The church means more to me now than ever before. I am in camp and very often as I watch the behavior of those about me I wonder if the gospel has been preached to all in this country. Then comes the thought: As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the last days.

I try to lead a righteous life, but often I feel that the evil forces are trying to overcome my good resolutions. Nevertheless, I hope the time will come when I shall have put all evil things underfoot, and shall be a full-fledged worker for the Lord. Please pray that I may overcome my weaknesses and soon enjoy again the pleasure of meeting with God's people.

The Herald a Teacher

I wish to take this means to thank Brother and Sister Howard, of Erick, Oklahoma, for sending me the Herald. I have wanted to take the paper for a long time, and can hardly lay it down until I have read it from cover to cover.

I can scarcely contain my joy at reading of the success of others although I am isolated from a branch and several miles from other Saints.

I hope to purchase the three standard books of the church so necessary to our understanding of the gospel. Of course I have the King James Version of the Bible and by using the Herald as a teacher I expect to learn much more of our belief in the future.

Will the Saints pray for me and my family that we may have an unbroken family around the throne of grace?

DURHAM, OKLAHOMA.

MRS. SUSIE BUTLER.

Isolated Ones Helped by Neighboring Branch

A few Latter Day Saints live in this community, and we have had the privilege of meeting together for several months. Brothers Lloyd Harding and E. F. Yearrington take turns leading and speaking, and bring Brother W. S. Huff from Oklahoma City every two weeks. The gospel sermons are a feast to hungry souls, and other Saints have come out from the city to meet with us. The pastor, Brother Kemp, came once, and preached.

We have tried to hold a union Sunday school, but opposition has been apparent ever since it was organized and this seems to be growing more intense. Sometimes we feel that if it were not for the blessings we receive and the love we have for God and his work, we should be tempted to quit because of this feeling. But we know that wherever God works the Devil works also. If we have faith in God's promises he will bless us.

It is a great blessing to hear the gospel, as we believe it, preached by the servants of the Lord, and to be permitted to renew our covenant with God, that we will keep his commandments. It is wonderful to feel the presence of his Holy Spirit and to hear our brothers and sisters bear their testimonies.

I have many testimonies of the gospel. I know that it is true, and I want others to know of it. I feel it is too good to keep to ourselves.

For several years my health has been poor. Brother Huff administered to me two months ago and I received a blessing. I have wanted so much to be worthy of this blessing that I have tried to consecrate my life to the work I love. I have endeavored to control myself and think on things that are honest and pure. God has directed me many times.

Our brothers and sisters from the city who have made the meetings possible, can surely see that we are hungry for the association of those of the faith. They are willing to come and keep trying. We are grateful to them.

WASHINGTON, OKLAHOMA.

MRS. L. C. CROSS.

Request Prayers

Sister Eugenia Andrews, of Brewton, Alabama, desires the prayers of the Saints for herself and her family.

Mrs. Anna Paris, of Cloverdale, British Columbia, Canada, requests the Saints to pray for her. She is seventy-two years of age and suffered a broken leg more than two months ago. During her life she has received many blessings and healings.

Mrs. C. E. Smith, of Buckner, Illinois, solicits the prayers of the church in behalf of her father, Joseph C. Hofstetter, now receiving medical attention, that he will rapidly regain strength and health. He has been helped by administration.

T. A. Thorp, Offerle, Kansas, requests remembrance in prayer, that he may be healed of affliction, and be blessed with health.

Mrs. Mary Unruh, Parker, South Dakota, desires the prayers of the Saints, that she may be healed of a painful affliction. Twenty years ago she broke her nose, and it never healed inside. Four years ago a doctor diagnosed the condition as ulcer and burned it with an electric needle. Still the injury will not heal.

A. B. PHILLIPS

If God changes not, how can the sabbath be the first day of the week?

The word sabbath, or shabbath in the Hebrew, is from a primitive root (shabath) which means to repose or to desist from labor. The Mosaic command to keep the sabbath did not specify any particular day by name, but required the sabbath to be after six days of labor. This is further implied by the meaning of the word, as has been noted. In other words, it meant to desist from labor, and the command stated how many days of labor, should precede it:

"Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work."—Exodus 20: 8-10.

The sabbath of rest was in commemoration of the rest given the Jews from the bondage of Egypt, hence it was given solely to them (Deuteronomy 5: 3). God said:

"Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day."—Deuteronomy 5: 15.

This day of rest was to be kept "holy", a Hebrew word (qadash) which means to dedicate, set apart, consecrate, or appoint. But the Jewish sabbath was never a Christian obligation (Colossians 2:13-16, Romans 14:5), so far as the keeping of Saturday is concerned. It was part of the law that Paul says (Galatians 3:19, 23, 24) was "added" till the "seed" (Christ) should come. The Christian sabbath is a Christian institution, and commemorates the day on which Christ rose from the dead. The unchangeability of God means that his purposes are not altered, but that he will accomplish the ends designed. The Jewish sacrifices also were solely for the Jews and for a specific purpose, but were not required of Christians.

What ruler is meant in 2 Samuel 7:10-15?

It is generally believed to refer to Solomon, who built the house of the Lord, and who quoted the Scriptures as referring to himself (1 Kings 5:5; 6:12). But some think it also glimpses the Messianic rule to come, Solomon being an outward type of that great event, the text thus having a double fulfillment.

Who is the man in Jeremiah 33:14-17 to sit on "the throne of Israel"?

This language doubtless points to the ultimate reign of Christ, though some think it was intended to show that the posterity of David should never die out. In fact, it may include both meanings, for it states:

"I will cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; . . . and Jerusalem shall dwell safely; and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our righteousness. For thus saith the Lord, David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel."—Jeremiah 33: 15-17.

Should we send tithes to the presiding bishop, ignoring the local agent?

While the presiding bishopric receive and disburse the general funds, except as needed locally, the local bishops and agents are lawfully appointed to receive the funds contributed in their fields of labor for this purpose. We should of course respect these workers thus appointed by paying our tithes to them, except when for some reason they are not available or to reach them would be a great inconvenience or cause a troublesome delay. Funds paid locally may be summarized for local report, and thus the membership may be encouraged as well as those who are required to receive and account for the funds.

Who are called "peacemakers" by Jesus in Matthew 5:9?

The word used here appears to have a double application, meaning those who make peace with others or between others, and also those who do the acts of peace or live so as to engender peaceable results. Broadly, those who in character and principle build for peace in private or public life, locally or nationally. Jesus is here dealing with the peace principle in human conduct motivated to that end.

Central Texas District Conference

Dedication of Dallas Church Is Part of Program

The conference of Central Texas began its round of activities at Dallas the evening of February 9. Dallas Branch had given much thought and planning to the entertainment of the conference and everything moved along smoothly. Visitors were given a hearty welcome and dinner awaited them at the dining room located in the block with the church.

After dinner Saints and friends continued to gather at the church until the house was full, there to enjoy the fine play, "What Man Lives By," given by local Saints under the direction of Sister J. E. Nicoll.

Saturday morning the day's meetings began with a nine o'clock prayer service. Apostle R. S. Budd was the morning speaker and his theme was "The Glory of God Is Intelligence."

Conference business meeting opened at 1:30 p. m. Twenty-seven of the thirty-six men of the district priesthood reported, and the following delegates to General Conference were elected: Bishop L. F. P. Curry, of Dallas; Elder J. W. A. Bailey, of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Chattie Everett, Mrs. J. E. Nicoll and Miss Virginia Williams, of Dallas, Texas, and Mrs. L. R. Wells, of Independence, Missouri.

Then the departmental workers were called together by District Director R. V. Post. The church school and other departmental work are showing improvement throughout the district. A school has been organized in Marlin Branch during the past six months.

Saturday evening the speaker was Apostle Budd who chose for his subject, "Lift Up a Standard." This sermon was at the same time a challenge, a rebuke, and a spur to urge the Saints to better effort. It was preceded by a song service by the Bluebirds, a junior group of Dallas Branch.

The Sunday morning prayer meeting was much better attended than that of Saturday. The ordination of Wilbur W. Holsworth to the office of teacher, occurred at the close of this service, Bishop Curry and Apostle Budd officiating.

The church school was in charge of Sister Everett, director of the Dallas school, assisted by Brother Post, district director. Again the juniors were featured, this time in a junior church service preceding the regular school work. Dallas Branch is proud of its junior organization and grateful to its leaders.

"Today's Work," was the theme of Bishop L. F. P. Curry's morning sermon, which brought matters squarely before the listeners, especially those who have been careless in observing the law.

A priesthood meeting at 1.30 p. m. in charge of Apostle Budd and Bishop Curry, served to solve several problems. The spirit enjoyed in this service has been with the ministry on previous occasions, inspiring their hopes in the future and strengthening their determinations to serve more fully, if possible, in the work intrusted to them.

The dedication of Dallas Church occurred at two-thirty, a solemnly sweet service which appealed to all present. Consecrated lives are associated with these buildings dedicated to the service of God. Saints throughout the district, along with Dallas Branch, feel a greater interest in life as it is concerned with church work, since experiencing this hour of dedicating.

Brother Budd spoke to the young people at 7 p. m., and many older ones listened and were keenly interested, too. All were made to feel that the church and its mission in the world should come first in the consideration of its members. Their work and play should be harmonious with gospel teachings. They should have well rounded lives and real and lasting pleasures without coming into conflict with the law of God. The responsibility of the priesthood in this is not only of far-reaching importance to themselves but more so in the case of those to whom they minister.

District President C. W. Tischer preached the closing sermon of the conference at 8 p. m. Sunday, rounding out a most profitable meeting for the district. He was assisted in the service by Elder H. H. Davenport, vice president of the district. At the close, announcement was made of the acceptance by Brother H. C. Bleil, of Dallas, of the appointment to act as assistant bishop's agent for the district. Brother Bleil is going to be able to perform a much-needed service to the Saints in his travels over the State. He is also chairman of the committee on district finances a group designed to stimulate interest in district conferences and reunions. He announced Frank Allen, of Marlin Branch, Sister Croisdale, of Austin, A. V. Arnold, of Houston Branch, Cummings Hill, of Central Branch, and Frank A. James, of New Baden Branch, as local solicitors in the district.

Over thirty visitors were in attendance at the conference. Houston Branch led with about twenty-four. Others came from Hearne, Fort Worth, Caldwell, Marlin and Bryan. They were assigned to the homes of Saints and friends for the nights during their stay in Dallas, and there had breakfast. Noon and evening meals were served in the dining room of the church.

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan

Progress in Every Department

The young people's council of Saskatoon Branch arranged a number of activities for the months of January and February. Special young people's prayer service is now being held at 8:45 in the morning, the first Sunday of each month. The young people divide into groups and visit the members on certain evenings. Brother W. L. Christy is teaching a class in church history each Sunday evening, which is creating a good deal of interest. Sister Christy has been conducting a class in teacher training for several months.

The women's department held an organization meeting last month, Mrs. Eric Boland being reelected president, with Sister William Smith as vice president, and Sister Diggle, sr., secretary. A visiting committee was appointed and also a committee for preparing a Saskatchewan exhibit for the Harvest Festival, in Independence, next fall. Brother Christy, who is the newly-appointed adult supervisor, is giving an hour's lecture each week to the women while they work busily hooking rugs and patching quilt tops. He has also arranged a semimonthly evening meeting for the adult group, the first of which was held at the home of Brother and Sister Diggle. Short talks, followed by discussion, were given on subjects of special interest to parents. Mrs. Boland contributed several solos, and refreshments were served by the host and hostess.

January 26, an evening's entertainment was convened by Irma Denton, assisted by Marvin and Avert Diggle. The excellent program consisted of two sketches, one from the Herald, and the other a comedy, solos by Mrs. Boland, Mr. Mackie and Joyce Pidcock, a couple of songs by Eileen Diggle and Myrtle Kelley, and a reading by Pearl Denton. A silver offering was taken.

The young people enjoyed a tobogganing party February 10, near the home of Brother and Sister Henry Piedt. After a few hours of sport, a hot dinner was served by Sister Ethel Piedt. The next week a Valentine party was held in the basement of the church, the arrangements being made by Annie Fisher and Violet Cruce. The children's group also were entertained the same week with games and Valentine refreshments.

A banquet was enjoyed in the basement of the church February 1, in honor of those nonmembers who had during the past five years contributed to the radio and other church activities. The guests of honor were: Mr. and Mrs. Eric Boland, Mr. and Mrs. Accleton, Mr. and Mrs. Alex Mackie, Mr. and Mrs. Burton Asay, Mr. and Mrs. Laban Geldart, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Whittle, and Messers B. Lehman, Jack Young, and J. Hems-worth. Brother Henry Piedt, the newly-elected branch president, was toast-master. After the singing of "When We Are Together," Brother Christy proposed a toast to "Our Guests," which was replied to by Mr. Mackie. Mr. Eby sang a solo and Sister Christy proposed the toast, "Our Musicians," to which Mr. Asay replied. Mr. Roberts contributed a solo, and Brother Diggle proposed a toast, "Our Neighbors," Mrs. Boland replying. Another community song was sung and the benediction was pronounced by Brother Christy.

Sister Moran, who moved a couple of years ago to Edmonton, visited Saskatoon for a few days during the latter part of January.

Brother Perry Leach, who has been ill for several months, passed away February 17, in the City Hospital. His wife's death occurred about ten months ago. Sister Victor Anderson, Sister Carl Ward, and Sister Causgrove are daughters of the deceased. Two sons live at Swanson.

The Saints have been much saddened over the death of Edward Nelson, who was only thirty years of age, and who leaves three little children. Much sympathy is felt for Sister Nelson and also for his mother, brothers, and sisters.

Brother Ross Winmill has also been bereaved recently, his mother passing away quite suddenly, February 25.

Decatur, Illinois

Young People Organize

The young people of Decatur have recently organized, with the aid of Delmar Jones, the district church school director. The few young people enrolled are interested and progressive.

The organizations of the young people of Taylorville and Decatur held a joint taffy pull, Saturday evening, February 17. This social was planned by Brother Jones for the young people of the various branches of the district, the purpose being to get acquainted.

Daisy Hill Branch, Saskatchewan

Have Seven New Members

This branch is gaining in numbers. Last year seven candidates, four children and three adults, were baptized. Of the adults one is an unmarried young man, the other two a young man and his wife, all three splendid people who are firm in the faith.

God has given many blessings to Daisy Hill Saints, encouraging them in their meetings and gladdening their hearts in numerous ways.

They intend to have an Easter program this year as is their custom.

Friends and neighbors give splendid support in all their undertakings.

Rock Island, Illinois

Zionic Order of Noblemen a Special Project

Several families from Davenport Branch have joined with Rock Island group during the past year, and have added much to this branch. Sister Marcene Weber has been active as president of the young people's organization, and Warren Hinkle is director of the young people's division. Orrin Lindsay is director of the adult division, and Wesley Richards is assisting Lee White and Thomas Willets in conducting the affairs of the branch in the absence of Pastor L. W. Stiegel. Brother Stiegel has been obliged to go to Horicon, Wisconsin, for a few weeks to make an audit for his company, and his absence is regretted.

They are continuing their program of redecorating the lower auditorium. A large platform has been built, and partitions will soon inclose the furnace and kitchen room. This makes an excellent place for our young people's activities, and is much appreciated.

In November they began a special project which is called the Zionic Order of Noblemen. Both the older and younger members of our branch have responded with intense interest to this organization and the attendance of young people has doubled. Study and recreation are provided in an organized and progressive manner with the incentive of honors or degrees for which to work. The older members of the branch act as sponsors to the younger Noblemen and assist them in many ways, helping them to prepare for the tests required for the higher honors and taking a personal interest in their welfare. The young people meet every other Friday evening for their regular Noblemen meetings. Lectures, program numbers, games and light refreshments are enjoyed. They also meet on Sunday evenings to study. The group is planning to present two plays in the near future.

has been much enjoyed. The teen-age girls have been practicing every Sunday afternoon and their anthems are a pleasing prelude to the preaching services.

During the holiday season a son was born to Brother and Sister Warren Hinkle, of Davenport. They have named him John David. Brother and Sister Kenneth Cady are the happy parents of a daughter born January 16. She has been given the name of Janet Kay. Sister Cady who was formerly Miss Jennie Gunlock, graduated from the Independence Sanitarium a few years ago.

District President E. R. Davis is recuperating from a serious illness at the home of Brother and Sister John Stiegel. Saints are happy to know that his recovery is assured, and that he will soon be able to be out again. Brother Davis has labored unceasingly in the interest of the Master's work, and deserves a much-needed rest.

The women's department meet every Thursday afternoon to quilt. Under the leadership of Sister Jennie Cady the subject of dietetics was discussed for a time.

The Men's Class enjoyed an oyster supper and social time when they had finished working on the platform in the basement. A large number were present and the teamwork was admirable. Their teacher, Brother F. C. Bevan, is kept busy occupying at the preaching hours at Moline and Rock Island, and also at Galesburg.

The sacrament service for February was unusually sacred and everyone felt the influence of divine power. The Sunday school was well attended, and at its close the Court of Honor of the Zionic Order of Noblemen admitted twelve new members. Their pledge of allegiance to the church and the charge which was given by our pastor, L. W. Stiegel, found a responding chord in the hearts of the congregation. The sacrament service which followed was a spiritual feast for all, and the gifts of the Spirit were manifest in power.

Sister Edna Hess entertained the intermediate girls at her home in honor of Sister Louise Gunlock for whom she is acting as sponsor. Games and refreshments were enjoyed by everyone. Brother and Sister A. J. Gray entertained Alice and Warren Skagg at a dinner in their honor. The circle of friendship and loyalty has been enriched by the interest the sponsors are showing in their young charges, and the results are certainly to be commended. A Sunday evening sponsor class has been organized with Sister Nellie White as teacher and general sponsor for the group.

Sister Jennie Johnson, of DeKalb, Illinois, who, with her husband, has been spending the winter with Doctor and Mrs. Asay, has been in quite poor health.

Although her eyes have failed almost completely and she has suffered considerably, she is faithful in attending church and other meetings whenever possible. Her friends trust that her recovery may be rapid and complete.

Jonesport, Maine

Make Missionary Progress

Elder Newman Wilson recently closed a successful series of meetings at Indian River. He had planned to hold a series at West Jonesport, but deep snow and continued cold weather made traveling practically impossible. This will have to be postponed until spring.

Brother Josiah Alley holds a service at Beals every Sunday. The second Sunday in the month he is accompanied by W. E. Rogers, and they serve sacrament to the Saints.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of Elder N. M. Wilson the evening of December 7, when Philip Gray and Laura Gray, both active in church work, were united in marriage.

The local church presented a beautiful display of Christmas cheer to passersby. A large triangle surrounded by colored lights covered the front of the building and through the ingenuity of Newman Wilson pieces of board were painted and arranged to represent blue sky with the words "Peace" and "Good Will" shining through. At the top a large star shone. An editorial in the local paper declared this the finest decoration in all the surrounding towns.

On Christmas night the young people presented the pageant, "Star Gleams," under the direction of Evangeline Davis and Mrs. N. M. Wilson, the latter having charge of the music.

The women had their annual bazaar which netted them a liberal amount considering the depression. Jonesport had not been affected by widespread economic conditions until this winter, but the CWA project has been a great help to the poorer class.

The branch business meeting was held January 8, and practically all officers were sustained in their respective offices. W. E. Rogers was unanimously sustained branch president.

The young people meet weekly for worship, study, and discussion of problems. On a recent Monday night they met at the home of Evangeline Davis, and Leon Look gave a challenge to all to assume their responsibilities and to carry on with determination to build spiritually for the tasks and problems of each day. The local young people are taking a definite stand in church work and relationship to the joy of older members.

The Saints' church was the scene of a pretty wedding when Miss Marian Wilson, daughter of Elder and Sister Newman M. Wilson, became the bride of Laurence Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs.

Emery Smith. The double ring ceremony was read by the bride's father following several musical numbers. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Pauline Wilson, as maid of honor, and Chester Gray was best man. Orel Noyes and Willard Gray were ushers, and LaVerne Wilson, youngest sister of the bride, carried a basket of roses. A reception followed the ceremony in the church vestry. The bridal couple will make their home in Jonesport.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

The worship period Sunday, March 4, was most impressive. After the opening hymn, the junior chorus, under the direction of Mrs. Luella Wight, sang "Savior, Hear Us We Pray," and then stood and repeated in unison, the first Psalm, which they have recently learned. With this setting, Pastor C. E. Wight baptized Mrs. L. D. Herrick. The confirmation took place at the sacrament service, Elders J. A. Gardner and H. Paxton officiating. After the baptismal service the juniors sang, "We Come, We Come." This chorus is to be commended for their splendid singing. It has been some time since the chorus has appeared in the main services, and these youthful singers were well received.

Central Church Choir appeared Sunday night, March 4, for the first time in their new robes in a special dedication service. The robes were presented to Central Church by Mrs. T. B. Dunn and accepted for the congregation by Pastor C. E. Wight. A continuation of hymn study composed the evening's program; the choir singing the hymns and the pastor telling the stories. The choir members are most grateful to the group of Central ladies who so generously gave their services in making the robes. It is the first time that the Central Church Choir has had robes.

Gladstone Church

The O. B. K.'s of this group held a special meeting Sunday evening, January 28, at the home of L. C. Connelly. Mr. La Mar Dye representing the National Youth Movement, a political organization, was the guest speaker. There was also a program of music.

A Valentine party was given at the home of Sister Witte for choirs of Gladstone and Bennington groups.

Recent speakers have been Apostle J. A. Gillen and Bishop A. B. Phillips, of Independence; Elder Orville Helm, pastor of Bennington, and Henry Davis, pastor of North East, and C. G. Mesley of the stake presidency.

The stake presidency appointed Seth S. Sandy as Gladstone's new pastor. He has served as a member of the stake presidency and is now a member of the stake bishopric.

The choir of twenty-five voices directed by Earl J. Cox, is preparing a cantata for Easter.

Illinois District Responds Well to Services of Evangelist

Many are Looking Hopefully to General Conference

We started meetings at Taylorville the first of February. Apostle John F. Garver had made arrangements for these services and also for a series at Decatur.

Our task at Taylorville was somewhat different from that to which we have been accustomed. Here the two rival mine factions, the Progressives and the United Mine workers are still at war, and Brother Arthur Henson, president of the branch, felt that the time was ripe for cementing the feeling and friendship of church workers. Our effort was not designated for nonmembers. Brother Henson, who is a very busy business man, took time off and hired an extra clerk, that he might take me around to visit the members. Several days were spent in this way, and we enjoyed some good visits.

Each night the church was comfortably full and on two or three evenings there was standing room only. The newspaper of the city gave us a half column each night, and with the exception of two nights the write-ups were on the front page. Two or three strangers told us that they had read the synopses of the sermons in the paper, and wanted to hear for themselves the gospel we were preaching.

At the request of Brother Henson who is also the district president, we went one night to Springfield. Brother Henson is desirous of reorganizing the work there where the Saints have not been meeting for about two years. We preached to a company of thirty in the home of Brother Joseph Williams. At the close of the sermon they agreed to start their meetings again, and made arrangements to meet on the coming Sunday at the home of another member. We have promised to go there again for a couple of nights before we leave this district, for they think a few sermons will do much to stimulate and help them.

We are now engaged in a series at Decatur. Here at the beginning of our effort, the snowstorm and cold weather struck us. Nevertheless, the Saints have been faithful in attendance. Only a few nonmembers have yet been reached, but we are not discouraged; we feel that the Saints everywhere need teaching, strengthening, and encouraging.

Before we leave the district we are to return to Taylorville where we have several baptisms.

We shall be busy right up to General Conference, and are looking forward to that event. Along with Saints here at Decatur, we are observing a special week of prayer and fasting for the success of the conference. Many Decatur and Taylorville Saints are coming to conference.

RICHARD BALDWIN.

Wabash, Indiana

Group is Growing

There are forty-three Saints living in this city and they are led by Elder Baggerly who came here in January. Progress is evident. Before Brother Baggerly's coming they had organized a Sunday school and were holding prayer services, but with the help of an elder they feel spiritually uplifted.

Priest Fred Whiteside assisted Brother Baggerly in starting a Sunday evening service also sacrament on the first Sunday of the month.

March 4, was a wonderful day. All the members gathered, and the young as well as the older Saints participated in testimony and song. Workers ask the prayers of the church that they may grow in numbers and in consecration.

Chatham, Ontario

Benefit From Visits of District and General Officers

Elder S. E. Miffin, district director of religious education, visited this church school the morning of January 28, giving the young people excellent thoughts on faith and relating some of Brother Gomer T. Griffiths early church experiences.

That evening Apostle D. T. Williams, the speaker, presented an outline of the work The Christian Legion is desirous of accomplishing among the young people of the church. Many eagerly await the time to organize.

Thursday and Friday, February 8 and 9, President Floyd M. McDowell met with this branch and all other branches of the district which could be represented, and gave two appealing and effective discourses. At the close of each he held a priesthood meeting, getting in touch with many of the priesthood of the district. The weather at that time was the coldest it has been in twenty years.

On Friday with the leader, Sister D. J. Williams, in charge, the women's department had Brother McDowell as guest speaker.

The February committee of the women's department had a Valentine tea at the home of Mrs. Ivan Pritchard.

The church building has been improved by the installation of a baptismal font in the basement and other conveniences. Brother Herbert Smith has been supervising the work.

