■ Obstacles

The other day while walking down the street, I heard behind me the sound of flying feet, and two laughing boys, on their way home to lunch, raced past me. Suddenly, the taller of the two sprinters deliberately changed his course and came to an abrupt halt beside an automobile parked at the curb. Leaning against the shining fender, he called to his companion, "I can't go on—an obstacle obscures my view!"

Just two boys at play, do you say? Just adolescent showing off? Perhaps.

But how many of us who pride ourselves on being fully grown-up, find ourselves halted, stilled, not making the progress we should, because we have allowed an obstacle to get in our way? How many of us are permitting a self-chosen obstacle to stop us in the race of life and to obscure the view ahead? And how many of us are deliberately turning aside from our course, as this boy did, though not in play, to hunt up some obstacle or some excuse, to keep us from going on?

Only a passing incident this—but something to think about, and to apply to self.

■ "When He Cometh"

(A John Sheehy Story)

Once many years ago when travel across the Atlantic was much slower than it is now, a ship was plowing its way through the waves towards America. The voyage was long and tedious, and many of the passengers had been sick. Everyone seemed to be downhearted, and this was especially so among the people in the steerage.

A minister on board undertook the task of cheering the travelers. He descended to the steerage and spoke to the people, suggesting that they sing something. Of course they wanted to sing a song that all knew, but that seemed impossible at first. At last the minister selected a hymn with the words of which he was familiar, "When He Cometh to Make Up His Jewels." But he could not remember the tune to which these words were sung. He solved the problem of singing in this way—he wrote out the words so that all might learn them, and then he chose a popular tune of the day, "Johnny Schommker," to which they would sing the hymn.

And so while the vessel made her way westward, the passengers sang. They liked the song, and when the ship docked at Quebec, they came ashore singing it. Now they were scattering to their several destinations. As the trains pulled away they sang in good spirit the second stanza:

"He will gather, He will gather
The gems for His kingdom:
All the pure ones, all the bright ones,
His loved and His own."

Real understanding had sprung up among these fellow voyagers through this hymn, and as they scattered to their different destinations, they were glad that they had learned to sing it.

We have borrowed a beautiful hymn which we sing frequently at sacrament service, "Till He Comes," which reminds us that Jesus is coming and that we must prepare for him and watch and wait, for we know not the day nor the hour of his coming.

The New Year

Every year we enter the new year feeling that the conditions are unique or vastly different from previous years.

This attitude may spring from various sources. We forget easily, and it is fortunate that we find pleasant memories lingering longer than unpleasant ones, and so we may face the usual number of untoward factors feeling that they are larger in number than previously.

The long period of economic depression and unfavorable conditions have left deep impress upon all of us. Readjustments have had so continuously to be made, and fewer means with which to do and to sustain our standard of living have taught us we can do without many things previously thought to be necessary. Cheerfulness has therefore increased despite hard times, and many are lifting up their heads and facing the future with faith alert and functioning. The adverse conditions have worked towards closer walk with God and greater dependence on Him.

Throughout the church a finer feeling and fuller faith has developed, and spiritual things are receiving more attention than before. We are learning that a heart full of faith and fraternity is more productive in developing happiness than is a full purse where selfishness abounds.

Slowly, perhaps painfully so, the church is working towards better conditions and out of those which brought despair. But there are heavy loads yet to be borne, arduous tasks to be carried, and for these we must needs exercise our best and richest faith. The workers of the church are in closer ranks and towards our ideals and goals we are moving with greater unity. We face the new year with equanimity, knowing full well that the best we have of talent and means must be put to the service of pushing the work onward. Our faith looks up to our great Spiritual Source and Guide. To the ministry and members our warmest greetings are extended. May good cheer, happy experiences, and prosperity attend you!

We must move onward—to Zion.

A New Era for the World

FORMER United States Senator James A. Reed, past master of sarcasm, rises up out of the sweetness of his new honeymoon to observe sourly that America is being governed by men who think that the business of the country can best be regulated by those who never had any business of their own. Well, we are reminded that practical men of business, managing business each in his own interest, landed the country where it is today. Practical men of business and shrewd politicians landed the world where it is. In America, when big business men had exhausted their every resource and were hopeless and planless and panic ridden, the people turned to a man who professed to have a plan; one who proposed a "new deal." It was not a question of politics, party lines were forgotten.

CROSSING OLD FRONTIERS

Practical experience and its resultant knowledge is valuable up to the boundaries of actual experience. It is always men with a vision, a theory, a plan, who successfully cross the frontiers. Such a man crossed unchartered waters and discovered a new world. The practical navigators said that it could not be done. The practical sailors with him were all for turning back.

Privately owned and individually controlled industry served several generations well—so long as there was natural wealth and unexplored areas for the masses to turn to when the few had accumulated all the wealth immediately at hand. That day is past. That system has about reached its limits. Under it there is increasing difficulty to maintain an orderly civilization.

DEMOCRACY FACES A NEW TEST

Men with vision begin to see that industry must either be collectively owned and managed or submit to intelligent governmental control to a much greater degree than formerly. Russia, Great Britain, Italy, Germany, United States, all begin to see that fact. Russia undertakes collective ownership under an absolute dictatorship. In Italy and Germany governmental control of privately owned industry under dictatorship is proposed. In America we are now committed, at least temporarily, to governmental supervision of industry under a democracy, control in the hands of a man or men of our choosing empowered to carry out our mandates. A somewhat similar plan seems to develop in Great Britain. Democracy faces its final test. If it wins here it has a future—if it fails it may well be through.

A MORE EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH

This is a conclusion thrust upon us by a desperate situation under which the wisdom of practical experience had nothing adequate to offer from its store of old customs. We press into a new era that must be met or a common ruin is our lot. The clock cannot be turned back even at the behest of old prejudices. Irrespective of politics (for many of us who now support President Roosevelt did not vote for him) the administration at Washington seems to have visioned certain fundamental principles, among them these: that there must be a more equitable and general distribution of the material things of earth; to obtain which there must be opportunity for employment with shorter hours, so that all may be employed, and at wages adequate to ensure comfortable living. This means the curtailment of the "sacred" rights of individuals to gather to themselves at will unlimited profits from the wealth and industry of the whole country, and to gather them by any means approved by their own individual code of ethics.

NEW BUSINESS CODES

Even before the depression there was a swing away from the old idea that business should be let severely alone. Men began to see that the philosophy "every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost" suited the devil very well. Give him time and he would get them all—there is always a hindmost. Andrew Carnegie saw the dangers of vast accumulations of wealth in a few hands in his day. His remedy was the inheritance tax—up to or beyond fifty percent. He argued, "Let the bee alone while he is gathering the honey; when he is through, take society's share and redistribute it." (Carnegie, shrewd Scotchman, himself preferred to get and spend as he pleased while he lived—then let others get if they could.) But his simile of the bee was not well chosen. The bee has no ethics or morals beyond his own little group—any other hive may be robbed and its industrialists slaughtered. Bees are inveterate robbers. Business has not fared well under a similar code of ethics. Common sense, not to mention Christianity, demands better codes for a new era. The Rooseveltian program seems to be, "Let business write these better codes, if it will—if not, let them be written." Long ago Christ gave the basic code: The Golden rule.

GREAT DANGERS AND GREAT OPPORTUNITIES

President Roosevelt has voiced a powerful plea for social justice and a more equitable distribution of wealth. His proposed plans may not all of them work out in practice. If they do not work out others must be tried. One thing is certain, if we do not cross the frontiers of past social experience and experimentation with sane men who have a plan and a vision, we may presently cross those frontiers with mad revolutionists and anarchists who have no plan and no vision. The danger is that with a return of some degree of prosperity men of the old order that has brought ruin will return to control with their hard, limited, self-seeking dogmas, and the lessons of this world cataclasm will be forgotten. If so a worse fate will await the people. Practical men of business experience have their invaluable offering to make, and it will best be made in helping to realize the goals set by sane men of vision.

After all that has happened it is idle to presume that the world will again be exactly as it was. For better or for worse we move into a new era. Man faces greater problems, greater dangers, and greater opportunities than at any other time in modern history: a new year and a new era and a new challenge to good citizenship. ELBERT A. SMITH.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

Among the many Christmas greetings received in a formal written or printed way, was a holographic one from one of our younger men under appointment which carries a unique but encouraging message which I am passing on to Herald readers. Brother George Njeim writes from Ottawa, Canada:

"Once again we come to another sacred season which makes us think of the great gift of God and the message of salvation. And though we are living in the twentieth century this message is still the panacea for the ills of the world.

"The world has entered on a period of exhaustion the last quarter of this year that our problems, national and international, are less talked about but destructive undercurrents are still at work and the hope is in Divine guidance. So my prayer is that God may grant, through you, that which may relieve the church and the world. And may this Yuletide be of a great cheer and comfort to you."

Brother George seems to feel the import of present conditions and is burdened with the weight of our own responsibility. How strongly I wish that all the Saints might personally and collectively be duly impressed with the necessity and importance of doing something definite and emphatic in establishing in a practical way working stewardships. And how much more earnestly do I wish that every officer and ordained man in the church were so thoroughly saturated with the desire that everyone might be alert to the necessity of instructing and heartening the Saints towards the Zionite ideal.

Carry on, Brother George! Zion's day is nearing.

A New Year's Pastoral Letter

By Lawrence D. Campbell, Pastor, Windsor, Ontario

(The following letter was sent by Brother Campbell to every family in the branch. Both the idea and the message are of such interest that we present the letter here for the benefit of our readers.)

Nineteen-thirty-three will soon be history. The past year is a mirror from which, if we are willing, we can learn invaluable lessons. The coming year is a window through which we can see spacious possibilities. The extent to which they will be realized depends largely upon how carefully we organize our time and energies during 1934.

On behalf of the Branch Presidency, we express this hope that the New Year may hold for you and yours the fullest measure of good health and happiness.

HAPPY—

- Because we represent the greatest and most beneficent business in the world, and present difficulties have only enhanced our organization.
- Because our future depends more upon our own efforts than on anything else, and there is no restriction on the amount we can accomplish.
- Because we are selling the thing that men are seeking today—The Angel's Message.

NEW—

- Opportunities to correct those mistakes which we have discovered in our work during the past year.
- Enthusiasm for our profession through a realization of what the church is and what its aims are.
- Effectiveness as workers from the experiences gained in overcoming more than ordinary difficulties.

YEAR—

- Of three hundred and sixty-five days filled with countless opportunities for telling men and women how Christ will guarantee all the important things in life. "Do this and ye shall live."

There is always much beyond for a man of courage and vision. May the New Year open this curtain of possibilities to our vision.

Brother Campbell's comment on the use of the pastoral letter will be of interest to other ministers:

"Each month we send out a letter or program of the month's activities. The returns have been favorable and the cost small. It has done one thing worth while: It has forced the poor or weak speaker to be studious, or his audience is small. It has forced to good speaker to be on his toes and have something different every time he speaks."

If all the pastoral letters to Windsor people are as good as the one printed above, one can understand their success. Everything depends on the quality of material that goes into such a letter. A monthly sheet of unimportant nothings would have little value.

Men You Ought to Know

J. F. GARVER

Of the Quorum of Twelve

Apostle John F. Garver loves two things with consuming devotion: the church and his family. And they love him, wherever they know him. He early learned the lesson of courage on the football field. He took his academic training at Graceland, where he has established the all-time record for alumni loyalty; but he was graduated with the greatest and most distinguished honors from the "University of Hard Knocks." Although not tall, he is a giant of strength, both physically and spiritually. Our personal acquaintance with him impels us to say that the above picture does not do him justice: he is a much better looking man. We hope you have the pleasure, and profit, too, of hearing him speak some time.

Publicity Agents, Attention!

All publicity agents must re-register the first of January to transact business for the Herald Office during 1934. No agents will be recognized without the new card of registration; and no commissions will be allowed without it. Pastors are asked to cooperate in getting the regular agent of each branch to register for 1934.

Alonzo H. Parsons

A Brief Biography

ON THE EIGHTH DAY of February, 1857, there was born in Madison County, Indiana, a baby who was to become a man of great faith and many works in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Days. The child was given the name Alonzo Harkaway by his youthful parents. He was the eldest of the nine sons and daughters of William and Martha Ann Parsons. His father came of English Quaker stock, pioneers in North Carolina. His mother, also of pioneer blood, counted among her people those who had accepted the restored gospel as early as 1836. She had, in fact, been born in Missouri during the troublous times of the Saints. Her father and mother moved west to Missouri near Far West, and bought an eighty-acre farm not far from Haun's Mill. There Martha Ann Kent Parsons was born.

Young Alonzo enjoyed his growing years of work, life in the out-of-doors, and play quite as much as did other farmer boys of his age in the Hoosier State. His ambition was to become a preacher, but his schooling was limited. There were no free books, no busses and few of the many other advantages that both city and country children enjoy nowadays. No, Alonzo and his brothers and sisters trudged three miles to the little schoolhouse to attend the school after corn husking was over and until the time arrived to prepare the ground for oats and other crops.

IN EARLY manhood Alonzo married his childhood sweetheart, Miss Martha Gale, whose father was a United Brethren preacher, and who for fifty-seven years was to be his faithful companion in wedlock. Of her in later years her husband wrote: "My wife always encouraged me to do my duty as a minister for Christ." She was his partner in his ministerial work, his fellow traveler, his helpmate. At first they identified themselves with the Quaker Church, and then the young pair came in contact with the restored gospel through Alonzo's Uncle Kent, his mother's brother.

After a period of grave consideration, they were baptized by Uncle Alma Kent, Mrs. Parsons leading the way. It was a bright day, July 24, 1880, when they made their covenant with Christ, and on that day Alonzo was given one of the most remarkable and reassuring spiritual experiences it was ever his lot to receive. Many, many times he related this experience to friends as a testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel.

He was frankly devoted to the gospel, and though limited in education and in material means—he was a struggling young farmer—he resolved to do all he could for the Lord. He studied and conversed with his uncle and others that he might be able to give a reason for his new faith to his former brothers of the Quaker church, a thing he was first called to do in the village grocery store, whither his wife had sent him after soap for the family washing.

That fall he became interested in the works of good Elder George Beebe, who was a fireside preacher but not so much of a pulpit preacher. Alonzo was growing in gospel experiences. He was ordained an elder by John Landers and Alma Kent at Cuba, Kansas, in 1882, at a district conference, and was the speaker the next Sunday morning. He associated with such men of faith as Elder I. N. Roberts and others. Experiences of healing through administration and helping with counsel and words of testimony came to him.

The following experience is typical of many which came to the young minister. Let him tell it in his own words: "At noon I came to a farmhouse and they were eating dinner. They invited me to eat with them and said I might feed my horses, too. So I stopped. To my delight I found that they were eating cornbread and milk, a favorite dish of my boyhood, and soon I was hungry no longer. During our conversation I learned that they were from Fremont County, Iowa, and had been next door neighbors to my parents when I was a boy. They were members of the church and were glad to renew acquaintances with me. That night something was going on at their schoolhouse, and we secured the privilege of holding services there. The next night I commenced with a full house and continued to preach for three weeks. I baptized four adults, cutting ice fourteen inches thick to get to the water so as to perform the ordinance. This was the first baptism in my ministerial career. Our clothing froze stiff before we walked a hundred steps to the house, but we suffered no ill effects."

BROTHER PARSONS was called to take up the duties of a seventy at the General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, 1886, and ordained under the hands of John T. Davis, James Caffall, and E. C. Brand, and was assigned to labor in the State of Kansas. Two years later he was assigned to Nova Scotia, and from that time on his life became inseparably linked with people and places in the eastern part of the United States. A telegram from President Joseph Smith directed him to go to Providence, Rhode Island, and there participate in an elders' court on his way to his mission. In that branch he was given the divine promise: "You shall lead many souls to my church and establish a good work in the mission to which you are sent." This prophecy gave both Elder and Mrs. Parsons, who accompanied her husband, much courage for the new experiences before them.

Later he was for a time pastor of Boston Branch and missionary to that district. That was before Brother George Robley became a preacher; he had not been long in the church. While living at Boston, Elder Parsons was instrumental in opening up the work at North Weymouth. In the summer of 1890, he attended the reunion at Jonesport, Maine, where his friendship for President Joseph Smith was given opportunity to deepen and ripen. These two were always fellow laborers for Christ's cause.

In April 1892, Brother and Sister Parsons arrived at their home at Broughton, Kansas, after three years' absence. Shortly thereafter Brother Parsons entered into the work in Independence Stake and in Northeastern Kansas. Apostle Thomas W. Smith requested him to assist in the organization of a branch at Lees Summit, Missouri. Chase, Armstrong, and Atchison, Kansas, and Guide Rock, Nebraska, were other points which he visited during this period, and where he labored.

Mr. and Mrs. Parsons lost two babies early in their married life, and after fourteen years a daughter, Veneta, came to bless their home. The year of her birth Elder Parsons was assigned to missionary duty in New York and Philadelphia District, and then came one of the most faith-testing experiences of his life. His baby was ill, seriously ill, and yet Alonzo Parsons was given the knowledge that only by his going into his field and taking up his duties, would she be

Fire at Saints' Home in Lamoni

Fire broke out in the boiler room of the Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, at 1.30 a. m. December 27. But due to the quick work of Brother and Sister Braby and the Lamoni Fire Department what might have been a serious conflagration was soon brought under control and the flames extinguished. At no time was there any real danger to the inmates of the home, and all remained calm. Next morning everyone came down to breakfast and expressed appreciation for the preservation of their home by singing a hymn of thanks. The damage done to the building is covered by insurance.

Dates Coincide in This Instance

On Christmas Day, Pastor John F. Sheehy married a young couple in Independence, Miss Marian Alice Barnard and David R. Conyers. The ceremony was solemnized on the bride's birthday and she was twenty years old. It was also her mother's birthday, Mrs. Ralph M. Barnard, and she was married on Christmas Day when she was twenty years old. The bridegroom is the son of Elder and Mrs. Roy L. Conyers, of Lamoni.

Sister J. A. Gunsolley Suffers Broken Arm

As Sister J. A. Gunsolley stepped out of Brockton, Massachusetts church, the evening of December 4, she slipped on the icy step and fell, breaking the large bone in the left arm just above the wrist. She was taken to the hospital at once, and the bone set. "She has been doing well and will soon be on the job again," writes her husband.

Progress in Wales

The church is making progress at Llanelly, Wales. Each week meetings are well attended by members and friends, and labors of past years are now bearing fruit.

Recent Travels of Elder V. D. Ruch

Elder V. D. Ruch, lone missionary to Scandinavian countries, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, has recently been traveling from one small group of Saints to another and visiting isolated members. His purpose has been to cheer, exhort, advise, and assist the members in every way. During November and early December he visited Porsgrunn, Kraegero, and Arendal, Norway. During his absence from Oslo, local priesthood members carried on the branch work.

L. G. Holloway Helps Iowa Branch

New growth of interest and progress in local work have come about at Clinton, Iowa, as a result of two weeks of special meetings conducted there some weeks ago by Elder L. G. Holloway, of the quorum of seventies. Pastor C. A. Beil is maintaining the interest aroused by Brother Holloway, by means of special missionary services each Sunday evening. A number of nonmembers are regular attendants.

Independence Workers to Be Busy

Already Independence is preparing for the "coming General Conference of the Church." Officers and organizations are turning attention to the business of acting as host to the large gathering of church representatives which will arrive early in April.

In addition to this, the center place has a program of its own to carry out before spring. This schedule includes among other undertakings, the following:

The city-wide missionary campaign which was launched December 31, to continue until January 14.

The Messiah Choir and other singers will begin rehearsing on January 7, the oratorio, "The Elijah," to be given at General Conference.

The women's department will continue its study of better and happier homes, assisting the church with relief work and taking up its sacrifice offering.

Boy and girl organizations will be busy getting themselves in shape to enjoy the spring and summer months most effectively.

The young people's council will sponsor its third dramatic contest of the city, March 5, 6, 8, and 9.

The Present Moment

(A Dramette in Three Acts)

ACT I

Time—The present Holiday Vacation.

Place—The Tilton living room, Greenburg.

Carl Tilton, age twenty: "Aw, come on, don't be such a grind! Be a sport and join us down at the lake! Can't you remember it's vacation time?"

Horace Tilton, age twenty-three (tearing his attention from a brown volume in his hand): "Thanks, hate to be a poor sport even in your opinion, but I gotta get this required stuff for English literature off my mind. Bess understands why I'm staying home this afternoon, and that's all that matters."

Carl: "You certainly do manage to miss more fun with your Present Moment business, and, take it from me, it won't get you any friends either." (Hastily donning heavy white sweater, leather jacket, and slinging skates over his shoulder.) "Well, I promised Louise I'd be by for her by four, so ta, ta."

ACT II

Time—Five minutes after Carl's airy departure.

Place—Same as above.

Horace (dropping the volume into his lap): "So I'm a poor sport am I because I stay in and use some of my holiday time to tuck away some Browning and Tennyson and Byron in this cranium of mine? Gee—and how I would love to be out on that ice this very minute! But Bess understands—"

(Telephone rings)

Horace answers: "Oh, you, Bess. . . . A waffle party. (groans) I'd love to—you know I'm crazy about waffles! Young woman, I believe you're trying to lure me away from my cherished study! . . . For all the skaters on the lake? . . . Sorry, Bess, I know I sound like a crumb and imbecile, but I've got two hundred pages yet to read today—and it's not easy reading. I just can't get all this stuff in with my laboratory work at school. Won't you let me off this time? . . . I'd rather come over tomorrow evening, conscience free, and see you alone—a lot rather."

ACT III

Time—Tomorrow night.

Place—Bess Brewster's living room.

Horace Tilton (looking down at Bess as she plays the piano): "Have you ever heard of the Present Moment, Bess?"

Bess (looking up at him and smiling): "Present moment—I ought to. Mother's always talking about doing this

I will start anew this morning with a higher, fairer creed;

I will cease to stand complaining of my ruthless neighbor's greed;

I will cease to sit repining while my duty's call is clear;

I shall waste no moment whining and my heart shall know no fear.

I shall not be swayed by envy when my rival's strength is shown;

I will not deny his merit, but I'll strive to prove my own;

I will try to see the beauty spread before me, rain or shine;

I will cease to preach your duty, and be more concerned with mine.

—Church Management

and doing that and availing yourself of every opportunity. She holds you up as a model of ambition and achievement. She's as proud of your record at college, Mister Assistant Chemistry Instructor, as I am. Mother's no person to pine over the past, and while she has plans for the future, she lives her life in the present."

Horace (looking at her with admiration): "Your mother reminds me of Sarah Doudney's poem:

'Listen to the water-mill;
Through the livelong day,
How the clicking of its wheel
Wears the hours away!
Languidly the autumn wind,
Stirs the forest leaves,
From the field the reapers sing,
Binding up their sheaves;
And a proverb haunts my mind
As a spell is cast—
"The mill cannot grind
With the water that is past."

'Learn to make the most of life,
Lose no happy day;
Time will never bring thee back
Chances swept away!
Leave no tender word unsaid,
Love while love shall last—
"The mill cannot grind
With the water that is past."'"

Bess (rising, says hastily): "Who'd ever expect you to burst into poetry? Careful, Horace. (More seriously.) But you are too serious—you miss a lot of fun. Carl says you grub and grub at school and seldom have time to play."

Horace: "While Carl, on the other hand, plays and plays at school and seldom has time to grub. Poor fellow, he's losing out, I'm afraid. His grades are low—he just doesn't seem to know how to apply himself, and that job I got him, well, he let it go."

Bess: "How odd! Only last night Carl was audibly calling you a poor fellow!"

Horace (impatiently): "Carl reminds me of the grasshopper in the fable. Don't you remember the one that danced and danced and had a glorious time all summer, never thinking of the winter to come. And when the cold winds blew, his neighbor, industrious Mr. Ant, who all summer had been storing up necessities and comforts for winter, retired into his house, and Mr. Grasshopper grew chilly."

Bess (breaking into his story): "Of course I remember—we had that in the fourth grade. And when Mr. Grasshopper grew very cold and uncomfortable, he went to Mr. Ant's door and knocked loudly." (Here she paused to punch a pillow on the davenport. "But I didn't like the way that hard-hearted ant called out: 'You had such a good time all summer, playing and dancing, why don't you go out and dance and keep yourself warm?'"

Horace: "I didn't either, but the first part of the story is quite lifelike. Right now Carl is doing his dancing. I am trying to lay up my store—I want to make such a record at school that I can continue in the department after my graduation this spring and as I begin work on my master's degree and later on my doctor's."

Bess (smiling fondly): "Ambitious creature! Well, I don't mind your big goals and ambitions. But; for goodness sakes, Horace, don't be self-centered. Self-centered people are abominable. You are right about your present moment idea—the present moment often determines how all our other moments are to be spent."

Horace (sighing with relief): "I knew you'd understand, Bess. You always do. (Putting his arm about her.) And since you agree with me so completely about the importance of the present moment, how about using that to consider the romantic proposition of becoming my wife when we both graduate next spring?"

Bess (blushing brightly): "Why, Horace, this is so sudden!"

Horace (calmly): "Not at all. This is just the Present Moment."

The Great Commission

Part Two

Radio Address by R. S. Salyards, Sr.

On last Sunday morning we spoke on the subject of the Great Commission, given by Jesus the Christ to his apostles after he arose from the dead, and which gave unto them authority and instructed them what to teach and preach—the gospel of the kingdom of God; the divine law which “all nations,” “every creature,” “in all the world,” were to be taught, and which all were to obey to obtain eternal salvation. We sought by many pointed statements made by the Savior and his apostles to make clear to the minds of our hearers that the gospel thus declared, is the eternal, immutable plan of salvation ordained of God. That it is “the perfect law of liberty” (James 1: 25); that it is the revelation of the “one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all” (Ephesians 4: 5, 6).

As previously stated, there are many loose notions and unfounded beliefs concerning religion; indeed, many seem to found such opinions concerning Christ and his gospel upon very indefinite, far-fetched, and unwarranted conclusions. It is and has always been very difficult to induce people to give to the word of God the examination that must be given it, if men and women are to base their faith upon a sound foundation. Israel of old became divided into sectarianism and was during the times of the prophets and of Christ in a condition of confusion and disunity. Jesus said of them: “Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men. . . . Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition. . . . Making the word of God of none effect through your traditions.” (Mark 9: 7-13.)

This was a strong indictment of Israel. They were “the chosen people”; they held themselves superior to the other nations; they said when Jesus spoke to them of their bondage to sin and tradition, “We be Abraham’s seed, and were never in bondage to any man.” To that Jesus replied, “to those Jews who believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free” (John 8: 31, 32). Those Jews who opposed Jesus were religious to the core; they were extravagantly religious; it was their life—they thought and talked and lived by scrupulous rules and regulations and supposed themselves to be the religiously elite, the paragons of religious exactitude, hence the special favorites of heaven. But Jesus denounced their pretensions, declaring them to be all out of the way and rejected of God because of their formalism and disobedience. He quoted to them the words of the prophet Isaiah; he said, “Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying, This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.” (Matthew 15: 7-9.)

We read what followed: “Then came his disciples, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the Pharisees were offended, after they heard this saying? But he answered and said, Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. Let them alone: They be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch” (Verses 12-14).

The words of Jesus were verified; for Israel rejected the Christ and the gospel taught by him, and were destroyed and their temple and their city and their land “left unto them desolate”; they were “scattered and peeled” because they would not repent and obey him whom God had sent to redeem them. Jesus foresaw all this, and wept over Jerusalem because they knew not “the things which belonged to their peace.” But he could not help them because, as he said, “Ye would not.” What an example for us! Saint Paul sums up the vicissitudes of the people of Israel and very cogently says: “Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted. . . . Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.”—1 Corinthians 10: 9-12.

Saint Paul, speaking of the preaching of the gospel by himself and his fellow ministers, said: “For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish: To the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life. . . . For we are not as many, which corrupt the word of God: but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ” (2 Corinthians 2: 15-17).

Let us note other definite and cogent statements of the word, which have bearing upon the great commission. These Scriptures refer to the commandments given by inspiration through the prophets, and Christ, and his apostles: Concerning the law given of God we quote thus:

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes."—Psalm 19: 7, 8.

According to this word, the gospel revealed through Christ, as stated by James, "is perfect." In the language of the wise man it is recorded that, "Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him. That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past." (Ecclesiastes 3: 14, 15.)

The law of the Lord is indeed perfect, immutable. It is to be noted that salvation is to be obtained by obedience to law. The law of the Lord cannot be changed or improved by man. No man dead or living, however great his name or reputation, has been or will ever be able to improve what God has established; nor has any man ever been ordained and appointed to set aside the appointments God has made. The wise man quoted rightly says that what God doeth shall remain forever; that men are not warranted in taking from or adding to it. And Jesus said, "If a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand" (Mark 3: 25). Good old Father Abraham Lincoln hunted through the Bible to find a principle upon which to found a policy by which to save the government when the South and the North were divided. He used the text just quoted, and thus by his strict adherence to the Constitution, the supreme law of the land South and North, he was able to succeed. God blessed his efforts and saved the nation because Lincoln and those who stood by the word were right. Men cannot be saved by resort to their own fallible, incompetent, disobedient methods, by adoption of other methods than those ordained of God. So doing they cannot succeed, but must, like the Jews, find their house left unto them desolate. It is the part of wisdom, of intelligence, of honor to God, to submit to God and honor his word.

Natural law, the laws of the universe, remain as ordained of God from the beginning. Man is not at liberty to change them; nor can he do so. All progress, all advancement in science, in everything, has resulted from conformity to all-pervading law. Why should men attempt to secure spiritual and moral salvation without study of and obedience to the gospel taught by Jesus Christ? The apostle consistently refers to the gospel as "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" (Romans 8: 2). He is right; and he designates all departures from it as "the law of sin and death."

But let us present other matter that has bearing upon the eternal verity of the great commission. We have a standard of truth in the word of God, hence every doctrine, every opinion, every religious tenet must be measured by that standard. If it fails to harmonize with it, it is error, no matter by whom or by how many believed. Remember the words of Jesus: "Every plant which my Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." Such is the inevitable fate of error; it will and must be rooted out and die.

Note this as a governing principle, given the people of God for their guidance and protection: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them" (Isaiah 8: 20). God did not leave his people without a standard by which to test all teaching and to detect evil.

"The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: but the word of our God shall stand forever" (Isaiah 40: 8). Will not the great commission stand forever under this rule?

"For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. . . . So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."—Isaiah 55: 8, 9, 11.

Here are some statements of Jesus, who is the Word, of whom John writes, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . In him was life; and the life was the light of men" (John 1: 1, 2, 4).

"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."—Matthew 24: 35.

"For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory."—Luke 9: 26.

"It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."—John 6: 63.

By apostles: "The word of the truth of the gospel" (Colossians 1: 5); "The grace of God in truth" (Verse 6); "If God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth" (2 Timothy 2: 25); "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth" (James 1: 18); "But the word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you" (1 Peter 1: 25).

Planning a Substitute

LARRY was rapidly learning how one quiet, self-possessed, thoughtful person who has an imagination can make her family and a large circle of friends happy by banishing boredom and ennui during leisure hours. In the days immediately following her mother's departure Carmen Blaine was making drastic changes in the routine of her household. And she was blossoming into a capable home-maker, a gracious hostess, and an understanding big sister. So adept a leader was she that the people about her seldom realized she was leading them.

Carmen was a genius at party planning, and Sallie Ruth's friends were not long in finding that out. She was quick at learning to play ping-pong, and liked guessing games, puzzles, and riddles. But her specialty was concocting little surprises of tidbits to eat, things to do. And always her affairs breathed a genial and homelike atmosphere.

Larry was included in the little informal socials and parties the Blaine girls had in their apartment. She was delighted that Carmen seemed to accept her as a sort of partner-sponsor in these events, and found herself feeling very much at home as she played checkers, popped corn, listened to the radio, played popular songs while the rest sang, or talked with this group of high school youngsters. Though at first their conversations and tastes made her feel very mature, she soon was able to meet on a common ground with them, and some of them she found very happy company. Many times the little group ended the evening with Carmen's delicious waffles drenched with rich maple syrup or honey. Sometimes when the crowd was feeling peppy and zestful, they danced, or played ping-pong. A few liked bridge, though there were seldom four "hands" present at the same time. Some were pinochle "hounds" as Jeff Porter, Sallie Ruth's latest boy friend, put it. Then there were always one or two sedentary souls who reveled in jigsaw puzzles.

They came and went as they pleased in the evening, and were not openly supervised or "bossed." Sometimes Eldred Hampton invited them all downstairs where there was more room for special entertainment. One evening they devoted to farce dramatics. At another time they made and pulled taffy, much to Aunt Annie's disgust the next day. Charades, under Doc's and Eldred's leadership, always proved interesting.

BUT THE BIGGEST CHANGE which followed Mrs. Blaine's departure was that which took place in Sallie Ruth. Under her sister's leadership she was acquiring really good manners. She was much less conceited. She was learning to be a gracious hostess. She was beginning to think of others before she thought of herself. Larry knew that the sisters frequently talked over household affairs; that Sallie Ruth was told that parties and refreshments cost money and that they had little money to spend. At this, and in order that the in-ately deceive me, and I know most of her time is taken up with keeping herself looking nice, studying, and entertaining. I hope when Mother comes back she won't find the child the obnoxious little social misfit and individualist she was. When she comes home from school, if it isn't her week to get dinner, she studies. And usually long before we're through with dinner some of her friends are coming in. Don't you think she is developing a rather quaint womanliness?"

"I think she's wonderfully improved."

"She's really a resourceful little thing when she realizes that it's just simply up to her to make a go of it. It's that initiative mother's very presence seems to take away from her."

It was not long until Sallie Ruth and her friends began to reciprocate Carmen's thoughtfulness and sponsorship. At first they offered her and Larry "lifts" in their cars down to the church, and then once in awhile they drifted in and stayed through a service. They offered to do errands. Some of the girls even helped Sallie Ruth give the apartment a thorough cleaning one evening after school.

One night Sallie Ruth accompanied her sister and Larry to young people's prayer meeting. After that she was seen with them more frequently. On Sunday when they were returning from the morning service, Sallie observed: "Carmen, darling, that suit you're wearing is getting pretty threadbare. How long have you had it?" And before Carmen had had time to answer, she offered to give her a blue suit which she herself had worn only a short time.

Next the W. H. Y. Class drew Sallie Ruth's attention. She and Jeff Porter joined, and a week later Larry learned that she had visited the Auditorium in an endeavor to locate the remnants of her class of three or four years ago.

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite frankly refuses to marry "Greg," Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him because she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household.

Tempted to attend a costume ball with Greg, Larry yields; her evening is ruined by the loss—or theft—of a valuable bracelet, an heirloom, belonging to Eldred Hampton. In the days of remorse that follow she criticizes herself, and decides to take a more active interest in church work.

Trying for a time to associate with Greg on a purely friendly basis, and trying to curb the development of his ardent affection, Larry finds herself failing. Love is too strong for her, and she feels herself being swept off her feet, against her will. It seems that she must either yield, or break with Greg and not see him for a time. She breaks with him, but is very unhappy over it. Greg makes no attempt to break his exile.

We now find Larry interested in her friend, Carmen Blaine, and the younger sister, Sallie Ruth. The mother, a frivolous spoiled woman, who was also spoiling Sallie Ruth, has gone on a vacation. Thankful for her absence, Carmen and Larry set about to reconstruct Sallie Ruth's life on more wholesome lines, with what begins to look like success.

formal entertainments at home might be continued, Sallie Ruth voluntarily cut her weekly allowance in half and offered to turn all her money over to Carmen for supervision. She wanted to learn to be a wise and frugal spender. She ceased to indulge in frequent fussings and coaxings for new clothes.

All this, Larry knew, Eldred Hampton watched with joy and satisfaction. Once coming in unexpectedly, she had heard Carmen and Eldred talking before they were aware of her presence. They were discussing Sallie Ruth:

"She hasn't been seeing this Bill person again?" Eldred's interest was avid.

"I don't think so, Mother Eldred. I don't believe Sallie Ruth would deliber-

I NDEED the transformation in Sallie Ruth Blaine seemed almost too good to be true. There was something about the change that made Larry very thoughtful and observant.

"You see," the girl confided to Larry one evening as she moved between cook table and stove, "I'm doing it for Carmen's sake. She's been awfully nice to me, and she seldom scolds when I bungle. She's not at all like mother. She just puts things out for me to do—and it's up to me to do them. She'll make a corking mother someday—and I hope she has a perfectly whopping family. I've wondered for quite a while, Larry, if my mother doesn't have a baby-daughter complex, and if she does, aren't I a sort of victim? I think I know other girls who are such victims too, victims of narrow-minded, selfish—"

"You're talking of your mother, my dear," reminded Larry.

"I know it," and the pretty mouth drooped. "I wish she was different, Larry. I'd so much rather have a real pal of a mother."

"But there's Carmen."

"Uhhuh, good old Carmen. She's a peach!" The elder sister was still at work and Sallie Ruth was preparing a tasty meal, a fish supper, she chose to call it. Larry had been invited to eat with them.

"I know Carmen loves you a lot, lady," the older girl quietly observed.

"Well, I love her a lot, too, I guess I've always had an awfully funny way of showing it. I wish conditions were such that she and John could be married right away. They deserve it—they've waited simply years! But John'll probably have a heck of a—I mean, an awful time, getting work, and in the meantime there's always Carmen's family to support." Then she was turning the fish rather fearfully for the fat was popping over the stove.

"It is hard to find work," Larry agreed after the noise had subsided. "I wish they could get married, too. It would help those two to have each other. They're so well matched. How much," she hesitated—she really had no right to ask this: "How much would you be willing personally to sacrifice, Sallie Ruth, in order that she might do that?"

"A lot, Larry," soberly. "I'm having a hard time making people believe it, but I'm tired being the baby-child. I want to grow up. I want a job. I wish mother would cut out this everlasting you're-too-young-stuff. Some day it's going to drive me batty!"

Larry was glad for the new whirl of social life the Blaines and their friends afforded her. She found relief in continuous activity, anything to keep her mind off of Greg. She was becoming fairly accustomed to his not being about nowadays. He had not called. He had not written. And after the first week, she ceased to expect him to. He had taken her at her word. Nevertheless, when there was a lull in things that were happening at home and at work, she often found herself conjecturing just what Greg was doing, how he was getting along in school, where he went to church—for she had not seen him at the Stone Church, and since their parting she had attended there more regularly than ever. They could not have been more completely separated had he been at one side of the earth, and she at the other.

ON ANOTHER EVENING when Carmen was working late, Larry and Sallie Ruth were exchanging confidences. In the last three weeks Larry had learned to like Sallie Ruth. She was intrigued as she watched the "unlovely"

Eldred Hampton had mentioned become the "lovely." They found many things to talk about.

"Do you know, Larry," Sallie Ruth's blue eyes danced happily, "I'm making better grades this semester than I ever did before. I believe it's because I have a regular time to study."

"That's grand, young lady, I'm proud of you."

"And did you see me play that game of ping-pong with Jeff last night? He says I'm getting to be a whiz. I make even him fight to hold his own. He and I haven't been to a show for two weeks. With everything around here, and Carmen's ideas, we just don't seem to have to go out anywhere for fun. And did you hear that crazy play over the radio last night?—No, that must have been after you left. We nearly spilt laughing."

"I heard something nice about you today, Sallie Ruth," Larry offered.

"Who from?"

"A man."

"A man! O-o-o, tell me quick!" and she dropped down on the arm of Larry's chair, "Who was he, and what did he say?"

"He said that you were growing to be one of the most gracious young ladies he knows."

"Ge-e-e!" the exclamation was ecstatic.

"Who said that?"

"Mr. Horace Peterson."

"Aw, that old stick!"

"What?"

"Well—er, I mean, that quiet old thing. I hardly know him."

"But he knows you pretty well. He's a very observant chap, and we happened to be discussing you the other day, and he just said that you seemed to have the capacity for more grace and charm than he had ever given you credit for."

"I guess I have given people some pretty awful impressions."

"But you're growing up now. They notice the improvement," encouraged the other.

The younger girl's brow was clouded, and she said nothing.

"Don't let it worry you, my dear," cheered Larry. "You're doing fine."

"Oh, it wasn't that. I was thinking of something else. There's something I'm a little worried about, Larry," tremulously confessed Sallie Ruth. "I don't know if I ought to tell you or not—you won't tell anyone, will you? Not even Carmen? I wouldn't want her to know for the world. She'd be so disappointed in me."

The speaker dropped a slender arm down about Larry's shoulders and squeezed her convulsively. After a moment's silence she went on: "I saw Bill Heckel today."

"Why don't you want Carmen to know?"

"She—she doesn't like him." That was true. Larry had heard Carmen's story—and it was a very short one—of the attention this young fellow of questionable character and career, had paid Sallie Ruth. He was older than the girl by at least ten years, and had encouraged her to meet him on out-of-the-way street corners. Several months before he had been apprehended in a car stealing episode, and though it was found that he was not one of the thieves, his association with undesirable characters had not left his police court record absolutely clear. Sallie Ruth's friendship with this young fellow had been a source of great worry to Carmen.

"Then why do you see him if Carmen doesn't like him, Sallie Ruth?"

"Larry, all the awful things they say about him aren't true." The young voice vibrated with protest. "They're lies! He's awfully nice, but people just misunderstand him. Even his folks don't understand him—they're ashamed of him, and the poor boy doesn't have anyone to turn to. I guess that's why he turns to me so easily." So that was his ruse, working on the child's pity! "I can't turn him down when everyone else is stepping on him. Don't you see, Larry? Don't you?"

"Yes, I think I do," slowly returned Larry, but she did not tell Sallie Ruth just what she saw. Instead she asked a question: "But don't you think you're doing a mighty risky thing, meeting him against Carmen's wishes and your own good judgment?"

The younger girl bit her lip, hesitated. Larry went on: "What if someone were to find out that you're still meeting him? It's a little shady, my dear—"

"That's what worries me, Larry. I wish I could stop. But when he looks at me and says: 'Sweetie, meet me at such-and-such a place at such-and-such a time,' why, I just go."

Larry was thinking rapidly. What could she do? She had promised not to betray the girl's confidence, and yet here was something that must be stopped.

"Oh, Larry, don't—don't think anything bad about me! I'll swear there's never been anything like that. You don't think—"

"Of course I don't silly, I was thinking of something else. I was thinking how horrible Carmen would feel, how crushed she would be, if anything were to happen to you."

The girl dropped her head.

"You see, dear child," Larry pursued, "when a girl risks her reputation as you are risking yours, she hasn't herself alone to consider. She has her family. And don't you realize that in your particular case if anything were to happen to you now, your mother would forever hold Carmen responsible when she doesn't know the least thing about it. Do you think you are being fair—"

"I tell you, Larry, it's not a question of fairness!" fiercely. "If I could stop meeting Bill, I would. I don't want Jeff or Carmen—I don't want anyone to know I meet him. The only reason I told you

WE BELIEVE

II—"In Jesus Christ"

A Short Radio Talk by L. L.

"We believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Savior of all men who obey the gospel."

So reads the second statement in the beliefs of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Some of our friends will ask us, "Does it make any difference what a man believes, so long as he lives a good life?" And we answer that a man cannot live a good life without some belief. His belief determines whether his road into the eternal tomorrow leads up or down. No matter what he is or does today, or on what plane he lives, the right beliefs are an impelling power to make him better, do better, and raise himself into a higher sphere of life and action. Elbert Hubbard once phrased the thought in his characteristically vigorous language: "No man is eternally damned as long as he tries." The man who tries is motivated by a superior belief. The belief is essential. Right living cannot even begin without right believing. That is why Jesus once asserted to his followers: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." The man without belief shall be lost, simply because, being without moral and spiritual guideposts, he will wander and lose himself. Jesus was not stating a violent judgment against men; he was merely observing a plain and reasonable fact. The man without belief will be lost.

Therefore, we believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God. We believe in him because he represents the highest attainable human ideal. We believe in him because he is the most influential philosopher the world has ever produced; for he has captured the imaginations and influenced the lives of many generations of men, and his philosophy, far from being forgotten in the dusty recesses of the scholar's library, is a living message to every age. We believe in him because he is the greatest and most thorough humanitarian of history. He bequeathed to men not a wealth of gold wrung from his fellow men, nor stolen from captive nations, soon to be dispersed; nor great buildings that would inevitably decay, but the vaster riches of imperishable thought, ideas and ideals, as valuable to one generation as to another, according to the use they shall make of them. We believe in him because in discipleship to him, we have entered the happy fellowship of those who through him have hope of a better way of life here, and of everlasting life hereafter. We believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

The world can never forget the story of what happened at the time Jesus arose from the waters of baptism wherein he had been buried by the hands of John the Baptist. Immediately as he came out of the water, John, seeing with the spiritual eye, beheld something that had never before passed into the range of his vision. He understood that the light which he saw descending upon Jesus was the Spirit of God, and he employed a simile of the most beautiful and graceful flight that he had ever known to describe that descent. He "saw the spirit of God descending like a dove" the Scripture tells us, and anyone who has watched the flight of that graceful bird will understand why John chose it for his figure of speech. Then John heard a voice from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." And from that testimony and many others of like character, even testimonies that are given in our own day, we believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

Saint John tells us that Jesus himself declared, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." The atheist may attack that statement as egotistical. But it is not. It is a plain statement of fact. No man can understand God, the Father, without first understanding Jesus. If he does not see Jesus, he can in no manner hope to see God. Perfection in Divinity can only be comprehended through perfection in humanity. Jesus alone among men attained perfection. The way to know God, and the only way, is to know Jesus. No man can come to God without understanding him, certainly. Hence Jesus is essential. For this reason, too, we believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

We believe in Jesus the Christ because of his great goodness. We can believe in any one because of his great goodness. For that reason we believe in Lincoln; we believe in Washington, and we believe in certain political and scientific leaders of our own day because in them we find greatness combined with goodness. Jesus possessed greatness combined with goodness, (Continued on page 20.)

Trials . . . . .

By B. H. Thomas

TRIALS must come to us all. Man cannot be perfected without them. We often hear it said, "Why must I go through this?" and of course, if we knew, the real good could not come from the trial. The change or refinement would be hindered. Too often, we try to see our way, and our way is not always wise. Then, too, we often fail to see the good that comes from being tried and the cause of being tried, we will never fully understand, this side of the millennium.

Every member of the church should be thankful for the light he has already received. Without that light, the sorrows of life would be indeed most bitter.

We should learn and never forget that the only way to go through a trial, is to make a full surrender to the change. We should never allow any trial to make us bitter. God may have a certain important work for us to do and he wants first to soften our hearts with a trial, because he who is not humble and full of love, cannot assist in His work. It requires good tools with the right temper to do the Lord's work and even though the clouds be dark and our trials hard to bear, we should smile through them all, and when suffering seems the hardest, we should not forget to pray and lose ourselves in service to others, because the real fruits of being tried, will come only after we have gone through it all and emerged the victor. There is one thing certain: we must all be tried. God has said he would have a tried people. The soul belongs to Him who gave it. The great refiner has said, "I will refine them as silver is refined."

It is another kind of a trial to be left alone without the kindling influence of God's spirit. After we have been tried, we must be tested to prove our stamina and it seems that Satan knows when we are left alone, because he is always near to tempt us. The attitude of Christ was to pray. Perhaps the darkest hour in the life of Christ was when he said, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Even with all his spirituality, he was tried to the utmost. When we are left entirely alone, our own decision determines our course and if we turn back, of what value are we to a work which offers so great a prize?

Great must be the strength of unity when one poor soul is being tried that others would come and offer cheer and comfort. Only after we have gone through the furnace, can we fully sympathize and feel sorry for others. Through every trial, we should maintain our balance and never allow it to sour our outlook on life. Every trial has a mission to teach us the finer things of life, but we often forget to pray and the lesson is unlearned.

It takes tremendous heat to melt the gold to liquid so the dross can be removed, which makes the metal pure and attractive. When life is like a song and things go along smoothly, we seem to forget our responsibilities and often without our knowledge, we permit the worldly things to darken our character. It is another kind of trial that is brought about to make us conscious of these things and cause the heat of the trial to consume the dross. Again this is accomplished only when we go through the trial as we should. All our trials could be made easier by loving and serving each other and driving the sorrows away. It is one thing to show the silver lining and another to turn it inside out. The rise of the church will be measured by its strength of unity.

Trials are blessings in disguise and if you haven't been tried, it is a sure sign you will be. "Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth." Only big souls have soft hearts. That is the quality that makes them big. Old age would be indeed cold and dreary if our emotions and affections were allowed to dry up for want of being tried. We are not in this life to play. God wants us to grow. The strength of character can only be brought about through the elimination of weakness. Spirituality requires purity.

In the growing of a great oak, it is often tried by strong winds blowing it back and forth to strengthen its branches and loosen the soil around the roots to help make the tree grow. It is necessary for the diamond to have its corners knocked off in order to bring out its brilliance. Would you be a diamond in the rough? When in sorrow, think of the victory you can gain. Every trial must have an end. Smile until it arrives. To grow big is hard, but to stay big is harder. God knows what is best for us and our attitude should be: "on with the heat treat and the fiery furnace" and like Brother Job, remain faithful.

Astrology and Religion

By S. A. Burgess

PROBABLY few of our readers are concerned with the subject of astrology and its history, let alone its relation, if any, to religion, but some have written in and requested that the subject be fairly presented.

There is not agreement among historical writers as to when and where the study of the stars first started. It is clear that in the valley of the Euphrates there are records going back on the cuneiform tablets to 2400 years B. C. and certainly to the reign of Khammurabi.

The study of the stars was also early taken up in India and in China and Egypt. Some find a much earlier time than above set forth in Egypt because of the manner in which the pyramids are built, that one particular passageway may have acted as a telescope pointing to the North Star many thousands of years ago. Some have been much taken with these figures concerning the great pyramid as well as the other pyramids and have failed to note that commentators do not agree either as to the size or the significance of the measurements. There is much of interest to the careful student who will reserve his opinion until all the facts are in. There is evidence of an early interest in the stars in all of these countries and of an early knowledge of their movements.

The length of the year was determined before the time of Christ at 365 $\frac{1}{4}$  days. The procession of the equinox was also noted. As to the time and place of this origin of knowledge of the stars, we are still left in part to speculation, but it seems clear that the present system of measurements came to us from Babylon.

The dividing of the heaven into twelve houses, 360 degrees to a circle, 60 seconds to a minute, 60 minutes to an hour, 24 hours to a day—these figures based upon the six and ten appear very clearly to have had their origin among the Chaldeans in Babylon. And also it is there that the study of astrology was first taken up. With this in general the encyclopedias agree. The Encyclopedia Britannica, 14th edition, states that astrology was to be found in Greece as early as the fourth century B. C., in Rome before the time of Christ, among the Arabs from the seventh to the thirteenth century and in western Europe in the fourteenth and fifteenth century.

Many authorities could be cited, but for convenience we use these encyclopedias which are generally accessible. Thus we find among many writers discussion of moon and sun worship in antiquity and also of star worship. The argument is made that man would note readily how dependent he is upon the heavens over him for sunshine and rain to cause the crops to grow, that storms and hurricanes also come from the heavens. None seemed to mention then, but we know too today, that the sun and especially the moon have a profound effect upon the tides of the sea. Some even today will say that certain crops should be planted in the dark of the moon.

ANCIENT ASTROLOGY was concerned only with the public welfare, and in connection with that the lives of its kings. This it is stated arose partly from observation and partly from association. If a new moon behind a cloud was followed by a victory, whenever such a new moon appeared behind a cloud it was considered a good omen. When the new moon appeared earlier than it was expected that was taken as a bad omen. It is evident that they had noted the difference between the fixed stars and the planets and five of the planets were definitely named and believed to be ruled by one of their gods. Incidentally, as we have pointed out, many years ago the names of the days of the week were taken directly from this astrological observation as each was supposed to be ruled by the deity of its particular star. Thus the planet we call Jupiter was governed by Marduk; Venus by Ishtar; Saturn, Ninib; Mercury, Nebo; and Mars, Nazar.

Right here we find it directly connected with the Pagan religion of the times. Astrology was one of the two forms of divination in Babylon. The other was to observe the liver of the sacrificial victim. The location of these five planets, the sun and moon, was supposed to indicate the will of the gods. A god was appointed to govern each of the twelve houses of the zodiac. Each god was considered to be strongest when his planet was in his own house of the zodiac. The signs of the zodiac affected certain animals, each house having its own animal. Jupiter was a favorable planet, Saturn unfavorable, though the meaning of each depended upon the house in which it was found.

The planets also had a particular color which was ascribed to each. Saturn was associated with gray and with the metal lead; Mars with red; Jupiter, white; Venus, yellow. Mercury was the planet par excellence and associated with quicksilver; the sun, gold; the moon, silver. Quicksilver being both solid and liquid was considered especially precious.

When astrology reached Europe it became what was called "judicial" astrology to distinguish it from natural astrology concerned only with the events of nature. In astrology as it has come down to today a horoscope is drawn with twelve divisions or houses. The first house is from twenty-five degrees below the eastern horizon to five above. That is ascendancy and is the house of life. The horoscope is drawn at the moment of birth or when the question is first asked. Some attempted to draw the horoscope at the moment of conception, but this is so difficult that usually the basis is the time of birth. The twelve signs of the zodiac appear in their order and the planets, sun and moon are placed according to their location and right ascension or declination.

The twelve houses are in order—1. life, 2. riches, 3. brethren, 4. relations, 5. children, 6. health, 7. marriage, 8. death, 9. religion, 10. dignities, 11. friendship, and 12. enemies.

It may be noted in passing that a number of words are based upon this past belief in astrology, such as saturnine, jovial, mercurial, consider, disastrous.

In Europe the Catholic church repeatedly opposed astrology, but at the same time many of its leading dignitaries studied and used it. It was taught for a time in the oldest universities but with the coming of the renaissance and the copernican theory astrology became impossible for scientific men to believe or accept.

TODAY there are two distinct branches, one is the solar astrology, taking the sun as the point of observation. In this each house governs in turn for a month and we will see write-ups in the paper of persons born between the 21st of January and the 20th of February who possess certain characteristics. A moment's thought should show one that this would mean that everyone born in the same month all over the world would have the same destiny, and that very clearly is not true. The geocentric astrology depends upon the location of each of the signs of the zodiac and of form and movement of the planets at the moment of birth with regard to the earth. So the daily changes are very numerous.

When Uranus was discovered it was added by astrology to the horoscope, and then in turn Neptune. We do not know but possibly some attempt to add Pluto may be made though each of these three stars are too recently known for their supposed properties to be well established in tradition. With geocentric astrology a difference of a few minutes in birth may change the appearance somewhat of the horoscope and may cause a dominant planet to pass from one house to another. Also it is not repeated from year to year. The variations will be countless in number.

But we hardly need add that there exists not the slightest of evidence in a scientific or thoughtful way that any of these stars affect in any way the life of the individual.

The sun does have much to do with the growing of grain; the moon affects the tide. All have a smaller or larger effect upon the earth as a whole, but there is no further reason for believing that they affect or can affect the life of an individual.

FORECASTING in any of its forms will always report a certain degree of fulfillment according to the laws of chance. By remembering the time and points of fulfillment and ignoring the failures, there may grow up some traditions of passing accuracy.

We have talked with some excellent men who have spent many years in drawing horoscopes for recreation and who have written many forecasts on birth and other occasions, but quite uniformly they have told us that they can see no possibility of it having any real meaning. One man, self-educated, who had worked with astrology for over forty years, but also had made a careful study of astronomy and other sciences informed us, that from observation one could get as accurate a forecast by dividing a sheet of paper into twelve squares or drawing a figure and dividing it into twelve, and then making dots just as long as one felt like making them with his eyes shut, and then counting the dots in each square. There exists no scientific authenticity whatsoever for astrology. It has been associated, however, with a growing knowledge of astronomy, which is of increasing importance in navigation and other departments of science, and which is really quite a wonderful study.

Today astrology is still accepted in parts of Asia and Africa, but is not seriously considered by thinking people in Europe or America.

But we are asked concerning its relation with religion. As pointed out, in origin and in its early history it was closely related with pagan worship, and the planet's name was supposed to be the representative of a heathen deity and representing his or her especial influence.

So far as the Bible is concerned, it appears to have been written in good part with the idea that the earth was flat. Many statements are made concerning the stars and many of the constellations are named. The bright and morning star is believed to be Venus. Reference is made to Arcturus, the Pleiades, the Hyades, and Orion. And Bible commentaries refer to the pagan story that Orion is a great giant put in chains by the gods, hence who can "break the bands of Orion." Venus is believed to be referred to in (Continued on page 21.)

Thought Provokers

Duty to Country

(From a sermon by Elbert A. Smith on "What Latter Day Saints Believe." Notes by the Roving Reporter.)

WE HAVE some very definite and perhaps unique ideas about America. . . . In the Book of Mormon we are told that America is the choice land of liberty. It is said to be the intent of God that people living here shall be free and that if ever they should be brought down in bondage, it will be because of their iniquity. This book tells us that God moved on Columbus to come across the great deep.

We as a people have a religious background for our feeling of patriotism; have religious convictions to color our attitude toward citizenship, and furthermore through latter-day revelation we are told: "It is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood." (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10.)

We are told also: "Concerning the laws of the land, it is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them, and that the law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting the principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me." (Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2.)

Another injunction has the Lord given us concerning the law of the land: "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land." (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.)

IN TIMES OF PEACE it is young people who move into new and undiscovered fields of endeavor. In time of war young men are quick to answer their country's call. . . . We shall expect our young people to be very wise in making this response and not to become involved in other people's conflicts, and certainly not in a war of aggression.

"The next war," says one, "will be the uniform exhaustion of humanity."

Lloyd George said: "A new chapter is open in the history of Europe, and the world with a climax of horror such as mankind has never yet witnessed."

THE APOSTLE PAUL describes our condition in these words: "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." (Ephesians 6: 12-16.)

In this conflict young people will find already constructed for them four citadels of strength—the Home, the School, the State, and the Church.

THE APPEAL that we have to make to the Church in relation to Nation, State, and city, is that it shall promote honest citizenship—just common honesty and adequate courage to be honest in business, in office, or wherever men shall be; to bring good citizens to the State, men and women who are not for sale. . . . The safety of America rests on the basis of her citizenship.

The United States Navy says: "We do not want boys who are sent to us to be reformed. We want fine young fellows who come out of good homes."

Science without religion whose essence is service, will only prove destructive to the human race.

RELIGION gives to young people the spiritual foundation on which to base citizenship, and their best contribution is to rally one hundred percent to the support of the church, to live in harmony with its teachings, and to exemplify its principles in their lives.

The times call for young men and women not only trained but consecrated. The world is going to be made over. We who are older have seen it made over physically, and it will be made over spiritually after some sort of pattern. It is your privilege to see that that pattern is the one Christ laid down. You young people of the church are to have a leading part in making over the world. May God bless all of you and help you to develop into good citizens in his kingdom and in your native land—America.

Faith of some sort, if only faith in our own parentage, or in the skill of the subway motorman, is absolutely essential for life. And religious faith is the only solution we have for the knottiest problems confronting us—suffering and death. To men of faith it is given not only to conquer the citadels of heaven, but also to rule their lives on earth so as to get the most out of the endowments they have received.—J. Elliot Ross, in Truths to Live By.

Grateful for Small Things

By John Sheehy

How many things there are for which we should be grateful? So blessed are we with God's bounties that frequently we fail to render proper thanks. For example, let us think of the blessing of water, good, clean water.

When I was in the State of Maine I went fishing for three or four days with men who made their living by fishing. No pleasure excursion, this, for those men; it was a part of their week's work. Now I drank water at meals and between meals, but the fishermen drank tea—strong tea. I might not have objected to drinking tea, but I certainly did object to the way they made it.

Here is their recipe. On Monday morning they washed out the eight-quart teapot, put in a handful of tea and filled the pot up with water. Then they put it on the fire to boil and boil. And during the day, whenever they were thirsty, they went down for a cup of tea. By night the pot was empty. Next morning, another handful of tea went into the pot and more water. More boiling. Wednesday the story was the same, and Thursday likewise and so on until the next Monday morning when the week's accumulation of tea leaves was thrown out, and the whole process begun again.

Now these fellows knew that I drank nothing but water, but they were like most people—they loved a practical joke. On the last day out they filled up the teapot, and when I was not looking, dumped the rest of the water overboard.

Unless you have never been thirsty in the midst of a great desert or a great ocean, you cannot appreciate the anguish of real thirst; you cannot know how thirsty one can become on the Atlantic Ocean. There we were surrounded by water, but not a drop of it could I drink—one just doesn't drink ocean water. I went as long as I could, but before night that tea tasted mighty good!

We are the recipients of God's many blessings. We never will be able to pay him for his goodness to us. No matter how much we tithe, we will not be able to pay the church. If we pay our tithes with the idea that we are repaying God in money for the blessings he has given us, we are making a mistake. We cannot begin to pay God for his kindness. We can't even do that to men. Paying tithing will not condone for lack of humble faith in God. We can, however, be grateful and evidence our gratitude in service.

QUESTION TIME

May Saints be required to pass before the altar for the sacrament?

The church has never made such a requirement, and to do so might cause infirm members much inconvenience, and might be objected to by others who prefer the method of administration observed by the church for a hundred years or more. It does not appear wise to require such a method as noted in the question, though a branch might possibly decide to try that form for some reason or other. However, I see nothing in it that would violate the purpose of the sacrament, and if all present desired to come before the altar when partaking, there is no rule against it so far as I know, unless Conference Resolution 401 could be construed to imply otherwise in the statement:

"That we go upon record as believing that the act of conveying the emblems to those partaking forms a part of the work of 'administering the sacrament,' etc.

This resolution does not appear to have that point in mind, however, and probably it would be conceded that the term "conveying" applies to passing the emblems to the communicant.

Has a woman branch solicitor authority to teach the financial law?

The office of a solicitor does not require ordination to the priesthood, hence does not convey priesthood rights. However, one appointed to any duty or office is empowered of necessity and by virtue of the appointment to perform the work incidental to that position. To teach or explain anything to an individual who might desire information necessary to making a proper distinction as to the nature of his contribution, or other points involved in the matter of contributing, would doubtless at times form a reasonable part of the task assigned, and should in such cases be performed to the best of one's ability, whether the officer be a man or a woman. If unable to explain the matter, however, appeal should be made to the branch officer in charge for advice in the matter.

Is it advisable for our branch pastors to join the Ministerial Alliance?

In several instances our elders have joined the Ministerial Alliance with good results. In some cases it has caused a better feeling to exist between ministers of other faiths and our own, and they have obtained a clearer understanding of our religion and the goals we seek to reach. Some very friendly contacts have in this way been established, and as the Alliance does not require any minister to subscribe to anything contrary to his own Christian views, but is designed to secure better cooperation of all in promoting faith in Christ and performing benevolent or social work for the common good, there might be much good done in this way. When such conditions exist, it would be a proper encouragement to join.

What is meant by Mark 9:43, "If thy hand offend thee, cut it off"?

This is explained in the Inspired Version to refer to unrepentant offenders who offend, presumably, against the divine law. It states:

"Therefore, if thy hand offend thee, cut it off; or if thy brother offend thee and confess not and forsake not, he shall be cut off."—Mark 9:40.

The term "cut it off" has been variously explained. It is translated from the Greek word apokopto, which is derived from two other words: apo, meaning "separation, departure, cessation," and kopto, meaning to "beat the breast in grief, cut down, mourn." Apparently it means to sever relations with the offender, and possibly may also imply a mourning for one lost.

Should children be forbidden to play dominoes or checkers on Sunday?

The purpose of the Sabbath is a day of rest, worship, and meditation on sacred things. The church is instructed that no necessary work on this day should be neglected, however, and that one should not judge harshly in this matter:

"Be not harsh in judgment but merciful in this, as in all other things. Be not hypocrites nor of those who make a man an offender for a word."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 7.

I know of no specific rule enacted by the church governing further than that which is revealed in the written word. But while we should teach our children to reverence sacred things and observe church laws divinely commanded, it does not seem advisable to prohibit innocent diversion on the part of children, if not indulged in to an offensive degree.

healed. Imagine the anguish of his heart as he set out upon his mission. Imagine the faith he exercised to continue in his purpose as he heard from time to time that the little daughter still suffered. Then one day came a message from home that she was much worse, the doctor held no hopes for her, he must come at once. In distant Philadelphia the minister-father dropped upon his knees and poured out his soul in a pleading prayer to God. In his pocket he had only seventy-five cents—he could not go home; he had not enough money and the time was too short. Then he arose with new assurance, and gladly spent sixty-five cents to send a message home. Next day word came back that the baby was better.

HIS WORK for the church carried this minister into many places. He met people in all walks and vocations of life; he made uncounted friends. At times when the church had not money to send him on his assignments, and he was deep in debt, he found it necessary to obtain work, but his missionary zeal was unabated—he was first and always a minister for Christ. Once he spent a season learning the weaving trade. He studied law. He did retail work for six years. He was a carpenter. He learned to play the clarinet.

He was the author of a book, Parsons' Text Book, and this is his story of its writing: "In my early ministry I wanted to be more methodical and systematic than some of the ministers, and I started a classified text book, writing in by pen what I thought would make the subjects clear. After many years Bishop E. L. Kelley persuaded me to have it published. He thought I was miserly in withholding from the ministry of the church the facts that I had accumulated to help me in my work. 'Well,' I said, 'I got these evidences and facts together, classified them to suit myself, and perhaps they would not be interesting to other ministers.' But Brother Kelley thought they would and advised me to send the manuscript to the Herald Office for publication. I received a letter stating that they had received the manuscript, and offering if I would send them a part of the cost of printing, to publish it. Of course, as a missionary since my twenty-fourth year, I had little. So I picked up the manuscript while attending General Conference, and Brother William Ayler furnished the money and the Ensign printed one thousand copies. When they asked me what the book's name should be I said: 'I have no boys to carry my name down the stream of time, so we will call it Parsons' Text Book.' And later I turned it all over to the church."

WHEN PLACED in charge of the Temple at Kirtland, Brother Parsons instituted a program of cleaning up and landscaping. He persuaded the owners of cows to stake their animals for grazing elsewhere than near the sacred building. With the assistance of local workers, he graded the Temple lawn so that water would run away from rather than toward the building. He put the ground in proper condition for seeding, set out ninety-five trees, sowed flower seeds, and improved the approach to the Temple grounds.

After eighteen years of service in the quorum of seventies, this man of method and accomplishment was ordained a high priest in 1900.

Soon after began the many labors which today endear Brother Parsons to the Saints who live in the center place. In Independence and Kansas City and vicinity, he was called to serve in many offices. Here are a few. He served as a counselor to the High Council, was a counselor to Brother F. G. Pitt, president of the high priests' quorum. Later was ordained to act as counselor to Bishop Roderick May, and spent much of his time representing the Bishopric. He was selected by Apostle Heman C. Smith, church historian, to act as historian in Independence Stake. He preached as often as time allowed, and early in 1903, he was helping in the Bishop's office, preparing for General Conference. He was foreman to look after repairs on and about the Stone Church building, and was selected as one of the reception committee to look after locating people who came. At different intervals he presided over Enoch Hill, Walnut Park, Liberty Street, and East Independence churches in Independence, was superintendent of the Stake Sunday School Association, was president of Holden Church, presided over Central Church, Kansas City, and served the church in other capacities too numerous to mention. Never did he lose an opportunity to explain the glorious gospel truths or to defend his faith.

AFTER the death of his friend and mentor, President Joseph Smith, Brother Parsons accepted the invitation of George Harrington, president of Independence Stake, to act as one of his counselors. He was also a member of the Sanitarium Board for a time and of the Order of Enoch Board.

But in the spring of 1922, the speed of his work was somewhat slackened by a failure of health, and though he continued faithfully, as strength permitted, to serve in Missouri and Iowa, he never regained his former health. But for more than eight years after the doctors advised him to get his business in shape, that he might be called away from mortal things at any time, this man of many works continued to serve the church. In his declining years paralysis kept him at home either in New Port Richey, Florida, or Elk Mills, Maryland, a large part of the time; but undaunted, he continued to keep in touch with the church and his friends. From that home went out hundreds of letters, explaining the gospel, especially emphasizing the Restoration and the teachings of Jesus. For more than fifty-three years he served the church, and then wrote, "only wish we had another fifty to put into it!"

His death occurred October 27, 1933, at Dumont, New Jersey. The funeral was held at Independence, Missouri, among his many friends, the Stone Church which he loved, being the scene of the last rites. He was buried in peaceful Mound Grove Cemetery.

THE GREAT COMMISSION

Jesus said: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. . . . Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it" (Matthew 7: 21, 24-27).

We could present much more to the same import. Surely men should heed the truth of his plain teachings; they should also be admonished by his solemn admonitions. Why should men contend against Jesus Christ, who, according to his own statements, spake as the Father commanded him, and who is himself the Truth? Shall it be said of any of us that, like the Jews, we reject his word that we may keep our traditions? Such rule would not work in our human affairs, for when men seek to be governed by erroneous interpretations of the law of the land, the law finds it necessary to condemn and punish. Then we have also those who have no regard for law in any sense, and are a law to themselves. The cause of all trouble, of all suffering and distress from the beginning of man's occupancy upon the earth is, disregard of and disobedience to law. That has been the root of all contention since the beginning: "For sin is the transgression of the law" (1 John 3: 4); and "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Romans 6: 23). Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again [or as the margin reads, "from above"], he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3: 3). The carnal man is unable to discern the things of God; he must become "the new man" if he would know spiritual things; hence Jesus said, further, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (verse 5). This is according to the great commission, in which Jesus commanded the disciples: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations [no nation excepted, not even the Jewish or the modern nations], baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe [that is, to do] all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen" (Matthew 28: 19, 20).

There is consistency in the entire teaching of Jesus. In the language of Saint Paul, "If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself" (2 Timothy 2: 13). The apostles were to teach the people, and the people were to obey or observe the teaching. The promise to be with them unto the end of the world was conditioned upon observance of the commission; there was no promise to the believer or to the church only upon such condition of observance. The word "and" is a conjunction and connects the promise with the command.

We are aware that some quote this promise to be with the church to the end as a warrant that the church would be accepted and blessed of God to the very end of time; but such conclusion does violence to the language quoted, and is out of harmony with the dealings of God with man in every age. All promises of God to Israel were conditioned upon obedience; and should God commit himself unconditionally, he would be under promise to be with the church whether right or wrong, whether in good or in evil. Dealing with his people Israel, God blessed when they observed his covenant, but punished and finally rejected them when they failed. And finally, because of their rejection of the Christ, the statement of Jesus was fulfilled; viz., "Jesus saith unto them, Did ye never read in the Scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes? Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. And whosoever shall fall upon this stone shall be broken: but upon whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. And when the chief priests and Pharisees had heard his parables, they perceived that he spake of them" etc. (Matthew 21: 42-45). Paul and Barnabas, when the Jews rejected their gospel teaching, said, "Seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles" (Acts 13: 46). Saint Paul in his Roman letter, chapter 11, comments upon the rejection of the gospel by Israel and the consequences that followed upon that people because of their failure to obey the truth.

In his Hebrew letter, in which he reviews the history of Israel, including their failure to measure up to their calling as the nation chosen to be representatives of the truth of God among the nations, Saint Paul writes thus to the church: "Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it" (4: 1, 2).

The world today has great reason to heed this admonition; for we are living in a day of testing and of proving. Men and women should seriously consider their obligations to God, to themselves, and their families. These are days of decision, and it is important that all see to it that they seek and find the truth as it is in God, that they may realize the blessings of life eternal promised in the commission; for obedience to the gospel therein declared brought and will bring the sure confirmation of the Holy Spirit promised to the obedient believer. We shall say more of this blessing in a later broadcast.

in a measure far surpassing all other human figures. Matthew wrote of him: "They brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatick, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them." Whether these people were possessed with devils, or whether they only thought they were, made little difference. They were spiritually and mentally sick; and Jesus healed them. And all through the life of Jesus we find the two associated traits of greatness and goodness. Wherever he has been, either in ancient or modern times, he has left the impress of these two qualities of character: greatness and goodness.

A belief in Jesus Christ is a fundamental of the supreme faith. It is essential to the highest type of human life. It is necessary to complete happiness. It is the perfect guide to life, and it is the perfect preparation for death, which is but the opening of a door to the greater and more abounding life that he has promised us. And Saint John's final word in his testimony of the work of Jesus was this: "And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written."

We believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God.

THE ROYAL ROAD

was just because I was worried and a little quivery inside about it. But there's nothing really bad about Bill. He's handsome and kind, and when I'm with him, I'm just not myself. His arms are so—so protecting—oh, Larry, say you understand, won't you?" and she buried her face in her hands. Sallie Ruth was crying; long, shuddering sobs.

Larry felt as though something sharp had stabbed into her heart. Why had the child mentioned protecting arms and asked if she understood? Ah, how well she did understand, she did not take time to analyze at that moment. Instead she put a comforting arm about the weeping girl, and drew her off the arm of the chair, down on her own lap. For a full moment she did not speak; she dared not trust her voice. At last she began:

"I don't want to betray a confidence, Sallie Ruth, but Carmen is a good friend of mine, and I think I should tell her—"

"Oh, you won't! You won't!" cried the younger girl. "I've done nothing wrong! Please don't tell her!"

"There's only one condition on which I won't tell her," Larry felt that she was taking an unfair advantage, but it was the only thing she knew to do. "And that condition is that you quit meeting him."

"I—I'll try to," she gulped after a moment; "but I hate to promise, Larry, because—well, when I see him, I just—melt."

"Will you quit meeting him if I promise not to tell Carmen?" Larry pressed the question.

"Yes—"

"Your word of honor?"

"I—I don't know if I can, honest, Larry," miserably.

"Do you have a date to meet him again?"

"Yes," reluctantly, and then, "day after tomorrow evening at eight o'clock. I didn't want to go so late, but he said he couldn't make it any earlier, but that he had to see me. I'm to be at the corner of Booker and Map Streets near that little old shoeshop." Fear mingled with hopelessness in the blue eyes, not a pleasant thing to see in one so young. Sallie Ruth was only seventeen.

"I'm glad you told me that, dear," Larry was very gentle. "Will you do something for me at eight o'clock day after tomorrow night?"

"But—and miss my date with Bill you mean?"

"I have an appointment to read to old Sister Scott who has been ill, from seven till eight day after tomorrow night, and I can't keep that appointment. I'll have to get someone to do it for me. Will you?"

"But, Larry, then I won't get to see Bill!"

"Do you remember your promise, darling?" The tear-wet face was hidden. Two hands clung to Larry's shoulders. "Do you think you should see him, do you?"

"No—" very faintly.

"Will you read to Sister Scott then in my place?"

"Y-yes."

THAT NIGHT Larry did not go to sleep for a long, long time. Wakefulness was growing to be a habit with her, but tonight for the first time in a month, she was not thinking of Greg. She was thinking of Sallie Ruth, of Bill Heckel and of herself. She was formulating plans. She wanted to talk to that young fellow; she wanted to tell him just where he could begin to withdraw his attentions from little high school girls. Was she clever enough to carry out her plan? Perhaps Eldred Hampton could help her—no, she had promised Sallie Ruth she would not tell. It was up to her to work out all the details of her plan alone. Could she do it? She would try.

ASTROLOGY AND RELIGION

Isaiah 14:12 in Lucifer, son of the morning; Saturn in Amos 5:26; also the reference in Acts 7:43 is considered probably to be Saturn; but we may well note that despite the reference to particular stars and to the starry heavens and sun and moon as a whole, that worship of these was plainly forbidden to the Hebrews, Deuteronomy 4:19, and its violation was clearly punished. See Jeremiah 19:13; Ezekiel 8:16; Acts 7:43 referring to Amos 5:26. There is not the slightest evidence in the New Testament that the Lord ever approved of such a practice. It is apparent that the stargazers (Isaiah 47:13.) and the astrologers (Daniel 2:20, 27; 4:7; 5:7, 11, 15.) were associated with the heathens' worship.

Israel was commanded not to be dismayed at the signs in the heavens. (Jeremiah 11:2.) Some writers state that some astrology was taken back to Judea after the captivity but this does not appear within the Bible. We may also note that Magus or Magi was generally taken in the Bible to represent a sorcerer, as Simon Magus, also Elymas (Acts 13:8.) which was another but equivalent term. But the Magi of early Matthew were taken to be wise men of the East.

THERE REMAINS—this one further theme—the Star in the East that brought the wise men to Jerusalem.

There has been a great deal written concerning this pro and con. Kepler who studied astronomy and also astrology expressed a belief that it was the conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn at the year 7 B. C. in the zodiac sign of Pisces or the fish which was taken to be the sign of Judea. It appears to be a matter of fact that these two planets were close together in May of that year. They came together again in October and for a third time in November. About the same time Mars was also in opposition to the sun and in conjunction with them. But this is stated to be the year 748 of Rome, while the first conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn was 747. Still a year's time would not have separated them very widely, let alone part of the year.

A large number of writers are referred to who state that there was a tradition in the East that the Son of God, the Messiah or a great personage would appear and that they were looking for his star or sign, and they had figured that he would appear towards the close of the reign of Herod and in the land of Judea. (McClintock Bible Encyclopedia et al.) This story was quite widely discussed for a time and it was further stated that when they left Jerusalem the conjoined stars rested over Bethlehem an hour and a half after sundown.

But critics now point out that some of the Roman writers ascribed these prophecies or stories to Vespasian who was born 69 A. D., further that since these planets were in opposition they could not have appeared due south an hour and a half after sunset, nor could they by any possibility have appeared over the house in which the child was laid, but that in fact their declination was 57 degrees. But even if overhead they could not have pointed to any house in Bethlehem. Other writers claim that in China there is found a record of a great comet appearing in the 750th year of Rome which was visible for seventy days.

We may well make the comment that no comet or star could have appeared and remained over any particular house, that Saturn and Jupiter would not have been sufficiently brilliant even in conjunction to have fulfilled the conditions. It is possible for a star to appear from a certain position to be over a certain house, but of course when the house is reached the star would appear to be beyond. Still one might take the first house as being the one. So far as this account is concerned it would seem to be best fulfilled, as has been stated of old, by a meteor or some remarkable phenomenon which while new would not be at all impossible.

Those who urge Kepler's story point out that it would have taken the wise men months to have made the journey and that these three scattered conjunctions would have allowed a sufficient interval.

DISCUSSING SUCH POINTS we should not lose sight entirely of the few fundamental facts that there did exist such a story of the coming of a great one at that time in the world and the records state clearly that they made their calculations as to when he should come from the Bible and other records handed down. Having reached such a conclusion they could have started in time to have been present in Judea when the child was born. From the record it would seem that this must have been done, for certainly there is no reason to believe that Joseph and Mary remained for many months in Bethlehem. The fundamentals of the story still remain that knowing of this prophecy they had sought around and were guided to find him. Whether they were astrologers does not with certainty appear, though some have attempted so to interpret, as above set forth.

Another reason for calling in question, however, the Kepler story is that while these two planets were close they were not merged as one and that they were much closer in conjunction 66 B. C. than they were 7 B. C.

SUMMARY

From the above it appears that in quite ancient times there was a great interest in the stars and that astrology was closely concerned with religion. That it was then confined only to an attempt to forecast the future of the nation and its king or of natural phenomena.

That this start in Babylon spread to Greece and Rome, to the Arabians, and thence to Western Europe where it flourished until about the 15th or 16th centuries, but has not been held in repute since then. In its origin it was closely related to Paganism.

That worship of the heavenly bodies was plainly forbidden in the Old Testament and there is not a line to justify such worship in the New Testament.

The Bible does disclose a knowledge of astronomy, of the movement of the heavenly bodies, of the stars and of falling stars or meteors.

Astrology is still accepted in parts of Asia and Africa. In America its consideration may be divided into two classes. There are some who are clearly fakirs. There are others who attempt still to use the books prepared in ancient and mediæval times and who base their forecasts thereon. And there are some in America who accept these species of fortune-telling or forecasting for individuals.

There does not appear even the slightest scientific basis for belief in astrology.

There appears no place in our religion for it.

There seems no reason for believing that God has anything to do with it.

The children of God must pass through a cleansing process before they can meet Jesus Christ.—E. J. Gleazer.

Appreciates the Work of Apostle D. T. Williams

In "News Briefs" I have noticed the accounts of different missionary activities during the year and have very much appreciated them. You might add this comment in behalf of Apostle D. T. Williams.

In my twenty years of experience as a member of Windsor Branch I cannot recall anyone with such a well planned itinerary as Brother Williams has had during the past twenty-two months. This has made it possible for him to meet with us on about eight different occasions. He has come to us with a message of great import. And there has been apparent in his sermons the authority of his apostolic office. Such comments as these have been heard: "That sermon was a masterpiece!" "He makes you see something in your church you have never seen before." "He makes you like your church and want to work harder for the cause of Zion."

On the evening of October 31, 1933, Apostle Williams was the forum speaker at Saint Mark's Anglican Church in Windsor. His subject was "The Machine Age and the Brotherhood of Man." Previous speakers at the forum had been doctors, lawyers, and representatives of different political groups in the border cities. On this occasion God did not fail Brother Williams and Brother Williams did not fail to help the church's cause.

This comment was mailed to me under date of November 16, by the rector, "Permit me to say that the Mr. Williams you had come to our forum, by popular opinion, delivered the best speech—and the most constructive one, too—we have had the pleasure of hearing. Thanks to you." Another comment from one of the audience, "Mr. Williams, your message had a spiritual content and you were not alone in the delivery of it, were you?" "I was not for I was giving you the social teachings of the church I represent," replied Brother Williams.

There is one thing noticeable in the life of Apostle Williams which I believe speaks for his well planned itinerary and program; the church and its interests have first place in his life.

I hope General Conference sees fit to return Apostle Williams to this mission.

The Need of an Active, Visiting Ministry

Jesus was sent to the world by his father to bring peace, so that peace might dwell in his kingdom. To his disciples, he said, "My peace I bring unto you, my peace I give unto you."

Jesus, when preaching on the mount to the people, said to them, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they are the children of God." We have the knowledge and evidence that we are God's people. The poet has said, "Where peace dwells, there is the Spirit of God." Peace is the gift of God's love. If we are the blessed, or are to become the blessed, then it is for us to show evidence by our works.

Jesus chose his ministry, and placed upon them a great responsibility. They were called to be peace officers, to labor for the continuation of peace in his church on earth. Should we not be an active, visiting and praying ministry?

In a day when there is much unrest, and much to make everything but peace, happiness, and security, can the children of God be unaffected by this condition?

I believe there is no other activity in the church that will do more to advance the cause of Christ than a continued active visiting ministry.

In the home it fosters a background of this latter-day work. There should come among us a greater spiritual progress, and fuller obedience to the laws of Zion. This will help to bring Zion on earth, an abode prepared for the coming of Christ, for he tells us that he will come to the New Jerusalem, to the pure in heart, when that condition exists.

Enjoys the Radio Broadcast

We have been isolated since July. There came to our home as a Christmas gift, a radio. Sunday morning, I arose early and found station KMBC. I enjoyed the broadcast during the day. Especially do I get much joy from the devotional services.

I cannot describe the joy that came to me during the talks and songs, this morning, December 12. The presence of God's Spirit seemed to fill the room.

During the ten o'clock hour Sunday evening, there were many stations, giving programs of worldly nature. They were so loud and powerful I could hardly hold my station, or hear the program, so I listened to the confusion on both sides. There came to my mind, a picture of the time when calls will be made for Zion, and of the confusion that will surely be among those who have been idle and indifferent, seeking worldly music and entertainment.

Please remember us that we may be ready and worthy to answer the call.

Missionary Services in Southern Indiana

After a short visit at the home of Brother and Sister J. W. Thrasher at Birdseye, November 1, we took our journey to Petersburg and were made welcome at the home of Brother and Sister Solomon Shoaf, where we held three preaching services in their roomy farmhouse and one sacrament meeting for the few Saints about there.

Began meetings at Washington in the country home of Mr. and Sister J. D. Harbstreit November 6, where we held eight preaching services and one sacrament for the benefit of scattered members. We closed with an audience of fifty-four in the home, and are glad to say that in the Harbstreit neighborhood, Saints, friends, and neighbors are erecting a cottage church which will prove a blessing to the entire neighborhood.

On November 12, Brother Harbstreit, jr., and wife, drove us to Vincennes, where I had been in correspondence with a family of Saints, Brother and Sister Alex U. Miller, who have lived there for some years, but had not been known to me until of late. Their three married daughters are members, also their son who is at home. They live at 922 Perry Street and very much wish to communicate with other Saints living in Vincennes, or elders passing through. Mr. F. K. Shultz, 1721 North Thirteenth Street, would also welcome a call if ministry or members are passing through that city. He has been in correspondence with President F. M. Smith. We held two preaching services at the home of Mr. Shoultz and his folks, and the rest of the meetings at the home of Brother and Sister Miller. Mr. Shoultz expressed himself as well pleased with what he heard, stating that he felt sure he had found what he has been looking for for a long time.

Sister Miller and daughter took us by auto to Terre Haute November 19, to the home of Sister Viola Williamson who lives at 3100 South 11½ Street. Sister Williamson is a widow of two years. Her husband died suddenly of pneumonia, leaving her with eight children. The eldest of these is about fifteen. Five have been baptized into the church. At her home we held three preaching services and a communion hour. There is one other Saint in Terre Haute, Sister Tempist, advanced in age, but living alone at 1509 South Ninth Street.

A Long-time Reader of the Herald

My father, H. P. Sherard, took the Herald when I was a little child. At that time, the publication was much smaller in size than it is now. On the evening it came, my father read it aloud to us all; thus the habit of either hearing the Herald, or reading it was formed. I am grateful to my father's memory, that he taught us to love the message it contained.

I contributed to the Herald and Stepping Stones at one time, but as the scenes of life were changing and my family leaving one by one, I ceased my efforts along this line, although my love for the gospel has never grown less.

My daughter, Sister Grace Shuffeldt, takes the Herald at the present time, but always says, "Take it to Grandma first, I can wait better than she can."

I want to say that I love the gospel as taught by the Reorganized Church. I have had many evidences of its divinity. The Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the Herald are my constant companions. I receive much joy and comforting influences through prayer and meditation.

Evidences of God's Guiding Hand

The most pleasurable experiences of my life have been the evidences of God's guiding hand and the answers he gives to prayers.

Recently, during the "Keep the Law" period, I prayed earnestly that God would open the way for me to help. No sooner did I arise and walk across the room than there came a knock at the door and there stood a lady who asked if I would accept her daughter as a piano pupil. God answers prayers and is intensely interested in our lives. I have many such evidences of his willingness to bless his people, and I am thankful for this church which has brought to me peace and union with God.

The congregation in Ogden is small in numbers, but the promise of God to us is that if we will do his will, our church here will not be able to hold all who will come seeking truth, and if we do not, others will take our place.

As a further testimony, Brother Frank Veenstra, our pastor, was spoken to by the Spirit years ago, and told that he would some day come back here, that God would send him back, as there was a work for him here. We are hoping and praying to see the complete fulfillment of God's promises to us.

A Bit of Appreciation

May I add my bit of appreciation for the new Herald? I enjoy all of it. It keeps one in touch with what is being done in the different branches of the church.

Through Elder P. T. Anderson, Doctor Young, of La Moure, was called to the priesthood. He accepted his call and was ordained. He has been faithful to his calling and has conducted sacrament service in a splendid manner. Each time he has given a talk on matters pertaining to the Lord's work. Indeed his efforts have been most helpful to us.

We meet one month with the Saints at La Moure, forty-five miles from here, then the next month they come here. This is the first time we have had the opportunity of partaking of the sacrament so regularly, and all of us feel that it has been a great benefit to us spiritually. We are encouraged to press forward and be more diligent in the Lord's work.

We of North Dakota have been thankful for Elder P. T. Anderson. He has been very kind and considerate and has preached splendid and uplifting sermons. He is a minister who is willing to do his duty at all times. I hope it will be our good fortune to have him with us another year.

MRS. J. MUFFLE.

STAUBVILLE, NORTH DAKOTA.

Request Prayers

Prayers are requested for Brother and Sister Clarence Smith, of Midland, Michigan. Brother Smith has been ill for over a year. He was helped by administration last summer under the hands of Elder John S. MacDonald, but is again unable to work sufficiently to provide for his family of a wife and five children, eldest twelve years old, the youngest seventeen months. The children were taken away from them by authorities, and Sister Smith lost her mind, and has been taken to a State hospital for the insane. The children are for adoption, and Brother Smith is to be sent to the hospital for treatment.

Brother and Sister Orville Ludy, of Benton Harbor, Michigan, request prayers of the Saints for their three children, James, Callie, and Alvenia, that they may be restored to a normal condition of health and strength. This family has been isolated, but all are members of the church.

Mrs. G. E. Hemstock, of Bangor, Wisconsin, requests prayers for her husband who is in very poor health. The doctors give no encouragement concerning his condition, but the Lord has power and his promises are sure. Brother and Sister Hemstock have faith in him.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Address all news and letters to Editors of the Herald, Box 237, Independence, Missouri. Correspondents are requested to make their letters brief. The Editors reserve the right, on account of space limitations, to shorten all letters as circumstances require.

Independence

A city-wide, two-week, missionary campaign was launched in Independence, the night of Sunday, December 31, to continue until January 14. Speakers for the series in the several churches are: Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Stone Church; Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Second Church; Missionary J. W. A. Bailey, Walnut Park; Apostle M. A. McConley, Liberty Street; Patriarch U. W. Greene, Enoch Hill; Patriarch Ammon White, Spring Branch; Missionary J. Charles May, Guggell Park; Elder R. L. Fulk, East Independence; Apostle James A. Gillen, Englewood, and Elder J. E. Vanderwood, Sugar Creek.

More than one hundred Christmas baskets were distributed by groups and other organizations to needy families in Independence, this movement being sponsored by the women's department. The spirit of giving, characteristic of Christmas, was shown by this act of kindness and generosity. Christmas festivities of every kind have been celebrated throughout the holidays. Parties, entertainments, plays, caroling, and other activities have been enjoyed.

The General Conference Choir will begin rehearsals on the conference oratorio, "The Elijah," the afternoon of January 7, Paul N. Craig, directing. The conference oratorio choir will be composed of the Independence Messiah Choir and singers from many other choirs in this and neighboring States. The performance in April will be directed by Albert N. Hoxie, of Philadelphia.

The third annual city-wide dramatic tournament to be sponsored by the Independence Young People's Council, will be conducted March 5, 6, 8, and 9. At a meeting of dramatic leaders the evening of December 28, definite plans were formulated for the finals. Each church will hold its preliminary try-out before February 17.

Stone Church

A Christmas program for the Stone Church congregation was conducted during the eleven o'clock hour, Sunday, December 24, instead of the regular preaching service. Special music was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. The choir was assisted by Mrs. Nina Smith, George Anway, and Albert Brackenbury, soloists. A contralto solo was sung by Mrs. S. A. Burgess. The solo, "The Star of Bethlehem," sung by George Anway, was accompanied by Miss Elizabeth Smith, harpist, Miss Mary Alice Hardin, violinist, and Mrs. J. T. Westwood, jr., cellist.

Elder Leonard Lea delivered the Christmas sermon, telling the story of Christ. Entertaining numbers were presented by individuals representing the various departments of the church school.

The annual rendition of Handel's "Messiah," was presented Christmas Eve, from five-forty-five to seven o'clock, as a Christmas gift to the community and the radio audience. The choir, composed of two hundred singers from Independence and Kansas City, was this year directed by George Anway. Sympathetic interpretations of their parts were given by the soloists, Mrs. Nelle Atkinson Kelley, soprano, of Independence; Miss Pearl Kinnaman, contralto, of Saint Joseph; John R. Wahlstedt, tenor, of Kansas City, and Colin Ferrett, bass, of Australia. "The Pastoral Symphony," played by a string quartet, Arthur Storms, first violin; Orrin K. Fry, jr., second violin, Gomer Cool, viola, and Orrin K. Fry, sr., string bass, added much to the program as also did the assistance of the accompanists, Robert Miller, organist, and George Miller, pianist. The oratorio was broadcast by KMBC and reports of a splendid reception by radio have been numerous and enthusiastic.

A special service was held at the Stone Church Christmas morning at ten o'clock. President Elbert A. Smith presided over the meeting. The Clematis Chorus, directed by Mrs. John R. Lentell, sang a group of Christmas carols. President Smith was assisted throughout the service by Pastor John F. Sheehy, Bishop J. Stanley Kelley, and Bishop G. L. DeLapp. A brief talk was delivered by Bishop DeLapp, which was followed by the special Christmas offering. Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee was at the organ.

During the holiday season, several weddings were solemnized. In a pretty double wedding ceremony, December 18, Miss Martha Chrestensen, daughter of Mrs. Iva Chrestensen, of Enoch Hill congregation, became the bride of Arthur H. Clow, and Miss Mildred Ann Liggett, daughter of George Liggett, of Fairmount, became the bride of William Austin Clow. The bridegrooms are sons of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Clow, of Independence. The ceremony was said in the presence of the immediate families, by Elder H. L. Barto. The two families will make their homes in Independence.

Miss Marcine Smith, daughter of Mrs. Bertha M. Smith, of Independence, became the bride of Will Feldmath, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Christmas Day. The service was read by Elder C. Ed. Miller. Miss Smith was a teacher in the public schools in Independence. Mr. and Mrs. Feldmath will make their home in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Lovey Allison, eighty-three years of age, was united in marriage to Elder Caleb Blodgett, seventy-seven, Thursday evening, December 21. The ceremony was read by Apostle J. F. Curtis in the presence of a small group of friends.

Miss Marion Alice Barnard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph M. Barnard, became the bride of David R. Conyers, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy L. Conyers, of Lamoni, Iowa, December 25. The wedding took place at the home of the bride, Pastor John F. Sheehy, performing the ceremony.

Spring Branch Church

The weekly prayer services are in charge of local priesthood members.

The eleven o'clock service, December 24, was in charge of Elders M. C. Jacobsen and Arthur Peer. Music was furnished by the girls' chorus, the boys' chorus, and the choir, singing, "I Bring You Good Tidings," "From Lands Afar," and "Come Let Us Adore Him." Elder William I. Fligg was the speaker.

At the close of the church school in the evening, the boys' choir of the Stone Church, sang. Several interesting numbers preceded the play, "The Babe of Bethlehem."

Guggell Park Church

On the morning of December 5, fifty-four Saints met in a sacrament service in charge of Elder P. A. Sherman. At seven-thirty, Sister Thelma Moorman, from Walnut Park Church, brought her chorus with a Christmas song fest. She was accompanied by Drexel Mollison at the piano. Milford Nace, Lois Jean Williams, Melba Moorman and Arlon Chapman rendered special numbers. A review of "The Other Wise Man" was given by Brother O. L. Athey.

On the following Sunday, December 10, Elder Charles Pooler occupied the pulpit. Elder C. B. Woodstock was the evening speaker. Special music was furnished by members of Enoch Hill congregation.

The Wednesday evening prayer meeting was held at the home of Brother and Sister Melvin Atwell, who recently moved to a farm near Atherton, Missouri.

"The Life of Jesus," was the subject of Elder P. A. Sherman's discourse, Deember 17. In the evening, Elder C. K. Green preached on the value of guarding one's tongue.

December 24, Pastor Walter Chapman occupied the pulpit. A Christmas program, arranged by Sister Esther Sherman, was presented during the evening service. At this time, a gift of thirty-one new hymnals was presented by the women's department and the young people's Church History class.

East Independence Church

Sunday, December 17, was a day full of enjoyment for this congregation. Sunday school opened with Assistant Superintendent James Stowell in charge. Bishop G. W. Eastwood, assistant pastor in Zion, was a welcome guest.

The eleven o'clock service was largely attended. Sister John R. Lentell with her chorus of girls, twenty-one in number, sang three groups of hymns. The music was greatly appreciated. William Rufus Wilson, infant son of Brother and Sister Wilson, was blessed under the hands of Elders G. W. Eastwood and Harry Friend. Elder H. V. Minton was the morning speaker, stressing the Christian standard of living.

Immediately following the service, Pastor Minton performed the marriage ceremony of Miss Charlotte Juanita Friend and Lyndon L. Wagener. Both young people are members of this congregation, and have the best wishes of the Saints. A prayer of blessing on this newly-wedded couple was given by Pastor Eastwood.

Elder H. V. Minton continued his series of discourses Sunday evening. The choir, directed by Sister J. Friend, furnished special music.

On Wednesday evening, Elder Minton continued his lectures with good interest. He closed his series December 24.

Sunday evening, a Christmas program composed of songs, plays, and readings, was presented by the classes of the church school.

Sugar Creek Mission

About three years ago, three families of church members lived at Sugar Creek, Missouri. Elder Ira G. Clutter, having moved from Kansas City Stake, was urged to assist in organizing a Sunday school. At that time, the mission was located in Holden Stake, Elder Harvey Minton, stake missionary. A Sunday school was organized with sixteen members present at the first meeting. A notice for preaching services was sent out, Elders F. C. Smith and E. T. Atwell, the speakers.

The membership increased until it was necessary to meet in a larger building. A five-room dwelling house, the use of which was donated by Mr. Gantz, was occupied for several months.

Then a six-week series of meetings was held, Elder H. V. Minton occupying the stand. Fifteen candidates were baptized. The next move was into a store building below the main part of town. It was at this location that Brother Macrae, Holden Stake president, first visited Sugar Creek Mission, and they were officially taken into Holden Stake.

Elder Ira G. Clutter was appointed pastor, and an organization followed. All officers were ratified at the conference at Atherton, Missouri. The congregation was forced to move again, this time to Slyman Hall, larger quarters in the business section of town.

After a period of three years, the group records show a membership of sixty-six members. Some have moved away, and others have been lost by death, but a faithful band of workers remain.

The O. B. K. Class, "Our Brothers Keepers," composed of young people, is taught by Pastor Clutter. Such activities as suppers, quiltings, and bake sales have been sponsored by them to help raise funds.

Due to the near location to Independence, Sugar Creek Mission has been transferred to the City of Independence organization under the direction of Pastor John F. Sheehy.

The Saints are awakening to new spiritual realities, and are paying their tithing and filing their inventories.

December 14, a chili supper and Christmas sale was held, special music being furnished by Brother Leon Snow and his orchestra.

Christmas festivities have been popular. A program, December 24, composed of readings and musical numbers, was presented by the beginners and juniors, directed by Sister Margaret Barksdale, superintendent of the primary department.

"Mimi Lights the Candle," was presented by the O. B. K. Class. The play was directed by Miss Irene Shupe, musical director, and Mr. Virgil Palmer, church school superintendent. Christmas treats were provided for the children, and members of the congregation wish to extend their thanks to those who helped to make this possible.

Recent guests and speakers have included Elder Herbert L. Barto, Missionary Hubert Case, Apostles John F. Curtis and Roy S. Budd, Patriarch Ammon White, and Elders T. J. Butler, M. J. Turner, and John Lehman.

Elder J. E. Vanderwood began a two-week series of meetings Sunday, December 31. Saints driving through Sugar Creek are invited to stop and attend services.

It's Time to Begin

To set the high goal—a Christian life.

To help others at all times.

To make worth-while friends.

To discipline self.

To smile.

To love our fellow men.

To appreciate our many blessings.

To pray God for help in all undertakings.

Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch

Portsmouth, Ohio

In spite of rainy weather, Saints of this branch have been able to attend the biggest part of the services.

Elder O. A. Rexroad has been the speaker on Sunday evening, the most of the time. His subjects have included, "Can You Discern the Signs of the Times?" and "He Shall Baptize With the Holy Ghost and with Fire."

The women's department is progressing rapidly. Sister Nellie Rexroad is their leader.

Brother James Cheffin is superintendent of the Bible studies each Friday night. Saints of this congregation miss the midweek prayer meetings which have been stopped for some time. Sunday prayer meetings have also been stopped, with the exception of the first Sunday of each month.

Elder Rexroad, who has been ill for several weeks was able to lead two fine young men into the waters of Pond Creek, December 17, for baptism, Charles J. Strickland, of McDermott, Ohio, and Hoodley Capas, of Portsmouth.

The newly organized Sunday school, of Mable Rhode, Portsmouth, Ohio, is progressing under the leadership of Charles F. Monroe.

Recent speakers for this congregation have included Elder E. E. Williams, and Elder John R. Grice, of Columbus, Ohio.

Bracken, Saskatchewan

Increasing Interest and Spiritual Impetus

Services each Sunday are continuing with increasing interest and good attendance, considering the weather and scattered condition of the Saints, as some live seven miles from the place of meeting. Preaching services are held each Sunday, with the exception of the first Sunday in the month, when prayer and sacrament meeting is enjoyed.

Albert Hodgins was the speaker December 10, taking his text from Luke 15. Brother Hodgins was ordained last July at the district conference, and this was his first attempt to preach.

A Book of Mormon class has recently been organized with the following officers in charge, superintendent, Alfred Henderson; secretary, Chester Wiig; teacher, Wilfrid Miller; assistant teacher, Walter Hewitt. They have class study each Thursday, after which, prayer meeting is held.

The presence of God's Holy Spirit was felt to a marked degree at the last sacrament service, December 3. Many spiritual prayer meetings have been enjoyed.

A social gathering is held once a month for the young people, who are taking an active interest in their work.

Missionary Visits Porsgrunn, Kragero, and Arendal

Most of the month of November was spent in Porsgrunn, Norway. I left Oslo, November 4, and arrived in Porsgrunn that evening, where I labored until November 29. We had four meetings a week there. Interest among nonmembers was not very great, but the Saints were encouraged by my visit and we had several fine meetings. The annual business meeting of the branch was held while I was there and I was in charge. A delegate to represent the branch at the coming General Conference was elected. A fine spirit of unity prevailed at the meeting, indicating the harmony that exists in the branch. The spiritual condition of the group is good, but owing to prejudice and other causes, it is difficult to arouse much interest among nonmembers.

On the twenty-ninth I went to Kragero where I spent about ten days before going to Arendal to visit isolated Saints. We held a meeting at Kragero on Wednesday night at the home of a family of Saints and several nonmembers were present.

The work at Oslo is in charge of local ministers during my absence. Regular services are being held and the priesthood is doing well. A business meeting will be held there upon my return.

V. D. RUCH.

Clinton, Iowa

Ministry Lend a Helpful Hand

The work at Clinton is showing marked progress. Much of this is due to missionary efforts on the part of the priesthood and a two weeks' series of special meetings, held by Elder L. G. Holloway, of the quorum of seventies. Branch President C. A. Beil is maintaining the interest aroused by Brother Holloway by holding special missionary services each Sunday evening. Several nonmembers are attending these meetings regularly and some baptisms are expected.

On the last night of Brother Holloway's visit, the members of the branch met at the home of Brother and Sister C. A. Beil in honor of Brother Holloway's birthday.

District President E. R. Davis was a guest of Clinton Saints the latter part of November, in the interest of the "Keep the Law" period. His efforts were repaid by several members filing their inventories.

Brother Steigel, pastor of Rock Island Branch, recently occupied the pulpit here, and his discourse was enjoyed.

Much interest has been displayed by the young people. Christmas Eve, they presented a play entitled, "Grandmother's Christmas Guest."

At the October district conference, two young men of the branch were ordained to the priesthood, Don Cassidy, to the office of elder, and Thomas Bell to that of priest.

Branch membership was increased when Elder Albert Welch and family and Sister Genevieve Byers moved into this vicinity.

The majority of the members of the branch are consistent readers of the Saints' Herald. They find it entertaining and profitable.

Holden Stake

Warrensburg, Missouri

Recently Bishop J. A. Koehler and Bishop Amos E. Allen held services at Warrensburg for one week. The discourses were highly instructive and interesting. A good attendance was had throughout the week, and the Saints are looking forward to their return in January.

Local members were sorry to lose Brother Charles Constance and family, who have helped greatly in this branch for the past year. They moved to Independence, where Brother Constance and Maxwell are employed on a dairy farm.

The women's department, under the supervision of Sister S. M. Andes, had two socials last fall, and turned in thirty dollars to the treasurer.

The young people's division, under the supervision of Charles Johnson, gave a Christmas play the Thursday night preceding Christmas Day. At that time they also had the Christmas tree and the presents for the children.

The order of the entertainment Christmas Eve was a candle service with a chorus of twelve, robed in white singing the beautiful Christmas hymns. A tableau of the manger scene was a special feature. Sister Dewey Blaine took the part of Mary. Sister Ralph Baker directed the music and sang a special number. Sister Edgar Raville was at the organ and Sister Jewel Banks at the piano.

Workers are glad to have Brother Ralph Baker and his family. Sister Baker is a splendid help in the musical activities of the church, and they are greatly pleased to have her services.

The young men's volley ball team is taking part in a tournament of the Inter-Church Athletic Association in Warrensburg. The games are played every Monday and Tuesday nights at the Methodist Church and usually draw a good crowd.

Dewey Blaine constructed a neat extension for the platform in our church to be used for programs. The lighting system is unique and effective.

At a recent leadership training school, conducted by the Warrensburg churches, credits were awarded to thirty-two students. From this church school officers and teachers who received credit are: Sister Lillian C. Johnson, Sister Jewel Banks, and Sister Jewel Johnson. The work they had was, "Primary Materials and Methods," under the supervision of Mrs. Sweet, supervisor of kindergarten at the college.

Elder J. Charles May was here December 29, when he gave a lecture with stereopticon slides. Brother May always draws a large crowd when he comes.

Pleasanton, Iowa

Forward Into the New Year

The usual church school hour, December 24, was given over to a Christmas program for Pleasanton Saints. Under the supervision of Sister Mildred Turpen, a program was rendered by the members of the church school. Immediately following the program, treats were distributed among the children.

At the eleven o'clock hour, the annual business meeting was held for the election of branch officers. Saints were fortunate in having Apostle J. F. Garver as a guest.

The meeting was carried forward with a wonderful spirit under the leadership of Branch President J. Emmett Leeper.

The day closed with a community program and Christmas tree, at the Christian Union Church.

This has been a year of some discouragements and a lot of blessings. Under the direction of Brother Leeper, Saints of this branch pledge their continued efforts that there may be manifested a greater desire to obey God's commands.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Institute and Priesthood Convention Prominent Events

Much has recently taken place in this branch. The Saints had been looking forward for sometime to the institute which was held from November 19 to 25, Apostle Paul M. Hanson and F. Henry Edwards in charge. Teachers and officers gave loyal support, and attendance was good. Brother Edwards spoke mainly of the Doctrine and Covenants and Brother Hanson's theme was the Bible. Much interest was shown by the questions asked the teachers.

These meetings have done much in forwarding local work. Many have felt more keenly their responsibility to the church, and have caught a broader vision of what this church expects of them. At the close of the institute on Saturday evening a social was held, the young people in charge of the refreshments.

The priesthood convention of the district was held on Sunday, a prayer meeting for priesthood members beginning at 8 a. m. Apostle Edwards took charge with Apostle Hanson and Pastor H. L. Livingston assisting. Here the Spirit of God was not only felt but manifested. This service was followed by a church school program, Apostle Hanson the speaker, and Apostle Edwards the preacher at the eleven o'clock hour. At 2.30 p. m. Brothers Edwards and Hanson presided over a priesthood meeting which partook of the nature of a round table discussion.

A beautiful baptismal and confirmation service was held at 6.30 p. m. when four candidates were baptized into the kingdom of God. The services throughout the day were uplifting and inspiring to the Saints who came from the surrounding branches.

The girls of the Alpha Lambda Sigma have been doing splendid work. For Thanksgiving and Christmas they filled baskets for the needy of the branch.

Washington, Oklahoma Small Group Hopes for Series of Meetings

It is almost a year since Brothers Lloyd Harding and E. F. Yerrington visited this congregation, holding cottage meetings. The peaceful spirit which accompanied the work of these two men remained for several weeks.

At the suggestion of Brother Yerrington, a Sunday school was organized and preaching services were held every two weeks, Elder W. F. Huff the speaker, and Brother Harding or Brother Yerrington coming over to help in the services. However, it was not long until opposition to the latter-day work arose in the community. Sunday school attendance grew smaller until only the Saints were coming.

Brother Huff preached an inspiring sermon last October, showing that Joseph Smith's works were the fulfillment of prophecies in the Scriptures.

Pastor Kemp, of Oklahoma City, was a recent guest of this congregation and preached an instructive sermon.

Workers hope here that it will be possible for a series of meetings to be held.

Sickness has invaded this small group and the members ask prayers in behalf of those who suffer, that they may be restored and made able to continue their work.

Universal Stewardship

By Frank W. Mills

Both day and night to God belong,
With all man's power and praise of song;
The sun by day, the moon by night,
Man's riches, all are God's by right.

With light more given, more's required,
They serve the best, whose minds are fired;

Through darkness and through daylight too,

Men seek the light, God's work to do.

As stewards we may use God's wealth,
Accountable to Him for all;

For talents, time, and gift of health;
Our work is here 'till He shall call.

Our work by day, our rest by night,
For God appoints both work and rest;
His strength sustains in paths of light,
And leads to mansions bright and blest.

Benefits of the Depression

I would place the development of appreciation of things spiritual at the top of my list of the sweeter uses of adversity. It should not surprise anyone to learn that those who are weary and heavy laden have turned to the Great Comforter for solace. I speak only for myself, but I suspect that this feeling is widespread. Until the depression I had not entered a church since my marriage twelve years ago. While I was brought up a strict Methodist, I find comfort today in the Sacrifice of the Mass of the Catholic Church, of which I am not a member. There is a wonderful stability, a sense of permanence about the Catholic Church which contrasts dramatically with the ever-shifting, crazy world around us. It offers a quiet haven to those of us who are weary of the storm. After church on Sunday, the winning of material success, or the present lack of it, seems entirely unimportant to one who has been an humble witness of the Supreme Sacrifice.

Next I would list the exchange of permanent satisfactions of life for the temporary and material. We have become regular visitors at the public library. Each week the four of us return home with armfuls of books: latest novels and old classics; books on gardening and books on religion; books on how to raise goldfish and how to repair automobiles. All are grist for our mill. And I have been digging into some of the old timers on my own shelves; Montaigne, Euripides, Ruskin and Dickens have provided plenty of mental food when meat and potatoes were somewhat scarce.

We are better physically because we get more exercise. We walk where we used to ride, and we garden where we used to play bridge. Our garden looked more beautiful this year than ever before. We built a pool in our rock garden and spent delightful minutes watching the goldfish—from the ten cent store—flashing in the sun. No victim of present conditions need be mentally depressed so long as he has access to books, and a garden to work in. What is more satisfying, more soul inspiring, than to prepare the soil, plant the seed, and watch the unfolding of leaf and bud?

The lost art of conversation is coming back into its own. Instead of eternal bridge, our friends drop in, informally, after supper, just to talk. As the evening goes on, we serve homemade cookies and tea, and over our cups we discuss literature, politics, economics and every subject under the sun. Thus we are finding within ourselves hidden resources which we never knew existed.

The children, too, have gained. They have learned to admire and enjoy things without always wanting to possess them. Last Christmas I took them both through the toy departments. We had lots of fun, yet there was not once the cry, "I want that," such as I heard constantly from luckier children around us. Painful episodes occur, it is true, as when other children's parties make the absence of such events in our home all the more conspicuous. It is painful to have to keep children home from school affairs because "Daddy hasn't any money." But these things will probably be soon forgotten and the self-discipline thus enforced builds stronger characters.

We have lost our blasé attitude toward the simpler pleasures. We have discovered how to laugh spontaneously instead of paying someone else to make us laugh. We laugh, for example, over the beautiful letters from expensive houses which still have us on their mailing lists, inviting us to a showing of the season's new styles. These matters sound trifling. But surely the ability to get laughter out of trivial things, under miserable conditions, is not an entirely worthless result of the depression. —B. Gordon Byron, in Survey Graphic.

Common Consent

There are those who are of the opinion that our present system of obtaining the common consent is not effectual; and by some it is thought that the absolute decision of the graver matters should rest with the few, and that common consent is a myth and a mistake. We are not of this class, however; for this reason, the intuition of the Spirit is vouchsafed to all, under like conditions; and when acting in an assembly the unity of the spirit should more than compensate for any difference of mere opinion or the influence of selfinterest and personal influence exercised upon the part of individuals. It may sometimes be that a wave of erroneous understanding may sweep over an assembly and lead the majority astray; but this will seldom occur; and in a body like the church, acknowledging the supremacy of God and the right of Christ to rule, and the absolute governing of divine intervention, there is an assurance, almost amounting to a guarantee that a mistake made by a majority will not be permitted to fatally injure the work for the intended good of the whole.

When personal influence, ambition, and private interest secure the popular voice and assumes the control the majority may be led astray; but it will be a minority influence that leads. Where such a thing occurs there are safeguards in the law whereby the lights of the minority can be preserved and with them the liberties of all be preserved. Such a case as this has already occurred, and the minority are slowly forging their way to the front against almost overwhelming odds in numbers and power. That the truth, in this case represented by the minority, will prevail, we have not a doubt.

That the "majority principle" may sometimes work an injury to the minority is conceded; but that it is so in reality as a rule cannot be held. . . . We answer, then patience must have its perfect work, and the minority abide, if the wrong be bearable, until the wrong is demonstrated, when there will be an opportunity to correct; and the majority should and would be pleased to retrace its steps.—Saints' Herald, volume 42, page 821, 822.

National Loyalty

(This article, which appeared in the Southern England and Wales District Herald, was presented and discussed at the Enfield Educational Class, by Elder John A. Judd.)

THE QUESTION that has been much discussed is—"Is it our duty to pray for and support the government and nation among whom we live?"

In recent years changes have taken place daily in constitutional governments; kings and rulers dethroned, governmental representatives changed and often exiled, with little heed to the value of the life of those who resist. Rebellion and dissention have marked the pathways, the fires of which have been fed by the press and disreputable members of society. Every mistake made, and events that do not work according to plan, are fastened upon to discredit the ability and honour of those in charge. A man is made an offender for a word, and his words of good intention are often turned to ridicule; every suggestion of lack of confidence is magnified and multiplied, distortion has been the order of the day. Loyalty to governments and the constitution have in many instances been laid on one side, and any unlawful means used to obtain the desired—and at times ungodly end.

The right of well established law, upon which the well-being of the people rests, needs to be safe-guarded against those who seek to impose their distorted views upon their fellow citizens; they seek by force to oppose law and order. Force never can establish "peace on earth and goodwill toward man." The only successful way to change the constitution is by conversion and legislation. The ways of God are the only ways to success, and Latter Day Saints should be very careful not to engage in unlawful ways when trying to secure—governmental adjustments. I have been asked the following questions:

As church members, what should be our attitude towards those in authority? —The king, president, dictator, civil administrator, judges, etc?

Should we be passive resisters, openly or secretly disloyal, seeking to influence others against the things we do not like, for example, war, very few like or agree with this subject, especially when nations are arrayed as we see them today?

We would do well to speak with reserve and tempered with wisdom, remembering that while each has the right to their own opinion, we have no right to seek to impose this upon others, especially if it is against the law and authority under which we live. Our peace, the right to live in peace, to go abroad in comfort, freedom of speech and of worship, which has been handed down to us—the price paid in the blood of our forefathers and written in the history of many lands. What of the future? "He that will not take up his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee to Zion." We leave this with you, praying that it will not be necessary to safe-guard and preserve these sacred—rites with the blood of our beloved people.

It would be well at this juncture to consider some of the benefits which have been conferred upon us. Peace comes to us as the result of good living. We claim the protection of state and law, including all the rights conferred upon us as freeborn members of society. We enjoy freedom of speech, within the limits of justice and peace, and all is permitted to worship God unmolested—this alone cost countless lives in years gone by. All national educational benefits are ours, and all that makes our nation truly great is for us to enjoy—the jurisprudence of this nation stands in the world as a monument recognized and copied by many.

What contribution if any would we like to give in prayer and good—citizenship that continued success may attend the nation, and justice meted out to the poor; that her very presence among the nations of the earth shall speak stability of purpose, in protecting the weak and oppressed peoples of the earth? Would we have our nation great, that her greatness in moral and spiritual influence shall command respect? Would we have her help to set the captives free, feed the hungry in distress, and universally stamp out disease and moral and physical degeneracy? As a help to those seeking answer to the foregoing questions, I quote the following taken from the church Epitome of Faith.

"We believe that the religion of Jesus Christ, as taught in the New Testament Scriptures, will, if its precepts are accepted and obeyed, make men and women better in the domestic circle, and better citizens of town, country or state, and consequently better fitted for the change which cometh at death.

"We believe that men should worship God in 'Spirit and in truth,' and that such worship does not require a violation of the constitutional law of the land. (John 4: 21-4. Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.)

"We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may."

The above very clearly sets forth the views of the church.

Apostle Paul in writing to the saints of the early church, sets out our duty as children of God, in 1 Timothy 2: 1-6.

"I exhort you therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings and all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.

"For this is good and acceptable in the sight of our Savior, who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.

"For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man—Jesus Christ; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time."

In the second verse very definite instruction is given, "That we may lead a quiet and Peaceable life." Peter, writing to the saints of his day states:

"Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul; having your conversation honest among the Gentiles. That, whereas they speak against you as evil-doers, they may by your good works—which they shall behold—glorify God in the day of visitation.

"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well.

"For so is the will of God, that with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: as free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God. Honor all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the king."—1 Peter 2: 11-17.

This establishes our attitude towards king and state.

The attitude of those living in strange lands, and under bondage, will be found in the words of the Prophet Jeremiah 27: 4-7.

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, whom I have caused to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon.

"Build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them; . . . Seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it; for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace."

Note verse seven, "For in the Peace thereof—shall ye have Peace." In conclusion let me quote the memorable statement made in Parliament by the late Prime Minister, Stanley Baldwin, "Oh God! Give us Peace in our day."

"I Am Not Ashamed . . ."

(Notes from a sermon preached by Elder John F. Sheehy at the Stone Church, Independence.)

By the Rambling Reporter

Text: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation."

The gospel restored one hundred years ago is the gospel we have today. The ideals of this church of one hundred years ago remain the ideals of the church today. It has never been necessary for us to raise our ideals; they have always been just a little beyond our reach.

The challenge of this faith comes to all young Latter Day Saints tonight as well as to many others of our faith and friends. It is the challenge of a revealed religion claiming to be a revelation of God, claiming to be the way, the truth, the power of God unto salvation.

It is strange when we think of the changes young Joseph brought to the world when he was given the restored gospel. He presented the belief that God is a God of love and mercy, "our Father who art in heaven," and that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation.

And now the time has come—it is imperative—when this church must see that the precious gospel truth goes to all the world.

In this day there comes a call from the church. A time has been set apart for us to consider the things we need to do to Keep the Law. Do you have a deep and abiding conviction that this is the church of God? That is necessary if you would abide by the law.

One hundred and two years ago Joseph Smith, the boy Prophet—then just twenty-five years old—with a small group of people, assembled at Kirtland, Ohio, knelt down in prayer that they might receive a revelation from God, for he had promised them a law to govern his church. And while they were in that attitude of prayer the law of God was revealed to the young prophet. We call that revelation the Constitutional Law of the church—section forty-two, Doctrine and Covenants.

Law is not only necessary but it is essential to life. All things must be done in order, and especially in the church of God do we expect things to be done in God's way. For this reason we have Arkansas and Louisiana district conference will be held at Hot Springs, Arkansas, February 2, 3, and 4. Apostle Roy S. Budd is expected to be with us again. been asked to observe the "Keep the Law" period.

The world today seems to be in a receptive mood for the gospel in all its fullness and glory, and we find ourselves unable to give the people the thing they want and need. Shall we keep the law? I think we can well go back to visit Paul in his prison cell in Rome, and hear him say: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation."

We have been marking time instead of marching to Zion. Now is the time to start marching, to start keeping the law.

Failure

I would not count it failure if in vain

I strove with earnest self-forgetfulness,

Of some high task fruition to obtain

But did not win the guerdon of success;

If my poor effort no base thought did know

I would not call it so.

But if I won it by a selfish might,

Staining endeavor by a servile greed,
By so much as one paltering with the right,

Or by the savor of one wrongful deed,
Then would I count attainment of desire

Failure most dire.

—Unknown.

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL MICHIGAN.—The annual conference of Central Michigan District convened at Coleman, Michigan, September 30, 1933. District President Hubert Case in charge. Minutes of two previous conferences were read and approved. Priesthood, branch, and statistical reports were read and ordered spread on the minutes. The treasurer's report was read. Motion prevailed to adopt this report subject to audit. Some suggestions were made regarding the financial system used in the district. Elder E. S. White also offered some suggestions relative to raising money to assist Brother Case on his trip home, after which a collection was taken. At the conclusion of this business, ten-minute talks were given by the following men: E. S. White, Matthew Umphrey, and Hubert Case. The two o'clock meeting opened with the reading of the minutes of the previous session. Elder Case then offered some suggestions relative to sending reports, especially financial reports to the bishop's agent. At this time the question of ordinations was cared for, and the following names were presented: C. M. Lambkin, Gerald Smith, and John Schenesty. The two former candidates being absent, the name of John Schenesty was presented to the assembly for ordination to the office of deacon. The recommendation was accepted and the ordination provided for. A motion was made and approved that the conference raise money to send Sister McDonald, of Houghton Lake, to the church Sanitarium for medical treatment. The following district officers were elected for the ensuing year: District president, Hubert Case; secretary, Winnie M. Hulbert; treasurer, John Armstrong; musical director, Harry Runkle; church school director and young people's leader, William Ash; leader of women's department, Mabel D. Jordan, Olive Davidson and Winnie M. Hulbert, associates. Brother Case then chose Lewis Grice and Otto Bartlett as counselors for district president, and his choices were ratified by the conference. Motion was made to sustain the present bishop's agent and the reunion committee. A substitute was offered that the present committee be sustained and two more names be added, which was carried, resulting in the selection of Brothers Lewis Grice and Otto Bartlett. Action was taken to adopt the plan of former reunions of serving meals without charge. A motion prevailed that the time and place of the next reunion be left to the committee, and that this committee be authorized to appoint sub-committees. A motion was carried that they do not use the reunion fund on hand for the coming reunion. Motion prevailed to take up a collection to defray district expenses and that they make a budget and apportion the branches per capita. The matter of the ordination of C. M. Lambkin was taken up. The motion prevailed that they accept the recommendation of Beaverton Branch and ordain this brother to the office of priest. Motion also prevailed that they approve the recommendation of Saginaw Branch and ordain Gerald Smith to office of deacon. October 1, during the eleven o'clock hour, the following men were ordained in accordance with previous arrangements: Alger Wood, John Schenesty, and Gerald Smith, to the office of deacon; Frank Banks and C. M. Lambkin to office of priest. A rising vote of thanks was given Coleman Saints after which the conference adjourned.

Our Departed Ones

AUSTIN.—Ulysses Adelbert Austin was born at Lockport, New York, September 10, 1843. United with the church by baptism, June 26, 1861, at Montrose, Iowa. He married Miss Eliza Cameron, August 11, 1867, at Fillmore, Missouri, and they spent some time at Shenandoah, Iowa. Moved to Independence, Missouri, in 1884, where he spent the rest of his life. His wife, Eliza, was taken from him by death September 16, 1897. His home for several years past was made with his daughter, Mrs. W. J. Clow, where he was an invalid for several months. He died at the Sanitarium December 4, 1933. He is survived by six daughters and four sons: Mrs. W. H. Bartholomew, of Oakland, California; Charles Austin, of Glendale, Oregon; Mrs. W. J. Clow, Mrs. D. H. Crick, Elbert C. Austin, and Arthur H. Austin, of Independence; Frederick T. Austin, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Paul Hastings, of Sioux City, Iowa; Mrs. Jack Klein and Miss Maud Austin, of Kansas City, Missouri; twenty-eight grandchildren, and fourteen great-grandchildren besides a host of other relatives and friends. His confidence in the gospel which he embraced over seventy-two years ago, never wavered, and life's vicissitudes only made him more reliant on the promised grace of his Lord. To him the Restoration work was divinity in expression, and he was confident that what God had started he would assuredly finish, and to share in the glory and the triumph of that finish was the longing of his soul.

BUSH.—George W. Bush, son of George and Lavina Bush, was born April 10, 1866, in Mercer County, Missouri, and passed from this life December 9, 1933, at his home in Independence, Missouri. In April, 1883, he married Miss Mary Belle Scott and to them twelve children were born. He was baptized into the church in September, 1892, by Joseph Snively at Canesville, Missouri. One son and two daughters preceded him in death. He leaves to mourn his passing, his wife, of the home; eight daughters: Mrs. C. E. St. John, of Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Grace Ogle, Cameron, Missouri; Mrs. Hattie Engelage, Saint Louis, Missouri; Mrs. Effie Vail, Mrs. Cressie Williams, Mrs. Willis Young, Mrs. Willard Stafford, and Mrs. Lenon Bandel, all of Independence; one son, George W. Bush, jr., Salina, Kansas; twenty-four grandchildren, twelve great-grandchildren, other relatives and many friends. The funeral was conducted December 10, 1933, at Stahl's Funeral Home. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Services were by Elder H. E. Winegar, assisted by Elder William Inman.

MILLER.—Jacob Miller, husband of Sister Clara A. Miller, was born March 12, 1864, at Columbus, Ohio. The greater part of the last twenty-seven years his home has been in Madison, Wisconsin. During the building of the new church in Madison he took a deep interest in the progress of the work and was the first janitor of the church. He was married November 4, 1885, to Miss Clara A. Stienstra, and to this union were born four children, Elsie and Jessie who preceded him in death; Frank L. Miller and Mrs. Celia Miller Schlafer, of Madison. He died after a short sickness of pneumonia, December 7, 1933. The funeral was held at the Saints' church, Jackson Street, December 9, at 2 p. m., prayer by Henry W. Woodstock, sermon by Jasper O. Dutton. Interment was Forest Hill Cemetery. Beside his wife and children, he leaves to mourn, one brother, Fred Miller, of Bay Port, Michigan, and nine grandchildren. He will be missed as an honorable man among men.

POWELL.—Herman Franklin Powell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Powell, of Lewiston, Idaho, was born May 6, 1913, at North Bend, Oregon, and departed this life December 3, 1933. He was baptized into the church June 25, 1921, at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, by Elder J. A. Bronson and was confirmed under the hands of W. H. Kelley. Funeral services were

CROUCH.—Emma Lacila Crouch was born March 23, 1863, in Kent County, Canada. Died November 25, 1933, at her home in Marlette, Michigan. She moved to Michigan with her parents when she was twelve years of age. Married Walter Crouch in 1899, and to them one son, Nile, was born. She joined the church in 1924, and remained a devoted member until her death. Leaves to mourn, her husband and son, many other relatives and friends. The funeral was conducted from the home by Elders Myron A. Carr and William Grice. Interment was in Marlette Cemetery.

JONES.—Salina Jones was born in Staffordshire, England, July 24, 1852; died at the home of her daughter in Kansas City, Kansas, December 23, 1933. She was the daughter of Elder Thomas and Caroline Charles. Came to America with her parents in 1864, and located at Kewanee, Illinois. She married John Jones, and moved to Bevier, Missouri, fifty-seven years ago. For forty-eight years they lived at Bevier and then moved to Kansas City. To them nine children were born, five sons and four daughters. Her husband, three sons, and one daughter precede her in death. Surviving are her children: Mrs. W. B. Richards, of Kansas City, Kansas; Mrs. Ben Davis, Bevier, Missouri; Alma Jones, David Jones, Mrs. Effie Bloodgood, all of Kansas City, and Joseph Charles, of Macon, Missouri, whom she reared. She leaves also six grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, and many friends. United with the church in May, 1869, and was faithful to the end. The funeral services were conducted at the church by Elder Ben S. Tanner.

KENNEDY.—Rodger Alexander Kennedy, son of Emma Smith and William F. Kennedy, was born November 5, 1897, at Independence, Missouri, and departed this life December 15, 1933, near Colorado Springs, Colorado. He became a member of the church when eight years of age, and was a graduate of William Chrisman High School, of Independence. September 18, 1918, he enlisted in the service of his country, and was honorably discharged, December 6. He was united in marriage to Helen Lindsey, December 31, 1918. This marriage was later dissolved. In 1929, he was married to Dorcas Kephart, and to this union was born one son, Rodger Allen. He leaves to mourn his departure besides his wife and son, who reside in Salt Lake City, Utah, a father, mother, and one sister, Mrs. Glenna Henderson, all of Independence, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted by Elder R. S. Salyards. Elder Joseph Luff preached the sermon, and interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

WILSON.—Wellington Wilson was born October 9, 1863, in Bruce County, Ontario, Canada. Died December 12, 1933, at his home in Winnipeg, Manitoba. Surviving are his wife, Matilda, and two daughters, Mrs. Hargrave, and Mrs. W. Panting, members of the church residing in Winnipeg Branch; a sister, Mrs. A. Pollon, and two brothers, J. T. and R. N., of the United States. Mr. Wilson united with the church February 26, 1904. He was ordained to the office of teacher in February, 1912, and was a faithful servant, one dearly loved by all his friends. In addition to his family, the Saints of Winnipeg branch mourn his departure for he was a regular church attendant. The funeral service was conducted by Elders V. H. Fisher and W. H. Pratt. Interment was in Bethel Cemetery, Treherne.

WILLERT.—Herman C. Willert was born October 17, 1860, to Frederick and Mina G. Willert, at Waterford, Racine County, Wisconsin, and departed this life at his home, south of Eagle Grove, December 16, 1933, after an illness of several weeks. When eight years of age, he, with his parents, moved to Iowa, where he grew to manhood. January 11, 1889, he was married to Bertha C. Garnaty, of Waterford, Wisconsin. He became a member of the church in July, 1906. He leaves to mourn his departure, his wife, and four children, Mrs. C. McBride, of Clarion, Anna V., Emma L., and Warren, all of Eagle Grove, Iowa. Funeral services were conducted at the Wilson Chapel, interment was made in Rosehill Cemetery. Elder Henry Castings, of Des Moines, was in charge of the service.

ORR.—Earline Freelove Larsen was born May 29, 1914, at Gladstone, Michigan, was baptized July 20, 1924, at Gladstone, by E. N. Burt, confirmed by A. M. Boomer. She later married Albert Orr, and to them was born a daughter, Constance Jean, on September 22, 1932. She, with her little daughter, and five others were burned to death in their home at Sault Sainte Marie, Michigan, December 8. It is said that she could have escaped from the burning building, but she remained to warn the others and help them escape; but it was impossible, and all lost their lives. She is survived by her husband, Albert Orr, and mother, Mrs. Otis Hicks, of Sault Sainte Marie. "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend."

Hand in hand with Latter Day Saintism goes the Saints' Herald. The two cannot be separated. There have been those who have felt that it could be done but later found that the Latter Day Saint without the Saints' Herald was bound, sooner or later, to drift. Fifty thousand Saints read the Herald each week. We want fifty thousand more to read it. That's why this special introductory offer is made. This offer probably will not be made again in years. Take advantage of it. It is good until midnight, January thirty-first, only.

This Offer Closes Positively January 31

PASTORS:

What better thing can you do during January than to interest every family of your congregation in the Saints' Herald. A Herald-reading congregation is a progressive enthusiastic congregation.

FRIENDS:

Are you a friend? If so you're interested in someone. Just try to figure out how you could be a better friend to that church member than to be sure that they read the Herald. It's easy in January.

YOU!

That's each of us—How much better missionary work could be done for the cost than to send the Herald to those you love or are interested in than to provide the Herald or to interest them in getting it?

January is Herald month. For thirty-one days we are offering the Saints' Herald at absolute cost to five-thousand new families. We have ten-thousand families reading the Herald regularly. We need at least five-thousand more. Won't you help? Make your group a one-hundred percent Herald-reading group. It builds spirituality, enthusiasm, religious appreciation, vision and conviction. We're depending on you to help in this great project. We know you will not fail us.

■ Heroic Giving

The congregation of our Grandview Branch in Kansas City, Kansas, deserves a special tribute of praise for their conduct over the holidays. The story was related by George Mesley, their pastor, who was deeply moved by the spirit of devotion among the people.

The Grandview congregation was $240 "in the red," as Brother Mesley put it in his conversation.

The day before Christmas, December 24, the people met for a special "White Gift" Christmas service. The "White Gifts" were to celebrate the birthday of the Savior. The sum of $237 was taken in.

And then tragedy stalked for this congregation, and for the deacon who had charge of the money. He could not deposit it in the bank because all banks were closed. While he was away his house burned and everything, the money included, was destroyed.

The following Thursday Brother Mesley sent a letter to the people about the loss. And there was another meeting for a gift service on Sunday, December 31. A total of $341 was taken in. What an act of faith on the part of that small but devoted congregation! With all the financial strains of Christmas, charity, and taxes falling on them at once, these good people raised over $600 for their church.

Brother Mesley believes that the best way of local financing is by direct gift; bazaars and other means take so much energy and consume so much money that never reaches the church. Once the people have learned the joy of giving for their church, he says, they will prefer that means of contributing to all others.

And the spirit of the Grandview people seems to bear out his idea.

■ He Takes the Herald

A friend came in to subscribe for the Herald the other day.

"We've got some company coming to see us," he said, "and they'd think it was funny if they didn't see the Herald lying around somewhere!"

That "company" must be wonderful people. We'd like to send them around to about 5,000 more Latter Day Saint homes and boost the Herald to a circulation of 15,000.

■ Place for Hosea

The speaker was addressing the gathering on "The Major and Minor Prophets." His discourse had already lasted more than an hour, and his audience was becoming restless.

"And now," said he, "we have discussed at great length the major prophets; and, coming to the minor prophets I ask you, What place shall we give to Hosea?"

To the consternation of all present, one of the listeners arose quickly, and, reaching for his hat, said: "He can have mine; I've got to go."—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

■ A Clean Slate

"There is no reason why the young should take up the quarrels of the old," said the Pigeon. "Before they live long they will have plenty of quarrels of their own!"

General Conference

The time of the assembling of the next General Conference is now only about three months away; and those weeks will pass quickly, for there is much to do in the way of preparation and time passes quickly for those busy in well-doing. Already plans for the program of the conference are well under way and frequent official conferences and discussions take place in the general offices.

Along with attention given to matters to come before the body and the quorums, and to the programs for the various component parts of the general assembly, there will be concern for the spiritual preparation for the conference, for its success, and for the welfare of the church. It is not too early to engage in regular meditation and prayer for the success of the conference, the cementing of the bonds of fraternity between and among the workers throughout the church. We submit to the ministry and members the charge to be diligent in devotions and to remember continually in prayer the needs of the conference and the ministry. Let us pray that from out the windows of heaven may be poured upon us blessings rich, abounding, and comforting. We need the sustaining grace of Divine guidance and association as we march along under the burdens of the work towards the achievement of our goals and ideals. Let us pray that the quorums of the ministry may be blessed and guided in their discussions of the problems of the church and directed towards wise and righteous solutions. Let us pray that the general officers shall be strengthened in their labors and vouchsafed wisdom in reaching necessary decisions. Let us pray that upon the delegates and visitors may be poured out an abundance of Divine Grace that will fortify courage, strengthen resolve, and cause their feet to stand firmly in the right and advancement and progress of the church.

On our knees let us face the future and the tasks of the church with fortitude, courage, and with an upward and onward looking faith!

A New Era For the Church

IF THE WORLD enters upon a new era, it is equally true of the church. Conditions will not ever be exactly as they were before. Changing conditions in the world bring new dangers and new opportunities to the church, under the principle laid down in revelation that the Saints "cannot withdraw themselves completely from a qualified dependence upon their Gentile neighbors." (Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.)

How shall this era be met? It is quite possible for us to make it an era of advancement and achievement. One must be very foolish or very much inspired to predict in detail the developments of the next decade. But we may form an estimate—and in making that estimate, let it be remembered: "No one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity." Faith looks always for things upon which to predicate hope, and hope inspires active service. There are "signs and portents" that inspire hope for the church in the new era before it.

GREATER UNITY AND SPIRITUALITY

This spirit of hope for the future is well gathered up in the report of one general church officer and missionary who writes:

"It will, I believe, interest you to know that I have just rounded out the best year of my ministry. There is growing with me, furthermore, the deepest conviction that there is for the church light and power and deliverance. This conviction I find growing also in other men and in increasing numbers of the members of the church, particularly of the more intelligent class. Indeed, I may say further, this conviction is pointing itself unmistakably toward a more definite and virile leadership. Without any doubt it is up to us to take advanced grounds in our ministry and in the administration of the spiritual concerns of the church."

Reports from far and near, coming from members of the ministry, men of judgment and discernment, indicate a greatly improved spiritual condition among the Saints. This was reflected in the General Conference of 1932. Adversity and suffering and the serious reflection incident to conditions thrust upon us during recent years have brought humility and reconsecration to many of the church members. There is increased devotion, and out of the sometime melancholy and despair of the past few years a new upspringing of courage and hope, as voiced in the letter just quoted.

The greatest obstacle to progress has never been outside opposition; it has been internal dissension. We have had our years of friction and controversy, very costly in money, happiness, and spirituality. Fortunately the major lines of past divisions have to a great degree faded away. Many are minded to forgive and forget. Few of the local churches now are torn with dissension. There appears to be a greater degree of unity than for many years past. This is encouraging, as only a united people can successfully attempt to perform the tasks ahead of us. Every effort should be made to conserve and increase this good fellowship. An especial responsibility rests upon ordained men to set an example of cooperation and good will of working together in peace. Christ has put us all "under bonds to keep the peace." Contention is too costly—we cannot afford to indulge in it.

REVIVAL OF THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT

An encouraging sign is the rather evident reawakening of the missionary spirit. Local men have felt responsibility falling upon them because of the depletion of the general missionary force. A missionary number of the Herald recently published (December 12, 1933) contained reports of various intensive missionary endeavors. Moreover it contained summarized statements of "tried and tested missionary methods" that any group of local men may very well heed and apply to their own missionary projects.

We must make the era before us one of greatly quickened activity along missionary lines. Local ordained men everywhere should consider that fact very seriously. Moreover, at the earliest possible moment (consistent with the successful financing of the church debts) we should begin to renew and rebuild our general missionary force. There are young men who should even now be in the field. There are older men released from appointment who should be returned to their work. This should be one of the most outstanding and certainly one of the happiest achievements of the era before us.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Nurses' Training Course for College Women

The new course at the School for Nurses, Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri, is in line with the best professional practices of today. Nursing, both bedside and institutional, is on more of a professional basis than ever before. This requires higher standards.

In harmony with these requirements, the Church School for Nurses admits young women with a minimum of one year's college training. There may be many young women in the church with one or two years of college training at Graceland or in some other college, who would like the opportunity for a course in the School for Nurses.

The three years' training is on a very high plane;

Men You Ought to Know

PAUL M. HANSON

Of the Quorum of Twelve

To list the countries that Apostle Paul M. Hanson has visited in carrying on his work for the church would take a paragraph in itself. In the passage of the years he has given a larger part of his time to foreign missions than any other man in his quorum.

Brother Hanson is noted for his keenly analytical mind, and his excellent scholarship, especially in the field of American archaeology, which has been devoted to the background and interpretation of the Book of Mormon. Those who have had the privilege of working with him testify to the charm of his personality, his loyalty and kindness, and the rich pleasure of associating with him.

the expenses are very small and the opportunities for preparation and service excellent.

Any young woman with one or more years of college training at Graceland or elsewhere, who may be interested can secure full particulars on request. Next year's class is to begin in the summer of 1934 and is now being enrolled.

Publicity Agents—Registration for 1934

All publicity agents must register for the year 1934 in order to transact business for the Herald Publishing House, and to secure their commissions. Every agent to be recognized should write asking for the "Credentials Card," and giving his or her permanent address. An endorsement of the application, or a letter of recommendation by the pastor or some other local officer, should accompany the application. When these conditions are satisfactorily met, a "Credentials Card" will be sent to the applicant to authorize him to do business. The commission rates are also stated on the back of the card.

WE BELIEVE

The Trinity has always been difficult for most of us to understand and perhaps it always will be. How there can be only one God, and yet three persons separately identified with the Deity is a mystery almost incomprehensible. Yet if we may take an illustration from life, it will not be as hard as it seems.

Let us take yourself for an example, and see how many multiple personalities are contained in you. To your aged father you remain even today, a rather headstrong but very promising and likable youngster. In his eyes you will never entirely grow up. But to the small son that calls you daddy you are a giant, hero, and benefactor of extraordinary physical and mental power. In your church you are regarded as a gentleman and something of a philanthropist; but to your office boy you are the tightwad that has recently cut his wage on account of the depression. All these and many other personalities are shadowy reflections of your real self, the one that resides secret, silent, and invisible behind the walls of flesh that imprison your spirit. All these reflections of you are true, so far as they go, but they are incomplete. And only some few persons who have known you for many years have any idea as to what the entire man is like. In other words you are a great and inexplicable mystery. You are many, but you are also one. You are divided to the world, but within yourself you achieve a quiet synthesis which gives unity to your whole existence.

Perhaps the Trinity of God can be explained in some way like this. God himself is the Absolute, the Ultimate. He is the uncaused Cause. He is ultimate Origin, the beginning of all beginnings, the end of all ends. He is infinite, omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent. We cannot understand him, for we are so little. But our understandings do reach out towards him, and we know something of him. Jesus was God made manifest in the flesh, the historical personage, the incarnation, the personality of God represented in tangible human terms. The Holy Ghost is the spirit of God which is not limited in time or space, which can come to all men and be made known to their understandings. All these three are separate manifestations, yet they are one. And today we are to talk about the third member of the Trinity, the Holy Ghost, or the Holy Spirit as it is often called. The Epitome of Faith of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints states: "We believe in the Holy Ghost, whose function it is to guide all men unto the truth."

III—"In the Holy Spirit"

A Short Radio Talk by L. L.

We believe and testify that everyone who earnestly and honestly seeks may have the experience promised in the New Testament. John the Baptist told his followers of Jesus, who should baptize them "with the Holy Ghost and with fire." When Jesus was preparing his disciples for the time when he should no longer be with them, he admonished them, "And when they bring you unto the synagogues, and unto magistrates, and powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer; for the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say." Again on another occasion he said, "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." In the Acts of the Apostles we are given the words of the resurrected Christ, "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

The great promise extended to Christians of all time was given by the Apostle Peter, who declared, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord shall call." This promise includes the people of the present day as well as those of any other age.

That we are included in this promise, we know not alone by the Scriptures but by experience. We are all the children of a kind and loving heavenly Father who will, if we are righteous and obedient, pour out immeasurable blessings upon us. If religion were only historical, and all the great spiritual experiences were to have been given exclusively to the people of past ages, then it would be no wonder that men should neglect it and turn to other things. If we could not share in God's goodness, but had to get along with the testimonies handed down to us by other people, then religion would mean nothing important in our lives.

But religion is not a thing of the past. It is as vital and significant for the present time as for any period of the world's history. God is not alone the God of the dead, but he is also the God of the living. And many people all over the world today will testify of their experience with the Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit is the manifestation of God that all men may have the (Continued on page 62)

Pauline at Home

By Leta B. Moriarty

WHEN I was in high school I belonged to a chorus, and we sang a number of folk songs. I well remember the day we began to practice "Home, Sweet Home." We sang the first two verses with fairly good expression and inflection and began the third:

"How sweet 'tis to sit 'neath a fond father's smile,
And the care of a mother to soothe and beguile!
Let others delight mid new pleasures to roam,
But give me, oh, give me, the pleasures of home!
Home! Home! sweet, sweet—"

"I hate that song!" Pauline, the soprano at my right, hissed in my ear, Pauline who was generally so friendly and jolly!

"Why?" I was almost paralyzed with astonishment.

"Because it's a lie!"

"Oh, Pauline—"

"—My home isn't like that. It isn't nice or sweet or anything, but miserable and nagging—." The usually smiling lips were curled in high scorn. "And I won't sing the old song!"

"Why—why, I'm sorry, Pauline. I like my own home fine, and my family is the nicest ever!" What else could I say? After all she was sixteen, a whole year older than myself.

SINCE THEN I have known a great many Paulines, girls who have few fond memories of home or family.

In the girl's inability to free herself from home ties and demands—I speak here of free in the sense of a normal girl growing out of childhood and being recognized as a mature individual in her home—lies one of the important problems of adolescence. Today that problem is being given emphasis by psychiatrists. In her book Psychology of the Adolescent, Doctor Leta Hollingsworth speaks of this problem under the term "psychological weaning." She stresses the girl's need of freeing herself from childish dependence on her parents. Professor Ernest R. Groves strikes also at the need of emotional independence, going so far as to suggest that the adolescent should be graduated from home into independence of attitudes and interests just as he is graduated from school. Ruth Shonle Cavan and Jordan True Cavan in their book, Building a Girl's Personality, devote an entire chapter to the girl and her family.

People who have studied this problem for years tell us that the family is a group of individuals, some older, some younger, intimately associated in the Children are weaned twice; once from the bottle, and once from the apron-strings. Both experiences are likely to be unpleasant for them and their parents.

The birth of a personality is a delicate point in the long range of human experience. It should be tended by charity, protected by tolerance, watched over by love, and upheld by faith. And the home which forms the setting should be pleasant, beautiful, and permeated by an atmosphere of kindness.

home. They are generally bound together by such mutual considerations as food, warmth, clothing, shelter, education, religion, and politics. In this group the child grows into adolescence and begins to show signs of maturing. At this period in his life it is not in his power to ignore his family; he either loves or hates them. He has not yet secured his emotional independence from them so that he can snap his fingers and say: "I don't care what they think or say." This is particularly true of the girl. Even in America today the daughter of the family is not accorded the same degree of latitude and independence, as a general rule, as the son. The mothers of many girls were reared under a strict code of feminine dependence, and find it hard to adjust themselves to the world of 1934 and daughter's wishes to be considered as an almost-grown-up person.

A few days ago I asked a group of girls in their middle teens: "What do you think about when I suggest the word "Home?" The answers were various: "Why, I think of my family, of course." "My parents." "A house and furniture and outdoors, a garden." "A place of rest and refuge from trouble." "Myself and the things I do to help and not to help." "How we—all our family—act."

So "Home" connotes many things to our girls. To some it means love and understanding and comfort and loyal support. To others it means reproach, criticism, nagging, and contention. Almost always they associate synonymously the terms home and family. They as well as we, hear a great deal of talk about home, the present-day home being the basis of society, the foundation of Zion. They listen to sermons about the sanctity of the home and the contentment and joy and love that should be found there. And then they look into the heart of their own home and family—and some of them wonder.

What a wonderful blessing a wise, good, sympathetic mother is to a girl at this time of growing-up! I know because I have one. And there are many like her although, of course, to me, they could never be quite so young at heart and sympathetic as my own mother.

NEVERTHELESS, I sorrow to hear such speeches dropped from girlish lips as the following:

"How glad I shall be when I am out of school and earning my own living! Then I hope to have some say about my own affairs. Mother just can't realize that I am growing up. She treats me as if I were a three-year-old when I'm eighteen." It is gray-eyed Hazel speaking.

"I think I understand mother's position, but I'm quite sure she doesn't understand mine. Have I been expecting too much of her?" Eileen is a sensible sixteen-year-old whose ambition is to be a doctor. She has a set of wholesome attitudes, a helpful sense of humor, and is sturdy in physique, intellect and spirit.

"When I get away to school, I'm going to cut loose!" announces a vivacious high school sophomore with a toss of her head. "I intend to have some fun! I'm tired of this too-much-under-the-thumb-ness!"

"Can I leave home when I'm eighteen according to State law? I'm awfully tired living there, and sometimes wonder if I'll stand two more years of it!" Jane is just entering her sixteenth year.

These girls want their mothers to understand them, to trust them, to put them "on their own," assisting only with kindly supervision. Sometimes they are inclined to resent the all-too-protective attitude of parents, particularly the mother. They want and they need other friends besides their own families, girl friends and boy friends. Many of the Paulines in the world are saying today: "I do love my family, but I believe I could love them more if I could get away from them for awhile."

Are you, leader and teacher, ready to help your girls solve their home problems? Are you equipped with wisdom the spirit of prayer, and common sense to cope with such posers as these? Here are a few which have lately come to me:

"How can I make my mother understand that I am growing up?"

"Why should I stay at home and do the things you want your girls to do? Nobody stays home at our house, and it's lonesome."

NEWS BRIEFS

Missionary Spirit Alive at Sperry

"Sperry Saints are anxious to see their friends and neighbors come to a knowledge of the gospel, and are encouraged by their interest in local meetings. May the time speedily come when all will 'come to the unity of the faith,' and be of 'one heart and one mind,'" writes the Sperry, Oklahoma, correspondent. Could the missionary spirit be better described?

Apostle Roy S. Budd recently held a two-week series of meetings there, firing the Saints with new purpose and zeal and bringing truth to the minds of their friends. Six candidates were baptized on the closing day by Elder Ward Rumsey. Local church members think that Brother Budd's meetings have done untold good in their community. Tulsa and Skiatook Saints took part in and enjoyed the services.

Paul N. Craig Is New Radio Director

Elder Paul N. Craig, of Independence, Missouri, has been appointed radio director of church programs over KMBC, by the First Presidency. He succeeds Elder John F. Sheehy in this office, who after a long period of service, has been released because of pressure of other responsibilities.

Three Family Circles Made Complete in the Gospel

As a result of the missionary work of Elder Roscoe Davey at Madison, Wisconsin, early in December, four adults were baptized into the church. The addition of these four completed three family circles in the faith of latter days.

Creston, Iowa, Fortunate in Visitors

Creston Branch, Lamoni Stake, has been the fortunate recipient of numerous helpful visits from Lamoni visitors and others in the past few months. Among those who have visited and contributed to the program of speaking are Elders Walter Johnson, M. F. Cooper, T. J. Bell, John Lane, President F. M. McDowell, and the stake president, Blair Jensen.

Pledge to Be a Missionary Branch

Dayton, Ohio, Saints pledge themselves, under the leadership of their pastor, to make theirs a missionary branch. They are deeply concerned about carrying the gospel to their friends and neighbors by precept and example.

This congregation rejoiced to have Missionary John R. Grice with them, December 17, and members were present from Springfield, Columbus, and Lancaster, to hear him speak.

Frank Gray Wins in London Election

The election of Frank Gray as alderman in ward four, London, Ontario, was sustained and his majority of one on the voting day early in December, was increased to twenty over his election opponent by a recount of the votes. The story of the election, also a photograph of Brother Gray appeared in The Free Press (London) December 16.

Brother Gray is a man who has many responsibilities. He is head of the London Church School, holds the office of high priest, and is one of the branch presidency of London congregation.

Independence Saints Go to Church

Saints of Independence are enjoying the two-week missionary series which opened January 1, in eight congregations.

Nauvoo's Landmarks Draw Thousands of Visitors

Six thousand visitors registered at the Mansion House, Nauvoo, Illinois, during the summer months. Many distinguished visitors were among them, the most notable being Governor Horner and United States Senator Dieterich, James Cromwell, of the State Highway Department, and Judge Orr, of Carthage.

Fifty-one people from Utah and Idaho composed the third excursion from the Rocky Mountain region. They were served dinner and supper at the Nauvoo House by the women's department of the Reorganized Church, and taken in automobiles to Carthage to visit the old jail.

Pointed Paragraphs

Much sorrow is caused in this world because so many girls would rather marry a lively sinner than a stupid saint.

Sinning is so easy. It takes no enterprise nor imagination. The traps are all set, waiting for you. Any simpleton can step into them.

The devil stands outside his place of business, smiling. "Young Sir," he says, "I have some bright new snares inside, the very latest. Will you step inside and try your luck with them? It will cost you nothing." And when the young man comes out he has bargained away some trifle—perhaps his soul!

There is one good thing about the straight and narrow path. It may be steep and covered with sharp rocks, but if any snakes crawl on it, you can easily see and avoid them.

A young man was singing, "Down with drink!" and at the end of each verse he buried his nose in the foam of his stein and drank a deep draught. "Down with drink!" he sang again and again, and fell asleep. Then he was rolled outside into the gutter to cool off. Another man, passing, pointed at him and said, "Down—with drink!" He who puts drink down in this manner will go down with it.

At twenty she sat with her friends, playing bridge. "How long the years are, stretching ahead of me!" she sighed. "What will I do with them?" Today, at forty, she is sitting alone, no farther along in development than at twenty. Her friends are scattered. A soiled and worn pack of cards lies on the table before her. "Twenty years!" she laments. "Gone! What have I done with them?"

Nothing is more pathetic than a man who is married to a woman who used to be beautiful, and has nothing else to recommend her.

Are You a "Mere Echoist"?

Many people are so unused to thinking for themselves that they would be frightened at the appearance in consciousness of a thought really their own. It has been said that "animals think not at all and some men a little." Most of the thinking of the world is carried on by a few individuals. The rest of the world are mere echoists. . . .

Because of lack of independence of thought, superstitions have always hindered the world's progress. Even today the number 13 is so ominous that you

This Year's Big Event

The coming General Conference in April will be this year's important event for the young people, as it is for the whole church.

School studies and employment will keep numbers of young leaders from attending the conference, but for the numbers who are able to come a cordial reception and some interesting activities are planned.

Each week between now and conference time there will be articles on this page concerning plans for the young people. Be sure to look for them.

cannot get a room number 13 at a hotel, and you can scarcely have thirteen at a table. Friday is considered so unlucky that some steamship companies hesitate to make sailing dates on that day of the week. Farmers still plant their potatoes "in the moon," and old women carry potatoes in their pockets to cure rheumatism. Only a few days ago, I saw a man who had a rattlesnake's tail in his hatband to ward off rheumatism. Clairvoyants and fortune-tellers apparently find plenty of dupes, if we are to judge by the wealth of their advertising. Thus on every hand we find ample evidence that people are sinning and being sinned against simply because of their own unwillingness or inability to think.—R. L. Lyman in The Mind at Work.

Try This on Yourself

In one of his books Professor Pitkin, of Columbia University, has listed ten of the strongest characteristics of a highly intelligent person. (How do you rank?) In his opinion they are:

1. Keen curiosity along many lines.
2. A desire to investigate.
3. A tendency to analyze.
4. A fairly active imagination.
5. Especially even performance.
6. Concentration on dominant interest.
7. A fine selective memory.
8. Patience with details.
9. Interest in reflection and observation.
10. A very modest opinion of oneself.

Everything proceeds in an orderly way. The oak comes from an acorn, and not from a walnut; the chicken comes from an egg of one sort, a duck from another.—J. Elliott Ross, in Truths to Live By.

Politeness Pays

It is extremely stupid to be bad-mannered. For it is the easiest way of getting enemies, of laying up trouble for yourself, and of making the whole process of living harder for you and everybody around you. It is like trying to run an automobile without grease. Unintelligent. In every sense, except the strictly criminal one, you can—if you have charming manners—get away with murder. Lacking them, everybody is likely to suspect you of it anyway, though in reality you may be a blood relation of the Archangel Gabriel. . . .

Rudeness is undoubtedly at the bottom of much of our generation's unhappiness. We get very little out of life because we try too hard to measure what we put into it. We don't recognize the importance of giving; especially the small things that matter. For it is those little things that are so all-important—the little, everyday amenities and politenesses that are second nature to some gracious people. But they are something that may be acquired, and which are certainly worth acquiring.—Diana Bourbon, in The Woman's Journal.

I Read A Book

"I read a book last week.

The author dipped his facile pen in fire
And seared raw facts of life into my brain.

Up from the mire he dragged dark truth

And flaunted it. He made all youth
Abnormal, all love lust, and God a jest.
And as I read, I knew his soul was warped;

His mind must know despair, thinking
all truth

Was ugliness laid bare.

"And then I read another book.

The author sat upon the very throne of Truth

And used a pen far mightier than a sword.

He wrote of Youth triumphant, clean and fine.

He wrote of Sin, compassion in each line.

He wrote of Love—it blossomed like a rose

Sprung from good soil. He wrote of One,

Giver of that great Trinity of Gifts, Life, Love, and Beauty, and when he was done,

I somehow knew my stumbling feet had trod

The trail he'd blazed for me to his Friend, God."

Independence--The Mother of the West

By M. H. Morgan

THE FRONTIER TOWN of Independence was so closely associated with the Santa Fe trade in the early days, that the history of one necessarily involves a history of the other, although pack trains of mules were moving on towards Santa Fe long before Independence was established.

Santa Fe claims to be even older than Saint Augustine, Florida, usually conceded to be the oldest town in America, for the Spaniards, establishing their headquarters at Santa Fe in 1542, found a large pueblo already functioning.

In the early days, Santa Fe secured all its trade goods from interior Old Mexico and Vera Cruz, via mule and burro trains over the mountains, or by boat through the Caribbean—a very expensive practice which caused calico alone to sell for $2 or $3 a vara, the Spanish equivalent of a yard of 33 inches.

Zebulon Pike, exploring the country under government contract in 1804, reported that a merchant by the name of Morrison had sent out a French creole, one LaLand, with a pack of goods on his back. LaLand, traversing the Platte Valley, had succeeded in reaching Santa Fe. To Zebulon Pike, then, belongs the credit for the impetus given the idea of trading with Santa Fe over the "petrified waves" of the prairies.

In 1812 the first organized American trade expedition reached Santa Fe; William Becknell, its leader, being known as the "father" of the Santa Fe Trail. The goods were diamond-hitched on the backs of mules, some of the trains consisting of from 150 to 300 pack animals, five or six mules to a man; sometimes as high as fifteen.

In '22 the first wagons were taken across the plains. These wagons were hauled by teams of mules. In 1832, five years after Independence was established (which was in 1827) bull teams or oxen were employed, and a government house had been located there to serve the trade.

Kaw and Osage Indians were the first owners of the site of Independence and of Jackson County, the Kaws being blanket Indians; and even within the memory of old-timers of this day, assembled each fall in large camps along the river bends, to gather persimmons which grew in great profusion there. This fruit pulp was mixed with ground corn into a sort of bread, and was also preserved for winter use. The Osages were said to be the finest Indians on the continent, few of their warriors being less than six feet tall.

The hills and valleys of Independence and Kansas City were forested slopes of white and black walnut, cottonwood, linn, ash, elm, hickory and many other kinds of trees, all essential to the needs of the trail traffic; with plenty of crab apples, papaws, hazelnuts and pecans. A vast ledge of blue Bethany limestone substructures the entire country thereabout, with a rich depth of top soil that will grow anything.

The Missouri, "Big Muddy," scouring the upper slopes of the Rocky Mountains from almost 2,000 miles away, deposited its silt and gravel in constantly changing formations, and with the same ferocity ate out other tracts already formed, carrying great trees down on its rapid current; and so great and rapid were the changes, that houses erected on its shores in the early days would now be out in the middle of the river; the river bed being altogether different from what it was then.

The first ferry across the Missouri in the vicinity of Kansas City (established by a Mr. Younger—progenitor of the Cole Younger associated many years later with the James boys) consisted merely of two canoes, lashed together. To anyone who has seen the current in the Missouri, this would seem a very inadequate and dangerous means of traversing that muddy flood. Just when this ferry was established is not known, but it was in active operation in 1828.

This, then, was the setting for one of the greatest dramas in history, one which was never duplicated in any other country on the globe, and never can be repeated.

As early as 1795 Daniel Morgan Boone, son of the famous scout, wintered for twelve seasons in a small log hut on the banks of the Blue, a tributary of the Missouri, at the site of what is now Independence, but was then Spanish territory—the Louisiana Purchase not being made until 1803. Here, sheltered alike from storms and unfriendly Indians, he prepared his skins for rafting down the Missouri to Saint Louis, a distance of something like 400 or 500 miles by water where a large branch of the American Fur Company, owned and operated since 1809 by John Jacob Astor, had been established, and he told of being set upon by Indians whenever he beached his canoe, until they finally stole all his furs and set him adrift without anything to show for his entire winter's work. Making his way as swiftly as possible to Saint Louis, where he knew the Indians would have to sell the pelts, he awaited them, and when they appeared, they were made to turn them over to their rightful owner. Boone's body now lies in an unmarked grave in a Kansas City cemetery—unmarked only because it cannot be located.

As early, too, as 1819, the first steamboat to pass the future site of Independence was the Western Engineer, used by the Long Expedition. This was twenty-five years before the steam whistle was invented; but the boat had an escape pipe projecting from the bow in the shape of a huge serpent, painted black, with a red mouth and tongue. Whenever a band of Indians appeared, this serpent was made to spit and hiss and bellow, from which the Indians fled in terror. In 1832, the second steamboat, the Yellowstone, tied up at the Independence Landing. From 1840 on, steamboats became plentiful. Before that and long afterward, pirogues, batteaus, canoes, mackinaws, bull boats, longhorns and keel boats were in use; the latter being supplied with many oars and being laboriously cordelled by thirty or forty men. It required a month for a keel boat to negotiate the trip between Saint Louis and Independence.

In 1827, five families, choosing to remain on the site where Independence now stands, formed the nucleus of what later became one of the most important frontier towns in America, earning for herself the cognomen of "The Mother of the West," since the two great western trails converged there; the Oregon, officially opened in '43, traversing some 2,000 miles or more of northwestern territory, and the Santa Fe Trail, operating busily in '31 and, plunging 800 miles into southern wilderness and desert. Beside these two main trails were many offshoots, such as the overland stage route of Civil War days; the Utah or Mormon Trail; the Bozeman Trail; the Victory Highway; the old Chisholm Cattle Trail; the California Trail and the long isolated trail from Independence to Chihuahua.

There was also a water route from Independence to San Francisco. Embarking at the Independence Landing, about six miles from the city proper, one was carried down the Missouri to Saint Louis, and from there, down the Mississippi to New Orleans. There one took ocean passage either around the Horn, or crossed the Isthmus of Panama to the Pacific Ocean and up the western coast of California.

The first overland mail and stage coaches ("hoss-power Pullmans"), controlled by Russell, Majors & Waddell, that started from Independence for Santa Fe were installed in the spring of '49. At first they ran once a month, but finally one left each point every day until about '68, when the railroads as far as the mountains were completed. These coaches were made in Concord, New Hampshire, and shipped to California around the Horn, and from there to Santa Fe and Independence. They were made water tight, as many rivers must be forded, and held eight passengers comfortably, with eight guards on top; the trip occupying about two weeks. Besides the passengers and guards, there was a messenger or conductor who remained with the coach during the entire trip, and a driver who was changed eight times on the trip at stations prepared for this purpose. No rest could be obtained on the two week trip except as one might sleep sitting up, and the fare was hardtack, thick bacon and a terrible black drug known as coffee. This was not only plain fare, but the usual plains fare; as the coaches drew into northern New Mexico, however, the tired travelers were given fresh fruits, delicious vegetables, roast chickens, etc. Romance and adventure abounded, and there were also daily hazards, from Indians, blizzards, road agents, etc.

Abe Majors, one of the firm, with headquarters in Independence, was a unique character, and his Merchants' Express was the largest transportation enterprise ever organized under one administration; his bull teams being on every trail between Independence and the Rockies. He became one of the two stage line Kings of the west; the other being Ben Holladay, who not only ran 5,000 miles of daily stage coaches, but sixteen first class passenger steamers plying the Pacific from San Francisco to Oregon, Panama, Japan and China.

About 1832 the work of gathering the Indians on to reservations was commenced, and while it was a long time before this was successfully accomplished, those so assembled received annuities from the government, which monies poured into Independence in a golden flood, enriching its merchants. The great Fur Companies at Saint Louis, Saint Joseph and Westport (near Independence) desired their share; so sent out large pack trains of mules, via Independence, to the Rockies, followed often by wagons drawn by six or eight mules. These wagons contained goods for the Indians, which would be delivered to the numerous posts dotting the plains and Indians, bringing their peltries would barter for these trade goods. On their return the wagons would bring back the hides; so the Fur Companies did not wait for Mahomet to go to the Mountain; they went to Mahomet.

The traffic through Independence became immense, and so great that local firms became very rich; smithies worked night and day; farmers furnished fresh, salted and smoked meats as there were no packing houses for a long while; they furnished dried fruits and vege- (Continued on page 50.)

Shall We Survive? Or Shall We Perish?

By J. A. Koehler

PLATO said that every form of society perishes by its own inherent vices as much as by external assault. And that seems to be as true of Churches as of any other form of society. The Church is as subject to decay from its own inherent vices as is The State. The entrance of "grievous wolves" into "the flock" was taken by Paul to be a sign that the flock should not be spared. (See Acts 20: 28-30.) And John's messages to the seven churches of Asia bears witness to this same truth. It was the growing influence of the Nicolaitans, of those who said they were Jews and were not, of those who made Baloc a stumblingblock, of the Jezebels who prophesied false prophecies—it was the presence of such dominant influences in the church that wrecked it.

The greatest influence is not always exerted by the men of power—that is to say, by the men of office. Sometimes there are sinister powers behind the throne. Sometimes The Best are not The Strongest. It has often been so when the populace was an ignorant spineless mass. And the danger of destruction, in such cases, is always present, even to The Church.

The Church can survive provided only that The Best of its manhood is at once The Strongest. If the influence of the good is outweighed by the influence of the bad, certainly the work of the church must perish. The Church, to survive, must be composed of members who are capable of discriminating the good from the bad; and who are sufficiently devoted to its interests to give positive support to what they know to be right.

CITIZENSHIP AND AUTHORITY

To answer the questions, Shall we Survive? or Shall we Perish? we must take into account the development of The Social Mind which is the central fact of social evolution. Society has become self-conscious, and capable of self-evaluation; and the thinking of the populace has become a real factor in the reshaping of social institutions. It is destined to become the dominant factor. And that means that in answering these questions we must take into account the manner in which The Best must come to dominate the life of the Church if it is to dominate it at all.

If in our endeavors to make The Church what God wishes it to be, we should proceed on the old principle of "authority" as it operated in early society—whether in The Church or in The State—we shall perish. But if we proceed on the new principle of "Citizenship" as it is coming to operate both in Church and in State, we may survive.

In past ages, when the voices of the priests were regarded as the voice of God ipse dixit—the age of blind "obedience"—it may have been possible for the Church to survive through the lone principle of "authority." But in this age of universal franchise, in this age of self-government by free peoples, in this age of new thought habits and of new attitudes toward "authority," we shall perish if we ignore the bearings that the will of the constituency has upon the life of The Church.

Remember, the relations of the governor to the governed have changed with the passing of time. In the days of subject peoples, ignorance, and moral incompetency presented no such dangers as arise from ignorance and moral incompetency in self-determining peoples. Israel, under Moses, was quite a different problem from Israel under Pharaoh. The principle of citizenship had begun to operate in the life of that people. And what grief this man of God had to bear because of the assininity of his people. Moses was The Best; but he was not always The Strongest. Sometimes the Korahs, Dathans, and Abirams were more influential than The Prophets. And you know the consequences.

A NEW VOICE OF AUTHORITY

We should know by now that the principle of "Rule by Divine Right" belongs to the past. Bonds which once operated to solidify peoples do not operate in the same way today. "Kinship" has almost entirely faded out of the picture. Citizenship; self-determination; free moral will; the authority of the understanding of the populace—this has come to take its place in the affairs of The Church as well as in the affairs of The State. The Divine right of this age is a popular will based upon an appreciation of the divine will. And the operation of such an enlightened moral will in the affairs of The Church is the sole condition of its survival.

This truth has been emphasized over and over again in the messages which have come to this Church from the pens of its prophets. Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2, 3 gives an instance of what I mean. It was the "transgressions" of my people; it was their unpreparedness to exercise their new powers of citizenship; it was their lack of knowledge (their ignorance) that defeated, for the time being, the purposes of God concerning The Church.

This Church, like any other social institution, rests on a psychological ground work. Its achievements depend upon the ethical appreciations its "citizens" have of human rights. There can be no Kingdom, no Zion, no virile Church in this age of citizenship, so long as Church men walk in the dark; so long as they make their choices in ignorance.

And, if I mistake not, this is the significance of the reply of our present president when, on one occasion as he was pressed for an answer to the question: "Is this a revelation from God?" the substance of his reply was: "Look it over and judge for yourselves."

THE METHOD OF AUTHORITY

"Go ye therefore and TEACH..." That is the method of authority—to win men to the ways of God. And see how this principle is reaffirmed in Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2, 3: "That my people may be TAUGHT..." "And KNOW." That they may come to build The Kingdom of their own free moral will. By what other method of authority is the building of a community of free moral will possible? And any priest who does not have time to learn and to teach does not have time enough to be a Shepherd to the people.

Remember, "Herds" may be driven; but "Flocks" must be led.

In this Church, a Church which says it believes in the command of God to organize A School for the ministry, and to delve in the Social Sciences, it is difficult to account for the cultural laziness of so many men of the ministry; or for their literary tastes. How can such men be the life of The Church?

My own explanation of this delinquency is this, in part—the fact that we have not come to apprehend the place that the authority of "citizenship" has in the affairs of The Kingdom. A citizen is one who exercises the rights and fulfills the duties of "A member," a functioning part, of society. Only "citizenship" can eventuate in "The Kingdom."

One evidence of this lack of appreciation of the relation of "citizenship" to "Kingdom" is the manner in which we try to shift responsibilities that rest upon our shoulders to other shoulders. We act as if it makes no difference at all whether we have knowledges of our own or not. Always, we are asking, What does X or Y or Z think about it? When, all the while, the fate of the church is being decided by what WE think or do not think about it.

What does a rule of the Church which is not understood by the Church amount to? Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2 gives the answer. Rather than being the bases of social unity, it becomes a bone of contention, with all of the spiritual fatalities that grow out of internal religious contention.

And what does "the following" of an unenlightened "citizenry" amount to in The Church? No odds how authoritatively a prophet may have spoken. You have the answer in the circumstances of the work of the Church as it is today. The flattery of fools can never take the place of the sagacity of sages. Where the people of the Church have no vision, they perish—at least, Church peoples who claim the "rights" of citizenship.

The attempt to shift the priestly responsibilities "to know" to other shoulders, is an indication of one of three things: (1) mental incompetency; (2) moral delinquency; or (3) too much other business to attend to the business of The Kingdom. One of two things seems to have happened to some men: (1) either they have reverted to primitive types, or (2) they have not yet risen above the level of culture where law is a command imposed by a superior instead of an expression of the will of those who choose for themselves on rational grounds to obey it. And such a following can never be a credit nor an aid to a prophet of The Kingdom.

MASTERS OF OUR OWN FATE

If we had fulfilled the command given in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21, we should have seen long ago that the evolution of social institutions exhibits the development of The Social Mind—the mind of the citizenry gradually arriving at the point of self-determination. We should have seen that man is coming to be the master of his own social fate. We should have seen that the law of natural selection which applies to physical organisms does not apply in the same way to social organisms. We should know that the fate of society, and particularly of The Church, is not determined by forces outside its "citizenry," and over which it can exercise no control. We should have seen that the fate of The Church is decided by forces which are within itself and which it may control for its own ends.

I speak now particularly of our economic destiny—man must shape his own social destiny by the exercise of his own free moral will. This is a truth which the prophets of The Restoration have tried over and over again to bring to the understanding of church peoples.

LEADERSHIP

What kind of "leadership" is it possible to provide a free people? A citizenry? A company of free moral agents? Obviously, only the kind of leadership it is competent to "follow."

Out of the Darkness

HOW STRANGE it seemed to be sitting in a show with a man who was not Greg! Larry drew her arms out of her coat sleeves, and removed her hat. Two masculine hands carefully laid the coat over the back of the seat. They were fat hands and rather red and rough, but the fingernails were newly-manicured.

She had not really wanted to see this movie, but, well, she did not have the heart to turn Mr. Harvey Peterson down when he asked her. He had always been so kind and jolly around the house. And so the girl smiled gaily at her companion and settled into her place beside him.

Her surprise had known no bounds two days before when Mr. Peterson followed her into the hall after dinner, lowered his voice to a hoarse whisper, and asked how she would like to go to a show. He was very earnest and seemed exceedingly desirous of fulfilling her slightest wish, and she had rather playfully confessed herself a devotee of a certain actor.

"Why he's playing this week at the Elite!" joyfully exclaimed Mr. Peterson. Larry was horrified—she had not known the picture was in town. "Want to see it?" he went on before she had had time to catch her breath. And so she had accepted the invitation.

"Who ever thought of having a date with a man of his age?" she asked of Carmen in the privacy of her own room an hour or so later. "What shall I do? I never had a date with the middle-aged before. Shall I be gay, or babyish, or cute? or shall I be very coy and charming and use that come-hither-you-great-big-man-you stuff? What does he expect?"

"I believe I'd be as casual and natural as I could," the other advised. "He admires you a lot, and I imagine he'd be disappointed if you were cutey and all that."

"Well, I'd a lot rather be natural," and Larry vigorously applied the brush to her hair, "for if I acted silly and went ga-ga over him in the evening, it would be rather hard next day, to sit across the table and watch him consume mountains of pancakes or potatoes or whatever it might be."

"He's a nice fellow, Larry. I think you really should feel honored at his invitation, for I understand that he goes out very seldom."

"Of course he's nice. I like him, but this is like having a date with my grandfather—oh, maybe not that bad, but anyway, my father. You don't suppose he's sentimentally inclined?"

"You can't always tell." Carmen was critically studying her finger-nails. "People sometimes surprise you. There's a degree of romance in the lives of most of us if it is ever found, and I wouldn't be a bit surprised—"

"I hope he won't be sentimental, and as for romance, I'm not in search of it," snapped Larry, her fingers prowling in her pin tray for another hairpin. "And if I were—I certainly wouldn't turn to him to find it," she concluded.

How It Began—

Larry Verne, alone in the world, beautiful and sophisticated, quite frankly refuses to marry "Greg" Spurgeon. In spite of the fact that she loves him, she finds it impossible to marry him because she fears a man of his quality will enter the priesthood. Her revulsion against such a thing grows out of unfortunate early experiences.

Larry lives at the home of the white-haired Eldred Hampton, mother extraordinary to the people, young and old, who compose her household.

Tempted to attend a costume ball with Greg, Larry yields; her evening is ruined by the loss—or theft—of a valuable bracelet, an heirloom, belonging to Eldred Hampton. In the days of remorse that follow she criticizes herself, and decides to take a more active interest in church work.

Trying for a time to associate with Greg on a purely friendly basis, and trying to curb the development of his ardent affection, Larry finds herself failing. Love is too strong for her, and she feels herself being swept off her feet, against her will. It seems that she must either yield, or break with Greg and not see him for a time. She breaks with him, but is very unhappy over it. Greg makes no attempt to see her, much to her disappointment.

Mr. Harvey Peterson is a lodger at the home of Eldred Hampton.

"One is always stumbling on to romance in unexpected places," meditatively observed Carmen. "Sometimes people whom you would least suspect as being the subjects of romance, can tell you the most beautiful and the most tender things. Sometimes they are unattractive in appearance—"

"And fat," Larry's voice trembled with amusement.

"Yes, fat, and grouchy, and yet somewhere they have come in touch with love, romance, laughter, joy."

"You ought to write a book, Carmen," teased Larry, "you'd thrill everyone into believing this old world is full of happiness and peace and good will. It would be comfortable reading, my dear," more seriously, "but it wouldn't be the truth. This is a hard old world—the more I live in it the more I can see that it is. If you don't fight your own way, people will always be walking on you. I fail to get John's Royal Road idea. To me life is more of a rocky, steep, blistering path!"

"Don't be bitter, Larry," interposed the other. "I don't like to hear you talk like that. And anyway why should Mr. Harvey Peterson make you have such thoughts. Eldred says that he was married once long ago and that his wife died, and that he's been so faithful he hasn't looked at a woman for sentimental reasons since."

"Oh!" Larry felt as though she had been suddenly thrust under an icy shower.

But now as she stole a glance at the man sitting at her side, she laughed silently at the idea of romance being associated with him. Sitting—almost crouching—there his wide face placid, his eyes glued to the screen, his huge shoulders bent slightly forward, he looked anything but a romantic figure.

MR. PETERSON was enjoying the show. He laughed uproariously at the comedy and followed the travel-talk with avidity. Then when the feature picture began, he seemed to forget her entirely and became thoroughly engrossed in the flashing scenes. Larry was thankful that the picture was highly exciting and not sentimental; but she did not follow it very closely, somehow she could not become interested in the story. In the midst of darkness she sat alone with her thoughts.

The last time she and Greg had been to the Elite—how well she remembered it, for it had been that night he had proposed to her!—they had chosen a place far back on the main floor, and after a time she had slipped her hand into his, and they had followed the story together.

But why think of it? It made her heart feel small and twisted when she realized that her companion tonight was not Greg. Greg had gone out of her life forever. She wondered if she would never see him again.

It was near the end of the picture, and some who had come early, were leaving. A tall young fellow was moving down the aisle toward them. When he was only two seats' distance from Larry, the blond girl who was with him raised a flowerlike face and confidently put her hand through the young fellow's arm. Right then Larry's heart seemed to thud down into her heels. There had been something dangerously familiar about him all along; but now, he was so tall, that the lower rim of the reflection from a spotlight revealed his face—large brown eyes, a long slender nose, and smiling lips, all underneath a head of dark red hair.

LARRY sat as if she were frozen. She could only stare. It was Greg!

Then they were gone. It had been only a fleeting second, but how much heartache, disappointment, and agony that moment had contained, she would never admit.

So—Greg had found somebody else, and after all he had vowed too! She was dizzy with the shock. And—oh, he had been so swift about it—only a month ago, he had promised her his love, all his devotion! Larry's brain seethed with unanswered questions. She had never seen the girl before. Who was she? Did she already love Greg, or was she just using him? How long had they known each other? So—that was why she had not seen him—he was busy seeing somebody else! Larry's cup was bitter that night, and she drank it to the very dregs with Mr. Harvey Peterson there beside her.

She saw nothing more of the show—it was silly, flat, unfeeling. She heard nothing in the vaudeville program until a blues singer with a far-reaching though mellow voice sang, "That's Just My Way of Forgetting You." It was an old song, but it made Larry frantic. She wanted to beat Mr. Harvey Peterson's shoulder with her fists and shout: "Let's get out of here. Let's go. I can't stand this another minute!"

Then it was over. They were at the parking station, waiting for the attendant to bring Mr. Peterson's car. The cool spring wind restored Larry's poise and calm. She had resolved that she would not ruin a perfectly good evening by thinking of Greg and might-have-beens. Perfectly good evening? Every fiber of her being cried out in silent protest. It had been horrible!

Certainly the fates were against her tonight. Just as she had locked Greg in the back of her mind, and assumed a bright and comradely air and started a lively conversation, Mr. Harvey Peterson stopped the car at the entrance of the Gray Goose Clubhouse.

"I'm hungry, how about you?" he grinned.

"Oh, I could manage a soda, I guess," smiled Larry, wishing most fervently that he had not thought of food. She did not believe she could swallow a bite. Here was where she and Greg had eaten many times. She did hope that Greg had not chosen this particular evening to bring his new girl here. An encounter in the light would be very embarrassing. But if he had, he surely was gone already—she saw his car nowhere.

After a short argument about their order, Mr. Peterson settled back in the little niche they had chosen, and beamed upon her. It was different from the way he usually beamed—not quite so satisfied or sure.

AN APPREHENSIVE GLANCE over the room had assured Larry that she knew no one there. She dropped her coat from her shoulders, and smiled courageously across the table. What if people did see them—they would in all probability think Mr. Peterson her dotting father or uncle?

"That's your color," Mr. Peterson observed with statesman-like dignity. "I always did like green. How come you to wear a green dress tonight?"

"You said one day that you liked this dress," Larry smiled naively.

He reached for his tentlike white handkerchief.

"Ah—oh, did I?—Yes, er—I believe I did. It is a pretty color. What do you call it?" What was the matter with him Larry wondered. What made him stammer and sweat—why, there were great beads of perspiration on his brow! He made a pass at them with his handkerchief, and smiled weakly. Could he be afraid? What was troubling him?

"This is leaf green. It's supposed to be like the new leaves in the spring," she explained.

"Well—er—you sure look mighty fine in it. I like that—" Just then the waiter brought their order and saved Mr. Peterson further anguish in an attempt to make conversation.

"I guess you're wondering,"—his courage had been bolstered by two double-decked sandwiches and a malted milk—"I guess you may wonder why I brought you out tonight—" he left his sentence in mid-air.

"Why, I think it was wonderfully nice of you to think of it," politely. Would they ever get home? Next time they would find their evening's entertainment right in Eldred Hampton's living room—that is, if there was a next time. She doubted it.

"Well I—" he put a pudgy finger inside his collar as if to make more room for his Adam's apple; "well, I've wanted to for some time—only—only—"

"Only why didn't you?" Larry leaned across the table. She would help him out of his embarrassment if she could.

"—Only I didn't have the nerve!" he blurted.

"Why, surely I'm not so fierce as all that!"

"Oh, no, not that. Not you at all. It's just hard for an old rooster like me to play I'm a young cock of the walk. Nobody your age wants to go out with an old fat man," he lifted a heavy finger as she started to protest. "I wouldn't have been a bit surprised if you'd laughed at me when I asked you to go to the show with me."

"Why, Mr. Peterson!" But in her heart Larry felt guilty. He wasn't a fool. He had known all along. "But I didn't laugh. I came."

"That was mighty sweet of you, Larry—an'—an' I don't intend to fergit it."

