're wanted in the next room. A perfectly lovely group of people want to ask you all sorts of questions about the Society Islands."

As she followed the older woman Louisa could hear Mr. Benson's low toned question: "Why don't you come with me Wednesday night, Emily, and get acquainted with some real, honest-to-goodness folks?" She could hear his wife's angry reply: "Just because you like somebody, Dick—"

"How in the world did you get away with that long conversation with Mr. Benson without having that woman scratch your eyes out?" laughed Mrs. Moore. "None of the rest of us have dared talk to him for—"

"Mrs. Moore," Louisa interrupted in alarm, "You don't think—really think—I was—was anything improper by standing there talking with him? I did stay there quite a while—but I—we were talking about my husband's religion—"

Mrs. Moore laughed musically. "Oh, no—none of the rest of us would think anything of it—only to wonder how you got by with it. I know you're not the kind of a woman any other woman need fear—not that you are not attractive—" she hastened to add, "But you have good sense and more character, too, than lots of people."

"I don't know about my good sense, Mrs. Moore, but I can honestly say I've never done anything to be very much ashamed of."

"I heard you mention your husband's church," said Mrs. Moore, thoughtfully. "I hope he didn't get his feelings hurt at what Mr. Moore said to him."

"If he did, he never said anything about it to me."

"Well, Mr. Moore doesn't have much patience with anyone who belongs to a different church from the one he was raised up in; and he told Mr. Eldon to be sure not to talk his religion publicly, or he might lose his job. Now, I don't belong to Mr. Moore's church myself and we've had no little trouble over it, especially when we were younger; but I think your husband is a fine man and a good teacher from all I can hear, and I just wondered if you couldn't encourage him to keep a little quiet about his religion?"

"Why—I'll—I don't know. You see, he is just terribly enthusiastic about it, but I don't think he'll talk much about it if he's been requested not to."

She felt suddenly sorry for Dan. He loved the church; and it seemed that every effort in all the world was generated for the express purpose of prohibiting him from expressing his love. She must be more considerate of him. She felt suddenly glad and comfortable in the thought that he could at least talk about his religion in his own home—not to her, of course; she didn't care to listen; but to this man Benson and to others whom she would invite home.

THE EVENING did not bring her the happiness she had expected. There was a short conversation about the Islands; an indifferent game of cards, more dancing, and wine. She refused the wine, conscious that she had half-offended her hostess in doing so, but she couldn't bring herself to drink it. She had seen too many people half-silly from its influence, both here and in the islands. The islands! Why couldn't she forget them? Her experience there had just about spoiled all her fun, she concluded. She could not dance any more; she could not see any group of people without finding someone to remind her of those wierd and almost revolting experiences.

At last the party was over. Mr. Moore, gay with wine and sense of power was bidding the guests good-bye beside his quieter but more hospitable wife. Mr. Benson piloted his wife through the door, trying to steady her drunken gait.

"She always will drink it, even though she knows she can't stand it," whispered someone, "Emily is losing all the little sense she ever had, if you ask me."

Louisa was making dull conversation with the Browns; then she was inside her own door in Dan's welcoming arms.

"Did you have a good time?" he wanted to know.

"Well—I made arrangements for a good time for you, anyway," she laughed. She didn't want to tell him the evening had been a disappointment to her.

"What did you do?"

"I got to talking with a man—he wanted to know why I wasn't dancing—and he said he was interested in religion. I told him a little about yours and he seemed interested. Said he was just a poor, uneducated salesman, but did I think my husband would tell him about the church? I invited him over for next Wednesday night. Was that all right?"

"Of—of course—but I thought—you say you didn't dance?—I thought—"

Louisa laughed, embarrassed. She hadn't intended to let him know. The words slipped out before she thought.

"Well—I somehow couldn't, Dan," candidly, "I watched the rest of them

Ministerial Experiences

By Charles Fry

THE SUMMER has been a very busy one for me, my labors taking me through the Northwest Kansas District where meetings were held at Alexander, Rexford, and Osborne, with many other places, and many scattered Saints visited. At Alexander the Saints were hungering for the word of life and were splendid in their attendance and attention, both being sustained during the two weeks we remained. Brother A. H. Reed has charge of the flock, and meets with them as often as his farm work and distance will allow. He is assisted by Brother John Teeters, who with his family give valuable support to the work. Some of the Saints drove regularly for many miles, among the number being Brother Herman Keuffer and family of McCracken, and Brother Fishgrave and family of Bazine.

On Sunday, August 5, I was pleased to meet Brother George B. Kelley and family who drove eighty miles from Modoc to attend the sacrament service. Brother Kelley is a son of our late W. H. Kelley of the apostleship, and his wife was a familiar figure in the Herald office at Lamoni in the years when I was a member of the church board of auditors. She was then known as Samuella Bailey. They were young folks then, but the passing of a goodly number of years could not be over-looked when Charlotte, their married daughter, was introduced with her two children, the younger of whom I blessed under the name of Clifton Kelley Burdick.

In the absence of north and south railroads and bus lines in Western Kansas my difficult problem of going north was solved by the kindness of the Teeters family who drove through to Selden where we visited with Brother Willis Teeters and family, and another James who had recently come from Independence to look after his farm. Meetings were arranged at Rexford and continued eleven days in which the Saints rejoiced together with a few nonmembers who attended. The meetings were held in the home of Brother A. J. Miller who presides over the branch and acts as city marshal and superintendent of the city water works. The Miller and Teeter families contributed to my entertainment while there. The coming of Brother James Teeter gives promise of greater help and activity. Information was received that Brother J. B. Roush, now of Goodland, with his son had rented a farm near Selden and would move there in the spring. The Selden branch is to be congratulated on its increasing official personnel.

On August 23 I was met at Smith Center by Brother Walter Ratcliffe, and with his family we drove in the evening to the Baker Schoolhouse near Osborne where meetings commenced. On account of the scattered condition of the Saints, and the impoverishment of many by the drouth I thought to close on the following Sunday, but an urgent appeal was made to continue another week. Both Saints and nonmembers appreciated the sermons, the interest being good until the last two days when storms with abundant rains came bringing great joy to the drouth-stricken region.

Western Kansas is one of the great wheat fields of the world, but this year on account of drouth many fields were uncut, and others bore but a meager crop. Other crops withered under the scorching sun, or otherwise stood still. Pastures dried up and were eaten bare, and often cattle were herded upon the highways and the railway right-of-ways for the nutrient buffalo grass. Tens of thousands of cattle had to be sold, and the greatest anxiety and fear of the farmers were that they would not be able to save their milk cows and heifers. The late rains make possible the sowing of wheat which can be used for fall and winter pasturage. No wonder the rains brought joy to many people.

It has been said that nature is cruel; but nature is also kind. As a boy I often wondered how the buffalo herds which roamed the western plains found food during the winter months. I learned that the buffalo grass which grew there abundantly, and which became dry when the growing season is over, constitutes a most nourishing forage for cattle. Most grasses when dried in the field lose much of their food value. Thus nature provided for the wild life of the western plains, even as she has provided for the reindeer and moose in the frozen north where the lichens grow under the snow.

As nature has put roses on bushes where thorns grow, so has she provided a blessing in what has been counted a curse. The hated Russian thistle which has for years been taking the fields and highways of the west is proving this year to be the temporal salvation of many small farmers. When cut and quickly stacked for curing it becomes most palatable to cattle which devour it greedily in preference to other feeds. Nor did the thistle mind the drouth but grew sometimes as large as a bushel basket. So I found farmers, in the absence of other feed, mowing the stubble fields where the thistles had grown thick, and stacking both stubble and thistle together for winter use.

So from the thistle we learn that nature is not altogether harsh but tempers her severity with kindness and blessing, and the things we sometimes dread and from which we shrink often prove to be saving blessings. The Lord of nature has said that "in the day of wrath I will remember mercy." His judgments may cause pain but in them are hidden blessing which make them a savor unto life. They are merciful as well as just, and may it not be that the severe drouth may yet be found to have brought great blessing to the people. The thorn may prick today, but the sweet fragrance of the rose will give joy tomorrow.

I reached home at Topeka, September 3, to take up local duties for a time, rejoicing in the blessing received in the field. Brethren G. G. Cadwell, O. E. Weedmark, F. O. Kelley, and others of the priesthood cared for the local interests with acceptability during my absence. On the 10th I was called to Alexander for the funeral of our aged brother Ebert who for years gave faithful service as an elder in support of the work in that place.

Winning Friends

Does your life possess the tender drawing qualities to beget friends? Do you think of others before you think of yourself? Have you taken the pains to observe those whom you admire, those whose lives are warmed by tender friendships? If so, have you not observed that invariably those who are blessed with friends are charitable, tender, and kind? Have you not observed that the little things of life are done graciously and unflinchingly by them; that they never forget the pleasant smiles, the kind words, the courtesies that so enrich the lives of those who know them and are honored to call them friends?

"Ah, those little acts of kindness

So quickly out of mind,—

Those chances to be angels

That we poor mortals find."

If you would sweeten your own life and add to your number of friends, practice daily the little kindnesses that mean so much in life. "Be kindly affectioned one to another; . . . in honor preferring one another."

Unless you are magnanimous, unless you are friendly, you are not deserving of friends. All nature would teach you the secret of friendship. What is it that causes the buds to swell, the leaves to unfold, and the blossoms to appear? What is it that ripens the fruit on the bough and turns the harvest to gold? Is it not the genial sun, which day by day through the ceaseless round of the years does nothing but shed its rays of light and warmth everywhere? If you will practice the same art, you will find that the machinery of life will run more smoothly and your heart will be happy in the possession of real friends, and incidentally you will be climbing to a higher rank and station in life, and becoming cultured.—Rochelle Philmon Kilgore, in "Seven Keys to Culture," The Youth's Instructor.

religious man is scientific, he must be adjudged so by the same standards set by science for all.

That our intellectual life is based on faith is obvious when we consider that science begins with the assumption that we are dealing with a coherent universe. We take for granted what we call the uniformity of nature. The mind, we believe, can handle the stuff of the universe. The only proof we have is the proof or result. The great intellectual adventure has to justify itself as we go along. We find that certain things act so and so, and under certain conditions do such and such. The important thing to remember, which is the point that I am trying to make, is there is a venture of faith which is both rational and inevitable. Not only does life depend on it, but reason itself depends on it. The fact that knowledge depends on faith goes deeper even than the fact that science is compelled to make assumptions and take unproved things for granted before it begins its work. Before we can know anything at all there is a chasm we must cross, and the only bridge by which we can cross it is a bridge of faith. Credo ut intelligam—we must believe in order to know. Knowledge is possible only through faith in a rational order of the world, and this deeper life is possible only through faith in a moral order.

We see why faith should receive such emphasis and the place of first importance in religion. It is because it is more than the assent of the mind to propositions. That would make it merely a matter of opinions. It is more than beliefs. Faith has to do with the whole bent and bias of life. It is a common argument that it does not really matter what a man believes, that the important thing is how he acts. But if faith is as I have attempted to define it in this treatise, then it is absurd to say that it does not matter what is believed. By comparison nothing else matters, for our faith is that by which we are actually living. "The just shall live by faith."

Give love, cheerfulness, kindness and good-will to all humanity, and you need not worry about being misunderstood.

Give the best you have to each object, purpose and individual, and you will eventually receive the best from humanity.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in The Los Angeles Examiner.

STEWARDSHIP ACCOUNTING

dad, did I spend all that money for candy?"

This ideal family will find that they are prospering, not because God is giving them extra blessings as a reward for paying their tithing, but because they have learned how to control their activities. They know how to put "first things first." They will find themselves doing easily and naturally the things which will assure success. They will find that the ten percent of net gain, which is tithing, is a mighty cheap price to pay for a well-balanced family life. They know without any guess work what that tenth is because they have their lives under control. Such control brings the blessings of a "fullness of life," as promised by Christ.

OF COURSE the big problem is the application of a control system in the home. Many who want to do something of the kind simply do not know how to go about it. Then there are the different temperaments in the people in a home. One of the most beautiful experiences in family cooperation I have ever seen is one case where the husband decided that he wanted to be free to give all the time possible to church work and did not want to even think of money problems. His companion was willing to take this responsibility. She has done a wonderful job of management, and has at the same time made it possible for her husband, who had to work long hours at his vocation, to give enough time to keep up the branch work in one of our churches. I do not cite this as an example for everyone to follow in detail, because in many cases it could not be a success. The principle of cooperation, however, can be adopted by every family. Here was a balance between two lives, when the two decided what each would do, and with utmost mutual trust they have carried out their plans. I am not much concerned about the detailed way in which we carry out the purpose, but I am sincere when I say that we must learn how to control our lives if we get the most out of our opportunities.

Once, after a sermon in which I emphasized this thought, a man came to me and asked this question: "Do you mean that every time I go to town to buy a pound of coffee I should mark it down on some record?" In answer I emphatically said, "No, not unless you want to." And then I suggested something about as follows to him: The application of any principle must be based on common sense. The point that you should want to know is whether or not you are spending too much money for your coffee. If you do not want to mark it down every time you spend the money, you can figure out a simple way which will save you that effort. Regardless of whether your income is regular or irregular, as you get it lay aside what you must for food expense. If you do not want to do any recording as you go along divide the money into four certain purposes, and put it into jars or cans, each labeled for its purpose. Buy your coffee as you need it, and if your coffee money runs out faster than you expect then either you are using too much coffee or you haven't allowed enough for that item. If it is too much, the practical result of your effort to properly balance the use of your money is to show you quickly that you are drinking too much coffee. In that case the only thing to do is to cut down your amount of coffee.

Possibly this brother didn't want to be bothered with anything that might be too much work. I admit frankly that, regardless of the system which each individual or family may use, it will mean some work and some planning. But the net results of the work are so great that they more than compensate for the effort. No business can succeed unless it is kept under strict budgetary control, and the same is true with the individual. We cannot intelligently budget our lives unless we account for what we do. Of course, if the individual is satisfied to drift along without making any progress it is not necessary to go to the trouble of trying to find out how to balance his energies. But in writing these thoughts I am assuming that if the reader has been able to get this far, he is at least anxious to do what he should to make the most of his life and does have a desire to help build Zion. It takes live fish to swim up stream against the current. The dead ones float down stream. It is going to take some mighty live fish to build Zion.

MANY PARENTS wonder why their children are not interested in vital problems. The truth is that it is the fault of the parent, in most cases. Too often the parent tells the child that he is not old enough to understand the problems of the parent, so why should the child have any interest? As far as I am concerned I have utmost faith in the ability of many children to comprehend vital problems far beyond what they are ordinarily required to do. Give them a chance, give them responsibility and see the development that will often outdistance the parent. God asks us to have faith in him, and he has shown a faith in us far beyond that to which we are entitled, but we in turn do not show enough faith in our children. There are many parents who decry the freedom allowed children today. They believe something should be done to curb it. The fact is we are not giving this freedom to the children. They are taking it, with the result that they often get into trouble. But let the parent express faith in his child and that child will respond in kind and to a degree that is surprising. He will usually want to do what the parent wants him to do. My interest is that of a father of two growing boys and I have been up against most of these problems. The reason I mention it here is that I have proved to my own satisfaction that some system of controlling our lives, and of giving the child full freedom to express his individuality and independence opens the way to bring about this result.

Let me illustrate. Not long ago my fourteen-year-old boy was extremely anxious to get something. His argument was good, and he felt that the amount he needed was so small it would be easy to take it out of what he knew would soon be available. I did not tell him he could not have it. I asked him if as a member of the family he wanted certain necessities such as food and clothing. Of course he said he did. Then I told him that I would turn over to him the job of taking care of these needs out of the amount available. That if, after he listed those things in the order of their importance, using his own judgment without any suggestion from me, he could find a way to put his desires near enough to the head of the list to take care of them as needs, he would be welcome to take the money. He recognized the fairness of the proposition as well as the confidence I showed in him, so he started figuring. Before he had gone very far he turned the job back to me to ask if he could help me get some of the family needs which I had listed ahead of the wants. I have seen children make that kind of response too often to believe that I am going too far when I insist that parents do not often enough show confidence in the ability of their children to understand. Of course they will make mistakes, but what adult does not? If we let them make mistakes on a small scale so they can see the errors themselves they quickly and voluntarily learn basic truths without much suggestion from parents.

How are children to learn these lessons themselves? Again I say that that system of family control which recognizes each child, no matter how young, as an individual unit, will help the child teach himself. Let me illustrate. If the handling or spending of the family income, no matter whether it comes regularly or irregularly, is participated in by the whole family each child feels that he is being fully recognized. Suppose after dinner on the day dad comes home with his pay envelope, or on the farm when some income has been received from the sale of products, the family sits around the table making plans, each one participating in those plans. The small child is interested perhaps only in the number of ice cream cones he can get with his share. The family makes the decision as to how this money shall be used. Suppose twenty cents has been allotted as the share of the four-year-old for spending during a two weeks' period. He thinks he has helped decide, so he is fully satisfied. He is plainly told that he can spend it any way he likes, and that it will be put in a jar or a drawer or other place to which he has access, and that he can spend it for his cones when he chooses. He is happy and satisfied, but since it is bedtime he must wait until tomorrow. He has also agreed, as have all the others in the family, that the amounts allotted are final, and that there shall be no asking for more. On the next day he will want his ice cream cone first thing unless he is different from most children. As soon as he eats his first cone he will probably go to the drawer and look at the other three nickels. His hands will itch to spend them at once. He may ask mother if he can have another one, and if she is a wise mother she will insist that he make his decision himself. She will tell him how hard it will be next week to go without any cones if he eats them all this week. Before the day is over he will probably get at least one more and repeat the performance the next day. He may after that ask his mother for another nickel, but in most cases he will not. He will learn through going without that he can't "have his cake and eat it, too." A hard lesson, but one which he entered into knowingly, and in most cases where the child has been given the privilege of making his own decision he will willingly suffer the consequences of his own act. A repetition of such instances as he grows will implant firmly in his mind the basic lessons of life better than all the talk in the world. The important points in this plan are the recognition of his individual rights and the system of family control which keeps all activity in balance. He knows that without being told, and since he had the privilege of helping make the decisions his pride will make him recognize that he must stick to his own plan.

Children raised under such a plan will make the finest Zion builders in the world. And if there is any one thing the church needs today it is something which will instill into our children the beauties of the Zion we dream about, as well as a determination to help bring it into existence. I believe that is even more important than the missionary work to bring outsiders in. That of course is no new thought with me as it has been expressed thousands of times. It is not suggested with the slightest thought of reflecting on the missionary work of the church. That must be developed. It is said with the thought that a plan of family budgeting and individual accounting which will recognize and develop individuality in each child as well as in each adult, will help each family to keep its activities in balance. It will result in a better balance in the lives of all church members. That better balance will keep a larger number of our children in the church and will create in them a greater interest. But best of all, as a result of this balance, a constantly increasing share of the energy produced by such a group will go into developing the spiritual stewardships which will create increased missionary activity. In short, a life in balance resulting from strict stewardship accounting means more growth. Certainly it is worth striving for.

When my father passed on, the heritage he left to his boys was the example of a life of service. The material things he left consisted mostly of tools, such as books and records which he had used in giving his service. In disposing of these things I asked preference for only one thing, and that was the satchel of his daily working tools which he carried on his missionary trips. Among the books and records in this satchel was his priesthood diary and expense record, kept accurately to the last day. The last sheet, however, remains unbalanced, as he probably did not have time to finish this chore before his sudden illness ended his life. That sheet is a challenge to me to carry on and help finish the work he did not have time to do.

My purpose in mentioning this incident is to bring out more than the sentimental thought. It is this: To him as a servant of the church this record of his expenses was merely one of his chores which he accepted as part of his responsibility as an officer of the church. We, you and I, the members of this church, require our officers to not only make the sacrifice necessary to serve the church, but we require them to keep a careful record of all monies received and spent. In other words, to keep a strict accounting of all their activities. Why should we require this from certain men and at the same time feel that as a member of the church we do not owe it the same responsibility?

The covenant as a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints should be more than an acceptance of the chance to be a Latter Day Saint or to promise to be good in order to "get" what the church can give. It should be a full recognition of the individual stewardship. It should be a whole-hearted determination on the part of the individual to use his time and his talents for the benefit of the group. It should mean an implied or expressed promise to carefully budget his time, his talents, his energies, and his ability. It should also include a full recognition of his stewardship responsibility in a determination to account for his every activity. Such a program requires effort, consecrated effort, but the carrying out of the program will open the way for unlimited development of every individual member of the church as well as for the group as a whole. In fact, the results of such consistent consecrated effort can be described or defined with one word of four letters, Z-I-O-N.

Atheism can never be an institution; it is only a destitution.

But the religious freedom so earnestly emphasized for themselves was not accorded others, and the idea of witchcraft, stringent Blue Laws and other forms of despotism, took root, so that small colonies, rebelling, broke away from them as they had from England, and established themselves in other localities. Rhode Island was thus founded by Roger Williams and Anne Hutchinson in 1636; and Pennsylvania was colonized by William Penn in 1682 as a refuge for the Quakers.

In 1614 the Dutch founded a colony at what they called New Netherlands; and in 1638 a party of Swedes settled at the mouth of the Delaware River, which, in 1655, was annexed by the Dutch under Peter Stuyvesant; and in 1664 the English, through the Duke of York, took possession of New Netherlands, which was then renamed New York. The southern part of this province was sold to Sir George Carteret and Lord Berkeley, who there founded New Jersey.

From the latter part of the 16th century, America became a recognized factor in world affairs; and has, in recent years, become the world's largest Democracy—a land on which the sun never sets, for when its last rays are leaving the Philippine Islands, its first are rising on the coast of Maine.

NORTH AMERICA is washed by three great ocean rivers or currents: the Labrador, a deep sea current, crowding close inland and moving south from the Arctic regions as far down as Newfoundland, where it rises to the surface, causing the extreme cold experienced there; the Gulf Stream, about 50 miles wide and 2000 feet deep, a deep sea current, flowing northeastward out of the Gulf along the Atlantic coast, but separated from the land by what is known as a "cold wall." It goes as far north as the southern edge of the Newfoundland Banks, where it swings off (like the turning hands of a clock) toward Europe, rising to the surface as the Gulf Stream Drift. Leaving the western coast of Spain it sinks again, becoming once more a deep sea current, flowing back to the Gulf. The Japan Current is a warm, surface current, sweeping north along the western seacoast of the United States, giving California its delightful climate. After running its course it returns to its source as a deep sea current. In the Atlantic Ocean the ocean rivers turn to the east; in the Pacific, to the west. The great Trade Winds follow the courses of the various ocean currents.

The northern coastlines, both on the eastern and the western coastal plains, are battered and broken by great ice cakes, driven inshore by heavy gales.

The Atlantic seacoast has been submerged in recent geologic years, as attested by maritime deposits and softened rocks; and the Pacific coast has risen proportionately in the same period.

The United States is separated into five geological divisions known as: The Atlantic Coastal Plain; The Appalachian Highland; The Interior Plain; The Cordilleran Highland and the Pacific Slope. Part of the great Interior Plain was once covered by a great ice sheet, while west of the Appalachian Highlands are deep valleys caused by the sinking of vast blocks of earth, and the wearing away of soft rocks.

Mountain ranges in the three Americas run principally north and south, while those in Europe and Asia run east and west. This causes climatic differences in the two continents.

In the southeast, from Tennessee, through the Carolinas into Florida, are vast prehistoric bone beds, evidently those of marine animals. Salt mixed with gypsum marks the margin of an early sea that extended from New York through Michigan and Iowa into Kansas.

Along the North Atlantic Coast and extending south for thousands of miles is the great Continental Shelf, the largest Shelf in the world existing at the base of any sea foot. The cracking or displacement of any part of this Shelf causes corresponding earth tremors in nearby lands.

Off the Bahaman Islands, between them and northern Africa, lies the Sargosso Sea, a vast eddy of 100 miles, which, circling slowly and insidiously, is thought by some to mark the spot where the Lost Atlantis sank from sight in an early day. Within the past two or three years an inhabited island off the coast of Greece disappeared as suddenly beneath the waves, with its thousands of screaming inhabitants, its culture and its great building.

The largest river system in the world is located in the Mississippi Valley, watering the Interior Plain.

Coal, gold, silver, copper, iron, zinc and other minerals are found in the mountain ranges. There are vast oil pools in the east, the middle west and the south. Great forests of almost every known variety of woods cloak the hills and valleys. Streams, lakes and the oceans abound in fish. At one time the great Interior Plain was covered with millions of buffalo, where in recent years, vast herds of beef cattle were quartered. Fur of all kinds was abundant in the early days.

The continent was found inhabited by dark-skinned aborigines, thought to be natives of India; so were called "Indians." They were classified as semi-barbarous east of the Mississippi; barbarous west of it; and savage in the southwest; but remember Cortez entered in the southwest.

As the United States became settled, great trees commenced to fall; mines were opened; factories built. Water power came first in the power plants, and for this reason they were built along rivers. Then came steam, and factories appeared near coal fields, or where coal could be delivered cheaply. Gas and electricity were next, the last named power now driving our machinery and lighting our homes. It is generated from power dams principally.

Where paper is made from wood pulp, the factories are placed close to lumber interests, upon rivers down which the trees can be floated. Our wooden dishes and even toothpicks come from such places.

The North Atlantic states form an extensive ship-building center, because of easy access to the North woods. Furniture factories are also close by, for the same reason. Those using hard woods are close to hard wood districts, as at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Agricultural implements and road vehicles, dependent on hard wood and iron, are manufactured close to the Great Lakes. Detroit is the most important city in the world for the manufacture of automobiles.

The principal gold vein mines are in Colorado, Nevada and the Black Hills district of South Dakota. The most important silver-producing states are Nevada, Montana and Utah. Iron is found in the Lake Superior Highland. There are vast copper deposits in the Lake Superior region as well as in Arizona and Montana. Zinc and lead are found in the Appalachian Highlands and the Ozark Mountains. Coal, oil and gas exist in many of the states. Coal oil was first produced in western Pennsylvania about 1859. The great flour mills are located in the north and in Kansas close to the vast wheat fields. Things formerly made in homes are now made in factories.

The United States is the most productive and wealthy country in the world today. It truly is a Promised Land, flowing in "milk and honey."

awhile and it somehow reminded me of those crude dances in the Islands—it seemed they were somehow the same, in spite of the veneer of civilization all around. I just couldn't bring myself to participate in anything quite so savage appearing."

"Thank God!" Dan cried so fervently that she couldn't help laughing. He was so intense about things like that.

There was a sudden, frightened cry from the bedroom. Louisa was full of alarm in a moment. Dorothy Jane was standing up in her bed, clinging to its high sides, trembling.

"What's the matter, darling? Tell mother." The mother trembled almost as much as the child.

"Me's afraid," whimpered Dorothy Jane, clinging to her mother's neck. "Doity Jane's afraid."

The Readers Say---

Youth Writes to Youth

I am a boy just past seventeen years of age. In my few short years I have found that God is true to his promises. He said "All things work together for the good of those who love and serve the Lord."

Though a few years ago I spent five months in the hospital suffering with an affliction which, perhaps, has left me marked for life, I now realize that it was the best thing that could have happened to me. During those months of illness I found out where I stood in the sight of God, and when I came out of the hospital, I consecrated my life and talents to Him and His church.

God recognized my humble consecration and the potentialities in me of becoming his servant, and on September 2, 1933, just two weeks after my sixteenth birthday, I was called to the office of deacon. What joy and exaltation of soul were mine on that day! In my ordination under the hands of Patriarch J. F. Martin and Elder J. L. Prentice, I was told that if I would do my part in magnifying my office and calling, I would enjoy great blessings in my labors here on earth.

Young brothers and sisters, let us go on. If we obey him in faith, God will give us his Spirit. I have been wonderfully blessed in my early ministry, and others also have been blessed. To the young people let me say: Be humble. Be faithful. Be willing to learn and study, and fast and pray, that we may prepare to do our work—redeem Zion. Will you pray for me? I should be glad to hear from anyone who cares to write.

Lord's Work Moves On

We have a neighbor who has read The Marvelous Work and a Wonder two or three times, and says that this is the right church. It is what he has been looking for, and he is ready for baptism. So the Lord's work moves on.

We Need Zion

Zion is our only hope. When envy and strife cease among us the spirit of power will be given to those whom the Lord sees fit to bless, and we shall be gathered together in love and security.

The Doctrine and Covenants tells us, "I will fight your battles as I did of old." Did not God care for Israel of old under Moses, Joshua, and other leaders? Moses was a prophet endowed by the Lord, our God.

Alone, we can never build Zion, but if we have faith in God, latter-day Israel will become mighty. As Saints we must obey the great commandment; we must forget self and be full of love for our God and love and charity for our neighbor. We must abide by the latter-day celestial law and the temporal law. The Scriptures tell us that God looketh upon the heart. He knows our inmost hopes and desires. If we are poor and give a penny in the spirit of love and charity, it is acceptable to him. He will prepare a place for us in Zion.

Many of us long for a place of peace and safety, but we lack something. We must free ourselves of worldly things, fast and pray, live lives of righteousness. I believe then the endowments will be given.

A sister in this town had a vision concerning Zion. She saw two groups of Saints and recognized many faces in each group. One group was preparing to march to Zion, and the other was busy with temporal things in the world, and would not prepare to leave.

Saints, I do not look for better times in the world. Tribulations are going to increase. The time is fast approaching when we shall need Zion.

Word From Eastern Oregon

I greatly enjoy reading the Herald, especially the letters and news. I have never seen any letters from eastern Oregon, but there are a few Saints here. There is an elder, W. T. Ferguson, at Baker, ten miles from us. With Brother Ferguson in charge, we have sacrament service every first Sunday of the month. He is a fine man and his work is much appreciated. There are nine of us in and near Baker, at least that is all we know about.

There are four in our family, my father, mother, and a brother some years younger than I. Until two years ago we lived at Lamoni for four years. I was graduated from Lamoni High School in 1932. It has been my great desire to attend Graceland some day, and I am still striving to that end.

We have the Heralds by the kindness of a friend at Lamoni, who sends them to us monthly. We are trying to pass on the gospel by sending the papers to an isolated member at Enterprise, Oregon; also have given some to a man at Baker who is interested in the gospel.

Always we are glad to hear from and see other Saints. We hope that a missionary can hold a series of meetings here sometime.

Would Be Worthy Her Blessings

I have received many blessings, and wish to thank my heavenly Father for them and for those which may be in store for me. I ask for strength to overcome the many trials and temptations that are mine.

I wonder if the H. E. Depew, who sends in so many beautiful poems for the Herald, is in any way, related to E. W. Depew, of Pittsburg, Kansas. Elders E. W. DePew and L. H. Ezell, of near Fort Scott, were the first Latter Day Saint elders I can remember. My father was baptized by Gilbert A. Cox, in 1873, and my mother was baptized and I was blessed in 1877 by M. T. Short. Brothers Evan A. David and W. E. Peek preached my father's and little brother's funeral sermons at Arcadia, Kansas, in 1884.

I always enjoy reading the letters and experiences of the older members of the church. We had a tragic experience June 4, when our little grandson, nine years old, was riding a home-made drag, and fell off in front of it. He was killed instantly. It is hard to part with loved ones, but our will is not always the Father's will, and our trials always turn out to be blessings.

If any elders go down the Katy railroad through Antlers, I should like for them to go out to Snow, Oklahoma, or three miles from Snow. Inquire for J. H. Hager or Sam Nobles. They would like to have some preaching services held there. Those Saints are poor in worldly goods, but are hungering and thirsting for the Bread of Life.

The Readers Say---

Testimony of God's Goodness

My heart goes out in thankfulness to my Maker for the many blessings he has bestowed on me, and I want to love and praise him in return for his goodness to me.

I came to Hammond, Indiana, two weeks ago, and find here a band of Saints who are striving to serve the Master. They have a nice little church which they dedicated September 16, and they have made me feel very much at home. I believe that the depression had drawn the Saints closer together and caused them to forget self in thinking of others. I long to see the day when God's people will be like one big happy family, all working together toward the same goal—the redemption of Zion.

Here let me relate another testimony of the Lord's mercy and goodness. My little nine-year-old daughter was very ill. I had a doctor a number of times, also had her administered to; but she seemed to grow worse. I was very much worried. After one of the doctor's visits she said to me, "If you will get elder Brewer to administer to me, I will be healed." I sent for him and he came and administered under the power of the Spirit. The child was healed.

My children have faith in using the oil calling on the elders when sickness comes to our home.

I have faith in the church and its ideals and in our leaders. May the Lord bless them that they will lead us on to Zion and to victory.

HAMMOND, INDIANA, 718 Conkey. MRS. J. H. THOMAS.

To This End the Lord Brought Me

I was born in England. My parents were of Puritan stock and had little desire to unite with any church. They scarcely ever attended services and yet our family of four boys and two girls were always sent to Sunday school and church. We were brought up in the Church of England.

In that community there was a certain beneficent gentleman who on his deathbed bequeathed a sum of money in trust for the Church of England. The interest on this sum was to be used to purchase a Bible and Book of Common Prayer, to be presented to every candidate who was confirmed a member by the Bishop of the diocese. My brothers and sisters were all confirmed into the church and each one was presented these books.

Later when I left my home I was still a boy and having few religious interests, I did not trouble myself about going to church. It was the custom, however, for people to attend church with more heed to formality than to religious intention. My childhood teachings had touched a responsive chord in my heart, and after a time I, too, began to go to church, the Anglican, the Independent, the Primitive Methodist, the Baptist, and the Wesleyan. I found good in all of them, but not entire satisfaction. Still later I became associated with the Salvation Army, and tried my utmost to do what was right and to live up to what I professed.

I was working in the coal mines and near me were some fellow workers whom I found out were Latter Day Saints. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was not generally known to us, but the Utah Church was widely known and extensively talked about and criticized. As soon as the name Latter Day Saint was mentioned, the cry was "Mormons!" and since prejudice against Brigham Young's following was so strong, the Reorganized members could not very well get a hearing.

These men working near me were good, clean, honorable men, and when they could get a hearing, they talked and reasoned in a way worthy the name they bore—Saints.

After a time, I was induced to attend their meetings which I did though not with the best of motives. I thought that I would hear them say something unscriptural and then I could accuse them of teaching falsely. However, after two years I decided that I would be baptized.

I was baptized by Elder H. Ellis, of Lansamlet, Wales, on Thursday evening and confirmed the following Sunday. Surely the Lord had guided me to this end. He had not permitted me to be confirmed in the Angelican Church nor yet sworn in under the flag of the Salvation Army.

In my confirmation as a member of the church, the elder spoke to me under inspiration. He told me that on this day I should know that there is a God in heaven who reveals secret things, and assured me that my prayers to the Lord had been answered. I had prayed in the mines and to these prayers I received answer in clear, plain, audible words as I knelt there in the cold darkness. These same words were spoken to me by inspiration on the day of my confirmation I was also told that the Lord had watched over me through my journey of life and had led me in the days of my manhood to accept the gospel restored in latter days.

The gospel has been and is a great source of joy and comfort to me, and although I have had to pass through afflictions in acute forms, the all-powerful hand of God has sustained me. My prayers are that the church will rise up in its beauty an grandeur, for it is great and wonderful, and carry the message of love and peace to all the world.

Thankful for Good Things in the Herald

I want to thank you for the good things in the columns of the Herald. I do not have the opportunity of going to church as often as I would like, and so I doubly appreciate my Herald.

Particularly interesting are the letters which strengthen our faith as we read of the blessings and mercies which our Lord bestows upon his people. I am thankful to Him for his blessings to me.

I read with interest the experiences of Brother William Lewis. Many times I have listened to the recital of the hardships endured by my parents during their enforced stay in Salt Lake City and vicinity. They were there seven years. My father and mother were converted to this gospel in Wales, and they came to what they thought would be Zion. What an Awakening! They were in Utah during the reign of the "Avenging Angels!" Father and mother took advantage of the arrival of Uncle Sam's soldiers to leave for California. They traded their small piece of land for a yoke of oxen. The first sermon my father heard in Utah was enough. He said to my mother, "My girl, this is no place for us."

In California, they were re-baptized into the Reorganized Church by E. C. Brand, I think.

I want to thank Brother A. B. Phillips for his questions and answers, columns. This page fills one of my long felt wants. I am also enjoying "The Nomads." The Pigeonhole is a little place into which I would like to crawl and pull the hole in after me, if you know what I mean.

I wonder if any of you have read Francis Sill Wickware's article in January's Woman's Home Companion, "The American Thing." It sounds very much like Zion to me.

Southern New England Reunion at Onset

Activities at Southern New England reunion, held at Onset, Massachusetts, from July 28 to August 12, were so diversified that every person in attendance found something suited to his taste or age. Prayer meetings for adults in the morning at eight-forty-five were consistently active, and particularly enjoyable were the "experience" meetings, where many of the congregation told of specific ways in which they had been guided and helped by divine power.

Also at eight-forty-five the children from six to nine years meet in the primary department in charge of Dorothy Mesie Fisher; the kindergarten, composed of children from three to six, was in charge of Kathryn Carter and Florence Leland Gordon; junior church, including ages from ten to fourteen, led by Wallace Sinclair and Marian Rogerson; and the young people's prayer service, conducted by Don Chesworth for the older young people. The attendance at these services indicated that they were interesting and helpful.

Two classes were held each morning. Patriarch U. W. Greene conducted an informative class on the Doctrine and Covenants. He outlined and taught this basic document of the church in a way that was new to many younger members of his class; and his method of teaching was appreciated by those who had questions concerning the book. Apostle Paul M. Hanson's class was concerned with the history and derivation of the Bible, and a comparison of the King James, Inspired and Douay translations. Brother Hanson's sound historical knowledge, and his appreciation of the Bible, both as a sacred record and as a piece of literature, combined to make his interpretation an education and an inspiration to his listeners.

In the evening, the services were well attended, and excellent sermons were preached by U. W. Greene, Apostle Paul M. Hanson, T. J. Elliott, of Saint Louis; S. L. Fisher, Raymond Bradshaw, Daniel F. Joy, and M. C. Fisher. On Friday, August 3, two of the young men in the priesthood, Albert Fisher and Wallace Sinclair, preached their first sermons. Brother Fisher spoke on "Stewardship of Time," suggesting constructive ways of utilizing leisure; and Wallace Sinclair's topic was "Religious Education in the Home." His combination of the doctrine of the church and its application by the newer methods of education was interesting and informative.

Swimming and other sports occupied the week-day afternoons. Several playground ball games were played between the married and unmarried men, no decisive victories being recorded for either side. Marian Rogerson won the girls' tennis tournament—Don Chesworth was winner of the boys'.

On Saturday, August 4, Attleboro Branch presented an operetta, "Sunbonnet Sue." This branch has always been outstanding for its musical abilities, and their operetta was done in a finished manner. Solo parts were sung by Helen Coombs (in the title role of Sue), Raymond Bradshaw, Lillian Parker, Merrill Nash, Harold Cash, jr., Marion Chesworth, Mildred Heap, and George Heap, accompanied on piano by Virginia Churchill and on violin by Clinton Barton. The stage was beautifully decorated to represent an old-fashioned garden, and the performance was a credit to those who arranged it. The back drop was by Edmund Davis and stage setting by Ralph Spinney.

There seemed to be dominant in the thoughts of the people at the reunion that they needed a revival of the "old faith" and a return to the "old paths." On Thursday, August 2, Lucie Sears conducted a discussion period for the women in which this feeling was given voice. The group was asked to present their ideas as to how this could be accomplished, and some suggested concrete pieces of work to be undertaken as projects, others that they try to be converted to all parts of the church work; many felt that they could purge their lives of those things antagonistic to development; and a number expressed themselves as feeling that prayer was the keynote to faith, as well as to progress. One sister said that the Saints should pray with fervor, pray more frequently, and feel that no matter was too unimportant for prayer.

After the final business meeting on Saturday night, August 11, Patriarch U. W. Greene, at the request of numbers of the congregation, related some of the early experiences he had had, or had witnessed, during his career in the church. Brother Greene has a vibrant, resonant and flexible voice, a unique vocabulary, and is an accomplished public speaker.

Many contributions of time and service helped to make the reunion a success.

Understand yourself and your Divine possibilities and you will cease to think you are misunderstood.