Pastor D. J. Williams is wisely directing the branch activities and helping in every way.

Brother Williams inducted six candidates into the kingdom of God by baptism the evening of February 28. Two of these are the sons of Brother and Sister Carman Kelly. One is a young man of twenty-five of the Sixth Nation Reserve of Indians. The other three candidates are Mrs. Bertha Symes and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Gurney.

After the baptism the Saints assembled in the auditorium for the confirmation service in which Elders R. H. Jones, Royal Wood, V. E. Prichard and the pastor officiated.

Portsmouth-Nauvoo Branch

Portsmouth, Ohio

Attendance at the various church services has been holding its own during the bad weather.

Elder Walter Culp was the speaker, January 28, using for his subject, Matthew 7: 14.

District President A. E. Anderton, of Columbus, Ohio, was present February 4, at the two-thirty prayer meeting, at which time a pleasant gathering was held.

Recent speakers for this congregation have been Elder Culp, and Priests James Cheffin and Martin L. Crabtree, on the subjects, "I Am the Way, the Truth, and the Light," and "Resurrection."

At a recent meeting the priesthood received valuable instruction from Elder Rexroad. These meetings are of importance to the priesthood.

On the evening of February 11, Priest Charles F. Monroe was the speaker. Special instrumental music was furnished by the members.

Those on the sick list are improving. A son, William Francis, was born to Brother and Sister Appelton, February 9. The boy was named after Elder Francis May, of Dayton, Ohio, who presides over the Pleasant Valley, Ohio, group.

The latter-day work seems to be moving along rapidly. Several Saints have filed their inventories, and are paying tithing and offering.

Shenandoah, Iowa

Reaping the Fruits of Good Sowing

Elder R. E. Pratt has been conducting a series of Sunday night sermons, which have proved inspiring and helpful in promoting interest in church activities. Attendance at the Sunday night services has more than doubled and this, in itself, is testimony to the great good he is doing.

Elder O. A. Currie, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, was the speaker at the morning preaching service, February 11, and the Saints, as always, were glad to receive his message which was, indeed, meat in due season. In the afternoon he spoke at the Clarinda mission.

Elder J. O. Rennie is conducting a series of lessons on "The Restoration" each Sunday night preceding the preaching service, intended chiefly for the young people but including all ages.

Sunday, February 4, was a beautiful day filled with happy experiences. During the sacrament service, more especially was the Spirit of God in evidence. Charles White, a member of the priesthood spoke under the spirit of prophecy and admonition to one of the young brothers of the branch. The infant daughter, Phyllis Irene, of Brother and Sister A. M. Taylor, was blessed.

In the afternoon the Saints congregated to witness the baptism of four from Clarinda Mission. Service was in charge of A. M. Taylor. Elder J. O. Rennie was in charge of the immersion of the candidates. They were: David Lawson and wife, Montana; William H. Harnagel, sr., and William H. Harnagel, jr.

These baptisms, together with four others at a previous service were the result of two summers' missionary effort on the part of Elder J. O. Rennie, assisted by the pastor, J. R. Epperson, Alfred Taylor and others. Also Elder E. Y. Hunker conducted a two weeks series of meetings in the fall at Clarinda Mission.

Mrs. J. A. Rennie, mother of Elder J. O. Rennie, passed from this life January 24, leaving to mourn, her son and his wife, Jennie, one granddaughter, Thelma, and many friends.

Rolland Schneider, at a recent meeting of the branch, was chosen to be the young people's leader.

Sixty-ninth Wedding Anniversary for Mr. and Mrs.

Thomas Gainey

Moline Couple Have Love and Esteem of Their Community

Brother and Sister Thomas Gainey, members of Moline Branch, Illinois, for thirty years, celebrated their sixty-ninth wedding anniversary February 25, being honor guests at the open house and family dinner held at the William Cowley home at Moline. More than one hundred and fifty friends and relatives called at the home during the afternoon and evening, and Mr. and Mrs. Gainey were presented gifts, cards of congratulation and bouquets of flowers. Entertainment was provided by the guests, by three little great-grandchildren, and by Mr. and Mrs. Gainey who gave several duet numbers.

Brother Gainey was ninety-two years old December 28, and Sister Gainey will be eighty-five July 3. Always they have been boosters in the branch; have entertained many missionaries in their home and invited the Saints to participate in such good-time get-togethers as picnics and bob-sled and hayrack rides. They were baptized July 23, 1905, at Carbon Cliff, Illinois, where they lived on a small farm. Later they moved to East Moline and then to Moline. Nothing gives them more pleasure than to meet with Saints and they attend church regularly. Both love to sing the songs of Zion and are valiant in testimony. Sister Gainey is especially grateful for a blessing of healing recently given her through administration and prayer.

This worthy couple are the parents of seven children, six of whom are living, and there are thirty-six grandchildren and fifty-four great-grandchildren. Brother and Sister Gainey's greatest regret is that they did not hear the gospel in their younger days so they could teach it to their children. Brother Gainey is a member of the G. A. R., and Sister Gainey a member of the Relief Corps. She has held several offices in that organization, and three years ago served as president.

Bakersfield, California

Eighth and Eye Street

Attendance at church services is steadily increasing, some members and visitors coming a distance of thirty miles Friday nights and Sundays. Occasionally some come a distance of one hundred and twenty miles. The following activities take place, Wednesday evening, prayer service, which is well attended; Friday night, young people's meeting, and sermon; Sunday, Sunday school, and church in the morning and evening. Elder Joseph R. Meloan was a recent speaker, stressing the importance of the church's broadcasting sermons over the radio.

A recent baptismal service took place, at which time six candidates were led into the water, Elder L. W. Roberts officiating. Several remarked that they had never witnessed a more impressive ceremony. During the confirmation services, the twin children of Mrs. Iona Pittman were blessed.

A meeting of officers and teachers was held at six-thirty in the evening, Sister Roberts in charge.

Brother Roberts was the evening speaker, special music being furnished by Sister Harris and Brother Lonnie Mizell. A number of visitors were present during the evening services.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

A most impressive sacrament service was held for this congregation February 4. Brother P. E. Cross and wife, of Ironton, Ohio, met with the Saints at this service.

The woman's department met February 8, with twenty-four members and two visitors. A paper on "Knowledge" was read by Nell Swanson, being prepared by Georgia Brush. Ethel Kirkendall read a paper on "Our Presidents."

The women are trying the sacrifice envelope system for raising funds for the general church. For the month of January, they realized a sum of almost thirty dollars.

Patriarch G. T. Griffiths preached an inspiring sermon February 11. His theme was, "Why."

District President A. E. Anderton preached February 18, leaving the following quotation for the Saints to think about, "To thine own self be true, and it must follow as the night the day, thou canst not be false to any man."

The priesthood meets once a month to study the Priesthood Manual.

The prayer meetings during this year have been of a high spiritual order. Saints feel greatly encouraged by the Spirit of the Master.

Speakers recently have been Elders G. H. Kirkendall, A. H. Nieman, Priest A. J. Hoffman, Patriarch J. E. Matthews, and Bishop H. E. French.

Saints of this congregation join with the general church in praying for the coming General Conference, that God's Spirit may be there in power.

Spokane Youth Convention Successful

Educational, Social and Spiritual Factors Combine to Help All

The good done at the youth convention at Spokane, Washington, February 16, 17, and 18, has broadened the understanding of the members and given them a deeper love for and appreciation of the men who are making it possible that the youth may become better acquainted with the church and prepared to render God a greater service.

Apostles M. A. McConley and E. J. Gleazer were in charge, and the program began with an entertainment Friday evening. Class work was one of Saturday's attractions, and there was a banquet in the evening. Regular services were held Sunday. Brother McConley, the members were sorry to learn, will not return to this district, but they are gratefully appreciative of the service he has rendered them and pray that he may successfully carry on elsewhere.

Paul Anderson, of Yakima, was elected president of the young people.

In more than one way the convention was a success. Schooling was a paramount issue and yet the social side was a big factor for good. The spiritual endowment given combined with the other two influences to instill in all hearts a love for and consecration to the cause of Christ.

Brother McConley delivered the closing address Sunday evening.

Women Have Sacrifice Drive

The six months sacrifice drive sponsored by the women's department of Saint Louis Branch, was brought to a close January 18, at a luncheon meeting at the church. Sister Zoe Davidson, chairman of the committee in charge of the drive, announced that the goal of fifty dollars had been oversubscribed by more than sixty-five dollars. A motion to continue the drive for another six months was unanimously passed by the women. Sister Myrtle Lloyd and Sister Mildred Cooper also are members of this committee.

Congratulations are being extended to S. R. Evans, son of Brother and Sister Gomer L. Evans, who received the Harvard Award at Soldan High School in Saint Louis. This award was received by the "best all around" third year pupil in the school.

Activities of the women's department have included a county fair in December and a Washington's birthday dinner and entertainment in February. This department has an average attendance of twenty at its weekly luncheon meetings.

First place in the third annual dramatic contest sponsored by the Independence Young People's Council, was given to "Dead Expense," presented by a Stone Church cast under the direction of La Von Budd and Helen Page Brackenbury. Thirteen plays were presented during the four-night final contest last week, and the judges, Lyda Budd Robertson, Mrs. Leonard Lea, and George Mesley, rendered their decision on Friday night. The silver loving cup which for two years has been held by winning Stone Church casts, was presented for the third time to the Stone Church by the president of the young people's council.

The plays were judged in three groups—folk, modern, and religious dramas. "Dead Expense," first over all, also took first place in the folk play group. "Jephthah's Daughter," by Walnut Park, took second place in the contest, and it was first in the religious drama group. "Ambition" by Second Church took first place in modern plays.

Since very early in the year the dramatic contest has generated much interest among the young people of the nine congregations. Preliminary contests occurred in the various districts early in February. Music for the final contest, held in the Dining Hall March 5, 6, 8, and 9, was furnished by local choruses, soloists, and orchestras.

Stone Church

"The warm handclasps, the strains of the organ, the songs of the choir, and the solo of my son, bring to me a great depth of feeling." These were the opening words of the guest speaker at the Stone Church Sunday morning, Elder Arthur Ferrett, of Australia, father of Colin Ferrett. Brother and Sister Ferrett arrived in the United States a couple of weeks ago, to visit their son and to attend General Conference as delegates from Australia.

In 1913, Elder C. Ed. Miller was sent as missionary to Australia. There he became acquainted with Brother and Sister Ferrett. Elder Ferrett chose for his text, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," and discussed missionary work in Australia. A large congregation listened to his inspiring discourse.

Elder John F. Sheehy was assisted in charge of the service by Elder C. Ed. Miller, who introduced Brother and Sister Ferrett.

Special music was furnished by the Stone Church Choir directed by Paul N. Craig and assisted by Robert Miller at the organ. They sang "O Lord Our God," and "Oh, Jesus, Thou Art Standing." Soloists were Mrs. Israel A. Smith, Mrs. S. A. Burgess, and Albert Brackenbury. Colin Ferrett sang "Open the Gates of the Temple."

In the evening Bishop C. J. Hunt was the speaker, giving the congregation a sermon full of cheer and inspiration. Brother Hunt is now very much engrossed in acquainting people who visit the Auditorium, with the gospel message. His headquarters are the guides' office.

The young people's division of the church school, which meets at the Auditorium, enjoyed a special occasion Sunday morning when the casts of the three winning Stone Church plays given during a period of three years, were presented to the department. Winning the plays, "Bread," "The Violin Maker of Cremona," and "Dead Expense," in three consecutive years, made the silver loving cup, presented by the council, the permanent property of Stone Church young people. Guinn Bronson, president of the Y. P. R. Class and a member of this year's winning cast, made the acceptance speech Sunday morning.

Second Church

Pastor Will Inman was in charge of the morning services last Sunday. The speaker, Patriarch Ammon White, chose for his subject, "Our Standing as Latter Day Saints." The choir, directed by Earl Audet, furnished the music. Brother Audet was ordained to the office of Elder under the hands of Pastor Will Inman and Patriarch Ammon White.

Finis Beebe was the speaker to the juniors, and an orchestra, directed by Mr. Mollison, furnished special music.

At six o'clock in the evening, Elder J. W. A. Bailey concluded his series of Book of Mormon lectures, which were very much appreciated by Second Church members.

Apostle J. A. Gillen was the evening speaker, his subject being "Building the Temple." An instrumental trio, consisting of Mrs. Adelbert Withee, pianist, Mrs. J. T. Westwood, jr., cellist, and Miss Eloise Higgins, violinist, furnished the music for the service.

Walnut Park Church

Members of the A. W. Z. Class taught by W. T. Gard, were in charge of the devotionals and program at the session of the church school Sunday morning. The invocation was by Duane Fish. Following the class period Joe Countryman played "Together" as a cornet solo, being accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Countryman, and a reading, "A Good Name," was given by Margaret Chapman. The benediction was by Milford Nace. Four hundred and sixty-six were present at the church school.

At eleven o'clock the pastor was the speaker, urging the Saints to refrain from participation in things of the world, except those things which are consistent with zionian ideals. Preceding the sermon the choir, under the direction of Sister Minnie Scott Dobson, sang as an anthem "Remember Now Thy Creator."

The Sunday evening service was devoted to a court of honor of the local troop of Boy Scouts. Brother C. G. Closson presided. After Handel's "Largo" was played as an organ prelude, the scout and scout leaders marched into the choir seats on the platform and gave the pledge of allegiance to the flag. After the advancement ceremonies for a number of scouts, an inspirational address was given by Elder R. V. Hopkins.

Walnut Park is proud of the fact that the religious drama, "Jephthah's Daughter," which was entered in the finals of the play contest at the dining hall last week, tied for second place in the contest for the cup, and was ranked first in the religious drama class. Sister Erwin Moorman and Alta June Moorman were associated in directing this play. Melba Moorman and Fred Fish received special mention for exceptional acting in this play.

Spring Branch Church

A farewell party was given Roy and Jessie Kirkwood and son, Gene, the evening of March 6. Pastor M. C. Jacobsen had charge and there were talks by Brother and Sister Fish, J. Andes, and A. J. Tankard. Gene Kirkwood, who is only three years old, sang two solos, and Frances Tankard and Fern Belk sang a duet. Refreshments were served.

Wednesday night prayer services were in charge of Arthur Peer, Jesse Smith, M. C. Jacobsen, and S. Andes. A fine spirit prevailed at the early Sunday morning hour of prayer.

"Hope" was the theme of Pastor M. C. Jacobsen's sermon Sunday morning, and he read Jeremiah 17: 5-9. The choir sang "This Holy Hour," and Alma and Gladys Dixon sang, "Hope."

The program for the evening church school was presented by the class of Velma Jones.

Jesse Smith talked on baptism and Alma Kearns sang "Take Up Thy Cross." George Wayne Crum, son of Paul and Verna Crum, and Floyd Miller were baptized by M. C. Jacobsen. Vaughn Newton Ward was baptized by Brother In-

Women Push Project to Clear Local of Debt

Sixty-seven attended the annual banquet of the young people February 1. A Valentine "kid" party was also enjoyed by the young people February 15, at the home of the pastor.

On the last Sunday of the month the young people made a trip to Santa Barbara, one hundred twenty-two miles up the coast. Seven carloads left Long Beach at seven o'clock in the morning, and all arrived at their destination before church time. At noon lunch was served at the church. A spiritual prayer meeting was enjoyed in the afternoon.

The women of the church are working commendably. They serve semimonthly dinners in the church basement. These dinners are not only worth the price charged but they are beautifully served. The proceeds are applied to eliminate the local church debt. A sum of more than sixty dollars has been raised since the first of the year.

At the first of the year Sister Flossie Sacry, superintendent, appointed three captains to prepare and serve these dinners. Each was to choose her helpers and the contest was to see which team could serve the best meal at the least cost. The winning team will be announced at the close of the year.

To help out with this plan Brother John Hacker has secured twelve city lots on which he, with the help of others, expect to raise more than enough vegetables to serve at these dinners. All the water and part of the seed will be furnished by the city.

Ministers Visit Homes During Winter Weather

Two baby girls have recently arrived in this branch. The first came to the home of Brother and Sister Chester Walson, of Lusk. The other is the daughter of Brother and Sister George E. (Tad) Redding, of Vale, Oregon. Mrs. Redding will be remembered by friends and college chums as Gladys McKim. The baby has been named Bonnie Hope. Brother and Sister Redding moved to Vale quite recently.

Sister Everett McKim and family also moved from Oshoto to Vale during the winter. The help of this family of workers is much missed.

Brothers H. L. Hartshorn and F. V. Cole have been visiting some of the members in their homes. The Saints of this branch are so widely scattered that it is nearly impossible for some to attend services during cold weather.

Brother Cole has preached several sermons on the financial law, urging the Saints to be tithe payers. A few have made out inventories.

Brother Hartshorn was elected Oshoto's delegate to conference. He has given some excellent sermons lately on daily living.

Sisters Stubbart, Cole, and Enid Stubbard have just completed a quilt for the Laurel Club.

Need Missionary Services

Saints here were delighted to welcome Elder Evans Fisher. His initial sermon was greatly enjoyed by those who heard it. This branch needs more stimulating services, and the members are looking forward to a period of increased interest and activity.

The religio department is holding weekly study classes from house to house, with an occasional deviation in the form of a social evening.

A new schedule of meetings has been arranged as follows: Sunday—Sunday school, ten o'clock, with preaching services immediately following; seven-thirty preaching service. Wednesday, eight o'clock, prayer service. Friday, eight o'clock, religio.

The women's department held a tea February 7, at the home of the pastor's wife, Mrs. M. Harna. The sum of money realized was gratifying. The members contributed generously, and varieties of tempting cakes, etc. found ready sale at the home cooking table.

Leaves to mourn, his daughters: Eliza Wilson and Harriet Dooms, of Melcher, and Sallie Starkey, of Powell, South Dakota; his sons: Joseph and John, of Albion, Iowa; Fred, of Independence, Missouri, and Lehi, of Melcher, Iowa; a sister, Mrs. Charlotte Tunstall, of England; two half-brothers, Harry Parker, of Illinois, and George Parker, of West Virginia; a half-sister, Martha Shephard, of Pennsylvania; twenty-one grandchildren, fifteen great-grandchildren, and a host of friends. He united with the church in the summer of 1880, and served as a priest many years. He was held in high esteem by all with whom he came in contact, a good citizen with high standards of devotion to his home and community. After a brief service held at his home at Melcher, the body was taken to Chariton, Iowa, where funeral services were held in the Saints' church. Elder T. S. Williams, of Lamoni, was in charge and Blair Jensen, stake president, delivered the address.

FRAKES.—Laura Ann Frakes, wife of the late Lewis Frakes, and mother of Sister J. E. Buswell, Sister Sadie Preston, Sister H. T. Cushing, William and Lewis Frakes, and the late Mrs. Meda Vanderwoort, was born April 9, 1848, and departed this life February 24, 1934. She united with the church April 13, 1890. She was the granddaughter of Joel Edmondo, of the early day history. Sister Frakes was laid to rest in the old family plot at Irwington, California, the funeral service being in charge of Elder J. B. Carmichael.

LEAMAN.—Lizzie M. Leaman was born April 11, 1870, and passed from this life October 23, 1933, at her home in San Jose, California. She was the wife of George Leaman, and the mother of George B. Leaman and Mrs. Lena Peterson. She was the daughter of early pioneers of the country, uniting with the church November 7, 1880, being baptized by Elder William Potter. Funeral services were conducted by Elder J. B. Carmichael, of Oakland, California.

Conference Notice

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.—Conference of this district held at Hammond, Indiana, last June, provided for an early spring conference this year. It was the intention of the district presidency to hold this conference in the early part of March, but when it was learned that President F. M. McDowell would be with us for the last Sunday in February, it was decided to hold the conference a week earlier. Accordingly, it convened at Grand Rapids, February 23, 24 and 25. The only event of Friday was an illustrated lecture at night on "Pre-Columbian American," by Elder A. C. Barmore. Saturday's services began with a prayer meeting at 9 a. m. under the leadership of Brethren Blett and Hayden. At the end of this service the conference was organized. The district presidency, Elders Barmore, Ryder and Dexter, were chosen to preside. When not otherwise indicated they were in charge of all services. Sister Myrtle E. Perry was selected as secretary and Sister Louise Evans as chorister. Brother Ellis, the principal deacon of Grand Rapids, assisted by all other deacons present, acted as usher. Elders Barss, Shotwell, and Melvin Ellis were made administration committee and Elders Barmore and Blett and Sister Perry, press committee. At 11 a. m. Elder A. J. Dexter gave a lecture on "Religious Education." Elder F. E. Myers was in charge. At 2 p. m. the regular business session was held. The main purpose of the conference was the election of delegates to the General Conference. It was, therefore, a "special" conference for this particular purpose, the regular conference being held always in June. The following were elected as delegates: Elder Gordon S. Brown, Lansing, Michigan; Elder Ray Frisbee, Lansing; Miss Louise Evans, Bishop and Mrs. Elmer Evans, Elder and Mrs. Ernest B. Blett, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Monroe, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Neuman, and William Webber, all of Grand Rapids, Michigan; Elder Alva Dexter, Lansing; Elder and Mrs. Archie Whitehead, Muskegon, Michigan; Mrs. Eva Soper, Muskegon; Elder and Mrs. Roy Smith, Hammond, Indiana; Elder and Mrs. Dennison Smith, Hammond; Elder and Mrs. A. C. Barmore, Battle Creek; Ezra Hayden, Benton Harbor, Michigan; Elder Macy Ellis, Alto, Michigan, and Mrs. George Cassel, Angola, Indiana. The following items of additional business were transacted: Bro. Mills, of the Mishawaka Branch, was indorsed for ordination to the office of deacon, and Stephen Martin and Joseph Gross, both of Buchanan, were indorsed for teacher and deacon, respectively. Bishop E. C. Evans and Elders Blett and W. E. Aelick were appointed as a reunion committee to determine as to whether or not there would or could be a reunion this year. Later they reported that if each branch would take separate action and together underwrite the reunion in the sum of five hundred dollars, it would be possible to resume the reunion. Action had been had at a previous conference that no more reunions be held while the church is in debt. Last of all, a motion was passed petitioning the Joint Council for the return of Elder A. C. Barmore as district president. At 4 p. m. a priesthood meeting was held at which the subjects, "Education," and "Divine Healing," were discussed. At 8 p. m. an educational institute was held. The following subjects were discussed: "The Work of the Young People," by Elder Gordon Brown. "The Women's Work," by Sister Blett; "The Church Music," by Louise Evans, and "The Publicity Work," by A. C. Barmore. Sunday began with a prayer service at 8.30 a. m., Elders Barss and Young in charge. At 10 a. m. Elder Whitehead spoke, Gordon Brown in charge. At 11 a. m. the regular local school convened. At 2 p. m., sermon by Elder A. C. Barmore, Elder John A. Luce in charge. At 4 p. m. there was a ministerial institute. The following subjects were discussed: "The Pastoral Care of the Local Church," by Elder W. F. Ryder; "Recruiting the Local Church," by Elder A. J. Dexter; "Reviving the Local Church," by Elder A. Whitehead; "Financing the Church," by Bishop E. C. Evans; "Local Missionary Work," by Elder Blett, and "General Missionary Work," by Elder A. C. Barmore. Late in the afternoon President F. M. McDowell arrived. He spoke at 7.30 p. m. The church was packed to the doors. Altogether it was an excellent conference. The weather was severely cold, and yet it did not prevent a large attendance. One person said: "I have never attended a conference of this district where everybody was so willing to work." Free meals were served in a nearby room by women workers. Free lodgings were also provided for all visitors.

The Pigeonhole

■ Only a Story

There were two men who lived in a rural community. The first was a man who had some years of desultory experience as a farmer, and then decided he liked squirrel hunting better. Squirrel hunting is a good occupation for those who don't want to work. This man knew all about farming, but he didn't like to do any of it. So he spent much time in front of the village telling the other fellows about farming. He became a sort of local critic on agricultural methods, and other men were entertained through long hours of leisure by his talk.

Another man came to the community who really wanted to do farming. He was poor and he didn't have much experience. His equipment was ramshackle and his methods were mostly left-handed. The expert often used to go out and lean on the fence to watch him work, and then would go back to the village laughing, with many tall stories of what he did.

All summer this went on. The expert observing, talking, and laughing, while the poor amateur groaned under his awkward labors. But when the fall came, one of the village men had grown tired of the expert's talk, and invited him to take a ride out into the country. First he drove by the poor beginner's place. The corn was tall, the ground cultivated and free of weeds. There were pumpkins for the winter, and many other things ripening to be put away for the winter. Then he drove by the expert's place. The crops were badly tended, and the weeds were tall and rank.

The comparison was very odious, and the expert got the point. He quit talking at the village garage for the rest of that season.

■ Billow

The Pigeon attended a music recital. One number on the program was listed, "Fierce Was the Wild Billow."

For ten minutes the storm roared and crashed. Rocks were rent, and the heavens exhausted themselves in a fury of wind. Finally it all subsided, and the singer sat down, perspiring.

Pigeon snapped out of his trance, shaking himself. "Whew! The Wild Billow was Fierce!"