"I'm a regular old blunderbus," he continued the conversation when they were on the highway home; "I'm awfully clumsy, but I wanted you to know I'm your friend. I want to help you, Larry, since you don't have no folks of your own—and I hope you won't fergit that. And if you're wonderin' why I feel that way, I guess it's because—outside of your being friendly and nice to me—you remind me of someone I used to know." It was almost as if he were making a confession; his heavy voice had actually trembled. Big, bluffing Harvey Peterson, the possessor of finer senses and feelings? Larry could scarcely believe her ears.

"Ah," she encouraged.

"She was blond like you and had a smile like yours and was kinda quiet and still and comfortable like. She was a mighty sweet woman."

"I'm sure she must have been nice if you cared so much for her, Mr. Peterson," sympathetically.

"She was wonderful. She was a dream that didn't last long, Larry. You'll be surprised to learn that an old codger like me ever had a dream in his life, a dream that was flesh and blood. But she was. Her name was Lois. Would—would you like to see her picture?"

"Indeed I would." Larry was touched. She felt as if she were about to see something sacred and holy.

FROM A POCKET just over his heart, he took a beautiful but very worn little pocket photograph case, and handed it to her. Larry slipped the tiny silver tongue out of its slot, and found herself gazing into the rapturous eyes of a young woman. Her blond hair was combed in the style of twenty years ago. She had a pretty nose, a fine brow, and her smile suggested beauty, love, dignity.

"She is lovely," softly, "she was your—"

"My wife—" proudly he supplied the missing word; "Lois Peterson." There was devotion and there was constancy in the tone in which he uttered that name. "She was an angel here on earth, but she's been an angel in heaven for eighteen years."

"I'm so glad you showed the picture to me and told me something about her, Mr. Peterson. Now I shall feel better acquainted with you," and Larry slipped a hand through his arm. "I believe we're going to be great friends." She was recalling Carmen's words: "One is always stumbling on to romance in unexpected places."

The next day she learned more about Lois Peterson from Eldred Hampton.

"She was a lovely woman, Larry. But I never thought of you as being much like her. Her eyes were a glorious blue. Nobody knew her very well because she was so very quiet, and she was devoted to her husband. It was almost pathetic how they worshiped each other. She died when her baby girl was born—just passed right out like the flame of a white candle. And two days later the baby

Religious Rebels and Crippled Gods . . . .

By James E. Bishop

MANY REBELS have appeared on the stage of the world. Some have turned out to be benefactors. One, who was judged by many to be a rebel, was the Son of God. Many have turned out to be misanthropic, reactionary and anti-social.

Some hundred-percent Americans were rebels once. But they brought forth the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. These documents are revered but not always understood. If a man should be born in the eastern states and have the opportunity of the culture of that section moulding his life in the days of his immaturity, if he should go west in the days of his maturity and make contributions to social and educational policies; such a man would be judged hundred-percent American. Such a man attempting to analyze the spirit of America says that our forefathers achieved political liberty and that this generation must bring about industrial liberty. Accordingly, he says, we need a new declaration of independence for industrial life and the pursuit of happiness. He is called a rebel. Those who call him that may have forgotten the spirit that gave birth to our institutions. Time will tell. It is to be hoped that the needed remedies will be achieved without internal warfare. They will hardly be achieved without some taking the risk of being called a rebel.

The foundation of the reformation was laid by men who were castigated as rebels. Many of them were martyred. Some escaped that fate but bore social ostracism. Their works have been justified. They did not trust in crippled gods. They possessed a broad background of truth and righteousness in their personality. They could affirm as well as protest. They had an unfaltering trust in the perpetuation and final victory of truth. They wrought for generations unborn. They were positive, not negative. They did not adjust their sails to shifting political winds. They adjusted their lives to high ideals. They did not "stoop to conquer." In their gravest crisis they stood straight and calm, as did their Master. And of Him one said, "Behold the man."

All who may be placed in the category of rebels are not of that quality. Alas, they are not without influence. Many affected by them do not see that they served crippled gods, whereas they might have served the true God. Some have been able to detect the true qualities of greatness in a leader as did Peter when he said, "Thou art the Christ." Many have not had that power and so are left to the mercies of their own uninspired judgment.

Most men that have rebelled in the field of religion have had some item of truth in mind. But they become extreme. They cannot see middle ground. In the remorseless grinding of their ideas; in their relentless attack on all things religious, they whittle it down until there is nothing of the Divine left in religion. Their religion is human. They have crippled their conception of God.

Emerson reasoned himself out of respect for the sacrament. For him Jesus was just a man, a good man. But not a supreme and unique revelation. He crippled his concept of God.

H. G. Wells tells us frankly that the only god he can bring himself to believe in is a crippled God. It is some power in man seeking perfection, but impersonal and having no law or commandment.

If people were not influenced by such ideas, one could let them pass, and "let the dead bury the dead." But we meet their disciples and devotees almost everywhere.

If the fundamentals of the Christian religion be gathered up in morality, doctrine, miracles and organization; the arch rebel is David Friedrich Strauss. Dr. G. Stanley Hall lists him as giving a scientific interpretation of the life of Christ and goes on to say that Strauss destroyed all foundation for belief in miracle.

Strauss published his life of Jesus in 1835. At the time he was teaching and lecturing in Tubingen, a leading theological school in Germany. Prior to that he had been a pastor and the common folk loved his simple discourses. He was moving in the religious field. He set out to destroy faith in miracles. His book raised great excitement and he was moved from his position. Later he modified his ideas somewhat and took a more favorable view toward the Christian religion. But he was restless. His crippled concept of God bewitched him. He published another book and took up his old negation and came to the conclusion that life was a meaningless proposition.

Nearly all of the positions taken by Strauss have been proved false. Time has shown that he worshiped a crippled concept of God. He rebelled against the whole field of religion. He may have had some just grounds. But he became extreme. He rebelled. He was led too far from the "golden mean" by his crippled

Worship Suggestions for February, 1934.

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "ESTABLISH THY HOME IN RIGHTEOUSNESS."

(Note: In song references, Saints' Hymnal means our latest publication. Old Saints' Hymnal refers to the earlier book.)

FEBRUARY 4

Theme: "Sanctify Yourselves."

Instrumental Prelude.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 65: 1.

(S) Response: Hymn 151, S. H., "Father When in Love to Thee," old S. H., 135.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8, 9, 17, 18. The Lord's Prayer.

Hymn: "Come, Holy Spirit, Come," S. H., 197, old S. H., 77, verse 1.

Reader: Verses one and two of "Admonition," given through Joseph Luff.

Hymn: "Confirm Us in the Faith," S. H., 197; old S. H., 77, verse 2.

Reader: Verses three and four of "Admonition."

Hymn: "'Tis Thine to Cleanse the Heart," S. H., 197; old S. H., 77, verse 3.

Reader: Verses five and six of "Admonition."

(S) Hymn: "Gracious Spirit, Dwell With Me," S. H., 192.

(S) Prayer and Benediction.

FEBRUARY 11

Theme: "Set Thine House in Order."

Prelude: "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," S. H., 213.

Statement of the Master: John 14: 1-4.

Group Response: Psalm 15: 1.

Prayer: A petition for light on our home problems.

(S) Hymn: "The Lord! How Wondrous Are His Ways!" S. H., 116; old S. H., 144, verses 1 and 4.

Scriptural Meditation: Matthew 7: 17-20.

Scriptural Meditation: Matthew 7: 34, 35.

Hymn: "Look for the Beautiful," verse 2.

Scriptural Meditation: Ephesians 6: 1-6.

Hymn: "Look for the Beautiful," verses 3, 4.

Meditation: "In my Father's House Are Many Mansions;

. . . I go to prepare a place for you that where I am, ye may be also." Everything will be tidy and clean and beautiful there. I wonder, will I feel at home?

Always there will be love and peace and joy in our associations and in our daily work—no one will be angry or insist that his way is best. No one will gossip or say aught against his neighbor. Can it be that I shall be content?

These things I must consider now, for I am building for the future. And after all, folks won't be so different in those days that are to come. If I have not practiced these virtues and little acts of courtesy within my own household, how can I expect a welcome in that mansion of the Christ?

Group Challenge: Psalm 15: 1.

Commission: Psalm 15: 2-5.

Benediction.

FEBRUARY 18

Theme: "Let Love Prevail."

Instrumental Prelude: "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind," S. H., 243.

Statement of Christ: The Master has said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." (Matthew 8: 20.)

Hymn Response: "Behold the Savior at the Door," S. H., 328; Z. P., 152, verse 1.

Scripture Reading: John 14: 15-23.

Hymn: "Oh, Yes, the Blessed Son of God," S. H., 328; Z. P., 152, verse 2.

Talk: On unity in the home.

One of the greatest opportunities presented to man of learning about God, his unity and love, can come through the ordering of life in the home. If a person can develop and practice love in the home, it is certain that in all other relationships of life he will reflect that spirit. Every home in the church should be a center of spiritual power. Parents and children are the exact measure of life in the home. Bickerings, strifes, jealousies and envyings hinder the work of the church just as much if they are in the home as if they are elsewhere. A kindly word, a thoughtful act, a stern discipline on the tongue will do much to make life more pleasant for the husband who has spent his day in work at shop or office, for the wife who has been busy at home tasks all the day, and for the children who are the homebuilders of tomorrow. And, what is more, the worship of the church will be immeasurably increased in quality and power, as the homes of our people reflect the spirit of Jesus Christ.

Hymn: "If Any Man Will Hear My Voice," S. H., 328; Z. P., 152, verse 3.

Poem:

HYMN FOR A HOUSEHOLD

Lord Christ, beneath thy starry dome
We light this flickering lamp of home,
And where bewildering shadows throng
Uplift our prayer and evensong.
Dost thou, with heaven in thy ken
Seek still a dwelling-place with men,
Wandering the world in ceaseless quest?
O Man of Nazareth, be our guest!

Lord Christ, the bird his nest has found,
The fox is sheltered in his ground,
But dost thou still this dark earth tread
And have no place to lay thy head?
Shepherd of mortals, here behold
A little flock, a wayside fold
That wait thy presence to be blest—
O Man of Nazareth, be our guest!

—Daniel Henderson, in Quotable Poems.

Prayer.

FEBRUARY 25

Theme: "Worship in Thy Home."

Instrumental Prelude: "Ere You Left Your Room This Morning," S. H., 327; Z. P., 105.

Call to Worship: "And now a commandment I give unto you, . . . you shall set in order your own house, for there are many things that are not right in your house. . . . What I say unto one I say unto all: Pray always, lest that wicked one have power in you, and remove you out of your place." Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6, 8.

(S) Hymn Response: "Take Time to Be Holy," S. H., 322, verses 1, 2.

Talk: Based on Doctrine and Covenants 28: 13.

Hymn: "One Hour With Jesus," S. H., 325; old S. H., 337, verses 1 and 2.

(S) Period of Congregational Prayer:

Scriptural Meditation: "Pray in your families unto the Father, always in my name, that your wives and your children may be blessed." "Yea, humble yourselves, and continue in prayer unto him; cry unto him when ye are in your fields; yea, over all your flocks; cry unto him in your houses, yea, over all your household, both morning, mid-day, and evening; yea, . . . cry unto him over the crops of your fields, that ye may prosper in them. . . ." "Yea, let all thy doings be unto the Lord, and withersoever thou goest, let it be in the Lord; yea, let thy thoughts be directed unto the Lord; yea, let the affections of thy heart be placed upon the Lord for ever; counsel the Lord in all thy doings, and he will direct thee for good: Yea, when thou liest down at night, lie down unto the Lord, that he may watch over you in your sleep; and when thou risest in the morning, let thy heart be full of thanks unto God; and if ye do these things, ye shall be lifted up at the last day." (3 Nephi 8: 52; Alma 16: 219, 220; 17: 69, 70.)

(S) The Lord's Prayer.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark

(Note: In song references, Saints' Hymnal means our latest publication. Old Saints' Hymnal refers to the earlier book.)

FIRST SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 4
Sacrament Service

SECOND SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 11

Theme: "A citizen of God's Kingdom must be obedient."

Prelude: "Trust and Obey," Zion's Praises, 4.

Call to worship: "Open to me the gates of righteousness: I will go into them, and I will praise the Lord." (Psalm 118: 19.)

Hymn: "Trust and Obey," Zion's Praises, 4.

Prayer.

Scripture: Joshua 24: 24b, Jeremiah 7: 23b, 11: 4; John 14: 15; Ephesians 6: 1; Colossians 3: 20; 1 John 3: 22-24.

Hymn: "Stepping in the Light," Zion's Praises, 100.

Sermon Talk: Text: Job 36: 11. See sermonette, "Obedience," Stepping Stones, April 3, 1932. In order to become a citizen of God's Kingdom, a person must first obey the gospel. Then they must keep on obeying God's commandments. God wishes children to obey their parents. He also wants us to obey the laws of the land. (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.) Just as the citizens of the different countries are required to obey the laws, so must the citizens of God's Kingdom obey God's commandments. Contrast law-abiding citizens with those who disobey the law. Emphasize the fact that obedience brings satisfaction and happiness, while disobedience brings punishment and unhappiness. "This is my rule, when the Lord commands, do it." (Joseph Smith. Church History, volume 1, page 525.)

Story: "Peter's Shoes," Stepping Stones, June 23, 1929, or "When Mother Helped," page 124, Seventy-five Stories for the Worship Hour, by Margaret White Eggleston.

Special music by junior choir.

Story: "The Broken Cellar Door Latch," Stepping Stones, October 28, 1928, or "Tempered Wind," Stepping Stones, September 6, 1931, or "The Water Barrel," found in the book, Children's Story Garden, available in some public libraries.

Closing Hymn: "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," Zion's Praises, 28, Saints' Hymnal, 292.

THIRD SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 18

Theme: "A citizen of God's Kingdom must be truthful."

Prelude: "The Sabbath Bell," Zion's Praises, 45.

Call to Worship: "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" (Psalm 15: 1.)

Response: "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart." (Psalm 15: 2.)

Hymn: "The Sabbath Bell," Zion's Praises, 45.

Prayer.

Hymn: "Look for the Beautiful," Zion's Praises, 147; Saints' Hymnal, 209.

Sermon Talk: Text: 1 Timothy 2: 7. One of God's commandments is to tell the truth. (Exodus 20: 16.) "False witness" means telling something that is untrue; a lie. A lie seldom travels alone, for if a person tells a lie, in most cases they will have to tell several more to make the first one seem true. This results in unhappiness. Once in a while a person is punished when he tells the truth and admits he did something wrong, but this does not happen very often. However, if it does happen, it is better to be punished for the wrong that has been done than to lie about it, for that would make two sins to be punished for. Many times a person's lie is found out and they are punished for both the first wrong and the lie they told. Even if people do not find it out, God knows about it.

Prelude: "I Would Be True," Saints' Hymnal, 294.

Call to Worship: "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple." (Psalm 27: 4.)

Hymn: "I Would Be True," Saints' Hymnal, 294.

Prayer.

Scripture: Exodus 32: 26; Psalm 94: 16; 1 Corinthians 15: 58; 1 Timothy 6: 20; Jude, verse 3b.

Hymn: "Dare to Do Right," Zion's Praises, 79.

Sermon Talk: Texts: John 8: 14; Colossians 2: 5. A person who is not loyal to his country is called a traitor. We do not want to be traitors to God's Kingdom, so let us be loyal and true to Him. It often takes courage to stand up for what we know is right. Boys and girls should be loyal to God's church and be so interested in it that they will defend it and tell other people about it whenever there is an opportunity. (1 Peter 3: 15.) They should be happy to do this and never be afraid. God also wants us to be loyal to our country and our homes and our duties. Tell about the writing of "I Would Be True," (Pamphlet, Great Hymns of Worship and Missions, 25c), "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," (No. 21, A Junior Hymnal, compiled by J. E. Sturgis and W. S. Martin), or "Consecration," (Saints' Herald, June 13, 1933, page 748.)

tables; their wheat was ground by local mills and sold, sacked to the trade; there was work in town or on the trails or, later, on the railroads, for thousands of men. One of the most enterprising young men at that time was a negro by the name of Young, who, by his own labor, bought his freedom and that of his wife, beside piling up thousands of golden dollars. An idea of the value to Independence people of this vast trade may be secured through the fact that besides making hundreds of wagons and trailers, this negro made all the ox yokes used in the traffic—50,000 annually during the '50's, which sold for from $1.50 to $2.50 each.

The makers of harness and saddles, whips and straps had more than they could do. All was feverish activity, for trains must leave when trail conditions were most favorable; and there were days when they passed in such a steady stream—one outfit following another—that it was almost impossible to cross the streets.

The first run of the celebrated Pony Express was made on April 3, 1860, and the last when the Wells Fargo Company took over the business in '66. The hundreds of courageous young men who rode these trails out of Independence and elsewhere, hold the world's record for valiant and continuous riding. Among them were to be found such men as Buffalo Bill, who commenced riding when fourteen; Pony Bob Haslem, riding the express longer than any other messenger; Lem Flowers, Xavier Aubrey, as great an explorer as Fremont, and a young man who made the greatest ride in history; Keno Armstrong; Billy Opdike—the list is too long to enumerate, but they were the best King Whips that ever "sent 'em down the mountains."

Then in Independence, also, congregated the mighty mountain men, government scouts, hunters and trappers, among whom were Jim Bridger, the discoverer of Salt Lake and the founder of Fort Bridger, whose grave in Mount Washington Cemetery just outside of Independence, is marked by a giant boulder brought from the Rocky Mountains that he loved; Kit Carson, who made his first visit to Independence as a boy running away from the saddler to whom his father had bound him. On applying for work to Saint Vrain's bull train about to leave for Santa Fe, he was asked, "What can you do?" and he answered, "I can shoot straight"; and Kit always "shot straight" with white man, red or black. Then there was Uncle Dick Wooten, second only to Kit Carson, who also joined the Saint Vrain's wagon train, in '32; Joaquin Leroux, Tom Tobin and many others. What tales these men could tell, as they gathered in the smithies or on hotel verandas in Independence. The town must have appeared a second Babel, with its confusion of tongues, as through its streets and in and out of the many shops there roamed Indians in blankets and feathers; scouts in shredded leathers and furs, pony express riders of many nationalities and drivers of stage coaches; cultured people from the east; soldiers, negro slaves, with all of this extensive traffic bringing incalculable wealth to Independence. Over the Trails from Independence passed Pike and Fremont, Kearney, Sherman, Sheridan and Greeley, Calamity Jane, Wild Bill Hickok, Henry M. Stanley, Washington Irving and many others, each man performing his destined work and marching on down the centuries.

Then there were the Forty-niners, coming from the east, north and south, to stake their all in the mad rush for gold in California. Independence men left good, rich, Jackson County farms without selling or transferring title in any way, and hastily packing their families and such of their goods as they could take with them, made a fevered dash for the gold fields. One Independence man, writing back, told of the intense excitement of that time; of the sky-high prices, and the equally sky-high wages; flour $40 a hundred; beef a dollar a pound; labor bringing from $100 to $1000 a day. It was all a part of the hysteria of the times.

And Independence was the focal point, also, of still another unusual episode—the advent of our own church. Joseph Smith, with a small company, left Kirtland, Ohio, on the 19th day of June, 1831, and, traveling by wagon train, canal boats and stages, finally reached Saint Louis, Missouri, and from there, he, with others, walked to Independence, a distance of nearly 300 miles overland, arriving about the middle of July. His audiences there were composed of whites, negroes and Indians. In July, through revelation, the ground for the subsequent temple site was pointed out.

In '31 also the first log was laid by twelve men for the first house in Zion; the twelve men typifying the Twelve Tribes of Israel; and at this time the land was consecrated for the Gathering. On the 3rd day of August, 1831, the spot for the Temple was dedicated, a little west of Independence. In '33 and '34 a mob of citizens composed of many of the foremost families of Independence, destroyed the printing offices, storehouse and homes of the Saints, driving the families out of Independence, causing terrible distress and much loss of life.

In the middle Forties the Mormon hegira, under Brigham Young, with Jim Bridger as guide, formed one of the most stupendous religious movements ever known, quite in keeping with the other activities of this frontier town. The first party, led by Brigham Young in person, numbered some 143 men, and convoyed a train of 73 wagons. Men, women and children starved and froze in the mountain snows, or were slain by Indians in this westward trek. Some of their trains traveled westward via Council Bluffs and up the Valley of the Platte, but Independence was the favored point of departure.

During the Civil War, no county in Missouri suffered as did Jackson County. A semi-slave state, Independence became a Federal post, and several major battles were fought on its streets. Bushwhackers, guerilla bands, Red Legs from Kansas, took over any bloody work not accomplished by the war. The James boys—Jesse and Frank, with Cole Younger and others, made Independence their habitat, and after their destructive forays, hid out in secret caves along the river banks. There are not very many active boys in Independence who have not, at one time or another, discovered Jesse James' cave, but just where it really was is not known. A Vigilance Committee, cooperating with the Governor, were finally successful in breaking up this notorious band of outlaws. However, some twenty-five or thirty years ago, I saw Cole Younger on a train. He sat on the seat in front of me, and men behind me were discussing him and his career. One of these men said: "If that fellow never rates a shining crown hereafter (referring to his bald head) he at least has one now."

Then there was Quantrell, reputed to be the greatest guerilla the world ever knew. There are people living today who remember his raids, some of whom suffered greatly from them; and until the last two or three years survivors of that famous band met annually near Independence in a fast-diminishing reunion. This meeting, however, owing to lack of "survivors" has now been discontinued.

Old log cabins still stand, or perhaps I should say lean, built over 100 years ago. Slave-built fences of flat rocks laid one on top of the other without cement, encircle many homesteads. There still remains the first courthouse west of the Mississippi, built in 1827, a date important in church history also.

A few of those who carried on in the early days of Independence history remain—white-headed, stooped, but each year sees a harvesting of this ripe grain. Soon there will be no one to tell of the hectic days of pioneer times, when muddy, unpaved streets were bright with human flotsam; when the booming guns of approaching bull trains notified the citizenry to scurry to the square to greet swaggering adventurers, full of stories of the trip; when the lights in smithy windows never grew dim, and when black slaves were bought and sold as so much merchandise on the slave blocks.

In 1927 a Centennial was held when treasures stored in the homes of old-timers were brought forth and put on display in store windows; when black oxen, drawing covered wagons paraded through the streets; when dilapidated carryalls that had once conveyed ladies in hoops and poplins, mantillas and tiny parasols, were again seen; when Buffalo Bill's "Deadwood Coach" rattled over 1930 pavement; but Buffalo Bill, with his trusty buffalo horse "Brigham" and his sure-fire gun "Lucretia Borgia" was tramping other trails; while Independence, the historic, is fast becoming so modernized that soon she will be "just another city."

died, too. Harvey was so stricken at his loss of Lois that they say he never thought about the baby. After it was buried when they asked him what name to put on the tiny tombstone he had ordered for it, he just had them carve, 'Our Baby.' It stands today next to the marker which bears the words, Lois Peterson, Beloved Wife of Harvey Peterson."

"He fairly worships her now, Mother Eldred—carries about with him the loveliest photograph."

"Perhaps it is the almost constant thought of her that has helped him all these years. I imagine to him she was the incarnation of all that is good and beautiful and lovely. To be able to live in thought with one whom you love and who has gone on before you, is a wonderful thing, Larry, and he has impressed me as being one who dares to carry romance into eternity. It is not a little thing to him—it is THE thing. She will always be his romance. You rarely see such constancy in men and women—I have never encountered it except in one other instance—but it's among us. Just because we don't always see it doesn't mean it isn't there. It reminds me of the words of our hymn, 'Look for the Beautiful.' We would be a happier people if we did more of that."

God. His idol was not life giving and faith expanding. It was death dealing and doubt creating.

Man's natural concept of God is more or less crippled. I do not know the author of the following, but I believe it to be truth. "It is impossible for the human mind, with its limitation, against the background of boundless time and mighty forces, to conclude that the Ruling Power is benevolent and that righteousness will prevail, unless there be an intervention of God in the human mind."

The intervention of God in man's personal welfare is a promise of the gospel. It involves the miraculous. It involves doctrine and morals. It involves organization. Such intervention comes by the "grace" of God to obedient men. There are no promises of salvation to men who rebel at God's revelation. Rebels are left with their crippled concepts of God. Some day the haughty spirit of man will melt and he will say in anguish, "the harvest is over, the summer is ended and my soul is not saved" and he will bend his knee and "confess that Jesus is the Lord to the glory of God." Obedience to the gospel will avoid all that. Jesus said, "My doctrine is not mine, but His that sent me. If any man will do His will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God." (John 7: 16, 17.) He also said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." (John 8: 31, 32.)

SHALL WE SURVIVE? OR SHALL WE PERISH?

of Truth "guide" the peoples of the Church into truths which they are incapable of understanding? Of course, that is an anomaly. Or how can men be won to moral convictions to which their moral tendencies are in active opposition? What can leadership do with men to resist the truth?

Whenever a normal man of mature years, who has had the privileges of being under divine leadership, says he is unable to grasp the truths in which Zion, The Kingdom, is grounded, he confesses to one of two things: either he is too dumb to participate in establishing The Kingdom, or else he has robbed himself of the power of moral judgment which belongs to men of his years by cultivating a taste for things that are morally wrong.

In such cases, what may be needed may be not better leadership, but men who are capable of a better response to leadership. Certainly, only men who are capable of understanding the truths involved in the redemption of Zion can be told how it is to be done.

A BLUNDER

The circumstances in which we find ourselves as A Church today are in no small measure due to the fact that so many "members" of the "body" have thought (?) that Social Institutions, Zion, The Economic Commonwealth, is not a deciding factor in the life of Church Peoples. They have thought (?) that all that matters is that each man should discipline his own heart and save his own soul. And, of course, the affairs of the Church have been governed accordingly.

Suppose, now, that all of us had been grounded in the truth that we necessarily are profoundly modified by the very fact of the form of society in which we live. Suppose that all the members of this Church had known that it is through the building of the Economic Institutions of The Kingdom that we must effect the proper discipline of our own hearts and the salvation of our own souls (see Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1, et al) what would our Church look like today? Would it present the sad spectacle of being unable to pay the incidental costs of ordinary Church operations? Is righteousness and truth of such nature that it could have bequeathed us such a heritage?

SHALL WE SURVIVE? OR SHALL WE PERISH

It all depends upon how competent we make ourselves to exercise the rights of citizenship in The Kingdom, and how devotedly we apply ourselves to the task of its building. Society is what peoples make it. The Church can be nothing better than what the free moral willing of its peoples make it. If we are capable of the moral discriminations and devotions which alone can eventuate in The Kingdom, we may live; if not we shall perish. To make the required moral adjustments; to build upon the foundation of social truth—this is the lone condition of our survival.

Musing

By J. E. Vanderwood

As I sit today and ponder
O'er the things that were left yonder
On the way we passed before;
And what useless things we cherished,
Things that now long since have perished,

They become to me a bore:
But remorse cannot relieve it,
Facts are facts, O friend believe it,
Naught but love can peace restore!
Let me say it here with feeling,
We are not the truth concealing
When we carelessly ignore
All the good that comes before us,
Or the hope that would assure us
Of the things love can restore
If its beauty we adore.

But why sit here wistful, grieving—
Idleness is most deceiving—
Let me earnestly implore
That we rise with zeal and vigor,
Learn to serve in truth, with rigor,
And to wander nevermore.
Naught but grief can come of grieving,
Life is found in faith, believing
That the things we most adore
May be had, if we desire,
And unto the best aspire
As the prophets did of yore;
But we must be active, doing,
Faith and love each day renewing,
If we hope to stand before
Christ the King whom we adore.

Evidence of the Hastening Time

By Lucy Longan Orr

We Latter Day Saints are thrilled anew each time we read the dream of the ancient King Nebuchadnezzar as interpreted by Daniel. Our delight in this true story does not diminish as the years go by, because each year we see the stone cut out without hands growing larger, and we know that the time is near when God will complete his promise, causing the stone to become a great mountain, filling the whole earth. To us this stone represents the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

During the past seven years which composes my life as a member of this church, I have heard much about the hastening time. The appeal of this subject became so strong that I decided to watch for evidence of its truth.

Reading in Isaiah, chapter sixty, we find a wonderful prophecy concerning the establishing of Zion. In the fourteenth verse Isaiah tells us that this chapter is written to "The City of the Lord, The Zion of the Holy one of Israel." If one reads the entire chapter, with the fourteenth verse in mind, he cannot help being filled with joy. In verse one and two the Lord speaks through Isaiah saying, "Arise! shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; but the Lord shall arise upon Thee, and his glory shall be seen upon Thee." What a perfect description of the world in its present condition, are these sayings of the Lord. Surely no greater darkness has covered the people of the earth since the middle ages than at the present time; nor have the Saints had a greater opportunity to show to the world the glory of the Lord fulfilling the prophecy, "His glory shall be seen upon Thee." In the last verse are these comforting words, "I, the Lord, will hasten it in his time." This should certainly be considered a substantial evidence that the hastening time is here and that the Saints should press forward with new vigor, giving light to those in darkness.

Upon further investigation I found evidence that the Lord is moving upon the hearts and minds of the people, preparing them that they may be able to accept the gospel and that he might gather many to Zion. Recently, while visiting in a small town, I was invited to attend a conference of the Disciples of Christ. To my great astonishment, the minister preached a fine sermon on revelation, every word of which could well have been accepted by any Latter Day Saint. There can be no doubt but that our church, which was the first to teach that God speaks in the present age, is now influencing other denominations, thus working toward the unity for which Jesus prayed.

Another delightful experience came to me one day when an old lady knocked at the door to sell me her wares. I asked her to come in and rest. The first thing she said was that she had been called to her work that she might testify of the Lord. Upon asking her how she received the call, she told me that one day as she was walking along the street, very discouraged because she thought she would have to give up trying to support herself and go to the home for the poor, she heard a voice as clear as my own speaking to her. The voice said, "Keep the job you have that you may testify of me in every house." After this she had been able to earn enough money for a good living. This seemed so much like our own belief that I asked her if she was a Latter Day Saint. I was not disappointed when she replied that she was a Methodist, because I was looking for just such a result of the influence of our own church, which would help to prove the truth of the Lord's word when he said, "For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake will I not rest until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth." This old lady also believed in divine healing, and told me of a case of a sick woman who was healed as a result of her prayers, the Spirit bearing witness to her as she prayed that the afflicted one would be healed. Words could not describe the feeling which came to me when I heard those familiar words, "The Spirit bore witness," coming from the mouth of a Methodist woman.

Not long ago I had the opportunity to read the book, Magnificent Obsession, by Lloyd Douglas, which is considered one of the finest works in modern literature, and was first printed in 1929. I was overjoyed to find that this book teaches much of our doctrine of present day miracles and revelation. Because of its tremendous popularity, one can no longer put his name even on the reserve list at the public library. With this wide circulation and because of its teachings, this book will be a great aid in creating a kindly feeling in the mind of the public toward our church. I recall reading a conversation in the book between a doctor and a minister. The minister was one of the modern type in the East where the trend is to teach that God is a hypothesis. The doctor could not agree with this belief and said, "Why not concede that there is a miraculous power and urge the people to seek for it?" Again I thought "perhaps the author is a Latter Day Saint," but a sketch of his life in Who's Who in America revealed him to be an ordained Lutheran minister.

Yes, the Lord is seeking out many who will be needed in building Zion. The hearts of the people are longing for the help which the Saints should be able to give them if they are faithful in their study and their work. One eloquent speaker, in a commencement address to a body of university graduates, cried out with all the earnestness his soul possessed, "Oh that another Moses should walk in at yonder doorway to save the world from its unrest." Let us each do our part that we may supply the need of the people for a prophet.

Building the Church

By Mrs. S. G. Crippen

(Thoughts gleaned from an article on store management.)

If the church is a direct reflection on its members, we should all have enough pride to see to it that our church gives a good impression.

From having a good building our next thought is that of having a group of officers and teachers outstanding in character, training and willingness to serve. That is one of the major problems in branch management, and a source of never ending effort in study and training.

A fundamental knowledge necessary for the operation of the Lord's business, coupled with a sincere effort on the part of the branch president in giving the officers and teachers his counsel and experience, will assure a working personnel that is outstanding.

Community activities on the part of all members as well as officers, will help to remove prejudice, and the good will thus generated will be an asset to the branch.

Our church should have, not only the most spiritual and the best social services, but should also be outstanding for the influence it exerts as a moral factor in the community.

The whole foundation of our religious structure is such that once the message is put over to the people they are quick to realize that here, indeed, is a church that is different.

Judgment now is causing men to get together, and nations to meet. These things are going to involve compromise, service, and the brotherhood of man to the extent they have never been able to consider before. It is judgments that are compelling people to seek a way out. —E. J. Gleazer, in a sermon, "The Judgment."

The Readers Say---

Misses the "Helps" Department

I have noticed in the past few issues of the Herald that you have discontinued carrying "Helps for the Pastor." What I have in mind is the mid-week prayer service. I have been in the habit of looking forward to this prayer service program as outlined in the Herald, and have always thought it was a great help to those taking charge of mid-week prayer service; especially to those that have to work during the day and come in at night, tired out but take up the Herald which had always a theme and program ready for their service.

I trust that it might be convenient for you to again carry this program through the columns of the Herald. Trusting that this will find you well and happy, and with kindest holiday greetings, I am

Your brother,

Exalted at First Conference Experience

I have been a member of the church several years, but have lived in isolation. My first experience of attending conference and witnessing the gifts of the gospel came with the wonderful conference held at Central Chicago congregation, October 27, 28, and 29. Now I feel that I can move forward not only with faith in the Master but also with the assurance that the gospel is true.

October 29, was the last day of the conference, and it was that day that I met with the Saints. I enjoyed the inspiration of the early morning prayer meeting which was attended by Saints from the several branches in the district. At ten o'clock there were classes in the various phases of teaching, a class for the priesthood, and one for those interested in church music and choir. Elder John Grice preached a helpful sermon at eleven-fifteen, then the women of Central Church served luncheon in the upstairs rooms of the church.

How I enjoyed the services of this day! Following the lunch came a meeting of the priesthood and one for the women's department. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was served at 3.30 p. m., all the worshipers feeling the presence of the Spirit. It is hard to do justice in writing of such an occasion. The hearts and minds of the Saints were of one accord and their souls were united in the worship of God. The testimonies of all emphasized the goodness of God to his children and their thankfulness for the latter-day gospel. Two sisters spoke in prophecy, God telling his people through them, to have faith, to move forward in this great work because the time is short before the establishment of Zion must be a reality if the Saints are to have the protection promised them during the woes and desolations that are to come. Elder John Grice spoke in tongues first to the church body, then to the priesthood and then to the Negro people. The priesthood were told that if they will move forward with all their mights, hearts, and souls in the work, the endowment will again be theirs. They were also told not to neglect the people of the Negro race, that the souls of all are precious in his sight.

Joy that God is ever mindful of his people who seek to serve him stays with us. With such wonderful promises of his love if we are faithful still fresh in our minds, I am sure each one who saw and heard these things, has dedicated anew his all to the end that Zion will flourish and that all nations of the earth will come unto it.

Where Are Our Hearts?

I wish to extend greetings to the Saints and all readers of the Herald. As the new year begins, we should look back over 1933 and ask ourselves, "Have we accomplished any worth while duties or did we just idle our time away?" I think of the little bean vines, how they stretch out their arms in every direction to reach for aid to climb higher and higher. I wonder if our hearts are trying to find the ways to climb to that heavenly mansion the Lord has prepared for us.

I have many things for which to be thankful. The Lord biesses me more and more each day. We feel that we belong to a great church. We must let our light shine so others may see and hear the gospel.

Although I am the only member of the church within forty miles, I do not feel alone. The Lord is always with me. Seven years ago my husband died and left our little family alone, yet the Lord healed our broken hearts,

If each Saint would resolve to make 1934, a year of rejoicing and actions, I feel that much would be accomplished.

Divinely Led Into the Church

I am eighty years old and want to bear witness of my Lord and Savior to the Saints. I was baptized a good many years ago, but I quit the church for fifteen years on account of the war. Then I got my letter and joined again. I was greatly blessed.

I always supposed that I was baptized for the remission of my sins, but when I received the church manual, I saw that I was not. Then I believe God led me to the little church at Ontario, and there I heard the true gospel of Jesus. When I stepped through the door the Spirit's power fell on me, and when I heard Brother Lacey preach, I rejoiced. I began to study and pray. I read the Book of Mormon and believed. I felt that I was being divinely guided and helped. I read the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and my Bible seemed like a new book.

It was hard to leave my old church faith, and yet I wanted to be baptized as I should. And so I entered the true church of Jesus and my friends of long-standing left me. Will the Saints pray for me?

Requests Prayers

Mrs. Sylvia E. Crosson, of Divide, Wyoming, desires the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Albin Anderson, who is in the hospital at Kimball, Nebraska, in a very serious condition following an operation. She also asks for the prayers of all for her husband, G. R. Crosson, Who is soon to enter the Veterans' Hospital at Salt Lake for an operation, and for her two brothers, Arvid E. Anderson and Otto C. Anderson who are also sorely afflicted.

QUESTION TIME

Please explain Luke 21: 32 about the coming of Christ.

In answer to a question by his disciples, Jesus explained his predictions in regard to the destruction of Jerusalem, the signs of coming events, and of his own coming in glory. He stated that after the desolation of Jerusalem it should be "trodden down of the Gentiles, until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled." In that generation signs should appear in the sun, moon, and stars, with distress of nations. He then bid his disciples to lift up their heads when this condition came to pass, for the day of their redemption would be nigh. It was of this latter generation to which he refers in the verse cited by the questioner. It says in the Inspired Version:

"Verily I say unto you, this generation, the generation when the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, shall not pass away till all be fulfilled."

The phrase, "till all be fulfilled," evidently refers to the various predictions which he had made of the events that would precede his coming, the term "fulfilled" implying that which had been foretold. The Authorized Version does not make the text quite so clear, as to what period was referred to, as does the Inspired Version.

Will every man who prepares himself be called to the priesthood?

I do not recall any Scripture that so informs us, though I see no reason why it might not be so. However, every one who is called to the priesthood must be called through those whom God has appointed as the proper administrative officers of the church, and no one is warranted in assuming that he is called or should be chosen until the call comes through such proper channels. The question of being prepared is for God to determine through his appointed officers. We are informed also that "many are called, but few chosen." It should also be recognized that in all of the activities of life are some who prepare themselves for secular work or professions, and such might or might not also be prepared for religious duties in the church. Such are evidently meant in the revelation which declares:

"All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

A call to the priesthood therefore is not a test of worthiness as a member of the church, for some may "labor together with God" for the work who devote their abilities in secular pursuits in order to obtain the temporal means of helping onward the work "intrusted to all."

Why are the words "Thee, Thou, Thine," etc. used in Scripture instead of our usual forms?

The language we now use represents gradual changes from older forms, in many cases, and when the Scriptures were translated forms then employed had distinctive meanings some of which have been partially or wholly lost by changed usage. The words quoted in the question are from Old English, and represent the solemn and poetic style. It seems particularly fitting, then, that in addressing Deity this style should be used for His name or to represent Him. It is doubtless also for this reason that the same style is observed in some of the revelations given to the church in our own period, thus stressing reverence and ethical consideration for that name.

Must the deacon be elected branch treasurer?

The branch treasurer is commonly elected for practical reasons by the branch, and usually or often the deacon because of his other duties is selected for this work when in a position to give it the careful and accurate attention necessary. Other things being equal, he probably would be chosen for that work. But there are many other considerations that enter into the matter, and if a branch for some reason believes that a separate person could better attend to that work, it does not mean that the deacon is slighted as a deacon, but that practical reasons as viewed by the branch suggest that the work be assigned to another.

In this case the deacon should not be offended, but cheerfully do the work which he is asked to perform in harmony with his calling and the needs of the branch in which he labors. With few exceptions a call to an office in the priesthood does not give the occupant the sole right to say who shall perform certain special tasks, though some of them may be of that nature.

Sperry, Oklahoma

Saturated With Missionary Spirit

Sperry members received new inspiration and courage in a two-week series of meetings held by Apostle Roy S. Budd and brought to a close December 10. Good crowds were present at every service, sometimes more than the building would accommodate. Fine weather favored the entire series.

Brother Howard Harpham was here a few days during the meetings and preached twice to the Saints. Local workers hope that this branch will be favored by visits from him in the future.

Six candidates were baptized the night of December 10, by Elder Ward Rumsey, one of these a member of the church faculty. This was a most impressive ceremony, and the church was crowded for standing room. Many people were seated in cars parked outside. The font was decorated with flowers and vines and soft violin music was played by Brother Russell Rumsey during the ceremony. Neighbors and friends were touched to see a popular young couple, married in the late summer, take this important step together. The infant daughter of Brother and Sister Charles Bennett was blessed at this service. The baby son of Brother and Sister Ralph Hardy was blessed at the morning hour.

Brother Budd's series of meetings has done untold good for Sperry and community; many people outside the church came regularly and listened intently to the sermons. One more person has applied for baptism and others are interested. The Saints, too, received fresh incentive to go forward, striving to overcome all obstacles.

Members from Tulsa and Skiatook were in evidence during the meetings. On Wednesday night the choir from Tulsa took charge of the music. Their songs and anthems were beautiful and stirring.

Good musical numbers were a part of every service. This department, conducted by Sister E. E. Everman, has been a real help in the services. Young and old were employed in singing, and the quartet and trio numbers by children and young people were good to hear.

A drive is being made to interest people outside the church who are not attending services elsewhere, in the church school. This is done by means of a contest. The teachers and pupils were busy, too, arranging and presenting a program for Christmas. The church school is growing. Two hundred were present on a recent Sunday.

The women's department is working to raise funds to redecorate the main auditorium of the church. Recently a chicken supper was served in the church basement and later on one of the girls' classes served a chili supper. These meals are usually well patronized by people of the town. The women have also made several quilts in the last few months.

A class in the financial law of the church, Alonzo Harper teacher, meets each Wednesday night an hour before prayer meeting.

Sperry Saints are anxious to see their friends and neighbors come to a knowledge of the gospel, and are encouraged by their interest in local meetings. May the time speedily come when all will "come to the unity of the faith," and be of "one heart and one mind."

Barberton, Ohio

Two Weddings Solemnized

Miss Margaret Dutka and Mr. William Crispin were married November 30, in the United Brethren Church at Barberton. Following the wedding a few days were spent by the bridal couple in Cleveland. Mrs. Crispin is a member of the United Brethren Church. She is a graduate of Barberton High School. Brother Crispin has been associated with the Saints' church all his life and a member for thirteen years.

The wedding ceremony of Mr. Edward L. Moier and Miss Lula May Romig, both members of the Barberton Branch, took place December 1, in the home of Elder Juagers, of New Albany, Indiana. Brother Juagers officiated. The wedding party was entertained at the home of Brother and Sister Gahaffer, of Louisville, Kentucky. Brother Moier is a graduate of the Kenmore High School, Akron, Ohio, and the four-year mechanical course at the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company. He is a priest of Barberton Branch and served as church school superintendent the past year. Sister Moier was graduated from Barberton high school and Graceland College. She has been a teacher and supervisor of the young people's division.

Business meeting of this branch was held December 5. Elder William Brown, of Akron, was reelected branch president. The church school is now superintended by Brother Lawrence Wieland, and the following supervisors were elected: Adult department, Sister Lawrence Wieland; young people, Edward Moier; children, Sister Edward Moier; women, Sister A. P. Lehr; music, Charles Romig.

The Christmas program was given by the children and the young people Sunday evening, December 24. A large audience attended and enjoyed the plays "How the Chimes Rang," "Christmas Memories," and other numbers.

Madison, Wisconsin

221 Jackson Street

The work of the church is onward in this branch. Prayer services are very good; sermons better. The young people's organization is doing well.

The young people presented a program the evening of November 26 on "Keep the Law." There were songs, readings, solos, and a short sermon, "Every Man According to His Ability," by Lee Root. Inventories, financial statements, and envelopes were taken up at the close of the meeting. The amount of money received was $167. Tithes and offerings received for the months of November and December amounted to $237.01.

Local Saints were happy to welcome into their midst again for a couple of weeks Brother Charles Clarke and family, and to hear their testimonies of God's goodness to them and the blessing received during the past year. Brother Clarke preached one sermon.

November 26, Brother and Sister Henry Woodstock and the Clarke family attended an all-day meeting at Janesville. From there the Clarkes left for Chicago to get billed for work again.

November 21, the priesthood attended the monthly priesthood meeting at Evansville.

Violet Leighton, an isolated sister from Hill Point, was in one of the Madison hospitals for an appendectomy. Her mother was here with her and enjoyed church privileges and getting acquainted with the Saints.

December 4, a farewell party was given in honor of Brother and Sister Lee Root who were leaving for Green Bay where Brother Lee has been transferred by the International Harvester Company. His address is 911 Bond Street. The branch presented them an Inspired Translation of the Bible. Brother Lee's removal leaves vacancies in the branch which are hard to fill.

Elder Roscoe Davey held a two-weeks series of meetings beginning December 3. Some of his subjects were "The Twentieth Century and Doctrine," "A World Without God," "Regenerated Man, the Hope of Tomorrow," "Who Will Build the Kingdom of God on Earth?" "The Spiritual Heritage of the Christian," "After Death, Then What?" "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, Part one and Two," "Righteousness Plus."

The last Sunday was an all-day meeting with dinner at the church. Many Saints from other places attended. Such enthusiastic interest as his efforts created has seldom been equaled here. As a result of his work, four adults were baptized, Bernie Taylor, Walter Walker, and Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Richardson. This completed three more family circles in the branch, and brought in members who will be a credit to the church.

December 7, Jake Miller passed to his reward, his death being caused by pneumonia. He was the husband of Sister Clara Miller. Elder Jasper O. Dutton was called to preach the funeral sermon.

December 20, a daughter was born to Brother and Sister Archie Root. December 27, a son was born to Brother and Sister Robert Brigham.

The local choir meets to practice every Wednesday evening an hour before the prayer service.

Sunday morning a Christmas cantata "The Wondrous Story," by Kountze, was given by eighteen voices, Herbert Dutton, soloist.

The children gave a Christmas program Saturday evening. The young people were busy with parties and sewing for the poor children whom they adopted. Their deeds of kindness helped the church school attendance.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church, 1423 First Avenue South

Christmas was a happy occasion at the Bungalow Church. The program consisted of a play, "Hilda's Christmas," songs, and recitations from the children's division, and community singing of Christmas carols. Pastor H. E. Ratcliffe gave an appropriate sermon. Santa Claus arrived in spite of the cold—it was over twenty degrees below zero—and made the children happy with Christmas treats.

The ladies' aid held their annual bazaar and lunch, and the amount netted will apply on the pavement tax.

Elder P. T. Anderson preached two interesting sermons not long ago, "Examine Yourselves and See If Ye Be in the Faith," and "The Christmas Story." Brother Anderson is not expected to return to his mission until spring on account of having to undergo an operation.

The local priesthood have been active during the "Keep the Law" period, preaching on the law and visiting the homes of the members. Many inventories have been filed.

The last news item from Fargo read that Sister J. F. Rotzien was elected young people's supervisor; this should have read Francis Stowell, supervisor of the young people, and Sister J. F. Rotzien supervisor of the children's division. The librarian elected was Kenneth Shackow and the church school secretary, Doris Rotzien.

Brother George Chrestensen, of Ava, Missouri, and Sister Vaneeta Stowell, daughter of Brother and Sister Frank Stowell, were united in marriage by Elder H. E. Ratcliffe.

Thanksgiving was celebrated in the children's division by a dramatization of the first Thanksgiving and the singing of songs for the school in Indian and Pilgrim costumes.

Sister Barbara Thompson died from a paralytic stroke at her home in Clifford, North Dakota. Elder P. T. Anderson officiated at the funeral service assisted by Courtney Rotzien. Several Fargo Saints attended the funeral. Sister J. Henneman sang, "Abide in Me." The deceased has suffered from ill health for years. She was a faithful church member, and leaves three children, several grandchildren, and one sister, Jane Perchie, of Donavan, Canada. Interment was in the Clifford Cemetery.

The choir, directed by Sister Ferne Shackow holds its rehearsals at the home of Sister S. M. Brown during the cold weather.

Seattle, Washington

Fifth Avenue, North West, and North Thirty-sixth Street

The outstanding event of November was the Thanksgiving service held at the church on that day. President F. M. McDowell and Apostle M. A. McConley were present on that occasion, and the former spoke on "Being Thankful for the Things that Endure." What encouragement and help he gave the Saints and friends he will perhaps never know; many expressed their gratitude for the message.

Enlightenment from this visit of God's servants was shared by priesthood and laymembers. No doubt all have a greater vision of the work that lies before them as God's people. They are more conscious of that which is required of them to help accomplish this task.

Other November events were numerous. Apostle M. A. McConley partook of the sacrament November 5, and in the evening spoke to the Saints.

A week later Brother Wheeler, of Puyallup, paid this local a visit and preached on "The Plan and Purpose of Jesus."

Another welcome visitor arrived November 19, in the person of Brother M. H. Cook, who delivered two good sermons on "Keep the Law."

Many of the young men of the ministry have occupied the stand during the fall season and the Saints heard good sermons. They have confidence in these young men and note their marked development with joy.

A young man, Oscar Sorlie, made his decision to obey the gospel and was baptized Sunday morning, November 12. He was confirmed at the eleven o'clock service.

Two babies were blessed during the month, Betty Jane Barbara, daughter of Thomas and Sister Twilligear, on November 12, and Robert Glen, young son of Glen and Sister Earl, at the morning service November 26.

Brother Oscar Sorlie and Lila Twilligear were united in marriage by Elder Monte Lasater at the church November 18.

The women's club had a bazaar November 10, at the church, attended by a large number who enjoyed the meals.

The "old timers" were feted at the home of Brother and Sister Lasater November 3. A feature of the program was the singing of old songs by a mixed quartet.

Miami, Florida

Will Welcome Traveling Members

Miami Branch entered the new year praying for the blessings of God on his people everywhere. Though small, this local continues to function. The present meeting place is in the home of the pastor, but a committee has been appointed to look for a new meeting place.

Local members are always pleased to have Saints visiting in Miami, take part in their services. At this season of the year tourists are coming South to escape the northern winter, and officers have received calls from two Latter Day Saint travelers. Saints who come this way will find a hearty welcome at the home of Pastor Lawrence Willey and family, 133 East Fifth Street, Hialeah.

The coming of Brother and Sister Kildroth and family has been a great help to the branch. They came from Detroit.

The racing season is now here. Horse and dog races compose the principal sports of the season. Also January 11, 12, and 13, the All-American Air Races will be held at the Miami Municipal Airport.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rhinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The last month has been very encouraging for this branch, the Saints enjoying the Spirit of the Master to a marked degree.

On a recent Sunday morning Bishop H. E. French had a remarkable spiritual experience as he preached to the congregation.

The choir sang a beautiful Christmas cantata which brought joy to the hearts of all.

The new year looks bright to workers here. May health and happiness be enjoyed by all of God's people.

Kansas City Stake

Grandview Church

A white gift service was conducted by Pastor C. G. Mesley at eleven o'clock, December 24. Special gifts were brought to the altar by Sister P. J. Brose, representing the Laurel Club, C. E. Tucker, the La-Da-Sa Club, Beverly McDaniels for the junior church, and Sister Verna Tate, for the junior boys' class. This was followed by gifts from the congregation. A story, "The Little Camel That Walked to Bethlehem," was told by Sister C. G. Mesley. The children of the primary department presented Christmas numbers for the family worship period, December 24.

A nativity vesper service was featured at five o'clock on Christmas Eve. The first Christmas was dramatized by the O. B. K.'s, assisted by the choir and Sister C. G. Mesley as reader.

The church was beautifully decorated with evergreens and candles against a white background.

Apostle Roy S. Budd was the speaker the evening of December 31.

Northeast Church

The young people, under the direction of Brother Merlin Strong, presented a beautiful Christmas playlet entitled "The Christmas Spirit." The play was exceptionally well rendered. Immediately following the play, four young girls sang a group of Christmas carols. Santa Claus appeared to the delight of the children and distributed treats.

Almost all of the members of this congregation are among those who must work hard and sometimes against difficulties, but all seem to have learned the new commandment to love one another, and the way they live proves that this can be done.

Wray, Colorado

Have Full Winter Program

For the last month Wray Branch has had a full program. December began with an all-day meeting which included sessions of the church school, the communion hour, basket dinner, and a two o'clock service at which J. R. Sutton delivered the sermon. The day was one of enjoyment and inspiration to all who attended.

The next two weeks were spent preparing for the Christmas programs. On the morning of December 24, the meeting was in charge of the juniors and their superintendent. They had prepared a fitting program, each participant presenting his Christmas offering and joining to sing the offering song. That evening the young people gave a volunteer program of songs, readings, and the play, "No Room in the Inn."

Wray young people have recently organized and are planning a course of study of some of the church books, as a part of their winter program along with recreation and choir practice. The study hour will be held the second Friday evening of each month; more frequent meetings are almost impossible here.

The church school voted to continue the envelop system of offering collection. This system has been quite successful both for branch and general church, but especially in the payment of tithes.

Thayer, Missouri

Add Twelve to Branch Record

At the regular business meeting of this group in 1932, workers vowed to set out in 1933 to obtain new members for the branch. With the guidance of the Master they worked to this end, and twelve candidates were added to their record over the given period of time. One of the recent candidates is Brother George Beech who has found satisfaction in the gospel and is a faithful helper. Before he entered the church, he sought out Brother George Davis, and after learning of the divinity of the work, hesitated no longer, but went immediately to Holden, Missouri, where he was baptized.

With the addition of new members through baptism and a number who have moved into the community, this congregation is increasing. However, they lost four recently when Elder J. W. Hancock and family moved from Thayer to locate near Carthage, Missouri.

Since coming here from San Diego, California, Brother Mara Harder and family have done a nice work. Near their home they have organized a Sunday school class and are trying to carry the gospel to the people of that neighborhood.

Early in November the workers undertook to present a play, "The Path Across the Hill," to help the building fund. Sister Aggie Adams directed the production which was sponsored by the women's department. For six weeks the cast rehearsed, and the play was well received. A week after the first performance at Thayer, the drama was very successfully presented at the Alton, Missouri, school auditorium. To Sister Adams goes much of the credit for these good performances. She has been directing plays and programs for ten years, and all who knew her at Walnut Park Church, Independence, are aware that she is a capable director.

It is possible that by next year Thayer will have a dramatic club and will be able to present two plays a year.

District President Haden held a week of meetings at the Two-Mile Schoolhouse, where Brother Harder is in charge.

Christmas programs were carried out in the true spirit of giving. Sister Adams prepared a good program, and then the Saints marched past the altar and gave their offering to Christ.

Dayton, Ohio

Enjoy Eventful Season

December was an eventful month for this branch. Ten members of Dayton's priesthood attended the priesthood conference at Columbus, December 2 and 3. Brother George Hunter was in charge of the church school in the absence of the church school director, Russell Rockwell. Sister Priscilla Boeckman's class gave a short program at the close of the class period.

Sacrament Sunday was December 10. The following Tuesday night a special business meeting was held for the election of officers. Elder F. T. Rockwell was elected branch president, and chose Elder F. Rieske and Elder E. L. Ulrich as his assistants. Albert Griffin was re-elected branch treasurer as was Theodore Boeckman, branch clerk. Russell Rockwell was re-elected church school director, and chose as his assistant, George Hunter. After consultation with the branch presidency, the following were chosen to serve in the music department: Sister Effie Hunter, choir director; Priscilla Boeckman, accompanist, Sister Faye Rockwell, junior choir leader, and Sister Myrtle Boeckman, assistant and pianist.

The C. S. M. Club presented the play "Bound to Marry," at the church, December 15. Due to weather conditions the crowd was small, but those who saw the play enjoyed it greatly.

Missionary John R. Grice was at Dayton for morning and evening services December 17. Saints from Springfield, Columbus, and Lancaster worshiped with them. The ladies' chorus sang "O Come All Ye Faithful" in the evening.

The marriage of Miss Maude Waldon and Ralph Krisher was solemnized December 23 at 8:30 p. m. Elder F. Rieske read the ceremony. Miss Ann Nelson and Mr. James Watson were maid of honor and best man. Preceding the ceremony Olive Ulrich sang "O Promise Me" and "I Love You Truly." Myrtle Boeckman played "At Dawning" and the bridal chorus from "Lohengrin" was the processional. A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed the ceremony.

Sunday morning Elder F. Rieske delivered a Christmas sermon. Sister Effie Hunter sang, "A Little Child He Came."

That evening the ladies' chorus sang the cantata, "Chimes of the Holy Night," Sister Effie Hunter directing. Then the church school gave a short program and passed out Christmas treats to all the children.

As a whole, the year 1933 was one of spiritual growth for Dayton Branch. New names have been added and new interests supplied. A vote of thanks is extended the past branch president, Elder Franklin Rieske. For the coming year the members pledge their support, under the leadership of Elder Floyd Rockwell, to make this a missionary branch.

Pontiac Reduces Mortgage

Through a fortunate stroke of financing, the branch at Pontiac, Michigan, reduced its mortgage indebtedness from $3200 to $800. The mortgage was held by one of the city's closed banks, and the church by borrowing $800 was able to purchase $3200 of the frozen deposits in the bank and have them applied against the mortgage.

Lamoni Stake

Creston, Iowa

Creston Saints are deeply appreciative of the beautiful spirit that has touched their lives. A step forward was taken when the public library auditorium was engaged for Sunday services. The new quarters are clean, attractive, and fill the present need of the branch. Prayer services are held each Wednesday evening in the homes of the Saints.

Pastor David Blair and Elder Hollis Yarrington, director of religious education, have been busily engaged in promoting the work in this branch. They have been assisted by the following members of the priesthood: Elders Walter Johnson, M. F. Cooper, T. J. Bell, and John Lane, of Lamoni. October 20, this branch was pleased to have President F. M. McDowell and Elder Blair Jensen as their guests. Brother McDowell addressed the Saints in the evening.

The church school is a thriving unit with an average attendance of fifty members. The adult and young people classes are organized, the latter adopting the name, O. T. Z. There is a class for every age. The women of the branch meet every two weeks and at present are studying, "The Life of Christ."

November 12, the annual home-coming was held at Creston. Elder Blair Jensen, of the Lamoni stake presidency, delivered the home-coming sermon at the eleven o'clock hour. This home-coming marked a new point numerically for the branch. A Graceland College program was given in the afternoon, A. J. Yarrington and Asa Smith, of Winterset, the speakers.

The response to the movement of the general church for the filing of inventories has resulted in a 150 percent increase over the record of last year. The average attendance at all services has more than doubled this year.

The choir has been lending splendid support to the services. The junior choir often assists, and Saints enjoyed their carols Christmas Eve. The Junior Stewardship Club, of ten members, is actively engaged in keeping their records. It is with a degree of real satisfaction that they enter into their duties. The children presented a Christmas pageant, "The Gifts," Sunday, December 24.

During the month of December, six candidates were baptized and two babies were blessed, daughters of Mr. and Mrs.

Ferrin Bowman, and Mr. and Mrs. John Savage.

Various seasonal gatherings have been held. Last summer volley or kitten ball was played each Friday evening. Halloween, Thanksgiving, and Christmas parties have been held.

The members of Creston branch surprised Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Hammer on their fifty-third wedding anniversary. After a program of music and songs the couple received many gifts. The leaders of the branch paid them tribute for their loyalty to the church. They were the second couple married in Lamoni, December 15, 1880.

Holden Stake

Atherton, Missouri

An unusual entertainment in the form of a radio broadcast program, was presented by the junior church, December 17. The numbers were rendered by the children, and a Christmas story was told by Sister Edith Koehler, supervisor of the junior department.

Christmas was fittingly celebrated. During the eleven o'clock service, December 24, the primary department presented a program, and Sister Joseph A. Thomas told a story, "The Other Shepherd." In the evening, the young people gave a play, "They That Sit in Darkness."

Elder Amos E. Allen preached at the morning hour, December 17, his subject was, "As for Me and My House, We Will Serve the Lord." Special numbers were provided by David Allen, playing a cornet solo, and Edmund and Jewell Allen, playing a piano duet.

During the evening service, the teachers of the branch were in charge. Guy Hanson used an electric magnet to illustrate the drawing power the Saints should have when in possession of the Holy Spirit. George Bilquist spoke on the duties of the teacher. Brother Van Tuyl, who was also to have occupied, was called to the home of his brother-in-law, Burton Barwise, who met death in an accident.

The following young people were welcomed home during the Christmas holidays, Mary Beebe, who is teaching at Kingsville; Clifford Long, who is attending college at Columbia, and Ralph Merrill, from Dixfield, Maine, who is attending Graceland College.

December 31, Clifford Long occupied the pulpit, preaching on "The Law of Worship." J. A. Thomas preached in the evening.

A literary society, which meets each Friday evening, has been organized by the members of the east group. Brother Guy L. Hanson is president.

Atherton Orchestra assists with the music in the church school every Sunday morning.

Far West Stake

The "Keep the Law" period was stressed in all parts of the stake, and it is intended that the teaching shall not cease but continue until all have had an opportunity to learn the law. Members of the Stake Bishopric as well as of the presidency and high council have traveled extensively throughout the stake. Elder Blair Jensen, of Lamoni, spent two weeks in the stake, preaching at Cameron, Maple Grove, and Stewartsville. Class work has been carried on in a number of the branches and many homes have been visited with the "Financial Law" pamphlet.

Stewartsville Branch

The branch was saddened some weeks ago because of the automobile accident which happened to Brother and Sister Leo Day and family. The four children escaped with slight injury but Brother and Sister Day were both seriously injured. However, after six weeks in the hospital in Saint Joseph, they are much improved, and all hope for their complete recovery. A large number of Saints and friends met at their home soon after the accident, where the men shucked the corn and the women served the dinner and did other work for the family.

November 19, the branch was happy to have with them Brother J. O. Worden, of Kansas City, who gave a strong, convincing sermon on "Keep the Law." A number of instructive sermons were given during the "Keep the Law" period by B. J. Dice, A. E. McCord, E. J. Armstrong, and Z. J. Lewis.

The envelope weekly offering among the women of the branch was instituted during that time and encouraging and successful results have been realized, much to the joy of those participating.

Elder Blair Jensen, of Lamoni Stake, held a series of four meetings here beginning Sunday night, December 3. He gave good, forceful, Latter Day Saint sermons and they should create renewed inspiration and determination among the Saints. He continued the rest of the week at Maple Grove Branch.

Fourteen men met at the church Thursday, December 14, at an early hour and went to the timber of Brother R. M. Jeffries, where they cut and sawed about ten cords of wood, which Brother Jeffries donated to the church. The women quilted and served dinner and supper at the church.

The young people held their semi-monthly meeting at the church Thursday night, December 14, with the usual good interest and attendance. Their theme was "The Vision of Leadership." Games and group singing was much enjoyed later.

The young people sponsored a beautiful Christmas vesper service commemorating the birthday of our Savior, at the church Sunday evening, December 24. This included music, readings, a talk on "The Mission of Christ" and a pageant, "In the Days of Long Ago."

Ward A. Hougas, stake president, was to have been the speaker Sunday, December 17, but on account of the serious illness of Sister Hougas, he was unable to be present.

Mrs. William Lewis and daughter, Miss Cathryn, of Hays, Kansas, visited over the week-end, December 16, in the home of Misses Carrie and Emma Lewis. They went on to Washington, D. C., where they spent the holidays with relatives. Mr. Lewis, who was president of Hays College for twenty years, and brother of the Lewis sisters here, passed away, after a long illness last October.

Sunday, December 24, at the church school hour, Director Leonard G. Ehlers gave a review of the beautiful classic, "The Vision of Sir Lounfal," in an impressive manner, after which a substantial sum was received in Christmas Offering.

The annual business meeting was held Tuesday night, December 26. Z. J. Lewis was chosen pastor. The branch welcomes Brother Lewis as the new pastor and offers him heartiest cooperation in his field of labor. The consecrated and untiring services of Brother Gordon Hidy during the past three years as pastor have been much appreciated. Brother Hidy and E. J. Armstrong are the associate pastors.

Other results of the election were as follows: Brother J. L. Hidy was elected director of church school; E. J. Armstrong, branch clerk; L. G. Ehlers, music director; Miss Doris Young, secretary of church school; Miss Cleata Hinderks and Mrs. Anna Powell, pianists for church school and preaching services; Mrs. Fern Ehlers, superintendent of children's division.

A regional meeting of the young people of Stewartville and Maple Grove was held here Thursday night, December 28. A banquet was prepared and served by the women of Stewartville. Eighty-two were served. The stake leaders of the young people were honor guests. These included L. G. Ehlers, supervisor; Kenneth Piepergerdes, president; Garland Snapp, of King City, vice-president. Ward A. Hougas, of Independence, president of Far West Stake, was also present. The young people were much pleased to have Brother G. T. Richards, now of Bunceton, in attendance with Brother Hougas. Brother Richards gave efficient and untiring service in the young people's work when a missionary in the stake.

L. G. Ehlers was toastmaster. A well-balanced program of talks and music was given which proved very interesting and inspiring. Subjects discussed were "Forget and Remember the Past," "Objectives for the Future" and "Courage for the Task of 1934." Some outstanding musical numbers were given between talks. Brother Hougas gave the principal address, using for his subject, "Inspirations."

The basement was artistically decorated with the church colors, purple and gold, and also using the Christmas stars and tree. The place cards and menu cards were emblematic of the New Year.

Several young people spent the holidays in Stewartville. Glenn and Gilbert Crossin were home from Graceland College and Miss Daisy Black, who teaches in northern Iowa, also was home.

First Saint Joseph Church

The past two months have been quite busy ones at First Church. All departments have been actively engaged in various projects in addition to all regular services. A chorus composed of First and Second Church choirs presented a concert of harvest festival music at the vesper service, November 19, and again at Second Church the following Sunday evening. The Girls' Chorus has rendered willing service, singing for two morning services and giving special Christmas numbers the evening of December 17. The Lafayette High School Glee Club gave several selections at the vesper service December 10.

Pastor Ward A. Hougas gave a series of five sermons on the general topic, "Life's Masterpiece." Other speakers have been Bishop Milo Burnett, Elders H. C. Timm, John Ruoff, and T. E. Hale.

The Ul-Like-Us Players, under the direction of Mrs. Olive McLean, presented as their annual play at the Y. W. C. A., the comedy, "Here Comes Charlie." The play was well received and netted the club a nice sum. A candy sale was held in conjunction with the play.

The O. T. Z.'s invited the adult division to participate in a rabbit supper Tuesday, December 12. Due to the good marksmanship of several of the young men, the rabbits appeared and the supper was a success. A program was given during and after the supper.

The O. T. Z.'s have also carried on the other phases of their activities. The visiting campaign which was begun early in September was successfully carried out each Monday evening, and brought to a close just before Christmas. The early Sunday morning prayer services have been increased to twice a month and are developing in interest.

The priesthood of the group are engaged in a visiting campaign under the direction of Elder H. C. Timm, associate pastor. They meet each Monday night for this work.

The regular Wednesday night prayer services have been well attended.

The children's division of the church school had a Christmas party Thursday afternoon preceding Christmas. For several years the children have voted to sacrifice their customary "treat" and turn the money in as a Christmas Offering. The party is entirely donated by the teachers.

Christmas Sunday was given over to Christmas programs. In the morning a miscellaneous program of songs and readings was given by the children's division. The O. T. Z.'s furnished the program at the vesper service. It consisted of Christmas hymns sung by a young people's chorus, quartet and trio numbers, and a reading, adapted from "The Miracle," Goldie Grant Thiel, by Miss Alma Hale. For the offertory Mrs. Mary Kinnaman Sauer, of Philadelphia and Mrs. Edna Christiansen Ehlers played a piano and organ arrangement of "Ave Maria" by Gounod. Mr. and Mrs. Sauer visited relatives in Saint Joseph during the holidays.

Sunday, December 31, closed the year with two fitting New Year's sermons. Elder H. C. Timm was the speaker in the morning and Bishop Milo Burnett at night.

Independence

A good response is being given the missionary campaign, January 1 to 14, in all the congregations of the church in Independence. Speakers are bringing inspiration to listeners with the presentation of their themes. Musicians have given these services splendid support as have also priesthood members and local officers. This series will culminate in the quarterly conference in Zion, January 15, at which time delegates to General Conference will be elected to represent the center place.

Stone Church

Despite vicissitudes of sleet and disagreeable weather, many Stone Church members are regularly attending Apostle Paul M. Hanson's series of sermons, and enjoy his presentation of such missionary themes as "A Scriptural Interpretation of the Present Age," "How an Ideal Works," "The Majesty of Moses' Choice," "Prayer," "Sowing and Reaping," "Christian Conversion," and "Divine Healing." Tonight the topic is "Problems of Young People."

The Saints benefit also from the noon hour worship service. Organ music begins at twelve-thirty, and people are invited to come in and stay a few minutes or the entire half hour, devoting themselves to meditation and prayer.

A program of wholesome recreation is offered to the young people of this congregation each Friday night at the Auditorium, beginning at seven o'clock. In the lower assembly room players have the use of two volley ball courts, ping-pong tables, and an archery booth. There also they delight in shuffle-board and other active games. The officers and helpers of the Stone Church young people's division are in charge, and they invite young men and women in this district to come and play on this recreation night.

The first sacrament service of the year was solemnized in the main and the lower auditoriums of the Stone Church. President Frederick M. Smith was assisted by the following ministers, Elder H. L. Barto, Elder J. E. Kelsey, Elder R. V. Hopkins, Bishop J. S. Kelley, Elder C. Ed. Miller, Pastor J. F. Sheehy, and Bishop R. T. Cooper.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson continued his series of meetings in the evening. Music was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig and assisted by Mrs. S. A. Burgess, soloist, and Robert Miller, organist. Miss Eloise Higgins played a violin solo. Pastor J. F. Sheehy and Mark Anway sang a duet selection.

Second Church

President Elbert A. Smith was the speaker at eleven o'clock Sunday, December 24, and the theme of his sermon was, "Peace and Good Will." The choir, led by Earl Audet, sang "O Little Town of Bethlehem," and "The First Christmas Morn."

The play, "Christmas Windows," was given in the evening by the primary and junior departments.

The speaker for the morning hour Sunday, December 31, was Elder Ward A. Hougas.

Gordon Cable was in charge of the junior service, and Elder Sam Inman gave the talk from the text, Genesis 28:27. Letha Hershey told the story, "Jacob's Promise," and Geneva Edmunds told another story, "Stewardship Guide."

The evening service opened with an organ prelude by Billy McPherson. Apostle E. J. Gleazer at this hour launched his two-week series of missionary services. His theme on this evening was, "The Means of Salvation."

Pastor Will Inman was in charge of the first sacrament service of the year. A baby was blessed by Elders A. K. Dillee and J. H. Robinson. Elder Sam Inman gave the oblation talk. The communion address was by Apostle E. J. Gleazer, and Elder W. N. Inman offered the special prayer.

Brother Gleazer was the evening speaker and his theme was "Priesthood." Regardless of bad weather there has been good attendance at the missionary series conducted by Apostle Gleazer. For the past week he has preached on "Worship."

Interest continues good in Elder J. W. A. Bailey's Book of Mormon lectures on Sunday evening.

Liberty Street Church

Through the combined efforts of the women's department, Doctrine and Covenants Class, play cast, and other contributors, thirty Saints' Hymnals have been purchased and presented to the church. They are now being used to great advantage during the series of meetings.

From California comes a herald of the truth in the person of Apostle Myron A. McConley. To a large and interested audience he is bringing, in his own matchless way, the message of Christ.

Throughout evenings last week his crowds grew, filling the church on Friday night. Even when the weather was unfavorable, the number present has been encouraging.

The many friends of Cecil Walker, young people's worker, mourn with him at the loss of his mother, Mrs. C. G. Walker, who died at the Sanitarium January 2. She had been a resident of Independence only a short time, coming here with her husband seven weeks ago from Robinson, Kansas. The efforts and righteous living of her son, Cecil, caused Mrs. Walker to become a member of the church. She was baptized in June, 1932, by Elder W. B. Paul. Her funeral service was held at Liberty Street Church, the sermon by Elder Ward A. Hougas. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Mrs. Walker's mother, Mrs. Cynthia Gaddis, of Ottawa, and sister, Mrs. Tina Ikenberry, of Pueblo, Colorado, were ill at their homes and unable to attend the service. The deceased leaves her husband, three sons: Cecil Walker, Independence; Kenneth Walker, LeLoup, Kansas, and Muriel Walker, Everest, Kansas; three daughters, Lois Walker, Topeka, Kansas, and Dorothy and Genevieve Walker, and other relatives.

The Spirit of the Master was strongly felt at the testimony part of the sacrament service Sunday morning. Apostle McConley was in charge of the hour.

Walnut Park Church

The holiday season over, the Saints of Walnut Park are settling down enthusiastically to the work of the new year. Christmas programs were given December 24, the primary, junior and intermediate departments presenting a program during the church school period in the upper auditorium. In the evening a play, "Christmas at the Inn," was given under the direction of Sister E. E. Moorman, followed by the Christmas tree and treat. An unusual feature of the treat at Walnut Park this year was that Santa Claus treated everybody, young and old alike.

Sunday morning, December 31, Pastor Frank McDonald delivered his annual New Year's sermon to the congregation, concluding with a resume of the work during the past year and a statement of his hopes for the future. Preceding the sermon the choir sang "Fairest Lord Jesus" and "I Would Be True" was given as a solo by Erwin Moorman. In the evening of that day Elder J. W. A. Bailey preached his first sermon of the two weeks' missionary series now going on at all the churches.

Friday night, January 29, a dinner was given in the church basement under the sponsorship of the Walnut Park Young People's Council. About one hundred and eighty were served. Kenneth Morford presided as master of ceremonies, and talks were made by Pastor Frank McDonald and Fred Horn, bishop's agent for Walnut Park District. Sanford Downs led the group in singing appropriate songs at intervals during the evening.

Unfavorable weather has held attendance at the church school down below four hundred for the past two Sundays. However, in spite of the inclement weather, satisfactory audiences have turned out to hear Brother Bailey's sermons on each week night except Saturday and also on Sunday evening.

The first communion service of the new year was in charge of the pastor, assisted by Elders M. T. Williams and Royden Barnhardt. Brother Williams spoke in behalf of the oblation, and preceding the serving of the emblems the pastor read from the eleventh chapter of 1 Corinthians, beginning at the twentieth verse, and also the twenty-first verse of the tenth chapter of the same epistle. Near the close of the service he spoke for fifteen minutes, encouragingly and forcefully, of the duties and obligations of Saints, using the above Scripture as a basis for his remarks.

At the session of the religio Sunday evening, officers for the first quarter of the year were elected as follows: President, Vernon Sackman; first vice president, Lois Butterworth; second vice president, John Crandall; secretary-treasurer, Fern Price; chorister, Melba Moorman; pianist, LaVona Crabb.

Two Walnut Park young people who recently were married are Woodrow Price, son of William Price, and Juanita Byrne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Byrne, of Burneville, Illinois. The wedding was on December 15, at eight-thirty o'clock in the evening at the home of Elder Harold Hattey, who performed the ceremony. The young people are at home in Independence.

Much interest in the one-act play contest sponsored by the young people's council is being manifested at Walnut Park. Five plays are in the process of organization, and rehearsals will begin as soon as the series of meetings is finished. Organizations sponsoring plays are: The Walnut Park Young People's Council, the Swastika Class, the Crusaders' Class, and the A. W. Z. Class. One of the younger girls' classes also is planning to enter a play in the contest.

Enoch Hill Church

Christmas on Enoch Hill was observed the morning of December 24, with a program by intermediate boys and girls. At the same time the junior boys and girls had an entertainment and treat in their department. The young people of the congregation presented a play, "The Gift of the Lamb" in the evening.

Miss Marie Wisecup and Bert Overbeck were married January 1, Elder Marshall Martin reading the ceremony.

Patriarch U. W. Greene is conducting missionary services at Enoch Hill. Preceding each evening meeting a half hour of prayer is enjoyed in the basement and then the Saints adjourn to the upper auditorium for a song service, directed by Elder Arthur Koehler. All are re-

The Honest Politician

Taking all these things into consideration, it seems to me that in the matter of honesty the politician stacks up about as well as any of the others; and the theory that politics is "too dirty" a game for the average business man is too ridiculous to discuss seriously. It is only slightly more absurd than the contention that machine politicians block the way for the man of substance and character to get into politics. The exact opposite of this is true. Wholly aside from the fact that wealthy men—Fat Cats they are called in the political vernacular—are as welcome to the practical politician as the flowers in May, it is true that without wealth or wealthy friends, a man of character, standing and ability who seriously wants a public career, can make his entrance in a perfectly satisfactory way. He may not be successful in his first attempt and he may never get the particular post he craves, but if he persists and is approximately 60 percent competent, in nine cases out of ten he will land. For one thing, political organizations are usually eager to open the gate for such men. It is the way to perfume their ticket. It gives the machine a certain respectability. For another thing, a man of the "right type," who is really acute and determined, and if he puts his time, mind and energy to it, can beat the professionals at their own game. There is no greater fallacy than the notion that politicians are clever. Actually they are, as a rule, dumb fellows, able to retain control only because of the extreme indifference of the people, and because so few men who do not make a living out of politics feel they can afford to give the bulk of their time to it. You can hardly beat even a dumb politician who devotes 100 percent of his time to politics by giving 15 percent of yours. Whenever the man of the "right type" decides to give the politicians real competition, he can come pretty close to getting what he wants.

Now I should like to say a word as to the theory that our "best men" have no taste for the public service, prefer private life, are content to make money. The answer simply is that it is not so.

To be fair about it, in recent years there seems to be less of this twaddle about politics being a dirty game which decent men cannot afford to play. The more intelligent among our men of affairs appear to see that it is as silly as it is insincere, and more of them are consciously accepting the Morrow point of view. This is one of the really encouraging signs of these dizzy days.

Their motive is not and need not be a sense of public duty. The public gains from their service in politics, even though the motive may be selfish ambition. It is sufficient that men of the "right sort" have come to realize that holding public office is twice as interesting as any other work a man can do, and that politics is the best fun there is—the most worthwhile game in the world.—Frank R. Kent.

No War With Japan

War between the United States and Japan is possible, but exceedingly improbable. Why should the little empire of Asia, five thousand miles away, seek to attack us, one of the largest, strongest nations on earth, whose wealth exceeds her own tenfold?

In the event Japan went to war with us, there would be prompt action by China to recover Manchuria. Soviet Russia would doubtless lose no time releasing the military catapult she has been industriously winding up on the borders that hem in half of Manchukuo. Beset on all sides by powerful antagonists, what chance would Japan have of delivering a telling blow at the United States?

Japan as a snarling menace to our national security, ready to pounce upon us with bared fangs? Ridiculous! Let us use our good, old, common, American horse sense. Suppose that, instead of fostering suspicion and hatred of Japan, we bend our intelligent efforts to cultivating her good will and cooperation.—Roy Mathew Frisen, in the Forum.

Good Will and Minorities

Question. Is it in keeping with the spirit of the gospel where a presiding elder has been elected to preside over a branch by a majority of nearly two to one, for the minority to absent themselves from the church, or to say they will never step inside the church while that elder presides?

Answer. No. It is not in keeping with the idea that the wish of the majority should prevail; nor with the spirit of real good fellowship. It would seem to be the better policy for those in the minority, whose wish had not obtained in choosing a presiding elder, to submit gracefully to the will of the majority, and live in unity with the whole body, until there was a change in the presidency. But on the other hand, it would be bad policy for the majority to undertake to compel the minority to attend the meetings against their will. It would be much more in keeping with "good will and peace," for a president who found himself in such a position to decline to serve, rather than to attempt to discipline a fairly numerous minority, no matter how ill-judged the hostility of that minority might be.—Saints' Herald, volume 40, page 822.

Our Godlessness

Godlessness is the greatest peril of the present hour! I mean by godlessness just what the word means in its barest outline: to be godless is to have God subtracted from you. To be without God is to have a world-view in which there is no unifying power and no central intelligence; it is to have no moral code beyond the passing whim or temporary expediency; to live a life within which there glows no larger hope and beneath which lies no undergirding purpose. It is a fundamental weakness of our age that too many people have no sense of accountability to anything beyond themselves. They go through life without having felt reverence and awe in the presence of an eternal glory. For them there is no Great Spirit—only countless little spirits clothed in the frailties and limitations of humanity!

Why have we fallen upon such a godless day in human history? The plain answer is that the confused and blurred thinking about God so current today is the inevitable result of our changing cosmic ideas and the failure of the great mass of people to adjust their religious conceptions as yet to the world order revealed by modern science. But the adjustment is on the way, and it grows apace. A new sense of the reality and contemporaneousness of God is just about to burst upon the world. Greater than any other recovery act will be an adequate and convinced recovery of God!—Albert W. Palmer, in "The Eternal God and the Present Hour," The Christian Century.

Stewardship

Steward I—and not possessor—of the wealth entrusted me.

What, were God Himself the holder, would His disposition be?

This I ask myself each morning, every noon, and every night,

As I view His gentle goodness with an ever new delight.

Steward only—never owner—of the time that He has lent.

How, were He my life's custodian, would my years on earth be spent?

Thus I ask myself each hour, as I plod my pilgrim way

Steeped in gratefulest amazement at His mercy day by day.

Steward only—not possessor—of the part of Him that's I.

Clearer grows this truth, and dearer, as the years go slipping by,

May I softly go, and humbly, head and heart in reverence bent,

That I may not fear to show Him how my stewardship was spent.

—Strickland Gillilan.

Request Prayers

Sister John Murdock, of Clitherall, Minnesota, desires the prayers of the church for her brother, Theodore Hunter, who is afflicted with paralysis.

Prayers are asked for Mrs. Evelyn Fulliam, of Springfield, Illinois, who is very low with pneumonia and gangrene.

Our Departed Ones

LACEY.—Emma Arminta Hogaboam, daughter of Don Alphonzo and Evaline Amanthis Hogaboam, was born in Brown County, Illinois, November 14, 1851; passed away at the home of her cousin, Mrs. C. B. Stebbins, at Lamoni, Iowa, December 18, 1933. Her early life was spent in different communities in Illinois and Iowa, where her father operated flour mills and saw mills. She attended school at Burlington, Iowa, where she was married September 23, 1884, to Palemon Lacey. To them was born one daughter, Ethel Amanthis, who survives her mother. Mr. Lacey passed away June 3, 1926. Mr. and Mrs. Lacey made their home at Burlington for thirty-three years, moving to Lamoni in 1923. She was baptize a member of the church at Burlington by Elder W. W. Blair, at the age of twenty-five and remained a consistent Saint to the end. She was a good Christian, a kind neighbor and a devoted wife and mother. She was patient in affliction and appreciative of favors during her life and especially during her prolonged illness. Funeral services were held from the home, Elder T. S. Williams preaching the sermon.

SOLT.—Anna L. Manchester, daughter of Alonzo and Ella Manchester, was born March 9, 1896, at Akron, Ohio, and died December 26, 1933, at the home of her parents. She was united in marriage to Henry R. Solt, December 13, 1919, and to them was born one son, Raymond Leroy. She leaves to mourn her departure, her father, her mother, her husband, her son, her sister, Ethel May Saurer, and one brother, Harold Manchester, all of Akron, Ohio, with other relatives and friends. Funeral services were in charge of E. G. Hammond, the sermon by J. C. McConaughy.

LEMERE.—William Henry Lemere was born at Toronto, Canada, October 12, 1863. Died December 19, 1933, at the home of his stepson, Clarence Vickers, Bradley, Illinois. He was united in marriage to Mrs. Ollie Vickers, February 5, 1902, and to them one daughter was born, Mrs. Lillian Eklof, who preceded him in death three years ago. He was reared in the Catholic faith, but joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, October 12, 1912, and was a faithful and active member. He donated the lot on which the ill-fated church at Deseim was built. Was esteemed by all who knew him. Besides his wife, he leaves to mourn, a stepson, Clarence Vickers; a stepdaughter, Mrs. Bruce Wye, of Mokenca; twelve grandchildren, three brothers, and three sisters. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Earl D. Rogers at the Rehr Funeral Home at Kankakee, Illinois.

MAYMON.—Columbus Nephi Maymon, son of William A. and Marlina Maymon, was born September 24, 1876, near Sulphur, Indiana. Departed this life November 20, 1933. He was married to Eva Pearia Hollowell, February 5, 1899, and to them five children, three boys and two girls, were born, Cleatis L. Smith, Lois M. Harrison, Virgil, George, and Eugene Maymon. He is also survived by three brothers, Joseph, Harvey, and William Maymon; one sister, Mary Vernon; nine grandchildren, and many friends. He united with the church at the age of nineteen, and was ordained to the office of teacher in early life. October 11, 1931, he was ordained an elder in which office he served faithfully to the end. The funeral was held in the Saints' church at Byrneville, Indiana. W. O. Robertson, of Louisville, Kentucky, was in charge, assisted by E. A. Jeagers, of New Albany, Indiana. Interment was in the cemetery at Byrneville.

COLLIN.—Lily Annie Collin was born in Wales, February 16, 1909. She died in the hospital after a major operation, December 18, 1933, and was interred in Union Cemetery, Steubenville, Ohio. She came with her father, a brother and sister to Steubenville twenty-two years ago to join their grandmother and other relatives. She was diligent in Sunday school work and faithful in her testimony. The many tokens of sympathy expressed by wide circles of friends in the community and from many other parts of the country where she had church connections, certified to the integrity of her life. Her mother died several years ago in Wales. Left to mourn are her father, one sister, one brother, two half-brothers, and a step-mother who tenderly mothered her for many years. Funeral services were conducted by Elders William Richards and James E. Bishop.

HUNTINGTON.—Almyra L. Robson was born near Austin, Minnesota, May 19, 1860, and departed this life December 26, 1933. She was united in marriage to Everett G. Huntington, at Orchard, Iowa, November 27, 1878. To this union were born ten children, six sons, and four daughters. One daughter died at the age of two years, and soon after a homeless girl was adopted. She leaves to mourn her husband, ten children, forty grandchildren, and twenty great-grandchildren.

SHEPHERD.—John Romaine Shepherd was born at Walsingham Centre, Norfolk County, Ontario, December 10, 1848, and departed this life November 15, 1933. Forty-seven years ago he moved to Saint Thomas, Ontario, and established a furniture business, being an expert cabinet maker. He became a member of the church November 16, 1892, and was ordained an elder October 28, 1894. He served as president of Saint Thomas Branch for a number of years, and also in other capacities. He was faithful to the end. He is survived by his widow; three daughters, Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. Hammond, of Saint Thomas, and Mrs. Graham, of Detroit, Michigan; one son, J. C. Shepherd, Chatham, Ontario, one stepson, Lorne Pearson, Pontiac, Michigan; three grandchildren, besides other relatives and friends. Funeral services were conducted from P. R. Williams and Son Funeral Home. Interment was in the Saint Thomas Cemetery. Bishop J. C. Dent, of London, Ontario, preached the sermon.

ceiving strength and courage from this combined service.

Lawrence Sheldon, son of Brother and Sister Allen Blankenship, was blessed at the communion service last Sunday morning.

Sister Annice Wisecup passed away January 2, at her home. For twelve years she had lived in Independence. She is survived by her husband, James Wisecup; a daughter, Mrs. Marie Overbeck, and three sons, Cecil Wisecup, James Wisecup, jr., and Gene Wisecup, of the home; a brother, James Edward Smith, of Missouri Valley, Iowa. The funeral services were conducted at Missouri Valley where she was interred.

Englewood Church

Attendance at Englewood has shown a pleasing increase the last few weeks. They have had their share of sickness and holiday visiting to keep people away from services, but all classes have been well filled. The Z. O. A. Class, under the leadership of Brother Alex McIntosh, is holding up its high standard of attendance and interest.

The young people are getting organized for the play contest. Sister Bea McNamara has been chosen director with Inez Tousley, Doreen Hougas and Ralph Dunlap as assistants in each of the three divisions.

The young people had a party December 19, and as part of the evening's program, put up Christmas decorations.

The church school gave its Christmas program at eleven o'clock, December 24. At seven-thirty the combined adult and young people's choirs gave a musical program.

Apostle J. A. Gillen is the speaker at Englewood in the city-wide missionary campaign, and his opening service was New Year's Eve. The speaker at the eleven o'clock hour, December 31, was Patriarch F. A. Smith.

Spring Branch Church

On the last Wednesday night of the old year, the pastor and group elders called a union prayer service of the Saints. Attendance was large, and under the leadership of local priesthood officers, the meeting proved very helpful.

Elder Hubert Case, missionary to Central Michigan District, was the morning speaker, December 31, and his text was, "There Is No Respector of Persons With God."

That night the church school program was given by Brother Jesse Smith's class, and a poem was read by G. F. Weston.

Evangelist Ammon White was the speaker in the evening, introducing his two weeks' series. His theme was, "Origin of the Saints' Church." A quartet of local singers sang, "Precious Name" at this service, and the pastor was in charge of the hour.

New Year's Day marked Charles Brewer and wife's golden wedding day. The evening service was held in their honor. Special numbers were rendered by Irene Roberts, Francis Tankard, and Gladys Dixon. Patriarch Ammon White gave a short talk.

Immediately following the short program, the meeting was given over to Patriarch Ammon White, the evening speaker, who talked on the name of the church and its members.

Throughout the series of missionary meetings held each evening, local young people have assisted with special numbers. Brother White has talked on such subjects as, "Authority," and "Christ's Second Coming." Local musicians have rendered splendid service each night.

Sacrament service was held with a large congregation. Frank Robinson and Gladys Dixon sang, "Despised and Rejected."

Jesus once asked his disciples a pointed question "Lovest thou me more than these?" We still believe that the question is timely. The question of a subscription to the Saints' Herald now is really a question of whether or not we want it badly enough to subscribe in preference to purchasing other things. The management is making it as easy as possible for all during January. Ask yourself the question and then write us.

The Pigeonhole

■ What He Got

Our daily thriller brings us the information that a certain millionaire of the southwest, now pleasantly deceased, had the following inscription carved on his tombstone: "I got mine!" A vulgar bit of bragging, of course, about his money.

It is more than a brag. It is a lie.

He got more than his. He was one of many whose getting more than rightly belonged to them put the country where it is today. He was one of the army of about 100,000 members of the Malevolent Order of the Fathers of the Depression. His name, with theirs, should be placed on some National Roll of Dishonor for the Betrayal of the Country, for the execration of future generations.

There are circumstances under which it is a sin and a disgrace to become a millionaire: gambling with goods that other men have produced and robbing them of their legitimate profits; stealing prosperity from the future that will have to be paid for by a depression; selling things by misrepresenting their worth; collecting paper profits from businesses that will certainly be forced into bankruptcy. We cannot list all of them. The politer circles of criminals are ingenious, and keep inventing new rackets.

■ The Gospel of Giving

By Ellis Murdock

A funny thing—this life we live,
The more we have the less we give.
Many have much that they could spare,
And yet their gifts are very rare.
But there are some—God bless them all—
Who do their part. They heed the call,
And try in every way they can,
To cheer and aid their fellow man.
This is the only way to show
The love we have for those we know.
Just help all those we find in need,
Comfort the sad—the hungry feed.
By things we say and deeds we do.
We're judged, when life on earth is through.

■ Put These in Your Notebook

No one is rich enough to do without a neighbor.

There is not much religion in praying on your knees on Sunday and preying on your neighbors during the week.

A clever woman can marry a robot or a store dummy, and manage to make him over into something, which other women would think worth having; while a foolish woman can draw a prize husband and mess him up so he seems like an affliction.

A wise man is he who puts into the hands of boys and girls many good books of biography. For, in this way, our future leaders will grow to appreciate the world's yesterdays, live soberly and wholesomely today, and acquire for themselves fortitude and understanding and high devotion for tomorrow's exciting tasks.—Lamoni Chronicle.

Music at the General Conference

The Music Department, though working under the handicap of not having any appropriation for expenses is making zealous efforts in preparation for General Conference music. The central feature of the efforts of that department will be the rendition of the oratorio "Elijah." For this a number of choirs are and have for some time been in training, and are manifesting a fine spirit of cooperation and devotion. From the earnestness of these preparations it is assured that the delegates and visitors to the conference will hear a fine rendition of a splendid oratorio. Sister Mabel Carlile and Brother Paul N. Craig are working well together for the success of the oratorio and other work of the music department at conference. They have extended to Brother A. N. Hoxie, former general chorister, invitation to conduct the chorus, and to this invitation we have given our hearty support.

Another suggestion with which we find ourselves in hearty accord is that the Music Department make the rendition of the "Elijah" the central feature of a memorial to Sister Louise Robinson whose wise counsel and unswerving devotion to the work of the music department carried it over a trying time. She is remembered in love and respect by the musicians of the church, especially at the center place, and I am sure all members of the Music Department will enter earnestly and yet tenderly in the move to give a musical memorial to this good woman who gave so unstintedly of time and talents to the improvement of music in the church.

We are looking forward to good things from our musicians at General Conference.

Sharing must become a determined virtue if our present social system is to be safeguarded with any sort of assurance. Our charity has taught us to give from our surplus, but not as yet to share from our income.—Charles H. Heimsath, "New Times—New Virtues," in The Christian Century.

A New Era for the Church

Last week we considered the possibility for an increased degree of unity and spirituality within the church, coupled with an intensified missionary ministry to the world. Preparation for such developments throws an immediate responsibility upon the priesthood, both general and local.

A QUICKENING OF THE LOCAL PRIESTHOOD

The church was organized to minister to the social as well as the spiritual needs of its members. The initial set-up for this work is found in the various grades of the priesthood, as indicated:

"The high priests and elders . . . are the standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the Presidency and the Twelve."—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3.

"The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, . . . and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. . . . In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10.

"The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all members do their duty."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11.

"Deacons and teachers should be appointed to watch over the church, to be standing ministers unto the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 22.

The sort of trained, efficient, spiritual, pastoral ministry contemplated in the foregoing revelations has all too often not been forthcoming. We have trusted this ministry too much to other agencies and organizations: the church school, boy scouts, Orioles, social service bureaus, and other similar social agencies. Do not misunderstand me, these are capable of rendering excellent service—and have done so; but should be supplementary to the sort of service set forth in the law. Had we spent more time and energy to train, organize, and send forth to their ministry an adequate body of ordained men we would have fared better; and these other agencies could have more effectually rendered their service in subsidiary capacities.

In too many branches the priest does not visit at all—or at rare intervals. Too often the teacher has quite vanished from the scheme of things. There are many personal difficulties to settle that might have been avoided by timely ministrations of an intelligent priest—and now having arisen the pastor must settle these difficulties instead of the teacher doing it—or they come up to the apostles or the presidency and take their time.

One task in the era before us should be to train, inspire, and organize an active and efficient body of the "standing ministry." We see the beginnings of that work. With the full concurrence of the other members of the presidency, President Floyd McDowell has been doing well-thought-out and intensive work with the local priesthood in the west and middle west. The coming General Conference is expected to address its major emphasis to the problems of the ministry. The Priesthood Manual, already published, is the beginning of a series of valuable helps to be put into the hands of the local ministry. Men of the ministry in any local branch, and in the church as a whole, may well look forward to a new era of active, sustained, and fruitful ministry.

IMPROVED FINANCIAL STANDING

No one can safely predict the trend of coming events, short of a divine declaration. If economic conditions get worse, neither the church nor any other institution may be able to meet its obligations. Present indications generally point to a slight and rather world-wide improvement. When and if prosperity returns, even to a moderate degree, the church should be in excellent position to take advantage of it. In spite of the hard times, there has been a reduction of our general church debt, and a more favorable rearrangement of obligations. It seems almost certain that we will emerge with our indebtedness refinanced on much more favorable terms. And the bishops have committed themselves to an organized effort to wipe out the debt when the psychological moment arrives.

The years of trial and hardship have taught valuable lessons that might perhaps have been learned more easily. We are on a basis of strict economy, so far as the general church is concerned; and the ministry generally, as well as local congregations, are on a similar basis. We are in excellent position to take advantage of any improvement that may take place. Moreover, these times of stress have hardened an iron resolution in many breasts that the church shall be freed from debt and shall not again be involved in the shackles of debt. This resolution is so general and deep-seated that it may be trusted to carry forward for a good many years to come.

It is not too much to hope for temporal as well as spiritual deliverance to an extent that will bring joy to many hearts in the era before us. This is not a promise or a prophecy; it is the expression of a feeling shaping in many hearts and growing out of faith and hope.

A FORWARD MOVEMENT IN ZION BUILDING

For at least three years past the general church authorities have been kept busy meeting the emergencies of the immediate moment. This has been true in an especial sense of the Presiding Bishopric. They have been driven day and night to meet the immediate problems due to the financial storm that has overwhelmed the world. Great nations have defaulted on their debts. So have big cities, business organizations almost beyond number, and numerous churches of much greater numerical and financial strength than we can boast. By comparison we have not fared so badly; and our creditors (by comparison) have been very fortunate.

Paul Hutchinson, reviewing "the year's record of the churches," in the Literary Digest, December 30, 1933, says of the churches generally:

"Hundreds of church executives, if they were to give their honest impression of the past year, would admit that it has been, for them, principally twelve months of effort to escape from a nightmare of debt. Religious institutions over-expanded during the boom era just like all others. The result is that the country is dotted now with cathedral-like churches almost suffocated under a blanket of debt, with scores of small denominational colleges that are on their financial last legs, with hospitals and asylums that stand in imminent danger of closing. . . . In the long run, however, it is likely that changes in thinking which have clearly appeared during the past year will prove more important to American church life than any of these readjustments in method which have been forced by the economic situation."

With a little easement of the tension, both the bishops and the presidency, as well as others, are able to look above and beyond the immediate pressing claims of creditors, missionaries' families, current expenses, and the pitiable plight of needy church members. There appears ground for a very reasonable and lively hope that increasingly more attention may be given the problems of advising those who wish to settle in Zion and the regions round about; and to the problems of practical organization and development of Saints who wish to cooperate in the building of Zion.

We noted in our article on "A New Era for the World," that there is a growing feeling and determination in America, as well as elsewhere, that in the future there must be a more general and equitable distribution of wealth. Any intelligent and successful governmental attempt to bring about such results will almost certainly be helpful to our cause. It is in line with our own belief. Our people are mostly of moderate means, at best, and by any such development they should stand to gain. Our task might thus conceivably be made less difficult in the era before us.

As a postulate to equality in Zion the Lord told Joseph Smith that the strong and successful must consecrate of their surplus for the benefit of the worthy needy and unfortunate (not for the lazy or shiftless). "The surplus must be consecrated"—that was an important part of the latter day message. The world gave it scant heed. But now for some years we have seen an enforced consecration of surplus. By charitable drives, that often became almost mandatory, and by direct or indirect taxation the surplus of those who had been taken from them and given to the unemployed and the destitute. A new attitude of mind and a new sense of responsibility has been developed on a broad scale that should be helpful to our work.

CONCLUSION

The anticipated gains set forth in these editorials seem within the range not only of possibility but also of probability. Their realization depends largely upon our own devotion and diligence. Some of them are within our reach in the very immediate future, others may be longer delayed. We have been told that no one can assist in this work except he shall have faith and hope. Those who lose hope for the church cease their activity—they no longer pay tithes or render service or give of their attendance at church services. Let us cultivate the spirit of hope that will prompt us to cheerful and whole-hearted service.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Complaints and Facts

A customer recently received a shipment by express from our office, and immediately wrote a harsh letter about our methods, our lack of economy, our waste of church funds, and other things. It was an ignorantly written and impolite letter. We regret that numbers of people seem to enjoy writing such letters.

He did not know that in the fourth zone express is just as cheap as parcel post, and much quicker; nor that express is cheaper than parcel post in the more distant zones. We wouldn't use express if it were not better and cheaper in these cases.

People who write rude and violent letters brand themselves; and the letters, preserved in our files, testify loudly as to their character and state of culture. Certain simple rules of decency should be observed, even among members of the same faith. We suggest that they learn the facts before they shut down their minds and turn themselves loose in attack and gossip.

The great majority of our customers appreciate the improved service we are giving them, and we greatly appreciate their loyalty and patronage. We are doing our best to serve our customers and the church honestly and efficiently.

Men You Ought to Know

MYRON A. MCCONLEY
Of the Quorum of Twelve

Apostle Myron A. McConley was called into the Quorum of Twelve shortly before the arrival of a group of younger men, but he is regarded as one of the stalwarts of firm faith and tried strength.

Brother McConley believes in simplicity, and practices it. There are no complications in his faith or his character. One always knows where to find him, and that is very close to the gospel. Much of his work has been in the West that he loves, where he has hosts of friends among the people.

John L. Cooper Stricken

Some days ago letters from Kirtland brought us the sad news that Brother John L. Cooper had suffered a paralytic stroke, and from Sister Cooper, Brother George Neville and Brother James E. Bishop, as well as Brother Harry E. French, we have had reports concerning the condition there. The last report indicates that Brother Cooper is making remarkable recovery despite the predictions of the physician that his recovery was highly improbable. Brother Cooper, his loved ones, and the Saints feel sure that once more has the efficacy of prayer been demonstrated. Brother Cooper's friends are legion and we know that they will all be earnestly hoping and praying for his complete recovery.

When the Girl Wants to Know—

TELL HER!

By Leta B. Moriarty

"Won't you tell me some of the things I ought to know about life? Mother says I'm too young, but I'm sixteen. I shan't ask her any more, because I honestly believe she's ashamed or afraid to tell me. And oh—I do need to know!"

I wonder if you could have resisted the appeal in those beseeching blue eyes that were turned on me, or the tremble of the young lips. I have watched Elsie grow up from care-free ten-year-old-hood. She is almost a woman now, but I can remember the time when she loved nothing better than to play with all the boys and dogs on her block. Now she is tall; she wears her skirts quite long; her hair is finely curled, she generally carries too heavy a load of lipstick and rouge. Nevertheless, Elsie is a girl of real charm and promise. I felt happy that I should merit the confidence of the girl, and yet most unhappy, that she had been allowed to reach the age of sixteen without a greater understanding of life—the biological side of life.

And looking into Elsie's eyes I thought of the verses written by Ethel M. Kelley:

"Whose little girl did I used to be Before I was yours at all?
When you hadn't been introduced to me—
When I was as small as small?"

"When I was a little tiny thing—
Before I could speak or cry,
Before the stork thought I was ready to bring—
Whose little girl was I?"

There are dozens and dozens of little information-starved Elsie's in the world and in the church, Elsie's that are hoping and wondering.

Oftentimes they bring questions of very intimate nature to their school teachers and to their leaders. Here are representative questions concerning the same problems that are confronting Elsie, which have been asked me in the last six months by girls from fifteen to eighteen years of age:

"Why is heavy petting bad? It doesn't seem to hurt me—but I think it's kind of silly." This from black-eyed, seventeen-year-old Marceline.

"Will you tell me something about sex? Is it really as horrible as everyone seems to think it is?" From a shy fifteen-year-old.

"Why couldn't I have been a boy? Don't you think we women get a hand-me-down deal in life?" Worldly wise, eighteen-year-old Margaret.

It is a sad fact that too large a percent of our girls know little about the Great Wonder of Life. Most of their knowledge is assembled piece by piece, a whisper of a schoolmate, a black-lettered message from some patent medicine advertisement, a bitter word from a cynical woman, all colored by an adolescent imagination.

These make up the pitiable background which many girls carry from adolescence into womanhood. In her teens the girl struggles to reconcile this information with what she has heard of the mercy of God, the goodness and purity of Jesus, the sweetness of her own mother. Here at a time in her life when she is laying the physical, mental and spiritual foundation of womanhood, she is confused and many, many times unprepared for the experiences through which she is to pass.

The carelessness, or false modesty, of many a mother and leader has permitted countless number of girls to enter the years of middle and later adolescence in no way prepared to cope with the experiences which come to them. At this period the girl is a builder of castles, a day-dreamer; she does not live in our ordinary, everyday world, but in a world created by her imagination, in a world of hero and heroine worship. If during her earlier years and during the present period, she has the confidence of a wise, sympathetic woman, she is ready for the wealth of emotions and the growth of intellectual and spiritual powers ahead of her. But if she does not have this training, this confidence, this background, she is poorly prepared for the puzzles of young womanhood.

Every girl has a right to be well equipped for life. She has a right to know something of the beautiful mystery of the beginning of life, of birth, of motherhood, of wifehood, of home-keeping. Who has a better right than blue-eyed Elsie who one-day herself will, no doubt, be a wife and mother?

When the girl comes to you who are her mother or you who are her leader or teacher, asking concerning these mysteries, I beg of you to tell her. Make attractive and lovely to her the story of life. Talk to her in terms that she will understand, explaining simply. Don't unless you wish to lose her confidence forever, (Continued on page 82)

Two Notable Events for Hamilton, Australia

Hamilton Branch, New South Wales, Australia, recently celebrated two happy events. They opened up their new church school hall and dedicated their church building.

One hundred and seventy members compose this branch and these, in the past six years, in spite of industrial reverses, have succeeded in clearing the church building of debt. Participating in the dedication ceremony December 10, were Apostle G. G. Lewis, Elder A. J. Corbett, a representative of the Bishopric in Australia, and the pastor, Elder J. H. Jenkins.

One Hundred Percent Tithe-payers

The group at Wimer, Oklahoma, is proud of the record of its membership—one hundred percent tithepayers! The branch is also happy to have its own Zion Builders organization to boost local activities.

First Grandview Members Are Honored

A surprise supper was given in honor of Brother and Sister Charles Taylor, first members of the church at Grandview, Missouri, Holden Stake. Covers were laid for sixty-four guests, and later in the evening a program was enjoyed in the church auditorium, Elder E. T. Atwell the speaker. Elder Atwell baptized Brother and Sister Taylor. A gift of money was presented Brother Taylor by Pastor Charles Martin as a token of thanks for his and Sister Taylor's faithful services. Everyone regretted that Sister Taylor was ill and unable to be present on this occasion.

Radio Sermonets From KMBX, Breckenridge

Brother W. H. Mannering, of Breckenridge, Texas, will broadcast a sermonet each Sunday at 1.15 p. m. from the local radio station, KMBX, and the church school of Breckenridge Mission will furnish music. This is a long stride forward for the little mission which was opened two years ago.

Independence Women Revive Friendly Visiting

Independence women are in earnest in their endeavor to revive friendly visiting. Under the direction of the supervisor of this movement, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, intensive work has been done during the past two months. During November the total number of friendly calls, made on members, nonmembers, the sick, aged, and poor, amounted to 621. In December there were 1,138 visits.

Flood Puts Off Program

Because of flood conditions the branch at Yakima, Washington, found it necessary to postpone their Christmas program, scheduled for Christmas Eve, until New Year's Eve.

Fifty-first Wedding Anniversary for Blenheim Couple

Brother W. E. and Sister Jane Hewitt, of Blenheim, Ontario, Canada, celebrated their fifty-first wedding anniversary January 3. Among those who sent letters of congratulations were President F. M. Smith, Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith and Doctor Joseph and Jane Luff, old-time friends in the gospel.

"Light House" Services for Council Bluffs Young People

The young people of Council Bluffs, Iowa, held a week of "Light House" services last fall, each sermon being delivered by a young priesthood member. Every evening the sermon was preceded by a short program given by young people of Council Bluffs, Tabor, Shenandoah, and Underwood, Iowa. Speakers were Lee Landon, Alfred Taylor, Merl Spence, Amos Graybill, Paul Harding, Gene Turpen, Elmer Johnson, Conrad Booton, and Merl Grover.

Milan Mission to Become a Branch

Milan Mission, Michigan, entertained Apostle D. T. Williams and District Presidents R. H. Green and A. B. Smith, December 17. On this glad occasion they dedicated their church home and made arrangements to organize a branch.

Young People's Work at General Conference

Strong interest will center about the development of local branch work for young people, according to hints that have come from those who are making the plans for the General Conference in April. We are dropping this bit of advance information so that young people and their leaders who can attend may make their plans to do so.

It is clear now that the activities of young people need more attention than additional organization. The problem now is to find potential leaders and to train them in the important work of building a local program to suit the particular needs of each individual branch. It is not easy to find such leadership material, and people who are willing to give their efforts and prepare for their work are really scarce.

In its plan for the organization of the church school, which is outlined in the Church School Handbook our general officers have already suggested the place of young people's work in the branch organization. The branches now need the leaders and the program materials for their work.

It is hoped that something good will be offered for those who are interested in this line of endeavor at the Conference.

It Is Well

"All will be well," we say, and seek to gather

Light for the sad hour from tomorrow's ray;

O, that we might this truth lay hold on rather,

Our Lord is here, and all is well today.

Dwells He apart from any trusting servant

When clouds prevail and adverse winds arise?

Doth he not hear, or grows his love less fervent

Because of raging seas and stormy skies?

Today the life abundant in us liveth,

Today the truth eternal is our guide;
Today the love unmeasured freely giveth
Himself—and can we lack for aught beside?

Today His mercy and His power enfold us,

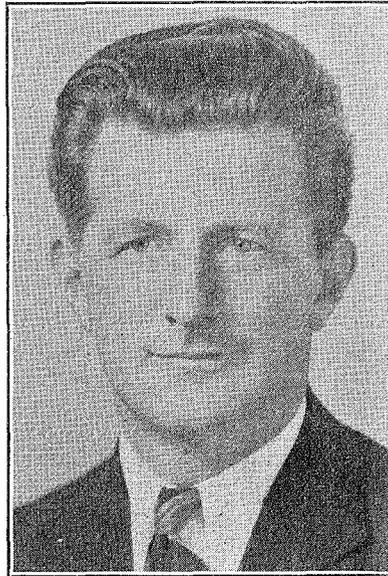

Today his blessed footprints mark our way,

Today His Father's hand is strong to hold us—

All things are ours, and all is well today.

—Thomas R. Robinson

"See You At Conference" Are You Planning to Come?

GEORGE MESLEY
Of Kansas City Stake

You will meet him at General Conference. He is tall, blond, and as pleasant as a day in June. A real friend of the young people, he knows how to work for and with them. He took the O. B. K. idea a class in Mount Washington church and developed and applied it to all the other congregations in Kansas City Stake. It has brought many young people into church work, trained some good leaders, and under his guidance has brought younger people and older ones together in sympathy and understanding.

Besides his work with young people, he is pastor of the Grandview, Kansas, congregation, Director of Religious Education for Kansas City Stake, Head of the O. B. K. Council, and Secretary of the High Priest's Quorum. Busy!

People are unhappy who give their minds no work to do. The brain, most delicate of all machinery, is easily rusted. It is sad to see people who have grown so stale that they cannot enjoy time, alone and quiet, in which to think—to become better acquainted and more interested in that other self. . . .

Often the tired mind longs for rest. Let it then turn from its work to the good things of life: let it find joy in happy memories, satisfaction in tasks well done, and peace in God.—Alma MacMillan, in "Sugar Doughnuts," The Youth's Instructor.

Are you planning to attend the General Conference? Our "Youth's Forum" wishes to receive the names of young people who are planning to come, either singly or in groups.

Transportation will be one of the hard problems for many who desire to attend. Some ingenious ideas were used by young people getting to the Youth Conference at Lamoni. A note as to the means of travel by those who are coming to the conference will be appreciated.

We hope that "See you at Conference!" will become a slogan, pass-word, or what you will for the next few weeks.

Are you coming? Please let us know.

O. T. Z. Rally for Far West Stake

Saturday and Sunday, January 27 and 28, are big days in the calendar of the O. T. Z. young people's organization of Far West Stake. Full announcement of the program may be seen in the Bulletin Board in the back of this issue. Apostle F. Henry Edwards will be the guest speaker. A banquet opens the program in the Y. W. C. A. Rose Room in Saint Joseph Saturday night. Free lodging for those who come from out of the city will be furnished. There will be a basket dinner, and the rally will close with an Allegiance Service at 4.30 Sunday afternoon.

Y. R. A.

Nearly three hundred young people of the Metropolitan Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., John Compton Ball, pastor, signed the following pledge which is the basis of the Youth Recovery Act of the church.

Our Pledge

Young in years, but with Open minds and keen Understanding of
The great need for Holiness of life and honesty of purpose, we

Reverently pledge ourselves to an Earnest and sincere Cooperation with Jesus Christ, and with One another against all
Vice and crime, and we will Endeavor through prayer and practice to Restore the high standards of life set
Years ago by our forefathers.

Agreeing in this great task, we do hereby

Consecrate our lives to our Savior, and promise

To put the YOU in YOUTH to the glory of His Holy Name.

Observations on Repeal

By James Evans

LAST December 6 saw the repeal of the prohibition amendment to the nation's constitution, and news regarding repeal was headlined in all papers. To some people it became a time for celebration. "Let joy be unrefined" became for them more of reality than mere humor. For others the day was one of disappointment, of regret that a registered ideal had been effaced from the statute books and actions long deplored in society had again been given a legal status.

Women voters, who obtained their franchise after prohibition was inaugurated, are said to have been to a great extent responsible for its defeat. Especially effective were the women organized by Mrs. Sabin, who is being hailed as a public benefactress by the press. It is stated that in addition to prohibition reform, Mrs. Sabin's organization intended to promote "true" temperance. The press reports, however, that women representatives of this powerful ally of repeal are to meet in Washington with their leader, and that after due rites of victory have been performed, the organization is to be disbanded until a need for it again arises. Now a question arises in my mind regarding the sincerity of this asserted aim to promote temperance. Surely at no time since the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment has there been a greater need for temperance and the assistance of reputable temperance organizations. And yet, immediately after repeal, Mrs. Sabin is disbanding her followers. Just how legitimate and sincere were the motives expressed by this organization? Any of my readers who gave it their active support or tacit approval should feel compelled to justify their stand in the face of such evidence.

A FAVORITE ARGUMENT of the wets has been that bootlegging, with a host of other evils commonly ascribed to it, would disappear after repeal. Many people, forgetting that bootlegging was a problem before the day of prohibition, were led to believe that it would die a natural death as soon as the so-called "legitimate" liquor business was allowed to function. But the patient won't be so easily persuaded he is dead. In fact, bootlegging is not only going to be very much alive, but it will be stronger than ever. Direct evidence of this began coming in print several weeks before repeal took place. A recent issue of Time reports that Rum Row, the aggregation of bootleggers' boats stationed off the Eastern coast, has greatly increased in size since it became evident that prohibition was doomed. These ships must not be confused with ordinary transports carrying liquor. They will continue to smuggle into this country their contraband liquor as before, except that henceforth their operations are to be more extensive. Does it therefore appear that repeal will stop bootlegging?

The liquor interests themselves appear to be greatly worried about the situation. Announcements have appeared to the effect that they will demand of the Federal Government a liquor police organization superior to anything we have ever had before, so that their "legitimate" business may be protected from the chiselers they so blatantly proclaimed would be non-existent after repeal. Isn't it ironical that the very forces which did the most to discredit and make ineffective the enforcement of prohibition are now the ones which demand that they, not society, be protected by just such an organization? That isn't all that is being demanded, or all that will be as time goes on.

The Liquor Traffic

"The liquor issue is not dead. . . . Those who want a progressive society, in which democracy may rule, in which safety of person and property may be assured, in which government may gradually become free of political corruption, and in which human personality shall be given its birthright, must unalterably continue to oppose the liquor traffic."

DO YOU RECALL how the wets whooped it up about the hundreds of millions of dollars that were to flow into the state and national treasuries from high taxes on liquor, and how consumption of intoxicants could be kept within "reasonable bounds" (whatever that may mean) by making it expensive to drink hard liquor? It will be expensive, but not because of the taxes, if the liquor interests have their way. We shall be told that taxes on liquor must be reduced to nothing, if the vicious bootlegging practices which were allegedly promoted by prohibition are to be eradicated. And that is just what every liquor control board and every legislature considering the problem has been told. People who expect hundreds of millions of dollars of liquor taxes to be collected by the government are just kidding themselves.

You will remember that when agitation to legalize 3.2 beer was rife, the wets loudly proclaimed that beer would be very substantially taxed and yet be sold to the consumer at a low price. Did it work out that way? Not at all. As soon as victory was in sight, the liquor manufacturers and distributors got their politicians to reduce the proposed tax to a fraction of its advertised size, and what happened to the price? For the most part, it has never been low. And so neither promise was kept.

It is conceivable that a strong-arm dictatorial policy on the part of the Federal Government might be for a while successful in making the liquor traffic pay a substantial tax. But if the same opportunities are presented the industry for disseminating misleading propaganda as it employed during prohibition, the public will soon be persuaded that nothing could be more harmful to its liberties than a tax on intoxicating drinks.

I SHOULD LIKE to digress for a little while here and discuss this matter of censorship. It is my belief that prohibition was defeated, not on the merits of the opposing case, but almost wholly through a vicious system of propaganda applied with utmost movies to assist in the defeat of prohibition.

And so it will always be whenever the great media of educations—schools, radio, press, moving pictures, etc.—are controlled by private concerns whose major stimulus is the profits motive. A great chain of newspapers, or a high-powered radio station, owned and operated by one individual or a small group of individuals, may present the same problem of a private monopoly of an educational medium. Under such circumstances the welfare of society demands that it protect itself from a bombardment of propaganda subversive to its interests. These media must be placed under nonpartisan, governmental regulation. Or, as is needed in the case of chains of newspapers, some safeguard must be set up to prevent the monopoly by an individual or a group of individuals of the right to determine what hundreds of thousands of people throughout the country shall read concerning vital issues of the day.

In the preceding paragraph I said that regulation must be provided. It is extremely important that under such regulation in a democracy the public shall be given ample opportunity to see, hear, and cunning to all ages of individuals and to all strata of society. The media through which this propaganda was broadcast included primarily the moving pictures, the press, and the radio. Especially effective was the attack through the medium of motion pictures. This agency is, for reasons which need not be enumerated here, now regarded by many authorities as the most powerful means in this country for influencing the thoughts and emotions of the masses. It is a wonderful and a fearful medium for swaying the public mind. And yet, with all their potential values and dangers, motion pictures are controlled by a small group of individuals dominated primarily by the profits motive.

During the prohibition era I was a fairly frequent theater-goer. During all those years I recall having seen not a single picture which would arouse in the audience sentiments favoring national prohibition, but I saw many pictures unquestionably designed to produce exactly the opposite effect. It is ridiculous to insist that motion pictures merely endeavor to give an accurate representation of life situations, or that art requires a setting of alcohol and license. The triumph of virtue over evil offers more opportunities to achieve greatness in any art form than does the opposite condition. There can be no question but that life and art were both perverted in the read the opposing arguments of any controversial issue. This type of censorship brings greater freedom to each individual. It is when censorship is monopolized, either by a despot or a private control of educational media, that it becomes the means of imposing a despotic will. And that is just what happened under prohibition, when private interests operating from a profits motive were allowed free hand in determining what the public was to think and feel.

TO RETURN DIRECTLY to the question of repeal, I am reminded of many extravagant claims regarding a return to prosperity which was to accompany repeal as its direct result. And there is little room for doubt that if, during a period when prohibition is not a law, we should happen to get back to a semblance of prosperity, the masses will allow themselves to be persuaded that repeal accomplished the miracle. This common fallacy of attributing to coincidental occurrences a cause-result relationship is an error from which the prohibition amendment has been made to suffer severely. Every imaginable evil, private or public, which existed during the life of the Eighteenth Amendment, has been attributed to its influence. These evils won't vanish with repeal, al- (Continued on page 82)

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt

MY FATHER, Mark Hill Forscutt, was born June 19th, 1834, at Godmanchester, England, the son of Robert and Amy Hill Forscutt. He had seven half brothers and one half sister, but was the only living child of his mother. His father was a Congregationalist and his mother a Baptist, and he was raised in a strictly religious environment. He was allowed the privilege of attending either church as he desired, but was always required to go to one of them. His parents were comfortably situated and he had a pleasant home. He finished grammar school at the age of eleven years and a short time later, as were boys of that day, he was bound out, to learn a business or trade, and was placed with a draper, or as we should term it, a dry-goods merchant.

When about seventeen he decided he would attend "Cambridge" for further education, so for two years he saved his wages to pay his way through this institution. One Thursday evening, a short time before he expected to leave for Cambridge, as he was returning from work he met friends who said to him: "Let's go down to Williamson's and hear the Mormons preach and have some fun." Father replied that he would like to hear them, but not to make fun of them, as he believed no religion should be ridiculed.

(Mr. Williamson was the father of Sister George Hilliard, Sister Nellie James, and William and Charles Williamson of Independence.) The boys went and the first sermon convinced my father that they had something different. He again attended Friday night, but Saturday he had to remain at the store, so Sunday he went morning and evening. After hearing four sermons, went home and gathered up clothing for the purpose and was baptized.

His father was a very stern man, and exacted implicit obedience from his children. Soon after the aforementioned episode a friend said to him, "I understand that your son Mark is attending the Mormon meetings down at Williamson's." "Oh! no, he is not," answered my grandfather. "I heard also that he had been baptized." Grandfather was very angry and as soon as Mark came in, called him and said, "What is this I hear of your going to those Mormon meetings?"

"I have been, father."

"Well, maybe it is also true what I heard about your being baptized?"

"It is, father."

"Then take your things and get out of my house, and never step your foot in again until you give up that religion."

My father packed his clothing and then sought his mother. She had already heard the decision and met him like the dear, good, brave woman she was. She kissed him good-bye and told him that if he thought he had found the truth to stick to it, but if he ever found it false to give it up and come back home.

Father lost his job, and because of one of the elders of that day, did not go to college. I think that this was the one thing he regretted all his life. The elder told him that "The Lord did not want educated men, as he would put into their mouths the words he wanted them to speak."

He was called almost at once to the priesthood and for nearly two years worked and labored at anything he could get to do.

June, 1855.—I was walking down to the station in Wellingboro when I met Pastor C. R. Dana of Northampton, with whom I returned. He asked me whether I would like to take a mission to preach the gospel, at the Norwich conference. I replied, "I feel too weak to undertake such a task, but am clay in the hands of the potter, willing to work and give my mite to aid in the work or cast myself entirely into the work of the Lord and go forth and spread the gospel."

June 10.—Sunday. Attended conference at Wellingboro where I was called and ordained to the office of elder.

June 14.—I went to town to tell the people we would preach on the green. They stoned us out of the town, pelted us with stones, sticks and dirt till we got a half mile out, and threatened us severely if we came back again. We heeded not their threats nor feared their power, but knew God was able to protect. So came back and held services on Brother Linsley's green, spoke on the first principles of the gospel and the second coming of Christ and many of those that had threatened came and listened with fine attention and made no further objections. Continued to preach and talk the gospel there and in Bedford.

June 19.—This morning I was 21 years old, I felt to fast and pray, that I might be purified from all uncleanness and fit to bear the message of our Lord. That I might have control over my body, my feelings, my desires, I hereby dedicate myself to him with all I have, and pray that I may cultivate the spirit he has given me, so it may control.

My next appointment was at Ennesburg, eleven miles, which I walked. While there I visited my brother who lived at Saint Neots. Remained there till the 26th, preaching there and in surrounding towns, baptizing eight. Next I went to Cambridge, a walk of 24 miles to meet Elder Dana, where we took the train for Norwich, and there I met President Crowley and Elder Bunting, the latter with whom I was associated much of the time before I left England. Stayed in Norwich for conference where we were very kindly treated. There I was appointed to travel in Brandon and Feltwell, and to occupy myself with preaching and distributing the printed word among the Gentiles. I am especially grateful for the way the Saints opened their hearts and homes to me, realizing that God was indeed blessing me.

July 8.—Sunday. I received my first donation, from Brother Holmes, who in bidding me good-bye, dropped a shilling in my hand and bade me "Godspeed." There again the church was pelted with stones and dirt but none injured.

July 10.—I took forty-eight Stars (church papers) and started for Thetford, a town of 4,075 in 1851, where preaching had been attempted but did not succeed. I distributed the Stars, telling them I would preach Sunday at half past ten. On the 13th, I went to Methwold where I distributed the Stars and called a meeting on the market hill where I occupied nearly two hours from Hebrews 6:22. Sunday fasted and prayed, then went to Thetford where a respectable company of people were, to whom I preached on the first principles. During July, August and September, I stayed in these regions preaching, talking, exhorting and visiting on foot, from door to door and town to town, distributing papers, tracts, enjoying the companionship of the Saints, meeting opposition and often persecution of enemies, but gaining friends and converts for the gospel.

Father heard occasionally from his mother, always very loving letters and one about this time, showed that having heard of the locusts eating the crops, and even the trees in Salt Lake Valley, she was considerably worried. His answer showed that "Faith in God" and that, as the "Ravens had fed Elijah, a way would be made, that those that worshiped and had faith in God would be fed."—R. C. F.

December 9, 1855.—I went to Thompson to hold a meeting, as for some time no meetings could be held, as the men of the place were in the employ of Esquire Bird, who also owned most of the houses in the village and who told them, "If they entertained Mormons or held meetings, they would be charged double rent, or lose their jobs and be turned out of their houses."

During 1855 every day was spent in preaching, delivering tracts, Stars, visiting the Saints, administering to the sick, baptizing and confirming, reasoning with outsiders, writing and studying, making many days two or three different towns or villages. During this time he received some wonderful letters from those investigating and those baptized into the church.

January 23, 1856.—Had a letter from Brother Bronley giving me permission to visit his family and the Saints at Wellingboro. Spent Sunday at Brandon where the Saints supplied me with means to go see my friends. Monday rode to Ely then walked to Chatteris where I saw my aunt, mother and father, who met me more kindly than before. Wednesday went to Wellingboro where I met my brother Zacheus and many of the brothers and sisters with whom I spent the time studying and preaching the work of the Lord. Visited the towns around this part of the country and saw many scenes of my childhood. Took train to Leicester, and found a carriage filled with Saints going to Liverpool to emigrate to America. They sang songs, an address was given and all truly rejoiced. Arrived at my sister's where I was very kindly treated.

February 24.—My mission has been changed to Shipdlam district, am sorry to leave this district as I have won the affections of the Saints and they grieved to see me go.

His mission was now to Wymondham, Old Buckenham, Attleborough, Thompson, East Dereham, Hingham, Hackford, and Potash. The ministers of that day had to write their own notices of meetings and in many places a man went around with a bell calling out the meetings, or "crying" them. Many of the meetings were held in yards or on the green. On April 15, at Shipdlam as the congregation passed out of the gate, a mob of some forty or fifty attacked them with stones, sticks, and while several were struck, all escaped serious injury.—R. C. F.

June 1.—Had a letter from Brother Cooper stating he had 4/ promised him towards repairing my boots, as my bare feet were on the ground. . . . also they had agreed to furnish me with some new trousers and pay for my boots. I thanked them, but exhorted them to have the temple fund and every other fund up, even if I had to go without.

June 3.—Was called to Norwich and there received an appointment to labor in North Walsham district. Several instances where no room nor bed could be had, the sisters gave me their bed, while the sisters slept in chairs or sat up, so I could rest.

June 18.—The last day of my 21st year—I pray the Lord I may have forgiveness for all thou hast seen amiss in me throughout the past year, also an increased portion of thy Holy Spirit to guide me the coming year and in my future life.

June 19, 1856.—Twenty-two years today, Praise the Lord Oh My Soul and forget not all his benefits, preserved amidst dangers, supported and sustained when mobs arose and stoned us, so as not to receive one serious blow. His Spirit has been with me to counsel, bless and uplift, so I have been able to meet learned men and their efforts have been in vain, and unable to impede this work. Throughout the year by the blessing of the Lord I have baptized thirty-two members, confirmed twenty-one, ordained twelve, blessed six children, administered to fourteen who have been blessed. Have traveled over three thousand miles, two thousand seven hundred of which I have walked and in many ways I have witnessed the goodness of God, for which I am grateful and give him all the glory, in the name of Jesus, Amen.

June 27.—Elder R. F. Nesler arrived, and no other Saints being prepared to entertain an elder, Brother Nesler slept with Elders Lavender and Crowley and I lay on the hearth rug downstairs.

On December 17th, father received a letter from Brother Dama, telling him that he would shortly receive an appointment to labor in the Manchester conference, and on the 12th, the notice arrived with a note from Orson Pratt asking him to repair to his new field of labor as soon as possible.—R. C. F.

December 22.—Manchester. During the day we went to the city and tried to get police officers for the next Sunday, as last Sunday the meeting was broken up in the morning and entirely prevented at night.

December 25.—Went over to Bury, attended a "tea party" at 5:30 and in the evening heard songs, recitations and addresses. Here I met Elizabeth Unsworth of Bolton, who afterwards became my wife.

December 31.—With Elder Bunting took the train for Bolton.

January 1, 1857.—About 4 a. m. the Bolton choir awoke us by singing two of our hymns, so beautifully, that the melodious harmony of rich voices and instruments seemed controlled by the good influence of the spirit of God.

January 4.—We spent the day at Bury and had one of the finest meetings in my experience. Tongues, prophecies and the manifestations of the Spirit of the Lord poured out upon us, till our hearts overflowed with joy.

February 6.—Saw a letter from James Hart to his wife telling of his visit to Nauvoo and to the Mansion House where he saw Mrs. Bidemon, formerly Sister Emma Smith, wife of the prophet, and her boys.

March 24.—Over to Bolton, where after evening service, remained all night sitting up, at Sister Mayhers, where I marked the linen of Brother and Sister Albion, and helped all I could for their journey to Zion. Accompanied them to the train where with other Saints they left for Liverpool. I took the train for Manchester where I met Brothers Bunting, Browning, and Taylor and on Thursday accompanied them to Liverpool where we went to the offices and then back to dock Waterloo, where the Saints embarked on the ship George Washington. Had a happy time with the Saints and brethren ere we had to leave in the steam tub which took us off. Spent the day in Liverpool enjoying my first visit, and listening to the excellent advice about reforming our lives, living more humble and faithful, paying our tithing, going forth to preach the gospel without purse or scrip, which under the spirit and power of his apostleship cheered and invigorated our souls.

I find many evidences from father's diary that they often called a council meeting to try those that were cold or indifferent, and if they would not repent and do their duty were cut off from the church. Also the ministers that were not functioning, were dropped and suspended until they repented and turned to the Lord.—R. C. F.

April 5.—Sunday it being fast day, I requested those that were fasting to meet me in the hall at noon, where we prayed together before the Lord, and as we did so the Spirit of God was poured out upon us in mighty power, after which the sacrament meeting was full of the Holy Spirit and all rejoiced. Walked over to Rochdale and went about the town, also through to some other places outside the town for the purpose of finding a place where we could preach.

May 3.—After a meeting a man went round insinuating that Brother William was telling lies and that Joseph Smith was an imposter, I said, it would look better for our friends to stand up like men, and with the Bible in their hands to show us the errors of our ways than to be speaking evil slyly, and we would stand the test, but he was shrewd enough to hold his peace and sneaked away. As we left a great many people were coming along the street. Near me walked Sister Susan Lord talking about the meeting. Her bonnet being trimmed with white ribbon, the children and others passing thought, seeing the white ribbon, and the crowd, it a wedding and set up a shouting and singing and followed us for near a mile. Of all the ludicrous sights I have ever seen this was the worst, as Sister Susan had her apron on and from our appearances should have thought a wedding the last thing to be thought of, but it proved a good source of information to our meetings and gained a crowd.

May 5.—Took the train to Manchester to witness the arrival of Prince Albert and his sister to open "The Grand Arts and Treasure Building of the United Kingdom." The throng was so great we had to go in 1st class carriages with 3rd class tickets. It was surely a grand sight. Thursday we went to Haslinden to preach but found every public place filled with shows, shooting boards, etc.,

"Return Ye Unto God" . . . . .

By J. A. Koehler

" . . . They have strayed from mine ordinances, and broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own God, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old, and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3.

MINE ORDINANCES

An ordinance of God is a rule established by the authority of God. In other words, it is a decree of God. Then, too, ordinances of God are religious rites or ceremonies ordained by divine authority. It is possible that the term is used here in more than one of its meanings. In any case, any explanation of the text makes it necessary to judge in which of its meanings the term "ordinance" is used. And we should be able to give a reason for ascribing one meaning to it rather than another.

That the rites of the Church were "strayed from" since the days of the early Christian Church, perhaps few Latter Day Saints will deny. But, be that as it may, the tenor of the text, the setting of the phrase, implies something more than a change in the mode of baptism or what not; and it is that something more with which we are here concerned.

The clause ". . . And measure to every man according to the measure which he has measured to his fellow men" evidently implicates some ordinance of social justice. Social justice is a common right situation. But the complaint in this message is that ". . . they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness [i. e., to fulfill his ordinances] but every man walketh in HIS OWN way. . . ." And that these ways are departures from God's ordinances is evidenced by the calamities which are to come upon the inhabitants of the earth in consequence of this misbehavior.

ORDINANCES OF JUSTICE

"Measured to every man" evidently has to do with what is due others from us. The question of rights and obligations is implicated here. And it seems clear that the ordinances referred to have to do with acts which bear vitally upon human welfare and happiness. It is the departure from such ordinances of God that incur his wrath and bring distress to nations. And these facts are the grounds of our inference.

SUBDUE THE EARTH

One of the first ordinances given of God was this: that it is the common duty of man to replenish the earth and subdue it. (Genesis 1: 28.) Or, in other words, to eat his bread in the sweat of his own brow. Or, to put it in still another form, to carry each his own share of the responsibility of economic endeavor.

What the fulfillment of this duty has to do with the well-being of men, is so obvious it does not need to be explained. Certainly it falls within the circle of implications of "according to the measure with which he has measured to his fellow men." And the bearing this ordinance has upon the prosperity or the distress of peoples is obvious too.

RELIGIOUS DEPRECIATION

But not a few men, some of whose names appear on the roll of "members" of the Church, seem not to have apprehended the justice of this ordinance. They seem to hold it in contempt. They act as if they cared nothing about putting into the social cupboard, but only about taking from. They are idlers. If they exert themselves, it is in ways which do not make just returns to the social cupboard. What they bring into the economic picture by their activity might better be left out. They have strayed from the ordinance of God.

PRIMITIVE MOTIVES

"They have strayed from" suggests that once was the time when men gave some heed to this ordinance. And this the economic history of the race shows to be a fact. The primitive motive to economic endeavor was the satisfaction of consumers wants.

Familiar to Church peoples are the accounts of the accumulations of flocks and herds, and what not, of Abraham's household—accumulations, mind you, which arose from its attendance upon the ordinance to replenish the earth and subdue it. These peoples did not become rich by cornering the market. They became rich by productive labor. The whole motive of economic endeavor in Abraham's day was to increase the supply of goods available for human consumption.

And what was true in the case of Abraham's household was true for peoples generally. The mores of primitive groups obligated each member to the performance of his share of the labor required to satisfy its economic wants. Idling was taboo. They had some respect for the ordinances of God.

True, there was pillaging as between groups. And sometimes it was not taboo. But such means of acquisition was forbidden as between the members of a group. They had sense enough to know that "high finance" had nothing to do with promoting the welfare of peoples.

THE BUSINESS OF PEOPLES

Moreover, in early society, social institutions were related to the common weal. Peoples as such attended to the business of peoples. The machinery of government was situated in the very heart of the vital activities of the group. Allotments of land, and what not, were functions of government. It was The Common Good which gave social institutions, including all economic concerns, their significance, and which was the criterion by which their godliness was judge. They knew something about the ordinances of God.

Here again we find confirmation in the history of early society as it is recorded in the Bible. Recall the famine in Egypt and in Canaan; and Joseph's duties as a functionary of the group, providing for the satisfaction of the wants of the nation against the time of famine. These are stories which are known to church peoples everywhere.

The history of land tenure—in ancient Peru; in Rome; everywhere in early society—adds further testimony to the truth that "peoples" as such concerned themselves with the problems of the economic life of peoples.

THE DEPARTURE

But, in time, men began to forget the ordinances of God. As we forget "our religion" under the stress of personal clashes or conference business, so peoples generally have forgotten their "religion" under the stress of economic confusion and want.

Finally, both church and state withdrew from the center of social life "to its circumference." Peoples forgot the business of peoples. By the sixteenth century we had almost entirely lost sight of the idea that social institutions and economic activities were related to common ends; and "what was Christian in Christianity had largely disappeared." "They have strayed from mine ordinances."

BUSINESS FOR PROFIT

The extent to which peoples have strayed from this ordinance of God is portrayed by many writers on what they call "economic" questions today. Foster and Catchings, two of the philosophical and ethical liabilities of the age, say in their book Profits, that profits is the heart of industrial life. It is "the chief urge to business activity." And they see "no possibility of running our machinery of production and distribution, however unsatisfactory that may be, except under the pressure of the profit motive. . . ."

But these writers are no exception. No pure description of economic life as it is has anything to say to the contrary, for it is an indisputable fact that the motive in modern business activity is money profits.

THEY SEEK NOT THE LORD

That our prophet spoke the truth when he said: "They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness," but that "every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god," few will deny. Industry, during the last few hundred years, has degenerated into a sordid money-profit-seeking game. And so deeply ingrained in our "thinking" is the idea of "money" profits, that the most desperate attempt this nation has yet made to save its industrial civilization, The N. R. A., has almost made itself abortive by its insistence that its recovery program shall not interfere with the taking of money profits.

MONEY PROFITS

Of course, in this age of economic power, there should be an excess or increase of good from labor exertion. And, under our present division of labor, and particularly under the present demand for financial reserves as security against want arising from the exigencies of modern business life, there is something to be said in favor of profit taking by society serving industries. It is doubtful if any regime could possibly insure that all exchanges should represent equal values. It is not necessary that it should do so.

But what concerns us is that we do not stop at that kind of profit taking. We go on and on, and classify as legitimate profits even the gains in "high finance." Now, if any one can see any relation between money profits derived from financial strategy and social welfare, he has something to pass on which no social economist has yet discovered. But that the taking of such money profits is the bane of our civilization, we know only too well. This is the "god" whose image is "in the likeness of the world"; and which, as sure as fate, is slated to perish.

THEY HAVE STRAYED FROM

So far as this ordinance of God is concerned, namely, to replenish the earth and subdue it—that is to say to devote our labor to the creation of socially valuable goods—all people have strayed from it in spirit. The universal motive to industry is money profits. And the evils which have grown out of this motive to business activity we already know are wrecking us. It is (Continued on page 83)

A Missionary's Farewell

Among the greatest tests of a minister's faith and devotion is the necessity of leaving home, family, and friends to go to foreign shores, especially where climate, language, social conditions, and standards of living are all different from those in his native land. At the time of departure, the presence of friends means a great deal, and the missionary trip is started auspiciously and courageously where it appears that there are many who care.

We whose sacrifices for the church are relatively small, whose service never involves long separations from home and loved ones, can never understand the pangs which such a departure inflicts upon the missionary. But we can do something to help by our presence, by the giving of gifts, and by showing the fruits of fraternal love.

Some time since, Apostle Clyde F. Ellis wrote of his departure for his present mission in the South Sea Islands. We present here a portion of his letter, which indicates how much a real farewell can mean to one who is leaving.—Editors.

WE LEFT Independence on the evening of July 1 for the west coast. A brother in Independence kindly consented to act as chauffeur for us, Mrs. Ellis, our children, and myself, in driving our car to the Union Station in Kansas City so we could remain in each other's company as long as possible. It is always difficult to leave companion and children and go to one's mission, even though it may be only a short distance from home; but when called upon to go over the sea where communication with loved ones is infrequent, and new ways, customs, and language, are all different, the emotions are stirred more deeply, and home ties become stronger than ever before.

Our journey across the continent was uneventful. We were glad to reach San Francisco on the night of July 3, and be free from the heat and dust which makes such a trip so unpleasant. How refreshing the cool, bracing air of San Francisco that night! We were met at the Ferry Building by Brethren McConley, of the Quorum of Twelve, and Emery Parks, president of the Danvers Street Church of that city. In a few moments we were in the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Parks, where we were domiciled until we sailed on July 5. The next day, July 4, we were privileged to attend a picnic held on the district reunion grounds by the Saints of the district, there meeting several whom we knew, including Elder H. W. Savage and family who have contributed so much for the Society Islands

Mission. On the morning of July 5, Brother E. J. Gleazer arrived from Los Angeles, and as guests of Brother Guy P. Levitt, he, Brother McConley, and I, had the pleasure of fraternal association during the noon hour,—eating together and discussing that which is dear to the hearts of all Latter Day Saints. What strength comes from associating with brethren of like faith, ideals, and determination. To be with these brethren before leaving for this far-off place was encouraging and a source of strength.

On the wharf that afternoon when we sailed were a number of Saints to wish us "bon voyage." This faithful band of Saints that gathers at the wharves in San Francisco to bid departing missionaries farewell, and to welcome them on their return to their homeland, radiates more good will than it realizes. The baskets of fruit, magazines, and other thoughtful remembrances, the handclasps and waving handkerchiefs, all convey to the missionaries bound for foreign shores that there are those remaining behind who are with them in their missions. Their smiling welcome when they return means as much. May the Lord bless these good people! The presence of these Saints, and the brethren before mentioned, meant much to us as we pushed away from our moorings and took course for the Golden Gate, through which we passed to the great Pacific.

Ten days at sea with congenial officers and crew, and a fine group of passengers with whom to spend the days of travel, made the voyage a delightful experience. However, the thoughts of home and the weight of approaching responsibility in the tasks before had a tendency to make us soberminded, the while we mingled in the sports and amusements on board. On the evening of July 14, we saw land for the first time since July 5. It was the leeward side of the Island of Tikehau where we have a fine branch and church. Of course we did not land there, but continued on our course, reaching Tahiti early the next morning.

Our Daily Program

"See that ye love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another; cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated; and above all things, clothe yourselves with the bonds of charity, as with a mantle, which is the bond of perfectness and peace; pray always, that you may not faint until I come."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38.

Road Signs

PREMONITIONS of events to take place had never meant anything to Larry, and hunches even less. But she had so strong a hunch concerning Bill Heckel on the day she was to meet him in Sallie Ruth's stead, that she could not get rid of it. It was as if something told her not to plan all the details of the evening's adventure, for to do so would be a waste of time—for, ultimately, the carrying out of her purpose would be up to her own ingenuity and resourcefulness. She had a strange feeling that just the sight of Bill Heckel would send her thoughts racing in a different channel from that in which they now drove. She expected to be surprised, but in what way she could not tell. These impressions kept thrills of excitement chasing up and down her spine all day.

At seven o'clock that evening she knocked on the Blaine apartment door. There was no response. Had Sallie Ruth gone to read to Sister Scott as she had promised—or was she somewhere waiting to meet Bill? Larry knew that if neither of the girls was in, the key was to be found under the hall linoleum near the threshold. They inserted it just under the edge of a worn place. It was there.

Larry let herself into the apartment, and looked about cautiously. She felt as she imagined a thief must feel, as she tiptoed across the living room and into the kitchen. There on the table where Sallie Ruth had laid out Carmen's late dinner was a note. Deliberately Larry read it. She needed reassurance just now.

"Dearest, I'm gone to read to Sister Scott in Larry's place. I promised her I would tonight. Hope to be home by eight-thirty.

"Sallie in our Alley."

So that was that. Larry slipped into the bedroom and invaded the clothes closet. From the horizontal pole on which the dresses hung, she selected a heavy dark blue skirt of Sallie Ruth's, a blue slip-over sweater with a wide white stripe around the body, the black leather coat—she was glad Sallie Ruth had worn her suit over to Sister Scott's—and a blue tam. This was an outfit she had seen the girl wear to school. Quickly she removed her own dress and rolled it up, then she put on the clothes she had selected. It was fortunate that she and Sallie Ruth were almost the same size; perhaps the younger girl was a trifle taller.

And when she was dressed, the look she cast at herself in the mirror was one of satisfaction as far as appearance was concerned.

Then she went to her own room, using the back stairway, to put her dress away and rehearse Sallie Ruth's walk and posture while she waited for darkness.

It was ten minutes until eight when Larry considered it dark enough for her to negotiate the streets in her borrowed

How It Began—

Larry Verne has refused to marry Greg Spurgeon in spite of the fact that she loves him, for she fears he will be called to the priesthood, and her early childhood experience makes her revolt against such a thing.

Larry's life becomes enmeshed with the lives of others in the home of Eldred Hampton, who mothers a group of people, young and old, who have no homes of their own.

Tempted to attend a costume ball with Greg, Larry yields, and is horrified by the theft of a valuable heirloom, a bracelet belonging to Eldred Hampton. In a period of repentance, she devotes herself more earnestly to the work of the church.

Trying for a time to associate with Greg on a purely friendly basis, and trying to curb the development of his ardent affection, Larry finds herself failing. Love is too strong for her, and she feels herself being swept off her feet, against her will. It seems that she must either yield, or break with Greg and not see him for a time. She breaks with him, but is very unhappy over it. Greg makes no attempt to see her, much to her disappointment.

Then Larry becomes interested in her friend, Carmen Blaine, and her younger sister, Sallie Ruth. The mother, a frivolous spoiled woman, who was also spoiling Sallie Ruth, has gone on a vacation. Thankful for her absence, Carmen and Larry set about to reconstruct Sallie Ruth's life on more wholesome lines. Bill Heckel is a hangover from Sallie Ruth's gay and dangerous life, and he retains a mysterious hold on her. Larry is determined to break it.

clothing, and she had six blocks to walk to reach the spot of Sallie Ruth and Bill's rendezvous.

IF SHE had remained at home that night, it is highly possible the entire trend of events to come might have been changed. For not fifteen minutes after she closed the front door, and strolled down the front walk, giving a fairly accurate imitation of Sallie Ruth's walking gait, the telephone jangled. Answering it, Eldred Hampton recognized the voice of Gregory Spurgeon. He inquired for Larry.

"Yes, I think she's here," she answered, and placing her hand over the mouthpiece of the instrument, called up the stairway. There was no response.

"Did you see Larry go out?" she inquired of Doc.

"No, Sallie Ruth left a few minutes ago, but I haven't seen Larry leave.—Just a minute I'll go up and knock." He did that and more. When no one answered, he swung open the door and looked in. Larry was not there.

"I guess she's gone out, Greg. We didn't see her leave, but she isn't in her room. Do you want her to call you?" Mrs. Hampton was tempted to chuckle at the vigorous negative that flew back over the wires. He asked how she was, thanked her for her trouble, and hung up. That was all.

Meanwhile Larry stepped up on the curb in front of a tiny garage, close to the north end of town, that had recently been converted into a shoeshop. A street-light about midway of the long block gave illumination at the corner sufficient for her to read the black letters on the curbing. Booker Avenue ran north and south, Map Street, east and west. Road signs those letters were. Larry studied them obliquely as she watched the street for cars.

There she waited, her black leather collar up about her neck. Her face was only a dim white splotch. It was eight o'clock by her watch. Her heart was thumping rapidly. Not a car on the street.

Such a lonely, forsaken place! Such uncertainty! Such suspense! What a miserable disadvantage for a man to put upon a schoolgirl! She raged inwardly at Bill Heckel. Although in another day it would be April, the wind was still chilly. She wondered what he would have expected of Sallie Ruth had it been raining.

It was a relief to find no one on this corner. She had refused to admit it before, but she had been afraid she might meet Sallie Ruth here, a Sallie Ruth who had broken her promise because of her insatiable eagerness to see Bill.

No car in sight yet. Not one had passed since she arrived. Bill Heckel certainly knew his deserted streets.

She was so excited that her heart seemed to be fairly jumping in her bosom, and the blood beat in her ears. She wished that she knew what kind of a car Bill drove. That would simplify matters considerably. Impatiently she walked a few steps and then as quickly retraced them.

CARLIGHTS down the street! She stopped walking, and slumped her shoulders as Sallie Ruth did. Her face was averted from the light.

Three sounds at once—the sliding of rubber tires, the screech of breaks, and the honk of a resonant-toned auto horn. She moved toward the curb, and at the same instant the door of the car was flung open. She dimly discerned the figure of a driver behind the wheel. Unhesitatingly she stepped in.

"Hello, little 'un," wasn't that voice familiar? Hadn't she heard it before? She did not have time to see the man's face before an arm about her waist swept her toward him. The car smelled of tobacco and oil and dirt.

Immediately she protested: "Don't—don't!" and attempted to shove him away.

He let out the clutch, and the car moved away from the curb. "Come 'n," he laughed, "don't be like that. Aintcha got somethin' for yer sweet papa?" The arm about her tightened.

"Don't! I tell you, don't you dare!" she cried in a low, fierce tone. His face was very close, and she ducked her head to avoid his lips. Her cap slipped off.

The man gasped. "So? Thought you'd trick me, didn'tcha? Well, out with it—where's Sallie Ruth? What have you done to her?"

Larry knew that she had seen that face before. She was groping to place it, but it avoided her. Bill Heckel—no, she had never heard the name until Sallie Ruth and Carmen had mentioned it.

Then came a mighty flash of recognition and with it an understanding concerning her hunch. This was—she could not be mistaken—this was Mr. Johnson with whom she had danced at the Playland—Rowe McCarley's friend. The same voice. The same hands. The same twist to the sensuous lips.

Now, she was following her hunch: "Listen," she whispered excitedly, "get me out of town quick. I've somethin' to tell you. Hurry!"

"What the dev—!" he ejaculated, but complying with her order, nosed his car in the direction of Highway 24.

"Listen," she began again after a moment, remembering to speak carelessly and use all the slang she knew, "there's lots o' things I gotta tell you. Sallie Ruth couldn't be here tonight. She can't ever meetcha again. Her folks are set against it. And that's not all—she doesn't want to see you. She knows about—"

"About what?" sharply.

"About—what—you—did at the Playland. The bracelet!" She was guessing desperately, but she trusted that hunch. It had been so strong all day.

"At the Playland?" was he feigning that bewilderment?

"Yes," she hurried on, "you see Mr. Farrow—he's the Playland detective, you know—he's been down to our house quite a lot. We all live in the same apartment house, Sallie Ruth and I, and Mrs. Hampton the lady to whom the bracelet belonged. Well, he's been down and talked to the folks, and he has 'em pretty well convinced that you took it—"

"Tell him to go to—!"

"Yes, I know, I know, but anyway she thinks that you did. And besides Mr. Farrow knows about her meeting you, and he's following us tonight!" She was gasping excitedly. She hoped that she would be forgiven for all the falsehoods she might have to use tonight.

"Naw!" incredulously, and yet—was there not a bit of apprehension in that exclamation, too?

"Yes he is! I heard him talking the thing over with one of the men at our house. They were coming together after you, and I heard them say something about a warrant to arrest you!" What a wild chance she was taking! But she did not stop.

The man at her side was driving much faster now. "You lie—" he gritted. "There ain't nobody follering us!"

"Oh, no? you just wait! No—no, don't wait either. This is the way it is—Bill—"

"How did you know to call me Bill?" he broke in.

"Oh, I know lots of things you don't suppose I know," she shot back at him. "But listen!" she was clutching his arm, "this is the way it is. They're after you hard tonight, and they've the goods on you this time. They'll get you. You've got to leave town—get out of the county—get out of the state. You've got to, do you hear?" she shrieked seemingly on the point of hysteria.

"Shut up!" he growled. Then: "Why are you telling me this? Why do you want me to get away? I'd think you'd be wanting me caught if anyone does, so's to get back your bracelet—if you think I took it, too," he added as an afterthought.

"Of course I don't, Billy; I know you didn't take it," she lied, "that's just why I want you to get away. They have what they call circumstantial evidence against you, and there are some things that you've done you can't explain very clearly—and if they caught you now—well, it would be just tough luck!"

"But how did they know anything about Sallie Ruth meeting me tonight?" He was trying to reason the thing through, and that was just what she didn't want him to have time to do.

"Oh, when they found out she knew you, they made her tell everything. You see she's only a kid, and she was scared—"

"Damn!" was the fervent comment.

"They made her think that she'd be sent to jail if she didn't tell, and now she believes that you did take it. I—" she hesitated for effectiveness—"I liked you at the Playland that night—I like your type, and I don't want to see you jailed. You don't have a whole lot of friends around here, I'm afraid, Bill—course they don't understand you and all that—but it's a fact; there aren't many that would help you if you was to get caught."

HER HEART was bumping about so hard that she could scarcely go on.

Would it work? Was she sounding convincing? Was it fear that made his face so white?

"Please don't meet her again, Billy—you see they're watching! Her folks are awfully particular, and they're watching her. You'll be caught sure. And then she doesn't want to meet you anyway—she says she won't have anything to do with a thief."

"Well, I'll be damned. If that's the way she feels about it—I was thinkin' about ditchin' her pretty quickly anyway. These little kids aren't such good—"

"Don't have anything more to do with her then," reiterated Larry; "she'll get you into trouble sure."

"Well, I reckon I'd better take your advice and be clearin' out then," the driver spoke.

"Oh, I hope you get away, Bill!" He was believing her—he was going to leave! Her lips were dry, her pulses racing. Only a few more minutes now. "You mustn't risk taking me close in. Just drop me anywhere along here—and I'll get home."

"Pretty game kid, aren't you?" Was there admiration in his tone? "Do you have a nice kiss for me?"

"Oh, please, Bill, we haven't time for that tonight! Just drop me—"

"Won't do it. I'm going to take you in."

"No—no! It's dangerous, Billy, I appreciate it so much—but I won't have you taking such chances. Don't go back to your room—just beat it." Evidently her seeming frantic interest in his escape was having its effect. Nevertheless, he did take her into the edge of town, saying little, but listening attentively to her steady stream of talk concerning the dangers that awaited him if he had anything more to do with Sallie Ruth.

AT LAST he drew up to a spot where there was no sidewalk. "Guess this is a pretty good place to let you out," gruffly.

"Swell," agreed Larry.

"And listen, kid," he went on. "I don't know nothin' about you, except that you're a good dancer. But I 'ppreciate your interest. If that little dame is that kind of a swell, I won't have nothin' more to do with her. She won't never see Bill Heckel again."

"Oh, Bill!"

"An' I don't know how you come to know all you do, but I sure do thank you."

"Oh, that's all right, Billy, but you must go. Stay away from here. Just remember that Farrow's on the lookout—he and his men. I know for they've been down to our house." She stepped out as she spoke. "Buck up!" she exhorted him in a whisper, "and good luck."

The car slid away down the hill. Larry was trembling so that she could scarcely stand. And now that the crisis was passed she was so frightened that her teeth chattered. Beads of cold sweat broke out on her forehead. She had used all the daring, all the dramatics, and all the language of gangdom that she had accumulated from the movies. And they had worked! Fortunately she had not had to deal with a very smart or experienced crook.

Staggering a little, she turned toward a house. She would call Doc to come and get her—no she had better call a taxi. Doc mustn't know anything about what had happened, or Eldred Hampton either—and for that matter, she had promised Sallie Ruth to tell no one.

Twenty minutes later a white-faced Larry stepped from the taxi and looked at the Hampton home. How warm and friendly it appeared! She felt as if she had been gone from it years, instead of a little over an hour.

She faltered as she walked up the steps and across the porch. She felt very old and weary. But far inside her heart was singing: "You did it, Larry! You did it, Larry!"

Mrs. Hampton and Joe Dockerly lifted friendly faces to her as she entered.

Eldred started to speak, but with a feeble gesture Larry stopped her. At that moment she had the sensation of floating away from them on a cloud, and it was a very white cloud covered with inky road signs "Booker Avenue" and "Map Street." Dimly she heard someone scream, and then the world was very dark and moist and disagreeable. Larry had fainted.

TELL HER!

squelch her with: "Oh, now, Gracie, dear, you're too young to know; you oughtn't even to be thinking of such things!"

Gracie, like Elsie, feels the need to know, or she would not face you with the question. And if you, in her hour of need, fail her, you may be to blame for allowing her to be ushered, unguarded and unequipped, into a young womanhood of blazing questions, burning experiments, disillusionment, unhappiness and even shame.

Many leaders and friends of girls make the mistake of being indifferent about the little things which to the girls themselves are matters of vital importance. It is well always to have the confidence of your girls, and it is a better thing to be prepared to enrich that confidence with the knowledges and information which help the individual girl in her problems and difficulties. There are many books, texts in biology, psychology, personal hygiene, and sociology for adults, and there are books also for the girls themselves.

As you study, leader and mother, and as you pray, remember the words of the Apostle Paul: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, . . . think on these things."

Books recommended for the leader:

Psychology of the Adolescent, Doctor Leta Hollingsworth, Appleton, 1928.

The Girl in Her Teens, Margaret Slatery, The Sunday School Times Company.

Understanding the Adolescent Girl, Grace Loucks Elliott, Holt, 1930.

The Adolescent Girl, Winifred Richmond, MacMillan, 1925.

Concerning Our Girls and What They Tell Us, Eugenie Andruss Leonard, Teachers College, Columbia University, 1930.

though a host of new problems confronting us with the return of legalized liquor may become so severe as to blind us to the fact that the others are still with us. And as for those which still force themselves into the limelight, we shall be admonished by the wets to be patient, and not to expect too much in the way of their solution, because, after all, prohibition accomplished in a short time what it will take a long time to undo. So will run the story, but that "long time" we must wait for relief will, in my opinion, provide the mathematicians with a new concept of infinity, insofar as we rely on the liquor traffic to improve anything.

According to repealists, the return to legal drink is to bring back prosperity by creating employment, increasing the circulation of money, etc. Suppose it does create some jobs. Does it to that extent restore prosperity? Certainly not, because for every man to whom it pays a wage the liquor industry demands from the people many times the size of that wage. The "take" in the liquor business is tremendous. I can think of very few ways in which a purchaser can throw money away more effectively than by the purchase of liquor. Perhaps some forms of gambling, or investment in armaments (which is a form of gambling on a large scale), offer fewer positive returns. But some people continue to call it prosperity if the liquor industry, out of the hordes of wealth it rakes in, condescends to return to circulation in wages a farthing of its takings.

PROSPERITY is not measured by authorities in terms of jobs, anyhow, but in terms of how widely disseminated are the fruits of labor. Slaves have work. On the other hand leisure, as distinguished from idleness, is one index of prosperity. Things that count are how much food, clothing and shelter a man has for himself and his family; the amount and condition of his bank deposits; whether he carries insurance against sickness, old age, and death; how much education he and his family can afford—things like that. Does the liquor traffic bring any of these things to the masses of the people? Most assuredly not! It destroys purchasing power for every one of these things. Lowered purchasing power reduces the demand for legitimate goods, thereby creating unemployment. For every job which it creates, the liquor traffic will destroy many. It shortens life and productivity. It reduces taxable wealth. In every way it reduces the standard of living of the masses, to which most of us and our neighbors belong.

Secretary Wallace of the Department of Agriculture is jubilant because the manufacture of corn whisky will use up huge amounts of corn grown by farmers here in Iowa and elsewhere. Specific attention has been called to the fact that even No. 6 grade corn can be sold for that purpose. A most noble utterance! The millions of men, women, and children throughout the world who are starving for want of the food value in this so-called surplus corn are to be given a chance to buy it in the form of whisky. Now that will bring back prosperity, won't it? The poverty-stricken farmer, with corn left on his hands because of our deplorable system of tariffs, nationalism, and greed, is to sell his corn, even the No. 6 grade, to the whisky manufacturer, who in turn will sell his product to the public, instead of food which they cannot afford, and in the form of whisky this corn is to cost many times its original price. That is the sort of synthetic prosperity promised by the repealists, who now have their way.

Many spielers have deplored the "poisonous" liquor of prohibition days, and now talk of repeal liquor as if it were going to be as beneficial to the human organism as milk. Now it is perfectly true that various kinds of alcohol and adulterants of alcoholic liquors have various effects on the human body, but that is no reason for claiming that any alcoholic drink can be beneficial. It is to be admitted that competent physicians often prescribe medicines containing alcohol, but it must be remembered that the dosage and conditions under which the medicine is to be taken are also rigidly prescribed. Without doubt many medicines now containing alcohol would not include it if another convenient solvent were available in which to dissolve all the drugs of the formula. It is absurd to talk of alcoholic beverages as if some were good, others bad. One needs only to look into a standard book on medicine to see evidence of the typical effect of alcohol on the human organism. A human being is no more fashioned to depend on alcohol for strength, joy, and well-being than he is to become a smoke-belching incinerator, in either case introducing into his body substances which are already wastes, and are so regarded in nature.

WE HAVE HEARD a lot in recent years and months about the theft of human liberty accomplished by prohibition. Now that repeal is here, how much more liberty does Mr. Average Citizen have? Well, in many states he can now legally buy alcoholic liquor, and that is about all he has gained. Has he lost anything in the exchange? Some of us think he has lost much more in the way of liberties than he has gained. Take, for example, his liberty on the highways, or crossing the street in front of his home. Is he as safe as before? If you don't believe me when I say No, then look at the impartial evidence presented by automobile liability insurance rates, which are so suddenly and greatly increased, and then try to tell any sane person that repeal won't make the highways more dangerous. Suppose I am injured in an automobile accident after repeal, and the accident has been caused by the inaccurate driving of a person who has been drinking. Now that repeal is here, do I have a better chance than before to prove that he was responsible? Can I rely on the presence of liquor in his car to prove my contention? No, in spite of all the laws which may be made, it will be more difficult to get justice in a case of this kind. And women and children won't be safer, either in their own homes or out. Inside a human being alcohol is always a danger, and that which endangers society destroys its liberties.

If applied to the proposed repeal of any other major law, the distorted explanations of human nature commonly accepted with respect to liquor immediately appear ridiculous. You may be sure they would appear just as ridiculous in that matter also had we not heard them so frequently as to have become almost convinced through mere repetition. Let us try a few of them on another law, say, for example, the one which makes murder illegal, and see how they fit.

The argument would run as follows:

Some years ago, when the backs of the American people were turned, a bunch of snoopish old men with tall hats, umbrellas, and old-maidish ways foisted off on the people a law which says that murder is illegal. Now everybody knows that when a person is told he must not do something, he immediately has an overpowering urge to demonstrate that he can, and that's the way it is with this law against murder. Its presence on the statute books is a constant challenge to everybody, even customarily non-murderous people, to go out and kill. The best thing to do with such a law is to repeal it. You can see that it hasn't wiped out murder. In fact, making it against the law to murder a person has increased murder. There is more of it now than ever before. Why is it that we are always tampering with our precious liberties by trying these "noble experiments"? The fewer the laws, the better we'll get along. Think how much better on a person's mental and physical health it would be if he could commit a murder right out in the open, rather than having always to be careful lest the police catch him at it. It is hard on one's conscience, and tends to break down one's moral code, to have to say to himself after every harmless little murder: "That was against the law." The way to get people to respect the law is to do away with law. What to do in these matters is a question which every person must decide for himself, without interference. Anybody but a moron knows when he has committed enough murders for one day, and a moron wouldn't know the meaning of the law, anyhow. Then, too, it is different for different people. Maybe you or I couldn't murder more than two or three people without being somewhat physically upset about it, so as to be unreliable at the wheel of an automobile, but no doubt there are plenty of people who could commit fifteen murders without showing any visible effects. "True temperance" doesn't require that one refrain from murder altogether, but that he find out just what is his limit for a day, and of course everybody knows enough to stop when he has filled his quota of murders for the day. It's a grand idea, and very simple. Let's repeal all the laws!

Speaking seriously again, I should like to say that I have written this article because I am convinced that the liquor issue is not dead. It is my belief that those who want a progressive society, in which democracy may rule, in which safety of person and property may be assured, in which government may gradually become free of political corruption, and in which human personality shall be given its birthright, must unalterably continue to oppose the liquor traffic. Such opposition must find expression in organization. But before one can become devoted and active in a temperance organization, he must see clearly the issues. If for some of my readers I have been able to recall to mind and clarify some of the issues, the purpose of my writing will have been realized.

Is there a wound, O brother, in your heart,
And would you have the secret grief depart?
Heal first your brother's sorrow, hush his moan,
And that will heal the anguish of your own.

—Edwin Markham.

"RETURN YE UNTO GOD"

the chief immediate cause, even if it is not the most remote cause of the calamities which are befalling the nations.

A WARNING

"They that labor for money in Zion shall perish." This is a warning to the peoples of the church to avoid the practices which bring disaster to both persons and peoples. The same truth is expressed in other forms, such as "every man seeking the interest of his neighbor"; "He that will be greatest among you, let him be the servant of all"; and many others.

But how can we avoid this evil when to depart from it is to make ourselves a prey? It is ruinous. The economic stage is set to play that sort of game. How, then, is it possible to heed this warning and at the same time insure our self-preservation?

RETURN YE UNTO GOD

The answer to the problem is given in the call of the Restoration to return to God. The answer is found in this message: "This people must be organized." "Organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship." "You are to have equal claim upon the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships." "All moneys that ye receive by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you shall be cast into THE STOREHOUSE;" etc., etc., etc. That is the answer to the problem; to reestablish the ordinances of God. Let the peoples of the church attend to the proper business of peoples. "Hear the voice that entreats you: O return ye unto God; O return ye unto God."

MARK HILL FORSCUTT

thought it not wisdom to preach until another week.

May 18.—Monday—walked over to Bolton where I received this letter:

Ship George Washington.
April 21st, 1856.

Dear Brother Mark:

According to my promise I now take my pen to give you some account of our journey. We set sail on March 28, and have had good weather almost all the time, indeed it has been a pleasure trip to me. Elder York is our president and Elders Martin and Dana his counselors. The ship's company have been divided into wards and bishops have been appointed under them.

We have prayers night and mornings and many testimony meetings. I am still rejoicing in the gospel and I pray the Lord may bless you, and that you may soon be gathered home, even to the home of the Saints.

Your sister in the gospel,
Ann Albion.

The Readers Say---

Look for the Beautiful

Once I read of two men who were traveling in the west. They were standing on the brink of the Grand Canyon as the setting sun cast its rays on the many colored walls of that wondrous gorge; one of the men stood enrapt with the wonder and beauty of the scene, his soul filled with admiration. The other man was unmoved and uninterested, and finally said:

"I can't see anything beautiful in it."

"Ah," said the admiring one, "Don't you wish you could."

Some people miss much in life because their souls are not attuned to behold the beautiful. There is a song entitled, "Look for the Beautiful," the first verse of which reads:

Look for the beautiful, look for the true;
Sunshine and shadow are all around you;
Looking at evil we grope in the dark,
Looking at Jesus we walk in the light.

As that man without emotion could not see any beauty in that most wonderful scene of the Grand Canyon, so likewise some people cannot see anything beautiful in the gospel of Christ. We might with just as much propriety ask them, "Don't you wish you could?" There are people in the world who get more enjoyment out of beating a tom-tom than the music of the piano or the harp played by an expert musician. Their souls are not attuned to the higher, but to the lower class of entertainment.

We should do as the song says, "Look for the beautiful," and cultivate that which is higher, nobler and true. The highest and most lasting enjoyment is that of a spiritual nature. How long do we enjoy the passing events of the day, especially the trashy music, either instrumental or vocal, heard over the radio? We hear it one moment and it is forgotten the next. Let us have a real spiritual experience and it stays with us throughout our lives, because we have been looking for the beautiful and have found it.

The Use of the "Herald"

When I took the liberty some weeks ago of writing you a suggestion that pictures of leading men of the church should be published I was very much gratified to see the announcement of that very idea in the next issue of the Herald. It came so soon though that I cannot take any credit for the suggestion, however I did feel good to learn that I was thinking along the same lines as someone else. The way you are handling it is certainly putting the idea to effective use.

You may have suspected by this time that the above is preliminary to another suggestion. For years I have saved parts of the Herald and during the last few months I have been organizing this material into what is a little gold mine of information. The way you printed the tracts by E. B. Hull and M. H. Cook, fitted into my plans wonderfully, and the point I am getting at is that I wonder if it would be possible to print more of the permanent articles in this way. Of course having had a limited experience as a printer I know the mechanical difficulties you are up against but there might be some way around it.

For instance I find the "Question Time" page by A. B. Phillips one of the finest things being printed and I have a file of these pages for some years back. I am indexing them in such a way that I can quickly turn to every answer he has given on any subject. As you know the items on the reverse side of these sheets are strictly current yet half the space in my file is given to such material simply because it is on the other side of the Question page. Would it be possible for instance to run these questions on two pages every other week, so that the filing would result in half the number of sheets for the same number of pages of questions?

Sometimes I find that I want to file two articles under different headings but both of them have the end on the run-over page so that they cannot be separated. This of course I know is a problem that would be hard to solve, but I do believe many people would keep much Herald material on file for reference if they could be printed to make such filing easier. Possibly news items could be scattered to fill up tail ends of space instead of having them segregated as a special department.

I believe you understand of course that I do not want to be presumptuous. I am merely passing on an idea for what it might be worth. The set-up of article by S. A. Burgess in the November 28 issue is a fine example of what I am trying to suggest.

Sincerely,

L. S. WIGHT.

Loves to Tell the Story

We sent Sister Smith to Hillcrest Sanatorium, Albuquerque, New Mexico, several weeks ago. If any Saints live in that neighborhood, she would be very glad to have them call. She has improved some since going there.

I am enjoying the opportunity of telling some, who pass through, of our beautiful gospel and what Zion will be when it is redeemed. Many say that it is the finest thing they ever heard. Often they return after months have passed and want to hear more. It is a pleasure to tell them, and when I point out the conditions and prophecies relating to what is happening, they see the nearness of the closing period. My prayer is that every Saint will be a missionary, and that we shall let our light shine, teach people, and prepare the way for the services of the ministry. Let us all obey the law.

Likes Pictures in the Paper

I am very pleased that the Herald is printing pictures of our own workers in this the most wonderful cause in the world.

Last summer two little Latter Day Saint girls were my guests. They found their own favorite movie actress's picture in a magazine and rapturously told me all of her points of beauty. I offered a prayer then that the Herald and Stepping Stones would someday give us pictures, and it is good to see this prayer now being answered and faces of our own people appearing on the pages of our periodicals. I hope parents and teachers will help the children to notice and become familiar with each worker in the great cause.

I feel that the latter-day work is going forward and that the youth are taking their places. I have been a member of the church since my twelfth year, and now I have the wonderful hope that things are going to move Zionward.

The Readers Say---

Recounts Numerous Blessings

Since I am isolated from church privileges, the only way I can communicate with Saints, is by writing to the Herald. After living for several years with church people at Rich Hill, Missouri, and entering actively into the work, I sometimes become discouraged and yearn for the association of the Saints, but I try to realize that it is all for the best.

The Lord has blessed me all during my life, the greatest blessing being the gift of the gospel and helping me to understand it.

My daughter was sick for ten weeks last fall of typhoid fever. After reaching a certain stage, her condition seemed to get neither better nor worse. I prayed earnestly for her all the time, but it was not until I wrote to Brother Ralph Murdock of her serious condition, and requested the prayers of the Saints for her, that she began to improve.

I also requested prayers for my son living in San Bernardino who, a few weeks ago, was stricken with pneumonia. He was taken to a hospital at Los Angeles. He is now out of the hospital and his health is improving.

Three years ago last August, I was sick of typhoid and malaria fever. After the fever left me, I did not require so much attention, but one night I woke up and was thirsty. My companion was asleep nearby, but as he was worn out after being up so much, I did not wish to waken him. My daughter had been sleeping in the adjoining room with her door open so that she could hear if I should call. I raised up and looked into her room, but she was not in sight. I kept thinking, if I only had a drink of water, I could go to sleep. Then was given to me one of the most remarkable spiritual experiences of my life. I count it a great blessing.

I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may keep in the straight and narrow way. Letters from the Saints would be greatly appreciated.

A Prized Gift

Reading the brief biography of Alonzo H. Parsons, printed in a recent Herald, helped me to recall an incident which occurred twelve years ago. Elder William Shakespeare baptized a young man at Yale, Oklahoma. I have forgotten the young candidate's name, but he was a pumper of oil wells and worked near my home. He came quite often to my door to ask for Heralds and to talk over questions concerning the gospel. Seeing that he had a desire to learn and especially when I found out that he had been an orphan from early childhood, I was deeply interested in him, and sent at once for a Parsons' Text Book which I gave him.

Ten years later when I visited my children at Yale, I met this boy, a big manly fellow, and he said, "Grandma, I never can forget you for what you did for me when I was young in the church." "I really do not remember having done you any special favor," was my reply. "Oh, don't you remember giving me a Parsons' Text Book?" My answer was that I did recall something like that now, but passing years had caused me to forget. "That has been one of my most prized gifts," he assured me, "and I still keep it as one of my treasures. No one knows how it helped me in my search for a knowledge of the gospel."

No doubt many others can say as much as did this young man. I am sure Brother Parsons made a far greater contribution to the church in this book that he realized. He gave the results of his own study and research to others.

Why We Are Obligated to Give Financial Support

In the Herald of December 19, 1933, President Elbert A. Smith makes a statement: "Why not an occasional letter or card to those various old-time missionaries from those who hold their ministrations in grateful remembrance?"

Instantly the desire was born in my heart to write to the one who had been instrumental in converting me to the gospel, Elder Hubert Case, now of Michigan.

After due consideration, however, I found there were reasons against the suggestion over which I had no control. First, I did not know his address, and second, I realized I was only one of hundreds who would feel grateful to him. So I have decided to show my appreciation by a contribution to the Herald, and by living a life that will reflect on and glorify the church. I am sure, while the missionaries would appreciate a card or letter from those to whom they have ministered, they would also appreciate the fact that we are loyal to the church and are paying the tithing that will supply their just wants and needs.

I have never filed an inventory. My contributions have been in the form of free will offerings to the church, donations to visiting missionaries, and the up-keep of the branch.

We say we love the church, yet we fail in one thing, giving financial support. Many of us are in need, yet the law is just. Where there is but little, but little is required, and anything invested in the Lord is sure to bring a recompense.

I should like to see the missionaries back in the fields, and their families relieved of want and care.

I have resolved that the year 1934, will find me a tithe payer. Not because of blessings accruing therefrom, but because it is my sacred duty to God, to the church, and to those who have been instrumental in my welfare. I sincerely trust 1934 may be a year of unity, peace, and prosperity for the church.

Request Prayers

Sister J. F. Joy, of Chanute, Kansas, is in ill health and asks the prayers of the Saints that she may recover.

Brother Joseph Harry Preston, of Stockport, England, requests the prayers of the church, that he may be restored to health and strength and also for his young son who is mentally retarded.

Ella Sherman, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, wishes the Saints to pray for her, that she may be healed of heart trouble, and restored to normal health. Administration has helped her, but she wishes the prayers of all the church.

Mrs. Gillen, of Mabton, Washington, seeks the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed of eye trouble. She does not belong to the church but has great faith in God.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Doggett, of Pond Creek, Oklahoma, earnestly seek the prayers of their brothers and sisters, that they may be healed of troublesome physical afflictions, and be restored to strength and health. The administration of an elder would be greatly appreciated by this suffering couple.

QUESTION TIME

Shall we know each other in the next life, as the rich man knew Lazarus?

The evidence is ample to show that a knowledge of each other in the hereafter is a teaching of the Scriptures. This is not the direct purpose of the words of Jesus concerning the rich man and Lazarus, however, though it shows quite clearly consciousness after death and punishment hereafter for unrighteous conduct, as well as a remembrance of persons and things of this life. Hence the rich man is represented as knowing Lazarus. Paul refers to the perfect knowledge of God's people in the next life, as distinguished from our partial knowledge now. He says of the coming perfect life:

"For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. . . . For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known."—1 Corinthians 13: 9, 10, 12.

In this life we do not have perfect use of anything. We do not even know all of the laws of our own being or of nature in which we live. Our memory is imperfect, and our knowledge of others is imperfect. But in the celestial glory which God has in store for the righteous, these imperfect things and the obstacles we now must contend with will be done away. In the manner that God now know us, we shall there know others. Life will be in glorious fullness, and this means that we shall have full possession of its facilities; not on the basis of mortal powers, however, but of the immortal powers of those who are redeemed to life anew, a life lived in the sphere of perfect harmony with God and of celestial conditions which exist there.

Can one belong to secret societies, as the Masons, and be in good standing?

The history of secret societies reveals the fact that there has been a great difference between them as to their rectitude of purpose and worth in supplying social or fraternal benefits to those uniting with them. For this reason it will be clear that some may hold commendable purposes, while others might not be as much so, to say the least. God has condemned certain kinds of secret combinations, both in the ancient Scriptures and in modern times. Paul refers to shameful things done "in secret" by evildoers (Ephesians 5: 11, 12), and the Book of Mormon speaks of such in that time (106: 23; 147: 93; 440: 54; 441: 64). But of course this can hardly be taken to prohibit all forms of secrecy, though if all were upright it would not be necessary to keep anything secret.

There have been various attempts by certain church members to obtain a resolution of conference condemning or prohibiting membership in secret societies, including the Masonic order, by our people. Such attempts have not been entirely successful, but the church has by vote disapproved of membership in:

"any society or order which requires the taking of oaths or the entering into covenant or obligation to guard the secrets, purposes, or doings of its organization."—Resolution 593.

This was not intended, it appears, as a wholesale disapproval of all secret bodies, for another resolution states that:

"this church has no right to subvert the liberties of its members by prohibiting their membership with what is known as 'a secret society,' unless such society shall first be condemned by either a decision of the General Assembly of the church, or by the law of the land."—No. 175.

The church is opposed to evil in any form, and each one must judge for himself whether or not joining a particular society would be censurable. Perhaps one would need to know a society from the inside before passing judgment as to whether or not it would come under the ban suggested in the first resolution quoted. Some have claimed to know many evil things about particular societies, while others just as credible have claimed to know otherwise from actual membership. To keep a clear conscience, and to use our time to the glory of God is a good basis from which to determine the advisability of anything of this kind. If it meets that test, it ought to be good and beneficial; otherwise probably not.

If a branch treasurer holds the priesthood, must his records be audited?

Those who contribute have a right to demand an audit, and priesthood does not give anyone exemption in such cases. A good treasurer will demand an audit for his own protection, and one who objects to it would probably give reason for suspicion. Even ministers have been known to sin or to err, though we hope not many.

Nauvoo, Illinois

Many Visitors See Historic Landmarks

The district conference was held in Nauvoo, November 5, with District President F. T. Mussell in charge. Apostle John F. Garver was there, and preached Saturday evening and Sunday morning and afternoon. He also delivered a message to the Saints at the morning sacrament service which stressed the necessity for preparation in the establishment of Zion. At the business session, F. T. Mussell was reelected district president, and he chose as his counselors, A. L. Sanford and E. R. Williams. Arnold Ourth was selected as district superintendent of church schools and Joseph Reed, chorister. Delegates to General Conference are F. T. Mussell, Brother and Sister W. H. Gunn, Brother and Sister J. C. Page, Sister J. W. Layton, Sister A. L. Sanford, E. R. Williams, Orville Miller, Joseph Reed, and Joseph Tanner. A basket dinner was served in the Nauvoo House at noon and supper in the evening.

The following day, the funeral of a neighbor, Mrs. R. J. Blum, was held at the church, Apostle W. D. Taylor of the Zionist Church of which she was a member, being the speaker. Mr. and Mrs. Blum were frequent visitors at the Reorganized Church services and their daughter, Margaret, is a member of the Sunday school. Mrs. Blum was held in the highest esteem by the members of this church, and her sudden death was a shock to all. She was gifted with a beautiful voice and often sang at the Saints' services.

Six thousand visitors registered at the Mansion House during the summer months. Many distinguished visitors were among them, the most notable being Governor Horner and United States Senator Dieterich, James Cromwell of the State Highway Department and Judge Orr, of Carthage. Governor Horner was delighted with the scenic drive between Nauvoo and Hamilton, and said that some action would be taken soon to complete this road. He was greatly interested in the old landmarks and stated that he hoped to return soon when he had more time to devote to these historical places.

Fifty-one people from Utah and Idaho composed the third excursion from the Rocky Mountain Region this season. They were served dinner and supper at the Nauvoo House by the women's department, and taken in automobiles to Carthage to visit the old jail. All expressed themselves as greatly pleased with their visit.

The election of branch officers resulted in the reelection of J. C. Page as pastor; A. L. Sanford, director of Religious Education; Mildred Sanford, director of music; L. H. Lewis, secretary and Wilfred Wood, treasurer.

A musical pageant, "Echoes of Christmas," was given on Christmas Eve by the young people of the branch. Following the class period in the morning, a program was given by the children and other members of the Sunday school and was followed with a talk, "The Christ Foretold," by J. C. Page.

Brother and Sister Arnold Ourth are the parents of twin boys born November 27. They have been named Lyonel Lee and Lester Lynn.

Sister Clyde Fusselman, who has been very ill with pneumonia, is slowly recovering. Sister Dora Henderson, who was caring for her, developed double pneumonia and was in a serious condition, but received a blessing through administration and is now on the road to recovery. George and Virgil Heady are also seriously ill with pneumonia.

Cottage prayer meetings are being held on Wednesday evenings at each home in turn, and good interest has been manifested.

Saint Thomas, Ontario

Canadian Local Is Prospering

The annual branch business meeting was held December 15. The following officers were elected for 1934. President and pastor, Elder James Skelding; counselor, Priest Nelson Kelley; deacon, Miles Rock; secretary, Mrs. L. J. Burger; treasurer and solicitor, Mrs. Nelson Kelley; chorister, Mrs. F. Cosan; organist, Miss Emily Saint John. The finance committee is composed of Albert Cordery, James Skelding, and Nelson Kelley. Mrs. Hazel Ford is publicity agent. The president of young people is Mrs. William Stephens; auditors, C. A. Hammond and Mrs. Hazel Ford.