Ten Baptized in Missionary Series

Ten people were baptized, and others are near the kingdom in the series of meetings conducted near Kennett, Missouri, by Elders W. E. Haden and Walter Chrestensen. The series closed September 2. The missionaries used the district tent, and had an average attendance of three hundred. On Saturday nights when the young people of the three groups presented their club programs, four hundred attended. These young people displayed considerable talent in dramatics, music, and leadership.

All the Saints in this vicinity were encouraged by the missionary meetings and inspired to go forward and complete the task before them, that of building their homes and the church.

Elder Haden has labored in this district six years, and the Saints have learned to love and listen to him. He is ardently interested in and working for the planting of God's word in the hearts of the honest seekers for truth. He is a father and leader to the Saints of south Missouri, and deserves much credit for his work and consecration. The Saints appreciate his help and thank him.

Idaho Reunion

The Idaho district reunion, held at Hagerman August 15 to 19, was outstanding in attendance and spirituality.

Saints from Weiser drove 190 miles, those from Pocatello 160 miles to be present. Visiting Saints from Salt Lake and Ogden made a drive of 300 miles. Wednesday morning a busload of thirty drove in from Malad, Idaho, a distance of 227 miles. Such a ride in a crowded bus through desert country on a hot August day is tiresome, to say the least, but they were grateful for the opportunity to attend.

Tuesday evening, August 14, an organization meeting opened the reunion. The district presidency, Elders Silas Condit, J. L. Sandidge and John B. Cato, associated with Apostle F. Henry Edwards, were chosen to preside. Sister Helen Hoisington, district secretary, was chosen to act as reunion reporter. Owing to the absence of Tommy Ultican, district chorister, Elder Ward L. Christy was chosen as musical director. The reunion committee appointed Elders John B. Cato, George B. Anderson and W. P. Jones for the administration committee; Brothers Russell Jacobsen and Elvin Dennis as recreational leaders.

Meals were served free to everyone as they were last year. This was made possible by contributions from each branch, donations of food, and collections during reunion. At noon, Sunday, August 19, 284 were served.

Prayer services were held each morning, one for the young people at eight o'clock, with Elder Sandidge in charge; one for the adults at eight-thirty, Elders Edwards and Christy in charge.

Each morning, in the Methodist Church, Sister Ward L. Christy held a class for young people, her subject being, "Our Chance to Be Somebody." She also was in charge of the eleven o'clock service for the children under twelve. Sister Christy endeared herself to young and old.

At ten o'clock Elder Christy taught a class for adults, his subject being, "The Scientific Basis of Immortality." Brother Edwards' class at eleven o'clock each day was on "Zion Building." Both young people and adults attended.

Preaching services were held every evening, Elders Edwards, Christy and Sandidge being the speakers.

Recreational activities consisted of volley ball, baseball, and swimming each afternoon, a watermelon feast Thursday and Saturday nights and group games Friday night.

A special program was given Saturday night at which time the camp paper, called "The Camp Cricket" was read by Claire Gilmore. This program was followed by a recognition service for Brother and Sister John Condit. Brother Edwards greeted them as a father and mother in the church, and the congregation stood in recognition of their many years of service to the people of this community. The service closed with a duet by Brother and Sister Christy.

Brother Christy had charge of the song service preceding each preaching service. The duets by Brother and Sister Christy were especially pleasing. Special numbers consisting of duets, solos, a ladies' chorus, and musical readings were contributed. Sister Pearl Handy, of Heyburn, Idaho, sang a solo, the words of which were composed by her.

The conference business meeting convened at two o'clock Saturday. All of the district officers were sustained except the district secretary, whose resignation was accepted. Rita Barth, of Boise, Idaho, was elected. The reunion-ground committee reported improvement of the grounds. Water had been piped to the grounds and tables and benches made. The Saints are indebted to C. A. Lindberg for his work on the latter. They were pleased to note the increase in tithes and offerings over the years 1932 and 1933. A committee was appointed by the district president for the purpose of shipping produce from Idaho District to Independence.

Sunday, August 19, was the closing day of the reunion. Both the young people and the adults met in the tent for prayer service; the children under twelve years of age, met for prayer service on the lawn of Brother Silas Condit's home, Brother Sandidge in charge, assisted by Sister Christy. The majority of the Saints observed the fast which was requested for this service. Brotner Edwards stated early in the week that the Saints could have good prayer and testimony meetings if they wished. Each day they improved, and reached a climax, Sunday. God's Spirit was present in great power. Several testified that God wished to speak to his people. Elders Sandidge, Silas Condit, and Christy spoke under the influence of the Spirit and Apostle Edwards gave a beautiful message of comfort and counsel to Brother and Sister Lester Jellenbaugh, personally, and to the Saints as a whole, saying that in God would be found their example and strength.

At one o'clock a priesthood service was held in the tent; at the same hour Brother Robertson, of Salt Lake City, had charge of a baptismal service. At two o'clock two young men, Brother E. Connel and Lloyd Condit, were ordained to the office of priest. The confirmation service for the seven candidates followed. At eight o'clock Brother Christy gave a lecture which completed the day and closed the reunion.

With Branch Organization in View These Saints Move Forward

This group is now organized and holds regular Sunday and Wednesday evening services. They held their first service Sunday afternoon, February 4, when Elder Alva J. Dexter, of Lansing preached for them on "The Establishment of Christ's Church."

Having two of the priesthood living in this town they continued holding Sunday and Wednesday services, and have been blessed with visitors including Elder S. A. Barss, of Lansing.

Their attendance is about twenty and they meet at one home one month and at another the next and so on. Soon they hope to have a permanent meeting place.

Two baby girls, the daughter of Brother and Sister Cain and the daughter of Brother and Sister Lazarus, were blessed by Elders Barss and Dexter.

The Saints were happily surprised, March 11, to learn that Elder and Sister R. R. Frisbie and wife were locating in their community and would be with them. They pledged unstinted support and cooperation, and soon this worthy pair had endeared themselves to their fellow members. Steady and continued progress has marked their leadership at Jackson.

Inspiring prayer and testimony meetings have been enjoyed, the Saints testifying one hundred percent to God's goodness.

So much do they like to have visitors come and talk to them that they have instituted what they call a "missionary fund." Realizing the high cost of transportation and other expenses they feel that they should compensate visitors for their journey and help.

The evening of May 2, they held prayer meeting at the home of Brother and Sister Tong, about ten miles from Jackson. These Saints are quite aged and do not get about well. Their joy at meeting once again with the Saints was good to behold. Their faces beamed and their eyes shone with remembrances of earlier days when the gatherings for prayer were many. At the close of the service the Saints and visitors gathered around and had a song festival while Brother Frisbie rolled up his sleeves, fired up the old wood-burner, and spent a torrid half-hour popping corn. Sister Tong being appraised of their coming, had baked a batch of pumpkin pies for the visitors.

A stereopticon lecture, May 5, on "Missouri—the Land of Promise," given by Brother Frisbie, was most interesting.

Their first all-day meeting was enjoyed May 6, opening with a sacrament service at nine o'clock, prayer and testimony meeting following, then preaching until noon. A potluck dinner was served by the women.

Many visitors came from surrounding points. It was at this meeting that they organized a church school, electing officers and deciding to study Brother J. A. Koehler's financial law quarterlies.

The larger part of the local group attended the district conference July 7 and 8. Sunday, the second day, one of the good men of Jackson was led into the waters of baptism by Elder S. A. Barss, and with joy Jackson members learned that their group was under consideration for future organization into a branch.

On July 29, they held another all-day meeting, assembling this time at the farm home of Brother and Sister Tong. Some of the men went out previous to the services and arranged a shady spot in the orchard for the gathering. An old gas-engine driven cross-cut saw was covered with some planks and converted into a first-class speakers' rostrum. The day's services opened at eight-thirty with a prayer and testimony meeting in which many inspiring and convincing testimonies were borne, all attesting to their unimpeachable conviction that God is good, that this is his church, and that now is the time for service. Visitors arriving from many points included Brother and Sister James Davis, of Detroit; A. C. Barmore, of Battle Creek, and Alva J. Dexter, of Lansing. The latter two are of the district presidency.

Brother Davis preached at eleven o'clock.

At noon the women of the group served potluck dinner. Sister Tong had stewed a flock (anyway three or four) of chickens and baked most delectable biscuits which added much to the menu.

At one-thirty Brother Barmore spoke, and at three o'clock Brother Alva J. Dexter. At four o'clock Brothers Davis and Barmore recounted some of their outstanding adventures in their labors as missionaries in Australia and the islands.

Attendance of the day reached the number of ninety.

Supper was served to all, and District President Barmore closed the day's services with a never-to-be-forgotten address.

August 12, a baptismal service was held, two candidates being inducted into the kingdom by Brother Frisbie. The ceremony was conducted in one of the numerous lakes, and then the Saints repaired to the Tong farm where regular Sunday services were held. The confirmation occurred in the evening.

Central Church, Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets

The past month at Central Church has been one of activity. The refacing of the building with slate shingles has added to its appearance and has elicited many favorable comments from neighbors. Rarely does a day pass but people are seen looking over the place, and their comments are decidedly favorable.

A number of social functions have added to the funds for defraying the expense of redecorating the interior as well as refacing the outside of the building. The social season started August 10, with a basket dinner at Marquette Park and after the meal an indoor baseball game was played between the single men of the C-Chi-Y Class and the married men of the branch, resulting in an overwhelming victory for the single men.

The following week a beach picnic was staged on the southern shore of Lake Michigan at the Indiana State line. The twenty-third of the month witnessed a "watermelon frolic" at the church, and the results of this financially were very satisfactory. Watermelon and cake were served at a nickel a slice, and a program produced much mirth. Concessions at these affairs have done a lively business and added to the building fund.

August 25, a junior department picnic was held at Ryans Woods, and games were played under the leadership of the church school superintendent, Stephen Lester, sr. An indoor baseball game resulted in a victory for the team led by the pastor, Ray L. Hurst.

The priesthood met the evening of August 27, and discussed means of entering actively into some of the prescribed courses of study outlined in the Priesthood Journal.

Sacrament service September 2, was a season of rejoicing, and all felt the presence of the Master. The pastor was in charge, assisted by John J. Oliver, and Brother Holmes. Among the visitors present were Brother and Sister Holmes, of Toledo, Ohio, and Sister F. M. Cooper, of Plano.

August 26, the choir, led by Arthur A. Sherman, and a large number of the branch journeyed to Deselm to assist in their rally day.

Speakers in the past few weeks have been David E. Dowker, of Detroit, Michigan; Frank B. Almond, Harry Passman, and District President C. A. Edstrom, of First Chicago Church, and the following local men, H. P. W. Keir, Roy Healy, Edwin Lowe, and Pastor Ray L. Hurst.

On the evening of the nineteenth the church was filled to overflowing, with many nonmembers in attendance, to listen to the musical program offered by the Stone Church Boy's Choir from Independence. Many favorable comments were heard not only on the boys' singing ability but on their behavior, and many compliments were tendered Brother J. Glenn Fairbanks, their director. West Pullman and Hammond, Indiana, branches, dispensed with their evening services in order that their members might come to Central Church.

The Saints looked forward to and prepared for the district institute which was held at Central Church September 22 and 23, under the leadership of J. Jacques.

Stephen Lester sr., church school superintendent, and the pastor are planning a series of institute classes to be held at the church on Monday evenings during the fall and winter.

The new address of Pastor Ray L. Hurst is 1274 West Seventy-fourth Street, and his telephone number is Vincennes 8991.

Crosswell, Michigan

Zion's Christian Legion has been moving forward with rapid strides there and is probably the most active and best organized Legion in Eastern Michigan District.

With only twelve charter members to start the ball rolling, it has almost more than doubled that number in approximately three months. They hold a meeting every Thursday night, and discuss various problems of the legion and ways of raising money to continue an active program in the paying off of the Auditorium debt and in the ultimate redemption of Zion.

One unique means of raising money, was the selling of souvenir or memorial ribbons, at the Eastern Michigan district reunion held at Cash, August 19 to 26. The legion realized about eight dollars or more with very little effort: Quite a number of the young folks camped at the reunion grounds and thoroughly enjoyed themselves in the presence of God.

The officers of the legion are as follows: Commander, Mrs. Leonard Loeding; secretary, Frances Wellman; treasurer, Zella King; director of solicitations, Alfred King; director of socialization, Ann Mae Wellman; director of publicity, Atlee Gilbert. This executive council has a staff of three captains whose duties are mainly to increase membership and the collection of dues. Many of the members have their dues paid for the entire year, starting with the month of January and completing the twelve months of 1934.

They held formal initiation Thursday, September 6, and accepted three more Legionnaires. They have a committee of three which plans and carries out the initiation ceremonies. This was a candle service and quite impressive.

The attendance at regular church services has not been so high during the summer months, but they hope it will grow now with the coming of school days. The branch is operating under the church school plan, Clifford Levitt in charge.

Elders Carr and Gardner do most of the Sunday evening preaching and occasionally Elder William Grice, the president of the district. Elder Fred Gardner is the branch president.

Elora, Ontario

On June 24, the young people held a special Sunday service. The meetings were highly successful, and the Spirit of the Lord was there to bless.

The most important event to this group was the calling to the priesthood of two young men, A. Dunn, priest, and A. Mortimer, teacher. At the evening service they voted to send a telegram of congratulations and good wishes to Elder George Njeim who was married that day at Independence.

The Saints have been pleased to have Elders William I. Fligg, John Shields, Brother Smith, of Port Elgin, Fred McLean, John Taylor, and Robert Tarswell visit them.

July 15, Doreen, young daughter of Brother A. Mortimer, was blessed. She is the fourth generation of that family to benefit from the ordinances of the church. Her great-grandfather, the late J. L. Mortimer, will be remembered by many. She was blessed by her great-grandfather, Elder Martin Snell, and the four generations were present at the ceremony.

This branch organized its unit of Zion's Christian Legion, July 25, and now has thirty-one members. Alex Cadwell, of Guelph, the divisional commander, officiated at the organization.

Two young sisters, Margaret Mortimer and Winnie Morden, have entered Graceland College. Before leaving the girls held a garden party at Brother George Morden's home. A large crowd attended and a good time was enjoyed.

The union picnic was held at the home

Briefs

Apostle Clyde F. Ellis in Society Islands

In recent weeks Apostle Clyde F. Ellis has been visiting the more distant branches of the Society Islands Mission, and he was expected to return to Papeete, Tahiti, the latter part of September, according to word from J. H. Yager, missionary to the islands.

Brother Ellis has brought new courage and hope to the Saints of that mission. Already on this visit he has baptized fifty candidates.

"We expect to pass the hundred mark in baptisms this year," writes Brother Yager. The total membership in the islands is more than fourteen hundred, and there are twenty-two branches of the church.

Character Background

"Character must stand behind and back up everything; the sermon, the poem, the picture, the play, the home, none of them is worth while without it."

Would Appreciate Letters

Sister Benjamin Moore, of Harrisville, Michigan, R. R. 1, wishes all who can, to write to her. She is an arthritis invalid; has been confined to her bed and chair for six years. She will not be able to answer letters because of her crippled hands, but will appreciate hearing from the Saints in her lonely hours.

Best Way

The best way for a man to get out of a lowly position is to be conspicuously effective in it.—Anonymous.

Aged Couple Hosts to Jackson, Michigan, Saints

Several times this year Brother and Sister C. B. Tong who live on a farm ten miles from Jackson, Michigan, have been hosts to the Saints of that community. Being advanced in years, they are unable to get about as they formerly did, but their joy at receiving those of the faith into their home, is unbounded.

Jackson Saints gathered at the Tong home May 2, for prayer meeting. July 29, an all-day meeting was held in the orchard, and regular Sunday services were conducted there August 12.

Power of Concentration

"The weakest by concentration can do something. The strong who scatter their efforts accomplish nothing worth while."

of Brother R. Tarswell at Cedar Valley on Labor Day. At 11 a. m., the Saints met in the little church and held a short prayer meeting. "Thankfulness," was the theme, and the service was in charge of Brother King Cooper, of Guelph, John Shields, and Brother Tarswell. A program of races, volley ball and soft ball was enjoyed on that day.

Calumet, Oklahoma

During the past few weeks two old ladies, both members of the church, have departed this life. Grandma Powell, who died July 2, was eighty-two years of age and was a pioneer Saint in this community. Grandma DeFrance, eighty-nine years old, passed away September 11.

Calumet has approximately thirty young people who regularly attend services. Their usual meeting hour is at eleven o'clock on the second, the fourth, and the fifth Sundays of the month. On the second and fourth Sundays they devote their time to study; at present they are making a detailed study of a book entitled, Community Stewardship. On fifth Sundays they have a young people's prayer meeting, enjoying the Spirit, and winning a good response from the young worshippers.

This group of young men and women wish to be of service to the branch and community. They hope to distinguish their social gatherings with wholesome recreation. Binding themselves to the high standards set up by the church, they march "onward to Zion."

Mikado, Michigan

This Group Is Going Forward

The young people are taking an active part in social and prayer meetings and are sharing the burden of work and responsibility carried for many years almost exclusively by older members.

Three new members have been received through baptism into the branch, and all are active workers. They are Sister Reta McGuire, Brother Angus McGuire, and Brother William Slater.

Once a month the Zion's Christian Legion meet at the church for study period and once a month at some home for an evening of recreation. One month during the summer they gave an ice cream social, another they had a marshmallow toast, the next, a wiener roast on the shore of Lake Huron at Greenbush, and the last an all-day gathering at Harrisville State Park, Elder M. A. Summerfield, of Tawas City, being their speaker.

Among the new features on recreation evening which meet the approval of the young people, is the reading of a camp newspaper which contains various departments—news, ads, wise sayings and other items. Also they have held round-table meetings, and some of the questions asked have kept other members studying to be able to answer them.

At an all-day meeting July 22, this branch had the pleasure of having present Elder Hubert Case, district president; M. A. Summerfield and wife, of Tawas City; M. J. McGuire and wife; Brother and Sister Wilkins, of Detroit, and a number of Whittemore Saints.

Many from here have been able to attend various services in Central and Northern Michigan districts during the warm weather months. Seven young people attended the entire reunion of Central Michigan District.

Two young members are still in C. C. C. camps. Brothers Delmar McGuire is in Sault Ste. Marie, where he has little church privileges, and Brother Laverne Slater in Camp Glennie, from which he comes home and meets regularly with the branch.

During the summer this branch had a goodly number of outside visitors. Always they are happy to welcome anyone coming into Mikado to their church services.

On a recent Sunday Elder and Sister M. J. McGuire were here. Brother McGuire baptized Brother Slater. Following the baptism and confirmation came a very active and helpful prayer meeting.

Some from here hope to attend the legion meeting at Whittemore and conference at Beaverton.

Mikado Branch plans to hold a series of meetings shortly after conference.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario

The church school held its annual picnic the latter part of July, and many of the families gathered on the lake shore. Time was devoted to playing games and racing after which a delicious lunch was enjoyed, each family bringing a basket.

The young people held a lawn social at the church August 9, clearing a sum of eighteen dollars for their organization.

Four days later Apostle D. T. Williams, his wife, and two daughters arrived to spend a few days in that city. Brother Williams held meetings August 13, 14, and 15, and good attendance favored him.

August 30, the women's work group met at the home of Sister W. Evans for the afternoon and evening. A goodly number were there, and time was spent quilting and partaking of a tasty lunch.

The annual business meeting occurred September 6, and officers were elected for the coming year as follows: Pastor, Elder W. A. Bushila; assistant pastor, G. Walsh; church school director, Fred Miller; home visiting, T. B. Campbell; deacon and treasurer, W. Brown; secretary, Sister E. Brechen; supervisor of adult division, Sister A. ## Lansing, Michigan

Zion's Christian Legion Conducts Sunday Evening Services

Activities during the summer months of the Lansing Zion's Christian Legion groups have included a series of attractive Sunday evening services.

Each of the groups of young people has been responsible for one service. The first was given by the group headed by LeRoy Andrews. The program was a scene in the home of a family. All of the members belonged to the church except the father, and the action and interest of the drama centered about his apparent disinterest at first and finally his conversion by one of the elders.

Clarence Dudley's group sponsored the next service, and the theme was "The Effect of the Gospel in the Home." This was presented in two scenes—first, the worldly home; second, the Christian home.

The third group, directed by Paul Baker, sponsored a slide lecture given by Elder Ray Frisbee, of Jackson, on "The Promised Land."

John Malinosky's group gave the fourth evening's service, a slide lecture on "The Wilds of Michigan," by Mr. Don Davis, of Lansing. Mr. Davis is a commercial photographer. A short play, "Innocence Punished," was also given by the group.

Helen Weaver's group presented a debate on the proposition, "Resolved that the Bible Prophecy Declares a Complete Restoration of the Gospel Prior to the Second Coming of Christ."

The group led by Earl Premoe gave a play, "Thanksgiving Ann," which brought out the necessity of systematic giving in tithing.

The three remaining groups are giving the programs this month, Frances Dudley's group was responsible for the evening of September 16, and Myrtle Brown's group September 23. Emaline Andrews and her group will be in charge September 30.

Bevier, Missouri

At the business meeting of Bevier Branch the evening September 17, Elder Ben S. Tanner was reelected branch president; Fred Thomas, clerk; Mary Jones, supervisor of music; Sister L. O. Mason, pianist. The members of the priesthood are Ivor Surrridge, F. L. McKane, and Carl Weeks, priests; John Pearson, teacher, and W. T. Hicklin, deacon. Sister L. O. Mason is superintendent of the church school; Charlotte Rudkin, secretary; Ethel Harris, treasurer; Margaret Davis, chorister, and Evelyn Jones, pianist. At this meeting it was decided to have the church replastered.

Apostle D. T. Williams and Sister Williams were visitors there Sunday night, September 9. They were accompanied by a young woman who was on her way to Independence to take up nurses' training at the Sanitarium. Brother Williams drove in from Burlington and Ottumwa, Iowa, having preached at the former place that morning.

District President F. T. Mussell has visited this branch several times in recent weeks.

Marjorie Vanskike and Elizabeth Powell, two young women of this congregation, are attending Graceland College this year. This is Marjorie's second year there.

Patriarch Richard Baldwin will hold a series of meetings at Bevier soon.

Central Illinois Young People Meet at Beardstown

Their First Conference a Success

An all-day meeting was held by Central Illinois young people at Beardstown September 2, and attendance was favorable considering the weather.

The theme of the day was "Be Ye Pioneers." Eight o'clock morning prayer meeting convened in charge of District President Arthur Henson, assisted by the young people's supervisor, Delmar Jones, and Frank Corcoran, of Beardstown.

Following the prayer service the regular church school worship hour convened, Brother Jones in charge. During this period Jason Daykin, of Taylorville, gave a brief talk on the theme of the day. Brother Jones then spoke on "Charts of a Pioneer." Brother Hanson stressed the need of preparing for responsibility.

At noon dinner was served by the young people, assisted by some of the women of the branch.

A short business meeting came at two o'clock, and young people's activities were discussed, emphasis being placed on where they can find places to help in their home branches. It was decided to hold a Halloween party to bring the district young men and women together. Preceding the business of the hour Beardstown Choir sang an anthem, and there was a duet by Minnie Hunter and Anna Mae Dunham, both of New Canton.

Vesper service at four o'clock opened with an anthem by the district choir. Eva Martin of Beardstown, sang a solo, and then Ogle Thomas, of Beardstown spoke, on "Pioneering of Men." Sister Leona Fusselman, of New Canton, followed with a talk on "Pioneering Women."

The young people were encouraged by this their first conference, and look forward to others like it. They hope to continue pioneering until someday they find themselves secure in the work of the church. They have great regard for those who have pioneered thus far, and they want to be worthy the heritage and the responsibility which come to them. They want to do their part in accomplishing the purpose of God in the church.

Harvest Festival Opens

Today the 1934 Harvest Home Festival of the church opens its doors to the public, and tonight will see a throng of visitors passing from booth to booth in the lower hall of the Auditorium at Independence.

Harvest gifts to the church this year are, in many instances, the fruits of real sacrifice, for in some areas gardens and orchards have not yielded so abundantly as in previous years. The canned goods offering from the Central States is smaller this year due to the long drouth in this part of the country. But Saints and friends in neighboring States and districts have been generous with their goods, and all exhibits are attractively and ingeniously arranged.

It is expected that many thousands of visitors will again approve the harvest gifts given to the church, and will enjoy the benefit from the special features—the hobby show, the display of goods produced by Independence industries, the Well Baby Clinic, the flower show, and all contests.

The concert by the Auditorium Festival Chorus, directed by George Anway, Sunday, October 7, beginning at 3:30 p. m., will be the climactic and concluding event of the festival. Preparations for this concert have been under way for many weeks in Zion and her stakes.

This year's festival will be enhanced by a variety of music. Musical organizations figuring in the nightly entertainments are the Orlando Nace Orchestra, the Bartlett Band, the American Legion Drum and Bugle Corps of the Tiley J. Ford Post, a special program by Kansas City musicians on Friday night, the KMBC Quartet, and a Negro group.

Asks Our Prayers

Mrs. G. E. Hemstock, of Bangor, Wisconsin, desires the prayers of the Saints that she may be restored to health.

Problems

Problems are like a fog; they seem dark and forbidding, but they are without material substance. Plunge in, and soon you will find yourself in the sunshine on the other side.—Robert Cashman, in "Church Management."

The Time Will Come

The storms of wintry time will quickly pass,
And one unbounded spring encircle all.
—James Thomson.

Independence

The Teachers' and Leaders' Institute for Independence will be held October 15 to 26, at the Stone Church. This institute is for all church school directors, supervisors, teachers, and leaders, including the priesthood, and all who wish to engage in earnest preparation for service in the church.

Brother Albert Rall has taken the special assignment of the junior stewardship project in the center place. He will have full charge of the organizing and putting into operation of this project.

Kenneth Morford, of Walnut Park, is the new president of the new young people's council of Independence. He was chosen at the regular council meeting at the Auditorium held September 24. This council is composed of thirty-two representatives from the ten congregations of the church in Independence. Other officers of the council are: Counselors, Cecil Walker, Liberty Street, and Miss Opal Williams, Stone Church; secretary, Mrs. Leonard Roberts, Spring Branch, and treasurer, Mrs. George Griffin, Enoch Hill. The election was preceded by a dinner served by the Laurel Club. Outgoing and incoming members were guests of honor at the dinner.

Stone Church

The Stone Church is very well represented at the 1934 Harvest Home Festival with a Stone Church booth exhibit and display, a booth for the young people's division and another for the junior department. Many Stone Church workers are also affiliated with the Sunny South Club, the Great Northwest Club, the Three-I Club and other organizations represented by displays at the festival.

Sunday was promotion day in the church school and the class period was spent organizing new classes in all departments and introducing teachers and pupils. This year officers have standardized the Stone Church school so that all classes last one year.

Eight classes are now being offered on Sunday morning at nine-thirty in the adult department: Book of Mormon will be taught by John F. Sheehy in the Y. K. T. Class; Doctrine and Covenants, U. W. Greene, Stone Church; "Jesus and His Message," Harvey Minton, Stone Church; Book of Mormon, Mrs. L. E. Hills, Stone Church, and three which meet in the Studio Building: "Jesus and His Message," taught by Mrs. Christiana Salyards; Church History, Ammon White, and Church History, M. H. Siegfried. Adults are invited to choose their classes and study during the coming year.

The I. X. L. Class which meets at the studio and is taught by Patriarch Ammon White, has been organized and active since 1915. At present they are promoting a publicity and membership campaign, and they invite all prospective members to communicate with Mrs.

John Mayne, secretary; telephone Independence 3769. Vernon Reese is the assistant teacher.

Bishop J. A. Koehler concluded his series of four morning sermons last Sunday, speaking on "The Price of Authority." The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, and accompanied at the organ by Robert Miller, furnished the musical program.

In the evening Bishop M. H. Siegfried delivered the second of his series, presenting the Book of Mormon from the viewpoints of witnesses, the material contained in the volume, and books that have been written about it. The Aeolian Chorus contributed music.

Among those who have recently passed on was Sister Bertha F. Hands, sixty-two years old, wife of Will O. Hands. Her death occurred at her Kansas City home, September 25, and was caused by bronchial pneumonia. Sister Hands leaves her husband, four sons, one daughter, three brothers, one sister, and six grandchildren.

Second Church

Patriarch Ammon White, the Sunday morning speaker for this congregation, chose as his subject, "The Ordinance of Administration." The choir sang "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken."

Downstairs Finis Beebe spoke on friendship to the juniors and Mrs. Ollie Totty told the story of how the Book of Mormon was brought to the Delaware Indians.

Bishop C. J. Hunt held the interest of the congregation Sunday with a sermon based on his experiences as a missionary. Mrs. W. N. Inman sang a solo at this service.

This entire district mourns over the passing of Lawrence E. Nave, thirty-three years old. Though not a member of the church, Brother Nave had attended Second Church with his family for a period of years, and was well liked by the Saints. A week before his death he underwent an appendicitis operation at the Sanitarium, and was in a critical condition until death relieved him September 28. He was a native of Independence, received his education in the town schools, and had been employed for sixteen years at the A. J. Bundschu Store, Inc. Surviving are his wife, an eight-year-old daughter, his parents, two brothers, and many, many friends. The funeral was held from the Stone Church at three o'clock Sunday, President F. M. McDowell in charge. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Walnut Park Church

The church school session Sunday morning was largely taken up by promotion day exercises and the moving of classes to the new places which they will occupy during the coming year. The two classes of juniors which were promoted to the intermediate department were presented to the young people's leader by Sister Edith Barwise, superintendent of the children's division. Following a short class period in which the classes became acquainted with their new teachers, a program was given consisting of two numbers, "Jesus Shall Have It All," and "Where He Leads Me I Will Follow," by a girls' quartet, and a talk on the significance of promotion day by Clairice Closson, church school director.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey was the speaker at eleven o'clock, his sermon being preceded by an anthem, "Fight the Good Fight," by the choir under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson.

At one-forty-five in the afternoon the priesthood of Walnut Park met at the church to hear a message from President F. M. McDowell. A large group of men attended this service and were inspired by the message brought by President McDowell.

Quarterly election of religio officers was held Sunday evening with the following results: President, Benjamin Bean, jr.; vice president, Leona Hartman; and secretary, Violet Campbell. Preceding the election two cello numbers were played by Milford Nace.

President McDowell spoke to the Saints Sunday evening in his usual forceful manner. The choir sang, "Cast Thy Burdens on the Lord," and "Blest Be Thou, O God of Israel." At this service Judith Ann Jones, baby daughter of Elder and Sister R. E. Jones, was blessed by President McDowell and Elder Frank Freeman.

Tragedy entered the home of Elder F. W. Lanpher Saturday afternoon, bringing sadness to the Saints of the entire district. Sister Lanpher, alone in her home at the time, was overcome by carbon monoxide gas and was dead when found by her son, Edgar, on his return home about three-thirty in the afternoon. She is survived by her husband, one son, four married daughters and seven grandchildren. Elder Lanpher at one time was assistant pastor of the Walnut Park congregation and at present is group elder in Group 28 North.

Wednesday evening, September 26, three children were baptized, Leonard Hartman, jr., son of Brother and Sister Leonard Hartman, and Alberta Fay and Albert Ray, twin children of Elder and Sister John Taylor. It was the eighth birthday of the Taylor twins. All three of the baptisms were performed by Elder Taylor. Confirmation was in a service which followed the baptisms, Elders F. R. Schaefer and R. D. Weaver officiating. This was followed by a service dedicating the fruit which has been contributed by the Saints and canned by the women of the church for the use of the needy during the coming winter. Sister Frank McDonald, leader of women, presented the fruit to Fred Horn, bishop's agent. The dedication prayer was by Pastor Frank McDonald.

Friday evening over one hundred congregational, church school and religio workers met in the lower auditorium for a covered-dish dinner. This was followed by talks by the pastor, church school director, and other leaders. The meeting was concluded by Brother McDonald reading a list of assignments of group workers for the coming year.

Spring Branch Church

Elder Robert Fish was the eleven o'clock speaker Sunday morning. The choir during the course of the service sang "Sevenfold Amen" and "Holy Art Thou."

All classes of the church school were well attended and good interest was shown. At the close of the lesson study a short program was given. A solo, "I Come to the Garden Alone," was sung by Ira Weeks and there was a talk by Velma Jones.

Elder M. C. Jacobsen was the evening speaker, and his theme was "Love One Another." The young people's chorus sang "Behold, the Savior at Your Door."

The funeral service of Jackie Lee Bogue, eight-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Bogue, was held at the Carson Funeral Home Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. Those left to mourn the loss of this loved one have the deep sympathy of Spring Branch members.

The following are the church school officers: junior and intermediate department, Sister Flossie Waite; primary and beginner department, Sister Stella Howery; cradle roll, Sister Lenore Closson; chorister, Sister Gladys Welch; pianist, Sister Grace Moore; secretary, Sister Edna Long; librarian, Richard Howery.

The evening service was in charge of the Y. P. A. At this service Nora Mae Closson, Alba Sims, and Riva Richter sang a trio number. Also, Delmar Goode and Ralph Dunlap sang a duet. The young people chose as their speaker Elder D. S. McNamara.

Sunday morning, September 30, both morning services were blended together. There was a promotion day program. Special numbers on the program were: A solo, by Anita May; violin solo, by Carl Hynden; piano solo by Richard Howery. Almer Sheehy was the speaker.

At the seven-thirty hour Elder Arthur Welch occupied.

Friday evening, September 28, about sixty people from Englewood gathered at the home of Brother and Sister R. W. Howery to show their appreciation to the pastor who has served them faithfully for the past sixteen months.

Sunday evening, September 23, the Y. P. A. held election of officers. The present incumbents were sustained. The council members are Mary Hiles, Delmar Goode, and Ray Mossman.

East Independence Church

The entire hour of prayer meeting last Wednesday night was devoted by the Saints to earnest prayers for Sisters Hatton, Austin and Green.

Afterward, the district business meeting was held, and the following officers were elected for the coming year: Pastor, Frank Minton; assistant pastor, Clare Austin; bishop's agent and caretaker, Thomas Thatcher; women's leader, Florence Minton; branch chorister, Gladys Teeter Overby; assistant, Ruby Barham; pianist, Mildred Wagoner; assistant, Jennie Butler. ### All-day Meeting at Ionia, Michigan

An all-day meeting was launched by the Ionia pastor two months before its occurrence. The date set was Sunday, September 9, and Elder A. C. Barmore was invited to be present. Accordingly early on Sunday morning P. N. McCarty, of Battle Creek, drove Brother and Sister Barmore to Ionia, a distance of about fifty miles. Fred Kirby, of Battle Creek, accompanied them.

The meeting began with a prayer service at nine-thirty, Elders John Wiley and W. E. Aelick in charge. At 11 a. m. Brother Barmore, the speaker used as a text Mark 4: 26-29. His theme was "Spiritual Progress." He occupied the stand again at 2 p. m., discussing "The Independence of the Spiritual Life." Both sermons were characterized by a goodly degree of spiritual power which was also true of the prayer service.

Elder Macey Ellis, pastor of Alto Branch, preached at 4 p. m., and his effort was brief but edifying.

Brother Sigmund Spencer was in charge of the morning preaching service, he being a priest from Belding Branch of which group Elder W. E. Aelick is president. Elder J. D. Aelick, the local pastor, was in charge of the afternoon preaching services, and also the speaker in the evening.

These meetings were reunion services of Ionia, Belding and Alto branches. Elder John Wiley, son-in-law of Elder B. H. Doty, was chorister of the day while Sister Wiley, Sister J. D. Aelick and Sister Charlotte Smith were pianists. Elder and Sister Wiley are connected with Belding Branch while Elder and Sister J. E. Aelick and Sister Smith are residents of Ionia.

Northwestern Iowa Reunion

A Season of Refreshing and Renewing the Spirit of Service

The Northwestern Iowa reunion was held in the Woodbine park, August 10 to 21, in charge of Apostle John F. Garver and District President Gerald Gunsolley. Much needed showers fell several times during the reunion, settling the dust, cooling the atmosphere, and adding greatly to the comfort of those attending. About seventy tents were on the grounds, and numbers of people drove in for services both day and evening. The large tent was comfortably filled at night and on Sundays the seating capacity was inadequate.

Apostle Garver was present the first part of the reunion and spoke each evening. After his departure, Brother Ray Whiting filled the pulpit at night during the remainder of the week. Bishop Clarence Skinner was in attendance all through the reunion, and taught a class on the problems of the financial law.

President Floyd McDowell began his lectures to the priesthood on Tuesday and carried on throughout the week. These were open meetings, full of interest and instruction. He pleaded with the members of the priesthood to come up to the plane required by Him who bestows it and with the members, particularly the wives of those called, to hold up the hands of the ministry.

Brother McDowell also taught a class of young people each morning, covering problems that are peculiarly their own; this brought a large and enthusiastic response. A six o'clock prayer service was held on the last Saturday morning, and the Lord was pleased to encourage them with a message of admonition and commendation through Brother McDowell.

The reunion was of a high order spiritually. A message came through Brother Garver on the first Sunday morning, reproving the Saints for failure in the past and admonishing them to greater effort with the promise of greater blessings to follow. On Wednesday morning the Saints met fasting and a splendid spirit was enjoyed. The following morning the Lord saw fit to speak again through Patriarch John Hansen, counseling them to sustain those whom he had placed in charge and again admonishing to greater consecration. Little hope was held of an improvement in world conditions, but the Saints were promised protection under terms of obedience to the laws of the Lord. Patriarchs J. A. Gun-solley and John Hansen were kept busy in the giving of blessings to those who requested them.

The music was in charge of Louise Lewis Hufferd and the songs of Zion were heard every evening in a service preceding the regular session. Special music was also rendered by both choruses and individuals.

A growing interest in dramatics was observed. On the first Sunday evening the children of the Logan church school put on a pageant, and on Wednesday evening the young people of the same branch gave a play. Thursday evening was given over entirely to the Graceland program and on Friday night the Logan women put on a pantomime, "Ruth and Naomi," before the sermon. Other branches expected to be represented in this line of work, but failed through some miscarriage of plans.

The recreational part of the program was supervised by Edgar Salts and volley and kitten ball games were engaged in each afternoon. A wiener roast was also had one evening. Each night a song-fest was enjoyed after church.

The physical needs of man were not forgotten, and meals were served in the church basement under the efficient management of Brother Joe Hamer and Sister Eva Teeter with a trained corps of "kitchen police."

Baltimore, Maryland

Six New Priesthood Members

Baltimore Branch was well represented, at the district conference held at Elk Mills. So many of the local Saints attended that no meetings were announced for that Sunday at the home branch. All branches were well represented, and the church building at Elk Mills could not seat all who attended.

Six young men of Baltimore Branch were ordained at the conference, two to the office of deacon, two to the office of teacher, and two to the office of priest. Much is expected of this branch as it is now well equipped to go forward.

Better attendance has been noted accompanied by more zeal and enthusiasm. The Saints seem united, and are planning to go ahead with missionary work.

The priesthood are rallying under the leadership of Pastor Adolphus Edwards. They are called together often for discussion and round-table talks.

The women's department is working faithfully. They meet once a week and sew and read good books of the church. The proceeds of their earnings go into the treasury where it is used for good purposes. The sisters have been saving toward a church building.

The Sunday school although small is well attended. Interesting classes are held every Sunday. The superintendent is planning to enlarge the school and to secure the services of a number of qualified teachers.

The young people's organization is very active. They meet every Sunday evening and have regular programs each time. They have a special theme and the songs and sermon talk are carried out in accordance with the theme. The program is planned and presented by the young members, and this activity prepares them to take part in other meetings. They are planning some early morning prayer meetings in the open. Baltimore young people are interested. Some of the young men ordained at Elk Mills come from this organization.

Kansas City Stake

Malvern Hill Ordinations

The hearts of the Saints at Malvern Hill were made glad by the service held Sunday evening, September 23, for the ordination of three of their young men to the office of priest. Those ordained were Lyal Higdon, Herbert Hepworth, and Meredith Mader.

Those officiating in the ordinations were C. D. Jellings, of the stake presidency, C. A. Skinner, stake bishop, and Ross Higdon, pastor of the group. Ray Lloyd, associate pastor, was in charge of the service.

Brother Jellings gave an inspirational sermon, charging the young men and the group as well, to make this occasion a real milestone in their lives.