"Coming 'Round the Horn"

At the tip end of South America lies Cape Horn. In early days the masters of sailing vessels going westward to California always felt that they had completed the worst and most dangerous part of their voyage when they had got around it. There were said to be three kinds of weather there: bad worse, and worst. Since the wind was generally from the west and there was always an ocean current too from that direction, it was very difficult for sailing vessels to get "Round the Horn." Many a vessel has gone around with sails torn to shreds, masts cracked or broken, spars covered with ice, and leaks sprung in its sides. And many another vessel has never been heard of again. The trip "Round the Horn" was likely to be the most eventful part of the voyage. The captain had to fight for every inch of progress against wind and wave.

The church has been coming "Round the Horn," during the past three years of the depression. It has ridden the storm, and has shown a strength that we were afraid in the early stages of the struggle it might not possess. But the strength has been there. It took the need to reveal it.

The experiences through which we have been going have revealed more than the financial strength that was necessary. They have uncovered vast resources of faith, of spiritual strength, of well grounded belief in the gospel. They have shown that the strength of a church rests not so much upon the negotiable securities and the vendible properties as it does upon the intangible and imponderable qualities of mind and spirit that characterize the people as a group apart.

While we remain strong in spirit, firm in faith, and constant in hope, we can survive all the hurts and disappointments that life can inflict on us. If God is still at the head of His church, we can follow anywhere. We rather think that we are now coming "Round the Horn." Auspicious times, so far as human wisdom can observe, seem to lie ahead. But if they do not—if there are still trials ahead for us to endure—we shall rejoice in the spiritual blessings that we hope will continue with us.

We have come "Round the Horn" already in a spiritual sense. There is no doubt about it. And we have faith to believe that, with this assured, that material things will not hinder us long.

Prayer is a powerful thing; for God has bound and tied himself thereunto.—Luther.

The Political Trend

A warning that the free spaces of the earth will not long be left free is contained in Mussolini's recent statement to the effect that Italy must expand, when he announced a sixty-year program of development for that country. The fact that Samuel Insull former utilities magnate, is afloat on the Mediterranean Sea in a cockleshell-sized tramp steamer, with scarcely a country left in the world where the authorities of the United States cannot worry him, is additional evidence. A little country can scarcely declare its existence in the world without being sponsored by the diplomats and protected by the guns of some larger country. Cuba, Manchukuo, the Philippines, and little Austria, are examples.

Ireland is the single exception, and she dares to defy the authority of the British Empire because she knows that all the powers of that government would be turned loose upon any other government that dared try to touch the Emerald Isle. In the vast aggregations of power that hold the balance of the world's affairs today, it appears that small autonomous units will gradually be eliminated.

Our terrible and immediate danger lies in the fact that the great powers are no wiser than the little powers, but they are stronger and capable of doing more damage. Mussolini will seek Italian welfare. France will seek French welfare, no matter what particular silk hat is in power at the moment. Hitler is looking out for the Germans, and both lords and commoners in England will concede nothing against the interest of the Empire. In our own country we have been disillusioned in our naive and vain attempt to play the role of exemplary idealism. We are learning to "look out for ourselves."

And while all the nations are so busy looking out for themselves, there is nobody looking out for that great silent majority of the earth, the human race. It is the group that suffers in time of famine, that pays the cost of high and retaliative tariffs, that is impoverished by trade restrictions and that dies in wars. The generals gather epaulets and medals, the business barons accumulate gold, and statesmen strive for the tinsel and tassels of fame; but the human race patiently bears the burdens of all these profitless ventures.

Just One in the history of the world has stood for the rights of the human race, against the clamors of nationalism, trade, race, and creed: that One was Jesus. Governments cannot be at peace until they merge into one organization under His leadership.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards on Radio Speaking Over KMBC, March 25

Radio listeners will be glad to know that Apostle F. Henry Edwards will speak over KMBC at six o'clock Sunday, March 25. This address, entitled "Building a World Society," will be a part of the Graceland College broadcast. Independence alumni of the college have been asked to furnish the musical part of the program.

Sister W. H. Deam Passes

In the death of Sister W. H. Deam, whose decease is announced in another column, there passes from us another link between this generation and those of the earlier history of the Reorganization. She was a step-daughter of William Marks, and so lived in the home of that man who played an important role in our history. Sister Deam was for many years a very active worker in the work of the church and its departments, and as a helper to her husband who filled various positions in the church.

Her long illness confined her so closely to the home that many of the younger generation even in Independence did not know this estimable woman, but those who knew her in her active years and in the days of her vigor will mourn the passing of a gentle, sweet, and thoroughly feminine friend and church members.

Opportunity for Young Women

In Nurse's Training

By Charles F. Grabske, M. D.

The church offers advantages to the young woman who wishes to prepare herself for efficient activity. Since 1910 there has been maintained in Independence, an institution created and built in response to a revelation given through the prophet to his people. This organization is "a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted"—"where they may be removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick." Indeed, in such language is its mission stated in its charter.

Our hospital offers an opportunity to young women who have had a year of college, to enter under its care as student nurses, there to be trained to become professional nurses. During this period of diminished openings, it would seem wise to improve the time to become skillful and valuable in some particular way. The sick are always with us and service to them is always necessary. To care for them well is in itself a source of much satisfaction.

I would urge those who might profit through such a training to communicate with Miss Gertrude Copeland, the superintendent of the Sanitarium at Independence, Missouri.

Men You Ought to Know

C. B. WOODSTOCK

Associate Director of Religious Education

Brother Woodstock has been a valuable assistant to President F. M. McDowell, who has carried the responsibility of Director of Religious Education. Brother Woodstock maintains a steady and helpful correspondence with church school leaders, workers and teachers. He is probably closer in touch with more people engaged in this part of the church work than anyone else. His generous and helpful letters go everywhere, and he has done much to bring about the observance of the standards adopted by the General Conference of 1930 and the use of the plans outlined in the Church School Handbook. He also has much to do with the arrangement and supervision of our quarterly curriculum.

A Warning

Elder J. L. Verhei, President of the Portland District, writes what he feels to be a necessary word of warning in the case of Leonard G. Hoisington, who has been under silence for some time. The latter has moved to parts unknown, and may come in contact with branches not informed of his record. He should not be permitted to function as a minister in any case, according to the rules of all silences.

That a straight line is the shortest distance between two points applies to the beginning and the end of a sermon . . . To entertain beautiful thoughts is to hang the world's masterpieces in the gallery of one's mind.—Church Management.

PRESIDENT
FREDERICK M. SMITH

Working With God

A brother who is and has long been interested in Zion, the gathering, and the whole group of ideas surrounding the subject of Zion, after reading my recent article on fasting and the call for a fast observance in the interests of General Conference, wrote me saying he was heartily in favor of the move and expressing his determination to observe the fast, saying he is looking for (expecting) a definite move towards establishing stewardships and zionic conditions." Then he adds something which is of interest to me when he says:

"There are many theories and ideas as to how we are going to do the work. I have mine and Brother X has his, so we are not working together with God."

The brother has put his finger on a difficulty which has confronted us, and will continue to present itself, perhaps till we have learned a greater degree of obedience and developed a greater willingness to cooperate under a leadership to which consistent following is given. We have not learned yet to overcome self in our notions of social reform any more than in the matter of worldly possessions. We hold our ideas of special reform tightly against our self interests.

One might have expected the brother to have added to his words something like this: "And unless the conference or our leaders put out something of a program in harmony with my ideas—why I just will not play!" But he said something different:

"But I assure you that whatever is put forth from headquarters, I will do all in my power to help put it across, whether it suits me or not."

A superficial thinker might think this to be an attitude of servility; but a more careful consideration will reveal it to be of far greater social value; it is the attitude of giving consistent following to recognized leadership and this has always been an essential element of social progress. Bringing it to an immediate application to our social goal, it might well be asked, Whose leadership are we to follow onward to Zion?

The answer we give to this question, as groups as well as individuals, will determine whether we enter squarely into the road which leads to our goal, or continue to wander about trying out devious by-ways.

Origin of Polygamy

In a letter recently received from Utah, a member of that church (Mormon) made a statement of the attitude of the Utah people on polygamy which we pass on to our readers without comment, feeling sure it will be of interest:

"It is indeed interesting and significant to learn people's ideas on polygamy, and many of our people here know very little about its historical development. In many cases they are not even interested in that phase of the subject. Not long ago, in conversation with a bishop of one of our wards, the question came up and he declared that the subject of polygamy was presented before the body of the church in a public meeting before the Saints ever left Nauvoo. And that is only an example of the widespread lack of understanding of how the thing started. From some standpoints, such a situation may be a good thing. The historical facts, so far as they can be learned, are certainly disturbing and I think that those who do not give the subject much thought are really more serene and steadfast in their faith than those who try to 'dig' up the facts for themselves."

Potential Missionaries

I recently wrote to the Presidents of Seventy concerning the time which I hoped would soon come when our corps of seventy would be refilled with young men enthused with the missionary spirit. From Brother J. W. Davis I received a reply which shows he has lost little if any of his desire to spread the "good news." He says:

"Every active young man I see in the church is a potential seventy to me, and not infrequently when I contemplate some of these fine young workers does the Spirit definitely indicate their worthiness. I am sure that the Lord has many in reserve who can be mustered for this work when we are ready to proceed with the work of reconstruction. Of course there is not much to be done in the way of selecting and ordaining seventies until we are able and ready to put them in the field. I am hoping and praying that the day will soon come when we can set ourselves more definitely to the task of rebuilding the ministerial structure of our church and when we can send into the world-wide field a corps of workers so endowed with the spirit and power of the Holy Priesthood that the work of evangelizing the world can be carried forward with increasing rapidity."

A Young Woman's Comments on Polygamy

Much has been said in the columns of the Herald concerning the question of polygamy and of course the attitude of this paper has always been that American polygamy originated with Brigham Young. Evidence can be piled up to indicate that before his interest in polygamy was aroused to the point it reached in 1852, this reprehensible doctrine had no place as a church tenet on American soil. The apparent effort of the authorities of the Utah church to refasten this doctrine upon the "Mormons" causes one to wonder how the young people of the Utah church look upon it. Of course there is likely to be here a variety of opinion as elsewhere, but recently we saw a letter from a young matron in Utah whose family has long been connected with that ecclesiastical organization, and the comments of this woman relative to polygamy are so to the point and indicate so clearly the attitude which at least some of the young people are assuming toward this doctrine that we quote it with some degree of pleasure. In a letter to a friend this young matron of Utah wrote:

"How wonderful it would be, if all the followers of the Prophet could unite in one large strong church. However, even if the lesser difficulties could be surmounted, the polygamy question would still remain. By many this is considered a dead issue, but dying is a better and truer adjective. The issue is by no means dead yet. You asked about the significance of the recent Church statement on the problem. From all I can learn, it appears that there has recently occurred a new outbreak. These, of course, continue from time to time and many notices of excommunication are published in the Deseret News. I noticed one last week. Such a condition is valid proof that it is impossible to preach and teach for fifty years the super virtues of polygamy and then expect people to give up these ideas suddenly. Of course, one might think that in the course of the forty odd years since the manifesto the system could be eradicated, but such is not the case. Personally, I believe that the general authorities of the church at present, at least some of them, are still very much converted to the principle, and, of course, the orthodox opinion generally is that the principle is just as right as it ever was and that the practice will come back eventually. Young returned Mormon missionaries say solemnly: 'It was a holy principle and will be restored.' Oh, very holy, indeed! The more I learn about it the more I am set against it—principle, practice, and everything connected with it. And that reminds me. In Mr. Evans' new book on the prophet the statement is made that polygamy is the only cure ever found for prostitution. No wonder. If a man can legally and according to the laws of his church have all the women he sees that he wants, of course there would be no prostitution."

Many of the men of the governing authorities of the Utah church are of polygamous origin, and hence have strong inclinations towards clinging to the erroneous idea that polygamy is a divine institution and in effect because of divine mandate, quite overlooking the fact that both biologically as well as historically. Divinity has put the stamp of strong disapproval upon polygamous marriages, and at the same time blinking the fact that in ecclesiastical law monogamy and not polygamy has been ordered.

There are probably hundreds of people still with the Utah church who abhor polygamy, and long for the coming of the day when they may be freed from its shackles. And it is likely that some day this element of that church will unitedly rise and say to the polygamously inclined one, "No longer will we permit you to govern us—polygamy must cease."

The young matron points to a truth when she says that so long as the authorities of her church teach polygamy, so long will there be polygamous practices. It is incongruous to teach one thing and practice another. The very persistence of the polygamous teaching gives rise to the suspicion that it is still being practiced.

The question of polygamy in the Utah church is a long way from being permanently settled, and is quite likely to be another of the Banquo's ghosts which rise to torment it.

Charter Membership in Graceland Alumni Association Soon to Close

All Graceland alumni who desire to be charter members of the Graceland Alumni Association should apply for membership before the opening of General Conference, as it is probable that the lists will be closed by that date. Simply write to the Graceland Alumni Association, Lamoni, Iowa, stating your desire to be a charter member and enclosing a dollar for your first year's dues.

Prayer

Prayer is of little value when it is engaged in spasmodically. Invariably it is when prayer is neglected that one falls in defeat before the trials and temptations of life. The less a person prays, the less inclined he will be to pray; and naturally, when the strong tests come, he finds it difficult to lay hold of the power that God is always ready and willing to bestow.

When a pump is frequently used, the water flows out at the first stroke, because it is high; but if the pump has not been used for a long time, the water gets low, and when you want it, you must pump a long while or perhaps prime it; the water comes only after great effort. It is so with prayer.—C. Lester Bond.

Church School Views Carnegie Memorial Medal

On March 4 the church school of Great Falls Branch, Montana, viewed the Carnegie medal awarded in memory of Omar A. Nunn, seventeen-year-old son of Brother Omar Nunn, who lost his life in 1932, in an effort to save a companion from drowning. Engraved on the medal were the words of Jesus, "Greater love hath no man that this, that a man lay down his life for his friend."

Included in the recently-elected Southern California delegation to General Conference are four students from the district who are attending Grace-land College, Valeria Crum, Harmon Crum, J. C. Stuart jr., and Laddie McKay.

Texas Woman Invites Reunion to Bandera

Sister Virginia Hays, of Bandera, Texas, sent an invitation to the Southwestern Texas district conference at San Antonio, to hold summer reunion at Bandera. Not long ago she purchased a small tract of land adjoining the church there, and she offered to donate to the district an old building which can be torn down and used to erect a tabernacle. By unanimous vote the conference accepted the invitation and gratefully thanked Sister Hays.

"Onward to Zion" Theme of Young People's Convention

"Onward to Zion" was the theme of the annual young people's convention of Spring River District, held this year at Webb City. The opening event March 2, was a banquet, and George Mesley, of Kansas City, Missouri, was the principal speaker. He spoke on "Zion the Beautiful Beckons Us On." Toasts given were: "Faithful and Strong," "To Christ We Belong," "With Service the Watchword," and "March on With a Song."

Missionary Series at Fairview, Montana

Elders George Thorburn and L. O. Wildermuth have completed the fifth week of their series of missionary meetings at Fairview, where they are experiencing fine support from branch officers and a large and steady attendance of friends and members. Understanding, good will, and unity are increasing in this community.

Joint Council Is in Session

The Joint Council, composed of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric, is now in session at Independence, considering reports of officers and departments to be submitted to the General Conference in April. The opening session of the council occurred Wednesday, March 14, and two two-hour meetings are had daily in the office of the First Presidency, at the Auditorium.

Notes From Here and There

Four were baptized at Ontario, California, on the first day of the year.

In November and again in February Elder J. O. Dutton conducted missionary meetings at Washington with increasing interest and attendance. Prospects are bright for a branch organization there in the future.

Douglas and Bisbee branches, Arizona, observed March 4, fast day, together in a most effective way.

Pastors of various branches in Idaho District reported improvement in the work of their locals and a general awakening of the Saints to their responsibilities as church members, to the recent Idaho district conference.

"One of the many joys of the gospel is passing it on to others," say Dayton, Ohio, Saints, and this they are trying to do.

Interest in the gospel has revived at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Members appreciate the help of Pastor Pennington who lives twenty-five miles away, also the assistance of Iowa City priesthood members.

At the suggestion of their pastor, Parsons, Kansas, Saints made a free will offering of five dollars to the church March 11, giving the price of meals saved on fast day the previous Sunday.

Holden Young People Successful in Organization and Activities

By Robert I. Thistlethwaite

The young people of Holden Stake have just completed the first year and one half as a stake-wide organization. Under the capable leadership of Gladys Beebe, Atherton, Missouri, several projects have been carried out and others planned for the coming year.

An attendance contest is now being conducted under the supervision of Ammon Andes. The percentages given are based on the total young people's membership of each branch with an average attendance of four meetings a week. The results to date are:

Jefferson City .....	60%
Blue Springs .....	51%
Sedalia .....	47%
Strasburg Mission .....	45%
Warrensburg .....	45%

An essay contest has just been completed entitled "The Financial Obligation of the Youth to the Church." This contest was under the direction of Robert Thistlethwaite. The winners were:

Gladys Beebe, Atherton, first.

Ammon Andes, Warrensburg, second.
Vernon Lundeen, Atherton, third.

Several of the essays have been held for publication in the Herald. Twenty-five essays were submitted, eight branches being represented. The winner of First Prize appears in this week's Herald.

THE RECEPTION BANQUET

For the young people at the Holden Stake conference at Atherton, March 9, 10, 11, the reception was in the nature of a banquet, planned by the young people of Atherton. The songs, talks, general atmosphere of the occasion, and the feeling of fellowship, made a fitting beginning for a conference to which youth contributed so much. The inspiration received from this banquet will have a lasting effect upon the lives and activities of many of those present.

PRESIDENT SMITH PRESIDES

In his closing remarks of the business session Saturday morning, President F. M. Smith commented on the interest the young people of the Stake were taking in the conference meetings and was greatly pleased and encouraged by the spirit of cooperation shown between the young people and those of more mature age. In this session, a motion was passed permitting the Stake Bishopric and the Stake High Council to allot funds for the activities and projects outlined by the Executive Council of the young people.

INSPIRATIONAL DEVOTIONAL MEETING

Brother Amos Allen had charge of the Sunday morning prayer meeting of the young people. From the first it was evident that the large number present were sincere in their one purpose: to consecrate and dedicate themselves anew to the church and to their God. With such young men and women in the stake, conscious of their responsibilities, aware of their opportunities, and willing to work for the church, with capable leadership and Divine guidance, Holden Stake and the General Church may expect to move forward.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS

Following the prayer meeting the officers for the coming year were elected: The officers are:

Robert L. Thistlethwaite, Sedalia, President.

Ammon Andes, Warrensburg, Vice President (reelected).

Genevieve Smith, Lees Summit, Secretary (reelected).

A new type of organization was adopted in which the Executive Council is composed of the above named officers, upon whom rests the responsibility for the administration of stake activities. Cooperating with this group is the Advisory Council composed of the leaders of young people throughout the stake.

Graceland Wins First in Southwest Iowa Junior College Contest

Graceland won first place in both music and dramatics in a contest that took in the following junior colleges of southwestern Iowa: Creston, Clarinda, Osceola, Red Oak, and Chariton. Graceland had 48 points, and her nearest competitor 30 points.

Of course it is fun to win if you are in a contest, and nobody likes winning better than Graceland young people do. Yet they strive for excellence rather than for victory, as one may see from the following paragraph written by an unnamed reporter for the Graceland Tower:

"There is a thrill in any contest of this sort which arouses all of a person's loyalty. It fills the air with a sense of excitement which stimulates everyone who comes into contact with it. The keener the competition, the greater the thrill. Ideally, there should be a time when the schools will bring their talent and perform for the sheer joy of doing it and letting the other people enjoy it too. Judges and personal glory will be abolished. Do you like the idea? It's a long way off yet, but who knows—it might get here some day."

The Financial Obligation of Youth to the Church

By Gladys Beebe
Atherton, Missouri

In considering the financial obligation of the youth of the church it might be well to first consider the general relation of the youth to the church. In the good old days past and gone the leaders of the youth, and many who were not leaders of the youth, racked their brains in a futile effort to discover some ways and means by which the young people might be held to and for the church. I, for one, am thankful that this attitude is becoming a thing of the past. At the Lamoni Convention of last June, at our own branch and stake meetings, and in the columns of the Herald we are now constantly hearing and reading that the youth of the church are a definite part of the church and, as such, should make a contribution rather than necessitate a problem solving situation for those who are earnestly trying to help us along. Accepting this attitude brings to us, not the chance to help financially in the support of a church for our older members for which we should receive a pat on the back, but rather a definite responsibility to help financially and otherwise in the carrying on of the program of our church, our own organization, whose aims are our aims and whose progress is our progress. It brings to us the opportunity to begin now to be a working part of our church organization. Granting, then, that the youth are a working part of the church, it follows that their financial obligation to the church is that of any church member whose membership brings a conscious responsibility.

It seems to me that the beginning of the financial obligation of the youth to the church is the acquisition of a clear vision of its aims and purposes. At the General Conference of nineteen-hundred thirty two aims were set forth; to proselyte missionary work more widely, both at home and abroad, and to take definite steps toward the carrying out of the zionic program of the church.

If we, the youth of the church, are to make a real contribution to it we must have, not only a vision of its aims but also, a sincere belief in the utter worthwhileness of these aims and in the possibility of their accomplishment. Zion builders must first be

Zion seekers and Zion believers, active believers who are willing to stake everything on the accomplishment of the goal. True missionaries must themselves be converted to the gospel which they preach, and it must be an active conversion. As it is true that physical power is increased by consistent exercise, so also it is true that faith and purposefulness are strengthened. As it is true that a small crevice in a stone wall presents an ever widening horizon on near approach, so also it is true that as we approach our church aims our church horizon will become constantly broader and our vision more clear.

The financial basis necessary to the accomplishment of these aims is so closely linked with the spiritual that they are in a measure inseparable. Our money is so much a part of us that in giving it we are giving ourselves, that is of course granting that we give it because we wish. No one can have done a kind deed without having been made better; no one can wholeheartedly participate in any activity without becoming more interested in the activity; and certainly no one can contribute to our church, in time, money, thought or other service without becoming more willing to continue to contribute. Financially speaking, God does not need our money, he could find some other way to finance his plans, but if these plans are to be carried out some spiritual achievement must be made by us; so God, through a financial consecration has planned that we may learn how fittingly to make a spiritual consecration. Though these two phases of our lives are closely connected different laws are made for the making of acceptable contributions in the different fields. Those laws given to govern the consecration and payment of moneys to the church are called "financial laws." Certainly, part of our obligation to the church—and a part that by some of us has been neglected—is to know the law.

The article on this page was awarded first place in the essay contest conducted by the young people of Holden Stake. All contestants wrote on the same assigned topic, but the articles have proved so interesting that we shall present several others to our readers in future issues. The success of the contest may be attributed to Brother Robert Thistlethwaite, of Sedalia, Missouri.

In the very early days of the church the Lord recognized the importance of the financial element in the church and appointed an officer in his church, the bishop, to receive the accountings of the stew-ardships of the people and to care for the moneys of the church. Soon after the reorganization of the church the Lord said by revelation that it was wise that two counselors be appointed to the bishop and that he have agents in the various localities of the church.

There are three ways in which the Lord, through his church, receives financial consecrations; tithing, surplus, and offerings. Regarding the first of these the Lord spoke in the years soon following the organization of the church, "Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying of the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually." The beginning of tithing in our latter-day church was not an afterthought on the part of God, but a definite plan to be carried out in his church.

Further provision has been made for the establishment of a storehouse to be under the care of the bishop of the church, and receive the consecrations of the people. In Doctrine and Covenants, Section eighty-two we find, "And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of my people."

Not only are we commanded to pay our tithes, but we are told that unless we do so we shall not be found worthy to abide among God's people, "And I say unto you, If my people observe not this law, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you, It shall not be a land of Zion unto you."

The law requires not only that a tenth of the interest of God's people be paid to his representative, the bishop, but that all the surplus, or money not directly needed by his people shall be placed in his storehouse. This money is to be used for the benefit of the poor, the widows and orphans, for the buying of lands which are to be the inheritance of the church, and for the expenses of promoting general church activities, and we are told that, "This is the beginning of the tithing of my people."

Both in the church of former days and that of our own time we find the Lord commanding us to offer up our offerings before him, and to bring them to his storehouse. This is a matter of common recognition with us. Usually offerings are received by the bishop, or his appointee, every Sunday in our own churches. It is our definite responsibility to make our offerings that the church may continue to be able to carry on, and that it may also be able to again enlarge its program of activities.

There is not sufficient space in a paper of this length to completely discuss the financial law of the church. That is rather needless perhaps anyway, because in the carrying out of our obligation we can find out just what is the law. We have been told to accede to the interpretation of the bishop, so if question arises we can always go to him for help.

The remaining part of our financial obligation consists in whole-hearted compliance with the law. Our responsibility to our country is not discharged if we just know the laws but do not feel morally obligated to obey them. We may read about, talk about, and sing about the desirable church activities in which we ought to engage, but the real test of our conversion to its policies is that we fulfill its laws, not because at some one moment of time we were under an especial emotional stress and decided that that was the thing to do. At our convention at Lamoni last June one of the high points for me was reached when one young man arose in the fellowship service one morning and said, "I want to consecrate my life to this church, not just for the time being while I am here with the rest of you and feel the spirit of God in marked measure, but looking at my life and the church with my coolest, most logical thinking; I want to consecrate my life to this church." Certainly, this was his whole obligation to the church, and others of us might profit by it.

Evangelism

Evangelism, in our generation, has been handicapped by its terminology.

To the average person it means revival meetings, house to house visitation, or some special effort to make people religion conscious.