The Sunday school is progressing. Last year Children's Day was appropriately observed and six children and one adult were baptized by Elder Percy Farrow.

The Christmas concert was not enjoyed this year due to an epidemic of scarlet fever in the city.

The election of officers in the Sunday school department resulted in the choice of Nelson Kelley as superintendent and a corps of other workers who are keeping in mind the slogan, "Onward and Upward."

Saint Thomas Branch has been favored with a number of visiting speakers, Elder Percy Farrow, missionary in London District; Elder G. Saint John, of Wiarton; Elder Oliver, of Chicago, Illinois; Ray Best, of Corinth, and Bishop J. C. Dent and Elders Winegarden, Gray, and MacGregor, of London. Apostle D. T. Williams has made several calls and preached inspirational sermons.

Sacramento, California

Twenty-fourth and K Streets

Sacramento Saints report an active season of work. December 3, the church school hour took the form of an "inventory meeting." The beautiful spirit of sacrifice and "Keep the law" was made manifest. Sixty members filed their inventories and financial statements. The Saints believe that this service will help them greatly in carrying out their responsibilities. Elder E. C. Burdick, of the district bishopric, Northern California, and Pastor W. H. Dawson were active in this meeting.

The social committees have been active during the fall months, especially were the Halloween and Pollyanna parties enjoyed by young and old members.

Thanksgiving morning, a prayer meeting was held at which time many testified of the goodness of God to them.

November 26, was Harvest Festival Day. The spirit of willingness to help those less fortunate was demonstrated. Many gifts of food were laid upon the altar.

Sacramento Saints appreciated the visit of President F. M. McDowell and Apostle E. J. Gleazer, November 21 and 22. Brother McDowell spoke to the priesthood at eight o'clock both days, giving a message of encouragement and at the same time, making them feel a personal responsibility in the advancement of the ideals of the church. Brother McDowell was also a speaker for the women, and young people at a dinner given by Sister Gertrude Bidwell.

The rummage sale held during November amounted to $127.26. Brother and Sister S. M. Reiste are to be commended for their work to make this sale a success.

The adult division has secured speakers once a month to present important topics. Mrs. Hugh Bradford, national president of the Parent Teacher Association, spoke of the children of seven other countries she has visited in the interests of the P. T. A. organization.

Rabbi Goldberg, of Sacramento, spoke on "Hitler." Many new points were brought out by the Rabbi in regard to Germany and Hitler's policies.

The passing from this life of Brother Ira McDonald, September 18, was mourned by the many Saints who knew him. He was a devoted member of the church.

September 17, Elder E. C. Burdick not only had the joy and satisfaction of seeing his mother join the church, but also the honor of baptizing her.

At the annual business meeting held in September, Elder W. H. Dawson was sustained branch president; E. C. Burdick and J. L. Bussell as associates. Brother Burdick was elected church school superintendent, and he in turn selected his officers.

Yakima, Washington

Every Department Active

The young people's class enjoyed a duck dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Nutley the evening of October 18. The boys provided the ducks and the girls prepared the meal. The table was prettily decorated with late rosebuds and candles. Eleven couples were present. After dinner the remainder of the evening was spent in singing.

Elizabeth Smith invited the class to her home the evening of the twenty-seventh to a halloween party. Games, stunts, and contests afforded entertainment, while Halloween decorations and favors lent a holiday atmosphere.

A chili supper, which proved very successful, was held at the home of Mrs. J. H. Van Eaton, the evening of November 1, by the adult class. The proceeds were used to provide the church with a communion service.

The women's auxiliary has been busy raising money to aid in the church projects. They have been selling "Betty Brides," tying quilts, and doing other useful things.

Each Wednesday evening a group meets at the Van Eaton home, where under the direction of Claire Van Eaton, they practice songs for the next Sunday, and for special programs.

The Yakima group very much enjoyed the visit of President F. M. McDowell and Apostle M. A. McConley, December 6. Brother McDowell addressed the group in the evening, leaving with them an inspiring message. After the service, an informal reception was held at the Nutley home.

Brother Martin spent two days with Yakima Branch, December 12 and 13. Services were held both evenings and were well attended.

The Christmas program which was to be held Christmas Eve, had to be postponed until New Year's Eve because of the flood conditions in Yakima at Christmas time. Recitations were given by two members of the primary class, Frances Malcolm and Jane Freeman. The kindergarten, primary, and intermediate classes, dressed in bright crepe paper costumes, sang carols, while five of them carried a basket through the crowd and gathered presents of food and clothing which were put on the "Inasmuch Tree," and later were taken to a needy family of the branch.

The final number on the program was "The Three Kings," a five-act pageant portraying in a new way the old story of Christ's birth, and displaying the characteristics that make for true kingliness.

Milan Mission, Michigan

Dedicate Their Church

This mission had the pleasure of entertaining Apostle D. T. Williams and R. H. Green and A. B. Smith, district presidents, December 17. On this glad occasion the Saints dedicated their church home and made arrangements to organize a branch. Brother Williams was the speaker in the morning, and in the afternoon he gave the dedicatory sermon. A peaceful spirit prevailed throughout the entire day. A chicken potpie dinner was served.

On Christmas Eve the young people had charge of the Christmas program producing two short plays.

On New Year's Eve they held a watch night service and an interesting experience meeting in which members related incidents of God's guidance. As the old year passed out and the new year came in they sang, "Guide Me to Thee." Then after a good lunch, all went to their homes. Some came from Toledo, about thirty-five miles, to meet with them.

The Saints at Milan are trying to keep the call ringing, "Onward to Zion."

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was here the first Sunday evening in December, and preached a fine sermon on the theme, "The Source of Inspiration in Ancient American Civilization."

The women's department met the evening of December 14, for their annual Christmas party.

The church school gave its Christmas entertainment, December 22. A short play by the intermediate girls proved to be very good. The junior choir sang a cantata, and recitations were given by the little folks.

P. E. Cross, of Portsmouth, Ohio, was baptized December 24, by Elder G. H. Kirkendall.

That evening the choir sang the cantata, "King All Glorious," by Knowlton.

Miss Mary Carey, of Dayton, was baptized December 31, by Elder G. H. Kirkendall.

District Missionary John R. Grice preached an excellent sermon on the closing day of the old year, bringing new hope for another year of endeavor.

Other speakers for the month were Patriarch J. E. Matthews, Elders A. E. Anderton, C. W. Clark, G. H. Kirkendall, and A. H. Nieman, and Bishop H. E. French.

Wimer, Oklahoma

Have "Zion Builder" Organization

The young people's group was organized the evening of December 3, and the following officers elected: President, Allah Hayes; vice president, Clyde McKee; secretary, Evelyn McKee; librarian, May Vale; chorister, Henry Dunn. These will serve until next October when the organization will hold its next election in accordance with the plan of other groups. This organization is called Zion Builders of Wimer.

Saints in this place have not been holding regular meetings, but are organizing classes and regular study and recreation periods. They are glad that Brothers Allah Hayes and Clyde McKee and their families are moving into this community.

This group is composed one hundred percent of tithe payers, and the workers hope to keep this record. They feel that the Lord has wonderfully blessed their work in the mission. Brother Creviston has been a help to them in getting ready for regular church activities.

Breckenridge, Texas

This Mission Is Growing

This mission continues its interest in the local church school and fervently supports the Sunday pastoral services. Brother W. H. Mannering has been rendering them.

The sacrifices made by this little group, which has keenly sensed the depression, are most commendable. One family has been boarding the pastor for the quarter just ended, and other families come from a distance of twenty-five to thirty miles to attend all regular Sunday meetings.

Appropriate Thanksgiving and Christmas programs were enjoyed.

Brother Mannering is conducting a few missionary services in other parts of this community, but returns on Sunday to preach to the local group. He has made arrangements to broadcast a sermon every Sunday at 1.15 p. m. from the Breckenridge radio station, KMBX. The church school furnishes the musical part of the program.

This mission was opened about two years ago by a few members living here, and Missionary G. H. Wixom baptized about eighteen members.

Independence

All the congregations in Independence benefited greatly from the two-week missionary series which opened with the new year and closed last Sunday night. Gospel truths were presented with force and clarity by the servants of God, and Saints and friends listened with interest. Many not of the faith are interested in and investigating the teachings of the church, and some have requested baptism. It is thought that this series will be the means of stimulating the interest and cooperation of a large number.

A large choir gathered from the various congregations of Independence, is giving intensive attention to the General Conference oratorio, "The Elijah," each Sunday afternoon beginning at four o'clock, at the Stone Church. Separate rehearsals of male and female voices are had during the first part of the practice, Mrs. Minnie Scott Dobson and Paul N. Craig directing. Sunday's practice was the second for the Independence choir.

Stone Church

An impressive service was enjoyed at eleven o'clock Sunday morning when Pastor John F. Sheehy was the speaker. He chose his Scripture reading from the words of Jesus in his Sermon on the Mount.

Music was rendered by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, and assisted by Mrs. S. A. Burgess, who sang "O Love Divine," and Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee, organist.

In the evening Apostle Paul M. Hanson delivered the final sermon of his series, "Why One Should Belong to the Church," to a large crowd. His splendid discourses have been the source of help and inspiration to many members of this district.

Excellent music was supplied at this hour by the Wahdemna Choral Club, led by Paul N. Craig, Mrs. Hazel Scott Withee, organist. The chorus sang "Beautiful Savior," by Christiansen; "Fierce Was the Wild Billow," by Noble, and "Lost in the Night," by Christiansen. In the last number Miss Fern Griggs, soprano, sang the solo part. Mark Anway, baritone, sang "O, Dry Those Tears," by del Riego, accompanied by Orrin K. Fry, jr., violinist, Mrs. Opal Hanson, pianist, and Mrs. Hazel Withee, organist.

During the missionary meetings at the Stone Church, conducted every night except Saturday, musical organizations of the congregations have been generous with their help. Among the choruses which have helped are the Stone Church Choir, the Aeolian Chorus, the Cantanina Chorus, the Clematis Chorus, the Stone Church Boys' Choir, and the Wahdemna Choral Club.

Second Church

Apostle E. J. Gleazer, the missionary preacher at Second Church for two weeks, was the speaker morning and evening last Sunday. His theme in the morning was, "The Temporal Law as a Means of Salvation." His sermon that evening, "Have Faith in God," concluded the series which has proved highly helpful to this congregation. Each night a good crowd has attended and on the concluding evening the church was crowded. Local members are grateful to Brother Gleazer for his good help. Friends have been interested in the gospel, and some names have been handed in for baptism.

Sunday morning the choir, directed by Mrs. Wilma Settles, sang the anthem, "Come, Let Us Sing Unto the Lord," Mrs. W. N. Inman taking the solo part. A special number, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," was sung by the ladies' quartet.

Downstairs Cecil Walker, of Liberty Street, spoke to the junior service his subject being, "Courage to Follow Jesus." The story, "Jim the Drummer Boy," was told by Mrs. B. C. Sarratt. Bernice Wisemore told the story, "Janie's Courage."

In the evening music was offered by the young people's choir, led by Mrs. Sam Inman and they sang the anthem, "Abide With Me."

On the afternoon of January 7, a new Girl Scout troop, fully registered and authorized by the national organization, was formally invested at the church. Miss Florence Willard is captain of the new troop which will be known as Troop 33, and there are ten tenderfoot scouts.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey will take up the civilization of Central America, beginning Sunday evening, January 21, at the early evening study hour.

Walnut Park Church

Elder J. W. A. Bailey spoke both morning and evening Sunday, the concluding sermons of the meeting series which has occupied the past two weeks at Walnut Park. All of these meetings have been well attended and the interest has been gratifying.

A church school officers' and teachers' meeting was held at two-thirty Sunday afternoon, and was addressed by Elder C. B. Woodstock, Pastor Frank McDonald, and Kenneth Morford, assistant superintendent. Preceding the talks a number, "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning," was sung by a quartet composed of Arlon Chapman, Odess Athey, Clairice Closson and Kenneth Morford. Following the program, Superintendent Closson divided the meeting into three parts, adult, young people's and children's workers, and problems peculiar to each were discussed. It is planned to make these meetings a regular feature of the church school work.

Practices began this week on the one-act plays which are entered in the contest being conducted by the young people's council. Five plays have been started in Walnut Park and many of the young people will be hard at work until the preliminaries, which must be held by February 17.

Brother and Sister Laverne Spease are the parents of a son born January 8, whom they have named Wayne Laverne. Brother and Sister Spease live in Group 29 East, of Walnut Park district.

During the past year the Walnut Park Quilting Society, led by Mrs. Leona Jones, has quilted thirteen quilts and pieced and quilted four others; made two comforts; made 204 garments for the Red Cross and a large number of articles for the Commodity Shop. Other activities, under the direction of Mrs. Ellen Pennell, ways and means chairman, were a trip to Mace Ryer Company's demonstration in Kansas City, which netted the society more than twenty dollars; surprise parties at the homes of two families of Saints, and getting together a large number to attend the women's banquet at the Auditorium November 4. More than forty-seven dollars was cleared from a thank offering sale held in late November and this with $96.35 earned by other works of the society, made a total $144.27. From this amount tithes were paid, an offering made to local expense, a contribution to the women's special gift, quilt materials were bought and a number of small amounts given where needed. The society also begins the new year with a neat balance on hand, a year in which they hope to accomplish more than they did in 1933.

Enoch Hill Church

All were reluctant to have the missionary meetings close Sunday night for they feel that they have found new friends in the gospel, Patriarch U. W. Greene and Elder Arthur Koehler. Lasting impressions of gospel truths were given in this two-week series, and God's Spirit was present to bless both speaker and hearers.

The congregation is happy to have Pastor E. A. Thomas with them again after several weeks of absence because of illness and business. Assistant Pastors C. E. Beal and Joseph Martin carried on in his absence.

The early morning prayer services are well attended.

There have been many cases of spiritual and physical blessings in this congregation for which the members are grateful.

Elder Joseph Martin was the speaker at the eleven o'clock service, and his theme was "The Results of Sin." A male quartet and the choir furnished the music.

Harold Inman, son of Ralph Inman, enlisted in the navy last week.

Spring Branch Church

Saints of this district greatly enjoyed the missionary sermons delivered by Patriarch Ammon White to large and interested audiences. This series began January 1, and a good attendance characterized every service. Sunday night the church was full to overflowing. Themes presented by Brother White were, "The Origin of the Saints' Church," "Doctrine and Practice," "The Book of Mormon's Place in Theology," "Ancient Prophecies Fulfilled in Our Generation," "Jesus Coming to Reign Very Soon or the Advent of the Millennium," and "The Solution of Our Social and Economic Problems From Bible Viewpoints." A number of questions were put in the question box and these Brother White answered most interestingly. Throughout the meetings several nonmembers attended and one has requested baptism.

Sunday morning's service was in charge of Leonard White assisted by F. A. Cool, and Pastor Morris Jacobsen was in charge in the evening, assisted by Jesse Friend.

Last Friday night the Aeolian Chorus, directed by Paul N. Craig, gave a half hour of music at the song service period. On another evening Alma Kearns was soloist. Local singers also helped make the services attractive.

Open Church School Hall—Dedicate Church Building

Two events have been of great interest to the members of the Hamilton, New South Wales, Branch, within the recent past. One was the opening of a new church school hall and the other was the dedication of the church building. Both events were much enjoyed by a large congregation of Saints and friends.

There has been a procession of faithful people who have lived by faith to see this day, but many of them have gone on before not realizing their hopes. Beginning with a small number, the congregation of Hamilton now numbers one hundred and seventy members. For many years they met in a little church building, the gift of Brother W. Broadway, until at last they had to push out to a new location. From that time there has been no looking backward. The church building is approximately six years old and the debt covering the church has been paid within that many years. This is an excellent showing for the people of this community have been struck hard by the depression and industrial reverses.

The church has a brick front with stained windows but the remainder of the building is timber. The edifice is spacious, light, and airy and adequate for the needs of the present congregation. Kindergarten rooms and a kitchen are attached to the church. The new church school hall has been erected for religious educational purposes and social activities. This hall, when finally completed, will be equipped for dramatic productions and other activities of young people.

The pastor, Elder J. H. Jenkins, had the honor of officially opening the hall in the presence of civic and church authorities. After the ceremonies connected with the opening there was a banquet at which one hundred and fifty Saints and friends participated. A concert at night was given to an appreciative audience.

On the Sunday, December 10, 1933, the service of dedication took place. There was a large congregation attending and all joyfully participated in the service. Hymns of praise were sung by the congregation; the address of dedication was delivered by Elder G. G. Lewis and the prayer of dedication was offered by Elder A. J. Corbett, a representative of the Bishopric in Australia. Following this, the congregation joined in singing "You May Sing of the Beauty of Mountain and Dale." The pastor of the branch, Elder J. H. Jenkins, presented the deeds of the church to the general church and these were received by Elder A. J. Corbett. The local deacon was called forward to receive the key as custodian of the building and he suitably responded.

As a further means of dedication a sacrament service followed during which the emblems were treated as a means of dedicating the Saints. This theme was presented by Elder Robert McLaughlin, one of the Southern New South Wales District presidency. Prayers were offered by Elder A. V. Robinson, representing the missionary arm; Elder A. Hepworth representing the pastorate; and Sister Eva Birt Fitness representing the laity. The services was one of devotion and consecration and many expressed themselves as having been blessed by attending.

A week of special services has been arranged as a sequel to the dedication of the church building. These services will be in charge of two of the missionaries, Elders A. J. Corbett and A. V. Robinson.

Work for Spiritual Growth

Special business session was held at the church the evening of January 3, after the prayer hour. At this time branch and church school officers were elected. Few changes were made in branch officers, L. L. Bennett continuing as branch president; G. S. Reed as secretary; Amos Kersey, branch solicitor; Brother Bennett, church treasurer; Kathryn Reed, publicity agent and chorister, and Sister Bennett, pianist. The board of trustees was sustained for another year.

Quite a number started the new year by attending church school and later by partaking of the sacrament. The young married people's class boasted the best attendance. Each member has determined to do his part toward making a bigger and better Sunday school. They have resolved to cooperate with each other and to forget petty grievances which otherwise hinder the growth of spirituality.

The women's department has outlined a program which they hope to carry out in a way that will be a help to all branch members. Because of the severe cold, family suppers are to be postponed for a time. For the coming few months the meeting time will be given over to consideration of ideas on better homes and preparing a variety of menus, which will lighten the work of the mother in the home and at the same time make appetizing dinners for the family. They will endeavor to impress upon the minds of all the need of zioniac homes.

Kansas City Stake

A series of ten Sunday lectures on "Church Salesmanship," by Elder R. L. Bishop, which was to have commenced Sunday, January 14, at two-thirty, has been postponed until the same hour, January 28. These lectures will assist the ministry in a better presentation of the gospel story.

Second Church

During the past months, attendance for this congregation has increased. Elders Thomas Newton, and E. W. Lloyd, and Priests John Siebert and P. J. Raw, four your members of the priesthood, are assisting with the Sunday services.

"Keep the Law," has been given special emphasis by all speakers, especially by Berwyn Lungwitz, who delivered two sermons on that subject.

Recent speakers have been Ralph Goold, Thomas Newton, E. W. Lloyd, George C. Mesley, Lloyd Siebert, John Siebert, E. S. Zink, and Pastor P. J. Raw.

Sister Mildred Lungwitz presented a fine Christmas program, which was enjoyed by the congregation. At the conclusion of the program, the members brought gifts wrapped in white, which were later presented to a blind sister, a member of the congregation.

Prayer services are being held each Wednesday evening at the home of this blind sister, in charge of Brother John Siebert.

Sister Irene Smith, who underwent a serious operation, January 2, asks the prayers of the Saints in her behalf.

Fourth Church

A marked degree of spirituality is evident in all the meetings. The children, young people, and other folk are steadily uniting their efforts and good works for the advancement of the church.

Sunday morning, December 24, an interesting program was presented by the children, who gave four one-act plays. In the evening a cantata was sung by the junior young people, and a three-act play was given by the O. B. K.'s. The play, "The Empty Room," was a fine portrait of the Christmas story and furnished a good lesson as well as entertainment.

The closing services of the year's work were outstanding for their spirit of devotion and for unity of thought and purpose. The Spirit of God was present. The congregation met in prayer to watch the entrance of the new year. An effective ceremony of candle lighting, ending with the illuminating of the picture of Christ, and the repeating of the Lord's Prayer, fired the people with new faith and a greater desire to serve the Christ.

The opening services of the new year carried with them the same fine qualities that dominated the closing services.

Council Bluffs, Iowa

Activities Hold Interest of All

Council Bluffs Saints are entering the new year with greater activity than ever before.

November 11, the young people started a series of services known as the "Light House" services, which continued one week. Each sermon was preached by a young member of the priesthood. Brother Lee Landon preached the opening sermon Sunday morning, November 11, followed by Alfred Taylor, of Shenandoah, Iowa, in the evening. Other men occupying the pulpit were Merl Spence, Amos Graybill, Paul Harding, Gene Turpen, Elmer Johnson, Conrad Booton, and Merl Grover, of Omaha, Nebraska. Each evening the sermon was preceded by a short program, young people of Council Bluffs, Tabor, Shenandoah, Underwood, and Hazel Dell taking part.

November 17, the women gave their annual bazaar, serving dinner and supper in the Eagles' Hall. Sister June Currie is leader of the women.

The dramatic club has recently given several plays. The last one, "The Wanderer," written and produced by Sister Eunice Moser, of Council Bluffs, was given Sunday evening, December 24. The play featured John the Beloved as the wanderer. Sister B. O. Burton and daughter, Edith, played a piano duet, and Sister J. S. Garner sang "Jesu Bambino" between acts. A male quartet consisting of Ray Murphy, Merl Spence, James and Arthur Dempsey, sang Christmas carols. Organ accompaniment was furnished by Sister W. T. Spanwick.

Two recent speakers for this congregation have been Elder E. Y. Hunker, December 17, and Bishop W. T. Wellman.

Friday, December 22, the Saints surprised Pastor and Sister Ray Whiting, and remembered them with a Christmas gift.

During the worship period, December 24, Mrs. J. S. Garner and W. T. Spanwick sang a vocal duet, "A Christmas Song," by Adam.

Special Christmas music was rendered by the choir, December 31. The following numbers were sung, "The Guiding Star," "Noel," "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear," and "Lo, How a Rose E'er Blooming."

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan

Variety Lends Attractiveness to Local Program

In November a cradle roll festival was held under the direction of Sister W. L. Christy. The women of the branch sang "Home, Sweet Home," which was followed by the reading of a poem, "To My Baby," by Sister Lottie Clarke Diggle. Sister Christy then gave an interpretation of "First Impressions," and Sister Lila Smith sang a lullaby as the curtain was drawn back revealing a group of mothers with babies in their arms. Following the Scripture reading, Mark 10: 11-14, Sister Forsythe's baby was blessed by Elders Christy and Diggle. Sister Hew, cradle roll superintendent, read the names on the roll as the hymn, "Jesus Loves Me," was softly played. Short talks were given by Sister Ethel Piedt, Henry Piedt and Alvin Beckman. In conclusion four mothers sang a hymn.

Early in December the branch sponsored an evening's entertainment for the purpose of raising funds to purchase Saints' Hymnals. A comedy, "The Beauty Parlor," was presented by a group of young people and "The Play's the Thing" concluded the program. Sister Pearl Mogenson contributed several accordion solos and the senior girls sang an old southern ballad with guitar accompaniment. A silver offering was taken.

The annual Christmas tree and program were held December 21. Contributions of candy, nuts, and Japanese oranges were received from the members and one hundred well-filled bags were distributed. Sister Ethel Piedt, children's supervisor, had asked the children to bring old toys, and for three weeks they worked enthusiastically, remodeling, painting, and dressing dolls. These were presented to children who otherwise might not receive gifts. An effective pageant with carols interspersed was arranged by Sister Ethel Piedt. Mrs. Eric Boland sang a solo and a sacred drill, "O Come All Ye Faithful," was the concluding number.

A young people's council was recently organized under the plan suggested in the Herald. The council arranged a social evening for the young people during the Christmas holidays, and entertained the adult group on New Year's night.

Brother Fisher, of Winnipeg Branch, stopped overnight in Saskatoon on his way to Ribstone. He is the youngest of four brothers three of whom are elders and the fourth a priest. Three years ago he, accompanied by a brother and another young man, traveled over three thousand miles in a canoe, spent a winter in the Arctic Circle, and enjoyed many interesting experiences.

Holden Stake

Grandview, Missouri

Elders W. S. Macrae and G. R. Wells took charge of the study classes held in this branch last November. The subject of study was "Keep the Law," and the classes proved beneficial to all.

Elder Amos E. Allen visited here the fore part of December, occupying the morning hour.

On Wednesday evening, December 20, almost the entire group gathered in the basement of the church for a surprise supper given in honor of Brother and Sister Charles Taylor, the first members of the church at Grandview. Covers were laid for sixty-four guests. After supper a program was had in the church auditorium, Elder Atwell the speaker. He was the elder who baptized Brother and Sister Taylor. There were solos by local musicians, then Pastor Charles Martin, presented a gift of money to Brother Taylor as a token of gratitude for that which he and Sister Taylor have done for this group. They are faithful workers. Unfortunately Sister Taylor was sick and unable to attend the entertainment. She was represented however, by her daughter, Mrs. Claudina Dyre. Sister Taylor is still bedfast.

On Christmas Eve the classes of the church school gave an appropriate program.

Cottage prayer meetings in the homes of the Saints are being enjoyed. Anyone in the locality who wishes to attend may learn of the meeting place from Brother Charles Taylor or Brother Charles Martin.

Knobnoster, Missouri

Greater unity and love marked the opening of the new year here.

Bishop and Sister J. A. Koehler were here November 11 and 12, and conducted a two-day meeting. Brother Koehler had charge of class work and preaching and Sister Koehler worked with the primary department.

During these services a play was given by young people of the branch, supervised by their director Sister Harriet Enfield.

These meetings were followed by a week's series of services conducted by Elder W. S. Macrae of the stake presidency and G. R. Wells, stake director of the church school.

Miss Madeline Enfield and Mr. Jack Mitchner, of Kansas City, were recently married at the home of the bride's mother, Sister Harriet Enfield, Elder G. R. Wells officiating. Only the immediate families were present at the ceremony.

Sister Dortha Nutt, church pianist, is still confined to her home much of the time. The members wish for her a speedy recovery.

Hazel Dell Branch

Weston, Iowa

This branch is now presided over by James C. Jensen, assisted by Hans Andersen and Percy Andersen. Brother Earl Jensen is in charge of the church school and is assisted by Elmer Johnson. Sister J. A. Hansen is leader of women.

About one hundred are enrolled on Hazel Dell church records, and there are eighty-eight on the Sunday school list. On the wall last year hung a chart showing the attendance from Sunday to Sunday. When the year was closed, this chart showed that attendance was largely affected by the condition of weather and roads. Muddy roads cut attendance lower than cold weather. Twice during the year the chart passed the one hundred mark, once when district conference was held here, and once when an all-day meeting was enjoyed, W. T. Wellman, of Omaha, the district bishop, the speaker.

A memorial service for Sister J. F. Drebes, lately of Washington State, was held, Missionary P. T. Anderson, an old Hazel Dell member, in charge. This sister, who reared her children after the death of her husband, was respected by everyone.

In October one of the oldest members of the branch, Carl C. Larsen, passed away at his home north of Weston. Brother Larsen had belonged to this branch almost its entire existence. He was born in Denmark, but joined the restored faith in this country. He held the office of priest, and was willing to help wherever he could.

Fifteen were added to Hazel Dell roll last summer by baptism and several also were enrolled as they moved into this community from other places.

Brother Irwin Larsen was married to Sister Dorothy Bellville, of Council Bluffs. Sister Larsen is now the teacher of one of the small classes in the basement.

Another wedding was solemnized when Sister Leona Hansen was married to Brother Lynn Handlen, both members of this branch. Sister Leona has been a Sunday school teacher for a number of years and now has an intermediate class.

Elmer Johnson, one of the younger members, was ordained a priest last summer.

The young people are doing their bit. They have their own organization and give programs and hold socials. Last summer they had an early prayer meeting in the woods. For a time the boys, cheered on by the girls, had a series of volley ball games with neighboring branches. They gave a fine entertainment Christmas Eve, telling the story of the Nativity. That evening also they sang Christmas carols for neighbors and friends. On New Year's Eve they had a watch party.

The women of the branch meet once a month with one of their members, to study a chapter in the Bible and to do quilting and work of other kinds. In the fall they gave a pie supper and program in the church basement.

The majority of Hazel Dell's members are trying to live up to the teachings of the church as they are taught by local and visiting officers. Many have taken steps to file their inventories or make out their financial statements and are paying their tithing. A fine work has been done in this connection by Bishop W. T. Wellman who, from the pulpit or in private conversation, has made plain the financial law of the church.

Plan to Beautify Church Home

The spiritual condition of this branch is fair, and progress is being made.

Workers are endeavoring to raise money to paint the church and buy new rugs in order that the building will look well inside and out. God's house should be as beautiful as the Saints can make it. A new lawn will be planted in front of the building.

The district president has been here twice in the last three months. He delivered a good sermon on the need of being humble and full of love, and gave counsel on methods of directing a branch according to size and conditions.

Branch officers for the coming year are: President, Frank J. Lacey; secretary, William H. Kemple; publicity agent, Clyde C. Roberts; chorister, Charles C. Swain; organist, Frances Swain; librarian, George Swain, and Charles C. Swain was sustained bishop's agent.

A fine Christmas program on December 21, was enjoyed by ninety-five, about thirty of whom were nonmembers. One of the inspiring numbers of the evening was a Christmas Offering march. Members gave their contributions, and representatives of two classes presented their offerings; then the march was brought to a grand climax by the junior class in a musical number. The junior offering amounted to more than twelve dollars. This they earned by making and selling candy and potholders, directed by their teacher, Katherine Adamson. Everyone attending the program was given a bag containing candy, an apple, and nuts, and presents were distributed from the tree.

Seventy-year-old Branch in Thriving Condition

Local Saints are grateful for the blessings they have enjoyed, and are maintaining a high standard of branch operations. Four departments and many times five, have coordinated in a strong effort for advancement, and the junior as well as the senior groups, have gone forward. Many young people have taken their places during the last three years of the church school here, and blessing and vision have enlarged the group. The essentials of unity, understanding, and helpfulness have been made evident.

Coldwater Branch has enjoyed an unbroken existence of seventy years. Many of the present regime think and act in inherited patterns of faith, honor, stability and gospel desire.

The social functions of the departments, including suppers, have yielded rich returns, especially in association. Many of the best people in town, including professional men and women, have grasped the hands of the Saints and given them a good word.

Programs and entertainments having as the outstanding principle the faith of the gospel, have contributed to make the church school and the school of expression very busy organizations.

Elder S. W. L. Scott has many times been called to occupy the pulpit, to officiate at funerals, and to help in other ways. Sacrament and prayer services are regularly held.

November 18, 1933, Brother Richard ("Jerry") Macrae, director of church school, was united in marriage to Miss Ruth Rose, of Quincy, Michigan, Elder Scott officiating. Jerry is a son of Brother and Sister W. S. Macrae, of Holden, Missouri.

District President A. C. Barmore occupied this pulpit three evenings in late December, lecturing on and illustrating "The Life of Christ," "The Parables of Christ," and "Church History From Palmyra to Independence." Brother Barmore visited Coldwater at other times during the year, bringing Sister Barmore with him.

A number here would like to join Brother Sheehy in the morning radio devotions but have been unable to tune in on Station KMBC except on one or two occasions. The same may be said of the Graceland College programs each month.

A Christmas tree and program were enjoyed Sunday evening, December 25, sponsored by Sister Judson Corless, director of the school of expression.

Brother George H. Williams of Bethel, twelve miles from this branch, passed away January 1, his birthday. He was seventy-nine. While unable to attend church services regularly, he followed the activities of the Sunday services by the "church cards" published weekly.

Brother S. W. L. Scott officiated at his funeral which was conducted from the Congregational Church at Bethel Center. Brother Cutler, Independent Baptist, of Bronson, Michigan, assisted.

The annual business meeting of this branch, December 3, resulted in the following organization. District President A. C. Barmore acted as chairman. Brother A. J. Dexter, Lansing, Michigan, was appointed as president by Brother A. C. Barmore, Brother Scott having resigned as president but not as a pastor. Sister Martha Fish, secretary-treasurer; S. W. L. Scott, musical director; Sister Grace Peer, pianist and librarian; Elvin Corless, custodian; Jesse Dexter, Milton Schuette and Edgar Peer, trustees; publicity department, Sister Alta Stroh. A rising vote of thanks was tendered Brother Scott in appreciation of his three years of service as branch president.

The departmental organization in September, elected the following: church school director, Jerry Macrae; assistant, Sister Martha Fish; secretary, Judson Corless, and other officers. The school of expression is headed by Sister Judson Corless, assisted by Sister Mae L. Scott and other willing and efficient helpers. The branch president appointed Sister Gallagher as leader of women. Provision was made for the organization of a choir of twenty-six voices.

January 7, the newly-elected president, A. J. Dexter, was in the pulpit, and, associated with Brother Scott and Brother Peer, administered the sacrament.

Niagara Falls, Ontario

The young people have organized a society under the supervision of Branch President Martin A. Ware. This group is planning an all-day meeting for the near future, to aid in the promotion in their program. Officers of the society for 1934, are: President, Arnold Ware; vice president, George A. Folleat; secretary, Stella Pew, and treasurer, Ruth Walters. They have set an age limit for their members, fifteen to thirty-five.

Appointments of Bishop's Agents

E. C. Burdick is appointed bishop's agent of Northern California District. Vice-Bishop Edward Ingham is reluctantly released; but conditions existing indicate the wisdom of the change. We express appreciation of Bishop Ingham's services, and commend Brother Burdick to the Saints of the district and bespeak for him and the department continued support of the membership of that territory. Brother Burdick's association with district work of the bishopric has, we feel sure, already won for him the support of the Saints.

Solicitors in the district will send January reports to Brother Burdick at 3008 F Street, Sacramento, California.

Appointment of Bishop's Agent

Notice is hereby given that Brother Allen C. Wardle has been appointed to serve as bishop's agent for the Utah District, taking over the work formerly handled by Roy F. Hewes.

Brother Wardle comes highly recommended by those who know him and have been associated with him. We are glad to recommend him to the Saints of the Utah District and solicit their whole-hearted support in this phase of the work of the church.

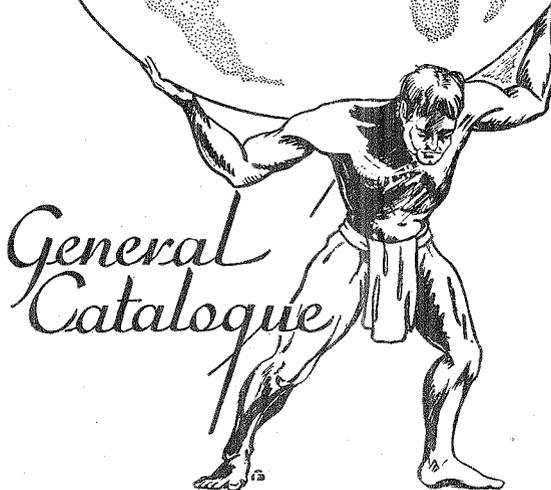

We hereby request that the solicitors send their January and subsequent reports to Brother Wardle, 724 South State Street, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Sister M. E. Robinson, Route 1, Rosebud, Texas, desires the prayers of the church, that she may be healed of yellow jaundice and gallstone trouble.

Malinda Reed, of Garden Grove, Iowa, seeks the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her daughter, Helen, that she may have spiritual and physical strength sufficient to undergo two operations for the removal of two impacted wisdom teeth.

Our Departed Ones

CARR.—Mary Veneta, daughter of Henry and Mary Bauerle Carr, was born at Elk Mills, Maryland, June 20, 1913. Died July 31, 1933, following an automobile accident. As the result of home training and church association she sought admission to the church in her youth, being baptized by her cousin, Elder Thomas M. Carr, in October, 1925. Funeral services were held in the Saints' chapel in Elk Mills. Elder T. M. Carr officiating. Interment was in Cherry Hill Cemetery. Her youthful passing was mourned by her parents and relatives and by a host of friends.

CARR.—Mary Bauerle was born January 20, 1878, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. As a young woman she came in contact with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, being baptized September 3, 1898, by Elder A. H. Parsons. Through church association she met Henry Carr, then of Philadelphia, their marriage taking place in February, 1899. To this union eight children were born; four sons and four daughters. Seven of these survive. One daughter preceded her in death two weeks. Shortly after their marriage they made their home in Elk Mills, Maryland, where the husband, ordained an elder, presided over the local congregation for a number of years. The children born and reared in the home of the elder and under the influence of the church, were united with the church one by one as they reached the years of choice. Death came August 13, 1933, after a long illness, and was hastened by the accidental death of her daughter, Mary. Surviving are, her husband; four sons, Albert, of Kinney, Virginia; Ellsworth, of Newark, Delaware; Joseph and Howard, of Elkton, Maryland; three daughters, Naomi, Vera and Jane, of Elkton. Funeral services were held in the Saints' chapel at Elk Mills. Elder George W. Robley, who performed their marriage ceremony, speaking the words of parting, of eternal hope and comfort. Interment was in the Cherry Hill Cemetery.

WALKER.—Bessie May Gaddis was born at Pomona, Franklin County, Kansas, March 15, 1885, and departed this life January 2, 1934, at the Independence Sanitarium after an illness of about six weeks. July 17, 1904, she was united in marriage to Claude G. Walker: To this union was born six children: Cecil R., Independence, Missouri; Kenneth, LeLoup, Kansas; Muriel, Everest, Kansas; Lois, Topeka, Kansas, and the Misses Dorothy and Genevieve Walker who with their father survive to mourn her departure. Other near relatives include her mother, Mrs. Cynthia Gaddis, Ottawa, Kansas; five sisters, Mrs. Tina Ikenberry, Pueblo, Colorado; Mrs. Glover Hudson, Kansas City, Missouri; Mrs. Dave Hudson, LeLoup, Kansas; Mrs. Florence Bruce and Mrs. Ralph Langdon, and a brother, Fred Gaddis, all of Ottawa, Kansas; also two grandchildren. When Sister Walker was a girl in her teens she united with the Christian Church, later in life she joined the Church of God. June 26, 1932, after having been convinced of the truth of the latter-day message through the efforts of her son, Cecil, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by Elder W. B. Paul, at Fanning, Kansas, and confirmed the same day by Elders James A. Thomas and W. B. Paul. Funeral services were conducted January 4, 1934, at the Liberty Street Church in charge of Elder W. B. Paul, sermon by Elder Ward A. Hougas. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

NESSER.—Arnold Jacob Nesser was born in Springfield, Utah, June 30, 1862, and passed to rest at his home three miles north of Fanning, Kansas, December 27, 1933. He was the son of Arnold and Barbara Rendernack Nesser, natives of Zurich, Switzerland. He came to Stewartville, Missouri, in 1876, where he resided until he moved to the home near Fanning in 1910. There remain of his immediate family, his wife, Christina; five sons, John Elbert, Omar Simon, Elmer Lawrence, Harry Edwin, and George Virgil, and three daughters, Mary Murel Hale, Laura Ann Hamilton, and Alice May. Brother Nesser was ordained an elder in 1896. The funeral was from the church in Fanning, December 29; sermon by Frank G. Hedrick.

HAYDEN.—George Ira Hayden was born August 15, 1913, at DeKalb, Illinois, and passed from this life January 3, 1934, at Benton Harbor, Michigan. He was a faithful church member and dearly loved by all who knew him. He leaves to mourn his passing, his father, mother, and three brothers. Services were conducted by Elder McKnight, of Galien, Michigan, assisted by Elder Hunt, of Benton Harbor. Interment was in Crystal Springs Cemetery.

HOGUE.—Elizabeth R. Forgeus, daughter of John and Sarah Forgeus, was born at Little Sioux, Iowa, December 26, 1860, and passed from this life January 4, 1934, at the home of her daughter in Independence, Missouri. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, September 4, 1881, by T. W. Chatburn at Council Bluffs, Iowa. July 19, 1892, she was united in marriage to Clarence H. Hogue, who preceded her in death. She leaves to mourn, one son, Beryl H. Hogue, of Lincoln, Nebraska; two daughters, Mrs. Lalia Bova, of Independence, Missouri, and Mrs. Verna Davidson, of Kansas City, Missouri, and two grandchildren, Dorothy and Annabelle Hogue, with other relatives and many friends. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sermon by F. A. Smith, W. A. Smith assisting.

■ Her Great Chance

Last week Kansas City witnessed an exciting bit of drama in the careers of two young women. One was already an opera star. After an absence of some years from the stage, she returned to it, and rose to a new triumph in her art. Because she was a neighbor, Kansas City rejoiced with her. Then events took an unfortunate turn. The management could not keep its contract on payment for her services. She rebelled, perhaps with good reason, and refused to sing.

But the task that she despised was the golden opportunity of another girl, until then unknown. She filled the place quickly, and has been acclaimed as one of the new lights in the constellation of opera stars. Because she is a native, Kansas City again rejoices. This one event, seeming so little at the time, may prove to be the turning point of two careers. Few people can safely predict what will happen to the two young women as a result of what each did.

But to the rest of us, who must often spend our lives with little tasks and small accomplishments, it is a wholesome lesson. It does not pay to despise any duty that may come to us.

■ "In winter time we birds often need bread lines and soup kitchens, too," the Pigeonette paused long enough to remind us one frosty morning not long ago. "We need friends to see that we have food—crumbs, bits of suet, cracked corn and wheat, common hen-scratch, grapenuts, chopped raisins and other titbits from your table. Next summer when insect pests abound, we will more than pay back your investment in us. So don't forget us, please, when the snow covers most of our food supply and the north wind ruffles up our feathers and makes our toes tingle."

Carrying On

By H. E. Depew

Though in this life we oft discouraged be,
And ways of others are so hard to see,
May we Thy Holy Service ne'er forsake
'Til at Thy call this earthly thread we break.

The path is steep, and rugged seems the hill
That must be climbed if we would do Thy Will;
Our hearts grow weary in the endless fight
To keep our souls attuned to Thee, the Light.

O God, our Guide, and Stay do ever be,
To draw our weary eyes aloft to Thee—
That in Thy Service we may never faint,
Nor bring to shame the glorious name of Saint.

■ This Younger Generation

"Life really begins to look dark," commented the Pigeon, awaking from a nap on the pen rack, "It really does look dark when you realize that the younger generation on which you have been banking so heavily are no better and no wiser than their parents!"

The Revolution

Shifting Powers It has become almost a bromide to say that the United States is in the midst of a revolution. The sources of hidden power have been quietly shifting and changing. We look upon life and the world with different vision from that we had ten years ago. Men say—and some of them are those who should know—that we have launched upon new ways never to return to the old ones. We will never be the same again because we have been through experiences that have changed our hearts.

Tories Unregenerate Yet it is apparent to almost any observer that the large majority of the people do not yet believe in it simply because they have not measured the changes in their own beliefs and desires. The transformation of mass will has been so quiet—there has been no usual accompaniment of guns and slaughter—that people do not think there has been any great change. Many are convinced that one of these days we shall awake to find that prosperity has returned, and that the government will abandon all the new measures it has undertaken, and go back to the days of Coolidge and Hoover.

Dragons Dead Christian people of all denominations unite to pray that the old order of things may never return; that we may be delivered forever from that monster, the laissez faire system; that the gross materialism, the rampant greed, the revolting corruption still being uncovered with their roots sunk deep in the thing called prosperity may be forever abandoned. That is something that no thoughtful person, concerned for the welfare of humanity, wants to go back to.

The New Order The philosophy of the new order is that it is the business of a people to regulate its economic life just as it is their business to regulate their political life, their social and cultural life. It is the duty of government to protect the great masses of people, and not primarily to promote the business of money making concerns that thrive by preying upon them. Chaos will no longer do: we need a planned and regulated order in our world and in our nation. Why should any one aspect of our social life be allowed to run wild?

The Church Work Any time within the last hundred years, the church could have furnished the world with a practical working example of what the new social order should be like. But the people were not ready. At a time when great social experiments are under way, we have not yet finished the blueprints of a plan divinely conceived. We are not yet ready; but there is still time in the future to show what the teaching of Jesus, applied to social philosophy, can mean to a misdirected world.

University Education and Priesthood

Concern has often been expressed, perhaps not without justification, in regard to the effect of college and university training in the lives of those who are being depended upon to carry forward the work of the church. We must admit that at times the effects of such training have been negative and harmful. We have always contended, however, that such results do not necessarily follow. It is yet to be proved, for example, that a greater percentage of our young people who have had the advantages of a college and university education have turned aside from the church than of those who have had no such training. At any rate the writer for one finds much of encouragement in the following splendid voluntary statement received at the Presidency's office from one of our young men, a former Graceland student, who is just now completing a course at one of the leading state universities:

"May I assure you again of the following: namely, that my work at the university has been planned with the sole purpose in mind of turning the knowledge acquired there to the service of this church. It is my belief that as I hold fast this purpose God will take and use me in helping to establish his kingdom. I also believe that it would be unwise, while acquiring this academic knowledge, to alienate myself entirely from continued priesthood work, for to do so would undoubtedly result in the cessation of spiritual experiences and growth—this is something no man in the priesthood can afford.

"My desire is to continue to prepare earnestly and prayerfully for the rendition of lasting service in this church. That preparation necessitates my reliance upon three sources: God and his church, the academic institutions of the land, and my own efforts. The last two, without the guiding influence of the Holy Spirit of the first, will not take me far nor in the direction I now desire to travel.

"My desire is still to 'seek first the Kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness.' It is my firm conviction that a discharge of priesthood responsibilities, divinely delineated but voluntarily assumed, is the primary and paramount duty of my life; as it should be in the lives of all others who have taken upon them the mantle.

"In the October 31st issue of the Saints' Herald I wrote: 'Not until we get our priesthood to glimpse the beauty of service can we expect the membership to follow. Without the ordinances the people perish; without a functioning priesthood the ordinances cannot be administered. The path of duty should be plain to all.'

"I feel this deeply and believe I visualize something of that path. My prayer to God is that he will so bless me that 'when duty calls or danger,' I'll not be wanting there."

Surely the future of the church and the work of the priesthood may be safely trusted to such God-fearing, thoroughly trained, unquestionably consecrated young men. The unfinished work of God will move forward and finally triumph. Of this we are certain.

Nursing and Training

The Herald has carried at various times articles concerning the Nurse's Training School at the Sanitarium; and recently we gave space to one on "The Place of the Training School in the Program of the Church." It is hoped that the district and branch authorities, as well as the general ones, will give the Sanitarium such help as it needs in selecting young women for such training. Nursing as a profession has won an honorable and useful place, and it is probable that many of our young women are choosing this profession. In making preparations therefore and studying the subject required it would be well always for our sisters to keep in mind the program of the church and give due thought to the question of how their own work can be made to promote the interests of the church and its program. When they do, their attention will surely be directed to the Sanitarium as a place for their training.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

I WAS INTERESTED to note in a report from John W. Rushton on the European situation what he says about the Nazi Government in Germany and our own work. He says:

"It is evident that so far the Nazi Government has not made any attempt to interfere with us or our work. Some of the newspaper observers of Britain incline to the conclusion that there is much exaggeration regarding the situation in Germany."

In another portion of the report Brother Rushton speaking of Brother Vernon D. Ruch says the latter is busy and has spent some time in Sweden and Denmark where conditions are encouraging, though he feels the need of missionary help for Sweden.

In still another portion of this report Brother Rushton says:

"We are pleased to report that the work in Belfast is being continued by Elder Thomas Taylor whose work in his line is altogether unique. He has put in about six weeks and most of it in open air preaching and argumentation and many thousands of people have heard of the work resulting in several baptisms, all adults. Under my advice the work has been organized so that regular services are being held in one of the rooms of Brother Simms. The Northeast Manchester Branch has generously sent the money to defray the expenses of Brother Murray, the first convert, to attend the coming district reunion. We shall provide for the care of the work there and seek to solidify it before the winter comes."

Speaking of the work in Llanelly he says:

"Brother F. O. Davies has concentrated in Wales where, besides the good work done in Llanelly where now the congregation has a neat little hall in the center of town, he has done considerable visiting among the scattered people. He has also visited Lydney and done effective missionary work in Nuneaton where the reunion of the Midland District was held last month with splendid results."

The foregoing items are encouraging and indicate that the work of Brother Rushton is moving onward.

ANTHONY R. HEWITT, of Chatham, Ontario, writes to tell us that on the third of January, 1934, his father and mother, Brother and Sister William E. Hewitt, of Blenheim, Ontario, will observe their fifty-first wedding day anniversary, and that his mother has been a member of the church for over fifty-five years. We congratulate Brother and Sister Hewitt on their long companionship, and Sister Hewitt on her long years as a faithful Saint.

BROTHER E. R. DAVIS, as president of the Rock Island District reports that in the period from November 1 to December 22 in the interests of "Keep the Law" he visited twenty-two different places, preached twenty-five times on "Keep the Law," besides other sermons and carrying on the activities usual to district presidents, such as administering the sacrament, attending other meetings, business meetings, administering to the sick, blessing children, etc. He also indicates that he sold a number of books such as the Handbook on the Financial Law, Junior Stewardship Record Books, Church School Handbook, Hymnals, Doctrine and Covenants, etc. He was obliged to write many scores of letters, traveled about a thousand miles, and altogether made a record for which he should be commended. We congratulate Brother Davis on his activities.

BROTHER MARCUS H. COOK, writing from Vancouver, Washington, recently says that financial conditions are not encouraging, that many or almost all of the laborers are working only part time and that wages have not been raised in proportion to cost of living. He adds:

"I see that according to the morning paper Dallas, Oregon, is in rebellion against the N. R. A. claiming that it will force them to shut down their mills and throw 263 men out of employment. I wonder what is coming next."

There are many of us wondering what is coming next and we have ceased to be surprised at anything.

Men You Ought to Know

DANIEL T. WILLIAMS
Of the Quorum of Twelve

Though he would be the last to say so, Apostle D. T. Williams has literally made himself by his own efforts. Discipline, industry, and perseverance are words that have meant much in his career.

His outlook on life, his energy and sympathy, have pointed to him as a man for the young people; but he serves no class interests. He serves the church—the whole church—with an integrity and loyalty that have carried him steadily through some big tasks and some trying times.

Helps for Pastors

Requests have come to us to continue the "Helps for Pastors" especially the suggestions for Wednesday evening prayer meetings. In the back of this issue will be found a column devoted to that purpose. We hope to add other suggestions, and if pastors themselves will send in suggestions the column will be made more useful.

If it is true, as the higher religions teach, that the individual can only achieve a good life by conforming to a plan greater than his own, it is our duty to realize the possible magnitude of such a plan, whether it be God's or man's. . . . Man's little world will end. The human mind can already envisage that end. If humanity can enlarge the scope of its will as it has enlarged the reach of its intellect, it will escape that end. If not, the judgment will have gone out against it and man and all his works will perish eternally.—J. B. S. Haldane.

Address requests for rooms to the Housing Committee, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Meals During General Conference

The Laurel Club will serve three meals each day during General Conference at the Auditorium.

The Graceland Broadcast

At the regular six o'clock vesper service, Sunday, February 4, the program will be sponsored by Graceland College. At this hour, Miss Florence Thompson, head of the Department of Speech, will read selections from The Green Pastures. This play portrays the beliefs of the Negro child, as taught him by an old colored preacher who interprets heaven and the after-life in terms of his own everyday experience. With childlike faith and deep spiritual hunger, the old Negro portrays in his own way the book which he worships, but can scarcely read.

February 26 will mark the fifth anniversary of this play as a stage production. During these years it has maintained a phenomenal success, and is now being produced with its original cast in a number of the larger cities of the Middle West.

"The man who hasn't the time to do things that are worth while, is probably doing some things that are not."

Mary Belle's Religion . . . . .

By Leta B. Moriarty

"I want to marry a missionary and go away off and do something great for the church," Mary Belle confided to me early last summer over the tennis net. Her expressive eyes pleaded for understanding. She looked very earnest standing there, her brown hair escaping from her red bandeau, her white dress stained with dust and perspiration. We had been talking about ambitions. Mary Belle is fifteen.

Laugh at her? Most certainly not.

Have you ever sensed the depth of feeling which a group of young girls and boys can put into our hymn?

"It may not be on the mountain's height,
Or over the stormy sea;
It may not be at the battle's front
My Lord will have need of me;
But if by a still, small voice he calls
To paths that I may not know,
I'll answer, dear Lord, with my hand in thine,
I'll go where you want me to go."

The vigor and joy they put into it! They mean it, these young singers. They are ready for adventure, and they would rather adventure for the Lord than anyone else. Can't you hear them come in on the chorus?

"I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
Over mountain, or plain, or sea:
I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord,
I'll be what you want me to be."

Adolescence brings to the boy and girl the growing wonder of religious experience. Usually sometime between the twelfth and eighteenth years the boy or the girl passes over the peak of decision. The church becomes a matter of real consideration. The youth questions himself and others about his soul, the purpose of the church, the efficacy of moral goodness, the admirability of honesty and truth, the world to come, and countless other things. You will remember that it was a young man who came to Jesus and said: "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" (Read Matthew 19: 16-21.)

That is the question of youth: "What shall I do?" "What shall I do?"

The girl at this period dreams of being good and doing good. Her physical and mental faculties are alert. She is openly curious and eager to learn. The spiritual side of her life feels the thrill of newness of things and is open to impressions. Questions press her on every side: "Where did I come from? Why am I here? and Where am I going?"

She listens with eagerness and even devotion to the words of people whom she respects and likes. Seldom do we find a girl in her early teens who is an "unbeliever." It is easy for her to accept and to believe for she is very susceptible to impressions. Her emotions are quickly stirred. A story of sacrifice touches her heart and calls forth a sacrificial response. She prays a great deal over her own problems. Her deepest religious feelings are now ready to be developed. Her spiritual nature is awakening. Indeed someone has said: "The girl at this period is religious in the truest sense of the word."

Religion should be presented to her as a great, challenging, appealing, uplifting, joyous force, a field in which she may give the very best in her. She longs to be noble, truthful, unselfish, honest, and achieving, and yet in some instances, she is none of these—she has not yet made her adjustment; she has not associated her ideals with the way she lives.

But more about Mary Belle. You would like her, I know. She is vivacious, studious, and well liked by her schoolmates and teachers. When she wishes to be a missionary's wife, she is not doing so blindly; she knows a little bit about what she is wishing, for Mary Belle is the daughter of a missionary. She has found it necessary in her short fifteen years to go without many things for which girls long, and yet so great is her love for the church, that she is willing to do without all the lovely clothes which her childish imagination delighted in conjuring up when she had to wear Cousin Susie's cast-off dresses, the comforts of a permanent home, and rear her family on a missionary's uncertain allowance. The time may come when Mary Belle will change her mind, but right now she is dead certain as to what she wants. And now is no time for Mary Belle's leader to laugh at her ambition and blithely assure her: "You'll get over that, dear; you'll grow up like the rest of us, quite willing to stay at home and help a little here and there."

It is at this period of her development that Christ can be made a great and guiding factor in her life. He can be set up as the ever-growing Image of goodness, purity, strength, fortitude. The girl can be led to think of him as a constant Companion, a faithful Helper, a Guide.

Leaders, let us remember:

"Every girl has a quest to make,
For life is the King's Highway;

President F. M. Smith Celebrates Sixtieth Birthday

President Frederick M. Smith passed his sixtieth birthday Sunday, January 21, receiving the good wishes of his many friends in the church.

On Friday the staff of workers in the general church offices at the Auditorium, observed his natal day with one of their well known "birthday dinners" in the library. Twenty-eight were there to make this observance a happy occasion.

Many hundreds of his friends accepted the invitation to attend a birthday reception honoring President Smith on Monday afternoon and evening, at the Dinning Hall, the function sponsored by the Laurel Club. From two to four o'clock in the afternoon and from eight to ten-thirty that night, people came and went greeting the guest of honor. A well executed program of musical numbers and talks together with conversation and the renewing of old friendships made this a happy evening for everyone.

Frederick M. Smith, son of Joseph Smith known as "Our Joseph," and grandson of Joseph Smith the founder of the church, has served as President of the Reorganized Church since May, 1915. He was born at Plano, Illinois January 21, 1874.

Saints of Wales Have Abiding Faith

The scattered Saints in Wales have a deep and abiding interest in the latter-day work according to Elder Fred Davies who sends an encouraging report of his visit in that part of the British Isles to the Southern England and Wales District Herald. Some fine, spiritual meetings were enjoyed at Llanelly.

Eastern Michigan Young People to Organize

At their rally held at Sandusky, January 7, the young people of Eastern Michigan District took up the problem of organizing their forces. Their organization will be effected at the mid-winter conference at Valley Center, February 18.

Plano Girls Enjoy Studio

By Ruth Gregory

The young people of the historic old Stone Church in Plano, Illinois, are endeavoring to do their part in carrying on the work of the church. One of the groups in the Young People's Division is the Zion Builder Class, composed of nineteen girls, ranging from high school age up. Beside their regular class work on Sunday mornings, they meet frequently at the home of the President, Miss Ilah Blakely, where she has an upstairs room equipped as a studio. Here the girls learn several kinds of art work, including picture and placque painting, basket weaving, and paper craft. This winter the girls repaired and painted discarded toys, which were distributed among less fortunate children at Christmas time. The girls make regular visits to the sick, give various functions for the purpose of raising funds, and assist in various lines of service in the branch, several of the girls acting in the capacity of officers and teachers. The Zion Builders are attempting to live up to their name, and be a group of young people who may be depended on by the local and general church authorities.

New Oriole Circles

A new circle has been registered from Houston, Texas. The monitor, Mrs. Crete Arnold, reports a group of seventeen girls, eight of whom are not members of our church but who are delighted with the Oriole program.

Mrs. Howard R. Dodson is monitor of a new Oriole Circle at Bigelow, Missouri.

Five new circles are being organized in Independence, Missouri, and we learn of plans under way at Pittsburg, Kansas, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

What lies beyond the wide expanse of air?

Where is the end of space, and what is there?

When did this earth begin, how long ago?

How started time with its unending flow?

Who dares to say his work on earth is done,

When knowledge of it scarcely has begun?

"See You At Conference"

E. E. CLOSSON

Director of Young People's Division

"Gene" is a strong exponent of the outdoor life and activities, that are becoming so popular these days. He believes that the happiest and most wholesome days are those spent in woods, camp, and under the open sky. "If you want to be good," he says, "keep busy!" And he means good for something. Mere negative goodness is of little worth in his philosophy.

Because he is teaching at Graceland, Gene will be able to spend only a little time at the conference. But he hopes to meet some of the young people while he is here.

Are You Planning to Come?

Are you planning to attend the General Conference? Our "Youth's Forum" wishes to receive the names of young people who are planning to come, either singly or in groups.

Transportation will be one of the hard problems for many who desire to attend. Some ingenious ideas were used by young people getting to the Youth Conference at Lamoni. A note as to the means of travel by those who are coming to the conference will be appreciated.

We hope that "See you at Conference!" will become a slogan, pass-word, or what you will for the next few weeks.

Are you coming? Please let us know.

How poor are they who have only money to give.—John Lancaster Spalding.

Reception for Young People at Conference

The young people of Independence and Kansas City Stake will unite to arrange a reception for visiting young people at the General Conference, on Saturday, April 7, from four to six o'clock. The place will be announced later. It is hoped that all young visitors will make note of this occasion and plan to attend. It will be one of the bright spots of their stay.

Girl Scouts Give Quilt to Sanitarium

Girl Scouts of the Stone Church, Troops 37 and 46, Independence, presented a large quilt which they had pieced and quilted, to the Independence Sanitarium January 13. Quilting was a new experience for these scouts who are mostly sophomores, juniors and seniors in high school, but their work was beautifully done, and the girls are proud of Miss Gertrude Copeland's letter of thanks for their help. This winter the scouts are living their law: "A Girl's Scout's duty is to be useful and to help others," and are giving attention to practical enterprises.

Junior Stewardship

Two hundred eighty-five Junior Stewardship Record Books were sent out in December and the first half of January. At Duluth, Minnesota, a group of ten young people forming the B. Y. D. Club, (Be Ye Doers), have undertaken the keeping of consistent income and expense records as a basis for full compliance with the financial law of the church. Other large orders for Record Books have come recently from Des Moines, Iowa, Kansas City, Kansas, Roxanna, Illinois, San Diego, California, St. Clair, Missouri, Puyallup and Bellingham, Washington, Independence, Missouri, and Alto, Michigan.

Our Privilege and Opportunity for 1934

A Radio Sermon by M. A. McConley

"Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near:

"Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.

"For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord.

"For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.

"For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater;

"So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

"For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands."—Isaiah 55: 6-12.

AE WE ENTER the New Year, let us be grateful for the blessings of the past—for hope, faith, and courage—those eternal virtues which remain in spite of the depreciation of stocks and bonds, the failure of banks, and the shifting values of all material things about us.

We are living in a great age, an age of development of the arts and sciences such as has never before taken place. Probably the greatest progress in the knowledge of the physical sciences, ever made in one century, took place between 1830 and 1930. And in recognition of this fact, the World's Fair at Chicago this last summer was quite rightfully called "The Century of Progress Exposition."

I spent a week at the Fair in September, and was made to realize that this is indeed an age of miracles. The added knowledge of physical law has opened many, many gates hitherto closed to the human mind. Not only have we increased our knowledge of the heavens, until we have added another planet to our known universe, but in the very structure of material itself, the atom has been compelled to divulge its secrets, and we marvel at the laws which govern and control in the very structural make-up of the world.

In communication, we developed during this period, from the slow moving, uncertain, pony express to the radio which makes universal and instantaneous communication possible. Does it not seem wonderful that Admiral Byrd, down in the frozen Antarctic, is listening in to what is transpiring in this part of the world every day?

In transportation, in one hundred years, we evolved from wagons to wings, and it has become only a daylight journey from Kansas City to either the Atlantic Coast or the Pacific Coast.

In manufacture, we grew from the hand forge to the modern factory, where the mass production can be enlarged indefinitely, according to the market available. An likewise, in every field of the physical sciences, almost inconceivable progress has been made.

MYRON A. MCCONLEY
Of the Quorum of Twelve

"Prosperity cannot be restored with a corkscrew!"

BUT IN HUMAN RELATIONSHIPS there has not been a corresponding development. On the contrary, it would seem that the very attention and concentration of mankind on discovering the secrets of the universe and the mastery of its physical laws, has promoted a diversion from the spiritual to material things. And as we examine our nation today, in spite of our boasted civilization and culture, in spite of our schools and our churches—our airplanes and radios and whatnots—we find that spiritual culture has languished; and selfishness, greed, materialistic tendencies have increased; false standards of success have been erected which threaten unless corrected, to wreck the very civilization which has been developed at such cost of human energy and sacrifice.

We must learn anew, that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," that it is what we are, not what we have, that really counts.

The machine age has placed within the hands of man such power as he never before enjoyed. He has subdued the earth, and with that subjugation has had a release from long and arduous toil. For the machine does the work that formerly employed brawn and muscle. Where a man's work was limited to the strength of his back and the skill of his two hands, through the machine, he has often the ability to do the work of thousands.

This means a release from drudgery, and an ability to satisfy our material needs in much shorter time, and with the expenditure of infinitely less energy. And it means leisure time for something else besides "making a living." Shorter hours is the certain decree of the machine for those who labor today.

And this will affect all of us, either directly or indirectly. It will make possible the training and development of the talents, hitherto dormant. And those who shall so choose to use their leisure time, shall develop a culture such as the world has never before seen.

Or, on the other hand, those who shall follow the path of least resistance, who yield to the urge to find pleasure on the physical plane, it will offer opportunity for such a mad rush after pleasure, and such an orgy of dissipation as this world has never known.

AS TO THE PRODUCT of the machine itself, if controlled by unselfish interests, the benefits may be distributed wisely and judiciously, thus making it a great blessing to mankind. But if the machine is to be used as a power to create wealth for a few, if it is used to place one man in power over his fellow men, if selfishness and greed, such as we have been accustomed to see in the business world today, are to direct and control the product of the machine, there will develop, ere many years, such social inequality and dissatisfaction from the abuses which this condition has permitted, as will bring about a social upheaval which will challenge the very ability of constitutional government to survive.

Make no mistake—we are at the "crossroads." What you and I do—the direction we take, will be of far-reaching effect. And the choice once made, we must abide the results.

The country received a jolt this last week by the announcement of our Chief Executive, in his message to Congress, that our national debt is growing at about one billion dollars a month, and that it is the largest ever known in the country's history.

Some have said we were in danger of national bankruptcy. But national bankruptcy is not our greatest danger. Our danger today is that we may become morally bankrupt.

Our nation does not lack in material things, or material wealth. We have had no shortage in our ability to produce the necessities of life. Our factories and machine shops remain intact and the technical knowledge for their efficient operation is not wanting. Our farms and our fields have not ceased to bear bountifully. Our natural resources are far from depleted.

OUR TROUBLE is in the unequal distribution of the product of the machine, the farm and field, the mine. The world today is out of joint not because of a lack of material things, but oftentimes because of their very abundance and their unequal distribution.

So we must go back to the source of control, to the one who made the machine, who governs the production of farm and field, who directs in the utilization of the natural resources of the world—man himself.

I am convinced that the permanent solution of our problem lies not in the juggling of "things." It lies not in the "pegging" of the dollar on the international exchange. It will not be found in the passage of laws regulating the production of our primary products. These are but temporary expedients.

For regardless of laws, systems, and codes—we must have men to carry them out: men who are honest; who have a love of their fellow men in their hearts; men who are sufficiently unselfish that they are willing to practice the golden rule and do unto others as though they were the others; who will spend themselves and make such sacrifices of time, energy, and material things, as the needs of the hour may demand.

We need men with vision and foresight, who have faith in an overruling Providence, and a realization that His laws cannot be trampled underfoot without paying the price. Men who have faith in the fact that right makes right and that in the end truth and justice are the only foundations on which any society can long endure. Men of virtue and dependability, who see the necessity of the home as the enduring unit of church and state, and who are of the moral caliber of which real homes may be builded. Men who have the courage to dare to do new things, to blaze new trails in human relationships, as long as in the doing of those things, the rights of mankind may be safeguarded, and the God-given privilege of individual development insured. Men who have faith in themselves, and also in the fairness and possibility of the development of their fellows. My friends, we need spiritual and social engineers, who will develop within the heart of man himself, the ability to use the great power of the present age for the common good.

One of our poets has put it thus:

"The trouble ain't with statutes, nor with systems, not at all,
It's with humans jest as we air, with their petty ways an'
small;
We could quit our 'ritin' law books, and our regulatin'
rules,
If a different sort o' manhood was the product of our schools.

DANGER

By M. R. Schall

Instructor in Physical Education and Hygiene
Leland Stanford University

DO YOU KNOW that it is dangerous to smoke and drink? Read this: "If any man defile the temple of God, HIM SHALL GOD DESTROY, for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." (1 Corinthians 3: 17.)

God's will concerning the temporal salvation of his Saints may be found in Section 86 of Doctrine and Covenants. Relative to the use of tobacco, it is God's will that man should abstain, for it reads: "Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man." The word of wisdom may not be a command in a strict sense, but it is God's will given for our temporal salvation. Paul says if any man defile the temple of God (the body) him shall God destroy. And let me say right here, he is doing that very thing on every side of us every day we live. I'll attempt to prove this further on.

Now, just a word about alcohol. It seems that this poison is here to remain for quite a spell. It seems that the people of the world want liberality in absolute terms—no restrictions whatever. It seems that these same worldly people are happy to show everybody in general that they can have what they want, when they want it, and where they want it. Alcohol is here with us. It may be purchased in almost any form and in any strength. It is here in the world with us. The United States is now dripping wet, but we don't have to drink the stuff. We did all we could to prevent its wholesale return and lost, but nobody is going to stand over us with a club and make us drink it. Tobacco has always been with us, but I never smoke. Alcohol may be everpresent, but I am not going to drink. Is that your attitude? In my opinion, our job is to teach, preach, and expound to the people that alcohol kills the body, mind, and soul of man. It is here; yes. But I am not going to drink one drop of it. Are you? We cannot prevent the birds from flying over our heads, but we can prevent them from building nests in our hair.

In the word of wisdom we find that strong drinks are not for the belly. There are those whose God is their belly. Who is your God? Do you have any idols in your life from which you need to turn your face away? Perhaps an occasional cigarette, or a small, harmless little "nip" from a bottle? Paul says, "For many walk as the enemies of the cross of Christ; whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly." Notice the phrase, "whose end is destruction." Notice and fear.

I want to repeat again the topic sentence of this sermonette. "If any man defile the temple of God, which temple ye are, him shall God destroy." Very briefly, I am going to give you proof that God is destroying the smoking and drinking members of society. It is a hygienic fact that smoking raises the blood pressure. That is, the pressure of the blood within the elastic arteries is intensified. It is also known that alcohol, the great deceiver that it is, lowers the pressure within the arteries. Furthermore, this treatment causes the arteries to become hardened, thereby losing their normal elasticity. So, the smokers and drinkers force it up and pull it down, force it up and pull it down, until something snaps. Is there any sane person reading this article who thinks that the human body was created to be abused in this manner? Do you think YOU might be the one to escape paying for such folly? Don't deceive yourself; God is not mocked. Paul says that God will destroy those who defile their bodies. Paul may be right. I think he states correctly.

Most people know that the heart and the arteries, when they function normally, are just about life itself. Would you expect your heart and arteries to function at a very high standard of efficiency after subjecting them to the abuse that I have mentioned?

By way of concluding, allow me to quote from Smiley and Gould's Textbook of Hygiene: "Diseases of the heart ranked in 1924-25 in the United States as the leading cause of death."

"If any man defiles the temple of God, him will God destroy."

Before you light your next cigarette, or take another harmless (?) drink, think on these things. GOD DOES DESTROY. It is dangerous to smoke or drink.

In scientific work the imagination must work in harness. But there is no reason why it should not play with the fruits of such work, and it is perhaps only by so doing that one can realize the possibilities which research work is opening up. In the past these results have always taken the public and the politicians completely by surprise. The present disturbed condition of humanity is largely the result of this unpreparedness. If the experience is not to be repeated on a still greater scale it is urgent that the average man should attempt to realize what is happening today in the laboratories.—J. B. S. Haldane.

Quotation Marks

God in the Universe

There is something in the universe which is on the side of decency, honor and good will; something which is urging men on to see the wisdom of replacing greed and cruelty by an orderly and just society; something which increasingly arouses the conscience of the world against war and pushes on toward an organized and peaceful world. That something is God! We live in the day of a new revelation coming to men in terms of these great social goals and ideals.—Albert W. Palmer, in "The Eternal God and the Present Hour," The Christian Century.

The Life of a Surgeon

A few weeks ago I watched one of my colleagues perform a difficult brain operation. There was grave doubt as to whether the patient would recover. Throughout the operation, the surgeon was outwardly calm. But when the strain was over, he was almost in a state of collapse. I had to hold his glass for him while he drank ice water, and later he asked me to drive him home because he was afraid to handle his own car.

People who think that surgeons are cold-blooded creatures are mistaken. The keen realization that a single slip of the knife may mean death to the patient causes great nervous tension. Due to the strain of operating daily under such tension, the life of the surgeon is notoriously short.

To be prepared for such emergencies as well as for the constant strain of the operating room, surgeons train like athletes to keep physically fit. They regulate their diet and their hours of sleep. A majority of them are total abstainers from alcohol. Many avoid the use of tobacco entirely. Some do not even touch coffee or tea. And all are particularly careful to obtain a good night's sleep.—Frederic Damrau, M. D., in Popular Science Monthly.

What is the faith which the church demands? What is the faith for which the New Testament pleads? Fortunately for us we have a definition of it in the first verse of the eleventh chapter of the letter to the Hebrews: "Now, faith is the substance of things hoped for." . . . Christian faith is belief in Jesus Christ. To believe in him is to hope that he is able to do what he says he can do. He says he can save men from their sins. He says that men can follow him and become like him.—Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

Youth and War

Youth knows that war is dangerous. But youth, yearning for adventure, does not know that war is damned silly; that it is the last resort of the fool and the mob, the great chance for the wooden head under the brass hat; that it is the denial of life's beauty and our best code of decency. The younger minds today must decide for themselves whether they think this kind of war, or any other, is worth while for any purpose whatever.

There cannot be a complete abandonment of force until human nature changes more than a little, and until the ideals of civilization are world wide. But we can envisage at least the limitation of armies and fleets to defensive and police purposes, governed by the allegiance of nations to a code of international law. That is the way of advance, and that is the task of a new, youthful leadership for which the best intelligence of the world is waiting.—Sir Philip Gibbs, in "The Way of Escape."

Do the Lazy Live Longer?

The excessive worship of the great god Exercise will seem as weird to our descendants as the excessive piety of our ancestors now seems to some of us. George Jean Nathan quotes the exercise slaves as exclaiming: "Look at the animals; they take a lot of exercise." He himself has made certain researches to determine the truth or falsity of that assertion, and he remarks: "The great majority of animals, as a matter of zoological record, take hardly any exercise at all. Furthermore, the particular species that do go in for exercise are almost always those with the shortest span of life. The tortoise, the laziest creature on earth, enjoys the greatest longevity, two hundred to three hundred years. The elephant, a sluggish fellow, lives from one hundred and fifty to two hundred years. The swan, aristocratically languid, sometimes reaches the one hundred and two-year mark. . . . On the other hand, we find that such devotees of exercise as the dog dies in from ten to fifteen years, the squirrel in from ten to twelve, the hare in from seven to eight, the mouse in from three to four."—Bruce Barton, in Herald Tribune Magazine.

Constructive Work for Advertising

Once upon a time the President of the United States, when he had anything to suggest for the good of the nation, put it in a message and sent it over to Congress. Congress could take it or leave it. There was nothing the President could do about it.

Today the President sits down before the microphone and talks directly to the people. He tells the nation what he wants to do and why, and Congress, spurred by mandates from the people, meekly enacts the legislation the President has asked for.

Thus the art of advertising has been introduced into the art of government.

There is a workable plan for stamping out war by advertising. It was prepared not by an impractical pacifist, but by Bruce Barton, a hard-boiled advertising man. The plan is as sane, as documented, as practical as any ever submitted to a cigarette manufacturer or motor-car magnate. It was published in The American Magazine with examples of the kind of advertising recommended under the title, "Let's Advertise This Hell!" But though disarmament is the greatest single issue before the world today, though war grabs three-fourths of our tax dollar, though every man, woman, and child is concerned and would be benefited, no important newspaper as far as I know gave this important article mention. The newspapers are lukewarm because the public is lukewarm, and the public is lukewarm because it is ignorant. It must be told.

It is simply a matter of changing a world's thinking. Advertising can do that, for that is advertising's job: to combat indifference, create action, achieve a purpose. And because averting war, selling health, and such desirable ends are not the concern of any one industry or group, this advertising must be a public charge and thus may properly become one of the functions of governments.—Earnest Elmo Calkins, in The Rotarian.

The fine arts have a two-fold relation to religion. In the first place they refine and enrich the human spirit, cultivate a sensitiveness to beauty and minister to joy on a level above that of the more obvious and material pleasures; and whatever does that is an ally of religion. And in the second place, they may become, and sometimes do become, means for the expression and stimulation of religious sentiments and furnish the accessories of worship.—Winfred Ernest Garrison in The March of Faith.

Coincidence

LARRY could not help it because she broke her promise to Sallie Ruth. Her first clear thought—it must have been very early the next morning—was to wonder how much she had told concerning her escapade with Bill Heckel. She hoped that in her unconscious state she had told nothing. But she could faintly, very faintly, remember—it seemed a long time ago—talking, crying. Had she told Eldred and Doc where she had been and what she had done? She was afraid that she might have.

Dimly she recalled voices all about her . . . hands lifting her up . . . a horrible dizziness . . . swallowing something hot and rather sweet . . . She couldn't decide what it was, but she was thirsty and so she drank it. Then oblivion. . . .

When she awoke it was six o'clock, and Mrs. Hampton was standing beside the bed. Larry mustered a feeble smile in answer to her friend's question concerning how she felt. Truly she didn't yet know how she felt.

"Then you just go right back to sleep," admonished the good woman. "After last night, you're in no condition to work today. I'll call your office and tell them not to expect you. You must get some rest."

A short time later as Larry, having accepted the ultimatum of staying in bed, was drifting into sleep, Mrs. Hampton again appeared beside her. This time she carried in her hand a cup of tea.

"This will be good for you," she said, "and now you go right back to sleep. Everything will be all right." She did not think it necessary to tell her patient that the tea contained in solution the contents of a sleeping tablet.

Larry was exhausted, and it was with a feeling of great relief and luxury that she went into a long nap.

She was sleeping soundly when Eldred and Doc came upstairs to look at her before the latter went to his office.

"She's a brave little kid!" he commented. "I would like to know exactly how she worked it. Not many girls would have had that much grit."

"Oh, Larry is gritty all right," assented Eldred. "I'm beginning to feel, Doc, as if she were really my own daughter. She has good material in her, and if I had had one—"

"You should have had one like her," the man tenderly replied, putting his arm about her waist, "or rather like Carmen."

"I'm just wondering if Carmen could have done what Larry did last night. Would she have dared? Oh, what a gloriously foolhardy stunt for a girl to there she paused. How shaky she was! Why her hands actually trembled—and her head was so light! She could not seem to manage herself. After a long moment, she gave up the thought of dressing, and burrowed under the covers.

The girl was too tired to review the happenings of last night—or was it last month? There was something about a car and a man with a queer twist to his lips and the smell of tobacco and a dreary street corner. But—she wasn't much interested in them. . . .

WHEN SHE OPENED her eyes again it was almost four o'clock. Eldred Hampton was sitting beside her bed, a piece of sewing in her hands.

"Well you have had a long nap," she greeted Larry's sleepy stare. "I began to think you were going to sleep right on into the night. You should have heard me 'shushing' the Cameron children a bit ago. They were playing in the hall downstairs."

"You're awfully nice," murmured the girl, "and I'll bet I've been a lot of trouble."

"Now just get that right out of your mind. You haven't been any trouble at all," reassuringly. "But you haven't eaten—is there anything you'd like, dear?"

"I am hungry," Larry admitted after grave consideration.

"I'll have some milk toast for you in a few minutes, and do you think you could eat a poached egg?"

"I believe I could manage a hamburger better," soberly, then she laughed at Mrs. Hampton's surprise. "Honestly, Mother Eldred, I feel hollow!"

While Eldred was preparing the food in the kitchen—it was Aunt Annie's afternoon out—Larry slipped into her clothes. When she appeared at the kitchen door, she wore a blue print house dress with a small, tucked, organdy collar and puffed sleeves.

"It's wonderful to see you eat." Eldred Hampton sat across the kitchen table smiling at her, "and you look more like a flower today than a desperado lady taking chances."

"What did I say last night?" the girl wanted to know.

"You didn't say anything at first, just toppled over in your tracks. You were as white as my lilies. Well, we tried to revive you down here on the cot, and then we decided it would be better to get you to bed. You were beginning to come to by the time Doc carried you upstairs. And you kept saying something that sounded like: 'Stay away from Sallie Ruth! Stay away from Sallie Ruth!' Then you mumbled quite a bit, and fin-

How It Began—

Larry Verne has refused to marry Greg Spurgeon in spite of the fact that she loves him, for she fears he will be called to the priesthood, and her early childhood experience makes her revolt against such a thing.

Larry's life becomes enmeshed with the lives of others in the home of Eldred Hampton, who mothers a group of people, young and old, who have no homes of their own.

Tempted to attend a costume ball with Greg, Larry yields, and is horrified by the theft of a valuable heirloom, a bracelet belonging to Eldred Hampton. In a period of repentance, she devotes herself more earnestly to the work of the church.

Trying for a time to associate with Greg on a purely friendly basis, and trying to curb the development of his ardent affection, Larry finds herself failing. Love is too strong for her, and she feels herself being swept off her feet, against her will. It seems that she must either yield, or break with Greg and not see him for a time. She breaks with him, but is very unhappy over it. Greg makes no attempt to see her, much to her disappointment.

Then Larry becomes interested in her friend, Carmen Blaine, and her younger sister, Sallie Ruth. The mother, a frivolous spoiled woman, who was also spoiling Sallie Ruth, has gone on a vacation. Thankful for her absence, Carmen and Larry set about to reconstruct Sallie Ruth's life on more wholesome lines. Bill Heckel is a hangover from Sallie Ruth's gay and dangerous life, and he retains a mysterious hold on her. Larry is determined to break it.

In the last chapter, Larry persuaded Sallie Ruth not to keep a date she had made with Bill Heckel. She dresses in Sallie Ruth's clothes, and in a mood of desperation goes to meet Bill in her place. Playing a hunch, she warns Bill to get out of town, and not to see Sallie Ruth again. The hunch was right, and Bill takes Larry's advice seriously. Larry reaches home and collapses.

do, Doc! I shan't soon forget that white face!"

"Nor I those big eyes."

The sunlight through the east window made the room very light, and Mrs. Hampton gently drew the blind.

"Find out, if you can, just what did happen," Doc squeezed her hand as he turned to go.

The bright noon light was visible through the narrow crack between the window sill and the bottom of the shade when Larry again awoke. No one was about. From below came the clank of dishes and the hum of desultory conversation. The family must be eating. My, but she had slept a long time!

Larry sat up and shoved herself to the edge of the bed, feeling a little guilty at having overslept so far into the day. But ally you said: 'Don't you dare go near Sallie Ruth—you're not worth her little finger!'—"

"Now just wouldn't I?" interjected Larry.

"Well, I sent for Carmen and Sallie Ruth to clear up the mystery, but they didn't help much. When Sallie Ruth recognized her clothes on you, she covered up her face and began to cry, but she vowed she didn't know what you were up to."

"And so," Larry finished, "I spilled the beans after all. You see I promised Sallie Ruth I wouldn't. And it's no wonder she didn't know, because—well, I didn't tell her what I was going to do, for, you see, I wasn't sure."

"Carmen was all for calling a doctor," Mrs. Hampton went on with her story, "but you seemed to be getting better, and I didn't think there was any use—"

"There wasn't," agreed the girl: "I'm such a husky. I'm seldom sick."

"And every time you said anything, Sallie Ruth cried harder than ever, so finally, Doc and Carmen took her downstairs. She told them that she had had a date to meet this Bill Heckel at some out-of-the-way place, but that you had found out about it and made her promise to read to Sister Scott in your place. We all concluded, since you were wearing her clothes, that you had gone in her stead, but we couldn't imagine your purpose."

Larry laid down her fork, propped her face between her hands, her elbows resting on the table, and thoughtfully regarded the woman opposite her. She hesitated, "Well, since about all I did last night was to scare you folks and arouse your curiosity, I think the most graceful thing for me now to do is clear up the mystery. I'll apologize to Sallie Ruth later on." Then she plunged into a recital of the events from the time she left the house in Sallie Ruth's clothes until she returned to faint in the hall.

"Oh, I was plenty excited, but somehow I just trusted that hunch for all it was worth, and I wasn't a bit afraid until everything was over but the shouting. I realize now that it was a very foolish thing for me to do, and I doubt if I would have the nerve to do it again; but—well, I don't believe he'll bother our little girl again! I think I honestly made him believe I was telling the truth and that I did know a lot about him."

"And you," reminded Mrs. Hampton, "are the girl who not three weeks ago said you didn't think there was anything you could do to help Carmen with Sallie Ruth! Larry, Larry, I don't see how you did it! I don't see!" she repeated. "If I'd known you were planning that I wouldn't have had a quiet moment—well, I simply wouldn't have let you."

"I knew you wouldn't," meekly.

Then Mrs. Hampton told her about Greg's call. Hungrily Larry made her repeat all the details—when he called what he said, how he said it. Then she curled up in Doc's chair in the living room and thought about it for a long time. So he had called. What could he want of her now that he had another girl, a pretty blond whom he took to movies? Why couldn't he have called earlier while she was still at the house?

"I wonder if it's time for the paper?" Eldred Hampton laid down her sewing.

"Sit still," commanded Larry jerking herself out of her speculations, "I'll get it for you."

Yes, there it lay in the new grass on the lawn. She unrolled it as she walked slowly back into the house:

ROB KERNEY'S, $5,000
TWO OFFICE MANAGERS ARE KIDNAPED
DOWNTOWN BY THREE MEN IN MOTOR CAR
ON WAY FROM BANK
Henry Merston and William Green Were Returning Payroll to Store.

"Another big robbery," she commented handing the journal to Eldred Hampton.

"What? Dear, dear—another one!" and she began to read, Larry looking over her shoulder:

"Three bandits in a Pontiac sedan kidnaped Henry Merston and William Green, office managers for Kerney's, at 10 o'clock today, while they were taking $5,000 payroll money from the Federal Loan Company to the store. They were kidnaped at 1139 Blackburn Street, amid the bustle of downtown traffic and trade.

"A few minutes later Merston and Green were put out of the bandit car at Seventh and Minnie Streets, and the bandits sped away with the loot."

Further on in the story Larry paused with a half-smothered exclamation. The newspaper account hinted that this robbery might be one of a series which had been committed and for which several arrests had been made in the north part of the city. It was thought "Copper Coope," the underworld name of H. H. Cooper, knew something of these events. But evidence had not yet led to his arrest. Members of his gang under suspicion while police searched for the three bandits were Tony Martini, Ben Brumwitz, and Tom Johnson. Police had learned today that the last named had strangely disappeared sometime last night. The story suggested that this disappearance might lead to important information concerning the hold-up.

"Tom Johnson, Tom Johnson," mumbled Larry, and then burst out: "I wonder if it could be?"

"Be what?" Eldred looked up from her reading.

"If the Tom Johnson mentioned there could be the Mr. Johnson I met, alias Bill Heckel."

"Oh," doubtfully.

"See, it says that this certain Tom Johnson disappeared strangely last night. Mother Eldred, do you suppose it could possibly be, that my hunch was true? That I was really on safe ground about the police being after him, and all that?" Larry was excited. Before Mrs. Hampton could answer, she rushed on: "Maybe that's what he meant when he said: 'I don't know how you come to know all you do, but I sure do thank you!'"

"There might be some connection," Eldred agreed; "we'll have to ask Doc about it. 'Tis odd, isn't it?—a real coincidence."

Gathering

These are grave considerations. We have had far more difficulty in securing the confidence of the Saints than in preaching the word; and, although it may be urged that there ought to be a simultaneous gathering and proselyting, in order to fulfill the rule of law making the observance of certain plans called celestial possible, we cannot yet see how, if this were granted, that it can precede in importance, or obviate the necessity of a complete and thorough purifying of the heart. . . .

The man who depends on the continued reiteration of human intentions and evidences, cannot be safely grounded upon the testimony which God gives to those who are to be his at the day of gathering. He that has received the truth of God as he gives it to the seeker, is at no loss to bear in his heart the pain of separation from the elect gathered, and still find ample trust in God. Such never fail; but like the generous flower which sheds its perfume when bruised, they will continue to show the love of God which is in them, though trials, persecutions, and the languishing away from Zion may be theirs. They are purifying themselves, and could be trusted with the honor of a community; while the loud aspirant for the honors of the elect would betray the trust of a people, stir up contention, tear down what others would build up, and scatter by their acts what by their precepts they would gather. . . .

For our own part we would by far prefer to be a lonely but faithful sentinel upon the walls, a "vedette" upon a distant outpost of Zion unredeemed, than to be an unredeemed and unregenerate citizen of Zion redeemed; for the one would result in sure and ignominious expulsion, while the other must eventuate in a victorious bidding to come home.—Church History, volume 3, pages 523-526.

It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High: to show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night. . . . For thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy work: I will triumph in the works of thy hands. O Lord, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep. —Psalm 92: 1-5.

Persecutions

June 1, [1857]—

Today met the lady who keeps the depository of the British and Foreign Bible Society. She quoted different passages to show me how much more the original Greek and Hebrew contained than does our translation, and oh! how I wish I could read both.

June 19—

My twenty-third birthday—a number of the Saints met and gave me a tea, after which we spent the evening in singing, recitations and talking. I was presented with three or four handkerchiefs and a new silk tie.

June 28—

We took the train for Rochdale where we were to hold camp meeting. Found the meetings placarded as follows. Service to commence morning half past 10; afternoon, half past two; evening, six. Anti-Mormons announced they would hold meetings, same time, same place and sent bellmen around. The meeting opened by congregation, the anti's singing another song. They proposed one-fourth hour each, but we did not agree, so moved our cart away. They followed with their wagon. They would ask question after question, I requested them to ask one at a time and I'd try to answer. I did so till twelve-thirty when we went to dinner. At half past two we were back again and found the anti's had again moved their wagon up against our cart, which I had had removed before dinner. I got down and listened to their speaker, who called us "Traveling cadgers." I thanked him and listened on until being requested to speak to some of the Saints, I went outside and was soon followed by people requesting me to speak. I told them under the present excitement it would be useless. I made off a short distance, when by the hundreds the people followed leaving few to listen to them. They accordingly left off and the mob came, pushed me about, kicked me and finally knocked me down on a heap of stones, but my fall was greatly broken by Elder James Brown who stuck close to me and who also fell attempting to save me. The sisters burst into tears and both Saint and Gentile were fearful they would trample on us and kill us, but the Lord preserved us with no greater inconvenience than this, and a blow on the head with a stone. A rough man came up and asked who had struck me, I told him one of the mob. He faced them and dared them touch me. Brother Bunting came and took my arm and was leading me away, when they came again and tried to crush me, while our protector was thrashing others. The Lord protected me from these, Brother Bunting and others of the elders went back for the cart where they remained in discussion, while several of the other elders and I went down to Bults and held a meeting both of which had to be concluded on account of a severe thunder storm.

July 26—

Went to Lancaster Row today where we were to hold a camp meeting and found things nicely prepared and ascended the cart with Brother Holden and began preaching when the same mob that had broken up the meeting before came again. Finally they agreed to a discussion on the Book of Mormon. Brother Bunting asked me to take notes,

In last week's installment we learned something of the early life and religious experiences of Mark H. Forscutt, one of the most prominent and important personages of the Reorganization.

In these pages from his diaries, illuminated by the comments of his daughter, the past is brought to life once more, and the romantic story of these people made available.

while he answered them. They would not stick to the point, so he made a short reply and then finding it useless to stay we went over to Bolton, where after administering to Sister Haworth, brought nigh unto death, she was instantly healed. We repaired to the meeting room and commenced service at three o'clock and remained until 8 p. m., and such a time as I had never before witnessed; the very room seemed filled with the Holy Ghost. Tongues, interpretations, prophecies, dreams, doctrines all were given, and the sweet calm that pervaded my soul was most beautiful. This was also the testimony of all.

Hears Charles Dickens

July 31—

I went to the Free Trade Hall where Elder Bunting treated me to hearing Charles Dickens read his Christmas Carol.

From the first of September my father's health seemed to be failing—until the twenty-sixth, when he received a letter giving him leave to go home until his health was better. He decided to do this, and on his way visited many of the places in which he had preached. He was warmly received by all the Saints, and his health soon improved.—R. C. F.

December 1—

Affairs in this part are very bad, thousands starving and no work to be had.

December 7—

Received appointment as President over Preston conference to take place the first of January. I humbly pray the Lord to increase his holy spirit upon me that my soul may be filled with light so I may be qualified to discharge the duties of this office.

December 14—

[Manchester] At meeting the house in Oldham was overflowing and a number of strangers were there. I was congratulated on my return in health and strength and all hearts seemed to rejoice.

December 16—

Elder Harris showed me a letter from Joseph Smith, son of Hyrum. He was on Mission to the Sandwich Isles, and had met with poor success as it is a very hard mission. On the eighteenth, I met Samuel B. Smith, son of Samuel H. Smith and nephew of the prophet, enjoyed his company greatly.

His "Catechism"

January 1, 1858—

Went with many of the Saints to Bolton where we attended a festival in the chapel. With Elders Bunting and Browning, I retired to Sister Unsworths, where Sister Elizabeth slept on chairs to give us room. Took train on Sunday, third, for Preston where I was to have charge—found the Saints very kind and glad to see me. Here they had me measured for a new suit of which I am badly in need. Spent the time as usual in all the works of the gospel, meeting its trials and rejoicing with its glorious truth.

February 16—

Shrove Tuesday or Pancake Day—as it was called, I went to Sister Ward's and was taking pancakes, after each bite my mouth was severely rubbed according to custom. After the pancake spree went to the hall and addressed Saints on "tithing."

I find in looking through father's diaries that he has a sort of "catechism" which he propounds to the Saints often. It is as follows:

1. Do you honestly pay one tenth of all your income as tithing unto the Lord?

2. Have you aught against a brother or sister who is held in church fellowship?

3. Do you have family prayers morning and evening?

4. Do you have prayers privately for yourself?

5. Do you observe a fast before the Lord your God?

6. Do you in all things uphold by your faith, prayers and means the servants of God placed in authority over you?

7. Do you attend your meetings when not lawfully detained therefrom?

8. Do you abuse yourself, by being intemperate in anything forbidden by the laws and revelations of the Lord?

9. Are you strictly honest in all your dealings?

10. Do you ever take the name of the Lord in vain?

One evening as he walked over to Blackburn it began to rain very hard, and, having been quite ill and with five miles more to go, he prayed the Lord to stay the rain till his arrival, which He immediately did. Each and every day he preached somewhere and on Friday the twenty-sixth, attended council meeting at the chapel and examined the tithing book and found a decided improvement in receipts. During his pastorate he did much writing for the elders and Saints, especially for them to those who had left for the States. He also took care of the money before turning it to the higher authorities and made several records so that it could be more systematically kept in the different branches, and warned them that the books should be kept and not burned or destroyed as many had been.

April 15—

Attended meetings at Brother Robertson's and preached on "Overcoming the Flesh, World and the Devil" — and showed if we could overcome the flesh, the world and the devil would soon relinquish their hold. Also told them they should not murmur about poverty or circumstances as we must be tried in all things. Seeing they were essential to our perfection.

On the Sunday following Pastor Oliver again preached on tithing and from his remarks gleaned the following. That after this week, no man is to hold the priesthood who does not pay his tithing, and no members be allowed to partake of the sacrament, and if they do not repent and reform are to be cut off the church.

A Letter To His Parents

June 19—

My twenty-fourth birthday, I wrote a letter to my parents of which the following is part—

Dear Father and Mother:

This is my birthday—24 years ago you had an addition to your family who has since been the object of much love, hope, anxiety and despair. Brought up with care and nurtured in love, it is no wonder the love and affection I feel for you both, and I wish to render my heartfelt and sincere thanks for your goodness and love to me.

Although I may be counted an out-cast from my father's family, owing to the peculiar faith I have espoused, rest assured, that, nothing but a sincere regard for truth has led me to embrace the doctrines I so earnestly defend.

Along in July I was taken ill and continued growing worse and worse, and although the ordinance was performed several times, I only received slight relief. I grew so ill that there was no hope and they were to send word to my parents, when to all appearances I passed away. Arrangements were made to bury me and they had sent word around the district. Among others that came, were Brother and Sister Unsworth and Elizabeth of Bolton. Just as they were meeting for the funeral, a slight movement was noticed and I was laid on the bed where life came back, and gradually grew well. During this time I left my body and could see it lying helpless, lifeless. I passed to the other world accompanied by an angelic person who led me through the beautiful city of lovely homes, and stopping before one, we entered. It was most beautiful and I exclaimed at its loveliness. I was told that this was to be my home if I were faithful and my heart swelled with joy. We came out, when he said, come Mark—I followed and he led me where I could see all over the city, then he brought me outside and down to where I could see my body and those who had gathered to mourn. When I found I must go back, I asked him why? "Your work is not done, and you have only begun to earn that home." God help me to do my duty.

Arrived in Liverpool on August 28th, and there met President Whittall and Brother Tullidge, associate editors of the Star. They gave me some instructions as to writing articles for which I was very thankful. Having received a request, I wrote an article on Priesthood vs. Priesthood, which was for the next Star. Friday, December 31, I went to Birmingham to attend conference. This closed the year 1858, during which time I have traveled and labored to the best of my ability in the cause of Christ and his work. I pray God that I may be better fitted and do more for his glorious cause. In this conference I was appointed to labor as President of the Wiltshire district. Presided over the Wiltshire conference during 1859, and until released in spring of 1860 to emigrate to Utah.

In February I left Bath to visit my relatives to bid them adieu and also to visit Elizabeth Unsworth whose consent as well as that of her parents I received to our marriage, prior to emigration. Returned to Bath where I spent a few days with the Saints and then to Liverpool to make all arrangements. Returned to Bolton Saturday a. m., and on the following morning, March 25, 1860, was wedded at the register office, Bolton to the dear lady of my choice. Again at night was married by Elder Jacob Gates according to ritual contained in the Doctrine and Covenants and left later for Liverpool.

Up to this time he had travelled 10,832 miles, of which he walked 7,986½ miles.

Leaves for America

Tuesday, March 27—

Sailed on board the Underwriter. Enjoyed our trip very much; arrived in New York, May 1, thirty days sail over the ocean.

America—

Left for Albany on the Steamer New World, up the beautiful Hudson. Arrived in Albany next day.

A Warning

The rest of the way was made partly on cars and partly by boat until arriving at Florence, Nebraska. The next morning Brother Holt came over from Omaha, and asked if there were any Saints from Bolton there. They told him mamma was there, so he called her out. Asked her, "Was there anyone else from there?" She said, "Yes, Amelia Rothwell." "Well, get your clothes and come on over and see mother and wash them." The girls delightedly did so, and loaded clothes into his cart and then got in themselves. Hardly had they left the camp ere Brother Holt said, "Well, girls, I preached 'Mormonism' in Bolton for many, many years and now I'll tell you what it is in Utah." He and his wife did so and the girls knowing his integrity believed and would have gone no farther, but Papa could not be convinced and thought Brother Holt a disgruntled old man, so as mamma said, "What was a bride to do, except obey her husband?"

The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. Corrupt are they, and have done abominable iniquity: there is none that doeth good. God looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, that did seek God.—Psalm 53: 1, 2.

What of the Future Citizen?

By C. J. Lant

IN A RECENT EDITION of the News-Press I read an article about the youth of the future, since child labor has been abolished, and I cannot help recording a few thoughts that come to mind. It is true that many injustices have been imposed upon children in the past, both by ignorant parents as well as by sweat shop operators.

Although children have been worked too hard in the past, it is a mistake to excuse them from all responsibility. Parents should require them to accept certain tasks in the home and see that they perform them, until the habit of work becomes thoroughly implanted within them. Habits of industry and thrift will make them more self-reliant and stable as men and women. In Germany, and no doubt in other countries as well, the kindergarten children are allowed the freedom of great play rooms where, when left alone, they select the toys most suitable to their tastes and inclinations, and thus indicate at an early age what their future professional capacities may be.

It is also a mistake in the choice of a profession for the young people, for parents to attempt to force their minds into channels that in after life prove to be unnatural or wrong. Frequently a mother wants little John to be a doctor and Johnny knows very well that he wants to be an aviator, a plumber, or something else. If youngsters were allowed to follow their own aptitudes there would not be so many misfit plumbers and doctors in the world. Professions and trades are crowded with incompetent workmen because parents in unwise pride force children into occupations for which they were not intended.

NATURAL INCLINATIONS will lead most of us, and we usually follow them whenever we have the chance, even though they sometimes seem to lead along the line of least resistance. Yet how many times are children called from something that is very interesting, and forced to go to school and take up studies that are distasteful to them, while all the time their minds are torn by the desire to be back at the thing they were called from. As a consequence they become laggards in school and are considered dullards and given poor grades. On the other hand, if they are given the fullest cooperation in going ahead with what they prefer to do, they will find something that will later become their work, and they will enjoy greater success and happiness in life.

We are all aware of the increasing mental alertness of average young children, which is due possibly to the opportunity the child of today has in the kindergarten, under the supervision of teachers who are better equipped to lead the juvenile mind than the average mother, and who give the child a better outlook on life than they are likely to receive from their teaching at home.

In some cases when parents see their children gaining more knowledge than they themselves have they become jealous and cynical against the teachers and educators, and young John or Mary is deprived of the advantage of that unity that should exist between the home and the school. Young minds need the opportunity to seek that higher learning and be able to prepare for life without being ground between conflicting powers.

DURING my own childhood the youngsters in our family all had to do their share of the necessary work around the house or else they didn't eat; and as I look back over that part of my life I know that I was never required to do anything that would injure my health in any way, or that would put too much of a strain on my body. Ours was indeed a cosmopolitan neighborhood, and though many were poor in this world's goods, they were wealthy in another way, for they worked for a living. We all grew up together in a perfectly normal way, with so much time allotted to play, school, and work; and during our play periods we exchanged ideas as to our future and what we wanted to be when we should become men and women. Some wanted to be one thing and some another, but I often wonder, how many ever did what they wanted to do. I can still hear some of the shrill piercing voices of those mothers, as they called their Willies and Johnnies when the lads were right in the midst of inventing a new something-or-other.

I saw boys sixteen years of age in the fourth grade because they had to work a portion of the school term in order to help pay off the mortgage on the home. Later they would leave school altogether because father or mother, or possibly both, had died in the struggle of trying to keep families together, and I have seen the older of these boys, sometimes in their teens, boldly step out to become the heads of the families with all its responsibilities. They took hold where the father had left off, determined that the rest of the children should finish their schooling, and continue the work until the last one had been graduated, from high school at least. Then I have seen some of those who had completed school spend their rest of their days as "soda jerkers" or "counter jumpers" in restaurants, at perhaps $3.50 a week.

And one that I have in mind at present, after he had finished his job of rearing the family, entered the Navy with an eighth grade education, took up the work in the hospital corps during the World War, and after sixteen years of service earned his M. D.

We children used to gather under a street corner light in the evening and when the gang was all there we'd plan our futures. Some longed to go to Kansas to the harvest fields to become big farmers, others wanted to become sailors and sail the seas, and others wanted to become mechanics, doctors, lawyers, etc. I wonder how many of them ever did what they intended to do.

An old baker in the neighborhood won the hearts of the children with his generous gifts of cookies and other good things to eat—always accompanied with good advice. We used to ask him about his old home in "Chermany" and he would smile and chuckle to himself and laughingly say, "Ach! vat a vonderful place it iss!" Then we would ask him what we should be when we grew up, and he would simply smile and say, "Vell, now dot you ask me, No matter vot you choose to be, mine son, be a goot von." As a baker, "he vas a goot von," for he was loved in that community because many a family was relieved of want for food through his donations. And he sang the louder as he gave them.

Some of those boys became carpenters, bakers, butchers, and coal miners, even doctors and lawyers; but I wonder how much better men they might have been, both morally and intellectually, if mothers had not been yelling at them from the house tops every fifteen minutes, in order to see if the boy with the sticky front was playing with that terrible boy across the alley, who was always wasting his time making kites or getting his mother's flour for paste; while the mother wanted her son to be somebody like So-and-so's angel, who wound up as press agent for a circus.

I think that John became a railroader because he preferred to be one, and did not see any disgrace in honest toil for honest gain.

TOO MANY PEOPLE have the wrong conception of discipline. They think that they must be like the "hard-boiled" sergeant, always giving someone a "bawling-out." They do not know that an instructor, as in the Marines, must teach his men and not abuse them.

While the church is making progress in things to be done for the girls, is it reasonable to neglect the boys? We have a real chance to do something for the youth of the church, but if we wait too long we may lose the opportunity, and some other church or organization will be taking the lead.

There is something great in calling able men to a work of this scope and importance. And there is something great in training the boys to be soldiers trained to live right, but not to kill.

It is not for lack of money that this work is held up. The service that it requires is not to be bought for money. The volunteer spirit of men and boys is beyond price. When shall we begin our real work of building the army of the Lord?

OUR PRIVILEGE AND OPPORTUNITY FOR 1934

For the things that we are needin', ain't more 'ritin' with a pen,
Or bigger guns to shoot with, but a bigger type o' men."

And in the development of that "bigger type o' men," I am particularly interested and to its accomplishment the energy, talent and resources of this church are dedicated. Nothing is a safer investment, and nothing bears such rich and certain dividends as do time and money spent in developing the manpower of the land.

Spiritual men are not developed by education alone. Nor can they be produced by federal or state enactment. They must grow and be developed in harmony with divine law. For this purpose Jesus Christ came into the world, and for this intent the gospel is again preached in power, with all the divine promises of reward by obedience thereto.

AMERICA needs to renew her contact with her God, and through that contact have her ideals corrected, her goals revised from material to spiritual things. America needs to get down on her knees and repent of her sins.

Christ is still "the light of the world." Never did his influence mean more, nor was his example more in order. In a frantic effort to stem the tide of a so-called economic depression, Godly standards have almost been forgotten, principle has often been thrown into the discard. And in the effort to balance our budget and restore our economic security, we have resorted to many questionable expedients.

Congress estimates that a tax of $2 a gallon on hard liquors and $5 a barrel on beer will bring in immense returns. They think that such a tax on hard liquors alone will yield an annual income of three hundred million dollars, which means a consumption of one hundred fifty million gallons.

The attitude of many of our government and social leaders is such as to encourage the use of these beverages, which in spite of their so-called popularity, still rob man of his reason, excite his animal passions, and make him unsafe for the machine age. One might almost imagine, at the trends times have taken, that the brewers are going to be the saviors of their country.

Noting these trends we recall a question propounded by Christ, "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul. Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" And we are prone to ask, What shall it profit America, if she does balance her budget by selling her soul? And what shall America give in exchange for her soul?

Many good people have thought that the cause of our depression was the Eighteenth Amendment and that with its repeal, prosperity would immediately return.

My friends, I believe that the Eighteenth Amendment was related to the depression, but not in the way which our friends have thought. The lack of observance to keep the Eighteenth Amendment, which was so woefully manifest, was evidence that America did not wish to be true to herself, even after she passed the law. She lacked the moral courage and the intestinal fortitude to live up to the "noble experiment." And it is this lack of moral courage and righteousness thus manifest, which is back of our depression. The causes are spiritual, not material. Prosperity cannot be restored with a corkscrew. If ever there was a time when we needed to have sober minds and clear thinking, that time is now.

THE RECENT FLOODS in Southern California and other parts of the Pacific Coast have been very destructive and have cost millions of dollars. But, my friends, the flood of liquor and tobacco, the tide of immorality, the mad rush for questionable amusements, which is engulfing our nation today are definitely more dangerous and costly. They threaten the peace of every home and the virtue of our young men and our young women. The safety of every driver on the road as well as that of the humble pedestrian is threatened by the reckless irresponsibility of drink-crazed brains who in ever-increasing numbers are sitting at the steering wheels of high powered cars.

Young men and women, conditions today challenge the strength of your manhood and womanhood. Every drop of red blood in your body is challenged. Your courage and your vigor are needed. First to set up right standards for yourself, and then to enlist with the church of the living God, where you will find other thousands who are desirous of riding our fair land of these evils, and who are giving of their best talent to this end.

You men and women of middle age, and older, where do you stand? Are you asleep at the switch? Are you blind to impending consequences? Are you inactive in this hour of your country's great need?

You, young and old, the call of the church is to renewed activity in fighting the thousand evils that stalk abroad and would ruin the happiness and peace of our great nation. Enlist under the banner of King Emmanuel and find the thrill that comes from standing for the right, from being true to your convictions; the thrill that comes from a knowledge that you are working with God in the building of a better world.

My friends, as one of middle age, it is my duty and yours to help youth discover God, to discover the real Christ; to understand life's meanings, its values, its purpose. It is our privilege to help them learn the abiding laws of life, the source of true happiness.

Let us in our own lives reveal to youth the beauty of virtue, the intelligence of decency, the attractiveness of clean living, the glory of achievement.

Perhaps you are a parent. Think of what that boy or girl means to you. Then, realizing that the evils of the present situation will ruin thousands of boys and girls—the pride of some mother's heart—ask yourself the question, What are we going to do about it?

It is time for the thinking people of America to realize the dangers of the situation and to unite as one man in the building of a world patterned on truly Christian lines. Let those who have named the name of Christ awaken and revise their standards, their habits, their customs, to those that can be indorsed and approved by their God.

Let us get down on our knees and ask God to forgive us for the sins of omission and commission of the past. And let us resolve that with God's help we will rid this fair land of its abominations and rottenness.

We do not wish to leave you with a wrong impression of the total picture. For not only are the organized forces of evil at work, but the organized forces of righteousness are working too. Their numbers, however, are all too small. But we thank God this morning for the many active, faithful, consecrated Christians whose life's energy is being expended in trying to build a better world.

I can say from my own experience, that God is indeed at work today. And if you will do your part, God will always do his. He is still a God of love and mercy, and also a God of power. The same power that controls the universe around us, that brought this creation into being, is inviting us to arise in the majesty of our creation and cooperate with Him for the salvation of ourselves and the world.

Of this the Master says, "All power is given unto me, in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

We may enjoy that power today. Under its urge, with it to assist us, we can rise above the sins of convenience by which we are surrounded and we can become real men and women. We may not be able to pay our taxes. Some of us may even be unable to square up with our grocer. We may not be able to meet the interest on that mortgage that is coming due. This is indeed a shame and a disgrace in a nation with such tremendous resources and such enlightenment as ours. But one thing you can do, and that is keep square with God. You still have the price to secure his Divine favor and to purchase the strength which His presence commands, and the vision which the possession of His Spirit affords. The price is within the reach of all. It is stable, fixed—it never changes. There are no favorites or complimentary tickets.

That price is obedience to His law.

It takes moral courage, it requires humility to acknowledge our faults and our weaknesses. It takes faith to accept God at his word, and move out in obedience thereto. But, my friends, it can be done, and it is definitely worth the effort. It is already being done by thousands, and it will continue to be done in increasing numbers in every land under heaven where the gospel is being proclaimed.

Where do you stand? Are you on the Lord's side? If so, get to work, more diligently, more zealously than ever before and be assured of final victory to the cause of right.

But if you have never named the name of Christ, now is a good time, at the beginning of this New Year to make that start. Begin today. Get right with yourself and with your God. Join hands with others of like mind and purpose and let us put on an aggressive campaign for righteousness that shall make America a cleaner and safer land in which to live.

True Beauty

Beautiful hands are those that do Work that is earnest and brave and true
Moment by moment the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go
On kindest ministries to and fro,
Down lowliest way, if God wills it so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear
Ceaseless burdens of homely care,
With patient grace and daily prayer.

Beautiful lives are those that bless—
Silent rivers of happiness,
Whose hidden fountains but few may guess.

Causes of War

(A topic discussed by Howard K. Williams, in Young People's Leader.)

MOST, if not all wars, are economic in origin and purpose—to gain new territory and economic concessions, to open up new markets for home products in other countries, to protect foreign investments. Innumerable wars have been fought for these things. People have been hoodwinked by talks of patriotism, of national safety, of protecting one's home and loved ones. Soap-box orators have waxed eloquent on our righteous causes for war; but pare it down, and you will come to money, more often than to any other thing. If nobody expected profit from war, there would be no war.

One writer shows that today the United States as well as other nations is tied up in this economic mesh as never before.

"The United States is also entangled in world finance by the debts, aggregating ten or eleven billion dollars, owed by foreign nations. Furthermore, American investors now have very large holdings of European bonds—national, municipal and industrial. American corporations are also securing valuable mining rights and other concessions throughout the earth."

It is going to take some clear thinking to keep us out of war and to show people generally that all this heartache and death and moral corruption of war, come because men love money rather than God.

If we can get enough young people of all nations to refuse to be hoodwinked any longer in this matter of war; if the glamour can be rubbed off and war can be seen as the hideous thing it really is, by the youth of all nations; then tomorrow will see the old war lords safely dead and gone, and economic problems solved in conferences of peace.

ATTITUDES TOWARD WAR PREVENTION

"We hold that the government of the United States should adopt and declare the policy that, when its citizens go abroad to engage in business, or when they invest capital in foreign enterprises, they are expected to abide by the laws of the country in which they are doing business, and to assume any risks involved; and that, while it will seek to safeguard their persons and property by pacific means, it will not intervene with armed force on their behalf."—The Churches and World Peace.

"We hold that the churches of Jesus Christ should be a mighty dynamic in abolishing war. War denies the fatherhood of God, scorns the brotherhood of man, mocks the sacredness of human life, is merciless to helpless women and children, uses falsehood, ignores justice, releases the passions, and cultivates hate. War means everything that Jesus did not mean, and means nothing that he did mean."—The Churches and World Peace.

"The achievement of enduring peace is the most urgent of our time. In reaching this goal the churches of the United States have a vital part to take."—The Churches and World Peace.

"Adult education for peace for all ages is made difficult by the fact that interwoven with the whole fabric of our cultural heritage—religion, history, literature, drama, art, and patriotism—are the ideals and glories of war. Adult education, however, is necessary, owing to the fact that the creation of right attitudes in children is dependent upon right attitudes on the part of the adults, and these attitudes can be secured only through the reeducation of adults. Some of those attitudes which need to be changed are: a selfish and narrow nationalism, coupled with a fear of other nations, resulting in a popular feeling that human nature cannot be changed; and a feeling of racial and religious superiority.

"We are convinced that these attitudes are best changed through approaching the whole subject with assurance that peace is possible, rather than that war is inevitable, and that the importance of definite information, properly emotionalized, is the most effective means for changing the adult mind."—The Churches and World Peace.

Florence Tracey Is Also Guessing

I enjoy the Pigeonhole. I read it first. The editorials are always good. I enjoy Quotation Marks, Question Time, News Briefs, and most of the articles. Congratulations to Florence Tracey. She is a splendid writer. Both articles and stories are quite different in treatment—not in the narrative only but in the thoughts between the lines. Since last June, there is no doubt in my mind about the real Florence Tracey.

I have showed the article on Poe's Raven to several English teachers in my school. All of them like the interpretation.

I eagerly scan the questions and then read the answers in Question Time. I consider that an important page.

The Herald is an excellent publication in content, arrangement, and printing.

"Otherwise"

This word has agitated my mind for years, and I could not see it as others saw it. I spent seven years in the Utah mission. My! how they would orate on "otherwise"! It made me wish many times that Jacob had quit when he got through on that awful thought of polygamy. ("Jacob, why didn't you stop when you got through?") Sometimes our extremity is God's opportunity. I believe that God will often open our understanding so that we can comprehend the Scriptures. To my satisfaction, I once had such an experience. Here it is:

I was in Malad, Idaho, holding a series of meetings, and Brother J. W. Rushton happened along. I stood up in the wagon as usual. I was to talk first and get the crowd and let him finish up. We had a large audience.

When I was about to introduce him, such a situation had developed that he thought it best for me to continue, since I had spoken on the argument around the word "otherwise." I will never forget that evening. To me it was a wonderful and glorious experience. Jacob did quit when he got through; I did not know it then, but I do now. I am glad now as I write these lines, for how gracious God was to me at that time. In one place the Book of Mormon says, "God has made us mighty in talking but not in writing." This is my lot in life too.

I read a part of the second chapter of Jacob until I came to "otherwise." Then my understanding was opened and I saw it in its true light. Jacob was talking to a lot of polygamous Nephites, and I was talking to a lot of polygamous Mormons. Jacob was giving them the oral word of the Lord. Here it is as he said it: "Hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me, thus saith the Lord of hosts. Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of hosts, or cursed be the land for their sakes." Still using the oral word of the Lord to that bunch of polygamists, hear him: "For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people:" Here, the oral word stops, and that "otherwise" comes in. Jacob had before him the plates of Lehi, so Jacob stopped with the oral word and referred to the written word which he had before him. "Otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things." He had his finger on the plates of Lehi, so if you do not believe the oral word which I am giving you, there, believe the words written by Lehi.

Now read verse 44 Revised Edition, also verse 55, and Second Nephi 6: 56; Mosiah 1: 79.

We Must Have Zion Homes

I realize more acutely than ever our great need of zionic homes in the church. For a number of years I have tried to do my duty as an active branch member, but I can see that is not enough. I believe it is the duty of every mother to make the zionic plan of home a reality instead of just a thought or a dream.

We mothers must not only mold our own lives to fit the saintly pattern, but those of our children as well, for it is on the children of today that the church of tomorrow must depend. Only by zionic influences in our homes will our children be prepared for their responsibilities. I feel that we mothers should build up our mental powers and train ourselves so as to be able to guide and lead our children.

Much can be accomplished by the church school, but can a teacher in the school do in thirty minutes of study with a group of children what often takes hours or even days in the home? How much easier it would be and more interesting, too, if the parents in the home would cooperate with the church school teacher by taking half an hour an evening to study the Sunday school lesson with the child.

By so doing the parents would improve their own minds and understandings, and encourage the child always to go to Sunday school with a prepared lesson. I don't believe there is anything quite so discouraging to the teacher as children coming Sunday after Sunday with unprepared lessons or an I-don't-care attitude. "My child doesn't learn a thing at Sunday school," some mothers say. Who is at fault, the teacher or the mother? I sincerely believe that if the seed of truth were sown in the home to brighten the minds of the child and interest him in the gospel and church teaching, more progress would be enjoyed by all.

A MOTHER AND FORMER SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER.

Child Recounts Blessings

I am twelve years old and have been a member of this church for four years. I like to go to Sunday school and church, but now we cannot go. I like to read the letters in the Herald, and also the stories.

One time my mother and father went to church, and I stayed home with my grandmother who was sick. While they were gone, a bad storm came up, and I was afraid, and so we asked God to protect us, then my grandmother and I went to sleep and were not afraid.

At different times I have been sick and my father has administered to me, and the Lord has healed me. I appreciate these blessings and want to be a good girl and learn music and prepare to be a helper in the church.

Don't Forget a Word of Appreciation

The campaign for renewed vigor in New York District last fall took the form of rallies held in the various branches, carefully planned and carried out by the district president, Doctor P. L. Weegar, and his counselors, assisted in several places by District Missionary William I. Fligg.

Doctor Weegar did not miss Sherrill, New York, even though the weather was bad on November 12. The program was helpful throughout and the Saints should have been strengthened.

I sometimes wonder if we do not take too much for granted in the service rendered us by those who make it a labor of love. I wonder if we do not forget the expression of appreciation whether it be in district or branch work. It must be rather thrilling to have Saints seem really appreciative after one has neglected his personal business and given his time to help the members grow and develop. For several week-ends our district president was off on district business as must be the case to cover and care for this large area. Saints, let us think of this point more and not let a man leave us without a word of appreciation.

Would Be a Better Builder

We are very much concerned about our work. Through the past year the Lord has been good to us, and during the coming twelve months we hope to build better and work harder for Him. The "Keep the Law" period aroused new interest in some of our Michigan members. Many have filed their inventories. And while the sum of money actually paid to the church may not be large, we are encouraged by the fact that this experience will be a blessing to all concerned.

As conditions improve with labor, we note a tendency to impart more freely of our substance to the Lord. This we are trying to encourage, realizing that greater spiritual power will be enjoyed by a people having the spirit of giving.

Our branch at Wells is not very large, but we find no time to be idle. We enjoy our work. We have our trials, but the blessings we enjoy cause us to feel ashamed sometimes that we consider our difficulties trials.

The many good articles and letters appearing in the Herald are a feast to hungry souls. May rich blessings come to all who help to make the Herald interesting to its many readers.

Gospel Is Glorious to Her

I became a member of the church in 1866, with my husband and mother, at Malad, Idaho. A few years later, we moved to Saint Joseph, Missouri. While there, I received many blessings of healings under the power of God. My husband, a great reader, was a strong defender of the gospel. We received untold joy from the church services. Being early pioneers in Idaho, it was our lot to suffer many hardships. In 1907, my husband died at Arco, Idaho.

The gospel is glorious to me, and I desire to live faithful until the end. I am requesting the prayers of the Saints for my son, Walter L. Jones, of Boise, Idaho, who underwent a serious operation, January 1.

We Are Rich

We have been members of the church for over thirty years. When first baptized, we were not entirely conscious of all the true riches or gifts that are in store for the children of God. We were converted that this was a church with a divinely appointed ministry and that there was communion between heaven and earth. We had a deep desire to live a Christian life, and keep the commandments of the Savior. At that time, we were not concerned about the three standard books of the church, but today, they are a strong link in our knowledge of the divinity of the gospel.

Some time ago, I had what seemed to me, a rich experience. In our Bible reading, Revelation 2: 9, we read, "I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich)" and as we read this, it impressed me. The next morning our daughter sprained her ankle, which had been hurt once before. We placed it in warm water, then bathed it with warm olive oil and instantly the pain was relieved, and she was able to walk on it in a short time. The truth of that statement bore witness to our spirits that we are rich. We were in possession of riches untold.

We feel to say with Apostle Paul, "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." (1 Thessalonians 1: 5.)

We are indeed thankful for the gifts and blessings of the gospel and hope that as years go by, we may put on the whole armor of God, having our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, taking the shield of faith and the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God.

Would Cheer Isolated Ones

Since I was a dozen years old, I have known that this is the true church of God. I wish to bear my testimony to its divinity that I might cheer isolated ones.

When twelve years of age I was baptized, and during a missionary visit to our home of Brothers I. N. Roberts and George Hide, I was given a testimony of the divinity of the church.

Many times I have wandered in paths of misdoing and sin, and I know that there are trials waiting for all of us in the future, but God has promised to be with those who trust him. My prayer is that he will help me to live so that those about me will benefit by my faithfulness and understanding.

Saints, arise and let us put on the whole armor of God. CALDWELL, TEXAS.

MRS. S. F. SHERRILL.

Request Prayers

Members of New Philadelphia, Ohio, desire the prayers of the Saints in behalf of Brother Edwin Robson who has been seriously ill. He is a teacher in the branch and has been a faithful member for many years.

Sister Lola B. McCray, of Eldorado Springs, Missouri, requests prayers in behalf of her daughter, Sister Loretta Sparks, who is ill with tuberculosis in the sanatorium at Mount Vernon, Missouri, that she may be restored to health.

Sister Ruth Hayes, of Lake Julia Sanatorium, Puposky, Minnesota, asks the Saints to pray that she may be given strength to overcome temptation.

QUESTION TIME

What is the "meridian of time" mentioned in Genesis 6: 60, 65, and 7: 53?

From the fact that the meaning of the term meridian is noonday or high point, as well as the explanations made in the texts cited concerning the shedding of the "blood of the righteous," the language evidently refers to the coming of Christ at the time of his great sacrifice. In the last named text, which is in the Inspired Version only, Enoch is represented as asking a question which was answered in the words following. The words are as follows:

"When shall the blood of the righteous be shed, that all they that mourn may be sanctified, and have eternal life? And the Lord said, It shall be in the meridian of time; in the days of wickedness and vengeance."—Genesis 7: 52, 53.

The next verse states that Enoch saw "the day of the coming of the Son of Man, even in the flesh," and that he exclaimed: "The righteous is lifted up; and the Lamb is slain from the foundation of the world"; which shows that he referred to the so-called first coming of Christ. The days of "wickedness and vengeance" were probably those in which thousands of Christians were slaughtered in the time of Nero and others of that period.

This language follows the word which declares that it was the will of the Lord that "an house should be built" in the land of Zion. The promise was given that if the Lord's people build the house unto him and do not suffer any unclean thing to come into it, his glory should rest upon it and his presence, and the pure in heart who come into it should see God. The term unclean thing probably refers to unclean human beings in a moral or spiritual sense. It was a warning that if unrighteous people should be permitted to enter it, the Lord would not come into it or his glory be there.

Some have thought this was applicable to the Kirtland Temple, inasmuch as the Saints experienced an endowment there. But while it is doubtless true that the principle would be the same as to the sanctity of the people and the temple, yet this promise was made expressly concerning the temple to be built in Zion, and the context shows that it was in that particular place that the promises were to be fulfilled. This revelation was given in August, 1833, or a little more than a hundred years ago, hence its fulfillment appears yet in the future, as no such house as was there contemplated has as yet been built.

Does 2 John 10, 11 mean that we should not bid members of other churches Godspeed?

In many of the scriptural texts statements which are worded more or less as though independent of their contexts are really intended to imply the conditions which had previously been referred to as the basis of such statements. This is also true in the text cited by the questioner. John had just warned the saints of deceivers who had come among them, to whom he refers by implication as those who transgress and abide not in the doctrine of Christ. They evidently were active in attempting to promote their heresies among the saints, hence John says:

"If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him Godspeed."—2 John 10.

The term receive him not needs some explanation. The Greek word is lambanō, which is used only as an alternate. In this text it implies accepting one to succeed another: in other words, to accept one with a false doctrine, indicating the favoring of error offered by another, or to give place to deceptive and false doctrine. To bid such Godspeed (success) would be to wish success to error, which John warns against doing.

The text does not refer to ordinary cases of courtesy and Christian kindness to others, which should be shown regardless of their creed, but to the supporting of false teachings in the manner stated. To wish one well as a friend or acquaintance would not be in violation of this text, even if his belief were faulty. But to wish him success in his false mission, if he were seeking converts, would be to partake of "his evil deeds." Members of other churches are not usually to be considered as false teachers, but as acquaintances, but if one should wish them Godspeed as false teachers, the text would apply.

New Philadelphia, Ohio

Active in Local Church Program

Elder John D. Carlisle was again chosen president of the branch at the recent annual business meeting. All other officers were reelected except Wayne Thomas who was chosen as chorister to succeed Samuel Mansell, and Mary Cramer as pianist, Richard Watkins will superintend the church school; Ada Stein will lead the women's department, and Elder William Goudy will act as young people's advisor.

Church programs are prepared each month, the members of the priesthood taking active part. Attendance at all meetings has been satisfactory.

Church programs are prepared each month, the members of the priesthood taking active part. Attendance at all meetings has been satisfactory.

A large number were present to witness the presentation of a sacred cantata, "Gwen Allen's Christmas," on Christmas Eve. The program was further enhanced by appropriate musical selections. Children of the primary department presented their program at the morning hour on that day, and were given a treat. On Christmas Eve a group of young people led by Wayne Thomas visited the homes of many members and sang carols.

Brother Edwin Robson, a faithful member, who has been seriously ill, is reported unimproved.

Sympathy is extended to the family of Brother David Collins, of Steubenville in the recent loss of their daughter, Lily. Deep sympathy also goes to Brother James McConnaughy, of Barberton, at the loss of his wife.

Elder James E. Bishop, of Steubenville, visited New Philadelphia, December 3, assisted in the sacrament service, and delivered an inspiring message.

The Excelsior Club is the name chosen by the young women organized by Charlene Hensel. Interesting meetings are held monthly. Jane Robson is secretary of the club. The Book of Mormon Class, composed of the same group, continues its meetings.

Pastor Carlisle is planning meetings to be held in surrounding communities. He is well known to many friends of the church, and the members are looking for good fruit from his missionary efforts.

Local Saints report their enjoyment in listening to radio programs each morning from KMBC, Elder John F. Sheehy, speaker. They hope these morning worshipships will be continued.

Two weddings of interest were solemnized recently. On Friday evening, January 12, Elder William L. Goudy united in marriage Miss Mildred Maurer, of Dover, Ohio, and Brother Gomer Watkins of this city. The ceremony was performed at the home of Brother Goudy.

On Saturday evening, January 13, the marriage of Sister Fay Warner and Mr. Paul Maurer, of Dover, was solemnized by Elder John D. Carlisle at his home. The couple were attended by Roberta Carlisle and Edward Warner, the bride's brother.

North Star Branch

Underwood, Iowa

Two young people of North Star Branch, David Damitz and Doris Swain, were united in marriage at the bride's home at Reynolds, Missouri, August 8, 1933. Elder Nels P. Johnson was the officiating minister, and Miss Edith Swain and Glen Johnson were the attendants. Musical numbers, vocal and instrumental, were furnished by Miss Eloise Higgins, of Independence; Miss Edith Swain, sister of the bride, and Sister Clo Butterworth, of Hindsdale, Illinois. The couple enjoyed a trip to the Ozarks before returning to Underwood, Iowa where they now live. Mrs. Damitz teaches in a local school, and Mr. Damitz assists in the work of the local priesthood.

North Star Branch's priesthood consists of two elders, Nels Johnson and David Carlile, and two young priests, Darold Sewing and David Damitz. They spent many evenings visiting the Saints during the "Keep the Law" period.

Members and leaders of the church school prepared the Christmas program which was given the evening of December 21. A tree, Santa Claus, and treats were chief attractions for the children. Many visitors were there and the church was filled.

A number of Saints and other friends observed the birthday of Brother Karl Kloppling during the day and evening of December 15, by calling on him or sending a birthday card. Brother Kloppling is infirm from age and ill health and his friends are eager to cheer him in every way.

Miss Helen Carr, leader in dramatics, is training a group of young people for a play, to be given soon in the high school auditorium.

Eastern Michigan Young People Have Rally

Will Have District Organization Soon

The Eastern Michigan young people's rally, held at Sandusky, January 7, proved very successful. District President William Grice and Earl Diem, church school director, were in charge and arranged the program for the day.

The sacrament service at nine o'clock was in charge of Elder Grice and his counselors, Elders Myron Carr and William H. Sbeffer. Elder Carr spoke on the redemption of and the qualifications for Zion at the eleven o'clock hour.

In the afternoon Elder Grice urged the young people to reserve themselves for the building of Zion and to prepare to take over the responsibilities which in time will be theirs.

Church school problems were discussed at a round table meeting supervised by Earl Diem and the district presidency. Discussion of the organization of district young people was taken up, and organization will be effected at the mid-winter conference at Valley Center, February 18.

A miscellaneous program of readings and musical numbers was given by the young people of the district.

A good crowd was present at the morning services and kept increasing until well over two hundred were there for the evening meeting.

Vancleave, Mississippi

Find New Interest and Cooperation

The junior young people enjoyed a Christmas party early in December at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mack Hawley. On Christmas Eve a program, "The Christmas Spirit," was given at the church in charge of Mrs. H. E. Jennings.

Everyone was invited to attend the New Year's watch party at the church, and the women's department served refreshments. The party closed with prayer meeting at twelve o'clock.

The branch met for business January 5, to decide on better cooperation and elect new officers.

The women's department has made and sold several quilts and has on hand more to sell.

A report from the little branch at Biloxi brings the news that they are doing splendid work.

Saints in this region expect to go forward and do more this year than in the past twelve months.

Hagerman, Idaho

Desire to Press On

The branch at Hagerman held its annual election of officers in September, Pastor S. D. Condit presiding. All the branch officers were sustained in their respective offices for another year. Sister Sadie Keil was elected church school director, with Sister Leda Hendrickson as secretary. Audrey Dennis was elected publicity agent.

In November, Missionary J. L. Sandidge spent several days here, preaching and encouraging the Saints to keep the law.

The women's department, under the supervision of Sister Alice Parks sponsored a harvest festival and quilt sale on December 8, which was well attended and a sum of thirty dollars was raised for general church expenses.

The young people under the able leadership of Sister Lloyd Condit have a recreation meeting every Friday evening and give many good programs; the Christmas program was especially good and presented to a full house.

A normal training class has been organized with an enrollment of ten. The class meets Sunday afternoon with Sister Sadie Keil as instructor.

The Saints are progressing spiritually and are trying to respond to the financial call of the church. Though they meet with many discouragements, all are desirous of pressing on.

East Bay Church

Oakland and Berkeley, California

The following is a calendar of the activities of East Bay Church of Oakland and Berkeley, for the past six weeks. Each department is going forward with zeal and enthusiasm.

After the preaching service, December 1, a party was held in the lower auditorium of the church as a farewell for Apostle E. J. Gleazer. The party was under the direction of the young people.

December 3, Pauline Moore was baptized into the church.

On the evening of December 8, the young adult group held their Christmas party.

An impressive service was held December 10, when the San Francisco young people presented for the East Bay congregation the pageant, "The Restoration." The production was capably done, and all who attended were impressed with the significance of the restored gospel.

The children, under the direction of Sister Camilla Collins, presented their Christmas entertainment on the evening of December 15. The theme, "We Would See Jesus," was given in pantomime. Scenes portraying Jesus in the manger, in the carpenter shop, at his work of healing, and blessing the little children were very effective. "Christmas Eve at the Inn," was presented during the evening service.

Walter Cawkins and Burton Slemmons were conducted into the waters of baptism, December 31. In the evening of that day a watch service was held.

The first event of the new year was a party, presented by the priesthood for the members of East Bay. It proved to be a unique entertainment.

Elder Virgil Etzenhouser and family have been visiting in the East Bay for several weeks, but returned to their home in Honolulu on Friday, January 5. Their many friends wish they could have remained longer.

A number of outstanding sermons have been heard recently. The new year promises much for the membership in class work and every phase of religious endeavor. It is hoped that all will avail themselves of these opportunities for spiritual development.

Profit by Visits of General and District Officers

During November and December this branch was favored with visits from general and district officers. Apostle M. A. McConley was here November 17, 18, and 19, and spoke to the members, stressing the need of all to work for the cause of Zion. He also emphasized the point that all are called to do a work whether in the ministry or in the affairs of business and labor, each task sacred when done for the glory of God.

On Sunday, November 19, the young people met at 9 a. m. with the young members of New Westminster for their monthly prayer service. Apostle McConley, associated with Edwin Sparto, was in charge. That afternoon an interesting round table was held, the many questions keeping Brother McConley and Brother J. E. Johnston busy. The vesper service conducted by young people, gave Brother McConley a fine setting for his closing address, and all felt that the day had been most profitable.

President Floyd M. McDowell, accompanied by Apostle McConley, was here December 3, this being his first visit to Vancouver. He spent most of his time meeting the priesthood from Rosedale, New Westminster, and Vancouver branches, but was here for three preaching hours. He also presided over the sacrament service during which time the local sacrifice offering was taken up. This offering, they later learned, was the largest in the district.

An outstanding event of the day was the serving of over three hundred meals by Vancouver women who were assisted by women of New Westminster Branch.

District President Monte Lasater, Sister Emma McDole and Dwight Davies came to this branch December 10. Brother Lasater outlined the needs of the church in the morning service. In the afternoon Sister McDole spoke on the church school while Brother Davies spoke to the young people concerning their work.

The annual Christmas tree and program provided ample entertainment for young and old. There were songs, plays and other forms of entertainment. Audry Miller, Vera Morrison and May Bell, tiny tots of four years, gained the applause of the evening with their trio.

Artland Branch

Senlac, Saskatchewan

This local held its annual prayer meeting and Thanksgiving dinner October 12. On the following Thursday the women had their annual fowl supper, bazaar, and a short program. There was quite a display of goods which found ready sale.

Elder W. J. Cornish went out to tour the district for a few weeks in the fall.

A farewell party was had for Miss Verva Mogg November 9. Miss Mogg went to Prince Albert to attend high school.

The school district and Sunday school united their Christmas program efforts in an entertainment December 21.

During December the weather was severe, the temperature hovering near the thirty-below-zero mark most of the time.

Elder E. Fisher held services here as he was on his way to Michigan Branch in Alberta, January 8 and 9.

The first of a series of meetings of the young people's class was held January 10, and time was taken up with short talks from the members, songs, and games.

Vinal Haven, Maine

Begin the Year With Many Activities

The new year started with many activities for this branch. The weekly schedule shows about eight meetings every seven days—church school and class periods on Sunday morning from ten to twelve o'clock; a study period on financial law and a preaching service on Sunday evening; a young people's meeting on Tuesday evening at a cottage on the west side of town; prayer meetings on Wednesday; young people's service and recreation on Thursday and a children's recreational service on Friday.

The annual business meeting and election of officers was held January 4, former officers with a few exceptions, being sustained. A fine spirit was enjoyed.

The following Sunday Allen Lawry, Leroy Webb, and Shirley Bunker were baptized in the font at the church by Elder Archie Begg. This was followed by an impressive confirmation and sacrament service which was given unusually large attendance.

The Saints in this branch are striving to keep the law and are praying that this will help them "onward to Zion."

Hutchinson, Kansas

Giving Better Than Receiving

The Christmas service in this branch was strikingly beautiful and unique. Brother Ed. P. Sanders, with the assistance of the program committee, the music department, and others, outlined and carried out a "white Christmas" program. For a background the service had a white electric cross, a row of cotton-flaked Christmas trees on a white-matted floor and white banked altar. The simplicity of this arrangement and the lack of glitter and glamour added to the effectiveness of the service. Musical selections, a reading, and a Christmas talk by Brother Sanders emphasized the thought of giving rather than receiving.

A feature of the program was a huge white cake, the birthday cake of Christ, bearing twenty white candles representing the centuries since his birth. The candles were lighted by a procession of small children, and after the cake was cut, the audience was served by two intermediate boys.

Then all the members in the congregation filed by the altar to place there a gift of a coin or food. The offering netted $3.22 in money which was forwarded as Christmas Offering to the office of the Presiding Bishopric, and the gifts of food filled a large basket which was distributed to the needy of the branch.

Mikado, Michigan

Faithfully Carry On

Mikado Saints have been carrying on, trying faithfully to serve the Master. Since the congregation is small, the young people's meeting is held twice each month, and all Sunday services are conducted Sunday evening, beginning at seven o'clock, Sunday school and preaching.

A presentation of twelve New Hymnals was appreciated by members of this branch.

A most interesting Christmas program was enjoyed. "The Most Precious Gift," was presented.

The visit of Apostle D. T. Williams, December 19, proved most helpful.

A note from Sister Mary L. Mesle, of Sherrill, New York, says that business conditions are better there though the improvement is not yet apparent in the pay envelope. Brother Mesle, pastor at Sherrill, is actively at work in that city. Brother Floyd Rathbun and wife, formerly of Morrisville, and members of Sherrill Branch, have moved to Union, New York, and now meet with the Johnson City Saints. He has employment there.

Far West Stake

Cameron Branch

The priesthood started a visiting campaign of the branch November 12, inviting the Saints and friends to attend a week's series of meetings held by Elder Blair Jensen, of Lamoni, Iowa. The meetings were well attended and the sermons were timely and much appreciated.

The women's department held a turkey dinner about the middle of December and had such a generous response that the turkey disappeared long before the crowd was served, but luckily, enough chicken was prepared to serve everyone.

Several members have been seriously ill recently, but most of them are better.

Attendance at all meetings has been good, the church school attendance running considerably higher than for the same period a year ago. Wednesday evening prayer meetings have had good attendance with quite a few young people there regularly.

A priesthood class is being held each week, Elder David Gamet as teacher. They are taking up the study of the priesthood manual.

Two small boys were baptized the last Sunday of the year at an impressive baptismal service witnessed by the church school.

The membership of the branch is being augmented by several families from Iowa who have purchased or rented farms in this vicinity. Some of the men moving here hold the priesthood and should prove a valuable asset to the branch. Brother Turner and family have recently moved from Kirksville to be near a branch.

Every member of the branch received a new year's letter from the pastor and bishop's solicitor, stressing their obligation of making a financial statement each year and inviting them to attend a special inventory rally service January 7, when the inventories were received in an impressive service.

Guilford Branch

On December 13, the annual business meeting was held at the church, the pastor in charge. At this meeting a resolution was adopted to hold the next annual election in September in order that the new officers might take their places at the beginning of the church school year in October. The following officers were elected to serve this year: W. T. Ross, president of branch; George Dewey Anderson, church school director; W. B. Torrance, treasurer; Elmer Nelson, secretary; Oma Ross, chorister; Bertha Mildred Nelson, librarian. Church school officers include Mrs. Crystal Anderson, adult supervisor; Miss Neva Ross, young people's supervisor and Lavota Jobe, children's supervisor, and Lucy Marie Nelson, secretary. Mrs. Emma Nelson is head of the women's department. An efficient group of teachers completes the personnel.

A beautiful Christmas offering service was held Sunday morning, December 24. At night the children's division, in conjunction with the choir, gave an enjoyable program of exercises, carols, and anthems.

The O. T. Z. Class is working on a play to be presented sometime in February. They are losing one of their number as Miss Florene Torrance has left for Independence. The O. T. Z. Class held their monthly meeting at the home of Miss Torrance Thursday night, January 11. After the buffet supper, the evening was spent in playing games. As a farewell gift, Florene was given a handkerchief shower by the members of the class. All regret that Miss Torrance will not be numbered with them, but are happy that she will be in a place where she will have splendid associations in church work.

Fortescue Branch

Forescue Saints enjoyed a visit from Elder L. A. Keck on Sunday, January 14. Elder Keck preached at the eleven o'clock hour to a large attendance. He was accompanied by Mrs. Keck and their son, Lawrence.

Saint Joseph Branch

The Saint Joseph Branch had two wonderful meetings the first Sunday of the new year. It was very fitting that the first service of the year should find the Saints from the four churches gathered together in a sacrament service. An impressive service was held and the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Wendell Blackman was blessed by Bishop Milo Burnett and Elder Ward A. Hougas.

In the afternoon, a city-wide prayer service was held at Second Church. Many participated in the service and a fine spirit of devotion was expressed. It is planned to make this a regular service on the first Sunday of each quarter.

Calumet, Oklahoma

This Group Is Going Forward

Calumet Branch is active. The first service of the new year held in the church, was the wedding of Donald Elwell and Gretta Owen, both of Calumet. The wedding ceremony was read at six o'clock by Pastor A. G. Owings. The bridal couple were accompanied by a bridesmaid and best man, Miss Mildred Owings and Leo Elwell. Mrs. Coffman and Ammon Owen, brother and sister of the bride, sang "I Love You Truly."

The new year finds members of this congregation ready to exert the greatest effort to make progress during 1934.

L. G. Holloway to Visit This Local

Election of officers took place recently in charge of President Henry Castings and C. E. McDonald, of Des Moines. The following were elected: Pastor, Harold Shippy; church school director, Ernest Kirilin; adult leader, Joseph Benson; young people's leader, Keith Stokes; children's leader, Mrs. Dave Lehman; secretary, Mrs. Vivian Shippy; treasurer, Seibert Chesnutt; chorister, Ira Shippy; pianist, Mrs. Blanch Park; auditor, Clifford Benson; leader of the women, Mrs. Park; librarian, Mr. Chesnutt; publicity agent, Mr. Stokes.

Regular services are held—church school at ten o'clock, preaching at eleven o'clock; song service, six-thirty; Religio, seven o'clock, and evening service, seven-thirty. An active prayer meeting is held each Wednesday evening. The Marietta Walker Circle meets every two weeks with a lesson study in charge of Mrs. Mary Kirilin.

The visit of Elder L. G. Holloway is looked forward to with great anticipation. Brother Holloway will hold a series of meetings here.

Utah District

Myron A. McConley and Frank Veenstra Visit Salt Lake City Branch

Apostle M. A. McConley visited Salt Lake City Branch, and the Saints were revived by his inspiring sermon. He was advertised to speak Thursday, the twenty-first, but was detained at Las Vegas one day. Elder R. R. Robertson was notified of the delay and to avoid disappointment, communicated with and secured the help of Elder Frank Veenstra, of Ogden, who delivered a constructive sermon, Brother Veenstra remained in Salt Lake City during Brother McConley's visit.

In the afternoon preceding the service Brothers McConley, Veenstra, and Robertson had the pleasure of calling on scattered members and shut-ins of the branch and administering to the sick. Brother and Sister J. A. Conyers proffered the use of their car to take the men to the several homes.

A farewell party in honor of Miss Mable Jensen was held December 19. Miss Jensen will make her home at Venice, California. She has been a faithful worker in the branch and the members were reluctant to see her go.

Christmas Eve was devoted to a yuletide program consisting of stories of Mary and the Christ Child and Christmas carols as well as a tree and treats for the children.

December 27, Brother and Sister William Thompson and son, Roy, of Walla Walla, Washington, stopped at Salt Lake City for a brief visit en route home, from Cheyenne Wyoming.

The midweek prayer meeting, January 10, was held at the home of Sister Susan Winkworth, a humble and faithful Saint who is loved by all who know her. She is eighty-eight years old and though quite feeble physically, has a wonderful memory, and has memorized many passages from the Bible and Book of Mormon. This is a source of much comfort to her since her eyesight has failed.

Of this prayer service it is told that when all was ready for the opening someone said to Sister Winkworth: "We desire that you be the guest of honor tonight." "No," she replied, "the Master will be the guest of honor this night," and he was. His presence made this home a heavenly place.

Kirtland, Ohio

Pastor John L. Cooper's Condition Is Improved

Friends of Elder John L. Cooper, pastor of Kirtland Branch, were shocked when he suffered a stroke while preaching in the Temple, December 17. At present his condition is improving; he is able to sit up some each day.

A ministerial-missionary institute for Kirtland District was held December 8 to 10, at Kirtland. Apostle Paul M. Hanson, minister in charge, directed the conduction of these services, being assisted by District President James E. Bishop and other workers.

A Christmas entertainment was presented December 23, at the church auditorium, under the direction of Sister Au Vergne Proper, church school superintendent.

Elder Albert Wouters delivered the Christmas sermon December 24. Appropriate music was rendered by the choir. In the evening the young people presented a program of Christmas music, directed by Verna Schaar. William F. Webbe gave a short talk on Christmas night.

District President James E. Bishop and Elder E. Guy Hammond, his counselor, were in Kirtland, recently. Other men occupying the pulpit have been Elders Earl R. Curry, E. A. Webbe, John L. Lewis, George Lindsey, John R. Booher, and Leon Burdick.

Brother and Sister Redler announce the birth of a daughter in November.

Two joint meetings of the women's department were recently held at the home of Sister Mildred Williamson and Sister Maude Mason, respectively. Original entertainment numbers were presented.

The Kirtland community was saddened Christmas Day when the people learned of the passing of Brother Franklin Barstow, twenty-five years old, at the Lake County Hospital, Painesville, Ohio. His death was the result of an automobile accident December 23. Left to mourn are his parents, Brother and Sister Elmer Barstow; one brother, four sisters and a host of friends. His funeral service at the Temple, December 28, was largely attended. Elder George Lindsey was in charge, Elder Eben Curry offered prayer, and the sermon was by Elder J. D. Lewis.

Gladstone Branch

At Christmas a cantata was given by the choir at the morning service, followed by a story by A. H. Koehler of his trip to Bethlehem one Christmas Eve.

In the evening the children gave a pageant of the Christmas story. The smaller children also gave a play which was followed by treats for all, arranged under the expert leadership of Mrs. V. V. Smith and Mrs. R. H. Carver.

The first Sunday in January was marked by a highly spiritual sacrament service.

On the following Lord's day the young people had charge of all services providing a program and Brother Lloyd Seibert as speaker.

Other recent speakers have been R. S. Salyards, of Independence, and P. T. Anderson, of Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Bennington Heights Branch

Christmas Eve found an atmosphere of merry anticipation at the little church of Bennington Heights. Each of the younger children taking part in the Christmas program presented by the primary department, was eager to add his or her little bit to the success of the entertainment. After the primary presentation, the program was carried on by the young people. At the close of the program, Santa Claus arrived to greet the young and old alike, and to pass out candy, nuts, and oranges to the children.

The women's department presented a Christmas play entitled, "The Two Christmas Boxes," December 22. The play contained a long list of characters and a story full of fun and merriment. Visiting participants were Paul May who played a number of accordion solos, and Miss Williams who gave a reading. Both were from Independence.

Those of the priesthood presiding at the sacrament service, January 7, were Brother Helm, Edward Larsen, Joe Curtis, Don C. Stafford, and E. H. Agin. Before partaking of the sacrament a number of the members confessed a desire to do more and better work for themselves, for others, and for the church than they did in 1933. The sacrament was followed by a prayer and testimony meeting.

New Year's Eve was also duly recognized at Bennington. After the regular Sunday evening service was closed, the members remained to witness the passing of the old year and the coming of the new year. The time of waiting was filled with songs and prayers.

At the first prayer meeting of the new year only ten members were present owing to the bad weather. At the second meeting there were twenty-one present. It is the desire of those attending to see the attendance number double from week to week.

Independence

All of the nine congregations of the church in Independence were represented in the large crowd which gathered at the Stone Church Monday evening, January 15, to care for the business of the quarterly conference. President Frederick M. Smith was in charge, and the business of dominant interest was the election by ballot of sixty-one delegates to represent the City of Zion at General Conference. The election results have not yet been announced, but will be printed in an early issue of the Herald.

The following names recommended by the pastors and supervisors of the city, were approved by the conference for ordination: to the office of elder, Arthur Welch, Arthur H. Thompson, and Earl Audet; priest, Roy E. Settles, Frank S. Jennings, Evert Elliott, and Otto Beil; teacher, Louis Resch, Shankland S. Arnsen, and deacon, J. Frederick Pinson and Albert Handy.

Annual reports were read to the conference from the pastor, the statistician, the department of religious education, the department of women, the bishop, and various quorums of priesthood. During the course of the evening there were short, encouraging talks by President Smith, Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and Elder Blair Jensen, president of Lamoni Stake.

A large number of young people in the congregations of the church in Independence are trying out for plays to be entered in the city-wide play contest sponsored by the Independence Young People's Council. Preliminary contests will be held in each congregation by February 17, and the finals will occur at the Dining Hall March 5, 6, 8, and 9. One district boasts of five plays started, another of two, a third is rehearsing four. Many young men and women are interested in this annual dramatic event.

Independence people were happy to help President Frederick M. Smith remember his sixtieth birthday January 22, at a mammoth reception sponsored by the Laurel Club. President Smith's birthday occurred on Sunday, but the formal observance came on Monday afternoon and evening, many of Brother Smith's friends greeting him and wishing him well.

Stone Church

Elder R. S. Salyards, the morning speaker, addressed a large congregation. He was assisted throughout the service by Elder H. G. Barto and Elder Charles Chapman.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, rendered music, Albert Brackenbury, soloist, Hazel Scott

Witheer, organist. "I Would Be True," and "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me," two favorite hymns, were sung by the Midwesterners Male Quartet, accompanied at the piano by Paul N. Craig.

This being the birthday of President Frederick M. Smith, Elder C. Ed. Miller gave an illustrated lecture on the life of our President, at the evening hour, receiving the attention of a large congregation.

All departments of the Stone Church are actively at work on plans for the remainder of the winter, for spring, and for the approaching General Conference.

Second Church

Elder G. E. Harrington, the Sunday morning speaker, selected as his theme, "Seek to Bring Forth and Establish Zion." The choir, directed by Mrs. Roy Settles, sang the anthem, "O Lamb of God," the solo part being sung by Mrs. Lawrence Nave. A special number, "Trees," was sung by Miss Hazel Clow.

Raymond Wrigley, of Liberty Street congregation, was the speaker at the junior service, and the subject of his talk was "Courage to Do Our Duty." Grace Dillie told the story, "When Emily Was on Guard," Orson Murdock gave a reading, and a special number, "I Would Be True," and sung by Nadine Inman.

"The Example Christ Set," was the theme of Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith's evening sermon, and the ladies' quartet and Louise Sarratt, pianist, supplied the musical program.

Six adults were baptized and confirmed at the church Sunday afternoon.

A women's meeting will be held at the church January 24, at two-thirty in the afternoon.

Walnut Park Church

Building his message around the story of the Good Samaritan, Pastor Frank McDonald delivered an inspiring sermon at the eleven o'clock hour Sunday morning. He pleaded for the Saints to realize and accept their responsibility to others, as exemplified by the deeds of the Good Samaritan.

Junior church services in the basement were in charge of Elder Welton Wood. Sister Violet Chase recently was made chorister for the junior services.

Four hundred and forty were in attendance at the church school session Sunday morning, maintaining an average attendance well above the four-hundred mark for the period of the church school year which began October 1.

The Walnut Park Young People's Council met at two-thirty Sunday afternoon, with the pastor, superintendent, and assistant superintendent of the church school and the local bishop's agent present. A definite understanding was sought and reached as to the tie-up between the general council, the local council, and the various officers of the congregation. Ammon Badder, president of the local council, presided over the meeting.

Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp was the speaker at the evening service.

The choir, under the direction of Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, has started rehearsals for an Easter cantata, "The Risen King."

A recapitulation of membership figures of Walnut Park District for the past five years shows a gain of 46.5 percent for that period. Membership as of January 1, 1929, is reported as 593, and for January 1, 1934, 869, a net gain of 276.

Enoch Hill Church

Last Thursday the women assembled at the home of Sister Maggie Merchant for their all-day meeting. A covered-dish luncheon was enjoyed at noon. The biggest part of the day was spent in quilting. An hour was devoted to the study of the Doctrine and Covenants, section 100.

Thursday evening, at seven-fifteen, the class in musical directing met at the home of Brother and Sister John Johnson, under the supervision of Sister Amos Allen. Immediately following the class, choir rehearsal was held at the church.

Brother William McElwain passed away Thursday evening at the home of his sister, Sister Chester Crowl. The funeral was held at the church Sunday afternoon, Elder E. A. Thomas in charge. Apostle Roy S. Budd was the speaker. Brother Budd and Brother McElwain were boyhood chums.

Saints of this congregation are happy to have Sister Lilla Warren with them again, after her serious illness.

The church school worship period Sunday morning was in charge of Elder E. A. Thomas's class, a reading, "The Swan Song," by Sister McCrae, and a clarinet solo by Alfred Waters, accompanied by Harold Buseth.

Elder W. J. Brewer was the morning speaker, using for his text Doctrine and Covenants 36:3.

Among the classes which met preceding the evening preaching service Sunday evening were those studying the Doctrine and Covenants, Church History, Book of Mormon, and a study group of the Aaronic priesthood.

Elder E. A. Thomas, the evening speaker, used as his text Corinthians 12:1.

Spring Branch Church

Patriarch Frederick A. Smith was the speaker at eleven o'clock Sunday, his theme being "What Lack I Yet?" A solo was sung by F. A. Cool.

At the close of the church school at seven-thirty in the evening there was no intermission. Two were conducted into the waters of baptism in an impressive ceremony. The candidates were Lela Keck and Vera Jennings who were baptized by M. C. Jacobsen and A. J. Tankard respectively. Preceding the ceremony two solos were sung by Corinne French, and a duet selection was sung by Alma and Gladys Dixon.

Patriarch Ammon White was the evening speaker and his theme was "The Principles of the Gospel."

Members of this district and friends of Brother and Sister G. H. Lane mourn with them at the loss of their son, Gene, eight years old, who died at the Sanitarium, January 17, following a week's illness. The funeral services were held at Spring Branch Church in charge of M. C. Jacobsen, sermon by John F. Sheehy. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Left to mourn are his father, mother, brother, grandparents and a host of friends.

Gudgell Park Church

Sunday morning, December 31, Elder Arthur Koehler gave an interesting description of Christmas Eve in Bethlehem. That night Elder J. Charles May began his two-week series of missionary meetings, starting with the theme, "Sincerity and Truth." This was followed by stirring sermons of an evangelistic nature each night for a fortnight. Many of the discourses were illustrated by charts. Preceding each sermon there were special music and stereopticon views of the South Sea Islands. Music was furnished by choruses from various branches and by Brother May with his guitar and ocarina. These services were enjoyed by many.

At the first sacrament service of the year Elders C. A. Kress and J. Charles May were present and gave edifying talks.

Elder A. K. Dillee occupied the pulpit the morning hour of January 21, and a girls' quartet from Spring Branch furnished two numbers. In the evening Elder William E. Shakespeare talked on "Making Use of Our Opportunities."

East Independence Church

The two weeks of services conducted nightly by Missionary R. L. Fulk, January 1 to 14, proved most helpful to this congregation. The speaker was blessed with the spirit of instruction, and stirred the members with a desire to reconsecrate themselves to the gospel. A number of the congregation had dinner on the closing day at the church, Brothers Fulk and Elder H. V. Minton preaching in the afternoon. Sister Fulk gave good musical assistance during the two weeks' series.

The prayer meeting on the following Wednesday evening was well attended and an active spirit prevailed. In this service fruits of the missionary series were made apparent.

A little son, David Linn, has come to make his home with Brother and Sister T. W. Thatcher.

The women of this congregation recently surprised their pastor and wife with a quilt which they had pieced and quilted in appreciation of their service in this district.

Columbus, Ohio

First Church, Tompkins Street and Medary Avenue

An increase of fifty percent in the Sunday morning attendance has resulted from a program innovation sponsored by Branch President C. W. Clark, and designed to coordinate more closely the Sunday dinner with the morning church service. The new method combines the Sunday school and church programs, cutting a full hour from the old routine. Formerly, Sunday school began at nine o'clock, and church ended at noon. Now, with Sunday school starting at the same hour, and continuing for the same length of time, church ends at eleven o'clock.

The combination of the two services was effected by canceling the old intermission between Sunday school and church. Thus the church school dismissal song becomes the opening song for the morning service, the speaker taking the pulpit immediately after the song.

"Some change in the old morning program seemed necessary to retain the congregation, after Sunday school, for the church service," Pastor Clark said. "The demands of the household Sunday dinner were calling too many members away from the church after Sunday school. Undertaken with some trepidation, the new program has been successful beyond expectation. The only real change has been the reduction in the time allotted to the church sermon. This period has been cut in half, but perhaps it is better to talk to fifty persons fifteen minutes, than to talk to fifteen persons fifty minutes."

Sacrament service was held Sunday, January 7, with the following present: Missionary John R. Grice, District President A. E. Anderton, and Elder Wildermuth, of Mansfield.

Christmas was celebrated with a choir program directed by Nathan Weate.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Grice, formerly of Saint Clair, Michigan, announce the marriage of their daughter, Helen, to Winston Cummins, of Columbus, Ohio. They were married July 23, in Detroit, Michigan, by Robert H. Coats, uncle of the bride. The young couple will reside for the present in Columbus.

Mr. and Mrs. John Gabriel announce the marriage of their daughter, Grace, to Merrill Weate, December 24. The marriage took place at the church, with many relatives and friends present.

The Loyal Club, divided into five groups, has been busy during the holidays. Each group chose its favorite method of raising funds. Group leaders reports: Netah Anderton, $51; Margaret Crosier, $41.50; Mary Hall, $29; Gladys Carter, $20.50; Faye Clark, $46. Fifty dollars were turned over to the branch treasury for general expenses. During the absence of The Loyal Club president, Sister Emma Hooley, caused by a fractured arm and shoulder, Edna Ziechang is acting in that capacity. Sister Hooley has been president since the club's organization in 1928.

Under the leadership of Allieu Briggs, a Girl Scout troop has been organized, with fifteen members. Sister Briggs attended Girl Scout group leaders' meeting with this object in view. Her assistants are Winifred Carter, graduate of Graceland College, and Esther Gates, formerly of Ravenswood, Missouri.

Kirtland Ministerial-Missionary Institute

Apostle Paul M. Hanson Centers Attention on Priesthood

Apostle Paul M. Hansen, assisted by Elder John R. Grice, under appointment to Southern Ohio District, James E. Bishop, district president, and John L. Cooper, pastor of the branch, conducted a ministerial missionary institute at Kirtland, Ohio, December 9 and 10.

Hitherto much of their missionary work had been individualistic, and even in the institutes held the missionary considerations had been taken care of in a corner. In general the priesthood had been relegated to back seats. This was the first institute conducted solely in the interests of the missionary point of view and effort.

son, and was followed by a discussion on sermon construction led by James E. Bishop.

Saturday evening was devoted to a series of four papers. The first, "A History of Missionary Work in Kirtland District During the Last Fifteen Years" was by Elder E. A. Webb. This was followed by a topic by Earl Curry. "Opportunities for Missionary Work in Kirtland District." Next came the paper by Elder George T. Neville in which he discussed "Opportunities of the Church School." In his paper Pastor John L. Cooper presented the fact that the great opportunity now before the church should be considered in the light of personal preparation. Souls hungering for truth can only be ministered to adequately by those who are living the truth.

At eight-thirty Sunday morning a priesthood prayer meeting was held. The Scriptures were read by Brother Hanson and a fine spirit of devotion prevailed. During the church school period a class was led by John R. Grice on the subject, "Missionary Methods." Scriptures were read emphasizing the importance of the call, ordination, and responsibility of the priesthood. Various aspects of missionary work were discussed, bringing out clearly that all members of the church should have that spirit. The value of the prospect list was emphasized and attention was called to the general program of missionary work recommended by the Quorum of Twelve. Pre-Easter services were referred to with a view to helping complete family circles.

The morning preaching service was conducted with quiet simplicity and formality. Special music was by the choir, led by Sister Householder. Brother Householder sang a solo that fitted the topic selected by Brother Hanson.

In the afternoon a missionary round-table was conducted in which ministerial deportment was discussed. Punctuality was emphasized. The need of shortening long prayers was illustrated by actual test. It was suggested that the music of the service should be subordinate to the message; that distractions caused by choir members, such as whispering and gum-chewing are unseemly, that an appendage to the sermon offered by the one in charge, is unwise and should be avoided; that the closing hymn should be well adapted, and accord with the sentiment of the sermon; that the closing prayer ought not to be a summary of the message of the hour, but a benediction.

The concluding sermon of the institute was by Elder John R. Grice on "Extending the Kingdom of God."

Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase.—Psalm 85: 11, 12.

Trying to Live the Law

The first Sunday in 1934 was a wonderful day, especially in the sacramental service. To hear the resolutions and determinations expressed by the Saints was an uplifting experience.

Missionary W. E. Haden preached for Thayer Saints in December, his discourses presenting in an appealing way the duties of the Saints and the necessity of their keeping the law. Many times the Spirit of God was felt during these services, and the district is indebted to the Father and to the appointing powers of the church for sending Brother Haden to them. Branches and groups are praying that he will be returned to Southern Missouri District by the coming General Conference. Every Saint here loves him and feels that he has a great work yet to do. He is continually about the Lord's work in the homes of the Saints and before the altar of the Lord.

The district conference will be held at Thayer, March 3 and 4, and delegates will be elected to represent this district at the General Conference. All Saints in the district are invited to attend.

G. A. Davis, bishop's agent for Southern Missouri District, says: "My labors in the Lord's work the past year with the cooperation of the Saints at Thayer, have been glorious. I feel that I have not been alone in this work, for the Lord has helped me. Saints, honor God; pay your tithing; keep the law, and we need not worry about where Zion will be. Get in touch with your solicitors, secure inventory blanks, and fill them out as the church has requested."

HELPS FOR PASTORS

Prayer Meeting Themes

For Wednesday Evening Services

Requests have come to us for the continuation of the prayer meeting themes. The Editors are endeavoring to meet this demand. For a time the texts will be taken from the Doctrine and Covenants, leading up to the church-wide interest in the General Conference. Comments and suggestions from our pastors will be appreciated. Hymns are selected from the new Saints' Hymnal. We have endeavored to select both new and familiar hymns for this purpose.—The Editors.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31

Theme: "The promises of God are true."

"Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled." — Doctrine and Covenants 1:7

Suggested Hymns:

245—"How Firm a Foundation."

213—"O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."

173—"Glorious Things Are Sung of Zion."

215—"Lord Speak to Me."

402—"O Word of God Incarnate."

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7

Theme: "God is unchangeable; His work cannot be destroyed."

"The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, can not be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round."—Doctrine and Covenants 2:1.

Suggested Hymns:

267—"Tenderly, Lead Thou Me On."

210—"Rise Up, O Men of God."

100—"This God Is the God We Adore."

239—"Where Wilt Thou Put Thy Trust."

123—"Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works."

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 14

Theme: "God will be with us if we seek Him."

"Where two or three are gathered together in my name, as touching one thing, behold, there will I be in the midst of them: even so am I in the midst of you. Fear not to do good, my sons, for whatsoever ye sow, that shall ye also reap: therefore, if ye sow good, ye shall also reap good, let earth and hell combine against you, for if ye are built upon my Rock, they cannot prevail."—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 15, 16.

Suggested Hymns:

27—"Praise Ye the Lord, 'Tis Good."

127—"God Is Love, His Mercy Brightens."

130—"God Is Love, The Earth Proclaims It."

281—"My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

314—"I Need Thee Every Hour."

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21

Theme: "We must repent and be reconciled to God."

"I the Lord can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; nevertheless, he that repents and does the commandments of the Lord shall be forgiven; and he that repents not, from him shall be taken even the light which he has received, for my Spirit shall not always strive with man, saith the Lord of Hosts."—Doctrine and Covenants 1:5.

Suggested Hymns:

232—"God Will Take Care of You."

47—"New Every Morning Is the Love."

133—"My God, How Wonderful Thou Art."

297—"Just As I Am."

89—"God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 28

Theme: "God will take care of us if we do His will."

"Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore, he is not of my church. And now, behold, whosoever is of my church, and endureth of my church to the end, him will I establish upon my Rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against him."—Doctrine and Covenants 3: 16, 17.

Suggested Hymns:

248—"How Gentle God's Command."

313—"O for a Closer Walk With God."

323—"O Thou God Who Hearest Prayer."

312—"Lord, Thy Mercy Now Entreat-ing."

151—"Father When in Love to Thee."

Appointment of Bishop's Agent

Notice is hereby given that Brother Lewis P. Summers has been appointed to serve as bishop's agent for Spokane District, taking over the work formerly handled by Monte Lasater.

Brother Summers comes highly recommended by those who know him and have been associated with him. We are glad to recommend him to the Saints of the Spokane District and solicit their whole-hearted support in this phase of the work of the church.

We hereby request that the solicitors send their January and subsequent reports to Brother Summers, Sagle, Idaho.

Priesthood Institute

President F. M. McDowell will visit Central Michigan District four days in February: Saginaw, February 22; Tawas City, 23rd; Beaverton the evening of the 24th and until noon the 25th. He desires to see every ordained man in the district. The institute and items of conference business will be cared for Saturday night and Sunday. The early Sunday prayer meeting will be followed by President McDowell's talk until noon when he must leave for Grand Rapids. Harry Runkle, district chorister, will train the singers from 1:30 to 2:30, then all the workers will be given a chance to express their desires to work for the Master. Items of business will include the election of delegates to General Conference and the approval of the district regarding the sale of Greenbush Church. —Hubert Case, district president.

Conference Notices

Conference of Wheeling District will convene March 3, at Moundsville, at 2:30 p. m. The business for this session will be the election of delegates to General Conference, and consideration of a proposed change of date for the annual business conference. Moundsville Branch will arrange a program for the priesthood meeting Sunday morning. The usual devotional services will be held during the day.—O. J. Tary, district president.

An all-day meeting and conference for West Virginia district will be held at Parkersburg church, February 25. Apostle Paul M. Hanson is expected to be present. The purpose of the meeting is to elect delegates to the General Conference at Independence, Missouri.—A. C. Silvers, district president.

The Des Moines district conference will be held in Des Moines February 9, 10, and 11. The conference will begin with a district banquet on Friday evening, February 9, at 6.30. Brother J. F. Garver will be the principal speaker. Reservations for the banquet should be made in advance with the district young people's supervisor, Miss Doris Nelson, 740 Sandahl, Des Moines, Iowa.

Conference Minutes

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—District conference convened at Mount Vernon, December 9 and 10. Apostle J. F. Garver was in charge of the prayer and testimony meeting at 10.30 a. m., assisted by Ernest Roberson and W. M. Clements, and gave a short talk following the service. Business session began at 2 p. m., Brother Garver in charge, assisted by Ernest Roberson and Charles Wesner, counselors to R. L. Fulk who was unable to attend the conference. Myrtle Choate was secretary of the conference. After the formal opening of business, ministerial reports were read from Ernest Roberson, R. H. Henson, Lindolph Casey, O. P. Allen, Ancil Burrough, Johadijah Dann, and Elmer Slover. Statistical reports came from the following branches: Marion, Mount Vernon, Brush Creek and Poplar Creek. Harry Henson was recommended for ordination to the office of priest and Arthur Mills to the office of teacher. Both men are members of Brush Creek Branch. These names were presented to the conference by O. C. Henson, and approved. Delegates to General Conference were elected: Oral Allen, R. L. Fulk, Sister R. L. Fulk, Harry Henson, Glenna Jackson, Marion Lawrey, Sister Marion Lawrey, Lewis Deselms, J. M. Henson, Sister J. M. Henson, Edith Allen, and Icel Burrough. Then came the election of district officers, Brother Garver making a few remarks with regard to the election of the district president to fill the vacancy left by R. L. Fulk. Ernest Roberson was unanimously chosen. A vote of thanks was extended to Brother Fulk for his faithful services as president while in this district. Sister Myrtle Choate was reelected secretary of the district. Bishop's Agent Charles Wesner read his report and stated the amount of financial help sent to the Bishop as well as the financial standing of the district. His report was approved and Brother Wesner was sustained in his office. Brother Harry Henson was elected to assist him. The district presidency was given power to appoint the church school director, and Sister Bessie Burgess was elected chorister. Sister Helen Cisne was sustained head of the women's department. That evening Apostle Garver delivered a fine sermon. Sunday began with a prayer meeting and the morning sermon was by Brother Garver. At noon the sisters served dinner in the basement. At the afternoon business meeting the bishop's agent reported the total offering to the conference to be almost thirty dollars. Brother Ernest Roberson, district president, chose as his counselors Charles Wesner and O. C. Henson, and his choices were approved. Then the conference voted its thanks to Mount Vernon Saints for their hospitality, and there was a sermon by Apostle Garver.

Our Departed Ones

BLAKE.—Mae Christine Cosgray, daughter of the late Peter Cosgray and Mary Cosgray, was born July 1, 1896, near Monticello, Indiana, where she spent a happy childhood. She was married to Bannard Blake, of Remington, Indiana, December 20, 1914, and moved to Barcroft, Virginia, with him where they lived together nineteen years. She passed from this life January 5, 1934, at the Georgetown University Hospital, Washington, District of Columbia. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1925, at Barcroft, Virginia, by Elder Adolphus Edwards, of Baltimore, Maryland, and was an active member of the Washington, District of Columbia, Mission. She departed from this sphere of action strong in the faith. She leaves to mourn, her husband; four children, Merle, Helen, Gene and Hyrum; her mother, two brothers, and a sister of Logansport, Indiana, together with a host of friends who loved her because of her amiable, sympathetic, and kind disposition. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Joseph Edwards, pastor of Baltimore, Maryland, Branch, assisted by Elder James C. Edwards of the same branch. A quartet of the Washington, District of Columbia, Mission, consising of Brothers Wilcox and Wilkinson and Sisters Wilkinson and McCormick rendered "The Old Rugged Cross," and "Face to Face." The services held at her home in Barcroft, Virginia, were largely attended. Interment was in the Columbia Gardens Cemetery, Arlington County, Virginia.

COLLINS.—John Monroe Collins was born at Maryville, Missouri, Augusta 29, 1880. He was united in marriage to Minnie Guy, June 3, 1923, at Pueblo, Colorado. He became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Denver, May 17, 1933, being baptized by Elder Glaude A. Smith. He departed this life at Colorado Springs, September 23, 1933, leaving to mourn, his wife; his sister, Mrs. Nannie Schaeffer, of Denver, many other relatives, and friends. The funeral services were conducted by Elder J. D. Curtis at Colorado Springs. Interment at Colorado Springs, Colorado.

The Pigeonhole

■ Celestial and Terrestrial

"We have been in the past more ready to enjoy the celestial chorus than to attend to our terrestrial chores," says Quintus Quiz, colyunist for the Christian Century.

"And may I add," offers the Pigeon, "that the hope of playing on a golden harp will decline sharply when some of our lazy Christians discover they have to take music lessons to play them!"

■ The Shortest Criticism

A story is going around of an editor who received a poem and was asked to criticize it. He wrote:

"Dear Sir:

"I have read your poem. Oh, my dear sir!"

■ The man who avoids all alcoholic drinks as poisonous will have no fear of getting the deadly "Bootleg" liquor into his system.

■ The other day I heard a mother pray: "Lord, give us the strength to honor our profession of faith." Would that all of us were acquainted with that prayer.

■ Some people never hear the call to service. Their ears are stopped up with the cotton of selfishness.

■ "I like people," announced the Pigeon a gleam in his beady eye, "but sometimes I feel like the little girl who went to her mother with this question: 'Mother, I like boys fine, but is it being boys that makes them act so queer?'"

■ Shop Notes

Li'l Willy Says: "I really know quite a lot, if I could only think of it!" Which parallels what we once heard a great man say: "Men have not so much need to be told, as they have to be reminded." The problem is to make our knowledge available for use.

This also brings up another story of the book agent who approached an old farmer who was sitting on a rail fence, chewing a straw. "Mister," said the young man, "I'd like to sell you this book. It will tell you all about how to run your farm efficiently." The farmer replied, "Son, I ain't usin' one half the knowledge I got now. Your book wouldn't be no use to me!" Some people are just too lazy to do what they know to be right.

It is fun to be modern, but don't get ahead of the procession. On January 23 the thermometer stood at 68°, and Tiny came galloping into the office with her hair flying. "I know it's silly," she cried, "but I can't help feeling spring in the air." But this morning she crept in drooping like a frost-bitten rosebud.

The Proletarian was standing on the top step of his big press, with a screw driver in his hand. He insisted on delivering an oration: "It is better to have a dictatorship that will bring about the greatest happiness to the greatest number of people, than to have a democracy run by a bunch of crooked politicians who operate the government for the benefit of gangsters and racketeers, and do nothing but exploit the people and pillage the treasury."

The World Tomorrow

The Message When the church came into existence in 1830, the Zion of which it talked was only one of the communal ideals that were in the air, and other projects for ideal group life were being tested. The others have now failed and most of them are forgotten. They were crystallized into definite plans, and because of certain defects they died. Our plan of Zion continued as an educational effort, but was kept from crystallizing, and so it has lived. It has been our waiting upon Divine guidance that has kept us from rushing into man-made plans. In view of the character of people, the long delay of more than a hundred years without realizing our ideal may be a blessing. Perhaps it has been necessary. The hope of the project, at least, has been saved. We are better off than those who tried immediately and ruined all their hopes.

A Moving World Today the world is on the move. Other churches are teaching Christian stewardships. Some of them are teaching the law of tithing. We are alone in our hope of building a separate and ideal group within the nation, but the others do look for the remaking of our national life so that it shall function along the lines of Christian idealism. Economists have been predicting a new social order, and social engineers are already drawing the tentative blueprints for a modern world.

A Chance Lost? Our message that was unique in 1830 is now becoming but one of a chorus of prophetic voices predicting a new era for humanity. If we are not ready to live up to the opportunities that the gospel brought to us at that time, it appears that the initiative will be taken from us, and the work of God may be carried on by other people. There are indications that He will not wait forever for any one set of people to make up their minds.

Building Material There is a loud cry abroad, as well as in the church, for the Kingdom of God. But one looks in vain, whether in the church or out of it, for suitable building material. There are certain minimum standards of righteousness, intelligence, training, and devotion that no group has yet attained, without which it would be folly to make the attempt to bring Zion into reality. To start unprepared would be to court disaster.

Tomorrow Meanwhile, the world of tomorrow is being formulated in the present, and out of the materials of the past. Will it be just another edition of the same old corrupt world that humanity has known so long, or is it to be a new world founded on the principles of Jesus. As we come up to the next General Conference, we should examine our hearts with regard to these things.

The Singing of Hymns

There have been few general officers of the church who have traveled more extensively among the districts and branches of the church, especially in North America, than have I in the past few years. In these travels I have made many observations to some of which I have given expression in writings in the Herald in various forms. Of one thing I have, however, not spoken, but have wanted to do so. There are, as a matter of course, a number of our hymns which are commonly sung. One of my great desires, which I might speak of as an ideal, is that there shall be developed throughout the church a standard of congregational singing which shall approximate that of a well-trained choir in quality. I have envisioned the work of the music department developing such coordination and cooperation among the choirs of the church that when the singers assemble at the general conferences that with a few general rehearsals a great chorus might become a permanent feature of the conference, and eventually develop a presentation which will be very attractive.

When that is accomplished, it will mean that the congregations in their hymn singing will approximate a uniformity, for as the choirs sing, so the congregations will sing eventually. I have observed a wide variation in the manner of singing some of our most well-known hymns; and the greatest variation is in the matter of tempo. This should not be, for hymns are written with definite time and expression in view or mind by the writers. I have heard some good old hymns ruined or at least marred by being sung at too fast a tempo, others spoiled by being sung too slowly. This may easily be remedied, if choir leaders and song leaders will observe the metronome number of such hymns, and these numbers will be found in the new hymnal especially.

I cannot too strongly recommend that choir and song leaders observe carefully the designated tempo of our hymns. Sister Mabel Carlile, with whom I was discussing this matter, when I suggested I would editorially express myself on this said: "Be sure to tell your readers, especially the song leaders, that Wagner said that 'tempo is the soul of music.'” So I pass it on by saying that for each of our fine hymns there is a certain tempo by which the best results are reached. A sweetly flowing melody is ruined when sung jerkily or too rapidly, while the joyful songs of praise and thanksgiving are quite as surely spoiled by lugubrious dragging.

Let us keep in step by learning to sing our hymns well together, in spirit, movement, and interpretation, as the writers designed. To bring this about is and should be one of the tasks of the music department and our general music leaders.

Do You Want a Market?

A New Outlet Proposed for Small Manufacturers

Are you making some standard article or product that you wish to sell? Would you like to open up an entirely new market? If you are, this announcement will be of great interest to you.

Many church people are manufacturing articles of standard quality and products of real merit. Because of limited means, however, they have not been able to advertise, and their wares have not come to the attention of other church people.

If there is sufficient demand for such a service, the Herald Publishing House is willing to undertake measures to bring the sellers and the buyers of the church together. This plan would in no way interfere with marketing plans already in operation. It would simply extend the market.

An advertisement in the back of this issue explains the details of an inquiry which is being sent out to interested parties, by which this plan may be set in operation.

If you know anybody in your branch or district who should be interested in this move, urge him to get in touch with us. Action should be taken very soon. If sufficient numbers of manufacturers apply, a catalogue will be published, and we want every producer or manufacturer in the church to be represented.

We want this move to be conducted from the first on the safest possible lines. We want to handle only dependable good quality products. That is why we shall require all who participate to fill out a special questionnaire which we will be glad to send. These questionnaires must be filled out completely and satisfactorily before we can transact business.

Consult the advertisement. Write today. If you know of some who should be interested, who are not taking the Herald, make it a point to speak to them.

Men You Ought to Know

ROY S. BUDD

Of the Quorum of Twelve

A strong sense of right and honor, and the high ideals of Christian character have governed in the life and teaching of Apostle Roy S. Budd. His example and instruction have done much to strengthen the moral fibre of the young and to remind the old of their duty. His work is marked by a sincere devotion to the teaching of the gospel as a way of life.

His gift for public speaking reappears in his children. Two daughters and one son have already distinguished themselves in school contests and show much promise for the future.

Across the Desk of the Editor in Chief

BROTHER MYRON A. MCCONLEY, writing from the Northwest of his work at Myrtle Point says: "We also made provision to strengthen the work at Myrtle Point by ordaining Walter Dancer, son of our famous David Dancer of Lamoni, to the office of elder."

Many of Walter's friends will be glad to learn of this and will expect good things from Myrtle Point as a result of this ordination.

IN A LETTER from Creston, Iowa, Brother A. D. Blair, the pastor of the branch at that place, says that they are thankful to their heavenly Father for blessings received and hopeful for the future. He says: "Our tithing is on the increase now as well as the number of members. We are trying to apply ourselves to our task more now and can already see the fruit of our efforts." He commends the Herald and expresses determination to get it into more of the homes of the Saints there.

First Principles

By L. L.

WHENEVER we encounter any new system of thought, we do not immediately ask to have the complete philosophy of it explained to us. We ask rather for a simplified outline of the fundamentals. And of course we know that there is much left to be said and explained after we have the fundamental outline firmly fixed in mind. But we do begin with them. Your little boy, on his visit to the big trimotored airplane, does not ask the engineers about stresses and strains, and tensile strengths of metals. He is interested in the wings, the propeller, and the pilot's controls, which are, after all, the fundamental requirements of an airplane, no matter how important the engineering theory may be.

There is a story of a city man who was visiting his country cousin. They were out in the big barn, and the country cousin was exhibiting his fine fat mules with considerable pride. As they passed a certain stall, one vigorous mule fanned the city cousin's coat tails with a flashing pair of heels, lifting him over into a pile of straw. "I didn't know he would do that," cried the city cousin. "That is one of the first things you need to know about mules," said the country cousin. "I thought you knew it."

There are some things that people ought to know about mules, or they will get kicked. And there are some things they ought to know about life, or it, too, will kick them.

Everything exists or proceeds upon some very few fundamental principles: republics and monarchies, dictatorships, revolutions, and political parties. And even churches and religious philosophies have their basic principles. There are certain first things that we need to know, concerning the gospel of Christ.

"We believe in the six fundamental principles of the gospel, named in the sixth chapter of Hebrews." Thus reads the fifth item in the epitome of faith of the church.

When Saint Paul wrote his letter to the Hebrews, he showed himself to be a master of Hebraic law and literature, as well as an adroit witness for Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ, the Messiah of ancient prophecy. That vision and experience which had come to him on the road to Damascus had changed his whole life, and he had never thereafter faltered in the faith that he espoused at that time. To his keen intellect and his thorough knowledge of the religion of his time, he added the zeal and devotion of the martyr, never to be relaxed while life lasted.