Special music was played by Miss Ruth Ringer. Mrs. Lorene Lloyd Buddemeyer sang "Come Sweet Comforter." Miss Ringer, Mrs. Buddemeyer, and Mrs. Bertha Bray Steck sang "Consecration."

Flowers given by thoughtful members made the setting complete for the eighty-five people who attended. This was the record attendance for evening services this year.

Wisconsin Couple Celebrates Fifty-fifth Wedding Anniversary

Brother and Sister John Anderson, of Excelsior, Wisconsin, celebrated their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary, April 20, 1879. They were united in marriage April 20, 1879. To them three children were born, Mrs. Phoebe Harwood, William Anderson, and Theodore Anderson.

This worthy couple became interested in the latter-day gospel through the preaching of Elders Peterson and Pender. They were baptized by Brother W. A. McDowell and confirmed by him and Ollie Whiteaker at Tavera, Wisconsin, March 15, 1892. Brother Anderson was ordained a teacher in 1901.

Brother and Sister Anderson are members of Soldiers Grove Branch and attend services whenever they can. For more than thirty years they have been Herald subscribers, and it brings them much comfort each week.

A splendid report was received from the women's department of Ribstone Branch of their activities during the year, and the district secretary was instructed to write them a letter of commendation. The name of Richard Osler, son of Elder and Sister Osler, was passed on for ordination to the office of deacon, and his ordination was provided for. Election of officers resulted as follows: District president, Ira I. Benham, who chose as his counselor Elders William Osler and Lee Roy Allen; secretary, Elder John P. Benham; treasurer, and bishop's agent, Lee Roy Allen, and the district president was chosen as director of religious education. The 8 p. m. sermon by L. O. Wildermuth Sunday opened with prayer service at 9 a. m.; sacrament was served at 10 a. m. A good spirit prevailed throughout all the services, several children were blessed, and two were baptized by Elder Osler. Elder L. O. Wildermuth preached the closing sermon. Thus passed a profitable conference. The next one was left to the district president with reference to time and place.

SOUTHERN INDIANA.—Conference convened at Derby, Indiana, August 18 and 19, and was especially well attended. Louisville, Kentucky, Branch had a large representation, as through the efforts of Sister Tolbert Edwards, a large truck was obtained which enabled many to attend who otherwise could not have done so. All were well repaid for their efforts. The influence of the Holy Spirit was felt throughout the conference. The Saints of Derby, deserve special mention for the warm reception given all visitors. The little church is situated on top of a hill in the heart of nature and the surroundings are most favorable for worship. Meals were served in the open beneath the trees, and everyone seemed to enjoy the wholesome food prepared by the women of Derby. A prayer service at ten o'clock Saturday morning fittingly marked the opening of the conference. The business session begun at 2 p. m., and by choice of the body was presided over by District President J. O. Dutton and his counselors, H. W. Burwell, of Louisville, and A. W. Gage, of Indianapolis. Ministerial reports from practically every member of the priesthood were read. The following resolution was put before the body: "Resolved, that we, the Southern Indiana District, in conference assembled, do hereby ask the general authorities of the church to authorize a new edition of the Zion's Praises, to be sold at the lowest possible price, as there is a crying need for such a book at once." After some discussion in which the need of the Zion's Praises in the smaller branches was pointed out, the resolution was voted on and carried. Present officers of the district were reinstated, namely, J. O. Dutton, district president, chorister, and director of church schools. W. H. Burwell and A. W. Gage were named as counselors to Brother Dutton. Elder W. O. Robertson, district treasurer, and Nita R. Ferguson, secretary. A motion to sustain General Conference appointees was placed on record, namely, Apostle M. A. McConley, minister in charge, Elder J. O. Dutton, district missionary, and Elder W. O. Robertson, bishop's agent. It was voted to have the next conference at Byrnsville, Indiana. On Saturday night Elder Dutton preached to a large audience on the "Second Coming of Christ." A prayer service marked the beginning of the Sabbath day, after which seven men were ordained as follows: James B. Welch and E. A. Jeagers to the office of elder; Morgan Stacy, C. W. Jackson, and George Maymon to the office of priest; Chester Metcalf and Rolland Prather to the office of teacher. Elder Dutton delivered a charge to the men who were ordained, emphasizing the sacredness of the priesthood, the responsibilities resting upon them as special representatives for Christ, and the great importance of being constant in prayer. He also charged the members with their responsibility in contributing their share of work in supporting the priesthood at all times. At ten-thirty o'clock a fine sacrament service was had. The spirit of admonition and prophecy was enjoyed by the Saints, giving courage and strength to all. Without an intermission Elder Burwell, of Louisville, Kentucky, preached a sermon on those attributes of the gospel which will make Christ-like men and women. At 2 p. m., Elder Gage, of Indianapolis, addressed a large audience, directing his remarks more especially to the young. The district has every reason to be proud of these splendid men who are genuine through and through. At three-forty-five three candidates, Weaver V. Glenn, Robert Glenn, and Mona Glenn, were led into the waters of baptism by Elder J. O. Dutton. At the eight o'clock evening service the infant son of Brother and Sister Weaver Glenn was blessed by Elders J. O. Dutton and C. F. Davis. Elder Davis preached the closing sermon of the conference. The young people of Derby added their bit to the conference by providing music before each service.

ARKANSAS AND LOUISIANA.—District conference was held at Fisher, Arkansas, September 1 and 2, opening with the district president in the chair. A motion prevailed that Apostle Roy S. Budd be associated with the district president, A. M. Baker, in charge of the conference. In the absence of the district secretary at the opening of the meeting, A. E. Ziegenhorn was chosen to record the actions of the conference. Minutes of previous conference were read and approved. The following reports were then read and adopted:

that of the district presidency together with reports of the district priesthood; department of women; statistical reports of these branches—Hot Springs, Fisher, Bald Knob, and Winthrop. A motion prevailed to approve the recommendation of Fisher Branch to ordain Brother Clark Carty to the office of teacher and to provide for the ordination. A motion prevailed to approve the recommendation of district president Brother A. M. Baker, and that the Eros, Louisiana, Branch for the ordination of Brother Alma Williams to the office of elder. September 2, the Sunday school at 10 a. m. was in charge of local authorities. Preaching services at the eleven o'clock hour were in charge of George Gordon, the sermon being by Apostle Roy S. Budd. Prayer meeting was held in the afternoon at two-thirty in charge of Brother Budd and A. E. Ziegenhorn after which Brother Clark was ordained a teacher by Apostle Budd and Elder A. E. Ziegenhorn. Preaching services at 7:30 p. m. were in charge of R. A. Ziegenhorn, Apostle Budd the speaker. Conference adjourned to meet at the call of the district presidency.

She became affiliated with Mercy Rebekah Lodge in February, 1916, being a zealous worker the remainder of her life. The last three years were largely spent in California, and Independence, Missouri. Veale at Temple, Texas. To this union were born four children, Bert, who preceded her in death fifteen years ago; Mittie, Eula, and Vell. She passed away May 31, 1934, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. I. L. Snedeker in Houston, Texas. Besides her three children: Mrs. I. L. Snedeker and Mrs. R. V. Post, of Houston, and L. W. Veale, of Missouri, she leaves to mourn, four grandchildren, and a host of friends. The funeral services were conducted by C. W. Tischer at the Saints' church at Houston. Interment was in Forest Park Cemetery.

PATRICK.—Emma Jane Galloway was born March 7, 1870, in Fannin County, Texas. While a child she moved with her parents to McKenzie, Alabama, where she grew to womanhood. There on November 1, 1885, she was baptized by G. T. Chute, and on June 17, 1888, she was married to John D. Patrick. To this union seven children were born, all of whom are living. She not only reared her own children to maturity but on two occasions she took a motherless child into her home and cared for it until relatives could do so. When her son's wife died she took his two little motherless children into her home and loved and cared for them like her own. When another son lost his wife by death, to his mother he brought his little son, and again her heart and home were open to receive and care for the motherless child. And now once again, these three children are motherless. Her life was spent in doing good. The added burdens that came to her in later years she assumed without complaint, and did well what came to her. She passed away at her home August 30, 1934, after an illness of two weeks. She leaves to mourn her faithful and devoted husband, John D. Patrick, her seven children, John Robert and Preston, of the home; Willie and Lambert, of Independence; Mrs. Janie Furness, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Elizabeth Linkhart, of Liberty, Missouri, and Mae, of Warrensburg, Missouri; one brother, Lambert Galloway; two half-sisters, Mrs. Sallie Ward, and Mrs. Lizzie Ward; one half-brother, Samuel Galloway; fourteen grandchildren, four great-grandchildren, and a host of relatives and friends, whose lives are made richer by their association with her.

SHAW.—Viola C. Edwards Shaw, wife of R. B. Shaw, passed away in the Saint Elizabeth's Hospital, Yakima, Washington, July 30, 1934. Sister Shaw was born May 19, 1863, and was baptized March 21, 1886. She was well known in many branches of the church throughout the West. Besides her husband she leaves other relatives and many friends to mourn her passing. Funeral services were conducted by Elder B. H. Van Eaton in the Yates F. Hamm Funeral Home, August 1, 1934. She was laid to rest in the Terrace Heights Memorial Park, Yakima, Washington.

WESTON.—John Francis Weston, son of James and Maria Francis Weston, was born at Oxbridge, Middlesex County, England, October 10, 1853. He was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints when a boy in England. When fifteen he came with his parents to America, and they crossed the plains to Utah. They were members of the Utah Church and knew nothing of the Reorganization nor of the changes in the faith and practices of the Saints' Church organized by Joseph Smith in 1830. They were sadly disappointed in the church when they reached Utah. In 1870, W. W. Blair visited that State and held a series of meetings. John and his mother attended the services, and hope was born anew in them. They united with the Reorganized Church in June 1870, being baptized by Elder Thomas J. Franklin. For thirty years Brother Weston remained in Utah. He was ordained a priest, and labored diligently in that office. His home was open to the missionaries of the church. Brother Weston belongs to that group of Saints who sacrificed much that the spiritual heritage might be passed on to the present generation. In 1898, he moved to Omaha, Nebraska, where he continued to be a worker in the church; was ordained an elder by G. H. Hilliard and Charles Fry. In 1902, he married Teresa Adelaide Williamson, and to them one child was born, Mark Williamson Weston. In 1905, they moved to Independence. In 1917, his companion died. To the day of his death this man was actively engaged in the work of the church. February 22, 1929, he married Mary E. Green who survives him. Besides his wife and son he is survived by one brother, James Weston, Knobnoster, Missouri, and one sister, Mrs. Lillie Clark Tabor, Iowa; one grandson, Mark William Weston, and many friends. He passed away September 1, 1934, at Independence. Two days before his death he attended services and participated in singing the songs of Zion.

Louisa placed a nervous hand on the little forehead. "She doesn't seem a bit hot—and her face isn't flushed. She can't have any great fever—"

"And she's not likely to have as long as we feed her by the Word of Wisdom," said Dan, confidently. "Don't worry, dear—she's just had a little bad dream, or something. Maybe I played with her too much before I put her to bed," he added quiltily. He knew that Louisa did not like the children to be excited before bedtime, even if the excitement were of a pleasant nature. All the psychology books advised against that.

"Tell mother what's the matter," continued Louisa.

"Me's afraid, Mama."

"But what are you afraid of, dearest?" She turned to Dan with sudden inspiration. "Dan—that woman—that Elsie I've been having stay with the children sometimes in the afternoons—I warned her never to frighten the children—but she may have told Dorothy a frightening story of some kind."

"Darling, listen. Did Elsie tell Doity Jane stories?"

"Elsie tell 'tories," repeated the little girl.

"Did Elsie frighten Doity Jane?"

"Elsie frighten Doity Jane."

"You see," laughed Dan, "she just repeats what you say. You can't get anywhere that way. A child is bound to get frightened now and then."

"I don't see it that way Dan. I am so disappointed. I wanted to raise both the children up to be without fear-thoughts or any inhibitions of any kind."

Dorothy Jane was wide awake now. "Mama, me's hungry. Me want some whole wheat bread—wif' buther."

■ In Old Nauvoo

A trip recently took us across the rolling country of Western Illinois and down over the famous hill to Old Nauvoo. The gentle slope of the landscape, the broad, silver expanse of the river, the tall trees, and the sturdy houses now nearing a century old, combine to make a scene of tranquil beauty that is not surpassed elsewhere in this country. The river itself brings reminiscences of the Potomac in its majestic curve around Mount Vernon.

The church should be very happy to possess such fine examples of early architecture as the Mansion, the Nauvoo House, and other structures. The enormous amount of stone work in the sturdy walls testify to the almost unbelievable energy and industry of the people who planned and built the city. With reasonable care these buildings should be able to stand for centuries to come. Unfortunately, the old houses have been stripped of their original furniture, and it is only with difficulty and expense that furniture which belongs to the period can be found and brought back to fill their empty rooms again.

Brother James Page and his wife who are in charge of the church property have done much in the way of acquiring old furniture to fill the rooms. Some church members and some friends not members of the church have given some good pieces. Brother Page has also provided cabinets for the protection and display of many small curios and souvenirs of the earlier times. All of these things help to revive the atmosphere of Old Nauvoo.

Many church members have in their possession early pieces of furniture which they do not need and articles connected with church history. Brother Page will be happy to receive any of these articles for use in the church properties. They will be given the best of care and will be assured of a home more permanent than can be provided by any private family.

A visit to Old Nauvoo is an inspiration. Its quietness and beauty, the memories of its history, and even the touch of sadness which is associated with it, all serve to make the place more precious in our memories. Sometime in our lives we should all look forward to a visit to Old Nauvoo.

■ Brother and Sister C. J. Lant Visit Us

Brother and Sister C. J. Lant, of Santa Barbara, California paid our office a short visit while in Independence. They have been seeing friends and relatives in Illinois and Missouri, especially in Kansas City, where they met some years ago. They are ardent workers at their home branch in Santa Barbara and strong supporters of the church publications. Brother Lant is a frequent contributor to our Herald columns. We are happy to meet in person the friends we have made through correspondence.

Missionary Background

Missionary work can be done anywhere, but there is an increasing necessity for the established background of a church and a congregation as a nurturing school for the newly converted members. In earlier times a missionary could use a schoolhouse, a home, or even a clean and commodious barn loft as a setting for his activities. The members baptized at the end of his efforts could be left until he returned again, meanwhile studying books and tracts. The people were not critical.

Modern conditions require more of us than earlier church work did. They ought to. We have more advantages. The pioneers gave the best they had, and their best was considered good enough. But what was their best under frontier conditions would probably be our poorest today.

A recent visit to a little church made us see some new possibilities in our missionary work. The pastor is a young man, zealous and devoted to his work, loved by young and old alike. Under his thoughtful guidance the service was handled smoothly and beautifully. Many young people were present and participated in the choral and instrumental music; a young member of the priesthood offered the invocation and the benediction. Nonmembers were present, and there were some recently baptized. One could see that the church was ministering to their needs. This was well, for it was a service to which anyone might have gladly brought a friend, feeling proud to say, "This is my church!"

The secret of the success of this church service is background. The pastor had a good understanding of worship and what it is for. He knew the difference between an invocation, a pastoral prayer, and a benediction, and this difference was illustrated in the way the service was managed.

It takes a good church—the right kind of congregation and the right kind of pastor—to provide a proper background for effective missionary work and enduring results. It is not enough to convert and baptize people. The missionary begins the good work; it is the task of the church to see that members are carried "on to perfection."

Spiritual Orphans

A Word to Pastors and District Officers

There are a few hundred families scattered throughout the church who attend services but who do not receive our church papers and rarely read church books. They depend for their spiritual life upon that which is given to them. They never get anything for themselves. They are spiritual orphans.

Some of these spiritual orphans are in every branch. Some of them are in your branch. A few are hopeless; nothing can be done about them. They would, if allowed, always live on the crumbs that fall at their feet; but most of them could easily be persuaded to take an active interest in church publications. Our publications are the only regular established means by which the church, speaking through its officers, can reach the people with messages and communications. They are an established means of education for church people in the work and the progress of the church.

It is conceivable that a person can maintain some sort of private spiritual life without ever reading church books and papers, but it will be a narrow, selfish sort of existence entirely insufficient for an understanding of the broad cooperative type of membership which will be necessary for the building of Zion.

An enlightened, informed and devoted membership can only be built among people who can and will read the messages of the church, and keep abreast of its developments and progress. Our church work is not a simple matter of raising the standards of individual righteousness in small branches. It is rather a matter of developing cooperation and understanding in economics and government as well as church affairs among an enlightened people.

It is to the interest of all pastors and district officers who takes their work seriously to be concerned about the circulation of our church publications among the people who are dependent upon them for spiritual care.

G. J. Waller Meets President Roosevelt

A letter to the office of the First Presidency brings us the interesting story of how Brother Gilbert J. Waller of Honolulu met President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Brother Waller is a pillar of the church in Hawaii, having served for many years as district president, as well as giving many fine services not listed in the records. Brother Waller's letter follows:

Honolulu, T. H.,
July 30th, 1934

In the Star Bulletin of Saturday, July 28th and in the Advertiser of Sunday, July 29th, articles were printed referring to my personal visits with the President.

On Saturday morning, a reporter of the Star Bulletin called to see me about my visit to the President on that morning at the Royal Hawaiian Hotel and as I was in a hurry to get out to our plant at Kalihi and as he also was rushing to get something regarding the same in his afternoon paper, he apparently did not get the information as accurately as he should have done.

I met the President twice during his visit here. The first time was on Thursday evening at the Governor's reception at Washington Place and it was then when I shook hands with him that, after my referring to meeting him at Seagirt, he said he remembered me very well and was very pleased to meet me again. Just before I shook hands with the Governor at this reception, Lieutenant Dunham, one of the Aides of the Governor, informed me that he had a telephone message for me and that he had been trying to get me all day. However, I was absent a greater part of the afternoon at Schofield and hence was not either at the office or at home. The message, I learned from him, was from President Roosevelt, asking me to call and visit him at the Royal Hawaiian Hotel on Friday afternoon, July 27th at five o'clock. The President had an engagement at that time on his program and therefore the following morning, Lieutenant Dunham telephoned to me to say that the time had been changed to 9:30 on Saturday morning, July 28.

I was very happy to receive this invitation and went to the Royal Hawaiian Hotel at the time mentioned and saw the President in his room and just before I shook hands and said good-by to him, he said how much enjoyment he had got from this visit, adding that the time was too short but that anyhow, he was coming back again.

In the newspaper reports you will find that only one of my meetings with the President was referred to and what was said to me at the reception was reported incorrectly as having been said at my meeting with him in his room at the Royal Hawaiian Hotel.

However, I felt honored through receiving this invitation as did many other people who knew of it.

The following account from the Honolulu Advertiser gives additional information which should be checked, however, by Brother Waller's letter.

President Tells Waller He's Coming Back to the Islands

"I am coming back to Hawaii;"

President Roosevelt's voice was emphatic as he made the foregoing declaration to G. J. Waller, manager of the Hawaii Meat Company, when Waller called on him at the Royal Hawaiian hotel Saturday at 9:45 a. m. in answer to the President's invitation.

The President remembered Waller from other visits with him in New York, and elsewhere on the mainland.

It was in 1912, Waller recalls. It was during the Democratic post convention days. He was a delegate to that memorable conclave, and he was Democratic National Committeeman from Hawaii. Another delegate was Franklin Delano Roosevelt, New York state senator from Hyde Park. When Woodrow Wilson was nominated, Waller rushed to Seagirt, New Jersey, to offer congratulations.

Then came Franklin D. Roosevelt also to Seagirt. When congratulations were over Roosevelt turned to Waller, observing that the latter had traveled a long distance to attend the convention. They then took a turn about town.

So 22 years later Waller walked into the Presidential suite at the Royal Hawaiian hotel, and the President said to him:

"Ah, I remember you. I remember you very, very well. I want to tell you how much I have enjoyed my visit here. Someday I'm coming back to Hawaii."

Waller, later remembering the declaration, said:

"The President means it. He is coming back. I felt it in his voice and his enthusiasm."

Preparing for War

In Germany Bismarck had said, "The stronger we are the more improbable is war." In England Lord Roberts had said, "The surest way to universal peace would be the adoption of universal military training." Similar statements were made in Russia, in Italy, in France. And the budgets of Europe show that year after year credulous peoples submitted to increased taxation for more ships, more battalions. The result? A war whose direction financial cost mounted up to nearly two hundred billions of dollars and in which twenty-three million people, ten million soldiers and thirteen million civilians, lost their lives. When it was all over Major General F. B. Maurice of the British General Staff declared: "When I entered the British Army I believed that the way to have peace was to be prepared for war. I now believe that if you prepare for war you get war." And Sir Edward Grey wrote in his autobiography, "Every country had been piling up armaments and perfecting preparations for war. The object in each case had been security. The effect had been precisely the opposite of what was intended and desired. Instead of a sense of security there had been produced a sense of fear . . . and fear predisposes to violence and catastrophe. . . . The enormous growth of armaments in Europe, the sense of insecurity and fear caused by them—it was these that made war inevitable."—Ernest Fremont Tittle, in We Need Religion.

"Church attendance runs only about 30% of the church membership. . . . Fundamentally, depressions are the result of declines in spiritual life, while better times always await a return to the more worth-while things. . . . For these reasons it is very important that everyone should get behind any movement to develop a deeper spiritual life in all communions within the nation."—Roger Babson.

College Day -- October 21

"Expand Graceland's Service"

TO GRACELAND'S CAMPUS, just a month ago, came 195 students, representing church families and branches in 26 states, Australia and Canada. This is a twelve and a half percent increase in total enrollment over last year, and a forty percent increase in the freshman class.

In recent years Graceland's student body has been steadily growing. The church and its youth are fortunate to have available, in times like we are experiencing, an institution such as Graceland, that is fully equipped to render educational service in a Christian atmosphere. As in former years, by careful planning, the building, the campus, the laboratories, the library, and other units of the physical plant were in excellent condition as the "Old West Door" swung open to receive the students.

STUDENT AID

This year the college is making it possible for 118 young men and women to "earn while they learn." There are three sources from which students are receiving assistance; the Graceland Industrial Department, Federal aid, and the Scholarship Loan Fund.

Graceland for years has employed students to do practically all of the work in the offices, library, campus, shop, dining room, kitchen, heating plant, and on the farm. In fact, there is work to be done twenty-four hours of every day. The monthly payroll of these students is $2,500, which is applied to their expenses.

FEDERAL AID

The second source of aid is from the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. Graceland, for the second year, with the other colleges and universities of the nation, is receiving assistance for needy students on a percentage basis of the enrollment as of October 15, 1933. This year Graceland is receiving an allotment of $285 per month to pay to needy boys and girls for work that is productive, but for which the college has no funds. This Federal Aid has made it possible for nineteen more students to continue their educational program this year.

The Scholarship Loan Fund, which had been accumulating rather slowly until 1917 when General Conference set a Sunday in October to be observed annually as "College Day," is the third form of student aid. Loans from this fund are made to cover a part or all of the academic tuition.

COLLEGE DAY

The church during the past forty years has developed a fully accredited institution which has the buildings, the library, the physical plant, and the faculty to adequately serve the youth of the church.

Now the need is for the membership, young and old, scattered or in branches, to observe "College Day," and cast into the treasury of the church funds that are to be loaned, not given, to worthy young men and women.

The need for assistance from the Scholarship Fund is always in proportion to the enrollment. This year the need is greater than heretofore. Some students have enrolled for only the first half of the year. Assistance must come to them or they will have to stop their course at the end of the first semester.

Here is an opportunity for the church to augment the aid given by the Federal Government, and the college. The Federal Government recognizes the value of the youth of the nation. How much more should the church be conscious of the need of the young men and women who are to establish Zion! Here is a worthy endeavor in which everyone should participate.

The sun dial on the Graceland campus was presented by President Frederick M. Smith.

You talk to me in parables

You may have known that I'm no wordy man,
Fine speeches are the instruments of knaves
Or fools that use them, when they want good sense;
But honesty
Needs no disguise nor ornament; be plain.

—Otway.

Going Forward at Pittsburg, Kansas

By Maurine Jones

Pittsburg, Kansas, young people gathered on a recent Sunday morning in a hushed upper classroom of the church, to commune with God in one of the most outstanding prayer meetings of the year.

An organ prelude was played as they assembled. Brother Lynn Smith, who presided, gave an inspiring talk on "What Shall I Do With My Life?" and following this came a season of earnest, prompt prayers and testimonies characterized by the spirit of consecration and dedication.

Pittsburg young men and women seem to sense as never before their responsibilities as members of the church, and they are entering all activities with enthusiasm and the spirit of service. They are accepting the challenge sounded this summer at the Spring River district reunion, and are planning the Sunday evening service each third Sunday of the month. They feel that with the selection of a theme, accompanied by a sermonet and aided by the music and dramatic departments a greater interest in the evening services can be generated.

With the young people going steadily forward, Pittsburg Branch is bound to grow in membership and in the love of God's work.

The Art of Happiness

The art of happiness in little things gives pointers for the big ones. It is not so much difficulties that make for mental friction and the wear and tear of the mind machine. It is indulgence in the wrong kind of emotions. Working fussily is one habit; working with poise is another. You can't get rid of worry with a knockout blow. Get on good terms with poise and your job, and they will show worry the back door.

There is no map of happiness except as you make one for your path in life; not signposts but habit-reminders show the way. It is an elusive art, which gets away from you every time you seem to get your finger on it. And you can't go by success. Many of the biggest "successes" are dead failures at the art of happiness. The full-size pictures and the stories in the magazines rarely tell the real tale. If you knew it, you might not want to change places with them.

Happiness is a by-product; often you hit it when you aim at something else. You are sure to miss it if you worry that you won't be happy. Happiness is the reward of right adjustment to your many jobs—your wage job, your family job, your friendship job, your citizen job. Nature may have built you so that the art of happiness is easy for you—or far from easy. That is your personality job—to adapt the general art of happiness to your special case.—Joseph Jastrow in Keeping Mentally Fit.

Check Up on Yourself

You say you want to have a good time? Of course! That is a perfectly legitimate longing. But be sure the good time you are planning is a good good time, for this is the only kind of pleasure that is entirely satisfactory.

How can you know what is this kind of good time? Is there any rule? any guide? any sure test?

Yes, there is a rule, a guide, a test that is unailing. Ask yourself these questions—the last one especially; answer yourself sincerely, honestly; and then keep faith with yourself in making your decision:

Will this good time undermine my health?

Will it refresh me physically and mentally?

Will it interfere with clear, clean, straightforward thinking?

Will it require more money than I (or my parents) can afford?

Will I be likely to say after it is all over, "I wish I hadn't done that"?

Are the young people in whose company I will be the kind I would wish to entertain in my own home and introduce to my family?

If the story of this good time should be printed in the newspaper, would I be ashamed?

Will it please or displease and grieve my parents?

Will it bring me into association with the high type of young people I wish to have for lifelong friends?

Is it the kind of good time that may influence others to make wrong choices?

Will it trouble my conscience and dull it, or keep it keen and sensitive to right and wrong?

Will it weaken my will power?

Will it lower or raise my "moral tone"?

Do I want to do this thing because I think it will give me real pleasure, or merely because "everybody's doing it" and I wish to be popular?

Would I want the person I expect to marry some day to know about it?

Is this good time in accord with the standards of the most highly respected people of the community?

Will it cast reflection on my mother's

Ideas, Discussion and News for the Young People of the Church

A New Young People's Bible Course

Q-651.—"The Bible in Everyday Living,"

By Elder Roy Chevillie

Older young people who have recently been studying the quarterly, "Message and Witness of the Restoration" will now be happy in this new approach to the story of the Bible. In a most convincing way our former editors have helped us to gather and appreciate the message of the Restoration as it is contained in the three standard books of the church. In the adult grade are available the "Message of the Book of Mormon," and "A Study of the Doctrine and Covenants." There will now be printed and ready for study in October a similar studious approach to the Book of books.

We are fortunate in the preparation, the conviction and the warmth of experience with which the author comes to his task. In the year of lessons the Bible should become a new book to us. Understanding how it came to be, the spirit of its writers, the manner in which it reveals God and truth and coming into personal contact as students with its beauty, its humanity, its divinity, its messages should be constant sources of revelation, of comfort, of strength and joy. Above all, in its unfoldment shall we see the unity of God's purposes, the majesty of his greatness, the warmth of his love, and the urge of his power.

This will be an Introductory Bible Course written especially for young people of college age, but it will be equally welcomed by adult students who wish to follow this line of study. Another year it is expected that we shall have an advanced course in Bible Study in the regular adult series.

The above course will be printed in the regular quarterly series, the first quarter ready for use in October, being number Q-651, "How the Bible Came to Be." One to three copies 25 cents each; per year 90 cents each. In quantities of four or more, 15 cents each; per year, 50 cents each.

Winning Souls for Christ

By Paul M. Hanson

of the Quorum of Twelve

every part of his creation, which leaves room for the working out of the scriptural promise of his power or spirit under certain conditions being placed in the possession of man to "guide into all truth."

Besides the material universe and the guidance of his spirit, there is in the Holy Scriptures a vast and notable assemblage of deep, spiritual experiences, profound problems affecting mankind with their solutions of inestimable worth, and a great body of truth constituting in a direct and peculiar way a revelation of the mind and will of God in relation to true success in life.

The Father in heaven is holy, just, merciful, true, and full of love, for love is an attribute of intelligence.

All of these divine qualities were manifested in the coming into the world from abroad of Jesus Christ, the Son of Man and the Son of God—given that "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

What an interesting age is the present one to live in and from which to emerge into the presence of God!

The most powerful things in the world are not high explosives and battleships, but ideas. The World War developed from an ideal. Greater than all other ideas and more assured of ever expanding success is the idea of the Kingdom of God, the rule of the supreme Creator among men, until in mate-rialization it shall fill the earth as the "waters cover the sea."

The greatest of all facts is the existence of God, and the most certain is the final universal sway of divine rule among men. Already this in part exists—wherever souls have established personal communion with their Maker, partaken of his spirit, possess his mind, and manifest his attributes.

The revelation of Jesus Christ is basically entrenched from every angle in the needs and interests of humanity. In his teachings the effect of what is done in time is represented as carried over into eternity. Time is a part of eternity.

Could a subject enter the mind of man for consideration weightier than the salvation of himself, obtaining eternal life, such as belongs to God, by keeping his commandments, being guided by the Holy Spirit, and living in consciousness of divine favor?

Could any work be engaged in requisitioning all the faculties, powers, and resources of the soul, equal to that of establishing among men the kingdom of God? How great are the possibilities of joy and development in turning one's powers to an active promulgation of this work!

Man, because of being made in the "image and likeness" of God, is capable of believing and achieving great things; in illustration of this, not only are there startling accomplishments in the scientific domain, but also in the spiritual realm.

The life and teachings of Christ lead to an emphasis being placed upon love, goodness, liberty, justice, mercy and truth—without which there is no success in the formation of civilization.

Back of things that are seen are invisible forces. Prompting the writing of the Twenty-third Psalm, the utterance of the Sermon on the Mount, St. Paul's dissertation on charity, the oratorio of The Messiah, the constitution of the United States, and myriads of similar achievements, are invisible, spiritual forces.

There is a disposition in human nature to sometimes become weary in representing a religious cause when continuously facing adverse currents of thought and feelings, to the point of almost abandoning active prosecution of the cause, and unaggressively settling down to an enjoyment, or attempted enjoyment, of certain principles of truth and forms of worship.

To achieve success and dismiss from the church

any such attempt at finding safety and comfort and spiritual life, Jesus, among the first words spoken after his resurrection from the grave, said: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matthew 28: 18, 19.)

The policy of the Church of God is not one of isolation, separation from the world—but of permeation. The church, collectively and individually is called to go in and out among the people and do good; it is called to be the "salt of the earth," generously placing within the reach of others the blessings of its preservative power.

Awe inspiring are these words of Jesus: "He that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth." (Luke 11: 23.)

The true followers of Christ is one who is not soft minded—effeminate; he has convictions. There are such things as right and wrong, and one must have choices.

There is no ground of neutrality on which a Christian may stand.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints! A name which in its meaning encompasses the church of God brought forth in this age by heavenly direction and revelation, and its membership. The Church of Jesus Christ reorganized in these last days. The very name borne by the membership. Latter Day Saints, is a continual reminder of the peculiar age in which we live, the epoch in which God will redeem the covenants made with the fathers and execute his decrees in behalf of his people.

The towers of Babylon are falling; in the midst of the ecclesiastical, social, and political confusion, the church is confronted with one of the greatest opportunities that ever knocked at its doors.

To hosts, life with its perplexities, distress, and uncertainties, is a huge enigma. Christ spread a glow of hope amid life's darkest mysteries—this is also the calling and the privilege of his church.

I would that our church were renowned throughout the world and in every community, not for eloquence, nor for wealth, nor for learning, but for prayer. Then all things needful would be added. But without prayer—conscious personal communion between the human soul and God—a superstructure exists that is seriously lacking in its foundation.

Jesus said to those who sold and bought in the temple in Jerusalem: "Is it not written, My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer?"

In every life in which prayer is absent there is a noticeable lack of fineness of character, no joy of salvation in expression, no disposition to join with

David in saying: "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"

In prayer the greatest adjustments of the soul are made. The mind reaches out in quest of the methods by which the yearning of the heart can be answered. So true at times is the line of approach to the problem, assisted by the Spirit, that one's prayer becomes the answering voice of God. A surge of missionary zeal stirs in the soul as one prays after the manner enjoined by Jesus, for the kingdom of God to come.

A deep spiritual conviction that impels one on, is obtainable by all, through prayer, study, and meditation. Only such persons can be effective instruments in filling men's minds with Christ's ideas, their hearts with his spirit, and making them willing, even eager, to live after his ideals of life.

The Christian viewpoint leads to doubt and fear becoming displaced by an affirmative and constructive mind, filled with love.

The outworking of the life, nature, and mind of Christ through his professed followers in the midst of the circumstances that are common to life, mightily affects others, and without this the oral proclamation of the Gospel is like a tinkling cymbal.

Paul, when a prisoner in Rome, under Nero, wrote to the church at Phillipi:

"I would that ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel; so that my bonds in Christ are manifest in all the palace, and in all other places; and many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear."

Instead of dwelling in despairing thought on his imprisonment, he wrote:

"For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

"For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake."

"I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

"Rejoice in the Lord alway; and again I say, Rejoice."

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

"But my God shall supply all your needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."—1: 12:-14, 21, 29; 3: 14; 4: 4, 13, 19.

He was right. God is God all of the time, and even a dungeon does not take away one's royal relationship and privileges in Christ.

Forgive Us Our Sins

By Ruth M. Kirby

PERHAPS no word in any language has been so misused as our little word sin. Many of the most cruel mistakes mankind has ever made were made in an effort to avoid sin. Heretics have been persecuted and massacred, witches have been burned at the stake and tyrannical laws have been enforced all because of a misconception of the meaning of sin. Others have gone to the opposite extreme and claim there is no such thing as sin, and perhaps so far as the superstitious, prejudiced meaning of the term is concerned, this claim deserves attention. But no doubt the discrepancy lies in the lack of a clear conception of the definition of the word.

Sin is commonly regarded as the breaking of law, especially religious law. Law, however, is not an end in itself, but merely the means to an end. The final culmination towards which all good tends is perfection, and anything is sin to the extent that it serves to frustrate or dissipate the powers of good, whether spiritually, mentally, physically, personally, or socially.

The first two commandments were given in recognition of the fact that our social adjustment is of prime importance. The misanthrope is recognized by everybody as a sinner against society, but at least indirectly, all sin is social, for the various phases of life and of society are so interlinked as to make no part separate or independent. The most personal sin is social in its application.

A misuse of any of the powers God has given us, a misuse of bodily or temporal strength, a failure to develop our mind, our character, our spirituality, is sin. Among the wisest words of all time are those, "Overcome evil with good." If we devote all our thoughts and energy to the cultivation of the true and good things of life we will have little time or thought for the negative "thou shalt not's." On the other hand, unless we fill our lives to the brim with good endeavor, evil will be sure to usurp all the empty space.

Hatred, envy, jealousy, lust are not so much sin because of a broken commandment as they are the signs of lack of spiritual and mental development. They are sin because they are the fruits of imperfection rather than of perfection. They are sin because they are a dissipation of our God-given powers for good.

Sin cannot be limited to broken law, that is, written law, except it be the laws of truth which are written on the heart. The laws and gifts of the church are given not as an end in themselves, but simply as guides—milestones to mark the way to perfection, and unless we use our own best judgment and initiative between signs, we are likely to lose our way.

There has always been to some extent, a contempt for physical dissipation and an admiration for physical development. However, especially among religious peoples, there has been a tendency to fear mental development as dangerous to spirituality. The danger lies, not in the mental development itself, but in the lack of the spiritual development that should accompany it, and may we add, even so, attempted spiritual development is dangerous if separated from the mental development that should accompany it. The two are interdependent and if separated result in deformity.

An assimilation of facts is in reality a very small part of mental development, yet many of our so-called educated people are not so much cultivated beings as they are walking encyclopedias. If education is to be of benefit, it must consist of something besides an organized collection of theories and facts; there must be high purpose and spiritual comprehension to give it the needed avenues of expression. Still water becomes stagnant, and education unconsecrated becomes desecrated and is of as little worth as ignorance itself.

Spirituality is love. Spiritual perfection is perfect love. It is a perfect poise of mind and soul; a perfect balance between love of self and love of God and our fellow men. Anything that tends to disturb this perfect relationship is spiritual sin. In the ideal relationship, we find the thoughts turned outward and self-interest submerged in love of righteousness and in efforts to promote the powers of goodness in whatever way the individual is best fitted. This is undoubtedly what the Savior meant when he said we must lose our lives to find them.

An inferiority or superiority complex is a symptom of spiritual sin because it is an evidence of self-centered point of view, a lack of self-forgetfulness. Each is a distortion of life's true values and is a stumblingblock in the pathway of the development of heart and mind. The inferiority complex tends to lack of sufficient self-respect to preserve the decencies of life, while the superiority complex, or egotism, limits the individual through the medium of self-satisfaction.

The Handicap of Tradition

By J. E. Vanderwood

In most recent years I have come to discover more fully what the Master teacher intended to convey unto the people when he said of the Pharisees of his day: "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, . . . full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own traditions. . . . Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition . . ." (Mark 7: 7-13.)

Practically every person congratulates himself that he is free from the evil effects of tradition, but he is able to see many traditional weaknesses in his fellow men. Then, too, practically every organization holds a similar view, and each insists that the traditions of the other are serious and dangerous things. The Jewish people to whom Jesus addressed himself in the foregoing Scriptures were certain of their position because they had been strictly indoctrinated in it from their childhood. They were certain that their position was right, and that he who did not see as they saw, and who did not understand as they understood, must either be basely ignorant or basely wicked. Strange as it may seem these Pharisees were not greatly different from the average run of people.

I wish to speak here carefully, for I know that it is easy for people to resent things, and that it is somewhat difficult for us to thoroughly and impartially examine ourselves. If, however, we are to arrive at truth we must learn to do this very thing. We must even do more, for it becomes necessary for us to examine our groundwork carefully; that is to say the basis from which we reason, and discover if we reason from the basis of truth, or if it is from the basis of our traditions only. It becomes so easy to color everything by the customs of the time in which we live, and to say as is so often said, everybody does it this way. The thing that should concern us is, what is right in this matter? Is this course in keeping with truth? Am I possessed of understanding? Am I pursuing the proper course? or am I simply following the lines of least resistance? Is the thing I am doing what Christ would have me do, or is it a matter of mere traditional procedure? If we gave a little more thought here, many would come to realize what at the present time is entirely unknown unto them, and they would enjoy light and wisdom more abundantly.

I do not want to be misunderstood here, or misinterpreted, for the tradition that is in absolute accord with truth is a wonderfully wholesome thing; but the tradition that has grown up in the habits and choices of men without regard to truth is, to say the least, detrimental to the best interests of the human race. Almost daily we hear people say, "Other people don't do it that way," and like Israel of old, we want to be like our neighbors, and instead of setting a pace for them, and demonstrating to those around us what the gospel of Christ will do for those who live in keeping with its requirements, we seek to cater to, and ape after, the traditions of men and women about us. In place of being leaders we become followers of the traditions of men, and in this way we weaken our powers and possibilities of leadership.

