■ The Cost of Words

By Mollie Richmond

Some people seem to think that words are little costless things,
They never count the price of griefs, or happiness
they bring;
But in their selfish thoughtlessness, their egotistic way,
Will always speak just what they think, no matter what they pay.

They fain would always speak in words, so stern and very plain,
Regardless of the other's heart, or what themselves would gain;
The price may be a loving heart,—may turn that love to hate,—
They never count the cost at all, until it is too late.

They never speak a kindly word to weary passers-by,
Nor do they speak a word of cheer to dry the tearful eye;
They do not seem to care at all for the other's woe, Nor count the cost of what they lose, until they get a blow.

They never give a word of praise, regardless of the need,
Nor would they laud a fellow man, regardless of his deeds;
They never count the cost of words, to them it's small I fear;
But when they pay the price in friends, the cost is mighty dear.

■ A Drouth for Old Neptune

The comedy of panic reached a pinnacle last week when a storekeeper, trying to unload his last season's stock of canned goods on credulous customers, told them that last summer's drouth would cause a famine this coming winter.

The hoax worked, and buying was brisk. Housewives bought canned goods by the case. The wolf of hunger may howl at other doors, but they will rest secure by their well-stocked pantries. Incidentally, the merchant now has a plentiful stock of new canned goods, at moderate prices too.

The funniest thing happened when one thrifty soul, listening to all of the solemn talk about the effects of the drouth, rushed down to buy a case of canned salmon! Old Neptune, swirling through his briny deep, must have cackled.

■ A Scrap of Wisdom

If thou wilt withdraw thyself from speaking vainly, from gadding idly, as also from hearkening after novelties and rumors, thou shalt find leisure enough and suitable for meditation on good things.—Thomas A. Kempis.

I have not the slightest feeling of humility towards the public, or to anything in existence but the Eternal Being, the Principle of Beauty, and the Memory of Great Men.—John Keats.

History is a constant inflowing of God into human affairs.—Fichte.

On the Raising of Funds

One of the main tasks of the church is the raising of funds for the purpose of paying the expenses involved in carrying on its work. The soliciting of funds is not a pleasant work. Those who have it to do would far rather devote their time and energy to the constructive work of the church, as they could if everybody would obey the financial law without being requested to do so; but this work has to be done if contributions are to be kept flowing into the church treasury and the work of the church kept going.

People sometimes forget that the law of the church provides a complete financial system which makes it possible to ascertain exactly how much revenue should be contributed by each person and approximately how much of a total the church should receive.

Many in the church have been led by motives of generosity and the best of intentions to formulate other plans for raising money. These plans are continually being submitted to the Bishopric, the Presidency and editors of our publications. Some of those who propose the plans may feel injured at what they consider the indifference with which their proposals are received.

The failure of the church to respond to these proposed plans is not by any means indifference. It is rather the determination to hold firmly to the financial plan which has been revealed to us for governing our money affairs.

The officers of the church are entirely in harmony in their agreement that there is room in the church for one great financial plan,—the one revealed to us in the Doctrine and Covenants,—the only plan by which we can hope to succeed in the work of building Zion.

The way to contribute money to the church is to pay tithing. The amount of tithing due can be ascertained by making out and filing one's inventory. After tithing is paid, there is room for any of the many kinds of offerings that are taken for one purpose and another, but tithing should come first. It is our obligation. Any offerings that come after the payment of tithing are voluntary gifts.

The officers of the church will endeavor within the next few weeks to enter upon a course of education which should be carefully studied by all members of the church. The first of this series is an introductory article by the Presiding Bishop, L. F. P.

Curry. In his article he gives a schedule of what we may expect in the way of publications on this question. We request our readers to give this article and those that follow it their most careful and respectful consideration.

Other plans of financing the church, if examined in view of the circumstances and facts, will be found to contain weaknesses which for one reason and another would permit inequities and injustices to creep into our financial system.

The financial system outlined for us in the Doctrine and Covenants is just and equitable. It will distribute the burden of maintaining the church and its functions upon the rich and poor in a manner that no one will be asked to give more than he can bear and no one will be asked to give less than he properly should. Justice and righteousness are exhibited in the divine plan. Some church members still have to be convinced that God's plan is better than any human plan that can be invented. No matter how good a new idea may be, the test of practice may reveal weaknesses. Therefore, the officers of the church feel justified in urging our people everywhere to conform with the divine plan.

Blue Pencil Notes

THE YOUNG DEACON had carefully drilled himself for his first evening of ushering at the church; but the arrival of a particularly dignified and precise sister threw him into confusion and he heard himself saying to her: "Madam, may I sew you to a sheet?"

A RECENT visit to conferences and branches in Michigan was among the most happy experiences of my life. The very evident desire of the Saints everywhere to extend warm evidences of affectionate regard was refreshing and stimulating. It reminded me again that the ordained man can ill afford to forfeit one of his most priceless possessions, the love of the Saints. It were better to die rather than to make any betrayal of such trust. The presence at the Pontiac conference of such veteran missionaries and evangelists as Gomer T. Griffiths and Frederick A. Smith served also to remind one that an ordained man may through a sustained ministry extending over many years not only retain but increase the spiritual inheritance of respect

OFFICIAL*Kansas City Stake Presidency

Ill health and the pressure of business responsibilities have made it necessary for Elder Cyril E. Wight to resign as President of the Kansas City Stake. The Presidency have no other course but to accept this resignation, but do so with regret. Brother Wight retires from this responsibility with our appreciative thanks and good will. He will continue to serve the church as opportunity affords.

Elder C. George Mesley is hereby appointed to act as Stake President pro tempore, pending further consultation by the church authorities concerned and action by the stake conference. Brother Mesley will carry forward plans already approved by the Presidency and his predecessor, and the Saints in the stake are urged to give him their full support in the tasks which he now assumes.

and affection that is his from the church in response to a life of devotion. This was a sort of reunion, since in my first mission under conference appointment Brother Griffiths was my minister-in-charge, while my second mission was under Brother Fred A. Moreover at the conference of 1915, when President F. M. Smith was ill in the East with pneumonia, these two presided with me over the conference, this being the conference at which Brother Fred M. was selected to succeed his father who had passed to his reward in 1914.

Passing from the sublime to the ridiculous, we are reminded by a recent convention of nudists (held a bit too late in the season, so that some were slightly chilled and liberally sprinkled with goose pimples—no other kind could appear on a nudist) that decadence takes strange forms. They cry "back to nature," but in nature practically all forms of life clothe themselves after some adequate fashion; excepting such things as fish worms which hide in the earth, and hairless Mexican dogs which are the laughing stock of every self respecting dog north of Tia Juana. Even the Cuckoo bird is not so cuckoo as to leave off her feathers; and the wild goose is not so wild as a nudist.

Speaking of birds, at this season of the year in this climate the blackbirds begin to gang up for the flight South. They gather together in great flocks. Recently I was visiting at a home in Cameron where the house is sheltered by large overhanging shade trees. Promptly at six o'clock each evening hundreds of blackbirds came streaming in from the country to settle in those trees. Promptly at six in the morning they departed. They varied their schedule by only a few minutes from day to day. As they settled at night they put on a song festival that would rival our Harvest Festival Chorus for enthusiasm. John Sheehy never led a community song service more bubbling over with zeal—though I could not discover any song leader among the blackbirds. The note of the individual blackbird is harsh; but in chorus, with the soloist subdued, a medley of liquid notes is produced not unlike the sound of running waters. The birds obviously enjoyed this social event—and we might even consider their evening hymn devotional.

Wild rice grows in the swamp's edge

That the wild birds may have meat,— Ungarnered, unmilled, uncooked.

They come to God's board and eat,
Then rise on their own power

And fly close to the white throne;
His free grace and strength and speed,
By this communion, their own.

“ . . . And I Work.”

BEGINNING November 13, 1934, and continuing through January 13, 1935, the Presiding Bishopric is sponsoring a period of education in the financial law of the church.

The stake, district and branch organizations, through their constituted leaders, are invited to cooperate in this movement, preaching and teaching during this period, from pulpit and at fireside, the essential elements of the law so that everyone may more fully understand it and feel an urge to obey. To the various officials concerned details will be forwarded in due time.

As sources of instruction and inspiration to all alike, the columns of the Saints' Herald, during the period mentioned, will contain a series of articles from a number of church workers. The range and practical application of their contributions is shown by the program below, as nearly as possible in the order given:

November 20,	President Elbert A. Smith.	Thanksgiving.
November 27,	Bishop G. L. DeLapp.	A Progress Report for 1934.
December 4,	Elder Stephen Robinson.	Organizing Financial Work in the District.
	Bishop N. Ray Carmichael.	Who Carries the Load in Troubled Times?
December 11	President F. M. McDowell	The Financial Law and the Priesthood.
	Apostle Paul M. Hanson.	The Financial Law and Missionary Work.
December 18,	President F. M. Smith.	Christmas, a Time of Dedication.
December 25,	Bishop Henry L. Livingston	Teaching the Financial Law.
January 1,	Bishop John C. Dent,	Tithing as a Christian Habit.
January 8,	Bishop C. A. Skinner.	Filing the Inventory or Annual Financial Statement.

Special envelopes will be furnished to members through local solicitors for Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays, so that a specific response in the form of tithes and offerings may be made by everyone. In addition, an opportunity will be given to all members at the outset of the New Year to file an inventory or annual financial statement. Unless the teaching may find an outlet in appropriate action, this will be just another program.

In a joint effort of this character, we should experience anew what it means to work with the Master. In one of his typical phrases, he said, “My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.” (John 5:17.) As he used the word, “hitherto” meant, “up to now.” Thus he described in a word, the activity of God up to that moment, an activity expressed in the functioning of Nature, and in the religious and cultural advances of mankind. Likewise, he depicted his current participation in the assumption of his earthly ministry, working in complete unity and harmony with his Father, in furtherance of the Father’s aims.

How beautifully the latter day message accords with Christ’s thought of work, when it points out that “all are called, according to the gifts of God unto them: and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.” (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.)

This ties us together as a band of workers for a cause, under a Divine Leader who cried, “I must work the works of him that sent me.” (John 9: 4.) How seriously the Master lays upon us, his co-workers now, the responsibility to achieve a unity in our working together, similar to that existing between him and his Father.

Outside of the church, today, as has been the case in the past, the Father shows us in many manifest ways that he continues working to establish the cause of truth and righteousness. To the end that his call to us may find us more ready and willing to do our part, this period of education in the financial law is set aside. When the end has been reached, January 13, next, we pray that there will not be one who cannot say, as he thinks of the work of our Father and his Son, “and I work.”

Leisure and Conversation

The tempo of life in France makes for true enjoyment. In America some inward unrest, some need of excitement seems always to be driving us on. When I was first married twenty minutes was the longest time I could happily spend in a chair on the boulevard. After that . . . I was seized by the fatal American need to "do something." Now I feel with satisfaction that I could spend unlimited time anywhere in Europe absorbing one single café noir and watching life go by. I have found the inner peace which enables me to enjoy an endless series of moments each for itself.

In France the gentle art of conversation still flourishes. It is not necessary to furnish your dinner guests with means of amusement for the evening. They possess these in themselves, and they honor your board for the sake of talk. To ask them to play cards or go to the theater would be superfluous, if not insulting. Since conversation is an art, its object is not to instruct but to delight. Americans do not readily grasp this idea. Our practical minds like to talk things out, not perceiving that an epigram often conveys more truth than a lecture. The French feel that conversation should never degenerate into a lesson or argument. It may be a battle of wits, but the weapons should be finely pointed rapiers, not clashing swords. You should pass lightly from point to point, striking sparks if you can, but never expound or hammer your ideas home. The French, as our slang phrase has it, "get you the first time."

Good manners are as important in France as good morals, and of far more general concern. My husband says, "That man is rude" in much the same tone with which a Puritan might have said, "He is wicked"; and the condemnation is just as final. We spend much of our time in casual encounters, and the French, therefore, argue that it is worth while to bring delicacy even to passing relationships. Graciousness is the lubricating oil which makes the social wheels go round and eases the wear and tear of human friction.

Seldom do the French fail to say the pleasant thing, to congratulate or sympathize as occasion demands. Little by little one comes to expect and to bestow these small caresses of the spirit until it is second nature to be gracious.—Charlotte T. Muret in Harper's Magazine.

Without any ifs or maybes, but or ands.

The Spiritual Dole

In spite of our horror of the economic dole and our insistence that the only solution for unemployment is employment, we conduct our churches on the basis of the spiritual dole. Spiritual unemployment is far more widespread and far more chronic than economic unemployment. Of the constituency of the average church, the great majority engaged in no regular and systematic program of Christian activities through which they definitely labor upon the unfinished tasks of the Kingdom of God.

The small group in the average church who do "carry the load" are usually conscious of being overworked. "Shorter hours" or a definite limitation of their responsibilities would be welcomed, if they could be assured that the work would go forward were they to relax.

At the same time, there is a host of the spiritually unemployed whose supreme need is a definite religious responsibility for which they must acquire skill, and into which they must put effort. Such persons attend the church services to listen, and, perhaps, to worship. They seek to support their spiritual lives from a table which others have spread. If they attend regularly, they are counted "active members" even though they never do anything but absorb. . . .

There is no comparable enforcement of spiritual unemployment in the church. Yet the typical church program is organized and conducted on the assumption of a small working group and a large group of idlers who barely subsist on the spiritual dole. A reorganization of industry to put everyone to work is desperately needed. A reorganization of the church's basic method and program to engage every member of its constituency in a definite schedule of activities in Christian living and service is also needed. This is one of the implications of transforming the church into a school in Christian living. . . . The dole and widespread unemployment are as disastrous in the one realm as in the other.—An editorial "The Spiritual Dole" in International Journal of Religious Education.

Zion's Christian Legion

Looking Forward to Martyrdom Week
—June 22 to 29

One of the outstanding achievements of the Supreme Council of the Legion in its recent meeting at Lansing was the establishment of a period for meditation, consecration and sacrifices. It might well be denominated the "Passion Week of the Restoration," but instead it awaits an official name. However, for the convenience of the moment we are accepting "Martyrdom Week" as a fitting appellation. Out of eight suggested titles, this is the one that seems the most favored by a number who have been interviewed on the subject, President Smith among the many.

The meaning of this will be appreciated more fully when we explain that the time thus selected was the period covering the exile, imprisonment, and martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. It was thought by the Council that no more appropriate time could be chosen for young Latter Day Saints to ponder the particular needs of their church and the distinctive doctrinal precepts which sets it apart from the rest of the religious world as an institution having a definite as well as a different mission to humanity. This period includes the intervening time between June 22 and 29.

It is the fond hope of the Council that this week will eventually be made something outstanding in the hearts and lives of all young persons in the church. That is a dream for the future to answer, but our hope right now is that every legionnaire will respond to the challenge of that vital week of history and make it in a special way a week of conformity to the high ideals for which our martyrs have died. That for which they died should be the things for which we live.

Can we not in a period like this, surrounded as it is with a halo of historic interest and permeated with the high idealism of a great cause, give ourselves to a few days of partial martyrdom by denying ourselves some of the usual pleasures of life and giving over the week to using our time, talents, and means to the building of a cause for which these heroes died? This is the challenge. What will be our answer?

Moreover, this period, which for our convenience will be made to cover the whole week will be climaxed with the General Convention of Zion's Christian Legion the last Saturday and Sunday of the month. We urgently request

The Holy Scriptures

By S. A. Burgess

Church Historian

THE EPITOME OF FAITH states, "We believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God, so far as it is translated correctly." This primarily refers to the common version or that of King James, for it was written over ninety years ago. It is broad enough, however, to include all versions. The written record includes the inspiration of divine truth and also includes the writings of man.

In recent years there have been many versions made by way of translation of a few or many of the old Hebrew and Greek manuscripts and versions extant. As time passes more of these come to light, though none of them date back to the time of Christ or nearer than the fourth century A. D., and are therefore rather remote copies and many of them fragmentary.

Very shortly after the organization of the church, in fact as early as June, 1830, Joseph Smith began the Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures. He did not have any of the old manuscripts. He used the old family Bible purchased by him and Oliver Cowdery in 1829. He did not have the Urim and Thummim, for that had been returned with the Book of Mormon plates as soon as that translation was completed in 1829. He wrote by inspiration, the spirit of revelation. (Saints' Herald 37: 586; 42: 616)

The reason for his undertaking this work can doubtless be found in the Book of Mormon:

"For behold, they have taken away from the gospel of the Lamb many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord have they taken away; and all this have they done that they might pervert the right ways of the Lord; that they might blind the eyes and harden the hearts of the children of men: wherefore, thou seest that after the book hath gone forth through the hands of the great and abominable church that there are many plain and precious things taken away from the book, which is the book of the Lamb of God; and after these plain and precious things were taken away, it goeth forth unto all the nations of the Gentiles: and after it goeth forth unto all the nations of the Gentiles, yea, even across the many waters which thou hast seen, with the Gentiles which have gone forth out of captivity; thou seest because of the many plain and precious things which have been taken out of the book, which were plain unto the understanding of the children of men, according to the plainness which is in the Lamb of God; because of these things which are taken away out of the gospel of the Lamb, an exceeding great many do stumble, yea, insomuch that Satan hath great power over them."—1 Nephi 3: 168-175. (Utah edition, 1 Nephi 13: 26-30.)

Then in June he received the words of the Lord unto Moses (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 24; Preface to the Holy Scriptures, page 7; Times and Seasons Volume 4, page 7; Pearl of Great Price, page 8.) This promised not only that Moses should write concerning this earth but that the words of the Lord would be restored to the children of men. With this no doubt he had received a command to do this particular work.

He labored as opportunity permitted. Then in December, 1830, Sidney Rigdon, who had just been baptized in Ohio, came and from then on appears to have acted as a scribe. He so acted by command of the Lord. (Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5, Utah edition 35: 20.) But shortly afterward they were commanded to do no more until they removed to Ohio from New York. This move was made in January and they arrived in Ohio about the first of February. Then on February 9, 1831, they received the promised law to govern the church and this included the following:

"Thou shalt ask, and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15. (Utah edition 42: 56-58.)

This work had already been commanded or appointed but now it is added that these Scriptures will be preserved in safety, also that they should be published and preached to all nations.

HOW THE WORK WAS DONE

Joseph Smith received the revelation which covered the first part of Genesis. The manuscript in our hands shows clearly that this work was started with the first of Genesis and the manuscript continued through each book of the Old Testament. Genesis was written in full in the manuscript. But after that Joseph Smith marked in the old family Bible where each change would appear, marked in the margin and also a caret where the words were to appear and struck out words which were to be omitted. Sidney Rigdon wrote down the name of each book of the Bible and of each chapter in it in which changes were made and the words to be inserted.

When they reached the Songs of Solomon there appears plainly written in the manuscript, "The Songs of Solomon there are not inspired writing." It is rather interesting to note that some modern students fully agree with this view. When they reached the Apocrypha they inquired of the Lord and received the revelation published in Doctrine and Covenants, section 88.

"Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, concerning the Apocrypha, There are many things contained therein that are true, and it is mostly translated correctly; there are many things contained therein that are not true, which are interpolations by the hands of men. Verily I say unto you, that it is not needful that the Apocrypha should be translated. Therefore, whoso readeth it let him understand, for the Spirit manifesteth truth; and whoso is enlightened by the Spirit shall obtain benefit therefrom; and whoso receiveth not by the Spirit, cannot be benefited; therefore, it is not needful that it should be translated. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 88.

Some have erroneously asserted that Joseph Smith simply corrected here and there, taking up first one place and then another. The manuscript shows that this is not correct. It is true that there are some chapters in which there appears simply the number of the chapter, then the word "correct" in the manuscript. There are also some of the minor prophets in which no changes were made, but in each case the book is named in the manuscript in its order and the word "correct" written under. In the book of Daniel there appears only one or two small changes, but each of these books are set forth in turn. This method of writing no doubt was to save work. It requires that both the old Bible and the manuscript be used to make a complete document for publication.

It is true that they did not proceed from the book of Genesis to the book of Revelation in regular order. They did proceed from Genesis to Malachi and also from Matthew to Revelation. But they had not been writing very long before they received a revelation commanding them to translate from the New Testament. That was on March 7, 1831, (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 11 Utah edition 45: 60, 61.) The manuscript shows that they did this and the date is inserted in the manuscript, showing that they started almost immediately to translate at the beginning of Matthew.

The first three gospels and the greater part of John are written in full, verbatim. After that the plan used in the Old Testament was followed, namely, that the marks were made in the margin and in the text where insertions were to be made. Words omitted were stricken out, and in the manuscript were named the title of each book and chapter in its order with a statement of the corrections to be made or words to be inserted. It is true that in some cases some were simply marked "correct" and no changes made.

These manuscripts being made, it appears that a second copy was also made, no doubt to be ready in case of publication, particularly of those parts that were written in full, so that one copy could be handed to the printer and the other copy still retained in their hands. The New Testament was finished before the Old Testament, so we find that Joseph Smith states on February 2, 1833, "The New Testament was completed." (Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 723.) Then on July 2, 1833, he states, "Having finished the translation of the Bible a few hours since." (Times and Seasons, Volume 6, page 803.) It will be noted that he states that the work was completed.

In a letter to W. W. Phelps, just a week before so completed, June 25, 1833, he states, "In regard to the printing of the new translation; it cannot be done until we can attend to it ourselves, and this we will do as soon as the Lord permits." The reason for this is not difficult to see from the manner in which the work was done, but it was not at all essential that he should be living and do it himself, though he may have preferred to do so. He did not, however, for reasons clearly indicated.

The attack was made on the church in Missouri very shortly thereafter. They were expelled from Jackson County and eventually from Missouri. Many other matters pressed for earnest attention, the building of the temple at Kirtland and later the buildings at Nauvoo. But what he did or was unable to do cannot change the fact that the Scriptures were to be preserved in safety and to be published to the world and taught to all nations, as stated in the revelation referred to above. A number of references may be found to this work indicating a sincere desire to have it published. In May, 1833, provision was made for printing the Scriptures:

"And again, verily I say unto you, The second lot on the south shall be dedicated unto me, for the building of an house unto me, for the work of the printing of the translation of my Scriptures, and all things whatsoever I shall command you."—Doctrine and Covenants 91: 3. (Utah edition 94: 10.)

And again in February, 1834:

"And again, a commandment I give unto you concerning your stewardship which I have appointed unto you; behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken; and if the properties are mine then ye are stewards, otherwise ye are no stewards. But verily I say unto you, I have appointed unto you to be stewards over mine house, even stewards indeed; and for this purpose I have commanded you to organize yourselves, even to shinelah [print] my words, the fullness of my Scriptures, the revelations which I have given unto you, and which I shall hereafter, from time to time, give unto you, for the purpose of building up my church and kingdom on the earth, and to prepare (Continued on page 1356.)

Glimpses of European News

By John W. Rushton

Of the Quorum of Twelve

IN THE month of September the British Association for the Advancement of Science met at Aberdeen in Scotland under the presidency of Sir James Jeans. In the course of his address, the eminent physicist said: "We cannot ignore the tragic fact that, as our president of two years ago told us, science has given man control over nature before he has gained control over himself. These are hard facts which we cannot hope to alter, and which—we may as well admit—may wreck civilization."

This language would be meaningless or worse if determinism or behaviorism were true.

AMONG the discussions of interest at Aberdeen was one on "Race Welfare and Marriage." Colonel C. J. Bond, of Leicester, said: "Young citizens suffered today in health, efficiency and happiness because no sound biological foundation had been laid at school with regard to sex, marriage, parenthood, citizenship or vocation. Civilized man must be equipped with sound biological knowledge, including the laws of heredity and the claims of the next generation. Since the age of development of sex maturity is at present outside human control, facilities and opportunities for earlier marriage should be available if young citizens of good natural endowment and of good stock are to be enabled to hand on their good qualities to children, and by so doing promote both national and racial welfare."

ANOTHER interesting discussion on the question as to how far the increasing complexity of civilized life may be responsible for the increase of feeble-mindedness, gave Dr. Shepherd Dawson opportunity to suggest there are grave implications and to say: The present tempo of life is producing innumerable misfits—intellects that are unable to cope with modern strain. Unless mental capacity increases there must be a greater proportion of what will be reckoned feeble-mindedness. He saw hope in the present tendency in the modern world to acquire the arts of specialization in one direction and superficiality in all others.

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO this last spring six men belonging to the village of Tolpiddle of Dorsetshire in the south of England, were transported to Australia because they dared to start a Trades Union. George Loveless and his brave associates were pardoned later by Lord John Russell in 1836. This year, at the Trades Union Congress at Weymouth, the president, Mr. Conley, of Leeds, said: "Increasing wages, shortening the working hours, the improvement of conditions of labor, important as they were, were less important than education."

It is of serious moment that the workers shall not only have the power to work locally and federally, but they shall be also educated to make good use of that power.

IN THE ANNUAL REPORT of the Chief Medical Officer of the British Ministry of Health, Sir George Newman gives "an appalling revelation." In England and Wales last year 3,446 mothers died in child-birth. A definite call through the newspapers is sounded to meet this shameful challenge to our science and legislation. The reasons advanced by medical men are not very satisfactory; but it is alleged that expectant mothers are not being properly nourished. This figure is higher than during the past twenty years.

ON SUNDAY, September 9, Dean Inge, of Saint Paul's Cathedral, London, preached his last sermon as Dean. He was appointed to the deanery by Mr. Asquith in 1911. He is one of the few clergymen whose "news value" is national and constant. Dean Inge is a Platonist and a truly great scholar. The Church Times, perhaps one of the Dean's greatest critics, says of him, "Dr. Inge for years has been the greatest intellectual asset of Anglican Modernists. He is attracted to Catholicism (not Roman), mainly because of his devotion to Saint Augustine, that good Platonist, himself, in a large measure, the pupil of Plotinus, who is the Dean's spiritual and intellectual father. He is esteemed as a philosopher rather than a theologian. His writings are well known and cover a wide range, but perhaps his tribute to his little daughter who died a dozen years ago is the best liked. "It is a lovely thing, perfect in its discretion, perfect in its expression. Here the grim Dean is the gentle Christian."

IN DECEMBER, Professor J. Garstang, of Liverpool, will lead an expedition to Jericho. This is being organized through the generosity of Sir Charles Marston. Professor Garstang hopes to discover new traces of a civilization which flourished about 4,000 years ago. "Traces of human settlements earlier than those systematically excavated in the city and necropolis of Jericho between 1929 and 1932 are known to exist at a deep level and may extend, it is stated, beyond the outer walls."

IN THE early part of this month the Modern Churchman's Conference was held in Birmingham. Several well-known modernists contributed papers to the gatherings, including Dean Inge, Bishop Barnes, of Birmingham, and Professor J. F. Bethune Baker. The Modernist appreciation of the Bible was the principal theme. Bishop Barnes spoke on "The Old Testament and Modern Man," during which he said: "At the present time anti-Semitism is, unfortunately, widespread. In Britain and America it has not gone to such absurd lengths as among the German speaking peoples of Central Europe. But if you hate the Jews you naturally disparage their greatest contribution to human civilization." . . . After considering a number of criticisms against the Old Testament the Bishop said, "Admit all these facts, and none the less you must allow that in the Old Testament there is to be found spiritual understanding of supreme quality. In truth, the religion of the Old Testament at its best was extraordinarily fine, far finer than that which has often passed as Christian."

SEPTEMBER 18 was a notable day at Geneva for the League of Nations welcomed Soviet Russia to a permanent seat by thirty-eight votes in favor to three against. Switzerland, Holland and Portugal were the nations voting against this move, and seven nations did not vote at all. The Chinese claim to be reelected for three years was rejected. The Chinese delegates were bitterly disappointed at this action. The Spectator commenting on the entrance of Russia, says: "Grounds for objecting to Russia's admission are easy to find for those who seek them, but it is manifest on any broad view that both the League and the world will be better off, to say nothing of Russia itself, if that great nation is associated in constant cooperation with the rest of Europe than if it is left isolated, suspected and suspicious."

FROM PARIS comes the news that the French Budget has been balanced. M. Germain-Martin, the Minister of Finance, emphasizes three points which should greatly simplify the task of Parliament:

1. An estimated surplus of £500,000 (two and a half millions of dollars) expenditures limited to about £600,000,000

The Children's Division

Church-wide Children's "Friendship Circle"

A Project for the Children's Division

By Mildred Goodfellow, Associate Director

To Leaders and Teachers:

We talk about God's children who live in other lands; we sing "Jesus Loves the Little Children of the World"; we show pictures and learn Bible verses to help our children develop a friendly attitude toward other children. However, since they have little or no contact with them, it is difficult for them to really visualize the children far away.

But suppose they received a letter from a child far away—a letter actually written by that child! That would be different! And if a picture of the child accompanied the letter, the joy of the recipient would be complete!

Members of our church reside in many lands. We are all God's children and we should feel a friendly interest in each other.

After much thought, it has been decided to sponsor a "Friendship Circle" among the children of the church. This will be started by the children in the United States writing to children in Australia, England, Hawaii, Holland, Poland and Tahiti, mailing the letters so they will reach their several destinations by Christmas time. Names and addresses have been obtained, and in some places the children are happily looking forward to receiving letters from the children in the United States.

The first step to be taken in any project is "purposing"—deciding to do it. The purposing should be the children's or the plan will not grow into a true project.

A few pictures of grown people or children of different nations will arouse the children's interest. These may be obtained from the National Geographic and other magazines. It is suggested that the pictures of the missionaries be clipped from the Stepping Stones for April 9, 1933, and placed beside the picture of a child from the land where that missionary is working. The teacher may tell the story, "How the Artist Forgot Four Colors," (page 52, Primary Quarterly, First Year, Part Four, July, August, September, 1934) following which, the children will probably wish to sing "Jesus Loves the Little Children of the World," (page 50 of the quarterly described above) or "Children of One Father," (No. 94, Worship and Conduct Songs.)

From "Our Little Cousin" series (available at the public library) the leader may obtain interesting information about people of other nations. This should include some facts about things those people have accomplished, and what we use, eat or wear that comes from that particular land. Be sure that these things are told in a way that will interest the children. Sometimes in the past a feeling of superiority has been the result of missionary projects. That must be avoided in this project.

If there is in your group a missionary who knows something of the church work in another land, it will be a splendid help if he will talk to the children a few minutes.

It is probable the suggestion to write to other children will be made by a child. If not, the leader may, by the skillful use of conversation, help the children to think of that idea.

Then will come the second step—planning. This will include deciding when the letter is to be written; whether each child will write a letter or whether there will be only one letter written, to which all the children will contribute, (probably this latter idea is preferable, except in those instances where individual names are furnished), and what pictures it will contain. Individual or group pictures of the children, kodak or postcard pictures of their homes, schools and churches, will make the letter more interesting. If the children have planted a garden or engaged in some other similar activity, or if they have had a happy time at a picnic, pictures of those occasions may be sent also.

It is suggested that if the children save their money to pay the postage, the project will mean more to them. However, in some instances an interested father or mother will be glad to contribute that to the group.

These letters must leave the United States by the middle of November, or a little later, so it is hoped that leaders and teachers will write at once to—

Mildred Goodfellow, 1306 Lane St. Topeka, Kansas, for information as to where to send the letters. Names and addresses will be sent you promptly. Please state whether your class or classes are primary or junior age, or both.

Anthem Material

By Mabel Carlile

Head of the Department of Music

One of the first requisites for a live and enthusiastic choral group is plenty of good music to sing. One cannot expect a choir to enjoy rehearsals based on the same old anthems, year after year. Give them some new, beautiful, and singable material and see how the interest at rehearsals picks up. When your choir has once learned a good anthem sing it several times during the year and then give it a rest for a time. In two or three years this same anthem can again be taken up and enjoyed.

It is a mistake to always provide music that our choirs can sing at sight. They want to advance and grow in musical knowledge. Give them some things that need very close attention and effort, for we want them to get beyond the A B C stage as soon as possible. On the other hand we cannot succeed when our music is so difficult that it is discouraging. A judicious mixture of the easy and difficult is usually the wisest plan.

We are including a list of anthems that we hope you will find usable. In each group the anthems are arranged so that the easier ones appear first. These can be ordered from your own music house but it is always well to secure one copy first, and then decide for yourself if it is the type of thing you need. Almost any firm will be glad to send these anthems to you, on approval for a few days.

MODERATELY EASY ANTHEMS

1. I Sought the Lord ..... by Frederick Stevenson
No. 10, 100. .... Oliver Ditson Co.
(Alto solo and mixed chorus)
2. Benediction ..... by Hamblin
Chappell-Harms Co.
(Anthem for tenor or soprano solo; duet for soprano and alto, and mixed chorus.)
3. God Is Love ..... by Ira Wilson
No. 1953 .....Lorenz Co.
(Duet, chorus and soprano obbligato.)
4. My Trust Is In Thy Word ..... by Alfred Wooler
No. 12,970 ..... Oliver Ditson Co.
(Hymn-Anthem for mixed voices, soprano and alto duet, and tenor solo.)
5. O Jesus, Thou Art Standing ..... Oley Speaks
No. 35,070 ..... Theodore Presser Co.
(Mixed voices and soprano solo.)

MEDIUM AND MODERATELY DIFFICULT ANTHEMS

1. The Roseate Hues of Early Dawn ..... A. Stone
No. 116 ..... White-Smith Music Co.
(Melodious hymn anthem for mixed voices, with solos for soprano, contralto and baritone voices.)
2. Rock of Ages ..... Dudley Buck
No. 462 ..... Oliver Ditson Co.
(Soprano solo and mixed voices.)
3. Lead Kindly Light ..... Godard-Parks
J. A. Parks Co.
(Soprano solo and chorus.)
4. Give Unto the Lord ..... Cadman.
No. 4060 ..... Harold Flammer Co.
(Anthem of the large, majestic type for mixed voices and bass or contralto solo.)
5. They That Sow In Tears Shall Reap In Joy
..... Harker-Deis
No. 7476 ..... G. Schirmer.
(Anthem of moderately difficult grade for tenor solo and chorus.)

While it is usually desirable to assign the solos to the voice indicated by the composer any high voice can sing a tenor or soprano solo, or any low voice a contralto, baritone, or bass solo. Sometimes in small choirs, we might go several years without finding a good tenor soloist, for instance. It would be a shame to discard a good anthem because of this lack, when a soprano can usually sing a tenor solo part. If you know of no music house where these anthems can be secured send us a stamped addressed envelope and we will suggest some in your locality.

Paul's letter to Philemon has done more for the liberation of slaves than any other piece of writing in the world, and yet in it there is not one word of moralizing on the evils of slavery. The letter simply preserves the record of Paul's act and attitude towards a run-away Christian slave. That act did its own preaching. The best preaching is always so done. It is didactic indirectly. This is what Dr. Van Dyke meant when he prayed, "Lord, let me never tag a moral to a story, nor tell a story without a meaning."—Henry E. Jackson, in Great Pictures as Moral Teachers.

"In Jesu Nom"

THE NEW HOME was a large house which had once belonged to a man connected with the train service; but it was the only good building in the neighborhood. Louisa was delighted. She would have much opportunity for helping the poor.

She watched the people who passed with great interest. One group of ragged children were extremely pitiful. They were spectacular in manner, and scrawny and wizened. The boys all smoked cigarettes, even the smallest one who couldn't have been more than five years old. Louisa determined to get acquainted with them, so one morning she managed to be near the roadside raking up some dead leaves as they passed. "Hello, children. It's a fine morning, isn't it?"

The oldest boy started in surprise, bowed like a gentle knight straight out of the pages of a storybook, and said: "Good morning to you, ma'am!"

Louisa was intrigued. She stepped nearer the boy, then recoiled quickly. Wrapped around one arm, its mouth held open by his other hand, was a huge snake. It was so nearly the color of the child's grimy clothing that she had not noticed it before.

"Oh, aren't you afraid it will hurt you?" she gasped.

The boy laughed. "No ma'am, thankee ma'am. Reckon you ain't heard much about snakes. This 'un here's an old bull snake. He won't hurt nobody, will you, snakey? Say hello to the pretty lady, will yu'?"

"My—I—I don't really believe I could get used to snakes, that way," Louisa said rather shakily. She simply must find a way to help these people. "Where do you live?"

"We lives way over there by the river, lady. You can see it if you step a little furdur this way. There. See that house with smoke comin' out'n the chimney—'t'other side of that big tree? That's our'n. Right beside that big pile of junk."

"Oh—I—I see." She hadn't expected anyone would live in such a place as that. She had thought perhaps those places were just sheds where the railroad men kept some tools.

"Would you mind telling me what your name is? You see, I'm a stranger here. We just moved from Wildrose, where my husband was teaching in the high school."

"Teaching in the high school!" The children all giggled hysterically. "Just wait'll the old man hears about how we been swappin' words wit' a p'fessor's wife! Won't his eyes pop out'n his head?"

"But you haven't told me your name." The boy bowed again. "Excuse me, ma'am. My name is Philander Johannes Rippetto, my sister's name is Octavia Hilaria Rippetto, this boy's name is Alexander Abraham Rippetto, this'n is Horatio Flavius Rippetto; we got a little brother and a baby sister what's to home. Their name is—"

"Never mind," laughed Louisa in bewilderment. "I'm sure I can't remember them all, anyway. I think—could your mother come to see me, sometime?"

THE CHILDREN STARED at her with open mouths. "Ye gods!" breathed the boy, "A p'fessor's wife askin' us to come and see her! Won't the old man jist croak? An' I allus did want to see inside of a fancy house an' see how fancy folks lived."

"We're not such wonderful folks," said Louisa. "Maybe you'd like to come in now for a little while. Only—I wonder if you'd mind killing that snake or something? I—I'm not used to them, you see—I couldn't stand to have you bring it in the house."

"Oh, I just couldn't kill poor old Tommyrot. But say—that big old can you've been puttin' trash in—it's most empty—if I put 'im in there he can't get away. There!"

Louisa led them into the big living room. She didn't know whether she could bear to have their extremely dirty clothes touching the furniture or not. But she must. She must find a way to help them.

The children tiptoed gingerly over the soft rug and peered curiously here and there. She watched them amusedly, uncertain just what she should say and do. Suddenly there rose a shriek of delight from the oldest boy and he let out a string of loud oaths which caused Louisa to stop her ears in horror.

"A writing machine!" he cried, pointing ecstatically at Dan's typewriter on the desk in the corner. "Oh, can I tap it—please! I never tapped one before—"

"What's going on here?" Dan appeared suddenly in the doorway, a displeased Dan, with his best school-teacher frown on his face.

"Why—why—I—I saw them, and they said they'd never seen a professor's house and so I—I asked them to come in—"

"Well, that's all right perhaps. But we can't have swearing and vile language in our home, you know."

"Oh, you mustn't insult them, Dan!" He just mustn't interfere with her plans to help them. He mustn't! "Just because they're not rich—"

"I'd be the last one in the world to insult any person because he was poor; but if he is also filthy-minded—"

"Never min', ma'am. Thank'ee kindly fer all yer goodness. We'll go, ma'am. We'll git Tommyrot an' hike. We'll tell the old woman erbout all yer kindness, but we won't come ter see ye. No sir. We ain't dumb. We knows when we've been insulted. Good-by, ma'am, an' thank'ee." The children retreated with a dignity that seemed painfully inconsistent with their appearance.

LOUISA FACED DAN angrily. "You've driven them away!" she panted, "I wanted to help them, and you've driven them away! You always queer any project I start! I hate you!"

Dan looked at her in amazement. She had never had such an outburst of temper in all their married life before. True, of late she had never said she loved him, but never before had she said she hated him.

"Louisa!" he cried, huskily, "I—was just thinking of our children. We can't afford to have such people for them to imitate. Really, dear, if I'd known your heart was set on helping them, I wouldn't have said anything—"

"You never troubled yourself to find out what I wanted."

"I—do you suppose—we might go down and call on them, Louisa? Perhaps we could do something to help them without bringing them into our home."

Louisa sighed. She wanted to see those children receive some help, but she had wanted the thrill of doing it herself. Dan had such a strong personality; he would take everything out of her hands and do things in his own way.

"All right," she said at last. "Mrs. Arnold told me of a girl I can get to stay with the children when I want to go anywhere. Her name is Madeline English and she doesn't live far from here. Let's get her this afternoon. Something certainly ought to be done at once for these poor people."

The home of Mr. and Mrs. English, a small weatherbeaten cottage set among tall trees, seemed smaller than it really was. Everything was neat and clean appearing, but when they stepped into the living room Louisa was shocked at the utter bareness of it. A battered old organ, a rocking chair, a broken kitchen chair, a few boxes. The floor was bare, but clean. There was no dust anywhere. The children's clothes, and the mother's too, were clean, but faded and mended. Mrs. English was a small woman, with an intelligent face, a high forehead, and hair that curled naturally and made her seem younger than she could have been.

"There's the baby," she said, nervously, as a thin, pitiful wail reached their ears; "I guess I'll have to ask you to come into the bedroom. Madeline, you bring something for them to sit on."

She turned to Louisa again: "He's been sick for a long time, and he took cold last night, and I just don't know—the doctor said—well, I am terribly worried. I don't know whether I can let Madeline go this afternoon or not. You see, I just about need her to help with my own younger children. I can't leave this baby—"

If the living room had been bare this bedroom was doubly so. Nothing in it at all but a home-made bed and a box for a lamp-stand and medicines. The sick baby moaned weakly. His face was pale and emaciated. Louisa could not bear to look at him without wishing to do something to help him. She wanted to help the other children of this family, too. Their faces were all pinched and starved looking.

Dan said: "Louisa, why couldn't Madeline bring the younger children with her—or could you care for so many?" He turned and looked questioningly at the young girl of sixteen.

"I'd be—be delighted—if you don't mind. You wouldn't need pay me so much—"

"I'd like to know why I shouldn't. You'll be caring for our children just the same—it'll just be more work for you."

"It must be wonderful to have an education," Mr. English spoke disconsolately. "When you don't know much, you just can't get work these days, it seems. I've been out of a job now for three months."

Mrs. English surreptitiously wiped her eyes with a corner of her faded apron and turned to her husband.

"You shouldn't say that, Jack. Mr. Eldon will think we're beggars. We'll get on all right, I'm sure," she forced a brightness into her voice which Louisa felt was not real, "You see, Jack's mother left him a little home down in the Ozarks, in Missouri; Jack will get work very soon, I'm quite sure, and we're going to save up until we have enough to move on. We won't have to pay rent any more; there's plenty of fuel, and I think we'll get on fine."

"Does—does it happen to be near a place called Brushy Hollow?"

"Do you know that place?" Mr. English spoke with pleased surprise. "Our place is just a short distance from there. It sounds really wild and back-woodsy, but it's one of the most beautiful places in the world."

"We own a little farm somewhere around there ourselves," Louisa answered. "Isn't that a coincidence? We may be down there with you some day," she added, rather jokingly.

Louisa was preparing a basket of food for the Rippeto family when Madeline came with the three small children from her home. They watched the food with an eagerness that was not lost to Louisa though their elder sister tried to divert their attention to other things.

"I'll tell you what to do this afternoon, Madeline. My children have been in the habit of having a lunch. I've been thinking it would be nice if you had a sort of tea-party for all the children. There's nothing fancy—just whole wheat bread and butter and honey—and yes, here are some radishes and onions, too, and a can of peanut butter, if you like that. We don't drink tea here, so you'll just have to pretend the milk is tea."

"Milk will be lovely, Mrs. Eldon—and thank you."

One of the smaller girls wagged her head with delight. "Milk is grand," she announced. "'Specially when you haven't had anything but hominy fried in suet for a whole month—"

"Why, Helen English! You know you shouldn't say such things." Her older sister rebuked her severely. "You—"

"But it's true, Madeline. Don't you remember? The doctor said baby might get well if he had some goat milk every day, but goat milk is forty-five cents a quart and we only had forty-five cents so we had to buy a bushel of corn and some suet—don't you remember?"

Louisa knew the older girl was extremely embarrassed, so she said nothing and pretended not to hear.

"We'll go now," she said, "Give all the children a good time if you can. Let them have all they want to eat; because such simple food as that can't hurt any of them."

"Just think, Dan," she said, as they turned their steps into the path that led to the row of shacks by the river, "That little English baby could have gotten well, the doctor said, if they could have secured goat milk to drink. But they only had enough to buy a bushel of corn and some suet. They've lived on that for a month! Oh, Dan, things aren't fair! The whole world isn't fair! It's a mess, Dan—"

"Darling, of course it is. The world's way is to grab and take a chance. If you're lucky or strong, you get something—maybe more than your share. If you're weak, or there's something wrong with your luck you get nothing. You've said I was mad about Zion, Louisa—and that's why. Zion is the only answer to the world's problems. It's the only thing that will give men everywhere a fair chance."

They were nearing the miserable little dwelling now and he had to cease his talking. He would talk more about it on the way home. Louisa was more than half sympathetic with the idea of Zion now. He was sure of it. He had felt it several times recently.

But he didn't talk of Zion on the way home. Their visit was so wierd and comical and withal so pitiful that they could talk of nothing else. The Rippeto family had not liked their food. The children said the brown bread was like corn shucks. They marvelled aloud as to why a "p'fessor" should choose to live on such food. They never used anything but white bread themselves. The bakery gave them left-over bread and cake and things.

Mr. Rippeto had drawn hopefully near when she had taken out the fruit jar and started to unwrap the paper around it, saying as she did so: "Here is something nice to drink." He had looked so crestfallen when he saw it was milk.

"Dan, I just know he thought we were bringing him some whiskey or something," Louisa laughed, "And he said, when you refused one of his cigarettes: 'I wouldn't be a p'fessor for anything in the world. Why, you don't have any freedom at all.' I just must tell your mother that when I write her! Dan, don't you wish you were gloriously free, like the honorable Mr. Rippeto?"

"Please don't laugh, Louisa. It's really tragic, you know."

"Sometimes, Dan, I think you don't understand me at all. I laugh sometimes to keep from crying."

But they were entering their own premises now and Mr. English was hastening across the lawn toward the group of playing children.

"The baby has left us," he said, tensely.

"Oh, papa—you mean—he's dead! Oh, no! Oh, poor mama. We must go right home." Madeline hurried the wailing children toward the street.

"I wonder," said Mr. English, hesitantly, "if you folks could come over a while, too. You've got a good education, Mrs. Eldon, and maybe she'd listen to reason from you. You see, her father belonged to a church that believe unless a baby is baptized it will suffer on seas of fire all through eternity. Our baby never was baptized. The little mother is just wild with grief. I tell her over and over that God wouldn't be that cruel. We simply couldn't afford to take the child and have him baptized—there is no church of that denomination here—and surely God wouldn't punish that poor little fellow for something neither he nor his parents could help. But she says I'm just as ignorant as she is, that I don't know."

"Oh, Dan!" cried Louisa, tearfully, "You come, too. We can bring the children. I—nobody ever depended on me for spiritual strength before. You come and talk to her, Dan."

A stern doctor met them at the door. "More people come to say how sorry they are, I suppose. What this little mother needs more than anything else is rest. If somebody'd take care of the children for a while—"

Paulina Wili

By Inez Kinney

IN A WEE cottage which nestles near the heart of the great city of Los Angeles, dwells a dear old lady who has lived through ninety-one eventful years. She sits near the large window of her living room, as she has done for so many years, looking out with age-dimmed eyes on the grounds of her small home.

A trellis of grape vines leads up to the cottage and borders one side. Shading a large window is a beautiful quince tree—glorious with bloom in springtime. The kitchen window gives on a flower garden which is the result of years of painstaking care. Here are a medley of flowers, plants, and shrubs, the whole a faery ensemble of beauty and fragrance, a place to express peace, to whisper content, to lull and soothe with sweet magic—especially to one in the quiet, twilight hours of life who has long since left the stress and strife of temporal affairs and dwells in the dreams of yesterday, and in the visions of a blessed future. Though the eyes are dimmed by the years, and the beauty of flower and greenery is now vague; though the sense of hearing is failing so that the note of the nightingale is but a gossamer thread of melody, yet the fragrance of the flowers comes through the window to comfort and to cheer.

Now the once busy hands lie idly in the lap, the sewing things and the knitting needles put away for all time. Hundreds of exquisitely beautiful pieces of lace attest the skill and patience of those hands and will for long bring joy and satisfaction to loved ones and friends who are so fortunate as to share in this legacy.

The quaint little home is a true setting for the fine old pieces of furniture selected by her some sixty-five years ago. Here, sitting with her near the large window shaded by the quince tree, would be the ideal place to hear the life story of Paulina Wili. However, she will not again tell the story of her life and that of her family, for age has claimed her attention for other matters. The recorded facts are of interest and value, though lacking the personal note and the embellishments she would have provided.

PAULINA WILI was born in the village of Thurbenthal, Switzerland, October 12, 1842, the second daughter of John and Catherina Bosshard. Her mother, Catherina Egli, was born on the 13th of June, 1819, in the small town of Albikon, Switzerland. Her father, a watchmaker and fairly well to do, was able to give his two daughters, Catherina and Rosina, many advantages. The sisters were trained in the art of homemaking and became excellent housewives. They received religious education at the home of the Lutheran minister near by and attended the village school regularly. In her teens, Catherina and the schoolmaster fell desperately in love with each other. However, the parents objected to a marriage, and at that time it seems that the children did not dream of opposing the wishes and wisdom of the parents in these matters, so Catherina and the schoolmaster did not wed, but it was admitted that this remained the one great love of her life. When she became an old lady and the years had brought their measure of understanding and content, she could be prevailed upon to tell the romantic story to her grandchildren.

When she was about twenty years of age she was married to a young man named John Bosshard and they established their home in Thurbenthal, Switzerland which was about twenty-five miles from Albikon. This must have been an interesting and romantic place, for it is recorded that they lived "opposite a castle owned by the family Von Landenberg." These were of the nobility of Austria, and under the church there were the family crypts. Every hundred years the doors were opened and the family went down to view the remains. They evidently stood up like mummies in niches in the walls. One time when the door was opened a skeleton was sitting on the steps. A young girl had been buried alive—and had been unable to make herself heard but had gotten out of the crypt in the wall in some way. This was one of the village tragedies. Not far from Thurbenthal, is a castle called Kybourg. It has many relics and a torture chamber which contained a Maid of Iron. This is built in the form of a woman and opens up with swords coming from the sides toward the center to hit the vital spots. People were enclosed in this form and the thing was pressed together. There are only two of these horrors in existence. The other is in Nuremburg, Germany, few know of this one. Living in the neighborhood of these castles with their mysterious legends must have impressed these young people though not as it would those of this new land of ours.

John Bosshard was born in the year 1800 and as a boy was trained in the profession of architecture and went into business with his brother. The two couples went to housekeeping in a double house in Thurbenthal. At that time much of the materials were prepared for use, and the workmen trained on the grounds of the builder, consequently there were always a number of these young men about the place. Usually these apprentices came from respectable families and were dependable, but occasionally one would prove to be a bad character and cause trouble. On one occasion John was called away from home and left the house and business affairs in charge of Catherina. Some time during the day she chanced to look up from her work in the kitchen and saw one of these young men coming, slinking toward her with a dagger in his hand—raised as though to strike. Just then the front door opened and she heard her husband's voice. It was indeed welcome and timely, for the would-be murderer was frightened away, made good his escape and was not seen again. He had evidently intended to kill her, rob the house and make his escape while the master was away, but an accident in which John was slightly injured had resulted in an early return which proved to be "in the nick of time." Few will doubt the intervening hand of a merciful Providence in this case.

As the years slipped by and babies came, Catherina cut up many lovely sheets for the tiny clothes, for what could be nicer than the fine linen which had been provided for the bridal "hope chest." Twelve children were born to John and Catherina Bosshard, but only seven grew to maturity. They were Suzanne, Paulina, Herman, Jacob, Mina, Hermina and John. Expecting Paulina, these grew to be sturdy young people. She became anemic, which naturally caused much anxious concern in the family. John Bosshard had prospered in his business and was able to provide a good home and many advantages for his family. All were good singers and yodelers and had unusual dramatic ability. Catherina was a very refined and talented woman and had a remarkable influence over her children. Her sister Rosina, married and living near the village, had four children. Rosina, her namesake, was about the age and size of Paulina. Young Rosina died in the year 1857 and later her parents gave Paulina all the beautiful clothing which had been the wardrobe of Rosina.

PAULINA'S ILLNESS persisted in spite of the most devoted care, and an ocean voyage was recommended though that seemed entirely out of the question. About this time (1857), a group of Mormon missionaries came to Switzerland preaching the gospel as taught by Joseph Smith. Quite an interest was created in the new religion in the village, and many converts were made. Catherina and several of her children were among them and in a short time were baptized.

The new members were urged to go to Utah, the new Zion—where there would be neither rich nor poor, but where “all things would be held in common.” This appealed to many, especially among the young people, and plans for such a move began to be seriously considered. Of the number of missionaries then in Switzerland, were two young men—Mr. John Hafen and Mr. Ignatz Wili. Suzette and Mr. Hafen, and Paulina and Mr. Wili, became keenly interested in each other and were eager to continue the association in the “Land of Promise.” Since an ocean voyage had been advised for Paulina, who continued in ill health, it was finally decided that Suzette, Paulina, Herman and a cousin, Katrili, should accompany the missionaries to America and Utah.

Suzette was then about twenty; Paulina, eighteen, and Herman a lad of about fifteen. There were no doubts nor fears for the future, for were they not bound for Zion in charge of the missionaries of the church? and were not two of them madly in love? The father of young Hafen was quite well to do and offered to finance the trip and look after the young people generally until the other members of the family could follow them.

Great was the excitement and hectic the activities of preparation among all. Before leaving, a horse and buggy was hired and Suzette and Paulina set out to bid good-by to the loved aunt and uncle who had so recently lost a child.

THE RECORD states that, “It must have been a gay, care-free company of young people who sailed from Liverpool in April of the year 1861. It took the sail boat, on which they embarked, thirty-five days to reach New York.” The party traveled by train from New York to Chicago, there changing to a primitive type of train in which they traveled to Fort Larmee, Wyoming. “The cars were like freight cars with benches along the sides. When tired, one might lie down on a bench. At Fort Larmee, Mr. Hafen bought and equipped five or six ox wagons and cared for the people who occupied them. The church fed and took care of many people and expected payment later.

Many thrilling experiences and adventures were encountered on that long trek across the plains. Hazardous and wearying at best, there were always the menaces of hostile Indians, disease, lack of food and water, and the certainty of many accidents more or less serious.

This must have been an amazing looking country to these young people of tiny Switzerland. Never having seen a vast plain, these young people must have been speechless and exclaiming, as they rode those clumsy ox carts, along the plain on which roamed great herds of buffalo and antelope. There were innumerable flocks of birds—large and small, known and unknown, besides a multitude of flowers, beautiful but strange.

One day the wagon in which Suzette was riding—jolting over some rough place in the trail, threw her to the ground and the wheels passed over her chest—crushing and bruising her dangerously. During the nights and days immediately following the accident, Suzette cried out in the agony of soul and body to the mother in Switzerland. It is a safe guess that Suzette wished herself back in the arms of that dear mother and in the security of the home she had left. Catherina Bosshard, in far away Switzerland, heard these cries, wrote down the occurrence and waited news of the disaster with what fortitude she could muster. On getting the news many weeks later, she was not surprised but sent a return letter telling of her remarkable experience and of the prayers in behalf of the suffering one.

DURING the long, tedious journey, Paulina suffered intensely with swollen limbs—probably an infection accompanying the anemic condition—and to relieve the distress, would often walk ahead of the wagon train. On one occasion she walked ahead and out of sight of the train, but a rider of the party, feeling uneasy, rode after her and was in time to save her from a band of marauding Indians. As she started to round a curve, circling a hillock, she saw the head of an Indian as he peeked at her from his hiding place around the bend. As she halted in her tracks through fear, the Indian rushed out to seize her but at the same moment the rider dashed up, pulled the paralyzed girl up on the horse and raced back to the wagon train. This was a painful lesson to Paulina and afterwards she kept very near the company.

“A few of the thirteen weeks that it took to go from New York to Santa Clara, were spent in Salt Lake City where Suzette and John Hafen were married and where the cousin, Katrili, was married to his brother.” It appears that the “silver lining” became fairly visible as soon as the party reached Utah, though that silver was soon to become a bit tarnished.

It was the policy of the church to group peoples of like nationalities together as much as possible and the Swiss were sent to Santa Clara, a small settlement about three miles from Saint George, in the southern part of Utah. Shortly after arriving in Utah, the Swiss party of about sixty people set out for Santa Clara where a fort was situated. It was of importance in those early days to “live in the shadow of a fort as a protection against the depredations of Indians. The village of Santa Clara, as the party learned on arrival, was made up of five or six families living in their covered wagon boxes. The first months were hard and bitter for these trusting pioneers. Babies were born in wagon boxes, and once a flood raged and washed away the wagons in which the people were living temporarily. There were no matches and every morning the housewives would go out in hopes that some neighbor had been successful in striking stones together and making a fire. If such a welcome sight greeted the eyes, there was a general rush in the direction of the smoke. Just one coal was needed to start out the day's cooking.”

Here the Bosshard young people began homemaking in the Land of Promise; here they faced realities that were to try souls and bodies alike and here they were called upon to make choices that were to reach into eternity itself. Here they met the Hugs and Bastian Strassers—friends who were to mean much in this strange and stressful life.

“At first Paulina and Herman lived with some English people but later in 1862 Paulina was married to Mr. Ignatz Wili,” thus completing the romance begun across the sea. They were married in the Temple in Salt Lake City, as were Suzette and Katrili, and then went to live in Cedar City, remaining there thirteen weeks before returning to Santa Clara.

During this time Herman had secured employment as a cattle hand with Mr. John D. Lee at a small place called Harmony. John D. Lee was a member of the Mormon church and notorious for having had a leading part in the Mountain Meadow Massacre. A Mormon history of Utah records that in September, 1857, two companies—one from Arkansas and one from Missouri—came through this section of Utah on their way to California. They made camp near the Mormon settlement and trouble arose over the boasts of members of the companies that they had helped to drive the Mormons out of Missouri and Illinois, and had a part in killing Joseph Smith. The Mormon settlers resented these statements with such energy that the campers were worsted. Lee advised them to surrender, promising safety, but the settlers, nursing their grievances, got out of hand and fell upon the companies slaughtering the whole party except seventeen babes, some two or three months old, who were finally returned to relatives or friends in Arkansas. Lee was tried several times, was finally convicted, and on March 23, 1877, was shot at Mount Meadow, Utah. However heartless he showed himself to be to the campers at Mount Meadow, he was said to have been very kind to Herman, and the lonely homesick Swiss boy felt a warm appreciation which remained to the end of his life. Herman must have been told about the part Mr. Lee had taken in the Mount Meadow trouble for, years later he would tell his nieces and nephews of a time when he “drove the carriage of Mr. Lee and suddenly the horses reared back and he looked to the side of the rode where he saw the ground strewn with dead bodies. His own hair stood straight on end and when he told my people for the time when I shall dwell with them, which is nigh at hand."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:10, (Utah edition, 104:58-63).

The continued interest is shown by the revelation of January 17, 1841, in which William Law is commanded to aid such publication:

"Let my servant William go and proclaim my everlasting gospel with a loud voice, and with great joy, as he shall be moved upon by my Spirit, unto the inhabitants of Warsaw, and also unto the inhabitants of Carthage, and also unto the inhabitants of Burlington, and also unto the inhabitants of Madison, and await patiently and diligently for further instructions at my general conference, saith the Lord. If he will do my will, let him from henceforth hearken to the counsel of my servant Joseph, and with his interest support the cause of the poor, and publish the new translation of my holy word unto the inhabitants of the earth; and if he will do this, I will bless him with a multiplicity of blessings, that he shall not be forsaken, nor his seed be found begging bread."—Doctrine and Covenants 107:28. (Utah edition 124:69.)

No doubt other revelations can be found indicating their desire to do this work. Joseph Smith did desire so to publish but was prevented by conditions surrounding him.

THE PRINTING

The two completed manuscripts of the part written fully and the complete manuscript of both the Old and New Testaments, together with the old Bible used, were left in the hands of Emma Smith and retained by her. In 1886 a committee was appointed by the conference of the Reorganized Church to wait upon her and ask for these manuscripts for the purpose of immediate publication. This committee included W. W. Blair, I. L. Rogers, and William Marks. They secured the manuscript and turned it over immediately to Joseph Smith III, who with I. L. Rogers and Ebenezer Robinson acted as the committee on publication. They proceeded at once to have a suitable place made and the book printed, that is, as speedily as the circumstances permitted, because, as indicated, it was necessary that a complete manuscript be first made, using the original manuscripts and the old Bible, for those parts not wholly and completely transcribed. So the book was published to the world and ready for distribution by the close of 1867.

Now, it is possible that if Joseph Smith had had time he would have made some further correction of grammar and form to cause similar passages to fully correspond with each other, but he stated that the work was finished, and the changes made speak for themselves.

The committee on publication did not attempt any modification whatever, but published just as they found it with no changes. (See preface to Inspired Version, page 3; also statement of Joseph Smith III, Saints' Herald, Vol. 48, page 534.) They were acting pursuant to the command of God that this record should be published and given to the world. (See also Saints' Herald, Volume 51, page 4.) The New Testament was also published with the Book of Mormon, fulfilling a prophecy to that effect.

When the Book of Mormon manuscript was turned over by George Schweich in 1903, he also turned over John Whitmer's manuscript history and several other items, including a third copy of parts of the Inspired Version, notably the revelation to Moses and the first few chapters of Genesis. This makes a third copy of at least parts of the manuscript which was written in full. It is possible that there may have been some other short extracts of parts of the original manuscript copied, but both of the complete original manuscripts were in the hands of Emma Smith and were by her turned over to the church, and these manuscripts are now in the archives of this church. The old Bible was received by Alexander H. Smith and turned over by him to his daughter, Vida E. Smith, now Yates, but she allows ready reference and use of it at any time that is desired.

The Utah church gives as their reason for not accepting this book that they do not believe it was finished by Joseph Smith, that he intended to go all through the Bible again and make further correction. The reasons for this assertion are not given unless it is the brief extract from the letter to W. W. Phelps referred to above. In that letter he said, "If the Lord permits," but the Lord did not permit. Conditions prevented. Joseph Smith junior said plainly that the work was finished July 2, 1833. It is easy to see why he should desire to give the matter his personal attention, as it required the use of both the old Bible and the manuscript, but the commandment to William Law in 1841 infers that the work was ready to be printed and only lacked means. But the work was really completed and it was not at all difficult for his son and others to take up the work and print it as left. Above all else was the promise that the Scriptures would be preserved in safety, would be published to the world, and that they should be preached to all nations.

A further reason, though not so alleged by them, may well be the fact that in no instance is any change made in the Bible to make any passage read more favorably for polygamy; many changes, however, are made which make the Old Testament read less favorably to that "abomination," as it is called in the Book of Mormon, the second chapter of Jacob.

The Old Testament was a record of the times and remains such. It is interesting to note that the Inspired Version is less favorable to polygamy than any of the other versions of which we are at present informed.

In conclusion we refer to the writings of an impartial student, Dr. Simms, in The Bible from the Beginning, published by MacMillan Company in September 1929. In this he publishes a full page of comparative texts from the Inspired Version and American Standard Bible, which are quite favorable to the Inspired Version. He classes it as one under the canon of Holy Scriptures and states as follows, on pages 145-147:

"Joseph Smith was the founder of the Mormon church, but after his death factions arose. Brigham Young led one faction into Utah and became its leader, adopting polygamy. This group accepts the Authorized Version as its official Bible, but accepts also the Book of Mormon as inspired.

"Certain factions, declining to join Brigham Young, formed what they called the 'Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints,' with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, later moved to Independence, Missouri. They rejected polygamy from the beginning. Joseph Smith, the son of the founder of the original church, cast his lot with the 'reorganized' group. The family of the elder Smith, after his death, produced a MS. which it was claimed the elder Smith had received by revelation. This MS., published in 1867, contained the Bible, with changes which were mostly additions, and this is the chief Bible of the 'reorganized' church. However, it uses the King James Version also.

"This much, at least, may be said of many of the changed readings found in the Bible of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints: Its author had the courage deliberately to alter the text, and make it say clearly what many Bible students succeed in getting by theological legerdemain. This Bible contains the usual 39 books of the Old Testament, and the usual 27 of the New. No apocryphal books are admitted, but the Book of Mormon is accepted as inspired equally with other books of the Bible."

Later he makes another reference on pages 293, 294:

"One of the most puzzling Bibles in print is that published in 1867 by the Reorganized Latter Day Saints, at Lamoni, Iowa. The Utah Mormons do not use it. It has many additions to the usual text, Joseph Smith having claimed a special revelation for the changes he made. Had these additions favored the doctrinal position of his church the explanation would have been easy but they do not seem to serve any denominational or sectarian purpose."

EVENTS in Germany. Sunday the 16th, Dr. Goebbels addressing the 30,000 Storm Troopers in Templehof Park, Berlin said: "As for those who voted 'No' in Herr Hitler's plebiscite, August 19, it is our task to win them with loving care to a true understanding of the National Socialist state." This in contrast to the speech by Herr Hitler at the Nazi Congress at Nuremberg when he said, "The revolution is complete; there will be no further revolution for a thousand years; there can be no resistance to the national unity."

ONE RECENT happening is illuminating in Germany: the declaration by Doctor Schacht that the annual sum of two hundred million marks for German propaganda abroad can no longer be continued. This fund was in the nature of secret service money but no one outside of the Ministry of Propaganda knows how it was spent.

PLANS are revealed for the creation of a "United German Church" which will absorb the Roman Catholics, by Reichsbishop Mueller. On September 19, he declared, "We want a church free from Rome. The goal for which we fight is one church for the people." He added that anybody who was unable to cooperate in the construction of this church "must keep out of the way or I shall cope with them."

In the meantime the struggle against the Reichsbishop by the opposition clergy in Bavaria and Wurtemberg goes on. Fifty-eight pastors in Stuttgart have ignored the orders of the Primate that his representatives shall occupy the offices of the High Evangelical Church Council. Eighty-two percent of the clergy of Wurtemberg have expressed loyalty to Bishop Wurm whom Doctor Mueller has deposed.

Herr Hitler, it is learned, proposes to take a hand in the church conflict. He will call a conference of the leading members of the Evangelical Church in Berlin within a few days.

THE PROCEEDINGS of the Senate Committee making enquiry into the doings of the American munitions industry are being watched with keen interests in this country. While the preposterous story of King George having used his influence to secure a Polish contract for a British firm was of course immediately denied; and, not everything presented can be accepted unchallenged, it is admitted that the "cumulative effect is overwhelming." The London Spectator says of this scandal: "Whatever be the future of the armaments industry it cannot be left as it is. It is not merely that the firms concerned are dealing with the instruments of death; so long as war continues at all someone must make guns and munitions. It is not merely that bribery, improper influence, furtive government pressure, and every other undesirable form of string-pulling is invoked. The essential vice of the whole business is that, at a moment when reduction and limitation of armaments is the goal to which every government is professing to set before it, these firms, under the stimulus of private profit, are actually urging governments to increase their armaments, and thereby arouse the fears and suspicions of their neighbors and generate the spirit that leads inevitably to war. Thus they both foment and feed war."

"In face of the Washington disclosures," the editorial concludes; "inaction would be criminal. And since each country is concerned first with its own government we are entitled to look to the Prime Minister and his colleagues for definite proposals. The scandal is far greater than the difficulties in the way of remedying it."

THE NOMADS

"I'll be glad to do that," said Louisa. "Madeline, maybe you could get the children's clothing together—you may come and stay with us until your mother is better."

Mr. English leaned against the wall and sobbed. "You folks are too good to us," he said, "but maybe we can repay —"

"Don't think of that," Dan said, huskily, "We'll just be too glad to do anything we can."

Madeline opened the bedroom door, and Mrs. English could be seen rocking back and forth, her head moving hopelessly from side to side. She was moaning, and now and then words escaped her, low, broken-hearted words: "Oh, in Jesu Nom, in Jesu nom!"

"What is she saying?" whispered Louisa.

"In Jesus' name, is what she means. You see—she is Norwegian, and when she gets excited she always mixes the languages."

"I'll take the children with me," said Louisa, tremulously, "and my husband can stay with you. He knows more about religion than I do—I know he can comfort her."

But Mrs. English could not be so easily comforted. After the first wild grief had subsided, apathy seemed to settle upon her. Dan talked with her often; and he and Louisa kept the English children all through the summer and part of the autumn.

Then one morning Mr. English came to their door very early. He was radiant with hope. He had a job; but that wasn't the best of his news. Mrs. English was sitting up, and feeling fine. She wanted to see Mr. and Mrs. Eldon. Could they come over? The children could come home now; he felt sure they could manage.

Mrs. English looked happy, in fact her happiness had such a quality of lightness and joy that Louisa could hardly believe she was the same sorrowful person she had been just yesterday. What miracle had wrought this change? She did not have to wait long for an explanation.

"Oh, Mr. Eldon," Mrs. English cried, "I've had the most wonderful experience! You've been so good and kind to us; I just have to tell you, it seems.

"You know how I've worried about the baby—and how you explained about the goodness of God, and what a kind Father he was? Well, I got to thinking about it, and last night I prayed. I prayed that if he really did have to suffer that I'd be able to feel right towards God—that I could understand why it was. And I woke up in the night—" she paused a moment, and continued in a low, reverent tone:

"And an angel stood by my bed. I could see it just as plainly as I see you. You can think I'm crazy if you want to, but I'm not. I know it was there. I thought I ought to be afraid, but his eyes looked so kind, I couldn't be. His voice was gentle, too. He said:

"Don't you know your baby is all right? Why, if you were as safe as that baby, you'd be all right, too." And I knew the little fellow was not suffering, that he was truly all right. I am so happy!"

There were tears on Dan's face. "Louisa," said, "Maybe you'd bring Mrs. English the Book of Mormon. She'll bring you a book," he went on, as Louisa nodded, "It doesn't take the place of the Bible, but it is an inspired book and it explains some things the Bible doesn't make very clear. If you read that book, Mrs. English, and do what it says, you'll be as safe as your baby."

Mr. Lee, the latter told him that such sights pursued him wherever he went. Whether Herman really saw something unusual or whether he had dwelt on the story so much that the scene of the tragedy appeared real—that rocks took on the semblance of those pitiful bodies "strewn on the ground" is not known. When the spirited horses "reared back" from those same rocks at the roadside, the excited imagination of the sensitive mind might "see those dead bodies."

The Work Is Onward in the Southland

We have just closed a three-week series of meetings at Cold Water Branch, near Milton, Florida. Interest continued to increase during the series, and there was good attendance of members and nonmembers; all seemed happy. I do not know when I have enjoyed the work as I did at Cold Water. God was good to his people and blessed us with his Holy Spirit. I baptized ten, September 30, and seven more Sunday, October 7; also blessed five children during the series of meetings.

There was beautiful weather for the meetings excepting one day. Then seventeen inches of water fell in one day, according to the paper, breaking all previous twenty-four hour records by almost seven inches.

The work is onward in the Southland. Good reports have come from different places. From many communities comes the call: "Come over and help us." We need more laborers in the field. If we had a number of young single men who would be willing to give a few years to the missionary work here, a great work could be done.

We believe that wonderful blessings await us, blessings that the heart of man has not perceived, if we will only move forward, make the needed adjustment, and occupy with an eye single to the glory of God. When will we catch the vision and go forward toward the great goal to "evangelize the world and zionize the church"? When will we realize the nothingness of man and the all-powerfulness of God and that he can use the weak to accomplish great things if we will wholly give ourselves into his hands and let his will be done? May he give all of us a greater vision of himself and our task, and the needed faith and courage to perform it!

When We Return to the Father

In Doctrine and Covenants 63:16, we find this statement: "Remember that that which cometh from above is sacred, and must be spoken with care, and by constraint of the Spirit, and in this there is no condemnation." In connection with this, in Section 49:2, we read, "Wherefore I say unto you, that I have sent unto you mine everlasting covenant."

Sometimes when I see some people treat lightly the things of God, the things that He said were sacred, I am made to wonder if they are truly aware of that which they are doing. When the Master of men was put to death on the cross and while He was still alive, He looked down upon those who had thus been responsible for much of His suffering and said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." That happened in a day and time when the people did not have the opportunity to study of the good as we do today. They had been taught a religion that knew not of the Christ, or cared little. Today, when we have the knowledge of the past ages before us in the line of past and present religion, and when we should be enlightened because of the learning in our schools, I say that we should know right from wrong and it should not be necessary for it to be said of us in this day, "they know not what they do."

God said of a certain people that He would let them have their own way and have a king, then they would have no excuse in the day of judgment.

In Section 42:8 of the Doctrine and Covenants, this statement is made: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments." One of these commandments (which is sacred) is to keep ourselves unspotted from the world—to be in the world but not of it, nor to partake of her ways. If we were to lend our neighbor a new suit of clothes, clean and unspotted and in a few days he were to return it to us dirty, spotted with grease, wrinkled and torn, what would we think of that neighbor? Not much, would we?

God has given us a body and a spirit or lent it to us while we are here on earth "working out our soul's salvation," and if we return it to Him in the day of judgment "dirty" with tobacco and drink spotted with the "grease" of riches ill-used and "torn and wrinkled" with mixing with those in sin in places where we could not ask Christ to go with us nor ask His blessing on the things being done, what will God think of us?

He has given us in these last days "an everlasting covenant." We pledge ourselves to that "everlasting covenant" when we went down into the waters of baptism, by saying that we would keep all His commandments.

Read Doctrine and Covenants section 98, and the latter part of paragraph five (5), "When men are called unto mine everlasting gospel and covenants with an everlasting covenant, they are accounted as the salt of the earth, and the savor of men."

This "everlasting covenant" is sacred and should be held as such by every man, woman, and child who have taken upon them the name of Christ and who expect protection from God in times of trouble and need. We are told in Section 81:3: "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."

Shall we continue to forget the promise and covenant of God until we are in need and then expect Him to hear and answer? Can we be the "savor of men" and do the things that some are doing who have made the "sacred covenant" with God? Let us beware how we treat lightly the things of God so that when we return our bodies to Him they shall be clean and spotless, free from sin, and pleasing in His sight.

Is Grateful for Prayers

I want to thank my friends for their prayers in my behalf during my recent illness of two months' duration. Though my condition was serious and I was given no encouragement by the doctors, I was administered to by Brother P. Greenwood, our pastor, and Brother A. E. Stoff, district president, and later by Brother Greenwood and Brother E. Lancaster, of Tulsa. From each administration I received much comfort, and I thank the elders and Saints for their encouraging prayers and letters. May God bless and help each one of his people.

I know that this is Christ's church, and that God still is interested in his people. He is leading us as much as we will permit him to. I praise him for what he has done for me.

During my illness I was given many blessings and spiritual experiences which buoyed me up. They brought the spirit of peace and assurance to me and the realization that God is good and that this is his church and we are his people.

God has blessed me wonderfully. Several times he has lifted me up from the doors of death and has restored me to health and strength. I love the church, and my faith in it and its purposes is unchanged.

Wants to Do Her Part

To me the testimonies in the Herald are wonderful. They are a source of strength and help. I read them before anything else, and feel that if I withhold telling the blessings I have known, I shall grow weak in the faith. This I want never to happen. When I occupy every time in prayer and testimony meetings I have more strength for succeeding meetings, but if I fail to do my part, the next time it is harder for me. It is very difficult for me to bear my testimony and of this I am ashamed, for it should be the easiest thing since I know of God's blessings and his promises if we obey him.

Rare spiritual experiences have been given me in the form of dreams, showing me a glimpse of the peace, purity and contentment of eternity, and also admonishing me to keep my life and my home free from Satan's influence.

I am more thankful for the latter-day gospel every day of my life. I was born of Latter Day Saint parents. My mother was Clara Bronson, daughter of Hiram and Mary Bronson, and my father, James Archibald, son of Russell and Ellen Archibald. Their parents before them were members of the church.

I pray for wisdom that I may be able to know and explain our gospel and its teachings to others who are thirsty and would drink of the fountain of life if they but knew.

In the thirty years since my baptism I have never felt the need of prayer and of the help of others as keenly as I do now. When I think of others who have done much to further the latter-day work, I feel weak and small. Pray for me that I may be worthy to teach my class of boys and girls. I want to so live that they will always be able to look to me for spiritual guidance. I never want to fail them.

I have found that in reading the books of the church if I ask God's help to understand them, I get much more light. Several times I started to read the Book of Mormon and each time could get no farther than the first chapter or two until I prayed for understanding. After this I could not read fast enough—it was all clear. I read each night after the others were in bed so that nothing would interrupt or confuse me.

I am grateful for all the books of the church and I need to read and study much more than I do. In my patriarchal blessing, given by Brother W. A. McDowell, I am admonished to study good books and store up knowledge that I may teach and guide our little ones. He also told me to minister to the sick with a cheerful spirit and assured me that in doing this faithfully, the brittle thread of life would be lengthened and I would be spared sickness. This has already proved true.

Four years ago when so many people were sick with what the doctors called septic sore throat, many were dying with it. My husband, daughter, and mother-in-law were critically ill with it. I waited on them day and night beside taking care of my husband's father who is an invalid, doing all of the work even the washings and ironing. No one came in to help us; everyone was afraid of the disease. It was a trying time, but the Lord blessed me with health and strength throughout the whole time. People marveled that I could work over them constantly and not take the disease when it was very contagious.

For this and many, many more blessings which have strengthened my faith, I am grateful. I think many times of the beautiful hymn:

"Take time to be holy, speak oft with thy Lord;
Abide in him always and feed on his word;
Make friends of God's children, help those who are weak, Forgetting in nothing his blessing to seek.

"Take time to be holy, the world rushes on;
Spend much time in secret with Jesus alone;
By looking to Jesus, like him thou shalt be;
Thy friends in thy conduct his likeness shall see."

How wonderful if we would only apply those words to our every-day lives! There are many worldly things which draw us away. I like things that give me pleasure, oftentimes momentary pleasure; sometimes I do these things when I should be doing something to serve the Master.

Sometimes I wonder if I will be allowed a taste of the sweetness of reward. I feel very unworthy and that I have done many things which Jesus would not do, and few that he would have me do. I am sharp-tongued and impatient and continually have to fight these things. I have hurt people's feelings when I did not intend to and have done other small things that would not find favor with the Master. I do not want to hurt people with words, or actions, but there are times that I do. I need your prayers to overcome this.

Youth Will Redeem Zion

I was converted to this church when sixteen years of age and have been a worker with the young people ever since. Now I am almost fifty-three. Never have I had a doubt but that the youth of my day are the ones to redeem Zion. As of old it was the youth who left Egypt and reclaimed Canaan and established their inheritance in that which should have been Zion when Jesus came. I believe that Jesus will come again when the youth of today are the leaders in redeeming latter-day Zion.

Finds Old Friends Through Church Papers

I have often wondered about Brothers Sawley and Manering. It was they who taught us here in the Wheatland vicinity, the beautiful gospel, and helped us to organize a branch. That was close to forty years ago and while the branch has been disorganized for several years and only a few members remain, those few are faithful so far as I know.

I was glad to see Brother Amos T. Higdon's picture in the Herald. He used to preach for us, too, when the branch was organized. I met him again last spring when he visited Brother and Sister Fred Joy at Chanute, Kansas.

I would like to know if Sister Maggie Taylor (nee Breckinrage) is still living. She used to live with my folks fifty years ago; was a girl in her teens then. I was still younger. We lost track of each other for years and then she read a letter of mine in the Ensign a number of years ago, and wrote to me. I was delighted to find her again and to learn that she was a Latter Day Saint. I often reflect that if I had not written to the church paper then, we should never have found each other.

Please pray for me that I may be faithful to Christ and his church.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Did Paul preach fourteen years prior to his ordination?

Evidently not, for he held two different offices of the ministry before that number of years had elapsed. To ordain is to set apart or appoint, and the book shows that he was chosen and appointed soon after his conversion, at which time Ananias the prophet was sent to him with this message:

"The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One. . . . For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard."—Acts 22: 14, 15.

It was almost immediately after this that the Lord commissioned Paul by giving him a command as follows:

"Depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles."—Acts 22: 21.

Apparently Paul had already been ordained when these words were uttered to him. This may in all probability have occurred at the time Paul remained with the disciples "a certain number of days" after his baptism (Acts 9: 18-20), though it does not specifically so state. Thousands of events of importance took place of which the record is silent, and even the ordination of his twelve apostles was not mentioned by Jesus or the disciples until sometime after it had occurred. Paul is named as one of those who held the office of teacher or prophet, in Acts 13: 1, at which time he was called to the higher office of apostle (also see 14: 14). This latter ordination was much less than fourteen years after his conversion, and the book states that it was accompanied by laying on of hands (13: 3).

If one reports having heard two prophecies that conflict, which must we accept?

Answer to this question depends upon several unknown factors. In the first place, the prophecies might be reported inaccurately, if not taken down at the time by one skilled in such work. Often reports become very unreliable when heard by gossip from one to another. But if in fact they conflict, both dealing with precisely the same topic and intended to apply in regard to the same aspect of the subject, it is certain that at least one of them is false. Jeremiah, Zechariah, and other prophets were confronted with false prophets in their own days, and warned the people to beware of them.

The presiding officers, as the bishops and elders in charge, are designated by revelation (Doctrine and Covenants 46: 7) as qualified to discern the spiritual gifts, and if doubt exists on the part of members of their jurisdiction in which the manifestation was presented, they may ask counsel of such official. Also the elders in charge may ask God for power to discern manifestations, and should a spirit be false, they may proclaim that it is not of God (Ibid 50: 7). Paul also declares that prophecies may "fail" because "we know in part and prophesy in part," and Ezekiel (13: 2) warns against those who speak out of their own hearts.

Before the time of Melchisedec this priesthood, according to Doctrine and Covenants (104: 1), was called the holy priesthood "after the order of the Son of God." This proves that Christ held it before the days of Melchisedec, but Genesis contains this explanation:

"This same priesthood which was in the beginning, shall be in the end of the world also."—Genesis 6: 7, Inspired Version.

It was conferred upon Adam, and he was commanded to be baptized also "in the name" of Christ (6: 53), which means by his authority. As the priesthood was after the order of the Son of God, it proves that Christ must have had it at the time it was conferred upon Adam. Christ is declared to be God manifest in the flesh (1 Timothy 3: 16. Colossians 2: 8. John 14: 9. Book of Mormon 251: 28; 721: 72, 77), and his priesthood was without beginning of days or end of life (Hebrews 7: 3, Inspired Version. Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2). Priesthood is divine authority, and was resident in Christ as one of the Godhead before the world was made, which was created by him.

Harvest Home Services at Humber Bay

Humber Bay Branch of Toronto District held their annual harvest home on Sunday, September 30, with all-day services. Prayer meeting convened at 9:30 a. m.; Sunday school at 11 a. m., with preaching services at 3 p. m. and 7 p. m.

Elder Leslie Prentice, pastor of Toronto Branch, was the afternoon speaker and Bishop A. F. McLean addressed the congregation in the evening. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and autumn leaves. An abundance of choice fruits and vegetables were displayed before the altar. A special ten-pound bread loaf occupying the center. For several years past, one of the leading bakeries in this vicinity has made this contribution.

On Monday evening, October 1, the women's department provided a short program and served refreshments after the sale of the harvest vegetables. The proceeds will be spent in repairs on the church building.

A corn roast was held on Wednesday evening, October 3, by the young people's department at the home of the president, James Dadson. Some thirty-five attended this gathering. Games and contests were provided and a good time was enjoyed by all. A hard-time party is being planned for Halloween. Last year, a masquerade party was held in the church and the judges experienced difficulty in choosing the prize winners.

The church building was closed on Sunday, October 7, to enable the congregation to attend the annual district conference held in Toronto, October 6 and 7.

Fresno, California

2412 Clay Avenue, Fresno, California

Members have returned home from vacations and the ban has been lifted on infantile paralysis, so the church school has been resumed, and all services are well attended.

With Arthur Oakman in charge, the annual business and election of officers was held September 7. All officers of last year were sustained with the exception of the music director, because Sister Altha Richardson's health prevents her continuing in this office. Brother David Williams was elected to the office, and is well qualified to conduct the music. The other officers are: T. F. Enix, pastor with A. S. Votaw and L. W. Roberts, counselors; Mrs. L. W. Roberts, director of religious education; Mrs. Mable Votaw, clerk; W. F. Crane, treasurer; Mrs. J. R. Buchanan, historian; Mrs. William Godfrey, librarian, and L. W. Roberts, publicity agent.

Sister Lillie Jennings, as children's supervisor; John Lightowler, adult supervisor, and Sister William Enix, Women's activity leader, were all sustained and Brother Allen Roberts was chosen as leader of young people.

They were favored on the twenty-first by a visit from Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Brother Arthur Oakman, of the seventies. Brother Gleazer delivered a wonderful sermon.

Elder Edwin Burdick, of Sacramento, the district bishop's agent, spoke Sunday morning September 23.

Elder J. F. Wiles has been featured on two consecutive evenings, delivering two splendid missionary sermons to well-filled houses. Some nonmembers are quite interested. May God bless him, "the self-supporting missionary."

New Philadelphia, Ohio

The October sacrament service was in charge of Elder William L. Goudy, assisted by Elders John Carlisle, Charles Cramer, A. B. Klar, and Richard Watkins, priest.

Rally day, September 23, was observed with an interesting program. The church was decorated with fall flowers, and the morning program opened with a violin solo, "Fairer Lord Jesus," by Wayne Thomas; the choir contributed two anthems, "The Awakening Chorus," and "The Heavens Declare." Marian Angus beautifully interpreted the hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee," with a pantomime, assisted by the junior quartet, Vida Angus, Anna Watkins, Hal Rennels, and Wayne Thomas. Sister Veneta Warner, pianist, assisted with all musical numbers.

Pastor John Carlisle introduced the speaker, J. A. Neff, county auditor, who gave a brief but appreciative address. Climaxing the program came the play, "The Crowning of the Ruling Agent of Church School." The object of this play was to stress the need of order, good literature, and religious education to make a perfect church school. The play was arranged by Anna Cramer and Nettie Bigler.

The marriage of Donald F. McMillen and Marjorie F. Robinson, of Uhrichsville, Ohio, was solemnized at Wheeling, West Virginia, July 24, by Elder Louis E. Serig.

Recent visitors to the branch included Elder and Sister E. G. Hammond, of Akron, Ohio, who were here September 9. Brother Hammond preached in his usual capable manner.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson visited here September 11, and preached to an appreciative audience. Following that service he met with the priesthood.

Thirty young people of the branch entertained on September 7, in honor of Elder and Mrs. William L. Goudy whose marriage took place in July. Richard Watkins presided over a well-arranged program, and Gomer Watkins presented the honor guests a gift.

Junior church services were conducted in the main auditorium September 23, Elder William L. Goudy presiding. "Friendship" provided the theme for his sermon. June Goudy told the story of "Damon and Pythias," and Vida Angus and Mary Cramer sang "All Along Life's Pathway."

Members of the branch who were privileged to attend Kirtland reunion reported a most spiritual and profitable time.

Toronto, Canada

The fall season has brought renewed activities in the branch and arrangements for the winter program in the different departments.

At the annual election J. L. Prentice was again reelected pastor with W. J. Bavington and S. J. Bell as counselors. Mrs. Mary Wilson is again superintendent of the department of women and B. J. Hewitt heads the Sunday school for another term. S. J. Clark was elected president of the department known as religio, which convenes each Friday evening. They are arranging for a special missionary effort during the winter.

The following members were set apart for ordination by the branch and approved by the Toronto district conference: Gerald Parfitt and Frederick Le-feuvre to the office of elder; Ernest Newton, priest, and Andrew King and Bruce Broadfoot, deacons. These young men make a splendid addition to the local priesthood.

The department of women is busy with luncheons, rummage sales and serving meals for conventions. At their quarterly report meeting they gathered in over two hundred dollars. They require one thousand dollars by Christmas.

The young people will be holding the branch contest for the Ontario Oratorical Competition in Toronto sometime this month, and the Toronto district competition will be held at Hamilton November 4. It is hoped that the finals will be held shortly after that date, but time and place have not yet been settled.

Cottage meetings in the north end of the city have been going well all summer under the leadership of Philip Crump. They have a fine Sunday school in that section. Several baptisms have come from there and others are pending. Workers expect to have other missions busy again this winter.

Speakers of late were Apostle D. T. Williams and Elders W. I. Fligg and Douglas Cameron, of the missionary force, with Bishop A. F. McLean and Elders James Pycock, B. H. Hewitt, Charles A. McLean, W. J. Bavington, and S. J. Bell, of the local priesthood. They have a fifteen-minute sermonet each Sunday morning by the junior priesthood. This has proved very successful being interesting and instructive.

Santa Ana, California

An impressive installation service was held Sunday evening, September 30, when newly-elected officers of Santa Ana Branch were called to the platform and solemnly ushered into their new work by the pastor, Louis J. Ostertag. Those elected to office were—Sister Louis Ostertag, director of the church school and branch clerk; Brother Warren Best, branch treasurer; Sister Stella Best, chorister; Brother Clarence Mills, church custodian, and Brother D. B. Carmichael, historian and branch publicity agent. Brother James Farley was sustained branch solicitor. Sister Charles Calkins, because of continued ill health, will be unable to continue her work as director in the children's department, but promises her help and good counsel.

The general attendance at the meetings is steadily improving, especially at the prayer meetings. At the sacrament service in September the Saints were addressed by the Holy Spirit through the pastor in admonition and encouragement. And after a fine reunion, the members of Santa Ana Branch feel strengthened and encouraged to do their part in building up the Lord's work. Two new members were added to the church in August when the pastor baptized Mrs. Cora Brooks Dumphy and Charles J. Dumphy.

Visiting with her parents at Orange, Sister Forrest White, daughter of Brother and Sister Charles Calkins, has been a frequent visitor at the church services. She returns shortly to her home in Lamoni, Iowa. Her husband, accompanied her to California, but was able to stay only a short time.

Among branch good times that were especially enjoyable was the steak bake held at the home of Brother and Sister Clinton Brush, when twenty members of the choir spent a happy evening in recreation and singing. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was the special guest of the choir.

Conference of Southern New England District

The annual conference of Southern New England District was held at the Onset Camp Grounds September 1 and 2. The session on Saturday evening was occupied by the business of the conference and election of officers. The statistical reports from branches gave the membership roll as totalling 1,154, a net gain of four since the conference last March.

One of the interesting items in the report of the district presidency was the one concerning the regional conference held in New London, July 15. This is a new idea in Southern New England District and the try-out of the one-day conference for only part of the district clearly proved its merits.

The election of officers resulted in choice of the following: District president, W. A. Sinclair; first counselor, E. R. Bradshaw; second counselor, B. W. Leland; secretary, F. S. Dobbins; treasurer, Bishop M. C. Fisher; chorister, Helen Coombs; historian, Laura P. Sears, and director of religious education, Harold Cash.

A resolution was adopted, thanking the retiring officers for their painstaking and faithful labors in the service of the district during their period in office.

The Sunday services began with church school hour. The sacrament service followed and was a quiet, beautiful one. Many testimonies were given and some were outstanding. The excellent theme talk by D. F. Joy on "Be Ye Transformed by the Renewing of Your Minds," struck a responsive chord in the hearts of those who took part in prayer and testimony. Brother W. A. Sinclair read a poem given to him under the inspiration of the Spirit shortly before the conference.

In the preaching services the Spirit of God rested upon the brothers who spoke, and they were blessed with liberty of thought and speech to a marked degree.

At the 11 a. m. service E. L. Traver, in a sermon full of beautiful thoughts well expressed, spoke of conditions that existed and emphasized the Saints' need of growth, of getting closer to God.

At the afternoon service, M. C. Fisher in his sermon spoke of the need for Zion.

In the evening Ray Bradshaw spoke on the Restoration of the Gospel, closing his sermon with a warning to the Saints to live up to their privileges and perform the work that lies before them.

The songs and music contributed by the sisters of the Calvert family helped to make the conference one that all will like to review in memory.

Houston, Texas

Houston Saints assembled September 26, for the election of officers. Those chosen to serve are: Branch president, C. W. Tischer; secretary, W. J. Birkhead; treasurer, A. V. Arnold; presiding deacon, Donald McCormick; music director, Mrs. A. J. Banta; publicity agent, Mrs. F. L. Waters; church school director, R. V. Post; adult supervisor, Lon Mitchell; young people's supervisor, Eugene Wilder; children's supervisor, Aaron Kohlman.

The Boys Scouts still meet each Friday under the direction of Brother Dubos.

The recreation hall shows marked improvement in appearance, having been recently decorated. The new paper and newly-enameled woodwork and new drapes add much to the room.

The young married people's class has realized one of its projects in the publishing of The Weekly Record, a small paper containing all the activities of the branch besides other articles, news, ads, etc. The first edition of the Record came out October 8.

The Saints seem to be entering into the activities of the year with renewed zeal. Some are excellent leaders, others are good followers. Altogether they hope to make strides forward. The spirit to work is growing among them.

Bristow, Oklahoma

The meetings at Bristow are still in progress. Two more were baptized last Sunday.

The Saints were honored a few Sundays ago by having District President A. E. Stoff with us. He delivered a wonderful message which was instructive to all.

The newly-organized Sunday school has good attendance. They have purchased quarterlies, ordered Stepping Stones and Zion's Hope for the children and added twelve new Saints' Hymnals to the number of songbooks. Mrs. C. A. Place, a Latter Day Saint, recently moved to Bristow from Sperry, is the pianist. She has organized a youth's choir, and they practice every Friday evening. She is accomplishing much good by arousing the interest of the children.

Eight Bristow Saints motored to Tulsa Sunday, September 30, where they attended church services. Elder Oliver A. McDowell delivered the message.

They were happy to have Elder and Sister Falice Cunningham and Brother and Sister W. J. Couser, of Tulsa, with them October 14. Elder Cunningham comes to Bristow every second and fourth Sunday of the month.

Wabash, Indiana

Elder Archibald Whitehead came to Wabash in June and held meetings, telling the gospel story to Saints and friends. He counseled young and old and his sermons were an inspiration to many.

The first Sunday in July was a day not soon to be forgotten. Brother Whitehead, who has now gone to his reward, conducted a sacrament service, and as he arose on that day to give his testimony his face reflected the power of the Spirit and his kindly eyes beamed with the love of God. He spoke with the gift of tongues and prophecy, telling the Saints that the heavenly Father was well pleased with their meeting together, admonishing them that if they held fast and kept his commandments, they should not want.

Wabash Saints are grateful for the blessings of Brother Whitehead's help and counsel. They will miss him. They send sympathy to his family.

Brush Creek, Illinois

The Brush Creek reunion began August 10. Although there were not so many campers this year, numbers expressed their opinion that this was the best reunion in every way that they had ever attended.

The La Da Sa Club met with Ruth Marshall, Gladys Burroughs, and Katie Burgess in August, with Nellie Henson, Bessie Burkett and Edna Miller in September, and with Manda Burgess, Etta Burgess, and Laura Bennett in October at the church park. Ice cream and cake were served at each meeting. They are planning a halloween social to be held at the church park Halloween night. The club served lunch at Harry Allen's sale and realized a nice sum to help the branch. The club met July 3 with Sisters Ethel Hoover, Gertie Hoover and Pearl Jones, and two plays were presented.

July 8, District President Earnest Robinson and his counselors, Charles Wesner and Lewis Deselms visited the branch and gave some interesting talks.

Three little girls were baptized in the afternoon, Betty June Henson, Bernell Jones, and Geraldine Burroughs.

Brush Creek young people invited the young people of the township to meet with them for a rally Sunday evening, July 8, and a large crowd attended.

A new concrete porch has been added to the local church, and the building has been painted. Workers are now trying to raise money to make other improvements. Part of the money for the work already done was raised by two ice cream socials in July.

The branch election was held September 21, the following officers being chosen: Pastor, Elder William Clements; counselors, Elder Halleck Milner and Priest Ancil Burroughs; secretary-treasurer, Icle Burroughs; chorister, Kate Morris; pianist, Freda Jones. Mabel Phillips was chosen to have charge of the women's work, and Pearl Jones was chosen as club leader. Halleck Milner was elected as adult supervisor; Kate Morris, young people's supervisor, and Gladys Burroughs, junior supervisor, Mabel Phillips chose as her assistant in the women's work Grace Brashears.

Saints here were grieved to learn of the death of Sister Jessie Hoover, of Pleasant Hill, Missouri. She resided at Brush Creek for several years before moving to Missouri.

Several Saints have moved into the branch where they can attend church services with regularity.

Work Moves On in Arkansas and Louisiana

After our district conference at Fisher, Arkansas, I went to Dunn, Louisiana, and held services in a brush arbor for about two weeks. Brother D. A. Byrd, who holds the office of Aaronic priest, and family live in that locality, and they have not hesitated to bear their testimony of the angel message. Brother Byrd has only been ordained since last March, but he has been actively engaged almost every Sunday since.

Our meetings were fairly well attended. Good liberty was enjoyed in presenting the word. At the close of the services we had the pleasure of leading three candidates into the kingdom.

Our next point was Mounds, Louisiana. Some of the members we had previously baptized had moved to this region. Therefore Brother Byrd drove with me to this locality for a few meetings. This town is only about ten miles from Vicksburg, Mississippi. While there we crossed the river and took in the sights. Saw where General Grant had his troops located in the bombardment of the city. We had a splendid meeting in the home of Brother Pitt and left an appointment for Brother Byrd.

At West Monroe, Louisiana, we have a small group of Saints. Most of them work in the paper mill. Here I had the thrilling experience of preaching in a barn. Brother Blazier and family saw the need of a Sunday school. They cleaned out the barn, placed seats in it, and electric lights, and were ready for the Lord's business. The organ was moved from the parlor to the barn, and Sister Bouton, graduate nurse of Independence Sanitarium, played the instrument.

We have several young men in this town of whom the church may well be proud, Bert Gross, T. C. Salter, J. D. Phillips, and others. If these men will only apply themselves in the study of the word, the church will have some staunch defenders in the near future.

My next point was at the old Eros

Branch, the only branch in Louisiana. The Saints have a nice building for a country church, and this was filled almost every night by interested listeners. Grandma Fuller (Aunt Bell) was there most every night, although eighty-five years old. Her sight is getting dim, but she loves the Lord's work.

After a week's meeting we baptized six more candidates into the kingdom, four boys, one girl, and Brother Bagwell, seventy-five years of age. Brother Alma Williams was ordained to the office of elder as previously arranged by the district conference. Brother Williams has been acting as president of the branch for sometime as an Aaronic priest.

Sunday morning, September 30, was devoted exclusively to the ordination service. The warming influence of the Holy Spirit permeated the service, giving many of the Saints a confirming testimony of the brother's call. Brother Williams is now the second elder in the State of Louisiana, but we have others in this branch who will yet be called to higher responsibilities if they are faithful. Brother J. E. Phillips has presided in the past, and is always ready to lend a helping hand in the Sunday school. Elder Sam Fuller is ready to do his bit. We are looking for big things to happen through the united efforts of these men.

During the past year the ladies' aid has performed a good work in screening the church building and adding other improvements.

I am now pleasantly located twenty miles north of Little Rock, preaching every night in the schoolhouse in the neighborhood where Brothers Bud Smith and W. J. Black live. We are having good crowds and some interest. Our slogan is "Onward to Zion."

A. M. BAKER.

Flint, Michigan

Flint Branch has accomplished much, materially, during the summer months. The interior of the Baltimore Boulevard Church has been redecorated, and many necessary repairs made.

A new steam-heating system has been installed in the Newell Street Church which will more than adequately heat the building. The upper auditorium has been thoroughly cleaned and new lighting fixtures have been put in. These fixtures, beautiful in themselves, give more beauty and dignity to the auditorium as well as more efficient lighting. The windows of the upper auditorium are being rebuilt. A vestibule is being built at the entrance to the lower auditorium. New storage cupboards are being made. A room for storing equipment is being excavated under the front entrance. Cement has replaced the wooden flooring in the "kitchen," and the whole lower auditorium is being repaired and redecorated. The work for this building, repairing and cleaning, has

Ten Baptized at Warba, Minnesota

"The Saints of Warba are rejoicing over the fact that on October 8, we baptized ten fine people into the church," writes Apostle J. F. Curtis. "Elder Samuel Case and family have been helping in Sunday school work here. I began services in the school-house at Warba and continued eleven days. The ten candidates baptized were from four new families who are neighbors of Brother and Sister Case. Several more are favorable."

Membership of Southern New England District

The membership of Southern New England District, according to statistical reports made to the September conference, now totals 1,154. The conference was held at the Onset Camp Grounds. Elder W. A. Sinclair is president of this district.

Missionary Services in Lamoni Stake

Elder J. Charles May closed one of the best series of meetings he has conducted in Lamoni Stake, at Hiteman, Iowa, October 7. The services began September 23, an average attendance was about one hundred and fifty. Interest was exceptionally good.

Two adults were baptized Sunday, October 7, by Elder C. B. Hartshorn, pastor, and another name is in for baptism and several others are considering the matter.

Brother Hartshorn is principal of the schools at Hiteman, and Brother Crown, recently a student at Grace-land, is also teaching there. They and their wives are a great help to the church work at Hiteman.

Elder E. Y. Hunker began a series of meetings October 7 at Chariton some thirty miles from Hiteman.

"We are happy to see the people so eager to hear the gospel," writes Brother J. Charles May whose next missionary meetings will be held in Far Wset Stake.

Wishes Our Prayers

Lodie William Parr, Jacksonville, Oregon, wishes the Saints to pray for him in his sore affliction. He is almost helpless, but his faith in God is strong. If there are Saints living near Jacksonville, he would be glad to have them call on him, and he will appreciate letters though, because of his condition, he cannot answer, except as he finds a friend to write for him. Address him Box 182, care Mrs. Olive Thrasher, Jacksonville, Oregon.

A lot fifty feet by one hundred-forty feet, adjoining the church lot on the west has been purchased from the Flint school board. This lot provides room for both playground and future building expansion.

Arthur H. DuRose has again been chosen pastor for Flint Branch with George E. Burt and Theodore I. Bush as associates. Mrs. A. H. DuRose directs the adult department. Zola McNamara supervises the young people. Stanley Shears is appointed head of the music department. These department leaders are beginning the year with enthusiasm and zeal.

The Saints are looking forward to a series of meetings, beginning October 14, which will be conducted by Elder John R. Grice.

Oshoto, Wyoming

On September 30, Oshoto Branch held its annual business meeting and Horace L. Hartshorn was retained as branch president. Most of the officers were retained. F. V. Cole was elected church school leader with Joe De Barthe as assistant. Two new members were added to the branch roll, Sister Clara Walson and Joe De Barthe. Two mem were recommended for ordination by Brother Hartshorn. They were F. V. Cole, to the office of priest and Forrest Julius, teacher. The time of ordination will probably be the first of November when Elder L. O. Wildermuth is expected to hold a series of meetings.

Only two young people were present at this meeting due to the fact that several are attending schools away from home. Clifford Cole is attending Grace-land College; Lewis and Lucile Hartshorn and Verne Dillon are at Gillette, Wyoming; and Veryl and Donald Stubbart are at Moorcroft, Wyoming.

At the first business meeting of the new year of the women's Laurel Club, all officers of the previous year were retained. It was voted to start a church library with Sister Forrest Julius as librarian.

Sister Julius was baptized into the church October 4, by Brother Hartshorn and was confirmed at an inspirational sacrament service. October 7.

Vinalhaven, Maine

Elder E. F. Robertson held a two-week series of services here the early part of September, and his subject was "Our Beliefs as Found Outlined in the Epitome of Faith and Doctrine." His sermons were enjoyed by all who attended. On the last Sunday of the series Pearl Philbrook was baptized.

On the following Tuesday Evangelist U. W. Greene came to stay one week, and his sermons were inspiring.

On Monday following his series there was another baptism, Mrs. Philip Dyer being the candidate.

September 29 and 30 Brother William Clark, of Castine, was at Vinalhaven and held meetings on the west side of town Saturday evening and several services on Sunday.

All have been encouraged by the visits of these ardent church workers, and feel that with such help the church will go steadily on.

A number hope that they may attend the young people's conference and convention at Stonington, November 2, 3, and 4, and are praying that it will be a great factor in advancing the young people of Western Maine District.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

It was rally day in Philadelphia, October 7. The upper auditorium was crowded, and everyone was interested in the promotions. Sister Quedenfeld's class has grown so quickly that the older members did not realize these boys and girls were ready to enter the senior division. Philadelphia Saints are proud of their church school. Its organization and advancements are commendable.

To show that Philadelphia Branch is alive and busy, they wish to mention a few of the activities which are claiming the attention and time of the Saints.

Elder D. M. Wiesen, the director of the church school, has done some very hard work during the past years, getting the departments in order.

Sister Myrtle Weber is the director of the children's division. Under her supervision the sand table class is ably cared for by Elsie Langjahr. The six-thirty meetings in which Bible stories are told by the use of pictures, are under the direction of John Cumming. Junior church work, under the supervision of Dorothy Brenner, as well as the regular church school Sunday classes also are part of Sister Weber's responsibilities.

The young people's department, under the leadership of Norman Preusch, is composed of fourteen church school classes and the following organizations: the young people's council of which Violet James is president; the K. U. Club, a group of girls interested in home economics, supervised by Ruth Beckman; the Alpha Lambda Sigma, a social and teacher training group of girls; sponsored by Annie Thomas; the Girl Scouts captained by Viola Preusch; the Boy Scouts led by Norman Preusch; the basket ball team under the able coaching of Robert Campbell; the nucleus of an a cappella chorus, to be directed by Esther Weddle Schafer; a dramatic club coached and directed by Phoebe Fowler.

The young people also participate in the following activities—young people's prayer meetings, led by Louis Kuhn, vesper services, hikes, swims, and young people's day every spring and fall.

The adult department, supervised by Clara Thumm, has in it five church school classes of which one is a class for German Saints. Under the personal direction of Sister Thumm are the choir of thirty-two voices, the Clover Club, and the Temple Builders. Sister Fowler is sponsor of the Laurel Club.

Minnesota District Conference

The semiannual conference of Minnesota District, held in Duluth, September 21 to 23, was not only a spiritual feast for those attending, but it marked some definite steps in constructive development looking forward to the final gathering.

The high point of this gathering was the dedication of Duluth church, made possible by the consecrated work of the Duluth members, particularly the women's department. In his dedicatory sermon President F. M. Smith warned the people against resting on their oars in the reflection of this goal being reached. He gave them a new goal in a challenge to live fully up to the ninth commandment.

Apostle J. F. Curtis gave much to the high spiritual standards of the conference. He was in charge of the two prayer meetings on Saturday and Sunday morning both of which were very people's meeting on Saturday morning. The meeting was in charge of Allen Olson, of Minneapolis, assisted by Frank Tucker, jr., of Clitherall, and Cyril Mof-fett, of Duluth. After the audience had sung, "Soldiers of Christ, Arise," the young people marched in, led by Sister Adah Carlson singing, "God Is Marshal-ing His Army." Following the opening prayer, Sister Carlson received from a representative of each branch his report on the progress of the young people in filing their inventories, and she, in turn, gave to President Smith the combined report for the district. Approximately eighty percent of the young people reported having filed inventories, and he accepted this as a challenge to the adult members. His address to the young people in appreciation of their efforts, stirred them to keep up the good work.

The young people were very much a part of the conference. The Duluth group as hosts gave a play for the opening on Friday night and arranged entertainment for the entire group. The groups from each of the other branches, Minneapolis, Clitherall, and Bemidji, furnished entertainment at some time during the conference.

The work of feeding and housing the visitors to the conference was a real problem, but this was ably handled by the women under the leadership of Sister Mollie Feathers, retiring president of the women's department of Duluth, and by the reception committee under the lead-

Minnesota District Youth File Inventories

Approximately eighty percent of the young people of Minnesota District have filed their inventories, according to a report given to President F. M. Smith at the district conference in September, by Sister Adah Carlson, young people's leader. A survey was made of the young people's response to the "Keep the law" slogan, the various branches reporting, at a special young people's meeting during the conference.

President Smith gave their fine response to the financial program as a challenge to the older members.

Peace rules the day, where reason rules the mind.—Collins.

Requests Prayers

Mrs. C. F. Hill, of Omaha, Texas, desires the Saints to have special prayer for her October 28, that she may be healed of her afflictions.

Then Criticize

"Yes, my friend, it was a bad sermon and that clergyman isn't a clever man, and, no doubt, you could answer all his arguments; but, I pray you, desist from criticism and write yourself one sermon, or two, or for fifty-two Sundays in the year; and remember they must be delivered to folk like yourself. Then start away again to criticize the clergyman if you like and if you can."—H. R. L. Sheppard.

Nine Baptized in Louisiana

During the past few weeks missionary A. M. Baker has baptized nine into the church in Louisiana. For two weeks he held services at Dunn, where three were led into the kingdom, then after visits to Mounds and West Monroe, he went to the old Eros Branch and baptized six, four boys, one girl, and a man seventy-five years of age.

Aimlessness.

The curse of life is aimlessness. Bees have a businesslike directness in their quest for honey stuff. Butterflies and bats merely flutter and flit about aimlessly and get nowhere in particular, because that is where they are going.—Author Unknown.

active. When a conference group can meet early on Saturday morning with most of the group assembled on time for the first prayer meeting, they indicate an unusual desire to do their part in bringing about the redemption of Zion.

To many the outstanding service of the conference was the special young ership of Arthur Bundy. On Sunday noon one table was especially set for the twenty members of the priesthood in attendance. This was highly appreciated, and was typical of the many things done to create the spirit of unity so much in evidence in the entire conference.

Clifford and Clayton Jewel, Marvin

White, and Cyril Moffett were baptized by Priests W. C. Stauty and Robert Zuelsdorf. They were confirmed at a special service by Elders Lester Whiting, Lloyd S. Anderson, E. J. Walters, and H. L. Bosshardt.

Another outstanding service was the serving of the sacrament. Many expressed surprise that the serving of the Lord's Supper could be made so impressive.

This was President Smith's first visit to Duluth and he found a well-organized conference expressing the desire of the people to do their part in building Zion. The leaders pledged the full cooperation of the district to him, and expressed the hope that they might live up to his expectations. The business meeting showed clearly the spirit of unity which was strong. All district officers were re-elected, Lester Whiting, of Clitherall, president; L. S. Wight, of Minneapolis, and E. J. Walters, of Carlton, counselors; W. C. Stauty, of Duluth, secretary; Mrs. L. S. Wight, of Minneapolis, director of religious education; Adah Carlson, of Matahwa, director of young people; Eva M. Tourville, of Duluth, director of music; and Wesley Elvin, of Minneapolis, treasurer, was sustained as bishop's agent. Plans were made looking to the establishing of a young people's institute in the summer of 1935.

While this conference meant much to everyone there were two to whom it meant the realization of hopes generated through years of struggle when the work was first started in Duluth. Elder and Sister Samuel Sloan, now of Two Harbors, were pioneers whose untiring efforts laid a good foundation. Today Sister Sloan cannot see, but she mingled with the Saints and could realize something of the development since starting the work in Duluth.

The success of this conference shows what can be done even under difficulties when the work is properly organized. Plans are already being made for the next conference in Minneapolis in the spring of 1935. The people of Minnesota believe Zion can be redeemed and intend to do their part.

Independence

Institute in Second Week

The first week of the teachers' and leaders' institute of Zion came to a close Friday night, with about one hundred and seventy men and women enrolled for credit. Many more have been attending the sessions, but have not enrolled for credit.

Demonstration classes were held each night, after an inspirational service. The beginner and primary departments are being handled as one, under Mrs. Tessie Smith and Miss Ruby Williamson. James Moses and Frank Jennings are in charge of the junior and intermediate groups, and the young people and adult departments are together under Kenneth Morford and J. E. Kelsey.

Elder George Mesley, of Kansas City Stake, was the speaker for the inspirational service Monday night. He was followed in order during the week by Ward A. Hougas, president of Far West Stake, Leonard Lea, managing editor of the Saints' Herald, and John Sheehy, pastor in Zion, who spoke Thursday and Friday nights.

One of the keynotes of the institute last week was that Zion cannot be fully redeemed until the members and priesthood of the church take the responsibility that is theirs and fulfill it. "We must live what we teach, what we represent; we must teach the love of God, the story of the church; teachers must make adequate preparation for their classes; moral character, sincerity, dependability are absolutely necessary in making a good teacher; you must have convictions in order to really teach; remember that we are teaching the pupil, not the lesson." These are some of the high points of the week.

This week the first period each night is being taken by Apostle F. Henry Edwards, who is presenting "Latter Day Saint Concepts of Subject Matter." In the second period, results of a curriculum survey are being presented to the different departments, under the same leaders as last week.

Stone Church

With its part in the Harvest Home Festival concert now a matter of history the Stone Church Choir, led by Paul N. Craig, is taking on new life and organizing for its winter undertakings. Last Thursday night the singers elected a new president, J. Adelbert Withee, to take the place of Virgil Woodside who is away attending college. Mrs. Paul Nelson, formerly choir leader at Wichita, Kansas, was chosen vice president of the choir.

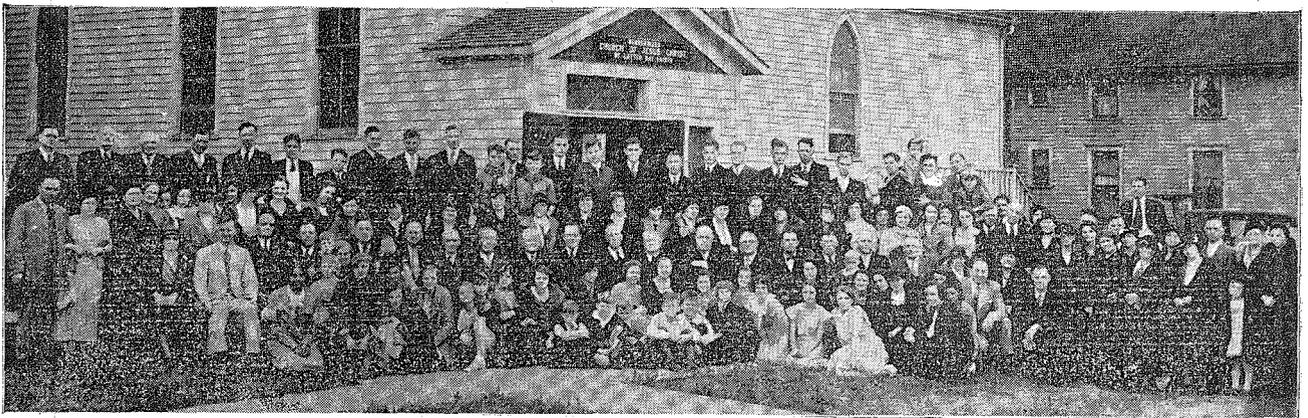

The eleven o'clock service Sunday morning was a court of honor for the Boy Scouts of Troop 223, of the Stone Church. Scout Commissioner Henry Stahl was in charge, assisted in the stand by S. A. Thiel and D. R. Carmichael, committeemen of the troop. Elder John Blackmore, also a committeeman, was the speaker, and his theme was "Scouting." During this hour awards to individual scouts, to patrols, and to the troop were made by Commissioner Stahl.

The Stone Church Choir gave the musical program at this service, and it was broadcast over KMBC. They sang "Tenderly, Tenderly Lead Thou Me On," and the anthem, "O Lord Most Holy," by Cesar Franck, Mrs. Nina G. Smith taking the soprano solo part. Gomer Cool playing the violin obbligato. Mrs. Hazel Withee, organist, played a pleasing solo number.

College Day was observed in the evening service when President G. N. Briggs, of Graceland College, was the speaker. He was introduced by Leonard Lea, president of the Graceland College Alumni Association. Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the service, assisted by Doctor Charles F. Grabske.

President Briggs based his sermon on a paragraph from the first commencement delivered at Graceland thirty-six years ago, President Joseph Smith, the speaker, and a reading from an address given by Mark H. Forscutt.

Music for this program was supplied by the Cantina Chorus, conducted by Mrs. H. C. Burgess. Emma Tandburg played the organ.

Minnesota District Conference gathering at Duluth.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the church Saturday night, October 20, when Miss Hazel Vanderwood, daughter of Elder and Mrs. J. E. Vanderwood, of Independence, became the bride of Harlan W. Close, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Close, of Centerville, Iowa. Pastor J. F. Sheehy officiated. Miss Jayne Lewis was bridesmaid, and Paul Close attended his brother as best man. Little Anna Lou Radmall was the ring bearer, and Norma Lee Radmall was flower girl. Both are cousins of the bride. Mrs. Close is a teacher in the DeKalb School near Independence, and Mr. Close is employed in Kansas City. They will make their home in Independence.

The Saints of Group 9 surprised Elder and Sister William L. Cowan at their home Saturday night, the occasion being their twenty-fourth wedding anniversary. About fifty were present and an impromptu program of speeches and songs was enjoyed, followed by the presentation of gifts and refreshments. Brother Cowan is the elder of Group 9.

Second Church

Elder C. E. Blodgett, Sunday morning's speaker for Second Church Saints, took for his theme, "Can We Have Fellowship With God and the World at the Same Time?" The choir sang the anthem, "The Glory of God in Nature," Earl Audet directing.

"Dependability," was the theme of the junior service conducted at the same hour in the lower auditorium. Lawrence Martin, of Enoch Hill, was the speaker, and stories were told by Geraldine Fields and Rhoda Queen.

Bishop J. S. Kelley chose for his sermon topic in the evening, "The Man With the Withered Arm." A quartet sang, "The Old Rugged Cross."

Walnut Park Church

Patriarch Ammon White was the speaker Sunday morning, his sermon following an anthem, "More Love to Thee, O Christ," by the choir, under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson. The solo part of the anthem was taken by Melba Moorman, soprano. At this service Gerald Francis Wood, infant son of Brother and Sister Earl Wood, was blessed by Elders Welton Wood and Benjamin Bean. Elder Wood is the baby's grandfather. At the same hour the juniors in the lower auditorium heard a story by Ruth Bryant, and the talk was by Brother Odess Athey.

There was a nice attendance at religio at six o'clock in the evening, the program being given by a brass quartet composed of Joe Countryman, Henry Countryman, Fred Mollison and Guy Reynolds. In addition to the several sacred and secular numbers by the quartet, there was a cornet duet by Joe and Henry Countryman and a trombone solo by Fred Mollison. Leona Hartman, the new vice president, is in charge of the arrangement of programs and is providing entertaining and instructive features. The religio is planning publication of a monthly newspaper, the name of which has not yet been selected, and much interest is evidenced in the enterprise. A full staff of about twenty members has been selected and are working industriously on the first issue which will appear soon.

The speaker at seven-thirty Sunday evening was Elder Thomas Newton.

Enoch Hill Church

A number of workers from Enoch Hill are nightly attending the teachers and leaders institute held at the Stone Church.

A son, Edward Russel, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Russel Waterman, October 2. And a daughter, Carol Lee, has come to brighten the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Wolf.

Sister Virginia Cadwell returned home from the Sanitarium a few days ago. She will be confined to her bed yet for some time while she recuperates from an operation.

Sister Amos Allen has announced the musicians for the coming year. Sister John Jones will have charge of the beginner and primary departments, assisted by Hortense Jones and Alice Constance, pianists. Sister May Worth, assisted by Brother William Worth, will have charge of the junior church school. Brother Richard Maloney, Helen McDonald and Jewel Allen will be pianists for the senior church school. Brother Maloney will also be pianist for the general congregation, Sister Ruby Griffin assisting.

Several changes have been made in the classes of the church school, and some new classes have been formed.

"Graceland," was the theme of the worship period Sunday morning, October 21. The Scripture reading was by David Allen. Richard Maloney played "Graceland Forever," and Alice Constance and Jeanne Thomas sang a college song. H. E. Winegar talked.

"In the Name of Jesus, Rise Up and Walk," was the theme of Brother Harold C. Burgess's discourse at the eleven o'clock hour. The choir sang "Someone Has Need of Kindness."

Elder O. W. Sarratt was the evening speaker, and David Allen and Donald Winegar played a cornet duet.

Elder C. S. Warren was the teacher for the Doctrine and Covenants Class Thursday afternoon.

Spring Branch Church

The eight-fifteen prayer meeting Sunday morning was a young people's service, and Elder J. S. Andes was in charge. Opening remarks were by Elder A. J. Tankard. Young members were very active.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey, the Sunday morning speaker, took his text from the first chapter of second Peter. Sister Joe Higgins, soprano, sang a solo, accompanied by her daughter, Eloise.

Attendance at the Sunday evening church school was good, and Pastor F. A. Cool's class gave the program.

At the sermon hour they held promotion exercises. A reading was given by Gloria McLees; a solo, "Jesus Loves Me," by Donald Lane; a duet, "What Fruit Have You Gathered for Jesus," by Patty Fischl and Shirley Goold; a reading, Otis Brown; solo, Virginia Teeters; the play, "The Gate Beautiful," and a solo, Evelyn Roberts. Sister Jessie Smith presented diplomas to primaries being promoted to the junior classes; Sister Dixon to the juniors going into the intermediate group. Following a trio number by Alma, Gladys, and Imogene Dixon, Pastor F. A. Cool gave a fine talk.

Englewood Church

Sunday morning, October 14, Elder James A. Gillen was the speaker. He used as his topic, "The Yoke of Jesus Christ." At the seven-thirty hour, Pastor T. A. Beck preached. After this service a reception was given for Brother and Sister Beck.

Sunday morning, October 21, Elder Leonard Lea delivered the sermon, using for his text Psalm 61.

Englewood can well be proud of her young people, who had charge of the seven-thirty service, October 21. The hour was used in presenting a musical program, the culmination of several weeks of practice. The numbers in their order were: Prelude, Wilma Clow; Scripture reading, Inez Tousley; men's quartet, Elbert McConnell, Glen Closson, jr., Ralph Dunlap, and Delmar Goode; vocal solo, Alba Simms; trumpet solos, Elbert McConnell; novelty number, Glen Closson, jr.; bassoon solo, Wallace Fike; musical reading, Shirley Clow; vocal solo, Anita May; mixed quartet number, Anita May, Kathryn May, Glen Closson, jr., and Delmar Goode; the Y. P. A. chorus; and postlude, Wilma Clow.

The young people also maintained a booth at the carnival from which they profited nine dollars and fifty cents.

Friday night, October 12, the adult class of the church school held a party at the home of Brother and Sister Glen Closson. They elected as their class president Ferguson Dillon.

Englewood laments the death of Brother Hartman Ek, who passed away October 20, and wish to offer their condolence to the bereaved family.

East Independence Church

Brother Delmar Goode and Sister D. S. McNamara met with the local dramatic club at the church Monday night, October 15.

On Sunday, early morning prayer meetings were started, and a good number were present and took part. Frank Minton and Arthur Peer were in charge.

Elder Harvey Minton was the speaker Sunday morning and he read Psalm 73. The choir sang a special number, being directed by Carlos Smith. Sister Jennie Butler sang a solo.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood was the evening speaker.

Kansas City Stake

Seventh Annual Leadership School

Kansas City Stake enjoyed its seventh annual leadership school the two weeks of September 10 to 21, at Central Church. This year's school was very successful, the average nightly attendance being well over two hundred. Classes were held for ten evenings and divided into two hours, allowing every student the opportunity of taking two classes. The first hour classes dealt chiefly with current quarterly material. Approximately one hundred qualified for credits.

During the first week the following classes were offered: first hour, adults and young people, "Church History," presented by Apostle F. Henry Edwards from the new volume, Story of the Church, by Inez Davis; seniors, "History of the Christian Church," taught by C. B. Woodstock; junior methods and worship organized and offered by Mrs. H. A. Higgins, and kindergarten, "Leading Childhood to God," presented by Miss Elizabeth Morgan, a teacher from the public schools of Kansas City. The second hour was devoted to "Our Bible," a discussion of biblical literature by John Blackmore, and "Winning Men," taught by Apostle F. Henry Edwards.

During the second week these classes were given: First hour, "Church History," continued by F. Henry Edwards; intermediates, "Seeing Life Whole," taught by Mrs. Olive Moses; juniors, "Jesus and His Teachings," by Miss Halie Gould, and primary, "Learning to Live as God's Children," by the author of this quarterly, Mildred Goodfellow. During the second hour the same courses of the first week were continued. The course, "Winning Men," was of vital interest as the total goal of the stake for the year deals with the missionary work of the church.

President F. M. McDowell scheduled and held personal interviews with all the members of the stake priesthood.

The expense of the school was cared for by special offerings.

Inestimable inspiration and increased knowledge were gained, and everyone went away refreshed.

Central Church

Bishop C. A. Skinner occupied the pulpit at the morning service, October 14, and Charles Stillson sang a tenor solo. Mrs. Nell Atkinson Kelley, soprano, provided the special music at the worship period. At the evening service Mrs. Marguerite Johnson Blaine sang a soprano solo and Elder George Mesley gave the evening message.

Activities for the winter season are now under way. The Women's Club and the Business and Professional Girls' Clubs have begun their meetings, and the prayer meeting dinners have also been resumed.

Quindaro Church

This congregation enjoyed its annual rally week activities from October 1 to 7. On Monday evening, October 1, the church workers and guests, consisting of forty persons, participated in a banquet and social hour which had been planned by Sister H. A. Higgins.

The service opened with the processional, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and the hymn, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds"; prayer by C. D. Jellings. Pastor H. A. Higgins greeted the guests and workers, and a song-grace preceded the dinner. Elder Cyril E. Wight was one of the speakers of the evening and his theme was "Resource and Responsibility"; Elder Ward A. Hougas talked on "The Firing Line and the Base of Supplies," and Elder C. D. Jellings talked on "Consecrated Service." Music on the program was furnished by Miss Mona Gross, contralto soloist, Otis Swart, violinist, and hymns sung by the group. A. H. Hallier, assistant pastor, offered the benediction.

On Wednesday, October 3, the congregation experienced a wonderful prayer meeting, a large number attending.

Friday the O. B. K.'s, headed by Victor Hill, entertained the entire church with an evening of social worship consisting of a planned program of home talent and supervised games.

The climax of the rally week came October 7, Sunday, with a priesthood prayer meeting at 8:30 a. m., a capacity crowd at the church school and an outstanding sacrament service. Pastor H. A. Higgins delivered a splendid sermon in the evening.

Bennington Church

Due to the fact that Elder Marion Sneed, now pastor at Bennington, was not fully acquainted with the group when he took office in July, the officers then in service were asked to remain in their respective offices until the beginning of the second quarter, October 1.

At a business meeting held on Sunday morning, September 30, some former officers were reelected and some new ones were elected. They are as follows: Bishop's agent and purchasing agent, S. D. Hastings; social worker, Mrs. E. H. Agin; dramatic director, Emma Helm; flower committee, Mrs. V. Moore and Marie Renninger; publicity agent, Kenneth Davis; reporter, Beulah Hare; librarian, E. H. Agin; secretary, John Mawhiney; recreation committee, Mrs. V. Moore, Brother Stafford and Victor Witte; head usher, O. G. Helm; chorister, Mary Agin; junior church supervisor, George Benninger; organist, Sister Margaret Clark; head women's department, Myrtle Winn, and men's department, Fred Witte, Rufus McMahan, and Harvey Agin.

Those who were promoted at the beginning of the second quarter were: Elmer Curtis, jr., Ray Mawhiney, Eugene Cummings, Don Weir, Willard Curtis, Mary Frances Conwell, Dorothy Dries, Melba Sampson, Leo Binninger, Jack Schwartz, and Alice Garrett.

At the morning service on October 13, Edward Larsen outlined the proposed plan of supervision for the church school. There are to be three divisions: Children, young people, and adult. Each division will have a director. All activities are under the supervision of these directors and they, in turn will be responsible to the church school director, or Edward Larsen, all under the supervision of the pastor.

There were three classes at the six-thirty period Sunday evening, October 13: Junior, young people, and adult. There were four short reviews from various magazines given in the young people's class. They were: "Wanted: Ten Thousand Good Samaritans," an article from Reader's Digest reviewed by Aileen Schwartz. Also taken from Reader's Digest were, "Killer for the Saints," and "The Other Half of Helen Keller," reviewed by Victor Witte and Beulah Hare. "The Only Cure," taken from Magazine Digest, was reviewed by Fred Witte. The adult class devoted their time to the study of church history and the juniors had a recreation period.

At the regular Sunday evening service on October 13, Pastor Sneed was the speaker. Sister O. G. Helm sang a solo preceding the sermon. After the benediction by Brother E. H. Agin, the choir sang a response.

Teddy Agin, small son of Brother and Sister Agin who has been in the hospital for an operation of the leg, is now resting and improving at his home.

North East Church

Assistant Pastor E. W. Lloyd and his wife observed their golden wedding anniversary Sunday, October 21, at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Fred Lueking, 4925 Troostwood Road. They invited their friends to meet with them from two to six o'clock.

Bernard Zuber passed away recently after almost a year of intense suffering from a broken back. The large display of beautiful flowers and the attendance at his funeral evidenced the love and sympathy of many friends.

Elder J. C. Lentell is having good attendance and interest in his Sunday night services. Elder R. D. Weaver gave inspiring messages September 24 and October 14.

Malvern Hill Church

A renewal of interest in the activities of the adult department was evidenced at Malvern Hill, October 5, when the women met in the basement of the church under the leadership of Mrs. L. A. Miller, for a covered-dish luncheon.

During a short business session plans were made for a halloween party. Other activities were discussed, the making of some money to purchase equipment needed by junior and primary departments.

The women were happy to welcome as their guest Mrs. Naomi Turner, who for many years was associated with Malvern Hill group, but has been making her home for the past two years at Lebanon, Missouri.

This group met again October 12, to arrange the kitchen in the basement so that it may be used as a nursery.

Lamoni Stake

Organize for Successful Year

Activities in Lamoni Stake during the past month have been varied in nature.

J. Charles May closed a three weeks' series of meetings at Hiteman Sunday night, October 14.

Brother May, besides being able to deliver his message with conviction, has a musical ability which is a great asset in the devotional part of the service. With his guitar and vocal talent, he is able to make his service varied and interesting. While at Hiteman he made many friends among the young and older people. He gave a full program before the high school assembly.

E. Y. Hunker conducted a series of meetings at Chariton, which began October 7, and lasted one week.

Lamoni Branch is well started on her religious activities for the school year. Due to the opening of the college in the fall, reorganization of classes in the church school is necessary. This adjustment has been made, and classes are now functioning under the new organization.

Graceland, with an increased attendance, promises to have a very successful year. Plans for homecoming, October 26, 27, and 28 are formulated and arrangements are being made for a large crowd of alumni and friends.

The young people of the branch have been giving their talents and services in assisting in the devotional periods at church and church school at Lamoni and the surrounding branches.

The women's department are sponsoring a number of afternoon and evening classes which are open to the public. Among the subjects being presented are: "Marriage and the Home," "Child Training," "The Purpose and History of Lamoni," and other classes studying the church books.

Pastor Blair Jensen has been engaged in visiting the other branches of the stake, Hiteman and Chariton being the objectives.

Bishop J. F. Wildermuth spent two days with Creston Branch, working in line with his office. He expects to contact every branch in the stake within a short period of time.

President F. M. McDowell is at present in Lamoni, his time being employed in working with the priesthood.

Far West Stake

Stewartsville Branch

Activities in the branch are progressing with renewed interest since the reunion. The annual election of officers held September 27, resulted as follows: Pastor, Elder Z. J. Lewis; clerk, E. J. Armstrong; financial clerk, R. E. Powell; director of music, Leonard G. Ehlers and pianists, Mrs. Anna Powell and Miss Vernelle Powell; director of church school, J. L. Hidy; secretary, Miss Bernice Worden; junior department superintendent, Mrs. Pearl Vernon. Sunday, September 30, Promotion Day was observed and the teachers were chosen for the new year.

Mrs. Frances Mauzey was retained for the third year as leader of the women's activities. Miss Emma Lewis was chosen assistant. Brother and Sister McCord are again in charge of the teaching the Book of Mormon.

Some redecorating is being done at the church.

The Wednesday night prayer service has materially increased in attendance.

The young people have been working on the harvest festival music, under the direction of L. G. Ehlers. Quite a number participated in the concert in Independence on October 7.

Miss Madge Head is attending the State convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union at Cape Girardeau and visiting her brothers at Kennett, Missouri, and Saint Louis.

Saint Joseph Branch

The quarterly amalgamated sacrament service of the Saint Joseph Branch was held at the First Church, October 7. Attendance was quite good in spite of the fact that many families attended the harvest festival in Independence on that day. A good service was enjoyed with Elders H. C. Timm, O. Salisbury, and R. D. Peterson in charge. Elder Salisbury gave the theme talk.

Holden Stake

Attending Teachers' Institute

A large group of teachers and leaders of different groups in Holden Stake are attending the teachers and leaders institute of Zion. Atherton, Blue Springs, Grandview, Lees Summit all have been represented at the institute every night.

Atherton leads this attendance, with thirteen enrolled for credit, but about twenty, attending. Including the branches in Independence, Atherton ranks fourth in enrollment at the institute. Lees Summit is next, with eight enrolled for credit.

Rally at Warrensburg

Stake President Amos E. Allen and Elder Earl T. Higdon, director of religious education, conducted a series of rally services at Warrensburg last week.

Every night for five nights the services were carried on, with an average of about sixty people attending.

Monday night T. A. Beck, pastor of Englewood Branch in Independence, was the guest speaker, speaking on "If Ye Have Desires, Ye Are Called to the Work."

"The purpose of the rally series," said Brother Allen, "is to impress upon the people the value and necessity of maintaining constant and regular contact with the work of the church." He and Brother Higdon labored to develop a consciousness of the need of encouraging particularly the lukewarm, indifferent members of the church.

Preceding these services, which are to be conducted in several other groups soon, a priesthood institute was held and a vigorous campaign of visiting was made by the priesthood.

"The results of this campaign were evident," Brother Allen said, "in the attendance and expectant attitude of the people. They were attentive and appreciative all week."

Business Meeting at Blue Springs

Brother J. T. Smith was sustained as pastor of Blue Springs group at the business session September 9, conducted by the stake presidency. Gerald G. Phillips was made superintendent of church school; R. J. Stark, secretary; Ed Oglevie, treasurer; Bernice Oglevie, director of music; Anna Shippy, pianist.

At the sacrament service Brother and Sister Edwin Chappelow's baby was blessed, under the hands of Elders C. A. Joice and R. J. Stark. She was given the name, Mary Elizabeth. That evening Bishop J. A. Koehler preached on "The Truth Shall Make You Free."

The choir has been giving special numbers every Sunday morning, and sometimes again at the Sunday night service. Sunday night, September 16, a form of religio was started. The young people, C. A. Joice the director, are in charge of it as their project.

Doctor Charles Grabske was the speaker September 23, speaking on "Be Ye Pure." In the evening Pastor J. T. Smith preached on "Fulfillment of Prophecy."

Blue Springs priesthood were glad to be hosts to priesthood members from Atherton, Bates City, Lees Summit, Grandview, and Strasburg Mission at the priesthood institute September 24 to 28. On the evening of the twenty-seventh the women had a part, when the wives, mothers, and sweethearts of the ordained men met at the home of Gerald G. Philips and were spoken to by President F. M. McDowell. Afterwards they went to the hall where the men met, and refreshments were served to sixty women and fifty-eight men.

Special music, September 30, was provided by Alma Campbell, Alice Campbell, C. A. Joice and Bessie Joice. C. A. Joice was the speaker, with "The Church" as theme. The orchestra also provided special music, under the direction of Orlando Nace.

Unique Gathering at Atherton

Atherton young people had a unique gathering recently. They combined a prayer or fellowship meeting with a wiener roast, and all agreed that results were satisfactory.

On car cushions around a huge bonfire, the young people met with the pastor, J. A. Thomas, as leader of the fellowship service. One by one they offered a short prayer or testimony, and the meeting was fittingly closed by Brother Thomas. After a few games, the wieners and marshmallows were roasted.

A. M. Chase was the speaker at Atherton the morning of October 14. "We Cannot Redeem Zion Until We Can See It," was his subject. Sunday evening, October 14, Bishop J. A. Koehler preached on "Ye Must Worship in Spirit and in Truth."

Last Tuesday night the Atherton Choir resumed its activities under Sister Anna Lou Haus, director of music. Twenty-six young people and adults came together for the first rehearsal, and these will rehearse every Tuesday night; the orchestra practice is to be held on the same night, preceding the choir.

Vancleave, Mississippi

The Saints were happy to have Apostle M. A. McConley there from September 21 to 23. He gave splendid lectures on the Restoration. Brother McConley is stationed at Mobile, Alabama, and Vancleave Saints are expecting another visit in the near future.

They were also glad to have with them during this time as a visitor Elder Baldwin, of Pensacola, Florida.

Regular business meeting was held September 24, and the following officers were elected: President, Elder A. G. Miller; counselors, J. C. Yocum and Oscar Goff; treasurer, Howard E. Jennings; secretary, Mrs. John Barnes; publicity agent, Bessie Mae McMillian; auditors, Mrs. Carl Hawley, Verla Goff, and Oscar Goff; church school director, Howard E. Jennings; young people's supervisor, Verla Goff; librarian, Don Tanner; chorister, Howard E. Jennings, and organist, Mrs. Howard E. Jennings.

In the work of the church school the director, Howard E. Jennings is supported by a corps of faithful officers and teachers.

The women's department is headed by Mrs. Simon Rogers, and their aim is to raise money for improvements on the church. They expect to get sales for quilts soon.

The Oriole Girls are an active group in this branch. They held their first initiation ceremony September 29, an impressive program.

As a whole the branch has resolved to qualify for the upbuilding of Zion.

All-day Meeting at Limerick, Ohio

An all-day meeting will be held at Limerick Branch, Southern Ohio District, Sunday, October 28. This is one of the oldest branches in the district, and we would like a good representation present. The day's services will commence at 9 a. m., and we urge that an effort be made by those who come, to be on time. A basket lunch will be served at noon.—A. E. Anderton, district president.

Correction

An error crept into the report of Portland district conference, printed in the Herald of October 9, page 1300. Those ordained to the office of elder at the conference were: Willard Becker, Longview, Washington; Walter Webberly, Vancouver, Washington; Harry Howell, Hood River, Oregon, and Charles H. Asher, Salem, Oregon.

Minden City, Michigan, became the bride of Jack Hodson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hodson, of Detroit, September 12. The marriage took place at the home of the bride's parents, Elder Willard Parks, of Sandusky, officiating. A wedding dinner was served to the immediate relatives and a few friends. Mr. and Mrs. Hodson will live at Harbor Beach, Michigan, Mr. Hodson being a member of the federal coast guard stationed at that place.

GREGORY-BLAKELY.—A pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Gregory, August 23, when their daughter Hazel, was united in marriage to Kenneth L. Blakely, son of Elder and Mrs. J. M. Blakely, of Plano, Illinois. Elder J. M. Blakely, pastor of the church at Plano, and father of the bridegroom, officiated in the single ring ceremony in the presence of the immediate relatives; he was assisted by Elder Marion M. Blakely, brother of the bridegroom. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Roberta Gregory as bridesmaid, and the best man was the brother of the bride, Kenneth Gregory. Late that afternoon the Newlyweds left for a short wedding trip through Decatur, Bloomington and Lincoln, Illinois. They will make their home at Plano.

MACDOUGALL-DICKSON.—The home of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. McGregor, of Regina, Saskatchewan, was the scene of a pretty wedding, September 22, when Sadie Mabel, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. MacDougall, Langbank, became the bride of Loftus Howard Dickson, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Dickson, Weyburn, the Reverend W. E. MacNiven officiating. Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Dickson will make their home at 13 Linden Manor, Regina.

Conference Minutes

KENTUCKY-TENNESSEE.—District conference convened with Dickson Grove Branch, near Mansfield, Tennessee, September 8 and 9, District President C. B. Gallimore and his two counselors, D. R. Dortch and P. B. Bowlin, in charge. The first service was one of prayer at 10 a. m., Saturday; at 2 p. m., business session. By vote the district presidency presided over the conference and the district secretary, Mrs. Flossie Gallimore, was secretary of the conference. Brothers Porter, Gleave, and Johnnie Reynolds were chosen as the reception committee. Sister B. F. Ross assisted Sister Gallimore in taking the minutes. Minutes of the last conference were read and approved, and all reports including that of the bishop's agent, and statistical and ministerial reports were read and approved. Elder P. B. Bowlin asked to be released as one of the counselors of the district president. District officers were elected as follows: President, Elder C. B. Gallimore, who chose as counselors, Elders D. R. Dortch and B. F. Ross; secretary, Sister Flossie Gallimore; chorister, Elder D. R. Dortch; Elder C. L. Ross was chosen director of religious education. Sister Ruby Caldwell was chosen women's group leader. At 7:30 p. m., preaching was by Elder Fred Moser, junior. Sunday from 10 a. m. to 12 m., prayer and sacrament service was enjoyed with a wonderful outpouring of the Spirit. At 2:30 there were sermons by Elders O. S. Caldwell, C. B. Gillimore, and B. F. Ross; at 7:30 p. m., a sermon by D. R. Dortch. Paris Branch, 209 North Market Street, Paris, Tennessee, was chosen for the next conference, December 8 and 9.

WHEELING.—Conference of Wheeling District convened at 3 p. m., September 8, with Fairview Branch. In the absence of the secretary Sister Oma Montgomery was chosen as substitute. Apostle P. M. Hanson was chosen to preside and to be assisted by the district presidency. The usual reports relating to the work in the branches and district were received. The conference voted approval of the ordination of Robert E. Rodgers, of Wellsburg, to the office of elder. All district officers were reelected. In the evening Elder C. Ed. Miller, of Independence, gave one of his inimitable sermons. Sunday morning priesthood meeting gave opportunity to listen to Apostle P. M. Hanson, as he gave good counsel on a number of timely topics. W. A. Schoenian, district superintendent of church schools, was in charge of the Sunday session, assisted by John Treiber, of Wellsburg. The program rendered was very interesting and instructive. Sister Diora Lydick gave an excellent talk on marriage, and the paper on zionist homes by Sister Schoenian was a masterful presentation of the subject. The singing by Lela Dubois, Charles E. Dobbs, and Oma Montgomery added spiritual zest to the occasion. Elder C. Ed. Miller made a fine talk on the work of women in the church. At 11 a. m. Apostle Hanson preached a sermon abounding in timely instruction. In the afternoon prayer meeting Robert E. Rodgers was ordained an elder by Apostle Hanson, assisted by O. J. Tary. The charge to Brother Rodgers before the ordination was given by Elder J. E. Bishop. Elder E. B. Hull, pastor of Pittsburgh Branch and president of Pittsburgh District, was a conference visitor and assisted in the afternoon meeting. The closing service was in charge of Elder L. A. Serig, and the sermon by C. Ed. Miller.

Pigeonhole

■ Pigeon's Account of the Graceland Homecoming

Rode to Lamoni clinging desperately to the rattling left front fender of an old Ford, and arrived not too safely with feathers in marvelous disarray. Sight of the old tower of the Ad Building, home of my ancestors for generations, completely revived me.

Got in for part of the lantern slides at the afternoon assembly. Enjoyed it until they began to show pictures of my own time, and took Pigeonette and left, as I feared they might show some I wouldn't want her to see. She has enough on me now.

Sat in on the evening performance of "Streets of New York," a thundering fine old Boucicault (Pigeonette pronounced it bossy-cow!) mellerdrammer with a whiskered villain, an adorable villainess, two perfectly stainless heroes and a wanly beautiful heroine. Herewith express my admiration of Mr. Faunce for his fine direction of the play.

Crawled out late and stiff Saturday morning in time for the open house at Walker Hall and inspected the girls' rooms, which were dainty as handkerchief boxes and decorated in regular color schemes. One girl had so many toy dogs and elephants I would call her room the Animal Kingdom. Walker Hall is a students' paradise.

Home with Brother and Sister Mac to a fine rib-stretching dinner and was charmed to hear Charlene Allen tell her gay lisp story with its refrain, "I wath thö mad, I wath thö mad!"

Flew over north park Saturday afternoon in a whistling wind where the Graceland boys snatched a touchdown away from plodding Ellsworth College. A plucky team of good sports, if there ever was one! A big huzzah for Coach Gilbert.

Clung to the tablecloth at the Alumni banquet, deliriously happy to see and hear from so many old friends. Sent Pigeonette home to bed exhausted, and attended the R.13 meeting at home of genial Joe Anthony and wife, where the boys amused themselves trading swats with the leather paddle. These lads have tough hides.

Sunday morning prayer meeting in the old Chapel the finest thing of all, then went to hear Bishop Curry deliver an excellent address, and after dinner home tired but very happy.

■ Crime

An inhabitant of the U. S. is murdered every 45 minutes. Last year the United States homicide rate was 10.7 per 100,000 highest in the civilized world. England's is 0.5.

The nation's crime bill is estimated at $13,000,000,000 a year.

Some 140,000 Americans are in prison, some 400,000 regularly engaged in criminal activities.

Despite these things, there is no crime wave. In fact the crime rate has been falling, and the rising hue and cry against crime can be accounted for by the fact that the two crimes most characteristic of the New Deal are the two which write the biggest headlines: bank robbery and kidnapping.—From Readers Digest, October 1934.

Fools make a mock at sin: but among the righteous there is favor.—Proverbs 14: 9.

The Women's Work

We are very glad to present in this issue an article of importance to the women, especially to those interested in the organization and activities connected with church work. Sister Grace L. Krahl, who had been one of the very devoted workers in women's activities in Independence, has written two fine articles on "Friendly Visiting," a work that has been carried out in Independence with good results. These articles are inspirational in themselves and should encourage women elsewhere to work for similar ends wherever conditions warrant. This type of work has the approval of the officers of the church and women everywhere may regard it as an approved type of activity.

In the near future, we hope to be able to present articles on other phases of women's work. We have been promised contributions by a number of leading women whose efforts should do much to stimulate a period of rebirth of women's work in the church.

Certainly the church is conscious of its great debt to the devoted women who have done so much in both service and sacrifice to make its work possible. The future promises that the sphere and influence of women's activities will be greater rather than less.

There is no foundation in fact for the idea that there should be any competition or opposition between men and women in their church work. Church work is not the scene for such a clash. Rather it is the proper field of action for the finest cooperation that can be planned between them. Certain things the women can do that the men cannot. Certain things the men can do that the women cannot. Both must be respected and honored in what they do. The contribution of both is necessary if the church work is to go on.

Sister Krahl's two articles will offer valuable hints as to some of the things that can be done. Other articles will be presented giving other suggestions. There is plenty of room for all to work who desire to make a contribution to the church.

Blue Pencil Notes

DEACON GOODENTART says that as we grow older some of us get wise and bald, and some of us just get bald.

THE ENGINEER of the Union Pacific streamline train brought it into New York after a record run from Los Angeles. As he faced the newsreel cameras he collapsed. Probably this happened just before he had time to reach for the cigarette that according to all current advertisements is a savior at such a crisis, instantly restoring spent vitality. One good puff should have put him right. As it is, some promising publicity matter is ruined. It was a sad mistake to keep a man at the throttle more than fifty-six hours traveling at terrific speed. It is a criminal mistake to teach young people that they can go the pace without regard, and depend on cigarettes to pull them through.

IN YEARS gone by there lived near Lone Rock, Mo., a colored man who was a respected citizen and an honored member of the church. In fact he was a charter member of the Lone Rock branch. This man had been a slave; but he had a master who gave him a chance for freedom. The master gave him time between the hours of six o'clock at night and four o'clock in the morning. During those hours this man took time from sleep to work for wages until he had purchased his own freedom—it took him fourteen years. Then he spent three years earning the freedom of his wife. He moved to the vicinity of Lone Rock and became a successful farmer and a good citizen.

AND YET at a time when the grandfather of our missionary, L. G. Holloway, was doing his fall threshing, at the dinner hour, when the neighbors who were helping came to the table, one white farmer refused to sit at the table to eat with this free colored man. The host in turn refused to order the colored man from the table, but the colored man quietly withdrew rather than to cause contention. He waited until the other men had eaten, and then the women of the party, who had served the meal, insisted that he eat with them. After all, it was the colored man and not the white man who was a gentleman. It was the colored man who retained his own dignity and self-respect and the respect of the community rather than the white man who was so careful of his own dignity.

THE LITERARY DIGEST reports a very interesting scientific experiment. Scientists of the University of Czecho Slovakia at Prague transformed light rays from the moon and from the star Vega into sound waves and broadcasted them by radio. The report says: "The sound made by the moon's rays was said to resemble tolling of large bells; that of Vega the subdued but high-pitched shouting of a vast crowd."—Literary Digest, October 20, 1934.

THE BIBLE STUDENT is reminded by the foregoing of the statement in Job 38:7 that when God laid the foundations of the earth, "The morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy." The stars still sing together. As their light pours out through space it declares the glory of God. The moon's rays transmitted into sound "resemble the tolling of great bells," the rays from the star Vega resemble "the subdued but high-pitched shouting of a vast crowd." Truly did David say that "the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork."

WE ARE also reminded of the Doctrine and Covenants statement that "the Glory of God is Intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth." (Doctrine and Covenants 90:6.) and the other statements that God is in the light of the sun and the moon and the stars, which light fills the immensity of space and quickens our intelligence (Doctrine and Covenants 85:2, 3.) Light speaks to us through both eye and ear. It may be transformed into sound and be heard by the ear as well as seen by the eye. Those attuned to its message find therein a revelation of God.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Do You Remember David H. Smith?

As time passes and one by one those who remember young David (beauty-loving brother of the late Joseph Smith) pass to the great beyond with their lore of memories, we are reminded that much that is precious will soon be forever lost unless this hoard of memories is gathered together and left for the benefit of future generations. Ask your parents, your grandparents, the old people of your branch, if they remember David H. Smith. Perhaps he cut shelf paper for your grandmother—a row of birds winging their way across the pantry shelf—all by a few deft clips of the scissors. Or perhaps he drew a picture with pen or pencil in the front of your mother's Bible or Book of Mormon. Nothing is too trivial. Let us have them all until we can picture to our present generation the loved young minister as he was known to the early Reorganization.

A Worker for the Church

F. O. DAVIES

Brother Davies has been in the British Isles Mission for some years. A recent article described his experiences in Ireland, where he met with success in his work, in company with Brother T. Taylor, of Leeds.

His mother said he was like Jack Frost, that "upon whatever he touched he left a flower." Let us hear the little things that truly portray the character of that sensitive lover of happiness and beauty, who found the great hatreds and petty meannesses of the world intolerable. Remember, nothing is trivial in a real biography. Collect these memories. Send them to Elbert A. Smith, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, or to Inez Smith Davis, 5811 Fourth Avenue, Detroit, Michigan. Letters or copies of letters written by him are particularly valuable; if you have such please send them in.

INEZ SMITH DAVIS.

Good News From Burlington, Iowa

Under date of October 23 Brother Richard Baldwin wrote from Burlington, Iowa, stating that he was just starting on another week's meetings, continuing the meetings begun Sept. 30. His audience had increased from sixty-two to a hundred and fifty; and sixteen had been baptized. By these baptisms four families were united in the church, and another entire family of four came in. They are fine people and will be a great addition to the working force of the branch.

The Church Has a Program for Priesthood

This Program Provides—

Here is represented our most vital need. The general church has taken the lead, but a program on paper is of little value. What is your branch, your district, your stake doing about it?

Our Task Requires a Priesthood:

Spiritually Alert
Divinely Endowed Efficiently Trained Diligently at Work

I

THAT young men shall be sought out, trained for, and enlisted in the work of the church as potential material for the priesthood.

and divine import of his claim to be a personal and authoritative representative of God on earth among men.

II

THAT calls to the priesthood shall at all times be carefully safeguarded by strict adherence to the laws and procedure of the church governing in such matters.

VI

THAT individually and collectively the ministry of the church be led to enter upon an intensive and systematic program of spiritual discipline to the end that the barriers that separate them from God shall be removed the illumination and power of the endowment may become a reality, and priesthood, so-called, become priesthood in fact.

III

THAT all ordination services shall be prepared for and conducted with a concern and reverence worthy of the affairs of God.

VII

THAT individually and collectively the ministry of the church enter upon an intensive program of study and training to the end that their ministry might become increasingly more orderly, dignified and effectual.

IV

THAT the standards for the selection and continued licensing of men of the priesthood, as provided in the law and interpreted by the church, shall be clearly set forth, continually taught, and rigidly adhered to.

VIII

THAT administrative officers in stakes, districts and branches shall organize and provide sustained and consistent supervision of members of the priesthood under their direction so that every worthy and qualified man shall be found diligently at work in the affairs of the kingdom.

Zion Builders All Report

The Zion Builders All organization, of Berkeley, California, feel that they have been progressing. The beautiful candle-light formal initiation service, added nine more young people to their membership list.

A banquet was held for Z. B. A. members only. The theme was, "The Garden of God," and the decorations and entertainment were centered on the same idea. An installation service, installing all new officers, was held toward the end of the evening. Miss Bernice Bonham, was installed president.

Tuesday night classes are being held in preparation for the Fair, to be given in December. Classes in leather work, manual training, sewing, etc., are making many attractive things to sell. This Fair is to be given by the young people exclusively.

The young people have enjoyed many hikes and parties. They enjoy the warm friendship that exists between them, and like to play as well as work together.

Their early-morning prayer meetings have been inspiring to all who attend. The young people have been taking an active part in prayer and testimony and their services are progressing.—By May-day Presley, secretary.

Dividing the Dollar

If business today tried as hard to give people money to spend as it does to make people want things they cannot pay for, we should be out of the woods. In American industry 72 percent of the cost of an article to the consumer arises from advertising, salesmanship, installment purchases, and the cost of continually changing models to stimulate demand. If 100 people stood in line, representing the population of America, and you were to distribute $100 among them (representing all the wealth of America) as we distribute it today in our unplanned economy, you would give the first man $59, the next man $9, the next twenty-two men $1.17 each, the next sixty-eight 25 cents each, and the last ten, 1 cent each.—Beverly L. Oaten in The Pilgrim Highroad, November, 1934.

Give a man this taste (for good books), and the means of gratifying it, and you can hardly fail of making a happy man. You place him in contact with the best society in every period of history—with the wisest, the wittiest, the tenderest, the bravest, and the purest characters who have adorned humanity. You make him a denizen of all nations, a contemporary of all ages.—Sir John Herschel.

Zion's Christian Legion

The Legion in Canada

THE ORGANIZATION in Owen Sound District is going forward with rapidity. Alex Cadwell is the divisional commander and is doing an excellent piece of work as well as his divisional staff.

PERMISSION of the district conference of Toronto to organize under the Legion the young people in every branch where such an organization is desired was another forward move. Brother Eldon Oliver of Hamilton was elected divisional commander with a splendid staff of helpers which promises success for the future.

THE DISTRICT CONFERENCE of Chatham district made provision at its meeting on October 6 and 7, to get the young people together in convention to complete the organization of the district.

THE LONDON DISTRICT long since has been organized under the divisional directorship of Brother Percy Farrow. We are looking forward to the achievement of some big things in this splendid district. With 5,000 church members in Ontario we are looking forward to having much help when all these are enlisted in the Legion.

The Legion in Michigan

THE LANSING ORGANIZATION has been outstanding in its achievements. With the splendid cooperation of their branch president, John Luce, the Legionaries took over the Sunday evening services, which has ever been a problem when it comes to attendance, and put on playlets which were distinctly L. D. S. in character. The attendance promptly increased until the church was packed. They, too, have the art of raising money, and last month forwarded to the bishop the sum of sixty-eight dollars.

THE WESTERN MICHIGAN ORGANIZATION are contributing generously and they sent in thirty-five dollars. With contribution such as these and more coming in from various parts of Canada, all are encouraged in seeing the Auditorium debt lifted.

EAST CHURCH, Detroit, is holding a rally and banquet, October 20 and 21. Plans are well in hand to make this an outstanding event.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA DISTRICT is holding a convention at Coldwater, Michigan, November 3 and 4.

ALL ARE looking forward to the big annual convention next June which comes at the end of Martyrdom week which is to be held in commemoration of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

THE MICHIGAN CHOIR MOVEMENT is working with the Legion and where you find one, you find another. The eyes of the youth and the aged are looking forward and these Legionaries are determined to free the church of debt. Are we with them in such a worthy undertaking.

LOUISE EVANS.

Whistling the Fourth Commandment

"An itinerant musician was stranded in a village one Sunday morning and as he was playing his cornet in the street, he was approached by a clergyman of the parish who said, 'Do you know the Fourth Commandment, my good man?'" "No," the man replied, "but if you whistle it over I'll do my best."

There are many people in the world just like the itinerant musician. They do not even know what any of the commandments are, and it is little wonder that they do not know but that the Fourth Commandment may be a song.

"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," is the Fourth Commandment.

If everyone who does know what it is would just "whistle it over" by practicing it, maybe those who have not heard of it would catch the notes and "do their best" to play it.

Almost everyone in the world finds some time to read some kind of literature, books, etc., yet, it is surprising how many do not know the commandments. The books they read are not the books of the church but rather books that have no connection with the building up of the kingdom of God.

Zion must be established, but it cannot be established as long as there are so many people who do not even know the commandments.

As knowledge without justice ought to be called cunning rather than wisdom, so a mind prepared to meet danger, if excited by its own eagerness and not the public good, deserves the name of audacity rather than courage.—Plato.

Fourteen to Eighty-four

By Ward A. Hougas

President of Far West Stake

YEARS? No. Globe trotters? Guess again. Just the story of the growth of a Wednesday night prayer service in what might be termed an average Latter Day Saint church—simply the story of the growth and development of this phase of activities in a congregation where the habit of prayer meeting attendance had dwindled to the faithful few who in many cases were very few. At times, the attendance stood at fourteen; at times it stood at six, but when the high check of twenty was first reached it seemed certain that great achievements had been accomplished. Best of all is the fact that no spectacular methods were used and no high pressure tactics employed.

It was a subject of much discussion from time to time as the pastor and his two associates talked of the problem from every known angle only to come back to the starting point in a search for some method, mystical or otherwise, by which the magic wand might be wafted over First Saint Joseph Church in a manner which would start an entire membership back to prayer service.

The first major move in the solution of the task was the assignment of the responsibility of this service to the senior counselor, Elder Howard C. Timm. Then came a general consultation with the local priesthood, the active members of which just about made a good baker's dozen. Here was where the first signs of improvement began to appear. With these men pledged to the gigantic task before them, definite plans began to take shape. Each active member of the priesthood was given a list of families and it immediately became his duty to contact each of these families by phone or otherwise sometime during the day, Wednesday, inviting them to the prayer service to be held at the church that night. This started things to rolling. People who had not attended prayer service for years began to respond and get on the job. Each Wednesday night new faces were seen among the congregation. New voices were heard in the testimony service and a new enthusiasm became manifested which had its effect. Attendance rose to thirty, then forty, and when the half hundred mark was struck there was much rejoicing in officialdom. However, the movement was started and was not to be stopped at fifty. It continued to climb until at the present time it is crowding the ninety mark with all indications that within a few weeks the average will be reaching out above the century point. Of course, not only has there been an increase numerically in the attendance at this service but there has also been an increase in every line of activity. Oftentimes now it is not the problem of coaxing someone to "occupy," it is a question of finding an opportunity to "occupy." People look forward to the Wednesday prayer service with even more anticipation than they do to the Sunday services. Late workers hurry home that they may be there when the meeting opens at seven-thirty. Social engagements are canceled and Wednesday night at First Church has truly become a church night.

Nor does this service minister to a particular group and age. One meeting would convince any on-looker that it is no more an old folks meeting than it is a young folks meeting but that together it is a meeting of the Saints of God.

Much time and attention is being given the service by those in charge that the theme, talks, music and all the various features that make a prayer service what it should be are well cared for. Under this able direction and leadership the Saints are responding to their desire for worship and are responding on a high intellectual plane. But the prayer service is not the only service that has improved. Attendance at other services has not been marked by any great numerical increase but the activities of the

Church-wide Children's "Friendship Circle"

A Project for the Children's Division

By Mildred Goodfellow, Associate Director

The third step in the project is executing or carrying it out. The project will be more enjoyable and worth while if at least three sessions are used to complete it. At the first session you will probably get no further than deciding to take part in the project, although there may be time to plan some of the details. At the second session, the plans may be completed; pictures assembled, or the teacher may take kodak pictures of the children if the meeting is held in the daytime. By the time the third session is held, the leader or teacher will have received names and addresses, and some time will be spent enjoying pictures and learning interesting things about the land where their letters will be sent. In cases where the letters have to be mailed by the middle of November, it will be necessary to write them at this session. In other cases there will be time enough to hold a fourth session, at which the letters may be completed.

As to the contents of the letter, the children need only to think what they would enjoy reading in a letter, and then write it in a happy fashion. Where possible, the children should do the writing, but where the children are small, the teacher may do the actual writing, letting the children dictate it. Of course, they will wish to invite the children to answer their letters.

If there is sufficient time in the church school session on Sunday morning, the letters may be written then. If not, they may be written at a meeting or meetings of the junior stewardship club, or a special meeting arranged for during the week. If sessions can be arranged for during the week, the children may play games which the children play in the land where their letters are going, and refreshments may be served, consisting, if possible, of food which is raised in that land, or similar to food enjoyed by people in that land. Even though the games and food may be the same as some enjoyed by our children from time to time, it will add interest to know that they are also enjoyed by other people.

Do not let the matter drop with the mailing of the letters. The children may collect pictures and objects of interest, and may make posters and scrap-books that may be kept and appreciated for some time to come.

The fourth and last step—judging—cannot be completed, of course, until the children receive answers to their letters, but they may discuss whether they enjoyed writing the letters; whether they worked together in a Christian way, and give their ideas as to how the letters were received by the children far away.

The Women's Work

Friendly Visiting

Part One

By Grace L. Krahl

(Editor's Note: The author is well known to Herald readers as a writer of considerable talent. Perhaps it is not so well known that since the death of her husband, D. J. Krahl a missionary for the church, she has devoted the years of her residence in Independence to good works of all kinds in behalf of the church. . . . This article is the result of her experience. It is presented by permission of President Smith in the interest of the women's work, and with the approval of Sister Pauline James Arson, committee woman in charge pro tem. The second article on this subject will be presented soon.)

FRIENDLY visiting is recognized as one of the finest forms of Christian service in which women can engage. It makes possible a better and wider acquaintance; it is an outlet for the springs of sympathy and compassion, and affords a most practical opportunity for growth in ability and fitness for this kind of service. We believe a corps of friendly visitors would be an asset to any branch wherever wise direction is available. The type of friendly visiting meant is, of course, that which has for its purpose the promotion of good will, establishing new relations with fellow members, broadening experience, deepening sympathy and bridging the gaps that always exist wherever there is an aggregation of people—even of Saints.

Friendly visiting has possibilities for valuable helpfulness, at the same time it has liabilities of misjudgment and indiscretion. Therefore some preparation should be made and responsibility assumed if the most satisfactory results are to be obtained.

It is a little difficult to keep in mind the smaller membership of some branches and their preference, perhaps, for a different plan than that used in Independence where with large numbers we have adopted system, report on specially prepared blank forms, and provide a monthly meeting for forty friendly visitors and their assistants. However, it seems to me that anything we do, in whatever line of effort, is best done by a system. I am sure we could not have obtained the results we have gained at the center place but for an orderly way of setting about the task. So it would first appear that in branches located in large cities where members are scattered over a wide area it would be well to apportion the territory and its respective membership to the number of friendly visitors serving.

The best equipped person should be in charge of all the work, and should be the one consulted when problems arise where advice and counsel are needed.

She might be called the Official Friendly Visitor because she is appointed by the department and the approval of the branch officers. Her assistants, or understudies as it were, should be suggested by her and appointed in the same manner as herself. A report to the pastor once a month giving a resumé of the work done ought to be a help to him in knowing more fully the conditions of his branch.

From these suggestions on system, any adaptation that is desirable could be made or other ideas not mentioned here, but contributing to a plan, could be adopted.

In this article the subject proper will be treated in two parts: Part One discussing the spiritual aspects of friendly visiting and Part Two the temporal aspects.

THE SPIRITUAL ASPECTS

First of all we may say that friendly visiting is the second great commandment of Jesus, in action. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Heart hunger, loneliness, dejection, unbelief, distrust and ill-will are states of mind that present as great an appeal for help as the entreaty of a hungry man for bread and meat, and may be appeased, mitigated or overcome by those who through love and sympathy have the tact to console and mend human lives.

There are also the sick and the afflicted, the aged, the shut-ins, the invalids and new members all of whom have a claim upon someone who can dispense cheer, comfort, hope and enlightenment. The friendly visitor is that one. She is that one because of regular visits to those homes and her intimate acquaintance with their members. She knows and understands. The occasional caller does have a place in uplifting these dependent ones but not like the one whom the sick and lonely know will come.

The thought that someone looks and waits for your coming who needs the influence of your personality, that intangible something to which Jesus referred, when the woman of faith touched the hem of his garment and he said, "I perceive that virtue hath gone out of me" should be an inspiration to give liberally to those who, in their various life situations must draw upon the spiritual bounty of someone else for comfort and encouragement. Jesus said: "Bear ye one another's burdens."

Happy in Growth of Church Work

By Gomer T. Griffiths

It is said by many of the old residents that this town was named after old Nauvoo. Some of the members of the church moved here subsequent to the downfall of the church there.