Saint Paul knew the Hebrew people well, and he understood the workings of their minds, as well as the habitual prejudices that got in the way of their thinking. It is not to be wondered at that he supported his assertions in those first five chapters of his letter with copious references and quotations from their sacred literature. Although there were no chapter divisions, as we understand them today, in the early manuscripts of the Hebrew letter, we find that each of those chapters proposes and establishes some definite statement about Christ, as Paul is careful to call the Master in this letter. The five points that Paul was intent upon impressing upon the minds of his Hebrew readers were as follows: (1) Christ is supreme; (2) Christ, through the incarnation and residence among men, made salvation possible; (3) Christ is the Apostle and High Priest of the profession of faith; (4) Christ makes possible a period of rest for those who are numbered among the people of God; (5) Christ alone has the authority.

Thus, before going on with his masterly dissertation on the way of life which should lead men "on to perfection," Saint Paul turned for a last summary of the fundamental principles of the gospel of Christ which has stood for all time since as a list of the minimum essentials of the covenants and sacraments positively necessary to the Christian experience. We read them to you from the first two verses of the sixth chapter of the Hebrew letter: "repentance from dead works," "faith toward God," "the doctrine of baptisms," "laying on of hands," "the resurrection of the dead," and "eternal judgment."

These are the first things that we need to know about the gospel, and about the church. We could study all the rest of it without making the proper start, and receive vast benefits from the learning. But there would be something lacking in our religious education. These are the things that Jesus taught, as we shall see as we go along with our examination of each separate principle. His followers recorded his words as he spoke of them. Saint Paul, the great scholar and protagonist of the early church, refers to them as "the principles of the doctrine of Christ." That is a designation which should settle the question of their importance at once in the mind of the person interested in the message of Jesus. And all of them are of importance.

The casual reader, without the discipline of formal education under the guidance of an instructor, may go to a library and study exactly the same books and the same subjects as the university student does. But he will never secure the benefit and full range of knowl- (Continued on page 155)

NEWS BRIEFS

Des Moines District Reports Inventory Day

December 3, the closing day of "Keep the Law" period, was Inventory Day for Des Moines District, Iowa, and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, of Independence, Missouri, was the guest speaker for Des Moines Saints. On this day one hundred and ten inventories were filed and a number, eager to comply with the financial law of the church, paid their tithing or made offerings.

Missionaries Help Decatur Congregation

Members of the branch at Decatur, Illinois, received inspiration and new courage from the two-week series of meetings conducted there last November by Patriarch and Sister Richard Baldwin. During the series seven were baptized.

Indianapolis Has Service for the Sick

On a recent Sunday when Missionary J. O. Dutton was visiting the Hoosier capital, all the Saints fasted and prayed for the sick. The sermon that morning, preached by Brother Dutton, was on "Healing." At the close, Elders C. A. Nolan, W. P. Creviston, A. W. Gage, and J. O. Dutton administered to six ailing members.

Duluth Church Building Clear of Debt

The women's department of Duluth, Minnesota, have cleared the branch of all debt on the church building. To do this they have engaged in many enterprises.

Outstanding Record For Bisbee Arizona

Bisbee Branch reports a gain of two hundred and fifty percent in baptisms since 1932, and the financial clerk records a more than five hundred percent gain in tithing and offerings since 1932. This branch has a fully organized priesthood, and has adopted a plan of activity enabling it to cooperate with the general church in every undertaking.

Doctor Joseph Luff Writes Toronto Paper

A letter from Doctor Joseph Luff, of Independence, to The Globe, Toronto, Ontario, appearing in the issue of January 20, 1934, is of interest to his friends everywhere. Here is his communication to the paper:

"My Dear Globe: I congratulate you on the achievement that permits me here (eight miles from Kansas City) to sit in my home and listen to the world's news as it, in clear tones, rolls from The Globe office over the radio, starting memories of the long ago.

"Sixty-eight years ago I was a route boy, engaged in carrying The Globe to its city subscribers in Toronto, the city of my birth. Later I was employed in the mailing room, and still later had frequent occasion to visit the stereotyping department when carrying the type-forms there from the Christian Guardian office, where I was employed as a printer's apprentice.

"My mother used to pick berries, as a child, where the public buildings of Toronto stand today, and she often used to interest me by relating incidents connected with 'Muddy York' as the place was then called.

"One sister of mine still resides in Toronto (Mrs. Thomas Smellie, of 69 Walker Avenue). She and her family keep my thoughts linked to the old city, and I am charmed by the magnificence of its growth in dimensions and character, and proud to think of it as the city of my nativity.

"From this you will readily sense the reason for my special relish for the feast spread by the radio when The Toronto Globe is serving. Though in my eighty-second year, my appetite is still keen for it, and in this I am fully shared by the little wife whom I wedded in Toronto over sixty years ago."

Jerome E. Wildermuth Is Critically Ill

Elder Jerome E. Wildermuth, a former missionary, is critically ill with blood poisoning at the Independence Sanitarium. He has had five blood transfusions and it is hoped that with good care and the faith and prayers of his friends he may yet recover. Brother Wildermuth's home is in the Ozarks of southern Missouri, but for years he labored as a church appointee in North Dakota. He will be remembered by many Saints whose prayers are requested in his behalf.

Utah Mormon Internal Controversy Over Polygamy

By Elbert A. Smith

Some months ago we published in these columns a series of articles in review of an "Official Statement" coming from the Presidency of the Utah Mormon Church on the subject of the present practice of polygamy. (Those articles, now in tract form, may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.) The pronouncement in question appeared in the Deseret News for June 17, 1933. It announced that certain members of the Utah Mormon Church had apparently banded together to keep alive the practice of polygamy. Such were denounced and threatened with excommunication and their practices termed "corrupt, adulterous practices."

Now appears one J. W. Musser, of Salt Lake City, as champion of the accused persons and in revolt against the ruling of their Presidency. His recently published brochure of some ninety pages, entitled, The New and Everlasting Covenant of Marriage, comes from the Truth Publishing Company, 528 Atlas Building, Salt Lake City. How extensive the revolt against the ruling of the Mormon Church officials may be we have no means of knowing. Mr. Musser claims that the controversy has "divided the people and is causing a chaotic condition throughout the church." Probably this is an extreme statement such as would come from a zealous propagandist. However, the publicity given to the pronouncement coming from the church officials, and to similar proclamations that preceded it, indicates that a considerable number of people are offering resistance to the present program of the church officials in prohibiting the practice of polygamy. On that point Mr. Musser says further:

"The Manifesto, [The Woodruff Manifesto prohibiting polygamy] did not emanate from the Lord. It was not adhered to by those who chiefly sponsored it. It was not intended, when signed, to be regarded as a revelation from the Lord—but only a political document forced upon the Church by its bitterest enemies and who were known to be enemies of God. Its covenants have never been kept by the Church leaders, and now, even in the face of the 'Official Statement' referred to, it is being repudiated by retaining men in positions who have been and are now living in violation of its expressed meaning. On the other hand, God's work is going on. The Patriarchal [polygamous] order of marriage is being lived in its fullness. Children are being born under the covenant. Faithful men are pledged to use their God-given rights to see that this divine principle is taught to and practiced by those of the Saints who are not afraid to lay down their lives in defense of the truth. It cannot be stopped by mortal power. Penitentiary walls or priestly castigations will avail nothing. The work will go on and God will be glorified."—Pages 58, 59.

MR. MUSSER'S FUNDAMENTAL POSTULATE

Mr. Musser's fundamental position seems to be that Celestial Marriage (including polygamy) is a vital part of Mormon theology, absolutely essential to salvation and "exaltation" hereafter. He says:

"That the Patriarchal order of marriage is a vital tenet of the gospel of Jesus Christ cannot truthfully be denied. It is an eternal principle founded on eternal law. It is the gateway through which mortal beings reach exaltation in the Celestial Glory. Without it there can be no such exaltation. Without it there could be no God—no builder and ruler of universes. From Father Adam down through the ages this order of marriage has obtained among the faithful of God's children. In it is comprehended the eternity of the marriage covenant. It means the perpetuation of the lives. Under its divine sanction children are born throughout the eternities and men become God's creators and rulers of worlds. Just as well might man expect to reverse the law of gravity or pull himself up to the moon by his boot straps as to enter into the presence of the heavenly Father without first subscribing to this order of marriage."—Page 9.

Mr. Musser's argument in the foregoing is well supported by the very terms of the so-called "revelation" enjoining celestial marriage and polygamy as accepted by the Utah Mormon Church. Mr. Musser's postulate goes on with the premise that "plurality of wives," polygamy, is just as truly a vital part of the whole plan of "celestial marriage"; that it cannot be divorced, either in theory or practice, and its practice is vital to the whole philosophy of Mormonism here and hereafter.

Again his premise seems in full accord with the so-called "revelation" on "celestial marriage." The practice of polygamy was enjoined in it and polygamy was the burden of the revelation quite as much as sealing or marrying for eternity. To fail to obey meant eternal condemnation. The present leaders of the Utah Church seem content or constrained to abandon the practice of polygamy here and now while retaining the custom of marrying for eternity. This program Mr. Musser denounces.

QUOTES FROM CHURCH LEADERS

In support of his fundamental postulate that polygamy is a vital and ineradicable part of Utah Mormon religion Mr. Musser quotes from their various presidents and other leading men: Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow, Orson Pratt, and many others. On that point Joseph Fielding Smith, who preceded Grant as president of the Mormon Church, is especially clear. Musser quotes him as follows:

"Some people have supposed that the doctrine of plural marriage was a sort of superfluity, or non-essential to the salvation or exaltation of mankind. In other words, some of the Saints have said, and believe, that a man with one wife, sealed to him by the authority of the Priesthood for time and eternity, will receive an exaltation as great and glorious, if he is faithful, as he possibly could with more than one. I want here to enter my solemn protest against this idea, for I know it is false . . . The marriage of one woman to a man for time and eternity by the sealing power, according to the law of God, is a fulfillment of the Celestial law of marriage in part . . . but this is only the beginning of the law, not the whole of it. Therefore, whoever has imagined that he could obtain a fulness of the blessings pertaining to this Celestial law, by complying with only a portion of its conditions, has deceived himself. He cannot do it. . . ."—Extract from sermon, Journal of Discourses, volume 20, pages 26-31.

The foregoing shows how polygamy is linked up in Mormon theology with the processes of eternal salvation. Less to the point but more vehement is the quotation from Woodruff, who some time later was forced to issue the "Manifesto":

"My voice is that we will obey God. . . . I will not desert my wives and my children and disobey the commandments of God, for the sake of accommodating the public clamor of a nation steeped in sin and ripened for the damnation of hell!"—From epistle of Apostle Wilford Woodruff, Millennial Star, volume 41, pages 242-3.

CLAIMS A POLICY OF DECEPTION FORCED

Mr. Musser resents the conditions induced in the church by the Manifesto. He quotes Bishop Heber Bennion:

"Many of us have entered this principle (of plural marriage) since the Manifesto, and many of the Leaders, living openly in this principle, are being sustained in high positions of responsibility in the Church."

Commenting on Bennion's statement Mr. Musser says:

"Heber Bennion was in a position to know what he was talking about, being for a long time a leading Bishop in the Church and then a High Counselor in one of the leading Stakes.

"The very nature of the Manifesto was to breed liars. The interpretation placed upon it by its authors, being to bind the Saints to conform to all laws, would force husbands to abandon their wives and children. No man possessing an ounce of honor would do it, and yet all were pledged to do that very thing. . . . Men were either forced to falsify the truth or go to prison; and many of them, in their weakness, chose the former. To 'lie' under the circumstances, was not sin. 'What can they (the leaders) expect of us now' said a high Church official to the writer, 'we have been taught to lie from the cradle to the grave. . . .' And even if a 'white fib' be told to keep a man and his family from being destroyed, wouldn't it be a saintly deed? . . . Father Adam chose the lesser of two evils, and that is just what many of the Saints are doing today. . . . they choose to obey God rather than man."—Pages 63, 64.

It is very evident that Mr. Musser and his associates intend to defy the law in this matter and if they deem it necessary to do so to resort to deception to escape penalties.

ALLEGED GENESIS OF PRESENT REVOLT

Mr. Musser claims that their one-time president, John Taylor, prior to his death, received a revelation enjoining perpetual obedience to the law of plural marriage and forbidding any recession on that point; furthermore that he did at that time (1836) set apart men to have power "in perpetuity" to solemnize plural marriages. These men it is alleged are carrying on that work and intend to continue to carry it on.

The brochure closes with a reiteration of determination on the part of many Utah Mormons to "obey God rather than man" in this matter:

"Numbered among the Latter-Day Saints are thousands of men and women who have in very deed dedicated their all unto the Lord, not even withholding their lives. . . . It is to such that the necessity of living the full law appeals. They know that a full salvation and exaltation must rest on the observance of the whole law and that the rejection of the same by the Church does not excuse them from the inexorable demands of the law. . . . They are burning their bridges behind them and are accepting the practice of plural marriage with a faith and stoicism sublime and immovable. And the greater the opposition manifested both from within and without, the stronger grows their determination to stand firm.

"The writer bears his solemn testimony that these things are true; that the Holy Priesthood continues to function on earth until Christ comes to reign as King of Kings as is His right. This authority cannot be removed by ecclesiastical edict. Children are being born in the New and Everlasting Covenant [plural marriage] and will so continue. Hundreds of the Saints are being led to inquire of the Lord where to go for the desired blessing, [to be married to polygamous wives] and their pleadings are not in vain."—Pages 86, 87.

TIME HAS BROUGHT STARTLING CHANGES

We have felt that our people would be interested to keep in mind and be informed concerning this internal struggle in Utah Mormonism. Naturally our sympathy is with the Mormon authorities in their apparent effort to stamp out the practice of polygamy. Yet the thought is smile provoking that those authorities are now branding as apostates men who practice polygamy, while in years gone by they branded us as apostates because we would not practice it. We wish that they would now go the whole way and cease to teach that polygamy is a divine principle; their teaching and belief will constantly tend to find expression among their members in practice. The whole matter has involved them in grief and confusion since that day in 1852 when they accepted as divine the "revelation" enjoining polygamy, and it will continue to do so until that spurious revelation is repudiated in all its parts and expunged from their Scripture.

Time has brought startling vindication of the wisdom of the early leaders of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the inspiration of the word of (Continued on page 146)

The Book of Mormon Manuscripts

By S. A. Burgess

AS IS WELL KNOWN, Martin Harris and Emma Smith first acted as scribes for Joseph Smith, jr., in the transcribing of the Book of Mormon. Later, one of the Whitmers, Christian Whitmer, also helped, but the bulk of the writing was done by Oliver Cowdery after he came to help Joseph Smith, April 5, 1829. Then, for the first time, Joseph Smith had a scribe who could work steadily. As a result the copyright of the Book of Mormon was taken out the eleventh of June, 1829.

But before the manuscript was taken to the printer, Lucy Smith tells us in her Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith, in the end of chapter 28, that after securing the copyright Joseph received a commandment that Oliver Cowdery should transcribe the whole manuscript, that he should take but one copy at a time to the office, so that if one were destroyed there would still be a copy remaining. Also that he should be guarded in going to and from the office and the manuscript at home should also be guarded. This may account for the fact that the manuscript was first taken to E. B. Grandin, of Palmyra, in August, 1829. Yet not till March, 1830, was the first copy ready for the market, and April 6, 1830, the church was organized.

Later, at Kirtland, in 1837, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery brought forth the second edition of the Book of Mormon, again a manuscript edition. It is clear that one manuscript was kept by Joseph Smith, jr., and the other was retained and cared for by Oliver Cowdery.

NAUVOO HOUSE

As to the one manuscript, Joseph Smith, jr., placed it in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House in October, 1841, and this manuscript remained there until Major Lewis Bidamon tore down the wing and built up the corner of Nauvoo House. It must be remembered that the Nauvoo House was never completed as originally planned. The brick work was carried up only to the window coping of the second story. As a result water evidently seeped down through the bricks and stones. In any event, when the stones were removed and the cornerstone opened it was found to have been cracked by the weather, and frost and water had almost completely destroyed this manuscript. A few pages, however, were saved and half of them sent to Joseph Fielding Smith in Utah, and the other half to Joseph Smith at Lamoni, Iowa. As to those sheets which were sent to Lamoni, they were so affected by frost and water that exposure to the air caused the writing to fade and the paper to crumble to pieces.

As to the pages sent to Utah, we have seen a photo showing a number of small scraps, as though the pages had disintegrated into several small pieces. (Deseret News, August 8, 1931.) We have also been informed that as late as 1923 there existed one page there between glass and so preserved. We also note in the Deseret News for August 8, 1931, that Joseph Fielding Smith, jr., had in his possession for many years twenty pages or ten sheets of this manuscript, and that a search is now being made for them. Also, we are there informed, one sheet is owned by A. B. Kester, 1155 Yale Avenue, Salt Lake City. It seems altogether probable that if any of this manuscript remains it is hardly more than a sheet or two. We should be glad to learn that these sheets still exist, but it seems probable that hardly more than that still remains at the most.

OLIVER COWDERY AND HIS MANUSCRIPT

The manuscript in the hands of Oliver Cowdery at his death at Richmond, Missouri, in March, 1850, passed into the hands of his brother-in-law, David Whitmer. David Whitmer prized very highly the possession of this manuscript, and we find that some who were closely associated with him believed it to be the only manuscript, as it was in fact the only complete manuscript in existence, but, as set forth above, it was not the only one which had been made, as two complete manuscripts were prepared before any printing was done.

When David Whitmer died in 1887, this manuscript passed shortly afterward, to George Schweich, the grandson of David Whitmer. We are informed that a deed was executed by the widow of David Whitmer and his daughter, Mrs. Schweich, to George Schweich, but we have not verified this. Still later, in the spring of 1903, George Schweich turned over to Joseph Smith, President of the Reorganized Church, for that church, this manuscript of the Book of Mormon, the John Whitmer History, the signed sheet of characters taken by Martin Harris to Professor Anthon and Doctor Mitchell, a manuscript containing a copy of parts of the Inspired Version, and a further manuscript of the early revelations, which include the last page of the Book of Commandments and continued with that particular revelation to its end as given in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. This was followed in turn by the several other revelations later received. These manuscripts were delivered in the presence of Frederick M. Smith, E. L. Kelley, R. S. Salyards, Rodrick May and Walter W. Smith.

From this manuscript there was published in 1908 what has been called the Authorized Edition of the Book of Mormon, and this has been the basis of the various editions published by this church since 1908, with the exception that the old plates for the large type Book of Mormon have continued in use and some of these large-type books are still sold.

We do not think there is anything in the foregoing which should meet with serious controversy. The whole matter is one of fact and not for dispute or propaganda. All careful students of the church should be able to agree upon the facts.

PRINTER'S MARKS

The principal value of the manuscript is its historical interest and great pains have been taken for its preservation. Writers of the Reorganization have clearly stressed the fact that this manuscript contains the printer's marks and so was the copy used by the printer in printing the Book of Mormon.

The assumption has been made that the first copy made was retained and that only the second copy was ever taken to the printer. We are not aware of any record at the time which so clearly states. As it happens, however, this manuscript to the extent of about one third does bear the printer's marks. Pages were cut at the end of a "take." But it also happens that considerably over half, about two thirds, does not bear the printer's marks, that even the backs of many of the pages have not been cut. So that if only the second copy went to the printer it would follow that this is two thirds the first copy and one third of it the second copy.

The testimony of the witnesses at the end of this manuscript is in the handwriting of Oliver Cowdery. It is not the original page signed by each, but is written as part of the manuscript. But it is not certain that the original testimony as signed by the witnesses was ever placed with either of the two manuscripts. It is a matter that is subject to assertion but does not appear to be capable of proof. When the testimony was written there was no manuscript to which to attach it. Hence it is not even probable that the original sheet signed by the witnesses was included with either manuscript. The original sheet of characters, however, was and is with this manuscript.

HAND WRITING

According to Lucy Smith, Oliver Cowdery was directed to transcribe the whole manuscript so that the second manuscript was to be made by him, so far as the record goes. This manuscript from David Whitmer is in large part in the handwriting of Oliver Cowdery, but there seems to be no record that Emma Smith or Martin Harris had anything to do with the second manuscript nor, for that matter, Christian Whitmer. Oliver Cowdery appears to have been the chief scribe of the first manuscript. This manuscript from David Whitmer, however, shows four different handwritings and these have been identified as the handwritings of Martin Harris, Emma Smith and Christian Whitmer, as well as of Oliver Cowdery.

The following excerpt is taken from a "Book of Mormon Committee Report," Saints' Herald, volume 31, pages 545, 546, (printed in 1884, nineteen years before it was delivered to our keeping):

"In regard to the Manuscript itself, we have to say, that it is beyond doubt the 'original' or the one written by Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, Christian Whitmer and Emma Smith, and probably Alva Hale. The handwriting of Oliver Cowdery and Christian Whitmer being identified by the Whitmer family; Emma Smith's writing being recognized by Brother Joseph and Brother Alexander, her sons. Known specimens of Cowdery's writing were shown to the committee and sameness noted. It appears that they relieved each other, as the handwriting frequently changes. The Manuscript shows different writers also, in the spelling, as some, particularly Oliver Cowdery, spell more correctly. The writers evidently spelled as Joseph pronounced the words. There is no evidence that we could gather that the words were kept before the vision of Joseph till correctly spelled, as some imagine, but they were written as pronounced, and when read to Joseph would of course sound as he had pronounced them. Proper names, which Joseph could not always pronounce, and which the amanuensis did not know how to spell, were spelled out by Joseph; also any word that he could not pronounce. . . . Father Whitmer states that very soon after the Palmyra Edition was published, Joseph Smith placed the Manuscript in Oliver Cowdery's care, with the solemn injunction to preserve it carefully and sacredly, for that the church might fall into transgression as did the Nephites of old, and that the Manuscript should be kept from falling into the hands of transgressors. He further states, that about the close of 1849, just before Oliver Cowdery's death, he (Cowdery) placed it in his hands. He declares that the Manuscript in his hands is the one used by the printer, and that he had every opportunity of knowing that this is the original."

ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT

Much is made of a statement expressed in a manuscript believed to have been dictated by Joseph Smith, jr., to his clerk. In this it is stated that the "original" manuscript of the Book of Mormon has been placed in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House. This entry is dated December 29, 1841, and it is stated that President Joseph Smith laid the cornerstone on the second of October, 1841. There is no dispute but that the copy he placed there was one of these two manuscripts, and so "original."

Some have supposed that the two manuscripts were divided in some way, so that the one retained by Joseph Smith was partly the first manuscript and partly the second, leaving the one in the hands of Oliver Cowdery also part of each of these two manuscripts. There is no distinct record that that was done, or what was done.

It would seem that quite properly both could be called original manuscripts of the Book of Mormon as both were made before the first edition was printed, and one manuscript was taken to the printer from which the Palmyra edition was printed.

WHICH WAS FIRST

The question of which was first, or whether both were parts of the first, and both contained parts of the second manuscript, is open to long discussion. We simply submit the facts so far as they are known and leave the reader to judge.

It seems to be agreed that these two manuscripts were both written before the first Book of Mormon was printed. Also that the second copy was made by Oliver Cowdery, as the result of a commandment to Joseph Smith, the martyr.

Our friends of Utah have repeatedly urged that the one placed in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House was the first one made. They base that on an "unprinted history of the church," though this part has been printed several times. Nor is it a complete history. In that one line reads (among items placed in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House):

"The original manuscript of the Book of Mormon."

We may say we have never questioned that a manuscript was so placed. The facts above would justify calling either or both of these manuscripts original. A serious query in many minds is, Would the chief manuscript be thus disposed of—placed in a cornerstone?

E. C. Briggs states that in 1884 he called upon David Whitmer and among other things Whitmer said:

"I was present when Joseph gave these manuscripts to Oliver. Oh, it was such a solemn charge. He (Joseph) said, I feel it in my bones that there will come a division in the church, like it was with the Nephites and Lamanites, and if these manuscripts are not preserved, I fear that the church may be injured, and when you deliver them up to others, be sure they are left in good hands."—Saints' Herald, volume 31, page 396.

That sounds reasonable. While the story that Joseph Smith said the manuscript was a burden and source of trouble does not sound reasonable. For history shows no trouble he had on account of the possession of that manuscript. The manuscript is of value as a check and proof as well as a relic.

As to the manuscript now in our hands, the folding appears clear:

First, this is the only manuscript of the Book of Mormon now in existence which is complete or even nearly complete.

Second, as history clearly states and possession is shown from 1829 to the present date, it has been conceded to be at least one of these two manuscripts which were prepared prior to the printing of the Palmyra edition.

Third, this manuscript in part shows the printer's marks. Some of it has been clipped at the end of the "take." That is true of about one third. As to the balance, it does not bear the printer's marks. Much of it has not even had the backs of the folio sheets cut. Parts of it are written with the sheets inserted, one inside of another. If only the second manuscript was taken to the printer, it would seem that more than half of this is the first manuscript.

Fourth, the character of the paper in size and appearance is similar to the sheets taken from the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House.

Fifth, we are informed that there were several scribes to the first manuscript, but that Oliver Cowdery was commanded to transcribe the whole manuscript for the second copy. This manuscript is for the large part in the handwriting of Oliver Cowdery, but it also shows the handwriting of the others named as scribes, Emma Smith, Martin Harris, and Christian Whitmer.

Sixth, we claim that Divinity directed and protected the production of the Book of Mormon. There remains therefore the additional fact that though this manuscript was long kept tied in old newspapers and lying under the bed at David Whitmer's home, it has been preserved. We have been told of efforts to steal it. Old residents of Richmond who do not belong to any branch of the church tell stories of how it was protected in the hands of David Whitmer. They also point out that when a tornado swept through there and destroyed many of the buildings, it blew down the home of David Whitmer, but he at the time was sleeping in a little frame lean-to, and had there this manuscript. This was not damaged, though the house was destroyed.

In the Deseret News of August 8, 1831, page 6, the foot of the second column it states that David Whitmer said:

"While camping around here in a tent, all my effects exposed to the weather, everything in the trunk became mouldy, etc., but they (the manuscripts) were preserved, not even being discolored."

As it happens this is a reprint of the earlier statement made by Joseph Fielding Smith, president of the Utah church over thirty years previously.

We have, then, the fact that the manuscript placed in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House was damaged by the elements. Frost and water had cracked the stone and the manuscript and other contents were ruined. On the other hand we have a manuscript which, according to report, men have tried to steal, which has been in the path of a cyclone, and has been exposed to the weather, and yet has been preserved in safety. In justice, these facts should be kept in mind.

There appears to be much evidence that this manuscript of the Book of Mormon now in the hands of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in part at least, if not in large part, is the manuscript first written by Emma Smith, Martin Harris, Oliver Cowdery and Christian Whitmer under the direct dictation of Joseph Smith. We merely sum up the facts for what they may be worth. This manuscript does not include the original testimony of the three witnesses nor the original testimony by the eight witnesses in which each man signed for himself. There was turned over with it, however, the original sheet of characters taken by Martin Harris to Professor Anthon and to Doctor Mitchell.

It is also the only manuscript which can possibly claim to be original which has been preserved in its entirety and is therefore complete.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

The above was written at the request of Elder J. W. A. Bailey for his information in answering questions. But as many others have asked, it is now published, not in a spirit of controversy, but to state the facts and let the reader judge.

But before this was put on the press, in Liahona for September 12, 1933, there appears an article on "Original Manuscript of the Book of Mormon," which is stated to be taken from the Deseret News of December 23, 1899. With this is published a "facsimile of one of its pages," but the date when this facsimile was made is not stated. The reader is left to infer it was this year (1933). The article in fact says, "the same is still in existence here," meaning the Book of Mormon manuscript taken from the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House. The casual reader may not note that was in 1899, not 1933, that this statement was made.

We do not know if this statement is fair to Joseph Fielding Smith, late president of that church, or not. It contains a number of inaccuracies.

As to the question of the original, that is presented sufficiently above. We have tried to present the known evidence.

As to the manuscript placed in the Nauvoo House (cornerstone) it cannot be true that Franklin D. Richards secured the "balance of the manuscript" other than that which was received by Joseph Fielding Smith, because our late President Joseph Smith received part, and so did others. Whether Franklin D. Richards received any part and if so, how much we do not know. But there are many reasons for believing that very little of that manuscript remains today (1933), if any does.

On two or three occasions to our personal knowledge our late President, Joseph Smith III, discussed this question publicly. He stated that when his stepfather Lewis C. Bidamon (not L. A. Bideman, as Liahona has it) tore down the southeast corner of the Nauvoo House, he found a box in the cornerstone with papers, coins, and a manuscript. The stone had disintegrated. The whole matter was ruined. Part of the manuscript as soon as it became dry fell to pieces, but some parts were preserved which were still legible. He (Bidamon) gave part to Joseph Smith III, and told him he had sent or given some to "cousin Joseph F. Smith, in Utah. The portion he (Brother Joseph) had soon faded." "They may have a portion in Utah, but I doubt if any portion of it is legible." That was in 1908.

Many visitors the past twenty years have stated they have seen one sheet or been informed one sheet still remained between glass, and was exhibited as all that remained of that Book of Mormon manuscript in Utah. The last time we were so informed was in 1923. In 1931, as already stated, an article was reprinted from the pen of Joseph F. Smith, sr., with some added notes by the present church historian in Salt Lake City, Elder Joseph Fielding Smith, jr., to the effect that his father once possessed ten sheets between pages three and twenty-two, and that a diligent search was being made for them. Nothing was said of that department owning a complete manuscript.

For our part it is only a question of fact. We should be glad to learn that more of that manuscript still exists in legible form; or that the portion received by Joseph Fielding Smith, sr., is still in existence. If it is, the fact could be readily established by independent witnesses. It is merely a question of fact, not of controversy. The best evidence available would indicate not more than one or two sheets at most are still in existence.

There are some possible points of controversy in which we are not involved. Late publications by them deny emphatically that the Utah church ever offered anything for the manuscript while in the hands of David Whitmer. Joseph F. Smith is stated to have denied this several times about 1899. But David Whitmer had, evidently told several that some such offer was made. One account appears in Saints' Herald, volume 31, page 396, in an account of a visit of E. C. Briggs to David Whitmer. We do not quote or discuss at length as David Whitmer and Joseph F. Smith, as well as Orson Pratt, are all dead, and David Whitmer was dead sometime in 1899, and Orson Pratt even longer.

In 1901, in the Latter Day Saints Biographical Encyclopedia, by Andrew Jensen, volume 1, page 267 to 268, there appears quite clearly the statement that Orson Pratt did approach David Whitmer and made tentative suggestions, but David Whitmer refused to consider a sale or barter.

"Joseph F. Smith: We would not offer you money for the manuscript, but would like to see them preserved in some manner where they would be safe from casualties and caprices of men, in some institution that will not die as man dies." Page 267. Evidently then he did not so strongly object to possessing this manuscript. Then his statement continues that the next day after seeing the manuscript, "Elder Orson Pratt again felt closely after the subject of procuring the manuscript, but we found that nothing would move him on this point." Evidently Orson Pratt did try twice to secure it.

All of this was before the Reorganized Church had possession of this manuscript or the other manuscripts turned over with it.

We have presented frankly the facts concerning the manuscript in our possession and leave each reader to draw his own conclusions. If there exists any substantial, legible part of the other manuscript, which can be seen and examined under proper safeguards, we shall be glad to find that established. There is no need nor place for recriminations.

The preceding was prepared several weeks ago and placed in the hands of the Herald editors. Today, December 6, quite unsolicited, we received a letter written to an interested inquirer by Joseph Fielding Smith, Historian of the church in Utah, as follows:

CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS

OFFICE OF THE CHURCH HISTORIAN,
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH

December 1, 1933.

Mr. C. W. Mitchell,
Bryan, Brazos County, Texas.

Dear Sir:

When you wrote your letter asking about the manuscript of the Book of Mormon, I was in Texas where I spent most of the month of November. This will explain the reason why your letter was not answered earlier.

You have evidently not read carefully the article in the Liahona, for it does not say that the manuscript of the Book of Mormon is in Salt Lake City. On page 148 it definitely states that Joseph Smith placed the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House, which statement we have in affidavit form by eyewitness-

"Biliousness"

By A. W. Teel, M. D.

Church Physician

I have the following communication from Mrs. H. H. of Maine:

"I read your articles in the Saints' Herald, each week. Would you please advise me in regard to biliousness? Myself and children are always troubled with this. Some call it jaundice. Could you send me a formula or diet correction?"

The term biliousness is an unscientific term applied by the laity to a variety of symptoms used to designate a general malaise, mental inaptitude, constipation and loss of appetite. The skin has a dingy appearance which is due to an accumulation of toxic material circulating in the blood stream, brought about by reabsorption of concentrated bile overcharged with toxic substances interfering with its antagonizing the growth of putrefactive organisms and pancreatic digestive processes and diminishing the normal amount of mucous in the bowels causing the colon to become infected by the long continued delay of the excretions in that organ which may bring about a lack of disinfecting properties that should be contained in the gastric juice because the gastric juice should render insoluble or precipitate any of the toxic substances found in the bile. By this process putrefactive bacteria are released into the intestines with the resultant additional absorption of putrefaction poisons. Nausea and the vomiting of bile that is so common with those who have severe attacks of biliousness, is believed by some investigators, causes a reverse peristalsis which may be a strong factor in its production. Most all cases have a foul breath and a coated tongue indicating that the saliva has lost its power to destroy the growth of bacteria in the mouth assisting in bringing about a general lowering of the vital resistance. A germ called the colon bacillus, a very poisonous germ, as frequently found in the bile may find its way in the mouth by the act of vomiting or the regurgitation of food. This germ is very pernicious and may cause serious trouble in persons suffering from this condition. Just now the writer recalls two cases of infection in the throat due to the colon bacillus. When the patients presented themselves for treatment the tissues had sloughed to such an extent that there was an opening extending from the inside of the throat to the outside of the neck. After a correction of the diet and a long tedious treatment the patients recovered. One wonders why this serious condition does not occur more often.

If the attacks are accompanied by headaches there is usually general muscular soreness, dizziness, noises in the ears and intolerance of light which may be accompanied with tenderness over the whole side of the head but more frequently in the back of the head on the left side or just above the eyes (frontal) or in the temple. One peculiarity about the pain is that it is rarely felt on the right side of the head and still more rarely on both sides at the same time. The average duration of this form is twenty-four hours, but may last two or three days or only a few hours. From what has already been said one must conclude that auto-intoxication must be the basic cause of these unfortunate symptoms because of the retention of putrefying food residues and body wastes in the colon.

A. W. TEEL, M. D.
Church Physician

Great relief often follows either by purging or the removal of a quantity of bile by means of the duodenal tube. In the South, calomel is frequently used for this purpose, but I do not recommend it, except in rare cases and then only under the supervision of a physician. Such treatment as a routine by the layman should be discouraged, for at best purgatives give only temporary relief and in fact may be harmful on account of adding to the already irritated and overburdened stomach. In order to have complete recovery it is necessary to reorganize the diet and general habits of living. The diet should be laxative, antitoxic and definitely and permanently adopted.

The bowels should move three times a day. In the beginning of the treatment enemas may be necessary but should not be continued too long as there is danger of contracting the enema habit. The same rule applies to the too free use of laxative medicines. The juice of a large lemon in the enema has been found to be beneficial in some cases. Meats of all kinds should be permanently omitted from the diet. In most cases eggs should be used sparingly if at all. Eggs have been found to be a contributing cause in some cases. Compliance with the Word of Wisdom and the free use of fruits and fruit juices, especially all sorts of fresh vegetables such as celery, turnips, lettuce and greens. A liberal quantity of bran should be taken with (Continued on page 146)

Striking the Low Tone of Firmness

DOROTHY CAMERON was undeniably ill. Dark circles were about her eyes, and her face was pale and pinched. She had been confined to her bed a whole week, nervous, restless, rebellious, and ready to shriek if either of the children came into the room. The Camerons had not the money to hire a nurse, and besides, Dorothy argued, she wasn't sick enough to need a nurse. And so Eldred Hampton had been helping them.

But Dorothy was not an easy patient to care for. She ate nothing and brooded a great deal. Many times during that week she had grown hysterical and cried aloud. She was a real tax on Mrs. Hampton's time, strength and patience, and yet she did not seem to realize that.

The Cameron children had grown to be very much at home in Mrs. Hampton's part of the house. She kept them there from early morning until late at night.

For two evenings now Larry had offered Eldred Hampton her help. And this evening she was sitting beside Dorothy's bed until dinner time. Rufus Cameron was not yet home.

Suddenly the prostrate woman burst into a wild laugh.

"Why—Dorothy! What's the matter?" started.

"Oh—ha ha! I'm just laughing at myself. It's—so—funny!" she shrieked propping herself up on her elbow, and pointing with her free hand at Larry. "Everything's funny—life—fate!—ha, ha! . . . And I would go and get into this on top of everything else! Enceinte, the French put it!" her voice dropped to a whisper of disgust.

What a condition of rebellion must exist in her mind, thought Larry, for her to speak in this way of a thing that should be considered sacred!

The sick woman lay motionless for several minutes. Her eyes were closed. She might be going to sleep. Larry turned her attention to the book in her lap. A few minutes before Dorothy had informed her that she did not want people reading to her; what they read did not interest her, reading was always monotonous.

Dorothy opened her eyes. They were full of tears. "Just talk to me, Larry. I'm awfully in need of some real, human sympathy."

Larry was inclined to think that she had been the recipient of much more sympathy that she deserved, and that what she now needed was discipline.

"Here I am laid up," Dorothy went on bitterly, "and will be for a long time yet—worse than this, too. You can't tell me a thing about it! I know the symptoms—have them down pat!" Her voice took on a higher key: "Larry, I don't want to have another baby. Why do I have to—oh, why?" She was weeping copiously.

No use to reason with her in this condition. It would do no good to remind

How It Began—

Larry Verne has refused to marry Greg Spurgeon in spite of the fact that she loves him, for she fears he will be called to the priesthood, and her early childhood experience makes her revolt against such a thing.

Larry's life becomes enmeshed with the lives of others in the home of Eldred Hampton, who mothers a group of people, young and old, who have no homes of their own.

Tempted to attend a costume ball with Greg, Larry yields, and is horrified by the theft of a valuable heirloom, a bracelet belonging to Eldred Hampton. In a period of repentance, she devotes herself more earnestly to the work of the church.

Trying for a time to associate with Greg on a purely friendly basis, and trying to curb the development of his ardent affection, Larry finds herself failing. Love is too strong for her, and she feels herself being swept off her feet, against her will. It seems that she must either yield, or break with Greg and not see him for a time. She breaks with him, but is very unhappy over it. Greg makes no attempt to see her, much to her disappointment.

Among the recent arrivals at the Hampton household are the Camerons, who take rooms. Mr. Cameron is a poor clerk very sincere and interested in the church. His wife, Dorothy, is extravagant, spoiled, and flighty. Their two children are beautiful. Larry has taken considerable interest in them.

her of her two adorable children. She was in no state to listen to rationalizations.

"I've been through it twice, and it's horrible! I wish—it sounds awful, Larry—but I wish I had never had them! I don't like—children! I wish I had never married! I wish I had never seen Rufus C—"

"Dorothy!" sternly. "You mustn't talk like that! It'll make you feel worse."

For a full minute there was no sound in the room but hysterical crying. Presently she was more quiet; she was thinking again, her eyes brooding, the corners of her mouth drooping. "Nobody sympathizes with me," heavily. "Everyone thinks I ought to go right on having a family and like it. Just let them try having the babies!—I hate being poor! I hate being a drudge!" The words hissed between her teeth like live things.

"Why Larry, I'm only five years older than you—and I'd like freedom and time to play and parties and all the things girls love. And instead of that—here I am, enceinte. Enceinte, I tell you!" Her high voice cracked, and again she was sobbing.

Forcing herself to be calm and patient, Larry laid aside her book and stood beside the bed looking down at the weeping woman. She rolled her head back and forth on the pillow, and her short hair was matted from the almost constant movement.

" . . . And we're so poor, and Rufus' job is uncertain. We'll—we'll end in the poorhouse yet—I know we will! We're headed in that direction now!"

Larry was wondering who was chiefly to blame for this condition, whether it was a husband whose economic possibilities were not great, or a wife who was a millstone about his neck—a constant complainer, an unwise spender.

" . . . Oh, I wish I'd die this time, Larry—honest, I do. I hope I do die!" Her small fists were clenched until they were as white as the bed sheets. "If I die—then there won't be any more children!" Abruptly she turned her face to the wall, tears seeping from under her closed eyelids.

Best just to let her rave until she was exhausted, thought Larry.

But Dorothy continued to talk, "When I die I'll leave you one of the children? Ha—ha! Would you like Dorothy Pearl? or maybe you'd rather have the one that's coming?" she flung over her shoulder.

"Dorothy! you must hush. You're not yourself."

"Oh, yes I am myself! You just don't know me. You're like Rufus when he married me—he didn't know me!" And again that high, horrible weeping.

Larry could endure it no longer. "Will you get hold of yourself?" she shook the slender shoulder nearest her. "You're absurd, Dorothy Cameron—absurd I tell you! Why don't you have some backbone, keep your troubles to yourself, and face the world?"

"Now you're talking like Rufus," babbled the other, "just like Rufus. You two are alike in some ways. . . . Maybe when I die having this baby, you'll marry Rufus. That would be a good thing. Then you could have all the children!"

"That's enough, Dorothy Cameron," Larry's anger flamed. "If that's what's on your mind, you needn't expect me to come in and listen to you complain and cry. Do you know what I think you are? A coward! A downright coward! If that's the way you feel, you ought to die and get out of the wa—" What was she saying? And to a sick woman, too! Instantly her hot words died in her throat.

But Dorothy had stopped her wailing and was watching her with a dazed expression. "You don't know anything about it!" she slowly returned. "You've never had any children. You have no right to talk to me that way—"

"Perhaps I haven't," Larry broke in, "but you have no right to impose your troubles on other people as you do either. You could be sweet and likable, but instead you choose to be a miserable little howler! I'd really like to help you during the time you'll have to be at home and won't be feeling well, but I—"

"Please," the other interrupted with unusual calm, "please don't say any more. I do want you to come to see me; but I don't know what the matter with me. Your presence helps, truly it does, Larry. I like to talk to you—you're so different from me and from most of the friends I ever had. You aren't mad at me, are you?" The dark eyes, still tear-washed, pleaded with her.

Larry regarded her soberly as a judge studying a witness before him. "No. I'm not mad at you, Dorothy. I pity you, and a person does not get mad at one she pities. But I must be going. I have work to do."

"You'll come again?" eagerly.

"If you really want me."

"Yes, I want to talk to you, have a long talk sometime. And I'll be up and around again soon. This is just the initial symptom," her lips curled as she regarded her prone figure—"a sort of announcement. I'll be feeling better soon."

In the hall Larry encountered Eldred Hampton bearing a tray on which were some crackers and a bowl of soup.

"How is she?"

"Calmer now, dear angel of mercy, thanks to your Aunt Larry. I just gave her the bawling out of her life. There's no use in her taking on that way. And the wonder of it is that she still likes me!"

"The children are eating their supper in the kitchen," Mrs Hampton called back over her shoulder. "You ought to see Aunt Annie. She's as fussy over them as a sitting hen over one chick."

To the kitchen Larry directed her steps. "Can't I help?" she asked Aunt Annie Brown, and without waiting for a reply sat down at the table with the children.

"See my mountain?" demanded Sammie, heaping his mashed potatoes into one pile.

"Yes, and this is a river running down the side of your mountain," announced Larry putting a lump of butter in a depression at the top. Immediately the fat began to melt and trickle down the sides of the heap, much to the glee of both children. Sammie was underweight for his age. He needed butter, but he did not like it.

"Dottie Pull want a montoon, too!" chanted the tiny girl. And so Larry prepared a pile of potatoes similar to Sammie's and applied the butter.

What precious little things they were, so full of life and sweetness and dear-ness!

"Dottie Pull and me—we been playin' Injun," Sammie bobbed his head delightedly. "Aunt Annie—she made us Injun things," and he waved a hand at a nearby chair where reposed some shaggy garments of clean burlap. Picking these up, Larry found one of them to be a little unhemmed jacket trimmed with some gaudy red braid of old-fashioned design. A pair of brief trousers were similarly trimmed. Those were Sammie's of course. And a tiny slip trimmed with bright green braid was Dorothy Pearl's. What a big heart Aunt Annie had in spite of her rough and scowling exterior. Larry glanced at the maid.

"Well, I had to get 'em somethin' to play with." defensively. "They don't have much—guess most of that family's money has gone into fine furnishin's and clothes. They've had more fun puttin' them things on and pullin' 'em off today. It's kept 'em out from under Mrs. Hampton's feet.

"You're an old peach, Aunt Annie," Larry heartily commended. Then a little later; "I'll get their night clothes and take the children upstairs to get them ready for bed."

"Well, now, I have their sleepers warmin' right here by the register, and in case you don't have time, Miss Larry—I'll—" There was motherly desire in the woman's tone, and Larry had not the heart to deny her the pleasure of slipping these two little pink beings into their night clothes and hearing their prayers.

"If you can, that will be grand, Aunt Annie," she was thinking rapidly. "I had really planned to go over to the Blaines, but I didn't want Mrs. Hampton—"

"She won't have to. I'll fix 'em for the night like two little white angels," promised Mrs. Brown.

Larry did go over to see Carmen. She found Sallie Ruth and Jeff reading aloud in the living room. They thought that if none of the others came in, they would work a puzzle pretty soon. Jeff had brought a "corker" with him. Would Larry help?

She expressed doubtfulness concerning her ability to help them, and slipped into the bedroom to find Carmen writing a letter to John.

"Just in time! I was putting the love part in," that young lady laughed, "and you saved me from committing myself too much!"

"I'm your regular bother," Larry chattered as she seated herself on Carmen's cedar chest, "but I want to ask you for some advise."

"I was just thinking of asking yours," smiled the other.

"Who—me? Why, what about?"

"You first. What did you want?"

"Well, do you have any ideas—or better still, do you have a baby dress pattern? I want to make the prettiest little dress I can for Dorothy Cameron's babe that's coming. I want to make her think that so far as I am concerned her baby is the most welcome little thing in the world."

Yes, Carmen had just the thing. The girls' club of which she was a member had specialized in layettes a year or two before, and she knew where she could get the patterns they had used. She would do it tomorrow.

And then it was Larry's turn to be the advisor. Carmen produced two bits of silk material, one a flesh pink, the other a turquoise blue. She was trying to decide which of these two would make up better for Sallie Ruth's prom dress. She had to have a new dress, a formal evening dress, for the junior-senior prom, and the matter of material was hard to decide.

While Larry fingered the samples, Carmen talked; "The pink is $1.49 a yard—a little high, but it's good quality crepe and forty inches wide. The blue isn't quite so expensive, just $.98, and forty inches, too. I believe Sallie Ruth likes the pink most, but she left it up to me. Which do you like best?"

Later, after they had both decided that Sallie Ruth would look nothing short of a blossom in the pink dress, the two girls joined the pair in the living room. They had begun their jigsaw puzzle and appeared to be in the very midst of unnumbered bits of cardboard particles of green, yellow, deep blue, flashing reds and milder pinks. It was a Venice scene with many little ships, Jeff told them.

Carmen and Larry offered a suggestion here and there, and slowly the puzzle took form and design. The fascination of what all these little pieces might make if placed aright held them, and the four gave themselves completely to the business of selecting, judging, adjusting and completing. They were not conscious of time or of fatigue.

The hours flew. Finally, Jeff glanced at his watch and whistled "I'm going home, ladies," he announced. "Do you realize what time it is? I thought I was awfully stiff and decrepit! Well, it's exactly seven minutes till two a. m.

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt

Arranged from his diaries by his daughter, Mrs. Ruby C. Faunce

Experiences in Salt Lake City

UPON leaving Florence, which they did, as soon as an escort of wagons came, they started on the long road to Salt Lake City, pushing and pulling handcarts, seemingly as joyous as on a picnic, singing the songs of Zion, and rejoicing in their approach to the promised land. The campers made their first move to Little Papillion June 4, 1860, and making from seven to seventeen miles daily with an average of ten miles, arrived in Salt Lake, August 27. Here my family were met by their old friend Brother Bunting. Shortly after arriving there Father was made secretary to Brigham Young.

It did not take him long to see that Brother Holt was correct in his diagnosis of affairs in Utah, except they were worse than had been painted. Not long had elapsed when they tried to have him wed another woman, and even picked out the lady for him. He came home and told mamma about it, and said, "Elizabeth, you alone can save me." "How," she asked. "By making some demand that I cannot perform and sticking to it. They say a man has to have his first wife's consent and I'll hold to that." "All right you tell Brigham that when you furnish me a home and one year's provisions, you can marry whom you please." Father went to the office and told Brigham what Mamma said. "Oh! That is too hard. You must make her see that." "Well, that is her condition."—Brigham sent two of his apostles to remonstrate with her, and when they failed, he visited her himself. He talked and talked and at last asked if she did not want "celestial glory" for herself and Mark. "I'm not worrying about any kind of glory, but I want a home and provisions for a year and then Mark can do as he pleases." "We will build you a house, but you know we can't provide provisions for a year," said he. "Well, I've given you my ultimatum, so there is no use talking."

He came back to the office, quite angry and told Father that he should marry anyhow, but Father told him that he could not do so without her consent.

With the Morrisites

In about six months after arriving there they both left the church and soon joined with the Morrisites. They made their headquarters at Weber where Father taught school. The Morrisites were thoroughly organized and possessed of strong vitality, but strangled almost at birth by the dominant church, by brute force.

The following is a copy of a letter from Joseph Morris to Mr. George Leslie from Weber dated July 9, 1861:

"The Morrisite Church was formerly organized on April 6, 1861, with six members. By the thirteenth of April, fifty-three had been baptized and by the end of three months it numbered over two hundred souls. The gifts of the spirit were enjoyed, and all the blessings, which distinguished Mormonism from Sectarianism in the Prophet Joseph Smith's day."

In point of time as a determined force against Utah oligarchy, the Morrisite church was two years in advance of the Reorganization, under the presidency of Joseph Smith, son of the Martyr, (though that was in advance of all others to regenerate Utah).

"The first copy of the Saints Herald came into my hands and I read in it to Joseph Morris and solicited his opinion of its aims. The article was on 'False Prophets', being also directed against Joseph Morris, among others. Mr. Morris listened and instead of denouncing the attack, quietly smiled and withdrew. In a short time he returned and handed me a revelation in which Joseph Smith, the leader of the Reorganization was declared to be a prophet of God and rightful heir to the presidency of the church. Joseph Morris never hesitated to express himself as to the wrongs of the dominant church and her officers."

That a conflict was imminent between the two churches was fully believed by both parties.

The trust in Divine aid was the Morrisites' only solace. Like their leader they were a praying people and from some part of the camp prayers were almost continually ascending. The "Order of Consecration" was observed. Each member made a list of all his earthly possessions and by deed and common transferred them, on paper, to the church, however kept them in their own charge. If needed, the presidency gave instructions and the clerk made out requisite papers on such members as had a superabundance of articles needed. The causes which led to their dispersion and overthrow were these:

1. The action of the Utah faction against them.

2. The "Laws of Consecration" and that which grew therefrom.

3. The refusal to recognize and respond to the habeus corpus issued in favor of prisoners they held in custody.

In the fall of 1861, a call was issued for the male residents of South Weber to appear at Kingston Fort on September 12, to enroll and drill. The day of training came—not a Morrisite mustered; instead they repaired to the Bowery (church). One of the features being a revelation, received the evening before forbidding them to train with their enemies. John Banks then gave one of his wonderfully eloquent sermons closing with "We are the subjects of God's government and without his express commandment will neither organize nor train." "Amen," shouted all.

"Wading in Blood"

Repairing to the fort the irate colonel said excitedly, "I'll make the Morrisites train even though I ride up to my knees in blood to do so." Other things followed, and so much transpired that the Morrisites were afraid to heed the call for fear of death. Winter had now set in, a sorry winter for the Morrisites. Harassed from without and destitute of winter comforts within they suffered much but bore it as only people of undaunted faith can do. Many lived in tents with stakes driven in the ground and between the stakes and the tents earth was packed tightly as possible. Many were sick, but those few who lived in log houses helped as they could to care for the sick. Things went from bad to worse until June 11 when writs were signed by Judge Kinney to arrest some of the Morrisites. On Monday morning while the women in camp were washing and the men tending to their duties, as the apostles were returning from their day dawn prayer meeting, the last they ever had, an approaching army was seen on the Southern Bench. They gave the alarm. The apostles, those that formed the first council or presidency, gathered at Mr. John Banks' house and discussed the situation. Joseph Morris soon came and they repaired to the Bower, where they sounded a call to meeting.

My mother said that whenever this call came, all stopped whatever they were doing and responded. She was washing, but stopped, took off her apron, put on a fresh one, rolled down her sleeves and taking sister Amy, a babe in arms, went with the rest of the women to the meeting. She stopped by a chair and leaned on it looking for Father. John Cook came in, carrying a three-legged stool and motioned for her to come and sit on it. She went over and as she sat down a cannon ball came in and killed the woman on whose chair she had been leaning and then killed another, and shot through the jaw of a girl, so that it was only hanging by the skin. Joseph Morris and John Banks were also killed at this time.

Mr. R. Cook advised them, "Go quietly to your homes and let each man defend his own family as best he can." But pandemonium and fear raged, so taking the women and children they put them in two potato cellars, where the women feared and the children cried. Mamma climbed out of the first cellar with Amy and asked where Father was, and was told he was taken prisoner, which she knew would be certain death: then they put her in the other cellar. After a while they came and told the women to get out and go to their homes. In the meantime Father had taken the church records and made his way stealthily over to Mother's brother's home which was just a short distance from the camp. He got back to camp shortly after dark and found his loved ones safe.

This ended their connection with the Morrisites church, and almost ended my mother's faith in any religion.

She told Father, "Mark, if you have any more religion, keep it to yourself and never bring it to me; I've suffered and had all I ever want." And who would blame her?

Soon after this The California Volunteers coming into Utah, Father joined them under Colonel Conner who came there in October, 1862.

The Permanent Camp was located at Fort Douglas, where it still remains.

Father was private secretary to Colonel Conner and while there edited The Salt Lake Vidette under his name, the first paper against the Mormons to be published in Salt Lake City. In 1863, instead of being sent East to fight in the Civil War as they expected, they were sent to Ruby Valley to protect the overland route to California. In July of 1864 they were ordered to return to Camp Douglas where they remained until in 1865 when Father received his discharge from the army. My mother was also in the army and was with Father all this time. She was hospital matron.

Escaped Assassination

As long as Father was in the army he was safe, but from the time of his discharge until he left in September, 1866, he was persecuted. On Monday, August, 31, 1866, in the morning, Mother went to get her scrub brush and found it laid upon the kitchen window sill. Upon taking it up she discovered a paper folded, which when she opened she found to have a gun printed on one side and a pistol on the other, each with bullets pouring out. Written in red ink were these words. "M. H. Forscutt if not out of this territory within one week thou shalt die the death of a miserable apostate dog." Mother came in so worried, but Father ridiculed the idea. That night Mother dreamed the same dream twice, "that Mark came into her room shot."

The next morning she again urged him to leave, but he said if he tried to sell out they would get him, and he did not have money to go without selling. Mother told him she would get the money and that he must go, or she would go wild. He said all right, so she sold her feather bed, silk for two dresses she had had brought to her from England, and her dishes, to the officers' wives at camp. They also saved all they took in at the city and camp stores during the week. Wednesday she insisted that he buy his ticket for the stage. When he returned he said the first stage he could get a ticket on left Monday. "You'll be killed if you wait till then," said she. "Well, it was the best I could do." Wednesday evening one of the soldiers came in and told Mother he was leaving for the states Friday a. m. She prevailed upon him to change tickets, but to tell no one he was not leaving. Father said he could not get ready, but mother insisted. Suffice to say he left Friday. On Saturday night his partner in the deal with others, Doctor Robinson, was called to attend to a man they said was hurt. Against his wife's earnest entreaty and warning he went, but before he reached the walk was shot, killed, and thrown against her door. The soldier who took Father's place, wrote that when the stagecoach was about three miles out of the city, it was stopped by masked men and all the occupants made to get out, and as it was before day, held a lantern to their faces and then said, "Well, he is not here, so you may get in."

Joins the Reorganized Church

Father joined the Reorganized church in Salt Lake City and as long as he stayed there, he never mentioned to Mother that he had joined another body, and as he kept no diary at that time, or at least it is not with his others, we know but little except from his expense account. I read the following:

"On Monday, October 22, 1866, after traveling by O. S. line for seven days and nights arrived in Denver, put up at the Planters' House. On October 31, left by stage for Kearney where we arrived Saturday, November 3, crossed the Platte in a wagon and took cars for Columbus. Sunday introduced myself to Brother Henry Hudson and met his interesting family and accepted their invitation to their home. In the afternoon attended fellowship meeting, where my soul enjoyed a perfect feast. A tongue and interpretation by Sister Barrows was that the Lord would take care of my family and no evil should happen them, for which I was grateful, as I had felt great anxiety concerning them. On November 10, Sunday evening, I preached my first sermon, for the Reorganized church in the states, at Council Bluffs. Tuesday, November 20, to Gallands Grove, met with Robert Hanson, formerly of Utah, who accompanied me to Father John McIntosh, also to meet Brother Charles Derry."

Notes From the Diaries

November 24—Attended district conference at Highland Grove. At the evening prayer meeting, as many as three were on their feet at once and as many as twenty tongues were given, with as many as three having the interpretations at once. The united testimony was that never before had they seen so much of the power and influence of God's Spirit.

November 25—Sunday p. m. after sacrament it was "resolved that Elder Mark H. Forscutt labor with Brother Charles Derry in his field of labor." Rode to Brother George Kemp's, to Brother Briggs on the Missouri River expecting to cross to Nebraska City, but could not do so until evening when we crossed in a skiff. Stayed with Brother R. C. Elvin, with whose family I was made more than welcome. Brother Elvin presented me with a reference Bible and Sister Elvin a 25 cent silver piece, the first fruits of assistance other than food and lodging, on my mission. Over to Plum Hollow, slept at Father Lee-ka's," to Glenwood, Council Bluffs and Omaha, all of these places preached and found attentive audiences.

December 13 — Another wonderful prayer meeting—a real soul feast.

December 15—To Omaha over the river on the ice, put my mule at Brother Sanders, myself at Brother Beebe's. In the afternoon a spiritual meeting—in the evening preached. Friday I went to Council Bluffs where I received two letters that had been sent to Plano and forwarded by Brother Joseph. One contained a letter from my mother to the editor of the Vidette, inquiring my whereabouts which letter he handed to my wife. The second letter informed me of the serious illness of my little Lulu—and of my wife's sufferings through the persecutions of my implacable foes, that she hardly feels able to even instruct our girls to pray. The letter said, "Only yesterday Lizzie asked me to teach her to pray; but oh! My dear Mark, I am so sick with the hypocrisy and deceit that it is driving all religion from me. You know how it is, I am unable to satisfy in regard to religion. You must have patience with me, as I am in hell and surrounded with devils of the deepest dye. But my dear husband, I have the same honest heart, and that teaches me to do right before God and man. Our little Lulu is still very sick, and I think sometimes will never recover. I have shed many bitter tears over her wasted form. To think that you must be driven away in the midst of sickness is past bearing.

December 25—Christmas Day. Fellowship meeting after which refreshments. After them Brother Derry spoke on the "Sacrifice of Christ."

December 29—Brother McCord purchased my watch giving me $15.00 and four yards of cloth at $1.40 per yard. Not feeling like asking the Saints or Bishop for anything, I have preferred doing this. Left for Bigler's Grove.

I spent the rest of the year at Center-ville. As the old year expired and the new came in I gave myself anew to the Lord, to be used anew in his cause.

A Gift of the Restoration--the Inspired Version

By John F. Sheehy

(Notes from a sermon preached at the Stone Church, Independence.)

"The Spirit of God like a fire is burning;
The latter day glory begins to come forth;
The visions and blessings of old are returning;
The angels are coming to visit the earth."

THAT SONG was sung at the dedication of Kirtland Temple. I am quite sure it was written for that specific purpose. It embodies the spirit of the Restoration.

Oh, the stories that old Kirtland could tell us. It could tell something about the dealings of God with his people there.

We are concerned and vitally interested in the building and establishing of the kingdom of God. Tonight we can go back to the second revelation given at Kirtland, the law of the church (Section 42, Doctrine and Covenants). This was the second revelation to come to the Prophet, and it was given in the month of February, 1831. This was the law that was to govern the people of the church.

In this revelation the people are reminded: "Thou shalt ask, and my Scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people." (Paragraph 15.)

The story of the Bible as it has been handed down to us is a very interesting and fascinating story. It has been preserved by the Lord, and by people who devoted their lives to translating the Greek and Hebrew characters into other languages, that the people might read. Men had to flee from their own countries to do this thing. Others hid themselves away, and some were burned at the stake, that we today might read the Bible.

. . . And now sometimes we speak about the differences between our church and other churches. We sometimes speak of revelation as being the distinguishing difference between this and other churches. I like to think of revelation as one of the many beautiful contributions that this church has made to the religious world; that it has brought God back to humanity; that it has given mankind a new concept of God, not so much a new as a restoration of the old concept for it brings God back as the kind of a God who reveals his mind and purpose to the children of men.

The Inspired Translation of the Bible is one of the outstanding contributions that the Restoration has made to the world, to the spiritual development of mankind.

IN 1831 when the young Prophet was still only twenty-five years old, he started to give to the world an inspired translation of the King James Version of the Bible. By the month of January, 1833, it was complete, the task was accomplished, the manuscript was finished. Think of it. It took forty-two scholars two years and nine months to produce the King James Version and they were men who were well educated, students of Greek and Hebrew and masters of English, students of the Bible. And when they were finished it was discovered that a revision of the King James Version was necessary because of the many mistakes it contained. And fifty-two English scholars took two more years at an expenditure of one hundred thousand dollars, to give us the English Revised Version of the King James Version.

But the young Prophet, sitting alone under the inspiration of God, gave to the world the Inspired Translation. A careful comparison of this version of the Bible with any other version will prove its standing, completeness, and quality.

And through all the troublous years which followed the translation of the Inspired Version, the Scriptures were "preserved in safety." They were guarded carefully by Emma Smith, wife of the Prophet, until the day they were given over to her Son and the Reorganized Church.

Now the time is ripe for this Inspired Version of the Bible to be taught to "all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people." I should like to see it on every Latter Day Saint pulpit. I should like to see it in the hands of all our ministers. I should like to see students studying the Inspired Version and finding it a place among all the versions of the Bible. It is one of the gifts of the Restoration to the world. It is the fulfillment of God's promise, "My Scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety."

Youth and the Church

By Charles V. Graham

FOR the church to realize both a spiritual and a financial success we must have the combined efforts of both the young people and the older ones. Zion cannot be redeemed by the youth of the church alone, and it is as foolish to think that it can be accomplished by only the older Saints. This—God's work—can only bud, leaf, flower and fruit through our complete, collective, and unselfish cooperation.

In the past the church has been sorely in need, many times, of the energized young blood that is an absolute necessity to help carry on our Zionie program.

We are glad to acknowledge that today there seems to be a spiritual rebirth, or an awakening among the youth of our church.

Our thankfulness for this can hardly be expressed in words for we know that the success of this gospel, which is so dear to us, will someday be placed in the hands of the present young. It is upon their shoulders that the responsibilities of our church will be laid.

It is up to us as a combined organization to see that this same spirit is continued in the future in our church welfare.

Many times the young man or young woman would gladly put forth their hands to help in this great work if the ones who already see the light would make it plain to them.

Too often do we hear the older ones scorn the youth for their mistakes, shortcomings, and unchristian acts which are weaknesses of the flesh. Yes, it is true—the older ones must feel their responsibilities toward the youth—but they should use the proper method of leadership. The mind of the youth must be properly directed; and the wonderful opportunities that lie in the church must be held out before our young in such a manner that they will want the church, will want to serve it, and will give their lives for this great cause. Instead of this wonderful work being forced on the young we want them to voluntarily take it upon themselves. When they do this we know we are arriving at great results.

Being a young person myself, I now see the great need of the combined efforts of the youth in our church.

I, for one, would like to be an example to the young men and women in the church today. I was baptized some eight years ago. At that time I wanted and tried to serve the church to the best of my ability for I not only realized my great need of the church, but the church's need of me. After a few years—while I was reaching here and there seeking to find myself in life—I unconsciously began to slip from my spiritual surroundings. Finally I became almost inactive in our church work and for a few years I became almost an atheist in my beliefs. Through God's divine power and spiritual manifestations I was shown the light and as a result I am body and soul in this work today. The saddest thing to me is that during the short space of time while I was in the dark, I not only acquired some bad habits, built up a non-Latter Day Saint character, but I also lost the best building years of my spiritual life. That was the time when I should have been laying my foundation for a future in the church.

This breaking away is what we must guard against. In many cases we would probably lose for good the persons who unfortunately strayed away. What we need is the youth to commence at the start and carry on through building gradually and continuously without denying himself and the church that part of his active life which would mean opportunity to him and strength to the church.

I still am a youth in the church but I am greatly handicapped for I am now having to go back to the beginning where I was eight years ago. That fruitful period I lost I never can regain, this I am very sorry for. I am more than glad that I was made to realize that youth's greatest opportunities are in the church and that we must put the church first in our lives. If we do this we will not only get the most out of life but we will grow to a fullness physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually.

Let us, as holders to the title of God's great gift to man, lay a surer and safer path for the youth of this church so that some may not be handicapped as I have been by straying for a few years from the biggest and best thing in my life—The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

To the youth, may we give our lives for this marvelous work and carry

It is to such young people that the church looks for a strong and dependable leadership in the coming years.

UTAH MORMON INTERNAL CONTROVERSY OVER POLYGAMY

God which said to them in 1853:

"Polygamy is an abomination in the sight of the Lord God: it is not of me; I abhor it. I abhor it, as also the doctrines of the Nicolaitans. . . . Be ye strong; ye shall contend against this doctrine; many will be led into it honestly, for the Devil will seek to establish it, and roll it forth to deceive."—Church History, volume 3, page 215.

nesses and also in the journal kept by Joseph Smith.

Many years later when this stone was opened and the contents of the box obtained it was discovered that most of the manuscript of the Book of Mormon had been destroyed by the elements, water and frost having penetrated to the records. Some of these sheets of manuscript were taken out by Mr. Bidamon and some were secured by others. Through the services of a friend my father obtained the greater part of what was preserved, and there was not much that was in shape that it did not fall to decay when removed. The photograph, on page 146, is from one of the pages, or sheets, of this manuscript.

The manuscript in possession of Frederick M. Smith is the copy made by Oliver Cowdery, and others, for the use of the printer, as marks on it readily show.

We do not have the original transcript made by Joseph Smith and taken by Martin Harris to Professor Anthon.

The signatures of the witnesses were destroyed with other parts of the manuscript while in the cornerstone. The outside sheets were not preserved. The signatures on the copy are all in one handwriting. I have seen them.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) Joseph Fielding Smith.

We are not surprised at the above, as we hoped if it were properly called to the attention of Elder Smith he would acknowledge that the manuscript placed in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House is no longer in existence. In fact "most of the manuscript of the Book of Mormon had been destroyed by the elements, water and frost having penetrated to the records." We appreciate his candor in so stating.

Despite his statement, however, we fear that the original statement in the Liahona will prove misleading. The statement to which he refers which appears in the next to the last paragraph on page 148 is:

"In conclusion, I desire to say that many years ago when that portion of the Nauvoo House, where was placed the stone box containing the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, and other articles as enumerated above, and deposited by the hand of the Prophet, was taken down by Mr. L. A. Bideman [sic], in the box was found all these relics and they were distributed to different persons by Mr. Bideman [sic], a portion of the original manuscript falling into my own hands, and the balance of it into the hands of the Church Historian, Franklin D. Richards, and the same is still in existence here."

The casual reader will not notice that the statement "the same is still in existence here" was probably taken from the Deseret Evening News of December 23, 1899. Especially as there is not the slightest intimation in Liahona that this manuscript is not in existence today. Also on the preceding page, 147, there appears a facsimile of handwriting and above it is the following paragraph:

"As indisputable proof that the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon is in the possession of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at Salt Lake City, Utah, a facsimile of one of its pages, less a few lines, is presented herewith to the readers of the Liahona. As recorded in the history of Joseph Smith the Prophet, it was deposited by him in the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House. The page has been photographed and reproduced from the original. It must be remembered that the translation of the Book of Mormon was completed more than 103 years ago, and that neither the Prophet nor the scribe who wrote the words as they came from his lips was highly educated. This accounts for the style of the writing. This page was selected because it was less discolored than other parts of the manuscript, most of which is somewhat yellow and faded, and the edges are ragged."

It will be noted that this statement does not appear even to the critical reader to be taken from the Deseret News. In fact, it states plainly that there is presented to the readers of Liahona "indisputable proof that the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon is in the possession of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at Salt Lake City, Utah."

Furthermore the last sentence states, "most of which is somewhat yellow and faded, and the edges ragged."

As to the question of originality, we are quite willing to submit the facts as set forth in the original article above to the unbiased reader and student.

each meal, or other coarse cereals. Fine flour bread should be avoided. A liberal supply of roughage should be a part of every meal. Buttermilk should be used freely as a regular article of diet if it agrees.

Anyone suffering from biliousness should not expect a too rapid cure. In some cases it may take a few months or a year or two to complete a cure, but it can be accomplished if treatment is persisted in as suggested. All cases should be examined by a competent physician to find out whether the patient's diagnosis is correct and whether any complications should have occurred which must be removed if a cure is to be expected.

our share of its responsibilities side by side with the older Saints.

Our great cause "The Redemption of Zion," will be only accomplished, not by worshiping God a few hours during the week and twice on Sunday, but by a twenty-four hour service to Him, seven days a week and fifty-two weeks out of the year for each year of our lives. May this kind of service be a living example of our youth in the future.

A Prayer

By Frances Spaulding Glesne

Along the path of life I go;
Dear Father, take my hand.
Unflinching hold, until the day
I reach the promised land.

And if the way be rough or hard
And I pull against thy will,
Or if my life be light and gay
O hold me, hold me still.

It matters not if heights of fame
Or lowly paths I know,
If only thou wilt take my hand,
And lead me as I go.

O doubting heart, be still and learn
To know life's joy, not fear.
For how can things we do be wrong
When we feel God is near?

Bind, But Do Not Clip

From time to time comments appear on compiling scrap-books from clippings of the Herald. Fine, but why clip? To the member, the priesthood, the officer, the pastor, the teacher the Herald is a source of information carefully assembled by experienced men and women. Why cut it up?

Each week I read the Herald and through it gain veracious acquaintances with leading officers and writers of our church. As each succeeding paper arrives the previous issue is laid away. At the end of each quarter (13 issues) out they come and with a paper punch I make four holes equal distance along the back of every paper, then punch two pieces of light cardboard for a cover, slip stout cord through the holes and tie or bind with loose leaf binder rings. Presto, a loosely bound book for reference or loaning.

Weeks later, probably months, I may be studying or discussing a subject when a past article dealing with the very subject comes to mind. Down come the Heralds from the shelf and I have the authentic information first hand. Official Statements, Articles, Question Time come regularly to my aid. Clip the Heralds? Never! But save and bind them, yes.

I thank you for the Herald.

Holds Services in Civilian Conservation Corps Camp

I greatly enjoy reading the testimonies of the Saints living in all the States, and I observe the statements of pleasure sent in by isolated Saints who read the Herald. I enjoy every bit of news. Why? Because I feel alone when I am away from association with the Saints in their prayer meetings and other services. Occasionally I get back home in Mount Washington group or other Kansas City Stake churches, but no matter where I manage to be, if I am among Saints, I feel at home. My hope is that I may have the privilege of calling at Ava, Springfield, or Thayer, Missouri, to get acquainted.

In the camp of the Civilian Conservation Corps here at Alley Springs, Stake Park, we have a union religious worship and often a speaker is brought in from a nearby community. The people here in the Ozarks seem to favor the Pentecostal churches, and are humble and sincere in their efforts to spread the gospel; but I believe that the time will come when all good people, who endeavor to preach the truth, will unite with the one faith and belong to the church of Jesus Christ.

I am a deacon in the church, and I preached the first sermon here in camp with ten men present. Since the middle of November, we have had a crowd of camp men and natives of the hills attending our evening services, so we are not without the church. I have been thinking that here is a good opportunity for a missionary like Elder J. Charles May, and I hope that he will find it possible to visit us.

I am not alone in the faith here. We have several men whose wives belong to the church; others have been active members of the church at some time and are more or less familiar with the church around Independence. I pass the Heralds on to another member in Company 733 near Fremont, Missouri.

I was reading in the eighth chapter of Deuteronomy, verse seven, where Moses exhorted the Israelites to obedience while he was leading them into the promised land. These words reminded me of the beauty that we see in the hills which surround Alley: "For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills." The hills and valleys, rocks, pines, hardwood trees, and clear spring water remind me of my home in Spokane, Washington, and in Idaho.

I want to express my delight in trying to do my part and duty toward my fellow men. Back in 1912, I arose to bear my testimony when the older young people organized the young people's prayer meeting in Spokane branch. It has been a pleasure for me since that time to speak of the Lord's goodness to me. Through the year that I was engaged in war service, I did not forget that prayer would help and lead me. Now that I am with the Civilian Conservation Corps I still see opportunities to work and be an example. I notice that the men watch my every move and saying, to catch me weakening. It therefore behooves me to remain steadfast to that which it is right to do as I was admonished when a young boy by Elder T. W. Chatburn when he labored in the western fields and stayed at our home.

I feel that I must admonish the young people of today, to stand by the church of Jesus Christ, to have faith, to read and study the books, because in them they will find an answer to every temptation. My prayer is for all isolated Saints.

A Divine Blessing

While reading the letter of Sister Minnie M. Keillor, of Hope, North Dakota, I was impressed to write of an experience which occurred many years ago. My mother was ill with the measles. She was about forty-five years of age at that time, and the doctors did everything in their power to make the measles break out. In this they did not succeed, and mother's suffering increased.

We children prayed for her frequently and earnestly. One time as I returned to her bedside after talking with the Lord, she roused up and calling to my father, said, "There is an elder at Baker," a schoolhouse some seven miles away. Father sent my brother as quickly as possible, and when he entered the door of the schoolhouse he found the elder finishing his sermon. Before speaking to my brother, the elder announced that my mother was ill and offered prayer for her. When the two came into the house, they had prayer in an adjoining room. Then when the elder laid his hands on my mother and prayed for her, great drops of sweat broke out and with them came the measles as thick as could be.

Mother lived to be eighty-two years old, and was the mother of eleven children, a real mother in every sense.

I often think of the wonderful blessings which might be ours if we had more faith and works with that faith. It lies within our power wherever we are and whoever we are to fit ourselves to serve the Lord.

It Is Wonderful

I feel it is wonderful to be a child of God's, to know of a surety that there is a God and that he does hear and answer our prayers, and to know that this gospel is his plan of salvation. We who have found it are exceedingly blessed.

My husband has just united with the church. Several years ago I was told in prophecy that this would happen. I have spent many, many hours waiting, longing, and praying. Sometimes my faith was very weak and I felt the promise would never be fulfilled.

I can see now that when God promises, his word is sure if we only trust him.

Ours is a glorious gospel. It is a kind and loving Father whom we serve. Let us as a people draw very near him. Even with our weaknesses and shortcomings he loves us and will give us strength.

"Turn Yourselves, and Live Ye!"

The experiences of others strengthen me, and I like to read the letters of the Saints.

One of my great faults is not to have charity for those who do wrong. In giving my patriarchal blessing Brother J. J. Bailey prayed that I might look with mercy, love and compassion upon the shortcomings of others, even as the Lord had been merciful, loving and compassionate with me.

All my life it seems my experiences have tended to help me along this life. They have taught me how great the loss of a soul can be, and how those things which God has cleansed are clean and pure. They have helped me in an endeavor to live for the beautiful and the true and to lift up the fallen as Christ has lifted up me. They have instructed me concerning the beauty of forgiveness and God's power to glorify and give peace and joy.

The Lord has said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." In Ezekiel 18:23 we read: "Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God: and not that he should return from his ways, and live?" This question is answered in verse thirty-two of the same chapter: "For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye."

The secret of success was given to me years ago while I was living on a farm many miles from a branch of the Saints. I was preparing the evening meal and as I worked I thought what a long time it had been since I had felt the presence of God's Spirit. I began to pray and these words were given to me:

"When the wand'rer turneth backward,
From the paths of sin so drear,
If he cries, Oh, help me, Master!
He will find him ever near."

With these words the Spirit filled my being. I shall never forget this experience.

Let us pray for one another, that all who have taken the name of Jesus will turn to him and serve him with all their heart, mind and strength, that together we may help a suffering world find God, and live.

Many Years a Herald Reader

I cannot remember when I first read the Herald—it was always in our home. My father, E. M. Wildermuth, was a subscriber as long ago as I can remember, and my mother, "Perla Wild," was a contributor to Zion's Hope as long as she lived. I was born in 1864, so you can see how many years I have read the church papers. Since my marriage, my husband and I have been subscribers most of the time, and now the Herald is the only paper that comes to our home. I cannot see how any Latter Day Saint can do without it.

Would Be Worthy of God's Blessings

I wish to bear my testimony of God's goodness to me and to my loved ones. I have been blessed many times, have had my prayers answered, and have seen my loved ones blessed through prayer.

I have not always lived as I should, but am striving to overcome all obstacles and live in a manner pleasing to my heavenly Father. There are trials to be overcome at every turn, but if we ask God's help, he will lead us to do that which is right. Let us press on and be faithful to our trust.

Pray for me, that I may be able to live worthy of God's help and be among those called to redeem Zion. Most of my life I have been in isolation, but I have a dear old mother who has taught me the gospel and helped me over many rough places by her loving care and her earnest prayers to God for me.

I would appreciate letters from other young people of the church since I am unable to attend services regularly.

God Blesses His People

During the ten years I have belonged to the church, I have received many blessings. My brother, a nonmember, was caught under a falling tree while he was at work, and received four fractured vertebra processes. I asked an interest in the prayers of the Saints in his behalf and in one month—the doctors had confined him to bed for ten weeks—he was able to walk around. He said that he did not suffer as much pain as the doctors predicted he would. Through the kindness and mercy of God, my brother was raised up from his bed of suffering and affliction and this experience will surely be the means of bringing him and others into the church.

Request Prayers

F. A. Owen, of Fountain, Michigan, requests the prayers of all for the healing of his daughter, Mrs. Luro Brandt, who is a member of Freesoil Branch. For ten months Mrs. Brandt has been confined in a home for epileptics at Wah-jamega, Michigan.

Mrs. Olive Titus, of Scammon, Kansas, asks that an elder in Pasadena, California, visit her niece, Mrs. Homer Edwards, 1643 Monte Vista Avenue, that she and her family may hear the gospel. She wishes also that Saints would visit her sister and family at 329 Cedar Avenue, Long Beach, California, with the message of truth.

QUESTION TIME

Does Doctrine and Covenants 119:5 require the sacrament to be administered on Sunday only?

The term "Lord's day," which is used in this revelation, refers to the first day of the week, called Sunday. Paragraph seven states that the Saints are to observe that day as a day of rest and worship, and paragraph five commands:

"Cease to contend respecting the sacrament and the time of administering it; for whether it be upon the first Lord's day of every month, or upon the Lord's day of every week, if it be administered by the officers of the church with sincerity of heart and in purity of purpose, and be partaken of in remembrances of Jesus Christ and in willingness to take upon them his name by those who partake, it is acceptable to God."

This paragraph refers specifically to a time appointed for the whole church to receive the sacrament, and has no reference to isolated cases where the sacrament might be administered to individuals on other days for reasons of convenience. It is not essential to the partaker that it be upon any particular day, but quite naturally a branch or other large gathering meets by appointment on specific days, and it is important therefore that the ordinances of the church be at times that are known to the membership. In another revelation (17:22) the necessity of meeting together for this purpose on frequent occasions is referred to, but the time of doing so is a matter of convenience to those concerned.

The fact that Jesus himself instituted the sacrament on the evening of the day before his crucifixion is evidence that it need not be on either Saturday or Sunday, for by Jewish reckoning (the day began at sunset) it appears to have been administered after the end of Thursday (see Matthew 26:20; 27:1, 62; Mark 14:17; 15:1, 42.) But by our reckoning it was Thursday evening, it appears, when Jesus first gave the sacrament to his disciples. After his resurrection, however, the disciples gathered for this purpose on the "first day of the week" (Acts 20:7).

Were elders called to the Melchisedec priesthood between the time of Moses and Christ?

What little is known of this period concerning priesthood offices referred to by the questioner is mostly found in modern revelation, where we are told that Moses sought to sanctify his people, but they rejected his effort, therefore the Lord removed the holy priesthood from their midst. We read:

"Therefore he took Moses out of the midst and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued."—Doctrine and Covenants 83:4.

This has been understood to mean that the Melchisedec priesthood did not exist on earth after the days of Moses until restored by Christ to his church. The fact that elders are mentioned in the Old Testament after the Mosaic period has caused some to suppose that it must have existed during at least a part of the period mentioned, but a possible explanation of this is found in the term "elder" as used in some instances anciently. It was often made to indicate the elderly men of the people, and the term most often applied thus was zagen, meaning an aged or elderly person or senator. The only other term used applied to gray-haired persons. But the revelation quoted also states:

"The office of elder and bishop are necessary appendages belonging unto the high priesthood."—Ibid, 83:5.

The term appendage has been construed to mean that the fullness of the high priesthood is not comprised in the office of elder, and therefore the elders of the pre-Christian ages did not possess it in the sense meant by the revelation above referred to, but only as officials concerned with ministrations in the era when the Aaronic priesthood performed the temple functions required. We have no instance mentioning the Melchisedec priesthood as existing from Moses till Christ, but Hebrews 7:11-17 shows that it was held by Jesus.

Where was the tower of Babel located?

Genesis 11:2-5 locates it on a plain in the land of Shinar, which was in southern Babylonia. The Hebrew for Babel and Babylon is the same word. Several writers have described ruins in Babylonia that they believed to locate the tower site, but there is much uncertainty as to their suppositions, and more experienced students of Babylonian antiquities do not accord with such views.

Bisbee, Arizona

Report Large Gains in Support and Consecration

The months of November and December were notable ones for Bisbee Branch. The Saints responded in every way to the "Keep the Law" campaign. All the priesthood occupied the stand using "Keep the Law" for their subject. The young people devoted one Sunday to the expression of their thoughts concerning it.

A post-Thanksgiving dinner was served to fifty or sixty Saints, some of whom were guests from Douglas Branch. The food was furnished by different families. Immediately following the meal, the meeting was turned into a forum with Brothers Dearborn and Davis in charge. Numerous questions were asked concerning "Keep the Law."

Business meeting with the election of officers was held December 13, in charge of Apostle E. J. Gleazer. The following men were ordained to the priesthood, elder, T. R. Davis; priest, P. O. Puckett and Raymond F. Ratterree; teacher, Heywood L. Cunningham and R. C. Smith.

Those elected for the term of 1934 to serve as branch officers, are as follows: President, T. R. Davis; clerk, Heywood L. Cunningham; financial clerk, Raymond F. Ratterree; musical director, T. R. Davis; superintendent of church school, Calvin Puckett; social activities, Avilda Cunningham.

The branch reported a gain of two hundred and fifty percent in baptism over 1932. The financial clerk reported over five hundred percent gain in tithing and offerings since 1932. The branch has adopted a plan to cooperate with the church in every way.

An ordination service followed the business meeting. Brother Gleazer gave a wonderful charge to those being ordained, also admonished the members of their duty to the newly-ordained men. T. R. Davis, under the hands of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, was set aside for the office of elder, and he in turn, with Brother Gleazer, ordained the other men to their respective callings. A wonderful degree of the Spirit of God was felt during the meeting. The branch is now fully organized in every department of priesthood work.

Following the ordination meeting, a preaching service was held, Brother Gleazer occupying the stand. A number of Saints from Douglas Branch were present, and rejoiced under the influence of God's Spirit.

The priesthood are holding regular meetings for both prayer service and priesthood educational work.

An oyster supper will be enjoyed during the month of March, in which Douglas Saints will participate.

Beginning the month of February, evening services will be held for the recreational and expression department.

An appropriate Christmas program was held Christmas Eve. A play, "Depressive Christmas," written by Sister Louis Davis, was outstanding in its portrayal of modern life.

Brother Walter Brooks and Miss Mildred Puckett were united in marriage, in an impressive ceremony, performed by Brother Dearborn, of Douglas, the last Sunday in December.

A joint meeting between Phoenix, Tucson, Bisbee, and Douglas is looked forward to during the early spring, and it is hoped that members of different branches will take advantage of this opportunity for association.

Washington, District of Columbia

Capital Group Goes Forward

A Christmas entertainment, under the leadership of Miss Margaret Froyd and El Marie Macrea McCormick, furnished an appropriate ending for the year. The program included a short play, "The Coming of the Christ Child," as well as other numbers.

Brother and Sister Ralph Hardy spent the holidays with Mrs. Hardy's parents, Bishop and Mrs. E. L. Traver, of Boston, Massachusetts.

Ethel Macrae spent Christmas and New Year's with her father Elder W. S. Macrae of Holden, Missouri. She was accompanied by Richard McCormick, grandson of Brother Macrae.

Recent visitors in Washington congregation have included Brother and Sister Joseph Edwards and family, of Baltimore, Maryland. Adolph Edwards sang a tenor solo during one of the church services, and Elder Edwards delivered the morning address.

The Book of Mormon class met at the home of Ethel Macrae and El Marie Macrae McCormick. Much interest is being shown in the class work.

The services, December 31, were arranged in accordance with the time of year. A fitting close was witnessed, and each person left with the determination to do more in the future, than he had in the past.

William Maltas, a minister of the Episcopal Church and father of Brother Harry Maltas, recently delivered an address to the Saints.

Saints of this region were greatly shocked and saddened by the sudden death of Sister Banner Blake who was taken ill with double pneumonia and passed away in a few days. Sympathy goes to Brother Blake and his family. Sister Blake had belonged to the church only a short time, but was a faithful and highly appreciated member. The funeral services were conducted at the Blake home in Arlington, Virginia. Brother Joseph Edwards reading the service.

Sunday school officers were elected January 21. Ralph Hardy was sustained superintendent and George Wilcox was elected his assistant; Margaret Froyd, secretary and treasurer. All others chosen to make up the official corps are good workers.

The nursery department appreciates its new sand table and chairs purchased by the Sunday school. These were in use January 21, for the first time. Sister ElMarie McCormick is in charge of the children's department.

Traverse City, Michigan

Branch Is Thirty Years Old

This branch entered the new year praying for God's blessings on his people everywhere and with a determination to go forward in the hope that the coming year will be more encouraging than the old. The depression bore heavily on many Saints here.

Elder B. H. Doty has returned home after spending several months in Ontario, Canada, in the interests of the church. He is holding services every Sunday at Acme, Michigan, at the union church. Only two families of Saints live there, but several nonmembers are interested in hearing the gospel.

Sister Herman Brown is recovering after several weeks of serious illness. The Saints never forgot her in their prayers, and will be glad to see her return to services.

Apostle D. T. Williams delivered another one of his interesting lectures here January 12, and the Saints and nonmembers look forward to his visits. Always he brings a message that it is good to hear.

Brother H. A. Doty, sr., visited at the home of Brother Morey in Bellaire, January 16. Brother Morey is suffering from heart trouble and high blood pressure and was praying that an elder would come to administer. Brother Doty also visited Saints at Central Lake and found sickness in the home of Brother and Sister Bidwell. These suffering ones appreciate prayers in their behalf.

Traverse City Branch was organized thirty years ago January 28, and a fitting program will commemorate this anniversary. On that day Brother and Sister James Davis, of South Boardman, will be here, and others who have seen the branch grow slowly and steadily.

Saginaw, Michigan

Thirty Pledge to Do Missionary Work

The young people of Saginaw meet every two weeks, the juniors and adults, once a week. The adult department was first organized with fifteen members, but has increased to thirty-six. Meetings are held in different homes, under the direction of Brother Ralph Brown, and his assistant, Sister Lena Grice.

A pageant, "The Shepherd's Trail," was presented December 21, by the junior and intermediate departments, after which Santa Claus visited them with nuts and fruit.

December 24, "The Lost Cord," a presentation by the young people and the choir, was enjoyed.

The Midland Choir visited Saginaw with beautiful Christmas numbers, December 28. An invitation was extended to Saginaw Choir to render a cantata for Midland Saints. The invitation was accepted, after which the choir was entertained at the home of Brother and Sister Albert Ash. Midland Choir boasts a membership of twenty-five, under the direction of Brother Harry Runkle. Brother John Wode, director of Saginaw Choir, has also organized an orchestra, of six pieces.

District President Case, began a series of meetings, January 14. It is expected that these lectures will bring new members into the church.

Elder Lewis Grice, pastor of Saginaw Branch, has a chart of thirty names, pledged to do missionary work this year. Saints of this locality are trying to build up their membership.

Miss Margaret Sheldon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Sheldon, of Crosswell, and Lloyd Warner, son of Mrs. Edson Waters, were married October 22, in a service at the Saints' church at Saginaw, Elder W. M. Grice reading the wedding ceremony. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Amos Sheldon, and was attended by her sister, Miss Mary Sheldon as maid of honor. Annabell McCray, was flower girl and Donald Mc-Cray acted as ring bearer. Lorn Forbes, of Grayling, attended the bridegroom. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Grice were host and hostess at a dinner given in honor of the bridal pair. Mr. and Mrs. Warner are at home in Detroit.

Uteyville, Colorado

Redouble Financial Efforts

The branch business meeting was held December 31, and nearly all of the officers were elected to succeed themselves. In the financial statement, members noticed that not so much money as usual had been given to the church, and the workers determined to try harder during the coming year to help with tithes and offerings.

The women held their bazaar early in December, netting them over thirty-five dollars. This was fine considering the times, and much credit for the success of the event goes to Sister Pearl Webb for her untiring efforts. A play, given the evening of the bazaar, was enjoyed by a packed house.

A surprise was planned on the pastor and his wife the evening of their wedding anniversary, December 19. One hundred and four guests registered. A basket supper was enjoyed and during the evening a friendship quilt bearing two hundred names, was presented to the couple.

A Bible reading contest is proving most interesting. Some have read as many as four hundred chapters in a week. During these days the good books are not collecting dust.

Duluth, Minnesota

Sixtieth Avenue West and Bristol Street

Nineteen-thirty-three was a year of much improvement for Northern Minnesota Saints, particularly those at Duluth. Each department is increasing its activity.

The junior choir, under the leadership of Mrs. R. C. Tourville, musical director, with the help of Mrs. R. C. Zuelsdorf, is giving its support during the preaching services by rendering special songs. The choir meets at seven o'clock Wednesday evening, practices one hour, then takes part in the union prayer service.

The B. Y. D. Club, recently organized under the leadership of Miss Ada Carlson, young people's supervisor, is taking up several projects. Junior stewardship and the Tenth Legion are two of their aims. Meetings are held the first Friday of each month.

A hard-time party was sponsored by this club. Crackers and cheese was furnished as lunch. Two of their members, Miss Lucille Blake and Miss Marjory Ann Zuelsdorf, were in charge of the Christmas program, presented December 22.

The branch has been divided into two groups to carry on a Christmas offering drive. Miss Marjory Ann Zuelsdorf and Miss Lucille Blake were chosen as captains of the teams. Up to date, a sum of almost thirty-five dollars has been turned in. The losing side will furnish a party for the winners.

The women's department, under the leadership of Mrs. Mollie Feathers, has at last cleared the branch of all debt on the church building. Their chicken supper was a decided success. The women meet at the homes of various members twice a month.

Elder R. C. Zuelsdorf, superintendent of the church school, is striving to teach the way of life and the necessity of keeping the law of God so that Zion may become a reality.

Plano, Illinois

Community Spirit Enjoyed Here

The holiday season passed pleasantly for Plano Saints. Friday evening preceding Christmas, a program was presented for the entertainment of a large congregation. Appropriate music was furnished.

The annual business meeting in October resulted with little change in the election of officers. Sister Roberta Gregory, director of religious education and superintendent of church school; Sister Cretia Sanderson, adult supervisor; Brother R. E. Wildermuth, young people's leader and chorister; Sister Idah Blakely, superintendent of the junior department.

Social gatherings by young people and adults have been held during the winter months.

Visits from elders of other places have been greatly appreciated. Brother C. A. Edstrom, district president, and Brother Jacques, from Chicago, Illinois, recently brought words of instruction and advice. Others occupying the pulpit have been, Elders Lowe, R. E. Davey, J. E. Wildermuth, and J. F. Wildermuth.

Union communion services are held every three months, near-by branches attending.

Sister Irene Johnson, who is teaching in Iva, spent the holidays at the home of her parents, and favored the congregation with a solo at one of the services.

Brother Walter Sanderson has returned to his work, after suffering for months from severe burns. His family has been through much sorrow. Sister Cretia Sanderson, his wife, is at present ill with pneumonia. His only sister, Mabel Wipper, of Michigan, died recently, his aged parents last spring and in early spring, their oldest daughter, Sister Mabel Reedy.

Plano young people are active, officers and teachers in the branch assisting them in their work.

L. D. Wildermuth, missionary in Montana, was home for the holidays, and delivered one of his forceful sermons.

Those who were able to attend the district conference enjoyed a wonderful spirit in the Sunday services.

The women, under the direction of Sister Bessie Walker, recently presented an entertainment. Guests from Aurora, Earlville, Sandwich, and other places were in attendance.

Summit City, Michigan

The Paradise Group of Kingsley meets each Sunday at the home of Brother and Sister E. E. Barnard for class, prayer and testimony meeting.

Five families are usually represented, and frequently visitors from other branches attend. The study of the Doctrine and Covenants has been undertaken. Some of the members have been sick, but God has manifested his healing powers and raised them up.

Saints of this place feel encouraged and hopeful of the future.

Independence

The following sixty-one people were elected by ballot at the conference in Zion, January 15, to represent Independence at the General Conference of the church. These election results are announced by the tellers of the election, Elder T. A. Beck, Miss Violet McFarlane, and Miss Gladys Gould. The names are: Shankland Arnson, J. W. A. Bailey, Harry Barto, Herbert Barto, T. A. Beck, Mrs. T. A. Beck, R. S. Budd, S. A. Burgess, Albert Carmichael, C. I. Carpenter, D. O. Cato, Walter Chapman, R. T. Cooper, L. F. P. Curry, Frank Curtis, G. L. DeLapp, A. K. Dillee, Mrs. A. K. Dillee, G. W. Eastwood, F. Henry Edwards, Mrs. F. Henry Edwards, J. A. Gillen, E. J. Gleazer, Mrs. E. J. Gleazer, Charles F. Grabske, U. W. Greene, Paul M. Hanson, C. J. Hunt, Mrs. C. J. Hunt, Sam Inman, W. N. Inman, Mrs. E. L. Kelley, J. S. Kelley, Mrs. C. C. Koehler, J. A. Koehler, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, Leonard Lea, J. R. Lentell, Frank McDonald, Floyd McDowell, W. A. McDowell, D. S. McNamara, J. Charles May, Harvey Minton, Orlando Nace, C. L. Olson, Earl Page, A. B. Phillips, Vernon Reese, R. S. Salyards, B. J. Scott, J. F. Sheehy, Elbert A. Smith, Mrs. Elbert A. Smith, Frederick A. Smith, Frederick M. Smith, I. A. Smith, E. A. Thomas, J. E. Vanderwood, Ammon White, and C. B. Woodstock.

There will be a general rehearsal of the Elijah Chorus at the Stone Church next Sunday at 4 p. m. About three hundred singers from Independence, Kansas City, and nearby points are expected to participate, and the Elijah Orchestra will for the first time rehearse with the choir. For several weeks Independence and Kansas City units of the General Conference chorus have been doing intensive work on the oratorio, "Elijah."

Stone Church

Elder Blair Jensen, president of Lamoni Stake, spoke morning and evening at the Stone Church, stirring the congregation to thoughtfulness by two excellent discourses.

Special music for the morning service was in charge of the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, and assisted by Mrs. S. A. Burgess and Mrs. John Isaacks, soloists.

Music for the evening services was furnished by the Clematis Chorus of girls, directed by Mrs. John R. Lentell.

The White Masque Players presented "Cappy Ricks," a three-act comedy by Edward E. Rose, at eight o'clock Monday night, January 29, in the Dining Hall. Miss Pauline Siegfried and Miss Rilla Leeka directed the production.

Second Church

Elder J. H. Robinson, the Sunday morning speaker, used at his subject, "Faith Without Works Is Dead." The choir sang the anthem, "O Praise the Lord, All Ye Nations," the duet part being taken by Marie Knight and Geraldine Fields.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey spoke in the evening on "The Kingdom of God," and Pastor Will Inman was in charge of the service.

Liberty Street Church

The workers in the woman's department are enjoying successful meetings each Thursday. On the third Thursday of each month, a covered-dish luncheon is served in honor of all the women having birthdays in that month. Delightful programs are presented and the whole arrangement tends to bring the women closer together. The reports of the friendly visitors have been encouraging, and give evidence of increased activity on the part of the workers.

The missionary spirit that prevailed during the stay of Apostle M. A. McConley has carried over into all other church activities. The prayer meetings, Sunday school sessions, and the preaching services show an increase in attendance and interest. The last meeting of the series was well attended, two hundred and eighty persons being present. Brother McConley left with the promise to return to Liberty Street during the General Conference.

Walnut Park Church

The fourth Sunday of each month is orchestra Sunday for the Walnut Park Church School, the program being of a special orchestral nature. This was the case Sunday morning and Orlando Nace was the musical director. All school classes were filled, four hundred and sixty-seven being counted, according to the secretary.

Elder Benjamin Bean spoke in the upper auditorium at eleven o'clock. The choir under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson sang an anthem, "Seek Ye the Lord." At the same hour the juniors in the basement listened to a talk by Erwin Moorman, and a story was told by Sister Laura Langdon Freie.

District priesthood meeting was held at two-thirty Sunday afternoon, a large number of the priesthood being present and several important matters pertaining to local work and conduct of ordained men were discussed. Pastor Frank McDonald presided.

The evening service was devoted to a concert by the Aeolian Chorus, directed by Paul N. Craig. An appreciative audience enjoyed the music. The chorus was assisted by Dorothy Nace, violinist, and JoZelma Taylor, reader.

William H. Taylor, of Thamesville, Ontario, Canada, father of Elder John A. Taylor, of Walnut Park congregation died January 3, at his home. Elder and Sister Taylor attended the funeral and spent two weeks at Thamesville and nearby Canadian points.

Spring Branch Church

The prayer meetings for the week were in charge of Jesse Smith, O. E. Sedoris, M. C. Jacobson, J. S. Andes, and C. J. Dixon.

Elder F. A. Cool gave a talk at the close of the Sunday school on "Reverence in the Lord's House."

The eleven o'clock service was in charge of A. J. Tankard and Jesse Smith. The choir sang "Cast Thy Burden on the Lord." Gomer Cool played a violin solo during the taking of the offering. Pastor M. C. Jacobsen was the morning speaker.

The evening church school program consisted of a reading by Velma Jones; duet, Gladys and Alma Dixon; solo Gene Kirkwood, and piano solo, Shirley Gould.

Ammon White was the evening speaker, preaching on the financial law.

Enoch Hill Church

The young people's organization met with Group 33 North in testimony Wednesday evening. They are busy in the different departments of the work, improving their talents whenever opportunity permits. They are now working on two plays to be entered in the dramatic contest of the city.

Thirty women met at the home of Mrs. Amos Allen for their weekly all-day meeting. Two generations were represented in seven families and three generations in one family. Sister Susie Hobart, supervisor of the women of Spring River District and Sister Burrow, of Decatur, Illinois, were guests.

The church school worship period was in charge of E. H. McKean's class, and Brother McKean gave a talk on prayer. Hubert Whitehead and David and Edmond Allen sang, "Take Time to Be Holy," and Lavern McKean read a poem, "Morning Prayer."

Elder Charles Warren was the morning speaker at Enoch Hill last Sunday.

The choir sang, "God Is Love," and Richard Maloney sang, "Thou Art My Shepherd."

Elder C. B. Woodstock preached in the evening, and music was supplied by a boys' quartet.

Ann Arbor, Michigan

Mission Is Growing

Every member of Ann Arbor Mission is grateful to Brother William Leland for his untiring efforts to forward the work here. They are fortunate in having a variety of good speakers from Detroit and are happy to have with them occasionally District President K. H. Green and Brother A. B. Smith, two good men who always leave them cherishing a feeling of love and fellowship.

Brother Leland has baptized three since the mission opened last summer, Brother Wild and Brother and Sister Twombly. Earnest workers are needed to carry on the latter-day cause in this city.

Regular services are held each Sunday. Only a few attend the Wednesday night prayer meeting, but they feel that the Lord has richly blessed them at this service.

The workers pray that this mission will increase in membership and good works and that someday they may be organized as a branch.

London, Ontario

Loses Active Members

London Branch lost an active member and a beloved friend January 4, in the passing of Brother John Vasbinder. Brother Vasbinder has been one of the foundation stones of this branch for many years, giving active and enthusiastic service on the finance committee, in the dramatic club, church school, and other departments of the church.

The funeral was held January 7, from the church, with Elders J. E. MacGregor and Frank Gray in charge. Bishop J. C. Dent preached an inspiring sermon on "Our Hope in the Resurrection," and Brother T. B. Richardson sang "When You Come to the End of the Road." "Uncle John," as he was known to his many friends, was particularly active in the work of the young people, having been teacher of the young ladies' class of the church school for ten years. This class, of twenty-five girls, attended the funeral service in a body, and carried the floral tribute from the church to the funeral car, in last respect to their former teacher and friend.

The church school on Sunday morning paid special tribute to their late officer, when the orchestra played the "Funeral March," by Chopin, concluding with the "Last Post," while the entire school stood in respect.

Death also called from the ranks one of the old-time members, Brother Fred White. A few years ago Brother Fred was actively engaged in Sunday school work, being assistant superintendent for several years.

The women's department, under the supervision of Sister Lillie Winegarden, is busily engaged in making articles for their next bazaar. They assist materially in the affairs of the branch.

Brother T. B. Richardson is recovering from the effects of a severe fall he received at his home a few weeks ago. Brother Richardson is teacher of the Royal Oak Bible Class, the members of which are pleased to see him at his work again.

Sister Emma Timbrell had the misfortune to fall while getting off a street car recently, and received painful bruises, which confined her to her home for a few days.

Elder William Grice, of Crosswell, Michigan, recently visited this congregation, and preached an earnest and appealing sermon. Saints were pleased to meet Elder Grice again after several years of absence.

The church school Christmas treat and entertainment proved to be a successful event. The school room was seated to capacity. Quite a number of awards and prizes were received by the members for the year's activities.

Des Moines, Iowa

General Officers Bring New Understanding to Saints

Des Moines congregation has been favored recently with visits from a member of the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, and the Quorum of Twelve.

President F. M. Smith was the speaker October 28 and 29, and the largest crowd ever gathered in the new church building here, greeted the chief executive on Sunday morning. His subjects were "Zion," "The Sacrament," and "Sacrifice." Following a day of strenuous work, Brother Smith and Brother Henry Castings drove to Eagle Grove to administer to Brother Willerts.

After Brother Smith came Apostle J. F. Garver who was the speaker at the home-coming November 12. He appealed to the Saints to keep the commandments and abide by the law of God.

Sunday, December 3, was Inventory Day for Des Moines District, and Bishop G. L. DeLapp was guest speaker. One hundred and ten inventories were filed and a number paid their tithing and made offerings.

The visits of these three men gave the Saints a better understanding of the laws of the church, inspiring them to go forward with the assurance that Zion will be established by their efforts, supplemented by divine aid.

On December 11, Des Moines Branch elected officers. V. L. Deskin was sustained pastor; Wayne Wolf, church school director. Frank Mussell was elected leader of the adult division: Doris Nelson, leader of the young people's division; Leona Howard, leader of children. Jack Williams was chosen as assistant to Brother Wolf. Stephen Robinson was reelected treasurer. Under his efficient management the local church debt has been reduced one thousand dollars each year and interest paid. The home service group is headed by Sister Margaret Mayer. This group has loyally assisted the branch treasurer in the reduction of the debt. Eva Cook was reelected to the chorister's work which she has efficiently carried on for some time. Margaret McPherson Renard was elected publicity agent.

The work done by Des Moines branch during the past year is worthy commendation. Through the efforts of administrative officers the priesthood have done effective work. Home missions have been opened in several places in the city and a large number of baptisms have resulted. Many think a new era has begun and that the Saints are well on their way toward preparing for Zion.

Make Special Missionary Effort

Cleveland Saints started the new year with a pep party attended by officers and teachers for the coming year, and the priesthood and their wives at the home of Brother and Sister McNeil. Brother McNeil opened the evening with prayer and then proceeded to make suggestions and recommendations for committees to increase activity in the branch. An invitation was extended to the district president to bring the conference to Cleveland in March. Later in the evening games and refreshments were enjoyed.

Brother and Sister Harvey Spiller are the parents of a baby girl.

The intermediates were sorry to lose their teacher, Shirley Talbot, who was married at her home December 19, to Glenn Bishop, and will reside at Ashtabula.

This branch is making a special effort to do missionary work. Brother Edward Cooper suggested that each member endeavor to convert at least one during this year, and with this aim in view, cottage meetings will soon be started at the home of Arthur Hanna.

Under the able direction of Floyd Kelsey, the choir is endeavoring to give assistance in the preaching services.

Heads of departments for the new year are as follows: Pastor, John McNeil; church school director, Edward Cooper; religio superintendent, Arthur Hanna.

Cleveland members greatly appreciate the visits of Apostle Paul M. Hanson and District President James E. Bishop. Both were present at the annual business meeting in December. Brother Hanson also preached here after the ministerial institute at Kirtland.

After disbanding more than two years ago the women of the branch reorganized. They are sponsoring a social evening once a month, the first being held at the home of Sister Elizabeth Campbell January 16, with games, prizes, and refreshments.

Brother Lester Vanderwerf has started redecorating the auditorium. A supper was held January 25, to buy paint and supplies.

Young people's day, January 21, honored the birthday of President Frederick M. Smith. Edward Cooper spoke to the young people and Brother William Weisbe for the young people. There was special music by the choir and the services were inspiring to the large number attending.

Indianapolis, Indiana

Corner Ninth and Chester Streets

Notwithstanding the depression, sickness, and other unfavorable conditions, the branch of the church here in the hoosier capital is striving to keep the gospel fire alive. They entered 1934 with prayerful hearts that they might as a body accomplish more this year than last for the advancement and upbuilding of God's kingdom.

Last spring they organized an association known as The Re La Da Sa Mutual Benefit Association and procured a plot of ground which they used in a gardening project conducted on the zionic movement plan. This project was well carried out, and the Saints learned much about working together and demonstrating loyalty.

They enjoyed a program Christmas Eve commemorating the birth of the Savior. Anderson Saints came up and contributed to the program.

On the first sacrament Sunday of January the congregation was greatly helped when District Missionary J. O. Dutton spoke to them in prophecy, calling two young men to the priesthood, Thomas Taylor to the office of teacher, and Arthur Gage, jr., son of the pastor and wife, to the office of deacon.

Brother Dutton delivered five sermons during his stay. One Sunday all fasted and prayed for the benefit of the sick, and the sermon that day was on healing. At the close, Elders C. A. Nolan, W. P. Creviston, A. W. Gage, and J. O. Dutton administered to six ailing members, and all report that they are feeling better.

January 12, the committee of the zionic movement organization gave a supper to replenish the treasury.

The branch business meeting was held January 9, and officers were elected for the year. It is hoped that each will feel the responsibility of his office and carry on to the best of his ability.

Atherton, Missouri

Last October Vernon Lundeen, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, came to Atherton, and after a week's visit returned home, taking with him his bride, Mildred Thomas, daughter of Brother and Sister J. A. Thomas. Through the holidays they returned and are now making Atherton their home. Saints of this congregation listened to a splendid sermon by Brother Lundeen the evening of January 7.

"The Law of Habit" was the topic of Myron L. Holman's sermon the morning of January 14, and that evening Otho Clark left in the minds of his hearers the question: Has our conversion had sufficient power attending, that we can stand the acid test?

Junior church was held in the main auditorium January 21, J. A. Thomas, assisted by Dwight Ware, in charge. Music was directed by Donna Faye Curtis with Muriel Hughes at the piano. Special instrumental music was contributed by young people from Independence. Sister Thomas told the story, "The Great Stone Face," and the sermonet was by Brother Thomas.

That evening the sermon was by the pastor, and there was violin and cornet music by Gladys Pearson and Brother Murdock, Sister Clive Heath at the piano.

January 23, the men of the branch spent the day cutting and hauling wood to the church for the winter's fuel. The women met, too, and all partook of an old-fashioned farm dinner. About thirty men participated in this wood cutting bee, a splendid example of cooperation.

District Day for Northeastern Nebraska

Opens With Priesthood Banquet

The year 1934 bids fair to be a busy and profitable one for Northeastern Nebraska District. District day was observed in Omaha Sunday, January 14.

The Saturday evening of January 13, a priesthood banquet was given. The members of the priesthood, together with their wives, enjoyed an instructive and altogether pleasurable evening. Brother Earl Oehring, of Lyons, Nebraska, the district president, was the toastmaster. Apostle John F. Garver, Elder E. Y. Hunker, Pastor Ray Whiting and Bishop W. T. Wellman were the principal speakers. About twenty people were present from out in the district and represented their respective towns, Fremont, Decatur, Columbus, Lyons, and Blair.

Sunday, the fourteenth, was a busy day. Apostle Garver delivered two instructive sermons and in the evening Brother Hunker continued with his series of meetings that was held here January 7 to 21.

Decatur, Illinois

Seven Baptized at Taylorville

Decatur Saints received inspiration and courage from a two-week series of meetings held in November, by Patriarch and Sister Richard Baldwin. Seven candidates were baptized during an impressive ceremony at Taylorville.

The district conference was held at Taylorville, December 16 and 17. Saints were greatly encouraged by the presence of the Spirit which was manifested through Apostle John F. Garver.

The Christmas program was given by the children and young people, Sunday evening, December 24. A large sacrifice offering was received.

The church is progressing forward its great goal, and Saints of this branch wish to do their part toward the redemption of Zion.

edge that he would have secured in a class with the help of a teacher; unless, of course, he is a genius, for whom exceptions must always be made. That is because the casual student will give attention to what interests him, while the university student is compelled to study more systematically. Left free to pick and choose, the casual reader of the gospels will find much to interest and help him. But only by submitting himself as a student to Saint Paul and to others who have been trained in the understanding of the gospel can he arrive at a balanced understanding of it. The gospel is comprehensive, and it includes many things, that a too casual reader and student is likely to overlook.

A Church Directory for Toronto and Humber Bay

A very neat and attractive printed directory for Toronto and Humber Bay branches comes to us by courtesy of Brother J. Leslie Prentice, pastor of Toronto Branch. This little book is the 1934 edition of a work that has been published several times before. Brother Prentice is a practicing barrister in the city of Toronto.

This directory offers a good suggestion for other large branches, especially those in cities where the members are scattered. The cost of publication has been partly covered by selling advertising space to members and friends in business.

Thought for the Week

Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me.—Isaiah 6: 8.

The work of the church waits, and the Kingdom of God is withheld from the world, for the lack of men and women to labor.

When the Master calls for volunteers, some are withheld from going because their companions are not of the faith, and they must stand on the sidelines and wait. Others cannot go because they must have their expenses paid, and others because they cannot leave thinking about their businesses.

The church is not a profit-making institution, and it can never pay all the workers who will be needed in the work of realizing the Kingdom of God, in the task of building Zion. Only a few can give full time to the work of the church.

Great numbers of volunteers are needed. Some to teach, some to visit the sick, men to occupy in the priesthood and to prepare themselves for their offices, and women to help in the many kinds of good work that only they can do. These workers must support themselves, and give a part of their time as their consecration of themselves to the work of the Lord.

The Lord is calling, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Let us be ready to answer, "Here am I; send me."

Truly my soul waiteth upon God: from him cometh my salvation. He only is my rock and my salvation; he is my defense; I shall not be greatly moved.—Psalm 62: 1, 2.

Appointment of Bishop's Agent

Notice is hereby given that T. R. Davis has been appointed to serve as bishop's agent for the Arizona district, taking over the work formerly handled by Louis Ostertag, who has moved away from the State.

Brother Davis comes highly recommended by those who know him and have been associated with him. We are very glad to recommend him to the Saints of the Arizona District, and solicit their whole-hearted support in this phase of the work of the church.

Also notice is hereby given that Brother Davis has appointed Howard Miller as a traveling solicitor for the Arizona District.

We hereby request that the solicitors send their January and subsequent reports to Brother T. R. Davis, Box 895, Bisbee, Arizona.

Conference Notice

February 25, 1934, has been set aside as the date when the semi-annual conference of Detroit District will be held, at Lake Orion, Michigan. The first meeting is to start at 9.45 a. m. The purpose of the conference is to elect delegates to the coming General Conference, and to transact any other business necessary at this time.—James H. Greene, district secretary.

Attention Musicians!

Musicians of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District should be informed that the following music will be used by the combined choirs during the conference, February 24 and 25: "New Every Morning Is the Love," Billard; "Lead Kindly Light," Goddard-Parks, and "Favorite Songs of the People," Theodore Presser. All choirs and singers not affiliated with such are urged to come prepared to help with the musical service. A rehearsal will be held following the Saturday evening service. Music can be ordered sent C. O. D. from Lyon and Healy, Chicago.—Louise Evans, district chorister.

Reunion Notice

Have you ever been to Historic Kirtland? If you have not, you should begin to make plans ahead to attend the reunion, which is an annual affair and largely attended by Saints and nonmembers from all parts of the country. The dates have been set by the committee in charge for August 9 to 19. We are making this early announcement that those interested may begin to prepare. Some branches wish to assist their young people to go and commence making their plans far enough ahead so as to be sure there will be no slip in arrangements. Girls coming in a group, with their chaperone, are provided a large dormitory tent, the only cost being for cots and mattresses, or straw for their ticks. In this way the cost becomes a negligible quantity, because meals are provided at lowest possible rates in the dining hall. Many of our people are not able to attend the General Conference at Independence, but could, if they knew in sufficient time, plan to attend the reunion. Remember, there is no more beautiful place in the church, no more refreshing, spiritual influence than to be had at Kirtland. Spiritual prayer meetings, uplifting sermons, interesting class periods, and splendid recreation under the direction of competent leaders, with kindergarten classes for the little tots and junior church for the older children. Plan your vacation now! Determine to make this one a combination of pleasurable, profitable, spiritual experiences and be sure of returning to your homes happy and refreshed in spirit.—For the committee, John R. Grice.

Change of Conference Date

Western Oklahoma district conference will convene at Calumet Branch February 17 and 18, instead of February 24 and 25, as previously announced. This change of dates is being made in order to have Apostle Roy S. Budd with us, as his pre-conference program requires his services at the center place on the original dates. Saints, please help to advertise our new dates, and come to Calumet February 17 and 18.—Roy L. Diamond, secretary.

Marriage

GERMAN-HODGINS.—A quiet wedding was solemnized January 11, at the home of Alfred Henderson, Bracken, Saskatchewan, when Miss Minnie German, of Maple Creek, Saskatchewan, and Albert Hodgins, of Bracken, were united in matrimony. Elder Anson A. Miller read the ceremony. Sister Anson Miller and Brother Alfred Henderson were matron of honor and best man. Refreshments were served by Brother and Sister Henderson to more than thirty guests.

Our Departed Ones

WILLIAMS.—George H., eldest son of John and Victorine Granger Williams, was born in Quincy Township, Branch County, Michigan, January 1, 1855. When nine years of age he moved with his parents to Fort Dodge, Iowa, where in 1877, he was married to Mary C. Deer, of Creston. To this union two sons were born. June 23, 1883, his wife died and he returned to the home of his parents in Michigan. Later he married Jennie E. Green, of Bethel. To them were born three daughters. Except for the eighteen years spent in Iowa, he spent his entire life in Branch County, Michigan. In 1921, he was baptized into the Saints' church at Coldwater, Michigan, and was a faithful member; a man of strict integrity and honesty who held many offices of trust in his community, highway commissioner, township clerk and treasurer, and director and moderator of District No. 8. For five years he had been in failing health, but his last illness was of only one week's duration. He passed away at his home January 1, on the evening of his seventy-ninth birthday. Left to mourn are his wife of fifty years, two sons, Elto L., of Elkhart, Indiana; Benjamin F., of Fontanelle; three daughters, Mrs. A. H. Wagoner, of Tekonsha; Mrs. W. H. Wadsworth, of Batavia, and Mrs. Budd H. Russell, of Bethel; one sister, Mrs. Lovina Monroe, of San Luis Obispo, California; fourteen great-grandchildren, one great-grandchild, and a host of friends and other relatives including an aged aunt, Miss Maria Granger, of Coldwater. Funeral services were held in Cranson Church, January 4, S. W. L. Scott, of Coldwater, in charge, assisted by the Reverend C. A. Cutler, of Bronson. Interment was in Lakeview Cemetery at Quincy beside his parents.

McELWAIN.—William Jesse McElwain was born April 6, 1885, near Eldorado Springs, Missouri, and united with the church at Veve, Missouri, being baptized by Elder F. C. Keck. He died at the home of his sister, Mrs. Chester Crowl, Independence, Missouri, January 18, 1934. Surviving are his mother, Mrs. Carrie McElwain, of Lansford, North Dakota; three sisters, Mrs. John Stowell, Independence; Mrs. Frank Stowell, Fargo, North Dakota, and Mrs. Chester Crowl, Independence; three brothers, Warren McElwain, of Lansford; George McElwain, Clovis, California, and Harry McElwain, Glassford, New York. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

LATHWELL.—Lottie P. Sherman was born at Joyfield, Benzie County, Michigan, June 3, 1886, and was baptized into the church October 17, 1897, by Amos Berve, and confirmed by J. J. Cornish and H. J. DeVries. She married Warren F. Lathwell, of Joyfield, March 22, 1903, and to them fourteen children were born, twelve girls and two boys. Four daughters preceded her in death. She died of scarlet fever, January 11, 1934, at Lorain, Ohio. Moved to Lorain Easter Sunday, 1919. Left to mourn are her husband; ten children: Mrs. Laura Minkler, of Wellington, Ohio; Mrs. T. J. Speigle, Minnie, Lulu, Rhodessa, Frances, Ruth, Doris, Harry, and Ralph, of Lorain; her mother, Mrs. Lula Rhodes; two sisters, Minnie Putney, of Flint, Michigan, and Mrs. Iva Lamb, of Elberta, Michigan; two brothers, Floyd Sherman, of Flint, and John Sherman, of Port Angeles, Washington; two grandchildren, other relatives, and many friends. With her husband Mrs. Lathwell helped to start the branch at Lorain, now sixty in number. All her children belong to the church except the youngest who is but seven year old. Elder C. G. Minkler was in charge of the private funeral held from the house.

LUCAS.—Emmett Elsworth Lucas, son of William and Catherine Sheldon Lucas, was born March 5, 1870; passed away at his home, Warnock, Ohio, January 14, 1934. He was baptized at Wheeling, West Virginia, in 1905, and lived a good Christian life to the end. His testimony was not so much in words as in the practical way in which he lived and by which he made friends and endeared himself to all who knew him. He is survived by his widow, Maggie Frobasco Lucas; two brothers, Charles and Joseph Lucas, in Ohio; the following sisters: Mrs. Emma Neitzelt, Mrs. Etta Forsythe, Mrs. Lizzie Givens, and Mrs. Minerva Wymer. Funeral services conducted at the home by O. J. Tary were attended by his numerous friends to whom he had endeared himself during life. Interment was at Wesley Chapel Cemetery near Bethesda, Ohio.

ANDERSON.—Emily Gladys Gidley was born June 20, 1902, on a farm near Cedar Rapids, Nebraska. Until she was sixteen years of age, she knew nothing but strenuous frontier life on a farm, helping to rear five younger children. She attended Cedar Rapids school. At sixteen, having completed the grades, she moved with her family to Denver, where she entered North Denver High School from which she graduated. Having taken a normal course, she began teaching as principal of a suburban high school by special permission from the State superintendent of Colorado schools. From 1920 to 1928, she taught in various schools including one year at Pine Bluffs, Wyoming. While staying at home with her mother during the summer vacations, she attended the University of Omaha, studying for a degree in philosophy. September 25, 1927, she was married to John Albin Anderson, of Albin, Wyoming, postmaster, business man, and manager of a large farm. She was baptized into the church April 20, 1919, and was a devoted worker until her death January 6, 1934. Surviving are her husband; her brother, Mrs. Addie M. Gidley, of Omaha, Nebraska; her father, William Gidley, of Cedar Bluffs, Nebraska; two sisters, Irene and May, of Omaha; three brothers: Everett, of Cedar Bluffs; Ernest, of the United States Navy, U. S. S. Arkansas, and Kenneth, of Albin, Wyoming, other relatives and friends. The funeral service was held in the Baptist Church at Albin, the Baptist minister, Reverend Nordstrom in charge, and the sermon was by Elder Glaude A. Smith. Interment was at Cheyenne.

SMITH.—Lucy Ann Smith was born at Union, Utah, February 24, 1857, the daughter of Joseph and Sarah Pidd Griffiths. She died suddenly at her home at Union, December 25, 1933, after a brief illness. May 21, 1876, she became the wife of Hyrum Smith who preceded her in death in August, 1916. To them six children were born: William, of Union; Hyrum, deceased; Arthur, of Rupert, Idaho; Sarah O. Anderson, Lizzie Wardle and Mary A. Wardle, of Union. Sister Smith is also survived by thirty-one grandchildren, eighteen great-grandchildren; one sister, Sarah Forbush; two brothers, Brigham and Jacob Griffiths. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, July 6, 1870, by Elder E. C. Brand, and died in the faith. Though she was of a retiring disposition, she took a keen interest in the affairs of life and was interested in all community enterprises. Funeral services were held in the chapel at Union, Elder R. R. Robertson preaching the sermon and being assisted by Elder J. A. Conyers and Bishop Godfrey of the Utah Church. Interment was in Union Cemetery, the grave being dedicated by Elder John Hall.

McVAY.—Grace Fender McVay, was born September 11, 1886, near David City, Nebraska, in Butler County. She was united in marriage to Charles Henry. To this union four children were born, three girls and one boy. Two of these preceded her in death, passing away in infancy. Two are left to mourn her passing, John Henry, of North Platte, and Mrs. Clark Jeffres, of Midwest, Wyoming. In the year, 1917, she was united in marriage to Harry Ernest McVay, of Ogallala, Nebraska. To this union were born three boys, Ernest, Bert, and Wilbur. She leaves to mourn her death, her husband, one daughter, four sons, and three grandchildren; her father and mother; her brothers, Solomon, Martin, and Albin Fender, all of Cheyenne Wells, Colorado; Roy Fender, of Ogallala; one sister, Lillie Easton, of Omaha, Nebraska, and a host of other relatives and friends. She was a member of the church and remained in strong faith until the end. Mrs.

McVay passed away at the Ogallala Hospital following an auto accident Sunday night, December 17, 1933. Private funeral services were held from the Arrowsmith Chapel Wednesday afternoon, the Reverend Emerson Wesley Harris in charge. Interment was in the Ogallala Cemetery.

THOMAS.—Mary Powell Thomas was born in Ohio, January 2, 1854, and departed this life January 11, 1934, after two weeks of illness. She was united in marriage to James Thomas, November 19, 1870, in Nodaway County, Missouri, and to this union were born eleven children, seven of whom remain to mourn her death: Mrs. Clara Hawley, Deerfield, Missouri; Mrs. Amanda Gardner, Fort Scott, Kansas; Mrs. Hattie Arndt, Fort Scott, Kansas; Mrs. Jamie Strite, Deerfield, Missouri; William A. Thomas, Fort Scott, Kansas; Pearley H. Thomas, of Richards, Missouri, and Albert E. Thomas, of Fort Scott, Kansas. She also leaves to mourn, two sisters, Mrs. A. B. Hawley, Ravenwood, Missouri, and Mrs. J. L. Gunsolley, Mapleton, Kansas; two brothers, Joseph and Frank Powell, of Ravenwood, Missouri; fifteen grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. Her companion, a missionary for many years, passed away June 22, 1913. She died at the home of her son, William A. Thomas, Fort Scott, Kansas. Funeral services were held in the Saints' church, in charge of Elder J. T. Higdon, the sermon, by Brother Lee Quick.

GRAY.—William Henry Gray was born January 5, 1847, at Cavan, Durham County, Ontario. Died December 28, 1933. At the age of two years, he moved to Perth County where he grew to manhood. In 1874, he married Mary Ann Brown, who preceded him twenty-four years ago. In 1879, he united with the church, and became an active member amid the strife of the early days. He was ordained a deacon, a priest, and later an elder, in 1900, under the hands of the late Elder G. C. Tomlinson. He was a member of the Carlingford, Saint Marys, McKillop, and Mitchell Branches. He was president of the Mitchell Branch for twenty-eight years. In church work, no task was too great for him. In 1911, he married Rebecca Blazey, who survives him. Besides his wife, he leaves to mourn four daughters, Mrs. R. Hodgson and Mrs. F. Sadler, of London, Ontario; Mrs. G. Levy, of Strathroy, and Mrs. F. Barker, of Sedalia, Alberta; two sons, Robert William and Alma, of Mitchell; three sisters, Mrs. J. Bell, Mitchell; Mrs. A. Stewart, Fullarton, and Mrs. G. Brown, of Lamoni, Iowa; three brothers, John and Howard, of Gilbert Plains, Manitoba, and Maxwell, of Hibbert; fourteen grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren, besides other relatives and friends. Funeral services were conducted from his late home at Mitchell, December 31, in charge of Elder D. Smith, assisted by D. Withrow, both of Stratford.

WENGEL.—Beatrice, wife of Andrew Wengel, was born April 19, 1891, at Jonesport, Maine, and died January 9, 1934, at Bradford, Massachusetts, after an illness of about ten days with pneumonia. She was the daughter of Frank P. and Lizzie Smith, of Indian River, Maine. She spent her early life at the place of her birth, and prior to removing to her late home, resided for sixteen years in Portland, Maine. She was employed as a stitcher in the local shoe factories. She was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and lived true to her faith. She leaves her husband; two children by a former marriage, Orel Noyes, a son living at Indian River, Maine, and a daughter, Mrs. Ruth Peabody, who lived with her mother; her father and mother, of Indian River, and a host of other relatives and friends. The funeral was at the home in charge of Elder E. L. Traver, sermon by Elder J. A. Gunsolley. The body was taken to Indian River, Maine, for burial near the place of her birth.

WILLIAMS.—John T. Williams was born December 19, 1868, in Saint Louis, Missouri, and died in Saint Louis, December 17, 1933. He leaves to mourn his wife, Anna; his daughter, Mary, and his son, Russell; three grandchildren, three sisters, and a brother, Dillie Williams. He was a faithful and devoted member of the church, highly respected by all who knew him. He spent the last nine years of his life among the beautiful surroundings of the Saint Louis Art Museum where he was employed. Funeral services were held at his home, in charge of T. J. Elliott.

ANDERSON.—Effie M. Anderson was born February 1, 1882, at Steelville, Missouri, and died at Maryland Heights, Missouri, December 19, 1933. She leaves to mourn her departure, after having been a sufferer for more than a year, her husband, Clark Anderson; her son, Loyal; also one foster son, whom she reared to manhood, Donald Jones. There are five brothers, one sister, one grandson, and one foster grandson. She was an energetic, faithful and devoted member of the church. Her death and passing made a sad inroad into the church and community in which she lived. The funeral sermon was delivered in the Maryland Height's Church, and the burial was in the Fee Fee Cemetery, T. J. Elliott, officiating.

DAVIS.—Francis M. Davis was born February 17, 1849, and departed this life January 4, 1934. He was united in marriage to Miss Parry Odle, February 1, 1885, and to this union were born eight children, four having preceded him in death. He leaves to mourn his wife, four children, Ronald, of Thompsonville, Illinois; James, of East Saint Louis; Mrs. Luther Harris, of Buckner, Illinois, and Charlotte, of the home; nine grandchildren; two brothers, Matthew Davis, of Independence, Missouri, and Merida Davis, of McLeansboro, Illinois; two half-brothers, Arthur and Merritt Davis; one sister, Delcena Baugh, and one half-sister, Bertha. He united with the church, February 3, 1894, and served the Lord faithfully until failing health prevented further activity. He was president of the Parrish Branch near Parrish, Illinois, for about twenty years; also served as district president and bishop's agent of southeastern district for a number of years. Funeral services were conducted at the Christian Church near his home, in charge of Elder Ernest Roberson.

BZZARD.—Sarah Milner was born May 14, 1845, near Leesburg, Ohio. She moved to Colorado Springs in 1878, and soon after, was united in marriage to Sylvester M. Buzzard. She was the mother of four children. Two daughters, a son, and her husband, preceded her in death. As a pioneer she saw the Colorado country advance into its present state of development. She made an extra effort to educate her children before the day of the public school system. She was a leader in community and home life, striving for high and noble ideals; was a just and loving mother, and a good friend and kind neighbor. About twenty-five years ago she united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Her church fellowship was a source of great comfort and contentment to her, especially in later years since because of age and impaired health she was unable to mingle with friends and neighbors. She enjoyed having people come to visit with her and always had a cheery smile for all. After her long and useful life, she was very happy to go to her beautiful home when she passed from this life on April 2, 1933, leaving, among those who will miss her most, a daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Curtis; two grandsons, three granddaughters, five great-grandchildren, and many other relatives and friends. The funeral services were held at the Law Funeral Parlors in Colorado Springs, the sermon by Elder Glaude A. Smith, and interment was at Colorado Springs, Colorado.

COVEN.—Lynn Louis Coven, son of Louis and Nellie Coven, of Edgewater, Colorado, was born July 18, 1907, at North Charleroi, Pennsylvania. He moved with his parents to Colorado in January, 1919. He made his covenant with Christ and was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at North Charleroi, Pennsylvania, July 24, 1915, when he was eight years of age. He was well known and loved by a wide circle of friends in Denver Branch, and in and near Edgewater, Colorado, where he has lived many years. Passed from this life after an eight months' illness caused by an injury, on Friday, November 24, 1933. This young man, departing this life when only twenty-six years of age, will be much missed by his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Coven; by his brothers and sisters, and his many other relatives and friends. The funeral service was held at Olinger Funeral Parlors in Denver, November 28, 1933, the service being conducted by Elders E. J. Williams and Glaude A. Smith. Interment was at Crown Hill Cemetery, Denver.

REILLY.—Catherine Thompson was born October 19, 1871, at Waldemar, Ontario. She died November 22, 1933, at her home at Grand Valley, Ontario, of heart trouble. Had been ill since January, 1933. For forty-six years she was a faithful and loyal member of the church. Was baptized by Elder John Shields,

Ward A. Hougas, Manager

Independence, Missouri

December 21, 1887, at Garafrasa, Ontario. In 1910, she was married to George C. Reilly. There remain to mourn her passing besides her husband, five brothers and three sisters. A brother, Elder Joseph Thompson preceded her in death in March, 1925, and a sister in 1931. Funeral services were held November 24, from the Saints' church, Grand Valley, in charge of her pastor, Elder J. H. Taylor. Interment was in Grand Valley Union Cemetery.

SIMPSON.—William H. Simpson died at his home at Grand Valley, Ontario, December 6, 1933, death coming suddenly from a heart attack when he was seated at the radio in the act of tuning in. He was born in East Garafrasa Township, Ontario, December 6, 1876, and married Elizabeth Taylor, February 19, 1892. Five years later they moved to Minburn, Alberta, where he farmed for fourteen years. They returned east in 1921, and with his wife and daughter he retired at Grand Valley. Was baptized into the church, September 26, 1924, by Elder J. H. Taylor, and was a true follower of Christ and an asset to the church. He is survived by his wife; one daughter, Annie Elizabeth; his parents; one brother, and one sister, besides other relatives and many friends. The funeral at the Saints' church, Grand Valley, was largely attended, and the service was in charge of Pastor Taylor, assisted by the Reverend M. Sellers of the United Church. Interment was in Union Cemetery.

Two Types of Prayer

By Anna Burhart

In the long ago, when Jesus was here among men, many believed the Master had found the key to the more abundant life. With great interest they followed him, wishing to share with him his finding.

The Savior was willing, even anxious to instill in their minds his philosophy, for he loved them much, desiring to give them strength where they had met with discouragement. In his effort to open their hearts to a greater understanding of God's law, he gave many beautiful illustrations to accentuate his point of view. Among these is found that golden gem relative to prayer.

The setting was in the old Hebrew synagogue. Men, no doubt had gathered there for much the same purpose that they attend church today, each according to his peculiar urge. The Master was present.

Out of this great amalgamation of humanity, two examples of behavior impressed the wisest of men. Through the avenue of prayer the deepest motives of men are revealed; and so the character of two men were read as they approached God. One—a Pharisee, puffed up in the pride of his heart, thanked God that he was better than other men, fulfilling all his obligations in life. Another, a publican, in the spirit of humility, would not so much as raise his head, so unworthy he felt, but smote his breast and cried, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner."

According to the divine judgment, as revealed in the Scriptures, the sinner was justified, the self-righteous man condemned. How strange and marvelous are the decrees of Almighty God.

The judgments of God on the earth now are going to set in operation in your life and in mine that which we already know to be true.—E. J. Gleazer, in a sermon, "The Judgment."

Keeping the Law

By H. E. Depew

In years ago we felt a need for naught,

A kindly fate poured out those things we sought;

I do not think we pause, or clearly saw
The richest blessings in God's Holy Law.

We strove with might our livelihood to gain

To lay up stores of wealth, or goods, or grain;

To have our homes, and comforts of the best;

To be at ease, and peacefully to rest.

These daily tasks absorbed our valued time,

The ladder of success we fain would climb.

Too oft the path of life we find we trod
Sloped down to earth, not upward to our God.

The BOOKS we prize and treasure very dear

Still read the same from year to beckoning year,

Their ideas stand for LIFE; there's not a flaw

Can e'er be found in God's great noble Law.

His Laws, if kept from day to newborn day

Would ease the trials we meet along life's way,

And set a goal so steadfast, true, and real

That would but be a rich reward for zeal.

Our humble hearts and aims should all be bound

In search of God, and Zion's holy ground;

To place in action on this dying earth
His noble Laws that govern home and hearth.

Those stores of wealth, or goods, or maybe grain,

Don't seem so fine now since these years of strain

Have taken toll of earthly treasures piled,

We thought, in safety at home's snug fireside.

But if we'd worked with equal might and main

To place upon this aging earth again—
The plan of Zion which our LEADERS saw.

We'd now be living well within the Law.

So when this life's hard-earned estates are gone,

And that long-looked-for DAY shall lastly dawn;

How great our joy, and peace, and hope, because

We've lived aright, and worked, and KEEP THE LAWS.

HELP!

We Need Your Help! In helping us you will be helping many needy families. Here's the story: The management of the Herald Publishing House desires to get in immediate contact with every Latter Day Saint who is manufacturing or producing any legitimate article that should have a place in the lives of Latter Day Saint families. If there is demand enough for a central sales agency in order to establish a market for these products the Herald Publishing House has a plan to offer.

How Many Do You Know?

Act Quickly

The results of this survey are needed at once. The more complete the response is the more successful the plan will be. All we want now is the data we ask for in the questionnaire. Help us get it from every producer. Help us to help others to help themselves.

No doubt you know of some such people who perhaps do not read the Saints' Herald. Tell them about this movement at once in order that their product may be considered and listed in case it should prove feasible to publish a catalogue. Many are producing articles which they are unable to sell because of a lack of ready cash with which to establish a market. Perhaps we can help these families to help themselves. Do your duty and get in touch with them at once and advise them to

Send for Questionnaire Today

This questionnaire will ask the questions that we must have answered in order to complete our plans. Every church member who is a producer of any such article from shoe polish to hair tonic, including the thousand and one things in-between, should be able to profit through this effort. Help us establish a regular market for our church-produced merchandise. Be loyal to your friends as well as us. Help us find the producers.

The Pigeonhole

■ Lost

One of the most pathetic upwashes of the depression is an old couple who lost all they had shortly after the big crash in 1929.

They had a little store in an out-state town, all paid for, mostly out of money she had inherited. Specializing in some excellent lines of home-made products, they did a thriving little business, but they were on the "other" side of the tracks.

Financial smarties, visiting the store, persuaded them they ought to have a place "uptown," and got them to mortgage the store and assume heavy obligations. For a time the future looked rosy, and it appeared that they would step out of the "small time" class and into the "big money." Then somebody kicked the world off the cliff. It was a jolly wreck.

They had always paid their bills. All they needed was a little time, and they could have made it. The financial smarties, who had been so cordial signing them "on the dotted line," now became implacable Shylocks. They demand the money and the pound of flesh too. And took it. When they got through the old couple had nothing left but a headache, so thoroughly cleaned were they.

Today they bake dainties at home and peddle them from door to door. Their stark terror is the daily dread that tomorrow there will not be enough to buy flour for baking the cookies. Or that someone will insist on the payment of a bill. He, who ought to be seated in white-aproned comfort behind his own counter, walks the streets in rheumatic pain, blue with winter cold. On days when he lies disabled at home, she goes out, lugging a heavy basket, though she is physically unfit to venture far from the rocking chair and fireside in the cold weather.

She never complains for fear of adding to the torment he suffers over the mistake in judgment that lost her money. She is a woman of some refinement, and one can see she has memories of early years spent in conditions of culture and comfort. He is an ingenious workman, capable in many lines, wanting only an opportunity for profitable employment.

At this time in life they find it impossible to beat back over the difficult road to success that they traversed so lightly in their youth. A better world would find a place of usefulness, security, and happiness for them. But, alas, that is not the kind of world we have.

■ Sin

Rumor has it that a newly appointed rector in one of the dioceses asked a very old parishioner for her opinion of his first sermon. She replied, says The Living Church, "Very good, indeed, sir, so instructive—in fact, we didn't know what sin really was until you came here."

■ You have to begin early to make young people love home. You can't order them to do it on their sixteenth birthday, when they have become so tired of it that they consider leaving it. Comradeship doesn't start all at once. It has to be built through the years. And the companionship enjoyed when your children are in their teens must be prepared by answering questions and playing with them while they are still learning to talk.

Shall Branches Go to Zion?

There is evidence that in many quarters the Saints are individually and collectively thinking more seriously than for some years about heeding the injunction to gather into the regions round about the center place. Letters crossing my desk bear testimony to this. I am pleased that the Saints are so thinking. It is well they should. But I am more pleased to see evidences that they are thinking cooperatively more consistently than previously, thinking in terms of branches moving as a whole and colonizing in the regions "round about." This is also well, for it is contemplated in instructions already given us. Along with such instructions have come others advising caution and that due preparation be given to opening the way.

I have felt deeply impressed with the necessity of the Saints heeding the instructions given along this line, and so feel well that the Saints are alert to their duties in this respect. With the admonition to be punctilious to the details of having the way well prepared before them, for individual cases as well as group ones, I feel it is well to caution the Saints against being misguided either in intention or operation by groups or individuals who agitate organizations or movements independently of the authorities indicated in the law whose counsel and advice as well as assistance should be sought.

There are many "helping" and "helpful" organizations and associations which can and should be formulated and in action which will help the Bishopric in carrying out the details of Zion and cooperative movements and activities; but such associations or groups in order to merit the support of the Saints must be well within the spirit of the revelations advising such moves, in consonance with the policies of the temporal arm of the church, and function in harmony with those whose care is the spiritual development of the church.

These thoughts and suggestions are stimulated and called out by word coming from at least two well organized branches that contemplation is given to moving towards the center place in colonizing efforts.

The times are portentous, the need for the full establishment of Zion very great, but the dangers to arise from error are also great, and indicate the urgent need for the Saints to avoid running without tidings.

Let us wisely and devotedly move onward to Zion.

THE PREACHER AT HIS BEST

MOST OF US who have brains are often astonished at the way they work—or do not work. Some men (and women) can talk any time, anywhere, on any subject. They have the faculty to expand the irreducible minimum of thought into the ultimate maximum of vocal expression. But most of us have had this experience: we meet a stranger, perhaps he is a man of importance to whom we are introduced. He may be a very highly educated man from whom we might learn much. Suddenly we find that the old brain has joined the unemployed. The only thing that we can think of as a subject of conversation is the very original topic of the weather. We observe that it is a fine day. Our visitor looks out of the window and sees that it is raining. So do we. We hastily remark that the farmers need rain—that seems to justify the assertion that it is a fine day.

OR PERHAPS we are suddenly called upon to make a speech. There are at least a dozen subjects that we know enough about to last fifteen minutes. But to our dismay we cannot think of one. They are all locked up in our "subunconscious" mind with a time lock, and it is not time for the lock to open. So in desperation we think of the story of two Irishmen named Pat and Mike. This gets a laugh of sorts and then we try another one about a Scotchman named Sandy who was close with his money. It is just another after dinner speech—except that we forget the one about Ole Olson.

AND THEN that night we wake up about two o'clock in the morning and wish to go to sleep again but the mind is running at top speed. We have brilliant thoughts on many subjects. We could surely deliver a memorable speech, or take part in a remarkable conversation, or preach a great sermon. Possibly next morning when we review the drift of thought there are after all only a few golden nuggets among a lot of sand and gravel. The judgment was half asleep while imagination ran riot—we were half way between the vagaries of dreams and the white light of genius. Still there were nuggets of gold. Where were they when they were needed?

SOME HAVE THOUGHT that when the minister talks of having "liberty" in his sermon he is just imagining something. But the experience is very real. He suddenly finds his mind functioning as it should and when it should. The divine light has "quickened his intelligence" as was promised. The Spirit "brings to mind things past and shows him things to come," as Christ promised it would. He is at his best—above his best. All that he has ever studied out and thought out in his finest moments is ready for his mind to lay hold upon, plus a flood of new and inspired ideas and ideals—the spirit of the prophet is upon him—even "Saul is numbered among the prophets." There is no happier experience or one more free and exalted than such an experience. The man then knows how Jesus felt when he said: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

The 1934 Graceland College Radio Broadcast

Graceland College begins its second series of radio programs Sunday, March 4, 1934, at 6:00 p. m., Central Standard Time. President G. N. Briggs of Graceland College is scheduled to speak at this hour on the subject, "The New Deal in Education." Music will be furnished by the Graceland Male Quartet.

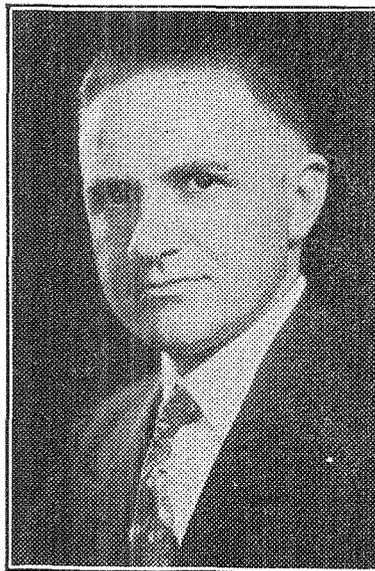

Arrangements have been made to broadcast these programs over KMBC from 6:00 to 6:30 p. m. each Sunday during the months of March and April. Following the practice of last year, awards will be offered to prospective students who write the best summaries of any three of the addresses scheduled to be delivered during this series.

CONTEST RULES

1. The contest is limited to persons who have never attended Graceland College.
2. Any three of the addresses delivered may be summarized, with not over two hundred words in each summary. The manuscripts should be mailed to Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, not later than May 15, 1934. The summaries will be judged by a committee to be appointed by the president of the college.
3. First place, $65.00; second place, $45.00; third place, $35.00. These awards are credit to be applied on the contestants' first year's tuition at Graceland.
4. A special award of $10.00 credit will be given to the person writing the best two hundred word summary of the first address, which will be given by President G. N. Briggs on March 4. The summary should be mailed to Graceland College not later than March 15. The contestant winning this award will also be eligible to compete for one of the major awards.

Here is an opportunity for students desiring an education to earn part of their tuition at Graceland.

Men You Ought to Know

EDMUND J. GLEAZER

Of the Quorum of Twelve

He's Irish, and not ashamed of it; a church man, and not ashamed of that either. When Apostle Gleazer came to the Quorum, he was the kind of young man who, in an earlier age, would have gone to war because it was the most exciting thing on earth. But, born in a modern period, he accepted a call to the ministry for the same reason.

A one-word description of him is "dynamic." He draws large crowds wherever he appears, and he doesn't do it with honeyed words of praise and comfort. He preaches a gospel of Christ that is honest, fearless, and practical.

Please pass this information on to your deserving friends.

Further information will be gladly furnished by Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa. Write today for a catalog and full particulars.

(Radio Station KMBC, located at Kansas City, Missouri, operates on a frequency of 950 kilocycles—315.6 meters.)

Sister Elva M. Hougas Passes

Sister Elva M. Hougas, wife of Ward A. Hougas, the Business Manager of the Herald Publishing House, passed away at the home on the afternoon of February 2, after a lingering illness. Through many years she has given her loyal support to her husband in a very active career of church work, to the full extent that her strength permitted her to do, and loving care to the two children who are left motherless by her death. Few knew the extent of her sacrifices for her family and the church, but all who knew her loved her for her sympathy and devotion, and for the kindly and gentle character that was hers.

The Women's Work

From a Letter to the Presidency

What of the women's department? This question has come to the fore many times of late, and has been the topic of several conferences in my office, and has appeared in some of my correspondence. So it is not at all surprising that in a recent letter to one who in the past has in various capacities seen activity in the work of the women's department and in our educational work, I should ask her opinion of the present status of the women's work in the church. I did, and received an answer which went straight into a frank presentation of the matter as she sees it. The letter may stimulate others of our alert women to express themselves concerning a question I am sure many of them are thinking about. I may be taking somewhat of a risk in inviting the women to write me frankly how they feel about it, but I'm doing it. What say you sisters?

Now here is the letter of which I spoke:

"I will write first of the matter of which you wrote concerning the organization of women's activities. It has been my observation and I have heard from various sources that women have said that the church (the men of the church, to be very frank, the priesthood) has been unmindful and unappreciative of the women's contribution to the church in the past. This is a harsh and a very bold indictment to make against the leading people of the church. I had thought that when the then existing departments of the church were amalgamated, the groups of individuals such as primary and intermediate, young people, and adult were to function in each branch. We who have been observing have long realized that there are some in every unit of organization, the branch, who do not care to organize for study but who are willing and eager to function in other activities. This being so, the leadership of each unit of organization, should be sufficiently equipped, through their general leaders or directors to give every group of individuals a chance to operate productively even though some may be only materially. Who is to say whether or not the women quilting, serving dinners, doing relief work or interested in home betterment are engaged religiously or not? Some of my best thinking, most noble aspirations, best organization of material or evolutions have come when I am busy in my garden, doing my housework, or driving from place to place. As Max C., used to say, 'Some of the best religious impulses may come when one is washing dishes.'

"I am sure that you know I am vitally interested in those activities which make for a well-trained, intellectually loyal constituency that is efficiently able to participate fully in our social program. But I am convinced that the church, as well as the school, must be prepared, or prepare to take care of and provide for, and lead and guide and counsel those who can and will work happily and contentedly along other lines of endeavor. There are some people who cannot be interested in study groups. These people may be able to do with their hands very acceptable work. Shall the church provide for all classes and make them all one great whole each according to his or her talents? My opinion is that the church program must be big enough to provide a place for all.

"You, of course, are familiar with the method used by the women of Independence in the work of visiting in the homes in the interest of home betterment. If these visitors to the homes have enough natural ability and intelligent training to make their visits radiate kindness, cheerfulness, desire to do for others, interest in and the joy of living, I cannot see any reason for their being denied this opportunity to try to help create right attitudes in the lives of others.

"Knowing women and knowing their untiring efforts along any line of endeavor in which they are interested, it would be my suggestion that the church admit its mistake by introducing various lines of women's activities. I cannot see why (unless because I have not kept in close touch with the present arrangement) this cannot be done under the leadership of the department of religious education. Right here we must get a broader viewpoint of religion. But, I do not think that one person can give enough personal attention to each of these divisions so that they may function the best. I think that the adult department, especially the women, should have an administration with authority to go ahead. Is there not now a director of each group as mentioned above? You have one adult group of men—the priesthood. They are given definite instruction. Why cannot other adult groups be organized, and work outlined?

"I would like to say something about a leader. The essence of leadership is contained in the answer made by the Great Teacher when asked the question, "Which is greatest among us?" One must be able to give no thought to who gets the credit for this or that piece of work or who is acclaimed by the people. The thing of greatest consequence is that the work has been done and done for the greatest good to the greatest number. You may be able to read into this last statement some of what I saw eight or nine years ago.

"I think there are great possibilities ahead and a greater need than ever before for a plan to be worked out with such adaptations as conditions warrant. I wish I really knew more about the present set-up. It is my fault that I do not. There were some things about the organization of the women's department that were not properly understood by a great many, and some of the priesthood thought they were overstepping their bounds, treading on the rights and privileges of the men. However, those are only minor details which could be worked out. I am glad to hear of the work of the women of Independence. I have faith in the women."

The foregoing indicates that the sister has given careful thought to the matter of organized expression to the work of the women of the church, and I am sure that her frank and keen presentation of the problem will stimulate thought among both the men and the women workers. Perhaps some of the men may want to write to me.

Give Her Credit!

By Leta B. Moriarty

SOMETIMES I wonder that Alice Lou grew up to be the sweet girl she is at eighteen. I really don't see how she has done it. She was reared to the tune of "That's a pretty fair piece of work, Alice, but you could have done so much better!" from mother, aunts, grandmother, and, in fact, from all the members of her family. Since Alice was the only child of her father and mother, also the only niece and grandchild, she was the center of much adult attention and criticism. Always those who loved her were eager to spur her on to greater achievements, but to my knowledge she never did anything which wholly pleased. There was always the little clause, "but you could have done so much better," to wind up their words accepting her endeavor.

"I grew sick of it," the girl says now, "and, believe me, if I ever have children of my own, I shall never talk to them like that."

A lecturer once said in her talk to a group of girl leaders—"Remember always, no matter how crude a piece of work she may have produced, to find some good point about it, and praise the girl for it. Give her credit for the effort she has put into it, and also for the way she has gone about it." This speaker stressed the fact that the leader is not to flatter the girl for her achievement, neither is she to praise a piece of poor workmanship; but she is to help by suggestion and constructive criticism so that the girl will be encouraged to strive harder and to produce better results next time.

In this connection I am inclined to think that most of us do not give girls the credit they should receive in many things, for performing thoughtful little acts, for thinking of others first, for the common little everyday courtesies that make us happy. Many of us underrate our girls.

The normal girl is intelligent, and every day she is learning better how to use that intelligence which is her God-given gift. The leader will be helped if she remembers that while she is "sizing up" a new girl, the girl herself may be rating the leader as to sweetness of face, quality of speech and grammar, kindness of attitude, and smartness of dress.

I like to think of girls as lively, wishful, helpful, lovable bundles of energy and ambition. I have never known a healthy girl who was absolutely ambitionless. True it is that some have more ambition than others, but all of them want to do something, to go Somewhere, and to be Somebody.

Girls respond wonderfully to their surroundings. Their eyes are the mirrors of their feelings. If they come from a truly happy home, they will show that happiness in their actions and dispositions. But if their homes are discordant, the girls' faces and actions will shout abroad the news much louder than if speech were used.

The adolescent girl wants to be happy, and she wants other people to be happy, too. Even the girl with the physical handicap is often the embodiment of cheer and sunshine. There was Fannie Crosby, one of our great hymn writers, who became blind at only six months. But she refused to let her blindness discourage or embitter her. She had a marvelous will power even as a child, and when eight years of age she wrote:

"Oh, what a happy soul am I!

Although I cannot see,

I am resolved that in this world

Contented I will be;

How many blessings I enjoy

That other people don't!

To weep and sigh because I'm blind,

I cannot and I won't."

This cheerful little girl grew to be a woman, and she gave the Christian world three thousand hymns that have brought comfort to men and women of many nations. One of the best known is, "Blessed Assurance, Jesus Is Mine."

Remember to give the girl credit. It is a crushing blow to her to find that you, or anyone whom she loves, does not trust her, has no faith in her judgment and discretion. If such knowledge comes to her suddenly, she may be driven in youthful desperation to do that for which she will be sorry the rest of her life. Oh, how wise a leader must be in dealing with those of tender years and no experience! How much we need to learn of unselfishness, thoughtfulness, and honesty!

J. L. Cooper Improved

The friends of J. L. Cooper will be glad to learn the news contained in a note transmitted to us by the kindness of Brethren James E. Bishop and H. E. French. Brother Cooper is greatly improved, and his condition promises further progress towards his recovery. He is hoping to be well enough to visit the General Conference in April.

Tulsa Women Have Threefold Winter Program

Led by Mrs. Hazel Cunningham, Tulsa, Oklahoma, women are deeply engrossed in their threefold winter program. They have a class which meets twice monthly to study the Book of Mormon under the instruction of Pastor J. E. Lancaster; they are busy about a money-making project, and they enjoy a social hour each month.

In November the women visited each home in the branch, asking for an "extra dollar" for Thanksgiving. In December the quilting group netted over thirty dollars on a friendship quilt which was presented to the pastor and his wife for Christmas. January 19, the women entertained with a jitney supper and program.

New Pastor Is Forging Ahead

Edward R. Carter, priest, the recently-elected pastor of Gladstone Branch, Michigan, came into the church eighteen months ago. He is taking active part in every department of the local, giving careful attention to all pastoral duties. Missionary work has a strong appeal for this new Saint and worker, and he has made an opening at Ford River, Michigan, where he preaches to a good number every other Sunday afternoon. Brother Carter is wonderfully blessed in his work, and the Saints feel that with him as their leader, the branch will go forward.

Minneapolis Stewardship Club Gives Attention to Study

The Stewardship Club of Minneapolis, Minnesota, a group of adults organized more than a year ago for study and social activities, has completed the study of "The Elements of Stewardship and Our Social Problems," prepared by Albert Carmichael. They will next take up the study of "History and Principles of Religion." The club meets on Friday night in the homes of its members, and welcomes the attendance and participation of those not of the faith as well as of members.

Cotton Price Will Pay for New Furnishings

Saints of Kennett, Missouri, are learning to work together. They are clearing land on one brother's place, where they will raise cotton. Proceeds from the crop, it is hoped, will purchase a piano and furnishings for the new church which they expect to complete within a period of nine months.

G. T. Griffiths and John Martin Visit Moundsville

West Virginia members of Wheeling, Fairview, and Moundsville, were happy January 21, when all-day services were held at the last-named place and Patriarchs G. T. Griffiths and John Martin were guests. It was an old-time meeting with inspirational sermons, dinner served at the church, a priesthood meeting at 1 p. m., and a social service at two o'clock in charge of Brothers Griffiths, Martin, and L. A. Serig of the district presidency.

To Have District Choir of Six Hundred Voices

It is the ambition and hope of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District to have a choir of six hundred voices. For the purpose of organizing this chorus of singers Sister Louise Evans, district chorister, is now traveling from branch to branch, meeting with the singers, training and rehearsing. The combined choirs will sing at the district conference February 24 and 25.

Twenty-fourth Year as Pastor of Valley Center

Elder Harold Muir was unanimously sustained pastor of Valley Center Branch, Michigan, for his twenty-fourth consecutive year, at the business meeting January 17. The Saints are happy to have his leadership. The young people appreciate him.

Brother Muir is a community-minded citizen. In addition to caring for his pastoral duties, he is an agent and telegraph operator, devoting eight hours a day to office work. He is a member of the village council, is village assessor, is secretary-director of the board of education of Melvin Standard School, and acts as publicity agent for the branch.

Missionary Spirit in Wyoming

In spite of winter weather Saints of Oshoto Branch have been able to continue regular Sunday school and church services, and are much interested in missionary endeavor. Brother H. L. Hartsorn has been trying to reach widely scattered and isolated members of this branch by conducting services and making personal calls at their homes. Not long ago all who could find transportation went to the home of Guy Davidson, meeting the families of Brothers Davidson and Reddings in a good prayer meeting.

Study and Recreation for Australian Reunion

(Adapted from a letter by Geoffrey Gillard.)

Tiona Reunion Grounds, Australia.—Young people played an important part in the program activities of the reunion, participating in such special features as the concert and the extemporaneous speaking contest, oration service, and the one-act play, "Dust of the Road." Our recreational and social program comprised baseball tournaments, beach sports, hikes, a "mystery treasure hunt" (which provided an immense amount of fun), a mock trial, a barbecue on the beach, bonfire, and a New Year celebration. Organized games were held every night following the evening church service and at the close of these a camp fire story-telling session was provided.

A class session of approximately one and a half hours each morning particularly arranged for the young people was in charge of Brother Geoffrey Gillard, and aroused considerable enthusiasm. Many of them spoke of the good they had received from the discussions, and deplored the fact that there was not another week of class work. This is exceptionally encouraging in view of the fact that the atmosphere of Tiona is such as to foster the holiday spirit. The work was conducted along forum lines. A findings committee was appointed each morning to prepare a resume of the day's class discussion. This was very helpful in stimulating interest.

The O. B. K. Pledge

The O. B. K. young people's organization of Kansas City Stake held its seventh initiation service, as described in our news columns of this issue. An important feature of the service is the pledge, which is taken by the group after the presentation of the new members. The pledge follows:

"In the presence of my friends I pledge myself to give loyalty and active support to the work of the O. B. K. organization and the Church of Jesus Christ, of which it is a part. In so doing, I witness unto Thee, O God, the Eternal Father, that I am willing to take upon me the name of Thy Son and always remember Him and keep His commandments which He has given me."

A hymn, "Just as I Am, Thine Own to Be," was then sung, and the congregation was addressed on a special theme for the occasion. Then followed the lighting of the candles, and a ceremony in which the congregation participated, this time with two themes, "Declaring the Message of Christ," and "Spreading

"See You at Conference!"

BLAIR JENSEN

President, Lamoni Stake

He ought to understand young people. It is not so very long since he was very young himself, and a pretty lively number, too. But he has become a commanding figure in church work, noted for his vigorous and effective methods.

He firmly believes that the place for young people to work is in regular church activities, growing up to share the responsibilities of general tasks with older people. He doesn't go in very strong for knick-knacks, oddities, or side-shows in religion. The straight stuff is good enough for him, if people are really in earnest.

His ideas have succeeded in Lamoni Stake to the extent of engaging many young people in the church work. That should be proof enough that they are good.

Are You Free From Personal Prejudice?

Is your own mind free from personal prejudice? Many people are misled because they never seriously take themselves to task; they never examine frankly and make allowance for the bias that is giving their judgments by their own desires and prejudices. ## Christian Legion Takes Michigan Young People

D. T. Williams Doing an Excellent Work With New Organization

(From our correspondence.)

Lansing, Michigan.—The young people here are much interested in the Christian Legion organization first described by Apostle D. T. Williams at the convention in November. On his visit of January 4, he gave further details for what promises to be an opportunity for enlisting young men and women actively in the work of the church. The latter are ready and willing, but have needed an organized plan and a goal toward which to direct their efforts.

One hundred and sixteen have already signed as charter members of the new organization, this number including some who are not members of the church. Much progress has been made in the last few months. The Legion sponsored a midnight prayer service last New Year's Eve. The senior young people's class recently organized a Legion Supporters' Club with committees to care for social affairs and a special committee to care for missionary work. One project of the club is to hold frequent prayer services in the homes of Saints unable to attend church regularly.

Interest in the Christian Legion, aroused by Brother Williams, is growing rapidly in all Central Michigan district. The young people will hold a convention February 11 at Beaverton church to develop the organization further. Assisting Brother Williams in this work will be Hubert Case, Louis E. Grice, M. A. Summerfield, and Harry Runkle. A general convention is planned for March 25 at Saginaw in the Masonic Temple.

Don't Ever Be a Quitter

By Alma M. Coombs

Of all the truths I've gleaned in life,
(A life so strewn with litter,
There's one thing sure, when tackling strife,

You must not be a quitter.

True; some do quit, and fools despair,
And weaklings wail most bitter,
But speaking now, to men who dare,
"Don't ever be a quitter."

I like the man who stands alone,
And stands mid scorn or titter,
But standing, knows his soul's his own;
He cannot be a quitter.

So, if Miss Fortune treats you rough
And says, "Resign"; then, quit her;
You must not fail, don't cry, "Enough,"
Don't ever be a quitter.

Theology---The Guiding Power . . . . .

By James E. Bishop

ONE OF THE OBJECTIVES of the church is the task of "defining our theology without fixing our creed."

It is not our purpose to attempt such a definition. That would probably come at the close of lengthy and cooperative effort. But one may make an effort at orientation.

Theology, in the sense of it being a comprehensive view of God's purposes and man's relation to God, has been pushed to the background by some. By others it has been ruled out as having nothing of value to offer to the advancement of religion.

Every institution, and every individual mind, has times of separation and sifting (crisis). This time of sifting or crisis is preceded by an introduction of various elements which are hard to evaluate. The difficulty that ensues is the crisis. In an institution that is divine we should expect, with the difficulty, a holding to permanent values and a willingness to consider justly all points of view. Such principles are involved in the following Scripture: "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." "A bruised reed shall he not break, and a smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory." (Matthew 3: 12 and 12: 20.) This Scripture makes explicit what works out in human relations and in a divine fellowship suggests the hand of Almighty God.

In our own beloved church we can see cross currents similar to those that are in operation in the world. The world was taken unprepared, by what some people referred to in an animistic manner, as the depression. Some people in the world saw it coming. But their voices were as "one crying in the wilderness." Likewise the church was taken unprepared for the depression. But in his address to the General Conference of 1926, President Smith uttered these momentous words:

"A word in regard to world conditions may not be out of place here, and yet I shall not attempt by any means to present an exhaustive or perhaps even a brief scrutiny of world conditions. Not all the necessary economic and industrial readjustments following the war have been made, and as those readjustments come and as nation after nation makes the monetary and economic and industrial readjustments necessary, we are bound to feel the effects, and the Church cannot escape them. Hence this indicates the wisdom of a word of warning to the Saints and caution that they be not caught by a depression industrial which will injure them perhaps beyond recovery. And what I say of individuals

I say of the Church, and I am deeply concerned in regard to it." (Address to the Seventy-first General Conference, pages 16, 17.)

THE WORLD has witnessed wide attacks on civil and religious authority. In our elections it seems to be the policy to put the man out that is in office, and heed other leaders rather than the responsible and delegated authority. In my church experience I have met people that were more anxious about regulating branch affairs than the authorities to whom that work belongs. This is mitigated by the fact, that there are sometimes and somewhere sufficient of the "salt of the earth" to prevent all things losing flavor.

In many quarters of the religious world theology doesn't even sit in the rear pews. It isn't even the modest back seat taker, who because of his humility may be invited to the front seats.

This fact has been recognized by a few leaders of the present generation and they are proceeding with the determination to work out a theology that shall be in harmony with the Scripture. They are taking the ground that God is personal and they are no longer allowing their minds to be fettered by the watered stock of an immanence that knows no overruling personality. Convinced they are that God has spoken and that the record of His special revelation is to be found in the Bible, and not in the green grass and beautiful birds. These men are taking the position that theology should be as a lighthouse. The lighthouse contributes light to the environment. The environment does not contribute the light. They are taking the position that Christianity is not just another religion, but that it was projected into the affairs of men. It is a sure standard and from its revelation a theology suited for the present age may be developed.

WHEN such activities are viewed in the light of the fact that the restoration of the gospel was anticipated as a need on the part of many of the reformers, they are of great importance and of grave concern to our own churchmen. If the movements of Karl Barth of Switzerland, Friedrich Gogarten of Germany, and John McConnachie of Scotland, are destined to take a large hold on some of the leaders of the religious world, then the word of God will be restored to its proper place and function. It will take a great hold on the imagination of the people and make a flexible condition into which the ministry of our own church can enter with great power.

With regard to the above, the work of Paul M. Hanson is noteworthy. He has started what many of the ministry are endorsing with unstinted praise. December 9 and 10, 1933, he held a Ministerial Missionary Institute in Kirtland, Ohio. The preceding week, Brother Hanson conducted one in Columbus, Ohio. His own subjects were, "A Scriptural Interpretation of the Present Age" and "Momentous Events of the Latter Days." Others of the brethren took part. A warm glow of fellowship pervaded the institute and reverence and confidence in the word of God was apparent. Every man was made to feel that he was of worth to the church. Emphasis was placed upon leadership in missionary work as belonging to the priesthood. Helpful methods were discussed. The conviction was developed that there was opening to the church a day of great opportunity in which the word of God would play the major part. There had been a day of calling and there is now a day of choosing.

Reverting once again to the work of Karl Barth and others sympathetic to him, it is interesting to note how they attempt to clear the ground for the development of their theology. They tell us that the world is under a crisis, a separation and a judgment. It is indicated that there are three causes for this crisis. The first of which is philosophical idealism. In this connection it is pointed out that this tendency began with the renaissance and came to full expression in the French Revolution. The age of reason was substituted for the word of God that liveth and abideth forever. Self-expression was adopted, and God's will was divorced. This idealism starts from the ego of man as lord of the world. The ground work of this is found in the depths of the human soul. "There is continuity therefore, between the temporal and eternal." God, man and eternal spirit are identified as one. It follows, then, that man, in the kernel of his nature is good. Out of himself he can do all that religion requires. He can achieve the right relation to God. "He is man enough to overcome." To worship God all he needs is an ideal or imperative. The gospel does heal the sinner. Repentance is around the corner and the Grace of God is out of sight. McConnachie concludes, "This idealism has turned far from proving a good ally. It has betrayed the gospel."

The second cause of the day of crisis is marked as the "doctrine of historical relativity." The dominating idea of modern history is the idea of development. It was applied by Troeltsch to Christianity. If Christianity finds its origin in things mundane and subject to developments of history, then the result is one of complete relativity and weakening, if not an entire discrediting of Christian standards. In the place of being an absolute religion it is merely an appearance in history. It may be superior to other religions, which up to that time had appeared, but it carries no assurance that someday it will not be surpassed. According to McConnachie, "The result of this view is, that all sense of Christianity as a revelation, happening 'once and for all' in time, has disappeared from the modern historical consciousness." And the author states further:

"Such a view of Christianity, as Troeltsch admits, makes it dependent on the civilization in which it takes root and grows up. A blow has been dealt to its decisive quality as an Act of God, an event speaking to all times and all places. It has been transformed into a common religious truth or idea, and rendered thereby harmless."—The Barthian Theology and the Man of Today, page 30.

In describing the third cause of the crisis these men pay their respects to psychology in the following language:

"The third cause of the crisis in theology has been the excessive devotion to religious psychology which has sought, as we have seen, to come nearer to God by an analysis of the experiences of religion. This pursuit of the Divine through psychology has proved an ignis fatuus which has deceived many, for while the psychological facts of faith are proper subjects for scientific study they yield no knowledge of the reality of Revelation. There is no divine datum which man by any study of psychology can master, for the Divine is not given to him in the processes of his soul."—Ibid. page 30.

And so this clearing of the field goes on in the book and in the general movement of which the book is a reflection. The scholarship of these men cannot be questioned. Their desire to know God and to have reverence and understanding of his will and to erect a theology thereon, is to be admired. It is a challenge to Latter Day Saints. It may help to prepare the way for a wider and more appreciative preachment of the gospel. As one reads the experiences of these men, one wonders if a word of inspiration was wafted to them, such as, "When you go forth to preach to the world, you are not to preach your own speculations or idle imaginings and you are not to preach the philosophies of men. You are to preach the gospel as it is in the books that I have given to the church, and you are to cry repentance to this generation."

On the first page of the book there is a statement that is not new to Latter Day Saints. It says, "A judgment is being pronounced today on the whole of our western civilization." The early preachers of the Restoration Movement were commanded to preach with a warning voice. Wars and unrest were foretold. Some of these things were fulfilled. There is more to come. But like a golden strand from the eternal throne there came the theme of Zion which is destined to be the habitation of righteousness and the place of peace and safety.

The Speedway

"BUT, DART, who all is going to be there?" In the past five minutes of telephone conversation a note of concern had crept into Larry's tone, and her facial expression was now more dubious than confident.

"Just the Pigeon crowd, five or six couples. Ben and Dora Lou will be there—"

"And she'll simply look daggers at me or put poison in my tea," thought Larry.

"—It's just some of the Pigeons and their girls who are invited to help Pinky Layman celebrate his birthday."

"But I never went to a mixed house party before," Larry was stalling for time—she wanted to think about this invitation; "Is it all right—do they have chaperons and all that?"

"Perfectly proper, my dear child, but we don't call 'em chaperons in this age you know." The reproval was mildly patronizing. "Mrs. Layman will be there and her sister, Mrs. Keithley, probably. The Laymans have lots of dough, and they would do almost anything they could for Pinky. It was a great day for the club when Pinky Layman took a notion he wanted to be a Purple Pigeon," came the explanation over the wires. "It'll be a chance for you to get out of town and see some of the Ozarks—aw, come on, Larry, be a sport and go."

The Purple Pigeons were a group of young men in Independence, organized for purely social and recreational reasons. Their ideas of culture and convention and traditions were rather hazy; they were an easy-going, good-natured lot, most of them the sons of fairly well-off parents. No one knew why they had chosen Purple Pigeons for a name unless it was as Dora Lou Housely once observed: "Because the members' long suit is billing and cooing." Their fathers knew about the bills, their girls about the coos.

LARRY had never been out with this crowd before because Gregory Spurgeon was not a member of the club. Though some of his friends were Pigeons and he had been invited to join, he had refused. As a reason for his refusal, he had told Larry that he could not afford the club membership while he was in school. It was costly to be a Purple Pigeon in good standing.

"Sure you'll like it," Dart was persuading over the wires.

"But I'll be so strange to all of them, Dart. I—"

"Oh, don't worry about that. You won't be strange long with that gang. They're the kind that won't let you." He meant to be reassuring, but Larry was not reassured.

"Will they smoke and pet and—drink?"

"Come, come, Larry, be your age. Don't be pre-Victorian. What if they do?"

"But I—I don't believe in those things, Dart," she declared almost defiantly.

"But you dance and go on moonlight rides and—" Dart was amused. Larry could tell that from his voice. She was

How It Began—

Larry Verne has refused to marry Greg Spurgeon in spite of the fact that she loves him, for she fears he will be called to the priesthood, and her early childhood experience makes her revolt against such a thing.

Larry's life becomes enmeshed with the lives of others in the home of Eldred Hampton, who mothers a group of people, young and old, who have no homes of their own.

Tempted to attend a costume ball with Greg, Larry yields, and is horrified by the theft of a valuable heirloom, a bracelet belonging to Eldred Hampton. In a period of repentance, she devotes herself more earnestly to the work of the church.

Trying for a time to associate with Greg on a purely friendly basis, and trying to curb the development of his ardent affection, Larry finds herself failing. Love is too strong for her, and she feels herself being swept off her feet, against her will. It seems that she must either yield, or break with Greg and not see him for a time. She breaks with him, but is very unhappy over it. Greg makes no attempt to see her, much to her disappointment.

willing to bet that he was grinning right into the telephone.

"They're not the same at all. I guess I know how to behave myself," stiffly.

"Of course you do, my dear, and that's just it. Even if the others do indulge, you don't have to."

"Oh, I know, Dart," she was beginning to feel exasperated, "but don't you see—if they do all those things, well, they aren't the people I want to be associated with." How bluntly she had worded it—she was a bit frightened. "I mean—"

"Well, if that's the way you feel," coolly—

"I didn't mean it to sound just that way, Dart, honest. Only—I'm afraid. I just don't like the feeling I have about that house party. I—"

"That isn't much of a compliment to me, Larry," was he just a little embarrassed now?

"Oh, I know—I know I'm a terrible bungler. I'd really like to go—only—"

"A maiden's indecision. You are old-fashioned, Larry, delightfully so. I see that I am going to have to decide for you. You're going to the party. How does that appeal to you?"

And though that little qualmy feeling still abode in her mind, Larry did not demur.

FOR TWO WEEKS she had been seeing Dart Moody rather frequently. He and Bernice had quarreled and broken up, and Dart was not the kind of a fellow to allow the lack of a girl in his life to mar his social opportunities. Larry had enjoyed the few casual dates she had had with him, but this—a week-end house party—well, it was more than she had expected.

As she went to her room after that telephone conversation with Dart, she was thankful this invitation had not been to a bridge party. It had been a long time since she had played auction bridge; and as for contract, she knew nothing about it. She really didn't enjoy playing cards of any kind, and she hoped over the coming week-end to be able to slip away to the lake or do something else equally as entertaining while the others played bridge.

Every spring, it seemed, the Arthur Laymans helped their only son celebrate his birthday in just the way he wished. They were wealthy people living in Independence, and so far Pinky's chief business in life began and ended in having a good time on astonishing sums of his father's money. This spring—April—he had chosen to take a few of his fellow club members and their girls to his father's cottage—yes, they called it a cottage even though it did have twenty rooms—in the Ozarks.

The cottage, Dart told Larry, stood right on a lake beach, and one could enjoy all kinds of outdoor sports down there—canoeing, swimming (only this time of year the water was still cold), playing tennis, hiking, exploring, picnicking. It was going to be great fun.

But the more Larry thought of the contemplated trip, the more dubious she felt. If she only knew the Layman family, she was sure that she would not hesitate, but she, a stranger, had been invited so very casually. And after all, she was not a close friend of Dart's, and Dora Lou, the only girl in the crowd whom she knew, would not welcome her there in Bernice's stead. Larry wondered if she shouldn't thank Dart for his invitation and stay at home. But still—she wanted to go.

The idea of leaving Independence for a week-end in order that she might get, if possible, a more objective view of her own life, appealed to her. She wished to put miles and miles between herself and Greg. She wanted to have a good time, to forget her own problems. If the party offered these things—indeed it was welcome.

"So you like to hike, do you? Brave girl," Dart was saying. "Sure then, we'll have a hotsy-totsy time picking up all the chiggers in the country."

Dart and Larry were driving to Kansas City.

"Do—do they drink a lot, Dart?" The girl was looking at the road ahead as she put this question.

"Now, Larry, you aren't going squeamish, are you?" His question was merely a vocal protest against her own trend of thinking. "No, they don't drink much, and when they do, they handle their liquor pretty well."

"Do—all the girls smoke?" after a pause.

"Say, what is this—a third degree?" he demanded. "Huh? Well, yes, I guess most of them do. I know Lillian does, and Mabel, and Diane, and Dora Lou does some—not so much as the others." How well he knew all of them, thought Larry.

"I should love to go," Dart, "only I'm afraid."

"Great Scott, Larry, what are you afraid of?"

"Of my ability to handle myself in your crowd," steadily. "I don't know a soul except you and Dora Lou and Ben, and Dora Lou will be mad at me for coming in Bernice's place."

"Bernice," snorted Dart, "she's acted like a little hellcat"—the girl had wounded his vanity if one was to judge from his reaction—"and it's nobody's business if I choose to bring some other girl in her place. I intend to punish—" he stopped abashed.

"Go ahead," supplied Larry. "You intend to punish her properly by taking me down to the Layman house party in her place."

"I didn't mean to say that, Larry," penitently.

"But you started to—"

"No, I didn't mean just that, now honest."

"Oh, well, forget it," Larry laughed. How very naive he was! "But don't you see, Dart, it's rather impossible. I just don't fit in this crowd. I don't smoke, I don't drink; I refuse to lower my own self-respect by swearing. Don't you see I'll be the typical little country cousin in your gang?"

"Silly, you're a mighty sweet little country cousin," and he put a comforting arm about her. "Girls are funny though," he mused, "but really, Larry, Dora Lou likes you."

"Please, let's don't," and Larry drew herself away from him.

"You're a queer one," he was looking at her with frank curiosity. "How'd you get that way?"

"Please—I just don't like it, Dart. It's so cheap and common!"

"You think you're a one-man woman, don't you?" What flash of insight had told him that? "Well, don't kid yourself, my dear, no woman is."

"I know some who are."

"You're ahead of me. All the women I've ever known have—but I won't say that, Larry. I—but I believe that when women do limit themselves to one man, they miss an awful lot of fun. After all, Larry, you don't seem to have tumbled to the fact that now's the time to have a good time—and all of us had better jump at the chance."

"You know you don't believe that, Dart Moody," she faced him squarely.

SHE DECIDED TO GO for two reasons. First, she wanted to see how real house parties are conducted in wealthy homes. And second, this would be good for Dart. He would learn—hadn't he already completely given away to her how he really felt about Bernice?—after two days of comparing her with Bernice, that the latter was far better suited to his social requirements. She supposed that he would think her a stick, and how could she help it when every movement he made, everything he did, she compared with Greg? Always the man she compared with Greg, fell far short of her ideal of how a gentleman should conduct himself. Dart had warned her that she was too idealistic. Perhaps she was.

After she decided to go to the house party, Larry's thoughts grew prodigal. She had to have clothes suitable for the outing, and they must be nice clothes—an evening dress, an afternoon dress, and a hiking outfit.

"I think such an invitation's just too ducky for words!" crowed Sallie Ruth when Larry told them about it. "I'll loan you my black net evening dress, Larry. It's about the ritziest thing I own, and you'll look wonderful in it! What man can resist a blond in black net? I'll lend it to you on one condition—and that is that you'll tell me all about the party when you get home. I'll be crazy to hear."

Carmen also came forward with a loan. She had just bought a brown crepe that would do very well as an afternoon dress. She had not yet worn it herself, but Larry was very welcome to it.

On the night before they started, Dart delivered a significant little lecture to Larry on how she was to have a good time. Perhaps that in itself should have been warning enough, but she did not take it as a warning. "Just let yourself go," he admonished; "don't be so darned reserved. You have a delicious smile; give us more of it. And if a fellow starts to kiss you, don't chill him to the bone with one of those icy stares. After all, he isn't going to kill you. What's a little kiss or two between friends?"

Larry and Dart were to ride down in the Layman car driven by Pinky Layman himself. The girl had an overwhelming curiosity to see this scion of wealth and social prestige. And so when the car called for her and Dart, it was Pinky Layman for whom she first looked. There he was behind the wheel, a slight, reddish-haired fellow wearing a combination skull cap and eye shade. He did not remove from his mouth the cigaret he was smoking when he was presented to Larry, but acknowledged the introduction with a comradely, "Howdydo." The girl at his side was a vivid creature with striking red-brown eyes, glossy yellow hair and a chin that was almost square. She, too, was smoking. Lillian Belmont was her name. The other couple in the car were Diane Bentley and Dave Harmon.

They were laughing and chattering gaily, and so Larry settled quietly back beside Dart and enjoyed the luxury of riding in a big, expensive car. Her traveling companions, her friends for the week-end, she thought with a panicky feeling about her heart, were discussing their plans. There would be horseback riding—Larry had not thought of that, and she had no riding habit! The tennis courts were newly gone over, and those who cared to would play. Larry was a very poor tennis player. Probably, however, Diane suggested, the guests would prefer the golf links. Larry had never had a mashie in her hands; she did not know one end of the golf green from the other. It was consoling to learn that both canoes and rowboats were available on the lake, and probably much of the time would be spent on the water. No mention was made of picnics, hikes, or exploration parties.

The rest were talking about boating. "I hate canoeing," petulantly declared Lillian Belmont; "but I'll consider going if Dave will take me—"

"'Course I will," that young man gallantly consented, "a canoe, a flask of gin, and thou, my dear Lillian—"

"Sour egg! you know we'd both have to swim!" she laughed shrilly. "I did have to swim once when—"

"Hey," broke in Dart without any regard for her story, "who else does this whoopie party include? Who's in the other car?"

"Mother and Aunt Dee," Pinky shouted to be heard above the others, "Jerry and Dora Lou, and Rowe McCarley and his girl friend—I've forgotten her name. Think she's some dancer."

Horrified, Larry could do nothing but stare at the driver. "What!" she gasped when breath returned to her.

"So you know him, too?" Lillian inquired with cutting sweetness; "but of course you do. Every pretty girl in town knows Rowe McCarley."

"Even our fair Lillian," teased Dave.

"He's the one that broke your heart once, isn't he?" Diane exhaled the question with a cloud of blue tobacco smoke.

"Once?" snickered Dave, "and how about yourself, girlie? If this is a confessions party—I'd hoped we might steer clear of confessions—"

"You would hope that," Diane comfortably settled herself against his shoulder.

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt

Arranged from his diaries by his daughter, Mrs. Ruby C. Faunce

January 2, 1867—

Received another letter from my dear wife with sad news that our little Lulu was worse, and no hope for her life. The same day her letter was written, a prophecy was delivered to me at DeSota, to comfort me and saying I should see my loved ones again. Oh, God grant it.

Thursday confirmed Brother and Sister Carl Hartwell. Sunday—went to Council Bluffs where I was booked to speak in the evening on "The Lost Tribes of the House of Israel." I spoke two hours and fifteen minutes to a full and very attentive house. Brother Caffel and I spent Monday visiting the Saints—I really thank God for such men as he is to labor with.

January 17—

Started making a synopsis and commentary for my own use and my friends, to aid in the work.