These, at last, are but feeble expressions of a great idea. Sometimes they run contrary to the true purpose of evangelism. Revivals are often started as emergency measures. They are confessions that the orderly processes of religious education have broken down. They are efforts to marshal the forces of emotionalism after logic and organization seem to have failed.

Evangelism is much greater than these efforts.—William H. Leach, "The Technique of Evangelism," Church Management.

God Hears Prayer

If radio's slim fingers
Can pluck a melody
From night and toss it over
A continent or sea:
If the petaled white notes
Of a violin
Are blown across a mountain,
Or a city's din:
If songs like crimson roses
Are culled from thin blue air,
Why should mortals wonder
If God hears prayer?

The Sunday School Lesson

The Adult Quarterly

Supplementary Material for Study

By J. A. Koehler

Lesson One—April 1

"A More Sure Word of Prophecy"

The author of the adult quarterly has furnished us with this supplementary material to assist church school classes as well as isolated students in the understanding of the lessons. One discussion will appear each week early enough to reach the students in time for the lesson.—Editors.

The whole question of the nature of the prophetic experience is raised in the lessons of this quarter. It is a question about which there is a wide disparity of opinions. Some of the data which influences opinion is elusive or deceptive; some is of uncertain character; and some is so private in nature that it cannot be passed around for public inspection. On the other hand there is data of which anyone may possess himself, which he may examine, and which should lead to more or less common conclusions. If this were not true, prophecy as a whole would be of doubtful value.

MISUNDERSTANDINGS AND DELUSIONS

Prophecy has been "a fruitful source of trouble" in the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14, 15.) It is evident that some of us do not know as much about the prophetic experience as we imagine we do. Even such a man as Oliver Cowdery was deficient in his understanding of the prophetic experience. (See Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3.) And he was one of the first prophets of the church. Now, if such a man as Oliver Cowdery was mistaken; and if some of our "good" elders needed to be rebuked for their wrong behavior in this relation; how much more liability of misunderstanding is there in men of limited intelligence, experience, and culture?

SOURCES OF TROUBLE

Any church that publishes such beliefs in prophecy as this church does is almost sure to attract to its membership certain types which are sources of trouble to the church. Chief among these are (a) those who are obsessed, or have disordered brains; (b) those who are emotionally unstable or who lack emotional control; (c) those whose ignorance leads to unwarranted assumptions; (d) those who are aspiring; and sometimes even (e) those who are designing. In fact, the prophetic function has fallen into ill repute because of the absurd and extravagant claims that have been made concerning it, on the one hand; and on the other hand, because some men have neither the inclination nor the ability to search out the facts touching this function.

THE NATURE OF PROPHECY

"I will tell you in your mind and in your heart," is a description of the prophetic function given in Doctrine and Covenants 8: 1, 2. The introductory paragraphs of Sections 128, 129, 130, and 131, Doctrine and Covenants, are further descriptions of this function. Note particularly the introduction to section 128. Contrast that confession of limitations of as fine a specimen of manhood as we are ever likely to have for leader with the egotism and the boasting of much lesser lights. This man knew enough to know what he was about.

Those who have the inclination and talent to do so may find some satisfaction in searching out the principles according to which prophetic experiences should be classified, and in placing the several experiences in their proper categories.

Unless one is capable of discriminating "the prophecy of The Kingdom" from the fortune-telling prophecy which has been a source of trouble in the church, he will not apprehend the import of the statement that prophecy is the discernment of the nature and purposes of God in relation to the nature and problems of man. This prophecy is essentially a conception. It is more than a perception of social or political and industrial facts; it is the apprehension of the causes or forces behind those facts; it is a discernment of the meaning of those facts.

When Wells said, "... this nascent Federal World State to which human necessity points," his mental operations were not far removed in their essential nature from the most important of all prophetic functions, which is to understand God and man in relation to each other. Isaiah 55: 10, 11 is one of many proclamations issuing from such an understanding.

Prophecy is defined as a prediction made under Divine influence. But it is not necessarily a "pre"-diction; it is also discourse delivered under Divine inspiration or direction; it is the proclamation and revelation of a decree or a truth uttered by a teacher as a representative of God and for God.

The word divine means (a) pertaining to the nature of God; or (b) proceeding or derived from God. And it is because there are various ways in which things divine come to be the possession of man that it is profitable to classify prophetic experiences and to place each in its proper category.

Here are some instances of types of prophetic experiences:

(1) "I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-covered beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns."—Revelation 17.

(2) "This gospel of The Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come."—Matthew 24: 14.

(3) "Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matthew 4: 4.

(4) "Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle. . . ."—Acts 21: 11.

(5) "And a vision appeared to Paul in the night: There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia and help us."—Acts 16: 9.

Make the list as long as you wish. Include the prophecy on the war of the rebellion, and Daniel's prophecy of governmental trends.

(2) and (3) may be almost identical in form; but certainly (3) and (4) are distinct types of prophetic experiences. To search out the basis of classification surely must help us to understand prophecy.

THE PROPHECIC TYPE OF MIND

Men differ in their talents, faculties, and temperaments. Some are peculiarly fit for one thing and some for another. Without doubt there is a prophetic type of mind.

It is reasonable to believe that the "gifts" or "manifestations" of the Spirit accord with the several personality types; for what is the sense in bestowing a gift upon a man who is unfitted by nature for that especial activity? Do we call color-blind men to perform artistic functions? Some men are emotionally color-blind; and some are intellectually color-blind; they just can't see things that other people are able to see. Doctrine and Covenants 6: 5; 8: 3; 9: 3, and 10: 10, all taken together mean that the "manifestations" of spiritual "gifts" take a somewhat natural course which is determined by personality types.

A MORE SURE WORD OF PROPHECY

The surest words of prophecy naturally come from the distinctive prophetic types—men who are outstanding in their perceptions of the meaning of social phenomena. It is these front line men who have been the prophets of the different ages. Whether their messages were always wholly free from error or not, at least they were most to be depended upon; theirs was the surest prophetic word spoken. They had light within themselves—the best that could be brought to play upon the road signs of the race, to make them give back information concerning both the future and the present.

BRIGHTER AND BRIGHTER

The continuance of the prophetic office in the church means that with the passing of time the truths uncovered in the past are to acquire added meaning. It means that added truth is to be revealed "line upon line," "Precept upon precept," "Here a little," "There a little." "That light groweth brighter and brighter until the perfect day." "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now."

(See Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6 and 8.) Here is a restatement of rules given through a predecessor. So far as our understanding was concerned, this was a correction of rules. By what law of necessity are the prophets of today limited to the prophetic interpretations of the past? Is there any reason why the prophets of the Zion-redeeming age should not see The Kingdom in clearer detail than did the prophets of the past?

And does the correction of the message of one prophet by another mean that the former prophet did not see the truth? Were the Wright Brothers in error in their prophecy of air travel because their conception of aeronautics was crude? And why can't we be as calm in our feelings and as deliberate in our judgments when we are discussing the question of the prophecy of The Kingdom?

How could Nahum have delivered his prophecy of air travel in the language of this age? That was an age of chariots and torches. The vocabulary of Nahum was determined by the civilization of his age and limited by his background of experience.

In what other language could he have framed his prophecy of aeronautics? Can prophets express themselves in other terms than the terms of their experience? In what terms may God reveal himself to men if not in terms of man's experience? And do not these truths apply with equal force to the prophecy of The Kingdom?

THE BLIND INTO THE DITCH

This is an age of political and industrial confusion, turmoil, and desperation. The world is without needed vision. And where there is no vision the people perish. Thus it works with both the peoples of the world and the peoples of the church. If ever the world needed the leadership of prophets of The Kingdom, it is today.

Now, just as the things that God may reveal to a prophet is limited by the prophet's background of experience, and by his personality, so the truths which prophets may uncover to others are limited by their truth-apprehending powers. And for this reason the peoples who are to build The Kingdom need to be prophets. If we are to move forward to Zion, we must know the way.

The answer to any outcry against any proper exercise of the prophetic function is "Would to God that all the Lord's people were prophets. . . ." (Numbers 11: 29.) For if His people are not prophets, how shall they see prospective Zion? It is because men have not risen to this level of prophecy that some are afflicted with the leprosy of doctrinal skepticism and some with the paralysis of moral indifference.

THE THEME: THE KINGDOM

The rise of The Kingdom, or of The Government of God, is the universal theme of prophecy. This government that we call Zion is symbolized in different ways. Sometimes it is "The Stone" cut out of the mountain; sometimes it is "The mountain of the Lord's house," and sometimes it is "The Highway," or "The Ensign," or "The Standard." To interpret prophecy we must be able to discern the uses of symbolism.

This evaluation of the symbolism of Bible prophecy may be made easier by first contemplating the symbolism of present-day prophecy: "The New Jerusalem," "Mount Zion," and the rest.

MUTUALLY EXPLANATORY DETAILS

One of the tests of prophetic interpretation is this: Are the details mutually explanatory? To illustrate: Two autos approach an intersection at right angles. The roads are slippery. The autos collide. The occupants are injured. They are rushed to the hospital. A physician is called. Wounds are dressed. One dies and is buried.

Now if this is a true picture of an actual life situation the details are mutually explanatory. Slippery roads, together with the angle and time of approach explain the collision. The collision explains the injury. And so on, back and forth, the details of the story are mutually explanatory. Precisely this is true of any true and complete statement of any prophetic situation. And when that is not true something is in error. And that error needs to be ferreted out. In uncovering the error we may need to apply the test of mutually explanatory details to prophetic messages in general.

FAITH IN THE PROPHECY OF THE KINGDOM

Faith in Zion is the assurance of things hoped for. One purpose of the lessons of this quarter is to afford anchorage for our faith in the redemption of Zion. Another is to clarify the vision of the task. For when the peoples of this church generally get the vision of Zion, when they become as certain that human necessity points to Zion as the prophets of The Kingdom are, and when they are persuaded that the building of The Kingdom is their proper task, nothing will be able to restrain or divert them from the purpose to "bring forth and establish the cause of Zion."

The spirit of prejudice, hatred, malice, and persecution never built up the Lord's work or saved a soul in the kingdom of heaven, and never will; but it has led many to degradation and ruin.—D. E. Tucker, in "The True Way Is the Gospel Way."

The Challenge to Youth

By Merl Grover

The Call

In Jesus' church the people wait
For Zion, now a century late,
For Him to come and lead the way
To glory and millennium's day,
And still they wait.

Instructions, laws and light divine,
Protecting walls, directing signs
The Father gave. A people blessed
With holy armor for conquest,
And still they wait.

A world lies writhing, hungry, torn,
By greed and selfish motives born
By want of leadership and plan.
God's people hold it in their hand
And still they wait.

The church is turning now to youth,
It hands the lamp of Christ's own truth
To them. Will they hold high, unfurled,
The banner to a yearning world?
Or will they wait?

The Answer

We are the Youth.
With outstretched arms and eager hearts,
We're coming forth to take our parts
In service of a God we love.
We'll wait no more.

We have God's laws.
We pledge ourselves to keep them all,
To answer always to his call,
Support His church with all our strength
And do it now.

We know God lives.
His church needs stewards, students,
men,
Needs teachers, strong of word and pen,
Needs pioneers to blaze new ways,
And them today.

The time is ripe.
Our eyes look forward: side by side,
Our hearts bound close in friendship tried,
We'll die for him, or better live.
We're ready all we have to give,
To pay our price, here, now, today.
We shall not wait.

The Young People at Work in Independence

By Cecil R. Walker

President, Young People's Council

One of the outstanding factors of success in young people's work is that of supplying each member with information about his or her work. When we must work with several hundred individuals, this becomes quite a problem, unless some definite means of conveying the information and keeping it before the people is found.

This is a part of the work undertaken by the Young People's Council of Independence. The Council is made up of representative young people from the ten congregations in Independence. The number of representatives, or councilors, from each congregation is determined proportionately by the number of young people there. Thus the Stone Church has five representatives on the Council. All the councilors meeting together with the young people's leaders or assistant leaders form the Young People's Council in Zion.

The pastor in Zion is represented on the Council by Elder D. S. McNamara, and all activities are under the supervision of the Department of Religious Education. All activities sponsored by the Council do not necessarily originate in the Council itself, for many suggestions and helps come from the First Presidency and the pastor.

When the Council meets in its regular sessions twice each month, the meeting is formally opened with prayer. The minutes of the last meeting are then read. After these have been approved, the suggestions that have been sent to the president are introduced, discussed, and voted upon one by one.

After the scheduled business has been handled, the councilors are given an opportunity to speak of any new ideas or suggestions concerning the Council's work.

When a project is suggested by the church officers it is presented to the council by its president and a vote is taken to find whether the council is for or against it.

Under the Church School

The great advantage of the Independence plan for young people's work is that it brings their whole organization under the church school plan, according to General Conference action in 1930 and in harmony with the suggestions given in the Church School Handbook. This feature makes sure that young people's activities will always be coordinated with other local church work, and that there shall be no large independent organization developing independent of the official church officers.

We have been presenting various plans of young people's organization as used in different parts of the church, believing that it would be good for church people to know the different kinds of experiments that are being tried. Then eventually they may pick the best features from all the efforts.
—Editors.

When the project is approved by both the council and the pastor in Zion, a committee is appointed to formulate the plans and see that the project is carried out. This gives each council member a chance to share responsibility and at the same time to develop and gain experience in leadership.

Projects are successfully carried out only when each councilor is thoroughly in harmony with the plan and interested in carrying them to his own group.

The officers of the council are the president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer. These form the executive committee of the council.

The success of this type of organization can be attributed to the fact that each group is represented and each feels a responsibility toward the work of the larger group.

The council was first organized in the year 1931 under the leadership of George Lewis, who is now a member of the Quorum of Twelve and appointed to labor in Australia. We are much indebted to him for his wise advice and his sympathetic direction.

Among the activities that have been sponsored by the council are the following successful ventures: three annual play contests; independent financing of our activities through two carnival entertainments; missionary trips to outlying branches; athletics, especially the basket ball and volley ball tournaments; several large banquets, and one all-day rally.

Lovely thoughts are more beautifying than cosmetics . . . Science without religion, devoid of wings, sinks into materialism, while religion without science, lacking legs, soars off into superstition.

Heavy Traffic

It had been a long dreary week to Larry, almost unending, one day following another in sedate, uneventful succession. Outdoors rain had washed the city streets, alternating with hours of unusual heat for the month of May. Indoors the girl had listened for hours to the constant clicking and thumping of typewriters and comptometers, the metallic resonance of a dictaphone voice, the quarrels of office people behind the bosses' backs, the passing of many feet in the hallway. Even the regular clanging of the elevator door reached her ears.

For months she had worked in the midst of all these sounds undisturbed, almost unconscious of them, but now she was growing acutely aware of every noise. Sounds burst upon her sometimes with a sharpness that made her start and want to scream.

But worst of all was her increasing consciousness of the deadliness of office routine. Being a very tiny part in a large machine of industry, she could not find it in her heart to be happy at her work. There was nothing elevating about it, nothing helpful. Always there was the "system" to follow. Each day inflicted upon her the same procedure from desk to dictaphone, from dictaphone to desk with sometimes an errand for variety. She was constantly on guard to prove and defend the things she did against those who were just as constantly bent on finding fault with her work. Each day she cared less for criticisms, and commendations—well, they weren't in her world of business.

Her soul seemed to leave her body working there in Shooley & Sons' office and go out into the world of May. The girl wanted to be free, to play. Routine she felt, was sapping her life, her youth. She needed a vacation—there had been none last year for her since she was only a new employee—but vacations were out of the question for any of them this year. Wasn't the store discharging workers every pay day? Larry was tired, heartsick.

"Thank the Lord, another week done!" and a stenographer whose desk was near Larry's, arose. A glance at her wrist watch assured her that it was one o'clock. "Ain't this a dog's life?" she whined in Larry's direction, "nothin' but slavery! I'm gettin' out of it first chance I have! Why, I feel so low today, I'd marry a bell boy if he'd ask me!" And having delivered herself of this confession, she betook herself to the rest room where she applied an amazing quantity of rouge and lipstick before going out for lunch. Probably Anna's Saturday afternoon thrill would be a matinee.

There were thousands of Annas going to lunch at this hour, thought Larry as she rested her head on her hands. All of them were in a rush to be off, but what was the use? Her head ached. The sooner she left the store, the sooner it would be Monday morning, and she would have to return. Perhaps she ought to stay and finish all these letters? If she did, she would lessen the work for next week—but, no, there would always be work. Next week would take care of itself. She'd better hunt up some lunch, only she detested this rush lunch hour. . . . Maybe after she had found a sandwich or so, she would ride out through Penn Valley Park in a bus—that was a pretty drive. She didn't know just what she would do. But she was sure that she would not spend the precious hours of her Saturday afternoon freedom in a movie. . . . Oh, to walk over the fields near her home at Brentville! That was it; that was what was the matter—she was homesick!

And having diagnosed her condition of mind and spirit, she closed her desk, and prepared herself to meet the usual Saturday shopping crowd. What a throng of them on Main Street! She could scarcely get through. Pretty soon if the sun kept on shining, it was going to be hot, and what is less attractive than a mob of wilted shoppers? With the throng she crossed the street, and a moment later the traffic lights changed color, and a mass of motor cars shut her away from the curb she had just left.

What beautiful windows! Soft, silken lingerie trimmed with tiny ribbons and ostrich feathers. Sheer hosiery. Trim purses and gloves to match. In another place were vacation togs, very cool and chic. A little farther on was a window full of jewelry. Larry liked to window shop but not on Saturday afternoon; it tired her so.

She stopped at her favorite hosiery shop to buy some hose offered at bargain prices. Other people had heard of the bargains, too, and the place was stuffed with humanity. Harried clerks answered the demands of veteran shoppers, and being rushed, overlooked the more timid purchasers who waited and waited. For fifteen minutes Larry stood wedged between two large women only to learn that the store did not have on sale the color of hose that she wanted; they didn't have any more bargains in number nine chiffons. Couldn't she wear a number nine and one-half?

Disgruntled and discouraged, she ploughed through the mass of bargain hunters, and came once more out into the city noise and the May sunlight.

Then she remembered that she had started out for lunch, and sought a cafeteria where she frequently ate.

How noisy the place was, and yet—how lonely! No, she didn't want any meat—it was too hot for meat. . . . The salad she had selected did look good only there was too much dressing on it. Yes, she would take a hot roll and some of that delicious jam they had the other day. No? They didn't have any more? Well then, honey would do. . . . No, no coffee. She would take some iced tea, please.

Outgoing customers flocked about her and new ones continued to leave their packages at the checking counter and join the long line of people who were selecting their meal.

At last Larry found one vacant chair in an out-of-the-way corner. There were already seated at the table a tired woman with two children, a gangling little girl who talked incessantly, and a small boy who insisted on banging the table with his spoon. Larry wasn't in a mood to be impressed with the "cuteness" of this performance. The mother scolded, and the children swallowed their food in manful portions. All of them seemed in a hurry and very restless.

To add to the babble of many conversations the fans of the ventilation system kept up a ceaseless roar. The cafeteria, in fact, sounded very much like a zoo at feeding time.

Larry had accidentally learned that tomorrow was Dorothy Cameron's birthday, and she wanted to find an appropriate gift. It would have to be inexpensive, but still she wanted it tasteful and suitable. Once she had found a beautiful little etching for Eldred Hampton at a certain art shop, and so the girl decided to search there for Dorothy's gift. She wanted this to be more than a mere gift to Dorothy Cameron; she wanted it to be an expression of her sympathy and friendship. Larry wished it were within her power to give her young neighbor peace of mind and contentment, but she knew that Dorothy herself must find that.

In the shop were gifts of every description, jewelry, dishes, rugs, blankets, all sorts of novelties, but Larry went directly to the picture counter. Almost at once she saw it—the picture for Dorothy. But she hesitated—the price was more than she wished to pay. For fully two minutes she stood gazing at the beautiful little study, and then she made her decision. After all what were a couple of dollars in price difference when this might be exactly the sort of a reminder

Dorothy needed? Rufus, her husband, would never think of getting this for her, nor anyone else so far as Larry knew—still, Dorothy must have it.

Then Larry was trudging up Petticoat Lane, breasting the mass of humanity which always descends upon the downtown regions at the matinee hours. A delivery truck crawled out of an alley, sounding its raucous horn, and Larry halted just out of its path. It had stopped her in front of a novelty shop. Idly she glanced at the window packed with an assortment of beads and baby things.

"Well, look who's with us!" a familiar voice exclaimed, and Larry whirled about. It was Dart Moody and beside him stood Greg.

"Oh, hello, both of you," she forced gaiety into her tone. The words were matter-of-factly spoken, but her heart was fairly battering against her ribs. Greg here in the flesh before her! And she hadn't seen him since that Sunday at church!

"Are we going your way—Independence?" inquired Dart. And then before she had time to answer: "Or are you on your way to lunch?"

"I've had lunch," she returned; "it's almost two-thirty. Yes, I was just heading toward the jitney station."

"Good then, come along and I'll show you a jitney that is a jitney." Then to Greg: "Our pick-up's fine, eh, Greg?" Rapidly he was steering them toward the station where his car was parked.

Surely Greg was thinner than he had been two months ago. Perhaps he had been studying too hard, or maybe he was worrying over a job this summer. He looked tired, too. Larry wanted to touch his cheek and smile at him and see that harrassed expression give way to a smile of joy and satisfaction. But perhaps if she touched him and smiled at him, that responsive smile of his would not come any more. Secretly, however, she was sure it would.

"It's sweet of you two to take me home," the girl chattered as they moved with the traffic out on Fifteenth Street. "I was just about to give up the ghost and climb into the jitney with a: 'Home, James.'" Why didn't Greg say something? There he was sitting beside her, and yet he was holding himself aloof as if he were afraid of her. He seemed miles away. The two of them were playing a little game, that of being intensely casual.

"Well, we're happy to take you," grinned Dart; "we like lively, good-looking company, don't we Greg?"

The other young fellow mumbled something about being very happy; but though she strained her hearing, Larry couldn't quite understand everything he said.

"Oh, I almost forgot my manners, Dart!"—if Greg would not talk, then she would do a dialogue with the driver—"Mrs. Keithley told me of your engagement. I think it's lovely! And I hope you and Bernice will be very happy."

"It's a great thing, Larry," his acknowledgement was frank. "I hope you experience it some day so that I can return your good wishes. But I wish I could do more for you. You don't know how much you helped us—or me, to see things as they are."

Larry wanted to clap her hand over his mouth, but she only raised her eyebrows questioningly. How much of this did Greg know? What was he thinking? She dared not venture a look at his face, could not even convey her feelings to him by touching his arm at her side. Surely it was the irony of fate that had brought them together to be riding like this, side by side, when she wanted to feel Greg's arm about her, and to see Dart fade completely out of the picture. Still Dart seemed to be subduedly happy over the situation—now and then he beamed on her in big brotherly fashion. How wonderful it would be to be alone with Greg once more, possibly to unsay some things that had been said, or at least to give expression to some of the things she had learned since their lives had separated. She was to blame for the anguish both of them and suffered, but could she have avoided it?

"I'm going out to Greg's," Dart was speaking. "We're invited to a stag party tonight."

So?—They weren't having dates? That was a comforting bit of information. "Well, be careful you, don't stag too much," advised the girl; "stag until you stagger—but, I forgot, a pun is the cheapest form of humor, isn't it?" Was Greg going to Purple Pigeon parties now—had he joined the club?

"Just a few of us boon companions," laughed the driver. Larry wondered if Greg would like to put his hand over Dart's mouth, too.

"When does Bernice go East?" she asked after a pause.

"Three weeks or a month. She's counting a lot on that."

"Well, what girl wouldn't? You don't go to New York to pick out a perfectly gorgeous trousseau any old day in the week. . . . But Mrs. Keithley and Sallie Ruth Blaine are leaving first. They are sailing from New York a week from Tuesday, and is Sallie Ruth thrilled!" Larry chuckled.

"Why didn't you go yourself, Larry?" demanded Dart. "I know Mrs. Keithley intended asking you. She mentioned it to Bernice's mother."

"Oh—I couldn't," lightly. "I'm a working girl—pardon me, I mean a business woman. I can't break away just any old time because there are some things at home I have to do." Somehow she managed to keep her tone even. Did Greg start ever so slightly? Was he surprised to hear her say that.

It was Greg's strong, brown hand that helped her out at the Hampton curb, and for a moment their eyes met, eyes that were asking questions incredibly fast.

Larry's heart was pounding. She turned back to thank Dart for the ride, and added: "Have a good time tonight, both of you." Her hand rested ever so lightly on Greg's arm, and then she ran up the walk.

"Something for me?" demanded Dorothy Cameron, "You're too good, Larry! You're always thinking of something nice for me!" Her white fingers were rapidly unwrapping the gift. Sammie and Dorothy Pearl were investigating a sack of candy Larry had just given them.

"I like to see my friends happily surprised," declared Larry. It was almost dinner time and she had dropped in to see Dorothy and the children for only a moment.

"—Oh, why—Larry, it's beautiful! Isn't that baby sweet?" Dorothy's eyes were rapturous. That was just what Larry wanted her to think and to say.

The picture was a small but beautiful colored copy of a famous painting in which a young woman is guiding the uncertain steps of a fair little child.

"—But why, Larry, did you choose this for me?"

"Because it made me think of you," simply.