He who would become a leader of men must first learn to be a follower of Christ; he must become a possessor of truth; he must be able to speak with authority. And only he who has come to be the personification of truth, and is relieved of all imperfect and false tradition becomes qualified to speak with authority. It is well here to observe that authority is not to be obtained by caprice, nor yet by ceremony or incantation; it comes as a result of the possession of truth. And truth does not consist in discussions and arguments about God and religion, for these things may be only the traditions of men; but the man whose life is made to conform with truth, and who is committed in word and deed to that which is the basic law and principle of all things, will be able to speak with authority. It is therefore well to observe that the man who corresponds most fully or completely with the eternal laws of God will be he who is able to speak with authority.

In the message of truth delivered to the Latter Day Prophet we have this word of instruction: "And that wicked one cometh and taketh away light and truth, through disobedience, from the children of men, and because of the tradition of their fathers." (Doctrine and Covenants, 90: 6.) Here we have two elements that are worthy of our careful thought and consideration. One is, that light and truth are taken away from men through disobedience and the other is that it is taken away from them through tradition. It may surprise us to discover how much we have deprived ourselves of in the way of light and truth because we have permitted

A Voice From the Land of Promise

LOUISA had wanted to take the children back to Monroe and spend Christmas with the home folks, but this was financially impossible. Installments were becoming a sordid nightmare. She could think of so many things she wanted, that the family really needed, and it was necessary to put every cent they could spare into the payment of these debts. She would think seriously before again burdening her family in such a manner.

They received two great boxes from Monroe, however; and it was almost like a visit home to open them and find lovely home-made candies, fruit-cakes and other things from Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Eldon.

There were toys, too. Dolls and tiny dishes; dainty feminine toys for Dorothy Jane. Rattles and balls and baby toys for Danny John. He was quite a little man now. He was learning to stand alone. He talked incessantly during his waking moments although no one could interpret the things he said. He made more noise and confusion than a half dozen little girls like Dorothy Jane could have made. Most of his more fragile presents were broken on Christmas Day and the rest wore a forlorn aspect.

Louisa had prepared a good Christmas dinner and they had invited the Bensons to share it with them. Dan had taken a great interest in Richard Benson; and Louisa felt more pity for his wife with each new contact she had with her. She almost forgot her own troubles, and even the black box, in trying to coax this other woman from her load of dismal gloom. She was putting the finishing touches on the dinner table when Mrs. Benson said with a half-smile: "Dick never got me a thing for Christmas. Of course, he always gives me the check and lets me do the buying, but if he'd only realize it, I'd have been tickled almost to death if he had kept out a little bit of it and bought me something. That sounds silly, I know, but it would show me he was thinking of me, anyway."

"I know just how you feel," said Louisa, "I've felt the same way myself sometimes. I have a practical person for a husband, too—he never remembers my birthday, nor anything. But my reason tells me he's a great deal better than men I've known who were always doing despicable things and then bringing their wives presents to salve their consciences.

I have a real man—and a gentleman—for a husband anyway—and so have you."

Mrs. Benson sighed. "I don't know what is wrong with me. But it seems I have always been restless and dissatisfied. If we had some children—something to work for—I might feel differently. But Dick doesn't think we can afford them. You see—we had one—a little boy—but he grew sick; there was a terrible hospital bill and even after we'd done all we could for him, the little fellow died. So, even though Dick makes quite a lot of money, he doesn't want any more children. You must be perfectly happy with your two dear little ones. You seem to have everything—"

Louisa set the dish she was carrying down on the table and faced her guest. "Oh, I don't know," she said. "I get considerable satisfaction out of life, but I can't say I'm always happy by any means. If I'm not a little bit unhappy on my own account, then I'm unhappy because somebody else is." She laughed. "I am just beginning to wonder if we are not all unhappy, we mortals, just by nature, and we have a tendency to lay the blame somewhere, and so we say: 'If I only had such and such a thing, I should be happy.' Then when, and if, we get what we thought we wanted, we see something else to wish for."

"I suppose that's true. But all the same, it seems sometimes that things aren't evened up fairly in the world. Some people seem to have almost everything while others have nothing. Everything seems unfair."

DINNER, or supper, as Dan persisted in calling it, aided and abetted by Richard Benson, passed off in rather moody silence in spite of the efforts of the men to be cheerful, and in spite of Louisa's attempts to dispel the cloud of gloom that seemed to surround the feminine guest. Dorothy Jane and Danny John were the center of attraction, and enjoyed themselves immensely.

When they were all again in the living room, Dan brought out a little portable phonograph with some tiny children's records—a gift to Dorothy Jane. There were little nursery rhymes, short fairy tales, cunning little songs. But Dorothy Jane asked for one over and over again. "Daddy, play Tom Thumb," she would repeat, and then she would sit, her large brown eyes wide, her forehead puckered in a little frown as she tried to follow the story.

"That'll be all we can play tonight," said Louisa, "It's bedtime for my children."

"And besides," added Dan, cheerfully, "their daddy wants to get something special on the radio tonight."

"Come, Dorothy Jane," said Louisa. The child did not move. She turned her wide-eyed gaze on her father.

"Daddy, listen. Scratching encounters—what's that?"

Dan laughed. "What's she talking about, Louisa?"

Louisa frowned. "I think I know. You know, it says there in that story of Tom Thumb, in telling of Tom's fight with the cat: 'Poor Tom was so badly scratched in the encounter—'"

Mr. Benson laughed boisterously. "So you want to know what a scratching encounter is, young miss! Well, it's when a husband and wife get real mad at each other, ha, ha, ha!"

Everyone laughed but Mrs. Benson. She did not smile.

Dan was attempting to get something over the radio.

"Our church is putting on some special music tonight," he explained. "I wanted to hear part of it anyway. Do you care for sacred music?"

"I certainly do," replied Mr. Benson. "Practically the only kind I do like. And I'm interested in the books I'm reading about your church. I believe I've found the truth at last—with your help."

Dan turned from the radio, his face shining with a new light. What was it the Book of Mormon said? If you could bring even one soul to the knowledge of the truth, how great would be your joy? His old hunger to work for the church—just any kind of work so long as it would really count for the church—returned with great force. And with it came, too, in greater measure than ever before that old irritation against his wife. She was being unreasonably stubborn, it seemed to him, when she refused to listen to sound doctrine.

There was too much interference to get much good from the program over the church station; but toward the last the local radio station signed off, and it came in well. A sweet, peaceful influence seemed to steal into the room with the beautiful music. It seemed to grow stronger and then, after the last notes had died away, the announcer said:

"You have just heard portions of the great oratorio, The Messiah," and then, "This has come to you through the courtesy of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints . . . located in Missouri, the Land of Promise."

It always thrilled Dan to hear that announcement over the radio. To think that countless hundreds of persons were hearing about a "Land of Promise" for the first time. Their curiosity might lead them to investigate the meaning of it, and a new star of hope and joy be born in their hearts. Something of Dan's feeling transmitted itself to the others in the room. For a moment Louisa almost wished she had been baptized when she had wanted to be, so long ago.

Mr. Benson said: "You've surely got something to be proud of. I wonder—would it be possible for me to be baptized? I haven't been able to quit smoking yet—and I have a great number of faults; but it seems that I have such a great desire to enter the right church—"

"I think if one honestly repents, and has a desire to make his life better, he owes it to himself to join the church and put himself in position, by his obedience, to receive the Holy Spirit, which will impress his mind and help him to overcome and do what is right. There aren't any of the priesthood near here, but I can find out where the nearest branch is—"

"I'd be grateful if you would." He paused a moment, then continued, huskily: "I'd like to work for your Zion. The whole philosophy of your church seems so consistent. The constitution of the United States talks about men being created free and equal. We have lots of freedom, but your church is the first organization I've come across that put stress on equality. A child born into the Weston Moore home, for instance, is by no means given an equal start with a child on the other side of the railroad track.

"I know. I was born in poverty. I did well in my school work, in spite of the fact that we seldom had enough to eat, and I know now that we almost never had the right kind of food for growing children. I had a rather abnormal craving for knowledge, I guess. But my father died when I was twelve, and I had to go to work. No high school or college for me. Did I have an equal opportunity with Weston Moore, who was born in a home of wealth and culture?"

"I married a society girl—that's the only reason any of them speak to me now—the Weston Moores, and such, I mean."

"Oh, Dick," remonstrated his wife, "They recognize that you are a more than average man, too. You really make a lot of money—"

Mr. Benson snorted. "Money? Yeah, that's the standard everybody goes by. Money is a sort of god. If you've got money you can get by with any kind of character, and be accepted.

"And what will money buy you, after you get it? A few luxuries; some warm-weather friends who would never speak to you if you lose out financially; card parties and dancing, and things—inanimate things."

"Why, Dick, I didn't know you ever thought about such things!" His wife was wide-eyed with astonishment.

"Didn't know your old man had it in him, did you Emily? Well, I may surprise you more before I pass out of this world. Give me something to work for, that's everlasting, like this gospel, and I may be able to blossom out with a lot of new strength and ambition, until you'll wonder just what you've married anyway."

His voice sobered. "Honestly, Dan, I feel I could die for a cause like your church."

"Don't say your church—say our church," said Dan. "I feel you are one of us already."

Louisa thought: "How happy Dan looks! And how true the things are that Richard Benson says! We're all just chasing around after will-o'-the-wisps, somehow. When anyone talks as they have tonight, the gospel seems the only real thing on earth. I wonder. Perhaps I haven't understood things—No, I might as well admit it, I haven't tried very hard to understand. I believe I'll ask Dan to explain some of those things to me that trouble me, and if he can make it sound reasonable and right, I believe I will join the church and give my life to it."

SHE FELT supremely happy over her resolution. The church was probably true. She could scarcely wait until their guests had departed, now that she had resolved upon this thing; but they finally were bidding them good-bye and the door was closing upon them.

"How happy Louisa looks," irritably, thought Dan, "She is so contented with earthly things—I might just as well give up hoping she'll ever join the church. She has intelligence and she has heard the gospel story so many times—there is no excuse for her acting the way she does."

He stood by the dresser removing his collar and tie. Louisa watched his reflection in the mirror. "He looks sort of glum," she thought, "But I imagine he'll change that look when I tell him what I've been thinking about."

Smiling to herself she crept up behind him and slipped her arms about his neck. He shook her off impatiently, and his face in the mirror looked angry. Louisa stepped back, surprised. Dan had been cross with her before, but never like this. He had always shown a gentleness, of a sort, along with his moroseness, but there seemed nothing gentle about him now.

"I—I just wanted—"

"A man can't be kissing his wife all the time!" interrupted Dan, fiercely, flinging his stiff collar down on the dresser top with a bang. He turned as if to leave the room.

"As it happens, it wasn't a kiss I wanted this time," Louisa kept her voice steady with a great effort. "I just—had something I wanted to say to you that I thought you'd like—"

"Well, hurry up and say it then!

Women do get on one's nerves sometimes. Always—"

A scream from Dorothy Jane. Louisa seized upon it as an excuse to get away from Dan. Also she couldn't repress the fear that clutched her own heart whenever she heard that cry of the child's in the night. She leaned over the bed anxiously.

"What is it, Dorothy Jane? Tell mother."

"Oh, mama. Doity Jane's afraid!"

"What are you afraid of, dear? There's nothing to be afraid of!"

"Doity Jane's afraid of—of scratching encounters, mama. Oh, she's afraid scratching encounters will get her—"

Louisa repressed a wild desire to laugh, but lulled her to sleep again with a frantic wish to get the light out, to let Dan go to sleep.

"Always fussing over the youngsters and thinking about their physical welfare," fumed Dan; "what that child needs is a little less psychology and a little bit of spanking. She's found out that the way to become the center of attraction is to scream about being frightened—"

"A desire to be—to be—the center of attraction," said Louisa, unsteadily, "might account for it if it were daytime, but that would hardly waken her up at night."

"Have it your own way."

Louisa said nothing. She made up her mind not to quarrel with him. She would not waste her energy that way. She would just hate him. She was glad she had found him out, discovered just what he was before she joined the church. No religion for her now. Not Latter Day Saint religion; not while it harbored such a hypocrite! He had never been honest. That black box, for instance. If there had been someone else in his life that he couldn't forget, he should have told her before he asked her to marry him. He just wasn't honest, that was all. He was selfish. He was—

"If you'd think a little of their spiritual welfare, it would be better for them. The way you're doing they'll grow up just like little heathens. Why don't you teach them something that will—"

"You forget Dan," Louisa broke in with a voice unusually calm and penetrating, "I am not the Christian of the household. I suggest that you get busy and teach them prayer, and ways of Christian living, and all that. After all, they're your children as well as mine."

Dan staggered to the bed and sat down weakly. What had he been saying? He shouldn't talk that way.

"I know I'm terribly cross and irritable," he heard himself say in a queer voice, "but you'd be irritable, too, if you had all my worries."

"You might tell me, Dan." Louisa crept under the blankets and turned her face to the wall.

"Well, for instance—the big debt

THE LIFE AND TEACHINGS OF JESUS, THE CHRIST

By Apostle F. Henry Edwards

We never tire of the old, old story. We can never exhaust the message and meaning of the Master of Nazareth. We delight to re-live the experiences had by the disciples as they walked with him in Judea and Galilee. We know the Savior only as we come to have this close fellowship with him and he becomes a vital part of our very lives.

Church school classes on Sunday morning, Sunday evening, or on week occasions will enjoy this stimulating study. The treatment is at once interesting, enlightening, and inspiring. Brother Edwards is both a deep student of the Scriptures and a master of beautiful and effective English. His year of lessons is written from a life of devoted study and service in the ministry of the church. Each of the quarters of the course may be chosen as a unit, but the four quarters make a splendid study for an entire year.

The quarters' titles are as follows:

Volume 2, number 1, "The Man, Christ Jesus."

Volume 2, number 2, "Jesus and the Kingdom of God."

Volume 2, number 3, "The Beliefs of the Master."

Volume 2, number 4, "Characteristics of Jesus' Ministry."

This series was printed in 1927-8, a few hundred copies are still available. Order from the Herald Publishing House.

One to three copies, twenty-five cents each; four quarterlies ninety cents.

In quantities of four or more fifteen cents each, four quarters fifty cents.

There are some people whose smile, the sound of whose voice, whose very presence, seems like a ray of sunshine, to turn everything they touch into gold.—Lord Avebury.

It is work which gives flavor to life. Mere existence without object and without effort is a poor thing. Idleness leads to languor, and languor to disgust.—Amiel.

Junior Stewardship Songs

By C. B. W.

Some months ago "Junior Stewardship" was adopted by the leaders of the children's division as a churchwide project for young members of the church. The keeping of a stewardship record by boys and girls under the guidance of an adult sponsor provides a most happy occasion for education and training in industry, thrift, economy, record keeping, and full compliance with the financial law of the church.

In scores of branches in all the church record books have been supplied and sponsors have been provided for junior stewardship clubs. In recent Heralds a series of articles by Mrs. Fern Weedmark attention has been called to the purpose and plan of this movement. Under her suggestion many junior stewardship clubs have sent in a copy of their club song and motto. These have been submitted to competent judges and several of the best are selected for publication. These will appear in Stepping Stones.

The following is a good illustration of the stewardship idea expressed in verse and set to music. It is sent in by junior stewards in Spokane, Washington.

LOYAL STEWARDS

(Tune: "Earnest Workers")

1. Loyal stewards of Thy kingdom
We will be, though some are small;
And as Jesus bids His people,
We will consecrate our all.

Chorus:

Faithful stewards—consecrated
To Thy service let us be;
May we work as Jesus bids us,
Till his blessed face we see.

2. With our talents we will serve thee,
Of our time and treasures give;
Working ever for Thy glory,
Faithfully we want to live.

3. Let us help to build up Zion;
Tithes and offerings let us bring;
And with joyous, glad endeavor
Let us praise our heavenly King.

Among the best slogans submitted is the following: "As Junior Stewards we are about our Father's business." By Topeka, Kansas, junior stewardship club.

Worship Suggestions for November, 1934

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "FRIENDS OF THE KINGDOM."

NOVEMBER 4

Theme: "Be Free in the Truth"

Instrumental Prelude: "Behold, the Savior at your door," S. H., 328; O. S. H., 152.

Call to Worship: Moroni 10: 29, 30.

(S) Hymn: "The Lord Jehovah Reigns," S. H., 120; O. S. H., 142.

Prayer.

Scripture Reading: John 8: 28-36.

(S) Hymn: "Oh, happy is the man who hears," S. H., 94; O. S. H., 107, verses 1 and 2.

Talk: Ignorance is an enemy to the kingdom of God. No man can assist in the building of the kingdom unless he knows how the work must be done. It is necessary that we have a will to work; it is also essential that we have the disposition to learn how that work should be done. Many well-intentioned people have hindered a good cause by not tying down their good intentions to an intelligent understanding of the way things should be done. As one local philosopher has remarked, "It is all in the knowing how." The way of the truth is as important as the word of truth.

Much grief can be saved us if we will give ourselves to a discovery and understanding of the truth. Such a giving means to love the truth. This will save us from any necessity of relearning. It will make us free from the bondage of ignorance. God's will—the truth—can only be brought to pass in his way. Truth is a friend of the kingdom.

(S) Hymn: "Oh, happy is the man who hears," verses 3, 4, and 5.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 83: 7. "Now I give unto you a commandment to beware concerning yourselves, to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life; for you shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God. For the word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is Spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ; and the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit; and everyone that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit, cometh unto God."

(S) Congregational Response: Galatians 5: 1. We will "stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and not be entangled again with the yoke of bondage."

(S) Benediction.

NOVEMBER 11

Theme: "Be of a Ready Mind."

Instrumental Prelude: "Gracious Spirit, dwell with me," S. H., 192.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 63: 1; 64: 7. "Hearken, O ye people, and open your hearts, and give ear from afar; and listen, you that call yourselves the people of the Lord, and hear the word of the Lord, and his will concerning you; yea, verily, I say, Hear the word of him whose anger is kindled against the wicked and rebellious; who willet to take even them whom he will take, and preserveth in life them whom he will preserve; who buildeth up at his own will and pleasure; and destroyeth when he pleases, and is able to cast the soul down to hell." "Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days."

(S) Hymn Response: "Hark! the voice of Jesus calling," S. H., 344.

(S) Prayer.

Period of Meditation: Leader reads one verse of the hymn of Admonition, then gives a minute for meditation. Each verse is then read in the same way.

(S) Lord's Prayer.

NOVEMBER 18

Theme: "Abide in My Law."

Instrumental Prelude: "Heaven and earth, and sea, and air," S. H., 118.

Call to Worship: Malachi 3: 6; Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5. "I am the Lord, I change not"; "Wherefore, hear my voice and follow me, and you shall be a free people, and ye shall have no laws but my laws, when I come, for I am your lawgiver, and what can stay my hand?"

Response: Psalm 1: 1, 2. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night."

(S) Hymn: "Come, Thou Almighty King," S. H., 28; O. S. H., 54.

(S) Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 76: 1, 2.

Hymn: (Sing words with tune of "How gentle God's command!") S. H., 248; O. S. H., 81.)

God, who is just and kind,
Will those who err instruct,
And in the paths of righteousness
Their wandering steps conduct.

Scripture Reading: James 1: 22-25.

Hymn:

The humble soul he guides;
Teaches the meek his way,
Kindness and truth he shows to all
Who his just laws obey.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8-10.

(S) Hymn:

Give me the tender heart
That mingles fear with love;
And guide me through whatever path
Thy wisdom doth approve.

Oh, ever keep my soul
From error, shame, and guilt;
Nor suffer the fair hope to fail,
Which on my truth is built.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 24, "Abide ye in the liberty wherewith ye are made free; entangle not yourselves in sin, but let your hands be clean, until the Lord come."

(S) Benediction: "Now the God of peace, who brought again from the dead, the great Shepherd of the sheep, with the blood of an eternal covenant, even our Lord Jesus, make you perfect in every good thing to do his will, working in us that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be the glory forever and ever. Amen."

NOVEMBER 25.

Theme: "Be Not Discouraged."

Instrumental Prelude: "Never be discouraged," S. H., 236; O. S. H., 96.

Call to Worship: 3 Nephi 7: 10. "Behold, I am the law, and the light; look unto me, and endure to the end, and ye shall live, for unto him that endureth to the end will I give eternal life."

Response: John 1: 29: "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world!"

(S) Hymn: "My faith looks up to Thee," S. H., 281; O. H. S., 12.

(S) Group repeat the Lord's Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Numbers 21: 4-9; John 3: 14.

(S) Hymn: "Father when in love to Thee," S. H., 151; O. H. S., 135.

Talk: One of the subtle manifestations of the power of evil is the tendency to disparage ourselves. There is a difference between true humility and self-disparagement. A man who is truly humble will recognize the work of God in his life and rejoice, but he who constantly discredits all he does ends up by doing nothing.

Certainly we should emulate no one but Christ. Anyone who has the Spirit of Christ will be utterly self-forgetful in service to others. He will not be careless of himself. The discouragement that comes from self-disparagement is usually born of envy of what others do, and is a subtle form of egotism.

Why should kingdom builders be discouraged? The work is sure; the end certain. How can they be discouraged in the face of this great truth. "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." Ungodly people are worth dying for.

(S) Hymn: "Soldiers of Christ arise," S. H., 217; O. S. H., 60.

(S) Benediction.

Hymn: "God Is Love," S. H., 130. (This may be sung to the tune of S. H., 127.)

Sermon Talk: Text: John 3: 16, or 1 John 4: 16, 19. God is the creator (maker) of the world and all things in it. He is the ruler over all things. When we stop to think how wonderful and powerful God is, we wonder (like David did) why God should care for us. (Psalm 8: 4.) God is our loving Father and he cares for us. (1 Peter 5: 7.) In return for his kindness to us, we should obey his commandments and love him. Mention some of the ways in which we may show we love our heavenly Father, such as being kind to each other; obeying the gospel; attending church and while there being reverent; praying to him; paying our tithing and making offerings to help his work on earth; having faith in him; remembering to be grateful to him for his many blessings to us, and other ways.

Stories: "How God cared for the people of Israel in the wilderness," (Exodus, chapters 15, 16 and 17) and "How God cared for Lehi and his people in the wilderness," (Book of Mormon, pages 49-51) told by junior boys.

Hymn: "God will Take Care of You," S. H., 231, by entire group or junior choir.

Story: "How God cared for Daniel," (Daniel, chapter 6), or "How God cared for another Daniel," ("With the Church in an Early Day," chapter 1), or "How God cared for his people at Fishing River," (Church History, volume 1, pages 462-466.)

Closing Hymn: "Praise Ye the Lord," S. H., 27, Z. P. 87. Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 18.

Theme: "Showing Our Thankfulness by Sharing With Others."

Prelude: "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," S. H., 428.

Call to Worship: "I will give thanks unto thee, O Lord, . . . and I will sing praises unto thy name." (2 Samuel 22: 50.)

Hymn: "O Jesus, Our Lord," S. H., 92, or "Giving Thanks," Z. P., 53.

Prayer: By a junior boy or the group in unison.

Scripture: Psalm 41: 1, Proverbs 28: 27, Luke 3: 11.

Hymn: "Sing of His Mighty Love," S. H., 123; Z. P., 110.

Sermon Talk: Text: Psalm 92: 1. When we are thankful to God for his blessings, we should pray to him and tell him so. Also, we should tell others about our thankfulness. There is another way we may show our thankfulness, and that is by sharing with others. Paul was so thankful to God for telling him about the gospel, that he (Paul) gave his life to the work of the gospel, telling other people about it, so they would have an opportunity to obey as he had. When people heard Paul's preaching and obeyed the gospel, Paul was very thankful (Ephesians 1: 16, Colossians 1: 3), and we think he must have wanted to work harder than ever, telling others about it. There are other things we may share, such as food and clothing. If we have plenty to eat and wear, we should show our thankfulness by sharing with others who may not have enough. Paul tells us that Jesus said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." (Acts 20: 35.) (If the boys and girls have planned or are planning a Thanksgiving project, it may be referred to here. They may wish to make it a part of next Sunday's service.)

Story: "A Boy Who Shared His Lunch," (Matthew 14: 13-23, Mark 6: 30-46, Luke 9: 10-17, John 6: 1-15. John 6: 9 tells about the boy who gave his lunch), or "A Woman Who Shared Her Home," (2 Kings 4: 8-37), or "A Man Who Shared With a Man of God," (Book of Mormon, pages 326-329, Alma 6: 1-35.)

Story: "Aunt Betsy's Garden," Stepping Stones, November 27, 1932, or "Not What We Give, But What We Share," page 132, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw; also in quarterly, "The Junior and His Bible," by Myrtle Weber, April, May, June, 1931, page 15.

Said old Gentleman Gay, "On a Thanksgiving Day
If you want to be happy, give something away."
So he gave a fat turkey to Shoemaker Price,
And the shoemaker said, "What a fine bird! How nice!
I'll give Widow Lee the fine chicken I bought."
Said the pleased Widow Lee, "See this chicken! Oh my!
I would like to make someone as happy as I.
I'll give Washwoman Biddy my big pumpkin pie."
"Oh sure," Biddy said, "It's the queen of all pies.
Just to look at its yellow face gladdens my eyes.
Now it's my turn, I think, and a sweet ginger cake
For the Finnegan children I will make."
Said the Finnegan children—Rose, Benny and Hugh—
"It smells sweet of spice, and we'll carry a slice To little lame Jake who has nothing that's nice."
"Oh, I thank you and thank you," said little lame Jake,
"What a beautiful, beautiful, beautiful cake,
And oh, such a big slice. I will save all the crumbs
And give some to each little sparrow that comes."

And the sparrows they twittered as if they would say,
Like old Gentleman Gay, "On a Thanksgiving Day
If you want to be happy, give something away."

Closing Hymn: "We'll Scatter Good Seed," S. H., 220; Z. P., 115.

Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 25.

Theme: "In Every Thing Give Thanks."

Prelude: "Come, Ye, Thankful People, Come," S. H., 428.

Call to Worship: "O come, let us sing unto the Lord; . . .

Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, . . ."
(Psalm 95: 1, 2.)

Hymn: "Come, Ye Thankful People Come," S. H., 428.

Prayer: A prayer of thanksgiving, by juniors.

Scripture: Psalm 100, by juniors. (Memorized.)

Hymn: "We Plow the Fields and Scatter," S. H., 429, or "Giving Thanks," Z. P., 53.

(If the children have brought a Thanksgiving offering, either money or food, their offerings may be presented at this time. The music of one of the hymns suggested above may be played softly on the piano (with violin or other instrument) while the children take their gifts to the front of the room, after which a short prayer may be offered.)

Sermon Talk: See sermonette, "Thanksgiving," Stepping Stones, November 20, 1932. Paul said, "In everything give thanks." (1 Thessalonians 5: 18.) It would be a good thing for us to take the time to think of the things we have to be thankful for. Let us think of a few of them now. Mention the gospel, parents, home, friends, food, clothing and other things. A person will be much happier if they will think of their blessings and be thankful for them, than if they spend their time thinking about things they wish they had.

Picture Appreciation: "The Angelus." Material for this appreciation may be obtained from the public library; also primary quarterly, "Learning to Live as God's Children," by Mildred Goodfellow, page 41, October, November, December, 1934. After the story is told, the music of S. H. 429 may be played softly while the children study the picture. (A copy of this picture, size 19 x 25, in sepia, may be purchased from George P. Brown & Company, Beverly, Massachusetts, for 30c.)

Hymn: "What Is Your Song?" Z. P., 121. (Substitute the word "Thank" for "Trust," "Praise" and "Love.")

Story: "Thanksgiving With a New Meaning," or "Prunes or Turkey," both found in Stepping Stones, November 26, 1933, or "Wild Turkey," Stepping Stones, November 20, 1932, or "A Thanksgiving in Book of Mormon Times." (Book of Mormon, pages 256, 258, 262, 273, 275, 279.)

Alma, a young Nephite leader, had been preaching God's word by the waters of Mormon. He had to do this in secret, because King Noah, the Lamanite ruler, was a harsh, wicked man, who did not want the people to hear about God. Many of the Nephites, who were in bondage to the Lamanites, went to the secret place and listened to Alma preach. Sitting there in the quiet woods, beside the clear waters of Mormon, the people heard the gospel preached by this earnest young man. They believed his message and more than two hundred were baptized. This little band of people became Christ's church.

Alma and his people were happy for a short time only, for one day King Noah's spies found their hiding place. Alma and his people took their families, their flocks and tents, and fled into the wilderness. For eight days they traveled, and then one day they reached a very beautiful and pleasant land, with streams of clear water. They were very thankful to God for leading them to this lovely place.

Later these people were again discovered by the Lamanite soldiers and taken captive. The Lamanites were very cruel to Alma and his people, not even allowing them to pray. These faithful people did pray, however, in their hearts, and God answered them with a message that he would give them strength and would speak to them again. They bore their trials patiently until one day God spoke to them again. This time he told them to prepare to leave, for he would deliver them on the morrow.

That night God caused a deep sleep to come upon the Lamanites. The little band of God's people stole quietly away and traveled all the next day. In the evening they pitched their tents and joined together in a time of thanksgiving. Now they could pray! They all knelt together—men, women and little children. Even the children had suffered so much that they understood what it meant to be truly thankful for God's care over them.

Then the Lord spoke to them and told them they should go on, for the Lamanites would come and try to take them back. The people did as God told them to, and after twelve days more, they reached the land of Zarahemla, where King Mosiah and his people received Alma and his people with great joy. King Mosiah called all the people together to tell them how God had helped his people. The people were so happy when they heard how God had watched over Alma and his people and brought them safely to the land of Zarahemla that "they did raise their voices, and give thanks to God" for his kindness.

Closing Hymn: "Praise Him, Praise Him," S. H., 10, or "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," S. H., 14.

Benediction.

Things That Are Wrong

We can get used to anything. We start out with our wagon hitched to a star; we end up satisfied with a six-cylinder, sport-model car—and we never get off the earth! We start out sensitive to man's inhumanity to man, keenly aware of society's injustices, resolved to play our part in making these things what they should be. But the world plays tricks on us. It poisons our minds with a score of disillusioning proverbs, which we come to believe: "You can't change human nature"; "The poor you have with you always"; "Every man has his price." The world has a discouraging way of treating idealists. Woe to him who tries to budge the status quo. William Lloyd Garrison is dragged through the streets of Boston, "Pussyfoot" Johnson blinded in one eye by a London mob, Abraham Lincoln murdered by an assassin, and Jesus Christ is nailed to a cross. It is easier to get used to things as they are—and safer, too!

Certainly that man must be spiritually calloused who is insensitive to the wrongs of our world that cry out for righting. I am thinking of war with its ghastly and silly destruction of life. I am thinking of liquor with its trail of miseries and woe; I am thinking of child labor with its stunted lives; I am thinking of the race problem which has soiled the fair escutcheon of our country; I am thinking of unemployment with its untold millions in want and despair; I am thinking of the distribution of wealth with its glaring injustices. These and a dozen other wrongs are the high places of our social life, but we are afraid of them. . . . Our peril is spiritual aerophobia, old-age-of-the-soul.—Frank B. Fagerburg, in The Sin of Being Ordinary.

Kant said that the two things that filled him with awe were "the moral law within and the starry heavens above."—E. Stanley Jones in Christ of Every Road.

No one in this world of ours ever became great by echoing the voice of another, repeating what that other has said.—J. C. Van Dyke.

FORGIVE US OUR SINS

spiritual diseases. Almost always the victim is entirely unaware of his malady, so that the humble man may be, unwittingly, over-proud of his humility, and the righteous man may be, unconsciously, a self-righteous Pharisee. It has no respect for rank or age; the old man in his piety, his pride of experience, his self-assurance, is as apt to be an offender as the untried youth. No matter what heights of development we fancy ourselves to have attained, we can never afford to think the victory won, for vanity caused the fall of Lucifer, son of morning, and it has caused the fall of many a good man since. Like other bad qualities, egotism is really a sign of lack of development and should serve to remind every man of his human frailty. It is to be found most frequently in people who are too little for their job, so that we, as little people with a big job, are particularly subject to it. Its antidote is the fulfillment of the first two commandments. Self must be forgotten through devotion and consecration of purpose, losing life to find it.

Thus many times we tremblingly avoid the appearance of evil only to fall headlong into the evil itself. The fear of sinning has served often as a chain of bondage, restricting our progress; but the real sin is the lack of progress and development that such tyrannous superstition encourages. Development and perfection are the true aims of life and we shall never attain them through the mediums of suppression and inhibition. They demand the full development of all our powers, leaving no time or room for anything but that which has its source and end in good.

THE HANDICAP OF TRADITION

the traditions that have been handed down to us to govern our thinking; and in this way, we have often neglected the most important requirements of the message of the restoration. For example I have heard many theories and ideas expressed by people, and many arguments indulged in by them, with regard to the choices that were made by people in the spirit world, before coming here. These are some of the traditions that have captivated certain people, for the word of God through the Latter Day Prophet plainly states: "The Lord said unto Enoch, Behold these your brethren; they are the workmanship of my own hands, and I gave unto them their knowledge, in the day I created them; and in the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency." (Doctrine and Covenants 36:7.) If the agency of man was given to him in the garden of Eden, then it goes without saying that he did not use it in the spirit world as the traditions of some of our father have told us. That which I would impress here is that it is much wiser for us to acquaint ourselves with the content of the books of the church than it is for us to run off on a tangent somewhere, and spend our energy in trying to support that which simply has the weight of tradition.

It is indeed a peculiar thing that many people will cling tenaciously to their traditions, and will be very loath to accept the plain and unadulterated truth contained in the word of God. Just why we humans are so constituted I know not unless it is as the word herein before quoted states, that the evil one has taken advantage of us because of tradition and that he has insisted that our tradition should be adhered to regardless of what the law may teach, or the truth may require of us. Of one thing however I am quite certain, and that is that the man who is seeking only truth is never intolerant or impatient; he is willing to abide the time when men are willing to hear, and therefore he never uses undue or harsh methods of reasoning, and he never degenerates the truth that he has discovered into mere argument. On the contrary he holds his peace until such time as will enable him to find his fellows in a suitable mood to receive, and then very dispassionately he will impart to those who will hear, his message of truth.

The man of wisdom knows that argument proves nothing, and that if he would help his fellows to come into possession of truth he must be able to touch their better natures and win them to a state of deliberate and careful thinking. He who says, I have won an argument, has perhaps lost much in the way of truth, of respect, and of power. But he who has maintained himself and who has, in his attitudes revealed Christ, has gained much. As men are able to rise above, and come out of, the traditions that are imperfect and faulty, and bend all their energies in the quest of truth, they will become men whose lives will prove a benediction to mankind, and whose memories will live through the ages. To this end, we should ever apply ourselves to a consistent and careful study of the law of God, with the view of learning the truth, rather than being able to bolster up or support our most cherished traditions. Nothing but truth can make us free, therefore it is well to remember the words of the Master: "What doth it profit a man though he gain the whole world and lose his own soul." In the measure that error has influenced and shaped our lives to that degree have we become losers. May we not therefore awaken to our privileges and come into a realization of the truth.

Don't stay away because the church is not perfect; how lonesome you would feel in a perfect church.

THE NOMADS

you've piled up for me to pay. It'll take all next year's salary just to pay off what we owe. It will—"

His voice continued, but Louisa was not listening. "The big debt you've piled up." Well, they had to have some furniture, didn't they? What did he expect? After this he could do the buying. She wouldn't ask him for a thing, not so much as a pair of shoes. She'd let him order the groceries even, if he'd take the trouble. No—she'd continue ordering, but she'd cut expenses to a minimum. After all, he had used her two thousand dollars in obtaining his education. Why did he have to be so grouchy? She realized that Dan had stopped talking. She tried to breath normally, and shut her eyes, feigning sleep. He raised up on one elbow.

"Did you hear what I said, Louisa? I said I was sorry I had talked so terribly, but that I am all worn out and so tired."

She did not answer. He reached over and touched her cheek. It was hot, and he drew his hand away quickly as though it had been burned. He would have given anything if he could have unsaid those bitter words. Tomorrow—no, all the rest of his life, he must guard against this unreasonable irritation that seemed to well up unbidden against her whenever he had occasion to regret his thwarted ambitions. He must be especially kind to her; he must make up for his unchristian conduct. "You are the Christian of the household," she had said. Christian. A fine Christian he was! He fought against a desire to cry; tears would do no good. He found himself praying earnestly for strength—strength to do his work well so that they would hire him for another year and he could pay all those debts that weighed upon him, depressed him. Strength to love his church and still be kind to his wife.

There was no prayer in Louisa's heart. Only plans, mad plans, for a day far in the future when Danny John would no longer need her ministrations; and Dorothy Jane would be in business for herself; then she could leave Dan. Leave him to his black box, his church, his dreams. Tomorrow he would be exceptionally kind to her, she knew. She would forgive him outwardly, but she could never forget. She could never respect or love him again.

I hate inconstancy—I loath, detest, Abhor, condemn, abjure the mortal made Of such quicksilver clay that is his breast.

No permanent foundation can be laid.

The Gospel in Ireland

By Fred O. Davies

The story of the opening of the gospel work in Erin's Isle is a long one, but nevertheless very interesting. Believing Herald readers would be glad to read of this country and how the people received the latter-day message, I take this opportunity of relating the incidents.

No doubt the missionaries of the early church visited this isle at the same time that the message was brought to England and Wales. This probably accounts for the two present-day branches of the Utah church in Belfast, and Dublin. However, as far as the Reorganization is concerned, we first hear of E. L. Kelley who some thirty years ago, accompanied by Brothers Leggott and Bryan, of Manchester, endeavored to make converts, but met with no success.

In 1933, there were certain members of another church in Belfast growing a little uncertain of some of the teachings and, having heard a little of the Reorganization, were desirous of knowing more. Three letters were posted to England, and one found its way to the branch of our church in Leeds. The pastor here is Elder T. Taylor, who many years ago was a full time missionary, but now at the age of seventy-two is carrying on in business activities. Upon reading the letters, he conferred with some of the branch members, and decided to leave for Belfast that night. It is only a day's trip, and he was able to find the writers of the letter, and obtained further information. On his return, he acquainted Brother Rushton with the facts and the two decided to pay a visit as soon as possible. Apostle Rushton, because of his work in England, could stay only a few days, but Brother Taylor carried on for six weeks preaching every night in the open. He had huge crowds that listened attentively to his wonderful message and he baptized five men. However, all was not plain sailing and we understand he had a considerable amount of opposition from all creeds, but he was able to meet all questions in such a way and manner that gained for him the admiration of the crowd. Besides having to explain the significant differences between our church and others, he had to contend with the traditions and religious fervour of the "saved." We find very strong belief in Ireland in a literal hell-fire, escape from which being only possible by the "acceptance" of Jesus Christ, his blood cleansing them from sin.

In January of this year, I accompanied Brother Taylor on his second trip, but owing to the weather we had to be content with preaching on Sunday only in a room which we rented.

Returning again in June, we carried on for another six weeks with the usual large crowds. At the end of this period we had four more for baptism, besides having made many friends, some of whom we hope will eventually join the church.

During this visit we had Brother Rushton with us for a week and the people certainly enjoyed his wonderful and eloquent talks. In order to realize what work was done that cannot be measured in terms of baptisms, I desire to mention the following tributes paid to Brothers Rushton and Taylor. These were told me personally by various people who had attended all the meetings of Brother Taylor; they said that he was the only man they knew of who had succeeded in having all creeds in one meeting and kept them in order. This is better understood when we find that no love abounds between the Protestants and the Roman Catholics, the least excuse often being used to foment trouble which usually ends in bloodshed.

Ten years ago they say we would have been thrown in the river, but the poem at the end of the article portrays the way in which the message was received.

Apostle Rushton, it was said, was the most eloquent speaker they had heard on the Custom House Steps during the last forty years and they were sorry he had to leave.

May I, at this point, also include the following remark concerning the Herald made by a man who desired to read of our literature:

"For magazines of that type it is far the best I have ever read and I am surprised at the high standard of the articles, and I have come to the conclusion that your organization must be a strong one to be able to turn out a paper of such a character."

He wanted one with an article by Brother Rushton for a souvenir of his visit.