Friday went to Glenwood and on Saturday with Brothers Henry and George Kemp. Went to Nebraska City, stayed with Brother Elvin, whose family with himself, treated me like one of their own. Surely the ties of the gospel are ties of love. Spent the next few days at Nebraska City and Camp Creek, and intended returning to Nebraska City for meeting Friday, but weather turned so intensely cold that no one would venture from the house, as chickens froze and animals suffered. Saturday, weather a little moderated, Mr. Clayton loaned me a pony and some extra clothing and I alternately walked and rode to Nebraska City. To Brother Elvin's where I received a number of letters, among which was one from Brother Charles Derry, telling me of his illness since Christmas. One from Mrs. Stickney urging me to prepare a course of lectures on Utah affairs. Best of all I received one from the Prophet Joseph, which I must pronounce the best letter I ever received in my life, and my heart goes out to him.

January 29—

A great many of the brothers and sisters met at Brother Gaylord's—and I felt full of the Spirit of God. I retired and poured out my soul before him two or three times. Someone wishing a child administered to, I prayed while they were administering and as soon as they were through called on Brother Henry Kemp to sit down—I laid my hands upon his head, and while tears ran down my cheeks like rain and the powerful influence operating upon me, I pronounced upon him a blessing, such as he said afterwards "satisfied him for all his past labors." Received a letter from my wife today informing me that my child is restored to health, praise the Lord. Also there are scores of men in Utah working for their bread and men have actually been seen crying in the streets for bread. It is bad here but not like that—

From February 12 to March 12, I was sick with rheumatism, but through administrations, prayers and faith gradually recovered.

On March 4, I received a letter from my dear sister in England bringing the sorrowful news of my father's death, aged 82—who died January 17. The news made me much worse. The Saints all wonderful to me, especially Sister Hartwell who treated me like her own son.

March 29, Friday—

With Brother R. C. Elvin rode by cars to Boone, Iowa, then by stage to Des Moines, took train for Keokuk. By boat to Nauvoo where we arrived at 3 p. m. Sunday. Found roads deep in mud and things looked desolate at Nauvoo. Went to the Mansion House where we "put up." Joseph came in and David passed by, I recognized both from pictures I had seen of them, but did not make myself known. Brother Joseph's influence was felt by me the moment he entered. Brother Elvin in testifying in meeting introduced me. After meeting, Brother David, who was present came forward and introduced himself to me, then he took us and we met his honored mother, Sister Emma Bideman, she who had been the beloved wife of the martyred prophet. I certainly felt a very peculiar sensation when in their house. Brother David's manner is gentle, mild, courteous and pleasing. Monday, April 1, was introduced to Brother Joseph with whom I was very much pleased. I found him humble, kind, generous, unselfish, appreciative of others, farseeing and clear headed. Spent a very pleasant day with him, and one that afforded me much profit. Went with Joseph to Montrose where he administered to Brother Gurvey, returned to Nauvoo, Joseph being oarsman both ways.

April 3—

Council convened this morning in the meeting-house, in an upper room of the martyr's old store—was organized by electing Joseph Smith, President; M. H. Forscutt, Clerk—the proceedings interesting, deliberations and discussions instructive. Lasted third, fourth and fifth. Visited notable places in Nauvoo. April 6, rode down the Mississippi in a skiff to Keokuk. Up to Berrows Hall where conference convened. In the evening I spoke on 1 John 3: 20-21. Sunday 7, Brother Joseph preached on "Christ's right to prescribe laws for the government of his church and the imperative duty of men to obey." Never before have I heard anyone speak from so high a moral standpoint, nor associated with one possessing so truly Christ-like disposition. We met next morning at 9. Transacted business until 5 p. m. At nearly close of session Brother Joseph said he would like to have me labor under him. I find much more talent in the church than I expected.

April 13—

Took steamer Rob Roy and went down the Mississippi to Saint Louis, arrived 6 a. m. Sunday. Walked to Brother Bellamy's and later went to the hall over The Mound Market. Preached in evening, 1 John 4: 10, 11. Spent ensuing week visiting Saints, and preaching to full houses each evening—baptized three on Sunday and helped to confirm them. Thursday, 25—Met Brother Hazzledine President of Saint Louis District. Preached in evening.

April 30—

Accompanied Brother Hazzledine to Gravois—in the evening preach from Galatians 4: 4, 5. Had good liberty. I urged the acceptance of God's mercy, and Mr. William Heishaw gave name for baptism. He formerly belonged to the church in the days of the martyrs, and was the first minister sent to Wales.

Thursday, 9—

Had a long talk with Brother Jefferson Green, who wants a minister sent to Wayne County as he has many calls for preaching and thinks much good is to be done. Friday—Preached from Ezekiel 33: 11, after meeting, ten names were given in for baptism. Sunday—Preached on, "Be ye courteous, kind and forgiving one to another and let love abound." After meeting we went in four wagons and one buggy to the river for baptism. Arriving I obtained the names of those to be immersed and found instead of the ten given in, twenty-two were desirous of baptism. Returning to Saint Louis with Brother Hall, Brother James Anderson and myself, these were confirmed. The hall was crowded and the Spirit of the Lord, mighty. In the evening the hall was literally jammed and I discoursed on "The Ten Lost Tribes." This day has been one of labor, but unequalled delight—a feast to my soul.

"Having been called by Brother Joseph I bade them adieu, regretting very greatly to leave them. Tuesday took train for Mendota and then on to Plano, where I went to Herald office, there meeting Brother Joseph, Blair and Sheen. In the evening to church, and then home with dear Brother Joseph. Thursday Brother Joseph drove over to Sandwich where I met Bishop Israel L. Rogers—returned to Plano.

May 17—

In the forenoon met at Brother Joseph's house and after prayer by Brother

Blair, Brother Joseph and Brother W. W. Blair worked on comparing copies and I commenced transcribing the New Translation commencing on the first chapter of Matthew. Sister Smith is very sick.

May 18—

Accompanied Brother Blair to Sandwich and then walked to his home on Fox River. Met Sister Blair a fine pleasant woman. Had a testimony that this beloved brother is an apostle in deed as well as in name. Sunday back to Plano—Sister Smith some better—went to Brother Mark's where we found Sister Marks very ill—Brother Blair and I administered and she was healed instantly. Praise the Lord.

May 31—

In the afternoon I was received as a member of the Saint Louis Branch and an officer of the church.

June 10—

Conference convened—I was called to occupy in the stand with Brother Hazzledine. Reports were very satisfactory while prospects for increased membership fine.

June 19—

My thirty-third birthday, spent the day in fasting and prayer, study and meditation. In the evening attending a soul refreshing meeting at Brother Hazzledine's.

Spent the balance of the week visiting Saints, where at Brother Molyneaux, instructed some in the gospel. Saturday visited Sister Burgess in morning and at evening went by steamer to Alton, where there was some difficulty. After two or three meetings it was settled satisfactorily. Back to Saint Louis where I spent the time as before visiting, instructing the Saints, reading, writing, and preaching until the twenty-sixth, when Bishop Anderson gave me six dollars and fifty cents with which to pay my fare to Jeffersonville, arriving there found meeting was at Dry Fork, so made my way thither.

Sunday, July 28—

Having come with Brother Green to Jeffersonville, I preached at the schoolhouse to large audience. Met Brother George Hilliard, son-in-law of Brother Green. During my work here four people gave me their hands in token of their wish for baptism, they were George Hilliard, Mrs. Amanda E. Hilliard, Mrs. Mary J. Green and John Jefferson Green. We had two teams hitched up and the four with a number of witnesses and myself drove to Mr. Hilliard's where Mrs. Hilliard, a Baptist, the mother of George, gave in her name. After the candidates had made a covenant with the Lord and prayer, I baptized them in the Big Dry Fork. That night was a night of joy to many souls. After service went to Mr. Crow—where I requested the door to be closed. I engaged in prayer, then asked Brother Green to anoint Mrs. Crow.

Prayed for her and rebuked the disease in the Lord's name promising her that according to her faith, it should be done to her. She had been a cripple walking on crutches for five years. At the night meeting she came without them. Sunday at eleven we met in the grove where Brother Green had fixed seats and made things very comfortable, I preached from 1 John 4:7. At 4 p. m. again addressed them on "The Second Coming of Christ"—great liberty. At close of meeting Mr. Parley P. Morris came forward asking for baptism. After closing service we repaired to the water where I baptized him. Monday to school District No. 4, Elm River Branch where I preached from Romans 5:20 to a large audience. Tuesday arose quite unwell as the night before I had perspired so freely my clothes were wet and I thereby took cold. Did not feel able to speak, so asked Brother Green to do so. He began but was called to a sick bed. I asked that his Spirit take possession of me and I was made well and preached with much liberty. In evening preached from 1 John 2:2, and preached with great liberty. While singing closing song, Mrs. Catherine Martin came and asked for baptism. Friday, August 9, wrote and studied, and in the afternoon went to Johnsonville; after our arrival, Brother P. P. Morris came for Doctor Green, who could not go, but who put up medicine for him. While doing so Brother P. Morris and I went to the woods, where I prayed earnestly that his wife might be healed. I told him to go home and he would find her better.

Saturday, August 10—

To Candles schoolhouse where I spoke on Matthew 17:20. Brother P. P. Morris came over—Sister Morris was much better and had fallen into a sound sleep while we were praying.

Sunday, August 11—

Spent morning in prayer and talking till 11 when we met in grove. Brother P. P. Morris was elected presiding elder of the Branch Creek Branch. In afternoon by request preached from Revelations 22:17, with good liberty. At the close Tabitha Dalton asked baptism. She was a member of the Methodist Church. Went to Brush Creek and immersed her. Monday morning awoke early and was greeted with the glad news that two of her sisters desired baptism. After breakfast we repaired to Brush Creek and led them into the water—after dismissal I rode with Brother George Hilliard and others to his house for dinner. In the evening Brother George drove me over to Brother Green's. En route he told me he had been praying for the blessings I pronounced upon him when confirmed. His whole soul is in the work of the Lord and I thank my heavenly Father that it is so.

Tuesday, August 13—

Rode over to Brother Hilliard's and at five p. m. had a little meeting in which Mrs. Hattie Morris was a candidate for admission into the church. After closing went to the Big Dry Fork and baptized her. At dusk repaired to the Hard Scrabble schoolhouse where I preached with much light and power from John 3:33. The place was crowded and every window full.

Thursday 15—

Went to the border of Harrington Prairie, there on to Mr. Preston Asa's. Retired to the woods to pray, but not much power of the Spirit. Preached from Galatians 2:20, and on my return with Brother Morris and Hilliard learned that my entire discourse was a response to an argument advanced by a Campbellite while I was in the woods.

Friday, August 16—

At 2 p. m., held fellowship meeting the first held in this region. I found it necessary to instruct the brethren in the priesthood and to reorganize the branch. I confirmed Sister Hattie Morris and Sister Sarah Ann Miller. The husband of the latter came with her and sat with a drawn knife in his hand. It was made known to me that he intended to kill me, but I arose and under the influence of the Spirit, I told the audience that I had seen and talked with Jesus and the angels and that the promise to me was that no hand that was raised against me should prosper, and that my life would be preserved until I had finished my mission, it mattered not what power arose against me. I made no reference to anyone directly or indirectly. Proceeded to reorganize the branch.

Saturday—

Learned from Brother Green that Mr. Miller came to the meeting intending to kill me—Poor Man! I pity him. Many have tried it before and may try again, but until the Lord wills, they will try in vain.

Sunday—

Preached, Luke 14-15. A Mrs. Lappin came forward and gave her name—at request of branch president I administered, blessing the bread and wine. Brother George Hilliard administered it—I am thankful to the Lord for this good man. He is as zealous for God as he was formerly for pleasure.

Monday, August 19—

Attended meeting at Brother J. J. Green's at 9:30—used 1 Thessalonians 5:9—after which baptized Mrs. Lydia Lappin. Afternoon I preached on "Duties of Saints" after which assisted by Elder Morris confirmed Preston Asa, Minerva Haus and Lydia Lappin. Blessed four children and dismissed. Returned to the house and blessed eleven more children and administered to one. Then there being many Saints present I felt to kneel before the Lord and ask his blessing upon them. In bidding them good-bye, there was not a dry eye there.

Worship Suggestions for March, 1934

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

(S. H. refers to our latest hymnal. O. S. H. refers to the earlier publication. Z. P. refers to Zion's Praises.)

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "SEEK YE FOR LIGHT"
MARCH 4

Theme: "Seek the Vision of Zion."

Instrumental Prelude: "Glorious things are sung," S. H., 173, O. S. H., 110.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 10: 1, 2.

Response by the Congregation: 1 Nephi 7: 1.

"What meaneth these things which ye have read?"

Leader: Doctrine and Covenants 10: 3.

(S) Hymn: "Redeemer of Israel," S. H., 190, O. S. H. 158.

(S) Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Revelation 21: 1-7 and 23-27.

Hymn: "Beautiful Zion," S. H., 353, O. S. H., 191, verse 1.

Period of Meditation: (To be conducted with a minute or two between each suggestion.)

On conditions in the world which make Zion essential.

On conditions in our own homes that make it necessary.

On the fact that God has said it shall come.

On our part in bringing it to pass.

On our present need for light.

End with silent prayer.

(S) Hymn: 353, S. H., "Beautiful Zion," last three verses, O. S. H., 191.

(S) Benediction.

MARCH 11

Theme: "Pray for the Ministry."

Instrumental Prelude: "With Thankful Hearts," S. H., 79, O. S. H., 114.

Statement of Truth: Ephesians 6: 11-13.

Response by the Congregation: 1 John 1: 7.

"... if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Leader: 2 Corinthians 4: 1.

(S) Hymn: "When earth in bondage long had lain," S. H., 413, O. S. H., 120.

Talk: On the work of the ministry. An introduction to the period of prayer to follow.

The ministry are commissioned by God to serve the church. This does not mean that the people are without responsibility with regard to them. A minister's work for Christ can be made effective only as he has the sympathetic and intelligent support of the people. Thus it is fitting that they should be upheld in faith and in prayer, so that the minds of the people may be open to receive that which God can make possible through their ministry.

Hymn: "Rise Up, O Men of God," S. H., 210, verse 1.

Period of Prayer.

(S) Hymn: "Rise Up, O Men of God," S. H., 210, verses 2-4.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 135: 2 and 117: 12. "The hastening time is here and greater unity than ever before is necessary if the forces of opposition are to be met; and such unity will prevail if those holding the priesthood will remember their commission to preach the gospel, and each officer will strive to discharge his own duty and magnify his calling.

"Behold, if my servants and my handmaidens, of the different organizations for good among my people, shall continue in righteousness, they shall be blessed, even as they bless others of the household of faith."

(S) Benediction.

MARCH 18

Theme: "Pray for Unity."

Instrumental Prelude: "Blest be the tie," S. H., 343, O. S. H., 52.

Call to Worship: Alma 14: 97.

(S) Hymn-Response: "Bless Be Thou O God," S. H., 121, O. S. H., 31.

Reading: The editorial of President Smith, Saints' Herald, January 9, page 35, "General Conference."

Hymn: "Let us pray for one another," 311, S. H., O. S. H., 377, verses 1, 2.

Period of Meditation and Prayer: Growing out of the above reading.

(S) Hymn: S. H., 311, verses 3, 4.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 122: 16, 17.

"Ye are equal in worth of position and place in the work of the church; and if in honor ye shall prefer one another, ye will not strive for precedence or place in duty or privilege, and shall be blessed of me.

"Yea, verily, thus saith the Lord, . . . Continue in steadfastness and faith. Let nothing separate you from each other and the work whereunto ye have been called; and I will be with you by my Spirit and presence of power unto the end. Amen."

MARCH 25

Theme: "Pray for Righteousness."

Instrumental Prelude: "Blest are the souls," S. H., 87, O. S. H., 136.

Call to Service: Genesis 7: 69, 70.

"... my people will I preserve; and righteousness will I send down out of heaven, and truth will I send forth out of the earth to bear testimony of mine Only Begotten; his resurrection from the dead; yea, and also the resurrection of all men.

"And righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather unto mine own elect from the four quarters of the earth, unto a place which I shall prepare; a holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion; a New Jerusalem."

(S) Hymn-Response: "We limit not the truth of God," S. H., 416.

(S) Prayer.

Scripture:

Leader reads: Matthew 5, verses 1, 2.

People recite the Beatitudes, Matthew 5: 3-14.

Talk:

Someone has defined superstition as "religion that is non-moral." In other words, to worship without endeavoring to adjust our dealing with each other in harmony with God, is useless. There can be no fellowship without approach unto God and his righteousness. No community can be accepted as a dwelling place of God unless the personal relationships which exist between the people of that community are right, and just, and good. Zion is a place where righteousness must prevail.

We very often substitute our ideas of what is right, for the righteousness of God. No one can do right in His sight, unless he shall know from God what is right to be done. This righteousness of God, can only be revealed in communion with Him. Praying for righteousness, desiring to do right, "hungering and thirsting," such as Jesus commends, is bound to bring the revelation of God that we need. Do we know what is right? Do we do it? Do we care about knowing and doing? How can we be made aware of what God wants?

Period of Silence. (Concluding the talk for two minutes.)

(S) Hymn: "Unto God Who Knows," S. H., 293.

(S) Benediction.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark

FIRST SUNDAY, MARCH 4, 1934
Sacrament Service

SECOND SUNDAY, MARCH 11

Theme: "The Angel's Message."

Prelude: "When Earth in Bondage Long Had Lain," S. H., 413, O. S. H., 120.

Call to Worship: "Teach me thy way, O Lord, and lead me in a plain path, . . ." (Psalm 27: 11.)

Hymn: "There's an Old, Old Path," S. H., 260, Z. P., 207.

Prayer.

Scripture: Revelation 14: 6, 7.

Hymn: "God Is Marshaling His Army," S. H., 205, O. S. H., 179.

Sermon Talk: Explain to the boys and girls what is meant by "restoration of the gospel," and why it was necessary that the gospel be restored. Tell briefly and in a way that will be understood by the children, about Christ establishing his church when he was on earth; that the people forgot God and his Spirit was taken away; that for hundreds of years the people did not have the gospel in its fullness; that it was to be restored. (Revelation 14: 6.) If the boys and girls in your group are old enough to understand it, use the blackboard and show that the period of time referred to in Daniel 7: 25 would expire in 1830, when the church was organized. In a few minutes we are to hear the story of a boy who believed what he read in the Bible (James 1: 5) and when he wanted to know God's will, he prayed to God, and his prayer was answered.

Story: "A Boy's Prayer Answered." (Page 13, junior quarterly, "The New Testament and Its Writers," by Hallie M. Gould, July, August, September, 1933; last part of Sermonette, Stepping Stones, September 18, 1932; Church History, volume 1, page 8, et seq.; Young People's Church History, chapter 1.)

Hymn: "We Come With Joy the Truth to Teach You," S. H., 393, O. S. H., 164, Z. P., 132. (This may be preceded by a short hymn appreciation. Call attention to the fact that the words were written by David H. Smith, and tell a few interesting facts about his life.)

Story: "God's Church Organized in the Latter Days." (Page 14, junior quarterly, "The New Testament and Its Writers," by Hallie M. Gould, July, August, September, 1933; Church History, volume 1, pages 76, 77; Young People's Church History, chapter 8.)

Dramatization: "The Story of the First Vision." (May be adapted from "Conversations," by Elbert A. Smith, Vision, February, 1930, page 63) or "The Organization of the Church." (May be adapted from "Conversations," by Elbert A. Smith, Vision, April, 1930, page 215.)

Closing Hymn: "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," S. H., 415, O. S. H., 353. (First and last verses.)

Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, MARCH 18

Theme: "Believing the Angel's Message."

Prelude: "'Tis a Glorious Thing to Be in the Light," verses 1 and 2, S. H., 410, O. S. H., 182.

Call to Worship: ". . . Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord." (Isaiah 2: 5.)

Hymn: "'Tis a Glorious Thing to Be in the Light," verses 3 and 4, S. H., 410, O. S. H., 182.

Prayer.

Scripture: Psalm 119: 105, 1 John 1: 7, 2: 10 (First part).

Hymn: "I Have Found the Glorious Gospel," S. H., 408, Z. P., 206.

Sermon Talk: Texts: Psalm 43: 3, Revelation 21: 23, 24. The church was organized April 6, 1830. Many, many people heard the angel's message and believed. Missionaries traveled long distances to tell the gospel story to other people. They were so happy to know about the true gospel that they wanted to tell others about it. Tell of the experiences of some of the early missionaries. Information concerning these men may be obtained from the Church History; also from articles, "Pioneers of the Century," by F. Henry Edwards, which appeared in the Vision during 1929.

Story: "Emma Hale Smith." (See Stepping Stones, July 10, 1932.)

Hymn Appreciation: Give a short sketch of the life of W. W. Phelps (see page 277, Vision, June, 1929) and tell especially about the hymns written by him. The children will enjoy singing a verse or two from a hymn written by him, such as No. 31, 36, 122 or 173, S. H.; 170, 65, 40, 110, O. S. H.

Story: Experiences of members in the early days of the church. (Material for this story or stories may be obtained from the Church History and Young People's Church History; also junior quarterly, "The New Testament and Its Writers," by Hallie M. Gould, July, August, September, 1933, pages 16 and 21.)

Closing Hymn: "Redeemer of Israel," S. H., 190, O. S. H., 158. (Call attention to the fact that the words of this hymn were written by W. W. Phelps; that for many years it has been used as the opening hymn of our General Conference.)

Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, MARCH 25

Theme: "The Book the Angel Gave to Joseph Smith."

Prelude: "Book of Mormon Hid for Ages," S. H., 403, O. S. H., 94.

Call to Worship: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." (Revelation 14: 6.)

Response: "Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." (Revelation 14: 7.)

Hymn: "When Earth in Bondage Long Had Lain," S. H., 413, O. S. H., 120.

Prayer. (This should be a prayer of thankfulness to God for restoring the gospel. Follow the prayer with a period of meditation, while "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet" is played very softly.)

Scripture: Isaiah 29: 14.

Hymn: "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," S. H. 397.

Sermon Talk: Text: Psalm 85: 11. Also Isaiah 29: 11-19. Explain that the Book of Mormon came in fulfillment of these prophecies. Tell what the Book of Mormon really is; what it contains. (See first part of sermonette, Stepping Stones, September 18, 1932.)

Story: "How the Book of Mormon Came to Us." (This story should contain the information about the plates being hidden in the Hill Cumorah, the visits of Joseph Smith to the Hill Cumorah, the angel's words of caution concerning the plates, how Joseph Smith was permitted to take the plates, the translation, etc. The story should help the boys and girls realize how wonderful it is that we have this record. See book of Moroni 10: 2; Church History, volume 1, chapter 2; Young People's Church History, chapters 1 to 9; also pages 30 and 31, junior quarterly, "The New Testament and Its Writers," by Hallie M. Gould, July, August, September, 1933.)

Special music by junior choir or entire group: "Book of Mormon." (Tune No. 211, S. H.)

In this book we find the story
Of the people on this land;
Men and women who were found here
By Columbus and his band.

Let us read the thrilling story
How in boats they crossed the sea.
They were led by God the Father
To this land of liberty.

In this land they grew and prospered.
God sent blessings, did his part.
All went well when they remembered
To serve God with all their heart.

But at last they were so wicked,
They did not the Master's will,
And the plates of gold were hidden
By Moroni in a hill.

Centuries passed. An angel gave them
Unto him, who at command
Did translate the precious record,
Published it throughout the land.

First Chorus:

Book of Mormon, Book of Mormon,
Sent to us by God above.
May we read it and be grateful
Always for our Father's love.

Second Chorus (to be sung after the last verse):

Book of Mormon, we are thankful
That we have this record true.
Let us tell our friends and neighbors,
So they'll know its message, too.

Story from the Book of Mormon: "The Sign of the Birth of Christ," or "The Miracle of the Three Days," Book of Mormon, pages 586, 591, 601, 602. "Gideon," Book of Mormon, pages 262-264. "How Gideon Helped Deliver the People From Bondage," Book of Mormon, pages 267-273. "When Christ Visited the Nephites," Book of Mormon, page 631, et seq.

Closing Hymn: "Book of Mormon Hid for Ages," S. H., 403, O. S. H., 94.

Benediction.

THE ROYAL ROAD

der. "You would—any man who acts the way you do with the presentable portion of the female population—"

"Come on, no hopping on my good friend Dave," interposed Dart.

"I didn't know Rowe McCarley was to be included in this party," Larry's voice shook as she spoke in an undertone to Dart.

"Neither did I. He's rather flat company I think. Imagine he's just a filler in, asked at the last minute, you know."

And Rowe was bringing a dancer as his girl friend. In her mind's eye Larry saw a lithe figure in red, a dark head and a provocative face. Would she be there?"

"You don't smoke?" Diane raised her eyebrows at Larry. She had just offered her a cigaret from her silver-monogrammed case.

"No, I—"

"Her doctor has forbidden it. Something about the little heart, isn't it, Larry?" cut in Dart. He was trying to shield her, trying to keep her from appearing unsophisticated before his friends. Ah, well, now that they were started, they might as well think there was something wrong with her heart as with her mind for coming along with them. She wished heartily that she had not come. To these people there was no virtue or no mark of cleanliness in refraining from smoking. And as she looked at them in the midst of their smoke and light conversation, the thought of John Hampton's Royal Road slipped into her mind. This road in which she now found herself was not the Royal Road—certainly not. It was just a big speedway.

"But there's nothing wrong with your heart when it comes to dancing, is there, old kid?" Dart was being fondly paternal now. "She's a whiz at dancing, no kiddin'," he bragged.

"Then we're in luck," declared Pinky. "All the girls good dancers. This girl Rowe's bringin' out—they say she's a corker—a professional. Can't think of her name. But Rowe's been goin' around with her a lot. Wouldn't be surprised if he'd—"

"Oh, yes you would, Pinky Layman; you would be surprised if Rowe McCarley settled down with anyone." Lillian knew her host and friend so well that she could foresee what he was going to say and correct him before he said it. "He's just not the brand—he's as bad as I am. Can't seem to concentrate on one person. And why bother anyway?" she challenged.

LARRY'S PULSE was throbbing in her temple. She wanted to say something, but there was nothing to say. Didn't they know that Rowe was engaged to Nancy? No, of course, they didn't. This was the other side of Rowe's life she was learning now—the side she had always wondered about.

"Can't imagine Rowe hooked up, eh?" teased Dave. "Well, he might surprise you one of these days. People do sometimes go old-fashioned and get married."

"Not the Rowe McCarleys in the world," flatly. "Rowe's just fickle—he's developed the habit of going from one love to another. He doesn't give marriage a serious thought—he doesn't need to. He'll never settle down."

Lillian's words were searing Larry's consciousness, and all the time she was thinking of Nancy who was engaged to Rowe, a bright-eyed Nancy who had given her heart entirely away. Suddenly, as she thought of these two, Larry clenched her hands in her lap, and resolved to make this party the occasion from which she might learn more of Rowe McCarley.

It was considerably after eleven o'clock when the car turned into a long lane which led downhill towards a large white spot. That, Dart informed her, was the lake. And then they stopped before a building which would have been nothing but a blot on the landscape if all the windows had not blazed with light. From somewhere radio music drifted, sweetly sensuous.

"Home again," gaily called Dave, and opened the car doors with a flourish.

At almost the same instant the door of the house was flung open, and a shrill girlish voice caroled: "Here they are—here they are!" A young woman dressed in a light traveling suit dashed out with exuberant greeting.

"Hi, there, Mabel," and even though he gave one the impression of being slight, Pinky Layman swung the girl off the ground and gave her a resounding kiss.

Larry caught her breath sharply at the familiarity of the greeting, and was happy to have Dart hover near her as they moved up the walk. The maudlin actions of this young woman, and the incoming guests' matter-of-fact reception of them, made her recall Dart's words: "You won't be strange long—they're the kind that won't let you."

"Hello, Dart, ol' stick in the mud! How are ya?" the half-drunken girl demanded, and then wavering and still holding to Dart's shoulder, she turned to Larry—"and this is the new girl friend? How are ya, m'dear?"

"This is Mabel Forman, Larry," Dart was brief.

"Help, Help, Dart!" Larry managed to whisper as they dropped behind the others in entering the house. "I'm afraid I just don't talk their language."

"They're good kids, just unconcerned about conventionalities," he spoke shortly.

"I don't mean that they're not good, but I can't stand this promiscuous hugging, kissing, and pawing—"

Then they were in the hall which opened into a spacious living room where a deep-throated fireplace sparkled with a log fire. The carload of people that had preceded them lounged or stood about, and the presence of bottles and glasses indicated that all had been refreshing themselves with liquor after their ride.

Larry's eyes sought two figures, and there they were. The young man came toward her.

"Why, Larry, this is a gorgeous surprise. I didn't expect to see you!" His tone was flattering. "This is going to be a gay party with you here." Behind him was his partner of the night at the Playland. He turned. "This, Larry, is Miss Shelby otherwise known as the Whoopie Lady. Miss Larry Verne."

Larry was looking into a pair of the most curious eyes she had ever seen; golden eyes they were and fringed with dark lashes. Truly Dagmar Shelby was beautiful, but those eyes gave one the impression of facing a magnificent lioness instead of a young woman.

MARK HILL FORSCUTT

Tuesday, August 20—

Miss Elizabeth Candle gave her name in for baptism.

Wednesday, August 21—

Baptized Miss Candle, returned to her home and held the most interesting confirmation meeting I have ever attended in the Reorganized Church. Confirmed Tabitha, Isabel and Lucinda Dalton and Elizabeth Candle, after confirming the first two they each knelt and offered a beautiful and affecting prayer, testifying to have received the Holy Ghost. The following named persons who were once members of the old organization, but who have not before been able to make up their minds to join themselves to the Reorganized Church were then and there presented and voted to be received into full fellowship on the strength of their original baptisms. Samuel Candle, Lucretia Candle, Malila J. Hensen, Mary E. Hensen, and Nancy A. Brown. At 4 p. m. convened in schoolhouse, but found it too small and moved out into the grove. I then preached with much reasoning from Jude 3. After meeting bade the Saints and friends an affectionate adieu.

Thursday, August 22—

Journeyed to Saint Louis, in the evening attended meeting and enjoyed a very pleasant time. Spoke by request, the Saints were very glad to see me again. Sister Burgess gave me a new pair of pants and vest. The Lord bless her, for I needed them and had not the money to buy them.

Tuesday, August 27—

Laid down after breakfast, was told by the Spirit to go to Alton—arose and went to Saint Louis then took steamer to Alton. Arrived after dark and found my way with difficulty to Brother Peck's. Found why I was told to come.

The rest of the year was spent in and around Saint Louis attending to his duties.—R. C. F.

THEOLOGY—THE GUIDING POWER

does not want his work called Barthian. His work is not finished. He has set himself a great project and he invites criticism as he goes along. Notwithstanding the fact that they have already worked out some theory which would not logically allow them to conceive of Zion, yet their stress on the importance of the word of God will be a challenge to Christians of every shade, and in its effect upon the minds of the people, build up an anticipation for further revelation, for they say, "In its theology, the church reflects upon its message for the age in which it lives in, and measures it by the standard of the word of God. It ventures to reckon with the belief that God will speak his word in the present, because he has already spoken it." (Ibid., page 7.)

In the meanwhile it remains for some Latter Day Saints to reorient themselves and adjust themselves to a theology based upon the word of God. As I see it, and I only see a little, our unity lies in that direction. When that degree of unity comes, other factors will be forthcoming (some are now in operation) that will prepare many people for the endowment of the Spirit. That such a time will come is promised in the word of God and it has become a treasured anticipation among Latter Day Saints.

The Rosicrucians

Astrology, occultism, fortune telling "psychic" control, the planchette (ouija board), and other inheritances from the pre-scientific era seem to die with remarkable slowness. The newspapers have done something not very good in the reviving of astrology by printing horoscopes. An article by S. A. Burgess in the Herald of January 2 very ably set this matter in its right light. Some good people of many denominations have been involved in one or more of these delusions. Herbert L. Willett, who conducts a department, "The Question Box" for the Christian Century, writes in the issue of January 31, 1934:

"A group of moral and religious reformers appeared in the 17th century in Europe, and employed the language of chemistry or alchemy, as they called it, as likely to aid them in the propagation of their views. They were anti-Catholic in their attitude and held to many forms of occultism which they claimed as the possession of the 'initiated.' They were not held together by any close bond and had no formal organization. But small companies here and there asserted their connection with a mystic order with gifts and powers unknown to others. Among these were foreknowledge of the future, understanding of the riddle of existence, transmigration of souls, the power of physical invisibility, control of disease, and various types of astrological lore.

"A fabulous origin was claimed for the order, which carried it back to the 15th century, and to a certain Christian Rosicrucians, from whom the name of Rosicrucians, or "Red Cross" brothers was supposed to be derived. References are found to such a brotherhood in the literature of the 16th and 17th centuries and in works of fiction dealing with that period. They seem to have had some relation to the Illuminati who flourished in the early years of the modern period and made extravagant claims to superior knowledge and powers. In this they were aided by the emerging discoveries and vocabulary of science, with which few were as yet acquainted. The claims of such groups to esoteric wisdom and mystic powers melt away in the light of modern scientific study.

"It is evident that efforts are being made at the present time to capitalize whatever value there may be in the name and the claims of the medieval Rosicrucians. There are two centers on the Pacific coast which profess descent from the order as it flourished in the 17th century, just as that brotherhood asserted its connection with biblical times. Neither claim is valid. There is no historic connection between these present-day, and apparently rival groups and those of the times of the Enlightenment, just as the assertion of the latter to have an origin in antiquity is wholly fictitious. The pretence that the activities of the fraternity are guided by a band of Invisible Helpers, that the publications of the headquarters can give accurate and satisfying information on such matters as the whereabouts of the dead, purgatory, angels, astronomy in the Bible, life and activity in heaven, astrology, the use of horoscopes, physical healings, and disclosure of mysteries carefully guarded through the ages, the influence of previous incarnations upon the present life, the attainment of a sixth sense, etc., will be judged by intelligent people in accordance with a proper appreciation of reality."

Missionaries are surprised to find some members vainly trying to reconcile the claims of these pseudo-sciences to the teachings of the Scriptures and to the known facts of life. All we can do is to advise such people to study the regular sciences of biology and astronomy as presented by modern authors and they will have a proper background for saving themselves from these delusions.

The Bread of Life

By E. C. Barnes

(Approved by A. W. Teel, M. D., Church Physician)

IN the preamble to section 86, Doctrine and Covenants, are these words: "Adapted to the capacity of the weak, and the weakest of all saints, who are or can be called saints." That includes me.

It was at Silver Lake in 1930 that I was baptized by Harold I. Velt. There, too, at a ten-day reunion, I first learned of the work of Doctor A. W. Teel, as described by Apostle M. A. McConley. His voice took on a tone of brotherly love and his countenance a look of tenderness as he told of the sacrifices this beloved physician had made for the church. The health program of the three inspired books is complete, there is nothing lacking.

But somewhere along the line I must have missed something for I was taken sick. Those blessed promises of the Word of Wisdom did not seem to apply to me, and I wondered why. I stumbled somewhere, I lacked something. I had to work out my own health salvation, and by the grace of God I did. Today I am a well man holding a steady job, enjoying my work and with the assurance in my heart that, "As thy days so shall thy strength be." In 1932 the influenza got me. I had a hard chill, was under a doctor's care for a few days, and then took up my duties again. I was so miserable I found fault with my work and then with the people I worked for. They could have their job, I would quit. I gave formal notice I would be leaving at the end of the week.

To my surprise no one was hired to take my place. I was talked to with gentleness and consideration in such a way that made me feel meek and helpless and I was glad to stay. Then I went to my pastor in Tacoma, Jesse B. Snyder, the branch president, and asked him to administer to me. This he cheerfully did and I went on my way rejoicing and for the next six months enjoyed good health, but noticed I was eating heavily all that time. Then, last October I began to fail again, and this time Apostle James A. Gillen and Jesse B. Snyder both administered to me. Again I was quickened and it seemed I was eating enough for two men. Three square meals a day did not satisfy me.

I tried lunching on raw wheat between meals. In the back of my mind somewhere was the passage of Scripture telling how the disciples ate raw grains on a Sunday as they passed by the grainfields, and that other Word of Wisdom which says, "Nevertheless, wheat for man." I kept up the wheat eating habit for a few days and presently was aware that my health was improving and I was better nourished. Then I bought a grinder, a hand grist mill, and now every evening I grind enough wheat meal for the next day. This has solved my health problem. No longer do I eat patented process breakfast foods. They are all dead, devitalized, sterilized and impoverished foods. The Word of Wisdom says grains are the staff of life. Bread made from commercialized flour is not. The simplicity of Christ calls for "This day our daily bread" and grinding should be done daily, according to Moses. (Exodus 16:4.) "Then said the Lord unto Moses, Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no." (Numbers 11:8.) "And the people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and baked it in pans, and made cakes of it; and the taste of it was as the taste of fresh oil."

God has put something in wheat no scientist has ever yet been able to analyze. That something is life. That is the miracle of wheat. Miracles are beyond the comprehension of finite minds. When God anointed the eyes of a blind man with clay and told him to go to a pool and wash, he went and came seeing. When by revelation he tells me in the Word of Wisdom that wheat is the staff of life and will make me strong and healthy I use wheat made into bread, "Day by day" just as I have been taught to pray. I bear the human side of my covenant with God and he has never yet betrayed my confidence. We are enjoined to "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." No one need take my word for "wisdom bread" for health. A trial will soon convince anyone. If a previous writer had been able to secure "wisdom cereals" for food he would have been well nourished with less food, and his health would probably not have broken. A vigorous worker has to have energy foods, and if they are not obtainable he has to eat more to make up for the deficiency.

With all insistence on intellectual honesty, let us also be emotionally honest. Scores of young "thinkers" are stifling a fine rapture and a high resolve for the sake of being "scientific"—cutting their wealth of emotion into spaghetti-lengths and arguing about them until they have argued them away! Ether-waves are not the whole truth about a sunset, nor dust about man's life.—George A. Buttrick, in Jesus Came Preaching.

The Readers Say---

Newcomers to Herald Family Speak Up

We should like to voice our voices with the other readers of the Herald. Although we are newcomers in the Herald family, we greatly enjoy the paper and hope that every family will be supplied during the special offer. We think the Herald the source of encouragement to anyone feeling lonely or downcast.

Though we have belonged to the church only a year, we are proud to say that we have complied with the temporal law and are striving to keep the spiritual laws as well. We have been wonderfully blessed in our efforts, and want to join hands with all the Saints and say, "Onward to Zion!"

MRS. MARGERY MASTEN AND SON, JESSE
MONROE, MICHIGAN (AZALIA BRANCH).

Let Us Come Into the Light of His Knowledge

Often my heart has swelled with gratitude for manifestations of the Lord's watchcare over some of his people in temporal as well as in spiritual matters. But often we do not appreciate his interest and are slow of understanding.

I have been glad to notice that there seems to be an increased inclination to obey the Word of Wisdom. I had often pondered over the admonition that if any had not faith to be healed, they should be nourished with mild herbs. I knew that formerly herbs were much used in doctoring the sick, but supposed it was almost a lost art. Finally I came to the conclusion that this admonition was given at a time when herbs were used in medicine, but that it did not apply to us now when there are so many good doctors. I find, though, that there are many poor doctors as well as good ones, and many people do not have access to the better physicians. Several cases have come under my observation in which people had failed to receive any help from doctors' medicines and had received a speedy cure from some simple herb preparation. So I have come to the conclusion that the Lord's advice applies to this day, too.

While I do not wish to decry the doctors—they are doing wonders for the human race—still it seems that it would be well for us to inform ourselves of the virtues of the more common herbs and use them for minor ailments at least. One can obtain booklets enabling him to identify many plants and describing just how and what to use them for, and those who cannot find just the plants they want can buy them and prepare them.

May we learn gladly to observe all things He has commanded us and thus emerge from doubt and perplexity into the light of His knowledge.

Appreciates Biography of Mark H. Forscutt

I am pleased to read a biography of Brother Mark H. Forscutt, as he was one of the first missionaries of my earliest recollections way back about 1875, at the home of my grandparents, Brother and Sister James Lister, of Newton, Iowa. I lived with them with my mother after the death of my father in 1873. Mother had a melodeon (which I have yet), and Uncle Mark would play and sing on the instrument, so that is my first remembrance of him. Of course I met him at other times until he passed on.

I am wondering why you have not printed a picture of him with his biography. I thought that sometime a biography might be written and it would be needed. I am like some others, I like to see the pictures of our prominent people. We feel as though we know them better even though they are strangers to us.

MRS. G. E. WILLMAN.

Why I Give Thanks

There are many things, Father, for which I am thankful, for health, for food, shelter and clothing, for my children, my friends, for the right use of mind and body, for the precious things of the heavens above and for the precious things of the earth, for sunshine and rain, for the desire in my soul to love and serve thee, to keep thy commandments to help my fellow man, for the spirit of appreciation, for all thou hast done for me, for the preservation of my life, for many things too numerous to mention.

But above all, the blessing for which I am thankful is the precious gospel of thy Son Jesus Christ; for the divine knowledge given to me by thee that it is true, that it is thy work; for the sweet influence of thy divine power which has come to me, and gives me courage, strength, fortitude, and power to press forward; for the peace that the world cannot give neither can it take away; for that wonderful knowledge that Jesus the Christ is thy Son, that he was with thee when the worlds were made, that he came as a little baby and grew up among men and lived a life of purity, blessed with the same power that thou hast, that he brought the great plan of salvation to the human family, that he took upon him the sins of the world, that he suffered and died and arose from the grave and has gone back to be with thee and stands as the Great Mediator between us and thee.

I am thankful because of his love and sacrifice for thy creation; for thy great love in giving thine only begotten Son to us as an example; for the blessed hope in our hearts that if we obey thy law and keep thy commandments, we, too, can come back into thy presence and live and reign with thee and thy blessed Son.

I am thankful that thou hast restored thy great priesthood; for thy servants who have helped me understand thee better, who have drawn me closer to thee and caused me to love thee better. They love thee and thy work. They have sacrificed much and suffered to help others. They love thy people and all thy creation, and many of their souls burn with the desire to do all they can for thee and thy work. Father, bless them. Bless them physically, and may they be permitted to remain here upon thy footstool to help thy people come closer to thee and to reach those who desire to love and serve thee. They desire to be holy and to eliminate from their lives everything that is offensive in thy sight. Thou knowest what they need—bless them.

Can I say that I am thankful for the trials and the heart-aches of this life? Father give me thy Spirit, for I have not come to that place in my life where stood thy blessed Apostle of old; but help me to understand that these things, too, have been given me for my good. Help me to be able to look back and say, I am thankful, dear Father, for all I have had to go through; the trials and sorrows of life have been for my good. Thou has been with me through them all and brought me safely through. They have helped me to be sympathetic, kind, loving; have brought me closer to Thee, for I have felt my need of thee and have sought thee for courage and strength. Continue to be with me, bless me with thy power, that I may not only be able to save my own soul, but that I may reach others who need thee. Direct me, give me wisdom, and knowledge, and teach me by thy Holy Spirit. Help me to overcome myself, to forget myself and think only of others. Help me to be a good mother, a good Saint, a blessing to my fellow man, one on whom thou canst depend. Help me over every difficulty I must face in life. May I have charity, the great love for all thy creation. Help me never to be selfish and always to be willing to impart of my substance for the good of thy work and my fellow men.

Father, what I ask for myself I ask for others. Bless thy people, thy great church, thy priesthood, the honest in heart, all thy creation who desire to love and serve thee and desire to bring righteousness upon the earth, and may the day soon come when all men shall desire to love and serve thee, for thou art worthy our praise and adoration. Glory, honor and dominion be thine forever and ever. Amen.

Isolated One Desires Prayers

It has been five or six years since I had the pleasure of attending church services, and I have been isolated from the Saints a part of that time. The Herald has been a great comfort to me during those lonesome hours.

I am thankful to those who are giving their time and efforts and prayers to preparing the paper for its readers. I can hardly wait from one issue until the next.

I greatly enjoy reading reports from the different branches. I can see that there is much interest in the church, and sometimes it makes me feel as if I were sitting with folded hands. Nevertheless, it is my desires to do all I can for the redemption of Zion and I trust and pray that I may not let a chance pass to do some small service. I think sometimes that I am looking for too big a thing to do, and let the little tasks slip by undone.

Will the members pray for me, that I may be healed of an affliction in my head? I am praying that the Lord will help me, and I feel that the prayers of the Saints avail much.

MRS. C. F. HILL.

Would Pass on Encouragement

I find much encouragement in the Herald as I read the experiences of others, and I, in turn, would give encouragement.

When our oldest boy was in high school he was suddenly taken ill as he left the building, and fainted. He was revived, and with much difficulty managed to get home. He was suffering greatly and went immediately to bed. My wife called me, and arriving home, I found the boy in a grave condition. A doctor was called. In the meantime the boy asked me to administer to him, but only temporary relief was obtained. Examination by the physician showed that the boy had double pneumonia, and we were advised to get him to a hospital as soon as possible. For two or three days the fight continued, the sufferer being unconscious most of the time. The doctors did all in their power to stimulate respiration and prevent further congestion apparently to no avail. A special nurse was with him day and night. On the third evening when he seemed the worst, he rallied for a moment or two and asked me to administer to him. This was one of the outstanding experiences of his life and unforgettable on my part. Immediately he began to relax and his nurse and doctors expressed surprise that his fever was suddenly broken; his clothing was wet with perspiration and his breathing free. Today he is a living example of God's mercy and the exercise of faith in this ordinance of the gospel.

At another time in this same hospital I was called to administer to a little boy who had been operated on for mastoiditis. Everything seemed to be going against him and he was suffering intensely. Upon my arriving at the hospital, he asked me in a touching way to administer to him so that the Lord could make him well. We all knelt and had a word of prayer. During the administration I was given to understand that this boy's faith had saved him and that he would live to praise God for the blessing.

Being so far removed from any of the branches of the church we feel cut off at times, but when we begin to feel a little blue, we call to mind some of these experiences and trust in our Lord.

Request Prayers

Reynold Billings, now in the sanatorium at Fairfield, Maine, desires the Saints to continue to pray for his recovery so that he may be restored to health and able to follow in the footsteps of his grandfather, Elder H. H. Billings, and his father who is a priest. He expresses thanks to those who have prayed for him and reports himself to be gaining rapidly. He is frequently lonely because the sanatorium is a distance from his home and winter weather prevents his people from visiting him often; there are no Saints near.

Mrs. Jessie Walker, of Downs, Kansas, desires prayers for herself and her daughter who lives at 517 South Erie, Wichita, Kansas, that God will bless them physically and bring about things for the best for all concerned. Her daughter is not a member of the church, but was administered to while in the hospital last year and received a blessing.

Once more Brother George Elson, of Norfolk, Nebraska, desires the prayers of the Saints.

Mrs. R. Meloan, of Bakersfield, California, desires the Saints to fast and pray for her husband, her son, and son-in-law, that God will bless them spiritually and physically according to their needs.

Sister Jeannette Jones, Belleville, Illinois, wishes the church to pray for her that she may breath without distress. Her nervous condition has been relieved at times by administration.

Leonard L. Rogers, of Escatawpa Branch, Mississippi, requests prayers for himself and his family, that they may be faithful, devoted members, obeying the law and surviving the difficulties they now face.

Mrs. L. H. Hayes, Port Burwell, Ontario, Canada, asks that the Saints will pray for her. She wishes to be strong in the faith of the Lord even though she is an isolated member. The Herald is a great source of encouragement to her.

Sister Irene Smith, of Second Church, Kansas City Stake, wishes to thank the Saints for their prayers in her behalf, and to ask them to pray the Lord that she may gain strength rapidly.

Second Church congregation, Kansas City, asks prayers for Sister Ed. Brockman who is blind and ill and for the little son of Brother and Sister Mont Flynn who was left mentally afflicted as the result of a serious illness three years ago.

QUESTION TIME

Is the promise of a temple in "this generation" still in force?

The revelation containing this promise or statement was given to the church in September, 1832, in connection with information concerning the building of Zion or the New Jerusalem, to be built, "beginning at the Temple Lot," which was pointed out in the "western boundaries of the State of Missouri." It states:

"Which temple shall be reared in this generation; for verily, this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2.

So far as I am able to judge, it is the general expectation of the church that in due time the temple will be built in fulfillment of this word, but different views exist as to the meaning of the term "this generation." Some have held that it meant a hundred years, in which case the word could not of course be performed at this late date. But the language "not all pass away" might clearly mean not all of the persons who were living at that time, in which case the time might be considerably extended, as persons have been known to live more than a hundred years. Several who died within the past year were said to have been over twenty years beyond that age.

Others have taken the view that the statement is not now in force, as the church was driven from Missouri by mob violence, and a revelation given in January, 1841, declared that:

"When I give a commandment to any of the sons of men to do a work unto my name, and these sons of men go with all their might, and with all they have, to perform that work, and cease not their diligence, and their enemies come upon them and hinder them performing that work; behold, it behooveth me to require that work no more at the hands of these sons of men, but to accept of their offerings; . . . Therefore, for this cause have I accepted the offerings of those whom I commanded to build up a city and a house unto my name, in Jackson County, Missouri, and were hindered by their enemies, saith the Lord your God."—Ibid. 107: 15.

Some who hold this view believe that no temple should be built in Jackson County until another revelation is given to the church commanding again that such work be done. If this is the correct view, the time element of the former revelation would apparently not apply under the changed conditions forced upon the church by its enemies. On two occasions the church has adopted a resolution which might be intended to include this question, in which it has declared:

"The commandments of a local character, given to the first organization of the church, are binding on the Reorganization only so far as they are either reiterated or referred to as binding by commandment to this church."—Resolution 282 and 308.

What is meant by Mark 9: 43?

It is presumed the King James Version is cited, as the inspired text contains other verses. The former says:

"If thy hand offend thee, cut it off; it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched."—Mark 9: 43.

The Inspired Version, however, throws the following additional light upon the meaning of the language used:

"If thy hand offend thee, cut it off; or if thy brother offend thee and confess not and forsake not, he shall be cut off."—Mark 9:40.

This evidently refers to a member who sins and will not repent when the church labors with him to that end, and applies even to an officer of the church as a principle, for verse 42 commands:

"And again, if thy foot offend thee, cut it off; for he that is thy standard, by whom thou walkest, if he become a transgressor, he shall be cut off."

The inference is that if transgressors are allowed to continue in the church, it would lead the whole church "into hell," so powerful is an evil example when left to exert its influence unchecked by the church.

Should oblations always be taken at sacrament meetings?

This is commanded in Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2 in the words: "on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations"; and in Conference Resolution 773:

"Every branch should comply with the law by receiving oblations at sacrament service, as found in section 59, paragraph 2, and the amount so received should be placed with the Bishopric in harmony with section 42, paragraph 8."

Tulsa, Oklahoma

Variety of Projects Keeps This Congregation Busy

Since the election of new officers, October 1, all departments of the Tulsa branch have been actively engaged in various projects in addition to the regular services.

Following the October conference in Oklahoma City, President F. M. McDowell stopped in Tulsa and was present at the opening of a two weeks' series of meetings held by Elder Howard Harpham. On the second night of the meetings, October 30, President McDowell spoke to a splendid gathering of the Saints. This meeting was followed by a reception given in honor of Brother Harpham, sponsored by the young people of Tulsa.

Brother Harpham brought inspiration in the presentation of his sermons on "Zion's Ideals" and "The Principles of the Gospel." These services were attended by the Saints of surrounding branches. Two were baptized as the result of the meetings.

The Christmas services were a sermon by Apostle J. F. Curtis at the eleven o'clock hour, Sunday December 24. Special music was furnished by the choir. In the evening a Christmas vesper service, portraying the Nativity was presented. Soloists were Mrs. Alma Adams and Miss Annabell McComb.

On New Year's day our Pastor J. E. Lancaster and Mrs. Lancaster held open house to the congregation and their friends.

The women's department, under the leadership of Mrs. Hazel Cunningham, has outlined a program consisting of a class, twice monthly, on the Book of Mormon, taught by Pastor Lancaster, a money-making project, and a social hour each month.

In November the women visited each home in the branch to ask for their "extra dollar for Thanksgiving." In December, under the direction of Mrs. Mary Couser, the quilting group netted over $30 on a friendship quilt, which was presented to the pastor and his wife for Christmas. On January 19, the women entertained with a jitney supper and program.

Tulsa feels proud of her large group of young women and girls. On January 9, twenty-five young women of the Ojauna Club had a pep supper at the church. They elected new officers and outlined a program for the coming year.

The younger group of girls have organized a club with Miss Claudia Cunningham as their leader. The girls of Oriole age have also organized into a peppy group.

The following visitors have participated in local services during the past few months, President F. M. McDowell, Bishop L. F. P. Curry, Apostle Roy S. Budd, Apostle J. F. Curtis, wife and daughter Flora, Elder Lee Quick, Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Cochran and children, Mr. and Mrs. Martin Hynden and children and Mr. and Mrs. George Peterson.

This branch has been greatly blessed recently through administrations and in the members obtaining employment.

Tulsa is glad to welcome two new families, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Shank and baby daughter, of Alliance, Ohio, and Miss Mary Hague and Ralph Hague, of Wichita, Kansas.

Hopeful Outlook for Central Michigan

Strong Missionary Spirit Here

Central Michigan is looking forward to its February conference at Beaverton, when they expect to see President F. M. McDowell. There will be a district meeting at Beaverton February 11, to organize the young people for the Master's service, Apostle D. T. Williams in charge. Brother Williams has stirred the Saints to work in his new organization; his appeal is a convincing one.

The district is preparing also for the best reunion this summer that it has ever enjoyed.

Elder Hubert Case, district president and missionary, recently held meetings at Beaverton and Saginaw which convinced him that a strong missionary spirit prevails and will grow to the saving of many souls. Brother McDowell's appeal to the priesthood will move them this year to greater service and to become the leaders God has called them to be. It is hoped also that the music, under the splendid leadership of Harry Runkle, will enter a new epoch in this district, and that the work of religious education will grow under the hands of Brother Billie Asch.

"This is an appeal to all workers," says Brother Case. "Let everyone use his talents for the good of the Lord's work."

Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch

Ohio Congregation Hears Helpful Sermons

Elder F. May, of Pleasant Valley, was the speaker January 12, and his subject was "The Seven Candlesticks and the Light of the World."

James Cheffin, a teacher, spoke on the theme "Have Faith in God" January 14, following the church school, and his message meant much to the listeners. That evening Elder O. A. Rexroad read Daniel 2: 35-45 and delivered a helpful message.

Teacher Harvey Culp was the morning speaker January 21, and that evening Elder E. E. Williams took for his text: "Not every one that calleth me Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of God."

Church school is held at nine thirty on Sunday and preaching at ten forty-five except on the first Sunday of the month when sacrament is had. A prayer and praise service is enjoyed each Wednesday evening at seven, then on Friday the Saints meet for Bible study. There is preaching at seven o'clock on Sunday evening. The women meet every other Friday afternoon.

Oshoto, Wyoming

Continue Regular Services—Make Effort to Reach Isolated Ones

This branch has been running very smoothly under the supervision of the new officers. In spite of winter weather they have been able to continue Sunday school and church regularly.

The women of the Laurel Club gave a Thanksgiving dinner at the home of Brother and Sister Sherman Hartshorn, sr., after which they conducted a sale netting them almost twenty dollars.

Brother H. L. Hartshorn has been trying to reach isolated Saints of this branch as much as possible through conducting church services and making personal calls at their homes. All who could find transportation went over to the home of Brother Guy Davidson where they met with the families of Brother Davidson and Brother Reddings in a spiritually uplifting prayer meeting.

The Sunday school sponsored a Christmas program on Christmas eve and at this time treats were given to all present.

Manchester, England

The Gospel Hall, James Street

Saints of this branch are putting forth their best efforts to establish their goals for the year ahead.

The year's activities were opened with a party and concert, an annual event which is looked forward to by all. About one hundred and fifty adults and children were present. Immediately following refreshments, the concert, presented by the young people, was much enjoyed. Other numbers were rendered by members of the church school, and a play, presented by the senior girls. The moral of their play was, always use your time wisely and well, if you wish to feel satisfied and happy. The committee for the concert was active and original, and the interludes of the program were filled with guessing contests, the winners being awarded prizes. The winners in the children's group in this effort were Master Brian Barrington, three years old, and Jean Wade. The party was concluded with an hour of general games.

Manchester Saints request prayers in behalf of their pastor, Elder G. W. Leggott. Brother Leggott is feeling well in body, but the doctor wishes him to prepare for another operation for his sight.

Moundsville, West Virginia

Visited by Patriarchs G. T. Griffiths and John Martin

Saints of Moundsville are determined to make this year very successful for the group here. Branch President W. A. Schoenian has been pastor since the organization of the branch in November, 1919, with the exception of about three years. He is a man who is faithful to duty. Sister Schoenian has given invaluable help as musical director.

The church school is progressing under the care of its director, Earl Dobbs, an able man who sets a fine example for the young. He has a good class of young people.

Two young members, Brother and Sister Ralph Ray, have moved to Ohio, and are greatly missed because they were active and alert to their church obligations.

The department of women is directed by Sister Callie Castilow who for many years had proved herself an able leader.

On the first Sunday of the year an installation service for new officers of the church school was made most impressive under the leadership of the church school director.

Patriarch John F. Martin and wife were here for the midweek prayer meeting January 10, and remained until January 22.

On Thursday evening the department of women met at the home of the pastor to hold a short business meeting and then enjoy a social time including the entire membership of the branch, in honor of Brother and Sister Martin.

Sunday, January 14, was a memorable day. The Spirit of God was felt in all services during the day, especially during the social hour.

Two days later Patriarch G. T. Griffiths came and held services each evening concluding Sunday, January 21. An all-day service was held on that day, visitors coming from Wheeling and Fairview Branches. Brother Griffiths preached one of his old-time inspirational sermons in the morning and dinner was served at the church. The priesthood met at one o'clock in charge of Brother Griffiths, and at two o'clock a social service was in charge of Patriarchs G. T. Griffiths and John F. Martin and L. A. Serig of the district presidency.

Mikado, Michigan

Apostle D. T. Williams There Recently

Apostle D. T. Williams was at Mikado recently, giving a most interesting talk on developing the young people's Christian Legion which local members hope will be very successful.

The Saints sorrow to hear of the death of Sister Helen Randolph, a sufferer from tuberculosis for two years. She had been confined to her bed for sixteen weeks. Sister Farrar, of Hubbard Lake, also passed away.

Two young people of this branch have filed their inventories.

The 1933 officers of the branch will serve again during the year to come. Members hope to go forward in the work of latter days.

Eagle City, Oklahoma

Gain Twelve Members

Eagle City branch business meeting was held January 14, snow and bad roads preventing a gathering on the regular date. A large delegation from Canton group was in attendance.

A few changes were made in officers. L. E. Dyke was retained as branch president; D. C. Clevenger, priest; J. R. Dyke, teacher; Raymond Dyke, deacon. Church school director, Roy L. Diamond; assistant, W. L. Ward. D. C. Clevenger and Roy L. Diamond were appointed counselors and approved by the branch.

Other officers are: Treasurer, Mrs. Mable Diamond; branch clerk, Mrs. Alice Diamond; church school secretary, Iva Pierce; pianist, Fern Parsons; cradle roll superintendent, Myrtle Ward; superintendent of women, Celia Dyke; superintendent of primary department and publicity agent, Mrs. A. Diamond; librarian, Muriel Diamond. The Canton reports were read by Mrs. Dora Anderson and Mrs. Bessie Slayton.

Eagle City Branch's report showed a gain of twelve members for the year and no losses. The total membership is eighty-nine.

Valley Center, Michigan

Young People Take Active and Outstanding Part

Valley Center Branch, presided over by Pastor H. E. C. Muir, settled down to fall activities following the rally day program in October. The Saints are very much enthused over gospel work, and hope to make their complete contribution to Zion's redemption.

They have a band of about twenty-five young people who are giving valuable assistance in religious endeavors. These young workers sense their responsibilities in connection with the task of the church and having consecrated themselves, are pressing forward with their eyes on the goal, a redeemed Zion. Under their leader, Sister Harold Muir, this class of young people has completed the study of the Book of Mormon and is now making a thorough study of the Bible. They wish to qualify for greater responsibilities to come.

On February 18, the district will meet with this branch, and a young people's district organization is to be effected.

Apostle D. T. Williams was here January 29, in the interests of the young people, and held an interesting meeting.

The Sunday school is functioning very effectively. The work of Floyd Silverthorn, a young brother who was superintendent during 1933, was outstanding. He relinquished his office January 1, to the newly-elected superintendent, another young brother, Willard Green, who is carrying his responsibility with dignity, and is earning the support of all. Last year and this year the church school is entirely in the hands of young members, and attendance is above normal.

The women's department is properly active in its capacity and is doing a good work.

Considerable effort is being devoted to improving the appearance of the church grounds.

Coffeyville, Kansas

This congregation was happy to have District President Amos T. Higdon present Sunday, January 28. Elder Andy Jones, of Columbus, spoke at the morning service. At two-thirty in the afternoon a priesthood meeting was held with Guy G. Cadwell, of Independence, Kansas, in charge. Brothers Jones and Higdon were speakers.

The following Kansas towns were represented, Parsons, Independence, Coffeyville, Chanute and Columbus. Towns in Oklahoma represented were Miami, Nowata and Wimer.

Elder Higdon spoke at the evening service and his theme was "Prove All Things and Hold Fast That Which Is True."

On Monday and Tuesday evenings Brother Higdon held class work.

Kansas City Stake

The regular monthly stake priesthood meeting was held January 21, at 2:30 p. m., at Central Church, President C. E. Wight in charge continuing the theme of last meeting, "What Latter Day Saints Believe About God." "God the Father" was the topic of the lesson. The various quorums met afterward.

The first of a series of ten class lectures by Elder R. L. Bishop and Bishop J. A. Koehler was held Sunday afternoon, January 28, at Central Church at two-thirty and three-thirty respectively. Brother Bishop's subject is "Latter Day Saints in Business," and Bishop Koehler's subject is "Constitution of Zion," and is designed particularly for the priesthood. Brother Bishop's course is for any who desire to attend. The sessions will be held each second and fourth Sunday of the month except during General Conference. The opening effort of these brothers was attended by the best interest on the part of a representative crowd. The next sessions will be had February 11. Elder Bishop is assistant manager of the Kansas City Ford Motor Plant, and Brother Koehler is bishop of Holden Stake.

A good crowd from the fourteen churches in the stake enjoyed an impressive service in the seventh initiation candlelighting service of the O. B. K.'s held recently at Central Church. President Elbert A. Smith's discourse on light, spiritual and physical, delighted the audience. Music and other selections were in keeping with the spirit of the program, and new members of the O. B. K. organization took their pledge of consecration and service.

Second Church

The Sunday morning service, January 21, was dedicated to the memory of the late pastor, Elder Francis A. Evans, who passed away January 23, 1933. His favorite songs, "Walking in the Light," "There'll Be Rest By and By," and "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," were sung by the congregation, and Brother O. Seibert played a beautiful violin solo. Elder W. B. Richards gave an inspiring talk in which he spoke highly of the life Brother Evans devoted to the service of the Master.

The Saints well remember the admonition of Brother Evans: "Keep the services here for the benefit of the few Saints living in this community."

At the request of Brother John Seibert, Bishop C. A. Skinner taught his class Sunday morning, the study being "The Financial Law." This study was continued the following Sunday by Bishop Skinner.

The O. B. K.'s have charge of the church school the last Sunday of each month.

Recent speakers have been Bishop C. A. Skinner, Elders E. W. Lloyd, Thomas Newton, and W. B. Richards.

North East Church

The women have reorganized their department and are quilting and doing other kinds of work to add to their treasury. Sister Mary Zuber is in charge this year. They have a devotional service every other Thursday.

Sister Edna Burge, chorister, has secured a teacher, Mr. Dalton, who will give lessons in voice culture and reading music. This, no doubt, will add to the joy of local services in a short time.

Elder Harry Sevy gave a splendid talk the evening of January 21, which will probably be his last here for a time. He and Sister Sevy have moved back to Iowa, and they will be missed here.

Elder Henry F. Davis was the morning speaker on that day, and the congregation always is glad to listen to their beloved pastor.

Quindaro Church

A retrospect of the past year reveals some marked changes in this congregation. The midweek prayer services are growing in attendance and increasing in spirituality.

The young people have organized a dramatic club under the direction of Sister Alice Baker. A Christmas play was given December 22, and another production was presented January 26, the proceeds going to the church.

A class with an enrollment of thirty is held each Monday night. They study the Book of Mormon, Sister Edith Higgins acting as teacher.

Berwyn Lungwitz and Eddie Baker were ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood, January 14, Elders C. E. Wight and H. A. Higgins officiating. Brother Eddie Baker is now acting as pastor of Armourdale Church.

The young people have organized a fellowship or prayer service to be held each Sunday at six o'clock in the evening.

Dorothy Carmichael and Lloyd Bland were united in marriage November 11, Elder H. A. Higgins officiating.

Melba Louise, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Cleo Miller, was blessed December 10.

Clinton, Missouri

Visiting Members Welcome Here

The Saints meet here in the home of Brother and Sister Roy Payne, 515 North Second Street, to hold Sunday school at ten o'clock Sunday morning and sacrament the first Sunday of the month if an elder comes. No one came for the opening sacrament of the year. Brother Inslay or Brother James Duffy, of Post Oak Missouri, have visited at Clinton whenever possible, but local members are looking forward to the time when an elder will make his home among them.

Visiting members of the church will find a hearty welcome at the Payne home.

Elders J. Charles May and G. E. Harrington visited Clinton a short time ago, furnishing songs and music, and Brother May exhibited scenes of the South Sea Islands where he was once missionary, showing how the people there live. Brother Harrington quoted poems, sang beautiful songs and preached helpful sermons. Indeed these two servants of God did much to strengthen the members in the faith.

Brooklyn, New York

Move Toward Their Goal

Under the direction of Le Roy Squire and Lee A. Hartshorn, assistant director, Brooklyn church school is progressing rapidly. Classes are organized and the study is well under way, carrying out the plans made last spring, that by October, 1934, each teacher and officer of the school will have a teacher's certificate.

A Christmas presentation, "Why the Chimes Rang," was presented at the church, Christmas Eve. Ethel Squire and her staff of teachers are to be commended for their work.

The La Da Sa Class of the church school presented to the branch as a Christmas gift the Christian and American flag outfits. A part of the Sunday morning services, December 31, was given over to the class for the presentation.

January 7, Howard Mousley, branch solicitor for tithes and offerings, gave a report to the branch that during the "Keep the Law" period, a pleasing number was added to the already listed tithe payers.

The activities of the women's department are many. Plans are under way to accomplish some major achievements.

November 11, 1933, a daughter, Ruth Erma, was born to George Otto and Lena Elser.

A recent visit by District President, Henry L. Livingston, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was much appreciated.

Mrs. Geraldine Martin was baptized into the church January 21. Mrs. Martin is a young woman and has qualities which are very promising for leadership.

Winnipeg, Manitoba

Men Busy in Mission Field

The Saints of Winnipeg are looking forward to a successful year, and gospel work is steadily advancing.

Alvin Fisher, just called to be an elder last summer, has gone out into the mission field and is holding services at Kenville, Manitoba. Elder Evans, his brother, was appointed over Alberta District, and has taken up his work. Elder William Hadath is laboring with the Saints at Spy Hill, Saskatchewan. He works here in Winnipeg, but uses his railroad pass to visit Spy Hill each month, and is pleased with the results.

Sister Ruth Hadath was elected president of the women's department, and the women are endeavoring to do a successful piece of work in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

Far West Stake

O. T. Z. Rally

The rally held in Far West Stake January 27 and 28, proved to be a fulfillment of the dreams of the leaders, and showed the results of the work with the young people over the last few years. Since June, 1932, when the stake organization was completed, eight gatherings have been held including two ten-day reunions. Each rally seems to gain over the previous ones and constant growth is apparent. The interest and response shown in this rally was splendid. A general theme of "Church History Interpreted in the Light of the Problems of Today," proved both interesting and inspirational.

Not only in attendance was the rally a success but it maintained a high quality of spirituality throughout with perhaps the largest and most representative attendance ever had. Young people were present from thirteen groups in the stake in addition to visitors from Des Moines, Lamoni, Kansas City, and Independence.

A banquet Saturday evening in the Y. W. C. A. Rose Room was the opening feature and drew about two hundred and fifty from all parts of the stake. The women of the four Saint Joseph churches prepared and served a wonderful dinner under the direction of Mrs. Letha Timm, stake director of women. The young people are grateful for this splendid cooperation which helped make the rally a success.

An enjoyable program was given throughout the evening with Leonard G. Ehlers, director, as master of ceremonies. The president, Kenneth Piepergerdes, gave a welcome, and musical numbers and readings were furnished by various branches. In the absence of Apostle F. Henry Edwards, who was to have been the guest speaker, Elder Ward A. Hougas made the principal address on the subject, "Our Yesterdays and Our Tomorrows."

All visitors who desired to remain overnight were given lodging by Saint Joseph Saints. Others returned to their homes and came back for the Sunday services.

The young people were happy to have Elder Roy Cheville, of Lamoni, Iowa, as their speaker Sunday. Brother Cheville lectured at the church school hour on "People Who Have Contributed." A thirty-minute interlude was given by Maple Grove and Stewartsville Branches and then Brother Cheville spoke on "The Hand of God in History."

After the large crowd had partaken of the dinner served by the women of First Church, the supervisors and presidents of the local organizations assembled in council meeting at which time the next rally date was set for May at Stewartsville. Young people's services were also arranged on the stake conference program.

The Cameron O. T. Z.'s furnished the musical prelude for the afternoon service after which Brother Cheville gave his final lecture, "Church History Being Worked Out in Us."

The closing service of the rally was a candlelight allegiance meeting which was not only impressive and beautiful but of a high spiritual quality. Elder Ward A. Hougas was in charge of the service, assisted by two young men of the priesthood. Many young people responded with their pledges of allegiance and not a second was allowed to go unoccupied. The voice of inspiration came to the young people commending, encouraging, and warning. An adult prayer service was conducted by Elder Frank L. Hinderks in the basement at the same hour.

Beloit, Wisconsin

236 Saint Laurence Avenue

New zeal and enthusiasm have been much in evidence in the Beloit Branch.

During the month of November, speakers for this congregation were E. W. Dutton, Wilber Johnson, and Harry A. Wasson. The theme of Brother Wasson's sermon was "Keep the Law."

Cleo Heide, of Janesville, Wisconsin, was in charge of the sacrament service, December 3. The following Sunday, Elder John Maas, of Watertown, Wisconsin, spoke during the morning and afternoon services, delivering excellent sermons.

Elder Harry A. Wasson, who resides at Janesville, president of Beloit Branch, has been devoting his time to the branch local's interests. The help he is giving is much appreciated by the Saints.

A large congregation witnessed the Christmas program, presented at the church, December 23. Zelma Martin was in charge and many nonmembers took part.

The women's department has been holding meetings at the home of Sister F. A. Dobbins, president. Alma May Brookover is acting as secretary.

Sunday, January 21, Evelyn June, baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Emery Johnson, was blessed under the hands of Harry Wasson. This date also marked the first appearance of the newly-organized junior choir. Brother Lamont Turner is director of the choir.

Fred A. Dobbins is in the hospital at present, due to injuries received while at work in a local factory.

Brother James Ferris, who has joined his family at Burlington, Iowa, is greatly missed by members here.

Saints from Clinton, Iowa, and Escanaba, Michigan, worshiped with Beloit congregation December 31. Brother and Sister Jasper O. Dutton, of Galva, Illinois, attended the Christmas program

Shidler, Oklahoma

Church work here is progressing. The Saints are striving to keep the law. Several members have filed their inventories.

Apostle Roy S. Budd, a recent guest at Shidler, brought a message of cheer. Visits from Howard Harpham and J. E. Lancaster were also appreciated.

Lansing, Michigan

Young People Give Full Support to "Christian Legion"

Lansing young people are much interested in the Christian Legion organization outlined by Apostle D. T. Williams at the district young people's convention here in November. Brother Williams paid this branch another visit January 4, giving more complete details of what promises to be a wonderful opportunity for the church to enlist the aid of its young men and women. The latter are ready and willing to work, but have needed an organized plan by which to work and a goal toward which to direct their efforts, something especially appealing to the young.

One hundred and sixteen have already signed as charter members of the Christian Legion, this number including some who are not members of the church. Lansing young people are under the supervision of Brother Eugene Page as director and Elder Gordon Brown, leader of the young people's legion.

Much progress has been made in the past few months. The legion sponsored a midnight prayer service New Year's Eve, a good crowd attending and all being abundantly blessed. The gifts of the gospel were given and a promise of growth for the church if the Saints do their part. In behalf of the young people, Brother Page presented the branch a substantial financial offering.

The senior young people's class recently organized a Legion Supporters Club, Clifford Pond acting as president and Donna Manning as secretary-treasurer. Committees were chosen to care for social affairs, and one was especially designated to care for missionary work. One project of the club is to hold frequent prayer services in the homes of Saints who are not able to attend regular meetings.

Sister Louise Evans visited the branch the week-end of January 20 and 21, and spent her time working with the choir. This district hopes to have a six-hundred voice choir, Sister Evans the director.

Elder and Sister Robert Brown, of Merlin, Ontario, have been visiting his brother, Gordon, and family and friends. Brother Brown conducted a week's series of services at the church. He gave a scenic slide lecture on life in the South Sea Islands, January 26, having spent some years there as missionary. On the evening of the twenty-ninth, a social evening was enjoyed at the church, honoring Brother and Sister Brown before their return home.

District President A. C. Barmore gave a series of stereopticon lectures in January which were highly instructive.

Holdenville, Oklahoma

Enjoy Visit of Elder Howard Harpham

Holdenville members received new inspiration and courage from a three-week series of meetings, held by Elder Howard Harpham, beginning January 7, and ending January 28.

The Saints are deeply appreciative of the beautiful spirit that has touched their lives. Enlightenment from this visit of God's servant was shared by the priesthood and laymembers.

Brother Harpham's series of sermons has done untold good for Holdenville. Many people outside of the church are now attending church regularly. The Saints were revived by his inspiring sermons and received incentive to go forward.

Apostle Roy S. Budd was a recent guest, and preached two sermons.

Independence

Twenty-six plays are being prepared by young people's groups here for the one-act play contest sponsored by the Young People's Council of Independence, and the preliminaries will be held the nights of February 16 and 17, after which final entries will be made. Two plays from each congregation will be allowed to enter the final contests held March 5, 6, 8, and 9, at the Dining Hall.

Stone Church

Young people of the Stone Church are rehearsing eight plays from which two will be selected, in the preliminary contest next week, to enter the third annual one-act play contest sponsored by the young people's council.

An impressive sacrament service was held in the upper auditorium of the Stone Church Sunday morning, in charge of Pastor John F. Sheehy. For a Scripture reading Brother Sheehy chose John 12. He was assisted throughout the meeting by Elders H. L. Barto, H. G. Barto, James Gault, C. Ed. Miller, U. W. Greene, and J. S. Kelley. At the same hour an overflow service was held in the basement of the church.

Pastor Sheehy, the evening speaker, told the story of the prophets concerning and the rebuilding of Jerusalem, the return of the Jews, and the restoration of fertility to the soil of Palestine. All this is evidence of the divinity of the Book of Mormon and the story of the restored gospel.

Next Sunday night Harry Frieberg, chairman of the National Zion Home for the Jews, for the Kansas City area, will be the speaker. He will tell exactly what is happening in Jerusalem and Palestine today.

Music for the evening service Sunday was supplied by the Stone Church Choir which sang "150 Psalm," by Franck, and "Bless Thou the Lord, O My Soul," by Ivanoff, Paul N. Craig directing. The Stone Church Boys' Choir, directed by Mr. Richard Dabney, of Kansas City, sang two numbers, "The Russian Hymn," and "The Crusaders' Hymn." Andrew Klavin, one of the boy singers, sang "Thanks Be to God."

Stone Church members extend sympathy to Brother Ward A. Hougas and family in the loss of wife and mother, Sister Elva M. Hougas, who passed away Friday, February 2, at her home. Sister Hougas, thirty-nine years old, had been ill for many months. Funeral services were conducted Sunday morning at ten o'clock from Stahl's Funeral Home, Elder Blair Jensen delivering the sermon. Following this service, the body was taken to Stewartsville, Missouri, where services were conducted at two o'clock in the afternoon from the Saints' Church. Interment was in Stewartsville Cemetery.

Second Church

An organ prelude played by Mrs. Sam Inman opened the sacrament service Sunday, Pastor Will Inman in charge. Two babies were blessed by Elders J. M. Robinson and Sam Inman. The oblation talk was given by Elder F. L. Freeman, and Elder W. A. Whiting offered a special prayer. The communion talk was given by Elder Will Grubb.

Elder Frank Veenstra, missionary to Utah, was the speaker Sunday night and his subject was "The Way." Brother Veenstra was formerly missionary to Holland. The choir directed by Mrs. Roy Settles, sang the anthem, "Thy Will Be Done," Mrs. Will Inman singing the solo.

Roy Settles was ordained to the office of priest under the hands of Elders A. K. Dillee and W. N. Inman at the evening service.

Walnut Park Church

Communion services Sunday morning were participated in by about four hundred and fifty Saints at Walnut Park. Pastor Frank McDonald presided, assisted by Elders M. T. Williams and Royden Barnhardt. Brother Barnhardt spoke in the interest of the oblation. Preceding the serving of the emblems, Barbara Jean Hodkins, small daughter of Mrs. Harold Hodkins, was blessed, Elder Benjamin Bean and the pastor officiating. For about ten minutes at the conclusion of the service Brother McDonald spoke to the Saints on the necessity for prayer if one would keep from falling prey to the temptations of the world.

Two candidates for baptism were inducted into the church at seven-thirty o'clock Sunday morning. They were Juanita Fay Price, wife of Woodrow Price, and Harry Edward Gill. Pastor McDonald officiated at both baptisms, and the new members were confirmed during the eight o'clock prayer service by Brother McDonald and Elder George Jenkins.

At seven-thirty in the evening Apostle James A. Gillen spoke to a large Sunday evening audience. Preceding the sermon the choir, under the direction of Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, sang as an anthem, "Remember Now Thy Creator."

The five plays which will be entered in the preliminaries of the one-act play contest to be held Friday and Saturday evenings, February 16 and 17, are as follows: "A Dish of China Tea," directed by Mary Taylor; "Ambition," directed by Mrs. Lillian Flanders; "Jephthah's Daughter," directed by Sister E. E. Moorman and Alta June Moorman; "Dead Expense," directed by Kenneth Morford; and "Women Folk," directed by Pauline Siegfried and Dorothy Bryant. Three of these must be eliminated in the preliminaries.

Enoch Hill Church

The three groups of this district met at the church on Wednesday evening in a union prayer meeting. Elders C. E. Beal, J. E. Martin, and Dick Bullard were in charge.

Elder H. L. Barto and Mrs. Barto were honor guests at the women's meeting last Thursday. Thirty-four were present.

On Friday evening the young people's department entertained the congregation with a program at the church.

Attendance at church school is growing. Three hundred and eleven are now enrolled, and two hundred and five were present at the morning session Sunday. The worship period of the church school was in charge of the Pilot Class taught by Elder H. E. Winegar. Sister Millard Pace and Sister W. L. Young sang, "Who Will Your Pilot Be?" and Mrs. H. E. Winegar read, "That Something."

The church was filled at the communion service and a goodly portion of the Spirit was present. The meeting was in charge of Pastor E. A. Thomas, and Patriarch Richard Bullard was in the stand. Brother Bullard was also the evening speaker, and he with his son and son-in-law, Dick Bullard and Charles Warren, sang "God Will Take Care of You." The choir sang, "Let Not Your Heart Be Troubled."

Spring Branch Church

The weekly prayer services were in charge of J. Andes, T. Nord, and O. Sedoris. After the close of the Sunday school period, Sister J. Nelson gave a talk.

The sacrament service Sunday was in charge of Pastor M. C. Jacobsen, assisted by F. A. Cool, J. Andes, and J. C. Mabbott. Mildred Bath sang, "Come, Sweet Comforter." Elmer Peer, Delbert McClain, Jesse Smith and W. F. Weston helped in administering the sacrament.

The evening church school program was given by Sister Nord's class. Preaching services were in charge of Jesse Smith and J. Andes. Fern Belk and Francis Tankard sang, "Alone With Jesus." Robert Fish talked on "Baptism," after which Mrs. Iola Clark and children, Andrew, Gerald, Floyd, Virgil, and Dale were baptized. Just before the baptism, Irene Roberts sang "My Savior Calling," and immediately following she sang, "I Come to Thee."

Robert Fish then talked on "Confirmation," and the candidates were confirmed by J. Andes, L. White, Jesse Smith, Robert Fish, and M. C. Jacobsen.

Kennett, Missouri

Young People Find Their Places

Kennett young people are rapidly becoming active helpers. Those who thought they had no place in church activities have found places, and the spirit of service is felt by all. Much interest is shown in club work since "Bible Baseball" has been introduced. One night each month young nonmembers are invited to a special program, and another night is devoted to entertaining the adults. Occasionally the young men and women have charge of the eleven o'clock service on Sunday. Recently two splendid talks were given by Leon Wiggins and Gerald Gabriel, both promising young men of the church.

Pastor H. H. Wiggins is teaching the Book of Mormon Class. His students love and admire him as they work under his supervision.

The L. O. G. Club meets on Friday night each week at the home of Brother Larche, receiving special instruction in vocal music under Morris Miniard. Brother Miniard is an efficient instructor, and the results of his work are splendid. He is the best bass singer in the branch and a good soloist.

The Saints are learning to work together in various ways. They are clearing some land on Brother Hayden's place, where they plan to raise cotton and with the proceeds purchase a piano and furnishings for the new church which they hope to complete during the next nine months.

Santa Ana, California

Louis J. Ostertag Is New Pastor

Santa Ana Saints enjoyed an interesting Christmas program under the direction of Sister Charles Calkins. Treats of candy and fruit were given to all and a beautiful Christmas tree, presented by Brother Clinton Brush, added to the feeling of happy festivity.

At the December business meeting of the branch Louis J. Ostertag, formerly of Arizona, was chosen as pastor, and he and his wife have been warmly received. Since his arrival here, Brother Ostertag has spent much time visiting the members, especially the aged and ill. He has also started a Church History Class on Sunday evenings preceeding the preaching service, and this class is largely attended.

In the last month prayer services have improved, and an increased attendance at all meetings has contributed to the spiritual development of the Saints.

The social activities of the branch recently have been of interest. The first, on the second Friday in January, was a good-time get-together by the young people of the church, held at the home of Sister Ruby Otta, in Garden Grove. Then on January 26, a welcome to Brother and Sister Ostertag was held in the recreation room of the church. Over seventy-five members and friends came to enjoy an evening of music and games interspersed with charades acted out by the young people of the branch. Each guest brought a little gift and at the close of the evening, these were presented to the pastor and his wife. Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served. The meeting was in charge of Sister William Kuhn, adult supervisor.

Gladstone, Michigan

Edward R. Carter Is New Pastor

The local activities are going forward, and the spiritual trend is strong. Among the Saints there seems to be the feeling of unity and oneness that should characterize all true and loyal members.

Brother Acker who has been Gladstone's pastor for two years, and Sister Acker, left the first of the year for Arizona. Brother Edward R. Carter was elected pastor. He came into the church a little over eighteen months ago, and holds the office of priest. He is taking an active part in every department besides caring for his pastoral duties. He has made a new opening at Ford River and preaches there every other Sunday afternoon to a good number. Brother Carter has been wonderfully blessed, and the Saints feel that under his leadership, the branch will continue to grow.

The young people have been organized by the pastor to hold regular Tuesday night meetings. Much interest is being shown in Bible study and other subjects of church interest. In this group are several nonmembers who are taking active part.

Elder J. J. Ledsworth has been laboring in Gladstone branch. He has now returned to Alpena, Michigan, having closed three weeks of services here. The Saints feel that these meetings have been spiritually and educationally helpful.

Correct List of Delegates

Minneapolis, Minnesota

Fifth and Queen Avenue North

Apostle J. F. Curtis closed a three-week series of meetings January 21. Because of severe weather and much sickness among the members, attendance was not so great as had been expected. However, those who heard the discourse were given new determination to press onward, perfect their own lives, and endeavor to carry the gospel message to others. Hollis Olson, son of Brother and Sister Hans Olson, was baptized the morning of the closing day.

Besides regular Sunday services mid-week prayer services are held in north and south Minneapolis and once each month there is a union prayer meeting at the church.

The church school, under the direction of Fred N. Goode, shows marked increase in attendance and much interest in the classes. Two adult classes are studying the current quarterly on financial law.

Sister Ada Carlson, district supervisor of young people, gave a short talk here early in December, urging the youth of the branch to consider the necessity of more active and organized church work. The young people of Minneapolis Branch, led by Sister Loleta Johnson, have organized, and held their first meeting January 28, at 6.30 p. m. Plans are being formulated for entertaining the young people of the district at the spring conference to be held here in March.

The Stewardship Club, an adult group organized more than a year ago for study and social activities, completed their first year of study, having used, "The Elements of Stewardship and Our Social Problem," prepared by Albert Carmichael. They are now taking up another course of study, "History and Principles of Religion." The club meets every other Friday night at the homes of the members. A large number enjoy these meetings, and the aim is not only to interest members of the church, but all who will meet with them. The club sponsored a dinner at the church following a prayer service and program on Thanksgiving Day. About eighty were there.

The Christmas program was given at 4.30 p. m. Christmas Eve followed by a Christmas party in the church basement where Santa appeared to the joy of the children. Gifts and the usual treat were distributed.

The women's department hold meetings every other Wednesday. Different projects for making money, bake sales, a pie chain, a bazaar, and a penny carnival, have netted substantial sums. The women enjoyed their annual Christmas party with Sister Winifred Lynch. As a winter project a welfare committee was appointed and relief work for the district as well as local has kept the women busy.

Tigris Branch

Near Ava, Missouri

January 21, proved a memorable day for Saints in the community of Ava. Early in the morning Brother Walter Bullard and family and one nonmember started in their truck as usual to Four Corner Mission. At that point Brother and Sister Clark Hirsh and family and Brother Ralph Wilt and family were taken aboard. About four miles beyond on their way to Ava, Brother and Sister D. A. Fuller and family joined them, and at Ava Brother and Sister Vancel and family augmented the traveling party.

At Tigris church they found the good people awaiting their arrival and ready to give them a hearty welcome. District President W. E. Haden was there and his affable assistant, Walter Chrestensen.

The church school period was in charge of Brother Wilt who, instead of following the usual program, called on members of the priesthood for short addresses.

The eleven o'clock hour was devoted to a service of prayer and testimony, and was a time of reconciliation and rejoicing among the members. The worshippers were made aware by the presence of the Spirit that such a service was most acceptable to the Father in heaven.

Following a basket dinner a short business session, in charge of W. E. Haden, resulted in the selection of Brother S. W. Simmons, an aged missionary, to preside over Tigris Branch. He is beloved by all the Saints, and will minister to them with a firm but kindly hand. May God add his blessings to the effort here to establish true brotherhood.

Delta, Colorado

Hold Effective Wednesday Evening Meetings

Elder Arthur Rose was elected branch president to fill the vacancy which occurred when the former president, Albert Rose, moved to Independence. Brother Arthur senses this added responsibility very keenly and is pleased to have such an earnest worker as Brother Clarence Wallis to help in the branch. Brother Clarence was ordained an elder last August.

Wednesday evening prayer services have recently been resumed. The interest is good and attendance is increasing. Round-table talks, mostly on zionic lines have been held in connection with these services. Immediately following the prayer service, song practice is held. A number of Saints have to travel a distance of eleven miles, which makes it too much to meet oftener under prevailing conditions.

Members of the adult class were losers, by a small margin, in a contest held recently by the church school, all classes participating. The losing class is to provide special entertainment of its own

Dramatics for Young People

Drama for young people is a type of activity that is slowly but surely winning the approval and cooperation of many pastors. Last November the O. B. K. organization of Kansas City Stake sponsored their fourth annual drama contest. The Young People's Council of Independence is now sponsoring its third annual drama contest. Contests are not practicable for all branches, but drama can be given almost anywhere, and by a small number of people. An important thing is to exercise care choosing for the rest of the church school.

Saints of Delta are indebted to the Rose family, and especially are their boys to be commended, for their work in making it possible to secure one of the lovely electric clocks offered by the Herald Publishing House, as a gift for certain work performed. The clock has been presented to the branch.

Sister Edra Nelson and her husband, Mr. D. Nelson, have moved to Monte Vista, Colorado, to reside.

Sister O'Neil, who has been ill for the past seven weeks, is still confined to her bed.

in the selection of plays to be given. Drama has a high teaching value, and this can be beneficial or harmful, according to the nature of the play given. Accordingly, pastors are very much interested in the kind of selections made and produced.

Thought for the Week

"One came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?"—Matthew 19: 16.

The highest ideal that some people can think of is the pursuit of pleasure; others want fame, and some few want to be useful in helping humanity.

The desire for eternal life is a high and sacred aim. But it cannot be selfish, because no person can strive for it selfishly and succeed.

When the young man asked Jesus what to do to obtain it, Jesus started to give him an examination to see if he was fit for eternal life.

The first test was, "Keep the commandments." The young man passed this test immediately.

But he failed on the second test, which is recorded in Matthew 19: 21. The young man "went away sorrowful" the record says, without taking the rest of the examination.

If he had been able to remain for the rest of the examination, what requirements would it have set for him? See Matthew 22: 37-39 for the two great commandments, and Hebrews 6: 1, 2 for the principles of the doctrine of Christ.

The quest of eternal life is not to be satisfied in a few minutes. It is the work of a life of service and devotion. But it is the greatest work to which we can devote our efforts.

Church Deportment

We have often felt the blush and mortification of spirit caused by the acts of impatient thoughtlessness shown by Saints, elders and lay members—in bustling and getting ready to move out, and even in going out during the closing hymn and before the benediction. Indeed, we have been made greatly ashamed by seeing leading elders guilty of this grave and serious breach of good manners, and disregard of the dignity of the church and the respect due to the Lord during the hour of service and worship. We once exhorted a congregation to be patient and wait for the benediction and chided them for the disrespect shown to the hour and the occasion, when, while yet we were speaking a prominent elder rose, took his hat and overcoat and walked the whole distance from the pulpit to the door before the sound of our exhortation ceased, or the "good word" of dismissal had been heard. We concluded then that either we were out of place in striving to secure a respectful and fitting close to the service, or this man's teaching by example was more powerful than our teaching by precept and example.

The true properties of the house of worship require the best of order and most circumspect deportment. There should be no such thing as flirting, laughing, whispering, writing of notes to and from persons in adjacent seats, (whether the parties be old or young) no grimaces or contortions of face to cause others to laugh, no shuffling of feet, drumming on the seats or books with the fingers, or on the floor with the feet, and no moving about from seat to seat. There should be absolute quiet on the part of the hearers from the time of their entrance to the house of worship to the closing words of the benediction. No one should go to the meeting room who does not intend to stay until the services close. It is a sad breach of decorum and good behavior for persons to get up and go out during the service, no matter whether those who do it are young, middle-aged, or old; unless there is an absolute necessity for such going out, it is an act of disrespect to both the minister and the people of the congregation, and to the Lord whose love, word, and goodness are represented by the being assembled together.

Common courtesy and decent civility, the respect which men of fair minds and good hearts should feel toward their fellow men, should characterize the conduct of those who attend worship in the house of God. Indeed the rule of right demands that those who enter the house where divine services are being held, should not interfere with the right of others to see, hear, and enjoy all the exercises, including the closing song and the benediction. The preacher, however, humble his talent, or far he may be from the remotest seat in the house, may be disturbed by ill or disrespectful conduct, and is entitled to fair and courteous treatment, and has the right to be left free to express his thoughts, and discuss the doctrine he has to present without disturbance by either unmannerly interruption, studied and open disrespect, or thoughtless disregard of the rules of good deportment.

Every member of the congregation, whether rich, opulent, or humble and poor, richly or poorly clad, has the right to see, hear, and enjoy every portion of the service from opening to close, undisturbed by any act of those sitting nearby, or remote from where he may be sitting, or standing, by which he may be annoyed, fretted, or in any wise be prevented from the fullest enjoyment of song, prayer, sermon, and benediction. It would seem, sometimes, that the only rights to be exercised and respected in the house of worship are the rights which careless young people claim and use, to go to the place to sit together, whisper, converse, laugh, carry on their flirtations, pay no heed to the people near them, nor to the preacher—but just to have a "good time," and if spoken to, or rebuked, to get offended, become angry, feel insulted, and give the officers of the church and the church discredit for being harsh, unkind, and careless of the feelings and rights of the young.—Saints' Herald, volume 41, pages 693, 694.

The Pigeonhole

■ The Test of Service

This story begins a long time ago at Graceland College. It concerns one who was of an old church family. One of the best of fellows and a fine friend, he lived a clean life and minded his own business. In the prayer meetings he listened to others while they gave testimonies of everlasting devotion to the church. His voice was seldom heard, and on the rare occasions when he did speak, his words were few and modest. He listened quietly to others as they told of the great things they expected to do. For himself, he promised nothing. No one expected that he had any idea of giving anything to the church. Some thought he would never amount to much in church work.

The years have passed. Some of those wonderful testimonies have been forgotten and some of those who made them, deep in emotion and tears, have gone the way of the world. In the real test of life they have been blown away like insubstantial chaff.

He is serving the church. His character and devotion are the backbone and support of the one branch he attends. He could move in far more fashionable circles, he could associate with wealth and luxury. But he chose rather to serve the church of his parents and grandparents. He never did much crying about the sacrifice he was making for the church. He rarely became emotional. But he has stood the test of service.

The moral, if one is needed, is that we can never be sure which of our young people will turn out best. We must work with and pray for all of them.

■ In Praise of Critics

"People will always take time to write a note of disagreement, whereas they frequently won't bother to send along a word of praise."—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

■ It is easy to sing when everyone else is singing. But when they are not—it isn't so easy. I was wondering the other night as I stood in the midst of a large congregation singing one of our characteristic Latter Day Saint hymns. I was wondering when these words which they were singing, will describe an actual condition. I hope they will be descriptively true of us no later than the "Keep the Law" period.

"Let us waken our songs in the morning,
And let them at noontide resound;
Then the evening shall find us rejoicing,
While the Law in our hearts will be found."

■ Prayer Meeting

Said a pastor, "I abandoned my prayer meeting long ago."

"How did your church officers like that?"

"Oh, they did not find it out for more than a year."—From the Christian Register.

The Purpose of Fasting

It has been a custom in the past for fasts to be observed occasionally, locally and generally, either by official announcement or mutual agreement. Not infrequently such called fasts have been preceding the General Conference, the object or purpose of the fast being prayer for the success of the conference and its various working parts. In another column will be found such a call by the Presidency. It is believed this call will be heeded generally by the Saints and the fast observed with the spirit of the occasion well in view.

It is generally accepted that to fast means to abstain from food, and usually some time is designated for the duration of the fast. The time is set in officially designated fasts; but the degree of abstinence is not so generally indicated. With us in our fasts, general, local, and individual, it is left to the persons observing them. Fasting may be observed by partaking of restricted amounts of specified foods, such as a fasting on bread and water, or it may be by not eating solid food at all though drinking water or other liquids; or the fast may be made more rigid by abstaining from all food and drink. It may be still further intensified in its rigor by denying one's self other specified pleasurable things such as washing the hands and face, or still further by abstaining from all pleasures.

Fasting if defined as affliction of soul may be considered as encompassing more than going hungry, hence might suggest any degree of asceticism; but the purposes of fasting should be kept in view in determining what taboo should be observed.

The chief purpose of fasting, I would say, is to impress and objectify the fact that earthly blessings must be made subordinate to duty towards God with all those who would tread the path of righteousness. Different types of character may therefore demand different degrees of rigidity in observing fasts to engender a due recognition of our relationship to God.

It is worthy of note that in the old Mosaic code of religious activity only one regular general fast is ordained, the fast of the Day of Atonement. Other fasts may have been introduced later, as indicated by some of the writers of the Old Testament. Some four spoken of by Zechariah seem to have fallen into nonobservance though public fasts almost from the beginning have been ordered on occasions.

The Master in his work on earth was far less rigid in regular fast observance than was John. The latter came "neither eating nor drinking." This undoubtedly indicating an abstemious denial of gustatorial pleasures, while the former because of his participation in feasts was termed a "gluttonous man and a wine-bibber" (Matthew 11: 19; Luke 7: 34), a charge probably arising from a sternly ascetic class who observed the usually unascetic life led or lived by Jesus. He did not need to afflict the soul to keep him constantly reminded of the necessity for righteous service. His whole life was that. Without doubt he observed the fixed fasts of the people as he did other religious ceremonies of the people. Yet Jesus by both example and teaching advocated self-denial, self-sacrifice, and self-forgetfulness, even if he did not set the example of asceticism. His instructions to sacrifice are in many cases conditional the conditions meeting the needs of the person or persons to whom he addressed himself. Of one he demanded the sale of his property to give to the poor; of another to leave home and loved ones; of others something else. But at the bottom of all these instructions lay the great principle of sacrifice. "If any man will come after me let him deny himself," sets this out clearly, and parallels the instruction to seek "first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Or again he says: "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath he cannot be my disciple." (Luke 14: 33.) While in his conditional instructions to persons it is evident that what might be demanded of one is not required of another, it is also clear that of all he demands a service which always puts God and his cause ahead of self; though self-denial need not be asceticism. What he demands is subordination.

With all this in view, then, we may approach our fast observances with better understanding, and remembering the attitude of the Master, we will refrain from ostentation. To parade our piety is not truly to fast. Rather let our fasting be shielded from the eyes of men; and our meditations and prayers be secluded and private petitions of a soul seeking power over his appetites and inclinations towards selfishness. Let not our array, or dress, or appearance tell of our sufferings or anguish of soul. "Thou, when thou fastest, anoint thy head and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret." (Matthew 6: 16-18.)

In some of the fasts observed by the Jews sackcloth and ashes were used as an announcement that the persons were fasting, but the foregoing quotation indicates that when we fast our usual toilet should be observed, and we appear as usual. Our observance of fast, our prayers, our meditations, our contemplations of divine Grace, are for the secrecy of our hearts and altars rather than for the eyes of the profane. Jesus would have us avoid all ostentation in our fasts, though the fasts are not to be on days of gladness. It is as righteous to be happy and glad as to be sober and self-punishing, under right conditions.

Let us, therefore, in our fastings measure our own selfishness, and endeavor to keep before us the fact that the service demanded of us is the subordination of self in all our expressions and labors to our duty of obedience and service to God; and let us not forget to pray and work for Zion and its realization.

No doubt, however, their navies can get closer together, in order to make their defense more effective.

MEDITATION IN CHURCH: Concentration is a great thing. I will try the principle on this sermon. Now what is the preacher saying? Something about Zion. Let me concentrate! Oh, oh—the deacon is opening a window—and it is too cold here now. Everybody is watching the deacon. The window sticks. Everyone seems to have forgotten the preacher—they always do. Now the deacon has the window open and has gone to the back of the room—I can still see him by twisting my neck. Now he puts his stick behind the door—wonder what the stick is called. Oh, yes, the preacher! I was concentrating on his sermon. He is talking rather loudly. He seems flustered about something. What is he saying? Something about Zion. For ever more! Here come Brother and Sister Always Tardy. The deacon is showing them to the front row of seats, and in the middle of the sermon. This is good. Brother Tardy is very red—he picks his feet up and puts them down carefully as though he were following a diagram or graph or something. He has forgotten to remove his hat. Sister Tardy walks ahead with her head very high. Ah, she has

Men You Ought to Know

CLYDE F. ELLIS
Of the Quorum of Twelve

At the present time, Apostle Clyde F. Ellis is in the Society Islands, in charge of the work there. He has been on this mission before, and has a thorough understanding of the language, the people, and the problems peculiar to the mission. It is an especially difficult work because of the different climate, conditions, and social customs encountered there. In his work with the island peoples Brother Ellis has shown unending patience, careful diplomacy, and ability in administration that have made his work of great importance to the church and to the mission especially. Those whose work carries them to foreign shores are always particularly remembered by the people of the church, for their sacrifices for it are greater.

a new dress! That explains some things. At least she has the attention of the whole audience. Now they are seated. Oh, yes, the preacher. He is shouting again. He seems almost angry. I will listen to him. It is a good thing to train the mind and not let it run around like a stray dog among garbage cans—make it mind—like a—er a watch dog—keeping his eye always on one thing at a time. The preacher, yes, he is talking something about Zion. What now? Sister Fidgets is leaving church. She always sits up front and leaves early. Probably left her dinner on the stove. Everyone watches her as far as the door and then wonders if she is walking or driving. I wonder. Ah! the preacher is closing. He is mopping his forehead—and that window still open. What did he say? Let me see, something about Zion. But it seems to me that he rambled a good deal. That is a fault of his. He does not concentrate.

— Informal Chats From the Office of the President —

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH

W J. NUCKLES, who is in charge of a mission in Los Angeles, known as the Lenox Mission, submits a report to the Presidency of the activities there. While expressing sorrow that they could not do more he assures the Presidency that they are behind the program of the church and are going to back us up to the best of their ability, that they are looking forward to 1934 as the greatest year in the Reorganization. In his report he tells of mailing a substantial check to the Bishop of the Southern California District and says that in 1929 there were twelve tithe payers and in 1933 there were twenty-one, or an increase of seventy-five percent. Statistics in regard to the active members of the mission indicate that they are alert, and figures show that the average number of tithe payers was 33½ percent of the membership for 1929 and 61 percent for 1933.

Brother Nuckles is right in feeling that this is a record of which he can feel proud, and we feel sure that in this effort to keep the law from the financial aspect there has been a distinct improvement along spiritual lines. In other words, keeping the law financially will have a tendency to emphasize the necessity for keeping the law along all lines.

We congratulate Brother Nuckles and the Lenox Mission.

EVER SINCE a rather short but interesting visit to Glasgow some twelve or thirteen years ago, I have been hoping the time would come when our work might get a start in that interesting and beautiful city. Recently reports from Brother John W. Rushton indicate that these hopes are somewhat brighter. In a recent report to the Presidency he says that the work in Ireland resulted in baptizing five adult men and in the location of a sister, married, who with her husband has returned from Detroit, Michigan, owing to the depression. He adds:

"Brother William Murray (Ireland) was the guest of the Northern District Conference through the generosity of the Northeastern Branch. While there it was thought advisable to ordain him an elder to take care of the needs in the absence of Brother Taylor and until Brother Davies could reach there. This met with the approval of the conference to which we submitted the recommendation out of courtesy and it met with unanimous approval."

IN A RECENT LETTER from Myron A. McConley, in speaking of the progress of the work in the Northwest, he expresses the opinion that the big thing needed now is a definite move toward zionic activity, and by this he means stewardship—a definite move which will demonstrate our ability to bring to fruition our beautiful theories of fraternity and brotherhood. He adds:

"I am talking Zion building in no uncertain terms and the need for repentance on the part of the American nation generally and Latter Day Saints in particular. May God bless those under whose immediate direction the gathering is to be accomplished. I hope to lend my fullest cooperation."

It is pleasing indeed to know that the servants of the church are so alert to the pressing need for a place of safety toward which we have so long been looking.

BROTHER GEORGE W. THORBURN, an old-time friend and servant of the church, recently wrote us saying that on Christmas morning he and Sister Thorburn had, after an exchange of Christmas greetings, fallen into a discussion about the church and those who had laid their all on the altar, and among others my name came up in the discussion, so they wrote to express a wish for Christmas cheer and appreciation of the responsibilities being carried and the prayer that the Lord would bless in every way and give strength for my work.

Messages of fraternity and good cheer such as this from old-time friends and long-time servants of the church are heartening and we appreciate Brother Thorburn's thoughtfulness in writing. Others have written us along similar lines and we assure them that it is good to know that at the throne of Grace one is being remembered by faithful Saints, tried and true.

WE had occasion recently to write Brother F. G. Pitt, our aged but well-known and well-loved brother, who has so long served the church faithfully and who is at present in Florida. He writes:

"Your kind letter received. Thank you for your kind words of encouragement. I too hope that the coming year will prove to be a better year for all of us than the last. Of late I have suffered from a severe cold, and for a time I questioned if I should live to see the close of the year. I am better now, and begin to feel more like myself again.

"I take comfort, however, in the thought expressed by the Apostle Paul in second Corinthians fifth chapter concerning the dissolving of our earthhouse of this tabernacle and of the better house our heavenly Father has made ready for us to occupy. For this old house of mine in which I am still occupying is getting pretty shaky. The foundation seems to be giving way, so that I need to be careful of my steps, and some day I expect the roof will cave in and I shall then have to move out into my new house, where I shall no longer be hindered in my work but where I shall be free to continue my labors, as in the past, only in a much larger field.

"For, Brother Smith, I expect to continue in my ministry after this life, only under better conditions and with better success, than I have been able to do here. And then my happiness will be complete. For I love the work, above everything else and I was never so happy as when fully engaged in it. Now my greatest disappointment is that I am no longer able, on account of bodily ills, to continue my work as in former days. I think there was never a time when the world was in greater need of our work than the present. And may God hasten the day when we as a church may be able to more fully occupy than at present. I hope to be present at next General Conference. I trust the Good Spirit may be present. May the Lord bless and strengthen you for your severe tasks."

Brother Pitt's long, faithful and useful record has endeared him to the Saints and we know they will appreciate knowing that he is feeling enough better so that he plans on coming to General Conference. We shall be glad to see him there as we know all his friends will.

BROTHER John F. Garver in a recent letter expresses the belief that we of the Presidency would know that he has "just rounded out the best year of his ministry." And he tells of rising out of the slough of despondency, and feels that there are bright and very busy times ahead of us as a church. He has been heartened by the fine spiritual experiences he has passed through with the Saints among whom he has labored. Here are some significant words:

"There is growing with me, furthermore, the deepest conviction that there is for the church light and power and deliverance. This conviction I find growing also in other men and in increasing numbers of the members of the church, particularly of the more intelligent class. Indeed, I may say further, this conviction is pointing itself unmistakably toward a more definite and virile leadership. Without any doubt it is up to us to take advanced grounds in our ministry and in the administration of the spiritual concerns of the church."

Brother Garver is a devoted and tireless worker who has before him constantly the needs of the

A Fast Day

The Presidency suggests that Sunday, March 4, be observed by the Saints as a fast day, the object being to keep in mind as a subject of prayer the coming General Conference and its work. In their prayers let not the Saints forget the great objectives of the church, and our petitions be for wisdom, strength, faith, and devotion sufficient to carry the work on to a realization of Zion with all her ramifications. Pray for unity of endeavor that our strength may not be wasted in contention, but augmented by the endowment of brotherly love and understanding.

We suggest that the period of the fast be from sundown on March 3 (Saturday) to sundown March 4 (Sunday), and that the abstinence be from food and drink.

F. M. S.

Special Notice to Conference Visitors

All visitors to the General Conference not having private arrangements and desiring rooms for their stay in Independence should write as soon as possible indicating how many rooms are desired for accommodation and the dates for which the reservations should be made. Also indicate whether you are willing to share rooms with someone else. Address requests for rooms to the Housing Committee, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. Conference dates are Friday, April 6, to Saturday, April 14.

church, and finds great joy in spending all his strength for "the Cause."

A FEW days ago we learned of one of our sisters making quite a journey to be with her aged mother at what will probably be her last sickness. In reply to a letter of mine expressing appreciation of her filial concern in giving care to her mother, this sister wrote:

"Yes, I am sure there is nothing one can do that means greater service than the loving attention one may give to a mother. No matter when the parting time comes, whether early in life or in the late, declining years, as in mother's case, it is a trial to part with a mother. I am deeply grateful to the All-Father for his loving kindness in permitting her to remain so long with us, with the natural use of her faculties."

We feel sure that our readers will appreciate the fine sentiment expressed in this passage from the sister's letter.

Seven Baptized at Fort Wayne, Indiana

Seven candidates were baptized at Fort Wayne, Indiana, as a result of two weeks of missionary services held there recently by Elder J. O. Dutton. Local Saints were fortunate in securing a good meeting place for the series, and are enthusiastic in their praise of Brother Dutton and his work. Though the Fort Wayne group has no regular meeting place, they hope one day to grow into a full-fledged branch of the church.

Elder J. Charles May at Rich Hill, Missouri

Elder J. Charles May recently conducted a good series of missionary meetings at Rich Hill, Missouri, with an average attendance of more than one hundred and seventy. The peak attendance was four hundred.

Australian Women Hold Convention

Australian women enjoyed a convention in Sydney District last November. Sister George G. Lewis, leader of women in the Australasian Mission, was in charge, and there was a fine gathering of women from the four Sydney centers. Constructive discussions were held, plans formulated, and as a result, the work of the women is now going steadily forward.

Unique Method of Erecting a Church Home

The little branch of church pioneers at Monetville, Ontario, (there are thirty-five including some interested nonmembers) has taken definite steps to have a church building and cemetery of its own.

The grounds on which the building will stand and where the cemetery will be located, were donated by Brother and Sister James Mercer; and are now deeded to the church. Already the grounds have been graded and properly drained, plots measured and staked out, but cold weather has halted fencing operations.

A unique method of supplying funds and materials for the building is being employed. All will find it necessary to sacrifice in this undertaking. Each head of a family is required to pay five dollars for a cemetery plot which money goes to the building fund. Each family head is also asked to cut fifteen sound logs, haul them to the mill, pay the sawmill bill, and give the lumber for use in the building. Many of the logs are now at the mill and will be sawed in the spring. Workers hope to begin building operations by midsummer and continue without interruption until the building is completed. The women have charge of furnishing the interior.

Toronto Workers Pay on Church Debt

Toronto women reached their monetary objective for 1933, of two thousand dollars to be applied as interest on their church building debt, this in addition to conducting many other activities. They devised a variety of ways of making money for the church under the leadership of Sister Mary Wilson, a specialist in this field.

During the year also, the men paid one thousand dollars on the mortgage principal in addition to making payments to the general church and keeping up branch expenses.

Sister Adelia Stedman Passes in Death

Sister Adelia Stedman, one of Lamoni, Iowa's oldest citizens, passed away at her home February 1, after a short illness. She was ninety-one years of age and the widow of Eli A. Stedman, minister in the church for many years. She was born in Steuben County, New York, in 1842, and joined the church at Cannon Falls, Minnesota, in 1869. She is survived by one son, three daughters, and many other relatives and friends.

Membership in Independence

There are 6,172 known members of the church living in Independence, according to a report made to the quarterly conference in January, and this number represents 2,736 families. The membership is distributed among the nine congregations of the city as follows: Stone Church, 2,496; Second Church 583, Walnut Park, 869; Enoch Hill, 311; Liberty Street, 666; Englewood, 526; Spring Branch, 208; East Independence, 129; Gudgell Park, 70; Sugar Creek, 74; nonresidents, 240.

Youth's Forum

Ideas, Discussion and News for the Young People of the Church

The Call for Young Leaders

The greatest need of the young people today is good local leaders, well trained, and consecrated to their tasks. Effective church-wide organization must wait until there are large numbers of strong and functioning groups of young people in the branches. Our young people's work must begin at the foundation, which is the branch.

The strong leaders of young people who will be developed in the years from 1935 to 1938 and later will be those who start studying and training now. And those leaders are needed now, and will be needed later. The work of the young people in the church now waits for the development of good local leaders.

Needless to say, we have every reason to suppose that those who work in the branch to keep the young people in the service of the church will later be called, at the proper time, to other responsibilities. And those who have prepared will be in the best position to serve.

The call to prepare comes to you. Are you ready to respond?

The Importance of Activities

There has been some concern expressed as to whether there should be some church-wide organization of young people with a separate staff of officers. It was precisely to correct the disadvantages of separate organizations within the church that the new plan of organization for branches and church schools was approved by the General Conference of 1930 and incorporated in the Church School Handbook.

Even if, in the light of further experience, a separate organization of young people should now be considered desirable, conditions scarcely seem ripe for it. An organization can hardly be built effectively from the top. There is a vast amount of preliminary groundwork necessary, it appears to some, in the way of the development of local organization and activities, with the scope of the church school. The field for such local work has already been laid out in the rough. Much now depends on local initiative, local leadership, and whatever program suggestions can come from headquarters and through the Herald.

When local activities and organization have been developed under the church school, as suggested in the Handbook, so that there are numbers of strong units, it may be time to consider whether a separate general organization is necessary.

Our present responsibility seems to lie

"See You at Conference!"

MABEL CARLILE
Of Graceland College

An influential figure among workers with young people, Miss Mabel Carlile has achieved a reputation as a trainer of young singers. Her A Cappella Chorus is one of the best disciplined organizations of singers in the church, and has won recognition outside church and college circles. Its radio broadcasts have brought enthusiastic responses.

Miss Carlile will be at conference in connection with the great choir that will give "The Elijah" this year. Come to conference and meet her.

in the direction of developing the local work for young people. At any rate, such emphasis will best meet our present needs, and will give best support to whatever future plans may be developed.

Oriole Circles

Four new Oriole Circles have been registered with the Girls' Headquarters' Committee in the month of January. These with their monitors are:

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Elizabeth Jackson, Monitor; Saint Joseph, Missouri, Third Branch, Irene Tracy, Monitor; East Jordan, Michigan, Mrs. Verne Whiteford, Monitor; Independence, Missouri, Stone Church, Mrs. Helen Harrington.

New Circles may be registered when their local organization is complete. Special instructions and a registration blank may be had from the Headquarters' Committee.

First in the Line!

"See you at Conference!"

The very first of the young people to announce their intentions of attending the coming General Conference are Mary W. Hobart and her sister, Ruth, of Webb City, Missouri. They will travel by train.

This puts them at the head of the procession. Who will be the next of our young people to plan to attend? Let us know soon. Conference is seven weeks away, and the time will pass quickly. Are you making your plans now?

The Tenth Legion

During the month of January the following names have been added to the growing list of young people who have qualified by active service in the work of the church as members of the Legion and who wish to pledge themselves to further consecrated effort in advancing the ideals and the message of the Restoration. In each case these young people are vouched for by three members of the priesthood, often the pastor, the district president and a missionary or other general church officer. We welcome these January additions to the Tenth Legion.

Adah Carlson, Wrenshall, Minnesota.
Merle E. Chiles, Spokane, Washington.
Joyce Kinney, Spokane, Washington.
Lola Belle Cain, Spokane, Washington.
Wayne Updyke, Black River Falls, Wisconsin.

Lois Updyke, Black River Falls, Wisconsin.

Fern Updyke, Black River Falls, Wisconsin.

Opal Updyke, Black River Falls, Wisconsin.

Dorothy Jane Pinkerton, Belvidere, Illinois.

Study

Study, finally, if no other interest serves, because you are a man. It is nonsense to suppose that every step in education can be interesting. The fighting impulse must often be appealed to. Be ashamed of being scared at fractions, of being downed by the law of falling bodies; rouse your pugnacity and pride, and you will rush at the difficult places with a sort of inner wrath at yourself that is one of your best moral faculties. A victory scored under such conditions becomes a turning-point and a crisis of your character.—R. L. Lyman, in The Mind at Work.

"Others"--A Lenten Sermon

By Ray Whiting

RAY WHITING

LENT, the forty days before Easter, is kept by a great many Christian people and churches as a period of mortifying of the flesh, of special penance and prayer, and of spiritual revival. While this church does not formally celebrate Lent as many others do, yet it is well for us, as we approach the time of the sacrifice and suffering of Christ, to meditate solemnly upon this great event.

Above everything else Christ's mission was for others. Without thought or consideration for himself, he spent himself that others might live. He said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." But next in importance for us is the fact that Christ expects those who would be his disciples to continue this labor of love for others, forgetting self as completely as he did and serving as unreservedly.

THE TASK of serving others, of saving others, is a tremendous responsibility. The importance of it has not been fully understood. The unselfishness of it, the weight of it, the depth of it have not been comprehended. As Paul said, "we see through a glass darkly"; we feel only partially. The price of discipleship has hardly dawned upon us.

We could have paid the price, but we have withheld ourselves; He would have led us but we have been slow to follow. "If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be. . . ." He who would be his disciple must follow him, must go where he would go, must stand where he would stand, must say what he would have said. "Where I am, there shall also my disciple be."

When we follow Christ we find that he entered into his ministry for others without reservation. Even though he lacked material things, even though he became weary, even though at times he hungered, and at times seemed almost to quake at the thought of the cross, yet we find him spending himself for others. Then there was the garden, and the cross, and the awful terror of it all—for others.

Why did Christ walk the way of self-forgetfulness and of sacrifice and of death? Because that is the only way of life for Christ or for anyone else,

"For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it." If there had been a way of life with its pathway strewn with ease and comforts for self, no doubt Christ would have walked that way, but he knew that the way of self was the way of death. The way of life is not an easy way. We sing, "Must I be borne to paradise on flowery beds of ease." Yet too often we cling to our easy beds and fail to get into the fight with those who sail through bloody seas. We think of self while Christ thought of others.

It is said that William Booth, the founder of the Salvation Army, when asked for a message to cable to the members of the Army in Europe replied, "Others." What a splendid example that was of Christian consideration. Not self, but others. Jesus said he came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many.

THE RICH YOUNG MAN who came to Jesus said, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" Poor fellow, he was thinking only of himself and how he might obtain eternal life. If he had caught the vision of Jesus Christ he would have asked what good thing he could do that others might have eternal life. Then instead of going away sorrowing he would have found joy and life, for the only way of saving ourselves is by saving others. Jesus makes this very plain in Luke 14:26 where he tells us that if any man come to him and loves his father or mother or wife or children and brethren and sisters more than Christ he cannot be his disciple. Now this is comparatively easy to do. Large numbers of men have left their loved ones for months and even years at a time for the sake of Christ. But I have not finished the verse, for Jesus goes on to say, "Yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." A great many of us who can forsake parents, wife and children, find it even more difficult to also put self in the background. We still keep ourselves with us and find ourselves extremely sensitive. Touch us and we are touchy, slight us and we are hurt, oppose our wishes and we resent it. Self is still in the front; it has first consideration. Christ said no man can serve two masters. We must choose between self and others, for often we find Self to be our greatest master. We must choose between our own personal interests, our own feelings, our own joys, our own ambitions, our own pleasures and Christ, or others.

What matter if I am tired, if others are in need of me? What matters if I am hungry if others are being fed by my fasting? What matters that I am in poverty if others are receiving the riches of eternity? If what I am doing does not help somebody else more than myself, then why am I doing it? Others! Others, must be our war-cry. "Christ and Others" must somehow become synonymous.

I AM CONVINCED that much of so-called Christianity and Latter-Day-Saintism of today will perish from the earth—because it is not Christian. It is a form of godlessness which serves self first, while Christianity is designed to serve others.

One of the finest examples of the losing of self is found in the book of Job. The story, briefly told, is this: Job was serving the Lord, but Satan said that Job was doing it for a selfish purpose. He said: "Job doth fear God for nought?" In other words, Job was serving God so that God would make Job rich. So the Lord permitted the loss of all of Job's property and even the loss of his children. But Job said, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Then Satan said, why certainly a man will give all he possesses to save his life. Let me torment Job physically and the Lord will see that Job cares more for himself than he does for God. Then Job was stricken most horribly. The stench from his sores drove his dearest friends away, he suffered beyond measure, but in the midst of it we hear him saying, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

Are we serving God for nought? or do we have our price? Are we serving for self or for others? When adversity and trials come our way do we become sensitive to self, get offended and quit, or do we remain as strong in the faith as ever and as alert and devoted in our service to others?

There is a crying need for this kind of Christianity in the world and in the church. It would revolutionize our thinking and doing. It would speed up our priesthood visiting and increase our tithe paying. It would increase our church attendance, spiritualize our membership and endow the church with Divine power.

Unless to us Lent means, forgetting self and serving others, we have not discovered its vital meaning. Unless it means that to us we have not discovered real Christianity. Unless it means that to us we have not yet found the way to the Kingdom. If we cannot lose ourselves for others we cannot be His disciples.

May God help us to lose ourselves in service now that we may have peace in this world and eternal life in the world to come.

"Neuritis"

By A. W. Teel, M. D.,
Church Physician

NEURITIS, as its name implies, is an inflammation of a nerve. One nerve or many may be involved. The acute form, if the cause is not removed, will become chronic.

The cause is varied and may be brought about by injury such as blows, cuts, stretching, or pressure. Exposure to cold is a frequent cause. Bacterial poisons in the blood give rise to it, as with infected teeth, tonsils, adenoids, appendix, gall bladder, etc. It frequently follows an attack of malaria, smallpox, typhoid, diphtheria, rheumatism, tuberculosis, influenza or pneumonia. Poisons taken into the system such as alcohol, mercury, lead, arsenic, and opium are responsible for attacks.

In the Philippines, China and Japan where it has long been known an endemic and epidemic form known as beri-beri occurs. During the war this form of neuritis broke out in the British Army, Mesopotamia and in the Dardenelles when the soldiers were fed almost exclusively of wheat, canned meats and jam. The lack of vitamin B in this class of foods was found to be the cause. Anything that will produce nutritional changes in a nerve will be manifested in some by skin eruptions such as herpes zoster (shingles) is common. Constipation must not be overlooked as a cause. It is known as simple neuritis where a single nerve and its branches are involved but if there is an involvement of more than one nerve it is known as multiple neuritis especially if the peripheral nerve branches of a considerable area are involved. One peculiarity about neuritis is that it is more frequently worse at night and is aggravated by motion and damp weather.

The severity of the pain is very pronounced and may occur on any part of the surface of the body but attacks the legs, arms, shoulders, neck, face or waistline. Sleep may be impossible on account of the severe pain. In all cases a physician and dentist should be consulted to find the cause. Delays in this respect are always dangerous as all physical defects and infections should be looked after. Personal hygiene and diet should be rigidly enforced. When due to handling irritating chemicals a change of occupation is necessary. As already indicated the proper food is very important which should be anti-toxic and laxative. When I take up the subject of dietetics I will have something more to say concerning the importance of this kind of diet. Sunshine, plenty of fresh air, sufficient rest and sleep and regular eating hours are very important. Neuritis is the "stop, look, and listen" sign like that we so frequently see at the (Continued on page 211)

Earthlings

THE APRIL SUN was warming the Layman estate with its golden fingers when Larry awoke on Saturday morning to her strange surroundings. Though she had been in bed only four hours, she felt not in the least fatigued or sleepy.

The bedroom which had been assigned to her and Diane Bentley for the week-end was a beautiful place decorated in green and gold. The suite of furniture including the twin beds was of maple. Green and golden drapes set off the numerous casement windows. On the shining floor were small rugs the color of grass. Perhaps it was those rugs which reminded Larry that now was her opportunity to find out something about the Ozarks in spring.

The house was very quiet. No doubt everyone would be sleeping until late. But she wanted to see the newness of the world bathed in sunshine.

Swiftly the girl slipped from under the coverlet and began to dress. For her seance with nature she chose to wear a yellow linen frock with white collar and cuffs, her white flannel jacket and a white sports hat—all of them leftovers from last summer but newly cleaned. On her feet she wore the recently acquired tan golf shoes—she had purchased them for walking, not with the hope of playing golf.

As she let herself out of the room, she wondered what Diane would think on waking to find the bed beside her unoccupied.

How dewy the world was! Dart had shown her the garden last night by starlight, but she had no idea then that it was the riot of color which now greeted her. There were rows and rows of tulips, red and yellow and some almost purple. At one side a great bank of iris was in purple and white bloom. And there were jonquils, too. She did not recognize the shrubs, and wondered if some of them were native to the Ozark region. One bearing fragrant pink blossoms was especially attractive.

But she did not linger long in the garden. The lure of the lake, glimpses of which she caught through the garden hedge, drew her down the rock path to the pier. How beautiful were the new-green hills as they shouldered away the cool spring breezes, and caught the sunlight in their tree tops! How heavenly blue the sky—and the lake was blue, too, but a deeper more mysterious blue. A wild flower encroached upon the path, lovely, fragile, waking thing. She wished that she knew what it was, but she did not.

Down on the pier she stood watching the waves, stood until she was tired, and then sat down on an upturned canoe. How wonderful if the entire week-end might be like this, restful, refreshing! Well, anyway she would enjoy these few eled much—and this, being down here, is a special treat."

"You are Larry Verne, aren't you?" The older woman was scrutinizing her intently. "Ah, yes, I remember you last night; you came with Dart Moody, and were the only one in the crowd that stayed wholly yourself throughout the night's romp."

Larry was surprised at the tone in which this summary of the night's party was given. Confused, she was about to stammer a response when her visitor went on: "I'm glad you like this, for I do, too. It's one of the most beautiful spots in the United States. I know nothing prettier this side of France. It may not be as wild as the Canadian Rockies nor as picturesque as places I've visited in the East, but for sheer natural beauty, this lake is a place I enjoy."

"Do you spend much time down here in the summertime?" Larry put the question with a little hesitation.

"Not much," was it sadness or discontent that made Mrs. Keithley's mouth droop?—"Not much. You see the Laymans are a migratory family, that is the older members of the tribe are. In summer we go North or West—in winter we go South or East. And then when we grow too utterly dissatisfied with the usual places of our home country, we go abroad."

"But I don't see how you could grow discontented with this, and your chances to travel—" protested Larry and then stopped very much embarrassed. She had no right to remonstrate with this woman of wealth and experience.

"Oh, but we do," there was no resentment in the reply. "This place here, Lakeside Cottage they call it, is mostly for Pinky and his friends."

"Well, I'm happy to have the opportunity to see it," gurgled Larry, her eyes sparkling.

"You work, don't you?"

"Yes, I am a stenographer."

"Do you know you appealed to me last night," frankly. "I like the way you conduct yourself, like a lady—I'm always surprised to find a lady among Pinky's friends. I do hope, my dear, that you enjoy a pleasant week-end though I can't say that I think your chances of enjoyment are great—you see I've seen Pinky's crowd in action before. But if there's any way I can help you—" she did not think it necessary to finish her sentence.

MRS. KEITHLEY'S attitude toward Pinky and his playmates sent Larry into a tiny panic. Surely the woman was embittered for some reason, the girl thought. Perhaps she was one given to a chronic dislike and disfavor

How It Began—

Larry Verne has refused to marry Greg Spurgeon in spite of the fact that she loves him, for she fears he will be called to the priesthood, and her early childhood experience makes her revolt against such a thing.

Larry's life becomes enmeshed with the lives of others in the home of Eldred Hampton, who mothers a group of people, young and old, who have no homes of their own.

Tempted to attend a costume ball with Greg, Larry yields, and is horrified by the theft of a valuable heirloom, a bracelet belonging to Eldred Hampton. In a period of repentance, she devotes herself more earnestly to the work of the church.

Trying for a time to associate with Greg on a purely friendly basis, and trying to curb the development of his ardent affection, Larry finds herself failing. Love is too strong for her, and she feels herself being swept off her feet, against her will. It seems that she must either yield, or break with Greg and not see him for a time. She breaks with him, but is very unhappy over it. Greg makes no attempt to see her, much to her disappointment.

Tempted once more, during her estrangement with Greg, this time by Dart Moody, she consents against her better judgment to go on a week-end party to a summer home in the Ozark Mountains. The place belongs to a wealthy independence family. She has scarcely started on the trip before she realizes it was a mistake to go. She is apprehensive, and yet she realizes that there may be something to learn.

minutes alone. At her feet the water lapped against the supports of the pier with a soft, gushing sound, infinitely peaceful. Overhead a bird dipped gracefully down toward the lake and then veered away to the hills. What was it? That also was one of the many things she did not know.

FOOTSTEPS behind her brought her back to the present. She started up and turned to face her visitor, little realizing the rapt expression on her own young face. It was Mrs. Keithley, Pinky's aunt. Larry had met her last night. She, too, was dressed for the early morning. She looked a little startled to find the girl there on the pier.

"Good morning, my dear. I didn't expect any of Pinky's guests to be out so early. So you enjoy the lake, too?"

"Isn't it glorious?" Larry made a gesture which included the whole panorama before them. "I've never seen anything so beautiful! You see I've never travof young people, still she didn't look like that sort of a person.

"Do you suppose," Larry hoped to turn the conversation into more cheerful channels, "there are any here who will be interested in walking?"

"I don't suppose so unless it's Dart or Dave. They're pretty much given to sports; but once they get down to the water they're practically hopeless for land exercise. Diane loves tennis but hates to swim. I don't suppose any of the girls will swim much this week-end—the water's too cold yet. Most of these girls, my dear, are too frazzled out by their strenuous social life to enjoy such simple sports as Lakeside Cottage offers. I suppose they'll prefer to lounge and smoke and wear themselves out at bridge. I've heard there's a professional dancer in the group—so maybe they'll be more lively than usual."

And then the two women fell to talking of Lakeside Cottage's possibilities as a girls' camp. Larry discovered that it was a dream of Mrs. Keithley's to persuade her sister to let out the place during the summer months when the Layman family was not in Missouri, to some church or society which would conduct it as a camp for working girls.

After a time shouts from the house told them that someone else was up. It was then that Mrs. Keithley suggested they hunt up a bite of breakfast. As they clambered up the sloping path to the garden, Mrs. Keithley's mind reverted to Pinky and his crowd: "So fed up with good times and running about, they must turn to the bold and the wicked for entertainment. There's something about a drunken young person, Larry, experienced woman that I am, that is more than revolting—I can't define my sensation. I didn't want to come down here this week, but Doris simply wouldn't hear of my staying at home. She's leaving soon for California, and it may be some time before we meet again, for you can't ever tell where I'll decide to go next, and Doris knows that—"

They were opposite the tennis court now, and two white-clad players hailed them. They were Dave and Rowe.

"What! up so bright and early!" cried Rowe appraising Larry with ardent eyes.

"Oh, yes," Mrs. Keithley's reply was easy and faintly contemptuous. "I found her down on the pier absorbing scenery half an hour ago."

"A girl after my own heart!" chortled Dave.

THE DAY was long with boating, horseback riding—Lillian preferring a canoe to a horse, loaned Larry her riding habit, and the hour which followed was one of the most enjoyable for the girl during her stay at Lakeside cottage. She and Dart cantered off down the sandy valley road, and the girl's eyes were filled with the beauties of the mountains. She was particularly enthralled when they crossed a small but sturdy rustic bridge over a very narrow mountain stream not more than five rods below a spot where the limpid water tumbled down over a series of brown boulders.

"How beautiful!" she exclaimed reining in her mount. "Oh, Dart, that alone is worth coming from Independence for!"

"Like it, Larry?" he spoke rather absently. He probably was thinking of Bernice, ruminated Larry, maybe the pair of them had been down to this little waterfall together. Oh, well—!

Half the party played tennis that afternoon in a desultory fashion, and there were other forms of entertainment interspersed with cocktails and inordinate laughing and joking.

At five o'clock the crowd agreed to take a two-hour turn over the lake in the two Layman motorboats. Larry pleaded a headache and remained behind—she was quite weary and already was aching and a little stiff from the morning's horseback ride. She preferred to rest and be alone for a time. Until then she had not had a moment alone since Mrs. Keithley found her on the pier.

She had just curled up in the corner of a wicker lounge in the sun parlor, a magazine in her hand, when a familiar voice seemed to tumble down over her shoulder: "Say, I've been trying to see you all day, but Dart is the one constant swain—how'd you ever get away from him?" It was Rowe McCarley.

"I thought you'd gone with the others!" she was startled. "I had a headache, and so I stayed behind to rest."

"You didn't think I'd let you stay behind alone, did you?" reproachfully.

"I didn't think anything about you, Rowe, when I decided to stay," she replied simply.

"Not much of the coquette in you, is there?" playfully.

"No, I suppose not," she fingered her magazine.

"Larry—do you know, I've wondered for a long time why you dislike me so," he seated himself on an ottoman in front of her. "You've avoided me—well, always. Won't you tell me why?" appealingly.

She was momentarily confused—he was so frank and so nice about it, and it was hard to put into words exactly why she did not like him. She flushed. "I'm sorry," she began, "if I've been rude to give you that impression—"

"Oh, no, not rude—just detached, totally disinterested, you understand—I'm not used to having girls act like—"

"That's just the reason," she was thinking of Nancy now, and her loyal soul flamed with anger. "I wouldn't want to act toward you—with you as other girls do. Frankly, Rowe, I just don't like your kind of a man. Oh," and she arose, the magazine still in her hand—she would go to her room where she could read undisturbed—"I don't think there's any need for us to discuss it. If you'll excuse me—"

"No, no, please don't go, Larry." He was standing, too. "I didn't mean to disturb you—I just thought perhaps out of the bigness of your heart you'd enlighten me as to what I may have done to hurt—"

"Nothing, nothing," hastily.

"Well, then?"

"Please, I'd rather not discuss it with you," firmly.

"But why not, Larry?" softly.

"All right then," she returned with the desperation of one goaded to an unpleasant task, "I just don't have any use for you, Rowe, and the reason I don't have is too dear to me for me to mention her name to you!"

"Oh, you—mean—Nancy," he was more cautious now. "Why, Larry, but that's absurd! Aren't you being rather narrow? You know all Graceland people have an understanding about"—did he hesitate before he added the next words—"about engagements. Both members of a couple, and especially so when only one is going to school, go out with other people. It's considered perfectly all—"

"If you'll pardon me," Larry began.

"Please don't be like that, Larry," he was speaking swiftly now. "I want to talk to you. You and I could be great little pals if only you would—don't you know it?" and he squeezed her hand.

When Larry only stared at him remotely, coldly, he rushed on: "There's something I could help you about, really there is, Larry, if you would only let me."

But the girl was recalling Lillian's words: "Every pretty girl in town knows Rowe McCarley." And, "Rowe's just fickle—he's developed the habit of going from one love to another." These coupled with other things she heard and her own ill impressions—well, surely, they all couldn't be wrong. She didn't like Rowe—she didn't want to have anything to do with him.

When she spoke, her tone was chilly—"I can't think of a thing in the world, Rowe, that I would care to have you help me about. I'm just not interested."

He flushed and pondered. It was plain that he was not accustomed to girls so utterly unmoved by his own personal charms. "There aren't many girls, Larry," he finally said, "whom I would insist on helping after that neat little speech of yours which means in substance, you tend to your own business and I'll attend to mine. But in this case I feel that I must—it's a sort of a debt I owe to you. It'll take some little time to explain it. All I ask now is that you'll think about letting me help. You mustn't say no, for a great deal depends on it."

Could he be speaking of Nancy? wondered the girl. Maybe she could help out in Nancy's cause. Would it then pay her to refuse Rowe's plea? And anyway, wasn't her principal business here to

Securing Church Funds for Local Use

By C. A. Skinner

Bishop of Kansas City Stake

The question of obtaining means with which to meet the expenses of the local church always has been, and probably always will be, a problem. Too few seem to sense their responsibility in this regard, consequently comparatively few carry the load.

The financial law specifies the amount and the manner in which the funds—tithes and offerings—should be given for the general church. We know of no law regulating the offering for the maintenance of the local church plant, but it has always been the theory that it should be supplied from the nine tenths.

It is generally conceded that everyone in a community benefits from the church, not only spiritually, but morally, socially and financially. Therefore, everyone is obligated to lend his support to the church.

EVERY MEMBER A CONTRIBUTOR

Consistent paying by the majority of the congregation even though the contributions are small, will ordinarily meet the local expenses. Our task, therefore, is to see to it that each member has an opportunity to share the expense and that he senses his duty in this regard.

THE CONTRIBUTION BOX

Located at the rear of many churches, near the exit, may be seen the contribution box upon which is some kind of invitation to make an offering. Lacking a personal touch it fails as a collector, and in late years many of our congregations have followed the example of other churches and have introduced the

OFFERING PLATE

This system proved to be superior to the contribution box for several reasons.

1. It brings the matter of offering to the attention of each and every one present.
2. It affords opportunity by visitors and those who come only occasionally who really desire to make an offering. Such ones should not be denied the right.
3. It is an ideal system for collecting the envelopes together with the silver offering when the plate is passed.
4. This system prevents congestion about the branch solicitor after the service and secures contributions from many who otherwise would hurry away without leaving their offering.

5. Passing the offering plate may be a very beautiful and dignified part of the worship. An offertory from the organ or choir may accompany the passing of the offering plate, after which the contributions may be taken to the altar while a prayer of thanksgiving is offered.

While this system is effective it is not perfect as it fails to reach those who do not attend regularly, and too many content themselves with a five or ten cent offering when possibly their gift should be several times that amount.

The most successful plan seems to be a personal canvass system, by which each and every member may be made acquainted with the needs of the church, and given an opportunity to assist. With this plan may be used a system that has been in operation in many of our congregations for several years, and which has proved to be very successful. We refer to the

DUPLEX ENVELOPES

Below are listed some of its advantages:

1. It satisfies a need for systematic giving.
2. It provides for offerings to both the general and local funds, and makes it easy to keep these funds separated.
3. It materially increases the number of contributors to both the local and general funds.
4. It increases the amount of contributions.
5. It is a simple, yet accurate way of keeping account.
6. It gives credit to whom credit is due, and to the purpose for which it is intended, thus differing from the loose collection system.
7. It enables the family to budget their offerings.
8. It supplies an envelope for each week of the year with date printed on each envelope, which reminds the member of the days he has been absent from church services and suggests to him the paying of the delinquent contributions. It is not uncommon, where "Duplex" is used, to receive by mail envelopes covering three, four or even more weeks when the member has been absent.

Further information regarding the above plans may be secured at the office of the Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Abraham Lincoln

By Edith M. Hower

WHEN Abraham Lincoln was once asked to tell the story of his life he replied, "It is contained in one line of Gray's Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard: 'The short and simple annals of the poor.'"

This reply of Lincoln's was true when he said it, but it could hardly be applied to him when, in after life by his splendid achievements, he became enshrined in the hearts of the American people and had attained to the highest position his country had to offer.

Lincoln was a dreamer, but there are dreamers and dreamers; some dream and then arise to lament because they cannot have, without effort, the things for which they long, and grieve and grow sour when the praise and glory which they so much desire is withheld from them. They have listlessly dreamed, and then their dream has died without bringing forth any praiseworthy result, for they have been too indisposed to put forth the effort required to make their dream a living reality.

Abraham Lincoln was a dreamer of a different sort, for when he had dreamed he arose, and marshaling his mental and spiritual and physical forces, he worked and toiled and sweat until his dream sprang into life and became a holy influence in the world. In every country the name of Lincoln is loved and revered, and in many countries of the Old World fine statues of him have been placed in public squares as a means of expressing their esteem for our beloved Lincoln.

He counted no effort too great nor labor too fatiguing when he was in quest of the accomplishment of a great and cherished object. He had the courage to endure the scoffs and jeers of his enemies; the heart still to love and labor for the good of those who believed not in him. He dared stern opposition and faced almost unsurmountable obstacles with a rugged determination born of his convictions that his ideals were founded in righteousness. He dreamed and then he quietly and patiently went about the accomplishment of his great purpose. We believe, with Elbert Hubbard, that the big man at last is the man who takes an idea and makes of it a genuine success—the man who brings the ship into port.

LINCOLN was a born humorist. This rare gift was, undoubtedly, responsible for his ability to mount above the obstacles which continually confronted him, and made it possible for him to bring to the stern battle of life, which was his to fight, a disposition to pass lightly and jocularly over many an incident that would have so burdened, with care and anxiety, a less noble spirit, as to cause it to become entirely incapacitated.

Lincoln's inherent love of story-telling was a source of amusement to himself and entertainment to his friends, and his famous stories were told and laughed at throughout the country.

He was born in the wilderness of Hardin County, Kentucky. His childhood was spent in the great outdoors, and here, even in childhood he learned to commune with the spirit of nature, which gave a calm peace to his mind and a serene poise to his soul.

Education was a rare and costly luxury in the frontier region where the Lincolns lived, but the boy was not entirely unschooled; he attended school a few months and learned arithmetic and also mastered the art of reading and writing. His good, Christian mother taught him to fear and love his God, and he attributed his success in later life to her fine example and pure teaching.

When the boy was eight years old the Lincoln family moved to Spencer County, Indiana. This region was wilder and still less civilized than the one they had left. It was here, where schoolhouses were scarce, that Lincoln received his meager schooling, but at all times he was continually educating himself, for he had an insatiable craving for knowledge. He read all of the books obtainable, and the experiences of life came to him as mighty lessons. His favorite books were the Bible and Æsop's fables, and with those books he formed a very intimate acquaintance. The loss of his mother was a great grief to him, but her influence seemed to remain with him and he never forgot her teaching. It is good to know that Abraham Lincoln never drank intoxicating liquors nor used tobacco, but he was a great lover of outdoor sports that required strength and skill.

The first law book that Abraham ever read was one on the statutes of Indiana, and it was from the study of this book that he started to realize his ambition to be a lawyer. He continued to study law and politics, gave speeches and wrote compositions, and looked forward to the time when he would fill a responsible place in the government of the country; but the first federal office he ever held was that of postmas-

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt . . . . .

Arranged from his diaries by his daughter, Mrs. Ruby C. Faunce

Routine of Missionary Life

Jan. 1, 1868—Having been out serenading with the choir, returned to my home at Brother Bellamy's and after bathing, prayed and gave myself over to the Lord. At 6 this a. m. met with the Saints in prayer meeting and commenced the year in the service of my God. In the evening I attended the New Year's festival at the hall. I played the organ, purchased today for the church.

Sunday, Jan. 5—Spent morning at home—afternoon fellowship meeting—read them Bro. Joseph's vision. Evening preached on chap. 5 of 1 Timothy. Played organ at church.

Tues., Jan. 14—The New Translation of the Scriptures arrived today and I took the volumes 250 in number into my room for Bro. Bellamy the agent. Spent most of my mornings working on church forms.

Sunday, Feb. 23—Rode to Gartside—attended S. School and in evening preached from Matt. 24-14.

Sat., Mar. 14—Peter Burgess was taken violently ill, white as death—Bro. Robt. Elvin and Bro. Ritche and myself administered to him, and he was healed instantly, even the color returning.

Aug. 30, 1868—Sandwich. Went to Bro. Rogers, was told Bro. Henderson had engaged Union Hall for a course of lectures—consulting with the committee, wrote out forms for poster and arranged for seventeen lectures.

Sept. 10—Went to Plano—made preparations and returned to Sandwich where I delivered first of lectures. The 11th—spent day in study—visited some—at night delivered 2nd lecture on "Faith, Repentance, their nature, object and effect." The 12th—at night delivered 3rd lecture on "Water Baptism" divinely appointed.

Sunday the 13—Delivered three lectures of the course—10.30 a. m. "In What Manner, to Whom, by Whom, Baptism Should be Administered." 2.30—"The Holy Spirit; How Obtained!" 7.30—"The Power and Ministrations of the Spirit." Gave lectures each night from Monday, September 14 to September 22—when the subject of the closing lecture was "The Glories of the Redeemed."

Sept. 23—Went by request and preached the funeral sermon of Sister Pease.

Sept. 24—Spent day at Father Griffith's, studied and wrote a little. Was much entertained with recital of little deeds and words by my beloved children, heard by Sister Griffith prior to her leaving Utah.

Mon., Sept. 28—Spent day at my desk—felt very happy in contemplating the progress of church, which the Lord seems to be especially blessing with an increase.

Oct. 1—Went to Amboy where I was told to enquire for Jacob Doane at Keef-er's Meat Market. Found it closed. Started for Bro. Stone's house, got wrong direction, I had walked about a half a mile, was tired so cut a stick to carry my satchel (which was very heavy), hurt both hands, left shoulder got tired, went to change and tore my coat. Reached the house, found no one there. Waited awhile, then walked to Bro. Cadwells—he was not home—rode with a nephew to where he worked—felt almost wornout. When he was through work returned with him to his home, where I was well treated.

Friday, Oct. 2—Walked down to Sister Stone's, the house where the prayer meeting was held in which Brother Joseph and his mother were received in 1860. Had a pleasant ride to Dixon—went directly to Bro. Alvah Smith's formerly one of Wm. Smiths twelve—where I met with Bro. Joseph and Bro. Hendrickson, waiting for the train westward bound. Bro. Joseph being on his way to Semi-annual Conference.

Oct. 3—Addressed an audience in the courthouse on "The Difference Between the Reorganization and the Brighamite Fraternity."

Oct. 8—Went to Dixon and found a "Grand Democratic Mass Meeting," some fairly good speakers.

Oct. 9—Went with Bro. Smith to look at Lutheran church, which cost them over $4,000, and offer to us for $1,200—lot worth $500.

Oct. 11—Again preached at Rocky Ford in the morning then rode to Amboy where in afternoon preached on "The Body of Christ"—in evening on "The False Prophets." Excellent audiences and fine liberty both times.

Ordained a High Priest

Oct. 15—Brother Joseph arrived in Amboy at 11 a. m., but did not get off the train. He informed me that conference had voted me to be ordained a High Priest and the Southern States to be my mission and I appointed to preside. He to decide the boundaries.

Nov. 5—Visited Bro. Marks. Bro. Walker ordained an Elder, by Bro. Joseph, Bro. Sheen and myself. He then left for Sandwich. Bro. Marks came down and I was ordained an High Priest by Bro. Joseph, Bro. Sheen. Bro. Joseph said "I should be blessed with power to fill the calling to which I was now ordained."

Nov. 12—Spent day at office packing books ready to leave after the dedication. Brother Joseph busy painting the new church. What an energetic, working man; he is—.

Sunday, Nov. 15—Attend meeting in the new church—the Plano church looks commodious, neat and in good taste. Conducted the singing with the organ. Singers did well. Joseph preached—collected something over $800. At 2.30, Bro. Joseph preached the dedicatory sermon and I offered the prayer. A beautiful sermon. In the evening I occupied.

Nov. 16—Spent the day in writing and making out a form for a course of lectures, the council last night having determined to have me take part. After making them I took them to Joseph to fill out names. Joseph takes 2—Brother Sheen 4—leaving me eleven.

Nov. 18—The posters are well gotten up—spent day in writing—to Sandwich in evening.

Nov. 19—Sister Banta gave me a pair knit socks—this is two pairs of her own knitting—God bless her. Sister Falconer told me she would be married before I came back—Brother Walker, I believe. They are worthy of each other.

From Sunday, November the twenty-second to December the fourth, lectures were given, the last of these delivered was on "The Glories of the Redeemed."—R. C. F.

His Family Joins Him

Monday, Nov. 30—Today I received the wonderful news from Sister Warburton telling me that my family was soon leaving for the States.

December 8—Sister Trout died at 10 p. m. Thermometer 18 below zero. Commenced packing my things. Sister Pomeroy gave me hats for my two little daughters. I preached the funeral sermon of Sister Trout the 20th. I then started for Saint Louis, and the desire to see my family once again.

December 13—Attended conference in Saint Louis in the morning at 10.30—was glad to meet with many of the Saints, who welcomed me kindly. Occupied the stand with Brother Hazeldine and preached. Afternoon meeting, fellowship. In the evening preached from 1 John 3:11. When I went home to Brother Bellamy's I was met by Lydia Cox, who told me she had something upstairs to show me, I followed and found my family, whom I had not seen for over two years. I shall not attempt to describe my feelings—impossible to do so.

Dec. 15-21—We spent the day with Sister Burgess—Wednesday spent the day with my family—at night over to Dry Hill where I preached on "Love—God—Liberty." Saturday we rented a house at 1305 Chambers Street $13 a month. Sunday—to Compton Hill, back to St. Louis where I preached by request on "The Resurrection." Monday—bought furniture at Auction Sale—$67. The rest of the week was spent in getting settled and acquainted with my children especially Lulu who had forgotten me.

Dec. 27—Sunday—Having my wife's consent, although my daughters were older than it is usually done, I had them blessed. My eldest was named as always Elizabeth Amy, but when I laid my hands on the younger, I was led to say, "Thy name is no longer Lulu Sarah, but Ruby Celeste." My wife was rather indignant till I told her I had no intention to change till led by the Spirit. The year closed with my family and myself reunited.

1870—Times very hard and I find it difficult to get enough for the family. Brother Thomas made me a present of a ton of coal and Brother Cook brought it and assisted in getting it in—God bless them. In March we took a store on Broadway. Sister Burgess let us have some things to sell and we obtained others—My wife attends to the store while I continue in the ministry. Attended conference April 6—a good time. I resigned Presidency of Southern Missouri district. Engaged to go to Plano to assist at office. In July gave up store and shortly afterwards started by steamer for Keokuk. Visited Brother Anderson at Montrose. When we arrived in Burlington had to borrow money from Brother Morton to carry us on. When we arrived at Plano about 3 a. m. went to Joseph who let us in—looked all over town but found no house—Joseph offered us his two west rooms.

Watching "Brother Joseph"

I wish to digress from my father's story to tell a bit about my mother—when father told her he had accepted Joseph's offer, she said, "Well, I'll not go there." He said, "Well, dear, it is the only thing that offers." Studying a moment, she said, "Well, I will take it, but I'll watch him, every move and I'll go tell the world just what kind of a man he is." A couple of months later, Uncle Joseph (as we called him) met her in the hall and said, looking quizzically at her, "Well, Sister Forscutt, have you found out anything as yet?" "What do you mean?" "Do you think I have not known you have been watching me like a cat watches a mouse? have you found anything?" "Indeed I have, I have found you the best man I have ever seen, and you have done more to restore my faith than you will ever know."

Father later rented a house for $7.00.

During this time he started the Hope, and wrote for it. Often when no material came in, he wrote the entire paper under different names. This was the first Sunday school paper published by the Reorganized church. He spent the balance of the year in the office and preaching near Plano.—R. C. F.

Sat., Jan. 1, 1871—I pray God to help me keep my resolutions.

Jan. 12—Received telegram for either Joseph or myself to go at once to New Lennox where we would be met. Left at 1.20 for New Lennox, Brother Dancer met me and took me to twelve mile grove—found Brother Harvey, Sister Dancer's father, very low. Asked me to administer, called on all to kneel, prayed then administered. Home to Brother Dancer's. The next day—Brother Harvey is much better he had a comfortable rest.

Feb. 9—Son born at 5 a. m. Mother and child doing well.

April 12—Bishop I. L. Rogers donated the indebtedness of the church to himself $4,097.26 as tithing. An excellent spirit. Bro. J. W. Blair accepted. Presented completed memorial—accepted with an addition as an amendment by Bro. W. W. Blair.

April 25—At night assisted brethren to plant shade trees around church.

May 9—Started early for Plano—Received $8.00 in Rocky Ford over my expenses—a new phase in my experiences.

June 19—(Having gone to St. Louis.) Preached three times and dedicated the new meeting house. Nice neat place 25 by 30. Took collection of $67.00 to apply on the edifice.

Tuesday, June 21—Left St. Louis by boat at 4 p. m. Reached Hannibal at noon Wednesday, could not find Bro. Taylor, crossed the river took the work train for Pittsfield. Brother Williamson, Mills and a number others waiting for me. Had a delightful time. Thursday I spent a very pleasant day with the Saints. Bro. Williamson baptized me into the church 19 years ago and it was a treat to meet him and his. Preached in the Christian church—Rev. Rose, Congregationalist was present, much pleased and asked me to fill his pulpit today, but I could not.

July 11—Drove home by way of Father Gurley's, his daughter Louisa, 37, lies dead in the house—a beautiful countenance. Tuesday, Bro. Joseph and a number of Saints went to Bro. Gurley's where he preached the funeral sermon.

July 16—News arrived today of France having declared war against Russia.

July 31—Preached in the morning at Sister Howard's—Drove to Batavia where in Bro. Alvah Smith's yard was a meeting house made of poles and calico. A large audience and extraordinary liberty.

During this year father spent much time laboring in the office and work upon the hymn book.—R. C. F.

The Purchase of a Home

Sept. 7—Was anxious about purchase of Brother McMahan's house. Prayed that if it was God's will that I obtain it, the money for the first payment might be offered unsolicited. As I started home Bro. Dancer came to me and said he understood I wanted to buy a home, and if I wanted $100 toward the first payment I could have it. I thanked him and accepted. Praise God for such an answer to my prayers.

Aug. 18—Alex. H. Smith and family moved to Nauvoo. At night I attended prayer meeting and earnestly requested Saints to pray that I might have a testimony to the truth of the Book of Mormon.

Preaching

Sept. 10—Rode with Bro. Wilsey to Newkirk—preached in Bro. Manchester's barn—very nicely fitted up. Sunday preached three times in the barn—the audience large each meeting. Monday baptized and confirmed Miss Sarah May Wood.

Oct. 2—Sunday—Preached in Methodist church in DeKalb, in the morning. In the Baptist church at 2.30. Elder King, first minister of the church gave me John 3:5 to preach from on my next visit and use of the church. Again at night in the old Methodist church.

Oct. 17—Went to orchard to pick up apples. Brother Manchester drove me home—gave me some butter—$5 and 4 sacks of apples, promised me a young cow in the spring—God bless him forever.

Sunday—Went to Baptist church and heard Elder Dickinson preach against Mormonism, he refused permission, without being asked, for a reply, or an announcement. Outside the church I made the announcement. In the afternoon and evening I replied to his sermon. Room could not hold the people.

Thanksgiving Day—Went to Blackberry to preach funeral sermon of Sister Franklin—family badly broken and hard to comfort. Started home early Friday—Sister Howard gave me, for wife, a pot of butter. Arrived home to learn that Sister Lucinda Horton died yesterday. Agreed to preach her funeral sermon. Played organ and preached funeral sermon of Sister Horton Saturday.

Sunday—Preached at Methodist church in DeKalb at 10.30—at Baptist 2.30. Baptized three in afternoon and then preached at Methodist church at 7.30.

Nov. 30—Attended Rising Star Singing School. Officers elected.

Sunday, Dec. 4—Led choir. T. W. Smith preached good sermon—Sunday school in afternoon, baptized six among whom was my daughter Lizzie, and Carrie Smith, daughter of Joseph. Preached at night, Joseph and I confirmed children.

Sunday, Dec. 11—Preached three time in the M. E. church—felt well—called for candidates and in afternoon baptized three. Wednesday, wrote tune "Consolation."

Dec. 24—Wrought in office a few hours—spent the rest of the day in practicing children for the festival. Received on Christmas tree a new overcoat from the Sunday school. The children did very well with their program.

Our Eleventh Christmas in Norway

By V. D. Ruch
Missionary to Norway

DURING the last twelve years my family and I have celebrated the birth of Christ eleven times in Norway. Every Christmas since 1922 with the exception of 1927 has been spent away from our homeland and loved ones. We came to the Scandinavian mission for the first time in the fall of 1922 and remained nearly five years, or until the summer of 1927, when we returned to America. After spending about seventeen months at home we turned our faces once more toward this foreign field, arriving here shortly before Christmas in 1928. Velma, who'll be thirteen years old on February 28, has celebrated Christmas just twice in America, namely: in the first and seventh years of her life.

However, Christmas in Norway is a very enjoyable season. With the exception of being deprived of the association of loved ones and friends it is no sacrifice to be here at that time of the year.

The Christmas season lasts twenty days, beginning on Christmas Eve and closing on January 13. Much preparation is made during December for this joyful time, such as cleaning house, baking cakes of all kinds, cooking down meat, making candy, etc. Considerable visiting and entertaining is done during those twenty days. Each home has its own little tree prettily decorated, and the children, especially, as well as adults, get much joy out of marching around the tree holding hands and singing the many beautiful Christmas songs.

As Christmas Eve came on Sunday this time we held a service at our hall in Oslo at four o'clock. Most of the churches canceled their meeting for that evening because it is a custom in this country that everyone should be at home on Christmas Eve. The street cars, busses, etc., all stop about five o'clock and do not run any more until the next morning, giving even the workmen there the privilege of being at home that evening. But we desired to have a little meeting anyway and were rewarded by the presence of the Spirit. We had prepared a beautiful little worship service emphasizing the birth of Jesus and his mission on earth. We could feel the presence of Jesus among us.

After the service we took two families of Saints home with us where we enjoyed Christmas Eve together. The families included five children, and they brought all their gifts with them which were placed on the floor under our tree. Later in the evening it fell to my lot to dress up as Santa Claus and come in to distribute the gifts, but some of the smaller children were so frightened that I had to go again soon after I had come. The following week we did considerable visiting and entertaining and felt like we came nearer to each other as Saints.

On New Year's Eve we arranged a watch party at the hall. It began at eight o'clock and, of course, lasted until after midnight. Our program consisted of singing, music, readings, devotional exercises including several short talks, and refreshments. The last few minutes of the old year were spent in a short worship service. The period of silent prayer accompanied by quiet piano music in the semi-darkness of the candlelighted room just as the clock was striking twelve was very impressive. We reconsecrated ourselves in prayer to the service of God as the new year dawned.

The annual Old Folks' Banquet was held at the church at Bon on Saturday, January 6. We, as a family, received an urgent invitation to attend and assist with the program. We left Oslo on Thursday and went to Bon and remained until the following Monday. The banquet was a success in every way. It started at five o'clock and lasted until about eleven o'clock. It may be difficult for Americans to understand how such an affair could last so long, but it is surprising how rapidly the time passes. We opened with congregational singing, prayer, and an address of welcome by the branch president. We had special music both vocal and instrumental and then I made the main address of the evening. There were at least ninety people present. There were seats for about twenty-two at the table at a time, so we had to have four table sittings. While some of the people were eating the others enjoyed themselves by marching around the Christmas tree singing, or in pleasant conversation with friends. There was plenty of food and to spare. After the ninety were served there was much food left which was divided among the poor people present. The women's department sponsored the banquet. Later in the evening we had more congregational singing and a period of short testimonies. The elderly people of the entire community were the invited guests and they indeed enjoyed themselves. Even after being there for about six hours they were loathe to go and were very profuse in their thanks for such an enjoyable evening.

learn something about Nancy's fiance? Perhaps she had better think about all this.

"All right, I'll think about it, Rowe," she promised before she escaped to her room. Once there, she was no longer interested in the magazine which she still clutched in her hand. He had been very humble and nice. Was it just a pose? What should she do? Oh, if only Greg—! She blushed at the very thought of Greg. A dozen times already that day she had found herself thinking: "If Greg were only here, how he would enjoy the lake!" "If Greg were here, he and I would walk up into the woods and climb the summits of the mountains." "If Greg—" it was an old refrain in her consciousness.

Restlessly she walked back and forth across her room. What a wonderful view of the water from her window! She paused to admire it.

Dancing that night was difficult, for she was avoiding Rowe, and he seemed determined not to let her do so. Dart was gallantly helpful. Since their arrival at Lakeside Cottage, Dart had been her protecting shadow except for the motorboat ride. Twice she had to dance with Rowe, but he mentioned nothing about their conversation of the afternoon. Once Dart cut in on him, and another time the crowd demanded that Rowe come at once, to give a special dance with Dagmar Shelby. He complied.

Larry had no difficulty in making the acquaintance of the girls who spent the week-end at Lakeside. Perhaps they would not have welcomed her quite so genially had it not been that they were slightly antagonistic toward Dagmar Shelby. They watched everything she did with faintly contemptuous envy. She was a wonderful dancer, and they were jealous. She was beautiful, and they were also jealous of that. She spoke little and that made them wary. Covertly they followed her actions whether she was dancing, lounging, playing tennis, or at the bridge table.

Twice during the week-end Larry talked with Mrs. Keithley. She found Pinky's aunt friendly and entertaining though she continued to be extremely pessimistic about her nephew and his future. She wished aloud that Pinky would become interested in a girl like Larry. "But he never will," she concluded, "he isn't deep enough. He's looking for a pretty face and the whole-world-can-run-and-jump-into-a-cocked-hat attitude, and he'll probably marry some girl who'll take him for his money and then make him miserable. Oh, it may appear to be easy, Larry, but the fate of these rich children is usually very hard."

It was due to Dart's ingenuity and quick wit Sunday noon, that Larry did not find herself stumbling through the embarrassment of trying to play contract bridge when she knew nothing about it.

"Let's play bridge this afternoon," suggested Lillian at the table—and Lillian's suggestions generally amounted to commands; "let's don't do anything strenuous this afternoon." They were to start for Independence at six o'clock in the evening. "You've all acted like a bunch of broncho busters since we came down."

"I'd rather work puzzles than play bridge," Dart interposed.

"Would you like a bib, too, Dart?" Lillian smiled sarcastically.

"No, let's play bridge," from Diane. "We haven't had a good game—all of us—I mean—since we came. That would be a lovely way of spending the afternoon. Mrs. Layman, won't you and Mr. Layman and Mrs. Keithley and Mr. Hunt play with us?" Mr. Layman and his business friend, Mr. Hunt had only arrived early that morning.

"S-sh," whispered Dart to Larry, as they rose from the table, "there's one couple too many. They haven't counted noses yet. Slip out and meet me at the side door in five minutes. We'll go canoeing."

When she opened her lips to thank him, he shook his head, and a moment later sauntered away with the men for a smoke on the cottage veranda.

In less than five minutes they were hurrying down the path feeling as guilty and at the same time as happy as two children playing hockey from school.

"Honestly, Larry, have you enjoyed this week-end?" he demanded.

"You've been grand, Dart, and I do hope I haven't been so much trouble. Really, I admire you much more now than I did Friday. I think I'll have to recommend you to Bernice," lightly.

"You didn't answer my question," he reminded.

"It's been so different from the things I'm used to," she began—"I've learned a lot," was the somewhat irrelevant conclusion.

"But you haven't enjoyed it."

"Yes, I have in a way. I've enjoyed it to the extent that when I tell Mrs. Layman I had a good time tonight, I won't be fibbing entirely."

"I see."

"But truly, Dart, I've been thinking of Bernice." When he did not speak, she continued: "I think you two ought to make up."

"Dora Lou told me that Bernice is sorry for the way she acted," he was careful not to look at Larry at just that moment.

"I'm sure she must be, Dart. Why don't you forget—I know it's none of my business—but why don't you forget your—"

"You women are queer!" he accused. "I wish to high heaven I knew how to take you! It isn't natural, Larry, for one woman to plead another's cause. I don't know how to take you."

"You just don't understand the feminine mind," she smiled.

"Does any male understand it?"

"Oh, I don't know—"

Ruefully he ruffled his hair and gazed for a time out over the lake. Then he reached over and patted her hand. "Well, I'll say this for you, Larry, you're a mighty fine girl. You're all right. I never met one that I honestly liked better and had to leave alone so much. You must have been brought up in a Puritan household. Your name should be Prudence and you should braid your hair."

She smiled at his picture.

"I've felt pretty bad about urging you to come down here—when you didn't seem to want to come. It was selfish of me. And so I've tried to make it up by sticking around to help you out of anything that might embarrass—"

"You've been lovely, Dart, and I'm glad you did 'stick around.' But you will call Bernice when you get home, won't you?"

"Do you really want me to?"

"Of course I do, silly, and you know that your heart tells you to."

"All right then, shake. I'll do it—I've wanted to all along."

Before they started home, Rowe managed to draw Larry aside. "Well, how have the thought processes turned out? Going to let me help?"

And Larry thinking he wished to talk to her about Nancy and with a tiny hope that he might mention Greg told him that he might call her at Mrs. Hampton's.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

ter in the town of New Salem. The office was located in a store, but Lincoln used to take the mail in his hat and distribute it to the people as he met them.

Lincoln had many and varied experiences during his youth and young manhood. When the Blackhawk war broke out he enlisted and was made captain; this gave him great pleasure. One time when making a speech in Congress and referring to his experiences in this war he said, "I fought, bled and came away."

Lincoln continued the study of law and politics and in due time was elected to his seat in the legislature, then was admitted to the bar. From then he was continually engaged in the public affairs of his country until he was called to occupy in the office of president.

His opposition to slavery made enemies for Lincoln, but it also won him friends, and because he was right he prevailed. Impressions sank deep into his heart and mind and he was not easily turned from his purpose.

All through the years of his busy, useful life Lincoln was the kind, patient, congenial friend to all and an enemy only to that which he understood to be wrong. The late Calvin Coolidge once said of him, "He was great because he was gentle, and no man can be great without gentleness."

We think of Lincoln as being dead, as lying in a grave commemorated by a marvelous monument before which the beauty-loving world kneels in silent adoration. But is Lincoln really dead? Can anything that approaches so nearly the Divine ever die?

Every year when the twelfth of February arrives we pause to pay a loving tribute to the man whose heart was so great, so gentle and so sympathetic that, like the Christ before him, he included in that great heart, all of suffering humanity.

His life was spent in doing good, but always his splendid, intelligent head was bowed for the wrongs he could not right, and for the far-visioned, dark shadow that he saw would hover over our beloved country and destroy our republic.

Just before his assassination Lincoln said, "I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country . . . Corporations have been enthroned, an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money-power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until the wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed."

Lincoln's inspired mind looked down through the vista of the years and saw the terrifying condition when an oligarchy should rule this country. When by its mighty power it would destroy our Republic and mental and spiritual chaos should become world-wide.

Throughout his career as statesman, lawyer and finally as president of the United States, Lincoln's courage never faltered. To the last he was the wise administrator of his country's affairs. I believe it was with Lincoln as it was with Jesus Christ, the urge in him which prompted action was not born of human enthusiasm, but rather of divine inspiration.

OUR ELEVENTH CHRISTMAS IN NORWAY

day, January 14, we held a Christmas tree "fest" at our hall in Oslo. It was really 'one day too late, but because of our being at Bøn the Sunday before, the fest at Oslo was postponed a week. This social affair began at five o'clock and closed a little after nine o'clock. About seventy people were present and all seemed to enjoy themselves. Here again our program consisted of congregational singing, solo numbers, readings, talks, marching around the Christmas tree and refreshments. The four hours were gone before we realized it. These affairs are a combination of the social and spiritual side of life. We never lose sight of the spiritual, but devote a liberal portion of the time to that phase. Sister Ruch, as usual, and Velma contributed much to the success of these programs with their music, singing, readings and story-telling.

Thus ended the activities of our eleventh Christmas in Norway. Now we are wondering where we will spend our next Christmas. In America? We hope so.

railroad crossings. It is a danger signal that must be obeyed by the patient and some care taken to follow the advice of the attending physician and dentist. Quite often this disease is mistaken for neuralgia, arthritis and rheumatism.

Scattered Saints

There are a good many of the Saints who are scattered, and do not stand connected with any branch, who do not have the privilege of associating with the Saints. They should have our faith and prayers, and in order that they may gain the confidence of those with whom they associated, they should practice what they believe and teach. They must not talk of judgment or boast of mighty faith. There is another thing that they should avoid; that is, mixing in politics to an undue degree, for we are apt to get irritated. This does not preclude us from using our right of elective franchise, but, to the contrary, it is our duty to vote for the best men; and the man that does not vote is just as much to blame for having bad men in office as those who vote for them. We should use all the means we have in our power to inform ourselves so that we can vote understandingly.

Another thing should be avoided by the elders; and that is, preaching so hard against the various denominations, or otherwise pulling down the doctrine of the various sects, instead of building up our own. We should preach the peaceable things of the kingdom. There should be no malice, anger, or hatred; all should be kind and affectionate one to another, exercising love and charity to all. There should be no talebearing, and if we are injured, say nothing at the time, but think of it and consider whether it is worthy of our notice, and let us try and forgive them; and let us examine ourselves and see if we have done altogether right. Perhaps we also may need forgiveness ourselves, and by doing so we will not be so easily injured, but will be able to go through the world smoothly."—Church History, volume 3, pages 325, 326.

Tinkling Cymbals

By Anna Burhart

It is ideal to desire to symbolize the highest capacities we own; to build a monument to the motives which accelerate our highest thoughts. We symbolize love by kind actions and blessed deeds. These genuine reactions to the God-power within us represent the goal of our achievements.

Formal worship without the spirit of love is counterfeit, a manifestation of pretense. It tinkles like brass, metallic and insincere. Reverent love, displayed in sober, helpful action, produces a harmony like the deep resonant sound of virgin gold.

When the church as a whole meets at the table of the Lord, partaking as one of that sacred symbolic sacrament of the crucifix, the overfed and the hungry, the well robed and the shabby, the wielder of power and the one subjected to bondage because of weakness, uniting in that great, holy symbol of sacrifice, what a resultant discord must tinkle in the ears of Almighty God! Shall we marvel that calamity instead of blessing so often occurs?

Formal worship without charity, that potent, healing, God-given balm, which roots in the soil of love, is a hollow tinkling cymbal, void of reward, promoting adversity.

Go Forward!

By Clarice C. Hanson

"Go forward," said the Voice divine
To Israel's children, long ago,
When Moses sought God's inner shrine,
In bitter need His will to know.
But dark before them spread the sea,
And like a veil of mystery,
Night's shades descend low.

The foe was near. What hand could save?

Their faith was all but lost in fright,
Till from behind them, Heaven gave
From out the cloud a guiding light,
And Israel saw the parted sea.
Then sweetly trusting, fearlessly,
They crossed the sands that night.

How oft that scene comes back to me!
At night, when earth is wrapped in sleep,

It seems that I can almost see
That shining pathway through the deep.

And oft there burns within my breast,
A flame that will not let me rest,
But stirs my soul from sleep.

For lo, Jehovah speaks again!
His own must hear Him, and arise
Above the fears of Godless men.
His changeless strength our need supplies,
And forward still our course shall be.
To flaming cloud, and parted sea,
Lord, open, Thou, our eyes!

The Readers Say---

Church Department

I am still clapping my hands over last week's Herald. I so much appreciated the brief article on "Church Department," page 190, February 6, that I hope every Herald reader may read it.

To me one of the sad things about our church services is our lamentable church department. Too few of us know how to behave ourselves in the House of God. We come late. We whisper—some of us talk out loud. We write notes. We nod and grin at our friends across the room. Sometimes we stalk out of the service before the benediction is said, and then we grumble because we do not always get from the services that which we hoped to receive!

I should like to see the Herald give us more such articles as "Church Department." We cannot put the blame on children and young people for this condition. People who are old enough to know better, and who ought to be living examples, are often the worst offenders. All of us, adults, children, ministry, and laymembers, need to be reminded that we should enter the House of God with a reverent and worshipful attitude, leaving our gum, our gossip and our grouches outside.

JOSEPHINE BELL.

Trusts in the Lord

The last time I met with the Saints was at the Eagle City Reunion in 1932, nevertheless, I am still strong in the faith of latter days. I meet with the Church of the Nazarene congregation, but cannot agree with them on some points of doctrine.

Though we have been hard hit by the depression, I am trusting in God, that he will open up a way that we may obtain some of the necessities of life. I am trying to be like Paul who said: "In whatsoever state I find myself, I am therewith content."

I should like to be where I could meet with the Saints, and am praying for the time when Zion will be established as a place for the faithful Saints to flee from the judgments that are coming on the earth.

I have been a member of the church for nearly fifty-nine years, and though at times I have fallen far short of living in the light, I have been trying to be more faithful during the last few years. Will the Saints pray that I may continue to be faithful? I am sixty-seven years old, am blessed with fairly good health, and work hard every day.

Child Tells of Blessings

Although I am but thirteen years old, I have been blessed many times. When I was eleven, I was baptized by Brother Laurel V. McElwain and confirmed by Brothers Warren McElwain and P. T. Anderson.

When I was sixteen months old I had auto-intoxication and the doctor said he thought I would not get well. I was administered to by Brother Joe Darling and was healed. Another time when I was suffering from scarlet fever I was prayed for and healed.

Indeed I have been blessed many, many times, and I hope some day to be of help to the church.

Service the Evidence of Our Gratitude

I have been wondering why more of the Saints do not write of their experiences which have given them a living faith. The Scriptures tell us that faith without works is dead. We as a people have been asked to show our faith by our works.

It is a task well worth our time to write to the Herald, so that many may read. All who have had divinely-given experiences should be willing to contribute freely to the church paper.

I enjoy the Saint's Herald because its pages are full of good things which cause us to think and give us a deeper appreciation of the restored gospel and our privilege in being affiliated with the church. Long ago I began to realize that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is not based on man-made theory, but is of divine origin. We as its members advocate a restored priesthood, a restored gospel with all its gifts, blessings, and organization—all divine. Yet with all this, we sometimes hear a Latter Day Saint say: "I am not going out to church. Brother or Sister So-And-So can carry on." And there is always a faithful one to carry on His work.

Doctrine and Covenants 2:1: "The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught." And so, dear Saints, we must never lose sight of what has been intrusted to us—keeping the full law and carrying on before God and man.

In the Herald of January 2, "Grateful for Small Things," by John F. Sheehy, gave me food for thought. His last paragraph urged me to write. His words are true—we are the recipients of God's many blessings. We shall never be able to pay him for his goodness to us no matter how much we tithe. If we pay our tithes with the idea that we are repaying God in money for his many blessings, we are making a mistake. How often do we hear such words as "I want to pay my tithing, for God has blessed me in many ways." Truly we ought to pay tithes to help carry on God's church; he designed the law of tithing for this purpose. Have we not covenanted with Christ to keep our obligations? Can I pay God for all his blessings with his own money? or must I, by my service and free will offerings express my gratitude for his great blessings?

Eternal Life Is Worth Our Time and Consideration

I find in the gospel of Christ all that one can hope for. As disappointments and sorrows have come our way and we have found ourselves in trouble and need, we have called on the Lord and he came to our rescue. Our loved ones have been given back to us from the jaws of death when no power of man could save. I joined the church in my fourteenth year, and am now past the half century mark.

Last summer I passed through an operation and was very ill, but Brother Franklin Steiner administered to me before I went to the hospital, and the Saints of Mobile Branch offered special prayers in my behalf. I could feel every day that their prayers were being answered, and when I went to the table for my operation, I put myself in God's hands and knew that I was in safe keeping. When I awoke, though I suffered some pain, I could feel the nearness of divine presence—I was incredibly happy. After I was released from the hospital, Brother Amos Berve administered to me, and I continued to grow better.

I know that our Lord will never forsake us if we love him and keep his commandments. I am now able to do most of my housework.

I have been shown in some of my spiritual experiences that my path of life is rugged and full of trials and dangers, but if I continue faithful, I shall be given eternal life. I feel that this is worth all of my time and consideration. Will the Saints pray that we shall be given strength to keep the law.

Thank Everett Women for Their Gift

Because of the goodness of the ladies' aid of Everett, Washington, we have been able to read the Herald. We are not near a church and are able to keep in touch with the church only through the Herald. We take this means of thanking the women of Everett for their gift—the Herald.

Everett is our home town and we very much miss our friends. But we send greetings to them and to our friends of all the church.

THELMA AND GWEN WALKER.

MONTESANO, WASHINGTON, 324 Spruce Street.

Pray Always

We should never forget to pray. How many of us do grow careless at times and think we are too tired or too busy to pray! For a time I neglected to pray, but I was given an experience which taught me not to put off praying to my Master.

The Savior says: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation," and "Watch ye therefore, and pray always." And it was the Psalmist who wrote: "Hearken unto the voice of my cry, my King, and my God: for unto thee will I pray."

We have no meeting place here, and so I inclose my address. I met two Saints as the result of my last letter to the Herald.

Prepares Neighbors for a Missionary

I am still living in isolation. There are only two or three Saints near, and we have heard no Latter Day Saint sermon for years. Elders of our church go across the ocean to carry the gospel while right here in the State of Missouri there are many who do not know what we believe, never had a chance to hear the restored gospel. This is a pitiful condition.

There are good hearted people here, too, certainly worth saving, and they don't seem satisfied with the churches to which they belong. Can we blame them for being carried away by every wind of doctrine (for they change often) in their search for truth? How my heart aches for them. I tell them what the Bible says and they ask me where. This I tell them when I can remember, but I am old and forgetful and I have no Bible concordance.

I have given out tracts to these people and loaned them the Book of Mormon, The Book of Mormon Vindicated, Voice of Warning, and other literature in an attempt to prepare them to listen to an elder if we are blessed with the help of a minister. If Saints are traveling in this direction, we hope they will call on us. Inquire for Earl Sedoris.

Likes to Read About Her Friends

This is the true church of Christ and he has helped me many times when it seemed as if there could be no help. We live two miles from church and it is hard for us to walk that far; but once in awhile we go to hear the wonderful teachings of Christ explained.

In the Herald I see the names of brothers and sisters whom I used to know years ago, and it is good to know that they are firm in the faith. The Herald is a comfort to me. I read it through twice before the next issue comes. It contains many good articles and letters.

I desire an interest in all your prayers, that I may be healed of a complaint of long standing. I should like also to hear from relatives in Independence.

I attended the Dow City Branch quite a few years before I was married and always enjoy the letters printed in the Herald from that place.

PUYALLUP, WASHINGTON.      MRS. E. J. RUDD FEWINS.

Request Prayers

Mrs. John A. Carnahan, of Port Huron, Michigan, requests the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her sister, Mrs. Norman Lamb. She will undergo an operation for goiter in a few days. Mrs. Lamb does not belong to the church, but she has great faith in God.

Saints of Monctonville, Ontario, are praying for Sister Mary Mercer who has been in the Toronto General Hospital since last spring, undergoing operations on a limb that has been crippled since she was a child, that she may be given strength to endure the pain, and that the operations may be successful. They ask the prayers of the church in Sister Mercer's behalf.

Mrs. F. J. Hare, of Independence, Missouri, desires the prayers of the Saints that her daughter, Mrs. Victor McCullam, may have strength to overcome melancholy spells that greatly impair her health.

Mrs. Mattie Mobley, of Eros, Louisiana, requests prayers for her husband and herself both of whom have been in bad health for some time. They have been blessed through administration, and hope through prayer to recover health and strength.

Prayers are desired for Harvey Heisler who is in the Sanatorium at Carlsbad, Texas. The request is made by his mother, Lizzie Heisler.

Sister Annie Leigh Jones, eighty-seven years old and a resident of Burley, Idaho, wishes the Saints to continue to remember her son, Walter L. Jones, of Boise, Idaho, in prayer, that he will be blessed with a safe and rapid recovery after he has undergone an operation which the doctor has advised.

Puyallup, Washington, Saints ask the prayers of all in behalf of Sister Laura Reed, who has been ailing for over a year, and is to undergo a serious operation soon.

QUESTION TIME

Should a bishop or agent visit homes of Saints and ask for tithing?

Unless he has been requested otherwise, it is entirely proper for him to do so, particularly to ask those who are able to pay but do not. Those who unite with the church are presumed to believe the gospel and to obey the rules of the church, which they have joined because it is divinely established and is the means of sending the message of salvation to mankind. As members, they have covenanted to devote their resources toward the building of the kingdom of God. This is the nature of the covenant all make who are baptized and confirmed into the body of Christ, and it is their duty to voluntarily pay their tithes. But if they are not faithful to perform this duty, it is the duty of the proper officers to remind them and encourage them to better examples.

In some instances the husband of a Saint may not be a member, and in such cases he may object to such visits. His objection should of course be respected, and the wife will then use proper discretion as to when she shall make her contribution. If money earned by her husband is placed in her hands solely for the payment of debts and other running expenses, she should not devote it to the church without the consent of her husband. But that which is her own may be paid as she sees fit, for she has that right both legally and morally. However, the husband should also recognize his moral obligation to share with a wife who faithfully does her part in the home while he is receiving pay for his labor, particularly after financial obligations have been met.

Is the command to baptize in the "name" limited to one of the Trinity?

A certain sect has claimed that the command in Matthew 28: 19 is thus limited, but this view ignores simple rules of grammar, which often uses a term in the singular to refer to several names which follow. The text reads:

"Teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;"—Matthew 28: 19.

While the word "name" is here used in the singular and first applied to "Father," the connective

"and of" immediately follows and applies to the "Son," and then to the "Holy Ghost" in like manner, thus showing that the singular term is applied to each of the names which follow. This also accords with the command given in modern revelation, which specifically directs the minister to "say":

"Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 21.

Of course, in the theological sense these names themselves all refer to "one" as representing the "Godhead," as implied in 1 John 5: 7, and specifically stated in the words of the three Book of Mormon witnesses who testified by divine command:

"And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen."—Book of Mormon, preface, page iv.

Does Section 42: 15 refer to the Inspired Version? If so, why is it not taught?

The statement cited from the Doctrine and Covenants informs us that the Scriptures shall be given, and shall be taught to all people. This doubtless includes the Inspired Version, and may mean that work particularly, though all revelations of God are Scripture. For many years the church has taught this version, both by its ministry when having occasion to show the meaning of some text, and by having the work published and advertised. Also a work is published which compares many of the most important changes of the Inspired Version with various other versions. This work is entitled: The Inspired Version Compared with Other Bible Versions, and may be purchased for twenty-five cents at the Herald Publishing House, which also sells the Inspired Version to any who desire it.

What is an "heave offering," as mentioned in Numbers 18: 24?

It was the tithes to be dedicated to God and paid as the inheritance of the Levitical Order. It was heaved up, in token of dedication to the work of God, and then lowered in token of the communion of the giver with God. A tenth part was heaved also by the Levites, and eaten in their households. Other heave offerings are also mentioned in many texts, the principle being quite similar.