Kirtland reunion kept up its good reputation for its spirituality from beginning to end. There were many people present from east, west, north, and south, from a long distance, and they all enjoyed themselves. The spirit of sociability predominated, and all seemed glad to be given the privilege to greet each other. It was surprising in view of the economic conditions existing in the world that so many attended the reunion. But I am certain from the conversations I heard that no one regretted the money and time spent to be present. The social meetings were of a high order, and will not soon be forgotten by those who were in attendance. The preaching was edifying and uplifting. The young people cooperated with the older ones in nearly all of the services. It was gratifying to hear so many young people testifying to the blessings that God had bestowed upon them, and to hear them express a desire to continue in God's service, and be of use in his church in days to come.

The different classes were well attended. Apostle Myron A. McConley and his bride were present and participated in the activities of the reunion. She taught a class each week-day morning on church school organization and administration and one in the afternoon on problems in the home. Brother McConley acquitted himself in a masterly way and the people were impressed with his preaching and teaching.

I have attended many reunions in Kirtland and I decided that this was one of the best in all respects. All that I came in contact with were cheerful and exceedingly glad that they had been privileged to visit historical Kirtland and the grand old temple of God.

Since reunion I have been traveling and preaching in answer to invitations from many branch and district presidents, and have never felt more blessed by the Lord in my efforts to encourage and to build up the Saints.

The two-day meeting held at Creola, Ohio, September 8 and 9, was a success in point of numbers that gathered there and the outpouring of the Spirit which the Saints enjoyed. I was glad to be present as I was instrumental in the hands of God in organizing that branch some forty-two or forty-three years ago. Brother A. B. Kirkendall and wife reside there. Both are influential among the people of that locality and for miles around in every direction.

Our hearts were made sad to learn of the demise of our Brother Fry who was well known in all that country, having been a school teacher and mail carrier. He had been a faithful worker in the branch, and is missed especially by those of the Sunday school, for he had been a superintendent and teacher in the school for many years. He was a great support to Brother Kirkendall, president of the branch. Changes have, of course, taken place in the branch personnel in the last forty-three years; the older ones have nearly all passed over the great divide, and many of the younger people of those days are now grandmothers and grandfathers. Brethren Anderton, French, Gray, Matthews, John Grice, and many of the local ministry were present and took active part in the services.

I arrived in the part of the vineyard around Nauvoo two weeks since and have been dividing my labor among three branches, preaching every night and talking three or four times on Sundays. These three branches are located in a triangle form from eight to nine miles apart—one here at Nauvoo, another at McDermott, and another known as the Pleasant Valley Branch. The attendance at the meetings has been extraordinary.

Pleasant Valley Branch had its annual homecoming Sunday, September 23, and it was surprising to see the number of men and women present. They have a commodious building. I organized this branch over twenty-five years ago. The Saints have scattered from there all over this part of the country. Brother Francis May has been their pastor for the past fourteen months. He has been instrumental in building up the branch in a most remarkable way, and is held in high esteem by Saints and nonmembers.

There were three Baptist preachers present all day, at the social service as well as the preaching. The oldest of the three congratulated the writer, and said he was glad to have been present to hear the sermons, and he bade me Godspeed. One other said the Latter Day Saint doctrine was good, but he could not see the necessity of the Book of Mormon. A wonderful degree of the Spirit was manifested in the social service and it was evident that these preachers were touched by the divine Spirit. We were sure of one thing, that all of the Saints were blessed, judging by the number of testimonies borne and the spiritual hymns sung.

Brother May and his companion are of great assistance to the work in this place and she is dearly beloved by all. This brother is a capable minister, a student, and what I consider a good, humble preacher of the gospel. The people for miles around enjoy his preaching. What a wonderful blessing it would be to the church if we had men of his capabilities presiding over those small branches that are to be found here and there almost dying out for the want of such leadership. Brother May is assisted by Priests William Luther Altman and Orville Altman, one teacher, Brother Charles Altman, and three deacons, William Crabtree, James E. Altman, and James F. Crabtree.

At McDermott, Ohio, where I have preached a number of times since coming down here, Brother Thomas Crabtree presides over the branch which is located about six miles from Pleasant Valley Branch. He is ably assisted by such capable ministers as Richard Shope, Edward Wiget, and George Carpenter. The attendance here was good and the prospects for the future are very bright. I organized this branch a few years subsequent to the Pleasant Valley organization. I have been amazed at the growth of the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard within the last ten or fifteen years.

The branch here at Nauvoo is presided over by Elder O. A. Rexroad. At present they are erecting a new church building. The basement is about ready for them to move into. It is wonderful how they have progressed in view of the conditions that obtain since the depression has come upon the people. There are about sixty-five members here, some of whom live across the Scioto River in Portsmouth, Ohio. Brother Rexroad is an able minister and is supported by Emory Williams, Walter Culp, Luther Crabtree, Donald Bealor, Charles Monroe, and J. A. Chaffin, of the local priesthood. If these brethren will continue to work together in love and in honor preferring one another, there will be a great ingathering of honest souls into this branch in the near future. A number here are investigating our doctrine and some of them, I am sure, will unite soon.

Since being at these three branches, I have blessed forty-six people, Sister Julia Davis, of Middletown, Ohio, acting as recorder during a visit with her parents near Pleasant Valley Branch.

So we are pleased to write that the work of the Lord is moving forward, and will continue to grow and develop in point of numbers, power, and prestige, if the officers, God's shepherds, will only be faithful in the performance of the work assigned them by their heavenly Master. It is with regret that I am under the necessity of writing to the effect that many, many of God's shepherds in the church are not caring for the sheep and the lambs who are under their care, as God would have them. I have discovered that what we need mostly in many of our branches is executive men. It is to be hoped that the day is not far distant when this need shall be supplied. It is gratifying to know that Brother McDowell and others of the

Paulina Wili

WHILE Herman was working there, Paulina lived at Cedar City, and knowing his youth and his love for his own people, she sensed his loneliness and sought to cheer him with a visit. A stranger was hauling some freight to the vicinity of the Lee ranch and Paulina got permission to ride with him. "All went well in spite of the fact that Indians roamed the prairies, until they came to the parting of their ways. Paulina had to walk a distance of three miles alone. It was getting dark but she went bravely on. Finally she got to some corals where she had to climb some fences and cross ditches. Tired and discouraged, she walked up to a little shed that had an open window. She heard a sound inside and called out "Who is it?" To her delight Herman came rushing out. The shed was his bunk house. Mr. Lee was very gracious to Paulina and she stayed three weeks, visiting with Herman, knitting stockings for the Lee's and helping where she could. She slept in the hay loft but that was of small moment to one who had endured the hardships of traveling across the plains in an ox cart. Later her husband came with a borrowed wagon and took her home." A few weeks afterwards they moved on to Santa Clara. The first year that Herman worked for John D. Lee, he received for his pay: one horse, one cow and one sheep, and the second year he got a "fine mare and another cow."

During these thrilling times among the young people in America, things were going badly in Switzerland. Father Bosshard had been in ill health for some time. An infection in one leg caused such distress that he was unable to continue hard work and his financial losses began to tax his resources. He was lonely for his children in America and wanted to see his family together again, so when the doctor advised a sea voyage he was glad to sell out to his brother, and plan with Catherina and the children at home for a trip across the sea to the New World. Reduced in finances, broken in health and spirits, he readily accepted the offer of the church to finance the trip to Utah. He then settled up his affairs, a few possessions were packed for shipping, foods were dried and made ready for the long ocean crossing, and the hopeful little group set forth.

AT LIVERPOOL they were constantly warned to beware of vicious characters who preyed on inexperienced travelers. It seemed that in one racket, a mirror was placed before the face of the unwary, so confusing him that he could be led in a wrong direction, then robbed and often murdered. Warned of these conditions, the Bosshard family got on board safely and sailed in December, 1863. The satisfaction of finding themselves safely on board ship received a sad check when they saw the steerage quarters in which they were expected to voyage. Catherina Bosshard was a woman of high courage and gentility, brought up in an atmosphere of refinement. Her heart sank and a feeling of hopelessness surged through her as she and her husband led the children down the narrow stairway into the unwholesome steerage. Recognizing the evident refinement of Mother Bosshard, and the unsuitable surroundings of the steerage, the captain arranged for better accommodations. On this memorable trip, the family had some interesting experiences and some that were not pleasant. The account relates that Mother Bosshard took sacks of dried bread and dried fruits, otherwise the family would have gone hungry. Something warm was given them every three days. There were about 1,500 people on this vessel and here Catherina saw a patch work quilt for the first time and the family had their first experience with lice. Sometime during this voyage, Mother Bosshard had a dream or vision in which Mr. Wili, her son-in-law, appeared to her and she felt impressed that he had passed away. When she reached Utah, this was found to be true.

THE FAMILY arrived in America after having spent forty-two days on the water. Coming out of the quiet, well ordered town in Switzerland, these innocent, sweet minded people found the entire trip amazing and epochal. The Civil War was in progress in America and the journey was punctuated by the exciting and trying events incident to war. Bridges destroyed in warfare had to be rebuilt; tracks torn up had to be relaid before the anxious travelers could proceed, and there was a multitude of harrowing possibilities to keep the members of the little party tense and nervous.

Leaving the railroad train at Omaha, the family was soon deep in the business of making ready for the long journey by ox carts across the plains to Utah. A little city of tents had sprung up and all was hurry and preparation for the start. The Bosshard family, especially the young people and children, were greatly impressed by one incident. Wagons were packed and all was in readiness to start—the train leader was ready to give the signal to move—but in the last tent a young girl lay dying. One can all but visualize the scene, feel the tenseness, the pain and dread of the moment, see the yawning grave, sense the distress of the loved ones of that dying girl, and the fear that the leader would grow impatient and give the word that would start the long train moving and leave her to die alone. Mercifully, the spirit departed and as she breathed her last, the frail body was wrapped in a buffalo skin and lowered into the waiting grave. The grave was hastily filled with earth, the captain gave the order to start, and the long train of covered wagons moved slowly away and out of sight. The name of the girl was so unusual that it was remembered throughout the years. It was Ziselli Crappser.

Not far from Omaha the train passed a small town that had recently been attacked by Indians. The men—thirty-five in number—had been killed and scalped and the bodies left where they had been cut down. The women and children had been taken captive to the mountains and the record does not state what was the final fate of these unfortunates. The bodies of the men were buried by the men of the wagon train. The charred remains of another village which they passed through, were made more gruesome by the bodies of fifteen Indians which hung from the seared trees of the place. All the inhabitants had been taken captive, but the soldiers had captured fifteen of the band of Indians and hung them as a warning to others.

AS THE WAGON TRAIN wound farther into the wilderness, water became scarce and very unwholesome. In the wagon behind which the Bosshard group rode, a family of eight died of dysentery—presumably from the effects of the impure water. Father, mother and six children found lonely graves by the trail, and there remained but one small boy who was taken care of by someone of the train.

The fear of Indians was ever present with those stubborn, forward moving trains. A keen watch was kept for signs, and ears were on the alert for the blood-freezing cry, "Indians!" One day, three Red Skins came riding up, then others—by ones and twos—until seventeen were riding along beside the wagon train. They continued to ride silently along until time to make camp and great alarm was felt by the people. However they proved to be friendly Indians who had elected to act as guards against another tribe which was on the warpath.

In time, the long, wearisome journey was ended and the Bosshard family was reunited in Santa Clara. After the wearying months of anxiety, dangers, and often actual suffering of the travelers, the joy of reunion can, in a measure, be realized. Quoting the record: "The little settlement had grown to about two hundred people, who lived in fairly decent log houses. Crops were coming on, some cattle were raised and things seemed prosperous—even if a piece of money was seldom seen. People were kept in supplies by a means of exchanging commodities. With life still in the rough, sometimes many difficulties were encountered. If chickens were laying well, some eggs could be exchanged for some lard or flour. Many times there was nothing to exchange and whole families lived on greens, or, in fruit season, on a kind of peach sauce. But again, when a hog was slaughtered, there would be cooking and baking for days, and then a wild orgy of eating." Rooted deep in the land of their nativity, these home loving people sought to continue the habits and customs of life there, in this way keeping something of the loved little land with them. It could scarcely be otherwise, at least during the first generation. Eight Swiss families were closely bound together by the common nationality, by the dangers and hardships of the times, and by the bonds of their faith. "One man always had onions and his daughter was called, "Onion Man's daughter, Catherine." (Bolamas Katter.) A woman whose name was Mrs. Duke, was always called "The Dutchess." Many chuckles were gotten out of such little things. Everybody was poor and one dress or suit of clothes had to go a long way. Years afterwards, a man of this community, who later went to California and became very wealthy, often said that those were the happiest days of his life. In spite of hardships, the little band were as one family and lived in love and unity. "Through it all, a fine courage, dauntless spirit, and cheerful outlook sustained and made life tolerable, and even challenging." It is said of them, "Nothing could daunt their courage nor subdue their merry spirits." "Here Mother Bosshard proved her ability and leadership. Having musical and dramatic ability, and the zeal to put them to use, she planned many lively entertainments. She wrote amusing little plays in Swiss and German, and the members of her family and her friends gladly entered into the pastime. Soon these entertainments became very popular and were eagerly looked forward to by the members of the whole community. All the Bosshards could yodel as well as sing, and became most expert.

While the pioneers were courageously meeting the demands of this strenuous time and using their talents and ability for the benefit of the group, the hopes and faith in the church for which they had endured so much, were being slowly shattered. Belief in the restored gospel was sure and firm, but certain practices of the church, promises of the missionaries relating to an ideal society—and which seemed but a dream, as well as doctrines distasteful to these true hearted people, made for a consciousness of loss, of dissatisfaction and a fixed discontent. Nothing had been said about polygamy by the missionaries in Switzerland, and to many the knowledge of this practice came as a shock. Payment for the expense of the journeys to Utah was demanded by the church officials, and when there was no money, goods, jewelry and even clothing were accepted. Paulina's lovely clothing and Herman's watch were taken. Paulina, loving beautiful things, had to see her fine Alpaca suit on the wife of a church official. So it was hardly surprising that the family began to formulate plans to leave the state and go where it could begin over again, free from the unhappy conditions.

FATHER BOSSHARD never regained his health in the new land as he had hoped, but grew more feeble with the months. He missed the comforts of home in Switzerland and was unable to adjust himself to the more rigorous conditions of pioneer life. He longed for fish, and his youngest daughter often told of an event which, for a time, satisfied his longing for them. One day he and his youngest daughter, Hermina, were sitting outside near an irrigation ditch. Suddenly they saw a large fish come swimming along down the ditch and he made a rush for it. Somehow he caught that fish, "feverishly cleaned, fried and ate it." There was more pathos than comedy in the little scene. He lived only a year after entering Utah (1864), and his loved ones tenderly laid him to rest with feelings of regret deepening their sadness that he had been denied the comforts of the dear Swiss home in his last troubled days. He had planned and erected many buildings in Switzerland—some of which stand today to attest his skill and ability. One such building is the High School in Thurbenthal. In 1906, Herman visited his native land, and while he was there the fiftieth anniversary of the building of the high school was celebrated. All the officials who had had a part in the enterprise were present but the builder, John Bossard. An interesting custom is mentioned in this connection: "When a house was completed, it used to be customary for the owner to put a big tree up in it and hang a handkerchief on for each workman and a silk one for the architect."

Paulina, a widow since the death of her husband in 1864, was glad to open her home to her mother, now in her widowhood, and Catherina Bossard and her younger children moved into the one-room log cabin which was to be her home for many months. The boys, Jacob and John, slept on one side of the room while Mina and Hermina with their mother, Catherina, little Paulina, who was only a wee baby when her father died, and the mother, Paulina, slept on the other side. The record notes: "There was only one room. The girls slept on one side of the room and the boys on the other, but they felt quite happy and comfortable." Paulina had acquired a cow, which, while very valuable in those times of meager living, was "free with the neighbor's property. If she wanted to go into a yard, she lifted the gate off and walked through. One time she was seen walking down the street with a gate on her huge horns."

Stragglers from a tribe of friendly Piute Indians often visited the Santa Clara settlement, and though lazy and impudent, never harmed the whites who became accustomed to seeing them about. They would walk right into the house, beg for food, "occupy the whole space in front of the fireplace no matter how cold it was for the members of the family," and generally make themselves at home often to the complete exasperation of the white inmates. Paulina's exasperation reached the boiling point on one occasion when an Indian slipped a pair of scissors which were the pride of her heart, into a bag he carried. He walked out of the house, started down the street—Paulina after him. Catching him, she demanded the scissors, but he "no haveum." She called loudly for help and one of the men came up to learn the trouble. Young Lo still denied having them, but on a search of the bag, the prized scissors came to light and were restored to their doughty owner. However troublesome in small matters, the Indians were fairly respected and appreciated for they would warn the settlers to "herd in the stock whenever the Navajos were on the warpath."

When Herman was about twenty-two years of age, he was married to Jane Finley and they began their home life in Santa Clara. But Herman, with others, was not satisfied with conditions in Utah and decided to make a trip of investigation to California. He had no money to buy equipment for such a trip but kept a lookout for an opportunity to go. A man by the name of Hafen—apparently of the same mind—earned money by working for the Railroad Company, to equip a wagon outfit for California, and asked Herman to go with him.

ARRIVING in California, Herman found work and earned enough money to buy horses and a wagon of his own and started back to Utah—resolved to make preparations to leave there immediately. Before leaving California, he had a dream in which his wife stood beside his bed. It was so vivid that "he knew not whether it was a dream or reality." He hurried home only to find that his wife and new born babe had passed away. More than ever now, he wished to leave Santa Clara, but he knew the attitude of the church officials on the subject of members leaving Utah. Under the circumstances, he felt justified in giving the impression that he had attended conference and had been taking high church officials about. "In those

Another Journey

GRAY WINTER MONTHS gave way to the sunshine of spring. A robin now and then could be seen, adding its splash of color to a dull world. Through all things there breathed the stir of an awakening.

Louisa had always loved spring. With each soft zephyr, each opening flower, each new-born fragrance, she had felt new life flow through her own spirit. New joy, new hope, new inspiration.

But not this year. She felt more kinship with the mouldering oak leaves of the previous fall than with freshly springing life. Was this the way one felt when one began to grow old? A few gray hairs were showing here and there over her head, a few wrinkles appearing around her eyes. But the hopeless feeling in her heart was the thing she was most concerned about. For helping the poor had not given her the happiness she had yearned for.

To be sure, there had been some little joy in doing things for others. But there were so many of these needy ones; and they needed so many things, not just for a few days, but for many weeks and months at a time. If she had used their entire income these people would still have been inadequately fed and clothed. One individual was completely ineffective in a fight against a big thing like poverty.

As days passed, her restlessness grew greater. She felt that she must see her mother. Maybe she could become interested in growing flowers, or in some commercial activity. But could she forget the sufferings of others, these squalid homes, and all the other things that had come to burden her heart? She could try. She would learn her mother's secret.

"Dan," she said, one evening after the children were in bed asleep. "It just seems I'm not meant to succeed at anything. I—I don't know whether you know it or not, but I've been trying to find a little satisfaction in the work I've been doing for the poor.

"And you have done a lot of good, Louisa. You have been a real angel of mercy to many—"

She shook her head. "I'm not blind. I know I've been able to help some of them through various critical times—but what they need most is a chance to help themselves. We are so helpless alone. Poverty is such an overwhelming thing. And to think it is not just here in Bay Cliff, but everywhere in the world."

"Will you forgive me if I speak of Zion once more, Louisa? The world needs it so. If many good people combine, their efforts are much more effective in all these different attempts to make the world better."

"But Dan—a small organization like the Latter Day Saints—it seems to me they would be about as ineffective as an individual. It—"

"But you don't get the idea. What the world needs most is someone to lead; to point the way out of the darkness into the light. Zion could do that. Zion can be God's laboratory where he can speak forth and demonstrate His Way to all the erring and needy of earth. We can show them how things should be, and can be, done."

Louisa sighed. "I wonder if I may go back to Monroe for a little visit? I am so restless. I haven't seen mother since Danny John was born. I could go this coming week-end and the children wouldn't have to miss much school. I wouldn't need to stay long. I could meet quite a few people there. I think it would do me good."

"Will you do me a favor? I'd like you to talk with my father about the church; he can make things so much plainer than I can; he can—"

"All right, Dan. That is—I'll have a talk with him. But understand this, please, I haven't anything against the philosophy of your church. That's all right. But they don't live up to it. I don't care to cast my lot with hypocrites."

"Louisa! We're not all hypocrites. We—"

"One of them who pretended to think a lot of the church did something once that I considered very dishonest—meaner than anything I've ever done or could think of doing. I just can't believe—"

Dan pondered a moment. He'd have time to write his father; this was only Monday.

"Is that what has been bothering you? I knew it was something like that. Who was the offender, dear, and what did he or she do?"

Louisa shook her head. "I'm not talking about it Dan. It's been a great shock to me. I had so much confidence in this particular person." She looked at him narrowly. "The big egotist! He did not even consider the possibility of her meaning that he himself was the offender."

She smiled. "I'll go to church though. And if there's anything that I really feel I want to ask about, of course I'll go to your father."

MONROE was the same little town; it had not changed much as to outward appearance. The buildings looked familiar with the exception of one or two additional edifices on Main Street. But the faces were quite unfamiliar, most of them.

"They have grown beyond my recognition," she thought, "probably some of these were just little folks when I saw them last."

She did not even recognize her own younger brothers and sisters. Mildred and Hildred were sixteen years old and looked very sophisticated, and mature. They were beautiful creatures if you looked at them in a dim light; but in the daytime, Louisa thought them just like all the other cheap, bold young things she had met. Too much rouge, too much lipstick of a too flaming color. They said they had "swell times," though. Louisa wondered. Their good times seemed to consist mainly of periods of hysterical giggling; dancing and cards; flirtations.

"I'm just finding out about these men," giggled Hildred, skipping about the room. "You know, they are really simple-minded things. Once you get their attention, you can manage them easily."

SHE HAD an opportunity that afternoon to see Hildred in action. They went down town together, and every man they met, from the iceman, who used to be in Louisa's class in high school, to the young man with a white collar in the library, were all treated with the same limpid, insipid roll of Hildred's pretty eyes, and her inviting smile. Old men, youngmen, middle-aged men, married or single, it made no difference so long as they were men. She had overestimated her power over them, however. Some of them were frankly amused; some were irritated; some reacted as the girl desired them to.

"My dear," Louisa said as they were alone again, "You are taking a very risky method to find amusement. Do you realize—"

"Don't you preach to me, Louisa. I want to be nice to you. I want to love you, because you're my sister and I used to admire you so much—but I won't be preached at."

"I'm not going to preach at you, dear," replied Louisa, gently, "but when I can see the danger before you, the risk—"

"Do you really feel that way? I guess I know how to take care of myself. I've got to have a little fun. You know, we look just about alike, Millie and I. We put on the greatest stunts you ever saw. We've even exchanged partners for different evenings and they never knew it. I go with three young men by turns right now, and when I'm with any one of them, I make them think it's Millie who's the flirt. She tells her friends it was I who was out with some other boy. Oh, we can get by with lots of things—"

"But that's lying, Hildred. I should think—"

Hildred giggled. "What of it? What's a lie, if you are smart enough to get by with it? We have a lot of fun! What's life for, anyway?"

Louisa sighed. That was the question she had been asking herself for so long. "You ought to consider, though, Hildred. You'll have to settle down and be serious sometime. Your youth, pep, and charm will not last forever. Death is not far from any of us—"

"Don't!" shrieked Hildred, half in jest, half in earnest. "Who wants to think about all these morbid things? How do you know my youth and charm will pass so quickly? I'll fight to keep them. Modern women take care of themselves, and youth lasts a long time. I—"

"Hildred, do you know I said almost those same words to myself when I was your age? And yet—look here—there are gray hairs coming to me, you see, and youth goes whether we want it or not."

"Yes, I suppose it will. But why waste time thinking about it? I want a good time while it lasts, anyway. I—" she paused and looked intently upon her older sister. "Tell me, Louisa. When you think of youth passing and death coming, don't it just scare you to death?"

"No, it doesn't," she answered, thoughtfully, "You see, I've found there are so many things worse than death."

"Well, it scares me. I get all shaky when I'm by myself sometimes and get to thinking about it. It just scares me cold. I keep doing interesting things to keep my mind from brooding over those tragic things. Tra, la, la." She giggled.

Louisa sighed. She was disappointed in her visit home. Things were so confusing. When she and Dan turned on the radio they chose the better type of music that stimulated one to good thoughts, that quieted one's nerves. Here there was no attempt at choosing. Somebody tuned in on some station in the morning and they all worked, talked and laughed seemingly quiet oblivious to its noisy appeals. Everybody quarreled. Some of the quarreling was just bluster, but some was caused by real anger. Her brothers and sisters were good-looking, well-dressed and intelligent. They were good-hearted, too, and they meant to do right. They didn't seem to know right from wrong. They were like herself. They wanted their share of happiness from life, and they didn't know how to get it.

She was suddenly aware that she was again thankful for Dan, for his ability of character, for his prayers, for his ability to teach the children something about religion. A homesick longing for him swept over her. Almost she could hear his voice: "Wickedness never was happiness." What the world needs, it came to her mind, is indeed a practical demonstration that one can be happy and good at the same time.

Yes, the world needed a Zion—there could be no doubt of it. But why should there be such inconsistencies in life? Here was Dan, religious, always honest with others; and still he had been dishonest with her. She couldn't forgive him. She couldn't bear to think of joining the church and letting him think he had gained a victory over her.

She wanted to talk with her mother alone, but there was no opportunity. She watched her interestedly. Her work went on without pause. Did work alone bring happiness? She asked bluntly:

"Mother, has work brought you the joy you wanted from life?"

Startled, the older woman lifted her eyes and let them rest for a moment on her daughter. She seemed considering what her answer should be. But Louisa already knew the answer. Those eyes. The hunger, the frightened craving she had seen in so many people's eyes. Her mother was just like all those others, trying to get away from something; to attain something else so elusive she had almost given up pursuit of it. She was hiding behind her feverish activity like a frightened child behind its mother's skirts.

Again Louisa was sorry she had come to Monroe. But it would not be long until she would be back with Dan. They would have supper with her mother; they would spend Sunday with Dan's father and mother. She dreaded supper.

Mrs. Miller had never formed the habit of asking blessing on the food, and little Dorothy Jane, firm as Dan himself in her stand for the right, solemnly told her mother she wouldn't eat another meal without asking God to bless it. Louisa had never asked the blessing herself. It seemed cowardly to place the task upon such a small child. But the child was more able to do it than she. When they had all seated themselves, she asked:

"Mother, shall we bow our heads and ask a blessing on this food? My children are accustomed to that; they don't feel right unless we do."

"Why—why—" stammered her mother, "of course."

"Dorothy Jane, will you please ask blessing?"

Two little heads, so like Dan's in their reverent attitude, bowed, and the child's voice came clear and sweet:

"Dear Father in heaven: Please bless our food and help us to be strong and healthy and do what's right. And please bless our daddy. Please help him to digest the food he'll have to eat until our mother can get back and cook things for him like you told us in the Word of Wisdom. Amen."

"Amen," echoed Danny John.

The twins coughed loudly and ran to the kitchen. The boys laughed outright.

"You're raising them according to old-fashioned standards, I see," remarked Mrs. Miller. "Well, it may be all right, but I don't know. It doesn't pay to be too peculiar."

That statement seemed almost like an unkind criticism of Dan. Louisa criticized him to herself, but she didn't allow anyone else the privilege.

"It depends on the viewpoint—what you consider peculiar. It may seem peculiar to some to hear a prayer offered; but it seems peculiar to me to see girls paint their faces and go hunting for a man with their roving, inviting eyes."

Mrs. Miller sighed. "Don't be angry, Louisa. I didn't mean to make you feel badly. My children have all seemed to disappoint me in one way or another."

"Thanks, mama," giggled the twins.

"I don't know why it is—I've tried to bring them up right."

"How disappointing my visit is," thought Louisa.

BUT another feeling crept over her as she entered the little church with Dan's father and mother the next morning. It was not a pretentious building, but it was clean and quiet. Someone had provided lovely bouquets of early spring blossoms. Everyone seemed to feel that the place was sacred—there was no loud talking; people even walked quietly when they crossed the bare floor. There were more young people present than there used to be.

But the distinctive thing about it was that beautifully calm feeling. A feeling that she had come home at last. She had had a small taste of it when she had knelt beside that trunk that time and prayed for strength. Surely God was recognizing this church.

The service was beautiful even though the members were comparatively few in number. Each participant had a paper with the program written upon it; there was no confusion, no lost motion. The whole service was on the theme of "forgiving." It almost seemed that the service had been arranged for her benefit. The songs, prayers, everything seemed to focus the attention upon the fact that we are answerable to God for our own actions only. A quartet sang:

"Not the parson, not the preacher, but it's me, oh, Lord,
Standing in the need of prayer.
Not my brother, not my sister, but it's me, oh, Lord,
Standing in the need of prayer."

Dan's father preached an inspirational sermon. He said we should look to Christ and trust him, not think so much about our brother's failings. He said that often when one excused himself from paying his tithing, praying, being

My Sweetest Memory

By John F. Martin

I have sailed the mighty ocean
And I've climbed the highest hills;
I have read a lot of stories found in books.

I have roamed through shady woodlands
And I've had a thousand thrills
As I've listened to the songs of birds and brooks.

I have watched the hand of Nature
Paint the earth in gorgeous hue
In the springtime when the winter snows are done;

And I've marveled at the beauty
Of the trees and flowers which grew
In the places where my wandering feet have gone.

I have gazed in admiration
At the glorious Northern Lights
As in majesty they rolled across the sky;

I have seen the great Niagara.
And a thousand other sights
In my journeys as the years have drifted by.

I have slept in stately mansions
And have dined with men of wealth;
I have walked and talked with persons of renown.

I have felt the thrill of coming home
To rest from busy cares
In the evening as the western sun goes down.

I have heard the sweetest music
Like a perfect symphony
As I've watched the happy children at their play.

I have listened to the lullabies
Of mothers to their babes
As they tucked them into bed at close of day.

Oh, I've had a wealth of blessings
As I've walked life's busy street,
And I've found a host of friends along the way.

Though I've tasted of the bitter
I have had my share of sweet
As I've tried to carry on from day to day.

No, I wouldn't take a fortune
For the joys of life I've had.
Nor exchange them for the brightest earthly crown

For 'tis worth far more than riches
To have walked with God and man
And the love of little children to have known.

But the sweetest of the memories
Which fill my heart with joy,
As in retrospect I view the path I've trod,

Is the memory of that happy day
When I was but a boy
When first I heard the gentle Voice of God.

How it thrills me now to think of it,
As I recall the scene
In the little church that blessed Sabbath morn,

When I gave my heart to Jesus
And forsook the ways of sin
And through His precious love became reborn.

Like the rustle of an angel's wing
I heard the voice that day
And it thrilled my soul with gratitude and praise,

And I pledged in all sincerity
From God I'd never stray
And I promised I would serve Him all my days.

Many years have passed away since then
When first my soul rejoiced,
But the memory of that day is bright and clear.

And the soft and gentle whisper
Of that same sweet, loving Voice, Like and echo, seems to fall upon my ear.

How it fills my soul with rapture
As I bow at Jesus' feet;
How it lifts me up and makes my heart rejoice.

There's no music can compare with it,
No song that's half so sweet
As the whisper of the blessed Savior's Voice.

I have heard the feathered song birds
Sweetly singing in the trees;
I have heard the cattle lowing in the lane;

I have listened to the gentle buzz
Of busy honey bees
And the cheerful song of sweet, refreshing rain.

Oft I've heard a baby's cooing
And it's thrilled me through,
More than any prima donna's song could do.

For the prattle of an infant
Always stirs me with resolve,
To be humble, kind and gentle, pure and true.

I have heard the mountain waterfall,
And heard the rushing wind;
I have listened to the mighty thunder roar;

I have heard the song that sweethearts sing,
When love is young and kind,
As they promise to be true forever-more.

Oh, there's scarcely any earthly sound
Or voice I haven't heard,
Or, yet, may hear as through the world
I roam.

But the sweetest of them all
Was when I heard the voice of God
In that chapel near my West Virginia home.

I have heard it many times since then,
As on through life I've come,
Though at times I've failed to heed its gentle call.

And, though I've faltered in the path
Which leads to God and home,
It has kept me safe from many a fatal fall.

How my heart goes out in gratitude
To God for all his care,
And for blessings I have had along Life's road.

And I pray that He will give me strength
As I go here and there,
To be faithful, and with patience bear my load.

And although the world may scorn my choice
And Satan tempt me sore,
And the road be rough my faltering feet must trod,
I pray that I shall ne'er forget
The pledge I gave my Lord
On that day when first I heard the voice of God.

And when my work is finished
And the burden I lay down,
And I stand before the throne of God's dear Son;

May I then be counted worthy
To receive the victor's crown
And to hear the voice of Jesus say,
"Well done."
Kirtland, Ohio.

These are days that try the souls of pastors and all church leaders. But the one thing against which the stronger among them will guard their minds with incessant vigilance is a theology of the slump. Christ calls his church and her leaders to go forward, nor backward. The stuff out of which our sustaining convictions will be made is not to be found amid the wreckage of the past, but in the light which the divine spirit will surely shed upon our forward path. In this matter, liberalism shone no better at Indianapolis than conservatism. Only those, whatever label they may wear, who earnestly wait upon God for his present word to this present world, are destined to be the builders of the future.—From The Christian Century, December 21, 1932.

FOURTEEN TO EIGHTY-FOUR

other meetings are showing a very definite reaction to the enlivened spirituality of the Wednesday night service.

Attendance at the Monday night priesthood class is almost a positive factor. Church school attendance carries on on a very even keel and other group endeavors move forward with evidence of a definite positive support.

Young people's activities have never been better and all in all the percentage of active endeavor is several times that of the same congregation only a comparatively short time before. Spectacular meetings have been avoided. "The old ways are good ways," says Brother Timm as he moves out on a safe and sound basis in caring for his Wednesday night charge.

Many things are advocated in this modern age for the building up of the Wednesday night service, however, while many of them have the ability to build numbers oftentimes the fact is admitted that after the service is built, it has lost virtually all of its relation to, or virtue as, a spiritualizer.

The membership of First Saint Joseph Church has demonstrated two important things if nothing else:

First: Latter Day Saints are interested in a sound spiritual religion once it is really presented.

Second: Priesthood can influence Saints once it becomes united and sells itself to the task.

Fourteen to Eighty-four is a story today. Six months from today it may be a hundred and eighty-four. Who knows?

If leaders have not written for names and addresses, it is hoped they will do so at once, so the letters may reach the children across the sea in time to convey Christmas greetings from the children in the United States.

Write to Mildred Goodfellow, 1306 Lane Street, Topeka, Kansas, and names and addresses will be sent promptly.

We scarcely recognize as yet how dependent we are upon one another. We have a little insight into this dependency just now in the prospect of a food shortage this winter on account of drought conditions. Those upon whom we have depended for certain foodstuffs will not be able to supply them as formerly, which brings us suddenly to the realization of our inter-dependency for our physical welfare.

How seriously do we consider our social and spiritual dependence upon one another? "Neglect not the assembling of yourselves together" is a commandment of a social nature; and to "visit the fatherless and the widows, the sick and afflicted" is identified with "pure religion before God" according to the Apostle James.

The priest and teacher of the branch are its visiting officers. Their duties are specifically defined and when performed bring the branch up to a fine spiritual condition. But the Friendly Visitor in contrast to the formal, official visit of the priesthood officers is an informal visitor and comes to know the family in very intimate ways which afford further opportunities for helpfulness.

Friendly visiting blesses the visitor as well as the visited. Many have testified of rich spiritual experiences when through sacrifice of time and their own interests they have gone to those who were slipping from their social and spiritual moorings or some stroke of misfortune has overwhelmed them.

The Friendly Visitor should be given to much prayer for she will need wisdom and also the leadings of the Holy Spirit to direct her to those who may need her in times of sudden distress or perplexity, that she otherwise might not know. Two pledges only have been exacted of the Friendly Visitors with whom I work: That they will not participate in gossip, nor the unfavorable criticism of any church officer. Friendly visiting should be constructive, upbuilding, integrating. Other than this it would fail of its purpose.

Because a few undertake the responsibility of seeing that this work is done is not sufficient reason that others should be relieved of performing this friendly service. It is a Christian duty that falls upon all of us and one that cannot be perfunctorily performed. The heart must overflow with love for Christ, which in other words, is love for one another.

Tact and good will are outstanding qualifications of the Friendly Visitor, and happy must be those who can become strength to the weak, hope to the despondent, joy to the sorrowing, power to the tempted.

high officials of the church are putting forth a special effort to get the priesthood to working together in unity and in love so that through their ministrations the church will prosper and flourish as never before.

I am feeling good in health and fine in spirit. I wish all success in our heavenly Father's glorious work. All who will labor with all diligence to win souls to Christ, will never regret the labor performed, although at a great sacrifice at times, as their reward is sure.

days it was not safe to leave the church and Utah, and a new wagon looked suspicious." The next year, 1870, the family decided definitely to leave and move to California. They knew the risks to be run in leaving Utah; also that Indians roamed the prairies; that there were other dangers to be faced, such as accidents, illness, lack of food and water, quicksand, poisonous water, etc., but they felt that the move was right and that God would protect, so the family went quietly about making the needed preparations.

Paulina exchanged her house and an acre of ground for a span of horses. Another wagon was secured and the business of equipping the two wagons went forward. Each (covered) wagon would hold three thousand pounds and thirty bushels of grain would be taken for the horses. Water would be carried in kegs and replenished as opportunity afforded. A young man by the name of Gottlieb Blickenstofer would go with the family and drive one team. He was a "hopeful lover of Mina's" and it is likely that he needed little urging to join the party. All these activities were bound to be noised abroad and it was announced from the pulpit of the local church "that it would be better for them if their throats were cut than to leave the church and Utah." But when finally approached on the subject, the family was compelled to promise the bishop that they would return in three years and that the girls should come back to Utah to be married. Even with this arrangement, a strict watch was kept for several days and nights.

The day came to start! One can picture the scene as the goods were securely packed in place and the members of the family, all tense with excitement for the start of this huge undertaking, were stowed in the two wagons. Friends came out to bid good-by and Godspeed. Gottlieb Blickenstofer, having the lightest load, was to lead. The word was given, the horses pushed into the collars, the creaking wheels turned slowly, and the Bosshard family was on its way—to a new life and a greater hope.

Towards evening of the first day they reached a river called the Muddy. This was not a large river and though there were no bridges, the crossing did not appear difficult, so Gottlieb drove confidently in. However, as horses and the wheels began to sink into the quicksand, the excited boy had to urge the horses quickly to their utmost effort to make the opposite bank. When the other wagon drew up, Gottlieb tried to persuade Herman to take another route, for he feared the more heavily loaded wagon could not be drawn through the quicksand. However, the Bosshard boys were strongly opposed to separating the wagons and the consequent division of strength in case of an attack by Indians or of a breakdown, so started bravely across. Safe to say that there was no loitering nor stopping to rest on that trip across the Muddy, for the crossing was made safely. The pale faces of the people, the heaving sides, and quivering flesh of the horses as they reached the opposite shore, told the story of the strain on man and beast. The howls of the coyotes on that first night drove the dog home, and even the horses tried to cross the river and go back. The boys had to wade in "pull them out, and tether them." Three or four days out on the plains, a band of Indians was sighted who soon rode up to the wagons. The statement that they "proved to be peaceable," in no wise tells of the fearful suspense of the travelers until it was evident that this band of Americans was peaceable.

When the wagons reached the spot where the Virgin River lay on one hand and Virgin Hill on the other, it seemed a fair example of being caught between the devil and deep sea. It appears that if the river were crossed, the hill would be avoided, and if the hill were climbed, the river would be avoided twenty-four times. Since the river was known to be "treacherous with quicksand," the hill was chosen. Some idea of the steepness and topography may be formed when it is known that the wagons had to be entirely unloaded; that it was necessary to hitch all four horses to the end of a wagon tongue and then, at the greatest urging and encouragement, the horses had to leap from rock to rock up that terrible hill. On course the feat had to be repeated, the baggage—all those thousands of pounds—carried or dragged to the top. It was a stupendous undertaking for that small group and one to daunt the spirit of a less determined people. To quote again: "When they finally got to the top, they no doubt longed for the leeks and onions of Santa Clara. They felt that their efforts had been rewarded whenever they looked at the muddy, yellow waters of the Virgin River."

One night, some days later, seven friendly Indians came and helped gather wood and made suggestions for a good camp. "They all had supper and later the boys and Indians slept around the camp fire, but the women kept close to the wagons and slept in them. Early the next morning the Indians came running and told the boys that their best horse was in the quicksand. The boys ran to help, but it was the Indians who told them to throw a neckyoke around the horse's neck and let the other horses pull him out. No sooner had the horse been safely brought to shore than the neckyoke broke. Those Indians had truly proved a great blessing. They bid the travelers farewell and advised them not to go to California, that it was a bad place. "Water proved scarce in the desertlike section of Nevada, northeast of Las Vegas, and the water in the kegs was almost gone. The continued pulling, into the collars had worn great sores on the shoulders of the horses, and all were beginning to feel, rather acutely the need for water. Members of the party stanchly controlled their thirst that the tongues of the horses might be moistened occasionally. One day proved particularly distressful, and as night came on, the situation began to look desperate. "Finally, when the horses were too exhausted to continue farther, Herman got out and walked ahead for about fifteen minutes. To his unspeakable joy, he soon saw the lights of Las Vegas flickering in the distance. They arrived on a Friday and allowed the horses to rest until Monday."

AT LAS VEGAS, the Bosshards made the acquaintance of a miner by the name of Wilson. Mr. Wilson owned a ranch at Las Vegas where he lived with two adopted Indian boys. It happened that at this time Mr. Wilson was hauling supplies to the coast and was waiting for a group of wagons "for company and for safety." The Swiss pioneers were delighted to accompany him for he knew the way, all the water holes, and of course—"safety in numbers" was even more significant then than now. Also he seemed a man that might be trusted and so it proved, for he remained a true friend to the family for thirty-five years and visited them many times in Los Angeles. The historian notes that "Uncle Wilson always carried a dummy with him as he felt it was safer to make it appear that there were two sitting in the seat instead of one. He was also accompanied by a black dog." It was especially fortunate that the Bosshard family could accompany Uncle Wilson on this trip for he prevented them from drinking the poison water at Coyote Hole. The journey from Las Vegas to San Bernadino appears to have been uneventful for those times. It had taken four weeks to drive from Santa Clara to San Bernadino. Here they remained for two or three months, then moved on to Los Angeles, settling on Olive, between Fourth and Fifth Streets—about where the fine Subway Terminal building is now located. Here again this remarkable family gathered up the broken threads and began with renewed hope to weave the beautiful patterns of life according to the vision and skill of each. Possibly through hereditary influence, the boys, Herman and Jacob, found occupations in the lumber business. Los Angeles was then a hustling little city and the lumber business a thriving one. Here in the beautiful little "City of the Angels," the mother and her children labored to create homes of culture and refinement and to live the gospel as they understood it. Paulina sold her team of horses, which must have been of good stock for they afterwards became "famous race horses." The entertainments of music, singing, and yodeling were entered into and enjoyed again and with greater zest, for here there were no depressing features of religious and social life such as had been experienced in Utah. Long before hearing the restored gospel in Switzerland, Mother Bosshard had stated that "the true church is not now on earth, but will be some time." On hearing the gospel message, she gladly accepted it and felt that here was the true church. After living in Utah some time this declaration was wrung from a sore heart: "We have come to the wrong place."

Not long after the family had settled in Los Angeles, Elder Joseph Burton, accompanied by his wife, Emma, came to the city to preach the gospel according to the original teachings and as reaffirmed by the Reorganized Church. Mother Bosshard and her daughters attended these meetings, listened eagerly and very soon were baptized and became charter members of the Los Angeles branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Others had moved to Los Angeles from Utah but not all joined the Reorganized Church. A wine merchant and his wife joined the Methodist church. The wine merchant kept a wine garden and reaped a rich harvest from the entertaining abilities of the Bosshard young people. Ever with an eye open for the main chance, the wine merchant would invite the young people to come to the "garden" on Sunday afternoon and then ask them to sing. His wife peddled vegetables and fruit during the week and would invite all her customers to come to the wine-garden and hear the Swiss singers and yodelers. Of course there would be a crowd of people who sat about, comfortably, under the trees and listened to the fine music while the coffers of the wine merchant filled in a most satisfying manner. He reaped the benefits and the Bosshards got the experience. However, the old fellow must have felt indebted, for, years later, it developed that his will provided for a $500 bequest to Paulina.

About this time, a member of the Utah church by the name of August Purfurst came to Los Angeles and visited the Bosshard family. He was a man of refinement and education, speaking ten languages. Catherina Bosshard, always eager to spread the truth, convinced this man of the claims of the Reorganized Church and he traveled to Lamoni, Iowa, to be baptized—later returning to Los Angeles.

LIFE TOOK on a more pleasing and even tenor for this praiseworthy family, and as the members prospered, hearts welled in gratitude for the directing care which had not failed them. Paulina, living with her mother in the home on Olive Street, sold baked goods which were supplied by an excellent baker in the city. She also knitted and the daughter, Paulina, crocheted fine lace for patrons. It is related that Paulina Bosshard Wili entertained her customers with tales of the covered wagon days. When Herman was married the second time, he took the house on Olive Street, Paulina lived in a small house on the rear of the lot, and Mother Bosshard went to live with her youngest daughter, Hermina. After the daughter of Paulina was married and the Olive Street property was sold, the little house was moved to the rear of the lot where the daughter, Mrs. Paulina Straszacker, lived. As the young people took companions, other good homes were created. The suit of Gottlieb Blickenstofer did not prosper, for Mina married a young man by the name of Louis Ebinger. Mina's daughters, Mrs. Mynnie Ebinger Burkhardt and Miss Estella Ebinger, both faithful workers in the church, are worthy examples of that early, sturdy training and sympathetic association. The devoted care given the mother (Mina) during her last long illness, from which she was released on June 7, 1932, speaks louder than mere words of that quality of character, and of their right to the title of "saint."

Hermina, youngest daughter of John and Catherina Bosshard, was a gifted singer and received private tutoring, but love proved stronger than the urge for a professional career, and she married young Mr. Adams and began her labors of love in a home in Los Angeles. Here Catherina Egli Bosshard died on December 10, 1897, being nearly seventy-nine years old. She suffered for a number of years but was ever cheerful and found great comfort in her faith to which she remained true to the last. None but the All Wise knows the measure of her influence for good during the short span allotted here.

Hermina's daughters—Sisters Viola Adams Bogue and Hermina Adam Badham, have been faithful and untiring workers in the Los Angeles Branch for many years. The author wishes to acknowledge the very valuable assistance of Sister Viola Bogue who through her efforts in collecting data has made this story possible.

Mrs. Christian Straszacker, daughter and only child of Paulina Wili, is also a faithful (charter) member of the Los Angeles Branch. She and her husband have ever shown the finest consideration and enduring love for the valiant mother and have given her devoted care—especially during the year and a half of illness from which she seems at present to be slightly improved.

Paulina, last surviving member of the original Bosshard family, sits and dreams—living again the thrilling adventures and episodes of that far away time. Some of the greatest joys of her waiting days are the visits of her relatives, and the singing and yodeling of the dear Swiss songs with which they often beguile the hours of this interval.

At her window, shaded by the quince tree, we greet and pay our sincere respects to—Paulina Wili.

THE NOMADS

baptized, or performing other required duties because of some real or fancied lack of someone else in the church, he should look well into his own heart and see whether or not he really wanted to do the right thing. He read a little from the church papers.

"Would you refuse to listen to the beautiful music of the piano because some hypocrite somewhere else might also be listening to piano music? Would you, if you were a farmer, and had been convinced that leghorn chickens were the best suited for your purpose, refuse to raise them because someone else, who didn't take proper care of them, had a flock that wasn't bringing him any returns?"

"And yet, people will refuse to take the word of God because someone else has not let it bear fruit in his life. He has taken upon him the name of Christ, but he has not been a good representative of the gospel."

"I expect that is all true," thought Louisa, "but I feel so terribly, so unutterably alone. If I had just one friend, aside from Dan, one that I knew I could respect and trust, I might be able to move forward and obey. But all alone, I can't, I can't."

There was little time for troublesome thoughts of any kind in the next few weeks, however. Louisa persuaded Dan to have a physical examination—he looked so pale and tired all the time. The doctor ordered him to take a vacation from his indoor work—to get out into the country and the fresh air.

"We could go down to our little farm, Dan."

"Would you be willing to go and work hard in a rough country like that, for me?"

"Of course. It seems the best thing to do."

Necessary correspondence having been carried on to ask the present tenant to vacate, Louisa found herself in the midst of feverish preparations. She sang at her work. It seemed natural to be moving again. It did not seem long until they were on the truck, on top of the large load of furniture. The neighbors had many of them gathered to bid them good-by. Thin women with little babies in their arms. Little children standing solemnly staring at Dorothy Jane and Danny John. Some with tears in their eyes. Dan, more excited and happy than he had seemed for years, standing up on the truck and waving his hands this way and that, as the driver started slowly.

"Good-by, and God bless you!"

"Good-by, and the same to you!"

"Junior, good-by forever!"

"Where you goin', p'fessor?"

"To a farm in the Ozarks!"

"Good-by. Good-by."

"Let's sing, Daddy, that song about the King's business."

"I am a stranger here,
Within a foreign land,
My home is far away,
Upon a Golden Strand."

And so the Nomads were on their way again, a weary stretch of road behind, and a long shimmering ribbon of highway before them.

Renewal

Each day we live a little life,
Arising new at morn.
The present page is pure and white,
And Nature is newborn.

For now the dawn's awakening brings
Bright hours waited long,
Our feet are shod with silver wings,
Our hearts are filled with song.

Life's journey is a thing of joy,
Adventure marks the way,
For there's a rainbow round about,
Since night has turned to day.

Forgotten yesterday's sad gloom
The pains of life, its sum;
"For old things now have passed away
And all things new become."

—Dorothy Sproule in Montreal Gazette.

In our own country and our own race we have a heritage of tradition, a spiritual continuity of law and order, and a love of good and noble things, revealed in the lives and work of countless men and women, which we cannot abandon without enormous loss. It is indeed in our blood and hearts, and we could not cut it out and stay alive as a nation or a race. We must reach back to our past for those values while moving forward to the future, for we shall need those qualities, and not any different ones, to meet the next adventure as we have met life always with a certain cheerful confidence and a sturdy sense of humor, and courage that did not fail at a crisis. Youth has no use for the past, it says, but the past directs them to their destiny. This race of ours, so spread about the world, has in many ways the decision of the future. What we make of life will be largely what the world will make of life. Our faith today will make the history of tomorrow.—Sir Philip Gibbs in If I Could Preach Just Once.

The Readers Say---

Do We Believe the Prophecies Given Us?

God continues to extend his mercies to me and my household. Each day I desire to render my life in service to him. I find that when I try to comply with his way, he gives me his assistance; but when I try to do things my way, I am defeated. He tells us that his ways are as much higher than ours as the heavens are higher than the earth. So, in all things let us say: "Lord, show us the way you would have us do."

In reading of the progress of the various reunions this past season I have been encouraged and strengthened. Particularly did the account of the Great Northwest Reunion appeal to me when it told of God's kindnesses and warnings to the people. He is not pleased with our progress, Saints, and I hope and pray that we shall heed the admonitions he gives us.

In our Sunday school we have been studying the history of the Nephites and it is very apparent in reading of them that not one calamity was allowed to come upon them without the Lord warning them and pleading with them to repent of their sins. And so in the prophecies given to God's people this summer I notice there has been no promise of material prosperity, much to the contrary. We have been warned of many things to come.

This part of the South has been wonderfully blessed. Our fields have yielded abundantly, and our hearts go out in sympathy to those in the parts of the world which have been smitten with various calamities. Let us remember that all things work together for good to those who love God. Let us be obedient and follow his teachings.

Thinking of the Northwest reunion has reminded me of a prophecy given here some time ago by Brother J. A. Gillen, which warned us that if the people did not repent in the space of ten years, conditions would be such that we would not want to live. How many, I wonder, believe that prophecy?

Reunion a Blessing to Him

The reunion at Irvington this summer meant much to me. I had put forth an extra effort to reach God through fasting and prayer. My wife was not a member of the church. I was praying for her as well as for more spiritual power and vision for myself, particularly in my work in the church.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer spoke to me through the Spirit at one of our prayer services, and called me to the Melchisedec priesthood. My wife was blessed with an open vision which was a direct answer to my prayers for her. I had the honor and the pleasure of baptizing her and two other candidates into the church and into my own branch on the last Saturday afternoon of the reunion.

God was indeed good to me. He gave me more than I asked him for. I simply asked him to show my companion the truth concerning the church. Needless to say, it made me happy to have the honor of baptizing as my first candidate into the kingdom, my own wife.

The spirit of that reunion has been with me in my church school work and in my preaching. I have caught the vision and have been inspired to move forward. On August 8, at a business meeting of San Jose Branch, I was ordained to the office of elder under the hands of Brother Arthur Oakman. The San Jose Branch voted for me as their next branch president, which position I have been occupying since that date.

The Spirit of God is working among men today. It can be a part of all the Saints if they will dare to measure themselves by what God has given. He has not left us; we have wandered away from him. Let us not be named with the defeated; let us move forward under the power of the Holy Spirit of promise. Will to do, to dare, to be—for Christ.

God Is Good to the Aged

I want to bear testimony to God's goodness and mercy to us in our old age. His loving-kindness is very great and he is mindful of the needs of his people. I know from experience that he continues to speak to us in this age as he did in olden times.

He helped me to break the tobacco using habit, and to those who are trying to quit this habit I would say, Go to God in prayer and ask him in faith to help you. You will receive help. Don't give up. I prayed for more than two years before I was given strength to throw my tobacco away. On the morning that the small voice spoke to me I had about a pound of the weed, but after that I did not wish to use it.

In our home we believe in prayer, and we have prayer night and morning and thank God three times a day for health and strength sufficient to earn our bread.

We as God's people must be faithful, truthful, and honest. We must keep ourselves fit vessels for the Spirit of God. If we obey him, we shall be given strength and power to do his work.

Opposites

Night and day are terms used to designate one condition from another—opposites. We are told in the twenty-second chapter of Revelation that a time will come when there will be no night, no darkness, and that there will be no need of the sun, for the light will come from the Lord. When that time comes the words day and night may be eliminated from our vocabulary, as they will be useless if not meaningless terms.

Everything in nature is paired off by opposites. All organisms in nature are made up by opposites. In electrical power or force there are the negative and the positive poles; in the animal kingdom, including mankind, there are the male and female; in vegetable kingdom, there must opposites for pollinization.

The Apostle Paul intimates that there must be opposites in religion. We read in First Corinthians 11: 19, as follows: "For there must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you."

Are we to profit by the heresies we see in others? Once upon a time I was teacher of a Doctrine and Covenants class, and because a certain man tried to inject heresies into the lessons it made me on the alert to meet or combat his cleverness.

Whether that man did it to be smart or for the purpose of bothering me I never knew. But every Sunday he was prepared to twist the lesson contrariwise to the truth, and evidently was trying to inject heresies into the study of the lessons. Well, it served the purpose of making me study the lessons carefully, and I received light so that I was prepared for almost every emergency. Was it for the purpose "that they which are approved may be made manifest among" us?

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Where was the city of Enoch located on earth?

The questioner does not state which city of that name is meant. Genesis 4: 17 (5: 27 in Inspired Version) states that Cain built a city and named it after Enoch, his son. It is uncertain where this city was located, but the earliest events of Genesis are usually thought to have been concerned with the regions of what later was known as Babylonia, and neighboring countries. Very ancient remains are found there, and the four rivers of Genesis 2 appear to identify this portion of the world, so far as now possible to do so. Probably the first city of Enoch was built in this region.

The Inspired Version also gives an account of a city built by Enoch, son of Jared, and the seventh generation from Adam. Enoch was born six hundred and twenty-two years after the creation of Adam, according to this record, but at what period of his life he built his city is not stated. However, his city, called Zion, continued three hundred and sixty-five years. It seems to have been built after the birth of Methuselah, which occurred when Enoch was sixty-five years of age. Its location was somewhere in the general region of Babylonia, presumably, but nothing definite is known on this point. The statement (7: 27) that Zion was taken into heaven doubtless refers to the people, and not necessarily to the buildings and constructions where they had lived.

Are there any records to support Jude 14?

Evidently Jude had access to some record of the statement he quotes from Enoch, or else some tradition of that kind must have been current in his day. It says:

"Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, . . ."

Writers of the second and first centuries before Christ cited the book of Enoch as among the inspired Scriptures, and it was held in great reverence also by New Testament Christians and by those of the next century. Such eminent early Christian writers as Barnabas (Century 1), Athenagoras, Clement, Irenaeus, and Tertullian, all of the second century, held it to be inspired. Substantial evidence indicates that the book to which they referred is included in the various versions of the Book of Enoch which have come down to our own time. What portions are the most ancient and authentic is not easy to determine, however, as many additions were subsequently made in different ages.

Almost the exact words quoted by Jude are found in the Book of Enoch, as follows:

"And behold! He cometh with ten thousands of His holy ones to execute judgment upon all, and to destroy all the ungodly; and to convict all flesh of all the works of their ungodliness which they have ungodly committed,"— Chapter 1, verse 9.

Did Joseph Smith have the parchment of Doctrine and Covenants 7?

Section 7 in the preface states that it was translated from parchment written and hid up by John. I know of no proof that Joseph had it, however, but the translation was made through the Urim and Thummim. History states that a difference of opinion arose concerning John 21: 22 during the time when Joseph was translating the Book of Mormon, and they agreed to settle it by the Urim and Thummim. This revelation (Section 7) was the result.

What "other records" are meant in Doctrine and Covenants 9:1 that Cowdery should "assist to translate"?

Oliver Cowdery had been given permission to translate a part of the Book of Mormon, but he did not avail himself of this opportunity, it appears. Hence he was instructed to continue to write for Joseph Smith until the work was done, and then "other records" were to be translated with his assistance. This may refer to the translating of the Old and New Testaments, which was later done with his assistance as scribe. Whether or not he actually helped in any other way is not stated, so far as I recall.

Tucson, Arizona

Tucson Branch is enjoying a degree of peace and fellowship, and goodwill among the members is on the increase. Obstacles that have hindered the development of the work and have been disturbing factors among priesthood and members hitherto, have been cleared up, or by common consent, laid aside as being unworthy the attention of Saints who have a goal to attain. The spiritual outlook of the branch is encouraging. They stand upon the threshold of a new day.

This improved condition is due largely to the untiring efforts of Pastor Amos Berve and the wealth of experience and spiritual devotion he brought to the task when appointed to Tucson Branch last June.

Brother and Sister Berve have greatly endeared themselves to the Saints, and their home is a place where all may go for advice and counsel and come away comforted, strengthened, encouraged, and with the knowledge that they have found sympathetic hearts that understand their problems and whose advice they can safely follow.

The church school conducted a "preparation" class prior to Children's Day and arranged a program that should leave a lasting impression upon those entering the church. Two boys from Saint families were baptized that day by Elder W. A. Brooner, and a little girl of a non-member family desired baptism but could not get her mother's consent.

During the month of August the Saints' Sunday school and study classes were disbanded on account of a quarantine ban due to four cases of infantile paralysis in town. The Berves took advantage of this period of inactivity to attend the Southern California reunion and visit his brother and other relatives in and around Long Beach. The preaching services were maintained, during their absence, by local priesthood.

Sunday, September 16, Brother Berve baptized Mrs. Alma Aitken, a woman who has been investigating the work for some time. Her little daughter, Hazel Haggard, was a most interested attendant of the Children's Day preparation class, and will become a member when the opportunity presents itself. She is spending the winter with an uncle in the Dakotas.

Acting on the pastor's suggestion they changed to the envelope and pledge card system for collecting branch expenses the first of August. September 30, they held a special business meeting at which time we received a report from the branch treasurer. The result was so gratifying the plan was endorsed for another three months when they hope to perfect the arrangement and put all departments upon the budget plan.

In July the department of women was organized by the pastor with Sister Annie Lamb as president. The meetings are held each Thursday at 7:30 p. m., and the sisters are making a good accounting of the time spent together.

The young people were organized with Brother Charles Landon as leader, and Sister Girsell Wilson, assistant. The young people selected "Timbers for the Temple" for their name and in their initiatory program beautifully portrayed their conception of what a real timber for the temple should be. Unfortunately Brother Landon's work in Tucson ended soon after, and he moved his family back to Colton, California, his former home. His leaving and the placing of the quarantine ban kept them from entering into active work. With the ban lifted and school started, Sister Wilson hopes to perfect the organization and enter into constructive work.

They extend to all visiting Saints or those contemplating wintering in Tucson a hearty welcome to worship with them. Sunday services are held in the Transportation Brotherhood Hall, fourth floor, Consolidated National Bank Building. Weekly gatherings in private homes. The pastor resides at 534 East Second Street. Both dailies carry the Saints' weekly service announcement.

Shidler, Oklahoma

Elder J. E. Lancaster closed a series of seven services at Shidler the evening of October 7. His discourses were plain and refreshing both to nonmembers and Saints. A number of nonmember friends came to hear him and to assist with the singing.

Brother Lancaster also preached the funeral sermon of a young mother who was not a member of the church.

There was increasing attendance, and attention was good throughout the meetings. At times a very perceptible portion of the Spirit was experienced.

Shidler Saints welcome Brother Lancaster whenever circumstances permit him to come.

Workers put a new coat of paint on both the exterior and interior of their little church and had a neat sign painted and hung where it can easily be read from the street, "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Also a nonmember gave a new gas heater which will be the source of much pleasure during the cold weather.

The women meet each Thursday and work as they did all through the extremely hot weather. They declared that they felt better working than when doing nothing except trying to keep comfortable.

Since the election of officers and teachers, all seems to be taking active part with greater zeal than before.

Columbus, Ohio

First Church

First Branch celebrated the nineteenth anniversary of the dedication of the church building September 15 and 16. A musical program was given Saturday evening and the following numbers were rendered: a vocal solo by Sister Hazel Gribben, piano solo by Ivola Buell; vocal solo, by Missionary J. R. Grice; piano duet, Ivola Buell and Elsie Gabriel; vocal solo, Sister Carrie Chesser; vocal duet, Merrill Weate and Don Gabriel; selections by the orchestra; piano duet by Esther Gates and Winifred Carter, and a piano solo, Elsie Gabriel.

The services opened Sunday with an early prayer meeting, a fine spiritual gathering from which much good was derived. Elders J. R. Grice and Charles Ferguson presided. Unusually large attendance marked the church school session. At this time Howard Shelton, of Springfield, Ohio, was baptized and confirmed in the primary department.

Before the church service two babies were blessed. David Curtis Clark, infant son of Pastor and Sister C. W. Clark, was blessed by Bishop H. E. French and Patriarch J. E. Matthews. Yvonne Claire, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Winston Cummins (nee Helen Grice) was blessed by Elders J. R. Grice and L. C. Lewis. Brother Grice was the speaker. At noon pot luck dinner was served to all.

At two-forty-five Floyd Rockwell, of Dayton, preached, assisted by V. M. Goodrich. Brother Goodrich opened up Columbus territory for the Saints. William Davis, of Kirtland, sang "I Would See Jesus." William Smith was ordained to the office of deacon.

At seven-thirty S. E. Dixon, of Lancaster, Ohio, was the speaker.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Roberts, of New Haven, Connecticut, Mission, have moved to Columbus, and Saints of this congregation welcome them.

The Wednesday evening prayer service under the direction of John Gabriel has been well attended and very spiritual.

The Willing Workers Class held its monthly meetings in September at the home of Homer and Mary Owens. Sister Edna Zieschang is teaching the Book of Mormon.

A group of young married people have organized a class called Zion Builders under the direction of Charles Ferguson. The Doctrine and Covenants is to be studied.

Harvey Grice has returned home from Michigan to attend the Ohio State University.

V. M. Goodrich, of Saint Joseph, Missouri, was in charge of the sacrament service, October 7, and spoke again in the evening on "The Gospel Story."

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan

Sunday, September 30, was rally day for Saskatoon Branch. Some of the Saints from Delisle, Vanscoy, and Floral motored in for the day. Church school was held as usual for the opening hour. Special promotion exercises were arranged by Sister Ethel Peidt, children's supervisor. The junior girls presented, "The Bible Friendship Circle," following with the hymn, "Jesus Is the Children's Friend." Then each group to be promoted stood while one verse of a hymn was played. Mrs. Erie Boland sang, "Open the Gates of the Temple." Junior songbooks were presented to the Sunday school, purchased through the efforts of a group of little girls who sold flowers. Henry Peidt pronounced the prayers of dedication and benediction upon those who were promoted. The choir sang, "The Harvesters." Elder O. W. Okerlind presided over the eleven o'clock sacrament service.

Lunch was served in the basement at noon under the convenorship of Sister Boland, assisted by Sisters Saul, Cassidy, Baker, and Evelyn Bruce.

At one o'clock the congregation was called together to listen to an excellent program arranged by Sister Nelson. Brother C. E. Diggle, as chairman, in his opening remarks, stressed the need of growth and renewed activity. Sister Diggle, senior told of the origin of the Sunday school, and Brother Okerlind's message was one of admonition and encouragement. A quartet number, "We're Pressing on the Upward Way," by Mabel Cruce, Lily Anderson, Paul Schmidt and Marvin Diggle, was much enjoyed; four little girls sang, "Bring Them In," and Sister Pearl Denton gave a short reading.

The annual business meeting followed at which Brother Henry Peidt and his counselors, Brothers Beckman and Dig-gle, were sustained in office, as also was Sister Grace Beckman, who has been secretary of the branch for a number of years. Sister Daisy Nelson was elected supervisor of religious education. Sister Boland was organized as chorister, Sister Steves as organist, and Sister Diggle, publicity agent.

Elder Okerlind was the speaker at the three-thirty service, choosing for his subject, "The Material Versus the Spiritual." A trio, Mrs. Fred Hobbs, Mrs. Boland, and Mrs. Paul Schmidt, sang "Far Above Life's Lowering Shadows," and the choir contributed "Christians, Wake."

In the evening Elder Okerlind discoursed on "The Gospel as a Witness." The choir sang a number and the day's activities were closed with the singing of "If I have Wounded Any Soul Today," by Sister Boland.

On Monday evening about forty members, old and young, met in honor of Sister Pearl Denton who was planning to leave the city. Games and contests were enjoyed, then a volume of poems was presented the guest of honor. Sister Boland sang a group of solos and Sister Denton and Brother Andrew Taylor contributed readings after which refreshments were served.

On Tuesday evening a number motored to Vanscoy to attend service at the home of Brother and Sister Mogenson. Elder Okerlind was the speaker and Sister Boland, Averil and Marvin Diggle sang two trio numbers.

Sister Nels Peterson who has been seriously ill for several weeks, is greatly missed from branch activities.

Willapa, Washington

Saints of Willapa Branch greatly enjoyed the visit of Elder H. I. Velt during the last week in August and the first few days of September. Two very good sermons were delivered by Elder Velt at the morning and evening services Sunday, August 26. On Monday evening talks were given by Sisters Anita Wolfenbarger, Jean Shamley, Nina Wolfenbarger, and Brothers Russell Eyer and Oliver Ralston on different phases and their impressions of the activities at the Silver Lake Reunion. Those of the branch who did not get to attend reunion this year are looking forward to the opportunity of going next year.

After a priesthood meeting on Tuesday evening, Elder Velt delivered a spiritual sermon on the trials which people will have to face in the future. After many members had fasted for the evening meal, the prayer meeting Wednesday evening was blessed to the extent that there was one hundred percent participation in the prayer and testimony service.

Thursday evening came the young people's club, and a social gathering was enjoyed at the river bank where games were played and songs sung around a big bonfire. The young people's club, known as the Branch Boosters' Club, is now sponsoring an attendance contest, and a large number were present at their social meeting.

On Friday evening, following a meeting of the priesthood, Elder Velt spoke of the missionary duty of every member of the church, of how great is the task before them, and how each could conform to the laws of the church in both individual and collective cooperation in the branch.

Although Brother Velt had planned on leaving on Saturday, to go to his home in Longview, he was persuaded to stay for the sacrament service Sunday morning.

It was largely through the work of Elders Marcus Cook and Elder Velt that the people of Willapa have had the wonderful privilege of learning of Christ's church and its work since the Restoration of this gospel.

Hialeah, Florida

Saints of Miami Branch at Hialeah want to let the church and especially all members contemplating coming to this part of Florida for the winter, know that they are alert and active in the work.

Some changes have taken place in the branch since it last found space in Herald columns. They have secured a hall, and after doing some repair work, they moved in to hold meetings. They have taken a year's lease on the hall.

Local workers are looking happily forward to a visit from Apostle Myron A. McConley sometime in the near future. He is in charge of this mission, and wrote to the pastor some time ago saying that he expected to call at Hialeah on his way to the Isle of Pines Mission to the south.

This little band of Saints has been augmented by Saints from other parts of the State, and all are faithful workers. The first to come were Brother and Sister Hilldreth and family, from Detroit, followed a little later by Brother and Sister Cain, of Indianapolis. Both families are making their residence here. In the last few weeks the family of Brother and Sister John Roylance, of Hartford, Connecticut and Sister Roylance's mother, Sister Mary Wilcox, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, arrived. The latest comer was the pastor's youngest sister, Sister Willey, from Iowa. Her help at the piano, in the absence of the regular pianist, has been appreciated.

This branch is one of the bright spots of church activity. It is located near the end of the Florida peninsula, is five hundred miles from a neighbor branch and three hundred miles from the nearest known member except those in the immediate vicinity. There are about thirty-five members here, one elder, two priests, one teacher, and two deacons.

However, one priest and both deacons are unable to attend.

Owing to the scattered condition of the membership they hold only Sunday morning services at present. Nevertheless, the young people have a meeting, and some missionary work is under contemplation.

Members of the church coming this way for the winter or for shorter visits will find a hearty welcome at the home of the pastor and family, Elder Lawrence Willey, 133 North East Fifth Street, Hialeah, Florida.

Wellsburg, West Virginia

Wellsburg Branch held its annual business meeting, September 30, and the following officers were elected; Pastor, Robert Rodgers; superintendent of the church school, John Trieber; secretary, Sister Virginia McVay. These will be aided by a splendid corps of assisting officers.

Brother Willard Allen, a faithful servant of the Lord, after holding the office of pastor for twenty years, or since the organization of the branch, felt it necessary to resign because of ill health. The Saints were sorry to lose him from this office, but have welcomed Brother Robert Rodgers as their new leader.

The Sunday school has been prospering.

Young people of the branch are very active, and the women are doing a good work.

Wellsburg Branch has had eighteen baptisms this year, and they pray that God will bless each of his Saints and the branches everywhere.

Mapleton, Kansas

During the past season church activities have been conducted with increasing interest under the leadership of Pastor Lee Quick and his assistant, Wayne Jennings. Thirteen new members have been added to the roll. They now have two hundred and thirty-eight members.

The junior church school, supervised by Sister Lola McCollam, is functioning well.

Under the leadership of Sister Nina Needham, the young people have organized and have named their organization the Y. Z. B. (Youthful Zion Builders). They hold regular meetings each Tuesday night, having study, business, and recreation. September 25, they enjoyed a wiener roast at the home of Orion Dennis. Tuesday evening, October 2, they had with them O. W. Sarratt, of Independence, who gave an inspiring talk.

The young people are taking an active interest in the early morning prayer meetings held each first Sunday of the month, Brother Arthur Dennis in charge.

The women's department is meeting each Wednesday afternoon, and they are quilting a quilt to be sold at the bazaar this fall. They have sponsored two food sales this month.

A reception was given Thursday, September 27, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Brillhart, nonmembers, for their untiring efforts in the Fort Scott Tribune campaign, a few months ago, winning for the Reorganized Church the first prize in the church contest. The prize was one hundred and fifty dollars. A program was given, and as the concluding number a clever song was sung while Verna and Hazel Dennis unrolled a friendship quilt on which were embroidered seventy-six names. This was given by the women of the church, and a dainty boudoir cushion was given by Sister Lee Quick.

October 6, about fifty Saints and neighbors gathered at the home of Sister A. L. Needham, and gave her a surprise on her fifty-seventh birthday. Mrs. Newt Myrick was an honor guest, the occasion being her eighty-fourth birthday.

Mission Branch, Illinois

The annual business meeting of Mission Branch occurred October 2, and Elder F. E. Turner was chosen pastor, to be assisted by W. Anderson, priest. Vernon Hougas will be the superintendent of religious education, assisted by the following department heads: Adult, Eva Godwin; young people, W. L. Anderson; children, Lois Hartshorn. A number of other faithful helpers were elected to assisting offices.

This branch lies nestled in the heart of a farming community, and the membership have felt the pangs of the drought and chinch bugs, yet their loyalty is manifest by the annual branch report.

The women's department deserves much credit for its untiring efforts. Through bake sales, afternoon teas, and suppers they have contributed financially and socially to the support of the church. Although the weather was inclement, the chicken supper, recently sponsored by the women's department, was well attended.

The women made a quilt for the Harvest Home Festival. It was a handsome specimen of needlework. They plan to have a study period at their regular meetings during the coming year.

Midweek prayer services have been resumed, and God has blessed them greatly.

Friends of Brother Albert Hayer were saddened to hear of his sudden death, October 6. Sympathy is extended the family. Elder David E. Dowker, of Detroit, Michigan, conducted the funeral services.

The priesthood have plans for the coming year which should lead to advancement. The Saints are pressing forward in harmonious cooperation. They invite those who have lost contact with the church to meet with them once more.

Omaha, Nebraska

The young people, under the direction of Glen Clarke, were fortunate in securing the tutorship of Apostle F. Henry Edwards throughout their young people's institute from October 4 to 7. The subject of study was the history of the church.

It is gratifying to know that the youth of the church are desirous of giving service to the church. It is doubly significant when they realize that efficient service cannot be given until a foundation is built to secure the stand they have taken. A knowledge of the standard books and of church history is fundamental. Specialization follows with greater security if it is built on this foundation.

These truths were woven into the skeleton of church history presented at the institute. Time prohibited more than an outline of the study.

Saturday evening was devoted to the banquet, and the theme was "School Days." This event brought Apostle J. F. Garver and Brother Orrin in from their fields of labor.

Sunday evening was devoted to a round table. The present plans for Omaha include the young people's institute as an annual affair.

London, Ontario

Quite a large attendance was had at the sacrament service the first of the month. The meeting was in charge of Pastor J. E. MacGregor. A good spirit prevailed.

The women's department is busy quilting and preparing for their big bazaar in November.

Large attendance greeted rally day. The weather was ideal, and the church font was beautifully decorated. Five members of the church school were baptized at the morning session and confirmed at a special service in the evening. Short talks were given by Pastor J. E. MacGregor and Elder Frank Gray, church school director. The choir and orchestra rendered valuable aid at this service.

The church was crowded to capacity last month to witness the marriage of Sister Claire E. Timbrell, daughter of Brother and Sister Thomas G. Timbrell, to Mr. Stirling F. Young, son of Mrs. George A. Young. Bishop J. C. Dent officiated. A buffet supper was served at the home of the bride's parents.

After a serious spell of illness during the past month, Brother Billie Bicknell is again out. Blessings, administration and prayers rendered an operation unnecessary.

Several local members motored to Pontiac to attend the Detroit district conference. They enjoyed the gathering and were pleased to meet some of the officers of the general church.

Briefs

Lima, Ohio, Branch has seven new members, all young people, baptized by Pastor C. E. Cottrell. They are B. F. Fix, Hiram Cottrell and wife, Clara, Mabel Cottrell, Clara Belle Hadsell, and Ronald and Donald Hadsell, twins. They were baptized October 7.

Elder C. E. Cottrell was reelected branch pastor October 1. In the past he has served faithfully, untiringly, in this office. He will be assisted by J. F. Ream.

Elder J. R. Allen is winning a fine response to the gospel word in Texas. In July of this year he held a two-week meeting near Rosebud, baptizing six. Excellent attendance was granted him, sometimes as many as six hundred being present. The group at Rosebud has taken on new life under Brother Allen's leadership. Recently, too, he held meetings at New Baden, baptizing three.

Glenn Myers, a priest, has been elected president of the branch at Kalamazoo, Michigan, Maple at Westnedge Street. He was nominated in a letter written by Apostle D. T. Williams, and was elected at the annual business meeting October 14. Muriel Robinson was elected assistant pastor and church school director. Robert West, twelve years old, was chosen assistant church school director. Brother Myers is ambitious for the cause of Christ, and the Saints are ready to give him their support, and grow spiritually and numerically.

Apostle D. T. Williams visited Kalamazoo, Michigan, Saints in September. He was accompanied by Sister Williams. A fine gathering was had, Saints being present from Battle Creek and Grand Rapids.

Spring River District young people two hundred strong, met for a camp fire prayer meeting at Forest Park, October 16, and their theme was "A Reasonable Exchange." Special prayers were had for District President Amos T. Higdon, a friend of all young people, who was ill at his home in Independence. The service was followed by games and a hamburger fry. These young men and women will meet again at the Springfield conference in November.

Elder C. A. Beil, of Clinton, Iowa, has for the past three years held cottage services in the vicinity of Deer Grove and Tampico, Illinois. Many are interested. The next meeting will be held November 11, at the home of L. E. Burgess, Deer Grove, sacrament at 11 a. m., and preaching in the afternoon and evening.

Skiatook, Oklahoma

The work of the church looks brighter at Skiatook than it has for a long time. Emmett Lancaster came from Tulsa a few times to the local all-day meetings and basket dinners.

T. P. Greenwood who has charge of the work at Skiatook has made several visits to nonmembers homes and has enjoyed the privilege of fireside gospel talks which generated considerable interest.

District President A. E. Stoft came in September and preached a week of sermons to the interest of Saints and their friends.

Brother Greenwood baptized five, John Marrs, (son-in-law of Brother Fisher), Mrs. Lillie McMellin, Mrs. Obbie Carter, Miss Marie Poore, and little Evelyn Poore. All are worthy members. Several others are interested, and more baptisms are expected soon.

Elders Lee Quick and A. E. Stoft began meetings here October 14, and Saints and their friends are giving a fine response.

On the last Sunday of September they had an impressive promotion day service during the church school hour, supervised by Sister Pearl Greenwood, superintendent of the children's division.

The Saints were saddened by the loss of an aged sister, "Grandma" Byrnes, mother of Sister Ola Simms, who passed from this life October 4. T. P. Greenwood preached the funeral sermon.

Clarksburg, West Virginia

Homecoming and rally day at Clarksburg proved most successful. The Saints of West Virginia gathered October 7, for a very spiritual and happy day. The spirit of good will and love prevailed throughout the services, encouraging the Saints.

During Sunday school Brother Forester, pastor, and Brother Phillips, assistant pastor, were kept busy providing chairs and enlarging the borders of the classes to take care of new arrivals.

At 11 a. m., Frank L. Shinn, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, preached. This was followed by a rush on the part of local Saints, to invite the visitors to go home with them to dinner.

Sacrament service convened at two o'clock, Pastor A. O. Forester in charge. Elder J. C. McConnaughy, of Barberton, Ohio, spoke briefly before the emblems were passed.

A short history of Clarksburg Branch was read by H. G. Johnson, then letters were read from distant members, Brother and Sister Baldwin, Thomas Newton, Guy H. Hammond, Brother and Sister A. C. Silvers, Clyde Baker, and others.

At 7:45 p. m. Brother McConnaughy preached a fine sermon, concluding a day's services.

Baker, North Dakota

Elder P. T. Anderson, of Council Bluffs, finished a three-week meeting at Baker, North Dakota, October 7. He was given a large attendance, and many are deeply interested in the work.

At the beginning of the meetings few attended, but as the word traveled abroad, the attendance grew. On the last evening more chairs were needed to accommodate everyone.

On the last Saturday and Sunday Warren McElwaine and Frank Spaulding were here from Lansford and Minot.

On Saturday two sisters were baptized in a greenhouse Brother Floyd C. Lively has just finished building. Many were present, and the Spirit of God was there.

Brother and Sister Joe Darling, from Thorne, North Dakota, were with them on Sunday.

Two babies were blessed in the afternoon.

The people and Saints of Baker contributed to the church welfare very liberally, and workers are sure that when Brother Anderson returns for a second series of meetings, more will come into the church. May the good work go on to complete and triumphant success.

Four Corner Mission, Missouri

Four Corner Mission met in business session September 9, and again elected D. A. Fuller to serve as pastor, assisted by Walter Bullard and J. N. Sherwin. Clark Hursh was selected as solicitor in this mission. Ralph Wilt was elected to head the church school, and given a corps of willing and able officers. Clark Hursh is superintendent of the religio.

A birthday dinner was served Sunday, September 23, honoring four members whose birth dates came during that month. This also served as a farewell dinner for Ralph Wilt who left the next day for Texas. He will be missed in this little group.

Sister Mary Bullard is now acting as church school superintendent. She has a long way to come and has been very punctual.

Teachers have been selected for both Sunday school and religio classes, and are a consecrated group.

The pastor and one of his assistants, J. N. Sherwin, motored to Ava Branch, October 7, and Brother Fuller was in charge of services there in the morning. Several visitors were present from Mansfield, Missouri. A wonderful outpouring of God's Spirit was experienced.

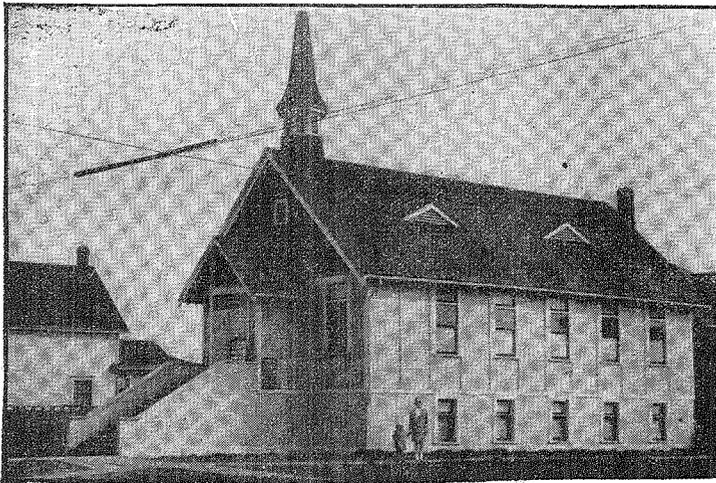

After services were over, they ate lunch and came back to town stopping to serve sacrament to Sister Elizabeth Burris, a shutin. Again the Spirit was given them.

Then the brothers returned to Four Corner Mission for religio, and the local Saints were served the sacrament after the religio meeting.

Vancouver, British Columbia

Slocan and Dundas Street. — The priesthood of this branch are busy, and their activities were presented in some fine reports to the annual business meeting, September 17. They have been preaching, visiting, and conducting missionary services in the homes of Sister McConnell, Central Park, Brother Lambert in charge, and Brother John Truttman, Lulu Island, in charge of Edwin Spargo; also a Sunday school at the home of Brother Lambert. The missions are responsible for some baptisms. Baptisms of the branch have totaled seven.

Reports from the treasurer and solicitor, at the business meeting, indicated that the Saints have made good contributions to general and local church funds. The Christmas offering won favorable comment from the bishop's agent.

Vancouver, British Columbia, Church, Slocan and Dundas Street, dedicated by President F. M. Smith and Bishop J. A. Becker five years ago.

The branch was asked to approve the names of Edwin Spargo, called to the office of elder, and Charles Stanbridge, deacon. Both received the endorsement of the congregation.

Brother Spargo was ordained later at the district conference held at Seattle, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, and Elders Samuel Pope and George E. Miller officiating. The ordination of Brother Stanbridge will take place at Vancouver.

Officers chosen for the year ahead are: Branch president, Elder George E. Miller; counselors, Elders James E. Johnston, and Edwin Spargo; secretary, Sister Emily McMullin; treasurer, Deacon Chase Taylor. Brother Taylor is also the church school director, and his department supervisors are: adult, Brother Gerrie; young people, Norman Morrison; children, Sister Bell. These leaders were given a faithful corps of assisting officers. The junior church has a good organization at Vancouver.

Sister Gerrie will again lead the women's department which launched into the year's activities with a thanksgiving supper, October 8. A good number participated, and a concert given by the pupils of Mrs. Riches, a Vancouver music teacher, followed the meal. Among her artists was the Saints' own little soloist, four-year-old Audrey Miller.

On the sick list recently has been Brother Charles Hutton who had the misfortune to be injured at work, and spent a few days in the hospital. Brother Freeman Snider, of Chillawach, is also an inmate of Saint Paul Hospital, having undergone an operation. He is improving.

A special program is being prepared for the children in the form of lantern lectures. This will include church history, Bible, and Book of Mormon pictures. There will also be missionary stories.

Buchanan, Michigan

Apostle D. T. Williams was at Buchanan September 18, and delivered an uplifting sermon. Following this the Zion's Christian Legion was organized with these officers: Company commander, Glenn Cease; secretary, Iona Cease; treasurer, Stephen Martin; director of solicitation, George Seymore; director of socialization, Lee Coonfare; director of publicity, Glenn Cease.

Having effected an efficient organization, these workers intend to complete the basement of the church and to assist the general church with tithes and offerings. They are very enthusiastic.

October 1, Buchanan had its yearly election of branch officers, and organized under the church school program. Elder A. C. Barmore presided. Officers chosen were: Pastor, Elder Lee Coonfare; assistant pastor, George Seymour; treasurer, Stephen Martin; secretary, Grace Bates; church school director,

Briefs

Graceland's Homecoming, October 26, 27, and 28, was the largest event of its kind that the college has ever known. Favored by ideal weather, hundreds of visitors drove to Lamoni and to the college on the hill.

The program began with a 3 p. m. chapel service on Friday, and from that hour on the old Graceland spirit and fellowship dominated the gathering. The Coliseum was crowded for the homecoming play Friday night, "Streets of New York," directed by Mr. Roscoe Faunce, and this was followed by the student-alumni mixer. Perhaps the numerical climax was reached Saturday evening at the annual alumni dinner when 314 guests sat down to dine and to enjoy the program with Leonard Lea, president of the Alumni Association, as toastmaster. The spiritual climax was attained Sunday morning at the student-alumni fellowship, in charge of Elder Roy Chevillie. Bishop L. F. P. Curry's fine homecoming address at the Coliseum was the closing event, and shortly after noon cars began to wind down the hill, and homecomers cast a last look, for this year, at Graceland's high, red tower gleaming in the autumn sunlight.

Independence, Missouri, members are to enjoy an all-winter missionary series. The opening two weeks' effort began Sunday night, October 28, at Englewood Church, Elder J. W. A. Bailey the speaker. From Englewood the series will be carried to Spring Branch Church for the succeeding two weeks, and thence, in turn, to the other churches in the center place.

President Elbert A. Smith preached to five hundred Saints on conference Sunday morning for Detroit District, October 14. He delivered his sermon in the Elks' temple situated on property owned by Stephen Mack back in 1818. Mr. Mack was a brother of Lucy Mack Smith, mother of Joseph the Martyr, and one of the founders of the settlement of Pontiac. The first branch of the church was established there six years later by Hyrum Smith and Lyman Wight.

The spirit of unity prevailed at the conference, and the Saints were made happy by the presence and help of President Smith, Apostle D. T. Williams, Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith, Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths, and Elders Hubert Case and John R. Grice. From Ontario came Elder and Sister Frank Grey, of London, and Elder James Morrison, of Owen Sound. Elder Kenneth H. Green was again chosen to preside as district president.

Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths preached every evening during the week following the Detroit district conference, at Pontiac. He then went to Brown City, Michigan, to conduct services.

Stephen Martin; young people's supervisor, George Seymour; children's supervisor, Maxine Myers; women's leader, Verna Riley, and publicity agent, Glenn Cease.

District President A. C. Barmore started a series of meetings at Buchanan September 23, presenting excellent themes and thoughts. Everyone was benefited by his labors. October 7, he was in charge of the sacrament service which was blessed with an unusual portion of God's Spirit. During this hour Sister Most gave a spiritual exhortation to the young people. Elder Mark Gross the local pastor for the last three years, was given a rising vote of thanks for his splendid help. Brother Gross declined to be nominated again because he intends to leave this city.

A Long-time Pastor and His Wife

Elder James McLean was elected president of Proton Branch, Ontario, in 1887, and has continued in that office ever since. He is lovingly known to the Saints as "Uncle Jim," and now a group of fine, loyal young people is springing up about him. Their presence and help speak well for the branch over which Brother McLean has presided faithfully and well.

He was baptized by James A. McIntosh in February, 1886, and ordained an elder in June, 1887, by R. C. Evans. He married Sister Adeline Taylor, of Grand Valley, in November, 1890, and they are the parents of five daughters and four sons.

Fanning, Kansas

Elder Charles Fry, of Topeka, held meetings at Fanning the last week in September and the first in October. Although none was baptized, the Saints were greatly strengthened by his sermons, and they hope to have Brother Fry return for other services.

They have been enjoying good attendance at the sacrament meetings. The service in September was an especially good one. Most of the young people took part, expressing their desire to do more for the church.

An Oriole circle has been organized with seven members. The girls are trying to make money in order that they may attend the Stewartsville reunion next summer. Several Saints from here had that opportunity this year, and more hope to go next.

Sister Samuel Twombly has returned home after spending the summer with her daughter, Sister Harry Ratcliffe and family at Fargo, North Dakota. She is a strong member in the branch at Fanning, and the Saints are glad to have her there.

The women's department has been working on a comfort and a few clothes for the family of Brother Don Marsh who had the misfortune to lose their home by fire this summer.

The branch is planning to have a recreation night each month, and in this way draw more Saints together.

New Haven, Connecticut

The Saints of this mission are few but faithful, and meetings have quietly continued sometimes in the face of conditions that were not encouraging.

God has made known to his people by his Holy Spirit that there are in this city those who are hungry for the truth and waiting to be fed. In faith the Saints are ready to move out and minister to their needs.

The Saints have secured a meeting place for services on Sunday morning in one of the halls in the Swedish Fraternal Building, 19 Elm Street, between Orange and State Streets, in the heart of the city. Their service is from 10 a. m. to twelve o'clock. The Wednesday evening prayer services will be held in the homes until conditions make a change necessary.

The mission officers and members will be glad to have all Saints passing through New Haven, stop and worship with them. The pastor's telephone is listed in the telephone directory under the church name.

Their first meeting in the hall was the sacrament service October 7, and the Holy Spirit was abundantly given. This meeting was Pentecostal.

The Saints are pleased to have meeting with them Brother and Sister Fred Harper and son, formerly of Buffalo, now located at New Britain, about thirty miles from New Haven.

ELDER AND SISTER JAMES MCLEAN

Loyal Daughters Society of Goodland, Kansas

This autograph quilt made by the Loyal Daughters Society of Goodland, Kansas, bears nine hundred and thirty names, and was one of the money raising enterprises of the club early this year.

Sixteen women took a block and began a name contest February 14. The charge for having one's name embroidered on the quilt was five cents, and autographs alone brought a sum of $46.50 into the society's treasury. Mrs. Pauline Roberts, of Ruleton, won the first prize for securing names, bringing in one hundred and seventy-six, and received another beautiful quilt as an award. Several blocks amounted to five dollars or over in names, and the women are grateful to all who assisted in this work. The contest closed April 24 after much friendly rivalry.

The latest effort of the Loyal Daughters Society to raise money was the operating of a lunch counter at the North West Kansas Fair, and with but few exceptions all assisted in their turn. They worked hard, learned many things about such an undertaking, and when all expenses were paid, including the buying of their building, the paying of special taxes, and other items, they had a profit of sixty dollars.

This club of industrious women has other ideas which are intended not only to help the branch with expenses but to augment interest in the work of the church.

Longview-Kelso Mission, Washington

The Saints here are carrying on and showing some results in spite of being handicapped by a poor meeting place.

On Sunday, October 14, six more were baptized, three by Elder Velt and three by Milton Becker, who was ordained a priest at the last district conference held in Portland, Oregon. They were confirmed by Elders Velt, Livingston, and Willard Becker.

Willard Becker was ordained an elder at the district conference at Portland.

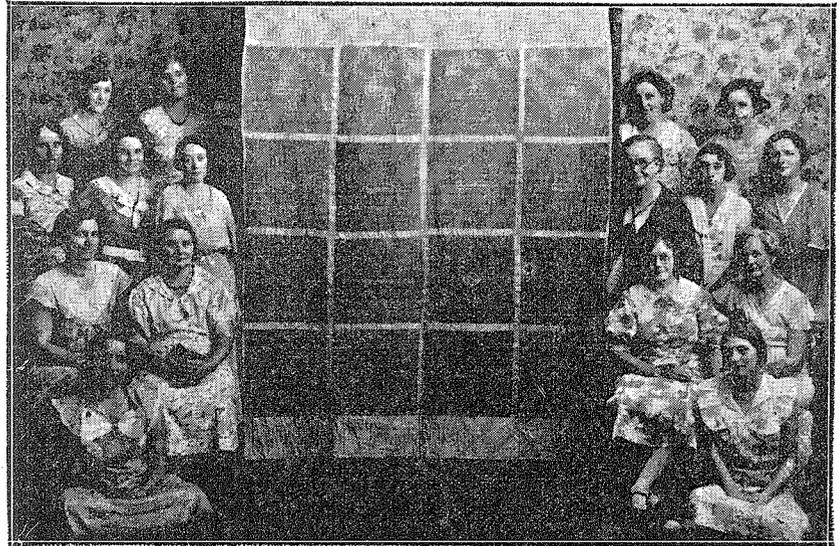

Elder Livingston was down from the Portland District Sunday to take charge of the election of officers at this mission for the following year. Elder Willard Becker was elected pastor; Milton Becker, director of church school and financial agent; Mollie Becker, secretary of church school; Sister Swanson, head of the music department; Sister Whiting, head of the women's department, and Brother Rasmussen, head of the young people.

The Saints were sorry to see Brother and Sister H. I. Velt leave to take up their duties in Spokane, Washington. They will always have a warm spot in our hearts as they did a wonderful work at this place, Sister Velt helping out greatly in the music department.

Members are taking a renewed interest in the work.

The women's department met September 20, to commence their activities for the season. After setting up a quilt, they planned their annual supper for November 22. While some of the sisters

Saint Thomas, Ontario

Saint Thomas Branch appreciates the services of the officers of London District and the priesthood of London Branch. Those favoring them during the past summer were Elders Winegarten, MacGregor, Dent, Duesling, and Brother Arlo Hodgson, all of London; Elder Tomlinson and Elder Atkinson, of Saint Marys; Elder Weeks, of Delhi; Elder Gordon Brown, of Saginaw, Michigan, and Brother Ray Best, of Corinth.

In July the ministerial conference was held with Apostle D. T. Williams and Elder Percy Farrow as speakers. During the session Apostle Williams organized the Zion's Christian Legion for London District.

As the fall and winter months settle down the branch is enjoying a busy time in the various departments. An alert group of young people is found there. They have the spirit to build and to do.

As a result of the efforts of the Amity Club, the front of the church has been given a fine appearance with brass rod and red velvet drapes. And new lights have been installed.

The religio has made a new start after its summer holidays, and with the piano donated to the lower auditorium, is planning better features during the winter.

Led by Sister Cosan, the choir is giving good service. They sing every Sunday evening.

quilted a committee convened by the president of the department, Sister Burger, prepared a get-together supper in the basement, and twenty-two were served. Although the women did not meet every week during the summer, they assembled at intervals to plan ways of making their monthly sacrifice offerings. They had a successful food sale in August. On August 8, they enjoyed a picnic at Pinafore Park.

The work of the Sunday school is progressing, attendance averaging seventy-two for the past year. Special services were held on Children's Day when four were baptized. A good program was presented under the direction of Sisters E. Ford, Stephens, and Lipsitt, and an address of appreciation was read to the superintendent, Brother N. Kelley. Sister Kelley was presented a bouquet of flowers. J. C. Dent was the speaker for the day.

Sister M. A. Dick, Oxly, Missouri, desires the prayers of the Saints that she may be restored to health.

Four Corner Mission, Missouri, recently enjoyed a brief visit from District President W. E. Haden. They hope he will soon find time to return for a longer visit. Brother Haden's fatherly counsel is greatly appreciated there.

The Bulletin Board

Attention Legion Directors of Solicitation!

Everyone should have a copy of the Zion's Christian Legion pamphlet which is just off the press. This publication contains information which every legionnaire should possess—the history of the organization, its objectives and the duties of its officers. The price is ten cents a copy; lots of ten, seventy-five cents. Officers of companies will do well to order in larger quantities, and an effort should be made to have one in the hands of every local member regardless of membership in the legion. The undersigned will promptly fill all orders.

Tithing cards are free, having been donated by a devoted legionnaire. Hundreds of these are in use. However, as no provisions has yet been made for the expenses of those carrying on this work, we are under the necessity of asking those writing for cards to enclose ten cents to defray the cost of postage, etc.—S. Gordon Brown, general director of solicitation, 215 Seymour, North Lansing, Michigan.

Legion Institute at Coldwater, Michigan

A Zion's Christian Legion rally and institute of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District will be held at Coldwater, Michigan, November 3 and 4. The institute will open Saturday at 2:30 p. m., and continue through Sunday afternoon. All interested in the legion movement are invited to attend whether they are members of the legion or not. Speakers and general legion officers who will be present include Apostle D. T. Williams, Bishop Elmer C. Evans, Louise Evans, Elders S. Gordon Brown and Alan Pohley. It is particularly important that all local legion officers be present; a program has been arranged to assist you in your work. Discussions on legion work and vital church problems together with good music are features of the program.—Alva J. Dexter, divisional director, district commander of Zion's Christian Legion.

Anniversary Service

Anniversary services will be held at the Saints' church at Bothwell, Ontario, Sunday, November 4, at 11 a. m., 3 and 7:30 p. m. Speakers will be Bishop J. C. Dent, London; Elder George Njiem, Chatham; Elder Robert Brown, Merlin. Special music by the choir, assisted by Wabash Quartette. A chicken supper will be served in the basement of the church Monday, November 5, at 6 p. m., followed by a program in which Elder George Njiem will present a stereopticon lecture on the twenty-third Psalm. He will be assisted by a number of artists. Price: Adults, $ .35; children, $ .20.—J. C. Dent, chairman; W. R. Leverton, pastor.

Homecoming Notices

The annual banquet and homecoming of Port Huron, Michigan, Branch, will be conducted at the church on Varney Avenue, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, November 2, 3, and 4. The banquet will be served to members of the priesthood and their companions of Sarnia, Saint Clair and Port Huron branches. At 10:30 a. m., Saturday, the homecoming program will begin and continue until Sunday evening. The program will consist of lectures, sermons, sacrament service, devotionals and discussions. The sacrament will be served at 9 a. m. Sunday. Good music, food, and sleeps will be provided. Come, former members, come friends of the branch, and worship again at the "block church on Varney." You will want to hear Apostles F. Henry Edwards and D. T. Williams, and District President William Grice.—William Patterson, pastor.

Bay City, Michigan, Branch, will hold a homecoming at the church, Catherine and Thomas Streets, Bay City, November 10 and 11. The opening feature will be a banquet Saturday at 8 p. m. Services will be held all day Sunday, beginning with prayer service in the morning followed by several sermons by special speakers. All who can, should bring baskets for the Sunday dinner, and the women of the branch will serve something warm to go with the basket lunches.—Alene Wood, clerk of Bay City Branch.

Conference Notices

Central Illinois district conference will be held at Beardstown, November 17 and 18. The program will be as follows: Saturday, 10:30 a. m., prayer meeting; 2 p. m., business meeting and election of officers; 7:30 p. m., program by the young people of the district. Sunday, 8:30 a. m., prayer hour; 10 a. m., church school class work; 11:15 a. m., sermon by J. F. Garver; 12:30, lunch served; 2:30 p. m., sermon by L. G. Holloway; 7:30, sermon by J. F. Garver. All are requested to attend.—Arthur Henson, district president.

Southeastern Illinois district conference will be held at Centralia, December 15 and 16, for the purpose of electing district officers and transacting business of the district. Apostle J. F. Garver and district Missionary L. G. Holloway are expected to be present to assist and instruct. Blanks will be sent to each branch president, to be distributed to those expected to make reports. Please fill these blanks out at once and mail to the district secretary, Myrtie Choate, 611 Smith Street, Benton, Illinois. All are invited to attend the conference. Come with the spirit of devotion, and the Lord will bless you.—Ernest Roberson, district president; Myrtie Choate, secretary.

Our Departed Ones

DeFRANCE.—Rebecca W. Mitchell was born June 24, 1845, at Britten, Pennsylvania; died at the home of her son, M. R. DeFrance, at Calumet, Oklahoma, September 11, 1934. She was united in marriage to James A. DeFrance in 1863, and to them seven children were born six of whom are living. She was baptized into the church, September 7, 1924, by Elder M. Crownover, and identified herself with Calumet Branch. Was true and faithful till death. She was laid to rest September 12, 1934, beside her husband who preceded her in death February 22, 1917. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Elmer Richards, Elder A. G. Owings in charge. Interment was in Red Rock Cemetery.

LILJA.—Gust Lilja was born in Gottenberg, Sweden, and came to America in October, 1907. On August 22, 1908, he was united in marriage to Hulda Johnson. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, February 26, 1924. About a year later he was called to the office of a deacon and was ordained March 22, 1925. The early part of his church life was spent in Belvidere, Illinois. He was of a very generous spirit and a staunch defender of the faith. He opened his home to branch meetings and missionary work of the gospel. He later removed to Rockford, helping in the church work. Was industrious and sincere. He departed this life July 11, 1934. Brother Lilja will be remembered by the Saints of Northeastern Illinois District.

HUFFAKER.—Sarah Huffaker died at Wheaton, Minnesota, as the result of an automobile accident, August 20, 1934. She was born at Ottumwa, Iowa, June 4, 1852, and spent most of her life in Iowa. Was married to Miles Huffaker in July, 1871, at Glenwood, Iowa, by whom she was the mother of five children, three of whom are living: Herbert H. Huffaker, of Omaha, Nebraska; Mrs. Olive Heide, of Chicago, Illinois, and Mrs. Albert Moore, of Winnipeg, Canada. There also survive one sister and two brothers, Emma Bryan, of Aberdeen, South Dakota; Archibald Hunt, of Tabor, Iowa, and Noah Hunt, of Glenwood. Her husband died in 1912. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church in early life, May 10, 1868, at Salt Lake City, Utah, by J. W. Gillen. Leaves also thirteen grandchildren, and fourteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Silver City, Iowa, conducted by Elder J. F. Mintun, assisted by the Methodist minister, August 22.

SPRAGUE.—Jayne Thomas, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Grant Thomas, was born at Bullock, South Dakota, February 19, 1911, and died at Rockford, Illinois, July 11, 1934. The early years of her life were spent in Wisconsin. When she was eight years old she became a member of the church at Lancaster, Wisconsin. Seven years ago she moved to Rockford with her parents and brother. June 6, 1932, she married Roland D. Sprague, and to them one child was born, Joyce Elaine. Besides her husband and child, Mrs. Sprague is survived by her parents, and one brother, Stanley Thomas; a number of other relatives, and a large circle of friends. Her faith in God was unflinching and was beautifully expressed by her during her illness. She believed that to live is to give. Blessed with a beautiful voice, she sang songs to glorify God. She was a friend of the friendless, a defender for those who needed defense.

HARDY.—Nellie W. Hardy, wife of George E. Hardy, was born October 25, 1868, and died at her home at Surry, Maine, September 13, 1934, leaving her husband, a son, Ralph Hardy, of Washington, D. C., and two daughters, Hazel and Helen Hardy, of Surry, Maine, together with other relatives and many friends, to cherish her memory. Funeral services were held at the home, September 15, in charge of Elder E. F. Robertson, assisted by Bishop E. L. Traver.

WEEKS.—Mary Catherine Wells was born July 27, 1895, near Fillmore, Missouri, and after a long and painful illness departed this life September 27, 1934. She married John W. Weeks, December 31, 1914, and to them two children were born, John W. Jr., and Mary Agnes, both of the home at Independence, Missouri. Mary was baptized into the church in 1914, by Elder W. G. Bronson, and was a faithful member until her death. She loved her church and always was willing to serve whenever the call came. She will be sadly missed in her home. Surviving are her husband, her son, her daughter; her mother, Mrs. D. F. Downs; one brother, S. H. Wells, other relatives, and many friends. She had been an intense sufferer, and eleven months ago she submitted to a serious operation and had been sustained by her fortitude and the blessings of administration until she took a relapse two weeks before her departure. Her mother cared tenderly for her during her suffering, and indeed all that loving hands could do for her, was done. The funeral was held at Stahl's Funeral Home in Independence, September 29, Richard Bullard in charge.

EBERT.—Ernst Hermon Ebert died at his home, Alexander, Kansas, September 8, 1934. He was born at Hesse, Germany, November 15, 1849, and when seven years of age came with his parents to the United States, living for a time in Saint Louis, where about 1875, he united with the Reorganized Church. Married Clara Martha Geeson in 1875; was ordained a priest in 1899. Took up a homestead in Kansas in 1879, in Ness County, near Bazine, where most of his remaining years were spent, though he retired from active work at the age of seventy-two and moved to Alexander. He is survived by his wife, five sons, and two daughters. Services were conducted by Charles Fry, assisted by A. J. Reed.

HANRAHAN.—Dora Fern Boyle, youngest daughter of James F., and Emma C. Boyle, was born September 13, 1892, at Hubbell, Nebraska; passed away at her home at Monmouth, Illinois, August 10, 1934. Her young life was spent in and around New Boston, Illinois. She received her education at New Boston High School. When thirteen years old she united with the church and continued a faithful member. Married Louis J. Hanrahan at Rock Island, September 26, 1915. An adopted son, Daniel Eugene, preceded her in death, August 7, 1918. Her mother died August 10, 1923, her sister, Allie A. Sanford, died December 13, 1927, and her father, March 30, 1934. Her hands were always doing kind things for someone. She was patient and cheerful. Left to mourn beside her husband are one sister, Mrs. Loren Knapp, of Monmouth; one brother, Harley F. Boyle; two aunts, other relatives and many friends. Funeral services were held at Turnbull Funeral Home at Monmouth, Illinois, and another service was held at Eliza Union chapel. Sermons were by Elder J. W. Bean, assisted by W. V. Holmes, and interment was in Eliza Creek Cemetery.

CHASE.—Asaph E. Chase was born November 29, 1852, in Harrison County, Iowa; died June 4, 1934, near Cuba, New York. In early manhood he married Agnes C. Clark, and to them five children were born. Two of these with his wife preceded him in death. Those surviving are: Earl Chase, of Montana; Mrs. James Carson, Pisgah, Iowa, and Roy M. Chase, of Cuba, New York. Of his father's family there survive one sister, Mrs. W. S. Gamet, of Logan, Iowa, and a brother, A. M. Chase, of Independence, Missouri.

HURST.—Billy Hurst was born August 22, 1923, at Independence, Missouri. Died at the Independence Sanitarium, August 12, 1934. He leaves to mourn, his mother, Mrs. Vera Fabyunkey; three half brothers, Frank, Stewart and Vernon Fabyunkey; one half-sister, Carmelela Fabyunkey; his grandmother, Mrs. Tina Green, and other relatives, friends, and playmates.

BURROWS.—Katy Burrows, granddaughter of the late W. S. Taylor, passed away at her home at Parsons, Kansas, October 8, 1934. She leaves her husband and three small children, her father and mother, two brothers, one sister, and a host of friends. She was a good woman and everyone loved her. She united with the church at Scammon, Kansas, September 2, 1917, and dearly loved her home and church. She was born August 9, 1899. The funeral sermon was preached by Lee Quick in the Christian Church at Sherwine, Kansas, and interment was in the old cemetery where rest many of her relatives.

GOODENOUGH.—Mary E. Goodenough was born at Conquest, Canga County, New York, December 19, 1840. She died at the home of her son, George, at Bradley, Michigan, June 15, 1934. In 1851, she moved with her father and mother to Michigan, and in 1859, she was married to Chauncy E. Goodenough. To this union nine children were born, and three preceded their mother in death. She leaves to mourn, two daughters and four sons: Mrs. Esther Bootman, of Saint Joseph, Missouri; Mrs. Grace Finch, Kalamazoo, Michigan; E. J.

Goodenough, Comstock, Michigan; J. C. Goodenough, Martin, Michigan; George H. Goodenough, Bradley, Michigan, and Glenn E. Goodenough, Marcellus, Michigan; twenty-eight grandchildren, thirty-six great-grandchildren, and fifteen great-great-grandchildren. She was baptized into the church in the spring of 1884, by Charles M. Bootman. For more than fifty years she was a faithful member, loved and respected by many. The funeral was held from the Romig Funeral Home, Marcellus, Michigan, Brother Young offering prayer, and the sermon being given by Elder Philemon Pement, of Battle Creek. Interment was at Rose Hill, Nicholsville, Michigan.

MCLEAN.—Charles McLean was born February 25, 1868, at Hungerford, Hastings County, Ontario. He moved to Proton with his parents when he was about six years of age. Was baptized by R. C. Evans, September 18, 1887, at Proton; confirmed by R. C. Evans and James McLean. Married Elizabeth Jane Dezall, April 17, 1895, and moved to Oyen, Alberta, in 1918. He acted as pastor of the Oyen Branch. Died in the General Hospital at Calgary, September 14, 1934. The funeral was held from his home at Oyen, September 16, the sermon by William Atkinson, pastor of Calgary Branch. Interment was in the Latter Day Saint Cemetery at Oyen. Left to mourn are his wife, E. Jane, and daughters: Mrs. E. A. Snell, Honeywood, Ontario; Mrs. Estella Shaw, Oyen, Alberta; Mrs. Ralph Waters, Endiang; Mrs. Clayton Kenny and Mrs. C. O. Diaper, Calgary, and Ardele and Blanche, at home; sons: Jack, Elbert and Blake, Oyen. He leaves also his brothers: Elder James McLean, Proton; Sam McLean, Proton, and Bishop Archie McLean, of Toronto, and sisters: Mrs. Susana Leopard, of Markdale, and Mrs. Frank Blair, of Buffalo.

HANDS.—Bertha F. Mills, daughter of Charles and Harriett Mills, was born July 28, 1872, at Pittsfield, Illinois. When she was twelve years old, her parents moved to Independence, Missouri, where she finished her education at Woodland College. June 5, 1895, she married William O. Hands. To this union six children were born: Arthur, Raymond, Floris, Florine, and Glenn, all living, and Clarence who died in infancy. Sister Hands' parents and grandparents, her brothers and sisters, her children and their life companions and her grandchildren, five generations in all, are members of the church. She prepared for an active, helpful church life by learning to play the organ and piano and attending educational classes for teachers. She kept a leading place in Sunday school work until stricken with the disease which brought about her death, September 25, at the home in Kansas City, Missouri. The gospel for which she did so much was her support through twelve or more years of suffering. She was of a quiet and lovable disposition, and as she grew weaker, her sweet patience drew all the care a loving companion and children could bestow.

HAMILTON.—Phoebe Viola Hamilton was born November 3, 1862, in Decatur County, Iowa, the daughter of James and Margaret Robertson. In her childhood she moved with her parents to Milo, Iowa, where she grew to womanhood. There she met and married C. E. Hamilton, October 14, 1884, and to this union were born four sons and four daughters. One daughter, Mrs. Consuelo Surback, passed away February 2, 1929. Sister Hamilton was baptized into the church in November, 1904, at Milo. She died at Smithville, Missouri, September 10, 1934, leaving her husband, C. E. Hamilton; seven children: Raymond C. Hamilton, of Chicago; Robert B., Niwot, Colorado; Fred J., and James G., of the home; Mrs. May Turnbull, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Margaret Crum, Long Beach, California, and Dorothy Hamilton, of the home, and seventeen grandchildren to mourn. Funeral services were in charge of Elder Higdon, sermon by Elder John F. Sheehy. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. October 14, would have terminated fifty years of married life, and a family reunion had been planned for that date.

BASS.—Sarah E. Harper, youngest child of Robert and Susanna Harper, was born at Hurbert, Alabama, March 16, 1875. There she grew to womanhood, and was baptized October 22, 1893. Her death occurred October 10, Independence, Mo.

1934, at Saint Margaret's Hospital in Montgomery, Alabama. She was loved by many for her saintly life. Missionaries always found her home open for them. Her life was spent in service to others. About thirteen years she lived at River Falls, Alabama, the next six years near Huxford, and the remaining years at Tuskegee, Alabama. She is survived by her husband, R. V. Bass, of Tuskegee; six children: Mrs. C. B. Vickery, Huxford; Edward V., Bay Harbor, Florida; Mrs. D. W. Roquemore, Greenville, South Carolina; Robert H., Bay Harbor; W. Virgil, and Bernard D., of Tuskegee. Minnie S., the youngest, died in 1917. October 11, the funeral service for Mrs. Bass was held at the home in Tuskegee in the early morning just before they left for Huxford, where she was laid to rest in the Saints' cemetery at the church. Lyle Flynn preached the funeral sermon. There also survive her, eight grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. J. M. Foshee and Mrs. John Barrow; four brothers, William Harper, N. R. Harper, Henry Harper, and James Harper, and many other relatives and friends.

ODELL.—Chester Keith Odell, son of William and Anna Odell, was born November 12, 1920, and died September 18, 1934, at Detroit, Michigan. Keith was baptized into the church June 9, 1929, and his understanding of the gospel was far beyond his years. On September 9, the last Sunday he was in attendance, he offered an eloquent prayer in the church school. He was an ideal lad, from an ideal Latter Day Saint home, and will be greatly missed in home and church circles. He leaves to mourn, his parents, William and Anna Odell, his sister, Mary Sylvia Odell, his two brothers, Leslie James and Richard Darold; his grandfather, Leslie J. Odell, and many relatives and friends. The funeral was from the East Side Church in Detroit, September 20, and was in charge of Pastor Wilbert Richards; sermon by James W. Davis. Interment was in Evergreen Cemetery, Detroit.

HOLTMAN.—Garrett Holtman was born June 7, 1856, at Gibbsville, Wisconsin, Sheboygan County. He died October 1, 1934, at the home of his niece, Mrs. Henry Rens, at Baldwin, Wisconsin. He was a member of the church, having been baptized by C. A. Kress some thirteen years ago. Besides one sister, Mrs. John Kilien, of Firth, Nebraska, he leaves several other relatives and friends. Funeral services were conducted at the home of his niece by the Reverend Jansen, of the Christian Reformed Church. Interment was beside his brother, John Holtman, at Baldwin.

CHAMBERS.—Jean Machin was born at Monkton, Ontario, in 1880; passed away at midnight Monday, June 11, 1934, in Saint Joseph's Hospital, Toronto, Ontario. She married Frederick Chambers at Wiarton, Ontario, in 1903. Was baptized by Elder Benson Belrose, at Owen Sound. Moved to Toronto in 1922, where she has been active in the work of the women's department, her loss being keenly felt. Left to mourn are her husband, two daughters, two sons, and several grandchildren. Services were conducted by Bishop A. F. McLean from the church at Bathurst Street and Saint Clair Avenue.

TYRRELL.—Levi Henry Tyrrell, son of James H. and the late Elizabeth Tyrrell, was born at Ridgetown, Ontario, November 28, 1883. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church, August 6, 1896. Married Miss Fern Sager, May 26, 1919. His death occurred August 28, 1934. Sorrowing relatives, friends, and business associates gathered at the Campbell Funeral Home for the funeral service in charge of Elder R. H. Jones and Elder George A. Njeim. Interment was in Maple Leaf Cemetery. Pall bearers were Duncan Keats, Frank and Fred Porter, Roy Thompson, Fred Bates, and James Doherty.

HIBBS.—Isaac Hibbs was born January 16, 1848, at Covington, Indiana. Died at Fulton, Iowa, September 2, 1934. His wife preceded him in death many years ago. He was a member of Fulton Branch, having been baptized September 19, 1909, and continuing faithful until death. He leaves to mourn, one daughter, Ella Said; two grandchildren, four great-grandchildren, and many friends. The funeral sermon was preached at the Buckner Chapel at Maquoketa, Iowa, by Elder John Heide, of Fulton. Interment was in Pence Cemetery near Baldwin beside his wife.

SCOUTEN: Walter Scouten, son of Bowen and Lillian Scouten, was born May 4, 1892, at Snover, Michigan. June 30, 1916, he married Miss Ruth Phillips, and to this happy union one daughter, Minnie Lou, was born. These share the loss of a loving companion and father. Walter was a faithful member of the church, and being a priest, he served as faithfully in the work of his office. Less than sixteen hours before his death he served the sacrament at the conference in Elk Mills, Maryland, and bore a faithful testimony to the truth. He passed peacefully to rest Monday, September 3, 1934. Those surviving him are his wife and daughter, his father and mother; three brothers, Earl, of Saginaw, Michigan, and Fletcher and William of Snover, Michigan; three sisters, Mary, of Snover, and Margery and Ruth, of Detroit. Services were held at the Snover Undertaking Parlors in Palmyra, New Jersey. The sermon was by Elder D. J. Williams, assisted by Elder Edward Lewis. Interment was in Lakeview Cemetery near Camden, New Jersey.

■ This Beautiful World

The little congregation was singing, "In the sweet by and by, we'll inherit this beautiful world." They were meeting in a hall. Below them in the street there was the roar of passing motor cars and the noise of a crowd gathering in front of a drinking place. Nearby the tall stacks of a great industrial plant pierced the sky. That section of their world was not very pretty. Who could want to inherit it?

Yet a few miles away lay the open country, beautiful with trees and hills, blanketed with grass, and altogether lovely. A few miles in the other direction was one of the country's finest residence districts, a great art museum, and many other beautiful things to see.

God creates beauty. Man can choose to make either ugliness or beauty, according to his desires. It takes work to make beautiful things. Some day we shall inherit a beautiful world because we have taken the trouble and have stood the expense of making it so.

■ Faith

Though life has been to me a cruel debtor,
And shattered all the dreams I dared to build.
Though it has bound me tightly with its fetters,
And left my hopes and joys all unfulfilled;
And though my heart strings, too, have all been broken,
And I am but a humble, useless clod,
Yet, life has given me one glorious token,
My faith in God.

—Frances Spaulding.

■ Beautiful Hands

They knelt before the Master's throne, supplicants of His praise,
And in their eager humbleness, to Him, their hands did raise.
"I've always kept my hands so fair, in honor to Thy name;
I could not mar Thy handiwork, by giving them a stain;
I spurned all lowly duties, too, lest they'd be rough and red,
And mar their perfect loveliness," with pride one of them said.

The other turned away with tears, and drooped her head in shame,
And gazed upon her toil-worn hands, so roughened and so stained.
"I never had much time to spend on them," she softly said,
"For cooking, washing, mending, too, or soothing fevered heads;
And wiping tears from baby eyes, or visiting the poor;
I had no time to spend on them, but wish I had spent more."

The Master gazed with tenderness upon the hands so red,
And gently kissed each toil-worn palm. "They're beautiful," He said.

Beginning the Memoirs of Joseph Smith

The beginning of the publication of the Memoirs of the late President Joseph Smith today, Tuesday, November 6, on the same day of the week and on the hundred and second anniversary of his birth, is a literary event of first importance for the church.

President Smith led the church from 1860 to 1914. In that time he traveled extensively, preached often, met large numbers of people, and had many experiences. His capacious memory retained a rich store and, assisted by letters and diaries, he dictated his Memoirs in his later years. This great task was accomplished by the assistance of his son, Israel A. Smith, and the manuscript has been edited by his daughter, Mary Audentia Smith Anderson.

Perhaps the stature and importance of President Smith as a church officer and a speaker obscured the fact that he was also a gifted writer. It is as a writer that younger generations who never met him will remember him. He was, in fact, one of the best writers in the church. He wrote beautifully, simply, and understandingly of persons, places, and events. It is a good record. It contains much that is inspiring as well as informative. Reading it should bring spiritual light to us today.

We are happy to present the Memoirs. It is planned to publish them on complete pages so they may be taken out and bound separately for preservation. We suggest now that readers preserve the copies, for they will be valuable. There will be a few extra copies, but those who desire a complete set of the installments should subscribe immediately, because the supply may be exhausted soon.

Blue Pencil Notes

RECENTLY I heard this rather unique definition of bigamy: "A double portion of too much." Evidently the author of the definition had acute indigestion from his first serving.

IT IS ESTIMATED that twenty thousand people gathered at the funeral of Pretty Boy Floyd. The drawing power of a dead bandit seems about equal to that of a dead king. These people did not come to pay respect—they were just morbidly curious. Probably few if any living preachers, educators, or statesmen could draw as many people in that section of the country to hear any sort of helpful message. The hope of the country is not in the morbidly curious twenty thousand who milled about the grave of a dead bandit and trampled down fences like wild cattle to get closer; the hope is in those serious minded and conscientious citizens who in fewer numbers do come out to hear a worth while message or to honor a worth while citizen.

THE WIFE of Pretty Boy Floyd writes: "Everything seems futile when I think what a man he might have been." She adds that he said of his own son: "He should be baptized. I would like him to be a great preacher or lawyer." Down in his own heart the criminal sensed the beauty of the path of righteousness and truth and is anxious that his own son should walk in it. He knows the tragedy of his own life.

SCORE ONE for Huey Long. When he chaperoned five train loads of college young people on an all night run to an adjoining state to attend a football game he gave strict orders: "No liquor—not even the smell of it." And he ordered state troopers to patrol the trains and expel any person found drinking. Huey Long is no Ghandi—probably he will never twang a golden harp—but he does know the effect of liquor upon youth. "No liquor—not even the smell of it." Some of our own people in business, troubled by the thought that they must sell beer to hold trade, might ponder that slogan: "No liquor—not even the smell of it."

DURING the early days of the Civil War Lincoln had great trouble with General McCellan, in command of the Union forces. McCellan was a much greater man than Lincoln—he admitted it, so there was no occasion for argument, since Lincoln was not inclined to argue such points. When McCellan the great would not come to the president for consultation Lincoln went to McCellan's headquarters. But the lofty general kept him waiting a long time and then sent word by a servant that he had retired for the night and must not be disturbed. Lincoln's friends were enraged, but Lincoln merely said, "I will hold McCellan's horse for him if he will win the war."

LINCOLN was too big and wise and too much of a Christian to engage in a personal quarrel over a personal affront and thus endanger his greater cause. Latter Day Saints, especially men of the ministry, though perhaps not so great or so wise as Lincoln, at least should be as good Christians.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Time was when art rendered religion an incalculable service. From the Edict of Milan to the Reformation, the church was the patron of art. In the days when the truths of religion were preached in Latin to people who could scarcely have understood them even in their own tongue, the sacred story was told in the universal language of the painter and the sculptor. For the masses the painter's brush has taught the Christian story more convincingly than the pen of the theologian. Works of art were the people's Bible. But the Puritanism of the Reformation divorced art from religion, and as in Greece art killed religion, so in Christian Europe religion killed art. The protest of Puritanism against art was made in the heart of conflict, and was therefore one-sided and prejudiced. Religious people today have regained a truer perspective and a saner judgment. They see that the abuse of a thing is no sufficient reason for its disuse altogether. They see that to present truth in the form of beauty is not a hindrance, but a help, to truth. They see that the Bible has been denied the imagination as an aid, and its value has been lessened in consequence. They see that the function of art is to render visible the Divine, and it is, therefore, not a foe, but a friend of religion.—Henry E. Jackson, in Great Pictures as Moral Teachers.

There is nothing impossible to him who will try.

R. T. Cooper Passes

R. T. COOPER

The passing of R. T. Cooper at the Independence Sanitarium after a short illness came as a sad surprise to his many friends. While Brother Cooper was sixty-four years of age, his vigor and strength made him look much younger, and his death was unexpected.

Brother Cooper was an active member of the Standing High Council, and carried a heavy burden of work. Until near the end he had been a successful teacher of classes and a leader of church orchestras. For many years he had served the church in various capacities, always faithfully and without wavering. At the time of his death he was occupied as an attorney in Independence. His loss is deeply felt by his comrades and friends, as well as the family and the members of the church.

Support the Herald Publicity Agents

Our branch publicity agents will appreciate the consideration accorded them if members of those branches will order supplies from our office through those agents.

This method of ordering will accomplish two good purposes: it will stimulate sales and encourage local agents in their activity, and it will insure that orders are correctly made out and sent, thus helping satisfactory service.

My Father's Last Years

(A Memory of President Joseph Smith)

By Israel A. Smith

IN 1913 the suggestion was made that I come to Independence and look after father's secretarial work, to give special attention to his labors in dictating his Memoirs. For some years I had served in the editorial rooms at the Herald Office in Lamoni, had been admitted to the Iowa bar during that term, was looking forward eagerly to a career as an attorney, and the proposal was agreeable to me, because I believed I could be of service in a larger way and that upon father's passing I would be established in the arena of my choosing—Independence and Missouri.

On rather short notice I removed with my wife and small son to Independence where I immediately took up the work of looking after father's correspondence and general dictation, including the work on his Memoirs.

My labor in his behalf was interrupted somewhat during the first five weeks after my arrival: Not having been admitted to the Iowa bar a sufficient time to be admitted in Missouri on simple application, it was necessary for me to make application to the Supreme Court of this State for permission to take the bar examination. At father's request and insistence I undertook to prepare myself on exactly four weeks' notice for this to me tremendous task, though I had recently been through a similar ordeal in Iowa. He stated that he had reasons for my being admitted just as soon as I could make it. I am happy of course to record that I made the test satisfactorily and was duly admitted to the practice of my chosen profession in the State of my adoption.

After this interruption, I usually reported to father's house at nine or ten o'clock in the morning and remained with him until he tired, usually at noon or middle afternoon, when I left him and worked on transcribing my notes and writing such letters as he had given to me. I was not a stenographer, but in former years had had a smattering of Pitmanic shorthand, and as soon as the decision had been made for me to come to Independence for this special work, I began brushing up on word signs and phrase outlines, and while I never became proficient in the matter of speed, with care on my part and patience on the part of father, we got along pretty well, I think. Anyway, at the end of one year, when I really considered changing my employment and launching into the law, he rather pleaded with me to stay with him, and the incident stands out in my memory and ever will be one of the bright memories of my father.

He stated to me that my work had been eminently satisfactory, and that we had made greater progress with his Memoirs in the one year than he had in some three or more years prior to my coming. "And besides," he said, "you know blood is thicker than water, and our association is dear to me and I want to continue it." After that appeal, how could my decision be other than to remain loyal to my sire and stay with him to the very end? I did so.

Thinking now more particularly of the Memoirs: When I took up the threads of his work, I found that while he had very cleverly classified his life into periods, he had treated them without any attention to time sequence. I took it upon myself to delve deep into all that I could find in the Saints' Herald by way of editorial note as to his movements and activities, letters written by him and to him found in the columns of that periodical, taking them up by years, in connection with the brief notes which he had entered in literally scores of yearly diaries. He often expressed regret that he had not made more copious notes in the latter. In fact there were frequent and sometimes long periods in which he made no entries in these year books.

I remember he said that he never had entertained any idea that his movements in after years would be of sufficient importance, or that he would have occasion to attempt to write the story of his life. Father never, so far as I recall, ever stated anything to me or have I ever seen anything written by him which ever reflected anything but modesty and humility.

TAKING UP these things by years, I would read to him what was recorded in his diaries, then news comments in the Herald, his own editorials, among them notably his "Pleasant Chats" in the editorial column, then letters written by himself and others, the latter generally personal letters written to him from his colleagues and church workers and addressed to "Brother Joseph."

After reading all these, with occasional interruptions to discuss the matters reflected, he would ask to be allowed to digest the same for a day or two when he would announce that he was ready for the year 1876 or whatever it was. He would then begin and continue through the year, generally covering all matters of importance, evidencing his most remarkable memory—most notable for a man then in his eighties.

Speaking of his memory I well remember in father's last illness when in his delirium we heard him reciting at great lengths passages from some work unknown to those at his bedside. However, when we called in my sister, Mrs. Audentia Anderson, she recognized them as long quotations from Holland's Bitter Sweet.

Back of that some months I well remember him, sitting in the dark night of his blindness (for he was totally blind during the last four years of his life) and reciting in its entirety a long poem called The Tale of the Dismal Swamp.

He was specially fond of poetry and often had surcease from pain and physical misery by repeating the poems he learned when but a boy.

And so, with the Memoirs, we toiled on and on through many years; but when we reached 1910, and he had told the story of that well-remembered Jubilee Conference, he said, "Here I am going to stop. My official activities practically ceased with that conference. It is a good place to leave it, as my life since then has been uneventful."

He always sat in the large leather chair given to him by the Beebes of Council Bluffs. I sat beside him. He dictated slowly and carefully, always remembering that I was not a fast scribe, and after each frequent pause, I would say, "All right," and he would proceed.

MANY THINGS come to my mind as I write and I might expand this story very much beyond what I think the editors would allow, but I am trying to cover only the high lights of the experience.

Trips away from the house were quite frequent in good weather and when he was free from pain. On these occasions Sister Ada, as we older children called her (and she was a wonderful woman), would get him ready. I would help him with his great coat on cooler days. We would start out to see somebody of his choosing—Bishop Kelley oftener than anybody else; for there was wonderful bond between these two men, a perfect understanding always. Father would go to Brother Kelley with most matters affecting his own affairs. Quite often it would be a visit to some old time friend on his death bed, Patriarch E. C. Briggs, I recall, being one of these. It was pathetic to see this man who could not see his host, but doubtless had his picture well emblazoned on the tablets of his memory and heart, talking and visiting and knowing that both were on the threshold of eternity.

I was almost always his escort, though he often was taken for walks with that grand old soldier of God, Thomas W. Chatburn. He would hold my arm with his left hand, and supported himself on the other side with his walking stick or cane.

Occasionally we went to see Sister Rushton who would generally tempt father in to taking a cup of her wonderful English tea. I am not a judge of tea but I myself can testify that it was very good.

And so it went from time to time, old friends were in his heart, and he would want to see them and talk with them.

One incident more I will relate and then finish: As a boy and man I had always revered my father as a man of nobility and—above all, a man of great spirituality. If the time should ever come that I ever could question his inspiration, it were time to relinquish all hope of man's spiritual triumph. And so it was that I often wondered just what would happen and how it would occur should something by way of message or revelation be given and reach others of the church officials through the medium of my pencil and typewriter.

The experience finally came about during the conference of 1914 when after a season of prayer and general fasting, father asked me to get my notebook. I have this notebook and it bears mute testimony to the following facts: Seating myself beside him and without any explanation to me he began with the very first words of the document now a part of the Doctrine and Covenants and very slowly and with calm assurance he built up the message word following word very cautiously, never changing, never repeating, and once only transposing two words, from the beginning to the end.

I soon had a transcript of this message in the hands of my brother, Frederick M. Smith, and the rest is church history.

One remarkable thing came to my attention upon this occasion: Sister Ada told me that day that father had asked her, early in the morning, to call by telephone the relatives of Brother Richard C. Kelley and of Brother Edwin A. Blakeslee and find out what the middle name of each was. Asked his reason for wanting such (Continued on page 1426.)

Around the Church With Our Priesthood

Portland

Priesthood meetings are held each month in Portland Branch. The average attendance is twenty-two out of twenty-four active members of the priesthood.

Priesthood classes are conducted by the district presidency in several branches and missions, with a general meeting of the district priesthood held every three months—A sustained effort is being made to discover and train young men, a number having been ordained within the last two years.

Rock Island

Three regional groups of branches have been organized for monthly meetings of the priesthood. Additional groups are contemplated.

Says the district president: "The church program for priesthood is an excellent one. It cannot help but bring results—I am advertising the Priesthood Journal wherever I go, urging that it should be in the hands of every member of the priesthood."

Northeast Illinois

Says the district president: "At the present time a very definite move is under way to urge every man to work in his office or to graciously surrender his license—I am giving every man the opportunity to decide the matter for himself—Something must stir the souls of these men. Something must reach them and make them conscious of God. Until then progress must be slow."

Branch presidents have been urged to organize priesthood classes in their respective branches. The district has organized two groups of priesthood classes which meet each month. These meetings have been very profitable.

Spring River District

The district presidency has visited each branch and held priesthood meetings. In these meetings they have taught the financial law, the Priesthood Manual and the Priesthood Journal—Several branches conduct priesthood classes.

Says the district president: "Some of the brethren claim that they do not have time for visiting and other priesthood work. To this I have replied, 'Other brethren who have just as much to do are finding time to do it.'"

Western Maine

Writes the district president: "Your letter was a very fine thing for me. I called the priesthood together, took them into my confidence, read the letter to them, and asked for suggestions as to my answer to it. The immediate result was the organizing of priesthood classes in several branches, the sale of six Priesthood Manuals, and securing of eight subscriptions for Priesthood Journal—My greatest plans for the future, both for the ordained and unordained men, is to continue to hold their confidence and respect, as I believe I now have it. Having this respect I can stir them to activity by personal contact and confidential conversation."

Seattle and British Columbia

"We have contacted every member of the priesthood throughout the district," writes the district president, "and several inactive members have become active—We are continually enlisting our young men in the service of the church, giving them responsibility in various ways, inviting them to our priesthood meetings and conducting special classes for them—We have priesthood classes in most of the branches—We have eight missions going in the district. These are conducted by various members of the priesthood."

Michigan

The apostle in charge of the field writes: "We are instituting a program of visitation—We are asking first of all the district president to visit the home of each of the branch presidents—to talk with the family of the pastor and then with the pastor himself—We are then asking the pastor to visit the members of his priesthood and their families as he would like the priesthood to visit the members—We are urging the branch president to give young men of the ministry an opportunity to qualify as preachers on Sunday mornings or Wednesday nights. The use of several of the young men in making short talks is urged."

New York District

A complete canvass of the district to ascertain the status and needs of the priesthood is under way—In the Buffalo Branch arrangements have been made for a training class of priesthood once a week and a meeting for the discussion of branch affairs once a month—Members of the priesthood are expected to make three membership calls and one nonmember call each month. The names of those upon whom they are to call are handed to them by means of a special filing card and a final report of the visit is expected—A series of three meetings for priesthood and young men of the branch has been held for the purpose of reconsecration. These have proved very beneficial.

Northeast Nebraska

Writes the district president: "Our program for the year includes a district priesthood meeting once each quarter, a meeting of the district presidency, bishops and branch presidents once each quarter, a priesthood meeting in each branch in charge of the branch president to be held weekly if possible, a complete check-up of the entire district membership by the priesthood, this to include the location of members and their standing. There will be an organized effort by the priesthood in each branch."

Pacific Coast

District conferences open with a priesthood banquet and the work of the ministry is made prominent throughout all the services of such conferences. Ordination services are carried on in such a way as to impress the ministry with the responsibility of priesthood. Priesthood classes are being organized with the Priesthood Journal as a text. In some branches definite assignments have been made for each member of the priesthood with reports requested upon the completion of each assignment.

Concerning My Father's Memoirs

By Mary Audentia Smith Anderson

AUDENTIA ANDERSON

IT WOULD BE DIFFICULT indeed to adequately express the pleasure I took in the task of editing and arranging for publication my father's Memoirs. The manuscript was in my hands from October, 1927, to April, 1933, when the labor of love was finished and the results turned over to my brothers, Frederick M. and Israel A. Smith. From first to last, in spite of the arduous labor involved, I was conscious of uplift and spiritual rapport which seemed at times to indicate my father's very presence with me. To live over with him the incidents of his childhood, youth, young and mature manhood, and advancing age, to trace the various influences through which the incomparable beauty and consistency of his life and character were moulded and preserved, was a privilege for which I have, and do, lift my heart in sincere gratitude.

While it would be too much to claim that my father's memory was infallible, it is true that it was a remarkable one. Once I asked him if his unusual ability to remember faces, voices and names as inherited or acquired, and he answered, after a moment's pondering,

"Well, both, perhaps. In my youth I definitely set myself to try to strengthen and develop my memory. In helping my mother in the hotel work, I used to try to remember the names and faces of our guests, even the most transient ones. If ever I had a good look at a man's face and heard his name distinctly, I tried to remember both, even if I had only put up his horse for him. Once I had this tested; after a lapse of thirty years, I immediately recognized a man and spoke his name, and he had been a hotel guest for just overnight."

IN WORKING with these manuscripts, I early noted that certain incidents connected with individuals were more clearly impressed upon his memory than the time of their occurrence. Father himself says his memory was never very tenacious where figures were concerned, but that not often did he forget incidents once clearly impressed upon his consciousness. People who read these memoirs and who know personally about some particular incident therein described, may possibly discover some slight discrepancy as to the time such event occurred. Wherever possible I have tried to check and recheck dates and names, if there appeared to be either inaccuracy or ambiguity. In doing this, I found material aid in having access to his diaries, which covered the years from 1859 well up to the closing year of his life. These diaries were of inestimable value, particularly as concerning his trips from home. It seems odd that they show long lapses of non-recording when he was at home and busy with the routine affairs of home, editorial desk, and local or neighboring pulpits. Without doubt such periods held many an experience of interest, a visit from celebrated individuals, outstanding moments of spiritual uplift or happiness, or hours which were darkened with sorrow, suffering or disappointment. But they could not all be given us, and it is something to have his impressions of men and affairs abroad presented to us in fair detail, as leisure and inclination warranted their being placed on record.

THE MEMOIRS were dictated during the closing years of his life, as health and opportunity permitted. They were taken in shorthand by secretaries who later transcribed them to typewritten sheets, in which form they came into my hands. Extending over a period of five or six years and oftentimes taken up after long respites from the task, there were many excusable repetitions. Sometimes there were almost whimsical particularity in the description of some event which had come to mind, whilst at other times even quite important happenings seemed to receive scant attention. I was nonplussed at discovering absolutely no attempt to describe the events of the last few weeks prior to the assassination of his father, that event, his own paralyzing grief, the shock to his mother and others of the family, and the effects of the tragedy on church and community. I could only assume that this omission on his part was not intentional, but possibly grew out of a feeling that those events had already been many times recorded and repeated in the church publications. Feeling that his Memoirs would be quite incomplete without some description of that event which changed the whole current of his life, I hunted through our church literature until I found a recital from his own pen, which I incorporated in the proper chronological place.

(1832-1914)

Edited by his daughter, Mary Audentia Smith Anderson

JOSEPH SMITH

Dedication

To my mother, Emma Hale, whom my father, Joseph Smith, married on January 18, 1827, and who was his only wife, I dedicate these memories.

To her care I was committed after the death of my father, together with my brothers, Frederick Granger Williams, Alexander Hale, and David Hyrum, and my adopted sister, Julia Murdock, who shared her motherly solicitude and untiring energy.

I acknowledge with gratitude to my heavenly Father that to the precept and example of my father's humble wife I owe the love for right and the hatred for wrong which have characterized my life. She early impressed upon my mind the conviction that under Divine Providence only truth and right would live and that error and wrong must perish.

Upon those teachings I have tried to build the foundation and rear the structure of my life's services to God, ever bearing in mind the nobility of that character to which she pointed, by precept and example, as the best and the highest that through effort could be attained by man.

JOSEPH SMITH.

May 22, 1911.

Introduction

Not having any definite recollection of the place where I may have lived in a pre-existent world nor any definite conception of my surroundings at the time of residence there or of those with whom I may have been there associated, it is not likely that I shall attempt to write in these "Memoirs" anything that does not appertain to this world.

The advocates of the doctrine of pre-existence of man frequently suggest that those transitory glimpses of things apparently seen at some far-off time in the past but which could not have happened in the experiences of the flesh upon earth are almost conclusive evidences that individuals have lived prior to the advent into this life. Such flashes of unrelated memory have come to me as to others, but they have not yet proved of sufficient importance to warrant me in setting down here any of the misty things so classed as recollections of another far-off world.

Notwithstanding what may have been said about spirits having a great desire for embodiment in the flesh and seeking opportunities to accept such tabernacles upon the earth, I have no hesitancy in stating that if I had an existence in a pre-earth period and if I were there consulted as to the time when, place where, and company with whom my earth-life should begin, I have not the faintest recollection of such existence or consultation. I do not care to deny the doctrine, but simply state at the beginning that the memories here set down have reference only to my present sojourn in the flesh.

Whatever may have been the conditions in a pre-existent state and whoever may have been my associates there, superior or otherwise, or whatever may have been their degree of intelligence, is not determined, so far as anything convincing to my judgment is concerned; nor is there, to my knowledge, a sufficient amount of authentic revelation of those matters upon which to base such a conviction. However, I have no hesitancy in saying that whatever and whoever they were I have no reason to find any particular fault with the place or the persons to which I was allotted upon entrance into this world.

My ancestors in the flesh, on the sides of both my parents, were stalwart men and women of sturdy pioneer stock. They were not deficient in powers of brain or body, so far as their struggle for a successful existence was concerned, and I feel I owe to them a greater debt than I can ever repay for the heritage they left of faithful devotion to the spirit of freedom, of integrity and nobility of purpose and character, and of intelligent acceptance of the burdens and responsibilities of this life. For generations back, so far as I have been able to trace them and discover, these characteristics have shone out as qualities of the families involved.

It may be true that my father was not a schooled man when he began his public career, and it is unnecessary to claim that my mother was early a learned woman; but it is safe to assert that excellent common sense and the faculty of acquiring knowledge were possessed by both in more than an ordinary degree.

From one side I inherited an eager desire for information, and if I have not acquired it, the fault cannot be traced to my immediate progenitors. With this desire I also inherited a spirit of independence of thought and action, and a strong opposition to undue influence exerted by those who, I had reason to believe, had only selfish ends in view.

From my mother I inherited an intense hatred of oppression—of any kind, but more especially the kind displayed by the strong against the weak—and a hatred of arrogance, haughtiness, and that peculiar quality which some people exhibit when they appear to say, "Stand aside; I am holier than thou." With this attribute inherited from my mother, I also received a strong and active repugnance to untruthfulness in either man or woman. To me my mother was ever the embodiment of truthfulness, for she hated intensely any lie, whether spoken or acted, and refused steadfastly to submit to any proposition which was opposite to the truth.

The man who, at the expiration of more than three-quarters of a century of life, undertakes to recall the things of his past has a difficult task before him, for it must follow that what he sees through the mists of memory gathered about earlier experiences to a greater or lesser extent will be colored by reflections and knowledges which years have brought into being, and will be set down in the light of that enlarged vision and comprehension. If perchance this light be faulty he may err in the conclusions he has reached as to the meaning of things long ago said or done, by which his life has been more or less affected.

It is with this acknowledgement then, and without desire to deal with the mysterious or to make claim to a life greatly differing from the ordinary, that the following pages of memories are written.

Chapter I—Early Trails

Ohio

I was born in the early morning of November 6, 1832, in the little town of Kirtland, Geauga (now Lake) County, Ohio. My mother, with her small family, was living in an upper room in the northwest corner of a store occupied by Newell K. Whitney. The comforts were meager and makeshift, but the life which my parents had been compelled to live, constantly harassed by vexations persecutions and moving about from place to place on what was then the frontier of the westward march of civilization, had inured them to hardships and strengthened their powers of resistance against apparently overwhelming difficulties, and had taught them the value of a constant and consistent reliance upon the all-wise goodness and never-failing power of God.

My earliest recollections of men, things, and events, therefore, begin at Kirtland. I do not remember the erection of the dwelling house which was built for us nor our removal into it from the store building where I was born, but I do remember some people and incidents of a slightly later period. Among the individuals are Samuel Brannan, Ebenezer Robinson, and Vienna Jacques, the latter an eccentric woman probably even then a young "old maid." Brannan and Robinson were young men and were either inmates of Father's house or frequent visitors therein.

I remember I was promised a little wagon, to be built by a wagon-maker living not far from our house, up on the hillside. The name of Alexander Badham is connected in some way with the memory. I remember that I became impatient for the possession of the wagon and one day slipped away from the house and went to the shop. Peering into it through a crack in the upright siding I saw the wagon, nicely painted red and awaiting the finishing touches before it was to be delivered. I must have received the wagon, but, strange to say, I have no recollections of ever having used it.

The house we then occupied stood on the west side of the street which runs from the Temple down to the Chagrin River and was not very far from the ford across this little stream. Memory has a picture of my going down to the creek with a number of other boys who engaged in fishing for the small edible fish the stream afforded. Seeing their success I, too, wanted to fish. My mother, to gratify me, procured a little pole and attached a thread thereto, with a bent pin for a hook, and away I marched to the creek. I threw my hook without bait into the water and the little fishes gathered to it as it fell. By some strange chance one became fastened to it and was drawn to the shore. In great excitement I dropped the pole and gathering the fish in my hands rushed to the house with it, shouting, "I've got one! I've got one!"

Whether or not the fish was cooked for my delectation or whatever became of it, I have not the remotest remembrance. It was of the variety known as horned chub, about six inches long, round and attractive. I have seen such fishes in the same stream in later years, as well as elsewhere.

Of the stirring events which may have taken place at Kirtland I have not a very extended memory. I do remember visiting what was known as the church farm, occupied at that time by a brother named Harvey Strong. Whether or not I visited there with my father more than once I cannot say. Upon one visit a goose was caught, a string tied about its feet, and the fowl suspended from a beam in the barn. The farmer took it by the head and cut its throat with his knife, holding the creature while it bled. I suppose it was taken to the house to furnish a dinner for the family and possibly others, but of this, memory saith nothing further.

Missouri

My memories of the journey from Kirtland to Missouri in the spring of 1838 are confused. I can remember that across the center of the covered wagon in which we rode there was a division made by fastening up blankets, and that Father and someone else occupied the back part of the wagon by turns. I remember we reached a river, which I now suppose was the Wabash in Indiana, and that the roads running through the low lands were of the kind known as corduroy. Some who had been riding in the wagons walked over these roads, and I also did so, for a ways, stepping carefully over the rigid poles holding to the hand of my mother.

My adopted sister, Julia, was one of the companions of this journey, and my brother, Frederick, born in June, 1836, was another. Who was the driver or who had charge otherwise I do not remember.

While I can remember some things which happened at Far West the fall I was six years old, the incidents of the journey thither and of settlement there seem very obscure. I seem to see a two-story frame building standing broadside to an open space like a square, and some excitement going on outside. I remember Father starting away from the house and our white dog, Major, jumping from an upper window to a platform below to follow him off.

I remember this dog particularly from the fact that upon one occasion (after he had been fighting and had had his ears chewed until they were sore), the baby was set down by him as he lay upon the floor. The baby pulled his ears, which hurt him so that he growled fiercely. Father punished him severely for this, boxing his ears soundly. This treatment resulted in his never afterwards lying quietly when a child was placed near him. He would spring to his feet immediately and go away, evidently never forgetting the punishment he had received for growling at the baby.

I suppose the excitement to which I have referred was attendant upon some of the operations of the mob against the Saints and the Saints' preparations for resistance or flight, just which I cannot say.

I remember vividly the morning my father came to visit his family after the arrest that took place in the fall of 1838. When he was brought to the house by an armed guard I ran out of the gate to greet him, but was roughly pushed away from his side by a sword in the hand of the guard and not allowed to go near him. My mother, also, was not permitted to approach him and had to receive his farewell by word of lip only. The guard did not permit him to pass into the house nor her to pass out, either because he feared an attempt would be made to rescue his prisoner or because of some brutal instinct in his own breast. Who shall say?

I remember that later I visited the jail at Liberty when my father and others whose names have passed into history were confined in that period of imprisonment which followed Doniphan's refusal to execute the order of Generals Lucas and Clark to "march the prisoners to the public square and there shoot them to death!" There were present in that prison several men, among them Uncle Hyrum Smith, Caleb Baldwin, Lyman Wight, Alexander MacRae, Sidney Rigdon, and a singer whom memory seems to indicate was Erastus Snow. He sang two ditties or ballads characteristic of the times, which made an impression upon me. One was called "The Massacre at the River Raisin," and referred to the butchering of Americans by Indians in Michigan in 1813, during the war upon the northwest borders. The other was a parody called "Mobbers of Missouri," sung to the tune of "Hunters of Kentucky." I am of the opinion the man was only a visitor in the jail at the time. He was quite a singer and I very fond of music, so I well remember this circumstance of his singing to entertain those in the jail, the time I was left by my mother to spend the night there with my father.

There is a memory of accompanying my mother on another visit to the jail, and it was upon the occasion of one or the other of these visits that my father, with another, laid hands upon my head and blessed me, as his eldest son, to the blessings which had come down to him through the blessings of his progenitors. It could not be expected that I, a child of but six years, should remember the phraseology used by Father upon that occasion but the circumstance itself was indelibly fastened upon my memory. While I was not entitled to any claim of being extraordinarily bright and intelligent as a child, yet I was by no means extremely dull. What I saw I usually understood, and what I heard, if it made an impression upon me at all, I remembered fairly well, together with the circumstances attending. Dates my memory has never held tenaciously, however, except some which have been singled out by circumstances which made them more or less remarkable to me.

Who accompanied my mother in the carriage ride to the jail I do not fully recollect, but seem to remember that one of them was an officer. What office he may have held I do not know, but presume it was sheriff or deputy sheriff. At all events, my mother carried a permit to visit her husband in the jail.

My memory of thus visiting the jail in which Father and others were confined is confirmed by the statements of history wherein it appears that my father and his companions were placed in Liberty jail December 1, 1838; that on the 8th of that month the wives of Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon visited the jail and remained overnight; and that on the 20th of December Joseph Smith's wife again visited him. In a list of the visitors to the jail in the month of January following, the names of Mrs. Emma Smith and one John Daley appear as having been there on the 21st of the month. On two of these occasions I was with my mother, according to my memory. The history states that on one occasion Emma Smith remained in the jail two days and that the wives of Caleb Baldwin and Reynolds Cahoon were with her at that time.

There comes to mind a circumstance which occurred about this time which was attended by some degree of mystery. It was my habit to take a nap in the afternoons upon a bed or couch in the bedroom. The house had two rooms, one the living or "keeping" room and the other a bedroom. Into this latter the door leading from the keeping room opened inwardly, opposite a window in the end of the building. My mother was washing in the larger room and I, lying upon the bed in the chamber, was awakened by someone coming through the door and across the room past me. It was a man apparently from thirty-five to forty-five years of age, sparely built, wearing dark clothing somewhat shabby, and having on his head a rather tall-crowned hat, napless, as was the custom of the time. He passed to the window and turned to come back toward the door, saying as he did so, "We will all have to go to the land of Voree."

Reaching the door he turned again and came back toward the window. As he turned at the window the second time to again pass by the bed he repeated what he had said before, "We will all have to go to the land of Voree."

Whatever construction may be put upon these words by those who might wish to localize them in support of the claim made by James J. Strang who established himself years later near Burlington, Wisconsin, at a place called Voree (where he died in 1856), I have never held it as anything more than a statement meant to cover the entire region of country north of Missouri.

When the man returned to the door the second time he passed out, as I supposed, into the room where my mother was. I called to her and asked her who the man was. She wanted to know to what man I referred. I told her about the man I had seen in the room and repeated what he had said. She had not seen him, nor did either of us see him after, though we went at once to the door to look for him. He was fairly tall, being a little over medium height, and had a clean-shaven face. I relate the circumstance because it impressed me at the time and because it is a mystery that has never since been solved.

Another little incident clings to memory. Times were hard and we had little to eat except that which was raised directly from the soil or gathered from the hunt. One day all we had to eat for dinner was corn bread made from meal with only the addition of salt and water, and seasoned as we ate with New Orleans molasses. There was with us that day a man of whom I remember little more than his appearance but whom I have sometimes thought was Lyman Wight. The conversation which took place between my mother and this man, evidently an elder in the church, was cheerful in spite of the circumstances, and I remember his gay remark, "Why, with a chunk of corn bread like that in my hand I could go out of doors and stand at the corner of the house in the northwest wind and eat myself into a sweat!" However, we all did eat of it, and I cannot now recollect that we were any the worse for such meager fare, although I still can remember the taste of the New Orleans molasses.

There is another memory of an evening after dark, when there came to the house a youth, hardly more than a boy, who had been hurt in some way. He was taken upstairs very quietly and a charge given that if any inquiry were made about such a person nothing should be said to indicate he was in the house. He had been wounded in one of the skirmishes which occurred between the Saints and their oppressors, and was to be kept in safety until his wound healed; it was feared if the mobbers followed and discovered him they would demand that he be turned over to them.

I did not know at the time who this young man was, but some years afterwards I heard something about my Uncle Arthur Milliken (husband of Grandmother Smith's youngest daughter, Lucy,) having been in one of those fights. I questioned him about it and he told me the story of his being wounded and escaping to our house. He was a drummer, beating a snare drum, and in one of the encounters, possibly the one at Shoal Creek, a bullet had passed through both his legs above the knees, one in front and the other back of the thigh bone.

There is a faint memory, too, of hearing about the wounding of David Patten. I remember going with someone to the house where he lay. While not permitted to enter the house, I looked in at the door and saw him lying on his bed, and heard some talk about his wound, as if it were in the body, and of its being cleansed with a silk handkerchief, either by drawing through the wound or being used in some other manner.

One day while playing in front of the house in Far West I saw a strange cavalcade approaching. I waited until it came pretty near and then ran into the yard for safety. Soon the whole procession stopped in front of the house. It really was one of the most singular teams I have ever seen hitched together. It was what is known as a "spike" or three-horse team, only in this case there were not three horses. The animal in the lead, regularly harnessed, was a flea-bitten gray mare, hitched to the tongue of the wagon by a singletree. The animal upon the off side of the tongue was an ox called a stag, harnessed with an ordinary harness only the collar was turned with the big end up and the bridle was without a bit. The animal on the near side was a small brown mule, also harnessed with a regular harness but bearing in addition a saddle, astride of which was a Negro fully six feet tall and broad in proportion. He wore a tattered hat on his kinky head, was without coat or vest, but had on shirt and pants of the conventional pattern common to the locality, made, evidently, of homespun stuff and very well worn.

The Negro was singing as he rode, the whites of his eyes and his white teeth shining prominently in the light. The team was hitched to an old-fashioned Pennsylvania-made wagon, the box of which, called a stick box, was high in front and high at the back but swept down curvingly toward the center. It was loaded with watermelons which the Negro driver was bringing to town to sell. When he stopped his team in front of the house and descended from his mule I could see from his good-natured face and rollicking manner that he would not hurt me, so I went out and curiously examined his outfit. He was very jolly as he tried to sell his wares and it was not long until his wagon was surrounded and the melons disappearing in ready sales, the prices being cheap.

I have never forgotten the looks of that team. I saw it at intervals during the season, coming into town with melons and other produce for sale. I have seen other quaint teams and old-fashioned wagons but never anything so picturesque as that one. It was in striking contrast to one I saw in 1876 in Jack's Valley, a few miles east of Carson City, Nevada, freighting mining machinery to Silver City, eighty miles up the valley. The outfit consisted of a huge wagon, the hind wheels of which were so large that, standing on the ground beside them, I was barely able to reach the tops with my fingers. Two ordinary two-horse wagons were used as trailers—that is, the tongues had been shortened and fastened by a clevis each to the hind axle of the wagon before it.

The team which drew this outfit of wagons was composed of eighteen mules, large and small, driven by a man riding the near wheeler. He had a long line stretched over the heads of the intervening teams with which to guide and govern the lead team. The team next in front of the wheelers was a pair of small mules. They were called a swing team—that is, their heads were free and they formed a kind of fulcrum to prevent the whole group from sweeping around corners too quickly. It was quite amusing and instructive to watch this team swinging the corners as they went through the little town of Mottsville, near the home of Brother Slayton with whom I was sojourning. I think the driver told me that he had twenty tons of freight on the three wagons. I know that at the time this seemed to me a tremendous load. That was in the good old times when freighting by team was the custom of the country.

The pictures of these strange teams in contrast remain with me still.

Illinois

Of the exodus from Missouri before reaching the Mississippi at Quincy I have one recollection which is definite and clear. That is of our arrival at a log farmhouse at the side of the road, along in the afternoon. As the team stopped it was assailed by a pack of dogs, but the farmer, coming to the door, told us not to fear for they would not hurt anyone. In answer to our inquiry as to whether he could keep us overnight he said, "Certainly," and bade us enter.

Mother and my children went in, leaving someone, whom I seem to remember as Jonathan Holman, to care for the team. This team was composed of two large black horses, one called Charlie and the other Jim. Jim must have perished somewhere on the road or soon after our arrival at Nauvoo, but Charlie survived and was used by Father as a riding horse.

The farmhouse was what was called a double log house—that is, it had two large rooms built separately but connected by a large open space closed up on one side and roofed over like the house. In this space were stored grain, produce, different kinds of harness, saddles, implements, and other things pertaining to farm life in Missouri.

The farmer was a sturdy man and gave us a hearty welcome. The weather was cold, but there was a great fire in one end of the living room and we were soon very comfortable. We had supper and afterwards beds were made, some on the bedstead and some on the floor, which we were permitted to occupy. We slept cozily in the warmth of that big fire as it gradually waned to a bed of coals.

We had an early start next morning, but of other incidents connected with the long journey of crossing the State I have little memory until we reached the river. The weather had become extremely cold and the river was frozen over, so that we crossed upon the ice. Charlie, the more intelligent animal of the team, was hitched to the tongue of the wagon and the driver, walking behind him, held the end of the tongue in his hand, guiding the horse across. This was considered the safest way to make the crossing for it was feared the ice might not be strong enough to bear the weight of the double team and the loaded wagon.

Carrying in her arms my brothers, Frederick and Alexander (the latter born the preceding June), with my sister, Julia, and myself holding onto her dress at either side, my mother walked across the frozen river and reached the Illinois shore in safety. This, then, was the manner of our passing out of the jurisdiction of a hostile State into the friendlier shelter of the State of Illinois, early in 1839.

From the history called "Recollections of the Pioneers of Lee County (Illinois)" is taken the following extract concerning that hazardous journey of my mother from Far West to Quincy:

"After making such arrangements for the safety of herself and children as she could, Mrs. Smith left the home from which she had been driven and turned her steps toward Illinois. The winter shut in early and when the fleeing pilgrims reached the Mississippi River it was frozen over, and Mrs. Smith, weary, sad, and heart-broken, crossed the mighty river to Quincy, Illinois, on foot, carrying her two youngest children, with the oldest boy and little girl clinging to her dress.

"She found a hospitable welcome at the home of a family by the name of Cleveland, where she remained during the long winter, sad, but trusting, and in faithful expectancy waiting for her husband's relief and delivery from bonds. When at last he was free, she welcomed him with a wife's rapture, and was ready to begin again the life of devotion to his happiness as she had ever been."

Quincy

My first recollection concerned with events after we crossed the Mississippi River begins at the home of the man, George Cleveland, some three or four miles out from Quincy—in a northeasterly direction I believe, though of that I cannot be certain. My mother and her children and a part or all of the family of Elder Sidney Rigdon made up a part of the household there.

Elder Rigdon had two sons, Sidney and John Wickliffe, and a daughter by the name of Lucy. Whether he and the boys were there or not I cannot now call to recollection from any incident connecting them with events at the time; but a circumstance in which Lucy and my adopted sister figured leaves the clear impression that Mrs. Rigdon and the daughter were there. One day Julia came in and began teasing for something which Mother did not think proper to grant just then; I think it was for something to eat. Mother told her to wait; but the child, too impatient to do so, threw herself down upon her back on the floor and with a very good imitation of weeping began pounding her heels and bumping her head on the floor, accompanying the tattoo with a series of screams.

Mother stepped quickly to her, caught the young miss by the shoulder and straightened her to her feet with the sharp command, "Stop that! If you want anything, ask for it, but don't try any of that nonsense if you can't have it right away. You just can't come Lucy Rigdon on me!"

The childish tactics my sister attempted at that time were indeed almost a daily occurrence with Mrs. Rigdon's Lucy, who ruled her mother through inspiring a fear that she would injure herself by bumping her head on the floor in that fashion. Mother's Julia, however, never tried the experiment on Mother again; it did not work.

Mr. Cleveland's farm was an excellent play place for us boys. Leading out from the pasture was a railroad cut and part of the grade of one of the projected but abandoned roads through the State—remains of the railway excitement that had raged to some extent in 1837. There were no rails, ties, or other material occupying the grade and it was smooth and level, making an excellent play ground. A fence ran across, with a pair of bars in the center over the roadbed, from which point of vantage we could see quite a long way over the grade toward the city. It was quite a bit of fun to steal away from the house into the pasture, go down to the bars, and passing them race along the level grade toward the town until we could see into it. We did not dare to go into the settlement, for while it was not forbidden we seemed instinctively to fear we would not be permitted to return if the people there should see us.

One of the homes nearest to the Cleveland residence was a small one on the top of a gently rising hill. It was occupied by Dimick Huntington, his wife, and children—Allen, Lot, and Fannie. Mrs. Huntington was a tall, spare woman, bright-eyed, shrewd, and withal good-natured. I think Fannie was the oldest of the children and Allen next in age. He must have been two or three years older than I, for he was allowed to take his father's rifle and go out into the pasture and brush to look for rabbits. Mr. Cleveland had a son about my age and with the Huntington children we used to form quite a little band of players, ranging the farm at will.

With resourceful leadership, a church can capitalize its handicaps! This is a day when many congregations report, "Our finances are in a mess, but our spirit is better than in more prosperous times."—John R. Scotford in "Less Money — More Participation," Church Management.

In Remembrance

By Belle Robinson James

The association of my father's family—the John A. Robinson's—with "Brother Joseph" was one of our most prized friendships. I remember him when I was a small child, coming to Peoria, Illinois. He was tall and slender with black hair, a moustache and goatee, and piercing black eyes. The next time I saw him, in Lamoni in 1886, he seemed to have grown somewhat gray and a little stouter. From then on I saw him frequently as he was often a guest in my father's home in Independence, and later in the home of myself and husband.

A year or so before my marriage I was reporting an Iowa reunion, and Brother Joseph and Uncle Alec were showing me around the camp grounds, introducing me to their Iowa friends, when we noticed a stout man of middle age trying to get through a stiled gate. "Look, Belle," said Uncle Joseph, "that's what Orville is going to look like when he is forty." At my startled "Mercy, no!" they both broke into peals of laughter. Later when Orville and I had our first home in Independence, on Lexington Street, Brother Joseph would often drop in unannounced for lunch or dinner. He would ask if there was anything on hand for lunch, and while I was hustling around to get it, he would go into the front room, probably get a book of fiction out of the library, sit down in a large leather arm-chair before the grate and read a little; and then when I would peep in the room to see if he was comfortable, he would be fast asleep, with a handkerchief over his head. At the table he would regale us with the funniest stories and jokes, often about his own pranks of boyhood. One incident he related concerned his first marriage ceremony. He had studied it with great care, and got along well until the end when in solemn tones he declared, "And what God hath joined asunder, let no man put together." He loved to sing and would join heartily with others in singing, the clear tones of his high voice ringing out in fine quality and expression. At the 1891 conference at Kirtland, many guests were quartered at the Kelley Hotel there, and every evening after supper and before church time, the crowd would get together and sing with all the joy of faith and good fellowship. And clearest and truest in pitch and tone would be Uncle Joseph's, who sang his favorite songs with great zest. I recall that we rarely missed singing "His Loving-Kindness" and "Father, When in Love to Thee," and he would always stress the last line, "Hear and answer when we cry."

My stenographic work at the conference, beginning in 1890, brought me into contact with Brother Joseph and the other church leaders more than would have been possible in any other way. And some of the most cherished moments of those conferences would be when all the conference work was done, the officers sustained and all routine finished, he would stand before the assembly and generally at the request of the elders, talk to them as a kind father or elder brother would do before they left on their arduous tasks for the year.

A few gems from some of Brother Joseph's conference speeches:

1901—"The personal conduct in dress and in speech and pulpit, the actions of the representatives of our faith, are taken cognizance of by those to whom we preach; and carelessness of statement, carelessness of speech, uncleanliness of person, carelessness of conversation, all go to make up the minister and the effect that he has upon the people to whom he addresses himself; and it behooves every man that represents the church to strive to make his representation the fairest, the most honorable, and the cleanest that he possibly can under any and all circumstances." . . . "It is far better to draw men than to drive them." . . . "I now state to you, brethren, under the influence of, to me, the Spirit of God, that should I be overtaken by death before some of the things which are anticipated shall be wrought, you have my successor in your midst. I do not say that he should be chosen; if at the time that this emergency should occur he is found to be worthy let him be chosen; if unworthy let him be rejected and another chosen from the body as the revelation provides. And should he be found unworthy and another of my sons found worthy, let the line descend, as I believe that it ought to, etc." . . . "We have nothing to be afraid of except our own failure to keep nigh unto the Master, and so far as it is practicable to do it, near to each other. We cannot work unless we work for good, and every man in the field ought to know within himself the assurance that when he hears the name of a brother mentioned, wherever that brother may be as a laborer, 'My heart trusts in that man.'" . . . "I have noticed in my history in watching others and in watching myself, that the strongest men among us are the humblest ones." . . . "You can accomplish great results by steadfast purpose and persistently hanging on. The spirit of continuity is the spirit which will accomplish this work ultimately."

. . . "I have learned more than one lesson from my defeats. When I thought I was strong, I found I was weak." . . . "I advise you not to be harsh. The day is coming when there must be a better unity of effort and a more kindly spirit exhibited in our preaching. Our success will be better if we show them the better side without compromising the teachings we are holding."