"Oh, the baby, I suppose," Dorothy's voice carried a note of disappointment.

"No, something about the face and the way the mother holds the child's hand."

"Don't kid me," Dorothy sought to hide her embarrassment in slang; "you know I don't look like that! You know I'm mean-tempered and that I yell at the children when I'm mad at them. I'm not really a mother at heart, Larry—"

"But you have wonderful talents and possibilities to become one, Dorothy," sincerely, "and I'm expecting this new baby to make a big change in your life."

Mrs. Cameron stared at her a moment: "Larry Verne, you're the funniest girl! First you bawl me out for being a moral coward, then you make me a lovely baby dress, and now you bring me this picture and say I have talent to become a mother. Honestly, you're beyond me! What are you trying to do, convert me into a state of resignation? But don't think," she went on hastily, "that I don't appreciate the picture. It's very pretty. I do appreciate it, and I shall think of you every time I look at it."

"I'll have to be going in a second," Larry began a short time later.

"Oh, wait, there's something I wanted to ask you, several times. Frankly, Larry, do you know why Joe Dockerly avoids me?"

Taken completely by surprise, Larry evaded the answer by asking another question: "What do you mean?"

"Maybe it's just my imagination, but it seems to me that Doc keeps out of my way just as much as possible. Have I

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt

Arranged from his diaries by his daughter, Mrs. Ruby C. Faunce

In Secular Work

August 2nd—Bro. Bronson and I took train for Canton—stayed with Mr. David Williams, who had been a member of the old church but not of the Reorganization. Bro. Bronson asked him, if he could not use me in his business? He is proprietor of the Canton & St. David mines, and has a general store. 3rd—The brethren and Mr. Williams rented Union Hall and I preached three times, good liberty and large audiences. 4th—Mr. Williams agreed to hire me, this morning, and pay at present a wage of $50 a month and to raise it when he moved into the new store bldg. Went by train to Galesburg—wife glad to hear of situation I obtained. Spent the week till Saturday invoicing Mrs. Christian and Kings Bazaar. Saturday was taken ill with cholera. Sunday—Very ill all day. Administered to but with little effect. Slept very little and spent morning in bed. Arose and preached funeral sermon of Bro. James Hart. Monday—Worked on books and accounts of the bazaar and finished them Tuesday. . . .

Entries for the remainder of the year 1873 are of a routine character, indicating a very busy life. For although he was in business, he also gave much time, especially on week-ends, to church work. It appears that this service was given without thought of compensation or support by the church. Then there is a time when no entries are made, and the first item for 1874 is written on August 13: "Wife and I agreed that I should enter the ministry," probably meaning to return to giving full time to it. Entries following this indicate much church service and frequent preaching engagements.

It was at a conference in Council Bluffs, September 23, that he was appointed as minister at large, to labor in the state of Illinois under the direction of the First Presidency.

The diary here records his ministerial association with many leading men of the church, and frequent contacts with President Joseph Smith, too numerous to be included in the printed account.

In those days our ministers were often permitted to speak in churches of other denominations, in places where our people had no buildings of their own and the work was just being introduced.

The following are typical entries, showing the kind of experience of the time:

Tuesday—To Harlan where my home was with Bro. J. W. Chaburn. Spoke in the Baptist church each evening and twice on Sunday. Certainly enjoyed my stay in this place. Monday, Oct. 26th—With Bro. Thos. Dobson went to Beloit. Preached at the Saints' Chapel, not yet finished. With Bro. Dobson, administered to Bro. John Newcome; also Bro. Jordon, and to his mother-in-law, Sister Galland, after whose husband (now dead), Galland's Grove was named. Spoke at night but owing to heavy rain, attendance was small. Spoke each night and three times Sunday, and had crowded houses and good liberty. . . .

Monday, Nov. 2nd—To Lake City, where I preached. Three ministers there; good liberty. Tuesday—Preached to large congregation. Elder McDaniels of the Christian church closed meeting by prayer. All week preached to good crowds and enjoyed a fine spirit. Sunday the house was overfull. Good liberty. Collection of $5.80 taken up. Had a challenge to debate, but the Elder would not meet on fair proposition, so refused. Nov. 13th—Arrived at Bro. Salisbury's and preached at night. Nov. 17th—Went to Newton where I remained until Thanksgiving Day. On the 26th, went to Des Moines. No chance for preaching. On to Farmington, where I spent Saturday, Sunday and Monday in visiting, writing and preaching.

Dec. 1st—Over to Vincennes to Dr. Cheney's and stayed till the 3rd, preaching. Accompanied by J. H. Lake went to Keokuk. Spent 3rd and 4th there. Dec. 5th—From there to Ill. Met by Bro. Wm. Lambert who took me to Rock Creek over roads so muddy and sticky had to stop often to let the horses rest. . . .

1875

Monday, March 8th—Took 11:10 train for Peoria, where I spent the week. Sunday 14th—Spoke at court house morning and evening to a very large and intelligent congregation, and at their earnest solicitation, agreed to speak the first four evenings. Monday, spoke on "Have Faith in God"; Tuesday, "Signs Following the Believers"; Wednesday, "Repentance"; Thursday, "Baptisms," and on Friday held a meeting for organization of a branch. After ordination of elder, priest, teacher, and deacon to offices designated and called by the Spirit, the branch was organized with nine members, and all seemed to feel happy. Stayed over Sunday 21st, and preached twice. In the afternoon held a fellowship meeting. Wednesday went by train to Kewanee. . . .

General Conference

Monday, April 5th, preached on "Love of God." Tuesday 6th, Conference convened. Joseph opened with a glorious speech. Two Conference sessions. At night Bro. Caffel preached. Wednesday 7th, prayer meeting at 9 a. m.; two conference sessions. In the evening Bro. Jos. R. Lambert spoke. Thursday same routine. Saturday preached funeral sermon of Mr. Randall. Bro. Joseph preached at night the best sermon I ever heard him preach, on "The Work in the Heart and in the World and its Auxiliaries." Sunday, six baptized; four by Bro. Joseph and two by Bro. Kelly. At 10:30, some business, then sermon by T. W. Smith. In the afternoon, a sacrament meeting. At evening I preached on "The Holy Ghost." Bro. Wm. Kelly, James Caffel, Joseph R. Lambert and I confirmed five of the six baptized. I was appointed minister-at-large in Ill., Iowa, and Missouri. Tuesday, April 13th, went to Sandwich and met the Bishop. He said he could give me no hope of aid for my family from church funds. I told him I needed some myself and he gave me $15. I told him I had thus far cared for myself and, with my wife's aid, our family. For, except when on my mission to England, I had for all my ministerial labors, received only $40 from him: $25 some years ago and $15 now. Left at 10 a. m. for Lewiston and to my home at Bro. Stafford's, where I remained till Saturday, then over to Canton. Preached twice and attended social meeting. Over to Lewiston for the next two weeks, preaching each evening.

A Self-supporting Ministry

Saturday, May 3rd—To Peoria where I delivered lectures till Thursday. Met wife at Cisne and came to Jeffersonville. Wife is looking for a location for a millinery store, but does not like Jeffersonville. Bro. Hilliard took us to Fairfield. Like the town as does wife. Took store, or rather house, of six rooms and the front room can be used for store. Rent: $12.50 a month. Wife back to St. Louis and I returned to Jeffersonville. Spent the week preaching in the neighborhood. Monday 17—Back to Fairfield where I worked all week getting house in readiness for the family. They came Saturday, May 23rd. Spent Sunday at home. Monday, wife opened up and did a good business. Ruby quite feverish. Wednesday Dr. Green came, Ruby worse; says it is chicken-pox. Thursday, Ruby broken out. Friday, getting worse. Saturday, wife had a good day; quite encouraged. Sunday, May 31st, preached in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church morning and evening; large congregations. Bro. Geo. Hilliard came and we administered to Ruby; never suffered again.

Saturday, June 5th, went to conference at Milner; good time. Sunday, preached twice and attended fellowship meeting.

Monday, home and found Zenas sick like Ruby. Wife called Dr. and he said same as Dr. Green. June 17th, Zenas reached climax. Mr. J. G. George, President of town council, said there was a rumor that we had the small pox and the board was sending a doctor, Dr. Rogers. In a short time Dr. Rogers came, and soon after Drs. Vertrees and Mabry came. They said Dr. Rogers pronounced it small pox, but they differed. Another was sent, who at first pronounced it small pox, but later chicken pox. Saturday, a constable came and ordered us to lock up house and store. We did so; boy improved rapidly. Board had our house roped across the walk so people had to go around and then put up a sign with "small pox" on it. They kept these till July 6th, when they said we could open up and commence business with their best wishes. Wife's business ruined and we kept in bondage, altho neighbors from whom Birdie caught the disease not even kept at home. Drs. Vertrees and Mabry very disgusted. . . .

A Dedication

Sunday, August 8th—A very large congregation to witness the dedication of the church (40 x 30 in size); crowded to suffocation and yet many not able to get in. By request I delivered the dedicatory sermon and the prayer, Bro. J. H. Lake conducting opening and closing services. In the afternoon, Bro. Lake preached a good discourse, while I occupied in the evening. Sacrament at close of afternoon service. Monday, August 9th, pleasant visit with many visitors who came on Saturday for dedicatory service and remained to attend debate to commence tomorrow between Rev. Mr. Shinn, Universalist, and me on the two questions, "The Coming of Jesus Christ to Judge the World," and "The Literal Resurrection of the Body From the Grave." Mr. Shinn chose as his moderator Rev. Mr. Hughes, and for mine I took Bro. John H. Lake. Mr. Shinn spoke first (affirmative) on "The Bible teaches that the coming of Christ to judge the world is past." Spoke twice—each session one half hour. Daniel Lambert and W. R. Sellon were reporters. Afternoon debate lasted two hours. Wednesday—Debate lasted four hours today and first question concluded. Evening, Bro. Lambert preached an excellent sermon. Thursday I opened the debate affirming "The Bible teaches the literal resurrection of the body from the grave." As before we had four hours, one half hour each at a time. Friday, the debate closed with two hours each morning and afternoon. Congregation in afternoon was very large, not able to accommodate nearly all. Sunday, August 15th—Attended meetings three times and preached in the evening. Collection of $12.80 taken up and given to me. Monday, Brother Walter Head had sent his team and son Robert to drive Sr. Bellamy, Sr. Martha Burgess and I to Nauvoo. Preached in evening.

Tuesday, visited Sr. Bidemon and learned many facts about Joseph, her husband. Preached each night and on Sunday three times. Had good liberty and good congregations. . . .

Saturday, Oct. 9th [Council Bluffs]—I baptized five and assisted in confirmation. The Saints and friends have been very liberal with me, giving me a greatly needed new overcoat, besides helping me financially. May God reward them. Monday, Oct. 11th—Bro. Redfield took me over to Monti. Several loads from Shenandoah came and I preached on "The Apostasy." Tuesday, again spoke; many again from Shenandoah. Good liberty. Wednesday, over to Nebraska City to begin a course of lectures. Preached at evening; small congregation. Home to Bro. R. C. Elvin's. Continued each evening and three times on Sunday, and on Saturday, Oct. 23rd, baptized eight. Sunday—three meetings. In the afternoon, with Bro. R. M. Elvin and Henry Kemp confirmed the eight. Blessed two children. Petition handed me, signed by eighty-one names, to continue another week. Consented and preached each night to overflowing congregations. Saturday, Oct. 31st, Although with severe cold, went to river and baptized four; felt better. Sunday afternoon addressed candidates and assisted to confirm them. Morning and evening preached to crowded houses.

Monday, Nov. 1st—Again repaired to the river and baptized four, which at evening were confirmed. Preached my farewell sermon. Tuesday, Nov. 2nd, left Nebraska City at 5 a. m.; reached Omaha at 11 a. m. Evening preached at church. Wednesday, Bro. Gordon Duell came and preached in the evening, giving me a rest. . . .

1876

Jan. 1st, to Burlington, where I gave a series of thirty-six lectures. Stayed at Col. W. R. Sellon's delightful home. Finished the lectures on Monday the 31st. Except for two or three very bitterly cold nights had large and interested crowds. On Monday baptized six, of which number was W. R. Sellons. To Bro. Farlow on Tuesday where I assisted in confirming, I being mouthpiece for Bro. and Sr. Holsteen and W. R. Sellon.

Debate With the Reverend Treat

Tuesday, March 8, met Mr. Treat and company at the Christian Church and arranged preliminaries for debate. The six propositions reduced to four. Debate to commence at 10 a. m. Elder J. M. Walters is Mr. Treat's chairman. Bro. Joseph R. Lambert arrived. Rev. Mr. Hicks appointed chairman. Elder J. M. Walters moderator for Mr. Treat. Elder Herbert Scott moderator for me. The audience was large and debate opened by me on the following proposition. Resolved: That the claims made by the inspiration of the volume known as the Book of Mormon are founded in fact, supported by the old and new Scriptures, and by the discoveries of modern times. B. F. Treat negative. Find Mr. Treat an unfair disputant. Saturday very unpleasant weather; cold, severe and throat sore. Finished first proposition. Sunday, a cold, wet day, so as I was suffering greatly did not go out at all. Monday resumed debate. Mr. Treat affirms the following: "Resolved: That apostles and prophets ceased by divine appointment with the first century of the Christian era, but that the Church of Christ as an organization has continued from the time of Christ to the present day." He failed to prove any of this. Tuesday, debate continued, I affirming proposition three, "Resolved: That the organization, doctrine and tenets of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are in conformity with the New Testament Scriptures and that 'Spiritual Gifts' as described in 1 Cor. 12th Chap. and elsewhere in the New Testament are necessary to the Church of Christ in its militant state and are enjoyed by the L. D. S." On this proposition Mr. Treat was especially abusive. Wednesday, debate closed with Mr. Treat affirming: That the Christian Church, or Church of the Disciples, is, in its organization, doctrine and tenets, identical with the Church of Christ. Debate closed at noon and at evening I preached to crowded house. Thursday, Bro. Sandage brought me to Derby where we took boat for New Albany. Friday, March 17th, Bro. Daniel Lambert left for his home. God bless him. Saturday, March 18th, stayed in bed all day; very ill. Sunday, very little better. Would go home if I had the money. Monday and Tuesday very unwell still. Kindly cared for by Bro. and Sr. Sichrist. Wednesday, felt worse. Went home with Bro. Herbert Scott. Friday very sick. Conference tomorrow. Saturday, attended conference at Mount Eden. On motion, I took the chair. We got through main business about 3:30 p. m. Preached at early candlelight from Book of Mormon. The Lord helped me. Sunday, Columbus Scott and M. T. Short occupied in the morning and I in afternoon and evening. Good liberty by all. Monday, attended conference till 12 a. m. Intermission one half hour; then sacrament meeting. Brethren took us to town and I took train for Flora, where I had to remain all day and night. Left at 3 a. m. and went to Fairfield. All glad to see me and very kind.

The rule of conduct enjoined by Jesus at the first of his ministry in Palestine is the true governing principle to be met at the threshold of the Zion state of equality, and men must ever stand dazed and disappointed who undertake to bring about the hoped for conditions among a people who fail to keep this law: "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matthew 6: 21, Inspired Translation.—E. L. Kelley, in "Equality."

Home and the Church

By Marion Willmarth

"The family is the heart's Fatherland."—Mazzini.

THE FAMILY in one form or another has been the foundation upon which society or civilization has builded. The prime function is reproduction and the rearing of offspring, which has banished the age-old law of "survival of the fittest." The weak and helpless are cherished, as well as the strong. Family life tends to banish selfishness, and to create the spirit of self-sacrifice, which could not be attained in a segregated condition. Monogamic family life has proved to be the most successful.

The family is a miniature society, and in relation to the church it is the hope of Zion. Our slogan should be, "Establish Zion in the home, then take the home to Zion." This will call for the best preparation for marriage physically, mentally, and spiritually. There is not an aspect of family life which cannot be of value to the church if it is raised to its highest plane through righteous living and a realization of accountability to God in secular as well as spiritual affairs.

As reproduction is a prime function of marriage, and as all children have a right to be well born, every couple contemplating marriage should weigh well the physical, mental, and spiritual capabilities of each other. In this age of enlightenment this is much more possible than a few decades ago, when the chief requisite was to be in love.

Good health is an essential to married happiness, as much depends upon health to determine the future of children. A sickly mother can destroy the chances for success, not only by transmitting to the children diseased bodies, but by being unable to care for them properly. Many a man's life has been handicapped by marrying a girl who was physically unfit for motherhood. In this day when social diseases run riot, every girl has a right to require an examination of her prospective husband, unless she knows that it would be superfluous.

BUT PHYSICAL HEALTH is not all with which young couples should be concerned. A perfect physique is of little avail if unadorned by a well-balanced mentality. And nothing brings greater dissatisfaction than the incompatibility of the mentally mismatched. Those contemplating marriage should seek partners of equal mentality, and then try to keep step with one another. Many times they are on a par at the start, but one lags behind while the other progresses. True friendship and understanding is one of the surest foundations for a happy marriage.

Then to have the happy home which will produce children that will be an asset to the church, both parties should be members of the church. Surely God knew the sorrow that comes from the divided households. He has said, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," and in latter-day revelation has declared that persons marrying outside the church will be considered weak in the faith.

After the home is established many problems arise which can be solved only by experience. A well-planned formula may not answer the needs that arise in individual cases. But with God's help adjustments can be made, if both parties are open-minded and willing to cooperate and compromise. When children arrive these problems become more complicated. They are to be the future fathers and mothers of Israel, or we have failed in our mission. What a tremendous responsibility rests on our shoulders.

Example is a most potent force. A little child is as plastic clay in the hands of a mother. As a leader in the Catholic Church has said, "Give us the child until he is six years old, and you may have the remainder of his life," so the Lord says that children if properly instructed shall be ready for baptism at the age of eight. And the greater part of the instruction must be received in the home. The family altar, with the attendant reading of the church books, will help to establish a feeling of unity between members of the family. The children should take part in this worship period, having been taught to pray, and when the church books are read to assist in the reading if they are old enough. Also the filing of inventories should be a family affair, and could be made very impressive by setting aside a certain day when all the family could be present. Children like ceremony and special occasions if made interesting by the unusual. They will be more concerned if they have their own individual inventory to file. This will require an income. I like the term income better than allowance, as income designates something earned. They should be early taught that nothing is gained without effort. Small tasks about the house, or little jobs outside the home could be paid for, thus creating a feeling of independence and responsibility, and in turn something from which to pay tithing. Be it ever so small they should be taught that a tenth belongs to the Lord.

What are we doing, now that we have taken care of the spiritual aspects of the child's life, to feed his mental nature? True, the state takes care of the education problem, and we are forced to send our children to school. But what about the hours before and after school? Are we as parents trying to keep abreast of the times and in step with our children? Do they tell their triumphs to dull ears and uncomprehending minds? Do they talk a language foreign to our understanding? Are we as mothers "just Marthas" cumbered with so much serving that we have no time to read and study and develop our minds, that we may be able to sympathize and understand the problems our children have to face? God has commanded us to study all good books, to become acquainted with languages, tongues, and peoples. Good literature is one of the most uplifting of the arts. The poet can often give expression to our very thoughts in more beautiful language than we can command. Our high school boys and girls are studying these things, why cannot we share their privileges, that we may be to them the more companionable.

Good music is another art that can help to cement the family together. If the children are studying music, they will be much more interested if they know mother and father understand. Father should never be so wrapped up in business that he has not time for his boys and girls. Nothing gives a child more sense of importance than to feel his daddy is interested in him. Family councils are beneficial. Talk over with the children problems which arise in the home. Children should know the financial status of the family, just why certain luxuries must be denied, and be given the opportunity to sacrifice for the good of the group. What are we doing to foster the growth of the embryo priesthood over which we are made the overseers? Do we study the three standard books of the church, in order to discuss them intelligently with our children?

As parents we lay much stress upon the physical welfare of our children, and although this is not the most important it nevertheless has its important place in the truly Zion home. God has provided for our every need. He has graciously instructed us as to our eating, sleeping, etc. The gospel of soap and water is one with which he was also concerned. "Cleanliness is next to Godliness" not only applies to the spiritual. God has commanded us to be clean in body and clothing. Children brought up to appreciate these things will be better fitted to become citizens of Zion.

We have a big job on our hands, but God has promised his aid, and the endeavor to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord will not be wasted, for out of Zion the perfection of beauty God will shine if we as parents do our part. The youth of today are the hope of Zion. What a priceless heritage is placed within our hands. We should strive to make our dreams a reality. With the poet we should say:

"I hear again a voice that bids,
The dreamer leave his dream midway,
For larger hopes and graver fears,
Life greatens in these latter years;
The century's aloe flowers today."

Surely we have dreamed long enough. The century's aloe, Zion, is ready to burst into bloom. Its fragrance already permeates the air. Our desire is to establish Zion in our homes, then take our home to Zion.

hurt him with my ill-temper or my un-governed tongue? Do you know?"

Rapidly Larry was recalling the night when Doc had first met Dorothy Cameron, his alarm and discomfort; his early departure from the party because of a headache; the peculiar look on Eldred Hampton's face when they had sung "Sylvia," and her own conversation with Greg concerning the web of mystery which seemed to surround Eldred and Doc.

"He's positively spooky. Sometimes he looks at me as if he were seeing ghosts," elaborated Dorothy Cameron.

"That's a good way of putting it—seeing ghosts," rejoined Larry. "Yes, I've noticed it. I've wondered if it is possible that you look very much like somebody he has ever known."

"Possibly that is it, but whoever it is or was that I resemble, must certainly have got on his nerves. Do you suppose—" she had rescued the candy sack from Dorothy Pearl who was rapidly stuffing gumdrops down the cold-air register—"do you suppose he might have known my mother long ago? I look like her. I don't ever remember seeing him, so if he did know her, it must have been when I was very small or before my time altogether. Maybe he was a relative of hers. If he was—"

"Larry," Mrs. Hampton was calling into the hall, "Larry!" There was a frightening quality in her tone.

"Here," the girl started up to come face to face with her friend.

"Doc's just brought some terrible news!"

"What's happened?" demanded the two younger women in one breath. Even the children on the floor paused to look up.

"Mr. Harvey Peterson dropped dead about an hour ago at his shop! Apoplexy Doc says!"

Some Facts Concerning Education

By Dora Glines

1. It is estimated that 2,600 schools throughout the nation, affecting 140,000 children, are now closed because of lack of funds.

2. By April about 20,000 rural schools will be closed, affecting over 1,000,000 children.

3. One out of every two cities has been forced to reduce or eliminate one or more essential educational services.

4. School terms have been shortened in one of every four cities and in one-third of the rural schools.

5. The schools of the nation are attempting to give adequate instruction to 1,000,000 more pupils than in 1930 with budgets decreased by $368,000,000.

6. In some communities free public schools have become tuition schools, admitting only those children whose parents can afford to pay the rates asked.

7. More than 200,000 teachers, one-fourth of all public school teachers, are receiving less than $750 per year—the minimum amount factory hands may be paid under the blanket code of the N R A.

8. Approximately 85,000 teachers are receiving less than $450 per year.

9. Only the federal government has the resources to meet the emergency in education. Many states and communities have exhausted their financial ability.

10. The federal government cannot afford to ignore its obligation to help the States in meeting the emergency in education.

11. A decent minimum level of education for all the children of the United States is absolutely essential to the general national welfare.

12. Education has become the concern of the entire nation.

13. The poorest State in the nation has less than one-eighth the financial ability to support schools of the richest State.

14. The supreme task facing American Society is that of producing citizens who grasp the significance of the new order.

15. President Roosevelt has said, "This crisis can be met, but not in a day nor a year, and education is a vital factor in meeting it."

The Celestial Surgeon

If I have faltered more or less
In my great task of happiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain—
Lord, thy most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake;
Or, Lord, if too obdurate I,
Choose thou, before that spirit die,
A piercing pain, a killing sin,
And to my dead heart run them in!

Happily Reunited With the Church

The following letter was accompanied by the name and address of the author, but we think that, due to the nature of it, this information should be withheld. The letter presents not only an experience, but also a strong lesson, which may be of help to many people.—Editors.

I first joined the church when I was eighteen years old. Like many others I did not understand all I should have about the church, but I saw the need of having young people to work in my home branch. A girl friend and I set to work immediately to do what we could to create interest among the young people. Of course we were sponsored by the older members. For a time we had good results; we soon had many attending Sunday school.

Then contention arose among the older members. By disputes and ill will they killed most of the ambition of every young person, and some nonmembers who were interested were driven from the church. My own heart waxed cold from unjust criticism against my grandfather, an elder of the church, with whom I lived, and whom I knew to be an unusual man. He has gone to the great beyond now, but in life I never knew a purer, more Christlike man.

Brothers and sisters, let me plead with you never, no never, let poisonous words seep from our lips to wound a brother or drive others from the church. If we cannot refrain from getting offended at a brother or a sister, let us go to them personally and try to settle things in love and peace and try to keep such things from our young people. Let us not poison their minds also.

It was not until after my marriage and the death of my grandfather that I became dissatisfied with my life and just drifting. I came into possession of my grandfather's books and papers, and in reading through some of them I made an important decision. Oh, if we could see how much time we have wasted and how we need to decide to prepare ourselves for His service!