President F. M. McDowell Speaker at Anniversary Service

Toronto Branch celebrated the third anniversary of the opening of the new church January 21, and was privileged to have as guest speaker President F. M. McDowell, who also presided over the morning prayer service. Brother McDowell preached morning and evening and gave a special talk to the district priesthood at 4 p. m. A baptismal service was conducted at 10:30 a. m. after careful preparation by Sister Elsie Castle, superintendent of the junior Sunday school. Pastor J. L. Prentice officiated and eleven were added to the church. The confirmation took place at two o'clock in the afternoon, and a baby was blessed. At 3 p. m. the young people with their choir which filled the loft, gave a song service and there was a sermon, "Zion," by Eldon Oliver. The theme of their service was "Onward to Zion."

President McDowell was busy interviewing the members of the priesthood Monday, and that evening attended a hockey game where the Latter Day Saint team known as the Latter Day Saints' Maple Leaf, was playing one of its games in the Toronto Inter-church Athletic Association. Brother Bertrum Williams is the first vice president of the association this year. The organization includes almost all denominations. All day Tuesday Brother McDowell interviewed the members of the priesthood, and there was a special meeting for the ministry that evening. Then Thursday evening a priesthood prayer service was held.

The women's department announce the culmination of a successful year. They reached their objective of about two thousand dollars for interest in addition to their many other activities. Since the first of the year they have had the East York Male Choir and Amphion Male Quartet for a concert, and made about forty dollars. Then one hundred of the women went through the Toronto Wet Wash Laundry and received twenty-five dollars. They had a turkey dinner February 1, and these different activities continue about once a week during the whole year. For constant and continued action Sister Mary Wilson, the superintendent of this department, is a specialist.

The Sunday school is going forward with Elder B. H. Hewitt as superintendent. The junior department of the school supervised by Sister Elsie Castle, had an old-time Christmas tree with presents for the children.

The Religio is trying something a little different this year. During the first hour there are classes on doctrinal subjects taught by different teachers. Then at nine o'clock a special lecture is given on general topics of interest by nonmember speakers such as Doctor Gordon P. Jackson, medical officer of health for the city of Toronto; Doctor Edmund P. Guest, chairman of the Board of Education, and Mr. Endicott, a man born in China and a missionary home on furlough. Elder Charles A. McLean, superintendent of this department, also arranged a banquet at which the chief magistrate of the city, Mayor William J. Stewart was the guest speaker.

The four cottage meetings are continuing in different parts of the city each week under the leadership of William J. Bavington, Phillip Crump, James Whiteman and Gerald Parfitt. They report as high as eight nonmembers attending some of their meetings. This work has proved to be a means of priesthood activity.

Evening speakers for the past few weeks have been: Bishop A. F. McLean, Elders James A. Wilson, James Pycok, Charles A. McLean, William J. Bavington, B. H. Hewitt, Douglas Cameron, and Ernest Rowlett, president of Humber Bay Branch. The morning speakers were Eldon Oliver, James Bavington, Ernest Newton, James Whiteman, Philip Crump, Samuel Crump, James Kirkpatrick and G. T. Baker. The congregation has been pleased to have as visitors Patriarch John Shields and Elder Grant St. John.

The branch is honored this year in that Ernest Newton won first prize for the young men and Isabelle Pycok first prize for the young women in the Ontario Oratorical Contest, each receiving a silver medal. This also brought the cup back to Toronto District for the year. The contest has discovered some good speakers among the young people. They are looking forward to the next annual competition.

During the past year the men paid one thousand dollars off the mortgage principal, and as times look better for the present year, they expect to do more. This was in addition to the payments made to the general church and the upkeep of branch expenses. Officers believe that it pays to have a pastor's letter circulated about once a month and to publish a branch directory once a year. Their directory for 1934, is just off the press and is of great assistance in getting in touch with all members.

Wet Weather Damages Not Yet Totally Reckoned

December was the wettest month ever experienced by white men in this State, which at any time has a heavy enough rainfall. More rain fell during the month than during the entire year of 1930. As a result much suffering and distress followed. Hundreds of families lost their homes from floods; acres of land were inundated and much of this territory was so cut up that it is now useless. Several lives were lost. Even at the present time each rain brings landslides until the damages are not yet reckoned. But as far as is known none of the Saints' property has suffered damage.

A good Christmas program was had during the church school and preaching hours in spite of the fact that heavy rains had made gathering for rehearsals very difficult.

Brother and Sister C. E. Wheeler have taken little Bernice LaCrosse into their home since the death of her grandmother, Sister Russell, who was killed in a wreck on Thanksgiving evening.

Sister Larabee received word that her daughter, Leila Smith, who is in nurses' training at the Independence Sanitarium, is ill with scarlet fever.

Church attendance has suffered greatly of late from an epidemic of whooping cough.

L. W. Bronson and family are leaving February 26, for southern Missouri, to make their home. Brother Bronson has been pastor of Puyallup Branch since it's organization.

A New Year's watch party at the church was enjoyed, the evening being spent singing songs, listening to a sermon, and taking part in a round table discussion. One result of this gathering was apparent in the increase of inventories filed.

The two-year-old son of Brother and Sister Robert Pentland is in the hospital with pneumonia.

The home of Mr. and Sister Meeker was recently destroyed by fire. Sister Meeker is a sister of Mrs. Emma McDole of Seattle.

Laura Reed, who has been ailing for over a year, is to undergo a serious operation soon. The Saints are fasting and having special prayer for her recovery.

Brother Claude Wheeler is the new solicitor for the branch. Brother L. W. Bronson has been the solicitor here since the Saints began meeting as a mission, but because he is leaving soon, he asked that Brother Claude be appointed so that he might help him to become familiar with his new duties.

Lester O. Wildermuth in Montana

Elder Lester O. Wildermuth spoke twice at Hinsdale, Montana, February 4, and then, by request, held a meeting Monday night at the site of the big new Federal Government dam project south of Glasgow. This dam is to be a part of the big Missouri River flood control operations.

Maryland Heights, Missouri Small Branch Carries On

Maryland Heights Branch has lost an active and beloved member in the passing of Sister Effie M. Anderson, December 19. She was a faithful worker and the many missionaries who were made welcome at her home will testify to her graciousness and hospitality. She was a sufferer for over a year, but her faith never wavered. Elder Richard Baldwin came to the Heights Church and preached a special memorial sermon for her shortly after the first of the year. A large audience of relatives, friends, and neighbors attended.

Elder James L. Gray is contributing active service in the branch pastorate. Sister Gray helps in the story-telling of the church school hour and with her sewing class.

Albert Miller was ordained a priest at the last district conference, and has the good wishes of the branch in the new responsibilities that he has accepted. Great things are expected of Brother Albert; his young shoulders are strong and broad for responsibility in the Master's cause.

Elmer A. Kaler, teacher, and family have moved from the Heights neighborhood to the Wellston district so that Brother Kaler may be near his work at the electric plant. They attend the Heights Branch whenever it is possible to do so.

This branch was organized October 1, 1913, through the instrumentality of Apostle John W. Rushton, and of the charter members there now remain in the branch only Sister Minnie Daley, Brother W. C. Anderson, and Brother A. H. Daley. Death and other removals have made inroads on their number, but the little branch has built its own building, and continues active, many being blessed in the association there.

Elder Roy Remington, district president, and family still visit the branch as often as they can in spite of district labors and cares. They are welcome here where they labored long and faithfully.

Elder B. S. Lambkin is expected in the near future to conduct a series of sermons for a week or ten days. He is one of the district presidency, and served many years as a missionary under General Conference appointment. His wide experience and study promise sermons well worth hearing.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch—Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

January 7, marked the tenth anniversary of the opening of this church.

Thirteen members of this congregation attended church school during the year 1933, without missing a Sunday. Each of these was presented a pin of gold inscribed with purple letters, by the superintendent, Carl E. Turvey.

The women's department met January 4, in charge of their leader, Sister Rosa Nieman. The meeting opened with the singing of "Consecration." Sister Stella Thrash was accepted as a member of the department. This year the women are studying the things that will help them to come to a higher state of perfection. A splendid paper on "Virtue" was read by Sister Kathryn Stratton. Also one on "Resolutions," was read by Sister Leah Turvey. January 14, was the women's "Go to Church Sunday," which brought a good representation to the services.

The choir has rendered several pleasing anthems this month. Solos were sung by Sister Hazel Gribben and Sister Lucinda Madden.

The sermons during the month were edifying and accompanied by God's Spirit. Recent speakers for the congregation have been Elders G. H. Kirken-dall, R. E. Madden, W. B. Reeves, Bishop H. E. French, Patriarch J. E. Matthews, Priest Harry J. Hoffman, and Teacher Chester A. Carey.

Fresno, California

2412 Clay Street

Saints here are busy in the Master's vineyard, and especially so since the visit of President F. M. McDowell and Apostle E. J. Gleazer. Their efforts not only radiated to the laymembers, but also strengthened the priesthood.

Sister Lillie Jennings, children's supervisor, is making history in that line of activity. During one month she conducted the worship service with the junior children alone, and a second service with the primary children, and even little Edmon V. Kaiser, eight years old, stepped to the front and offered the opening prayer. The Spirit of the Master was manifested in both of these services, and the children are becoming "earnest workers." Sister Jennings is to be commended for her untiring efforts.

Brother John Lightowler, supervisor of adult activities, is stressing the necessity of being on time. An improvement is noticed.

The work of the women goes on as usual. They are sewing and trying to help in a financial way as well as in spiritual development. Sister Enix is the leader of women.

Sister Pearl Godfrey was recently made glad by a visit from her brother from Nebraska. A party was held in their honor by the young people.

The visit of Sister Gladys Carmichael will long be remembered in the hearts and minds of the Fresno Saints. She spoke at both the morning and evening services? She surely has the guidance of the heavenly Father in her labors as district supervisor of young people.

Through the efforts of Brother A. B. Heinrichs, missionary services are being conducted at Bakersfield. Brother Heinrichs is also in charge of Dinuba Mission, which is progressing rapidly.

Central Illinois District Conference

Spiritual Gifts Encourage Workers

The Central Illinois district conference convened at Taylorville, December 16 and 17, in charge of Apostle J. F. Garver since the district president, Elder R. L. Fulk, could not be present on account of illness.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: District president, Elder Arthur Henson; counselor, Elder O. C. Johnson; secretary and historian, Lena Fusselman; bishop's agent and treasurer, Elder E. E. Thomas; chorister, Elder Joe Williams; church school director, Delmar Jones.

Those chosen as delegates to the April General Conference are Elders Arthur Henson, O. C. Johnson, and E. E. Thomas; Guy Lewis, C. A. Fusselman, Frank Corcoran and Lena E. Fusselman.

A goodly degree of the Spirit was manifested at the Sunday morning prayer service, and an inspiring testimony was given by Sister Jones, of Taylorville. The people were uplifted by the gift of the Spirit through Apostle Garver.

Soloists of the Sunday afternoon services were Sister E. E. Thomas and Elder Joe Williams. The former sang "Heed the Voice" and gave some numbers on the accordion. Apostle J. F. Garver spoke on "The Coming Kingdom." At the close of the service the Saints extended a vote of greetings and thanks to the former district president, Brother Fulk. A vote of thanks was also extended the women's department of Taylorville for their kindness and hospitality to visiting Saints.

Independence

Stone Church

Harry Frieberg, chairman of the National Zion Home for the Jews, for the Kansas City area, was the Sunday evening speaker, and had the interested attention of a large congregation. His discourse presented what is happening in Jerusalem and Palestine today.

Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge of the evening service, and preceding the preaching hour, George Anway conducted congregational singing. Two numbers were beautifully rendered by a quartet composed of George Anway, Mrs. Nina G. Smith, Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, and Mark Anway, Mrs. Sunshine Beck accompanying.

Bishop J. S. Kelley preached an instructive sermon Sunday morning. Music for this service was furnished by the Stone Church Choir.

The Stone Church preliminaries in the one-act play contest will be held in the Stone Church lower auditorium February 19 and 20, beginning at 7.30 p. m. Eight plays will be presented, four each night: "Whither Goest Thou?" "A Dish of China Tea," "The Governor's Shoes," "Sardines," "Crime Conscious," (to be given by two different casts), "Jephthah's Daughter," and "Dead Expense." Mrs. Helen Brackenbury is in charge of these dramatic events, and the various play directors are working under her supervision. Two plays will be chosen by the judges to represent the Stone Church in the contest finals in March. Tickets bought in advance from members of the Stone Church Young People's Council are ten cents; admission at the door each night, ten cents.

Sister Julia C. Busiel, seventy-four years old, died February 7, at the home of her daughter, Doctor Rena Rich, in Independence. She is survived also by a sister, Mrs. Inga Anderson, Grand Forks, North Dakota, and two brothers, Albert Wilson, Battle Lake, Minnesota, and Jacob Wilson, Willmore, Minnesota; three grandsons, and one great-grandson. The funeral service was held from Stahl's Funeral Home Saturday afternoon, Elder John F. Sheehy in charge. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Liberty Street Church

A beautiful prayer service was held last Wednesday night at the home of John Soderstadt. Seventy-one Saints from groups 25 and 26, including the young people of all the groups in this district, united in making this the most enjoyable worship service held this year.

The women's department experienced a successful day and evening last Thursday. Chili, soup, and pie were served from noon till eleven o'clock at night. A program was presented at nine-thirty to a large and appreciative audience.

Donald Thompson and Wanda Thompson were baptized in the font at Spring Branch Church Sunday, Evangelist Ammon White officiating. They were confirmed at the evening service of Liberty Street congregation by Brothers White and John R. Lentell. At the same hour Brother White was the speaker. The M. A. Male Quartet of Enoch Hill furnished the program. Richard Maloney, accompanist for the quartet, sang a solo.

Pastor John R. Lentell spoke at the morning church hour on "What Is Zion?"

Walnut Park Church

Church school attendance fell slightly below the four-hundred mark Sunday morning, probably due to an early morning snowstorm. Following the class period a program was given consisting of a cello solo by Milford Nace and a story by Virginia Taylor.

Pastor Frank McDonald spoke at the eleven o'clock hour to a large congregation, two hundred and seventy-five being counted in the upper auditorium and about eighty attending the junior service in the basement at the same hour. Preceding the pastor's sermon the choir sang two numbers, "Lead Me, Lord," and "Onward Christian Soldiers," Minnie Scott Dobson directing.

At the junior service Elder Welton Wood spoke and a story was told by Miss Ruth Bryant.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey spoke Sunday evening, and was heard by another splendid audience. About two hundred and twenty-five were present at this service. Special music consisted of two numbers by a male quartet composed of Arlon Chapman, R. G. Blackburn, Fred Horn, and Kenneth Morford. They sang, "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning," and "Remember Me, O Mighty One."

Enoch Hill Church

The Onward and Upward Class, taught by Elder W. J. Brewer, was in charge of the worship service of the church school last Sunday. "Fellowship" was their theme. The class is doing much to promote fellowship in the congregation; its aim is to send cards of sympathy to the sorrowing, and remembrance to those having birthdays or celebrating other anniversaries, and to do other things to create a friendly feeling in the church school. Miss Nellie Mae Kramer read a letter of appreciation from President F. M. Smith for a birthday remembrance.

"Faith," was the theme of Pastor E. A. Thomas' sermon at eleven o'clock. Sisters Zadie Young and Lula Whitsitt sang "Trusting in the Savior."

In the evening Elder C. Ed. Miller gave an illustrated lecture on "The Life of President F. M. Smith," and Sister Ruth Hays sang "Sunshine With the Master."

The two Enoch Hill plays, a part of the city-wide one-act play contest sponsored by the young people's council, will be given here the evening of February 20. They are "The Return of the Prodigal," directed by William Worth, jr., and "Dead Expense," directed by Richard Maloney. Mr. Worth and Mr. Maloney are junior directors and are assisted by Mrs. JoZelma Taylor and Mrs. H. E. Winegar.

The Dorcas Class met at the home of Sister J. C. Alexander last Tuesday evening for their monthly session. Constructive games were played, readings were given and questions were discussed. Each member of the class was given the name of an isolated Saint to cheer and encourage by means of correspondence.

Spring Branch Church

Sunday was Boy Scout day for this district. Brothers Frank Robinson, Gordon Andes and local Boy Scouts were in charge of the worship service of the church school Sunday morning, and at the close of the hour A. J. Tankard talked on scout work.

Elder F. A. Cool was the eleven o'clock speaker, and the choir sang "There Is Room in My Heart for Thee."

Two candidates were baptized in the afternoon, Patriarch Ammon White in charge.

As usual the evening church school session attracted a good crowd and the program was much enjoyed.

Elder John Blackmore, the evening speaker, presented phases of scouting, and the evening service was in charge of Earl Robinson, Frank Robinson, Benson Brown, Otis Brown, and James Tankard. Leonard Roberts, scoutmaster of Troop 222, made a short talk, and the collection was given to help the boys. Several certificates were presented, also pins to tenderfoot scouts. T. Nord, M. C. Jacobsen, Roy Kirkwood, and A. J. Tankard assisted in getting the scouts.

Long Beach, California

Effective Service Opens Year

An effective New Year's service began the year's activities for Long Beach Saints. At eight o'clock, the children's division met in the church basement with their supervisor, Leo Pendarvis. The young people met with Brother Leibold, at the home of the pastor, where luncheon was served. At this time each one attending was given the opportunity to express his desire concerning the work for the coming year.

During this time the adult division met in the auditorium of the church, to listen to short talks on points of vital interest. The talks were delivered by various officers of the branch.

At ten o'clock, all gathered in the church auditorium, and a Joash Chest service was held. A large wooden chest was placed below the rostrum, into which all, who had not previously filed their inventories, were requested to drop them; also tithing and offering gifts were made. Everyone was requested to participate in the service, as well as in the candlelighting service which followed.

At the election of officers, the following were chosen to serve: Pastor, J. L. Milner; counselors, N. T. Chapman and A. A. Moran; director of religious education, Harry Sacry; supervisor of young people, R. C. Leibold; supervisor of children, Leo Pendarvis; director of music and home visiting, Holgard Pedersen; branch clerk, Effie Gregory; leader of the women, Sister Sacry.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The Graceland College Players presented "Shavings," a three-act play, in Central auditorium, February 2 and 3, under the able direction of Miss Florence Thompson, head of the speech and dramatic department of the college. The high standard of work done in her department was upheld in this fast-moving comedy. Large audiences both nights found the play most entertaining. Music between the acts was given by Colin Ferrett, Garland Tickemeyer, and George Anway.

This presentation was one of the projects sponsored by the Heart of America Chapter of the Graceland Alumni Association. This year the chapter plans to raise funds for a Graceland College scholarship which will be loaned to some worthy Kansas City young man or woman. It is hoped that the sponsoring of the College Players will become an annual project of the chapter. A reception was given Saturday after the performance, in the primary room, for the cast and all ex-Gracelanders.

Pastor C. E. Wight was in charge of the Sunday morning sacrament service, February 4, assisted by Elder J. A. Gardner, associate pastor, and C. A. Skinner, stake bishop. Special prayers were offered for Brother Fred S. Anderson who was stricken seriously ill the previous Wednesday. Members of the congregation sincerely hope for his immediate and complete recovery. Brother Anderson is one of the associate pastors of Central Church, and was recently ordained a high priest.

At the evening service an attractive feature of hymn appreciation was instituted. The histories of three outstanding hymns were told by Pastor C. E. Wight and Harold C. Burgess. One in particular was a strictly Latter Day Saint hymn, "Consecration," by Albert McCullough. This promises to be an educational addition to the Sunday night meetings. Under the direction of Eugene Christy the choir sang "God Is Love," by Shelley.

Central Orchestra, Frank White directing, furnished the special music at the morning worship period, and will continue for this month.

Favorable mention should be given Brother Fred Furness for his artistic arrangement of the pulpit decorations.

Mount Washington Church

The church school director chose as the theme for the school worship period during the month of January, "A Challenge to Higher Ideals." This theme was sub-divided into weekly topics, "Finding a Purpose for My Life," "Serving That Purpose," "The Ideals of the Life of Jesus," and "The Power to See it Through." The pastor gave the talks during the month.

Elder T. C. Lentell has given some instructive talks on Book of Mormon history.

The Kansas City Local Camp of Gideons sent a team of four men to tell something of their work on the evening of January 21. The aim of the Gideon movement is to place Bibles in hotels, hospitals, and other institutions. Bibles were placed in the Phillips Hotel some time ago, a volume in each guest room. Plans are being made to do the same in the Hotel Muehlebach.

The Clematis Chorus of Independence, under the direction of Mrs. John R. Lentell, sang several numbers preceding the Gideon service. Elder H. A. Gould brought an inspiring message to the Mount Washington Saints, telling them of their splendid effort during the month of December to meet the local budget for the year 1933.

The closing service for the month, sponsored by the O. B. K.'s, was inspiring. Elder John Blackmore was the speaker. His theme was "The Social Value of the Sabbath."

Dayton, Ohio

Woodward and Howell Streets

"Forward as a missionary branch," has been the motto of this congregation during the month of January. The increase in attendance both for morning and evening services is evidence of a great deal of effort on the part of the priesthood.

Sister Addie Hill was elected president of the Ninety-nine Club for the coming year. The women have set aside one hour every meeting for reading Church History. Each member answers the roll call with a Bible verse, and Sister Olive Ulrich has provided a debate and a dialogue as added entertainment.

Elder George Stephens is bishop solicitor of this branch. Brother Stephens has been a faithful servant in this capacity for ten years.

Sacrament was served to Dayton Saints, January 7. Elder Floyd Rockwell was the evening speaker using as a subject, "I Am Not Ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." This was Brother Rockwell's first sermon as branch president.

Sunday, January 14, Elder Floyd Rockwell used as a text for his sermon the first chapter of the Book of Acts and the tenth chapter of Matthew. Sister Julia Davis, of Middletown, was a visitor at this service. The evening speaker, Elder E. Ulrich, spoke on "The Name of the Church."

Elder Floyd Rockwell delivered both the morning and evening messages January 21. Testimonies as to the truthfulness of this work were given by Brother B. J. Reeves, and Sister O. Ulrich at the morning service and by Sister Betty Rockwell and Sister May in the evening. Elder Rockwell used as a text, "Lord to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." (Saint John 6: 68.) Attendance during the morning and evening services was ninety-seven members and twenty visitors.

Dayton Saints again welcomed Missionary Jacob Halb, of Middletown, in their midst. This branch feels honored because Elder Halb preached his last sermon before his recent operation and his first sermon afterward for this congregation. Brother Halb spoke on "Discovering God." The Scripture reading was Matthew 11: 27-30. Visitors during the day came from Springfield, and Middletown. There was an attendance of one hundred and three.

In the absence of Branch President Floyd Rockwell, who is in Washington, District of Columbia, as representative of the Frigidaire Cooperation, Elder E. L. Ulrich was in charge of the sacrament service for February.

Wednesday evening prayer services have been very well attended and a great source of strength for the Saints. January 17, the members were privileged to renew acquaintances with Brother and Sister Stobaugh, of Independence, Missouri.

Eldorado, Kansas

Women Render Invaluable Help

Although the Eldorado group of Saints is few in number and the members scattered, meetings are held each week. Sacrament service the first Sunday of the month was held at the home of Sister Hudson. Elder Clyde Baker was in charge of the meeting.

Elder Baker is in charge of the work at Eldorado, assisted by Brother Charles Merrill, priest. These men are the only members of the priesthood here.

Prayer services are being held each Wednesday evening, at the home of Sister Maxwell, also a Bible study class.

The women meet each Thursday, at the home of Sister Hudson. At present a study of the Doctrine and Covenants is an important part of the meeting. Much good is being derived from the study, Sister Clyde Baker, teacher.

Last February, seeing the financial need of the church, the women decided to help as much as they could. At that time, Sister Della Thompson Rogers was at the head of the department, and she and the teacher urged the members not to neglect the study in their efforts to raise money. During the following four months, a sum of almost thirty-six dollars was earned. A goal for the following six months was set for $700. Sister Ida Fye was elected head of general sales, and Sisters Maxwell and Merrill were in charge of food sales. With good cooperation, all sales proved successful. Rainy day bags, a penny in the bag for each day it rained or snowed, and an apron to place a penny in the pocket for each inch around the waist, helped to swell the funds. Under the direction of Sisters Noeler and Maxwell, entertainment was provided for a small charge.

When the final count was made, the women were able to give their solicitors a check for $116.26. The sick were visited and the needy families were cared for. The Thursday preceding Christmas, names were exchanged and each woman received a small gift.

Most of the families here pay their tithes and also give special offerings.

Monetville, Ontario

Take Definite Steps Toward Erecting Church Building

This little branch is growing slowly but surely. Two new members were gained during the past year. Brother and Sister O. D. Stevens were baptized the morning of September 3, and confirmed at the sacrament service in the afternoon.

It will be three years in April since Brother and Sister Stevens moved to Canada to take up a homestead. They formerly lived in the United States, in Illinois, and are familiar with many of the historic places connected with the restored gospel. However, they had not heard the gospel story until they came to Monetville. Being interested in church work, Sister Stevens and her three boys came regularly and were members of the church school. In July, 1932, she was appointed organist and chorister for both church and church school, and has served faithfully in these offices to date. Brother Stevens professed no special interest in religion, but being an honest man, was attracted to the work after hearing a few sermons about a year ago. He began to investigate, reading the three standard books of the church.

Despite the chill of northern weather, attendance is good, averaging a total of thirty-five which includes visitors. There are about five visitors each Sunday, and two families seem considerably interested. One woman who had been bitterly opposed to the church until recently, started the first Sunday in January and is coming regularly.

Pastor J. L. Fryer is preaching better sermons all the time and enjoys freedom and the Spirit to a great extent. The last sermon of the old year was particularly inspiring and everyone returned home with renewed faith, hope, and purpose. For a text he used, "Be ye not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Recently the Saints have witnessed the power of God in healing the sick through prayer and the laying on of hands. Sister George Mercer, who is aged and much afflicted, had grown gradually worse during the past year, until the doctor gave her but a few days to live. Prayers were offered continually for her, and Brother J. L. Fryer administered. Gradually the pain left and she grew stronger. Today she can walk about the house with a cane. She was helpless before.

Sister Mary Mercer has been in Toronto General Hospital since last spring undergoing operations on a limb that has been crippled since she was a child of nine years.

The Saints are spending a half hour after prayer service each Wednesday evening in the study of the Book of Mormon and the other two standard books of the church. O. D. Stevens is proving an able teacher.

Definite steps have been taken toward building a church and cemetery. The schoolhouse though convenient and still at the Saints' disposal, is not a place in which God's Spirit can dwell at all times. Brother and Sister James Mercer donated the grounds, and the property has been duly recorded and deeded to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The church building committee, consisting of O. D. Stevens, James Mercer, Arthur Mercer and Thomas Grieve, met and made plans. So far the grounds have been graded and properly drained, the plots measured and staked out. Cold weather stopped fencing operation.

The church building is to be twenty-four by forty-four feet; built of sound materials all of which are free will donations. It will not be a large or pretentious building, but large enough to accommodate present needs. Members and fellow donors can furnish everything necessary to the building of a house of worship. If there is a lack it will be in cash with which to purchase such necessities as nails, windows, etc. But they trust that all will be provided. Each head of a family pays the sum of five dollars for his plot in the cemetery and the money goes into the church building fund. Also each head of a family is to cut fifteen sound logs, haul them to the mill, pay the saw mill bill, and give the lumber to be used in the church building. All the Saints in the branch are required to sacrifice that they may build the church from the resources God has given them. Many of the logs are at the mill now and will be sawed in the spring. Building operations will start about mid-summer. Once started, workers hope to continue without a pause until the last nail is driven. The women, under the leadership of Sister O. D. Stevens, have charge of furnishing the interior. What a blessing the building will be to the Saints at Monetville.

Portland's Young People Have Convention

Distinctive and Largely Attended Gathering

The young people's convention held at Portland, Oregon, January 26, 27, and 28, was the most outstanding in the history of this district. Apostles M. A. McConley and E. J. Gleazer were the guest teachers and speakers at classes and special services, and there were also present Elder Monte E. Lasater, president of Seattle and British Columbia District, and Elder Stanley Fout, president of Spokane District, who was accompanied by his associate, Elder James Sage.

One hundred and forty-seven young men and women attended the Saturday evening banquet. The hostess, Miss Ardath Young, had not planned on such a large crowd and the tables laid were not sufficient for the whole group. Everyone was pleased to see the basement of the church so filled.

Sunday's services opened with a young people's prayer meeting at eight-fifteen, a meeting in which the Saints were encouraged to go forward in their preparations for Zion.

At the eleven o'clock hour, little Viola Alice Velt, who has recently come into the home of Missionary Harold I. Velt and wife, was blessed. Elder Velt is now carrying on missionary services at Sherwood Mission with much success.

The visiting district presidents and Elder J. L. Verhei and associates met in conference with the two apostles to plan the first official Northwest Reunion to be held this summer at Silver Lake. The Saints are looking forward to this reunion.

Mobile, Alabama

Three Young Men Called to Priesthood

Pastor Amos Berve was speaker at a meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union at the Baptist Church January 16, and the choir rendered a selection. The Saints were given the prize for the best attendance.

The annual business meeting for election of branch officers was held December 27, a good representation of the branch being present and enjoying a fine spirit. Reports from departments and officers were encouraging. Three young men were called to the priesthood, Raymond Booker to the office of priest; Brewton Green to the office of deacon, and Alma Tillman, of Bayou Labat group, to the office of priest. The following officers were elected for the coming year; Amos Berve, high priest, was sustained as president; Irene Day, secretary; Brewton Green, treasurer; Raymond Booker, church school supervisor; Mildred Booker, supervisor of junior department; Edna Cochran, women's department leader; Anna Mae Hough, musical director. It is hoped that each officer will deeply sense the responsibilities resting upon him and be guided by the spirit which prevailed in their election, that the Lord's work will move forward.

Envelopes for the defraying of branch expenses have been distributed and the desire of all to share in this part of the work is encouraging.

The marriage of Melance Powell and Frank Harrell was solemnized at the church the evening of January 9, in the presence of relatives and close friends. Franklin Steiner read the ceremony.

A good Christmas program was enjoyed by the branch on Christmas Eve, a vesper program of Christmas hymns being given by the choir. Then the junior department gave a play which was followed by gifts and treats for the children. Later in the evening the young people enjoyed singing carols.

Calumet, Oklahoma

Chester Richard, a young man of this branch who was recently ordained to the priesthood, occupied the pulpit at the evening service one Sunday a short time ago. Members are eager to see this young man progress. They believe in his ability to succeed.

The wedding of Melvin Walbaum, of Calumet, and Maxine Cossel, of Wichita, was solemnized in the church February 1. Pastor A. G. Owings, assisted by Elder Elmer Richard, officiated.

This branch looks forward to the approaching district conference, and the members pray for spiritually helpful meetings.

Fort Wayne, Indiana

Missionary J. O. Dutton Holds Two-week Services

The people of Macedonia were in need of assistance such as they could not render themselves. Paul heard the call "Come over to Macedoina and help." He went and many souls were saved. Even so did Brother J. O. Dutton hear the S. O. S. of Fort Wayne Saints. He answered with fourteen days of hard, consistent work and seven candidates were led into the waters of baptism. Some are sure that if he could have remained another week, several other interested ones would have been brought into the kingdom.

Fort Wayne Saints are enthusiastic in their praise of Brother Dutton. He is a man who is about his Father's business, devoting every day to calling on Saints and interested people and preaching at night.

The group was fortunate in the securing of a splendid auditorium for these meetings, and the meeting place was graced by the power of the gospel presented by God's servant whose sermons caused the members to feel the endowment near. All are endeavoring to remember and put into practice the admonition he gave, consecrating themselves anew to the task before them, being humble, obedient, diligent in study so that they may be found prepared to serve Him.

Though they do not have a church building, there is a live group of members at Fort Wayne, and any Saint visiting the city is invited to get in touch with them by calling on R. C. Crandall, 518 State Street or J. C. Stoehr, 2015 Harrison.

Mission, Illinois

Programs Are Outstanding Branch Activity

The ladies' aid society entertained their husbands and families in the church basement January 12, and again February 2. A potluck supper was served, then a devotional service and program were enjoyed. Later a social time added attractiveness to the evening. These gatherings are held once a month during the winter.

The branch enjoyed an all-day meeting January 14. Brothers Edstrom and Skinner, of Chicago, spent the day here. Sunday school began at 10 a. m., and at eleven o'clock Brother C. A. Edstrom delivered a fine sermon. Dinner was served in the basement at noon, and in the afternoon Brother Skinner addressed the crowd.

A program was given Sunday evening, January 21, and again February 4, in the church auditorium. These programs are given every two weeks. A committee of three is selected by the young people's leader, Lloyd Erickson, to arrange such entertainments. Mrs. Ernest Williamson, Mrs. Walter Anderson and Miss Sadie Hayer were chosen to have charge of the next program which will be given February 18.

"The Nativity," a Christmas pageant, was presented by the young people of Mission Branch on Christmas Eve, December 24. Readings, exercises, and selections by the church orchestra were also given. A large crowd attended.

Australian Reunion Successful

Enthusiasm High at Tiona

"From an educational standpoint this year's reunion was the most successful we have held," says Elder Geoffrey Gillard of the Australasian Mission reunion and young people's convention held at Tiona, December 24 to 31. In all respects the gathering was most successful. All meetings were well attended, a fine social spirit prevailed, and the young people present received an uplift and an urge to go on in the work of latter days.

Each morning two class sessions were provided. The earlier session was of general interest and lessons were given on the standard books of the church by various men in the general ministry. The second session of approximately one and a half hours was in charge of Brother Gillard each morning and was designed particularly for the young people. The class study was conducted along forum lines. Splendid interest was shown in class work by older and younger members.

The junior church was a most successful feature of the reunion. Previous to the reunion Brother Gillard had spent considerable time preparing a complete series of junior church services for the six days. He had all the necessary material gathered together and appointed Elder C. A. Dickinson and Sister Blanche Roberts, assistant, to take charge of this activity. These services composed one of the most pleasing features of Tiona, and attendance of junior age boys and girls averaged about thirty-nine each morning.

The young people played an important part in the program of the reunion, participating in such special features as concerts, an extemporaneous speaking contest, oration service, and the one-act play, "Dust of the Road." Baseball tournaments, beach sports, hikes, and a "mystery treasure hunt," a mock trial, a barbecue on the beach, bonfire and new year celebrations composed recreational and social activities. Organized games followed the evening church service every night and at the close of these a campfire story-telling session was enjoyed.

Alabama District

Cooperate to Carry Forward Work of This Region

The district presidency, D. E. Sellers, W. H. Drake, and J. W. Baldwin, are endeavoring to minister to the needs of the district, being assisted by the bishop's agent, George W. Hall, of Calhoun, Alabama.

The three branch presidents, Lyle D. Flynn, president of Pleasant Hill Branch, W. J. Williamson, of Lone Star Branch, and B. E. Barlow, president of Flat Rock Branch, are cooperating with the district presidency to care for the needs of the district in the absence of much needed missionaries. The local missionary work has been carried on at quite a sacrifice by the local priesthood. Clearer each day looms the gigantic task of this church.

Saints of Alabama appreciate the untiring efforts of such men as T. C. Kelley, J. W. A. Bailey, J. F. Curtis, E. A. Curtis, and J. A. Gillen.

The coming of General Conference is being looked forward to by many, and it is hoped that a number of the local priesthood will be privileged to attend.

System in Meeting Church Debt

Our news this week carries the details of a unique plan adopted by the Toronto Branch for handling the debt on the church building. The women pay the interest, and whatever the men collect is applied on the principal. The plan is producing results. It may offer a suggestion for other branches.

A Thought for the Week

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."—James 1: 27.

The heart of religion is mercy and social justice. No religion that omits these items is a true religion, and it is not acceptable to God.

Some religions emphasize the necessity of worship. Others seem to be largely ritualistic. Some are so individualistic that they are set apart from the world and its concerns.

But whatever forms worship may take, whatever means we may have of expressing our worship of God, we cannot neglect that which is the heart of all religion.

Jesus expressed the idea, too, when one asked him, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" His answer is found in Matthew 22: 37-40.

Only in Zion, the community patterned after the plan given by God, can we fully realize the fruits of obedience to the two great commandments which Jesus quotes from the law. Therefore we look to Zion as a place of peace, of security, of justice, of equality of opportunity for everyone, of righteousness and of happiness.

I think about God
Yet I talk of small matters,
Isn't it odd
How my idle tongue chatters?
Of quarrelsome neighbors,
Fine weather and rain,
Indifferent labors,
Indifferent pain,
Some trivial style
Fashion shifts with a nod . . .
And yet all the while
I am thinking of God.

—Gamaliel Bradford, in Shadow Verses,
Yale University Press.

Attention Singers!

This is to inform the singers of Western Michigan District that Miss Louise Evans will be at the young people's convention at Cadillac, March 4, in the interests of the Michigan Choir, and wishes to meet all of you there. As chorister of Western Michigan District I urge you to attend if possible. Meet us there!—B. H. Doty, district chorister.

Conference Notices

Southern New England district will hold its annual conference March 3 and 4, at the Bellvue Avenue Church, Providence, Rhode Island, at 3 p. m. The annual election of district officers, together with delegates to General Conference, will constitute part of the business. All district officers will please render their respective reports. Statistical reports must be sent to the secretary before this date; secretaries, please comply. We trust this conference will have large attendance.—Frank S. Dobbins, district secretary, Box 544, Onset, Massachusetts.

Southern Ohio will hold its spring conference at First Columbus Branch, Tompkins Street and Medary Avenue, March 10 and 11, the first service, a prayer meeting, convening at 9 a. m. Saturday. Business session will open at 10.30 a. m., March 10. Will all branch secretaries please have their statistical reports in the hands of the district secretary, E. H. Caldwell, P. O. Box, Lancaster, Ohio, not later than March 3? Each branch please elect three delegates and send names to the district secretary, also see that each delegate carries credentials to make sure they will be seated. We are planning a big gathering and urge all to attend. Prayer service will convene Sunday, March 11, at 8 a. m., for which service we ask all to fast. This is the first notice of our young people's convention to be held in Columbus, May 25, 26, and 27.—A. E. Anderton, district president.

Southwestern Texas district conference will be held Sunday, February 25, at First San Antonio Church, corner Rockwood Court and South Cherry. Of special interest will be the selection of delegates to General Conference to be held at Independence, Missouri; also the consideration of holding a reunion in this district during the coming summer. The whole day will be given to district meetings and activities. Will you plan to be present?—G. R. Kuykendall, district president, 3416 South Flores Street, San Antonio, Texas.

The conference of New York-Philadelphia District will be held at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, March 17 and 18.—Elizabeth Teal, 7517 Watson Street, Fox Chase, Philadelphia.

In Memoriam

One year ago this month our beloved brother, Richard Ferris, passed from this life to the great beyond. Two years more and Brother Ferris would have been one hundred years old. He accepted the restored gospel sixty-two years ago and was a faithful Saint, and his memory lingers and will linger while his stirring testimonies still ring in the ears of those who loved and labored with him in the cause he loved so well—East Bay Branch, Oakland, California.

Our Departed Ones

HOU GAS.—Elva M. Merchant was born at Kempton, Illinois, November 18, 1894. She was left an orphan at three years of age at which time she and her brother moved to Missouri. They made their home at Stewartsville, where her brother died about 1908 or 1909. She was baptized a member of the church May 21, 1903. Married Ward A. Hougas at Saint Joseph, Missouri, June 17, 1917, living at Macedonia, Iowa, until the fall of 1919, when they moved to Venango, Nebraska. They also lived several years in Colorado, then moved to Saint Joseph, Missouri, where Mr. Hougas took up the work of Far West Stake president. Later he was made manager of the Herald Publishing House at Independence, moving his family to the center place, but continuing at the same time his work in Far West Stake. Mrs. Hougas passed away February 2, at her home in Independence, after a long illness. She is survived by her husband, a son, Melvin, eleven years old, and a daughter, Genevieve, nine years of age, other relatives and many friends. Memorial services for Mrs. Hougas were held at Stahl's Funeral Home, Independence, the morning of February 4, and at Stewartsville, Missouri, the afternoon of the same day. Interment was in Stewartsville Cemetery.

MAYBERRY.—Phyllis Althia Mayberry was born at Ingersoll, Ontario, March 31, 1908. While on a visit to Harrietsville, she was taught the restored gospel by Sister Butler, and was baptized at Corinth by Elder Percy Farrow, September 19, 1931. Died at Hamilton Hospital, January 22, 1934. Leaves to mourn, her father, Harry Mayberry, of Hamilton; two sisters, Thelma and Bernice, and many other relatives. The sermon was preached by Evangelist John Shields at Brown Brothers' Undertaking Parlors to a large gathering of friends and Saints. Interment was in Woodland Cemetery, Hamilton, Ontario.

MIDDLETON.—Edward Middleton was born in Lindhurst, Ontario, Canada, May 5, 1860, and passed away at the Gliddon Memorial Hospital, DeKalb, Illinois, January 15, 1934. He came to the United States about forty years ago, locating in DeKalb, Illinois. He was an active member of the church. For a number of years he has seen to the physical comfort of the Saints when they met in the house of worship. He is survived by his wife, and two brothers, Rodney, of DeKalb, and Wesley, of Chicago. Funeral services were held from the church, Elder R. E. Davey delivering the sermon. Interment was in Fairview Cemetery.

SHAW.—Emma Shaw was born in Scotland County, Missouri, in 1861. She was married to Alden E. Shaw, August 27, 1882, and to them fifteen children were born. Six daughters and seven sons are left to mourn, also two sisters, one brother, forty-four grandchildren, and twelve great-grandchildren. She was baptized into the church at Lamoni, Iowa, in 1885. Died January 28, 1934, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. B. Caswell, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. The funeral services were held at the Saints' church and the sermon was by Elder F. E. Dillon. Interment was in Memorial Park, Oklahoma City.

VOWELS.—Alice White was born in Somersetshire, England, May 9, 1856, and departed this life, January 19, 1934, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Beecham. She was married to Edward Vowels, who preceded her in death in 1919. She is survived by ten children. Five sons, Harry, John, Fred, James, and Ernest, all of Belvidere, Illinois; and five daughters, Mrs. Ada Fager, Mrs. Nellie Beecham, Mrs. Beatrice Martinek, Mrs. Annie Ludtke, and Mrs. Elsie Howard, all of Belvidere. Two sons died in infancy, a daughter died in 1920. Mrs. Vowels has been a resident of Belvidere, Illinois, for the past twenty-three years, and was a faithful member of the church. Funeral services were held from the home of her daughter, in charge of Elder R. E. Davey, assisted by Apostle John F. Garver. Interment was in Belvidere Cemetery.

ROCK.—Joseph Henry Rock, son of Charles and Charlotte Bourne Rock, was born December 29, 1879, at Ridgetown, Ontario. He passed away peacefully in his sleep, January 29, 1934. He became a member of the church January 26, 1898. June 22, 1905, he married Adelaide Saint John. To this union were born four sons, Miles, Franklin, Harold, and Walter, and two daughters, Alma and Lenore. Alma predeceased her father. Besides his widow and family, he is survived by two brothers, David, of Detroit, Michigan, and Clarence, of London, Ontario; one sister, Mrs. Charles Connor, Detroit, Michigan, besides numerous other relatives and friends. The funeral was held February 1, from Wiltiams and Son Funeral Home under the auspices of Talbot Lodge, sermon by Elder Percy Farrow. Burial was in South Park Cemetery.

McINTOSH.—Eliza McIntosh was born January 26, 1848, in Canada, and departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. David L. Baird, Detroit, Michigan, November 13, 1933. She was united in marriage to Alexander McIntosh, in Bay City, Michigan, in 1877, and lived there for a number of years. To them five children were born, three girls and two boys: Mrs. Edward I. Shaw, of West Helena, Arkansas; Mrs. John Baird, and Mrs. David L. Baird, of Detroit, Michigan; Frank and Archie McIntosh, of Bay City, Michigan. Her husband preceded her in death twelve years ago. She became a member of the church, April 29, 1906, and remained faithful until death. A short funeral service was conducted by Elder Kenneth Green at the home of her daughter, November 15. Thursday morning, November 16, her body was taken to her son, Frank McIntosh, in Bay City, Michigan. Funeral services were held at two o'clock in the afternoon, in charge of Elder Samuel L. Pendleton, of Beaverton, Michigan. She was laid to rest beside her husband in the Ackmyer Cemetery.

RANDOLPH.—Helen Christiana, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jocks was born at Mikado, Michigan, December 25, 1896. Following a long illness of tuberculosis she died January 15, 1934. She was baptized into the church, August 9, 1925, by Elder S. T. Pendleton. She leaves to mourn, her husband, Clarence Randolph, six children, three brothers, three sisters, her father, other relatives and many friends. The funeral was held at the Mikado church by Elder M. J. McGuire. Interment was in Mikado Cemetery.

HEMSTOCK.—George E. Hemstock was born September 2, 1860, near West Salem, Wisconsin. He died January 21, 1934, at his home near Bangor, Wisconsin. Was baptized March 7, 1912, by R. D. Davis. The funeral was held January 24, services in charge of the Baptist church at Bangor. Interment was in the beautiful Burns Valley Cemetery. The funeral sermon by Elder Leonard Houghton was heard by a large number of long-time friends and neighbors of the deceased. Surviving are his good wife, Sister Minnie Hemstock; his daughter, Sister Grace Scafe, and her husband; two granddaughters, and other relatives.

TAYLOR.—William H. Taylor, son of John and Elizabeth Taylor, was born in Zone Township, Kent County, Ontario, September 23, 1859, and passed from this life January 3, 1934. He married Mary Ann Morton, December 27, 1882, and to them eight children were born, seven of whom survive. Myrtle passed away in infancy. He was baptized into the church in June, 1871, by Elder George Shaw, and lived a faithful, active Saint until the end. Was ordained a priest while a young man and an elder in the spring of 1918. He was sincere and earnest in his belief and tried to live his religion. Left to mourn are his companion; five sons: Lorenzo M., of Wabash, Ontario; Charley M., of Shenston, New Ontario; Jay, of Windsor, Ontario; John A., of Independence, Missouri, and Alfred M., of Shenandoah, Iowa; two daughters, Mrs. Alfred Blakeley and Mrs. Gordon Stanlick, of Wabash, Ontario; twenty-eight grandchildren; one brother, George, of Independence; one sister, Mrs. William Gordon, of Thamesville, Ontario; other relatives, and a host of friends.

The Presence of God

Every vital religion must have some doctrine of the real presence of God. The ancient Hebrews symbolized it with the Shekinah above the ark in the holy of holies and the Roman Catholics keep the idea alive with their doctrine of the mass. One almost trembles with excitement and spiritual joy to think what might happen to Protestantism if it once really penetrated to our millions of adherents that the living God is really present, not on some candlelighted altar amid incense and ritual, but out there in the street, on the main highways of life where questions of politics, wages, social justice, racial fair play, and war and peace are to be decided.—Albert W. Palmer, in "The Eternal God and the Present Hour," in The Christian Century.

Canned Food

There is no objection against canned food in its place, for our civilization practically compels us to make use of it. But it should replace only such foods as we cannot get in a fresh state because of climate, season, or location. It is most deplorable that industry and capital were successful, by shrewd advertising methods and even with the aid of school medicine, in making people believe that canned food can replace fresh food at any time and in any way. This is far from the truth. Whatever the scientific departments of the canneries may emphasize and advertise, it is clear that the food which has been processed, heated, sugared, pickled, stained, bleached, seasoned with salt and various acids and finally closed up in a tin can, is far from its natural state. It may still contain the vitamins A, B, or C, but it never will be the same as fresh food. Especially is this true as far as acids are concerned. Whenever food is closed up in a metal container it is merely a matter of time until certain acids form. The United States Bureau of Chemistry, recognizing this fact, twice made the attempt to enforce new legislation to label the cans as to the time of expiration, as vaccines and sera have to be labeled. Both times the canneries and their allies were able to suppress these efforts. It may be remembered by every one that the use of canned food should be restricted to the absolute minimum in spite of all the advertising. Especially should one be careful of buying canned food at sales.—Egon V. Ullmann, M. D., in Diet in Sinus Infections and Colds. Macmillan, 1933.

"A divorce is an open confession of failure in the greatest of all voluntary ties."—Quintus Quiz, in the Christian Century.

A New Program

"What the world needs is a new program, and new power to put it into effect. It must try to rediscover the meaning of the Kingdom of God on earth. It will see that it means an order of love and brotherhood breaking into the older order based on greed and selfishness.

"They say the church today has no real program. Churches perhaps seek members for the mere sake of the church, and not for the Kingdom of God on earth. Christianity spreads in and out of churches, in simple and strange ways, here and there, and Christians should support all the way. To save life one must lose it; in losing it, one finds life. The church must cease being an end unto itself.

"That is the program. But the world is littered with programs with no power behind them. Our program must draw power from the Holy Spirit. The God of Jesus, the certainty of conviction, the Sermon on the Mount, the universality of Christianity, its finality, are our fount.

"God intends us to remake a world, remake humanity. The social gospel, you say; no soul salvation in it. But isn't there? Entrance into the Kingdom of God is personal; living in it is social."—E. Stanley Jones, quoted in the Kansas City Star, January 24, 1934, from an address in Grand Avenue Temple, Kansas City.

Preaching must say without any stammering that the scientific quest is not the only road to truth. It must say, and with no apology for the word, that the eye of reason used apart from its other-eye of emotion, is given to over-astigmatism. We do not know a mother's love for us or our love for our children primarily by means of reason, but by means of emotion. Much of truth we never learn until we translate both our reasoning and our feeling into the deed: "Everyone therefore that heareth these words of mine and doeth them not (though he feel them profoundly and reason about them brilliantly) shall build his house of life upon the sand!"—George A. Buttrick, in Jesus Came Preaching.

Our Enemy

"I am an Englishman, and proud to be one. You need a certain amount of pride to be self-respecting. In a day when liberty and free parliaments had to be fought for I am proud that Englishmen, and by that term I include Americans, were strong and courageous enough to fight and die for them.

"I am proud that cropped-headed yeoman rode with Cromwell for the sake of self-government. I am proud to come of a race that sent farm boys and store clerks marching to materialize the ideal of Abe Lincoln that white men would die to make black men free. I am proud of Anglo Saxons because we could arm for an ideal, because we could fight to resist a menace to human liberties. Now that the world has reached a state where the menace is arms, I shall be still more proud if we can disarm in order to aspire and to conquer.

"Our enemy is the violence and the baseness in all mankind. Our ally is the decency and kindness that is felt in the breasts of men from John O'Groats to Gibraltar, from Heligoland to Manila. The petty fights of the English-speaking people have been the selfish ones. Our glorious victories have been the victories of all mankind."—Jeffrey Farnol, English Author. Quoted in Kansas City Star.

Another year is like a beautiful, sturdy mountain, reaching into the infinite. When we behold it from below, we are awed by its majesty and thrilled by the experience of climbing it and seeing the view from its not easily mastered crown. It has no well-trodden paths; none has passed that way before. But to climb will be to reach new heights and see new visions and dream new dreams.—Richard K. Morton, in "In the New Year Let's Climb!" The Epworth Herald.

The Pigeonhole

■ The Proletarian, Again

The Proletarian was gently boiling this morning against the professors who, he says, try only to justify, rather than to improve, the capitalistic order of society. "I don't care who he is, or how many letters he has after his name," he declared this morning, "but when he tries to defend one group of men in starving another group of men to death by a monopoly on commodities, he is wrong! . . . ." Centuries ago, Jesus stood among his followers, crying out his indignation at the same kind of people: "Woe unto you, scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

■ Pinochle

A man, devoted to the church, had a son. The son wanted to bring his friends and play pinochle in the home. The man let them do it once. He suffered from remorse of conscience, and refused to let them ever to do it again. Within three months they were playing pinochle and other games in a gambling joint downtown. The boy refuses to go to church under any circumstances. It is no longer a matter of doubt whether the man has a son: the world has taken him, body, soul, and earthly possessions.

Another man, in the same neighborhood, equally devoted to the church, also had a son. The son wanted to bring his friends and play pinochle in the home. If it hadn't been pinochle it might have been something else. He let them do it not once, but several times. Pinochle continued to be interesting for about six weeks. Then they dropped it of their own accord. Now they are planning their spring baseball activities. The boys still come to the man's home. They do not visit the gambling joint downtown. The man still has a son. And he and his crowd still go to church.

These are facts, not arguments.

You can draw your own conclusions.

■ Fasting

While Daddy was working late at the schoolhouse one evening, Mother was getting the kiddies ready for bed, and she told them about the Fast Day announced for March 4. Overnight, the idea grew in importance but lost some of its clarity in one little head. Next morning at breakfast the child broke the news: "Oh, Daddy, we're supposed to fast on Sunday. Brother Fred. M. wants us to fast for vitamin D!" Mother is now checking up on her methods of religious education in the home.

"What's your idea of civilization?" the Prince of Wales was asked.

"It's a good idea," replied the Prince. "Somebody ought to start it."—Readers' Digest.

The General Conference

Plans to Attend Receiving and caring for the large number of conference visitors will be a task of considerable difficulty, and visitors should try to make their plans so that they can announce their coming and state their needs to the Housing Committee.

The Conference Daily Whether church members can attend the conference or not, they will want a copy of the Conference Daily Herald for a permanent record of the activities and events of the session. As announced by an advertisement at the back of this issue, the regular list of subscribers to the daily will have to be made up by March 23 in order to handle the large volume of mailing that will be necessary. After March 23 there will be no possibility of getting on the regular list, which offers the advantage of the special price of the fifty-cent subscription rate. Orders that come later than March 23 can be handled on a special list at a higher rate. For details, see the advertisement.

Special Fast Day Members all over the world will be greatly interested in the conference, and, following the announcement of President Smith, will fast on Sunday, March 4, and participate in special services of prayer for the welfare of the conference. The General Conference is not alone the concern of those who attend; it is the business of the whole church, and it is the privilege of every member to pray that the Divine Will may rule in the deliberations of the assembly. And we can expect the conference to be successful in arranging the work of the church in the measure that the people are interested and prayerful in its behalf.

We and the church are the threshold of new times and untried ways. The world is launching into a future whose nature we are not able to predict with any certainty, and it is inevitable that the church will be carried to new conditions along with it, do what we will. Though changes may come, our destiny is in our own hands, and what happens to us depends upon whether we are content to take things as they come or whether we are determined to follow the leadership of Christ into a new Promised Land.

L. L.

"Opportunity makes the man, but only when he knows what to do with it."

Perils of the Times

A Powder Magazine The prospects for another world war loom dangerously ahead of us. The slaughter of men, women, and children, and the shelling of residence apartments by Chancellor Dollfus of Austria, in his desperate efforts to maintain his power can do him and his party little good. With Hitler's Nazi adherents waiting for the chance to overthrow him, and with Italy and France waiting to pounce on Hitler at the slightest move toward Austria, it looks as if the world may be about to undergo another holocaust of blood.

Causes Back of the unrest which is provoking all these threats of war, there are several causes: ambition, intrigue, nationalism, and disappointment in past wars and diplomacy. But greatest of all causes is the absolute desperation of the populations. When the great mass of the people have miserably existed for years with insufficient food and clothing, unemployed and inadequately housed, and when they see positively no hope in the existing regimes for any change for the better, they cease to care what happens. Their philosophy is: "Anything may be better than this. It is as well to die as to live any longer as we are. We will follow any leader who can promise us something better. If we succeed, perhaps we shall be well and happy. If we fail, we can only die once, and we had better do it now."

Sympathy With the nationalism and the spirit of aggressive militarism of some of those peoples we can have no sympathy. Our country can never again feel justified in participating in a war with them, and against others in the protection of their interests. But for their sufferings we should have the greatest possible sympathy.

Needs All they ask is an opportunity to live. But it takes land to provide the living, and there is no land to be had unless it is wrested by violence from other nations and other peoples. Add to that the fact that the lands have been conquered and reconquered many times, and that there is hardly any nation in Europe that cannot look across its borders and see vast lands that were once held by its people. These conditions present causes of trouble which it seems no efforts of diplomacy and no provisions of treaties can ever permanently settle. The explosive is always there. It only needs someone to set it off.

ACROSS THE DESK

By F. M. S.

— Informal Chats From the Office of the President —

PRESIDENT
FREDERICK M. SMITH

BROTHER RICHARD BALDWIN, one of our active patriarchs, in a report to the Presidency giving statistically his activities for the year, reports a total number of 255 sermons preached, 475 services attended and 59 baptized. This, together with other activities such as administration to the sick, pastoral visits, patriarchal blessings, etc., etc., indicates that Brother Baldwin has had a very active ministerial year and we doubt not that his ministrations have brought comfort and pleasure to many of the Saints.

BROTHER JOHN SHIELDS, one of the long-time active workers of the church, in a recent report covering the month of December appends a note saying that the day on which that report was written, namely, December 31st, was the fiftieth anniversary of his baptismal day. We congratulate Brother Shields on his long-time membership in the church and his faithfulness to the cause.

J. L. PRENTICE, presiding elder of the Toronto Branch, says:

"We are getting here in Toronto one of the finest groups of young men in the priesthood and they are all quite active. They are putting on the finals of the Ontario Oratorical Competition at London next Sunday and this is to be an annual affair hereafter for the young people. It would make you feel proud to hear these young men speak on church topics when competing."

We commend Brother Prentice on developing young men thus and appreciate the good work being done.

BROTHER J. L. VERHEI of Portland, Oregon, says:

"Everywhere the growing conviction is coming on the Saints that now is the time for drawing closer together and a very pronounced spirit of forgiveness is being made manifest," for which Brother Verhei is duly thankful.

BROTHER E. R. DAVIS, in writing of conditions found in certain parts of Illinois, says:

"We are beginning to hear the rumblings of the old saloon days with drunken brawls, shootings, stabbings, and auto accidents. This licensing of 'John Barleycorn' may put a few more dollars in circulation, but 'Watchman, what of the night?'"

Brother Davis' question is pertinent. "What of the night," and how can liquor be dispensed by the drink without a recrudescence of the saloon?

W. H. DAWSON, presiding elder of Sacramento Branch, in speaking of their work there tells of the fine spirit which prevailed at their meeting when inventories were formally filed by a march to the altar. He says that sixty-one inventories were filed, as against eighteen last year, which is a commendable increase, and then he adds,

"The Auburn Mission, forty miles east of us which we maintain from here, filed one hundred percent."

He speaks of the beautiful spirit which came into the meeting and which carried over into their sacrament service which followed, testimonies being of the highest quality and the gift of prophecy being exercised, while tears of joy stood in the eyes of many.

He also speaks of enjoying the work of Brother McDowell who has sojourned with him for a time in an official way.

A FEW DAYS ago Sister William Davis took the time to write me a few lines, as she expressed it, to let me know that our old missionary, Elder William Davis, had just passed his eightieth birthday, his natal day being the 24th of January. She reminds me that Brother Davis has put in fifty years of his life in gospel work and finds himself just as anxious as ever to do all that his strength and health permit him to do. Sister Davis rejoices that she has strength enough to minister to her aged companion as he needs, and I am sure that all of Brother Davis's many friends will rejoice to know that things are as well with him as they are and that Sister Davis has the strength to minister to the brave old warrior as he may have need. May the divine blessing be upon the aged couple.

BROTHER W. H. MANNERING writes that he is actively engaged in church work in Texas. We are always glad to know that these old-time missionaries continue their warm zeal in the interest of the church.

D. J. WILLIAMS, of Chatham, Ontario, writes to the Presidency on district matters, and conveys the sad news that Brother Stewart Lamont had passed away just before the writing of the letter. Stewart Lamont is a name which has long been connected with the work at Chatham and this good brother will be greatly missed by the Saints to whom he has so long ministered. It brings sadness to see these old-time, dependable workers passing into the beyond.

JOHAN F. GARVER, writing from the office, reporting on his activities, says:

"I am just in this Tuesday morning from conferences of the Southeastern and Central Illinois Districts, the latter at Taylorville, the former at Mount Vernon. I have no hesitancy in saying these were the best conferences I have ever attended in these districts. At each we had a very fine attendance, every branch being represented. A good response and liberty and power attended the preaching of the word and moved the people forward in their prayer services. I had not been in either of these districts for a year. I noticed a marked advance in the thinking and interest and devotion of the Saints."

It is good to hear of improved conditions prevailing in the districts and branches. Brother Garver doubtless rejoices to see improvement as the result of his labors.

Special Notice to Conference Visitors

All visitors to the General Conference not having private arrangements and desiring rooms for their stay in Independence should write as soon as possible indicating how many rooms are desired for accommodation and the dates for which the reservations should be made. Also indicate whether you are willing to share rooms with someone else. Address requests for room to the Housing Committee, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. Conference dates are Friday, April 6, to Saturday, April 14.

Men You Ought to Know

GEORGE G. LEWIS

Of the Quorum of Twelve

Since coming into the Quorum, Apostle George G. Lewis has fulfilled the highest hopes and expectations of his friends and of the church people. For one so young, he has had to shoulder heavy responsibilities, but, possessed of the character and spirit, he soon developed the strength necessary for his office.

His later training, both academic and official, was taken in America. But upon his ordination he was sent back to his native Australia. Like a good warrior, however, he did not go empty handed. He took an American wife and daughter with him. With two Americans in his family—his wife Edith, and daughter, Alice June—he felt outvoted. But now another Australian, Rosemary, has joined the family, and they are back on a fifty-fifty basis so to speak. And all doing well, thank you!

Credentials

Notice to District Presidents and Secretaries:

Delegate Credentials must be in the hands of the Credentials Committee before your delegates can be seated in the General Conference on April 6. In order to choose the correct number of delegates you must ascertain the total membership of your district from the Statistical Department. As soon as the date of your conference is known write the Statistical Department, giving such date. The latest figures for the enrollment of your district together with a credential blank will be sent you at once.

THE CREDENTIALS COMMITTEE, By C. L. OLSON.

Our "Sunday Evening Club"

By Arthur A. Sherman

Of Central Church, Chicago, Illinois

Our Sunday evening services were typical ones, with an average attendance of from ten to thirty, depending upon the weather, personal feelings, radio programs, and the sundry other things that affect Sunday evening church attendance, and we felt that if some of the others in the neighborhood could pack their churches we could too.

We started a Sunday Evening Club, putting on each week "A worship service of interest and beauty," engaging only the finest speakers from the three local branches and neighboring towns.

We patterned our service somewhat after the Sunday Evening Club that meets downtown in Orchestra Hall at first, and have made many interesting changes from time to time.

It worked out very well.

Immediately our attendance jumped from the former low average to seventy-five, and as high as one hundred and fifty.

We had our full choir performing every Sunday night—something hitherto impossible because they were absent.

We have imported talent for these "club" services not only from our other branches in town but from many other churches, Catholic, Episcopal, etc. At one service we had the three choirs from our Chicago branches perform at the same service.

We have enjoyed addresses from such general church men as F. H. Edwards, Paul M. Hanson, G. L. DeLapp, and others.

Next Sunday evening we celebrate our first anniversary, with J. F. Garver addressing us.

We have booked for services in the next few weeks a "Welsh Choir" from a church at Clearing, Illinois, and the entire choir of Saint Mark's Episcopal Church, from which we have only recently had a male and stringed quartette.

Our services have been attended to quite an extent by outsiders—neighbors and friends of our members.

Many of these outsiders have volunteered to assist in the "club" work in getting talent for us, and in other work such as publicity, etc.

The building up of our Sunday evening services is our main objective, but here is what has been accomplished along other lines since the awakening following the institution of the club.

Our grounds around the church which were barren or overrun with weeds have been sodded with grass and landscaped with trees and shrubbery. A concrete carriage walk has been installed all can do a lot," said an old philosopher, "if they only want to. The trouble is, a gettin' 'em to want to."

"Young People—

Apparently, the young people of Central Chicago Church wanted to do something, with the results briefly described on this page.

This was not written as an article. It was only a friendly personal letter. With a few omissions and changes, we present it here as it came to us.

The author was one of a group of young people who grew up in this Chicago branch. Older heads wagged solemnly over them, wondering what they were "coming to." Yes, they were problems, too—about fifteen of them!

But here they are, grown-up, and at work serving the church.

along the curb on both Sixty-sixth Street and Honore Street, and a pipe fence rail installed to protect these improvements and make them permanent.

The old hot air furnace which once adorned our auditorium has been junked, a modern steam plant installed, in the basement, and the interior of the entire building decorated, and the kitchen modernized.

We expect, this year, to make further improvements to the outside of the building which in effect will give us a new church. . . .

This activity has encouraged similar movements in the other Chicago branches, and has brought inquiries and comment from branches as far removed as California.

We are handicapped by the scarcity of suitable speakers and anticipate occasional invitations to outside pastors, which will no doubt create a greater fraternity with our neighboring church members. Our speakers refrain from controversy and doctrinal disputations, feeling that the best good will be accomplished in the teaching of the higher Christian ideals, and in bringing larger circles of friends to the church.

We are desirous of learning in advance when the headquarters men are passing through our city, as they do throughout the year, so that we may have them to speak for us when possible.

(The author is director of music for the club, William Keir is president, and Floyd McNickle is organist.)

Education

In our land some education is possible for everyone who has the mental capacity and the strength of character to obtain it. Education is not the panacea for all our ills that some have believed, but no one can afford to be without it in our day. Its financial value, however, is its least value. Education makes one a citizen of the world and puts him into fellowship with all who live today, and with the noblest and best of all who have lived in the past. If we have not read, we are not properly equipped for life.—Young People's Leader.

Are you afraid of death? Why should you be? Learn to live courageously, and you will neither fear death nor seek it. You will live! You will discover, the more fully you live, that life is not primarily of the body or of the world about us, but of the spirit and the world within us. Life does not begin when we are born, neither does it cease if we lay the body aside.

Death is not an escape from personal identity or responsibility. It is not "a sleep and a forgetting." It is not a transformation from imperfection to perfection, nor the fulfillment of this life by reward or punishment. It is an illusion. It is what might be true but for the fact that we have no life of our own to lose, that our life is a part of God's life, and that God's life is eternal.

Life goes on. It cannot be defeated. Not even death can defeat life, which merely adapts itself to different conditions as water adapts itself to the vessel that contains it.—Ernest C. Wilson, in "Don't Be Afraid!" Progress.

Dallas Branch Dedicates Church

For long years Saints of Dallas, Texas, have dreamed of a branch organization and a church edifice all their own, and now they are cherishing both. February 11, was a memorable day for the branch, their church building being dedicated to the service of the Lord. Officiating in the ceremony were District President C. W. Tischer, Pastor H. H. Davenport, Apostle R. S. Budd, Bishop L. F. P. Curry, and others.

Services of the day tended to recall to the memory of the worshipers the pioneer struggles and endeavors of early Saints in Dallas County and the earnest ministry of such missionaries as T. J. Shepherd, S. W. Simmons, H. O. Smith, E. L. Henson, J. W. Wight, B. F. Renfro, John Harp, J. M. Nunley, W. M. Aylor, G. R. Kuykendall, W. R. Standifer, and B. F. Spicer.

James W. Davis Holds Services at Detroit

Missionary services of the highest order were closed at East Side Church, Detroit, February 4, by Elder James W. Davis, according to officers and workers in that congregation. For two weeks Brother Davis labored there taking for his theme, "The Significance of a Personal God and the Need of a Present Tense Religion."

Wichita Gives Stanch Support to Missionary Series

Wichita Branch, Kansas, was thoroughly organized for the missionary series which Elder William I. Fligg began January 14. "Special attendance" nights were assigned to various groups and classes, including the young people, the men's Bible class, the choir, the children, the intermediates, and others, and at the close of the meetings a silver loving cup was awarded the class having the largest percentage present.

An unusual service of welcome was given Brother Fligg on the Saturday night preceding the opening, representatives from each department being present and pledging their support in the missionary undertaking. Cooperation was the watchword. Two candidates were baptized on the closing day by the branch pastor.

Kansas City Women Present Gift

A sum of five hundred dollars was the gift presented to Bishop C. A. Skinner by Central Church Women's Club, of Kansas City Stake, January 1, this year. The collecting and giving of money to the church compose only one of the many activities of this group of energetic women. This gift, they designated, was to be applied on the church debt.

"Health Day" for Lennox Mission, California

Doctor A. W. Teel, church physician, was guest speaker on "Health Day," January 21, at Lennox Mission, California. In the morning he gave an inspiring health message. At noon a real Latter Day Saint dinner was served, there being meatless meat loaf and raw vegetable and fruit salads. At the round-table discussion in the afternoon Doctor Teel gave a list of foods appropriate for an anti-gastritis diet.

Churches Participate in National Boy Scout Week

National Boy Scout Week, February 8 to 14, was observed by many branches of our church. Special services and ceremonies reviewed the history of scouting in the United States and made friends for this nation-wide boy movement. In Independence, Lamoni, and a dozen other cities where the church sponsors Boy Scout troops, scout programs were given.

At Chelsea Church, Kansas City Stake, the eleven o'clock service February 11, honored the scouts, and Elder George Mesley was the guest speaker. Brother Mesley was a scoutmaster in his native land, Australia. When he left for America, one of his scouts gave him a staff. Since that time Brother Mesley has carved his scout history on his staff. In his talk to Chelsea boys he related some of his scout experiences and told what the various symbols on his staff represent.

And now the Boy Scout troops in compliance with President Roosevelt's request that "Scouts of the nation collect such household furnishings as people may be able to share as gifts with those in need," have begun work in the collection of articles of clothing, bedding, and household equipment. In Independence all of the five troops sponsored by the church, are engaged in this activity.

Programs and Activities

East Bay Young People Busy

Berkeley, California.—The young people of East Bay Branch are making February a busy month with many activities to occupy their time. A few items from their program will offer suggestions and inspirations to others: Four young men discussed, "What is our place in the church today?" at an evening service. . . . To accompany the chin music, a pair of good vocal numbers by the girls' chorus. . . . A Valentine party with Cupid, darts, hearts, and everything. . . . A real fellowship service at the church on Sunday evening. . . . And they have fireside meetings, too, featuring a leading talk and general discussion afterward. . . . It all sounds so cheerful and friendly. Walter Weldon, president of their organization, keeps them working.

Behavior in Public

All people in the streets, or anywhere in public, should be careful not to talk too loud. They should especially avoid pronouncing people's names, or making personal remarks that may attract passing attention or give a clue to their identity.

There is nothing that stamps the climbing parvenu more than advertising his possessions or achievements by loud word of mouth—anywhere!

Not to attract attention to oneself in public, is one of the fundamental rules of good breeding. Shun conspicuous manners, conspicuous clothes, a loud voice, staring at people, knocking into them, talking across anyone—in a word do not attract attention to yourself. Do not expose your private affairs, feelings or innermost thoughts in public. You are knocking down the walls of your house when you do.—Emily Post, in Etiquette.

Perfection

Perhaps few of us ever feel that we have been perfect for a single day. But every good man aims at perfection every hour. Above all other desires and achievements he wants to be right—right with himself, right with others, and right with God. In the end we must all become what we desire most to be. No one can become righteous who does not love righteousness more than all else—not for what it will bring, but for its own sake. But he who sets his affections on the things that are above where Christ is, will become like Christ.—Young People's Leader.

"See You at Conference"

ROY A. CHEVILLE
Of Graceland College

On account of duties elsewhere, he may not be at the conference long. But whether present or absent, his influence will be felt for the expansion and enrichment of the good way of life for young people. Always sympathetic and companionable with young people, he has done much to inspire them and to point a clear path through the intellectual difficulties and emotional storms that come to them in their youth.

Study and Its Secret

Study consists in focusing the mind upon the subject in hand. In very early life we have almost no power of voluntary attention; and even the mature scholar can hold his mind on a given object only for an instant by his own will power. The little child scarcely has any mind that he can call his own. He lives out of doors, on the highways of sensation and thither by the bright baubles and the entrancing sounds around him. He surrenders himself completely and on the spot to the last and gaudiest attraction that bids for his attention. We laugh at professors and philosophers for being absent-minded. In reality they are not absent-minded at all; they are so present-minded that they are utterly oblivious of their bodies and of everything around them. They have learned the art of study, and are giving attention mightily.

With children—and with many college students—it is exactly the opposite. Their bodies are chained to the tasks before them, but their minds are absent on other and more attractive pursuits. Now the trouble with many students is that they are still children. They have never learned how to hold their attention closely and sternly to a set task. They are given to dawdling and to idle day-dreaming. They are at the mercy of every sensation and every enticement. An educated person learns "to do the thing he does not want to do, at the time he does not want to do it."

In the long run the secret of study resides in our ability to bathe our thought, our task, our lesson in the stream of interest. The way to study successfully and joyously is to be interested in the thing that claims our attention.—R. L. Lyman in The Mind at Work.

Coming to Conference

Three more people have made an early decision to attend the General Conference in April. Miss Mattie Scott, of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, writes that she and two friends are planning to come. The friends are: Mrs. Mary Vickrey and Mrs. R. Vickrey.

We are glad to hear from young people in various branches who are planning to attend. It is early yet, but not too early to decide to come. There will be a warm welcome for visitors by Independence and Kansas City young people, and plans are under way now. The committees will be anxious to know how many to expect.

Freedom

Each generation has its own useful and necessary function with respect to the younger, but the one thing it is always doing and has no right to do is to try to cast youth in the same mould in which itself was cast. The world is full of loving and well-meaning parents who will do anything for their children except get off their backs.

Individual, non-competitive self-expression, together with group-consciousness and cooperation: until by some means these things are integrated into our educational system it will fail to meet the needs of modern youth.—Claude Bragdon, in The New Image.

Jesus always trusted men, and expected the best from them, not because He did not know men, but because He did. He deliberately refused to look at what He did not like. In His best known sermon He did not say, cursed are the proud, the luxurious, the corrupt in heart; but blessed are the meek, the poor in spirit, the pure in heart. He assumed that such qualities existed and sought to educate them by trusting them.—Henry E. Jackson in Great Pictures as Moral Teachers.

Why One Should Belong to the Church

By Paul M. Hanson

A sermon delivered at Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, January 14, 1934. Reported by Belle Robinson James.

OUR LESSON is selected from the writings of Saint Matthew:

"When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the son of man am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—16: 13-18.

Our text: "Upon this rock I will build my church." The church preceded the writings of the Holy Scriptures—the Bible did not produce the church.

Jesus, after having traveled with his apostles over the flower-be-decked hills of Galilee, all the while desiring to develop in their minds the truth respecting himself, asked them: "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?" Then passing from this generality he asked: "Whom say ye that I am?" Under certain conditions the mind can act very quickly in gathering up multitudinous evidences and drawing therefrom conclusions that are sensed as right, confirmed as such under the light of the Spirit of God. Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Think what experiences flitted through his mind before he declared his conclusion! Jesus replied: "Blessed art thou Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock"—what comes from heaven and not from flesh and blood—"I will build my church; and the gates of hell"—with the church so built upon the rock—"shall not prevail against it."

This unique truth respecting the church was disclosed through Jesus Christ.

One needs a light when moving in the dark, to avoid collisions and bruises. A lantern will not suffice. There is no organization among men like the church. What a marvelous institution! Divinely conceived and designed, and placed within the reach of man. Not an institution of man's devising. Not a society brought forth from an uninspired conclave of men, but an organization so perfect and marvelous as to be designated in the New Testament the "body of Christ." The church, therefore, is the special means through which the love and life and power and justice of God is expressed to all. There is no organization outside of it that inculcates the two great commandments. A perfect medium it is for unfolding the intelligence of God, which may in human life develop into the more abundant life that Jesus came to give. If anyone desires to know the mind and Spirit and attitudes of God, turn to the life of Jesus Christ. I cannot conceive of God being any different in all his relations with humanity from Jesus Christ. Christ was God veiled in the habiliments of the flesh. And his life of richness was to be made possible by obeying his doctrine, having faith in his promises, and observing his ordinances, through the instrumentality of the church—designed to reach out from his disciples even to peoples and nations who know not the Lord.

PAUL M. HANSON
Of the Quorum of Twelve

THE CHURCH sets forth what is transitory and what is eternal. When we hear its teachings promulgated, or see them set forth on the printed page, somehow if we are intellectually honest and disposed to faithfully use the high faculties of our soul, we feel that what is presented are what they purport to be. No need to go through life testing out this and testing out that and by experience suffering, in some cases intolerably, and then in the sunset of life decide that one ought to recognize after all someone greater than oneself, and that in Jesus Christ is the highest expression of truth and right living ever made known to man.

Without the church, the gospel of Christ itself would be ineffectual and inoperative. The gospel was placed by Him who had authority to so place it—in the custody of the church. Religion is the only thing that gives men moral principles and moral standards. It alone produces character and responsibility. The church is concerned with religion, and he who thinks carefully will sense that religion in giving to men a sense of responsibility for their conduct, must enter into the reconstruction of the world itself.

What does the church offer? Here are a few words—a sample of what it offers—that came from the Apostle Paul: “Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.” The church in every age can never afford to look upon that admonition as a minor one among admonitions given through accredited representatives of God.

THE MOST POTENT MORAL RESTRAINT is habitual contemplation of holy things. An habitual hanging up on the walls of the mind of such pictures as the words of Paul offer and indulging in contemplation of truth, honesty, justice, purity, and loveliness, will make of men intellectual and spiritual giants. There is nothing more true than that God builds on life at its highest expression. Not understanding this is why many people do not find God, and then not finding him, they wonder if he exists, and then perhaps decide on trying to make a success going through life with their creator left out of consideration.

The church keeps fresh in the minds of men, God, and Christ, and the Holy Spirit, and love, and justice, and salvation, and home, and country. These words become active, meaningful parts of our vocabulary. Where is your road taking you? What a lonely thwarted personality is a person who belongs to nothing! He is tending all the while to be antisocial. Friends, church members, where is your road taking you? Some may think—“Well here—look at so and so and a few others like them in the church, they strike one as being hypocrites”—and then superficially conclude, “and so one is as well out of the church as in it.” Now you who can so sense hypocrisy are just the kind of men that Christ needs in his church to help keep it on the rock. Life soon passes. A very short span of time that we occupy here among our fellows. Death does not change character or outlook except perhaps to make one more conscious of things as they are, intensifying remorse, if there is ground for remorse, and enlarging joy if there is cause for joy. If at the great tribunal of God, where all shall stand to be judged, you were asked, “Why did you decline to cast your lot with Christ? Why did you not join His church?” What would you say? Would you not be ashamed of the reason you entertained regarding certain weaklings in this life? At once you would think: If those persons were as small as I imagined, how small I must be in order to hide myself behind them from the gaze of the great God who is Eternal?

If there be some who find in the mysteries of Christianity, something in the nature of obstacles, let me suggest: may not those very things be proof of the church being a Divine institution? If there was no mystery, where would God be? Wherever the infinite God works with men there are plenty of things that the finite mind cannot understand. Mystery—plenty of it. I do not know how God can forgive sin. To me it is a profound mystery, as much so as the nature of life in a blade of grass. But I know that such forgiveness is a reality, and that the pardoning power of God brings joy that is inexpressible.

THE CHURCH exercises a great influence in the early formative period of life. I speak from experience. My grandparents on the maternal side, thinking they had heard the gospel of Christ in its fullness, left their home in Denmark, in one of the most beautiful agricultural regions I have ever seen, and came to this land. Not able to speak a word of English—and all their relatives left in their homeland. They were on their way to Zion in Utah, for what they had heard fell from the lips of representatives of the church presided over by Brigham Young. They had not heard anything about the doctrines espoused by that body that have impressed so many as being obnoxious to Christianity. My mother—now in this congregation, as a girl of about seven years walked nearly all the way from Florence, near Omaha, across the plains, one of a company going in wagons drawn by oxen. The Indians swooped down on their camp at one time, and a woman was carried away by the Indians and never heard from again. On the wagons rumbled to the Great Salt Lake Valley. And then it was not long before they heard taught, from what they thought would be the altar of the Lord’s house, a thing they could not accept—plural marriage. They left Utah as soon as they could make arrangements to do so. Later they cast their lot with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and rejoiced in the fullness of truth that it offered, and in the associations that made their hearts burn for joy.

And somehow, the ideal of a Latter Day Saint captured my young imagination. I thought what a great thing to love one’s religion and to be true to one’s convictions. (Continued on page 242.)

The Honor List of Service to Others

By Q. Swann

SITTING in a cubicle of a hairdressing department one day in a very busy store, I said to the young woman attendant, "What a lively and industrious store this is! Is it ever quiet?" "No, indeed," she said, "isn't it dreadful?" And then I fell to studying her face in the mirror as she bent over my head and concentrated on her work.

She was not the ordinary type, but strong looking and robust. Her hair waved back from her forehead which was wide and intellectual. We continued to chat about things in general. The lucky ballots drifted into our conversations as it was Christmas time and her firm puts up hampers and presents of value. Tickets are sold and the lucky number draws the goods. To my inquiry she said: "No, I have never been lucky yet. Every year mother and I share a sweepstake ticket. Mother plans the lovely house she will have with round corners or dustless ones. We make plans and design and furnish each room. But luck has not yet come our way." "And you?" I queried.

"I have only one wish," she returned after some hesitation. I waited a little while and then, "Could you tell me?" "Well, mother thinks I am crazy. She can't understand. But I want to live on a farm in Africa." The young woman looked almost shamefaced at her confession. "Africa is a wonderful and mysterious country," was my reply, "and I don't wonder at your desire to live there." "I love horses and dogs," she continued. "When I was small we lived in the country. We had several horses and I was never so happy as when I was astride one. We had a bakery, too, and although we kept a number of cats there were many mice. We could not keep them down. We had round bins in our bakery and the mice used to fall into them and could not get out. Then I would put my hand down to lift them out and play with them. How their little hearts used to beat as I held them!"

NEVER BEFORE had I met a young woman who liked to play with mice, but I admitted that I always felt sorry when I saw a mouse caught in a trap.

She then went on to tell me that her dream would never come true. She was an only child and her parents would grieve at the thought of losing her. So here was a brave and adventurous-minded girl, riding madly over the veldt, fishing in the rivers, or exploring the dark regions of the forest, surrounded by dozens of dogs, living in the open, but all this only in her dreams. In real life she works conscientiously mixing her shampoos and dressings, combing, pressing and patting waves of hair in place. All the time her heart yearns for greater things. I admire this friend. She is not more than twenty years old, but she has a keen sense of duty.

That little word duty—only four letters in it, yet it means so much in human relationships.

There are very many young people whose time is spent doing tasks that are unwelcome, uncongenial; but they face each day with serenity, making the best of their opportunities. They do not complain. That is fine. How we admire these qualities—loyalty, cheerfulness, serenity, duty-loving and doing! For ourselves we say: "If only I had a chance to do the things I want to do." In the meantime we sometimes forget to do the best we can for ourselves and others and so make life happy.

NOBLE I called this girl in my thoughts, and as I left I said: "I hope sincerely that someday you will have your wish."

I know another young woman whose name should be put on this "honor list" of duty and an uncomplaining spirit. She would be greatly surprised if she knew that I was writing of her. She is the eldest of six. Her mother is living but her father died four years ago. This girl seems to take the whole responsibility of the household. She is twenty-six years old. Her mother is big and comfortable, likes all her needs supplied, and does not worry overmuch. Amy hands every penny of her earnings over to her mother each week. Sometimes in the evenings she goes out to sew at a friend's home. She is fortunate to be able to do this for in return her friend gives her cast-off clothing which she reconverts. Any money that Amy makes apart from this is always pounced upon for the "gas bill," or other expenses. She makes all the clothes for her two young sisters. Over the week-end when most young people seek pleasure or at least rest, she is busy cooking and cleaning. Often she polishes every floor in the house.

In return for this she sleeps in an attic and is not even allowed to take a friend home with her. She has a responsible and well paid position. If she wished she could hire a flat, have pretty clothes, and good times. But Duty stands before her and she faithfully plays her part. Amy is not drab or uninteresting, but she is (Continued on page 243.)

"Alcoholism"

By A. W. Teel, M. D.
Church Physician

THE APPARENT NECESSITY for the ministry and layman to understand more fully the action of legalized alcoholic beverages on the human mechanism is what has prompted me to write this article. Regardless of the writer's personal opinion concerning the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment or whether or not he believes in use of the drug in scientific medicine will not influence him in setting forth the action of alcohol on the human system which has been gleaned from his own observation and research work as well as from men of unquestionable reputation in public health work and scientific attainments. Approaching this subject I realize that "it is equally inflammable whether one touches a match to it or writes about it."

By the term alcoholism is meant the physical and mental changes induced by it in sufficient quantities to act as a poison. It is classed as one of the chief habit-forming drugs along with opium and its alkaloids, especially morphine, codeine, heroin and cocaine. Much has been written concerning it as a sociologic problem and it has only recently been realized that any drug that produces a habit has important public health aspects. Whisky, wine and beer are the principal forms in which alcohol is imbibed but there are some who are addicted to the habit of drinking tincture of ginger, spirits of lavender, tincture of capsicum and cologne water instead, believing it to be a more refined method of inducing intoxication.

In sufficient concentration alcohol is a poison to all living matter, both animal and vegetable. The effects of a sufficient quantity taken in a short time are known as acute alcoholism and the term chronic alcoholism is applied to that state which is the product of the long continued action of considerable quantities of the poison.

Mania-a-potu is a term applied to acute alcoholic delirium in certain susceptible subjects. Delirium tremens occurs in the course of chronic alcoholism characterized by delirium with trembling brought about by its derangement of the stomach preventing its assimilation. Quite frequently, however, these terms are applied indiscriminately. When applied to the skin evaporation being prevented, it excites a sense of heat, itching and superficial inflammation. In this respect it is not unlike other volatile and irritating substances. When applied to wounds in a concentrated solution it acts first as astringent and then as a caustic. Its effects on mucous membranes are similar to those on wounds. When taken into the stomach alcohol causes a sense of warmth, which diffuses over the abdomen, and is quickly followed by a general glow over the whole body. Like all irritants the mucous membrane of the stomach is more or less reddened by the increased blood supply to the part with its resultant congestion (hyperaemia). Usually this only occurs in patches most noticeable about the upper part of the stomach. Occasionally ulcerations are common in the lower part of the oesophagus and in the stomach caused by more or less detachment of the epithelium. A more or less intense congestion also, in the mucous membrane of the trachea and bronchial tubes occurs extending to the lungs. Similar conditions are found in the brain the membranes being more or less deeply injected presenting an edematous (swelled) state extending to the lymph spaces and often to the brain substance itself. This condition is commonly called a "wet brain" among pathologists.

"Fusel" oil is often used in the manufacture of cheap liquors which adds to its harmful effects. The symptoms of acute alcoholism are familiar to every one especially those who have lived during the saloon age. During that age the disorderly conduct, the uncertain gait, the alcoholic breath and the perverted mentality due to the inhibitory functions of the brain being interfered with allowed every foolish thought and idea to be carried out in actions, was a common occurrence.

There are three well-defined stages of intoxication designated as the first, second and third stages. The first stage is the stage of exhilaration and warmth "when one twenty-five-cent piece looks like two and an inclination to step on the gas" is produced by only a small quantity of the drug, resulting in vascular relaxation due to the paralyzing effect of the poison on the vaso-motor center. The second stage causes a partial functional paralysis of the nerve centers and signifies the further action of the narcotic and the third is a stage of dead drunkenness in which the individual passes into a deep sleep or coma in which he awakes more or less confused, with a disordered digestive tract and a depressed nervous system. While in the state of acute coma the patient has difficult and stertorous breathing, full congested face and relaxation of the voluntary muscles and sometimes of the sphincters. in the third stage (Continued on page 242.)

One of the Least

LARRY gazed in astonishment at the preacher in the stand who one by one was refuting all her favorite arguments and ideas about sermons. He was a young man of attractive appearance; he had a pleasing voice and pulpit personality. Try as she might she could not help but like him. She did not know him personally, but had learned from Carmen, who sat beside her, that Brother Calahan's family was one of which a minister in the church might be very proud, and that they lived in Independence.

Until this hour Larry had steadfastly maintained that the world could get along very happily on one half the sermons it heard every week. She had permitted herself to feel almost disdainful of sermons as a method of teaching people. Sermons were like patent medicine—much talked about, quite disagreeable, and not very effective. For those and other reasons she failed to enjoy sermons. All the ecclesiastical discourses she had ever listened to fell in three classes. First, there were those pleading for money. They prodded you to do your duty to the church by emptying your pockets to the lining. Then there were doctrinal sermons, all about the things in which the church believed, this principle and that belief; but too frequently these sermons did not emphasize the application of these beliefs and principles. Greg had said once that such sermons just didn't "click" with him. As for the third class, she was little interested or concerned—these were sermons about heaven and the whole hereafter. A mere conglomeration of speculation for otherwise idle minds, Larry thought.

YET HERE was a young man who dared to stand in the Stone Church pulpit, a pulpit fairly corroded with traditions, and looking you in the face, tell you how to live. As she sat there beside Carmen, Larry was dismayed at his open attack on her theory concerning the utility of sermons.

And now he was exhorting his listeners to love God and show their love by consecrated service; to be not hearers of the word only, but doers. He was stressing prayer. And then he opened the Scriptures:

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

Why—oh, why, had he picked that particular selection, wondered the girl. She felt most uncomfortable, as if he might know something about her last week-end at Lakeside Cottage, as if he were condemning her before the entire congregation. Suddenly Larry had the impression that her soul was not the rampant. The church has these things to face—its members have these problems to solve. Not one of us can dodge these things. All must face them at some time or other, the old, the young. To each one of us there come times when we must choose between the way God would have us go, and the way men would have us go. . . ."

"Is he talking about the Royal Road now and comparing it with the Speedway?" Larry asked herself.

". . . I have not the heart to condemn one class of our people above another. One class has surrendered to worldly things as much as another," the speaker continued. "All of us are guilty in some degree—some more than others, it is true—of worldliness. All of us have forgotten that we are to be in the world but not of the world; that to us comes the glorious privilege of growing daily more like Christ our Savior. Frequently I hear young people charged with dancing, card playing, and even drunkenness and debauchery; but there also come to my ears stories of those in our older ranks who are living in dishonesty, license, adultery, sin. You may never join a bridge club, but you may gossip over your back fence. You may never go on the dance floor, but you may cheat in your business. You may never smoke a cigarette, but you may overeat until you impair your health. Oh, don't you see, my friends, we are all guilty—the world has entered the church; it has come into our very hearts! Would that when we are tempted again to forget ourselves, the words might ring in our ears: 'If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.'

"As a people we need to study the Scriptures, to search the word of truth, and to apply the things we learn to our own lives—not to our neighbors' lives, friends, but to our very own. This continuous passing of the buck of our faults to someone else must stop. We must stand like men and women in our places, choose the right, and do what our consciences dictate."

LARRY'S CONSCIENCE felt as worn as the leather sole of a child's school shoe. It had been doing double duty since her return to Independence. She saw herself as a "negative little nobody" as she chose to term it; a girl who was doing nothing in return for the many things life was giving her. Always she felt this way after she had for a time—no matter how short that time—side-stepped her conscience.

"Jesus tells us," the preacher's voice was earnest, "that if we love him, we will obey him. We will live his law. And

How It Began—

Larry Verne has refused to marry Greg Spurgeon in spite of the fact that she loves him, for she fears he will be called to the priesthood, and her early childhood experience makes her revolt against such a thing.

Larry's life becomes enmeshed with the lives of others in the home of Eldred Hampton, who mothers a group of people, young and old, who have no homes of their own.

Tempted to attend a costume ball with Greg, Larry yields, and is horrified by the theft of a valuable heirloom, a bracelet belonging to Eldred Hampton. In a period of repentance, she devotes herself more earnestly to the work of the church.

Trying for a time to associate with Greg on a purely friendly basis, and trying to curb the development of his ardent affection, Larry finds herself failing. Love is too strong for her, and she feels herself being swept off her feet, against her will. It seems that she must either yield, or break with Greg and not see him for a time. She breaks with him, but is very unhappy over it. Greg makes no attempt to see her, much to her disappointment.

Tempted once more, during her estrangement with Greg, this time by Dart Moody, she consents against her better judgment to go on a week-end party to a summer home in the Ozark Mountains. The place belongs to a wealthy Independence family. She has scarcely started on the trip before she realizes it was a mistake to go. She is apprehensive, and yet she realizes that there may be something to learn.

The place was a dream of peace and natural beauty, but the company made the whole week-end a nightmare of confusion. Shaken and glad to escape, Larry returned home.

beautiful thing she wished it to be, but badly worn and shabby. It needed mending.

"This is a day," Brother Calahan was saying, "when it requires a courageous heart and a bold spirit to maintain our spiritual integrity; not to compromise ourselves with the world. We must indeed be doers, not allowing ourselves to fall into temptation. The church is surrounded on all sides by the world, and in many places, the world and its issues have crept into the church. This is a machine age, a time of rushing, of hurrying by the standards of former years, of disregard for conventions. Crime, war, social unrest, economic failure are latter-day revelation is full of instruction concerning how we are to live. It tells us that we are to make a 'righteous offering,' and, my fellow Latter Day Saints, I am fully convinced that this offering must be the gift of a good life to our Lord and Master. I think the spiritual experiences of many of our people prove this to be true—ours must be an offering of lives well lived. Are we ready to make such an offering?

"Modern revelation tells us also: 'Behold, the great day of the Lord is at hand,' then it reminds us, 'But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness; and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose. Zion shall flourish upon the hills, and rejoice upon the mountains, and shall be assembled together unto the place which I have appointed.'"

CARMEN was taking down the Scriptural references on an envelope she had drawn from her pocketbook. It was a letter from John—Larry recognized the handwriting.

Larry stirred a bit dazedly. The sermon was almost too much for her. She felt as if a mountain were slowly covering her up. How sincere the man was! And how sure of his subject—evidently he had tested all he was telling them.

Someone in the pew behind her arose, pushed along in front of the knees of his seatmates, and left the room. In passing behind Larry, he pushed her hat awry. Hastily she looked back, a tiny frown puckering her brow. It was rude for people to leave like that in the midst of a sermon—it annoyed everyone.

And then the girl's heart seemed to make a great surging leap. Gregory Spurgeon was sitting two rows behind her! He was looking straight at her, a tense, hungry look which changed to one of casual acquaintanceship almost the instant her glance met his. It was the first time they had seen each other in weeks. Neither smiled. Theirs was a sober, mutual exchange of recognition.

But for Larry when she looked again at the pulpit, the room seemed to reel and spin. Greg!—Greg! And so near! He was alone, too! Her pulses seemed to race. No one would have thought to see her sitting there so quietly, that an inward tumult was in progress. Her face was calm, her gaze steady. Nevertheless, she found it hard to concentrate on the concluding words of the sermon:

"Of course we want to see Zion flourish. We have dreamed of it for a century. We want to do our part, and we have a grave responsibility, Saints of Zion, the responsibility of setting an example, not of worldliness, but of righteousness before God and our fellow men. We must be at our work. We must conserve our time and energy. We must choose today and go to our post, ready to serve, to give everything.

"The church all over the land, looks to us. It expects something of us. Today men cry for employment; the world wants safety, love, peace. The world wants Zion. It is our privilege to give ourselves as Christ gave himself, to the saving of the world. This morning as you leave this house of God, I want you to go thinking, thinking seriously, and when you reach home, turn in your Bibles to 1 John. We as a church need to know especially what is in the first three chapters of his epistle. Let me read this to you from the third chapter as a closing thought: 'Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.'"

Larry felt almost smothered with a sense of her own incompetence. She had stood face to face with herself in the past half hour, and such a barren, unlovely self as she had! It would mean the giving up of many things which until today had meant life and happiness to her, but she wanted to follow the speaker's advice. She wanted to be busy, to do something which would help someone. Carmen would advise her—good, helpful Carmen; she was really a friend. But close upon her newly-formed resolution came this tempting thought: Does this man do what he teaches? Does his life accord with the words he preaches? Doubtfully she considered them, and then something seemed to prick her consciousness. It was almost as if someone had spoken to her: "Be your age, Larry. What if he doesn't do what he teaches? That doesn't excuse you from taking up your responsibility."

So seriously was she considering this problem that she did not notice when the speaker took his seat or when the elder in charge announced the hymn number. But she started to her feet when the rest stood up and the thought of Greg's nearness thrilled her with anticipation. Would she have the opportunity of speaking to him after church—oh, very casually, of course?

It was odd, she thought, that Greg had not brought his lady friend to church. But perhaps she was sleeping late after last night's frolic, or perhaps she was not a member of the church.

The aisle was choked with people filing out of the church. In the lobby Sallie Ruth and Jeff joined them, and the four moved out the front door. Familiar faces everywhere, and people were nodding and smiling. Cars sounded their horns as they pushed out of the driveway.

Yes, there was Greg at the curb talking to someone, but keeping a watchful eye on the people coming out of the church.

How insignificant Larry felt in this group of people; how little she had done to deserve a place among them! And yet, they spoke to her gladly and they called her "sister." Once on the sidewalk, the four of them stopped to talk.

Then—not three feet away stood Greg. He was looking at them. A warm tide swept over Larry, and involuntarily her grasp tightened on Carmen's arm.

"Hello," he beamed.

"Oh—hello," she flashed him a smile, and that was all. The crowd broke between them, and a moment later she and Carmen were on the other side of the drive on their way home.

A Prophet of God

By William Patterson

When financiers, statesmen and ministers are discussing the amount of gold needed to stabilize the dollar, the nation needs the prophet to read the inscription on that dollar, "In God We Trust," and to point men and women to that God and his law.

During Bible times, it was the prophet who challenged the people to return to the stabilizing standards of righteousness, justice, mercy and equality. In my opinion, the church and its ministry have become subordinate to business and men of secular affairs because the prophetic office and function no longer exist. Denominational theology excludes the prophet as no longer needed, but the prophet Amos said, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets.

Unlike the average minister, who listens to the voice of popular opinion and reads his textbooks, the prophet hears the voice of God and reads the handwriting on the wall. He delivers his message fearlessly, impartially and uncompromisingly. To this prophet, the voice of the people is not always the voice of God, but the voice of God is always for the good of the people, and he is willing to forfeit his life in delivering the message.—From a Press Report of the Sermon.

Criticism

To criticize is easy

As you pass along life's road,
It is easy to condemn and sneer
When another bears the load.

But if you know an easier way,
Then lend a helping hand,
Do not let a worker sweat
While you criticize and stand.

To criticize is easy

As you pass along life's road,
But a better and a nobler way
Is to help to bear the load.

THE CHURCH AT WORK

Edited by C. B. Woodstock

The Christmas Offering in 1933, $18,968.51

We are happy to report the above amount as the splendid total contributed through the church schools in 1933 as a special Christmas offering in memory of the Christ and the work of the church. Indeed, it is given, in the fullest possible way, as unto the Christ, himself.

The Christmas offering has special significance at the close of the year, when the spirit of Christmas giving is in the air. We joy to share in giving in the spirit in which the Christ came to the world and gave himself as the supreme gift of all time. But, not content to give to the Christ in a single offering at Christmas time, there has grown throughout the church a beautiful custom of making a special sacrifice offering on each or any Sunday of the year. Often the offerings are small in amount, but they represent the continual love and self-denial of a people who love the Savior and wish to keep fresh in their memory the gift of the Christ, and who thus share of their means to assist in carrying forward the cause for which he gave himself.

The Christmas offering in 1933 was some four thousand dollars less than in 1932. And yet, considering the financial conditions and the unemployment in which our people have suffered with other peoples of the world, we feel to take much satisfaction in reporting a total sacrifice gift to the church which averages well over fifteen hundred dollars each month for the past year. Eighteen thousand, nine hundred and sixty-eight dollars and fifty-one cents is no mean sum in these times when money is not flowing so freely as it did a decade ago. Perhaps it means more in real self-denial than five times that amount meant back in 1920. And with the great need for funds to meet the present current expenses of the church, the present Christmas offering may be filling a greater mission than larger offerings have done in years past.

The year before us will have its demands. May we enter at once upon the gathering of a Christmas offering in 1934 that shall as truly represent our love and our desire to serve. May those who have learned the sweet joy of giving in self-denial be abundantly blessed in coming months that we may have even more to share. And may the blessing of our Lord attend the expenditure of the funds made sacred by the spirit in which they are given.

The Christmas offering in 1934 should return to twenty-five thousand dollars or above.

Juniors Observe the Law

Pastor C. C. Simpson of the Rockford, Illinois, Branch, reporting their junior stewardship project for the past year, gives this interesting account of their work.

"Concerning the group of junior stewards and their project last year, I wish to say, that about fifteen juniors met and organized their group, selecting a president and a secretary, meeting each Saturday afternoon and having a little worship program.

"A lot of ground 50 by 150 feet was donated to them by an interested non-member, and they planted this to garden seed of corn, tomatoes, cucumbers, beets, etc. Under the direction of Brother and Sister Martin Whalen the garden was cultivated by them and their produce was harvested and marketed clearing $23.85.

"At the close of the year a meeting was held and the financial law was explained to them, just how God has determined that our money should be used, so they decided that they owed tithing to the amount of $2.39. And after considering another such project for 1934 they decided they had no surplus for they would use the balance of their money to start their project the new year.

"Out of their harvest they saved enough seed to plant at least four lots and are looking about to get this much ground.

"They have changed their time of meeting to Thursday evening and call themselves 'Workers for the Master,' and are having some very good social times, giving suppers and socials and help defraying the branch expense."

Eight juniors are reported as having satisfactorily kept their records, and are to receive Certificates of Commendation from the Presiding Bishop. Seven of these juniors paid a total of $8.97 in tithes besides regular giving in offerings and the oblation. Seven have opened saving accounts. The sponsor reports 26 talks with individual juniors, 14 talks before the junior stewardship group, 18 talks before the church school, and 28 talks on stewardship before the congregation. The home of each junior steward was visited once each month to check up on his work, to give encouragement and to solicit the full cooperation of the parents in the project.

This illustrates what can be done with a group of juniors by a sponsor who himself is enthusiastic and who has the support of the young people and their parents.

"G. G. S. M."

From Eagle City, Oklahoma, there comes a most interesting letter telling of the activities of younger boys and girls under the supervision of an elder sister who, in spite of her advancing years, gives them stimulating leadership. Eagle City is a small place with an ordinary small branch, but with an unusually neat and attractive church building and a few leaders of outstanding consecration. As in many other branches, activities for the early teen-age, which should be happy, constructive, and church-centered, present a problem. But the solution here is suggestive of what may be done in many places. What was done for the girls in the line of Blue Bird and Oriole work makes an interesting story, but the plan of our good sister for the boys was most unique. We quote part of her letter:

"I suppose you remember visiting us here at Eagle City, and remember how small our group is. People move out, and others move in, and it takes constant effort to 'hold our own.'

"We,' as a community, had a Boy Scout organization once but it is too expensive for our boys, under present conditions. And the little boys wished they had something like the girls had—so I finally arranged a—well, a makeshift, I suppose, but it was the means of bringing a number of boys to Sunday school who had not been attending anywhere.

"The way times are here, and no way for children to compete with school and other organizations in making money, we have had to keep our expenses at a minimum. A little treat of apples, or something occasionally; a 'hobo hike' once or twice a year, and pins from David C. Cook Publishing Co., Elgin, Illinois, that cost 1¼ cents apiece.

"The Blue Birds have visited and entertained shut-ins; and made scrapbooks from plain wrapping paper and pictures from canned goods and other sources to give to poor children. I am writing a description of the boys' club, and hope it meets with your approval.

"The Boys' Club has a name chosen by the boys, and they are known by the initial letters, only, as the 'G. G. S. M.' They do not tell anyone what the letters stand for, which I think is a harmless mystery—mystery being the keynote of many organizations; and a sure way to interest the growing boy.

"Our motto is 'Fair and Square' and I try to teach them to 'play fair' in everything.

"When someone guesses—which happened once—or someone tells—which has happened once—then the name is changed and new letters used. We organized March 15, 1931.

"The G. G.'s Creed follows:

"The G. G.'s go till they get what they go for,

The G. G.'s stay till they reap what they sow for.

The G. G.'s work, and the G. G.'s boost,

Till the cows come home and the hens go to roost.'

"The boys meet at my home, and I am the 'Umpty Ump,' and let the boys conduct the meetings, just offering suggestions as needed. They make 'motions' and really conduct their meetings better than some grown-ups could.

"Our principles are:

"We think it is wrong to gamble, lie, swear or steal.

We will stand for Right, Truth, and Honesty.

We will be clean and kind.

We will be loyal to our homes, our sisters, other boys' sisters, and to the G. G. S. M.'

"Our officers are:

"Chairman, known as Captain.

Secretary, known as Scorekeeper.

Yell Leader.

The Umpty-Ump.

"I pray my boys and girls may grow to be good men and women, and ask your prayers for them and myself.

"(MRS.) ALICE DIAMOND."

Junior Stewardship Awards

Junior stewardship is planned as a thoroughly practical introduction of junior young people to the fine experiences possible to those who comply with the financial law of the church. It may be undertaken individually by boys and girls, or they may join in a group project under the direction of a sponsor. Often these groups are formed when a number of children are baptized. They are welcomed into the church and made to feel their new responsibility as real stewards, partners with God in a very definite way, managers and bookkeepers of the partnership.

Each year those who have carefully kept their records and have fulfilled the law in their youthful stewardship, as vouched for by the sponsor and the local bishop's agent or solicitor, are awarded certificates of commendation, signed by the Presiding Bishop. It is not an easy task to keep a neat and careful record of all one's receipts and expenditures, month after month, but it is the only way one can make a true accounting of his stewardship. Some parents themselves have not yet learned the secret and fail to give the children in the home the encouragement and cooperation which would make their junior stewardship a source of splendid training and untold blessing. Much credit is due to the sponsors whose inspiration and persistence have helped to make achievement possible.

The following juniors are to receive the Certificate of Commendation:

Dorothy N. Sabin, Sacramento, California.

H. Melvin Sabin, Sacramento, California.

E. Leroy Burdick, Sacramento, California.

Ormond Kelley, Topeka, Kansas.

Beverley Weedmark, Topeka, Kansas.

Wendell Kelley, Topeka, Kansas.

Lela May Martin, Seattle, Washington.

Ione Martin, Seattle, Washington.

Phillis Martin, Seattle, Washington.

Riley Gilmore, Seattle, Washington.

Betty Jean Buckley, Pasco, Washington.

Doris Barton, Vinal Haven, Maine.

Frederick Barton, Vinal Haven, Maine.

Newman Wells, Vinal Haven, Maine.

Robert Barton, Vinal Haven, Maine.

James Barton, Vinal Haven, Maine.

Roger Candage, Vinal Haven, Maine.

Marion Webb, Vinal Haven, Maine.

Fern Chisholm, Sarnia, Ontario.

Mary Chisholm, Sarnia, Ontario.

Our Training Program

There is no more obvious need in the church than for a more adequate training and development on the part of those who are called to be teachers and leaders. We are especially concerned with the teaching work of the church. The Restoration has an outstanding mission in the world, and it is inconceivable that it shall be accomplished except by a well-informed, devoted people who have attained skill both in living the gospel life and in carrying the message to others.

Our training program necessarily involves the following four specific phases:

(1) A knowledge of the human element, the nature of mental and spiritual growth, the laws of the mind and the ways in which action, habit, attitudes, and ideals may be controlled to provide richness of experience, beauty of personality and strength of character. This may be termed psychology, or the conditions of the learning process.

(2) A knowledge of the subject matter of our religion. This includes familiarity with the contents of the recognized standard books of the church, an appreciation of their teaching, and the experiences of other peoples in which the purposes of God and the principles of righteous living are made manifest. This includes a study of all accumulated experiences of peoples which have a bearing upon the problems we face in the complex life of our day. It must also include a study of the history, and belief and present program of the Restoration.

(3) A knowledge of the laws of teaching and leadership, especially as applied to the work of religious education. This must cover, not only the principles of teaching as observed in public schools, but have special reference to the growth of moral and spiritual concepts and the motivation of righteous living. It will include also the organization and administration of all the forces at our command to make that teaching and leadership effective.

(4) The development of a pleasing personality, creative, inspiring, resourceful, that shall set a high standard of religious life and lend clearness and vitality to our leadership. With this there must also be acquired skill in the technique of the teaching task.

Training if offered in various ways, through correspondence courses, local training classes, institutes, quarterly classes, home study, etc. Three grades of general certificates are awarded, based on number of class hours as follows: Second Grade, 150 hours, First Grade, 300 hours, Gold Seal, 500 hours. Those who have received this recognition in the fifteen months since last reported are:

Second Grade:

Miss Mary E. Gale, Kirtland, Ohio

William F. Webb, Kirtland, Ohio.

Miss Mae Webb, Kirtland, Ohio.

Miss Beatrice Gale, Kirtland, Ohio.

Mrs. Alma O. Currie, Kirtland, Ohio.

Miss Annie Twaddle, Carson City, Nevada.

Arnold Trimmer, Genoa, Nevada.

Mrs. Jewell Thorson, Los Angeles, California.

First Grade:

Miss Maurice Weegar, Buffalo, New York.

Mrs. Opal Hanson, Independence, Missouri.

Mrs. Jean P. Cooper, Kirtland, Ohio

Mrs. Grace Eneroth, Spokane, Washington.

Mrs. Glenna Jackson, Marion, Illinois.

Mrs. Pearl Coonce, Marion, Illinois.

John T. Curry, Willoughby, Ohio.

Gold Seal:

Mrs. F. T. Haynes, Cleveland, Ohio.

Arthur Oakman, Berkeley, California.

Joseph E. Ebeling, Colorado Springs, Colorado.

E. R. Davis, Moline, Illinois.

Mrs. H. C. Timm, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Thinking of Zion's Youth

By Ernesta

How beautiful are they who seek Their Master in their youth;
And with Him walk in Wisdom's Way
Live witnesses of Truth.

Their feet shall press the shining strand
If they but faithful prove
The precious way their Master trod,
And triumph in his love.

O children of the Light,
O glory in this fight—
Be thoughtful, earnest, true and brave
And thus defend the right.

"God so Loved the World---"

By Richard Bullard

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son."

IF I use the word mankind instead of the world, I do not think I am doing violence to the text, for that is what I understand the word world signifies here, for the purpose of this wonderful gift to man is expressed in the words, that Christ came to save man and give eternal life to all men through his atonement.

God so loved mankind—What called from him such a display of love as to give his Son? There must be that which is lovable in mankind, and a response in man to that love, or it would be vain to bestow it upon an unresponsive being.

God who sees man as he was when created in his own likeness, sees him in his carnal state of disobedience; also sees him as he will be when redeemed and rises in the likeness of his glorified Son.

The unclouded vision of God's omniscience can see all there is in man, all that is possible to be developed in him, through his cooperation with God his heavenly Father, by complying with the laws and ordinances of the gospel, as revealed by Christ Jesus.

God's plan is to bring out the best in man, to assist him to cleanse himself from sinfulness, and lift him to a condition of perfection. God's great purpose will be achieved; for God sent not his Son into the world, to condemn the world, but that the world (mankind) might through him be saved. God our heavenly Father saw the time when all men would, like the prodigal son, "come to themselves," when, sin-sick because of the penalty attached thereto, in sorrow and anguish of spirit, and longing for spiritual companionship, and the Holy Spirit, turn their desires and affection toward God, from whose fostering hand and love they have wandered; when each one cries out in distress of soul, "Father I have sinned. I am an unworthy child, but desire to cease this course of disobedience, and return to you. Save, Lord, or I perish."

God so loved mankind because he saw the response that would be made to the message of his precious Son. Yes, the combined love of the Father and Son is concentrated in that one great purpose of bringing man back from his wanderings to the enjoyment of eternal life in their presence through the eternal unchangeable gospel.

With this vision and knowledge possessed by God, the wonder would be if he did not manifest this love for the workmanship of his hands, and of his deepest thought, for man crowned the glory of the creation, "and is the loftiest expression of God's intelligence."

Disobedience by man has not lessened the love our Father has for him; though hating the sin, he still loves the sinner, but sorrows because of the suffering sin entails; as witnessed by Enoch on the mount. Does a mother cease to love her offspring because of sinful disobedience? No, she would give her life to save or shield her wayward child, and this is small, compared with God's love for man.

When the combined powers of God and redeemed mankind will work together, then shall the answer to the prayer as given by our Lord be answered in its completeness, "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." This will be brought to pass through the full redemption of mankind through the unchangeable plan of God.

For that was the purpose God had in sending his Son, and the purpose the Son had in offering his services. This great task will be the travail of his soul, till death and hell are abolished, and sin with its entailment of suffering are gone forever. Then the travail of his soul will be ended, "and he will be satisfied." Then will Christ's prayer to his Father have its fulfillment: "Father I would that those whom thou hast given me out of the world, be with me, where I am, that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me, for thou lovest me before the foundation of the world." (John 17-24).

The gospel is the expressed mind and purpose of God to man. It is a message of love; it is a message of power. It satisfies every righteous desire and need of man. "My words are spirit and they are life," declared the Christ who was the Word made flesh and dwelt among men. God has endowed his servants in all ages, in the declaration of his gospel with power, a soul convincing power, all sufficient to convince the honest seeker after truth, that God was in the message.

Isaiah being the instrument used to proclaim the message of life to Israel, and all mankind, cries out, "Look unto me and be ye saved all the ends of the earth," and in tender accents appeals to Israel:

"O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments, then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea." (Isaiah 48: 18.)

"O every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye buy and eat, yea come buy wine and milk without money and without price." (Isaiah 55: 1.) "Sing, O heavens and be joyful, O earth and break forth into singing, O mountains, for the Lord hath comforted his people and will have mercy upon his afflicted." "Again, can a mother forsake her sucking child . . . yea they may forget, yet I will not forget thee, I have engraven thee upon the palms of my hands." (Isaiah 49: 13; 15, 16.)

These expressions of the ever abiding love of our heavenly Father should encourage the prodigal son or daughter to return to the loving Father who proffers, his protection, and welcome embrace, whose love was declared in those words, "God so loved the world (mankind) that he gave his only begotten Son," for mankind's redemption.

"All power is given me in heaven and in earth," declared Jesus before ascending to his Father in heaven. "Every knee shall bow" to him, and every tongue confess that he is Lord to the glory of God the Father. Everything on the earth, and under the earth, even the heavens shall ring with the song of Moses and the Lamb, and he shall be crowned King of kings, and Lord of all, as the chosen one to reveal the love of his Father in the message of life, for not only earth and heaven is to hear this wonderful message, but the prison gates have been burst asunder at Christ's presence, who shall visit the prisoners of hope, spoken of by Zechariah (9: 9-12), who declared that the meek and lowly one should visit them and bring to them the terms of release, even the unchanging and everlasting gospel. The Christ could say to those spirits as he declared to Mary and Martha, "I am the resurrection and the life." And this truth must have its fulfillment in the restoration of their bodies.

To us then as children of the covenant and servants of Jesus Christ is committed this message of love, not only to preach, teach, and expound, but to exemplify in our lives and attitudes towards each other as also to the world the efficacy of this message of love and power. For, as stated by the Savior himself, "By this shall all men know that you are my disciples if ye have love one for another."

May that love abide in us, and it then will be manifest the measure of love we have for each other.

WEEKLY HEALTH LETTER

the subject is aroused with difficulty and the pulse is full though weak, and the skin cold and clammy. He may be made to arouse though his answers may be incoherent and meaningless.

The first and second stages more or less affect the muscle sense according to the degree of susceptibility in which the disorders of coordination are marked and the individual staggers and perhaps falls and if the subject continues to imbibe, the second stage passes into the deep sleep, or coma.

Mania-a-potu is a form of maniacal delirium of the acute type of alcoholic intoxication usually occurring in those of strong neurotic tendencies, and is marked by furious delirium, convulsive movements and muscular contractions. It differs from delirium tremens as delirium tremens more commonly occur in chronic drinkers and the fearful sights and sounds are not present. Norman Karr in his excellent work on Inebriety says that mania-a-potu "is another acute disease born of alcohol. It seldom attacks continuous drunkards, and differs from delirium tremens because it begins in a moment, without warning of any kind, almost immediately after the quantity of alcohol in sufficient quantity to provoke an attack in a predisposed constitution has been taken. There is generally no, or little, muscular tremor. The patient is wild and ungovernable. The pulse is strong, bounding and frequent. Hallucinations are seldom present. The eyes roll, and the infuriated alcoholic rages like a mad man. The attack is usually brief in duration, but is very violent while it lasts. Sometimes the frenzy continues for days or weeks in very exceptional cases, with intermissions—a succession of storms with calms between. After the alcoholic whirlwind has passed, the patient is usually penitent, ashamed to hear the misdeeds of which he was guilty, and of which he was unconscious. I never found the temperature abnormal five hours after a paroxysm. The alcoholic, exhausted by violence of his exertions, is like a dismantled ship after a tornado has swept over it, temporarily crippled and unequal to any effort. Many police-court inebriates are subjects of mania-a-potu. They generally have no craving for drink. They go on well in the intervals of sobriety, but by and by an insane and irrepressible desire to do something wrong, to "kick over the traces," comes over them. They take to their favorite liquor, and a few glasses suffice to develop an attack of mania-a-potu.

"The leading character of this form of alcohol inebriety is fury, short-lived and tremendous. After the storm has subsided the patient generally recovers without bodily complications.

"It is worthy of note that I have always seen this form of acute alcoholic mania caused by comparatively small quantities of intoxicants. In one case the third glass of beer invariably develops characteristic symptoms of mania-a-potu."

I append a type or two that have come under my personal observation.

C. M. R., 55; farmer; was subject to attacks of mania-a-potu at three or four months or year intervals. One or two drinks of any form of alcohol would create a wild and ungovernable temper. Hallucinations were frequent but whether he had hallucinations or not he would rage like a mad man, and piteously abuse his wife and children. On one occasion in his fury, he seriously wounded a farm hand with his pocket knife. Unlike some cases of this kind he would continue his debauch until money and liquor was exhausted. Preceding a debauch the patient would become restless and dissatisfied with his surroundings. After recovery he was very penitent and extremely sensitive and ashamed of his unconscious actions. This man died from cancer of the stomach due to his excessive use of alcoholics.

C. S.; merchant; gave a history when a young man would take an occasional drink assured by his elders that it would do him no harm. I called upon him a number of times at his home and found that his family had been driven out of house, articles of furniture demolished and the patient yelling at the top of his voice and seeking to do bodily injury to anyone who might make an effort at restraint. Sometimes it would take three or four strong able-bodied men to subdue him sufficiently to have a hypodermic given to quiet him. This man, when sober, was a very kind and affable gentleman.

A. N. R., Clergyman. This patient's symptoms were different from the usual classes of mania-a-potu. When he would take on a desire to drink he would suddenly and without warning disappear from home without informing his family as to where he was going or when he would return. After his return in a day or two he would indulge in mild disorderly conduct and express all kinds of silly thoughts but exhibited no violence. He would take crying spells and try to make his family believe that he had taken some kind of a drug with suicidal intent, etc. At other times he would have intense fear of being persecuted by someone. While the public would be suspicious that this man might be addicted to alcoholism, they never became thoroughly familiar with his practices. This disorderly conduct was brought about by the removal of the inhibitory function of the brain.

C. B., Barber; temperamentally nervous. Father a drunkard. Said that he inherited the habit. During the period of soberness was quiet and steady and of exemplary habits. Within five or ten minutes after taking three or four glasses of beer would become unexpectedly violent and unmanageable, yelling at the top of his voice and boisterously try to do bodily harm to someone. The debauch would last until subdued or all his money spent. This man had a mania for abusing his wife, and would hurl articles of furniture or anything conveniently handy. She finally obtained a divorce. He remarried, discontinued the barber trade, took a treatment for the habit, became a "teetotaler" and secured a lucrative position.

Why One Should Belong to the Church

Some years ago I visited the old church where my grandparents' forbears were christened and their marriages solemnized, going back how far I do not know. And by the church was the burial ground. There were the flagstones in the aisle; there were the old pews, there was the organ that was built before the Reformation. And I thought, ready to leave it all and their native land and so they knew not exactly where or what the future held for them, but somehow they felt a divine light was burning in their pathway.

I say it captured my imagination. And then later, more fully as a youthful member of the church. At reunions and conferences, I occasionally came in touch with some of the leading personalities of the Reorganized Church. What it means to come in contact with a great soul! There was Joseph R. Lambert; as I would hear him speak, choosing his words with care, and then with accuracy and precision presenting his thought, there was developed in my heart a love for accuracy, a love for precision, and as far as my poor feeble gifts would enable me, the choice of the right word.

And there were the two brothers—the Kelley's. There was William H. Kelley who at times would arise, a champion of liberty, free in expressing his convictions; fearless, courageous; and somehow, to me, a Latter Day Saint was inseparable from the possession of such qualities. And E. L. Kelley with his forensic power, undivided love for the church, and gentlemanly demeanor. A love for all that related to Latter Day Saintism filled my soul.

There was Heman C. Smith, with his logic; and I could sense though a thing may be beautiful as a superstructure, if its foundation is not sound, of what value is the superstructure? And so I loved logic. And there was Joseph Luff, one who with his peculiar power of expressing fine shades of Christian thought with facility, under the spirit of God, revealing Christ and His truth, would lift the congregation up until they felt they were a part of the heavenly congregation.

There was our beloved President Joseph. And as I watched him—and do not forget it, adults, a youth can discover quickly much in the way of what is fair, what is just, what is right, and what is generous. I always found Joseph on the lenient side. Always respecting gentlemanly amenities. Always with caution and courage leading on and on as far as the Divine light in his soul would justify him in leading. And I felt that my life's interests could be put in his care. It was not possible for my confidence in the church to be withheld. I was ready to go to distant parts of the earth and there—in later years—sometimes without a dollar in my pocket and misunderstood by those who surrounded me, I was happy. Because why? The voice of the church had spoken. To me it was the voice of God and I, was where God wanted me to be.

NO ONE can be really happy only as he does the thing that down deep in his heart he feels that he ought to do, and is where he feels God wants him to be. The Church of Jesus Christ! What a marvelous institution! What love it enjoins, what human compassion, what courage, what a readiness to sacrifice. Only when the church exhibits such qualities, it is fulfilling its mission.

When Christ comes and is seated on the throne of his glory, and all nations are gathered before him, they will be separated as the sheep from the goats, and he will say to those on his right hand, "Inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Those on the left hand will depart "into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." They experience God's punishment. To the righteous the Lord will say: "For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me." And these who had received the very great reward asked: "When saw we thee in prison or hungry, or naked or sick?" Jesus answered: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

It was a matter of attitudes that help humanity.

What joys the church is capable of producing when the mind and spirit of Christ are possessed.

When the church—never destined to be an invalid—takes its place and moves forward, souls are made buoyant and cheer is spread amidst the world's turmoil.

The church alone teaches the ideal of Christ.

Follow no man except in so far as he follows Christ.

One may ask, "What church should I join?" There are many churches. There was a church in Russia that so failed to manifest the life of Christ to the people that a general revolt took place, for it is the disposition of the human heart to revolt against that which does not respect or provide an outlet for God-given powers inherent in the soul. Religion there came to be looked upon as a narcotic used by priests to put people to sleep while being exploited. Much the same in Mexico a few years ago.

NOW AN ANSWER to the question, "Which church should I join?" involves a consideration of institutions that bear the label of church. Some time ago I saw an advertisement of the "Church of this world." There is the Spiritualist church; the Unitarian church; there are many churches. I would say: Join the Church of Jesus Christ. The nearer you can find it like the New Testament pattern of the church built by Christ and His ministry, cast your lot with that church. I have the honor to stand as a representative of the church that declares itself that church. Not having come down through the ages until the present time, not being an institution that has been reformed, but restored in accordance with light and revelation from God. No one can afford to be neutral to the Divine institution of the church—purchased by Christ's blood.

I wish you all could have heard what I heard last year in Washington, District of Columbia. I was one of about a thousand present who had been invited to attend a gathering where a question of moment to the interests of the work of Christ was being considered. Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, senior ranking bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church presided over all the sessions with grace and ability. At the close—just at the close, he said there was one privilege he had requested of those in charge of the assembly—one privilege, and that was to "pronounce the benediction." Then his voice was heard. What a marvelous helpful assemblage of words! I shall not soon forget that benediction.

Members of the church. You who are not members. Remember, great will be your blessing if you can have but a part when Jesus Christ is coronated King of kings and Lord of lords. I am inclined to think there will be a great oratorio composed of archangels, that will be sung on that occasion; all creatures joining in, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."

Great would be the honor when the King of kings draws near, to open the gates and let the King of Glory pass through. What joy if that blessing could be mine. If I could so stand and with bowed head have part in that coronation.

Even the pronouncement of a benediction—what a privilege!

How glorious is the organization of the church; its faith, its ideals, its doctrine, its promises, its light, its power, its divinity. It is the embryo of the glorified kingdom of our God, that will in God's due time cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea.

The Honor List of Service to Others

loyal to the demands her young sisters and brothers make upon her.

Do you admire here? Some day let us hope that life will become rosy and her responsibilities less heavy. Jesus himself must look down with love and sympathy on these quiet souls, touching their hearts with peace and satisfaction.

There are many lives lived nobly in quietness and obscurity, useful lives and all in service for others. Such cases cause us to pause and examine ourselves.

Refuge

(Dedicated to My Mother)

By Gertrude Edwards Allen

A glistening ray of sunshine fills my heart,

A beam of glory pure and so sublime

Like the red rose whose grace will ne'er depart

As sweet as bells that from the hillside chime.

What though the rose towards evening fade and die?

What though the bells towards midnight echo dim?

The joyful sounds of Him who reigns on high

Waft gently towards me, bringing "Peace" within.

From the recesses of my gladdened heart

The ray shines forth with messages of cheer,

It bids all gloom and darkness to depart;

It brings the presence of my Savior near.

This radiant glow alone belongs to Him

Who every need and circumstance doth know;

It banishes the irksome power of sin—

The silver stream of Hope again doth flow.

Though time rolls on, and seasons come and go,

Though rose and body gently withered be,

This light shines on with warm and steadfast glow

Until my Father's gentle face I see.

His mighty arm secures me on the rugged steep,

His loving voice is ever calling me,

My wayward soul I give to Him to keep,
That pure and undefiled I may be.

These words may be sung to the tune,
"Londonderry Air."

We Have the Gift More Precious Than Gold

I am rejoicing this morning to be able to send in six subscriptions to the Herald. Six more families will read the good letters and articles which crowd the paper's pages. Our people out here in Kansas (many of them) have not been able to take the paper until now.

My testimony is always for the restoration of the gospel. I have been a member of the church since February 20, 1900, when I was confirmed by that man of God, W. S. Pender, who has gone beyond. I shall always remember his words uttered a short time before my baptism, that the Spirit bore testimony to him that I was accepted of God. Thought of them cheers me many times when affliction keeps me in bed as I have been most of the time since Christmas.

I think many times, too, of Brother W. H. Mannering who brought the gospel to me and my father's family. He brought us a gift many times more precious than gold and I hope this will cheer him down in Texas when he reads that we remember him.

Fellow members, let us not give up when difficulties face us for they are only temporary. God's storehouse of grace is full. So let us work and pray. Let us eliminate our bad habits and cease to do those things which defile or keep us from being God's holy people. I believe we must be as devout as Daniel who prayed three times a day with his face toward Jerusalem. There are many people who are living for Christ and his church; they have filed their inventories, and are doing their best to obey the Lord in all things. Are we counted in that number?

ALEXANDER, KANSAS.

MRS. JOHN TEETERS.

Prays for Steadfastness

Though my trials and difficulties have been many, never have I come to the place where I felt that I could afford to give up the church. Without it nothing in life would be worth while to me. How can anyone give up his hope of eternal life?

I have been able to see the great hand of our heavenly Father over his church. He will in his own way, far above our way, right every wrong. And I hope and pray that I shall always be willing to leave such things to him and use them as stepping stones to climb to higher ground.

I wish to thank the Saints along the Western Coast for their kindness and love shown to our boy, Luther, who is in the Navy, and especially do I thank the pastor and his wife at Long Beach, California, and at Bremerton, Washington. Words cannot express the joy and comfort it gives me to know that he is still in the church and has found friends among God's children.

I have been in the church eighteen years and have had many testimonies of its divinity. One great testimony that I have had is the changes I have seen wrought in the lives of those whom I have seen come into the church.

In the church I have found those who are real friends when there is need of friends. Here too—oh, wonderful blessing—we find our Great Friend and Savior.

I have greatly appreciated the work of Elder Amos T. Higdon in our district, also that of Elder and Sister Frank McDonald.

Please pray for me that I may be steadfast in the faith, always faithful, always humble.

Would Like Biographies

The Herald is everything we could want in a single church paper. It has variety and that is what we need.

We sometimes get the vesper hour from KMBC and greatly enjoy the program.

Every now and then I notice that you get suggestions from readers. May I make one? We have had many biographies of our old missionaries which I am sure have been greatly enjoyed. So why not appeal to the old-time Saints? I'm sure there are many in the church, both men and women, who have had interesting experiences that would make good reading and show us younger Saints what has been endured for the sake of the gospel. I for one would like to see stories from our older Saints.

I always read "The Readers Say—" first when the Herald comes and am disappointed when there is only one page. It never occurred to me before that I might do my part toward it.

We have had many wonderful blessings and know that this work is true, and we ask the prayers of the Saints that some day the way will be opened up so that we shall once more enjoy church privileges.

Reports Good Missionary Meetings

Our first missionary visit following New Year's, was to Brentwood, Missouri, where he held a series of meetings. This series was well advertised by posters, handbills, and invitations, bringing many Saints as well as nonmembers to the meetings.

The church building was crowded nearly every night, and several times there was standing room only, as every available chair from downstairs, as well as the upper auditorium, was pressed into service.

One pleasant feature of this series of meetings was the attendance of the junior members of the church. There were between thirty and forty of them present each night, and Sister Baldwin told them a serial story of a boy's journey to Zion dealing with the pitfalls and difficulties he encountered and overcame. A poster was made of this journey, and each night magazine pictures were placed upon it to represent the particular lesson that had been learned by the children from the story told the night before. Not only were the junior members interested, but also the adults, as their attendance indicated. The concluding night, when the boy reached the city of Zion, the climax of the story, so many pictures were brought by the children, that it was impossible to use them all on the poster. These pictures represented the concept the children had of what Zion will be.

Our visit in Brentwood would have been longer, but General Conference will soon be here and we have other missionary visits to make.

We have started the new year with good feeling, and hope to carry it with us, in increasing power, until 1935. We are now looking forward to General Conference, and praying for those who will bear the responsibility for its success, and that it may be the best conference the church has ever held.

Hope to Have a Branch

Words cannot express how much we appreciate the Herald, especially since we are away from the church. I always look for the letters first as it strengthens my faith when I see how God continually answers the prayers of his children. I also enjoy the "News of Church and Home." I think the article, "Let Contention Cease," by Hazel L. Minkler, was very fine. In fact I enjoy reading the Herald so much that I would rather do without some of my meals than the paper.

We are eager to start a branch here at Bakersfield and want the Saints to pray that if it is God's will many souls will find their way into the fold in this place. For some time we had been praying and fasting that the way would open up for us to meet and have services. Then Brother Heinrichs came to visit us and we had meetings in our home. Later we succeeded in renting a church and have had meetings nearly every night for the past four weeks. Elder Lewis Roberts, from Fresno, was in charge, assisted by Elder Heinrichs for awhile, also by Joseph Meloan and Lonnie Mizell. Sister Roberts directs the church school work and music. Twenty-four were present at church school and preaching services on a recent Sunday.

We shall be glad to have ministers or members of our church visit the church or our homes: Church at the corner of Eighth and Eye Streets. Brother and Sister Harris's home is 1616 California Avenue; Brother and Sister Meloan's home, 1911 Forest Street and Brother and Sister Mizell, 1911 Forest. Brother Redfern of East Bakersfield, would probably appreciate a visit also from Saints.

BAKERSFIELD, CALIFORNIA.

MRS. R. MELOAN.

"All of It" the Best

If I were to try to tell you which part of the Herald we enjoy the most, I should have to say "all of it." We enjoy the Herald and glean wonderful lessons and encouragement from its pages.

Visit to Parents Brings Church Privileges

I have received great help from letters in the Herald, also from studying the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants.

I visited my parents at Webb City, Missouri, last November and while there had the privilege of hearing Apostle J. A. Gillen preach some splendid sermons. There, too, I met with the Saints in sacrament service.

While away from my home, I loaned my Book of Mormon to a woman who thanked me for the opportunity of reading it. I pray that some part of it impressed her and that it will be a lasting help to her. A few women of the Methodist Church and I meet each Thursday for twilight prayer.

The pastor of another popular church told my husband that he expected some great event soon, and that he thought, all things considered, the Latter Day Saints had the most light among religious peoples. He wanted the address of someone who could tell him of books to buy to get more light. May God bless his people that they may be the salt of the earth.

DAVILLA, TEXAS.

MRS. MIRTIE B. KEITH.

Youth's Forum Is a Help

We really appreciate the Youth's Forum in the Herald. It is a great help to us. We are visioning a brighter future for the youth of the church and wish to work and pray as we have never done before.

KENNETT, MISSOURI.

Trying to Locate Saints

Saints of Juniata, Michigan, are striving to reestablish the gospel work. The branch was disorganized several years ago, but some have been added to the church, and the members are looking forward to a reorganization of the local unit in the near future.

I have a brother living at 3133 Hayes Street, Jackson, Michigan, who joined the church as a child, but has been isolated for a long time. He would like to know if there are Reorganized Latter Day Saints in that city. Will Saints living there inform him of their location so that he may call on them. He wants to know if our church holds services there.

BLANCHE GRINNELL.

MAYVILLE, MICHIGAN.

Pleased With the Biography

I first knew "Uncle Mark," as the younger of the Saints all called him, in the fall of 1869, when I was fourteen years old. From that time on till I was in middle life he affectionally called me "Willie," and I called him "Uncle Mark."

I have often wondered why such a great preacher and in many respects a most wonderful man, had nothing more said of him than an ordinary obituary notice. I was very much pleased that Sister Ruby had his diary and was reproducing it as his biography.

Henry Ward Beecher was considered the greatest preacher of his day, but I have heard people say, who had heard both men, that Brother Forscutt was the finest orator of the two. Brother Forscutt had done a wonderful work in bringing souls into the kingdom of God.

W. H. DEAM.

Plan of Salvation Brings Joy

I was baptized into the church last November by Brother Johnny Wiles, and am now striving to do my best to make up wasted years. I am sixty years of age, and the only member of my generation in my family to accept the gospel. The learning of God's plan of salvation has made me very happy.

I appreciate the Herald which brings me news of the Saints everywhere and of the good that is being accomplished throughout the world.

Before my baptism I was seriously ill, but Brother Wiles administered to me, and I was healed of my affliction. Since that time I have enjoyed excellent health.

MERT WILLIAMS.

TURLOCK, CALIFORNIA.

Requests Prayers

Mrs. Aletha Green, of Council, Idaho, requests prayers of the Saints in her behalf, and also for her children, Everett, Marjorie, Curtis, and George, that they may be given health and strength.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

Explain the word "telestial," its derivation and meaning.

This word is found in modern revelation and designates the least of three glories to be obtained in the life to come. A portion of it states:

"We saw the glory of the telestial, which glory is that of the lesser, even as the glory of the stars differ from that of the moon in the firmament; . . . these are they who shall not be redeemed from the Devil until the last resurrection, until the Lord even Christ the Lamb, shall have finished his work; these are they who receive not of his fullness in the eternal world, . . . And thus we saw the glory of the terrestrial, which excels in all things the glory of the telestial, even in glory, and in power, and in might, and in dominion."
—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7.

The word telestial is a compound of the Greek word tele, meaning afar, far away (hence by implication far below or beneath, when used with a term signifying high or above), and the word celestial. The word celestial in Scripture is from the Greek word epouranios, meaning above the sky, heaven, high. It is a compound of two Greek words: epi, meaning upon, above, etc., and ouranos, meaning the sky, heaven, and by implication in certain uses, happiness, power, eternity.

Telestial glory is therefore that glory which is far below or far from the celestial glory, and by implication is far below in happiness and power, as used in the language quoted above.

Does the proposed highway from Seattle to Alaska fulfill 108: 6 of Doctrine and Covenants?

The revelation cited speaks of a highway to be cast up in the "midst of the great deep," while those in the "north countries" shall be remembered of the Lord. From the preceding words it appears that the mountains and valleys shall be removed in that day, and that Christ shall come to earth. I do not believe the proposed highway is referred to here, but that it concerns work that will be done by miraculous means in the day of his coming.

Was Aaron's Urim and Thummim used by Joseph Smith?

From the descriptions and references available it appears that the instruments used by Joseph Smith were not the same as those employed by Aaron. The Book of Mormon states that the "two stones" were given to the brother of Jared by the Lord, who said:

"Behold, these two stones will I give unto thee, and ye shall seal them up also, with the things which ye shall write. For behold, the language which ye shall write, I have confounded; wherefore I will cause in mine own due time that these stones shall magnify to the eyes of men, these things which ye shall write."—Pages 772, 773.

After this time they were had by King Benjamin and were preserved with the plates of the Book of Mormon (pages 723, 724). They were obtained by Joseph Smith at the time he received the plates, it appears, for he states that the heavenly messenger told him:

"Also that there were two stones in silver bows, and these stones, fastened to a breastplate constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim, deposited with the plates, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted seers in ancient or former times, and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book."—Church History, volume 1, page 13.

As the days of Jared were several centuries prior to the time of Aaron, these stones were on the American continent long before Aaron's day and were preserved with the Jaredite records. That they were the same ones had by Joseph Smith is made clear in modern revelation, which declared to the Three Witnesses:

"You shall have a view of the plates, and also the breastplate, the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummim, which were given to the brother of Jared upon the mount."—Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1.

These stones were handed down from age to age among the Nephites, and were had by Mosiah (see pages 202: 35; 232, 233: 72-75; 291: 15-20; 723: 95). Josephus indicates that the Urim and Thummim functioned among the Jews up to about two centuries prior to his time, and in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah they were familiar to the Jews. The evidence therefore appears to favor two sets of instruments.

Were high priests ever made bishops in the early Christian Church?

Peter plainly refers to the ministry of the church as "an holy priesthood," a "royal priesthood." This was the Melchisedec or kingly priesthood, of whom Jesus was the head. Bishops were chosen from this priesthood, it appears, for Mosheim tells us: "The bishops were at first innocently called high priests, and the presbyters, priests, and the deacons, Levites."—Book I, chapter IV, page 133.

East Side Church

Sunday night, February 4, marked the close of a two week's series of missionary services by Elder James W. Davis, recently of the general church missionary staff.

The services were in every respect of a high order, Brother Davis bringing forcibly to the minds of the people the "Significance of a Personal God, and the Need of a Present Tense Religion." Using terms so simple that the children could understand and yet, so profound and dynamic as to hold the attention of the most learned, he told the gospel story with the ease and grace which bespeak a life consecrated to the service of God. A capacity house, in which were a number of nonmembers, greeted Brother Davis each night. While none have asked for baptism, they manifested a keen interest in all services and, some of them expressed themselves as being desirous of joining the church just as soon as they had made a little more preparation.

Brother Davis spoke briefly of his travels, which have included Hawaii, Australia, the Holy Land, France and England, as well as large portions of the United States and Canada. One evening he surprised his audience by singing several songs in the Hawaiian tongue. Sister Eldora Richards, choir leader, with her choir, assisted by the orchestra, furnished appropriate music during the services.

All activities with the exception of the basket ball games were dispensed with during the meetings. These games were played each Thursday night at nine o'clock, on which nights Brother Davis obliged by beginning his services at seven-thirty instead of the regular hour of eight, giving all a chance to attend the games, which were held at the Eastern High School gymnasium.

Although Brother Davis finished his meetings on Sunday night, the spirit of the two weeks' activities carried over to Wednesday night when it culminated in a spiritual prayer service in which approximately seventy-five persons took part. Prior to the prayer hour, the East Side priesthood met in their regular service which had been suspended for the two weeks, and Brother Davis spoke to them of the "Importance of Cultivating the Missionary Spirit."

East Side feels elated over the good fortune that is theirs in having the inestimable services of such capable men as Elders J. W. Davis, D. E. Dowker,

B. Brown, and A. E. Boos, all of the missionary force, who have distinguished themselves in the service of God, and are now residing in the city.

Elder Wilbert Richards, pastor of East Side, is responsible for the securing of the service of Brother Davis in the series, having spoken to him back in November at the homecoming. Brother Richards is ever alert as to the spiritual advancement of his group. Not being contented with giving a part of his time when not pursuing his regular employment as representative of the Sinclair Oil Company, to the service of God, he avails himself of every opportunity to tell the gospel story during his employed hours, and not a few have been baptized as a result of these efforts. Brother Richards is very optimistic as to the future of the group. All are looking forward to the arrival of Brother McDowell within a few days.

Michigan Branch, Alberta

Elder Evans Fisher Helps With Services

Michigan Branch boasts a small group of faithful members, a number of whom originally came here to take a homestead, from the State of Michigan, from which source the branch derives its name.

This branch is organized under the direction of Priest Earl F. Hastings, who is endeavoring to discharge the duties and responsibilities incumbent upon his calling. Brother Hastings is assisted by Clyde F. Hastings, as church school director, also by other members of the priesthood.

Attendance at the various church services is large, composed mostly of young people and children.

A number of the women are organized under the leadership of Sister Bernice Kilpatrick, that they may more effectively render service in moving the work of the church.

Sister Mary Kilpatrick has ably organized a group of girls, teen age, who are endeavoring to carry forward a few character building projects.

The visit of Elder Evans Fisher, which is now drawing to a close, is appreciated by all. His inspiring sermons have revived the hopes and renewed the determination of many to a keener sense of duty.

Saints were successful in securing openings in a number of schoolhouses in the district, where Brother Fisher preached. Many people availed themselves of the opportunity to attend the services. Meetings in the new openings will be continued for a time. Brother Fisher has the best wishes of the Saints for the success in his work.

Pasco, Washington

Hope for Zion Among Themselves

Though few in number, the Saints here are trying to keep God's commandments. They have set a goal in the establishing of a small Zion among themselves, to prepare them to live in the greater Zion.

The women have organized their department with Sister Esther Buckley as president and Sister Edith Peterson as secretary. Sister Peterson wrote a cantata some time ago which is beautiful.

They enjoyed a wonderful sacrament meeting the first Sunday in February; God's Spirit was there to bless and help.

Brother Alvin Buckley and Brother Peter Peterson hold services there each Sunday.

Brother Ole Evanson is solicitor and gathers up tithing, oblation, and free will offerings. The juniors are much interested in keeping up their stewardship books.

Brush Creek, Illinois

Welcome Visit of Apostle J. F. Garver

The Saints were glad to welcome Apostle John F. Garver into their midst after an absence of a year. He preached at Brush Creek the night of December 12, also attended the business meeting a few nights later.

On December 13, the La Da Sa Club met with Agnes Vaughn, Moyle Colvin, and Goldie Caudle at the home of Sister Vaughn. Brother Garver called and gave an interesting talk. A play, "Grandfather's Christmas," was presented, and refreshments were served.

The Brush Creek Development Association met on the same night at O. C. Henson's store. There Brother Garver was initiated into their organization and a good social time was enjoyed.

The young people held their banquet Saturday night, December 9, at the dining hall.

A large crowd attended the Christmas program given Christmas Eve, and enjoyed the tree.

The branch was saddened January 2, to learn of the death of one of its oldest members, Mrs. Margaret Brown. She had been a member of the church for forty-five years.

The La Da Sa Club met with Sister Eva Henson, Lizzie Burroughs, and Marjory Galbraith January 5, and new members were initiated.

Word was received January 24, of the death of W. I. Burkett at the hospital at Breese, Illinois. He underwent an operation early in the month and was rapidly recovering until an attack of pneumonia seized him.

Wichita, Kansas

Water and Osie Streets

Eighty-eight Saints and friends representing every department of Wichita Branch, met at the church the evening of January 13, to welcome Elder William I. Fligg and publicly pledge the support of each department in the missionary services to be held.

At this unusual meeting the pastor acted as master of ceremonies, introducing each speaker and naming the department he represented. Elder J. W. Wooten represented the branch; Sister Minnie Barraclough, the department of religious education; Claire Vanbiber, a jovial young friend, gave a short speech in behalf of the young people. Then bright-eyed, little Donald Manuel walked briskly across the platform, extended his hand to Brother Fligg, and gave the best speech of the evening, welcoming the missionary and pledging the support of the children's division. Esther Nelson and C. A. Balman, members of the choir, sang a duet selection after which Sister Nelson spoke the sentiments of the choir and pledged the support of the singers. The men of the branch were represented by John Becker followed by J. R. Wolfe who carries the branch funds. Then Brother Fligg responded with words of appreciation and joy at the prospects before him. In the basement the young people served refreshments, and there was much hand-shaking and exchanging of good wishes.

From the beginning of the services on Sunday to the closing day the highest type of cooperation was manifested. Attendance was good, and interest even better. An accurate record of attendance of members and nonmembers was kept by J. J. Wilson. However, during the series some were deprived of the joy of attending by severe colds and other sickness in their families.

Outstanding among the features of the series was the splendid organization. Every important event had been previously planned and each department representative worked in complete harmony with the organization. Previous to the coming of Brother Fligg "special nights" had been worked out at which certain groups were to be present in a body and seated in a section of honor. To start this, the young people's class, taught by Brother Ira G. Whipple, was asked to be present the first Sunday night of the services. They came out in full force, and five rows of seats were required to accommodate them. All but two of the total number enrolled were present, also fourteen visitors.

The pastor had written a letter to each teacher and group leader inviting him to encourage his followers to attend the service particularly on the night assigned to his class or group. Brother Buschow teaches the men's class in the church school and through his efforts and those of members of the class, they tied the record made by the young people as far as percentage was concerned. Sister Kanady's class was well represented. The children also had a night assigned to them. One little four-year-old girl, Ida Mae Stewart, sang two verses of "The Old, Old Path" as a special number. The boys of the department also sang a song and by the time Brother Fligg arose to preach the spirit of praise and worship was abundantly present.

Sister Bozarth who has been teaching the Book of Mormon to a group of interested women for a number of years, came with her class on the night of January 30. The night the choir was especially represented, members donned their white robes and sang an anthem. Sister Esther Nelson who has faithfully and diligently guided the work of the choir for four years, made a strong effort to provide anthems and solo, duet, and quartet numbers for the services.

The young married people's class, taught by Sister Dagmar Root, was represented the second Sunday night of the series. No one has ever come to Wichita Branch with a more wonderful spirit nor with the equipment of a well trained mind and heart more freely and graciously offered than Sister Root. Mr. Allen Davis, a member of the class, played "The Holy City" on his trombone.

Brother Becker made an honest effort to gather in the men of the branch for their special night with some degree of success. He is leader of an organization composed of men of the church.

Marie McDivitt is doing double duty during the compelled absence of Brother Emery Jennings, teaching two classes as one. She is instructing five boys just promoted from the junior department who were being taught by Brother Jennings until his work kept him from attending church school, also her own class of girls. These two groups combined with a class of older boys taught by the pastor, for a special attendance night.

On Sunday morning J. J. Wilson gave a report of attendance and named the winning classes. A loving cup was awarded the winners.

Two candidates were led into the waters of baptism by the pastor on the last day of the services, the first Sunday of the month. On this day, from the opening of the young people's prayer service till the closing preaching service at night, the Spirit of the Lord was with his people. At the confirmation which took place as the sacrament service, His blessing was bountifully given.

Each morning at nine o'clock during the three weeks of services, the Saints remembered in prayer the interests of the meetings.

Brother Fligg's sermons were characterized by plainness, reasonableness, logic and continuity. They were doctrinal and were delivered with such force and power as to bring conviction to all. The speaker was richly blessed with the Spirit. Saints of Wichita extended a hearty invitation to him to return at any time. While there he visited in many homes, becoming acquainted with the members and making new friends.

San Antonio, Texas

First Branch, Rockwood Court and South Cherry Streets

The communion service for January was in charge of Pastor R. W. Jett. The pastor invited all members of the priesthood to occupy seats on the rostrum, each one being assigned an active part in the meeting. An introductory talk was given by E. L. Henson. His theme was, "Zion and the Gathering." All who were present seemed to be glad to renew their covenants and start the new year with greater determination to improve upon 1933.

Those occupying the pulpit during the past month were Pastor R. W. Jett, Elders J. A. Robinson and Fred Smith, District President G. R. Kuykendall, and on the last Sunday in January, young Brother Harry Robinson was the speaker at the morning service, taking his theme from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

T. J. Jett, junior, occupied the pulpit during the evening service, his theme being along the line of prophecies. At this service a vocal duet was rendered by Mrs. Evva Richardson and Mrs. Airtha Simpson. All speakers had a marked degree of the Spirit, and brought out some fine lessons.

On the evening of January 26, this congregation was favored with a musical concert, by Gifford Edwards, violinist, who played some beautiful selections. He was accompanied by Mrs. Imogene Purdum and Miss Emma Jackson, who played duet numbers.

During the Sunday school hour, December 24, an interesting Christmas program was rendered by the children. Miss Madlyn Galbraith and Mrs. Fred Sherrill were in charge. Christmas carols were sung, interspersed by readings and a short play by the juniors.

During the evening the choir sang a cantata, "The Birth of Our Lord," directed by Miss Emma Jackson. Lavon Jackson accompanied at the piano. Those taking special parts were Mrs. Fay Hall, soprano; Claud Rieves, tenor, and Gland Kuykendall, bass. Preceding the singing Gifford Edwards played a violin solo.

On the last Sunday of the year, J. A. Robinson officiated in the ordinance of baptism. His grandson, John A. Robinson, junior, was the candidate. This eight-year-old lad was anxious to become a member of the church. The confirmation took place immediately following, Brother Robinson the spokesman.

Following this service, E. L. Henson was the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour.

About a year ago, when Brother and Sister E. L. Henson left San Antonio, the Saints were unable to bid them good-by. During that time the women of the branch worked together making a friendship quilt. A Mexican supper was held the Friday evening following Christmas, at which time the quilt was presented. The presentation talk was delivered by Sister J. A. Robinson. The couple was very much surprised to be the recipients of so splendid a gift, but Brother Henson responded with a short talk.

Besides having the satisfaction of making a gift, the women realized from the quilt a sum of money which amounted to about twenty dollars.

The women's department has been busy quilting throughout the year, and has been able to help the local church financially. Recently, a gift of fifty dollars was turned over to the branch treasurer, to be applied on the church debt.

The secretary and treasurer of the women's department, Sister Sophia Ferguson, recently had an accident, fracturing her knee-cap. She is still in the hospital, but is slowly recovering.

Baltimore, Maryland

Prepare to Make Marked Progress

Adolphus Edwards was chosen president of Baltimore Branch at the recent annual business meeting, and is preparing church programs each month and arranging regular priesthood meetings. The elders and priests are divided into teams and each team has a zone to care for. In each zone are about five families for one team to visit. Unity of spirit will abound where the church officers visit the families often. The mid-week prayer services are also a success when everyone comes for the same purpose.

Sister Grace Edwards was reelected Sunday school superintendent. She has proved to be an alert and efficient worker and has endeavored to make the Sunday school a success. She has launched an attendance drive which will last for six months. Awards will be given for perfect attendance. Mildred Edwards was elected assistant superintendent; Bundy White, secretary; A. W. Powell was reelected treasurer; Phillip Givens, librarian; Mildred Edwards, pianist, and Joseph Edwards, jr., chorister.

Although they are few in number, the young people are thinking of starting a recreation and expression department. They plan to study the Book of Mormon. Brother Arthur Edwards and Brother

A. W. Powell have interesting collections of pictures and magazine articles which they will show and explain to the class. These brothers have made a special study of the Book of Mormon.

The Sunday school is planning a special Easter program. They have given several successful Easter entertainments in the past.

Kansas City Stake

One of the finest O. B. K. prayer meetings was held at Central Church, February 7. Lloyd Siebert was in charge of the meeting, assisted by the Central O. B. K. counselors. The program began with a duet, "Consecration," by Miss Betty Speers and Miss Jeanette Dunn. Norman Anderson gave the Scripture reading, and Doctor E. Nelson introduced the theme of the meeting. Pastor C. E. Wight made the initial talk of the evening, "Honesty and Loyalty." A spirit of unity prevailed at this service, and the prayers, testimonies, and songs will long linger in the memory of those who were present. Immediately after, refreshments were served, Central Church young people acting as hosts.

The second session of the classes conducted by Elder R. L. Bishop and Bishop J. A. Koehler each second and fourth Sunday of the month, was held February 11, at 2.30 and 3.30 p. m., at Central Church, with good attendance.

Central Church

Central Women's Club is glad to report that its splendid average attendance of one hundred is keeping up in spite of the illness of some members. The friendly visitors who call each week are having good results in their collections and enjoy their visits. January 1, the club was happy to present Bishop C. A. Skinner the sum of five hundred dollars, to be applied on the church debt. Now the circle leaders are busy refilling the gift chest, to meet the constant demand of gifts for showers, birthdays, etc. The members prepare Thursday night dinners every week, promoting the social life of the local church and increasing attendance at the prayer service. The program chairman has planned a trip to the Kansas City Art Institute, to be taken in the near future. The club meets the first and third Thursdays in the month. The women's chorus, directed by Eugene Christy, meets at eleven o'clock; luncheon is served at one, and the program is given at two.

The theme of the morning worship February 11, was, "Set Thine House in Order." The Scripture reading was by Clayton Wolfe, and a trumpet duet was played by Lorraine Sandy and Royce Stoemer. At the church period the choir sang, "Hark, Hark, My Soul," by Shelley and Pastor C. E. Wight preached, urging the members to keep constantly in touch with God.

Elder Mark H. Siegfried preached the evening sermon and La Rena Bullard sang a special number.

This congregation misses Mrs. Florence Hands Graham who recently left with her infant son, to join her husband at Glasgow, Montana, where he is employed.

The young people's class met at the home of Byrna Sandy, February 16, to continue their class, "How the Bible Grew." Under their teacher, Pastor C. E. Wight, the members are finding this study most interesting.

Heathwood Church

A pleasant family gathering occurred at the home of Brother James J. Post and wife Sunday evening, February 11, in honor of Brother Post's eightieth birthday on the twelfth. Guests were his children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and other relatives. On Monday evening Brother Post received a pleasant surprise upon returning from a short visit to a neighbor's, to find thirty-five church school people and O. B. K.'s there to spend the evening. Brother Post bears his eighty years well and gives promise of more happy birthdays.

This busy little congregation has been recently favored with Sunday evening sermons by Elder George E. Harrington who ably discoursed on the Word of Wisdom. Elder P. T. Anderson held his audience with an old-time gospel sermon.

The adult division of the church school holds a prayer meeting at ten-forty-five, and recent sessions have been full of spiritual interest. Divine healing has been the blessing given to some living in this district.

Chelsea Church

At the Stake O. B. K. initiation service, January 30, the Chelsea O. B. K.'s admitted three new members to their ranks, Tressa Weeks, Catherine Childers, and Virginia Spillman.

On Tuesday evening, February 6, Chelsea held its first O. B. K. meeting since the initiation. It was begun by a piano prelude followed by a prayer and then a few songs by the group. After that came the business session at which they decided on a new method of finances. They also decided to have their regular O. B. K. meeting the first Tuesday evening of each month.

Earl Snell tendered his resignation as secretary of the O. B. K.'s, and Miss Dorothy Sears was elected in his place. After the business session, they played a few games led by the vice councilor Miss Adalain Taylor.

Miss Jesse Belle Taylor is organizing a junior stewardship group. Those who are acquainted with the excellent success she has made with the choir have no doubt she will be successful with the junior stewardships.

The Girl Scouts, under the leadership of Miss Adalain Taylor and Miss Anna Decker, gave a supper on Friday evening, February 9, to raise money for re-registration.

The eleven o'clock service Sunday, February 11, was held in honor of the Boy Scouts. Elder George Mesley was the guest speaker. He was formerly a scoutmaster in Australia. When he left there one of his scouts gave him a staff. Since then Brother Mesley has carved his scouting history on his staff. He told the boys of his experience in scouting and told them what each symbol on his staff represented. The service was enjoyed by the older ones as well as the scouts.

Far West Stake

The stake was saddened by the death of Elva M. Hougas, wife of Stake President Ward A. Hougas, on February 2. Mrs. Hougas was loved by all who knew her for her unselfish loyalty and devotion to her family and the church. Hundreds of friends paid their last tribute to her at Stewartsville Sunday, February 4, where they gathered from all parts of the stake. The Saints extend deepest sympathy to Brother Hougas and their two children.

Stewartsville Branch

Beautiful and helpful worship periods have been experienced in church school each Sunday under the supervision of J. L. Hidy, director. Recent speakers who have given interesting theme talks have included Emerson McCord, Willard Hinderks, Curtis Vernon and Leonard G. Ehlers. Appropriate musical numbers have added much to the worship.

At the communion service January 7, the new pastor Z. J. Lewis, gave a challenge to all to assume the responsibility to carry on with renewed determination and to build up a greater degree of spirituality for the task and problems of each day. At 7:30 p. m. Brother Lewis gave a forceful sermon on "Making Our Religion Vital."

Frank L. Hinderks, of the stake presidency, was guest speaker January 14, at ten forty-five. The young people's choir gave several special numbers, which created an appropriate setting for the sermon.

The women's activities are being carried on again this year under the leadership of Sister Frances Mauzey. An all-day meeting was held on Thursday, January 18. The time was spent in quilting and other work. A covered-dish luncheon was served. The first Thursday in each month is given over to an educational meeting, with literary and musical programs. They are continuing their study of the Book of Mormon with Sister Anna McCord as teacher. At the February meeting Sister Fern Ehlers told of her interesting experiences at the World's Fair in Chicago. Sister Madge Head gave a report of the W. C. T. U. Regional Conference which was held recently in Kansas City.

On January 21, the Saints were encouraged and inspired by a sermon given by Stake Bishop Milo Burnett on "The Life and Mission of Christ." The young people's choir again rendered helpful service. That night they, with their supervisor, Leonard G. Ehlers, journeyed to Kansas City where they gave the musical program for the regular 10 p. m. broadcast over K. M. B. C. There were twenty of them. The young people enjoyed this experience as well as the opportunity for rendering service.

A large number from this branch attended the stake young people's rally at Saint Joseph, January 27 and 28. Thirty-two of the young people were in attendance at the banquet Saturday night.

The entire branch was saddened with news of the death of Sister Ward A. Hougas, February 2. She made a patient, brave struggle in her last long illness. Sister Hougas was one of Stewartsville's own girls and was loved by all who knew her. The sincere sympathy of all is extended to Brother Hougas and his children. The funeral was held at the church, Sunday, February 4, at 2 p. m., Bishop Milo Burnett in charge. Brother Frank L. Hinderks gave a beautiful and comforting sermon. The quartet, which consisted of Mrs. C. E. Haden, Miss Pearl Kinnaman and Evan J. Ehlers, of Saint Joseph, and Leonard G. Ehlers of Stewartsville, sang "My Faith Looks Up to Thee" and "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere." Mrs. Haden sang "Rock of Ages." Interment was in the Stewartsville Cemetery.

Sunday, February 11, was National Boy Scout Day. A special service was held for the scouts at the Christian Church, to which they went in a body. An impressive sermon was given by the pastor, Reverend C. F. Ward, on "Are We Safe in Trusting the World of Tomorrow to the Boys and Girls of Today?" A number of the Saints attended this service. Sister Mildred Powell presided at the piano for them.

Kingston Branch

So far, February has brought both sadness and joy to the hearts of Kingston and Oakdale Saints. On the eighth, the young people gave a shower, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Deal, for the two newly-wed couples, Mr. and Mrs. Dodge Dunlap, of Oakdale Branch, and Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Wood, of Kingston Branch.

Then, on the twelfth the Saints were made sad with Brother and Sister Clarence Peterson over the loss of their baby boy.

Kingston and Oakdale young people have effected a joint organization under the leadership of Ernest Wood, and now have their activities together. They meet at one branch and then at the other. A number attended the stake rally in Saint Joseph recently.

In spite of the fact that several of the Saints have been sick, attendance has held up well and a good interest is shown.

Saint Joseph Branch

First Church

A fine response has been given to Elder O. Salisbury's series of doctrinal sermons which he commenced the first Sunday evening of the year. The purpose of this series is to help the members "re-think our fundamental doctrines" as well as to interest nonmembers. Special music has been furnished by the choir each Sunday evening to fit in with the subjects. On two evenings Brother Salisbury illustrated his sermons with slides.

On the morning of January 14, Pastor Ward A. Hougas spoke to a large congregation on "The Days to Come." The two associate pastors have each preached once recently, Brother Lawrence Keck occupying the morning of January 21 and Elder H. C. Timm the morning of February 11.

The vesper service February 11, was in the nature of a hymnology service. An interesting service was enjoyed by a large congregation. The choir sang "Rock of Ages" as an anthem and a quartet sang "Take My Life" while a soloist sang "O Love That Wilt Not Let Me Go." "Onward, Christian Soldiers" and "Abide With Me" were sung by the congregation from illustrated slides. Several other hymns including "Redeemer of Israel" were sung by the congregation from the Hymnals. The story of each hymn was told by a member of the choir before it was sung. All of these beautiful hymns are better appreciated when the story of their writing is known.

The adult division held a meeting Friday evening, January 26, at the church. A program was given by one class of the church school and games were played following the program. Refreshments were served. A good representation was present.

The O. T. Z.'s had a recreational meeting Tuesday February 13. A table tennis tournament was played and valentines were made while the guests were not playing. Refreshments in keeping with Valentine Day were served.

The young people's Sunday morning prayer services continue twice a month and the attendance is growing. On Wednesday evening each week a general prayer service is held. A number of sick have been remembered recently in the prayer services, and most of them are reported improving. The choir rehearses following the prayer service each Wednesday. They are now preparing an Easter cantata, "Olivet to Calvary," as well as music for the regular Sunday evening services and stake conference.

The priesthood meet each Monday night at the church where a half-hour prayer service is conducted after which they go visiting in the homes of the Saints. Their efforts have met with a fine response.

Fourth Church

Fourth church commenced the new year with a new pastor, L. Warren Hill. The Saints are happy to have Brother

Hill and his wife and small son in their midst.

The women's department has regular meetings every two weeks on Thursday afternoons at various homes. They are at present working on a play, to be given in the near future. They also do some quilting.

The religio meets every Friday evening at the church. Elder T. E. Hale is the teacher for the class period. The young people are active in this work.

Bishop Milo Burnett was the speaker on the evening of January 7, and Stake President Ward A. Hougas spoke the following Sunday evening. The new pastor gave his first sermon at Fourth the morning of January 14, and preached also the evening of the twenty-first. Out-of-town speakers have been Elder David W. Gamet, of Cameron, and Curtis A. Vernon, of Stewartville. Elder H. C. Timm and Richard Mason have also been recent speakers.

Independence

Stone Church

Speakers at the Stone Church Sunday were Elder R. L. Fulk in the morning and in the evening Elder Glaude A. Smith, and their sermons were much appreciated.

Brother Fulk is a missionary of many years experience, a man well known to many Saints throughout the country. Brother Smith is now pastor of the branch at Denver, Colorado, and president of Eastern Colorado District, but Independence was his home for many years, and here he began his labors for the church. He has many friends in the center place.

The Stone Church Choir furnished special music for the morning service, directed by Paul N. Craig; Robert Miller, organist, and George Miller, pianist. The choir sang "New Every Morning Is the Love." Miss Dorothy Nace played a violin solo, "The Rosary." She also played the violin obbligato for the choir number, "O Lord Most Holy," Mrs. Nina G. Smith singing the soprano solo.

An impressive ordination service took the place of the regular Sunday afternoon prayer meeting at the Stone Church February 11. At this hour the following men were ordained: to the office of elder, Arthur H. Thompson; priest, Frank S. Jennings and Everett Elliott; teacher, Louis Resch and Shankland S. Arnson; deacon, J. Frederick Pinson and Albert Handy. Their names were among those approved by the quarterly conference in January.

Apostle and Sister J. F. Curtis announce the marriage of their daughter, Nell Marguerite, to Thurman Harder, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Harver, Tulsa, Oklahoma. The marriage took place at Tulsa, February 8.

Miss Margaret Mills, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Mills of Independence, and Louis Miller, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Miller, also of Independence, were married at the home of the bride's parents February 14, Elder U. W. Greene reading the ceremony. The bridal pair were attended by Miss Ruth Tignor and Hubert Mills, brother of the bride. Mr. and Mrs. Miller will make their home in Independence.

Last night and tonight Stone Church young people are busy with the preliminaries of the city-wide play contest. The winning plays will be announced in next week's Herald.

Second Church

Pastor Will Inman was last Sunday morning's speaker and his theme was "Our Past and Present Opportunities." The choir furnished music, and a special number was a vocal solo by Elsie Lee Street.

Gordon Cable was in charge of the junior service, and Elder Sam Inman was the speaker. "A Good Citizen" was his theme, and Geneva Edmunds told the story, "How Jimmy Kept His Word." "Faith of Our Fathers," a solo by Nadine Inman, was appreciated, and Helen Willoughby played a piano solo.

Bishop J. S. Kelley was the evening speaker and his topic was "Obeying the Laws of God." Music was furnished by the ladies' quartet.

Speakers at Second Church Sunday, February 11, were Elder J. A. Holsworth in the morning who discoursed on "The Signs of the Times"; Imal Burke spoke to the children at the junior service and Mrs. John Blackmore told the story "Be My Brother's Keeper." In the evening Elder F. L. Freeman preached on "Charity."

Walnut Park Church

The three classes of senior young people of the church school have been holding joint meetings the past two Sundays, for the purpose of hearing a discussion of the financial law of the church and receiving instructions in regard to the filing of their inventories. Elder Howard Andersen spoke to them Sunday morning. Following the class period Erwin Moorman talked to the school of the library, mentioning some desirable books which are in the library and some which are needed.

At eleven o'clock Elder John F. Sheehy was the speaker and proved himself a real story-teller. He related the story of Joseph, and brought from it a moving and inspiring message. His appeals for a childlike faith and a Christlike forgiveness were high points. Preceding the sermons the choir sang, "Steal Away," under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson, and a tenor solo, "I Shall Not Pass Again This Way," was sung by Glaude A. Smith. Brother Smith, a former pastor at Walnut Park, and now located at Denver, Colorado, attended the service and met many old friends.

Elder Welton Wood spoke to the junior service in the basement, and Sister Barwise told a story.

In the evening Elder C. Ed. Miller was the speaker, delivering a splendid sermon. The anthem sung by the choir was "Savior, Now the Day Is Ended."

The preliminaries of the one-act play contest were held Friday and Saturday evenings in the lower auditorium of the church. Five plays were given and first place was awarded to "Jephthah's Daughter," and second to "Women Folk." Those who had parts in "Jephthah's Daughter" were: Melba Moorman, Ted Snively, Fred Fish, Kenneth Morford, Milford Nace, Marjorie Snively, Leonard Curtis, Eddie Butterworth, Violet Chase, Bethene Barnhardt, Mildred Taylor, Mary Taylor, Sadie Mayhew, Duane Fish, and Robert Butterworth. Mrs. E. E. Moorman was director and Alta June Moorman assisted. "Women Folk," directed by Pauline Siegfried and Dorothy Bryant, was played by Marybelle Sanders, Jessie Anderson, Kathryn Price, Opal Colebank and Alice Brown. These two plays will represent Walnut Park in the finals to be held later at the Stone Church. The basement of the church was crowded and all available standing room was occupied each evening.

Alice Iola Lanpher, daughter of Elder and Mrs. F. W. Lanpher, was married on Saturday, February 10, to Mr. Claude Ross. The ceremony was performed by Elder Maurice Jacobsen, pastor of Spring Branch Church. The young couple will make their home temporarily with Brother and Sister Lanpher.

Enoch Hill Church

The young people met with Brother and Sister Charles Warren for their prayer meeting last Wednesday.

On Thursday the women assembled in the church basement for an all-day session and spent the time quilting. Twenty-six were present. Everyone enjoyed the class taught by Elder William Shakespeare. Several of the women promised to make something for the sale at conference.

Elder C. E. Beal, assisted by Lawrence Martin, was in charge of the early morning prayer service Sunday.

"The Good Shepherd" was the theme used by the Dorcas Class for the worship period of the church school. Sister Henry Hartman read "The Test." Sister Maloney read, "I Know Something Good About You." There was also a reading by Sister C. E. Beal, and then Brother Beal gave a five-minute talk on the class theme. A mixed quartet sang "The Ninety and Nine."

Brother Earl Hoisington was the Sunday morning speaker, and Pastor E. A. Thomas talked on "Prayer" in the evening. His Scripture text was Matthew 21: 20. Brother Dick Bullard sang "The Beautiful Garden of Prayer."

Mrs. Emma A. Woods passed away at the Sanitarium Friday, February 16. She was the wife of Jacob W. Woods, of this district. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Englewood Church

Communion service on February 4, was marked by a good attendance and a spirituality that was encouraging, Elder Earl Moore in charge. At the evening hour, Elder Thomas Richardson was the speaker.

February 11, during the church school hour, Orville LeRoy Hiles was baptized by his father, Elder Perry Hiles. Brother Hiles was the former pastor at Englewood. He now lives at Bates City, Missouri. The confirmation was at the eleven o'clock hour, Pastor R. W. Howery and Elder George Hiles, grandfather of the candidate, officiating.

Also at the eleven o'clock meeting, occurred the ordination of Arthur Welch to the office of elder. This service was impressive. Brother Howery gave the charge. Elders John F. Sheehy and Perry Hiles ordained Brother Welch. Brother Sheehy then gave an inspiring thirty-minute talk.

Elder A. M. Chase was the speaker, February 18, at eleven o'clock. In the evening, Elder Arthur Thompson preached the sermon.

The young people are becoming very active. They held their preliminaries for the play contest Saturday night.

A new family, Brother and Sister V. A. Walker, have moved into our district from Kansas City.

The women have been meeting at the home of Sister Stella Howery for the past three Wednesdays. They have an all-day meeting with a covered dish luncheon. All four groups of Englewood are meeting and working together.

East Independence Church

Two babies have been blessed recently, David Lynn, infant son of Brother and Sister T. W. Thatcher, under the hands of Elders Harry Friend and Frank Minton, and Wayne Laverne, son of Brother and Sister Laverne Spease, by Patriarch U. W. Greene and Elder H. V. Minton.

Recent speakers for this congregation have been G. W. Eastwood, G. Colman, Samual Spease, U. W. Greene, and Sam Smith.

Brother Sam Smith and family have recently moved into this group, and they are already finding a place in the branch work which they willingly fill. Their son rendered a much appreciated solo on a recent Sunday evening.

The prayer meetings are a source of spiritual uplift, though not largely attended.

The ladies are experiencing good meetings each Thursday. Questions are passed around and discussed, bringing better understandings of some interesting subjects.

Saints of East Independence joined in the annual community sing of this neighborhood with the congregation of the Fairmount Church, on Holke Road, and both schools of the community, Spring Branch and DeKalb, last Sunday evening. The event observed National Song Week and the birthdays of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and Henry W. Longfellow. Mrs. Iva Edgerton is chairman of the annual sing, and Mrs. Joseph Friend directed the presentation. About thirty numbers were given by the various groups represented.

Spring Branch Church

Attendance at the Sunday services was somewhat smaller than usual because of weather conditions. A. J. Tankard gave a good talk at the close of the lesson study.

The eleven o'clock speaker was Elder George Jenkins whose theme was "Take Time to Be Holy."

Elder T. A. Beck occupied the pulpit in the evening, talking on "Righteousness." The choir sang "Holy Spirit," and Gladys Dixon sang a solo.

The young people held their preliminaries of the play contest Thursday night. Three plays were given, "The Getaway," coached by Velma Jones, "Dead Expense," coached by Alma Dixon, and "The Gift," coached by Irene Roberts. All were under the general direction of Mrs. L. E. Roberts. Judges awarded the first place to "Dead Expense," second to "The Gift," and third to "The Getaway."

Flint, Michigan

Enjoy Variety of Activities

An interesting and profitable "Watch Night" service was planned for December 31. The regular evening service began at nine o'clock after which the play "The Hour Glass," by Yeats, directed by Allen C. Pohly, was presented. Refreshments were served and the evening finished with a musical program.

On November 22, the women's groups sponsored a Thanksgiving dinner. The young people's service for November, arranged by L. E. Flowers, leader of that department, was especially enjoyable. The subject, "What Has Religion to Do With My Home Life, My School Life, My Job, My Recreation and My Community Life," was discussed by one person actively engaged in each of these phases of life. Brother Flowers introduced each speaker with appropriate reading from the Doctrine and Covenants.

A group of young people, directed by Laura McNamara, gave two presentations of the play, "Paying the Fiddler," by Mortimer. Another group, directed by Lillian Morrison, presented a play, "Christmas Shadow." A class of senior young people, led by Mrs. L. E. Flowers, sponsored a Christmas party for the children's department.

The women's groups arranged a gift service which contributed materially to the furnace fund. Two cantatas were given December 24, one by the children's department at the morning service, the other by the choir for the evening service. Both cantatas were directed by Mrs. Ruth Wallace.

Phoenix, Arizona

Rally Day Inspires and Encourages

Saints of Phoenix Branch met in an all-day rally January 21. Elder Howard F. Miller delivered the eleven o'clock address after which there was a delightful picnic lunch on the grounds followed by a branch business meeting. After extremely depressing conditions in the branch, the spirit of consecration evidenced was inspiring, and a number of Saints were spurred to make pledges of financial support.

Sister Jennie Young was placed in charge of the financial committee, Brother Paul W. Bear was elected assistant pastor. Sister Yula Mast was chosen assistant to Sister Mabin Speer in the church school. Sister Young announced new activities of the women's department.

The day closed with a song service and an address by Brother Paul W. Bear. Saints were present at the rally from Glendale and Chandler, Arizona.

The meetings conducted in Glendale Park on Sunday afternoon by Brother Miller, continue with interest.

Elder and Mrs. Louis J. Ostertag have moved to Santa Ana, California, to take the pastorate of the branch there. Phoenix Saints dispatched them to their new field with pride and many pleasurable memories.

This local enjoyed a visit from the Mundy family, of Colorado, not long ago.

Phoenix Branch is struggling under a heavy financial load, but they hope with the prayers of all, to accomplish their task. They are isolated, not having the benefits of district organization, and invite any of the traveling ministry to spend a few days with them when passing through the vicinity.

Dallas, Texas

Dedication of Church Recalls Early Days

The church building of Dallas Branch was dedicated Sunday, February 11. The Saints have looked forward to this for a number of years. It is the fruit of a labor begun by pioneer missionaries years ago. Elder T. J. Shepherd was one of the first ministers to visit this city. He had been a friend of the Elam family, and as one of that family lived in Dallas County, Brother Shepherd took advantage of the opportunity to preach the gospel here. Hundreds of people had an opportunity to hear the gospel story. Brother Shepherd made many friends and found a hearty welcome in their home; he received help financially. After several visits, he baptized Sisters Emily Moore and Martha Elam. As time passed, others were added to the fold. Brother S. W. Simmons accompanied Brother Shepherd on some of his visits, and on one occasion spoke to the group with the gift of prophecy, telling them that there would be a branch in Dallas. At that time all the Saints lived nine miles from the city, but the prophecy has been fulfilled as well as other things spoken by Brother Simmons.

Other missionaries helping Brother Shepherd in Dallas were H. O. Smith, E. L. Henson, J. W. Wight, B. F. Renfro, John Harp, J. M. Nunley, and later W. M. Aylor and G. R. Kuykendall.

In the summer of 1913, W. R. Standifer and B. F. Spicer held a series of meetings at Vickery, Texas, baptizing four more into the fold. That fall Brother Kuykendall conducted meetings in Dallas. The Saints had no permanent meeting place, but a Bohemian woman grateful for kindness shown her by Sisters Moore and Pike, gave a house and lot to the church, to be used for church purposes only and by the Reorganized Church alone. She named the provision that if the property should be sold, it would revert to her heirs. Brothers Kuykendall looked after having the deed made to the Bishop.

Shortly after, Brother W. R. Standifer moved to Dallas, others were ordained to various offices, and the latter-day work has continued to grow. Three generations are now represented in the branch as a result of the untiring efforts of these pioneer missionaries.

Brother J. M. Nunley was present at the church dedication. C. W. Tischer, president of the district, offered the opening prayer. Introductory remarks were made by H. H. Davenport, pastor, and the sermon was by Apostle R. S. Budd. Bishop L. F. P. Curry spoke and offered prayer.

On this occasion the Saints recalled many spiritual experiences enjoyed when the work was in its infancy in Dallas. Their faith was increased by these reminiscences, and with new courage and a keen desire, they are pressing on.

Every meeting during conference was well attended and the Spirit of the Master was enjoyed by all. Brother W. H. Holsworth was ordained a teacher by Apostle Budd and Bishop Curry.

Gladstone, Michigan

The Saints of Gladstone were made happy a few days before Christmas to have Missionary J. J. Ledsworth and wife come to this branch. He always has a message of an encouraging and uplifting nature.

Brother Ledsworth was elected by the branch as pastor, to succeed Brother W. H. Acker, who with his wife, is making a trip through the West. But realizing the need of the district, Brother Ledsworth resigned as pastor after five weeks service, to continue his missionary work in the district. The Saints regretted to have Brother and Sister Ledsworth leave. Brother E. R. Carter was elected as pastor during Brother Acker's absence.

Holden Stake

Knobnoster, Missouri

Elder R. F. Moorman and family, of Jefferson City, recently paid a visit to Knobnoster Saints. Brother Moorman preached during the eleven o'clock hour, January 30. His sermon was well received.

Ben Kramer, Sunday school director, and one of the young men ordained at the last Holden stake conference, preached his first sermon February 4. His subject was "Forgiveness."

Blue Springs, Missouri

Rama Jean, infant daughter of Brother and Sister E. Wells, was recently blessed under the hands of Elders O. W. Sarratt and R. J. Stark.

On the second Sunday of December, O. W. Sarratt was the speaker in the morning, choosing for his subject, "Do We Need Industrial Zion for our Children's Sake?"

Elder Leslie Allen, the evening speaker, preached on "Am I My Brother's Keeper?"

The third Sunday, Brother Stark was the morning speaker, choosing for his theme, "Righteousness." The evening service found C. A. Joice in the pulpit, who spoke on "What Have You Learned of Value the Past Year?"

A Christmas program was presented the following Sunday, by the primary department under the supervision of Frances Williamson. Elder Gerald G. Phillips preached, taking for his theme, Luke 2: 12.

In the evening a tableau was given on the birth of Christ. The characters taking part in this program were Fred Wilson, George Grubb, Aubrey Story, Frances Williamson and Dorothy Wilson. Sister Vida Sarratt read the Scriptures.

The last Sunday of the month, Elder O. W. Sarratt preached in the morning, and Elder Fred Immers, during the evening, both men on the subject of "Righteousness."

Mrs. R. J. Stark was called suddenly to Los Angeles, California to be at the bedside of her dying father.

March Prayer Meeting Themes

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "PRAYER"
 March 4. Sacrament Sunday
 Theme: "A house of prayer."

This is designated for a special day of fasting and prayer for the coming General Conference. (See Herald of February 13, page 198.) Pastors should make announcements of it on the preceding Sunday from the pulpit, and urge congregations to make special preparations for the sacramental service and prayer meeting on this day.

"Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

Suggested Hymns:

- 151—"Father when in love to Thee"
- 103—"Sweet hour of prayer"
- 322—"Take time to be holy"
- 324—"Pass me not O gentle Savior"
- 293—"Consecration"

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7

Theme: "Pray Always"

"And again, I command thee that thou shalt pray vocally as well as in thy heart; yea, before the world as well as in secret; in public as well as in private. And thou shalt declare glad tidings; yea, publish it upon the mountains, and upon every high place, and among every people that thou shalt be permitted to see. And thou shalt do it with all humility, trusting in me, reviling not against revilers. . . . Pray always and I will pour out my Spirit upon you, and great shall be your blessing."—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 4, 6.

Suggested Hymns:

- 79—"With thankful hearts"
- 314—"I need Thee every hour"
- 131—"Love divine"
- 295—"Jesus, I my cross have taken"
- 281—"My faith looks up to Thee"

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14

Theme: "Teaching the children to pray."

"They shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before

GREETINGS TO ALL SAINTS

For 35 years we have been seeking a process to extract the hearts of wheat, this has at last been accomplished. Will ship in bulk almost 2-lbs. for $1.00 delivered, or a family supply, 4-lbs. for $2.00, with it we will ship 2-lbs. of Phosfo in bulk for $1.00, or 5-lbs. for $2.00, just one shipment to family.

Golden Wheat Hearts are rich in vitamins A, B, C, E, and G, in iron, iodine, calcium, phosphate and raw mineral salt. Will do wonders for growing children, a food for all. Ready for use will almost melt in your mouth. A free taste if you send self addressed envelope and stamp. Takes from 200 to 400 pounds of wheat to secure a pound; naturally we are limited in shipping. Do not delay, order today; no risk of money or health—all to win, nothing to loose, valuable instructions with each family order free of charge.

the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

It is not enough to have the advantages of prayer for ourselves. We should also teach others to pray: not only the children who have been committed to our care, but also those who are young in the gospel work. Many have been brought to Christ through prayer, and prayer alone. And it should be known that none can come to Him except through prayer.