1905—"I notice, with considerable regret, as your Presiding Officer, the too frequent recurrence of the disposition to resent. It seems to me that we have not yet learned the full extent and meaning of what Christ said—'Resist not evil.'" . . . "Nothing should be carried out of the assembly room in the spirit of evil memory or of disparagement. Words spoken hastily in debate or under strong influence of provocation, or anything of that kind, ought to be passed over." . . . "I used to say . . . that I was always afraid of the man who jumped into the middle of the street and yelled, 'I am an honest man.' I always thought I would watch that fellow. The honesty of ourselves, as soldiers together, is to be measured by our continued onward course and our consistent behavior while pursuing that course. You can easily see that. And the silent pursuer of his course will sooner or later attract more attention to himself and receive better credit than one who continually insists that he does what he does because of his honest convictions. His honest convictions are always conceded." . . . "The man that sings and is joyous over his work is the man that gets through without unnecessarily being tired. But the man who drags himself into his work and continually pushes himself that way is always tired. That will not do for us. We are to be cheerful. And when I am not cheerful I will try to keep out of the way of those who are likely to get cloudy because I am." . . . "But be careful that you do not allow mistrust, suspicion, unjust aspersion, to either grow up in your heart or spring out from your lips." . . . "And while we are authorized to take notice of divergence from right ways, we are not authorized to listen to the whisperings of unjust suspicion and to repeat those whisperings where the influence of the man who is in the field, or any responsible position, is injured in his work. We cannot do that. Those who are sensitive feel this. Honorable men feel it. Useful men feel it. And notwithstanding they may put on a bold front, keeping a stout heart, it must sooner or later tell upon the individuality, and he will get weary—weariness in spirit." . . . "The day of our assembling this month was the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the church—three-fourths of a century, longer than Israel wandered at one time. But now we have our faces fairly set toward the promised land. Let us not forfeit our right, but continue until it shall be accomplished."

1906—"The inspiration of the gospel of the Son of God, and the inspiration of his Spirit quickens, re-vivifies, and puts a man nearer to the influences of life, nearer to his Maker and the Savior than in any other period or periods of his existence. And every man standing before God and receiving of this inspiration, whether it is in the stand or wherever it may come, or upon what occasion, his increased vitality and vigor of life spiritually is before God, and his identity, his individuality, will never, never be taken from him unless he willingly opens the gate to the incoming of other spirits. And if he does that, he does it for his ruin." . . . "Like you, I acknowledge no authority that is infallible, except the authority of God and Jesus Christ, the Revelator. And when I have reasons to believe that they speak, I bow to the mandate. I have never given you a thought or an expression that I have not endorsed from my soul as a communication from God, to me, for the people. I never expect to do it. I have no ambition that drives me to such a course as that. No dollar of the church's money has ever found its way into my hands that has not been able to be traced out. I have carried the interests of the church wherever I have been. I never permitted the flag to be lowered in my presence, or by me. I do not intend to do it now, if God gives me power and strength."

1907—"The question has suggested itself to me in the course of the conference. . . . Am I personally, in what is called a receptive condition? . . . I may frankly state to you, that I know of no reason why I am not. I am just as willing as I ever was in the world for God to speak to me, or the Spirit to have influence upon my mind to bring things to it in any form that it has ever appeared to any as I have ever been. . . . Am I in fault if revelation on mooted questions is not received? To say that I am is more than I am willing to do; and to say that I am not, but that for some fault of men the church does not receive revelations from the Lord is in my judgment saying practically that He did not know his business and is not about it. I don't know how that will strike you but it is suggested to me, that he does know whether he wants anything to come to the body or not; he does know the condition of the body. I believe that by his spiritual intelligences he knows the conditions of every field, and if it were necessary he should reveal anything in regard to it, I confess for one that I believe that he will do it. And until he does do it, I do not know what we are going to do other than to exercise our own wisdom, and the intuition that God gives us. . . . In the absence of revelation (Continued on page 1426.)

The Ancestral Background of Joseph Smith (1832-1914)

By Mary Audentia Smith Anderson

Believing that a brief article setting forth the ancestral background of the late President Joseph Smith would enhance this issue of the Herald which ushers in the beginning of his Memoirs, the following is submitted. To those who have access to the book Ancestry and Posterity of Joseph Smith and Emma Hale, published by the church in 1929, the histories of these Colonial "fathers" of Joseph Smith may be traced in further detail.

Whatever of importance may be attached to the theory of inherited tendencies and traits of character, it may be called into operation here, and account in some measure to the students of psychology for the admirable qualities and disposition which were his by nature and cultivation.

1. Orlando Bagley, born in England about 1620, came to Massachusetts about 1642, settling in Boston and, later, Amesbury. He was a Puritan, a Constable, and man of influence.

2. John Baker, born in Norwich, co. Norfolk, Eng., came in 1637, settling at Ipswich and Topsfield, Mass. He owned considerable property; was listed as a grocer on the ship's roll.

3. Thomas Barnes, born in England about 1623, came to New Haven in 1639, and participated in the development of that settlement.

4. Thomas Beach, son of Rev. John Beach, of Devonshire, Eng., was a freeman at New Haven in 1646, and later became a founder of Milford.

5. David Bennett was a freeholder of Rowley, Mass., in 1677, and one of its earliest physicians. He was a soldier in King Philip's War.

6. Robert Bodfish was a freeman at Lynn, Mass. in 1635, removing later to Sandwich and Barnstable. He was from England.

7. Edward Bosworth was from Coventry, Eng., and died on board the Elizabeth and Dorcas, just before that immigrant ship landed at Boston in the spring of 1634.

8. William Bradley came from the West Riding of Yorkshire, Eng. in 1637, settling at New Haven in 1644. He was a large landholder, and Deputy to the General Court.

9. Allen Breed was married in 1622 at Pullohill, Co. Bedford, Eng., and became an early and influential settler at Lynn, Mass.

10. Samuel Brocklebank came with his widowed mother, Jane, to Rowley, Mass., in 1638. He held many public offices, was Deacon of the church, and as Captain of militia was killed when ambushed by Indians at Sudbury, in 1676. They were from England.

11. William Buckland came from England in 1634, first to Hingham, and later to Rehoboth, Mass. He was a man of property and renown.

12. William Bunnell was descended from an old Normandy family which came in an early day to England. He came from Cheshire, in 1638, and settled in New Haven, Conn.

13. Henry Champion was from Norfolk, Eng., coming to Saybrook, Conn., as early as 1647. He was a descendant from a Huguenot family, a man of affluence, and the ancestor of many notable military leaders.

14. John Chedsey, supposedly from England, was a signer of the Colony Constitution at New Haven, in 1644; he was then 23 years of age.

15. John Chipman came from near Dorchester, Eng., in 1637, at the age of 16. He was a very influential member of the Plymouth Colony, an Elder, Selectman, Deputy to General Court, and on the Council of War.

16. Henry Cobb was born in Kent, Eng., near London, and came to Plymouth, Mass. in 1629. He owned considerable property in the vicinity of Barnstable, where he was Ruling Elder for many years, and also held various offices of public trust.

17. Anthony Colby was from Beccles, Suffolk, Eng., a Puritan who came to Boston in 1630. He was a settler of Salisbury and Amesbury, and a pioneer by instinct and disposition, ever pushing out into new localities.

18. William Crocker was a Deacon, Constable, Deputy, and generally prominent man in the colony at Barnstable, Mass., having come from co. Devon, Eng., as early as 1634.

19. Zaccheus Curtis came at the age of 16, from Downton, Wiltshire, Eng., in 1635. He lived in Salem, Reading, Gloucester, and Boxford, consecutively.

20. Nicholas Denslow, born in 1577, was in Dorchester, Mass, as early as 1630, but settled at Windsor, Conn., as one of its first proprietors. It is said he was the oldest man in the fight with the Indians at Mystic River.

21. Balthazar DeWolf was a settler at Hartford, Conn., as early as 1656, but removed to Wethersfield and then to Lyme, where he was a prominent settler, and a member of the Train Band, the military organization of the place.

22. John Dutton was in Plymouth in 1630, and was a native of co. Chester, Eng.

23. William Duty, married at Rowley, Mass., in 1684, was a soldier in King Philip's War.

24. Thomas French was from north Scotland, but had lived for a time in Assington, co. Suffolk, Eng., before coming with his children to Massachusetts, about 1630, where they settled at Ipswich.

25. John Frost, born probably in Cornwall, Eng., was early in Boston and in Cambridge by 1635; from there he went to Southhold, L. I.

26. Edward Fuller, born at Redenhall, co. Norfolk, Eng., came with wife and small son on the Mayflower, 1620. He and his wife both died in the prevailing sickness of that first winter.

27. George Gates came in 1651, at the age of 17, from Chesham, co. Bucks, Eng. He settled at Hartford where he held various offices. Later he became an original proprietor of Haddam. He was Captain of militia, Deputy for over 30 years, Town Clerk, and in many ways served his community as an honored citizen.

28. Zaccheus Gould came from Bovington, co. Hertford, Eng., to Massachusetts in 1638, living first at Weymouth, then Lynn where he owned a mill, and then to Topsfield, where he became the largest landowner in the vicinity. He erected the first iron works in New England, and among his descendants are men who have won recognition as inventors and foundrymen. He was a friend to the Quakers, despised oppression, was zealous in maintaining his rights, and liberal in religious views.

29. John Heald (Hale) came from Berwick-upon-Tweed, co. Northumberland, Eng., and was a first settler at Concord in 1635.

30. Andrew Hidden came from England, and settled at Rowley, Mass. where he was married in 1654. He was a soldier in King Philip's War.

31. John Hodge was granted land in Killingworth, Conn., where he was married in 1665. He later removed to Windsor.

32. Samuel Hotchkiss is supposed to have come from co. Essex, Eng., and was in New Haven, Conn., as early as 1641. He was Representative to General Court, and assigned an honorable seat in the meeting-house.

33. John Howland, a young man of 28, came in the Mayflower, in 1620. He became a man of power and influence, serving the new plantation in many capacities,—in the military branch, on committees and filling offices of public trust, including that of Assistant Governor.

34. Thomas Huckins, from England, was a member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Massachusetts in 1637, being its Ensign in 1638. He was later of Barnstable, and for many years a Selectman, Collector of Excises, Auditor of Colony accounts, Deputy, and Commissary General in Indian Wars. It is said of him that "as a business man he perhaps had no superior in the Colony, certainly not in the town."

35. William Hunt was born in Halifax, Yorkshire, Eng., in 1605, and in 1635 came to Concord, Mass., where he took a prominent part in civic affairs.

36. John Huntley was in Boston, Mass., as early as 1647. Later he lived in Roxbury, and then in Lyme, Conn., where he helped frame the laws and otherwise establish the new community.

37. James Hurst, was in Plymouth as early as 1632, some claiming he came from Leyden, in 1629. He was Deacon of the church, a member of the military company, and a tanner by trade, building the first tannery in the Colony.

38. Robert Lee was living in Plymouth in 1636, supposed to have come from London.

39. George Lewis, a clothier by trade, is supposed to have been an attendant at Rev. John Lothrop's Separatist church in London in 1632, coming to Massachusetts soon after. He was first in Plymouth, then in Scituate, later, with Rev. Lothrop and others, "forming a church" at Barnstable, in 1639. His children were well educated. "He was an honest good man, and got his living by his labor; a sincere Christian, living in peace and avoiding suits-at-law. He did not hold that the chief end of man was to gather riches, but rather to do good, and to train his children in righteous ways to grow to be honest, industrious, useful and respected citizens."

40. Thomas Look was in Lynn, Mass., before 1646. He was connected in some way with the iron works at Rowley, once identified with Boxford, near Topsfield, the ancestral home of the Smith family.

41. Joseph Loomis, born at Braintree, co. Essex, Eng., was from the old Lomas family which counts a martyr among its forebears. The said John Lomas was burned at Canterbury in 1556, "for heresy." Joseph Loomis came to America in 1638, settling at Windsor, Conn. He was a woolen-draper, which included then the making and selling of clothes. He became the ancestor of many illustrious men of this country, some of whom in his honor converted into a school his old homestead in Windsor. Here gratuitous education is given to worthy boys over 12 years of age. Col. John Mason Loomis, of Chicago, gave this Institute an endowment of $1,200,000.

42. Thomas Lord was born at Towcester, co. Northampton, Eng., and came from London in 1635, with wife and children. Next year, in company with Rev. Thomas Hooker and others, he crossed the wilderness to found the city of Hartford.

43. John Lothrop was of Etton, Yorkshire, Eng., and graduated from Queen's College, Cambridge, in 1605, obtaining a Master's degree there in 1609. His religious views did not long permit him to serve under the Church of England, and he became an independent minister. After eight years of secret religious worship in London, he and his followers were suddenly seized and thrown in prison, where he spent two years amidst very foul and loathsome conditions. In 1634 he was allowed to leave the country, and came to America where he was given a pastorate at Barnstable, Mass., leaving there a long and very exemplary record as a religious leader.

44. John Mack, a Scotch Covenanter, was from Inverness, and came to New England in 1669, settling first at Boston, then at Salisbury, in Massachusetts, and finally at Lyme, Conn.

45. Peter Mallory signed the Planters' Covenant at New Haven in 1644. It is supposed he was from the south of England. He became a large landowner, but preferred deeding property to his many children while he lived to leaving large estate behind him. His signature indicates a degree of education above the average at that period.

46. William Maltby was from Retford, Nottinghamshire, Eng., and came to Connecticut, where he signed the New Plantation Covenant at Branford in 1667. He came with the rank of "Gentleman," and was referred to in early town records as Master, Judge, Esquire, and even called "ye Worshipful Mr. William Maltby." He was an officer in the military organization, Constable, Commissioner, Deputy, Justice of the Peace, and Probate Judge.

47. Vincent Meigs, from Bradford-Peverell, Dorsetshire, Eng. came with his sons in 1634, living in Weymouth and Rehoboth, Mass., and Hartford, New Haven and Guilford, Conn. He died in what is now Madison, being the first to be interred in that settlement, once called Hammonassett and East Guilford. Among his descendants are numbered many prominent men who carry the family name.

48. Joseph Merriam was from Hadlowe, co. Kent, Eng. He was a "clothier," which then involved the business of making cloth as well as clothing, and selling them. He was a man of considerable property, but did not live long after coming to America in 1638, for he died in Concord in January, 1641.

49. Thomas Nash, a gunsmith and blacksmith, was a useful man in the new world. He had been with the Pilgrim Colony in Leyden, Holland, and wrote from there in 1625 to his brethren in Plymouth to announce the death of the beloved pastor, John Robinson. He came to Boston in 1637, and the following year to New Haven, signing there the famous "fundamental agreement." He was well advanced in years when he came, was Deputy in 1640, and in 1646 "spared from Trayning" on account of his age.

50. James Olmsted was a Puritan from Braintree, Eng., and came to Boston in 1632. He was the first Constable of Cambridge, Surveyor, and among the earliest emigrants to Hartford, Conn., in 1635.

51. William Paine was a freeman of New Haven, Conn., in 1640, where he was made Constable in 1669. (In the early Colonial days the office of Constable was one of great honor, dignity and responsibility, not to be compared to the modern conception of the title.)

52. John Palmer was in Boston at the age of 17, being made freeman there in 1640. He removed to Rowley. Was Corporal in King Philip's War, a carpenter, and large landholder.

53. William Palmer was a native of Nottinghamshire, Eng., and came to America on the Fortune in 1621, the ship hailed with such delight by the Pilgrims. His wife, Frances, followed in 1623 on the Anne, termed the "bride ship," whose arrival brought about so many happy reunions and completed romances.

54. Richard Platt was from Hertfordshire, Eng., and came in 1638 at the age of 35. He settled at New Haven, but later removed to Milford with its first settlers. He took a prominent part in local affairs, was Deacon, a large landowner, and a man of superior intellectual perceptions and decided religious tendencies. He provided a Bible for each of his 17 grandchildren.

55. Thomas Powell was in New Haven as early as 1638, one of the first settlers and a signer of the original agreement.

56. William Preston was from Chesham, co. Bucks, where he was church warden and attorney. He came in 1635, becoming a settler at New Haven in time to sign the first Compact. He was a man of superior education and attainments.

57. Roger Prichard was born in the British Isles, perhaps Wales. He came early to this country, being at Wethersfield in 1640. Later he was allotted land at Springfield, Mass., where he was freeman in 1648. Before his death in 1670 he had removed to New Haven, Conn.

58. Joseph Redding was a member of the church in Boston, 1631. Later he lived in Cambridge, then Ipswich, where he died in 1674. His will, written in 1673, is still preserved, though a portion has been destroyed by mice.

59. Henry Rowley was in Plymouth, Mass., as early as 1632, coming, it is supposed, with Mr. Timothy Hatherly from England. He was a freeman at Scituate, and later at Barnstable, with the church "gathered" there in 1639. He was Constable, Surveyor, and Deputy to General Court.

60. Robert Royce was a settler of Stratford, Conn., as early as 1650, going to New London seven years later. He was a shoemaker by trade, a Constable, Representative to General Court, "Townsmen," and quite generally a servant of his community in various honorable capacities.

61. Edward Sherman, scion of a long line of Shermans in co. Suffolk, Eng., was born in Dedham, but lived in Colchester, co. Essex, prior to his coming to America in 1634. He lived in Wethersfield, and in New Haven, where he died in 1641, "an oulde man." He is the progenitor of many prominent Americans.

62. Robert Smith, the first American ancestor of Joseph Smith by the family name, came to Massachusetts in 1638, from England. He lived at Ipswich and Rowley, in that portion which later became Boxford. Later he removed to Topsfield, nearby, where five generations in the Joseph Smith line lived. He was a tailor. In the court records of the locality his son and his grandson are given the title of "gentlemen," an appellation accorded in England to younger sons of titled families. He was well-to-do, as wealth was counted in those days.

63. Humphrey Spinning was in New Haven as early as 1639, and was a man of considerable enterprise, owning lands in various settlements.

64. William Stickney, born in Frampton parish, Kirkton, co. Lincoln, Eng., came to America in 1637, living first at Boston, and from there dismissed in 1639 "to ye gathering of a Church at Rowley, if the Lord so please." An evidence of his good birth and education is the fact that he brought with him from England a quarto copy of King James' translation of the Bible, a first edition, printed in 1611. This is still in a state of good preservation, and has descended from father to son in the same line as has the old homestead. He was on important committees, was Clerk, Trials Juryman, Selectman, and Lieutenant in the militia. He owned considerable land and his will is still preserved in the Probate Office at Salem.

65. Thomas Talmage was from co. Southampton, Eng., a descendant of the ancient family of Tollmache. He came in Winthrop's fleet in 1630, and settled first at Boston, and then at Lynn, but owned land also in several early settlements, including that of Southampton, L. I.

66. John Thompson was of East Haven, Conn., where his estate was inventoried in 1655.

67. John Tilly, the 16th signer of the Mayflower Compact, died in the "first sickness" that devastated that brave little colony at Plymouth. He had fought the Indians, under the command of Miles Standish, in the "first encounter," 8 December 1620, three days before the Pilgrims made their final landing. His spirit of adventure "has fallen upon one, at least, of his descendants: General A. W. Greeley, the Arctic explorer, watched over by the God of his Pilgrim forefathers, was saved by the naval relief expedition to do good to the country which is his on a claim of more than two centuries."

68. Richard Towner was granted land at Guilford, Conn., in 1686. He was also resident and landowner at Branford and Haddam, and was a man of recognized worth and dignity. By trade he was a ship carpenter, and one of the prosperous husbandmen of the community.

69. William Tuttle came from Gravesend, Eng., in 1635. He was from the Devonshire family of Tuttlés. He settled first at Charlestown, then became a proprietor in Boston, and finally, in 1639, removed to New Haven, Conn., helping to frame and sign the Colony Constitution there. He was a very prominent man and possessed much wealth. His homestead became the site of the first college building of Yale College. He became the ancestor of many leading men of our country, including such educators as Jonathan Edwards, Timothy Dwight, Theodore Woolsey, Bishop Tuttle, Aaron Burr and others.

70. John Vinton, traditionally of a Huguenot family fled from France to escape persecution, was in Lynn, Mass., as early as 1648. He was connected with the iron works there, the leading industry at the time. Many prominent men of the ministry have descended from him.

71. Andrew Ward, of co. Suffolk, Eng., was a pioneer of influence and position in New England's early days. In 1634 he was freeman at Watertown, Mass., and next year was appointed on a Governing Commission to oversee the fortunes of the new Colony of Connecticut. He was a first settler at Wethersfield, and a Judge in the first legislative body of the State, in 1636. He was a member of the "Upper House" when war was declared against the Pequots in 1637, a member and Magistrate of the General Court many years, and a Deputy. He was a great organizer, and helped found the towns of New Haven, Stamford, Milford and Fairfield, holding offices of public trust and service in all these places. He has left a long line of worthy descendants.

72. Benjamin Wilmot, born in England, settled early in New Haven, where a son is recorded in 1641.

This, then, is the roll of pioneer ancestors back of the man whose memory is being honored in the pages of the Herald. Truly they were, as he calls them, sturdy men, and bequeathed to him a legacy of integrity and achievement which he not only prized but tried to emulate. In closing, no more apt sentence could be chosen than the following, ascribed to Bishop Warburton in the English House of Lords:

"High birth is a thing I never knew anyone to disparage except those who had it not; and I never knew anyone make any boast of it who had anything else to be proud of."

"Divine Discontent"

Yearning? Ah, yes,
That restlessness divine is heritage of man,
Think you to search, e'en though the earth you span
Canst satiate that yearning?
The far stars, the mysterious moon
Beckon a call from the depth of midnight darkness,
Make hearts to yearn, to rise and fall, responsive;
In consonance with God's plan.

Yearn on, 'tis good.
The balmy air, soft 'round our senses, God proclaimed
Should bid us climb to heights yet unattained.
Soft drifting clouds, the caressing breeze,
The bright sunset's afterglow,
Or when our golden mornings burst,
To the soul attuned, these make it thirst
To reach a knowledge yet unrestrained.

Oh, restless heart!
Pine on. Pursue the peace for which you pray:
Fulfill one urge, then for a higher goal be on thy way.
God of the Universe, 'tis thy design
That souls of thy creation feel thy call
'Twas said by saint of old, Thou, Lord of all, Hast made man for thyself, and he Must restless be until he rests in Thee.

The Women's Work

Friendly Visiting

Part Two

By Grace L. Krahl

THE TEMPORAL ASPECTS

"Much food is in the tillage of the poor but there is that is destroyed for want of judgment."—Proverbs 13: 23.

"I say unto you, that ye must visit the poor and the needy, and administer to their relief, that they may be kept until all things may be done according to my law."—Doctrine and Covenants 44: 3.

"In your temporal things you shall be equal."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

In the above passages three distinct economic conditions are named: The wasteful poor or those without managing ability; the unfortunate or worthy poor, and the time when all shall be equal and there will be no poor.

Also three avenues of service are indicated: To teach the improvident the ways of frugality and conservation; to extend relief to those in adverse circumstances, and to urge the observance of the law that will eliminate poverty, or rather prevent poverty.

Friendly visiting and relief work can hardly be separated and yet there is not a great deal that the Friendly Visitor can do. Housing conditions, monetary income and securing professional medical aid are matters entirely out of her hands obviously, as she has no public funds upon which she can draw and she would not be the proper administrator of them if she had them as that is provided for otherwise. But there are some services that a Friendly Visitor can perform that are within her province, timely and helpful.

We must recognize that when we speak of the "poor" which includes most of us (with necessary apologies), they should not all be classed alike, for there is strata of life and character among them as among the more fortunate.

Upon entering some homes the Friendly Visitor can quickly observe the conditions of want and poverty and the lack of effort to make the best of what is at hand. In other homes poorly equipped, yet neat and clean, the Friendly Visitor can only with ingenuity find out the extent of their want.

It is marvelous what noble characters we sometimes find among those who are poor in this world's goods.

I know a home consisting of father, mother and several children who for years had sickness without cessation, and very inadequate means. Yet that mother moves about her scantily furnished home with that native refinement and sweetness that makes one wonder that such a nature should not have a few, at least, of such surroundings that would harmonize with the beauty of her soul. But no word of complaint or woe greets a visitor or friend. She offers you the best she has to make you comfortable and in her conversation expresses concern for those whom she has heard are sick or in trouble.

When I was walking down the street the other day with a maiden lady, now well along in years, who lives alone and earns her livelihood by sewing, she told me of her home in the old country—and of the romance of her youth which came to an end because of duty, but which lingers in her heart throughout the years.

We shall often find more sturdiness of character among some of the poor who have had to battle with adversity all their lives than among those who have never known what it is to be denied the good things of life.

It would be an inspiration to anyone who would take the trouble to read "For Conscience Sake" in The Days of Auld Lang Syne, by etaoín shrdlu cmf in the same book, "Drumsheugh's Love Story." The nobler characters in self sacrifice of worldly good and comforts would be hard to find in life or literature.

Misfortune need not necessarily rob us of character. The truly great will be found the same in adversity as in prosperity. We will usually find them in the church trusting in Him who said, "In six troubles I will be with thee and in the seventh I will not forsake thee."

Of the three lines of service referred to above, two suggest teaching endeavors and one the part of mediator between the needy and those who can supply their wants.

A Friendly Visitor would not undertake to correct improvident tillage of one's land but where imprudence and wastefulness is evident in the home she could after gaining the friendship and confidence of the family suggest better ways of doing things that would lead to thrift and economy.

A Friendly Visitor can always find an opportunity in her contacts with families to say a word in favor of the observance of the financial law of the church upon which the continuance and prosperity of the church depends. (Continued on page 1426.)

"Am I My Brother's Keeper?"

THE HOUSE in the Ozarks was a drab affair, unpainted, small, but with something homey and inviting about it, too. Perhaps they had been wandering for so many years that the thought of owning this place made it seem more like home. The children skipped about over the fields picking wild flowers, or playing in the cool clear waters of the stream that flowed from the pasture spring. Along one side of the place a little white dusty road wound about a hill and was presently lost to sight in a beautiful stretch of green forest.

The other three sides of the little farm were bounded by a wilderness of small oaks which had grown up since the lumbermen had taken the large ones away. Now and then a giant old tree could be seen also, more artistically beautiful because of its gnarled limbs that made it of no value out in the world of money. Stretches of moss in the more shaded areas and a profusion of flowers of many colors in sunny spots added the final touch of wild glory to the scene.

"This is prettier than the park back in Bay Cliff, Daddy," Danny John exclaimed when he first saw it.

"Well, silly," Dorothy Jane had cried, disgustedly, "This is God's park. And God can always do things better than people."

Louisa loved it. The primitive loneliness of it struck a responsive something in her heart. She loved the early mornings, the fresh grayness of the world before the sun rose over the mountain, the little floating clouds of white mist in the low places, the riotous songs of birds that nested in nearby trees, the faint sweet smell of wood smoke from the chimney mingling with fresh cool air.

"I shall be contented here, at least," she thought, "I shall not bother to get acquainted with the neighbors. I'll just stay away from people. Maybe I'll be able to keep calm, even if I can't be happy."

But that resolution was easier to make than to keep. Dan found that there was a small mission carried on by the Latter Day Saints in a little log building near a store and post office called West Branch. It was six miles away; but they had a car. Dan said they'd have to have a trailer, too. They'd have to market their produce, wouldn't they? But Louisa knew there was another more potent reason for the purchase of the trailer. Dan wanted to take a load of people to church with him.

HE HAD MADE FRIENDS of nearly all the men in the surrounding country. It seemed to Louisa that he did nothing but talk religion in all his spare moments. His health had improved wonderfully; he seemed marvelously happy and content now, most of the time. The only times he showed a trace of the old gloom was when he was with her alone. Then sometimes his gaze would rest upon her so sadly and wistfully that her heart would almost cease beating. Funny what a small thing like that black box could do to your life. For she could not but feel that this sadness was due to his past sad experience, whatever it was; that his mind often dwelt upon that lost and fair Elaine.

She went to the little Mission Sunday school. It would have seemed queer if she had not gone. When a man took all the neighbors to church and left his wife at home, there would have to be explanations. How could she excuse herself? But she felt more lonely sometimes in a crowd of people that at home alone, with Dan in the fields and the children playing.

Dan was made superintendent of the church school; later, at the fall conference of the district, he was called to the priesthood. She said nothing, but her heart was more troubled than before. If there were inspiration in the church, would a person be called to the priesthood who was essentially dishonest—even though the victim of his dishonesty were his wife? Then it seemed she could hear old Father Eldon's voice:

"The failings of others will never save you."

The church was the true church of God. Should she join it, help Dan in his work? She couldn't! If she remained a nonmember, she could find plenty of excuses for holding herself aloof from Dan; he attributed her chilliness on different occasions to her unbelief. If she became a member, she would have to simulate a joy in his companionship she could not feel. How could one work happily, pleasantly, and without rancor, in daily company with one whom you were supposed to love, but whom you could not respect?

"If I only had just one friend; a sort of emotional refuge to fly to when things become unbearable," she thought. "But I've prayed for such a friend for so long."

SHE LOVED some of the members of the church in the West Branch Mission.

The most of them had little of wealth in terms of money; they hadn't had much chance to become educated in schools of higher learning. But many of them used splendid English; they read good magazines and books, could talk intelligently upon many subjects; they knew the books of the church. They were spiritual, too; and sometimes when some of these good people were offering prayer in the fellowship meetings, Louisa would think of that statement in the Book of Mormon: "Verily, I say unto you, he that hath eternal life is rich."

Why could she not choose her friend from among these? She had buried her thoughts in her own heart for so long that it seemed she could not break the spell of silence, and confide in anyone. Aside from this, how could she know they were not just a little untrustworthy, too? Dan seemed honest; he was honest with others. He seemed spiritual. Other people thought he was wonderfully up-right and a splendid Christian. If she couldn't trust Dan, whom could she trust?

"It's no use," she said to herself one day, "I'll never have the sort of friend I want. I might just as well face it. I'll remain outside the church, live my life as best I can, help a little with the church when I can without appearing to take too much interest in it, and help the neighbors when they need help and it is possible for me to assist them. Then someday will come welcome death—yes welcome, for there is a God and he will understand. I don't believe he will be very harsh with me for not being baptized."

She found plenty to do that winter. There was considerable sickness and her old course in nursing became of great use in the little community. Old Grandma McClaren went with Louisa most of the time when she helped with the sick. She was past seventy, but sprightly and young in spirit as a girl. She was intelligent, too.

ONCE when Dan and Louisa failed to get their daily paper, Louisa went over to McClarens' to borrow theirs. Grandma had used hers on the pantry shelves, but said, hospitably:

"Now you set right down in that chair an' I'll tell you all the news." And to Louisa's surprise the old lady gave her a complete and exhausting account of the entire paper, with many illuminating comments added.

"You have a remarkable brain," Louisa said, admiringly. "I couldn't give a synopsis of the news like that—that is, unless I had prepared it beforehand."

"I always did have a good memory. I think I could 'ave done well at school if I'd had a chance. Not that I was so disappointed about not getting to go to school, but I did want to learn to paint pictures. It seemed kind o' funny. When I was a girl, a rich family lived not far from us. They only lived in that big house in summers. The mother and father wanted the daughter of the family to be an artist. She wanted to play the violin. Her parents found how wild I was about painting and encouraged her to be my friend. Otherwise they would have snubbed me. They thought maybe she'd catch a little of my enthusiasm.

"But she never did have a knack for seeing colors and gettin' them just right. Come, I'll show you what I mean."

Louisa had never been in this home before. Grandma had accompanied her on so many errands of mercy they hadn't thought of visiting each other much.

"We ain't got many store things," the old lady apologized briefly as she led the way through the living room, "but I try to keep things neat an' clean."

"Neat and clean?" thought Louisa, "Yes, and more—they are beautiful." A rocking chair, an old arm-chair and a home-made table and bench constituted the furniture. But there was a lovely braided rug that covered most of the floor—the work had been done carefully and the colors were harmonious and pleasing. The table was covered with an exquisitely embroidered spread. Books, magazines, a lamp with a home-made shade, and the armchair with a comfortable cushion, also of evident home manufacture, completed a cozy and inviting corner. The bench was skilfully padded and draped with a gayly-flowered sateen, and held its share of cushions. If she had not seen the tiny bit of bare wood at the bottom of it she would never have suspected its origin. The curtains were of unbleached muslin tastefully embroidered and edged with home-made lace.

"I see you're lookin' at my curtains," Grandma laughed, "I think they look right pretty, don't you? They didn't cost much. I got a chance to buy a bolt of muslin real cheap last year and I sure did enjoy makin' it up. I made two bedspreads, some pillow slips and other things and these curtains. I made this lace from sock tops. Yes, I did," she continued, noting her guest's incredulous look, "come, I'll show you how I do it. Here's some I'm knitting into lace for a pillow-slip. See. I take the tops of old socks that has the feet gone to pot so pa can't wear 'em any more, an' I start ravelin' and I keep knittin' or crocheting as I go along. When I get through I either bleach it white or I dye it. I made this blue for the curtains, but I dyed some pink for pillow-slips to go with my bedspread with the pink embroidery."

"I think you're wonderful," marveled Louisa.

"Oh, no, I ain't. But I've felt sometimes I could ha' been if I'd had a chance." She sighed, then smiled. "It ain't no use to get into a heap o' worrimment about things like that. I'll get that picture I was goin' to show you."

Louisa busied herself while the woman was gone from the room indulging in silent admiration of the things those resourceful old hands had made. There was the lovely old-fashioned "heart" on the wall, with pins and needles in the soft padding. A little wall pocket for scissors, thimble, spools of thread, buttons and other things needed in sewing, hung near by. Pictures from magazines and calendars had been pasted on heavy cardboard and hung about the walls. A magazine pocket with a miniature shelf on top proved also to be home-made. It was also of stiff cardboard skilfully put together and covered with pretty pictures from magazines which somehow harmonized beautifully. By the west window a wandering Jew, with its vigorous dark-green foliage, grew between two scarlet geraniums.

"Here they are," Grandma cried as she bustled back into the room. "Here's a picture of a red-bird that Matildy made. Here's one I made. She showed me something about colorin' and drawin' an' so on. But of course, mine ain't got the trainin' back of it hers has got. Somehow, though, I like mine best."

"So do I," murmured Louisa. "The one your friend made could well be put in a book about birds—you could go and look at it and tell exactly what the bird looked like. But this one of yours makes you remember his song."

"That's just it," cried the old lady, excitedly, "My bird is just a dab o' scarlet among green leaves. You see, the leaves are all tilted this way, so you know the twig he's standin' on is bendin' and swingin' in the breeze. This little feller has got a nest hidden somewhere with a little mate on some tiny eggs, an' his throat is just about burstin' with the joy he's tryin' to sing about."

"It makes you lonesome, and sort of hungry for spring," said Louisa, in a low voice. "It's a shame you couldn't have gone ahead with things like that—"

"Oh, I wanted to. I used to cry about it. I used to think I'd like to make pictures that people 'ud want to hang in the big galleries in the cities that Matildy used to talk about; an' folks 'ud come an' look and see the beautiful things God had made, an' see that God was somehow in the things he'd made by his love an' power, an' it 'ud make them feel—oh, I guess I hoped it 'ud make them feel like they'd want to righten all the wrong things in their lives and do good things." She wiped her eyes. "Look at this silly old woman wailin' over a dead dream, would you? An' here I ought to be on the road right now. I got a lot of cans of fruit and some sweet potatoes and things and toted 'em out to the spring wagon just a little afore you come.

"You see, they's a family that moved a few months ago into a little house about three miles away, 'tother side of Cress Creek. They been keepin' to themselves an awful lot. They gethered a powerful lot o' nuts an' they picked 'em out an' sold 'em to buy stuff with. But nuts ain't bringin' a very good price this year, and it takes a sight o' a long time to get a pound of 'em picked out, so I just had an idee they wasn't havin' much to eat. Especially since pa met one of the folks from over there, and this man said the family's store o' nuts was about gone. So I just thought—well, my land, there's just pa an' me to eat, an' we'll never in the world eat up that six or seven hundred quarts of fruit in the cellar. Oh, yes, I think I'll take some of that sausage I fried down, too, and a bit o' hominy. Maybe they'd like a gallon o' sorghum."

"You surely are good, grandma. You never saw these people, did you?"

GRANDMA MCCLAREN snorted, "No, I ain't never seen 'em. But they're part o' God's creation, I reckon. An' folks over there all say they've worked powerful hard, an' that they don't swear nor do anything like that. An' they pray, too. I guess I can't afford not to do what I'm doin', young lady. I'd be no Christian if I didn't. Ain't nobody decent goin' to starve around me—not as long as this old head and these hands can keep goin'. But why can't you come with me?"

Louisa considered. "I think I can. But I'll have to run home and tell Dan."

"All right, I'll come by pretty soon and get you."

"I'd take something along myself for that family," she told Dan, "but before Grandma gets through piling stuff in that spring wagon there won't be room for anything else."

"You might take a little bag of that popcorn," he answered, "The children would probably like that. And invite them out to Sunday school—be sure. Tell them there's always room for one more in the old trailer."

Louisa enjoyed the ride. Although it was winter, and the woods were bare of leaves, it was quite warm. Now and then a squirrel or rabbit ran from the roadside into the rustling dead leaves beyond. Grandma McClaren's wholesome philosophy made the trip seem very short, and they soon were getting out of the vehicle beside an ancient log cabin.

"Why, Mrs. English!" exclaimed Louisa, astonished, as she saw who it was that opened the door. "I didn't know—"

Mrs. English laughed, then sighed. "You didn't know we were here? We didn't aim for you to find out—not until we had something in the house really good to eat—you see," she turned to Grandma McClaren, "They were so good to us up in Bay Cliff that I was afraid if they found us out, they'd be wantin' to give us things. And we really are getting on pretty well. It's soon going to be spring—"

"But I do hope you'll let me leave the stuff I brought," said Mrs. McClaren, "because it's such a problem every summer to know where I'm goin' to put all the new fruit—pa an' me just never seem able to empty the cans ourselves."

"She gave me some of her sweet potatoes not long ago," put in Louisa, "and you can be sure I didn't refuse them. Ours were gone—"

"That was neighborliness. If we accepted all that stuff you brought, we'd be taking charity."

Mr. English appeared at the door. "Come in and sit down," he said, "and kindly excuse these walnut hulls. And don't feel badly because we don't want to take the things. You see, we don't want the children to grow up feeling that the world owes them a living. If we take things we can't pay for—"

"Well, if that's worryin' you, my boy," said Grandma, spiritedly, "you can come an' cut a rick o' wood for pa. His joints are kind o' stiff an' he really shouldn't do that kind o' work. Of course, if you work it out, I'll let you say what you want—'twouldn't be right to make you pay for this stuff when maybe you wouldn't like it."

"Don't worry about that," smiled Mrs. English. "We can like most anything. And we'll be glad to get it, if we can pay for it in some way, as you suggest. If we could do something to earn a little corn, to make some hominy with—a person won't starve if he has hominy."

"Hominy's all well and good in its place," pronounced Grandma emphatically, "but I'd sure hate to live for very long on nothing else but that."

Mrs. McClaren stopped the horse when they were about half-way home.

"Have you got time to go with me and see that poor old blind woman? I ain't seen her for quite a spell, and Mrs. Marlow says her daughter and husband have come to live with her since she got her blind pension. She says the daughter don't know anything—can't read nor write nor even work much."

"I—I guess so."

Louisa had visited this tiny hut before when the old blind lady was penniless and sick.

"This is Mrs. Eldon, a professor's wife," Mrs. McClaren said to the untidy young woman who bade them enter. "You know—he taught people how to read and all—her husband did."

"Oh," the young woman answered, abashed, "I—I allus did have a hankerin' to larn to read an' write, but I ain't never had no chanct."

Louisa told herself fiercely that she couldn't help the unfortunate situation in which other people were placed. That she couldn't help it if so many people were hungry—starving for both physical and mental food. But something within her heart told her that she was indeed partly responsible; and the consciousness of the truth of the accusing voice hung over her darkly, and added its weight to the burden that already oppressed her.

Holden Stake

Two regional priesthood institutes have recently been held with splendid attendance and interest. Each of these institutes lasted a week with two hours of class work each night. Instruction was centered in the special training of priesthood for a visiting program. Each member of the priesthood was expected to enlist in the program outlined by the stake presidency, which included the conducting of special rally services in a number of the branches, to be followed later by special missionary series. Having himself enlisted, each member of the priesthood was assigned to visit the homes of the members to secure the enlistment of each family in the program of the stake.

Kansas City Stake

Following a survey of the priesthood of the stake, conducted by the First Presidency, a series of training courses has been organized. These courses are giving special attention to the interests of the younger men of the priesthood. The young men meet at the church for two hours' instruction once each week. The instruction given for the most part concerns itself with practical aspects of the ministry. Attendance and interest at these classes is outstanding—The stake presidency in cooperation with the stake high council is making a consistent effort to reach each indifferent and inactive man of the priesthood, giving each an opportunity to choose between a qualified and active service or the surrendering of his priesthood credentials.

Far West Stake

A second annual roll call of the priesthood of the stake is in process. Each man of the priesthood of the stake will be interviewed personally by a member of the First Presidency, the stake president and the stake bishop. These three interviews for each man will leave him with little uncertainty as to what the program of the church and stake is and just what his responsibility as an ordained man is to that program. This and other stake surveys supplement a special personal efficiency report on each man of the ministry which is filed with the First Presidency.

Lamoni Stake

A special survey of the priesthood of Lamoni and near-by branches has been conducted by a member of the First Presidency and the stake officers. Personal interviews have been held with nearly one hundred men of the local ministry. Personal efficiency reports on the work of each man have been filed with the First Presidency.

Independence

Priesthood surveys are in progress with personal interviews with each man, being conducted by a member of the First Presidency and branch officers. Personal efficiency reports are being filed with the First Presidency. A new quorum activity following a definite program is apparent. A two-weeks' priesthood institute is planned for early in the new year. The next several weeks will witness an almost continuous missionary effort in various congregations of Zion.

Some critics may assume that at times too much emphasis has been placed upon comparative trivial circumstances. It may be a just criticism; but in studying these "memories," I early concluded that those events which came up prominently in his mind as he passed his three-score years and ten—and then some—and to which such a clear-thinking man ascribed sufficient importance as to incorporate in his Memoirs, must have had some definite influence in shaping his life, conduct and character, although, perhaps, an influence more easily discernible to students of psychology than to the casual reader. Oppression, even the bullying of a small boy by a larger one, aroused his childish indignation, and doubtless helped to form in him that well-known disposition for fair play at all times, for justice that ever championed the cause of the weaker brother, and for that charity which led him to forgive and condone mistakes that were not malicious in nature. Persecution, such as was accorded his mother after the death of her husband and which wrested from her much of her rightful property and reduced her to poverty, no doubt helped to shape a life course of unswerving integrity, and implant in his breast a philosophy of social conduct which enabled him, in the closing hours of his life to say,

"Well, I'm not afraid to go. I have never owned a dishonest dollar in my life. And I have never knowingly wronged a man, woman or child."

Such, then, with their mixture of faults and excellencies, are these "memories," which filled the mind of a good man after a long and eventful life, a life which had known plenty of hardships and sacrifices, but also a life crowned with much spiritual exaltation. They have been, and still are, very precious to me, and preparing them for publication has been a labor made light by love and appreciation. It was a task which could not have been adequately performed had it not been for the considerate and devoted cooperation of my beloved companion, Benjamin M. Anderson, to whom I hereby acknowledge this debt of affectionate gratitude. I am happy that the Saints and others will have the opportunity to read and enjoy them, and to profit, as I have, from the many moral and spiritual lessons therein contained.

To all who read, then, I command them, praying that the good Spirit that prompted their dictation and marked their preparation for publication may attend, in full and beneficent power their reception by the public.

are we to wait? or shall we instruct each other on the law and faith of the church? I presume that every man will say yes to that proposition. I say yes to it. I say further that it is dangerous for us to wait to be commanded in everything; for a revelation long since placed upon record says that if we do we are accounted as slothful servants; that God expects man to bring to pass much righteousness of themselves, for the power is in them."

"A philosopher said once, that we could not prevent the crows flying over our heads, but we could prevent them from building nests in our hair. We may not always be able to force or keep our thoughts altogether in subjection; but we can prevent them from making us do or say what is reprehensible. He that overcometh himself, you know, is greater than he that taketh a city."

If a Friendly Visitor gives conscientious attention to visiting, which of itself is quite some task, she should not be expected, if her time and strength are limited, to do actual relief work, too. But her function in this regard would be to report the conditions of need she finds to the department of women, or if beyond their resources, to the deacon or bishop. But if of a temporary or emergency nature she can call upon the women.

This suggests at once an organized relief division of the women's department.

First, briefly, one to be in charge who might be called the relief manager. She would know when word is received from a Friendly Visitor that help was needed at a certain place, just what was needed and who, by previous arrangement and agreement, she could call upon to go with the supplies.

A bureau of bed linens could be kept on hand for lending purposes in cases of temporary illness or accident, or even prolonged illness when ordinary supplies are insufficient. When the emergency is over the linens should be laundered by the borrower and returned ready for the next call.

Bedding, such as quilts, comforters, blankets, etc., could be made or supplied by the department and kept for cases of need.

Clothing could be made over to the size the material will best allow, for the children who may not be properly clad for winter.

Fruit juices, fresh or canned could be carried or set aside for the sick.

Flowers may be the contribution of some who want to help in relief work.

Others could give magazines and other literature for convalescents and shut-ins. Some could go and read aloud to the sick who would desire it.

The sick of our church, or any church, who come to hospitals and are strangers in the city should be remembered and visited in their trying time.

All of these activities are probably familiar to every one associated with the department of women but perhaps not carried on in an organized way, which is chiefly the feature I bring to you. The saying that "What is everybody's business is nobody's business" perhaps is so old that it has lost its keenness of application.

Assignment of tasks and a report required at certain times I have found is the most satisfactory method of carrying on work where many people are involved. Church work among the priesthood is done in this manner from year to year. While some do not favor the idea of reports I find that having to make a report stimulates activity (not that this should be the main motive of one's service) develops good planning and promptness.

Reports of various lines of work lend interest to the meeting in which they are read.

They relieve the one in charge of anxiety as to whether this or that work is being carried on successfully. From reports, often new ideas will evolve or suggestions of ways of improvement occur.

Friendly visiting in both its spiritual and temporal aspects should lend its influence toward attaining the great goal before us—the zionic home. Happily the zionic home is not dependent upon geographical location. It can exist wherever the ideals of Zion are the dominant factors in the lives of Saints.

May Friendly Visiting promote further good will and help to bear another's burdens.

The question about prayer is not whether I stand, or kneel, or sit when I pray—that is not the supreme importance about prayer—but how do I stand after I have prayed? How do I walk when my prayer is finished? Not so much what do I say or how do I say it when I pray, but whether or not I unsay it in my conduct after the prayer is over.—J. Stuart Holden in "The Patience of Christ," Church Management.

MY FATHER'S LAST YEARS

information, he stated that it was one of his means of testing the validity of the message, because in each instance the middle name was presented to him and he wanted to verify the same. It may be noted, however, that the middle names were not written out in the document itself. Just a spiritual straw to point the way!

Well, the time was short, but we made progress, and when the final stroke came, he said, "My work is finished." I was called to his side and he dictated his "message to the church."

Although we had long expected his passing, his illness and death was a tragedy to us all and had its very dramatic moments, though he welcomed death.

Once he said he did not grieve over being blind, because so many of his brethren were in so much worse condition than he; but "it is a little tough on a man not to be able to look into the faces of his loved ones."

And thus the glorious sunset of a good life, a fond good-by to life and a welcome to the peace he wanted. At one and the same moment—a last good-by to earth, an eager hail to eternity.

Nothing is more negative in its effect upon growth and development than the unfortunate cultivation of sickly sweet sentimentalism—sentimentalism regarding parent and child relations, the facts of life and growth, one's attitudes toward living. The story of the woman who wept with pity at the spectacle of the homeless waif fighting to survive the fury of the mechanical storm in the theatre, while yet unmindful of her own coachman freezing outside as he waited for her on a frigid winter night, serves to illustrate the kind of sentiment we have been discussing. We adults are often prone to interfere with the free development of personality in our children, in the deluded notion that we are helping them. Children are individuals. They need wise, sympathetic guidance. But we, who in an effort to be good parents, and understanding, often feel it our duty, even our privilege, to wrap the cloak of our own individuality too closely about our loved ones. We deliberately set about to influence all their conscious thinking; we shield them constantly from the rigors of a "harsh," "cruel" world; we protect them always against other individuals, against themselves, against life in general. We do not know we are doing them a grave injustice, that we are making it practically impossible for them to develop a positive, constructive personality of their own, or to make necessary personality and adjustments and achieve well balanced individualities.—Mildred Baker, in "Let's Talk About Personality," The Improvement Era.

Anniversary Services at Grand Valley, Ontario

The anniversary services of the opening of Grand Valley Church were held Sunday, October 21. Notwithstanding the continual rain Saturday night and the cloudy sky Sunday morning, the prospect of a good spiritual and social time to be had at Grand Valley brought Saints from Toronto, Hamilton, Harrison, Arthur, Guelph, Fergus, Elora, Proton, Hanover, Holstein, Niagara Falls, New York, Ravenna, Redickville, Cedar Valley, and Owen Sound. Brothers Furness and Morrison brought a choir from the last-named place, to assist in the service of music and song.

The prayer service in the morning was in charge of Brothers Taylor, Fligg, Hannah, and Shields. Bishop McLean, of Toronto spoke at eleven o'clock, his theme being "The Higher Life," and at 2:30 p. m. Elder James Pycok was the speaker on "What Would Jesus Do?" The many friends of his missionary days were glad to see and hear him again. For years he has been very seldom in these parts. In the evening Elder W. I. Fligg, missionary to Owen Sound District, discoursed from the text, "Ye Must Be Born Again."

In the evening although the majority of visiting Saints had departed for their homes, the building was filled to capacity. Elder J. H. Taylor, the pastor for over forty years, and resident Saints are held in such esteem by pastors and members of other churches at Grand Valley, that both the United and Presbyterian churches closed their doors for this service, and their ministers assisted therein.

At the close, Pastor Taylor expressed the gratitude of the branch for all who had come and assisted in the day's services, and referred to the fact that Brother John Shields brought the restored gospel to this community forty-seven years ago.

As a priest, Brother Shields made his opening at the home of Brother Taylor, then residing with his parents on the farm which is still his home. His father, Jacob Taylor, and two sisters, Hannah and Jane, were subjects the first time Brother Shields performed the ordinance of baptism. Two of those, Jacob and Jane (Mrs. James Hillis) were present at the 1934 anniversary service.

The Garafraxa Branch was organized in the autumn of 1888, by Apostle John H. Lake, at the Taylor home. James L. Mortimer was called and ordained an elder and John H. Taylor, priest. Brother Mortimer occupied as branch president a couple of years and then took up missionary work. Brother Taylor, then an elder, took up the work of branch president and has ever since carried it on.

A neat church edifice was erected on the Taylor farm, three and one-half miles from Grand Valley, in 1889, and was occupied by the Saints until they built the present edifice at Grand Valley in 1924. The architectural design was the last work of the late J. T. Thompson and the building work was by Brother William Stade, of Hanover, a brother of F. B. Stade.

This is where the Clarks (Ada, wife of the late Joseph Smith, being of this family), the Thompsons, the Taylors, the Hillises, and several others who wrought well in the kingdom, heard, believed, and were baptized in early days.

Omaha Woman Leads Her Department to Distinguished Usefulness

SISTER LILLIAN M. TABOR,

Women's supervisor of Omaha Branch, Nebraska

Sister Lillian M. Tabor has been active in Omaha Branch for the past eleven years, and she now heads a group of loyal, tireless women workers who in the past two years have brought into the coffers of the branch over $550. Sister Irene Paden is her assistant supervisor. Three years ago the full responsibility of supervisorship was given Sister Tabor, and she has proved most capable. Upon her rests the responsibility of planning for the year the socials, suppers, sales and all money-making projects.

Someone has wisely said, "As you love, you attract," and Sister Tabor, a cheerful, quiet, unassuming, faithful worker, is beloved of Omaha Saints. Though her husband is not a member of the church, he is a genial host and the Tabors entertain at their home or at their summer cottage. Mr. Tabor likes to see the young people enjoy themselves and is remodeling his basement with sound proof material, rendering it suitable for social events.

Duluth, Minnesota

The annual business meeting of Duluth Branch convened September 10, Pastor E. J. Walters in charge. Officers chosen for the ensuing year are: Pastor, Elder E. J. Walters; counselors, Elders A. C. Bundy and P. G. Schnuckle; church school director, R. C. Zuelsdorf; women's leader, Mrs. Sybil Bundy. These will be assisted by other capable officers.

The willingness of the young people to share responsibility in branch activities is most gratifying. Young and old are facing the new church school year with courage, faith, and a desire to move forward in building the kingdom of God.

The Minnesota district conference convened in Duluth, September 21 to 23, and Saints were in attendance from Minneapolis, Bemidji, Clitherall, Two Harbors, Barnum; Alberta, Canada, Idaho, and other points. President F. M. Smith and Apostle J. F. Curtis were the principal speakers. A fine spirit prevailed throughout the conference. The church building was dedicated Sunday afternoon by President Smith, who read Matthew 15, using the two parables as a basis for his challenge to Duluth Saints.

Local members have worked faithfully to discharge the church debt, and now that it has been accomplished they rejoice in their privilege to assist in liquidating the general church debt. The women's department has organized and is making plans to that end.

October 13, this department with the assistance of the young people, sponsored a doughnut sale. A sum of about twelve dollars was realized. Their annual fall supper was given November 1.

Briefs

Mission Branch, Illinois, had four priesthood members who attended Kirtland reunion, F. E. Turner, W. L. Anderson, Elmer Anderson, and Vernon Hougas. They returned home spiritually stronger and able to inspire the membership with a keener desire to serve God.

Byrneville, Indiana, members are much encouraged since Elder Jasper O. Dutton's visit there in early October. While he conducted a series of meetings, the Saints had a "bee" and painted the church. The building had not been repainted since it was erected eight years ago. Other improvements on the building were made, and now it is in good shape.

Pastor J. R. Byrn, priest, baptized a young man, Harry F. Tritter, October 7, completing another family circle.

San Bernardino Branch, California, held its third annual harvest festival October 12, 13, and 14, inviting Saints of all neighboring branches to attend. A tent annex, erected on the church grounds, accommodated the exhibit and bazaar of harvest crops. The festival program included a missionary play, on Friday evening a four-act biblical drama on Saturday, and on Sunday a sermon in the morning by W. A. Teagarden, district president and pastor of San Bernardino, and a musical program in the afternoon directed by Sister Stella Hodges, district chorister.

Elder William I. Fligg continued with missionary meetings after Harvest Home Day at Proton Branch, Ontario, September 16. The weather, interest, and crowd were all he could ask for, and as a climax to the efforts of all, he baptized three adults and three children.

Patriarch John Shields, one of the old-time missionaries in Canada, recently visited London, Ontario, much to the delight of the Saints.

Elder P. T. Anderson held a very helpful series of meetings at Dunn Center, North Dakota, ending Sunday, October 21. The Saints were much encouraged by his help.

Elder L. G. Holloway, missionary to Central and Southeastern Illinois districts, conducted a week of services at Benton, Illinois, early in October, and was granted splendid interest and attendance.

Peace and friendship with all mankind is our wisest policy, and I wish we may be permitted to pursue it.—Thomas Jefferson.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H. Streets—Although Lincoln Branch has suffered some losses in membership which have been rather severely felt, it is carrying on, and, thanks to the occasional visits from outside members of the priesthood, has been able to provide welcome variety in the nature of its services. Among the losses referred to are the removals of several families which were of definite assistance in branch work. High Priest Ralph A. Harder and his good wife left soon after General Conference, and their splendid contribution to branch labors has been transferred to the Des Moines group. Next they had to part with High Priest E. J. Lenox and family, who are now worshiping with Burlington Branch. Then Elder W. E. Poague and family moved to Saint Joseph, Missouri. The departure of these members has thrown an extra burden of labor upon the few remaining members of the priesthood, only one of whom is of the Melchisedec order. Besides the loss in pulpit and church school, the members have missed them socially and in the work of the women's department.

Patriarch F. A. Smith was a welcome visitor later in the summer, occupying the pulpit to the edification of all, and in private and official capacity bringing a blessing to the members.

The branch "twin dynamos," Brother and Sister Francis Schrunk together with the latter's mother, Sister Hunt, and a young brother, Richard Stake, took a vacation trip this summer which none will ever forget, and which has echoed and re-echoed in accrued good to the stay-at-homes. Their travels included visits to Nauvoo, Carthage, and Kirtland, all of which historic places will have a new and significant place in their memories and their labors with the young people at Lincoln. Already plans are well laid for a great representation of local young folks at the next young people's institute. Sister Schrunk's class gave a program and "county fair" Friday night, which netted them twenty dollars towards this worthy object.

A wedding occurred at the church the evening of Thursday, October 11. Miss Leone Marie Behrens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Behrens, of near Pleasant Dale, Nebraska, became the bride of Henry Wallace Smith, son of Sister Effie Smith, Pastor B. M. Anderson officiating. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Dorothy Behrens, and the bridegroom's brother, Therin Smith, acted as best man.

A luncheon at the home of Sister Eva Coffman one Wednesday, was well attended, and netted the women's department an acceptable sum. The afternoon was spent in quilting. Another recent activity of this group of women was a tea held in the home of Sister Reichenbach. Sister Katie Hale presided at the tea table, which was beautiful with flowers, candles, attractive food, and accessories. The daughters and nieces of Sister Reichenbach and their friends assisted the hostess, some of them furnishing a program of musical numbers.

A fine impetus was given the work of the church school when Superintendent C. B. Woodstock spent a Sunday with the branch. He visited each of the classes, and through suggestions, demonstrations and addresses gave the workers a larger vision and definite assistance. To have clearly in mind a particular goal and then intelligently move towards its accomplishment is the foundation of success in teaching religious truths.

The Monday night study class at the home of B. M. Anderson has resumed its sessions, and is well attended. The small but alert group of teachers and officers are getting many helpful side-lights from the study and discussion of Betts' How to Teach Religion.

Carson, Iowa

An outstanding rally day was enjoyed at Carson Branch, October 21. The sacredness of the services was apparent to all, and the Spirit of the Lord was present from the opening of the day's activities, a piano solo by Dorothy Elswick, till the closing benediction.

After the study hour the congregation listened to an inspirational lecture given by Sister Ann Morgan, of Lamoni, now teaching music in the Henderson, Iowa, school. Her hearers visited for a short time, in spirit and imagination, the summer camp as she ably told of the two weeks of activities there each year.

Then Brother T. A. Hougas spoke on a subject dear to the hearts of young and old, "Graceland College." Sister Edna Hotze and Sister Morgan spoke briefly on "What Graceland Has Meant to Me." The morning service closed with the baptism of three candidates, Derrel Fenn, and Maynard and Shirley Peterson. Before they entered the water, Amos Graybill gave a beautiful talk on the significance of the baptismal ordinance.

The afternoon service opened with a vocal solo by a visiting friend, Lawrence Edwards, followed by the confirmation of the three children baptized in the morning. T. A. Hougas, Amos Graybill, and P. Larson officiating. Four afflicted members were administered to, then Brother Hans Peterson, father of two of the children baptized, was ordained a priest. This was a service which brought all close to the Master.

Later in the afternoon a business meeting opened, Brother Amos Graybill in charge. He and Brother Larson are district officials for Southwestern Iowa, and their kindly influence and brotherly advice endear them to the hearts of the people in the branches they visit. Brother Hougas was selected to act as pastor for the year with I. E. Fenn and Hans Peterson as assistants.

Springfield, Missouri

Fall activities for the young people in Springfield began with the Spring River district young people's convention, September 7, 8, and 9. The convention opened with a banquet on Friday night observing school days. The theme for the convention was "The Challenge of Stewardship." John F. Sheehy of Independence conducted classes Saturday and Sunday, assisted by District President Amos T. Higdon. The young people have continued their work the past two months with much enthusiasm and inspiration gained during the convention. There is a very good interest in the Book of Mormon Class taught by Herman O. Plumb. Twelve members of the class are taking the course for institute credit. There have been a number of socials, most of them being out of doors around camp fires, where they have enjoyed the beautiful fall weather in the Ozarks.

The officers for the new year elected in September and installed the first of October are as follows: C. E. Wilson, re-elected pastor; Janet L. Bootman, branch secretary; J. M. Palmer, treasurer; Mrs. C. E. Wilson, music supervisor; Lella Palmer, publicity agent; Herman O. Plumb, church school director; James F. Kemp, adult supervisor; Lella Palmer, young people's supervisor, and Janet L. Bootman, children division supervisor.

The branch is sorry to lose those of its members who have moved away. Gladys Palmer has been transferred to Lexington, Kentucky, where she will continue her work as secretary at the Federal Narcotics Farm. Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Miller and son Roger, have moved away. Josephine Stark was married October 21, to Louis R. Egan. Mr. and Mrs. Egan plan to make their home in Kansas City. However, the branch welcomes Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Burgoon who have moved here from Quindaro congregation, Kansas City.

Elder E. A. Curtis delivered an inspirational sermon to the Saints, October 7. J. Charles May stopped in the city October 19, showed slides, and lectured on the South Sea Islands. Other visiting speakers have been Elders O. E. Ensley and S. W. Simmons.

Church school officers' and teachers' meeting was held October 23, and plans for the season's work were made. Four classes were formed in the young people's division; junior church services were discussed and planned; and, as an inducement for each member of the church school to be present on time, there is to be a special feature at the beginning of the service at nine-thirty each Sunday morning.

A fellowship meeting was held in the church basement, October 25, and basket dinner was served at 7 p. m.

Those of the local priesthood who have been doing missionary work in the terriories around the city are Elders F. M. Bishop, J. B. Ansley, A. W. Duemler, and Priest Glen Yeoman. Elder Henry Sparling who has been ill for several months is improving, and the Saints are happy to have him back with them again.

Springfield people are quite busy making preparations for the Spring River district semiannual conference, to be held November 23, 24, and 25.

Elder Arthur Allen Passes On

ELDER ARTHUR ALLEN

Elder Arthur Allen died at his home in Kansas City, Missouri, October 14. He was born in London, England, March 25, 1861, and had made Kansas City his home since his twenty-second year. He was an architect by profession and assisted in erecting some of the principal buildings of the church. For thirty years also he was a missionary for the church, visiting many parts of the United States. Kindly, studious, diligent, faithful, he leaves many friends. Brother Allen's obituary appears in this issue of the Herald.

Think of the patience of Jesus toward his slow learning disciples. So unready to act upon his direction, so dull in the uptake (as he would say in Scotland), so disappointingly unresponsive and forgetful as they were. How hard it must have been to bear with their so evident self-satisfaction and unstable emotions, to have to teach them the same lessons again and again without much evidence they were taking them in. Is there anything so beautiful, is there anything so heartening as the simple announcement that having loved his own that were in the world he loved them unto the end? This probably means that his love was of an incredibly patient order—the patience of Christ.—J. Stuart Holden in Church Management.

Briefs

Philadelphia Branch, Pennsylvania, enjoyed an outstanding day October 14, when the eleven o'clock speaker, John Zimmermann, jr., gave an inspiring sermon followed by a talk on the Independence Sanitarium by its superintendent, Sister Gertrude Copeland. Elder John F. Sheehy, pastor in Zion, was the evening speaker. Sister Sheehy was also present, having accompanied her husband East.

That day started the red and blue contest in the local church school initiated to instill new interest in this department. Points are given for attendance, promptness and bringing visitors, and the reds, captained by Margery Turner, were ahead for the first day. Adolph Edwards is captain of the blue team.

Benton Branch, Illinois, was host to the district in a rally day gathering October 14, and Missionary L. G. Holloway, the eleven o'clock speaker, gave a most spiritual and encouraging sermon. Charles Wesner, of Centralia, Illinois, spoke in the afternoon on the financial law of the church. Elder Holloway was also the evening speaker.

Ernest Roberson is the branch president and Gene Ward is church school director. With the support of faithful workers, they are directing the branch forward.

Painesville Mission, Ohio, held its first meeting in the home of Thomas H. Freeman, April 11, 1926, and since that time forty-nine have been baptized. They now have four priesthood members: Thomas H. Freeman, elder; Andrew McAdams, teacher; Roy Plont, teacher, and Walter M. Davis, deacon. Thomas H. Freeman, pastor, appointed as counselors to assist in the mission Roy Plont and Walter M. Davis.

Brother Freeman was ordained to the office of elder a short time ago, Elders James E. Bishop and John L. Cooper officiating.

The Temple workers, under the leadership of Sister Ruth Norris, promised one hundred dollars to the building fund during the year, and turned in fifty dollars in four months.

Southern Wisconsin priesthood dined at the home of Elder H. W. Woodstock, district president, at Madison, at noon on conference Sunday, October 14. Sixteen men were present, and included the president of each branch in the district. Elder Roscoe Davey, missionary, talked to them.

Sister Addie Cunningham Draves, Route 1, Box 115, Platteville, Colorado, seeks the prayers of the church during November, to the end that her health will improve. She bears an earnest testimony to God's goodness and mercy.

Independence

Stone Church

Pastor John F. Sheehy addressed an earnest sermon to the Saints Sunday night, discussing the Book of Mormon. Music was supplied by the Stone Church Choir and by a quartet of ladies, Mrs. Marcine Murphy, Amy Blankenship, Mrs. Dorothy Fry, and Melba Blankenship, accompanied by Mrs. Alice Smeeton.

Sacrament service Sunday morning was enjoyed by a very large congregation of Saints. Apostle J. F. Curtis made the principal talk.

At noon Sunday, November 4, the wedding of Miss Birdene Raschke, daughter of Mrs. L. B. Glass, and Clyde Johnson was solemnized at the home of Evangelist Ammon White. Brother White officiated in ceremony. Miss Wilma Raschke, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and Charles Johnson attended his brother, the bridegroom. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson will make their home at Lexington, Missouri, where Mr. Johnson is a teacher.

Mrs. Emma Nelson and Charles C. Reynolds, of Guilford, Missouri, motored to Independence Wednesday afternoon, October 31, and were married in the radio studio of the Stone Church by Evangelist U. W. Greene.

Miss Mary Marcine Turner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy F. Turner, of Independence, became the bride of William M. Russell, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Russell, of Independence, October 19, at Harrisonville, Missouri, the service being read by the Reverend James H. Wagner.

People of the Stone Church congregation were grieved at the sudden passing of Elder R. T. Cooper, October 29, at the Independence Sanitarium. For many years Brother Cooper's ardent and earnest efforts for the church had won him a place of respect and love in the hearts of all. He held high and responsible offices in the church, and his funeral, October 31, was largely attended. President Elbert A. Smith preached the sermon, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. The pallbearers were of the church high council of which Brother Cooper had been a member since 1925. Brother Cooper was a well known Independence lawyer. He was sixty-four years old.

The death of Edwin Winn, twenty-eight years old, at his home at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, October 25, was a shock to numerous relatives living in Independence. Brother Winn formerly lived here.

Second Church

October 28, was Graceland Day for this congregation, and the morning service of the church school opened with a piano prelude by Norman Inman; call to worship by Richard Dillee. Then Corlyn Sarratt, a former Graceland student, gave a short talk on that college, and there was a vocal solo by Mrs. Gomer Stowell.

"Education with the Spirit of God," was the eleven o'clock sermon theme of Priest James Moses, also a former Graceland. Music was by the choir.

Downstairs juniors listened to a sermonet, "Occupants in Zion," by Gordon Cable, a story, "The Gift," by Juanita Page, and another story, "King David," by Berniece Wisemore.

Bishop A. B. Phillips was the evening speaker, and his theme was "Jesus' Place in the History of Man." "Break Thou the Bread of Life," a solo, was sung by Mrs. Katherine Inman.

Worship service of the church school last Sunday morning was very impressive with special music and a prayer for the Sunday school by Fred Burrus.

At the sacrament service in charge of Pastor A. K. Dillee, the Saints witnessed the blessing of a baby by F. L. Freeman and Sam Inman. The oblation talk was by B. C. Sarratt, and communion talk by A. B. Phillips. There was a special prayer by Will Grubb.

A class on Doctrine and Covenants taught by Evangelist A. Carmichael began Sunday evening at six o'clock, and will continue for ten weeks.

"What Is Our Excuse for Not Following the Master?" was the theme of Evangelist U. W. Greene's evening discourse. The choir sang two anthems, "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say," and "Savior, Breathe an Evening Blessing."

Walnut Park Church

Sacrament service Sunday, November 4, was in charge of Pastor Frank McDonald, assisted by Elders Benjamin Bean and George F. Bullard. Elder Bullard spoke of the importance of the oblation and offered the prayer consecrating the offering to the purpose of alleviating suffering among the needy of the church. Prior to the serving of the emblems to a large congregation, two babies were blessed by Elders W. T. Gard and Paul R. Davis. They were Jeanette Marie Sadler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sadler, and Carol Roselle Hedeem, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Hedeem. Following the administering of the sacrament, the pastor spoke briefly and encouragingly to the Saints under the spirit of inspiration.

A large number was in attendance at the religio Sunday evening, a special attraction being the first session of a class in comparative religions taught by Elder J. W. A. Bailey. One hundred and seven were enrolled in this class the first evening. The first issue of the newspaper sponsored by the religio was distributed at this session.

The speaker at the seven-thirty hour Sunday evening was Elder Robert Jones.

At a recent meeting of the intermediate council of the church school the following officers were elected: President, Robert Hartman; first vice president, Nadine Leighter; second vice president, William Tignor; and secretary-treasurer, Daisy Willoughby. Rosemary Chapman and Josephine Byrd had previously been elected to represent the department on the local council of young people. On Friday evening, November 2, a reception was held in the basement of the church, welcoming into the intermediate department those who recently were promoted from the junior department. Fifty-five attended and the evening was spent in playing games, after which refreshments were served.

The speakers on Sunday, October 28, were Bishop J. A. Koehler in the morning, and Pastor McDonald in the evening.

Elder and Sister John A. Taylor announce the birth on Friday, October 26, of a son whom they have named John Arthur.

A two-week series of gospel meetings at the Walnut Park Church will begin Sunday evening, November 11. The speaker each evening except Saturday will be Elder John F. Sheehy.

Liberty Street Church

Donald, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Adams, was blessed at the eleven o'clock service, October 21, by Patriarch U. W. Greene. Brother Greene was the speaker of the hour, and he was given the attention of one of the largest Sunday morning audiences Liberty Street has had for some time. Since this was College Day, an offering was taken to go to the Graceland Scholarship Fund.

Attendance at all services that day was well above normal. At the evening service an illustrated lecture on the life of Christ was presented by Elder Harvey Minton.

The dramatics class of the religio is working on a play, "Scotch Grace," to be presented the Sunday before Thanksgiving. Miss Rilla Leeka is the teacher of this class formed three weeks ago. The membership is rapidly increasing. Other religio classes are, story-telling, taught by Mrs. John R. Lentell; public speaking, and a class for children. These classes are held for regulation length periods and the members receive religious education credit. The religio is under the supervision of the department of recreation and expression of which Bernard Hurshman is president.

Mason Stobaugh, one of the assistant superintendents of the church school, was in charge Sunday morning, October 28. Superintendent Harry Blake attended the Graceland homecoming. At 11 a. m. Elder J. F. Roberts was the speaker, and special music was given by the choir. The juniors downstairs listened to a story by Mary Arterburn and a sermonet by Cecil Walker.

President Elbert A. Smith was the evening speaker, and his sermon was based on Paul's teachings. A male quartet, Fred Friend, Joseph Frick, Hubert Mills, and Mason Stobaugh, sang "Steal Away to Pray." The religio program preceding the evening service was given by young people from Mount Washington Church and Northeast High School.

A musical concert was given last Sunday night, all the musical organizations of this district participating. Las Favoritas Chorus, directed by Mrs. John R. Lentell, sang "Sweet Sabbath Eve." The girls' choir, led by Mayble Tignor, sang, "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say." Fred Friend, chorister, in charge of the program, directed the other groups. The singing of "Onward Christian Soldiers," by the boys' choir, gave the effect of soldiers marching. The men's chorus, recently organized, sang "My Jesus, I Love Thee." The church choir sang "Fairest Lord Jesus" as a prelude, followed by "Come Ye Thankful People, Come." As a postlude the group hummed "Blest Be Thou, O God of Israel." Harold Buseth, Joseph Frick, and Sister B. F. Hurshman were accompanists. Flowers, furnished by Thomas B. Cairns, added to the attractiveness of the program. Pastor Lentell talked briefly on the advancement of music and the development of the different musical groups of this local.

Enoch Hill Church

Sunday evening, October 28, a boys' choir was organized for this district, Richard Maloney to be the director.

Speakers on this day were Elder Sam Smith in the morning, and Elder Gomer Wells in the evening.

At six o'clock a credit class on "How to Teach Religion," was organized under the direction of Sister Chester Constance. A class on expression will also be taught by Nellie Mae Kramer.

The department of women continues active. The workers recently met at the home of Sister Mary Thomas. They were served a chili dinner, and spent the day quilting.

A number of Enoch Hill relatives, friends, and former students attended Graceland homecoming, October 26 to 28.

An initiation party was given the intermediates just entering the young people's department at the H. E. Winegar home, a few days ago.

Enoch Hill now has an active troop of Girl Scouts, led by Mrs. Bessie Sellers. Nine of these girls were invested tenderfoot scouts Monday evening, October 29, at a court of awards held for them by Troop 37, of the Stone Church.

Brother and Sister Carlos Greene, former missionaries to Germany, have returned to the United States and are making their home on Enoch Hill. Local Saints gladly welcome them.

At the morning worship period of the church school last Sunday Mrs. Verla Waters gave a reading, Pearl Christensen and Mrs. Ruby Griffin sang a duet selection, and Mrs. Amos E. Allen talked on "Heritage."

Elder J. A. Gillen was the speaker at the evening hour.

Spring Branch Church

The spirit of accomplishment is moving among the members of this district.

Classes of the young people's division are planning a series of plays for the near future.

The speakers Sunday, October 28, were Pastor F. A. Cool in the morning, and Elder J. E. Vanderwood in the evening. Brother Cool adapted his sermon to the thought of College Day, speaking on education. Brother Vanderwood's discourse was based on words of Jesus. Music by local musicians added attractiveness to the services.

East Independence Church

Attendance at the 8:30 a. m. Sunday prayer service is growing, and the meetings are most profitable.

Speakers Sunday, October 28, were Pastor Frank Minton, in the morning and in the evening Evangelist U. W. Greene.

Early that evening Sister Gladys Overby organized a junior choir.

Musicians of this district willingly add their help to each service, and often their efforts are augmented by the contributions of visiting members.

Among the organizations which are forging ahead here are the dramatic club, the women's group, and the church school.

Englewood Church

The speaker Sunday morning, October 28, was Brother Vernon Lundeen, who used as his subject, "To Obey Is Better Than to Sacrifice."

The gospel services that are being held now, were started with great enthusiasm Sunday night, October 28. The church was packed to capacity, and the congregation responded zealously to the leadership of George Anway, who had charge of the singing. Elder J. W. A. Bailey is the speaker. He has been preaching some very inspiring sermons.

At the church school hour, Sunday, November 4, a story telling project was held. Competitors were: Betty Jean Taylor, Cedric Hougas, and Richard Howery. Betty Jean Taylor merited first place, and will have the privilege of going to Second Church and tell the same story she told Sunday morning.

Pastor T. A. Beck was in charge of the sacrament service. D. S. McNamara gave the talk on the oblation, and J. W. A. Bailey delivered the pre-communion address.

Sister Ada Richter is now the women's leader at Englewood. This department met at the home of Sister Marie Budd all day last Wednesday.

There have been two weddings at Englewood. Charles Stowell, and Bernice Cunningham with a few members of their immediate families, motored to Bates City, Saturday, October 27, and were married by Elder Perry Hiles at his home.

Beatrice Niles, niece of Sister D. S. McNamara, and Charles Colovin, both of Mackinaw City, Michigan, were married by D. S. McNamara at his home, Saturday evening at eight o'clock. They were attended by Beatrice's grandmother and grandfather Mr. and Mrs. James McKenzie, who celebrated their golden wedding in August.

Mrs. Mae Niles, her son, Ralph, and daughter, Catherine, all of Mackinaw City, Michigan, will spend the winter in Independence.

Sugar Creek Church

Of late Pastor W. B. Paul has furnished this congregation some fine speakers including J. Arthur Davis, Vernon Lundeen, A. M. Chase, W. A. Smith, J. W. A. Bailey, R. V. Hopkins, U. W. Greene, I. G. Clutter, and H. V. Minton.

On College Day, October 21, Brother Paul spoke concerning Graceland and her merits.

The fall season has brought renewed social activities. The young people's class held a steak fry recently at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Lehman.

The last Friday evening of each month is devoted to social activities at which all are invited to contribute to a volunteer program. October 26, a halloween party was held, more than a hundred being present.

Prayer services on Wednesday evening are well attended and the good Spirit is enjoyed. On the third Sunday morning of each month they hold prayer service at eight-thirty. Attendance is increasing and interest is good.

El Reno, Oklahoma

Mary Elwell and Gladys V. Johnson had the young people gather at the latter's home the evening of October 12, and a young people's group was organized in charge of these officers: President, Mary Elwell; secretary-treasurer, Naomi White, and reporter, Gladys Johnson. It was decided that they should meet once a month for social gathering, and they voted for an outdoor gathering for November. Following the business meeting Elder Laurence Webb gave a talk and the group was dismissed by prayer. Then games were played and refreshments served.

A good crowd of Saints and friends enjoyed a wiener roast October 15.

Brother and Sister Dickinson and family are leaving to make their home at Rich Hill, Missouri, and El Reno Saints met at the home of Sister Gladys V. Johnson for a surprise farewell party. For entertainment an old-fashioned spelling bee caused much merriment. Then the guests of honor, Brother and Sister Dickinson, were given the privilege of selecting their favorite songs: "The Old, Old Path," "The Rock of Refuge," "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," and "Never Alone."

Talks were made by Brother Laurence Webb, Brother Piatt and Sister Dickinson. Brother and Sister Dickinson were presented a copy of the Inspired Version of the Bible. Local Saints regret greatly the loss of this family.

Kansas City Stake

Mount Washington Church

Mount Washington congregation dispensed with Sunday evening services during July and August, attending the Campus services, at Independence. At the first evening service in September the O. B. K.'s presented the play, "These Things Shall Be," to an audience of ninety people. Boy Scout Troop No. 204, of Mount Washington, visited the church with their scoutmaster the evening of the twenty-third.

The orchestra, under Leon Snow, gave a half hour program on the evening of September 30. The choir with Miss Berniece Griffiths as director, has also been rendering valuable assistance.

A beautiful baptismal service, arranged by Mrs. Signa Mitchell and her assistants, took place October 1, in the lower auditorium when Pastor W. F. Bolinger baptized these children: Roger Langdon, Jr., Betty Phillips and Neal Zimmerman. The confirmations took place at the sacrament service.

Doctor Charles Grabske gave a fine Graceland College Day address the morning of October 21, and in the evening the O. B. K.'s presented the pageant, "Other Things," to a large and appreciative audience.

Among the recent speakers were President F. M. McDowell, Elders S. Sandy, T. A. Beck, Charles Jellings, H. A. Gould, George Winegar, E. P. Darnell, W. F. Bolinger, and C. A. Skinner. The messages of these men contained much stimulating thought as to the members' responsibility to the church. The Aaronic priesthood, under the direction of Lyle Davis, will have charge of the morning services during November.

Grandview Church

Pastor C. G. Mesley conducted an interesting and educational series of Sunday night lectures during July, August, and September on the history and beliefs of the leading churches of the world, beginning with the Roman Catholic and closing with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. His object was to better prepare the membership to meet those of the different faiths. Showing the good points in the various creeds, he also compared their beliefs to our own.

The Gleaners Class of young married people, Blanche Mesley, teacher, recently elected these officers: President, S. P. Gress; vice president, Fern Heinzman, and secretary - treasurer, Berniece Schmidt. October 19, the class took a trip to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred G. Brose, former members of the class.

Word was received of the death of Sister Marinda M. Carlson, October 12, in Roxeter, Ontario, Canada, with burial there. She was one of the former Armstrong members and was a resident of Kansas City, Kansas, about thirty-five years.

The Laurel Club sponsored a supper and White King Soap demonstration, October 17, and cleared twenty-seven dollars to apply on the building fund.

Gladstone Church

The fall activities of this group have started under the direction of the following officers: Seth S. Sandy, pastor; L. C. Connelly, associate; William Barham, church school director; Mrs. V. V. Smith, junior church director; Mrs. Bertha Carswell, primary and beginner; Earl J. Cox, chorister; Mrs. R. H. Carver, assistant, and Mildred C. Connelly, pianist.

Each Sunday morning promptly at nine-thirty, a fifteen-minute song service is conducted, and this has helped to increase attendance. Each Wednesday evening before the prayer meeting a study period by Pastor Sandy is held. The class is following an outline prepared by the department of religious education.

The choir numbering approximately twenty is practising for its Thanksgiving program. The social activities in the recent past have been a progressive dinner sponsored by the women's department, and a wiener roast at Swope Park for choir members.

Quindaro Church

Elder E. N. Palmer has recently started weekly cottage prayer services which are a continuation of the wonderful meetings he conducted last winter. Many splendid experiences are witnessed on these occasions. A comparatively large group has been attending with practically one hundred percent participation.

The women's department is featuring a series of doughnut sales to raise funds to refurbish the church kitchen and to assist in meeting the financial obligations of the congregation.

On Sunday morning, October 28, at the eleven o'clock hour, Elder E. N. Palmer delivered a splendid sermon entitled, "Godliness."

Brother John Gross conducted the monthly teachers' meeting on October 28, stressing the necessity of a more thorough preparation of teachers through study and prayer.

The O. B. K.'s are actively engaged in general church activities. Recently they enjoyed a wiener roast at the Water and Light Park, and thirty-one attended the splendid stake young people's meeting at Northeast Church.

Brother Albert Hallier, associate pastor, has been successfully directing the general church activities in the absence of the pastor, H. A. Higgins, who has been on a much needed vacation.

Bennington Heights Church

The worship period on Sunday, October 21, was devoted to the Graceland College Day program. Bill Fay, a Graceland alumnus, was in charge. Directly behind the pulpit on the wall was the banner, "Expand Graceland Service," and a number of Graceland pennants were hung on the side walls. Crepe paper decorations were of Graceland colors and Graceland songs were sung throughout the program. Elder C. B. Woodstock was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour.

The O. B. K.'s are in charge of the evening service the third Sunday of each month. Their speaker, October 21, was Patriarch Ammon White. "Now the Day Is Over," was sung by a quartet, Victor Witte, Aileene Schwartz, Mary Agin, and Fred Witte.

Members of Bennington had the pleasure of greeting a few old friends recently. Mr. and Mrs. Joe Wright, of Cameron, Missouri, have returned to Kansas City, to live. Mr. Wright was a former member of Bennington, and Mrs. Wright was Ada Rice, of Cameron. August Witte, now living at Hartburg, was also a visitor.

Central Church

All Central congregation sincerely regrets the resignation of its former pastor, C. E. Wight, which action was enforced by his ill health and business duties. For five years and nine months, he had given unreservedly of his time and efforts to the stake, as stake president, and to Central as an excellent leader, and the members have appreciated the spiritual strength he has brought them. They wish him a speedy regaining of his strength, so that he may carry on his activities.

On October 21, the Plus Ultra Class had its annual homecoming, and many old friends and members returned to renew acquaintances. The class was in charge of the services of the day and they were very enjoyable.

C. G. Mesley, pastor pro tempore, took charge of the November sacrament service. The church was decorated beautifully, due to the efforts of Fred Furness, and this made a lovely setting for the meeting. Attendance was large, and everyone went away resolved to keep his covenant more closely.

Other people may have made us what we are today, but we ourselves determine what we shall become tomorrow. We can, to a surprising extent, break free from the past. We can, to a heartening degree, create our own force.—James Gordon Gilkey, in "Conquering Our Inheritance."

Ridgetown, Ontario, Harvest Home

Ridgetown Saints held their harvest home services Sunday, September 16. Thomas Newman was in charge of the Sunday school in the morning, and Elder Crouchman was the evening speaker. On Monday evening a concert and sale were held. Brother Clarence is church decorator, and he is to be complimented on his work at the harvest home.

Those attending the Thursday evening sessions at the church have formed themselves into the groups, the purples and the golds, for a competitive membership drive. The defeated side is to pay the forfeit named by the winners.

Sister Mabel Shaw, director of dramatics, is rehearsing a play to be presented early in December. Much enthusiasm is shown by players and executives.

Kirtland, Ohio

Visitors at the Temple during the past few weeks have included Elder C. B. Hartshorn and wife and friends, from Hiteman, Iowa.

Sister Emma Hulmes, of Kirtland, has served for many years as teacher of the young people's class in the Sunday school and is superintendent of the home department. Her sweet personality will be remembered by scores of people in the church who once attended her class. She is now quite ill and is unable to attend services. Sister Hulmes is worthy the prayers of all.

The number of local men holding the Melchisedec priesthood was increased Sunday evening, September 16, by the ordination of Earl R. Curry. The charge was delivered by Elder George Neville. Brother Curry was ordained by District President James E. Bishop, assisted by Elders John L. Cooper and George Neville.

September 20, the annual branch business meeting was held at the Temple. Officers were elected as follows: Presi-

The Bulletin Board

Homecoming Notice

The annual homecoming dinner of First Chicago Branch will be held at the church, 4416 Gladys Avenue, Chicago, Friday evening, November 9, at six-thirty. All members and former members of First Chicago are urged to attend.—H. T. McCaig, pastor.

Song Fest Notice

Azalia Branch announces a song fest November 28. President Kenneth Green

Officers will be elected for another year. Will all the priesthood send in their reports and all other special matters not later than November 12? There will be some special work done at this conference by Apostle and Sister M. A. McConley.—W. H. Drake, district secretary, McKenzie, Alabama.

Spring River district conference will be held at the Springfield, Missouri, church, corner of Dale and Kellett, November 23 to 25. There will be a program Friday evening given under the direction of the young people. On Saturday and Sunday the regular services will be held. The branch treasurers will please send their contributions for the district budget to Elder N. W. Gray, 2800 Main Street, Parsons, Kansas; and the secretaries will send their reports to Mrs. Maggie Wilson, 1942 North Lyon, Springfield, Missouri. Apostle F. Henry Edwards will be with us.—Amos T. Higdon, district president.

Our Departed Ones

EVANS.—Gomer Louis Evans was born in Saint Louis, Missouri, November 26, 1886, and died in Saint Louis, September 9, 1934. Of his immediate family there are left to mourn, his faithful wife, one daughter, three sons, one sister and three brothers. Numerous other relatives and a host of friends cherish his memory. He occupied for years a leading place in industrial citizenship, being vice president of the Wagner Electric Company of Saint Louis; he was a courageous man of able mind, and true to his convictions. In his departure the church suffers the loss of a worthy friend and brother. Interment was at Lake Charles Cemetery. A special memorial service was held at the Saints' church in Saint Louis, September 16, 1934, T. J. Elliott in charge.

MILLER.—Kate Helen Miller was born at Detroit, Michigan, February 10, 1864, and passed away July 25, 1934, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ina Vida Mecca, at Oakland, California. Of her ten children but three survive her: Mrs. Mecca, Frank A., and Henry Joseph Linebaugh, of San Rafael, California. After months of suffering, Mrs. Miller quietly passed to rest in full belief of the power of Jesus to redeem. She united with the church at Santa Rosa, California, about thirty-five years ago. Funeral services were held at the Miller cathedral chapel by J. B. Carmichael.

PARKS.—Benjamin Franklin Parks was born May 17, 1875, at Camden, Ray County, Missouri. Died June 19, 1934, in San Francisco, California. Baptized by Elder William Newton in 1883, at the age of eight years. He moved with his parents to California in 1887. There married Mabel Elizabeth Leaver, January 11, 1914. Left to mourn are his wife, Mabel; his mother, Lavina J.; five sisters, three brothers, and a host of other relatives and friends. He was faithful and loyal to the church and loved to tell the gospel story. Funeral services were held at Gantner, Felder, and Kenny, by Elder J. B. Carmichael, of Berkeley, assisted by Elder H. Savage. Interment was in Olivet Memorial Park, San Mateo County, California.

TOWNSEND.—Loretta Sherman, daughter of Frank and Alminie Severance Sherman, was born April 16, 1885, near Lansing, Michigan. She departed this life September 24, 1934. Married Dennis Townsend at Ionia, Michigan, July 15, 1901, and to them were born seven children: Mrs. Florence Lewis, of Hastings, Michigan; Carthur Townsend, Buchanan; Mrs. Gladys Hurley, Buchanan; Robert, Albert, Ruth, and Thelma at home. Besides the husband and children, she is survived by one brother and two sisters: Hiram C. Sherman, Syracuse, New York; Mrs. Sylvia Canfield, Spencerville, Indiana, and Mrs. Lura Brooks, of Syracuse, New York, and a host of other relatives and friends. The funeral was held from the Swem Funeral Home, Buchanan, Michigan, September 26, Elder A. C. Barmore in charge. Interment was in Oak Ridge Cemetery, Buchanan.

and Brother A. B. Smith, of Detroit, are expected to be present. Sister Verna Schaar, of Lake Orion, will take care of the music. Lunch will be served. All neighborhood branches are welcome.—Lewata Helmick, branch secretary.

Correction

Mrs. Lee Cunningham offers a correction of railroad names in her letter which appeared in the Herald of October 2, page 1263. Snow, Oklahoma, is not far from the Frisco Railroad rather than the Katy, as the letter mentioned. It is located on a star route. J. H. Hager and Sam Nobles live there, and would like some minister to stop and hold services in that community.

Conference Notices

Alabama District will meet in conference with Pleasant Hill Saints November 17 and 18. We desire a good representation from each branch and group.

dent of the branch, Elder Earnest A. Webbe; secretary, John T. Curry; treasurer, William H. Davidson; church school superintendent, Sister AuVergne Proper; supervisor of adult division, Sister Alberta Biggs; young people's division, William F. Webbe; children's division, Sister Beatrice Gale.

The infant daughter of Sister Helen Williams and companion, was blessed at the Temple recently.

JONES.—Margaret M. Jones was born August 30, 1862, at Brigham City, Utah. Married David M. Jones in November, 1883. She was the mother of eight children one of whom preceded her in death. The remaining seven were in attendance at her funeral. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, May 4, 1879, being a devout and faithful member during the remainder of her life. She died September 26, 1934. In her last illness she was cared for by her daughter, Mrs. J. W. Buckendorf at Idaho Falls, and was brought home to Malad, Idaho, for burial. The funeral sermon was preached by Ward L. Christy, September 30, at Malad, at the Saints' church.

INGRAM.—Mary Ingram, one of the pioneer home builders of Sherman County, Kansas, passed away September 3, at her home in Ruleton community. Funeral services were conducted Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock from the Christian church, Elder J. R. Sutton conducting the services. Interment was in Goodland Cemetery. She was born April 27, 1857, in Mercer County, Missouri, and married Silas Ingram at Princeton, Missouri, in 1872. They moved to Sherman County, Kansas, in 1886, and took a homestead twelve miles north of Ruleton, where they endured the hardships of pioneer life, and reared a family of twelve children. Seven of these are living: Bert, Harve, Arthur, William, Luther, Mrs. Florence Cisler, and Mrs. J. B. Light. There are also thirty-eight grandchildren. Mr. Ingram passed away June 6, 1931.

KIEL.—Sophia Smart was born at Bothwell, Ontario, in 1862. Moved to Plano, Illinois, when a young girl. While the headquarters of the church were there she spent some time in the home of President Joseph Smith. She was baptized in 1881. Married Mr. Kiel and was the mother of a son, Albert Kiel, of Aurora, Illinois, and a daughter, Mrs. Daisy Ott, of Battle Creek, Michigan. Sophia was one of a family of four girls and five boys. One sister, Mrs. William Welch, survives her; five brothers: Fred, of Merlin, Ontario; John, of British Columbia; William and James, of Harwich, Ontario, and Walter, of Michigan; other relatives, and many friends. She died at Aurora September 4, 1934, at the home of her son. Funeral services were held at the Healey Funeral Parlors at Aurora. Elder J. M. Blakely officiated.

HASTINGS.—Lydia Hastings was born June 25, 1904, and was baptized into the church, June 29, 1912. Enrolled with Milwaukee Branch, Wisconsin, in May, 1934, being transferred from Duluth, Minnesota. She was killed September 28, 1934, when the car in which she was riding with her cousin, Mrs. Ada G. Weber, and thirteen-months-old Catherine Weber, left the road and plunged over a twenty-five-foot embankment near Solon Springs, Wisconsin. Miss Hastings was a nurse at the county general hospital, and she and Mrs. Weber were on their way to Two Harbors, Minnesota, to visit relatives. Both she and her cousin were graduates of the county general hospital school of nursing. Her funeral was conducted at Two Harbors, October 2, 1934.

BURCHARD.—Materia Addie Burchard died September 10, 1934, at the home of her son-in-law, Moroni N. Stewart, after a prolonged illness. She was born December 15, 1861, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, near which place she spent almost her entire life. She married William Burchard, December 25, 1878, and was the mother of two sons, Roy and Howard, and two daughters, Mrs. Sylvia Deeds and Mrs. Hazel Stewart, all of Council Bluffs. Besides the above she leaves one sister, Mrs. Elnary Thompson, and two brothers, Scott and Philip Boren, all living near Crescent, Iowa; thirteen grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren. She was baptized in the fall of 1890, by Joseph Smith. Her faith in the church was unshaken. Funeral services were conducted by Elder J. F. Mintun, assisted by Elder Ray Whiting. Interment was in Crescent Cemetery.

ELKINS.—Orin Elkins was born September 5, 1853, at Hampton, New Hampshire, the son of Jonathan and Eliza Lamphrey Elkins. He died at his home at Glenwood, Iowa, after an illness of several months, September 29, 1934. Married Miss Harriett E. Garner, January 30, 1890, by whom he was the father of two children, one son who died in infancy, and one daughter, Mrs. Eva Miller, of Council Bluffs. His first wife died September 13, 1913. He married Emma Ault, October 5, 1921, who survives him. Leaves three grandchildren, Orin, Maxine, and L. Marie Miller at home in Council Bluffs, Iowa. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church in 1899. For nearly sixty years he made his home in Iowa. Forty-three of these years he spent at Glenwood. Funeral services were held at Glenwood and at Magnolia by Elders W. R. Adams and J. F. Mintun. Interment was beside his first wife in Magnolia Cemetery.

BUTLER.—Nathan S. Butler was born at Mermore, Ohio, August 1, 1854. Died August 8, 1934, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. George Spensley, of Dubuque, Iowa, where he had made his home since July. He lived at Inman, Nebraska, for thirty years and for thirteen years lived at Independence, Missouri. He was a member of the Independent Order of Oddfellows lodge, and the Modern Woodman of America at Inman. He married Ella L. Watson at Steel Creek, Nebraska. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church, March 19, 1896. Left to mourn are his wife; his daughters: Mrs. A. E. Walesby, Mrs. R. B. Mossman, Mrs. L. L. Brewer, of Independence, Missouri, and Mrs. George Spensley, of Dubuque; his sons; J. H. Butler, Neligh, Nebraska, and Andrew N. Butler, of Inman, Nebraska; his sisters: Mrs. Della Bauman, of Brentwood Heights, California; Mrs. Emma Bud, Schiocco, Wisconsin; Mrs. O. H. Day, Green Bay, Wisconsin, and eighteen grandchildren. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder John Heide, at Handenshield Funeral Home, Dubuque, and interment was in the cemetery at Dubuque.

MARTIN.—Thaddeus Selbiska was born January 8, 1850, near Knoxville, Illinois. Baptized January 25, 1910, at Eufaula, Oklahoma,

■ His Bad Boy

This story concerns a little boy who became a problem in the Sunday school of a large branch. He whispered, he shot paper wads, and he wouldn't pay attention to his teacher. Not only that, but he kept the rest of the class from listening to her.

Appeals to the parents on the part of the teacher were in vain. She could get no help, cooperation, or satisfaction. One day she told her troubles to the pastor. He listened to the story and he knit his brows. In that tangled web he captured a thought.

"I have a plan," he said. "I think it will work." So he made a pastoral visit one evening to the father of the little boy. After discussing many things and enjoying a pleasant evening, the pastor said to his host: "I have a problem that I want to discuss with you. I don't know what to do about it and I think perhaps you could advise me." Then he told this father about the mischievous conduct of the little boy.

Now this father was very much like some other parents. He had always considered his children practically perfect. In his eyes they could never be very wrong. He defended them upon every occasion and he suspected nothing when the pastor described the rebellious conduct of the little boy. Then the pastor said: "What would you do if you were in my position and had to manage such a little boy?"

The father of the boy did not hesitate. The solution seemed perfectly clear in his mind. He said: "I would take that little boy out and give him such a tanning as he never had before in his life."

"I'm glad to hear you say that," remarked the pastor. "It shows that you are very practical and sensible in matters like this."

And then clearing his throat the pastor continued: "Do you know whose boy this is?"

"Why no," said the father.

The pastor looked him squarely in the eye and said without flinching: "That is your boy. I hope you will do your duty by him."

We are not told whether the father fainted or simply lost his temper, but we hope that he learned a lesson.

■ Love Letters

A. B. Phillips, the scholarly gentleman who conducts the Question Time, has a special basket in our office where we put questions that come in for him. Lately he has taken to calling them, (humorously only, we assure you) "love letters."

The first day he came in and asked, "Any love letters for me?" the Pigeon raised an inquiring and very suspicious eyebrow.

Brother Phillips flushed slightly, but he hesitated only an instant.

"I mean brotherly-love letters," he amended.

Reason for Hope

One very hopeful sign for the church comes to our attention in the number of fine young men and women who are stepping forward to volunteer their services to the church. Their quality is attested by the positions of responsibility they hold and by the recognition they receive. While continuing their secular occupations, many of them give their spare time to the church as a donation to the cause they believe in and desire to serve. They come with the honors of both academic and commercial success.

Another hopeful and commendable feature is the spirit of gratitude and good fellowship in which these young recruits to the ranks are received by older workers. There is very little jealousy or misunderstanding. Youth has dropped its earlier militant spirit; and age has left off its distrust and suspicion. The weighty burdens of church responsibility, borne so long by older men and women, rest heavily on their shoulders, and they welcome the new workers with a sense of glad relief, knowing that the tasks they must lay down will be handled well by the generation that is taking them up.

We are now fully emerged into an age in which training is indispensable. Slowly the church has come to realize that education is an assistant to not a competitor of the spiritual qualifications that we have always required in our leaders and workers. It is realized that the young men and women, now gaining the wisdom which only experience can teach, are quite as consecrated and clean as the older generations.

The work of the church is not a contest for control. It is a cooperative effort between all ages for the creation of a way of intellectual and spiritual life equally precious to all ages. The spectacle of young and old, working shoulder to shoulder and driving toward a common goal, is a source of inspiration and courage.

We welcome these strong new comrades in the gospel work and pledge to them the support and cooperation they have a right to expect. We are glad for their presence and their strength, and we issue an invitation to others to prepare themselves to assist in the work that is before us.

Next to excellence is the appreciation of it.—Thackeray.

Who Was the Prophet?

William Allen White, one time intimate of former President Theodore Roosevelt, paid a warm tribute to his former friend during the recent observance of Roosevelt's birthday. Among other things Mr. White said of Theodore Roosevelt: "He was a prophet, a sower who went forth to sow the seeds of aspiration for justice in the hearts of the American people. He, first of our statesmen, saw clearly that our problems were no longer problems of production, but problems affecting the distribution of wealth and income."—Kansas City Star, October 28, 1934.

If Roosevelt was the first of the statesmen to see that vital fact and announce it, and if thereby he became worthy of the prophet's mede, what shall be said of Joseph Smith who more than a half century earlier saw the same vision and proclaimed it to the world? Again and again the revelations of the early thirties dealt with the problem of the equitable distribution of wealth. The prophet saw that the age-old problem of producing sufficient for human needs was soon to be definitely solved and that the greater problem of equitable distribution must be assailed: this was to be done through the voluntary consecration of surpluses. Today governments are forced to compel the confiscation of the surplus under various forms of taxation and an arbitrary redistribution among the destitute through the "dole" or forms of governmental employment almost equivalent to the "dole." The Lord's way was the better way; and his vision antedated the vision of the wisest of our statesmen.

"The surplus must be consecrated." That was the message that the world did not heed. Today the problem of surplus and its uses is the foremost world problem. The endeavor is to reduce surplus by restricting production—when in fact the effort should be to increase production and promote wider distribution and consumption of the good things of earth. Under the prophetic plan "the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low." (Doctrine and Covenants 101:3.) It was to be a voluntary humbling of the rich under religious impulsion that their brethren might be lifted up and all come to a just and ample standard of living.

The world did not take warmly to the prophetic proclamation—as is the rule. But today the problem dealt with in the early revelations mentioned is the problem that causes the economic structure of the world to tremble. It has already overthrown empires. The Russian revolution was fought to secure economic justice—the rich were debased violently that the poor might be exalted. Misguided and violent and bloody and dictatorial though it was, the rise of the Soviet power was aimed to correct the evils that the prophet saw a hundred years ago. In another way, Mussolini rose to power over a monarchy that stepped aside to dwell in his shadow; through state control of industry he seeks to at least throw to the poor an adequate return for their labor that they may continue to be efficient and loyal subjects. The same trouble is fundamentally at the root of the German upheavals; Communists, socialists, Nazis fight over the bone of contention and each seeks to force the adoption of its own panacea. In Great Britain income taxes take from the rich and give doles to the poor, thus, as a British subject has said, "Insuring against revolution." In America the pot boils with a thousand fermenting ideas, from N. R. A. to Sinclair's EPIC. Theodore Roosevelt was first to see this coming some few years ago, we are told, and was a prophet. Joseph Smith saw it a hundred years ago. But who heeded his message?

We might paraphrase Ecclesiastes 9:14, 15 to read: "There was a great city and many men in it, and there came a great king against it and besieged it and built great bulwarks round about it: now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom and inspiration might have delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor wise man . . . the poor man's wisdom is despised and his words are not heard."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A Correction

The reader will probably have noticed on page 1422 of last week's Herald in the article on "Friendly Visiting" by Sister Grace L. Krahl that that villian of the composing room, Etaoin Shrdlu, has made a ridiculous mistake in one of the middle lines in the second column. Etaoin is not the author of "The Days of Auld Lang Syne" even though he may claim to be. The real author is Ian Maclaren as almost anybody who is familiar with these works will know. We hereby extend apologies to Sister Krahl and Ian Maclaren, and administer a severe rebuke to Mr. Shrdlu. Two lines below should read "two nobler characters" instead of "the nobler characters."

MRS. J. F. CURTIS

Mrs. J. F. Curtis Passes

Mrs. Margaret Curtis, wife of Apostle J. F. Curtis, died Wednesday morning at home in Independence. Sister Curtis had suffered a stroke earlier in the year. Only a few days before her death she was reported to be better and the end came as a surprise. The Editors of the Herald take this opportunity of expressing their sympathy for Brother Curtis and the family.

George E. Harrington Passes

Elder George E. Harrington passed away at the home of his son, Dr. G. Leonard Harrington, Friday night, November 9. Retired from active service as a missionary, Brother Harrington continued to respond to invitations to speak and to work for the church until very near the end, when physical disability prevented his doing more. Many years a missionary, one time president of Independence District (before its organization as a stake), and always a zealous worker, he made many friends, who crowded the Stone Church Sunday afternoon to be present at the funeral service. The sermon was by his friend and fellow worker, Dr. Joseph Luff.

What We Say Is Important

"Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof. . . ."

Those are the words of Jesus. He also said on the same occasion, "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

Often when we feel deeply, when we are stirred, when we are thrilled, words do not come easily. We are like the little girl whose daddy had just been brought home from the hospital after a long and critical illness. "Oh, Mummie," she joyfully cried, "I'm too happy to talk—I want to sing!"

How much happier the world would be if there were more singing and less talking!

Many of us talk too much. We forget that sometimes, somewhere, we are to be faced with all our idle words. We speculate aloud concerning our neighbor's affairs. We chit-chat. We gossip. We tell jokes that were better left untold. With a few careless words we insinuate something that we do not know to be true about an acquaintance.

What we say is important, more important than we ordinarily realize. For by our words, Jesus tells us, we are to be justified or condemned. Before we speak, we should make sure that we know what we are about to say, and we should be certain that it is the part of wisdom to say it. The tongue can be a harmful instrument if it is not governed and guarded. Our mouths are not like the neighbor's blatant radio that runs all day without regard for what come from it.

Paul wrote to the Thessalonians: "We beseech you, brethren, . . . that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands." He has strong words for those who are "not only idle, but tattlers also and busy bodies, speaking things which they ought not."

Rather than indulge in speaking idly, let us,

"Take time to be holy,
Speak oft with thy Lord;
Abide in him always
And feed on his word;
Make friends of God's children,
Help those who are weak,
Forgetting in nothing
His blessing to seek."

The struggle of understanding against prejudice is the struggle of civilization against barbarism.—Professor John Dewey.

Hazel Guinee

Hazel Guinee is an active young worker in Joplin, Missouri, Branch. She teaches a primary class in the church school. She plays the violin in the church school orchestra and is an officer in the N. N. C. Young People's Class.

This picture of her appeared in the Joplin Globe of October 7, with the officers of her high school literary society. She is a junior in high school and an officer of the Olympiad Literary Society. Hazel is the daughter of Brother and Sister Donald Guinee, of Joplin.

A Slogan for True Church Workers

Someone has said, "We are never at our best unless we are working for results too great to be attained in a single year." Another has said that the greatest indictment that can be brought against the churches is that their work is done in a half-hearted fashion. The last words of Doctor Phillips, a pioneer in work with young people, may be taken therefore as a slogan by every true church worker:

"See the invisible,
Do the impossible,
Be the super-human!
The utmost
For the Highest."

—Beulah Grant in "Organizing With Vision," Young People's Leader.

Gossip

Sometimes people say that the mixed classes for young people promote more romance than study. Well, what of it? There isn't any better place to meet your friends than the church. Finding friends is one of the principal occupations of life, especially while we are young. The church is a good place to find them.

How about your Christmas entertainment? Has your committee gone to sleep? Begin early if you want a good quality program.

And we have fine program coming for a New Year's watch party. They used it with good success last year in Berkeley, California. Everybody goes to them now that can get an invitation. Have a watch party in your church this year. It isn't too early to call your gang together and talk it over.

The White Masque Dramatic Club of Independence has been doing some fine work with short plays, staging demonstrations, and lectures on the drama. They meet once a month. The president, Miss Margaret Sturges, tells us that inquiries have come from other cities as to the details of the White Masque organization. She is glad to answer questions. Only, please furnish stamped and addressed envelopes.

Independence also has a little theatre movement of its own—the Village Players. It's non-denominational, but gives its plays in the north auditorium (dining hall) of the Stone Church. This season's program includes two full-evening plays and two evenings of one-act plays. Last year the Village Players gave to the Stone Church a good amount of stage equipment. All tickets were sold out. They hope for a good season this year too.

I stand for and teach the tithing system for the reason that it links up lives with God. It standardizes and stabilizes the finances of the kingdom. It is understandable and workable. It works no hardships. It solves our spiritual and financial problems and dignifies the church. There is no record nor suggestion that it was ever abrogated, and Jesus left it where he found it.—George F. Bradford, "Tithing and Spiritual Development," in Christian Standard.

To preserve a friend, three things are necessary: to honor him when present, praise him when absent, and assist him in his necessities.—An Italian Proverb.

The Michigan Musical Movement

By Louise Evans

"Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gift of music and of song; let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth and let them aid and assist so far as their cares will permit; and remember that Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph." — Doctrine and Covenants 119:6.

Because of the many inquiries regarding this musical movement, it was thought best to write an article, trying to set forth its organization and objectives.

A need for such an organization grew out of the conviction that there is an enormous waste of talent among our people. Few recognized their own potentialities and thus failed to cultivate their talents; others who did and took training, but to use their own words, "could see nothing ahead of them." These grew disheartened and frequently their services were lost to us; then there are always those having deep convictions that their talents are God-given for the use of his church, yet were dissatisfied with the opportunities for self-expression. The scarcity of musical directors was an obstacle to the advancement of music. There were also the talented people who lacked the spirit of cooperation and made leaders with vision, victims of jealousy and petty criticism, until we, too, lost them. We look with disdain upon the waste of material things, but quite often apparently oblivious to the loss of talent. Thus we thoughtlessly permitted a pathetic waste of human capabilities, depriving the church of a needed culture. We recognized this waste and the need of searching out latent talent, of bringing together of the trained and untrained material and the spiritualizing of all these forces and getting to work in a common objective. Thus out of this conviction grew the Michigan Musical Movement.

GOALS OR OBJECTIVES

Our primary aim is a chorus of 600 voices. Happily, however, present growth indicates that our numerical goal will have to be enlarged; an orchestra of 60 trained musicians and the development of minor groups to act as feeders to the main orchestra; A band, (with uniforms of church colors); a children's chorus of 200 or more voices, these also to act as feeders to the adult chorus; the encouraging of better hymn singing among all; we also wish to establish a fund from which talented Saints can be helped to secure training, who otherwise would be deprived of it because of unfortunate financial conditions. It is planned when the time is opportune to hold annual musical festivals, at which time thorough class work help can be given covering almost every musical need. This to be augmented by concerts by the combined choirs and orchestras and the contribution of soloists, etc. Last but most important is the spiritualizing of all these forces. The world is full of splendid choirs. Ours will be distinctive only as we are able to lift it to new spiritual heights.

THOSE ELIGIBLE

Youth and age are uniting in this big effort for betterment. No age limit has been set. The only requirements are that you can either sing or play a hymn well; a willingness to learn the assigned music; this to be supplemented by a good attitude—an essential attribute. Those that are willing to comply with the above are needed and urged to help us and themselves.

INTERMEDIATE GOALS

A 200 voice choir; a children's chorus; an orchestra and band for the annual Zion's Christian Legion convention next June. The same ensemble for the Detroit district conference, October, 1935.

A 200 voice choir for the 1936 General Conference. Have we the needed courage and persistency to carry out such a program? It is just a matter of cooperation.

MUSIC USED

All music used by the choirs are numbers used by the choruses in Zion, thus creating greater unity of purpose. Following is the 1935 series:

"Send Out Thy Light," Gounod.

"Turn Ye Even to Me," Harker.

"Repent Ye," Scott-Deis.

It would be well to also learn the 1934 anthems as published in a recent Herald. We suggest that each singer purchase his own copy and have it become choir property, thus an excellent library will soon be built up. Watch for Herald notices regarding music for the children and for the orchestra.

ITS DEVELOPMENT

It is having a healthy growth. One year old and the same music is being used all over Michigan and parts of Ontario. This has been made possible by the enthusiasm of not only directors of music but by the splendid backing of the officers of the various districts. The Park of the Pines chorus has attained a high degree of musicianship; the chorus of one hundred at the last Legion convention was a surprise to many. At this early date if all were assembled we undoubtedly would have over 300 singers ready for ensemble work.

Mormon City Is Smith Monument Author Reveals

Founder is Mob Victim Before Realizing Vision of Religious City

By Gilbert I. Garrison, Author of "Prophet's Wife"

Salt Lake City is the lengthened shadow of a man who never saw the Rocky Mountains. That man was Joseph Smith, the Mormon "Prophet" and founder of that religious sect.

"The "Prophet" died in 1844, murdered by assassins in a little jail in Carthage, Illinois. Less than two years later the Mormons followed an uncharted trail across the plains to found Salt Lake City. They braved Indian danger, scoffed at privations and reached the great mountain valley, leaving their dead buried by the hundreds along their path. In their hearts they carried a sainted memory of the dead "Prophet."

Polygamy

Into the west they bore a pernicious doctrine—polygamy. The origin of that doctrine is the basis for dispute between two branches of the Mormon church today. One branch with headquarters at Salt Lake City attempts to prove it was introduced and practiced by Joseph Smith. The other, calling themselves the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at Independence, Missouri, claim that plural marriage was the vicious doctrine of later church leaders. In this branch one finds the descendants of the "Prophet." I know personally two grandchildren of Smith. Both resent the accusation that their grandparent sanctioned the doctrine. I believe that they are correct.—University Tour News, May, 1934.

Zionic Optimism

By L. S. Wight

L. S. WIGHT

SOME YEARS after the world war I had the privilege of visiting one of our branches near where there had been an army cantonment. Among the men I met was one who had never been able to earn much in wages but he had been a regular attendant at the Sunday school always trying to put his penny in counting to God on a percentage basis, and then when his bubble did burst he was not able to contribute even his customary penny.

It has often been said that the optimist sees only the doughnut while the pessimist sees only the hole. It is obvious that neither one can be correct in his interpretation of what he sees. The optimist must recognize that this tasty morsel would not be a doughnut unless there is a hole surrounded with something good to eat. The pessimist must also be willing to admit that there could be no hole without something to form the edges for it. Unless the conclusion of each is tempered with reason he sees only that part which he wants to see. He may not recognize the fact that the very thing which makes what he sees, is the opposite condition which he fails to see at all.

That there is a place in zionic philosophy for the optimist should be obvious to all of us who are interested in working toward the building of Zion. Faith, hope and charity are three of God's greatest gifts to mankind, and hope is the basis for optimism. Many times in divine instruction accompanying the restoration, are we commanded to have hope. For example, this sentence quoted from the fourth paragraph of section 16, Doctrine and Covenants, "And if you have not faith, hope and charity, you can do nothing." But no where in that divine instruction can we find any justification for such hope being expressed without reservations or without being tempered with proper precautionary measures. There is no excuse for us to see only the doughnut without noticing the hole which does exist. In other words our optimism should not be an unbridled one. It should be tempered with wisdom and when it is so expressed it becomes zionic optimism.

There is a need for an emphatic, constant expression of zionic optimism today. Unfortunately world conditions of the last few years have been too much for many people in all walks of life. They have given up hope and it is impossible for such people to do anything effectively. They are only proving the above quoted sentence from divine law. Granted there is a need for the right kind of optimism, is there any reason for it? A search of the Scriptures, especially the record of Christ's teachings, reveal an endless amount of such expression from the Great Teacher himself. The conditions under which he was trying to generate hope in the breasts of his the collection plate. At the time war work was started he was able to get a job on this cantonment with the accompanying high wages. This was a new experience for him and he believed that Utopia had come. For the first time in his life he had plenty. This, he concluded, was the place where the Saints should gather because of the prevailing high wages. Here they could do the things they had always hoped for. He went so far as to urge officials to influence church members to take advantage of this big opportunity to establish Zion.

Apparently he did not realize that this condition could only be transitory. He failed to put it to the test with a close comparison of the divine plan of social economy. His conclusions therefore were based on a false premise. He let his optimism get the best of his judgment. When I met him, he was, in common with many others, constantly concerned about earning enough to keep going. His bubble had burst. If he had been able to get the general church officers to yield to his pleas he would have brought about a "gathering" that would have ended in disaster to all participants.

One of the interesting sidelights of this experience was that during the time this man was earning high wages he continued to put his penny in the collection plate each week. Yes, sir! he kept up his church contributions! He had gotten into a habit and during his days of plenty he let the habit still guide him. He failed to recognize the basis for ac-followers were as bad or worse than conditions which we are facing today. He was psychologist enough to know that the first requisite to human accomplishment is the determination in the mind to reach any designated goal. Hence today the wise expression of the right kind of optimism will be the dynamic necessary to keep us doing those things necessary to accomplish our purposes.

One of the best stories to illustrate this point that I have ever heard is this. In the early days it happened that an old man, and an old couple moved from a certain town in Ohio to a new place in southern Missouri. The old man who was a disgruntled human being made the trip first. As he crossed the ferry over the Mississippi river he asked the ferryman for information about the people in this new town to which he was going. Before answering, the ferryman asked the old man what kind of neighbors he had left back in Ohio. It did not take the old man long to tell what bad people they were, how hard they were to get along with and that he was glad to get away from them. He hoped that in this new country he would find some decent people. The ferryman could not encourage him. He said he happened to know many people in this new town and they were about the worst lot of human beings he had ever seen. They were hard to get along with, could not be neighborly, etc., and in fact there was nothing to indicate that the old man would improve his condition by making this move.

When the old couple rode his ferry boat some time later on the way to the same town, they told the ferryman how they had hated to leave this town back in Ohio. They had lived there all their lives, raised their family, which was now scattered, and they were planning to spend the rest of their days with one of their children in the new town. It was hard to leave the folks back home who were such wonderful people in every way. Their neighbors were good ones and would do anything within their power for others. They were curious to know if the ferryman could advise them about the people in this new town. Of course he could. Hadn't he advised the old man who was so sour on the world? Then he told them that he knew many people who had traveled to this very town and as far as he could see there were no finer people in the world. He was sure that this old couple would find just as good neighbors as they had left back in Ohio. Neighbors who would do anything for them and help them to make life in their last days just as happy as it had been in their old home community.

Apparently there was some discrepancy in this advice of the ferryman, but was there? Certainly not. All he did was to find out what each one thought of his previous neighbors. He knew that each would find the reflection of his own state of mind in any new neighbors. Therefore he told the grouchy that he would find nothing but grouchy neighbors and he told the optimists that they would find a wonderful set of neighbors. It is axiomatic that water will find its own level. It is just as true that we will find what we are looking for all the way through life, and if we look for a zionic condition with the determination to find it, we will do so. There will be obstacles to overcome during the search, and today too many of us see nothing but the obstacles. They can be overcome in some way if we will exercise the right kind of hope, and if we back up that hope with the work necessary to overcome them.

Mankind has constantly sought for economic security. Seeking salvation either in the world to come or in the one which we occupy now is the dominating idea of most people. Conditions of despair resulting from the depression period have intensified this search on the part of all peoples in the entire world. This situation has made Zion hunters more determined than ever to find or develop that zionic condition which offers the divine kind of economic security. God has given us a workable plan on which this condition may be brought about but as a group we have failed to heed the many admonitions which would have made success possible. In the stress of need, many schemes have been presented to hurry the thing along but always those who present any plan which differs from the divine pattern, permit themselves to look at the doughnut of apparent opportunity without recognizing the dangers which constitute the "hole in the doughnut." It is especially significant at this time that those responsible for the functioning of the temporal law are urging us to "keep the law" instead of going to the left or to the right with any special schemes designed to hurry the program of putting the church on a sound basis.

Outside of the church the political world has offered many schemes with more vote getting bait than economic soundness. Before letting our enthusiasm for any of these schemes get the best of judgment we should put the test of the divine plan to them. There is no argument about the purpose of these plans being the same as the purpose of Zion. But the methods of accomplishing the purpose vary so widely and in so many ways from the divine plan of operation that they cannot command the respect of the true Zion building mind. As a church we believe that our democratic government was divinely inspired, especially the constitutional basis on which it operates, therefore it would hardly seem that zionic thinking (Continued on page 1452.)

Glimpses of European News

By John W. Rushton

Of the Quorum of Twelve

GENERAL NEWS OF EUROPE the last month has been very confused and tragic. The assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia at Marseilles on Tuesday, October 9, filled the world with horror. The crime is traceable to lack of coherence between the Serbs, Slovenes and Croats which compose "the trine kingdom." The king's decree of 1929 abolishing the historic ethnological divisions and seeking to force a ruthless centralization which meant a Serb dominance, has never been popular. The successor to the throne is King Peter a boy of eleven years, which means the country will have a regency for some years.

At the same time as King Alexander met his death, M. Barthou, the French foreign minister, also was killed by what is believed to have been an accidental shot.

Then, another blow has fallen upon France in the death of Raymond Poincare, the former president and premier, who died October 15 in his seventy-fourth year. So, is removed a great statesman, financier, barrister and writer from France. Perhaps his greatest feat was the doubling of the value of the franc with reference to the pound, when France's finances seemed on the verge of collapse after the war. Poincare made it one of the world's soundest currencies.

THE CONFLICT IN SPAIN is another matter which has grave possibilities. This seems to have been the outcome of several kinds of discontent; the misery of the miners of Asturia, the separatists of Catalonia, Communists and Syndicalists all aiming at different but parallel objectives. It is evident that democratic government in Spain which dates from April, 1931, has seriously broken down. What the outcome will be none can tell. The need seems to be to instill into the citizens a more stable concept of their responsibilities or the republic may "founder in Fascism or have a speedy suicide in Sovietism."

REICHS BISHOP MUELLER WAS INSTALLED AS PRIMATE OF THE GERMAN EVANGELICAL CHURCH Sunday, September 23. The Berlin cathedral was hung with flags bearing the swastika imposed upon the cross. Storm troops in uniform stood on either side of the altar. The Nazi salute was given, the Reichsbishop exchanging it with the bishops present, all of whom with one exception placed in office by himself. Bishops Meiser of Bavaria, Wurm of Wurtemberg and Marahrens of Hanover were absent.

Out of between 16,000 and 17,000 protestant pastors between 6,000 and 7,000 have come out openly against the Reichsbishop by joining the Pastor's Emergency League. From thousands of pulpits a fiery protest against "the allies of heresy who are laying waste the House of God" was made. The Confessional Movement they represent is ready to "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's"; but is determined to "render unto God the things that are God's."

FROM ITALY comes the news of the decree of Tuesday, September 18, which militarizes the whole nation, from children of eight years. This tendency towards isolationism, which with the reign of force in Germany, militarism in Italy, repudiation of pledges by Japan and Poland is a menace to the world, the salvation of which can only be through cooperation.

THE AUSTRALIAN ELECTION gave the victory to Mr. Lyons and the United Australian Party showing that the country stands by the policy of "honest finance and balanced budgets."

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF SIR GEORGE NEWMAN, THE CHIEF MEDICAL OFFICER OF THE MINISTRY OF HEALTH IN GREAT BRITAIN shows that there is no general increase of mortality among the unemployed or their dependents. Malnutrition is neither widespread nor increasing. Employment pay, the feeding of children, better sanitary conditions together with a wider dissemination of the laws of health are stated to have contributed to this desired end.

THE MODERN JUGGERNAUT. The heavy toll of the automobile in Great Britain is causing alarm and the Minister of Transport, Mr. Hore Belisha, is earnestly seeking to counteract this. From March 11 to October 6 (thirty weeks) 4,228 deaths, and 146,610 injured are recorded.

THE TELEPHONE SYSTEM of Great Britain, as is well known is under Government control. Recently there has been a nation-wide advertising campaign to popularize this modern instrument of communication. Rates have been reduced and now after 7 p. m. calls to any part of the kingdom can be had at the rate of one shilling (25c) for three minutes.

THE RADIO (wireless as it is called here), is increasing in popularity also. Each instrument must be licensed, the rate being ten shillings per year

(two and a half dollars). The post office takes one shilling for operating expense.

THE MOTOR SHOW was opened at the Olympia, London, October 11, by the Duke of Kent (Prince George). It is less than forty years since these mechanical vehicles were permitted to run on the roads preceded by a man walking with a red flag. There are more than two thousand firms represented. Millions of capital, hundreds of thousands of employes are engaged in the production of millions of cars and accessories. Motor taxation in one form and another brings to the British Government 75 millions of pounds (375 millions of dollars).

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE MAGISTRATES ASSOCIATION issued October 11 approved the report of the Departmental Committee on Sterilization: Voluntary sterilization should be legalized, but doubt was expressed whether this would meet effectively all the cases with which the Courts are concerned.

THE INCREASE IN DIVORCE as shown by the Civil Judicial Statistics of October 11 compared with 1932 matrimonial petitions increased by 331, making a total of 4,969. Decrees nisi granted for the dissolution of marriage totalled 3,988. Largely as consequence of these increases the total number of proceedings in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty division reached 5,415, the highest ever recorded.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC ATTITUDE CONCERNING MIXED MARRIAGES as stated by Father Owen Dudley, Superior of the Catholic Missionary Society in reply to Canon Oliver of the Anglican church: "The Catholic church has the sole right to lay down her own tradition, because the mixed marriage is a Catholic marriage, and no protestant need marry a Catholic. But, if they do, they must accept the following terms of the Catholic church: 'The Catholic party must endeavor to lead the non-Catholic party to the true faith by prayer and example. The non-Catholic party must not interfere with the religion of the Catholic. Both parties promise to bring up the children in the Catholic religion.'

GREAT BRITAIN'S SLUM CLEARANCE SCHEME: For the next forty years the country is committed to an annual expenditure of 4,300,000 pounds (21 and a half million dollars) for the tearing down of slum property and rehousing the tenants at rentals they can afford to pay. It is estimated that 2,000,000 rather than the 350,000 new dwellings which is the government's plan, for five years, will be needed.

RUSSIA HAS A PERMANENT SEAT IN THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS. With a population of 165 millions, a Communist state with autocracy, secret police, semilegalized murder, famine and religious persecution still characteristic; it is better to have Russia inside the League. The League, with America, Germany and Japan still aloof, is incomplete and limited in effectiveness.

THE NEED OF PROVIDING FOR LEISURE: The London Spectator offers the following wise counsel: "It will, no doubt, be well to provide facilities for reading, gardening, seeing plays, hearing music, for arts and crafts, games and social work. But if we are really intent on providing means for satisfactory use of leisure we cannot ignore the actual bent of men and women, and the tastes which they are unmistakably developing—and of these the taste for constant movement from place to place seems to be universal." So, it is urged that such parks, old mansions and places where pictures and historic treasures are housed should be opened and made accessible to the traveling public. Cathedrals and old churches, the many towns and villages with their customs and festivals should cultivate distinctive qualities and provide objectives and resting places for body and mind for the pilgrims of pleasure.

THE LAUNCHING OF THE NEW CUNARDER on Wednesday, September 26, by Queen Mary marks a new move in British Merchantile shipping. The two oldest shipping companies which were rivals are now working in cooperation. It is expected that three of these giant ships will be built. The "534" was christened the Queen Mary will be 80,000 tons gross, her engines about 180,000 horse power, and her speed 30 knots per hour. The cost will be four and a half million pounds (22 and a half million dollars). The verdict of the country is that "she is the inevitable ship."

THE COLLIERY EXPLOSION AT GRESFORD, near Wrexham in North Wales filled the country with horror. Two hundred and seventy-one lives were blotted out, many families bereft of fathers and husbands and sons. The response to the various appeals for assistance for the sufferers is magnificent. In spite of all that has been done to ensure safety in this industry, it is still the most dangerous peace-time occupation. One thousand lives are lost every year and 150,000 injured.

THE ART OF PUBLIC WORSHIP: Doctor Percy Daermer gives a fine exposition of public worship in the London

Spectator for September 28. He says: "We recognize humbly now that public worship is a complex and difficult art for which we need the best that wise and creative men can provide." "It is based upon philosophy as well as theology, it embraces ethics and depends for its proper exercise upon an understanding of psychology." "It is difficult to think of an art which is not involved in that of public worship. Poetry, prose, expressive and solemn movement ('Shaping'), and music." He includes also, printing and bookbinding and costuming, painting, sculpture, textiles, metal work and work in wood and glass.

WHAT DOES THE CHURCH STAND FOR? A series of articles is to be presented through the London Spectator dealing with this question. The editor speaking in advance says: "This is the indispensable church for which we are waiting, the church which tells with authority about God because it consists of men and women who have seen and felt and know him. For that church with some impatience and anger, many are waiting today."

GENERAL SMUTS ON THE OUTLOOK OF THE WORLD. The address delivered by General Smuts on his installation as Lord Rector of Saint Andrews University, Scotland, was a very striking deliverance from one who has made a name of world fame as a soldier, statesman and philosopher. Singularly, he is in company with expresident Herbert Hoover of the United States in making "The Future of Liberty," his main theme.

He will not yield to pessimism and believes that "Freedom is the most ineradicable craving of human nature; without it peace, contentment and happiness, even manhood itself, are not possible." While he sees ground for anxiety, he does not agree that we are on the "verge of war"; but, "the greatest menace of our time is the disappearance of the sturdy, independent-minded, freedom-loving individual and his replacement by a servile mass-mentality."

"Dictatorship can only be tolerated as a temporary expedient, and can never be a permanent substitute for free self government." The watchword he gives to the young men and women of today is: "More and more the will to freedom should be our real motive power." "Inner freedom and harmony of the soul; social freedom and equality before the law as the foundation of the State; internal freedom in the rule of peace and justice."

The Puzzle of Life

By H. E. Depew

Life is like a jig-saw puzzle
Which we mortals all must solve;
Whether good shall come, or evil,
Is quite left to our resolve.
All the various colored pieces
Represent our life's display;
'Tis for us to weave the pattern,
In whatever way we may.

Some folks start in with the border,
Marking out the edges well—
Cutting deep, and true, the limits
Which our histories will tell.
Such as these work to the center,
Placing well each tiny part—
Building upward to a climax;
Life, to them, has just one heart.

Then again, we have the workman
Who assort his pieces all—
Studies out the num'rous shadings,
Lest he slip, or sometime fall.
Now this man's life has many parts,
That when built make up the whole;
His good life will have no climax—
Yet its parts will cheer the soul.

Lastly, now we have the mortal
Who starts in without a plan;
Just begins to use the pieces
Where and as he finds he can.
His life shows no well-thought order,
Neither climax, nor good parts;
Though he finally ends his picture
All one sees is wand'ring starts.

Choose you well the way to master
All the varied bits of life,
Make your picture one of beauty
'Mid the worldly storm and strife.
If the different interests please you,
Or one climax is your goal—
Build up well, in grandeur lasting,
All the parts that make your soul.

Be Still

Be still, my heart!
Amid the Babel sounds that greet thine ears,
Amid the rush and riot of the day,
Let God's own silence of the eternal years
Keep thee unmoved, undaunted on thy way,
My heart, be still!

Be still, my heart!
Amid the devious ways that thou must tread,
Amid the sorrow and the pain of life!
Look up, for so to faithful souls is read
The message of His peace in every strife,
My heart, be still!

A Wanderer's Vision of Home

IT WAS a warm Saturday in February. Tomorrow Dorothy Jane would be baptized. The English family were going to enter the church, too. Others would perhaps join before they left the pool, for many were favorably impressed with the gospel. Louisa felt numbly sorrowful that she could not unite with the church, too. Dan would do the baptizing. Dan, the hypocrite, lifting his hand to heaven: "Having been commissioned—" she couldn't do it. That old feeling of revulsion would come the minute he touched her. She couldn't go through with it. She could not go through the years beside him, pretending all was well, when internally she would be continually troubled. She might hear that—even that—if she but had a real friend somewhere.

But there was no one. Her mother? No, her mother was too busy running away from something herself. There was no one.

Dully she pushed herself through the usual Saturday routine. She ate no supper—she was not aware of any hunger except that which gnawed continually at her heart.

"I'm tired, Dan. I believe I'll go to bed," she said when the supper dishes were finished.

She had not been lying there long until she found herself wandering through a disagreeable darkness. She thought to herself: "I've had dreams before. I need not fear." But she knew there was something different about this. This was no ordinary terror of a dream-filled night. This was the kind of darkness Lehi felt in his vision—a dark and dreary waste. Lehi had prayed. She found herself praying also; then there came a little light, faint and far-away, but gradually becoming brighter, drawing nearer.

"Louisa."

She had always thought her name unlovely but from these lips it was like soft music.

"Come with me, my daughter. There is something you must see."

She followed him swiftly until they came to the top of a high hill; there he paused and bade her look below. At first she could see nothing; it was so dark in that valley. Now the mists cleared a little and a great crowd of people were seen pressing onward toward some indefinite goal. She could see some of them quite distinctly now. They were pale and worn, these men and women;

some clasped sickly children in their arms while others, ragged and hungry, crowded around their parents crying for bread. Her eyes were particularly drawn toward one little woman who stumbled forward, a child held close to her heart. Then suddenly her arms were empty and she was flinging them about wildly, beating the air with her hands, and crying piteously: "Oh, in Jesu Nom! In Jesu nom!"

"These are my brethren, the poor of earth," said the gentle voice at her side. "But look. Here are others you must see."

THESE OTHERS seemed to have some of the comforts of life; yet there was something lacking in their lives. Often they would pause in their journey and gaze wistfully about as if trying to find something they had lost. One old lady seemed absorbed in her contemplation of a bit of paper.

"Can you see the picture on the paper?"

"No," answered Louisa, tremulously. "Her tears have almost blotted it out." She was speaking, too, and Louisa listened:

"Oh, if I could only paint—not just colors and shapes, but inner meanings, hidden from the view of others—meanings God has put there and given me vision to see. But there is no money for learning such things; we are too poor."

"Why, it is Grandma McClaren," cried Louisa, astonished.

"And she is only one of many. Many, oh, so many, have come to the world qualified and ready in spirit to perform a great work for humanity—but they were crushed, disappointed, overwhelmed, because of the lack of this earthly thing called money. In yonder crowd of poor there are potential great men and women of every sphere of art and science whose voices will never be heard outside their own small village; whose hands will never perform the work for which their Creator designed them. Behold, their hunger and their need! But their needs are no greater than the needs of those who now approach the valley. Look again."

A vast throng of young people, gay and joyous in appearance, filled the little valley. Some were dancing, some singing; young girls with lips and faces brilliant with blood-red paint; young men and women smoking cigarettes; playing games; laughing boisterously, heeding nothing but the enjoyment of the moment. Now and again some one of them would wander away from the crowd and his face, as he looked questioningly about, took on such a sad and wistful aspect that Louisa was profoundly moved.

"Oh," she cried, "they are trying to find happiness and they don't know what happiness is—they confuse happiness with noise, sensual gratification, hilarity. Oh, they are innocent, they are good, but there is no one to tell them, no one to warn them of questionable things, no one to lead them in ways of true happiness!"

"I am glad you are sorry for them, my child. But be of good cheer. For by and by these, too, shall find Bread."

PRESSING CLOSELY in the great course upon the heels of these young, came a crowd of those who are lowest in the scale of society; degraded and drunken criminals, the wicked of many types, rich and poor. Imbeciles. Men, women, and children. There was something familiar about one little boy. He shuffled forward aimlessly and around one arm was coiled a great snake. She heard him speak: "I am Philander Johannes Rippetto." Something so hopelessly forlorn there was about him, about them all, that she burst into tears. Again she heard the quiet voice: "These, too, are my brethren."

Then there were others: Well-dressed people, men and women with children in their arms. Now and then she could hear a prayer from some of the parents: "Help us to bring them up to be strong and healthy; to be loyal and true to the highest things in life." But there was such confusion all about them; many hands, wraithlike hands, reached out toward them; many voices, saying, "Lo here, lo there. Buy our product and your child will be healthy." "No, his product is not good: buy ours." "When you get sick try our method of healing." "He's a quack doctor, mothers, don't listen to him." "Liar. You're the quack, the charlatan. Here is truth." "No, it is over here." "Vaccinate your baby and immunize him from these dread diseases." "Don't vaccinate him; it puts poison into his little body which may cost his health, even his life. Buy our health food, instead." "Nonsense, give us your dollar, let us immunize him. Let us vaccinate him. It is an entirely harmless process; and you need worry no more about these few dread diseases, anyway."

"Here lady, is something to help you hold your husband's love." "No, buy ours, this is best. This paste will keep your teeth white—it is no ordinary preparation. Your smile will keep him charmed." "No, our powder is the stuff to use on teeth." "Is your husband afraid to tell you about your disagreeable breath? Try our mouth wash." "No that's no good, try ours." "Polish your finger nails." "Use our shampoo." "Here's the best cold cream." "If your husband loves you, he'll buy you one of our fur coats. Bargain now, soon will rise in price." "If you love her, keep the vases filled with flowers." "Watch your husband." "Watch your wife."

She watched them wonderingly: Some groping about with puzzled faces as if to discover just which voices to heed; some despairing, trying to lead their children, but realizing that they were blind leaders of the blind. Some men and women walked side by side, but there were no children. The men were afraid. Afraid of this pitiless competition, of the possibility of poverty, of their inability to give their children a proper chance. Her eyes followed one woman into a comfortably appointed house. It was quiet, too quiet. The man had his work. It was a hard job; it took all his best energies to get successfully through the day. The woman was a modern woman. She had all the modern woman's short-cuts for accomplishing her work quickly. She was not tired. There was nothing left for her but the emptiness of social life, dancing, cards, movies. She demanded of life—of her husband—some kind of worth-while work, children, a destiny.

"Like Mrs. Benson," thought Louisa. "For all the world like Mrs. Benson, with her dyed hair and her scarlet cheeks and lips, and the dress of flame." She reached a trembling hand to her eyes and brushed away the tears. For she wanted to see all of this. It was sad, it was terrible, but she felt that she must see it.

The crowd thinned now. There were but a comparatively small number coming past the hill through the little valley. But they traveled in luxurious fashion, in great automobiles loaded heavily with something; loaded so heavily that the machines seemed almost crushed with the weight; the people themselves were bowed as though their burden was most grievous. Yet the peculiar thing about it all was that each occupant of a car seemed most anxious to trade a small bag for a larger one, seemed bent upon increasing the weight of his load.

"Queer how they reach out for more when they already have too much," mused Louisa.

"These are my brethren, the rich and powerful of earth. See. They are unhappy too—they are not satisfied—that is why they reach for more. They have too much of earthly food—what they need is the Bread of Life and the Living Water. But look again."

A multitude of people of different races. Their arms stretched out as if in appeal; they passed on soon with a look of hopeless despair.

"These who now approach are Lamanites," spoke the voice. "Hearken to the words of a song some of them are chanting:"

"Wakanda, hear us, hear us!

Wakanda, oh behold us!
Bird and beast and bear, oh, Wakanda,
Have their den and lair, oh, Wakanda,
Home and rest, but where is ours?
Wandering through the weary hours?
Home and friends of home, while thy children roam,
Like the weary winds, homeless, crying!"

She watched them as they passed through the valley, and saw them cower at last in dreary places, in poverty, in sickness, in hunger.

But what was that perfume? Faint, elusive, yet now and then almost cloyingly fragrant. Oh, yes. She remembered now. That was the odor of a little white flower that she had seen in Pa-peete. And surely that was the roar of breakers on a reef; surely that wind blew from some vast ocean. And palm trees were springing up in the little valley as if by magic. It grew dark outside, but she could see clearly, through the windows of a brightly lighted church, the faces of many people.

"Why it is Tikehau," she cried, "and there is Lucy coming toward the front of the church." She caught her breath sharply. "And there is Robert. I know he died—but he is there now—I see him." She watched Lucy's face. Back there, so long ago, when she had known Lucy in life, she had not been conscious of any struggle in the young girl's heart. Now she saw clearly. The conflicting emotions. What should she choose? Her church, or the man she loved? An earthly love or a heavenly? But she heard Lucy's voice:

"Father, there is no mistake. I wish to be cast out."

She watched tearfully as the girl floated down the aisle, her arms outstretched to Robert. "Ropati, Ropati," she heard the tense whisper. She watched them both, as they drifted out into the darkness. She saw the stricken face of Lucy's father, the sympathizing glances of his friends. "Brethren, we can only wait and pray for Zion."

"Zion!" cried Louisa, with no effort to restrain her tears, "That is what they need, all these people, all the world. But I have no money—I have nothing to help Zion with. I don't see—"

"Look again, my child."

The valley had faded completely from sight, and in its place she saw a wide stretch of beautiful country; in the center a city the spires of which glistened gloriously in the sun as if with some unearthly splendor. She saw people moving happily about, unworried, contented, pursuing some project of work, or of learning. Building things. Growing things from the soil. Learning, always learning. The land was rich in schools for young and old. There was an inspiring feeling of growth, of development, everywhere. She saw a group of happy Tahitian women fashioning beautiful things with their clever fingers. There was a place for people of all nations, all types. Joyful, healthy children romped about on neatly kept lawns; older ones tramped gladly toward schoolhouses; the scene contrasted strongly with the scenes in the sorrowful valley.

Sorrow was a stranger here; fear was unknown. God's children had come home at last, and were laboring joyfully so that the beautiful gates could be opened to all those weary ones who were saying: "Let us go up to Zion and learn of her ways."

"Child," said the kind voice at last, "Look upon my face and behold your friend. Will my friendship not satisfy? If by your labor you can add one bright jewel to the millions of those glittering in that temple spire, if you could add one brick only to the city wall, if you could speed one soul to Zion with songs of joy on his lips, would you withhold your effort?"

The brightness faded gradually, and as it passed she heard the words of a softly chanted hymn:

"Where cross the crowded ways of life,
Where sound the cries of race and clan,
Above the noise of selfish strife,
We hear thy voice, oh Son of Man!
In haunts of wretchedness and need,
On shadowed thresholds, dark with fears,
From paths where hide the lures of greed,
We catch the vision of thy tears.
The cup of water giv'n for thee
Still holds the freshness of thy grace;
Yet long these multitudes to see
The sweet compassion of thy face.
O Master, from the mountain side,
Make haste to heal these hearts of pain.
Among these restless throngs abide,
Oh, tread the city's streets again."

Louisa was alone, awake, in the bed, in the darkness. There would be no sleep for her that night. She could scarcely wait for the morrow, when she would make a beginning to do her new Friend's will. He had been her Friend always, she knew that now. But now she had seen his face and heard his voice.

The black box? What did it matter? What did it matter whether or not Dan had once been somewhat hypocritical? He wasn't a hypocrite now. And even if he were, even if every member of the church was a hypocrite, she would still want to do her part. Nothing mattered in all the world but the work of God.

The baptisms were to take place at Sister Richard's home. A spring, as large as a man's wrist, gushed from the hillside and though most of the water

Worship Suggestions for December

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "ESTABLISH HIS KINGDOM."

Theme: "The Lord Is Nigh."

Instrumental Prelude: "Come O Thou King of Kings," S. H., 179.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 39: 1 and 85: 16.

"Hearken and listen to the voice of him who is from all eternity to all eternity, the great I AM, even Jesus Christ, the light and life of the world; a light which shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not; the same which came in the meridian of time unto mine own, and my own received me not; but to as many as received me, gave I power to become my sons, and even so will I give unto as many as will receive me, power to become my sons.

". . . call upon me while I am near; draw near unto me, and I will draw near unto you; seek me diligently and ye shall find me; . . ."

Hymn Response: "Israel, God Is Calling," S. H., 189; O. S. H., 284. (First three verses only.)

Scripture Reading: John 6: 37-44.

Meditation:

What keeps us from God?
How can we be made conscious of our sins?
How can we know what the love of God means?
How can we commune with him?
How can we adjust ourselves to his will?

(S) Hymn: "Draw Thou My Soul," S. H., 316.

(S) Benediction.

Theme: "Make Ready for His Coming!"

Instrumental Prelude: "Watchman, tell us . . ." S. H., 134; O. S. H., 316.

Call to Worship: Luke 3: 4, 5.

". . . The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight. For behold, and lo, he shall come, . . . to take away the sins of the world, and to bring salvation unto the heathen nations, to gather together those who are lost, who are of the sheepfold of Israel."

(S) Hymn Response: "Come Thou Almighty King," S. H., 28; O. S. H., 54.

Scripture Reading: Isaiah 60: 1-3.

Talk:

Many people in the days when Jesus was here in the flesh, had a knowledge of the word of prophecy. They expected a Messiah to come. The greater number of these people, however, did not have a spirit of truth with them. Their minds were in darkness, even though the light had risen upon them. A chief requisite for seeing Christ is purity of mind. The practices of peoples of earlier days obscured their vision. They failed to make ready for his coming even though he was with them. "Seeing, they saw not."

We are not companions of the Lord Jesus because he has been prophesied of, or because we have a knowledge of that prophecy. We can receive him only on condition of righteousness.

(S) Hymn: "Joy to the World," S. H., 170; O. S. H., 141.

DECEMBER 16

Theme: "Go Ye Out to Meet Him."

Instrumental Prelude: "Hail the Blest Morn," S. H., 142; O. S. H., 200.

Call to Worship: Isaiah 11: 1-5.

Response: "We believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who created heaven and earth, and all things, who shall come down among the children of men." Mosiah 2: 4.

(S) Hymn: "Redeemer of Israel," S. H., 190; O. S. H., 158.

Short Talk: We have been wandering as strangers in sin. We have cried in the desert, whence we have wandered, for God. The spiritual enemies of the kingdom have rejoiced at our sorrows, but Israel will be free only as we fear not and be just. In this justice we may go forth to meet Christ, who is the redeemer of all those who would be just. Let us pray for our own souls.

Period of Prayer.

Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 43: 5. "Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord: for if I, who am a man, do lift up my voice and call upon you to repent, and ye hate me, what will ye say when the day cometh when the thunders shall utter their voices from the ends of the earth, speaking to the ears of all that live, saying: Repent, and prepare for the great day of the Lord; yea, and again, when the lightnings shall streak forth from the east unto the west, and shall utter forth their voices unto all that live, and make the ears of all tingle, that hear, saying these words: Repent ye, for the great day of the Lord is come."

(S) Hymn: "Rise us, O men of God!" S. H., 210.

(S) Benediction.

Theme: "Draw Nigh to the Son."

Instrumental Prelude: A Medley of Christmas hymns.

Statement of Event: 3 Nephi 1: 12ff, and Isaiah 7: 14. "And, the voice of the Lord came saying, Lift up your head and be of good cheer . . . on the morrow come I into the world, to show unto the world that I will fulfill all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets.

"Behold, I come unto my own, to fulfill all things which I have made known unto the children of men, from the foundation of the world, and to do the will, both of the Father, and of the Son of the Father, because of me, and of the Son, because of my flesh.

"Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and shall bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel."

(S) Response: "To us a child of hope is born," S. H., 140; O. S. H., 121.

Response: By hidden choir—chorus of "Come and worship," S. H., 135; O. S. H., 330.

Scripture Reading: Matthew 3: 1, 2, 7-9a.

Meditation: Today many of us say that we wish to worship Jesus on his birthday, but instead we pay our devotions to our friends and to our own desires, forgetting him almost entirely. Are we more honorable than was Herod? (Allow a moment for meditation.)

Scripture Reading: Matthew 3: 9-11.

Meditation: There were these others who, forgetting themselves and those things that had been dear to them, set out to follow a star. They had an abiding faith, courage to venture forth into the unknown, and endurance. They found the Christ Child. Do you possess those qualifications? Are you finding him?

Hymn: "As with gladness men of old," verse 1, S. H., 143.

Meditation: They worshiped him. Today it is nearing his birthday. Will we, seeking forgiveness for our failures of the past, worship him and do all that we can to bring about the establishing of his kingdom here on earth?

Hymn: S. H., 143, verse 2.

Meditation: Even as they brought birthday gifts to him so long ago, so today we bring him our gifts. I wonder—Are they truly representative of our love for him? Offering is taken and laid at the foot of the manger.)

Hymn: S. H., 143, verse 3.

Offering Prayer.

(S) Hymn: S. H., 143, verse 4.

(S) Creed: Repeated by all. (Revised from Mosiah 2.) We believe in God; believe that he is, and that he created all things, both in heaven and in earth; believe that he has all wisdom, and all power, both in heaven and earth. We believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who created heaven and earth, and all things, who shall come down among the children of men. We believe that man doth not comprehend all things which the Lord can comprehend. We believe that we must repent of our sins and forsake them, and humble ourselves before God; and ask in sincerity of heart that he will forgive us.

(S) Prayer and Benediction: "And now I would command you to seek this Jesus of whom the prophets and apostles have written, that the grace of God the Father, and also the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost which beareth record of them, may be, and abide in you forever. Amen." Ether 5: 41.

DECEMBER 30.

Theme: "Establish His Kingdom."

Instrumental Prelude: "Hark, the voice of Jesus calling," S. H., 344.

Call to Worship: 3 Nephi 5: 11, 12; 4: 51, 52. "Behold, I am Jesus Christ, of whom the prophets testified should come into the world: And behold I am the light and the life of the world, and I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, in the which I have suffered the will of the Father in all things, from the beginning." "Behold, I have come unto the world to bring redemption unto the world, to save the world from sin: therefore whoso repenteth and cometh unto me as a little child, him will I receive; for of such is the kingdom of God. Behold, for such I have laid down my life, and have taken it up again; therefore repent, and come unto me ye ends of the earth, and be saved."

(S) Hymn Response: "Lord God of Hosts," S. H., 172.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 65.

Lord's Prayer:

(S) Hymn: "We would see Jesus," S. H., 155, verses 1, 2, 3, 4.

Talk: Jesus came here once in person. The world since that time has been a different place. Forces have been set in motion so that he may be able to come again. What he sought to do then, was to build his kingdom. This task is yet incompleting.

Christ will be justified in coming again to his own when there will be sufficient of them prepared to meet him and who will need his personal ministry. "Seek ye first the kingdom," therefore, is, for Christ's own sake, a necessary condition to his personal return. Can we view with any degree of satisfaction our present achievements? What is demanded of us in this coming kingdom?

Hymn: "We would see Jesus," S. H., 155, verse 5.

Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 10:3 and Matthew 6: 38. "Seek not for riches, but for wisdom, and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich; behold, he that hath eternal life is rich." "Wherefore, seek not the things of this world; but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

(S) Benediction: "This God is the God we adore," S. H., 100; O. S. H., 216.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Fern Weedmark and Mildred Goodfellow

FIRST SUNDAY, DECEMBER 2.

Sacrament Service

SECOND SUNDAY, DECEMBER 9.

Theme: "He Shall Send a Savior."

Prelude: "Joy to the World! The Lord Will Come," S. H., 170.

Call to Worship: "... Great and marvelous are the works of the Lord. . . . No man knoweth of his ways, save it be revealed unto him; . . ." (Book of Mormon, page 176, verses 9 and 11.)

Hymn: "Sing of His Mighty Love," S. H., 123; Z. P., 110. Prayer.

Scripture: Isaiah 32: 1, Matthew 1: 21b.

Hymn: "Joy to the World! The Lord Will Come," S. H., 170.

Sermon Talk: Text: Amos 3:7. Explain this verse. Tell something about the condition of Israel just before the birth of Christ; how they looked forward to the coming of the Messiah; how the prophets for hundreds of years had foretold his coming. Mention some of the prophecies. Tell of a few people God sent a message to. (Gideon, Judges, chapter 6; Zacharias, Luke, chapter 1; Mary, Luke, chapter 1, and others.) You may wish to also quote Malachi 3:6, and tell the children that God has not changed, but still reveals his will to men, telling briefly about God revealing his will to Joseph Smith and others. Story: "The Gift," page 8, Departments' Journal, December, 1927. (If desired, only the first part of the story, telling about the prophecies about Christ and the way the people looked forward to his coming, may be told today, and the rest used next Sunday.) "What the prophets said about the coming Savior," by junior boys. (He would be born in Bethlehem, Micah 5: 2; descended from Abraham, Genesis 22: 18; of the tribe of Judah, Genesis 49: 10; his name, Immanuel, Isaiah 7: 14b.)

Special musical number by a junior boy or girl.

Story: "What Book of Mormon prophets said about the coming Savior." (The sign which would be given at the time of his coming, page 591, verses 56-58; the new star, page 591, verse 59.) "When the Sign Came." (Page 601, verses 17 et seq.)

Closing Hymn: "To Us a Child of Hope Is Born," S. H., 140. Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, DECEMBER 16.

Theme: "I Bring You Good Tidings of Great Joy."

Prelude: "Silent Night! Holy Night!" S. H., 147.

Call to Worship: "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." (Luke 2: 10.)

Hymn: "While Humble Shepherds Watched Their Flocks," S. H., 139.

Prayer.

Scripture: The Christmas Story, Luke 2: 8-14. (Memorized.)

Hymn: "Silent Night! Holy Night!" S. H., 147.

Sermon Talk: Explain what the "good tidings of great joy" meant to the shepherds; also what they mean to us. Help the children to understand the true meaning of Christmas. Mention some of the ways in which we may keep Jesus' birthday. If the book, "Christmas Stories and Legends," by Phebe A. Curtiss, is available, tell how one girl learned how to keep Christmas. ("Her Birthday Dream," page 13.)

A Christmas Story. Suggestions:

"The Gift," page 8, Departments' Journal, December, 1927. "Under the Stars One Night," or "Jan's Christmas Candle," in book, "Everywhere, Everywhere Christmas Tonight," by Annie Sills Brooks.

"Why the Chimes Rang," or "In the Great Walled Country," in book, "Why the Chimes Rang and Other Stories," by Raymond MacDonald Alden.

"Came to Our House," Stepping Stones, December 24, 1933.

Picture Appreciation: Use a picture of Bethlehem, if available, or "Angel and Shepherds." (No. 6119-M, size 15 x 20 inches, sepia, 12c. David C. Cook Publishing Company, Elgin, Illinois.) After the picture story is told, "O Little Town of Bethlehem," S. H., 144, may be played softly on the piano, or

Hymn Appreciation: "O Little Town of Bethlehem," S. H., 144. (For the story of this hymn, see page 37, A Junior Hymnal, compiled by J. E. Sturgis and W. S. Martin.)

Hymn: "O Little Town of Bethlehem," S. H., 144.

Story: "The Gift Most Rare," Stepping Stones, December 2, 1928.

Closing Hymn: "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing," S. H., 136. Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, DECEMBER 23.

Theme: "Joy to the World; The Lord Is Come."

Prelude: "Silent Night! Holy Night!" S. H., 147.

Call to Worship: "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." (Luke 2: 10, 11.)

Hymn: "Oh, Come All Ye Faithful," S. H., 145.

Prayer.

Hymn: "Joy to the World," S. H., 170. (Sing "The Lord Is Come.")

The Christmas Story: On a background of black or dark blue velvet, hang the most beautiful nativity picture available. Have the best story teller in your group tell the Christmas story, (Either Matthew 2: 1-12 or Luke 2: 8-20) and then give a short description of the picture. Ask the children to think about God's wonderful gift to us, while the pianist plays very softly "Silent Night! Holy Night!" Then a prayer of thankfulness may be offered by the leader, a child or the group in unison.

Call to Worship: "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near." (Isaiah 55: 6.)

Hymn: "Savior, Like a Shepherd Lead Us," S. H., 263.

Prayer.

Scripture: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." (Joshua 24: 15.)

"Those that seek me early shall find me." (Proverbs 8: 17.)

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.)

Hymn: "I Will Sing a Song," Z. P., 162, or "Jesus My Shepherd," Z. P., 117, S. H., 272.

Sermon Talk: Text: 2 Corinthians 6: 2. For helpful material, see the following sermonettes: "The Race of Life," Stepping Stones, May 22, 1932; "Preparing for Service to God," Stepping Stones, July 17, 1932; also article "A New Year Bank Account," Departments' Journal, January, 1928, page 13. The New Year has been compared to a new book, with a clean page for each day. We should make an effort to keep those pages clean and pure. Some people laugh at New Year resolutions because so many of them are broken. The reason for this is that people make many resolutions which they have no idea of keeping. This is a good time to take an inventory (like people in business do) and decide what we should do to make our lives better the coming year. Then make a resolution to put forth our best efforts to accomplish it, remembering always to ask the help of our heavenly Father. (See also, Philippians 3: 13, 14.)

"I will be patient." (Doctrine and Covenants 23: 4.)

"I will be prayerful." (Book of Mormon, page 112, verse 103.)

"I will be generous." (Matthew 10: 8b, Book of Mormon, page 223, verse 43.)

"I will be courteous." (1 Peter 3: 8.)

"I will keep my body strong and clean." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38, 1 Corinthians 3: 16.)

"I will be truthful." (Zechariah 8: 16.)

"I will be kind." (Ephesians 4: 32.)

"I will be obedient." (Ephesians 6: 1.)

"I will be friendly." (Hebrews 13: 2.)

"I will be honest." (Romans 12: 17.)

"I will be reverent." (Psalm 46: 1, 2, Habakkuk 2: 20.)

"I will control my tongue." (Psalm 19: 14.)

"I will study my lessons." (2 Timothy 2: 15.)

Closing Hymn: "Never Be Afraid to Speak for Jesus," Z. P., 170, or "There's an Old, Old Path," Z. P., 207; S. H., 260. Benediction.

The Measures of Man

By Mollie Richmond

What is your worth in the eyes of the world,
How are you measured—what flags you unfurl
Are you upholding the standards of right,
Facing with courage the stress and the strife;
And lending a hand to another in need,
Regardless of station, regardless of creed,
And giving of self whenever you can?
These are the units that measure a man.

What is your worth in the eyes of the world,
Under what standards are your flags unfurled?
Do you lift burdens from worn weary hearts,
Making their troubles, of your own, a part?
Are you tender and thoughtful, meek and mild;
Tender and loving to each little child?
Lifting the storm clouds with untiring hands—
These are the units that measure a man.

'Tis not your wealth, nor your rank, nor your station,
Or the heroic deeds you do for your nation;
'Tis not what you gain, but it is, what you spend
In helping another—the help that you lend:
'Tis your great kindness, your mercy to all—
The making life brighter when darkness appalls:
Just giving your best whenever you can—
These are the units that measure a man.

THE NOMADS

flowed away into Cress Creek, there was a pool, sparkling and clear, and deep enough for baptismal purposes, and it was always full to the brim.

Ten were baptized. Dan paused a moment, then asked: "Are there any others?"

Louisa stepped forward and walked slowly down into the water. Dan's face grew pale and his hands trembled when they touched hers. It seemed a long time before he gained control of himself and lifted his hand toward heaven:

"Louisa, having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

She felt the waters close over her and felt herself lifted up again; she was held tightly in Dan's strong arms and he was crying like a child. The people were singing a song that Dan loved and had taught them:

"I am a stranger here,
Within a foreign land, . . .
My home is brighter far
Than Sharon's rosy plain,
Eternal life and joy
Throughout its vast domain.
My Savior bids me tell
How mortals there may dwell—
And that's my business for my King."

Louisa's heart swelled with a great desire to do something for the church and her Friend. There was nothing too hard for her to attempt; there was nothing so small that she felt above performing it. She was happy now, for the first time in her life. She had work. Work brought her happiness, but it was only when she had found a great cause to work for that full happiness came.

Another spring arrived. One day there came a letter from church headquarters. They had been told that Dan and Louisa understood the Tahitian language. Would they consider taking a mission to the Society Islands? Louisa flung her arms around her husband's neck.

"Oh, Dan! Just think—to be able to go back—to help them prepare their hearts for Zion—it's—"

"Do you realize how wonderfully you've changed, darling? I can hardly believe it sometimes."

"I only regret, Dan, that my youth was wasted. I had so much energy then—and I spent it on things that don't seem vital now. I envy you. You've worked for the church all your life."

A swift pain tore at his heart. "All his life? What did she know of the fierce, burning desires of his own youth, of the things he would have done, had her soft arms not held him back? I could have soared, then," he thought sadly. "Now I can only plod. But I will not tell her, for that would hurt her, and I wouldn't hurt a hair of her head."

She had left him for a moment, an odd, tense look on her face. She was back with a box in her hand. A black box. She could face issues squarely now. The gospel gave one strength.

"What's that?" asked Dan curiously.

"Why—why—" she stammered. Surely he knew what it was. "It's that black box you gave me before we went to the Islands the other time."

Dan grinned. "Oh, that thing! Have you got that yet? Yes, I recall it now. Old Hunt said you were a little dishonest just like all other women, that your curiosity would get the better of you, that you would open the box. But you haven't, I see. I knew you wouldn't. There is something fundamentally straightforward about you—"

"But whose name is this, on the front of it?"

"Why, I don't know. I never noticed any name. He said it was his wife's box, so maybe it's her name. Here, let's open it. I wonder if the old fellow left anything in it. A little money would come in handy he laughed.

Like one in a trance she watched Dan as he worked with the tiny lock. It opened at last. It was empty.

The black box was empty! Empty as her whole life had been—her dreams, her desires, her efforts, her hopes, her fears. Everything had been unreal until her baptism. "The gospel is the only real thing on earth," she breathed, as she tucked the black box back into the trunk, "I shall keep this as a remembrance—and when I become discouraged I shall look at it and think of the emptiness, the loneliness, the years of hunger. Then I shall smile and work again—for Zion."

The car bearing them to the station wound about the dusty country road. The woods were beautiful with wild spring beauties, golden buttercups, purple violets, and white flowering dogwood.

"They're all dressed up for church, Danny John. The woods, I mean. Just see—" But Danny John was all grief and tears.

"I want my dog. I just can't leave him, I can't! I want Pluto. I want my dog!"

"Listen, Danny. Look," cried Dorothy Jane, "we're going to have lots more interesting things to do than just playing with a dog. See the flowers in that field! And what do you bet there isn't an even prettier spot just around that curve? There. What did I tell you? What did I tell you, Danny? It's like that poem in the story of the flax mother read us about, don't you remember?"

"Snip, snap, snare,

Baisse allure.

The song is never done. The best part of all is yet to come."

So the Nomads were on their way again. But this time their journey was most joyful. For they were going to work for Zion. Others were working, too, and by and by all of God's wandering children would find rest and home—at last.

The End.

could condone or agree to suggested schemes designed to upset or overturn the entire system on which our country has been built. All systems have their weaknesses, and all groups have their weak members. Because some designing men do take advantage of opportunity to exploit other people does not necessarily mean that the system is wrong. When church members go wrong, as some do, we do not think of overturning the church system which we believe to be of divine origin, but we do take steps to remove or punish the individuals at fault. That is rational thinking. It is the reasonable attitude. It is optimism tempered with wisdom or in other words it is zionic optimism.

Zionic optimism will lead us on to continue doing the work necessary to build Zion. There are enough obstacles in the way now without permitting more to be put in our path. Unless we are careful, we will permit false prophets, who promote their ideas of giving all people all their wants under the guise of humanitarian measures, to get a control of government to the extent that it will be harder for us to have the freedom as a group necessary to build Zion.

God has told us to look forward with a determined hope. He has instructed us to keep up our morale and continue to make the fight necessary to progress. In other words he has commanded us to develop zionic optimism. The most pitiable result of the depression is the loss of morale on the part of so many men who could if they only would keep up a fight that would eventually get some results. In my human weakness I have been tempted many times to give up. Perhaps all of us have. It is a hard fight under present conditions but that is the very reason that God gave us faith as the first principle, the very cornerstone of human progress. We should use it. We should put it to work, every day as well as on Sunday. But at the same time this faith or hope should be tempered with the wisdom which recognizes that every doughnut has a hole, and that there are danger spots in our path which must be watched. One of the greatest of these danger spots under present disordered conditions is the frequency with which false prophets are asserting themselves. They appear in the name of religion, politics or economics. May we be divinely alert to recognize all things in their proper place and may we have just enough zionic optimism to proceed in a careful, determined, divinely planned way.

Discipline

Mother made no objection to our visiting the Huntington children until she learned by some means that Allen was in the habit of taking his father's gun out with him when we were over there. Being fearful some accident might happen by which some of us might lose our lives or be crippled, she bade us stay away from the Huntington house, explaining as she did so that she did not think Allen with his rifle a safe companion for little children.

The game was fascinating, however, and I soon wandered over to the Huntington home again. Returning rather late, I was questioned by Mother, and had to admit that I had been out with the boys among the hazel brush, hunting for rabbits, and that Allen had carried the rifle. Thereupon, with the aid of a ready hazel switch, she promptly administered punishment.

But the end was not yet. The next morning she said to Frederick and me—her command being upon me especially, since I was the older—"Joseph, I will not say you must not go to Mrs. Huntington's today, but I will say that if you do go I shall punish you when you return. It is a dangerous thing to play with Allen when he carries the rifle, and I am not going to be responsible for any harm that may come. So just remember what I tell you."

Again, either forgetful or neglectful of the mandate, I ventured into the forbidden region and spent a portion of the day with the Huntington boys in the hazel brush after rabbits, staying late enough in the afternoon to see the little animals at play on the hillside and to hear the crack of the rifle.

When I returned home Mother had company at supper and nothing was said to me about my visit to the Huntingtons; hence I went to bed thinking it had escaped my mother's notice and that I was safe from punishment. However, after the guests departed, I discovered my error, for Mother found me and I received the punishment she had promised, applied vigorously enough to make me feel sorry I had undressed as I went to bed!

When morning came Mother repeated her charge, saying, "I will not say you shall not go to play with the Huntington boys while their mother allows Allen to take his father's gun with him to play; but if you do go, I will punish you; and I shall punish you harder and harder until you stop."

Once more the allure of the pastime seemed stronger than my mother's counsel and her efforts to deter me, and again I went to the Huntington's and spent the day with the boys and their rifle. When I returned my mother punished me with such decidedly increased severity that I—well, comment is needless! I did not go again, for I found that my mother was indeed a woman of her word.

Whether or not George Cleveland and his wife were members of the church at the time we sojourned with them and before Father and Uncle Hyrum reached us there I do not know. It is certain they received the refugees from Missouri with kindly welcome and, so far as Mother and her children were concerned, gave them excellent care. I remember him as a middle-sized man, with a kind face and soft, even voice. I do not remember hearing him speak harshly or exhibit any temper or impatience. His wife was a fine-looking woman, approaching middle age, and well qualified for the cares and labors of a farmer's wife.

The winter passed away and Mother heard from Father at intervals more or less extended, until April 22, 1839, when he and Uncle Hyrum reached Quincy and their waiting families after an escape from the unlawful custody of men who conducted them about from one county to another on an unsigned mittimus.