The results of these meetings may be stated in the following terms:

1. Eight have been baptized.
2. Many friends have been made; some are very much interested.
3. The Book of Mormon has been before the people and given its correct place in connection with the Bible, resulting in the name and character of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, being cleared of the usual charges of polygamy, etc., brought against him.

4. Many men who had ridiculed Christianity due to the absurd interpretations they had previously heard, now understand it to be something that demands their "heart, soul, mind, and strength," and as a gospel of "Be ye doers of the word," and not "Sinners, sinners, nothing do; Jesus did it all for you."

6. We can better understand the statement concerning Jesus "That the common people heard him gladly," but not so the Scribes and Pharisees or religious people.

THE ELDER AT THE STEPS

An Elder came to Belfast Town
In nineteen thirty-three,
To preach the Gospel Jesus taught
With zeal and fervency.
Around the Steps the people flocked
To hear the word of God,
Some bitterly expressed dissent,
Some an approving nod.
The Pharisees and Scribes of old
Were represented there,
A well known infidel named Sam
Presided in the Chair.
Repent, Repent and be baptized,
This text was dwelt on most.
Next laying on of hands that you
Receive the Holy Ghost,
To guide you in the way of truth,
And help you understand,
The Millenium is approaching,
The Kingdom is at hand.
To do God's will upon this Earth
Use well your worldly pelf,
Show by your actions that you love,
Your neighbor as yourself.
Put this Commandment to the test
Obey by moral choice,
Soon the oppressed would cease to mourn
And mankind would rejoice.
For never yet had Elder spoke
Around those Steps before
With Message clear that rang so true
It went right to the core.
The Scribes he tackled one by one
Who tried his words to flout,
Their arguments he overcame
And put them to the rout.
Scarce one was left of all the crowd
Who dared to say him nay.
Alone he stood, for common sense
Had triumphed there that day.

—J. Ma'Cart, Belfast, October 9, 1933.

The elder was T. Taylor, of Leeds, who stood on the Steps of the Custom House, Belfast, during his missionary activities for the church.

This poem was compiled by a member of the Communist Party, who at one time was a member of the Roman Catholic church, but now has no time for any church. It is the outcome of his listening to Brother Taylor preaching the Message of the Restoration.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Shall we see and know loved ones in heaven?

The Bible does not give an express answer to this question, but implies that it will be so. Jesus states (Matthew 19: 29) that those who leave friends and relatives for the gospel's sake shall receive "an hundred fold," which evidently is not confined to this life in its application to loved ones. Paul informs us (1 Corinthians 13: 12) that in the perfect day those who now see darkly shall then see "face to face" and shall know as they are known, and that (Romans 8: 32) God shall "freely give us all things." He further declares (1 Corinthians 3: 22, 23) of things present and to come; "All are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." These "all things" must surely include loved ones who are saved.

The saved are known in Scripture as the children, family, heirs, and household of God. Of such Paul states (Ephesians 1: 10) that God shall "gather together in one all things [implied term] in Christ." This clearly means family association. But perhaps one of the most specific statements is made by David (2 Samuel 12: 23) when he says of his dead child: "I shall go to him," which doubtless refers to joining him in heavenly life, for Jesus said of children (Matthew 18: 10) that, "in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father." We are told that "eye hath not seen nor ear heard" all that is prepared for the faithful, but we may feel sure that it will include everything that gives true joy and peace.

Did Jesus appoint more than one quorum of Seventy (see Luke 10: 1)?

The text cited in the question is interpreted by some to mean that a previous "seventy" had been chosen, as it states "other seventy" were appointed. But the term so used is not a reference to a previous seventy, but to the appointment of the Twelve, referred to in the preceding chapter (9: 1). It means that after he sent forth the Twelve, he appointed and sent forth others who were seventy. The Revised Version, the Emphatic Diaglott, and other modern versions translate it: "the Lord appointed seventy others."

God said: "Thou shalt not kill." Was it sin for Nephi to kill Laban?

The statement of Nephi himself was that; "I was constrained by the Spirit that I should kill Laban." Only one of two conclusions seems reasonable, in view of this assertion: either the Spirit directed him to commit the deed, or else Nephi was deceived by his own spirit in the supposition that it was the Lord's Spirit. Some comparisons with instances recorded in the Bible may not be amiss in this matter. Notwithstanding the command not to kill, the same Scriptures command that he that smites his father shall "be put to death"; he that curseth his father or mother shall be put to death; he that steals and sells a man shall be put to death. A witch must be put to death; one who picks up sticks on the Sabbath must be put to death.

We have also the following instances: because the Amaleks "laid in wait" on the way from Egypt, the Lord commanded (1 Samuel 15: 3) them to be destroyed, men, women, infants, and cattle; because Joshua lacked time to slaughter his enemies, the Lord caused the sun and moon to "stand still" until they could be slain. After God sent fire to consume the offering of Elijah, he took all the prophets of Baal and slew them, after which he prayed for rain, and rain fell. Evidently we must conclude either that those who wrote these records were mistaken, or that God actually required certain wicked people to be slain. We are suffering today because many murderers and other criminals are given but little or no punishment. Which is better for the human race? No normal person wants to take human life, but history proves that refusal to do so sometimes leads to even greater taking of innocent lives.

What was the first version of the Bible to be printed?

It was the Latin Vulgate, and came from the press of Gutenberg in 1456, work on it being begun in 1452. It is also called the Mazarin Bible, as Cardinal Mazarin had a copy in the seventeenth century.

The Readers Say---

Wants to Be a Seven-day-a-week Zion Builder

I joined the church when I was fourteen years of age, and have spent my time enjoying the privileges the church afforded—attending Sunday school, prayer meeting, preaching services, a few quarterly conferences in Clinton and Spring River Districts, where we lived, and a few reunions. I have lived in Independence for the past twenty-three years and have attended nearly all the General Conferences held during that time.

I am glad that I had the opportunity of accepting the gospel in my childhood. I have learned the values to be gained by trying to live the gospel daily. We have had some wonderful blessings which make me acknowledge my heavenly Father's constant care.

I have enjoyed the spirit of enlightenment in my meditations. Some weeks ago the admonition of Jesus to Peter "When thou art converted, strengthen my brethren," came to me. If we are truly converted to the gospel of Christ, it will always be first in our lives. We will be true Latter Day Saints. Our lives will be above reproach. If we are truly converted, we will never be found doing those things which are harmful to ourselves or to others. We will be thoughtful, diligent, studious. We will appreciate the supreme sacrifice which Jesus made for us. Let us think of these things, for time passes very quickly and the night will soon come when no man shall work. Let us bear our testimony in the lives we live each day.

I appreciate living in Zion. I want to be a seven-day-a-week Zion builder. I am thankful for the experiences which have led me along the true way.

I first became interested in reading the church papers through the letter department. Always I enjoy the experiences of others. The biographies interest me. The article on the Youth's Forum page of August 21, should be read by every Latter Day Saint, also Brother Velt's article on tea and coffee.

May all of us awake to our responsibilities and go forward.

Heed the Call!

I have had many experiences which are evidences of the truth of the gospel and that this church is the church of the true and the living God.

At a recent prayer meeting in Council Bluffs the Spirit of God was there in abundance. One sister in her testimony made the remark that the calling of the priesthood must be wonderful. The knowledge that God had really spoken to them, she thought, would be a great blessing.

Her testimony reminded me of my own experience when I knew that I was really called to do a work and I heard the voice of the heavenly messenger, but, alas, I did not heed the warning. I have reaped the harvest with heartaches.

I had my family of six children at the time and was trying to bring them up in the way of truth; I was teaching them the best I knew. We had our own little family altar and I, in memory, can see them kneeling around my lap repeating their prayers. How happy I was in the service of my maker, training their little minds!

But Satan crept in. I joined a lodge and began to give more and more of my time to its meetings and entertainments. Finally I was elected to be the presiding officer.

On one occasion we were to have a candidate for initiation, and considerable responsibility fell upon me. I had thought of the matter a great deal. And on the night before the event, after I had retired early, I was given a spiritual experience which admonished me to teach Scripture. But I did not heed the warning. I continued to give my time to this activity, and my interest in it became so great, that some of my duties to my little flock at home were forgotten. I was out many nights and their spiritual training was neglected. Today they are scattered abroad and not one of them belongs to the household of Christ. During those years I did not realize that I could not serve both organizations, the lodge and the church. I know now that I might have brought all my family into the fold of the church had I only listened to the warning voice, "Teach Scripture." From sad experience, let me admonish you to be careful when the call is given, that you heed it.

I wish to be a doer of the word, not a hearer only, and hope that the years allotted to me will find me increasingly about my Father's business.

The Church Sanitarium

In the month of November, 1894, while acting as assistant editor to President Joseph Smith, on the Saints' Herald, I was led to write an article on the subject of "Physicians and Trained Nurses in the Church." This to the writer was entrance upon new and untrodden ground, but I believed I was justified in claiming that such lines of service as the subject named should be provided. I noticed also that in writing the article I enjoyed a spirit of light and facility of expression that indicated a measure of approval, a degree of the Spirit of truth. If in the beginning of the dispensation the Lord had appointed men to be physicians to the church, there must be a continuing need for the service of such men; and inasmuch as he had declared, in 1887, "Bear the burdens of body of which the Spirit of healing from the Lord in faith, or the use of that which wisdom directs does not relieve or remove, certainly those trained to care for the health of the body, who by study of its functions in health and disease, including the nature and use of remedies, etc., should be functioning in behalf of the afflicted among the children of God—such was my general line of thought.

A brother attacked the position through the Herald. President Smith remarked to me, "If he continues the attack I shall reply." But the matter rested without further controversy.

I was gratified therefore and confirmed in the position taken when in the year 1906, twelve years later, President Smith received the revelation which declared, "It is the will of the Lord that a sanitarium, a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted, be established by the church," etc. It was but another indication of the universal character of the providences of God, who makes provision for all the recurring needs of his children.

I little thought, then, however, that I ever would have personal need to avail myself of the benefits of the functions of church physician and nurses, but this year I became afflicted and in such a manner that it became necessary for Doctor Grabske, assistant church physician, to place me under observation and treatment for a period of about two weeks in the sanitarium. I had never been ill in any matter of consequence since seven years of age; but my time came, and I was obliged to experience some of the ills to which human flesh is heir.

My object in writing is to commend the services rendered in the sanitarium. The general staff of physicians, nurses, dietitians and management is very competent and attentive to the patients. I have visited other institutions of similar nature, but have never witnessed more competent and reliable service. Solicitude, kindness, skill are everywhere in evidence, under the management of Miss Gertrude E. Copeland, R. N., superintendent. Many sick and injured people have been cared for and are continuing to be helped in the church sanitarium. It is a work worthy of commendation and support. I thought to mention individual service, but concluded it the better thing to commend the staff in general, all of whom are well qualified and devoted to the service.

I may add that through administration, sustained by faithful remembrances of friends and good professional care, my health seems to be restored.

INDEPENDENCE, MO., August 1, 1934. R. S. SALYARDS.

More Efficiency in Building the Highway to Zion

I know this gospel work is of God. Why then should we not be more efficient in building up the highway to Zion? All have a work to do, a responsibility to bear, a duty to perform in the building of the kingdom.

The Saints should be united in their work, for in unity there is strength. To gain this union, in all its effectiveness, every one of us should study God's word given to us in the three standard books of the church. We should acquaint ourselves with the law and instruction contained not only in those three books but in the quarterlies that are written to give us a better vision and understanding of the purposes and designing of God, to perfect his work.

“. . . How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him.” (1 Kings 18: 21.)

“No man can serve two masters. . . . Ye cannot serve God and mammon.” (Matthew 6: 24.)

If we are the kingdom building people, we must study to learn the law and commandments then move forward to carry them into effect, showing our love for God by our works. The times in which we live tell us that we must be up and doing with our might, mind, and strength to perfect the Lord's work. We must hold up the standard of truth and righteousness that the children of men may see the light, come to it, and find peace.

To those who are isolated, let me say, be not discouraged. I lived a good part of my life in isolation and reared six children without the help of the Saints, yet I had the help of the church through the quarterlies and the church papers, Herald, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. I sought diligently to teach my children to honor the Sabbath and to be obedient. The Lord was my helper, as I instructed them in the gospel, and now I feel that my weak efforts were not in vain. One of my sons has been called to the priesthood, and I hope and pray that the others may yet step into active duty. All were baptized when young.

I never allowed myself to be without the church literature. I wanted to keep abreast with the work and to keep acquainted with the church family. My home was always open to the missionaries and we were favored with visits and a few sermons once in a while which helped to encourage us to keep faithful.

Let us go forward and work earnestly to advance the glorious gospel cause. This is my prayer.

Rejoices in the Light of the Gospel

The first I remember hearing about a latter-day gospel was from two Utah elders in 1897. I later enlisted in the army, went through the Spanish-American War, and was discharged in January, 1899. At home again, I met other elders and began to investigate their doctrines. The first principles of the gospel, which I found in the Bible, caused me to seek the Lord to know if these things were true, and I became convinced that the Lord had heard and answered my prayer. I was baptized into that church in July, 1899.

As time passed, I became better acquainted with the teachings of their church, was ordained an elder, and was more closely associated with their doctrines and priesthood. But one night brought a meeting which severed my membership with the church. I did not believe or approve its teachings. My wife and I left the church, and afterwards, while pondering over my experiences, I could see flaws in many of their teachings.

About that time a spiritual experience came to me which must have been very like the awaking given to Paul of old. A personage handed me a tract saying, “This will give you light on Mormonism,” and I replied, “If I ever see you again, I will know you.”

The fulfillment of this experience came when I received three tracts from President Frederick M. Smith. I had written him to know if there was any difference between the Reorganized and the Utah churches.

I was ignorant of the Reorganization. The ministers of the church to which I had belonged had not mentioned a Reorganized Church. When I mentioned it to them after this experience, they said that it was just the same as the Utah Church. Later, my wife, daughter, and I were baptized into the Reorganized Church. I am now sixty-six years old; I belonged to the Utah Church seventeen years, and have now been a member of the Reorganization eighteen years. I have had a hard battle with the world of the flesh, but with the help of my heavenly Father, I have been given strength to overcome. We rejoice in the light of the gospel, and ask an interest in the prayers and faith of all who read this.

Life is not small, the company
Of hills has taught me this. To call
It tedious is perfidy—
Life is not small.
The hills show me a soul grows tall

A vigil can mean ecstasy . . .

Their faith proclaims eternally—

Society Islands

Twelve-Ton Cutter Boat Goes on the Reef

Two small cutter boats, Tevaioara (nine tons) and Moua Faniu (twelve tons) left Kaukura, an island one hundred-eighty miles to the northeast, for Tahiti with their cargoes of dried coconut, to sell to the traders and buy food in exchange. These cutters are loaded so that the decks are usually six inches to a foot above water line. The crew of usually three or four and the few passengers who will travel by such small sail boats eat and sleep on the open deck while going from island to island.

The sea for the past two months has been very rough and as these two sail boats were nearing Tahiti, they were overtaken by a fierce storm of wind and rain; night was coming on, and the only thing to do was to lower the sails and drift down with the wind until the storm was over. The one boat, Tevaioara, succeeded in drifting into the shelter of the Island of Moorea, below Tahiti, and returned as the wind died down. Rehia Bellais, an elder from Kaukura, was captain of that boat.

Moua Faniu, the twelve-ton boat, how-numbering ten, could collect their wits, they were thrown upon the reef, the boat turned completely upside down, and the natives were thrown into the heavy seas which were breaking with terrific force upon the coral reef. There they all struggled in the sea trying to help each other. A mother grabbed for her nine-year-old daughter but missed her. Another passenger succeeded in grabbing the child by the dress and hair as she bumped against her under the water, and they both were thrown up on the reef by a huge wave; the mother was still searching for and calling to the child when the little girl answered that she was safe, and for her mother to come. A young man, Teiho a Fauura, a descendant of John Hawkins of early church history in this mission, attempted to save a young lady. He was nearly drowned in the attempt, but finally both were thrown upon the reef.

All were safe when the roll call was taken. The island upon which they were thrown was Tetiaroa, thirty-five miles to the north of Tahiti. Their problem when ashore was the building of a fire which they did by the use of friction with sticks (scout method.) Two days later they were brought to Tahiti on a small motor boat.

the members of Kaukura Branch. The loss is keenly felt by them in these hard times.

More Troubles with Boats

Several months ago the four hundred ton steamer, Ville de Papeete, operated by a French Steamship company to freight the natives' copra to Tahiti, ran on the reef at night. The boat was a complete loss and very little of the cargo was salvaged.

A few weeks ago another boat, a schooner of about eighty-tons, sprang a leak sixty miles to the south of Anaa. The crew and passengers, numbering about sixteen, were forced to abandon the boat and make for Anaa, the nearest land, in a small boat used to bring copra from the lands where there is no pass to enter and anchor. Usually those boats carry two to four tons. All from that boat, France Australe, arrived safely in Tahiti by another schooner which called at Anaa.

Word has also reached us of a small cutter boat from the island of Ananu leaving for Mangareva a distance of from three-hundred to four-hundred miles. Our elder, Tara a Tane, was captain. Many weeks have passed and no word has been received from them. They did not reach Mangareva. There were nine persons aboard.

ever, did not fare so well. The night was very dark and rainy. The boat could only be managed by keeping it straight down with the wind. About ten-fifteen at night, all at once in the darkness the breakers on the reef were seen and the alarm given, but it was too late, the sails were down and the sea running very high. Before the crew and passengers,

The deck of the boat and the eleven and a half tons of dried coconut, which represented roughly $355, American, were carried away together with clothing, boxes, letters, etc. They were most fortunate in that no one was drowned or seriously injured. Tuaora a Fareata, an elder from Kaukura, was captain of the wrecked boat. The copra belonged to Another cutter boat, of about seven tons, belonging to a protestant from Kaukura, left Tahiti about forty days ago for Kaukura, one hundred-eighty miles to the northeast, and has never been heard from. One Teangi, an elder from Kaukura, was captain of that boat. There is still a chance of the latter two boats being heard from, but there are also grave doubts as to their safety.

Church Work in the Mission

The work of the church in this mission is progressing about as usual. Apostle G. G. Lewis and Clyde F. Ellis, in their turns, visited us and gave much encouragement. Apostle Ellis is still with us. He has been successful in baptizing over fifty members these past few months. Many of these were adults and had been worked with by many missionaries who had not succeeded in baptizing them. Brother Ellis is now making a visit to several of the most distant branches of the mission. We expect him to return within the next three weeks.

Our gains and the success of the work here is shown in the following statistics for the present year: Baptisms, 90; blessings, 58 and ordinations, 19.

We expect to pass the hundred mark in baptisms for the year. Our total membership has passed the fourteen hundred mark now. We have twenty-two branches, most of which are considered actively engaged in the advancement of the church work here.

Tithing and offerings receipts are not so great as in past years but there is

Portland District Has Busy Year

The past year has been outstanding in Portland District. A greater spirit of unity and brotherly love prevails than has been experienced heretofore. There is also a growing desire on the part of the members more fully to consecrate their lives to the service of the Master. As a result of this unity there has been a marked increase in the spirituality of the district which is very encouraging. They feel that this has been brought about through the visit of President F. M. Smith, the association and assistance of Apostles E. J. Gleazer and M. A. McConley, the district missionary, Elder H. I. Velt, and the untiring efforts of the members of the district presidency who have given unstintingly of their services throughout the year, and through this service have given encouragement and inspiration to the members.

The district was fortunate in having as delegates to General Conference, District President J. L. Verhei, Elder H. I. Velt, Elder and Sister Albert Livingston and Sister Sarah Sutton. These delegates brought back encouraging reports.

The Northwest Reunion

The Northwest reunion was the most outstanding experience of the year. The increase in attendance from Portland District was approximately fifty percent over that of last year, and there was also a material increase in attendance from the other two districts participating in the reunion, making a total ating the classes went away with a greater determination to render a more efficient service.

In the class on "Missionary Methods and Stimuli," conducted by Apostle Gleazer, the various phases of missionary work were discussed, and each one present was made to realize that the need for missionary work is great, and that the opportunities for performing this work are greater than ever before.

The class on "Church Governments," conducted by Apostle F. H. Edwards, brought before the people a clearer understanding of the purpose of these governments, and a new vision of what our organization really stands for. Many were made to realize that they had never truly visioned the workings and purposes of these governments.

Elder Velt's class on "Prophecy and the Signs of the Times" was very enlightening.

Throughout the morning suitable classes, supervised by Sister Gladys Fouts and Sister Effie Verhei, were conducted for the kindergarten, primary and junior age groups. Classes for the older young people were also conducted. A class on church ordinances, conducted by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, gave to the young people a better understanding and a deeper appreciation of the various ordinances of the church.

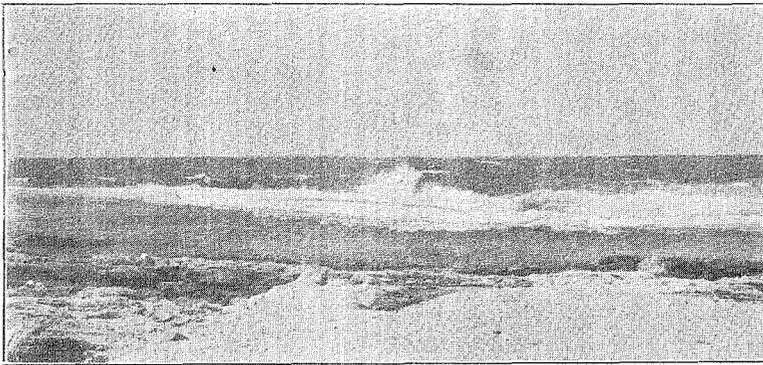

As a result of the classes and other services conducted during the reunion, twelve were led into the waters of baptism on the last Saturday of the reunion, and were confirmed the following morning in a special service.

Approximately six hundred people heard Apostle F. H. Edwards deliver a series of missionary sermons.

Several early morning prayer services were held in the grove on a knoll near the camp ground, in which different age groups met at five o'clock, and in the service dedicated and rededicated their lives to the service of God. God's Spirit was manifested in great power and many blessings were received by those participating. The spiritual experiences thus gained added greatly to the success of the prayer service which followed later in the morning.

From the opening of the reunion to its close, the prayer services were of a highly spiritual nature. From the beginning it was realized by the Saints that individual preparation was necessary if they were to receive to the fullest extent the Spirit of God. In this they were not disappointed for at the prayer service held in the morning of the last day of the reunion, which lasted from 8 to 10:30 a. m., they were blessed by an outpouring of the Spirit such as has never been experienced heretofore.

Much strength and encouragement were gained by the young people through participation in the prayer services, three services being conducted for the young people alone, and in these meetings they were abundantly blessed good reason for that. Considering the low prices obtained for copra, the principal product, the members are doing well toward the upkeep of the mission.

tendance of approximately six hundred. Throughout the reunion the Spirit of God was manifested in a greater degree than ever before, and the peace and harmony resulting from this enabled those present to enjoy a foretaste of Zion.

The classes conducted by Apostles E. J. Gleazer and F. H. Edwards, and Elder H. I. Velt were timely and inspiring, and much valuable instruction was received. All classes were well attended, a good interest was shown by those attending, and the enlightening Spirit of God prevailed throughout each session. Those who had the privilege of attend-

Oldest and Youngest of Portland's Priesthood

Elder N. E. Austin, eighty-year-old pastor at Condon, Oregon, has served as branch president the longest of any worker in Portland District. For twenty-five years he has acted as pastor of his group. He spoke briefly on the past and future of his work, at the priesthood banquet which opened the Portland district conference, September 14. The response was made by Priest Lloyd Verhei, sixteen years old and the youngest member holding the priesthood.

by the Spirit. The spirit of prophecy was manifested in these meetings, and wonderful blessings were promised to them if they would remain faithful. They were admonished to be diligent in service, to separate themselves from the world and to prepare for the task before them, which task is the establishment of Zion.

The recreational activities included volley ball, baseball, horse shoes and swimming. These activities were under competent leadership, and a good spirit prevailed in each activity. A program of music, readings, short plays, etc., was given each evening at the close of the services, and was greatly enjoyed by all who attended them.

In the past year the reunion grounds have been greatly improved, which added much to the comfort of those camping on the grounds. At one service enough money was raised to finance these improvements and to start the work for the coming year.

Portland District Conference

The district conference opened Friday night, September 14, with a banquet for the priesthood and their wives and branch and mission leaders and their wives and husbands. District President J. L. Verhei was in charge. This was the largest number of leaders ever gathered together here.

Speeches were given by Elder H. I. Velt, Elder N. E. Austin, Lloyd Verhei, and Apostle E. J. Gleazer, and music was furnished by the district chorister, Sister Lila Livingston.

Elder N. E. Austin, of Condon, Oregon, has served as branch president the longest of anyone in the district. He expressed his joy in having served some twenty-five years, also his hopes for the future. Elder Austin celebrated his eightieth birthday anniversary the eleventh of October.

Priest Lloyd Verhei, sixteen years of age, the youngest holding the priesthood, responded with a short talk.

Saturday morning Apostle E. J. Gleazer spoke to the women of the district, and provided a foundation for them to begin a very active work.

The afternoon classes were well attended. Elder H. I. Velt taught the first period and forcefully presented the hopes of the church through missionary methods. Elder Mark Yeoman followed by taking up the call of Zion and the necessity of our strict obedience to the financial law. Sister Effie Verhei talked on the responsibilities of a more adequate junior leadership.

Saturday night Apostle Gleazer began a series of three sermons that will never be forgotten by the Saints, because they were so timely and delivered with great power.

Sunday morning at eight o'clock the Saints assembled for a prayer service, completely filling the upper auditorium.

Everyone was blessed with a great degree of the Spirit.

This service was followed by a worship service under the direction of Elder Albert Livingston, district director of religious education. Apostle Gleazer occupied at the eleven o'clock hour, and spoke on present-day problems and their solution. A basket lunch was served in the lower auditorium.

At the business session held at 2 p. m. Sunday afternoon, Elder J. L. Verhei was sustained as district president, and chose as his counselors Elders Albert Livingston, Mark Yeoman, Albert V. Nelson and Walter H. Barker. Other district officers sustained are Mark Yeoman, bishop's agent and treasurer; Albert Livingston, director of religious education; Lila Livingston, chorister; Fred W. Hawes, auditor; Mattie A. Young, secretary. The officers elected are as follows: Junior department director, Sister Effie Verhei; women's department leader, Sister Effie Verhei, and publicity agent, Ardath Young.

A beautiful and inspiring ordination service was held at the three o'clock hour. The service was in charge of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, District President J. L. Verhei, and Elders M. H. Cook and Mark Yeoman. At this service ten young men were ordained to the priesthood. These men made an impressive appearance as they arose in front of the congregation and received their charge from Apostle Gleazer. Those ordained are as follows: Willard Becker, priest, Longview-Kelso Mission, Washington; Walter Webberly, priest, Vancouver, Washington; Harry Howell, priest, Hood River, Oregon; Charles H. Asher, priest, Salem, Oregon; Kenneth Nottingham, deacon, Portland, Oregon; Roy Keiser, priest, Vancouver, Washington; Milton Becker, priest, Longview-Kelso Mission; Elmer A. Larson, priest, Portland, Oregon; Lloyd Verhei, priest, Portland, Oregon, and Roland Barker, priest, Portland, Oregon.

Apostle Gleazer delivered the closing sermon at eight o'clock Sunday evening.

Portland Saints were sorry to learn of the necessity of Missionary H. I. Velt and family moving to Spokane, Washington, where he will serve as pastor, but they wish him success in his new field.

The district presidency has immediately begun outlining plans for carrying on the missionary work in the district. They have found a willing response from all officers in charge of branches and missions. They also expect to open new missions at Eugene and Bend, Oregon.

Twenty-three Baptized at Harrison, Michigan

After the reunion of Central Michigan District at Edenville, Elder J. A. Priddy, of West Branch, Michigan, was divinely directed to go to Harrison, Michigan, to hold a series of meetings. His labors there resulted in twenty-three baptisms. He was assisted by Elder George W. Bailey, of Harrison, and many, both old and young, rejoiced at the good things they heard.

They have started a Sunday school and preaching services. Fifty-five attended September 16, and the Saints feel that there are many more souls to be gathered into the kingdom. They are looking forward to a branch organization.

Meetings are held in the schoolhouse. The teacher, Sister Faye White, is secretary and treasurer of Zion's Christian Legion, of Gladwin Branch, and has a good group of young people interested in the organization here.

Davidson, Oklahoma

As the Saints of this branch look back over the years they see much for which to be thankful, and yet some things have brought sadness. The passing of two of the most colorful figures of the branch recently brought mourning to the entire community.

Brother R. J. Parker, first settler in this section of Oklahoma after its opening, passed away the morning of July 26, at the age of ninety-four years.

On October 7, 1861, at the age of twenty-one, he enlisted as a Southern soldier and fought in a number of the important battles of the Civil War. He was held prisoner eighteen days suffering much pain and exposure, then he was released, and later was assigned to duty as carrier of the regimental colors.

At the close of the war he returned to his Kentucky home and married Miss Mary Owens. To them two sons were born, R. J. Parker, junior, who died in infancy, and John W., with whom he lived at the time of his death. His wife passed away in 1925. Years ago Brother Parker united with the church, being baptized by S. W. Simmons. He served faithfully in the office of deacon until his advanced age would permit no further activity. His life was devoted to the Master and to the good of those around him. He was a true pioneer, a man of strong character. Brother Parker is survived by his son, John W., three grandchildren, and two great-grandsons.

Brother J. Thomas Skinner, sixty-five years old, was taken by death after a short illness. He united with the church April 6, 1897, being baptized by B. F. Renfroe. Later the office of priest was conferred upon him, and he gave his life in loyal service to the church. His faithful service as a citizen, husband, brother, uncle, and his unswerving devotion to the cause of his Redeemer placed him before the people as an example of Christian living. He was respected by the people of this community and by the Saints over Western Oklahoma District. The funeral services were held September 13, Apostle R. S. Budd preaching a beautiful sermon. He was assisted by Elder Lester Dyke, of Eagle City, and Elder E. B. Stafford of Davidson.

Brother Skinner leaves to mourn, his grief-stricken wife, Alice Little Skinner, three sisters, and five brothers: Mrs. Sallie Phegby, Mrs. John W. Parker, Mrs. B. F. Renfroe, Ira, Roy, Robert, Jonah, and Ernest Skinner, and many other relatives.

A Generous Texas Saint

MRS. VIRGINIA HAY

Among those highly esteemed and beloved in the church is Sister Virginia Hay, of Bandera, Texas. Though past ninety year of age, her health is very good and her mind is active.

Sister Hay, whose maiden name was Minear, has lived at Bandera since she was ten years old. She went there in the Lyman Wight colony, moving from Bonham, Texas, with them. Quite vividly she recalls many of the experiences of those times.

Sister Hay has a number of children grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and great-great-grandchildren living in and about Bandera. She bought the grounds and built the little church edifice at Bandera, and presented it to the church with three of her children as trustees.

Last year when the question of a place to hold a reunion for Southwestern Texas was under consideration, Sister Hay bought a tract of ground adjoining the church and donated that also to the church. On this tract a pavilion was built which served nicely for the reunion this summer.

Modest, unassuming, deserving, Sister Hay is an example to others. She is a regular tithe payer.

Patriarch G. T. Griffiths Visits Ohio Branches

Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths has lately been bringing inspiration and new courage to Ohio members. September 8 and 9, he attended the two-day meeting at Creola, Ohio. He was instrumental in organizing that branch some forty-three years ago.

He was a distinctive figure at the annual home-coming of Pleasant Valley, Ohio, Branch, September 23. Over twenty-five years ago he organized this branch.

Brother Griffiths also visited the branch at McDermott, Ohio, which he helped to organize a few years subsequent to Pleasant Valley.

This minister of the gospel is much pleased at the growth of the church work in that part of the Lord's vineyard in the last fifteen years. While visiting the branches at Nauvoo, Pleasant Valley, and McDermott, Ohio, he blessed forty-six people.

Compensation

Providence has given us hope and sleep, as a compensation for the many cares of life.—Voltaire.

Independence

Thousands of visitors poured through the lower halls of the Auditorium to view the Harvest Festival which was open to the public from October 2 to 7, and nightly they were entertained by visiting and local musical groups. Much artistry and ingenuity marked the exhibits this year, and harvest gifts were gratefully received from many places and many people. Combining the regular festival features with the display of hobbies and the exhibits of goods manufactured by local producers has put this festival in the forefront of excellency, uniqueness, and beauty. Officers, donors of gifts, artists, workers and all who had part in producing the 1934 festival are to be congratulated.

Prizes were awarded in three classes—the branches or local churches; visiting groups, and clubs or departments. In the first group Englewood congregation took first prize. Throughout the history of the harvest festival Englewood has made a record in prize taking, coming in first and second on numerous occasions. Second honors went to Enoch Hill and third to Spring Branch. In the visitors' class Kansas City scored first—Kansas City won the sweepstakes prize last year—Far West Stake, second, and Sugar Creek Branch, third. First honors in the third group went to Stone Church juniors, second to the Sunny South Club, and third to the young people of the Stone Church.

One hundred babies were examined in the Well Baby Clinic Friday morning in charge of Mrs. D. S. McNamara, assisted by a large group of local doctors, nurses, and mothers. The baby clinic is now an established and a looked-forward-to event of the festival.

The concert by the Auditorium Festival Chorus Sunday afternoon, October 7, scored a tremendous success. It was heard by thousands of music lovers. Visitors came from surrounding stakes and cities, from neighboring States, and from more distant points, Montana, Wisconsin, and Canada.

Under the direction of George Anway, thirty-three choirs blended their voices in the mammoth chorus and with the assistance of the Walnut Park Orchestra, opened the concert singing the hymn invitation, "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come." The prayer of thanksgiving for harvest was offered by Bishop G. L. DeLapp. Favorite hymns effectively sung by the choir were "Hymn of Joy" (Van Dyke, 1908), from Beethoven's Ninth Symphony; "Fairest Lord Jesus," (Munster, 1677), Crusader's Hymn; "Tenderly Lead Thou Me On" (Joseph Smith, 1832); "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken" (Newton, 1799), and "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" (Wesley, 1740), Mildred Redfield Connelly was pianist for the chorus.

The Walnut Park Orchestra, directed by Orlando Nace, in addition to accompanying some of the choir numbers, gave two outstanding musical contributions, "Coronation March" (from "The Prophet"), and a selection from the musical play, "Katinka," by Rudolf Friml.

Nelle Atkinson Kelley, soprano, sang "Great Is the Holy One of Israel," accompanied by Hazel Scott Withee, pianist, and Miss Dorothy Nace, violinist, played "Souvenir de Moscou," Mrs. Withee accompanying.

Two classical numbers by the choir were most effective, "Holy Art Thou" (Largo from "Xerxes"), by Handel, and "Gloria" (Mass in B-flat), by Farmer. Two Negro spirituals arranged for the performance by Paul N. Craig, won a round of applause, "Goin' to Shout All Over God's Heav'n," and "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot."

The solo work of Pauline James Arnsen with the choir in four different numbers was much appreciated by the great audience.

Closing numbers by the choir were "Deck the Halls," an old Welsh air; "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," an old English air; "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," arranged by Paul Craig, and the National Anthem, Smith-O'Hara.

Elder C. E. Wight closed the 1934 Harvest Home Festival with a sermon Sunday night, speaking to the Saints who gathered in the upper room of the Auditorium. He based his excellent discourse on the words of Jesus: "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it."

Elder T. A. Beck was in charge of this service, assisted by Elder J. A. Gilen who offered the prayers and Earl Audet who led the congregational singing. Special music was furnished by a trio composed of the Shupe sisters, Mildred Shupe, Evelyn Shupe Flournoy, and Irene Shupe Palmer.

Pastors for the various congregations in the center place were approved by the quarterly conference in Zion as follows: Second Church, A. K. Dillee; Walnut Park, Frank McDonald; Liberty Street, John R. Lentell; Enoch Hill, H. L. Barto; Spring Branch, F. A. Cool; Englewood, T. A. Beck; Gudgell Park, Walter Chapman; East Independence, Frank Minton, and Sugar Creek, Wilbur Paul. The names of bishop's agents and custodians also were approved. The nomination of Mrs. W. J. Burton as leader of women was approved, and W. Earl Page was re-elected director of religious education. The conference approved the recommendation of two Stone Church men for ordination, Guinn Bronson to the office of priest, and A. B. Taylor, elder. The choice of R. W. Howery as president of the second quorum of elders was confirmed by the conference.

Important among the items of business transacted at this service under the leadership of President F. M. McDowell, Apostle F. Henry Edwards, and Bishop

J. S. Kelley, was a resolution concerning the attitude of the church in this part of the country toward international affairs and World Court treaties.

Independence Saints were happy to learn of the marriage of Henry Badder, of this city, and Mrs. Ida Greyson, of Canada, September 18, at Detroit, Michigan, Elbert Wilbert Richards officiating.

The marriage of Miss Berniece Moretina, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Moretina, and Arthur Worth, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Worth, was solemnized September 29, at the home of D. E. Tucker, in the presence of the immediate families. D. E. Tucker officiated. A wedding dinner was served at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Worth will make their home at Independence.

Second Church

A very spiritual prayer meeting was enjoyed at the eight o'clock hour Sunday.

At the close of the church school hour the officers of the school held a meeting in the basement, discussing the coming religious education institute for the city of Independence, and problems in connection with the local church school.

At the sacrament hour Sunday morning, in charge of Elder W. N. Inman, the child of Brother and Sister Harry Shakespeare was blessed by Elders A. K. Dillee and Inman. F. L. Freeman gave the oblation talk, and the communion address was by Leonard Lea. A special prayer of gratitude for harvest blessings and the goodness of the Lord to his people was offered by Pastor A. K. Dillee.

Walnut Park Church

Communion service Sunday morning was in charge of Pastor Frank McDonald, assisted by Elders C. G. Closson and Royden Barnhardt. Elder Barnhardt talked briefly preceding the taking of the oblation, and preceding the serving of the emblems the pastor read from the Book of Mormon the account of Christ's appearance to the Nephites and his instructions to them regarding the serving of the Lord's Supper.

Logeman; vice president in charge of membership, Roy Martin; social vice president, Paul Roberts; secretary-treasurer, Sister J. H. Logeman, and historian, Sister Myrtle Taylor. Evangelist Albert Carmichael has been conducting the lesson period for this class for some weeks and will continue to do so until January 1.

The program at the religio hour Sunday evening consisted of two piano numbers by Margaret Chapman, two readings by Jessie Anderson, and a clarinet solo by Thelma Moorman. Following the program the remaining two officers of the religio were elected, Frances Bullard being chosen chorister and Grace Wille, pianist.

Evangelist U. W. Greene was the speaker at seven-thirty Sunday evening.

The new young people's class of the church school taught by Duane Fish has organized and chosen a name. They will be known as the Vanguarders of Zion. John Crandall is president, James Gunzel, vice president, and Nathan Stowell, secretary-treasurer.

Liberty Street Church

Fall activities are well under way with many of the new officers already taking full charge of their departments. The missionary spirit seems to prevail in all services. The church school, for the past year efficiently superintended by Bernard Hurshman, is again in the hands of Harry Blake, bishop's agent. Brother Hurshman has been placed in charge of the department of recreation and expression.

At the recent general election all votes were unanimous. Apostle F. Henry Edwards and Pastor John F. Sheehy were pleased with the manner in which the business was carried on and with the harmony which prevailed.

Brother C. A. Mills, recently reelected church custodian, is to be commended on his untiring efforts to make Liberty Street's booth at the Harvest Festival one of which the Saints were proud. This display was unique. In the center a large likeness of the Statue of Liberty was seen, the light ever burning in her torch. In the background was shown New York's impressive sky-line. The sky-line, the harbor, and other scenery were painted by Brother Mills. Golden liberty bells were suspended from the ceiling, and the booth was decked with streamers of red, white and blue. Liberty Street's gift of fresh and canned fruit and vegetables was also seen in this exhibit.

The junior department, now in charge of Brother and Sister Hurshman, had a party at the church Friday evening, September 28. Following this, group 25 had a social get-together. Elder Jess Roberts was in charge. Mayble and Ruth Tignor arranged the program, games and refreshments.