I began to study diligently and soon learned to like my studies and yearned for more truth. I tried to pattern my life so as to be a fit mother for my child that was to come. I began to attend church regularly in the town where we now live and to ask the pastor to explain the things I did not understand. I grew a little in knowledge but was not satisfied. I then learned to pray, yes, really learned to pray for the first time, earnestly, humbly, and faithfully. I knew this was the church of God and believed that he would bless now as of old. I still sought for truth and prayed that I might have even a small spiritual blessing to help my faith and be a comfort to me. My prayer was answered here in our little church one Sunday last year when a message was given through me by the Spirit. I was almost overcome with joy and thankfulness to God. I wished that I could live worthy to have that Spirit always. I have felt the presence of the Spirit many times since then and have had other prayers answered. I have never given an offering or paid tithing that I did not receive much more than their worth soon after.

Since resolving to live true to God and his church I have lost many friends and gained few, but I feel that the work is more precious than all and I do not value friends who are ill gained. I find many opportunities to plant seeds for thought among my neighbors and friends.

Will the Saints please pray for me that my health may be better, that I may do my duties in church and home better and take care of my little girl, another blessing to me? And pray also for my husband who is not a member but is studying with me.

Truth Shines Clearer Out of Combat

I have a deeper appreciation of what the gospel is and means, and a greater determination has come to me to live and advance the glorious cause of Christ as a result of a debate held between Apostle J. F. Curtis and a Mr. Nichols, of the Christian Church, at Winnipeg, Manitoba, last October. Our church was admirably defended by Brother Curtis.

The enemy has tried in the past to destroy the church, and no doubt will try in the future. But out of the combat between good and evil shines the truth in greater effulgence than before.

I am thankful for the knowledge I have. After twenty-eight years of membership in the church and almost as long a time of service in the priesthood I feel that of all my life's activities the time spent in church work has been most satisfying. I recommend the truth to all, and I know that faithfulness will be rewarded.

I wish to thank the Saints at Winnipeg for their hospitality, their kindness, their devotion. These things gave me courage to do my humble part. I was one of a party of four to drive three hundred and fifty miles to hear the debate.

The Blessing of God's Light

I have learned to say in my soul, "In the hours of darkness comes the greatest light."

In 1923, we moved to Morgantown among strangers. Our baby fell very ill. We had a doctor and did everything we knew to do, but the baby grew worse. A little woman living in the neighborhood, learned of our troubles, came to visit us and offered her assistance. She told us of her religion and belief, and after explaining how God often heals the sick through prayer and administration, asked me if I wished to have the elders administer to our child. I readily consented, and they came and prayed.

This neighbor woman was a Latter Day Saint of the Reorganized Church. I recognized at once that she and the elders were God's people. They were very kind to us, but God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to call the little one home.

One of the elders, Clarence W. Germon, preached the funeral sermon and comforted our hearts. Through him and this sister and her husband who visited us, the blessed light of the gospel was brought to our home.

My companion and I accepted the truth and later our daughter joined the church. We have witnessed many blessings as a result of our acceptance.

Although our hearts seemed broken as the clouds of darkness rested on our home when our child was taken from us, I realized that a greater light was left to shine on our home and brighten our lives. My husband is now an elder in the church and has the opportunity to spread the glad tidings to others. Pray for us, that we may remain faithful.

Words of a Watcher

(Taken from "Echoes of 1933 of Buffalo Group")

I have watched the children with interest. I have seen them in their study, watched them in their sorrows, noted their reaction to the various ways teachers have of putting questions or stories to them. In watching these things I have been made to realize that much is expected of us if we would teach those of tender years so that they will receive a good spiritual foundation for life.

Eagerly I have watched the young people, have felt the urge to be of service, have mingled with them in their recreation. Sometimes when we see them in playful or riotous moods, we say they will come to no good, they will never be of help to the church. Then again we see these same young people in a prayer meeting; we hear them bear a testimony which brings tears to the eyes of the listeners and a tug to the heartstrings. It is then we say, "There is a person who will go far in the church."

I believe that we cannot judge wisely unless we know the heart of an individual. When we criticize the actions of a person because he does something of which we do not approve, have we ever paused to think that possibly we ourselves are doing something equally as objectionable? There is need in the church for us to strive harder to understand each other.

It is with keen interest that I have listened to the stories of those older in years. I have enjoyed their testimonies which have recalled to mind many blessings of the Lord and the mercy he has shown toward his people.

Can an echo be anything but an echo? No doubt all of us have had the experience of calling out some word which was returned to us. But no one has had the experience of calling out "Hello" and hearing the echo, "Good-by." Likewise we cannot expect a harsh word to return to us pleasant. We cannot expect the Spirit of God to come to us unless we invite it and are in a condition to receive it.

It is our duty as Saints to be ready at all times to give the Lord the service he expects and asks. Would to God that all of us regardless of what church work we are doing, might stop a moment to take our bearings and see if we are doing our work the best we can! We are not working for man, but for God. Can we ask a greater privilege?

BUFFALO, NEW YORK.

W. O. SIMPSON.

Let Us Be Faithful

I am a girl twelve years of age and in the ninth grade at school. I don't belong to the church. My father has been dead a little over a year, but I have a young mother and a brother.

About three months ago I had a severe case of tonsillitis. They tried all kinds of medicine, but nothing helped me. For two days I could hardly drink water. After three days of suffering, I decided to get my grandfather, Brother C. L. Oliver, to administer to me before I went to bed. That night I woke up and almost all the swelling had gone from my throat.

When school is out I am going to Louisville Branch to be baptized if it is the Lord's will.

When any of you get sick remember the Lord and be faithful.

CRAB ORCHARD, KENTUCKY.

The Father Will Hear Us

It made us feel good when we read the letter from Brother George W. Thorburn, a friend of ours whom we knew many years ago, before he came into the church.

One by one we see people uniting with the church. How my heart rejoices when I read letters from those who are trusting in God's grace.

Wherever we roam, the light of God goes with us. I have not had the privilege of mingling with Saints for a number of years, since we moved from Alton, Illinois. Nevertheless, my faith in the gospel has never weakened. Instead it has grown stronger day by day. I have many things for which to thank my heavenly Father. His loving-kindness restored me to health and strength when the hand of affliction fell upon me.

If we try to obey his laws and approach him with meekness, humility and sincerity in our hearts and pray for blessings, I know that he will hear our petitions. If we are conscientiously trying to serve him, he will not forsake us in time of trouble.

MRS. JOHN SHARP.

SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.

Would Have Zion in Their Midst

Though I am isolated I am trying in an adjoining community to hold Sunday school. We organized almost a year ago, and the workers are enjoying their undertaking. Though there are many obstacles to face, we do not want to give up, for God has been kind to us and has assured us that he is pleased with our undertaking.

We truly appreciate the visits of our district officers each fourth Sunday when it is possible for them to come. They drive forty-five miles and their spirit of service is unfaltering. May God bless them in their efforts.

Will the Saints pray for this little latter-day movement here, that the workers may be united in their efforts, and that we shall be able to establish Zion's ideals in this community.

BREWTON, ALABAMA.

O. A. MANNING.

"Like a Letter From Home"

I know what it means to be isolated from the church, for as far as I know, I am the only one of the latter-day faith living here. If there are any Saints near Canajoharie, I should like to have them write me their names and addresses.

My only contact with the church is the Saints' Herald, and when this comes it is like a letter from home.

Pray for me that I may receive strength from day to day to obey God's laws and that the rest of my family will accept the fullness of the gospel. I was baptized through the persistent and untiring effort of Brother A. B. Handy, of Independence, Missouri.

CANAJOHARIE, NEW YORK.

ROY A. CUSHING.

Request Prayers

Mrs. C. N. Maymon, 705 Shelby Street, New Albany, Indiana, asks the Saints to pray that her health may be improved and that she may be more fully reconciled to the Lord's will. She thanks all who have sent her letters of condolence and encouragement since the death of her companion last November, and hopes they will write again.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

How long was it from Christ's ascension to the apostasy?

While the apostasy, so far as the church itself was concerned, consisted of certain definite acts or teachings, it did not occur at one time, but covered a long period of time. It is believed to have culminated, however, sometime in the sixth century though this view is by no means held by all. The text sometimes used as the basis of the word apostasy is in the King James Version as follows:

"For that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition."—2 Thessalonians 2:3.

The Greek word for "falling away" is apostasia, meaning a forsaking, a revolt, a defection, or abandonment of what one had professed. The term is translated "apostasy" in the Weymouth, the Emphatic Diaglott, and the Twentieth Century versions. In the Douay Version it is "revolt," in the Syriac it is "defection," and in the Moffatt it is "rebellion."

Among the things predicted in Scripture is "damnable heresies" (2 Peter 2:1) of false teachers; "forbidding to marry" (1 Timothy 4:3) and commanding to abstain from meats, teachers "having itching ears" (2 Timothy 4:3), and turning away from the truth. But Paul declared that the "mystery of iniquity doth already work," in his own day, and other texts show that the apostasy was beginning even then. Perhaps the most significant act affecting the authority of the priesthood was in the time of Justin II (cir. 568-572), when the offices of the priesthood, particularly the bishoprics, were made "a matter of public sale to any purchasers that offered."

It is assumed that this question has reference to church activities or those in the interests of the church work. Perhaps the most important from the long-range viewpoint would be the education and discipline needed by the young, particularly within the atmosphere of the home and the social group, for it involves the character and the usefulness of our future church membership to a great extent.

Not all women are equally adapted to every work that the church offers, and Brother C. B. Woodstock has outlined several of the activities which are needed, which may be found in the Saints' Herald for October 24, 1933, under the title "The Work of Adults in the Church." On pages 1354 and 1364 specific work is named as particularly adapted to various women, including local welfare work, family stewardship, and girl leadership. A study of the financial law of God, and an endeavor to inculcate its principles in the lives of the young as well as in the home generally, will assist the church materially. It should be borne in mind, of course, that a beautiful Christian character in thought, word, and deed, is the high goal toward which all are called to press forward.

Can a pastor form a Religio or any organization without the people's vote?

Any organization looking to the carrying out of church rules may be initiated by the pastor, but of course it would be necessary to secure the cooperation of those who would compose it. Otherwise the organization would not function, but would die of inaction. To move with the approval and support of those involved in the work contemplated would be more likely to yield credit to the pastor. However, if the branch in general is opposed to a particular project had in mind by the pastor, it would seem better to wait till a clearer recognition of its need is had.

Should one be made an officer who for years has neglected to pay his debts?

If the fact is known to be thus by church officers having jurisdiction, such an appointment would probably injure both the church and their own prestige, particularly if the case of neglect to pay debts is widely known and has greatly injured the reputation of the offender. Such cases require official labor, rather than promotion, if repentance has not been shown.

Women Lend Effort to Pay Off Local Debt

A goodly number of members were able to attend the district conference held at Taylorville, Illinois, December 16 and 17. Some inspiring meetings were enjoyed, and all present appreciated the untiring efforts of Apostle John F. Garver. Taylorville Saints gave everyone a hearty welcome, and the women served meals in the basement of the church.

The usual Christmas program was held December 24, an enjoyable program. Two young men, Ogle Thomas and Earl Denton, from Graceland College, spent their vacation with their parents; and from the C. W. A. Camp, in Wisconsin, came Roy Gouty.

January 31, Maxine Martin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Martin, and Harold Walker, were married at the home of the pastor, Elder M. R. Shoemaker. Josephine Martin, sister of the bride, and Harry Thomas were the attendants. The young couple were graduates of the Beardstown High School.

The ladies' aid gave a bake sale, under the direction of Sister James Skiles, and the proceeds were turned over to the branch treasurer, to be applied on the church debt. The women are anxious to have this debt eliminated by the end of the year, and are working toward that goal. At present, they are quilting in the basement of the home of Sister William Meyers who has donated the quilt. It will be sold for the benefit of the church debt.

A box supper proved to be a social and financial success, February 20. A program of merit was given from seven to eight o'clock, after which a social was held in the basement of the church. Boxes were sold at auction for a small sum by Brother Elzie A. Kratzer, adult supervisor, who created much merriment.

Sister Elizabeth Fulk, mother of Elder R. L. Fulk, and Sister Mary Jane Garver, mother of Sister E. E. Thomas, were given a surprise party and handkerchief shower, March 2. Sister Fulk celebrated her ninety-second birthday a short time ago. The evening was spent playing games, after which refreshments were served.

A short program for Easter is being prepared under the direction of Sister E. E. Thomas.

The Saints of this congregation were happy to have District President Arthur Henson and Patriarch and Mrs. Richard Baldwin at their all-day meeting, March 18. Basket dinner was served at noon.

Cherokee, Iowa

Growing Numerically and Spiritually

This group is noting pleasing progress in its numerical and spiritual development. Attendance at prayer services held at the home of Brother and Sister Webb, has increased and the Holy Spirit is often present in admonition and assurance.

A party held at the home of Brother and Sister Hoepfner, was sponsored by the supervisor of young people, and given one hundred percent attendance.

The young people's and children's departments are steadily improving under the capable management of their supervisors, Sisters Ella Julius and Fern Hahn.

Cherokee members are happy to have with them once more Brother Chile and family who have returned from California where they resided for two years. Brother Chile is an active member and his son, who was ordained a priest while in California, will be a help to the branch, especially to the young people.

The women are active under the leadership of Sister A. R. Crippen and Sister Laura Kudrle. Their present financial aim is to raise money with which to purchase Saints' Hymnals for the branch. Study meetings are interesting and have brought the group a better understanding of some of God's laws.

The young married members of the adult division gave a party for the older members not long ago. After a program of songs and a play, a bountiful lunch was served to the members and visitors.

Sister Bengtha Larson died March 6, at the home of her daughter, Sister Emma Rathbun. Sister Larson had been an inspiration to the Saints for many years because of her humble faith in God. She will be missed by the branch. She had passed her eighty-eighth birthday.

Some outstanding sermons have been presented to this congregation in past months by Elders A. R. Crippen, J. T. Spense and W. W. Reeder. And from other priesthood members have come exhortations and admonitions making the members realize that eternal salvation comes only through obedience to the laws of God.

Madison, Wisconsin

Everyone Is Cooperating

Prayer services are well attended, and the young people's group meets on Tuesday evening, alternating with the women's group.

The young people are a great help in this branch. Their social gathering, dramatics, and their welfare work add much to the activities.

The women's group have been studying The Life of Christ. They have been making quilts, and held a bake sale, the proceeds of which went to help branch expenses.

Programs outlined for the month, with topics for prayer and preaching services, have given the people a broader vision of their worth in the church and a better understanding of Zion.

When Lee Root, resigned as church school director, Ormand Kimball was chosen in his stead. Brother Kimball is alert to the needs of the church school, and is doing his best to make its sessions interesting.

Pastor and Sister H. W. Woodstock gave a banquet for the young people, January 9, immediately following their meeting. The banquet was held in the lower auditorium of the church, the room being decorated in green and pink. Toastmaster Paul Utnehemer gave a short talk, comparing the youth organization to a ship. Other talks were given.

Apostle John F. Garver preached both morning and evening sermons, January 28. He appeared at his best, and delivered forceful and inspiring sermons. Since this was his birthday, some of the Saints followed him to the home of the pastor, where light refreshments were served. Brother Garver was presented with a purse.

During the church school hour February 4, a special service was held for the blessing of babies. An arch stood in the center of the platform, under which the infants were blessed. Inscribed on the arch, was the following motto, "Behold the little ones." Sister Leda Colbert was in charge of the service.

The adult supervisor sponsored a Valentine party at the church for the adults, on the evening of February 10. Tables were beautifully decorated in the dining hall of the church. Branch history and jingles were read by Mary Woodstock; branch poetry, by Ethel Richardson, and humorous readings, by Sylvia Dennis. Reminiscences of long-time members mingled with talks by those of more recent church associations.

Madison Branch observed the fast called by the President of the church, and a large crowd gathered to participate in the sacrament service March 4. Special prayers were offered for the coming General Conference.

Lincoln, Nebraska

Twenty-sixth and H Streets

Saints of Lincoln have been trying to carry on, even though they have not voiced their opinions or mentioned their activities frequently through the columns of the Herald. The attendance at most of the meetings has been about as usual, the Sunday school session probably having the larger numbers. During the cold weather the prayer services, midweek, as well as the women's meetings have been held in the homes of members.

During the past year the Saints have been encouraged by the presence, on different occasions, of workers from other branches as well as from headquarters. President Floyd M. McDowell, Bishop G. L. DeLapp, and Apostle Roy S. Budd have given much personal encouragement and left a definite sense of uplift and inspiration with them. Missionary W. A. Smith was there a week early in the year and another in the fall, and brought with him a good spirit, which has remained to bless and edify. High Priest H. A. Merchant, of Omaha, accompanied by some musicians from that branch, brightened one Sabbath evening, and left the congregation with the promise to "come again." These and other ministries, together with the faithful, local officers, have combined to keep the gospel banner floating over our Lincoln Branch.

Death has invaded their ranks, Sister Effie Smith losing a much-cherished son last spring, Sister McCart being called to part with a loved daughter early this year, and Brother Temple passing through the trial of losing his companion about the same time. With each of these bereaved ones the members grieve in sympathy, and ask that they may be blessed in measure as their hearts turn for comfort to the unfailing Source of love, the Master whose "peace passeth understanding."

The young people, under the faithful and efficient leadership of Brother and Sister Francis Schrunck, continue to find a varied program of activity from which they derive much benefit. The leaders among them attended the Youth Conference in Lamoni last June, from which they brought back to the branch much inspiration and enthusiasm. Early morning prayer services, social gatherings, organized activities of many kinds engage their interest and attention as well as the regular evening sessions, at which each in turn presides and various useful lessons are learned.

At the annual selection of officers the branch retained High Priest Benjamin M. Anderson as pastor, he choosing as his counselors two other high priests, E. J. Lenox and R. A. Harder. Sister Harder became supervisor of adult activities; Sister Schrunck, of the young people's division, and Sister Blanche Farrar, of the children's interests. Elder W. E. Poague is in charge of the Sunday school and the song service, while Brothers W. S. Farrar and A. F. Pfanmiller are the active deacons. Sister Capitola Mechling is in charge of local publicity, and Sister Mary Stake handles the matters pertaining to the Herald and other publication interests.

District President O. L. D'Arcy drops in occasionally, to lend the fine assistance of his missionary zeal and past experiences. Brother Harder is giving a series of sermons on the Book of Mormon, while Brother Schrunck is speaking on Sunday evenings on the gospel principles as found in Latter Day doctrines.

The branch has recently suffered a loss which is another's gain. Sister Doretha Hunt became the bride of Brother Clarence Williams, of Burlington, Iowa, and has removed to that city. Lincoln members commend her to the Saints of the locality, and feel sure they will find in her fine devotion to the church and her willingness to work therein a decided asset to their branch. Brother Williams is a nephew of Apostle D. T. Williams. The loving good wishes of Lincoln Saints accompany these splendid young people, and may the home they have founded prove to be a real Zion-builder.

Muskegon, Michigan

Easter Will Be Rally Day

Elder A. Whitehead, branch president, has for the past several weeks been preaching at Mishawaka, Indiana, and Buchanan, Michigan. Saints of this branch are looking forward to his visit home, during Easter.

A program is being arranged for rally day, April 1. Several visitors from Grand Rapids are expected to be present. A splendid time is assured to all visitors.

The young people's department, under the leadership of Edward Hittle, is making plans for meetings with neighboring branches. Interest in this department is increasing.

Three weddings have taken place recently in Muskegon Church, each ceremony being performed by Elder E. E. Loomis. Those united in marriage were Lula Holliday and Elder H. Douglas Osborne, who reside at Detroit; Viola Westerhoff and Armand Loomis; and Noreen Loomis and James Blevins.

Bayou Labatre, Alabama

New Enthusiasm in Southern Group

New zeal and enthusiasm have been aroused among the Saints in southern Alabama. Group work is progressing, greater interest than ever before being shown.

With the assistance of Elders Franklin Steiner and Amos Berve, of Mobile District, Elder Oscar Tillman is carrying on church school at his home, with a sermon Sunday night and sacrament service the second Sunday in each month. About thirty members are enrolled. One new member has been added to the list and the prospects for more are bright.

Great Falls, Montana

Happy in Church Activities

A most impressive sacrament service was enjoyed by Great Falls Saints, March 4. The prayers and testimonies centered around the desire uppermost in the hearts of all true Latter Day Saints, that God will pour out his Spirit upon the coming General Conference and especially bless those upon whom heavy responsibilities rest.

Church school is well attended as a rule. The adult class is studying the financial law under the leadership of E. E. Eliason, while N. P. Coleman instructs the young people concerning problems confronting the youth of today. W. C. Redfield has charge of the junior class.

Branch members are pleased at the progress the young people are making. They are to be especially commended for their willingness to serve when asked to take part in church school programs. They have their own organization with William Dawson as leader. Brother Dawson is one of the new members, and in order that he, as well as other members, may obtain a better insight into the Restoration of the gospel, they are devoting the first part of their class meeting to reading and discussing the Young People's Church History.

Tragedy entered this group of young people when one of its members recently fell the victim of a charge from a rifle while out hunting. E. E. Eliason preached the funeral sermon to a large congregation of sympathizing relatives and friends.

March 4, the church school had the privilege of viewing the Carnegie medal awarded in memory of the seventeen-year-old son of Brother Omar Nunn. This young man lost his life in an effort to save a companion from drowning. Engraven on the medal were these beautiful words of Jesus, "Greater Love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Far West Stake Conference

Outstanding in Spirit and Quality

Far West Stake held an outstanding conference, March 9 to 11, in Saint Joseph. Not outstanding in numbers, although the attendance was very good, it was outstanding in the spirit and quality of the services. A spirit of unity prevailed throughout.

The conference opened Friday evening with Apostle J. W. Rushton, of Los Angeles, California, as the guest speaker. Apostle Rushton delivered a forceful address on "The Place of the Church in Meeting World Conditions." About two hundred attended the opening session, most of whom were from the city. More out-of-town visitors were present Saturday and Sunday.

A large band of Saints gathered Saturday morning to worship together in a prayer service at ten o'clock. Apostles J. F. Garver and J. W. Rushton were in charge. Apostle Garver spoke at eleven giving a good sermon.

The business meeting was held Saturday afternoon, at which time delegates were elected to General Conference. The conference approved a recommendation from the high council for the ordination of fourteen men to various offices in the priesthood, and approved a recommendation from the stake president that Zenos J. Lewis be set apart as a member of the high council. Reports were read covering the various phases of the stake work and the following officers were elected: Director of women's work, Mrs. John Ruoff; director of music, Evan J. Ehlers; director of young people's activities, Leonard G. Ehlers; the stake presidency, Ward A. Hougas and Frank L. Hinderks; bishopric, Bishop Milo Burnett and Elders J. E. Hovenga and M. H. Hinderks; and the high council, Elders Alec Jensen, H. C. Timm, L. A. Keck, B. R. Constance, William G. Hamann, David Gamet, A. B. Constance, Thomas Fiddick and Z. J. Lewis were sustained.

The men recommended for ordination were as follows: Roscoe D. Peterson, L. Warren Hill and Alma J. Moffet to the office of elder; Norman Hinderks, Kenneth Piepergerdes and Emery Benjamin to the office of priest; Hubert Ehlers to the office of teacher; Quentin Marks, Freeman Hamann, Kenneth Wood, Dewey Anderson, Deyo Edwards, Donald Hale and Hallard Felch to the office of deacon. These ordinations will take place in two regional services, one to be held at Maple Grove Branch, March 25, and the other at Second Church in Saint Joseph, April 1.

Apostle Rushton continued his talks Saturday night, speaking on "The Need of a Philosophy of Life." After this meeting the O. T. Z.'s had an informal get-together, at which time the First Church O. T. Z.'s entertained the visiting young people.

The young people enjoyed a fine prayer service at eight o'clock Sunday morning.

Elder Ward A. Hougas was in charge assisted by Lawrence W. Keck and Leonard G. Ehlers.

Apostle Garver lectured at the church school hour. The children were given their own worship service in the basement by local leaders. Visitors continued coming until by ten-forty-five, the church was packed and nearly four hundred were in attendance. Apostle Rushton gave another interesting sermon at this hour. The First Church choir sang "Unfold Ye Portals."

Meals were served at the church by the women Saturday and Sunday, and free lodging was provided for visitors. Much credit goes to the women for handling this part of the work.

The afternoon prayer service was attended by nearly three hundred and fifty people and a profitable time was spent. Elder Z. J. Lewis, of Stewartsville, was set apart as a member of the high council of Far West Stake at this time by Apostles J. F. Garver and J. W. Rushton. The sacred gift of prophecy was given through Elder O. Salisbury and Apostle J. F. Garver.

The closing service of the conference was a vesper hour at five o'clock. Apostle Rushton brought his final message at this time. First Church Choir again rendered their service by singing "God Is Our Refuge." Special music was provided throughout the conference by stake musicians. A large crowd remained for this closing hour which enabled most of them to return home early in the evening. Altogether, the conference brought about the most representative attendance ever had. A vote of thanks was extended to Saint Joseph Saints for the way in which they entertained the conference.

Baltimore, Maryland

Look With Hope to Future

Baltimore Saints came fasting and praying to the communion service Sunday, March 4. It was suggested by Branch President Adolphus Edwards, that the Saints who fasted, send the money saved on food along with the oblations as a special sacrifice offering.

The spirit of prayer was wonderfully manifested in special petitions for the Presidency and for those meeting in quorum capacity at the General Conference. There were also prayers for the Saints throughout the world and for the local branch.