Commerce

I recall but few incidents of the journey from Quincy to Commerce in Hancock County, some fifty miles up the river. I do remember that we stopped on the way at what I now believe was the Morley settlement near Lima. The record shows that Father and his family left Quincy, May 9, arrived at Commerce the following day, and moved into a log house which is yet standing. This was known as the Hugh White residence and it was from Mr. White that Father purchased it and the farm.

It could not have been long after this that Grandfather Joseph Smith and Grandmother Lucy Smith reached the place and were for a time located nearby. In fact, I remember two places where Grandfather and Grandmother lived. One was a small log house on the west side of the frame attachment to the block house built originally for purposes of safety as well as dwelling—for Indians were still occupying the districts east and west of the Mississippi. The other was but a few rods away, across the main street, and was a double house with a half story above. My memory of dates is so imperfect that I cannot now say just when they occupied these homes. I do remember that he died while they were living in the double log house on the east side of Main Street, on the northwest corner of the block in which the Nauvoo House stands and across Water Street, south, from the Nauvoo Mansion.

With him at the time of his passing were Grandmother and their daughters Sophronia and Lucy, the latter of whom in the summer preceding had become the wife of Arthur Milliken. An incident connected with the event fixes the memory of these in my mind. I was in the habit of running in and out of their place as I did my own home, and was there when the folks were absorbed in grief over his passing. Aunt Lucy found fault with me because I was tearless, and upbraided me, saying I was too hard-hearted to cry. I resented this and denied the accusation. When she asked me if I didn't feel bad about Grandfather's dying I said, "Yes, I do feel bad, for I will miss my grandfather; but you have said he is better off, his sufferings ended, and that he is in heaven where he will have no more pain and trouble. So why should I cry about that? I can't; and I don't see how anyone can!"

It was my first acquaintance with death that I can remember. It was a good many years after that when Grandmother died, and then also, a man grown, I could shed no tears.

Another instance fixes in memory the residence of Grandfather. It occurred one Sunday when the folks were at meeting on the hillside. The house was entered and two dollars, a pair of spectacles, and a Bible were stolen. A young man by the name of Allred, some seventeen or eighteen years old, and a boy some younger were convicted of this theft and Allred paid the penalty by breaking stone upon the road, a ball and chain attached to one of his legs. The burden of our Sunday school teacher's admonishments to his class for some time thereafter was in regard to the wickedness of stealing, holding up as a warning the fate of this young man. I knew Allred quite well and believe that he behaved himself afterwards. He removed in the fall or winter of 1846-7 when "the exodus" took place.

We were comfortably located in our log house. I recall there was a spring nearby from which we obtained our drinking water. It issued out from under the hillside on the bank of the river, not far from a large oak tree which stood for many years after the city was evacuated by the Saints.

The Hugh White farm was a veritable plantation. There were the usual adjuncts of a log smoke house and a log stable, besides the double log house referred to in which Grandfather Smith had lived. Between our house and the water there was on the bank of the river a small log building consisting of one room with a cellar underneath. It had evidently been occupied by someone dependent for work upon the family that had lived in the main building. Not far from the latter and yet within the bounds of the farm there was quite an area of land which was shallow in soil, and covered a loose limestone formation. Though a veritable swamp this land remained for some years as pasturage for our cows.

When Father came to Quincy from his imprisonment in Missouri he brought with him a fine saddle horse—a dark chestnut sorrel stallion, named Medley, which he had obtained from the men who guarded them at the time of their escape. From circumstances which I remember in connection therewith I have reason to believe it had been purchased at a good figure. Whether or not Uncle Hyrum had also secured a horse I cannot now say, but I remember that after the passage of some time, two men came to the house to see Father, one of whom was named John Brassfield. I understood at the time that these men had come for the purpose of collecting the amount of the bribe for which they had allowed the prisoners to escape. I cannot fix this date in memory other than to say it was after the erection of what was called the Red Brick Store, located in the west end of the block on which our house stood.

I remember hearing at the time that the amount of money to be paid these men was eight hundred dollars, and that the horse Father had used was to be replaced by another. I remember the cream-colored or "clay-bank" horse which Father purchased from one Amos Davis for the purpose of turning over to those men from Missouri. They were closeted with Father and one or two others for the afternoon and part of the evening, and departed the next day.

This house into which we moved on reaching Commerce was located about three-quarters of a mile down the river from Commerce Landing, a point where a number of houses, warehouses, and stores had been built. Standing close upon the bank of the river, which at this point ran almost due east, our little house occupied a very handsome site, and was the central habitation of a farm of one hundred and thirty-five acres, purchased, as I have stated, from the "river man" named Hugh White.

The times were busy ones. The winter had not proved, for all its afflictions, too severe for the many Saints who came into the place to secure locations and to build shelters for their families. A period of great activity ensued, and history shows that among the buildings erected at the settlement called Commerce there were three frame houses, one of stone, and two of blocks. This town was located at a point on the river known as Upper Landing, for the reason that at low water in the river the landings further down became impracticable for use.

A little way below Commerce began what was known as the Des Moines Rapids, or "lower rapids." They extended down the river for a distance of twelve miles and ended at Keokuk on the Iowa side. Halfway down from this upper landing stood the residence of Doctor Isaac Galland, a two-story house in excellent condition. A little over a quarter of a mile farther down was the group of houses on the Hugh White farm, among them the one which had become our home. About the same distance still farther down, and east of our home, was the farm of Davidson Hibbard.

I do not remember the names of many of these settlers nor very much of the details of the influx of the Saints, the laying out of the city, and the bustle and confusion attendant thereupon. There existed among the people a community of interest of such a character that with the excellent natural resources of the place, timber in plenty, and friendly help at hand, there was little real suffering. Outside of those afflictions which resulted from the privations to which they had been subjected during the persecutions in Missouri and those they had encountered in their flight from that State in the inclement weather of winter and early spring, those who reached Hancock County were fairly comfortable and happy.

Spring soon brought its ever-recurring hope and promise and, being by nature industrious and by necessity compelled to seek support from the soil, a great deal was done by the settlers that first summer toward making themselves self-sustaining.

In the fall an organization of branch, or stake, or central place of gathering was effected. William Marks was made President and members of a High Council were appointed. Father made arrangements to visit Washington, the capital of the United States, for he, Sidney Rigdon, Elias Higbee, and others were commissioned by a conference of the people to present to Congress the matter of the expulsion of the Saints from Missouri, lay before that body their claims for indemnity, and ask for redress of wrong and remuneration for losses sustained by individuals in the persecutions they had suffered under the exterminating order of Governor Lilburn W. Boggs.

Malaria

It was during Father's absence on this matter of business that the severest trial of the season was put upon my mother. The breaking up of the ground, the exhalations from the swamp, the insufficient supply of good water, and the privations usual to pioneering resulted in an epidemic of malarial fever which took the forms of chills, chill-fever, and ague. Many were ill. I remember that Mother filled her house with the sick who were brought to her from near and far, giving them shelter, treatment, and nursing care. When the house over-flowed she stretched out in the yard east of the house the tent which had served us as a shelter on our journey to Nauvoo.

There were days during this time when our house was thus made into a hospital that there was no one to carry water to the fever-burned patients but myself—then about seven years old. I used to trudge up and down the hill between the house and the spring, carrying a small bucket and making the trip frequently in order that the water might be cool for those who drank of it.

There was among the patients a young fellow by the name of John Huntington, son of Father Huntington who married the widow of Edward Partridge—the Bishop who had died of a broken heart through the persecutions in Missouri. The Huntington family had raised that summer, among other things, some long-necked gourds, sometimes called calabashes. From one of these John had fashioned a drinking cup with a handle, but of course did not bring it with him when he was conveyed, ill, to Mother's "hospital." In the paroxysms of his chills he would lie with his head and body covered, shivering from head to foot. As I brought water to his bedside and offered it to him he snarled out, "Why don't you put the handle in?"

Not understanding, I thought he was out of his head, and since he was such a big, strong fellow, I was a little afraid of him. I called to Mother, busy preparing food and other attentions for the sick. She came and asked what he wanted. When he said he wanted a drink she answered, "Well, Joseph is here with the water; why don't you drink?" At this he again mumbled something about putting the handle in.

Mother took hold of the bed cover and turned it down so she could see his face, and said, "Why, John! What is the matter with you?" He looked a bit sheepish and said, "Oh, I just forgot. I thought I was at home," and then told us about the gourd-dipper. He had bored a hole through the end of the handle in such a way that when they brought him water they would just lift the edge of his cover slightly and push the handle of the gourd in to him. This he would place in his mouth and drink, without having to be uncovered in his chills. It was plausible contrivance and the explanation proved he was in his right mind. We thought his ingenious expedient a good one; the gourd was secured and often used thereafter.

This same John Huntington went west at the general migration of those who followed Brigham Young, but after a time he became disgusted with what he saw and heard there. He returned to northern New York where he had been raised and from whence his family had come first to Missouri and then to Illinois. I met him in Nauvoo on this return journey to the east. He was dressed in rather rough clothing, having tramped with an occasional lift nearly the entire distance from Utah. He had nothing but the clothes he wore, a cup made from a cocoanut shell which hung to the strap with which he was belted, and a common butcher knife. He had one dollar in money, I believe, in addition to the above-named possessions.

The Readers Say---

A Confirming Incident

Let me relate an incident which occurred three years ago, while we were visiting my people in the city of Council Bluffs, Iowa. I am the only member of the church in my family, and as we were waiting for the evening services my people and some friends were asking questions regarding my church. They were trying to trip me, but by the help of the Spirit, the answers came to me freely. Then came the time for us to go to church.

Elder Ray Whiting was preaching a series of sermons. Each Sunday night he announced the topic of his discussion for the next Sunday night. On this particular evening as soon as he arose, he said, "I am going to change my theme tonight, and preach about the church." He then commenced his sermon just where we had left off our discussion at home. He preached with power under the influence of the Spirit. Wonderful peace came to me. Later my brother-in-law remarked, "It was strange that Brother Whiting preached on the very thing we were discussing before we went to church."

Often as I read the good articles in the Herald and the lines of some of our hymns, I feel the influence of the Spirit and I think of the song, "My God, How Wonderful Thou Art."

If we are meek and humble, God will bless us. I am trying as never before to keep his laws. I want to be a loyal, faithful worker in God's church. He cannot bless us if we do not keep his commandments, and I trust that he will let me make up for the years that I have been careless and unconcerned. He brought me back into the fold to see my duty to the church and my fellow men. I pray that my heart will always be right in God's sight. It is my wish to be kind and thoughtful of those about me.

Thankful for the Gospel

Just how could I live without our Saints' Herald? How could I live without our weekly prayer meetings, our sacrament services, our church school and the associations of the Saints? Maybe what I have to say will not be much, but I would like to tell the whole world how thankful I am to God for sending Brother Marcus H. Cook and Elder H. I. Velt and Sister Velt here to show us the gospel.

For eight years I had been Sunday school superintendent of a Methodist Sunday school. I did my best, but felt there was something lacking, and when Brother Velt came and showed his slides and gave lectures and sermons, I knew there was something real in this work. That was in 1931. We were a mission until a year ago, October 29, when we were organized into a branch of forty-five members.

Of our family of eight, I and all six children are members, and we pray daily that our daddy will soon be one of us.

A year ago there were four who went to Silver Lake reunion from here and this year there were ten. We hope to keep on doubling our number each year for they derive so much good from going.

We have an active priesthood here. Although much is being done, the harvest is great and the laborers all too few. We are in need of a church building, as we have been forced to move eight times since becoming a mission in 1931.

When we see prophecies being fulfilled and the conditions of the world in such a state as they now are, how thankful we are that we have a living God whom we can trust to care for us if we do our part!

Above all, I think we should pay our tithes, even though they may be small. Part of the tithing paid into the coffers of the church is used to support the missionary work. Some of the hard-earned tithes helped to bring the word to us here in Willapa.

Again I say, thank God for sending Brother Cook, the good old brother who says "A winner never quits and a quitter never wins." He is still active in the work though past seventy years of age.

May God pour his blessing on those who edit and publish the Herald for it is the source of great strength to a great many of us.

Preaches the Word in West Virginia

I have been preaching here in the home of a sister, and several have attended the services. Some are becoming interested. We have only four members living at this place, and they are eager to have their neighbors hear the restored gospel. I plan to continue here while interest lasts; then I will go to Mount Hope, twelve miles away, where seven members are to be found. I baptized them several years ago. I also baptized the members who live here except one.

We have no one here who holds the priesthood, but Elder Wayne Wilson lives near Charleston, West Virginia, about seventy-five miles away. He comes every other Sunday and holds services. He is a great help to the members.

I had the privilege of being associated with Brother Wilson in a service here last Sunday, and he is truly a man of God. His soul is filled with love for his work, and he is willing to make any sacrifice for the cause. May God bless him and his efforts here.

Counts Her Blessings

My blessings have been many in times of sickness and in the routine of every-day life.

Several years ago it was made very plain to me in a dream that if this little branch carried on, the responsibility rested upon me. I made a promise to my heavenly Father, that I would do the best I could and that I would always seek his aid. At that time it seemed as if the general church had forgotten us; we had no contact with it through missionaries or priesthood.

God has been good to us, and though there were many trials and discouragements, I knew that this was His work and I recognized my responsibility. On a recent Sunday at Myrtle Point, I received a wonderful blessing of the Spirit through our district president. I had been released from the office of director of religious education the evening before, and felt as though I had received an honorable discharge.

Though I still have duties to perform and work to do, they have been lightened as my health is not very good. I thank God for his goodness to me.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Who are meant in the Bible by the term "lost sheep of the house of Israel"?

In Genesis 32:28 the patriarch Jacob is called Israel. This term afterward was applied to the twelve tribes that descended from him and grew into a nation, but when Solomon's son, Rehoboam, oppressed them, ten of the tribes revolted and established a separate kingdom called the kingdom of Israel, as distinguished from the kingdom of Judah which remained under the rulership of Rehoboam. After the return from captivity in Babylon, however, the name Israel was again given to all of the tribes which united into one Jewish kingdom, and also applied to portions of Israel that were still scattered abroad.

Jesus referred to those of Israel who had strayed from the ways of God as "lost sheep," hence the lost sheep of the house of Israel were those who were wandering in the wilderness of sin and spiritual darkness. Not only was Jesus sent specifically to Israel, who were in the ways of error, but he said of his own personal ministry:

"I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel."—Matthew 15: 24.

During the time of his ministry on earth Jesus preached and addressed his message to the Israelites—the Jews, and when he commissioned and sent out his apostles, he directed them to do likewise, saying:

"Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."—Matthew 10: 5, 6.

After the crucifixion of Jesus, when the Jews had rejected his mission, Paul said to the Israelites:

"It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, . . . lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us."—Acts 13: 46, 47.

Explain Doctrine and Covenants 3: 16.

This paragraph contains an explanation of what is required of those who compose the Lord's church. It is an abbreviated or synoptical statement which condenses into a few words the essential principle of Christian doctrine. It states:

"Behold, this is my doctrine: Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declar-eth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore he is not of my church."

The Scriptures elsewhere explain what it means to repent and come unto Christ: it is to reform and turn from sin, and to obey in faith the commands of the Lord. To require less than this is to show contempt for the divine teachings, and to require more than this is to set up commands not authorized of God. Those who do this are not faithfully representing him, and therefore they are not of his church in the true sense or meaning of that term, though they may outwardly call themselves by his name.

Does Doctrine and Covenants 116: 1, and 4, concerning ordinations, conflict?

Paragraph 1 says priests are to be ordained of every race who receive the law and become heirs according to the promise. Paragraph 2 warns the church to "be ye very careful," for many who were ordained did not perform their duties and were under condemnation. Paragraph 4 warns against haste in ordaining men of the Negro race, as all are not acceptable, though some are chosen instruments to minister to their own race. So far as I can discern, there is no conflict in this section, but rather there is well ordered harmony in the purport of the instructions there given. For years men have been ordained of various races, and doubtless the intent has been to comply with all of these provisions.

Did Jesus visit the people here before, or after his ascension?

The Book of Mormon (631: 74) states that Jesus ministered to the Nephites and Lamanites on this continent "soon after the ascension" into heaven.

Puyallup, Washington

Under the leadership of the newly-elected branch president, Elder Pearl Reed, and his assistant, Elder Clarence Wheeler, this branch is attempting to revive activities that suffered during the berry and cannery season, important industries in Puyallup Valley. The season was unusually long this summer, beginning a month sooner than normal.

Brother Reed fills the vacancy made in the branch presidency when Elder Lester W. Bronson, who held the office for several years, moved with his family to southern Missouri.

Sister Ruby Wheeler has been elected to act as church school director, succeeding her father. She will have more time to devote to the interests of this work, and a year of accomplishment is looked forward to.

The young people have for their new leader, Everett Miller, who recently moved to Puyallup from Tacoma Branch. He will also have charge of the work of deacon and will act as branch secretary.

The activities of the adult department will continue under the leadership of Charles Hufferd. Sister Leah Hufferd will have charge of music, and Claude Wheeler has been sustained as bishop's agent.

The women's department, under the direction of Sister Laura Reed, held a special meeting to map out a course of work for the coming year, and it is expected that this department will take on new life and accomplishment.

During the Western Washington Fair, held in September each year, Sister Reed with the help of a few of the sisters, operated a hamburger stand across the street from the fairgrounds, and realized some profit from the venture.

Elder Clifford Wilcox and family, from Seattle, visited Puyallup October 28, and as is often the case when an elder visits another branch, Brother Wilcox was pressed into service as the morning speaker.

A short time ago the men folks swooped down upon the store building in which this branch has been meeting since their church building was torn down to make way for a service station, and under the supervision of Brother Lyle soon transformed what at best was far short of a satisfactory place of worship into a comfortable and attractive chapel where the members may now proudly invite their friends to worship with them and are not ashamed to ask God to meet with them.

Los Angeles, California

East Los Angeles Church

Dedication services were held at East Los Angeles October 7. The branch was organized March 4, 1920, with forty-seven charter members, and has increased to two hundred twenty-eight members.

For weeks past the Saints had been making preparations for the dedication. They wished to make both the interior and exterior of their building as attractive as possible. New carpets and drapes were added to the main auditorium and floor coverings and window decorations in the annex. Shrubs helped to beautify the grounds. Also the Saints endeavored to prepare themselves in a spiritual way, that they might be acceptable to God. The Wednesday evening prayer service preceding the dedication was devoted to that cause.

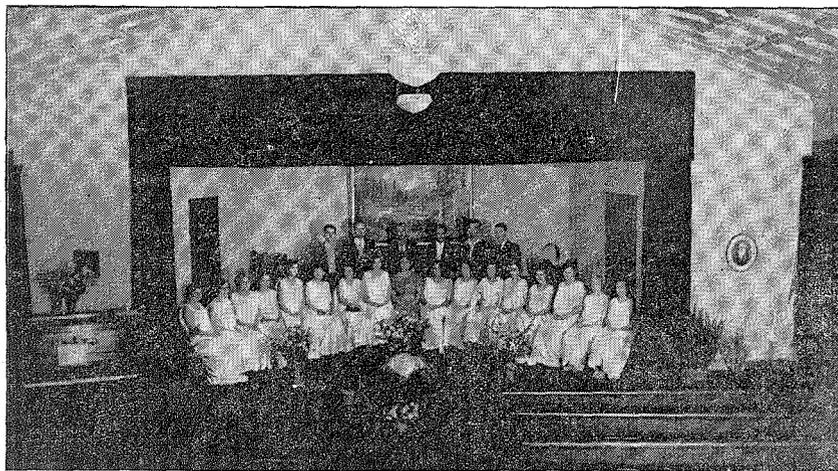

The dedication program began Saturday evening with a historical session.

teen. Apostle E. J. Gleazer gave the exhortation. "Dedicating Our Living Temples" was the theme, and the Spirit was present to a marked degree.

At nine-forty-five the church school opened with a fitting program. Before the class period Brother Holmes offered a prayer of dedication. This service quietly merged into the sacrament meeting. During the period of meditation a mixed quartet, Sisters Senne Clayton, Millie Johnson, and Brothers Rex Clayton and James Farley, sang "Redeemer of Israel," then Brother Sutherland offered prayer. Apostle Gleazer gave the admonition, and during the serving of the emblems the mixed quartet sang "Here at Thy Table, Lord, We Meet," and the male quartet sang "Nearer My God to Thee."

At noon luncheon was served to a large number.

The dedicatory services opened at 2 p. m. with a selection from the orchestra after which the congregation sang "Re-

East Los Angeles Choir which assisted in the branch dedication services October 7.

Opening remarks were made by Pastor L. L. Sutherland. The original petition was read by Sister Hannah Farley after which Sister Anna Jasper told of the construction of the building. V. L. Lum, pastor at the time of organization, related the history. Sister Senne Clayton read the statistical report. Music was furnished by the choir, orchestra, and male quartet.

The young people met in prayer service, in charge of Glen Holmes and Rex Clayton, Sunday morning at eight-fifteen, and W. A. Teagarden, district president offered prayer: Wallace Farley sang "Open the Gates of the Temple." Apostle Gleazer delivered the dedicatory sermon, and the choir sang "I Do Not Ask." The pastor presented the property to Bishop Carmichael who, in turn, gave the key to the deacon, Earl Clayton.

At 7 p. m. the choir gave the cantata, "Jairus' Daughter," Joseph Farley directing.

Apostle Gleazer preached at eight o'clock on the text: "When thou art converted, strengthen the brethren." Sister Sarah Bender sang "Thanks Be to God," and there was a duet by Velma Stuart and Bessie Farley. The closing was very effective and peaceful as the male quartet sang "Abide With Me," and the lights were turned low as the last strains were sung.

Seattle and British Columbia District

The past year has been outstanding in Seattle and British Columbia District. The members seem to be more willing to cooperate in the work of the Master, and are exercising brotherly love. The Lord has seen fit to bless his people in remarkable ways.

A strong factor in bringing about unity has been the visits of a number of general church officers to this district, President F. M. Smith, President Elbert A. Smith, and Apostles F. Henry Edwards, M. A. McConley, and E. J. Gleazer. From them the Saints gained new courage and understanding. It is to be remembered that since Elder A. C. Martin was taken from district service, there has been no missionary under conference appointment. Yet Seattle Branch gained by the district's loss, and has chosen Brother Martin as director of religious education. He is doing a good work in that department.

Elder M. H. Cook helps in the district, preaching to and encouraging the members.

Seattle and British Columbia members have missed Brother and Sister M. A. McConley since they left the district. Brother McConley was assigned to mission work in the southern States.

This district now has seven missions. Eighty-two sermons were preached in the mission at Vancouver during the last year. Five Bible classes reached out for nonmembers as well as Saints.

Much credit is due Apostle Gleazer in the missionary work of this district. He wants to see the priesthood busy in that work and so continually instructs them.

Spiritual District Conference

A spiritual feast was experienced during the district conference held October 12 to 14. Almost all of the branches were represented. This was the first time the conference had been held outside of the reunion in many years, and the workers think it was highly successful.

Activities opened with a banquet for the priesthood and their wives. "Our Co-ministry," the theme, was effectively carried out, District President Monte E. Lasater, toastmaster. A meal of roast turkey and all accompanying dishes pleased the guests, Sister Root in charge of preparing and serving the food. The speakers after the meal were the pastors of each branch, then the oldest and youngest in the priesthood. H. F. Holman, a charter member of both districts and of Seattle Branch, spoke. The youngest at the banquet was Dwight Davis who promises a good service for the church. Sister Clark Coleman spoke on "The Relation of the Minister's Wife to the Priesthood." Brother Gleazer spoke on "Consider it a Little Thing."

Saturday morning the day started with a prayer meeting in charge of Elder Alma Johnson, and was wonderfully well attended. Brother Gleazer was the speaker at eleven o'clock and also in the afternoon.

The business meeting was held Saturday at 7 p. m., and the following officers were chosen: District president, Monte E. Lasater; counselors, Dwight Davis and George E. Miller; director of religious education, Dwight Davis; secretary, Florence Earl; treasurer, Frank Holmes, and director of music, Austin Earl.

Sunday also opened with a prayer service, Apostle Gleazer and the district president in charge. At 10 a. m. they held an institute, and instructors were: Monte E. Lasater, speaking on "Our Pastoral Ministry"; Dwight Davis, "Our Educational Ministry"; L. R. White, bishop's agent, "Our Financial Ministry," and Brother Gleazer, "Our Missionary Ministry."

An ordination service was held at 2 p. m., Edwin Spargo, of Vancouver being ordained to the office of elder. The other six brothers called will be ordained in their respective branches. Those whose names were approved for ordination by the conference were: Edwin Spargo, Vancouver, elder; Charles Stanbridge, Vancouver, deacon; Oliver Ralsten, Willapa, priest; Henry Hall, Willapa, priest; Russell Eyer, teacher; George E. Johnson, teacher; Floyd Brose, deacon.

The conference ended with a sermon by Apostle Gleazer. The Saints now go forward into a new season of labor. It is their aim to open more missions and baptize more people.

Bisbee, Arizona

Bisbee enjoyed a spiritual feast in the visit of Elder Arthur Oakman, October 13 and 14. Election of branch officers was held, and he took charge of the meeting. Those chosen are: Branch President, T. R. Davis; clerk, Haywood Cunningham; treasurer, R. F. Ratterree; musical director, Elora Puckett, and church school director, Haywood Cunningham.

Later in the evening Brother Oakman gave an informal talk which was most timely.

Sunday a special communion service was held, Brother Oakman in charge, assisted by the branch presidents of Bisbee, Douglas, and Tucson. The gift of prophecy was manifested to a marked degree. Brother U. S. Ratterree was called to the office of deacon by Brother Oakman.

The preaching was of high order, and the Saints sensed the spirit of all the services.

Wednesday and Thursday part of the Bisbee members motored to Douglas to hear Brother Oakman. Friday, Saturday and Sunday Sister Simpson, Brother Corley, pastor of Douglas Branch, his daughter, and Louise Davis and T. R. Davis, of Bisbee, motored to Phoenix to attend services for the week-end. All were greatly helped and came home determined to do their best to assist in the work.

Bisbee and Douglas branches have agreed to meet once a month to study the Priesthood Journal. Brother Puckett baptized his youngest son the twenty-first in the Douglas font.

The visit of Brother Oakman has put new life into this branch.

Midland District, England

The Saints of this district gathered at Birmingham for their annual conference September 29 and 30. Four general church appointees were there, Apostle J. W. Rushton, Bishop A. T. Trapp, Elder F. O. Davies, and Pastor Peter S. Whaley, also Saints from Southern District, and from Wales. These assembled in good time for the commencement of the business session Saturday evening which included the election of officers. The officers for the year are: District president, Elder Joseph Holmes; counselors, Elder W. Bailey and Elder P. S. Whalley; director of religious education, Elder W. Bailey; secretary, Sister E. Norton; treasurer, G. W. Rallings; auditors, A. Shaw and E. Wragg; director of music, Sister G. Allen.

The recommendations for the ordination of A. Trenam, of Sutton-in-Ashfield, to the office of elder, and W. R. Arrow-smith, of Birmingham, deacon, were approved by the conference.

All visitors to the conference were accommodated by Birmingham members for the night.

The opening session of Sunday was a prayer service characterized by a splendid spirit, Elders F. O. Davies and J. F. Schofield in charge.

Apostle Rushton was the morning speaker, and musical items were given by the Birmingham Choir.

All meals were served in the school room by Birmingham workers.

Sunday afternoon four lectures were given. Sister G. Allen spoke on "Amphion," Sister A. Holmes on "Helps to Public Speaking," Elder F. O. Davies on "Missionary Experiences in Ireland," and Apostle J. W. Rushton on "Helps to Ministerial Success." This service was a departure from the usual conference procedure, and it proved successful, the classes being well attended especially by the young people. At 4 p. m. Brother Rushton met the priesthood.

Before the opening of the evening service Elder F. O. Davies met the young people with a view to organizing a young people's convention in the district, and all were enthusiastic at the idea.

Apostle Rushton preached another inspiring sermon in the evening, and this service was the concluding conference event.

North East Manchester Branch, England, Has Harvest Festival

An outstanding day of thanksgiving and service was enjoyed at James Street Church, September 30, when members and friends of the congregation expressed their gratitude for the season's blessings in a gorgeous display of choice fruits, vegetables, and flowers.

At the 10:45 a. m. service congregation and choir mingled their voices in such appropriate hymns as "Praise Ye the Lord," and "Heaven and Earth and Sea and Air." The choir sang the call to worship, "Lord, Thou Art Good; All Nature Shows." The young people's choir gave a special number, "We Plough the Fields." The morning Scripture lesson was chosen from the Book of Psalms.

The first speaker was Brother Anderson, and this was his maiden effort. Sister Hayward sang a solo, "Gather the Golden Grain." Then Brother Curtis Bancroft spoke, and the service closed with a hymn by the congregation and the benediction.

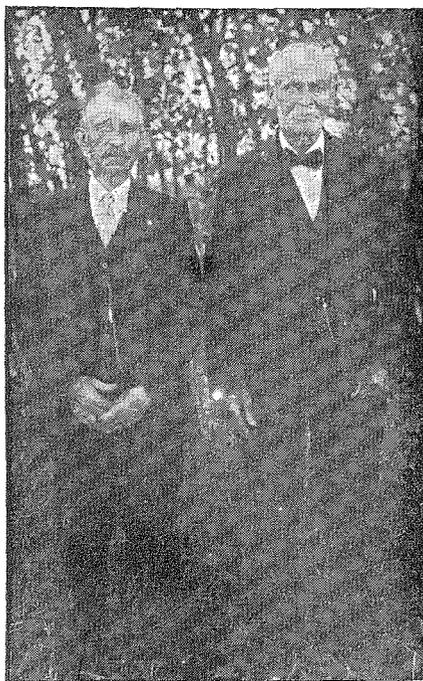

The afternoon service in charge of Harold Barrington, supervisor of religious education, was also characterized by the spirit of praise. The call to worship was Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2, then after the formal opening of congregational hymn, prayer, and the chanting of the Lord's Prayer, the pupils of the school gave an impressive musical number. Sister May Holden read from the Bible Genesis 8:15-22, and John Schofield sang, "We'll Talk It Over Again." The consecration of the offering was by George Wilson, and the children sang "Forth to the Harvest Fields," Miss May Holden directing. Charles Leggott was the first speaker then John Holden sang "Gathering the Harvest Home." J. Schofield, jr., talked on the text, "Six years shalt thou work the land, and the seventh year thou shalt let it rest."

At the evening service, in charge of Pastor G. W. Leggott, the speakers were Thomas Brien, jr., and Cyril Chorlton whose address summarized the day's services and messages. The choir again contributed music, singing the call to worship, "God Is Love, the Earth Proclaims It," and "Now Thank We All Our God." There were solos by Sister May Holden and Sister Edith Noble.

On Monday evening, October 8, the banquet and social were enjoyed and the sale of the fruit and other products realized the sum of £8:10:0. This whole amount was turned over to the Lord Mayor of Manchester's fund for the victims of the Gresham Colliery disaster in North Wales. This calamity to the community near Wrexham which occurred a few days ago, cost over two hundred and seventy lives. The Saints joined in sympathy and help for the bereaved families.

Two Church Veterans

J. H. STRATTON AND J. J. CORNISH

Brother J. H. Stratton, of Kansas City, has been visiting Elder J. J. Cornish at Senlac, Saskatchewan, this fall. He is the first person Elder Cornish baptized, his first convert. Brother Stratton was nineteen years old when he was baptized into the church, and Elder Cornish was a minister twenty-one years of age. Elder Cornish was eighty-two years old October 17, and Brother Stratton will be eighty soon.

Revival at Melbourne, Australia

The capital city of Victoria, Melbourne, is about to celebrate its centenary, and on this auspicious occasion the third son of the King of England, the Duke of Gloucester, will be the representative of the king and the principal guest.

The opportunity has been given the Saints while there are so many visitors coming to the city, to stage a revival of the work. The week preceding their annual conference will be filled by the young people's convention. This will be in session for an entire week when the centenary celebrations are in full swing.

Apostle G. G. Lewis will come from New South Wales during the conference period.

For some time past Melbourne Saints have had the pleasure of instructive visits from Elder A. J. Corbett, also from New South Wales. His sermons and lectures are edifying.

Sister Myra Craig, eldest daughter of the late Patriarch John T. Gresty, passed away July 15, after many years of suffering. The hand of the reaper has been busy in this part of the vineyard. Since the September conference, six members have been called home.

The pastor of Melbourne Branch is a young man, Elder E. A. Davies, the eldest son of Elder E. H. Davies, missionary and pastor in Western Australia. He is endeavoring to push the local work under great difficulties, having confidence in the One whose work it is.

Davidson, Oklahoma

Davidson Saints assembled September 26 for election of officers and chose the following: Branch president, Z. Z. Renfro; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Hood; music director, Mrs. Troy Parker; church school director, Mrs. Garland Ridings. On September 30, an impressive installation of officers was held.

Four new members were added to the church when the pastor baptized Oscar Sumners, of Lubbock, Texas; Mr. Payne, Eldon Qualls, and Jimmie Renfro.

Social activities have included a wiener roast given at Rock Crossing, and a handkerchief shower given Mrs. Ben Simmons.

Miss Ruth Carrow, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Carrow, of Wichita Falls, Texas, and Clyde Johnson were united in marriage October 20, at the home of Z. Z. Renfro.

Davidson Saints were sorry to learn of the accident which injured Ben Simmons. He is in King's Hospital at Vernon, Texas.

Grand Rapids, Michigan

Grand Rapids homecoming, September 29 and 30, opened with a sermon by the district president, A. C. Barmore. The young people met at eight o'clock on Sunday morning for a prayer service, Brothers Floyd La Lone and Murrill Champion in charge. Two inspiring sermons were preached by A. C. Barmore during the celebration, and on Sunday afternoon a friendship meeting was held during which letters were read from former members. Messages came from all parts of the United States.

President Elbert A. Smith visited this congregation, September 10 and 11, and preached two wonderful sermons.

October 14 Apostle D. T. Williams was

Briefs

Pasco, Washington, members have had a busy year, and now are settling into an active, helpful winter program. Though few in number, they are endeavoring to do their bit for Christ. Recent events include the election of officers, a social the second Friday of each month, and sacrament each first Sunday of the month. God has blessed their efforts with his Spirit and with real fellowship.

Elder C. E. Wight's Question and Answers radio program every Sunday morning from seven-thirty to eight o'clock over KMBC is arousing considerable interest. Since the programs began several weeks ago, Brother Wight has covered in a general way the growth of the Bible, and now he expects to analyze the various teachings of Christ and others with a view to attaining the fundamentals of religious life. While it is his plan to answer letters and questions from the radio listeners, he is attempting a certain continuity in the broadcast. All listeners are invited and urged to send in questions. These will be answered as soon as the program's continuity permits.

Northwestern Iowa district priesthood enjoyed an all-day meeting at Woodbine, Sunday, October 14, District President Gerald A. Gunsolley and Apostle John F. Garver directing. Nearly every member of the priesthood attended the gathering, and services in most of the other branches were dismissed for the day. There was a meeting for the priesthood in the church basement at 9:45 a. m., while other members attended church school on the floor above. Apostle Garver preached to the entire group at 11 a. m. and at 2 p. m.

Apostle R. S. Budd visited Davidson, Oklahoma, in September and preached a series of inspiring sermons to the Saints of that branch. Since his visit attendance has steadily increased at all services and especially at the Wednesday evening prayer meetings.

Missionary Howard Harpham conducted a series of meetings at Dow City, Iowa, in September, and returned October 14, for a baptismal service when five were added to the church. The service was held in the evening, and made beautiful by flower and foliage decorations and by appropriate music. Visitors were present from DeLoit, Dunlap, Missouri Valley and Council Bluffs.

The confirmation service was held the following Sunday at 11 a. m., and the new members recorded are Mrs. Iven Clothier, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Argotsinger, Merrill Chambers, and Robert Binnall.

here and preached the Sunday evening sermon.

In the midst of local rejoicing and progress, the Saints were grief stricken by the death of Elder Alexander La Lone by a train accident. Apostle Williams preached the funeral sermon, assisted by E. C. Evans.

Zion's Christian Legion of the branch is growing in numbers, and the members are progressing intellectually and spiritually. Grand Rapids has a nice group of young people who are showing real interest in the Book of Mormon under the leadership of Sister Sylvia McKenzie, teacher. She has spent much time studying not only the book itself, but also the works of various archaeologists and explorers of the South American continent. Plans are being made for other studies for winter months.

Social activities are not being neglected. The summer was crowded with swimming parties, roasts, and entertainments of various kinds. The winter months will bring such activities as sleigh rides, skating parties, and indoor frolics.

One young people's prayer meeting is held each month. This group also met at the church a short time ago and cleaned the interior of the church building.

Douglas, Arizona

On Sunday, October 14, several families of Douglas Saints motored to Bisbee, where they partook of the sacrament and enjoyed the services of the day and evening and a picnic lunch at noon.

Elders Arthur Oakman, pastor of San Francisco Branch, and Amos Berve, pastor of Tucson, Arizona, Branch, were present.

During the morning service, which was of a highly spiritual nature, several were spoken to by the Spirit, Elder Oakman exercising the gift of prophecy. U. S. Ratterree was called to the office of deacon, and it is expected he will be ordained to this office at an early date.

On the following Wednesday and Thursday evenings Elder Oakman occupied at Douglas Branch, speaking to a good number of Saints and their friends. Pastor T. R. Davis, of Bisbee, and a few others were also present, motoring down from Bisbee for the occasion.

Under the superintendency of J. W. Taylor, attendance at Sunday school has improved. With the return of Sister Lillian Simpson from her vacation in Chicago and on the coast, the young people have again taken up their orchestra work which is proving a splendid help to the services.

On October 30, the Sunday school held a halloween party for the entertainment of the young people.

In spite of the depression and the unemployment of some local Saints, they have paid for a new roof put on a little over a year ago, furnished new screens for windows and doors, purchased a number of the Hymnals for the betterment of the services, and are glad to state that the branch is now out of debt. Further improvements are contemplated in the near future.

On Sunday, October 21, Harold O. Puckett, the eight-year-old son of Perry O. Puckett, of Bisbee, was baptized at a special baptismal service held at 3 p. m., and confirmed at the same service.

Houghton Lake, Michigan

This little branch was encouraged by the association of District President Hubert Case and wife who arrived October 18, in time to participate in the meeting of the women's department that afternoon. Both spoke to the workers, giving instruction and help.

Preaching services were held at the church Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday brought an all-day meeting well attended by home Saints as well as by some members from Gladwin and West Branch.

A priesthood meeting at 8 a. m. opened the day's activities, followed by a two-hour prayer meeting. At the preaching hour Brother and Sister Case favored the congregation with a duet in the Tahitian language. Basket dinner was served cafeteria style at noon.

Two preaching services came in the afternoon, also a round-table talk. In the evening another fine sermon was heard.

In midafternoon Brother and Sister Case left to attend an ordination service at Midland. The workers hope and pray that everyone who sat under the sound of Brother Case's voice will heed the instruction and counsel he gave.

Warren, Ohio

This little branch is growing numerically and spiritually. On October 7, Priest Elmer Fishel baptized six into the kingdom, and that evening about fourteen local members and the candidates went to Sharon, Pennsylvania, where Elder David Jones confirmed those who had just been baptized.

The branch and church school held election of officers September 30. C. C. Marvin was chosen president and treasurer; Sister Ecker, branch clerk, chorister, and pianist, Sister Mabel Baldwin to assist in the last two positions. Harvey Ecker is bishop's agent, also director of church school. Assisting him is a group of willing and diligent helpers.

Recently the Saints have been fortunate in having ministerial help on Sunday. Elder Leon Burdick was there October 14, preaching a good sermon, Elder Earl Curry came October 21. Elder David Jones, of Sharon, Pennsylvania assisted Brother Burdick, and Brother Black, of Kirtland, assisted Brother Curry. Always the Saints of this branch are glad when one of God's servants stops to preach.

October 27, Elder David Jones, of Sharon preached a sermon for the children on "The Restoration of the Church."

San Jose, California

San Jose Branch began the new church year in dead earnest. On the second Sunday of the month, October 14, the pastor scheduled an all-day meeting which consisted of church school at 9:45 a. m., preaching service by the pastor at 11 a. m., and a basket lunch in the church at twelve-thirty. After an excellent lunch and an hour of sociality, a beautiful vesper service was presided over by the pastor's wife. This service was well received and was a real worship program. This completed a full day of desirable worship and spiritual uplifting, after which the pastor with his wife drove to Berkeley and preached at the evening service.

San Jose Branch unanimously elected Myron Reed Schall to be their pastor throughout the coming church year. Brother Roy Harris, the retiring pastor, was the first one on his feet to voice the nomination, and it was cleared from the table of business without hesitancy.

Brother Schall was called to the Melchisedec priesthood during the Irvington reunion of Northern California by Apostle E. J. Gleazer. It was at this reunion that Brother Schall, then a priest, baptized his wife, Elizabeth. The Saints of San Jose Branch know that in Sister Schall the pastor has an intelligent, willing, and qualified helper—a true and efficient counselor. Sister Schall is the children's supervisor and director of the junior church service.

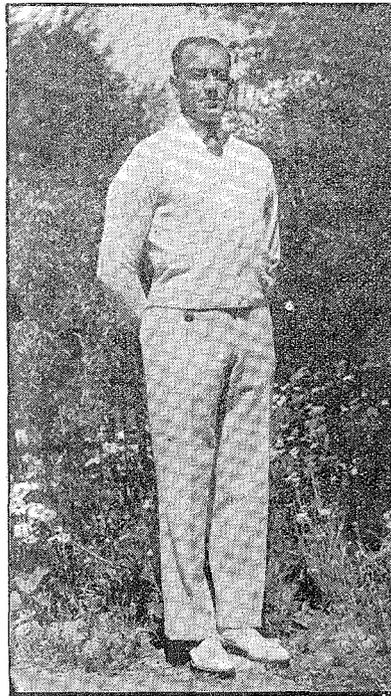

Some of the projects in which the branch is vitally interested are their Christmas Offering, the regular monthly payment of their district fund, their building fund, and a drive for the new Saints' Hymnals. For their Christmas Offering, they have a beautiful Christmas package all tied up in bright red cellophane and wide silvery ribbon. It is prepared as one would prepare a gift package for a beloved friend, but it is really a box through the top of which is a coin slot and it is appropriately addressed to "Jesus." It has on it the usual admonition of "Do not open until Christmas," and accompanying it is a poster sign which reads, "Christmas Offering"—"What you deposit here is a constant expression of your love for the addressee."—"Have you left aught for Jesus?" The poster also has Christmas ideas of camels and wise men, the Christ Child's picture, and stars artistically arranged upon it.

They also have a poster upon which is suitable data concerning the district fund. A small bank accompanies the poster, and the Saints have thus far collected in pennies, dimes, and other silver offerings more than enough to meet the monthly payments.

The branch started a building fund at the reunion by selling a small chart of "Keep Fit" physical exercises for all, ordered and written by Brother Schall. They also sold recipes of good things to eat, samples of which were freely given. And then there were fancy needlework pieces, and penny peep shows. Throughout the reunion over thirty dollars was raised in this manner. San Jose hopes soon to have a needed addition to their church for a children's church school, the attendance of which is most of the time larger than the adult attendance.

The branch will shortly have the new Saints' Hymnals in their church. The list of volunteer names is nearly completed, and all are anxiously waiting to welcome the new songs and books. They have revived choir practice, and have in the person of Sister Lena Willis, a capable, qualified, and willing choir director.

Pastor Schall lives at Palo Alto, the home of Stanford University. He, with his family of six, including his mother, drives each Sunday to San Jose, a distance of twenty miles. Wednesday evenings call for a repetition of this trip by Brother and Sister Schall in order that the prayer service might be presided over by the pastor.

Sister Elizabeth Enfinger, 705 Evergreen Street, Brewton, Alabama, desires to be remembered with fasting and prayer, that she may be healed of a tumor in her throat. This has caused her severe suffering for two years.

Brother and Sister Harry Steede, 710 East Lake Avenue, Ladysmith, Wisconsin, open their home each Sunday to a little Sunday school. There are thirteen Latter Day Saints living in that community, and sometimes they have six or eight nonmembers present. They are striving to overcome all obstacles and carry the church forward.

Sister Steede asks missionaries traveling around Huntingburg, Indiana, to visit Mr. and Mrs. Gus A. Ahrens to see if missionary work can be done in that neighborhood. Sister Ahrens is a Saint isolated for several years.

Little Daughters of Service Class, Pittsburg, Kansas, found God by observing his wonderful works in nature in an unusual worship service early Sunday morning, October 14. Following the service, breakfast was served to twelve members. Maurine Jones is leader of this intermediate group.

Elder O. W. Okerlind, missionary, has been holding services at the home of James Mogenson, near Vanscoy, Saskatchewan. Nearly one hundred were present to hear him October 9, and after the preaching, a social program honored the sixty-sixth birthday anniversary of J. Mogenson. Friends were present from Saskatoon, Vanscoy, and Delisle.

Calumet Branch, Oklahoma, has adopted the plan of the general church, beginning the church year with the month of October. They now hold their annual business meetings in each department in September.

Beginning with the new church year, the women's auxiliary took on new life. The president and her assistants introduced a contest which is increasing interest, attendance, enthusiasm and work.

Cloyne, Ontario, members have been greatly helped by a visit from Elder James Pycock and Priest A. E. Northey. An impressive baptismal service was held October 28 at 11 a. m., when Pete Lloyd, Hilda Lloyd, Jack Lloyd, and Mr. and Mrs. Montie Spicer were inducted into the kingdom. The candidates were confirmed at two o'clock, and Imda Lloyd and Rena Spicer were blessed by Brother Pycock. Mrs. Pete Lloyd was administered to by Brother Pycock.

Saints of this community desire the prayers of the church that Sister Lloyd may be healed.

Independence

Gospel services are being conducted at Walnut Park Church, Pearl and Alton Streets, November 11 to 25, Elder John F. Sheehy, the speaker. Everyone is invited to attend. Services begin at seven-thirty.

Stone Church

An impressive ordination service was held at the eleven o'clock hour Sunday morning when three men of the local congregation, were set apart by the ordination of the laying on of hands, to offices in which they have been called to serve the church. Elder J. E. Kelsey was ordained a high priest by President Elbert A. Smith and Apostle F. Henry Edwards. A. B. Taylor was ordained an elder by Apostle Edwards and Pastor J. F. Sheehy, and Guinn Bronson, a priest, by Pastor Sheehy and Elder H. G. Barto.

Preceding this ordinance President Elbert A. Smith spoke on priesthood authority, responsibility, and duty, and read from Isaiah 55: 4 and Doctrine and Covenants 1: 8. The Scripture reading for the service was read by Pastor Sheehy from Saint Matthew, John, and the letter to the Ephesians.

Stone Church Choir and the congregation participated in the music of the service. The choir sang the anthem, "The Comforter," by Custance, and such hymns as "Praise the Savior, All Ye Nations," "Lord, Speak to Me, That I May Speak," "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," and "God Is Marshaling His Army," enhanced the service.

Armistice Day was remembered at the evening services with music by the Chamber of Commerce Glee Club, led by Paul N. Craig, and accompanied by Robert Miller. They sang "Prayer of Thanksgiving," "Lead, Kindly Light," a modern arrangement by Dudley Buck, "My Creed," and "Praise Ye the Lord." Mrs. Hazel Withee contributed two organ numbers, and Elder Leonard Lea gave an address, "The Voice of Peace." Then members of the White Masque Players gave the one-act play, "The Window," Mrs. Jo Zelma Taylor directing.

A marriage of interest to the people of Independence, and especially those of the Stone Church congregation, was solemnized at the Stone Church the evening of November 6, when Miss Opal Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Williams, of Independence, became the bride of Walter Earl Page. Pastor John F. Sheehy officiated, assisted by President F. M. McDowell and Elder T. A. Beck. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Leona Williams, maid of honor, and by Mrs. Paul Carpenter and Mrs. Morris Roedell, bridesmaids. Paul Page acted as best man for his brother, and groomsmen were Almer Sheehy and Earl Higdon. A reception followed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Flanders. Mr. and Mrs. Page are making their home in Independence. Mr. Page is a teacher at William Chrisman High School, and is the director of religious education for the Saints' congregations in the city. The bride for the past five years has been a cashier at the Jackson County Light, Heat and Power Company.

Saints of this congregation have been called upon to mourn recently over the passing of beloved members and workers. Sister Margaret Sarah Curtis, wife of Apostle J. F. Curtis, passed away at her home, November 7, after a long illness. Her funeral was held from the Stone Church Friday afternoon. Sister Curtis was sixty-five years old, and she leaves her husband, three daughters, two sons, two sisters, one brother, and other friends.

The funeral of Elder George E. Harrington, seventy-five years of age, was held at the Stone Church Sunday at three-thirty in the afternoon. Brother Harrington died at midnight Friday at the home of his son, Doctor G. Leonard Harrington, in Independence, after a serious illness of several weeks' duration. He was born in London, England, in 1859, and had lived in Independence fifty years. For many years he served as minister and missionary of the church. He leaves three sons, one daughter, three sisters, three brothers, eight grandchildren, three great-grandchildren, and a host of friends in many parts of the church.

The funeral of Sister Mary Isabelle Hale, sixty-seven, wife of Jacob Hale, of Independence, was also held at the Stone Church Sunday, beginning at 1 p. m. She had been in poor health some time, and died November 8. Her husband, one brother, and other relatives and friends survive her.

Second Church

The girls' chorus, directed by Mrs. Leslie Sellers, sang a number at the church school worship hour in charge of Roy Settles, and the piano prelude was by Geraldine Fields.

Elder Will Grubb was the eleven o'clock speaker, and a quartet sang "An Erring Child." The choir also furnished a number.

Downstairs Roy Settles spoke to the junior church congregation, and a story contest was held between Billy Campbell and Edgar Moore. Edgar won first place. Nadine Inman sang two songs.

Sunday afternoon at two-thirty a baptismal service was held in the basement. The two candidates were Mary Potter and Mrs. Jewell Waterfield. They were confirmed by Elders A. W. Whiting and C. E. Blodgett.

The Doctrine and Covenants Class, taught by Brother Albert Carmichael, is well attended.

Elder C. I. Carpenter was the Sunday evening speaker, and his text was "There is a God." Special music was furnished by a ladies' trio.

Enoch Hill Church

The Wednesday evening prayer service last week of Group 32 was held at the home of Brother and Sister Claud Beal. After the service, the group welcomed Brother and Sister Beal and family into their midst. Brother C. S. Warren spoke for the group; Sister Jones represented the music department; Sister Esther Kramer, the neighborhood, and Frederick Young played two piano numbers representing the young people.

On Thursday at the women's meeting Brother Carlos Greene and his wife related their many experiences in Germany. Brother and Sister Greene are easily adapting themselves to the English language. Doctor Paul Grabske talked at one o'clock on "Educating the Public Concerning Dental Care." The third treat of the day was the Doctrine and Covenants Class taught by Elder C. J. Hunt. Brother Hunt was present when section 119 was presented to the General Conference, and his experiences greatly enhanced the lesson. The rest of the day was given by the women to quilting.

The church school worship service Sunday morning was in keeping with Armistice Day, and each number was well rendered.

Pastor H. L. Barto was the morning speaker, and his theme was "Peace." Emmett La France, accompanied by Mary Katherine Yale, from the Methodist Church, sang "Going Home," and the local choir sang "Home at the End of the Road."

Leota Blankenship was baptized Sunday afternoon by Elder E. E. Thomas.

Elder C. J. Hunt was the evening speaker, and music was by the ladies' quartet.

Spring Branch Church

Sacrament service the first Sunday of November was in charge of Pastor F. A. Cool, assisted by M. C. Jacobsen, J. A. Andes, J. E. Smith, and Robert Fish. The oblation talk was given by Bishop's Agent Robert Fish, and the sacrament address was by the pastor.

Elder Carroll L. Olson was the evening speaker, and his theme was "Faith."

A number of the stories entered for the junior project were given last Sunday morning at the church school sessions. They will be judged to decide who will represent this congregation in the project at Second Church the last Sunday in the month.

Pastor F. A. Cool gave an Armistice Day talk at the church school session, Sunday.

"The Fields Are White, Ready to Harvest," was the theme of the sermon Sunday morning by Elder M. C. Jacobsen, and the basis of his discourse was Doctrine and Covenants 32. The choir sang "Hark! the Voice of Jesus Calling."

An item of interest during the past two Sundays was the attendance in the primary department. November 4, every officer, teacher, and pupil was present, and November 11, there was just one pupil absent.

The young people's department sponsored a halloween party at the former home of Sister Howe on East Walnut.

Young people's classes are busy on plays which are to be given in the near future.

The young married people's class, taught by M. C. Jacobsen, meets every two weeks, and is making an effort to interest the young people who are not attending the church school, to come out and join them. They, too, are working toward a project, a class room.

The women's department has taken up the study of the Old Testament by Hurlbut, and Sister Thomas Nord is their teacher. A number have enrolled and an interesting class is held at two o'clock each Thursday afternoon.

Sister W. A. McClain who has been bedfast the last few years, suffered another stroke, and is in a serious condition.

Elder E. A. Thomas was the speaker Sunday and the theme was "The Holy Ghost." A group of girls rendered a beautiful song.

Brother and Sister Harry Wards are the parents of a baby girl born Saturday morning.

Englewood Church

The series of meetings that have been held during the past two weeks by Elder J. W. A. Bailey, have been unusually well attended, with the largest crowds on Sunday nights. Brother Bailey ended the meetings by using "Zion" as his theme at both services Sunday. Special music for these meetings was furnished by the young people, the choir, and voices from Central Church of Kansas City. George Anway directed the singing during the entire series, and will continue as choir director, assisted by Anita May.

At the Wednesday night service, Donna Lee Wyatt, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Walter E. Wyatt was blessed by Elders Arthur Welch, and R. W. Howery. Apostle Edwards gave a talk about the ordinance of blessing babies.

The women's department held their weekly meeting at the home of Sister Bob Bopra. Sister W. J. Burton, and Sister D. J. Krahl were present during the afternoon, and both gave short talks. Sister W. J. Burton complimented Englewood because of the marked attendance of the younger women.

East Independence Church

The women held a meeting last Wednesday at the home of Sister Floanna Butler. A large number were present, and an interesting time was enjoyed.

Arthur Peer was in charge of the Sunday morning prayer meeting. At the Sunday school Ralph Crabb read the call to worship.

Elder Samuel Smith, the Sunday morning speaker, used as his theme, "Ye Cannot Serve Two Masters." At this service a quartet, Lynden and Charlotte Wagener and Joseph and Catherine Friend, sang "My Jesus, I Love Thee."

Good attendance marked the night church school.

Elder H. E. Winegar, the evening speaker, talked on "True Greatness." His text was, "For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord." A male quartet, Lynden Wagener, Michael, Alma, and Joseph Friend, sang "Wandering Child, Come Home."

Sister Clare Austin, who has been confined to bed two months with typhoid fever, has suffered a relapse, and her friends have been saddened by her suffering.

Bremerton, Washington

Bremerton Branch was well represented at the Northwestern reunion at Silver Lake in August. Twenty-three went from a membership of thirty-eight, and all derived lasting benefit from the lessons learned there.

The branch business meeting was held September 10, and those chosen to serve during the coming year are: Pastor A. W. Lundeen, church school director; George Johnson, clerk; Cora Jones, president of the women's department and adult supervisor; Mary Bouse, young people's leader; Floyd Bouse, junior church school superintendent, and chorister, Eva Lundeen.

The dedication of Bremerton church occurred October 21, and also two men were ordained to the priesthood. The day's program started with the ordination of George Johnson as teacher and Floyd Bouse as deacon. Then a prayer service was abundantly blessed with God's Spirit. Following this meeting Pastor A. W. Lundeen gave an interesting talk, "The History of the Church."

At the morning service Apostle E. J. Gleazer preached on "Building, Not an End, But a Means to an End." A potluck dinner and social hour were enjoyed in the church basement at noon, also in the evening.

The dedication service began at 2:30 p. m. and was most impressive. Apostle Gleazer talked on "Church Ethics." His evening sermon was "The Church and its Ordinances."

Twenty-six visitors came from Seattle and Bellingham. This number included District President Monte Lasater, Brother White, bishop's agent; Dwight Davis, district director of religious education; Alma Johnson, pastor of Seattle Branch, and A. C. Martin. Bremerton members appreciated the presence of so many in the face of one of the severest storms that has ever visited the North West.

Far West Stake

Two Young Men Called at O. T. Z. Rally

Almost every branch in the stake was represented at the O. T. Z. rally, held at Guilford Saturday night and Sunday, October 27 and 28. The quarterly rallies have become so much a part of the young people's lives that each rally finds new interest, and many look forward from one rally to the next with anticipation.

The rally opened Saturday evening with a stake-wide program including four short talks, a number of vocal selections and some hymn stories. The talks centered around various phases of "Stewardship" which was the theme carried through the rally. Leonard Froyd, of Bedison Branch, spoke on "The Stewardship of My Time." He was followed by Miss Alma Black, of First Saint Joseph, whose subject was "The Stewardship of My Talents." Mrs. Alberta Snapp, of King City, spoke on "The Stewardship of My Energy," and Emery J. Benjamin, of Third Saint Joseph, concluded the talks on "The Stewardship of My Possessions." The closing hymn was "Take My Life and Let it Be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee," and Miss Leola Torrance, of Guilford, told the story of its writing.

A good crowd enjoyed the evening program, and were hospitably entertained Saturday night in the homes of Guilford Saints and their friends.

Sunday was a full day, beginning at nine-thirty with a lecture by Bishop Henry L. Livingston who talked on "Stewardship for Youth." A short musical interlude was directed by Leonard G. Ehlers, supervisor, and then Stake President Ward A. Hougas delivered a sermon on the subject "The Shadow of the Cross."

At noon Guilford, Bedison and Ross Grove branches served a bountiful basket dinner to about three hundred hungry people. The ladies deserve much praise for the way they handled this important feature.

A council meeting was held at one o'clock at which time Garland C. Snapp was elected president for the coming year. He succeeds Kenneth Piepergerdes who performed the duties of this office very well the last year. Brother Elbert A. Schmidt, of Ross Grove, was elected vice president, and Helen R. Beadnall was sustained as secretary. Plans were discussed for the future, and the next rally was set for the last of January in Saint Joseph.

The afternoon service was an open forum in which Bishop Livingston took up the financial law more in detail and the making of statements. Questions were answered and opportunity was given those who desired to file their statements or make payments on their tithes.

A church school workers' conference was held by Sister Eunice Livingston, stake director of religious education, in the afternoon. All church school teachers and officers were invited.

The closing event was the consecration service held at four o'clock. An adult prayer service was held at this same hour in the basement, Evangelist Milo Burnett in charge. Elder Ward A. Hougas was in charge and was assisted by Garland C. Snapp, incoming president and Kenneth Piepergerdes, outgoing president. Both are priests. Brother Leonard G. Ehlers directed the singing. An active and inspiring service was enjoyed by a large number of young people who have come to look to these services for strength and spiritual power to carry on in the months between rallies. The Spirit was manifest in power, and the young people were encouraged and instructed. Two young men were called to offices in the priesthood. Garland C. Snapp was called to the office of elder, and Elbert A. Schmidt to the office of priest. Brother Snapp was called to the office of priest at the convention in June, 1933, and was ordained at Cameron in the closing service of the October rally there last year. Both young men are twenty-four and have been active workers in their local groups. Brother Snapp labors in the King City Mission, and Brother Schmidt is church school director at Ross Grove Branch.

Increased Missionary Activity Marks Cameron Branch

If an increase in spirituality is indicated by an increase in missionary activity, then Cameron Branch in indeed "pressing on the upward way." Since the close of the reunion at Stewartville, many features have been added to the branch program which have heightened the interest and attendance as well as the responsibility of the newly-elected officers.

The branch election was held on September 12, and resulted as follows: S. H. Simmons was reelected president; Sister Ray Miller, church school director; Sister Elsie Butler, secretary; Ernest Sherman, treasurer, and Paul T. Fiddick, music director. Elders David W. Gamet and J. J. Boswell were selected by the pastor as his counselors.

In accordance with the general church school plan, Sunday evening study classes have been organized. These classes are held during the hour previous to the regular Sunday evening service, and have aroused a widespread interest among the members of the branch.

The branch has been favored with some fine speakers in the past few months. Elder John E. Hovenga and Stake President Ward A. Hougas spoke during September and Elders Everett E. Gamet and John F. Sheehy were speakers in October. There has also been fine response among the members of the priesthood in conducting these services.

Because of these Sunday evening classes, the O. T. Z.'s have changed their time of meeting from every Monday evening to bimonthly meetings, which are of a more social nature than formerly. The young people expect to have some very interesting meetings this winter, and to do constructive work also.

Priesthood classes have been organized and are held after the regular Wednesday evening prayer meetings. These classes are taught by Elder David W. Gamet. As a part of the effort being made to reach all members of the branch, cottage prayer meetings have been organized.

The C. S. S. group have canned almost four hundred quarts of foodstuffs which consist of apples, green beans, veal, and mustard greens. The ladies deserve commendation for the labor and service they have so willingly performed. Much of this was on display in Far West Stake booth at the Harvest Festival Exhibit. Fifteen members of the choir drove to Independence Sunday, October 7, where they sang in the Harvest Home Chorus.

On the evening of October 15, the O. T. Z.'s held an election of officers, after which the young people enjoyed a taffy pull. This organization sponsored a masquerade party for the entire branch, on the Monday evening preceding halloween.

There has been a marked increase in attendance at the Sunday evening services since reunion, the attendance having increased about one-third to one-half. These services are largely missionary in spirit and purpose, and the people are responding wonderfully.

Nineteenth Anniversary Celebrated

Sunday, October 14, was observed by the Saints of Guilford Branch as the annual homecoming. This was the nineteenth anniversary of the dedication of the church. All living past pastors of the branch were present.

Evangelist Milo Burnett, of Saint Joseph, was the guest speaker at the eleven o'clock hour. Several of the guests gave short talks at the guest hour in the afternoon, the remainder of the time being taken by Brother Burnett. A basket dinner was served at noon.

The ideal autumn day brought about two hundred Saints and friends to worship in the home branch. Council Bluffs and Des Moines, Iowa, and Kansas City, Saint Joseph, Stewartville, Saint Louis, Stanberry, Mound City, Ravenwood, Conception Junction, Bedison, Skidmore and Barnard were all represented besides the local Saints of Guilford.

Mrs. Bertha Woodcock, of Drumright, Oklahoma, is in need of the Saints' prayers. She is in a serious condition with inward cancer and kidney and heart trouble. She is the mother of a large family who need her care, but is willing that the Lord's will should be done. Elders who could call on her would give her courage.

Holden Stake

Missionary Services Start

Missionary services in Holden Stake have started at Holden and at Warrensburg. Elder E. Y. Hunker, of the quorum of seventy, is conducting the two-week missionary series at Holden; the Warrensburg series was conducted last week by Elder J. A. Thomas, of the stake presidency.

At the same time, a rally series was just completed at Blue Springs, under Elder Earl F. Hoisington, pastor of Lees Summit group. Elder Earl Higdon, director of religious education for the stake, finished a rally series at Bates City, and Elder Vernon Lundeen completed the series at Lees Summit. This week a rally series is in progress at Atherton, being conducted by Elder Earl T. Higdon.

This month will be busy in Holden Stake, with rally and missionary services at Atherton, Holden, and missionary services at Blue Springs, Bates City, and Lees Summit. The special services fast are being completed in the various groups in Holden Stake, leading to the stake conference in December.

Rally at Atherton

This week at Atherton Elder Earl T. Higdon, stake director of religious education, is conducting the rally services. Every night the chorus of about twenty-five persons assists in the services by singing special music.

Last Friday night the young people, of Atherton, sponsored a pie and box supper for the whole group, proceeds from which were used to procure three pulpit chairs for the church.

Atherton Saints, young people and adult, met together at the home of Brother and Sister Harley Bogue, October 30, for a halloween party. Nearly everyone came masked and in costume, Sister Cornelius Edgerton taking first place as "Aunt Jemima." Gingerbread and cider were served to about a hundred persons.

Holden Rally Finished

This is the second week of the missionary series of services being conducted at Holden. Elder E. Y. Hunker is the speaker, and is greeted with a large attendance every night.

Members of Holden group enjoyed the series of rally meetings during the week, October 14 to 19. These services were conducted by J. A. Thomas of the stake presidency and pastor of Atherton group.

The rally series brought an average attendance of about ninety every night except Sunday when one hundred and sixty-five persons attended. A twenty-voice choir assisted in the services with special music every night. The attendance kept up all week, including two wet, unfavorable nights.

The week of services was rounded out by a visit from Bishop J. A. Koehler on Sunday which included two stirring sermons on his favorite theme, "Kingdom Building." Earl Higdon, counselor to Bishop Koehler and stake director of religious education, accompanied him.

October 21, Elder Amos E. Allen, stake president and pastor, gave the sermon at the morning hour. Assistant pastor Robert Dillon, was not able, because of illness, to be with them that Sunday.

The children's division of the church school, under the supervision of Sister Lyla Klecker, had a halloween party Tuesday evening. The junior and young people's classes combined forces for a "jollification" Friday evening.

The young people had charge of the Sunday evening service, October 28. One Sunday evening a month is given over to them. The program this time consisted of a talk on building zion homes, by Brother Frelin Hampton, and special music.

Union Service at Lees Summit

Sunday night, October 28, members of five other churches in Lees Summit met in the Saints' church in honor of the new pastor, Elder Earl F. Hoisington. The preceding Sunday night the Saints went to the Methodist Church to honor the new minister there.

The five ministers of the churches represented were with Brother Hoisington in the stand, and assisted in the service. Elder Hoisington delivered the sermon. A ladies' quartet from Enoch Hill church, Independence, assisted in the service with some special numbers.

At these union services there were one hundred and sixty-five people, showing an active interest in the services.

Holden Stake at Graceland

Holden Stake was well represented at Graceland College's Homecoming, October 26 to 28. Fifteen former Gracelanders from this stake participated in the activities, and visited the three present students from Holden Stake—Fern Banker, Ruth Haas, and Robert Ferguson.

Elder Earl Higdon, stake director of religious education, was there, together with his new assistant, Robert Thistlethwaite, who also is president of the young people in the stake.

Other visitors from Holden Stake were Mary Beebe, Loretta and Hazel Ballard, and Elmer Moody, of Holden; Genevieve and Leonard Smith, Blue Springs; Louise Haas and Merton Loveland, Lees Summit; Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Swift and Morton Swift, Strasburg Mission; and Nina Amundson and Clifford J. Long, of Atherton. They all say they had a good time at Graceland, renewing many friendships made at the college.

Business Meeting at Warrensburg

The annual business meeting was held the first part of October by Stake President Amos E. Allen and Earl T. Higdon, of the stake bishopric. Elder S. M. Andes was chosen pastor with Ralph Murdock and Walter A. Johnson as his assistants. Other officers elected were: Sister H. E. Weeks, branch clerk; H. E. Weeks, branch treasurer; Charles Johnson, bishop's agent; Ammon Andes, church school director; Sister Benjamin Wheeler, adult supervisor; Lillian C. Johnson, young people's supervisor; Gladys B. Andes, primary supervisor; Jonnie Raville, director of music; women's leader, Sister Armstrong.

At the recent rally services conducted by Stake President Amos E. Allen and Elder Earl T. Higdon the meetings were greatly helped by the splendid support of Jonnie Raville, who has charge of the music, and by Mrs. Ralph Baker who assisted as director of the singing and as soloist.

Pastor S. M. Andes is using the young men of the priesthood as speakers for the services occasionally. Sunday evening recently was occupied by Maxwell Constance and Walter A. Johnson in two sermonets.

Gladys Andes, primary supervisor, is experimenting in a junior church project, to see whether it will be practicable in a small church group. The first session was very much enjoyed by the juniors. Ammon Andes talked to the children.

A series of missionary sermons was held during the week beginning November 4. Elder J. A. Thomas of the stake presidency was speaker. The series included sermons on "Why the Church?" "Why This Church?" "A Well-furnished House," "Principles of Salvation," "Lifeblood of Christianity," "Man and His Brother."

New Westminster, British Columbia

Tenth Street and London.—Twenty-five from this branch were able to attend the Silver Lake reunion, Washington, for the full time. Much credit is due the young people's group who made all arrangements for transportation both ways and lived together as one large family on the grounds at a very reasonable charge. All returned feeling spiritually refreshed and eager to help in the good work.

A truckload of Saints journeyed twenty-five miles to the home of Elder and Sister Duncan Calder and held their mid-week prayer meeting followed by a corn roast. All were blessed in this effort to meet with two isolated members.

The annual branch business meeting was held September 19, and reports received from different departments were very gratifying. The following officers were chosen to head the branch's group of workers: Pastor, H. Morrison; counselors, W. C. Reed and Cliff Wood; church school director, M. Coburn; secretary of the branch, F. Thirkettle; treasurer, H. Butterfield; chorister, F. Thirkettle; solicitor, H. Morrison. Branch trustees are S. Pope, F. Gerow, and H. Morrison.

The Bulletin Board

Marriages

ELLIOTT-WATSON.—Miss Margaret Elliott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Elliott, of Salem, Iowa, became the bride of Arlo Watson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sylvanus Watson, of Stockport, Iowa, October 31, at the Saints' church at Ottumwa. Priest Alfred Goodwin officiated in the single ring ceremony in the presence of the bride's father and mother. Mr. and Mrs. Watson will make their home at Salem.

Conference Minutes

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—The fall conference was held at Elk Mills, Maryland, September 1 and 2, and proved outstanding in point of activity and attendance. The task of caring for the one hundred and fifty visitors in a village of but several hundred population taxed the resourcefulness of Elk Mills Saints, but they met the situation well. The opening service was one of prayer and testimony for the young people under the direction of Elder David M. Wiesen, district director of religious education. Business session convened at 7:30 p. m., September 1, with Apostle Paul M. Hanson, District President David J. Williams, and Elder Thomas Carr presiding. The minutes of the last conference, held at Philadelphia in March, were read and accepted. Reports were read from D. J. Williams, district president; David M. Wiesen, district director of religious education; Samuel Worrell, district treasurer, and a summary of priesthood activities in the district was also presented. It was recommended by Baltimore Branch with the concurrence of district officers and the apostle in charge, that Arthur Edwards, now a teacher, be ordained to the office of priest; that John Trust, now a deacon, be ordained a priest; that Joseph Edwards and Thurman Durst be ordained to the office of teacher, and that Edward Goetz and Bundy White be ordained deacons. The conference endorsed this recommendation and the ordinations were provided for at a later meeting. Apostle Hanson commented upon the appointment made by President Smith, of David J. Williams to act as district president during the interim following the departure from the district of Henry L. Livingston until the convening of the present district conference, and upon Brother Hanson's motion the appointment was sustained, and Brother Williams was empowered to choose his two counselors. Elder Thomas Carr was announced as one counselor, and decision as to the other was deferred. Brooklyn, New York, will be the place of the next district conference, the time to be left to the district presidency. Following this, a communication was read from John F. Sheehy, of Independence, regarding the condition of drought in the Middle West and enlisting the aid of branches and districts in the interest of the Harvest Home Festival. Members were asked to contribute farm products such as potatoes and vegetables which could be canned. A request for the reading of the report of the last reunion committee which recommended that a reunion be not held in 1934, because, among other things, there was an indebtedness of $540.10, resulted in a resolution that they try to remove this objection to the holding of a reunion in 1935, and a second resolution that the matter of raising the amount be referred to the district presidency who are to work it out with the financial officers of the district. Business over, the congregation went to the lawn at the rear of the building for a social reception in honor of Brother and Sister D. J. Williams, and a wiener roast. Words of welcome were given by representatives of each branch to these new workers in the district. Breakfast was served in the basement of the church on Sunday morning, and at eight-thirty a baptismal service was held in a beautiful setting about a mile and a half from the church. The candidates were Thelma Pennock, William Warnole, and Robert Carr, children who have reached the age when they begin to recognize the hand of God. The church school afforded opportunity of listening to words of counsel concerning this branch of the work, Elder David M. Wiesen speaking. At 11 a. m., Apostle Hanson took as his theme the opportunities for missionary endeavor and his words of instruction were attended by power and enlightenment. Before the close of the service the ordinance of the blessing of children was enjoyed. Dinner was followed at 1:15 p. m. by a presentation to the priesthood by Apostle Hanson of the ethics and decorum which should be observed in the conduct of services and an appeal to make use of the Priesthood Manual and Priesthood Journal. At two-thirty, sacrament service included a short prayer and testimony meeting, and brought spiritual strength to many. During the service the candidates baptized were confirmed. Elder David M. Wiesen at 4 p. m. discussed church school problems with those interested in this work. Lunch was served at five-thirty and at seven an ordination service installed the brothers previously mentioned in their respective offices.

CENTRAL MICHIGAN.—The annual conference of Central Michigan District convened at Beaverton, October 6 and 7. Saints assembled at 10 a. m., and after prayer service a short business session was held, effecting an organization; the district presidency was chosen to preside. Following the routine opening Elder Case gave a short talk then came the reading of reports. Richard Stewart gave a verbal report of Mikado Branch. The afternoon session convened at two o'clock. Early in the meeting Elder Blakeslee Smith, of Detroit, gave an inspiring talk. Then followed more reports. The report of the district president was read and accepted. He recommended the disorganization of Loomis Branch, and this was ratified by the body. The district president then asked the consent of the conference to move the church building to Clare, Michigan, and this was given. The following names were recommended for ordination to the priesthood: Sam Ash, jr., Midland, Michigan, to the office of priest; Hawley Kauver, Saginaw, priest; Howard Zimmer, Saginaw, deacon. These were approved and the ordination of the men provided for. Motion to hold a reunion in 1935 unanimously prevailed; it will be at Edenville, Michigan. Motion carried that the district president and bishop's agent be two standing members of reunion committee and that three others be appointed by this conference to be associated with them. Ray Rosevear, of Beaverton; Sam Ash, jr., Midland, and Marshall McGuire, of Mikado, were chosen. The conference acted to invite all other districts in the State to attend this reunion. Elder Kenneth Greene, of Detroit, fittingly responded, accepting the invitation in behalf of Detroit District. Motion prevailed that meals be served free of charge. Motion also prevailed that the reunion committee appoint subcommittees and care for all details of the reunion. The conference took action leaving the food on exhibition for the harvest home festival at Beaverton, in the hands of the district presidency, to be used according to their discretion. A motion carried that the branch secretaries be provided with report blanks drawn up by the district president and district secretary, to be filled in and presented at conference. Then the election of officers was taken up. A telegram from the First Presidency and Twelve recommended Elder Hubert Case as district president for the coming year, and he was elected. Sister Winnie M. Hulbert, secretary, was sustained. Other officers are: Church school—adult division, Marshall McGuire; young people, Ray Rosevear, and children, Sam Ash; department of women, Sister Mabel D. Jordan, of Houghton Lake; musical director, Merle Lambkin. The young people's leader will be the Christian Legion of the district. At the Sunday 3 p. m. meeting Elder Case made a statement regarding elders' quorum work, that this work cannot be handled locally at present. The name of Claude Ludy, of Alma, Michigan, was recommended for ordination to the office of priest, and this was approved. Otto Bartlett gave the financial report of the reunion which was approved. The conference then extended a vote of thanks to Beaverton Saints for their hospitality, and adjourned till the call of the district president.

SOUTHERN WISCONSIN.—Conference was held at Madison, October 13 and 14. The first session was held at 2:30 p. m., Saturday. The various reports were read after which H. W. Woodstock, Roscoe Davey, Harry Wasson, and E. J. Lenox talked on the conference theme, "Pioneering." At 7 p. m., a class was conducted by Brother Davey on "Building the Kingdom of God," and at eight o'clock the business meeting was held in charge of the district presidency. The first item of business was election of officers: District president, H. W. Woodstock, who chose as his associates, Harry Wasson and George Noble; clerk, Leda Colbert; financial agent, Charles Hoague; director of religious education, Harry Wasson; music director, Herbert Dutton. A resolution was presented with regard to the amalgamation of the Janesville and Beloit branches, and the resolution was adopted. Sunday at 8:45 a. m., prayer service was held in charge of the district presidency. Many came from long distances to be there for the morning service. Church school at 9:45 was in charge of district and local director. Robert Brigham taught adults; Harry Wasson, young people; Leda Colbert supervised the children taught by local teachers. At 11 a. m., Elder Roscoe Davey spoke on "Giants and Grasshoppers." Dinner was served by Madison women in the basement of the church at 12:45. Brother Woodstock invited the priesthood to his home where Brother Davey talked to them. Sixteen men were present. The president of each branch was represented there. Returning to the church, they held another service and the three children of Mr. and Mrs. H. Stevens were blessed. Then came a service on "Hymnology," directed by Herbert Dutton. At 3 p. m., Elder Davey preached a sermon on "Looking Backward into Tomorrow." Then unfinished business was taken up and the conference adjourned subject to the call of the district presidency. District musicians helped throughout the services with special numbers. Each branch was well represented, and though the Saints were disappointed by Apostle J. F. Garver's absence, they felt this to be a very good conference in business, in classes, and in sermons.

■ The Unfinished Task

By C. J. Lant

When I was a boy, going to school there was a lesson in one of our readers about "The Hoe and the Dinner Horn." It told of a young fellow who was hoeing in the corn, and when the dinner horn was blown, he immediately dropped the hoe and started for the house; his father or companion, working in the next row seeing that it was but a few more hills to the end of the row called to the boy to "hoe out his row" and then there would still be time to get to the house for dinner.

Many times this thought has passed through my mind in the years that have passed, and just a few days ago, while passing through what had been a garden and small corn field this past summer; I found a hoe lying at the base of a corn hill, about midway in one of the rows. It looked very much as if someone had dropped the hoe in the middle of the row.

My first thought was to pass the hoe by and leave it in the field, but scarcely had I taken two steps when the story passed through my mind and I retraced my steps and picked up the hoe and continued my walk to the house. As I leaned the hoe against the garage, I thought of the church and some of the unfinished work, of how many hoes are rusting idle, where someone has left them lying in the unfinished row, and of what would happen if all of us were to have a change of heart and want to see the work go ahead to a fulfillment of the most cherished dreams of many who have been forced to drop their tools and leave the field before their work was finished.

How much different would the outlook upon life be for many within the church, if we all could follow through to the end of our row, and work unitedly for the good of the whole, instead of at cross purposes. In reality our aims and intentions are identical, though our manners of expression are not always the same, and we are therefore misunderstood.

■ Friendly Tips

Emotionalism

The emotions are often profoundly affected when one has a spiritual experience. To yield to emotion occasionally is excusable; to control it reasonably is an indication of strength. However, it is not good to rise with a lump in the throat and a handkerchief in the hand every time one speaks. Tears, at times, are an indication of sincerity. But for a speaker to rise habitually with tears in his eyes and a quaver in his voice often spoils the meeting for others and certainly leaves the wrong kind of impression on "the stranger within the gates." Manliness and womanliness require us to be dignified in bearing our testimonies and witnessing to the benefits of the gospel in our lives.

Remember Thanksgiving Day

With a Church-wide Thank Offering

THE late Bishop E. L. Kelley was always rather careful to speak about "the law pertaining to temporalities" rather than "the temporal law." He drew the distinction that is set forth in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. What we often refer to as the financial law or temporal law is a spiritual law governing in temporal matters—in harmony with the statement just referred to that God never at any time gave a temporal law but all his laws are spiritual. We think about the work of the church as being spiritual, but it does have its temporal aspects and it constantly touches and uses material things. Nor can it be carried on successfully without a sound financial basis.

The spiritual work of the church for some time past has been hampered and hindered because of the financial situation in which the church finds herself. There is no use to attempt to dodge facts in this regard. We cannot now push the major spiritual projects of the church as we wish to do, because of the financial situation. We would fain rebuild the missionary force and go out to preach the gospel in all the world. It cannot be done because the money is not at hand, or if at hand too much of it must be used for some other purpose. We cannot rebuild the missionary force and renew our missionary endeavor as we would until the church debt is paid or at least reduced to the point where it no longer sucks up our revenue in a manner to hamper our missionary endeavor. We fain would develop stewardships and settle people on the land in Zion, but we cannot well do so until the church debt is either paid or greatly reduced. The Presiding Bishopric is entirely right in the emphasis that it places upon the payment of the church debt as the first thing that must be done to clear the path of the church for a forward movement.

Some weeks ago (during October) when I was going into the field to attend certain district conferences, I called at the bishop's office to ask what good news they had to send abroad. Bishop DeLapp replied that I might tell the Saints the church was keeping within its income; I might tell the Saints that there had been a fair increase in monthly receipts, month by month, during the present year, as compared with corresponding months of the past years; that I could report further that there had been a substantial reduction in the general church debt. All of this no doubt will be set forth in detail soon in the pages of the Herald for the edification of the Saints and will be considered in the light of the fact that at the beginning of the present year the Bishops reported that the general church debt had been reduced some $246,000 during the two preceding years and the annual interest payment had been reduced about $13,000. This progressive whittling down of the debt during the hard years of the depression is encouraging and is a sustained evidence to the church of the determination of general church officers to remove this major material obstacle that lies in the path of our progress.

During the early years of the depression it seemed necessary from time to time to put on special drives to meet emergencies. However, more and more the general church officers swung to the settled conclusion that our way out of the difficulty should be by the regular channels of the church law through the collection of tithes and offerings and consecrations. The spirit of sacrifice on the part of missionary families and families of general church officers has helped make it possible for the bishop to make the showing just referred to, this in connection with the spirit of willing sacrifice manifest throughout the church in many families. In spite of the hardships and unemployment and privations the Saints have continued to contribute to the support of the church, making it possible to meet current obligations in the way of running expenses and reduce the sum total of general church indebtedness. This should continue until the great day comes when we are free and can rebuild our missionary force and send our men out, with the addition to their ranks of many young men, divinely called to that work, to go out and preach the gospel in all the world; and when we can more vigorously prosecute our zionic program.

Though the dependence is upon the regular collection of tithes and offerings, there is no good reason why at stated intervals on special occasions the Saints all over the world may not unite in an offering to the Lord. Thanksgiving stands out preeminently in our thought as a time when they might thus unite.

Though times have been hard and many of our families have suffered loss, though they have endured sorrows and anxieties, most of them if they think carefully will find many reasons why they should be thankful. In the nations where our greatest following is found, the Saints have been preserved during the past year from the ravages of war and revolution; stable governments have stood between them and the terrors of anarchy and revolution. For this, we may be thankful during these troublous times "of distress of nations with perplexity."

Though many of our people have been without employment and often on the verge of destitution, mostly they have lived in lands where there has been an active endeavor to save the people from actual suffering, and in most instances food, clothing, and shelter have been forth-coming. Despite the fact that for reasons not known to us Providence permitted drouth and severe heat to ravage the crops of many of our people, still there is found among them a spirit of courage, faith, and fortitude to meet the situation; and throughout the church there is a great deal of ground for thanksgiving in the matter of "temporalities," and even more ground for thanksgiving for more obviously spiritual blessings and for a spiritual awakening.

It is fitting and proper that we should join the National custom in the United States of observing the annual day of Thanksgiving. This giving of thanks need not be limited to prayer, songs of praise, and sermons. This year it is proposed that we all join to give a thank offering, which may be given and received in harmony with the methods set forth by the bishops. Our Saints in lands other than the United States, though they may not have this annual custom of a Thanksgiving Day, are invited to join us on that day in rendering a thank offering, and the sum total of these offerings of thanksgiving should greatly help at this time in the endeavor to liberate the hands of the church that she may go forward in her great spiritual enterprises.

Each generation in the church has faced a tremendous task. In 1830 the task was to organize and build the church, without existing model or pattern on earth to imitate. In 1860 the task was to reorganize and rescue the church from bondage, false doctrines, and disgrace. In 1934 the task is to redeem the church from debt, rebuild the missionary force, and redeem Zion. Let us attack our problem with the same zeal and devotion that characterized the generations before us.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A Church Worker Honored

EVAN J. EHLERS

Evan J. Ehlers of St. Joseph, Missouri, who carries a great deal of responsibility in church music in that city and also makes an important contribution as director of music for Far West Stake, has recently been honored by his election as president of the St. Joseph Traffic Club, of which he is a charter member. Brother Ehlers is traffic manager of the Quaker Oats Company in St. Joseph. Sister Ehlers is as well known in St. Joseph for her musical ability as her husband, and both of them move actively in the best musical and cultural circles there. Young, active, and businesslike in their work, Brother and Sister Ehlers are performing a real service for the church.

New Church History Study Outline

Ready for January 1

A Teacher's and Student's Guide to The Story of the Church, by F. Henry Edwards. Price 35c, Herald Publishing House.

This new quarterly study, containing a year's lesson outlines for the systematic study of the forthcoming one-volume history, The Story of the Church, by Inez Smith Davis has been enlarged and expanded over the originally intended size to contain ninety-six pages. Because of this the advance in price is necessary. This outline will be a great aid to the study of the history, especially for the teachers. Students will also find it an indispensable aid to thorough study.

Youth Must Find Its Own Career

Create Occupations

Our contention that the factory and the machine age have betrayed the people they were supposed to serve, especially the young people who have been left up a blind alley with no means of exit, finds support in current conditions and among contemporary philosophers.

Youth must find its own way out, discover new occupations, and fulfill its destiny in undreamed-of ways. A now famous author and college professor, Walter B. Pitkin, visiting Kansas City, has the following to offer those who are interested in the subject:

"One of the greatest mistakes young people make today is in ever looking for a job. . . . If quality of opportunity is changing, it is evident that persons must look in another direction. A technical manner of approach in the quest of a job is necessary and it's one that we are all strangers to.

"What we must do in retaining ourselves and in looking for new opportunities, is to make assiduous study of the general trends in this country. Along the courses of those trends lies our ever-opening opportunities.

"One trend is back to the country. Already one survey has revealed that 56 million persons live on the highways of our countries. That shift in population offers new opportunities. . . .

"Another trend is that which finds a tremendous urge on the part of most persons to make themselves and their families secure. . . .

"A third trend is the desire for more accurate knowledge. Call it a demand for culture or adult education, if you will. People want reliable information, and there is a departure from the traditional college culture courses to the vocational ones."—Professor Walter B. Pitkin, author of New Careers for Youth, as reported in the Kansas City Times for November 14, 1934.

Friendly Correspondence Wanted

One of our church young people is isolated from church privileges and contacts with church people. She would be glad to hear from other young people of the church, and to engage in friendly correspondence. Young people who are interested may write to Miss Nona Jones, Route 3, Ogden, Iowa. She is nineteen, a high school student, and interested in music.

East Meets West

Albert Boynton and Ralph Merrill, students at Graceland College, emphatically disavow the contention that East never meets West without dire consequences. There is no "never the twain shall meet" for them. Boynton, a freshman, is from California, while Merrill, a sophomore this year, hails from Maine. The boys share room 202 at Marietta Hall, historic boy's quarters at Graceland, and are hugely enjoying their relationship.

This is just one of the many interesting examples of the cosmopolitan character of Graceland. The first few weeks are grand fun for all students. Mamilu Taylor, freshman girl from Alabama, drawls, "And you-all nevah even heard o' grits!" to the ignorance of that food displayed on the part of her new acquaintances from the North, East and West.

Some are from hustling metropolises, others from "one house and a store" villages. It is interesting and profitable to engage in the process of assimilation in the congenial atmosphere of Graceland.

—DELLA MAE BREAKIE.

Holden Stake Young People's Paper

The Holden Stake young people are publishing a paper of their own called the Clarion, a genial newsy affair of eight friendly pages, mimeographed. Too modest for an editorial masthead, but we notice the signatures of such old friends as Clifford Long, Robert Thistlethwaite, Elizabeth Bowers and Nina Amundson, and others.

Gossip

An exchange tells of a boy who made $500 this last year by raising chickens, and so helped pay a considerable portion of his college expenses. Some college people would like to be able to make that much after they are graduated. Raising chickens for a market that does exist is much better than sitting around pining for a job that doesn't. It's an idea for you young folk who are wondering how you are going to get to Graceland next year. Another story comes to us of a man who lifted himself off the relief rolls raising watermelons on waste land.

Most people who work at jobs as employees get only their living expenses, sometimes less. The employer takes the profit from his labor. More young people need the courage, energy, and enterprise to start in business for themselves.

On a corner across the street from the campus of a famous university a poor Greek immigrant has a little hole-in-the-wall place where he sells candy, newspapers, and nick-nacks to the students and to commuters from downtown. He owns a good car, owns a home, and sends his children to college. Many a young man with his doctor's degree and no job and no prospect of a home envies him. It's not the amount of education, but what you can do with it that is so important.

"The Peacemaker"

"Upon his will he binds a radiant chain,
For Freedom's sake he is no longer free,

It is his task, the slave of Liberty,
With his own blood to wipe away a stain.

That pain may cease, he yields his flesh to pain.

To banish war, he must a warrior be.

He dwells in Night, eternal Dawn to see,

And gladly dies, abundant life to gain.

"What matters Death, if Freedom be not dead?

No flags are fair, if Freedom's flag be furled.

Who fights for Freedom, goes with joyful tread

To meet the fires of Hell against him hurled,

And had for Captain Him whose thornwreathed head

Smiles from the Cross upon a conquered world."

ZION'S CHRISTIAN LEGION

The Duties of Directors of Socialization

By Allen C. Pohly

In the beginning of our discussion let us arrive at an understanding of the meaning of the word socialization. The word socialize means "to render social" and the term department of socialization would very naturally mean a department whose duty it is "to render social" that which comes under its control, which in this case is human beings who are members of Zion's Legion.

"To render social," therefore, is the keynote of our task and this Webster says is "relating to the natural understanding and intercourse of individuals whose lives are distinctively shaped with reference to one another, hence, disposed to friendliness or the society of one's kind, companionable, sociable."

The lives of Latter Day Saints are distinctively shaped with reference to one another for we have or should have common aims, thoughts and ideals, and unless we have a natural understanding of each other, a friendliness, and companionship among our people we will never come near the ideal of our church in building a society called Zion that will give to and expect from each that which they are able to give and worthy to receive. To definitely assist in bringing about this condition is the task of the directors of socialization.

How? That is the question! How are we to mold into one group men and women of different characters and temperaments? How are we to create a natural understanding, friendliness and companionship between the man with the "hair trigger" temper and the one with "easily hurt feelings," between the "inferiority complex," and the "superiority complex" people? I know of no surer way of blending an individual into the group than by guiding him to activity in the group. Participation is the greatest interest-builder there is and few people can participate in the activities of the church group with proper supervision without having many rough surfaces polished and abnormal complexes modified.

The means to these ends must to a great extent be fitted to local conditions but could include athletics, consisting of playground ball, tennis, golf, and swimming in summer and a gymnasium program for the winter months. Drama may also be used very effectively for there is no question that participation in dramatics liberates a great amount of buried talent, for it gives poise and confidence to its participants. The Legion has established a department to encourage the writing of plays bearing upon our own church history and doctrines and from this field we may produce some very good plays. Outside this, many good sacred and secular plays may be found with no royalties or very small ones. We may also use the purely social games where the entire group joins in simple tasks that break down the barriers of reserve and make us better acquainted with each other.

The department of socialization also has a very definite task from a financial standpoint. Our goal financially is to make a substantial reduction in the indebtedness of the church and to do this in a very businesslike manner the convention voted that the entire monthly dues be used in reaching our goal. This leaves the administrative offices without working funds, therefore, for this year at least and also for the future unless changed by the convention it will be the duty of each local socialization director to plan one program each year, the proceeds of which will go to the general administrative offices for necessary expenses and one program each year the proceeds of which will go to the district administrative offices for necessary district expenses. Other than these two programs the locals may follow their own plans, worked out to fit the needs of their particular branches, keeping in mind the fact that our specific duty is "to render social" those in our charge.—2122 Aitken Avenue, Flint, Michigan.

Out of the Depths

Out of the depths have I cried unto Thee:

"Lord, hear my cry!"

The answer comes in the smile of a friend

Passing nigh.

Out of the depths have I cried unto

Thee:

"Lord, still my woe!"

The answer comes in the voice of a friend,

Comforting, low.

Out of the depths have I cried unto

Thee:

"Lord, heal my pain!"

The answer comes in the tears of a friend,

Sympathy's rain.

Out of the depths have I cried unto

Thee:

"Lord, make me strong!"

The hand of a friend is laid on mine,

Clasping it long.

Out of the depths have I cried unto

Thee:

"Clear Thou my doubt!"

The answer comes in the faith of friends,
Encamping about.

There is also available a limited supply of Christmas plays and other materials previously printed in the Department Journal and Vision. A list will be sent on request.

We also have some catalogues of fine carefully selected plays from the lists of leading publishers which we shall be glad to have sent free on request. New materials from the latest productions have been added.—The Department of Religious Education.

Long Life

Not so much the years you have lived

As how you have lived the years—

And whether you've dealt in laughter,

Or whether you've dealt in tears,

Or a short life and a merry one,

Or a long, long life, not gay;

For a babe may have lived a century

And an old man not a day.

Women and Modern Social Demands

By Ida Mae Hill

A FEW HUNDRED years ago if one had mentioned women's responsibility in the social life the world would not have known what was meant; but now, thanks to broad-minded men and women of the world, we find the situation wherein women share the responsibility of life. With the passing of the years since woman first became recognized as an individual in the educational world, there have been many adjustments to meet her changing needs.

The work of women in the colonial days consisted mainly in the transformation of the raw materials of food and clothing and other life necessities into usable form of her own household. The beginning of social service in women's work was found in colonial neighborliness. It cannot be denied that the colonial kitchen, with its great fireplace, and the spinning wheel, made a very natural setting for the practical education of the girl; and that the highest ideals of home and family life would be nurtured in the lives of all members of the well-ordered household. Her training in hospitality and community service came to the girl in colonial times through her home experience. As the daughter grew to womanhood she was initiated into the neighborly services in which her mother had gained skill by experience. If conditions had gone on the same the girl of today would not need to be different from the colonial girl, but we find conditions changed. There are so many homes where social responsibility is not taught and so many boys and girls who have no homes that it becomes the responsibility of men and women today to live for these unfortunate ones.

Then, too, the place of the family in industry has changed. One by one the tasks of the members of the colonial family have been taken from the home to the factory until women do not have all their time taken up in household duties. Is it to be marveled at that with the reduction of woman's responsibilities and services as required by the home she has risen in her strength and demanded an enlarged sphere for her powers? The removal of these industries from the home has caused the extension of woman's vision. Where in colonial days her family needs were supplied largely by the efforts of the combined labors of the members of the household, today they are met by the united efforts of an untold army of workers. Woman's share in the business of home-making has become, in a large part, the wise saving and spending of the family income. In many cases she has a part in the earning of that income. As a result of her increased interest in economics, woman is widening her horizon in relation to social conditions. Pure food and clean markets for her own family will result in improved conditions for other individuals.

But let us stop long enough to ask, What are the social demands upon women today? They can briefly be summed up as the demands of the home, the school, the community, the state, the church, and the business world. Women are expecting to answer these demands.

Womankind cannot be expected to achieve immediately her highest ambitions and ideals; but to the woman of the twentieth century has come the unlimited opportunity to scale the heights which stretch before her. With the widening of her vision there will be developed many qualities in her character which have lain dormant because of disuse, and those outstanding characteristics which are hers by inheritance and make her "different" will be turned to the best account under this new conception of women's sphere.

THE EMANCIPATION OF WOMAN has brought with it certain opportunities for going down as well as for going up. Woman's emancipation has not meant to all women, woman's elevation. It has meant to some an opportunity for self-assertion and selfishness not consistent with the welfare of society and particularly with the stability of the family. It has meant to others an opportunity for true service.

Woman's grasp of the home and its relation to the community, her sense of its importance as a social force, and her consciousness of her share in the extension of the best in home influence should serve as a spur to the conscientious exercise of her new-gained power.

The place of the home and the maintenance of the efficiency of the members of the household cannot be overstressed; and for the woman in the home as partner with her husband in the business of home-making in its greatest significance there exists the grave task of making every member of the family the greatest possible asset to the nation and the world.

The world war has drawn to an unusual extent upon the health, intellectual and spiritual qualities in the lives of men, women, and children, and that with the long period of reconstruction which is following, the demand for wise judgment and skilled ability will be met only in proportion to the capital of each which is given to the individual. It rests with mothers and fathers to see that their children are given health, intelligence and spirituality.

ONE GREAT RESPONSIBILITY of the woman rests in the intelligent expenditure of her own time and energy. Loyalty to home and family no longer means complete submersion in the affairs of the home. The modern home-maker realizes an intellectual as well as a physical loyalty. Woman must meet her new field of service with the highest degree of intelligence which it is within her power to command; and she is fortunate in having as a basis for that intelligence an inheritance of human interest and a desire to serve.

Suffrage was not given to women because she is as wise, as strong, as skillful as a man, nor because she is a human being, but because she is different, because the world needs her peculiar and special abilities. Because these differences are fundamental world needs, it is necessary for her to bring them to the services of the world. Woman has thrust upon her a new, and glorious responsibility and opportunity. The end of her vote is to serve the community in ways in which she is the creator and specialist, and toward this service the women of the world are pressing.

Every mother or teacher who has a part in the teaching of children has the right and the duty to say what influences shall surround these same children when they are outside the home and school.

The largest factor in the urge of the woman's soul, that she take her place in the common life of the community, of the state, and of the nation, was not a demand for a right but a hunger for human service. There has come into our community life new ideals and new services rendered by men and women together, services which neither men nor women could have done alone, such as juvenile courts, public play grounds, improved public sanitation, and many others.

Only a comparatively few women can labor directly in international work, but let us not fail to realize how that every woman of right feeling who develop the "international mind" will be playing a part in the creation of the new world that is to come. To arise to these duties woman must understand many new things, she must see the whole world as if it were a child. She must feel out for it with a vast motherhood to which she is to bring comfort and peace. She must always remember that humanity is above all things.

Every woman must be interested in and working for the school. Her child is under the influence of the school six of his waking hours every day, and if the woman has no child of her own to make her interested in the school, then she must always remember that other people's children are a part of the future and that if she does not have a family to care for it becomes her duty more than ever to have an interest in every child. Not only this but every citizen becomes responsible for the school as an expression of the state's life.

The trained woman who is in the home or is engaged in some other occupation than that of teaching has a responsibility to public education as great as that of the teacher. The trained woman outside the school, with her leisure, her knowledge of life, her ability to sense situations should be drawn into a closer relation to the school. Her suggestions are needed, and above all her help in winning the support of the public for progressive measures. Especially is there a place for trained women on Boards of Education. Unexpected fields of school service which are women's very own may be developed into new positions of opportunity. The necessity of public education must be established in the minds of the people. Trained women are needed to teach the public the necessity of supporting the schools ungrudgingly.

And so every woman must today be given educational opportunities that prepare her for the functions of parent, teacher, and citizen.

What has been her lot in the past history of our country? Working side by side with the religious founders of New England, the planters of the south and the homemakers of the west, all circumstances have worked to give her one by one, the opportunities which her time afforded; to do, to learn, and to be a helpful part of her generation.

WHAT is woman's place in the church? If woman is interested in the community she cannot help being vitally interested in the church as an expression of community life. We know no place where woman can work more efficiently than in church work. Here is her chance to gain the love and confidence of children in the Sunday school, and of the young people in their organizations. In the social activities of the church women are especially needed.

We must remember also the many women who have already responded by sacrificing the best joys of home so their husbands could go as missionaries to the world. If the wife stays behind while the husband goes to foreign fields the home is incomplete, while if she goes with him she must smother one of the strongest instincts in woman, that of wanting a home. Yet we find many girls who are willing and anxious to (Continued on page 1483.)

The Norwegian Mission

By Knut Olsen

(Translated by V. D. Ruch)

Being one of the members of the church in Norway who has had acquaintance with this Latter Day work from the time that the first missionary arrived here in 1900 until the present, I have had a desire to write to our American church paper and express my appreciation of the work of the servants of God in this country, and at the same time bear my personal testimony.

My thoughts often go back to the fall of 1900 when it was my happy privilege to meet and become personally acquainted with the first two men whom God had called and sent to this country to open the door of His kingdom by preaching the gospel of that kingdom which God in His mercy has sent to earth again in these last days. I feel today to cry out with Paul: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" (Romans 11: 33.) When we consider deeply the work of God with humanity from the morn of creation until the present we see how He, who is all wise, has chosen men to represent Him in the different ages of the world. We see His hand at work trying to bring everything back to its original condition including the salvation of all mankind.

I was raised in a quiet, Christian home by a mother who was really a Christian and who lived her religion according to the light and understanding which she had. I, personally, was a member of the Y. M. C. A. for many years, having joined when I was fifteen years old.

In the fall of 1900, Elder N. C. Enge, who was a cousin of my mother and who had been a Baptist before he emigrated to America, came to our home. He was the first missionary of the Reorganized Church to visit Norway. We lived in Arendal at that time where he was also acquainted. He stayed at our home and held his first six meetings in this country. Thus I had the opportunity of hearing the Latter Day message from the very first here. Although I had grown up believing in God and trying to do his will, the message of Brother Enge touched my heart and brought a longing to my young soul for more light and truth.

It was also a joy to me to soon become acquainted with another of God's servants, namely: Mads P. Hansen, whose home was in Massachusetts, U. S. A. He had accompanied Brother Enge from America to England where they separated, Brother Hansen going to Denmark to visit relatives. After a few weeks he came to Norway to assist Brother Enge in missionary work. On the trip from Denmark to Norway he became ill. He stayed a few days at our home but kept getting worse and finally had to go to the Arendal hospital where he died two days later. While at our home on Sunday morning he read to us from the Bible and prayed a prayer which my mother could never forget. She had never heard anyone pray so fervently as he did. It was also a wonderful experience for me. It was my privilege, together with Brother Enge, to sit up with him one night. I was happy that I could serve that man of God. He was buried in Barbu Cemetery in Arendal. The funeral was not very large—just Brother Enge, my father and I, together with three men whom Brother Enge had hired to assist us as pallbearers.

Soon after, we moved to Roresand, near Grimstad, where Brother Enge held meetings regularly in our home. The house was often filled with interested listeners. There was excitement and tension at the meetings, some being for, and some against the new doctrine. I could hardly wait until evening came so another meeting could be held. There was much opposition. On February 9, 1910 my father and mother, the first fruits of the reorganization in this country were baptized by Brother Enge.

Brother Peter Muceus came to Norway on his first mission in the fall of 1901, bringing his bride, Emma, with him. He located in Porsgrunn and began his missionary work there on the market place. How long after his arrival it was before I met him, I am unable to say, but I remember the feelings I had the evening I came home from town and met him for the first time. I understood that in him we had a young man who was a true servant of God who knew what he had to represent. It was a pleasure to us to have him in our home, converse with him, hear him preach each evening, and become better acquainted with him.

In August, 1902, I had the privilege of meeting a living apostle, Peter Andersen, who was called of God in this age of the world. In the meantime, Brother Enge's family had come from America and he with them had located in Kristiansand, where Apostle Andersen landed when he came from America. He and Brother Enge came to Grimstad at once, and the first church work that Brother Andersen did in Norway was to preach and organize a branch in Grimstad, August 6, 1902. It was with strange feelings in my heart that I went to the home of Brother Kronberg where the meeting was to be held that day. My young soul was filled with thoughts of having the privilege of greeting and hearing a living apostle preach. Before reaching the house I met Brethren Andersen and Enge on the street, and I shall never forget that first meeting with him. That day the first branch of the true church of Christ was organized with seven members by Apostle Andersen. I was not yet a member of the church. Why, I don't know, because I was convinced of its truthfulness long before anyone else. O, how wonderful it was to hear how differently he presented the truths of the gospel than those I had been used to hearing! I felt, as the Inspired Version states of Jesus, "He taught them as one who had authority from God." There was a drawing power that accompanied his preaching, yes, in Peter Andersen's personality and entire behavior there was "that something" which witnessed to people that he was a true apostle of Jesus Christ.

From that day the power of God began to work in my life as never before, and finally on September 11, 1902, I was baptized by Brother Enge. My baptism was a happy and solemn experience for me. The wind had blown hard all day, but when Brother Enge and I began to go out into the water the wind stopped blowing and the water became still. When we came up out of the water the wind began blowing hard again. That was a testimony to me which I shall never forget. I received a letter from Brother Enge a few years ago, not so very long before he died, in which he mentioned that experience and asked me if I had forgotten it. He said that he had testified about it several times in America. On September 15, I received the laying on of hands by Apostle Andersen and the Holy Spirit filled my being. My eyes of understanding are being opened more and more under the inspiration of that same spirit. This Latter Day work becomes more beautiful and glorious to me as the years go by, and I have not been able to find anything that will compare with it.

Peter Andersen and Peter Muceus had many experiences in their work here. I hope that I will not offend anyone when I speak of Brother Andersen as "our beloved brother." He was really that to those of us who came in close contact with him and learned to know him intimately. O, what a wonderful experience it was to sit under the sound of his voice when he preached, or to converse with him privately and feel the depth of wisdom which flowed from him! His humility was great and he felt himself at home among the common people. He used the Inspired Version when it gave more light on the passages under consideration. I have many precious memories of him, and can say as Brother Muceus said of him in Sandhetens Banner, "He lives though he is dead." Truly, he was a great man! He has received that testimony from nonmembers as well as members.

I had the privilege to know and be associated with Brother Muceus, who was one of the pioneers in gospel work in the country many years. As stated, he came on his first mission in 1901 and remained here for fifteen years. His five boys were born in this country. He labored in Porsgrunn, Kragerø, Grimstad, Egersund, Oslo, Bøn, and other places, doing a good work and bringing many souls into the church. He started the work at Bøn in 1904, and soon a branch was organized there. He was fully consecrated to the church and labored for the good of the spiritual welfare of the Saints. He came on his second mission in 1922, stayed two years and then in 1925 came on his third mission. He returned to America in 1927 and has not returned since. I would like to see him here again in missionary work. He has held many meetings—meetings which I remember with joy—in my home in Grimstad and later here in Oslo.

In 1907, I married and established my home in Oslo. There were two or three sisters living here, but I was the only brother in the church. Many times it has been my happy experience to meet the missionaries when they came from America and to be of some help to them. In these years I have become acquainted with no less than sixteen representatives sent out by the church in America to Scandinavia. Twelve of these were missionaries, three apostles, and one member of the First Presidency. Among those beside the ones already mentioned are H. N. Hansen, T. O. Strand, O. W. Okerlind, Oscar Johnson, C. A. Swensen, P. T. Andersen, E. Y. Hunker, V. D. Ruch, P. M. Hanson, J. W. Rushton, and President F. M. McDowell. I have found them all to be men of God and consider myself fortunate to have known them. I was associated often with H. N. Hansen and T. O. Strand and these memories are sweet to me.

I think it was in August, 1920 that I met P. T. Andersen for the first time when he was on his way to Denmark. Since then he has been in Norway several times and we have had many good meetings together. About a month later Oscar Johnson and family stopped here on their way to Sweden and stayed at our home.

From 1916 to 1922 no missionary work was done in Norway. During that time, some of the Saints united with other churches and some others died. My wife and I kept as near to God as possible and rejoiced in the light of (Continued on page 1483.)

of
President Joseph Smith
(1832-1914)

Edited by his daughter
Mary Audentia Smith Anderson

He went to Watertown, New York, met some of his family, and remained there during the rest of his life. He was a man of ingenuity; had invented a system of stencils which, with other notions, he used to sell. Together with some teaching of penmanship these sales afforded him such income as he needed. I corresponded with him for quite a number of years. He married at Watertown but I never heard anything about his family after his death.

Mother had ten or twelve patients that fall, for whom she cared principally by the labor of her own hands, although we children including our sister Julia, who was quite small for her age, tried to help her as best we could. She managed to keep well herself, and to live through the strenuous trial. In the language of the Scripture, "not one was lost," nor did she or her children suffer—a gratifying result chiefly attributable to her wise care and excellent administration of affairs.

Whether at that time or later I cannot say, but there came from the East—New York, I think—an allopathic doctor by the name of John M. Bernhisel. He was old enough to be gray and partially bald, a bachelor, an excellent and skillful physician, and very successful in treating the malarial diseases which were then quite prevalent. The flat lying between the main street and the river a few blocks north of us was quite swampy, and there were other places similar. The people who settled in such localities or along the river were subject to swamp-fever, chill-fever, or fever-and-ague. While proving serious in some cases, the affliction could usually be overcome by proper care and an obedience to the directions of a physician in regard to diet. Often, however, it lingered quite a long while before completely eradicated.

I have a distinct recollection of having chill-fever. I also remember the remedies I took for it, among them some pills called Sappington's Pills. They were evidently made of wood-fibers covered with a coating which was bitter to the taste. A treatment curious enough to provoke a smile now was in use at that time. These "cleansing" pills were given, and a short time before the next chill was due the patient was required to take a remedy called Dover's Powders. This was followed by drinking a strong concoction of what was called "store tea." Looking back at it now it seems that, when faith failed, people resorted to many strange remedies—things which would now be considered futile if not absolutely dangerous to the life of the patient.

Two instances in my experience with this disease come to mind. One occurred after Father's death. I was slowly recovering from an attack of the fever and wanted something or other. There was no one about the house but Mother, so I called her. When she failed to answer, I seemed to get frantic, and got right out of bed. I was not strong enough to stand, however. My head whirled and I fell to the floor, calling out loudly as I did so.

Mother hurried to me, helped me back into bed, and told me I should not be so foolish, explaining that she had her work to do in addition to waiting on me, and that if she couldn't come at once I should be patient and remember that she would do what she could for me just as soon as she could. The lesson was a good one and I took it to heart.

In two or three days I seemed to be well enough to go out into the yard. It was a fine, sunny day in the fall. A new fence had been built across the lot, extending down towards the stable and dividing the garden from the dooryard. It was an ordinary post-and-board fence, with a board nailed on the top, flat-wise. I mounted this fence and undertook to walk this flat board. As might be expected I fell, struck a pile of rails that were stacked against the fence, and rolled to the ground. Getting to my feet I started to the house, but before I could reach it I began shaking from head to foot with a severe attack of ague. Some time elapsed after that before I again reached a state of convalescence.

At another and considerably later time, I had an attack which hung on persistently, in spite of all the remedies administered to relieve me. A couple of men "from off the river" came along, one of whom gave the name of Joseph Smith, a clerk on the steamer Tempest. They asked for a horse and buggy to convey them up to the hill portion of the city. Though we were keeping a hotel we did not run a livery, but we did have a mare called Cleopatra. She had been used by some of the young men during the trouble of '46, and had lately been ill. We had no buggy of our own, but there was one in the barn which belonged to a transient traveler.

At the earnest importunities of these men, who said they just wished to go up to the hill and back, and relying on their promise that they would drive the convalescent mare carefully and return her at noon, I obeyed Mother's direction, harnessed Cleopatra, and hitched her to the buggy. The young men drove away, but when noon arrived, they did not! In the afternoon I saw the mare hitched in front of a grocery-saloon kept by an Englishman named Hanna. It was located on the west side of Main Street, on the second block north of the Mansion House.

Not feeling well myself, I sent Wesley Knight, an assistant we had about the hotel and stable, to see about the animal. Presently he returned with the report that the men would be down in a few minutes. For some reason I felt mistrustful, so took a stroll up toward the saloon. Just before I reached it those two men, accompanied by another, came out, jumped into the buggy, put whip to the mare, and raced down the hill. As they passed me I shook my fist at them and shouted that they could just send the horse back, for it wouldn't be safe or healthy for them to bring her back! I was furiously angry! Just closing my fifteenth year and being a rather lusty fellow for my age, I fancy they were inclined to view my threat with respect, for they did indeed send the animal back by someone else and never even returned to pay for her use.

I got this benefit out of the incident, however: my anger and indignation were so great I found myself entirely relieved of my attack of ague! The reader may think these statements very curious, but nevertheless they are true; a jar received in a fall from a fence brought on one siege of chill-fever, and getting extremely angry had the surprising effect of curing me of another!

These are all quite trivial incidents, but they have in a sense left an impression upon my life. The gradual disappearance of wild soil, the cultivation of gardens and fields, and clearing the swamps of brush finally resulted in establishing on a firmer basis the health of the inhabitants of Nauvoo.

Bits of Memory

Bits of memory about some of our neighbors in those early days come to view. Hugh White, from whom Father purchased the farm, had married a daughter of Davidson Hibbard who lived but a little farther down the river. At the time we moved in, however, his family was broken up through the desertion of his wife. She became the wife of someone else, lived in the South a while, and then came back to Nauvoo after abandoning her second husband. She may have contracted other alliances, one of which I think was with Porter Rockwell, but she finally married a man by the name of Tilton, with whom she was living at the time of her death. She was quite a beautiful woman; lived for a time in the house built by Orson Hyde and later farther down Main Street in a frame building remodeled by a brother from Saint Louis, by the name of Shaw. Her given name was Emmeline, and when she died after her successive ventures in the matrimonial market—lonely, unfortunate, and unhappy—she left an adopted daughter who became quite an estimable citizen of the place.

Davidson Hibbard was a very kindly man whose family consisted of his wife, a son William, and the three daughters, Elvira, Emmeline, and Lovina. Elvira became the wife of Doctor Weld, a physician of the old or allopathic school and the first one I remember as being a practitioner in the place. Afterwards Elvira left Doctor Weld and became the wife of Amos Davis. Again she changed her partner and married Putnam Yates. Deserting him she took up her fortunes with a fourth man by the name of Peter (or Pierre) Helm, with whom she lived until her death.

Mr. Hibbard's youngest daughter married Milton M. Morrill, a relative of the Honorable Morrill of Maine—of tariff memory, if my recollections are correct. She was a woman of good character, maintained an excellent reputation, and was one of the leading ladies of Nauvoo. She may be living now, in the city or its vicinity, with sons and daughters. Her husband, when she married him, was a young lawyer from the East, who pitched his legal fortunes at Nauvoo and became one of the leading lawyers and politicians of the County, on the Democratic side of the political fence. He was sent to the Legislature once, but finally became too fond of his cups, wasted his wife's patrimony as well as his own earnings, and died a drunkard.

Besides his widow he left two sons, Ernest and Milton, and a daughter—a very pretty young woman. The oldest son, I believe, escaped the snares of intoxication under which his father had gone down. I have lost track of the younger one, but recall an occasion when, visiting a place of resort with Mr. Morrill on a matter of business connected with a suit before me as Justice of the Peace, I saw the boy sitting at a table playing cards with a companion, glasses of whiskey standing about on the table. As we passed Mr. Morrill said, "Why, Milton, what are you doing here? I thought you were at work."

The lad looked up, shame-faced, but answered nothing. As we passed out, Mr. Morrill expressed regret at finding his son in such a place and in such employment. I suggested, "What could you expect, Mr. Morrill, from the example you have set the boy?" And with a sigh he answered, "Yes, Joseph; I know it."

Mr. Morrill became identified with a good many events and occurrences connected with our family after my mother's second marriage, as will appear later on. In passing I may say that the example set in the community by Mr. Morrill was one of the things that made me a temperance lecturer. He was a man of brilliant intellect, an excellent lawyer, and a good pleader at the bar and before a jury, although he became a bit unscrupulous about the methods he employed in his practice before the courts. I will not say that those methods were dishonest in the strict sense of the term, but rather that they were in a measure "tricks of the trade" which to me seemed unjustifiable. Intoxicating liquors often turn otherwise excellent men into questionable paths.

Farmer Hibbard was among the first acquaintances we made upon moving to the Hugh White farm. Soon after we came Mother purchased a cow from him and it became largely my task to look after it. I well remember the appearance of this cow and her disposition, which was very erratic. She was very hard to milk and, becoming tired with my efforts to do so, would break away from me and run back home to Mr. Hibbard's place. Once I chased her back twice before I succeeded in getting her milked, after which we tied her up at milking time. We retained her for many years, notwithstanding the frequent trouble she gave us in various ways.

The acquaintance early formed with Mr. Hibbard and his family continued pleasantly through the years. He was often called Deaf Hibbard, because of the apparent difficulty of his hearing. The illness which finally ended his life lasted for several months and those in attendance upon him became somewhat worn and weary. I was requested to visit him and wait upon him, as he had inquired at times for me and said he would like to see me.

One day I sat by his side outdoors, as he lay on a mattress in the shade of the house to escape the heat indoors. He seemed to be asleep and I read as I watched with him. Suddenly he turned and said, "Come here, Joseph."

I went over close to him and he asked, in a low voice, "Is there anyone near?" I said, "No, Mr. Hibbard," speaking in the loud tone I had been in the habit of using when addressing him.

Very soberly he said, "Joseph, I can hear you very well. When there is no one year you needn't speak so loud to me. When somebody is about, then speak loud."

I sat by his side for an hour in easy conversation carried on in ordinary tones. He told me much of his life, assured me of his regard and interest in me, and said he hoped I would live to be a good and useful man. I did not ask him for an explanation concerning his supposed deafness, for I thought I understood it. His wife was an arrant scold, and he had evidently quite early concluded it was better to go through life with the reputation of being a deaf man than to be worried by her scolding. I had been present on occasions when she was storming, and had noticed the quiet demeanor of the man, as if he did not hear her. I concluded he had been shamming for a good many years. I never betrayed his confidence, either by failing to address him loudly when others were present or forgetting to address him quietly when we were alone.

His son William grew up a wild, rollicking young man, full of frolic and fun, but given to drink. Many a time I saw him going home from town, racing his horse to keep ahead of the marshal. Several times I remember he was arrested and fined, until his father's patience and kindness were severely tried. During the gold excitement in California in '49 and '50 he left Nauvoo for the gold mines. He succeeded in getting through to California, but there, unfortunately and evidently in a drunken frolic, he stole a horse. Under the regulations of the mining country at that time such an act was considered a grave crime and punishable by death.

The usual vigilante court was summoned, he was tried, found guilty, and sentenced to die. The court gave him his choice between hanging or being shot. He chose the latter, sold his head to a rising young doctor for a quart of whiskey, which he promptly drank and in the stupor that followed paid the penalty adjudged against him.

He left a wife and son in Nauvoo. The wife married secondly, Isaac Saunders. The son, William by name, grew up in the community, kept away from the dram-shop, studied law, and achieved the reputation of a good citizen. He married the daughter of Bryant Whitfield, for a long time constable in Nauvoo, and died in middle life, having maintained his integrity and honor as a man to the last.

Chapter II—School Days

Miss Durfee

The first teacher with whom I recollect studying was Miss Julia Durfee, daughter of a church member by the name of Jabez Durfee. She and her sister Servilla were employed by my mother, the former as a seamstress and the latter as a maid-of-all-work. Not having enough work in the sewing line to occupy all of Miss Durfee's time and attention Mother thought it prudent to have her assist in our education, and my sister Julia and I were placed under her care for this purpose. Thus our earliest instruction was received in the home.

There was no public school in Nauvoo at the time nor until after the city was incorporated. Even then I think several more years elapsed before the public school system of the state became so far perfected that there were established schools of that sort. At all events, it was Miss Durfee who, for a stipend, taught us in our home the fundamentals of what education we were afterwards able to acquire.

Miss Wheeler

The arrangement with Miss Durfee evidently did not continue long, for what reason I do not know, and my next recollection of lessons takes in a school held in the little log building on the riverbank, under the big walnut tree. This school was taught by a Miss (or Mrs.) Wheeler, who afterwards, I believe, became a Mrs. Olney. So many Saints had moved in during the fall of 1839 and the summer of 1840 that it became impracticable to continue the plan of teaching children in their homes.

Book of Mormon Notes

The Gadianton Robbers

By J. A. Robinson

In the light of the corruption in present-day politics and the strangle hold gangdom seems to have upon the United States, it is interesting to review briefly a similar condition of affairs existing intermittently from 51 B. C. to 385 A. D. The reader may draw his own comparisons, as I shall, perhaps, confine myself to a mere recitation of the rise of this body of gangsters which in Book of Mormon times were called the Gadianton robbers.

It is clearly stated by Alma (17: 52-62) that such organizations existed among the Jaredites—the first inhabitants of Book of Mormon record to inhabit America—causing their final destruction. This was corroborated by Moroni writing some 500 years later (Ether 6: 16).

Their author and founder is Satan (Helaman 2: 151-156) who put the secret desires for murder and gain into the Gadianton heart, who beguiled our first parents, and who is the author of all sin.

A record of their oaths in Jaredite times, which had been handed down from Cain and kept up by the power of the devil, was engraven on the Twenty-four Gold Plates, but Moroni was commanded not to put them in his record. (Ether 3: 89, 90, 94.) Moroni gave us a warning, however, (98-102) which we quote in full and which will serve as an excuse—if apology is necessary—for choosing this theme for this article. He says, "Wherefore the Lord commandeth you, when ye shall see these things come among you, that ye shall awake to a sense of your awful situation, because of this secret combination which shall be among you, or wo be unto it, because of the blood of them who have been slain; for they cry from the dust for vengeance upon it, and also upon those who build it up.

"For it cometh to pass that whoso buildeth it up, seeketh to overthrow the freedom of all lands, nations and countries:

"And it bringeth to pass the destruction of all people, for it is built up by the devil, who is the father of all lies; even that same liar who beguiled our first parents;

"Yea even that same liar who hath caused man to commit murder from the beginning; who hath hardened the hearts of men, that they have murdered the prophets, and stoned them, and cast them out from the beginning.

"Wherefore I, Moroni, am commanded to write these things, that evil may be done away, and that the time may come that Satan may have no power upon the hearts of the children of men, but that they may be persuaded to do good continually, that they may come unto the fountain of all righteousness and be saved."

In Nephite times, 51 B. C., (Helaman 1: 1-14) the movement had its inception in a political contest over the governorship or judgment seat. There were three candidates, Pahoran, Paanchi and Pacumeni. When the returns were in Pahoran was elected. Pacumeni, like a good party man, "got on the band wagon," and threw his support to Pahoran. But Paanchi could not take defeat gracefully; he became sore—"exceeding wroth," the record tells us—and organized a secret insurrection.

Kishkumen, the gunman of that day, was sent by the party to assassinate Pahoran. He accomplished his dastardly deed while Pahoran sat on the judgment seat.

Though pursued by the servants of Pahoran he escaped, but because of the underworld oaths, combinations, and secrecy, a band was organized which enabled him to mingle with the people unmolested. Some members of this "mob" were captured and put to death, but the organization continued to grow and enlarge its field of endeavor.

This Kishkumen was killed in 49 B. C., in an attempt on the life of Helaman who had succeeded Pahoran as Chief Judge. Helaman attempted to clean up the gang but they fled into the wilderness where they consolidated under the leadership of Gadianton, who became their governor and after whom the gang was named. (Helaman 1: 39-49.)

About seven years later, or 42 B. C., they had taken up their activities in the more settled parts of the land, unknown to the government officials. (Helaman 2: 21.) By 24 B. C. the gang had extended its activities even among the Lamanites and had a firm hold on the Nephites. (138-144.) And here we give the robber law, (145-148).

"But . . . the Nephites . . . did unite with those bands of robbers, and did enter into their covenants, and their oaths, that they would protect and preserve one another, in whatsoever difficult circumstances they should be placed, that they should not suffer for their murders, and their plunderings, and their stealings.

"And it came to pass that they did have their signs, yea, their secret signs, and their secret words; and this that they might distinguish a brother who had entered into the covenant, that whatsoever wickedness his brother should do, he should not be injured by his brother, nor by those who did belong to his band, who had taken this covenant;

"And thus they might murder, and plunder, and steal, and commit whoredoms, and all manner of wickedness, contrary to the laws of their country and also the laws of their God;

"And whosoever of those who belonged to their band, should reveal unto the world of their wickedness and their abominations, should be tried, not according to the laws of their country, but according to the laws of their wickedness, which had been given by Gadianton and Kishkumen."

In the following year—23 B. C.—the Lamanites drove out the band from among them, but "they did obtain the sole management of the government [of the Nephites] in-so-much that they did trample under their feet, and smite; and rend, and turn their backs upon the poor, and the meek, and the humble followers of God." (Helaman 2: 164-168.)

Nephi, the son of Helaman, had an encounter with them in 22 B. C. and denounced them, with the result that they made attempts to destroy him, but in this they were unsuccessful. (Helaman 3: 3, 4.)

A gang murder is recorded about the year 21 B. C. (Helaman 3: 65, 66.) Jealous aspirations for political power was the motive. In 19 B. C. internecine war existed for about two years. This was followed by a famine, after which a reformed people "swept away the band of Gadianton from amongst them, inso-much that they have become extinct, and they have concealed their secret plans in the earth." (Helaman 4: 13.) This was about 16 B. C.

Five years later—11 B. C.—some dissenters reorganized the gang but made their headquarters in the wilderness. (Helaman 4: 30-32.) As a consequence for the next thirteen years, or from 11 B. C. to 2 A. D., iniquity increased and in the latter year we find many Nephites and Lamanites joining the robber band. (3 Nephi 1: 33-37.) Though the work of evangelization was carried forward with vigor—"much preaching and prophesying"—(47) the gang continued to grow and became very numerous and very bold, slaying many people, raiding and laying waste many cities (48) "that it became expedient that all the people, both of the Nephites, and the Lamanites, should take up arms against them." This covered a period of perhaps twelve years, or from 2 to 14 A. D.

Then followed a war for the next five years during which in 16 A. D. a most remarkable document (3 Nephi 2: 2-12) was received by Lachoneus, the Chief Judge, from Giddianhi, the robber chieftain, demanding the lands and possessions of the Nephites in exchange for their lives. It was an ancient prototype of the present-day extortion note. The

Refrigeration Health Measures

By A. W. Teel, M. D.

Church Physician

The past summer's extreme hot weather and its drouth have brought to my mind the necessity of the icebox which should be in every family. Good health is difficult to obtain or preserve without proper refrigeration. When I write upon the subject of dietetics, I expect to have a good deal to say about good food, and good food is practically impossible in these modern times without proper refrigeration.

Before mechanical refrigeration became popular, many people were much afraid of it on account of the chemicals used, but thanks to modern ingenuity, such danger has been eliminated. Mechanical refrigeration is much more practical and dependable than the old-fashioned icebox. When this kind of a refrigerator was preferred, numerous types came on the market which are very efficient. So far as possible, all foodstuff should be kept at an even temperature, at about 50 degrees Fahrenheit.

Mechanical refrigeration seems to me to have the greatest advantage on account of its continuous and easily regulated temperature. One of the sources of poisons in the pantry is due to improper refrigeration. Those who do not use a mechanical refrigerator should be careful about its location in the house. It should not be placed too close to the kitchen stove, in a sunny corner or near poorly fitted doors as this will cause added expense and prevent the maintenance of even temperature. Milk being popularly used as a food for infants and children, even though it is pasteurized, may be changed to a dangerous food by being allowed to stand in a warm place even for a short time. This neglect is the cause of the many forms of digestive disturbances that frequently result in very serious and protracted illnesses. I have known of neglect of this kind to result in the death of many individuals. Thanks to modern science we now have means of keeping wholesome, perishable foods. In selecting a mechanical refrigerator one should be very careful to select one that is free from mechanical defects. There are many on the market that are made to sell and not to use.

The great truths of religion are not primarily intellectual. Christianity did not originate in logical propositions, and it cannot be kept alive by insistence on rigid acceptance of ancient creedal statements. The vital truths of Christianity are all truths of experience.

The Children's Division

Church-wide Children's "Friendship Circle"

A Project for the Children's Division

By Mildred Goodfellow, Associate Director

"I want you to know how enthusiastically the children with whom I talked grasped at the idea of the 'Friendship Circle.'"

"Examining this week's Herald, I noticed your article. The suggestions are fine and will be the means of cementing the bond of love between the countries in which our church has members."

"I am children's supervisor of our church school and in reading over your article on the 'Friendship Circle' I was much interested, so will you please send me some addresses to write to."

The above quotations from letters received from leaders and teachers indicate the interest shown in the "Friendship Circle" project. Names and addresses have been sent to leaders and teachers in the States of Missouri, Texas, Illinois, California, Ohio, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Washington and Kentucky.

Missionaries and leaders in other countries are very much interested in the project. One director of religious education sent letters to all the church schools in his district, requesting names and addresses of teachers in the children's division. Their response was splendid. In some countries the boys and girls know about the project and are looking forward to receiving letters. We do not want a single child to be disappointed.

A number of names and addresses still remain to be sent out. It is not too late to take part in the project. Even though it may not be possible to send some of the letters in time to reach their destination by Christmas, we are sure the children in other lands will be happy to receive the letters any time.

It is hoped that leaders and teachers will tell their boys and girls about the project. There is no question but what the children will be interested in it and anxious to take part.

Workers in other lands have done and are doing their part. In the interests of the children of the church, leaders are earnestly requested to help make the project a success.

WOMEN AND MODERN SOCIAL DEMANDS

marry missionaries, willing with the thought in mind that they will sacrifice and help to inspire the husband to nobler service.

Finally we come to the woman in business, while we think it an abnormal condition for mothers to be engaged as wage-earners outside the home, yet we find so many unmarried women and widows who are dependent upon their own earnings that even if the mother did not work, our problem would still be large.

Miss Laura Drake Gill, in A Creed of Work for Women, sets forth some things we believe to be essential. She says that every woman needs a skilled occupation developed to the degree of possible self-support. "She needs it for an assurance against reverses. She needs it for a comprehending sympathy with the world's workers." But we have said that mothers should not work outside the home. If this is true then every girl should remain unmarried until she has learned to be self-supporting. This throws us into the problem of late marriage, and so we see it is a large problem.

Every woman should know how to spend. She must know how to select food which will yield the best returns in energy and tissue building. She must know how to dress so that she will be able to conserve the heat yielded by her food intake; so that she will convey to her associates a conviction of her strong womanly qualities and so she will have the right influence upon the production of textile fabrics and the welfare of garment workers.

The present conditions have thrown open the door of opportunity to women to enter many fields of service as wage-earner wherein she may exert her influence for the improvement of conditions, both economic and social.

It seems to have been woman's part in civilization to devote her time and strength to the alleviation of suffering. This has been true because of her faculty of discerning suffering and wishing to reduce it. In earlier times woman's resources were largely her ability to persuade her husband of the importance of a particular "charity," but as time went on the old idea of almsgiving gave way to a more systematic method of relief and various kinds of relief associations have resulted. Women have shown great initiative in promoting constructive methods of reducing misery and dependence.

We see the many, many opportunities open to women. But we are sorry to note that there is at least one result of the women's movement that is not commendable. The modern "feminist" idea has taken woman out of the home to compete with man in all fields of work. Some women have thought that they will succeed in proportion as they suppress maternity. Hericourt says that the wife is most often the member of the family responsible for the restriction of the birth-rate. It was no more than justice for women to claim the same legal rights with men, but presently a doctrine was developed which was transformed into an active campaign, the underlying idea of which was that woman should compete with man in all the fields heretofore reserved for masculine activity, and that this new state of affairs would happily result in the disappearance of feminine purity. Since the child was the only obstacle in the way, there was nothing to do but suppress maternity. Many girls, in all classes of life, have declared, with an absence of shame, that they would marry willingly enough, but that they were not going to have any children.

In order that the family shall fulfill its social function, without which no society is possible, the home must exist and the home cannot exist without the presence of the woman and her children.

Like all other reformers, the advocates of women's freedom have gone too far, some even advocating that women should choose a single life, but we trust that in a short time women as a whole will see the folly of this phase of the movement.

Life is making so many calls upon women. It is becoming much more complex in the ever-increasing avenues of service opening to her, but her intensive preparation for the work she intends to do is manifested on all sides and as always in her history woman is accepting her lot and answering the call. It is true that she will make mistakes, she may stumble by the way, but her eyes are directed to the duty ahead and she will not falter. How much the future holds of service for each woman only time can tell.

In order to meet the needs of the time, the life of woman must be, and is being, revolutionized. She must know how to live so that she may keep in touch with the world's progress in order that she may exert her influence toward that progress, and so that she may continue to grow socially, intellectually, and spiritually. The same single heartedness of purpose and devotion to an ideal that have characterized her life will furnish the motive power in this new life, among these greater cares and responsibilities.

It has been said that the social gospel of the new education for woman is, "Let us build on, hopeful of the future, for social justice, for social intelligence, for social facilities, for a democracy realized in happy, busy, beneficent, effective human beings, that are the real wealth of nations."

Woman's freedom will result in a purer ideal of citizenship. It will bring a finer civilization where men and women, as God intended, shall work together for the betterment of humanity.

THE NORWEGIAN MISSION

truth. I attended the meetings of other churches once in a while but found nothing to compare with the gospel I had accepted.

I remember the joy that filled my bosom when one day during the summer of 1922 I received a letter from Brother Muceus which stated that he and two other missionaries and their families were coming to Norway to start missionary work again. One day in August, 1922, I stood on the pier in Oslo when the steamer from America arrived. How glad I was to recognize Brother Muceus standing on deck, and by his side, Brother Hunker. I was delighted to welcome them and to talk especially with Brother Muceus again. Brother Hunker couldn't speak Norwegian at that time. I took them to my home, and I remember that the first official act they performed was to bless a bottle of oil and administer to my wife who was sick. Brethren Muceus and Hunker stood and held the bottle of oil between them and Hunker blessed it, using the English language. That was Brother Hunker's first church work here.

Later in the fall, in November, 1922, Brother Ruch and his family came from America and it was my good pleasure to make their acquaintance. They located in Porsgrunn where they lived the first few years of their mission here. Brother Muceus also made his headquarters at Porsgrunn, while Brother Hunker located with his family at Bøn.

At Whitsundtide, 1924, a two-day meeting was held at Bøn. This has since proved to be an annual affair, the meetings being held in turn at various places. The Saints of Norway, as well as members from Sweden and Denmark have attended these annual meetings receiving much spiritual benefit.

In 1924, Apostle Hanson visited this mission for the first time. He has been here several times since, the last time in 1930 when he was accompanied by President McDowell on a short visit. The work of Brother Hanson was much appreciated. Especially were we happy to welcome Brother McDowell, as this was the first time that a member of the First Presidency had visited the mission. We have often wished that a Patriarch would visit Scandinavia. None has ever been here.

Brother Hunker has been on two missions here, about four years altogether. The first time he had his family with him and they were here about two years and nine months. The last time he came alone, remaining about fifteen months and dividing his work between Norway, Sweden and Denmark. We had many good meetings under his leadership and he was an instrument in God's hands to bring a few souls into the Kingdom.

Brother Ruch and family are here with us now on their second mission. The first time they were here from 1922 to 1927 (nearly five years). They returned to America for a short time and then came back to us just before Christmas in 1928. They are still here and we are pleased that they are to remain here for another conference period. Besides living in Porsgrunn, they have resided at Bøn several years where they did a good work, baptizing several, developing a large Sunday School, Women's Department, and a Young Girl's Society. In 1931 they moved to Grefsen, a suburb of Oslo, and since then have done a good work in Oslo. Many years ago Brother Muceus and Brother Andersen did considerable missionary work in Oslo, but since then practically nothing has been done until Brother Ruch opened up the work here. He has been assisted some by P. T. Andersen, and we have enjoyed some of the best meetings that it has ever been our privilege to attend. Brother Andersen has the gift of prophecy, and through him God spoke to us several times and many of the promises given have been fulfilled. Brother Ruch has worked hard in this large city trying to get the work established firmly. He has held many meetings in private homes, in public halls and a series of open-air meetings each summer. Several have been baptized, four brethren have been called and ordained to the priesthood in this city, and in September, 1932, a branch was organized here. Sister Ruch is a valuable asset to the work. Her work among the women as well as along musical lines has been a wonderful help to the cause. Brother and Sister Ruch have experienced many disappointments in their work, and at times the way seemed dark, but I am convinced that they will yet see greater results from the consecrated efforts they are putting forth.

Apostle Rushton visited this mission in 1932 and spent several weeks with us. While here he organized branches at Porsgrunn and in Oslo. His work and interest in this mission was very much appreciated and we recognize in him a servant of God. We are expecting him to visit us again in the near future.

Brother Ruch is the lone missionary here at present and has the oversight of the work in all three of the Scandinavian countries. The field is too large for one missionary. We hope the time will come when several missionaries may be appointed to this field.

Brotherly greetings to the Saints in all the world.

THE GADIANTON ROBBERS

Nephites did not meet the demand but gathered in the center of their lands. (19-24.)

The robbers found themselves short of subsistence by the year 18 A. D. They had occupied the outlying districts and some abandoned cities, but there was no game to be found and no provisions to be had, so in the sixth month of 19 A. D. they attacked the Nephite stronghold. This proved to be a terrible battle in which these ancient gangsters were defeated and their "big shot," Giddianhi, was slain. (60)

They would not risk another battle in the open, but under a new chieftain by the name of Zemnaridah, they laid siege to the Nephite concentration camp. The final battles resulted in victory for the Nephites. Zemnaridah was taken captive about the year 22 A. D. and hanged to a tree, and all prisoners who would not keep the peace and swear to do no more murder were executed. (75, 76.) The prisoners taken captive were given opportunity for repentance by the preaching of the word of God to them while in prison. Those who repented and covenanted to do no more murder were set free, but those who refused were condemned and punished according to law.

In 26 A. D. all the people returned to their lands, "every man with his family, his flocks and his herds, his horses and his cattle, and all things whatsoever did belong unto them." (3 Nephi 3:1.) "And they granted unto those robbers who had entered into a covenant to keep the peace of the land, who were desirous to remain Lamanites, lands, according to their numbers, that they might have, with their labors, wherewith to subsist upon; and thus they did establish peace in all the land." (4)

Though the robbers had been defeated and peace established once more, wickedness began to increase so that, by the year 30 A. D. corruption was again rampant in government circles and one faction was for establishing a kingdom. (3 Nephi 3: 19, 20, 32-35.) Because of political vice and dereliction the government broke down entirely and became of a tribal nature. (37-46.) This condition existed until 34 A. D., when the great cataclysm occurred which destroyed the wicked, burying cities, burning others, and changing the whole topography of the country. (3 Nephi 4: 6-25.)

Christ then appeared and established a zionic condition, and it is 260 A. D. before we hear again of the robbers as a band. About this year "It came to pass that the wicked part of the people began again to build up the secret oaths and combinations of Gadianton." (4 Nephi 1: 50.) For the next ninety years they appear to have been allies of the Lamanites in their wars with the Nephites, and in 350 A. D. a treaty was executed granting the robbers and Lamanites a division of the Nephite inheritances. (Mormon 1: 60.)

It was only thirty-five years later—385 A. D.—that the last battles of the Nephites were fought in the vicinity of the Hill Cumorah, and the Nephites as a people were utterly destroyed. (Mormon 3: 6-17.)

Thus we come to the end of our terrible tale, but we would not conclude without again calling attention to the warning of Moroni, "When ye shall see these things come among you that ye shall awake to a sense of your awful situation."

What God Requires

The key to spiritual insight and power is found in the practice of alternation: forgetting self in carrying human burdens, and putting these burdens down and appropriating the values of silent worship and corporate fellowship. He who is concerned chiefly with his own comfort and safety need not expect to be flooded with spiritual energy. Long ago it was pointed out that the only way to find life is to fling it away. It is imperative that we rise above the pressures of individualism with its appeal to self-interest and blot out personal appetites and selfish ambitions with an overwhelming compassion.

Fear of failure is an obstacle in the pathway of religious vitality. Therefore it is imperative that we remember that God does not require "success" of us, any more than he required it of Jesus. Moreover God does not hold us responsible for the "success" of the cause into which we throw ourselves with abandon. When Jesus was hanging on the cross no cause seemed more irretrievably lost than the one to which he had given himself without restraint. In the garden of Gethsemane Jesus had wrestled with this crucial problem: which is more important, life or a way of life? Never did more hang upon a single decision. If he had decided that he must not "waste" his life or jeopardize the "success" of his cause, and had therefore "adjusted" his own ideals to the practices of his contemporaries, his name would not even have been preserved in the records of history. He became pre-eminent because he risked everything upon his faith in a chosen way of life.

It is evident that God requires three things of us: the selection of the noblest objectives, the choice of effective methods which are consistent with these ends, and supreme loyalty to these goals and these procedures. Success is not demanded of us. The outcome is in the hands of the Eternal. It is our business to pursue these ends with these methods alike in "failure" and in "success." Thus it is apparent that one condition of spiritual radiance is the throwing of self with utter abandon into the crusade for justice and fellowship, even to the extent of being willing to go down in "defeat" personally and corporately.—By Kirby Page in The Christian Century.

Last Statement to Conference

This is the last recorded statement of the late President Joseph Smith to the General Conference. From the General Conference Minutes, April 15, 1914.

It would have been manifestly improper for me to have spoken to the adoption or rejection of this document, for no one knows better than I, who stands in the presence of God today, I shall have to answer for the genuine character of that which was presented, and shall be judged as one who stands upon the honesty of purpose and the integrity of duty to be performed. Called, as has been acknowledged by the church, by divine authority, under which the church originated, and under which it has always existed, and that call and the investiture of the right to act having been received from the people of the church in solemn assembly and acquiesced in for fifty-three years, I have a right to believe that as I stand to answer before God for my honesty and uprightness of intent and purpose and for the integrity of duty which I may have performed under this calling, knowing full well that I stand nearer to the answering of my duty before God than perhaps any other man in this assembly (with perhaps two or three exceptions); hence I may say with confidence that I feel very grateful indeed to God and very grateful to the people composing the church and its representatives here for the kindness of their treatment to me in the discharge of this duty of answering to the call of the people imploring divine direction and in transmitting what I received through the Spirit which directs the work unto those who represent the body at large.

The difficulties rise up before me, and it is necessary, and it always has been for me to take a careful survey of the whole field, so far as my ability enables me to do, and when that is done, to transmit faithfully, the intent and purpose and the will of the Master, who has so far carried the work, in his wisdom, and has not as yet permitted it to meet with defeat or disaster. Hence, I would, if I could, put within the mind,—and I may add, the soul—of everyone present today, what I have felt of the difficulty of the situation under which I was called to act, and of that which I have felt in discharging that duty. For the wisdom of it, I do not answer; for the reason of it, any portion of it, I do not answer; I know not, beyond what is given, what may have been in the divine mind, and should anyone of you ask me about this or that in any of the revelations which I have been permitted to give to the church, I must answer, inevitably, unless the revelation itself contains a reason, or the reasons for them, I am not able to answer. I am but an humble instrument in the hands of God, as are all of you; I claim no higher tribute, no higher characteristic or qualifications of honesty, of intent or purpose, than each one of you may claim. I am not to be considered as within the counsel of the Almighty, only so far as that counsel is transmitted by the voice of inspiration to me, when action on my part is required. I dare not listen to the cries of disaster, of loss or damage. I dare not lift up my heart in triumph at apparent conquest over enemies that oppose the church. I can only, as the rest of you, do that duty that lies nearest to me, and which I am expected to perform, and leave the result in the hands of God; and brethren, before him, if he does not know his duty, and has not had the ability to perform it, I am sure, so far as I am concerned, he has chosen weak instrumentality. Whether or not, individuals called thus, choose to serve the church or refuse, it lies with them; if they refuse to receive the word of God, that which must ensue, lies with us; if we do, and we are blessed as we have been hitherto in many instances by following the divine mind, we surely are justified in a large degree for still making appeal to him, and trusting to that which he may give us.

I have, for the last year, studied earnestly what might result, providing that the inflow of means to sustain our work should cease, and that sooner or later the Bishopric would not be able, out of that which was in the treasury, to meet the demands of those who are abroad in the fields, or of those officers who are necessarily gathered to the centers of business for the transaction of the affairs of the church. What would be the result? For a goodly number of years, the church existed, the ministrations of the preaching of the gospel continued, and we had no systematized form of administration of the affairs of the Bishopric, but individuals went out, taking, as it were, their lives and their human fortunes in their hands, and trusting to the charity of those among whom they labored for the sustenance that stands in the giving of daily bread to them or those dependent upon them.

I have concluded that should some of those things occur, which some have seemed to foresee, it could but be the interest or the duty of the church in the magnificent faith of those who might remain faithful unto Christ to again take up the peripatetic work of the church, and so far as it is possible for them to continue the preaching of the gospel until the fortunes of the church shall again be resuscitated by divine assistance, and those who were able to help us again send their tributes of support into the work of the church, to those who had charge of the treasury.

It seems to me that we ought not to faint, that we ought not to fail, that we ought not to quail; and when I learn that our elders have sat in discussion before those who have attacked the faith, I have lifted my heart and hands in prayer to God, asking that they might be sustained, and from the day when Brother William Kelley and myself in the discharge of our duty, our ministerial duty, passed on into Canada and Brother Blair in the discharge of his duty provided for a discussion at Quincy, Michigan, and we three old elders in the work, left a boy, scarcely turned in his majority to meet a polished minister of the Christian Church, and we went out and left him to the battle, and we carried away with us (I answer for one)—we carried away with us no fear of disaster, no fear of defeat. We believed that as the young man with his sling and pebble from the brook, met the champion of the Philistine host and defended Israel against that attack, so would the Master's arm thus lead, and he would maintain the faith. And so it has been since that year, 1878, if my memory serves me right, that we have been thus trusting to God and to Christ in the defense of his work. Shall we fail now? In the name of God, No! in the name of Christ, Nay! in the name of the Holy Spirit, which has stood by us from the first to the last, I say, Nay! And I hope brethren, here assembled, I hope I say Nay with you, and you say Nay with me to this question!

I thank you, my brother; I thank you as men, I thank you as officers, and I thank you delegates sent here by the voice of your conferences, your districts and your branches for the faith you have still reposed in me; and if I have failed by reason of advancing years in taking cognizance, proper cognizance of what my duty was unto the people, I pray you, if it would be feared that disaster should result from my being continued in the trust and put in this care, that you will relieve me and put a younger and stronger man or men in the position that I have held so long before you. And I shall feel no regret; I shall feel no sense of injury, or personal difficulty or want of confidence in anyone who may believe that such should occur. I am ready to lay down the weapons of my warfare, either to be taken to my final rest or to continue in sessions with you unshorn of any of this responsibility, but trusting for you to choose whom you may call on or may be pointed out by divine wisdom.

Again I thank you, one and all, for the confidence you have expressed in the vote which you have taken this day.

Prays to Overcome Weaknesses

I love to read the testimonies of my brothers and sisters as they appear in the Herald each week. They do my soul good not because, like me, they have trials and temptations, but because there is a God in heaven to whom we may go when these things come upon us. I feel that if we would lay aside the material things of life and trust in the Lord, we would receive much greater blessings.

I joined the church when a child but never had the privilege of attending Latter Day Saint services. For a time I drifted with the world, but I have a dear companion now who belongs to the church, and our home has been blessed with children. Still we live in isolation. It is the desire of my heart to rear our children in the Lord.

The Lord has been wonderful to us, blessing, helping, guiding. He has warned me to pray for members of my family when they were in danger. He has given me his good gifts. And yet at times I have been doubtful, I have not kept his laws, and I have struggled with the Evil One. Will the Saints who read this pray that I may overcome my weakness and be strong? Pray also that I may be healed. The doctor says that I have cancer, and I also have throat trouble.

The gospel means more to me every day. I am glad that I live in this day when it has been restored for the last time. I want to serve the Master with all my might, mind and strength.

The Power of Example

As a soldier boy sat in his tent and wrote a letter to his mother in a far-away place, he looked out and up at the big bright moon. And he said, "Mother, I wonder if at this moment you, too, are beholding that wonder and beauty?"

This morning as I have read and admired with the writers of the Herald, I have tried to imagine that I could see the thousands who were also drinking at the same fountain as they read from page to page. As we read from week to week the accounts of divine contacts with the human and the uplifting effects, we are thrilled with gratitude. In such associations we have learned to admire and love many whom we have never personally met. And to Paul this was evidence of having passed from death unto life. He said, "We know we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren."

In my forty-two years of experience in this church I have made the acquaintance of many, many noble people, people whose lives are to me an influence to press on to the final goal.

As I turn to my records of fourteen administrations since early March of this year I am reminded of the results; the joy they have given could not be purchased with gold or with men's wisdom.

I should like, too, that the men of the ministry who have labored with us should be assured that they still live in our memory. Their godly lives will never die. If space permitted, I should like to name them one by one and make extended comment. I would commence with that well-known centenarian, J. C. Crabb, who on August 29, 1892, baptized me into new life. A few weeks ago Brother Elbert A. Smith referred to some of the elders who in the past have, by their splendid examples, put before him an ideal well worthy of emulation, men like the late W. A. McDowell, J. R. Lambert, and Brother C. J. Hunt. I believe also that there live thousands of trustworthy men and women who will be chosen to light the world to Zion.

On September 15, I preached the funeral sermon of a Baptist brother, Mr. Shive, of Pleasant Hill, Illinois. I was somewhat surprised at the invitation, but was told that the entire family concurred in it, having drawn their conclusions from Brother Shive's own sayings of the past. He was a well loved citizen, a retired business man. The expressions of family and friends indicated that my message did not fall upon heedless ears.

July 15, I preached the funeral sermon of Sister Lucinda Franklin at our church. Brother Richard Baldwin and others will remember her.

Once I was called to administer to a brother, a good man. But he had been very, very busy and he had accumulated a nice little fortune. In his illness, he called his entire family to come into the room and kneel with us in prayer, to exercise all their faith so that the Lord might lengthen his days. He said, "Oh, if I only can get out of this, I will find time to go to church and to Sunday school." Too late he found that he had neglected the spiritual side of life. Notwithstanding all our pleadings, the brother passed on.

It is wonderful to turn to the closing of life's drama of those who have given their all to God's great cause. A few I mention, our beloved President Joseph Smith, who said, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen"; John H. Lake to Brother Ebeling and others: "Don't ask the Lord to keep me here. I have finished my work and am ready to go"; M. T. Short, "The moment of this mortal ending is the triumphal arch and the eternal gateway into the fair fields of immortality."

Blessings Come Through Family Worship

I have often gained help and strength from the "Reader's Say" department of the Herald, and have sometimes regretted that I also cannot tell of some miraculous healing of some member of my own family. But we have enjoyed fairly good health, in fact, have not required the services of a doctor in our home since we decided to try to live more fully by the teachings in the Word of Wisdom. And after all, this is a testimony, is it not? If we but do our best to obey, God is quick to bestow the promised blessing.

I think the greatest blessings have come to our little family through family worship. I am thankful that I grew up in a Latter Day Saint home, where both my mother and father stressed family prayer. We children were also taught to pray. The Latter Day Saint teachings instilled into my heart by my father and mother have been a strength and a stay to me through all the years of my life. My husband and I are trying to help our children understand the beautiful ideals and principles of the gospel. We have prayer both morning and night, and I know that we have received great help and strength from these periods of worship. I have been in many reunions, where we had spiritual prayer meetings, and have heard people say; "Oh, if this reunion could last forever!"

My testimony is that you can have that same blessed spirit in your home. Some of my happiest and most spiritual experiences have come to me in our home with only my husband and three boys present, as we earnestly sought communion with our heavenly Father. We also read the Herald, the three books of the church and other worth-while literature. This gospel is true, and it is worth every effort we can give to it.

I also wish to testify that I have been shown in an unmistakable manner that we are not justified in lifting our voices against those whom God has called and placed in official positions in this church, to bring forth and establish Zion in these last days. We can make our influence count in the way we wish in the General Conference and other legislative assemblies of the church—we are entitled to a voice and a vote there, either directly or indirectly. At all other times it is our duty before God to uphold these men whom God has called, in loyalty and respect.

The Apostle Paul says (Hebrews 13:17): "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you."

In this age of disrespect for all laws, of disillusionment and fear, it is sometimes difficult not to fall into critical, negative mental habits and to let this spirit of darkness effect also our attitude toward the church. But just try to cultivate a spirit of cheerfulness, hopefulness, and trust, and see how much greater will be your enjoyment of life, and how much greater measure of God's Spirit will come to you. If we harbor thoughts of gloom, suspicion, or other ugly things, we drive away the good spirit and invite the evil one. We cannot afford to do that.

Zion will be established fully, and Jesus will come to his faithful Saints. I desire to purify my mind and my life so that I may be worthy to be gathered there at that glorious time.

Let Us Be Clean!

"Life is just one long battle against dirt!" I told myself impatiently one day as I scrubbed away; "I feel like a hired woman in my own home!" I was tired, and I am afraid that I was a little sorry for myself—a poor state of mind—I knew that this work would have to be done all over again very soon.

Then as my hands flew, my thoughts flew also. Why, of course, that is life, cleaning up the dirt, not only physically, but mentally and spiritually. Polishing up the tarnished places, scrubbing out the dull corners, brightening the dark spots, that is life. And so I finished my work in a different frame of mind.

Then, after a bath, I walked through my house and was happy to see the reflection of a bowl of flowers against a polished surface, and to step across clean rugs on a shining floor. I knew in my heart that the effort it takes to keep clean was worth while.

We are told in the Scriptures, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness." As members of the Church of Jesus Christ, we should keep our bodies and our homes fit dwelling places for his Spirit. How can we dare to claim to be his children and remain dirty? I believe it is just as disgusting to see a man in soiled clothing with neglected hair and teeth, and in need of a shave, walking down the street, declaring to anyone who may inquire that he is a member of the church of Christ, as it would be to see a drunkard staggering along proclaiming the same thing. Either would bring shame to his cause. (And this does not apply to men only.)

Now don't nod your heads and say, "Um-hum, this hits Brother (or Sister) So-and-So, I hope he reads it!" Let's all check up on ourselves. Let's make the membership of His church a shining light outside, as well as in! We were all born with equal rights with soap and water. Come on, let's use them.

Jesus With Us

I enjoy reading our church paper. It is the source of much strength to me.

I want to do all the good I can while I am permitted to live and work for my Master. I hope to be worthy to inherit a place in his celestial kingdom. Pray for me and my companion that we may be faithful.

I have tried to put my thoughts in verse, and send my little poem along, hoping that it will help all who read it.

Many hearts with care are burdened
In this world of sin and grief;
But our blessed Lord and Master
Sends his word and sure relief.
He has promised to be with us
All the perilous journey through:
"I will not leave you comfortless,
I will come to you."

With the Master's hand sustaining
We can conquer. We can win.
And we need not fear the tempest
When His Spirit reigns within.
There is comfort in the promise
That he gives to me and you:
"I will not leave you comfortless,
I will come to you."

Attention to Those in the Borders of Zion

In an article in the Herald not long ago Apostle D. T. Williams presented the need of converting the borders of Zion. The Spirit rested on me while reading that article; his suggestion appealed to me as a very wise idea, and I pray that many will spend more of their spare time teaching around about the borders, not only bringing souls to Christ, but instructing people concerning their duties as Saints of God. I believe Brother Williams was led by the Spirit to write as he did.

If any members of the church should be in Albuquerque, New Mexico, and can spare the time to go to the Methodist Sanitarium, please inquire for Sister Sarah Maude Smith, Room 38. She is gaining very slowly.

I have chances nearly every day to explain Zion, and about almost all who hear are elated. Some have come back after two or three years, and wanted to hear more. If any Saints should come this way, please be sure to stop for a few moments at least.

I have not heard a sermon for eight years, but have had a few short visits with Saints going through.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Were hands laid on people for the reception of the Holy Ghost before Christ came?

While several instances are given in the Inspired Version of those who received the Holy Ghost in Old Testament times, it does not state that hands were laid on them for this purpose, so far as I recall. However, in Genesis 5: 44, 45 of that version it is stated that the gospel was preached and the Holy Ghost was given, and that "thus all things were confirmed unto Adam by an holy ordinance." What is meant by this phrase is not explained, but of course it might include the ordinance of laying on of hands, which was practiced for the setting apart of men called to divine service or to positions appointed of God, as many texts show.

Was the prophet Elijah the same person that was known as Elias?

In the Old Testament the Hebrew form of the name is Elijah, but the same name in the Greek form is Elias, and is thus used in the New Testament. But there are several persons of that name mentioned in the Scriptures. In two places it is given as Eliah, though the Hebrew original is the same as for Elijah (see Hebrew). One of that name is mentioned in 1 Chronicles 8: 27 as a son of Jeroham, and in Ezra 10: 26 one of that name is given as a son of Elam. Most of the New Testament references to Elias clearly concern the prophet Elijah "the Tishbite," but his ancestry is unknown. Another Elijah, the son of Harim, is also mentioned in Ezra 10: 21. In Doctrine and Covenants 26: 3 Elias and Elijah appear to mean different persons, though this may be but an adaptation of names to scriptural texts.

Did Jesus know he was the Messiah prior to his baptism?

It would appear from the reading of various texts that he was aware of his great mission as the Messiah while yet in his childhood. When twelve years of age he entered the temple and discussed with the learned Jewish masters of the law. He appeared surprised that his parents did not realize his mission, saying:

"How is it that ye sought me? Knew ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"—Luke 2: 49.

There is abundant reason for this surprise, if we remember that Zacharias the prophet had referred to his mission soon after his own son John was born; that an angel had informed Mary herself of the mission of Jesus (Luke 1: 30-35); that Elizabeth, the mother of John, also bore record of it (Luke 1: 40-45); that the shepherds of the plain were informed of the same great truth (Luke 2: 9-14); that the shepherds published "abroad" the glorious news (Luke 2: 17); that the prophet Simeon was told by the Holy Ghost of the grand truth, and published it in the temple when Jesus was brought there by his parents (Luke 2: 26-32); that Anna the prophetess predicted his mission (Luke 2: 36-38); that Joseph, Mary's husband, was informed by an angel of his mission (Matthew 1: 20, 21); and that the three wise men also bore testimony to the grand event.

It seems unreasonable to suppose Jesus could have been wholly ignorant of such a multitude of witnesses to his mission. He could hardly avoid hearing about some of these events, for they had evidently been widely discussed among the more devout people of that period.

Why did Jesus call himself the "Son of Man"?

The significance of this term is revealed as highly important, because it was used by the prophets to refer to the coming Messiah. Daniel the prophet employs it in the remarkable words:

"I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, . . . and there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away."—Daniel 7: 13, 14.

It is even more highly definite in the Book of Enoch, and shows his divine origin. In the Gospels it is used eighty-one times.

Sherwood Mission, Oregon

Six years ago last spring a Sunday school was organized at Sherwood, a small town some sixteen miles southwest of Portland. They started with twelve members most of them women and children.

The first two years brought trying times. They had no regular pianist, no trained leaders or teachers. The meetings were held in a large lodge hall and the little group seemed very small indeed in the big empty building.

Many years before, through the efforts of Elder G. M. Shippy and a couple of faithful sisters, a few were baptized and an attempt at conducting a Sunday school lasted for a time; then when the superintendent, a consecrated young woman, left the community, the work collapsed. But it was not dead in the hearts of those faithful ones who lacked only in leadership ability. Their love for and intense interest in the work have been demonstrated many times during those six years by their faithful attendance, willing cooperation and support. They have given their best in whatever capacity they have been asked to work. For instance, an eleven-year-old girl took the beginner class and taught it for several years. She is now an attractive and capable young woman and still a willing worker. Another young woman, not then a member of the church, was secretary-treasurer and dramatic director for all programs. Both she and her little daughter now belong to the church.

An Oriole group was organized and successfully carried on until the girls outgrew the Oriole age. About half of them were not members of the church. They had delightful times, parties, hikes, and camping at the ocean. They gave a three-act play and took prominent part in other programs.

During the first three years they had little help from Portland, but when Elder D. B. Sorden became branch president, they prevailed upon him to send Clark Livingston and others to preach each Sunday, and he himself came and preached on Thursday evenings for a time.

Elder Savage, C. E. Jones, S. A. Dobson, Eli Bronson, and H. I. Velt have each contributed to the spiritual development and growth of this mission.

Elder Clark Livingston is now the pastor of the mission, and all who know him understand why local numbers are increasing more rapidly since he came into their midst.

The Saints are meeting in a building which was formerly a printing shop, and regular attendance is between forty-five and fifty at morning service, and when music department conducts the evening worship service nearly one hundred are present.

Nauvoo, Illinois

The annual business meeting of Nauvoo Branch was held October 8, at which time the following officers were elected: Pastor, J. C. Page; director of religious education, A. L. Sanford; clerk, L. H. Lewis; treasurer, Wilfred Wood; director of music, Mildred Sanford; leader of women's department, Mrs. Ed Grotts; adult leader, L. H. Lewis; leader of young people, Arnold Ourth; supervisor of children's depart-have always taken special interest in beautifying the lawn and shrubbery, caring for the heating and ventilating of the church and supplying beautiful bouquets of flowers. Brother and Sister Lewis and daughter, Roberta, have spent two weeks giving the church a thorough cleaning, and with the help of J. W. Layton, made a number of improvements about the building. The woodwork on the outside is being painted by C. E. Fusselman, the expense being met by the women's department. The women have been earning money during the summer months by serving meals to the tourists from Utah on their way to and from the Century of Progress.

The Saints are proud of their little chapel, which is a well built structure of red brick. This building was formerly the first ward schoolhouse, and was purchased soon after the consolidation of the schools when the Saints first began to return to Nauvoo some sixteen years ago. Three families formed the nucleus ment, Mrs. A. L. Sanford. The Saints were happy to have with them district president F. T. Mussell.

L. H. Lewis has been made general overseer of the church building and grounds. The Lewises live close by, and around which the branch has continued to grow until now there is a membership of sixty-one. Although many have come and gone since then, these three families, the Laytons, Fusselmans and Lees, still remain. Saints from all parts of the world have worshiped in the little chapel during their visits to historic Nauvoo.

President Elbert A. Smith and wife and Sister Daniels were visitors at a recent Wednesday evening service. They stopped on their way to the Burlington homecoming, to spend a few days with the Lee family. Brother Smith recalled the times he had visited Nauvoo in the past when there was not a Latter Day Saint in the place and how lonely it was, but now there are familiar faces to greet him, and he enjoys coming back.

The beautiful, mild October weather brought more visitors to the Mansion House this year than ever before. The total number registering for the past season being five thousand six hundred. This is probably not one-half of the visitors to the historic buildings as many do not register. Brother and Sister Page have many interesting experiences meeting these visitors, some of whom

F. Garver was present to give encouragement to the Saints.

The election of officers took place on Sunday afternoon and F. T. Mussell was sustained as district president, and chose as his counselors A. L. Sanford and E. R. Williams. Arnold Ourth was sustained as district church school superintendent, and Jack Sanford was elected district chorister. Following the business session, the young people of Nauvoo presented one of President Elbert Smith's dramatizations, the scene in Liberty jail, Harold Smith taking the part of Joseph; Mildred Sanford, Emma; Arnold Ourth, Hyrum, Lee Lewis, General Doniphan; Joseph Henderson, the Negro servant, and Roderick Lewis the prison guard; the play was sponsored by Roberta Lewis. Brother Garver then gave a splendid talk in which he compared the difficulties confronting the Saints of this day with those of the Saints of early times.

ers were Sisters A. H. Nieman and Lepha McMillin, R. E. Madden, C. H. Hamilton, and J. E. Matthews. There were solos by Lucinda Madden and Hazel Gribben.

A hard-time social was given October 29, for the benefit of the recreation committee.

Georgiana Bruah was married to Charles Wise the evening of October 29, at the home of her parents, Brother and Sister John Bruah, Patriarch J. E. Matthews officiating.

A masquerade party was given the primary department in the social room of the church October 30.

Sermons for the month have been inspiring, the following topics being used: "The Gospel," "Doing Our Best," "Food for the Heavenly Way," "The Right Way," "More Than Duty," "Looking Ahead," and "Christ's Mission."

Birmingham, England

Harvest festival services were held at Birmingham, September 16, a beautiful display of choice fruits, vegetables and flowers gladdening the hearts of all and reminding them of the love and bounty of the Creator.

Seasonable music was provided by the choir. Gifts of fruit and flowers were sent to the sick and needy of the branch. The bulk of the produce was gladly received by the Women's Hospital, Sparkhill.

The morning service brought the baptism of Maureen Bailey, her grandfather, High Priest T. Anderton, leading her into the water. Maureen is just eight years old, and this ordinance on a bright and holy day proved truly sublime. A duet was rendered by Sisters N. and E. Schofield, "O Happy Day That Fixed My Choice." Pastor P. S. Whalley confirmed.

The infant daughter of Brother and Sister J. Shipley was blessed in the evening, Pastor Whalley officiating. She was given the name Mary.

District President J. Holmes preached to a full congregation.

September 30, district conference convened in charge of Apostle J. W. Rushton, and a profitable and happy day was spent by a big crowd. Some visitors traveled from London, others from Wales. This was a feast of good things, and Brother Rushton spoke with his usual charm and deep feeling.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Neal was presented to the Lord by the pastor, October 14, and blessings from heaven were invoked upon him. Ronald John was the name given.

That evening Walter Frances Arrow-smith was ordained into the Aaronic priesthood as a deacon. There are now three generations of this family holding the priesthood, grandfather, father, and son. The young man was ordained under the hands of his father and grandfa-come from idle curiosity while others seem hungering and thirsting for what the gospel has to offer.

With the exception of a few members from Montrose, only the Saints from Nauvoo Branch were able to reach Rock Creek to meet with the Saints there for the district conference as a heavy rain had made the roads almost impassable. It was found, however, that numbers are not necessary for the success of a conference. The kindling influence of the Spirit was felt at the opening service on Sunday morning, and continued throughout the day. District President, F. T. Mussell, was in charge and Apostle John

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The women's department met October 11 with potluck dinner at noon. The departments of First and Third churches were invited to meet with them, and a poem of welcome to the visiting women was written by Ethel Kirkendall and read by Anna French.