Suggested Hymns:

- 318—"One sweet hour"
- 311—"Let us pray for one another"
- 307—"Take my life"
- 291—"Faith of our fathers"

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21

Theme: "Prayer will work for our good."

"Search diligently, pray always, and be believing, and all things shall work together for your good, if ye walk uprightly, and remember the covenant wherewith ye have covenanted one with another."—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 6.

Prayer will produce positive benefits in our lives. It will give us divine strength to meet the trials and problems of life. It will reconcile us to the ways of God. It will bring to our minds and souls the peace which comes from the presence of the Holy Spirit.

Suggested Hymns:

- 327—"Ere you left your room this morning"
- 317—"Nearer, my God, to Thee"
- 312—"Lord, Thy mercy"
- 325—"One sweet hour"

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28

Theme: "Go to the house of prayer."

"Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness; even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments on my holy day."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2.

The life of prayer cannot be fully complete without regular attendance at church. We forget, we neglect the service of God if we remain away from the gatherings of his people. Only by communing with him in the appointed place can we receive the best gifts he has to bestow.

Suggested Hymns:

- 323—"O thou God, who hearest prayer"
- 328—"Behold the Savior at your door"
- 332—"Jesus is calling"
- 336—"There's no love to me"

Why?

Publication costs are advancing rapidly. Stock costs have doubled in many lines and labor costs are mounting, due to various restrictions imposed, yet we hope to hold the price as low as possible. On March 23 we will close our regular mailing list for the Daily Herald. This is the last date in connection with which we feel certain of our service on the Daily Herald list. Subscriptions will be received afterwards of course at the higher rate and every effort will be made to give them the best of service, but each will require special handling. Cooperate with us with early subscriptions and we will do our best to keep them coming to you regularly during conference.

ABSOLUTELY NO EXCEPTIONS

In order to make it possible to offer the Daily Herald at these low prices we must insist on a strictly cash-in-advance subscription list. This means everyone, publicity agents and otherwise. NO SUBSCRIPTIONS WILL BE ENTERED UNLESS THE REMITTANCE ACCOMPANIES THE ORDER.

Order Early and Help Us Serve You

The making up of a new mailing list ready for the addressing machines is a big item, especially when that list reaches the ten-thousand mark and must be completed within a few days or weeks. Your early orders not only help us but also help you in that you are assured the use of less extra-hour work and new help that are not experienced in this line. Less trouble and fewer mistakes will occur if your order comes in early. Help us to help you and we'll all feel better over the deal. Thanks!

■ Truth Is Best

The other day a salesman came into the office to sell an encyclopedia. He told two lies in order to get the interview. He said that he was an agent of the government and that he had no sales proposition. He got the interview. In less than five minutes the transparency of both his lies was apparent. He lost the sale by so wide a margin that he never had a chance.

Lies flourish like weeds, and they are burned like trash. Truth grows slowly, and it is hoarded like gold. The victim of a lie is hurt for a little while, but he recovers: he has never violated his own faith. But the man who tells a lie does himself an irreparable injury. No man or organization can afford to lie. Some day retribution catches them, they are stripped of their dishonest profits, and perish miserably. It would not be hard to cite some examples from the fields of business and politics.

A dull truth is better than a clever lie. It requires no explanation. You don't have to remember what you said. It will never bite you in the back. You can go off and leave it, and it will be there when you return, and it will look the same as when you left it.

There are experienced and successful salesmen who are as near to the ideal of honesty as ordinary mortals get. They can be trusted in all their transactions and agreements. These fellows are no foolish sentimentalists. They know that it pays to stick pretty close to the truth. They must call on the same people every week in the year. A single lie would so discredit them that they would cripple their own business.

Yet salesmen are subjected to temptations of the most trying sort to experiment with the flexibility of speech. They are not paid for their ability to tell the facts, but for their ability to sell. If they can't sell, they fail. And failure means that they don't eat. Some of them reach for an immediate gain with a little falsehood, at the price of future failure.

The truth may look costly at the start, but it is the cheapest in the end.

■ They Yet Return to Thank Us

(A Graceland College Incident)

We all possess the ability of appreciation, yet how seldom do we turn to exercise it. Out postman's load would be much heavier if we all wrote letters of thankfulness as well as those of criticism and complaint. Here is a letter that turned a day's problem into achievement, and an evening's prayer to thanksgiving.

"To Graceland College: We are hoping that all is progressing well at Graceland, now nearly in the last lap of the school year. Our youngsters are getting along famously, thanks to their Graceland training. In fact, both of them find their work here much easier after their rigorous training and perhaps that accounts for Winifred's being one of the fifteen honor students in the College of Education in the University this semester.

"So we continue to be thankful to Graceland for the good foundation they received there and for the cooperative manner in which their education was made possible during these severe times."

The Wings of Prayer

Preparation Necessary The necessity of preparation is a law of spiritual experience that operates for individuals, families, branches, and even such a large gathering as the General Conference. Without preparation there is likely to be no particular blessing. With it, and in consideration of our needs and desires, the possibility of a great blessing at this General Conference may be opened for us.

The Fast March 4 To begin such a period of preparation, the First Presidency announced for Sunday, March 4, a special fast to be observed by all the church, to accompany a season of prayer for the welfare of the church and for the General Conference. The effectiveness of this effort will depend upon the faithfulness with which it is observed. The concerns of the church are of such importance at this time as to require the most earnest cooperation of which we are capable.

A Month of Prayer A single day's effort, however, would be insufficient. It is therefore thought well to remember the church and the conference in prayer during the month of March, in order that we may approach the conference in a state of preparation for its responsibilities and its experiences. In last week's Herald suggestions were given, for such pastors as may desire them, of themes for the weekly prayer meetings, with appropriate texts. These are offered simply as a service, and are not meant to displace any other plans that pastors may conceive to be best for their congregations. Isolated members may well use them for thought and for their private worship.

The Efficacy of Prayer If we are to be lifted into the presence of God, it will be on the wings of our prayers. If we fail of receiving a blessing, it will be because we have not desired the blessing with sufficient earnestness, or because we have not prepared for it. All our past experience has taught us of the effectiveness of prayer. The healing of the sick, the comforting of the sorrowful, the restoration of faith and hope, the salvation from destructive influences in the world, all have assured us beyond doubt that it is one of the greatest things that can affect our experience for good ends—it can lift us into the presence of God's Spirit. And that should be our effort: not to bring that Spirit down to the lower levels of life, but to lift ourselves to it.

Blue Pencil Notes

"That government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."—Lincoln.

Originally the king was one who by personal prowess had won dominion and governed by edict. Later he established a dynasty, and when his successor happened to be immature, or aged, or weak, ambitious men as guardians or advisors became the "power behind the throne," and factions fought and intrigued for control. The king was a figure-head excepting when a king of strong personality arose and asserted himself.

Later there began to dawn a perception of the rights of the people to have something to say about their own government, and a long, bitter struggle began between the people and the throne. Parliamentary forms arose, limiting the powers of the throne and giving the people more and more voice in government. In some instances the king became merely the "symbol of the state" and did not presume to govern. He kept apart from party strifes, so though his ministers might fail and fall and the people force frequent changes in government he continued secure as the symbol of the state. Republics also arose endeavoring to give over to the people full control of all governmental affairs through their own selected representatives.

Representative government has become cumbersome and slow in times of crisis and swift moving change, as at present. By the time senators and representatives, enmeshed in precedent and red tape, (and politics) get through discussion, if ever, and agree upon a remedy, the crisis is past or has assumed a new phase. So we observe a rather world-wide swing away from democracy. Dictators have fought their way to the top again. They govern by edict and are all that the king was in the beginning, excepting in title. Man has run around the circle and come back to the point from which he started.

Parliamentary forms are disappearing or falling into disrepute. Even France seems under the shadow of an impending dictatorship, having changed governments with each new moon. In the United States Congress for some years has been under the hammer. Wits, near wits, and half wits, have made senators and representatives the constant butt of jest and ridicule. Whether or not democracy shall survive depends upon a will and an intelligence to modify some of its methods and purge it of its political corruptions so that it can act swiftly and wisely to apply the well-thought-out will of an intelligent populace to immediate problems. This requires a high level of intelligence and probity and a lively sense of responsible citizenship in the nations that attempt to preserve the rights of the people in popular government.

In the United States we, as Latter Day Saints, are committed by our Scriptures to a belief that God gave himself to aid in working out the Constitution of the land to protect and insure the rights of popular government; the ideal epitomized by Lincoln: "Government of the people, by the people, for the people." Great Britain holds with us to her traditional ideals of popular government, free speech, and individual liberty, though under a different form of government.

As Latter Day Saints we are not commanded to support parties. We are not told to vote for a Democrat or a Republican or a Socialist. We are commanded to uphold "wise and good men" for office and just and constitutional methods in legislation. We should be free from partisan rancors and blind prejudices. And we are always bound to develop in ourselves that kind of citizenship upon which democracy must depend for its very life. That will be our best contribution to Lincoln's Gettysburg commitment dedicating the nation "to a new birth of freedom, that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Graceland Radio Broadcast

The first of a series of nine radio programs, sponsored by Graceland College, will be broadcast over KMBC Sunday, March 4, at 6:00 p. m. President G. N. Briggs will speak on the subject, "The New Deal in Education."

The Graceland Male Quartet, composed of Henry Muceus, Ames, Iowa; Wilbur Chandler, Birmingham, Alabama; Dwight Vredenburg, Lamoni, Iowa; and Sheldon Reynolds, Traverse City, Michigan, will furnish the music.

Young people interested in gaining a college education are urged to tune in on these weekly broadcasts. Awards ranging from $10.00 to $65.00 credit

Men You Ought to Know

L. F. P. CURRY
Presiding Bishop

It is our good fortune to have in our Presiding Bishop a man strongly conscious of the spiritual responsibilities of his office as well as the financial duties. Long schooled in the world of finance, he has learned the value of caution. His first interest is to protect the church in one of its most vital concerns.

Those who have heard him speak are impressed with his evident sincerity, his charming pulpit manner, his excellent delivery. He writes and speaks with the care and restraint of a scholar, but his natural eloquence cannot be entirely suppressed by either tongue or pen.

toward college expenses will be given to those writing the best summaries of any three of these broadcasts. Details of this contest will be announced over the air next Sunday.

The program for March 11, features an address by Elder Cyril Wight, President of the Kansas City Stake, who will speak on the subject, "The College Man in Business." George Anway, tenor, of Independence, Missouri, will sing on this program. Both of these men are alumni of Graceland.

Prayer is heaven's ordained means of success in the conflict with sin and the development of Christian character.—Selected.

ACROSS THE DESK

By F. M. S.

— Informal Chats From the Office of the President —

PRESIDENT
FREDERICK M. SMITH

ELDER J. L. Verhei, president of the Portland District, speaks most commendatorily of the work of President McDowell in that field in the priesthood institute held at Portland, it being one of the best ever held in the district. The sermons were of a high order spiritually as manifested by the tears of joy on the part of many in the audience. He feels sure that the priesthood of that district have a better understanding of Brother McDowell's work in the Presidency.

SOME of my readers may be interested in comments made by my sister who is two years older than I, her statements having been written on the 18th of January as she remembered that on the 21st I would have passed "the sixtieth milestone." She says:

"If you are feeling as I did two years ago and thinking as I did, you will be experiencing almost surprise at the fact! Some way I had not contemplated it much before it came, but when the day came and I knew I had rounded out sixty years of life, I still could not realize it at all. It seemed strange, almost eerie, that I had arrived at such a point without having expected it or planned for it some way. Now we are of the oldest generation in our family, and to the youngsters we probably seem quite aged, much as you and I were wont to regard Mr. Jacobs or Grandfather Madison. And what seems the strangest to me is that in looking back I can find no dividing line, cannot put my finger on any date and say, 'Here I said good-by to youth,' or 'Here I entered middle life,' or 'Here old age began.'

"O well, after all life does not consist of time, so much as of events and achievements, and even if the latter are of the spiritual sort, unmeasurable as the world measures, they round out a life worthily. And the wonderful thing about it is that spiritual successes do not age, but rather they keep youth alive and enthusiasms intact. In fact, I think they are the only secret mortals will ever find that unveil the mysteries of Eternal Youth, or Life Everlasting. Hours when I realize this most clearly are full of peace and content, while times I lose sight of it in struggle of vainer and less worthy nature, in failure to live up to the best I know, are times when age weighs heaviest, and the outlook seems gloomiest.

"If we could always keep our eyes on the heights, our feet steadily on an upward leading course, we could feel encouraged. But too often some sudden yielding to irritation, to impatient expression of inner maladjustment brings about another 'blue Monday' of spirit. However, I am glad I can say that as the years pass I really feel I have made progress, spiritually, and though still far, far below the heights I would reach, I do believe I can keep them in sight and more clearly than I used to. For this I am humbly grateful."

Doubtless many people who have passed their sixtieth birthday anniversary have had similar experiences or thoughts to those expressed by my sister, but have not been able to so clearly analyze their thoughts as has she. I feel sure that our readers will enjoy this comment by one who has passed the sixty mark.

LEE QUICK writes that 1933 has been one of the best years in his gospel work. He had the privilege recently of attending a priesthood conference in Oklahoma City where Brethren McDowell and Budd were the speakers and speaks highly of the efforts of the two brethren mentioned and of the spirituality of the meetings. He adds, "We may be poorer financially but surely we are richer spiritually."

We appreciate words like these from old stand-by missionaries. We congratulate Brother Quick on his year's work and hope that he may break his record in 1934.

HENRY L. LIVINGSTON writes us telling of a special day of prayer for the district and expressing the thought that we would be interested in knowing that they were making efforts to unify the work of the district, having in mind the development of greater loyalty to the general church and its ministry. Brother Livingston adds:

"Despite extremely adverse conditions, I think we are making good progress as a district both spiritually and temporally. The bishop's agent reports that an increase of tithes payers has been noted in the solicitors' reports, and he is very much encouraged with the outlook of that phase of the work. I am sure that the district is vitally interested and concerned in the progress of the general church. We hope that we shall be able to hold up our end in furthering the work of the Lord. Our prayers are for you personally and for the men associated with you in the tasks that we realize are not easy."

We appreciate the good work Brother Livingston and his helpers are doing and especially value the knowledge that we are being supported in their prayers.

BROTHER MOSTERDIJK of Holland sends greetings from himself and family and all the Saints. We are pleased to receive greetings from the Holland Saints and trust that under the leadership of the Spirit of the Master the work may go forward in that interesting little country.

MARCUS H. COOK, one of our old-time missionaries, who has been for many years in the field and still finds many opportunities to give service, expresses the determination to carry on as long as he has strength, for he has plenty of opportunities to serve. Brother Cook has passed his seventieth birthday anniversary and it is in response to a letter of mine congratulating him that he writes. After saying that he feels he has a host of friends who love and trust him, he says he also feels that it behooves him to live so that they will not be disappointed in him. He recalls many blessings as well as shadows and disappointments. Has met many discouraging trials, especially with himself, but he feels that a motto which he has applied to his work has helped him. The motto is, "A winner never quits, and a quitter never wins."

Well, that is a good rule to follow and we hope many others besides Brother Cook appreciate the fact that despite our disappointments we must "hang on" and carry on.

Transportation to General Conference

Reduced fares to General Conference have been granted by the railroads on what is known as the Round Trip Identification Certificate Plan, which provides for the sale of round-trip tickets at fare and one-third of current one-way first-class fares, with minimum of $1.00 for round trip, upon presentation of identification certificate, which will be issued by the Transportation Department direct to members of the church applying for such certificate. One certificate will suffice for all members of the family. These certificates are now ready for distribution and will be mailed to all members requesting them.

Tickets will be sold with routing via same lines going and returning, or may read via diverse routes; that is, via any authorized route on going trip and any other authorized route on the return trip. Certain indirect routes will also be authorized at fares higher than those applying via the direct route. Tickets will be sold to Independence or Kansas City, Missouri, dates of sale being as follows: From all points in the United States and Canada, with the following exceptions, dates of sale of tickets will be April 3 to 9, with final return limit to reach original starting point thirty days in addition to date of sale. The exceptions are: New England, Colorado, Wyoming, Alberta, Oklahoma and Texas, April 2 to 8, Montana and Southern Idaho April 1 to 7, Arizona, British Columbia, California, Nevada, New Mexico, Northern Idaho, Oregon, Utah and Washington, March 31 to April 8.

Tickets must be validated by ticket agent before boarding train for return journey, and when validated will be good for return, leaving Independence or Kansas City on any date within final return limit, but passengers must reach original starting point prior to midnight of such final limit.

It must be understood that these reduced fares apply only to church members and dependent members of the family; and the name of the member to whom the certificate is issued, together with names of dependent members of the family for whom tickets are desired, must be filled in before the Identification Certificate is presented to ticket agent. Arrangements for tickets should be made well in advance of your departure to avoid any possible delay.

In addition to the above there are on sale daily between all points in territory west of Chicago, Saint Louis, Memphis, Vicksburg and New Orleans, first-class round-trip tickets on the basis of 2c per mile in each direction, good in all classes of equipment, also round-trip coach tickets on basis of approximately 1.8c per mile in each direction, both of which are limited to ten days in addition to date of sale. These latter arrangements are open to the general public and do not require the use of the Identification Certificate.

In consideration of the substantial reduction in fares granted by the railroads, together with the other advantages such as safety, speed, comfort, and convenience, we would respectfully urge that our delegates and visitors to the conference favor rail transportation in preference to other methods.

Address Transportation Department, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, for your Identification Certificate.

NEWS BRIEFS

San Bernardino Proud of Church School

San Bernardino Saints are proud of their church school which already this year has added twenty new members to its roll. The enrollment is now a hundred and fifty-six and includes fifteen nonmembers. Teachers and "cadet" teachers are showing great interest in the teacher training class.

City leaders of religious education sponsored classes for five evenings at the First Methodist Church. Nineteen attended, fourteen of whom were young Latter Day Saint workers.

Cold Winter for Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gunsolley

In a communication to friends in Lamoni Elder and Sister J. A. Gunsolley who are spending the winter in New England, write: "The coldest winter in New England known for many years. All harbors blocked with ice, even New York. Sub-zero and near zero temperatures have prevailed most of the time since December 1, as low as twenty-five below in some places.

Baltimore Prayer Service for General Church

Baltimore Branch met in special prayer meeting, called by President Adolphus Edwards, in behalf of the general church. The spirit of prayer was there and special petitions were voiced for the President and all quorums of the church. There were also sincere prayers that this branch may be of real help to the church during the period of recovery. Baltimore Branch wishes to go on record as rallying around and supporting the President.

Gomer T. Griffiths Visits Columbus, Ohio

First Church members are talking happily of "Brother Griffiths's visit." He is a favorite guest and speaker there.

Fifty years ago Brother Griffiths came into this community finding pasture and meadowland where now a city stands. He preached the first sermon of the latter-day faith there, they say. During his three-week stay he gave five members their patriarchal blessings and preached several excellent sermons.

Chilliwack Pioneer Honored on Birthday

Sister James Mercer, one of Chilliwack's pioneers, was honored by radio and press attention on her eightieth birthday January 19. The story of her life appeared on the Women's Page of The Chilliwack Progress, and two songs were dedicated to her in a radio broadcast.

Mrs. Mercer is the mother of eleven sons and daughters, nine of whom are living. She was born in Ontario, January 19, 1854, and has lived in the Chilliwack Valley, British Columbia, since 1890. For thirty-five years she has been a faithful, staunch member of the church.

English Spoken in Hawaiian Services

Since Brother V. B. Etzenhouser has been acting as pastor of the Hawaiian Branch, Honolulu, preaching in the Hawaiian language, at the eleven o'clock hour on Sunday, is only occasional. All understand the English language and only a few of the older ones speak and understand Hawaiian.

This branch rejoices to have Brother Etzenhouser "back home" after a six weeks' stay on the mainland of the United States. He was accompanied back to Hawaii by his family.

The spirituality of the Hawaiian Branch is in good condition. The priesthood are actively doing their part to bring the congregation to a higher level. All members of the priesthood, except the deacons, take turns preaching at the Sunday morning service.

J. L. Prentice Chosen Liberal Standard-Bearer

J. L. Prentice, pastor of the branch at Toronto, was unanimously chosen by a convention of several hundred Liberals as their candidate in the Parkdale Riding, according to The Globe (Toronto) of February 10. In his speech accepting the nomination Mr. Prentice deplored that Ontario was gradually losing the constitutional government obtained under the leadership of William Lyon McKenzie and referred to the "Conservative octopus."

Brother Prentice is a man greatly respected in his city. He holds the office of high priest.

Peace Club at Graceland

Of interest to young people everywhere Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa. The Peace Club presents the chapel program this morning, which consisted of several talks on various phases of war.

Marion Cooper pointed out the terrific cost of war, and presented the thought that war is the path of destruction, and the most essential part of brutality. Kenneth Graham described the horrors of the next world war, which will surpass our wildest flights of imagination. Wilma Ellis suggested several ways in which women may help to prevent war by voting and by direct action. To climax the program, Dwight Vredenberg gave the challenge of the peace movement to college students. We can do much to prevent war, by the spreading of antiwar propaganda.

Mr. May presented the Peace Club in the assembly of the Lamoni high school yesterday, where he gave a talk on the next world war. The Peace Club plans to give programs in several high schools and churches during the remainder of the year.

On March 15, the same program which was presented in chapel this morning will be given in Grant City, Mo., to the congregation of the Methodist church.—(From the Graceland Tower.)

Appreciation

Home life is changing along with everything else. Yet people are people; love, faith and hope still abide; and as ever the heart is warmed by a word of appreciation. How much more worthy our membership in the home might be if we always remembered to speak approvingly of the little kindnesses that others do for us! Some of us have been in homes where the friction was reduced to a minimum and where all the members—seemed to get along happily together. "Thank you" and "That is kind of you" helped to keep the bearings oiled. A man can live a few minutes without air, a few days without water, a few weeks without food—and not many years without appreciation of some kind.—The Southern England and Wales District Herald.

Whether you be men or women, you will never do anything in the world without courage. It is the greatest quality of the mind—next to honor.—J. L. Allen.

"See You at Conference"

PAUL N. CRAIG
Musician to the Church

One of the church's best known and most widely loved men—one who has given years of service to the church in music and musical leadership—is Paul N. Craig. He has achieved his own particular place of prominence as a great trainer of choruses, especially for the famous Messiah Chorus and the General Conference Choir. Working first with Lamoni and Graceland College singers, and now with the Independence Choir, he has steadily developed the organization which has proved the main support of this work.

Besides, he has helped many, many others up the path of achievement. As a man of character, too, it can be said of him that no one ever came under his direction who was not made better by his influence.

"Let us in our own lives reveal the beauty of virtue, the intelligence of decency, the attractiveness of clean living, the glory of achievement."—M. A. McConley.

Truth

For if untruth is fatal to the permanency of buildings, much more is it fatal to excellence in the soul. For man the beginning of lies is ruin, and the end thereof death. Therefore in John's vision of the city of God he saw no sorcerer, no murderer, and no man "who loveth and maketh a lie." For life's deadliest enemy, and its most despicable one, is falseness. In the last analysis, untruth is inferiority and weakness.—N. D. Hillis.

The Aim of Scouting

I believe that the Devil Worshipers of the East hold the belief that for 6,000 years the Devil will rule the world and that Christ will rule for a similar period. Just now the Devil is having his reign, and the Devil is best described by the term "selffulness," or lack of wide and sympathetic outlook.

This can be seen in every individual, class, sect, or nation today.

Individually we all of us stick in our respective ruts, be they the army, or club life, or sport, or other line.

Similarly we see only our own social class.

Education has no wider outlook than making scholars.

Religion has no wider outlook than making churchmen.

Nationalism has no wider outlook than the self-determination of its own country.

Christianity or broad-minded love-practice does not as yet prevail in this world.

In the Boy Scout and Girl Guide movement we are making the attempt to oust selffulness by inculcating in the young a wider vision and mutual good will and service. We do not pretend that scouting will do the trick but since it has caught on as a brotherhood with such an extraordinary rapidity in so many different countries irrespective of class, creed or race, one may hope that at any rate it is a definite step in the desired direction.—Lord Baden-Powell, in Lessons of a Lifetime.

A Good Name

Good name in man and woman, dear my lord,

Is the immediate jewel of their souls: Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he who filches from me my good name

Robbs me of that which not enriches him, And makes me poor indeed.

—William Shakespeare.

Three Things That Insure Success

The first thing you need to do is to work hard. The second thing is to work harder. The third thing is nearly the same but more so—work hardest. It is the one who works the hardest, though hardest may mean the best planning, or studying, or thinking, or working, or running fastest, or working most speedily. If you work to the greatest degree you cannot miss success.—Young People.

The Prince of Peace

A Radio Sermon

By C. E. Wight

We are all blind until we see
That in the human plan
Nothing is worth the making if
It does not make the man.

Why build these cities glorious
If man unbuilt goes?
In vain we build the work, unless
The builder also grows.

ALMOST twenty centuries have passed since the fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."

Each year at the Christmas season, the air is filled with the beautiful melodies celebrating the birth of this man of destiny. Not all who participate in this worship of song are aware of the meaning of the hymns they sing. Not all who listen are stirred to an appreciation of their import.

But here and there is the life of one touched and stirred to a deeper understanding of the meaning of life as it was unfolded in the beautiful example of the man of Galilee. As we listen to the stories of his humble birth, of his activities in his simple home in Nazareth, we are not conscious of the superlatives used by Isaiah in attempting to describe the extent of his power and influence.

As we pick up the thread of his ministry and note particularly the stress he placed upon the simpler phases of life, we certainly do not think of him in terms of kingly splendor. We think of him rather as a friend. Evidently it was as such that he desired we think of him. To those who were nearest to him, he said: "Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you."

This was so totally different from the attitude of leadership usually displayed, that evidently his nearest disciples did not appreciate its full import. But as century has been added to century, the rugged strength of his philosophy has been thrown into bolder and bolder relief and it is discovered that it is builded upon a rock.

WE ARE living in an age when the opportunities for the dissemination of information have increased a hundredfold. Through pulpit, press and radio, we attempt to broadcast the merits of a life lived according to the pattern left by our leader.

The very stupendousness of our possibilities in this regard seem to react at times as a boomerang. They become so commonplace that they are discounted.

This brings us to a curious question. If Jesus were with us in person tonight, would he use the radio for the broadcasting of his sermon? This means was not available to him in his day. He did have available the local synagogue and a rather simple method of writing. It is recorded that occasionally he did enter the synagogue as a reader of the law, but we have no record of his having left us any written word. His indifference to the available methods of spreading his doctrines would indicate that probably he would be just as indifferent today to the added opportunities of this sort.

Why have we raised this question? Is it to question the use that we should today make of pulpit, press and radio? Is it to suggest that we discontinue these means of communication? Not at all.

It is rather to bring home to us the fact that we cannot substitute any of these methods for the one that Jesus apparently found most powerful. This is set forth in his closing command to his immediate followers: "Go ye into all the world and make disciples."

Jesus was not interested in followers, he wanted disciples. He was not deceived by the hosannas of the multitude as they strewed palms in his pathway at the time of his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. He knew that these same voices would soon be mingled with those who shouted "Away with him. Crucify him. Release unto us Barabbas."

C. E. WIGHT

JESUS KNEW that no magic wand waving would transform men of clay into ministers of light.

He knew that it would take some soul-searching experience which would bring a man face to face with reality and require courage in the making of a decision for the right.

He knew that life had been deepened for the great leader Moses as he stood beside the burning bush and listened to the voice of God. He knew that the vitalizing experience which was yet to come to Saul of Tarsus was not to be a pleasant one—but that it would be necessary.

Therefore, through the close associations of friendship, Jesus attempted to impress his own personality so thoroughly upon the minds of his followers that they would become not casual imitations but real disciples. Jesus knew that it was a physical impossibility for him to thoroughly convert the many. By attempting to do so, he would have lost the opportunity for the deeper and more lasting impression of his personality upon the few.

For example, what do you think of the change that must have come into the lives of the two men with whom he walked on the road to Emmaus, following his resurrection? In describing the affair one said, "Did not our hearts burn within us as we walked with him in the way?"

Did not this brief touch of the personality of Jesus upon their own profoundly affect their lives? Could they ever live as ignobly in the future? If they followed the leadings of this new call, would they not desire that they, too, might be able to so touch the lives of their fellows as to cause a new flame of righteousness to be kindled within them?

All strength, therefore, to every avenue through which we may spread the glorious message of divine truth. But let us be sure that we are not substituting extensiveness for intensiveness.

IF THERE is today any dearth of understanding of the message of our leader, it is because of a lack of the spirit of discipleship. No telephone conversation can take the place of a personal visit. No radio broadcast can replace the touch of personality upon personality. No passionate pulpit discourse can be substituted for the warmth of a handclasp.

It seems as we read the stories of the Master's activities that he often spent a great deal of time in painstaking effort with the few. There was probably a double purpose in his effort. First, to impress the fact that there is no relative importance of souls in the sight of God. To him a man was a man. His effort was in direct ratio with the human needs involved. His second purpose was that through the impressing of his personality, he should awaken the spirit of discipleship so that no longer would the physically impossible burden of reaching the hearts of all men be upon him.

As he divided his personality with others, he multiplied his powers for reaching still others.

I have always wondered just how many of the three thousand brought into the church through the preaching of Peter became real disciples. In spite of the tremendous power which accompanied this pentecostal sermon, it is questionable as to how many remained steadfast unless someone took the time to painstakingly work with them as the Master had worked with his disciples.

While placing such strong emphasis upon the task involved in making disciples, let us not think it is a work that needs to be done alone. At the very time of urging his disciples to the tasks of converting others, Jesus made a promise that is filled with comfort. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

And at another time, when his disciples were mourning his departure he reminded them that it was necessary for him to go but that in his place would come the Comforter.

I need not remind those who have humbly tried to become disciples of the Nazarene that this promise has been literally fulfilled. The dark paths of life have been lighted—ways that were heavy have been lightened of their burdens. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

The promise which Jesus made to his disciples remains good today. "Lo I am with you always."

The challenge of the gospel—the good news from the lips of the Prince of Peace, comes ringing down through the corridors of time, bidding that you become a disciple and that you then assume the task of making disciples of all men.

Following the restoration of the holy priesthood and the preaching of the everlasting gospel to the world, the hour of judgment was to come. The people's acceptance of this message and their application of the message are those things which determine their judgment. More than that, every institution, every philosophy of life, every organization of men will be on trial, and the weaknesses of men will be made manifest by judgment. But judgment, on the other hand, will reveal the promises of God's kingdom.—E. J. Gleazer, in a sermon, "The Judgment."

Upward to Zion

By Gladys Mae Smith

IT WAS Sacramento Sunday following a heavy rain. Four miles of oozy, country road lay between us and the house of God. Traveling by motor was out of the question.

I called a family council, tried to explain my hunger for communion with my Lord. I was going to walk. Who would accompany me? They looked at me in consternation. Truly it was a severe testing of juvenile faith. My eight-year-old daughter responded, and we sallied forth.

The going was hard, even laborious. We panted to the peaks of hills and plodded through valleys, wading mud which was in places ankle deep. And when from the hilltops we caught a view of our destination squatting in the distance, it did indeed seem a long way off. The legs of the child began to tire, and she to grumble and complain.

"Mother, it's so far." "We'll never get there." "Let's go back." "Can't we stop again to rest?"

To divert her attention, I pointed out landmarks along the way as closer objectives.

"See that crooked post down there? Soon we will come to that." And after we had reached it, "Now that small culvert." Then, "That bunch of thistles opposite the telephone pole."

She entered into the spirit of the game with enthusiasm entirely forgetting her weariness. And so swiftly did the time pass thereafter that she exclaimed in surprise when at last our game brought us to the very door of the church. Might I not—I later thought—derive a lesson from this simple illustration?

ZION, the beautiful! The city set upon a hill. . . . For more than three years—since the wonderful story of the restoration was unfolded to me—I have dreamed of it. I thrill in anticipation of its hopes and promises. I long for the accomplishment of an ideal for which men of God have made, even as Christ, the supreme sacrifice.

I desire with all my heart to make a contribution which shall help to make a glorious vision a thriving reality. But if ever I am to reach the crest of the hill upon which stands the city Zion, I must do more than desire. I must be willing to climb.

Spurred on by my desire, having been blessed by the baptism of water and of the Spirit, sincere in my belief in the resurrection and the eternal judgment, I have taken faith and repentance by the hand to begin my ascent. The vision of Zion is before me—away off there on that beautiful hill—but sometimes in my struggles the going seems too rough, the destination a long way off. My feet lag in weariness, doubt and dismay cloud my mind. I am tempted to swerve, even to turn back.

Then I behold the program of the church traced by the finger of a living God and I see landmarks placed along the way for my guidance. I realize it is impossible to arrive at the top of the hill in a single trek; I must cover the distance step by step conquering lesser objectives before I am qualified to pass on.

By edging forward foot by foot, rod by rod, mile by mile all these objectives are quite within my reach: Godly walk and conversation; Full observance of the financial law and its direct application to my own life; Studying to show myself approved, "a workman who needeth not to be ashamed"; Learning to dwell in harmony, sympathy and understanding with members of my own household and community.

While thus engaged with problems of our own personal development, may we not—you and I—reach the summit of the hill on which stands the city Zion in less time than we thought possible?

"In a notebook I call Lessons From Life, I file almost daily happenings which appeal to me. This book is much thumbed and marked. I refer to it often as a guide to my own character and soul development. Perhaps it is a sense of humility which prompts me to write these lessons in the first person.

"Recently it has occurred to me that others may be benefited by the contents of my book. I am enclosing a lesson. . . ."—From the Author's letter.

You may never see with Moses the desert bush aflame. The glory may not glow for you upon the Temple screen, as for Isaiah. A light above the brightness of the sun may not blind you with its sudden brilliance as it did Saint Paul. But if you will keep alert the Spirit-educated ear you will hear the voice that uttered itself at Horeb, commissioned the prophet in Jerusalem, and ordained the apostle on the Damascus road.—R. Moffat Gautrey, in Church Management.

WHILE delirium tremens usually occurs more frequently with the chronic drinker it occasionally supervenes on a single debauch. Of all the ills to which flesh is heir, I know none so painful to witness. It may truly be called the delirium of terror. Such hallucinations always inspire terror. The peculiarity of the hallucinations are the belief that serpents are hanging down from the ceiling ready at any moment to fall on the victim's head, or they may appear to be about to crawl over the body or coil to spring at him. Other cases have the delusion that there are loathsome insects in their clothing or on their person while others see dragons, toads and mice. Some have the delusion of persecution believing that they have been persued by an officer of the law for some crime. The writer had a case several years ago in which the sufferer accidentally discharged a revolver and fatally wounded himself. A fellow practitioner recited a case in which the unfortunate victim believed that he was being electrocuted and was perpetually in suspense for the next shock calling out excitedly, "There they come, they are surely going to kill me this time." Exaggerated tones of the voice are exasperating to the sufferer. "The ordinary tones of the voice sounds like the thunder of a giant, the tread of the cat sounds like the tread of an elephant." Some cases have suicidal tendencies but seldom have inclination to assault anyone unless it is believed to be in self-defense. It is piteous and heart-rending to hear those who are afflicted with gloomy delusions that they are helplessly in the hands of enemies and the only chance for escape is to beg for mercy from persecutors.

This gloomy class must be watched closely as they are likely to commit suicide. This terrifying experience brings about a cold clammy skin with perspiration. When the tongue is protruded it is tremulous and covered with a white coat indicating the terrific damage that has been done to the organs of digestion. There is usually a slight fever, the eyes are reddened and the pupils are dilated. The difference between the ordinary habitual drunkard and delirium tremens is readily seen. The mania of the usual periodical drinker often is to fight and do great bodily injury to the pet dog, his wife, children or anyone with whom he comes in contact. He would attack a buzz-saw without hesitation and delights in committing any act of violence. After discontinuance of the poison the maniacal delirium and the violent condition soon subsides; while the delirium tremens, being caused by the accumulation of alcohol in the system and its use for several days causes a retention of the poison in the system, results in a much slower recovery from the violent symptoms. To treat acute alcoholism successfully it is necessary, when the patient's recovery is doubtful to empty the stomach at once, either with a stomach pump or emetic. In many cases the treatment is not very complicated. The withdrawal of the intoxicant being all that is necessary. Its poisonous effects may be arrested by ministering five or six ounces of olive oil before its absorption by the stomach. In mania-a-potu restraint is all that is necessary. In the chronic form the abandonment of the habit is imperative if a cure is to be effected. Some are able to cure themselves by the exercise of the will, but only a few are able to accomplish a cure in this manner. Many of the so-called cures are of no use. Hypnotic suggestions has proved beneficial in some cases that are of a neurotic temperament. Under the influence of hypnotism the subject is impressed that the drug is poisonous, that it will make him sick, if he attempts to take it. These suggestions must be repeatedly made each time that the patient is hypnotized. If the treatments are successful the habit is spontaneously abandoned. The delirium tremens patient should be carefully watched by a kind attendant and confined in a quiet room absolutely removed from any noises of any kind. Sound sleep is necessary without opiates. The food should be the kind that is easily digested as has already been stated that the digestive organs are in a greatly debilitated condition.

Summary: Alcohol is a public health problem. Those engaged in public welfare—which includes ministers, physicians, and teachers in our public schools—should know how to teach the public that it is a habit-forming drug; that it shortens life, lowers resistance to disease of all kinds, excites passion, increases crime, causes venereal infections, leads to immorality, promotes poverty, impairs efficiency, favors accidents, retards social progress and increases an immense amount of economic waste. It is deceptive by simulating the effects of a stimulant. It is a narcotic and its habitual use even in small quantities destroys self-restraint, destroys the will power, stupefies the noblest and the highest functions of the mind and its use as an aid to work of any kind is physiologically unsound.

Turning Corners

YOU SAY you haven't heard from Nancy for a month?" The concern in Carmen Blaine's voice caused Larry to flush guiltily; "then, darling, what do you suppose she's up to?"

"I did mean to write to her last week," confessed the other, "but it's just two more weeks until commencement when I'll see her, and then something happened to take my mind off the business of letter writing, so I just didn't." Larry balanced a cup of cocoa in her right hand. She and Carmen were sitting at the card table just within the circle of light from the floor lamp in the Blaine living room. Sallie Ruth had placed before them "tea too late." "These are the things one would serve at tea," she explained as she placed food dainties which she herself had prepared, before them; "but whoever heard of tea being served at 10 p. m.?"

The three girls were spending the evening alone. Carmen was munching cashew nuts. They had all been sewing and talking, mostly the latter.

"Gee, Larry," exclaimed Sallie Ruth from the sofa, "this is the duckiest little thing you're making for Dorothy Cameron's baby! Aren't these little tucks just too dear for words! And where did you learn to make that feather-stitching?"

"Mrs. Hampton taught me. Took me a whole evening to master that," proudly.

"I don't wonder. It's an achievement!" Then she carefully laid the tiny garment away and looked dreamily into space. Into her eyes crept such a look as young girls have when they gaze on Madonna paintings, when first they think they are in love, or when in their imaginations they peer over the misty horizon of the future and completely abandon themselves to wonderful dreams.

"Come, dear," from Carmen, "your cocoa. Aren't you going to eat with us after all your pains to fix everything so nice?"

"The cakes not only look nice but taste scrumptuous, cherub," and Larry sampled her third.

"Not yet, darlin'," the younger girl answered her sister's question: "I'll drink my cocoa a little later when it's drinkable. You with the asbestos ton-sils go right ahead though—don't wait for me." Then tucking her feet under her, she clasped one slim ankle with her right hand and looked at them meditatively. "Do you know," she burst out after a moment, "I wish I had a baby."

"Cheer up, you'll probably have half a dozen of them someday," laughed Larry.

"Don't make fun," seriously, "for I wish I had a baby now, not a long way off. Babies are so darling and so like angels—"

"Except when they have the colic and you have to walk the floor with them at after they get them. And so often just because a woman is able physically and conventionally to have a baby—"

"U-um," interrupted Larry, "I didn't know there was anything so conventional about having a baby; I thought it was a rather unconventional affair."

"Just you try having one without getting married then," retorted Sallie Ruth; "but I was discussing the custom, not the process."

"You're getting into a rather deep subject, aren't you, Sallie?" put in Carmen.

"But, listen, both of you. I'm old enough to know a few things outside of what I learn from the chatter of my own crowd. I'm serious—I've been watching people. Tell me why it is that so many women that would make wonderful mothers simply never have the chance, or at least not until they're middle aged. Take you now for instance, Carmen; you'd make a dandy mother—I can bear personal testimony to that—and yet here you are stranded, saddled with responsibilities. John—"

"Please," the older sister's voice was firm, "let's leave John out of this."

"But you can't very well you know, my dear," and Sallie Ruth laughed demurely under her lashes at Larry. The latter started to laugh, too, but stopped short at the expression on Carmen's face.

"Carmen can't start mothering another family until she has raised you," she hastened to say.

"Oh, yes, she can," came the quick response, "because I'm raised. I'm beginning to feel quite mature." How she lingered over the word! "Someday I may do something to surprise all of you because you insist on considering me so little and young and helpless."

"Well, I hope you do," teased Larry; "I'd hate to think you were entirely unoriginal."

"Whew! Slap number one," and Sallie Ruth drew a chair into the light and gingerly tasted her cocoa.

GIVEN MORE TIME, Sallie Ruth would grow very much like her sister, Larry thought as she watched the girl. There was now a calm in her eyes, an assurance, a self-possession, which had not been there six weeks ago. She was growing up.

"You're getting to be a grand cook," Larry observed after a moment; "keep it up. I'd rather eat your salads than any I ever tasted. You have beaten me all hollow at that."

"Thanks, Larry, but I adore your fudge—you can get it just at the proper creaminess. It melts in your mouth."

How It Began—

Larry Verne has refused to marry Greg Spurgeon in spite of the fact that she loves him, for she fears he will be called to the priesthood, and her early childhood experience makes her revolt against such a thing.

Larry's life becomes enmeshed with the lives of others in the home of Eldred Hampton, who mothers a group of people, young and old, who have no homes of their own.

Tempted to attend a costume ball with Greg, Larry yields, and is horrified by the theft of a valuable heirloom, a bracelet belonging to Eldred Hampton. In a period of repentance, she devotes herself more earnestly to the work of the church.

Trying for a time to associate with Greg on a purely friendly basis, and trying to curb the development of his ardent affection, Larry finds herself failing. Love is too strong for her, and she feels herself being swept off her feet, against her will. It seems that she must either yield, or break with Greg and not see him for a time. She breaks with him, but is very unhappy over it. Greg makes no attempt to see her, much to her disappointment.

Tempted once more, during her estrangement with Greg, this time by Dart Moody, she consents against her better judgment to go on a week-end party to a summer home in the Ozark Mountains. The place belongs to a wealthy independence family. She has scarcely started on the trip before she realizes it was a mistake to go. She is apprehensive, and yet she realizes that there may be something to learn.

The place was a dream of peace and natural beauty, but the company made the whole week-end a nightmare of confusion. Shaken and glad to escape, Larry returned home.

The Blaines are close friends of Larry and her circle. Mrs. Keithley is the aunt of "Pinkey," host to the party mentioned above. Wealthy, lonely, and disappointed in her nephew's wildness, she searches for companionship.

night, or when they get big enough to—"

"Be serious, Larry! But why do all the babies in the world have to come to women like Dorothy Cameron, who are selfish and don't want them?"

"You're too general, my dear," Carmen told her. "Not nearly all the babies in the world come to women who don't want them; there are many mothers who welcome their families."

"Well, you hear more from the mothers who don't want their children, or who don't know what to do with them

"What is this?" Carmen seemed to leave her own thoughts with reluctance. Had her mind been conjuring up pictures as a result of her little sister's questions a few minutes before? "What's this—a mutual admiration society?"

"Carmen," after a pause, "do you expect mother home soon?"

"She can't come until she has the money. She's been enjoying herself at Aunt Anna's and at Uncle Tim's, too, except when she had that bad cold. But she writes now as if she were a bit homesick. I expect she'll be wanting to come home soon."

Sallie Ruth did not reply immediately. She nibbled thoughtfully at the icing of a cooky. "I wish I were two years older."

"What would you do?" queried Larry.

"I'd—I think I'd marry Jeff, if he were two years older, too. Now, don't say it's puppy love, Larry—I can see what you're going to say right in your eyes—because I've had puppy love before, and this isn't the same."

"Oh, I see—this is great big dog love!"

Sallie Ruth found it exceedingly difficult at that moment to swallow the rest of a bite of cooky, make a face across the table, and say: "You incorrigible!" Half a minute later she asked them both: "Do you suppose I can find a job this summer? A job would make the vacation livable."

This was true. Both of the older girls knew that without work life would not be pleasant this summer for Sallie Ruth. There would be little opportunity for her to do anything except remain at home in the apartment with her mother. No vacation trip. How nice if the child could just have a vacation trip—and then an idea popped into Larry's head. It would be lovely—yes, if she could work it, that would be much better for the girl than nothing to do all summer but be the object of her mother's pettings and naggings, or run the streets with her school crowd. For, Larry knew, when Mrs. Blaine returned, everything would be as it was before she went away—all these happy evening gatherings in the Blaine apartment would cease. Mrs. Blaine's personality did not attract young people's friendship and confidence.

"I wish you could find a position," Carmen did not sound hopeful, "but everybody's hunting work, and there are many who are far better trained than you who have looked for weeks—"

"I've done pretty well with my typing this winter, and Miss Jones says my shorthand is accurate even if it is slow. Isn't there anything I can do?"

LITTLE did Larry realize how soon she was to answer that question for Sallie Ruth in the affirmative. But tonight she only shook her head, and presently the conversation veered back to Nancy Bart.

How were these three girls to know that not an hour before, the young woman under discussion had, on an impulse,—Nancy did almost everything on an impulse—jammed Rowe McCarley's diamond ring into its tiny box and thrust it into a small cedar chest where she kept all her "precious things"? For weeks she had been debating in her own mind whether this would not be the best way to solve her problem. And now things had come to a climax. In two weeks she would return it to its owner with her thanks "for the privilege of wearing it."

Nancy knew that her Rowe did not love her—that he loved nobody but himself, and though her brown eyes were brimming with unshed tears when she removed the circlet from her finger, she felt tremendously relieved. She hated to make decisions, and still, she disliked to remain undecided. Consequently, under the cover of her laughter and raillery, Nancy was always suffering.

"You counterfeit, Rowe! You double-crosser!" she stood facing the handsome photograph on her dressing table; "I've spent enough agony over you! If you loved me you'd write; you'd come up to see me; you'd do a hundred things you haven't done and for which you have no excuse for not doing!" Then feeling her resolution crumbling before the gaze of those photographed eyes, she snatched up the picture and put it away in a drawer. "He's found somebody else, of course," she mumbled to herself—and then fiercely: "I'd like to scratch her eyes out!"

How bare the top of the dresser looked with Rowe's picture gone! Standing in the middle of the room, she considered the matter. The bareness was finally relieved when she placed a much smaller picture beside her mirror, comb, and brush. This was the photograph of a smiling blond boy. Until this minute it had stood among several other photographs on the study table.

"I guess after all," she reasoned to herself, "Teddy deserves to have it there. He's been sweet this winter, but Rowe's shadow has been his bugaboo." She was feeling more cheerful, even attempted a grimace at her reflection in the mirror. What a relief!—and yet—what a vacancy! She sighed, sat down at the study table, and began to write.

ON THE FOLLOWING EVENING Larry Verne did something she had put off for several days. She rather dreaded to do it. That morning she had accepted an informal invitation from Mrs. Delora Keithley to dine with her at seven o'clock in the evening, and so she found herself on the way to the Layman residence.

Upon her return from Lakeside Cottage, she had written a note of thanks to Mrs. Layman, but she had not called on the family. After all, that was not necessary according to the social code of Pinky's crowd. A note was sufficient—she would probably not have found them at home had she called. Still Larry felt that she owed a small social obligation to Mrs. Keithley for her kindness and interest.

Nevertheless, as she paid her taxi fare and turned toward the Layman residence, fear seized her—she wished she had not come. Never had she been invited into so beautiful a place. The house was a huge edifice of English architecture fronted by a wide, spacious lawn. Larry wondered if a butler would open the door. She hoped not. She was afraid of butlers, because she knew little about them.

Her fears were somewhat allayed when a maid in a black dress and white apron and cap, opened the door for her and led her into a long living room.

"Ah, here you are at last, my dear!" cried Mrs. Keithley coming forward. "You'd be surprised to know how very much I've counted on your visit."

"I should have come sooner," murmured the girl, "but so many things have happened since we came home."

"Oh, yes, I know, I know you're a busy girl. Well, Doris's plans about going to California shifted a little, and she hasn't gone yet. She and her husband are in Topeka this week, and heaven knows where that nephew of mine is! So I'm going to take you up to my own rooms, dear, for a cozy evening."

Larry was grateful for this piece of thoughtfulness. She doubted her ability to feel at home at once in the great rooms about her. What luxury! What beautiful interior decoration! And the sumptuous rugs, fully an inch thick—oriental rugs, of course.

"It will be much more chummy up in my little rooms," said her hostess as they mounted the stairs. "I can't quite appreciate Doris's part of the house. My tastes are more simple."

NEVER had Larry seen a more exquisite table service—Bavarian China, gleaming silver, tall yellow tapers in bronze candlesticks of oriental design, and jonquils as fresh and yellow as those blooming at Lakeside Cottage. A maid served the meal with quiet expertness, and Mrs. Keithley kept up a flow of questions concerning Larry's work, her health, and her present interests.

"I suppose you've heard the news," she finally observed.

"What news?"

"Then you haven't? Well, dear, it is my pleasure to inform you that two of my nephew's crowd are actually considering such an old-fashioned institution as marriage."

"Oh, no matter how radical we may sound," smiled Larry, "we usually come to that."

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt

Arranged from his diaries by his daughter, Mrs. Ruby C. Faunce

1871

The diary at this point starts with the opening of the year 1871. In the historical background are the Franco-Prussian War, alluded to earlier, and the great Chicago fire, mentioned below.

For the purposes of condensation we are omitting entries in the diary which record the regular run of speaking engagements and the subjects discussed. We are selecting the more significant and unusual items among the writer's experiences. These notes and summaries, when not otherwise signed, are by the Editors.

Sun., Jan. 29—Drove over to Sandwich in Joseph's cutter and preached the funeral sermon of Bro. Ernschaw's little daughter, Ruth. On my way back administered with Brethren Scott, Lange and Pomeroy to Father Gurley, who was weaker. After I had prayed with an earnestness and power I had not felt for some time, Bro. Lange followed with one similar. He anointed him and I confirmed, breaking out in tongues. Told him he would be soon able to take a mission in the other world. In the evening Bro. Banta gave the 10th lecture on "The Holy Spirit."

Sat., Feb. 4—Attended wedding supper at Bro. Sheen's for daughter. At 7.30 went with Joseph and Bro. Sheen to town house and I attended to the organization of the Plano Literary Society.

Just a note to show how Utah was always in the background, and in those days something of a problem to the U. S. Government as well as to the Reorganization.

Feb. 7—Went by 7.20 train for Chicago. Mr. Taggart is much interested in Utah affairs. Reports Robert J. Burton is indicted for the murder of F. J. Morris and Mrs. Boroman, but had not been seen for some time. Utah's affairs changed. Brings me regards of General Conner and Major Hempstead. Mr. Taggart wants Joseph and I to go to Utah; and if Joseph can't go for me to go and start an Independent Newspaper in which he promises Government support and patronage. He expressed a fear that Bro. Brand would be killed on account of his extreme boldness and persistent attacks on B. Young's policies.

Friday 17—News comes of the killing of John D. Lee—someone signing himself Argus, charges it on Brigham.

A word on the milk supply. In those days there was no motorized daily dairy service. Either you had a cow, or you went without milk, in most places.

May 23—Bro. Manchester brought me a cow. The Lord bless him for his kindness.

In those days debating, and defending the church against attacks was much more important in the work of the ministry than it is today. Brother Forscutt was a brave and able man in the defense of the Reorganization.

Sat., June 17—Applied for clergyman's permit. Took train for Mendota, met by Mr. Westgate and learning that the Methodists of Triumph had sent for and obtained a rev. gentleman to debate with me—said I would like Joseph there as chairman. We telegraphed for Joseph. In the afternoon repaired to grove, fitted up for the occasion. Comfortable stand and seats for about 400. Spoke in the afternoon on "The day of preparation" followed by Rev. Elzea. We had a running debate of two or three speeches each and decided upon a discussion for next day—Bro. Hy Stebbins came in Joseph's stead.

Sunday 18th—Met at Rev. Cummings, Elder of the M. E. church and agreed upon the following subject. "Resolved that a church, in order to be the true church of Jesus Christ, must receive the gifts and signs referred to in Mark 16: 17, 18, and 1 Cor. 12: 4-11, and that the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has received such gifts." Affirmative M. H. Forscutt—Negative Rev. Elzea. Elder Cummings and Elder Stebbins our Chairman. Mr. Wm. Y. Wesley as chairman of meeting. I opened the debate—spoke 4 times and Rev. Elzea 3 times in the morning—about 600 present. In the afternoon spoke 3 times each, I as affirmative having the closing speech. Mr. Wesley called for rising vote and Rev. Elzea rec'd about a hundred—I the rest. To God be all the glory. Brother Henry Stebbins occupied at night on "The Apostasy," and at the close of the meeting Rev. Cummings came and asked if he could review the sermon two weeks from then, as I again had an appointment there. I told him he could do so. June 19—My 37th birthday. Mr. Westgate handed me $5.45 and I gave Henry $3.00—received another dollar at train. Tues. 20—Zenas, George and Samuel Gurley called today, they are fine boys.

Mon., July 7—Ret'd to Plano—Mr. and Mrs. Westgate and Mr. Worsley coming to train with me. Met a lady and gentleman who thought if I would only leave Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon, and the name Latter Day Saint out, I should have a wonderful influence and do great good.

In Missouri and Kansas

Wed., Aug. 2—Started at 11 p. m. for Kansas and Missouri with wife, Ruby and Zenas and Bro. Crick. 3rd—Rode to Kansas City and reached there at 9 p. m., liked a portion of the country, but not all of it. No one met us, my wife's folks expecting us tomorrow.

Aug. 4—Left K. C. with Bro. Crick for Columbus, Kans., 5th. Attended conference.

17th—Went to Fort Scott—as I was leaving the Bros. Wagner each gave me a note for $100 that I had borrowed to fix my house and also $5.00 each to meet expenses. I was very thankful for the loan, how much more for the present I cannot tell. May the Lord of heaven reward them. 19th—Arrived in K. C., up to father's, wife glad to see me. Spent part of day looking over the city—Thriving place. In the evening I went to Independence. 20th—Visited Dr. Wm. E. McLellan, whom I found very bitter against everybody and everybody's views but himself and his own views. Visited a number of the former Saints and others belonging to the Hedrickites and enjoyed the time with them. 23rd—Bro. Haldeman took me for a ride around the country and am much pleased with it—of all places I have been, Independence is the most desirable. Returned to K. C. 25th. Started by the 7.00 train to Turney. In the afternoon rode with Father Strope to Far West. Father Strope came before the Saints were driven from here. He came so near the close of that time that he was permitted by the mob to remain. On learning of the Reorganized church he gladly united with it—also his wife. He is 78 and she 76. They are very faithful, active and earnest. Probably some 50 remained during conference at their place, and they waited on and made them comfortable. I stayed with them and with others slept on the hay in their barn. Went to council meeting—warmly welcomed and being voted to take part in the deliberations of the conference I gave all the instructions I thought advisable.

Sunday 27th—Son, wife and daughter of John Whitmer one of the 8 witnesses of the Book of Mormon were present. In the afternoon I preached a funeral sermon of a boy of 8 years. Evening a fine fellowship meeting lasting till one o'clock. 28th—Rode to John Whitmer's, he had gone to Kingston to attend court—I was sorry as I wished to confer with him on the Book of Mormon. His family were very kind and invited us to stay all night. Before leaving S. Whitmer appointed the place of the Temple and the Prophet Joseph's residence.

—Went to bed feeling very low in spirits on account of some conditions in the branch, and worry over my family, but after falling asleep awoke with the spirits power and had the words of Jas. 41-9 to 13 very forcibly impressed upon me. My heart was comforted and I again slept. Thurs. 26—Wound up my writing and arranged things for leaving, altho having no means, did not know how I would get to Wayne Co. nor conference. Attended church and gave a lecture by request to the young and had considerable liberty and a good flow of the spirit. The Saints in bidding me good-bye gave me $28.00 and when we arrived home Bro. Bellamy gave me $5.00 more which opened my way. Settled with Bro. Bellamy for New Translations, and then at 4 a. m. went over to E. St. Louis understanding a train left for Zenia—but being misinformed had to wait till 3 p. m. 28th—walked over to Bro. Clements through mud and water some of it 9 inches deep. After dinner Bro. Clements loaned us horses to ride and we went over to Pleasant Grove to Bro. Geo. Hilliards, where we met with a kind welcome. Preached to good audience in evening. Sunday preached at the Hard Scrabble schoolhouse which was far too small.

13th—Spent day in writing, in evening went to Sandwich with Bro. Robt. to Bro. Bantas—Bro. J. W. Briggs, president of the twelve there very sick—he requested me rebuke the disease in the name of the Lord. His brother Edwin, Robt., and myself laid hands upon his head and I did as he wished. Visited Father Stites the first fruits of the reorganization in Utah—he is 76 and very ill—glad to see me and I prayed for him. 14th—Bro. Briggs well.

To Brother Joseph's—his mother's last evening of her present visit—sang till we were in tears—Joseph asked me to pray with them—I felt unworthy to mingle my voice with these noble families, Joseph, wife and children, Alexander, wife and children, David and their honored mother the elect lady all here together an oh! what deep love. Tell me not of this family aught but good. God forgive their foes and bless their friends. I sat up to call them in time for the 2.05 train. Mother left everybody in tears. I slept with David. Wed., Apr. 15th—Wrote a letter of instruction of six pages to the Lamanite brethren, Moses, James, and David Covart, which Bro. Joseph signed and handed to them. In the evening attended fellowship meeting, Bro. Moses spoke in his own Indian language, Bro. Joseph in speaking interpreted. Bro. David Covart having been an interpreter spoke both Indian and English said that the translation was given word for word correctly. 16th—Rode with David and Joseph's eldest daughter Emma, over to Bishop J. L. Rogers, via "Taddy and the buggy." Bro. Rogers requests me to write an article for the Herald, a letter of instruction to the Bishops and their agents in the church. Bro. David was enraptured with the scenery and beautiful sky and colors during drive home. 17th—Joseph bought me a new pair of boots this morning. 19th—Walked to Sandwich where I preached. Toward evening walked to Plano where I heard

Alex. H. and David H. Smith preach on "Thou Shalt Not Live by Bread Alone."

May 1—After morning exercises and prayers started for Manango and stayed at Bro. Charles Aldermans. A terrible storm, lightning, thunder, rain and hail, a boy and team were killed, and we picked up three lambs killed on the road side. 2nd—Had an interesting conference. Bro. Joseph and I went to room together and slept (a little) bedbugs were plentiful and dropped upon us as though we were delicious morsels. Back to Plano the 15th. 10th—Preached in the morning from Romans 1: 16. In the evening Bro. Joseph presiding I delivered a lecture on "Present Revelation." 24th—Walked to Sandwich, heard Bro. Gurley preach on "Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts," a very able and interesting discourse. In the afternoon went to see Bro. Stites, who is nearing his end. In the evening I preached from Rev. 22: 17. After closing we held a prayer meeting which was the best one I have attended for some time. Tongues, prophecies and two that had not before had a testimony of work obtained one. After meeting which lasted till nearly 12 o'clock I walked to Plano and reached home about 2 a. m. 28th—Over to Fox River to Bishop Rogers. He was much pleased with my rectifying mistakes and reading accounts appertaining to the New Translation. Helped the beloved Bro. Joseph and his lady in their garden for an hour this afternoon.

The month passed with a Conference—and work until the 23rd. when my eye hurting me I decided to visit the eye and ear infirmary. 24th—Doctors Pollock and Green after examining my eye said they would operate if I wished in the morning. 25th—Attended the infirmary where the Doctor Gregory operated on my left eye. Friday suffered much. 27th—Stitches taken out—quite annoying and inflamed. The rest of the month quite ill with eye.

July 16—Taken very sick at Sister Burkess'. 17th—Went over to Bro. Kytes and taken worse. 23rd—Took steamer for Keokuk—on all the next day. Took very ill. Arrived at Keokuk before daybreak, went to Bro. Andersons and was well cared for by them and Sister Hemmingway. Sunday, July 26—Much better—walked to Montrose. I preached over to Nauvoo. From the 20th—to the 24th—I spent the time in Council Bluffs attending the conference."

1872

The record here indicates a tireless and continual activity in behalf of the church work. At the same time, an indication of the financial distress of the times is barely indicated in the following brief note.

Mrs. Forscutt has finished learning the hair work—with which she hopes to help pay our expenses. 4th—Preached in Wellington, then Bro. Manchester drove me to Plano in a raging snow storm.

Threats

There was always danger in debate that when a debater won an argument he was likely to lose in a fight. When the opposition exhausted all other devices, their minds often reverted to the tar-and-feathers method of rebuttal. The elders of the Reorganization often made their most brilliant defenses while they were wondering at just what moment the mob would break loose. People then living could remember 1844.

Jan. 19—Met with my committee at residence of Squire Warwick and made arrangements for the debate. The rules—each disputant shall select one chairman. The two chairmen and the two committee's to select a third, one not a believer in the faith of either disputant to preside over the meeting. Debate began that evening at 6 on "Was J. Smith a Prophet?" The Lord gave me good liberty and the large audience earnest attention. The Saints seemed happy. Again at 10 a. m. on Tuesday met Mr. Wray in continuation of the same proposition. Again at 7 met and Mr. Wray did not prove one single prophecy of Joseph false. His chief forte lay in traducing Joseph. 21st—Met again. Mr. Wray affirmed the proposition or tried to and made a total failure. In the evening again on the question, and Mr. Wray failed to make a single point. 22nd—Met this morning on the 3rd question, "Are the Revelations of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants inspired." I was not well and did not make as good an argument as sometimes. Mr. Wray unfair. He pretended to read what was not in the book, and by additions, omissions, etc., sought to influence the people. After meeting excitement was intense and I learned that some had gone to obtain whiskey—saying they were going to "drive the d—d Mormons out tonight." I thought then of my wife's dream 'ere coming here. She begged me because of it, to write each day as she felt danger awaited me and we might not meet again. My committee especially seemed distressed with presaging storms. Was warned by Samuel Hinkle that the boys intended mischief that night. In the evening attended last debate. Mr. Wray opened question, "Are the vices and crimes of Brigham Young and his followers the natural outgrowth of Mormonism proper, and the church they represent any part of the Mormon church proper?" The Lord was evidently with me tonight as against Mr. Wray. The efforts of Mr. Wray, the mob spirit of the crowd was kept under and the Reorganized church freed from the reproach sought to be cast upon it. There was so strong an influence in my favor that I was enabled to speak forth the truth with power. The Saints felt a power for good and rejoiced.

A Letter to the Herald Family

By Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths

The Editor of the Saints' Herald, Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: This is my first communication to the Herald in 1934, and it has been some time since I last wrote. I have been acquainted with it ever since I was a little boy.

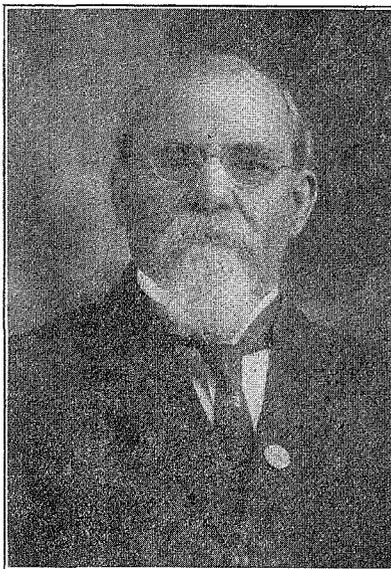

The first time an issue was published, was in Cincinnati, Ohio, being edited by Isaac Sheen. It was through the Herald coming to Syracuse, Ohio, that my parents and others living there learned of the Reorganization and became identified with it. In some way, unknown to me, a copy of the Herald reached that place, and a brother by the name of Henry Green went to Cincinnati to get in communication with Brother Sheen.

It was not long after that visit until the apostles, W. W. Blair and James E. Blakesley, appeared on the scene and they were instrumental in the hands of God in having my parents and others unite with the Reorganization. This was in 1860, and in 1861 the latter brother blessed me.

In those days it was called the True Latter Day Saints' Herald, and was issued monthly. There is quite a contrast in the size and contents, from what it was in those days, and I still love to have it come to the home and read it wherever perchance I happen to be when it makes its appearance. Not that I always endorse all that I read within its pages, but it is a container of so much good that I would not like to be deprived of it.

I am very sorry that there are so many Saints met in my travels that do not take the Herald. In my opinion they are making a great mistake as many of those people seem very ignorant of the workings of the church. I have been in different Saints' homes where they took the two or three local papers and monthly magazines, but the good Saints' Herald was not to be found there. I advise those Saints to send for the Herald since it costs only about one fourth of what they pay for those daily papers and magazines. The sermons alone, in the Herald, not to mention the editorials and correspondence, which would be a great help and a comfort to those who peruse the pages contained therein.

I am still greatly interested in this great and wonderful Latter Day Work, and I cannot call to mind one thing in this sinful world that can be compared with it. We may acquire great wealth and all the good things of this earth's production, but all of this is very insignificant in comparison with the Pearl of Great Price that our heavenly Father and his Son Jesus Christ have placed within our reach on condition of our continual obedience to His commandments.

It is very apparent that the great majority of the people are far more concerned in the pleasures of this world than they are in the things of God and I find as I journey here and there among the Saints that very many of them have seemingly lost sight of the most valuable thing of all things, namely, the Pearl of Great Price.

There seems to be so much slothfulness and carelessness existing among those who should be wide awake and using all their talents and abilities, with which they are blessed, in the interests of the Lord's grand and glorious church. There was never a time from Adam on down to the present day when there was so much need of workers to cooperate with our dear Lord to bring to pass His great design, the redemption of Zion.

I wish to call the attention of the Saints to the following verse:

"Waste not—want not, is the maxim I would teach,
Let your watchword be dispatched,
Practice what you preach!
Do not let your chances like the sunbeams Pass you by—
You never miss the water,
'Til the well runs dry."

If the people in the world, during the prosperous years, had not wasted as they did, we would not have wanted for food, raiment, and a place of shelter, as many have and do. If the Saints had practiced what they preached, the church would not be in such a discouraging condition as it has been in the last few years, and as it is at present.

We surely did let the golden opportunities go by and now we suffer the consequences of our failure, because many people did fail to take advantage of the conditions when they were prosperous and favorable to us.

I've been closely associated with Kirtland since 1833 and during all that time the well we had to depend upon for our water, never went dry. But this fall we were terribly disappointed and made sad, that our wells were dry, and in the language of the poet, we surely "missed the water, when the well went dry."

The Lord warned us years ago to my knowledge, not to waste, but to keep our eyes open, for He pointed out that there would be terrible disastrous conditions confront us in the future, but we let those opportunities, "like sunbeams," pass us by.

I was made to rejoice on reading the editorial of President Smith in the Herald of January 16, in his message to the church, relative to the coming General Conference. The divine Spirit evidenced to me, that if we would keep said counsel and advice in remembrance, and act accordingly, that our Father in heaven would abundantly bless the coming General Conference, with his Holy Spirit, that would bring great rejoicing to our hearts.

Remember that the Lord has many precious blessings in store for us, providing we place ourselves in an acceptable attitude before Him. We should ever keep in remembrance that it is humility and faith in God's promises and obedience, that will bring the presence of God to us as a people and we certainly stand in need of His mighty power, in assisting us to place the church in an acceptable condition before Him.

Some time ago, I was sitting in a large chair in my home, meditating upon the past and the present. All of a sudden, the Lord brought before my mind, an incident that had taken place in my early experience in the church which I had forgotten.

In the early part of 1877 I started out as a missionary occupying the office of a priest at that time. I performed ministerial labor in eastern Iowa and around Millersburg, Illinois. I also visited Davenport, Rock Island, and many other places in that mission. I was also ordained an elder in the city of Davenport, by Jerome Wildermuth, who by the way, was the first man to be ordained a Seventy in the Reorganization.

Before going on that mission, I had spent a short time at Canton, Illinois. Brother Jeremiah Jeremiah was president of the branch and there was a sister residing there who was a very active worker in the Sunday school and the church. I was very young and inexperienced and had been ordained in the September, previously, in 1876. This sister took quite an interest in me and urged me to be faithful and to magnify my calling and counseled me to trust in the Lord, and if I did I would be able to accomplish some degree of good in the future in the ministry.

After having labored for some months in the mission referred to above, I started back to Canton, Illinois, and late in the night I arrived in Galesburg, Illinois, where I was under the necessity of changing trains. But, when I went up to the ticket agent to procure my ticket, I was informed that it would be unnecessary for me to buy my ticket that night as there would be no train going in my direction until nine o'clock the next day. I was very much disappointed for the reason that I did not have sufficient means to go to a hotel.

In that day there were no Saints in that city, so I found myself in a very sad predicament. The station closed at twelve o'clock, so I went to the station agent and asked him if he would permit me to remain in the station for the night and he condescended to allow me that privilege. I sat on a hard seat and my head rested on the back of the seat against the wall. It was dark at the time the station was closed for the night, until the next morning and a short time before the dawn of day, I had a dream but it seemed to me that I was partly awake.

This same sister, whose name was Ralia, appeared before me. She had in her hand a large book and with her right hand she turned those sheets one by one and I could see my name written here and there on every page as she turned them over. She turned them so rapidly that I could not read what was written there, but could only see my name. It seemed to me that she was a long time turning over those leaves but at last she closed the book and said to me, "This is the record that you are to make in your ministry."

I was very much surprised when I awoke, that she was not standing in front of me, as it seemed so real. The next morning I got on the train and landed at my destination about noon. I went to the home of one of the Saints and made inquiry about the president of the branch and also this sister who had appeared to me in my dream and I was told, to my sorrow and surprise, that she had died about three weeks before that time.

As strange as it may appear, I never thought anything more about that dream until the time I stated above when it seemed as though someone was speaking to me, but I could not see anyone, and said, "Do you remember that incident that happened in the railway station in Galesburg, Illinois, wherein the sister went before you with that book pointing to the record that you would make in the ministry? Do you remember all the sermons that you have preached in the different parts of the world, the many services that you have presided over, social meetings, preachings, business; all the names of those whom you have baptized, confirmed, the ordinations that you have officiated in; children that you have blessed, the patriarchal blessings that you have given, the many branches and districts that you have organized, the advice and counsel which you have given to the people, both young and old; don't you think they would be quite a large record, if it was all put together where you could read it?"

I was amazed when I was reminded of the many things I had done in the service of my Master, and I did answer to myself, "Yes, it would be quite a large record." Surely, God moves in a marvelous way, His wonders to perform.

Then, as a matter of course, I thought of the many ministers that I have been associated with, within the years that I have been engaged as an ambassador for Christ, and of how many of them have passed away to their reward and only a very few are living that I was associated with in my early ministry.

Then I was reminded of the many blessings God had conferred upon me, and how good he had been to me and all that I had been instrumental in performing in his ministry, was through his power. I think of the good health the Lord has blessed me with all these years in the different countries I have visited; in change of diets and beds, under such a variety of conditions—sometimes cold, sometimes damp, the different climates I had been in—but the Lord was with me as he promised to be nearly fifty-nine years ago, when he told me through the Spirit (at that time I was a sickly boy), that if I was faithful in his service, and would obey his mandates, that I would live to a great old age and have strength of body and mind and would travel in foreign countries and lands, and preach the gospel and baptize many, many people into His church.

When I think of the responsible positions, yes, the sacred positions that I have held and how the Lord has operated through me in the interests of his church for the good of humanity, I often wonder if, as I look back and realize from whence I started—an ignorant boy, without an education—I am compelled to exclaim, "God is good!" I thank Him from my heart and praise his holy name, yet today; he is still with me by that same Spirit that he gave unto me in the years that have gone and that today through his great mercy and kindness I enjoy the best of health. No headaches, no aches of any kind, and through his grace and power, I am still able to travel here and there in the interests of his church and to counsel men and women relative to the things of God, that will elevate them and lift them up above the frailties of this world and wickedness which surrounds them on every side.

I know that God is merciful for I have come short many times of living by every word of his commandments. My advice to the young and the middle-aged as well as the old, is to lean upon the mighty arm of God; to study his word and acquaint themselves with the things that are sacred before him, as he would have them to become meek and lowly as was Christ. They should be willing to make any sacrifice that God demands of them in his service; to cultivate, constantly, the spirit of humility; for he that is humble, God will exalt, and the man who leans upon the arm of God, God will use him and make him a polished shaft and a useful instrument in his hands to extend his kingdom among men, and to build up his glorious church. He will have an influence over the young and old, but he that trusts in the arm of flesh and allows himself to be proud and lean upon the arm of flesh will perish.

The man or woman who permits himself or herself to be jealous of those who are coworkers with them in helping to build up the church of God, will never succeed, but will be lost.

God operates through love and he that loveth not his brother and his sister with a true love that actuated Jesus to leave the heavens to come down to this sin-cursed world in the interests of fallen man, can never be with Christ and God in the world to come.

The minister who will preach nothing but repentance will be successful and acceptable before the Lord. What the people need now-a-days is the simple gospel that Jesus inaugurated when here on earth, which has in it the essence of eternal life, or in other words, is the power of God unto salvation.

Whosoever becomes jealous of the young and places obstacles within their way to impede their progress in the Lord's work will never succeed and become coworkers with Christ. We should be glad and rejoice in our hearts that they are willing to devote their time and talents in the interests of the salvation of their fellow men. We should at all times encourage them and assist them in every way to become faithful workers in their day and generation. And I say, Woe unto the individual who would place a stumblingblock in the way of the young with a view of impeding their progress in the spiritual realm.

And in conclusion, I do rejoice and feel thankful that God has blessed me to the extent that he has and I do not regret any sacrifice that I have been called to make in all the years that I have been in the ministry. I intend by the grace of God to continue to sow the seed of the gospel and to encourage God's people to be true to every trust, and to be faithful in the service of their Master.

It has been my good pleasure to be associated with forty apostles in these last days, and, also two presidents of the church and eight counselors, and six presiding bishops since I entered the ministry, and fifty apostles since I entered the church. Very many changes take place in the personnel of the different quorums of the church as the days come and go. I expect to see many more changes ere I pass over the great divide.

It is to be hoped that we as God's people will go forward with greater diligence than ever before.

With love to all, I remain your co-worker in gospel bonds,

MOUNDSVILLE, WEST VIRGINIA, January 26, 1934.

THE ROYAL ROAD

"But I think you had something to do in bringing this match about—"

"I? Why—who is it planning to get married?"

"Dart Moody and Bernice Dobson. Yes really," as the girl made a gesture of disbelief. "Mrs. Dobson is a good friend of mine, and she has told me a great deal about it. The wedding is to be in the fall. Bernice's father has promised her a trip to New York this summer to get her trousseau, and a more thrilled girl you never saw."

"I hoped they would make up again," calmly, "but I didn't expect they would do it so soon. Does Dart seem happy about it?"

"Dart? Why—you'd think him the happiest fellow on earth! You'd think," and here she paused to express herself in a low, well-bred laugh, "that nobody else in the world ever contemplated marriage before! I've always liked Dart and thought him more promising than most of his associates, but he has improved immensely of late. Mrs. Dobson is elated over the turn of affairs, too, and so I just told her who was largely responsible for this."

"Oh, why, Mrs. Keithley!" Larry protested crimsoning, "I really had nothing to do with it. I never should have gone to Lakeside with Dart—I knew all along it should have been Bernice, and I urged him to go back—"

"Just as I thought," nodded the older woman; "that's what I told Grace Dobson. She's a sensible woman, and she's grateful to you. Said she wanted to make your acquaintance. I wouldn't be one bit surprised if you received an invitation to the wedding."

"This fall, did you say?"

"Yes, don't you love an autumn wedding?"

"They are lovely, and I presume this will be especially gorgeous," agreed the guest. Then: "Shall you be going?"

"No, I don't expect to be in this country then."

The girl caught her breath.

"I plan to sail for Liverpool in a month or so." That old expression of unrest was on her face. Discontentedly she looked down at her hands, but nothing there, not even the brilliancy of costly gems, seemed to please her. "This will be my ninth trip abroad." Her tone was not boastful; she was just making a casual statement.

"I've never been far into Italy, and may go there. Generally though I don't get past the Alps in the summertime—so cool and pleasant there. I may spend the summer at Geneva or Interlaken or some other of the many little resorts there, and go on into Italy in the fall. I have an overwhelming curiosity to see some of those black-shirted boys and get a peek at Dictator Mussolini himself. But I'm going to England first on business."

Mrs. Keithley was a wealthy widow in her own right. She owned considerable property in both the United States and in England, and Larry remembered from their conversation down on the pier at Lakeside Cottage, that she spent much of her time abroad.

"Oh—but—you'll have a wonderful trip!" Thought of the pleasures of seeing the world like this put a glow into Larry's eyes.

"It is a good trip," conceded the other restlessly, "but, my dear girl, I'm a lonely woman, not very good company for myself. I dislike traveling alone. The last time I was in Europe Doris was with me, but she thinks she can't leave this year. If I could find the right person, I should love to have a companion. Would you consider such a position?"

The direct question fairly took Larry's breath away. Its suddenness made her dizzy, speechless. How wonderful it would be to travel over the blue sea, to meet new people, to live in luxury near this woman! There would be London and Westminster Abbey, the English Channel, Paris and the Louvre, and Switzerland in summertime! It was a powerful temptation. No more worry about the permanency of her job with sales falling off every month—for, it was plain to see, that if one once entered the graces of Mrs. Keithley, she was assured of care and plenty. She wouldn't have to get up early morning after morning and go to work; no, there would be silken beds and long hours of rest, and—relief! How elegant! The girl's imagination was carrying her away, and then she became acutely conscious that Mrs. Keithley was still talking.

"—I thought of you for that position the morning I found you down on the pier, appreciating the scenery. You could make my travels so much happier. Possibly you could do a little secretarial work for me." Shrewdly she added the last remark. It would appeal, she knew, to one of Larry's independent disposition; it would make the business of being a traveling companion seem more like a real job.

Wildly Larry's heart seemed to careen in her bosom. How she would love to go! No more boarding house worries. No more mysteries about one's landlady and a fellow boarder—but that was an ungrateful thought to have about people so dear as Eldred Hampton and Joe Dockerly!

And then there was Greg. She couldn't go that far away from Greg, anyway not just yet. She still loved Greg even if he did have another girl friend and had forgotten that there was such a person as Larry Verne. Had he? She wasn't quite sure about it. Nor could she leave Nancy or Carmen, or even Mr. Harvey Peterson. All of them needed her. They were her homefolks, her family by adoption. Dorothy Cameron, as trying as she could be at times, needed her, too. Yes, she was needed at home.

Larry was calm and composed when at last she turned to her hostess: "You are very kind, Mrs. Keithley, and I wish I could go with you, but I can't. Truly," she rushed on in what seemed to be her supreme act of self-denial, "I'd love to go; I feel as if I were shutting the door of my dreams in my own face. But there—there is work here for me to do, here in Independence. I can't leave—at least not at present." She halted. A great lump seemed to have come up into her throat. "Larry, old girl," she was raging to herself, "you're crazy! You ought to be jumping at this chance! Such an opportunity! Snap out of it—say, Yes!"

It was late when Mrs. Keithley's limousine delivered Larry at her door, and she was very tired. After all, the evening had been strenuous—it had been a battle with self, and the conflict was still on.

In bed, she lay thinking for a long time. It had been wonderful to catch this fleeting glimpse of luxury and wealth, and Mrs. Keithley was a strange, generous soul—but, oh, so lonely! She had wealth and everything that money could buy, but she was not happy. And she, Larry, had neither wealth nor happiness—but wasn't it her own fault that she was unhappy? Was it? How strange the world! Now there was John Hampton who had neither health nor wealth, but what a richness of joy and content.

Presently she fell asleep to dream that Mrs. Keithley, looking very pale and sad, stood before her offering her an enormous box of chocolates. Larry couldn't accept the gift though the chocolates were her favorite kind, because she was on a diet in which candy was not allowed. And then Sallie Ruth came in, and Mrs. Keithley gave the gift to her.

The Readers Say---

Sees Victory Through Christ

Each week when the Herald comes, I am eager to see the contents, and then read the different articles as I can. I am not only entertained while reading, but instructed by the different writers.

When reading the testimonies and experiences of others, a suggestion came to my mind—maybe you could help someone by your testimony. I was baptized in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania when eleven years old and am now seventy-four. My testimony is that I know this latter day gospel is of God—not alone because man has said so, but God, by His infinite power, hath revealed this to me, as He does to all who obey the gospel, and are born again. And in all of these years, in every avenue of my life this has proved true. Many different conditions in the church have arisen during my life, and when having to make a decision on any matter as an individual, I have gone to God for direction, He has never failed me, showing me clearly each time that He has given a law which I should take for my guide and also that divine love and his law cannot be separated.

So my trust is in God and the final victory of this latter-day work. What God has done by his law cannot be changed by man. God will help everyone of us for we all have something to overcome.

Prayer is a wonderful thing. It is through prayer that the connection between heaven and us can be kept open. The enemy of all righteousness does not want us to pray. He has tried to imitate everything else almost, but that is one thing he has not done—taught us to pray—and if we pray in the name of Jesus, the enemy cannot stop it. He may hinder God's answer on the way, but the answer will come. God's answer to our prayer is not always our way, but it is God's way, and we must learn to be submissive and say "Thy will be done." Year by year I have learned these things, and when I have been willing to submit to His will, what a wonderful blessing it was.

Prayer has been my help and stay. Many days in our life unexpected problems arise. If in the morning we seek the indwelling of God's Spirit, which gives divine guidance, we can face those problems in the best way, but without this help our own weakness rises uppermost, and we fail.

My parents were baptized into the church in England in the early days when the gospel was first preached over there before Joseph was killed. Sometime after Joseph Smith's death, they and their two children came to this country with a shipload of Saints en route to Utah. When they reached New Orleans, father and mother would go no further with them—instead they went to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. I am proud of them—that they were governed by the principle of right and truth. They learned of the Reorganization in Pittsburgh later.

A short time ago our President, Frederick M. Smith, in an editorial, talked with us, the church, about the coming General Conference, inviting us to pray for the conference. He finished by saying "Let us face the future on our knees." I feel sure if we can only do this, great will be the results.

My home has been in Kirtland since 1893, with the exception of a few years lived in Cleveland, Ohio. I love to go to the Temple and worship. I can see the top of it from my home and often a prayer goes up when I look at it.

I want to bear testimony that my confidence and faith have never failed me in regard to this latter-day work or the leaders, and that I have greater confidence in the Presidency, Quorum of Twelve and Bishopric than ever in my life before. God can and will work through them for the greater establishment of his work in the world. What a tremendous task is before us! The conditions of the world are fearful, but God is over all. His work must be fulfilled, and whether I live to see it or not, victory shall come to the people of God through Christ our Savior.

I am glad that the church is reaching out to the youth of today. When I was a young woman in Pittsburgh there was nothing especially for the young except the Sunday school. The church sent Brother Mark H. Forscutt there. After he came he was interested in the youth and organized a young people's prayer meeting, which was held every two weeks. Each one was asked to write a short paper on some subject. These as well as the prayer meetings were very instructive. There was no special work for the young, no Religio or the many different interests for the young that there are today. The Pittsburgh young people learned to love "Uncle Mark" as we called him.

While life shall last I will try to be faithful. My heart longs to do things which I cannot do now, but there is one thing I can do—and that is be true.

Church Edifice Symbol of God's Favor and Gospel Growth

Wife and I drove to Rich Hill, Missouri, to be with the Saints in an all-day meeting announced by Birch Whiting, district president, January 28, and this visit recalled former visits and connections there.

In 1883 my parents moved from southern Kansas to this booming coal mining town and found Brother Black's family there, the only Latter Day Saints in that vicinity. The only Latter Day Saint sermons we were privileged to hear were given when D. S. Crawley stopped there to preach on the street. But in later years through the efforts of Elder J. C. Chrestensen and associates, a fair-sized branch sprang up and now is flourishing in a church building of their own.

In this group in 1892, I was called to the priesthood through Emsley Curtis and on June 26, of that year, I was ordained. With this authority but minus church appointment, I accepted the challenge of the world and began a bold presentation of our church origin and doctrine as opportunity and my business permitted.

My enthusiasm carried me into a number of public discussions and protracted preaching services, the effect of which brought a number into the church and secured several favorable articles for us in the local paper.

It seemed a real coincidence on this our recent visit to Rich Hill that Brother Whiting asked me to occupy the pulpit in our own church. This building my father helped to erect for one of the popular and representative churches of Rich Hill. Well do I remember when I saw him making those Gothic window frames, how I stood meditating over the apparent hopelessness of the Saints' gaining ground in this community dominated by popular churches with money and prestige. It stirred me with intense emotion to stand in this same building and look through the windows of this very church that my father was paid to help build for the world, reviewing the background of our church development in Bates County, Missouri.

This church edifice, enlarged and transferred to a whole city block, has the support of more than one hundred and fifty Latter Day Saints. It symbolizes the possibilities of success for our people even when face to face with what seems to be unpromising conditions.

Since that visit to Rich Hill my mind has drifted back to vision the changes that have taken place there. I can see the faces and hear the voices of some whom I baptized and of others who gave their presence and moral support while I tried to inspire seekers for truth to accept the gospel.

The Faithful Become Like Him

Not long ago I was privileged to meet again Elder and Sister Richard Baldwin at Brentwood Branch. I met them the first time in Boston during the World War. They were contributing service to the Master in a two-week series of meetings at Brentwood, and as I listened to these faithful missionaries, I was reminded that the intervening years have put into their faces the love and kindness of the Savior whom they are serving so well.

It is a distinctive truth that years of faithful service build in the souls and physical beings of Saints a likeness akin to that of the Master. Listen to the words of Paul: "Now the Lord is that Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass of glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

A recent testimony by one not a member of the church is here appropriate. Elder James L. Gray, formerly of Independence, who has been laboring in Saint Louis District during the past year, was living at the home of a woman who is an artist. She painted a portrait of the Savior, and one day she said to Brother Gray: "I want you to have this portrait as a gift. You so much remind me of the Master." This is indeed a testimony of the quality of Brother Gray's life, that the woman saw in his countenance a likeness to her conception of the Savior.

Would Take Gospel to His Neighbors

Two years ago, on account of unemployment, we moved sixty-five miles from Duluth, settling on a piece of land. As there was no Sunday school of our faith in this locality, I began attending a union Sunday school. Here I found opposition in a young man who is studying to be a minister. He was teacher of the Bible Class which I attended. In his teaching, he sometimes became impatient when the members of the class did not see the point as he did; his attendance was quite irregular. When he was not there, the class asked me to act as teacher.

January 21, the young teacher was discussing his creed once saved, always saved, when I called to his attention certain Scriptures. We disagreed on our views of the meanings of these quotations, and he asked the class who they thought was right. When the members agreed with me, he became angry and refused to teach any more.

Immediately following the class period an election of officers for the following year was held, and to my surprise they elected me superintendent. At first I declined the office but the people insisted. Then I thought that this might be God's way of spreading the gospel here, so I accepted the office. This Sunday school has an attendance of about twenty-five members.

The gospel means much to me. I was ordained a priest by William Sparling and an elder by Samuel Sloan. I believe that isolation gives to us a deeper appreciation of and a more intense love for the gospel. Please pray for us that we may be instrumental in bringing the light of truth to our neighbors.

Trials and Blessings

Since I am isolated from church privileges, the only way I can communicate with Saints is by writing to the Herald. If Brother O. W. Okerlind happens to see this, he will be glad, I know, to learn that we are still trying to do our best.

Sunday, January 21, Boise Saints held an all-day meeting. I longed to meet with them but it was sixty miles and I had no way of going.

We have been enjoying the sermons preached by Brother Joseph Sandidge, who has been meeting with us at our house for a few Sundays. We all enjoy hearing him tell of God's work.

I love to give the elders passing through Payette, Idaho, a home. I know I have not much to offer, but what little I have, they are welcome to share with us.

I wish to relate one of God's blessings to us. One night my little grandson was taken seriously ill. They were up all night until four o'clock, and then they called me. Brother Sandidge was here and we asked him to administer to the child. I was holding the baby in my arms, and before Brother Sandidge took his hands off of his head, the child was asleep. He has enjoyed good health ever since that experience.

I can tell of many blessings of God. I know I have many things to overcome, but I love the latter-day work.

We are passing through a trial now. It has been one year, February 6, since my companion fell and broke his hip. He is not able to walk by himself yet. The doctor says he will always be in that condition, but he is trying to bear it with patience. He enjoys having company. Last fall, Boise Saints met at our home and held an all-day meeting. We enjoyed a spiritual feast. We are looking forward to meeting with them again this fall.

I am thankful I had a faithful mother who taught me the gospel. She still writes to me, encouraging me to stay with the latter-day work. I enjoy reading the Herald. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may keep in the straight and narrow way. My prayers are always for God's people.

MRS. J. H. CARMYERS.

PAYETTE, IDAHO.

Heralds Wanted

Extra copies of the Herald for January 30, 1934, are wanted by the Auditorium guides to distribute to visitors who are shown through the building. An insufficient supply is on hand for this purpose, and the guides will greatly appreciate having copies sent to them by subscribers who do not plan to preserve their files. A two-cent stamp is necessary to carry the copy. If less is affixed, the copy is lost. Send them to:

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Is a member in good standing who is able to pay tithes, but will not?

The Scriptures are very specific in condemning this neglect of the divine law. The book of Malachi contains an example of such neglect on the part of the Jews, and God refers to tithing as one of his ordinances, saying:

"From the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. . . . Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation."—Malachi 3: 7-9.

Revelation to the church contains a similar warning. It says:

"I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; . . . yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

In later years another revelation has again cautioned the Saints to observe this law as presented by the bishopric. The word declares:

"The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which have been given, . . . the church cannot receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed. Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and the pure in heart."—Ibid., 129: 8.

While the church may not officially pronounce sentence on all who disobey these commands, yet it should be clear to all that such disobedience is not the act of a Saint in good standing, and must bring the displeasure of God, as an evil example to others that injures both the church and the offender.

Should members move to Zion without advice from the priesthood?

There are strong reasons why they should not do so, and some who have failed to regard the direction of the Lord in this respect have suffered material losses, as well as loss of confidence in the work of God by their neglect. The gathering is of vital importance, and unless observed in accordance with sound rules of procedure it will be impossible to provide the employment and other needs required. For this reason several revelations have been given containing instructions on this subject. In 1831 the church was admonished:

"Let the work of the gathering be not in haste, nor by flight, but let it be done as it shall be counseled by the elders of the church at the conferences, according to the knowledge which they receive from time to time."—Ibid., 58: 12.

This implies that the elders might be instructed and advised by those in charge of the gathering from time to time, and thus it would be accomplished in an orderly manner. Not long after the above instruction was given the Saints were again cautioned in similar words, and they were instructed to "let all things be prepared before you." Repeatedly the same cautions have been published by the executives of the church, and experience has proved the wisdom of this course.

Has the Aaronic priesthood the office of high priest?

The bishop must be a high priest in order to act in his bishopric, and he is also called to preside over the Aaronic priesthood by a revelation which states:

"The duty of the president over the priesthood of Aaron, is to preside over forty-eight priests, and sit in council with them, to teach them the duties of their office, as is given in the covenants. This president is to be a bishop; for this is one of the duties of this priesthood."—Ibid., 104: 40.

However, the bishop is not enrolled as a priest of the Aaronic order, though he might be if he were a literal descendant of Aaron and could claim his office by right of his lineage. But under the Mosaic law provision was made for the office of high priest, and this was to be held by Aaron and his sons in succession after him. Many texts refer to this office (see Leviticus 21: 10. Numbers 35: 25, 28. Nehemiah 3: 1, 20; 13: 28), which was continued until the time of Christ by the Jewish nation.

Honolulu, Hawaii

Hawaiian Branch

Pastor V. B. Etzenhouser returned from California January 11, after a six weeks' stay on the mainland. He was accompanied back to Honolulu by his family who had been in Missouri for several months. During his absence from the island, his counselors, Elders Charles Lee, Henry Mahi, and Thomas Kelii, had charge of the Hawaiian Branch, being advised by Patriarch G. J. Waller.

Hawaiian Saints are fortunate in having Brother Etzenhouser and his family with them again because they have not many men on the island of long experience in church work, and the effort he is exerting in the interests of the latter-day work in Honolulu means much to the members.

At the annual business meeting held December 20, the elders' council recommended several to serve as heads of departments of the church for 1934. These the branch unanimously elected: Sister Priscilla Kramer, the new Sunday school superintendent; Sister Emma Kaawakauo, choir leader; Sister "Queenie" Pitzl was retained as superintendent of the department of recreation and expression as well as branch secretary, and Sister Edith L. Keifer is the new branch corresponding secretary. Brother Elias Kaawakauo is acting as branch treasurer. Peter D. Hoe, who served faithfully and efficiently in this office for many years, recently passed away after a brief illness. John Ledo and John Wright, jr., were retained to serve as auditors with Brother Jacob J. Keifer as their new assistant.

There was no change made in the officers of the women's department. All are retained to carry on another year. The superintendent is Sister Kaeo; her assistant, Sister Molly Antone; secretary, Sister Katie Cummings, and chairman of the working committee, Sister Kahale. The women meet regularly each Thursday, and much credit should be given them for their loyal support.

The department of recreation and expression had its election of officers with the following results: Assistant superintendent, Sister Kaeha Blackwell; secretary, Sister Katie Cummings (retained), and other officers.

Much improvement has been noted in the departments since the first of the year. Those appointed by the new Sunday school superintendent to assist her in the work are: Assistant superintendent, Sister Edith L. Keifer; secretary, Sister Hanna Miyamoto (retained), and other helpers.

When the new Sunday school superintendent was elected, she automatically became supervisor of the junior church. Sister Ora Macrae and her little daughter are now staying at the Mission House, 1680 Mott-Smith Drive, and she is doing her part by helping the junior church.

On the first Sunday of the year all Saints of the Chinese, the Japanese, and the Hawaiian branches enjoyed a union sacrament service. In addition to the ordinance of the Lord's supper, the Saints witnessed the confirmation of John Kealoha by Patriarch G. J. Waller.

Attendance at all services has increased since the beginning of the year. The spirituality of the branch is in a flourishing condition. The priesthood are actively doing their part to bring the branch to a higher level. All members of the priesthood, with the exception of the deacons, take turns in preaching at the Sunday morning service. Most of them have shown marked improvement and have greatly enjoyed the power of the Holy Spirit, especially when they have prepared to do their utmost to feed the flock. Since Brother Etzenhouser became pastor of the branch, preaching in the Hawaiian language at the eleven o'clock service is only occasional as all understand the English language and only a few of the older ones can speak and understand the Hawaiian language. Patriarch G. J. Waller and Brother Etzenhouser preach inspiring sermons from time to time.

The young people of the church, led by Brother Jacob J. Keifer and with much encouragement from the pastor, are endeavoring to push forward. March 4, they will take charge of the evening service, giving a religious play.

The priesthood sponsored a social the night of February 8.

A poi luncheon was given February 22, the proceeds going to the road assessment which the branch must meet in March.

Cottage meetings have been revived after the busy Christmas holidays. These meetings were held weekly for several months prior to the holiday season, being sponsored by Jacob J. Keifer, priest. The faith of many has been strengthened and friends have been given the opportunity to hear the gospel preached for the first time. Indeed so much good has been received from these services that the priesthood are resuming the meetings with enthusiasm. A recent meeting was held at the home of Brother and Sister Fred Cockett in the Kalihi section, where Brothers M. A. McConley and J. B. Barrett labored so effectively twenty years ago.

San Bernardino, California

Give Attention to Clearing Local Debt

This branch has been busy the past few months with various worship, business and social activities. At the close of the "Keep the Law" period, a special service was conducted by the financial clerk, Brother Ferguson. The story of the "Urn in the City Beautiful" was read and afterwards, each one of the congregation who had filed his inventory or made a special offering, deposited it in the urn on the platform.

On the evening of December 14, the annual business meeting was held. The reports of the department leaders and the election of officers were the important matters. The following officers were elected for the new year: W. A. Teagarden, pastor; Margaret Teagarden, director of religious education; Roselyn Bussey, adult supervisor; Lorena Bedford, young people's supervisor; Wilma Dexter, children's supervisor; financial clerk, Hunter C. Ferguson.

Apostle Myron A. McConley visited this congregation December 18 and preached at the evening service. Everyone was sorry that it was to be his last visit for some time, and all united in wishing him Godspeed.

Each newly-elected officer is determined to make this year the most outstanding in every way. The women's department is planning to make their monthly dinners successful from both a financial and a missionary standpoint. Through these dinners, strangers are becoming acquainted and interested in the work. By a new plan of the church school director each class has an opportunity to participate in the Sunday morning worship services. Each division is given one Sunday a month on which to present the worship program.

The children's division presented their Christmas play, "Santa's Vision," December 22. After the play, all the children marched to see the white Christmas tree with a snowy background in the junior auditorium, where Santa Claus gave each child a bag of candy.

On Sunday morning, December 24, the sacred Christmas program was given. This consisted of songs and a presentation of the Nativity scene. The pastor, Brother Teagarden, gave the Christmas sermon.

The D. O. U.'s, the young people's organization, held their election of officers January 5, and the following were chosen: President, George Dexter; vice president, Dorothy Elkins; chairman social committee, Nellie Mae Nelson; chairman friendship committee, Anna Mae Draper; chairman worship programs, Gertrude Boren; chairman program committee, Virginia Bussey; booster for young people's prayer meetings, Ted Dexter; leader for Tenth Legion, Harold Eixom; delegate to district council, Dayle Bussey; secretary and treasurer, Mazie Boren, and sponsor, Sister Mabel Horton.

The D. O. U.'s (Depend on Us) are determined to live up to their name this year and be a real help to the branch. They plan to give several plays during the year, to sponsor social activities, and help to pay off the branch debt.

The branch financial clerk has presented an interesting plan to clear the church of indebtedness. A large chart has been made with cards, each designating a certain amount. Each member pledges himself to pay whatever he can and his name is written on his card. The total amount on the cards is equal to the amount they wish to pay on the debt by July 1. A good start has already been made and the branch is certain to raise the money within the time specified.

Apostle J. W. Rushton visited San Bernardino January 21. He spoke at the morning and evening services and in the afternoon gave an inspiring talk to the young people.

The branch has been saddened during the past month by death among its members and friends. On December 28, Brother Teagarden preached the funeral sermon of Sister Myrtle Kinnett, daughter of Sister Emma Aldridge, one of the pioneers of this branch, and on January 8 the funeral of Mr. George Nelson, husband of Sister Rose French Nelson, was held. January 22, Brother Rushton preached the funeral sermon of Sister Bessie Troutman. The bereaved families have the sincere sympathy of the entire branch.

On Sunday, January 28, a baptismal service was held, five young people being baptized by Brother Frank Van Fleet. Following a short sermon on "Baptism" by Brother Teagarden, the confirmation service was held.

A banquet was held for the two intermediate classes on January 20, twenty in attendance, including the young people's director and the two class teachers. Special attention is being given this year to the intermediate girls and boys in a social way in addition to their class work.

On Friday evening, February 9, the D. O. U. Class held its annual banquet. The tables were decorated in the Valentine colors of red and white. There was attendance of forty, including as guests of the evening, the district young people's director, Jack Milner and his wife, from Long Beach. At the close of the banquet, Brother Milner installed the newly-elected officers of the class, and charged them with the duties of their respective offices for the coming year. The evening was brought to a close by the singing of "Onward to Zion."

Workers are especially proud of our church school this year as twenty new members have enrolled since January 1. We now have an enrollment of one hundred and fifty-six which includes fifteen nonmembers. The teachers and "cadet" teachers are showing great interest in the teacher's training class work. The city leaders of religious education sponsored five evening classes at the First Methodist Church. An attendance of nineteen, with fourteen of the young people from our branch, showed that many are preparing for more efficient service.

Clitheral, Minnesota Union Branch

Regular weekly services have been held here throughout the year with good attendance and interest.

The women's department, organized last May, sponsored an ice cream social in July and cleared about twenty dollars. In December they served a chicken supper and held a sale of fancywork which cleared about twenty-eight dollars. Out of the proceeds they have purchased thirty new Hymnals; taken care of the expense of some varnishing and redecorating of the church; made a Christmas gift to Pastor Lester Whiting; donated five dollars toward Brother Curtis's traveling expenses, and paid tithing on all profits. Regular meetings were held at the homes during the summer and fall, but were discontinued when winter set in.

A Christmas program befitting the season was given with a tree and treats December 23. Its success was due in large measure to the efforts of Sister John Murdock who has been the church school superintendent for several years.

Pastor Lester Whiting deserves much credit for the excellent sermons he has been preaching on home and family relationship. His efforts during the "Keep the Law" period have resulted in several new names on the tithing list.

Apostle J. F. Curtis spent two weeks here recently, preaching timely sermons. He left some nonmembers much interested.

In spite of the depression, or possibly because of it, the Saints here are making noticeable spiritual progress.

Hammond, Indiana

Branch Is Going Forward

The progress of the winter season marks considerable activity in Hammond Branch. The Sunday school is holding its own and the young people's meeting on Sunday evenings is creating considerable enthusiasm throughout the branch by its increased attendance, its class work and its programs.

The choir is receiving valuable training, and gave an excellent program the week following Christmas and some good anthems for the Sunday evening services. Considerable enthusiasm is felt by the choir members and they are practicing a cantata for Easter, as well as other music. The choir also sponsored a "Trip Around the World," in which entertainment was furnished at each of four countries visited and food, typical of that country was served. The travelers were then entertained at the church, which represented the United States, and a nice profit was realized in the interest of the choir work and the branch.

Altogether Hammond Branch is going forward with enthusiastic workers, increasing membership, and members hope to receive in an increasing degree the blessings of heaven for their upbuilding.

Those in the vicinity of Hammond should get in touch with the branch pastor, Elder R. W. Smith, 733 Eaton Street, Hammond, Indiana. Telephone: Hammond 4224-R.

Lennox Mission, California

Enjoy "All-Health Day"

Every member of Lennox Mission is grateful to W. J. Nuckles for his untiring efforts to forward the work there.

Sunday, January 21, an "all-day health meeting" was held at the mission. Doctor A. W. Teel, church physician, was the guest speaker of the day. He delivered an inspiring health message at the eleven o'clock service. At noon the women of the mission served what was termed a "typical Latter Day Saint dinner." Some unusual dishes were offered. Among them were: meatless meat loaf and raw vegetables and fruit salads.

The afternoon service was taken up by a round-table discussion. Doctor Teel gave a list of foods appropriate for an anti-gastritis diet. The need of everyone's understanding the workings of the physical body was emphasized.

Sunday, February 11, Lennox Saints met with the rest of the Southern California District in conference at Central Los Angeles Branch. This group were much inspired by the wonderful talks given by Apostle J. W. Rushton.

The workers here pray that this mission will increase in membership and good works, and that someday they may be organized as a branch. They hope to have part in the redemption of Zion.

Holden Stake

Atherton, Missouri

Elder F. M. Hancock was the speaker February 4. His subject was "Law of Love."

The following Sunday, Bishop G. L. DeLapp was the speaker, who gave a general idea of the different periods of the church in development. The evening speaker, Elder J. A. Thomas, used as his subject, "Nothing Succeeds Like Succeeding."

Evan Fry was the speaker at the morning service, February 13, preaching on "Courageous Living." During this hour the junior church was conducted. Sister J. A. Thomas told the story of Daniel. D. R. Hughes preached to the small members on the same subject, "Courageous Living."

A mass meeting was held by the young people at 8:45, at which time Elder Vernon Lundeen was made leader of the young people.

Elder Lundeen was the speaker during the evening service. His theme was "Our Gospel Is a Social Gospel and Is a Guide in Our Living Together."

The cooperation of local musicians has been greatly appreciated by the members in charge of the services.

Beaverton, Michigan

Central Michigan Young People Organize Christian Legion

The young people of Central Michigan are very much interested in the Christian Legion organized as described by Apostle D. T. Williams at their November convention.

Sunday morning, February 11, about two hundred young people met at Beaverton to organize the district into a division of the legion. At nine o'clock the young men and women assembled for prayer meeting. At ten-thirty the Beaverton Choir sang, "Zion Awake" and "Heavenly Father, Hear Our Prayer." Then three interesting talks were given by M. A. Summerfield, of Tawas City; Hubert Case, district president, and Apostle Williams. The last-named explained more fully the purpose of the organization.

The organization meeting opened at two-thirty and the following officers were elected: Divisional commander, Harry Runkle; divisional secretary, Blanche Engle, and divisional treasurer, Otto Bartlett, all of Midland. Other divisional offices are to be filled by appointment.

These young Michiganders are happy to have such an organization started and hope it will grow until it includes all the young people in the church. Much interest is being shown the Christian Legion in Michigan.

Meetings similar to the one held at Beaverton are to be held in other parts of the State before March 25, when a general convention will be conducted at Saginaw.

The young members of the church are now ready to move forward to the establishment of Zion and are full of enthusiasm and vigor to make the legion a success. They hope its forward-moving spirit will be felt throughout the church.

Lamar, Nebraska

Chase County Branch

Lamar members appreciate the efforts exerted by their pastor, Ben Peters. The branch entered the new year praying for God's blessing on his people everywhere and with a determination to go forward in the hope that the coming year will be more encouraging than the old year.

Brother T. E. Fitzwater and family moved here about a year ago, and he has proved himself a real helper in the local.

Three adults were baptized, July 9, by Brother Fitzwater, Glenn Limb, Roy Fuqua and Fleda Fitzwater. On October 1, Hazel Smith was baptized by Brother Ben Peters.

Since the branch has taken up the church school program, it has enjoyed greater interest among the members. Harry Peters is the church school leader.

Lamar members attended the convention at Wray, Colorado, held last August.

The young people's class gave a play, "The Blue Handbag," led by their teacher, Sister Sylvia Goddard. Proceeds went to help the branch.

Elder Glaude A. Smith, of Denver, visited here several times during the summer and again November 6, inspiring everyone to move forward in the gospel work. The Saints rejoiced to have a visit also from Apostle R. S. Budd.

The local business meeting and election of officers occurred the latter part of September, and all have cooperated in carrying forward the new year's work.

Community Thanksgiving services were held in the Saints' church, and the choir sang two special numbers.

Recreation throughout the year has consisted of class parties, wiener roasts, picnics and fishing trips.

Brother T. E. Fitzwater conducted a series of meetings beginning December 18.

A special all-day meeting was enjoyed January 21, in honor of Brother Moroni Traxler, of Lamoni, who talked at the morning hour on his experiences in the church and at two o'clock told the story of the Book of Mormon. Other Saints from Lamoni were given a cordial welcome.

Lamar members were saddened by news of the death of Sister Elva Hougas. Brother Ward A. Hougas, her husband, was pastor of this branch several years, and all learned to know and love Sister Hougas for her kindness and understanding.

Columbus, Ohio

First Church

First Church recently received a visit from Patriarch G. T. Griffiths. Fifty years ago Brother Griffiths came into this community finding pasture and meadowland where now a city stands. He preached the first sermon of the latter-day faith in Columbus.

Brother Griffiths arrived for sacrament and blessed five members during his three-week stay. He preached on "Sacrament," "Parliamentary Law," "Faith of Our Fathers," and "Integrity." While here he stayed at the home of his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Beck. Professor Beck is a member of the faculty of the University of Ohio.

The church school yearly officers' and teachers' meeting was attended by thirty-three workers. Officers selected were: Homer Owens and John Crosier, church school leaders; Sister John R. Grice, women's leader; Stephen Lewis, young people's leader; Charles Ferguson, junior leader; Netah Anderton and Mary Owens, leaders of the small children. Homer Owens has been branch treasurer for ten years.

Directed by Stephen Lewis the young people have organized their Y. P. A. (Young People's Association) and are planning a convention to be held here in May.

The church school had a Valentine social February 16, more than one hundred attending. After the social, a surprise party was enjoyed in honor of John Gabriel, associate pastor, and Nathan Weate, chorister.

Sister Helen Raish was seriously injured in a traffic accident February 12, and is in the Saint Francis Hospital.

The committee for entertaining visitors for the coming year consists of Sister Grace Gabriel and Brothers William Smith and John Knaggie.

The women's department has been active under the leadership of Sister John Grice. A free will collection of twelve dollars and seven baskets of food was given to the poor during the holiday season. For two years the women have been meeting for prayer service on Thursday morning. Their theme now is "Prayer for Conference."

There have been two baptisms this year, Sister Jean Lewis, wife of Stephen Lewis, and Patsy Williams.

Third Church

Under the able leadership of Elder F. C. Welsh, Third Church is making progress. The year, 1933, presented many opportunities and as a group they were realized, many times by sacrifice and always by hard work.

The local priesthood has been a great help and the young are working hand in hand with those who have had greater experiences. The young people are taking their places proudly in the gospel work.

The sacrament services have been a great help to all members, especially the one of February when the divine influences of the Spirit of God was so prominent as to cause tears of joy to stream from the eyes of many present.

There have been many sick to visit, but all are on the road to recovery. Sister Lyda Welsh underwent a serious operation, but by the help of God and prayers of the Saints she has been permitted to return to her home, where she is so badly needed as a wife and mother. She is recovering nicely.

The members of this congregation were made sad at the death of Sister Albright's daughter, Audrey, who lost her life in an auto accident the night of February 10, while returning home with her fiancé from a visit with friends. Miss Albright was to be married to Mr. Edward Reed in March. She is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Albright; two brothers, William and Robert; her fiancé, Mr. Reed, other relatives and a host of friends. Elder Welsh had charge of funeral services.

The Zion Service Club met on February 7, for a potluck dinner at the home of the president, Sister Martha Dougherty. A business meeting followed at which time future plans were discussed and approved. This club composed of women of the branch meets the first Wednesday of each month to formulate plans for social and financial activities.

Speakers during the month were Patriarchs J. E. Matthews, and G. T. Griffiths. Elders Scharfenberg, L. C. Lewis, and Gard Kirkendall and Priest Theodore Dougherty.

Oelwein, Iowa

High Aim for Year's Work

"Let's push the red to the top of the thermometer," reads the slogan on the new Christmas offering calendar; "better yet, let's go over the top," suggested Pastor George McFarlane on the first Sunday of the new year, "not only in Christmas offering, but in all we attempt during this year." He challenged the members to go forward, not only to be good, but to be good for something.

A sum of about fifty dollars was given in Christmas offering for 1933, and so the 1934 quota was raised to seventy-five dollars. Russell Shippey is in charge of this fund for the year and is planning ways and means for raising it. A thermometer placed where everyone can see it, shows the progress made from month to month. Greater emphasis is being given birthday offerings.

Sister Laura Clark has recovered sufficiently from a serious illness to go, in company with her husband and his sister, Sister Mattie Ball, of Canada, to visit their sons, Otho, of Atherton, Missouri, and Edward, of Lees Summit. She fell ill at Thanksgiving and was in the hospital a week. Wonderful help came to her through administration.

A patient sufferer is Sister Hulda Westendorf, an isolated member. She has undergone several operations and still is unable to walk, but she never forgets the Lord and his many kindnesses. She keeps in touch with the church through her gifts and offerings to it.

The Emma Burton Circle holds a social gathering each month. A nominal charge is made to raise funds. The entertainment varies, there being sometimes a little play or a carnival. A box social was held in January, and then there was a good time with stunts and contests in February.

Sister Lydia Hodges recently returned from the church Sanitarium where she went for treatment.

A slow but steady increase in employment among the church members is noted in this locality.

Fanshawe, Oklahoma

Elder Lee Quick Visits Branch

Saints of Fanshawe are determined to make this year a successful one, although the group is small.

The church school is progressing under the direction of Sister Christine Mangrum, while Brother J. J. Jackson is the presiding officer of the branch.

Most of the young people have filed their inventories. Some have paid their tithing.

Elder Lee Quick preached three interesting sermons, beginning Saturday, February 3, and continuing on Sunday.

A group of young people from Wilburton were present during the Sunday evening service.

This branch has been greatly blessed with health, but was saddened by the death of Sister Mary Brannon, last July.

Brother and Sister Sartor and family have moved to Olney, Oklahoma, and are greatly missed by this branch.

Lowbanks, Ontario

Twenty-five Years Since Church Dedication

It has been twenty-five years this June since the dedication of Lowbanks church. Saints of this congregation are looking forward to this anniversary.

The annual Christmas program was presented by the young people and the women's department. The former presented two plays, "Squaring It With the Boss," and "The Christmas Party." The women gave a play, "Two Christmas Boxes." Readings and other musical numbers completed the program. This Christmas program was later repeated in the Sherbrooke Baptist Church, at the request of the ladies' aid of that congregation.

The young people are commencing rehearsals on "No-account David," a threeact play which they will present in the near future.

The religio is sponsoring a contest, in which the contestants are arranged in two teams, namely, D. O. U. (Depend on Us), and L. D. S. (Loyal Dependable Servants). A debate on "Resolved That the World Is Better Today Than It Was a Hundred Years Ago," is to be held early in February.

Elder James Pycoc, of Toronto, visited this Sunday school January 14.

Independence

Stone Church

In the dramatic preliminaries held at the Stone Church February 19 and 20, "Crime Conscious," the one-act play presented by the class of Paul Elliott, took first place. Mrs. Paul Elliott was the director. Second place was taken by "Dead Expense," given by the Y. P. R. Class and directed by Miss LaVon Budd. And honorable mention was given "The Governor's Shoes," presented by the To-Ko-Lon Class, and "A Dish of China Tea," by the class taught by Miss Gladys Elliott. Special mention was given Miss Ethel Wilkenson, Almer Sheehy, and Earl Page for individual acting. Judges were Mr. and Mrs. J. Adelbert Withee and Miss Maxine Franklin. "Crime Conscious," and "Dead Expense," will be the Stone Church entries in the final one-act play contest to be held March 5 and 6, 8 and 9.

Because of a heavy snowstorm which lasted into the afternoon, attendance at church Sunday morning was much smaller than usual. All departments of the church school found their numbers much decreased, and combined classes to meet the emergency.

Bishop A. B. Phillips, the morning speaker, gave a discourse full of good thoughts and counsel. The Stone Church Choir sang, "O Let Me Find the Day of Holy Rest," and soloists of the morning were Mrs. I. A. Smith, Mrs. S. A. Burgess, and Albert Brackenbury. Paul N. Craig directed, and Robert and George Miller were at organ and piano.

The evening's service attracted a good-sized congregation in spite of lowering temperatures in the outside world. A good musical program consisted of congregational singing led by J. Glenn Fairbanks; organ music by Opal Good Doty; a violin solo by Eloise Higgins, accompanied at the piano by Hazel Scott Withee, and two contralto solos by Mrs. S. A. Burgess. A brief talk by Pastor J. F. Sheehy on living up to the best there is in us of courage, charity, and goodness, preceded the giving of Kenneth Goodman's play, "The Dust of the Road," by a cast directed by Allegra Luff Smith. The entire program was greatly enjoyed by the congregation.

Word reached friends in Independence Sunday of the sudden death of Sister Susan Metcalf at Louisville, Kentucky, February 24. Sister Metcalf was the widow of Elder J. W. Metcalf, for many years a missionary for the church. She was visiting a son at Louisville when she contracted pneumonia. Independence was Sister Metcalf's home. Many friends and neighbors here will miss her.

Frederick B. Salisbury, eighty-four years old, died February 24, at his Independence home, leaving to mourn his passing a daughter and four sons, all of the home. The deceased was born at Webster City, Hancock County, Illinois. He lived near Fort Green for eleven years, near La Harp for forty years and moved to Independence in 1921. He was baptized into the church May 4, 1873, by J. R. Lambert, and held the office of elder until a few years ago. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery Monday.

Second Church

"Seek to Bring Forth and Establish Zion," was the topic of Elder Earl F. Hoisington's sermon Sunday morning. The choir sang "Jesus Lover of My Soul," the duet part being taken by Mrs. Will Inman and Mrs. Ethel Shuler.

Elder Frank Veenstra spoke to the juniors on Holland at the same hour, and Sister Veenstra sang a solo.

Elder C. J. Hunt preached the Sunday evening sermon, and a male quartet from Enoch Hill supplied the music.

Regardless of bad weather a goodly number was present at the Book of Mormon class conducted by Elder J. W. A. Bailey.

The choir is hard as work on a cantata to be given at Easter.

Enoch Hill Church

Miss Olive Elizabeth Bullard and Willard Carlew were united in marriage at the home of the bride, February 9. The bride was attended by her sister, Almada, and the bridegroom by his brother, James. Elder W. J. Brewer read the ceremony.

The preliminaries of the play contest were held at the church Tuesday evening. The two plays to be entered for Enoch Hill in the final contest are "Dead Expense," and "The Prodigal Son." The young people are to be commended for their excellent work on these plays.

The midweek prayer meetings are holding up in attendance in spite of stormy weather.

Sunday was an enjoyable day for the the Saints. While the snowstorm kept many away, those attending felt greatly repaid. The eight o'clock prayer service was in charge of Elder Joseph Martin, Brother George Whitehead assisting. The worship period of the church school was in charge of the intermediate girls. An instructive program was given on the theme, "Friendship."

Lawrence Martin was the morning speaker, taking his text from the third chapter of Mosiah. The choir sang "Come Unto Me," and Miss Marjorie Thomas sang, "Who Are These." At the end of the service Sister Amos Allen, the chorister, had the choir and congregation sing, "Think Thou of Me," dedicating it to Brother Martin.

In the evening Patriarch Ammon White occupied the pulpit. His text was, "Prove all things and hold fast that which is good." He preached a dynamic sermon, and gave urgent reasons why we should live up to the laws of the gospel.

Gudgell Park Church

Pastor Walter Chapman was the speaker, January 28, basing his sermon on faith, showing how obstacles may be removed from our lives by the exercise of faith.

Elder Albert Carmichael taught the adult class during the religio service.

Elder Carmichael also occupied the stand during the evening service, explaining by whom and in what manner church money is spent. Brother A. K. Dillee was a visitor at the February sacrament service, and made the opening remarks.

Elder Herbert Barto addressed the congregation, February 4, on the responsibilities of members of the church.

February 11, the Saints were interested in listening to Doctor A. L. Wilson, assistant pastor of the Watson Memorial Methodist Church. Music for this service was furnished by a male quartet from Walnut Park Church, singing at the opening and closing of the service.

P. A. Sherman was the speaker February 18. His subject was "The Task That Lies Before Us." Special numbers were rendered by the Clematis Chorus, directed by Sister John R. Lentell. Brother J. W. A. Bailey occupied the stand during the evening, talking on "Angelic Administrations."

Saints of this congregation are sorry to lose Elder Charles Pooler, assistant pastor, who has been in charge of the weekly prayer services. He is moving to Pleasant Hill, where he has obtained employment.

Santa Barbara, California

Growth in Interest and Activity

Since the first of the year, renewed energy and spirit have been apparent in this branch. There is a fine spirit of brotherly love and fellowship among the Saints.

On the first Sunday night of each month classes on parliamentary law and on painting are conducted by local men. In addition to the regular Sunday services, the branch meets once each month at the church, for the purpose of cleaning both the inside and outside of the building. Immediately following the "cleaning bee," a dinner is furnished by the women.

Santa Barbara Branch boasts a dramatic club, also the foundation of a good orchestra.

The new church school director is proving himself most able to fulfill his duties.

Everyone seems to be revived in interest and consecration and all are launching out with a determination to do more in a general way for the church.

North Platte, Nebraska

Improvement in Children's Division

A pleasing improvement in North Platte Branch has been made in the children's department. A plan was made to have the children meet separately Wednesday evenings during prayer service. The children responded well. Another evening class was instituted for the adult department, and as a result of the two classes, the children's department has increased from an attendance of ten to thirty members. Miss Clarice Connelly has worked hard with the children, and is to be commended for her progress.

This branch is small, but its members assemble regularly for prayer service, and three times weekly for the church school department.

Pastor E. R. Sivits preached recently on "Church Worship and Decorum."

The Saints sorrow at the passing in death of Sister Lillie May Reneau, wife of L. C. Reneau, of this branch, February 11. The funeral sermon was delivered by Elder O. L. D'Arcy, of Lincoln, and interment was at Lamoni, Iowa.

Brother D'Arcy stayed to preach an evening sermon, making a heart to heart talk in which both the speaker and Saints were manifestly blessed.

Buffalo, New York

Prospects Point Zionward

During the year, 1933, many things have happened to lift up and encourage the Saints living in this city. Prospects are pointing Zionward, and the people have a desire to be of service.

A few of the outstanding privileges the members have enjoyed in recent months are here listed; the privilege of partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper; the rendition of music at the late convention; the solo by Brother George Lloyd, "The Touch of His Hand in Mine"; a reading by Sister Florence Kennedy given on Armistice Sunday; a solo by Sister Clatworthy, "Singing of the Higher Home"; the story of Christ as it was told by Sister Weegar to the juniors; a priesthood meeting at the home of Elder P. L. Weegar; the missionary visit of Elder William I. Fligg; Brother Chamber's subject, "Enough and to Spare."

Saints passing through Buffalo are cordially invited to attend services at Midway and Hutchinson Avenue. On Sunday they enjoy a unified service (church school and sermon) from 9:45 to 11:45 a. m.; junior church at 10:45, and sacrament each first Sunday of the month at the same hour. Evening worship comes at seven o'clock and at eight the choir has a rehearsal. On the first Tuesday of the month the workers have a conference, on the second Tuesday the women's department meets, and Zion's Brotherhood holds a session on the last Tuesday of the month. Prayer service and study class come at eight o'clock on Wednesday evening, and quarterly business meeting the first Wednesday in December, March, June and September. Special programs along recreational and study lines are enjoyed on Friday evening. The Utopian Club (young people) meet on alternate Saturdays, and Orioles (girls' club) and Juveniles (boy's club) meet at the call of their directors. Doctor P. L. Weegar is pastor.

Lamoni Stake

Lamoni

The past six months have brought many edifying experiences to the Saints of Lamoni. The reunion held the last of July was characterized by a high degree of intelligence and spirituality. The elements of devotion and humility were markedly present, especially in the prayer and sacrament services. The gift of revelation was exercised through Apostles F. H. Edwards and J. F. Garver, President Elbert A. Smith, and Stake President Blair Jensen. The following ordinations were performed: Harry Lorance and Walter Johnson, of Lamoni, were ordained to the office of elder; Oran Barr, of Evergreen branch, and Fisher Carlile, of Lamoni, to the office of priest; Ammon Roberson and Blaine Williams, of Lamoni, to the office of deacon. The financial reports made at the reunion business meeting stated that all previously incurred indebtedness of the stake had been paid.

With the opening of Graceland College in September, Lamoni took on new life. Many young people from all parts of the United States joined local ranks to give and receive in the various church activities. The annual home-coming, held in October, was attended by a large and enthusiastic group of former students and friends of Graceland College. The fellowship service which was held early Sunday morning was inspirational and refreshing to those who came to refill their cups in the "storehouse of spiritual values" as the chapel has been called. Bishop G. L. DeLapp made an outstanding contribution as the speaker at the eleven o'clock service on the subject "The Place of Graceland College in the Program of the Church."

The Christmas season was ushered in by a musical concert given by the oratorio society to a large, appreciative audience. During the holidays two out-of-town speakers, Apostles D. T. Williams and M. A. McConley, brought stimulating messages to the Saints. On New Year's Eve a watch night service of music and prayer was participated in by the youth of Lamoni.

On Sunday morning January 28, Elder John F. Sheehy brought timely admonition to the members of the congregation.

The Lamoni stake conference, held February 4, was well attended. The young people of the stake met while the regular church school was in session and elected the following officers for the coming year: Blaine Williams, of Lamoni, president; John Spillman, Allendale, vice president, and Orletta Brown, Lamoni, secretary.

At the eleven o'clock service Bishop G. L. DeLapp delivered the sermon. The business session, held at two-thirty, was in charge of the stake presidency. The president, Blair Jensen, in an encouraging report of the year's work stated that ninety-nine members had been gained by baptism. The present officers of the stake were sustained for the coming year. The following delegates were chosen to represent the stake at General Conference: J. W. Barr, G. W. Blair, G. N. Briggs, Mable Carlile, N. Ray Carmichael, R. A. Cheville, C. F. Church, E. E. Closson, J. F. Garver, Mrs. J. F. Garver, Lena Graham, L. G. Holloway, Blair Jensen, L. G. Kelley, Joseph Lane, A. L. Loving, F. M. McDowell, Mrs. F. M. McDowell, Wilber Prall, J. D. Stead, D. T. Williams, Floyd Spillman, Allendale, Missouri, Hollis Yarrington, Creston, Iowa.

Since last General Conference our leaders in church work have been emphasizing throughout the stake the need of preparing for the next conference ahead of time instead of waiting until it is upon us.

A series of pre-conference evening services is being conducted by the members of the stake presidency. In January T. S. Williams delivered a series of sermons on "Latter Day Saint Fundamentals." This is being followed by a series of meetings centering around "Church History" in charge of Roy Cheville. In March Blair Jensen will conduct a series of meetings on the subject, "The Mountain-top Experience of Moses."

I do not want the applause of the people. They are stupid and dirty and do not work enough. They are content with their little cinema shows—they must not aspire to take part in the political life of the nation. They must be taken care of and their interests safeguarded, and their duty is to obey!—Mussolini to Clare Sheridan.

GREETINGS TO ALL SAINTS

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The series of special meetings conducted by Apostle Roy S. Budd at Central Church, which commenced Sunday night, February 18, are continuing with good interest. Owing to a slight illness, Brother Budd could not speak Sunday and Monday nights, but is now filling his appointment. Apostle F. Henry Edwards ably substituted for Brother Budd during his illness.

A stake business meeting will be held Monday evening, March 12, at Central Church, to elect delegates to General Conference.

The fifth annual drama tournament, sponsored by the O. B. K. organization, of Kansas City Stake, was held February 11 and 12, at Central Church. This year's participation differed from that of former contests in permitting any church, club, or organization to enter. The players appreciated the spirit of good fellowship present, and the directors were pleased with the results. A plan for making this a permanent event is under way.

Honor A ratings went to "Sabotage," presented by the Junior Drama Guild, under the direction of Harold Wardell; "The Lord's Prayer," by the Central players, directed by Wallace Burlington, and "The Twilight Saint," given by the Village Players, under the direction of Miss Pauline Siegfried.

Honor B rating was awarded to "The Gallows Gate," presented by Quindaro players, directed by Miss Alice Baker.

Honor C rating went to "Tuberoses," presented by Armourdale players, under the direction of Elder Eddie Baker.

Honorable mention was given to Olive Curtis Moses, Doris Faler, and Rebecca Dunn, for outstanding individual performance. Music for the two nights was in charge of the Grandview and Central orchestras.

Pastoral

To the Saints of the Rock Island District, Greetings: On account of quite a severe attack of illness, it has been thought advisable that I leave the field for a time. This is to inform the Saints that I shall not be available for ministerial work, until after General Conference. I trust that in all the branches the work shall be carried on with renewed activity, and that all will observe the general fast that has been called for March 4, in behalf of the coming conference. The men of the ministry are advised that the movement started last November relative to inactivity in the priesthood, will be continued until every man who holds a license has become constructively active, to the extent of his ability. The brothers are also asked to give careful reading to the quotation taken from Church History, volume 3, pages 325, 326, published on page 211 of the Saints' Herald for February 13, 1934; also Doctrine and Covenants 42:3; action of last General Conference; other conference actions, and statements of our church leaders from time to time, relative to the preaching of the fundamentals of our faith, as found in the standard books of the church. Men of the ministry should not preach their own individual theories. Safety is found in staying close to the fundamentals for which we have always stood as a church. Shall we not all work together towards the upbuilding of the kingdom in the earth, and the establishment of Zion?—E. R. Davis, district president, Lamoni, Iowa.

Marriage

ROTHROCK-COON.—Miss Kathryn Rothrock and Mr. Robert Lee Coon were united in marriage in the presence of the congregation and guests assembled for the occasion at Akron, Ohio. The bridegroom's stepfather, Elder E. G. Hammond, performed the ceremony, assisted by the local pastor, Elder E. M. Knight and Elder C. G. Minkler, of Lorraine, Ohio. The Bridal pair will reside at Akron.

GIBSON-GIBSON.—Sister Ann Gibson and Doctor Henry H. Gibson were happily united in marriage in a private ceremony conducted at the home of Elder E. G. Hammond in the presence of several guests February 10, 1934. The new couple will live in Akron, Ohio, where the doctor has been a recognized physician for the past two or three years.

Our Departed Ones

CHOWN.—Edward William R. Chown was born September 20, 1868, and passed from this life at Buffalo, New York, November 29, 1934. He became a member of the church January 7, 1904. He leaves to mourn, a wife and two sons. Brother Chown's death was very sudden and unexpected. He had a host of friends. Elder Earl V. Wagner, of Buffalo, New York, was in charge of the funeral services; burial was at Buffalo.

ATKINS.—Rebecca Deremer Atkins, beloved wife of Merritt Atkins was born in Greenwood, New York, August 7, 1852, and departed this life at her home, January 12, 1934. She is survived by her husband; two daughters, Mrs. Archie Stephens, of Greenwood, and Mrs. Nora Aman, of Rochester; a daughter-in-law; two sisters, Mrs. Cora Osmin and Mrs. Frank Updyke, of Greenwood; nine grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. Funeral services were held from the home and the church, Elder Percy L. Weegar, of Buffalo, New York, officiating. A dependable and trustworthy sister has gone to her reward. Burial was in Greenwood Cemetery.

ROYER.—Caroline Christensen Royer was born November 27, 1871, in Nodaway County, Missouri, where in her youth she united with the church, August 26, 1882. She passed away January 23, 1934, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. B. Benson, Kansas City, Missouri. She leaves one daughter, Mrs. E. B. Benson; two grandsons; two brothers, James and Alvin H., both of Denver, Colorado, and two sisters, Mrs. J. L. Casmaer and Mrs. T. L. Kiles, Kansas City, Missouri. Funeral services were held from Carson's Chapel, Independence, Patriarch U. W. Greene and Patriarch Ammon White officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence, Missouri.

GILCHRIST.—David Bertram Gilchrist was born August 4, 1905, and departed this life January 23, 1934, following an illness of several months. He is survived by his wife, Doris, and a sister, Margaret Seitz. He became a member of the church, July 5, 1927. Loving hands ministered to his comfort. Funeral services were held from the home of his sister, Elder Percy L. Weegar, assisted by Elder Earl V. Wagner, was in charge. Interment at Pine Hill Cemetery.

MUCEUS.—John O. Muceus was born in Porsgrund, Norway, January 26, 1907, the third son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Muceus. His father was then serving as missionary in that country. In 1916, the family came to the United States and located at Lamoni. After finishing high school, John attended one semester at Graceland and then took up civil engineering at Iowa State College. For almost four years he was employed by the Union Pacific Railroad at Caliente, Nevada. On May 30, 1930, he was married to Grace Lane in the historic Brick Church in Lamoni. To them was born on April 3, 1931, a son, John Arthur. While laboring on the State geodetic survey work at Corydon, Iowa, he took ill rather suddenly and died at Lamoni, January 27, 1934. He is survived by his wife and small son; his parents, of Ames, Iowa; his brothers, Francis, of Des Moines; Jack, of Leon; Henry, of Graceland College, and Baldwin, of Ames. John was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, June 17, 1917. To this faith he has been true both in profession and in daily living. He is widely remembered as an honest, friendly, and upright young man. Funeral services were held in the Coliseum at Lamoni, Roy Cheville preaching the sermon and T. S. Williams offering prayer. The Graceland A Cappella Chorus sang. The large congregation testified the community esteem of John Muceus.

MARSHALL.—Lucinda E. Jemison was born August 17, 1851, at Saint Charles, Missouri, while her parents were on a visit there from Nauvoo, Illinois. She was the eldest of eight children. Was baptized into the church when a girl, and remained true to the faith. She married William D. Marshall, February 1, 1878, and passed away the day after their fifty-eighth wedding anniversary. Forty-five years of their married life were spent in Osborne County, Kansas, the rest at Nauvoo. Her death occurred February 2, 1934. The funeral was held from the Saints' church at Nauvoo, February 5, Pastor James C. Page in charge. Interment was in the Nauvoo Cemetery. Sister Marshall was a patient sufferer, a splendid wife and neighbor, and was loved by all who knew her. She is survived by her husband; one sister, Mrs. Jane Grouch, of Gentry, Arkansas; two brothers, Joseph and Albert Jemison, the former of Nauvoo, the latter of Montrose, Iowa.

SALISBURY.—Maggie Salisbury, aged widow of Robert Salisbury, a grandson of Joseph Smith's sister, Katherine Salisbury, died January 29, 1934, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Henry DeHaven, northeast of Carthage, Illinois. She was born in 1867. The funeral was held from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Henry DeHaven, February 1, Elder James C. Page, of Nauvoo, conducting. Interment was in McKay Cemetery south of Burnside, Illinois. Besides Mrs. DeHaven the deceased is survived by another daughter, Mrs. Elmer Grotts.

WYATT.—Lewis Wyatt, son of Henry and Elizabeth Wyatt, was born on a farm two miles northeast of Lomax, Henderson County, Illinois, August 29, 1854, and departed this life at his home at Lomax, December 11, 1933. He married Mrs. Cornelia Clark in 1894, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Douglas, Wyoming, in 1923. Was faithful to the end. Leaves to mourn, his widow; four sons, Carl, Kenneth, Alva, and Emil, of Douglas, Wyoming, and four step-children. The funeral was held at the Christian Church at Lomax, December 13, Elder James C. Page, of Nauvoo, in charge. Interment was in Crane Cemetery near Lomax.

BROWN.—Mary Margaret Cunningham, daughter of William and Abigail Cunningham, was born December 15, 1855. Departed this life January 2, 1934. She married J. B. Henson in 1877, and seven children were born to them. Three children and her husband preceded her in death. She united with the church October 13, 1889, and lived a faithful Christian life. Was married to G. W. Brown in 1924, and leaves to mourn besides her husband four children: Shirley Henson, of Mendota, Illinois; D. H. Henson, of Flora, Illinois; Clara Halleman, near Orchardville, Illinois; and Ada McBride, near Xenia; one sister, two brothers, a host of other relatives, and friends. She was a good wife, a kind mother, and a thoughtful neighbor and friend. Funeral services were conducted at the home by Elder O. C. Henson. Interment was in Henson Cemetery.

BURKETT.—William Isaac Burkett, son of Joseph and Louvina Burkett, was born April 6, 1870; passed away at Saint Joseph's Hospital in Breese, Illinois, January 24, 1934. He married Parthelia Henson, November 25, 1891, and to them five children were born. She preceded him in death August 11, 1927, and he later married Bessie Westmoreland, of near Xenia. Although he was not a member of the church, the gospel has been his belief for years, and he helped in every way possible to carry it forward. His first wife was a member being a daughter of J. F. Henson, an old-time missionary; also his second wife is a member. Besides his wife he leaves to mourn the following sons: Ernest D., of Fairfield; Everett W., of Keenes; Earl, of Mount Vernon. One daughter, Olive Greenwalt, preceded him in death. There also survive, two step-daughters, Mrs. Gladys Burroughs and Mrs. Katie Burgess, of near Xenia; twenty-one grandchildren; one great-granddaughter; five step-grandchildren; one sister, Mrs. J. R. Warren, of Orchardville; two brothers, Levi, of Orchardville, and Joe, of Saint Louis, Missouri; other relatives and friends. Funeral services were conducted from Jacob's Chapel Church near Orchardville, by Elder O. C. Henson. Interment was in a cemetery nearby.

STEDMAN.—Adelia Loretta Cole was born at Cohocton, Steuben County, New York, October 11, 1842. Her mother passed away when Adelia was six months old. Her father, Nelson Cole, married again, but Adelia spent the early years of her life with a grandmother. In 1854, she moved with her father's family to Oshkosh, Wisconsin, and later to Minnesota. December 18, 1866, she was married to Eli Abbott Stedman. On October 4, 1869, they were baptized into the church by Elder William H. Kelley. To them were born one son and four daughters. May 10, 1892, the family moved to Lamoni, Iowa. Brother Stedman being in the ministry, wished to have his family with church people. He built the home where Sister Stedman spent over forty-one years. One daughter, Mrs. Loretta Brant, passed away January 9, 1932. Four children survive her: Squire Abbott Stedman, of Saint Louis; Mrs. Marie Lyons, of Kansas City; Doctor Ruby S. Cummins, of Chicago; and Mrs. George B. McClellan, of Chicago; nine grandchildren, eleven great-grandchildren, and many friends. Sister Stedman's death occurred February 1, at Lamoni, after an illness of one month. In spite of her advanced age, she never grew old in spirit, and until the last two weeks of her life, maintained an interest in everything about her. The funeral services were held at the East Side Church, T. S. Williams in charge, the sermon by Roy A. Chevillie. Interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery.

PERRY.—Joanna Harris was born May 18, 1863, at Wilkesville, Ohio; was baptized into the church April 4, 1885, at Vales Mills, Ohio, by L. R. Devore. June 2, 1891, she married Hiram Perry, but was early left a widow with four children. She worked and kept her children together and reared them in the faith. In them she instilled the love of the church, and as they grew up and married they, too, brought their children into the church. A few weeks prior to Sister Perry's death she had the privilege of seeing three grandchildren baptized. She did more to make the name Latter Day Saint honorable in her community than many who have contributed money to the church. By her precept and example she brought many souls into the church. She passed from this life December 17, 1933, at Creola, Ohio.

RENEAU.—Lillie May Newberry, daughter of Heber and Massie Newberry, was born December 2, 1875, at Wheeler's Grove, Pottawatomie County, Iowa, and departed this life February 11, 1934, at North Platte, Nebraska. She was baptized a member of the church by Alexander Smith, August 25, 1894. When eleven years old she moved with her parents to North Platte, Nebraska, where she spent the remainder of her life. She was married to Landon C. Reneau, at Hershey, Nebraska, December 2, 1896. To this union five children were born, Orley V. preceding her in death, May 22, 1921. Left to mourn her passing are her husband, two daughters, Jennie May Riegall and Margie B. Lanphere, both of Port Collins, Colorado; two sons, Floyd L., of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Arthur L., of Saint Louis, Missouri; seven grandchildren; four sisters, and two brothers. She was a devoted wife and mother, spending her life ministering to the needs of others. Funeral services were held at the Maloney Chapel, in charge of Elder O. L. D'Arcy. Interment was in Lamoni, Iowa, beside her son, Orley, who was drowned while attending school at Graceland College.

CROOKS.—Dorcas Nyswonger, daughter of James and Eliza Nyswonger, was born near the Graceland Church, Otter Creek Township, Lucas County, Iowa, September 10, 1856. Died at her home in the same community February 11, 1934, being the last member of a family of six children to pass on. She married Criswell Crooks, December 29, 1881, and they celebrated their golden wedding three years ago at the Graceland Church. July 4, 1896, she was baptized into the church, and never did she lose faith nor cease activity in the church of her choice. She leaves to mourn, her companion; four children, Reese, of Los Angeles, California; Ullie, Charles, and Mrs. Tom Cackler, and one adopted son, Raymond, all of near Norwood, Iowa; twelve grandchildren, and one great-grandchild. Her life was spent in this community, and almost everyone attended her funeral at the Graceland Church, February 13, the sermon being by Elder James Robinson, of Lacona, Iowa, assisted by Earl Lewis, of Lamoni. Interment was in Graceland Cemetery.

NEAL.—Elmira Smith was born February 13, 1866, at Grimes, Iowa. Married George H. Joy in 1886, who preceded her in death twenty years. She married C. E. Neal in 1917, and moved to Rich Hill, Missouri, where she lived until her death which occurred February 10, 1934. She joined the church in childhood. Leaves her husband; two step-sons, C. W. Joy, of Rich Hill, and J. F. Joy, of Chanute, Kansas; two grandchildren, and a host of friends who will miss the good counsel of a true friend.

FREERS.—Margaret Birdie, daughter of Harry and Mabel Freers, was born November 30, 1916. Passed from this life February 4, 1934, after many months of suffering. She united with the church in early youth and died in the hope of the gospel. Leaves to mourn, her mother, one brother, four sisters, and a daughter. Her father preceded her in death several years ago. The funeral was held in the Fairbanks Funeral Home, a large crowd attending. The sermon was by L. G. Holloway, and interment was in Greenwood Cemetery, Muscatine, Iowa.

WOODS.—Emma Elvina Woods was born July 3, 1871, at Quebec, Canada. Was baptized May 8, 1892, at Courtland, Illinois, by C. D. Carter. She died February 15, 1934, at Independence, Missouri, and interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery. Left to mourn are her husband; two step-children, Mrs. Myrtle Bishop and Mrs. Vina Bishop, of Independence; two sisters, Mrs. W. A. Harper, of Independence; Mrs. Carrie Wheeler, of New York; two brothers, W. H. Burhart, Dixon, Illinois, and Henry Burhart, Lees Summit, Missouri. Funeral services were conducted from the Liberty Street Church, by Ammon White and A. K. Dillee, February 18.

Conference Minutes

ARKANSAS-LOUISIANA.—District conference convened at Hot Springs, Arkansas, February 3, at 10 a. m., District President A. M. Baker in the chair. In the absence of the regular secretary, Seth P. Harbour, Sister Thelma Cook was chosen to act as secretary. Motion that Apostle Roy S. Budd be associated with the district presidency in presiding over the conference, prevailed. After the formal opening, the following men of the ministry reported: A. M. Baker, George Gordon, H. M. Daniel, Cies Carmack, R. S. Hardy, Robert F. Sanders, T. B. Sharp, Thomas W. Emde, William Murray, and R. I. Morrison. Statistical reports were received from Hot Springs, Fisher, and Bald Knob branches and from Hot Springs women's department. The conference approved the following names for ordination: Giles Turner, of Jonesboro, Arkansas, to the office of elder; D. A. Byrd, of Dunn, Louisiana, priest; Lee Tarbell, of Hot Springs, priest; Arthur Cook, of Hot Springs, teacher. District officers were elected as follows: District president, A. M. Baker; vice president, James M. Smith; church school director, Thomas W. Emde; chorister, A. E. Ziegenhorn, and secretary-treasurer, Seth P. Harbour. The following delegates to General Conference were elected: Judge F. O. White and wife, Apostle Roy S. Budd, S. S. Smith, A. M. Baker, and Sister J. R. Scruggs. A motion prevailed that as a district in harmony with Brother Budd's recommendation, we petition General Conference to include the groups of Saints along the western border of Arkansas (heretofore known as Eastern Oklahoma District) as a part of Arkansas and Louisiana District, and that this boundary line be established. February 3, 7 p. m. the conference met in preaching capacity, A. M. Baker in charge and the sermon by Apostle Roy S. Budd. Sunday school opened at 10 a. m., February 4, in charge of local authorities. Sacrament service followed, Judge F. O. White and A. M. Baker in charge. Brother Budd gave a splendid talk, "Why We Take the Sacrament." During this service Lee Tarbell was ordained a priest and Arthur Cook a teacher. Jesse Black preached at 3:30 p. m., and in the evening Brother Budd was again the speaker.

Strict self-control and economy of time are the secrets by which this high standard of efficiency is achieved. Mussolini does not, like our own Cabinet ministers, devote a great part of his attention to the sterilities of parliamentary questions and debate. He takes no part whatever in social life. He sleeps eight hours a night. For ten years he has not taken a drop of alcohol. He does not smoke. He regards alcohol and tobacco as entirely unsuitable for people who have hard mental work to do.

This opinion confirms my own experience and practice, for out of regard for the heavy responsibilities resting on me I have been for some time past a teetotaler and a nonsmoker.—Viscount Rothermore.

The Pigeonhole

Kindness Wins

This story goes back to the time when we were very small, but the principle of it still works now that we have grown big.

Mother had sent us to a more distant neighbor's place on an errand. Arriving there, a very large dog challenged our right to pass. In fact, his manner seemed to insist that we should go back where we came from. He was quite firm about it.

But the errand had to be done. Taking up a stick, we tried to frighten him, but he only became angrier and more dangerous than ever. Force having failed, we changed our tactics and tried kindness. Finally he decided that it would be all right for us to go, and even wagged his tail. Kindness won where force had failed miserably.

The Family Enlarged

The Pigeon family came whirling in from their winter vacation in the South the other day, borne by the gentle wind which is melting the snow left by our late blizzard. Pigeon was puffing with pride, but Pigeonette looked a bit tired, despite the fresh purple in her wings. We soon saw the reasons for these changes. There were two younger editions of themselves along with them.

"Twins," said Pigeon importantly. "Things are a little early in the South."

We could think of nothing to say, but whispered an aside to him: "Would you introduce me to them?"

"Oh, yes. My son, Poble. And my daughter, Sponsibility."

"What interesting names! How did you come to select them?"

"It was this way," Pigeon explained. "During our travels we have been attending the churches. And everywhere we have heard preachers talking about 'poblems and sponsibilities.' It appears that they are pretty serious things. Then these two little ones came along, and they seemed so much like what the preachers were talking about we decided to use those words for names."

At just that moment Poble backed into the electric fan that we have turned on the steam radiator, and it removed some of his tail feathers violently, while Sponsibility tried to drink some of the editorial ink, smearing it on her feathers. The irate parents took them brusquely out, scolding them.

The Last Refuge

Each day the British House of Commons opens with prayer to which only the members are admitted—a custom of long standing. On one occasion William E. Gladstone took his granddaughter over to the House and the little girl asked: "Why do they have prayers, grandpa?"

Gladstone replied: "The Speaker looks at the members and prays for the country."—Readers Digest.

Regulation

The Proletarian says: "It's funny how much kicking the capitalists are doing about the regulation of society by the New Deal. They are the two percent who have never obeyed any rules. The ninety-eight percent of us who do the toiling have been regulated all our lives and won't mind. It's about time to put a fence around these wealthy independents and treat them like the rest of us."

An Oblation for the Conference

"Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness; even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day . . . Remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2.

The special day of fasting and prayer appointed for the church is now past, but the month of prayer continues. If the whole church approaches the General Conference in a spirit of prayer and consecration, we may expect a greater blessing and more good to be accomplished by it.

It appears from the Scripture quoted above, and from other Scriptures, that while the oblation of gifts of money is required for the support of the church, it is not the only oblation that is required of us. Such other things as a humble heart, a contrite spirit, devotion, prayer, and righteousness are also required.

There are special reasons why we should now be preparing ourselves to make such a complete offering at the General Conference. We need to be reconciled with God, to be forgiven of our sins, to be brought once more into his presence. We need light to guide us through the perplexities and uncertainties of the immediate future. We need help and strength for the difficult task of freeing the church from the burdens that hamper its movements and prevent it from carrying on its mission of spreading the gospel. We need a spirit of consecration to our duty. We need the will to obey the law, that the church may go forward. For all of these, the fullest of oblations is required.

Impoverished by nearly five years of the depression, harried with problems of existence, our people at this time are poorly qualified to give the money outright which is necessary to liquidate the heavy financial burdens of the church. But we can honorably do our best, and patiently work for the time when the return of better conditions will permit us to satisfy every item of debt that is charged against us. And when that time comes our hands will be freed to go about the building of that Zion which is to be our refuge from the world. For the present, we must pray and sacrifice, and give our oblations of life and means to the Lord.

Blue Pencil Notes

AT THE CONFERENCE of 1930 when the tables were all spread for the communion service, to the consternation of the deacons ten sparrows (not quite a full quorum) came down from the great dome of the Auditorium and calmly drank out of the wine glasses, lifting their heads at each sip. Whether or not they were better sparrows afterward we do not know. Not all Latter Day Saints were.

AT the Conference of 1932 the dove of peace came to the closing services and has continued with us pretty well during the years since that date. We hope for its friendly presence at our coming conference.

A WORLD in turmoil admonishes us to draw together in peace. Surely the prophet Joseph was one of the major prophets of all time. His was no idle message that all "things should be in commotion" and that war should be "poured out upon all nations" until the judgments decreed has made a "full end of all nations."

*THE invitations are written, sealed, and delivered:
Let all the nations come up to Armageddon.
Stalin, Mussolini, Hitler, Dollfuss—
The dictators sharpen and burnish their swords.
Britain, France, America count their ships and their men.
Over the rim of the East come the little brown men,
Armed, and laughing at death and at covenants.
China stirs in her sleep; India in her rags and jewels.
The dark races thrill; the heathen are awakened.
Scourged through new inquisitions and new programs.
The Jew turns back to rebuild Jerusalem.
Communists, Facists, Nazis, Socialists, Monarchists, Anarchists,
Capitalists, Laborites set neighbor against neighbor.
Let the sky darken with planes! the land tremble with tanks!
Lash the sea with navies! harrow the fields with shrapnell!
Silence Vesuvius with guns! Loose the poison vapors of hell!
. . . . And when famine and plague and bankruptcy and despair
Follow in the wake of war, and nations are broken and hopeless—
Then may the peaceful message of Christ
Find tongues to proclaim it and ears to hear it—
And he shall become "the desire of all nations."*

New Quarterlies Ready

The new quarterlies will be ready for distribution to the church schools as soon as the orders can come in after the appearance of this notice.

It would be best if all quarterlies for each school could be ordered by one person, probably the secretary. When several are ordering for different departments of the school and at different times, duplications and difficulties occur.

Here are the new numbers to order for each department:

(These numbers apply only to the quarterlies for April, May, June.)

- Q-123. Kindergarten.
- Q-213. Primary.
- Q-313. Junior.
- Q-413. Intermediate.
- Q-513. Senior.
- Q-643. Older Young People.
- Q-723. Adult.

The rush of General Conference will soon be here, as well as the quarterly rush. It is to the advantage of the schools to order early.

Missionary Work at the Auditorium

On last New Year's Day brethren J. W. A. Bailey, S. S. Smith, and C. J. Hunt, who have been faithfully serving in the Guide's Office at the Auditorium, opened a new page in their book for recording the names of tourists and visitors. From June 19 to the close of the year 1933 a total of 4,851 had registered, while other hundreds who did not register were also good and attentive listeners to the message of the restored gospel. Many proved to be expert questioners as well as respectful listeners. Should the Century of Progress Fair at Chicago be continued this year, the Auditorium will receive its share of tourists passing through Kansas City and Independence.

As a church we are greatly interested in our three great points of historic interest: Kirtland, Nauvoo,

Men You Ought to Know

G. L. DELAPP
Counselor to the Presiding Bishop

When the depression has passed into history and the story of the triumphant emergence of the church from this strenuous period of its existence has been told, the name of Brother DeLapp will be recorded among those who performed a difficult and laborious duty to bring it through. He is the "contact man" who oversees correspondence, meets the public, handles important telephone calls, and in general keeps the financial machinery of the church in operating order. To date he has done this heavy work alone, assisted by frequent conferences with Brother Curry. It is hoped that he will soon have the active assistance of N. Ray Carmichael, another counselor recently appointed. (See Herald for December 19, 1933.)

and Independence. Our brethren of the Guide's Office believe that they should have their powers of doing good enhanced by some much needed inexpensive equipment, especially for a room where stereopticon slides may be shown and lectures given on American archaeology, church history, and related subjects. Such lectures on Sunday afternoons would reach many people and do much good.

The Guide's Office has made many contacts which they feel should be followed up with letters and tracts. They say that visitors speak highly of the radio programs over KMBC.

Gifts of money, material, and labor have made possible some needed improvements about the foyer, which have been greatly appreciated by the guides.

Be there with a Daily Herald. Only 50 cents until March 23. Save 15 cents by ordering early.

ACROSS THE DESK

By F. M. S.

— Informal Chats From the Office of the President —

PRESIDENT
FREDERICK M. SMITH

IT IS always good to know that one is being remembered in the prayers of the Saints, for the tasks to be carried in this work of ours are greater than could be carried in human strength alone, so we appreciate sentiments like the following which came to us in a Christmas greeting from Brother and Sister C. A. Edstrom:

"Words but feebly express the innermost thoughts of the heart. As God has so graciously blessed you in the past, may He even more graciously bless you in the future. That you may be a boon to the weary; a tower of strength to the tried; a fountain of wisdom to the youth and the aged; a leader and a man of God to all is the prayer of your friends."

BIRCH WHITING, one of our energetic and wise district presidents, sends in his annual report and together with it comments on the program of the branch where he is actively in charge. He expresses appreciation of the good support given by the branch in their building program, but he gives utterance to a thought which has often been in our minds relative to every branch having an ideal or goal toward which to work and the disposition at times to be contented with having that goal too near. Brother Whiting says:

"But as we near the completion of our present plans I am concerned because of an attitude by some to feel that our job is done, our goal reached, but as I see it our building program in a large measure has failed unless it shall provide a missionary center. If we do not use it in an enlarged and intensified missionary program to bless others, then our endeavors have become selfish and not worth while. I like to see a group of people lose themselves for a time in some worth-while endeavor, but when it is finished I want to see them come hungering for missionary work and with a passion for the souls of men."

We join Brother Whiting in hoping that the branch will see a larger and more attractive goal in developing this passion for the souls of men that will become the dynamic for a real worth-while missionary effort with the branch as the center. This in our opinion is one of the necessities for future missionary work or endeavor which will be forced upon us by changing conditions.

FROM A. B. Kirkendall, pastor of the Creola, Ohio, Branch, we have received copy of a report which as pastor he made to his branch and posted on the bulletin board. We note the motto of the branch is, "An Asset, not a Liability." This ought to be the ambition of every earnest Latter Day Saint.

We note that in an enrollment on January 1, 1933, of fifty-three, there has been an increase by baptism of thirteen with loss by death of two, which indicates a substantial gain of a little better than twenty percent, being a very good showing indeed. He reports thirty-eight active members and these thirty-eight contributed to the cost of running the branch, their share of the district work, and tithes and special offerings sent to the general church, more than $300, which again is a pretty good showing.

We congratulate the Saints of Creola and Brother Kirkendall and bid them Godspeed and express the hope that the year 1934 might even see a better record made.

THE FREQUENCY with which we receive letters presenting and discussing situations of difficulty and trouble in branches and districts might lead one to believe that at times the work is going very much awry, were the fact to be overlooked that persons are more likely to write and seek counsel in times of trouble than to pass on the more gladly received news of successes. And this was evidently in the mind of Brother Floyd Rockwell, of Dayton, Ohio, when he wrote us wondering how many of the district and branch officers "just as readily share our joys as our sorrows." And then he goes on to tell that the past year has been one of the best in his experience as a representative of the church and that the Southern Ohio District has enjoyed a goodly portion of Divine favor. He adds that they have every reason to believe that 1934 has dawned upon brighter prospects. He rejoices in the increased opportunities for service coming to him personally and officially, and then he adds:

"Dayton Branch began this year by pledging itself to a missionary program, and last Sunday we had thirty visitors present. If we can maintain our present fervor, I shall not be surprised if we have some important news to report before the end of 1934. We are hoping and praying that this may be a banner year for the whole church and that the riches of Divine Grace which we have received so abundantly in 1933, shall be greatly multiplied in the present year. May I also voice the hope that the church shall increase its capacity to use the blessing of Divine endowment to the glory of God in the salvation of many souls."

We are very much pleased to see the alertness of this branch and trust under Brother Rockwell's leadership there will be a report at the end of the year 1934 of which they will have reason to be proud. The attitude of this branch is indicative of the reawakening throughout the whole church.

BROTHER W. E. Nichols, who has always been an interested reader of the Herald, recently wrote a personal letter to me and said:

"We have enjoyed the Herald immensely these last few months and note the current of thought and unity of purpose that is occupying the hearts of our people; and one has only to read between the lines to note the trend of mind that indicates a turning of our people again to channels that will draw them closer to God and the great plan he sent us through the blessed messenger, the Christ. All of the articles in the Herald are of a high order and laden with such reasonable lines of argument that it seems too bad that all thinking men and women of the world cannot have the benefit of our church papers with all their wonderful logic."

We are always glad to know our friends appreciate the efforts the editors are putting forth to keep the quality of the Herald high.

WE CANNOT but feel that the readers of the Herald throughout the entire world are interested in conditions to be found in the regions round about. It is therefore probable that our readers will find interest in some of the figures contained in the annual report of Miss Margaret M. Crowe, registrar of vital statistics for the city of Kansas City. Miss Crowe represents the health department. This report shows that in 1924 the birth rate for Kansas City was 19.8 per 1,000 population. There has been a gradual decline in this rate since that time, and in 1933 it had dropped to 12.94 per 1,000 population.

For the same period there has been little fluctuation in the death rate, which in 1924 was 13.39 per 1,000 population and in 1933, 12.26. These last figures indicate that the birth and death rates are practically at an equilibrium. In other words the natural increase is barely being maintained.

The total births for 1933 were 5,484, which is 406 less than in 1932. Of the total number of births, 2,794 were males and 2,690 females, or 104 more males than females.

A district president, one who was sometime ago released from active work, but who, despite his disadvantages, is carrying on as best he can, wrote of having preached in two of the places in his district and expressed the hope that the church would be able to do something for these places by and by. Then he adds significantly:

"In the days of prosperity the General Church was hindered by a lack of vision on the part of some. I hope prosperity and vision will return. And I hope sincerely that in that vision there will be no craze with regard to the age of the person or persons which shall be thought to be the ones needed. If I may, I would mention one of the qualities needed everywhere, namely, Spiritual Maturity."

I lately received a letter from Brother Fred A. Peterson, known to many of the Saints around Independence, to whom I had written at the suggestion of one of our old-time missionaries, as Brother Fred at the present is one of the scattered Saints. After expressing appreciation for having heard from Brother Bullard and myself, Brother Peterson says:

"I have thought so many times since hearing from you and Brother Bullard what a noble work it would be if the older missionaries, who are too old to take the mission field, would write letters to the Saints who are isolated, in fact to all who have drifted away from the church and have taken up with worldly things, for we have too many such cases."

We are passing this suggestion of Brother Peterson on for what it may be worth and also to encourage those who might feel disposed to write to Saints and acquaintances who have at one time been active but who from one cause or another are drifting.

E. F. ROBERTSON writes of the contribution of Sister Tainter of Dixfield to the needed improvement on the Maine reunion grounds. Sister Tainter's ever present generosity and her wisdom in giving have been matters of encouragement to the Saints of Maine. Sister Tainter always manifests a splendid spirit of cooperative helpfulness and has a kindness of attitude which will make her long remembered and deeply loved by the Saints among whom she labors and lives.

In this same letter Brother Robertson states that a start toward an auditorium has been made by logs being furnished by a brother; and by cooperation of effort the first section of the building has been framed and they expect to have the rest of it framed up before the next reunion.

We notice that the Saints in Maine accomplish about what they set out to do.

NEWS BRIEFS

Bay Cities Welcome Apostle John W. Rushton

A warm welcome awaited Apostle John W. Rushton when he visited the Bay Cities, San Francisco, Berkeley, and Oakland, California, in February.

Park-Presidio Church held its seventh anniversary and reception for Apostle Rushton in the form of a banquet February 15, Danvers Street and Berkeley churches being well represented as was also the Park-Presidio Kiwanis Club of which Brother Rushton is a member.

East Bay congregation, Berkeley, also had a reception in honor of the apostle who a few months ago returned from his European mission, and he was in charge of the March 4, sacrament meeting there.

Drive Long Distance to Worship With Saints

Brother and Sister Clark T. Hartman and daughter, of Hummelstown, Pennsylvania, often drive the distance of ninety miles between Hummelstown and Bloomsburg, to worship God with his children. Such is the spirit of the latter-day cause, and Pennsylvania members are thankful for it.

Notes From Here and There

"Let nothing separate you from the love of God and from each other" is the slogan of Birmingham, England Saints.

World conditions point to Zion as a real necessity, think Arkansas members.

The young people of Jay, Florida, group, are much interested in local work. They share church school responsibilities, and take charge of the entire service every fourth Sunday. Their class is crowded with nonmembers.

Wray, Colorado, Saints appreciate the whole-hearted cooperation which friends and townspeople give them in local work.

Ten people were baptized into Lock Number Four Branch, at Charleroi, Pennsylvania, in December.

Five young men were ordained to offices in the priesthood at the annual conference of Des Moines District, held February, 7 to 11, in an impressive and inspiring service.

Sister Martha E. Ledsworth Celebrates Ninetieth Birthday

A birthday party commemorated the ninetieth birthday of Sister Martha E. Ledsworth, of Port Hope, Michigan, February 19. Sister Ledsworth is the widow of Enoch Ledsworth who passed away in 1918, since which time she has made her home with her daughter, Emma J. Pease, of Port Hope. She was baptized a member of the church in 1878, by Elder J. J. Cornish. Though advanced in years she is active and in good health.

Better English Class for Cleveland Members

Students of Cleveland congregation began sessions of a Better English Class January 23, and are mastering the principles of grammar. During cold weather this group is meeting weekly in the homes of its members, and has good attendance.

Prophecy Fulfilled in Northwest Territory

Prophecies given at the Northwest Reunion to Portland District, last summer, are fast being fulfilled. The Saints are growing in numbers. Nineteen have recently been added to the church in that district, and still the missionary work goes forward.

Marcus H. Cook held meetings at Salem, Oregon, in a home, and eleven people asked for baptism. The district president plans to organize a mission there as soon as possible.

The cause is progressing at Sherwood, Oregon, where Harold I. Velt has been conducting meetings. This mission has gained four members.

Portland's priesthood and musicians are contributing much to the missionary spirit of the district.

Elder George Njeim at Ottawa, Ontario

Saints of Ottawa feel that the Spirit has been working to great ends among them and that they have been wonderfully blessed by the help of Elder George Njeim who held meetings there from November until February. He discoursed on the principles of the gospel, on Zion, the Book of Mormon; showed picture slides of Palestine and Jerusalem, and held cottage meetings.

Youth's Forum

Ideas, Discussion and News for the Young People of the Church

Young People's Organizations and Activities Growing in Interest and Strength Many Types to Choose From

When branch and district leaders are considering what type of young people's organization is best suited to their needs there are several kinds of organization and plans at work in the church from which they can choose.

In the news columns of the Herald and in our Youth's Forum department we have had many accounts of the activities that have been carried on. Some young people's leaders regularly scan the news for suggestions, and some keep indexed files of the accounts of what others have done.

The significant fact is that everywhere the young people in greatly increasing numbers are participating in the work of the church, contributing to its support, and furnishing new leaders for the ranks. So long as this purpose is accomplished, with benefit to the church and the young people, it matters little what the name of the organization is that manages it.

Various organizations are functioning. In general it may be said that activity is more important than organization. An organization without a program will die for lack of interest. A program, with an active leader behind it, will gradually develop all the organization that it needs. The important thing is to know what you want to do. And then, of course, to start doing it and keep doing it.

We are inviting our young people's leaders to write us about their organizations, programs, and activities. As far as possible, depending on the response received from them, we shall be glad to publish accounts of the different plans.

The O. B. K. organization of Kansas City Stake is a closely integrated organization within the regular church school. It has grown stronger each year because of its rich and well planned program. The O. T. Z organization of Far West Stake, having to reach branches more widely separated, has likewise performed a splendid service because of its program. In Independence the young people remain definitely a part of the Young People's Division, operating without any special name, but under the direction of a leader and expressing their desires through an elected council. In Lamoni the young people find ample opportunity for service by participating in regular church activities, and again a good full program is provided. Our news reports indicate that other branch and district organizations are very active. The most recent arrival in the field of young people's organization is the Christian Legion, which is sponsored by Apostle D. T. Williams.

We solicit letters from our young leaders about their organization, programs and activities, and will use as many letters as we can without too much duplication of material.

Christian Legion of Detroit District Declares Against War

Organize at Pontiac, Michigan

Pontiac, Michigan, Sunday, February 25.—The growing sentiment of church young people against war was brought to a head in a resolution presented here by Neil McLeod, and adopted by the Christian Legion, Detroit District Division, and organization of young people being developed under the leadership of Apostle D. T. Williams, and others. The resolution was as follows:

"We, the young people of the Detroit District of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints assembled at Pontiac, Michigan, in convention this day of February 25, 1934, do look with disfavor upon the involuntary participation of or conscription for military, naval, or air forces of our membership.

"The young people of the State of Michigan request that the General Church in the coming General Conference adopt a resolution requesting the Federal Government to absolve the membership of this church from involuntary conscription for or participation in naval, military, or air forces; except in time of invasion of the borders of the several United States by alien forces."

A copy of this resolution will be sent to the state convention of young people which will meet at Saginaw, March 24 and 25, with the hope expressed that it may be ratified and sent from there, re-drafted if necessary, to the General Conference meeting in Independence, April 6 to 15.

At the afternoon organization meeting the following officers were elected:

Divisional Commander, Lloyd Heaviland, Detroit, Central; secretary, Zola McNamara, Flint; treasurer, Roland Provost, Flint; Director of Solicitation, Clifford Bennard, Pontiac; Director of Socialization, Cecil Crooker, Detroit, East Side; Director of Publicity, Harry-ette Schaar, Lake Orion.

Friends are friends, be they ever so obscure, and names are only names. Being a great movie star for a few dazzling years doesn't make a woman interesting. Writing a salty, bitter, clever book doesn't give a man any real right to sit at your table with those you love. The human heart can only hold a certain number of close friends. Their value has nothing to do with the social register or "Who's Who." If a woman cannot find these close to home, she will never find them anywhere.—Kathleen Norris.

A New Organization of Young People

By D. T. Williams

A NEW MOVEMENT is on foot in the States of Michigan and Indiana and the Province of Ontario. The young people of this regional territory are arising to a vital interest in the things of the kingdom of God. The fact that the church is in debt has given a challenge to them. Among themselves, and to others, they are saying: "Something must be done about this." And are they doing it? We shall see.

At a young people's meeting held one night at Bentley, Michigan, the idea that was to give birth to this new endeavor was conceived. "Why not harness the tremendous power tied up in the lives of the hundreds of young folk composing the coming generation of the church to a big and useful task?" Yes, why not? Could it be done? The answer seemed to be: "It is worth the trying."

At Saginaw, Michigan, a few weeks later certain suggestions were made to a large group meeting in the Masonic Temple. Objectives of importance were proposed and considered but the matter of a decision as to whether they should organize was delayed until they should find out how the proposal would be accepted at headquarters and in the second place how many would be willing to enter into such an organization if instituted.

Accordingly a representative visited the President of the church to get his reaction to such a program. After a two hour and a half conference on the matters suggested the consent of headquarters was granted. With a program of vigor the movement began to take shape. Hundreds of young people and others interested in the project signed their names to the proposal that such an organization be formed. In fact, in every congregation where the matter was suggested it was accepted with enthusiasm. Every night where the new institution was set up as a possible means of freeing the church from debt, by scores, and in the larger congregations by hundreds, hands were raised to support the movement and demand that something be done.

A few who sit by and do not get out among the people of the church may be of the honest opinion that the time has not come to set in operation the forces of the church to free her from the bondage under which she has long been laboring. However, the unstinted enthusiasm with which this movement has been received by the old as well as the young indicates quite clearly how the body of the church feels in this connection.

BUT the proposed institution is not a temporary matter as may be supposed if nothing more is said of its objectives. When once the negative task of paying off the church debt is achieved there will lie before such an association more positive challenge of moving on toward a redeemed Zion. The conclusion is reached by those sponsoring this endeavor that if an army of twenty thousand young people can organize themselves for the performance of a task of such magnitude as is suggested above they will thereby train themselves for the larger tasks implied in our zionic philosophy. If they find the strength to liberate the church from the bondage of debt they will likewise find the courage to move on to the more affirmative responsibility of building the kingdom of God. If this proves to be right, perhaps our debt will in the end turn out to be a God-send from the viewpoint of the discipline it affords rather than a crushing burden resulting from, what some gladly designate, our folly.

The atmosphere of the young people's conferences and conventions which the writer has met with is an outstanding challenge to the church and those responsible for its forward movement. The church of tomorrow is not wanting the adults of today to amuse them. I have said it before and I will say it again: "Our young people do not want us to furnish them with playthings; they are past the stage where they want an all-day-sucker in one hand, a rattle in the other and a pacifier between their lips." What this army wants is a real task, a job that will challenge the best there is in them. Give them that kind of a job, set before them a big objective and they will show the church that they can make their own fun out of making an important contribution, along with those of us who are older, to the upbuilding of the great cause (Continued on page 306)

The Savings of a Lifetime

We were talking of a man we all knew, and someone remarked, in the customary tones of horror, that the savings of his lifetime had all been swept away. Perhaps the lady who answered back had heard those words once too often. She said sharply, "You mean he lost his money."

The mourner nodded. "That's what I said."

"No," said the lady, "you didn't say that. You told us that the savings of his lifetime were gone, which is not true. He has a mind stored full of knowledge and experience. He has made large investments in charities and educations for other people—investments which haven't depreciated and are yielding a return to society today. He's saved his simple habits and his pleasure in living. You don't have to worry about him. Worry about yourself if the savings of your lifetime are all going to be the kind that can be swept away in a depression."
—Margaret Culkin Banning, in Saturday Evening Post. (Quoted by Readers' Digest.)

A Supernatural Experience

It was Saturday, my free day, usually spent in my garden in Kent. Not that I enjoyed gardening, but it was good exercise and kept me from the race-course, where I had spent many more exciting and expensive holidays.

I worked on, thinking of nothing in particular. Suddenly a strange experience came to me. There seemed to be a faint electrical crackling in the clear air about me. There was positively nobody else in the garden, but someone or something spoke to me: a voice that was audible and yet (paradoxically enough) quite soundless. That seems the only way to express what I shall always believe was a supernatural experience.

I felt a message impinge on my brain from the air. It alighted softly like the caress of a leaf or the touch of a gentle zephyr. It was accompanied by a sense of exaltation both pleasurable and unforgettable.

As to the message, there was nothing particularly striking about it, though when translated into action it produced phenomenal results. At this stage I do not clearly remember the exact phrase that came. . . . Apparently a good idea, but nothing to differentiate it from others that have come to me and thousands of other people. Only—that queer feeling of its being implanted from without, perhaps for some specific purpose. And the pleasurable physical and spiritual reaction which attended it.—A. J. Russell, For Sinners Only.

I'll be Satisfied

By Ruby Stedman Cummins

If I may grasp the hand of someone,
Who knows not the way of Love;
If I may speak a word to cheer
The lonely heart of him;
If I may send him on his way,
Rejoicing as he goes—
Then I'll be satisfied.

If I may bow beneath my load,
That He may lift me up;
If I may smile and drink again
The ofttime bitter cup;
If I may look across the years
And not be crushed thereby—
Then I'll be satisfied.

If I may know again the joy
Of just one day long gone;
If I may taste again the bliss
Of looking in your eyes;
If I may sit beside the brook
And feel you're there with me—
Then I'll be satisfied.

If I may walk with you once more
The old familiar ways;
If I may just raise up the lid
Of Memory's Jeweled Box
And find therein the treasures rare
Which we have put away—
Then I'll be satisfied.

The Revolt of Youth

The revolt of modern youth is involuntary and inevitable because it is in obedience to laws more compelling than any man-made social and economic laws. What does the adventurous and expanding consciousness of this new age encounter? A religion which is either too anæmic or too archaic to attract it, a home-life so hide-bound as to foster only the idea of escape, an educational system which is militaristic and purely rationalistic, greatly concerned with stuffing the mind, and concerned almost not at all with the disciplining of the emotions, the developing of the creative imagination, and the facilitation of self-expression. Now the theater happens to be the only remaining outstanding symbol of the quest for beauty and that questioning of life to which elsewhere youth finds but dusty answers or none at all: this is the true reason for its attraction. Account for it as one may on the score of emotional unrest, the love of excitement, or the desire to be known and admired, behind and beneath all is the Self, seeking self-dramatization for the sake of self-realization.—Claude Bragdon, in The New Image.

Nothing will be mended by complaints.—Johnson.

Wanted: Social Morality!

I am of the opinion that we are suffering not so much from a breakdown of the virtues of rugged individualism as from a failure of these virtues to function in the new and complex world created by scientific and mechanical invention. The way out is not by an intensification of the individual morality, which has already proved helpless to prevent or to extricate us from ruin, but by the cultivation of a social morality commensurate with the problems and evils that arise from the multitude of unfamiliar and baffling human relations into which we have been plunged. We are clinging to a delusion when we long wistfully for Ben Franklin to lead us from our wilderness.—Charles H. Heimath, in The Christian Century.

Great People

Between persons of equal income there is no social distinction except the distinction of merit. Money is nothing; character, conduct, and capacity are everything. Instead of all the workers being leveled down to low wage standards, and all the rich leveled up to fashionable income standards, everybody under a system of equal incomes would find her or his own natural level.

There would be great people and ordinary people and little people; but the great would always be those who had done great things, and never the idiots whose mothers had spoiled them and whose fathers had left them £100,000 a year; and the little would be persons of small minds and mean characters, and not poor persons who had never had a chance.—Bernard Shaw.

A Creed

There is a destiny that makes us brothers:

None goes his way alone:
All that we send into the lives of others
Comes back into our own.

I care not what his temples or his creeds,
One thing holds firm and fast—
That into his fateful heap of days and deeds

The soul of a man is cast.

—Edwin Markham.

The only use and justification of sacrifice is that it shall accomplish that which without it could not be accomplished, that it shall diminish the sum-total of suffering and even change it to its opposite.—Claude Bragdon, in The New Image.

We Mark Time

On the Road to the Kingdom

By M. J. CROWLEY

THE CATAclysmic years of our Lord 1929 to 1933 have passed into the great eternal discard, leaving memories not all of which are pleasant; for years, like men, are remembered for the contribution they make.

These years have contributed much that makes for human progress, tearing down the gossamer structure of false prosperity, puncturing the inflated human ego and reestablishing once more the basic truth that man must earn his bread by the sweat of his face.

Money mad men have placed their anathema upon them but will live to bless their memory. Others, equally mad but less courageous, have been sifted out that the race through attrition may develop timber from which shall come men qualified to stand in the kingdom of heaven. The years are building for God.

The self-sufficient ego has lost its poise, and fear has attacked the heart of the self-appointed great. No flesh can glory in His presence. The world in its rush for wealth forgot that in Him we move and live and have our being, and that without Him we can do nothing. Shattered fortunes and broken hearts are the price paid for that forgetfulness.

"Seek ye first to establish the kingdom of God," etc. We sought first to establish our own estate, only to have our house of cards tumble about our ears.

Saints, the future, the same as the past, belongs to God. Shall we again trail our privileges in the dust as we seek anew this world's goods, or shall we polish our armor and by an intensified activity reclaim some of that which we have lost? "Zion the Beautiful beckons us on."

"A city set upon a hill cannot be hid." World ignorance of our work bespeaks the nonexistence of such a city. One hundred years and an organization of dreamers. I wonder if the salt has lost its savor, and in the next war will it be trampled underfoot like cannon fodder? Is there no blood on the lintel of the door to ward off such a disaster? Is the light of the world but a flash in the pan that splutters for a moment then leaves all in darkness? Pertinent questions!

Today the man with a steady position who feels secure in his financial status is prone to look upon the servant of Christ with his message of warning as a calamity howler. Such was the case in olden times: "Prophecy unto us good things." "Away with him."

Individually we may be living in harmony with the law of God but collectively we do not exist. We have the hill but we haven't the city because we haven't the will.

We must start from where we are with what we have and go on to perfection. A bad tree cannot bring forth good fruit, neither can a rotten system produce a perfect man. The perfect order and the perfect man will arrive at the same place at the same time. One cannot exist without the other. Jesus was a perfect man but the imperfect order crucified him. Heaven has a perfect order but the man of sin was cast out. When Enoch and his order arrived they were caught up.

"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world as a witness." A witness to what? It is now preached in nearly all the world and what have we witnessed? A world rapidly miring in war, poverty and crime.

We must first set up the witness Zion the beautiful, a city set upon a hill, a people salvaged (redeemed) from a chaos of systems and beliefs, an order that will prove our perpetual claim that the gospel of Christ is the panacea for the ills of mankind. When that witness is set up and the truth of it carried to the world, then shall the end come. We must gather or die.

The sins of Sodom and Gomorrah—prosperity, idleness and their concomitants—have swept over us. Graft is a national nightmare and the marriage covenant but a week-end gesture. Are we partakers of these things? I wonder.

The gospel of "eat, drink and be merry" has its witness well established: depression, poverty, inequality, war and all the hideousness of sin in its many forms, and we trudge deep in this misery looking for happiness.

On our right are the promises of God, on our left the abundance of the earth; yet we go about with empty stomachs and heavy hearts and like the world afraid of the things that are coming upon the earth.

"That which is governed by law is also preserved by law and perfected and sanctified by the same." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8.) It therefore follows that we in our scattered condition are not governed by law, neither can we be preserved from the ills of the world, (Continued on page 306)

The Seventh Gift of the Gospel

By Inez Kinney

Personally, there has been the conviction for some time, that this church was foregoing some rich spiritual experiences in not stressing and more actively believing in the promises concerning the visiting of angels and ministering spirits. This tremendous and extremely desirable contact with the spirit world was comparatively common during the days of the prophets and down to the time of the departure of authority, or of the church into the "wilderness." Scarcely should it be necessary to repeat the instances of the visiting of angels and ministering spirits in the days of the Old and New Testament Scriptures, for those stories are household tales. Who among old and young has not thrilled with the story of the desperate plight of Hagar, and how "the angel of the Lord found her by a fountain," or "What aileth thee Hagar? Fear not, for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is." Or the scene in the plains of Mamre—Abraham sitting at the door of his tent "in the heat of the day," Sarah busy about her tasks but coming to the door of the tent to listen and to wonder when Abraham had hurried out to meet the three men whom he recognized as heavenly personages. Who has not relived the experience of the young man Moses as he tended the flocks of Jethro, his father-in-law? His mother and amaze as he beheld the "burning bush" that did not really burn, and listened to the voice of the angel who gave him such a huge commission. Or who has not caught a picture of the prophet Elijah as he slept under the juniper tree in the wilderness: "And behold, the angel of the Lord touched him and said unto him, Arise and eat." What woman has not tried to sense the tremendous experience of the wife of Manoah, or of Zacharias and Elizabeth: of Mary the mother of Jesus: or of Mary Madgalene when the angel said to her, "Fear not, He is not here for he has risen." Later came the stories of the timely aid to Peter and Paul and Silas: to Cornelius and Phillip—all rich in the expression of the love and care of God for his faithful servants.

Not so familiar, perhaps, but none the less inspiring are the accounts of the visitation and ministration of angels to the "seed of Joseph" in the "land shadowing with wings."

When the heart of Nephi was sore after the death of his loved father and his brothers were, as usual, in rebellion against him, he testified that he "waxed bold in mighty prayer, and angels came down and ministered unto me." Jacob gave almost the same testimony when he said, "For I had truly seen angels and they had ministered unto me." A few years later, Benjamin, that sterling man of God, declared from the tower that he has caused to be erected that his voice might carry the better to the multitude, "These things are made known to me by an angel from God." Alma and the four sons of Mosiah were visited by an angel and the whole course of their lives changed by that act of divine favor.

How cheered Alma must have been when, heartsick and weary with his harrowing experiences in that wicked city of Ammonihah, an angel of the Lord appeared to him in the way and he heard the words, "Blessed art thou Alma: therefore lift up thy head and rejoice." About the same time an angel appeared to Amulek and commanded him to return to his house and care for a prophet (Alma) of God who should come to him.

Samuel, the Lamanite prophet, cried to the people from the wall of the great city of Zarahemla, "that an angel of the Lord hath declared it unto me, and did bring glad tidings to my soul."

Accounts are given of many others who were thus wonderfully blessed, including the one in which "angels were seen descending out of heaven, as it were, in the midst of fire: and they came down and encircled those little ones about, and the angels did minister unto them."

Angels also ministered to the twelve disciples on that marvelous occasion when Nephi "went down into the water and was baptized," after which he baptized the others whom the Lord had chosen.

In the seventh chapter of the book of Moroni, Mormon appears to lay special emphasis upon the office and calling of angels and ministering spirits. Thus he declares that "by the ministrations of angels . . . men began to exercise faith in Christ": and "hath miracles ceased? behold I say unto you, nay; neither have angels ceased to minister unto the children of men." Continuing, "and the office and ministry is to call men unto repentance, and to fulfill and to do the work of the covenants of the Father which he hath made with the children of men, to prepare the way among the children of men by declaring the word of Christ unto the chosen vessels of the Lord, that they may bear testimony of him: and by so doing, the Lord God prepareth the way that the residue of men may have faith in Christ, that the Holy Ghost may have place in their hearts according to the power thereof: and after this manner bringeth to pass the Father the covenants which he hath made with the children of men."