It is easy to see from the prayers and testimonies of the Saints that they are looking forward to the future with new zeal, more confidence, and brighter hopes for the future.

The president of the branch is well pleased with the work of the elders who are visiting in the homes, and sees marked progress as a result of their work. He feels that if this unity continues to abound a momentous period in the history of the church is drawing near.

Church records show a much better attendance in the past two months.

Annual Convention for Spring River District

"Onward to Zion" the Theme

The young people of Spring River District have grown to look forward to their annual convention with anticipation of the spiritual values which they expect to receive. This year as in other years they were not disappointed in their expectations. Those helping to make the convention a success were Elder George Mesley, of Kansas City, and Elder Amos T. Higdon, the district president.

This year the convention convened at Webb City, Missouri, on Friday, March 2, with a banquet at which George Mesley gave an address, "Zion the Beautiful Beckons Us On." Ronald G. Smith, of Pittsburg, Kansas, was the toastmaster. The theme of the convention, "Onward to Zion," was carried out in the following toasts: "Faithful and Strong," Luella Palmer, of Springfield; "To Christ We Belong," Frank Shanks, of Carthage; "With Service the Watchword," Albert Cobb, of Webb City, and "March On With a Song," Ruth Reynolds, of Coffeyville, Kansas.

The two prayer meetings held during the convention, Brother Higdon in charge, spoke most fittingly of the vision the youth of the district have of Zion. All seemed to realize the necessity of having Zion as their objective and working cooperatively toward that objective. There also was a vision of the price that must be paid in order to reach the superior social state of Zion. Many expressed themselves as anxious to pay the price even though it may seem high at times.

Class work in "Aims and Methods in Young People's Work" was taught by Brother Mesley, assisted by Charles Graham, also of Kansas City. Brother Mesley delivered a sermon Saturday night on "Character Building" which brought a new vision of the principles of the gospel to many in their quest of the "Zion State of Conditions."

On Sunday afternoon at two-thirty a roundtable discussion was held at which the following talks in their relationship to Zion were given: "The Ideal Home," Maurine Jones, of Pittsburg; "The Ideal Church," Howard Blatz, of Chanute, Kansas; "Young People's Attitudes Toward the Church," Charles Graham, and "Opportunities for Young People," Marguerite Sheppard, of Joplin.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Frank Shanks, president; Herman Plumb, of Springfield, vice president; Mabel Orr, of Carthage, secretary; Dorothy Mottet, of Webb City, treasurer; Albert Cobb, activity director, and Mary Hobart, of Webb City, music director.

Twenty-five minutes of orations, displaying unusual talent in swaying an audience, were given during the selection of a place to hold the 1935 convention. A number of branches were very desirous of having the young people meet in their city, but after three ballots, Miami, Oklahoma, was chosen for the next convention.

San Antonio, Texas

First Church, Rockwood Court and South Cherry

Southwestern Texas district conference met with First San Antonio Church February 25. The church school opened at nine forty-five in charge of the district supervisor, Madelyn Galbraith. District President G. R. Kuykendall was the speaker at eleven o'clock, and his theme was Zion and the gathering. The business session at 3 p.m. was in charge of the president of the district assisted by his counselor, J. A. Robinson. The following were appointed as delegates to General Conference: Brother and Sister J. A. Robinson, Brother and Sister Chrono, E. L. Henson, Sister Lizzie Edwards, Sister Dora Rentfroe and Sister Annie McGinnis.

Sister Virginia Hays, of Bandera, Texas, sent a cordial invitation to the members of the district, to hold reunion at Bandera this summer. She recently purchased a small tract of land adjoining the church there, and stated that she would donate an old building which could be torn down and used to erect a tabernacle. By unanimous vote the conference accepted the invitation and will hold its reunion at Bandera. A rising vote of thanks was extended to Sister Hays.

The evening sermon was by J. A. Robinson. Special music during the conference was an anthem by the choir, numbers by a male quartet, G. R. Kuykendall, Claude Rieves, Dick Duke and Sammy Hays, and duet selections by Mary Hall and Eva Richardson.

Attendance at conference was fairly good, there being members from Medina City, Tuff, Pipe Creek, and Second Church, San Antonio.

The sacrament service the first Sunday of March was well attended and a splendid spirit was felt. The day was observed in fasting and prayer by the majority of the members. T. J. Jett sr., of Second Church, was present at the communion hour and made a splendid talk on the importance of prayer. Brother Crowfield Jackson was the evening speaker.

On the second Sunday of the month District President G. R. Kuykendall visited Bandera Church being accompanied by some of the members of First Church. There they held sacrament service. Sister Lizzie Heisler's little son was administered to. After the hour of communion Brother Kuykendall preached to the group.

Speakers at First Church on that day were T. J. Jett in the morning and Pastor R. W. Jett in the evening.

Wight, and Mrs. Alma Warren.

Quindaro Church

A report shows that Quindaro has not only grown in size in the past five years, but it has also grown in spirituality. This is a result of the high type of leadership that the pastor, H. A. Higgins, has freely given to the church. He is also developing within the congregation many responsible leaders who are combining their efforts through his direction, to further realize God's purposes in that part of the stake.

Sister H. A. Higgins is working hard as director of religious education with the cooperation of her selected staff of church school teachers and leaders, to comply with the highest standards of the Kansas City Stake in this department. It is through her untiring efforts and capable leadership that the church school has made a noted change and accomplishment toward this goal.

All departments of the church are fully organized and functioning properly, namely, the women's department, the men's department, the O. B. K.'s, and the junior and senior church schools.

The local O. B. K. organization has been very successful the past eight months in stimulating the interest of the young people and answering their church needs. Alice Baker, Sophia VanBoskirk, and B. O. Lungwitz, members of the O. B. K. cabinet have been doing every thing possible for the success of the young people. They have provided many needed activities for the church, and are at present sponsoring the weekly instruction of the Book of Mormon, by Sister H. A. Higgins; they have organized an O. B. K. forum that meets at six o'clock each Sunday evening. With the assistance of Brothers Irvin Luke, Joe Davis, and others, the meetings not only provide entertainment, but also prayer services and interesting topical discussions.

The young people's dramatic club sponsored by the O. B. K.'s, under the leadership of Aileen Pemberton and Mona Gross, has contributed greatly to the needs of the entire congregation.

Don Graham and Everett Gaunce have been giving some serious thought to outside recreation and are now considering a program of outdoor activities for the spring and summer months including volley ball.

Los Angeles, California

Central Church

Activities here have been planned with a twofold purpose for this year. The one to engage more participants in the various departments, and in harmony with the general church plan to unify the various endeavors. Workers feel they are making progress. Recent special occasions include a sacred concert by the choir on a Sunday evening, special dramatic presentations on Sunday evening, a banquet on Friday night sponsored and prepared by the young people's group, an evening of one-act plays presented by the young people under the leadership of the dramatic division, and a "school-day party" for the adults.

They have been favored with guest speakers, which have occasioned all-day church meetings on Sunday, with dinner served by the Martha's. Apostle J. W. Rushton and E. J. Gleazer have contributed much to their spiritual welfare by their visits.

Apostle Rushton was present at the recent district conference of Southern California which was outstanding from the numbers in attendance, as well as spiritual tone. Delegates to General Conference elected were: Elder and Mrs. D. B. Sorden, Apostle J. W. Rushton, Doctor and Mrs. A. W. Teel, Doctor and Mrs. Joseph Mather, Mrs. Lois Crawford, Mrs. Clyde Baskerville, G. G. Catron, Maude Manning, Dora Dalby, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Milnder, Mrs. Hattie Newkirk, Rosa Watrous, Mrs. Laura Ball, Mrs. Fred Crum, Mrs. Mary Pritchard, J. N. Monroe, George Givens, Mrs. Madge Knowlton, and the following four students from the district in attendance at Graceland College; Valeria Crum, Harmon Crum, J. C. Stuart, jr., and Laddie McKay.

Brother C. N. Sparks was ordained to the office of priest at the sacrament service in March.

Sister Willard Badham has been unable to attend services since the first of the year. She is getting along better now and friends hope she will be well enough to be with them again soon.

The branch was happy to have a short visit from Brother and Sister Arthur Ferret as they arrived from Australia on their way to General Conference, and looks forward to their return here for a longer stop.

They are uniting their prayers and hopes with the rest of the church for the General Conference. In the meantime, they are striving to increase their own strength in Los Angeles.

Parsons, Kansas

Activities Keep Everyone Busy

Working conditions and business continues to improve. The M. K. and T. railroad shops have opened again. While the force is small, there has been a gradual increase in its numbers from time to time.

Thanksgiving Day was enjoyed by the group who, with their friends, met at the home of Brother Glenn Bruch, where a social good time was had. At noon dinner was served from baskets. The afternoon was spent in recitations, songs, piano solos, etc., in which old and young participated.

The congregation was saddened to hear of the death of the pastor's mother which occurred November 28, at Appleton City, Missouri. The deceased was seventy-five years of age and had been in ill health for a year.

Christmas festivities brought joy to young and old and reached a climax in the presentation of a four-act play.

This branch was one of those in the district which again met its quota. The women's department was of considerable aid in making this record possible, contributing funds through candy sales, quilting, and other activities.

Billy Gene, adopted son of Brother and Sister Glenn Bruch, was blessed by Elders Daniel and Norman W. Gray, January 21, the rite being a part of the junior church service.

Valentine's Day was celebrated by the three smaller classes meeting at the home of Sister Wright and enjoying a party given by the teachers. Fifteen were present. The young people had a class party on Washington's birthday, each member inviting a guest.

At the suggestion of the pastor a free will offering was given by the members, March 11, amounting to the cost of the meals fasted on fast day the previous Sabbath. A sum of five dollars was collected, and will be sent to the Bishopric as an offering from Parsons Branch.

The third Sunday of each month is set aside for junior church service. The young people take charge of the meeting, and the older members enjoy their programs and talks, receiving much satisfaction in the knowledge of their love in carrying on the work of the church. In March, this service was held a week ahead in order that those who had attended the young people's convention of Spring River District at Webb City, Missouri, March 3 and 4, might report on the meetings.

Through their pastor Parsons members have been given a greater understanding of the power of God and of his love. They have been admonished to be unified, humble, and to love one another.

Recently they enjoyed two excellent sermons by Elder Amos T. Higdon.

Several from here are planning to attend part of the sessions of the coming General Conference.

Missionary Services in Clinton District

Nonmembers Compose Fifty Percent of Attendance

Since the Gudgell Park meetings at Independence which closed January 14, I have visited several branches and have held meetings at Rich Hill, Missouri, Mount Vernon, Illinois, and am now engaged in meetings at Eldorado Springs, Missouri.

The response at all three points has been splendid, and attendance above the average. The membership is well represented each night and about fifty percent of the attendance is nonmembers. Interest is high.

A district meeting was enjoyed March 11 at Fort Scott, Kansas. Twenty-five from Eldorado attended, and we had a wonderful time. This was the largest attendance I have ever seen at the Fort Scott Church, and the day's activities were most beneficial and enjoyed by all. We regretted, however, that Brother Birch Whiting, district president, was not able to be with us.

The hospitality of Fort Scott Saints was much appreciated. A basket dinner was served following which three candidates were baptized, one from Rich Hill and two from Eldorado Springs. Others of Rich Hill whose names have been handed in, will be baptized later.

We are hoping that others interested here will be baptized before the meetings close.

J. CHARLES MAY

Santa Ana, California

Rodney Engle Ordained a Priest

On the first Wednesday in March, Rodney Engel was ordained to the office of priest in an impressive service conducted by Pastor Louis Ostertag. Brother Ostertag read the account of the wonderful manifestation of the Spirit under which the ordination of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery took place. Then the choir sang "I would Be True." Pastor Ostertag then gave the charge to Brother Engel and to the congregation. David B. Carmichael offered prayer. Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Brother Ostertag and Brother Carmichael put their hands on Brother Rodney's head, and in a wonderful prayer Brother Gleazer ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood. The choir sang a number dedicated to Brother Engel.

Brother Gleazer conducted the service with a talk which explained and stressed the need of the priesthood to minister to the Saints and, in turn, the responsibility of the Saints in upholding and helping the priesthood.

Rodney Engel is the son of Sister Vida O. Engel and the great-grandson of Glaude Rodgers and Josiah Butterfield. Brother Rodgers is remembered throughout the church as one of its outstanding missionaries in America and in foreign fields. Brother Butterfield was beloved for his missionary work on the Pacific coast. These men have handed down to Rodney a heritage of devotion to the latter-day cause. The candidate was eighteen last December, and is completing his second year at the Santa Ana Junior College, with honors. He has also received national recognition for his radio activities.

Dayton, Ohio

Evangelistic Spirit Carries Congregation Forward

One of the many joys of the gospel is passing it on to others. Dayton Saints were happy to have two out-of-town elders as their speakers during the past six weeks. February 11, Elder S. E. Dickson, of Lancaster, Ohio, delivered a forceful sermon on spiritual power. The ladies' chorus sang "God Is Love" and "Have Thine Own Way, Lord."

Elder A. E. Anderton, of Columbus, met with the priesthood during the afternoon and was the evening speaker. Elder Anderton's sermon was encouraging to many. The ladies' chorus again furnished the musical program, assisted by Lois Rockwell, soloist.

Other speakers of the month were Priest Russell Rockwell, Elder Floyd Rockwell, and Elder E. L. Ulrich. The sermon by the first-named came in the form of a rebuke, but was well received by those who heard it. Brother Rockwell is one of Dayton's younger members of the priesthood. Elder Floyd Rockwell is presenting a series of talks on "Events and Signs of the Last Days." These services are being well attended by members and nonmembers.

March 4, was observed with fasting and prayer. Brother A. Smith, baptized the day before, was confirmed a member of the church in a short service Sunday morning, Elders George Stephens and E. L. Ulrich officiating. Those seated on the rostrum for the sacrament service were Elders George Stephens, Floyd Rockwell, Everett Ulrich, and Franklin Rieske. The spirit of testimony was present with power, and nearly everyone took part. Brother Smith's testimony, his first in the church, was greatly appreciated.

February 8, Velva Rieske entertained the C. S. M. Club and visitors at a delightful Valentine party. The following Tuesday the ladies' chorus entertained with a Valentine party at the home of Brother and Sister R. H. Hunter. Thursday night the C. S. M. Club members had a "kid" party, exchanging Valentines. February 24, John Stultz's class sponsored a pie social in the basement of the church.

Dayton members extend sympathy to Elder John Miller who is in the Miami Valley Hospital. Brother Miller now has both legs amputated. He has been visited by many of the Saints and greatly comforted by the promises of the gospel.

Betty Rockwell, one of the younger sisters of the branch, has been very sick, but is now back at services.

For the next half year these officers have been chosen for the C. S. M. Club: President, George Hunter; vice president, Myrtle Boeckman; secretary-treasurer, Kathryn Martin.

Idaho District Conference

Unity and Desire to Serve Follow This Gathering

Idaho district conference was held at Rupert March 3 and 4. Apostle M. A. McConley was present and preached Friday night preceding the conference and also on the following two days. His sermons were much enjoyed, and the lectures and class work conducted by this apostle were the source of help to young and old. He used as his subjects, "Zion Building" and "Qualifications for Zion and Stewardships."

The conference was well attended by Saints from Boise, Hagerman, American Falls, Pocatello, and Rupert. Apostle McConley presided over the business session. Reports were given by Silas D. Condit, pastor of Hagerman Branch and district president; by John B. Cato, pastor at Boise, and by W. A. Connel, pastor at Rupert. All pastors noted great improvement in the work of their respective branches and the awakening of Saints to their responsibilities as church members. The bishop's agent, Arthur Condit, gave a report saying that there had been more inventories and financial statements sent in this year than at any time since he has been in office. Orval J. Baker, director of religious education, gave a summary of the work of the church schools in the district.

The women of Rupert served dinner at the church Saturday noon and also at six in the evening. Approximately one hundred and fifty were present. On Sunday no meals were served because the Saints observed general fast day.

A district program Saturday night presented each branch in instrumental numbers, singing and readings.

Thomas Ultican, district chorister, was in charge of conference music, and the orchestra of Rupert Branch played at all meetings.

District Missionary Joseph L. Sandidge was not present, being occupied with a series of meetings in Washington.

Sacrament service on Sunday began at eight-thirty, and was well attended and enjoyed.

There is greater unity among the members of the district as a result of this conference and all have an intense desire to serve God and help build Zion.

Conference Daily Herald—50 cents.

Independence

The Auditorium is being made ready for General Conference. A new iron guard rail is being installed on the approaches to the north door, the lobby is being painted and decorated, and special rest rooms, a nursery, and a first aid room are in preparation. Extra office and committee rooms will be furnished for conference business.

The Laurel Club will operate a large dining hall in the basement and the lunch room adjoining the lobby. Special display spaces will be given church publications and institutions. Boys and girls of Independence will be available to help visitors in many ways throughout the conference.

Twenty-five seniors of William Christian High School were taken into the National Honor Society last Friday afternoon. Of these eleven are Latter Day Saint young people: Florence Hodges, Margery Sheehy, Frances Hall, Anita Gillen, G. L. Harrington, Frances Bryant, Mary Elizabeth Gooch, Willa Mae Redfield, Phil Weeks, Gordon Moore, and Wayne Zion.

Stone Church

Doctor Joseph Luff, veteran missionary and officer of the church, was the Sunday morning speaker. In the stand with him were Elder H. G. Barto and Elder G. E. Harrington.

The musical program was furnished by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig. The choir was assisted by Robert Miller at the organ, and by Mrs. Israel A. Smith and Albert Brackenbury, soloists.

Sunday night's service was sponsored by the local young people's department headed by the Stone Church Young People's Council. Elder T. A. Beck, superintendent of young people, was in charge, and he was assisted by Edmund Gleazer, son of Apostle E. J. Gleazer and president of the young people's council.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer, the speaker, based a forceful sermon on Acts 1:6-11, using two questions as his text: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" and "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven?" Brother Gleazer returned to Independence only a few days ago after an intensive missionary campaign in the Northwest with Apostle M. A. McConley, attending conferences and conventions and speaking in local branches.

Special music was furnished by the Whademna Choral Club directed by Paul N. Craig, and assisted by Mrs. Clayton Wolfe, of Kansas City, at the organ. A violin solo was played by Orrin K. Fry, junior.

The Stone Church Choir enjoyed a party last Thursday night following the rehearsal in the basement of the church. The event was to stimulate interest in the choir and its work, and approximately one hundred and twenty-five were there. Opal C. Swalley is president of the choir this year and is assisted by Virgil Woodside as vice president, Ruby Wilcox as secretary, and other faithful officers.

The To-Ko-Lon Class of young people enjoyed their annual banquet Friday night in the Laurel Club lunchroom at the Auditorium. About seventy-five were there. Guinn Bronson is president of the class.

The Boys' Choir of the Stone Church will present a concert in the Stone Church the night of March 23. Everyone is invited, and the proceeds from the sale of tickets will go to the choir's robe and music fund.

Second Church

Pastor Will Inman was the eleven o'clock speaker Sunday, and the theme of his sermon was "The Love of God." The choir furnished music.

J. M. Robinson was the speaker at the junior church service, and he talked about David. Geneva Edmunds told an incident in the life of W. W. Phelps.

Patriarch Albert Carmichael lectured on the Doctrine and Covenants at six o'clock, and will continue his lectures for the next two Sunday evenings.

In the evening Apostle R. S. Budd preached on "Loyalty." The young people's choir and a boys' quartet furnished music.

Walnut Park Church

One Sunday of each month the program period of the church school is to be devoted to the great hymns of Christianity. Sunday morning Brother Odess Athey gave a short history of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and Drexel Mollison played the hymn on the organ.

The speaker at the eleven o'clock hour was Patriarch Ammon White. He advised the Saints to develop themselves by seeking out opportunities for service, and not to wait for opportunity to be thrust upon them. Preceding the sermon a ladies' quartet from Spring Branch congregation sang "O My Soul, Bless Thou Jehovah." The singers were Alma Dixon, Gladys Dixon, Imogene Dixon and Fern Belk.

Sister John Blackmore told a story to the juniors in their service, and Erwin Moorman gave the talk.

Next Sunday, March 25, will be observed as home-coming day at Walnut Park and all former pastors of the congregation who can possibly do so are invited to be present. This invitation is, of course, extended to all who have at any time lived and worked in the district. Many special events are being arranged in celebration of the day.

The Saints of Walnut Park regret that circumstances take from their midst a number of those who have been tireless workers in the past. Among those are Brother and Sister M. T. Williams, who are moving out of the district. Brother Williams has served for some time as assistant pastor and Sister Williams has been head of the women's department.

The Victoria Society served a farewell dinner to Sister Williams at the church Thursday, March 15. Twenty-five guests were present. As a part of the ceremonies a large cake, baked by Sister Paul Roberts, was presented to Sister Williams. Upon the cake was this inscription: "Our appreciation to Sister Williams. While she will be greatly missed from our society, we are deeply grateful for the opportunity afforded her and her family and pray our Father's choicest blessings attend them."

The pastor, Elder Frank McDonald, was the speaker Sunday evening.

Liberty Street Church

The week of meetings closed Sunday night with a stirring sermon by Elder J. W. A. Bailey on the Restoration of Israel. Brother Bailey did commendable work in covering so extensive a subject as the latter-day Restoration in the seven evenings allotted him. His lecture-sermons were necessarily condensed. Each night the audience continued large and attentive. All groups in Independence were represented among the listeners.

The programs consisted of special musical numbers and congregational singing. The Saints' Hymnal purchased for the series in January were again pressed into service. Music Sunday night was furnished by Sister John R. Lentell's Las Favoritas Chorus.

An appropriate climax in the series came at the eleven o'clock hour Sunday when an impressive prayer service was held, Brother Bailey in charge.

Spring Branch Church

Wednesday evening prayer services were in charge of C. D. Brewer, T. Nord, J. S. Andes, and A. Peer. Early morning prayer services Sunday was in charge of R. Fish and J. T. Tankard.

During the Sunday school hour Sister Nord gave a talk. The eleven o'clock service was in charge of F. A. Cool and D. D. McClain. Oral McClain sang "I'm a Pilgrim," accompanied by Sister Frank Boyse. J. S. Andes and G. F. Weston were the speakers. The former chose as his subject, "What Lack I Yet?" G. F. Weston spoke on the "Resurrection."

The evening church school program was in charge of Sister Nord's class. Between the church school and the preaching service Moraine and Dorcile Gordon and Wilda and Bonnie Belle Nelson and Violet Belk sang two numbers.

The evening preaching service was in charge of M. C. Jacobsen and Jesse Smith. The girls with Vlora Jacobsen sang "This Life Is a Garden."

Mrs. Gertrude Simmons was baptized by J. S. Andes, after which the congregation sang, "The Old, Old Path." J. E. Cleveland, a former pastor was the speaker and used as his subject, "Why I Belong to This Particular Organization." At the close Sister Simmons was confirmed by Elders Fish and Tankard.

Spring Branch feels honored to have won the pennant in the Latter Day Saint Basket Ball League of Independence.

Enoch Hill Church

The church school worship period Sunday morning was in charge of the older young people's class. Elder Charles Warren was in charge. Nellie Mae Kramer read "How Did You Die?" Marjory Thomas sang "Promised Blessing," Richard Maloney played "Mighty Lak a Rose," and George Griffin closed with prayer.

Pastor E. A. Thomas was the morning speaker. He used as the basis of his sermon Doctrine and Covenants 42:17. Richard Maloney sang a solo.

Apostle J. A. Gillen, the evening speaker, differentiated between the status of one who has his name on the books of the church only and one who is a true disciple of Christ.

Every home on Enoch Hill is being visited by the priesthood.

The women's department is doing a good work visiting and helping. They have assisted the different sisters by quilting nineteen quilts in the last few months. For quilting they do not charge and are happy to be of service to each other.

The young people are carrying on their special work. Saturday night they had a social.

The junior church school is progressing under the supervision of Sister H. E. Winegar.

The choir is preparing an Easter cantata.

Gudgell Park Church

Elder John F. Sheehy read from the writings of Isaiah instances to inspire and instruct when he visited Gudgell Park February 25, and was the morning speaker. Because of badly drifted roads the evening services were not held.

Brother Richard Bullard gave a spiritual opening address at the sacrament service March 4. At the religio session that day Milton Martin gave a talk on interesting things he had learned on a recent trip to Chicago. Elder Sam Inman, of Second Church, was the evening speaker.

Clarence Martin was the morning speaker March 11. In the evening Evert Elliott, one of the newly-ordained men in the center place, preached his first sermon. At the close Elder Swen Swenson spoke briefly. His friends were glad to hear him once more.

Patriarch U. W. Greene preached last Sunday morning. Brother R. E. Jones talked to the adult religio class at six o'clock and preached the evening sermon on the text: "Therein is your father glorified, that ye bear much fruit."

Denison Members Mourn the Death of Lieutenant Fred I. Patrick

Forced Landing Is Fatal to Airman

The little group of Saints living at Denison, Texas, (three families) were saddened February 22, when Lieutenant Fred I. Patrick army pursuit flyer stationed at Barksdale Field, Shreveport, Louisiana, was almost instantly killed as his swift plane came down in a forced landing in a plowed field scarcely a mile south of Denison. Only a few minutes previous Lieutenant Patrick had twice circled the home of Sister William A. Young, his sister, with whom lives their father, Brother J. W. Patrick. This was the elder Patrick's eightieth birthday, and by his invitation, the son had flown to Denison to spend the day and eat birthday dinner with him and the sister's family.