The women's department entertained their husbands October 23, with a dinner in the social room of the church. Vera M. Hunter was toastmistress, and speak-ther. Previous to the ordinance the choir sang "Nearer My God, to Thee." Pastor Whalley spoke words of counsel to the candidate and the congregation. This was a holy occasion.

Wichita, Kansas

Water Street at Osie.—Election of officers resulted in the choice of Melvin Russell as director of religious education. Mrs. Delmar Root will supervise the adult division; Miss Margaret Williams, the young people, and Mrs. Fern Parsons, the primary department. Mrs. Booth is chorister. Very appropriate services commemorated the installation of these new officers.

The young people's class on Sunday evening is studying "Church Organization," under the direction of Pastor Tickemyer.

Wichita Branch has sponsored the organization of a Boy Scout troop. Committee men are, Brother Ballman, Brother Parsons, Brother Robison, Brother Wilson, and Brother Kennedy. The scoutmaster appointed is Bob Boltjes, assistant, Herbert Jones. Sixteen boys were present at the organization meeting.

A special service marked College Day, October 21, and the principal speaker was Doctor Bentz, formerly a Graceland student. "The Value of Education" was his subject.

The young people enjoyed a hay-rack ride and wiener roast October 26.

Doctor Mills, of Friends University, lectured Sunday night, October 28, to an appreciative audience. His subject was "The Temptations of Jesus."

The Saints of this branch sponsored a halloween masquerade party in the church basement, October 30.

Dayton, Ohio

Under the following leaders, Dayton Branch is planning its program for the coming year: Floyd T. Rockwell, pastor; B. J. Reeves, church school director; Albert Griffin, treasurer; Theodore Boeckman, branch clerk; George Stephens, bishop's agent; Olive Ulrich, director of congregational singing and choir; Effie Hunter, director of women's chorus.

The C. S. M. Club had a wiener roast on the twelfth. Twenty-five young people spent an enjoyable evening playing games and singing songs after which they roasted wieners and marshmallows. Theodore Boeckman is the new president of the club.

Brother and Sister Hettrick, of Bradner, spent several days at Dayton visiting their daughter, Sister Olive Ulrich. Brother Hettrick was the speaker the evening of October 21.

Brother and Sister Ralph Krisher are the parents of a baby girl born on the nineteenth.

Five people were led into the waters of baptism by Priest B. J. Reeves October 20, and almost the entire branch gathered at the water's edge to witness the baptisms. Brother and Sister Hardy, Brother and Sister Ward, and Sister Copeland were the candidates. On Sunday morning they were confirmed by Elders F. T. Rockwell, E. Ulrich, George Stephens, and Brother Hettrick.

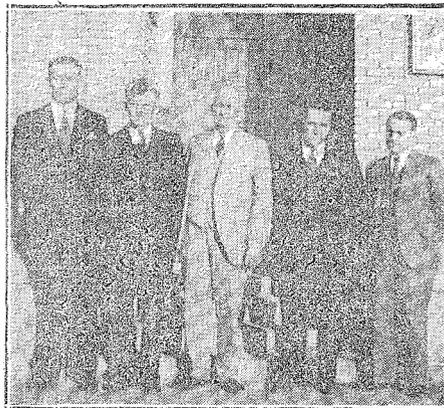

The sympathy of the branch is extended to John Stultz at the death of his mother, also to the Rieske family in the loss of Elder Rieske's sister's husband.

Elder E. Ulrich was the morning speaker October 28, and Elder F. Rieske occupied in the evening.

During the past few weeks the choir and chorus rendered beautiful numbers, and solos by Sisters Myrtle Boeckman and Effie Hunter were appreciated.

Ordination Service at Eastern Colorado Reunion

One of the outstanding features of the Eastern Colorado district reunion, held at Colorado Springs during the month of August, was the service at which five young men were ordained to various offices of the priesthood.

FOUR OF THE MEN ORDAINED.

This ceremony the last Sunday morning of the reunion, was a spiritual experience not soon to be forgotten by those present.

Apostle R. S. Budd was in charge, and gave the opening address.

The first ordination was that of Floyd Engstrom to the office of elder, by Apostle R. S. Budd and Elder Glaude Smith. Brother Engstrom served faithfully in the office of teacher for a number of years. He was admonished to gather for use, through study, prayer, and

Briefs

Bremerton Branch, Washington, has a record of which the Saints may well be proud, according to a report submitted by Apostle E. J. Gleazer who took part in the dedication services of Bremerton church October 21. Brother Gleazer states: "Pastor A. W. Lundeen and his little group have accomplished wonders. In seven years they have paid over $3,000 in tithes and have built a church which represents a money investment of $2,000. This has all been paid. In addition they have raised their operating expenses. Their membership is less than forty!"

Elder A. C. Martin, who was responsible for some of the early missionary work at Bremerton, was present and assisted at the dedication services.

North Platte Branch, Nebraska, enjoyed a visit not long ago from Apostle Roy S. Budd. This group of Saints is moving forward, and they are glad to have traveling elders visit them. The young people are coming to the fore under their supervisor, Sister Clarcy Conley. Sunday's services are held at 1123 West Sixth Street—church school at 10 a. m., preaching at 11, and at 2:30 p. m. there are classes.

London District's twenty-sixth annual conference convened October 27 and 28, at Stratford, Ontario, and one of the chief items of business was the election of officers. Elder James Winegarden will again serve the district as president with John MacGregor and Clarence Duesling, both of London, as counselors. R. H. Atkinson, of Saint Marys, is supervisor of church school. These officers have the assistance of a consecrated group of helpers and members.

The Saints were blessed with an exhortation by Apostle D. T. Williams at their Sunday morning prayer meeting. Other speakers that day were Bishop A. McLean, of Toronto, in the morning, Apostle Williams in the afternoon, and in the evening Evangelist John Shields.

Louisville Branch, Kentucky, has opened the West Side Mission, at 804 Dixie Highway, or South Eighteenth Street, and is doing its utmost to maintain and strengthen the little group. Priest J. W. Jackson, H. E. Hazzard and O. D. Waters have given special effort to the mission. Louisville Branch furnishes speakers to assist in this work.

From October 22 to November 4, Elder J. O. Dutton held a series of meetings in the mission, and was shown great interest. People who know of Saints or friends living in the west part of Louisville, please write to any of the three men above mentioned, at 102 Saunders Court, Louisville.

Elder J. G. Halb has been enjoying excellent success in missionary meetings in the South. At Coldwater Branch, not far from Milton, Florida, he held services for three weeks and baptized seventeen, most of whom were people in the early twenties. At Santa Rosa Branch, in an adjoining neighborhood, he reinvigorated the group and baptized twelve people.

Niagara Falls, Ontario, Branch held a most successful two-day meeting October 13 and 14, and Saints gathered from Toronto, Lowbanks, Wellard, Fort Erie, Ridgeway, Fenwick, and Niagara Falls, New York. Fellowship, good music and splendid lessons and discourses marked the two days. Sermons were by Bishop A. F. McLean and District President James A. Pycock.

Sister Salome Cairns, Route 4, Ava, Missouri, fell and bruised her hip badly November 7, and desires prayers that she may be healed. She was baptized when fifteen years old, and now is ninety-two.

Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin conducted four weeks of missionary meetings at Burlington, Iowa, a short time ago, and of the growth in interest and attendance Brother Baldwin writes: "On the third Sunday we baptized sixteen, and when the church was crowded on that night, they again asked us to stay another week. So we kept right on and baptized three more on the last Sunday. We were afraid that the crowd might grow weary and dwindle during the fourth week, but it was larger than ever, and on our closing night we could not count the people! We had to close the meetings then, for we had promised to start at Nevada before cold weather sets in."

Sister Baldwin talked on religious education topics each night. On Monday night after the close, the young people of the branch had a rally and banquet, Evangelist and Sister Baldwin being honor guests. About seventy young men and women were present, and their enthusiasm was fine to see.

Sister Hazel Pearl Burwell, wife of Pastor H. W. Burwell, of Louisville Branch, Kentucky, died at her home October 31. She was active as an officer in the Parent-Teacher Association of the city and was an ardent church worker, being a teacher in the church school. She had been ill since April. The funeral was held at the church, corner of Ashland Avenue and Taylor Boulevard, November 3, Jasper O. Dutton preaching the sermon.

meditation, an abundance of spiritual food and then by precept and by example, he will be able to take this food to those in God's kingdom who are seriously in need of it.

Immediately after followed the ordination of Ray Ebeling to the office of priest, by Elders J. E. Ebeling and J. D. Curtis. Ray is the son of J. E. Ebeling, and it was touching to see the father, who has grown old in the service of God, ordaining his strong young son to this office.

Ira Willard Cummings was then ordained to the office of priest, by Elders Z. Z. Renfroe and I. N. DeLong. Brother Cummings has been serving in the office of deacon for a number of years. He was told that God would bless him as he occupies his office.

Then followed the ordination to the office of priest, of Von Carricker by Elders I. N. DeLong, and Z. Z. Renfroe. Brother Von Carricker, whose home is at Borger, Texas, has been serving in that branch for a number of years in the office of teacher.

The service was closed with the ordination of Harold DeCoster to the office of teacher, by Elders J. E. Ebeling and J. D. Curtis. He has been serving in the office of deacon. Brother DeCoster, who was ill for a number of years, was told that God had healed his body that he might serve in his kingdom.

Brother DeCoster was ill with tuberculosis for a number of years, but recently when examined by a physician of the company by which he is employed, was told that no one in the company's employment, had better lungs than he.

What a beautiful thing it is, to see these young men dedicate their lives to that which is right and which brings a more abundant life, against that which is evil and which leads one to sorrow and destruction!

Not to these young men alone, who are ordained, comes the opportunity to serve, but to all who have taken Christ's name upon them and promised to serve him.

Alpena, Michigan

The Saints here, although few in number, wish to pledge loyal support to the Master's work. Several events of late have increased interest and encouraged the faithful few, and better and busier days are being planned for the coming year.

On October 14, a fine one-day meeting was held. Visiting Saints from Mikado, Lachine, Gaylord, and other points in the district brought encouragement and inspiration to the branch.

Elder H. A. Doty, of Traverse City, delivered two excellent illustrated lectures on the Holy Land, October 18 and 19. These pictures were interesting and educational, the more so because they were taken by Brother Doty himself during his four years' stay in the Holy Land.

Alpena Branch was well represented at the Northern Michigan district conference held at Lachine, October 20 and 21. Meetings there were of an exceptionally high order, and inspired all who attended to keener desires to work harder at their jobs during the coming year.

The Zion's Christian Legion has been organized in this branch, and promises to be a big help in giving the young people "something to do for the Master each day." Members think its motto a good one for both young and old: "Work as though you would live forever; and live as though you would die today."

Workers are rejoicing in the improvements they have made recently on the church building, and are making plans for further "touching up." They will be glad if in the near future they can report improvement in attendance and in more zealous and enthusiastic service for the Master.

Dow City, Iowa

Officers and teachers for the new year have been retained with few exceptions, and the members are moving forward under the pastorate of Elvin Baughman with D. A. Holcomb and Frank Fry as counselors.

Beauty and dignity are added to the local services by the beautiful floral offerings furnished by Sister Christine Butterworth. This reminds the workers of the variety of ways of ministering in the service of God. The statement, "All are called," is being fulfilled.

The young people are active and willing to serve in different phases of work preparatory to establishing the kingdom. In an impressive service four were promoted into the young people's division. Each was presented a certificate by the superintendent; pins were given to Ione and Leone Miller, twins, who have had a perfect attendance record for more than two years. They are non-members.

The children greatly enjoyed a party October 27, in the basement of the church, and games and decorations followed the Halloween theme. The young people had a party October 30, and those recently promoted were initiated.

The priesthood hold a meeting once a month and also have been doing some visiting.

Brother Baughman is to be commended for his faithfulness in rendering service in the many phases of work connected with his office. The family resides in Buck Grove, a distance of about six miles, but unflinchingly he is found at his post of duty. The response given him by the members cannot but help to promote the cause of Zion.

Our slogan must be, "Define and Organize."—G. L. DeLapp in a sermon at the Stone Church.

Mallard, Iowa

A Graceland Day program was enjoyed October 21, and the numbers were the contributions of each member.

Mrs. Emily Abbott has for the past two weeks been with her son, Roy, of Mason City, who is ill.

Mallard Branch held its annual business meeting September 30, and the following officers were selected: President, B. F. Fish; Sunday school supervisor, Mrs. F. Hahn; secretary and publicity agent, Betty Hahn; treasurer, William Fish. The church school divisions are going forward under their efficient heads.

The women's department recently held their meeting at Laurens, their first meeting with their new member, Mrs. Casedy, formerly of Clinton, Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Edwards, of Pomeroy, are the parents of a daughter who arrived October 7.

Myrtle Point, Oregon

Myrtle Point Mission was most fortunate in having Elder Harold I. Velt conduct a series of lantern lectures on the lost civilization of ancient America. These lectures for the most part were well attended and the Saints benefited by them as well as by the association of this God-fearing man. He inspired them with faith and a strong desire to serve the Lord.

Near the close of the meetings five requested baptism, Edna McNeil, Lulu Nichols, Effie Summers, Florence Zumwalt, and her small daughter, Katherine. At the confirmation service the Spirit touched every member present and some of those who have not yet professed the latter-day faith. Through Brother Velt the people were divinely admonished to prepare themselves for the greater blessings to come to them in sacrament the following Sunday morning. Those officiating in the confirmation were Elders H. I. Velt, W. H. Dancer, and A. A. Baker. After this service another candidate asked for baptism.

The evening following the confirmation, seven children were blessed: The infant daughter of Sister Elnora Sparks; the four small daughters of Sister Edna McNeil, and the two sons of Sister Florence Zumwalt.

The next Sunday was a busy day. Elder J. L. Verhei, district president, Elder Mark Yoeman, bishop's solicitor, and Brother Floyd Soneson, young people's advisor, all of Portland, were at Myrtle Point, as well as every Saint from Bandon Mission. Each came fasting and praying that the Lord would be in this meeting, and that they might be receptive to his Spirit.

This was the most outstanding meeting ever witnessed at Myrtle Point. The Lord spoke in admonition and prophecy through Brothers Verhei and Yoeman. Jasper Giberson, of Bandon, Oregon, was called to the office of priest, and the Saints were admonished to be faithful and diligent in service.

As soon as the morning service was over, a number went to the river where Brother Velt baptized Florence Allen.

At the afternoon meeting Brother Giberson was ordained a priest, and Sister Allen was confirmed. Following this Brother Verhei held a priesthood and officers' meeting.

Myrtle Point members enjoyed the association of the ministers from Portland, and were deeply grateful to Brother Velt who left that same evening. He has been transferred to another district. Everyone misses him, but wishes him happiness and success in his new field of labor.

The church school is growing. They have set their goal at thirty new members during the next six months.

The women's department organized October 19 with a number of enthusiastic workers lead by Mrs. Winnie Craine; Mrs. Florence Allen is secretary-treasurer.

The Saints are proud of their shipment of new Hymnals.

San Francisco, California

San Francisco, Church

Though regular meetings are being held and many are doing their best for the cause of Christ, not much numerical progress is evident. The preaching is done mostly by branch officers and local elders. Elder Arthur Oakman, branch president, is very active, and often addresses the Saints, encouraging them in the work and urging them to do their duty in the cause they love.

On a recent Sunday three afflicted ones were administered to and a goodly portion of the Spirit was present. This experience assured the Saints that God is still with them, blessing and helping. It increased their desire to serve him better.

The Sunday school is quite well attended and the lessons are instructive. Young and old are interested in the religious session every Sunday evening preceding the sermon.

Park Presidio Church

Meetings are regularly held on Sunday at 405 Arguello Avenue, and there is prayer meeting at the home of Brother and Sister A. L. Holling on Wednesday. They live at 427 Thirty-eighth Avenue.

This group is doing well under the presidency of Elder Edward Nelson. They are energetic in their work, and enjoy much of the Holy Spirit. Though few in number they are "holding the fort."

San Francisco Saints are in harmony with reports from other branches and districts which so often of late have said: "The best meeting we ever held."

Briefs

Azalia, Michigan, Saints enjoyed an all-day meeting September 23, at their church. Elder and Sister James Davis, of Detroit, were present and helped greatly with sermons and talks relative to missionary experiences.

The young people entertained the congregation at a Halloween party October 30, at the home of Jesse Masten, of Monroe. The group was happy to have present District President Kenneth Green, Sister Green, and others, of Detroit.

Fort Wayne, Indiana, members also were saddened by the death of Elder Archibald Whitehead. He came to that branch for two weeks in July, and his sermons were deeply enjoyed. The Spirit of God blessed him, and the sunrise prayer meetings in charge of him will long be remembered.

Lennox Branch, California, was organized September 23, 1934. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was there and his 11 a. m. theme was "Organization." Over one hundred Saints were present, some coming from Los Angeles and Long Beach. The organization service was held at two in the afternoon, Apostle Gleazer presiding. W. J. Nuckles is branch president; Sister Mildred J. Menzies, branch secretary; Perry Woods, treasurer; Sister Nellie Woods, director of religious education, and Perry Woods, bishop's solicitor and young people's supervisor. Lennox Branch was officially accepted by District President W. A. Teagarden, and short talks were given by these members of the Melchisedec priesthood: W. A. Teagarden, T. L. Milner, D. B. Sorden, L. L. Sutherland, D. B. Carmichael, Arthur Oakman, and E. J. Gleazer. W. J. Nuckles gave a short sketch of the history of Lennox Mission, and D. B. Sorden read the names of fifty-nine members.

Elder F. Rieske and Theodore Boeckman, of Dayton Branch, are holding a series of missionary meetings at Quincy, Ohio. They are also trying to get an opening at Camden, Ohio.

Centralia Mission, Oklahoma, enjoyed a week's visit not long ago from District President Amos T. Higdon and Elder Dave Wilson, of Miami. The ministers took turns preaching, and aroused much interest among Saints and their friends. Members from Miami Branch came over two nights and contributed special music. The meeting closed with an all-day service October 7.

This mission is going forward hopefully and prayerfully. O. A. Duncan, of Nowata, will be their speaker the first Sunday night of each month during the winter. Henry Dunn is pastor of the group.

Dunn Center, North Dakota

Sister Seraphine Anderson passed away October 13, at the Dickenson Hospital, and was buried at Dunn Center, October 16. Elder P. T. Anderson preached the funeral sermon, paying high tribute to this sister.

Brother Anderson preached at Dunn Center from Tuesday evening until Sunday evening. On the closing night he spoke to a full house.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of Lester Anderson as branch president, to be assisted by Chester Moffit, church school director; Sister Elsie Tucker, branch secretary; Chester Moffit, treasurer; Frank Anderson, branch solicitor, and other capable officers.

Sister Sadie Moffit has a new daughter, Ann Louise, born October 18.

There was a picnic at the home of L. Dinehart late in July, celebrating the birthday of Sister Hazel Dinehart. Church school was held in the afternoon.

August 26, the Dunn Center group drove thirty-five miles to the home of Sister Brolow near Taylor, North Dakota, and had picnic dinner and church school and preaching in the afternoon.

Ontario, California

Two have been added to this branch by baptism. One is a small boy, Jimmie Swain, of Ontario, who was baptized by J. Lorne Swain. The other Mr. Erwin, of Pomona, a man eighty-six years old, decided that at last he had found the truth, and was baptized by Elders F. J. Lacey. Both were confirmed by Elders F. J. Lacey and George H. Givens. At the sacrament service on Sunday, Brother Erwin bore a strong testimony to the satisfaction he enjoys through obedience to the gospel.

Sister Sarah Swain, an aged member, was injured in an automobile accident not long ago, and never regained consciousness. During the last six months of her life she was confined to a wheel chair and could not speak. Several times she was blessed through administration.

The improved appearance of their church building brought about by the application of white and green paint, has heartened the local Saints. Now they are looking forward to redecorating the interior of the building, rendering it a clean and acceptable place for the indwelling of God's Spirit. They were able to paint the edifice through the donations of the Tamalia Girls' Club of ten dollars and twelve dollars by George H. Givens.

The junior class, in charge of Sister H. Peterson, gave a pie supper and sold pot holders and raised almost seven dollars which they gave to the branch to help in its projects.

The baby girl of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde C.

Roberts, Kay Marilyn, was blessed in the arms of F. J. Lacey, her grandfather, and George H. Givens, October 21.

Officers for the church school year are: Superintendent, W. H. Kampe; secretary, Frank Swain; chorister, La Verne Marvel, and organist, Mary Swain. Mrs. Eloise Duffy was appointed head of the women's department.

A dramatic class has been organized with Mrs. Fern Roberts as director and Miss Mary Swain to assist her.

A Faithful Colored Member

SAMUEL GASSAWAY

Brother Gassaway whose home is Fort Towson, Oklahoma, is an earnest believer in the gospel and member of the church, eager at all times to assist the cause of Christ. Previous to his baptism in 1920, he was blessed with an unusual spiritual experience in which as he was reading the Bible, a personage delivered the Book of Mormon to him with the admonition for him to read it without doubt. Brother Gassaway was born at Minden, Louisiana, March 2, 1873.

North East Manchester Branch, England, Honors Mothers

Gospel Hall.—This congregation, under the leadership of Pastor G. W. Leggott and his associate ministers, is making a good response to the lead given by the Presidency to stimulate the worship by observance of special days.

"Motherhood," was the theme Sunday, October 14. The day was well advertised and services were harmoniously arranged, the sisters being the chief ministrants.

The morning service began with the call to worship given by the vested choir singing "Look for the Beautiful." Apostle John W. Rushton offered prayer. The Scripture lesson was given by Sister Alice Schofield whose presence on the platform was a testimony to God's goodness. Not long ago this sister was very ill, but through the constant prayers of Saints and friends and the administration of elders supplementing medical services, she is now a witness of the reality of the healing power of God.

Following two solos by Sister Curtis Leggott and Sister Minnie Brien, a paper was read by Sister Arthur Mayne, also one by Mrs. Fred Tapping.

The first speaker of the afternoon service was Sister Lily Baguley whose paper was an especial appeal to the young to honor their parents. Sister Eleanor Noble gave a second paper. The Scripture reading at this service was by Sister Charles Leggott, 1 Samuel 1: 19-28. Soloists were Sister James Barrington and Sister Arthur Ghent.

The two speakers in the evening were Sister J. W. Rushton and Sister Joseph Holmes, wife of the president of Midland District. Soloists were Sister Maud Nelson, daughter of the late W. H. Greenwood, and Sister Susie Hayward. The choir also added to the attractiveness of this service. Pastor G. W. Leggott presided, assisted by George Wilson and James Schofield.

The days services came to a close with a prayer service for some time a regular event in this branch.

Willapa, Washington

Three young men were ordained in an impressive service in charge of Monte L. Lasater, president of Seattle and British Columbia district, at Willapa, October 28. Brother Lasater was accompanied to Willapa by L. R. White, of Mount Vernon, and Dwight D. Davis, of Seattle.

The three young men ordained were Oliver Ralston and Henry Hall, to the office of priest, and Russell Eyer, teacher. Brothers Lasater, White and Davis conducted this impressive service.

During the ten o'clock service Dwight Davis presented an enlightening sermon on religious education, and the plans of that department for the future.

Following this and in the eleven o'clock period Elder L. R. White gave a helpful talk on the financial work in the church.

The Saints enjoyed a dinner at noon, prepared by the women of Willapa Branch. During this hour visiting officers inspected lots and land in this vicinity in an attempt to locate a suitable place on which to build a church home.

At two o'clock branch election was held, the following officers being chosen or sustained: Branch president, Elder J. P. Wolfenbarger; secretary, Sister Eunice Ralston; treasurer, Albert Ellsworth; auditor, Sister Leta Ralston; director of religious education, Sister Irene Ralston; chorister, Russell Eyer. Oliver Ralston was sustained solicitor and publicity agent.

One of the outstanding features of the election was the unanimous vote in the electing and sustaining of officers.

Beloit-Janesville Branch, Wisconsin

236 Saint Lawrence Avenue, Beloit.—Because of the small membership in both Beloit and Janesville branches, located about twelve miles apart, it was decided by the recent district conference, to unite these branches for the coming year. The services are to be held at Beloit, as Janesville has no church building.

At the annual business meeting, October 28, the following officers were elected to be in charge: Branch president, Harry A. Wasson, to be assisted by Wilber Johnson and Ezra Dutton. Alma May Brookover is director of religious education, and Sister F. A. Dobbins is head of the department of women. A corps of efficient officers assist these supervisors. Teachers have also been chosen for Sunday school classes.

Page Allen, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Doc Barton, was blessed by Elders Harry A. Wasson and Henry Woodstock, October 28.

The November sacrament service was in charge of Harry A. Wasson, Ezra Dutton, Cleo Heide, and Wilbur Johnson assisting.

The new officers are taking up their duties with an earnest desire to make the branch go forward during this year.

Borger, Texas

On October 7, Borger group was visited by Elder B. A. Howard, of Erick, Oklahoma, who was recently appointed in charge of this territory. A business meeting and election of officers for the Sunday School was held, Brother Earl Phillips being elected superintendent and Brother Ralph Wilt teacher of the adult class.

After the sacrament service Miss Mayme Gettys, of Ava, Missouri, and Brother A. V. Carriker, of Borger, were united in marriage by Brother Howard. The bride was attended by Miss Lou Ella Johnson. B. Howard of Erick, Oklahoma, served the bridegroom as best man. A large number of Saints relatives and friends attended the services.

In the afternoon Mary Dowers, from Perryton, Texas, was baptized, and confirmation services held for her and four other candidates who had previously been baptized by Brother A. V. Carriker.

Brother Howard was again with the group here November 4. The Saints were delighted to meet Brother and Sister O. W. Sumner and family who had driven one hundred and eighty miles from Lubbock, Texas, to be at the services. Other members from Perryton, Spearman, and Pampa, Texas were present.

Midweek prayer meetings are held at the homes of the Saints, alternating between Pampa and Borger.

The priesthood are now conducting a series of cottage missionary meetings. They are being assisted by Elder John Monroe, of San Diego, California, who with his family is visiting with Saints at Borger on their way home from Missouri.

Spokane District Conference

Spokane district conference opened Friday night, October 26, with a banquet for the priesthood and their companions. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was in charge. Speeches were given by Elder Alma Andrews, Elder H. I. Velt, Sister Gladys Fout and Teacher J. J. Phay, of Independence, Missouri. Music was furnished by Sister Grace Nichols and Sister Velt.

Saturday morning the Saints assembled in prayer service at nine-fifteen o'clock. Apostle E. J. Gleazer spoke at the eleven o'clock hour.

At the business session held at 2 p. m. Saturday, Elder Stanley J. Fout was sustained as district president, as were Elders James H. Sage, Alvin W. Buckley, and L. P. Summers, counselors. Other district officers sustained and elected were; clerk, Ethel Johnston; treasurer, Elder Vernon L. Gunter; bishop's agent, Elder L. P. Summers, director of religious education, Gladys M. Fout; director of music, Velva Kinne, auditing committee member, W. W. Wood.

Elder H. I. Velt occupied the evening hour, giving one of his powerful missionary sermons.

Sunday's activities started at eight-fifteen with a prayer service well attended and a wonderful outpouring of the Spirit of the Master. Those who missed this service missed the best service of the conference. Apostle E. J. Gleazer spoke to the Saints at the eleven o'clock hour.

At two-thirty Sunday afternoon the members again gathered for an ordination service, presided over by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Elder Stanley J. Fout and Elder H. I. Velt. Three men were ordained at this service, D. A. Coleman, to the office of elder, and Glenn W. Fordham and William J. B. Buckingham, to the office of priest.

The oldest and the youngest members of the priesthood were in attendance at the conference, Elder George Leach, eighty-six years and Priest Reed Holmes, seventeen years, high school graduate.

Elder H. I. Velt delivered the closing sermon of the conference Sunday night.

Parkersburg, West Virginia

Parkersburg Branch entertained the district conference September 8 and 9, and Frank Shinn, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, preached in the afternoon. That night Wayne Wilson preached. The priesthood met at eight-thirty Sunday morning, and sacrament meeting convened at ten o'clock, Otis Forester in charge. Business was cared for in the afternoon, and dinner was served at the church.

Harry Smith and family visited Indian Creek Branch October 14, Brother Smith preaching morning and night. They also attended part of the rally day services at Nelsonville, Ohio, October 21.

Parkersburg held its rally day October 28. W. A. Schoenian, of Moundsville, preached on friendship in the morning and O. J. Tary, of Wheeling, preached in the afternoon on "Seeing Jesus." Both sermons were much appreciated by those in attendance. Sister W. A. Schoenian and Sister Lelia DuBoise sang at the two services. George Criswell and family of Wheeling, also were in attendance. Brother Criswell joined the church in Parkersburg and was a valuable member during the short time of his residence there.

New branch officers took charge November 4. They are: Branch president, Harry Smith; clerk and treasurer, May Griffin; church school superintendent, C. O. Williams; women's department superintendent, Laura Wilson, and others.

Church work at Parkersburg is slowly going forward. The Saints need more priesthood members. About forty families of Saints live there and only one elder and a deacon are active. They have a church that will seat about two hundred people and a fine chance to build if they can secure good speakers and other workers. They are hoping some will move there. Branch President Harry Smith lives at 2506 Oak Street, Parkersburg.

San Bernardino, California

This branch was active in all departments during the summer months though attendance decreased to some extent. A large percentage of the local membership attended the Southern California reunion.

Dorothy Elkins and Harold Wixom were married August 29, at 8 p. m., the ceremony being performed by Pastor W. A. Teagarden. They left immediately following the ceremony for their new home at Manhattan, Kansas, where Brother Wixom is attending the Kansas State Agricultural College. Brother and Sister Wixom were quite active in church work, and are greatly missed.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer visited San Bernardino the evening of September 30, and again on October 4, when Fred M. Savage was ordained a deacon.

Their third annual Harvest Home Festival was held October 12, 13, and 14, and many from other branches were in attendance, also nonmember friends. A tent annex, erected next to the church, housed all exhibits of canned fruit and staple foods in addition to the bazaar under the supervision of the women's department and a candy booth in charge of the Oriole girls.

The program on Friday evening was presented by the church school children. Their play, "Why This Church?" was written by Sister Leola Nice for the benefit of neighbors whom the Saints are inviting to find a religious home among them. Following the play, a social time was enjoyed. Saturday evening and again on Sunday evening the play, "Follow Thou Me" was given by the D. O. U. Class, under the direction of Sister Irene Stearns, dramatic instructor of the class. Sunday morning at nine-thirty a special prayer service was held, and at 11 a. m. Brother Teagarden spoke on "Harvest." At 2:30 p. m. a special musical program was arranged by Sister Stella Hodges, district chorister.

The festival was a great success, and the local storehouse was replenished with food and clothing to be used to aid the needy during winter months.

Seattle, Washington

I Avenue, North West, and North Thirty-sixth Street.—The month of October was very busy and of great value to Seattle members. Officers for the year 1934-35 have assumed their responsibilities. A marked improvement of the work in the branch is noted, also an increase in attendance in nearly every department.

The program outlined for the year by executive officers will give more of the members an opportunity to participate in the work of the branch in a more definite way than ever before. Those engaged in the service of the Master are more consecrated to their tasks. With this growing interest in serving the Master, Seattle Branch expects a prosperous year seasoned with activities and accomplishments.

The district conference held there October 12 to 14, proved stimulating and inspiring. Much good instruction was received. The gathering opened with a banquet on the first evening for the ministry and their wives. There were prayer meetings in the early mornings and class study and discussion later in the morning and at 2:30 p. m., conducted by Apostle E. J. Gleazer.

October 14, in the morning, a two-hour service was held in which the officers of the district had the opportunity to present their program for the year to the members. In the afternoon the young people held their meeting to consider the program for the year and to select their leaders. Later in the afternoon an ordination service took place. Apostle Gleazer gave the closing address in the evening. "Our Co-ministry" was the theme of the conference.

A reception for Apostle Gleazer and family was held in the church basement the evening of October 16. Though they had made their home in Seattle for some time, the Saints had not had the opportunity to welcome them to the branch in a gathering. Local members were happy indeed to welcome them, and appreciate their assistance in the services.

The young people had a masquerade party the evening of October 26, in the basement of the church.

Kansas City Stake

Former Pastor C. E. Wight was surprised the evening of November 12, at the church, to find that the supposed stake high council meeting was in reality a stake reception in his and Mrs. Wight's honor. A host of friends were present to express their appreciation of his excellent services. The church was beautifully decorated. The pews had been removed and were replaced with floor lamps and huge baskets of chrysanthemums. The program was filled with entertaining talks, complimentary to Brother Wight's faithful and commendable leadership in all his works. Nor was Sister Wight omitted in the praise, for she has been a steadfast helper and worker. Talks were made by President Elbert A. Smith, Elders George Mesley and H. A. Higgins, and Bishop C. A. Skinner who presented the token from the stake congregations. Music was furnished by a ladies' quartet, a vocal solo by Lester Flowers, and a violin solo by Otis Swartz. Elder S. S. Sandy was master of ceremonies. The women served delicious refreshments, and the pleasant evening ended with the congregation singing "Blest Be the Tie That Binds."

Central Church

The O. B. K's were happy to have as their guest speaker the evening of November 4, Elder John Blackmore whose sermon was excellent. Participating O. B. K. members were Jeannette Dunn, Esther Lungwitz, and Doctor E. P. Nelson. Central young people are eager to be active in church work.

Graceland College Day was observed Sunday morning, November 11. The Graceland Male Quartet made a special trip to sing at this service, and the members enjoyed their numbers, also a vocal solo by Eugene Oliver. Elder John Gardner and Roy Thutchley gave short talks, and several present students who were home for the week end spoke informally of Graceland. The music was directed by Mrs. Cyril Wight, and prayer was offered by Elder Harvey Sandy, both Graceland alumni.

At the evening service Central members were strengthened by the message of Elder George Mesley. The music was presented by the girl's quartet which has begun winter activities. The quartet is composed of Mary Margaret Bowser, Byrna Sandy, Ruth Arthur, and Hazel Arthur.

Quindaro Church

Pastor H. A. Higgins has returned from his fall vacation to continue his God revealing tasks. His presence was greatly missed and the entire congregation welcomed him home.

On October 30, the T. A. D.'s headed by Victor Hill, sponsored a Halloween party in the basement of the church. The entire branch attended and enjoyed a full evening of entertainment, directed by Joe Davis, assisted by Beulah Davis and Charles Graham.

On Sunday morning, November 4, Elder H. A. Higgins conducted a priesthood prayer meeting that manifested outstanding attributes of God's power to a united group of divinely called servants. This service was climaxed by a most beautiful sacrament service in the presence of God's Holy Spirit.

Quindaro feels fortunate and spiritually stronger in the return of Brother and Sister Charles Scrivener who have been staunch supporters of the church for many years. For the past sixteen months, while residing in northern Michigan, they have been giving some outstanding service to the Church.

On Sunday morning, November 11, at the eleven o'clock hour the Stake Bishop, C. A. Skinner, gave an outstanding sermon on "Our Partnership with God."

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

An almost typical Graceland prayer meeting was enjoyed Thursday evening, October 18. All Gracelanders present took part as well as parents of Gracelanders, prospective Gracelanders and parents who hope to send their children to Graceland.

The College Day program was in charge of former Graceland students. Gerhard Quedenfeld talked on the subject, "Why I Want to Go to Graceland," at the morning service. The alumni quartet composed of Esther Schafer, Marcene Feldmuth, Asa Fowler and Louie Kuhn, sang two numbers. Norman Preusch read the story of the G-Getter by Peter B. Kyne more familiar to Gracelanders as "The Story of the Blue Vase." Asa Fowler gave a talk after which the college collections was taken up. The choir and Gracelanders sang the first verse of "O Come, Ye Sons of Graceland," and the congregation joined in the last two verses.

The evening service was just as interesting, but quite different. A talk by Grace Wambach presented her views on why she is going to go to Graceland. The alumni trio sang two numbers. Talks were given by Mary Butler, Harley Butler, and Viola Preusch. Excerpts from a letter from Roy Benson who is now attending Graceland were read by Norman Preusch. The program was climaxed with an enthusiastic rendition of "Graceland Forever."

After this service the Philadelphia chapter of Graceland Alumni was organized with Louie Kuhn as president and Asa Fowler as secretary-treasurer.

The Alpha Lambda Sigma Club had their annual banquet and theater party on Saturday evening.

A bake sale was given at the home of Sister Benson from which the branch received thirty-five dollars to be used for repairs in and on the church building.

Dallas, Texas

Dallas Branch enjoyed rally day Sunday, September 23, and a good crowd came out to Sunday school and church. After the preaching hour, a basket dinner was served at Tenison Memorial Park. All enjoyed meeting old friends and new who came over from the mission at Fort Worth.

The annual business meeting occurred September 30, and the following officers were chosen to supervise local activities in the year to come. Pastor, H. H. Davenport; assistant pastor, F. A. Peterson; secretary, Hal Davenport; church school director, Sister Chattie Everett; musical director, Sister Frank Wilson, and others. All are beginning the new year of work with enthusiasm.

The adult department conducted a lunch stand at the State Fair, October 6 to 21, and after all the bills were settled, the building fund was found to be nearly ninety dollars better off. It is the aim of this department to build a Sunday school room on the back of the church lot, a structure to care for all church needs. The women are looking forward to their "doughnut days" this winter when they will make doughnuts to order, and deliver them.

President Elbert A. Smith was a welcome visitor to Dallas Branch, November 4, and the day was full of enjoyable experiences. A good crowd attended morning and evening services. At the morning hour a solo, "The Lord Is My Light," was sung by Brother Elbert Moore, a namesake of Brother Smith's. The sermon by Brother Smith followed the administering of the sacrament and was on "God's Three Revelations of Himself." The evening sermon was on repentance. There was a duet by Sisters F. A. Peterson and B. A. Keith, and a solo by F. O. R. Keeney.

Dallas has the good fortune to be the home branch of Presiding Bishop L. F. P.

Curry. Because he is so very busy, he is seldom able to be present at the Sunday services, but he is always a welcome attendant, and his sermons are much appreciated.

Married Sixty Years

Brother and Sister Fred Hanson, of Independence, Missouri, celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary Tuesday, November 6, with "open house" from two to five o'clock at their home. Brother Hanson is eighty-six and his wife seventy-eight. Both were born in Denmark, and they were married at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1874.

In 1917 this pair moved to Independence. They have five children: Doctor F. H. Hanson, of Magnolia, Iowa; Apostle Paul M. Hanson, of Thurman, Iowa; George Hanson, Buffalo, New York; Mrs. Millie Vesey, Point Arena, California, and Miss Ethel Hanson, of the home. Both have been members of the church for more than sixty years.

Richmond, Missouri. In the early history of the church the Saints were bitterly persecuted and imprisoned at Richmond, and great prejudice was apparent, but in recent years conditions have changed. People are now eager to hear the gospel message. At the close of Elder J. Charles May's recent series there, several nonmembers insisted that he remain longer.

The cottage church building was too small for the attendance which ranged from ninety to one hundred twenty-five. Fifty percent of those present were nonmembers.

Six fine people, five adults and one boy, were baptized on Sunday by Brother Hamann, pastor, and Brother May; but the wonderful interest shown is not to be measured by those baptisms only. Many others are deeply interested. The Saints cooperated in this missionary effort, and the local ministry there is missionary minded.

The Bulletin Board

Attention, Michigan and Ontario Choir Members!

The following anthems were used by the choir last year: "New Every Morning Is The Love," Billard; "The Heavens Are Declaring," Beethoven, arranged by D. Buck; 150 Psalm, C. Frank, and "Lead Kindly Light," Godard-Parks. If you are not familiar with these numbers, it would be well to learn them as soon as possible. Following is the list for 1935, and these will be sung at the annual Legion convention next June: "Send Out Thy Light," Gounod; "Turn Ye Even to Me," Harker, and "Repent Ye," Scott-Deis. These are simple, but will require constant work. Lyon and Healy, Chicago, will mail them C. O. D.—Louise Evans.

Conference Notices

Southern Missouri district conference will be held at Thayer, Missouri, December 8 and 9. The program will be as follows: Saturday, 10:30 a. m., prayer meeting; 2 p. m., business meeting; 7:30 p. m., program by young people of the district, in charge of Sister J. W. Adams. Sunday: 10 a. m., church school class work; 11, sermon by J. F. Garver; 2:30 p. m., sermon by S. W. Simons; 7:30, Apostle Garver. We are asking all the priesthood to send their reports on time to the undersigned.—W. E. Haden, district president, Thayer, Missouri.

Request Prayers

Mrs. Clare Austin, Route 3, Independence, Missouri, requests the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. She has suffered for many weeks with typhoid fever, and a relapse has made her condition serious.

Marriages

GARVER-SMITH.—Verna Winifred Garver, eldest daughter of Apostle and Mrs. J. F. Garver, and Raymond H. Smith, son of A. H. and Georgia Horner Smith, were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents, Lamoni, Iowa, September 9, 1934, her father the officiating minister. Having known each other through the Lamoni public schools and Graceland College, this young couple begins the work of home building at Waterloo, Iowa, with a mutual regard and understanding giving promise of far realization of the best hopes and wishes of their many friends.

Our Departed Ones

LAYLAND.—Martha Jane Westfall was born in Pennsylvania, February 25, 1854; married Andrew J. Layland, October 23, 1873, at Friend, Nebraska. To them were born six sons and four daughters. Her husband, two sons, and two daughters preceded her in death. She was baptized into the church in early life, and was faithful to the end. Leaves to mourn, six children: Leroy, Andrew B., Rose Hunter, Jay, Mattie M., Somson, and Alma; twenty-six grandchildren, and twenty great-grandchildren. Death claimed her October 21, 1934, after many years of suffering. The funeral was in charge of Saints among whom she had lived since coming to Idaho. Elder Arthur Condit preached the sermon; interment was in Raymond Cemetery.

KENDALL.—Jupheena Z. Barmore Kendall, widow of the late William Kendall, died October 22, 1934, at the home of her son, Hosea Kendall, at Sample, Kentucky. She was the daughter of James and Elizabeth Barmore, born September 5, 1863, at Birdseye, Indiana. She united with the church when sixteen years old and was faithful to death. Married William Kendall, March 11, 1883, who died in 1929. To them fourteen children were born, and thirteen survive her: Simon, of Bowman, Indiana; Mrs. Moroni Sandage, Alma and Hubert, of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. John Lytle, Hazelton, Indiana; Mrs. Burkee Hill, of Union, Indiana; Mrs. Esther Hawkins, of Glezen, Indiana; Clinton, of New York; Hosea, of Sample, Kentucky; James, of Rolla, Kansas; Everett, of Evansville, Indiana, Fred and Delbert, of Anaconda, Montana; forty-eight grandchildren; twenty-one great-grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. Esther Kramer and Mrs. Hosea Burke, of Independence; three brothers, Alma C. Barmore, long-time missionary, now of Michigan, and Charles and James Barmore. Funeral was held at the Methodist Church of Union, October 24, Jasper O. Dutton delivering the sermon. Interment was beside her husband in Union Cemetery.

ANDERSON.—Saraphine Anderson, wife of Frank Anderson and mother of Elder Lester H. Anderson passed away October 12, 1934. She was born November 27, 1869, at Sioux City, Iowa, and joined the church by baptism June 28, 1914, at Logan, North Dakota. This good woman will be missed by the Saints at Dunn Center, North Dakota, for she was an active worker in the church.

MARTIN.—Jane Schreur, daughter of Elder and Mrs. John Schreur, was born April 18, 1894, at Freesoil, Michigan. Died after a short illness August 10, 1934, at her home at Grandview, Missouri. She united with the church in early youth. Married Charles W. Martin, September 17, 1914. Funeral services were held at Grandview church, August 12, in charge of Elder Atwell, of Independence. Mrs. Martin was preceded in death by her parents and by an infant daughter, Doris Mabel. She leaves to mourn, her husband who is pastor at Grandview; a daughter, Marie, 16; two sons, Fred, 14, and Heman, 5; a sister, Mrs. Clifford Tubbs, Freesoil, Michigan; three brothers: Allen and Heman Schreur, Gaylord, Michigan, and Fred Schreur, Kalkaska, Michigan. She was a devoted, loyal, and industrious wife and mother.

HAYER.—Albert E. Hayer, son of Goodman L. and Malinda Hayer, was born near Seneca, Illinois, August 22, 1870. Died October 6, 1934, at Morris, Illinois. December 20, 1899, he was united in marriage to Mabel E. Anderson. To this union were born three children, Jason, Sadie and Margaret. There is one granddaughter. All these mourn his passing together with one sister, Mrs. Oscar H. Johnson, and one brother, Zenas M. Hayer, many relatives and a host of friends. June 9, 1895, he was baptized by Elder J. B. Roush and continued a loyal faithful member of Mission Branch. Funeral services were conducted by David E. Dowker at Mission Church.

ELSE.—Alfred Frank Else, son of Albert and Charlotte Else, was born at Saint Thomas, Ontario, January 21, 1900; baptized when eight years old. He married Doris Hind. To them two sons were born, Gerald, 7 years, and Paul, 3. Besides his widow and sons, he is survived by his mother, Mrs. John Taylor, Saint Thomas, and two sisters, Mrs. Myrtle Brown, Saginaw, Michigan, and Mrs. Thelma Golightly, Saint Thomas, and a host of friends. Died at Queen Alexandria Sanatorium after a long illness, October 27. The funeral was held October 29, from Williams Funeral Home. Interment was in Saint Thomas Cemetery. D. T. Williams preached the funeral sermon.

Continuous Thanksgiving

By H. L. Peyton

Thanksgiving Day marks a national harvest festival fixed by the proclamation of the President and the governors of the several states.

The Thanksgiving season now approaching marks another harvest festival. Nature has blessed us with an abundance of food. We have our homes. We have our children. We have our friends. We have our health. Though we may be oppressed by influences extraneous to the will of God, yet there is hope—and faith.

Hope and faith are two great motivating forces. They are invaluable factors in causing men to carry on. Better times will come. . . . Our thanksgiving need not cease at the close of the national holiday. Every day should be a day of thanksgiving. . . .

The darkness which hovers over us is not impenetrable. A ray of hope now flickers. Our faith and hope can remove the veil of darkness, and we can visualize the dawn of a new day. Already the clouds are lifting, and we can see the outlines of opportunities to come. They challenge us to the best we have . . .

Shall we take on new courage? The hardness which encases men's hearts is not impervious. It will yield to love.

Let there be light! Let there be love! The twain shall be powerful influences in causing men to seek the more durable benefits of life. Society, from the smallest tributaries to the greater currents, will take on new beauty and lustre.

■ Protected From Danger

By Carl F. Mayer

It was in the eighties. A missionary strolled along the streets of London. His ship was to sail within three days. He was of the pensive type, primarily occupied with the hardships that would await him in a strange land.

Leisurely walking, the missionary came upon one of London's fine parks which were kept spotlessly clean. It was strictly forbidden to enter upon the soft and wonderfully green grass. Posters also heralded the punishment accorded the transgressors.

As the missionary looked about, his eyes beholding the freshness of the green, he spotted a fourleaf clover. Following the old belief that such a leaf meant good luck to the holder, our good man forgot himself, stepped upon the forbidden ground, and plucked the much sought good harbinger.

A policeman saw the missionary taking the leaf and promptly arrested him, despite his energetic protests.

Curiously enough, the missionary was kept locked up for almost two days and then was discharged after a fine of a few shillings. His protests that he would miss his boat, scheduled to sail soon, were not heeded. When finally our missionary again saw the streets of London, he learned that his ship had sailed one hour before his release. Perhaps angered by the ill-omen clover he picked, he was most sadly disappointed.

Ten days later the missionary learned that the ship he was to sail on sank during a storm with scarcely a few saved from it. He praised God for the inconvenience and promised himself never to be angry at adverse circumstances. Happily knowing that the hand of the Almighty was with him, he sailed on the next ship.

■ Puncture Patch

"I was wondering," writes a friend, "why it was I had so many punctures in the tires of my car. Flat tires were so frequent and the expense became so much that I learned to repair them myself, but still it was annoying to be always getting out the tools to take care of another one.

"I wondered where I was getting all of the nails. They were always very rusty when I found them embedded in the rubber. I looked around my parking place downtown. I cautiously examined the places I stopped, but I never could find where they came from. The punctures continued despite all my care.

"A few days ago there was a hard rain that washed a layer of cinders off the drive to my garage and I found the cause of the punctures. There was a layer of more than a hundred rusty old nails exposed to view. I had been picking them up in my tires one by one."

How often we look abroad for the troubles and perplexities that bother us and seek to blame the carelessness and meanness of other people, when the trouble is right at home all the time. One by one they bring us grief and disappointment. It is only when we examine ourselves and admit our own faults that we can find relief.

The Stewardship Ideal and the Law of Tithing

Stewardship in our church program means something different from what it means in other churches. To them it is a moral responsibility for the management of life and property. To us it is that and more. Among our church thinkers it suggests everything from a conservative adjustment of our present economic arrangement to the more revolutionary plan of carrying out an experiment with a selected group of people working under the rules of a specially designed economic and social plan, in a particular location. Under the direction of the Presidency and Bishopric it is planned to give attention to these matters in our columns as material becomes available.

It has been remarked by one of the bishops that there are some people calling for more definite plans for the operation of a system of stewardships who do not understand and do not practice the law of tithing. People who cannot obey the law of tithing would certainly not be qualified to live in a community operated on a stewardship basis.

It is the hope of the officers of the church that the educational program which they are even now beginning will result in a wider compliance with this elementary principle of our financial law. When that is accomplished, there will be hope of extending our operating plan to meet the broader implications of the law of stewardship.

Increasing numbers of church people are recognizing that it is their obligation to obey the law of tithing by the filing of inventories and the regular payment of amounts due. They are recognizing that tithing as a system is more equitable, just, and dependable than the older way of relying on sporadic appeals and voluntary gifts. Members who were converted to a teaching of the gospel in which the financial law was not included have, in the past, found it difficult to readjust their thinking to the new terms. It is unfortunate that some efforts in evangelization were lacking in this respect. But as it becomes increasingly apparent that this feature of the law is required, resistance decreases and acceptance becomes more general.

It may be of interest to our readers to know that the doctrine of stewardship is receiving increasing attention and support among other churches. A national movement, organized with an interdenominational personnel, Religion and Welfare Recovery, with headquarters in New York City, is fostering an effort that bears a parallel resemblance to the program in our own church now being pushed by the Presidency and Presiding Bishopric. The following, taken from address over radio station WMCA by the Rev. E. Graham Wilson, will be of much interest:

"This program calls for an emphasis during the month of November on the enlistment of life, and during the month of December an emphasis on Stewardship—a stewardship of life, service and earthly goods. The program culminates on the last Sunday of the year when each one is urged to take an inventory of his life—his motives, his attitudes and his purposes."

The remainder of this month and the month of December will afford an opportunity for pastors to teach the financial law to their congregations and encourage the members to comply with it. The cooperation of all church officers and members of the priesthood is earnestly solicited in this effort. The success of the church depends upon the progress that we can make in this line.

Our Program

Our church program has been broadly covered in recent years by the statement of President Smith that it is our task to "Zionize the church and evangelize the world." We must not forget that duty.

Dozens of smaller tasks, which contribute to these two larger goals, can be named. Tasks in which pastors and local congregations will be interested can be stated as follows:

1. Beautify the church buildings and grounds.
2. Dignify the church services.
3. Teach the people to "Keep the Law."
4. Promote active friendliness and helpfulness in the community.
5. Evangelize that part of the world which lies nearest us.

If every pastor and local congregation can work to accomplish these objectives, much good can be done for the local church, and thereby benefit the church at large.

Biographies Versus Obituaries

The Herald Editors are always happy to receive short biographical sketches and articles concerning men and women who are doing good work for the church, especially of a kind that may offer suggestions and encouragement to others.

It is a sad fact that few think to write of these worthy people until after they die. We would like to have the stories concerning them while they are living and can enjoy the appreciation of their labors. Good clear pictures always help to make the accounts interesting for our readers.

Providing space for obituaries is an increasingly difficult problem. At the beginning of the new year we shall have to reduce the amount of free space available for each item. Brief biographies of prominent people can sometimes be used in addition to the obituary, but the elegiac character of biographies written after the decease of the subject makes such matter mournful reading.

The Editors wish to make the suggestion that biographical sketches of prominent people be written while they are living and serving. The facts may not be complete, but they will be more cheerfully compiled.

A Suggestion for Solicitors

From the office of the Bishopric we receive a copy of the letter below, written by E. A. Davis solicitor of the branch at Seattle, Washington.

Brother Davis apparently means business in dealing with the financial law, and is very properly providing himself with the aids that the church has arranged in order that his business for the church shall be successful. A number of fine suggestions are contained in the letter:

Please place our order for 70 sets of offering envelopes and 140 record sheets for 1935. We like the envelope system very much and have always had good results. Please also send me a supply of inventory blanks that I may be ready for the first of the year.

I would also like to have you arrange with the Herald Office to send me 50 budget books. I find if I have the books on hand I am able to sell many more than if I took orders for them. Many of our people are beginning to use the budget system and find it easier to file their financial statements. Our hopes are to have a much better response next year than ever before.

We plan a New Year's Eve Watch Meeting in which the Saints file their statements and pay their tithing. It is a good time as the old year is just closing. After the "Tithing Meeting" in the early part of the evening we have a Watch Prayer Meeting, closing just at 12 o'clock. Last year we did this and a very wonderful meeting was held.

This kind of good work is what it will take to put missionaries into the field and send the work of

Among Our Church Workers

J. L. VERHEI

President of the Portland Branch and District began his active work in the church in 1928, when he was ordained to the office of elder and acted as counselor to Elder Eli Bronson and later to Elder Daniel B. Sorden, finally relieving Elder Sorden when he was transferred to Los Angeles. Elder Verhei is a young man and in his field in the business world serves as Construction Superintendent for one of Portland's largest utility concerns. At the last General Conference, he was ordained to the office of high priest. His favorite thought is to heed the call of the church given through the Prophet, President F. M. Smith, and "Go Forward to Zion."

Financial Report

The total income for the first ten months of 1934 amounted to $192,465.50 as compared to $172,543.84 for the same period in 1933. This shows an increase in income of approximately $20,000.

We are sure the membership will take encouragement in noting this increase in receipts over last year. While the increase has been small each month yet it has been quite steady and we trust that the year 1933 has marked the low point in income, and that our receipts will continue to show an upward trend from this time on.

The total budget appropriation for the year 1934 amounts to $261,050. The amount authorized for the ten month period is $217,541.66, or $25,076.16 more than our income. Through stringent economies the expenses have been kept to approximately $201,000 but this, however, still leaves a deficit for this ten month period of approximately $9,000.

We sincerely trust that this deficit may be taken up as a result of the effort being put forth during the period set aside for compliance with the financial law.

In addition to keeping our expenditures at a minimum we feel we have improved our financial position by reducing our current and funded indebtedness approximately $53,000 during this ten month period.

This reduction has taken place in accounts, notes and bonds payable, and allowances payable.

It is obvious that this reduction was made possible through the liquidation of assets not considered essential to the major program of the church. The liquidation of such assets has been in keeping with the financial policy approved by the General Conference of 1932.

Satisfactory progress has been made in the re-writing of the Auditorium and Graceland Foundation bond issues. We have reasonable assurance that the Auditorium issue will be completed before the end of this year, and the Graceland issue shortly thereafter.

A study of the income by districts reveals some very interesting facts. The total percentage of increase in receipts from all districts reporting amounts to 11.54%. Of 78 districts having complete reports for the ten months period, 57 showed an increase and 21 a decrease. Seventeen districts out of the 57 increased their income over 50%. Eight districts had an increase of from 40% to 50%. Five districts of from 30% to 40%. Six districts of from 20% to 30%. Twenty-one districts increased from 1% to 20%.

The increase in most of the districts may be attributed largely to the effective work being carried on in connection with the "Keep The Law" program, together with some improvement in business conditions.

Letters have gone out from the Presiding Bishop's office during the last few months to each bishop and bishop's agent, containing figures and information relative to the income of the respective districts. It is hoped that every district will show a favorable increase by the end of the year.

We have appreciated the fine response of many devoted Saints throughout the church. We are mindful of the fact, however, that there are still many who have failed to come to the support of the church in its present need. To those who have faithfully complied, we extend our appreciation. To those who have not as yet responded we make our appeal.

The difference between the above and the reference in Elbert A. Smith's article (The Saints' Herald, November 20, 1934), based on October summaries, arise from including real estate expense in the present figures. The expense of the church itself does not show a deficit. However, all interim figures are subject to year-end adjustments.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

By. G. L. DELAPP.

For Study of the Priesthood Manual

In response to request for study helps to guide students and teachers in the use of the Priesthood Manual for credit, such an outline has now been prepared and mimeographed for distribution. It is on a basis of this outline that examination questions have been prepared for use of those wishing priesthood credit or credit in religious education. The study helps will be sent postpaid for five cents per copy. Copies of examination questions in separate sealed envelopes will be sent on request with enclosure of a postage stamp.

The "Be Ye Doers," of Duluth, Minnesota, were recently hosts to the young people who attended the Minnesota District Conference. Several plays, readings, and musical numbers afforded entertainment for the conference. Class-work for adults was conducted by Apostle J. F. Curtis while Sister Lydia Wight instructed the young people. At the eleven o'clock meeting Saturday morning, fifty young people, directed by Sister Adah Carlson, marched into the auditorium singing "God Is Marshalling His Army," and took their places upon the platform where President Frederick M. Smith awaited them. The tithing reports of the young people were turned over to President Smith who commended them for the high percentage of tithe payers.

A Career in Dietetics

OLENA PLAIN

With the prize awarded her for winning the Women's Christian Temperance Union Essay Contest at the end of her freshman year in William Chrisman High School in Independence, Missouri, Olena Plain started her fund for a college education at Graceland. During her senior year at William Chrisman she was taken into the National Honor Society and at the end of the year received the scholarship award which is given to the valedictorian of the class. During the two years she spent at Graceland, she took the Home Economics course. She was a member of the C. M. C. Club, the Oratorio and Lambda Delta Sigma Societies, and the Vestae Feliae of which she was president her last year there. Desirous of specializing in dietetics, she is now taking the Nursing Course offered by the Independence Sanitarium. After graduating from the Sanitarium she wishes to attend the Iowa State College at Ames, Iowa, to complete her course in dietetics.

ORGANIZATION AND ACTIVITY NOTES

Notice to Michigan Musicians

Orchestra to be Formed

With the success of the Michigan musical movement well assured, we are preparing to launch a part of this effort in the orchestral division.

The plan is to have each person who plays an orchestral instrument, fill out an application blank. Blanks for this purpose will be placed in the hands of branch presidents or pastors. If yours cannot supply you, please write to the undersigned at 2625 Clement Street, Flint, Michigan. From the returned, filled in applications we will select the best orchestra possible. Music will be sent to each member several weeks in advance of a performance and each member will be requested and expected to be able to play his or her part prior to the assembling of the organization. Then when we assemble we will be ready to spend all of the available time in intensive rehearsal on interpretation and polishing for performance.

We believe the success of this kind of an undertaking will depend upon the wholehearted cooperation of all of our church musicians in this territory. As anyone can see, we must assemble musicians of about the same ability so that all will feel at home with the organization. For those who are not selected we propose to organize a training, or "feeder" group. If there is enough demand a band could be organized. We are asking everyone who knows an instrumentalist in this region to see to it personally that he gets and returns an application.

We feel confident that we can have at least a 60 piece orchestra of fairly high musical and spiritual standards, and we bespeak your earnest support, and prayers in our behalf, in this undertaking. We would like to have this organization ready for the big Legion convention next June. Remember, if an application blank is not put in your hands soon, please write to the undersigned at the above address.

"Well Done"

By Elbert A. Smith

Funeral Sermon of Bishop Robert T. Cooper Member of the Standing High Council, at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri
October 31, 1934,

"So he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained beside them five talents more. His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord."—Matthew 25: 21.

AS WE GROW OLDER, the men whose friendship we have cherished over a long period of years and upon whom we have come to lean take their departure one by one. This has been our experience in the past and we are cognizant that it will be our experience in the future, and yet we never become accustomed to it. I did not anticipate that this would be my task. Yet when word came to me over the telephone that Brother Cooper had passed away, almost immediately the thought came, "You will be asked to preach the funeral sermon." It was a task from which I shrank, preferring to sit back with those who mourn silently; but a moment later, like a still, small voice speaking to me, the words came, "This shall be your text concerning Brother Cooper: 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'" That experience materially changed the attitude of my approach to this occasion.

At a time like this we are brought face to face with the great mystery of life and death as relating to the whole human family. Only a few weeks ago the great scientist Marconi, addressing a conference of scientists in Venice, there being among them no less than eight men who had won the Nobel prize for outstanding achievements in the scientific field, declared that the problem of life and of death is the most tormenting problem that confronts humanity, and he added, "The inability of science to solve that problem is absolute." No one in that august assembly rose to challenge his statement. No one has challenged it since then, and no one will challenge it, because it is true. He continued by saying that the man who would solve the problem of life and death "confronts a book that is sealed with seven seals" and that this problem would "be frightening but for faith." This great scientist, facing this assembly of fellow scientists, fell back for comfort and courage on the old principle of faith. We can only approach this problem through faith.

WE SHOULD REMEMBER that we are told by St. Peter, (2 Peter 1: 19): that "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto you do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts."

This more sure word of prophecy reveals to us God as our creator. If he is our creator, naturally he is our law-giver. It reveals to us further God as a father, "Our Father which art in heaven." It reveals to us Christ as a Savior and as a friend. This sure word of prophecy reveals to us our duties rather clearly in the midst of a generation that is confused and perplexed, a generation which has turned away from the old standards of human conduct and has come to question the dividing line between good and evil. This sure word of prophecy comes with a rather clear revelation of human duty. It reveals to us our future, at least as much as we need to know about our future. The seven seals are opened through faith.

An occasion like this also brings us face to face with individual problems. We know that the sick are healed, even when physicians, basing their diagnosis on X-rays and other sure methods, have said that there was no hope, and yet, as in this case, frequently our dearest friends are not healed. We must remember that it is said that it is appointed to all men once to die. We cannot choose the time of our departure, neither can we choose for our friends or our most dearly loved ones. That time may seem inopportune to us, but we must approach it through faith, "My times are in thy hand. My God, I wish them there. My life, my friends, my soul I leave, entirely to thy care."

Reverting to the text, what joy it must be to a man who has finished his life's work to hear the welcome plaudit "Well done, thou good and faithful servant. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

THIS MAN, Robert T. Cooper, had received from his Lord certain talents, as is set forth in the parable from which we have taken our text. The talents he received were of no mean order. He had taken them and used them diligently and had increased them. Quietly, studiously, persistently, year by year he used and improved upon his talents. He served the church for many years in a financial capacity, much of the time on a self-sustaining basis, winning his way in the world and giving his time to the church without recompense. Only two or three days ago a friend related to me an incident that occurred years ago in California when Brother Cooper was bishop's agent. By a few minutes of timely counsel and help given in the right way at the right moment, he saved the church the sum of $5,000. Not a penny of this came to him. It was simply given in the day's work. Without doubt it was but one of many incidents in which he was profitable to the church as bishop or bishop's agent.

He served the church spiritually. Years ago when I was on a visit to the Pacific Coast, I drove with him in his car from Los Angeles to Long Beach. At that time he and one or two other local brethren were maintaining a little mission at Long Beach, just a handful of people meeting in a hall. He gave his own time and energy, and at his own expense, week after week and month after month maintained that mission. Today in Long Beach we have one of the best branches of the church that we have anywhere, the result of the seed that Brother Cooper and the few associated with him planted in those early days. As a pastor he has ministered to many people.

Perhaps his most outstanding work has been of late years in the Standing High Council of the Church, the highest judicial body in the church. Only the members of the council know how many difficult cases were referred to him individually or as a member of some committee of the council to analyze, and how many problems were given him to work out and report upon. Only the members of the council know how diligently he worked these cases out to the most minute detail. In the High Council "We shall meet, but we shall miss him."

Without doubt there are many individuals who owe him a debt of gratitude for help rendered in years gone by. Sister Smith and I went on our first mission to California in 1900. A year later my mother came to the coast. At that time Brother Cooper was tourist conductor and he took care of my mother all the way as though she had been his own mother. She never forgot his kindness. When I was broken in health, and went to the coast in 1917 to recuperate, it was Brother Cooper who met us at the station, took us to his own home, and later took us to a cottage rented on the beach. Brother Cooper, during my convalescence, ministered to my every need. There are many who could testify to similar ministrations from his hands.

LIFE furnishes astonishing contrasts. Only recently it is said that twenty thousand people came out to attend the burial of "Pretty Boy Floyd." There was none there to honor him. He had been a public enemy, an outlaw, and a murderer, and they were there mostly out of curiosity. In a week they had forgotten him and turned to other sensations. Yet that man, too, had talents. He had strength of body, a good mind with initiative and courage, and could have made himself useful in the world, but he chose to bury his talents, or rather to use them against society.

Brother Cooper used his talents in the interest of God and man and many have come here today to honor him as the good citizen and the Christian gentleman. How came this to be? How did it happen that he lived this sort of life? In the first place, it did not just happen. He was born into a good Christian home. His father and mother were devout Latter Day Saints. His inheritance and environment in his boyhood days were both good. Latter Day Saints should take note that the foundations of character are laid in the home. As Mary Roberts Rhinehart says, "The good home puts its permanent mark upon the child during the first eight years." Later, Brother Cooper deliberately chose to build upon the foundations that had been laid for him. He chose to keep the law of Christ. He worked out the gospel in his own life in terms of human conduct. He followed the injunction of Peter, "Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity," and there follows the promise, "So shall there be administered unto you an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior."

His life was his revelation to the community of the beliefs of this church as worked out from day to day in his home and business affairs. After the trying years of the immediate past he has gone to his reward and entered into peace.

There remains perhaps one problem that troubles us. We sometimes say, How is it that a man who has passed over on the other side can be at peace and happy and take rest if he knows about the vicissitudes and anxieties that beset his loved ones who remain behind? I have worked that problem out to my own satisfaction in this way. The man who has lived a devoted Christian life here below, who passes over on the

What Shall My Contribution Be?

By Harold Watkins

President, Youth's Council, Seattle and British Columbia District

AS YOUNG PEOPLE let us contemplate the beginning of another year of religious activity. We feel to pause in retrospect and meditation. In so doing we are challenged with this thought: wherein lies the value of our saying, we are beginning a new year? It is just another milestone in the course of time wherein we begin again to reckon time? Or does it give us the opportunity to measure objectively the progress of the past, to formulate new or additional plans and objectives? Or, what is more important, do we find ourselves desirous of taking a personal inventory of our attitude, our contribution our innermost thoughts, our daily walk of life?

New occasions teach new duties,
Time makes ancient good uncouth.
They must upward still and onward
Who would keep abreast of truth.

So reads a portion of the Present Crisis, by James Russell Lowell.

The dawn of every day brings us face to face with new occasions which truly require the learning of new duties, new adjustments, new sacrifices. We view our past life, the circumstances we have contacted and our reactions to them. From where we now stand, many of our former deeds appear uncouth—yet at the time of commitment, they typified our best judgment and understanding.

Were we able to stand afar off and view the world we would see millions of people, each endowed with the urge of sex, the desire for food, the hope of security, the ambition for recognition, and a curiosity of life—all, to be sure, are God given characteristics. But unless people are endowed with the urge of sex in order that they may carry out the purposes of God; the desire of food to sustain life; the hope of security in order that they may also secure the life of their fellow being; ambition that they may be recognized of God and not of man; a curiosity of life that they may live for the hereafter—unless, we repeat, people are thus inspired they have failed to answer the purpose of their creation.

We like to think of religion as a philosophy of life; but only as we apply it to the conditions and circumstances that are encountered, the contacts and associations with our fellow beings, the acquirement of the material possessions of life, does it become a dynamic and vitalizing force in our lives. If we have not made this application of religious teachings then we have not caught the vision of this truth which is being held out to us as members of the Kingdom of God.

In view of this, let our contribution to the church be that of acquiring and applying an added measure of the Light and Truth of Christ to life. If, with "all diligence" we seek this end, we shall inherit a joy and satisfaction transcending any of our past experiences.

When we reach another milepost in our reckoning of time, to what extent shall we have contributed toward:

1. "Creative leisure-time activities?"
2. "A knowledge of the heritage (history) of Latter Day Saintism?"
3. "Our present day spiritual programs?"
4. "An intelligent compliance with the financial program?"
5. "Evangelistic endeavors?"
6. "An enlistment of youth in the active service and the creative work of the church?"

Mr. Roger M. Babson in talking with the late Charles P. Steinmetz (who was recognized as the world's foremost electrical engineer) concerning prospective future inventions in connection with radio, aeronautics, power transmission, etc. asked Mr. Steinmetz what line of research would see the greatest discoveries during the next fifty years. After careful thought Mr. Steinmetz replied, "I think the greatest discoveries will be made along spiritual lines. Here is a force which history clearly teaches has been the greatest power in the development of men. Yet we have been playing with it merely, and have never seriously studied it as we have the physical forces. Some day people will learn that material things do not bring happiness, and are of little use in making men and women creative and powerful. Then the scientists will turn their laboratories over to the study of God and prayer and to the spiritual forces. When this day comes the world will see more advancement in one generation than it has seen in the past four."—From an address by Rev. E. Graham Wilson, D. D., over Radio Station W. M. C. A.

Parents in Partnership

By Lottie Clarke Diggle

It would be amusing were it not so tragic to see girls enter into matrimony without any training whatsoever. They spend from one to six years in preparing for the various professions and yet marriage is the most difficult and complicated of all professions. To be a successful homemaker a girl must be teacher, nurse, dietitian, seamstress, psychologist, economist, home-decorator and preacher combined. Is it any wonder that there are so many disastrous marriages? In the field of education today the cultural and aesthetic are being so overstressed that there is not sufficient room on the curricula of our public and high schools for the practical, such as homecraft, which should be studied by boys and girls alike. Psychology, sexology, budgeting, home-planning and home-decorating would create a better understanding between husbands and wives and would help considerably in the art of living together.

In choosing a life partner, physical attraction is almost always a factor, although in the majority of cases it is not lasting. Although mental equality is an asset, there are many instances of brilliant men living in conjugal felicity with the comfortable home-loving type of woman. Unless however, husband and wife are socially equal, after the physical attraction has waned, there will be a lack of respect, and respect is the foundation upon which love is builded. Morally their ideals should coincide but most important of all, there must be a common purpose if two totally different human beings are to enjoy lasting harmony. Marriage is the union of two incomplete human beings having a common purpose to make a perfect whole.

Although they two are one, yet each has the right to preserve his or her individuality, which can be exemplified by the two sides of an equilateral triangle meeting at a given point. When two fallible human beings are joined together they will need to develop a technique of cooperation which is unequalled by any farmers' cooperative movement or labor union that has ever existed.

Marriage reminds one of a three legged race. The participants are tied together and they desire to run together but at first they do not seem to know how. One jerks this way and the other one that; they stumble and fall but after considerable practice and patient effort they finally develop a coordination of movement that is a source of satisfaction to themselves at least.

Added to common purpose, understanding and forbearance, should be tact, the rarest of all virtues, also faithfulness and of course loyalty. Unfortunately space will not permit of dwelling on these essentials. Although matrimony is a business partnership and it is said that competition is the life of trade, yet competition is death to marital bliss. Have the readers ever heard of the husband of a famous woman who was really happy?

Whereas no home is complete without children and they contribute immeasurably to the enrichment of the home life, nevertheless the child is not an adequate reason for marriage but should be an incident rather than the be-all of wedded life. The child could be likened to the third side of the equilateral triangle—the eternal triangle—the man, the woman, and the child, each having equal rights and privileges in the home. Children should never dominate the mother's or father's interest. Too often upon the advent of the first child the mother will lavish her time, her attention and her interest upon her offspring to the exclusion of her husband, who is liable to soon be regarded as merely "a bringer in of the bacon." One is reminded of the story of the small boy whose teacher asked the class the meaning of the word, bridegroom. "Please teacher, I know," he piped up brightly. "It's a thing they have at weddings." It is too bad that a wife who has promised to love and honor and possibly obey her husband, should relegate him to the nonentity class.

The family circle may be compared to a wheel of which the parents are the hub or center and the children the spokes (let us hope that in these days of luxurious living and economic difficulties they might not be quite so numerous.) The rim is represented by common purpose which holds the family together and the tire by the love which minimizes the bumps. Wise partners would take the precaution to carry along a "spare."

On the other hand parents sometimes dominate their children. It is instinctive to perpetuate over lives through our children and naturally they inherit some of our characteristics. The all-wise Creator has ordained that no two human beings shall be alike physically, morally, mentally or socially, and every child is entitled to live his own life, to be permitted to express himself. Heaven preserve children (and we say it in all reverence) from managing parents who (Continued on page 1517.)

of
President Joseph Smith
(1832-1914)

Edited by his daughter

Ever a friend to education, Father, counseled with his neighbors—Uncle Hyrum, who had a number of children, Peter Hawes, Father Huntington, Hyrum Clark, Theodore Turley, the Fordhams, John Brackenbury (stepson of Jabez Durfee before-mentioned, son of Mrs. Durfee by her first husband), and perhaps others—and they joined in the employment of Miss Wheeler as a teacher for the whole group of children.

The little log house was fitted with the necessary seats, writing-table, and fireplace for heating—and we had our first real school. The floor was made of heavy planks sawed from oak timber by what was known as the whip-saw method. The seats were formed of the outside cuts called slabs, made of convenient size, with holes bored in the ends into which were inserted legs of such length as to raise the various seats to the proper heights for the children of differing ages.

The writing-table was a wide oak board, perhaps two or two and a half inches thick, laid on large pins driven into holes bored in the logs forming the south wall of the house. It was placed in front of a window made of two small sashes placed end to end and filled with what my memory seems to indicate as panes of glass seven by nine inches in dimension. This window and a similar one in the north side furnished the light. There was a trap door in the floor leading into a cellar hole formerly used for storing vegetables. This trap door and the cellar were utilized by a number of the older boys for play purposes.

It was here, under these conditions, that I learned the art of combining letters into words, to read after a fashion, and to write in a still more primitive manner. The copy-books we used were of the ordinary foolscap paper of the time; our pens were made from the quills of the goose—wild and tame—and our ink was home-made, sometimes by boiling maple bark, sometimes from the indigo bag, and sometimes from what were called ink balls—a kind of excrecence growing on oak trees. The copy-books were kept by the teacher and used by the classes only at certain hours of the day, so arranged as to accommodate all who took lessons in writing. The system employed was that known as the pot-hook system. How many pupils learned to write well under the torture of that system I would not try to say, but I am quite free to confess that in my case it failed utterly.

In this school under the care of Miss Wheeler—and I have no recollection of any other teacher there—a certain amount of progress was made in the rudiments of education and in the sports which occupied the outdoor time of the children of the neighborhood. Before the school closed Uncle Jimmie Allred had moved into the town and built on the northeast corner of the block immediately north of the one on which our house stood. He had a grandson named Jack—at least that is the only name we knew for him. I remember him particularly for the reason that he became quite a terror to a number of the younger boys, being an aggressive fellow, always ready for rough sport, frequently angry, and quite furious with his fists.

His connection with the school was productive of some odd scenes which stand out in memory. Very frequently tardy, he would enter in a cross mood and give saucy answers to the teacher. In those days "Assistant Birch" was not banished from the schoolroom, and the switch, Miss Wheeler's thimble, her knuckles, or a ruler were apparently necessary concomitants of our early education. On one occasion when Jack was tardy he had anticipated punishment by fortifying himself with an extra sack or something heavy stuffed under his jacket. Unexpectedly to him, however, the teacher stood him up near the fire, at the time pretty hot, where he soon became very uncomfortable. We surmised that the teacher, suspecting his preparations against punishment, had purposely placed him where he would get a good roasting or sweating. At all events, by the time she was ready to apply the switch poor Jack had had quite a plenty of the heat and was glad to have the program changed.

The older boys of the school formed a sort of secret organization which used to furnish them a good deal of fun, as fun was rated among us. The charter members of this order had been initiated without special ceremonies, but the opportunities offered by this cellar under the schoolhouse later inspired some more elaborate initiations. For a time Jack had not been taken into membership for the boys feared he might make trouble when things did not go to please him. However, he insisted upon joining and a committee, of which I was one, fixed up a special initiation for his benefit. The plan was to lead him into the schoolhouse blindfolded, take up the trap door, and four boys hold a sheet over the opening into the cellar. Then as he approached the spot, another boy, armed with a pillow borrowed surreptitiously from some mother's supply, was to strike him down into the hole. We would clap the door shut and then all engage in a wild Indian dance and hullabaloo over his head!

It all worked well up to a certain point, perhaps quite as well as some of the more elaborate initiations into other secret orders of modern days. Jack was eager to become a member and submitted tamely to being blindfolded. He was led into the room, up to the trap door, hit with the pillow, and pitched headlong into the sheet stretched over the hole—all as per schedule. Alas! he was either taller than we calculated or the blow was harder than intended, or perhaps the boys held the sheet too loosely. At any rate, Jack got a terrific blow upon his head as it struck against one of the beams which supported the floor and caught the edges of the trap door when the latter was closed.

Of course we popped the door shut, not knowing of the injury, and the hullabaloo began according to program; but soon cries of rage and genuine pain issued from the cellar. The door was raised, Jack dragged out, and his injury discovered. Efforts were made to soothe his anger and patch up a truce, but it was not accomplished without some difficulty. Finally, through offering to make him a principal performer in an evening entertainment to be given in the schoolroom, he was pacified. He was a very versatile lad and, while older than some of us, was very agile, quite an acrobat in fact, and a contortionist. Among his accomplishments was one of twisting his face into most grotesque shapes, laughing or crying at will, or with crossed legs walk upon his knees like a cripple. So an act was fixed up for him, to include these and similar stunts, and when the night came, with his face hidden behind a mask of dough, he took a very successful part in the comedy portion of our entertainment. So far we had made amends and he had forgiven us, but the accident which had happened to him put a stop to the society and no other initiations were held.

Mr. Corey

How long that school continued I cannot say. My next memory is concerned with one kept by Howard S. Corey in a house across the street, on the block in which Brother William Marks lived, opposite to the residence of Elder John Snider. The building was one-story and the school, held in a large room, was well attended. Uncle Hyrum's children John and Jerusha, Elder Snider's John, two of Elder Marks' boys, two of the Hawes' children, and numbers from other families furnished quite a band of scholars.

The teacher, an elder in the church, was a married man whose wife assisted him at times in his duties as teacher. He had lost his left hand in some way but had an artificial one made of cork or other light substance, on which he always wore a glove. He was tall and slender, lightly built but quite active. When or how he came into the life of the Saints I do not know, but I do recall an accident which happened to him and which I witnessed from a position near our front gate. Father came out to mount his horse at the hitching post. In a playful manner he took hold of Elder Corey and suggested throwing him down. As he spoke he gave the young man's leg a little knock with his foot, to unbalance him. It was an apparently light blow, but it upset him, or would have, had not Father caught him as he fell.

Then it was discovered that the playful kick had broken the leg. Father carried him into the house, called a doctor, and had the bone properly set. Mother was installed as nurse and he was given the best of care until his injury healed. I still remember Father's great remorse over the incident and how he not only took care of the unfortunate man and paid the physician's bills, but saw to it that the teacher lost nothing financially by his enforced absence from the school. I am inclined to think Mrs. Corey kept us going until her husband returned to the schoolroom.

One circumstance connected with the school I remember quite vividly for the reason that it illustrated a fair sense of justice on the part of Teacher Corey. Jack Allred and I lived not far apart and were frequently together. Jack occasionally was tardy, as has been mentioned before, and upon one of these occasions I was with him when we should have been in school. It had rained during the noon recess, quite a little shower, and we had taken shelter somewhere until the rain was over. Then we struck out for the schoolhouse. When we came in, the teacher was busy and we went directly to our seats. When he was at liberty he called us to him and asked why we were tardy.

Jack took upon himself the office of spokesman and, instead of giving the real explanation, replied that it had rained when we started to school, was terribly muddy, and for every step we took forward we slipped two backward!

With a serious face the teacher asked, "How did you ever manage to get here at all, if that were the case?"

And Jack pertly answered, "Why, we just turned around and walked the other way!"

I said nothing. I had no excuse to offer, though I did not think Jack's a good one. Neither did the teacher. He promptly ordered us to go to the swamp nearby and each cut a stick with which to be punished. We obeyed. I selected a stick which I thought about right for the purpose of whipping a boy, but Jack hunted around until he found a small, tender shoot of the first year's growth, very limber, but of good length. When we returned to the schoolhouse and handed the sticks to the teacher, he quietly looked them over, and sized us up, as well. Then to our surprise he took the stick I had cut and whipped Jack with it, and used Jack's on me!

I got off pretty easy that time but poor Jack got a good trouncing. After school he proposed to thrash me, but I kept out of his way and tried to give him no further occasion to seek revenge upon me.

This must have been about 1841. Many years afterwards, in 1889, when visiting at the house of Brother Thomas Gammon in Provo, Utah, Elder Corey came to call on me. In the presence of Brother Gammon, Elder R. J. Anthony, a nephew of Judge Dusenbury, and a man whose name I do not now recall but who was counselor to one of the officers of the branch or ward, we conversed of old times. In an interchange of memories I mentioned this circumstance of the law of compensation which had resulted in my favor. He laughed heartily over the incident and remarked that I had an excellent memory of old times. I answered that events of a certain character which made an impression upon me at the time of occurrence were not easily forgotten.

School days under the care of Teacher Corey were very pleasant and marked not only by his ability and kindness, but by the good fellowship which existed between the scholars. Mrs. Corey, I may add, was the one who at Grandmother Smith's dictation wrote the manuscript for the book, Joseph Smith and His Progenitors.

A Teacher With a Penknife

I have a memory of a school which from present recollections must have been held in 1841 also, in a little brick building on the south side of Water Street, directly opposite to Uncle Hyrum's house and immediately west of the house of Peter Hawes. Uncle Hyrum's children, one of Uncle Don Carlos', William Marks', the Hawes', and at least one of Sidney Rigdon's were the attendants I recall. I am not sure who was the teacher, but memory pictures him as a medium-sized man. It may possibly have been Elder Corey, but I hardly think so, for what I seem to remember of this teacher was that he had a watchful, suspicious sort of nature, and was in the habit of thumping the children's heads with his penknife. He carried this article in his hands almost constantly, whirling it between his fingers when not using it for making or mending pens or for the stimulating exercise I have just mentioned—of which I have personal memory!

Among Uncle Hyrum's children who came to this school was a small one whose mother used to call at some time in the afternoon to bring him a cup of milk which he would go outside to drink. It was in the term of this school that Uncle Hyrum's son Hyrum died. He was a bright, cheerful, pleasant, manly little lad of seven, playful and uncomplaining, and a universal favorite with all of us. He was not sick long. I notice Grandmother Smith records his death as occurring in September, 1841. It caused a great deal of mourning among us.

This school was not largely attended nor, as I think, did it continue through the winter. It probably closed when the big room in the store was made ready for use instead.

Another school recalled was held for a time in a little building back of the store of Israel Clapp. Memory suggests that either this school did not last long or my attendance was interrupted in some way. I remember a number of the children, however, among them a daughter of John A. Ferguess, who later moved with her father into western Iowa. They settled at Little Sioux where, so far as I know, she may still be living. She came to the last reunion I attended at Dow City, some six years ago. Her father identified himself for a while with the Gladden Bishop movement but subsequently united with the Reorganized Church. He was quite a writer, though making a living as a local legal advocate, magistrate, or notary public. He was a man of quite firm convictions but not altogether wise in expressing them, and did not make friends readily. I have no disposition from my memory of him to think or say that he did not desire that which was good, whatever may have been the mistakes he made. His connection with Mr. Gladden Bishop was ruinous to both his material and his spiritual well-being. He died several years ago, near Little Sioux.

Mr. Thompson

The next school with which I remember being identified was kept by a man named Thompson, upon the hill a block or so north of Parley Street. One thing particularly remembered is that the teacher, while quite a pleasant man, was unfortunate in having the lower part of one side of his face paralyzed. He had no control over the muscles and when speaking his cheek would blow out, greatly impairing his speech and distorting his features. This was especially true when he became excited.

He had two sons attending the school and it was said their mother was an Indian. Of this I do not know, but I remember quite well that the boys were very dark-complexioned, slender stripplings, with coal-black hair, long locks of which hung down on either side of their faces in a fashion then called soap locks. While the back of the head was quite closely shorn, these soap locks hung well down the side and were cut squarely across at the bottom.

I had not become much acquainted with the boys or noticed them much until one day, rushing out of the schoolhouse. I jostled against one of them rather roughly. He shouted, "You better look wild, running against a body that way!" I stopped short, took a good look at him, and retorted, "I'm sure I couldn't look any wilder than you do!"

Afterwards I became better acquainted with them and we were good friends. They were good boys and bright pupils, and we got along nicely together.

Many years later I fell into the company of the younger one, then a professor in a college at Galesburg, Illinois. He was, I think, a member of the Presbyterian Church, well-respected, and a successful instructor. He told me his father had been dead several years.

As I consider it, I admit the possibility of this school having been held before the one I attended back of Israel Clapp's store, for I recall that the log house stood in an open glade surrounded by timber and brush. Later that locality was more thickly settled, and Elder Clapp's store was on the main street. I believe, too, that the children who attended Mr. Thompson's school were smaller, as a rule, than those who went to the other.

Mr. Cole

The next one that comes to mind was held in the frame house built on the northwest corner of the block on which we were living. This house was occupied for a time by Elder W. W. Phelps, but vacated when he moved into his own home on the opposite side of Water Street, not far from the residence of William Law.

I think this school was taught by a man named Cole. I believe it did not continue long in the frame building for the reason that the number of attendants outgrew the accommodations. An incident occurred while the school was held there, however, which comes to mind. One afternoon, at the rush of the children from the building, one of the Lytle boys was pushed off the front step by someone, and fell on his face across a small pile of rails near the step. The bridge of his nose was broken in this accident, which quite permanently disfigured him.

The school was then evidently removed to the upper room of the Brick Store, over the storeroom itself. At the rear was Father's office, in which Willard Richards, William Clayton, and, subsequently, James Whitehead acted as clerks and secretaries.

The attendance here was quite large and the teacher, Mr. Cole, was assisted by his daughter, Delia, or Adelia. We found it difficult to account for Mr. Cole's manner. Sometimes he was a very strict disciplinarian and at other times was very lax; sometimes he was gay and indulgent and at other times was quite cross. At such latter times his daughter would appear to have been crying. She was such a favorite with us boys that this caused us considerable worry and wonder.

One day the school was dismissed in the early afternoon for the stated reason that the teacher was sick. Before it convened again some of the larger pupils told us they had discovered that Teacher Cole had been drinking and that his frequent spells of somberness and severity and his daughter's tearfulness were results of his overindulgence.

Several incidents occurred while

Teacher Cole was in charge of the school which are fixed particularly upon my memory. A number of accidents had occurred upon the ice at the river and Father had instructed us boys not to go there or out upon the ice without asking permission of him or of Mother. Father and Mother were very strict in matters of family discipline or command, and worked always in harmony concerning them. What Father said Mother acceded to; and when Mother gave commands, Father did not interfere with them. So we kept off the ice obediently until one day when the teacher directed another boy and myself to take the water pail to the river and bring it back full of water.

We obeyed, and had we taken the water back to the school directly after dipping it from the hole in the ice it might have been construed that I had not broken my father's command. But—the ice was smooth, the opportunity attractive, and so we two had a little sliding before we returned with the water to the schoolhouse.

There are usually some busybodies and telltales in every school and someone must have reported to Father that I had been upon the ice. When called before him I made excuse that the teacher had sent me, but it was not considered good. I was told my first duty was to obey my parents and that I should have told the teacher I had been forbidden to go upon the river. Whatever may have entered into the spirit of the judgment passed upon me I do not know; at all events, I was severely punished. At the time it seemed to be one of those chastisements which a boy cannot account for. I thought my father was unnecessarily severe and his judgment in the matter faulty. However, it had this wholesome effect upon me; ever afterward, when commanded by my father to do or not to do a thing I never presumed to take choice or privilege about it just because someone else asked or told me to do differently. As I approached manhood and reached a period of more mature reflection I absolved my father from blame in the matter.

Another incident was this. Difficulty had arisen between John Brackenbury, my almost constant playfellow, and my cousin, John Smith. In the scuffle which ensued my cousin got the worst of it, upon which he proposed, in true boyish style, to get even with Brackenbury.

When coming out of school in the afternoon he was ready at the door with a piece of brick which he threw, striking Brackenbury on the head. The blow did not knock the boy down but did daze him so he could not pursue his assailant until the latter was quite out of reach. Just how the boyish feud was patched up I do not remember, but I am inclined to think my cousin kept out of the way and was careful not to offer further affront to Brackenbury until the latter's resentment had cooled down.

Another memory has to do with an incident somewhat more striking since it brought faculties into play that had not been tried up to that time. Brother William Marks' two younger boys, William and Llewellyn, attended the school with the rest of us. William was a sober, steady, good boy, rather spare in build. Llewellyn was larger and heavier, although the younger, was often irritable, and sometimes inclined to be vicious. A few days before the occurrence which I will relate, Llewellyn and my brother, Frederick, had engaged in a game of barn ball, played against the east wall of our house. In some way the former had become displeased, and in anger had struck Frederick, who was much smaller than he, with a ball club. The blow knocked the lad down and Llewellyn disappeared as fast as he could.

As we were not in the habit of telling tales out of school the matter passed without further developments at the time. The next week, however, while at play at a game of ball in the street near the store in which the school was kept, Llewellyn became dissatisfied with some part of the play and would neither continue with the game nor get out of the way and let the rest of us play without interruption. When the ball came my way in the course of the game, by some means I failed to catch it, and it struck Llewellyn smartly. His anger immediately turned against me for not stopping the missile.

It was summertime; a little shower had fallen and here and there were small puddles of water. The ball fell into one of these and rolled to a standstill. Llewellyn picked it up, threw it violently at me, and started to run. I caught it and returned it in the direction he was running, with considerable strength and accuracy. It struck him on the hip, leaving a muddy splash on his pants. I had thrown the ball good-naturedly enough, but constant practice and exercise in throwing the fine finger-stones which were to be found on the bank of the river in abundance, vying with my friends to see who could skip them the farthest, had so strengthened and trained my muscles that the ball landed on him with some emphasis. Though it was simply a yarn ball, soft when dry, its bath in the mud puddle had made it quite soggy and heavy, and the blow stung him sharply. He turned and ran to make an attack on me, calling out as he did so, "Here's going to be a fight!"

There was not much difference in our heights though he was the heavier in build. I would not run from him and did not feel very much inclined to avoid the encounter, for I was indignant at his overbearing manner and the way he had treated my brother a few days before. So I stood my ground, recalling faintly as I did so having heard some men discussing fisticuffing say that the stomach was one of the best points to attack. Being sufficiently cool to take notice of what I was doing I remembered this particular statement, and while catching Llewellyn's blows on my left arm and shoulder kept trying to land mine upon the middle part of his body.

Unfortunately for the issue one of his blows got by my guard and struck me full in the face. The blood started from my nose and the sight of the crimson stream maddened me so that my next attack was indeed a vicious one. I lunged at him fiercely, striking him upon the head in such a way as to cut a gash in his scalp, all the while delivering blows amidships which punished him badly.

Some of the school children ran into the house—the affair occurred at the noon intermission—and told the teacher what was going on. Just when the blood was flowing freely from the two of us we heard the rap of the ruler on the door-casing which called us all into the schoolroom. We also heard the voice of the teacher telling us to “stop that, and go to the river and wash your faces!”

We obeyed but we were still boiling angry. I remember telling Llewellyn that if he ever interfered with me or mine again I would hurt him a good deal worse than I had just done. We went into the house scowling at each other and the teacher told us to take our seats and that he would attend to us later. At recess Llewellyn went home and it was nearly two weeks before he returned.

The next day after the fight Teacher Cole called me to him and told me he had considered the matter and decided that as a penalty I must ask pardon of the school for breaking the rules against fighting during school hours. In those days school children were considered to be under the supervision of the teacher from the time they left home in the morning until they returned at night, a period including the noon hour. A further condition he sought to impose upon me was that I was also to ask pardon of Llewellyn for hurting him as I had.

I told the teacher I was quite willing to apologize to the school for having broken the rules but that I would never ask pardon of Llewellyn Marks, for he was an overbearing boy, ugly to children smaller than himself, had struck my brother with a club the week before, and finally that I was in no wise to blame for the attack he had made upon me. I added further that if he ever interfered with me or my brothers again, without cause, I would hurt him worse than I had, and that I had told him so and would surely do it. To this rather heated statement of my feelings the teacher replied that if I would not ask Llewellyn's pardon he would have to punish me.

Instructions which our father had given to us boys in reference to our conduct among our young comrades were to the effect that we were never to be the aggressors in any trouble, were to mind our own business generally, and be thoughtful, considerate, and honorable in play, observing closely the rules of all games. We were to impose upon no one, avoid quarreling or calling ugly names, and to behave ourselves properly on all occasions as we had been taught. However, we were told that if we ever got into trouble among our friends and playmates we should take care of ourselves and not come to him whining, complaining, or finding fault. To offset this, we were told that if ever we were imposed upon by men or those older or larger than ourselves we could then inform our father, though he did not wish to be annoyed by stories brought home from school about what took place there or on the playground which were simply of a boyish nature. With this counsel Mother had agreed in the main, though expressing her wish that we should not engage in fighting.

In harmony with such instructions neither Frederick nor I had said a word to either parent about our troubles with Llewellyn Marks. When Teacher Cole demanded an apology from me to my fellow combatant and I refused to give it, and he followed with his threat to punish me, I simply told him that up to that time I had not said anything to my father about the matter and did not intend to do so unless he, the teacher, proceeded to punish me for not apologizing to the boy whom I considered to be in the wrong in our conflict, in which case I would tell the whole story to my folks, how it all began, and all about it.

Llewellyn was not at school at the time of this conference with the teacher, and so, whatever may have been in the latter's mind as to what he intended ultimately to do in the matter, the controversy was ended by the teacher's saying he would wait until Llewellyn returned before adjusting the affair. At the end of two weeks Llewellyn returned, but I heard nothing further about having to offer him an apology. Probably the teacher thought it wise not to punish me under the circumstances and have the trouble brought to my father's attention, for he well knew my father's sense of justice would condemn such a course on his part. It may be, too, that his own sense of fairness indicated that I should not be punished for not apologizing where apology was not justly due.

I believe that was the last term that Teacher Cole taught the school. Whether he quit to engage in other business or was dismissed for irregular habits we children were not allowed to know, but a rumor was circulated among the older ones that his leaving was due to the increasing habit of drinking which so frequently incapacitated him for his duties. We took an affectionate farewell of Miss Delia, whom we all liked, but parted from the teacher himself without regret.

Mr. Monroe

According to my recollections the next teacher in the same schoolroom was James Madison Monroe, who came from the East. He was a brother of Widow Clawson, mother of Hiram B. Clawson who afterwards became a son-in-law of Brigham Young. Hiram and his brother John were quite young men and the former, especially, an excellent scholar. John was somewhat erratic, fun-loving, full of mischief, often neglectful of his books, and frequently got himself and others into trouble, thus coming under the displeasure of his teacher and the discipline of “Assistant Birch.” After a time nearly all the mischief in the school was, rightly or wrongly, laid to John Clawson.

At this time a number of young men attended the school, among whom I recall Loren Walker, Eugene Snider, and Henry Coltrin. There were also several young ladies and a large concourse of young and still younger boys and girls. Among those of my own age and size I remember Richard and Thomas, sons of William Law; the sons of W. W. Phelps; the two Marks' boys; the Hawes' boys, and Henry Anderson. The last-named was the lad who was killed in the fight between the mob and the “new citizens” which occurred after the “exodus,” at the blacksmith shop on the east side of town, not far from Beach's tavern. The same cannon ball, fired by the mob, which killed young Henry also killed his father. I remember young Anderson well from the fact that at a school entertainment one Friday afternoon, by a secret arrangement with the teacher he came into the room disguised as an old man, and delivered a touching piece which we used to read in the old English Reader. It began:

“Pity the sorrows of a poor old man, Whose trembling limbs have borne him
to your door;
His days are dwindling to the shortest span—
O give relief, and Heaven will bless your store.”

He delivered this poem in excellent form and made an impression upon the scholars present which brought tears and which I remember to this day. Though I have read the poem many times since I have never read it nor heard it read so effectively as it was presented then.

Oliver Boardman Huntington, one of the sons of Elder William Huntington, was a pupil at this school. He boarded at our house and between him and myself there sprang up a pleasant friendship in spite of the fact he was several years the elder.

Mr. Monroe was a thorough teacher, a man of fine attainments and noble disposition. He was one who took a great deal of personal interest in his pupils. Under his instruction the Friday afternoon of each week was devoted to literary exercises, such as recitations, declamations, readings, debates, and the old-fashioned “spell-down” style of studying the art of spelling.

By Geraldine Wyatt

I am quite ashamed of my first impression of the Book of Mormon. And yet, I am glad that I was doubtful enough to investigate the authenticity of this holy record, scientifically as well as spiritually.

Could a record be sealed in a casket of stone and cement and be hid until the right man should be directed to find it? Curiously enough I could easily believe that a man would be directed to find an ancient record. But I couldn't believe that the Indians would know how to make cement. Greece might have its graceful architecture; Egypt its monolithic buildings and its rich tombs; but how could an ignorant savage Indian know how to make cement?

Yet within the last few years, stone caskets of a similar size have been recovered from the crumbling ruins of the once proud Mayan nation of Yucatan. I couldn't help marveling when I read that these boxes were containers for the holy articles of a temple. Using Mr. Theodore A. Willard's words: "When half way through, or approximately underneath the center of the outer stairway, they turned to the right and found within a few feet not only the base of the desired stairway, but also, lying in front and buried in the same kind of cement, a stone box three by four by one foot high. . . . Sahagun the early historian of Mexico, in his Historia General (Mexico, 1829), states that when the people of old Mexico covered up the temples of their predecessors by the erection of a new building, the original temple jewels of the earlier temple were left undisturbed—an ancient Toltec custom." This quotation is taken from Mr. Willard's book; The Lost Empires of the Itzaes and Mayas (1933).

This particular box was very ancient, for it was found buried in a pyramid that had been entirely covered by another pyramid, which was in ruins at the arrival of the Spaniards.

Speaking of cement, as I delved into the spiritual treasures of the Book of Mormon, I came to the passage: "nevertheless the people who went forth became exceeding expert in the working of cement: therefore they did build houses of cement, in the which they did well." (Page 549, verse 7.)

Not long ago, in perusing the words of a musty volume written by a long since dead traveler I was entranced by his description of the ruins of Palenque. With vivid words he portrayed the palace, the most portentous building at that site. But the description seemed unimportant. For from the yellowed pages, I read these words: "The floors are of cement, as hard as the best seen in the remains of Roman baths and cisterns." (Incidents of Travel in Central America, Chiapas, and Yucatan, by John L. Stephens.)

Yes, they know how to make cement. Examples have survived to bear testimony of that fact. "Houses of cement?" They built floors of red cement, plastered walls with cement, made cement roadways, cement that is still as hard as rock in sheltered places.

Necessity, they say, is the mother of invention. From the Book of Mormon we learn that it was the lack of timber that made it necessary for them to build with cement. Timber was considered a very choice building material; for we are told that they did suffer every tree that sprang up to mature. In the tenth verse of chapter two of the Book of Helaman we read that they even sent much timber by shipping that it might be used for building purposes.

In an otherwise stone and cement structure of one of the ancient cities of Central America the lintels are of wood. Through the ravages of time, some of these elaborately carved beams are still entire, and have the hardness of iron. But, most peculiar, this species, that of the sapote tree, is not indigenous to the surrounding forest, but was transported. (Incidents of Travel in Central America, Chiapas, and Yucatan, by John L. Stephens, page 430.)

In modern building, we consider wood an inadequate material. Yet, from this ruined building and the Book of Mormon, we learn that the ancient Indian was well enough satisfied with timber for building material and for artistic embellishment to transport it for those purposes.

Their wood was elaborately carved too (Ibid, pages 432, 433.) But then we know from the Book of Mormon that along with their other excellent workmanship, these ancient people were adept at carving wood. (Book of Mormon; Book of Jarom, chapter 1, verse 19.)

Wooden poles were used for the hanging curtains that rippled gently in the breeze as they hung at the massive doors of these ancient buildings. John L. Stephens, says: "Along the cornice outside, projecting about a foot beyond the front, holes were drilled at intervals through the stone; and our impression was, that an immense cotton cloth, running the whole length of the building . . . was attached to this cornice, and raised and lowered like a curtain."

(Incidents of Travel in Central America Chiapas, and Yucatan.)

From the Book of Mormon we learn how much the art of weaving was developed. But we don't have to rely alone upon the words of this holy record. Any number of archaeologists can be quoted, one even goes so far as to say that the ancient Peruvian tapestry is peerless. Herbert J. Spinden says; "We may be sure that weaving was rather highly developed." (Ancient Civilizations of Mexico, page 57.)

Solomon said there was nothing new under the sun. One has little difficulty agreeing when he realizes that some of our finest work of today does not excel that of the inhabitants that have gone on before us.

In this electrified and mechanized age, we think our works superior to any the world has produced. No wonder the scientists marvel when they pick up an ancient specimen gold plated over silver, just as A. Hyatt Verrill marvelled: "Among these are masks, beads, ornaments and utensils of copper plated with gold, similar objects plated with silver, and silver objects gold plated. So perfectly and evenly is the plating done that anyone examining them would declare that they were electroplated if their origin were not known." (Old Civilizations of the New World.)

Surely the task of making thin plates and engraving a record upon them, would be an easy one, when we know that these ancients made gold beads with engravings upon them, which are so fine that they cannot be seen without the use of a magnifying glass.

When one reads the story of the passover in the Bible, he doesn't expect to find evidence of that event in the mouldering ruins of Central America. Yet many instances of the imprint of a "bloody" or painted hand have been found in these old buildings, leaving scientists mystified as to their meaning.

One scientific traveler records finding the imprint of a bloody hand on an inner door post at midnight. (Travels in Mexico, by Frederick A. Ober.) Another tells us that before sacrifices, the doomed captive would go to the house of his captor, and his own home, and would dip his hands in a bowl of red, black or blue paint, and then press them upon the jambs and pillars of the house. (J. Eric Thompson, in Mexico Before Cortez.)

One reads from books dealing with archaeology the accounts of excavating cities, cities that have been entirely covered with dirt and debris, and even their very existence forgotten, science knows not how long since. But from the Book of Mormon we learn how these cities were buried and why.

Many of these ancient cities show two, and some even three different periods of occupancy, and building. I recall one particular account by Desire Charnay, in his tome: Ancient Cities of the New World. "On the opposite bank of the torrent we observe in some places three layers of cement." M. Charnay goes into a detailed description of the find. Suffice it to say that there was quite a deal of debris and dirt between the bottom and the middle layers, and not nearly so much between the middle and top layers. I think his explanation quite sufficient inasmuch as it is in keeping with the teachings of the Book of Mormon. "It was due to the fact that the new occupant did not care to clear the ground of all the rubbish, but contented himself with smoothing down the old coating and laying a new one on the top of it. . . . This is, besides, amply exemplified in Rome and other cities, where ancient monuments are divided from later ones by thick layers of detritus."

Not long ago, I visited the Art Museum in Kansas City. There I saw specimens of culture taken from every old civilization of the world with the exception of the aboriginal culture of our own country. It isn't any wonder that the average person knows nothing of the skill of the ancient "Indian" and that their work is most certainly worthy of being placed by the art of any other civilization.

Perhaps could we slip back through the ages, and draw aside the misty veil of time, and worship with the Moroni's and the Nephi's of the Book of Mormon, we might even realize the value of the record they have left in our keeping.

Surely the time has come to be done with negative preaching. Hearts are aching for some sure word of prophecy. Too often the people have been like sheep scattered and without a shepherd. Too much have hungry souls broken their teeth on stones offered in the place of bread. Too frequently the blind have led the blind and both have fallen into the ditch. It is now high time in all pulpits the prophetic voice should speak in tones of authority. The sort of authority the people are waiting for is the authority that comes from God and passes directly to the souls of men. For spiritual authority is always self-authenticating.

A man's religion means to him nothing that is of any particular importance, unless he is enabled thereby to face with conviction and courage the fundamental realities of his earthly life.—Bernard I. Bell.

"WELL DONE"

other side, immediately finds such a justification of the faith that he has cherished that he is left without any hesitation whatever to trust all that he has and left here below to the providence of a kind and powerful God. This complete trust and love banishes fear and anxiety: "Perfect love casteth out all fear." Besides this, he enters upon a plane where he has a higher, broader vision "in the paradise of God in the bosom of eternity!" This human life is seen by him to be but for a fleeting moment. As it is said, "With God a thousand years is but as a day." When I leave home in the morning confident that I shall in the evening meet my loved ones, I am without anxiety or care concerning them. And so the departed are confident that, as it were in a moment's time, there shall be a reunion of those who have entered into their rest and are at peace.

On behalf of the church I am happy to render this tribute of honor to Bishop Robert T. Cooper, of the Standing High Council of this church, and on behalf of the church and community I extend our sympathy to his family and pray they may receive the blessing and divine direction of that God who is the God of the widow and the fatherless.

figuratively speaking, would endeavor to pour them into a mould or to cut them out according to their own pattern. It is small wonder that at the earliest opportunity they escape from bondage. Who knows how many early and foolish marriages are contracted, or how many pitiful wanderers, who drift like dried leaves before a storm, homeless, helpless and hopeless, are the result of this tendency.

In the ideal partnership there should be a sharing of the responsibility. Too often the father is the court of appeal.

"Just you wait until your father gets home! You'll catch it," the mother threatens or she may be regarded as the harsh disciplinarian and the father the giver of special treats. Far too prevalent is the idea that the husband is head of the wife and that the mother should dominate the children. The dominance submission complex should find no place in the ideal partnership. The ideal system is where there is no fixed center of authority but each accepts as much as he or she is able to take.

Not only should there be sharing of discipline but also of home-planning, responsibilities and labor. Is there any good and sufficient reason why the mother should be obliged to do all the "getting up" at night with an ailing or fretful child; and on the other hand is it fair that a husband should be compelled to prepare his own breakfast or go breakfastless to the office, while a perfectly healthy wife slumbers peacefully until ten o'clock?

In the family council will be found the solution for many family problems. The children, who should be invited to the council as soon as they reach the age of accountability, will bring a fresh viewpoint. The originality and artistic taste of a teen age daughter in regard to home decoration for example, will sometimes surprise her mother and a son's opinion can be of infinite benefit in planning the garden or grounds, remodeling the house, budgeting, etc. If the family council were held regularly there would be fewer discouraged fathers with bent shoulders and shiny coats while their sons careened madly about in high powered cars with a flask in their hip pocket; and there would be fewer worn out household drudges whose daughters were ruining the digestion and the general happiness of those young men, who were unfortunate enough to choose them for life mates.

As the author of the article on "Partnership" in the Parents Magazine states, "The ideal family life should not be an artificial matter of rules and regulations but an informal day by day sharing of desires, difficulties, criticisms, failures and successes."

In conclusion nothing could be more fitting than to quote those immortal lines from Longfellow:

"As unto the bow the cord is,
So unto the man is woman.
Though she bends him, she obeys him
Though she draws him yet she follows,
Useless each without the other."

Timely Advice

From a letter written by the famous New England preacher, Henry Ward Beecher, to his son, we take the following paragraphs, which can be read profitably and heeded by young men and women of our own day:

"You must not get into debt," he says. "Avoid debt as you would the devil. Make it a fundamental rule—cash or nothing.

"Make but few promises. Religiously observe the smallest promise. A man who means to keep his promises can't afford to make many.

"Be scrupulously careful in all statements. Aim at accuracy and perfect frankness, no guesswork.

"When working for others, sink yourself out of sight, seek their interests. Make yourself necessary to those who employ you by industry, fidelity, and integrity. Selfishness is fatal.

"Hold yourself responsible for a higher standard than anybody else expects of you. Demand more of yourself than anybody expects of you. Keep your own standard high. Never excuse yourself to yourself; never pity yourself. Be a hard master to yourself, but lenient to everybody else.

"Concentrate your force on your own business; do not turn off. Be constant, steadfast.

"The art of making one's fortune is to spend nothing; in this country any intelligent and industrious young man may become rich if he stops all leaks and is not in a hurry. Do not make haste; be patient.

"Do not speculate or gamble. Steady, patient industry is both the surest and the safest way. Greediness and hate are two devils that destroy thousands."—Detroit's Beacon Light.

A Litany for Thanksgiving

I thank Thee, God, that Thou hast sent
The young moon and her starry train,
The lark-saluted Orient.

The sinews of the hurricane,
The varied clash of peak and plain;
For greenness of the grassy sward
And its ripe fragrance after rain—
For these I thank Thee, gracious Lord.

I thank Thee, God, that Thou hast lent
The cunning hand, the teeming brain
To those that nobly toil content
To seek and follow and attain
Beauty and truth in laureate strain,
In breathing paint and crashing chord,
In marbled life and spiring fane—
For these I thank Thee, gracious Lord.

I thank Thee, God, that Thou has blest
Mercy and justice, boon with bane,
That quittance buds from punishment
At daybreak, that fate's fretful chain
Is linked with free-will, not in vain;
For life, for death, and for the ward
And purging discipline of pain—
For these I thank Thee, gracious Lord.

Most, for the friendships that remain,
For brotherhood and sweet accord
And selfishless love I give and gain—
For these I thank Thee, gracious Lord.

—Lionel F. Goldsmid in the Christian Century for November 29, 1933.

We have made some progress and we shall continue to make progress. Our church today is saturated with the belief in Zion and that the first step is to develop belief in social righteousness. The second step is to organize and to come to a common understanding or a unity in belief of the methods to be applied and the resources to be used.—G. L. DeLapp in a sermon at the Stone Church, Independence.

Life, like a dome of many-colored glass,
Stains the white radiance of Eternity.

Thoughts of Thankfulness

Your paper is wonderful to me. May God bless the editors and all those who have contributed at any time or in any way to the education and welfare of his people. I am sure that we all need a greater vision, a greater understanding of what our lives ought to be like from the cradle to the grave. Without it we must suffer both physically and spiritually. May God in his great mercy save us from ignorance and sin!

This gospel of the kingdom has been the greatest blessing that has ever come into my life, but how much greater a blessing it could have been to me if I had been willing to trust God more and be more obedient in due season. But that is past. He has chastened me and shown me my foolishness. He has put within my heart a great longing for knowledge, the kind of knowledge that will give life. I know that he answers prayers, that he is pleased when I trust him and try earnestly to obey.

God has not forsaken his people. He awaits only their obedience to make it possible for him to fulfill all his wonderful promises. Blessed are we if we can see the hand of God working in all the problems of life for our good.

I am thankful for returning health. During May and June of this year I was bedfast. Leakage of the heart, the doctor said, with serious digestive disturbances and a tendency toward tuberculosis. For a time it seemed that I could not live. My power to assimilate food seemed almost entirely taken away. I was administered to at every opportunity. I had faith to believe that God would not yet take me away from my family; I prayed to be spared for their sakes. I wanted my children to have a chance for life in the truest sense of the word both physically and spiritually.

My local doctor did what he could for me, and when he seemed to get discouraged, and gave up my case, I doctored with a man who was a friend of my mother's people in Michigan. His medicine seemed to help me, yet I believe that without God's blessing, nothing would have restored me to a semblance of health.

Many friends and Saints remembered me in prayer, and to them I am especially grateful. I want them and all the world to know that I give all the honor and glory to God for the blessing of healing which is mine. I am not yet normal, being fifteen pounds underweight, but I am able to be up and around the house, and to help care for my children. Also every Sunday that I can I meet with the Saints in Sunday school and try to do my part there. I hope that the time will soon come when I shall be normal both physically and spiritually. I want to make the progress the Lord expects of me.

To my brothers and sisters in the gospel I would say, Be not discouraged, but trust in God for he is mighty to save. The knowledge of all things that are good comes from him. To man many things are impossible, or seem so, but to God all things are possible.

Here are the words of a song which I composed while I was sick. The thoughts contained therein may bring comfort to other hearts.

Jesus Cares

I know He cares for me, tho' years pass by;
That He provides for me, if I but try
To do His precious will, with eager heart,
To walk the Narrow Way, from sin apart.

I know He cares for me, thru' sun and shade;
I know His perfect plans like gold are laid.
If I but follow Him, and cease from strife,
The Jewel shall be mine—eternal life.

I know He cares for me, I thank Him still,
And pray my life be spared, to do His will,
Thru days and years to come, along life's way,
That "truth" may clearer grow, from day to day.

I know He cares for me, tho' years pass by;
That He provides for me, if I but try
To walk the Narrow Way from sin apart,
To do His precious will with eager heart.

Is Grateful for Letters

I am isolated, quite a way from the church and at times I grow very lonesome. I have the opportunity of hearing an elder only once every month or two. I am seventy-five years old and still do much of my housework. And, thank God, my eyesight is still good. I am a great lover of flowers and regret that they are now almost gone.

Certainly I have appreciated the letters of the Saints who were so kind as to write to me. I received about fifteen letters from as many States, and take this way of thanking my brothers and sisters for their thoughtfulness. I am getting a sister to write for me as I am not able to write much, being so nervous.

I have been a member of the church thirty-six years, though much to my regret, I have not always been in close contact with the church. I have great faith in the Lord, and ask that you will remember me and mine in your prayers.

Let Us Be the Light of the World

I have a great desire to see our people the light of the world, teaching their neighbors and friends by the way they live that God's work is true and for all men. And though my part in this may be small, I want to do my best for the cause of Zion.

It is one of my great regrets that my eyesight no longer permits me to read the Herald as thoroughly as I used to. Still the paper brings me pleasure and instruction, and I do not understand how a Latter Day Saint family can get along without it. I offered not long ago to a nonmember, to work for her in return for her reading to me if I could see how to do the work. I am hoping the Lord will bless me so that it will be possible to have my glasses changed and my sight improved.

Let me assure all of you that this is a glorious work in which we are engaged, it is the work of God. We, his Saints, should all be serving him; we should live righteously; we should study to show ourselves approved of God. We should assist each other in brotherly love, overcoming obstacles, strengthening our weaknesses.

My prayers and best wishes are for the prosperity of the church. Let us labor together with God.

As It Was With Paul on the Road to Damascus

As it was with Paul on his way to Damascus, so it was with me. I was brought low, humbled by the Lord, before I obeyed his gospel.

We were living in Chicago at the time, and my wife and two-year-old son went down to visit her father and mother in the southern part of the State. A few days later the little boy was taken ill with pneumonia, and grew rapidly worse. Finally the doctor gave him up; he could do no more for him. Elder P. R. Burton was holding meetings in the town and my wife's parents belonged to the church. They insisted on having the child administered to, but administrations seemed to have no results.

The first telegram my wife sent for me did not reach me, but a day later the second came, and I was on my way to them at once. When I arrived the boy seemed only just alive. In the evening Sister Burton with much faith in her soul, said, "Roy, administer to the child again."

Scarcely had Brother Burton taken his hands from the boy's head when the little fellow reached out his hands to me and said, "Daddy!"

While this was a wonderful blessing, and we were humbly thankful and much impressed by the goodness and power of the Lord, I did not obey his command, and things went on as they were for three years longer.

Then my companion became ill with influenza, and suffered for many days. At last the doctor gave her up. I was deeply worried, and as I was going home from work one evening, something seemed to ask me: Why don't you call for the elders and have her administered to?

I found her very ill, and decided at once to summon the elders. At least they could do her no harm. When they came, we went into the room, and I was very sad. Then we knelt before the Lord and I offered the first prayer of my life. I promised the Lord that I would obey his commands if he would restore my wife to normal health.

In two weeks Elder Ward L. Christy baptized us into the church, and I have never regretted my membership, knowing that this is indeed the work of God.

Many Times Greatly Blessed

We pray for strength and grace and more of the Spirit of God to help us that we may ultimately triumph over all obstacles and do a good work for our Savior.

Many times in the past have we been greatly blessed in different ways through prayer and the administration of the elders. I have been healed, and our second daughter was instantly healed of oft recurring convulsions when she was a small child. Our oldest son while still somewhat crippled, we are sure from what all the doctors tell us about results of the trouble he had as a baby, would have been much worse than he is now had not the Hand of Mercy been stretched out to him.

Oh, Saints, let us strive more earnestly, more faithfully, to be Saints of God in all that the name can signify! Let us be more willing to sacrifice all that we can so that more missionaries may carry the gospel to all peoples.

Wishes to Hold Gospel Banner High

I should like to have a traveling missionary stop in this part of northeastern Iowa, near Oelwein, and preach to the people.

The Lord has wonderfully blessed me all my life. He has drawn near me, and my greatest desire is that I shall always be true to his cause. I prayed for his protection when I had to go for an operation to the Sanitarium, and though at first I seemed not to gain and my stay covered a period of four weeks, He cared for me. Administrations seemed to bring no permanent relief, and the doctor told my people that if I had any who would like to see me alive, they should be sent for. But the Lord was with me and used his wisdom and own time in granting the blessing so much desired. I praise his name for his goodness.

I was baptized in 1872, by Elder John Hawley. My prayer is that I shall always be faithful and true, striving to hold up the gospel banner so that others will see the truth.

Youth Knows This Work Is of God

I am a young member of the church, having been enlisted in the service of the Lord for almost two years. I delight in attending the meetings of the church and in sharing my part of the responsibility in the work of the Master even though my contribution is small.

I have an ambition to advance by seeking God, and I hope all who read this will remember my many friends in their undertakings, especially my home branch. Never do I wish to be selfish in the eyes of God. I am sure that this is his work, and so with a prayer for his people on my lips, I am seeking to serve him.

If We Do His Will

God is good. He is ready to bless and help us when we turn to him in prayer, asking his aid. He will lead us if we humble ourselves and try to do better.

God is waiting to pour out many blessings and to use us in establishing his kingdom here on earth. If we will consecrate our lives to the advancement of the cause, God will use us for his own purposes. He will use those who are clean and consecrated to accomplish his marvelous work in his own time. I believe that he is working especially with the youth, to do his will and set up Zion where we shall live in happiness and peace with him and his people.

Press On the Upward Way

I appreciate the privilege of attending church at Foundry Hill Branch. We have services every Sunday. I realize that I enjoy in this a privilege which many others do not have, and my prayers go out to all who are isolated from church services.

We are thankful for the many blessings that from time to time have been given our family, and are trying to push on to a higher plane of living. Many times we fall short of our duty, but we pray for strength to press on. Our greatest desire is to do the Master's will.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

May one after death obtain a higher glory than that awarded to him in his resurrection?

I do not recall any text that so indicates. We are informed that our glory shall be that by which our bodies are quickened (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6), and we have nothing to prove that any other glory will ever be obtained, if we may judge by the fact that it is distinctly stated that those who obtain celestial glory cannot come where God and Christ are "worlds without end" (76: 7). Evidently the resurrection determines for all time the glory to be received, but within that glory all will doubtless be permitted to reach their highest possibilities.

Please explain the revelation about permitting work and "waste" on the Sabbath.

A few Christian Jews of Paul's day erroneously suppose that the old Mosaic law concerning the Sabbath should be observed by Christians, and some other Christians have from time to time imbibed of this notion. The old law forbade anyone on the Sabbath to carry anything out of his house (Jeremiah 17: 22) or even to go out himself (Exodus 16: 29), to kindle a fire in his dwelling (Exodus 35: 3), or to pick up sticks (Numbers 15: 32-35). Jesus himself disregarded such laws on various occasions, and aroused the wrath of the Jews. One instance of this kind arose when Jesus and his disciples traveled through the fields and picked corn on the Sabbath (Mark 2: 23, 24), contrary to Jewish law.

Paul states that the old law was a "schoolmaster" to continue only till Christ (Galatians 3: 24, 25), and the New Testament explains that the old law was fulfilled and done away in Christ, who gave a "new covenant" to take its place. Under the Christian covenant we are to do good at all times, and no ceremony is superior to the good which it is designed to support. This is true of the manner in which we should observe the Christian Sabbath as a day in which we commemorate the resurrection and offering of Christ and indicate our faith in the coming millennial "rest" prepared for the righteous. This is the purport of the revelation, which states:

"And on this day [Lord's day] they should refrain from unnecessary work; nevertheless, nothing should be permitted to go to waste on that day, nor should necessary work be neglected. Be not harsh in judgment but merciful in this, as in all other things."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 7.

Herds and crops might at times be injured if not cared for on a Sabbath, and when such is the case it is proper to use reasonable time to save or protect them. Not to do so might be the greater sin, specially in case of need.

Who are sons of "perdition"? and who is the prodigal son?

The word "perdition" means destruction or loss. Revelation to the church says such are:

"All those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves through the power of the Devil to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

We are told that for such "there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come," having denied the Holy Spirit after having received it.

The prodigal son is in a parable by Jesus to represent a class of people who carelessly and sinfully dissipate their inheritance. This inheritance is made to signify the good teachings and influences which the individual has had. To depart from the pure and upright life and atmosphere with which one has been blessed, is a serious sin. It may result in the loss of these precious possessions, for when the prodigal finally returned home, he found that the rest of his father's possessions belonged to his brother, for he had already received his share, and now he must either work and acquire for himself or go without and be dependent upon his brother's bounty.

Education that lacks the motivating power of religion is relatively powerless to function as a social energizer or corrective. Education must have a soul, if it would lift humanity skyward.—The Federal Council Bulletin.

Southern Ohio District Conference

Elder Floyd T. Rockwell officially opened the semiannual conference of Southern Ohio at Dayton, Friday evening, October 5, introducing Apostle M. A. McConley who delivered the first sermon of the gathering. The setting had been properly prepared, and from the opening prayer until the close of the conference on Sunday evening, the spirit of unity and cooperation was manifest to an unlimited degree.

Dayton Saints had spent much time and effort in preparation for the fall conference, and their efforts were well rewarded for a good representation of the branches of the district was present. The largest assembly numbered over four hundred.

Those whose privilege it was to preach to the conference were, Apostle M. A. McConley, Missionary John R. Grice, District President A. E. Anderton, and Bishop H. E. French. Special music was furnished by Dayton's Women's Chorus, Dayton's Mixed Choir, and Second Columbus Choir. A number of individual contributions were also given.

Apostle M. A. McConley presided over the business session on Saturday afternoon, and probably the high-light of the session was the presentation of the following resolution:

"Inasmuch as the Lord declares it is his will that men of the priesthood abstain from the use of tobacco and strong drink in any form. (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3.)

"Therefore, be it resolved by the Southern Ohio District in conference assembled, that hereafter no branch sustain any man in the priesthood who does not comply with this command.

"And be it further provided that those, if any, now holding priesthood, who are addicted to either of the above habits, be properly labored with and be given six months in which to comply with these requirements.

"And that hereafter no one addicted to these habits or to either of them, be ordained to any office in the priesthood.

"And further, that if any ordained man shall after his ordination become addicted to either of these habits, he shall be required to surrender his license."

Several names were presented for ordination: Dayton presented Theodore Boeckman for office of priest, C. F. Bierise, teacher; Highland presented Charles Turley for office of priest, and Jackson presented Joseph Umphrey, priest. The recommendations were accepted and provision was made for the ordinations.

Saturday evening a missionary program was conducted. Apostle M. A. McConley discussed missionary work in all countries while Missionary John R. Grice's discussion was relative to missionary work on this continent and particularly in Ohio. A well-rounded program was concluded by the presentation of a two-act missionary play. Brother John Stultz was the author of this production.

Sunday morning at eight o'clock the auditorium was almost filled. On the rear rostrum the elders were seated. In front, those in charge, Apostle M. A. McConley, Patriarch G. T. Griffiths, District Missionary John R. Grice, District President A. E. Anderton, Elder Floyd T. Rockwell, and Elder Grey, were seated, flanked on each side by members of the Aaronic priesthood. An organ prelude was played after which Apostle M. A. McConley opened the sacrament service.

Patriarch G. T. Griffiths gave the exhortation, bringing to remembrance the sacredness of the sacrament. Four priests served the emblems to over four hundred Saints. Many of the members had come from distant places to be present at the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Their efforts were well repaid, for the gifts of the gospel were manifested and such an outpouring of the Spirit was felt that, in truth, a season of Pentecost was enjoyed.

This conference marked Apostle M. A. McConley's first official visit to Southern Ohio. Southern Ohio made him welcome.

Patriarch G. T. Griffiths was kept busy by many who were desirous of receiving their patriarchal blessings besides the many consultations and words of advice he gave to old and young. Brother Griffiths' presence served as a spiritual buoy to the conference, for surely the spirit of God finds a place in his life.

The young people of Southern Ohio officially announced the selection of young people's leaders for the district: Russell Rockwell, president; Albert Griffin and Charles Ferguson, counselors; Winifred Carter, secretary-treasurer. These officers are to complete the organization of the district youth.

Beardstown, Illinois

Twenty-nine members were added to the church here in 1933 and 1934, by local priesthood. Most outstanding of the additions made was that of Elder C. H. Davis who baptized his four grandchildren at one time.

The branch election was held in September, and C. H. Davis was chosen pastor, to be assisted by M. R. Shoemaker and Frank Corcoran. Frank Corcoran will also be church school director, being assisted by Harold Walker, adult and young people's supervisor, and Eva Corcoran, children's supervisor. Mrs. Johnson is president of the women's department. A full corps of officers has been selected and put to work to assist these leaders. The branch enrollment is one hundred and seventeen, and the church school has 115.

Harold Walker is president of the young people's group. Beardstown has twenty young men and women.

The following speakers have occupied during the last month: Elder M. R. Shoemaker spoke on "Priesthood Authority," October 14; Elder C. H. Davis on "Two Examples," October 21; Elder E. E. Thomas, "Need of the Hour," October 28, and Priest F. Cocoran, "Results of Sin," November 4.

Beardstown was well represented at the young people's rally day at Taylorville, October 28.

A halloween social was enjoyed by the district young people at Beardstown October 29. Forty-two attended and enjoyed the fun.

Two local young men are away at college, Earl Denton at the University of Illinois, and Ogle Thomas, at Graceland.

The district conference was held at Beardstown November 17 and 18.

Topeka, Kansas

1114 Clay Street.—The purpose of Pastor Charles Fry during the past year has been to unify the group and to develop in the hearts of the Saints a larger understanding of the law and purposes of the church. In seeking to establish these aims he has chosen his sermon topics, and has provided special lessons for the Sunday evening adult class which most of the year included the young people. The pastor has taught this group the law of the gospel relating to human relationships.

The midweek meetings of the women's department, in charge of Sister Fry, have been the occasion of instruction in the Book of Mormon.

With the coming of the new Hymnals last Christmas, the plan of spending a portion of the Sunday evening service in familiarizing the members with new hymns, that the quality and degree of devotion and worship in the services might be increased, was adopted.

Under the leadership of O. E. Weedmark, young people's supervisor, an organization of the young people was effected in August. Eloise M. Watkins is president, Joyce Mariner, secretary, Vernon Goodfellow, treasurer, and these are assisted by other officers. The motto of the organization is "I can if I will." One objective is to raise money to redecorate the interior of the church. In this they have succeeded by giving socials with the splendid cooperation of the group.

The juniors, under Fern Weedmark, have enjoyed Miss Gould's "Old Testament Gospel Stories." In the evening they have enjoyed a trip with a junior boy named Valmar, who was journeying in search of the Beautiful City Zion. One of their projects is building a miniature city of Zion as they think it should be, on a large wooden tray, four by two and one half feet in dimension. They are organized into an active junior stewardship class.

The junior classroom has been dressed in autumn colors. One feature is an "interest corner." There are pictures mounted which have definite interest in connection with the boys' and girls' present activities. Just now they are entering into the new church-wide "friendship project" of the children's division and to this end are making suitable posters.

Mildred Goodfellow, children's supervisor, is striving to do her best in helping the children start right on the way of life, teaching them how to live as God's children and to become good stewards. Honesty, obedience, kindness, truthfulness and helpfulness are taught them by precept and in deed. They are given opportunity to put them into practice; they make scrapbooks for sick children; take flowers, pictures, crayolas, etc., to sick friends, and do many other helpful services.

During the year social activities under the supervision of George Veach have been held at a number of homes. These events have included suppers, parties, wiener roasts, pound parties, picnics, watermelon feasts, and showers.

Sister Sarah Williams who was stricken with a severe illness some time ago is slowly recovering. The group has not ceased to remember her in prayer.

This group has been strengthened by the arrival of two other families in Topeka, Brother and Sister Cheesman and Brother and Sister Watkins.

Third Church, South Wheatland Tabernacle

During October the interior of the tabernacle was renewed and beautified. The walls were given a coat of cement with a California stucco effect. New pews took the place of chairs, and the woodwork was painted.

On the fourteenth, this branch celebrated its fourth anniversary. This group was the outgrowth of services conducted by Elder Fred C. Welsh and Priest G. P. Myers, now an elder. These services were held in the home of Brother and Sister Dougherty, 426 South Eureka Avenue. After meeting in this home for some time, it was necessary to find larger quarters. A store room was rented and for a time services were held there until again more ample quarters were necessary. After considerable investigation, a lot was purchased and a tabernacle was erected. All of the labor outside of the laying of the cement blocks was donated. Men and women out side of the church at that time gave their time and money that the building might be erected.

From a membership of forty-five the branch has grown until it now has 104 members on its books. Many who worked on the building and were not members of the faith at that time, now belong and continue to be good workers.

All-day services were held on the fourteenth. An early morning prayer hour was the first meeting of the day, also the first since the redecorating of the building. This service was in charge of Elder William Vickeroy and Patriarch J. E. Matthews gave the admonition. The gift of prophecy was given to the benefit of many present.

Sunday school followed and Elder Matthews talked to the school.

Young men of the priesthood of the branch occupied the eleven o'clock hour. Teacher Theodore Welsh, Deacon Robert Albright, and Priest Theodore Dougherty talked, also Elder G. P. Myers, of First Church, and Priest Earl Caldwell, of Lancaster Branch. Basket lunch was served at noon.

At the two-thirty service Colonel D. N. Osyar and Patriarch J. E. Matthews talked. The choir of First Church gave several musical numbers. Membership of First Church presented a beautiful basket of flowers. In the evening District President A. E. Anderton occupied.

The progress of this branch is to a large extent due to the able leadership of Elder Fred C. Welsh who has been branch president for four years. Local Saints look to the future with determination to exceed the good record set in the past, and with the priesthood working in unison they feel sure that they will go forward.

Chatham District, Canada

The annual fall conference of Chatham District was held at Kimball, October 6 and 7. The weather was fair, a pleasantly warm temperature prevailing, and all roads were in excellent condition. Natural circumstances being favorable, the little church was filled to capacity for the first session of the conference, the Saturday afternoon business meeting. The evening was spent in hearing the expression of artistic abilities of generous abundance and high quality.

Sunday brought more visitors, most of them arriving in time for the prayer service which began the day's program. The meeting was full of inspiring activity, even the songs seeming to express vigor in the soul of the assembly. Elder John Shields received the gift of tongues and its interpretation. Once more the Lord reminded the Saints of their neglect to pray, to give thanks for daily food and of their daily altars; once more he urged both membership and priesthood to be more diligent that he might permit the blessings, with which his hands are laden, to fall upon them. At eleven o'clock Bishop J. C. Dent preached.

The annual oratorical contest of the youth of Ontario held the interest of the afternoon assembly. The contestants were Mary Pritchard, of Chatham; Ruby Jones and Everett Wismer, of Amherstburg. All speakers spoke on their chosen subject for ten minutes, and were judged by three members of the congregation. Miss Jones was awarded first place, and will represent Chatham District in the final contest at London. Everett Wismer had no opponent, so he will represent the masculine group of this district. The small and forceful mascot, Keith Haskell, received an oral tribute and an enthusiastic "hand" from his hearers.

The Zion's Christian Legion project was explained and commended by Gordon Brown from Lansing, Michigan. The assembly voted to accept the plan and to effect the legion organization as soon as possible.

Sister Moore, of Windsor, district chorister, was present during the entire conference and took charge of the music. The Gilberts, of Windsor, supplied excellent orchestral music for the speaking contest, and were greatly appreciated by the audience.

The women's department, of Kimbal, served meals during the day on Saturday and Sunday. The food was good and plentiful. The women reported having served more than two hundred people Sunday noon.

District officers elected were Robert Brown, district president; Ezra Mifflin and William Andrew, counselors; Royal Wood, secretary; John C. Dent, bishop, and Mrs. Moore, chorister.

Missionary George Njeim preached the eight o'clock sermon to a good representation of local people.

Burlington, Iowa

Burlington Branch's homecoming and rally day was held September 30, and a large attendance and wonderful day were enjoyed. President Elbert A. Smith and his wife were honor guests, and Brother Smith spoke at morning and afternoon services. Dinner and supper were served in the church basement.

In the evening Patriarch Richard Baldwin began a series of meetings which continued for four weeks with the theme, "What Is Truth?" Early Sunday morning prayer service was held three times during the series, and spiritual feasts were enjoyed. The Saints were told by the Spirit through Brother Baldwin that the Lord was pleased with their efforts and that if they would continue to be faithful, they would be greatly blessed.

On the third Sunday of the series of meetings sixteen were baptized. On the fourth Sunday three were baptized. Brother Baldwin and local Saints were graciously rewarded for their efforts. Four families were united in the work, and one complete family was baptized.

Sister Baldwin was with Brother Baldwin and preceded his sermons with talks on religious education.

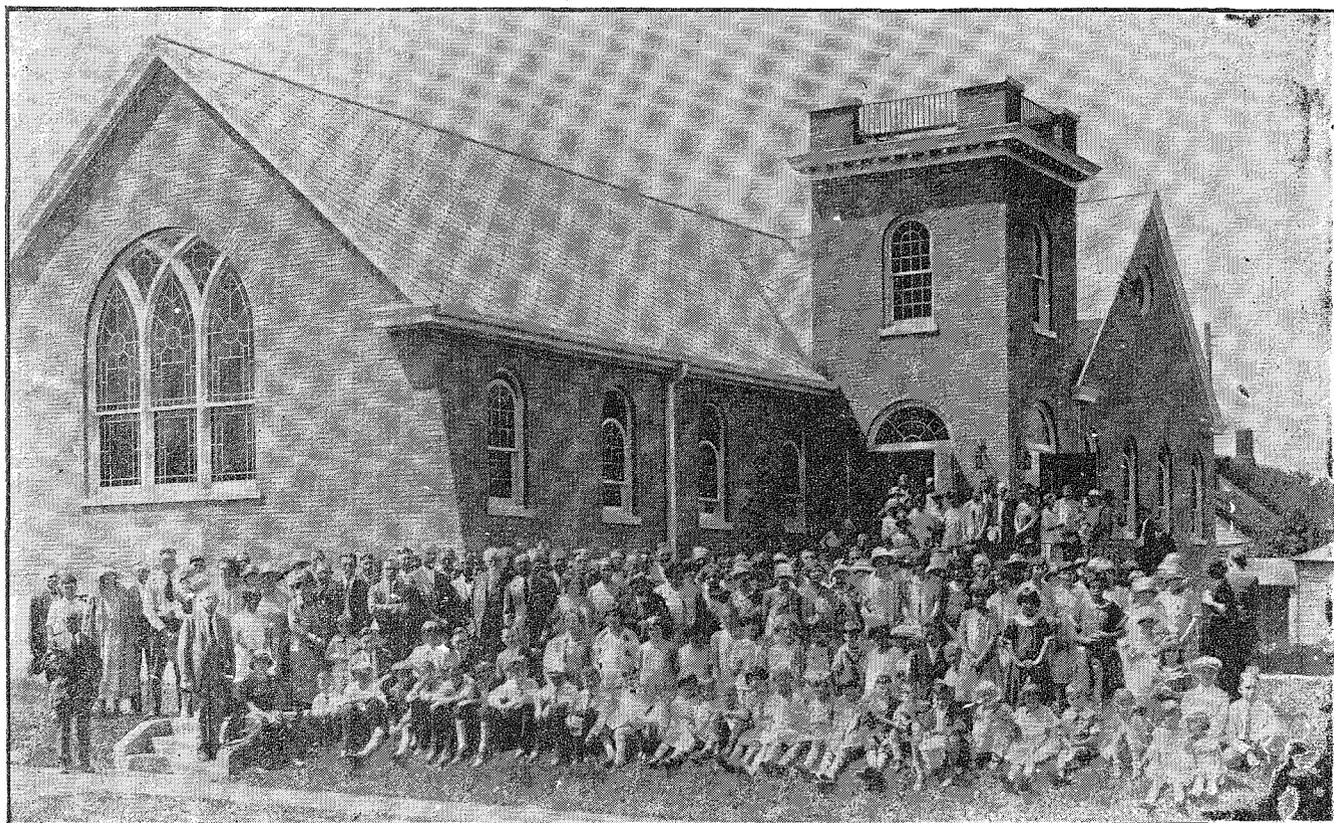

The young people held a carnival and minstrel in the basement of the church and netted a sum of ten dollars which was spent for new Hymnals. The same program was given at Mount Union where more than eight dollars was made.

The young people have Sunday morning prayer meeting twice a month. These are under the supervision of their leader, Leonard Duke.

One worship service a month is given to the junior department, directed by Sister E. R. Williams. The grown-ups enjoy these services, too.

A family supper is held in the basement of the church once every three months, and the meetings are well attended.

At the annual branch business meeting E. R. Williams was reelected as branch president with H. F. Broman as his associate, and Fred Kunz, director of religious education. These leaders are being loyally supported by a corps of good officers in branch and church school. The Saints are enthusiastic and invite their friends to visit their branch services.

Briefs

Elder P. T. Anderson conducted a series of meetings at Frazee, Minnesota, from October 31 to November 4, and on the concluding day six people were baptized and five children were blessed. Confirmation and sacrament services were held at the church, Lester Whiting in charge, assisted by M. O. Erickson and Archie Peterson, of Audubon. Saints from Audubon, Lake Park, Callaway, and Clitherall were in attendance. All were indeed happy to have Elder Anderson with them again this year. Many nonmembers attended the meetings and manifested much interest.

Elder Lester O. Wildermuth held missionary services for several days in the community church at New Haven, Wyoming, in the Black Hills. He was given fine support by Saints of Oshoto Branch who drove from ten to twenty-five miles to attend, and a large attendance of nonmembers. This is where J. D. Curtis opened up the work some years ago and left a splendid impression by his labors.

Sault Ste Marie Saints, Northern Michigan, organized a company of Zion's Christian Legion with the assistance of Missionary J. J. Ledsworth. They are much interested in this organization which they hope will be the means of building up their branch.

The short visit recently of Elder and Sister Ledsworth was much appreciated. Elder Ledsworth preached a few evangelistic sermons at the Indian mission and before he left the Sault, the Saints had sacrament service.

Brother and Sister W. C. Toovey, of Torquay, Saskatchewan, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary some days ago. This worthy pair moved to Saskatchewan over thirty years ago, and their home was open to such early missionaries of the gospel as Alvin Knisley, J. L. Mortimor, and others. Sister Toovey was secretary of Weyburn Branch for seven years, and Brother Toovey holds the office of teacher. As they grow older the church grows dearer to them.

Sister Mary J. Leighton-Floyd who went to Palestine with the Adams Colony in 1866, passed away October 18, 1934, at her home in Jerusalem. She was the last member of that colony living in the Holy Land. Sister Leighton-Floyd was permitted to see the development and the return of the Jews to Palestine; she attended the laying of the cornerstone of the first Jewish Colony, Richon-le-Zion, fifty years ago. She was baptized into the church by Elder G. T. Griffiths in the River Jordan.

Northern Wisconsin Conference

Northern Wisconsin conference convened with Black River Falls Branch, October 6 and 7, having fair attendance. Saints were pleased to have present Missionary R. E. Davey whose sermons and class work were most helpful. They wish he might come more often.

The usual services of a conference were held. Business session convened at 1:30 p. m. Saturday. It is the pleasure of this district again to have Elder I. H. Bowen, of Black River Falls, as president, assisted by Manley Shedd and Fred Atwood. Other district officers are: Chorister, Manley Shedd; church school director, Frank Sherwood; treasurer, Horace Scafe; librarian, Mrs. G. Hemstock, and secretary, Gladys Sherwood.

Prayer meeting, church school and preaching constituted the Sunday services, also the blessing of Anita Pearle and Forest Lowell, children of Brother and Sister Edwin Swall, of Ontario. A sermon by R. E. Davey concluded the conference. The gathering will convene next year with Frankfort Branch.

Denver, Colorado

The pastor, Glaude Smith, has requested the young people's department to take charge of the evening service one Sunday of each month. On the evening of October 14, the following young people presented the play, "A Far Country," Howard Sheehy, Glen Bruno, Vernon Young, Amneh Robertson, and Elaine Salyards. The play was directed by Howard Sheehy. Appropriate music was played by Una Young. Preceding the play, Ammon Christensen, accompanied by Mrs. Ethel Kemp, played a violin solo, and Fred Kemp gave a short talk.

On College Day, the program was given by former members of Graceland, and consisted of short talks and songs. Those who took part were Vernon Young, Pearl Johnson and R. S. Salyards, jr. In the evening the pastor gave an interesting and helpful illustrated sermon on the life of Christ. The male quartet sang two numbers.

Sister Anna Schwarz, for many years a faithful member of the Denver Branch, passed away October 15, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Julia Rohde, in Ann Arbor, Michigan. She leaves two other daughters, Mrs. J. B. Barrett, of Independence, Missouri, and Mrs. C. L. Bruno, of Denver.

Mrs. Alice Milligan, branch chorister, has been obliged to offer her resignation because of the illness of her mother, which necessitates their removal to a lower altitude. The Saints greatly appreciate the splendid help she has given in the choir work, and regret that she and her mother had to leave. They are now living at Nevada, Missouri, their former home. Brother Farr Kemp has been appointed to fill the vacancy, and is giving excellent service.

The evening service was in charge of the adult department, October 28. Mrs. Alva Christensen gave an interesting talk on her missionary experiences in the Society Islands, where she and her husbands spent six years. The choir sang, "Send Forth the Sowers," and Brother Smith gave a short talk on the missionary program of the church.

At eleven o'clock, November 4, a quiet, uplifting hour was spent by the Saints in communion service. In the evening Alva Christensen was the speaker. His son, Ammon, played a violin solo.

The Columbines met at the home of Mrs. R. J. Thompson for a social gathering Thursday, November 8. The Loyal Workers met at the church and spent the day quilting. The Temple Builders were entertained in the evening by Sister Goldie Bell at her home.

On November 10, 1889, Denver Branch was organized by Apostle James Caffall, with E. F. Shupe as its president. The morning service Sunday, November 11, was arranged to commemorate this event so important in the lives of many of the members. The sermon was by Brother Shupe, whose diligent and faithful devotion, so freely given to his little flock for many years, eminently fitted him for this task. He gave, as briefly as possible, an account of the vicissitudes, prosperity and joys of the branch since its organization. On the rostrum with him were Brother Smith, the present pastor, and E. J. Williams and G. F. Walling, former pastors. In the pews directly in front of the pulpit were those who have been members of the branch for thirty-five years or more: Mrs. Elizabeth Beardsmore, Albert, Edward, and Joseph Beardsmore, Mrs. Myrtle Bennett, Mrs. Ella Brannan, Mrs. Ella Parker, Mrs. Lillie Budd, Mrs. Susie Custance, Homer Shupe, Mrs. Louisa Fishburn, Henry Hamlin, Mrs. Laura Kohankie, Mrs. Emma B. Lewis, Mrs. E. F. Shupe. Leo Shupe and Mrs. Elizabeth Newland were seated in the choir. Each one of these was presented with a carnation. The Saints regret that Brother and Sister Shupe will leave them soon to spend the winter in Trinidad, Colorado, with their son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Homer Shupe.

An excellent Armistice Day program was presented in the evening by the young people's department, as follows: Organ prelude, Una Young; readings, "The Spires of Oxford," and "Recessional," by the verse-reading choir; story, "The Flag That Flies O'er the World," Edgar Jones; salutes to the United States and Christian flags, by the children; hymn, "America"; prayer, Fred Kemp; talk, "War," G. A. Smith; vocal quartet, Fred and Farr Kemp, Lefa Kemp and Virginia Lucas, "Peace, the Gift of God's Love"; reading, Isaiah 52: 7-11, 2: 2-5, verse-reading choir; talk, "Peace," Vernon Young; anthem, "Peace I Leave With You," choir. The following members compose the verse-reading choir: Elsie Harper, Elaine Salyards, Goldie Bell, Wilma Graybill, Pauline and Amneh Robertson, Althea Williamson, Mildred Sheehy, Myrtle Auld and Beverly Scott.

A number of babies have been blessed recently: Shirley Dolores, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Middleton; Julia Joanne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Compton; Donald Ammon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ammon Wildermuth; Edgar John, son of Mr. and Mrs. Burke Nolan; Thelia Alvina, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Williamson, Walter Leroy and Ronald Lee, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Coven; Doris Elaine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Burrell Shupe.

Sandwich, Illinois

Local Saints had the pleasure of entertaining the Stone Church Boys' Choir, from Independence, Missouri, in August. After a journey of many miles, tedious and tiresome, the group of boys, under the able leadership of J. Glenn Fairbanks and some of the boys' parents, arrived at Sandwich, travel-stained and weary. Following a brief period devoted to the washing of faces and hands and the changing of clothes, they went at once to the church on North Castle Street where the women's class had prepared supper for them.

After supper and a short rest period, they journeyed to Plano, where in spite of the fact that they were over two hours late, they gave a fine concert. Some people had been sitting in the auditorium of the church for four hours, and insisted on waiting for the boys. A large number of nonmembers were in this audience.

During the month of September a very special service was held. Decorated with flowers, the church was a beautiful setting for this ceremony. Chairs were arranged on the rostrum and mothers and grandmothers brought six children forward to be blessed. After a short talk by Elder J. M. Blakely, Elder Marion M. Blakely, pastor at Sandwich, made explanatory remarks for the benefit of the nonmembers present. The necessity of these is readily apparent when it is known that none of the parents of the children offered for blessing, belong to the church. But because of the Saints' teachings of the Christ example, they brought their little ones that they might have the blessing which is every child's heritage. The blessings were conferred by Elder Marion M. Blakely and Elder J. M. Blakely.

Much spiritual growth has come to these Saints in the last few weeks, and God has helped them in their work. Elder Marion M. Blakely has been given wisdom and vision in the expounding of "The Apostasy," "The Reformation," and "The Restoration," in recent weeks. Both members and their friends have been greatly interested and edified.

Saint Joseph Players Give Comedy Drama

One of the autumn dramatic events of Saint Joseph Saints, Far West Stake, was the presentation of "Mammy's Lil' Wil' Rose," Mortimer, by the Ul-Lik-Us Players of First Saint Joseph Church, under the direction of Mrs. Olive McLean. Mrs. J. A. Ru'off is president of this dramatic club. The performance was given at the Y. W. C. A. Building.

Briefs

Brother L. C. Hollinhead, of Uriah, Alabama, desires fasting and prayers in his behalf. He has had typhoid fever, and is in a very serious condition.

Elder V. D. Ruch, missionary to Scandinavia, writes from Norway: "I baptized a married lady forty-nine years old October 9. She came in contact with our work first during our open-air meetings in the park, and later attended our meetings in the hall. She was present during an administration when her father-in-law, who had had a stroke and was unconscious, received a great blessing, and was restored to health. She did not wish to join the church and even stayed away from the meetings when she could not stand to hear any more without doing something about it. But that brought her no peace of mind. God worked mightily with her, and she had to come back to the services and request baptism. She is a quiet, peaceful woman who will make a good member."

Sister J. C. Simmons, 616 Pierce Street, Amarillo, Texas, requests prayers for her seven-months-old daughter who is very ill with diarrhea of three weeks' standing. The little sufferer is an incubator baby. Sister Simmons moved from Dallas to Amarillo a short time ago, and so far her efforts to locate Latter Day Saints have proved fruitless. She has belonged to the church only fifteen months, and wishes to be associated with those of the faith. Will members of the church living in Amarillo, Canyon, Borger, and other Panhandle cities communicate with Sister Simmons?

Elder John R. Grice recently closed a week of wonderful services in Flint. He says: "We had excellent attendance every night, never under two hundred people. This was encouraging to the Saints, and the pastors of the two congregations in that city were highly pleased with results. I baptized ten, and Brother Wesley Alldread baptized one. Dozens of members who had not been attending church the past two or three years were present almost every night.

"At the union prayer services held each Sunday morning (with the exception of the first Sunday when I attended North Church where we had a wonderfully spiritual service also) the Spirit of God was poured out in abundance. And those who had become interested again, through the preaching of the word, came to the prayer meetings and were again thrilled with the same Spirit they had felt in days gone by; so they reconsecrated themselves to the work.

Graceland Briefs

Doctor Stewart, head of the physics department of Iowa State University, spoke to Graceland students at chapel, November 15. His topic was "What Goes On Inside a Liquid?" He amplified his talk by the use of slides and models.

Professor Stewart lunched with the Lambda Delta Sigma Society and later in the day conducted a roundtable discussion with a group of faculty members and students on the subject of the superior student.

President G. N. Briggs, of Graceland, is serving as secretary of the Iowa College Presidents' Association again this year. He has recently attended several meetings of this group. This makes the eighth year that President Briggs has served in this capacity.

A. Neal Deaver, business manager of Graceland College, recently attended the meeting of the Iowa Business Officers' Association in Des Moines. Graceland has been represented in this organization for the past several years.

Graceland's football season has closed, and the basket ball set-up is now getting into swing. Coach A. R. Gilbert issued the first call to practice last week. Approximately fifteen responded to the first summons. Announcements of the Graceland gridiron men to receive letters will be made in the spring.

The Literary Club of Graceland, sponsored by Miss Charlotte Condit, is in charge of the annual Thanksgiving chapel program. Tentative plans include a reading, a pantomime from "The Courtship of Miles Standish," and the presentation of several original Thanksgiving poems by members of the club.

How majestic is naturalness. I have never met a man whom I really considered a great man who was not always natural and simple. Affectation is inevitably the mark of one not sure of himself.—General Charles G. Dawes.

Atheism is the result of ignorance and pride; of strong sense and feeble reasons; of good eating and ill-living. It is the plague of society, the corruptor of manners, and the underminer of property.—Jeremy Collier.

Hearken ye to these words, behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world. Treasure these things up in your hearts, and let the solemnities of eternity rest upon your minds. Be sober. Keep all my commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 8.

Independence

The gospel missionary services in Independence will continue next week with a two-week series at the Stone Church, Apostle Roy S. Budd the speaker. Brother Budd will deliver the opening discourse of his series next Sunday night.

The women of Independence enjoyed their mass meeting of the month the afternoon of November 19, which combined educational and social interests. The gathering was held in the basement of the Stone Church and a good number of feminine workers were present. The program included appropriate vocal numbers by a ladies' quartet from East Independence, readings by Mrs. Earl Page, a talk on "Color in Everyday Living," by Iris Tordoff, and a talk on "Handcraft" by Mrs. C. B. Woodstock. Mrs. W. J. Burton, women's leader for the city, was in charge. Mrs. D. J. Krahl, in charge of friendly visiting, reported more than five hundred and thirty visits by the women in the past four weeks. A get-acquainted game followed the program, and then the women were served refreshments. A quantity of excellent handwork was on display.

Stone Church

This congregation will observe Thanksgiving Day with a special service opening at ten o'clock. Pastor John F. Sheehy will be the speaker, and music will be furnished by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. A special Thanksgiving offering will be taken.

A Thanksgiving sermon was delivered Sunday morning to the Saints by Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry who also took this occasion to announce the formal opening of another "Keep the Law" period in the church program.

All members of the Presiding Bishopric were present at this service, Brother Curry and his two counselors, Bishop G. L. DeLapp and Bishop N. Ray Carmichael. President Frederick M. Smith and other officials were also in the congregation.

The Stone Church Choir sang the cantata, "The Landing of the Pilgrims," words by Felicia Hemans, music by Louis Adolphe Coerne; Albert Brackenbury sang the baritone solo, Paul N. Craig directed and Robert Miller played the organ.

In the evening Elder J. W. A. Bailey delivered the second and concluding of his two-Sunday-night illustrated lectures on the Book of Mormon and its archaeological background and proofs. In spite of inclement weather Brother Bailey was given the attention of a large number of Book of Mormon students.

Brother Bailey has been assigned to missionary work in Utah, and will leave shortly for his mission field.

The funeral of Brother Charles Eaton was held at the church Sunday afternoon. Brother Eaton had been in declining health for several years, and he leaves a large group of friends.

Among the autumn weddings of this district was that of Miss Imogene Winn, daughter of Mrs. J. H. Winn, Independence, and Kenneth Kerns, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Kerns, of Council Bluffs, Iowa. They were married November 11, at Columbus, Kansas.

The marriage of Miss Verna Loreae Kelsey, daughter of Elder and Mrs. J. E. Kelsey, of Independence, and Cecil Roscoe Parrish, son of Mr. and Mrs. Monroe Parrish, also of Independence, was solemnized the night of November 15, at the home of the bride's parents, Elder John F. Sheehy officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her father, and was attended by her sister, Mrs. William Mills. Monte Parrish acted as best man for his brother, and William Mills was the usher. A reception followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Parrish are making their home at Independence.

The marriage of Miss Margaret Baird, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Okla Baird, of Russellville, Arkansas, and Orrin Kerns Fry, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Fry, of Independence, took place November 11 at the bride's home the Reverend E. L. Bearden officiating. The bride is a graduate of Russellville High School and she attended Henderson State College at Arkadelphia, majoring in piano. Mr. Fry is a graduate of the Arkansas Polytechnic College and is a mechanical engineer with the Missouri-Portland Cement Company at Saint Louis.

The body of five-year-old Roger Boyd Coleman, son of Mrs. Maude Coleman, of Sundance, Wyoming, was brought to Independence for burial. The child died at Sundance from peritonitis following an operation. The funeral was conducted from the George C. Carson Funeral Home November 11, Elder F. Henry Edwards and E. A. Thomas in charge. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Mrs. Coleman is a sister of Mrs. Clarence Savage, of Independence.

Second Church

"Thanksgiving," was the theme of the church school service Sunday morning, and the program numbers were well rendered.

John F. Sheehy, pastor in Zion, was the eleven o'clock speaker. The choir sang "Praise the Lord, O My Soul."

During the last two Sunday morning junior services "Thanksgiving" has been the theme. Pastor A. K. Dillee spoke to the boys and girls last Sunday morning, and there were several appropriate program numbers.

The evening service was devoted to the junior story telling project and Elder W. Earl Page was in charge. Junior story tellers from all the churches in the city came together, and their numbers were interspersed with musical numbers.

by the Stone Church Boys' Choir, directed by J. Glenn Fairbanks, and by a chorus of boys and girls of Second Church led by Palace McPherson. Other projects under contemplation for the juniors are a song contest and special dramatic endeavor.

Elder John F. Sheehy will continue the six o'clock Doctrine and Covenants Class in the place of Patriarch A. Carmichael who is leaving shortly for California.

A special meeting of the priesthood and women workers was held at the church Sunday at 2:30 p. m.

The young people gave a play last Tuesday evening to raise funds for the purchase of the three standard books of the church, to be placed on the pulpit desk. The drama, "An Economical Boomerang," was directed by Corlyn Sarratt.

At the evening service, November 18, a chorus of young people from Walnut Park, gave the cantata, "His Service," Thelma Moorman directing.

Walnut Park Church

The two-week series of meetings which was begun Sunday evening, November 11, by Elder John F. Sheehy, was continued through last week. After the first evening, Apostle J. F. Curtis replaced Brother Sheehy as speaker, and had good-sized audiences each evening.

Following the early morning prayer service on November 11, two children were baptized by Pastor Frank McDonald and were confirmed preceding the morning preaching service by Elders Royden Barnhardt and Frank McDonald. They were Laura Eva Bateman and Lillian Lavon Wolfe. The sermon by the pastor was based on the closing verses of the Sermon on the Mount. The choir sang, "Who Are These Arrayed in White?" The juniors heard a story by Paula Ballantyne and a talk by Elder Welton Wood.

Sunday morning, November 18, a profitable experiment was tried following the class period of the church school. A member of each of the classes in the intermediate and young people's departments was asked to report briefly on the high points of the lesson which had been studied that morning, and the venture proved so interesting and profitable that it probably will be repeated in the near future. Evangelist Albert Carmichael was the speaker at eleven o'clock. At this service Betty Jo Julian, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Julian, was blessed by the pastor, assisted by Elder George Bullard.

The program feature of the religio session Sunday evening was a spelling match, which had to be terminated for lack of time before either side was "spelled down."

The evening sermon was by Apostle Curtis, the anthem by the choir being "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say."

A meeting of the Aaronic priesthood of district three was held at the church Friday evening, November 9, President F. M. McDowell making a brief talk, after which all priests present were asked to meet separately and organize for the purpose of carrying out the work which particularly pertains to the priest's office. Erwin Moorman was chosen to head the group with Imal Burke as assistant. They will meet once each month, on the Friday evening following sacrament Sunday.

A social meeting of the members of Group 27, South, was held in the church basement on Thursday evening, November 8. About sixty-five attended. The meeting was in charge of C. G. Closson, group elder. A lunch was served and a program was given by the Moorman family, assisted by Margaret Chapman and Paula Ballantyne.

The Walnut Park Young People's Council met at the church at two-thirty Sunday afternoon, President Duane Fish in charge. Plans were made for a chili supper to be held Friday evening, December 14, and for the entering of a play in the contest which will be sponsored by the general young people's council this winter. A possible inter-church debate contest was also discussed.

A group of Saints from Enoch Hill visited the Walnut Park religio Sunday evening and presented an excellent program. Numbers given were: A piano solo by Hortense Jones; reading, Mrs. Verla Waters; bass solo, David Allen, accompanied by Richard Maloney; two numbers by a ladies' quartet composed of Mrs. Ruth Hayes, Mrs. Ruby Griffin, Mrs. Rilla Johnson and Mrs. May Worth, accompanied by Mrs. Louise Kendall; and a reading by Frances Constance.

The evening sermon by Apostle J. F. Curtis was the concluding one of the series of gospel meetings which he has conducted at Walnut Park for the past two weeks. Good attendance and a splendid interest have prevailed during this series.

Inclement weather held down the church school attendance Sunday morning, but the church was well filled in time for the morning preaching service. Apostle Curtis was the speaker at this hour also, taking his text from the first chapter of the epistle to the Romans, and preaching on what it means to be a Saint. The choir, directed by Minnie Scott Dobson, sang "Lord, Thou Hast Been Our Dwelling Place," solo parts being taken by Fred Horn and Marian Campbell.

A special Thanksgiving program took the place of the class period in the children's division, Sunday morning.

Two recent additions to the Walnut Park family are Beverly Jo Ann Price, daughter of Brother and Sister Woodrow Price, born November 4, and Kenneth Russell Smith, son of Brother and Sister Howard E. Smith, born November 18.

Liberty Street Church

The annual officers' and teachers' banquet was held at the church Friday evening, November 23. Harry Blake, church school superintendent, was master of ceremonies. Sixty-nine guests enjoyed the meal and program of short talks made by heads of the departments. Sister Lena Beck, head of the women's department, had charge of preparing the food. Pastor Lentell presented his plans for the coming year. The program includes specific work for every worker.

Pastor Lentell put into effect on Sunday a plan whereby more members of the priesthood may be given opportunity to exercise their abilities as speakers. Three speakers shared the eleven o'clock hour, Leon Snow, R. J. Zion, and Mason Stobaugh. Although not pre-arranged, the sermonets blended well as did the presentation of the choir. The suggestion for this kind of a program came from officers in Zion and also from local members.

For the religio program a short play, "Scotch Grace," was given by the dramatics class. The play was directed by Mayble Tignor as was the girls' chorus which sang a Thanksgiving song preceding the play.

Then a most effective sermon was delivered by Elder J. E. Cleveland. This harmonized with the missionary drive which the Saints of Liberty Street are launching.

Enoch Hill Church

A pound party was given Brother and Sister Karl Greene November 12. A program under the supervision of Sister Chrestensen, Sister Clara Koonse, Sister Smith, Sister W. H. Stevens, and Sister John Jones, was enjoyed.

On Thursday the department of women held their all-day meeting. Elder H. L. Barto was the teacher of the Doctrine and Covenants Class. These workers have started a special project.

The theme of the Sunday morning church school worship was "Thankfulness for the Gift of Music," and the program numbers were excellent.

Brother Thomas Lentell, the morning speaker Sunday, November 18, talked on revelations and their fulfillment. The choir sang "Watch and Pray," and Dick Bullard sang "Lord, Lift Me up on Higher Ground."

The girls' choir under the direction of Sister Charles Warren, and the boys' choir, led by Richard Maloney, also the evening classes are progressing.

Elder G. G. Phillips, of Blue Springs congregation, was the preacher Sunday evening. A mixed quartet, Sister Amos Allen, Arlene Phillips, David Allen, and L. Martin, sang "Come Ye Apart."

On Friday evening a shower was given in honor of Brother and Sister Seibert, about forty guests being present.

"Thanksgiving" was the theme of the worship service of the church school Sunday morning, and was appropriately presented in song, prayer, and a talk by Pastor H. L. Barto.

Elder Karl Greene was the eleven o'clock speaker, and there was a vocal solo by Richard Maloney.

In the evening Elder J. A. Gillen addressed the congregation, and his theme was "A Living Christ to a Living World."

Thursday afternoon Elder J. E. Martin talked to the women's group on priesthood visiting and the part of the wives and mothers, in making this visiting successful.

Spring Branch Church

The Sunday morning prayer meeting, November 18, was young people's meeting, and M. C. Jacobsen and J. E. Smith were in charge; the latter gave the opening remarks on "Consecration." A spiritual meeting was enjoyed and young members were active.

Pastor F. A. Cool was the eleven o'clock speaker and his theme was "The Sacrament of Marriage."

The program at the six-thirty church school was by Brother Jacobsen's class. Robert Fish spoke at the seven-forty-five service.

Last Sunday morning the young people's chorus sang a Thanksgiving number. A double trio of girls sang "A Song of Thanksgiving." Elder J. S. Andes was the speaker of the hour.

In the evening Elder A. M. Chase preached, and his daughter, Sister S. A. Burgess, sang a solo accompanied at the piano by her daughter, Evelyn.

The young people's class of Irene Roberts and J. E. Smith of the morning church school, held a party in the basement of the church, November 20.

Wilda Nelson represented Spring Branch in the junior story project held at Second Church Sunday evening at seven-thirty. Her story was taken from the Book of Mormon and was entitled "The Prophet Ether."

Englewood Church

Sunday morning, November 18, Elder A. G. Hougas was the speaker. Elder John F. Sheehy preached at the seven o'clock hour. His theme was the "Second Coming of Christ," and his text was taken from Matthew 25: 14.

Thursday, the women's department served a Southern luncheon to one hundred women and the book, Lamb in His Bosom, written by Carolyn Miller, was reviewed by Jo Zelma Taylor.

The young people's council of Englewood met at the home of Brother Arthur Welch. They made plans for three one-act plays that they will give before the play contest starts in Independence.

Sunday November 25 the speakers were Brother Almer Sheehy who delivered the morning sermon, and Elder Carroll L. Olson, who preached in the evening. The theme, carried through both worship periods was that of Thanksgiving.

Wednesday, November 21, the women's department met for a covered-dish luncheon and all-day meeting at the home of Sister C. W. Donaldson.

East Independence Church

Elder C. J. Hunt was the morning speaker, November 18, and Donald Pyper and Virgil Coffman sang, "Have Thine Own Way, Lord."

In the evening Elder S. S. Smith was the speaker, and his text was taken from 1 Thessalonians 5: 4. Miss Chapman, of Walnut Park, sang a solo, "Love to Thee."

The Wednesday night and Sunday morning prayer meetings bring strength and help to members of this district.

Classwork is now enjoyed at morning and evening church school sessions on Sunday.

The 8:30 a. m. prayer service last Sunday was in charge of Pastor Frank Minton. His son, Junior, offered the prayer.

Doctor Charles Grabske was the eleven o'clock speaker Sunday morning. Fay and Mildred Wagener sang "Jesus, My Savior." Glen Leroy, infant son of Brother and Sister Michael Friend, was blessed by his grandfather, Elder Harry Friend, and Elder Frank Minton.

Elder S. S. Smith spoke Sunday evening, basing his discourse on texts from Hebrews 11: 16 and 13: 14. Music was furnished by a trio of young people from the Stone Church, John Isaacks, Margurite Givens and Gladys Givens Smith, who sang "Worship and Praise the Lord," and a local quartet, Ralph Crabb, Ethel Peer, Edith Meaders, and Cecil Meaders who sang "One Sweet Hour," the choir joining in the chorus.

Local members were glad to have the Oscar Story family, originally members of this group, here on Sunday.

East Independence congregation was saddened by the sudden death of Janet Catherine Butler, seventeen-months-old daughter of Brother and Sister Logan L. Butler. The funeral was held at the Stone Church, November 23, Elders U. W. Greene and J. E. Vanderwood in charge.

The sympathy of this branch is also extended to the William Stowell family at the loss of Sister Stowell's aged father, Mr. Weadow.