Enoch Hill Church

Three babies were blessed at the communion service Sunday morning, Patricia Jane Thomas, daughter of Brother and Sister Gerald Thomas, by Elder Harold Hattey and her grandfather, E. E. Thomas; Shirley Ann Tiberghen, daughter of Brother and Sister Lyle Tiberghen, by Elders H. L. Barto and Hattey; and Lancelot Heath, son of Brother and Sister Lancelot Heath by Elders Hattey and Barto.

Pastor H. L. Barto was in charge of the communion service assisted by O. W. Sarratt and E. A. Thomas. A good spirit was present at this hour. Before the service Richard Maloney and Hubert Whitehead sang two numbers.

Sunday, September 30, Elder R. D. Weaver, the morning speaker, chose for his theme, "Have You Received the Holy Ghost Since You First Believed?" That evening Patriarch Ammon White admonished the Saints to study the three books.

Elder Barto took his place as pastor Wednesday evening, October 3. At this service O. W. Sarratt was chosen to succeed Elder C. E. Beal as one of the assistant pastors. Elder J. E. Martin was reinstated as assistant pastor. The supervisors chosen are: Mrs. Amos E. Allen, music; Mrs. Iva Chrestensen, department of women; Elder C. S. Warren, church school; J. E. Martin, adults; H. E. Winegar, young people; Mrs. H. E. Winegar, juniors. The young people chose Lawrence Martin and Alice Constance as members of the young people's council. A committee of ten has been chosen by Elder Winegar as a group to make plans for the coming year's activities. At this time it was decided that a new piano should be purchased.

Brother and Sister Millard Pace have moved near the Liberty Street Church. They are active workers and will be missed by Saints in this district.

Spring Branch Church

The eleven o'clock sacrament service Sunday was in charge of Pastor F. A. Cool. He was assisted by Brothers Jacobsen, Andes, Smith, and Fish. The Scripture reading by the pastor was followed by a solo by Irene Roberts, and of its young people in planning and decorating their booth at the festival. All were happy to take third place among local congregations.

South Bend-Mishawaka, Indiana

Saints Come Together for Annual Home-coming and Rally Day

The third annual home-coming and rally day of South Bend-Mishawaka Branch at Mishawaka, Indiana, was held Sunday, September 23.

Saturday evening nearly one hundred Saints and friends were well entertained by a program, followed by a preaching service. Percy Farrow, of Sarnia, Ontario, was the speaker, and his theme was "What Shall I Do to Be Saved?" He held the attention of all, and especially that of nonmembers.

Sunday's activities opened at 9:30 a. m. with prayer and testimony meeting in charge of Elders Farrow, McKnight, and Barmore. This was followed at 11:00 by a preaching service, District President A. C. Barmore being the speaker. "Never Alone" was his topic and his discourse was enjoyed by a packed house.

Then all gathered at the front of the church building for a group photograph. Afterward everyone enjoyed the lunch served in the lower auditorium of the church.

Third annual homecoming and rally day crowd of South Bend-Mishawaka Branch, Indiana.

the talk on the oblation was given by Robert Fish. Pastor F. A. Cool talked on the sacrament.

At the church school hour that morning the new teachers and substitute teachers were selected, also class officers for the coming year. They are looking forward to a splendid church school year.

No services were held in the evening since the Saints wished to attend the meeting at the Auditorium.

Spring Branch is proud of the work

A musical program at 2:00 o'clock was followed by a preaching service in which time was equally divided between Elders McKnight, Farrow, and Barmore. Brother McKnight's subject was "The Gospel Defined," Elder Farrow's, "Thou Shalt Have No Other Gods Before Me," and Elder Barmore spoke on "Christ the Consoler."

After a few hours of recreation and visiting among the Saints, gathered from all points of the surrounding territory, the 7:00 o'clock service began. Hammond Branch Choir, in charge of Elder Denison Smith, provided anthems and other numbers and added much to the evening's entertainment.

The play, "Love Leads the Way," a local production, was well enacted by the participants, Brother and Sister Galloway and daughter, Velma, and brought back thrilling memories of the struggles of pioneer days and the loyalty and sacrifice of church members of that time.

Elder Percy Farrow brought the day to a close with the sermon, "On This Rock."

Holden Stake

Priesthood Institute a Success

Fifty-one men and officers attended the Blue Springs priesthood institute each night. Thirty-five of those men attended every one of the five night sessions. Thursday night fifty-four men and officers were present.

President Floyd M. McDowell conducted at least one class every night—each session was divided into two class periods—except Thursday night, when he spoke to the wives, mothers, and sweethearts of the ordained men. On this night the men and women met separately, then joined in a short social gathering. The other nights he devoted to presenting the program for the priesthood as set forth in the Priesthood Journal, and adapting it to Holden Stake.

Stake President Amos E. Allen was in charge of the institute, and reminded the men of the priesthood all week of the period of increased devotion now being conducted in Holden Stake. He devoted one class period to methods and mechanics of visiting.

J. A. Thomas, counselor to the stake president, conducted one class period on "Standards of Sainthood." Standards for the priesthood were presented and discussed by President McDowell. Bishop J. A. Koehler spoke on the "Authority of the Priesthood," saying that "The biggest price of divine authority in the priesthood is personal improvement." The financial law as pertaining to the ordained men and their efforts among the Saints was discussed by Bishop's Counselor Earl T. Higdon. "The degree of paying tithes and offerings," he said, "measures the spiritual status of a branch."

The officers were well pleased with the result of the institute. "The men made a splendid response," said Brother Allen.

As for the men themselves, the consensus of opinion was in enthusiastic support of the institute, mingled with demands for more of them. "I only wish I could have attended something like this ten years ago!" "We need one of these institutes, with this kind of training, every month." "With this sort of work and training for us, we can do something!"

Between the close of the institute and

October 23, every family in the stake near any group is expected to be visited by members of the priesthood. In some of the branches every ordained man, from deacon to high priest, is being sent out. October 28, a series of rally services will begin in the western end of the stake, centering at Bates City, Atherton, Blue Springs, and Lees Summit.

Next Sunday a ten-day series of rally meetings are starting at Holden and Warrensburg. Brother Thomas will conduct the Holden series, and Brother Allen the Warrensburg. When these meetings are over, a series of missionary meetings are to follow. Holden Stake is on the march!

Atherton Priesthood Visiting

Every member of the priesthood at Atherton is visiting the families of Saints in and around Atherton this month. The men, twenty-two strong, have been divided into teams of two each, and each team assigned certain families to visit. One team will visit the homes of the other members of the priesthood.

"The Sinner and the Song," was dramatized Sunday night, September 30, by members of the church school class taught by Sister W. P. Mitchell. Fern Mitchell sang the song, accompanied by Nina Amundsen on the piano and vocally in the refrain, while Wilmer White portrayed the sinner and his struggle. Carol Rogers had the role of "The Tempter," tugging at the "sinner's" coat, and Wesley Bilquist was the guardian angel who welcomed the sinner when he left the tempter and yielded to the influence of the song in the church.

After the dramatization, Bishop J. A. Koehler spoke on the "Price of Authority." Pastor J. A. Thomas delivered the sermon in the morning, "Whatsoever Ye Find to Do, Do it With All Thy Might."

Finished Course at Warrensburg

During the last three months they have been studying How to Teach Religion, by Herbert Betts. Out of a class of thirty regular members, twenty have taken the course for credit. They have just finished the last examination and some have completed the thesis on the supplementary reading, How to Tell Stories to Children, by Bryant.

Brother and Sister Murdock, of Rich Hill, have recently moved to Warrensburg, and the Saints are glad to have their services in church work.

While here with his wife to visit his parents, Brother and Sister S. M. Andes, Doctor Jerome Andes, priest, delivered a sermon on "A Positive Religion."

Death at Grandview

Members of the Grandview group mourn the loss of Sister Jane Martin, wife of the pastor, Charles Martin, and one of their best workers. Her death, on August 16, came as a shock after a short illness.

Sister Martin had been in charge of the children's division for many years, and was devoted to her work.

Sister Pearl Norman, who has been working with the children's classes, has been chosen for children's division leader.

The stake presidency, Amos E. Allen and Counselor J. A. Thomas, and Bishop J. A. Koehler met with them September 7 to conduct the business session, perfecting the organization for the coming year.

We are planning for promotion day services, and are going into the new church year with a determination to make it better than last year.

Knobnoster Saints Elect

Stake President Amos E. Allen and Earl T. Higdon of the stake bishopric were there September 2, and conducted the annual business meeting.

Church songs by the group added to the evening's entertainment and there was prayer by Robert Winship.

Far West Stake

The weeks following the stake reunion have been active weeks in most of the branches. Plans for the fall and winter months are taking shape with emphasis on the missionary phase of the work. Priesthood visiting and class work are finding definite places in many branch programs.

Stake President and Bishop Visit Branches

Elder Ward A. Hougas and Bishop Henry L. Livingston have visited a number of branches during September. On the ninth they visited Bedison Branch where Bishop Livingston occupied the pulpit at the morning hour and Brother Hougas spoke at an afternoon service. A basket dinner was spread at noon. A very fine attendance was had with practically every family represented. Two carloads of Saints from Ross Grove Branch, about thirty miles distant, arrived in time for the basket dinner and the afternoon service. The men returned to Saint Joseph in the evening where Bishop Livingston preached at Third Church and Brother Hougas at First Church.

On the following Sunday, they drove to Ross Grove Branch for the morning service at which time Bishop Livingston preached. In the afternoon they drove to Guilford for that branch's annual business meeting. In the evening Brother Hougas preached at First and Third churches in Saint Joseph.

Trenton Saints welcomed the stake officers on the twenty-third for a morning and afternoon service. The few Saints in this mission are trying to carry on the work in spite of handicaps, and this visit gave them much encouragement. They hope to hold services as regularly as possible. Elder Everett E. Gamet, who has recently moved to Galatin, will continue as pastor, and expects to be at Trenton every two weeks. Brother Hougas returned to Cameron in the evening where he preached to a large congregation.

On the last Sunday of the month, they held services at Oakdale Branch where a morning and afternoon meeting were conducted in a similar manner. Bishop Livingston returned to Saint Joseph to occupy First Church pulpit. On all of these visits, they have been accompanied by Sister Livingston who is stake director of religious education.

A number of other men have been filling appointments in the various branches each Sunday, and good services have been reported.

First St. Joseph Church

All services have been renewed following the reunion and particularly the mid-week prayer meetings have increased both in numbers and spirituality. Recent Wednesday evenings have seen the lower auditorium well filled and high type services have resulted.

The women's department hold their regular meetings each Thursday at the church. Bishop Livingston is teaching an accredited class in the afternoons for eight weeks. Much interest is being shown by a large number.

The church school sponsored a chili supper on September 27, for the benefit of the local Boy Scout troop. A large number enjoyed a social evening.

The UI-Lik-Us Players held their annual business meeting recently and outlined plans for the coming year. Rehearsals have begun on the annual fall play to be given at the Y. W. C. A.

The local O. T. Z's presented the Arcadian Choir from Stewartville, Missouri at the vesper service the fourth Sunday of September. Elder Thomas Fiddick, of Cameron, was a recent guest speaker. He preached the morning of September 16.

Stake President Ward A. Hougas visited Richmond on Thursday evening, September 27. He preached to an appreciative congregation and, in spite of a town festival, attendance was very good.

Kansas City Stake

Armourdale Church

Armourdale has been doing very well. Some recent speakers have been Elders J. A. Holsworth, C. G. Mesley, T. L. McCormich, pastor, and J. P. Warren, associate pastor.

The orchestra, working hard under James Hawkins' direction, has given some nice programs at these places, Bennington Heights, Quindaro, Atherton, Missouri, and Pleasant Hill, Missouri.

This group was happy to have a large representation at the recent stake leadership school, and hopes to inaugurate in its church school, directed by Mrs. P. McCann and teachers, the new ideas of progress gained.

Mrs. John Goodfellow, supervisor of the junior department, is recuperating from a recent illness and operation and will return to her work in a few weeks.

The young people's class, Mrs. Thomas Devaney, teacher, had a "cleaning party" recently. They scrubbed, made minor repairs, and had a general house-cleaning for the church. This class is now studying the new history of the church by Inez Davis. Its drama committee is planning activities for the winter season.

Armourdale Church is planning a most interesting rally day October 21, and wishes to extend a cordial invitation to all old friends.

Argentine Church

Interest is holding up well at Argentine Church. The O. B. K.'s, under the direction of Frank Tuttle, are meeting weekly with some success.

The local recently purchased thirty-five new Hymnals which fill a long-felt want.

Recent speakers have been Elders C. C. Babb, Harry W. Paxton, Joseph Curtis, Daniel P. Cooper, and R. S. Salyards.

Central Church

Pastor C. E. Wight is taking a much needed and deserved vacation during the month of October, and Elder George Mesley is taking his place.

Quindaro Church

Quindaro is proud of the recent calling of three of its young men into the priesthood, namely, Joe Davis, Irvin Luke, and Charles Graham. Brother Davis was called to the office of deacon, Brother Luke to the office of teacher, and Brother Graham to the office of priest. Quindaro congregation, as well as the entire Kansas City Stake, is expecting much in the way of service and promotion of God's work from these young men.

The women's department, headed by Rebecca Green, has been very effective in its contribution to Quindaro, both spiritually and financially during the past four months. They organized several circles, making it possible for each group to be individual and more effective in contributions. The captains of the circles are Dora Halverson, Mary Schlieder, Robbie Fryette, Lois Luke, Jessie Penticuff, and Beulah Davis. The nature of their activities thus far have included a visit to Fulton's Funeral Home, individual effort in gifts, a country fair at the church, White King Soap demonstration, a cafeteria supper with a special program, teas, and the selling of toilet soap. As a result of these projects the women have gained in profits for the church $118.50 in four months, which is a marvelous help, not only to Quindaro, but to the entire stake.

Pigeonhole

■ The Pigeon's Ballad on Reading.

There was a girl in our town
And she had wondrous eyes;
She read about the movie stars
And all their private lives.

She read about the accidents,
Divorces, crimes, and sin,
And all the scandal that our world
Was sadly weltering in.

She spent a lot of money
To read this trashy stuff;
And the funny thing about it was
She never had enough.

She never read the Herald,
She never went to church,
She never thought about her soul;
She left it in the lurch.

One day she met an accident
And, passing in her checks,
She stood before St. Peter,
As every soul expects.

"I'd like a nice apartment
On Celestial Boulevard,
A view towards the river, please,
And a job that isn't hard."

St. Peter smiled at her request
And quietly bowed his head.
"I'll have to see your luggage first,"
The gray old guardian said.

Surprised, she looked behind her
Where, labeled with her name,
Were all her books and magazines,
Much to her grief and shame.

St. Peter looked at several—
His face then longer grew—
"We can't have these in heaven," he said,
"It really wouldn't do."

"This stuff is not the sort of thing
We print upon our press.
I think you'd better go below.
You're at the wrong address!"

■ They Never Change!

The shorn lamb and the hungry wolf met on Wall Street. They both showed the effects of the depression. The lamb had nothing left to shear. The wolf had nothing left in his teeth. He could not remember when he had eaten. The two enemies were almost sympathetic towards each other.

"Believe me, I've learned a lot," said the wolf, looking at the lamb's thin ribs.

"Yes," said the lamb, looking at his big teeth, "but you haven't changed!"

The voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all that will hear may hear.—Doctrines and Covenants 1: 3.

A United Church

We have a number of great obligations. One of them is to keep together, simply as a matter of mutual aid and protection. There are many things that can separate us. There is only one thing that can keep us together—the love of Christ.

In the early days when a caravan set out across the western plains bound for California, the people kept together because their united strength was greater than that of so many lone persons. The man who was mounted on a swift horse might become impatient at the slow progress of the heavy wagons drawn by their patient teams of plodding oxen. Often he would ride ahead but he would likely sight a band of roving Indians and come back to the train. Poorer people, tramping along on foot, struggled to keep up with the team simply because their safety depended upon the protection of the little traveling community. Weaker animals that were taken along were sometimes abandoned if they could not stand the pace. Separation from the caravan meant only one thing—death.

There is no greater human law than one that was stated long ago; "In unity there is strength." We live in an age of great corporations, of large combinations of commercial and political power. Individuals, however worthy, cannot marshal the means necessary to assure the success of commercial ventures. Only through cooperating with other individuals can they hope to succeed. The world is dominated by great associations of power.

There is a lesson for all churches in these developments. Indeed a number of the Protestant churches have already heeded that lesson and are acting accordingly. The movement towards church unity is growing steadily in this country, bringing together factions that were once separated over differences that have now been forgotten. The United Church in Canada presents quite as notable an example of church unity as anything in the United States.

These developments, too, have a lesson which our church must heed. We have been happy to observe an increasing strength in unity in our ranks. There is less disposition to argue and differ than we have had heretofore. There is a realization that the way we live is more important than the way we talk. We must enjoy the advantage of harmony in our thinking. But what we need at this point is to realize our hope of seeing the church move forward together. Some, it is true, have been impatient with the slowness of our progress. Some have attempted to leave the ranks and hasten on toward goals they saw so clearly, but have realized that little can be accomplished alone. Others lag behind and retard the progress of the work.

We have reached a time when there is greater need than ever before for intelligence and consecration in our church work. We need men for specific tasks. When the church members of an earlier day went to Nauvoo, they realized a need for architects, builders, and skilled workmen in all lines of endeavor. In answer to this need, they made a special effort to bring people possessing particular talents to Nauvoo. Today, after many years have passed, the old homes that were built by those people still stand as a silent witness to their skill and their efficiency as builders.

Today, our realization of Zion waits until we shall have students and experts to give us the laboratory directions for putting into practice our divine ideals. The Zion we hope to build will need economists, engineers, and skilled artisans for carrying out its task just as these people were needed in Old Nauvoo and elsewhere in the early development of the church.

United in the love of Christ we can surely stand against all shocks that may come against us. Divided and indifferent, each pursuing his separate way, we shall certainly fall and fail to realize the hope that stirs in our hearts. The need today is for a united church, a church united in intelligence, a church united by training, a church united by consecration to the ideals that are ours.

How Is Zion Going to Like Me?

By Gertrude Bardin

I sat on the porch in the morning sunshine. The air still held the coolness of the night—it was just beginning to warm up for the day. The birds were fluttering and chirping in the big maple tree, and the lawn and shrubs sparkled with dew.

I held my breath—one moment of enchantment! I wanted to spread out my arms and laugh and sing, but I dared not—I am grown-up, and people would stare. So I hugged my joy of living to myself and watched the people hurry by like driven things to their office or work. I wanted to tell them I liked them and I liked the fine morning we were sharing, but instead I just sat there thinking.

All so nearly perfect—and yet somehow, flat. Something was lacking. The very heart of this lovely morning was somehow cold. What was missing? Then suddenly I knew. It was the conscious love of God, and the fine spirit of brotherhood!

And as I sat there thinking it came to me that the big question is not, "How am I going to like Zion?" but "How is Zion going to like me?"

We study about Zion as an economic fellowship, a "sharing in adversity as in prosperity" all in the spirit of brotherly love. And my thoughts go back to the Northern California Reunion where I see again a group of men working away all through one night and part of one day, dirty, hard work, clearing out and re-laying a broken drainage system. They had come there, those men, for something very different, but in the spirit of brotherly love they were willing to share in adversity, lending their efforts to the good of all. Are we all going to be able to so live the zionic plan?

How am I going to like Zion? No, how is Zion going to like me? Am I going to fit in?

My aim is to be fine enough to live there, that someday I may see a morning in Zion, with the yellow sunshine streaming down warming dew-drenched flowers and singing birds, and above and about it all the great spirit of love making the dawning of that day in Zion perfect.

SALINAS, CALIFORNIA.

Trevor Norton

Birmingham, England

This seventeen year old English brother is a successful athlete, an organist and pianist active in church work, and maintains a high standing in his school studies. Six cups and a medal have come to him for his athletic ability: the large cup is his this year for the senior championship mile race, which won him the position of captain in all his school athletics. One of the cups was earned in his thirteenth year for clearing eighteen feet and five inches in the broad jump. Brother Norton finds clean living essential to physical fitness in his various activities. He is not a smoker, nor is he an addict to any of the "habits."

We are indebted to Brother Peter S. Whalley for the picture and the account.

Three things must a man possess if his soul would live,

And know life's perfect good—
Three things would the all-supplying Father give—

Bread, Beauty and Brotherhood.

Although my cares do hang upon my soul

Like mines of lead, the greatness of my spirit

Shall shake the sullen weight off.

Home Life in France

French women do not dash about together to shops or movies to the extent we do. One reason for this is that the men come home to lunch. It is extraordinary how much this midday recess alters feminine existence when, instead of a long day to be filled with sexless activities, there are only brief intervals between the appearances of the husbands. Moreover, it permits men to take a closer and more practical interest in the details of their homes. Partly for this reason French husbands often give their wives a companionship which American women can only find in one another. Husbands like to be consulted about household matters, such as menus and decorations, and they are often able and willing to advise their wives in the important matter of dress. Since my marriage I have seldom bought a dress or hat without my husband's advice, and when I have I usually repented it, for he sees me more clearly than I see myself.

Her children, too, take more of a Frenchwoman's time than do those of American mothers as a rule. She gives perhaps less attention to their bodily development than we do; but to be her children's companion and confidante, to be with them in their play and work is a French mother's conscious aim, and for that she will sacrifice everything else. Few French children do their home work alone; father and mother pore over the lessons, explaining them, and the whole family is interested in the school curriculum. In such existences, oriented toward the home, the husband and the children, there is little room for the various activities which American women enjoy together.—Charlotte T. Muret in Harper's Magazine.

Judgment Day

The nations are in the proving;
Each day is Judgment Day;
And the peoples He finds wanting Shall pass—by the Shadowy Way.

—John Oxenham

I say we ought to reverence books, to look at them as useful and mighty things. If they are good and true, whether they are about religion or politics, farming, trade, or medicine, they are the message of Christ, the maker of all things, the teacher of all truth.—Kingsley.

Prodigious actions may as well be done
By weaver's issue, as by prince's son.

—Dryden.

Sister Elizabeth McDowell Passes

After a relatively short critical illness, Sister Elizabeth McDowell passed from this life Tuesday, October 9, more than two months after her eightieth birthday. She had been in poor health for a number of years, but survived her companion, W. A. McDowell, who passed away May 31.

Sister McDowell and her companion gave their lives to a perfect union devoted to church work. As one they sacrificed to keep Brother McDowell in the mission field. As one they maintained their home and raised their family to love and serve the church. As one they have gone nobly on to their reward. His preceding her was like nothing so much as being called away for a time on another mission, and now she goes to join him in a new home.

Happily, they were permitted to enjoy a few years of rest and companionship in Independence before this last separation. In the twilight of their lives they kept home together, met their friends, and attended services where work was not exacted of them.

The sympathy of the whole church is extended to her children and their families.

Begin the morning by saying to thyself, I shall meet with the busybody, the ungrateful, arrogant, deceitful, envious, unsocial; all these happen to them by reason of their ignorance of what is good and evil. But I who have seen the nature of the good, that it is beautiful, and of the bad, that it is ugly, and the nature of him who does wrong, that it is akin to me, not only of the same blood, but that it participates in the same intelligence and the same portion of the divinity, I can neither be injured by any of them, for no one can fix on me what is ugly, nor can I be angry with my kinsman nor hate him.—Marcus Aurelius.

Some books are our servants. They run errands for us. They are mental drudges. They bring us information; they tell us news; they keep us up-to-date; they equip us for our trade. But the great books are not our slaves; they are our masters; we sit at their feet to learn. "Look," they say, and looking, we catch new visions of life's insignificance. "Consider," they say, and considering, we are captured by a new truth and our spiritual power is multiplied. A man's life is made by the hours when great ideas lay hold upon him and except by way of living persons there is no channel down which great ideas come more often into human lives than by way of books.

The Old West Door Pays Dividends

Twenty years later! The alumni believe in Graceland enough to send their children back to the college when it comes time to choose a school.

The boys and girls in the picture above are the sons and daughters of Graceland alumni. Quite a fine showing, and the picture tells a real story.

The Old West Door pays dividends. The spirit of Graceland builds loyalties for the college, and it builds loyalties for the church.

What the Loan Fund Means to One Mother

She writes of appreciation, faith, cooperation and works.

September 21, 1934

Mr. N. Ray Carmichael
Graceland College
Lamoni, Iowa

Dear Brother Carmichael:

Having been away from home a few weeks, I failed to get your letter for payment on _____'s account. Brother Carmichael, I can never express my gratitude to Graceland and those who made the Scholarship Loan Fund possible for the help that has been given to my son, _____. When he first started to Graceland, we could not see how his courses could be completed but I knew that God was able to bring about anything that was right so I prayed and have continued to pray all the time, every night of my life. I have asked God to open the way. I knew he would some way.

Several times when my son was a little chap I saw God spare his life and bring him back from the Valley of Death when no human power could help. I knew God had spared him for something so I have had faith, and right now I know God will still hear my prayers and so provide that _____ can pay what he owes; besides, his father and I pledge ourselves to see it paid, even if it is slow. We are not earning much, the $10.00 we sent is all that we get when our bare living expenses are paid but now I have work and I can help some too. I will send all I earn except the tenth I pay the good Lord who has blessed us so much, and all together I think you will be satisfied with our effort.

Why have I written you all this? Because I want you to know that my son is really worth while and that I do so much appreciate the help others have given him. May God bless the cause of Zion.

Sincerely,

To have paid one's way through college for two years, to have made a good record, and then to find that circumstances would prevent the completion of a course are the facts that faced a young man and his mother. The disheartening problem was solved not by Graceland but by the church members who have contributed on "College Day" creating a fund to meet such emergencies.

This letter of appreciation came to the college a few weeks ago with a payment on enrollment fees and the sentiments truly represent the ideals and policies of those who established the Loan Fund.

FAITH

This letter tells the story of the faith of a family who desire to make an intelligent preparation for life's work. With a prayer on their lips and a determination in their hearts, they met the needs of the first two years.

COOPERATION

A third year was necessary to complete the training and make possible the opportunity to capitalize on the time and effort already spent. The promise for aid from the Loan Fund brings a response that mother and father will stand back of the extended credit pledging the repayment of the borrowed money should the son not find immediate productive employment.

WORKS

This family too is not resting in satisfaction because help has come to them, but the mother has arranged to work to help meet the need of the year. And again, although their problem is serious, they are not forgetting the General Church. They pay their tithes so that together, the Church may grow and the cause of Zion may be advanced.

This letter is a testimony of what "College Day" means. The need is great this year. Help expand Graceland's services.

Thoughts for Today

Robin Hood

Most of us are familiar with the name and some of the stories surrounding the legendary bandit hero of early English times, Robin Hood. In the manner of tradition, some of the adventures ascribed to him were really taken from the lives of historical personages who had achieved less fame in literature than he. Ballads and tales concerning him tell how he pillaged wealthy nobles and greedy church men and gave a part of the spoils to the poor. The people loved him for his boldness and daring, his kindness to the poor and weak, and because he was the enemy of those who exploited and oppressed them.

The Robin Hood tradition dies hard, but when the cold light of truth is turned upon the life of any professional robber he is often found to be cruel, rapacious, and merciless. As an enemy of society he is often destroyed early in his career.

We have Robin Hoods in our own time—people who have achieved a kind of notorious popularity while still living. We have our Al Capones and Francisco Villas and our Dillingers. Strangely, they win a measure of public sympathy that they do not at all deserve.

There is another type of Robin Hood becoming a popular hero less through force of arms and more through graft and shrewdness. He is the wily politician who dips his hands deep into the government treasuries and throws a part of the spoils carelessly to the people. He has the doubtful virtue, like Robin Hood, of being generous—with other people's property. Since he robs the government (which is not a person) his pillaging is not taken by the unthoughtful as a menace to society. No matter who has to pay the bills, the thoughtless persons who vote for him do not question where he gets his bounty nor how much he takes so long as he throws a part of the spoils to them.

It is upon exactly this point that our appraisal of the Robin Hoods should be based, that is: How much does it cost to support them? The Robin Hoods in politics, the Robin Hoods in business, the Robin Hoods upon our highways and on our city streets like to appear before the public in the role of benefactors, but the public pays a tremendous cost for the privilege of enjoying their bounty. It costs the country many millions of dollars every year to support the political and commercial Robin Hoods. The only excuse that is ever offered for them is something shallow and silly like this: He is kind to his family; he is good to his mother; he will share the last dollar with a friend; he will never turn you down if you are in need. People do not stop to reflect that for every dollar that is given out in such charity, hundreds are spent to pay political hirelings and to keep the machinery of organized robbery going.

As long as the American people continue to believe the Robin Hood legend in politics, that long will they be the victims of political corruption. Until we can give evidence of intellectual maturity enough to evaluate the Robin Hood legends at their true worth, we shall remain in our present semi-civilized state. Taxes will be high, business will be bad, government will cost more than we can afford to pay for it and almost more than it is worth.

Nothing but our persistent romanticism can conceal the fact that Robin Hood was a thief and a racketeer; perhaps better than some of the people he robbed, but not much better. Nothing but our romanticism, our blindness and self interest can picture the modern political pirate in the role of a benefactor. He steals gold pieces from our treasuries and throws coppers at our feet.

Sometime we ought to grow up. Sometime, perhaps, we shall.

A Morning Prayer

Let me today do something that shall take
A little sadness from the world's vast store,
And may I be so favored as to make
Of joy's too scanty sum a little more.

Let me not hurt by any selfish deed or thoughtless word,
The heart of foe or friend;
Nor would I pass unseeing worthy need,
Or sin by silence where I should defend.

However meager is my worldly wealth
Let me give something that shall aid my kind,
A word of courage or a thought of health,
Dropped as I pass for troubled hearts to find.

Let me tonight look back across the span
'Twixt dawn and dark and to my conscience say,
"Because of some good act to beast or man,
The world is better that I live today."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Are We Converted?

By Dwight D. W. Davis

THERE are many things in life about which, for various reasons, we do nothing. Few of us—indeed, if any—become greatly perturbed over the observation of such regular phenomena as the sun's rising and setting or the blowing of the wind. Why not? Simply because we appreciate the utter futility of our attempting to influence these extraneous, universal forces.

Recognition of powers that lie beyond our control is one reason, then, for our refusal to do. But far too frequently our own indifference is the basic cause in back of our passivity.

We tolerate an economic order that promises nothing but insecurity for the masses because of our indifference to a plan that provides for the just needs and wants of all. Political corruption, crime, war—all of these evils are created by and perpetuated through our indifference toward justice and peace on earth, good will toward men.

For more than a century Zion has languished and all but perished because of our indifference as a people to the restored gospel of Jesus Christ and the divine plan of salvation. Our indifference to Zion has been the sort that has led us to draw near unto God with our lips but with our hearts to withdraw far from Him.

We should remember that God, himself, can do nothing with a Latter Day Saint church composed of religiously indifferent people.

With these thoughts as a background, let us answer the question that serves as the title of this article: "Are We Converted?"

WHAT IS CONVERSION?

Any answer we might give to the question, "Are We Converted?" is dependent upon our attitude and the concept we hold of conversion. What, then, does it mean to be converted?

Conversion is a spiritual and moral transformation from belief to conviction. It implies a change from mere external appearances and unworthy or ulterior motives, to interior purity and altruism. True conversion results in a change of heart: a change from worldliness to Godliness; a change from the base to the virtuous.

Some things in life represent an "all or none" proposition. Either we have the measles or we don't have them; either we're engaged to be married or we aren't. We don't have a half case of measles neither are we a fourth nor three fourths engaged. These are "all or none" situations.

Conversion falls in the same category. We are either converted to the gospel or we aren't. There's nothing one third or seven eighths about it. Saint John must have had the same thought presented to him when he wrote, "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou are lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth."

To use the language of Saint John, those who are "hot" are the converted. These are they who thrust in their sickles and reap while it is called today, for to be converted is to work in righteousness for the salvation of man.

HOW ARE WE CONVERTED?

Before we can win other souls for the kingdom we must ourselves be converted. Jesus said, "But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou are converted, strengthen thy brethren." How then are we converted?

Some people are converted to a cause emotionally. Their loyalty is won by approaching them through their feelings. Others are converted socially. Their attachment is to a personality or to personalities. On the other hand there are those who are converted (for lack of a better word) "actively." These join the church because it promises them duties and responsibilities, and because it provides them with unlimited, concrete avenues for the expression of Christian service. Still other people are converted intellectually. They adhere to the work because of a clear grasp of the church's theology, its perfect organization, and because of the intellectual challenge of its social program.

But neither emotional, social, nor "active" conversion is enough, as we shall see in a moment, for the most part they must be tempered and regulated by the intellectual.

Under the emotional stress of the moment many people say and do things and make decisions which they later have cause to regret. One's emotions are but fleeting vagaries. A reasoned conclusion, based upon all the marshalled facts, is much more stable.

When I write the above I do not for a moment deny the place emotions play in religion and life. What I am saying is this: they are as apt to lead one way as another. As long as the emotions are based upon something more substantial than themselves they serve a very noble purpose. More often than not, they are the driving force that impel one forward. But "the glory of God is intelligence."

Conversion to a personality is dangerous. This sort of conversion has, in the past, worked to the detriment of the church, for when the person has fallen many have gone with him. We should have learned by now that allegiance should be to the church; our faith should be in God.

"Active" conversion is not enough. We know people who are so anxious to be of service that they're "all a-flutter." One's zeal to do should not outrun his wisdom. Our energy must be directed intelligently, and where the reverse is in operation, irreparable harm is often done.

Unless conversion of the emotional, social, and "active" type is tempered and directed by the intellectual it is not stable conversion but that which vacillates. Intelligent conversion and activity implies that we visualize the work in its entirety and then integrate and harmonize our part with the whole.

But have I forgotten spiritual conversion? Not at all for it is a balanced ration of each of the foregoing. In the building of the Kingdom, which to us means Zion, emotional conversion gives us the will to do; social conversion is necessary for Zion is a task of the group; "active" conversion motivates us forward; intellectual conversion gives us a solid foundation upon which to build; all of these together—spiritual conversion—should unite us in the peace of "fraternal cooperation in service to man and devoted consecration to God and His work."

WHY MUST WE BE CONVERTED?

The reader will not pause long in answering that question. We all recognize that no great and lasting reformatory program was ever consummated through either an unconverted leadership or following of people.

The Magna Charta was signed by King John, June 15, 1215, because the English barons were convinced certain rights and principles were necessary for the security of political and personal liberty. The people of the thirteen colonies ratified the Declaration of Independence, repudiating any connection with Great Britain, because they were convinced it was better to exist as free and independent states.

This church was brought into being because a small group was convinced God had spoken. And if this church is to fulfill the measure of its creation it will be because another small group is converted to the revelations of God.

Brother Chesworth expressed the same thought in "The Readers Say" section of the August 14 issue of the Herald. He wrote, "one requisite every Latter Day Saint should have is a strong conviction that this is the church of God and that his influence and Spirit are with the church." Believing this to be just another church will never enable us to redeem Zion. We must be wholly converted to the fact that this is the church of Jesus Christ.

TO WHAT MUST WE BE CONVERTED?

Many of us have been converted to the theology of the church. This is desirable but it is not enough. We find those who are converted to an acceptance of priesthood leadership. This, too, is essential, but it stops short. Then there are those whose conversion is to the church school plan of religious education. It is good that the majority are, but we must go farther, for this is but conversion to a part. To what, then, must we be converted?

We must be converted to the whole program of the church—to its spiritual, educational, and social aspects. Under these three main categories every phase of the work of the church might be listed. It embraces priesthood, religious education, missionary work, and all aspects of the financial law. Anything short of this on the part of the membership but procrastinates the day of the Lord's coming.

WHAT TYPE OF CONVERSION IS NECESSARY?

Conversion of the highest order is not something static—it is a dynamic process. Conversion is not a once and for all proposition, for a real Latter Day Saint is constantly being converted to something higher and better. This is the only way measured growth will come.

A close friend recently informed me that when he joined the church it wasn't because he knew so much about it. That knowledge has come to him since his baptism through arduous, painstaking study. Because of that effort, he has converted himself. Through continued application his vision of the work is expanding. Concomitant with the expansion there is continuous conversion.

What type of conversion, then, must we have if we are to accomplish the purposes of God? The answer is found in the life of Alma, the son of Alma, account of which is recorded in the Book of Mormon, Mosiah 11:159-207. The narration here given quite closely parallels the conversion of Saul as set forth in the ninth chapter of Acts.

One day while Alma was on his way to lead astray the people of God, an angel of the Lord appeared unto him and cried, "Alma, arise, and stand forth, for why persecuteth thou the church of God? For the Lord hath said, this is my church, and I will establish it; and nothing shall overthrow it save it is the transgression of my people."

"The astonishment of Alma was so great, that he became dumb, that he (Continued on page 1324.)

Where Should Our Young People Seek Higher Education?

By V. D. Ruch

"What is your belief in God?" An instructor of philosophy asked this question of a young man about to graduate from college. "I don't believe in any God," he answered. "The Gods that philosophers write about are only the creations of their own minds. Nobody has proved that there is a God; and I won't believe anything I can't prove. Neither do I believe in any future life. When we die that is the end of us."

This was an intelligent young man, one of the best in his class. The instructor asked him another question: "What is your opinion of marriage?" "Marriage is only an antiquated custom," John answered at once. "It keeps one from being looked down upon for committing adultery. I don't believe there is anything sacred about it. Some day we will get over the outworn idea that there is." Here is an unequivocal renunciation of the very principles of our American civilization.

This professor is not alone in feeling that his efforts have been in vain and have failed to produce desirable results. Every day the heart of some mother or father is rent by similar bold opinions from their own boy or girl. Parents sacrifice much to send their children to school, especially in these times of distress, and then day after day they see the standard of morals being subtly undermined in their children—especially those fundamental moral principles: belief in God and the sanctity of the home. How long, they wonder, can our civilization endure this weakening of the moral fiber?

A business man with wide acquaintanceship with economic and religious movements voiced a warning to society a few years ago when he said, "Civilization can stand, in a measure, economic breakdowns and financial debacles; but when you break down and destroy man's temples of reverence, his regard for holy things, his belief in religion, and his hope of eternity, you simply rend asunder the very foundation on which society rests."

What determines how a child will use his knowledge? Parents recognize that schools are managed with the utmost efficiency in imparting knowledge to their children. The vast treasures of intellectual research are unlocked to the minds of the students. The different sciences are in the hands of the student to use as he sees fit. But what determines how he will use his knowledge? Many young people are using their learning aright and are becoming valuable and efficient citizens. Others are using their knowledge to perpetrate their own desires in defiance of civil and natural laws. Many in this latter class are becoming lawbreakers and hardened criminals, and as a result many intellectuals are behind prison walls.

A student's acquisition of factual knowledge is no inoculation against criminal tendencies. The greatest crimes have been committed by highly intelligent men and women. Thus, our penal institutions boast of having inmates from the best known colleges and universities in America. Some of these are now teaching classes in prison. In January, 1933, correspondence courses were opened for the prisoners of Stateville and Joliet prisons in Illinois. The school began with 22 students, and 64 other prisoners sent in their applications for courses. Eminent convicts are the instructors. All of these instructors have an excellent education, but their deviating from the path of rectitude evinces a lack of some essential quality in their education. They attained knowledge but they failed to develop that requisite quality we call wisdom—the prudence and discretion in using knowledge, the power of true and just discernment. They might be likened to a marine crew who set sail in a mighty ocean liner, fully confident of their knowledge of the working parts of the great vessel, but without chart or compass. Thousands of our best young people are graduated yearly from our high schools and colleges, and are sent out on the sea of life without a spiritual chart or compass. They are confident that a sound knowledge of facts will guide them through, but many of them are being wrecked on the rocky shores of life.

Lewis E. Lawes, warden of Sing Sing says: "The fact remains . . . that there is a missing link between education and character which our public school system has not been able to discover. In our emphasis on intelligence and brains, we often forget or neglect to detect the uses made of both." Mr. Lawes deplors the fact that our educational system is turning out boys and girls who are proficient in figures, yet whose proficiency is only too often utilized in cheating and robbing people. It is possible that the jurist was right when he declared that we are "putting multiplication tables ahead of the Sermon on the Mount." It is quite evident that some integral fundamental factor is lamentably lacking in the present educational program. Might not this lack be religious education in the lives of the students.