After further reasoning he questions, "and has the day of miracles ceased? Or have angels ceased to appear unto men? Behold I say unto you, Nay, for it is by faith that miracles are wrought: and it is by faith that angels appear and minister unto men:" "Wherefore if these things have ceased, then has faith ceased also, and awful is the state of man." "For if ye have not faith in him, then ye are not fit to be numbered among the people of his church." Strong language?

In the light of this reasoning, it is not difficult to accept the meaning placed upon the seventh gift of the gospel by Moroni, in the tenth chapter of his book. It necessitates a readjusting of present concepts concerning "discerning of spirits."

The covenants give some instances of the appearing and ministrations of angels. In one found in section 17, are the words, "God ministered unto him by an angel whose garments were pure and white above all other whiteness, and gave unto him commandments which inspired him, and gave him power from on high—." Again, "or the revelations of God which shall come hereafter by the gift and power of the Holy Ghost, and the voice of God, or the ministering of angels." In section 26, the voice of the Master reveals the names of angels he has sent to give authority to his servants.

Having been assured that "it is by faith that angels appear and minister unto men" and that if they do not receive these ministrations it is because of the lack of faith, does it not befit this people to do a little serious scrutinizing to determine if it is still wholly in the faith?

Moroni makes it clear beyond any shadow of doubt, that the seventh gift of the gospel is the "beholding of angels and ministering spirits." The Doctrine and Covenants makes full provision for the discerning of all these gifts by the proper authorities: "such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church."

"The beholding of angels and ministering spirits!"

Breaking the Iron Claw

AS LARRY dressed hurriedly, her heart was singing. The doubts of waking and sleeping hours of the night were gone; the sky of her life seemed as clear and promising as the day. The struggle with self was over, and she was sure that she had chosen wisely in rejecting the offer Mrs. Keithley had made her the night before. She could not quite account for the confidence and joy which seemed to bubble up in her heart. As she combed her hair, powdered her face, and slipped a buckle into place, this little verse was running through her mind. It made her happy just to think of it:

"Let us rejoice
That these are hours in which to love and sing
And into hearts a sweeter radiance bring Because of life."

"I like that idea of 'sweeter radiance,'" she confided to her reflection in the mirror. This morning she felt like spreading that radiance among her friends. Why not begin with the Blaines? But first she must see Mrs. Hampton.

The welcome odor of cinnamon toast filled the house. Larry was fond of toast for breakfast and especially cinnamon toast.

"Reading something good?" Larry had tiptoed so softly into the dining room that Mrs. Hampton had not heard her. Now she looked up from her morning reading of the Scriptures and smiled.

"I'm reading the Bible," she said.

"Ah, but not everything in the Bible is good reading; I don't like to read of murders and battles—and they're in there," she nodded at the book in her landlady's hand.

"That's true, Larry, but they're not the important things. There are some wonderful things in the Bible," earnestly.

"Of course there are, darling, what were you reading?"

"One of my favorite verses. It has been a comfort to me for many years: It has a nice sound, musical; perhaps that is because it is from Psalms: 'Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice.' Isn't that beautiful?"

"Yes," sincerely, "it is. And do you know it's odd, Mother Eldred, both you and I were thinking of the same thing. As I was dressing I kept thinking about a little verse that fairly drips with the gladness and rejoicings of life. But this morning I have a special reason for being happy." She dropped down on the windowseat near Mrs. Hampton's chair.

"Tell me, please," winsomely invited Eldred Hampton.

"Well, it's about Sallie Ruth. Do you know—I'm sorry about what I said to you quite a long time ago about Sallie Ruth's being unlovely, and how I was afraid I could do nothing to help her. She's a sweet girl now—and I take back all my hard words."

THEN SHE TOLD of her visit to Mrs. Keithley's, of their conversation; briefly she described her hostess of the night before. Eagerly her words tumbled out as if they, too, would bring happiness to the listener.

"Now what do you think about it?" Larry finished. "I had to tell someone. I'd love to tell the girls this morning; but I'm wondering if I ought to talk with Carmen first."

"It seems to me to be a wonderful opportunity for Sallie Ruth," slowly returned Mrs. Hampton. "No, I don't believe I'd wait. I think I'd just tell them of the big possibility in the case. It may have a great deal to do with Carmen's plans about bringing her mother home—and so, I don't believe I'd wait. And I want you to know, Larry," she added fondly, "that I think you're a dear, generous girl, to give the child the chance when you might have had it yourself. It seems like a big sacrifice for you to make, but I believe I understand why you are making it."

"I—I hoped you would," stammered the girl.

"But this—why it's almost unbelievable, Larry! It's the chance of a lifetime! Come, I'll go with you if you want to tell Carmen and Sallie Ruth," and without removing her kitchen apron, she led the way out of the dining room.

At the door they met Doc.

"Why, good morning, where so early?" And so they paused to give him a very brief outline of their errand.

"Great," he chuckled. "Tell 'em. Do. If I wasn't afraid they might be in their nightclothes yet, I'd come, too." And for a considerable interval after the sound of their footsteps died away, he stood gazing speculatively out of the window. His eyes were very serious, his expression resolute: "It'll do the girl good—best thing in the world for her! Get her away from that mother that has held to her like a hook of an iron claw!" Still staring hard ahead of him, but seeing nothing of the present, he struck his hands together for emphasis and muttered: "Yessir, I'll do all I can to help break that iron claw. It'd be a shame to ruin—"

"What did you say, ma'am?" Aunt Annie Brown's figure appeared in the kitchen door. Inquiring she looked about. Everyone knew that to Aunt Annie, Eldred Hampton was goodness incarnate, her word was law. Not seeing her mistress there, she turned upon Doc and sniffed: "Oh, it's jest you, is it?" and returned to her work.

"We've news," announced Mrs. Hampton upstairs in the Blaine kitchen as Sallie Ruth carried in an extra chair, and Carmen continued the eating of her breakfast. "Just let us tell it while you eat."

"Sallie Ruth had better get another bite or two," laughed Larry, "for I think this will take her appetite away."

"Is it good news?" asked Carmen stirring her tea.

"Wonderful!" returned Eldred Hampton, "but Larry'll tell you the rest. She wasn't just sure whether she should tell you both so soon—it might not happen as we're expecting, but I told her I thought you ought to know the possibilities at least. And I told her, too, that since it's so near—"

"What's so near," they demanded in unison. "What are you talking about?"

"Go ahead, Larry. You're the one who waved the magic wand over little Cinderella in the first place. Tell them." The speaker's eyes snapped with fun and pleasure.

"Well, to make a long story very, very short," modestly Larry began, "I've found a summer job for Sallie Ruth."

"Hurray!" shouted that young lady.

"You have!" Carmen was frankly astonished.

"Yes, and it's one of the biggest chances a girl could ask for. Mrs. Keithley really wanted someone older, but I told her—and, Sallie in our alley, take special notice—I told her that you were a bright, sensible girl of mature ways."

"Bless your little sweet heart!" chanted Sallie Ruth; "but come on, and tell us the rest. What is my job?"

"Yes, yes, tell us, don't keep us in suspense!"

"It's really wonderful girls; I'm so proud Larry could find—"

"What am I to do?" Sallie Ruth shot the question at Larry, her face the picture of animation and excitement.

"Go to Europe, that's all." Could a statement have been simpler yet more dramatic, more effective?

"What?" shrieked the younger sister.

"Larry!" Carmen was seriously concerned.

"Exactly. Mrs. Keithley wants a traveling companion. She's going to Europe next month. Will be gone several months, possibly a year. As I said before she wanted someone who is older—"

"Why, but — Larry — are — you — crazy?" and incredulously the questioner turned to Mrs. Hampton: "Is she crazy?"

"—than Sallie Ruth," continued Larry disregarding the interruption. "You see there's the matter of the child's education to consider. We talked it over pretty thoroughly last night, and Mrs. Keithley said that if she goes, it would be possible to send her home this fall in time for school—or better still she could put her in a boarding school in France or Switzerland."

"You must be dreaming," Carmen spoke slowly, deliberately.

"No, no, she's raving," excitedly declared Sallie Ruth.

"She's telling you the absolute truth!" vowed Eldred Hampton: "Last night when Larry was Mrs. Keithley's guest, she had the opportunity to accept the position of traveling companion to her hostess. Well, Larry couldn't see her way clear to do it for several reasons, and so she suggested Sallie Ruth in her place. And Mrs. Keithley would like to see and talk with the child. It seems to me to be a wonderful opportunity!"

"It's more than I ever dreamed of," Carmen shoved her plate away from her and began to pick the crumbs from the cloth with precision. "Are you sure it's all right, Larry?"

Then Larry told them again of Mrs. Keithley's kindly interest in her while she was at Lakeside Cottage; of her wealth, her culture, her craving for company.

"Gee, I'll have to live up to a lot, Larry, if she's looking for someone like you! It scares me!" and shivering with excitement, Sallie Ruth, threw her arms about her friend's neck. Then half laughing and half crying she kissed her sister and Eldred Hampton. "Europe—France—cross the ocean!" she kept saying over and over to herself. And suddenly she dropped her head on her arms on the table and began to cry.

"I know how you feel, darling," Larry's voice quavered, too. "If it just goes through, and you please her—"

"May I come in?" The elated four looked up to meet the smile of Joe Dockerly. "I couldn't stay away a minute longer. You see I knew the secret, and I couldn't resist peeking in."

"Oh, Doc," and Sallie Ruth hurtled herself at him, "I'm tickled to death! I'm going to Europe—maybe!"

"Well, you look as if you were tickled to tears to me," he replied thumping her on the back.

THAT NIGHT it was evident that something important was about to take place in the Hampton household. Everyone was immaculately dressed which was rather unusual for a weekday night. Both of the Blaine girls were downstairs in Mrs. Hampton's part of the house. There was a strange tenseness about the atmosphere, and everyone seemed to be trying to do something and failing. Doc clutched the evening paper in his hands, but he was not reading. Carmen was listening to a rather hit-and-miss conversation conducted by Mrs. Hampton. Sallie Ruth was hunting a number in the telephone directory which she was unable to find, and Larry drummed nervously on the piano.

"Won't she ever come?" demanded Sallie Ruth after a time. "Didn't she say half an hour, Larry?" Larry nodded without taking her hands from the piano keys. "Then why doesn't she come?"

The household was awaiting the pleasure of Mrs. Delora Keithley who had accepted Larry's invitation to call, given in a telephone conversation more than half an hour before. She wanted to meet Sallie Ruth, and to discuss the plans of her trip if the girl proved suitable as a companion.

"It's sweet of you to ask me over, Larry," the husky voice had come over the wire; "I'll gladly do it. This house is so barnlike and lonely at night. And I hope I shall have the opportunity of meeting this Mrs. Hampton you've eulogized to much."

When Sallie Ruth had heard that Mrs. Keithley was to call in a few minutes, she had been utterly distracted.

"Come, you must get dressed, child," admonished Carmen who was slipping into another frock, one more appropriate for the evening.

"But I can't find a thing!" wailed the younger girl walking rapidly about in a circle which included the most of the bedroom. "Where are my clothes? Where are my clothes?"

Her excitement had subsided somewhat when Larry found a supply of fresh clothes, and by the time Mrs. Keithley arrived, she was all that the family could have wished in poise and self-possession.

"She's a sweet girl," declared Mrs. Keithley two hours later as Larry walked to the car with her. "I like her, and I think you have excellent judgment when it comes to character. Truly, it will be a joy to have her with me. People will think she's my daughter, and I've always wanted a daughter. You don't suppose her mother will have any objections?"

"No, I think not," Larry was very sure that there would be no protest from Mrs. Blaine when she learned that Sallie Ruth would not only be well cared for, beautifully clothed, and have school expenses paid if she remained abroad, but that her weekly salary would be more than Carmen's.

Back in the house, Sallie Ruth pounced on her with frantic questions: "How'd she like me, Larry? How'd she like me?" And a few minutes later betook herself upstairs to study her French: "If only I'd known, I'd have been studying the stuff harder all winter!" she mourned.

For a long time Carmen, Eldred Hampton, Doc, and Larry discussed the matter of calling Mrs. Blaine home. Should it be done at once? Mrs. Hampton was inclined to think that would be best. But Doc was obdurate in his belief that all arrangements should be made and the mother called home only in time to bid Sallie Ruth farewell. Larry shared his opinion, and she knew that Carmen secretly did, too, only her filial loyalty would not permit her to say so. Finally they decided not to write her about the matter for a week. Perhaps she would be making definite arrangements concerning her return by that time.

And after the two girls had gone to their rooms, Mrs. Hampton and Joe Dockerly continued to talk. Their white heads were very near each other as the two sat on the divan, and more than once Doc's right hand reached up and touched Eldred's hair, then fell back into place about her shoulder.

"Do you remember what I told you once, Doc—"

"I remember everything you ever told me, darling," fondly. "I keep all the things you say in my heart, and turn them over and enjoy them long after you've spoken them."

"Flatterer," she returned, kissing the end of his nose. "If you really did that—I'd feel sorry for you. But do you remember our conversation about young people, the one we had, I believe it was, the night of that George Washington ball Larry and Greg went to? You were saying something about the pathos of youth, the modern city youth, and how you didn't expect much out of them."

Doubtfully he shook his head. "I don't believe I do," he confessed.

"Remember everything I say, do you? Well, I'll admit, dearest, you'd have as the Scotchman would say, a 'wee bit of a job'. But think now—don't you remember saying you didn't have much expectation for this generation of youngsters; that John was only one in a thousand? And don't you remember that I said they'd surprise you—"

"Yes, I do remember something about that."

"Well, aren't they?"

"Aren't they what?"

"Surprising you?"

"Oh, you mean Larry—"

"I mean Larry and Sallie Ruth and her crowd."

"Well, I guess they're all right."

"You just bet they're all right," warmly. "I have unlimited confidence in them. And the way Larry is growing out of some of her moods makes me proud of her."

"Do you suppose she and Greg will ever—"

"S-sh, mustn't even say that out loud! Just you wait. I know something that would send that young lady back to the arms of her sweetheart quicker than you could snap your finger; but it's a secret just yet!" (To be continued.)

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt

Arranged from his diaries by his daughter, Mrs. Ruby C. Faunce

The biography at this point finds its subject in the year 1872. Steadily his work with the Reorganization has grown in power and importance. This is evident from church history as well as from the modest statements in the diaries.

Mar. 11—C. W. Smith, of Jerico, elder of the Adventist church called on me to arrange for a debate. Mr. Smith and I arranged for a debate on the 24th. I wrote to Bro. Patterson, Reynolds and Bronson, my committee. . . . 25th—Rode to Henderson grove to the Union School House where the debate was to be held. First question, "Is the Book of Mormon of human origin." Mr. Smith affirmative, I negative. 1¼ hours each. Meeting continued at night and Tuesday—vote taken gave me 36 to opponent 13. Entered upon new question, "Is the Book of Mormon an inspired production?" After all speeches another vote was taken showing more on my side. Adventists much discouraged.

April 4—Went to St. Louis. Met Joseph, Alexander, and others. On board the "Harry Johnson," rode to St. Louis with them. At night we had meeting on board. Bro. Joseph spoke first then I followed. Both good liberty and many on board surprised we were not polygamists. Arrived in St. Louis Saturday the 6th. Went to Sister Bellamy's whose husband died on Monday last.

Appointed to British Isles

It was a time of sadness when one was asked to go abroad in the interests of the church. With families living close to want, many times, and with insufficient financial security, it took faith and courage for a man to leave his loved ones to the care of others.

9th—Among the appointments of conference I was to go to the British Isles. 10th—In the afternoon I was set apart to the presidency of the English mission, by Joseph, Bro. Patterson to Scotland by Bro. Blair, A. H. Smith to the Pacific Mission by J. Ells. 14th—Went to Sister Reece whose eyesight was partly restored by administration and promised by Joseph, perfect restoration on condition of faith. 15th—Met in hall with a number of Saints and thence with them to the river, where after prayer I baptized 5. After the baptism I went to Bro. Davis'. He had died a few minutes previously. He was one of my truest friends. 17th—Rec'd a calico dress and some little trinkets for each of my two little girls and two undershirts and handkerchief for myself. 18th—Had a letter from my wife; she is opposed to my going to England. If it be the Lord's will I go, I trust her mind will be changed.

May 17—My two daughters down with measles. 20—preached funeral sermon of Louis Manchester. 25—Bro. Marks died at 11.45, aged 79. 28—Into Chicago, was driven around considerably, showing me the havoc done by the great fire. The city is building rapidly.

June 1—Henderson's Grove. Walked through rain and mud for two miles to meeting house for district conference. Good attendance. 16th—Rode with Bro. and Sister Pomeroy, wife and others, across the Fox River to Bro. Agan's place where a two day meeting is being held. David's sermon was excellent as was Thos. Hougas. Bro. Joseph preached a plain practical sermon in the afternoon. After administering to Bro. Hougas' child, we returned to Plano where I preached my farewell sermon to a full house. 17th—Went with family to Sandwich to have my family's pictures taken, as we had none, and I must have them to look at while absent. June 19th—My birthday. At night attended S. S. concert. The children did excellently. They had collected $4.45 for me privately, which was presented with the following letter:

Dear Uncle Mark:

Please accept this little token of friendship from your young friends of Rising Star S. S. We are very, very sorry you are going away, for we know we shall miss you. But you will find friends wherever you go, yet do not forget us, for we all love Uncle Mark. Our offering is so small but we think you know we would be willing to give ever so much more if we could.

Your friends.

God Bless Them! A collection for $17.00 was taken up and given to me. Likewise a Waltham silver watch and silk guard presented by Bro. David Smith. I felt overpowered by these many tokens of love and esteem. 20th—Farewells—took train for Chicago, accompanied by wife and daughter Amy, Sister Sheen and Bro. Patterson. 21—Left with John, and Amy my daughter. Felt very badly at the station where leaving my wife. She, dear soul, seemed broken hearted. God bless and comfort her. Father above, I leave my loved one to preach the gospel of thy Son. Oh! be thou their stay, comfort and helper. 24—Bro. John Patterson decided to return to Chicago and take through train to N. Y. Amy and I took train for South Bend and on to Cleveland. From there to Willoughby and with Mail Carrier to Kirtland. 26th—Visited the temple and noted its peculiar features. At night I preached in the temple to fair sized audience—Romans 1: 16. Was led to view it from an entirely different standpoint than ever before. 28th—To Willoughby thence to Cleveland, where I left Amy at the station and visited Gen. A. S. Sanford who assisted some little on the manuscript on Book of Mormon when it was first set up.

July 2—Took the train from Pittsburgh for New York—arrived about noon. Made our way to Bro. Thos. Trumans. Treated very kindly and make their home our home. 5th—Met Mr. Stenhouse who is writing a work on Mormonism which he intends publishing. 6th—Bro. Patterson and I went to harbor and visited various boats, liked the Anchor Line best. 7th—Bro. Patterson and I went to hear Henry Ward Beecher of Plymouth Church. It was an excellent effort and very little we could not endorse. A masterpiece of oratory. In the afternoon attended meeting in Cosmopolitan Hall, Brooklyn, and had sacrament. Addressed them a short time. At night I spoke on the parable of the ten virgins. Monday—bought tickets on the Anchor Line, boats to sail Saturday. Steerage. 13th—Bade friends good-bye and sailed on the Australia. Started at 12.30—Amy seasick two hours. Sea calm and weather lovely. Sunday meeting in the cabin. Rev. Serright preached—Presbyterian. 15th—A large school of whales close to ship. 19th—Sea still heaves and majority of passengers ill—including Amy and myself—Bro. John still quite well and hearty. 24th—Came in sight of coast of Ireland about 11 a. m.

In England

After a voyage of eleven days it was fine to see the lovely green fields of Ireland. We anchored out in Moville Bay where a small steamer took off passengers. Took supper at the restaurant, then John went out in Glasgow and found Bro. Gavin Finley who took us home and treated us very kindly. Friday went out in town with John and Amy. Took afternoon boat for Liverpool. Good cabin in steerage but no beds nor food. Passed Isle of Man early, landed at Victoria Dock about 1.30—went direct to station, but could not get my baggage checked so had to wait till 4.35. Arrived at Leicester about dark. Took cab for sister's where we were kindly cared for. My dear Mother was there on a visit. Sunday. Went with sister twice to hear Mr. Griffith, their minister—liked his manner, but not all of his doctrine. 29th—Visited friends and loved ones.

Aug. 1—Rode with Mother and Amy to sister's cottage. She has a pretty city residence and a very neat suburban home. An excellent man for a husband—one of the best I think I have ever met. 3rd—Elizabeth Charlotte, daughter of my niece, Mary, came. She is much like her mother was, and will be a companion for Amy as they are both to stay with sister. In the eve. took train for Birmingham. Met by Bro. Taylor and his two sons, Edward and Thomas. Was at home with them.

Sunday, Aug. 4—Bro. Taylor, Emma and I took a walk in the park. After dinner took bus in Mosley road to High Street then walked to No. 14 Temple Row. I had the pleasure of preaching at 3.30. Took tea in the ante room as, being scattered, they bring their afternoon meal with them. Had sacrament and fellowship meeting after which I spoke with much freedom. 5th—Train to Leamington. Was met by my sister and husband and went with them to see my nephew, Chas. Thomas. Found him to be a steady nice young man. Visited old church, Market Hall Museum, Warwick Castle; saw the tree said to be in the center of England. Took a walk through the principal streets of Leamington and enjoyed it very much. Back to Birmingham. 8th—Visited and administered to Bro. Crump, who is terribly afflicted. A wonderfully patient and spiritual man. 9th—Letter from John Patterson breathing a good spirit. Went to visit with Bro. Taylor, Mr. Meredith. He is very favorable. Was formerly a Brighamite who went as far as Council Bluffs and returned here. His wife a fine lady. 11th—Two lectures in afternoon and evening.

12th—Wrote letters in morning. In the afternoon went with Sr. Taylor to the Birmingham Model Prison. Shown through by Mr. Brooks, brother-in-law to Sr. Bellamy. Received a long letter from Joseph and in my answer also wrote an account of my income and expenses and asked him concerning Herald and other moneys rec'd for periodicals as follows:

Please advise me as to moneys rec'd for books and periodicals for the church on this mission. There is some on hand at Bro. Taylor's which he desires to pay over to me for missionary purposes. I have informed him that I have no authority to accept and use it—if I do not he thinks I will suffer, as there is no probability of my getting but little or any besides. This he states was the case with Bro. Briggs and Ellis. Shall I for'd what he has or any part of it; and if a part what proportion? I shall not use a farthing without your order, no matter what I suffer.

Two Branches United

16th—In Trent. First letter from wife and Ruby. At evening a short address on the "Parable of the ten virgins." 17th—Did considerable writing while Bro. Caton half-soleed and heeled my boots. 18th—Attended council meeting at Birch St. Academy. I was chosen to preside. This place has had two branches, but by removal of one of the heads one has become inactive. I gave instructions and asked that, instead of two we become one branch and they bury all differences and elect new officers. My remarks bore the fruits of peace. Every officer in both branches resigned their offices. The brethren nominated: all were elected without a dissenting vote. Bro. Taylor was sustained as District President. In the afternoon and evening I preached with excellent liberty.

Sept. 1—Preached morn and eve., good audiences. 2nd—Visited Mr. Meredith and talked over Utah affairs. Evening held council meeting, many questions asked which I answered. Meeting lasted until nearly eleven o'clock. 3rd—Wrote report of semi-annual conference and sent to Joseph. Weds. to Derby. Thursday to Clay Cross Station, thence to Clay Cross a 14½-mile walk. At Bro. Bennets—Saints and friends came in to whom I talked about the Faith till 10 p. m. Saturday wrote and studied. 9th—Preached 3 times in Angel Inn Room. Several members and ministers of Utah church present. 9th—Bro. and Sr. Bennett accompanied me to station. Have been very kind to me and seemed sorry to part with me. Took train for Sheffield. Met by Ben. Millard who took me to his father's, where I felt, at once, at home.

With Family and Friends

Spent a pleasant evening with family and friends. Wed.—Took train for Peterborough, visited the cathedral. Afternoon to St. Neors. Met by my brother Wm., accompanied him home. 13th—My four nieces and I took a long walk and I explained the faith of our church to them. Left for Hartford thence to Old Crop where I visited my brother Charles who is partially paralyzed. My beloved sister was also there. In the evening went and met Mr. Neal with whom I learned my trade. Took train for London, met by Bro. Norton and Bradshaw—home with the latter. Some of the Saints came in and had a good meeting. 17th—Went to Rectory Lane where I spent a very pleasant afternoon and eve. with Bro. Norton. 18th—Wrote nearly all day and at even—we walked up to Hollborn—returned and attended fellowship meeting. Found some conditions not just right, but must be very careful. 22—Went to Rectory Lane Station, with all the priesthood bearing members to Bro. Nortons. The trouble was quite freely aired and charges made, which I requested them to put in writing and then present before a court to try them. Returned to Bethall Green—attended meeting at Temperance Hall. Sacrament service at which I gave an address. To Bro. Rooks then back for evening service—good liberty. 28th—Bro. Bradshaw and I went to Boor cemetery where we buried Sister Cook.

Oct. 4—Bro. Patterson arrived. 5th—We went to Bro. Norton's where conference convenes today. I presided, Bro.

Patterson spoke—afterwards we had sacrament. After that we finished conference business and passed important resolutions on work here. In the evening I spoke on "The Love of God." 13th—I attended local council which held its first meeting this a. m. Every man in the priesthood appointed to office. Afternoon Bro. Patterson delivered an excellent discourse. At night by request I preached on "The Atonement of Christ." 16th—Bro. John left by steamer for Leith, Scotland. Prayer meeting at nite—an Elders fund was authorized to be started. 17th—Visited the Crystal palace—it far exceeded my expectations. 23rd—Birmingham—I spoke to the Saints on "Spiritual Gifts." Bro. and Sister Taylor were pleased with what I said, but was almost afraid someone would think they had told me of the circumstances here, as I touched them so accurately in my speech. 26th—Left for Aberdeen, South Wales, was met by Bro. J. T. Davis from Kansas—missionary to Wales. 27th—I made five speeches on different subjects and preached in the evening. 30th—Spent day in writing—at night preached Prov. 20:22—feared lest the Welsh people might not understand me.

November 5th—Took train for London. Met Bro. John Davis, we walked about 2 mi. to Moniston—we preached in the market-place. Bro. Davis in Welsh and I in English. 10th—Preached three times. 17th—Darby—the Saints here were organized into a branch and called "The Clay Cross" branch. Afternoon and eve. I preached in the Angel Inn room. Spent 18th at Mr. Cadswell's formerly a Brighamite now a believer, in part at least, of the Reorganized church. 19th—In eve. Bro. Bennett drove me to Tibshelf—it raining all the way. Preached in Bro. Hill's house to a large congregation from 2 Cor. 13:1, ordained Bro. Waters to office of deacon and confirmed Wm. Waters. A Mr. Moorell seemed much affected, came to see me and gave me $5. Left by the train for Leicester—warm welcome and in the evening accompanied my sister to hear an Evangelist preach on "The Coming Again of Our Lord Jesus Christ," references and arguments such as we have used for a number of years. I find Amy has been doing nicely and is happy in her school-work. 23rd. Attended conference council, the brethren, while very fine men, do not understand the rules of order.

The General Conference

By B. H. Thomas

WHAT WILL HAPPEN at the next General Conference depends largely on the attitude of every member who will cast a vote. Will it be just another conference, or will 1934 go down in church history as a year of action towards the establishment of Zion? Why do we tarry? The world is changing daily, before our eyes. People are reaching out for greater things. Empires are falling, and new leaders are rising to answer to the call for a new way of doing things and a higher standard of living. What happened to our vision: we who are to be the light of the world? When shall we tire of playing the ostrich with our heads in the sand?

Back in the days of the early eighties, towns were built within a week and with greater hardships than we have now. People laughed at obstacles then, all because they had vision and foresight. Their faith was backed by action. They heard the call. In our day, we think too much of trifles and that is what hinders our progress. A few more years of what we have been passing through might stir our imagination into action because "Need is the mother of progress." We won't find happiness among stocks and bonds. When luxury exists, it usually hinders vision and satisfies desires. All these are the factors that hold back ambition. There is nothing that holds back progress more than to be satisfied with our living conditions. All this should prove that too much wealth and worldly prosperity hinders spirituality.

The real secret that will help us to surmount and climb to our goal is co-operation and zeal. We already have the essential faculties and God has promised us that Zion would flourish, once the start is made. History proves that once a practicable idea is put into motion, it usually succeeds. A worthy plan will always command respect and a purpose such as Zion with such a great necessity should quicken our vision and stir into action every Latter Day Saint until we have reached the goal. An assured income will not insure contentment during the days of perilous times. Zion is to be a place of safety. Why not act while we have the chance, because "Time and the Grim Reaper wait for no man." They are both heartless collectors.

Zion is just around the corner, but it will stay there until we catch up with it, and the longer we tarry, the greater will be the sacrifice. What do you offer? Desires are not accomplishment, they are worthless unless backed by action.

Educated and intelligent people once laughed at the idea of horseless carriages, but now we have taxicabs in the air. It was absurd to think that a screen could act and talk like humans. They couldn't believe it was possible to dial music out of the air, but all necessities are invented by the urge of want, that is why civilization cannot stand still; it must go forward and if we do not keep up with the procession, we are the losers. Its not only natural, but its our duty to strive for higher qualities of existence, that is why we should aim high and seek higher developments of spirituality.

Thousands and thousands of Latter Day Saints are waiting for the new dawn. They are willing to sacrifice anything, everything, even their lives if need be, to establish a city that shall not fall.

Let us uphold our leader and after giving him power and support, urge him on until we reach the goal. No leader can get anywhere if you hold him back. Roosevelt, Mussolini and Hitler would not be able to accomplish anything with their hands tied. A leader must pave the way. He must have power to overcome the power that obstructs and this power can only be exercised by habitual energetic thrusting forward of himself as a leader. Don't forget it was Enoch and his city who were caught up. Enoch was the leader. Religious history has proved that God has always guided his people through the recognition of a leader and not many leaders. It is his way of doing things. Any leader without unlimited powers, ceases to be a leader.

We should also urge and promote every action that will mean progress to the church. No organization ever got anywhere without loyalty. We should pause each day in silent meditation and consider the goal. We should then be willing to play our part, regardless of the task. We should continuously remember the sacrifices in the early days of the church and venerate the memory of the martyrs. We should at all times, answer to the call of duty and forget personal material gain. Then with love, action and unity, we will receive divine guidance and our building will not be built on the quicksand, but on a rock that will not fall and it shall not be said, "This is a slothful people." Think it over; if you are going to General Conference and don't forget that your vote is a solemn promise to God that you will do all that lies in your power to promote and fortify all the principles indorsed.

Daily Bread

Thank God for little common things,
Small, lovely things of every day—
Grass that is green beside the door
And dandelions across the way,
Candles that flicker in the dusk
And firelit rooms where shadows play;
For silver fingers of the rain
Stroking a young tree's bending head,
For stars that prick through drifting clouds
And dawns that flame in gold and red.
Thank God for common, lovely things
That are the spirit's daily bread!

Pastoral Exchange

Pastoral Efficiency

Pastoral efficiency is not confined to calling. Often I have called a year or two before coming to know people. In addition to calling there must be frequent letter-writing, much use of the telephone, contacts through the church school and other organizations, "visiting together" after Sunday services, collaboration in good work of all kinds, the studied and incessant effort to make the human touch as arresting and compelling as the radio and the movie. One must be spendthrift with his time if one is to get acquainted with people. But time thus spent is never wasted. It makes preaching more effective. It unmasks what lies behind people's faces. It feathers the swift arrow of many a sermon. People are more likely to come to church if they know the preacher knows them, and believe they also know the preacher. Certainly people are more apt to turn to him in his hour of trial. By what seems to some a waste of time he may qualify to become.

The cup of strength in some great agony.

But the minister must be human. He must be downright and forthright, as well as prayerful and understanding. He must take risks. He may even have to fight. Bootleggers across the street, through several hot weeks, made day and night unbearable for us and for our neighbors. The time came, without the aid of the police, to talk straight. The neighbors held their breath as they saw the minister approach a task they feared might bring him harm; might even cost him life itself. But nothing happened. The bootleggers' wives came to his side. They did most of the talking for him, and the next day of their own accord the bootleggers moved away.—Lyman P. Powell, in The Better Part.

Courage

Courage isn't a brilliant dash,
A daring deed in a moment's flash;
It isn't an instantaneous thing
Born of despair with a sudden spring.
Or the final tug of a slipping rope;
But it's something deep in the soul of man
That is working always to serve some plan.
Courage isn't the last resort
In the work of life or the game called sport;
It isn't a thing that a man can call
At some future time when he's apt to fall;
If he hasn't it now, he will have it not
When the strain is great and the pace is hot.
For who would strive for a distant goal
Must always have courage within his soul. —Selected.

Now there are diversities of gifts but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations but the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestations of the Spirit are given to every man to profit withal.

1. For to one is given by the Spirit, the word of wisdom,
2. to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit:
3. to another faith by the same Spirit:
4. to another the gift of healing by the same Spirit:
5. to another the working of miracles,
6. to another prophecy:
7. to another the discerning of Spirits:
8. to another divers kinds of tongues:
9. to another the interpretation of tongues: but all these worketh that one and the same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

And again it is given by the Holy Ghost, to some to know the diversities of operations whether it be of God, that the manifestations of the Spirit may be given to every man to profit withal.

1. And again, verily I say unto you, to some it is given by the Spirit of God, the word of wisdom:
2. to another it is given the word of knowledge: that all may be taught to be wise and to have knowledge:
3. and again, to some, it is given to have great faith to be healed:
4. and to another it is given to have faith to heal:
5. and again it is given the working of miracles:
6. and to others it is given to prophesy:
7. and to others the discerning of Spirits.
8. And again, it is given to some to speak with tongues,
9. and to another it is given the interpretation of tongues, and all these gifts cometh from God.

And unto the Bishop of the church and unto such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church—are to have it given unto them to discern all these gifts, lest there shall be any among you professing and yet not be of God.

And there are different ways that these gifts are administered: but it is the same God who worketh all in all: and they are given by the manifestations of the Spirit of God unto men to profit them.

1. For to one is given by the Spirit of God, that he may teach the word of wisdom:
2. and to another that he may teach the word of knowledge by the same Spirit:
3. and to another, exceeding great faith:
4. and to another the gift of healing by the same Spirit
5. and again to another that he may work mighty miracles:
6. and again to another that he may prophesy concerning all things:
7. and again to another, the beholding of angels and ministering spirits:
8. and again to another all kinds of tongues:
9. and again to another the interpretation of languages and of divers kinds of tongues.

And all these gifts come by the Spirit of Christ: and they come to every man severally, according as he will.

The reader may ask, "What, if anything, is being done about this?" The stage of promotion, in the state of Michigan at least, has been concluded and the matter of organization is rapidly being pushed. Three districts are already organized and others will be set in operation in the near future. Conventions for this purpose have been appointed in every district in the state. On March 25 a general convention will convene at Saginaw, Michigan, with the avowed purpose of setting up the machinery of a general organization. It is hoped that such an institution will eventually become church-wide.

A Call to Arms

By Poul S. Nielsen

A FEW YEARS AGO, after the funeral of a neighbor who in a fit of derangement made an end of it all as far as this life was concerned, I had a talk with one of his relatives. I could not help commenting on the great number of flowers that were sent to the funeral, but the relative only shook her head and said, "I honestly believe that if people would only have given a very few flowers to this man while he was still alive he would be with us today."

Since then, the thought has often entered my mind that if we as neighbors and friends would only give a few flowers so to speak to our fellow man, no matter what creed he or she may confess, we would all be a step nearer to living our religion as God wants us to live it. Far too many of us, whether Latter Day Saints or not, live more or less for ourselves, being often blind leaders of the blind. Through life we go with good intentions to do that which we honestly believe to be right in the sight of God. But all who have been in the church for years will testify that they do not look upon many things in the work as they did when they were young in the gospel. Mankind cannot stand still any more than anything else in nature. It must either move forward or go backward. There is no middle road. To a certain extent are we not all our brother's keeper? There is not one in the church except someone is putting him or her up as an ideal believing that they cannot do anything wrong. Yet how often do we see someone fall. Are we then ready to give them a helping hand or do we try to push them still deeper into the mire?

Will it not be far wiser to defer judgment on any evil we might hear until all the facts in the case are in, and then it will be far wiser not to judge for he who will judge shall be judged by the same rule. Far better will it be for us to go to the one who has erred and to reason with him in private, but not to scold for often a little sympathy rightly given will turn a sinner to paths of righteousness quicker than any amount of scolding will do. We do not need to be officers of the church to perform labor like this in the Master's cause.

Doing good deeds is a privilege that all can enjoy and at the present time when so many are losing their homes and jobs, and when there is a general feeling of despair, all who can see someone in need ought to prepare himself, pray for help, and go to the task whatever it may be with all their might, trusting that God will help them in their work. About the worst thing anyone can do is to imagine that there is no work for him to do. There is plenty, for the harvest is getting ready rapidly and the workers so far are only few in numbers. All Saints no matter where they live whether in a branch enjoying fellowship with their brothers and sisters or living isolated can help. We do not always realize what our example is doing at the moment.

The writer lived at one time in a mining camp where there was no other member of the church; as a matter of fact religion in any form was lightly spoken of. There were several Indians working there too. Quite often I noticed that when certain men would tell these Indians something they would shake their heads and not believe them. One day I asked one of them why they never doubted my word when I said something to them. The answer was that they had noticed that if I said anything it was so. One day, a long while after I left the camp, much to my surprise, I received a letter. The writer was a young man who was not religiously inclined. In his letter he said that while I was there in camp with him he had tried to make a better man out of himself but since I had left he was drifting from bad to worse. This shows that often we can give something by our example although we may not know of it at the time.

It is time for all of us to take stock of ourselves to examine ourselves and see if we have that love for our fellow man that we can reach him a helping hand whenever he is in trouble or rather help him before he gets into trouble. It may not be easy to go to someone and perform this duty but if we will only humble ourselves and make an effort we will feel better after we have done it. True enough, we are not all blessed with the gift of being sociable, but there are none so poor but they can give a handclasp to one who is in need, or perhaps a cheering word. None of us ought to throw rocks at a fellow man. Perhaps tomorrow we may be the one who will be in the gutter needing help. Let none of us exalt ourselves for we will surely be made low sometime, in some way. Let us wake up and be doing for soon will come the night "when man shall work no more." Today may be our opportunity for doing a good deed—tomorrow might be too late.

Gospel Is God's Gift

When I write to this department I feel as if I am taking part in a large prayer meeting, and talking with my brothers and sisters far and near. To say that I am proud of so participating, is putting the thought mildly.

I love the gospel more every day, and God blesses me wonderfully. During the past year I have undergone a severe trial, that of losing my companion. But the abiding Comforter has never left me. I believe that it is not for us to question God's plans. We can only say: "Thy will, not mine, be done." I have still many blessings for which I am thankful, a kind and thoughtful family of three daughters and three sons, and the respect and association of my brothers and sisters, neighbors and friends.

I was privileged to attend the Park of the Pines reunion and also our district conference at Coleman and we enjoyed wonderful, spiritual feasts.

The gospel is God's great gift to us. We should live for it, give our all for it. I want to be a worker and a booster in the latter-day cause, and my prayers are for the church.

How We Came Into the Church

My wife and I never heard of the Church of Jesus Christ until 1910, when two families of Saints were our neighbors. My wife and one of the women, Sister Jackson, frequently discussed doctrinal points and beliefs, but I maintained that the Saints were Mormons in disguise. Brother Sam Simmons came to Washington, Oklahoma, and preached several times in the Christian church there. We attended, but his arguments did not appeal to me although I saw many taking notes on his sermons.

A year later Brother Reed came to our house looking for some horses, and we asked him in. He stayed all day with us and talked and read out of a piece of a Testament that had been given to my wife when she was a girl; that was as much of a Bible as we had. We enjoyed his talks, for the gospel story was new to us. After he was gone, we discussed it for some time and concluded that we should investigate. We borrowed a Bible from a neighbor and began to search the Scriptures to see if what Brother Reed had told us was true.

Investigation proved that all he had told us was true. So we read on and on, becoming more and more interested. Next we borrowed Brother Reed's Book of Mormon, and after that other church books. We found that all we read harmonized.

A baby boy was born to us in 1911, and when he was about ten months old he was taken very ill. This was in the spring of 1912. We sat up with him many, many nights. A neighbor and his wife came to help us often, and one night this neighbor and I fell to discussing the Latter Day Saints. He suspected their teachings, but I declared that I had found nothing wrong with their church.

Our baby lay sick until summer. We had several doctors with him to no avail. Brother Reed came over and offered to do whatever he could to help. I asked him if he were in touch with any of the elders. My wife and I wanted the baby administered to. Brother Reed did not write to an elder to come, but in a few days R. M. Maloney from Oklahoma City, arrived at the Reed home, and later visited with us and administered to the child.

In August, however, the little one passed away. After that Brother Maloney visited us frequently. He preached several times at our home and also at a nearby schoolhouse. Finally one day I asked him if he had clothing with him for a baptismal ceremony. On learning that he did I asked baptism at once. "Let us wait until Sunday," he suggested, "there may be others." And on that day although I had not mentioned to my family my desire to be baptized, my wife and oldest daughter informed me that they wished to be baptized. It was June 30, when we joined the church.

As soon as we had become members of the church, we began to try to overcome some of our habits. My wife gave up using snuff, but I did not seem to be able to quit the use of tobacco. After a time I asked the Lord to help me quit, and with his aid it was easy; I have never touched it since.

I have not had any great manifestation as to the work of this church, but in many little ways I have been assured of its divinity and truth. Doubts concerning certain phases have vanished from my mind, and my faith has increased. Will the Saints pray that we may not be found wanting in the last day, also that we may be healed of our afflictions?

Have Faith in God for He Will Help You

From early boyhood until I was forty-three years of age I was acquainted with sin. I was selfish, envious, jealous, quick tempered, and had few characteristics of a child of God. I was addicted to the use of liquor; I was an inveterate user of tobacco. I was bowed down with wrong habits and ill doing.

Twice during that period I felt that there might be something in religion and thought of trying it out. I went to two revival meetings, knelt down at the so-called mercy seat and was surrounded by the "saved." They were praying for me. They prayed and prayed, and asked me occasionally if I did not feel that I was saved. Eventually they had to give up, for I could not truthfully tell them that I felt any different from when I had knelt down with them. I was disappointed for I sincerely wanted to change my mode of living, and was unable by myself to do this. I had tried several times and failed.

In the fall of 1893, two elders of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Albert Haws and W. P. Pickering, came to Santa Cruz, California, where I was living and set up their gospel tent. I attended their services, was deeply interested, and became convinced that they preached the whole truth. I had read the Bible somewhat and remembered the words of Jesus to Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

After hearing these elders a number of times and their statement of the words of Jesus: "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself," (John 7: 16, 17.) I wanted to know. I decided that if God would give me knowledge of the doctrine, forgive my sins, and help me to overcome my bad habits, I would serve him the balance of my days and strive to be faithful, loyal, and true.

Through the city of Santa Cruz the beautiful San Lorenzo River wends its way into Monterey Bay. Its waters at that time was clear as crystal, its pebbly bottom could be clearly seen. It was there that I was translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son. Oh, the joy that came into my heart! The wonderful thrill of God's Spirit coursing through my being! At the confirmation service I heard sung the hymn, "Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken, All to Leave, and Follow Thee." That was just what I wanted to do.

I thought all Saints felt the same way and wanted to forsake all to follow Jesus. I did not know at that time that "the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind" (Matthew 13: 47), nor that there would be tares among the wheat until the harvest. And some of my experiences have been such that if our Father had not made known to me that the latter-day work is his and that the things I had passed through were necessary to try my faith, I should have left the church. He made known to me that his church is similar to a graded school. All the pupils are not in the same grade because all do not try to learn and do as God directs. Although many have been in the school a long time, they are still in the primary grade. This knowledge has been a wonderful help to me, and has caused me to realize that no matter what other members of the kingdom do I must work out my own soul's salvation.

Experience has taught me that the Father will do for us what we cannot do for ourselves. He has helped me to overcome many of my bad habits and faults. He has extended my life, given me more time to study his law and will. He has brought me peace, comfort, joy and contentment. He is my all and I praise his holy name.

Dear reader, have faith in God for his promises are sure, but remember: that he fulfills them in his own time and way. Do not allow yourself to become discouraged or disheartened, for if you do your full duty, you are entitled to a grand reward. Read with me in the Book of Mormon:

"O the greatness and the justice of our God! For he executeth all his words, and they have gone forth out of his mouth, and his law must be fulfilled. But, behold, the righteous, the saints of the Holy One of Israel; they who have believed in the Holy One of Israel; they who have endured the crosses of the world, and despised the shame of it; they shall inherit the kingdom of God, which was prepared for them from the foundation of the world: and their joy shall be full forever." 2 Nephi 6: 41, 42.

"If faith produce no works I see
That faith is not a living tree.
Thus faith and works together grow,
No separate life they e'er can know,
They've soul and body, hand and heart;
What God hath joined let no man part."

—Hannah More

I shall continue to honor, praise and glorify his name the rest of my life for what he has done for me and all mankind.

Child Convinced of Truth

I am almost thirteen years old, and I wish to add my testimony to those of my older brothers and sisters. My mother was reading aloud from the Book of Mormon to daddy and me one evening last summer, and as she was reading an unusual spiritual experience was given to me. This experience together with the teaching my parents have given me, convince me that the latter-day gospel is true.

I was baptized last April, and am very glad that I decided to join the church. Pray for me, brothers and sisters, that I may live in such a way that our Savior will not be ashamed of me.

Are We Worthy the Name Latter Day Saint?

When I read about the two great wars that are being fought today, one against depression, unemployment, foreclosures, and social injustices, the other against crime, organized criminals, robberies, and hold-ups, I begin to wonder if the time is not at hand when we must flee to Zion for safety.

Then come the questions: How long until Zion will be re-deemed? How long will the Saints have war and contention among themselves?

I look about and see these conditions among our own people—Saints working against prohibition; Saints up all night seeking pleasure, breaking the laws of God by not sleeping in the hours set apart for rest and then being too tired to go to church and study the perfect law. They give other excuses—they are too busy or too old to help in the building of Zion. They drink and eat things forbidden by God's law, then wonder why diseases hover about them. They fail to see that the world is ripening in iniquity; that it is the plans of man that are frustrated, not God's plans. They forget that they will be chastened and learn obedience by the things they suffer, or be sifted out.

When I read of the straight and narrow way and recall the many warnings I have received against pleasures and things in which I could see no harm, I wonder if I am unworthy the name Latter Day Saint. I long to live up to the name and I ask the prayers of the Saints that the Lord will help me.

I was led to a knowledge of this church by a vision; was baptized in July, 1926, by Hubert Case. I have had much assurance that the gospel is true.

We Should Cooperate

New strength and courage to go onward come to me from the reading of the letters of my brothers and sisters. I, too, know that this is the true church of Christ. I have been healed and my prayers have been answered many times.

I have had spiritual experiences which have warned me that it is time we should work together; that we should cooperate in an endeavor to do the will of the Lord and to redeem Zion.

I have been chosen to act as the leader of an Oriole Girls' group, and feel that I need the prayers of all, that I may be given courage to carry on. I want, if it lies in my power, to show to these younger girls the truth of the gospel.

Request Prayers

Lewis F. Johnson, seventy-five years old, of Eldorado Springs, Missouri, has suffered much during the past year, and requests the Saints to pray for him, that he may be healed of physical afflictions.

Mrs. Carrie Johnson Freeman, of Marshall, Missouri, desires her brothers and sisters to pray that she may be healed of the serious illness that has afflicted her for six months.

Mary L. Hastings, of Hayter, Alberta, desires the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed of her afflictions. She prays especially that she may be relieved of an affliction in her ear.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Please explain Galatians 3: 10-12, and state what law is meant.

These verses state that those who are of the law are under the curse, that no man is justified by the law, and that the law is not of faith. This refers to the Mosaic Law, which had been given the Jews because they refused the gospel. It was called the law "of sin and death," for it was enforced by penalties of death. Paul says "it was added because of transgressions," which implies that those who will not keep the gospel law of love voluntarily, must become subject to a law that will discipline them by force. Such a law is "not of faith," for it is a law of compulsion. As Paul was himself a Jew, he could explain from experience that compulsory keeping of the law justified none of them.

On the other hand, the gospel is the law of love, to be received voluntarily by those who have faith. Its basic precepts are, to love God, and to love man. He who keeps this law does so voluntarily and in faith, as distinguished from obedience to the Mosaic Law which was by compulsion whether desired or not.

What does Doctrine and Covenants 16: 4 mean by "church of the Devil"?

This revelation was given in June, 1829, before the church of the Saints had been organized. At that time there were many churches of various faiths having sincere and devout members, though mistaken as to matters of belief in some respects. To contend against them would be misunderstood as an uncharitable attack upon their religion and would often arouse antagonism instead of investigation of the true faith. Hence the command was given: "Contend against no church, save it be the church of the Devil." The church of the Devil is a term which includes the forces of evil, which we are commanded to resist. It is the duty of the church to contend against the Devil and his works, but not to contend against those who may be in error through lack of understanding.

Should one give offerings, if tithes are not paid?

It would probably be more consistent to contribute whatever can be spared in such instances and have it credited on account of the tithe owed. But to refuse to donate anything simply because tithes are not paid would be an error, for if funds could be spared at all it would be a poor excuse to refuse payment as tithing, and also to withhold assistance in any other form on such grounds. An offering would certainly be far preferable to such a course, though the donator would thus deprive himself of credit on the tithe owed.

Who was Saint Patrick, and when did he live?

It is said that he was born in the southwestern part of Scotland near the Clyde about the year 373, and that he spent forty years as the apostle of Ireland in establishing schools and instructing the people. Various miracles are ascribed to him, and his work as a patron saint of Ireland is commemorated on March 17. It is supposed that he died about the year 466.

Who is Gog and Magog of Revelation 20: 8?

Some think this text refers to a figurative allusion of the Old Testament Gog and Magog. Others believe it refers to the same country or people. Ezekiel 38: 2 locates Gog by the land of Magog, which some geographers place near the northern coast of the Caspian Sea, the land of the Scythians. Gog was prince of Meshech and Tubal, which lay southwest and south of the Black Sea, respectively, and is mentioned in Assyrian and Greek inscriptions. The exact meaning of the text is unknown to modern scholars, though various explanations are suggested.

Please explain the meaning of the names used in Doctrine and Covenants 101.

While absolute certainty is not claimed, the names in parentheses are thought to be intended: Enoch, Gazelam (Joseph Smith, jr.); Pelagoram (Sidney Rigdon); Tahhanes (tannery); Shinehah (Kirtland); Mahemson (Martin Harris); Zombre (John Johnson); Shederlaomach (F. G. Williams); Olihah (O. Cowdery); Laneshine-house (printing office); Ahashdah (N. K. Whitney); Shinelah (print); Shinelane (printing); talents (dollars).

Persecution is said to have caused these names to be used at that time.

Activities in Arkansas District

R. S. Budd and A. M. Baker
Attend Conference

Saints of this district are looking at their problems with faith. The world conditions point vividly to the fact that Zion is a necessity.

Semiannual conference for Arkansas District convened February 2 to 4, at Hot Springs National Park, Arkansas. The chapel is located about five miles southwest of the city, and boasts a membership of sixty who live in the neighborhood and city. Elder Tom Sanders presides over the Sunday school.

Apostle Roy S. Budd was present during the conference, and delivered excellent sermons. His teachings and instructions were highly appreciated.

At the close of the conference, Elder A. M. Baker commenced a discussion with the Church of Christ people to last a period of eight nights. This was conducted about one mile and half farther down the highway in their building. Brother Budd was present the first night, and acted as moderator. Brother Baker's opponent was J. D. Hart, of Fort Smith, Arkansas.

At the close of the debate, Brother Baker had the pleasure of baptizing two promising members, Mr. Long and Mrs. Sanders.

Chico, California

Locust and Twelfth Streets

Elder H. A. Hintz is president of this group, and is assisted by the following officers: Secretary and church school director, Sister Cora Hintz; treasurer, Dean Hintz; music director and publicity agent, Lillie White; pianists, Ruth Hintz and Sister W. H. Bohall; church chorister, W. H. Bohall.

During the first two weeks in February, Brother Albertson held nightly preaching services at Pleasant Valley schoolhouse, and on a recent Friday night the people of that locality with Brother Albertson and his daughter, Mrs. Fuller, gave a splendid play at the church. A supper brought in a sum of money to help meet church expenses.

A fine Christmas tree and program were sponsored by Sister H. A. Hintz at the church on Christmas Eve and the New Year's party sponsored by Dorothy Fuller, proved most enjoyable. Sister Fuller sponsored another party on the last Friday evening in January, the guests enjoyed a good supper, singing, and playing games. Articles sold bought nearly seven dollars which will help pay for improvements on the lower auditorium ceiling intended to deaden sound from above. This improvement is being sponsored and largely contributed by Brother and Sister George Howell.

Brother W. M. Peck who lives at Marysville was here two weeks ago, taking part in the sacrament service. He may start holding Sunday school in the near future in his home town.

Brother Burdick, from Sacramento, preached a fine sermon last Sunday and his wife sang a solo.

London, Ontario

Encouraged by Visit of President
F. M. McDowell

This branch was greatly encouraged by the recent visit of President F. M. McDowell. He held several meetings with local and district priesthood, and was invited to be present at a meeting of the women's department. He gave two powerful sermons on the duties and responsibilities of members of the church, and awakened keener interest among the local priesthood, which if kept alive, will benefit the branch in numbers and in spirituality.

The dramatic club, under the direction of Sister Louise Judkins, presented "Follow Thou Me" at the church not long ago. The performance was seen by a capacity audience.

In spite of very cold weather in the past two weeks, the thermometer going down to twenty-seven below zero, attendance at meetings has been average. Those preaching during the past month have been President McDowell, Pastor J. E. MacGregor, Bishop J. C. Dent, Elders William Grice, F. Gray, J. Winegarden, and Arlo Hodgson. Early in March they expect Elder Percy Farrow, missionary, for a couple of weeks. He will hold special services.

The Ladies' Bible Class had a get-together and banquet a few evenings ago. Brother Harry Simpson, teacher of the class, acted as chairman for the occasion and called on several of the members for short talks and musical numbers. About fifty sat down to the tables, and a social and happy time was enjoyed.

Sister O. Wallace's Sunday school class entertained with a surprise party in her honor at the home of her mother, Sister J. F. Winegarden.

Sister Clara Schlotzshauer, of Stratford, the district secretary, has been visiting Saints and friends in London for two weeks, and has attended services. Local members have also been happy to welcome at services Elder Urban Essery and son, Austin, and Brother F. Boyd, of Hamilton.

Dannie Armstrong, a Sunday school pupil, met with a painful accident the other day when he was knocked down by a motor truck.

After two weeks' illness, Sister Ray Bicknell, Sunday school teacher, is again in charge of her class.

The women's department sponsored a Jiggs' supper the other evening. A good program was carried out and everyone enjoyed the evening. During the week the department had a Valentine tea which was well patronized.

Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania

Seek Contact With "Things Divine"

Brother and Sister Hartman and daughter, of Hummelstown, often drive the distance of ninety miles between Hummelstown and Bloomsburg, in order to worship God with his children. Such is the spirit of the latter-day work, and Pennsylvania members are thankful for it.

Bloomsburg congregation continues to grow slowly. A steady advance is noticeable. February 18, an aged woman, Eliza Van Horn, went down into the waters of baptism.

Brother John Shaffer, priest has recently returned from a protracted stay at Elkhart, Indiana.

The hearts of local members were saddened by the sudden death of Brother Robert Clugston who was called home while at his work December 7. A heart attack caused his death. As a tribute of the high esteem in which he was held, the funeral service at the church, was attended by many, the capacity of the building being taxed. George W. Robley had charge of the services and delivered the eulogy.

Brother and Sister Clark Hartman were recently called to part with their infant son, Donald. Elder Walter Lewis had charge of the funeral, priest William Hyde assisting.

Some of the members here expect to attend the district conference to be held at Philadelphia March 17 and 18.

At the semiannual business meeting of the branch held in December, the following officers were elected to serve for a year: Branch president, H. A. Cunningham; associate pastor, W. H. Lewis; secretary, Lydia Pealer; treasurer, Clark H. Pealer; chorister, Alice Clugston; organist, Mrs. Fred Scyler; publicity agent, William Hyde. The church school administration is headed by W. H. Lewis who is ably assisted by his new officers.

Wednesday evening prayer and testimony meetings are exceptionally well attended and of a high spiritual order.

The church building is in need of a new roof and the women's auxiliary has been sponsoring various activities to make possible the necessary replacement. Sister Thomas Hyde has charge of this work and is ably assisted by many of the women. They meet twice each month to transact business and study the Doctrine and Covenants, under the tutorage of Sister Alice Clugston.

A Book of Mormon study class for all desiring to attend is provided in the branch's program of activities together with a study class for the priesthood which includes study of the Doctrine and Covenants. Class study is here proving most stimulating.

Sister Mary Brown, formerly of this branch but now isolated from church associations at Elmira, New York, paid Bloomsburg a visit recently and her testimony was vibrant with thankfulness for the church.

Eastern Michigan Division of Christian Legion Organized

Young People at the Call of the Church

The Eastern Michigan division of the Christian Legion was organized under the sponsorship of Apostle D. T. Williams, at the Eastern Michigan district conference February 18, at Port Huron. The Christian Legion constitution, which was tentatively adopted by Central Michigan division, was also adopted by the Eastern division until final action may be taken by the State general convention of the Christian Legion at Saginaw, March 25.

Officers elected at the organization meeting Sunday, are; Divisional commander, Elder A. E. Ledsworth, Port Huron; secretary, Carl Muir, Port Huron; treasurer, Floyd Silverthorne, Brown City; director of solicitation, Elder Joseph N. Muir, Port Huron; director of socialization, Earl Diem, Carsonville; director of publicity, Richard A. Whitford, Port Huron. Sister William Patterson, Port Huron, was appointed to secure attendance at the general State convention at Saginaw in March. These officers held a council meeting with Apostle Williams after the close of the conference.

Some of the elections for Christian Legion officers were closely contested and interest was strongly manifested. This fact, in conjunction with the large attendance from the entire district at the afternoon organization meeting, bore testimony to the belief, prevalent throughout this section of the church, that the younger people have a definite place to fill in the building of the idealistic goal of the church. They believe that now is the time for the young to cast their lot definitely and decisively for action in the task before them and their fathers. This is a movement for the young to take on the yoke of service and to pull with those who have been pulling many years, sharing their task and burden.

These young people are many in number when gathered in organization, and they feel that their elders in the faith will steady, teach, and guide them as they place themselves subject to the call and need of the church. The Christian Legion is answering the call of the Christ to follow him. Many rejoice because of the inspiration this organization meeting brought to the district, and pray that the young people will labor well for the latter-day cause.

Birmingham, England

Make Plans for New Church

The burden of church debt has been entirely cleared and local Saints have undertaken new responsibilities. It was decided at the January business meeting to start a fund to buy grounds on which to build a new church. A monthly envelope system was adopted for collecting the funds. The Saints are entering wholeheartedly into the plan.

The Laurel Club, which comprises the youth of the branch, deserves much praise. They are using both energy and talent in various ways to promote the cause.

The last month has been filled with social activities. Early in January came the church school party. Christmas was celebrated with a tree and gifts for everyone, and the children went home happy.

The first Sunday of the year, January 7, a prize distribution took place. Pastor P. S. Whalley presented forty prizes to the children giving individual commendation to each child. Those who know Brother Whalley will best understand the value of those words and their sincerity. He is doing a marvelous work among the young people.

A class has been organized for young girls, which is called a Handcraft and Social Club. Sister Whalley is in charge of this class, which meets each week to enjoy happy hours together. Two socials have been held during this month.

The women's guild is meeting and studying the Book of Mormon with the pastor. They too have plans for raising money for the church ground.

"Let nothing separate you from the love of God and from each other," is the slogan for Saints of this congregation.

The value of prayer is stressed again and again. Individually and collectively all bear testimony to its power. The sick have been restored, spiritual strength and wisdom have been given, and so this year Saints are desirous of closer communion, of spiritual blessings which shall bind them as one and make them a strong and powerful influence in this city. Responsibilities grow greater day by day, but with God's blessing, all will be accomplished.

Annual Conference for Des Moines District

Program of Spiritually Impressive Services

One hundred and fifty members of the district sat down to a young people's banquet Friday, 6:30 p. m., February 9, the opening event of the annual conference of the district held at the Des Moines church, February 9, 10, and 11. "Continuing Zionward" was the theme, and Lee Mussell was toastmaster. Eva Cook directed the singing, and Doris Nelson arranged the program. Speakers were Keith B. Stokes, of Newton group; Ernest Owens, of Boone Branch, and Apostle J. F. Garver who chose for his topic "Hitherto Hath the Lord Helped Us." Special songs were sung by the Young People. The women of Des Moines Branch prepared the excellent meal.

A good prayer meeting was enjoyed by about seventy-five members Saturday at 9:15 a. m. Then Elders L. G. Holloway and J. F. Garver talked on missionary methods. Brother Holloway preached that night to a fair-sized audience. The conference minutes will contain a report of the business meeting at 2 p. m.

Apostle Garver addressed a mass priesthood meeting Sunday at 8:15 a. m. The church school was limited to an hour's session on account of other important services to follow. Director E. E. Kirlin was in charge. An important feature of this hour was a class for branch presidents and solicitors, taught by Stephen Robinson, bishop's agent.

An impressive ordination service, in charge of District President Henry Castings, followed. Brother Castings gave the charge and received the pledges of five young men who were to be invested with priesthood authority. Misses Marjorie Morey, Marjorie Castings, and Faye Williams sang songs which made the occasion joyous. Ministers officiating in the ceremony were Apostle Garver, and Brothers Holloway, Robinson, and Deskin. The prayer of dedication was by C. E. McDonald. After the ordination Brother Garver gave a message on going forward.

Guy Fowler who was ordained to the office of elder in the morning, baptized his twin daughters and Marvin White at two o'clock in the afternoon, before a large congregation. A season of prayer was then enjoyed and Elders L. G. Holloway, Stephen Robinson, V. L. Deskin, and C. E. McDonald officiated in the confirmation ceremony.

Sacrament followed and a spiritual testimony service. Two young men who were ordained in the morning, served in their office as deacons at this hour. They were Raymond Thompson and Marion Meek, of Des Moines Branch. Brother Propst assisted in serving the sacrament.

A program of entertainment by young people from Nevada and Des Moines came at the six-thirty period, followed by Brother Garver who delivered a powerful and instructive sermon.

Representatives from Boone, Nevada, Perry, Winterset, Adel, Newton, Ogden, Runnells, Knoxville, Dunreath and Malcom attended in sufficient numbers to fill the church building to capacity. A feeling of unity pervaded the gathering which was orderly and reverent, the Lord's Spirit was present.

Meals were served by the home and service group of the local church. A collection was taken amounting to more than sixty dollars, to be used for conference expenses and district needs.

Lock Number Four Branch

Charleroi, Pennsylvania

Branch records list ninety-one members. Ten people were baptized recently in the font at the Baptist Church at Charleroi. This font is at the disposal of the Saints at any time they care to use it. The baptisms were performed by Priest Arthur Howes and Elder James Rasbeck December 10. There were eight children and two adults. Four of these were confirmed immediately at the Saints' chapel at Lock Four and the rest were confirmed December 31. Among those baptized were Henrietta Gamble Stone, Dale Coven, Henry Bollinger jr., Floyd Bradford jr., James Bradford, and Bevan McCain.

This branch joined the general church in the "Keep the Law" period to the best of the members' ability, and they feel that the Lord was pleased with their efforts. They were blessed with light and truth in the teachings of the financial law, and were made to realize its tremendous importance in the redemption of Zion also its spiritual effect on the lives of the members.

"Onward to Zion" is their motto and it is their purpose to try to carry out all that their superior officers ask as far as they are able.

They elect officers in the fall in harmony with the general church. Present officers are: Pastor, James Raisbeck; assistant pastor, Clarence Winship; church school director, Henry Winship; director of adults, Pauline Wentzell; director of young people, Doris Mills; director of children, Edith Wise; choristers Violet Matson and Eugene Coven; pianists, Violet Bradford and Carrie Wise; secretary, E. C. McCain. The personnel of the priesthood is; Elder, James Rais-beck; priests, Robert Winship, Henry Winship, Clarence Winship, and James Ansell; deacons, Floyd Bradford and Amos Winship, and teacher, E. C. McCain.

They hold regular services as follows: Sunday school 9:45 a. m.; preaching service, 10:45 except the first Sunday of each month when they have sacrament service; preaching every Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Prayer meeting is enjoyed Wednesday evening and church school, Friday at 7:30 p. m., directed by Clarence Winship.

There is a marked increase in attendance at all the meetings and a steady growth in all departments is expected due to the feeling of unity and the desire to help among the members.

The young married women's class meets in the homes once each month in addition to the lesson hour on Sunday. The young people's class does the same. Much is expected of these two groups.

Patriarch G. T. Griffiths was there the morning and evening of December 17. The following evening he spoke to the priesthood of Fayette City, Donora and Lock Number Four branches giving excellent instructions and stressing especially the great responsibility which goes with the priesthood.

Saints there are happy to have Elder Hobart Rodgers. He moved to Charleroi recently from Morgantown, West Virginia.

Ottawa, Ontario

Services of Elder George Njeim Count for Much

The gospel was brought to Ottawa several years ago and the branch has been kept alive by the faith and perseverance of a few members.

Elder George Njeim, Toronto District missionary, has held meetings here since November. They consisted of talks on the principles of the gospel, Zion, and the Book of Mormon; slides dealing with Palestine and Jerusalem; cottage meetings, etc. Services were well attended considering the severe winter, and the hearers showed great interest.

As the result of these meetings three were led into the waters of baptism February 11, and one two weeks previous. Confirmation service was in charge of Elders Njeim and Caldwell after which the gift of prophecy was given through Alexander Caldwell, encouraging the people and conveying to Brother George assurance that the Master is well pleased with his labors. This was a spiritual experience enjoyed by all.

A farewell party was given Brother Njeim at the home of Sister Elizabeth Stinson. Games, music, and a delicious luncheon were enjoyed, then Brother Njeim was presented a purse. In parting they sang "God Be With You Till We Meet Again."

The Saints feel that the Spirit of God has been working to great ends among them and that they have been wonderfully blessed by Brother Njeim's counsel. He has impressed all with his sincerity and his Christlike character. They look forward to another visit from him, believing that there is much to be accomplished at Ottawa.

Western Oklahoma Conference

Large Crowd Comes From District

Conference of Western Oklahoma District convened February 17 and 18, Elder Z. Z. Renfroe, district president, preaching the opening sermon on Friday evening to a remarkably large crowd.

A well-attended prayer service began Saturday's sessions. Two speakers occupied at eleven o'clock, Elder E. Dillon and Apostle R. S. Budd. Illness forced the latter to leave for his home Saturday evening.

The district business meeting was held in the afternoon, and Elder Ernest E. Crownover preached Saturday evening.

Elder B. A. Howard lectured at the church school hour Sunday morning and Elder Lester E. Dyke preached at eleven o'clock. A sermon from Elder Z. Z. Renfroe at two in the afternoon concluded the conference.

The conference was well attended, members coming from all parts of the district, and a number of El Reno and Oklahoma Saints from Central District were made welcome. A good spirit prevailed at the services.

The summer reunion of Western Oklahoma District will be held at Canton.

Vancleave, Mississippi

Elder Amos Berve Conducts Meetings

Vancleave Branch enjoyed a week's series of meetings. Amos Berve, pastor of Mobile Branch, was the speaker, and Brother Raymond Booker conducted a teacher training course each evening with an attendance of fourteen. Some of Brother Berve's subjects were "The Two Sons," "The Secret Power and effect of Love," "Building the Church From Within," and "The Eternity of Things Not Seen."

The young people had a splendid prayer meeting on Sunday morning, Brother Raymond Booker in charge.

Two babies were blessed before the eleven o'clock service, Pastor A. G. Miller and Brother Berve officiating.

Raymond Booker was the eleven o'clock speaker, and his theme was "Character Building."

It is hoped that much good was derived from this meeting for it gave each an opportunity to find where he stands as a church member. Saints of this group wish now to go forward in the Lord's work.

Hinsdale, Illinois

On the Fringe of Chicago

While meandering around the western suburbs of Chicago, it occurred to the writer that many of the Saints living in this section do not attend First Chicago Church and that numbers of them do attend sectarian churches and Sunday schools. And so we are holding meetings at Hinsdale every Sunday morning at ten and eleven o'clock. We study the Bible and Book of Mormon, and the classes are followed by preaching service at eleven.

The staff of officers and teachers is as follows: Elders John W. Pettersson and Virgil L. Butterworth are in charge of the Sunday school, assisted by Donald Conrow as secretary and treasurer.

The plan is to make this a meeting place for Saints living at Hinsdale, Elmhurst, Brookfield, Downersgrove, Westmont, and Wheaton. Several from these villages are attending, and a special invitation is extended all members to be present. The meetings started February 4, and have attracted from twenty to twenty-five people at every service.

Sacrament was served on the opening day. Elder Roscoe Davey preached on the eighteenth, centering his thoughts on the theme, "A New Birth." On February 25, the writer spoke on "Why Does God Not Answer Our Prayers?"

Sister Millar's permission to use her home at 15 Blaine Avenue, Hinsdale, as a meeting place, is much appreciated.

HARRY PASSMAN.

Cleveland, Ohio

Elder George W. Robley Gives Missionary Service

Members here greatly enjoyed a visit from Elder George Robley who is aiding in missionary work. Two cottage meetings have been held in the home of Brother Hanna with good interest.

The men of the branch served a supper January 25, several attending from out of town, especially from Kirtland. A gift of several hundred dishes was received to help the branch with its suppers.

A Better English Class held its first meeting January 23, in charge of Brother Cooper. This class meets on Tuesday and is studying the principles of grammar. It has good attendance. Sister Vanderwerf served refreshments at the first meeting. The class sessions are being held in the homes during the sub zero weather.

Sister H. Spiller is recovering from an operation and had some wonderful experiences during her illness. She is the mother of a seven-weeks-old daughter.

Social evening for this month was held at the home of Sister Holland with refreshments, games and prizes.

Recent visitors to Cleveland have included Brother and Sister Whitehead, of Michigan. Many Saints are anxiously awaiting news from them, and would like also to hear from Brother and Sister Jerome Andes of whom they speak frequently.

The local appreciates greatly the untiring labors of Brother Lester Vanderwerf who works day after day redecorating the church interior.

Those who have occupied the pulpit in past months are George Robley, F. T. Haynes, C. R. Bennett, J. A. McNeil. They have been assisted with music by the choir and solos by Sister Haynes and Sister McNeil.

Portland, Oregon

Nineteen Adults Baptized

Portland Saints have experienced an out pouring of the Spirit of God during the past few months as a result of the continued missionary efforts of local and district priesthood and membership. Prophecies made to Portland District following the Northwest reunion, are beginning to be fulfilled, especially the promise that if the people would be faithful, God would make it possible for the elders to separate out the ones who should be added to the kingdom, to such an extent that the church buildings would not be able to hold their members.

Missionary work has been started at Salem, Oregon, where Elder Marcus H. Cook was sent to hold meetings at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Zielke. These services were well attended throughout the series and at the close eleven people asked for baptism.

Work has also been progressing at Sherwood, Oregon, where Elder Harold I. Velt has been conducting meetings. This mission has gained four people as a result and the members are much encouraged.

Elder J. L. Verhei and his associates have been holding cottage meetings at different homes in Portland and have recently added four new members to the church. The Portland priesthood and musical department have contributed largely to the success of all these missionary efforts.

The three groups united in a beautiful baptismal service solemnized in Portland, February 18. Special music and decorations added to the beauty of the service. Six of the candidates were baptized the preceding Sunday and thirteen on the eighteenth.

The gift of prophecy was enjoyed at the confirmation services both Sundays and Portland Saints were admonished concerning their responsibility. The gathering was told that God is pleased with the work of the priesthood but displeased with contending powers that detract in any way from the work of any department group. Several young men were spoken to and admonished to qualify for service.

The district president plans to organize a mission at Salem as soon as possible. He met with them the Wednesday evening following the baptism to hold a prayer service.

Wray, Colorado

United in Purpose

Wray Branch extends sincere sympathy to Brother Ward A. Hougas in the loss of his wife. The members living here loved both Brother and Sister Hougas who labored in this district.

During the last month this branch has been quite active. One afternoon all meet at the church and worked on the grounds to make possible an attractive lawn this spring and summer.

Everyone is striving now to solve the problem of paying the building debt. Last summer they enlarged their church and added a basement. Now they have the debt considerably reduced. To assist in this project the women served a chili supper the evening of February 17, netting a sum of more than twenty dollars. Things are done here with a spirit of cooperation by church members and those outside the church. The Saints are grateful to the townspeople for their help.

Near the first of the month the women's department gave a party for the Sunday school. On February 23, the young people entertained the Sunday school. The young people are planning many things for the future in connection with their study class.

San Francisco, California

Park-Presidio Branch, Richmond Masonic Temple, 405 Arguello Boulevard

On the evening of February 15, this branch celebrated its seventh anniversary and reception for Apostle John W. Rushton with a banquet at Milligan's Restaurant. Plates had been laid for one hundred at a table horse-shoe in shape, and the banquet began at six-thirty. Both Danvers Street and Berkeley churches were well represented, but the greater number present were friends who regularly attend the Saints' activities. The Saints of Park-Presidio group number but thirty-three.

As a mark of respect to Brother Rushton the Park-Presidio Kiwanis Club was well represented. Brother Rushton was made a member of this club prior to his departure for Europe.

The program committee consisting of Sister Ruth Waller Clegg, Sister Alice Wadhams, Miss Evelyn Miller and Sister Bessie Bohall Holling, had left nothing undone in the matter of providing entertainment.

At the head of the table were seated Elder Edward W. Nelson, branch president who gave the address of welcome; Apostle John W. Rushton, guest of honor; John B. Carmichael, who delivered the first sermon in this group; Elders Arthur Oakman, George S. Lincoln, H. W. Savage, Howard Carpenter, and Priest A. L. Holling who was toastmaster.

The program was composed of vocal selections by Miss Ora V. Lambert who is not a member but has given unstintingly of her time and talents to the group. She was assisted by Sister Christina Waller, accompanist. Sister Waller did all of the accompanying for the evening. There were also a splendid reading by Sister Dutie Goff, sr., vocal selections by Mrs. Woolley; tenor solos by Brother Eugene Mustar; a musical skit by Sister Helen Goff Roth assisted by her sister, Cleo Goff; three readings by Miss Elaine Thompson, a woman much sought after by organizations on account of her marvelous impersonations of children, and a fine baritone solo by Elder Arthur Oakman.

After the entertainment, speech making was in order, and the toastmaster called upon Brother Oakman who spoke of his happiness at being present and extended a hearty welcome to Brother Rushton. Brother Rushton was then called upon and as might be expected was the shining light of the evening.

Everyone declared this event most successful, but from all indications the next anniversary celebration will be greater in every respect.

Independence

March 4, was widely observed as a day of fasting and prayer in Independence, the Saints complying with the official call to fast issued to the general church, and as a result communion and prayer hours were blessed with the spirit of peace and consecration.

Elder and Sister Richard Bullard celebrated their fifty-second wedding anniversary at their home in Independence March 1. Brother Bullard has been an active member of the church for fifty years, serving as bishop and evangelist, respectively, for thirty-four years. They were married in London, England, March 1, 1882, and came to America the following year, living in Providence, Rhode Island, and Boston, Massachusetts, for twenty-five years. Both are eighty-two years of age.

Stone Church

The upper auditorium of the Stone Church was filled to capacity at the communion hour Sunday morning. An impressive service was conducted by the following men of the ministry: H. G. Barto, C. Ed Miller, C. I. Carpenter, R. T. Cooper, John F. Sheehy, J. Stanley Kelley, and Carroll L. Olson. Paul N. Craig led the congregational singing, and Hazel Scott Withee played the organ.

A much larger crowd than usual participated in the overflow communion service held in the lower auditorium at the same hour, T. A. Beck in charge, assisted by D. S. McNamara, Vernon Reese, and Albert Brackenbury.

The largest Sunday afternoon prayer meeting had in a number of years, was held in the lower auditorium beginning at two-thirty. Pastor John F. Sheehy was in charge assisted by Elders Richard Bullard and William Ecclestone. The room was completely filled, there being about five hundred present, and the meeting was very active. Upstairs at the same hour the monthly priesthood meeting was in session.

Elder A. M. Chase, the evening speaker, gave a discourse rich with admonition and advice to the Saints.

The Stone Church Choir furnished music for the service, directed by Paul N. Craig. They sang "The Ninety and Nine," Albert Brackenbury, bass soloist.

Second Church

There was a fine attendance at the early morning prayer service Sunday, the hour being devoted to prayer and song.

An organ prelude, played by Mrs. Sam Inman, opened the sacrament service. Pastor Will Inman was in charge, assisted by men of the local priesthood. The oblation talk was by Elder Odum, and Elder J. F. Robinson delivered the communion address.

Patriarch Albert Carmichael was the evening speaker, his theme being "The Financial Law." The choir furnished the music for the evening, assisted by Miss Hazel Clow, who sang a vocal solo. The choir director, Brother Earl Audet, has returned, after an absence of two months.

An increased interest is apparent at the midweek prayer meetings.

Liberty Street Church

As a direct result of the series of meetings conducted in January by Apostle M. A. McConley, three persons were baptized in the Walnut Park font February 18, by Elder John R. Lentell. The new members are Lottie Bell Tousley and her two daughters, Geraldine Charlotte Drake, thirteen, and Charline Mildred Drake, eleven. They were confirmed in the evening by Ammon White, John Soderstadt and John R. Lentell.

Partly because of the success of the last series of meetings in making converts and in renewing the spirit of fellowship among members, but largely because of repeated requests from the Saints of this district, another week of meetings is to be enjoyed from March 11 to 18. The services will start with the eleven o'clock hour March 11, Elder J. W. A. Bailey the speaker. He gave an introductory sermon last Sunday night to a large congregation. These services should be well attended due to the fact that missionary meetings will not be held simultaneously in any other district of the city. The young people, especially, are cooperating to make this a successful series.

Walnut Park

The blizzard of Sunday morning, February 25, cut the attendance at the church school to one hundred forty-nine, and one hundred eighteen were counted at the eleven o'clock church service. The juniors from the lower auditorium joined with the adults for this service, Elder C. Ed. Miller preaching the sermon. At the close of the meeting, Pastor Frank McDonald announced that due to the storm all other services of the day would be dismissed, and the regular priesthood meeting which was to have been held in the afternoon was postponed until Sunday, March 11.

In sharp contrast to the preceding Sabbath, March 4 proved to be an ideal spring day, bringing out four hundred and forty-nine for church school and a near record-breaking attendance at communion service.

Preceding the church school session Brother Erwin Moorman baptized two young girls, Dorothy Margaret Via, daughter of Harry Via, and Laura Elizabeth Moorman, daughter of Brother and Sister Erwin Moorman. They were confirmed during the communion service by Pastor Frank McDonald and Elder M. T. Williams.

Brother Albert Chapman, a former superintendent of the church school, who has moved out of the district, was a visitor at Sunday morning's session and spoke a few words of encouragement to the school and its officers.

Pastor Frank McDonald presided over the sacrament service, assisted by Elders Royden Barnhardt and M. T. Williams. After the serving of the emblems to the large congregation, Elder Benjamin Bean offered a prayer in behalf of the coming General Conference, the day having been set aside for fasting and prayer for the success of the general church. As the service approached its close the pastor spoke in his inspiring and forceful way of the need of people adapting themselves to whatever conditions they are called upon to face and taking their religion into all activities.

At two-thirty the Walnut Park Young People's Council met, and heard encouraging reports on the recent drive for the filing of inventories. This organization is doing a good work in sponsoring beneficial projects among the young people.

Elder S. S. Smith was the speaker at the Sunday evening service.

Spring Branch Church

Sixty-four were present at the early Sunday morning prayer service in charge of M. C. Jacobsen, R. Fish, and J. Andes.

Brother A. J. Tankard was missed at the Sunday school session Sunday morning. All hope he will be able to return soon.

The sacrament service was in charge of the pastor assisted by Jesse Smith, Leonard White, and Robert Fish. F. A. Cool sang "Tis Jesus," accompanied by his wife.

The playlet, "Daniel in the Lion's Den," was presented by the men's class at the evening church school, Sister Fish directing.

Jesse Smith, the evening speaker, chose as his theme "Repentance." His text was Mark 1:15. Music was by Alma, Imogean, and Gladys Dixon, who sang "The Pilgrim's Journey." The three Dixon girls and Fern Belk gave a quartet number after the prayer.

Enoch Hill

The church was filled with worshipers for the communion service Sunday morning. Sister Millard Pace, Sister Rilla Johnson, and Sister Charles Warren sang a trio number. Brother Joseph Martin was in charge of the service, assisted by Pastor E. A. Thomas and Elder C. E. Beal.

In the evening Patriarch Ammon White chose for the basis of his fine sermon Revelation 13. The choir sang "God Is Love," and a quartet, Sister John Jones, Brother and Sister Charles Warren, and E. A. Thomas, sang "O, Lord Most Merciful."

Far West Stake

The next major event in Far West Stake is the annual conference to be held March 9, 10, and 11 at Saint Joseph. This year's conference is to be more of an evangelistic gathering, and the program promises many good things with Apostles J. W. Rushton and J. F. Garver as guest speakers.

Trenton Mission

An outstanding day was enjoyed at Trenton Mission Sunday, February 18, when Bishop Milo Burnett and his two counselors, Elders John E. Hovenga and M. H. Hinderks, spent the day with the Saints. At the morning service four candidates were baptized by Pastor E. E. Gamet. A basket lunch was spread at noon. Bishop Burnett preached at one-thirty after which a round-table discussion was conducted by the bishopric on finances. A wonderful spirit of enthusiasm and hope was manifested on the part of all, and there was a greater determination to carry on shown which bodes well for the work at Trenton. The Saints are laboring under the burden of a local debt but, with the spirit expressed that day, they have high hopes of putting their work across in splendid style and making definite progress.

Saint Joseph Branch

Third Church

Although this group of Saints is small in number, they are proud to report that they now have three good organizations for their young people. An Oriole circle has been organized under the leadership of Miss Irene Tracy for the teen age girls. They are planning an initiation service for a Sunday evening in the near future. A Boy Scout troop, with Charles Powell as scoutmaster, is organized and has good response. The O. T. Z.'s meet regularly under the leadership of Sister Maud Brown. They held their first prayer service of the year on February 18. A good spirit prevailed.

The women's department hold regular meetings every Thursday. A good number attends faithfully each week. They are quilting at present.

Attendance at Third is on the upgrade and the prospects are for an active and profitable year. Besides the local priesthood, Brother L. Warren Hill, pastor of Fourth Church, and Brother Richard W. Mason and Elder John Ruoff have occupied the pulpit within the last month.

Fourth Church

The pastor at Fourth Church has selected Elder T. E. Hale as his assistant in the pastorate there and Brother Hale is giving some helpful service on Sunday evenings and at the religio on Friday evenings. He is continuing at First Church in the mornings where he teaches a large Book of Mormon class.

The Sunday evening prayer services, held at six-thirty each Sunday evening, have been encouraging and a good attendance has been present even on the coldest days.

The women met at the home of Mrs. A. Ruoff Thursday, March 1, and pieced a quilt top.

Brother C. A. Vernon, of Stewartsville, gave an interesting talk Sunday morning, February 11, and Elder H. C. Timm preached that evening. Brother R. D. Peterson, pastor of Third Church, occupied the pulpit the morning of February 18, and Elder T. E. Hale was the speaker the evening of February 25. The pastor also spoke one Sunday evening.

Mallard, Iowa

Going Forward in All Departments

This branch has been without the services of a publicity agent for some time, but since the branch business meeting in December the vacancy has been filled. Brother T. Fish was sustained branch president and Mrs. Fred Hahn was elected to the office of church school supervisor to succeed Mrs. Edith Truog who served efficiently in that office for three years and is now supervisor of young people.

Kathlyn Kolarich and Betty Hahn who are attending college this year, were home for the holidays and the week-end of February 9 to 11.

Herbert Barrett, of Independence, was a visitor in this branch February 11.

Miss Violet Hahn is teaching at Laurens, Iowa, this year, and is able to visit home frequently. Local members are pleased to have her assisting in church work here.

Vyron Truog and Mary Ward won first place in the high school declamatory contest in the oratorical and dramatic classes respectively.

At times church attendance has suffered due to the number ill in the congregation.

Azalia Branch, Michigan

Young People Are Alert and Active

A group of young people from this branch attended a young people's convention held at Pontiac February 25. They were Elnora Baisch, Lewata Helmick, Wanda Ferguson, Melissia Carney, Viola Kidd, Ted Helmick, Ralph Baisch, Jesse Masten, and Lloyd Baisch. They were accompanied by Sister Margery Mastin and Ruth Helmick, of Monroe, and Elder Clyde Gault, of Detroit. Delegates were elected at the convention to attend the conference at Independence in April. Sister Lewata Helmick was chosen to go from this branch.

The young people enjoyed a Valentine party at the home of Sister George Baisch.

Book of Mormon play, "A Voice From Out of the Ground," written by Sister Gault of Detroit, was presented at the church the evening of February 25.

Sister Esther Swanson passed away at the Leland Sanitarium February 21. She will be greatly missed by the members of the branch for she was an active worker in the cause of Christ. For seven years she was president of the women's department.

Jay, Florida

Young People Share in Church School Responsibilities

The Saints of the McArthur group are moving along rapidly. They seem to have a great interest, especially the young people. The young people's class in the church school is always crowded, mostly with nonmembers. This class is in charge of Brother Sidney McCall.

The church school has an enrollment of about fifty, with almost a ninety percent attendance average for the quarter.

Every third Sunday the classes are in charge of the service, assisted by the teachers. Every fourth Sunday the young people are in charge of the entire church school. The last fourth Sunday, church school was in charge of Brother Burton McArthur, assisted by Ross McCurdy and Myron McCall. A splendid program was given. This arrangement creates much interest and trains teachers and leaders.

On a recent Wednesday evening the prayer service was in charge of W. J. McQueen. By request of the one in charge, the theme was the coming General Conference. Many humble prayers asked that the Spirit of the Lord might rest upon the leaders and delegates, that they might be divinely directed in their work. Saints are looking forward with prayerfulness to this conference.

A visit from District President A. D. McCall is expected soon. Brother McCall is a welcome visitor, and always has a message of cheer and admonition.

Kansas City Stake

The stake series of meetings which began February 18, at Central Church, closed the evening of the twenty-fifth. Owing to cold and stormy weather attendance was not as good as was expected, but about fifteen nonmembers were present at each session. Apostle Roy S. Budd, the appointed speaker, was incapacitated by slight illness the first two evenings, and Apostle F. Henry Edwards occupied. Both speakers proved themselves valiant defenders of the cause. George Anway was the song leader, and others who furnished music were Mrs. Helen Harrington, Otis Schwartz, the Central Choir, Brother Lester Fowler, and Brother White.

Themes presented during the series were "Faith and Revelation," "Repentance," "Forgiveness," "Baptism of the Holy Spirit," "The Resurrection," and "Will Ye Also Go Away?"

Central Church

At the Sunday night service February 25, the last of the series of missionary sermons by Apostle Roy S. Budd, the stake choir, directed by Eugene Christy, gave a splendid rendition of "Thanks Be to God," from the "Elijah." As a special number Elizabeth Hitchcock sang "Forever With the Lord," by Gounod, being accompanied by Mildred Connelly.

Wallace Burlington was injured in an automobile accident last Tuesday evening and is at Menorah Hospital. Unless unforeseen complications arise, attending physicians believe he will recover in a few days.

Brother Fred S. Anderson, who was recently confined to his bed by a stroke of paralysis, is rapidly improving.

North East Church

Activities here continue very well. Some members who have to come a distance of two or three miles, have no transportation and yet they are usually present at services.

Howard Bailey came home for a visit from one of the C. C. C. camps, and all were happy to see him.

Elder Edward Larson was the speaker the morning of February 18. That evening the associate stake president, Elder George Mesley, spoke. Brother Mesley is the stake leader of the O. B. K.'s.

The wedding of Brother Claude Baggerley and Sister Zuber occurred at the church February 17, Elder Henry F. Davis officiating. A reception for the newlyweds was held at the home of Mrs. Miller, opposite the church, after the ceremony. These talented young people are very faithful in their church attendance and always ready to assist. Their friends wish them much happiness.

Grandview Church

A young people's forum has been organized by Pastor C. G. Mesley, to meet each Sunday evening at 6:30 p. m. Average attendance is twenty-five. They enjoy a varied program of music, songs, book reviews, talks, etc.

The Stone Church Junior Unit of the Auditorium Orchestra gave a concert for a recent evening service. This group is composed of twenty-five members from nine years old and up, and is directed by Brother Leon Snow.

The La-Da-Sa Club gave a tea February 20, at the home of Sister Theodore Foley instead of having their luncheon. More than sixteen dollars were turned into the church.

Mrs. Ed. Shane, of the Jewish Council of clubs, will address this club March 20.

The orchestra, directed by Sister Juno Cook and Mr. Milan Mahale, has been popular this winter, playing for different organizations and activities. Recently they played at an Americanization and citizenship meeting held in the county courthouse. About half the orchestra are nonmembers, but they are very liberal with their time and talent for church school programs.

The February church school programs have been in honor of Abraham Lincoln, the Boy Scouts, youth and Christian work, and George Washington. Judge Clarke E. Tucker reviewed the life of Washington and his laws of civility.

Patriarch Albert Carmichael gave a series of Sunday night talks during February on "The Godhead."

Chadwick, Missouri

Saints Favorably Regarded Here

Chadwick members have been greatly encouraged and strengthened recently by a visit from District President W. E. Haden.

Brother Haden preached several evenings, assisted by Elder S. W. Simmons, who occupied in the pulpit three evenings. The church was crowded nearly every night with an attentive audience.

Chadwick Branch is composed of only a small group, but all are in the work with their whole souls and each one is doing missionary work among friends and neighbors. The members of the other churches here work with the Saints, and are favorable toward them. This group especially appreciated the kindness of other denominations in asking them to hold all of their services in the union church, a commodious stone building, equipped with piano and opera seats.

Chadwick congregation has one resident member of the priesthood, an elder. And a teacher, Charles Stogsdell, of Taneyville, meets with them frequently.

Ogden, Utah

Mission of Elder and Sister Frank Veenstra Appreciated

The short mission of Brother and Sister Frank Veenstra was appreciated by this congregation.

January 18, Ogden Saints took their supper and surprised this couple, in honor of Elder Veenstra's birthday.

A farewell program, in charge of Miriam Winholtz, was given in honor of this missionary pair, January 23. Several musical numbers were rendered by Sister Dorcas Cunningham, Sister Virgie Chase, Arline Blakeman, Alta Hodson, and Miriam Winholtz. Readings were given by Gerald Winholtz and Douglas Blakeman. Speakers for this occasion were H. E. Robinson and Sister Jennie Winholtz, of Ogden; Elder Conyers and Elder R. R. Robertson, of Salt Lake City. Several Saints of Salt Lake City were also present, in addition to friends and relatives of the honored guests. Light refreshments were served by the women's department.

Those living in large branches hardly realize what a quorum of priesthood means to a branch. This congregation boasts an active priest, Gerald Winholtz, and a deacon, H. E. Robison.

The willingness of Salt Lake City elders to administer, is greatly appreciated by the members of this congregation. They have several sick and afflicted members.

Although Ogden Branch is small, they are active. The religio, under the direction of Miriam Winholtz, is progressing rapidly.

A recent program observed the birthdays of George Washington, and President F. M. Smith. Programs and parties are enjoyed on holidays and other special occasions.

February 26, the Saints commemorated the forty-first anniversary since the Ogden Branch was organized in the valleys of the mountains. Also, January 6, the silver wedding anniversary of Brother and Sister Winholtz, was celebrated.

The women's department has been busy this year, making quilts which have been ordered for sale, and some for their own use.

The branch is continuing Wednesday evening prayer services, Pastor Gerald Winholtz in charge. These meetings are encouraging and uplifting.

East Bay Church

Berkeley, California

Saints of East Bay Church were happy to welcome Apostle John W. Rushton. He had endeared himself to all during his ministry in the bay area and a large congregation gathered the evening of February 18, to hear his address. Following the prayer service February 28, a reception was held in his honor.

A rally for the women was held the afternoon of January 28. Elder Arthur Oakman had charge of the meeting, being assisted by Elder Guy P. Levitt. The purpose of this rally was to organize all women for active service. A feeling of unity is growing as the result of this project.

One of the outstanding sermons presented from this pulpit recently was that delivered by Brother Roy Weldon on "The Purposes of God." He left in the mind of each listener the question: Am I answering the purpose of my creation?

Reverence and dignity characterized the evening's program February 11, in charge of the young people. Five young men, including the pastor, occupied the pulpit and caused the congregation to sense the significance and beauty of youthful service. The young people hold early morning prayer services one Sunday each month where spiritual blessings attest to the fact that the youth are growing in faith and works.

The general prayer services have this same atmosphere of unity and purpose. Attendance is rapidly increasing. Prayers and testimonies are from the heart and full of humility and the desire for spiritual development.

It has been recently said of East Bay Saints that their church has reached its spiritual peak until the homes of the members make more progress spiritually. With this in mind a class in "Religious Education in the Home," has been organized. Sister Elva Sturges is teaching this class of mothers and others who are eager to increase the spirituality of their homes.

East Bay Saints will greatly miss Elder Eli Bronson whose business has taken him to Seattle, Washington, for an indefinite period of time. He was always ready and willing to serve in any capacity. His farewell sermon was preached the evening of February 4.

Apostle John W. Rushton was in charge of the sacrament service March 4, to which the Saints were requested to come fasting and praying for spiritual blessing.

Our Departed Ones

GRAFF.—David Graff was born at Somonauk, Illinois, September 22, 1845. He moved to Nebraska and was one of the early settlers of Gage County. Arriving there in 1875. He lived there a highly respected citizen until death claimed him February 23, 1934. Was baptized by Hyrum O. Smith about fifty years ago, and though isolated from church associations, he and his wife held dear the ideals of the gospel. For a few years past his strength has gradually gone, but his companion patiently cared for him with the assistance others could render. He leaves his wife, and four sons, Alpha, John, Clarence, and Fordyce, all of Beatrice, Nebraska. The funeral services were held February 25, at Harmon Johnson Funeral Home, at Beatrice, the sermon being by Elder E. J. Lenox, of Lincoln. Interment was in Evergreen Home Cemetery at Beatrice.

WILSON.—Susan Wilson was born in 1853. She died at her home in Toronto, Ontario, November 23, 1933. She was baptized March 12, 1907, by the late R. C. Evans. She was survived by three sons, James, William H., and John. She remained faithful to the church until death. The funeral sermon was by Bishop A. F. McLean.

WILSON.—William H. Wilson, son of Susan Wilson, was born July 2, 1895, and died suddenly at his home in Toronto, Ontario, January 5, 1934, from pneumonia. He was baptized by the late R. C. Evans, August 17, 1913. He leaves a wife and two young children to mourn his death. It was owing to this brother's love for the Saints of Toronto and nearby places that the reunion grounds were bought and maintained at Lowbanks on Lake Erie. He loved to hear of the success of the Saints gathered in their summer camp. The funeral sermon was by Bishop A. F. McLean.

McDOWELL.—Elizabeth Jane Williams was born at Brigham City, Utah, January 14, 1855. She was united in marriage to Joseph F. McDowell, June 28, 1887, at Council Bluffs, Iowa. To them was born one son, Numa L. McDowell, now living at Council Bluffs. The husband preceded her in death two or three years ago. She moved to Magnolia in 1889 and lived there until a year ago when failing health forced her to abandon her home and go to live with her son. Her name has always been closely linked with the church and she has left an enviable record of service. She was a tireless worker and successful leader in the Sunday school almost her entire life at Magnolia. She was president for a time of the ladies' aid society and a charter member of the Happy Hour Club. Died at Council Bluffs, February 6, 1934. Surviving are her son; two sisters, Mrs. Hannah Remington, of Chicago, and Mrs. Sarah Bradshaw, of Council Bluffs; three brothers, John Williams, of Dillon, Montana, Henry Williams, of Linwood, Utah, and Robert Williams, of Omaha, Nebraska; three grandchildren, and many friends. Elder H. A. Merchant officiated at her funeral.

SALISBURY.—Frederick V. Salisbury, son of Wilkins J., and Catherine Salisbury, sister of Joseph Smith, the Seer, was born January 27, 1850, at Webster, Illinois. He married Mary Josephine Brewer at Fountain Green, Illinois, December 24, 1874. She was called away by death July 30, 1914. To them six children were born, two daughters and four sons. The eldest daughter, Flora E., died at Burnside, Illinois, in 1921. Julia E. Salisbury, Meril, John F., Ammon S., and Alfred H., live in Independence, Missouri. The deceased was baptized at Burnside, May 31, 1873, by J. R. Lambert. Later he was ordained a deacon. His death occurred at the family home at Independence, February 24, 1934, after an illness of several months. His faith in the divinity of the gospel never wavered during the sixty-one years of his association with the church. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Joseph Luff, and interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LIVINGSTON.—Sheridan E. Livingston was born January 26, 1865, at Trempealeau, Wisconsin; passed away in death at his home in the Porcupine Valley, Wisconsin, February 23, 1934. He suffered a severe stroke December 28, 1933, and later developed neuralgia of the heart which caused his death. He was a long-time member of Frankford Branch, located in Porcupine Valley. Was for many years the branch president and assisted in the district, being at time district president. He was also active in farm organization work, and leaves many friends both in and out of the church. Surviving are his wife, two daughters, six son, two brothers, one sister, many other relatives. The funeral was held from the Saints' church near his home February 26. This was one of the largest attended funerals held in this vicinity for many years. The sermon was by Elder Leonard Houghton, assisted by Elder U. R. Shedd. Interment was in Porcupine Cemetery not far from the church.

CONFERENCE ANNOUNCEMENTS

■ The "Elijah" will be given on the evening of Sunday, April 8, in the Auditorium. Admission is free. Everybody is invited.

■ The Laurel Club will serve meals for visitors in the Auditorium. The meals are not free but they will be worth the money. And the profits go to the church.

■ Women singers in The Elijah chorus are requested to wear white—PLAIN white—dresses.

■ The new Quarterlies are now ready. See page 330 of this issue.

■ The bargain price on the Conference Daily Herald last until March 23 only. Until then it is 50c. On that date the regular list closes, and it will cost you 65c to get on a special late list. Hurry!

■ Girl Scouts and Orioles will divide time in charge of the check room at the Auditorium. The Orioles are planning to have a nursery to care for small children, and the Scouts will maintain a rest room for women visitors.

■ Bury the Hatchet

An editorial in the Printers' Ink Monthly says:

"They who took the sword were warned, by a great teacher, that they would perish by the sword. History has proved that swords are sharp boomerangs; that victors in great wars are little better off than losers.

"Business leaders who seize the sword of highly competitive advertising to slay a rival find too often that they slay not the rival but the market. By inspiring doubts in the minds of prospects, they undermine the confidence which creates every sale, their own product included."

And the eminent editor might have added that the same principle applies to religion. Preachers who always have the hatchet out for other people's religions are in danger of getting badly nicked. Competitive denominationalism is one of the things that have destroyed confidence in Christianity. Ministers who think the only way to get converts is to steal them from the fold of some other church start depredations that make hatred and trouble. If there were no unconverted people left in the world one could understand this raiding business, but there are as many unconverted people in the world as there are church members. And if the competitive war goes on there will probably be more and more unconverted people. Attacking another religion makes the listener suspect that your religion, too, is no good. The gospel of Christ would make some real progress if it could rid itself of the zealots who itch to go to war.

■ Our Affirmative Program

We can do great good if we try to interest the worthy people who attend no church and belong to no denomination. By working steadily on our own affirmative program we can teach the gospel of Christ and build the kingdom of God. Then, if others observe any superior merit in us they will come to us.

Our Debt Lessens

In another column will be found an article over the signature of the Presiding Bishop, Brother Curry, which is of more than passing interest to the members of the church. That we have been able under the conditions prevailing the past three years especially the past year, to accomplish the result indicated, is gratifying. How this has been done is indicated by Bishop Curry. This doubtless means a lowering of the amount of our net worth; but if, as is probably the case, it means also a marked reduction of the interest to be paid, then it means a lightening of our annual load. And under the conditions prevailing, it is wise to do this even if the net worth shrinks and a loss must be sustained on some of the properties turned.

We congratulate the Bishopric on the showing made, and feel that the figures will fortify the confidence of the Saints in those who are administering the finances of the church.

There yet remains for us much to do, but we may take up the task with better heart.

F. M. S.

Divine Guidance

Divine guidance is only for those who can make use of it, and it continues only with those who will make use of it. The book of Genesis records the saying of the Lord: "My spirit shall not always strive with man." It is easy for a people to take pleasure in the feeling of exaltation experienced when receiving Divine guidance and communion. It is suspected that some attend prayer meetings week after week with no other purpose in mind.

The whole purpose of Divine guidance is that something shall be done about it. If we do nothing about it, it is likely to cease.

When a task assigned is completed, it is time for a new task to be assigned. Until it is completed, it is absurd to clamor for new light on new tasks.

We know very well what we ought to do. We must work to pay off the church debt. We must learn to pay our tithes and file our inventories. We must live better lives. We must be minded more toward spiritual affairs and less toward material things. We must learn to live in harmony together. The Lord has done his part. It is our move next. We may be sure that he will bless us if we go to work and obey his will, and fulfill his law.

We still have hope of contact with the Divine mind. We may be sure that God will richly bless us if we go to work and obey his will and fulfill his law. One of the prophets has said:

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room to receive it."—Malachi 3 : 10.

Blue Pencil Notes

"Mrs. Grundy" is proverbially busy—but it is a fact, sometimes overlooked, that Mr. Grundy is not a slow worker.

Many a "hit and run" gossip rambles right on, not even conscious that she (or he) has run someone down and perhaps left a lasting injury.

One hundred years ago the prophet said:

"All things shall be in commotion, and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25.

The modern world has seldom moved in a more perplexing chaos. Most of its rulers and statesmen seem to be engaged in a game of blind man's bluff.—Francis W. Hirst, British publicist, former editor The Economist, London. In Literary Digest, March 3, 1934.

Not long ago Admiral Byrd, broadcasting from Little America, in the seclusion of the Antarctic, said, in substance, "Judging from the radiograms reporting current events in the various nations the world seems to us down here to have gone entirely cock eyed."

Our Auditorium guides, Elders J. W. A. Bailey and C. J. Hunt, desire to obtain a great number of the Saints Herald for January 30, 1934. These are for use in their tract work among Auditorium visitors. Will you send them your Herald of that date? Just three cents for a postage stamp will enable you to share in their missionary work. My great grandfather looked for the redemption of Zion, but did not live to see it. My grandfathers (paternal and maternal) both looked for the redemption of Zion; so also did my father. They did not see their dreams realized. Is that ground for discouragement? Should I despair and falter or turn aside? No, I am but impressed with the conviction that Zion is a sort of climax of the whole religion of Christ and is not come at easily. Generations lead up to its complete fulfillment. Though I may never see in my own life the things that I work toward, if my efforts shall aid other generations to dwell in a fully redeemed Zion I shall be happy—even if I can do no more now than help keep the vision alive and maintain the integrity of those foundations that my forefathers laid with the help of God. If it comes tomorrow I shall be happy—if it be delayed beyond my day, let me be patient and not give ground. "Though great the task that lies before us, we trust in one divinely strong."

Notice to Conference Singers

Only a few short weeks remain for final rehearsals of the "Elijah." We hope that many of you are planning to join us. The ladies should arrange to wear white dresses and the men dark suits. Dresses of the plainest cotton materials such as Hoover aprons or nurses uniforms will be quite satisfactory. The only essential is that they be plain white.

The soloists for the occasion will be Elder Arthur Oakman, baritone; Mrs. Pauline James Arnson, soprano; Mrs. S. A. Burgess, contralto, and Mr. George Anway, tenor. We are all looking forward to a genuinely fine production under Brother Hoxie's enthusiastic direction. Young singers who have never met Brother Hoxie have a splendid treat in store for them. Let us all give our best efforts during the remaining weeks to insure a smooth and inspired performance.

The New Testament abounds with many beautiful symbols and figures. Knowing the love of the people of the Orient for these things, Jesus gave a parable of the goodly pearl. In it he represents the pearl as something of unsurpassing beauty and intrinsic worth. It symbolizes the gospel. Of such excellence is the gospel that to obtain it, we should surrender all as did the merchant to secure the pearl. In selling all we cannot dispose of our sense of honor, love of home and family, and the right to serve all worthy causes that we may possess this pearl. These virtues of life form a perfect setting for the pearl which is the gospel of Jesus Christ.—An original prologue written by William L. Goudy, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, to the drama, "The Most Precious Gift."

The nobleness of life depends on its consistency, clearness of purpose, quiet, ceaseless energy.—Ruskin.

Men You Ought to Know

FREDERICK A. SMITH
Presiding Patriarch

The life of our Presiding Patriarch represents a steady progress in the work of the church. Our statistical records show the following dates marking his advancement: Baptized 1877; ordained a deacon 1882; priest, 1890; elder, 1891; seventy, 1894; high priest, 1900; apostle, 1902; patriarch, 1913.

This gives a total of fifty-seven years as a member, and fifty-two years of service in the priesthood. Since the turn of the century he has been continuously in touch with church people as officer and advisor.

Meals at the Conference

A great convenience for conference visitors will be provided by the Laurel Club of Independence by the serving of meals within the building, as the club has done during other recent conferences.

The equipment for the Auditorium kitchen and dining room has been provided by the Laurel Club, and all profits from their operations are given to the church. Their work is donated.

Visitors are saved the fatigue and inconvenience of walking long distances for meals and are also protected from the danger of being caught by changes in the weather when they eat at the Auditorium dining hall. Many residents of Independence prefer to take meals there rather than spend valuable time at home cooking during the busy days of conference. It is provided for your comfort and welfare. You will be sure to like it.

Only 50 cents for a ticket to General Conference—via Conference Daily Herald. Price goes up after March 23.

The Sacrament

A letter came to us from an elder inclosing one he had received from a member asking a question concerning the sacrament, or Lord's Supper. It seems that the member had been confused by advice given her by one of our traveling representatives, which was at variance with what had been presented in our columns as the teaching or practice of the church. The question was as to the matter of close communion or vice versa.

We are believers in the Lord's Supper being an occasion when our covenant is renewed. This logically makes us close communionists since we accept baptism only when had at the hands and under the administration of our own ordained ministers.

To us baptism means making a covenant with God and our brethren, one of obedience to divine mandates and Christian following, and of fraternal cooperation in achieving Divine purposes in the fulfillment of His plans. As we are exclusive in making this covenant only under the ministrations of those with authority to minister, so we must be exclusive in renewing this covenant, renewing it under the ministration of those authorized to do so, and by and with those who have taken the covenant we are wont to renew.

This explains why we do not invite those not of our faith to partake of the Lord's Supper with us. To partake of the emblems with those of other faiths who do not consider it a renewal of a covenant might do little or no harm. To partake with those who consider it a renewal of a covenant different from what we have taken would obviously be wrong unless repudiation is intended.

So in the light of this attitude it is well for us to be close communionists, now as in the past.

The Sacrament Propitiatory

Brother J. E. MacGregor, president of London Branch, Ontario, asks if it is "sound doctrine to teach or to preach that the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is for the remission of sins?"

There is a difference between saying that the sacrament "is for the remission of sins" and that "the sacrament if properly administered and taken will be propitiatory in effect. As we believe that the sacrament is a renewal of the covenant made at baptism; and so baptism may be propitiatory if following proper repentance; so it is consistent to believe that the renewal of the covenant if preceded by proper play of the spirit of repentance will have the effect of bringing about an atonement. But this is different from saying that "the sacrament is for the remission of sins." It should not be so taught.

Use of Tobacco and Liquor

A BRANCH PRESIDENT asks: "Is it in harmony with the law of the church for a district conference to pass the following motion: 'That we do not sustain any minister holding license who uses tobacco, or uses liquor as a beverage.'"

Yes. It is, I think, quite well understood that a district conference or a branch could not rightfully determine what are the factors for eligibility to priesthood rights or responsibilities, yet either branch or district might rightfully declare their unwillingness to sustain one holding the priesthood who fails to maintain a standard of conduct which will develop and retain respect. And I am glad to see a determination on the part of local organizations to expect and demand a higher standard of living on the part of our ministers. I may add that those who have accepted priesthood ordinations should expect to have to be more exemplary in conduct.

$41,000.00 Debts Paid in 1933

Labor without reward, sacrifice without result, both are very disheartening. There may have been times during the past two years when some thought both applied to our situation. But that was the short-range view. The long-range view, possible at the end of the year 1933, really was encouraging, for it showed a further reduction in the debts of the general church and the development associations of $41,064.29.

A comparison shows what happened:

Liabilities as at	Dec. 31, 1931	Dec. 31, 1932	Dec. 31, 1933
General Church and Development Associations	$1,608,370.28	$1,511,495.60	$1,470,431.31
Debts paid		96,874.68	41,064.29

Audited balance sheets for Graceland, Herald, Sanitarium, and "Campus" are not yet available, but the combined debts of these approximate $250,000.00. Our TOTAL DEBT, therefore, may not accurately be stated, but it should stand about as follows:

Dec. 31, 1931,	$1,866,000.00
Dec. 31, 1933,	1,720,000.00

Income for 1933 was not as favorable as for the preceding year, as the following figures disclose:

	1932	1933
Gross Income	$285,543.06	$226,105.39
Decrease		59,437.67

On the other hand, by continued exercise of economy in spending our outgo was kept below the previous year:

	1932	1933
Total expense, after reserves	$278,925.97	$243,866.75
Decrease		35,059.22

We finished 1931 with a surplus after reserves of $36,569.37; 1932 with a surplus of $6,617.09. The year 1933 showed a deficit after reserves of $17,761.36. This deficit at the end of October, 1933, was about $27,000.00. The year-end sum included $9,500.00, representing losses in real estate operations of $8,000.00, and a reserve for bank losses on agents' and solicitors' accounts of $1,500.00. The year just closed was worse, as to economic conditions for three-quarters of its time, than 1932, according to the view of some authorities, and we may be grateful that we fell behind no more than we did. However, the combined surpluses of 1931 and 1932 amounting to $43,186.46, less the deficit for 1933 of $17,761.36, still leaves a surplus for the three years period of $25,425.10.

Almost wholly, the reduction in debts was due to trades of various kinds, whereby accounts, notes, mortgages and bonds payable were retired. One glance at income in relation to expense shows that debts could not have been paid in cash.

The forbearance of our member and nonmember creditors is deeply appreciated; their cooperation is still very much needed and we trust will continue. As to our members who are directly and indirectly contributing in tithes and offerings, this brief report should be an encouragement to continue to "keep the law," for some reward for their labor, and result for their sacrifice may be seen.

eleven had come to Portland the day before he wrote, and were baptized. He says:

"I think I have made a rather unusual record. My seventieth birthday anniversary was January 18, and in the month closing yesterday (February 18) I have made a new opening at Salem, Oregon, the capital of the State, held a three weeks' meeting, and baptized eleven converts. How is that for an old man?"

Pretty fine, I should say. But lest we might give him too much credit, Brother Cook adds:

"I do not, however, claim a great deal of credit, for Brother and Sister Ames, of Salem, had been busy telling their friends about the gospel and had made friends of an old couple of very fine people, who came over to Silverton and heard me preach one Sunday. They became interested, and so when there was no place to meet in Salem, they, having a large house, offered the use of their front room for services if I would come and occupy. When I reached Salem they offered me room and board in their home and I was certainly well cared for by them. Our meetings ranged in attendance from twenty to thirty-five for the whole three weeks. Their names are Julius L. Zielke and his wife, Martha L. They were enthusiastic advertisers all through the services and when I closed the meetings Friday night they with others gave their names and were baptized yesterday. . . . I have rejoiced in the hope to be of use to the great work."

Long may you live to work, Brother Cook.

IN a recent statistical and tabulated report submitted to us by the Bishopric of the Kansas City Stake, we find that out of the entire enrollment of the Kansas City Stake 56.7 percent have contributed financially to the support of the stake and the general church. This statement of tithes, offerings, and Christmas offerings which comes from Kansas City makes a splendid showing and gives encouragement to hope that by proper and consistent effort our people will eventually become one hundred percent contributors to the financial support of the church.

NEWS BRIEFS

Saskatoon Honors Nonmember Friends

A banquet honoring nonmember friends who during the past five years have contributed invaluable services to the radio and other church activities, was given by Saints of Saskatoon Branch, Saskatchewan, Canada, February 1. The newly-elected branch president, Henry Piedt, was toastmaster, and there were toasts to "Our Guests," "Our Musicians," and "Our Neighbors." Mrs Eric Boland, one of the guests of honor, was reelected last month to serve as president of the women's department.

Saint Louis Women Have Sacrifice Drive

Women of Saint Louis Branch, Missouri, concluded a six-months' sacrifice drive in January with a sum of more than sixty-five dollars. Unanimously they decided to continue the effort for another six months. The department has an average attendance of twenty at its weekly luncheon meetings.

Zionic Order of Noblemen at Rock Island

Rock Island Branch, Illinois, undertook a special project in November, the Zionic Order of Noblemen. Both older and younger members have responded; interest is high, and the young people have doubled their attendance. The program provides study and recreation in an organized, progressive way with the incentive of honors for which to work. Older members are acting as sponsors to the younger Noblemen. More will be heard of this up-and-coming organization.

Long Beach Cooperates to Pay Local Church Debt

The women of Long Beach Branch, California, are serving semimonthly dinners in the church basement throughout the year, to help eliminate the debt on the local church. Already this year they have made more than sixty dollars. Their leader has divided the workers into three teams, to see which group can serve the best meal at the least cost. The winning team will be announced at the close of the year. Their dinners are patronized by many friends.

And the men are helping in this project. John Hacker has secured twelve city lots on which he and others will raise more than enough vegetables to serve at the dinners. Water and part of the seed used will be furnished by the city.

Yesterday of Madison Branch

Madison Branch was organized in August, 1895, shortly after the disorganization of the Oregon Branch, Wisconsin. The charter membership of Madison group was less than ten. Services were held at the home of Brother and Sister Turner before the church was built.

Oregon branch members were taken into the Madison Branch, and Sister Helen Robinson Knight, of Oregon, is the only living charter member. Her father, William Robinson, was a missionary. W. A. McDowell was one of the first men to do missionary work in that district.

Missionary Work in Maine

Elder Newman Wilson, of Jonesport Branch recently closed a successful series of meetings at Indian River. He had planned to hold a series at West Jonesport, but deep snow and continued cold weather made traveling practically impossible, and the series was postponed until spring.

Brother Josiah Alley, also of Jonesport, holds a service at Beals each Sunday, and on the second Sunday of the month, he is accompanied by W. E. Rogers, and sacrament is enjoyed by Beals members.

F. M. McDowell Home After Priesthood Campaign

"Our priesthood must be adequate for today and also for tomorrow," says President F. M. McDowell who last week returned to his office at the Auditorium after a four-month, country-wide campaign in the interests of the priesthood. His program of lectures to and personal interviews with the priesthood of the church took him as far west as the Pacific Coast and as far north as Canada. He has spent the past six weeks in Canada, Michigan, and Indiana, visiting Toronto, London, Windsor, Chatham, Essex, Detroit, Port Huron, Flint, Pontiac, Saginaw, Bentley, Tawas City, Beaverton, Grand Rapids, and Hammond.

Brother McDowell's work with the priesthood leads up to the program of General Conference which will include a class for district and branch presidents. The course of study will deal with organization and administration of priesthood affairs in branch and district. Throughout his travels President McDowell reports an encouraging response from the priesthood.

Youth's Forum

What General Organization is Needed?

By Dwight D. W. Davis

President, Young People's Division Seattle and British Columbia District

"Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:44. (See also sections 83:21 and 120:3.)

Much of the periodic schism arising in local and district organizations is traceable to the failure, manifested on the part of church school officers (priesthood as well as laity), to heed the admonition given, as early as 1835, to those who accept positions of responsibility in the work of this church. Where there is no mutual comprehension of objectives, duties, and prerogatives, there can be little, if any, "fraternal cooperation in service to man and devoted consecration to God and his work." (Doctrine and Covenants 132:4.)

Not alone is it necessary to envisage lucidly the inter-relationship of the parts to the whole, but it is also imperative that we "heed those who are set in the church to teach." "If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they cannot expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction." (Doctrine and Covenants 125:14. See also sections 118:3; 120:5; 131:4.)

Specific revelations given this church indicate the place of authority and the necessity that all things be done in order. Any organization, therefore, established in any department of church work, that fails to recognize the already existing order of things, stands, at best, upon a tottery foundation.

To avoid this condition in young people's work we ought to recognize that three years ago adequate provision for Effective District Organization was set forth by President F. M. McDowell. Section "C" and page 17 of his outlines on "The New Plan for Religious Education," published in 1930 for The Centennial Conference Institute, is worthy of concentrated study. (Read pages 16-18 for a bird's eye view of "The Proposed Organization.")

Writing about the district organization necessary for the supervision of religious education in districts and stakes, President McDowell, among other things, says:

"The district organization . . . would be a simple one.

"The ideal would be for this officer [Director of Religious Education] to be considered an expert advisor and director of religious educational endeavor rather than an administrative officer.

"Such an individual then would seek to qualify himself in such a way as to be able to give expert advice and leadership in various phases of religious education.

"It is conceived that such an officer might need and call to his assistance from time to time specialists in the various methods qualified to supervise the work of the various aged groups."

Again on page 16, section "A," we read:

"The object of this supervision would be to provide one unified, balanced, well-integrated program of religious education for all ages of church membership."

If I correctly analyze these thoughts it is to conclude that stake and district directors of religious education, together with their respective presidents, are to be responsible for setting up one unified program of religious activities that will provide for the spiritual, temporal, and social needs of all church attenders. The relationship seems to be a one for all and all for one proposition.

It is conceivable that these district officers, in setting up this unified program, shall have need to call upon those individuals in the district best qualified to counsel on children's work, young people's work, and adult work. Their suggested goals for the year, together with the materials and methods best adapted to attain the end, would be integrated into one religious educational program.

The fruits of this cabinet meeting would be forwarded to branch presidents in the district by the district president, and to the directors of religious education by the district director. In turn this program would be administered by local pastors and church school supervisors. The district director of religious education at all times would stand ready to give additional advice, direction, and leadership.

If local supervisors, of the children's division, young people's division, and adult division, recognized a district program arrived at by the above-mentioned method, there would be no possibility for friction nor working at cross purposes; and the spiritual needs of all ages would be adequately met.

The necessary organization, then, has been set forth. Until a fair trial has been given the present plan for supervising religious education in districts and stakes, we young people are not justified in concocting additional ones.

In the church today the need is not for more elaborate organizations but for the full utilization of the established. The basic difficulty lies in the fact that the majority (often including even the "directors") of district and branch officers, working under the church school plan for religious education, have not caught the vision of the possibilities nor the responsibilities incumbent upon them.

Everywhere there is need that we study to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen who need not to be ashamed. How mandatory, then, the admonition is: "Let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence."

Girl Scouts Celebrate Birthday

This week the Girl Scouts of the United States are celebrating their twenty-second birthday. It was on March 12, 1912, that Mrs. Juliette Low, the "Mother of Girl Scouting" in this country, met with eleven girls in her home city, Savannah, Georgia, and organized the first Girl Scout troop in the United States.

Mrs. Low brought the idea of a great sisterhood for girls home with her from a visit with her friends, Lord Baden-Powell and his wife, in England. Juliette Low loved people and she particularly loved girls. Her idea grew and spread among girls of all creeds, communities and races.

Today there are three hundred thousand Girl Scouts in the United States, and the movement is well established in thirty-five different countries.

Degeneracy

Many years ago, quite a number of beehives were carried to the island of Barbados in the West Indies. At first the bees went diligently to work gathering honey for the coming winter. But when those bees found that they were in a land of perpetual summer, they ceased to gather honey. Instead they spent most of their time flying around, stinging the natives. We have what can be called "spiritual degeneracy." God has surrounded us with so many blessings that, instead of working for his glory and for the good of our fellow men, we spend most of our time in living for self. We thrust the sting, when we should be gathering the sweetness of the gospel life to give out again to starving men—T. DeWitt Talmage.

A Program of Achievement for Young People

"ZIONIC ORDER OF NOBLEMEN"

By Winifred Douglas Stiegel

IN a late number of the Herald we noted your interest in local organization and leadership of young people. We thought you might like to know of our plan for we have endeavored to include the entire program of the church in the outline for our activities, and in developing this in detail we have found several new ideas to be successful. The older members of the branch are as enthusiastic as the young, for they have been made an important part of the organization, and the young people are responding whole-heartedly, for they feel themselves to be an important part of the branch.

We have named our organization the "Zionic Order of Noblemen." God has said that the "rich and the wise, the learned and the noble" shall be first in the establishment of Zion, and our great aim is to develop true nobility in the lives of young people so that, through their consecration, Zion may become a reality.

THE DEGREES

The manual (Note 1) covers the work we have outlined for the first of ten divisions in the program of our organization. We hope to thus classify all the important knowledge and work of the church in these ten divisions or degrees. Those who pass the requirements for the highest (Ladasa Nobleman) degree should be fully qualified to render a real contribution to the church in the way of efficient service. A gold seal certificate from the department of religious education will be one of the requirements for this degree. Each degree represents a definite course of study and program of activities arranged in a logical and progressive manner. The work of the first degree is adapted to the comprehension of the twelve-year old Nobleman, but the requirements of the higher degrees will challenge the best efforts of those who have reached the twenties. Membership in the church is required for the third degree and the payment of tithes and other qualifications of character are demanded of those who are awarded the higher degrees.

To aid the younger Noblemen in their work a system of sponsorship has been provided. Individual sponsors are selected from the best material of

The letter on this page was written by Sister Winifred Stiegel, secretary of Rock Island District. The plan has been produced by Sister Stiegel and her husband, L. W. Stiegel, who is district supervisor of young people's activities.

This movement is heartily endorsed by E. R. Davis, district president.

the adult group, and to each of these a Nobleman who is sixteen years of age or younger is assigned. The personal interest these sponsors have taken in their charges has been very commendable, and the circle of friendship has increased noticeably in our branch since this program was adopted. Each sponsor helps his Nobleman in preparing the lectures and assists in every other way that he can to develop the personality and broaden the spiritual life of his charge. Men are chosen to be sponsors for the boys, of course, and women for the girls, and the wishes of both parties are consulted before assignments are made so that they may be happy to work together.

MEETINGS AND THE PROGRAM

We have had splendid cooperation between the officers of the branch and the regularly elected officers of the young people's organization. They meet often in council to formulate plans which will make the organization more interesting and effective and provide for the details which neither could successfully work out alone. The branch has been an interested audience at the Courts of Honor where new members are welcomed into the organization and honors are bestowed upon those who have completed a degree. The pastor, superintendent of religious education, director of young people, and general sponsor preside at the Courts of Honor. The branch has also cooperated in building a large platform in the basement and helping to make it an attractive meeting place for social activities.

Regular Noblemen meetings are held every other Friday evenings. A half hour lecture, a half hour of program numbers and business, and an hour of games and light refreshments completely fills the time. The lectures are given by capable members of the branch or leaders of the community on topics of interest to young people. We enjoyed a fine talk by Sister E. T. Williamson, (formerly Ada Derry of Lamoni, Iowa) on the subject of "First Things First." We also anticipate with pleasure the lectures promised by Brother and Sister W. S. Woodward, and Brother F. C. Bevan. We realize that we are usually fortunate in having such excellent material available and appreciate their interest. We also meet every Sunday evening for a study hour preceding the regular church service. The lessons outlined in the manual are discussed at this time, and the attendance and enthusiasm shown is usually gratifying. Young people's prayer services are planned each month.

THE INSIGNIA

You will find the insignia (Note 2) of the Zionie Order of Noblemen expressed in the design on the cover of the manual. The Z and N are crossed in such a way that no matter how they are turned they still stand for Zionie Noblemen. In like manner we hope to be true noblemen in whatever circumstances we may find ourselves. The circles of the sun and moon and the large star represent the three glories, with the celestial glory being our aim. The six points of the star represent the six principles of the gospel which we obey. The chain designates unity and perfection in organization. It also illustrates the strength or weakness of the chain in relation to each link, and each one of us is responsible for our own individual link in the chain of the organization and the church.

Because other branches in the district have expressed a desire to try our plan we are preparing a handbook which describes in detail the procedure we have followed and the duties of members and officers. It also includes a simple program for a Court of Honor which is patterned somewhat after the plan for Boy Scouts. Perhaps we are too enthusiastic, but we have been so happy to see the number of young people double in the last few months, and to find them genuinely interested in becoming better acquainted with the church and in following its program. The adults have organized a sponsor's class and are seriously preparing for greater efficiency in teaching the would-be Noblemen. We feel that our branch has made remarkable progress and that the Spirit of God has richly blessed us. We enjoy reading of the success other young people are having, and hope to be able to carry our share of the load in a noble and consecrated manner. We realize that Zion is our only hope for the future, and we hope to be worthy to help build it and to live therein.

Notes: 1. The author sent a copy of the manual for the first degree. It is a well made booklet of twenty-six pages, mimeographed, covering a program of study, activity, and examination for the new member.

2. The insignia is shown on the cover of the manual, but cannot be reproduced here.—Editors.

Only 50 cents for a ticket to General Conference—via Conference Daily Herald. Price goes up after March 23.

Quarterlies Ready

The intermediate quarterly number 411, for October-December, 1933, which was exhausted early, has been resupplied, and a few hundred copies are now available for distribution.

The new quarterlies for April-June, 1934, will soon be ready, and officers of the church schools are urged to send in orders immediately in order to make sure that shipments will reach them in time for distribution to classes.

And please—Order by Number! Our numbering system is working very satisfactorily for all who will take the trouble to follow it. Following it through the courses of study, each class will have everything it should.

The quarterly cover has two numbers on it. The large one is the number of the quarterly on which it is printed. The small one shows what should be ordered for the next time.

Classes that "Keep in step" will have no difficulty with their course. You can skip around if you want to, but you should be prepared to understand the whole curriculum thoroughly in order to do it.

No Creed

"The attempt to force the church into the declaration of a formulated creed, failed as heretofore. There was no disposition to build the "iron bedstead" upon which to stretch the devotee. It was equally apparent that the body had little sympathy with any effort to destroy the integrity of the revelations of God to the church. It was considered that to declare upon this point at the demand of one, involved the precedent to declare on another point at the demand of someone else; and if for these, then at the requirement of any who chose to rise up and demand a declaration of dogma, the church would have to yield, the result of which would be to finally eliminate the liberty of individual inquiry, quench the teaching of the word of God, and practically deny the office work of the Spirit in leading into truth. Once involved in the intricacies of such formulated declarations there could be no abiding lines of demarcation drawn where belief might safely rest and dogmatism assume the rule. It was and is far safer to affirm the books of the church, as with one so with the other, than to build a creed."—Saints' Herald, volume 32, pages 285, 286; Church History, volume 4, pages 483, 484.

Two-edged Sword

It was only a short time after their return from Lakeside Cottage, that Rowe McCarley telephoned Larry. He explained that he wanted to see her right away, but that circumstances necessitated his being out of town for two weeks or more. As soon as he returned, he would get in touch with her.

And so on one soft-breezed May evening he rang Mrs. Hampton's doorbell, and Larry herself opened the door. She was curious to learn the nature of Rowe's intended helpfulness. If he wanted to talk about Nancy, that was all right; but she promised herself that she would not discuss Greg with him.

Tonight she was very attractive in a new blue dress trimmed with white organdy collar and sleeves and mammoth white buttons. And in her most charming manner she presented Rowe to Doc. Eldred Hampton had known him since his primary years. She had been his teacher when he was only ten years old, and soon they were recalling incidents of Sunday school classes and picnics.

"Wouldn't you like a ride?" Rowe finally asked Larry.

"He wants to talk to me alone," mused the girl; "it must be something very private." She was going upstairs for a light wrap: "Naturally though, he doesn't want to discuss Nancy before the others."

When they were far out on the highway, the young fellow gave up his attempt to talk of pleasant and polite little nothings. Slowing down the engine, he looked at Larry and smiled. "I'll bet you've wondered what I wanted," he ventured.

"You've heard of feminine curiosity," she laughed. "Yes, I have been rather curious." Perhaps she was foolish but she could not get away from that feeling that he was not to be trusted. She must be guarded in the things she said tonight.

"Well, I owe you some sort of an explanation and retribution."

"Retribution? What for?" wonderingly.

"Yes, a retribution, or maybe we'd better call it a restoration. That's one of the reasons I've been out of town lately, and I had the deuce of a time finding it—"

"I never was good at riddles," broke in the girl; "please tell me what you're talking about."

For a moment he did not answer her, just watched the road ahead. "I don't know exactly how to begin. It's a confidential matter, Larry, but I want to clear myself with you if I can, and you can tell those who must know as you think best." He thrust his hand into his coat pocket and brought out a small tissue-paper parcel. "Here, do you recognize that?"

How very strange he was! Hastily Larry tore away the paper, and there in her palm lay Mrs. Hampton's gold bracelet!

"Why! Why!—" bewilderedly she began—"Rowe! Where did you get this? It's Mrs. Hampton's bracelet!" She was turning it around and around, staring at it unbelievably. Yes, there were the flowers in gold, and the lady's head, and the familiar, heavy clasp. "How—"

"Looks as if I took it, doesn't it?" grimly. "Maybe I won't be able to convince you that I didn't."

Sketchily Larry was recalling the happenings of that night at Playland—her agony over Greg and the red dancer; the loss of the bracelet; her dislike for Rowe and Mr. Johnson, his friend; the endless number of questions Detective Farrow had asked. The face of Bill Heckel alias Mr. Johnson seemed to swim into her consciousness, the impression of her strange hunch returned. But all of these were submerged in a great wave of relief. The bracelet was found! She really didn't care how it had been found, who had had it. The only thing that mattered was that now it lay right there in her hand!

And then she heard her own voice saying to Rowe McCarley: "No, I don't think you took it; I never did. I think I know who is responsible—your friend, Mr. Johnson."

"Well, how in the devil did you know?" he demanded, utterly astounded.

"Oh, it was just an impression I got at first. I don't have the absolute proofs, but I have a feeling in here," and she placed a hand over her heart. "You see I had another encounter with him under another of his names," she was speaking carefully. "That time he was supposed to be Bill Heckel, and using a hunch that I had, I scared him up and made him promise to get out of town. Sounds fishy and kind of wild and woolly, doesn't it?"

"Tell me about it—" then as she hesitated, "please. It won't go any further, and it might help me to understand a few strange happenings of late weeks."

"I'm sorry, but I can't, Rowe. I promised someone that I wouldn't, and I can't break that promise. You'll just have to believe me when I say that I met your friend Mr. Johnson under the name of Bill Heckel—" had she been wise to give that second name? Was there anything he could use to trace all this back to Sallie Ruth?—"I knew I was going to meet Bill Heckel, but not Mr. Johnson. Then, guided by my hunch, I made him think the police were after him; that they knew some things he didn't want them to know. I even made him think that Mr. Farrow, the detective from Playland, had a warrant for his arrest. Well, he promised to leave town that night. And I haven't heard of him since. Next day, by peculiar circumstance, there was a robbery in the city, and the name Tom Johnson was mentioned as a suspect or something. The newspaper story said he had strangely disappeared. I've often wondered if Bill Heckel, your Mr. Johnson and the Tom Johnson of 'Cooper Coopie's' gang were one and the same, sort of a triumvirate."

"By the great horn spoon!" fervently swore the man, "and all the little spoons, too! If you didn't stumble right into the middle of things, little one! I shouldn't be one bit surprised but what they are the same! And here you were tackling them single-handed!"

"But tell me," resumed Larry after a moment, "how did you get this bracelet? My, I can never let you know how grateful I am for its return!" and she squeezed his arm thankfully.

But he did not answer her question at once. Instead he said: "I felt responsible for the whole affair at Playland, because I introduced you to Johnson. I can't tell you how I happened to know him, nor can I explain that matter to certain church officials who would like awfully to know. But Johnson did me a good turn once, and I've tried to help him out. He's really not so bad, just a weak sort of a fellow in with a bad crowd, and always the goat and the one that gets caught. He served a term in the pen once, and is wanted for more now. I didn't know that night at the Playland, that he actually took the bracelet. Found that out later."

Wonderingly Larry listened as the man went on: "As soon as I found out that he did take it, I went to him, asked him for it; but he claimed that he had disposed of it. Well, then I turned detective and started to trace the bracelet. I didn't find it until just a couple of days ago."

The girl was wondering what connection all this had with church officials and their wanting to know something. What had they to do with Mr. Johnson and Mrs. Hampton's bracelet? Surely there was something Rowe was not telling. Perhaps if she listened quietly she would learn more.

But her heart was singing. Now she could return the heirloom to its owner, who, she was distinctly aware, had mourned its disappearance. She could watch Eldred Hampton tuck it away in her box of valuables, just to make sure it was there—and then what a burden would roll off her own shoulders!

The man at her side seemed to read her thoughts: "What shall you tell Mrs. Hampton when you give it back?" he inquired.

"I'll tell her that you have gone to a great deal of trouble and expense to get it, doing some sleuthing on your own hook. I'll tell her that you suspected a certain man at the Playland."

"That won't satisfy her. You'll have to tell her who the man was."

"Why don't we go home and tell her together?" coaxingly.

"Don't think I could. Mrs. Hampton knows me too well. That penetrating look of hers sees right through me and makes me squirm."

"Oh, but I like her. She's so nice—" Larry warmly defended.

"So do I, but I'd rather you'd tell her. Tell her anything you wish. I don't suppose she could think much worse of me than she does," despondently, "and it's sporting of you, my dear, to exonerate me of all guilt in the affair."

"Don't be silly," she remonstrated; "why I'm so grateful Rowe, I don't know how to express it. I wish there were something I could do to help you—" What was she doing? Offering to help this fellow whom she had always disliked?

"You're an awfully sweet girl, Larry, and I'm sorry that I haven't done anything worthy of your friendship."

Was he trying to enlist her pity? Just what were his tactics? What did he want? She was growing wary again. But how thankfully she slipped Mrs. Hampton's bracelet into her pocketbook! She did not dare risk it on her wrist.

Presently the conversation drifted to safer subjects, Lakeside Cottage, Mrs. Keithley, sports, plans for the summer, and a dozen others.

"Do you know," he queried after a time, "that you are very much like Nancy?" They were just starting home.

"Oh no,"—here was the subject she thought he wanted to discuss with her first; how glad she was that he had not mentioned Greg! "Nancy's ever so much prettier and gayer than I."

"Pretty loyal friends you two, aren't you?"

"Not so loyal as we might be—at least not so attentive and thoughtful. I haven't heard from her for ages, and I'm an awfully poor writer myself."

"Nancy's a wonderful girl," meditatively, "a wonderful girl—that's the trouble."

"What, riddles again?" incredulously. She almost added: "Well, you don't act as if you thought she was wonderful."

"She's too wonderful for me, Larry, and that's the truth. She's bright and ambitious and pretty, and has a future ahead of her. She's a church member in good standing. Who am I, just a waster and loafer, to aspire to Nancy Bart? I haven't written her much since my license was revoked; just haven't mustered up the nerve, though I suppose she's heard of it by now."

"Your license! License for what? Don't tell me, Rowe, that we're driving without a car license tonight!"

"My priest's license," he returned, disregarding her attempted rillery. "You surely knew that had been taken away from me."

She was stunned. Never had she heard of a priest's license being taken away. Several times she had read notices of silence for elders; but always she had considered that being a priest was a sort of life institution. "Your priest's license," she repeated dully.

"I thought everybody knew that. They took it away five months ago. I got into a scrape that I couldn't explain in the light of my priestly duties, and so I had to surrender my license to officials."

"That's too bad," consoled Larry. "No, I never knew it. I don't think Nancy's aware of it either, although she may have heard some rumors. I thought all along you were a member of the priesthood. I—I—"

"You what?"

"Oh, I don't know just what I was going to say. Go on—what were you saying about Nancy?"

"Guess I had said about all there is to say," he was not looking at her now; "I just don't think I'm worthy of Nancy. I haven't written her for a long time because I felt that way."

"But you've gone hither and yonder with this girl and that, and she's heard gossip and been eating her heart out over you!" Larry's anger was suddenly blazing. He did not mean what he was saying. He was just playing upon her sympathies. Such words as he had been saying were not in keeping with his reputation. "That's why I've never liked you," she flamed, "the way you treat Nancy! Your actions certainly don't prove that you think she's wonderful! You just dangle her, when there are other young fellows, who would pay her their attentions if you were not in the way, and they are nice young fellows, too!"

"Go ahead," meekly, "get it out of your system. I knew something was there."

The girl laughed, but it was not a pleasant laugh to hear. "I despise men of your caliber," she hastened on in a low intense tone, fearing that her courage would suddenly leave her. "I think the best thing in the world for Nancy would be for you to drop out of the picture. The poor girl has had an awful time this winter, wondering, worrying and thinking about you. There's been gossip—and she's been almost crazy. But she goes on laughing and going places—you know how she is—and few people guess the anguish in her heart!"

"You do hate me, don't you?" slowly. "I'm grateful to you for bringing the bracelet back—you've helped me wonderfully in that; but—well, who brought up the subject of Nancy anyway?"

"I'll admit I deserve this, Larry," penitently. I have been—"

"And that sob stuff," she cut in, "doesn't get anywhere with me, Rowe. You might just as well save your breath!" They were driving into Independence now. "What makes you talk as you have tonight anyway—all this humility? Is that the way you run back to Nancy for pity when something happens? Has Dagmar Shelby thrown you over and you need sympathy?" relentlessly.

"Oh, Dagmar, she's a good playfellow—"

"Yes, you'll play around with her just for the fun of it, leaving Nancy at home, or leaving her to a second choice! Someday, Rowe, if you don't straighten out, she'll marry second choice!"

"I'm glad you've spoken so frankly, Larry—truly I am," he declared as they drew up at the Hampton curb. "I've often wondered why you didn't like me—and now I know that it's chiefly Nancy." He relaxed his hold on the wheel and leaned back in his corner. Larry tucked her collar about her throat and sat remotely away from him. She appreciated the fact that he had not once during the entire ride offered to touch her.

Now she was overwhelmed with the sharpness of all the things she had been saying. What had started her? Rowe McCarley and his interests were nothing to her; why had she spoken at all? Mentally she was berating herself for speaking so plainly to him.

"So you think I should get out her life?" he spoke as if thinking aloud. "I've thought of that; but it will be hard because there's something rather unusual about us, something sort of telepathic between us. We can feel sometimes what is happening to the other, without knowing a thing about it. Maybe that's why we each have suffered this winter."

"You suffer! You!" the words stung the girl's tongue, but she did not utter them.

"—I never had that feeling over any other girl," he continued; "and I'm afraid with that condition existing, the breaking up will be hard."

"I know Nancy has had a hard winter," Larry's voice was low; "she hasn't written much, only notes, but I saw her in February."

"What would you do if you were in my place?" he demanded.

"I—I," she stammered. She wanted to laugh at the irony of this question. She arrange his affairs! She solve his problems—when she did not know how

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt

Arranged from his diaries by his daughter, Mrs. Ruby C. Faunce

Dec. 1 — Bro. Taylor, Webb and Crump went to Walsall and I preached twice. 2nd—Spent the day writing instructions to branch presidents—sent copy to Pres. J. Smith. 5th—Went to see Sister Newey and daughter, where I was well entertained. From there to Mr. Faireg, who is printing the pamphlet of conference minutes. Then to the Royal Art Gallery—this is the finest collection of paintings I have ever seen. 8th—Preached 3 times in Birch Terrace Academy. 11th—Walked over to Burslem where I had a very pleasant visit with Col. Lucas, American Counsel for this District. He knew Joseph the Martyr and related experiences to me. 14th—Bro. Poole brought my boots half-soled, heeled and repaired—an excellent job. 15th—Preached three times, topics Acts 3: 26—Faith and Repentance.

17th—Took train for Liverpool—met by Bro. Coward and taken to his home. At night went with him to visit Bro. Jos. Bennett recently baptized here. He and his family went to Salt Lake City same time that I did. 19th—Train to Manchester, thence to Stockport up to my dear old friend John Eardly who received me very affectionately. John and I clerked together in Florence church offices and again in South Weber—we were also held prisoners together for three days by the Brighamites. John still holds to the Morrisite views. 20th—Spent the day with John, conversing on religious matters and in writing. John seems pleased with our views and his wife expressed herself as being satisfied with them. I have hopes of bringing them into the covenant. Went to Bolton and visited my wife's relatives—and at night Cousin Samuel accompanied me to Manchester and took me to hear a very fine rendition of the "Messiah." 22nd—Spent the day with John and with him went to visit others returned from Utah and spent the day in giving them our doctrine and practices. 24th—Leicester—In the evening accompanied by my family went to Wellingsboro where we met Bro. Wm. Thomas and Zacheus—went to Zacheus home where Charles was also. 25th—Christmas Day and a family gathering. The first time for over 22 years, I have had the pleasure of meeting all my brothers and sisters together. Enjoyed it altho sad to think of my loved ones so far away. The family all together again on Thurs. Took train for Chatteris where I visited my dear mother and aunt. Spent next morning with them and in the afternoon visited father's grave.

January 1—1873. According to appointment, left my dear, aged mother—76 yrs. and aunt 74—and took 1st train for St. Neots, to spend New Yrs. at my eldest brother's home. Received a very warm welcome from all and especially from my dear Amy. No place I go do I feel more at home than with these loved ones. At night to the teachers' festival of the Baptist S. S. of which my Bro. Wm. is superintendent—did not enjoy it much. 5th—Met Bro. Patterson in London—visited Bro. Norton in the morning. Bro. Patterson preached in the afternoon and myself at evening. 9th—We went to Wellington Row and spent the day with Mr. Geo. Thompson and wife—a Morrisite. Enjoyed our visit. 10th. Amy and I took train for Birmingham. 12th—Sunday—enjoyed fellowship meeting—at evening preached on "Consciousness after Death," good liberty. Also a short time on the death of little Mary Rose Meredith. Monday—Went with Edward and Amy to see a Christmas pantomime—Edward paid expenses—it was a great treat to Amy. 14th—Visited Mr. Meredith and family and tried to give them comfort—went to the bedside of their other two children, sick, and prayed for them. Mr. Meredith tried to encourage me to start a job office in Birmingham, promising to back me with funds and give me the service of his two boys for a few months. 24th—Bro. John and I went to Sister Coruthwaite to tea. Learning Sister Fisher's daughter was very sick—consecrated some oil and took it along. She was suffering intensely. I administered to her. Her countenance brightened and she was at once relieved of all pain. I felt very thankful to God, as this was the first time two of the sisters had ever seen the ordinance for the sick administered. 26th—Sermons preached on "parable of the Vine" and "Latter Day Ministations," and "Joseph Smith a true prophet." I had good liberty all day—good congregations. Bro. Pomiton came for me in the evening—I agreed to go to Sheffield and try to open a branch—may God open the way.

February 14th—The following notice from my pen raised a bit of excitement as it was noted in the Daily Mail of Birmingham:

"Christ is Coming!" Three discourses will be delivered on the above subject, in the Saints meeting Room 14 Temple Row, by Elder Forscutt from America, on Sunday next Feb'y 16th—Morning 10.45. "The Promise of His Coming," afternoon 3.15, "The Signs and Preparation of His Coming," and evening 6.30, "The object of His Coming"—Bring your Bibles! 16th—To the room and preached to a fair sized congregation in the morning and in the afternoon to a still larger one, some having to stand, in the eve. carried in extra seats—all filled—I had excellent liberty—Thank God—during the intermission 6 were baptized and later confirmed. 19th—Wrote out subjects for 20 lectures to be delivered in Birmingham—5 per week to commence March 2nd. and took them to Bro. Taylor. 23rd—Conference—met at 9—Bro. Taylor in Chair—good session—I preached at morning service. 24th—Bro. Poole repaired my boots—he refused pay altho poor. Preached at Bro. Caton's on Baptism. Good number present. Tues.—A goodly number met at Bro. Caton's to whom I related my early experiences in the reorganized church. 26th—To Stafford—altho quite sick—spoke at night at Bro. Seville's. 17th—To Birmingham—spent evening with some of the Saints whom I am trying to instruct in singing.

An Offer for Kirtland Temple

Mar. 2nd—Attended meetings and delivered the first three of the series of 20 lectures I am appointed to deliver. 10th—Had three letters from America—One from Bro. Joseph Smith informing me that Bro. Russel Huntley had made a deed of the "Mormon" temple at Kirtland, Ohio, to Mark H. Forscutt and Joseph Smith, and that Mr. Whilpy had written to say that if we would sell it for $2,500, he believed the board of education would buy it of us. Another letter was from Bro. Walter B. Fiske, who is willing to come and take charge of a printing press here. In Joseph's letter I read that Bro. Samuel Powers, of Beloit, Wis., another of the apostles is dead. (From this date to April second much of the time was taken up in preparation and delivering of the twenty lectures—the last being "The Earth, the Saints everlasting Abode.")

April 4—Met Saints coming in to conference—Bro. Davis and Griffiths came from Wales. 5th—opened conference. 6th—Elders met this morning, Bro. Patterson in the chair and organized elders 4th quorum. Repaired to the Athenium where Bro. Davis delivered an excellent sermon. Dinner served at our meeting room. At 6.30 I spoke on "Spiritual Ministrations." God grant this conference may work to his glory. 9th—Went with Bro. Patterson to have him measured for a new pair of pants. If I had the means would buy him a suit. At night Bro. John preached. 11th—Good Friday—afternoon excellent prayer meeting—evening I preached on "Atonement of Christ." 13th—Three meetings at which Bro. John preached in afternoon and I morning and evening. 14th—Baptized two this afternoon. 16th—Went down to meeting with Bro. Patterson and fixed the room. Bro. John delivered a discourse on polygamy, "Polygamy is a false, misscriptural and Anti-Mormon doctrine," as per announcement in "The Mail"—Elder Snow, son of Erastus Snow and two ladies were present, as also a reporter for the Daily Post. 17th—Bro. John left for Leicester and Doe Hill this morning. I rec'd a letter from Bro. J. W. Chatburn sent to England by the Iowa Board of Immigration to get settlers for Iowa. The Daily Post contained about 1¼ columns on the discourse of Bro. Patterson, very correct in most of it. 20th—Gave 3 sermons. Every seat occupied and excellent liberty all day—Praise the Lord. 25th—Left for Aberdeen, Wales—Met by Bro. Davis. 26th—In the evening attended conference business meeting in the Albion Inn Room—took severe cold in chilly room. 27th—Attended meeting three times and addressed the conference on various subjects and at night Bro. Evens and I preached, he in Welsh and I in English. Bro. Evens appointed to labor under Bro. J. T. Davis. He is an able man, with a wonderful spirit. Spent the week visiting in the homes of the Welsh Saints and enjoying their company as far as we understood each other.

Released

Thurs. Bro. Davis and I went to Aberman and at night I preached from the D. of C. The Saints here seem to be very sorry to learn I am going away, as I received a letter from Joseph today that I am released and J. S. Patterson succeeds me."

"May 13—Took train for Birmingham. Found Bro. Patterson awaiting me. He does not like the arrangement of my release and his appointment. I feel very grieved and heart-broken tonite. Bro. Joseph's letter informs me of underhand work at conference against me. Thanks to the Lord. He and his Prophet have not forsaken me. I felt I should go to Wellingboro, but Sister dissuaded me. Fri. 16th—By this morning's post a card announcing the death of my niece at Wellingsboro, Sarah Ann Forscutt, age 24—sister and I know now why I should have gone. Took first train and found my brother Zacheus and his wife full of grief for their child, who was loved greatly. She was taken suddenly ill on Sunday. I tried to comfort them. 21st—Concluded to accept my release, altho I am doubtful as Joseph does not seem to concur and the way is opening beautifully for my success in Birmingham and elsewhere. A fine class of people and many attending the services. My wife writes that she has hopes that with her business she will soon be self-sustaining and especially I do not wish to return, until I have, at least accomplished part of the work I was sent to do.

Anxiety

Joseph's letter says I am appointed to labor under Joseph or the "First Presidency" and again writes "I await with anxiety to see your minutes to conference to see what success you are meeting with in the publishing line. And until such time as its fate is decided you will remain as the active minister in charge of the mission, rumor and mother grudge to the contrary. As this will by my positive instruction to you as laboring, under my direction." What to do I know not and if I do not give up the Presidency I seem to violate the decision of conference—and if I do I shall go directly against the instruction of Pres. J. Smith. If I go I had better go before Amy is 12 years old as I shall then have to pay full fare for her. Bro. Patterson does not like it because I have not given up the presidency to him, but the dear Lord knows my heart, that I have no desire to hold the office, but I honestly do not know what to do. Joseph also said in the same letter. "Bro. Blair, David, and myself will have an official consultation the first of next week, when I shall again write you. In the meantime please remember you have my warmest regards and truest friendship and support and defense in all righteous undertakings." I am so unhappy with Bro. Patterson now, that I must decide to resign as he thinks I ought, stating the General Conference release is final. I resolved to resign and did so, writing to each branch. Yet I doubt the correctness of my decision. 24th—Evening meeting house was crowded—numbers could not enter. A great many expressed their deep regret at my release—and many wept. A resolution was presented and passed expressing regret at my release. Bro. Taylor as Pres. of the branch asked me to speak next Sunday. Spent week in writing, visiting the Saints and in leaving all things in order.

Sunday, June 1—John went to Walsall and I occupied morning and evening at Birmingham—in the evening to a crowded house I preached my farewell sermon. Monday baptized 3 and with Bro. Taylor confirmed them. June 3—Packed my things and sent them off—and visited. 4th—Went to Bro. Taylor's and bade them good-bye. Left on the 11 train for Leicester. Found all well—all grieved at our leaving. 6th—Mother came last night, God bless her. She feels so grieved at my going, but is bearing up better than I expected she would do. 7th—Bade good-bye to mother, sister and brother, as well as friends and Amy and I left for Manchester. Went to Bolton and stayed with my wife's uncle, Samuel Unsworth. 10th—Secured passage for self and Amy on steamship Spain. Rec'd a letter from J. S. Patterson containing c3:14-6 and an account of 4.4.6 having been raised for my immigration. Bro. Bennett and Bro. Coward also gave me the 10 I had brought them back. I refused except as a loan to be paid as I could.

Home Again

June 11th, [1873]—Started on the ship for America. 19th—My birthday, poor place to celebrate, and poor fare. The trip was marked with very cool weather, rough sea and much sickness. 20th—Sighted coast of Maine. Sky cloudless and like an American sky and exclaimed "Home-sweet home." 25th—Did not get our boxes out until afternoon and then to Castle Gardens where all immigrants have to land, where it is too late to get our baggage. So had to go to a cheap hotel. Tues.—Amy and I went to Brooklyn and visited the Saints. Wed.—In the evening went by immigrant train, miserable inconvenience, via N. Y. & Hudson R. R. to Suspension Bridge across Niagara Falls to Ontario. 27th—Arrived in Detroit, Michigan, started by Michigan Central to Chicago—arrived at 8:30—could not get my boxes. Split the seat of my trousers, had no money to get others, so bought a packet of pins and Amy pinned my coat around to cover the place. Left at 10:30 for Kewanee where we arrived at about 6 a. m., wife up and rejoiced to meet us. She brought out a pair of my old pants but I could not get into them, so had to go to bed while she patched those I had on, for our boxes did not arrive for a day or two. A number of the Saints came to welcome us. 29th—Went to Bro. France's to dine, thence to fellowship meeting and at evening I preached. Spent the week with family and helping to take stock for wife and Sister Smith. Mon.—Wife bought Mrs. Smith's share of fixtures and they divided the stock. She is very glad to have the business in her own hands. Thurs.—Cleaned my clothes. Rec'd card from Joseph, stating that H. C. Bronson, President of this district has requested for me to labor here with him and Joseph consented if I deem it wise—until something definite. Sun.—Bro. Bronson here—I preached in the afternoon and he in the evening.

July 14th—Wife and I went to Plano—many expressed their pleasure at seeing me—though surprised to see how stout I had grown. Joseph away—visited around and in the eve. went to Sandwich and to Bro. Banta's where we were warmly welcomed—visited with the Saints. 17th—Took train back to Plano—had a long talk with Joseph, who tells me that the conference did not release me and that I ought to have remained in England in charge of the mission. Friday we returned home. Sunday—Rode with Bro. Jones where at the Union Schoolhouse I preached twice to a well filled house.

Worship Suggestions for April, 1934

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

(S. H. refers to our latest hymnal. O. S. H. refers to the earlier publication. Z. P. refers to Zion's Praises.)

THEME FOR THE MONTH: "FOLLOW THOU ME"

APRIL 1, 1934

Theme: "What Hast Thou Given?"

Instrumental Prelude: "Angels, roll the rock away!" S. H., 164; O. S. H., 160.

Scriptural Story: Luke 24: 1-8.

(S) Hymn: "Yes! The Redeemer rose," S. H., 167; O. S. H., 155.

(S) Short invocation.

Scripture Reading: 3 Nephi 5: 11, 12, 14-17.

Hymn: "I gave my life for thee," S. H., 330, verse 1.

Scriptural Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 45: 1.

Hymn: "My Father's house of light," S. H., 330, verse 2.

Scripture Reading: Isaiah 53: 1-6, Matthew 8: 19, 20.

"Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground; he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him. He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.

"And a certain scribe came unto him and said, 'Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.'

"And Jesus said unto him, 'The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head.'

Hymn: "I spent long years for thee," S. H., 330, verse 3.

Scripture Reading: 3 Nephi 12: 25-28, 34, 35.

Prayer.

Hymn: "I know that my Redeemer lives," S. H., 256; O. S. H., 187.

Benediction: "Grace to you and peace from God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us out of the present evil world, according to the will of our God and Father; to whom be the glory forever and ever. Amen." (Galatians 1: 3-5.)

APRIL 8, 1934

Theme: "Pray for the Conference."

Prelude: "Come ye apart!" S. H., 108.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 28: 1.

(S) Hymn-Response: "Jesus calls us," S. H., 337, verses 1 and 2.

(S) Scriptural Meditation: Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2.

(S) Short invocation.

Hymn: "The church's one foundation," S. H., 359, verse 1.

Reader: Revelation 14: 6. "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

Hymn: "The church's one foundation," S. H., 359, verse 2.

Short Talk: One of the greatest privileges God has given us, is that of taking part in the business of His Kingdom.

The deliberative assemblies of the church are as important in their place as any other phase of church activity, and should be given our best time, and effort, and thought. We should be aware of some of the problems facing us, and seek Divine Grace to help in their solution. God will bless the conference as we live so that He can. It is our responsibility to make the General Assembly a benediction to the church.

Hymn: S. H., 359, verse 3.

Period of Prayer.

Hymn: S. H., 359, verse 4.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 51: 5. Beginning: "and whoso is found a faithful, a just, and a wise steward . . ."

(S) Benediction.

APRIL 15, 1934

Theme: "Hast Thou Left Aught for Me?"

Instrumental Prelude: "O Jesus I have promised," S. H., 298.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 10: 12, Matthew 16: 25, 26. "Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I am the light and life of the world. If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me. And now for a man to take up his cross, is to deny all ungodliness, and every worldly lust, and keep my commandments."

(S) Hymn-Response: "Jesus is calling," S. H., 332; Z. P., 111.

(S) Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Luke 5: 1, 4, 11; 18: 28-30.

"And it came to pass, as the people pressed upon him, to hear the word of God, he stood by the lake of Genesareth,

"Now, when he had done speaking, he said, 'Simon, Launch out into the deep, and let down your net for a draught.'

"And when they had brought their ships to the land, they forsook all, and followed him.

"Then Peter said, 'Lo, we have left all, and followed thee.'

"And he said unto them, 'Verily I say unto you, there is no man who has left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more in this present time; and in the world to come, life everlasting.'

Hymn: "Dear Lord and Father," S. H., 243, verses 1 and 2.

Talk: The way of Christ is one where we have to exercise conscious choice between that which is best, and that which is second-best. Jesus was constantly challenging his disciples to choose between his companionship and lesser values. On one occasion, a rich man sacrificed his opportunity to be a friend of God because he could not leave his riches. Others were invited to a marriage feast. Some of them had property, some had cattle, others had pressing family duties, and business worries. They failed to leave these things for the marriage feast, losing thereby the richest treasures.

Whatever hinders the communion of the Holy Spirit must be forsaken if we would be with Christ where he is. We cannot enjoy the true riches of eternity, and hug to ourselves the paltry riches and treasures of this earth. "You cannot serve God and mammon."

(S) Hymn: "One hour with Jesus," S. H., 342, O. S. H., 337.

(S) Commission: Matthew 16: 27-29. (I. V.)

(S) Benediction: Numbers 6: 24-26.

APRIL 22, 1934

Theme: "How Much Have Ye Spent?"

Instrumental Prelude: "Jesus, the very thought of thee," S. H., 283.

Call to Worship: John 3: 16. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have eternal life."

(S) Hymn-Response: "Sing we then eternal love," S. H., 105; O. S. H., 369, verses 2 and 3.

Scripture Reading: 1 John 3: 16. "Hereby perceive we the love of Christ, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren."

Invocation.

(S) Hymn: "Savior, thy dying love," S. H., 302.

Story: Of some man or woman who has spent his or her life for the gospel. The story of Bishop Partridge may be found in Church History, volume 1, pages 316, 317, 350, 351.

(S) Hymn: "O Love that will not let me go," S. H., 285.

(S) Commission: Moroni 10: 29, 30. "Come unto Christ, and be perfected in him, and deny yourselves of all ungodliness, and if ye shall love God with all thy might, mind and strength, then is his grace sufficient for you, that by his grace ye may be perfect in Christ; and if by the grace of God ye are perfect in Christ, ye can in no wise deny the power of God. And again, if ye, by the grace of God, are perfect in Christ, and deny not his power, then are ye sanctified in Christ by the grace of God, through the shedding of the blood of Christ, which is in the covenant of the Father, unto the remission of your sins, that ye become holy without spot."

Benediction.

APRIL 29, 1934

Theme: "Have You Consecrated Yourself?"

Instrumental Prelude: "Unto God, who knows our every weakness," S. H., 293.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 11: 2; 64: 7. "Behold, the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whoso desireth to reap, let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God; yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God; therefore, if you will ask of me you shall receive, if you will knock it shall be opened unto you." "Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days."

(S) Hymn Response: "Hark, the voice of Jesus calling," S. H., 344.

(S) Invocation, ending with the Lord's Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Joshua 24: 14-24.

(S) Hymn: "Take my life and let it be," S. H., 307, verses 1 and 2.

Period of Testimony.

Prayer.

(S) Hymn: "Take my life, and let it be," S. H., 307, verses 3 to 6.

(S) Benediction: 2 Thessalonians 2: 16, 17.

The Children's Division

Prepared by Mildred Goodfellow and Fern Weedmark

FIRST SUNDAY, APRIL 1, 1934

Sacrament Service

Easter Sunday

Sacrament service for adults and children together.

A beautiful Easter picture is No. 6108-M, "At the Tomb," size 15x20 inches, sepia, 12c, for sale by David C. Cook Publishing Company, Elgin, Illinois. This is a copy of the picture, "Holy Women at the Tomb," by Plockhorst.

SECOND SUNDAY, APRIL 8, 1934

Theme: "The Risen Christ in Palestine."

Prelude: "Easter Hymn," S. H., 164.

Call to Worship: "Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name: . . . worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." (1 Chronicles 16: 29.)

Hymn: "Holy, Holy, Holy," Z. P., 131; S. H., 39, or "Oh, worship the King," S. H., 9.

Prayer.

Scripture: Mark 16: 6, 7.

Hymn: "The Child of Galilee," Z. P., 36.

Sermon Talk: Last Sunday we heard about Jesus' resurrection. For a while even his friends could hardly believe He was alive again, but when they saw Him and talked with Him, they believed. Tell of the appearances of Christ after his resurrection: To the women, Matthew 28: 9; to Mary Magdalene, John 20: 14; to Simon, Luke 24: 34 (probably Peter, since the cross-reference refers to 1 Corinthians 15: 5, where he is called Cephas); to the two on the way to Emmaus, Luke 24: 15; to the disciples, Thomas absent, John 20: 19-24; to the eleven disciples, John 20: 26; to seven disciples by the Sea of Galilee, John 21: 1; to the eleven disciples on a mountain in Galilee, Matthew 28: 16, 17; to five hundred people at once, 1 Corinthians 15: 6; to James, 1 Corinthians 15: 7; the ascension (near Bethany), Luke 24: 50, 51. Jesus ascended to His Father forty days after his resurrection. The Bible does not tell us very much about what He did during the forty days, but the things it does tell us show that He was the same loving, kind friend and helper that He was before his crucifixion.

Story: "The Walk to Emmaus," Luke 24: 13-35, or "A Friend Who Doubted," John 20: 24-29. Told by juniors.

Hymn: "Fairest Lord Jesus," S. H., 23. This may be sung by the junior choir or by the entire group.

Story: "Breakfast on the Seashore," John 21: 1-13, or "Peter's Second Chance," John 21: 15-17; page 18, Departments' Journal, May, 1928.

Closing Hymn: "The children's Friend," Z. P., 179.

Benediction.

THIRD SUNDAY, APRIL 15, 1934

Theme: "The Risen Christ in America."

Prelude: "Oh, worship the King," S. H., 9.

Call to Worship: ". . . They did cry out with one accord, saying, Hosanna! Blessed be the name of the Most High God! And they did fall down at the feet of Jesus, and did worship Him." (Book of Mormon, page 633, verse 17.)

Hymn: "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord," Z. P., 26; S. H., 7.

Prayer.

Scripture: Book of Mormon, page 632, verses 9-11.

Hymn: "Glad Tidings," Z. P., 149.

Sermon Talk: Text: John 10: 16. "Other sheep" means the Nephites and Lamanites (the people on this land) and other people that we do not know about. (Book of Mormon, page 645, verses 24-26.) Many years before Christ was born in Palestine, God's prophets in this land told the people that the Son of God would come into the world. (Book of Mormon, pages 24, 28, 323, 591 and other references.) It was prophesied that He would come to the people on this land. (Book of Mormon, pages 144, 361 and other references.) Tell about the sign that would be given at the time of his birth; foretold, page 591; fulfilled, pages 601, 602. For additional material, see article appearing pages 828 and 829, The Saints' Herald, September 2, 1931.

Story: "When Jesus Came to America," Book of Mormon, pages 631 et seq.

Hymn: "Tell me the stories of Jesus," No. 37, Living Hymns, and other books. This may be sung by the junior choir as a special number. If a picture is shown with each verse, it will add interest to the hymn.

Story: "When Jesus Blessed the Nephite Children," Book of Mormon, pages 648-650, or "Jesus Healing the Nephite People," pages 671, 672; also page 654, where it is stated that Nephi's brother, Timothy, was raised from the dead.
Closing Hymn: "What is your song?" Z. P., 121.
Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, APRIL 22, 1934

Theme: "Carrying on the Master's Work."

Prelude: "Earnest workers for the Master," Z. P., 99.
Call to Worship: "Sing unto the Lord: for he hath done excellent things: this is known in all the earth." (Isaiah 12: 5.)
Response: "The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad." (Psalm 126: 3.)
Hymn: "Hark! Hark! the Song," Z. P., 164, or "The Song-Gift," Z. P., 162.
Prayer.
Scripture: Luke 24: 50, 51.
Hymn: "I love to scatter sunshine," Z. P., 136.
Sermon Talk: Text: Matthew 28: 19, 20. When Jesus was on earth, he chose people to help him tell about his gospel. Some of these helpers were called Apostles and some Seventies. When Jesus went back to His Father, the work of telling about Jesus was left with his helpers. He told them to "Go and teach all nations." There are many people today who do not know about Jesus and his gospel. That is the reason our missionaries are going out and preaching to the people. Some day, at least some of you boys will be preachers, too, and can help carry on Jesus' work. There are many ways you boys and girls can help right now. You can tell other boys and girls about Jesus and invite them to come to church with you; you can pay your tithing, which will help to send missionaries out into the world; you can live right and study, so you will be ready when you are asked to take a part in this work.
Story: Picture appreciation, "The Ascension." Use a large picture, if you have one. If your group is small, picture No. 700, "The Ascension," 10½x12 inches, in colors, 15c, for sale by the Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, will be suitable. After the appreciation, allow a brief period for the children to look at the picture, while "Till He Come," (Saints' Hymnal, 383) is played softly, or "The Lord is depending on us." Adapt the story appearing in small print on page 123, Departments' Journal, April, 1930, to suit your group.
Hymn: "Consecration," Saints' Hymnal, 293.

Stories: "Carrying on Jesus' work," Acts, chapter 3, Peter and John; Acts, chapters 6 and 7, Stephen; Acts, chapter 8, Philip; also about our missionaries. These stories may be written and told by juniors.
Closing Hymn: "Send me forth, O blessed Master," Z. P., 166; S. H., 214.
Benediction.

FIFTH SUNDAY, APRIL 29, 1934

Theme: "New Life in the Springtime."

Prelude: "Sweet are the promises," Z. P., 41.
Call to Worship: "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork." (Psalm 19: 1.)
Hymn: "Giving thanks," Z. P., 53.
Prayer.
Scripture: Ecclesiastes 3: 11 or Twenty-fourth Psalm.
Hymn: "Sweet are the promises," Z. P., 41.
Sermon Talk: Text: Genesis 8: 22. This is a beautiful promise made by our heavenly Father. While in many lands the flowers and grass and trees have a time to rest (winter), we know that they will awaken in the spring. Do you know what a miracle is? (Explain.) Every spring there are many miracles happening around us. (Mention flowers, grass and trees.) It will be helpful to use objects to illustrate the thought of new life, such as lily bulb and blooming plant, branch of tree which has no leaves, branch of tree with new leaves, etc. Help the boys and girls to appreciate God's goodness in this respect and not merely accept it as a matter of course. Quote Song of Solomon 2: 11, 12. Tell what Jesus said about the lilies. (Matthew 6: 28, 29.)
Story: "The Boy Who Discovered the Spring," found in the book, "Why the Chimes Rang and Other Stories," by Raymond MacDonald Alden; also in "Stories Children Need," by Carolyn Sherwin Bailey.
Hymn: "For the beauty of the earth," S. H., 18, or "This is my Father's world," 17, Living Hymns, and other books.
Story: "The Caterpillar's Journey," page 48, primary quarterly, January, February, March, 1934, by Mildred Goodfellow, or "The Selfish Giant," by Oscar Wilde, found in "For the Story Teller," by Carolyn Sherwin Bailey, and other collections of stories. (In some collections the story ends with the giant tearing down the wall and telling the children they may play in the garden. That one would be preferable in this service.)
Closing Hymn: "Be pure in heart," Z. P., 103.
Benediction.

THE ROYAL ROAD

to deal with her own! "Oh, I don't know what to tell you, Rowe; only I do so want to see Nancy happy! I can't solve my own problems, so why should I try to solve yours?"

"You and Greg haven't been seeing each other lately, have you?"

"No." The word in itself was discouragingly brief. She hoped Greg was not to be the subject of discussion. She wouldn't talk about him — no, she wouldn't!

"I saw him the other day, talked with him in fact." It was music to the girl's ears. In spite of herself she leaned nearer and listened. "Met him over at the skating rink, and say, but that little cousin of his is a good looker!"

"A pretty face always get you, doesn't it?" laughed Larry. But she was thinking: "Cousin? What cousin? A cousin of Greg's. I didn't know he had a cousin in town." Aloud she said: "Did he introduce you to her?"

"Oh, certainly, and her name just suits her—Crystal. Crystal is a good name for a little blond thing, don't you think?"

Ah, so she was blond—and little! Larry nodded agreement. But surely Rowe was wrong, maybe he was deliberately lying. A little blond cousin of Greg's named Crystal—she had never heard of her. "I haven't met his cousin," she said formally.

"No? Her family only moved here recently. She's a cute little thing, seems to adore Greg, and I understand he takes her everywhere—why, Larry, whatsa matter?"

The girl that she had seen with Greg at the show had been little and cute and blond. Perhaps that was Crystal, a cousin—Larry began to giggle.

"Don't laugh like that!" remonstrated Rowe, "I don't like to hear it!"

But she could not stop. "Don't mind me," she tittered; "I know a good joke on a friend of mine—such a good joke! ha, ha!" And though she was laughing because the joke was on herself, a tear or two whisked down her cheeks. She couldn't keep them back—the joke had been so complete, so awful! The little blond girl with Greg had been his cousin—his cousin—and not a new girl friend after all! And here she had worried and worried!

"What are you laughing at?" barked the man behind the wheel.

"I—I don't know," she stuttered hysterically, and bowed her head on her hands, for now the tears were flowing freely and the giggles were growing farther and farther apart.

Totals for Membership Properly Enrolled .....	103,328	3,197	4,536	4,828	973	96	1,836		105,164
Suspense Files .....	4,647		556	222	20		314		4,961
Disorganized Files .....	301		94	18			76		377
Sub-totals .....	4,948		650	240	20		390		5,338
Grand Totals for the Church .....	108,276	3,197	5,186	5,068	993	96	2,226		110,502

The total of 3,197 baptisms for the year 1933 is an increase of 125 over the year 1932, and is also slightly better than the year 1931. This total, however, is about 450 less than the ten year average for the last ten years which is 3,649. This shows that while the church is still below the average in baptisms for the past ten years, there has nevertheless been a marked improvement for the year 1933 over the previous two years.

Bankrupt

One midnight, deep in starlight still,
I dreamed that I received this bill:
(..... in account with Life):
Five thousand breathless dawns all new,
Five thousand flowers fresh in dew;
Five thousand sunsets wrapped in gold;
One million snowflakes served ice cold;
Five quiet friends; one baby's love;
One white-mad sea with clouds above;

One hundred music-haunted dreams
Of moon-drenched roads and hurrying streams;
Of prophesying winds, and trees.
Of silent stars and browsing bees;
One June night in a fragrant wood;
One heart that loved and understood.
I wondered when I waked at day,
How—how in God's name—I could pay!

A Charge to the Candidates for Ordination

By John F. Sheehy

(The following is a transcript of the charge delivered to the men who were ordained to various offices in the priesthood at Stone Church Sunday, February 11, 1934. Reported by Frank McDonald.)

You are called of God to serve in the priesthood of the church. Some of you are to be ordained for the first time, and take upon you the responsibility of the priesthood. You are to occupy in different offices, but each one of you is entrusted with the most sacred responsibility God places upon mankind.

I charge you this afternoon to approach this altar with the utmost reverence and sincerity. I charge you this afternoon to study that you may qualify yourself for the particular duties that devolve upon the office unto which you shall be ordained.

There are two things that give you the right to officiate as a minister; the legal right that comes through ordination, and the moral right that comes by virtue of your own conduct. If you expect to minister unto the people your ministry can be made effectual by your own behavior.

I would admonish you to be humble, and have love for all people. Learn to love people, especially learn to love people who make mistakes, and learn to love and cultivate people who do not belong to the church of which you are officers. Learn to love them even as Christ loved them and gave himself for them, having a beautiful consideration for saint and sinner alike. He gave his life in his own ministry and then he gave himself in death, for God required that of him. God may not at any time require that you shall go down in death, but God will require the very best that you are possible of giving. God will expect of you that you study that you might improve that you may more fully understand the things of God.

I would further admonish you particularly that your study be the thing that pertains to your ministry, that you acquaint yourself with the teachings of God as found in the "Three Books" of the church, that are there upon the altar. It shall become your duty to know the contents of these books, for the membership of this church can only be taught by a ministry who have studied and acquainted themselves with the knowledge these books contain. Therefore, be humble, have love for all people, have charity for all people, be prayerful.

This is the call of God unto the ministry, you are called to be workers together with God. Take him with you. Be prayerful. God only can direct you,

God only can give to you the wisdom and the knowledge and understanding that you shall need in being a minister for him. I charge you from this very hour to learn the duties of your office and calling and labor therein.

"He that is called to the office of elder is called to administer the bread and the wine—the emblems of the flesh and blood of Christ, and to confirm those who are baptized into the church, by the laying on of hands for the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, according to the Scriptures. He is to teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and to take the lead of meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the commandments and revelations of God."

And he that is called to the office of priest, it becomes his duty, "to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties; and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and to visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties. In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires."

He that is called to the office of teacher "is to watch over the church always, and be with you, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of elder or priest."

"He that is called to the office of deacon is called to assist the teacher only when such occasion requires, but neither teacher nor deacon have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, nor lay on hands. They are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come to Christ."

"Every elder, every priest, every teacher, every deacon, is to be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto him, and he is to be ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost which is in the one who ordains."

My brothers, as a minister for Christ I greet you, and as a minister for Christ I charge you to learn your office and the duties thereof and let your calling among men come first. Perform well your duties and perform your duties in the spirit of meekness and love and humility, and thus God's blessings shall be yours. You will need to be studious.

Castles in Spain

Of what do we moderns dream? What are our castles in Spain? This question crossed my mind in Seville Cathedral, that stone fabric of man's greatest dream in the ages to which we have been accustomed to apply the word "dark." Travelers in Spain consulting their guidebooks, read: "On the eighth day of July, in the year 1401, the Dean and Chapter of Seville assembled in the Court of the Elms and solemnly resolved: 'Let us build us a church so great that those who come after us may think us mad to have attempted it!' The church took one hundred and fifty years to build."

And in that glorious building, raised by five succeeding generations, one could not help wondering wherein lay the superiority of ourselves, Children of Light, over those old Sons of Darkness.

We too dream, no doubt—not always with a Freudian complex; and our dreams have results, such as the Great Dam at Assouan, the Roosevelt Dam in Arizona, the Woolworth Building, the Forth Bridge, the Power Works at Niagara, the Panama Canal (which took one tenth of the time the Sons of Darkness lavished on Seville cathedral). But all these things were dreamed and fabricated out for immediate material benefit. The old builders of pyramids, mosques and churches built for no physical advantage in this life. They carved and wrought and slowly lifted stone on stone for remote and, as they thought, spiritual ends. We moderns mine and forge and mason-up our monuments to the immediate profit of our bodies. Incidentally they may give pleasure to the spirit, but we do not exactly build them for that purpose. Have we raised anything really great in stone or brick? a mere idea since Christopher Wren built Saint Paul's Cathedral?—John Galsworthy's Castles in Spain.

Big or Little

A kindly gentleman inquired of an active six-year-old who was pedaling his tricycle, "How are you, my little man?"

"I'm not little," was the rather rude reply. "Can't you see how much bigger I am than my brother?" He pointed to a small youngster who was playing on the curb.

Some business men acquire this childish attitude after receiving a promotion or two and proceed to climb toward financial success by trampling weaker men under their feet. They seem to forget that the greatest and most happy men are those who serve others.—San Francisco Zion Builder.

I have grown to hate the word "theology." The attempt to live Christianity should supplant the attempt to define it.—Reverend Toyohiko Kagawa of Japan.

Finds Joy in Serving

The first two weeks of the year were engaged by the writer at Gudgell Park Church, Independence, during which time I preached fourteen sermons. The weather was not very favorable for meetings, but attendance was fair, and it was pleasant to spend two weeks with this faithful group of Saints.

Two or three days following these meetings contacts were made with interested nonmember friends in Kansas City Stake. Some of these I am sure, will soon unite with the church.

I then went to Clinton District and spent two days at Nevada, Missouri, holding services both nights and speaking to unusually large audiences. Two days were also spent at Eldorado Springs with good interest and attendance. They are very eager for a series of services there early in March.

We began a series of meetings at Rich Hill January 21, continuing over three Sundays. Sixteen sermons were preached, and this was the best attended of several series of meetings I have held there. Average attendance for the fifteen nights was over one hundred and seventy, and interest on the part of Saints and nonmembers was good. Some names have been given for baptism, and others who are deeply interested are being visited by the local ministry. We hope they too will unite with us.

One night during the series the high school orchestra and glee club participated in the program, and South Sea Island pictures were shown, followed by a sermonet. It was estimated that four hundred were present that night.

Saints of Rich Hill, led by Elder Birch Whiting, and assistants, are to be commended for the progress they have made. The church has been moved and improved and a new addition has been built to it on its new location. Now, surrounded by spacious grounds, it is well adapted to the activities of the Saints and is a credit to the community of Rich Hill and to the church. And the end is not yet—other improvements are in contemplation.

At present I am holding a two-week series of services at Mount Vernon, Illinois, where Saints and their friends are showing splendid interest.

Invites Help of Elders

Since I have seen most of my friends of the church I have been called to go through hard trials. I lost my companion July 3, 1932, who died firm in the latter-day faith. Now I am isolated. There is no branch of the church nearer than one hundred miles.

The Utah Church holds meetings near here twice each month. I went to hear them a short time ago. For a theme they took "Prophets in the Church Today," and proved this beyond a doubt by the Bible. But they also said that they believed Brigham Young to be a true prophet. This I cannot accept or believe. They sang some of the good old songs of the Saints.

I should be most happy if any of our elders chanced to come this way. It has been years since I heard from any of them.

The Lord has heard and answered my prayers many, many times. Space does not permit me to tell in how many ways the good Master has come to my rescue. He has been my only comfort and stay.

Will the Saints pray for my family and for me that we may have complete faith and do the will of the Lord?

Would Improve Present Condition

It is a wonderful thing to know that God will not let us be tempted beyond our power to endure. Oh, that we could only do what is right at all times!

Sometimes I feel that it is impossible to bring my little ones up as they should be reared, amid the surroundings we have. When I read and strive to understand what God would have me do, I often feel as though the Evil One were laughing at me. I stop and breathe a prayer for help so that I may set an example for others to see.

My home is not what I would have it. I try to have prayer at least once a day with the children, usually just before they leave for school, but there are days when we miss this. Often I find myself wishing that we were so situated as to bring the children up in the church. We go to church here, but it is not the same. I know how hard it is for isolated members to keep on the straight and narrow path and resist all temptations.

My responsibility is great and I want to let God be my Leader and Friend. I pray him to give me patience and endurance, and hope some day to be able to have the missionaries as they pass this way, stop to hold services. As I am now situated I have not a place suitable, but I pray that God's will may be done, and that I may be able to interest the right people in the gospel. I am weak but I want to serve the Lord. Please remember me in your prayers. If any elders or friends are passing through New Orleans, I would be glad to have them call on me. Their visit would be a great comfort.

Bears Stanch Testimony to His Community

The few Saints who lived at Hockerville, have moved away and I alone of the true faith, am left to give to this community my testimony of the true church and gospel. The Lord has blessed me in many ways for giving my testimony of the truthfulness of the gospel restored in latter days.

I have rejoiced at the knowledge divinely given to me, that the church reorganized in these latter days is the only God-instituted organization on earth, and that the gospel given to us in this the last dispensation of time, is the true gospel. The Bible tells us that when Jesus came to live among men he came to do not his will, but the will of the Father who sent him, and we are given assurance that he who does the will of the father is to know of the doctrine whether it be of the Father or of himself.

When I talk to my neighbors and friends here and bear my testimony, I tell them that they, too, may have this divine knowledge if they do the will of the Father in heaven. I told this to the pastor of a certain church, and added, "For this reason I know the church to which I belong is the only true church just as much as I know you are standing before me." He answered that I might be right; he did not know. "You can know," I assured him, "just as I do if you will obey the gospel in its fullness."

I have borne my testimony to many here, and I have found that by living up to the gospel principles I have an influence over numbers. This gives me a name for good, and Solomon said: "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches."

To have the respect and esteem of my associates is worth more to me than all the silver and gold in the world. I realize that owing to the ailments of my body, unless something unforeseen is done for me, my life on this earth is short; but I want to do His will while here because in eternity I want to dwell with God and his Son.

During the past two months I have been blessed financially in my trade of barbering from giving one tenth of all my cash earnings to the Bishop of the church. I have had more business at times than I could handle. I find that it pays in temporal as well as spiritual things, to live up to the laws the Lord has given us.

Will the Saints remember me in their prayers, that I may remain strong and unshaken in faith, and if it be His divine will, that I may be restored to health?

Likes the Programs

I am now director of religious education of the Omaha Branch and of course am constantly in need of material and ideas for conducting the church school. I use the Herald as my guide for the worship programs, with variations of course, and find they are very well prepared and of the highest type of material. May they never discontinue this life saver for the church school director.

Prays to Overcome Evil

The Lord has been mindful of me and my family, blessing us wonderfully. I want to thank and praise him for his loving-kindness.

The Herald is the source of great pleasure to me. With it I pass many happy hours. I am at present isolated from church privileges, and often I think of the good prayer meetings we have in the church.