Pasco, Washington

Several from Pasco attended the young people's conference at Spokane. They returned with a determination to put into practice some of the ideas gained there, projects intended to make branch activities more interesting.

Recently Brother Buckley, the local minister, brought a good lesson to the congregation in the sermon theme, "What Is Sin?"

This little group met at the church on a Friday night not long ago and had an ice cream social. Sister Esther Buckley, on the committee for entertainment, furnished games, and these were enjoyed by the thirty-five guests present. A sum of nearly four dollars was taken in. They have a social gathering every second Friday of the month.

Saints passing through Pasco are invited to attend services. This group meets in their church building about one-half mile from the railroad tracks east. The church school opens on Sunday at 10 a. m., and there is preaching at eleven o'clock and young people's meeting at 7:30 p. m. There are two classes. The adults are reading the Doctrine and Covenants, and the young people are studying revelations.

Holden Stake

Ready for Stake Conference

The special rally and missionary services in Holden Stake preparing for stake conference have been completed, with the last service at Atherton last Friday night.

A little more than a week now remains for contacts to be made or renewed by members of the priesthood with the Saints, and other preparations made for the conference to be held at Holden, December 8 and 9.

"We are very much encouraged by the response of the Saints in the stake to these services," said Stake President Amos E. Allen. "Most of these services were conducted by stake officers, which made possible an increased fellowship between officers and members."

Atherton Services Just Finished

Missionary services of the Atherton group were concluded last Friday night. This week's activity was preceded by a week's rally series, conducted by Elder Earl T. Higdon, of the stake bishopric. Elder James A. Thomas, of the stake presidency and Atherton's pastor, conducted the missionary services there.

They had an average attendance of about one hundred and ten at the rally services, with nearly one hundred and fifty there for the last night. The missionary services did not have such a large audience, due to inclement weather all week.

Nearly every night at the services the Atherton Choir, twenty-two to thirty strong, took part. On the last night of the rally series Sister W. P. Mitchell's class of young people presented a dramatic sketch portraying life in a true Latter Day Saint family and, in contrast, life in an indifferent family of Saints which was aroused to renewed Sainthood activity by the interest of the little girl. The young people of the indifferent family were brought back to the fold by finding that undesirable activities and companions were not dependable or profitable.

Young People Present Chairs

Sunday morning, November 11, Ather-ton young people climaxed a project by presenting to the church three pulpit chairs. Ammon Beebe, president of the young people's council, presented the chairs, which were accepted on behalf of the church by the pastor, Elder James A. Thomas.

This little service on Sunday morning, the morning of the day the rally services started, was the end of weeks of planning and work by the young people, encountered and aided by the pastor and Wendell Van Tuyl, director of religious education. The final endeavor in raising the money for the furniture was put forth in a pie and box supper, which was attended by most of the Saints of the group, young and old.

Strasburg Adults Study Financial Law

Five members of the adult class which is studying the financial law, are working for credits in religious education. Officers are proud of them and are confident that if they continue they will develop into true kingdom-building material.

Stake President Amos E. Allen and Elder Earl T. Higdon met with them at their business meeting and election of officers in October. Only one change was made. The present staff is: C. T. Pooler, pastor; Bert Essex, solicitor; M. A. Goodfellow, supervisor of religious education; Heber A. Hoover, secretary; Bert Essex, treasurer; Mrs. M. A. Goodfellow, music director; Lydia Swift, young people's supervisor; Goldie McLanahan, junior supervisor; Grace F. Essex, Ione Payne, Lydia Swift, auditing committee.

They have had interesting speakers the past few weeks, among whom were Elder Roy Kleckler, of Kingsville, and Elder Scarcliff, of Holden.

Through the efforts of Brother M. A. Goodfellow, whose family, for many years has been closely associated with that of Brother and Sister Tucker, of Heathwood Branch, Kansas City, Kansas, they had the pleasure of hearing a sermon by Brother Tucker. His sermon was accompanied by a splendid musical program by members of his family.

The young people, under the direction of Sister Lydia Swift, arranged a halloween party as a group activity. It was given at the home of the pastor, C. T. Pooler, October 30.

At the sacrament service, November 4, Sister M. A. Goodfellow sang "Alone." Bert Essex gave the story of the City Beautiful preceding the oblation. The weather being bad and roads muddy, however, there were only a few present.

A large number of Saints from here plan to attend the stake conference, December 8 and 9.

Elder E. Y. Hunker at Holden

Elder E. Y. Hunker, of the quorum of seventy, has just closed a two-week series of missionary sermons for Holden group. Brother Hunker sought to show the need of the kingdom of God. He showed how closely the gospel principles are tied up with the building of the kingdom of God, and stressed the fact that mankind should strive collectively to save themselves socially, and economically rather than individually.

Brother Hunker is a forceful speaker, and his message has done the branch much good. He made a host of friends at Holden, and all hope that he may return.

They had an average attendance of 175 at the services. One night attendance rose to 220.

"Branch Day" at Knobnoster

A new feature in this group is "Branch day" service once a month at which the Sunday morning program is supplied by divisions of the church school.

A surprise party was held at the home of Brother and Sister C. A. Kramer to celebrate the birthdays of Brothers Kramer and E. L. Moorman.

A halloween party was held at the church, November 4, having been postponed on account of rain. The program was in charge of Sister Harriet Enfield, young people's supervisor, and the social was in the basement of the church.

Brother Roscoe Moorman and family, of Jefferson City, worshiped with Knobnoster members the morning of October 28. His sermon was much appreciated.

Long Beach, California

Fourteenth Street, near Orange Avenue.—While the Saints were enjoying the reunion the church was redecorated inside and out. Upon renewing services at the home branch, all wished to make the services more beautiful and spiritual.

The priesthood is launching an extensive missionary campaign. Preaching as well as prayer services are held in various groups. There have been a number of baptisms in the few months. Some of these took place in the ocean after preaching services on Sunday night. This indeed makes a beautiful picture as the officiating minister and candidates stand in the light of the moonbeams on the water. One feels just a little nearer God.

The branch also has gained one by marriage, Felix Hacker, of Long Beach, and Miss Opal West, of East Los Angeles, were married September 16, Brother Holgard Pedersen officiating. They reside in Long Beach.

The women are very interested in their Book of Mormon Class, under the leadership of Sister Kingsbury. This is conducted every Wednesday afternoon.

On Sunday, October 28, Brother Miller, pastor of Phoenix, Arizona, Branch, preached at the eleven o'clock service. Sister Miller and Brother and Sister Paul Bear, of Chandler, Arizona, also were visitors at that service.

Financial Observance Day for Des Moines

Des Moines District will hold its annual financial observance day Sunday, December 2, at Des Moines church building, 717 Twelfth Street. The program of the day will emphasize the wisdom, intelligence, and spirituality of the financial law, and a special service will be had for filing inventories and financial statements. The program will be as follows: District young people's prayer service, 8 a. m.; church school, 9:30, and special observance service at 10:30 with an address by Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and a talk by Stephen Robinson. Dinner at the church at noon and sacrament and prayer service at two o'clock. Lunch at 5:15, and classes and program at 6:30 with a special lecture to the priesthood of the district at 6:30 by Bishop G. L. DeLapp. The closing service of the day will be preaching at 7:30. We are asking visitors to bring their baskets to help with dinner and lunch, and the same will be served cafeteria style. Saints that have not been supplied with inventory or financial statement blanks, please write to the undersigned. We desire each member of Des Moines District to be present if practical, and file an inventory or financial statement and if it is impractical to be present in person, please send in your inventory or financial statement, together with payment of tithes due as far as possible.—Stephen Robinson, bishop's agent, Des Moines District, 2212 Thirty-ninth Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

Conference Notices

A special Far West stake conference has been called to convene in Cameron, Missouri, Sunday, December 9, at 3 p. m., for the purpose of approving the selection of a counselor by Bishop Henry L. Livingston and other ordinations. The conference will be held in connection with a stake church school rally which will open that day in Cameron at 9:30 a. m., and continue until the conference business session at 3 p. m. Apostle F. Henry Edwards will be the guest speaker. All church school officers and teachers are urged to attend the entire rally.—Helen Beadnall, Stake Secretary.

Marriages

LIVELY-CHISNELL.—Miss Ilene Meredith Lively, daughter of Captain and Mrs. Herbert R. Lively, and David Hugh Chisnell, son of Mrs. Minnie Chisnell, of Saint Clair, Michigan, were united in marriage by Elder David E. Dowker at East Side Church, Detroit, October 25. About sixty guests attended the reception at the home of the bride's parents. The young couple are making their home at Saint Clair.

Our Departed Ones

EATON.—Henry Robinson Eaton, son of Thomas and Charity Eaton, was born in what is now Stonington, Maine, October 22, 1869. He married Miss Ada E. Bray at Mountainville, May 13, 1894, and to them were born one son and three daughters who remain to treasure the memory of a faithful, loving husband and father. At an early age he became a worker in stone in which occupation he engaged the greater part of his life. At twenty-one he was converted to Christ. He was baptized a member of the church May 18, 1890, and during his life it was as a member and minister of the church that he was best known to his many acquaintances. He was ordained a deacon, May 18, 1893; a teacher, December 15, 1901, and an elder, May 29, 1904. He was a pillar of the church not only at Stonington where he always made his home, but throughout the State of Maine, being a familiar figure at conferences, reunions, and other functions. Always he exercised his influence on the side of right and progress. Besides his wife, Ada, he leaves his son, Dennis M., and three daughters, Leona and Bernice, of the home, and Linnie, wife of Captain George Billings, all of Stonington; one brother, Calvin Eaton, of South Deer Isle; one sister, Mrs. Cornelia Shepard, of Stonington; three grandchildren, other relatives and friends. Death claimed him November 9, 1934, and the funeral was held in Stonington Church, November 11, E. L. Traver, M. C. Fisher, E. F. Robertson, G. H. Knowlton, and Pearl F. Billings officiating. Interment was in Noyes Cemetery, Stonington.

LEIGHTON-FLOYD.—Mary J. Leighton-Floyd died October 18, 1934. Born Mary Jane Clark, Rochester, New Hampshire, April 6, 1859, she went to Palestine with the Adams Colony in 1866. Was the last member of that colony living in Palestine. Was blessed of God to be permitted to see the return of the Jews to Palestine. She was at the laying of the cornerstone of the first Jewish colony, Richon-le-Zion, fifty years ago. Was baptized by Elder Griffith in the River Jordan into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, December 23, 1910. She leaves to mourn her death, her only son, A. Leighton-Floyd, his wife, and three grandchildren; one sister-in-law, Mrs. Herbert E. Clark, of Jerusalem; one brother, Frank C. Clark, of New York City. The funeral occurred October 19, and interment was in the Protestant Cemetery on Mount Zion.

WILLIAMS.—Nellie Jane Hougas was born March 30, 1891, near Seneca, Illinois. United with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ in early life. Was married to William N. Williams, May 15, 1910. To this union were born four daughters and one son, namely, Susan, Winifred, Virginia, Nellie, and William, jr., all of whom with the husband are left to mourn the loss of the faithful wife and mother. The family moved four years ago from Ottawa, Illinois, and have made Orlando, Florida, their home since, where Mrs. Williams passed on to her reward, after a brief illness, November 5, 1934. Sister Nellie left many relatives and friends near Mission Branch, Illinois, to mourn with her loved ones. Funeral services were held in the Carey Hand Chapel at Orlando, Florida, November 8, 1934, Evangelist Frederick G. Pitt conducting the service. Burial was in Greenwood Cemetery, Orlando.

LLOYD.—Abner Lloyd was born July 4, 1842, at Ebensburg, Pennsylvania; died November 13, 1934, at his home at Walker, Missouri. He married Catherine Davis in 1862, and two children were born to them, Evan Walter and Annie Eliza, who survive. His wife died August 8, 1908, and he married Ann Jones in 1909. She passed away in 1916. He married Melissa Vaughn, of Walker, Missouri, in 1918, who survives him. Was baptized by John T. Phillips at Wellsville, Missouri, in June, 1870, and was ordained an elder in 1875. His activity in the ministry was the means, with the help of his faithful wife, of starting the work of the church in Clinton, Missouri, District. Missionaries always were welcome at his home. Many were blessed in answer to his prayers, and several noble men were called to the ministry by the voice of the Spirit through his lips. The funeral sermon was by A. C. Silvers, of Nevada, Missouri, and prayer by John W. Noyes. The offer of the Methodist Church was accepted and was evidence of the respect in which he was held. Interment in the cemetery at Coal Hill beside the wife of his youth, Catherine.

BELLENGER.—Joseph Bellenger, son of Joseph and Rebekah Bellenger, was born October 24, 1847, at Ritchfield, Genesee County, Michigan, and died October 28, 1934, at his home at Plano, Illinois. He was a veteran of the Civil War. A short time after his honorable discharge from military service he married Mary Ann Smith at Mount Morris, Mich-

■ The Bottle to Blame

A few days ago a police officer in our neighboring village, assigned to the duty of protecting the public about the big Union Station, ran amuck and shot and killed a fellow officer. Headlines in the Evening Bleat proclaimed that the murdering officer was temporarily crazed by worry over an earlier episode—the Union Station massacre. It is hard to imagine an officer worrying himself into a lethal frenzy if he were innocent of complicity.

The casual reader, curious about the peculiarity of the case, digging down through columns of sordid report on the laxity of police discipline, learned that the killing officer had started the day's worrying with a bottle of liquor in his pocket. By the end of the day it was just another empty bottle, and an officer was dead. Liquor was principally responsible for that death, if the newsman wrote true. But the reader would never think so from scanning the headlines.

A bottle of liquor is a dangerous companion for times of worry. It is a treacherous assistant in any kind of thinking. It is not good for plain citizens. It is barred for motormen, elevator operators, engineers and other servants entrusted with human life. It should never be used by officers who must bear deadly weapons in pursuit of duty.

This murder came out of a bottle. It is Repeal, giving us a personal appearance. Our national comedy called for blank cartridges, but the villain's gun contained bullets. Old Alcohol on parade, at his ancient, deadly tricks.

The sincere Christian element in any community is revolted by the beery breath, the alcoholic eye, the offensive odor, and the weaving gait of the habitual drunkard. It is disgusted by the stacks of bottles in the show windows of every drug and grocery store. The only concerns left who do not sell liquor, it seems, are the jewelry and shoe stores.

In every case of brutal assault, of wanton killing, of incomprehensible crime of every kind, look for the bottle to blame. You will probably find it not far away, either hidden or in the open.

Let us know the truth and tell the truth about liquor. Let us not have its guilt concealed, even by the sly prejudice of a newspaper headline. If liquor were good, it would not need lies to protect it. It is bad, and its sin and guilt should be proclaimed to the world.

■ The Work Cure

The happy people are those who are producing something; the bored people are those who are consuming much and producing nothing. Boredom is a certain sign that we are allowing our faculties to rust in idleness. When people are bored, they generally look about for a new pleasure, or take a holiday. There is no greater mistake: what they want is some hard piece of work, some productive drudgery. Doctors are fond of sending their fashionable patients to take a rest cure. In nine cases out of ten a work cure would do them far more good.—Wit and Wisdom of Dean Inge, from the Readers Digest, for November, 1934.

"The Way to Freedom—"

A part of a sentence taken from a recent letter of the First Presidency to branch officers reads: "The way to freedom is through obedience to law."

Like the most ancient of our ancestors, we seek three benefits from life: food, comfort, and freedom. In the order named they are most precious to our physical existence. This generation, like all others, finds itself frequently in jeopardy because society is unable to assure, and often unable to provide these requirements for satisfaction in life.

An individual cannot assure freedom for himself. A measure of individual independence can be maintained in a man's home and on his own property, so long as no superior force shall come against him, and he must depend on society to protect him from superior forces.

But individually he can have no freedom to move about without the enforcement of law and the operation of government. Real freedom is a group affair—a condition established by common consent and support, by the determination of a people that certain privileges of travel, safety, and access to society shall be guaranteed to all without discrimination. Society, governed by law, is able to guarantee a degree and quality of freedom that can never be attained by any individuals alone, no matter how able.

These observations have their application to the work and the people of the church. We live in a society in which freedom is as yet incomplete. Freedom is incomplete because economic law, operating through faulty machinery, has not yet been invoked to serve the full interests and welfare of the people.

Our path to freedom lies not, as the radicals may declare, in the abandonment of the old laws, but in the discovery and uniform observance of newer and better laws.

The law of tithing is a better law. The laws of stewardship are newer and better laws. Our path to freedom, we are taught to believe, lies in the way of seeking to obey them.

Social salvation will come to us as a group when it comes at all. Social salvation is a corollary of that perfect freedom which comes from obedience to law.

Freedom is more than the ability and permission to do what one wishes to do. The greater freedom towards which we look includes freedom from debt, freedom from economic insecurity, freedom from fear. A man may do what he can to make himself safe from these dangers, but he can do little alone. This kind of freedom comes from the protection that is obtained by groups of men cooperating in order to share their united strength to secure a common benefit.

The financial law of the church is designed to give us a certain kind of freedom from economic ills, just as the spiritual law of the church is designed to give us freedom from certain moral and social ills. The laws can never be effective for us without obedience. We can never have the freedom of membership in the church without obedience to the laws governing our entrance. We can never have that freedom either, without obedience to the laws governing residence within.

Bishop Ingham Passes

I was shocked a few days ago to receive the news that Bishop Edward Ingham had passed away. He passed away at his home in Berkeley on November 20, and of his death we were apprised by telegram from the family. The news was totally unexpected as we had no knowledge of any ailment. In fact, the event was probably quite sudden even to the family.

Thus the church loses another trusted and trustworthy servant, and Northern California District sustains the loss of two bishops within a very short period. Brother Ingham's fine character won for him a host of friends who grieve with the family, and whose sympathetic prayers will be offered for the support and comforting of his bereaved loved ones.

With his work in Northern California District and previously in Hawaii, Brother Ingham was active as a servant of the church for many years, in which time he won for himself many earnest friends. His genial character as a man of refinement and earnest faith, his well-grounded philosophy and religion made him a helpful man and officer. The Saints generally will be pained to learn of his passing while the Saints of Northern California District will especially miss him as member, man, and officer.

We extend our condolence to the family.

F. M. SMITH.

London and Detroit Homecomings

I.—LONDON, ONTARIO

I have seldom spent a more satisfying day in the field than that spent at the London, Ontario, homecoming, Sunday, November 18. The events of the day reminded me of changes that have taken place over a period of years. Early in his presidency, "Young Joseph" gave a prophetic promise that if the Saints would quietly gather together and live their religion God would give them "grace and favor in the eyes of the people" so that they could do their work. At that time contempt and derision and abuse were our lot. I recall thirty-four years ago as a young missionary attending a lecture on "Mormonism" in one of the largest churches of San Bernardino, California, the church being Methodist, the lecturer being a Presbyterian of renown. I sat through nearly two hours of the most vicious and false vilifications of my family and my people. At the close, in the most courteous manner at my command, I asked opportunity to make a statement. At once, from that representative "Christian" audience went up the cry, "Put him out! Put him out!" Brother Nels Paulson arose and said, "I will pay to the treasurer of this church $60 a minute if you will let this young man talk." He got no further than I did. We did not have a Chinaman's chance. Next day the press reported the lecture and would permit us no reply. That sort of thing was common the world over wherever our people were.

But Brother Joseph's promise has been fulfilled quite generally. At London we had favorable press notices and interviews with illustration in the daily paper three successive days, front page on Sunday. The famous Canadian author, Ralph Connor, spoke in London on Sunday, but did not get one third the space given us. A member of the faculty of the Western University of Ontario, and librarian of that institution, attended our morning service and gave a brief speech of welcome and invited us to visit the University. This we did on Monday and received an urgent request to put our church histories and other literature into the reference library. They have a splendid library housed in a new and up-to-the-minute fire-proof building. London Branch will meet this request, while Canadian Saints who may have volumes of our Journal of History or early volumes of the Herald cannot do better than to donate them to the University. Any Canadian Saints desiring to make such a donation may write me and I will put them in touch with the librarian.

On Monday Brother Frank Gray, who is city alderman and member of the board of education, took me through the various city offices and it was soon evident that officials and employees alike know and respect our church. Even the jailer was cordial. He said, "I would gladly put you up in one of my best cells, but you must get a recommendation from the judge." So we saw the judge but in the absence of the prosecuting attorney got no further. The jailer told me an interesting story. The man who made the brick for this old and strong structure, "London Gaol," later got into debt and became an unwilling guest in the house he had helped build. He was pardoned on condition that he leave Canada. He went to New York, prospered and became grandfather of Chief Justice Hale of the U. S. Supreme Court.

Brother John MacGregor, pastor of the London Branch, and his associates are doing a good work. It was inspiring to meet in the beautiful and well kept church edifice and learn that it is free of debt. They have even started a reserve or endowment fund to be used in case of an emergency—like a depression—think of that!

The services on Sunday were blessed with a great degree of the spirit. The attendance for the entire day was said to have been perhaps the best since the church was built; many coming from adjoining branches and a goodly number of visitors being present from other churches not of our faith. The banquet and concert Monday evening completed a very fine spiritual revival.

II.—DETROIT, MICHIGAN

Sunday, November 25, the Saints of Detroit staged a very successful homecoming. The day was fine and the attendance and interest and spiritual atmosphere equally fine. Brother James W. Davis is now president of our amalgamated congregations in Detroit; Brother David Dowker is pastor of the Central Church where the homecoming was held. Brother J. Charles Mottashed, long time president of the Detroit churches, is at present in Washington, D. C., in Government service; where his wife recently joined him.

Several veteran church members were in attendance Sunday, including Brother and Sister Wm. Davis, father and mother of James W. Davis. Presiding Patriarch, F. A. Smith had just closed a five weeks' series of meetings, one week in each of Detroit's five Latter Day Saint congregations; just to keep his hand in and not lose the knack of preaching, he spoke in the afternoon and then drove to Pontiac to preach in the evening. It was my privilege to speak in the forenoon and evening. Our young Brother Lloyd Heaviland drove me to the train in the evening after service, providing me with a late lunch. This bids fair to become a habit with him as this is the second time in a month.

Who Carries the Load in Troubled Times?

By N. Ray Carmichael

Counselor to the Presiding Bishop

IT was a hot August afternoon, the troop column wound through fields and vineyards and hobbled-nailed shoes crunched and scarred the rock roads of France. The wind was stagnant, the atmosphere had set. A buddie dropped to his knees faint—his load too heavy. Instantly it was shared by those near, someone picked up his heavy ammunition supply—his rifle—his pack and his equipment, and he carried on.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE LOAD

Today, it seems, as never in the history of civilization are we called upon to carry the burden of others. The long list of alphabetic administrations has been devised in an effort to distribute the load. The sales tax, the assessment for old age pension, income and inheritance taxes are but attempts to spread the load over the greatest number for a long period so that the burden may not become acute to groups at any time.

HISTORY

Bible history and our own church literature are filled with stories and examples of economic adjustment and survival. Joseph as manager of the storehouse of Pharaoh moved his father and brothers from the famine and drouth stricken Canaan to the land of Goshen where food, pasture and water were plentiful.

At present our complex and interlocking industrial civilization makes such adjustment impossible, however, this very complexity presents a way out.

THE WAY OUT

It is said that, "when one member suffers the body suffers" and how much greater the suffering would be if all members were employed in the same kind of work. Brother C. L. Olson, Church Statistician, says that approximately 38 per cent of our church membership live in or adjacent to the drouth area of the past summer in the United States.

Those in this area whose increase comes directly from the soil will be limited in their ability to pay tithes and offerings. And too, those whose wages come indirectly from agricultural and industrial pursuits will be affected. In spite of these facts it is the duty of the wage earner, the professionally employed members, the teachers, the clerks, to share more of the burden. Those on pay rolls even though their time is cut must assist those who are beaten to their knees, to the end that the church may carry its work forward.

" . . . AND I WORK"

Daily there are examples of this unselfish sharing. A college graduate of last June divides his pay check each two weeks as follows—living expense, tithing, and payment on debts. Within the past ten days a released missionary and his wife who three years ago went to work with only their bare hands, paid a substantial sum—one tenth of their net earnings. A group of business men have arranged to pay monthly a fixed amount from each enterprise. A superannuated missionary and his wife after studying their financial situation turn their total accumulated allowance account back as an offering. Daily instances of what boys and girls as well as young men and young women are doing are too great to mention. Many Saints are establishing the routine of paying tithing every month or at other definite periods.

Recently while discussing with a local group, whose industrial and working conditions are very favorable, their need for improved meeting quarters, one young brother observed, "We can carry on very comfortably here in this Hall—let us concentrate our efforts on the needs of the General Church."

Bishop Curry in his sermon in the Independence Stone Church Sunday, November 25, said, "The National Ledgers show great loss—the assets of strong men have vanished—yet the things that really count are left."

With our determination set to keep the law, a prayer in our hearts and a song on our lips, let us resolve to carry our share of the load and a "wee bit more."

Correction

Brother Fred Davies requests us to amend an error in his article of October 9, entitled "The Gospel in Ireland." W. H. Kelley should have been named as missionary in the article, instead of E. L. Kelley.

Organizing Financial Work in the District

By Stephen Robinson

Bishop's Agent, Des Moines District

THE SUCCESS of the financial work in the district is dependent on the co-operation and work of the district officers, branch leaders, solicitors and priesthood. Each should remember that we are workers together for God, working and cooperating with each other with that love, intelligence, and zeal that will eventually mean the ultimate triumph of our church.

The branch solicitor aids, assists, and represents the bishop or bishop's agent in his absence; his work and efficiency are very important factors in the general church financial organization. A solicitor writes receipts for tithing paid but his duties are far more extensive, spiritual, and intelligent than that. A solicitor is to aid and assist the bishop and bishop's agent and is to ask the Saints with earnestness to observe the financial law and to create in the minds of the Saints a desire to "Keep the Law."

In order to awaken the desire on the part of some of the Saints it is necessary to teach the law, and plead with them to do their duty; and this in some instances must be the subject of constant endeavor. Branches and districts in which solicitors are acting with humility and are awakening a desire to pay tithing cheerfully because of love and devotion to God and the church, will show improved results. A solicitor should not be retained who does not create confidence in the minds of the Saints for the bishopric and general church and who does not feel it a pleasure to represent the bishop and invite and solicit the membership to file their inventories or financial statements and pay their tithing regularly. The membership should also be glad to help and sustain the solicitor who knows his duty and with humility, love, and intelligence, teaches and invites the Saints (listless and active) to "Keep the Financial Law."

The solicitors, priesthood and all church leaders should endeavor at all times to create confidence in the minds of the Saints as to the ultimate goal and triumph of the church and should be very careful as to whether or not their conduct will retard rather than aid the church in reaching its goal. When confidence and love are established it is much easier to teach and cause the Saints to respond in action. Unless confidence is established the Saints will not impart of their substance.

Each district should be so organized that the various branches and groups reach the membership by personal contact, class work, and sermons. At least one service each month should be devoted to teaching and admonishing the Saints to "Keep the Financial Law." All members should be clearly instructed as to the divinity and wisdom of filing inventories, financial statements, and paying tithing and making offerings.

Large corporations and firms call their salesmen together for instruction at various times. It is likewise advisable and necessary to call church officers, priesthood and solicitors together for instruction, to stir them to action, to stimulate and inspire their confidence in the ultimate victory of the church. Conferences, reunions and banquets afford an opportunity for special work with the church workers, or the "salesmen" of the financial department of the church. All priesthood members, church workers, and solicitors should cheerfully observe the law and none is exempt. Regardless of whether there is tithing to pay, an inventory or annual financial statement should be filed, as that is evidence of compliance to the extent possible. Priesthood members, church officers and solicitors should not be permitted to function and be in a position of leadership unless they wholeheartedly support and teach the financial law of the church.

A list of the priesthood of the district, as well as officers and solicitors, should be made and this list should be carefully checked to determine who is and who is not complying with the law. The failure may be negligence and it may be refusal. The parties failing to observe the law should be dealt with as circumstances warrant.

In each branch and group of the district it should be the constant endeavor to teach the law and we should emphasize more the necessity of filing an inventory and paying or making arrangements to pay tithing before baptism. If a person refuses to file an inventory or pay his tithing or make arrangements to pay the tithing, he is not quite ready to be baptized and should be given further instruction.

At least once each year on a fixed date or at such times as may be requested by the general authorities, the district should hold a "Financial Observance Day" with special services throughout the day devoted and given to this phase of the church doctrine and belief. The "District Rally and Observance Day" would be a climax to work previously done in branches and groups. This service will inspire the Saints, confirm their faith, create confidence, and stir them to action.

We should at all times keep in mind that we are workers for God teaching and instructing the Saints in the law of God. We should teach and work in the spirit of love and humility, give intelligent instruction, and follow up our efforts and work with that zeal, devotion, and consecration of Saints of God that Zion may be established in our day.

LONDON AND DETROIT HOMECOMINGS

While in Detroit I enjoyed the gracious hospitality and homelife of my cousins, Alfred and Bertha Hulmes and Barbara. Bertha, who is granddaughter of the late President Joseph Smith and the no less devoted Latter Day Saint, A. K. Anderson, is doing good work as head of the women's work in Detroit.

On the program Sunday was another of the descendants of Joseph, the Martyr, Sister Inez Smith Davis, who demonstrated the rare faculty she has of relating historical events in a way to make them live again.

The pastors in Detroit face some spiritual problems and the Board of Stewards faces some financial problems: but given unity of purpose and action there is no reason why they should not succeed and go forward in a very gratifying manner.

The Shadow of the Cross

By Ward A. Hougas

President of Far West Stake

WARD A. HOUGAS

"He that findeth his life shall lose it and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

IT MAY be well to look backward at the picture which comes to us in the story of Palm Sunday, the story of the Christ, and of those who chose to follow him as they made their way toward Jerusalem. It was a beautiful day. The number that followed the Christ was considerably larger than on most occasions, and we are led to believe that the entire valley was filled with those who marched along with him in the vain belief that in the near future would come their day of triumph, that the time was not far away when their Christ would stand forth and establish for them the kingdom of which they had dreamed—had dreamed, perhaps, for generations. It was truly a day of triumph, a day of rejoicing and as the crowd made its way down the valley one might think it was a day only for rejoicing, only for happiness.

And yet to those who thought and looked into the future, even in that hour of happiness, in that hour of triumph, even as they moved towards Jerusalem, saw coming from the very brow of Calvary stretched out toward the valley the shadow of the cross. Jesus saw it; he sensed its presence; he realized it was there and he knew the true significance of that shadow. I doubt not that others saw and understood, to some extent, that even in this hour of triumph there stretched out the shadow of the cross.

And as we look back today, we realize that it was there—not merely in historical prospect—but it was actually there; and although Jesus saw it, still he set his face toward Jerusalem. Although he sensed its presence, still he moved on that his mission might be fulfilled. In any event, he continued with his task. I think it is quite significant that the Christ, recognizing what was before him still partook of the spirit of the day, still enjoyed the sunshine of life, still enjoyed the possibilities which that day brought him, yet sensing that the shadow of the cross lay across his path. And yet at no time did he foolishly decide within his own mind that because the sun was shining on that day that after all life was meant to be all sunshine and that life should be void of all the storms and trials which life at times brings to us.

I sometimes think that our age has developed something of a happiness complex. For some peculiar reason within the last generation or two at least we have developed the idea that life was meant for pleasure only and we are being robbed if anything creeps into life that is not sunshine, and if we are asked to perform any task that is not entirely to our liking we feel that life is cheating us. We feel that we are being robbed, that life is unfair to us. We think that we are not getting from life that which it is our prerogative to receive.

This is manifested in our cheapened ideas that apply to life today—for instance, our more cheapened modern ideas of marriage. The modern age demands all the privileges of marriage and yet refuses to accept its responsibilities. Likewise, we have a cheapened attitude toward citizenship. We demand all rights and privileges which an organized society can give and yet we attempt to evade every responsibility. Because of that our citizenship becomes cheapened. We demonstrate it in our reactions every day to every law, to every custom, to everything which in any way tends to restrain our so-called personal liberty. We reject everything which society says we should not do because we feel it limits our possibilities to live, and yet we would have the privileges of an organized society which make life worth the while.

I am wondering this morning how about the church. Is it possible that in this day and age we are facing our church problem with the same philosophy, that we can expect from the church all the blessings, all the privileges, all the beauties of the gospel and yet refuse the responsibilities thereof? Is it possible that we are asking from the church that for which we are not willing to pay? Is it possible that we are looking forward, dreaming our dreams, dreams which we have not yet achieved, which we have not yet realized, and have failed to appreciate the fact that these dreams have not been realized because we have failed to pay the price?

WHAT do we expect from the church now? What down in our souls do we feel the church owes us? What do we feel that we have a right to demand of the church in this day and age? In the past few weeks I have asked this question of many. Here are some of the answers. In the first place, I find most people expecting a spiritual sense of security and demand of this church that which we call eternal life.

What is eternal life? I have asked that question also. As nearly as I can figure from the philosophy that seems to be circulating in a great many minds, eternal life is a promise of something in the world to come, a promise that has no effect on us now, a promise which places no responsibility upon you or me, and a promise which demands nothing of you and which demands nothing particularly of me further than that we align ourselves nominally with this church. I can take you this morning to scores, yes hundreds or thousands of people who feel assured this beautiful morning that theirs is the promise and the heritage of eternal life, and yet today they refuse every responsibility which this church has ever placed upon them as members. That is what a lot of people feel this church owes them this morning.

Others tell me that this church owes them a "more abundant life." That raises the question, "What is the more abundant life?" Likewise, I bring you their answer. The more abundant life is in all too many minds a guarantee from God that their life shall be freed from all of the unhappy things which the world places upon us, that their life shall be devoid of all of those things which tend to bear down on the human race today, and they feel that the church owes them the more abundant life regardless of whether or not they accept any of the responsibilities of sainthood or not.

Then there are others who have other answers. I am thinking of one family who one time called one of our ministers one hundred and sixty miles to administer. The hand of adversity had come upon that family and they felt they had a right to demand from the church that which they had been converted to in the church, that they should ask for the elders and they should be healed. And yet in conversation with that little family it was learned that for fifteen years they had lived only twelve miles from an active branch and in those fifteen years time on three special occasions only had they ever attended services. That little branch twelve miles away was too far for them to serve the church and yet one hundred and sixty miles was not too far for the church to serve them. They felt that the church owed them this service, that this was their heritage as members of the Latter Day Saint Church. This was their right, their promise although they recognized no responsibility toward the church.

Then I find some people that feel this church owes them a certain amount of divine direction and in the past few years the divine direction has been called for, in most cases pleading with God to help them out of a financial mess while in fact all through the years gone by they have carried on their activities entirely apart from the activities of the church. God has had no place in their financial program, no place in their budget, and yet today when the hand of adversity has come upon them they move down on their knees to ask God to help them concerning which they had asked him nothing in the beginning. Some of them are quite puzzled and disturbed why it is God has not written across the heavens in flaming letters how to get out of the mess they are in. They feel that the church owes them this service because of their nominal membership in that organization, and yet they feel no responsibility toward the church and many of these same people feel the church owes them a sense of divine protection from God. They read the place where the destroying angel passed them by, forgetting that every promise rests upon our having fulfilled our obligations towards God and his church.

Then there are those who in this day and age feel that the church, or that God through the church has given a special dispensation of temporal blessings. Back in the days of prosperity they didn't worry about God's relationship to their prosperity but in these days of depression they look back and feel God should bless them. They read the statement that they should pray over their flocks and herds and having done so at this late hour they are puzzled as to why God has not blessed them, forgetting the years gone by when he did bless them, and look for the blessings which they feel are theirs by right of membership. And so we might go on forever but these are significant of the way in which all too many members look to the church, feeling this church owes them these blessings regardless of whether or not they have accepted their responsibilities toward the church.

IT WAS through this peaceful valley of life, a valley where all was prosperity and health through which we seemed to be able to pass without God. It was through such a valley that most of us have been traveling and (Continued on page 1547.)

The Stewardship of Talents

By Alma Black

One of a series of talks delivered by young people at the O. T. Z. Rally in Far West Stake. The author is a member of the First Branch, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Stewardship is being recognized of late as something more than accountability to God for the use of our money. Our conception of the meaning of the word has broadened until we now think of stewardship as "an attitude toward life." We are beginning to realize that God has given into our keeping many trusts: such as strength, personality, influence, talents, time, money, prayer, and numerous other things. He, the owner, expects us to administer them for him. Whether we are faithful or unfaithful stewards depends upon the use that we make of these possessions and abilities.

The well known parable of the talents told by Jesus assumes that all disciples are servants of Christ, and that all of them have work to do for Christ. The talents signify ability and opportunity, but they are not merely gifts—they are trusts involving responsibility.

This graduation of five, two and one correspond appropriately to what we speak of as superior, ordinary and inferior ability or talent. The servants all differed at first, but the faithful ones were alike in the end, inasmuch as they had done equally well in proportion to their talent. The weakest person is at no disadvantage; he may not only do as well as the strongest, but if the measure of his diligence and faithfulness is higher, he may even excel others.

Each person has God-given individuality, a personality and talents different from those of any other. Such distinction, however, should be respected. For example, suppose that your child has no talent for music; then you should not insist that he play the piano, but on the other hand, if he has unusual abilities, you should help him to develop them.

Many people think that because they are not gifted in music or in some other outstanding ability, they have no talent. But can we say this is true? We know that our Master is ready to make allowances for the weakness of his servants, so long as it does not amount to absolute unfaithfulness.

Have you recognized your talent? Perhaps it would be well for each of us to take an inventory of our lives and find out just what our talent is. Maybe your talent is that of hospitality, service, leadership, motherhood, love for fellow men, personality, preaching the gospel, missionary work, or even sewing.

Whatever your talent is, whether it be great or small, you must develop and use it; for as we learned from the parable, "Make the most of the little you have" and also "to whom much is given, of them much shall be required."

In speaking of the stewardship of sewing, it is not difficult for us to imagine Dorcas—her warm heart with its ready response to the needs about her, and her flashing needle always busy in service. Needles are little things but by their use, the loyalty and love of a whole community may be won. Also, in Hannah's consecration of the little Samuel, to the service of God, we see the true spirit of stewardship, gratitude expressing itself in giving. Because her heart was grateful, she lent her little son to the Lord for as long as he should live. To be a mother is to be a steward of great opportunities and responsibilities.

God has committed trusts to his people, and down through the ages, there have always been those who have responded to His generosity with faithful stewardships. We refer to a woman who lived in the days of Elisha, the prophet. She was a good steward of hospitality, using it for God. Modern women, too have a stewardship of hospitality. Their homes may provide a wonderful opportunity for it. Or it may be used selfishly, wholly for one's enjoyment and the entertainment of one's friends. How are you as God's steward, using your home? Is it merely a source of comfort and pleasure to you and your family? Or is it, in addition, really counting for God?

The Master has also appointed us to be stewards of the Gospel. He intended that we should tell the "good news," the Gospel. He left the story of his love and his salvation in the hands of a little group of faithful disciples and so it came down through the ages, until today, it rests in your hands and mine. We are Christ's twentieth century disciples and he is depending upon us for the evangelization of our generation.

Therefore, stewardship must be something we can recognize without waiting for the church to give it to us. Perhaps we are all as near sighted as grandpa, when he looks all over the house for his glasses, while they are right on top of his head—we already have our stewardship, it is our job, our work. Each of us (Continued on page 1550.)

Elder Archibald Whitehead— Church Builder

Saints of Michigan, Indiana, and Wisconsin, and especially those at Muskegon, Michigan, suffered a great loss in the recent death of Elder Archibald Whitehead.

Brother Whitehead was a church builder in every sense of the term. He was instrumental in organizing Muskegon Branch, April 20, 1919, and had been its pastor since that time with the exception of one year. He passed to his reward after delivering a sermon at Lansing Church Tuesday evening, September 11.

He was born in Egremont, Ontario, Canada, April 7, 1865, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Whitehead; moved to Cadillac in 1899, where he obeyed the gospel, being baptized by Elder W. J. Smith, September 13, 1891. Shortly after that he was ordained to the office of teacher. In 1901, while at the Fork Conference he was ordained an elder by J. J. Cornish and W. E. Peak.

This staunch servant of the Lord cherished his calling and honored it. Always he was loyal to the charge conferred upon him, and many times God used him as a mouthpiece in manifesting his power and gifts to the people.

Brother and Sister Whitehead and family moved to Muskegon in 1918, where with hard labor and the assistance of a couple of other families, they were instrumental in organizing the branch a year later.

Brother Whitehead's diary records among his labors in his home branch, Muskegon, that six deacons, five teachers, seven priests, and four elders were placed in the gospel harvest field under his hands. One hundred and seventy in the local branch were baptized by him. From the year, 1914, and up to the time of his death, he conducted over three hundred members into the church, by baptism, nineteen in the last year. Since 1930 he had blessed forty-five children.

While holding revival services with his son, Ellis, on Jackson Hill in 1922, the record shows that they blessed eight children whose parents were not members of the church.

The funeral services were held from the little church for which he drew the plans and labored so hard to erect. Members of the priesthood over whom he had presided like a faithful, patient father, were his pallbearers. District President A. C. Barmore who held a warm spot in the heart of Brother Whitehead, spoke words of encouragement to the bereaved family.

A Journey

By S. H.

You and I are traveling on the Journey of Life. We have not passed this way before and the road is long and strange and mysterious. We wonder about it, how long the journey will be, and what we shall find at its end.

We start joyfully out with Hope as our companion and for a long way we are happy and full of gayety and we think the Journey of Life is fun.

By and by, after traveling a long, long time, a fog settles upon us. We still have Hope so we travel on, somehow, through the fog. How dense it is. We become confused and bewildered. After days of wandering we discover we are lost and Hope has disappeared. The happy road has vanished and we try in vain to find it.

The days bring new experiences that try our souls. There are days when we are groping in the barren wastes of desert land. The sun beats down upon us and we cry aloud for water to quench our thirst. Exhaustion comes as we reach the River of Doubt.

Then for awhile the path leads upward, but it is steep and hard to climb. The stones bruise our feet and the rustle of serpents make us afraid. Despair walks with us.

For weeks and months we trudge on until all our strength is gone. Then suddenly we see a little ray of light across the path and there is Hope. We thought we had lost her but she had been playing a game with us and now that she is with us again we feel renewed. Courage enters our hearts and we speak these words to Hope: "Surely when tomorrow comes we shall find a resting place, an oasis, where we may tarry and quench our thirst, and perchance a physician may be there to heal our wounds."

"Why wait until tomorrow," replied Hope, "Jesus, your physician and guide is here now to help you."

The realization came like an electric shock. Yes, Jesus is here! Now! Today, this very moment. He is leading the way and begging us to follow. He knows all about this journey of life that we are traveling. He traveled the same road nearly two thousand years ago.

He knows all about the wilderness we must pass through. He knows all about the serpents and the stones that lie in our path and the raging waters of temptation and doubt that reach out to engulf us.

Let us walk with Jesus. He will guide us through the dangers and nothing that is evil can befall us.

His love and tender care will sustain us and instead of thirsting we shall drink of the living waters of life freely.

Instead of stones in our path there'll be flowers. Instead of serpents, that seek to harm us, there'll be the sweet singing of birds.

We may pass through the dense Wilderness of Despair, the Desert of Groping, and even through the Valley of the Shadow but with our hand in Thine, Oh Lord, we shall emerge at last on the beautiful Mount of Transfiguration.

"Lead Thou Me On."

Lift Me Up

Out of myself, dear Lord,
O lift me up!
No more I trust myself in life's dim maze,
Sufficient to myself in all its devious ways,
I trust no more, but humbly at Thy throne
Pray, "Lead me, for I cannot go alone."

Out of my weary self,
O lift me up!
I faint, the road winds upward all the way;
Each night but ends another weary day.
Give me Thy strength, and may I be so blest
As on "the heights" to find the longed-for rest.

Out of my selfish self,
O lift me up!
To live for others, and in living so
To be a blessing whereso'er I go,
To give the sunshine, and the clouds conceal,
Or let them but the silver clouds reveal.

Out of my lonely self,
O lift me up!
Though other hearts with love are running o'er,
Though dear ones fill my lonely home no
more,
Though every day I miss the fond caress,
Help me to join in others' happiness.

Out of my doubting self,
O lift me up!
Help me to feel that Thou art always near,
That though 'tis night and all around seems drear,
Help me to know that though I cannot see,
It is my Father's hand that leadeth me.

—Selected.

The highest compact we can make with our fellows is, Let there be truth between us two forever. . . . It is sublime to feel and say of another, I need never meet, or speak, or write to him; we need not reinforce ourselves or send tokens of remembrance; I rely on him as on myself; if he did thus or thus, I know it was right.—Emerson.

The Memoirs
of
President Joseph Smith
(1832-1914)

Edited by his daughter
Mary Audentia Smith Anderson

Some of the older scholars and young men—the Clawsons, Kimballs, Hibbards, Cutlers, and a number of others—were quite proficient in the histrionic art, and entertainments of that character were encouraged and frequently enjoyed by the school. In these efforts Hiram B. Clawson was a leader, and perhaps the best of the dramatic players. He afterwards became associated with a theater in Salt Lake City which he managed for a great many years. Though I knew him well up to the time he left Nauvoo I have never met him in any of my several visits to the West. I understood that his brother John died not many years after they left Illinois.

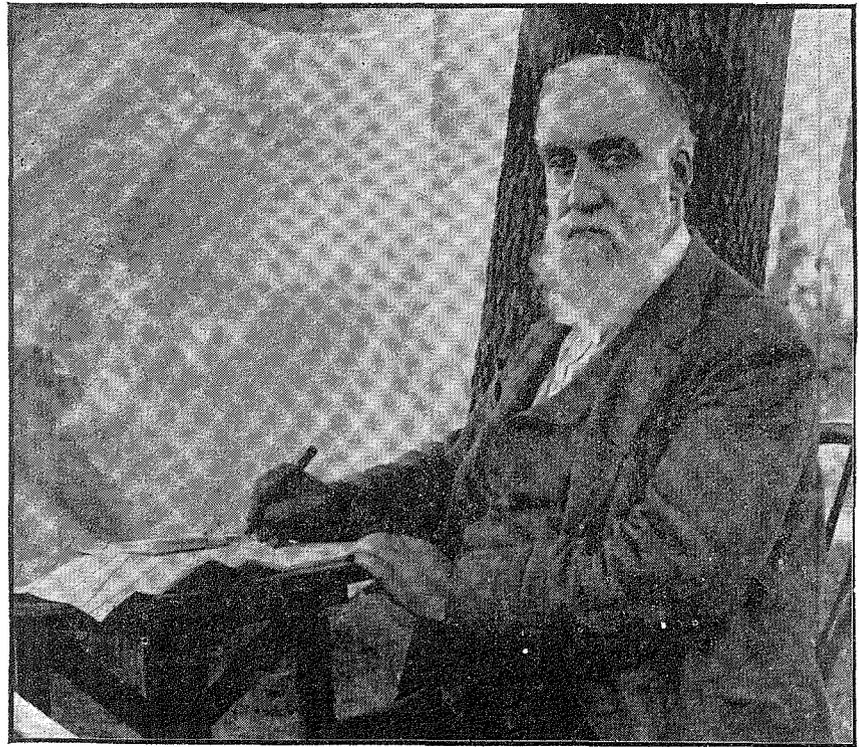

There also attended this school the children of the Widow Sherman. Their names were Susan, Alma, and Seth. All these individuals are brought to mind by events which occurred afterwards and may be related later on.

There was a great accession in numbers of scholars in the fall and Teacher Monroe organized spelling classes which were known by numerals. I had been spelling in Class Number One when because of sickness I had to be away from school for a time. When I returned and the call was made for Class Number One to line up, I started from my seat to take my place as before. Teacher Monroe stopped me and said I did not belong in that class any more for he had reorganized it while I was gone. I asked why I had been excluded, and he replied it was because I was too small. I asked him if spelling went by size, and he answered, "Well, no—not exactly, but I have arranged that class for the larger pupils."

I was persistent and said, "Teacher, you know I can spell as well as Loren Walker, Henry Coltrin"—and I named several others; "I don't think it is fair to keep me out because I am smaller if I can spell as well."

He finally conceded that if I would get a Walker's Dictionary and study it I might spell with the larger class—and I was jubilant. I knew right where I could get one for I had seen it in Father's library—a small book some four by five inches square, and perhaps an inch and a quarter thick.

Thus I was again enrolled in Class Number One. Perhaps the second or third Friday thereafter, when the class was ranged up to spell down there were several who seemed to be pretty evenly matched. After exhausting the words in the spelling book Teacher Monroe gave out some from the dictionary, and still made no impression upon the number standing together. At last he gave out the word "cholagogue," before which they went down—one, two, three or more—until a good many had tried and missed. It came to me and I spelled it correctly.

Surprised, Teacher Monroe blurted out, "Why! Where did you ever find that word?"

"Why, on the end of Robinson's Row, in an advertisement of an ague cure," I replied.

Sure enough, the advertisement was indeed there, in plain sight, and the word printed in large letters easily to be seen by any who passed up or down Main Street and took the pains to notice it. Mr. Monroe asked how many of them had ever seen it, and scarcely one could remember whether he had or not. The teacher took advantage of the incident to call the attention of the school to the value of using their eyes and taking better notice of what they saw.

My memory was ever excellent so far as the studies of geography, history, and spelling were concerned, but not so serviceable in the study of arithmetic. The intricacies of figures bewildered me. I could commit to memory the Sunday school lessons and lengthy declamations, had something of a taste for phrases, and could spell any word I ever saw to read it. I stood fairly well in most studies, and after this episode in the spelling class I gained favor with the teacher who interested himself in my welfare and advancement.

For the purpose of assisting me, he and I entered into a personal correspondence, in which I wrote him a letter each week and received a reply. This continued during the latter part of the existence of this school and was not broken up until Mr. Monroe, with others, left the state of Illinois. I formed a strong attachment for him and he certainly did me great good.

Under his instruction and by the aid and personal example of Oliver B. Huntington, I made some progress in the study of elocution. It became our habit to read to each other from the standard books in use and other works, and in the late summer and fall we would go to a small grotto where a little stream ran out of the hills over a fall, across the road, and into the river, and there in the shade, one in the valley and one on top of the hill, we would converse together, in an effort to acquire accuracy of speech and to strengthen our voices. I owe much indeed to the friendship shown me at this period of my boyhood days by James M. Monroe and Oliver B. Huntington.

It may be well in passing to note here that Teacher Monroe went to Utah with the emigration west, stayed for a while, and in attempting to get away was killed on the plains somewhere east of the Territory then known as Deseret. His alleged slayer was a man named Howard Egan who had lived a while at Nauvoo, running a blacksmith and wagon-making shop on the hillside west of the Temple, not far from the home of Bishop Edward Hunter.

Oliver B. Huntington left Nauvoo, presumably in company with his younger brother, John, going to Watertown, New York, where he subsequently married a lady by the name of Neal. A circumstance in connection with his residence in Watertown comes to mind which was interesting in its passing and may be of interest here and how.

Spiritism

It will be remembered by those familiar with that phase of current history that about 1848 what was known as spirit-rapping was introduced by the Fox sisters in western New York, from whence it spread practically all over the nation. It reached Illinois about 1850, when together with pencil-writing and other forms of spirit manifestation it began to be practiced in Hancock County, cropping out in the family of James Chadsey who lived on a farm in Sonora Township adjoining my father's land. I was working upon Father's farm at the time and in visiting the Chadsey home became acquainted with this spirit-writing business, Mrs. Chadsey being the medium.

My nearest neighbor was a man by the name of James Richardson, an early church convert from England. With his wife he lived on a small piece of land across the highway from ours. He had refused to go west at the time of the "break-up," and had turned agnostic. As these manifestations progressed on the Chadsey farm he showed an intense interest in the phenomena and finally became an ardent spiritist, so-called. He and I spent many an evening discussing the various phases of the subject and together used frequently to attend the seances held by Mrs. Chadsey. We procured certain works on spiritism which we read and discussed together. Occasionally we would experience a species of occult manifestation between us, but nothing happened which could be construed as immediately confirming by actual evidence the reality or truth of the theories advanced by those believers.

Our investigations had intermittently extended over a period of two or three years when a communication was received by Mrs. Chadsey purporting to come from this old-time friend, Oliver B. Huntington. The communication stated distinctly that he had died of cholera at Watertown, New York, giving the date of death, and expressing pleasure at thus being able to communicate with the living. It was signed plainly in the very handwriting of the man himself, which I readily recognized, for I had been in correspondence with him and knew it perfectly.

My friend Richardson and I had reached the point in our investigations and observances of the seances where we had decided to make a test as to the genuineness of the messages received by Mrs. Chadsey, and this communication seemed to afford us an opportunity. Without delay I wrote to Mrs. Huntington at Watertown, telling her that I had heard that Oliver was dead, giving the date and place, mentioning the disease which had borne him off, and asking her for a reply.

Owing to the fact that mails were then carried across country by stage and across lakes by boats, it was a full month before I received an answer. It came in the form of a letter from Mrs. Huntington's brother, who stated that his sister with her husband Oliver and their family had left Watertown some months before to go to Utah, and that at the last account he had received Oliver was living and well, and had not, to the writer's knowledge, even been ill. He added that he had forwarded my letter to them and they would doubtless answer it upon receipt. In due course of time I did receive a letter from Oliver himself, dated at Fort Laramie, Wyoming, and confirming the statement that he was perfectly well and hearty.

This incident closed the investigations of my friend Richardson and myself into the current phenomena of spiritualism. He became extremely skeptical and I utterly disgusted with the so-called spirit manifestations as displayed by those declared to be mediums. I had seen table-tipping and had witnessed several times the pencil-writing performances, but came to the conclusion that, so far, my experience had proved there was absolutely no good in it or in any part of it. I had read Andrew Jackson Davis' Nature's Divine Revelation, and his Great Harmonia as far as the third volume, and had discovered some very good reasons, or so I considered them, to discard as evidence much of that which was presented. I had no desire to study further what seemed to me so unreliable and mystic a "science" as spiritualism at that time presented. Thenceforward I let it alone, regarding it as a matter of mental speculation unworthy the attention and investigation of an honest man who was not actually willing to be humbugged—a result which I certainly did not wish to invite.

In 1885, on the occasion of my second visit to Utah, I was privileged to meet Oliver B. Huntington in his home at Springville, some fifty or sixty miles south of Salt Lake City. There I conversed freely with him as an old acquaintance and friend. He was then living with his third wife, his first and second having each in turn refused to remain with him when he attempted polygamy. I did not meet his first wife who was, I was told, a most estimable woman. Neither did I see the second one, a nurse of considerable local stand-

A Fight

A circumstance connected with the school held in the store building made an indelible impression upon my mind, both because of the incident itself and because of the men involved. The school was held in the upper room of the building, which stood with its end to the north, on the south side of Water Street. Directly opposite, on the north side, stood the store of William and Wilson Law. On the corner of the block opposite, west of William Law's house and adjoining his store, there was a sort of feed yard into which teams could be driven and fed while their owners were trading. Ephraim Potter, a clerk in that store, used to board at our house and I knew him quite well.

One noon I was sent on an errand to the store and there heard a conversation between Wilson Law and a brother in the church by the name of Uriah Chittenden H. Nickerson. They were discussing a tree which Nickerson had cut on a certain island on the Iowa side of the river, on which both he and the Law brothers owned land. Wilson Law accused Nickerson of stealing his timber, claiming that the tree cut had been on his land, that Nickerson knew it was, and that he proposed making Nickerson trouble over it.

Brother Nickerson replied that at the time he cut the tree he believed it to be on his own land, and still thought so, but not wishing to have trouble, suggested they get a surveyor, have the land surveyed, and if it were found the timber belonged to Law he would pay for it. They would get two brethren to appraise the wood and he would pay the amount decided upon as its value.

Law seemed not to agree to this proposal and Nickerson told him that if he preferred it that way he could take the timber, and pay him, Nickerson, for hewing it. He even added that if Law were still not satisfied, Law could take the tree and Nickerson would say nothing further about it, as he did not think it seemly to have contention between brethren over such a matter.

None of this seemed to suit Wilson Law and he threatened to prosecute Nickerson for stealing the timber. Just then the school bell rang and I ran across the street and up into the school-room. There were three windows in the north end of the building and my seat was at the western one. Soon I heard a commotion outside and looking out saw a number of men pouring out of the store, perhaps six or eight of them, and passing through a gate into the yard. Among these were Uncle Hyrum, Wilson Law, Potter, Nickerson, and some others whose names I do not now recall. Wilson Law was stripping off his coat and vest as he came, which he handed to Uncle Hyrum to hold.

I was curious to know what it all meant as I saw Wilson take off his cravat also, and roll up his sleeves. He was talking pretty loud, and though I could not distinguish his words I gathered that he was angry with Nickerson about the timber. I wondered why my Uncle Hyrum was holding Law's clothing for him, but soon discovered, for I saw Wilson Law strike twice at Nickerson, apparently with the intention of giving him a great thrashing. After the second blow Nickerson sprang forward. Using Law pretty roughly he would evidently have administered a severe beating had it not been for the fact that, seeing the way the conflict was turning, Uncle Hyrum and others interferred and drew the men apart.

I remember how excited I was and how ashamed I felt that my uncle had lowered his dignity by mixing in the quarrel between the two men. Wilson Law was a man of business and reputed wealth, while Nickerson was poor and hard-working. It seemed those surrounding the two men had taken sides with Law and were quite willing to see Nickerson punished, but when they saw it was likely that Nickerson would do what punishing was done in the melee they were then quite ready to separate the men and stop the fighting.

I heard Nickerson say, "And so this is your Christianity, brethren! When you thought I could be whipped you were willing to witness it, but when you found I could take care of myself you were ready to keep us apart!"

Whether or not a church suit followed this disturbance I do not know, but I confess that my opinion of my Uncle Hyrum received a decided blow and my regard for him was sadly damaged. I had thought him so upright and just that I had expected him to take the part of the humbler brother. What I had overheard between the two men in the store and Nickerson's statement that he was willing to do what was right and whatever any two of his brethren would decide was just in the matter, had made me feel that an advantage had been taken of him—doubtless because he was a poor man. Of course I may have erred in this conclusion or as to their motives, but I heard afterwards that when the survey was made the poorer brother was justified, for the tree was found to have been on his own land.

I met this U. C. H. Nickerson a good many years after, when he used to come down from Wisconsin to attend our Northern Illinois District Conferences. Once I conversed with him in reference to this trouble, which he remembered distinctly. One thing is certain: "Chit" Nickerson, as he was familiarly called, retained his faith in Joseph Smith as a Prophet of God, in the Angel's message, in the validity of the Book of Mormon, and in the integrity of the church instituted by the Prophet under Divine direction. He died in that faith, whatever may have been his wanderings before reaching the goal of the grave.

Mr. Kelsey

The next school I attended before the Saints left Illinois was conducted in the Seventy's Hall. The teacher was Eli B. Kelsey, who afterward became quite a noted elder in the economies of that faction of the church which was under the rule of Brigham Young.

I attended this school more than one term—probably in the fall of 1844 and the summer of 1845. The hall was located on Parley Street, the main thoroughfare extending between what was known as "the hill" and the ferry at Isaac Galland's estate. Among my schoolmates here were Henry Coolidge, Sidney and Wickliffe Rigdon, Edwin and Thomas Stafford, Joseph, Brigham, and Vilate Young, some the children of Heber C. Kimball, the children of David Yearsley (one of whom was named Elizabeth), Mary Tuttle, Titus Billings, and Edward and Lydia Partridge.

It was a good-sized school and there was considerable rivalry in the spelling classes. Usually Mary Tuttle, Henry Coolidge, and I would spell the rest down, and take turns in "leaving off head" to again spell our way up.

On the closing day of one term, when the class came to spell down the teacher announced the rule that but one trial at a word would be given each pupil, and that if the word were missed opportunity to spell it would pass at once to the next in line. The class had narrowed down to the three of us—Mary, Henry, and I. After a number of words went the rounds, Teacher Kelsey gave a word to Mary which she missed. He suggested that she try it again, and again she missed it. Without waiting for him to say "Next," I promptly spelled the word correctly. He reprimed me for being too eager, at which reprimand I called his attention to the fact that he himself had broken his own rules as stated at the beginning, and in giving Mary a second trial he had acted unfairly to all the rest of us.

He commented that, being a lady, she should be given a second opportunity. To this I demurred upon the ground that no such favoritism should be shown in such a contest. Mary was in tears, and some confusion seemed imminent.

A number of spectators were present, and I proposed leaving to them the question as to whether or not I had been within my rights. To this Teacher Kelsey would not agree and undertook to adjust the matter by saying he would divide the prize between us three. I objected to that plan, stating that I did not care especially for the prize and certainly did not want it if it were not rightfully mine and fairly won, adding that he could dispose of it as he pleased. General feeling among the children had been that Mary was a favorite of the teacher's, and this incident showed that it was useless for us to contend against her.

Though I cannot fix the date in memory, I remember well the day when Sidney and Wickliffe Rigdon came to the school to say good-bye—the day before the family left for Pittsburgh at "the separation." It was at this school, also, that the teacher instituted a system of police regulation among the children for the purpose of preventing truancy. He appointed various ones as special police, the duties to last one week. During one week of my services in this capacity I had trouble with one of the Stafford boys who became very angry in play at recess and proposed to leave the grounds. I prevented his doing so but it was at the expense of a personal encounter between us. The result was the abandonment of the system, for the teacher thought his instructions were being construed too strictly and enforced too vigorously, and he was fearful further unfriendly conflicts would ensue.

An incident of a rather laughable character comes to memory as being connected with this school. Joseph A. Young, son of Brigham Young, was something of a fop as a boy. He was rather vain of his good looks, his white complexion, and curly hair which was inclined to the red in color. One day he came to school all nicely dressed up, and brought with him a vial of cinnamon essence or oil. With this he dabbed his handkerchief in order that a nice fragrance might attend his walk. Of course we were all duly impressed and anxious to have some. We asked him to share with us, which he declined to do, and kept dabbing it at intervals on his hair and clothes as fast as the air and sun would combine to cause it to lose its power. The former, at least was quite well saturated with it after a while, and we were quite envious as a consequence. This brought us no benefit, for he didn't share his treasure with us.

However, we were consoled next day when our comrade came to school, for his hair had been so badly burned with the essence that it had broken off wherever rubbed a little, and looked worse than if he had haggled it to pieces with the shears! So we had our laugh, but it was a laugh with him and not at him, for Joseph A. was a good-natured fellow and appreciated any joke, even when on himself.

A part of the education we received in the school kept in the Seventy's Hall had reference to our conduct and manners. We were taught how to stand properly, how to walk, how to enter a room either public or private, the art of being polite in company, and other useful things calculated to enable us to be at ease and carry ourselves with a degree of grace in the presence of others. We were taught to reverence age, to take off our hats and bow to elderly people when met, to avoid being boisterous in demeanor or harsh or loud in voice, and, in general, to behave ourselves properly at all times. We were expected to be kind to our associates, to avoid imposing upon those weaker and younger, to go to church and to conduct ourselves in a respectable manner while there, and to engage in no unnecessary affairs on Sunday, the rest day. We were expected to enter the school-room quietly, to take off our hats and hang them in places provided, to greet the teacher with a courteous bow, and to proceed at once to our seats. If called upon to hand a book to anyone, we were shown how to properly approach the person and how to present the article in a graceful manner. All these and a variety of other instructions respecting conduct were made a part of our daily practice and formed a definite part of our education at the time.

The Rigdon boys left Nauvoo, as I have said, before the term closed, and I never saw either of them again until in the fall of 1905 I met John Wickliffe in Salt Lake City. He had separated from his family and had joined the church in Utah. I learned that his brother Sidney died quiet a number of years ago.

Mr. Tripp

My impression now is that the school just described was the last I attended before the breaking up at Nauvoo. However, it may have been in the summer of 1847 that I attended one kept in a building erected and occupied by Lucien Woodworth, otherwise known as the "pagan prophet"—a gunsmith by trade. That school was taught by a Mr. Tripp, a fair, blue-eyed man with curly hair and a very pleasant and affable manner. Here I remember we came in contact with some rather rough and undesirable boys who belonged to the Bruce and Allen families. There were five of the Bruce boys and three or four of the Allens. They had an ally of their own stamp, one Arthur Foster, son of a neighbor who lived in the house where Uncle Samuel Smith had lived and died. Of these boys Tom Bruce and John Allen were the ring leaders.

Near the school lived a family of new citizens named Kent, and not far below, another by the name of Elliott. These were quite good people who came in with the influx into the city of those who came to buy property cheaply from outgoing Saints. There were two girls in the Elliott family and a small, partially-crippled boy in the Kent family. The latter was named Geoffrey, and between him and my brother, Frederick, there sprang up quite a friendship. Frederick was tall for his age and slender, very kindly in disposition, and especially tender and considerate of those who were weak or afflicted, or in any trouble with the boys.

Frederick got into the habit of carrying little Geoffrey Kent home from school on his back, which he could easily do as Geoffrey was very small and light. These rough Bruce boys and their little band took a notion to torment the little fellows and would run up behind Frederick as he was carrying Geoffrey, jostle against them to make them stagger or fall, or jump upon Geoffrey's back to frighten and annoy. Two or three times they had thus thrown the boys down, and once had hurt Geoffrey enough to make him cry.

I remonstrated with them; told them they ought not to do that for one or both of the little boys might get hurt. I asked them, politely enough, to refrain from annoying the children further. One of the older ones pertly told me to go to the devil. Tom Bruce and John Allen were about my age and size and Arthur Foster was a trifle smaller. These rowdies laughed at me when I told them they must quit bothering the boys or I would make them, and taunted me by saying they would do as they pleased and I couldn't help myself. To this I simply answered, "Well, we will see."

In the afternoon when school was out my brother picked Geoffrey up on his back as usual and the two started down the street, full of glee and jollity. They had gone but a little ways when one of these rowdy boys, which one I do not now remember, ran and jumped upon Geoffrey's back, very nearly throwing him off and frightening him to crying. This act aroused my indignation and I turned to the crowd of youngsters and told them that the next one who did that would get hurt.

It had rained in the morning and we had gone to school under the shelter of a large umbrella which I was carrying in my hand. It was still quite wet and heavy from the early shower. The boys held a consultation, the leaders urging Arthur Foster to make another leap at the boys, and promising him to keep me from interfering. So Arthur skipped up behind the boys and sprang upon their backs. He had no sooner reached the ground afterward than I struck him full across the back with the heavy, wet umbrella, just as I held it, folded up, in my hand. It was an old-fashioned one with heavy wooden staff, ribs of whalebone, and spreading wires of steel.

Arthur howled with pain, and I turned to the crowd of boys and told them that if anyone else wanted to try that game now was his opportunity, but that if any one of them did dare to touch either of the little boys he would be served as I had served Arthur. That was the end of the row, for apparently none cared to run the risk of being struck similarly.

Arthur threatened to tell his mother and I rather expected he would, but if he did my own mother did not hear of it, for a little while afterward, having occasion to use the umbrella, she found the stock broken and the wires bent. Showing it to me she asked if I knew how it got in that condition, and I replied, "It probably happened when I struck Arthur Foster with it, the day it rained."

"Well, you must have struck him pretty hard to break it like this," she commented. I told her I did; that I hit him just as hard as I could. When she asked why, I told her the whole story. She thought I should not have struck Arthur, but I told her I just couldn't help it; that the little fellows could not defend themselves, and that I had felt bound to do what I could to protect them after giving their tormentors fair warning.

The lads were not disturbed again and the balance of the school term passed off pleasantly, according to my recollections.

Home Study

There was an old Irishman who taught school in the Seventy's Hall for a term or two, I think about 1847. I was lamentably deficient in arithmetic; had worn out copy after copy of Ray's Arithmetic in my various attempts to master its difficulties, but would promptly be turned back at the beginning of each term. I seemed to balk at "vulgar fractions," and did not succeed in getting beyond the merest rudiments of this most necessary branch of education.

I was desirous of mending in this particular, as my mother was engaged in keeping the hotel and I knew in order to be of help to her I should have some business qualifications, among them a working knowledge of figures. Mother encouraged me to attend this Irishman's school. Accordingly I went up, asked for an interview, and was told to come back at the noon hour.

At the appointed time I called upon the aged man and told him that I wanted to enter his school. He looked at me a bit, handed me a book opened at a certain piece of reading, and asked me to read it for him. Taking the book I did as requested, whereupon he remarked, "Young man, I can do nothing for you; a boy who can read like that can better teach me than I him."

I tried to explain that it was arithmetic I needed but failed to prevail upon him to take me as a pupil. Thus it happened that the term of school under Mr. Tripp was really the end of my boyhood schooldays.

It is but fair to add, however, that during the summer and fall of 1846, while the Mansion was being occupied by renters (first by William Marks and then by Van Tuyt), Doctor John M. Bernhisel boarded with us in the Hugh White house. He had considerable leisure at his disposal and agreed to help me in the study of grammar. He consented to hear my recitations provided I would secure two copies of the book used, Brown's Grammar. This I did and during that season I studied with him, the arrangement proving to be a very pleasing and profitable one for me. It largely laid the foundation for what usefulness I have been able to exercise in the conduct of literary affairs afterward imposed upon me.

THE SHADOW OF THE CROSS

stretched over this valley were we able to see even in the days of triumph, days of happiness and joy, had we been able to see, had we been able to visualize it, even in the days of sunshine we would have seen the shadow of the cross. We see it even as those people saw it a few days later, but on that day they saw it not and so today we see it and begin to realize that after all the shadow of the cross has been across our path and yet we wanted to revolt against the so-called repressions of life. We have refused our responsibilities and plead for the sunshine and yet avoided the rain. We plead to stand upon the mount of transfiguration and we refuse to enter into our Gethsemane. We would convert the world but yet most of us are content to stay at home. We want to redeem Zion yet we continue to disregard the laws of Zion. Thus we continue to look forward to the blessings of this church to us and yet fail to realize that the shadow of the cross lies across our path today. It always has and always will because after all, no life is worth while if it be a crossless life.

We are living by a kind of philosophy which makes us demand of the church what we are not willing to pay for. We dream our dreams of Zion and yet continue to disregard the laws of Zion and continue refusing to recognize our responsibilities to life at the present time. I wonder sometimes, do we expect to pay in cash for all those blessings of life which can be purchased only by giving our talents, our service, our minds, only by giving our very blood itself? Have we instilled into our thinking a philosophy which makes us think we can purchase that by silver and gold which only can be purchased by life itself? A life that leads us to feel that this church owes us blessings, owes us a heritage for which we are not willing to pay is altogether too cheap a life, it is in reality below that of the animals. It is a life which is not big enough for a man-sized individual. It is not big enough for you nor for me to live.

Even among the mothers of the little menagerie of mine I find they live on a plane far beyond self. I noticed last spring one mother mink which I possess. Long before her little ones could eat, she carried food back in the nest for these little ones. Unable to eat it she carried it out later in the day to keep the nest clean for them. She continued this process, living in the lives of those four little fuzzy fellows. And I imagine even in her animal heart there welled up a joy and satisfaction when they began to eat. As I looked at her, I sensed in her very carriage something of satisfaction because she was living the life of service.

I was very much interested in the story about those five sitting on the bumper of the car and the two others pushing. After all, that is quite true of life. All too many of us are attempting to ride on the bumper and receive from the church promises to those who live godly lives and only about two out of seven are willing to pay the price.

I don't believe there is anyone shrewd enough to avoid all the hard knocks of life. I grant that perhaps our ability to make these various labor-saving devices has had a great effect on our thinking. We have invented many things that take out of life the drudgery that once was common. Some of us thought that perhaps a day would come when with a little more inventing we would be able to take out of life everything except sunshine, and having done these things then life would really be worth while. I don't think we differ so much in our problems as we differ in the way we face those problems. I come to feel more and more that everyone who is worth while has to face some serious problems in life. Yours may be one, mine another, someone else's an entirely different one but some how, some way, we have to face those problems. Many people absolutely throw away all possibilities to enjoy life by trying to avoid these problems, and we often make the cross much heavier.

You have all seen the child with the loose tooth just dreading to pull it, who made it such a dreadful problem that he suffered a thousand times over. And then it finally fell out. In all those days they built up within themselves a dread for that particular ordeal and finally they discovered that it was nothing at all.

So we face the problems of life and we build up within ourselves an unconquerable and uncalled for dread. We talk of the sacrifices, we talk of the problems, we talk of the sufferings, of the disappointments. We talk about these things in such a way and so long that we have builded up within ourselves a feeling that makes it so much harder than it really is that often we never get the courage to bear that cross because we have built up in our minds a false idea of the cross and yet when we find that life is really planned with the idea of doing something with it, with the idea of actually accomplishing something for the kingdom in moving out and finding our place in the kingdom, when we actually lose our lives in attempting to do this we wake up and find that the tooth is gone and the things which we were worrying about are gone and we emerge with the happiness and joy of service, the other things being absolutely insignificant, as those who have served the church will confirm.

I think they will stand with me today when I make the statement that in most cases the disappointment and hours of darkness have passed and today they are happy and contented, the other things having become absolutely insignificant.

The great object in life is that we do the will of God. If we could just get that down in our souls that after all the one and only purpose for which we were created is that we might do the will of God, if we will only do the will of God we will be surprised to find that all these things that we worry about and all of these discouragements and disappointments will so blend into the task of moving forward, that they will pass into insignificance and we find that the one big thing in life is the satisfaction of knowing that we have truly spent our lives in attempting to do the will of God.

I also like to look back and to appreciate something of the attitude which Jesus took toward life. To Jesus, the man of Galilee, life offered an opportunity of dreaming a great dream, of dreaming that dream and then giving his entire life that that dream might come true.

Most of us dream our dreams and sometimes there we stop. We fail to appreciate the thrill of working at this, the greatest task in life. We fail to appreciate the thrill of working with others engaged in a similar task. We fail to appreciate the great opportunity of working with God that the kingdom might come forth. A worth while life will never be a crossless life. If your life moves along like a song free from any hampering causes, free from any unpleasant and perhaps actual disappointments then beware lest your life become not worth while. There never will be a crossless life, there never will be a crossless church for such would be worthless. And yet if we can only lose ourselves in the thrill of this great object, we can expect that hand in hand with God we will be lifted above these discouragements. The testimony is that we are lifted above this realm to the plane of life truly worth living, above the discouragements which life brings to us. Upon that plane we face our problems and they become merely incidental in the prospect of achievement.

I am wondering what we may expect a life of service to bring. I know no better way to answer that other than to answer it out of my own experience. I believe my own experience is typical of most everyone's who has tried to throw this strength in avenues of service. I grant in the beginning that service in the church means long hours of preparation, long hours of labor, long hours of discouragement, long hours of disappointment. It means nights in Gethsemane, and on trial before the modern Pilate. It means going through much, but is that all it means? No. That is only the incidental. Beyond that it means hours of satisfaction, it means hours of an ever strengthening faith, of peace. It means hours of transfiguration.

The Missionary Hen

*Brother and Sister
G. T. Griffiths with the Missionary Hen.*

Just about seven years ago on a cold Sunday morning in February, the snow covering the ground, Brother Gomer T. Griffiths, preaching in the Kirtland Temple, deplored the fact, among other things, that there were so few homes of the Saints in which could be found either the church papers or the three standard books of the church. He also spoke concerning the paying of tithes and offerings, seeking to impress upon the Saints the necessity of obedience to this phase of the Lord's law. He suggested that if they could not otherwise afford to get these publications to get a hen and dedicate her to the Lord, put a setting of eggs under her and with the increase they would not only be able to get such papers and books but also pay tithes and offerings.

Monday morning about six o'clock, Brother Joseph Biggs starting out to work, after backing his car out of the garage into the roadway was surprised to find a bewildered red hen in the deep snow in the road. He got out of the machine, picked the hen up in his arms and, walking across the lawn, tapped on the window for his wife who came to the window and took the hen into the kitchen. After feeding the hen she put it outside. In an hour or so she heard a tapping, tapping on the window pane; going to the window she again took Mrs. Bidy in, who, now having decided to make her home with these good Saints, also decided to do her part in the home-making by laying a nice large egg in a nest provided for the purpose in the corner of the kitchen.

In the meantime, Sister Biggs inquired around and finding no one who had lost a red hen, decided to keep her. Every day thereafter she continued to jump up on the window ledge and by her tapping on the window pane announce to Sister Biggs the fact that she was again ready to make a contribution toward the family upkeep. This she continued to do for several weeks, at the end of which time Mrs. Bidy made it known that she was tired of living alone as to her kind and that if Sister Biggs would provide the nest and the eggs she would do the rest. She was also very particular as to just where that nest should be, and suitably settled there, she sat for twenty-one days. Each day, after being put outside for awhile for exercise and feeding, she announced her readiness to return to her job by tapping on the window pane. At the end of the twenty-one days, what joy and contentment thrilled her upon finding under her wings something in the neighborhood of fourteen downy yellow chicks. Oh, the joy of accomplishment! The weeks that followed were filled with happiness for Mother Bidy; teaching her babies to eat and drink; teaching them to dust themselves as they lay under an old apple tree in the dust on a lazy summer afternoon; teaching them obedience to come at her call at the least sign of danger.

And thus the days grew into weeks and the weeks into months and Mother Bidy's offspring were full-fledged hens or roosters as the case might be. Sister Biggs was not only able to pay some tithing but also to get such papers and books as she desired, to say nothing of the fowls that were given for church suppers and those that entered the ministry in the way of a dinner for the missionaries.

The winter coming on, Sister Biggs made plans to spend the winter in a home about a mile from her own home; however, she took the little red hen with her. Came June and Mrs. Bidy again announced the fact that she would like to raise another family. Sister Biggs was unable to arrange for this at the place she was now staying so she arranged with Sister Griffiths to take her. Sister Griffiths lived just across the street from Sister Biggs' own home. Mother Bidy was placed on a setting of eggs in a nest made for her on Sister Griffiths' enclosed back porch, with which nest Mother Bidy was perfectly satisfied. The next day Sister Griffiths turned her outdoors for her exercise and feeding, watching her so as to have the screen door open for her to return to the eggs. The time being up, Sister Griffiths went to the door but Mrs. Bidy was not in sight; she went outdoors and looking across the street discovered Mother Bidy over at her old home, up on the window ledge, tapping, tapping at the window pane. So Sister Griffiths had to go over and get her and return her to the nest. At the end of the twenty-one days Mother Bidy again presented her owner with a fine flock of baby chicks. This meant more tithing, more offerings, more fowl for church suppers, and more chicken dinners for any fortunate missionary who might happen to come along.

And thus year after year Mother Bidy has done her bit to help on the work of the Lord until now she is about eight years of age. In the fall of 1933, Sister Biggs presented Mother Bidy and twelve chicks to Sister Griffiths and so now the little red hen is 200 miles away from her Kirtland home and finding life very interesting on a forty acre farm at Uniopolis, Ohio, where she is still doing her bit by depositing an egg each day in the nest provided her for that purpose.

And no doubt if she lives until the spring of 1935 she will raise another family and thus will the good work go on and on.

tion. The very power of God shall be yours. It means hours of enlightenment, it means inspiration in which the sweet spirit of almighty God shall touch your soul. It means hours with God in your life. There shall be hours which make the price absolutely negligible, hours in which one is caused to feel that that which they have given makes them a debtor to God.

Then it is that we begin to understand something in the significance of the statement that "he that findeth his life shall lose it and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it," because we are willing to lose ourselves unreservedly in the task, when we lose ourselves in the great redemptive task of the kingdom on earth.

And my prayer is that we may find the strength as we face life to sense that the shadow of the cross does stand out before us but yet to understand and to know that once we have submerged our own individual interests in the interest of the kingdom that that price and those disappointments and discouragements, in fact the entire weight of that cross becomes insignificant in the life beauty and happiness and joy which life has in store. May we be able to face life, recognizing that the worth-while life is a life which faces its cross, which faces its problems, its responsibilities and the life which faces them hand in hand with God in relation to our every act and to the work of the kingdom.

has his stewardship in one form or another from babyhood to manhood and on into eternity. The first thing each one must do is to recognize his stewardship. We must not permit ourselves to become so dependent on the Lord that we ask him to give us needed tools which are already in our hands. We must be willing to do the hard work necessary to discover and perfect these talents.

God has withheld from us no good thing—even sparing not His only Son. He has enriched our lives with a thousand gifts. He calls us to faithful stewardship, to the full consecration of personality and possessions to Him. Are we ready to respond joyously, with all that we have, to that call? Are we ready and willing to develop the stewardship of our talents to the fullest extent of our ability and lay them on His altar?

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Is it taking God's name in vain, to use it as an expletive in the pulpit?

It seems clear that to use the name of Deity is condemned in such cases as suggested in the question. To uselessly, carelessly, or profanely use it is not in accord with scriptural teachings. Jesus teaches us to "hallow" (reverence) the name (Matthew 6: 9), and to "swear not at all" (Matthew 5: 34). The Apostle James (5: 12) forbids us to swear by any oath whatever. It is not necessary to use the name viciously in order to break these commands, as an oath, or to swear, means to utter or declare with an appeal to the name of Deity, and any useless or unnecessary mention of the name indicates lack of proper reverence.

That the ancient church took this view is clearly stated in modern revelation, which tells us that they avoided too frequent repetition of the name by using the name of Melchisedec to designate the "holy priesthood, after the order of the Son of God." It explains:

"Out of respect or reverence to the name of the Supreme Being, to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name, they, the church, in ancient days, called that priesthood after Melchisedec, or the Melchisedec priesthood."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 1.

For such reasons as indicated, it is reprehensible to use it in joking, telling stories with no reverent object in view, or in anger or mirth. Great care is taken to prevent the improper use of the name of Deity over the radio, because of the reverence in which it should be held.

Will there be marriage, or children be born, during the millennium?

Jesus tells us that in the resurrection (Matthew 22: 30) they do not marry, and as the millennium is to be after the resurrection (Revelation 20: 4), it appears that God has provided something quite different than our earthly custom in this respect. Mark records the words of Jesus thus:

"Ye do err therefore, because ye know not and understand not the scriptures, neither the power of God. For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels of God who are in heaven."—Mark 12: 28, 29. Inspired Version.

We are told that God made them male and female, but that all had been created spiritually before they were upon earth (see Genesis 2: 5, 6, 9, 11). Some believe that in the resurrection all will have their divinely created mate, and that the mistakes of marriage will be a thing of the past. They believe that Paul's statement that "there is neither male nor female" in Christ (Galatians 3: 28) means that God makes no difference between them in the covenant of salvation.

Whether or not children will be born in the millennium is not exactly stated, but it is plainly declared that there will be children there (see Isaiah 11: 6, 8; 65: 20, 23. Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10; 63: 13). Some of these children will be unweaned, but whether they will be resurrected, or living at the coming of Christ, is not stated. If all the infants and little children who ever lived on earth are to be in the millennium, it is estimated that they would number nearly forty billions of children. But God may have provisions beyond anything we have yet conceived, which must remain to us a mystery in this life.

May a priest be in charge of a meeting if an elder is present?

Doctrine and Covenants 17:10 states that he may do so "when there is no elder present," and may "assist the elder" in all the duties there named. This seems to indicate that it is the elder's right to determine this matter (if no higher authority is present) where no organization has elected one to preside. But the law provides also that a branch may sustain a priest as its presiding officer (120: 2) if it so elect, in which case the one elected would have the right to preside over that branch during the time for which he is authorized to serve.

The Readers Say---

The Auditorium Missionary Effort

We believe you have with us a deep and mutual interest in the Church Auditorium, contributing as you have to its erection and maintenance, although it is still unfinished. As official guides in the building we carry for you a responsibility, not only of explaining the construction, purpose and greatness of the Auditorium but the sacredness and truthfulness of the blessed restored gospel which the building composed of scientifically organized materials of stone, cement, steel, etc., represents; housing as it does all the general church officials in convenient rooms, besides ample provisions for thousands to attend special conferences and other helpful activities of the church. It is heartening to hear the young and middle aged Saints declaring, at times, their intention of hastening the paying of present indebtedness and completing the massive structure.

The claim is rightly made that the Auditorium foyer chapel and office is one of the greatest evangelizing possibilities of the church. During the past sixteen months (July 1, 1933 to October 31, 1934) ten thousand five hundred and one visitors and tourists from many states and some foreign countries have registered, while hundreds do not record their names. Of this number a score of different religious faiths are represented every month, who learn for the first time of the great Restoration movement by angelic visitation, authorization and direction. And their interest is evidenced, in part, by the purchasing of church books, tracts, etc., as we have sold over a thousand dollars worth to them, including four hundred and fifty copies of that very valuable book so well known to the Saints, The Three Bibles Compared. Of those securing copies were a newspaper reporter and author of Paris, France, a missionary of South Africa, a Bible salesman and a prominent Jewish Rabbi of Dallas, Texas. The Utah Church people buy the greatest number, as they sense more keenly the inspiration and comparison values of the Inspired Version by Joseph the Seer than Protestants, Catholics and others do. We stress the sale of the book as a missionary and educational work for home and individual study. During these months thousands of tracts for free distribution have been bought of the Herald Publishing House, from cash donations by visitors, while the Saints in Zion have generously given large numbers of used Heralds, Sabbath school papers, etc., making it possible to put in the hands of visitors over thirty-five thousand pieces of literature in neat rolls of four to six in a bundle. Surely good will result to our blessed gospel work from these efforts, and also by correspondence with some, an interesting contact is still kept up.

November 1, 1934.

Let Us Trust in Him

Well do we realize that there is much for the Saints of God to do, and great is the task which lies before us. We must trust in him who is divinely strong.

Saints, only by application and righteous everyday living can we dare hope to reach our goal.

The work of God moves on and it is up to us as individuals whether we stay in the race or not.

I pray that we may become more submissive to his will and way, from day to day, looking to him in every time of need, in prosperity as well as in want, trusting always in his promises. They are sure if we do our part.

Review of Missionary Activities

After the close of last General Conference and when our assignment read once more, "Nauvoo District," we were soon getting ready to begin our work. However, our first efforts were to fulfill a promise made during the conference to call at Cameron, Missouri, where we held forth, May 5, and while there were permitted to induct two into the church through baptism. Then on to Bevier where we spent a few days, also at Macon from where we were called to Iowa City to be with and minister to the need of one of the family who was being detained there for an operation.

Our district conference was the next gathering that took our attention. This was held at Fort Madison and a goodly representation from the district was present. Bishop Wildermuth was with us, and his services were well received by all in attendance, and there was a good degree of the Spirit present from the opening until the close.

We next spent a week with our group at Keokuk, and while the weather was extremely hot during the first part of July, our membership there responded to the service, and we felt good in giving to them some of the things and hope held out in the gospel.

In due time came the reunion at Nauvoo, which has been reported to the Herald, and all we would add is that it was one of the most outstanding experiences it has ever been our pleasure to witness, as from beginning to end, there was a real feast of spirituality manifested. After the close of this gathering, it was our privilege to be with and enjoy one of a similar nature in the Des Moines Reunion.

Shortly after, we returned to our field in the southern part of Missouri, from where we were called in May to Macon and Bevier, spending some time among our membership there and occupying as duty and opportunity seemed to warrant. We also made a visit to Higbee where in days gone by, a branch prospered. Although the campfires have died out as far as an organization is concerned, we have quite a number of members who reside there, and as we visited from home to home and tried to give what encouragement we could by recalling experiences, there seemed to be given increased faith to some who have been loyal and true through the years and are still holding fast to the rod of iron.

Our next visit was at Moberly, where we called upon and administered to those who felt the need thereof, and looked up some who had been inducted into the fold not long since but felt isolated, as they had not been visited by any of our people for quite some time.

Leaving there, we were soon at Huntsville where several of our number reside; but here, too, no services are held. However, we did get most of them together for one service and advised them to see that they meet and mingle occasionally in some sort of a gathering where they may take up a course of study to keep in touch with the trend of the church. While they are denied the privilege of meetings, we found tokens of real life among some, that even those where branches are, would do well to imitate. To illustrate, this statement was made, "When I have been reading the Herald of how God is moving among his children and giving of his Spirit, I have felt that kindling influence to that extent that my soul has burned, and I have felt that no matter what might come, I am going to be more careful and more diligent in seeing to it that all I owe is paid in, no matter what the cost!"

Returning to Bevier, we occupied there over a Sabbath and then went into Chariton County, where another group of our people are left without a shepherd. As time and weather would permit, we called on as many as we could and were well received, finding some still in the faith keeping in touch with the church by having the Herald in their home.

After this visit, I returned to Macon for the next Sunday and occupied as best I could, being present for their business meeting on the following evening.

Our next stop was at Lakenan where we visited in the home of an isolated family for two days and found the faith of former days still one of the uppermost things in the hearts and minds of this family. Then agreeable to promise, we wended our way to New London, Missouri, where a request had come that we baptize the youngest born in the O. L. Peters home. And so on Friday afternoon, September 22, we baptized Betty Jane in a quiet secluded spot in Salt River, only the immediate family being present. The same evening we drove to Hannibal and held a cottage meeting when she was confirmed. Leaving there the next day, we came to Ottumwa for the services of the twenty-fourth. Here we were kindly received and on the following evening were in attendance at their regular business session, when the items necessary were dispatched without heat or friction, and progress was manifested.

Our next call was on the Saints at Burlington when they held their homecoming and rally day, September 30. A goodly number participated in the services which will no doubt linger in the minds of those present as they recall the sermons delivered by President E. A. Smith and Richard Baldwin who also began a series of revival services that evening. The next day found us at Nauvoo, where we were in attendance at their regular business session that evening, and here, too, seemed to be a spirit of unity of desire to move forward.

Crossing over the river the next evening, found us at Montrose where a meeting had been announced, and we spoke to those assembled. The interest seemed not to be waned among the faithful few, of whom this branch is composed. The next day our attendance had been requested at Fort Madison at their annual meeting in the evening, and here, too, we found a desire for the onward progress of the work manifested and the business was conducted in the spirit of fellowship and good will. On the following Sunday, we were blessed with an unusual degree of divine favor when the Saints assembled for their sacrament service. From reports we have been informed that this was also true in other branches. We spent the next evening again in attendance at the services in Burlington, and were glad to note a continued increase in attendance and interest in the services being held and are hopeful of their outcome.

While there this time, we were invited to the home of a nonmember who is afflicted with failing eyesight. On a former occasion, we had visited her and had been requested to administer which we did. On this occasion, she was desirous of us having prayer with her and requested that we present her needs to our membership, as she believed we were a God-fearing and earnest praying people. After the service that evening, we were next permitted to visit in the home of some of our people who live at Mount Pleasant.

We returned to Ottumwa, October 13, and the next day were in attendance at the day's service, occupying as the needs seemed to warrant. There we held services for a number of nights.

Wherever we have gone, there has been a kindly welcome among both members and nonmembers for which we are grateful. On numerous occasions we have felt the enlightening influence and quickening power which we feel assured can come only from the Father of light. There have been times when we have witnessed some outstanding manifestations of the Spirit's power, as we have tried to fill the tasks allotted.

Ready to Obey the Gospel

I have been a reader of the Herald for the past three months, and I can truthfully say that it has brought me some very thoughtful considerations. I am a daughter of M. E. Roberts who has been a member of the church for over forty years. My mother was baptized by Elder Hubert Case in November, 1925, at Sperry. I was with her on that trip. I liked Brother Case's sermon and he impressed me as being different from most preachers, but I was only fourteen at that time and his was the first Latter Day Saint sermon I had heard. I scarcely realized what it all meant, and I was not baptized.

But now I feel that all I need to become a member of the church is the ordinance of baptism. I am a strong believer in the gospel, for I have been taught the doctrine all my life.

Let me relate an experience in my life which I hope will help other young people. I was married November 7, 1927, and five years, five months and twelve days later, my husband died. During our brief married life we had the opportunity of attending church only a few times. Once we went to Tulsa, twice to Sperry, and on one occasion we attended a basket dinner at Skiatook. My companion was a firm believer in the Latter DaDy Saint doctrine, and before he died was ready for baptism. When he closed his eyes in death, I hardened my heart toward God for it seemed unfair to me that my husband should pass on when his soul was crying to be saved. When he was dying, he besought me to repent and to be baptized. He was sure that I would be spared to serve the Lord.

I am thankful that I am ready now to keep that promise, that in my heart I have repented, and wish to be baptized at the first opportunity. I pray that God has forgiven my sins. I ask your prayers, dear Saints, that I may not have to wait much longer to join the church.

To the young people let me say from my own experience that if you are seeking after worldly pleasures and at the same time after God you are sure to turn one way or the other—you cannot serve two masters. You must choose between the worth while and that which is not worth while.

Happy to Hear of Old Friends

I was happy to read in a letter from Springfield, Missouri, a few weeks ago, mention of Elder Henry Sparling and his work. Brother Sparling was the first elder to bring the gospel to southern Missouri. He united my husband and me in marriage. How I would love to hear him preach once more!

I read the Herald from cover to cover. It has much for my hungry soul. There has never been, so far as I know, an elder of the church near Glencoe, and we have lived here fourteen years.

We always pray for the advancement of the Lord's kingdom here on earth.

Decatur, Illinois

These Saints enjoyed a two-day visit with Elder F. T. Mussell October 29 and 30.

The women's department deserves much credit for its untiring efforts. Through bake sales, suppers, and a Christmas saving which they have each year, they have contributed financially to the support of the church.

Mrs. Julia Dennis and Joseph Reed, of Montrose, Iowa, were married November 6, at the home of Mrs. David Stevenson, at Carthage, Illinois, Elder F. T. Mussell officiating. Decatur Branch will miss a loyal and active member. Sister Reed has been supervisor of the women's department for the past five years. The couple will make their home at Montrose.

Rally day services were well attended. The juniors had charge of the morning program. In the afternoon the young people's class gave a program and Delmar Jones, from Taylorville, Illinois, gave a short talk. District President Arthur Henson also talked. The theme of the day was "In Everything Give Thanks." A number from Taylorville, Illinois, were present.

Apostle J. F. Garver and Missionary L. G. Holloway were at Decatur for one evening, November 13. The former preached an inspiring sermon.

The Saints of this branch looked forward to Central Illinois district conference at Beardstown, November 17 and 18.

Annual business meeting of Decatur occurred September 10, and Elder O. C. Henson was chosen pastor, to be assisted by Elder O. C. Johnson.

Port Huron, Michigan

The church is moving forward in this lake-side city of thirty-five thousand, though with less speed than workers desire, their claims justify, and times and conditions demand. Good attendance and interest have been maintained in all activities, with the largest attendance at the Sunday evening preaching services.

This branch was favored with the presence and message of President F. M. Smith who occupied the pulpit a Sunday evening while returning from Cash Reunion in August, 1933. His sermon and presence were an inspiration and confidence builder to the large congregation. Apostle D. T. Williams has periodically delivered forceful lectures on current problems to large audiences of members and friends.

February 1, of this year, came President F. M. McDowell for an all too brief period of four days. The Saints cannot too highly praise nor too deeply appreciate the forceful and authoritative message and ministry he brought to the branch, and the challenge he issued to the local ministry. In addition to a full program of public services Brother McDowell personally interviewed nearly all the forty ministers of the branch, and from them received pledges of renewed devotion to a divine ministry.

Sunday, February 4, the priesthood met with President McDowell in a fervid and reassuring devotional service at 8 a. m., and each bore public testimony of his desire to serve the church to the best of his ability through his ministry. At 9 a. m., an impressive ordination and sacrament service was conducted by President McDowell, Apostle D. T. Williams and Pastor William Patterson. At this service Joseph O'Brien and J. Elmer Davis were ordained to the office of elder.

District President William Grice and Elder James W. Davis, of Detroit, have recently occupied the pulpit.

In the month of June thirteen children were baptized in a impressive and meaningful ceremony. For several weeks the pastor conducted a class with parents and children in preparation for the sacred rite. On Children's Day the church was tastfully decorated, particularly the large platform and the alcove which canopies the baptismal font. The ballistrade and pulpit furniture were moved to make possible an unobscured vision of the font, and flowers, ferns, and palms enhanced the scene. A carpet hedged with fern fronds led to the open font, petals floated on the waiting waters, and the open lid of the font covered with artificial grass and flowers made vivid the burial. To this watery grave came these white-gowned, potential Zion builders. Two weeks later (following a second period of instruction in accordance with Doctrine and Covenants 17:18) these young people were confirmed in a special and solemn ceremony, and on the first Sunday in July partook together their first communion.

Since July, 1932, fifty-five have been received by baptism into the branch which now numbers six-hundred and five members.

Through the cooperation of the many and the sacrifices of the few they have been able to improve their church plant.

Some time ago the women, under the direction of Mrs. Mae (Engel) Locke had the main auditorium paneled and redecorated. Later the Fellowship Class provided for the sanding and varnishing of the main floor, and several of the men rearranged the seating so as to increase the seating capacity of the building. The grounds, too, have been greatly improved with rebuilding of lawns, laying of curbing and driveway, and the planting of flowering shrubs around the entire building. Recently a more adequate heating system has been installed which necessitated increasing the boiler room. This work was also done by the generous labors of the men, which was made possible by the liberal contributions of materials and money by minister and member.

Through the unremitting efforts of Elder J. N. Muir, bishop's solicitor, the branch continues to give increasingly in tithes and offerings to the church. During the year 1933 the per capita tithing of the branch was $3.20.

The annual business session convened the first Monday in September, and the following leaders were installed for the year: Pastor, High Priest William Patterson; church school director, Elder W. L. Phillips; senior supervisor, Elder A. E. Ledsworth; children's division, Mrs. William Patterson; women's leader, Mrs. M. Liston; treasurer, Deacon Carl Muir, and secretary, William McGruer. These are assisted by other officers and workers.

A successful priesthood banquet to which were invited the ministers and their companions, of Sarnia, Canada, and Saint Clair, Michigan, branches, was conducted Friday, November 2. They were fortunate in having Apostles F. H. Edwards and D. T. Williams, and District President William Grice at the gathering to deliver appropriate after-dinner speeches to over eighty guests. They are agreed that this is but the first banquet which shall be annually held prior to the homecoming.

The homecoming convened at 10:30 a. m. Saturday with an address by District President William Grice. At 2:30 and 7:30 p. m. Apostle Edwards conducted lecture class periods. Sunday was a full day: At 9 a. m., the Lord's Supper was served, and after a brief intermission a devotional service was conducted until noon. At 2:30 and 7 p. m., Apostle Edwards delivered sermons, and at three-forty-five he conducted a discussion session. His subjects were, "Authority in Religion," and "God, Send Us Men."

The Sunday evening service brought the largest gathering in the church for a long time, and Brother Edwards delivered a forceful sermon to his attentive listeners.

Chicago, Illinois

First Church, 4416 West Gladys Avenue

H. T. McCaig, A. O. Skinner, J. A. Jaques, and F. E. Bone were in charge of the October sacrament service for this congregation. Mary Lou Webb was blessed by Frank Almond and F. E. Bone; Robert Charles Webb by L. V. Butterworth and J. W. Pettersson; Phebe Ann Ernst by H. T. McCaig and A. O. Skinner. Harry Passman was the speaker the following Sunday.

This congregation was host to the Northeastern Illinois district conference, October 19, 20, and 21. Apostles J. F. Garver and D. T. Williams and District Missionary R. E. Davey were among the guests. Saints of Hammond, Indiana, attended their first conference with Northeastern District, having been recently transferred from another district. The church was filled to overflowing.

C. A. Edstrom was the morning speaker, October 28, and Pastor H. T. McCaig and J. W. Pettersson, respectively, were the morning speakers for the following Sundays.

Lois Pendleton and Dean Tannahill were baptized the morning of November 11, by C. O. Bullard, and were confirmed by H. T. McCaig and F. E. Bone. This being Armistice Day there was a short memorial program, and Sister Margaret Bullard sang "There Is No Death."

The North Side group, and West Suburban group of the department of women held a union meeting at the church, October 2, after a three-month summer vacation. Sister Carrie Ballinger gave an interesting talk, "The Second Coming of Christ." Luncheon was served by one of the groups, and plans for future work were discussed.

Brother and Sister Marion Langton are the parents of a baby girl born October 20, and a son was born to Brother and Sister Fred Rezabek, November 11.

Annual homecoming was celebrated with a dinner and program November 6.

The Sunday evening hour is being devoted to class work.

The choir journeyed by auto to Hinsdale and sang several anthems for the Saints there, October 28.

Women of Louisville, Kentucky, Hard at Work

The aim of the women of Louisville Branch, Kentucky, for the coming year is "A Church Complete." They do not intend to go into debt and have large interest payments to worry about.

During the past year they have been busy. Under the leadership of Sister Alma Edwards they have met twice a month to study and discuss ways of helping the branch financially toward completing the church building. The branch now meets in the church basement. Sister Kathryn Gahafer is the ways and means chairman. The women devote a period of study to the Doctrine and Covenants.

Through their work thus far this year they have been able to turn to the presiding deacon a sum of $127, to be applied to the building fund.

On February 22, they had a cafeteria supper, and during June, July, and August they held lawn fetes. At the fete in August they were given the cooperation of everyone. The Louisville Post Office Band came to entertain. Mr. J. J. Fields, superintendent of mails in Louisville, was present. W. G. McDaniels, an undertaker who has charge of most of the funerals in the Saints' church, loaned them chairs for the lawn. The Reverend W. R. Manion, pastor of the Baptist Church, loaned material for tables. Wholesale grocers donated articles which were sold.

A harvest festival was held October 14, and an offering of more than thirty-three dollars was taken up and presented to the deacon for the building fund. The women are still busy selling sponges and canned goods. They feel that during these times this is a sum for which to be grateful. The money is raised by fair profit, and in the observance of the Word of Wisdom in suppers, etc., they feel blessed.

The Saints are hopeful and feel the influence of the spirit in their meetings.

Local members were saddened recently by the passing of Sister Hazel Burwell, one of their workers.

Fresno, California

2412 Clay Street.—A number of young people from this branch attended the youth convention at Sacramento, and reported a wonderful time. They returned with a stronger desire to be of more service to the church.

Elder J. F. Wiles is conducting missionary services each Sunday evening to exceptional crowds. He is enjoying good liberty.

The church is generally filled on Sundays and has large attendance on Wednesday evenings also.

The last Sunday of September was rally day and promotion exercises were held in the children's and intermediate groups. Several certificates were given. Tulare Branch and Dinuba Mission were represented and a goodly number of friends from Stockton, also several Fresno nonmembers.

Sisters Elva Sturges and Hazel Blohm, two active sisters, visited Fresno for three days, bringing the Spirit of the Master with them. Classes were held in

Quindaro Church congregation, Kansas City Stake, Elder H. A. Higgins, pastor

Briefs

Belvidere, Illinois, Saints were hosts to members who came from Chicago, Rockford, Elgin, De Kalb, and rural districts for rally day services November 11. Beginning with a nine o'clock prayer and testimony meeting, the day's services were held in the Owl's Hall on South State Street. Outstanding contributions to the program were made by District President C. A. Edstrom, J. A. Jaques, director of religious education for Northeastern Illinois District, A. O. Skinner, bishop's agent, Charles Homuth, and Dorothy Pinkerton. And the dinner served at noon by Belvidere women, added to the comfort and pleasure of everyone. William Pinkerton is president of Belvidere Branch.

Members of this district are looking forward to the proposed 1935 reunion, to be held at Belvidere.

Elder Joseph Lane has spent some time among Moorhead, Iowa, Saints during the past few weeks, visiting the homes of the members and occupying the pulpit at the church. He is a welcome visitor.

London Branch, Ontario, celebrated its eighteenth anniversary November 18 and 19, and it was the "best in many years." President Elbert A. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, the guest speaker, gave inspiring sermons, and the church was crowded at all services, visitors coming from all Western Ontario, Toronto, Windsor, Detroit, Saint Thomas, Stratford, and other points. Brother Smith spoke at three services Sunday and remained for the anniversary banquet Monday night. John E. MacGregor is pastor of London Branch.

Bemidji, Minnesota, young people have organized an "Up and Go" Club.

Harvest Thanksgiving services have been held in a number of English branches, according to the November issue of The Southern England and Wales District Herald. Outstanding among these was the service of the Saints in the historic old city of Exeter among the hills and valleys of Devonshire; at Gloucester, October 21, and at the North East Manchester Branch September 30.

Louisville, Kentucky, women are industriously at work on their year's program. Led by Sister Alma Edwards, they are aiming to "A Church Complete" for their branch. Their industry has made it possible for them thus far this year to turn a sum of $127 to their presiding deacon, for the building fund. And in every undertaking these workers endeavor to gain the good will of all toward the church.

the afternoons and evenings which were beneficial to all. The Saints were left with a greater desire to "magnify our calling" by study and work.

Edwin Burdick, of Sacramento, who represents the bishopric of Northern California District, has called at Fresno twice lately. His zeal is contagious.

On the evening of September 29, Sister Marilyn Gerber, of Independence, Missouri, was married to Brother David C. Elliott, of Fresno, at the church. Brother Robert Hurley, of Dinuba, read the service. The bride was attended by Ruth Bolt, also of Independence, and was given in marriage by her brother, Paul Gerber. Harold Kniveton acted as best man. A reception was held at the home of the bridal couple after the wedding.

Since then Brother Paul Gerber and Sister Ruth Bolt were quietly married at the home of Brother and Sister A. S. Votaw, Elder Votaw reading the ceremony.

Brother Votaw also officiated at the marriage of Sister Cora Kniveton. Her husband is not a member of the church, and was not generally known to the Saints, but he is fast making friends.

Brother Raymond Calton suffered a broken leg in an accident some few ron, of the district presidency, have been an inspiration to more effective work in this branch. He ably conducted the installation service on rally day.

Riverside Mission, California

Saints of Riverside Mission were happy, November 6, to be guests at the wedding of Sister Jessie Nichols and Brother Will A. Boren, who were united in marriage by Priest Arden D. Logeman, in charge of the work of the mission. The ceremony was solemnized in the home of Brother and Sister Theodore Peck, and a reception followed.

The meetings of Riverside Saints continued faithfully throughout the summer with good attendance.

The ladies' aid continues its good work. Their main item of endeavor is to come in contact with nonmembers and interest them in the church through association. This group made a large contribution of groceries and foodstuffs to the recent festival of San Bernardino Branch.

Recently these Saints saw the Lord's hand at work in the healing of Mrs. Heinold, a nonmember who has been weeks ago. He is about on crutches now, but the cast has not been removed from the injured member.

A little son was born to Sister Zelma Harrison, of Fresno, who will be remembered as Miss Zelma Andrews.

A son was also born to Sister Altha Richardson, of Sanger. Sister Richardson will be remembered as Miss Altha Roberts, of Fresno.

Brother Clifford Rowley, of Button Willow (near Bakersfield) is acting as church school secretary and is attaining proficiency in his office, bringing the work to a higher standard. He is attending the State College at Fresno.

Sister Lillie Jennings has been able to interest a few in a teacher training class in "Recreation."

All departments and classes are functioning in good order.

The two visits of Brother J. A. Dam-kind enough to offer her home as the meeting place of the group for some months past. She had been severely stricken with paralysis which became painful. She consented to be administered to by Elder Boren. Special prayers had been held for her recovery, and through the united faith and earnest prayers of each member, she was miraculously healed. The Saints rejoice at this wonderful blessing.

Brother Logeman is assisted in his missionary work by various elders from neighboring branches. Will Boren, of San Bernardino continues his regular attendance and assistance. Hunter C. Ferguson has also been a visitor. District President W. A. Teagarden, was the speaker the evening of November 13. Frank Lacey, of Ontario was also a recent visitor.

Kansas City Stake

Kansas City Stake held its semiannual conference at Central Church, November 25. Although a cold rain drizzled all day, attendance was large and the strengthening spirit of fellowship was enjoyed throughout.

At the eleven o'clock service Stake President C. G. Mesley spoke on "Foundation Stones and Future Policies of Kansas City Stake," and the Chelsea Choir, directed by Miss Jessie Belle Taylor, sang "Thanks Be to God."

An inspiring ordination and consecration service was held at two in the afternoon, President F. M. McDowell officiating. At this time Elder C. G. Mesley was set apart as stake president. The Saints consecrated themselves anew, being charged to do a greater service for the church. Following this service a splendid concert was presented by stake young people.

Elder John F. Sheehy was the speaker at the evening meeting preceding which the Æolian Chorus, under the direction of Paul N. Craig, gave a concert. Dinner and supper were served by the women at the church, making attendance at all meetings much more convenient.

At the business meeting, November 23, the stake approved the appointment of Elder George Mesley to the office of stake president; Elder C. D. Jellings to associate, and Elder C. E. Wight to the stake high council. Two young men were approved for ordination: Bill Gould to the office of priest, and Walter Zimmerman, deacon. It is with pleasure that the members see these young men taking responsible places in the church.

Central Church

The Heart of America Chapter of the Graceland Alumni Association met November 15, and elected the following officers for 1935: President, Charles A. Allen; vice president, Elizabeth Morgan; secretary, Byrna Sandy; treasurer, Mrs. Clarence Ward. The chapter is looking forward to a year of service in promoting Graceland.

Northeast Church

Elder J. C. Lentell gave his concluding sermon Sunday evening, November 18, to a full house of friends and members.

At the morning worship period Merlin Strong has been giving a series of instructive lectures.

The choir, under the direction of Don Dawson, Mrs. D. Dawson assisting, has been giving excellent service to the meetings.

The young people also have been taking an active part in church activities.

Northeast meetings have been spiritual and uplifting, and it is hoped they will continue so.

The women gave a chili supper November 21.

Elder George Mauzey and wife have returned from Stewartsville, and their support will be appreciated.

Wabash Church, Ontario

This church was builded in 1899, the work of a small band of loyal Saints and workers. Some of these have passed away, others have moved out of the community, but a few remain. Quite a number have been added to the church, and the branch now numbers 116. They were favored a short time ago with visits from Elder Percy Farrow and wife and Elder George Njeim.

Dahinda, Illinois

Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Dossett, of Victoria, Illinois, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in October. The aged sister of Dahinda Saints, "Grandma" Farquer, eighty-five years old, was in attendance at her daughter's fiftieth year wedding function. Five generations were present, and about forty of the immediate relatives gathered at the home for dinner.

Elder R. V. Hopkins was present for the November sacrament service at Dahinda, and a spiritual time was enjoyed. Burt Hopkins and daughter, Joyce, of Princeville, were also present. Brother Roy Hopkins and wife have been visiting relatives at Dahinda and Princeville.

On December 16, a reunion of old-time members will be held at Dahinda church. There are many who once were numbered in this branch whose present addresses are not known. This is an invitation for them to join in the local reunion if it is possible. Written greetings will be welcome if old-time members cannot attend. A history of the branch is being prepared for this event. District President E. R. Davis will be present and other speakers. Among the special features of the day will be included the basket dinner and social time at noon.

The annual business meeting December 15, will take up the election of officers.

Sister Bessie Farquer is recovering from a severe illness.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer visited Hagerman, Idaho, Branch November 15 and 16, and gave them two inspiring and informative sermons.

Brother Byron Stratton, of Carthage, South Dakota, and Brother Walter E. Nash, of Canova, visited with Saints at Wagner, South Dakota, Sunday, November 4, and shared in sacrament service for the first time in ten years. There are four members of the church living in the vicinity of Carthage, and they would welcome the visit of a missionary. They think some good could be accomplished by such a visit. The nearest branch organization is at Wagner, 110 miles away.

Of the Saints at Wagner Brother Stratton writes: "They seem to be prospering under the leadership of Charles Hare, a Lamanite recently ordained to the office of elder. He is assisted by Brother Caldwell, a priest, Cal Crisman, teacher, and Sister W. H. Buhler, clerk. Sister Cieta Finley, a former Graceland student who has been teaching in Wagner for some time, contributes her talent. This group reports ten baptisms in recent months. We enjoyed the spirit of Christian fellowship with these good people."

Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin have just closed three weeks of services at Nevada, Iowa. Sister Baldwin's lectures on religious education were most instructive, and her storytelling to the young very effective. In a masterful way Brother Baldwin presented the gospel principles to a large and appreciative audience.

At the close of the meetings four people were baptized. Two of these are seventy-seven and seventy-nine years old. Brother and Sister George Johnson have been members of two different churches, but they were not content with the gospel teachings of those organizations. They said to Brother Baldwin, "You have that for which we have been looking through the years!"

The presence of Brother and Sister Baldwin has been the source of inspiration, help, and revival to Nevada members.

Hood River, Oregon, young people were hosts at a get-acquainted party November 16, at the home of R. E. Chapman, and the young people of Portland were their guests. For entertainment Hood River members gave a short program under the direction of their officers, and then games were played. Despite unpleasant weather, about twenty-five motored from Portland to Hood River for the evening. Emma H. Howard is president of the Hood River young people.

ing with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dawson, at Dahinda.

The branch is contemplating redecorating the church home. Officers and workers hope to see these much-needed improvements effected very soon. They are praying that the means will be forthcoming.

Independence

Stone Church

Special prayers were offered at the eight o'clock prayer meeting Sunday morning for the series of missionary meetings which opened that night. Elders Vernon Reese, Harry Hattey, and William Ecclestone were in charge of the hour of prayer, and there was a good response from the congregation.

More than a thousand Saints shared in the sacrament service, the last service of this kind in the year 1934, for this congregation. President Elbert A. Smith was in charge, and Apostle Roy S. Budd made the principal address on "First Love." He read Revelation 2: 1-5. Assisting in the stand were Pastor J. F. Sheehy, Elders H. G. Barto, Shankland Arnson, J. E. Vanderwood, and men of the Aaronic priesthood who passed the emblems. Sister T. A. Beck played the organ.

A large congregation was present Sunday night for the opening of a two-week series of sermons by Apostle R. S. Budd. Reading Genesis 1: 1-8 in the Inspired Version of the Bible, Brother Budd presented a splendid sermon on the law and order of God. He followed this on Monday night with an analysis of the transgression of Adam. Later in the series he will preach on sin and God's remedy for sin.

Beginning Sunday night the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, was present to furnish music for the series. John F. Sheehy is in charge of the congregational song services which are uplifting and most helpful. The Saints are responding with enthusiasm to Brother Budd's sermons.

This congregation suffered loss last week in the sudden passing of Brother Leon U. Snow who for several years has been known in Independence as a music lover and helper of all. He was sixty-five years old. For long a sufferer with stomach ulcers, Brother Snow succumbed Friday, November 30, from hemorrhage. He was very active in musical circles of the church, being director of the Junior Auditorium Orchestra which has given numerous concerts in Independence and neighboring churches. On the Sunday before his death he preached at Liberty Street Church in the morning, and operated the stereopticon picture machine in the evening at the Stone Church for Elder J. W. A. Bailey's lecture. His funeral was held at the Stone Church Sunday afternoon, December 2, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Surviving are his wife, Ida L., a son, Jess C. Snow, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, one brother, three sisters, and many friends.

Second Church

A wedding ceremony followed the Sunday morning church school period December 2, when Opal Ravelle and Floyd Clements were united in marriage by Elder J. R. Lentell, pastor of Liberty Street Church.

Pastor A. K. Dillee gave the oblation talk at the sacrament service, and the communion address was by Elder W. N. Inman. This service commemorating the Last Supper, was very helpful, and a goodly number participated in the worship.

Doctor Charles F. Grabske was the evening speaker, basing his discourse on words of Saint Paul. The choir sang "Unto Thee," an anthem, and "Fairest Lord Jesus," Earl Audet directing.

Enoch Hill Church

Thanksgiving service was held at the church on Wednesday evening. Music was furnished by the congregation, by the young women's quartet, and Louise Sarratt at the piano. Pastor H. L. Barto preached the sermon.

A few friends met at the home of Brother and Sister Dick Bullard to celebrate his birthday, November 30.

Joseph Martin was assisted by Dick Bullard and George Whitehead at the morning prayer service Sunday.

Church school and communion services Sunday morning were well attended. In the latter hour three babies were blessed, Edward Russell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Waterman; Carol Lee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Wolf, and Franklin Gene, son of Mr. and Mrs. Willard Carlew, Elders E. E. Thomas, J. E. Martin, and C. S. Warren being spokesmen. Elder J. A. Gillen gave an inspiring talk, and a good spirit prevailed throughout the meeting.

Some singers were chosen from Enoch Hill to sing with the one hundred who will give Handel's "Messiah" at Christmas.

Elder J. A. Gillen was the evening speaker and his theme was "On to Perfection." The choir sang, "Let the Gospel Light Shine Out," and Sister W. L. Young sang "Grateful, O Lord, Am I."

Englewood Church

On Wednesday evening, November 28, a special Thanksgiving service was held. The five baskets of food that had been contributed for distribution to the needy were on display. Mrs. Earl Page gave two appropriate readings. The service was made more impressive by the membership coming to the altar and placing their thanksgiving contributions in an urn.

The sacrament service, Sunday morning, December 2, was well attended.

President Elbert A. Smith was the speaker at the evening hour.

The women are planning an all-day meeting for Wednesday at the home of Sister Glenn Closson.

Far West Stake

The second annual priesthood check-up in the stake was completed recently. During the first two weeks in November, President F. M. McDowell, assisted by Bishop H. L. Livingston and Stake President Ward A. Hougas, contacted personally about one hundred and fifty men of the priesthood. Each man was given three separate consultations, one with each of the ministers mentioned. President McDowell conducted ten class periods for the priesthood. A fine response was given these men.

Elder J. Chas. May in Stake

Elder J. Charles May has been in Far West Stake since October 21, when he commenced a series at Richmond which continued for two weeks with good interest and attendance. From there he went to Kingston and Oakdale territory for about two weeks between the two branches. Again a splendid interest was shown. At Guilford, the weather was not so kind, and bad roads and rain hindered the success of the week's series there although some worth-while contacts were made. Following Thanksgiving, Elder May goes the Ross Grove and Fortescue Branches for a series at each place before Christmas.

In each branch, preliminary visiting has been done, and these series are part of the stake-wide missionary program which has been inaugurated this fall. A very definite report of all visiting is required and Garland C. Snapp has been appointed missionary secretary of the stake to be in charge of the details of this program.

Coming Events

December promises to be an active month with a special stake conference called for December 9, at Cameron for purpose of approving the selection of a counselor by Bishop Henry L. Livingston and also some other ordinations. A stake-wide church school rally is scheduled for the same day at Cameron and an interesting program has been worked out by Sister Eunice Livingston, stake director of religious education.

A priesthood institute has been arranged for December 10 to 14. It is to be held at Stewartsville with two periods each night from seven-thirty to nine-thirty. This week of intensive study and training is planned especially for the younger men of the priesthood although, of course, the older and more experienced men will be welcome. This is an outgrowth of the recent priesthood check-up conducted by Brother McDowell and in harmony with his suggestions.

Stewartsville Activities

Stewartsville was glad to have Elder J. O. Worden, of Kansas City, present November 4, when he gave excellent and helpful talks at the church school period and at the communion service. Brother Worden was visiting his parents, Brother and Sister W. H. Worden. Sister Worden has been ill and confined to her bed for some time.

An interesting sermon was given at the evening hour by the pastor, Elder Z. J. Lewis. The branch was happy also to have Brother Hougas and Bishop Livingston with them the morning and evening of November 18. Each delivered a convincing sermon.

In the afternoon of Sunday, November 4, the Æolian Chorus of Independence, rendered a most beautiful and entertaining concert. The chorus is directed by Paul N. Craig and was assisted by Gomer Cool, violinist, and Mrs. Jo Zelma Taylor, reader, who added much to its beauty and inspiration. The church was well filled with an appreciative audience.

At the educational meeting of the Women's Council Thursday, November 1, the theme was, "Friendliness," around which the program was built by the leader, Sister Frances Mauzey. A. E. McCord conducted the Book of Mormon study. The women have held several all-day meetings recently, with a covered-dish luncheon, after which Brother McCord gave inspiring talks. Quilting and other work was accomplished.

On November 14, President F. M. McDowell, Elder Ward A. Hougas and Bishop Henry L. Livingston held an all-day priesthood meeting at the church with personal consultations in the morning and a class period in the afternoon.

Leonard G. Ehlers has recently been re-chosen director of the young people's division. They expect to effect their organization soon.

Mr. and Mrs. Z. J. Lewis and Misses Carrie and Emma Lewis went to Hays, Kansas, November 14, where they attended a memorial given by the college there in memory of their brother, Will Lewis, who had been president of Hays College for twenty years before his death nearly a year ago.

Guilford Branch

The local O. T. Z. group has sponsored the Sunday night service once a month for the past five months. These services have been unlifting. Young speakers for these services have been Priests Garland Snapp, of King City; Lawrence Keck and Preston Hinderks of Saint Joseph. Others who have helped besides the local talent have been Lily Nelson, of Chicago; Alberta Snapp, of King City, and Alma Hale and Helen Beadnall, of Saint Joseph.

The annual business meeting was held September 16, with Stake President Ward A. Hougas and Bishop Livingston present. The following officers were elected: William T. Ross, president; Dewey Anderson, treasurer and church school director; Leola Torrance, secretary; Oma Ross, chorister; Heman Turner, librarian. Other officers include, W. B. Torrance, home visiting supervisor; Mrs. Dewey Anderson, adult supervisor; Neva Ross, O. T. Z. supervisor; Lavota Jobe, children's supervisor; Mrs. Emma Nelson Reynolds, chairman of women's department.

Guilford was host to the stake O. T. Z. rally Saturday and Sunday, October 27 and 28. This time the crowd numbered about three hundred. The weather was ideal and everyone enjoyed the inspiring talks. Bishop Livingston, Elder Ward A. Hougas, and Evangelist Milo Burnett were guest speakers.

A special priesthood meeting for the northern part of the stake was held at the church Wednesday, November 7. A representative number of the priesthood responded to the call. Brother McDowell, of the First Presidency, Brother Hougas, stake president, and Brother Livingston, stake bishop, were in charge.

Elder J. Charles May held a week's series of missionary meetings November 18 to 25, but many were disappointed in that rain and bad roads prevented them from attending.

Several O. T. Z. members are away at present including Lucy Marie Nelson who entered the Independence Sanitarium School of Nursing; Velma Nelson, who is attending the Hague Beauty School in Maryville; Harold Jobe, who attends school in Maryville and also teaches commerce in the adult education classes in Guilford and Barnard; and Oma Ross, who is teaching music in the adult education classes in King City.

Pastor William T. Ross has been quite ill recently but is reported improving and was able to attend church again.

The women's department has held its monthly devotional meetings, and in September the women were hostesses to the women of the Methodist and Christian churches in an all-day meeting at which four comforts were made for the welfare board.

First Saint Joseph Church

First Church was happy to have President McDowell at the November sacrament service. He gave a challenging theme talk, and an inspiring service was enjoyed. Pastor Ward A. Hougas was the evening speaker.

The O. T. Z. prayer service early Sunday morning was well attended, and an outstanding service was had. Elders Howard C. Timm and Ward A. Hougas were in charge. The O. T. Z.'s held their regular monthly social meeting November 13, when an indoor baseball tournament was played.

The Ul-Lik-U's Players presented their annual fall play at the Y. W. C. A. November 9, to a large audience. The play given was "Mammy's Lil' Wil' Rose," and it has been repeated twice. Mrs. Olive McLean directed the production.

The adult division of the church school had a social evening November 23. A soup supper was served, and the evening was spent in recreation and a program was furnished by the Anti-Can't Class.

A special Thanksgiving service was held the Wednesday evening before Thanksgiving. A special offering was received and a good service was held. The Wednesday prayer services are held regularly with increasing attendance and interest.

Detroit, Michigan

East Side Church

The East Side Zion's Legion met October 20, for their rally day services. Elder Patterson, pastor of Port Huron Branch opened the convention with a sermon, using as his topic, "Remember Who You Are, and a Rotten Youth Cannot Produce a Ripe Old Age." Elder James W. Davis, city pastor, preached in the afternoon to more than a hundred Legionnaires from the following points: Grand Rapids, Dearborn, Monroe, Port Huron, Grosse Pointe, River Rouge, Wyandotte, Roseville, and Rochester, and from Canada, Windsor, Walkerville, and Sandwich.

The day was brought to a close with an impressive banquet at the Hannan Y. M. C. A. where 181 guests were entertained by the speakers; Elder A. E. Boos, master of ceremonies, Elder Gordon Brown, Elder J. W. Davis, Elder H. Patterson, Elder Kenneth H. Greene, and Sister Louise Evans, of Grand Rapids. Besides the group singing directed by Richard Gault, the musical entertainment consisted of a trio and a trumpet solo; Harryette, Verna, and Phylis Schaar's voices blended so well they were asked to give an encore, Mona Knight assisting at the piano. Edward Griggs was the trumpet soloist, Sister Knight accompanying at the piano.

Near the close of the banquet Brother George Hosler, president of East Side's young people, presented to Brother Wilbert Richards, East Side pastor, a set of keys for the marker which the young people had so generously donated to East Side. The marker is emblematic of the sacrifices and hard work of the young people who have endeavored to make their efforts acceptable.

The annual East Side homecoming held October 21, following the young people's rally day, began the day with an impressive prayer service at eight-thirty, more than a hundred twenty-five in attendance. Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith was in charge, assisted by Patriarch G. T. Griffith. The gifts of the gospel were present, Patriarch Griffith, under the power of the Spirit, spoke to a retired missionary, William Davis, father of J. W. Davis. The group priesthood occupied the rostrum accompanied by others of the Melchisedec order, Bruce E. Brown and L. J. Richards.

Patriarch F. A. Smith spoke at the eleven o'clock hour, taking for a topic

"The Necessity of a Christian Life in the Home if the Young Are to Be Saved." At noon a bountiful meal was served by group number five of the women's department, Sister Worden, leader.

The two o'clock hour found Patriarch G. T. Griffith in the stand. He spoke on the "Word of Wisdom." A microphone was installed so that those occupying the lower auditorium could hear. Don Leland followed Brother Griffith and gave a dissertation on Graceland College after which Elder Boos sang a solo, and there was a duet by Sister Henrietta Davis and Elder J. W. Davis.

Sister Rachel Stewart, the oldest member of the East Side group, was presented a bouquet by District President Kenneth H. Greene and commended for her untiring service. Preaching by Elder A. B. Smith followed, his topic being the "Age in Which We Live."

Lunch was served at six o'clock after which City Pastor Elder J. W. Davis spoke at seven-thirty on "Marriage and Divorce."

Moorhead, Iowa

After several months of illness Sister Lottie Kesterson passed away at her home near Whiting, Iowa, September 8. Her funeral service was held in the Methodist Church at Turin, Elder Fred Fry, of Woodbine being the speaker. Sister Kesterson was the granddaughter of Brother and Sister George Montague who were pioneer Saints of this vicinity. She was firm and steadfast to the last, and was made happy in the fact that two of her children, Mrs. Gertrude One-man, of Indianapolis, Indiana, and Verna Kesterson, of Sumatra, Montana, who were assisting in caring for their mother, were baptized about a week before her death by Elder Mark Jensen in the Moorhead church font.

The annual branch business meeting was held September 26, at which time T. O. Strand was reelected branch president, and practically all other officials were also reelected.

T. O. Strand, Mark Jensen, Arnold Adams, Chester Davis, Blair Richison, Irvin Clark, and Ammon McIntyre, of the priesthood, attended the priesthood convention at Woodbine, October 14. And several local young people were in attendance at the young people's convention at Logan a short time ago.

A goodly number assisted in the wood cutting for the church one Saturday recently. Dinner was served in the "aid house," by the women.

The women's department has sponsored several food sales during the summer and autumn for the financial benefit of the branch, and these were well patronized by the public.

Sisters Nellie Larson, May Wilson, and Carrie Clark all have been in various hospitals, but they are now much improved and have returned to their homes.

The birthday socials held the last Friday evening of each month during the past year, have proved successful. Those having birthdays in each month furnish refreshments and have charge of the evening's entertainment. The proceeds from refreshments are turned into the branch treasury. For these and other actions the Saints find their aid building a convenient place to meet.

On Armistice Day the morning preaching service was dispensed with and the Saints met with worshipers in a union service at the Christian Church.

After this service the community was invited to the C. C. C. camp for dinner, and between eight hundred and one thousand people were served. In the afternoon the visitors were entertained by a splendid program and the camp was dedicated.

Hagerman, Idaho

Elder Ward L. Christy gave a series of ten lectures in the church in October on the subject, "Marriage and the Home." He was assisted in his work by Sister Christy who sang, took part in class work, and won many friends by the radiance of her personality.

The coming of these two workers was timely. They found the group saddened by the death of Melvin Condit, twenty-one years of age, taken in his health and vigor by pneumonia. He was a studious young man in church literature. Brother Christy preached the funeral sermon.

The branch held its annual harvest festival and bazaar the evening of November 10, under the supervision of Sister Alice Parks, leader of women. A large crowd was present. Features of the evening were a free program, auction sale of grocery and harvest donations, a candy booth, and a fish pond for the children. The evening was both a social and financial success. A sum of seventy-one dollars was netted for the Church Improvement Fund.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

The Cricket was resurrected on young people's day, October 28. It has been several years since this little newsy paper has been published but it met again with enthusiasm.

Services of this day were entirely in the hands of the young men and women. Although the prayer meeting was not as well attended as they wished, a good spirit was felt by all who did attend.

At the Sunday school hour Grace Wambach read the call to worship and the Scripture; Adolph Edwards offered the prayer, and Viola Preusch told a story.

Harley Butler presided over the morning preaching service; Harold Davis read the Scripture; Arthur Beckman, jr., offered prayer. Norman Preusch, young people's director, talked on "Preparation for Service."

Louie Kuhn preached on "Obedience" in the evening. Lois Hiller read the Scripture and Norman Preusch presided. The Boy Scouts acted as ushers in the evening and the Girl Scouts in the morning.

Music for the day consisted of selections by a young people's choir, under the direction of Esther Shafer, which sang both morning and evening. Eleanor Lewis sang a solo and Bethia Leonard played a piano number. In the evening there were solos by William Leonard and Elsie Wells.

Almost every group in the church school had a halloween party. The adult, young people, and children's division activities were especially successful. If the Saints' spiritual activities keep pace with their other activities, progress will be in evidence.

Breckenridge Mission, Texas

A day most important to the Breckenridge Mission of any since the organization of the church school three years ago was Monday, November 19. Three of the local members were ordained to the priesthood; Brother Paul W. Hemple, priest; G. D. Andes, teacher; and Vern Miller, deacon. Apostle R. S. Budd was here for one day, and Elder W. H. Mannering officiated.

For two years the church school, which was organized by Missionary G. H. Wixom, carried on without a member of the priesthood. A year ago Elder W. H. Mannering came to Breckenridge from San Antonio. He has been pastor of the group since that time.

Brother Andes was one of those instrumental in the organization of the church school, and Brother Miller was baptized by Brother Wixom shortly after the organization. Brother Andes is the present church school director and past adult supervisor. Brother Miller is present treasurer and secretary and past director. Brother Hemple is present adult supervisor and past young people's supervisor.

The group has been active in its work since the coming of Elder Mannering. He has done much preaching to both members and nonmembers in and around Breckenridge. At present he is preaching at a schoolhouse and holding a cottage service on two of the week day nights. Wednesday nights are used for prayer meeting and a class period.

Members of the church school recently had charge of the program for the Parent-teacher Association of the rural school which is attended by some of the Saints' children and where Brother Mannering preaches weekly.

Socials of various sorts have been held by the women's department for the raising of money for local expenses.

To Brother and Sister Vern Miller was born a son on November 6, date of Joseph Smith's birth and of the organization of the Breckenridge Church School.

Saturday, prayer service convened at 10 a. m., preaching at 11, Apostle Budd the speaker. Business meeting a 2:30 p. m., Apostle Budd chairman, assisted by district officers. Reports from branches and groups were read, approved, and spread upon the minutes. Brother Budd commented upon the district work in various places. H. F. Chapin's pastoral report was read, and Blanche Farrar reported as district church school director. B. M. Anderson, pastor of Lincoln Branch, reported orally, and the report of the district secretary-treasurer was read. The time and place of the next district conference were left to the district presidency. In the election of officers B. M. Anderson was chosen president of the district, and empowered to choose his own counselors; Mrs. F. W. Black was sustained secretary-treasurer; Audentia Anderson, sustained chorister; E. N. Byergo sustained bishop's agent; Blanche Farrar sustained district church school director. The remainder of the conference program was presented by Brother Budd. A priesthood meeting followed the business session, and Brother Budd gave instruction and encouragement, outlining plans for better organization in the district by local priesthood. Blanche Farrar talked to the priesthood, advising how they could assist her in church school work. Saturday evening a preaching service was enjoyed, the speaker being Howard C. Timm, of Saint Joseph, Missouri. On Sunday the church school was in charge of the superintendent of Lincoln Branch, Francis Schrunck. Primary classes were in charge of Blanche Farrar; adult and young people's classes met together for a talk by Brother Budd. Apostle Budd was the eleven o'clock speaker. Lunch was served at noon in the basement dining room to 128 guests. Priesthood meeting convened at 1:45 p. m., and prayer service at 2:30 p. m. Apostle Budd presented the recommendation of Francis Schrunck's ordination to the office of elder. This was approved. Brother Schrunck was ordained by Elders Budd, Anderson, and D'Arcy. Elder B. M. Anderson appointed his counselors Francis Schrunck and Otis L. D'Arcy. Brother Budd was again the speaker at the evening service.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—Fall conference opened at 8 p. m., Friday, October 19, at First Chicago Branch, 4416 Gladys Avenue, with a fine program. J. F. Garver and R. E. Davey were in charge of the Saturday 10:30 a. m. prayer meeting. Dinner was served by the women's department in the basement of the church. The business meeting begun at 2 p. m. was in charge of C. A. Edstrom and R. E. Davey. The following district officers were elected: President, C. A. Edstrom; counselors, H. P. W. Keir and J. A. Jaques; treasurer and supervisor, C. C. Simpson; auditing committee, William Keir and Steven Lester; director of religious education, J. A. Jaques; secretary, Mrs. Grace E. Johnson; publicity agent, Edwin T. Whitney. It was moved and seconded that the presidents of the branches in the district act as assistants C. C. Simpson, and that they in their several branches stimulate enthusiasm among the membership to support the district financial program. H. T. McCaig, Clem Evans, and C. C. Simpson were appointed a committee to draft a resolution welcoming the Hammond, Indiana, branch into Northeastern Illinois District. An invitation from Hammond, Indiana, Branch was read in which the June, 1935, district conference was invited to meet with Hammond Saints. This invitation was referred to the district presidency. Arrangements for a proposed 1935 district reunion, to be held at Belvidere, Illinois, were to be left in the hands of the district presidency. The district presidency were to prepare and send a message of condolence to the McDowell family in regard to their mother's death. At 4:30 p. m., Roy F. Healy talked on the subject, "Recreation in the Church." At 7 p. m., Sister Ruby I. Newman gave a talk on "Hymnology." At 8 p. m., D. T. Williams spoke on the text from Psalms 50: 21. Sunday services opened at 8 a. m. with a prayer meeting in charge of C. A. Edstrom and Charles Humuth. At 10 a. m., church school convened. The following subjects were discussed: "The Organization and Administration of the Church School," by J. A. Jaques; "Shepherding the Flock," by H. P. W. Keir; "Story, Telling and its Place in Teaching Children," by Lillian Nelson; "The Church Home and Those Who Worship There," by C. A. Edstrom; "The Youth of Our Day and Their Place in the Program of the Church," by R. W. Smith; "The Use and Appreciation of Gospel Ordinances, Baptism, Ordination, etc.," by Frank B. Amond. Preaching at 11 a. m., by Brother

John F. Garver. At the 2 p. m., forum Brother Garver again spoke on the subject of "The Part Priesthood and Laity Must Play in the Present Program of the Church." At 3:30 p. m., a spiritual sacrament service was enjoyed by a large number of Saints from all parts of the district. During this service Apostle John F. Garver spoke in prophecy to both the priesthood and the laity, admonishing them to be more faithful in the discharge of their duties, to come up higher, and to remain unspotted from the evils of the world. Following the sacrament service the visiting Saints from the district gave a rising vote of thanks to the members and women's department of the First Chicago Branch for their hospitality. A few days later, District President C. A. Edstrom appointed Sister Ruby I. Newman, director of music and sister Dorothy Pinkerton, of Belvidere, Illinois, director of youth for this district.

HALE.—Mary Isabelle Hale was born January 23, 1867. She became the wife of Jacob Hale, who survives her, September 20, 1890. United with the church July 15, 1906, at Boldworth, Iowa, and from that day till her death, she never wavered in her confidence of God, nor faltered in her devotion to his church, or to the duties assigned to her within it. They were her delight, and the labor, endurance, or sacrifice they involved, were, to her, but opportunities for her love to express itself. Need everywhere touched her heart and stirred her hand. The death summons came November 3, 1934, at her home in Independence, and found her ready to go. The funeral was held at the Stone Church, Independence, November 11, 1934.

BEVEREGE.—Orman Leigh Beverege was born January 25, 1879, at Vinalhaven, Maine. Departed this life November 3, 1934, at his home in Cambridge, Massachusetts. He was baptized into the church in 1912, by F. J. Ebeling. Leaves his wife, six children and a large circle of friends. His body was taken to Vinalhaven, and the funeral sermon was preached by Newman Wilson.

HARRINGTON.—George E. Harrington was born in London, England, July 11, 1859. Came with his parents to London, Canada, when ten years old, then to Kansas City, Kansas, in 1886, and to Independence, Missouri, in 1890. There he married Mary E. Parker, October 31, 1890. His wife preceded him in death, June 6, 1925. Brother Harrington was baptized by J. J. Cornish while in Canada, February 16, 1876, and was there ordained a priest June 2, 1878. At Armstrong, Kansas, he was ordained an elder June 10, 1894, and in Independence, June 8, 1896, to the office of high priest. He served as president of the stake in the center place from 1906 to 1915, and afterwards performed missionary work in California, Kansas, and other parts of the United States and Canada. He was an honest, fearless servant of the Lord whom the church and the world can ill afford to lose. Passed away at the home of his son, Doctor G. L. Harrington, Independence, November 9, 1934. Brother Harrington filled his days with holy service in an effort to bless as many as he could. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Joseph Luff at the Stone Church, November 11, assisted by John F. Sheehy. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

CONDIT.—Melvin D. Condit, son of Guy and Alice Condit, was born August 5, 1913, at Hagerman, Idaho. Passed away October 15, 1934, at the Veterans' Hospital at Spokane,

Washington, his death being due to pneumonia contracted in the government C. C. camp near Spokane. He was baptized a member of the church when nine years old. His father preceded him in death in July, 1918. Left to mourn are his mother, Mrs. Alice Parks; three sisters: Mrs. Arlie Player, Mrs. Minnie Williams, of Hagerman, Mrs. Velma

■ Parable of Two Men

In an ancient city there was a man of strong courage and high temper, who went about counting his enemies with his sword. He devoted the best years of his life to this task, leaving many a contender dead on the field, and many a widow and orphan to mourn his victories. He never succeeded in numbering all his enemies in this fatal manner, for new ones were always coming up to challenge him. One day one of them, a better swordsman than he, wounded him in a fight that he had provoked, and he perished miserably, hated, and alone.

In the same city there lived another, humbler man. He started out to count his friends, writing their names in a book so that he could remember them; and he did one act of kindness at least for each of them, so that they would remember him. Though he filled the pages of several books with their names, he never succeeded in numbering all of them, for new ones were continually coming up to swell the ranks of those he already had. He died, at length, at a great age, surrounded by those who loved him and honored his name.

■ Returning Thanks

Brother George Anway, Independence musician, tells the following Thanksgiving story:

The family and friends had filled the large table, and the children were occupying smaller chairs and a little table of their own. George was asking the blessing, and had hardly started when he heard a child's voice at the other table. Disconcerted at first, he soon apprehended, while trying to concentrate on his own words, that another prayer was being offered. It was his own six-year-old daughter, Carol Lee, asking a blessing for the children's table!

ARGUMENTS

A Prominent Church Official, speaking in the Stone Church pulpit recently, related a story of his visit to a distant city branch, where he met a young man who had spent some months in the Center Place.

"What was your main impression of Independence?" asked the P. C. O., desiring to see what a young mind would think of the current situation.

"My biggest impression," replied the youth, "is that they were always arguing about something."

Not flattering, but it may be a wholesome lesson. One who has traveled a little will know that the criticism applies in many other places. Most of us are too long on talk and too short on work. A poet once versed his lament at the universal scene in the line: "Our large professions and our little deeds."

We can't afford arguments; we can't afford squabbles. They hold up the work and they prevent the realization of the Kingdom.

(Friendly Tips are meant to be helpful. If you have suggestions, please send them to us.)

■ Slips of the Tongue and Pen

From the news items of a small branch: "At the Hallowe'en party all the young people came mashed. Everybody had a good time." They meant masked.

From a biography: "After that time I had to shirk for myself." Presumably meant shift.

The Turning Point

Financial Safety The "Financial Report" by Bishop DeLapp in the Herald of November 27 has made it clear to us that the church is progressively gaining safer ground in a financial way. We have apparently reached and passed the turning point. We are on our way back to the course of church activity and work from which we were deflected by the depression. Our present position is not the result of an accident. It is the result of long hours of work, often heartbreaking in character, on the part of our financial officers, backed by the support of other officers and the membership. We are winning in our fight. We have saved the cause. But we must not relax now.

Keeping the Law Our victory is a victory for the law of the church, a victory for the operation of the financial law. Many times tempted by one attractive scheme and another for raising money and paying the debt, the Bishopric have steadfastly refused to be led aside from their purpose of teaching the financial law of the church as a basis of a permanent plan of meeting its expenses. Building for the financial law has built for the future in a way that no other plan has made possible. Our victory over the depression has not been a matter of an emergency; it has been a victory for the law. The wisdom of the financial law has been demonstrated.

The Immediate Future Now we find that we have only begun the task of teaching our people to "Keep the Law." The percentage of the membership who file inventories and pay tithing consistently and regularly is steadily increasing, under the instruction and guidance of branch, district, and general officers who believe in and keep the law themselves and who can therefore teach it effectively. The prospects are that the church, far from finding itself spiritually and financially depleted by a "sacrifice drive," is only now beginning to realize its strength, and will be stronger in the future.

Spiritual Gains Moreover, those who observe say there have been some definite spiritual gains as a result of the increased emphasis upon the necessity of our people learning to "Keep the Law." Interest in the church and sympathy with its ideals is stronger. Devotion is improved. Courage and morale are better. Faith is growing. The people who obey the law have an investment in the church, and the church therefore means more to them—is more precious to them. It demonstrates the truth of the statement that "where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Those who have invested in the church will be more interested in its success than those who have not. Financial endowment is not all a church needs. Many a church with plenty of funds to operate it struggles along with a small congregation. Some have contended that if we would promote spirituality in the church we would not need to worry about the finances. That was an indirect way of saying we must not teach the law. Fortunately, the officers of the church have been wiser than to listen to this kind of talk. We have gone directly at the thing we want to do. And there have been spiritual gains as a result.

What to do Next "Keep the Law" has been the slogan of victory. There are obstacles and battles ahead of us; "Keep the Law" will see us through. There will be bills to pay; "Keep the Law" will provide the money. There will be missionaries to send out; "Keep the Law" will take care of their families. There will be churches to build; "Keep the Law" will erect them. There will be lands to buy; "Keep the Law" will open the way.

There is one thing we must inevitably do if we are to realize the ultimate triumph of the goals of the church. We are commanded to do it. It is wisdom to do it. Experience has now taught us the necessity of doing it. We must continue throughout the existence of the church to "Keep the Law."

L. L.

"He might have built a palace at a word
Who sometimes had not where to lay His head.
Time was when He who nourished crowds with bread
Would not one meal unto Himself afford.
He healed another's scratch, His own side bled,
Sides, hands and feet with cruel piercings gored.
Twelve legions girded with angelic sword
Stood at His beck, the scorned and buffeted.
O wonderful, the wonders left undone.
And scarce less wonderful than those He wrought.
O self-restraint passing all human thought,
To have all power yet be as having none,
O self-denying love which felt alone
For needs of others, never for its own."

THE SERMONETTE is off a sham,
Not fowl nor fish nor vermin;
Too long to be an epigram,
Too short to be a sermon.

—Deacon Goodentart.

DURING a banquet attended by representatives of various religious orders a Catholic priest and a Jewish Rabbi sat side by side. As the roast pork was served the Priest said to the Rabbi, "When will you forget some of your religious prejudices and join me in eating pork?" The Rabbi, bowed and said, "Perhaps, Father, at your wedding."

AMMON MCCALLUM, director of "the League of Distilled Spirits Rectifiers" estimates that during the first year since the repeal of prohibition Americans spent three billion dollars for liquor, half of which was bootleg liquor. Americans suffer for lack of food, and millions must be fed and housed by the government, yet the nation spends three billion dollars annually for alcohol in various forms. Also remember that repeal was "to end bootlegging." The Devil is a good liar and the public has a very short memory.

IT IS SAID that Will Rogers traces his lineage directly back to the Cherokee Indians, which lends point to his gibe at descendants of Mayflower pioneers: "Their ancestors might a' come over in the Mayflower, but mine was already here waitin' for 'em."

YOUNG MEN and young women who think that to be smart one must drag on a cigarette might reflect that this smartest and shrewdest and most admired American writer, Will Rogers, does not smoke at all. The cigarette did not help him, so he quit it flat. He quit so thoroughly that when he was required to smoke while making a film some time ago, the tobacco made him ill and he had to send out and get a mixture of cubebs which would produce the required volume of smoke without nauseating him. Young men who think that at every time of crisis and strain a real he-man must fall back on a cigarette should remember that Rogers gets by in a very strenuous life as polo player, air traveler, film star, cowboy, radio attraction, and American ambassador-at-large without the aid of either cigarette or hip flask. By the way, that other most admired American idol, Charles A. Lindbergh, managed to get across the Atlantic in that first great solo flight without the aid of a "camel." It almost

He Wrought

He worked! It is enough
That his own hands were Tarnished with the stuff.
He knew the law's demands
For daily bread, the tasks,
The toils, the rude tools of his day;
The sweating face; nor did he ask,
In all his time, an easier way.

With hammer, saw, and awkward wrench,
He proved himself the man.
Though Spirit-born, by the rude bench
He joined our race and ran
Its rugged course to where it ends.
While of a holier life he taught,
To which the soul ascends,
He lived, he wept, he wrought
With us—he called us friends.

OFFICIAL*Auditorium Bonds Rewritten

The recording of the new and cancellation of the old mortgage indenture securing the Auditorium Bond issue, which occurred last week, brings to a successful conclusion almost two years of effort.

Aside from easement in rates of interest and repayment of principal, some additional changes favorable to the church have been secured. These were asked for and granted chiefly for the purposes of helping us to pass through this present period of reduced income, and to encourage our people in the entire program of debt payment.

On the old bonds, the interest rate was 5% per annum, and maturities called for the following payments on January 15 of each year:

YEAR	MATURITY	YEAR	MATURITY
1932	$15,000.00 (paid)	1940	$21,000.00
1933	16,000.00 (paid)	1941	21,000.00
1934	16,000.00	1942	21,000.00
1935	16,000.00	1943	21,000.00
1936	21,000.00	1944	26,000.00
1937	21,000.00	1945	26,000.00
1938	21,000.00	1946	26,000.00
1939	21,000.00	1947	26,000.00
		Total	$335,000.00

Compare with the above the new rates of interest and principal payments required on January 15 of each year are of marked benefit to us:

YEAR	RATE	MATURITY	YEAR	RATE	MATURITY
1934	3%	None	1943	5%	$14,000.00
1935	"	"	1944	"	15,000.00
1936	"	"	1945	"	16,000.00
1937	"	$5,000.00	1946	"	17,000.00
1938	4%	9,000.00	1947	"	18,000.00
1939	5%	10,000.00	1948	"	19,000.00
1940	"	11,000.00	1949	"	20,000.00
1941	"	12,000.00	1950	"	125,000.00
1942	"	13,000.00	Total		$304,000.00

The new rates and principal retirements aid at a time when the help is most needed. As conditions, economically, improve we shall expect to retire the bonds before maturity, if possible, in connection with an attack upon all of our debts, or, at the worst, meet the annual maturities as they fall due. In the latter event, sinking fund provision will have to be made for the maturity of 1950, preparing for that sum well in advance.

It is provided in the new mortgage indenture that bonds are payable in the "legal tender" of the United States, rather than as previously provided, in "gold coin" of the United States. This country is now off the gold standard, but although one cannot be sure what the future may hold, the gold standard should be restored before the bulk of the maturities is reached. The "gold coin" clause in industrial bond issues has raised legal questions now being carried to the Supreme Court of the United States.

We are thankful that for us the possible difficulty, whether important or unimportant, has been forestalled.

Supplemental to the old mortgage indenture was an agreement respecting the maintenance by the church of a certain amount of real properties, other than houses of worship, the purpose of which was to protect the security of the bondholders, should the auditorium under foreclosure yield insufficient to pay the bonds in full. This agreement was revised in connection with the new mortgage indenture to permit a lowering of the value to be so maintained in relation to bonds paid. Furthermore, an express stipulation has been inserted stating that in the event of foreclosure and failure by the sale of the auditorium to satisfy the bonds outstanding, recourse would be against the farm and commercial properties owned by the church, before attempting to utilize the houses of worship to make good such deficiency. Inasmuch as in our opinion there is a substantial margin of safety as represented by the farm and commercial properties, any procedure against the houses of worship is, we believe, very remote. The effect therefore is to give to our people security in the possession of their meeting places.

If the church is to pay its debts, it must continue to operate as a living, growing church. To do this, meeting places are of primary importance. Thus, the stipulation described is for the mutual benefit of the church and the bondholders, and is of great importance to both.

In our conferences with the bondholders and their representatives, we have strongly emphasized that the church is very jealous of its credit standing before the world, was asking no compromise of the principal of the bonds, and would pay every obligation.

The owners purchased the bonds because they believed in the church's integrity. We cannot be untrue to them or to ourselves. In days to come few things will so warm our hearts, whether we are minister or member, as the knowledge that our honor is unstained. A spirit like this cannot be defeated.

We are deeply appreciative of the cooperation extended to us by the bondholders in this readjustment of our debt to them. Likewise, we are grateful for the practical assistance of our legal representatives, Messrs. Bowersock, Fizzell and Rhoads, and fiscal agents, Messrs. Martin, Holloway and Purcell. It is now the responsibility of the church to so carry on that every obligation of the church shall finally be discharged.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

By L. F. P. Curry.

Priesthood and the Financial Law

By F. M. McDowell

Counselor to the President

How frequently we have heard former Bishop Albert Carmichael bite off the words, "Let us get down to brass tacks." Since being asked to share in the educational effort now being made by the Presiding Bishopric of the church I have become more and more convinced that in matters concerning the above topic the time has come to do just that. We present therefore no academic discussion or involved philosophical argument. There follows, rather, a brief presentation of the facts of the situation and a sincere call for the meeting of unquestioned obligations, the fulfillment of which is imperative to the ongoing work of God.

NO PLACE FOR UNCERTAINTY

Let us look at some of the "brass tacks." Certainly there can be no question:

As to the requirements of the financial law, or law concerning temporalities, as outlined in the books of the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3; 101: 2; 106: 1; 129: 8.)

As to the consistent official interpretation of that law on the part of those whose right it is to so interpret. (See "Handbook of Financial Law.")

As to the conviction of the present Presiding Bishopric that the way for the church to meet its obligations and carry on its program is through obedience to this law. (See statement of Presiding Bishop, General Conference of 1934. Also articles in Saints' Herald.)

As to the present need of the church with its obligations to be met, its missionary force to be rehabilitated, the work of the gathering to be organized and administered, and the task of building the kingdom continued. (See various reports of the Presiding Bishopric, the Outline of "Church Objectives," etc.)

As to the responsibility of the members of the church in keeping this law. Among the "Standards of Sainthood" approved by the conference of 1932 by unanimous action, we find this: "Financial support of the church through whole-hearted compliance with the financial law."

As to the responsibility of the members of the priesthood. This same conference by unanimous action specified that "The law of temporalities should be stressed kindly and firmly, without equivocation or apology, and as impartial in application." The carrying out of this provision was placed definitely not only upon the general officers but upon all the ordained men of the church.

A FIVE-YEAR RECORD

In the light of the definiteness of these requirements, the extent of compliance with the law on the part of the ordained representatives of the church is not encouraging.

Recently an intensive survey was made of the priesthood of one of the important stakes of Zion. One hundred and seventy-seven men of the priesthood were personally interviewed. The bishop of the stake placed in our hands a five-year record of each of these men. Have we the courage to face the facts?

Of these 177 ordained men, 35 paid no tithing and gave no offering to the general church in five years; 32 others averaged less than a dollar a year for each of the five years; 49 others averaged less than a dollar a month for each of the five years. Summing it up, 116 out of the 177 ordained men of this stake gave, over a period of five years, all the way from nothing at all to a total of approximately three cents a day in tithes and offerings.

If it be said that the last five years have been lean years, and they certainly have been, and that this is ample justification for this lack of financial support, let it be remembered that the law and its interpretation also requires a filing of inventories and of annual financial statements with the Presiding Bishopric. We believe it is clearly understood that this provision can and should be carried out in times of adversity as well as in times of prosperity, and that doing so does indicate a willingness to comply with the law in spirit at least. In the light of this, what are the facts? Of these 177 ordained men, only 40 have their financial statements up to date. Fifty others are from one year to five years past due. Eighty-four or practically one half of the entire number of men, have filed no financial statement at all.

THE WORK OF THE KINGDOM WAITS

After giving due allowance to the financial situation of the country during the past five years, after giving every possible latitude to the consequences of the depression among our church people, after giving place to every real reason (not excuses or alibis), it remains

A New Church History Study Course

The Story of the Church, by Inez Davis.
A Students' and Teachers' Guide, by F. Henry Edwards

Previous announcement of this text and guide has been made as the one new adult study provided for the church school year which began in October, 1934. Both works were prepared in recent months and the publishers have made extra effort to get the printing done so that the books might be mailed out at the earliest possible date. However the work of checking and rechecking the copy on the part of the writers, to secure historical accuracy and adequate treatment, has caused some delay. The final completion of the copy has greatly increased its size over what was originally planned. Numerous causes have delayed the work of printing.

Announcement is now made that both the text and the Guide will be ready for mailing in December, so that classes may start the first of January. The Story of the Church will be supplied in paper cover at $1.00 and in library cloth at $1.25. Every adult student in the church should have a copy of this excellent work for individual study, and later for reference in the home library.

A Students' and Teachers' Guide is a splendid companion volume of one hundred and ninety-six pages containing lesson helps for fifty-two lessons, a year's work covering the entire church history. The Guide is essential for teachers and a great help to students, when used with the history. The Guide alone would be of little value. Because of the increased size of the Guide over the regular quarterly size, the price is placed at 35 cents, each.

IN THE EMERGENCY

In many places adult classes have been waiting for the printing of these new materials for the coming year's study. It will be both logical and interesting to prepare the class for the history of the Restoration by a study of the Reformation and conditions under which the church was organized in 1830. The facts are interestingly told in numbers three and four of a former senior quarterly, The History of Christianity, by Christiana Salyards. These may be had at 25 cents each, and will well repay careful study. If but one is desired, order number 4. This will provide a background of appreciation which will greatly increase the value of church history study.

Wahdemna Choral Club Wins Praise

Paul Craig Leads Young Singers in Work of Critical Merit

The Wahdemna Choral Club, a group of our young singers of Independence led by Paul Craig, won high praise recently from an eminent Kansas City critic. This story may inspire other groups of singers with ambitions to excel. The following appeared in the Kansas City Times Tuesday, November 20, signed by M. K. P. (Mrs. M. K. Powell):

"Paul Craig's Wahdemna Choral Club opened and closed the Kansas City Musical Club's organ program last night in the Central Presbyterian church with singing that was at times as fine as any we are accustomed to hearing from renowned visiting choirs. The fifty singers are a part of the Latter Day Saints choir of Independence and, recently, since Mr. Craig has turned over part of the work of the larger organization to an assistant, he has rehearsed the group almost daily, with remarkable results.

"If the entire choir were as fine as the soprano section, it would have few rivals in touring organizations. The altos, too, are excellent, basses good and tenors fair in controlled passages. The women's voices disclosed a limpid quality and flexibility that made of Tschalkowsky's accompanied 'Praise Ye God' a memorable experience. Rubenstein's 'Seraphic Song' gave the choir an opportunity for celestial effects against which the voice of Mrs. Stanley Deacon was heard in the impressive contralto solos.

"The finest achievement of the chorus was in the four unaccompanied numbers at the beginning of the concert, when the singers were grouped in the balcony. Again, the most successful song was by Tschalkowsky. In his 'Oh! Blest Are They', the singers piled up masses of polyphony with the confidence of certain knowledge. Hyde's 8-part setting of 'Let the Words of My Mouth' presents peculiar difficulties of attack, but these were in almost every instance overcome and the lovely chanted phrases were delivered with stately dignity. Kansas City is to be congratulated on having a choir of artistic attainment almost within the city limits."

So long as grown men and women act like sheep, just so long will a gospel shark, with the bait of religious hysteria, use them for his own personal profit.—H. C. Hamilton in "The Ballyhoo Revivalist."

Zion's Christian Legion Courage Legion!

Zion's Christian Legion is not the proverbial goose mentioned in the tales of our childhood but nevertheless it has laid its first golden egg. With the amounts now in the hands of the Presiding Bishopric and these in the hand of Brother Evans, the general treasurer, we have accumulated $600 for application on the Auditorium debt. As a beginning we feel that this is something to be proud of. The amounts accumulating in the hands of divisional and company treasurers cannot be counted in this word of encouragement. However, these treasurers are making monthly reports to the superior officer in their line of activity. Thus this movement of money toward the center which has just started will continue through the months and we hope the years ahead until our objective is attained. Courage, Legion! Things are moving.

As a young people's organization we are not just talking in glittering generalities. We are achieving concrete accomplishments. This is in accord with a statement made by Bishop DeLapp and quoted in the Herald of November 27: "We no longer can talk in terms of generalities and hold the devotion of the people of this church." In consonance with this principle we have set before ourselves a definite goal, not only toward which to look, but toward which to move.

The young people do not take all the credit to themselves for the above mentioned achievement. They recognize the fine encouragement and splendid assistance extended them by the older people. Many a young person making his regular contribution of twenty-five cents a month could not do so were it not for the father and mother backing him as a member of the Legion. Then, too, it must not be forgotten that many of these fathers and mothers have joined with the sons and daughters in the payment of these dues and thus made more effective our attempt to fulfill the program we have set before ourselves. To the parents who have and still are setting such a wholesome example we wish to say "thank you" in a way to most effectually show our appreciation for their wholehearted cooperation. With the backing of such fathers and mothers we can again say: Courage, Legion!

Let the organization take renewed hope and step forth with new power. Those who have become a little downhearted because of opposition should lift up their heads once more and move forward.

perfectly clear that as far as compliance with the law of God is concerned our ordained men are not setting the example they should.

Because of this: The church is deprived of the financial support of the large share of the priesthood, this at a time when the church is in dire need and is unquestionably entitled to such support. Again, it is quite probable that a large percent of the Saints who do not comply with the financial law are influenced in their attitude and neglect by the poor example furnished them by ordained men. On the part of the Saints this means the failure to receive the spiritual blessings promised them in the law. On the part of the priesthood this loss is even more serious. Unquestionably, the great need of the hour is a divinely endowed priesthood. But this endowment cannot be received except through compliance with the conditions under which it is promised. Certainly, chief among these conditions is obedience to the law.

There can be no successful refutation of the statement that the spiritual development of the Saints, the divine endowment of the priesthood, the meeting of the financial obligations of the church, the rehabilitation of the missionary list, the successful carrying out of the program of the gathering, the actual work of building the kingdom, await a far more whole-hearted compliance with the law of God concerning temporalities on the part of the priesthood of the church. May we not in all fairness suggest that such compliance is an obligation of membership and might well have been carried out at the time of one's entering the church through the waters of baptism.

The building of the kingdom waits the spiritualizing of our people, the spiritualizing of our people waits the spiritualization of our priesthood. There is no way that this can be achieved without unreserved compliance with the law on the part of all ordained men.

If this rather blunt presentation of the matter seems unfair, let our readers be reminded that the general officers of the church have been placed under the injunction of General Conference that "The law of temporalities should be stressed kindly and firmly, without equivocation or apology, and as impartial in application."

What a question! The place of young people in the church! Any church which does not give full and free opportunity for service and responsibility to the young people will soon die, and deserve to. So, young people, be sure you belong everywhere in your church!—Howard K. Williams in Young People's Leader.

Increased Emphasis in Religious Education

By C. B. Woodstock

Those engaged in the work of the church school in the various branches and missions of the church will rejoice with us in the impetus which has come to the educational work of the church in recent months. Changes in employment schedules have made more time available for study, for group activities and for training on the part of leaders. This is making definitely for increased class attendance and the demand that more classes be available. The seriousness with which teachers and leaders ask for training classes must result in a general raising of teaching and study standards in all the church.

In the three months' period just passed, a total of 808 people received credits for specific training in nineteen institutes held in as many stakes and districts. This was in addition to probably twice that number who attended and received training not entered on our records. While the personal credit fees are but nominal, yet the total receipts for all lines of religious educational endeavor for the three months were $97.68, which sum was added to the funds in the presiding bishop's office to assist in financing the training program of the church.

Some forty students have enrolled in correspondence courses in the same three months and about an equal number have completed quarterly courses for credit. The opening of quarterly courses as a part of the regular training program has very greatly increased possibilities of credit class work. It requires little additional expenditure over the cost of supplies for regular church school classes and provides opportunity to study the subject matter of our church school program. Any of the adult or older young people's quarterlies may thus be carried for credit. This is now the most popular source of training. It not only gives credit leading to the securing of general church recognition in one of the three grades of certificates in religious education and leadership, but by stressing personal effort in study and construction, has greatly raised the standard of adult class participation.

In the nine months just past 21 people have secured certificates, certifying that specified amounts of training have been successfully carried in preparation for more efficient service to the church. The confidence and appreciation of the church are extended to these, who have received the following awards:

Gold Seal Certificate, 500 hours of training:

Jean P. Cooper, Kirtland, Ohio.
James Moses, Independence, Missouri.
J. E. Vanderwood, Independence, Missouri.
Ethel Schwab, Independence, Missouri.
Mrs. Charles E. Calkins, Orange, California.
Agnes Beardsley, Brooklyn, New York.
E. F. Robertson, South Brooksville, Maine.
Goldie R. Bell, Denver, Colorado.
Roy A. Thutchley, Kansas City, Missouri.
Roy F. Healy, Chicago, Illinois.

First Grade Certificate, 300 hours of training:

Thomas R. Bell, Clinton, Iowa.
Mildred Calkins, Orange, California.
Margaret Gibson, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho.

Second Grade Certificate, 150 hours of training:

Marie D. Hanawalt, Fort Collins, Colorado.
T. S. Moore, Fort Collins, Colorado.
Lydia Swift, Pleasant Hill, Missouri.
J. L. Milner, Long Beach, California.
Mildred Milner, Long Beach, California.
Mrs. J. H. Cook, Wiesner, Nebraska.
Ethel Piedt, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.

December Color

Red, blood-red, with an orange rim,
Flushing the toadstool-tops;
Bronze of bracken where blue mists dim
Depths of the chestnut copse;
Bramble lit to a burning bush,
Winter's torch, to light her;
Over the cottage the creeper's blush,
Bright and ever brighter.

Silver of rain on the emerald moss,
Flame on the robin's breast;
Opal and amethyst clouds that cross,
Gold of the warming west;
Pearls of mistletoe (Santa Claus
Soon shall his rites remember!)
Rubies rained from the hips and haws—
Who said "Pale December"?

Young Artist Wins Prize

Verna Levenhagen, a senior at the Lincoln High School of Manitowoc, Wisconsin, recently won first place for a "Poppy Poster" which she painted and entered in a local contest sponsored by the American Legion auxiliary. Winning first place, it was sent to the state Legion convention at Green Bay and again won first place. At the national Legion convention held at Miami, Florida, her poster took the national honors. Next year, a reproduction of the poster will be used in every city, town and village in the United States during the poppy drive. Besides her art work, she is an active member of the Girl's Athletic club.

The Purpose of Our Life

By Edward Ingham

Note: Since receiving the following article and accepting it for publication we have learned the sad news of Brother Ingham's death which occurred unexpectedly on November 20. He was nearing sixty-four years of age and had been an elder since 1896 and a member of the bishopric since 1918. The article, thoughtful and beautiful in its expression, turned prophetically toward a subject which must now be uppermost in the minds of the family and friends who mourn his departure. We are happy to have this last testimony of the faith which proved an anchor to him to the end of his life.—The Editors

"Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him: In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ. In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, Which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory."—Ephesians 1: 9-14.

"These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth."—Hebrews 11: 13.

"Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."—1 Peter 2: 5.

"Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."—1 Corinthians 12: 27.

"If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; whereof I Paul am made a minister; Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church: Whereof I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfill the word of God."—Colossians 1: 23-25.

"There are moments in the life of every one when the soul seems to be stirred by some inner force; when the mind becomes illuminated by new ideals, new hopes, new desires. What has caused this state? Who can tell? It may be in a moment of rest and repose, when mind and body are relaxed and for a brief space of time the duties and cares of the world are lost sight of, that such an awakening comes—for thus we might speak of it. During this interval we see things as we never have seen them before. Power, on earthly greatness, has no place in our thoughts; but we see, dimly though it may be, something of our own inner greatness—something that if it once could be fully realized, would change the whole tenor of our lives; and the world with all its allurements, would occupy a minor place in our thoughts."—Charles Brodie Patterson.