Glimpses of European News

By John W. Rushton

TWO recent movements in the realm of archæology will be of interest. A committee has been formed and exact inquiry made by Sir Charles Peers and others into the condition of the remarkable Greek, Roman and mediæval monuments which are in Cyprus.

Sir Flinders Petrie, the world famous archæologist now eighty-one years of age, is going to northern Syria accompanied by Lady Petrie. This will be his most romantic adventure for he will seek for a civilization which flourished 5,000 years ago. Two students from England will also accompany Sir Flinders. "If we could light upon the source of the various foreign things of high civilization which we found imported into South Palestine, it would be a very important discovery indeed. This is an old civilization, to which, so far, we have no key."

THE GOVERNMENT is not prepared to raise the age of school attendance, Lord Halifax told the House of Lords recently. This was on the grounds of finance. Editorial comment: beginning this year owing to abnormal birth-rate following the war, an abnormally large number of children will be thrown on to the labor market. It is estimated the total addition to the number of children between fourteen and eighteen will increase steadily to the peak year 1937, when there will be 443,000 more juvenile employed or desiring employment than in 1933. Lord Halifax stated that the cost of the extra year at school would be about £8,000,000. ($40,000,000)

IN JULY Mr. Ernest Rhys celebrated his 75th, birthday. He is the founder and editor of "Dent's Everyman" series of classics, a collection of the world's best literature at popular prices.

THE ANNUAL REPORT of the Chief Inspector of Factories discloses that last year 13,260 persons were injured and 688 killed in Great Britain's factories and workshops. Increased mechanization tends to dull the sensitiveness; and the dull monotony causes the worker to lose his sense of risk.

ENGLAND'S VOLUNTARY HOSPITALS have been having a hard time, but the latest Statistical Review issued by King Edward's Hospital Fund is encouraging. The total voluntary gifts to these institutions in 1933 amounted to £1,853,000. Receipts for service amounted to £1,500,000. Adding receipts on buildings and endowments there is a grand total of over £4,000,000. for the 145 hospitals on the list.

IN ENGLAND AND WALES every year the police courts send about 20,000 persons to prison for failing to pay sums of money. A departmental committee of the home office have made a number of constructive suggestions to deal with these matters. Among them: "in cases of default under maintenance or affiliation orders the Court shall have power, if it sees fit, to order attachment of the defaulter's wages."

DEALERS of antiquities and oriental art and curiosities in London report that within the last few weeks there has been a rush by women to buy Thibetan "prayer-wheels." These hundreds of women are using them for "fortune telling" and to bring "good luck." Mrs. Alexander Scott, an expert in Thibetan art remarks that blessing comes only if the wheel is spun in one direction. If it should be spun in the opposite direction then "Cursing follows."

A SOCIAL EVENT of great interest to the nations of Great Britain and Greece was the announcement of King George's approval of Prince George's engagement to Princess Marina, daughter of the Prince and Princess Nicholas of Greece. Prince George is 31 years of age and the Princess is in her 28th year. The Princess speaks English fluently and is a member of the Greek Orthodox Church. The Prince of Wales and the Duke of Gloucester are the only sons of the King and Queen unmarried.

PLANS are well in hand for the erection of large central mission halls in industrial centers by the Methodist Church in Britain. Three old chapels belonging to the former United Methodist, Primitive Methodist and Wesleyan churches will be sold, closed or demolished and their place taken by an up to date central hall with facilities for recreation and entertainment as well as spiritual welfare. These central halls will be equipped with "Talkies" for the "Cinema" or moving picture is destined to play a big part in religious work according to the Methodists.

The different aspects of the social and industrial life are being examined with a view of adoptions of similar successful methods. These include the Unemployment Insurance System, Civil Service, Transport and Grid Electricity system.

DR. HJALMAR SCHACT, Hitler's Minister of Economics in Germany, having practically unlimited authority over German people, their finance, their trade and industry is attracting considerable world attention. This man played a great part in enabling Germany to rid herself of reparation payments. His plans as announced in his speech at the opening of the Leipzig Autumn Trade Fair are indicated in the following: "He plans to gain his ends by threatening commodity prices throughout the world." As "the Australian wool producer, the American cotton grower, the Lancashire cotton spinner, the Herring fishers of Scotland and the orange growers of Spain."

The Supreme Council at Work

The Supreme Council of Zion's Christian Legion met at the call of Legion Commander at Lansing, Michigan, September 1 and 2. There was a number of matters that needed attention in order to effect a necessary compactness of organization. This need had been felt for some time, but circumstances made it impracticable for the council to meet at an earlier date. The following are a number of matters in which a decision was reached and which will prove of great importance to the organization.

First, it was determined that all money paid for dues should pass from the hands of the group captains to the company treasurer. From his hands it should pass on to the divisional treasurer, who in turn will forward a check for the amount he has on hand to Elmer C. Evans, 23 Elmwood Street, Grand Rapids, Michigan, on the fifteenth of each month. (Note that the transfer of this money should take place every month.) All company treasurers should see that their money is forwarded in time for the divisional treasurer to get the check to Brother Evans on the fifteenth. This has nothing to do with the tithing money which will pass through the regular channels.

Second, the matter of the distribution of the tithing cards was transferred to Mr. S. Gordan Brown, director of solicitation, 215 North Seymour Street, Lansing, Michigan. All wishing tithing cards please take notice.

The council ordered the printing of 1,000 pamphlets, the manuscript of which was written by D. T. Williams. This is a work of approximately twenty pages. It sets forth briefly the history of the rise of the organization, its objectives, and the system by which it hopes to reach the ends desired. This pamphlet can be purchased from S. Gordan Brown (215 North Seymour Street, Lansing, Michigan), at ten cents per single copy, or five cents each in quantities of ten or more. Don't fail to get a copy of this for it carries a statement of the responsibilities of officers. Every officer especially should have one as should every member. Send your order now, they are just coming off the press. Louise Evans has been elected by the council as legion historian. In addition to this, she will have the responsibility of caring for music and dramatics. With the help of others, she has entered into the creation of plays and dramatic materials with enthusiasm. The development of the musical talent also goes on apace. She is insistent that our hopes for a General Conference Choir of 200 voices from the Great Lakes Regional Territory for the conference of 1936 shall be a realization.

We back her in this splendid vision and we hope that every member of the Legion will do likewise. If you would be interested in either of these lines of work contact Sister Evans at 240 Travis Street, Northeast, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Percy Farrow, Allen Pohly, E. C. Evans, and Louise Evans were appointed on a committee to arrange a system of credits through which those responsible for the elevation of members to the various councils will determine their procedure. This has to do largely with the "equivalents" mentioned in the document headed "Outlines and Objectives," which was published in the Herald of April 17, 1934, and reprinted in the pamphlet mentioned above. This committee was also given the responsibility of working out the ceremonies for the installation of officers and the initiation of members.

D. T. Williams was authorized by the council to act as the chairman of a committee of his own choosing to initiate and complete arrangements for the general convention which will meet the last Saturday and Sunday in June. The other members of this committee will be announced soon. The chairman has in mind making this the biggest thing of its kind ever held by the church in Ontario or Michigan. He urges the utmost cooperation on the part of all who will be invited to assist in this task.

It was decided that all Legion officers should be elected annually, the general officers at the annual convention, and the divisional officers at a time determined by the divisional convention. These latter are to take office as and when the convention concerned shall decide. Company officers are to be elected in time to take office October 1 of each year, but all company officers now elected will continue in office until October 1, 1935. We will continue this report in the Herald of next week. Watch for it for there are a number of items of great interest to appear.

D. T. WILLIAMS.

This is no time to play at religion. If it means anything it means everything. The world cannot be saved by platitudes or resolutions. It can be redeemed by a dynamic, vital faith, such as sent the martyrs to the rack and the Christ to the Cross.—William H. Leach in "A Plea for Spiritual Leadership," Church Management.

Jesus and the Jews

Jesus was a Jew. He was not partly Jewish, like Robert Browning, or Charles Kingsley, or Edwin Booth, or John Howard Payne, or Leon Gambetta, or General William Booth. He was a Jew with meager kinship with the Gentiles. He attended the Jewish synagogue. He read the Jewish Scriptures. He kept the Jewish festivals. He loved the Jews and wept over Jerusalem's decline. All of his disciples were Jews, and he said:

"Salvation comes from the Jews."

There is no indication, from anything that he ever said or did, that he thought the religion of which he was the embodiment would break with Judaism. He inferred that it would break with the Jewish hierarchy, but not with the Jewish people.

For the first decade hardly any but Jews were members of the Christian church. They came in by multitudes. Paul's liberalism for the gospel and Jewish conservatism for the law clashed. Racial prejudices entered into the discussion. Jewish preparation came to default and the door was set ajar for Greek leadership. Instead of liberal Jewish thought dominating the church, Greek thought dominated, to the injury of Christianity. The Greeks had no background for a great religion such as the Jews had. Primarily, Christianity needed the Jewish point of view, and theoretically held to it; but practically it yielded to Greek thought, and then Roman imperialistic philosophy, which opened the way to all sorts of departures, scandalizing Christianity from that time to this. I have often thought that, if liberal Jews of Paul's type had been numerous enough to control largely the church through those early centuries, it would have been more alive to Jesus and the Jewish prophets whom Jesus interpreted.

I do not know that I am interested in Jews becoming converts to our present-day Christianity, joining the Presbyterians, or Disciples, or Episcopalians, or Baptists, or Lutherans, or Catholics, or Methodists, or any other of the two hundred and more varieties of Christians—in many instances taking vows to line up against other Christians as a condition of membership in the new Christian alliance. But I am profoundly interested in Jews and Christians working together until another type of Christianity emerges, so that neither will absorb the other, but both will contribute such understanding of Jesus as will give him his rightful place in the thought both of Jews and Gentiles, which he has not yet had of either, but which he some day will have of both, for the stock of David holds the key for a reconciled world. Christianity needs the Jews. Indeed, it will never reach its best until it is grafted into the Jewish stock. And the Jews no less need Christianity.—Peter Ainslie in Some Experiments in Living.

Bread

LOUISA carried out her plans to cut down their running expenses. She had been serving a number of things that were not vital to health, simply because she loved to cook. She now shopped for food materials that were cheap as well as wholesome. Potatoes and winter vegetables she purchased from a farmer, who also sold her milk, butter, eggs, and buttermilk at a great saving over what she would have had to pay in town. Whenever she found a bushel of good apples that happened to be too small or not sufficiently "colored" for the merchants to sell readily, she managed to buy them at a bargain price.

A neighbor, whose son had been ill but had recovered and gone back to the city, found that Louisa liked whole wheat bread and offered to sell a little grist mill she had used in making flour for her former invalid. She also told her where to get clean wheat in Wildrose.

Dan loved the bread Louisa made from the home ground flour and did not hesitate to tell her so. She smiled wryly. It was hard work to grind enough flour for four healthy appetites sufficiently fine to make what she considered a palatable bread without the addition of white flour. But it cut down expenses, because wheat was cheap, and everyone in the family, including Danny John preferred whole wheat bread and butter rather than any other article of food.

She quit buying coffee for herself. Instead of expensive breakfast cereals, she steamed the whole wheat berries until they were soft and bursting, then served them with a little cream and strained honey.

Dan was delighted with the new meals. It was just the way he thought they should eat. This was the kind of diet he thought was meant in the Word of Wisdom. And he was extremely happy about Louisa in that she had given up her coffee.

She not only gave up her coffee. She gave up the woman who came one day a week to do the washing; she dismissed the one who did the hard part of the cleaning on Fridays. Partly because she wanted to save the money; partly because if she worked hard, the time passed more quickly. At that she didn't have enough to keep her busy, even with the extra time spent in grinding flour, and baking all their own bread. There was still a woefully large part of the day when she could find nothing to do. She went to card parties whenever she could, but they averaged only about two games a week, in the afternoons. The rest were in the evenings. She left Dan with the children when she went out in the evenings. She encouraged him to teach the children religion. It could do them no harm, she thought, and it would take his mind away from her.

AT THE end of a month she had saved fifty dollars. Not much when she thought of how much they still owed, but if she could do that well every month they could be free of debt by the next Christmas. Dan was delighted and grateful.

"But— isn't it too hard for you?" he asked anxiously. She seemed thin, to him, and was paler than he thought she should be.

She laughed. "Don't be silly. Why, I am nearly always finished with my work before lunch. Sometimes in the afternoons, when I get the children to sleep and there's nowhere to go, I nearly go crazy. I'd rather work than not. And I was just thinking, Dan, if one of us could get work for next summer, we might be able to pay our debts and save something next year, too."

Dan laughed. "Has that been worrying you, dear? Now listen. Don't you worry about debts any more. I was just very tired when I said that to you, and I didn't mean it to sound so terrible— honestly Louisa." He drew her into his arms, but she struggled away from him, laughing. She was always struggling away from him, it seemed, with that gay little artificial laugh.

"I really want to work, though, Dan. It's like my mother says, to work is to be happy."

He said no more. He knew she was not happy. Was she still brooding over what he had said? He bitterly regretted his angry words. He would like to see her happy once more. He would give anything he possessed to feel her soft white arms thrown about his neck in the old spontaneous way. In the evenings when she did not go away to some party, she would rush madly about with the evening work, refusing all his offers of help. It seemed to him that she even made work for herself. Then when she could find nothing else to do she would come and sit in the living room, still and white, to gaze upon him as he sat with his little daughter before the fireplace and told her stories of a kind heavenly Father who loved little children, who could see them even when it was dark at night, and who never, never forgot them.

Now and then, when the brown eyes of the little girl were raised to him questioningly, he glanced up and met her mother's eyes. Eyes so like the child's, big and brown, with a question in them; but beneath the question a smoldering something that bothered him; that told him she considered him a stranger.

AT NIGHT he dreamed about her. She would be standing before him and then slowly fade out of his sight. He would call her, and she would not answer. Or he would find himself standing beside her at the edge of a dark precipice and she would suddenly slip over the brink; he would grasp wildly for her but his arms would come back to him empty.

His school work had been a complete and overwhelming disappointment to him. He had come from his university work filled with ideas that did not work out for him in practice. Some of them he could not even try, for the superintendent had ideas of his own.

All day long he lived in a chemistry laboratory. Wildrose was not a very large place, but it was a county seat town, and drew many students to the high school and junior college. He taught the chemistry of both high school and college. He was not allowed to open any windows because it took more coal to heat the building if he did. On the other hand, the ventilating system was kept from normal functioning in the science rooms because it carried the fumes to other parts of the building and made things disagreeable for the other classes. Sometimes he felt that he could not endure the poisonous atmosphere any longer. Many times he went home at night with his head aching violently.

But he did endure it. He endured it two years longer. Life became more of a routine. He even grew to accept Louisa's quiet ways, her shrinking from him, her aloofness as part of the routine, even though his hunger for her love was the same as before.

For Louisa did not change her mind as some women might have done, but having once begun to discover flaws in her husband's character, she kept looking for them, until it seemed to her he fairly bristled with faults. His glumness which he displayed when he came home from school at night, she interpreted as being an irritable feeling toward herself. This seemed especially despicable in him when she was doing so much to help him. It made him seem even more like a hypocrite when he taught the children stories about religion, and taught them to pray in the evenings. He had asked her one night if she would not please come and kneel with him, but she had refused with a polite but curt, "No thank you, Dan." He had not asked her again.

THE CHILDREN seemed to have a healthy mental outlook, however, and Dorothy Jane had grown completely away from her fears. Louisa knew Dan thought that prayer had accomplished this: but she cared very little what caused the good results, she told herself. It was very fortunate that the children were doing so nicely. She felt that she herself was a dreary failure. She had tried so hard to bring the children up in accordance with modern methods, but even at their present tender age she knew she had not succeeded. She could not protect them from all fears. Was it because she was afraid herself? Danny John seemed to have a perfect affinity for dirt. She couldn't keep the children immaculate at all times. True, they usually looked neat and clean; but she could not seem to approximate that surgical cleanliness which was purported to be the best method of fighting harmful bacteria. She could not teach them self-control as she wished; how could she, when neither she nor Dan seemed to have complete self-control at all times? She had fallen short of her ideal in many ways.

She could find no comfort in any of her acquaintances at Wildrose. Life was not the romantic thing the poets and philosophers of high school days had seemed to think it. Life was dull, monotonous. She knew of no home that was ideally happy. Husbands and wives quarrelled. Children were habitually disobedient, discourteous. Young girls and boys did and said cheap, sickening things in their wild reaching for joy. Things seemed to have become suddenly crazy, without meaning.

RICHES did not bring complete happiness. The richest people in Wildrose were often the dullest, the most miserable. Women were especially dissatisfied. They were all somewhat like herself—they could not seem to find enough work. Most of them would have welcomed a large family gladly, but the husbands were afraid of the ruthless economic competition, the chance of losing out in the business world; afraid that the children might not have the right opportunities, the right care.

She knew some, both men and women, who thought they could find pleasure in almost any kind of pursuit that was sinful or illegal. They took pride in disregarding the law of temperance. They thought it delightful to "get by" with a lie, a deception, a "shady" deal. They liked to be seen in public in a compromising situation with one of the opposite sex when either wife or husband was absent.

They were not happy. Sin did not bring happiness. It was clearer to her mind daily in her contacts with these various people that wickedness is never happiness. Sin was ugly in spite of its glittering display. Sin was cheap, nauseating.

Even cards were a disappointment to her. She could sometimes forget her troubles for a half hour as she concentrated fiercely upon the game; but that was only a coward's way of running from her worries, she felt. Much better to face them, if she could. Cards were a waste of time. Why could not she spend her leisure in some constructive study? There seemed to be no incentive; she felt that, with no faith in anyone, or in anything, the effort to improve herself, either mentally or physically, would be futile, worthless. It was much easier to play cards. But she had won too many prizes. Some of her acquaintances hated her now. Some openly charged her with dishonesty in playing. Sometimes they played for money. It was no harm, they said, so long as the amounts were small. Dan said the principle was the thing that counted. Dan said it was gambling. Did she want Danny John to grow up thinking that gambling was a harmless pastime?

She had tried to find forgetfulness and rest by attendance at the local theaters. The majority of the movies seemed to center about some kind of domestic discord and unhappiness. They were like everything else in life. You went away feeling that marriage was a gamble; that it was unstable; that its permanency depended upon artificial things—some of which you could not control. You wondered whether any man or woman was absolutely trustworthy. Of course there were good plays. She took Dorothy Jane and Danny John to a matinee one Saturday. It was a historical drama built around the life of Kit Carson. It was good. There were many children there—Louisa surmised that they had been sent there by mothers who were too busy to care for them at home.

The hero was grappling with the villain. He had promised an angry tribe of Indians that he would deliver this wrong-doer into their hands. The two men were quite evenly matched as to strength. In a tense moment a little boy, not so much larger than Dorothy Jane, cried out:

"Kill him, you fool! Cut his throat with that knife!"

Another child shrieked: "Say, what's a matter with you? Get your gun!"

The villain finally tumbled over the cliff, and the next scene pictured him, a shattered and lifeless mass, lying in the midst of his dancing enemies. Later when the hero and heroine met in the inevitable embrace, came other childish voices:

"Atta boy, Kit!" "Oh, yum, yum. Kiss her good!" "Smack 'er hard!" Such things always spoiled her good times. What would become of such children? Junior was too small to care much about it, but Dorothy Jane was full of curious questions. She would not go again, Louisa decided. Movies were like all the other things, disappointing, unsatisfying.

IT WAS a blustery afternoon in March. It had been snowing since early morning—snow so wet and heavy that it seemed hard work for the brisk wind to lift it, to toss it here and there onto the big drifts. Dorothy Jane had not gone to kindergarten that day. In spite of her evident health and vivacious childish sparkle, she was still rather small for her age, and Louisa had been afraid to let her chance the long walk through the storm. The children's chatter combined with her work made the morning pass swiftly. But the dreaded afternoon hours arrived; the children were asleep; clouds of gloom settled over her with double severity until her spirit seemed as dull and heavy as the leaden sky.

Was there no happiness in all the world? These other women she knew; they had no black box in their lives; why weren't they happy? But they were not. Some of them, like Mrs. Benson, whose husbands were really honorable men, whom no one suspected of unfaithfulness, still were almost insanely suspicious and jealous. Louisa knew that Dan had kept his promise—that promise he had made that night so long ago: "I'll always be true to you, Louisa." If it were not for that black box—

"I'm going to find out what it's all about. I'm going to go right upstairs and open it. It may be just a trinket his mother gave him, or something. It isn't like Dan to do what it seems like he did—it isn't like him to deceive me. If I could believe in Dan, I could join the church. I need religion—I need God. I need the true church."

With wildly beating heart she dragged the old steamer trunk toward a window and opened it. There it was, the little black casket, with the tiny gilt letters: "Elaine. Elaine the fair, Elaine the lovable."

She laughed harshly. It could not be just some trinket. She could recall every detail of that evening such a few days after their wedding when Dan stood, with this gruesome thing in his hands. His awkward attitude, his clumsy words: "Don't ask me about it; just pack it up and forget it."

She couldn't open it. She had been a fool to think she could. She might not be a Latter Day Saint, but she was honest. The box belonged to Dan; its secret was his. And he was not honest. He couldn't be. He hadn't loved her then; he didn't love her now. She had known it for so long, but she had never allowed herself to admit it until that Christmas night when Dan had pushed her arms aside as though her love were something distasteful to him. Life was just a mess. Not only for her, but the whole world. All sordid, unlovely, whether it dressed itself in a tropical parlu or the silken garb of civilization. She buried her head could not open his mouth; and he became weak, even that he could not move his hands." But two days later Alma stood forth and his first words were, "I have repented of my sins, and have been redeemed of the Lord; behold I am born of the spirit."

The transformation that took place in the life of Alma as with Saul of Tarsus, was permanent. During a long and useful life no persecution ever dismayed or daunted him. He was indeed a triumphant missionary for Christ.

Our conversion must be as deeply profound. No matter what forces assail us we must stand upon a firm foundation and press forward and upward.

WHAT IS THE COST OF SUCH CONVERSION?

Nothing worth while in life is ever won without sacrifice. True conversion exacts its price. The cost must be paid for in terms of a renouncement of all that is associated with worldliness. Genuine conversion is homage to God's plan of salvation.

Paul paid the price for his conversion. He writes, "of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of water, in perils of robbers, in perils of mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches."

WHAT SHALL BE THE FRUITS OF SUCH CONVERSION?

If we had a church full of people as converted as Paul was, we would evangelize the world; Zion would be builded in this generation; and this people would demonstrate the glory of God. What greater fruits could we ask for than these?

WHEN ARE WE CONVERTED?

What is the test for one's conversion—how shall we know when we are converted? The test is very simply, yet explicitly stated in the eighth verse of the forty-second section of the Doctrine and Covenants:

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments."

Are we willing to "go thou and do likewise"? Let us make the thought of this article personal by asking ourselves the question, Am I converted?

There is less grain per head of the population available than in 1913. Masses of the peasants are not much above starvation level. in the disordered trunk and cried out the agony of her heart:

"Oh, God, oh, heavenly Father! I have never learned how to pray, but if you are up there and if you can see a little thing like me through the gray mists of the world, hear me, oh, please hear me! Everything around me is full of broken dreams and disappointments. Oh, I need you so! I want you so!"

Suddenly she felt a peace she had never known before. It was as though a hand were upon her heart writing words of cheer and comfort. These were the words written:

"If a man's son ask him for bread, will he give him a stone?" Sometime, somewhere, she would find bread. All would be well. She pondered upon the miracle that had been wrought in her mind. There was a God. She knew it. Finally all would be well. Not only with her own life, but with the world.

A door slammed below. Dan home, so soon? She shut the trunk and ran lightly down the stairs. Even if he did not love her, even if he were a hypocrite, life would be more endurable, knowing what she knew.

"Hello, there, girlie!" he cried, as Dorothy Jane, rubbing her sleepy eyes, came from the bedroom. "How'd you like a long ride some day on the train? Tell me that. We're going to leave Wildrose—"

The little girl ran to the window. "Good-by, Wildrose!" She cried, "We're going somewhere else."

"Dan! What's the trouble? You look so tired and worn."

"I judged an oratorical and declamatory contest this afternoon. I gave the first place to a little girl with real ability. Mr. Moore thinks his niece should have won first. He says I can look for another job next year. I've been expecting this for a long time. I've never stood in well with him. He has a mortgage on nearly everything in town, so his word goes. But don't worry. I've kept in touch with Milton Arnold, who is superintendent over in Bay Cliff. He seemed to like me. I met him at a teacher's meeting last fall. He told me he thought he'd have a vacancy in my department next year. I'll write him. Thanks to you we have plenty to move on."

"It doesn't matter much where we live," thought Louisa. "The world is all the same. The same kind of people, doing and saying the same kind of things, living in the same kind of houses, all furnished similarly."

She gazed out the window over the little city. She could see the Moore mansion over on North Hill. Her eyes dwelt for a moment on the rich homes there, then moved restlessly in the other direction, and a surge of thought like an inspiration flowed through her mind.

"I only know half the homes in Wildrose. Perhaps not even half. The others I do not know. I have not helped Dan by associating with the rich and playing cards. When we move to Bay Cliff we'll live on the wrong side of the track. I'll get acquainted with the poor and find ways to help them."

She felt a vast pity now, for all the suffering ones of earth. She was happy when she thought of helping them—happier than she had been for a long time.

"Good-by Wildrose!" her heart cried, exultingly. "Good-by youth, good-by dreams, good-by illusions! Come work, come responsibility. Father, I thank thee for this bread. Good-by, Wildrose—good-by!"

WHERE SHOULD OUR YOUNG PEOPLE SEEK HIGHER EDUCATION?

Religion should occupy an important place in the training of our young people. Along with his other experiences the student needs a religious experience. Religion is as basic a discipline as science. To ignore any of the human discipline is dangerous, but to ignore religion is apt to be the most harmful of all. If we do not give to men a knowledge of the technique involved in religious experience, we deprive them of part of their birthright.

The wise man wrote 3,000 years ago: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge: but fools despise wisdom and instruction." (Proverbs 1:7.) The beginning of knowledge is to fear God and do his will. It is not out of the ordinary to find a young man versed in knowledge but with the "principal part" left out, making a wreck of his life. "The fear of the Lord" is also spoken of as the beginning of "Wisdom." (Proverbs 9:10.) True wisdom is found in one's association with Jesus Christ and from meditation on his words, for in Christ are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. (Colossians 2:3.)

James admonished "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God," and because one young man was humble and obedient enough to do that, God was able to perform his marvelous work and a wonder on earth in these last days. Christ, in his Sermon on the Mount emphasized the principal thing in life: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness." (Matthew 6:33.) The person who lays hold on Christ and his kingdom may scale the heights of knowledge and become a great blessing to his fellow men. He who knows Christ and has imbibed his wisdom becomes "a new creature." (2 Corinthians 5:17.) In the life of such a person is found no place for superiority of selfish motives to the detriment of his fellow men. His aim is to aid in the betterment and uplift of humanity and society. Many people lack the most important element in the true philosophy of life—the knowledge and recognition of God and his son, Jesus Christ. As a result of this lack, a second element is giving way, the sanctity of the home. Upon these two fundamentals our civilization was founded, and when these two elements are removed from the lives of men and women our civilization will disintegrate, and we already feel the crumbling of the pillars.

Graceland College, our own institution of learning, is well known throughout the church. Its president as well as several other members of the faculty are ordained servants of God, occupying in various offices in the priesthood. Nearly all of the instructors are members of the church and they carry their Christian ideals with them into the classroom. The program of Jesus Christ and his plan of salvation are filtered into the various subjects taught so that the student never loses sight of them. The midweek prayer meeting held on Wednesday evenings in the college chapel is a strong factor in the development of the young people's spirituality and serves to bind them together and to the church. The students have the opportunity of attending the regular and special services of the large Lamoni branch and their interests and needs are catered to. After a year or more of association and contact with such a spiritually consecrated faculty and with the members of Lamoni branch, the students leave Graceland College with a greater interest in the church and a stronger determination to serve God and live righteous lives than ever before.

Where shall our young people seek their higher education? Graceland College.

System of Appointing Many Postmasters Is a Farce

Mr. Lewis Merriam, of the Brookings institution, which is a permanent institution with noted analysts within 500 feet of the White House, declares that the procedure in appointing Presidential postmasters is a farce. He might go further and say that the procedure in appointing postmasters by the Postmaster General whose salaries are more than $500 and less than $1,100 is a farce.

"Unfortunately," he declares, "nothing has done more to injure the standing of the Commission than its enforced part of holding examinations for first, second and third class postmasters—so-called Presidential appointments—when later it develops such appointments are made on a patronage basis."

Stating that there are upwards of 200,000 workers in the Postal Service, Mr. Merriam contends that if Presidential postmasters were placed under the regular classified Civil Service practically all appointments would be made from within the service. He states that this would clear the Civil Service Commission "of the present farce of trying to say which one of many candidates, who have not been in the Postal Service and do not know the work, would be the best postmaster."

Such a procedure would open the way to advancement of trained and able employees who have given their lifetime to the service.

At present the first, second and third class officers are controlled by the Postmaster General. He may call for certification of applicants from the Civil Service, Mr. Merriam states, until the name wanted is reached. "These appointees are in no sense 'policy making officers.' Their jobs are purely ministerial. There is no excuse," he asserted, "for having them political except that, through them, the Government can give a hidden subsidy to the party that won the last national Presidential election."

The report of Mr. Merriam, of Brookings Institution, is based upon data furnished by the Civil Service Commission and was made at the instance of the Commission which asked that a survey of the present mode of appointing first, second and third class postmasters be made. Mr. Merriam's report regards it to the best interest of the Commission to be relieved of all responsibility for the appointment of Presidential postmasters, "until they are placed absolutely under the merit system and can be filled by promotion of men and women who have won them by efficient and reliable service. . . ."

"Not only are the present examinations for postmasters unsound from the standpoint of good personnel administration," the report continues, "but the public does not believe they are honest and above board. The public knows that a good party man acceptable to the local political machine will be selected if he can be brought within reach on the eligible register."

Many are wondering what has become of the President's order to the Postmaster General to place postmasters under the classified service.—Scottish Rite New Bureau.

This is the Gospel of Labor—
Ring it, ye bells of the kirk—
The Lord of love came down from above
To live with the men who work.
This is the rose that he planted
Here is the thorn-cursed soil—
Heaven is blessed with perfect rest;
But the blessing of earth is toil.

What About Our Christmas Offering?

Do you think the children of Latter Day Saints realize how much pleasure there is in trying as best they can to sacrifice all the year to help swell the Christmas offering fund?

It seems to me as I go among the different branches, that during the last few years there has not been the interest taken in Christmas offering that there was in former times. It is true that there is not nearly so much spending of money and giving of offerings now as there was by the average family a few years ago. And if the parents can possibly bring some offering or tithe to the church they have in many cases, done well, and will be blessed for the sacrifice they have made.

Peter was told if he loved the Savior that he was to feed the sheep, and he was also admonished: "Feed my lambs." These are Jesus' words and they were not spoken at random.

When the rich men were casting their money into the treasury, a poor widow cast in her mite, and while the rich scorned her offering, the kind and loving Jesus praised her and said that she had given more than all of them.

So we see that no act done in his name is too small for him to notice. Let us teach our children that when we give for Jesus' sake, it brings us much greater happiness than when we spend our pennies and nickels selfishly for candy, chewing gum, and dozens of small things that are really unprofitable to us.

You may ask me how I know these things. Because quite a time ago I was a child in this church, and for years I have been a woman in it. I can say truthfully that I know. Nothing brings the joy and pleasure to the heart of a Latter Day Saint as making sacrifices for the cause of our Lord and Savior.

It is not many weeks now until Christmas. What have the children been doing to accumulate at least a small offering for Jesus' birthday? We are all planning for our friends' birthdays no doubt, but what about the birthday of the truest, dearest friend on earth or in heaven? Are we thinking of doing something for him to show our gratitude for what he so freely did for us?

Last New Year's Day a sick sister who lives alone except for one grandchild, invited the young children of her branch who lived near her home to talk about Christmas offering. The children ranged from three to thirteen years of age. Twelve of them came, and she talked to them about the offering, and with the consent of the branch president, they organized a Christmas offering class of willing workers. This class meets the first Sunday of each month. After singing "Earnest Workers for the Master," they repeat the Lord's Prayer. On the first Sunday they met they brought an offering of eighty-eight cents. I learned of this venture and that in the three first Sundays they turned to the branch solicitor a sum of more than three dollars. They were happy that they had undertaken this work when I saw them, and the little girls were planning to make popcorn balls and candy to help increase the sum. These things the boys offered to sell. One little girl said, "I have gone to the show once a week, but I can stay at home and put my money in our fund!"

A Brief Testimony That Has Helped

I have been a member of the church forty years and an elder twenty-three years, and I would here like to relate an incident which may help someone.

I moved to Houston, Texas, just before the branch was organized by Brother Aylor, and became the first president of the branch. We met then in a shabby little building on Ninth Street. In a short time a man and wife who had been baptized in childhood at Lamoni, I believe, but who had been isolated for some time, heard of our meetings and became regular attendants. They were a great help in many ways. The wife had an affliction which the doctors thought only an operation would relieve. She dreaded this and one Sunday evening asked me to administer to her. I did so after preaching the evening sermon. She played the organ and led the singing of the closing hymn as usual, and then stood facing the little congregation. As soon as the benediction was pronounced, she clasped her hands to her breast and with a joyful, radiant smile on her face exclaimed, "Oh, I'm healed; I know I'm healed!"

God has blessed me many times through administration and has blessed numbers of others through my humble instrumentality, but the above incident with its brief testimony has been a great help to me in many dark and trying times and in my present condition.

If the sister referred to above sees this, I ask her to testify of it before her branch, and that she and her husband who was a dear friend of mine, write to me. I ask an interest in the prayers of all Saints.

A Blessing of Healing

I take this way to express appreciation of the wonderful blessing that has come to me from the never failing goodness and mercy of our heavenly Father. About two years ago I developed a fibroid tumor, and was in very poor health. Severe hemorrhages which are but one of the results of tumor, kept me from taking care of my home and five children.

Last February, I was called to the home of my parents by the sudden illness of my mother. Within one short week, she passed away. The shock of her death together with my own physical condition, put me in a local hospital with acute attack of peritonitis for the month of March. I was administered to several times without obtaining permanent relief. It was weeks after I came home before I could be up at all. I seemed unable to regain my strength.

In the early part of June, I attended the midweek prayer service of the church for the first time. When I went, I had no thought of asking for administration, but upon entering the building, I felt impressed that I should. I experienced a wonderful administration. Next morning I felt like a new person, was able to help with the work about the house, and have felt very well since.

Last Monday, I decided to visit our family physician for a complete examination. Two of the best doctors in the city cared for me while I was in the hospital and told me when I left that I should have the tumor removed by operation within six months, as it was of a cancerous type. Upon examining me Monday, my doctor could find no growth whatsoever. He was astonished. He told me that the doctors who had said I was afflicted with tumor were very competent men and would not have told me that unless I had really had it. He agreed with me that the affliction must have been moved by divine power. For years I also had been very anemic, but Monday my blood test was almost one hundred and seven. Can you imagine my joy at being told that unless some new difficulty became apparent, I need not worry about an operation? I need no added witness to the truth of the gospel, but I am praying that my healing may be an evidence of the divinity of the church to my father and other relatives.

We have had many wonderful blessings in our home. Outstanding among these was the healing last May, of our seven-year-old boy, of a severe attack of appendicitis. My husband's health is not the best this summer, but we are certain that God will bless him if we continue faithful. May we have your prayers.

Let Us Merit God's Blessings

It is ten months since we arrived in Independence. After being isolated from church associations, we have availed ourselves of very opportunity and missed but few meetings. Meeting again with Saints whom we knew in former years and friends made at General Conference has gladdened our hearts.

We are living in a time when men's hearts are failing them for the things that are coming upon the earth. This season recalls to my mind the year we moved to Holden, only the conditions now are more severe than they were then. But with the Lord's blessings we were able to survive those days. He will continue to bless us if we obey his commandments. I am grateful to him for the blessings he has showered upon me. Let us, as Saints, live so that we shall merit his goodness.

Search for Truth Has Its Reward

I am now a member of the Saints' church at San Diego, California.

For the past eleven years I have hunted for someone who believed the Bible as I knew the Lord had revealed it to me. This experience was like wandering in a foreign country; I could find no one who spoke my spiritual language.

But one night as I was walking home from a meeting I had attended, the Lord blessed me with a spiritual experience which I shall never forget. After that night I attended many different churches and missions. I sought light concerning the Scriptures from numbers of preachers. My questions remained unanswered to my own satisfaction. I thirsted for the truth.

I had a dear Mormon friend who told me that she thought I would find that for which I searched in her church. Then she related to me why they had left Salt Lake City; she said that she could not share her husband with anyone else. She was not considered a good Mormon. After what she had said, I never went to her church.

In May, 1934, Brother and Sister H. L. Bausell, formerly of Sedalia, Missouri, became my neighbors. They came to my home one evening and from them I learned the gospel truth. How glad I am for that evening! They brought me books. I read first The Old Jerusalem Gospel. The Book of Mormon I found to be a great help. It told me many things for which I had yearned to know. I cannot put into words how I feel when I read the Book of Mormon.

At that time I was unable to leave my home, but as soon as I was able to get out, I was baptized. I have been a member of the church since June 10, 1934.

Prays for Truth

I have been desiring to express my appreciation of the articles of Brother Burgess on "Seeking After Truth." I had thought that I had finished my delving into various issues before I was baptized into the church nine years ago. However, during the four past years I have been brought into touch with a number of Rosicrucians, and they requested me to read their literature. The books which I perused seemed to contain so much truth and wisdom that I took the matter to the Lord in prayer.

In answer two passages of Scripture were brought again to my mind: "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber," and, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets."

Veteran Missionary Active

Clarksburg, West Virginia, October 3.—After attending a most spiritual conference for seven days at Kirtland, Ohio, I felt the missionary spirit take possession of me. "Go preach the gospel," it said.

August 25, I left home for Lock Four, Pennsylvania, and attended the young people's district conference. At two in the afternoon I assisted Brother C. Ed. Miller in a fairly good prayer meeting. Left there at 5 p. m. with Brother and Sister Earl Smith for their home at Morgantown, West Virginia. We arrived there just in time for the evening service, and I continued preaching there each evening except Saturday until September 23.

On September 25, I united in marriage Sister Bertha Colvert to Mr. Marvin Kinney, both of Morgantown. Sister Kinney is a graduate of the Morgantown High School, also the Commercial School of Morgantown. She is pianist of the branch. On the twenty-third I had the privilege of baptizing Mr. Kinney with three others into the kingdom of God. The youngest candidate was twenty-three, the oldest eighty. I will continue here the rest of this week.

Desire Our Prayers

Mrs. O. A. Knopp, of Porcupine, Wisconsin, asks prayers for her husband who is suffering with a growth on the bone of the heel of his foot. Also remember her grandson who has spasms.

Saints of Humber Bay Branch, Toronto District, seek prayers for three who are ill—Sister Rose Williams, Sister Myrtle Harris, and Brother Rowett, father of their pastor, Elder Ernest Rowett.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

What is "Reformed Egyptian," and why was it used in the Book of Mormon?

The Book of Mormon contains two references to the Egyptian or the reformed Egyptian language, as a language used in writing the records comprising the book. It is not probable that it could have been used by any other people, as it was neither purely Egyptian nor Hebrew, though it evidently contained some of the characters of both languages, but some of them had been altered by the Nephites and their descendants from age to age, it appears. Nephi states that he wrote in the language of his father, consisting of the "learning of the Jews and the language of the Egyptians" (2: 1).

At first this might seem to indicate the Egyptian language itself but as his father's language consisted of both, it probably means that Hebrew was used to express some things not so well expressed in Egyptian, hence a combination of both. This is consistent with a statement made many years later by Moroni:

"We have written this record according to our knowledge in the characters, which are called among us the reformed Egyptian, being handed down and altered by us, according to our manner of speech."—Ibid. 713: 98.