THE SADDEST ASPECT of human life is not simply that in which it seems to be full of care and sorrow and trouble, but that in which it suggests the impression of frustration, abortiveness, incompleteness. We never receive the promises. We never are the thing we seem designed to be. There are in our nature the beginnings and materials of great things, but they are never realized. We can form soaring ideals of individual and social perfection, but they only serve to throw contempt on the poverty and meanness of our actual life.

Is our life indeed an incomplete and broken thing? Is human existence but at the best a splendid failure? Is the promise which our nature contains never fulfilled? The common answer to such questions is that which finds in the notion of the "immortality of the soul," the solution of the difficulty. The life that seems so incomplete in only a part of man's duration. It will receive its complement in a future world. But it was obviously not this, but another different idea, which was before the mind of the writer of our text, in which he found consolation for the fragmentary nature and imperfection of the life of man. "These all died in the faith," he writes, "not having received the promise." Their life, replete with immortal hopes, instinct with the spirit and promise of a splendid future, was abruptly terminated.

But it was not really so. The promise was not left unfulfilled; the continuity was not broken. Their story has not been left without a sequel. The life they lived is one that is never broken, that never dies, that is ever deepening, developing, ever through the ages advancing to its consummation. Every one of these ancient saints and martyrs has had a share in the advancing life of humanity and shall participate in the great gathering which is to take place in the dispensation of the fulness of times, when will be witnessed the redemption of the purchased possession—Zion.

Let us for a moment consider what is involved in this view of the spiritual life of man, and try to gather from it the lessons with which it is fraught. Take the figure presented in the epistle of Peter: "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house." The stones which are intended to form part of a building, taken apart, might seem unmeaning or even grotesque or unshapely in form and outline.

But when the stone is built into the shaft or column, or when around and above the structural fragment rise the other portions which form its complement in the unity of some fair and stately edifice, we perceive how, lacking or losing individual completeness, it has become a sharer in a greater and higher completeness, a necessary contribution to and participant in the perfection and beauty of the whole.

But this fact is more clearly seen when we take the example of the living organism. The Apostle Paul says, "Now ye are body of Christ, and members in particular." Here, too, as in the previous illustration, we have a multiplicity of individual parts or members, each of which, taken apart by itself, has no worth or significance. Here, too, that which would be a mere imperfect fragment a maimed or mutilated thing, if separated from the other members, receives, in its union with them, a share in that larger life, that symmetry, order, proportion, that excellence and beauty of diversity in unity, which belongs to the organic whole. It is in the absolute surrender of an isolated existence, in the fulfillment of its function as existing for and contributing to the welfare and growth of the other parts of the organism, that the individual member or organ receives back into itself a participation in a richer and ampler existence. In this connection, the promise of Jesus is very significant, "I am come that they might have life, and have it more abundantly."

The key to the riddle of human life, the explanation of the scale on which our nature is constructed, of the boundlessness of its hopes, the inexhaustibility of its desires, of its eager longing for a larger, fuller, more lasting life, of the splendor of its ideals, and the dissatisfaction with their best attainments which the noblest spirits feel, is this: that he who lives nobly and wisely, who rises above the narrow life of sense and self, to identify himself with that which is universal and infinite, is a sharer in a life that is never arrested, and shall never end, "He that liveth and believeth in me," says Jesus, "shall never die."

No ideal of a perfect state, no dream of a golden age or paradise restored which has ever visited the imagination of genius, or risen before the rapt gaze of inspired seer or prophet, can surpass that future of universal light and love which God encourages us to hope for as the destiny of our race. That time when human society shall be premeated through and through with the spirit of Jesus Christ, and the whole race, and every individual member of it, shall rise to the point of moral and spiritual elevation which that life represents, when "we shall all come into the unity of the faith, and knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

It is then in this idea that we find the true solution of that contrast between the largeness of human desires and hopes and the brevity of human life, between our far-reaching hopes and aspirations and the contempt which death seems to pour on them.

Death does not pour contempt on them. That for which the ancient heroes and martyrs lived and labored was not a heaven of dreamy, isolated happiness, to which at the hour of death they should withdraw, no longer to be affected by the struggles and sorrows of humanity. They toiled and suffered and died for the good of mankind: their dearest, deepest desires were not for selfish happiness here or hereafter, but for the redemption of the world from evil; this was the heaven they longed for, and the bliss of any other heaven would be incomplete without it. The materials of our heaven, the elements of that glorious future in which we hope one day to share, are present here, within us and around us, and in our very hands. The eternal world is not a world beyond time and the grave. It embraces time; it is ready to realize itself under all the forms of temporal things. Its light and power are waiting for human souls to welcome it, ready to break through the transparent veil of earthly things, and to suffuse with its ineffable radiance the common life of man. And so, the supreme aim of our endeavor should be to realize that latent heaven, those possibilities of spiritual good, that undeveloped Kingdom of righteousness and love and truth, which human nature and human society contain.

We believe in the Resurrection of Christ because it alone accounts for the Resurrection of Christianity. When Jesus died, Christianity died. Its leader and its life were gone. Then suddenly it rose. And it rose with far greater power than it possessed when Jesus was here. Here is a great effect to be accounted for. How can we account for it? The New Testament gives one adequate explanation. Jesus rose and came back to men. The faith which died with Him rose with Him. And the men who had one day lost heart and conceived Christianity only as a dear memory of One who had been with them but was now gone forever from their lives, the next day had risen up, lifted into a new life by the sight of their Risen Lord, and went forth in the power of the Resurrection to conquer the world.—Robert E. Speer.

Henry Robinson Eaton

In the death of Elder Henry R. Eaton, which occurred at his home in Stonington, November 9, 1934, the church in the East has sustained a great loss. Brother Eaton was compelled to give up his work in the stone quarry three years ago because of ill health, but had been able to continue his church work to some extent up to the time of his death which came suddenly.

Henry Robinson Eaton, son of Thomas and Charity (Ames) Eaton, was born in what is now Stonington, then known as "Greene's Landing," Maine, on the twenty-second day of October, 1869. Here he spent his childhood, being the eldest in a family of three brothers and one sister. He was educated in the public schools, and participated in all the activities incident to boyhood life in this country.

In the twenty-fifth year of his age, on the thirteenth of May, 1894, he was married at Mountainville, to Miss Ada E. Bray, a young woman who, like himself, had been born and brought up on this island. His marriage proved to be an exceptionally happy one. The years, months, and days of their life together being filled with blessed memories to her who was the companion of his years, and who, together with their one son and three daughters, remains to treasure the memory of a faithful and loving husband and a gentle and affectionate father.

At an early age, Brother Eaton became a worker in stone, and during the greater part of his life he was engaged in that occupation. He enjoyed the distinction of having cut out one of the largest pieces of stone ever moved from a Stonington quarry. Occupying the position of an overseer, it was his duty to direct the efforts of many men who found in him a kind and sympathetic friend and who remember their association with him with appreciation.

Although he began to work in stone while still a boy, and followed it up through all the years of his strength, that could not rightfully be called his vocation. While it is true that he earned his living, and supported his family in that way, he had another calling which he regarded as of much greater importance.

At the age of twenty one, he was converted to Jesus Christ, and on the eighteenth day of May, 1890, was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. To keep inviolate the covenant then made with God, became the prime object of his life and it was as a member and minister of the church that he was best known to his many acquaintances.

Three years from the date of his baptism, May 18, 1893, he was ordained to the office of deacon, in which position he served the church until December 15, 1901, when he accepted the responsibilities and was ordained to the office of teacher. In this capacity he served until May 29, 1904, when he accepted the call to the eldership, being ordained under the hands of Isaac M. Smith and James E. Kelly.

Brother Eaton has been a pillar of the church, not only in Stonington where he has always made his home, but throughout the state of Maine where he has been a familiar figure at conferences, reunions, and other church functions, and where his influence has ever been exercised on the side of right and progress. His work for the church along financial lines was especially effective; and in the matter of giving his example always kept pace with or ran ahead of his precept.

Bold as a lion in his advocacy or defense of that which he conceived to be right and truth, he was gentle as a lamb, and tender as a woman in his consideration of the feelings or rights of others. No night was ever too dark, nor day too rough and stormy for Henry Eaton to venture forth on an errand of mercy or in answer to the call of duty.

It was his happy experience to be loved, as few men are loved, in his own home and to be almost universally honored and respected among the large circle of his acquaintances.

What Is It to Be Good?

By J. L. Bear

What is it to be good, or in other words, when is a person good or righteous?

If this question were asked of one hundred persons you would get as many different answers.

Ask Mr. A.; he will tell you why Mr. B. is a good man. "I know because he and I are pals. We are together a great deal. When we go out he buys the drinks; when we play pool he pays the expense; if I get in trouble he helps me out. He will lie for me; he will fight for me. I admit he sells booze, gambles and is in many shady deals, but he makes money. He has helped a number of poor people. He goes to church occasionally, and contributes quite liberally. Therefore, he is a good man. We must boost him for some office at next election."

We ask another person whom he considers good. "Oh, Mr. C. is good. We go to the same church; he always favors me; he tells me how wonderful I am, how well I preach, and I have told several members what a wonderful fellow he is. Yes, we will boost him, make him popular, so everything he says or does will be wonderful."

Thus, we may go on until the one hundred persons have answered what it is to be good, and each one has measured goodness by his own selfish measuring rod.

Now let us see what is good or righteous according to God's measuring rod.

"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." (Matthew 4: 4.)

"Pure religion and undefiled is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the vices of the world." (James 1: 27.)

"Blessed are they that do his commandments." (Revelations 22: 14.) "Nevertheless, I have found the law to be holy, and the commandments to be holy, and just, and good." (Romans 7: 12.)

When we obey all the laws; that is, spiritual, mental, physical, financial, social and of love and sympathy, as well as the law that governs the elements and the heavens, we are beginning to find out what is righteous.

We must admit that everything is governed by law. If we get in harmony with the eternal law which governs, we are righteous and get the benefit of righteousness, but when the eternal law is hindered by men's actions, dire results follow.

We must admit that the same law which governs the elements and the vegetable kingdom also governs our bodies. They are all so closely connected and interwoven that when we are out of harmony with the law, when we disregard the law which governs our bodies, we suffer. When we get out of harmony with the law which governs the elements, vegetation and crops are hindered in their growth, for when the law which governs the elements is hindered it fails to produce moisture in its season, the temperature becomes abnormal, resulting in extreme heat or extreme cold, and the atmosphere becomes very much disturbed.

When a people or a nation disregard God's law and destroy crops or cattle they place themselves out of harmony with eternal law hence the operation of the law is disturbed and famine and pestilence result.

The old proverb, "Waste makes want," is true. Likewise, when men, actuated by selfishness and greed, heap to themselves treasures which others have earned, they have transgressed the law of love and social relationships and hate and poverty result.

"How long shall the land mourn, and the herbs of every field wither, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? The beasts are consumed, and the birds; because they said, He shall not see our last end."

"They have made it desolate, and being desolate it mourneth unto me; the whole land is made desolate, because no man layeth it to heart."

"The spoilers are come upon all high places through the wilderness; for the sword of the Lord shall devour from one end of the land even to the other end of the land; no flesh shall have peace."

"They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns; they have put themselves to pain, but shall not profit; and they

Sprains Should Not Be Neglected

By A. W. Teel, M. D.

Church Physician

Much discomfort and loss of time from business could be avoided if the public was educated as to the seriousness of a sprain in a joint or muscle, or ligament. "Watch Your Step," is a good slogan for everyone to keep in mind, for many cases are directly traceable to more or less wanton carelessness. Improper footwear, so noticeable among the women, frequently brings about a sprained ankle. I refer to those who wear high heeled shoes, which give but little if any support to the ankles. I might say a great deal more concerning the harmful effects of high heeled shoes that are so fashionable at the present time but that is not the entire object of my writing this article.

Some people are unfortunate in having a peculiar weakness of the muscles, ligaments and joints which always increases the danger of a sprain. Many physicians will agree with me that serious results have been found by those who are careless about an early consultation with a physician. A wrench or a sprain in the back, or some other part of one's anatomy, may result in a serious injury to a joint or to a too-late discovery of a dislocation, or a broken bone. Every conscientious physician, when he comes in contact with such cases, resorts to the use of the X-ray which will readily show whether the joint is out of place or whether a bone has been fractured. An early discovery of this kind saves a lot of unnecessary expense, pain and loss of time. Where it is possible, bandaging the parts or applying adhesive plasters to support the tissues greatly alleviates the suffering and hastens the cure. In applications of this kind, great care must be taken not to apply them in such a manner as to interfere with the circulation. An inexperienced person should not attempt such a procedure in a severe case, as it is much better to have a physician make the application. To reduce the pain and the swelling, cold compresses are of great benefit. In any case where there is considerable swelling, no adhesive support or bandage should be applied until the swelling has subsided. This again requires the attention of a physician.

Just recently a friend of mine broke both bones near the ankle while walking upon comparatively level ground, due to improper fitting shoes. The parts at first became rapidly swollen and he thought it was nothing but a sprain but much to his astonishment, an X-ray examination revealed badly broken bones, necessitating a long confinement in the hospital. As I walk down the street, I notice many people having poor posture which is another cause of sprains and fractures. Care should be taken going up and down steps, or running.

Christmas Is Coming

There's a row of little faces
Every night outside the store,
Where they never draw the curtains
When the watchman locks the door,
Eager, wistful little faces,
Looking at the heaps of toys
That will bring a Merry Christmas
To a host of girls and boys.
Every night they stand there watching,
Tattered children, in a row,
Looking at the only Christmas
That they possibly can know.

Look them over, Mr. Shopper,
When you walk downtown tonight,
Thin and hungry little children,
Borrowing a brief delight,
From the wonders of a Christmas
Which to them is just a dream,
Just a swiftly-passing vision
Of how happiness might seem.
And perhaps when you have seen them,
You will hunt up Santa Claus,
For they sadly need somebody
Who knows how to plead their cause.

—New York American.

Christmas Everywhere

Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight!
Christmas in lands of the fir-tree and pine,
Christmas in lands of the palm-tree and vine,
Christmas where snow-peaks stand solemn and white,
Christmas where cornfields stand sunny and bright,
Christmas where children are hopeful and gay,
Christmas where old men are patient and gray,
Christmas where peace, like a dove in its flight,
Broods o'er brave men in the thick of the fight;
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight!
For the Christ-child who comes is the Master of all;
No palace too great, no cottage too small.

—Phillips Brooks.

The Three Wise Men

THE FIRST
I came from Tigris' sandy plain
Where I beheld the wondrous star,
With my slow-creeping camel train
I nightly followed it afar.

THE SECOND
I came from Persia's table-land
That lies beyond the Syrian dawn;
A candle in an angel's hand
It seemed, before the stars had gone.

THE THIRD
And I, 'mid mountains heav'nward piled,
I saw the star that led them west;
I, too, with them would seek the Child.
I, too, would make the Holy Quest.

THE THREE
We asked in great Jerusalem,
But none could tell us of his birth,
And then to little Bethlehem
We came—the least of all the earth.
There came we to our journey's goal;
No farther had we need to roam;
There was a home for every soul
Where Christ himself could find no home. —John Finley.

The Memoirs of President Joseph Smith (1832-1914)

Edited by his daughter

While my father was yet living I studied German for a time under the tutelage of Orson Hyde, following his return from Germany. This study was broken up by the confusion attending the peculiar persecution, under a legal guise, to which Father was subjected at that time.

I also studied French for a short period under the guidance of a Frenchman named Victor Jeanneault who, some time after Father's death, became a boarder at our house and sought to maintain himself by teaching the language in the city. He did not meet with much success and the school with which he was connected broke up before I had succeeded in making any great advancement in the language. Jeannault moved away and years after I met him at Janesville, Wisconsin, where he had married and was keeping a music and notion store. He was a genial little man, well qualified to teach his native tongue, and I had made a good beginning under his instruction. It was largely my own fault that I did not take better advantage of the splendid opportunities to continue my studies in French afforded by the Icarian Society. Under the leadership of Monsieur Cabot they purchased, about 1850, the Temple grounds and adjacent property, and established a good school in connection with their other activities, which school I might have attended.

While attending the school taught by James Monroe along with my other work I took a course in Latin, which I found very useful in my later studies of law.

To make amends for my lack of acquirement in mathematics the winter I was twenty-one I took up the study of arithmetic and bookkeeping by myself, using a textbook published by James Arlington Bennett. I think the title was The American Business Man's System of Arithmetic and Bookkeeping. It proved an excellent work for me and I mastered it fairly well during the winter. Undoubtedly the consciousness of my lack in this direction and the necessity of my particular urge toward improvement quickened what little latent genius for study I may have had and helped me to accomplish a good deal in a short time.

Shortly before Father's death I had undertaken, at his request, to memorize his views on government, for the purpose of declaiming it. I had progressed fairly well before he was taken away, but his death removed both the desire and the objective for continued work upon it. My memory was of such a character that any piece of prose or poetry which attracted my attention or fancy was easily retained therein, and while I had no histrionic ability nor special liking for the stage I frequently read in public.

Father had put quite a number of books into a collection known as "the library," which was dissolved at his death. Some of the volumes were returned to Mother. Some of them I had already read and later Mother secured for me Gibbons' History of Rome, Greece, England, and the Continent, and a history of the Reformation in concise form. At fourteen and fifteen years of age I had become an inveterate reader, early developing a taste for history and the biographies of celebrated men—generals, statesmen, philosophers, and others. I read every book of these sorts that I could get my hands on and, in addition, began to develop some liking for the sciences which dealt with the human mind. Soon after my mother's second marriage I began taking a phrenological journal published by Fowler and Wells, of New York. In connection with this reading I studied physiology and such works as Coombs and Thall, and others, on the subjects dealing with the formation of character.

A liking for poetry, either natural or acquired, began to develop about that time also, and the standard poets of the day became my delight. Cowper, Young, Gray, Shakespeare, Byron, Dryden, Moore, Scott, and our own American poets became my familiar companions, and of their works I commenced to gather a collection which has been of great worth and comfort to me throughout my life. Whittier, Longfellow, Holmes, Mrs. Cook, Mrs. Sigourney, Mrs. Hemans, and others have been added as I could afford.

The first work of fiction I remember reading was The Scottish Chiefs, by Jane Porter. This book much impressed me as depicting the erratic characters of Sir William Wallace and others deemed heroes of Scotland, and the bitter struggle between Bruce and Edward, rival aspirants for the throne. This book, which I have often re-read, created in me a strong dislike of English aggression, a feeling which was greatly deepened and accentuated by my later perusal of Scott's novels and various stories of the Revolutionary War, one of which, I recall, entitled '76, was the second book of the kind I ever read.

I have taken pleasure in poetry and good works of fiction ever since these boyhood days, as time and opportunity have afforded me its expression.

About the time of my majority I read law under the direction of Lawyer William McLennan, of Nauvoo, and pursued that study more or less assiduously for some years. In January, 1855, I went to Canton, where I studied in the office of Honorable William Kellogg, then a most influential lawyer of Fulton County. While there I was chosen clerk of the City Council, and was also employed by Postmaster Parley C. Stearns in the post office. In this manner I was able to pay part of my expenses, but owing to lack of means I had to discontinue my studies there in 1856 and return home.

The foregoing, then, about sums up what opportunities I have had in the way of obtaining a school education of any sort.

Chapter III.—Early Days

Indians

At the time of the settlement at Commerce there were numbers of bands of Indians roaming in the territory north and west of us. It may be remembered that the Blackhawk War, which occurred in the '30s, resulted in the red men being swept off the plains of Illinois and compelled to find lodgment farther west. As the history states, it was a company formed for this purpose which Abraham Lincoln early commanded.

After the settlement at Nauvoo was pretty well established many natives visited the city, and often were entertained by the people and the authorities. I often saw numbers of these wanderers as they passed up or down the river in their canoes, two and three together. I remember one day when I was at the waterside two finely-built young bucks came up the river in a canoe. When they reached the place where I was they stopped, and we had quite a palaver. One of them could speak some English and they seemed very friendly. If they had arms of any sort they were hid in the canoe—I saw none. Indians did not inspire fear in me, and I counted it a sort of holiday when bands of them came to the city.

Once a number of Indians under the charge of Keokuk, a prophet of the tribe, came to Nauvoo. I think they were of the Sac (or Sauk) and Fox tribes, and that Keokuk was a brother of Blackhawk, who was dead at that time. This visit occurred after our new house was built and I recall one stalwart man who stood under a tree by the side of that house. Boylike, I was admiring his bow and arrows. With a twinkle of his eye he took his bow off his shoulder, strung it up, selected an arrow from his quiver, set it on the string, and handed me the weapon. I took it and applied all my strength to the task of bending that strong bow, but found I could not pull the arrow up more than two or three inches. Then the redskin took it and easily drew the arrow full to the head.

From this incident, having tested the great strength of that bow, I could easily believe the marvelous stories I heard about the force with which Indians could speed an arrow when hunting buffalo or other game. I read afterward in stories about the plains that most Indians preferred the bow to firearms in buffalo hunting, and that it was not an uncommon thing for an Indian to drive one of those arrows from a four-foot bow entirely through an animal, the shaft dropping out on the opposite side from which it entered.

It was a pastime among the men and boys to put up a stick with a split in the top holding a coin, usually a "bit" or a "picayune," at which the warriors or bowmen would shoot. One day some youngsters were shooting at such a mark a little distance away, and all were missing it. An older man, standing near, his blanket over his shoulder, with a grunt arrested the attention of the young men, and without moving from his tracks jerked his bow from off his shoulder, selected an arrow from his quiver that must have been like one of Robin Hood's cloth-yard shafts, and placing it on the string, drew it full length and let drive. I did not see the coin fly or the arrow speed on its way, though I saw it after it struck the ground beyond the stick. The warrior calmly unstrung his bow, walked slowly forward, picked up the arrow from where it had slipped under the long grass at the side of the street, and then walking a little further, picked up from the grass the coin which the point of his arrow had knocked out of the cleft of the stick.

At that visit a number of squaws and children were with the braves. It was in the fall of the year, and tents or teepees to house them were set up in the dooryard. Each little Indian lad had his bow and arrows, and I used to enjoy setting up a stick with an apple on top, and watch these little boys shoot for it. Whoever hit it could have it, and their mothers, standing by watching, enjoyed the contest as much as I. I was willing to give the children apples without their having to hit them, but the mothers insisted that they should not have any which they had not earned in that way. It was truly entertaining and amusing to see them eagerly shoot with their blunt arrows at the sun-kissed fruit, and to note their glee when they succeeded in hitting. They would gather them and take them to their mothers who kept them until they chose to bestow them again.

One afternoon while the Indians were camped there, after they had their feasts and pow-wow, they entered into a season of running, jumping, foot-racing, and wrestling among themselves and our men. This was a common custom on Saturday afternoons when our men had a half-holiday. A race between the Indians and the whites was arranged. A young man by the name of John Pack was selected to represent the white men and for the Indians there was chosen by the elderly men (who always seemed to have charge) a young stripling a little taller than John and a little straighter.

They were to run a hundred yards, which was about the length of a block. Starters and judges were appointed. I remember I stood against the fence on the south side of the road and right near the place the race was to finish. Pack was very swift of foot and quite an adept at racing. They ran very closely together for most of the distance, but within a few feet of the finish Pack, with a sudden mighty jump, shot by the Indian and won the race.

There was considerable excitement; some of the white men were not satisfied with the outcome, feeling that Pack had won by a trick. The Indians, however, appeared to be quite stoical about it. It was decided the race should be run over and arrangements were made. The start was an even one and, as before, they ran side by side. Just as they reached the place where Pack had made his extraordinary spurt the Indian shot out his arm with his fingers right in front of Pack's face. This caused Pack to flinch a little and the Indian boy ran out in the lead.

There was a good deal of applause at the ruse, but Pack became angry and was in for having a fisticuff with the poor Indian. The latter, stoical and non-committal as before, said not a word; you would think it a matter in which he was not the least bit interested. Of course the white men gathered around would not permit any quarreling or fighting; and after a few minutes everyone was good-natured again and Pack shook hands with his competitor.

I think it was at this visit of the Indians that Father, through an interpreter, preached to them at their pow-wow and feast. I do not recall any later assembling of Indians while the tribes were stationed down in Lee County, near Keokuk, but I do remember one which preceded it. The time of year seems indefinite, but there was considerable drinking among the Indians that time, and they did not seem so clean or pleasant-looking as upon the second occasion when they visited us.

Nauvoo was situated upon the east side of the river and commanded one of the most magnificent views from its bluffs that can be seen between New Orleans and Saint Paul. Hence it must have been a favorite crossing-place with the Indians in their migrations over the country. As boy and man I have gathered dozens of flint arrowheads, scattered and left by wandering warriors, either in pursuit of game or in their battles with one another. At one time I possessed three stone axe-heads—one large, one medium-sized, and one small. Like many other things, not being much of a relic collector, I have allowed them to slip away from me and their whereabouts are forgotten.

Horses

All my life I have been very fond of good horses. Many memories of my childhood and youth are connected with the horses we owned and which were largely under my personal care as I grew older. Some references to some of these animals may be of interest.

It must have been in the year 1841 that Father, upon his return from Quincy, brought home a large sorrel horse which he had purchased and named Tom Carlin, "in honor," I suppose, of Thomas Carlin, incumbent of the gubernatorial chair at Springfield. This horse was given to me, but he was too large and clumsy for me to ride easily. I usually preferred Old Charlie, the horse which came with us from Kirtland to Missouri and from Missouri to Illinois, pulling our wagon carefully across the rolling prairie and the frozen Mississippi, as has been described.

Charlie had been with the family through many vicissitudes and was naturally greatly endeared to us. He was a handsome, large, black animal, with a singularly white star in his forehead. High-spirited and proud in carriage, he was gentle and noble in disposition, and would carry me as quietly and safely as any old hack would do. I used to ride him about the streets, go where I pleased in the city, and never suffered the least injury from him, even when I was quite small. In fact, he seemed to like to have me with him, and he made a very good pal for me, indeed.

Old Charlie was absolutely afraid of nothing. I have seen him stand close beside the cannon when it was fired, and all the notice he appeared to take of it was that as the smoke rolled about him and its scent was in the air, he would lift his head high and blow a veritable trumpet-blast of a breath through his nostrils—answering the description in Proverbs of the horse that "scents the battle afar off." I have seen the drummer of the Legion, carrying the big bass drum against his breast, walk up close to the horse, thundering and beating as loudly as he could, but the only effect it had upon the animal was to exhilarate him.

He used to allow no one to ride him except Father, Mother, Loren Walker (his attendant), or myself. In spite of this spirited notion he was essentially a family horse, and an ideally faithful servant, always as gentle and patient with us boys as if he instinctively knew it was his business to be. I remember how we used him to haul water from the river for washing and other household uses. For the purpose we had fixed up what was called a frog—it would now be called a boat—a kind of platform laid upon a forked branch of a tree, in the front end of which, where the limbs came together, a hole was bored to which the singletree could be attached. With this contrivance and a sort of caught-up harness, I used to take Charlie down to the river, fill up the barrel on the improvised truck, and he would drag it back to the house.

Worship Suggestions for January, 1935

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

Adult Division

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "RECONCILE YOURSELVES TO THE WILL OF GOD."

JANUARY 6

Theme: "Behold the Lamb of God."

Instrumental Prelude: "Come Holy, Ghost," S. H., 193, O. S. H. 105.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 45: 1.

(S) Hymn Response: "Father, when in love to Thee," S. H. 151, O. S. H., 135.

(S) Prayer.

Scripture Reading: John 20: 24-29.

Talk:

In the drama of Calvary God said something he could say in no other way. The Cross was designed out of His compassionate love, that our hearts might be pierced. This act of Divine surrender to our sinning came to prepare us for the fuller revelation God desires to give.

"I partook of the bitter cup . . ." he says, "and finished my preparations to the children of man."

We must center our hearts on the Lamb of God if we are to be quickened in Him. The only appeal that will prepare us, is the Cross. An attitude of complete surrender to Him is required. No amount of thinking, or philosophizing about the Crucifixion can make us feel the love of God. It must speak its own language to our inmost parts. We must be moved to do His will.

(S) Hymn: "When I survey" S. H., 162.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 6: 16.

(S) Benediction.

JANUARY 13

Theme: "Listen to the Voice of Jesus Christ."

Instrumental Prelude: "Behold the Savior at your Door," S. H., 328, Z. P., 152.

Call to Worship: Isaiah 55: 1-3; James 1: 5, 6.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David."

"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering; for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed."

(S) Hymn Response: "Come Holy Ghost," S. H., 193, O. S. H., 105.

Story of Joseph Smith: Church History, Volume 1, pages 8 and 9.

Period of Meditation:

Are you truly thankful for the revelation given to Joseph Smith?

Do you believe he was a prophet of God?

That this revelation actually happened?

Have you tried to understand what it should mean to you?

Have you ever heard the voice of the Lord through His Spirit?

Do you pay heed to what He has said or are you too concerned with the cares of this life?

Prayer:

(S) Hymn: "Rejoice ye saints of Latter Days," S. H., 102.

(S) Commission: Moroni 10: 6, 7.

(S) Benediction: (all) Psalm: 19: 14: "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer."

JANUARY 20

Theme: "Treasure Up My Word."

Instrumental Prelude: "Sing them over again to me," S. H., 335.

Call to Worship: 1 Peter 1: 22-25.

"Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently; Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof fadeth away; But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you."

(S) Hymn Response: "Once more we come before our God," S. H. 75, O. S. H., 29.

Scripture Reading: Parable of the Sower. Luke 8: 5-9.

(S) Hymn: "Lamp of our Feet," S. H. 404.

Parable Exposition: Luke 8: 10-15.

Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8.

"And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom."

(S) Lord's Prayer:

JANUARY 27

Theme: "Be Ye Reconciled to God."

Instrumental Prelude: "Sovereign and transforming grace," S. H., 76, O. S. H., 131

Call to Worship: Unveil the picture, "Christ in Gethsemane" by Hofmann while the pianist plays softly "'Tis midnight, and on Olive's brow," S. H., 163, O. S. H. 90.

Scripture Reading: Matthew 26: 33-42.

(S) Hymn: "O Love that wilt not let me go," S. H., 285.

Picture Interpretation: The garden of Gethsemane, where Jesus is kneeling, is destitute of beauty. Just a few rocks are there and a single growing plant—a thorn bush which will furnish his crown on the morrow. The very heavens are darkened.

The three disciples who have been with him most are asleep nearby. They can be seen in the background. He has asked them to wait just one hour with him. They are too much concerned with their own physical comfort to suffer with another, though he be their master.

Alone he has fought his battle. His tightly clasped hands still bear mute testimony to the intensity of the struggle, his face still shown the pain. It has seemed that all things are against him, the darkness has been intense, it has been difficult to pray; those whom he had thought loved him most have failed him utterly in this his hour of need, and yet he must intrust his work to them; one whom he has loved much is even now waiting to betray him.

Hofmann has painted Christ in the moment of his victory, for now he is able to say, "Thy will be done." Having at last reconciled his will to the will of his Father, the light of God has broken through the clouds above and is reflected in his face. New strength has come. The trial through which he must now pass will be no less severe, he has not asked that it shall, but in the light of God he can do all things.

(S) Hymn: "Take my life and let it be consecrated," S. H., 307, verses 1, 5, 6.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 10:12; 18:6.

"Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the life and the light of the world. I am the same who came unto my own, and my own received me not; but verily, verily I say unto you, that as many as receiveth me, to them will I give power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on my name."

"Pray always and I will pour out my Spirit upon you, and great shall be your blessing; yea, even more than if you should obtain treasures of earth and corruptibility to the extent thereof. Come unto me thy Savior. Amen."

(S) Lord's Prayer.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "WHATSOEVER THY HAND FINDETH TO DO, DO IT WITH THY MIGHT." (ECCLESIASTES 9:10)

FIRST SUNDAY, JANUARY 6

Sacrament

SECOND SUNDAY, JANUARY 13

*Theme: "Do all things without murmuring."
(Philippians 2:14)*

Prelude: "Work, for the Night is Coming," S. H., 122.

Call to Worship: "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." (Psalm 107:8)

Hymn: "Praise ye the Lord," S. H., 27, Z. P., 87.

Prayer.

Scripture: Ecclesiastes 9:10a, Philippians 2:14, 2 Chronicles 15:7, Haggai 2:4b, Romans 2:10a.

Hymn: "Work, for the Night is Coming," S. H., 222, or "Stepping in the Light," Z. P., 100.

Sermon Talk: John 5:17. Tell of the work God performed in creating the world and all things in it. God wants us to be industrious and work. (Doctrine and Covenants 42:12) Our theme for today is "Do all things without murmuring." This means that when we have certain work to do, we should do it without complaining about it. We should cheerfully do the tasks we are asked to do in our homes. Later, when we engage in work outside our homes, we should be sure it is honest and honorable, and then do it just as well as we possibly can. Sometimes we may think our work is not important, but someone has said "If a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well." Many small things are very necessary and important in carrying out large projects. Give examples of parts of engine in automobile, small spring in a watch and similar objects.

Story: "A Faithful Worker," (Noah, Genesis, chapters 6, 7 and 8) or "A Faithful Worker in Book of Mormon Times," (Nephi, Book of Mormon, pages 53 to 60.)

Special musical number by junior boy or girl or junior choir.

Story: "The Boy Who Wanted to Learn," page 78, Ethics for Children, by Ella Lyman Cabot, or "The Story of Mr.

Toil," by Hawthorne, found in many collections of stories. (See note)

Closing Hymn: "We'll Scatter Good Seed," S. H., 220, Z. P., 115.

Benediction:

THIRD SUNDAY, JANUARY 20

*Theme: "We are Laborers Together With God."
(1 Corinthians 3:9)*

Prelude: "Loving Each Other," Z. P. 83.

Call to Worship: "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." (Psalm 107:8)

Hymn: "Praise Him! Praise Him!" S. H. 10, Z. P. 144.

Prayer.

Scripture: 1 Corinthians 3:9, Nehemiah 4:6.

Hymn: "Never Pass Them By," Z. P. 42, or "O Master Workman of the Race," S. H. 152.

Sermon Talk: Psalm 133:1. It is also important that we learn to work together. Have you ever played a game at school and some boy or girl would refuse to cooperate? If your side won the game, everyone on that side would have to do his or her part. Wouldn't they? They would have to be united. (Explain) Sometimes we hear farmers tell how hard it is to do farm work with a team of horses that will not work together. We all know we are much happier in our homes if all the members of the family work together. The same thing is true of our work in the church. A lot of good can be done if we will all work together.

Story: "When the People Worked Together to Build the Tabernacle," (Exodus, chapter 36, with emphasis on the fact that they brought more materials than were necessary.) or "Working Together to Build the Wall of Jerusalem," (Nehemiah, chapter 4.)

FOURTH SUNDAY, JANUARY 27

Theme: "I had Rather be a Doorkeeper in the House of My God, . . ." (Psalm 84:10)

Prelude: "Something to Do," Z. P. 228.

Call to Worship: "For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." (Psalm 84:10)

Hymn: "Let Us Go to the House of the Lord," S. H., 67, Z. P. 119.

Prayer.

Scripture: Psalm 1. (Memorized)

Hymn: "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," S. H. 218, Z. P. 71.

Sermon Talk: John 9:4. Probably the author of the words of the hymn, "Work, For the Night is Coming," had this in mind. We are given the opportunity in this life to choose whether we will do right or wrong. Quote Psalm 84:10. David felt it was better to have a small task to perform in the service of God than to live in luxury among wicked people. We are told in the Bible that our work will be rewarded (Jeremiah 31:16) and that God will not forget the work we do for him and his people (Hebrews 6:10). Let us think for a few moments about the work of the different officers of the church. Mention some of the officers and their duties. We should regard it as a privilege to help in God's work, no matter how small the task may seem to us. We should use our talents, whatever they may be, in the service of God.

Short stories by junior boys: "A Young Man Who Chose to Obey the Lord," (Nephi, Book of Mormon, pages 7-13).

"A King's Sons Choose the Better Way," (Book of Mormon, pages 286-291) "A Brave Servant of God," (Samuel the Lamanite Prophet, Book of Mormon, pages 586-598).

Goal Posts

A university professor recently called on his students to "play the game of life like men." "Splendid, professor," said one of them, "but how can we play the game of life unless we know where the goal posts are?"

We know very well that if we take part in any kind of sport that we must have definite objectives. We must be able to see where we are going. Unless one strives to reach these objectives then the real value of the game will be lost. Goals must be reached. A goal is what one strives for.

So it is with life. We must be able to see where the goal posts are and knowing where they are we must bend all our energies in the "game of life" towards reaching the goal and having final victory.

Many people will differ as to where the goal posts are. In the game of life goal posts might be interpreted to mean the great dominating purpose in life. Some seemingly can see very little in life but the satisfaction of their own desire for pleasure. They see but the immediate present and adopt for their purpose the short view of life of "why worry! eat, drink, and be merry for tomorrow we die." When trouble assails and difficulties are encountered, however, the hollowness of such a choice of goals is soon discovered and barren emptiness and bitter regrets result. Such a policy is divorced of God and religion. It is based on the flesh and its appetites. It must end in failure for its heart is selfishness. Selfishness and godliness are not twin sisters.

Dr. Harry E. Fosdick, a noted preacher, says that one of the tests of character is that of being able to "take a long-view of life." One who takes a long-view of life will know where the goal posts in the game of life are.

Problems then will be considered in the light of the purpose of life. The various merits of the problem will be weighed having in mind the great ultimate goals. So we find that the ability to judge one's present actions in the light of their bearing upon the present as well as the future is a test of a wise man's character. Jesus had this idea in mind when he expressed himself to the multitudes gathered to hear him. "Which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him, saying, this man began to build and was not able to finish." Luke 14:28-30. Of course, the wise builder would consider the cost. He would take a long view of it. So in deciding momentous problems—friends, vocation, membership, marriage—the cost must be counted.

The Psalmist calls the man blessed when he is able to decide his course in life in accord with the law of the Lord. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night." (Psalm 1.) Such a one is blessed. It is said that "such a one shall prosper." Why would he prosper? Because he meditated upon the law of the Lord. Such a one takes the counsel of God for his guidance and endeavors to make his life conform with the love of God. "The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul," says the Psalmist again. From this we learn that the soul which delights in the law of God to perform it will find that there is purpose in life. God's purposes becomes his purposes. He is able to decide his course of action in the light of all that God has planned. Thus harmony and unity with the Divine is brought about.

Jesus exemplified this in his life. He said, "I and my Father are one," and at all times we find him responding to the higher will. Jesus was able to take a long view of life. Life was sweet to Jesus. He loved his friends. He had no particular desire to suffer. In his dark hour in the garden he cried in the anguish of his soul, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." Yet he knew the course which would fit in with his Father's will and added, "Nevertheless, not as I will but as thou wilt." Such a choice as Jesus made was not easy, but to him came a strength and courage that helped him through the trial.

The game of life brings many obstacles which must be overcome, but when one knows what the goal of life is, then he can find an inner source of refuge and strength from God, his Father, as he says, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt." It isn't easy to do this. Sometimes when one comes to the crossroads of life the matter of decision is important. One's whole future, spiritual and temporal, might depend upon the same. It is then that one must needs know what is the will of the Father. The choice may require much mental and spiritual agony as adjustments are made, but if decided in the Spirit of Christ "not as I will, but as thou wilt," the ultimate peace that comes is well worth the struggle.

Jesus has told us what the ultimate goal of man is. Eternal Life! Achieved through obedience. "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou has sent." (John 17:3.) When one achieves eternal life he will dwell in the presence of God. We learn from latter-day revelation that this is to be the happy reward of those who attain to the celestial glory. "These shall dwell in the presence of God and his Christ forever and ever." Only those who come through much tribulation will be able to attain these great heights. But the promise is held out to all, rich and poor, weak and strong, that they might attain to this. It is well for us to consider the great purpose of life, the rounding out of our lives so that we will finally be fitted to dwell in the presence of God and Christ.

Jesus did not leave us to wander in the wilderness of doubt and uncertainty. He gave definite instructions in his gospel plan for mankind to follow and fulfill all righteousness. Obedience to his plan will bring about a proper recognition of our goal posts and all else will take their proper place in the game of life.

G. G. LEWIS.

WHAT IS IT TO BE GOOD?

shall be ashamed of your revenues because of the fierce anger of the Lord." (Jeremiah 12:4, 11-13.)

Therefore, God organized His church to teach the whole law of life and that when a people shall have learned to obey the whole law, they shall be gathered together in one place so the law of God will not be hindered by men's actions. Then will the earth yield her increase and every one will receive that which he is justly entitled to. Then ignorance, superstition, selfishness, sickness, sorrow, will be no more and the glory of God will shine and we shall hear the people of Zion triumphantly singing, "Zion, Zion, beautiful City."

Injured One Is Well

Several months ago I wrote to the Herald that I was in bed with one of my limbs in a cast. The bone was broken a few inches above the ankle, and after five weeks, it had to be operated on, the bones being wired together until they healed.

Now I am happy to write that after several long hot months, the cast was removed. The bones were healed. And I want to thank the Saints who prayed for my recovery, also a brother of Dover, Ohio, who wrote such an instructive letter on diet.

What a privilege it is to be able in times of trial to go to the Lord in prayer! This I did before going on the operating table. I also had Brother H. N. Pierce, who lives near, administer to me, and when the hour had arrived, all fear and worry left me. I suffered but little, considering the seriousness of the operation. I walk without crutches, but my ankle is yet stiff after six months.

It was promised me in my patriarchal blessing given in 1917, that if I was faithful, God would give his angels charge concerning me. Though I have many shortcomings, I have tried to serve him. May the church as a whole, grow, and be a shining light to the world gathering in the faithful.

"Help of the One Above"

For over twenty weeks Sister Bertha Schofield, one of the young sisters of North East Manchester Branch has been seriously afflicted with an insidious disease which threatened her right leg. After a long spell of sickness in bed under the family doctor, it was decided that she should be removed to a hospital for observation and radical treatment. It was decided by the surgeon that amputation of the diseased leg was imperative to save her life. This was indeed a calamity for a young girl with all life before her, and the sympathy of the Saints and her many friends became intense, and earnest prayers were offered for her.

In spite of the doctor's insistence that this was the only way, Sister Schofield begged to have the operation postponed. In the meantime the pastor, Brother G. W. Leggott, requested the Saints to meet Wednesday evenings and also Sunday nights after the usual service and make Bertha's condition a matter of special petition. These services have been very spiritual times and all who participated in them felt the presence of the Holy Spirit.

At one time the father of our sister came to the pastor and was deeply affected as he reported the decision of the doctor that an immediate operation must be performed. While advising willingness to submit to the expert advice, the pastor urged the parents and family and the Saints to renew their earnest prayers.

Finally, after eleven weeks in the hospital, the specialist has advised that the disease seems to be yielding and the need for the amputation no longer exists; the symptoms are slowly but surely disappearing. Yesterday we were told by our sister that the leg has been put in a plaster cast, soon she will be allowed to get up, and the prospect for her restoration is very bright. Truly all who know her are very happy.

Even the sister and nurses at the hospital who have been in professional attendance seem to have felt the unusual power and influence in this case. And the fellow patients in the ward have been touched with sympathy and compassion, and they rejoice in this display of God's power. When the pastor visited a few days ago, the woman who is janitor, came to the bedside and spoke of the happy relief they all felt and said, "This is what good food, good nursing and attention will do," then dropping her voice, "yes, and the help of the One above!"

God is in evidence among the faithful peoples no matter where they may be. It is good to "speak well for the name of the Lord."

Miraculous Blessing a Moving Testimony

I have had many testimonies of the truthfulness of this church, and one of these I wish to relate here to you. It happened in my brother's home at Clitherall, Minnesota, some twenty-six years ago. His little daughter passed from life to death, and today she is a living soul.

At the time of this incident I went to my brother's house and met the doctor coming out. I inquired the condition of the sick child, and he gravely told me that she was dead. I went into the room and placed my hand on her little face, and it was cold in death. It was not easy to face the mother and father for their tears flowed freely over the loss of their child. I tried to be calm and asked the mother if she had called the elders. She answered that she had not. Then I asked the parents if they were willing to call an elder, but they said it would do no good; it was too late. Finally they consented, and the elder I called was Brother Lurett Whitling, my father-in-law.

He asked me several questions and then consented to go. But first he went to his secret closet in earnest prayer to God. My wife and I sat near the open stairway and were still sitting there when he returned from the administration. He went again to his secret closet and when he came down the steps, I noticed a light shining about him. He pointed one hand towards heaven and said, "The child is well!"

Wife and I knew that no living soul had gone upstairs to tell him that the child was well, for we had been sitting there all the time. I went at once to my brother's home and met the doctor coming out of the house. His head was bowed and his face was very pale. Again I inquired concerning the child. "All I know," was the reply, "is that awhile ago she was dead, and now she is alive!"

This child who was dead and returned to life, has grown to womanhood, is married, and the mother of a child. I saw her several weeks ago at her grandfather's funeral at Clitherall. She now lives at Minneapolis. Her husband was with her at Clitherall, and I told him of this miraculous incident. The house in which it happened stood only a few blocks away from where we talked. He said that he would like to see the place.

This testimony is the greatest of all the things that have come into my life. It assures me that God has a way of revealing himself to all who seek him in spirit and truth. I have pondered over it and waited during the years which have passed, and never until now have I had the courage to write it to the Herald. I trust and pray that it may be of some encouragement to all who read it.

Picture Teaches Lesson of Service

Recently there was a picture shown here called, "The White Parade"; it pictures a training school for nurses where girls enter one of the greatest fields of service in which they can serve. The young woman playing the leading role finds her life work in her duties as a nurse, and at the end of her three years of practice and study is called upon to choose between a man's love and the love of her chosen profession. She decides to remain with the hospital.

To really appreciate what our work in the church means to us every member of our organization should see that picture; those who cannot afford to pay the admission fee, should be taken to a theatre party by their respective branches; it would be one of the best investments that could be made in the interests of the church.

Visual education, may be the means of reaching some of our hearts and bringing about that which years of membership has failed to do; back of that picture stands the cross; the greatest lesson that it has taught me as an individual is "Service." Not to one; but to all. It has reached down there where words have failed to reach.

Leaving in my mind the words of our song, "Anywhere he sends me, I'll go."

Wants to Be Worthy God's Blessings

I joined the church seventeen years ago, and have been greatly blessed of the Lord. He has given me many evidences that this is his true church.

My spare time since becoming a member of the latter-day church, has been spent in studying the Bible and other church books and papers. I never miss a Sunday attending church services unless I am ill, and I am present at all mid-week prayer meetings.

I lived in Carthage, Missouri, when I joined. Elder Lee Quick came to hold a series of meetings. It was then I was baptized. That was the first time I went to the Saints' church.

I am glad to be a child of God in these latter days, and I want to be worthy his love and care, and diligent in good works and kindness. I praise him for his goodness to me. I praise him for the victory in my soul. In many ways he repays me for the step I took seventeen years ago.

It is my desire to be one of those ready when the announcement comes: "Go forth, behold, the bridegroom cometh!" I want to have my lamp trimmed and burning and my vessel filled with oil.

The Herald a Help

What a comfort and help the Herald is to me! This is especially true since I do not have the privilege of attending church services. It has been three years since I heard a sermon by one of our ministers, but I feel that the Lord has been with me and blessed me in many ways.

I should be glad to see any members coming through Owosso, and I believe there is a great work in the gospel to be done in this place.

Let Us Honor God's Servants

I wish to write my appreciation of the good things in the Herald. Always I feel strengthened and encouraged after reading the letters and testimonies, the experiences of my brothers and sisters.

Recently I have been greatly blessed through the use of the consecrated olive oil. If its use is accompanied by faith, we may be greatly blessed.

As a family, we learned years ago that the Bishopric are inspired of God in helping to locate Saints who wish to gather to Zion and that it pays to heed their counsel. We disregarded the Bishop's advice in this regard, and were dissatisfied until we again consulted with the Bishop and heeded his counsel. I think we should honor and respect all of the officers in God's church, for they are his representatives.

Is Enjoying "Memoirs"

I am thankful that we are now permitted to read "The Memoirs of President Joseph Smith." I enjoy all biographical and autobiographical material, and hope that someday we shall be privileged to read something about Brother Henry Sparling. We used to know Brother Sparling and Sister Sally.

After a long siege of sickness I am up again, and want to thank the Saints for their prayers and kindness to me. The Herald's and Stepping Stones which they sent, were gratefully received, and now are out among my neighbors making friends for the gospel by removing misunderstanding and prejudice.

Faithful in Service to the Lord

My home was set apart several years ago for the services of the Lord at Marlin, and we have Sunday church school here and on the first Sunday of each month a business meeting. I ask the prayers of the Saints that my family and the small group of Saints here may do a greater work for the Lord in days to come than we have in the past.

Shortly after I was baptized into the true church, my husband joined. He was later called to serve in the office of priest, and then as elder. He has been instrumental in presenting the gospel to many and baptizing them into the church. Recently he held a two-week series near Rosebud, Texas, and attendance varied from two hundred to six hundred. Several were baptized.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Do the Saints believe that baptism atones for original sin?

The term original sin refers to the sin of Adam. Some have held that the responsibility for this sin was passed down through the ages and places upon all of his posterity. The Saints, on the other hand, believe that God does not make us responsible for the sin of Adam or of any of our ancestors who lived before we were born and attained years of accountability. All men are agents to choose right or wrong, and must personally answer for their own sins. The Bible expresses this principle, and says:

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son."—Ezekiel 18: 20.

As explained in the Inspired Version, Christ atoned for original sin. It says:

"And the Lord said unto Adam, Behold, I have forgiven thee thy transgression in the garden of Eden. Hence came the saying abroad among the people, that the Son of God hath atoned for original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children, for they are whole from the foundation of the world. . . . And it is given unto them to know good from evil; wherefore, they are agents unto themselves."—Genesis 6: 55, 56, 58.

We conclude that little children are not guilty of sin until they are old enough to choose for themselves. A revelation to the church declares:

"Little children are redeemed from the foundation of the world, through mine Only Begotten; wherefore they cannot sin, for power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children, until they begin to become accountable before me."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 13.

For this reason baptism is not to be administered to children until they become accountable to God, but is commanded of them when they are eight years old (Ibid 68:4), having been taught previously of their duty.

Does Doctrine and Covenants 16:5 mean that only apostles should baptize?

The language here cited refers to the fact that apostles are specially sent into all the world to baptize and administer the gospel to all men "according to that which is written." The various texts of Scripture show that this is their special mission as the leading authorities sent into all the world, but others also have authority to baptize, including elders and priests of the church. This is according to the New Testament also, for the disciples of Jesus, of whom there were the Seventy as well as the Twelve, baptized (John 4: 2). Philip the evangelist baptized (Acts 8: 12, 38), as did Ananias the prophet (Acts 9: 17, 18). So also John the Baptist baptized Jesus (Mark 1: 9).

Are persons in good standing who get a divorce not scripturally authorized and marry another?

The church has affirmed the New Testament teaching that the only cause for divorce and marriage to another is unchastity (Resolutions 66, 272, 412), but the only direct statement as to the standing of such as violate this rule is in conference statement:

"That any member of this church having been lawfully married, and having put away their companions for any other cause than for the cause of fornication, is unworthy of the fellowship of the Saints of God;"—Resolution 66.

Is a baptized person a member, who dies before being confirmed?

One properly baptized is "baptized into Christ" and is a member though death should follow before confirmation has taken place. Confirmation (laying on of hands) is the outward rite indicating the seal of divine adoption and reception of the Holy Spirit. Failure to perform this rite, however, does not deprive the individual of his baptismal covenant by which salvation is promised the faithful.

Who decides where a baptism shall take place?

The minister having authority to perform the ordinance may decide, so far as his own official act is concerned. But baptism in a branch should of course be in accordance with the knowledge and consent of its presiding officer, and the person to officiate should recognize this duty and act accordingly. Officials labor also under the counsel of their presiding officers.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Address all news and letters to Editors of the Herald, Box 237, Independence, Missouri. Correspondents are requested to make their letters brief. The Editors reserve the right, on account of space limitations, to shorten all letters as circumstances require.

Traverse City, Michigan

Holding their first regular social meeting, the Zion's Christian Legion group spent an enjoyable evening at the church November 26. Preceding the affair, a short business meeting was held at which Norman Whiteford was elected as commander, Wayne Evans, former commander having resigned. After many games had been played, refreshments were served.

Sister Wayne Evans and children are visiting with her mother, Sister R. C. Summerville, East Jordon, Michigan.

Apostle D. T. Williams spoke there Friday, November 23. His subject, "Pioneering For The Kingdom," proved to be educationally and spiritually beneficial.

After the service Brother Williams called a special meeting of the Zion's Christian Legion to discuss local problems.

After the regular Thursday evening church school, the Saints met in the church parlors, honoring Sister Dorcas Curtiss, who is leaving to make her home with her daughter Sister Robert Moran, of Independence, Missouri. Sister Curtiss has been a member of Traverse City Branch for thirty years, and the Saints regret her leaving, but wish her happiness in her new home. During the evening she was presented a monetary gift and refreshments were served.

Sister Elizabeth Reynolds was able to be moved to the home of her daughter, Sister Julia Saunders, of Reed City, Michigan, two weeks ago. She has been seriously ill for some time.

Instead of the usual Halloween party the Zion's Christian Legion group sponsored a Halloween carnival at the church. Mr. C. A. Gardner, a local grocer and the Reid Murdock Company donated a basket of groceries which was given away during the evening.

Anthems are sung at every regular Sunday evening service by the choir under the direction of Harry Doty. Traverse City singers are earnestly trying to come up to the standards set for the Michigan choirs by Sister Louise Evans.

All Thursday night church school programs are under the direction of the Zion's Christian Legion.

Brother and Sister H. A. Doty, who are traveling in the Middle West, have been greatly missed by the Saints of their home branch. Brother Doty is giving illustrated lectures showing pictures he took during his stay in Jerusalem.

Priesthood meetings are held once a month here at the homes of the different members. Problems concerning the church are studied and the duties of the priesthood are discussed.

On October 2, the women's department sponsored a stew supper which was well attended. The profits were added to the building fund.

Ridgetown, Ontario

Elder George Njeim addressed Ridgetown members the evenings of November 6, 7, and 8. On Thursday evening, after the service, the Saints and their friends gathered at the home of Brother and Sister C. O. St. John for a social hour in honor of Brother and Sister Njeim. This was their first opportunity to express materially their love and esteem of the worthy missionary and his wife. An address was made and a tablecloth and napkins were presented by Sister Elizabeth Cottrell in behalf of the Saints.

The Latter Day Saint Players presented "Eyes of Love," at the high school auditorium December 7, Sister Mabel Shaw, director.

Brother and Sister George Crouchman are receiving congratulations on the birth of a daughter November 13.

The women's department, under Sister Myrtle Cottrell, have made and sold several quilts.

Oelwein, Iowa

The Christmas offering quota set for this year as seventy-two dollars is almost reached, and the members hope to pass the goal marked for them.

The Saints local church is being represented in an all-church project, the rendition of the "Messiah," at the Methodist Church at Christmas. Ruth Smith is their representative. Other were invited to participate, but found it impossible to do so.

Two people who have recently become members of Oelwein Branch through baptism are Sister Myrtle Shaw and Sister Elsie Portwine, both of Elkader, Iowa. These women are daughters of William Smith, a brother of Joseph Smith, the Martyr. Their mother had been a member of the church, and these women were baptized September 23, this year, by Elder E. R. Davis, at Osterdock, Iowa, their girlhood home. Brother McFarlane took a group of Saints to meet these two new members in their homes at Elkader, almost forty miles northeast of Oelwein.

Two small children, Charles and Rachel Anstey, were blessed in a lovely service November 18, under the hands of E. R. Davis and Charles Shippy.

Election of officers took place there September 25, George McFarlane being reelected pastor. Charles Shippy will continue as church school director, and Sister Ruby McFarlane, will again be leader of the Emma Burton Circle.

A treasure hunt was enjoyed in October under the direction of Sister Jessie Sims. Young and middle-aged enjoyed the hike into the woods which ended with a huge bonfire where wieners were roasted and marshmallows were toasted, and songs were sung.

College Day was observed with an appropriate program. Two former Graceland students were present, Ruth Smith and Wanita Pieplow. The former gave an informal talk on her associations at Graceland and the advantages offered by the school. A nice little sum was gathered for the scholarship fund.

Otho Clark and wife, former members of this branch, but now of Atherton, Missouri, visited here with their children some weeks ago. Brother Clark assisted in the sacrament service and preached in the evening. A surprise party was held in their honor at the Fred Clark home.

Central Oklahoma Conference

The annual conference of Central Oklahoma District including the branches of Fanshawe, Haileyville, and Wilburton, of Eastern Oklahoma, met in Tulsa Church, November 3 and 4.

The order of the services Saturday was prayer meeting at eight-forty-five, lecture by Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and preaching by Elder Lee Quick. The weather being bad, after the noon hour, Elder Quick and Bishop DeLapp talked informally to an interested audience.

The business session began at two-thirty, A. E. Stoff, R. S. Budd and G. L. DeLapp presiding. District officers were elected as follows: President, Arthur E. Stoff; secretary, Anna Rowland; music director, Mrs. Mary Vickery. T. E. Yerrington was sustained as treasurer, bishop's agent, and church school director.

A priesthood meeting was held at 7 p. m., followed by a sermon by Bishop DeLapp.

Sunday opened with an eight-forty-five prayer service, then there was a sermon by Apostle Budd followed by sacrament at which time Patricia Ann Adams Thomas was blessed.

At two-thirty a few business items were disposed of and followed by round-table discussion largely on finances, Apostle Budd and Bishop DeLapp in charge.

Some of the outstanding subjects of sermons were: "The First and Second Commandment," by Brother Budd; "Strengthening Our Position," by Bishop DeLapp; "Accepting Responsibility," by Elder Quick. Brothers Stoff and Lancaster made definite contributions of service to the conference. Everyone enjoyed the happy association of members of like faith and the hospitality of the sisters who served meals and opened their homes to visitors.

Rock Island Conference

Rock Island District met in conference at Rock Island, Illinois, October 26 to 28. Missionary R. E. Davey was chief speaker at the conference, and he and Sister Davey and daughters, Edith and Donna, motored from Aurora. Many other visitors from several branches arrived for the Friday evening service, and were made welcome in the homes of the Saints during the conference. Meals were served by the women's department in the lower auditorium of the church which has been improved to accommodate such gatherings. Most of the district officers were present to render their services, and everyone enjoyed a spirit of fellowship.

Friday evening the Saints were favored with a program of readings, music, and short talks presented by young people from several branches. Evelyn Eckright, of Moline, Doddie Mercer, and Barbara Ann McAdams, of Rock Island, gave enjoyable readings; musical numbers were rendered by Louise Gunlock, Irene Macklin, Orville Short, F. C. Bevan, Lon Mercer, and Earl Willets. Leslie Allen described the activities of the young people at Muscatine; Irene Robinson spoke for Clinton; Kenneth Cady for Millersburg; Paul Hendricks for Galesburg; Vere Cady for Moline, and Orville Short for Rock Island. Each of these leaders was asked to describe the organizations and aims of their groups.

Saturday morning a goodly number gathered for the prayer service, and the testimonies were helpful. This was followed by a study hour in which President E. R. Davis led in a discussion of the best methods of conservation in the branches.

At eleven o'clock Elder Davey conducted a study in the problems of youth.

Saturday afternoon the regular business session was held, and the following officers were elected: District president, E. R. Davis, Moline, Illinois; first counselor, F. C. Bevan, Rock Island, Illinois; second counselor, R. H. Allen, Waterloo, Iowa; secretary, Winifred Stiegel, Moline; treasurer and bishop's agent, John C. Stiegel, Moline; statistician, Marjorie Holmes, Joy; chorister, Nola Epperly, Aledo, Illinois; superintendent of religious education; John C. Stiegel, and budget committee member; L. A. White, Rock Island.

The suggestion that a reunion be held in 1935 met with enthusiastic approval, and dates and places will be considered carefully by a reunion committee. The Buffalo Prairie Branch may be continued as a mission and its members transferred to the Joy Branch if this is agreeable to both branches involved.

It was recommended that the ordination of men to the priesthood be made at the local branch instead of at the conference so that the ordinance might be of more value to the members among whom the new member of the priesthood is to work. The young people of the district were also given permission to assemble in a young people's meeting at each conference, to perfect their organization, under the supervision of the district been reported for the past nine months.

Saturday evening a pageant was presented under the supervision of Thomas Beil. "The Church That Is," and the "Church That Will Be," were portrayed by Marion White, of Rock Island, and Irene Robinson, of Clinton, and many other young people of the district assisted in the presentation of this religious presentation of the church and its future mission in the world.

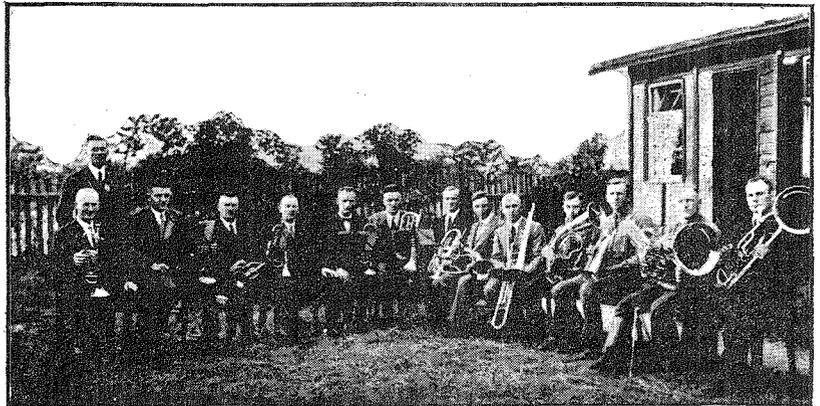

Sunday morning a large number assembled for prayer service with Elders F. C. Bevan, L. W. Stiegel, and R. H. Allen in charge. The influence of the spirit was present in large measure and everyone felt encouraged to go forward.

At the church school hour the assembly divided into three classes, Elder Allen addressing the women and Elder Davey, the men. The children were entertained and instructed at the home of Brother and Sister Harry Lindley, under the supervision of Sister Bertha Woodward, Winifred Stiegel, and Helen Lindley.

The preaching service at eleven o'clock was well attended. Elder Davey presented the theme, "Prayer," in its relation to desire.

Sunday afternoon the congregation witnessed the ordination of Brother Roy president and supervisor of religious education.

The reports were handled in an efficient manner, and it has been decided to continue this system at each annual conference. Sister Laurine Clark mimeographed a sufficient number of the compiled reports of the priesthood, and other district officers so that each person could have a complete copy to take home with him. The statistical report showed a gain of eighteen since June, with 1,739 as the net enrollment. For the period from June to September they have received $827.83 in tithes and offerings, and have a total of $444.50 in the district treasury. Forty-three baptisms have Salts, of Matherville, Illinois, to the office of teacher. The ceremony was performed by Elders Davey and Parker, and the testimony of the spirit was present. President E. R. Davis presented the theme of "Called to Be Saints" at the preaching hour.

At the young people's meeting the following officers were chosen: Thomas Beil, Kent, Iowa, president; Harold O'Brien, Rock Island, vice president; Kenneth Cady, Rock Island, secretary-treasurer.

Elder Davey gave the concluding sermon of the conference, in the evening, using the theme, "Looking Backward into the Future."

Young People's Convention of Northwestern Iowa

The young people's convention of Northwestern Iowa District was held at Logan, November 9, 10 and 11, beginning with the banquet in the high school gymnasium on Friday evening. This was prepared and served by the women of the branch with a corps of men as waiters. Covers were laid for one hundred and sixty-five guests.

The theme of the evening was "Today's Work" and toasts were given by Edna Redfield on "Getting Up," by Neva Carlile on "Getting At It," and by Frank Frye on "Getting On." Elder Roy Cheville of Lamoni, who also conducted the class work of the convention, acted as toastmaster. Other numbers on the evening's program were a reading by Bernice Lenz, a piano solo by Franklin Peyton, and a vocal solo by Edgar Salts.

A good number were present at the prayer service at eight o'clock Saturday morning. At nine thirty Brother Cheville lectured with "My Church or Their Church" as his subject. At ten forty-five a question box period was conducted by him on "Knowing My Church." At two in the afternoon a devotional service was led by Edgar Salts, followed by a forum, "Our Present Fields of Participation."

At seven fifteen in the evening all assembled for a song service. Special numbers were a violin solo by Marguerite Lewis and a vocal number by Jimmie Donn. Following this a splendid play on faith was given by the young intermediates of Missouri Valley Branch. At the close of the evening service the congregation retired to the basement of the church where an impromptu social hour and jolly games made everyone feel acquainted. This was also in charge of Brother Cheville, and all voted him a splendid entertainer. A few hymns, a feeling of deeper seriousness, a prayer and the first day of convention was over.

The Sunday morning prayer service was characterized by the spirit of consecration as expressed by the young people, and under that spirit they felt that the army of the Lord will move on "fair as the sun, clear as the moon" and that Zion will in every deed, become "the kingdom of our God and His Christ."

At nine forty-five Elder Blair Jensen, of Lamoni, gave a most interesting lecture on the subject, "As a Pastor Sees Youth's Field." Special musical numbers during the morning services were a vocal solo by Margaret Jones and a quartet by Miss Jones, Irene Riley, Cecil Talcott and Edgar Salts.

The eleven o'clock hour was given over to a consecration service and sermon by Brother Cheville, "This Thing I Do." This ended his part of the work of the convention, but he left behind many new friends among the young people to whom he endeared himself during his brief stay.

The convention closed with an address to the young people by Bishop W. R. Adams at the afternoon service.

If the spirit of the theme, "This Is My Day" be carried into the various fields of endeavor by those attending, workers feel that the convention was worth any effort put forth to make it a success and that it will blossom and bear fruit in many places in the lives of those who partook of that spirit.

Chatham, Ontario

Anniversary services were conducted in the church October 28, commemorating the dedication of Chatham church thirty-one years ago. Services opened with prayer meeting at 9:45 a.m. and church school at 11 a. m.

Bishop J. C. Dent, of London, was the speaker at the afternoon service beginning at two-thirty, and he delivered an impressive discourse on keeping the financial law. His effort is worthy far more than passing mention for his kindly personality coupled with his sincerity and ability, assisted by a goodly degree of the Spirit, perceptibly moved his audience. As a result of his appeal to action the local priesthood are sponsoring a movement toward filing inventories and paying tithing.

After the preaching service came a baptismal ceremony in the basement. Mrs. McDonald was the candidate, and Elder George Njeim, assisted by George Thorp, was the officiating officer.

Brother Njeim, the evening speaker, based his splendid discourse on the words of Paul to Agrippa.

On Monday evening after the anniversary, a chicken supper was served by the women's department in the church basement, and was well patronized by members and friends. This event served the dual purpose of netting the department a tidy sum of money and of creating a feeling of mutual good will in the community.

On Sunday evening, November 11, a special service was had in observance of Armistice Day. The church was decorated with flags and bunting, and appropriate scenes were flashed on the wall in front of the congregation by a lantern slide machine operated by George Thorp.

The regular program was supplemented with anthems by the choir and other numbers including a duet by Sisters Cora Wood and Jennie Best, "Lest We Forget." Royal S. Wood recited "In Flanders Fields," and there was a cornet solo, "Abide With Me," by Mr. A. Kidman. The sermon was by Branch President V. E. Pritchard who paid tribute to the supreme sacrifices of Brother John Dyer and Fred Dolsen, of this branch, who gave their lives in the Great War. Brother Pritchard related the purpose of the grave of the Unknown Soldier in Westminster Abbey. "The Last Post," the closing feature of the program ably rendered by Mr. George Drewery, a bugler and veteran of the Great War, while the congregation stood with bowed heads.

The young people have organized a club and have adopted the name Wo-He-Lo derived from the words, Work, Help, Love. James Kelly is the president, Helen Woods, vice president, and Elizabeth Thorp, secretary-treasurer. The enthusiasm of the young people as a whole augurs well for the local church.

A priesthood meeting was held in the young people's classroom the evening of November 21, eight members being present. Elder V. E. Pritchard presided. Several motions were adopted for the betterment of the branch and the extension of the work. Cooperation prevailed.

Regular services are fairly well attended, and everyone is looking forward to still finer things in the line of church relationships.

Wagner, South Dakota

Wagner Branch is located in unorganized territory, and the Saints are scattered. Some drive thirty miles to services. They rent a church at Wagner and services are held every Sunday morning.

Ten have been baptized there in the last few months, three being children of Saints and seven being those interested by the Saints who are faithfully endeavoring to spread the gospel.

In July Charles Hare was ordained an elder, Roy Caldwell a priest, and Cal Crisman, a teacher. These ministers with the aid of Pastor C. E. Burnett who drives up from Sioux City, Iowa, once a month, are building up the work.

The Saints have been greatly blessed with God's Spirit in their services, especially meetings of prayer held in the homes of the members each Wednesday evening. They report peace, harmony, and unity among their group.

Crop failures have hit the Saints hard and many are on relief. But a recent letter from the Bishop says that if all Latter Day Saints were as faithful in paying their tithes as Wagner members, the church debt would soon be paid.

Bemidji, Minnesota

Twelve Bemidji Saints attended the district conference at Duluth this fall, and thoroughly enjoyed their experiences there.

October 7, the branch held annual business meeting, and Herbert Bosshardt was reelected president with George Day as counselor, as some of Brother Bosshardt's time is taken up with services held at Nymore.

Apostle J. F. Curtis was there the latter part of October and held a series of Prayers are asked by Sister Lizzie Davis, 410 South Chipman Street, Owosso, Michigan, in behalf of a fourteen-year-old boy, the son of a non-member friend. The boy's mother is a believer in prayer, and she desires that the Saints will remember her son.

Briefs

Sister Henry Daniels, of Independence, Missouri, requests the Saints to pray for her daughter, Mrs. Florence Vaughan, of Englewood congregation, who is suffering from nervous breakdown, and her grandson, Wayne Thomas, of Long Beach, California, who has a tumor on the brain. Both sufferers are in a serious condition.

Elder E. R. Davis spent a week-end at Oelwein, Iowa, the middle of November, bringing a message of brotherly love to the Saints.

Chatham Branch, Ontario, observed the thirty-first anniversary of the dedication of their church with special services the last Sunday of October when Bishop J. C. Dent, of London, and Missionary George Njeim were speakers. One candidate was baptized in the afternoon.

Castroville Branch, California, though small, is growing stronger in faith and determination to serve. Its Saints remember all other small branches over the world serving under the leadership of Christ. At their business meeting in September, Elder Arthur Oakman presiding, Doctor A. R. Lawn was re-elected branch president, and given the help of an efficient official corps.

Gladys Malcom, twenty years old, was baptized by the pastor October 14.

The church school study of the zionic plan has been most instructive to these members. Other branch activities have included a box social in November and the attendance by many of the members at district rally services conducted at San Jose, November 25.

Oshoto Branch, Wyoming, rejoiced to have Elder L. O. Wildermuth in their midst for a month. He and Brother Horace Hartshorn traveled about in Wyoming and South Dakota, visiting isolated members. They called on Saints at Lusk, Lingo, Torrington, Osage, Hulett, and Alva, Wyoming, and at Spearfish, South Dakota. Brother Wildermuth held services in New Haven and Duck Creek territories, also Oshoto Branch, winning fine attendance and attention.

On the first Sunday in November Forrest Julius was ordained a teacher, and F. V. Cole, a priest. November 25, Joe DeBarthe was ordained a deacon. For the first time Oshoto Branch has a full priesthood corps. The members are happy and hopeful.

meetings at Nymore, which resulted in the baptism of four. The Saints were very happy to start church services for the members living there.

The women of Bemidji gave a chicken supper November 9, and the young people sold candy and gave an entertainment which was well attended.

Gladly this congregation welcomed as visitors on November 11, Adah Carlson, of Matahowa, director of young people; Mrs. Lydia Wight, assistant young people's leader; Lester Whiting, of Clitherall, district president; L. S. Wight, of Minneapolis, and E. J. Walters, of Carlton, counselors, and Wesley Elvin, of Minneapolis, treasurer. Each one contributed to the meetings of the day.

The young people have organized an "Up and Go" Club. Sister Bosshardt was chosen leader, Le Roy Huggett, president, and Pearl Bosshardt, secretary-treasurer.

Madison, Wisconsin

Saints came from Porcupine, Janesville, Evansville, and Lancaster October 21, to hear Apostle D. T. Williams, preach morning, afternoon and evening. In the afternoon his subject was "Lord Jesus, Apostle and High Priest of Our Profession." In the evening he used the words of Job, "O, that I knew Where I Might Find Him!"

Themes for prayer services in the local during past months have included "Take Time to Be Holy," "Pray Always," "Sons and Daughters of God," "Faith and the Will to Do," "Even So Have You Done It Unto Me," "I Would Be a Friend," "Faith in Our Friends."

The priesthood meet the first Monday night of each month and make out programs for the month. They select themes for preaching services as well as prayer meetings.

The women in their meetings are doing great things besides keeping up the study class. They plan social activities and ways to make money for the church. Recently they quilted a quilt and sold it for forty dollars. They also sponsored an oyster supper. They are visiting among the members who do not regularly come to church and nonmembers whose children attend the church school, striving to do whatever they can to help the branch.

November 18 John Maas, of Watertown was the speaker in the morning. November 19, E. J. Lenox, of Soldiers Grove, spoke to the people on "Perfection."

The first of September the young people had a wiener and corn roast on the bank of Lake Mendota. The branch president and his wife were invited to partake of their merriment. At this meeting they outlined a program for the month, asking the branch president if they might have charge of Sunday night services and also the midweek prayer service. "Pioneering" was the topic chosen for the month.

The last Sunday night of the month Charles Rehl gave a talk on his boyhood days in Germany and showed by means of lantern slides the beauty of his native country. One Sunday night in October he showed slides and gave a talk concerning his trip from Germany to South America and the beauties of the latter country.

The young people have been having a social activity once a month, but now so many are going to the university that they have not much time for these things.

The branch had its annual business meeting September 18, and officers elected to lead the congregation forward were: President, Henry Woodstock; associates, Floyd Griswold and Ormand Kimball; director of religious education, Ormand Kimball. These will be assisted by the following church school division supervisors: Adult, Leah Miller; young people, Paul Utenhemer, and children, Leda Colbert, together with a large group of other church school and branch officers and teachers.

Elders Henry Woodstock and Floyd Griswold officiated in the baptism of Ellington Mack September 29. Sister Elsie Duncan was the one who taught him the gospel. Brother Mack was completing his instructions to become the member of a popular denomination, but he had been given the knowledge before he met Sister Duncan, that he was not in the light, but would be shown the light. He recognized the truth as soon as he heard it.

Sister Jess Howe, of Antigo, has located in Madison for the winter. Her daughter, Meda, is attending the university. Brother Howe is in a local hospital.

Mapleton, Kansas

Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, Iowa, conducted a series of meetings during the week, beginning October 28. His wife assisted him.

The intermediate class enjoyed a Halloween party at the home of Brother and Sister Needham October 24.

Armistice Day was remembered with special services at the evening hours.

This month the young people took an active interest in a Bible contest. The losing side is planning a party for the winners. Nina Needham and Paul Wellington tied for first place, Hazel Dennis won second. The young men and women are also busy on a play to be given in the near future.

Donald Hughes, of Aruba, South America, was at Mapleton a few weeks visiting Saints and relatives. His grandmother, Sister H. C. Hughes, has returned with him to visit her son, Brother Roy Hughes and family. They will return with her in the spring to make their home in the States.

The men have been repairing the church and beautifying the lawn. They have moved the outside buildings to a better location and are planting trees and a hedge. There will also be a small garden spot for flowers.

On November 28, the branch enjoyed an entertainment which included a program, supper, bazaar, and a food and farm products sale. The proceeds go to the building fund. Mapleton hopes soon to have a much-needed addition to their church for children's church school and social activities.

Elder Lee Quick was there to spend Thanksgiving.

Toledo, Ohio

Sunday, November 11, was designated as homecoming day for Toledo, Ohio, Branch. A large crowd came from neighboring branches and numerous nonmembers also were present.

From eight-thirty to eleven o'clock the time was devoted to a spiritual social service.

The speaker at the eleven o'clock service was Elder A. E. Anderton, president of the Southern Ohio District. His counselor, Elder Gray, presided.

Dinner was served by the women of Toledo Branch, and at one-thirty a lovely ordination service was held. The following men were ordained to the priesthood: Brother Cramer, elder; Brother Wayne Crandall, priest; Brother Shultz, priest; Brother Roy Martin, priest; Brother Fullis, teacher; and Brother Gerard Willmarth, deacon.

Brethren Shultz and Fullis were from Brander, Ohio, and the others of Toledo Branch.

At three-thirty Elder Kenneth Green, president from Detroit District, was the speaker.

No evening service was held, but Patriarch Gomer T. Griffith spoke the following evening.

The saints were pleased to have their distinguished brothers from neighboring districts with them, and feel that they added much to the success of the day.

Vanceleave, Mississippi

Saints of this branch pledge loyal support of the Master's work. They have had several interesting programs lately, beginning with a halloween party given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Miller. The women's department sold refreshments which netted them a small sum, and was applied to the purchase of a new piano for the local church.

November 18, was a day set apart for the children. Two small boys were baptized, and several babies were blessed. The program was beautiful as well as very touching.

The women's department gave a banquet at the church on Thanksgiving night. It was well attended even though the weather was unfavorable. The program of picture slides was given by the Oriole Girls. Guests of honor were Mrs. Simon Rogers, leader of women, and Carl Hawley, church ground policeman. This being their birthday, each was presented a gift.

Sunday night, December 2, they enjoyed another short program which was the conclusion of their Thanksgiving rally. A special offering was taken to be sent to church headquarters as a Thanksgiving gift.

Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch

Nauvoo, Ohio.—Church activities have slackened in this branch during the past few months, as the men have been very busy working on the church building. They now have the basement ready for services. However, regular services continue—Sunday school at nine-thirty and prayer and praise meeting at ten-forty-five, and preaching by the local priesthood Sunday evening at seven.

Elder O. A. Rexroad was chosen president of the branch at the business meeting in September. Nellie Rexroad is the secretary, and James Cheffin, treasurer. Elder E. E. Williams is superintendent of the Sunday school, and is assisted by willing helpers.

District President A. E. Anderton, of Columbus, Ohio, paid this branch a business visit November 17 and 18, which the Saints hope will result in much betterment of local conditions. There was a priesthood meeting Saturday evening, and another Sunday morning. At the Apostle Paul M. Hanson recently visited the branch at Scranton, Pennsylvania, and preached some inspiring sermons. During his stay there, a special meeting for the priesthood was held.

Briefs

R. E. Miller, of Dallas, Texas, State manager of the Woodmen of the World and a national director of the W. O. W., was elected president of the Texas Fraternal Congress at its two-day convention which closed November 14, according to a press story from San Antonio.

Brother Miller was formerly one of the missionaries of the church, and more recently has served as pastor at Miami, Oklahoma, and the branches at San Antonio, Texas.

President F. M. Smith visited a number of branches in Maine during October. On the first Sunday of the month he attended rally day services at Jonesport. The following Sabbath he spent at Beals, participating in another rally. He also attended the conferences of the Maine districts, Eastern Maine, at Kennebec, October 27 and 28, and Western Maine at Stonington, November 2 to 4. In all these services he contributed greatly to the inspiration, instruction, and encouragement of the Saints.

Niagara Falls, Ontario, religio sponsored a program November 14, which brought together Saints and friends within a radius of twenty-five miles. The principal feature was a motion picture tour through Egypt, Jerusalem, France, and other places of interest. Sam Wernick who filmed the picture, is a Jew, and he lives at Niagara Falls. In company with a group of sixty others from all parts of Canada, he visited the Holy Land last spring and brought back the picture story of his travels.

Eros Branch, Louisiana, enjoyed a two-day visit from Apostle Roy S. Budd November 13 and 14, and he delivered two splendid sermons which were characterized by a good degree of the Spirit. These Saints hope for another visit from Brother Budd.

Elder F. O. Davies, of the missionary force in Great Britain, was ordained to the office of seventy Sunday morning, October 21, at the Northern district conference at Beresford Road Church, Manchester. He and Bishop A. T. Trapp occupied the morning hour, and in the evening Apostle J. W. Rushton was the speaker.

It is not enough to be industrious; so are the ants. What are you industrious about?—Thoreau.

latter Elder Walter Culp was chosen first counselor to the branch president.

Brother Anderton gave a nice talk to the children at Sunday school, and at 2:30 p. m. he preached to the congregation. His help in Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch was greatly appreciated, and the Saints feel that he did much good.

Independence

Stone Church

For the past week Apostle R. S. Budd's gospel services each night have been given loyal support by Saints of this congregation. Though weather during last week was cold and stormy, many came out to hear Brother Budd's thorough analysis of sin—its origin, price, and consequences.

In his sermon Sunday morning, December 9, Brother Budd based his discourse on Romans 12: 1-12, and pleaded for a more righteous and a closer walk with God on the part of all members of the church. That evening his theme was "Repentance."

Music is being furnished by the Stone Church Choir, and soloists are generously giving their talent to enhance the services. John F. Sheehy leads congregational singing.

The meetings are continuing throughout this week.

Walnut Park Church

Pastor Frank McDonald was the speaker at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, his text being from the first chapter of Mark, fifteenth verse: "Repent ye, and believe the gospel." Preceding the sermon, the choir sang "Holy Art Thou," and John Arthur Taylor, infant son of Elder and Sister John Taylor, was blessed by Elders R. D. Weaver and A. B. Taylor.

A short but interesting program was given following the class period of the church school, consisting of a reading by Jean Kapnik, a piano solo by Juanita Curtis, and a talk by Brother Albert Chapman, a former superintendent of the church school who has lately returned to Walnut Park to make his home.

The Walnut Park council of young people met at the church at four-thirty Sunday afternoon and completed plans for a chili supper for all members of the young people's and intermediate departments to be held at the church Friday evening, December 14. A committee was also named to choose the director for a play representing the council, to be entered in the city-wide one-act play contest to be sponsored by the general young people's council early in March.

The program of the religio Sunday evening consisted of four short talks by representative young people of the organization. Those speaking were Leonard Curtis, John Gunzell, Benjamin Bean, and Vernon Sackman.

The speaker at seven-thirty was Elder A. M. Chase, who is also conducting a class on "Mormonism" in the religio, to continue through the next several weeks.

Sister Margaret Badder, of Thamesville, Ontario, Canada, mother of Brother Ammon Badder, scoutmaster of the Walnut Park troop of Boy Scouts and one of our local deacons, has arrived for an indefinite stay with her son and his family.

Sacrament services December 2 were in charge of the pastor, Elder Frank McDonald, assisted by Elders John Taylor and Royden Barnhardt. A good spirit prevailed and nearly all seats in the auditorium were filled. The scriptural story of the Last Supper was read by the pastor, and a short talk in the interest of the oblation offering was made by Brother Taylor. The meeting closed with a short talk of instruction by the pastor.

An interesting feature following the class period of the church school was the reading by Maxine Badder of a short story, "Jesus' Home in Nazareth," which she had written herself. Maxine is a member of the junior department, and her story was judged the best of all those submitted by children at Walnut Park in a contest among juniors throughout the city of Zion.

The second issue of the paper sponsored by the religio was distributed Sunday evening, December 2. This paper was issued the first time without a name and subscribers were asked for suggestions as to what it should be called. From the considerable number of names submitted "The Missionary" was chosen and it will appear in the future under that heading.

Elder R. D. Weaver delivered an inspiring and instructive sermon at seven-thirty that evening.

A dinner for the entire congregation of Walnut Park was served in the basement of the church, Monday evening, November 26. About four hundred attended. It was in the nature of a covered-dish luncheon, fellowship being the chief object. An impromptu program was given and talks were made by Apostle J. F. Curtis and Pastor Frank McDonald.

Sister Eleanor Rhoda Whiting, a resident of Walnut Park, died Tuesday morning, November 27, at her home on South Pearl Street. Funeral services were conducted at two-thirty o'clock Friday afternoon, November 30, from the George C. Carson Funeral Home, Elder T. C. Kelley in charge. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Whiting leaves two daughters, Mrs. Genevieve M. Mollison, of the home, and Mrs. Irene Rotzien, Fargo, North Dakota; one son, Laurence C. Whiting, Hibbing, Minnesota; a brother, Winfield W. Gould, Independence.

Miss Roxanna McGinnis and Ernest Baggerly were married at the church Wednesday evening, November 28, at eight forty-five o'clock by Pastor Frank McDonald. Miss Vera Norman was maid of honor and Claude Baggerly, brother of the bridegroom, was groomsman. Following the ceremony a surprise reception was given by the A. W. Z. Class, of which the newlyweds are members.

Liberty Street Church

Different groups in this district are formulating plans whereby they can make Zion a place in which life will be more complete for those already living in the center place and for those who are new arrivals in this community. The most pronounced movement is that led in Group 30 by Elder J. E. Cleveland. The young people of that group have been given the opportunity of helping those who need assistance. Sister Audrey Reed is leader of this group of workers and Fanita Anthony is the secretary.

After this week the Wednesday evening prayer services will be held at the church. This arrangement was made as a result of requests made by several members. The services will be returned to the groups after the series of missionary meetings which will begin January 20.

Elder E. A. Thomas was the speaker Sunday morning. Pastor John R. Lentell of Liberty Street, preached at Malvern Hill Church in Kansas City, Kansas. Sister Lentell took her Clematis Chorus to help in the service.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood was the evening speaker at Liberty Street.

The Las Favoritas Chorus presented a program at Second Church Sunday evening, singing "Praise Ye the Father," "Homeland," and "Ashamed of Jesus."

Enoch Hill Church

Assistant Pastor O. W. Sarratt and wife were given a surprise party at their home Monday night, December 3, in honor of their twentieth wedding anniversary. Their daughter, Louise, arranged the program.

The Saints are pleased to have Sister Cadwell with them again after her long illness, also Sister Sweeney who has been away for several months.

Last Thursday the women's department held their meeting at the home of Sister Esther Kramer, and the morning was spent in quilting. At noon a covered-dish luncheon was served. Sister W. J. Burton, leader of women in Independence, and Sister D. J. Krahl, supervisor of friendly visitors, were the honor guests. The period usually spent in study was turned into a round-table discussion, and much good was received.

Group 33 South honored Elder C. E. Beal on his birthday with a friendly get-together.

Earl Blankenship, son of Sister Allen Blankenship, received a broken jaw in a coasting accident Saturday afternoon.

The theme for December in the church school is "Giving." A beautiful pre-Christmas program was given at the worship period December 9, music being furnished by Sisters C. S. Warren, Millard Pace, Pearl Chrestensen, and Sister George Griffen. Brother Warren read the story of the birth of Christ.

Pastor H. L. Barto was the morning speaker Sunday, and his sermon was most instructive. Music was supplied by the choir and by a local trio.

Apostle J. F. Curtis was the evening speaker.

Spring Branch Church

Speakers the last two Sundays have been Elder J. W. A. Bailey, Elder F. A. Cool, and President Elbert A. Smith.

Sunday, December 2, there were two baptisms between the church school and evening preaching service. The son of Brother and Sister McVay was baptized by J. W. A. Bailey, and the son of Brother and Sister H. C. Edwards was baptized by Elder M. C. Jacobsen. Pictures of these baptisms were taken by Sister Rose Paiste.

All church services are very well attended, and good interest is being shown. The group of young people are willing and ready to take part and do their share.

The night of plays, December 7, given by the young people, enjoyed good attendance. Judges awarded Imogene Dixon and John Weeks first place and Alma Dixon second. The play, "Rubber Boots," given by the Good Fellowship Class and directed by Benson Brown, won first place, and "Where There's a Will There Is a Way," by the boys' class directed by Giles Andes, won second. Part of the proceeds go to buy music for the young people's chorus.

The younger Oriole circle of which Sister Jacobsen is monitor, enjoyed a very happy afternoon December 9, at Martha Lou Edwards' home. They had as guest Almer Sheehy, who gave an interesting talk and planned the games.

Gudgell Park Church

Elder C. A. Kress is continuing his gospel services every Sunday evening. He is using a large two-way chart which makes his sermons more interesting and instructive, especially to the young people.

The religio is progressing in attendance and interest. Sister Joyce Tucker had charge of the programs for November. On November 11, she centered her program about a large picture of Kirtland Temple. Brother Walter Betts gave a description of the interior of the Temple and told of some incidents which had happened there.

On November 11, Sister J. R. Lentell's chorus of girls gave several numbers at the seven-thirty service.

The local priesthood had charge of the sacrament on December 2, and a splendid, spiritual meeting was enjoyed.

Attendance at the Wednesday night prayer meetings has been good.

The contest between the women and girls and men and boys is still going on, and the former are in the lead. The contest was launched to see which side could bring out the largest attendance up to the first of the year.

Kansas City Stake

Word of the improvement of Elder C. D. Jellings of Grandview, who has been seriously ill at a local hospital for the past three weeks, is gladly received. He has now returned to his home, and hopes to resume his work soon.

David Worden, of Fourth Church, is speedily recuperating from an appendicitis operation.

Elder C. E. Wight has been recently confined to his home with an attack of lumbago, but he, too, is recovering rapidly.

Central Church

At the morning service, December 9, Patriarch F. A. Smith preached a splendid sermon, giving the outstanding experiences in the life of Christ, stressing his power and authority, and pointing out the need of following him. The girls' quartet sang.

As a return invitation the Central O. B. K.'s recently gave a ~~had~~ party for the Quindaro group. Everyone had a good time.

Another recent party was given for the Heart of America Chapter of the Graceland Alumni by the ex-president, Roy A. Thrutchley, at his home, December 8.

December 9, Brother and Sister Edgar J. Bleil celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary with a reception at their home for friends and relatives. They have been faithful members of the church for twenty-five years. Brother Bleil serving as deacon. Sunday was also the seventy-fourth birthday of Brother Bleil. She is seventy-two. Their nine living children are all members of the church.

Quindaro Church

The entire congregation has been anxiously waiting for the return of Sister H. A. Higgins who for three weeks has been confined in the Wesley Hospital convalescing from a serious operation. Sister Higgins' presence is greatly missed as well as her talent which she has so freely given to the Saints and friends of Quindaro congregation during the past six years.

On Sunday morning, November 18, at the eleven o'clock hour, Otis Swart, chorister, sponsored a beautiful musical program. Those participating were: Betty Ruth Thorn, Gladys Hawkins, Marjorie Hawkins, Eola Hawkins and Otis Swart.

The attendance at the weekly cottage prayer meetings lead by Brother E. N. Palmer, has been steadily increasing. On Thursday afternoon, November 22, thirty-one Saints met at the home of Elder Elias Dawe and enjoyed a spiritual feast.

Brother John Gross, director of religious education, is actively engaged in outlining a beautiful Christmas program that will be interesting to the entire group.

The women's department, headed by Rebecca Green, is continuing its doughnut sales and evening teas to help meet the branch budget.

Two recent teas have been held at the homes of Lois Luke and Beulah Davis.

The T. A. D.'s, on the evening of November 27, had a wiener roast at the home of Victor and Burhl Hill. The evening was spent in feasting around a warm fire. A Christmas play was outlined and dramatized. Several beautiful L. D. S. hymns climaxed the evening's entertainment.

Armourdale Church

Armourdale congregation which has met at 940 Miami in Kansas City, Kansas, for over fifteen years, moved last week to 1015 Osage. Some of the men of the local congregation, headed by Vern McCann, moved the church equipment to the new place, built in a platform, arranged the pews, and had everything spick and span for the opening meeting on Sunday, December 2.

The opening meeting was a sacrament service in charge of A. R. White who substituted for Pastor T. L. McCormick who was sick. This very fine service was followed by church school worship and study hour.

At 2 p. m. a stake program of felicitation was in charge of Stake President C. G. Mesley. Ernest Hawkins, of Quindaro Church, represented the Aaronic priesthood, W. S. Brown, of Argentine the Melchisedec, Joseph Harrington, of Grandview, the stake high council, S. S. Sandy, of Gladstone, the stake bishopric, and Brother Mesley, the stake presidency, in extending words of greeting and information regarding the work of these various groups in the stake and their relationship to the work at Armourdale. Misses Gladys and Marjorie Hawkins, accompanied by their mother, sang two lovely duets, and Mrs. Lila Paris sang a nice solo.

Brother W. B. Richards, a former pastor at Armourdale, closed the service with a beautiful prayer of dedication and blessing.

In the evening the local congregation furnished the program and Patriarch F. A. Smoth spoke on "What the Church Means to Us."

The congregation feels greatly cheered by the move to more fitting quarters, and they are looking forward to continued and devoted service to the church.

Your mother or father will be pleased with a subscription to the Herald for Christmas. See your publicity agent today.

Jonesport, Maine

Jonesport Branch enjoyed a rally day Sunday, October 7, when President Frederick M. Smith was present. A good crowd attended the Sunday school, and sacrament service followed. The Spirit of the Master was deeply felt by all present. At noon there was a basket lunch in the vestry. In the evening President Smith delivered an inspiring sermon to the congregation on the theme, "The Voice of Authority Versus the Voice of the People."

They appreciated Brother Smith's visit and help at the rally and at Beals' the following Sunday. Always he is a welcome visitor to the local services while he is enjoying much-needed rest which he finds in the seclusion of Halls' Island.

The night before he left for Boston he attended Jonesport's annual harvest supper, and enjoyed meeting the townspeople who are not members of the church.

Sunday, October 14, was observed as rally day by Saints at Beals'. All services were of a high order, and the members felt that they were helped greatly by the presence of those who came to make the day a success. Special attention was given to Brother Smith's afternoon sermon on the Ten Commandments. The evening speaker was Newman Wilson.

On the following Sunday a number of Saints followed the rough, narrow road to South Addison, to meet with the small group there and observe another rally day. At the afternoon service several members of the priesthood gave short talks on gospel themes. The largest attendance was at the evening service.

This branch at South Addison is well cared for by Brother Herbert Ingersoll, branch president, assisted by faithful workers.

The district conference assembled at Kennebec, October 27 and 28, and was a splendid event. The brothers contributing to the success of the gathering included President F. M. Smith and Elder E. F. Robertson. Both of President Smith's sermons were on the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Brother Robertson ably took care of the morning class period and the evening preaching service.

About thirty from Eastern Maine attended the Western Maine conference at Stonington, and brought back excellent reports. It was thought by many to be one of the best ever held at Stonington.

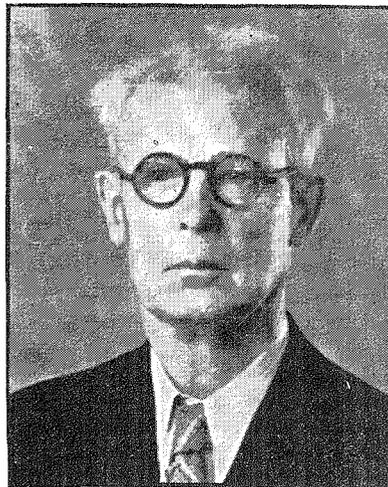

Rally days and conference being over, Jonesport members settled down to their regular routine of activities. One of the things of which they wish to make special mention is the added service of the priesthood class held every Wednesday evening after the prayer service, to take up the study of the Priesthood Journal.

The young people's organization, Zion Builders, under the leadership of Newman Wilson, has been reorganized, and has a membership of nearly fifty. The young people made Thanksgiving Day an occasion for something special in the way of program. To the surprise of the entire assembly seated at the banquet a group of old Pilgrim celebrities appeared, Miles Standish, Governor Bradford, Priscilla and John Alden and four red men. Selected readings from Longfellow's "Courtship of Miles Standish," gave the program a touch of the dramatic. Then the visitors from Plymouth were seated at the tables and the banquet was continued. This idea originated with Brother Wilson.

Before this letter comes to print the group at Jonesport will have had their annual bazaar, and the next thing to claim their attention is the Christmas pageant.

Leon U. Snow

The death of Brother Leon U. Snow Friday, November 30, took from the Stone Church congregation, Independence, a musician and faithful worker. Brother Snow was born July 7, 1868, at Princeton, Illinois. He married Ida L. Jones November 18, 1905, at Canton, Illinois. Later they lived in Omaha and Lincoln, Nebraska. Brother Snow was much interested in orchestral and band work. In the latter place he led two orchestras. Since coming to Independence in 1926, he had been active in musical circles. And the last service he performed was to conduct the weekly rehearsal of his Junior Auditorium Orchestra on Tuesday night, a few hours before he was taken to the Sanitarium. His heart was in his church work, and he is missed by a large group of friends.

Alto, Michigan

Zion's Christian Legion of this branch started holding meetings every two weeks in July, having about twenty charter members. Officers are: Divisional commander, Robert Johnson; secretary, Jane London; treasurer, Clifford Nash; director of solicitation, Allison Roark; director of socialization, Arthur Gibbs; director of publicity, Dorothy Nash.

They have held two socials. One was in September at the home of a legion member. This was a pea soup supper, and it was served by the men of the branch. The other was a halloween box social and masquerade party held at one of the member's homes at Alto. This was much enjoyed by all.

They have programs one Sunday evening each month consisting of speeches by legion members, music by the orchestra, and solos and duets.

The meeting held November 19, at the home of Elder Melvin Ellis, was one of the best conducted and most instructive services they have had. The Sunday evening programs have been uplifting.

This legion organization has done well along the financial line, having taken in a sum of twenty-nine dollars. Prospects are bright for good endeavor and accomplishments in the year ahead.

Wichita, Kansas

Water Street at Osie.—Armistice Day was observed by Wichita members and dedicated to ex-service men. Elder G. Tickemyer was in charge and made a fine talk.

The Book of Mormon Class, under the direction of Sister Bozart, presented to the church a picture, "The Christ Child in the Temple."

November 17 and 18 the young people's institute for Wichita and surrounding branches was in session, and class work was under the direction of President F. M. McDowell. On Saturday evening at six-thirty there was a special musical program; a sermon at seven-thirty by Brother McDowell. At eight-forty-five a reception was held for the out-of-town members. "Forward" was the theme of the institute.

The young people's prayer service convened at 8 a. m. Sunday, Elder Tickemyer in charge, at 11 a. m., preaching by Brother McDowell. The entire sermon was given in prophecy to Wichita Saints and will long be remembered by those who heard it.

President McDowell spoke again Sunday at seven-thirty, his subject being "The King's Highway," a wonderful discourse.

Wichita is happy to report two lovely church weddings. The ceremony uniting Miss Marie McDivitt and Gerald Houser, November 10, was solemnized at 9:30 p. m., Elder Tickemyer officiating. The bride was accompanied by her bridesmaid, Miss Vera Whipple, and Robert Boltjes was best man.

The marriage of Miss Lucille Keirns, and Walter Stewart was solemnized at 2 p. m. Sunday, November 11, Elder Tickemyer officiating. Miss Pauline Stewart was bridesmaid, and the bridegroom was attended by William Keirns.

Scranton, Pennsylvania

Scranton members are well pleased with the appearance of their church since it was painted.

Their first service held in the church after the improvements had been made was one of baptism. Five candidates were inducted into the kingdom; eight-year-old Doris Watkins and her mother, Mrs. Thomas Watkins, Mary Hughes, Dorothy Carris, and Evelyn Carris. Pastor Ernest Davies was in charge of the service and gave an interesting talk on the necessity of baptism and its advantages. The charge of baptism was given by William Davis, also a short talk by James Jenkins. A special prayer was given in behalf of the candidates by Alfred Jones. Elder Richard Hawkins officiated in the baptizing.

The October communion service was in charge of Elders Ernest Davies, Richard Hawkins and Alfred Jones, and at this time the candidates were confirmed the service being most helpful and outstanding.

In October the church school held its fall rally. A program for the day was arranged and well taken care of. The church school is under the supervision of Priest John Jenkins.

The young people's department has been busy. On November 2, they gave a playlet of their own making for which they deserve much credit. The play consisted of nursery rhyme characters. After the program refreshments were served in the lower auditorium and proceeds went to buy coal for the church.

Patriarch George Robley visited Scranton not long ago, and left words of encouragement. Always he is a welcome visitor.

On Tuesday evening John Morgan, one of the oldest and most active members, was proud to sing one of his own compositions, "My Zion Home." The audience joined in the chorus. Brother Hanson commended Brother Morgan on his good work.

Scranton Saints extend their sympathy to Sister Gertrude Moses, at one time a member of this branch but now of Independence, Missouri. Word has been received of her illness, and the home Saints are remembering her in their prayer services.

The Advent of Love

Softer than flight of tawny owl in the tender dim of June,
More dear to the heart than the curlew's cry, or the rushing river's tune, Brighter than ray of rising sun on the dew-bathed heathery ben Falls the first touch of infinite Love on the weary hearts of men.

Conference Minutes

WESTERN MAINE.—Conference of this district opened November 2, at 7 p. m., the first session being devoted to a program in which young people's groups from Vinalhaven, Rockland, Dixfield, and Stonington, participated. At 8 a. m. Saturday the Saints gathered for prayer and testimony, and this service was spiritually uplifting. Class periods followed at 9:45 and 11 a. m., in charge of Elder Archie Begg and Bernard B. Holland, respectively. Each presented subject matter that was educational and timely. At a brief business session at 1:30 p. m., it was decided to hold the next business conference at the call of the presidency of the district at Vinalhaven sometime next May or June. Following this session Brother Bernard B. Holland had the pleasure of leading his wife into the waters of baptism. She was confirmed Sunday morning at the sacrament service. The evening of Saturday, from five o'clock on, was devoted to a banquet followed by speeches. Short talks were heard from E. L. Traver, B. B. Holland, Archie Begg, Harlan H. Billings, Ion Ainsworth, Newman M. Wilson, and President Frederick M. Smith. The last named was the guest of honor and principal speaker. Sacrament service at 8 a. m. Sunday, was conducted as nearly as possible according to a plan suggested by President Smith, and was spiritually helpful and impressive. After this session a woman was baptized by Elder E. F. Robertson. Classes were conducted at ninety-five by Bishop E. L. Traver, and at eleven o'clock by President Smith. The former presented phases of the financial law and President Smith used for his theme, "The Importance of the Sacraments," emphasizing the sacrament of the Lord's Supper and its observance. He continued this topic at the afternoon session at two-thirty. After this service, many visiting Saints left for their homes, and the evening was dark and rainy, however, the house was filled at 7 p. m. for the closing sermon by Elder Newman M. Wilson. This was one of the most outstanding conferences ever held in this district.

Our Departed Ones

NEWSTEAD.—Annie Hamilton-Newstead, wife of Albert E. Newstead, was born February 8, 1874, at Saint Mary's, Ontario. After a short illness she died in Saint Jerome's Hospital, Batavia, New York, November 25, 1934, where she had lived for the past twenty years. She was baptized into the church June 21, 1891, by R. C. Evans, and confirmed by R. C. Evans, J. H. Lake, and W. Strange. Leaves to mourn, her husband, and two sons, Robert E. and David H. The funeral was held from the Saints' church in Saint Marys, Ontario, her old hometown, J. V. Gleason, pastor, officiating.

JONES.—Christina F. Jones was born at Ithaca, New York, May 19, 1845. She married E. L. Jones who died May 25, 1922. She passed away October 25, 1934, leaving only one son, H. A. Jones, of Vancouver, Washington, to mourn. She lived at Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Madison, South Dakota, until 1903, when she moved to Sara, Washington, living there two years. In 1905, she moved to Vancouver. She was baptized into the church June 22, 1898. Her gracious hospitality made her a host of friends. The close of her life was made increasingly beautiful by her faith and love.

SCHIBIK.—Edna Marie Schibik was born at Morgantown, West Virginia, December 27, 1926, the daughter of Rinehart H. and Bessie Rodgers Schibik. She died at her home at New Castle, Pennsylvania, November 24, 1934. Four brothers preceded her in death. She leaves to mourn, her parents; one brother, Thomas; her grandfather, Anthony Schibik, of Morgantown. Private funeral services were conducted November 25, at Morgantown, W. G. McCune in charge.

DWYER.—Daniel Marion Dwyer was born in Indiana; January 27, 1857, and passed away after a short illness at the home of his son, Orbie, November 26, 1934. Daniel was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, July 27, 1877.

August 24, 1882, he married Miss Minerva Angeline Trotter, of Cameron, and to this union were born one girl, Pearl Visa, who passed on at the age of thirty-seven; two sons, Vernie Byron, who died in infancy, and Orbie Lester, of Cameron, with whom he made his home. His wife preceded him to the great beyond in January, 1931. He leaves to mourn one son, Orbie Lester, of Cameron; three brothers, William Dwyer, of Cameron; James Dwyer, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and Charles Dwyer, of Saint Joseph, Missouri; one sister, Maggie Davis, of Saint Joseph, Missouri; seven grandchildren, one great-grandchild, and a host of friends. Funeral services were held at Cameron in charge of S. H. Simmons; burial in Graceland Cemetery, Cameron.

DAY.—Charles C. Day was born May 23, 1860. He leaves to mourn, his wife, Elizabeth; two sons, Roy and Carl, and three grandsons. United with the church in 1899, being baptized October 15. He was a man of helpful disposition who had many friends. His sudden death, November 7, 1934, was due to heart trouble, and he was buried from the Saints' church, 2020 Ashby Avenue, Berkeley, California. The committal service was in beautiful Mountian View Cemetery. The sermon was by J. B. Carmichael.

HUTCHINSON.—William Henry Hutchinson was born at Durand, Wisconsin, June 1, 1861. Departed this life November 6, 1934. He was united in marriage to Stella C. Shellito, May 28, 1883, and to them six children were born. Leaves to mourn, his wife, and all of his children: Mrs. Maude Shedd, Eldorado Springs, Missouri; Mrs. Elodia Lacous, Los Angeles, California; Mrs. Cecil Betterly, Rock Elm, Wisconsin; Mrs. Birdie Lee, Independence, Missouri; Lester G. Hutchinson, Chilhowee, Missouri; Mrs. Eunice Savage, Lees Summit, Missouri; one adopted son, Rollie Lee Hutchinson, Kansas City, Missouri; twenty-six grandchildren, five great-grandchildren; one sister, Mrs. Bertha Mellon, Conneaut Lake, Pennsylvania, and numerous other relatives and friends. He united with the Reorganized Church, August 25, 1895, and was a willing worker for the Master. The funeral was held at Post Oak Church, sermon by T. C. Scarcliff. Interment was in Mineral Creek Cemetery.

BURWELL.—Hazel Pearl Maginnis was born May 12, 1888, at Aurora, Illinois; departed this life October 31, 1934, after an illness of over nine months. When sixteen years old she became a member of the church at Plano, and was faithful till death. At the age of twenty-eight she married H. Wesley Burwell, and since that time they had lived at Louisville. To them three children were born: Robert James, 16; Harry Wesley, Jr., 10, and Lois Jean, 8. Besides these she leaves her father, John L. Maginnis; one brother, Donald Earl Maginnis, both of Westmont, Illinois, and many other relatives and friends. Her passing will leave a great vacancy in the hearts of many outside of her family and church. She was a great worker in the Parent-Teacher Association in Louisville, holding office and giving of her ability and time. The funeral was held at the Saints' church at Louisville, J. O. Dutton preaching the sermon. Interment was in Evergreen Cemetery, Louisville.

HARDING.—Andrew Thomas Harding was born September 8, 1860, at Gallion, Crawford County, Ohio, and passed away November 9, 1934. He was united in marriage to Harriet Matilda Cave February 22, 1882. To this union nine children were born six of whom survive him. He had been acquainted with the teachings of the church for a good many years, but did not fully make up his mind to obey until about three years ago. At the time of his baptism he was confined to his bed with sickness, but he determined to be obedient to the commands of the Lord and with the help of his loved ones, he prepared himself for baptism. He lived in comparative health afterward and when he was called to the great beyond, he went suddenly to sleep. He was buried in the cemetery at Garden City, Kansas, his home. His wife still lives in their home at Garden City. Elder Arthur E. Stoff had charge of the services.

THOMAS.—Margaret Treharne, of Llanelly, Wales, daughter of William and Elizabeth Treharne, was born January 30, 1864. Was baptized into the church, July 23, 1880, by Elder Alma N. Bishop. She married John Thomas, of Llanelly, July 12, 1891, and to them were born three sons: William Samuel and Thomas John who survive their mother.

and Garfield, who died in infancy. Her husband died September 30, 1923. About a year ago Sister Thomas was taken ill, and since July she had been confined to her bed. Passed away November 5, 1934, after patient suffering. The funeral service was conducted by John W. Rushton, and interment was in Box Cemetery, Llanely. Besides her two sons and daughters-in-law, there mourn her demise, two sisters, Mrs. Eliza Amiah Dennis, of Loughor, and Catherine Treharne, an invalid, of Llanely, and many friends. Sister Thomas was faithful to the gospel message and in her unobtrusive way loyally upheld the truth. Her hospitality and kindness to missionaries will be remembered.

BENZING.—Christian Benzing was born at Hersey, Osceola County, Michigan, May 1, 1876, and passed away November 8, 1934, in the home where he was born and had always lived. He leaves his wife, one son, and two daughters. Funeral services were held in the congregational church at Hersey, Michigan, November 11, 1934, the sermon being preached by Alvin R. Ellis. Interment was at Hersey.

BROKENSHERE.—Jane Brown was born June 6, 1862, daughter of Cordelia and Jared Brown, in Huron County, near Exeter, Ontario. She was baptized in 1885 by Elder Samuel Brown. In 1885, she married Samuel F. Brokenshere who died in 1928. She passed to rest November 25, 1934, leaving two sons: Doctor Freeman A. Brokenshere, Windsor, Ontario, and Norman Brokenshere, of Saint Thomas; four grandsons, and four sisters and one brother: Mrs. Eliza Murdy, Gainsville, Virginia; Mrs. Adaline Gray, Saint Thomas, Ontario; Mrs. Alma Cade, Capac, Michigan, and Ida May Brown, Independence, Missouri, and Seth Brown, Staffa, Ontario, and a host of friends. The funeral took place November 27, Elder Percy Farrow and Bishop J. C. Dent in charge.

DOHERTY.—Rose M. Doherty entered into rest October 26, 1934. She was born in 1863, at Hadley, Michigan. Was baptized at South Boardman, by J. J. Cornish, over forty years ago. She and her husband possessed splendid musical talent, and were a great help when Brother Cornish opened up the work at that place. She was of a cheerful and kind disposition. Was the mother of ten children. Her husband and five children survive her. The funeral was held at the Methodist Church at Fife Lake, Michigan, sermon by Elder A. R. Ellis, assisted by the Reverend Barker, of the Methodist Church. Interment was in Fife Lake Cemetery.

GARDNER.—Orma G. Pierson was born at Sterling, New Jersey, September 7, 1858, and died October 9, 1934, at the home of her daughter in Detroit. In 1879, she became the wife of G. Mack Gardner, and they made their home at South Boardman, Michigan, for fifty-three years. She was baptized about forty years ago by J. J. Cornish, and lived a beautiful, Christian life. She was the mother of ten children seven of whom with her aged companion, survive her. They are Mrs. Nellie Doherty, of Detroit; Clarence and Mrs. Eunice Christopher, of Traverse City; Oral, of South Boardman; George, of Arizona; Frank, of Flint, and John, of Hollywood, California. BURKHOLDER.—John R. Burkholder was born September 18, 1850, at London, Ontario, and passed away August 21, 1934, at his home at South Boardman, Michigan. He was baptized October 26, 1902, by Amos Berve, and confirmed by E. A. Goodwin and J. J. Cornish. The gospel brought great joy into his life, and after his ordination first as a priest and later as an elder, he rejoiced to tell the gospel story. His whole ambition was to live to please God and be worthy to meet him. Surviving are his widow, two sons, and four daughters. Funeral services were held at South Boardman, the sermon by Alvin R. Ellis. Interment was in Fife Lake Cemetery.

SHEPPARD.—Jane Sheppard was born August 17, 1862, at Glasgow, Scotland. Married John Sheppard in 1884. Was baptized into the church during the winter of 1893. Died November 22, 1934, at Monaca, Pennsylvania. She was a good mother and a devoted member of the church. Left to mourn are her husband, John Sheppard, and the following children: James, Arthur, Lewis, John, and Chloe Marshall; sixteen grandchildren, and many friends. Funeral services were held in the Batchelder Funeral Home, Rochester, Pennsylvania. Interment was in Union Cemetery, Monaca, November 24, 1934, James E. Bishop in charge.

WILLIS.—Kaziah Elizabeth Gradon, daughter of William and Martha Gradon, was born at Schackleford, Butler County, Alabama, May 13, 1861. She married William Floyd

Willis in 1880, and to them seven children were born, two daughters, Mrs. Maud Coley, of Atmore, Alabama, and Mrs. Bertha Kelley, of Milton, Florida, and five boys: Floyd C., William Foster, John Shelton, and Fred E., of Pensacola, Florida, and Don Carlos, of Milton, Florida. She is also survived by twenty-three grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, two brothers, and three sisters. She and her family moved to Florida in 1904. Her husband took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, where they lived until 1920. Since that time she had lived with her daughter, Mrs. Kelley, near the Coldwater Branch. Joined the church when a young girl and kept the faith, being a diligent worker for truth. She was a hospitable, generous, and lovable character, one always known for good. Her death, October 25, 1934, at the home of her son, J. S. Willis in Pensacola, came after a short illness though she had been in failing health for some time. The funeral was conducted in West Cemetery near Coldwater Branch, where she was interred. A. D. McCall preached the sermon, assisted by C. T. West.

VAN WORMER.—Leland Van Wormer, son of Brother and Sister William Van Wormer, passed away at the State Hospital at Ann Arbor, Michigan, November 17, 1934. He was twenty-three years old and had been a great sufferer for over a year. He is survived by his wife and one little son besides his parents, two sisters, and a brother. The funeral was at the undertaking parlors, and sermon by Alvin R. Ellis. Interment was at South Boardman, Michigan.

There Came Wise Men

*O*F OLD the world had foolish men,
Who rendered homage, here or there,
To all the gods folks worshiped then,—
Their altars calling everywhere.
Past every altar, every feast,
There came three wise men from the East.

*T*O-DAY are many altars raised,
To many gods, both new and old,
Whose names by foolish men are praised,—
The gods of passion and of gold.
Past every worldly shrine, though fair,
Wise men still go—Christ is not there.

*W*HERE Fashion gathers her devout,
Pleasure and Greed their devotees,
There is no room—these shut Him out,—
The Inn is closed by their decrees.
Past such all wise men have and hold
Their way, and find Christ, as of old.

Pigeonhole

■ The Greatest Gift

Once upon a time there was a king whose daughter was to be married to a neighboring prince. On the day of the wedding the king sat on his throne to see what gifts the great men of the kingdom would bring to the royal couple.

One came from the mines who said, "I give them riches." And his servants poured out before the young couple a store of jewels and gold that dazzled the eyes of all who were present. Another came who said, "I give them abundance," and a train of his servants brought a vast store of fruits and grains in beautiful and curiously wrought containers. Many were the gifts piled high that day. The king himself arose and said, "I give them power," and turned over to them the sovereignty of a great realm with many subjects.

Pushing his way forward, unattended and poorly clad, came one who bore in his hands only a shepherd's staff. As he raised his hands a halo of light surrounded his head, and he said, "I give them love."

■ Christmas in the Pigeon Family

Pigeon says: "People who look upon Christmas as a season of trading gifts never enjoy it very much. They're always so badly disappointed if what they get isn't twice as good as what they sent. The way to enjoy Christmas is to give because you like folks, and forget that you wanted anything."

Pigeonnette says: "All the same, if I don't give him something pretty good, he will mope around looking glum for a month."

Poblem says: "When it snows, don't forget to throw some crumbs and meat scraps out for the birds. I'll get my share!"

Sponsibility says: "The woman who gives her husband a set of embroidered dresser doilies for Christmas is no worse than the man who gives his wife a washing machine. When you're selecting gifts, be human!"

■ Friendly Tips

SERMON ILLUSTRATIONS

A reader protests: "I am tired of baseball illustrations in sermons. They are uniformly dull, and they make no point clear that I have not already understood. No explanation is good if it is superfluous, even in illustrations. I admit a degree of mental incompetence, but I think I am average. And even from the depths of my ignorance I resent the implications of feeble-mindedness that the use of baseball illustrations indicate. Don't misunderstand me—I like a baseball game, but I am tired of hearing it played in the pulpit."

Perhaps what is needed is the enterprise and imagination to seek new and varied illustrations for our talks and sermons.

The Temporal Law—and Christmas

There has existed in this church, at least among its active members, the feeling that membership in the church is a partnership with Deity, and this, too, without either a distortion or misunderstanding of the relations which must exist between the creature and its Creator. The solemn covenant of obedience to the mandates of the Master made when inductance into the Kingdom is had is sure, when properly comprehended, to have duly impressed the supremacy of the all Father and the sacred solemnity of the consequent childhood. But to sense at the same time a closeness of touch with Divinity which bespeaks a Divine interest in all our conduct and being brings an elation of soul which is a dynamic of spiritual development and activity powerful as a religious stimulant, and will at the same time function as a motivation for a more righteous attitude and conduct in industrial and economic relations. This becomes the genius of our system of churchly financial obligations and duties.

Thus envisaged the financial obligations and duties imposed by the system of tithing is comprehended as just and equitable, and at the same time there will be created a desire to do more than the lesser requirements of the law—there will be created the will to do more than the law requires. Thus it is that one can “live above the law.”

It is a wonderful idea to believe and feel that even in the conduct of our vocations we have as a silent partner, yet an ever present one, the great Being to whom we look as the all-Father, and whom we revere as the Ruler of the universe. This looked at there will never be disposition to quibble as to the minimum amount due Him, but there will be joyful effort to do beyond question our full amount and more. And we have long recognized that the paying of tithing punctilliously is but giving recognition to this much to be desired partnership, and that, this start made, we will be looking about for opportunity for greater service.

Perhaps at no time or season of the year should this partnership function more joyously than at that one we characterize as the season of “Peace on earth and good will to man.” Then we think of God’s gift to man, and we experience the expansion of good will till we have a dynamic desire to bring gifts to loved ones and friends. We give and forget the gift, not following it with either the desire or belief that it will be returned. We give because our hearts long to express appreciation of and thankfulness for loved ones and those drawn close to us by bonds of fraternity.

We make these gifts because of Him by whose name we call the season; for when we bestow bounties with an expressed “Merry Christmas,” we point consciously or otherwise to the Great Gift of Deity to man.

But do we always appreciate or express in these fraternal gifts real love for the Master? Can our contributions be made to more clearly and emphatically express our love to and adoration for this Prince of Peace? It is true that when we show regard for or kindness to the least of mankind we perform that which is pleasing to Him; but there ought to be more of an inclination to do more specifically that which might be counted as for Him. To do those things which will promote the work of the church militant means direct service to the Master. To live up to the full requirements of the financial law in addition keeping the spiritual commandments in righteousness is one way in which we can display our desire and determination to cooperate with Him in the accomplishment of Divine will on earth. But love for him will do more, and prompt us to make real and substantial sacrifice. To pay tithes is not to make sacrifice, that is merely “squaring accounts” with our partner. To go beyond that and sacrifice according as we may have been blessed in basket and in store, in flock and in bin, in prosperity and in wealth, is to advance towards a commensurate expression of our love and adoration, and these lie beyond mere duty.

There is scarcely a factor going to make up the equation of personal happiness and the merriness of Christmas-tide which looms larger than consciousness of religious duty well performed. To go into the Christmas season with the knowledge that our full duty to the church in a temporal way has helped the church to that extent at least to discharge its responsibility in doing the Master’s will, will be to enhance the good cheer which will enter into our enjoyment of the good will and peace of the Christmas-tide.

Let us bring to the altar the priceless gift of duty well performed.

Christmas and the Christ Spirit

When early Christian missionaries went from Rome into the lands of the barbarians in the north and west of Europe, they found that although they could teach religion to the people they could not make them forget the pagan festivals, dances, and celebrations. Rather than fail in their objectives, they adopted the pagan festivals into their own calendar of events, renamed them, and tried to tone them down to the level of normal Christian standards. Thus the celebrations of the druids and the practices of the pagans found survival among Christian people under a new name. Among these survivals is Christmas.

St. Nicholas in ancient days may have been a Christian but at this season of the year we find nearly all the world paying tribute to a Santa Claus that is pretty much of a pagan. He is worshiped in the shops and department store; he receives tribute from the multitudes in the streets, and he has nearly displaced the Christ to whom the whole period of Christmas is supposed to be dedicated.

Now the spirit of Christmas is a commendable thing, especially when it is, as one writer called it, "the spirit of loving and giving." Generosity is a fine thing, even if you have to wrap it in red and green paper and decorate it with tinsel to make it attractive. And the Santa Claus legend means a great deal to the children. It is not the purpose of the church to deprive the world of one bit of joy, nor to frown upon clean wholesome fun.

But in the church Christ should remain at the center of the Christmas festival. Regardless of historical accuracy, it is good at one time of the year to celebrate His birth. In the church and on the altar Santa Claus should not crowd forward to a place of pre-eminence; he should be just one more of the famous who pay tribute to the Child King. Let him hold forth by his tree in the corner, if you will. But save the altar for Christ, and let your worship service really center upon Him.

If the world needs anything, it needs to turn to Christ, and there is no finer opportunity of presenting him to the young than in the story of His birth.

There are many ways of presenting Christ to the church at Christmas time in an attractive way. Through the reading of the beautiful story in the Scriptures, through the preaching of the word; in pageant, tableau, or drama; in hymns, cantatas, vocal or instrumental music; in art or in lighted displays. There are great resources in literature for things of this sort.

Not one of the happy and pleasant features of the Christmas festival need to be disturbed, but it is the function of the church to turn men to Christ. There is no better time to do this than at Christmas time, when we celebrate His birth.

Across the Desk

A LETTER handed me by Brother Elbert from Brother N. T. Chapman indicates that the latter is fighting a losing battle with pernicious anemia. We writes to Brother Elbert as a loved brother and pal, recalling the times they labored together in the vineyard of the Lord. The letter, though brief, displays a touching but beautiful spirit of resignation which can only be displayed by one who has been a faithful man and a devoted worker. Too weak to write more he closes with, "Love and best wishes, and the same to Fred M." We grieve to see the affliction of our noble workers, but rejoice that they so splendidly display the calm spirit of those who view the sunset of life with equanimity and poise, for thus they show contact with Divinity.

ELDER B. S. LAMBKIN of Burksville, Illinois, writes that at the recent district conference at Belleville he was chosen to carry the responsibility of district president, having associated with him Brother Roy Remington and Brother Edgar Boren as counselors.

He speaks highly of the work of Brother Garver of the Quorum of Twelve at the conference and also tells of Brother Edgar L. Boren having been ordained to office of elder.

Brother Lambkin feels the pressure of responsibility and is now concerned as to how he can find time to give to the district the care which it needs.

I RECEIVED a letter recently from Brother G. J. Waller of Honolulu which he wrote after having read the Priesthood Journal, which seemed to call to his mind a letter of appreciation he had received from one of the good sisters of Hawaii. A Sister who signed herself "Alice," writing from Hilo to Brother Waller recently, spoke of the fact that two days hence would be Brother Waller's birthday and she extended congratulations, and then significantly added, in a way which indicates the fine spiritual service which Brother Waller is giving to his flock in the Hawaiian Islands, "Father, you are one of the men living in this world that is looked upon like Christ. You are loved by the different branches of the church in the Territory without your knowing it. You deserve that love."

I doubt not that Brother Waller found reason to rejoice in these few words of praise, and in these

The Christmas Star Speaks

By Camilla Collins

'Tis but an hour! The shadows lengthen o'er the earth. Soon, I shall shower my silv'ry sparklets. Ah! even now the twilight deepens. I begin to glow. I feel the warmth. My beams glisten! . . . I can see! . . . I can see!

How beautiful the earth! the swaying trees, the dusky fields! The lovely hills look up at me . . . In yonder fold, the sheep stir restlessly. . . . 'Tis growing darker . . . I must shed forth a brighter gleam . . .

"Look!" the lowly shepherds cry, "Behold! the Star! the Star!" They tremble and fall, bewildered by my light. I do not wish to frighten them. Joyous is my mission.

"Kind shepherds, look to me! I am the Emblem of Hope" . . . Alas! If I could only make them hear . . . I shall call louder.

"Catch my gleam, good shepherds. 'Tis a symbol of the greatest promise made to man." . . . They hear not my voice; but the Father heareth. His mighty angel descends, crying,

"Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the City of David, a Savior, which is Christ, the Lord. And this is the way you shall find the babe. He is wrapped in swaddling clothes and is lying in a manger."

Ah! how radiantly happy the shepherds seem as a multitude of the Heavenly Host sing, "Glory to God in the highest; and on earth peace, good will to men."

"Hasten to Bethlehem, dear shepherds. I shall light your way and watch over your flocks till the new day dawns."

Once more, the shadowy wings of night softly enfold the earth. Again a filmy cloud unveils my view. . . . Who are these three so splendidly attired, pausing at the palace gates? Messengers to the King, perchance! . . . But lo! they depart . . . Could it be they, too, are traveling to Bethlehem? . . . How joyously they greet my rays! . . . I would that I might journey with so wondrous a caravan. Perhaps they bear gifts to the new born king. . . .

Ah! I am moving! . . . Surely the great Father of Light giveth the Power! . . . They follow me! On and on we go!

"Do not weary, brave comrades, for not far off I see, nestled in the hills, a little city. 'Tis Bethlehem, the birthplace of our Lord! Dear followers, I shall light the sacred village while you rest." . . .

At last! they near the gate. Now, they enter . . . a pause! . . . Truly, there are many stables! But I shall help them.

"Come! circling beams, send forth thy radiant light in one glorious gleam o'er the manger where the Christ Child sleeps." . . .

The camels quicken their steps. Ah! they reach the door! . . . I wish that I, too, might see the Heavenly Babe. But I have fulfilled my mission. Alas! at dawning, I shall be no more. But in the hearts of men, I, the Star of the East shall glow . . . Forever!

Organization and Activity Notes

THE DORIAN LITERARY SOCIETY

The Dorian Literary Society

The picture shows members of the original study group of the Dorian Literary Society. This group originated with a desire on the part of several young people in the Leichhardt Branch to enter upon activities centered around the study and practice of literature. From a purely local group, the Society has extended its activities till it now numbers among its members as associates young people in many centers of the church throughout Australia.

The society's class has undertaken serious studies in the history and development of English Literature, literary appreciation, prosody and original composition. Extensive work has been done in the writing of essays, poems, stories, etc. Examinations conducted upon strictly academic lines have been conducted to determine the proficiency of the members of the class.

Perhaps the most ambitious attempt of the society has been the publication of a quarterly magazine, The Dorian, composed entirely of original work by members of the society and others interested in this class of activity. The publication of this magazine was commenced almost two years ago and has since continued at quarterly intervals. Interest in the publication, which is widely commended for its quality and the standard of its production, has steadily increased.

Recently the society has evolved a scheme of conducting correspondence courses in English Literature and allied subjects for the benefit of young people in distant centers who are denied the opportunity of participation in class activities along these lines. A number are now enrolled under this scheme and report great interest in and enjoyment of the courses with which they have been furnished. In such activities as those mentioned, the Dorian Society is successfully carrying on a work unique in the history of the Australian Mission. The original members of the society feel greatly encouraged as a result of the success that has thus far attended their efforts to develop themselves and others in a profitable line of activity.

The Society has provided for several grades of members. First there are regular members, those attending the class sessions of the society at Leichhardt, but who have not fulfilled the conditions necessary for being raised to the higher grades of membership. Next, there are the graduate members—those who have fulfilled certain conditions, including the amassing of a minimum of 200 credits awarded for attendance at class sessions and for study activities, including the passing of examinations. Provision has also been made, in the articles of the society, for the conferring of life memberships upon persons deemed eligible by vote of the society. The stipulation was made that no such life memberships should be conferred till after the society had been in existence for at least two years. A recent meeting of the society conferred this honor upon five of its members, who have been active participants in its work since its inception. Those so honored were Sister Mabel Brown and Brother D. Johnson, W. Johnson, S. Broadhead and G. Gillard. At the same time, the society decided to confer honorary life memberships upon Apostle G. G. Lewis and upon Brother Walter Johnson, who is at present in America.

In addition to the grades mentioned above, the society also provides for associate members—those who are resi-

Michigan Musical Movement

By Louise Evans

Franklyn Weddle, Flint, Michigan is on the job in an effort to organize the sixty piece orchestra which he plans to have ready for its debut at the annual Legion banquet and convention, June 1935. Questionnaires are being forwarded to branch pastors to determine the number of instrumentalists and their training and experience. If for some reason you fail to receive one write directly to Brother Weddle enclosing a stamped envelope. Do not procrastinate in forwarding these to him as he in turn will send you the music to practice. Time is short but we can do it if we have a "mind to work."

Lansing Choir members under the direction of Mrs. Martha Luce stop at no handicap! They had no trained director but had enough initiative to go out and hire one. Some splendid work is the result. This coupled with a good degree of spirituality assures support to the M. M. M.

Muskegon, Michigan, has some excellent talent and is diligently working under Sister Wilma Bushor. Their willingness to cooperate is an indication that they too will contribute much to the musical movement.

Belding choir has been on the job from the beginning and are always first in purchasing the music. John Wiley and wife are doing well in the furthering of musical interests.

The Alto or Alaska branch is progressive in more than one way. They too are working on the 1935 series of anthems and at present the writer is meeting with them once a week. The attendance is about thirty with prospects of more. Allison Roark as chorister is fine to work with.

Excellent reports are coming in regarding the Hammond, Indiana choir. They, too, overcame the handicap of directorship and hired an outsider. We expect to see Dennison Smith bring his group to the Legion convention prepared to sing in the two hundred voice choir.

Grand Rapids is not behind, but is making fine progress both numerically and musically under Gladys Silsby.

This movement is growing. Sister Percy Farrow is making an effort in Ontario and we are hoping for support from the London district with Brother Withrow in charge. Sister Atkinson of St. Marys, Ontario, although not privileged to be associated with a choir is working on the anthems in her home. Sister Moore, of Windsor has assured us she will have her district working, so we will be happy to have these splendid Canadian contributions.

The Financial Law and Missionary Work

By Paul M. Hanson

of the Quorum of Twelve

PAUL M. HANSON

THE DIVINE CALL to the church is for it to mingle with all peoples in relationships that give clearness to the meaning and purpose of human life. To permeate society with the saving and preservative truth of Christ is now, ever has been, and always will be the calling of his followers. To the extent this work is achieved determines their spiritual health.

Any undue separateness that would cause the church to be regarded as not aggressively and sacrificially concerned with the weal or woe of others, with their spiritual, intellectual, and physical betterment, would be attended by irreparable loss to the prestige of the church as a divine institution. It would be the result of a spiritual blindness strikingly contrary to the coming of Christ into the world to bring salvation.

No one can maintain the joy of salvation when one's hope in Christ is encompassed merely by his own life. Christ is the "Light of the World," and his light amidst his disciples should similarly shine forth.

The field of activities of the church of the living God embraces every nation, kindred, tongue and people.

What soul is desirous of the effulgent glory of Christ's life teachings, and promises to remain unexpressed?

Life is a very great enigma to myriads. Many in various churches who hold the truth of Christianity in fragmentary form have been seriously puzzled by conditions and events that have brought to them sore distress. Even some in our own ranks are bewildered by the turn of circumstances in their lives. Never has there been a time when the light and joy and hope in Christ was more needed than in this age in which men's hearts are "failing them for fear for the things which are coming on the earth."

The world needs, and is therefore entitled to a lucid interpretation of the present times, a warning voice of the dangers and desolation attending God being exiled from the human heart, the glad tidings of the Gospel making clear the unchangeability, impartiality, and accessibility of the Creator, the life-giving teachings and promises of Christ, a knowledge of the sureness of his pardoning power attending repentance, an acquaintance with the Book of Mormon which peculiarly sets forth the causes of the rise and fall of nations, and a proclamation of the decrees of God relating to the building of Zion as a city of refuge and holiness, to which children of God will be gathered from all nations.

The whence and whither of man and the purpose of human life are not satisfactorily answered outside Christianity. To the church belongs the royal privilege and awe-inspiring responsibility of letting the light of God—the fullness of the Gospel—shine to the world. To the extent that the Son of God who is walking among our congregations is perceived and appreciated by them, this work is being done.

Even an elementary conception of the work of Christ leads to an ever increasing extension of it into other fields. This is in accord with what was brought to the attention of our church as follows:

"Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the extent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.

The storehouse of the Lord should be unstintingly provisioned for prosecuting the "missionary work in this land and abroad." To the accomplishing of this work all may contribute. At least as glorious a command applies to this epoch of spiritual activity as the following that was given to Isreal:

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

"And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightful land, saith the Lord of hosts." —Malachi 3: 10-12.

Mere material wealth is not sufficient to bring about the reign of Christ in the hearts of men; such alone was not enjoined by the prophet to be brought into the Lord's storehouse. Israel had been foolishly indulging such thoughts concerning the Lord as "Wherein hast thou loved us?" "Wherein have we despised thy name?" "Wherein have we polluted thee?" "Wherein have we wearied him?" These queries were definitely answered. Then the Lord said "Return unto me, and I will return unto you;" to which they responded with "Wherein shall we return?" The divine answer was then given in the form of this command: "Bring ye all of the tithes into the storehouse." That is, in the making of physical offerings, let there at the same time be liberated and put into operation the spiritual forces that lead to the establishing of the righteousness of God. The same thought is included in these words of Jesus:

"Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."—Mathew 23: 23.

It is indisputable that the righteousness required of the scribes and Pharisees should at least be equaled today by the members of the church.

Who can imagine greater wooing or converting forces in operation than "judgment, mercy, and faith?" The sacred fund of tithing and active missionary work are inseparably associated.

The church, considered individually, or as a general body, is in an unpraiseworthy condition if it is satisfied with ninety-nine percent of practical missionary zeal. The parable of the Shepherd having "ninety and nine" of his sheep in safety, yet went and risked his life for the one that was lost, reveals our only proper course.

Only a little reflection is required to sense that one hundred percent of missionary zeal is needed in the church balanced by one hundred percent of financial support.

Our church should be renowned wherever known for prayer and judgment and mercy and sacrifice and intelligent missionary endeavor.

The excellence of man revealed in his possession of such god-like qualities as the power to know, the power to love, and the power to determine one's actions, should lead to a cheerful compliance with the divine obligations bearing on tithes and missionary enterprise.

Material possessions are very important when employed as a trust and in accordance with uplifting ideals; when otherwise used spiritual darkness may blind until the portals of hell are entered before sensing clearly the broad way has been traversed.

A no less divine command now exists to the church than "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse." This, properly observed, will be accompanied by joy and peace and missionary progress and a sense of security.

expressions of appreciation he finds his greatest reward for the years of service that he has so unflinchingly and faithfully given to the work of the church.

IN A RECENT LETTER from Brother Roy S. Budd, written from his field, he speaks of the condition of the work at Houston, where he had just spent a week-end, and among other things he speaks of a weekly paper of four pages as follows:

"The branch there is publishing a weekly paper of four pages. It is on the plan of a free sheet. To date twelve hundred is their number, but they hope to increase it. It is distributed by the scouts, and the advertising pays for it. It appears to be doing a service. Last night a man was at church to listen to me talk, and explained that his coming was due to the little paper that he had received. They run in some doctrine but are trying hard to keep it more of a community sheet of news interesting to the folk living in the community."

This rather indicates that the Saints in Houston appreciate the value of having the community well informed on the development of the work as might be reflected in news of activities.

READERS, ATTENTION!

A serious mistake occurred which mixed two articles in the center form of this issue of the Herald. The articles involved are: "The Journeyings of a Missionary and His Wife" by E. R. Davis, of which the beginning is printed, and "Rise Up, O Men of God," of which the end is printed. We offer our apologies to both authors. It is impossible at this writing to reprint the defective form. Both articles, in correct form, we hope, will be presented in the first issue in January.—The Editors.

Credit for Priesthood Institutes and Classes

By F. M. McDowell

Counselor to the President

In response to repeated and urgent requests from many quarters and in harmony with a recent announcement of "Church program for priesthood," it has been arranged to issue credits to members of the priesthood for participation in institutes and class work under certain prescribed conditions. These activities, together with all other phases of priesthood work (within stakes and districts) have been placed under the general direction of the stake or district presidency, under the supervision of the First Presidency and in consultation with the apostle in charge of the field.

The plan proposed is offered as an opportunity rather than as an obligation and constitutes simply one of the ways in which our local ministry may be encouraged to carry on some systematic training work. The limitations of such short courses are clearly recognized, and yet frequently they have served as a basis for much more thorough and intensive study on the part of earnest students. This procedure has been followed for years by the department of religious education and literally thousands of our church workers have made use of the opportunity. Hundreds of these have carried their work to completion and have received teachers' and leaders' certificates.

The necessity of some uniformity in the granting of such credits will be apparent to all. These standards or conditions, as are here briefly outlined, are the result of experience in the supervision of the work referred to above. We unhesitatingly commend this method of procedure to our brethren of the local ministry, whose time and opportunities for following systematic studies are very limited and yet who desire above all else to qualify as servants of God.

Courses of study have been listed in the first year, July number, of the Priesthood Journal. Additional material for such study will be found in the Priesthood Manual and in the present and succeeding issues of the Priesthood Journal. Each member of the priesthood should be the owner of the Priesthood Manual and a subscriber of the Priesthood Journal.

TRAINING CLASSES

Three types of training are possible: institutes, local priesthood classes and correspondence courses. An institute is a series of class lectures, discussions or demonstrations, at least four in number, closely organized in class hours which occur at least daily and within a single field of study, or in closely related subject matter. The course of study should be selected in consideration of the local needs and the subjects for which well-qualified instructors are available. In choosing instructors care should be had to secure individuals of special training and experience in the field of their instruction and of standing and experience in the work of the church. High school and college training should lend added qualification for the task. For certain tool subjects, as English, a man or woman, of superior qualification, irrespective of priesthood, may well be chosen.

Local credit classes will meet, preferably weekly, with subject matter and instructors conforming to the standards suggested above for institutes. A pastor desiring to organize such a class will consult with the stake or district president who will determine whether credit conditions are met, generally supervise the credit work and make report of all credits assigned, to the office of the First Presidency where these will become a part of the permanent records of each ordained man.

Correspondence courses may be carried with the Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. Any of the priesthood courses are available by correspondence.

TRAINING RECORDS

For purposes of record keeping a credit of one point per hour is assigned for attendance at approved institute or local classes. To receive credit one should attend all classes of the course, if possible. For those who must be absent, the following minimum standard is suggested: For a four-session class—no absences. For five, six or seven sessions—one absence may be allowed. For eight to twelve—two absences. For thirteen to eighteen—three absences, etc.

A credit of two points per hour is assigned to approved class work in which there is a maximum of student preparation and participation. The following requirements should be met:

1. A text available for personal study by each student.
2. At least one hour spent in preparation of each class assignment.
3. Attendance at at least four fifths of the class sessions.
4. Satisfactory class participation.
5. A special research report, oral or written, by each student.
6. The satisfactory writing of an examination covering the subject matter of the course, or the working out and report of an equivalent project.

Christmas Selections

Christmas Eve

On Christmas Eve my mother read
The story once again,
Of how the little Child was born,
And of the Three Wise Men.

And how by following the Star
They found Him where He lay,
And brought Him gifts, and that is why
We keep our Christmas Day.

And when she read it all, I went
And looked across the snow,
And thought of Jesus coming
As He did so long ago.

I looked into the East and saw
A great star blazing bright;
There were three men upon the road
All black against the light.

I thought I heard the angels sing,
Away upon the hill . . .
I held my breath . . . it seemed as if
The whole great world were still.

It seemed to me the little Child
Was being born again . . .
And very near . . . that Then somehow Was Now . . . or Now was Then.
—Edna Kingsley Wallace.

Christmas Colors

They have scattered tinsel in the windows
And hung holly on the doors of the shops
In "The Loop," and on the walls of buildings
They have placed festoons of green and bright red
And fashioned wreaths of living evergreen
To celebrate the birthday of the Christ;
But on the streets are men who hunt for work
And there are children crying to be fed.

O Christ! You walked with men and knew their needs
And thinking, knew where certain channels led;
Grant to us a new sense of obligation;
Teach us again the brotherhood of man;
Help us to see the living evergreen;
Help these, our brothers, to forget the red!

Harley R. Lugibhl, from The Christian Century, December 21, 1932.

A Christmas Hymn

It was the calm and silent night!
Seven hundred years and fifty-three
Had Rome been growing up to might,
And now was Queen of land and sea!
No sound was heard of clashing wars;
Peace brooded o'er the hush'd domain;
Apollo, Pallas, Jove and Mars
Held undisturb'd their ancient reign,
In the solemn midnight,
Centuries ago!

'Twas in the calm and silent night!
The senator of haughty Rome
Impatient urged his chariot's flight
From lordly revel rolling home.
Triumphal arches gleaming swell
His breast with thoughts of boundless sway.
What reck'd the Roman what befell
A paltry province far away,
In the solemn midnight,
Centuries ago!

Within that province far away
Went plodding home a weary boor:
A streak of light before him lay,
Fall'n thro' a half-shut stable door
Across his path. He gass'd—for naught
Told what was going on within:
How keen the stars! His only thought!
The air how cold and calm and thin,
In the solemn midnight,
Centuries ago!

O strange indifference!—low and high
Drowsed over common joys and cares:
The earth was still—but knew not why;
The world was listening—unawares;
How calm a moment may precede
One that shall thrill the world for ever!
To that still moment none would heed Man's doom was link'd, no more to sever,
In the solemn midnight,
Centuries ago!

It is the calm and solemn night!
A thousand bells ring out and throw
Their joyous peals abroad, and smite
The darkness, charm'd and holy now!
The night that erst no name had worn,
To it a happy name is given
For in that stable lay new-born
The peaceful Prince of Earth and Heaven,
In the solemn midnight,
Centuries ago.

—Alfred Domett.

A Happy Christmas

A happy Christmas to you!
For the Prince of peace is come,
And His reign is full of blessings,
Their very crown and sum;
No earthly calm can ever last,
'Tis but the lull before the blast;
But His great peace
Shall still increase
In mighty all-rejoicing sway;
His kingdom in thy heart shall never pass away.

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

Christmas

It isn't the wreaths in the windows,
It isn't the shining tree,
Or the children rapt and waiting,
Brings Christmas to you and me.
It's the marvelous self-forgetting,
It's the thoughts we are sending far.
It's our hearts aglow, uplifted,
It's a wonderful guiding star.

—Alix Thorn.

Christmas Greetings

Some good old-fashioned customs
Go out of style, no doubt;
But sending Christmas greetings
We couldn't do without.

And so the custom lingers—
Let us hope it always will—
For the same old-fashioned friendship
Prompts the same old greetings still.

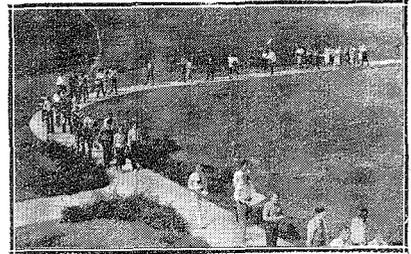

He came to my desk with quivering lip,
The lesson was done.
"Have you a new leaf for me, dear Teacher?
I have spoiled this one!"
I took his leaf, all soiled and blotted
And gave him a new one, all unspotted,
Then into his tired heart I smiled:
"Do better now, my Child!"

I went to the throne, with trembling heart.
The year was done.
"Have you a New Year for me, dear Master?
I have spoiled this one!"
He took my year, all soiled and blotted
And gave me a new one, all unspotted,
Then, into my tired heart he smiled:
"Do better now, my Child!"

The Journeyings of a Missionary and His Wife

By E. R. Davis

The author and Sister Davis

Shortly before noon on Friday, September 7, Sister Davis and I left Moline, Illinois, for Lamoni, Iowa, traveling in the Chrysler car given to us last spring by Brother and Sister Batcheller of Savanna. Arriving at Lamoni about 8:30 in the evening, we drove out to the farm home of Brother and Sister Bert Gamet. These busy farmers had just retired for the night, but we soon aroused Sister Gamet and she showed us to our room where we were glad of the chance to rest after a 241-mile journey. They kindly provided for us during our short stay at Lamoni while we were helping our daughter Joy to get settled for her graduating year at Graceland.

Sunday we attended services in the Lamoni Branch and listened to two good sermons by members of the Lamoni Stake presidency—Stake President Blair Jensen in the morning, and Counselor T. S. Williams in the evening. Monday morning we attended the college chapel hour and listened to President F. M. McDowell deliver a very fine address in which he emphasized the great need of Christianity continuing to be the central purpose of Graceland College.

Wednesday morning we left Lamoni for Ottumwa. In due time we reached our destination and remained at the congenial home of Brother Alfred Goodwin and his family until the hour for church services, when we all went to the commodious Latter Day Saint church of Ottumwa Branch where I preached to about 35 persons, using the text, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." At the close of the service there were administrations to be taken care of. We spent the night at the home of Brother and Sister Williams, known among the Ottumwa Saints, as Bill and Alice.

Thursday morning, the 13th, Sister Alice Williams went with us to the home of a Brother and Sister Lewis, where I administered to their afflicted daughter. After a short visit at the home we drove to the post office where we met Apostle D. T. Williams, who informed us that Sister Williams was traveling with him for a few weeks so that their address, like our own, would be "at large" for awhile.

Leaving Ottumwa we drove on to Muscatine where we were kindly received at the home of Brother Lawrence Symmonds and his good wife. That night I preached to a small audience at the Muscatine church, using the subject, "Building the Kingdom." The following night I preached on the subject, "The Church Checks Up." Muscatine is the home of the pearl button industry, and one of the factories of the Hintz Company. The working people of this city are the most poorly paid of any I have known in all my twenty years traveling, but in spite of this handicap the Saints have struggled on there for thirty-five years, gradually improving their church property until they have a good little place in which to worship, and are planning to celebrate the thirty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the branch some time in November.

The morning of the 15th we left Muscatine. After calling at the small town of Blue Grass for a few minutes' visit with my cousin, Mrs. Donald Farley, we drove on to Moline where we had lunch with my son and his family, and Missionary R. E. Davey who has been holding special meetings in Moline and Rock Island. In the afternoon we drove to

Mrs. Myrtle Shaw, granddaughter of
William B. Smith.

Maquoketa, Iowa, where we stayed at the home of Brother Amos Heide and family.

Sunday, the 16th, I taught a class in church school at the Fulton church near Maquoketa, preached morning and afternoon, conducted a priesthood meeting at the close of the afternoon preaching, and assisted Brother C. A. Beil of Clinton Branch, who was the speaker at night. Sister Davis and I took the evening meal at the farm home of Brother John Heide and wife. Brother Heide has faithfully presided over the Fulton Branch for almost half a century.

Tuesday, the 16th, we drove to Scotch Grove, Iowa, to the home of Raymond Naylor and family. We were glad of the opportunity to get better acquainted with Mr. Naylor, his wife, Sister Pearl Naylor, and their family of seven children. Before leaving there Wednesday afternoon Mr. Naylor very kindly replenished our car with gas and oil, and supplied funds with which to purchase more when needed.

Leaving Scotch Grove Wednesday afternoon we drove to Strawberry Point where we spent a couple of days visiting among our relatives there.

Friday forenoon, the 21st, we drove fifteen miles to Elkader where we had lunch with Mr. and Mrs. Vern Shaw. After lunch Mrs. Portwine came to the house where we visited with these two women for about an hour, and arranged for their baptism on the following Sunday. Mrs. Shaw and Mrs. Portwine are granddaughters of William B. Smith, brother of Joseph the Prophet. After this visit we drove back to Strawberry Point where we stopped at the home of my Uncle Herman Axtell and family for a few minutes to learn what arrangements had been made for the funeral of their daughter Martha who had died that morning at the Finley Hospital in Dubuque, leaving a little baby boy four days old. This was a sad blow to the young husband and the Axtell family. After a short call at this bereaved home, we drove on to Colesburg where we had to purchase a pair of tire chains and have them installed so we could get over the three miles of mud road to the farm home of Ralph Moser, and his mother, Mary Moser.

Saturday afternoon we visited two families of Saints in company with Sister Mary Moser, and Sunday morning the 23d we drove to Osterdock where I baptized the two granddaughters of William B. Smith in a small stream. After the baptism we drove four or five miles southwest to Osterdock to what is known as Bethel Church, where I confirmed these two sisters, and preached from the text, "Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel." About twenty-one persons were present, most of whom were

Mrs. Elsie Portwine, granddaughter of

nonmembers. After the service we went out to view the resting place of the remains of William B. Smith in the church he says, "never were an essentially geographical connotation. They existed in the human imagination before they were the object of pioneering conquest. When the mind has lost its imagination, then frontiers will cease to exist, but not until then."

No frontier ever existed, no progress was ever made, amid the complacency of smug traditionalists and stand-patters. The great leaders of our country today have recognized this essential truth. The policies of the New Deal are not final and ultimate if we understand our president correctly. In his 73rd message to Congress he remarked in part:

"Lines have been rightly drawn between those to whom this recovery means a return to the old methods and those for whom recovery means a reform of many adjustments of many of our ways of thinking and therefore of many of our social and economic arrangements.

"Civilization cannot go back, civilization must not stand still. We have undertaken new methods. It is our task to perfect, to improve to alter when necessary, but in all cases to go forward."

Recently it was my privilege to witness the inaugural ceremony of Dr. Lee Paul Sieg, the new President of the University of Washington. One of the keynotes of President Sieg's inaugural address was expressed in these words—they have their application for the priesthood and the people of this church. He said:

"As a rule, we carry on by following old tracks, now and then adding new ones. I honestly believe that we devote too little time to basic thinking, and too little willingness to abandon old and outmoded tracks. Does it not seem strange to you, that with all our elaborate modern equipment, we are not providing a much greater proportion of intelligent leaders in our country than we did far back in post-revolutionary days, and, indeed, that we are not providing markedly more intelligent followers? Far too many citizens of this and other state are still superstitious (is it true of us as Saints?), they still believe the words of the noisiest demagogue (is it true of us as Saints?), they are still swayed by emotion (how do we measure-up here?), they are victims of crude propagandists (how we do fall for the propaganda of pernicious advertisers?); they are, in short, not educated. So it is our business here and now to look at our whole structure to see if we cannot do a better job than we have ever done."

The fourteenth chapter of Exodus tells us that when the Israelites approached the Red Sea, with Pharaoh and his Egyptian armies nigh upon them, the first command of Moses was "stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." But Moses was wrong, for when he counseled with his God he received the command which ever since has been the inspiration of the ages—"Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

Economically, socially, politically, educationally, religiously, once more this church must assume the leadership. It must pioneer in frontier territory. It must become the light of the world. It must reveal God to humanity. It must build literal Zion.

Let it be repeated, the greatest religious developments are produced under frontier conditions. Rise up, O men of God!

CONCLUSION

We have need in our church for the type of religious spirit that makes us uncomfortable; for as long as we are satisfied with things as they are, we shall have neither growth nor progress. What any set expects of its members has long been recognized as a powerful stimulus to activity in that direction. Within the priesthood—within the church—we need to create a public opinion of Christ-like service and activity; for when such a spirit supplants our present passive indifference, God's purpose in establishing this church will be well nigh consummated.

We have heard mention made lately about raising the standards of the priesthood and bringing pressure to bear upon inactive and semi-active members of the ministry.

Have the great body of Saints in this church ever considered they are the ones who, in actual practice, are setting the standards for the priesthood? By the up-raised hand you either sustain or reject.

It seems to be a part of human nature to do no more than we have to under a given set of circumstances. Whether we wish to admit it or not, we are almost forced to the conclusion that many men in the priesthood today are doing no more and no less than the Saints are willing to tolerate from them. In some places this toleration amounts to an actual upholding of men who refuse to function in their office and calling. Where this is true, priesthood becomes as sounding brass and tinkling symbols.

Pressure to bear on the priesthood—indeed! But let it be reiterated, this pressure will come not so much from the Presidency, or other administrative quorums of the church, as from the body of Saints—the membership itself.

The challenge comes, then, as much to the Saints of this church as to the priesthood. We must do more and talk less for "this is a day of warning, and not a day of many words." Well might we act upon the advice given by Stevenson when he said, "You cannot run away from a weakness forever: you must sometime fight it out or perish; and if it be so, why not now and from where you stand?"

With President Founce, of Brown University, let us believe that "an age of speedy change is a time of unprecedented opportunity. The world now is receptive to ideas. No longer stagnant and static, it is molten and fluid, running into the new molds that men shape for it. Our danger is therefore our finest chance. The swift changes that threaten us also summon us. The world is waiting for our message if we have any. It is alive and needs live men to lead it. Let us not moan like the nerveless Hamlet: 'The world is out of joint; O cursed spite, That ever I was born to see it right,' but rather cry with Rupert Brooke, as he sailed to the hard campaign in Gallipoli: 'Now God be thanked, who hath matched us with this hour.'"

Rise up, O men of God! Have done with lesser things;
Give heart and soul and mind and strength to serve the King of kings.

CREDIT FOR PRIESTHOOD INSTITUTE CLASSES

Papers referred to in 5 and 6, above, may be graded by the stake or district president or by someone whom he appoints.

When grades are reported to the office of the First Presidency for record each person reported upon should contribute a ten-cent credit fee. In exceptional cases—or where necessary for the present—examination and theme papers may be sent to the department of religious education for grading. The credit fee when papers are sent for grading is 25 cents per student. All credit fees are turned over to the funds of the church to cover the cost of postage, maintaining the files and other expense of the training program.

Unless other arrangement is made, priesthood credits are generally comparable and interchangeable with credits in religious education and leadership. Where courses now listed for the priesthood have been carried for religious education credit, the record will be transferred on request to priesthood credit.

Dim the sweet look that Nature wears.

Focal Infection

By A. W. Teel, M. D.
(Church Physician)

"Focal infection" is a common word these days but I fear there are few people who realize just what it is all about. Fortunately, the medical profession has made wonderful strides in discovering its origin. Sometimes its location is very hard to discover and it may come from one or more places and is quite often remote from the infected area. The teeth, nose, throat, tonsils, and gall bladder are the most frequent places for such a condition. When an infected tonsil or tooth, or some other place about the body, is harboring disease germs, they readily find entrance into the blood stream and produce a painful condition in the back, toe, knee joint, or even the eye. These bacteria always attack the weakest part of one's anatomy.

I recall a physician's wife who had a chronic disturbance of the appendix without producing any apparent symptoms in that location. This case baffled the skill of several of the doctor's colleagues until it was finally suggested that an X-ray examination be made of the appendix and much to everyone's surprise, it was the source of the infection. Removal of the appendix cured the patient. Backache, digestive disturbances, nausea and vomiting, when no other cause is apparent, should be carefully searched for the focus of infection.

The danger has been greatly minimized and many thousands of lives have been saved by modern methods of diagnosis. The X-ray has been of invaluable service in such cases and now, right here, I wish to emphasize the necessity of periodic examination and I hope before long that we will be able to provide in some way such examination of our church membership. One's teeth may, from all external appearances, be healthy, yet the X-ray will reveal a pocket of pus and strange as it may seem, no pain in a tooth will be manifest. It may safely be said that the nasal sinuses, the tonsils and the teeth, are the most common source of such an unfortunate condition. I have often observed almost magical relief from some long, chronic and discouraging condition by the discovery and immediate medical attention given to the source of infection from some obscure location.

Zion implies an even higher type of living than that which we find set forth in the gospel of personal righteousness.—G. L. DeLapp in a sermon at the Stone Church.

In darkness there is no choice. It is light that enables us to see the differences between things; and it is Christ that gives us light.—J. C. and A. W. Hare.

"Putting Something In"

By C. J. Lant

A few days ago, I stopped to have the crank case oil drained in my car. While I stood there watching the oil trickling out of the car, I began to think of what would happen to that motor and the bearings, etc., if I did not refill the parts that were being emptied.

For the past thousand miles, the car had been running smoothly and there had been perfect motor performance, yet the rules laid down by the company said that the oil must be changed every thousand miles if we wanted the best results.

I thought about life in general, and about how many times in life we take something out without putting anything back. Then there was the thought that we have the young men and women coming up in the church, and we have the opportunity of putting something into their lives; or we have associates into whose lives we could put something every day if we but tried.

And then as the days go by and the deed is forgotten, when we least expect it, there comes the yield of an over abundant crop. But some time, back there, somewhere, we put something into the machinery and perhaps have forgotten it.

This reminds me of a time when I was a boy and went into a coal mine with a cousin who drove one of the mules down below.

A boy was stationed at a certain point whose duty was to drop a stick on the rails of the little track in order to slow the speed of the small cars loaded with coal, as they gathered too much momentum going downhill.

These boys acquired quite a bit of skill at this particular job. One day, one of them put his arm too far under the wheels of the car and he was minus an arm.

This shows us that we may put something in and take nothing out of life and everything in general, yet we must learn to have the real pleasure in the sowing or the putting, rather than the taking.

As in the case of the car, the oil was still standing up good and the motor running perfectly, but the rules were to change "For best results."

So it is with our lives and our efforts in the church. The rules instruct us to do a certain thing a certain way; and if we don't feel that we are getting what we should out of the church, let us stop to consider and question ourselves: "Are we putting anything into it?" Our lives and our church will be just what we help them to be.

A certain mother made a remark the other day that her son was not interested in the church as it was; and the thought that came to my mind was that if her son was interested in the church at all, he would be attending services and helping to make it what he would have it be. If we are not satisfied with things as they are, where we are, let us start building into the organization those things that will help to make it what we would have it to be.

Too many times we are inclined to expect someone else to give us something that we must gain by earning, and just as soon as we start putting something in, we can reasonably expect to see things brighten.

A Creed

I believe in Human Kindness
Large amid the sons of men,
Nobler far in willing blindness
Than in censure's keenest ken.
I believe in Self-Denial,
And its secret throb of joy;
In love that lives through trial,
Dying not, though death destroy.

I believe in dreams of Duty,
Warning us to self-control—
Foregleams of the glorious beauty
That shall yet transform the soul,
In the godlike wreck of nature
Sin doth in the sinner leave,
That he may regain the stature
He hath lost—I do believe.

I believe in Love renewing
All that sin hath swept away,
Leaven-like its work pursuing
Night by night and day by day:
In the power of its remoulding,
In the grace of its reprieve,
In the glory of beholding
Its perfection—I believe.

I believe in Love Eternal,
Fixed in God's unchanging will,
That beneath the deep infernal
Hath a depth that's deeper still!
In its patience—its endurance
To forbear and to retrieve,
In the large and full assurance
Of its triumph—I believe.

I passed a stagnant marsh that lay
Beneath a reeking scum of green,
A loathsome puddle by the way;
No sorrier pool was ever seen.
I thought; "How lost to all things pure
And clean and white those foul depths be!"
Next day from out that pond obscure
Two queenly lilies laughed at me.

I passed a hovel 'round whose door
The signs of penury were strewn;
I saw the grimed and littered floor,
The walls of logs from tree trunks
hewn.
I said: "The gates of life are shut
To those within that wretched pen";
But lo, from out that lowly hut
Came one to rule the world of men.

The Memoirs of President Joseph Smith (1832-1914)

Edited by his daughter

Mary Audentia Smith Anderson

After Father's death I used often to ride Charlie into the city, day after day, to watch the work being done upon the Temple. Often upon these excursions I was accompanied by my cousin John Smith, who rode his father's white horse, called Sam. We doubtless made quite an interesting quartet—the two boys and the two splendid horses, one coal black and the other snow white.

In order to mount Old Charlie I usually got him up by the side of a fence, where I could climb up the rails high enough to be able to scramble upon his back. Being a mischievous fellow, he would often sidle over against me, pinning me tight against the fence. Though he never pressed me hard enough to hurt me, he could quite effectually prevent my getting high enough to mount him. He seemed to enjoy tormenting me in that way, and he indulged in it quite often until I discovered a way to outwit him. In Mother's workbasket I found a big brass pin, which I put in my jacket and carried around with me. Whenever Old Charlie would catch me against the fence I would get this big pin out and prick him with it vigorously. He would waggle his ears back and forth, shake his head playfully, and stand away at a proper distance to allow me to manage the business of getting upon his back.

We were excellent friends and good playfellows. We used to have him in the yard where he would play with us children almost as familiarly as a dog would do, allowing as many of us as could to get upon his back and be carried about. He was particular about his teammates and would not work with an inferior companion. The big sorrel, Tom Carlin, made a good mate for Charlie, and they worked amiably together. This was the team which Father drove to Amboy upon the occasion of our visit there in 1843, an account of which appears elsewhere in these narratives.

Mother kept the two horses that came to her from Father's estate until obliged to sell one—the Joe Duncan horse once borrowed by Brigham Young and abused by his clerk, George Q. Canon, as will be related duly. It was Charlie we took with us when we left Nauvoo in the fall of 1846 for Fulton City; he accompanied us back next spring.

Old Charlie once received an injury to a shoulder, and as he became older he would frequently stumble and sometimes fall. The time when he was no more required to work and was turned out on "the commons" to graze. One day while he was thus engaged, a farmer named Pilkington came by with a team and a drove of young horses among which was a young mule. The Charlie horse had always cherished a deep-seated and unreasonable aversion for mules and black men. He would never allow a Negro to do anything more for him than merely to bring him water or feed; and if he were loose and could do so he would always attack a mule at sight.

In this instance he undertook to chase this young animal and galloped across the open lot after him. The ground had once been plowed and was uneven. In some way because of his injured leg, he tripped and fell, doubling his head back under his neck in such a way as to break the spinal column, and he died instantly.

I had seen him running and witnessed his fall, but at the moment I was hurrying to the house with a doctor for whom I had been sent, coming to attend one of the children who was sick. As soon as I reached the house with the doctor, I hurried out to where the horse had fallen and found a number of men already collected about him, expressing pity for the poor old fellow. To us, however, his passing seemed a decided relief, for times were very hard with us, money and means very scarce, and we had dreaded seeing the faithful creature grow thin and poor and useless. We felt, with his death coming in such a mercifully sudden manner while he was still fat and sleek and well, our anxiety in regard to him was at an end.

A team was hitched to the body, it was drawn to the river—at that time the universal grave for most animal carcasses—and gently consigned to the flowing currents. One who saw me at this truly sad task asked why I did not take the good shoes off his feet before I thus disposed of him. I answered that I preferred that he should go to his final resting place fully equipped, as was due a loyal and gallant courier such as he had been. There was that much sentiment in me, at least.

What was the fate of the other, Joe Duncan, I never knew. I believe when Mother parted with him he fell into the hands of Joseph W. Coolidge, the man chosen to administer upon my father's estate.

Buildings

The years from our arrival at Commerce to the martyrdom of my father and Uncle Hyrum and the subsequent break-up there, were full of incidents which come to memory with more or less distinctness. Just where to begin to untangle the skein is difficult to determine.

It was in April, 1840, that the name of the settlement was officially changed from Commerce to Nauvoo, and in December of that year was incorporated. Building was going on in various places, streets laid out, lots surveyed and assigned, and homes sprang up all about us as if by magic.

Shortly after Father's return from Washington an addition was made to the back of the block house in which we lived—"block" meaning squared logs. Our house faced south, and this addition was to the north. It was one-story and but a single room, built of native lumber—oak siding and studding, rived laths, and shaven shingles—but it gave us three rooms, the two in the old part being used for sleeping rooms above and below, and the new one, a rather large room as rooms were counted then, becoming the family living room.

It had a fireplace in its north end which, with a roaring fire in cold weather, made it very comfortable. There was also a fireplace on the west side of the lower room of the old, or log, portion of the house, a stairway in the corner leading to the upper room, and a door in the south end with a window beside it which opened towards the river. Within a few feet of the west door of the new addition there was a little log building such as was common at the time, to be used for cooking in the summertime, a shed roof connecting it with the main part, thus forming a sort of indoor hallway. In cold weather the cooking was done at the fireplace in the main living room. The addition which at the present time appears to the west of the log part of the house was built years later.

A well, which had been begun by Mr. White of whom the place was purchased, was sunk deep into the limestone formation beneath, until a vein was struck which has given an abundant supply of splendid and healthful water from that day to this.

A great deal has been said about secret hiding-places and underground ways from house to house in Nauvoo. Some foolish stories have been told about such a passage extending from Father's house on the river bank to the Temple. This is a great mistake. Nothing of the kind was in existence. Anyone who knows anything about the subsoil on which the city is built would realize that such a story is absurd. That subsoil is of limestone formation and to have made an underground passage through that material, from what was known as "the flat" to "the hill," over the bank and to the Temple, a distance of a mile, would have been a tremendous task, one which would have required months and years of steady labor for many men.

As for hiding-places, there was, in this addition to the old building which has just been mentioned, a small hidden retreat. An outside cellarway led into the cellar between the new part and the log cook-house, over which cellarway the mentioned connecting shed roof extended. Running west under the floor of this area or inside hallway, a small excavation was made. A little way down the stairway to the cellar the bearers of the steps were cut in two and the upper portion of the stairs furnished with hinges to allow that part to be lifted forward. This provided an entrance into the small retreat mentioned.