This language was evidently more condensed than Hebrew, for Moroni said the Hebrew would have been used if the plates had been large enough, though that had been altered by them also. It would be quite natural for them to use some Hebrew characters in a modified form as a part of the reformed Egyptian, if such characters could be employed to express an idea more perfectly in any case, and would be consistent with their familiarity with both. Thus they made a new form of language which he states no other people knew. Because it was a shorter or more condensed form of expression, it was used to write the Book of Mormon.

What is meant by the "white stone" of Revelation 2:17?

Opinions differ as to what is meant by this term, but it may bear some more or less close analogy to the stone or pebble used in Greek courts to indicate that the one to whom it is given has been acquitted —is not found guilty. Or it might refer to a small stone used as a common writing material, on which the name of the overcomer is inscribed, to indicate his victory and as a seal of his eternal reward and relationship with God—his passport to the heavenly realm.

Please explain what the term "fullness of the gospel" means.

The literal meaning of this term is completeness of the gospel. By contrast with its antonym it would indicate that some part or parts of the gospel had been lacking, or had been omitted by others or in some way. The term fullness would then indicate that these parts were fully supplied, thus making the gospel complete—the fullness of the gospel.

Was Christ's teachings new? If not, why need he have come to teach?

Solomon once said that "there is no new thing under the sun," and in the larger sense this is probably true. So far as we know, the universe is eternal and is concerned with eternal laws. So also God and mankind are related by his eternal purposes. The gospel of Christ was taught from the beginning, says the Inspired Version, that is, from the beginning of man's human need of it. But in some ages it was lost or obscured by man's perversity and unwillingness to obey it. Yet the prophets of various ages foretold the time when Christ should come to bring it anew to men. He was called the Messiah, therefore, or Savior.

One of the greatest tasks of the prophets was to teach over and over again the same principles of divine truth and the divine will. Jesus alone lived in full obedience to God, and he therefore was the great Example foretold by inspired prophets of the past. Thus he fulfilled the Scriptures and the plan of God for the salvation of the believer.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue,
South

Rally day was enjoyed by all and well attended by Saints from various points in Minnesota and North Dakota. The day began with a spiritual prayer service at 9:00 o'clock in charge of Apostle J. F. Curtis and Missionary P. T. Anderson. This was followed by the presentation of a worth-while play, "The Lost Church," by the young people of Fargo. Sister Rotzien directed the performance.

At 11:00 o'clock District President Warren McElwaine, of Lansford, North Dakota, gave an interesting talk before the ordination service. Apostle Curtis gave the charge, then Frank Stowell was ordained a priest and Francis Stowell, a teacher, Apostle Curtis and Elder McElwaine officiating. "I Would Be True" was sung in closing. A basket dinner was enjoyed at Oak Grove Park.

Apostle Curtis preached a sermon at 3:00 o'clock, and at 8:00, Missionary Anderson presented another fine discourse.

Brother Curtis held several fine services preceding rally day, and Elder Anderson preached on Saturday evening on "Godliness."

Frederick Madison Junior was born recently to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wiedling, and James Junior is a welcome newcomer to Mr. and Mrs. James Brand.

The Saints gathered at Oak Grove Park for a surprise party on Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe to help celebrate his birthday.

Some Fargo Saints attended the funeral of Anson Sherman held at Clitherall, Minnesota. Elder Lester Whiting officiating. The deceased's daughters, Sister O. E. Whiting, of Longview, California, and Sister F. J. Rotzien, of Hazelton, North Dakota, attended.

The O. T. Z. Club has taken up the study of order and debate with Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe as instructor. At a recent meeting the young people presented a one-act play entitled "Her Money's Worth."

The initial vacation Bible school held here in June was successful. It was sponsored by Mrs. J. F. Rotzien. "Zion Builders" was chosen as the name for the Bible school. The officers and teachers felt well repaid for their efforts and the children showed enthusiasm and interest. The secretary, Doris Rotzien, reported that half the attendance were nonmembers. There were three classes, intermediates named the "Laugh, Love, and Lift Class," juniors, "Cheerful Helpers," and the "Busy Bees" representing the beginners. The courses of study were history of the Bible, church drills, children of the Bible, books of the Bible, and principles of the gospel.

Different themes were used each morning in the opening exercises which started promptly at 9:00 o'clock, namely, "Keeping Promises," "Habits," "Prayer," "Working Together," "Bearing Good Fruit," etc. Object lessons, dramatizations, Bible drills, flag drills, a Bible school yell, stories, and new songs were included. A prayer and testimony meeting was held one morning. A lunch was enjoyed each morning after class work and once wieners were roasted. Games were played outside, sponsored by Courtney Rotzien, church school director.

After the rest and play period the smaller children made scrapbooks for sick children, and some fine scrolls were made by the intermediates, containing the books of the Bible. One morning the children and teachers visited a young man who has been confined to his bed for years. The cheered him by singing songs and Glen Wiedling recited the poem, "Just Try to Be the Fellow Your Mother Thinks You Are."

The last day the whole school with several visitors had a picnic at Island Park and visited the Children's Home.

On Sunday following the close of the Bible school the children gave a demonstration at the 11:00 o'clock hour to the assembly of the work done by the school, and a newspaper telling of all the happenings of the school was read. They hope for a bigger and better school next year.

Sister Samuel Twombly has returned to her home at Fanning, Kansas, after spending the summer with her daughter, Sister H. E. Ratcliffe, and Sister Ella Sherman, of Minneapolis, has been visiting her son, Fred. These two aged sisters are faithful church members, and were welcome visitors.

Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe used the theme, "Being Good and Kingdom Builders" in a recent sermon.

The annual business meeting was held September 17, and the following officers were elected: Branch president, Elder H. E. Ratcliffe; treasurer, Courtney Rotzien; music director, Ferne Shackow; pianist, Elsie Brown; secretary, Mrs. R. H. Freeman; librarian, R. H. Freeman; church school director, Courtney Rotzien; adult supervisor, Mrs. R. T.

Walker; young people's supervisor, Mrs. Ammon Stowell; children's supervisor, Mrs. J. F. Rotzien; auditing committee, Elsie Brown and Ferne Shackow.

Several Fargo members attended the fall conference at Duluth, Minnesota.

Rock Island, Illinois

Young and Old Are Going Forward

Missionary meetings opened here September 9, Elder R. E. Davey, of Aurora, the speaker. They had good attendance and splendid interest. An unusually large number of nonmembers were present at every service. Brother Davey presented the gospel message in power and plainness and everyone appreciated the truth as never before.

"The Four Horsemen" was a particularly enlightening subject to members and their friends, and the Sunday morning sermon on "Forgiveness" was of great value to them. Brother Davey interprets the message of Christ as one applicable to daily living and human relationships in such a way that the members were made conscious of their responsibilities of love and service to their fellow men.

Two young men asked for baptism on Sunday, and there are others almost ready to unite with the church.

The young people of Rock Island Branch enjoyed a pleasant trip to Millersburg the last Thursday in August, where they were invited to attend the graduation service of ten Noblemen who have completed the work required to become Student Noblemen. Elder Frederick Bevan, former district missionary, and Elder John C. Stiegel, district supervisor of religious education, were asked to assist in conferring the diplomas and presenting the charge at the court of honor. The meeting was inspirational, and an hour of recreation followed with a wiener roast. Rock Island members hope to entertain Millersburg at a hal-loween party.

Vacation season this year brought several former members of the branch back to spend short times here. Charles Gunlock and his sister, Evelyn Smith, and her family were here. Brother and Sister Robert Gunlock were here for the June conference, and Cecil Willets and wife spent a few days with relatives a few weeks ago. Brother and Sister Clifford Huntley and son, Darrel Wayne, were here from Chicago several Sundays.

The women's department has been busy in helping to raise funds for the paving assessment, through their quilting and giving of suppers. They have also met at the homes of those who were ill, and given assistance.

The Sunday evening study class has continued to grow in attendance and interest. Although originally intended as a young people's Nobleman preparation class, the lectures proved so interesting that the entire church attendance has become the regular audience. Elder Wesley Richards has completed his series on the Book of Mormon and is now beginning church history. Brother Thomas Willets also gave four lectures on the symbols of the Restoration, and Elder Orrin Lindsay, of Davenport, contributed to the Saints' knowledge of the Liahona or director and the sword of Laban.

The young people continue to meet regularly every other Friday evening. They entertained the branch at a wiener roast a few weeks ago. Everyone joined in the campfire songs and general fun.

The Misses Marjorie and Marion White attended the Nauvoo Camp and reported a fine time. Several other young people who accompanied them to the camp are planning to attend next year.

The girls' choir continues regularly to add to the beauty of the Sunday services under the leadership of Sister Lettie Willets.

Ronald Sydney, the new son of Brother and Sister Harold O'Brien, was blessed under the hands of Elders L. W. Stiegel and L. A. White at the September sacrament service.

The district officers met recently at the home of Brother and Sister John C. Stiegel to discuss and formulate plans for the October conference. They hope for fair weather and large attendance, for the program promises to be interesting.

Central Michigan Young People Gather at Whittemore

The Central Michigan young people's get-together meeting held for the first time at Whittemore, was well attended. About two hundred and fifty were present Friday evening, September 28. A fine program was presented, talents of various kind being displayed.

The young people were honored by a banquet served in the basement of the church.

Surely this meeting had a good effect upon all present, demonstrating the character and talents of the young people. They were favored with short talks by District President Hubert Case and Elder B. H. Doty.

Saints of this locality are rejoicing that Brother Case has been returned to this district. They hope his labors in the future will be as profitable to the church as those of the past.

Eighty-two Years in the Church

MRS. LYDIA FEAVEL

Sister Lydia Feavel was born March 2, 1842, at Nauvoo, Illinois. She was blessed under the hands of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in 1842. It was in that year also that her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Helser were baptized into the church. When ten years old the child was baptized.

Sister Feavel is living with her daughter, Mrs. Jennie Riner, of Appleton, Wisconsin. After eighty-two years in the church, she is firm in the faith. This photograph was taken on her ninety-second birthday.

Missionary Ministers to Indiana Saints

Georgetown, Indiana.—We are laboring for Christ's cause and feel that he has blessed us in many ways. Following the district conference at Derby, August 18 and 19, Brother C. F. Davis returned to his home in Kentucky for a few days while Sister Dutton and I went to Millstone near Dodd, Indiana, and held meetings two weeks in the schoolhouse with very good attendance. We were assisted there by Jack Hayes and several others with stringed instruments and some of the boys from Derby Branch one night with horns and trombone.

The next week Brother and Sister Davis joined us at the Gerald Schoolhouse and at the close of the week one was baptized by Brother Davis. He continued at Gerald school the week following, and we went to Sulphur, Indiana, where there are a few members of the church, and held meetings at the home of Brother and Sister W. J. Maymon.

At the end of the week we baptized a young married couple. Mr. and Mrs. Elsbury, and blessed their three children.

Then Monday Brother Maymon brought us to Marengo, where we began meetings September 18, and now are on the second week. Today (September 29), I am to baptize two children of Sister and Brother Zahnd. This evening we are having rally services here at Marengo, and are expecting Saints from Pekin, Sulphur, Millstone, and other points.

Next Monday I am to begin meetings at Byrneville Branch. Thus I am keeping busy and we move along from place to place, seeking to build up the kingdom of God. Marengo Branch is not large, and Deacon Harrison Thompson is the only ordained man here. I wish some young elder could locate here to assist in the work.

JASPER O. DUTTON.

Hobart; home visiting pastor, James M. Jones; financial clerk, Edward H. Campbell; secretary, Mildred E. Fletcher; solicitor, Hettie Sutherland; historian, Edith Fry; publicity agent, Mildred E. September 16, Pastor Ira O. Waldron closed a two-week series of meetings at the Community Church, near Lake Side Park. This opening was made through the efforts of Brother and Sister Rufus Galbraith who live in that community. The people responded nicely and seemed to appreciate the effort. Saints of Webb City Branch were loyal, several of them attending each night. Dorothy Mottet, branch chorister, and her assistants, attended and took care of musical needs.

Brother and Sister Walter Emerson and son, Waldo Emerson, have recently moved into town. They have been residing on a farm west of town during the summer months.

The ladies of the adult division have named their organization the Armenia Circle after Sister Armenia Sutherland, deceased, and have elected their officers for the coming year: Clara Stokes, leader, and Edith Spooner, secretary and treasurer. They meet each Thursday and quilt all day. Their birthday dinner this month was held at the church September 20. Those honored were Sisters Mina Spencer, Emma Hildreth and Nancy Galbraith.

Brother and Sister Harold Wilder are the proud parents of a son born September 14. He has been named Thomas Edward.

Traverse City, Michigan

During the week of September 3 to 7, the ladies' aid operated a booth at the Traverse City Fair. The profits will be used in paying branch expenses.

At the annual election of officers Jay C. Doty was elected branch president to succeed H. A. Doty who has capably filled this position. Harry Doty was elected church school supervisor and music director.

Zion's Legion held its first fall meeting September 11. Plans for the future were discussed.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wiley (nee Ella Doty) are making their home at Belding where Mr. Wiley is employed as a teacher.

Brother Wayne Evans opened a grocery store recently. The branch joins in wishing him success.

At the first of their activities Zion's Legion sponsored a box social which proved to be a financial and social success.

Elder B. H. Doty is greatly missed by Saints here. At present he is laboring in Central Michigan District.

A number from here attended the all-day meeting at South Boardman September 23.

Walla Walla, Washington

Saints of Walla Walla Mission were recently enlivened by a visit from President Stanley Fout of Spokane District, who entertained them three evenings with slide pictures at the home of Sister Etha Wright where they are permitted to hold all their services. The pictures were educational and of special interest to Latter Day Saints, particularly those on the last evening which vividly depicted the progress that is being made along the line of stewardships.

Sunday morning, September 23, found them gathered for church school, all filled with happy expectation for the services to follow that session—sacrament and the ordination of a priest from among the local members. During the incumbency of Brother Robert Chapman as pastor, seeds of love for the Lord's work were sown in the heart of Brother Percy Howard to the extent that he was called to occupy as priest. This call was most opportune as the going of Brother Chapman to another field, left Walla Walla Saints without anyone holding the priesthood. Brother Howard is a young man with a wife and three children.

Brother Fout was assisted by Brother Buckley, pastor of the branch at Pasco, Washington, who with his wife and three other members of his home congregation drove over to assist in the services of the day. The visitors contributed to making the services impressive by the use of their musical talents.

On the following Sunday the Saints held election of officers.

District President Fout wants them to have regular services as often as possible, led by Brother Howard. But since Brother Howard is a railroad man and cannot be with them every Sunday, Brother Fout suggests that the Saints have prayer services instead of preaching on the Sundays their leader is away.

Brother and Sister Howard, and Sister Howard's mother attended General Conference last spring, and what they saw and heard filled them with inspiration. After conference they drove to Michigan to the home of Sister Howard's people, visiting relatives and old friends.

Derby, Indiana

Nine Are Baptized

Saints of Derby Branch have had an enjoyable time the past few weeks. The Lord has given a wonderful degree of his Spirit on many occasions and has been mindful of his people.

About the first of August Elder C. F. Davis, for many years a minister in the church, felt directed to close his place of business in Atlanta, Georgia, and come to Perry County, Indiana. The Saints of this branch knew of his work as a member of another church some twenty-seven years ago in a vicinity not far from Derby church, and were happy to have him visit them and to hear him tell the interesting steps of his conversion to the gospel. Nonmembers were eager to hear him and numbers of them who knew him in his former church flocked to the services.

Then came the conference which in many respects was one of the best ever held in Southern Indiana District, being a spiritual season throughout.

At the close of the conference Weaver Glenn, of Evansville and a young son and daughter were baptized.

Two weeks after the conference Elders J. O. Dutton and C. F. Davis began a series of meetings at the Gerald schoolhouse not far from Derby church. The services were well attended and at times the building was filled to overflowing. At the close of the first week Elder Dutton left to hold meetings at Sulphur, Indiana, but Elder Davis continued in the schoolhouse another week and the following week in the homes of the neighborhood where once he labored as a minister of another church.

Each Sunday morning the services were held in the church and for three consecutive Sundays a crowd could be seen gathering on the bank of the Ohio River to witness the baptism of candidates. Those baptized were Adele Frakes, Harold Harding, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Harison, Mrs. Samuel Smith, and Allie Fleming. A hearty welcome is extended these new members.

Elder Davis and his accomplished wife who has been a help especially in the song services, rendering a number of solos, have left, but they promised to return before many weeks.

Local friends seem much interested in the gospel, and some are almost ready to obey. Herald readers are asked to breathe a prayer for the Saints in Derby Branch, that they may live very near the Father and that through their fasting and prayers and good lives many who are near the kingdom may be moved upon by the Spirit to accept the gospel.

Joplin, Missouri

Rally day was observed by Joplin, Missouri, Saints, September 30. It brought to a close a very successful year of church activities and spiritual upbuilding within the branch. Especially have the young people's activities and interest in the church work been on the incline, and with this the older members have received a challenge which has caused them to want to help the young people and at the same time progress themselves in wisdom and spirituality.

The month of September began with an officers' and teachers' banquet having as the theme, "Sky Pilots of the Gospel Airways." This meeting was such a success that like meetings were held by the women's department and the Zion Builders Class during the month and others are being planned for October.

The young people's prayer meeting held at 8:15 a. m. the third Sunday of each month has come to be looked forward to by the young people as the place where they receive their greatest spiritual buoyance and inspiration for carrying on in the work.

A junior prayer meeting was instituted during September for the children under fifteen years of age. At the meeting there were twenty short prayers most of them offered by the children, and twenty-seven testimonies. It was such a success that plans are to hold it on the second Sunday morning of each month from now on. Other meetings that are to be sponsored during the coming year are junior stewardship club meetings with Sister C. T. Sheppard and Marjorie Troyer as sponsors and Oriole meetings with Sister Eva English as the sponsor. The young people have been spending Tuesday evening studying church history after which they spend some time visiting members of the branch and trying to encourage them in a more active attendance at church meetings.

By various means the women's department have raised money and have helped materially in meeting of the branch expenses. They also have been holding study classes on Thursday afternoons.

On rally day a program was given with two special numbers by the junior choir in the morning. Following the preaching service a basket dinner was held at McClellands Park, six miles south of town on Shoal Creek, and the afternoon was spent playing games. Promotion exercises were held at night at which time a junior pioneer pageant was given. The pageant beautifully portrayed the work of the juniors in church service, and was built around a theme to encourage them to continue their progress. Nineteen juniors graduated to the intermediate department.

Mason City, Iowa

On the evening of September 17, it was the pleasure of Mason City, Iowa, to have Elder E. Y. Hunker speak to them. This meeting was held at the home of Sister Luda E. Smith, 630 Maryland Avenue. There was a song service, and Brother Hunker sang and accompanied himself on his guitar. One number sung was "The Old Rugged Cross," with Kathlyn Kolarich, of Mallard, singing with Brother Hunker. After giving an impressive sermon, Brother Hunker was requested to sing again, and he also played a guitar solo. Twenty-four attended this service.

This group met at 10:30 a. m. Sunday, September 23, at Oakwood Park, Clear Lake, Iowa, for all-day services at the summer home of Elder H. H. Sevy. Church school and preaching came in the morning with basket dinner at noon. At 3:30 p. m. baptismal services were held at the lake shore, Elder Sevy in charge of the ordinance. The candidates were Elaine and Zell Nelson, daughters of Sister Luda H. Nelson, of Mason City; Elizabeth Hanley, daughter of Sister James Hanley, of Clear Lake, and Morna Wireman, daughter of Brother and Sister Roy Wineman, Central Heights, Mason City.

The confirmation followed immediately, Elder Clyde McDonald, of Des Moines, Elder Fowler, Webster City, and Elders H. H. Sevy and O. B. Snuggins, of Clear Lake, in charge.

Following this service Elder McDonald delivered a highly enlightening sermon.

Wichita, Kansas

Water Street at Osie

Saints of Wichita Branch are very busy. Besides the regular Sunday services, the men of the branch are studying "Parliamentary Law" on Monday night. To meet on Tuesday night, the young men of the branch have organized a Fellowship Club, under the leadership of Pastor Garland Tickemyer. They are studying "The Prophecy of Zion, the Kingdom," prepared by J. A. Koehler. Wednesday night the prayer meetings are well attended. A Bible study class, under the direction of Sister Kennedy, meets Thursday afternoon, and that evening the choir has its rehearsal.

The girls of the branch have organized a club which they call the T. E. N. S. The president of the group is Miss Marie McDivitt. They meet the second Tuesday of each month and have entertaining book reviews, and all kinds of fancy needlework are in order.

Sister A. A. Buschow is very ill at this writing.

Wichita members enjoyed a visit from their former pastor, Brother Arthur E. Stoff, on Sunday night, September 23. He preached on "What Constitutes Success."

Under the direction of Brother Tickemyer, they have a beautiful sacrament service. The table is spread to represent the Lord's Supper, the priesthood of the branch being seated at the table.

Brother Baker, of Eldorado, Kansas, spoke to the Saints at Wichita, recently.

Jackson, Michigan

All regular services of this branch are held in the homes of the Saints at Jackson. Ray A. Frisbie, 404 Winters Cort, Jackson, Michigan, is the pastor.

On September 23, the Zion's Christian Legion was organized at the home of Brother and Sister Farout. Brother Farout will be leader of the local legion.

Jackson Saints are doing their bit for the building up of God's kingdom and the redemption of Zion.

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

The regular annual business meeting of Oklahoma City Branch was held September 7, and the following officers were chosen: Pastor, E. L. Kemp, unanimously sustained; church school director, J. M. McCarter; secretary, Sister H. K. Rowland; treasurer, A. H. Wilson; music department, Mary Vickery. The assistant church school director is Loren Vickery; church school secretary, Dorothy Kueffer; publicity agent, Sister Grace Scott; adult division, Sister Dillon; young people's, Doris Butler; junior, Sister Reese Williams. Finance committee: Howard Cook and Bessie Wilson, to aid those already interested in finance. The recommendation of A. H. Wilson as branch solicitor was approved, to take the place of Ralph Vickery who is away from the branch.

On a recent date the women's department held election of officers, and planned for the ensuing year.

On September 30, a joint promotion day and installation of officers program was held. Betty Jeanette Rowland sang the welcome song, and each class of juniors demonstrated its year's work. Brother Kemp introduced the officers. Brother McCarter gave a short talk honoring the outgoing officers and expressing a desire for the progress of the gospel during the year to come.

The branch is progressing partly because of the activities taken up by the priesthood, under the direction of Lloyd Harding. The visits they pay to the homes are of spiritual order and much appreciated by those visited. There are some desirable prospects for baptism, and the branch is looking forward to a series of meetings in the near future.

Ava, Missouri

District President W. E. Haden came into this neighborhood September 17, and on September 20, he with Brother and Sister Morris went to visit the family of Brother John B. Poort who lives north of Mansfield, there being some young folks in the family who were wishing to be baptized.

Their visit was a surprise to Brother and Sister Poort, but a happy day was spent.

Then on Sunday, September 23, the Poort family came down to Ava Branch, also the group from Four Corners, Brother and Sister Simmons from Sparta, and Brother and Sister W. W. Chrestensen, of Tigris.

In the forenoon Brother Simmons gave an interesting sermon after which they went to the little pool where so many of the local Saints have been baptized, and six fine young people obeyed the gospel call, one son and three daughters of Brother Poort, two of whom are high school graduates, and another now in high school at Mansfield, and the two young sons of Brother and Sister Charles Vancil.

After partaking of a basket dinner they returned to the church for the confirmation and for two ordinations. Brother Haden gave the charge, then D. A. Fuller who had held the office of priest, was ordained an elder, and Brother Ralph Wilt ordained a priest. Both of these men are stanch and well loved Saints of Four Corners group.

Then the six who had been baptized, and two children who had lately been baptized in Four Corners group were confirmed.

Brother Haden says that these baptisms make a total of forty-one in Southern Missouri District since last General Conference.

Sawyer ville Branch, Illinois

Sawyer ville Branch feels that it has finished a good church school year. The school is growing, likewise the branch membership. During July thirteen between the ages of eight and thirty-one were baptized.

The young people's group is always eager to help where it is needed. The bimonthly social gatherings do much to stimulate interest.

Primary and intermediate groups are mostly from the homes of nonmembers.

Elder George F. Barraclough, of East Saint Louis, continues to preach the third Sunday of each month. He has missed very few Sundays since opening up the mission at Sawyer ville June 9, 1909. Members and friends all look forward to the visits of "Uncle George."

Saints there have been blessed temporally and spiritually. Many have been greatly blessed through administration.

They are beginning the new church school year with renewed zeal, and are striving for greater results in accomplishing the objectives of the church.

Valley Center, Michigan

Host to Annual Eastern Michigan Conference

Eastern Michigan district annual conference was held at Valley Center church recently with capacity attendance. Among guests besides members of the district were Saints from five of the seven Detroit churches. Elder William I. Grice, Crosswell, district president, was in charge, assisted by Elders Myron A. Carr, Jeddo, and W. H. Sheffer, McGregor, counselors.

Speakers during the conference were Elders Sheffer; Elder Kenneth Green, of Detroit, president of Detroit District; Elder Carr and Elder Grice. Mrs. C. C. Whitford, Port Huron, district chorister, was in charge of music, and special numbers were presented by the district choir; Miss Eleanor Maxwell, district pianist, who also accompanied throughout the meetings; Frederick Green, Detroit, boy soprano and son of Elder Green; Mrs. Harold E. C. Muir, Melvin, and Richard A. Whitford, Port Huron, assistant chorister.

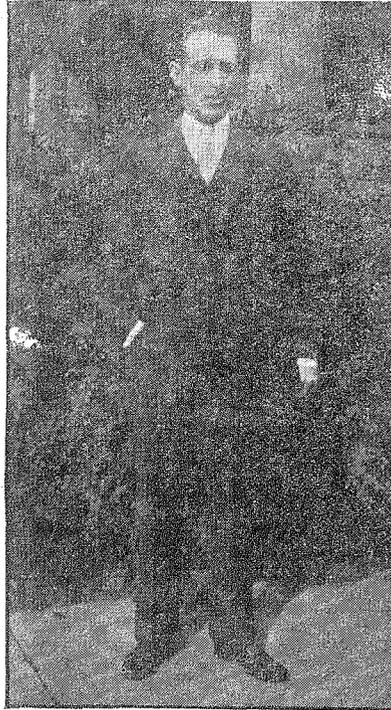

District officers were elected as follows: Elder William Grice, president; Elders Carr and Sheffer, counselors; Elder Herbert C. Swoffer, of Crosswell, secretary; Thomas Isles, Valley Center, treasurer; Mrs. C. C. Whitford, Port Huron, chorister; Miss Eleanor Maxwell, Applegate, pianist; Louis Bender, Port Huron, orchestra director; Elder Earl Diem, Carsonville, church school director; R. A. Whitford, publicity director; Mrs. Millie Mitchell, Applegate, historian; Elder Grice, Elder Carr, Elder Sheffner, Elder C. C. Whitford, Port Huron, Herman Fetting and John Fetting, of Cash, members of the reunion committee; R. A. Whitford and Elder A. E. Ledsworth, both of Port Huron, auditors.

The district membership has increased during the past year to 1,944, and it appears that a brighter record of achievement will be written in the future inasmuch as renewed activities in many lines have been the order here during the past year. Interest is steadily growing among the Saints.

The local branch, Elder H. E. C. Muir, of Melvin, pastor, provided eating and sleeping accommodations for the Saints attending and the attitude and demonstrations of hospitality and fellowship during the conference were commendable. Local deacons managed the seating and order very creditably.

In the Sunday morning meeting a gift of tongues and its interpretation was granted to the conference, and much good can be found in the renewal of faith and application of righteousness in living if the counsel of the gift be heeded.

Dedicatory Service at Hammond, Indiana

ELDER ROY W. SMITH
Pastor of Hammond Branch

Eleven years ago Hammond Branch was organized with a membership of thirty-four. One year later a church building was purchased, and ten years of effort culminated in the dedication of this church building September 16, 1934, with a membership of one hundred eighteen.

President F. M. Smith was the principle speaker of the day, occupying at the eleven o'clock hour and continuing his message at the dedicatory service at two-thirty in the afternoon. The congregation was gratified as well as edified and inspired by the message. At the close of the dedicatory service President Smith addressed the priesthood, after which he entrained for Independence. Apostle D. T. Williams was also in attendance, offering the prayer of dedication, and delivering the message of the evening, taking for his text the words of the Master, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."

The church was made beautiful with a profusion of flowers, and the entire setting was very appropriate. The choir rendered splendid service throughout the day, under the direction of the director, Mrs. Stella Saenger. The department of women were highly complimented on the serving of an excellent dinner and supper at the church.

The vesper service preceding the message of the evening was a veritable feast of music, consisting of anthems by the choir, solos by Sister Margaret Bullard, Mrs. Saenger, Miss Helen Curtis and a piano solo by Mr. Trinks, the accompanist of the choir.

The branch pastor, Elder R. W. Smith, feels justly proud of the progress the branch has made in the past years, both spiritually and financially, and holds out great hope for the progress of the future.

"The Intelligence of God" was the theme Sunday morning at eleven o'clock of Elder C. C. Koehler, and the choir sang "The Son of God Goes Forth to War."

Downstairs the attention of the juniors was centered on prayer. Finis Beebe talked on that subject, and there were two stories on prayer; one was an experience of Elder J. Charles May in the mission field, and it was told by Alice Willis. Music for this hour was supplied by young musicians of this district.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey, the evening speaker, discoursed on the topic "Angelic Ministrations," and a vocal duet by Geraldine Fields and Alice Willis added to the attractiveness of the service.

Walnut Park Church

Pastor Frank McDonald was the speaker at eleven o'clock Sunday morning. His subject was "The Lost Sheep," used in reference to the members of the church in District 3 who are not rendering service to God and the church. He said that responsibility for these souls rests not only with the priesthood, but with every member of the congregation.

"This year," he said, "we are going out to seek, to find, and to save." The sermon was preceded by "Tenderly, Tenderly, Lead Thou Me On," sung as an anthem by the choir.

The program following the class work of the church school consisted of a violin solo by Erwin Moorman and a reading by Sister Edith Barwise.

The Walnut Park young people's council met at three o'clock Sunday afternoon, the meeting being the first for the new council which will serve during the coming church year. Officers elected were: President, Duane Fish; vice president, Vernon Sackman, and secretary-treasurer, Anna Barwise. At this same service those who were being promoted from one department to another were seated on the stage. Bernard Hurshman presented the diplomas. Cecil Walker, young people's leader, was the speaker. He had each group stand as he delivered its charge. This year Brother Walker has charge of the eleven o'clock junior service. Stella Jennings, Cecil Walker, and Wayne Zion are Liberty Street's representatives on the Independence Young People's Council.

The Las Favoritas Chorus, organized a year ago by Sister John R. Lentell, held its first birthday banquet Saturday evening. The husbands of the women of the chorus and also the members of the men's chorus were guests. Sister Lentell presided. An offering of yellow chrysanthemums with the name of the chorus in gold letters on a white ribbon, and accompanied by a poem of appreciation written by Lucien Amos, was presented by the men's chorus. A newspaper, edited by members of the ladies' chorus was read after the banquet, then the chorus sang favorite numbers and the men's chorus responded with numbers. Copies of harvest festival music of two years back were brought forth by Fred Friend, and members of the choir found pleasure in reviving the old tunes.

Apostle Edwards was the main speaker at the service held Sunday evening for the installation of officers. Pastor Lentell called the names of the departments and the officers of each department for the coming year stood. The choir sang "The Lord Be With Us," and Joseph Frick, tenor, sang a solo. Elder C. B. Woodstock offered the prayers.

At the eleven o'clock service Ben Kramer spoke to the juniors in the lower auditorium. Special music was furnished by the boys' choir.

Enoch Hill Church

Enoch Hill Saints were well pleased with the work of the committee chosen by Elder J. E. Martin, to have charge of the harvest festival booth. Several of the older young people assisted with the work. Enoch Hill received second place among local congregations.

Elder C. E. Beal and family have moved into this district. Brother Beal has taken charge of the south group which was in charge of the late W. J. Brewer.

Brother Lloyd Martin was given a week-end furlough from the CCC camp at Salisbury, Missouri, and the Saints were happy to have him home.

The department of women held a covered dish luncheon in honor of Sister Claud Goldsmith who has moved into the Stone Church District. Elder and Sister H. L. Barto were present, and Brother Barto taught the Doctrine and Covenants Class. The rest of the day was spent in quilting. This was an all-day meeting for the women. Sister C. S. Warren, Sister Don Cox, and Sister Willis Young, would be reinstated.

A reception in honor of the new and the retiring pastors and officers was held in the basement of the church October 12, and a program planned by Sisters Chester Constance, Bessie Sellers, and Modeana Petre, was enjoyed. East Independence members were saddened when four local members were injured in an automobile accident. Thomas Junior Peer, son of Brother and Sister Arthur Peer, is in the Sanitarium with internal injuries. Paul E. Bailey is also there with a broken leg, and Sister Ella Bradt and her son, Hubert, are at their home with severe cuts and bruises.

Pittsburg, Kansas

Elder Amos T. Higdon, district president, accompanied by his counselor, Dave Wilson, of Miami, Oklahoma, spent several days at Pittsburg, visiting among the Saints and holding a series of lectures on "The Difference Between the Utah Mormons and the Reorganization."

The Utah ministers who have recently come to Pittsburg, were quite eager to stage a debate, but Brother Higdon having met them on such occasions, decided to present talks on "Authority," "Blood Atonement," "Baptism of the Dead," and "Plurality of Wives."

Each night the enthusiastic audience representing Kansas, Missouri, and Oklahoma, came driving a distance of ninety miles, greatly inspiring Brother Higdon in his investigations. His talks were enjoyed by the people who were more convinced than ever of the truthfulness of the Reorganized Church.

Sunday morning at eleven o'clock Brother Dave Wilson preached a splendid sermon on "The Immediate Needs of the Church and the Individual." Brother Wilson is one of the newer elders in the district; he presented an excellent talk on this his first appearance at Pittsburg.

Brother Higdon preached Sunday evening on "What Shall I Do to Be Saved?" Many nonmembers were greatly moved by the sincere plea of Brother Higdon to serve the Master now.

Pittsburg young people have recently chosen Sister Maurine Jones as their new leader, and are greatly blessed with the spirit of service. Never before have such interest and enthusiasm been displayed in church work. Plans for many winter activities are nearing completion and with the help of God they feel that they can be real Zion Builders.

They are eagerly looking forward to the next Spring River district young people's meeting, a camp fire prayer service at Forest Park, October 16.

Propose Park of the Pines Orchestra

An orchestra for the Park of the Pines Reunion, Michigan, next year, has been proposed, and I have offered my services as director. About thirty-five Saints have signed up to take part, and we want all who can play any stringed instrument to join us. This movement, however, is not intended to rob the choir of singers or the band of its musicians. We have the promise of Hawaiian guitars, harp guitars, Spanish guitars, mandolins, violins, banjos, ukuleles, octos, etc. Would be glad to hear from anyone who plays the cello or bass or harp. The piano also will be used. Let me say to all players, pay strict attention to time. The time must be learned correctly. To those who are taking up the study of the Hawaiian guitar, let me say that this music has come to stay and it has unlimited possibilities. Beautiful shading of sacred, classical, and modern music can be brought out on this instrument. Remember, the careless player can never hope for success. Preserve the dignity of your instrument. Never play just chromatic bunk, play music; make your efforts a matter of prayer. Be careful in the selection of a teacher. Those of you who play by note will be able to secure the music where you are, or to transpose it from the piano music, but those who play the Hawaiian guitar by diagram, write to me at once, and I will send you the music as soon as possible. I write it in the original key from the piano music. The music will reach you through those who have promised to distribute same in your district. Write your name, address, and district plainly. We hope to bring some teachers with us next year, and our services will be free. I will expect you to let me know when you are ready for the next piece. Any who do not play the Hawaiian guitar but would like to, bring your instruments along if you are musical, and we will do all we can to give you a start. Here is a list of pieces we shall begin to prepare for our next reunion. Most of the selections are very simple and beautiful if they are well played. This music will be sent to you Saints free of charge, but we expect you to play it, keep it for your own personal use, and report your progress to me from time to time. See

To this union four children were born, three boys and one girl. Many years of frontier life followed in this unimproved region. They builded their modest log house and cleared and tilled the soil. In 1893 the family moved to southern Wisconsin, locating near Delavan. Here they resided until 1915, when they took up their residence at Plano, Illinois. In the fall of 1929 she and her husband moved to Independence, Missouri, where they resided up to the time of the death of her companion, May 31, 1934. Sister McDowell had been in poor health for a number of years, but it was only in the last week of her life that her condition became serious. She passed away at Lamoni, Iowa, October 9, 1934. She is survived by four children, Oliver A. of Tulsa, Oklahoma; Floyd M., of Lamoni, Iowa; James A., of Saranac, Michigan, and Mrs. F. A. for her husband to carry on more than half a century of unbroken missionary activity. Always her concern was for the welfare of others. She was never too tired, no night was ever too cold, to prevent her going to the aid of a friend or neighbor in need. Her last whispers were expressions of concern for the welfare of her loved ones. Only when she was assured of their safety, only when they promised to seek rest, did she yield herself to the call of her exhausted mind and body, and sleep. The funeral was held at the Stone Church, Independence, October 11, 1934, Bishop G. L. DeLapp preaching the sermon.

LEIGH.—William M. Leigh, a son of Daniel and Ann Leigh, was born at Salt Lake City, Utah, December 24, 1852. In 1865, he moved to Malad, and on December 21, 1877, he married Janette Wolzey. To them six children were born. Five of them preceded their father in death. In 1894, he and his wife lost four children within two months' time through a diphtheria scourge. The oldest son, Daniel Leigh, died in 1931. The only surviving son, Warren Leigh, a professor in the University at Akron, Ohio, was present at his father's funeral. In 1922, he was compelled to part with his beloved wife. During his citizenship in that community he served the people two terms as county treasurer; acted as probate judge during the 1920-22 period; was deputy auditor and deputy assessor for years besides being justice of peace. His life was one of devotion to lofty ideals, strict standards of virtue, and discretion of demeanor. He united with no specific religious organization until March 7, 1920, when he was converted to the message of the reorganized Church. On that day he was baptized. He was called to occupy in the priesthood and was ordained a priest July 7, 1920; was called to serve as elder in 1923, and in 1927, the people elected him president of Malad, Idaho, Branch, where he served kindly, faithfully, until ill health made it necessary for him to retire. He died September 15, 1934. The funeral service was in charge of the local Odd Fellows Lodge, and music was furnished by a Glee Club from the Mormon Church. He had requested that he be buried from the Saints' little church, and the building was far from large enough to care for the crowd of friends who came together.

SHIELDS.—Wilfred Melville Shields, eldest son of John Stanley and Edith Shields, was born at New Liskeard, Ontario, August 2, 1913. In 1918, he, along with his parents, moved to Timmins, Ontario. At time of his death he was employed in the Dominion Bank at Timmins. He leaves to mourn, his mother and father, two sisters, Mrs. Margaret Coxwell, Timmins, and Ethel, at home, and one brother, Percy, at home, besides other relatives and friends. The funeral from his home, September 17, in charge of Elder Albert Shepherdson, sermon by Elder J. M. A. Copner, was largely attended, and many flowers bore mute testimony to the high esteem in which he was held by his many associates. Interment was in Timmins Cemetery.

ADAMS.—William A. Adams was born January 8, 1868, at Victoria, Texas. In 1882, he moved to Pearsall, Texas, where in 1884, he married Maggie Adcock. Two daughters survive this union. “Inasmuch as ye have done it unto these”

Your family

Your friends

Your neighbors

You wouldn't think of allowing your family to suffer for lack of food. You would dig to the very bottom of your pocket to feed your friends. Anything that you have you would share with your neighbors if they were hungry. Yet many of one's own loved ones often die for lack of spiritual food. Our friends perish for lack of spiritual sustenance. Our neighbors yearn for something upon which to feast spiritually—YET WE TURN THEM AWAY.

The small sum of $2 invested in a subscription to the Saints' Herald will feed the several members of each family for a whole year. Will you withhold it? Dare you refuse to feed them in their time of need? Because of the existence of thousands of such cases which should be ministered to by members of this Church we have set apart one week to be known as HERALD SUBSCRIPTION WEEK.