It was a vaulted place, with a dry floor of brick and bricked walls, and was large enough for a couple of people to occupy, either sitting or lying down, affording a degree of comfort for a stay of long or short duration as was necessary. Ventilation came from convenient interstices around the cellar steps.

This small room was occupied a few times by Father when hunted, and was never, so far as I know, discovered by any of those who sought him, though the members of the family knew of its existence.

The house Father built in 1842, known as the Nauvoo Mansion House, contained another very simple hiding-place. In the north room upstairs there was a chimney which ran up from the ground below the house and through both stories of the building. Beside it was attached a ladder to which access was gained only through a closet built out flush with the chimney. This closet was boarded up inside, and at a point about six feet above the floor the boards were cut off and a door hung, secured to the chimney space by a cleat hung on a hinge at one end and into which pegs were inserted.

When this cleat was dropped down upon the top of the door it appeared to be simply a piece of wood with pins in it upon which to hang clothing. When it was necessary to use it otherwise, the cleat was lifted, the door opened, and one could pass up the ladder into the attic or garret above. There boards were laid down on the joists and quarters arranged where several persons might be comfortably located and where considerable ingenuity would be needed to discover them. This clever hiding contrivance was in the Mansion the last time I knew anything about it, and may be there yet, for that portion of the building is still standing, though the dining and sleeping rooms that transformed it into a hotel have rotted down and been removed.

Notwithstanding all the stories and lies which have been told about elaborate secret hiding-places to which the "Mormon Prophet" resorted to escape those who were seeking him, these are the only ones that were on his premises in any shape or form.

I remember once when we were living in the old house, now called "The Homestead," the report came that some officers were coming. Father had been harassed for months by so-called officials from Missouri seeking to arrest him on trumped-up charges and from whom he had reason to expect harsh and unfair treatment. Suddenly Father and the friend who was with him disappeared, and when the men came in they found the household quietly engaged in its customary affairs.

Questioned, Mother said her husband had been there a little while before but was not there then. She invited them in to assure themselves of the fact. They made a thorough search but failed to find him. No doubt they thought it very curious, for they may have seen him about the place. I know I was puzzled myself, but Mother's cool demeanor and the fact that the whole family seemed apparently serene and undisturbed prevented me from feeling alarmed. The suspicions of the man-hunters were disarmed, and they went off about their business, leaving Father and his friend to breathe freely again.

There is no truth in the story about a great long tunnel and underground means of escape from one portion of the city to another in those early days. Some such passage was built later, leading from Saint Mary's Academy on the hillside, across the block south of it, under the street, and into a large school building erected by the Catholics for use in connection with the Academy. There was nothing mysterious about it however—at least, nothing intended to be mysterious; it was like many other convenient passages usual between buildings of a common school center. Not many months ago, as a result of heavy rains soaking the unpacked soil over the brickwork, a portion of the roof over this tunnel fell in, and the passageway was exposed—to the surprise of many, no doubt, although there was no secrecy about it at the time it was built.

During some of the building operations which marked the years of rapid growth of the city, I had an escape from an injury which might have proved fatal. Workmen were blasting into the stone to form the basin at the bottom of the well to which I have referred. One of the charges exploded and threw a stone weighing fifteen or twenty pounds into the air. As it fell, it brushed the brim of my hat as I stood on the stone step at the front door of the house. Had I been standing a few inches farther out from the house I would have been killed.

This must have been in 1841. Soon thereafter Father began the erection of a store building located on the northwest corner of our block. This came to be known as the Red Brick Store. I was an almost daily visitor on the lot when this building was being erected, became acquainted with the workmen, and watched the primitive methods in use. Cross posts were driven into the ground some distance apart, like an extended saw-buck, and a stick of timber out of which the posts were to be turned was laid in these forks. A crank, fastened to the end, turned the post while the workmen held the tools against it cutting away the outside and leaving the finished piece to be used in the building. This was the first turning-lathe I ever saw and, I may add, the only one of its kind I have ever seen.

Two men by the names of David and Francis Clark cut the stone for the doors and windows, using a variety called free stone which was brought from across the river, I remember chatting with them as they worked. One of them, Francis, established a stone yard on the hill, on Parley Street, where he furnished stone for different buildings and also for monuments and gravestones. I knew him and his family well, some of whom are still living in Nauvoo, though he and his wife have long since passed to the beyond. David Clark emigrated to Utah at the time of the exodus or soon after, and settled at the town of Lehi, where I met him on the occasions of some of my visits to that locality, and where he died several years ago.

Clerks and Helpers

In a room upstairs over the store Father established his office and the place became headquarters for the Presidency of the church, even after his death. The office was over the back part of the store, while the large room towards the front was the one I have mentioned which was used for some time as a schoolroom.

I became acquainted with a number of men who worked with Father as secretaries or clerks, among whom I remember Willard Richards, William Clayton, W. W. Phelps, and in 1842, upon his arrival from England—James Whitehead.

William W. Phelps lived for a time in a house close by the store, which he vacated to live in one he built on the opposite side of the street north. He is the man to whom Father directed a letter in which occurs the sentence regarding "the one mighty and strong." He was quite a singular man, spare of flesh, already sufficiently aged to wear spectacles, was methodical and studious in his habits, and not very prepossessing in appearance though of good brain and judgment. He was quite a voluminous writer, inclined to poetry, and was in the habit of carrying about with him a notebook in which he would enter anything in the way of a rhyme or couplet, bit of poetic prose, or other literary fancy which came to his mind. These he would save for future use, and I believe he is credited with having written some excellent hymns which appeared in the old editions of our church hymnbook as well as in later ones.

He had three sons, William Waterman, Henry, and James, and a daughter, youngest of the family, whose name I do not recall. I remember an incident in connection with the youngest of the boys. It was the common custom on Saturday afternoons for the men and boys of the community to gather together and indulge in athletic games, such as running, jumping, wrestling, throwing weights, or in other ways attesting strength and agility. I witnessed many of them when a boy, and was frequently a participant with other companions. A friendly tussle of this sort between my brother Frederick and James Phelps resulted in an exhibition of ill temper on the part of the latter. It arose from the fact that Frederick had succeeded in throwing him. He threatened to thrash Frederick and I interfered to prevent anything of that kind. He whipped out an old-fashioned double-barreled pistol from his pocket and threatened to shoot. I promptly took the weapon from him, saying I should report him to his father, not only for carrying such a thing, but for threatening to use it. He kept up a show of anger for a time, but finally thought better of it and made promises of good behavior if I would not tell his parents. His father was an austere man and in the habit of punishing infractions of discipline pretty severely. This James knew, and appeared anxious to behave and avoid a parental encounter. I reminded him that in the beginning I had advised them not to wrestle, for it was well-known that he would get angry if defeated. He seemed willing to settle the matter amiably, which was done, and we got along very well together afterwards. He was known throughout the neighborhood as a kind of seer with a reputation for being able to find lost articles, or directing others to where they could be found, through the use of what he called a "peep stone."

The family emigrated to Utah at the time of the exodus and I did not meet any of them afterward with the exception of the second son, Henry. He kept a store of some kind in Salt Lake City and I saw him several times on the occasions of my visits there. I believe he told me James wandered away from his home to seek his fortune and died abroad. The last time I saw Henry he was quite an old man in appearance, much bowed, and with broken health. I understood that he was married, although I did not know his family.

Elder Phelps was something of a philosopher and kept pretty "near the throne" out there, doubtless thinking it wise to be on good terms with the leaders of that church. As schoolboys we had good reason to remember Doctor Willard Richards, for often in going down the stairway from the schoolroom we were noisy, which seemed to annoy him considerably. Upon one or two occasions he met us at the foot of the stairs and refused to let us pass, the while he cautioned us to be more quiet. Doubtless we were annoying as we trampled and jostled, crowding the steps and surging through the door. He especially scolded the larger children. We learned it was better to go quietly than to cause such real distress.

He was a man of medium height and quiet corpulent, with a fair, smooth face, and ordinarily pleasant manner. He was a good scribe, writing a fair, round penmanship, as also did Elder William Clayton with whom I became quiet familiar as a boy because of my frequent trips to the office. I used to see the big books in which the records of the business were kept.

Just when each of these men acted as clerk, I do not remember. Doctor Richards was one who, along with John Taylor, was with Father and Uncle Hyrum in the jail at Carthage when the latter two were killed. I do not remember who were the first clerks or employees in this store of Father's, though I recall one William Kimball, a tall, broad-shouldered, blue-eyed man, with rather light hair. Where he came from or where he went I do not know.

There seemed to be some difficulty in regard to the help in the store, and I remember that one David Yearsley became storekeeper. He was very kind to me and I became well acquainted with and fond of him. I remember his coming along the street briskly in the morning, catching me up onto his shoulder and carrying me to the store, where he would give me candy, crackers, or something else good to eat. He always wore a bright, kindly smile which quite won my regard. His daughter Elizabeth was one of my schoolmates.

The family moved away, I suppose to Utah. In later years I met his son David at Salt Lake City, and the daughter Elizabeth, first at Salt Lake City at the home of her brother and afterwards at Soda Springs, Idaho, at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Peacock. From her I heard statements concerning her life in Utah, and her portrayal of the inward workings of the practice of plural marriage brought a degree of sadness to me, as well as indignation.

At the command of Brigham Young she had become a polygamous wife of a leading elder or bishop of the Utah church and had lived under the hateful regime it imposed upon her until her soul revolted. With righteous indignation she had notified President Young that she would not longer live in the unhappy relation, adding that unless she were freed from those degrading bonds she feared she might be led to commit murder.

He then placed her on a church farm where she supported herself and a daughter. There she remained some ten or twelve years without seeing her despised husband. Then one day the husband came to the farm with a company of other men, and she fled into the fields to keep out of his way, feeling that if any attempt were made to force her to return to him, she would commit some act of violence which might endanger the salvation of her soul.

"Brother Joseph, I was in torment! I had murder in my heart"—and her tears flowed freely at the memory.

I was deeply touched at this sad recital, and my sympathy went out to the wronged woman who had tried to keep herself unpolluted and to banish the curses in her heart. She confessed that her experiences with polygamy had been such as to completely wreck her faith in the brand of humanity which ruled out there, and especially to engender within her a deadly hatred for Brigham Young who had forced her into the humiliating marriage.

She told me she had lived for one year with Brigham Young's first wife, that is, his legal wife, in the house in Salt Lake City, known as the Bee Hive. She stated that in all that time he had visited the home but once. Upon that occasion he had notified his wife in advance that he would come and take tea with her. She informed her son, Joseph A. Young, of the intended visit, and requested him to be at home when his father should come and to treat him with all due respect.

Joseph A. promised to come, but alas, when he appeared he was under the influence of liquor, and roundly berated his father for having neglected his mother. He told his father that he had long wanted just such an opportunity to tell him what he thought of him, and now that the chance had come he intended to speak out plainly—and speak plainly he did!

It was very distressing to the mother and she tried to get him to desist, but he would not obey until he had had his say. His roughness and abuse so offended the father that the latter would not stay to eat supper with the long-neglected wife after all!

In Soda Springs upon the occasion of my second meeting with Elizabeth Yearsley at the home of her son-in-law, I also met and had converse with a man who came to see me, named David Wright. He was a son of Jonathan Wright, formerly a harness-maker in Nauvoo in the days of my boyhood. I believe Jonathan Wright's brother, Julius C., had been associated with him there and after the exodus west remained in Illinois, working for some time with my Uncle Arthur Milliken, also in the harness business and located on the corner of Parley and Durfee Streets. Jonathan Wright, however, had taken his family to Utah, this son David being with them.

For old times' sake I was glad to meet him again. In our conversation I learned some things which confirmed my opinion about the evil and unhappy results of polygamy. He told me that from his knowledge of its practice he had not only lost faith in the church there but had become very bitter towards its leaders. He cherished an absolute hatred for his father, whom he accused of treating his mother, a first wife, with the utmost heartlessness, leaving her to struggle alone in rearing her children. He told me his father had married a number of women and had, at the time, a family of forty-two children. He stated that the man had also mistreated others of his wives and had lost the love and esteem of most of his older children.

Learning that Brother Anthony and I were planning an itinerary which would take us where one of his brothers lived, David assured us that the latter would care for us very cordially and pleasantly if we would call. He remarked concerning this brother, "He is a good man in the faith; I am not."

I was sorry to note how completely this man's life has become shadowed and embittered by the workings of that evil doctrine, inasmuch that he had at last been led to curse his own father roundly. We called on the brother as requested, and were well treated.

The combined experience of these two—Elizabeth Yearsley who had been forced into the hated position of a polygamous wife until hope, faith, and courage had died within her breast and whose heart was filled with anguish, indignation, and remorse almost unbearable, and David Wright whose boyhood and young manhood had been blighted and cursed by a forced contact with the evils of polygamy as demonstrated in his father's house—served but to increase, were such an increase possible, by antagonism to the principle. These incidents were but two of many which have been related to me, laying bare the miseries engendered by what my father declared was "an evil and corrupt doctrine."

It was at my father's office and the store that I used to see many of the leading men of the church, as they came for purposes of consultation on business connected with church work or their private affairs. I knew the members of the Quorum of Twelve personally, as I met them frequently at my father's place of business or heard them preach from the stand on their visits home. When first I met each I do not remember, but it was likely soon after our settlement at Commerce, for it seems as I look back that I had always known them. Those whom I liked best among them were John E. Page and Charles C. Rich.

Our house was a convenient place of gathering and was always more or less crowded with those who came from a distance and those employed in household affairs within its precincts. My memory here brings back the advent into our home of the young man, Loren Walker. His father came to Nauvoo about the time of his wife's death, bringing his family of children with him. There were the sons William, Loren, Edwin, and Henry, and the daughters, Catharine and Lucy. Loren was engaged by my father as personal attendant, to look after his clothes, horses, military equipments, and at request, to attend him in his rides and journeys. He continued in this capacity until my father's death.

He was a trusty young man, and one so peculiarly alert that the quietest call of his name, at the foot of the stairway which led to the room where he slept or outside of the house near his window, would bring immediate response. He and I were bed-fellows, and he exercised a friendly watchcare over me when not busy with other duties. His sister Lucy was employed by Mother as a maid, working for her board and going to school. She was a few years older than I, and used to marshal us children to and from school as would an elder sister.

In what employment Mr. Walker engaged I do not remember, but his eldest son, William, a strong and hearty man, used to work about the premises and upon the various buildings being erected, and so continued, according to my knowledge, until a little while after my father's death. After the arrangement of the Nauvoo Mansion as a hostelry and its opening for business, William Walker married Olive Farr. She was, I think, a sister of Loren Farr, a prominent elder in the church then and subsequently. She had a sister, Diantha, a very beautiful woman, with whom Chauncey Higbee, son of Judge Elias Higbee and brother of Francis, became enamored. It appeared that she did not favor him, and after the break-up and the exodus west, she became a polygamous wife of Amasa Lyman—according to Dame Rumor.

Before Father's death William Walker and his wife, Olive, boarded at the Mansion House, and he did teaming work with an outfit Father procured for him. I remember that one day he delivered a load of wood at the Mansion and came into the house afterward. While thus away from them, one of the horses shook his bridle off and the team started to move away. Finding themselves free from the accustomed restraint they became frightened and began to run. Just below the barn they made a little turn and one, becoming entangled in the lines, fell and struck her head on a stub in the road, which caused her death.

William then made claim upon Mother for the value of the mare upon the hypothesis that the accident had happened when he was hauling wood to the house for her benefit. Mother could not see the justice of this reasoning and declined to pay, but offered to assist him to what extent she was able, in the purchase of another. He became offended over the matter and took his wife and established a home elsewhere.

Just a few days before my father's death, Loren Walker married Lovina, the oldest daughter of my Uncle Hyrum. They were closely associated with the fortunes of our family for many years.

I have referred previously to Father's acquirement of a quarter section of land two miles and a half east of Nauvoo. It was on what was called the Carthage road, leading out of the city from Parley Street. He installed on this farm an American-born man by the name of Cornelius P. Lott. Soon after the organization of the Nauvoo Legion Father announced that the first man who would provide himself with a pair of epaulets should be appointed captain of his personal body guard.

On the morning when the guard of sixty men reported for drill, this old man Lott came in and, in a very quiet, unostentatious manner, called Father to one side and showed him a pair of epaulets, which had been his to wear in some company elsewhere. They were made of fine material and had tinsel tassels springing out of a base shaped like a segment of a circle, which, fastened to the shoulder allowed them to fall over the edge. He seemed rather shamefaced about them, declaring he did not wish to be captain and was not qualified to act in that capacity. Father insisted that he should take the office and retain it for a time at least. This he did, but did not wear the epaulets very long and kindly gave the gaudy trifles to me. I kept them for many years until at last, through the ravages of time, they became tarnished and frayed, the silk separated from the metal, and they were not interesting or even respectable relics and went the usual way of such things.

This Cornelius P. Lott and family occupied the farm east of town until the break-up occurred. I became well acquainted with them all—his older son John, the daughters Melissa, Mary, Martha, and Alzina, and the little son, Peter. It was always pleasant to visit their place where everything was interesting to me and everybody busy and kind. The old gentleman was a very strong man of sturdy build and medium height. He had a fine, very high-pitched voice which my memory connects with the following circumstance.

I was in the store where Father and a number of brethren were chatting in a friendly way, and was listening with boyish attention to what was going on. I was standing not far from the front door when Farmer Lott came in carrying in his hand his blacksnake whip. Hardly had he entered when Father said in a jolly tone:

"Here! I have thrown down pretty nearly everybody about the place except Brother Lott, and I believe I can throw him down, too!"

The old man stopped, swung his whip under his left arm and said, in his high, piping voice, "Well, my boy, if you'll take it catch-as-catch-can you can't throw old man Lott!"

So they all immediately piled out of the house into the open place west of the store where there was space to wrestle. They ran together several times, but the best Father could do was to get the old man down to his knees. I remember just how Father was dressed that day. He had on a white flannel coat and vest, and some soft gray trousers.

He gave up his efforts to throw the sturdy old fellow and much good-natured banter at his expense was indulged in as he gave up the struggle. In the midst of the jibes I heard the old man pipe out again, "I told you, my boy, that you couldn't throw old man Lott!"

Elder Lott's daughter, Melissa, was a tall, fine-looking woman with dark complexion, dark hair and eyes. She was a good singer, quite celebrated in a local way. I have heard her sing at parties and receptions in private homes, on the stage where theatrical performances were given, and on the political rostrum when William Henry Harrison was running for president.

Divine Knowledge

By A. M. Baker

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."—2 Timothy 2-15.

Paul the Apostle in bonds, was instructing the young minister how he might become a "vessel unto honor" by study and preparation. When the Saints are inspired with a desire to study the work of God, there is always registered in their lives a greater degree of spirituality.

Show me the member who never studies and I will show you the man with a low spirituality. Jesus declared: "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life."

In 1 Peter 3:15, we have this language: "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." [Italics mine.—A. M. B.]

The religion of Jesus Christ is based upon reason. Reason by itself would be incomplete; when presenting this "hope" of eternal life; if it is not done in meekness and fear. Thus the gospel is the qualifying influence which enables the Lord's people "to go on unto perfection" (Hebrews 6:1, 2). True education should be properly balanced.

Paul was admonishing Timothy if he would be studious, rightly dividing the word of truth, that this very condition would obtain in the lives of people that adhered to his teaching. This great apostle with all his learning, had received an education by the Spirit of God, which he never could have obtained, only by strict obedience to the principles of the gospel. After he had been stricken down upon the hill, Paul was convinced that Jesus was the Christ. But his knowledge of salvation was very meager. What he had to do to be saved had not yet been spoken by Ananias, until three days later when this servant of God sounded the note of warning: "And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22:16.) Hence Paul could truly say: "But I certify you brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." (Galatians 1:11, 12.)

After the Apostle had experienced many years in the true service of God, he wrote to the church at Corinth as follows: "But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us, by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." (1 Corinthians 2:9-11.)

It is our duty to "study all good books" and improve every opportunity for mental and spiritual improvement, that God may be glorified in our lives. In fact the Lord through the prophet Joseph has illuminated this truth: "The glory of God is intelligence." Hence the apostle declared in his epistle: "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." (1 Corinthians 12:3.)

This great truth can only be learned through obedience and regeneration. Jesus said to Nicodemus: "Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God." (John 3:3.)

This was the big point this ruler of the Jews didn't understand. But Jesus, the great teacher, made it so plain: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3:5.)

Here is a fundamental law of the cleansing of the soul—water baptism, before one can receive this baptism or gift of the Holy Spirit, as an abiding comforter.

The promise is that God will give the Holy Ghost to all that obey: "And we are witnesses of these things; and so also is the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him." (Acts 5:32.)

Therefore if we receive Jesus Christ and believe in him, we accept his teachings and are willing to keep his commandments. Then we are receptive for divine direction.

"And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the son."

"If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." (John 14:13, 14.)

This proves conclusively the true relationship between God, Christ and the regenerated. Job (32:8) magnified this thought: "There is a Spirit in man and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." Man can never reach the climax of knowledge except by cooperation with God. The creature man was made just a little lower than the angels. (Psalm 8:5.) Why should he not be inspired of God—if humble and obedient. It is a wonderful thing to be inspired of God. Paul realized this when he said: "Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy." (1 Corinthians 14:1.)

If God inspired the little bee, so that he can make honey without learning how, and if the little beaver knows how to fell a tree and build a dam without learning how—why should not the Creator of the universe inspire man, the cap-sheaf of his creation, when man becomes humble and obedient.

David Edstrom, the sculptor, in his group "Man Triumphant," has four symbols which he describes as follows: "There are four steps by which man walks into light: "Thou must," "I must," "I desire," and "I am."

In the first step, by force of outward pressure, necessity, elemental compulsions of cold, heat, starvation, man is compelled to act. He must or in a primitive state, the divine edict is imperative. The Mosaic economy said, "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not." In the second figure there comes an inner prompting. Compulsion is from within. Duty is perceived; something says "I must." The man drives himself. In the third symbol, man begins to love and admire the beauty of right acts and says: "Now I desire." Finally, and last of all truth and goodness becomes part of his own soul and he says: "I am." As God declared to Moses: "I am hath sent thee."

The Apostle was correct when he said: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." (Romans 1:16.)

Alma (of the Book of Mormon) was entirely correct when he made the supreme test of the gospel declaring its power to enlarge the soul. Signs and miracles are confirming to the child of God; but when we can say with Alma, after having tested the gospel—"It becometh to enlarge my soul," we know then that we are growing, unfolding and developing in the great work of God. Man himself is a revelation from God. Without divine knowledge, man will be condemned. "What shall it profit a man, if he should gain the whole world and lose his soul."

"My door is open wide tonight,
The hearth fire is aglow;
I seem to hear swift passing feet,
The Christ-child in the snow.

"My door is open wide tonight,
For stranger, kith or kin;
I would not bar a single door
Where love might enter in."

In so far as having made any development in social righteousness is concerned, I cannot see that we are so much better than any other group in the world.—G. L. DeLapp in a sermon at the Stone Church, Independence.

The Remarkable Experience of Sister Bertha Schofield of Manchester

The news of spiritual healings among the Catholics who make pilgrimages to Lourdes and other shrines, the experiences of Christian Scientists and others who have accepted the promised spiritual help are often quoted as evidences of the continuance of the power of God to meet human needs. It is well that we remind ourselves that one of the important ministries with which the Church of Christ was commissioned was that of healing the sick through the "Prayer of Faith," associated with "anointing with oil" and the "laying on of hands." Through this "sacramental ministry" supernatural healing resulted. The latter day restoration put especial emphasis on this "gift of the Holy Spirit," as confirmation of the faith and obedience of the believers. Many testimonies have accumulated through the more than one hundred years of the church's history, enriching the epic of faith. The following experience is an addition to the "unfinished book;"—"The Acts of the Apostles," which we have "seen with our eyes" and, it is marvelous and surely "it is the Lord's doing."

The case of Sister Bertha Schofield first was brought to my attention about the middle of June of this year when a message was brought to the church by an aunt (Emma Schofield), advising that she was seriously ill and desired the administration. In response Brother Tapping and the undersigned went to the home where Sister Bertha was in bed suffering great pain and looking very emaciated. Realizing how desperate the condition was it was decided to make the sister's case a matter for special prayers. So, meetings were called every Wednesday and Sunday after the regular service, and requests for special prayers were sent throughout the district and the mission. Together with this general upholding in faith and prayers regular administration was asked for and responded to. After being moved to the hospital the visits were made and administration practiced with the consent of the sister of the ward who seemed to enter into the spirit of this service with sympathy and understanding. Despite the gloomy diagnosis of the doctors and specialists the faith of the Saints did not waver. One Saturday evening Bertha's father called on me in deep distress and reported the doctor urged that amputation was necessary to save his daughter's life and wanted his consent to the operation. When Sister Bertha understood she refused to consent and wanted decision postponed until she could have a conversation with me, and her father was going to visit her on Sunday and wanted some message from me for Bertha. The only advise I could offer was, to hang on and we would continue to implore God to save the leg and heal her.

To the great joy of all the family and her friends, when on my next visit to the hospital Sister Bertha was radiant and the whole ward was joyous and in tears including the sister because the specialist now in charge of the case had decided that it would be wise to wait for the effect of a month's new treatment which consisted of being in the open air. He declared that amputation was not necessary at that time.

We continued to pray and make weekly visits to the hospital. Each time the manifest improvement gave encouragement to our faith. Besides this it seemed as though Bertha's blessing was being communicated to others in the ward and we were asked to include in our prayers others who were suffering.

The happiness of the congregation can be imagined when on the expiration of the month the doctor definitely said there would be no need of the operation and he was going to put the affected limb into a plaster cast and she was to have a special shoe, and then she would be able to walk again. So, the shoe was secured and after several practices around the ward in which our sister learned to walk all over again, after eleven weeks in bed at home and then another fourteen weeks in the hospital, she was permitted to return home. Last Sunday evening to the great joy of all the members of the North East Manchester branch to which our sister belongs, she walked into the church and with smiles and tears joined in the worship of the hour. As Brother Brien put it; "this was one of the most thrilling experiences in my life." This sentiment was shared in by all.

Today Sister Bertha visited the home of Brother and Sister Leggott and the following is her testimony of this remarkable healing as expressed in her own way.

Sister Bertha Schofield was baptized into the church about ten years ago by Brother Baldwin being then about twenty-one years of age. She was a machinist engaged in a factory producing men's shirts. About the middle of May this year she complained of pains and stiffness in her right knee. She went to her doctor who diagnosed her malady and ordered her to give up work and rest in bed. She went home and was under the doctor's care for eleven weeks, during which time she got worse and weaker. A district nurse was called in to help in dressing the diseased leg. Everyday this attention was given and finally the nurse became fearful and suggested bringing in the matron. But before the matron could be called another doctor was called in who advised the removal of our sister at once to Crumpsall Hospital, as the case needed a specialist's care. Bertha was admitted to the hospital on August 1 in a very precarious condition. So low was she, that she does not remember being removed from her home to the hospital. Her condition was described as tuberculosis and amputation was advised. At least three doctors were in consultation and their conclusion was confirmed by a specialist. As Bertha was unconscious her father, Mr. Schofield was required to sign consent to the operation. Being too weak to stand the shock this was postponed until she had been built up. In the meantime Bertha reviving some, heard one day the supervisor tell the sister of the ward to prepare her for the operation. This was the first that she had heard about the proposed amputation and she began to cry and objected to this operation. So the supervisor told her not to worry and tried to comfort her saying that perhaps there was some mistake.

The next morning the sister of the ward seeing Bertha crying asked what the trouble was. So, she told her that she was to have her leg off, and she had known nothing about it. The sister said she was to forget it, and she would see the doctor and tell him she knew nothing about it.

When the doctor came he told Bertha that her case was very serious and if she did not have the leg amputated she probably would have to lie upon her back the rest of her life, and if she put her foot to the ground the disease would probably spread through her body. To this Bertha replied that she did not wish to lose her leg and had faith to believe that God would save her leg. The doctor replied; "Well, girl it is your leg and you can please yourself." But his advice was that the leg should come off. Going on his holiday, this doctor's place was filled by another who advised with a specialist and they decided to leave the case for a month, ordering Bertha to be placed in the open air.

The month passed, and the knee went almost normal, then it was placed in a plaster cast. Afterwards a special boot with "calipers" was ordered and secured, then she was encouraged to walk around the ward. For about two weeks she practiced walking all over again, and then a week ago she was permitted to return to her home. She is still under the care of the hospital as an out-patient but the outlook is very hopeful.

Yesterday the 18th, she went to the church, James Street, and enjoyed the service with the members of the church, praising God for His manifest grace.

The Holy Scriptures

I was much pleased with the many good things contained in the Herald of October 23, especially the article of our Church Historian, Elder S. A. Burgess, on the subject of the "Excellence and Superiority of the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures."

Because of the superiority of this translation, we as a church, should no doubt teach it instead of any other, especially as the Lord has so commanded. "I give you a commandment that you shall teach them to all men." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15.)

Before I close I would like to say, that we should let our "yea" be "yea" and also that our "nay" be "nay," and always humbly and meekly pray.

Sees Divine Promises Fulfilled

In my patriarchal blessing I was promised visions, dreams, and discernment, and assured that I should be the means of bringing others into the fold, even those of my own household. This I have seen fulfilled. I was also told that I would yet feel my hand resting in the Master's and that my latter days would be my better days in the service of the Master.

It is a year ago in January since I was ordered by the doctor into town for an operation for gallstone trouble. With the administrations of the elders and prayers of the Saints, I have been kept from the knife. It seems that it took this to bring me near the church so the promise of my blessing would be fulfilled that my latter days would be my better days in the service of the Master. I am trying to do all the good I can in his name.

In Saskatchewan I was suffering with a bad attack of my gallstone trouble and asked for administration by Elder James Cornish. My pains vanished when he entered the yard. Indeed I have many wonderful blessings for which to be thankful.

Some years ago I was in a sacrament service. I had wondered how we would know when the Comforter would be at our side, the blessing promised by our Savior. At that service a Personage was close by my right side as I knelt in prayer and worship, and I was given full knowledge of the wonder of such a blessing.

God has answered my prayers and given me answers to my questions in unusual spiritual experiences. I need the prayers of all that I may live worthy to continue to receive his blessings. I want to be faithful to his teachings. I have seen so many gifts and blessings manifested through the elders of the church that I cannot doubt Jesus and his word. I have seen healings through baptism, the blind receive their sight, the crippled walk. May God keep and bless us all.

Prayer for Healing Has Immediate Answer

I want to relate an experience which was mine recently and which shows how God hears and answers prayers.

I am living out at Fort Huachuca, about forty miles from a branch, and can attend church services but once a month. This I try to do on sacrament Sunday, as that service seems to me more important than any other of the church. Each time we partake of the emblems we renew our covenant with our heavenly Father.

A few Sundays ago I came down with a severe head cold. I doctored myself as best I could on retiring, but did not feel much better on Monday. That day I had a big washing to do, and I must have taken more cold while at work for by night I was miserable. I used the oil and did all I knew to do for a cold. But I awakened about 3 a. m. and was very sick and burning up with fever. Even the palms of my hands and soles of my feet were dry and hot.

I was worried for I was too far out to call an elder or a doctor. I am working in the home of nonmembers and am alone in the world with no one to nurse me if I am ill. So I talked to the heavenly Father, telling him that he knew my condition and how I could not afford to be sick. I pleaded with him to manifest his power on my behalf and make me well. It was not that I was worthy such a blessing or that I feared the suffering, but because I could not afford to be ill.

As I was communing with him, I felt a moisture creep over my whole body, and I knew instantly that He had heard me and deigned to answer my humble petition. I could feel his sweet presence, and how happy I was to realize anew that he cared enough to answer me, and that my cold was broken, and I would be all right! I covered up well so I would not get chilled and went to sleep. I felt fine from then on and did not lose a minute's work. It was a wonderful experience. Although I had been healed a number of times through administration and the prayers of others, I had never received so immediate an answer.

Has Taken "Herald" Sixty-five Years

I surely would not want to neglect my Herald. I have taken it for nearly sixty-five years, and have never missed a number, to my knowledge. The Herald is my "meat and drink." It always has my first attention, and I usually read it through soon after it arrives.

Grateful for Blessings

I am thankful for the many good lessons the Herald contains, and especially do I enjoy the letters from Saints in various parts of the world.

I, too, wish to bear testimony to the goodness of God. He has blessed my family and me. Our twenty-three-year-old daughter was baptized into the church on a recent Sunday.

Pray that God will help us to overcome all evil with good that we may be of great help to the church in building Zion

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Where did John the Baptist get authority to baptize?

The new Testament tells us: "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." (John 1: 6.) John himself states that "he that sent me to baptize" told him how to identify the Son of God. We conclude therefore that John was sent of God, and received authority to baptize from God.

Does 1 Corinthians 7:36 condone unchastity between unmarried persons?

Certainly not. It is true that some persons of immoral desires have attempted to justify themselves or others by misinterpreting this text. Paul is speaking in this chapter of the relative obligations of married and unmarried persons. The King James Version does not translate this text as clearly as most other versions do, though it by no means condones immorality in any sense. Most modern translators see an implication in the Greek text of the duty of a parent toward his daughter. The following versions of this text are given for comparison:

"If, however, a father thinks he is acting unbecomingly toward his still unmarried daughter if she be past the bloom of her youth, and so the matter is urgent, let him do what she desires; he commits no sin; she and her suitor should be allowed to marry."—Weymouth Version.

"But if any one thinketh that there is reproach, on account of his maiden daughter, because she hath passed her time, and he hath not presented her to a husband, and it be fitting that he present her; let him do what he desireth, he sinneth not; let her be married."—Syriac Version.

"But if anyone think he acts improperly in remaining single, if he be past age, and thus it is fitting to be married, let him do what he wishes, he sins not; let them marry."—Emphatic Diaglott.

"But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely toward his virgin whom he hath espoused, if she pass the flower of age, and need so require, let him do what he hath promised, he sinneth not; let them marry."—Inspired Version.

Any one familiar with the work of translating ancient languages into our speech knows that often a text implies things gone before as a part of its meaning, and does not therefore always specifically recite in the text itself that which is implied in this manner. Anciently the giving in marriage was the act of parents, and Christians who preferred marriage in cases indicated in the text are assured that devotion to the church does not forbid it, though Paul implies that complete consecration to the Lord and his church by remaining single is better (verse 38).

Who was Elias, the restorer mentioned in Matthew and John, Inspired Version?

Somewhat more explanation is found in the Inspired Version than the King James text contains. The two Inspired Version texts are as follows:

"Elias truly shall first come and restore all things, as the prophets have written. And again I say unto you that Elias has come already, concerning whom it is written, Behold I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and they knew him not, and have done unto him whatsoever they listed."—Matthew 17: 10, 11.

"And he [John] said; I am not that Elias who was to restore all things. . . . I baptize with water, but there standeth one among you whom ye know not; He it is of whom I hear record. He is the prophet, even Elias, who, coming after me, is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose."—John 1: 22, 27, 28.

Several views are held concerning the identity of the Elias here indicated. The first text clearly refers to John the Baptist as the Elias who should prepare the way of Jesus. But Jesus does not say his former coming was a complete fulfillment of the text which he quotes, which is found in Malachi 3: 1-4, to cite the whole prediction essential to its meaning. It is apparent that Malachi predicts some things that were not fulfilled at the first coming of Christ, but will be fulfilled at his second coming, and this implies that the Messenger shall come and prepare the way at his second coming, as well as at his first advent. This messenger was John the Baptist.

But the Elias who shall restore all things appears to be Christ, as indicated by John in the second text quoted. This is more clear when we remember that Elias is the Greek form of Elijah, and that Elijah is a Hebrew word meaning Jehovah-God. Christ fulfills the true meaning of that name as no other could.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Address all news and letters to Editors of the Herald, Box 237, Independence, Missouri. Correspondents are requested to make their letters brief. The Editors reserve the right, on account of space limitations, to shorten all letters as circumstances require.

Logan, Iowa

The autumn business meeting resulted in the choice of the following officers for the new church year, most of whom were reelections: Gerald Gunsolley, president; Ruth Gunsolley, secretary; Carl Crabb, financial agent; C. W. Keairnes, branch solicitor; Mary Peyton, superintendent of music; Grace Keairnes, publicity agent, and Myrtle Crabb church school superintendent, with Nellie Hall in charge of the adults, C. W. Keairnes, the young people, and Ruby Adams, the children.

The second Sunday afternoon of each month is set aside for a worker's conference, when officers and teachers of the church school, members of the priesthood and others who may be interested, meet to discuss the various problems that come up. Better understanding and more effectual cooperation have been brought about by these meetings.

During the month of October the Sunday night programs were put in charge of the young people's division. Special numbers were given at the end of the class periods and the entire eight o'clock hour was occupied with a Graceland College program. November was in charge of the adults who furnished special numbers throughout the month ending with a Thanksgiving play on the Sunday night preceding the holiday. December, the children's month, will be cared for by those in charge of the children's division.

The branch was host to the young people's district convention beginning with a banquet on the evening of November 9, and holding over Saturday and Sunday. Attendance and interest were good. Brother Roy Cheville was in charge of the class work and won his way quickly to the hearts of the young people. A program consisting of special numbers and a play from the Missouri Valley Branch made up the Saturday night service. On Sunday morning Brother Blair Jensen spoke to an attentive audience, and the convention was closed by the Sunday afternoon meeting with Bishop W. R. Adams as speaker.

Immediately after the church school hour on November 25, baptismal services were held, and three members of the Donn family were inducted into the church, thus completing the family circle; Arthur, the husband and father, and Jimmie and Margaret, the children. The Saints welcome these fine additions to their number, having learned to know their worth through our association with them the past year.

The women of the branch meet every other week for study and on alternate weeks for work. Each month a social meeting is held, a program given, and lunch served. A free will offering is given at these monthly meetings.

The December sacrament service was characterized by a goodly portion of the Spirit, finding expression in an active testimony meeting with preparation for Zion as the theme.

Under the direction of Mrs. H. L. Peyton a women's chorus has been organized, meeting for practice each week. The choir is working on the cantata, "The Birthday of the King," H. L. Peyton, leader, to be given the Sunday evening preceding Christmas. Both groups are obeying with enthusiasm the admonition to "cultivate the gift of music and of song."

Spring River District Conference

In a spirit of consecration, the Spring River district workers gathered at Springfield, Missouri, for their semi-annual conference, November 23, 24 and 25. As has been the experience of every district function for some time, the Spirit of God was present in abundance to bless the work and to guide those who assembled. District President Amos T. Higdon and Apostle F. Henry Edwards were in charge. Apostle Edwards delivered sermons on Saturday night and Sunday morning, inspiring the Saints to higher goals than they have yet achieved.

Several tributes of praise were voiced, at the business session Saturday, in behalf of the late Brother George E. Harrington, a former president of the district. It was voted to send to the family of the beloved brother an expression of condolence showing the sympathy of the members.

The opening feature of the conference was a program in charge of Frank Shanks, president of the district young people, given Friday night. It consisted of a reading by Lella Palmer; a play, "The Mysterious Thanksgiving Guest," directed by Sister C. E. Wilson; a vocal solo by Twila Briggs; Scripture reading by L. E. Carter and a play, "The Prodigal Returns Home," directed by Sister Loma Carter.

At the business sessions Saturday, the excellent work being done by some of the district workers was noted and several expressed themselves as making progress by the help of Deity, but there remains much to be done yet which will take many more workers than are actually contributing at the present time. Brothers Dave Wilson, of Miami, and Ira Waldron, of Webb City, are among those besides the district president who are helping materially in the work throughout the district.

Sunday morning the young people's prayer meeting was in charge of Frank Shanks, Albert Cobb and Herman Plumb. The theme was "Our Heritage." This was followed by church school at which time the director of religious education, Ronald G. Smith, occupied as the speaker. The district choir beautifully presented an anthem preceding the preaching service. At noon a basket dinner was held in the basement of the church.

After the afternoon ordination service and testimony meeting, the conference adjourned until next May when it will be held at Pittsburg, Kansas. Apostle Edwards delivered the charge to the members being ordained to the priesthood. Those ordained to the office of elder were Roy Oehring, of Webb City, and Tom Bathe, of Pittsburg. Walton Wolfe, of Webb City; Myron Cadwell, of Independence, Kansas; Ellsworth Weaver, of Pittsburg; Arthur Layman, of Parsons; and Raymond Kyser, of Miami, were ordained to the office of priest. The consecration of these young men to the church work and of other young workers throughout the district was highly commended.

Several district functions are to be observed in the near future. They include a Christmas party and visiting of different branches by the young people. Also the choir, which has been doing some exceptionally good work in the past under the direction of Brother Victor L. Krucker, will present a Christmas cantata, "The Heavenly Message," December 30, at both Springfield and Joplin. There is a possibility that the cantata will be broadcast over the radio from both cities on the same day.

Highland, Ohio

The society of recreation and expression held its sixth annual banquet November 24, a most successful event. Committees worked industriously preparing the food, decorating the room, and making the program.

The number attending exceeded that of former years, two hundred being present. Among these were J. R. Grice, and

Briefs

Nevada, Iowa, Saints and friends have recently enjoyed a three-week missionary series conducted by Evangelist and Sister Richard Baldwin. At the close of the meetings four were baptized. Though little gospel work had been done there for a period of years, the Saints living there loyally supported the meetings, and attendance grew to a nightly average of from fifty to seventy. Everyone was enthusiastic over the good accomplished.

Brother and Sister Baldwin spent Thanksgiving at Des Moines, and now are laboring at Webster City.

Elder Harold I. Velt, immediately after his installation as pastor of the branch at Spokane, Washington, launched a missionary campaign with the help of local priesthood members, which has brought new inspiration and new growth to that congregation. This was a complete, cooperative movement, and enthusiasm ran high. "The Riddle of American Origins" was the headline on the two thousand handbills distributed, and Brother Velt, the speaker, brought to his hearers many inspiring thoughts concerning the ancient civilizations of Central and South America in proof of the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

Elder William Patterson, president of Port Huron Branch, Michigan, rejoices over the progress of his local. In a report to the First Presidency he says in part: "I am thankful to God for progress made and blessings received in Port Huron Branch. We have accomplished more than was thought possible when I came here over two years ago. Much improvement has been effected inside and outside the church, and additional equipment has been secured. Among the major accomplishments are the redecoration of the upper auditorium; the sanding and varnishing of floors and rearranging of the seats in the upper auditorium; the installing of a fine boiler and the enlargement of the boiler and coal rooms; the securing of gowns for the choir, and the purchasing of one hundred new Hymnals. Recently two members presented in the best binding the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon (with initials, 'Pulpit P. Huron Branch') to the branch, and a third member has offered the Inspired Version for the pulpit. All the foregoing improvements and equipment has been paid for, and the treasurer informs me that we have a credit balance of twenty-three dollars with no outstanding accounts.

"There is continued interest in church services, and the priesthood are anxious to follow leadership. . . . Since July, 1932, sixty have been baptized into the branch."

A. E. Anderton, of Columbus; Floyd Rockwell, of Dayton, and A. B. Kirkendall and L. C. Kirkendall, of Creola, Ohio.

After the three-course dinner the following program was much enjoyed by all present: two musical readings by Elder J. R. Grice; three numbers by the girls' quartet, and the evening's speaker was Floyd Rockwell.

Workers hope that by another year this branch will have its new church, a goal toward which they have been striving for several years.

The Willing Workers have been very faithful, helping in every way to raise money for the new edifice. They added considerable to their treasury by having suppers, bake sales, and by making beautiful quilts. They hope to add still more when they have completed the yodel yoo quilt on which they are now working.

Santa Ana, California

Thanksgiving morning at ten o'clock, Santa Ana Saints met for an hour of prayer and thanksgiving. Special music added to the enjoyment of the meeting. At the conclusion of the service, the pastor, Louis Osterstag, turned the meeting over to Bishop D. B. Carmichael, who officiated while the special Thanksgiving offering for the general church was taken up.

The branch has been busy during the last two months. On October 21, rally day was held with Elder D. B. Sorden, of Los Angeles, as the speaker morning and evening. Luncheon was a basket affair served at Fisher Park. The services were well attended and Brother Sorden's sermons were greatly appreciated.

On November 2, Miss Mildred Calkins held an interesting meeting at her home for the mothers of the children in her church school class. She had asked Mrs. D. B. Sorden, in charge of the church school of Los Angeles, and Mrs. Launce Sutherland, church school director of East Los Angeles Branch, to talk over with the mothers problems and suggestions for better attendance at church school. Their talks were inspirational and many good ideas were discussed. Later, Mrs. Charles Calkins assisted her daughter in serving ice cream, cake, and tea.

On November 24, half a dozen of the young people of the branch drove up to Los Angeles to attend the young people's convention. They reported a good attendance during class work and much enjoyment of the fine sermon preached by Elder Arthur Oakman.

Branch good times include a halloween party on the evening of October 30, with fifty-five members in costumes celebrating in the usual halloween fashion. On November 9, the young people entertained the Saints at a radio party. The stage of the church basement was turned into a radio broadcasting room, and with Rodney Engel as announcer, the amused listeners saw as well as heard the talented young people of the church in songs and comedy skits. Popcorn balls were served when the announcer "signed off." A branch sacrifice dinner was held on the Friday preceding Thanksgiving when a chicken dinner was enjoyed. The price was whatever the members wished to sacrifice. Fifty-one dollars was raised, and the branch was able to get adequate heat for the church school with the money obtained.

The boys of Sister Taressa Koonce's class have a new teacher, Brother Don Nimmo. On Saturday, December 2, they gave Sister Koonce a farewell picnic at Irvine Park. During the lunch hour they presented her a Book of Mormon, a gift given in appreciation of her work.

At the present time the youngsters of the church school are busy working on their Christmas entertainment. Sister Delia Mills, in charge of the junior church school, is directing their efforts with the help of Sister Don Nimmo. Old as well as young are looking forward to the Christmas season, with all that it means to followers of our Lord. Then, too, the Saints are appreciative of the ministry of Brother and Sister Osterstag, who began their work in Santa Ana just a year ago at Christmas time.

Muskegon, Michigan

Rally day was held Sunday, November 18, at the church, with Saints from Grand Rapids, Lansing, Battle Creek, Pontiac, and Detroit attending. The services began with a prayer meeting at 9:45 a. m., Apostle D. T. Williams, and Elders A. C. Barmore and A. J. Dexter in charge.

Preaching at eleven o'clock was by Brother Williams. Dinner was served at noon in the church basement by the women's department. Elder Dexter preached at 2 p. m., and Apostle Williams spoke on the subject of the Zion's Christian Legion at 3:15 p. m.

Musicians from Grand Rapids gave some fine Hawaiian selections at the four o'clock hour. The roundtable talk held at 4:15 p. m. was of much interest to all. Supper was served in the basement at five-thirty.

The concluding service of the day was the preaching hour, Brother A. C. Barmore the speaker. He remained with the Saints for a week's series of illustrated lectures which were very well attended.

On Wednesday of that week a special business meeting was called by District President Barmore. Elder E. E. Loomis was elected branch president. Vernon Swager and William Farwig hold the office of priest, and they were chosen counselors to Elder Loomis.

A prayer service was held Thanksgiving at 8 p. m., and was very well attended.

Independence

Handel's beautiful oratorio "The Messiah," will be broadcast over KMBC, Sunday, December 23, from 5:30 to 6:30 p. m., from the Stone Church auditorium by a chorus of one hundred and twenty-five voices of the Messiah Choir. Radio listeners are invited to tune in and share this Christmas gift of the choir with the Stone Church congregation. Paul N. Craig will direct the performance, and the soloists this year are all Independence artists—soprano, Mrs. Pauline Arnson; contralto, Mrs. Alice Burgess; tenor, George Anway, and bass, Albert Brackenbury. Robert and George Miller will accompany at the organ and piano.

Stone Church

Apostle R. S. Budd brought his two-week series of sermons to a close with two fine discourses Sunday. Both were heard by large congregations. Stone Church Saints appreciate Brother Budd's services, and in spite of unfavorable weather conditions, numbers attended every night.

At a special baptismal service Sunday afternoon at two o'clock in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church two were baptized, Mrs. Mildred Fishleigh, who has been an earnest seeker for truth during Brother Budd's series, and Richard Miller, a lad fifteen years old.

The Stone Church Choir sang anthems at both morning and evening services. This choir has faithfully attended the missionary meetings, and supported Brother Budd with appropriate music. Particular credit is due all the soloists.

The funeral of Sister Mina Elsie Madison, wife of William Madison, was conducted from the Stone Church Thursday afternoon, December 13, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Madison died in Washington, D. C., December 7, where she had gone with her husband who is a full-blooded Indian, secretary of the Society of American Indians. Mr. Madison was at the capital in the interest of legislation benefiting his race. The funeral sermon was by Elder R. V. Hopkins. Mrs. Madison leaves besides her husband, four sons: Lee Hart, of Independence, by a former marriage; Quinten Madison, George Madison, and Dwight Madison, all of Independence, and three sisters: Mrs. Elma Davis, Independence; Mrs. Carrie Ballinger, Chicago, and Mrs. Ella Biggerstaff, Jefferson, Kansas. For many years Sister Madison had been an ardent worker for the church. Some time ago she held office in the women's department of the church.

The marriage of Miss Velma Spangler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Spangler, of Stewartville, Missouri, and Cleo Hoover, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Blackburn, at Independence, December 10, at 2 p. m., Priest Ralph Blackburn officiating. The bride, a graduate of the Independence Sanitarium

School of Nursing, has many friends in Independence, and the bridegroom is an active priest in the branch at Council Bluffs. Immediately following the ceremony and reception the bridal couple left for their home at Council Bluffs.

Second Church

The church school Sunday morning boasted an attendance of two hundred and forty. The goal set is two hundred and fifty. Ten classes were perfect in attendance.

President Elbert A. Smith spoke Sunday morning at eleven o'clock on the Sermon on the Mount. The choir sang the anthem, "I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes," and a quartet contributed a selection.

Downstairs at the same hour Roy Settles spoke to the junior congregation. His theme was supported by stories and music given by helpers and friends of that department.

The evening speaker was Elder R. V. Hopkins whose subject was "Learning Obedience From the Things We Suffer." Music was furnished by the ladies' quartet from Enoch Hill.

Elder J. A. Gillen was the morning speaker Sunday, December 9, and his topic was "Do We Believe in Jesus Christ?" That evening Apostle F. Henry Edward presented a forceful discourse on John 1:8. Music was given by Las Favoritas, a women's chorus from Liberty Street, Mrs. J. R. Lentell directing.

Walnut Park Church

The entire congregation was saddened last week-end by the news of an accident to Cecil Wood, son of Elder and Sister Welton Wood of Walnut Park. He had just left his work in Kansas City Friday night, when an automobile struck him, fracturing his skull, severely injuring his left eye and fracturing his left knee. The driver of the car did not stop. While his condition was said to be critical, it was thought Sunday that he had a good chance to live, though it was doubtful whether the sight of his eye could be saved. Elder Wood was the first pastor of the Walnut Park congregation more than twenty years ago, and for the last several years has been one of the most ardent and devoted workers, the junior church service in the lower auditorium on Sunday mornings being his special charge.

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith was the speaker at eleven o'clock Sunday morning, the choir singing "Fairest Lord Jesus" as the anthem preceding the sermon. Elder J. A. Gillen spoke Sunday evening.

The Cantanina Chorus of the Stone Church, under the direction of Sister H. C. Burgess, gave a concert at the program hour of the religio Sunday evening.

Preparations are being made to furnish Christmas baskets to families of needy Saints again this year. Different classes and organizations of the congregation have undertaken the major part

Graceland Briefs

Graceland chapel programs have been of great interest lately, bearing the characteristics of helpfulness, vitality, and worth.

Friday, November 30, the college group enjoyed its own faculty artists on a request program. Mrs. Linna Hunt, voice instructor at the college, sang several beautiful numbers; Mrs. Anna Carrel, piano teacher, rendered a group of musical presentations, and Roscoe Faunce, Graceland's speech arts professor, gave a few choice readings.

Monday, December 10, the student body was privileged to hear George Mesley, president of Kansas City Stake, in an inspiring address. President Mesley, who is a Graceland alumnus, pointed out the great need of service to the church.

Holiday season begins at Graceland, Friday noon, December 21. Students will be off to homes in some twenty States. Those who will be unable to vacation at home due to the great distance of their respective homes, plan to remain in the dormitories, or to visit in Independence, Kansas City, or other near towns and cities. Class work will be resumed January 2.

The Patroness Society of Lamoni has presented Graceland with two hundred dollars to be spent for library books. These are to include departmental and reference books.

This fine presentation is but one of many this group of women has made to Graceland. The purpose of their organization is to raise funds to be expended for the betterment of the college campus. At the opening of Walker Hall in 1929, the Patroness Society donated liberally toward the furnishing of the building. In the past two years they have donated a substantial fund to the Graceland landscaping project. These are but a few of their numerous projects. Mrs. Fred Condit is president of the group.

The "deep" South of the Graceland student body were recently entertained at a party in Lamoni. The John Garver home was the scene of this enjoyable event. Alabama was represented by three students: Clarence Dreadin, sophomore; Mamilu Taylor, and Don Odom, both freshmen. Mabel Wilkinson, Florida girl, who is also a member of the freshman class, was the other guest.

The three "freshies" of this group had never experienced northern snowdrifts before this winter at Graceland. The majority of Gracelanders are wondering just how long it will take the Southerners to lose their characteristic drawl.

Briefs

Walker Hall celebrates its fifth anniversary of occupancy this month. Although the official opening of this dormitory did not take place until the spring of 1930, it was entered by the girls of the campus in December, 1929.

It was indeed a joyous occasion when this building was first opened as home to the Graceland coeds. Miss Tess Morgan was the first dean to occupy the dean's suite provided in Walker Hall.

Traditional Yuletide festivities marked the pre-holiday period at Graceland. The annual Christmas vespers were held in Graceland chapel, Wednesday, December 12. This is always a lovely and impressive ceremony. The annual Lambda Delta Sigma Christmas dinner, however, has been postponed.

The last Graceland student recital of the year was presented Thursday evening, December 13. Twenty students participated in this fine presentation. The program included piano, voice, and dramatic numbers. This was undoubtedly the finest recital of the 1934 part of the school term.

Savanna, Illinois, young people have organized the O. A. U. Club and are using as their theme song, "Onward and Upward."

Elder A. C. Barmore, district president, attended rally day services held November 13, at Muskegon, and continued afterward for a week's series of illustrated lectures very well attended.

The Ontario Church Oratorical Contest was held at London, November 25, Toronto, Owen Sound, Chatham, and London Districts being represented. Marie Mottashed, of London, won the girls' trophy, and Austin Essery, of Hamilton, won the boys'.

Flint, Michigan, Branch enjoys varied activities each Friday night at the church. They have community singing the young people's glee club has its rehearsals, and classes in dramatics and Book of Mormon are conducted. Occasionally they also have recreation and refreshments.

Patriarch George W. Robley was a welcome visitor and helper in Columbus, Ohio, branches in November. He visited First Church November 4 to 11, preaching inspirational sermons. In company with District President A. E. Anderton he attended prayer service with Second Church congregation the evening of November 14.

I have but one merit, that of never despairing.—Marshal Foch.

of this work. A special gift service will be held next Sunday morning, at which every member of the church will be given an opportunity to place a gift upon the altar. Cash or anything else will be acceptable. Fruit or produce received at that time will be used in making up some of the baskets.

Enoch Hill Church

Some of the Saints of this district are taking advantage of two Monday evening classes taught by government teachers. The subjects of study are grammar and home economics, and the courses will continue until June.

Brother Claude Beal was in charge of the women's study hour last Thursday. The workers met at the home of Sister Ethel Larson, and spent considerable time quilting.

An effective program on the theme, "Giving," preceded the study period of the church school Sunday morning.

Elder O. W. Sarratt was the eleven o'clock speaker Sunday morning, and in the evening Apostle F. H. Edwards based his forceful sermon on a reading from Hebrews 10.

The children are preparing their contribution to the Christmas program.

Englewood Church

Sunday morning, December 9, Pastor T. A. Beck was the speaker. At the evening service, Elder Carl F. Greene, a missionary just returned from Germany, preached.

Wednesday, December 12, the women's department held an all-day meeting at the home of Mrs. C. I. McConnell. This department also sponsored a good fellowship meeting held at the church Friday, the fourteenth.

Sunday, December 16, Elder W. I. Fligg delivered the morning sermon. Brother Fligg's talk was based upon the personality of the church.

At two o'clock, a priesthood meeting was held at the church, President F. M. McDowell in charge. At the seven o'clock service, President McDowell occupied. His sermon dealt with the task of the women, and most especially with the wives of members of the priesthood.

Wednesday, at 1 p. m., the women's department will have a Christmas party at the home of Mrs. Arthur Welch.

The young people's department are giving two plays Friday night, December 21. The proceeds will be used for the purchasing of equipment.

East Independence

Wednesday night and Sunday morning prayer services are in charge of local ministers. The Sunday morning meetings for three weeks have been one hundred per cent with a number of young people present. The worshippers are taking a verse from the New Testament and basing their testimony on it. Even children who do not belong to the church have taken part in this way.

Miss Pauline Siegfried and Mrs. Irene Roberts were recent speakers at the Monday evening dramatic club.

"Living Together in Peace" was the theme of Elder C. A. Kress's sermon the morning of December 9.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood was the speaker the morning of December 16, and his discourse was based on Hebrews 10:1-23. The choir, directed by Alma Edwards, and a quartet, furnished music.

Interest in Elder S. S. Smith's Sunday evening chart sermons is running high. He has occupied for several weeks now, and the Saints benefit from his clear explanations. On the night of December 9, he presented the building and organization of the church. Last Sunday night he read Psalm 119 and his theme was "The Chain of Light."

Music at the morning church school Sunday was furnished by Sisters Ona Pype, Marie Farley, and Sister Talbert, of Detroit, singing "Just for Today." At the evening church school hour the program was given by Brother S. S. Smith's class, and one of the feature numbers was "O Calvary," sung by four women who are sisters, Sister Amundsen, Sister Pyper, Sister Farley, and Sister Talbert.

Hammond, Indiana

Missionary Roscoe Davey opened a series of meetings at Hammond, November 4, and continued three weeks. He preached in a simple and straightforward manner so that all could understand his message. Attendance was good and included a number of nonmembers. He led Elizabeth Patton into the waters of baptism the afternoon of November 25. Everyone was loath to see him go.

Armistice Day was remembered in this branch. And Brother R. W. Smith officiated in a pretty wedding at the church which united two nonmembers in marriage.

The annual election of officers for the branch occurred early in September, and the following will be in charge of local endeavors: Pastor, R. W. Smith; counselors, E. O. Butler and D. H. Smith; treasurer, bishop's agent, and solicitor, C. C. Ellis; auditor, H. H. Myers; superintendent of Sunday school, C. C. Ellis; superintendent of recreation and expression, Harold Willoughby, and women's supervisor, Sister Hattie Bagley. These will be assisted by other willing officers and helpers.

An impressive installation service was held for these officers, the pastor delivering to each a charge regarding his office and calling.

October 21, this branch was in attendance at the district conference which convened at First Chicago Church, and each one came home feeling rewarded for the effort made to attend.

The recreation and expression department entertained with a halloween party October 30.

A son was born to Brother and Sister Herbert Myers November 28.

The women's department meets every week at the home of Sister Bagley to quilt. They have done some lovely work.

The branch is now preparing for Christmas.

Holden Stake

Holden Stake Reunion Next Year

Members of Holden Stake met at the semiannual conference at Holden December 8 and 9, and voted to have a reunion next summer. The question of having a reunion has been before the Saints of the stake for some time.

At the conference, the stake high council presented its recommendation that Holden Stake have a reunion in August, 1935, provided enough people make advance orders for tents to insure a successful gathering. Members of the stake accepted this recommendation.

About a hundred people attended the business session of the conference on Saturday afternoon. Icy roads, stiff wind, and low temperatures kept many members at home. Sunday there was much larger representation. President F. M. McDowell and the Stake Presidency were in charge.

The stake officers were sustained un-animously, Amos E. Allen and J. A. Thomas, stake presidency; Bishop J. A. Koehler, Earl T. Higdon, and C. F. Scarcliff, stake bishopric; Earl T. Higdon, director of religious education; Bernice Hampton, stake director of music.

Mrs. Ammon Andes resigned as stake secretary, because of ill health. Mrs. Vernon Lundeen moved out of the stake, and presented her resignation as recorder. On nomination from the stake presidency these vacancies were filled by Genevieve Smith as secretary, and Clifford J. Long as recorder.

Bishop G. L. DeLapp in Stake

Bishop G. L. DeLapp visited the stake conference, representing the Presiding Bishopric, and delivered the sermon at eleven o'clock Sunday morning. Before the eleven o'clock hour, he taught the class of adults, and in the afternoon took part in the ordination and dedication service.

Preceding the sermon, three orations were heard by members of the stake from three young men of the stake. The orations had been written as a stake religious education project. Five were written, and were presented the week before and two chosen as best suited to the requirements, needs, and adaptability of the Stake. The general subject was the financial law, and most of the contestants wrote on the spiritual value of obeying the financial law. Wendell Van Tuyl, Atherton, and Floyd Mengel, Lees Summit, wrote the two that were chosen.

At the conference Sunday morning, these two and Max Constance, Warrensburg, presented their orations. Louise Minor and Fred Wilson were the other contestants.

Elder Earl T. Higdon, director of religious education, was ordained as a high priest at the special service Sunday afternoon. He has been serving also as counselor to the bishop.

Elder Earl F. Hoisington, pastor at Lees Summit, was set apart to the high council in the same service. John T. Smith was approved and accepted as another member of the high council, but he could not be at the conference.

Ammon Beebe, Atherton, and Joseph F. Brown, Jefferson City, were approved, on recommendation of the high council, to be ordained to the office of priest. The stake presidency is to provide for the ordination later.

Special Dedication Service

At the afternoon session, devoted to ordinations and dedication, President F. M. McDowell called for representatives of different groups in the stake. These people met in a semi-circle in front of the rostrum, and President McDowell briefly spoke of the need of all of these groups to be dedicated to the service, of their need to work together toward one end.

This fellowship circle was then further bound together by a prayer of dedication and blessing by W. S. Macrae, former stake president.

Groups represented in this ceremony were; the stake presidency, James A. Thomas, Stake bishopric, C. F. Scarcliff; high council, G. W. Beebe; branch presidents, Luther Payne; young men, Wesley Bilquist; young women, Margaret Pooler; unordained leaders, Bernice Hampton; visitors, Dave Wilson of Spring River district; women, Sarah Burroughs: The newly ordained and dedicated men, Brother Higdon and Brother Hoisington, were in the circle.

New Young People's Set-up

The young people met in a special session Sunday morning to launch several projects and to improve the young people's set-up in the stake. A short story contest was launched, in charge of Clifford J. Long. Anna L. Larson was chosen, on nomination of young people's president, Robert Thistlethwaite, as dramatics chairman for the stake. An education project was put forth, to be conducted through the Holden Stake Clarion, stake paper, Emily Blackmore in charge.

The members of the young people's executive committee, Robert Thistlethwaite, president, Ammon Andes, vice-president, and Genevieve Smith, secretary, resigned. It was then suggested by President F. M. McDowell and un-animously approved by the young people that an advisory council should be selected to work with the stake officers in planning young people's activities. This council is to consist of three representatives of the young people and the director of religious education, Earl T. Higdon, and his assistant, Robert Thistlethwaite. The stake president may be an ex-officio member of the council.

Representatives of the young people on this council, as chosen Sunday, are: Genevieve Smith, Blue Springs; Robert Kittinger, Holden; Charles Wintermayer, Marshall.

Flint, Michigan

Flint members enjoyed a fine three-week series of missionary services conducted by Elder John R. Grice in the Newall Street church during October.

Many evenings every available space in the church was filled. The experience was so enjoyable that a resolution was made to ask Elder Grice to return for a like series every year.

At the close of the services six adults and five children were baptized.

The prayer and testimony meetings were the finest Flint Saints have experienced in many months. Much needed encouragement and instruction were given.

Friday evening activities at the church are community singing, young people's glee club rehearsals, classes in dramatics and Book of Mormon, and occasionally recreation and refreshments.

The Saints were pleasantly surprised with a visit from Elder John R. Grice, December 2. He preached on three successive evenings.

Denver, Colorado

On November 15, a social, arranged by Mrs. E. W. Fishburn, head of the adult group, was held in the lower auditorium of the church. The theme for the program, "Home," was carried out in piano music by Mrs. Betty Newland, vocal solos by Wilma Graybill and Mildred Sheehy, readings by Inez Schrunk, Mildred Sheehy and Mrs. E. J. Williams, and a talk by the pastor. Refreshments were served by the men, directed by R. S. Salyards, jr.

The Temple Builders held a successful box social the evening of November 27, in the lower auditorium. The girls arranged an interesting program, consisting of songs by Wilma Graybill; a short sketch presented by Carrie Baird, Mildred Sheehy, Wilma Graybill; accordion music by Fred Kemp; "Young Lochinvar," by the verse-reading choir. Howard Sheehy, master of ceremonies, conducted the auctioning of the boxes, the proceeds of which will be used to help pay for the decorating of the lower auditorium.

Brother Smith gave a very interesting and instructive illustrated sermon on the Old Testament Sunday evening, December 2.

The Loyal Workers are meeting every Tuesday and Thursday in the church for all-day sessions, spending their time quilting. Their earnings are given to help defray branch expenses and in other praiseworthy ways. Some of the Columbinas help in this work.

Mrs. Marie Pointer, entertained the Columbinas at her home Wednesday, December 5. Necessary business was transacted and a social time enjoyed. Refreshments were served by the hostess.

A cantata is being prepared by the choir, under the direction of Farr Kemp, to be given the Sunday evening before Christmas. Other preparations are being made for the Christmas season, notably a children's party, a program for Sunday morning, December 23, baskets and clothing to be given to the unfortunate, and toys for the children of needy families.

Far West Stake

Bishop's Counselor Selected

Elder David W. Gamet, of Cameron, was recommended by Bishop Henry L. Livingston as counselor in the stake bishopric at the special stake conference held at Cameron Sunday, December 9, at 3 p. m. The conference unanimously approved this recommendation, and Elder Gamet was set apart to this office at the close of the business session by Apostles J. F. Garver and F. Henry Edwards. Brother Gamet comes into this important work with a splendid record as solicitor for a number of years. He also was a member of the stake high council for several years.

Several other recommendations were approved by the conference making provision for the ordination of the following men: Garland C. Snapp, of King City, Clifford B. Constance of First Saint Joseph, Vern P. Goodenough, of Second Saint Joseph, and Homer Snider, of Oakdale, to the office of elder; Elbert A. Schmidt, of Ross Grove, Hallard W. Felch, of Second Saint Joseph, and Orville Hulmes, of Richmond, to the office of priest; and Eugene Snider, of Second Saint Joseph, Ross Gamet, of Trenton, to the office of deacon.

Church School Rally

The conference was held in conjunction with the stake church school rally scheduled for that day. The opening service was a worship service conducted by Sister Eunice Livingston, stake director of religious education, on the theme of "Go Teach," Bishop Henry L. Livingston spoke at ten o'clock. Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the guest speaker at the eleven o'clock and two o'clock hours, giving inspiring sermons.

A workers' council was conducted by Sister Livingston at one o'clock for all church school workers and pastors of the stake. Various problems of church school work, especially as to how the missionary program may be advanced through the church school, were discussed.

In spite of bad roads throughout parts of the stake, a good representation was present and a splendid day was enjoyed.

Fourth Saint Joseph Church

A special Thanksgiving service was held Wednesday evening before Thanksgiving. Elder T. E. Hale was the speaker and a program was given.

Two babies have been blessed recently at the services. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hill and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar were blessed.

The women's department has raised the quota for the reunion budget fund by making comforters and other sewing. A chili supper was held in October which cleared $5.50 towards this fund.

A cottage prayer service is held every two weeks on Thursday evening. Recently the meetings have been held in the home of Sister Ruoff who has been confined to her home.

Cameron Branch

In the past few weeks Cameron Branch has had the privilege of listening to some exceptionally fine speakers. Bishop Henry L. Livingston spoke on Sunday, November 11, and Sunday, November 18, delivering a powerful message at both times. Sunday, November 25, Stake President Ward A. Hougas gave a message full of timely counsel to the Saints. On the evening of the twenty-fifth Elder Lester Macrae, missionary to Hawaii, gave an interesting talk, illustrated by stereopticon slides. Brother Macrae was formerly a resident in Cameron, and was welcomed "home" by many old friends.

Sunday, November 4, the evening service was given over to the Æolian Choir from Independence. A splendid program was given to an unusually large and appreciative audience.

The choir, directed by Brother Paul Fiddick, has been organized and is working on a Christmas cantata, "The Holy Nativity." The O. T. Z.'s are rehearsing a series of Christmas plays to be given during the month of December. The C. S. S. group has been doing relief work for the poor, mostly in the form of sewing and remaking garments. The priesthood class is studying the material on the ministry sent out by Brother McDowell.

Thanksgiving Day, an impressive service was held at the church, following which a Thanksgiving feast, in the form of a basket dinner, was shared in the church basement.

Order your Christmas presents through the Herald Publishing House. A wide selection of valuable gifts.

Pittsburg, Kansas

The Pittsburg young people held their monthly vesper service Sunday night, November 25. The sacred program and sermonet were centered about the theme, "Give Thanks to God." These vesper services, of recent origin, are meeting the whole-hearted approval and support of the branch, and are furnishing ample opportunity for the young people to serve.

The young men and women are greatly encouraged by the recent ordination of T. W. Bath to the office of elder, and Ellsworth Weaver, priest. These two young men are active workers and leaders among our young people, and they have pledged themselves to greater service and responsibility.

Pittsburg Branch expresses deep sympathy for the family of Elder George Harrington. Without Brother Harrington's strong, steadfast faith and his years of active service, they believe their church building would never have been completed. His loyal help was an inspiration to Pittsburg members. The light that shone in his life will always be a guiding beacon for all.

A special Thanksgiving prayer service was held at the church the evening of November 28, and a short program was followed by inspirational prayers and testimonies. Old and young expressed their thankfulness in having a God who is, and a wonderful cause for which they can give their lives.

Des Moines Observes Annual Financial Day

December 2, was Financial Observance Day for Des Moines District. A district wide campaign was carried out for two weeks preceding that date by Stephen Robinson, district bishop's agent. Special speakers besides himself were District President Henry Castings, Elders Clyde McDonald, George Orr, E. O. Clark, and Levi Anderson; Priest E. F. Hall, and Teacher Harold Cackler. The theme centered about the filing of inventories and paying of tithes.

All outlying branches and groups were visited by these men, and all local teachers of Sunday schools were instructed to teach the law governing temporalities.

As a climax the Saints of the district were invited to come to Des Moines, December 2, and participate in the annual financial observance program. All brought lunch baskets, and Des Moines women served the food to everyone. Both dinner and supper were served in the lower church auditorium.

A heavy snowfall accompanied by wind which made great drifts on November 30, kept many at home who would have attended if they could have done so. But in spite of this a good audience was present at all services.

Pastor V. L. Deskin and Harold Cackler were in charge of a young people's prayer service at 8 a. m., in which a devoted group participated. District Superintendent E. H. Kirlin was in charge of the church school at nine-thirty, assisted by Russell Hart, of Nevada. The theme of all classes was the law governing finances.

At ten-thirty Bishop G. L. DeLapp addressed a large congregation on the keeping of the whole law. He was followed by a short inspirational talk by Stephen Robinson after which district officers led the march by a table on which all laid their reports to the Bishop.

The service was filled with inspiring messages, and the climax was reached when old and young filed by the desk and left their financial statements. One hundred and fifty-five Saints made a report, and many more will be mailed soon.

Apostle John F. Garver was in charge of a sacrament and devotion meeting at 2 p. m.

At six-thirty Brother DeLapp address the priesthood class, answering questions at the close. Following the class period a program of music was enjoyed. Fifteen of Lucy Orr's Blue Birds sang "The Whole Wide World."

Patriarch Richard Baldwin preached a sermon which brought this day of activities to a perfect conclusion. Most of the visitors remained for the closing service. Saints came from Newton, Webster City, Nevada, Perry, and Winterset.

A well-arranged program of music and song was prepared by District chorister Eva Williams.

London, Ontario

November was a busy month for this branch. On the first day the women's department, in charge of Sister J. F. Winegarden, held a successful bazaar in the lower auditorium of the church. They are to be commended for their fine display of articles offered for sale. The branch appreciates the efforts of this group.

The eighteenth anniversary of the present church home was celebrated November 18, and President Elbert A. Smith was present and addressed the church school Sunday morning and preached in the afternoon and evening. His sermons were inspiring and encouraging. Many not of the faith were present and interested in his words. As a result of Brother Smith's visit, all are going forward with new confidence, more enthusiasm, and a greater desire to go onward to Zion. Special music was rendered by the choir and orchestra at each service.

On Sunday morning they were also favored with a visit from Professor Landon, professor of history at the University of Western Ontario. He displayed considerable interest in the history contained in the Book of Mormon, and the Saints feel that good will result from his contact with President Smith. By invitation of Professor Landon, President Smith on Monday morning visited the university. As a result of this visit several books of the church with the Saints' Herald, will be supplied the library of the university.

At the last quarterly business meeting of the branch the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Pastor, Elder J. E. MacGregor; counselors, Elders W. A. Hardey and Frank Gray; church school director, Elder Frank Gray; recording secretary, Arlo G. Hodgson; financial secretary, Ray Bicknell, and treasurer, H. Ward. These will be assisted by faithful helpers and committees.

On Monday evening, November 19, the anniversary banquet was held in the lower auditorium of the church, and at 8 p. m. an exceptionally fine concert was presented in the main auditorium.

November 25, the Ontario Church Oratorical Contest was held at London, Toronto, Owen Sound, Chatham, and London districts were represented in the contest. Marie Mottashed, of London, was successful in winning the girls' trophy, and Austin Essery, of Hamilton, won the boys'.

Sister T. G. Armstrong is recovering from the efforts of a dislocated arm. The injury was sustained at her home when she tripped over a floor mat.

Davidson, Oklahoma

Unfavorable weather had an adverse effect on attendance at the 10 a. m. Thanksgiving prayer service, but those able to come enjoyed the spirit of love and fellowship.

The church school gave a fitting program the Sunday morning before Thanksgiving. The primary class taught by Mrs. D. C. Feely gave the thanksgiving prayer. The story of Alma, the young Nephite, was beautifully told by a junior, James Greeg, and the primary class taught by Mrs. H. B. Qualls, sang a thanksgiving song. Mrs. Feely gave a talk on that for which we should be thankful, and Mrs. Helen Riding told the story of "The Angelus."

Pastor Z. Z. Renfroe has returned home after an absence of a month during which he held meetings at Tulsa for two weeks, and preached at Calumet one Sunday. He and his family went to Lubbock, Texas, for Thanksgiving, and while there he spent his time in fireside preaching.

The local priesthood, E. B. Stafford, B. F. Renfroe, and Ira Skinner, kept the branch work going during Brother Renfroe's absence.

The December communion service was well attended and a good spirit was present. Brother Z. Z. Renfroe was the evening speaker and his subject was "Judgment."

Appointment of Bishop's Agent

Notice is hereby given that Brother Granville S. Trowbridge has been appointed to serve as bishop's agent for Arkansas District, taking over the work formerly handled by Brother R. A. Ziegenhorn.

Brother Trowbridge comes well recommended by those who know him and have been associated with him. We are glad to recommend him to the Saints of Arkansas District, and solicit their whole-hearted support in this phase of the work of the church.

We wish at this time to express appreciation for the very fine cooperation given by Brother Ziegenhorn in his bishop's agent work.

We hereby request that the solicitors send their January reports to Granville S. Trowbridge, 202 West Howard Street, Nashville, Arkansas.

dent in other centers than Leichhardt, and who are desirous of participating in the society's work. A goodly number are enrolled under this designation and most of them are engaging in studies through the correspondence courses already referred to.

The society has as its goal the development of youth along these specialized lines that their service in the church may be made thereby more effective. Such an aim is summed up in the motto of the society, which is "Altiora Peto!" ("Higher things my goal.")

MICHIGAN MUSICAL MOVEMENT

Coldwater and Battle Creek have most excellent talent and we expect them to be prepared to take part in these activities.

Detroit, Central, Northern and Eastern districts are doing well and we hope to make a detailed report of their progress in a later issue of the Herald.

President Smith assures us that he appreciates the fine work being done. We in turn can assure him that we are going to do more and a better quality of music.

present. Branch presidents are requested to send summarized reports to District President Charles Fry, 1264 Lincoln Street, Topeka, Kansas. Branch clerks, please send statistical reports to the undersigned. As many of the Saints in the district as can attend are urged to be present. The first service will be held at 11 a. m. Saturday.—Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger, district secretary, 1177 Randolph, Topeka, Kansas.

Marriages

CLIFT-OLIVER.—Miss Elsie Clift, daughter of the late Elder Richard Clift, sr., and Mrs. Clift, and F. Eldon Oliver, son of Mrs. Mabel Oliver, of Toronto, Canada, were united in marriage by Elder J. L. Prentice, October 27. The guests attended the reception at the home of the bride's parent. The young couple are making their home at Hamilton, Ontario.

KEEBLE-INGRAM.—Miss Mildred Keeble, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Keeble, of Rich Hill, Missouri, and Melvin S. Ingram, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Ingram, were united in marriage at 10:30 a. m. Sunday, September 30, during the Rich Hill district conference, Elder Arlie D. Allen officiating. Miss Pauline Keeble was bridesmaid and LeRoy Beckham, of Butler, Missouri, acted as best man. Flower girls were Esther Darline Keeble and Phola Lane Bolser. The bride and bridegroom are members of Rich Hill Branch, holding local offices. Mrs. Ingram is district director of young people. About three hundred friends witnessed the ceremony. The bridal pair are making their home on a farm south of Rich Hill.

MCMASTER-WHITE.—The wedding of Miss Gladys McMaster, only daughter of Mrs. Beatrice McMaster, of the Windsor Court, and the late George H. McMaster, to John Joseph White, of Windsor, son of Joseph J. White and the late Mrs. White, of Bathurst, New Brunswick, was solemnized at the Saints' church, November 17, at 2 p. m., the bride's uncle, Bishop John C. Dent, of London, officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Charles McMaster, and her only attendant was Miss Bessie Smith, of Essex. Doctor Orlo Dent, cousin of the bride, assisted the bridegroom as best man, and Ross Johnson, of Rodney, and H. F. Noonan were ushers. A reception followed the ceremony at the home of the bride's mother, then the bridal couple left by motor for Toronto. On their return they will make their home in the Windsor Court. At the close of their regular meeting, November 6, the Sunshine Club, local Temple Builders, of which the bride is a charter member, tendered a personal shower. November 13, the Sunshine Club members were hostesses to Windsor Branch at a miscellaneous shower in the bride's honor. Many other functions were given in her honor. Mr. and Mrs. Ronald McRae, of Chatham, entertained the wedding party at the rehearsal supper at the Windsor Court. The bride is an active member of the Georgia Club, an organization sponsored by the local "Y," and of the Essex County Dental Assistants' Association and the Ontario Dental Assistants' Association.

HIELD-ROE.—Miss Etheleyn Juanita Hield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman E. Hield, sr., was married to Clifford Edgar Roe, of Whitewater, October 19, in the home of her parents at Janesville, Wisconsin. Elder Henry Woodstock, of Madison, uncle of the bride, officiated, and Norman Hield offered prayer. Carol Mae and Joy Hield, small nieces of the bride were flower girl and ring bearer. Mrs. Forrest Schultze was the matron of honor, and Mr. Schultze attended the bridegroom. A dinner was served to thirty guests following the ceremony. The bride graduated from Janesville High School, Graceland College, and Rock County Rural Normal. Mr. Roe attended the Whitewater High School. They will make their home at Whitewater.

Our Departed Ones

BOHLOE.—W. G. Bohloe was born at Houston, Texas, October 9, 1871. He married Alice Oberle, of Houston, December 26, 1894, and to them was born a son, William G. He was baptized in July, 1919, at Houston, by A. J. Banta. Passed away at his home July 17, 1934, leaving his wife, son, and a host of friends to mourn. Funeral services were held at the Settegost Kopf Funeral Home, C. W. Tischer officiating. Interment was in Rest Haven Cemetery.

GORDLEY.—Wilma Eileene Gordley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Gordley, was born November 13, 1926, and passed away November 3, 1934, at Sinking Spring, Ohio. February 2, 1930, she was blessed by Elders J. R. Grice and P. W. Barker. Though her life was short, this little one will be remembered always by her parents, grandparents, other relatives, and many friends. She was a cheerful, intelligent little girl, a leader in church and school work.

PARK.—Lyman A. Park was born September 18, 1879, at Fountain Green, San Pete County, Utah; died October 21, 1934, at Grand Junction, Colorado. At the age of eleven years he was baptized into the church. He lived a clean, sober and industrious life; was a Christian and a gentleman. His family has lost a loving member; the community an excellent citizen. Surviving are three brothers: Val, of Handford, California; Thomas, of Grand Junction, and Melvin, of Meeker, Colorado; five sisters, Lucy Bishop, Vida Park, and Florence Ford, of Grand Junction; Fern Adkins, of Delta, and Sybil Ely, of Palisade, Colorado; other relatives, and many friends. The funeral was conducted in the Baptist Church at Delta, William B. Farley preaching the sermon, assisted by M. L. Schmid, of Grand Junction.

MORRIS.—Mary Elizabeth Morris was born in Wisconsin, January 31, 1858; departed this life November 23, 1934, at Cisne, Illinois. She married Andrew E. Knapp, October 15, 1882, and they came to Illinois from Abilene, Kansas, in a covered wagon, locating in Romine Township, Marion County, in 1890. Five children were born to them: Charley, who died October 23, 1935; Roy and Mabel Phillips, of Cisne; Arthur, of East Saint Louis, and Ed, of Xenia. She is survived also by one brother, Lee Stevens, of Xenia; two grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. Her husband died February 16, 1895, leaving her with five small children. On October 17, 1900, she married Elder Isaac A. Morris, and by this marriage became the stepmother of six children. Their home was always open to those who wished to claim its hospitality. It was a haven for traveling missionaries. She united with the church in 1892, and was a consistent worker, always valiant in testimony. Funeral services were conducted from the Saints' church at Brush Creek, Elder Hilliard Henson preaching the sermon. Interment was in Wooley Cemetery.

SHARP.—Agnes Ola Hayden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. K. Hayden, was born June 19, 1877, at Lisbon, Missouri. May 5, 1895, she married Luke Sharp, at Higbee, Missouri. The children who blessed this union were David, Carl, and Mrs. Ethel May Potter. In 1905, Mrs. Sharp united with the church and was a faithful member till her death, October 23, 1934, at the home in Springfield, Illinois. Funeral services were conducted from the home October 25, after which the body was accompanied by relatives to the former home at Higbee, Missouri, and services were conducted by F. T. Mussell at the Baptist Church. Though she had suffered from poor health for some time, the end was unexpected. The deceased leaves her husband, three children, two grandchildren, a brother and a sister.

SCHADER.—Charles Ellis Schader Junior was born October 19, 1919, at Independence, Kansas, and died December 1, 1934. He spent most of his life at Cherryvale; moved back to Independence with his parents in June, 1933. He united with the church in October, 1933, and was a cheerful and faithful worker, and president of the young people's class of the branch at the time of his demise. He was a talented musician, always willing to give his services. Charles was a sophomore in the local high school. Leaves to mourn his parents; two sisters, Norma and Treva; two brothers, James and Freddie, of the home; two grandfathers, J. T. Hupper, of Elk City, Kansas, and P. G. Schader, of Kansas City, Missouri; other relatives, and many friends. The funeral was held in the Potts Funeral Chapel, Guy G. Cadwell preaching the sermon, assisted by C. L. Anderson.

BEYE.—Maude Irene Pyle was born December 20, 1886, in Coon Rapids, Iowa. June 9, 1909, she married E. G. Beye at Rhodes, Iowa, and to them were born three daughters, Pearl and Ruby, of the home, and Mrs. Thomas Seats, of Blythedale, Missouri. Sister Beye's health had been failing for about four years, and she suffered a stroke, November 10, rendering her helpless until the end came November 13. Two funeral services were held, one at the home at Blythedale, November 15, and a second at their former home at Rhodes, Iowa, November 16. The Saints' churches at both places were crowded. Elder F. T. Mussell was in charge. She united with the church at the age of eight and was faithful to her covenant to death. There survive her devoted husband and the daughters mentioned above, also two sisters, Mrs. Phoebe Jacobs, of Rhodes, and Mrs. May Vasey, of Nevada, Iowa, and two small grandchildren.

■ Christmas Greetings

By Mollie Richmond

"Joy to the world, the Lord is come,"
Thus of old the angels sang;
Telling of that holy birth-day
Triumphantly, the echoes rang;
Echoed to all living nations,
Telling of the Savior's birth;
And 'twas from a lowly manger,
Came the message, "Peace on earth."

"Peace on earth, and good will to men,"
Softly fell upon the air,
Telling of a priceless love-gift,
Tendered through His love and care.
May your hearts have that same gladness
That fell on Bethlehem,
When the angels sang so gladly,
To the wisest of men.

Sing those anthems, most triumphant,
Of that holy "King of Kings;"
Tell to all that sweetest story,
Of the peace and joy He brings.
May that peaceful holy Presence
Be with all, this Christmas time;
And bestow His richest blessings,
Is the sincere wish of mine.

■ Success

By Alma M. Coombs

When I was young and times were hard,
Success was my ambition;
I thought it best, to disregard
All else but that condition.

I studied late, I studied long,
How other men succeeded;
That soon beyond the aimless throng,
My place would be conceded.

So, seeking for a favored spot
I fought and kept on fighting;
The plight of others mattered not,
Success seemed so inviting.

But one day, from a clear blue sky,
My soul was light'ning riven;
I found, as Paul, the answer why
Life here on earth was given.

Real, true success means happiness,
To you and to all others.
Upon the road to blessedness
We travel with our brothers.

Success! Ah, what a mighty word
If rightly comprehended!
Would heav'n could say, "Now men have heard,
The Savior's work is ended."

■ Tarzan

Pigeon says: "I'd be mighty pleased if one of the lions would catch Tarzan and eat him up. Would be willing for the lions to eat his creator too. It would end more comic strip carnage than is good for the children in the newspapers. The only themes in the story seem to be murder, violence, and hate."

The Year Is Done! Take It Away!

BUT ITS LIGHT AND SHADOWS CARRY OVER.

In some ways the year 1934 was different from any that had preceded it; yet it was quite typical of the "latter days" as foreshadowed in the long range forecast of prophecy.

WAR CLOUDS DARKEN

The nations seem drawing closer to inevitable world war. Bankrupt, or at least insolvent, so far as ability to pay for the last world war is concerned, they are feverishly preparing for the next. Europe is working night and day at the old game of "choosing partners" for the coming conflict.

France is a past master at that game but faces a Germany surprisingly grown stronger and apparently only waiting for the time when her strength warrants another test at arms. The Balkans seeth with hatreds, and while these traditionally unruly small children of Europe quarrel, their big brothers gather round to take sides and precipitate a general war.

JAPAN SEES AND SEIZES HER OPPORTUNITY

Japan seized the psychological moment of world confusion, at a time when there was no general alignment or agreement of powers strong enough to stop her, and thrust forward on the mainland in Manchuria and is entrenching herself powerfully, regardless of existing treaties and in defiance of the League of Nations. At the same time she prepares to shake herself loose from agreements limiting naval armaments that she may expand her navy at will. "Let the heathen be wakened" was to be the cry of the last days. (Joel 3.) "Christian" nations awoke "heathen" Japan, and taught her the science of modern warfare and the arts of breaking treaties—"scraps of paper."

DEMOCRACY LOSES GROUND

Democracy continues to lose ground. Constitutional government loses its hold—even in Louisiana. Dictators arise or continue their ascendancy. Hitler would consolidate the Germanic spirit against internal and external foes; Mussolini would reincarnate ancient Roman glory and dominion; Stalin would build Russia into a powerful military and economic unit to resist her enemies and either overthrow all "capitalistic" governments or be ready when such governments go to pieces in war and revolution, to raise the red flag of communism over the world.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

The picture has its bright spots. The world depression seems to be giving way to a gradual but pronounced recovery. There is still a determined effort among thoughtful men to "renounce war and proclaim peace." Peace conferences and disarmament conferences have lost ground constantly and world armament has increased rapidly; but the League of Nations still does good work in the interests of peace. The League lost terribly in prestige when it proved impotent to halt the forward rush of Japan in her war upon a helpless China; but regained a large measure of respect by signal triumphs in composing difficulties between Jugo-Slavia and Hungary, also in handling French and German difficulties in the Saar.

The League of Nations, with all its defects, still remains the most sane and powerful instrument that the nations have through which to strive for peace, order, concord, and safety, as opposed to impending world war, disintegration, chaos, and the fall of civilization.

THE WAR AGAINST CRIME

In the United States organized crime became much too powerful for the states and cities to meet its challenge. The entrance of the Federal government to the struggle has led to new hope. During the year eighteen notorious gangsters have been shot to death, executed, or driven to suicide; fourteen others have gone to prison; and a host of lesser figures have been imprisoned or are now on trial. The most fiendish modern crime, the kidnapping and murder of the Lindbergh baby, seems in a fair way to be solved and punished.

Such notorious public enemies as John Dillinger, and Pretty Boy Floyd have gone out under gun fire. They took their appeal to the machine gun and the decision was against them. Others equally notorious have been put in prison for life. The forces for law enforcement are organizing for even more effective war against crime; and perhaps best of all, are proposing to combat the alliance that has existed between politics and crime in our larger cities.

THE "IGNOBLE EXPERIMENT" OF REPEAL

Not so pleasing is the picture incident to the repeal of prohibition. The United States abandoned her "noble experiment" in prohibition and we have had a full year of the ignoble experiment of repeal. It is easier now to buy liquor than it is to buy medicines. In many a home where the unemployed live on charity, liquor crowds groceries from the pantry shelves.

It is estimated that the bill for alcoholic beverages in the United States for the year 1934 was three billion dollars. Half of the liquor consumed was "bootleg" or illicit. Repeal did not do away with the bootlegger or greatly reduce the cost of law enforcement and it did not bring the revenue anticipated. It did bring an increase in drunkenness and an increase in crimes and accidents resulting from intoxication. There is a tremendous potential increase of drunkenness just ahead when clever advertising and artistic window displays of liquors shall bear their inevitable fruits in the lives of the children and young people of today.

CHURCH FINANCES

In the church, the year has held much to bring hope. In the field of finances the refunding of the Auditorium Bonds scored a four-fold gain; i. e.: a temporary moratorium on principal payments, a substantial reduction in interest rates, the elimination of the clause requiring "payment in gold," and the conditional exemption of church buildings to a point where safety is assured. There has been an increase in the income of the church and a reduction in general church debt and annual interest charges.

SPIRITUAL GAINS

In the spiritual field there have been very encouraging developments. Here and there are found internal conflicts in local congregations, but generally there has been a growth of spirituality and a development of peaceful cooperation. The conflict goes on, however, between the forces of good and of evil, within the church as well as without. We are assured in the word of God (Doctrine and Covenants 1:6.) that the time is coming when God will have dominion over his own and Satan will have dominion over his. The careless will no longer be able to play back and forth over the line as they have done. The devout must increase their courage, faith, and fortitude to meet conditions as they develop.

No doubt the year before us will have its dark shadows and bring its tests of faith; but under the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit, may it be a "Happy New Year."

The Year is done! Take it away!

Its carcass is picked clean at last

Of every month and every day—

Remain bare bones of the dead past.

Comes a new year: "Happy New Year!"

Pound on the table! A new feast

Bring on: of new times and new days.

If some be bitter, be increased

Our faith; some sweet, to God be praise.

To all, the wish: "Happy New Year!"

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Two Lies and a Truth

TWO OLD AND FOOLISH LIES are being told throughout the world to perpetuate a spirit of war among the nations, and to stimulate the sale of arms and munitions. The first lie—"You can't change human nature"—is a travesty against man. The second lie—"Man is a fighting animal"—is a travesty against Divine justice.

There has always been something revolting to the civilized intelligence in these two statements. They are half-truths, and half-truths are more harmful than direct lies, because they deceive many through their semblance of truth.

One of the strongest of human impulses is that of the desire of self-preservation. Fighting is only one of the many possible responses, in one of the many possible situations, to this impulse. It is only when moved by wrath or confronted by danger that man is a fighting animal. It is only when his rights or his property, or his interests, real or imaginary, are involved that he is a fighting animal. The rest of the time he is a builder, a toiler, a maker of homes, a follower of agriculture, science or industry, and a lover of peace. To call him a "fighting animal" is far less than half of the truth. It is less than a hundredth part of the truth. It is a travesty against human nature.

Man is a fighting animal only when it is necessary to be one; he is also a working and building creature of great endurance and ingenuity. In a situation of danger he will fight; in a situation of peace and security he will work. Thousands of years of known history have demonstrated that; and the prehistoric developments of arts, implements, utensils, and homelife show that the habit of peaceful industry is not a recent one. Pottery and plows are as old as swords. We have no reason for thinking that the primitive club was used any earlier or more frequently for knocking men in the head than for knocking fruits and nuts out of the trees. In reality, the ability to fight presupposes the prior ability to create something useful worth fighting for.

THE STATEMENT that "you can't change human nature" taken to mean that you can't make men quit fighting, is a lie, or the result of simple ignorance. Of course you can't change the human being into something he was never intended to be. But human conduct is capable of unlimited modification. Our schools, our laws, our social conventions, our customs, our very language are all irrefutable testimonies to the fact that human conduct is changeable. There are no known "natural" men. All people are artificial products in the sense

Teaching the Financial Law

By Henry L. Livingston

Bishop of Far West Stake

"O ye elders of my church whom I have called: behold I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me. And I will be your Ruler when I come; and, behold, I come quickly; and ye shall see that my law is kept. He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you; for it is not meet that the things which belong to the children of the kingdom, should be given to them that are not worthy, or to dogs, or the pearls to be cast before swine . . . (Doctrine and Covenants 41: 1, 2.) the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

FROM THE FOREGOING, it is obvious that the priesthood have not only the responsibility of teaching the law of God but also the responsibility of seeing that this law is kept. This means the whole law, of which the financial law is a part. When Jesus sent his disciples forth, he instructed them to teach the nations "all things" whatsoever he commanded. (Matthew 28: 19, 20.) In view of this commandment, we are made aware of the fact that the financial law has not received sufficient emphasis in the teachings of the ministry, both general and local, and we are therefore coming with this appeal for all men of the ministry to not only prepare to teach; but also observe to keep the law governing our temporalities. It should be needless to say that the priesthood's teaching will only be effective to the extent that they themselves keep the law.

UNANIMITY OF TEACHING

There has been much unnecessary confusion in the minds of some regarding the application of the financial law. This is due to the fact that many insist on putting their own individual interpretations on it. The Lord has spoken in this regard instructing the church to accede to the "application of the law as stated by the bishopric" (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10) and in this revelation, he provides a remedy in case the bishopric flagrantly violate the rights of the people. It does not, however, permit each individual to walk in his own way but provides adjustment through the joint quorums in council—the presidency, twelve and seventy. (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.)

The priesthood and Saints should therefore, observe that any man of the ministry who advises Saints to withhold their support from the church, violating the law of God, does not act under the authority of priesthood. "But where there is a change of law there is of necessity a change of the priesthood, hence as they have done away with the law of God, they have also forfeited their right to the priesthood and are acting under another authority." (J. W. Briggs, Saints' Herald. Volume 5, page 43.)

In order to promote a better understanding of the law as interpreted by the Bishopric, we recommend for study the booklet entitled Handbook of the Financial Law printed in 1933. This can be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

IMPORTANCE OF KEEPING THE LAW

In these hard times one may feel reluctant to urge our people to keep the law for it is apparent that they are in need of many of the ordinary comforts of life. During General Conference of 1920, however, the Lord spoke to the ministry instructing them "and when you stand to teach the saints, you shall say to them as Moses did of old, that they shall go forward. If you are to be called leading men, you must become leaders of men—leaders and exemplars in all good works and Christian graces, and in showing forth all the fruits of the Spirit—that the Saints may observe you and be strengthened and comforted."

The circumstances under which Moses told Israel to go forward were most perplexing and distressing and yet in the face of this tremendous handicap they went forward. What recourse do we as a church really have in regard to teaching the financial law during these stressing times? None but to tell the people to go forward on the basis provided in the law. We, therefore, unhesitatingly urge the Saints to study the law, to understand the law and to keep the law. This may require sacrifice and privations but it is the only way for our salvation and for our deliverance.

TEACHING VALUES AND OBJECTIVES OF THE LAW

"That which is governed by law is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8.)

Meditate upon this with respect to the financial law which purports to be the will of God governing our economic relationships. Do we believe it enough to obey this law now? When Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "The kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven," he revealed to them that it was the purpose of God that this world should be governed by His will and law and that it should not be abandoned to the devastating influences of "unrestrained sin." If we, as members of the church then, whose responsibility is to establish the principles of the Kingdom of God in the lives of men, fail to govern our own lives by the law of God, it shows that fundamentally we lack true conversion to Jesus Christ. What does your response to the law in this respect indicate?

The church's right to existence is challenged by humanity's cry for spiritual, social and economic leadership and deliverance. Humanity needs the gospel as never before in its history. Therefore, in teaching and complying with the financial law we must feel profoundly a divine passion for the souls of men. We must realize that obedience to this law does not end with saving the church from debt but with saving men from sin.

Try to see this larger vision and relate it to your own response to the financial law and you will find it most stimulating and helpful when the way seems hard. Jesus said, "He who seeks to save his own life shall lose it but he who loses his life for my sake shall find it." This is just as true if applied to the church. If the church merely attempts to save itself it is doomed to defeat but if the church will lose itself in the larger task and vision of saving humanity, we are convinced that this will give stimulus and power to our work and will bring the church out of debt and give it power to accomplish its task.

In conclusion, then, we may say that the reason why we should teach the financial law earnestly and prayerfully is because (a) upon its observance depends the preaching of the gospel to needy humanity, (b) it is the law of God for the purpose of giving the church economic freedom and security to promote the interests of the Kingdom of God, (c) Zion cannot be builded or redeemed without it.

In view of the foregoing, please check again your own response to the law in the past and see if you have complied with the fundamental requirements of the law of God. Have you made your inventory or your annual financial statement to date? Has this been filed with the Bishopric in compliance with the Law? Are you consistently paying tithes? Are you willing to consecrate your surplus when the church is in a position to care for it as provided in the law? Are you willing to forego some of the pleasures or even some of the necessities of life in order to make an offering to the church? These fundamental things must be understood and taught to the Saints before we can hope for the redemption of Zion. The call of God to his people has repeatedly been to "go forward." May we do so now and do it wisely and in harmony with the law.

James Clark Crabb

A greatly venerated member and church worker has been lost in the death of Brother James Clark Crabb at Mondamin, Iowa, December 13, at the age of 101 years and nine months. Brother Crabb was baptized in May, 1862, and was ordained an elder in December of the same year. Since that time he has served as seventy and high priest, until his superannuation in 1924, and has occupied in local service until near the end. The funeral service was at Little Sioux, Iowa, where most of his life was spent.

TWO LIES AND A TRUTH

that they have been made over by society. It is not true that "you can't change human nature." Human nature is changed all the time. Education changes it, conversion changes it, love changes it, church changes it, and it is conditioned and modified by everything with which it comes in contact. It always will be changed. It takes a longer period of training to make a good soldier than it does to make a good factory hand. Man is no more naturally a fighter than he is naturally a farmer or a mechanic. These are all things that he learns to do.

THE SINISTER FACT in connection with these two lies is that they have been used as arguments for promoting the spirit of war, and for the encouragement of the sale of armaments. We are being told that these evils are inevitable, and that we must endure them. They are not inevitable. War is something that can be prevented.

People used to think that disease was a visitation from God, and that nothing could be done to prevent it. They died in helpless thousands from typhus, dysentery, and other epidemics. They suffered endlessly because of their ignorance. Now sanitation and medicine have reduced these dangers, in civilized communities, to negligible factors.

But we still suffer from unwholesome ideas—suffer endlessly and needlessly—and die because of them. Two of these ideas are stated above.

THERE IS A GREAT TRUTH that will counteract and refute these two lies, and many others. St. John wrote: "But as many as received him, to them gave

Without Darkness

(A Christmas Story)

By Geraldine Wyatt

A CANOPY of deep transparent blue, set with myriads of twinkling little stars hung overhead. Below flickered the lights of the city Zarahemla. The torches now burning low, and again lashed to brilliance by a gust of wind seemed symbolical of the tempests created and nourished by the passions of the city's inhabitants. Now lulled and calm; again flaming with all the jealousy and strife of mankind.

As Bethabara stood upon the balcony of the famed observatory, gazing at the stars, there was wafted up to him the sound of metal on stone.

"The stela will be finished on time," he thought. For each ring of the chisel was bringing the shaft nearer to completion.

He made a gallant picture as he stood there etched against the brightly studded sky. The capricious flaming torch played upon the snow white waves of hair that fell to his shoulders. A chill breeze caused him to clutch his richly embroidered mantle more closely about him. Gingerly he walked back into the observatory, and to his work.

Again he trained his large instrument upon the majestic expanse of sky. Gently, almost tenderly, he moved it little by little that no part of the heavens should escape the giant eye.

Time moved as fleetingly as the billowy clouds floating overhead. The stone worker below ceased his carving. All was quiet except the occasional scratch of his pen as the aged astronomer made rapid calculations of the movements in the sky.

Finally his work finished, Bethabara lowered the instrument and secured it in its cradle. From long habit he took a torch from its socket and wrapping his long mantle more securely about him descended from the observatory tower. His ancient legs were a little erratic in walking down steep stairs, and his eyes trained from long habit were more accustomed to gaze into the distance than they were to guide an aged man from his scientific observation.

With the peaceful satisfaction of another day's work well done, this old scientist, keeper of the Nephite calendar records, walked through the dark streets to his home.

MORNING DAWNED clear and bright. Oblivious to the strife about them, birds with gorgeous plumage carolled out their morning serenades. By and by, Bethabara retraced his faltering steps to the observatory.

But early as he was, Neum, the stone carver, was there before him. These two had worked together for many years. Both were good men and righteous. Neum momentarily looked up from the stone shaft he was carving.

"I could finish this today. Well—that is, if the date were complete." His right eyebrow lifted quizzically, and implied the question that his words didn't ask.

Bethabara seated himself upon a stone carved seat. His legs crossed, his foot moving up and down with an easy swing. To any that knew him, this action denoted deep thought.

"I can't be sure Neum, but—" He started to explain, then stopped, leaving the words as if hanging above, and presaging trouble.

From outside came the monotonous swish, swish of a brush. The water made a joyful little gurgling noise as the maguay fibers absorbed and forced it over the stone steps.

To the aged astronomer whose white hair fell to the base of his neck, and to the old stone worker whose confining tasks had caused his broad shoulders to hunch forward and droop, came the same thought.

"Sariah is unusually diligent at her task this morning."

"The child has a pain in her consciousness," Neum observed, as his eyebrow moved upward.

"She's looking for my colleagues," Bethabara teased, as his foot swung upwards and downwards in its rhythmic fashion.

Sariah turned an impudent face toward them. Her wrists fell back against her pure white robe, the embroidered edges of which vied with the color of the sparkling jewels of the armlets she wore. Bethabara walked over to the doorway and inspected her work.

"The stones are bright enough now." He dismissed her, his ruddy face showing no sign of his inner perturbation.

She picked up brush and water jar, gave her work a last regretful inspection, and lightly ran down the steps. The sound of her sandaled feet was as soft as the first patter of sprinkling rain drops, and as rapid.

A horsedrawn chariot with wooden wheels went past the doorway. Its driver peered quizzically at the old time recorder. Its wheels made an odd grinding noise as they rolled over the stone pavement.

The sun shone brightly upon the newly scrubbed steps and doorway, and was reflected to the remotest corners of the room, for the light came only through the doorways, there being no windows. But the reflection from these white stones was as dazzling as if they had been driven snow. Bethabara lowered the curtain, shutting out the daylight, and returned to his seat.

"There seems to be a great deal of agitation amongst the people today," he confided in a low voice.

"They have set a day to execute all those that still believe the Christ will be born, and that the heavens will reflect God's joy," Neum explained, his steel chisel making a ringing noise at each tap.

"And the stela?" Bethabara glanced at the likeness of a star cut on the shaft as he spoke. This was to be the permanent record telling of the signs the new star, and the birth of Christ.

Neum grasped the chisel more firmly and turned stricken eyes towards the scientist.

"Someone was here last night. They broke the latticed bars at the entrance. Bethabara, are we mistaken? Will Christ be born? And what of our lives? Of our families?" He finished huskily.

Perhaps the most peculiar characteristic of Bethabara was his eyes. It wasn't their color. Neither was it the size of the orbits. But rather it seemed that they were just windows, through which shone the light of his soul. The more witty of his acquaintances were wont to explain this peculiarity by saying, "The old man has spent so much time gazing at the stars that some of the star dust has gotten into his eyes, and makes them bright and twinkling like."

They had lost none of their kindly light as he answered: "Does it matter? All my life I've prayed that I might witness the signs that we know will be given. Then when Samuel, the Lamanite, prophesied the number of years, I thought my prayers had been answered. There are movements in the heavens that presage a change. But when? Ah! That we must wait to see." His foot swung upwards and downwards, but his voice gave no hint of his emotion. As he continued, a casual observer could not have known that he was visualizing the fulfillment of his soul's desire. "When you think of all the inhabitants that have gone on before, all that will come on after you and I have passed beyond, you wonder about this short period of probation, and sometimes even the fulfillment of our greatest ambitions seems insignificant." Restlessly, Bethabara moved over to the embellished curtain gently rippling at the doorway. But he knew before he raised the arras that Sariah was there listening.

Her eyes fell to the pink toes that were exposed through the thongs of her sandals. She uttered no word of explanation, but turned about slowly and walked away, her glossy brown braids bobbing at each movement.

From out beyond came the low hum of a thriving populace. Shouts of vendors. Angry protestations. The peculiar grinding of wooden wheels on concrete and stone. And out of these came the familiar clap, clap of horses hoofs, growing louder and more distinct until two long robed riders, dusty and travel worn drew rein at the bottom of the steps.

QUEER, how celebrities need no introduction.

"You're Bethabara, the calendar keeper." The first man said, as he removed the turban from his head, setting loose a mass of curls that according to fashion, dangled to his shoulders. "I'm Nehor from Bountiful. This is Lama from Desolation." Nehor placed his hand upon the arm of Lama as he made the introduction. "We both received your message, and have come to study the heavens in your famed observatory," he explained.

"God's blessings rest upon you," Bethabara greeted them.

A servant was called to care for the horses. The aged scientist with hesitating footsteps led them into an inner chamber where they could refresh themselves from their long and dusty journey.

Later when their physical needs were administered to, like one performing a sacred rite, Bethabara took them to the tower and showed the two fellow astronomers the famed instrument.

"No wonder you have learned so much." Lama exclaimed in a low voice full of awe and respect.

"Not all knowledge comes from man's brain." Bethabara stated dryly. "But I must leave you here now, for I have an errand to perform. The building and its contents are yours until my return." With these hospitable words still filling the air Bethabara left them.

HIS WAY took him through the more populous part of the city. Past curtained doorways, and polished white stone. Stone that resembled frosted silver as the sunlight danced upon it. Past the market where natives plied their trades; polychrome pottery next to little children's toys; victuals placed side by side with the art of the looms. And amongst the little trays of ware floated low voiced words.

"They can't kill us because of our beliefs."

A pitying glance. "No? But they will."

And: "The people are gathering at the home of Nephi. They look to him for succor."

A disdainful shrug. "Little good that will do them and their fanatical beliefs."

Hostility and enmity on every side.

Faith vying with unbelief. Hope vying with terror.

The errand was forgotten. The colleagues gathering at his observatory were forgotten. In their place was the great desire and need to reach the home of Nephi, and his fellow believers.

But there, too, he found strife. Unbelievers jostling against the faithful. Insult after insult flung at the people he had grown to love.

Bethabara stood as one apart, yearning for some way to help, but knowing that any human action could not stem the tide of this frenzied mob. Then suddenly the muttering ceased. The curtain hanging at the door was raised. A white robed figure stepped without and paused upon the doorstep. Nephi's face was lighted with an unearthly glow as he stood there. For he was charged with a message to God's faithful.

"Lift up your heads 'and be of good cheer, for behold, the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow' comes Christ 'into the world, to shew unto the world that' God 'will fulfill all that which' he has 'caused to be spoken by the mouth of' his 'holy prophets.'"

The words fell separately and distinctly upon each listener. The doubtful still doubting, and the faithful receiving peace. An old woman with a prayer of thankfulness upon her lips fell to her knees. Soon others who were touched were following suit, with loud voiced mockery and curses falling upon their unheeding ears.

A surly youth turned to Bethabara and accused:

"You are one of them. You believe a new star will arise. You," he jeered. "An old man and his wild fancies. Why don't you grovel with them." The words ended in mocking laughter.

On sudden impulse he answered him, seemingly not of his own volition.

"I am a scientist. I study the heavens, and the stars, not the hearts of men and their superstitions."

After the words were said he would have given his life to have recalled them. But they were spoken, and had played their part in his life's drama.

The twinkle had left his eyes. A veil was there instead. A veil of remorse in the shape of a tear. Sorrowfully he walked back to his observatory and to the learned men that awaited him there.

"We've read your report." Nehor greeted him upon his arrival. "And also the stela. When do you think the new star will arise?" The youngest scientist fingered his richly embroidered sash as he spoke. Perhaps because he was nervous in the presence of a greater man.

"The new star will arise tonight," Bethabara wearily answered.

The excited statements of the scholars were interrupted by the entrance of two soldiers.

"In the name of the chief judge we arrest you, Bethabara." One of the helmeted men said.

Bethabara turned tired eyes towards them. "What have I done?" He asked simply.

"As an officer of state, you have violated your trust in spreading heretic propoganda adverse to our religious teachings," the other soldier explained.

Later, as Bethabara sat upon a low seat in the prison, his thoughts went back to the preceding events. That Sariah was the direct cause of his incarceration he had no doubt, for he knew she had been spying upon him.

His thoughts went to the girl. Because of her petty spying she had blasted his soul's desire. What good was his famous telescope now. He couldn't see this wonderful new star through it. What mockery had he endured. To live while the sign was to be given, and yet not to be able to witness its magnificance, nor the wondrous lights in the heavens. He couldn't forgive her. He had wanted to live only for this great night. And right at the fulfillment, the realization of this desire had been snatched from him.

He became conscious of sobbing at the lattice barred doorway. Sariah was there clinging to the bars, a peculiar light streaming down upon her.

"I had to come," she sobbed. "The sun has gone down. It is night time, but light as day. Everyone has fallen to the earth in astonishment. I did wrong, and I was afraid, afraid to endure this light without begging your forgiveness."

Again, moved by a force, seemingly outside of his understanding, Bethabara arose and walked to the doorway. But strangest of all, as he placed his hand gently upon her shoulder, he heard his tired old voice saying:

"It is well child. And I forgive you. It doesn't matter. All that matters is that Christ will be born, and that God's plan will move forward." Yet he knew that he had spoken the truth and that he really forgave her.

She turned a tear stained face up towards him.

"God must love his Son to celebrate his birth so gloriously." She said in her childish voice. Then she was gone.

A brilliant light touched Bethabara's hand, and he looked up at the heavens from long habit. There in all its magnitude and glory was the new star, shining upon him and touching his body with a holy light.

The astronomer sank to his knees.

"Father I have seen. I have beheld. I can go in peace. What need has man of his puny instruments when he can see the heavens clothed in all thy glory. On the morn a Babe will be born at Bethlehem. The Messiah will have come to redeem mankind."

His brow was pressed against the bars. His white hair with the brilliant light shining upon it turned to silver. The white of his mantle fell about him as a shroud.

Bethabara's work on earth was finished with the prayer of thankfulness that died on his lips.

The Memoirs
of
President Joseph Smith
(1832-1914)

Edited by his daughter

Mary Audentia Smith Anderson

One of the campaign ditties of the day, I remember, was written to the tune of "Old Rosin the Bow," and had words which insisted: "The lad that I give my fair hand to, Must vote for Old Tippecanoe."

Melissa Lott was one of the women to whom it was alleged my father was married. If this were true it certainly was not known to any of Father's family at the time he was living or after, and it is equally certain she never lived with him as his wife. She married Ira Willis, whom I knew well, a man-of-all-work about the premises where we lived. He was a pleasant-faced, soft-voiced, hard-working man who had come, I think, from Yankee land. He used to get up early in the mornings, build the fires, and get the house warm. He always kept the wood-pile and wood-box supplied with fuel ready for use.

I used to watch him build the fire in the outside kitchen. He would rake open the ashes with which he had covered the brands in the fireplace the night before, put fresh fuel upon them, fan them into flame, and hang a teakettle on the crane-hook over the blaze.

One cold morning after those proceedings I went outdoors to get some wood. As I picked up the axe at the wood-pile I recalled I had heard someone say no one could touch his tongue to a frosty axe ever so lightly without the tongue becoming fast to the steel. Wondering if that could be true I held the axe up to my mouth, intending to just try it with the tiny tip of my tongue and then instantly draw it away from the metal. To my astonishment and dismay my whole tongue, about as far as it could be drawn out of my mouth, instantly became fastened to the blade!

In a panic and holding the axe up in front of my face I rushed into the kitchen where Ira was. Seeing the situation at a glance, he caught the teakettle off the hook, its contents only tepid as yet, and poured the water on the axe which immediately released its grip and set my tongue free!

How Ira did laugh! He affirmed that he imagined I would never need another lesson like that, and I agreed with him, for I had had experiment enough for one person. By breakfast time I had besides, a mouthful of swollen tongue and had to go without food since I could neither chew nor swallow. Mother joined in the laugh at my expense, though she did take pity on me and poured some oil in my mouth which eased the smart. Had I attempted to pull my tongue loose from the cold metal the skin would have come off.

Some piquancy was added to the incident by the fact that there was a party to be held at our house that day, in my honor, and I was much afraid that I would have to sit in a corner, nursing my sore mouth, and watch the other youngsters enjoy the hilarity of the occasion. To my relief, however, before the time for the party arrived, the swelling had subsided, and I was about as good as new. I had acquired an increase of experience, however, which was valuable to me in after life.

Just when Ira Willis and Melissa Lott were married, whether before the exodus or on their way west, I do not know, but I seem to remember hearing of their marriage about the time of the general departure from Nauvoo. I never saw him again, nor her until in 1889 when I met her in Lehi, Utah, the point at which they had settled.

I had been told I would not dare to see or call upon Melissa Willis and ask her about affairs in Nauvoo for she knew things, it was alleged, that I would not wish to hear. She came to our meeting in Music Hall, and I was told of her presence. After the service was over I sought her out and secured permission to call upon her. In the interview thus secured I discovered that whatever claims she or others may have made about her having been married to my father, she could not uphold them, but instead plainly stated that she was the wife of Ira Willis, and had never lived with Joseph Smith as his wife, at his house or elsewhere. My interview with her will be related in detail farther on in these Memoirs.

This "Proxy" Business

Upon the occasions of my several visits to Utah I heard a great many odd stories about events that happened among the people there. One striking one comes to memory now. It was told me in Salt Lake City, in 1889, and runs thus:

A certain prominent elder in the church out there (whose name need not be mentioned here but whom, for the sake of convenience I will call Elder John) returned to his home after a short absence from the city. He found a number of letters awaiting him, among them three from as many aged sisters there, known to both himself and his wife.

After reading these epistles, he threw them down with an exclamation of impatience and disgust. Curiously his wife asked the meaning of his gesture, and he replied, "Oh, pshaw! you know Sisters ——" (giving the names of the three who had written him.)

"Why, yes," said his wife, "I know who they are; why?"

"Well," he said, "here they have all three written me, one asking me to go to the Temple with her and stand as proxy while she is sealed to the Patriarch Hyrum Smith, and the other two (giving their names) desiring me to do the same for them while they are married for eternity to the Prophet Joseph! And I tell you, I am just not going to do it!"

In some surprise his wife asked, "Well, why not? What has come over you? You have done this for many others and why not for them? While these sisters are old, of course, they are just as good as others with whom you have gone through such ceremonies in the Temple, acting as proxy for the Patriarch and the Prophet. Why do you refuse to go with these sisters?"

"Well, I have been thinking lately—"

"Haven't you always been thinking?" she interrupted, facetiously.

"Perhaps; but lately I have been thinking particularly about this proxy business, and I have concluded that I do not like it!"

"Why not? It is taught in the church; you have professed to believe it, and have stood proxy in several marriages of the sort without objections that I ever heard of. Why refuse now?"

"Well, wife, it is like this," he explained. "I have got to thinking: suppose I should die and on gaining the other side should meet Patriarch Hyrum and he would say, 'Brother John, did you stand proxy for me while Sister ——— was married to me for eternity?' 'Well, yes, I did.' Suppose Hyrum then should ask, 'Brother, did you have a revelation from me about being married to this sister?'"

"No, sir."

"Did you have a revelation from the Holy Ghost about it?"

"No, sir, I did not."

"Well, did you have any sort of revelation in regard to it?"

"No, sir; none whatever!"

"Then suppose the Prophet Joseph should turn on me and say, 'Elder John, I understand you went to the Temple and stood with these two women (giving their names) while they were married to me for eternity. Is that true?'"

"Yes, President Smith; it is. I did."

"Did you have a revelation from me that I wanted such marriages performed, and indicating that I would be satisfied with them?"

"No, sir."

"Did the Holy Spirit reveal anything to you in regard to them or state that it was necessary or proper to have them performed?"

"No, sir."

"Then suppose he should ask, 'Sir why did you do it?' and I would have to stammer and say that I had stood in such ceremony before and supposed it would be all right and that they would be pleased with it, etc."

Elder John paused, and his wife nodded. "Yes, yes; I see. Go on!"

"Well," resumed the anxious official, "Suppose, then, that the Patriarch Hyrum and the Prophet Joseph should both turn on me and say, 'Elder John, you have exceeded your rights in this matter. You have stood proxy for us without a revelation from us or from the Holy Spirit directing or authorizing you to do so. Now, sir, we will just say to you that we don't want these vices you have tried to saddle upon us for eternity, and you may just keep them for yourself!'"

Another significant pause, and then, with an explosion of deep disgust Elder John added, "And wife, God knows I don't want those damned old hags, either! So I am just not going to stand in these proposed marriages, and I am entirely done with this proxy foolishness!"

This story was a striking commentary on the principle of marrying by proxy, and illustrated the loose manner in which such contracts were made. I felt that well might the Patriarch and the Prophet be indignant at what was happening, and well might they say to several elders just what Elder John was "supposing" they might say to him in the hereafter should he have to appear before them and make confession that, without any show of revelation from them or from the spirit world at all, he had stood proxy indiscriminately when asked to do so by deluded women obsessed with the desire and ambition to become the wives for eternity of these principal men of the church. No wonder Elder John, in thinking seriously about the responsibilities such an act involved became uneasy and concluded that in the future no act of his should burden those long-departed leaders with further additions to their spiritual families!

Interest in this story and its chief points will be enhanced when I state that a day or two after it came to my ears, I related it in the presence of Elder John himself and his wife (who was the one who told it to me), carefully omitting the name of the man about whom it was told. As I finished, several in the group laughed, but the Elder looked grave.

I turned to him and asked him what he thought of that yarn. With a very solemn and thoughtful face and in a very sober tone of voice, as though the whole thing was the sorriest kind of a joke, he replied:

"Well, what else could I say?"—thereby acknowledging both the correctness of the story and its personal application to himself, at which his wife and I, especially, indulged in a most hearty laugh.

The Nauvoo Legion

In the spring of 1840 the city of Nauvoo was organized, a charter secured, and a stake of the church established. About this time a military organization was formed which was called the Nauvoo Legion. This has frequently been termed a treasonable organization, formed for treasonable purposes. Nothing could be farther from the truth than that.

With no intention of attempting to present anything like a succinct history of the movement, I will simply give my recollections of some events which happened and the men who were connected therewith, with perhaps some of my deductions in regard to them. Whatever may be said as to the wisdom, or lack of it, manifested by the organization itself and its result in fostering a military spirit among the people it is not the purpose of these memories to argue.

The statute laws of the State of Illinois which existed at the time the Saints settled at Commerce made it obligatory upon every male inhabitant between the ages of eighteen and forty-five to provide himself with an efficient firearm, and upon notice duly given to report, at a certain time and place ordered by the military authorities, for the purposes of drill and becoming accustomed to the manual of arms and military evolutions. The same statute laws also provided for the existence of independent military organizations.

When the city of Nauvoo was platted and named, and had become the home of quite a number of Saints, the requirements of the law in regard to arming and drilling were brought to the attention of the people, and a disposition was manifest to comply with them and to be placed under the provisions governing such State militia.

It is evident, however, that some leading spirits among them supported the idea of going the step further which was made possible through this provision for an independent organization. It was deemed better that those belonging to the church should be enrolled together and, if required for service to the State in the event of invasion or emergency, be under their own corps of officers.

Following this plan, permission was obtained for the organization of an independent military unit. The Legislature of the State created the office of Lieutenant General and bestowed it upon Joseph Smith, the President of the church. In her book Grandmother Smith suggests that he was elected to that office by the people, but she is evidently in error there, for Father was invested with the title and office by virtue of the same ordinance which authorized the organization of the Legion as an independent body under the militia laws.

Thus the Nauvoo Legion came into being, and its members began meeting for drill. Separate companies and regiments were formed, generals, colonels, majors, captains, and other officers appointed, and military display began to permeate the settlement. All were not enrolled in companies, nor provided with a regimental dress. Neither did the State issue arms to all, but the martial spirit did seem to prevail and flourish in every quarter.

It is stated the Legion was composed of some fifteen hundred men at the time its leaders were murdered at Carthage, of which number, if my memory serves me right, only about three hundred had received arms furnished by the State. The remainder carried their own weapons, which consisted of rifles and shotguns of every pattern common to the period and locality.

Much as it is to be deplored that such a spirit ever obtained such a foothold among the church members, it is certain that in their organization they were striving to obey the laws of the State and to act in harmony with their provisions. It is possible, too, that they were but trying to put into effect the counsel and advice they had received from certain authorities in the State of Missouri, viz., to make provisions to defend themselves against lawless violators of their privileges as free American citizens. I am not sure but similar counsel had also been given them by the man then Governor of the State of Illinois.

I have no desire or object, after the lapse of years, to sit in judgment or pass censure upon these men, though I may concede that I believe it was a mistake to allow the spirit of militarism to take possession of the leading authorities of the church to such an extent that in the reports of their movements there crept in the use of military appellations, such as lieutenant general, general, colonel, major, captain, to the exclusion of the ecclesiastical designations, such as president, high priest, apostle, elder, etc.

Blame for some of the war-like disposition among the people has been visited upon the Prophet Joseph Smith, my father. But it must be remembered that from 1830 to the time of his death, he and his people were never safe from invasion and persecution from which the Saints were well worn out. Raids from savages were not more dangerous than the illegal attacks from white men. They had fled from Kirtland to the West to build up a peaceful settlement upon the borders of civilization, and there they had been met not only by ridicule, bigotry, intolerance, and bitter religious opposition, but also by injury, oppression, and loss of life and property. Their appeal to the properly constituted guardians of their rights had been met by the counsel to establish a means for their own defense—a defense not against enforcement of just laws, but against unlawful violence and outrage. Scripture was even cited as an excuse for such a departure from peaceful methods to maintain their rights—Israel under the law, Moses as a general, and Joshua and his comrades as warriors.

Looking back along the pathway I feel it was a pity that such a spirit crept in among them, however, and a still greater one that the leading minds of the church partook of it.

A Watchnight Service

The following service was used on the closing night of 1933 at Berkeley, California. The regular Sunday evening service was followed by a class period, and this by a banquet with songs and speeches. Near the midnight hour adjournment was had to the upper auditorium of the church, where the organ was being played softly. The worship service was then held, with many excellent prayers offered during the period of meditation and prayer. All present shared in a most earnest and reverent consecration.

Instrumental Prelude: "Star of Eve."
Wagner.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 32: 1, Isaiah 60: 1-3.

"Behold, I say unto you, hearken unto the voice of the Lord your God, whose word is quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of the joints and marrow, soul and spirit; and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart . . . behold, the field is white already to harvest; and it is the eleventh hour, and for the last time I shall call laborers into my vineyard.

"Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."

(S) Hymn: "Awake my Soul," S. H. 35.
Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 1, 11, 16.

Hymn: "I Need Thee Every Hour,"
verse one, S. H. 314.

Reader:

"Why criest thou to me,
So tenderly
Breathing thy prayer the while,
In melody?
Dost thou this thoughtfully
And in sincerity?
Wouldst thou in verity
Be nearer me?"

"Dost thou with fervor yearn
To know my way?
Wouldst thou new virtue learn
Each passing day.
Or is this blend of tone
The yield of lips alone
Directed toward my throne
In formal way?"

Hymn: "I Need Thee Every Hour," verse two.

Reader:

"If thou from thy heart wouldst
Thus fondly pray
And thou wouldst sanctify

Thy word and way
Pleasures of earth decay
And each himself deny Bearing his cross, that I Might shine alway.

"If, with my bread alone
Fed thee from heaven,
Thou wouldst be content
Seeking no leaven
Then, by that faith made whole
Each prayer would find its goal
And waft thy pleading soul
Nearer to me.

"If thou wouldst near me be,
Enter this door,
Climb not some other way
As thieves before
He pleads availingly
Who can behold in me
Immutability
An ample store."

"Seek not one stake to draw
Set by my hand,
Nor yet a wider path
Than I have planned.
Few, few, alas, there be
Who ope their eyes to see,
Blind they prefer to be
To my command."

Hymn: "I Need Thee Every Hour," verse four.

Reader:

"Oh heritage of grace
Seest thou in me
Naught to be loved or feared Sufficiently
To rouse thy consciousness
And bring forth righteousness
Superior to this
In truth to me?"

"Oh, Israel, how oft
Must I implore?
How long in mercy thus Knock at thy door?
These gods of self displace
And give me ampler space
Or seek in vain my face
For evermore.

"All that now separates
Thy souls from me
Thou canst remove at will,
And nearer be.
But while these intervene,
Thy prayers but little mean,
Choose thee this day between,
These gods, and me."

Hymn: "I Need Thee Every Hour," verse five.

Period of Suggested Meditation and
Prayer:

(S) Hymn: "Come let us anew," S. H.
413.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 38: 2, Ephesians 6: 14-17.

"Behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that mine eyes are upon you: I am in your midst and ye cannot see me, but the day soon cometh that ye shall see me and know that I am; for the veil of darkness shall soon be rent, and he that is not purified shall not abide the day: stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; And your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit . . ."

(S) Benediction.
Postlude.

Michigan Musical Movement

Directors of Children's Choir

Two hymns are to be learned this year for the children to sing in choir ensemble at the various gatherings. A marching hymn, "Come Ye That Love the Lord," (No. 37 in Zion's Praises, or No. 5 in the new Saints' Hymnal.) Be sure to have the tempo as written, M quarter note 60, and sing the correct rhythm; and a prayer hymn, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," No. 12 in the old Saints' Hymnal and No. 281 in the new Saints' Hymnal.) It should be sung M quarter 80 and still very softly, reverently and yet distinctly.

The words of these hymns should be studied first, then either aloud or in whispers repeated in chorus, then sung phrase wise if it is not familiar. (Leader sings first phrase while children listen then repeat.) Leader sings second phrase, children listen and sing. Leader combines phrases one and two and children sing. Combine three and four the same way. Then sing first four phrases. Continue until all the song is learned. Repeat this process until the music is perfectly familiar.

With the proper support from directors we hope to have a good sized choir of children participate in the musical work of the Annual Legion Convention next June. For further information write to the undersigned, enclosing stamped envelope.

Let's do our part in helping Sister Louise Evans and the other officers in making this an outstanding territory in musical achievements—Verna Schaar, Lake Orion, Michigan.

Who can really think and not think hopefully?—George Meredith.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Explain about the rejection of the church (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 11) and its reorganization.

The warning of a rejection "as a church with your dead" was given in 1841 when the Saints were building Nauvoo and the command was given to build a temple there. It states on this point:

"I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me, and during this time your baptisms shall be acceptable unto me. But, behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable unto me; and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God."—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 11.

This revelation was given January 19, 1841, and for a brief time it appears that satisfactory efforts were made to accomplish the work required, the cornerstones of the Nauvoo Temple being laid on April 6 of that year. But before the close of that year other interests appear to have largely diverted attention from it, and another warning was issued by Hyrum Smith, Patriarch of the church, that:

"They have neglected the house of the Lord, the baptismal font, in this place, wherein their dead may be redeemed, . . . for 'Thus saith the Lord, there shall not be a General Assembly for a General Conference assembled together until the house of the Lord shall be finished, and the baptismal font, and if we are not diligent the church shall be rejected and their dead also.'"—Church History, 2: 551.

By December 13, 1841, this matter was considered serious enough to engage the attention of the Twelve in an epistle to the Saints in which the Twelve warned the church that "if this building is not completed speedily, 'we shall be rejected as a church with our dead,' for the Lord our God hath spoken it;" and it was declared that while many were thus engaged, there were many, "very many more, who do not thus come up to their privilege and their duty" in the matter. Joseph Smith, Alexander Smith, and others stated that the temple was never finished at the time it was burned in 1848. The failure to build it was probably a symptom more than a cause of the rejection of the church, for many things were done contrary to the divine will. It culminated in the death of the prophet and in many changes subsequently to his death in 1844.

The church became disorganized, and two reorganizations were attempted that are of principal importance. One was the effort in which Brigham Young seized the leadership and rejected the prophet's son, Joseph, who had been designated to succeed his father. Polygamy, Adam-God worship, and blood atonement, were among the heresies he taught. These false doctrines were published in "Journal of Discourses" by that people. The Reorganized Church was the result of another reorganization accomplished pursuant to revelation, in which the original faith of the church was re-affirmed and Joseph Smith, the prophet's son, was received as the successor-prophet of his father.

Was the office of patriarch in the church in New Testament times?

As found in the Bible the term patriarch is derived from another word which is similar to our word father. Anciently the head of a family was known as the patriarch of that family, and on his death the eldest son acquired the title or position. Thus the term father used in the New Testament has this meaning in some instances. When the office of patriarch first arose in the Christian church is a matter of dispute. Usher, Pagi, Morinus, and others ascribe it to the apostles themselves, three patriarchates being, they say, established and located at Rome, Antioch, and Alexandria. But others believe it was first recognized at the Council of Nicea, in 325.

Should members attend preaching by an elder in whom they have no confidence?

If an elder is unworthy to preach, he may be silenced by proper officers. If they believe him worthy to occupy, the members should respect the decision of the officers and support those appointed to thus labor until they are shown to be unworthy by official action. Otherwise, every member becomes a judge of others without even the formality of an official hearing and decision based on evidence. Any member may complain by formal charges if he has been wronged by another and cannot secure satisfaction, but official conduct is subject to official notice.

The Readers Say---

Restored in Body and Spirit

I have been a member of the church for twenty-five years. The greater part of that time was spent in Des Moines District, at Perry, Iowa, attending many reunions, rallies and homecoming services. I have experienced wonderful prayer services, revelations, healings, and heard older folks tell of the sweet influence of the heavenly Spirit. Often I wondered if ever I would be worthy to receive that blessing.

Nine years ago this August Mr. Hern, I, our daughter, my mother, Lucy Doss, and sister, Alta, moved to Temple City on a small chicken ranch. My mother suffered with chronic bronchitis, and my sister had been afflicted since birth. Although ailing, they were able to do much of the housework.

There is much work on a ranch, and my husband being a railroad man, my time was fully occupied caring for two thousand five-hundred fowls.

One evening while feeding the wet mash I raised my head quickly, striking it on a large limb of a walnut tree. Everything turned black and I stumbled to the henhouse to brace myself, feeling as if I had broken my neck. Any bending position brought excruciating pain. I took many treatments, medical and chiropractic, with little improvement. A dreadful buzzing was in my head making me very nervous.

Time went on. My mother passed away the following spring. My sister's health began to fail, and it was necessary to take her to the city twice a week. My condition did not improve. An X-ray showed pinched nerves at the back of the neck, so I had more treatments. I could hold my head up better now, but it was an effort to work. I could walk only a short distance. I had received help many times through administration, but not complete healing.

July 4, this year, I was preparing a picnic dinner and collapsed. My sister managed to get help and the doctor arrived just in time. I could not keep medicine down, and rest was impossible. Brother D. S. Sorden was called the next day, and I slept after the administration. Saturday he called again and prayed that I might be given new strength that old troubles would disappear, and that I might enjoy a new body. That night I could not sleep, but felt as if someone were pouring strength into my body. It was a wonderful experience. When the dawn came and I could raise my feet, legs, my head and arms, I knew that Brother Sorden's prayer for strength had been answered. But the shock of the collapse was too much for the weakened part of my head, and I suffered dreadfully with it.

That night I continued to suffer with my neck and head. I called the woman who was caring for me, and she gave me an electric pad. I was sure that I must have care for my head, or a serious condition might result. At daylight we called chiropractors and found all places closed, or no answer. Everything seemed to be closed against me. My husband came home that morning, and finally he secured an osteopath who gave me a treatment.

Knowing that I must have rest and competent care for some time, my husband secured a place for me in a rest home, where I was under the care of the owner, a masseur, and his wife, a nurse. Thursday noon Brother Sorden called and administered, and the pain left my head and I slept. Every day some improvement was apparent, and the masseur remarked: "Mrs. Hern, for the weakened condition you were in Thursday, you have responded remarkably to these treatments." Friends and relatives admitted that the Great Physician had healed me; man does not do things so rapidly.

During this rest I spent much time in meditation. The rest periods were like heaven. I never experienced a sweeter time, and surely the influence of His Holy Spirit was with me. The hours were glorious and songs and Scripture came to me which I had forgotten. It was easy for me to say, "Have thine own way, Lord" and "My times are in thy hand." On the following Wednesday I was given a dream which convinced me that I had conquered the evil spirit. Suffice it to say that for a year I had been fighting a good spirit and an evil one. My burden seemed to be more than I could bear, and I had complained. Brother Sorden seemed to agree with me as to the interpretation of my dream, and thought that if I fulfilled my duties, my health would be fully restored and the promise that our burdens would not be more than we could bear, would be mine to enjoy.

In three weeks and three days I came home much to the surprise of everyone. In the meantime my sister, Mrs. Adaline Fox, from Perry, Iowa, had come and she took Alta home with her for the winter.

May I never cease to give thanks for the marvelous healing, dreams, and comforting spirit which were mine in that little room at the rest home. I pray that God will be with and bless all who are engaged in his great work.

Blessings Confirm Faith

I have been a member of this church since I was nine years old and my mother was a faithful member for fifty years. Before she died six years ago, she had a vision of Zion and because of this I know that Zion will be redeemed through trials and sufferings.

I have been seriously ill for two months and during this time I have been administered to on eight different occasions, receiving a blessing each time. While praying earnestly one morning, I was directed to go to our church physician, Dr. Teel. I was sent to the hospital for an operation and was able to talk the first day. The nurses in the hospital remarked that they had never seen anything like it.

I know that this is God's church and if we are prayerful and faithful, He will bless us.

Los Angeles, California.

Mrs. W. A. Terry.

Her Offering

(The following letter accompanied a check sent to the Presiding Bishop. It reveals the practical side of a spirit of consecration in a way that we would like to share with our readers. Because of the personal nature of the communication, we are withholding the writer's name.—Editors.)

Am enclosing money order amounting to $9.55; $6.55 tithes, and $3.00 thank offering.

I am ashamed of so small a thank offering. However, I would be more ashamed to withhold it. Were I able to send a thank offering for every blessing I have received, surely it would count up and our beloved cause would go forward. I just hope as I send this that every Latter Day Saint is sending some kind of thank offering, whether smaller or greater. It would be a pleasure to know that all who have means to do so would send something. So am sending this little bit with humble desire that it may be good and acceptable in the sight of God's servants and in the sight of the God of Israel.

Juniata, Michigan

A harvest home festival was held at Juniata, the meeting being an expression of thanks to God for his goodness to his children in that community in the face of one of the most wide-spread droughts the United States has ever known.

Elders William Grice and William H. Sheffer, of the district presidency, Elder Edward Weaver, of Marlette Branch, and Brother Vincent Schaar and his two talented daughters, of Lake Orion, Michigan, were present. A bounteous meal was served by the women at noon.

Many expressions of joyous appreciation were heard for the spiritual and temporal feasts of that day. Everyone was grateful to the men, stanch and well-grounded in the latter-day faith, for their good help, and to the daughters of Brother Schaar who added much to the program with musical numbers.

William R. Watson, of Mayville, Michigan, was united in marriage to Minnie Chamberlain, of Flint, November 16, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harmon L. Fox, near Mayville, by Elder Elliott S. Grinnell, of Juniata group. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Perkins. Mrs. Perkins is a granddaughter of the bride. The ceremony was followed by a wedding supper. Mr. and Mrs. Watson have been members of the church for many years. Saints from Marlette and other points of Michigan as well as from Washington and British Columbia are acquainted with Brother Watson, and Sister Watson has a large circle of friends around Flint.

Spokane, Washington

Though it is almost history now, the last Spokane district conference was the best attended in years. Many of the priesthood and laity who had not been present for some time, were on hand.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer and Elder Harold I. Velt were the speakers. Sermons were outstanding, and brought to attention many things essential to the molding of men and women for eternity.

Elder Velt has been installed as pastor of Spokane Branch. Immediately after his arrival, he launched a campaign for a series of meetings. The priesthood were called together, and plans were discussed. A special prayer meeting was held, and a complete organization of the branch was perfected under his direction for a cooperative missionary effort. Demonstrations of salesman-like presentation of handbills were made by Elders Alma Andrews and James Sage. Cars were solicited, and a committee of ten volunteers to write letters and extend invitations by telephone. This committee, directed by Sister Orpha Coleman, reported a contact of fifty-two percent made to inactive members.

A committee of women canvassed the shops of the district surrounding the church for space in windows for advertising the lectures.

Two thousand handbills were distributed under the direction of Brothers Andrews, Weeks, and Glen Fordham. Printing of the bills was neatly done at approximately the cost of the materials by Brother Elmer Fordham.

Many of the priesthood and members fasted one meal a day, and the hour of seven o'clock in the morning was set as a time for the Saints to have prayer no matter where they might be at that time.

Enthusiasm ran high. Handbills carried the headlines, "The Riddle of American Origins." Brother Velt has delved deep into the ancient civilization of Central and South America, proving that the wonderful work accomplished by the ancient Americans is day by day coming to light, and that the work being done by the Geographic Research Society is a monument of evidence in proving the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

It has been good to hear the old story. Many indifferent Saints are taking a new hold on church life. The building has been packed, many strangers being on hand each night. But the greatest thing is a revival in the hearts of the Saints at Spokane. Under such a spirit the city of Spokane can be stirred in time to the knowledge that the latter-day work has vital elements of truth and power.

Music was a prominent factor in the missionary services. Special numbers which harmonized with the subjects under discussion, were rendered each evening under the direction of Sisters Velva Kinne and Grace Nichols. The able assistance of Brother and Sister Velt, both great lovers of good music, was much appreciated. Willing service was also given by others.

A welcoming committee was on hand each evening, taking care of visiting friends. Average attendance over eight nights was about 142, including an average attendance of forty-two nonmembers. The expense of handbills including twenty dollars for advertising space in daily papers was more than met by the evening offerings.

The success attending this effort could not have been realized but for the splendid cooperation of all workers with the campaign leaders.

A contest was waged to see who could bring the most nonmembers and inactive members. The losing side provided the refreshments for the sacred concert and social held the week following the series of lectures. This proved to be a success in more than one way, as there was a wedding at the close of the social. The bride and bridegroom were strangers to most of the guests.

Two radio programs were given over KFIO the first two days of the lectures without cost. Brother Glen Fordham was responsible for this donation. Indian music and songs by Sisters Velva Kinne, Grace Nichols, and Sister Velt with the fine announcing by Glen Fordham made a fitting setting for Brother Velt's talks on ancient America.

Preaching by local priesthood members has been accompanied by spiritual power. Elder Andrews' weekly class on "Missionary Methods" is worthy of mention. The new organizations of women's club, Oriole circle, and a dramatic club have plans under way for worth-while contributions to pastoral and missionary success.

Savanna, Illinois

This branch and its local friends have profited from the spiritual comfort and inspiration brought by several visiting priesthood members.

First came Patriarch F. A. Smith whose sermons were of a high order. He gave several blessings and administered to a sick sister who was healed of a severe throat malady.

Then came District President E. R. Davis, and Brothers Richards and Willis, of Rock Island, then Brothers John Stiegel and F. C. Bevan, of Moline, Brothers Albert Welch and C. A. Biel, of Clinton, Iowa, and lastly Brothers Davis, Eckright, Bevan and Allen.

All these visitors gave good gospel sermons and drew fair-sized audiences. Many have expressed regret that the series is over. Interest was aroused by the efforts of the ministers, and not so many vacant seats can be seen in church now.

The young people between the ages of twelve and eighteen, have organized the O. A. U. Club, and are using as their theme song, "Onward and Upward." Their leaders are Jean Batcheller and Margaret Trutchley. They made their first social contribution to the church on a recent Friday evening when they gave a program of high merit. This was followed by a pie supper. A tidy sum was realized to be used in establishing a fund toward the purchase of a better piano for the church.

This group of young people plans a monthly entertainment. They have discovered considerable talent in playing various instruments and in using their voices.

The two young leaders attended Nauvoo Camp last summer, where they received many helps and ideas. They want to go again and take as many of the group with them as possible.

Columbus, Ohio

First Church

Patriarch George Robley visited First Church, November 4 to 11, and his inspirational sermons were a help to all who heard him.

The annual business meeting of the branch was held December 3, and the following officers will serve the congregation during the year to come: Branch president, C. W. Clark; Sunday school superintendent, Homer E. Omers; secretary, Mildred Ferguson, all reelected. Sister Esther Gates was the newly-elected treasurer. Other officers will assist these leaders in the various departments.

The women's department entertained their husbands at a banquet held in the basement of the church, October 22. Sister Grice was toastmistress. The program included novelty musical numbers, a short talk by Pastor Clark, and readings by Sister Helen Cummins, Sister Jessie Ferguson, and Harvey Grice.

The church school, under the direction of Homer Omers, held a halloween party at the church, October 30, and on November 22, a social was enjoyed.

The Loyal Club held its annual business meeting in November, and those who will direct the club's activities during the year are president, Sister Edna Ziechang; secretary and treasurer, Echo and Jennie Lewis. Sister Enna Hovey who had served as president since the club's organization, was forced to resign because of ill health, but she was elected honorary president.

Doris Elaine, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Overby, was blessed November 22.

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

Interest in the junior church is growing. Elder Gard H. Kirkendall is in charge. The junior choir is to be commended for its efficient service.

The women's department met November 8, in the social room of the church. Sister J. E. Matthews read a good paper on "Tithing," Sister Elizabeth Wemlinger one on "Thanks," and Lepha McMillin on "Sacrifice."

Patriarch George W. Robley and District President A. E. Anderton met with this congregation the evening of November 14, for prayer service.

The church was the scene of a pretty wedding November 16. Dorothy D. Jackson was married to Paul R. Wemlinger, Elder R. E. Madden reading the ceremony. Marie Wemlinger was the maid of honor and Robert S. Jackson best man. The bride was given away by her grandfather, S. F. Bierly. They will live at 1184 Linwood Avenue.

The sermons delivered by the following men have been most helpful: Patriarch J. E. Matthews, Bishop H. E. French, Elders C. W. Clark, G. H. Kirkendall, and W. B. Reeves, and Priest Harry J. Hoffman.

On November 20, a chicken and rabbit supper was given, the proceeds going to the recreation committee.

The funeral of Charles Deibel, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Deibel, was held at the church Tuesday afternoon, November 26. Patriarch J. E. Matthews preached the sermon.

Wray, Colorado

The church school began its new year with S. F. Bullard as the new director, and Zada Bullard, H. A. Tabor, and Bertha Hesse as directors of juniors, young people, and women's department, respectively.

Brother A. E. Tabor, pastor for many years, and Sister Tabor left soon after the beginning of the quarter to spend the winter at Bates City, Missouri, with their daughter. Their son, Harold A. Tabor, is serving as pastor and branch president.

While some parts of the work have not been so active, others have gained impetus. The men of the church have organized a study class to meet on the day that the women's meeting occurs. They have been particularly interested in the Priesthood Journal. The priesthood were greatly spurred on by a visit from President F. M. McDowell last summer.

Considerable interest has been shown in the evening classes on Sunday, and all who are able to attend are gaining much. Because of distance to travel many are unable to be present.

This branch was aroused to action by the visit of Elder Glaude A. Smith November 22 and 23. On both nights he presented stirring sermons. He stressed the need of spiritually awakening and the responsibility of church membership.

Sunday, November 25, they had junior church, Elder Paul Diefendorf presenting the message.

Almost the entire branch attended the funeral services of Mrs. Jacob Lutz, of Yuma, that afternoon. They extend sympathy to her family and to the branch at Yuma in their loss of a worker.

A Christmas program will be had in connection with the junior church Sunday morning, December 23. The Saints are hoping for a good Christmas offering this year in spite of the drouth in their section of the country.

Brush Creek, Illinois

The women's department deserves much credit for their untiring efforts in helping to carry on the financial part of the branch. By quilting, serving lunches at sales, and selling their quilts, they have been able to make their contribution.

Sacrament services for the months of November and December were well attended.

The La Da Sa Club enjoyed a masked Halloween party October 23, at the home of Sister Minta Anderson at Fairfield. Brother and Sister C. F. Davis were in attendance. All went in a large truck. In December the club met at the home of Sister Maggie Clements.

Miss Mildred Phillips became the bride of Robert Reed, of Cisne, not long ago, and Miss Jewel Slover was married to Roger Davis, of near Xenia.

Members were grieved to learn of the death of Sister Mary Morris, November 28. She had been in failing health for several years and had been confined to her bed for some time. She was the wife of the late I. A. Morris who served this branch as president long and faithfully. Since the death of her husband, she had made her home with her children. Funeral services were held at Brush Creek, November 30, the sermon being given by Elder Hilliard Henson assisted by Harry Henson. Interment was in Wooley Cemetery.

Elder William Clements happened to a painful accident two weeks ago while caring for his cattle. He was badly bruised and shaken up, and was unable to attend services for several days. Just now he is recovering from an attack of the flu.

Some recent speakers have been Brothers Halleck Milner and Ancil Burroughs.

Missionary L. G. Holloway was there December 9, and spoke encouragingly at the eleven o'clock hour. He preached to Xenia Saints that evening. Members there still carry on regular services.

The local solicitor, Virgil Burgess, spoke at Brush Creek Sunday evening on the financial law of the church.

Some Brush Creek Saints were able to attend the district conference which convened at Centralia, December 15 and 16.

There will be a Christmas program and tree on Christmas Eve.

North East Manchester, England

November 25 was Anniversary Sunday for North East Manchester Branch, and a happy day it was. Over forty years ago a little group of Saints were organized as a branch of the church by the late Elders Joseph Dewsnap, sr., and Henry Greenwood, and were placed under the pastorate of Elder George W. Leggott.

The beginnings of the branch were humble and unpretentious. Meetings were held in the upper room of a four-room cottage. In a short time a wooden building which had been occupied by the Christian Brethren, was occupied. Five shillings a week ground rent was paid. This not being considered wise, a movement was made to purchase the land, which was done for two hundred pounds.

From the earliest days a building fund was organized, each member contributing three pence a week. In the years since some have contributed to this fund not less than fifty pounds. The fund was supplemented by special efforts from time to time in which the men and women vied with each other in raising the needed money.

In 1913 the present commodious brick building was erected covering the whole of the available ground and known as the James Street Gospel Hall. When filled to capacity the building seats five hundred. In 1928 a good pipe organ was purchased, and now enriches the worship and services. It is a matter of rejoicing to the Saints that the developments in the branch have been paid for as they were made, and today there is no indebtedness, and from the balance on hand this church has been able to help other congregations seeking to improve their condition.

The present congregation of North East Manchester Branch numbers about one hundred-forty, and many who responded to the gospel call and received their early training in the church are scattered over the world, some in Canada, some in the United States, Australia, and other parts.

The morning service of Anniversary Sunday was in charge of Elder Fred Tapping, assistant to Brother Leggott and in charge of the visiting and local mission work. Soloists were Sister Tapping and Sister Baguley, and fifteen-minute papers were read by Priest Robert Schofield, son of Brother and Sister John Schofield who were pioneer members of the church, and Arthur Mayne, son of Brother and Sister Arthur Mayne, also pioneers in the work.

The afternoon service was in charge of Elder Harold Barrington, director of church school. Soloists were Sisters Lena Wilson and Stella Bancroft. Fifteen-minute papers were read by Priest George Wilson and Walter Bancroft.

Brother Wilson was one of the first pupils of the Sunday school when it was organized in the Hawke Street house. He has grown to manhood, married, and now his son is following in his father's footsteps. Brother Bancroft was one of the early members who also has grown to manhood under the influence of the church; he married the oldest daughter of Brother Leggott, and their family are loyal church members.

The evening service was in charge of Elder George W. Leggott, pastor from the beginning of the organization. In introducing the soloists, Sisters Minnie Weate Schofield and Maud Greenwood Nelson, Brother Leggott spoke feelingly about the association of their parents with the church. Fifteen-minute papers were read by Elder Thomas Brien and Elder James Schofield, active and honored servants of the church and known throughout the district for their valuable services.

The church sheds its influence in the community as well as among its members, and in the prayer services held every Sunday and Wednesday evening strong testimonies are recorded of the blessings of God to the sick and sorrowing. Those not of the Saints' communion send in requests that they may be remembered, and witness to the help they receive.

Kirtland, Ohio

October 25, an indoor festival was held at Kirtland Auditorium under the auspices of the religio, women's department, and Kirtland Dramatic Club. Six booths were kept busy during the evening displaying and selling articles. Supper was served and a total profit of more than sixty-two dollars was realized.

Sister Frank Van Name, of New Canaan, Connecticut, and her daughter, Sister Marvin Cross, of New York City, visited relatives at Kirtland this fall. Sister Van Name is a daughter of Sister A. E. Stone, of Kirtland, and a sister to Sister Joseph Stiffer, also of Kirtland.

The Kirtland religio presented a splendid program of vocal and instrumental numbers the evening of November 22, the entertainment being arranged by Sister Mabel Thomas, assisted by Frank C. Webbe. The chorus of thirty voices was directed by Sister Ruth Burt.

Graceland College Day was also fittingly celebrated this autumn, music being furnished by the Kirtland Choir, directed by Sister W. E. Householder, and a girls' group. William Dyke talked on "Graceland as I Expected It and As It Was," Byron Neville on "Graceland as Compared to Other Educational Institutions," and William F. Webb on "Graceland's Contribution to the Church."

Sister William Bertleff and husband are the parents of a daughter, Faye Arlene, born November 13.

Brother and Sister Arthur Whitcomb and their daughter and husband, Mrs. and Mr. Virgil Williams, and family, have motored South. They will live at Eustis, Florida, about thirty-five miles from Orlando. Elder and Sister F. G. Pitt, who make their summer home with the Whitcombs live at Orlando.

Brother and Sister Byron Neville, who recently returned from an Eastern honeymoon motor trip, are now at home on Ridge Road, and Brother Neville has resumed his duties at the Ford agency of J. B. Cole, Inc. At Kirtland Temple Sunday afternoon, October 14, Sister Faye Davis, daughter of Brother and Sister William E. Davis, and Brother Byron Neville, son of Elder and Sister T. G. Neville, were united in marriage, Patriarch John F. Martin officiating. The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. Beulah Wakeman, of Cleveland, as matron of honor; Miss Edith Wise, maid of honor, and Miss Ruth Burt and Miss Anna Mae Davis, bridesmaids. Donald C. Neville, brother of the bridegroom, was best man, and ushers were Earl Davis, Rudolf Wolf, Robert Neville and Richard Stewart of Akron. A pleasing program preceded the ceremony. Brother and Sister Neville are graduates of Kirtland High School. Brother Neville attended Graceland College.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

December 1, started institute week. Brother Albert N. Hoxie invited his Philadelphia Harmonica Band to play for the opening of the institute. The rendition of the operatic and popular numbers on the humble harmonica was little short of miraculous. Brother Hoxie has done a wonderful work with his boys. The church was crowded and the congregation was attentive during the wonderful program.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Elder Charles B. Woodstock were in Philadelphia for the entire week. Brother Hanson conducted classes in "Versions of the Bible." Brother Woodstock taught classes in "Church School Teaching and Supervision."

The institute was officially started when Apostle Hanson took charge of the young people's prayer service, the subject of which was "Giving." Brother Hanson also presided over the sacrament service. Brother Woodstock arrived on Monday morning, and in the evening the classes started. The classes were held on every night of the week.

On Saturday evening the dramatic club presented the play "The Dream of Queen Esther."

On Sunday morning Brother Woodstock took charge of the young people's service. The theme for this prayer service was "My Philosophy of Life." Brother Hanson preached at the morning service and Brother Woodstock in the evening.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

The institute was an outstanding success. Everyone who attended felt that it was worth while to make the effort to come out, and is grateful to Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Brother C. B. Woodstock for their splendid cooperation in setting our ideals on higher ground.

Cleveland, Ohio

Cleveland has enjoyed many activities in the past six months. Three people were baptized, Sister Hannibal Wilson and Brothers Joseph and Herbert Berry.

Four couples have been united in marriage. Richard Redden married Myrtle Yahraus June 23. Margaret Sheppard became the bride of John Starrett July 25, Elder John Marton officiating. Emma Meyers and Elder F. T. Haynes were married September 8, by Elder Clifford Minkler, of Lorain. Katherine Marr and Brother Arthur Hanna were married November 8, Elder Herbert Talbot officiating.

Cleveland Saints miss a real friend in the passing of Sister Ann Elizabeth Farnfield November 24, at the age of seventy-six years.

The annual business meeting was held December 5, and the following officers were chosen to lead the work of the branch: Branch president, Herbert Talbot; church school director, Lester Vanderwerf; president of religio, Frank Ray; president of women's department, Ann Holland.

The branch social committee has planned a social evening once each month. The first was held at the home of Sister Jane Skillicorn October 9, the second at the home of Brother Clarence Thomas November 13. Both were well attended.

The women's department has proved a financial asset to the building fund in the past year. Their suppers in the hands of Luella Ray and her kitchen assistants, have been real treats, and attendance is always over one hundred. The women have an art and needle society which meets each Friday afternoon, and the articles made are sold at the suppers and are in charge of Marion Bennett.

A musical concert given at the church a short time ago was one of the best this branch has enjoyed. An excellent variety of vocal and instrumental selections was rendered by church musicians and their friends. James Caesar, violin soloist, contributed two numbers, playing a real Stradivarius violin. More than a hundred music lovers listened to this program with deep appreciation.

Toronto District Conference

At the annual conference of Toronto District, held in Toronto, Ontario, in October, which was presided over by Apostle D. T. Williams and the district presidency, Elders James Wilson, James Pycock and J. L. Prentice, the following officers were elected for the coming year: President, James Pycock; Counselors, James A. Wilson and J. L. Prentice; superintendent of Sunday school department, Urban Essery; superintendent of women's department, Mrs. Alice McLean.

Elder W. I. Fligg, missionary to Owen Sound District, was present, and spoke Sunday morning at eleven o'clock. Apostle D. T. Williams occupied the pulpit at the evening service.

It was gratifying to see a good number in attendance from out-of-town branches.

TWO LIES AND A TRUTH

he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." (John 1:12.) A marvelous promise. It would have been a glorious promise if it had only stated "he gave them power to become." There is one condition—that they must "believe on his name" and elsewhere in the sacred Scriptures we are informed that he is "the way, the truth, the life."

Evil is not more basically inherent in us than good. The only basic impulse is the impulse to respond to situations. The character of human response is capable of limitless modifications. We know from the laws of physiology and psychology, as well as from the word of Scripture, that anything is possible in the development of human society. We can improve; we can overcome evil, and sin and war. We can indeed "become the sons of God." L. L.

What Hath God Wrought?

Since the inception of the work known to us as a "marvelous work and a wonder" in 1830 there has been a wonderful increase in knowledge in many directions. Daniel stated that "knowledge shall be increased" and this we have seen verified. We learn of the great wonders of the heavens as man penetrates the vast ether spaces. Man has delved into the bowels of the earth and learned many wonderful lessons. Through it all, this knowledge has revealed the immeasurable creative power of God. As man seems to understand and comprehend many of these things he only discovers that there is still more, still greater mysteries for him to fathom. Today, scientists are confessing that there is a spiritual power behind all creation which they cannot analyze and which they cannot comprehend. Latter Day Saints can well believe this for we have been told that "He comprehended all things, that he might be in all and through all things, the light of truth, which truth shineth." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2.)

Knowledge and understanding have increased in a spiritual sense also since 1830. Many of the creeds of that day have undergone changes or renovations. Some have been discarded while others are not believed even though repeated. Light has in some measure come to people and we find a variety of religious movements springing up since 1830, based on the new found understandings.

What was the great fundamental truth which Joseph Smith enunciated to the religious world of his day? It was simply this: "God lives. He will reveal himself, as in the past, so in the present." It was, apparently, a new thought to religious people of his day and from that great truth have come many other truths and principles which are for the salvation of mankind. Where there is a people who will believe in the great I Am there you will find the avenues or channels for communication with that Great Being are open to receive messages for their direction and salvation.

The latter-day message declares that God is interested in mankind. As mankind endeavors to come into attunement with the Divine there is a release of knowledge and wisdom and understanding. That knowledge is given for the better government and ordering of man's life in order that it might be more nearly in keeping with God's will. Just as it is essential that there should be compliance with the laws that regulate reception of wireless messages, even so it is essential that there should be compliance with the divine laws of communication with God. "Draw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you," is the instruction given by James.

That God was interested in mankind is keenly in evidence as we read the Scriptures. From the dawn of creation we find that God conversed with man. When man fell from his high estate God provided the means whereby he might be restored to his presence. This was through the gospel plan. Obedience to it would bring happiness and contentment. There is a long list of those who received direction from God. One of the most striking experiences is that of Enoch who was successful in teaching many people the gospel plan. As a result of obedience to the principles of the gospel as given to these ancient worthies we find that there was peace, prosperity, and no poor among them. A city so often sung about, Zion, was established and from the meagre records of this city we learn that it "was taken up to God." Where people live in harmony, where love of a fellow man and of God are the highest motives, there one can expect to find God's presence abiding.

In spite of all the increase in knowledge and material prosperity in this world we find that there is great unhappiness. Mankind is estranged from God for he has not yet learned the lesson of obedience. That lesson must be taught by example and precept. If the world was ready to accept God's way of living, we would have a more equal distribution of material things which would lead to spiritual development.

What hath God wrought? God has given to the people of this church sufficient light and inspiration for them to know what to do. He has given them the spiritual blessings of the gospel; added light and direction have come. In that light that has been given we have been told what principles we must obey if we would receive God's blessings. The primary steps are Faith in God, Repentance from our dead works (sins), Baptism of the water and of the Spirit (a new birth). These principles remain with us all the time. But we have been told that we must also comply with other laws. "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind . . . and thy neighbor as thyself." (Matthew 22: 37-39.) These are not idle words. They are full of practical worth and the extent of our observance of these will determine the measure of our conversion to the message of the gospel.

By means of revelation we have had many things explained to us. One of the outstanding truths that have come to us in these days is that which deals with our temporal affairs. To God all things are spiritual, but man has divided his affairs into spiritual and temporal. That separation has been the cause of many of the world's ills. God has intimated to us as a people that we are stewards, holding our temporalities in trust for him. We are to provide for our own needs, it is true, but from that which we have we are to provide for the needs of others. The laws which govern the zionic principles for which this church stands must needs be observed by the people of God if they are going to have the riches of God's blessings. It becomes increasingly necessary for us all to learn and comprehend what God has given to us in these latter days if we are going to avert or avoid the difficulties and calamities which are coming upon the face of the earth. God has warned us; we must not be caught unawares any longer. What shall be wrought by God? If we give heed to his directions and his laws we can expect to see many wonderful things wrought by the hand of God. We can expect to see Zion built up in these the latter times. We need Zion; of that there is no need to discuss. But Zion, the city of the pure in heart, can only be wrought through obedience to God's plan as given to us. Shall we hesitate? Shall we continue to wander in the desert? Let us "obey, rather than sacrifice." Then shall Zion be the wonder of the ages and people will be led to exclaim, "What hath God wrought?"—G. G. Lewis in The Standard.

World Kinship

The world is one; we cannot live apart,
To earth's remotest races we are kin;
God made the generations of one blood;
Man's separation is a sign of sin.

What though we solve the secret of the stars,

Or from the vibrant ether pluck a song,

Can this for all man's tyranny atone
While Mercy weeps and waits and suffers long?

Put up the sword, its day of anguish past;

Disarm the forts, and then, the war-flags furled,

Forever keep the air without frontiers,
The great, free, friendly highway of the world.

—Hinton White in Young People's Leader.

Cooling Off the Soul

I remember coming home one April twilight along the alluring yet forbidden margin of a fragrant wild thicket. After the lilac afterglow, dusk had swiftly fallen. There were three Negro men with me—all apparently ordinary in their emotional powers, which should have been at low ebb after the long, sultry day we four had spent estimating timber in the wildness of a half-submerged swamp.

Our footfalls sounded lonely as we padded quietly along, one behind the other. Fading light suffused the solitary wildwoods. I had a sense of being in another world. Suddenly I was aware that my comrades had paused behind me and were ejaculating softly among themselves. Turning, I saw them standing in a little group, each with hands clasped reverently, and as they gazed toward the flower-tinted west, I heard each one say over and over, "God bless the new moon!"

My humble friends had seen more than I; and with the spontaneous spiritual clairvoyance of true mystics they had responded. High above us hung the frail new moon. The Negroes, at sight of it, instinctively turned to bless God and to worship.

Ever since that evening I have, with a deepened respect, noticed plantation Negroes performing this joyous mystic rite. Even little children in the midst of their last entrancing twilight frolic, will, upon seeing the silver sickle gleaming in the heavens, pause in their play to look upward and, with hands clasped, to say, "God bless the new moon!" A moment later, their charming vespers done, they will again be breathlessly chasing one another, as children will at dusk.

For more than thirty years I have never seen a new moon without praying the prayer that I first heard when my lowly comrades worshiped that evening at the edge of the forest.

While moonlight has about it a serene solemnity, I cannot recall without a smile what an old friend of mine told me of its effect upon himself. One of our village Rip Van Winkles, he was merry of heart, ready of tongue, intermittent of work, incessantly poor; but quite self-possessed save in his own home.

The honeysuckle and the May moonshine had allured me down the lazy lane that sags its easy way past Sam's door. I was a little startled to come upon him sitting on the old rail fence, which was heavily festooned with blossomed woodbine. The fragrant old roadway was all twilight and tranquillity and sumptuous early moonlight.

"Why, Sam," I said, "I didn't know you were sentimental. What are you doing out here?"

"Well, I'll tell you," he said half apologetically. "I came out here to cool off my soul."—Archibald Rutledge, "There's Magic in the Moonlight," in the American Magazine.

Christ is tempted. He beginneth to preach.		<small>ST. MATTHEW, 4, 5.</small>
13 ¶ Then cometh Jē'sus from Gāl'ilee to Jōr'dan unto Jōhn, to be baptized of him.	A. D. 26.	13 And leaving Nāz'a-rēth, he came and dwelt in Cā-pēr'nā-um, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zāb'u-lon and Nēph'thā-lim:
14 But Jōhn forbād him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?	CHAP. 3. vch. 2. 22.	14 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by E-sā'ias the prophet

A Suggestion for Those Whom You May Have Forgotten---

Solving the Christmas Gift Problem

By Mrs. Walter Callahan

The Spirit of Christmas was looking about Looking for people the others forgot;
To soothe their sorrow, and lighten their way
For this is the Spirit of Christmas Day.

A little old lady, with silvering hair
For years, with lameness, confined to her chair;
A grandfather, trembling and weak with age,
Was eagerly scanning a month old page.

An unemployed father, who cried, in his need,
"If only I had something decent to read!"
A tired little mother, almost lost to hope
From trials with which she has to cope.

The Spirit of Christmas' eyes filled with tears
As she viewed the discouragement, loneliness, fears,
And she tried to think of a gift to please,
And to comfort and cheer the hearts of these.

Then her eyes brightened, and away she flew
To drop a hint to the more fortunate few,
"A whole year of happiness for each one,"
She said. And the good deed was done.

Now the sweet old lady with the silvery hair
Smiles as she reads and rocks in her chair;
And grandfather, though he is still of great age
Smiles as he reads the Saints' Herald page.

And the unemployed father, though still unemployed,
Has the Herald to read, and is not so annoyed;
And the tired little mother hums happier tones
As she watches her children read Stepping Stones.

And the Spirit of Christmas was made to rejoice
When she saw the happiness caused by her choice.
"To have the Church Papers for one whole year!
You'll never forget this Christmas, my dears."