After waving to his father and niece, Virginia, and nephew, William junior, he headed for Sherman, an emergency landing field, where his brother-in-law, William A. Young, awaited him with his car, to bring him back to the birthday dinner.

Lieutenant Patrick was forty years old. When thirteen he was baptized with his sister, now Mrs. Young, in a little creek on his father's farm at Anderson, Missouri, by Elder F. C. Warnkey. At the age of seventeen Fred left the farm and entered Joplin Business College where he worked his way through a four-year course. At Pittsburg, Kansas, he served for a time as assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A. Later he attended the business college at Sterling for a year. From there he entered William Jewell College, where he would have graduated the following June had he not enlisted in the army to take part in the World War. He enlisted in the signal corps but later was transferred to the air corps, receiving his training at Chanute Field, Rantoul, Illinois. He was given his commission under Woodrow Wilson's administration, and was sent to Arcadia, Florida, where he was made a pilot instructor.

While at Arcadia he met and later married Mrs. Clair Rodriguez. On February 10, just twelve days previous to his death, they celebrated their twelfth anniversary at New Orleans.

From Arcadia he was transferred to San Antonio, Brooks Field, where he again served as instructor of the flying school until he was sent to the Philippine Islands as instructor. During his stay there his mother, Sister J. W. Patrick, passed away.

At Kelly Field, San Antonio, he served as post operations officer. Later he went to Montgomery, Alabama, spending nine months in the Tactical School. From there he was sent to Barksdale Field, Shreveport July 1, 1933.

He was a man of sterling quality and did much good especially among the young men with whom he was associated by nature of his work. Although not privileged to attend church because of his activities in his field of service, he was a faithful member. The funeral was held at Denison, and the body was taken to Washington D. C., where he was buried with military honors in Arlington National Cemetery. He leaves to mourn his wife, father, two sisters, three brothers, and other relatives.

J. O. Dutton Conducts Missionary Services

Last November District President J. O. Dutton held a week of meetings here in the home of Mr. and Sister Harbstreit. The crowd increased every evening until on the closing night fifty-four were present.

It was then decided that a place for services should be built. All fell to work to make possible a little church house. Elder Dutton called it "the little cottage church." He returned as soon as it could be completed, February 18, and began services.

Though the weather was unfavorable, the people came out in good numbers, and in a few nights the church was full. Everyone seemed well pleased. Some brought questions to be answered. A choir leader was chosen and song service was enjoyed, everyone taking part.

Sunday, March 4, sacrament service was held for the few Saints at Washington at ten-thirty then there was preaching at 11 a. m., 2 p. m. and 7:30.

The missionary meetings closed March 8, with an attendance of about one hundred. Some have promised that when Elder Dutton returns next May or June, they will be ready for baptism.

Local members found that there were more Saints living in this vicinity than they thought. When missionary services were announced several scattered members came to hear, and made the acquaintance of others of the faith. They are hoping that many will see the shining light of the gospel, and that it will be possible to build up a branch of the church there.

Jan Hus I. O. O. F. Building, Third Avenue, Southwest

This active and enthusiastic group of members has united to carry on the two-fold purpose of the church. They hold regular services, church school at 10 a. m. Sunday, preaching at eleven whenever one of the ministry is present from out of town. The pastor, Brother Pennington, lives twenty-five miles from the city and is not always able to meet with the group due to transportation problems and reverses which he has to meet; but the activities carry on, church school under the direction of Brother Barton, and preaching by visiting priesthood members from Iowa City, likewise twenty-five miles distant.

After passing through difficulties of varied nature, the group seems to be

Notice to Michigan Musicians

Let us help fulfill President F. M. Smith's hope—a singing church! To assist in this, we, the musicians of Michigan, are declaring ourselves to be willing to do our part. Our aim is to make every singer a soloist, every instrumental player, the best. This will take time, determination, and above all, spirituality. Some day we want to sing with the Spirit and with understanding. We are expecting to have a choir of six hundred voices, an orchestra of ninety pieces and a children's choir of two hundred voices. All this will be made easier as we meet annually in a music festival and get intensive class work. Who is there, either old or young, who will not want to join ranks with the musical part of the Christian Legion? At the late young people's convention held at Cadillac, we saw what can be done with a small choir in a short time. We hope, at Saginaw, the twenty-fifth to meet many of the singers of Michigan and other places to further the interests of this glorious movement. Not only do we hope to develop singers and players, but directors from every part of the State, leaders who can take their turn at directing choir or orchestra when attending our annual festivals. Meet us at Saginaw March 25, and bring the anthems asked for by Sister Louise Evans. Let us do our part in making our church the singing church.—B. H. Doty, business manager.

Nauvoo Branch to Broadcast Over WCAZ

Saints of Nauvoo, Illinois, will broadcast a radio program over WCAZ, Carthage, Illinois, 1070 kc. Sunday, March 25, from 1:15 to 2 p. m. Music will be furnished by the Walleth Trio. James C. Page will be the speaker.—James C. Page.

progressing, but as yet the young people from eighteen to twenty-three years of age have not been interested in either activity or attendance.

Attendance has averaged around twenty-five, and at one service the count totaled thirty-five which indicates that a strong return of interest is under way.

The nature of the services has been pleasingly uplifting, this being especially noted in the March 4, sacrament service when earnest testimonies of God's influence over these people and their earnest desire to be faithful and true were apparent. The group is also appreciative of the efforts made by visiting priesthood members in their behalf, and hope members of the ministry who chance to be passing through will stop to help them.

The Pigeonhole

■ Too Dangerous

By John F. Sheehy

Some years ago a young man walked on board a vessel. He had done that many times from earliest recollection. This particular morning, however, he came on board as the captain. From cabin boy to captain—that was a climb in the old days with plenty of competition. The men of the sea were rugged, brave, and rough. Captain George had been successful and was every inch a sailor.

Just before casting off from the home wharf at S—, his father came aboard to extend congratulations and to bid him bon-voyage. His father had been a man of the sea for many years. For more years than he could remember he was the master of his vessel. As the old captain and the young captain, father and son, stood shaking hands on deck the old man said, "My son. Just a little advice. You are a good sailor. You will make a good record. I want you to remember this though. There are two things in this world to be afraid of. Give them both a wide berth. Stear clear of both of them—Cape Cod and the Devil."

Cape Cod, the graveyard of the Atlantic ocean! The sands of Cape Cod are like the sands of the desert. Today there is plenty of water. Tomorrow the water is very shallow. The reason is that the sands of Cape Cod move around under the water, the moving being caused by the wind and the tide. Many ships in stormy weather have been wrecked, and many, many lives have been lost in the cold waters of Cape Cod.

Since the day the old man gave his son advice, Cape Cod has been made safe for navigation. A canal has been built across the narrow neck of land, and now in perfect safety ships and vessels sail from Boston to New York, and no sea captain has any fear of Cape Cod. But the Devil—I leave the reader to his own conclusion.

“With One Accord in One Place”

By Grace L. Krahl

PENTECOST, with which the words in the above caption were associated after the death and resurrection of Jesus, was originally one of the praise-giving sacrificial and foreshadowing feasts prescribed by the Mosaic law.

Meaning fiftieth, the feast was so named because it occurred fifty days after the second day of the passover. It differed from the other annual feasts in that it lasted but one day, celebrating the last day of the harvest. It was to consist of leavened bread made from the new season's cereal, but no one tasted the new grain until the first sheaf had been presented to Jehovah.

Special sacrifices were commanded for a burnt offering, a sin offering, and a peace offering. Other purposes of the feast were to give thanks to the Lord for their prosperity, for the Law given from Sinai on the fiftieth day of their coming out of Egypt, and to acknowledge his dominion over their country and their labors.

Passover and Pentecost typify the two essential facts connected with the divinity of the Christian religion: That Jesus was the “lamb slain from the foundation of the world” for the redemption of mankind, and that He was the risen Redeemer to complete that redemption.

The early disciples who had but a short time before observed the feast of the Passover with Jesus had perceived that the paschal lamb, the illustrious type of Christ had now become “Christ our Passover.”

Then was borne in upon the souls of these same disciples, following Jesus' many reappearances after his death and resurrection, the fact that the offering of the first fruits of the harvest prefigured the fact that Jesus had become “the first fruits of them that slept.” Thus were the foreshadowings of these two solemn feasts illuminated.

BUT PENTECOST was to have a new significance which would place the final seal of divinity upon the mission of Jesus Christ and qualify those whom he had chosen to be witnesses of Him in all the world. It was the endowment of the Holy Spirit.

The setting, therefore, for this great, notable event is interesting, to say nothing of its importance. One hundred and twenty disciples had gathered in an upper room. It was early in the day, the third hour. The betrayer in his shame and humiliation had disappeared. The vacancy in the Twelve had been filled by the choosing of Matthias. The incredulous Thomas had been satisfied. They had come in the spirit of expectancy and assurance, and were “with one accord in one place.” Not wholly dissimilar to the thunders and lightning of Sinai when Moses ascended the mount was this spectacular manifestation of the power of God, for “there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing, mighty wind, and it filled the whole house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them and they were filled with the Holy Ghost.” Their final preparation for the reception of so great a display of the power of God attracts attention: they were “with one accord in one place.”

THE TIME APPROACHES when this people will gather in a General Conference, the success of which depends largely upon the attitude of mind in which they assemble.

There have been silent and verbal longings for a greater outpouring of the Holy Spirit than we have had for sometime. But to have a pentecostal season we must have a pentecostal setting, the secret of which is to be “with one accord in one place.” Or, in other words, to be of one heart and one mind for the glory of God and the advancement of his work.

And if the Prophet of the Lord must ascend a Sinai to be alone with God for the needs of his beneficent and glorious Cause, shall we not pray with “one accord” that God will meet him there.

Good will must become a strong ingredient of our common morality. We have learned that it can be put to practical uses in the marginal relations both of business and of government where a certain amount of benevolence is pardonable, but we do not trust it at the hard core of human relations in either sphere. But good will must become operative in decisions that really matter—where money is involved and where treaties are at stake. The cancer that eats at the vitals of our present economic structure is mutual distrust and fear, and it can be cured, if it is curable at all, only by a social morality in which good will is a rugged virtue.—Charles H. Heimsath, “New Times—New Virtues!” in The Christian Century.

— Informal Chats From the Office of the President —

PRESIDENT
FREDERICK M. SMITH

FRANK S. DOBBINS, district secretary of the Southern New England District, in writing of their recent conference says:

"We have closed a district conference that stands out as one of the most spiritually powerful experiences in the last twenty years. It will be referred to after you and I have passed to a still greater field of labor. It was a modern Pentecost, no spectacular manifestations but a profound divine power overshadowing the entire congregation."

We are always happy to hear of such spiritual meetings and the reports coming to us from various parts of the country of the improved qualities of these meetings constitute another sign of the times. Among other things for which Brother Dobbins seems to be thankful was the calling and ordaining of a group of young men to the ministry for work in that district and elsewhere. Brother Dobbins expresses the idea that the Southern New England District is on its way for a greater upward swing, and adds:

"Personally, I cannot spend time wondering 'what lies beyond the hills' and I pray Almighty God that his people may vision the possibilities right in 'the corner where we are.'"

BROTHER WILLIAM PATTERSON in writing of the work in Port Huron says:

"We still face the future with courage undaunted, vision and hope undimmed, and faith and zeal unimpaired. In the year 1933 we baptized twenty-eight and had a net increase in membership of twenty-seven. This is the greatest increase in membership in Port Huron in a number of years. Next month will be devoted primarily to missionary work, and we hope to baptize a number of people."

Then, Brother Patterson speaks of the good which President McDowell's visit has done in trying to stimulate greater activity among the priesthood, but suggests the idea that if these efforts remain sporadic they are likely to do more harm than good, and he adds a tone of encouragement by saying that Brother McDowell's coming among them assured him "that the general administrative officers are contemplating a movement which will challenge each member of the priesthood to so sense the responsibility of his ministry that he will use it as the greatest instrument for the accomplishment of the greatest good."

The time is upon us when such an activity of priesthood must develop and we trust that each pastor, particularly, will be alert to the importance of stimulating into activity every member who holds the priesthood.

BROTHER JOHN STEBEL who has been working so assiduously and well in Poland for a number of years wrote the Presidency recently saying that he was still carrying on the work as best he could under the disadvantages they have to meet. He tells us that the Saints in Poland are remembering at the throne of grace the church and the men who have responsibility to carry. He says:

"I often intended to write to you but reading such effective reports of excellent missionaries in the Herald I hesitated because I am not able to report as successful missionary work as those mentioned. My labor in Poland is about half missionary and half pastoral, and since Poland has been separated from the German Mission because of the Hitler Government in Germany and changed political conditions in Poland, Apostle Rushton in agreement with the Presiding Bishopric and with Elder Olson of the Statistical Department appointed me to work as bishop's agent and recorder of the Polish Mission. Although the field is not large and the membership is small I endeavor to do every part of the work carefully."

He adds that the Saints' Herald is a great help to him in his work and that he puts the Herald next to the three standard books of the church and thinks that every department of it is a masterpiece and that it should be printed in all "culture-languages."

Since Brother Stebel's membership in the church he has only met two or three of the leading men of the church. He expresses great faith in the church and is determined to carry on in the interest not alone of the work in Poland but at large. We wish Brother Stebel every success.

You cannot hold a grudge and a big job.—Church Management.

A Hymn Message for Ministry and Laity

By L. B. M.

"Tell them, let us all stand up for Jesus!" This was the dying message of Dudley A. Tyng in April, 1858, to his fellow clergymen.

Tyng was an enthusiastic worker for Christian fellowship. He was the leader of a great religious revival in the city of Philadelphia in the winter of 1857-58. A young Episcopalian clergyman, he looked toward a long life of service, but he preached against slavery when that was not a popular position to take, and for this he was forced to retire from the Rectorship of the Church of the Epiphany. Fellow ministers rallied to him, and he went out into the city. He preached in a public hall, and established the Church of the Covenant. In April, at the close of the revival, he went one day to his barn to attend to a mule that was treading a machine for shelling corn. His study gown caught in the wheel, and his neck and arm were so badly lacerated that he died six days later.

George Duffield, jr., was serving as a pastor in Philadelphia when this pathetic accident occurred. He attended a memorial service for Dudley Tyng at which a poem echoing the dying minister's message to his fellows, was read.

On the next Sunday Duffield preached to his congregation from Ephesians 6: 14: "Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness." At the close of his sermon he read the lines sung today by thousands of Christians the world over:

"Stand up! stand up for Jesus!
Ye soldiers of the cross;
Lift high his royal banner,
It must not suffer loss;
From victory unto victory
His army shall he lead,
Till every foe is vanquished,
And Christ is Lord indeed.

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus,
The trumpet call obey;
Forth to the mighty conflict
In this his glorious day:
Ye that are men now serve him
Against unnumbered foes;
Let courage rise with danger,
And strength to strength oppose.

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus,
Stand in his strength alone;
The arm of flesh will fail you,
Ye dare not trust your own;

Put on the gospel armor,
Each piece put on with prayer,
Where duty calls, or danger,
Be never wanting there.

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus,
The strife will not be long;
This day the noise of battle,
The next the victor's song:
To him that overcometh
A crown of life shall be;
He with the King of Glory
Shall reign eternally."

Duffield was born at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in 1818. He held pastorates in Brooklyn, New York; Bloomfield, New Jersey; Philadelphia; Adrian, Saginaw, and Lansing, Michigan. He was the author of many hymns. "Stand up, Stand up for Jesus" is the only hymn of his writing in our Saints' Hymnal, but another that is known and liked far and wide is "Blessed Savior, Thee I Love."

As I sing this hymn in the congregation of the Saints I like to think of the question of the Psalmist: "Who shall stand in his holy place?" and the answer he gives his own question: "He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully." (See Psalms 24: 3, 4.) Then there comes to mind the terse statement of Paul the great Apostle of Christianity: "By faith ye stand."

In Church

People do not greet each other in church, except at a wedding. At weddings people do speak to friends sitting near them, but in a low tone of voice. It would be shocking to enter a church and hear a babel of voices!

Ordinarily in church if a friend happens to catch your eye, you may perhaps smile, but never actually bow. If you go to a church not your own and a stranger offers you a seat in her pew, you should, on leaving, turn to her and say: "Thank you." But you do not greet any one until you are out on the church steps, when you naturally speak to your friends.—Emily Post in Etiquette.

Prayer is not conquering God's reluctance, but taking hold of God's willingness.—Phillips Brooks.

Auditorium Guides Make Friends

Friends are being made for the church and a good piece of missionary work is being done by Brother J. W. A. Bailey and his associates in the Guide's Office at the Auditorium. Their report indicates that they have distributed 4,000 pieces of literature, besides selling books and tracts, during the last ten months, and have given many lectures to groups of people from all over the country. Many who come simply to see the building are thus brought into contact with the church message. They would probably not hear of the church in any other way. The brethren have no fund to provide literature for this work except that received from donations. They make faithful use of everything received in this way. Some money has been received by mail as well as locally, for which they are grateful, and they give careful accounts of the receipt and use of all funds. Brother Bailey says: "I feel that the chief purpose of our work is to make friends for the church, and to give information concerning it."

Address Your Mail Correctly

Time is still lost and inconvenience suffered by correspondents who address their mail incorrectly.

All mail concerning money, subscriptions, purchases, or business should be addressed to the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

All mail for the Herald should be clearly addressed to The Editors, Saints' Herald, Independence, Missouri. Queries for "Question Time" may be specially marked for that department, and will be forwarded directly to Bishop A. B. Phillips for answer.

Mail for the juvenile publications should always be addressed to The Editor, Stepping Stones (or Zion's Hope, as the case may be) Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

If patrons will observe these rules, they will save the time and trouble involved in the mail being handled by the wrong department before reaching the right one.

Correction

Sister Inez Kinney, author of the article "The Seventh Gift of the Gospel" which appeared in the Herald of March 6, page 300, calls attention to an error occurring about the middle of the first column. The words "His mother and amaze" should read "What wonder and amaze." We regret this mistake which makes the sentence meaningless.

The Auditorium Ready for Conference

Preparations at the Auditorium for the General Conference on April 6 were begun earlier than usual this year, and visitors will notice a number of improvements. A new guard rail has been placed along each of the approaches to the north doors. The big lobby has been given a coat of paint that will make it lighter and more cheerful in appearance, and some decorative touches have been added. The upstairs hall where the business sessions will gather each afternoon has been receiving a thorough sweeping, chairs have been arranged, bunting decorations cover the big oval balcony, and the platform has been made ready for the tables and chairs of the presiding officers and their assistants. One is always happily surprised to see how much these touches improve the appearance which, without them, seems a bit bare. It shows how beautiful a room it may be when it is given its permanent fixtures and decorations.

Independence, too, is ready for its part in caring for conference visitors. The Housing Committee believe that there will be enough rooms in the homes of resident church members to go around, although offerings have been fewer this time than last, probably on account of families using closer quarters during the depression. Independence organizations of women and girls are ready to help at the Auditorium, so that one scarcely need to leave the building at all during the day. Meals, telephones, rest rooms, checking service, all are provided.

Visitors will be gladly welcomed. Old friends will be reunited, in many cases, after long absences. While friendship and visiting are not the main purposes of the conference, they are among the finer by-products of the great gathering. And many return to their homes with a stronger feeling of fellowship, appreciation for the work, and for the officers and people than they had before.

The Auditorium will be ready. It is simply waiting now for the delegates, visitors and friends to come in.

After considerable experience in coming into contact with wealthy and noted men, I have observed that those who have accomplished the greatest results are those who "keep under the body;" are those who never grow excited or lose self-control, but are always calm, self-possessed, patient, and polite. I think that President William McKinley was the best example of a man of this class that I have ever seen.—Booker T. Washington in Up From Slavery.

No race that has anything to contribute to the markets of the world is long in any degree ostracized.—Booker T. Washington.

Record of Historic Nauvoo Houses to Library of Congress

Four Chicago architects visited Nauvoo the first week of February, working on a CWA project, surveying houses of distinctive architecture. Among the edifices noted were the Wilford Woodruff house and the Mansion House. The architects were accompanied by an official photographer who took pictures of the houses from different angles. The house surveys in blueprint form, with descriptions and photographs, will be filed in the Library of Congress at Washington.

First Youth Convention at Sperry Highly Successful

Seven hundred attended the first young people's convention to be held at Sperry, Oklahoma, on Sunday, March 11, the closing day. Though facilities for holding so large a gathering are not many at Sperry, members and nonmembers alike opened up their homes to the visitors, showing fine hospitality. Community and church cooperation insured the success of the convention and its program. The town's board of education loaned the Saints the high school building for their meetings with light and heat free. President F. M. McDowell, Apostle R. S. Budd, and Mrs. Alma Adams, district chorister were guest speakers.

Notes From Here and There

Elder Lee Quick conducted a series of inspirational meetings at Houston, Texas, not long ago. His sermons had the old-time gospel ring.

John Jefferds, who was ninety-three years of age March 23, sent his birthday offering to the Bishop last week. Brother Jefferds was baptized into the church in 1882. He is a resident of the Soldiers' Home at Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Young people of Western Michigan District have joined the Christian Legion. They met at Cadillac, March 4, to organize.

The death of Sister Lucinda Marshall, wife of William D. Marshall, at Nauvoo, February 2, recalls the faith and works of this pair in pioneer days. They left Nauvoo in 1878, in a covered wagon to take up a homestead in Kansas. They returned in 1923, in a Buick touring car. Sister Marshall passed away a day after her fifty-eighth wedding anniversary.

R. T. Brown and Percy Farrow at Wabash, Ontario

The congregation at Wabash, Ontario, was grateful to have as speakers early this year Elders R. T. Brown, of Merlin, and Percy Farrow, of Sarnia. Elder Brown arrived the first of the year and preached for a week. He was followed by Brother Farrow who preached thirty-seven sermons, and baptized eight people.

Winner in First Graceland Broadcast

Mark J. Hutchinson, of Pisgah, Iowa, won the ten-dollar credit award for the first in the series of Graceland broadcasts, submitting the best summary of President G. N. Briggs' talk broadcast over KMBC.

Honorable mention was given to Lois Gibson, of Mount Washington, Missouri, Joy Harder, of Independence, Missouri, and Nadine Carr, of Garden Grove, Iowa.

Rich Hill Members Seek Working Knowledge

Monthly priesthood meetings at Rich Hill, Missouri, reflect the attitude of the membership to obtain a working knowledge of the church. They feel that they have splendid opportunities of moving Zionward.

Also, they are giving diligent attention to class work. Besides the regular church school classes, a group is studying themes from the Priesthood Manual each Sunday morning. Another class is held on Tuesday evening on "The Seven Laws of Teaching." Some of the workers are studying leadership and training in a series of lectures presented at the high school by three of the leading ministers of Rich Hill.

Nine of Ten Are Graceland Graduates

Nine of the ten young men whose names were approved for ordination at the Southern New England district conference, March 9-11, are Graceland graduates.

Five of these were ordained in an impressive service conference Sunday. Albert Fisher was ordained a priest by his father, Bishop M. C. Fisher; Mortimer Fisher, priest, by his father, Elder E. H. Fisher; Wallace Sinclair, priest, by his father, Doctor W. A. Sinclair; Havalin Jordan, deacon by his father, Elder Leon Jordan, and Sidney Thompson, priest.

Springfield Young People Entertain Adult Division

Springfield, Missouri.—The young people of the Springfield Branch entertained the adult division with a party and a genuine "get-together," with the purpose of establishing a closer union between the adult division and the young people's division. A program was given consisting of numbers by both young and old, followed by playing various games and singing pep songs and old familiar tunes in which everyone participated. Refreshments were served to seventy-five members.

We look forward to the help our conference visitors are going to bring us, and we are getting better organized to unite our forces for work, to the best of our wisdom and judgment and understanding of the gospel, and all work toward the same goal. We are going to join with those folk who are making steps to clear the church debt, for where there is unity, there is strength. And by enough prayer and faith; by enough effort and work, we can easily accomplish the task before us.

Financing the Home

How can a marriage that depends upon the installment plan for everything that must be purchased, ever have a happy ending? The automobile may look very nice on the wedding day, but it will perhaps be ready for the junk pile before its price is paid. We do not understand how any home can be a happy one, and how any marriage can be a real success, when begun on the debt-incurring plan. Would it not be far more sensible to defer the marriage until the one who is to become the house-band (husband) has proved his ability to become the head of a home by gathering together the necessary material things with which to start housekeeping? If a man cannot do this before he is married, how can any girl ever believe he will be able to do it after marriage? No matter how simple the furniture, and how humble the beginning, it would be far better to start married life with material things that have been paid for in full—including the marriage license. We believe that there is a very definite relationship between a carefully financed home and a happy one.

Marriage is an estate designed by our Maker for the human family, and rich blessings from Him attend it when it is entered into with proper caution and understanding, and when proper financial provisions have been made to begin a home. Better defer the marriage a bit, until you are in a position to start right, and thus be assured of a happy beginning of your life together, and a peaceful, happy home life day by day.—S. A. Ruskjer, in The Youth's Instructor.

A Prayer

To say a prayer is not to pray
Unless I mean the words I say;
Unless I think to whom I speak
And with my heart his blessing seek.

Then, let me, when I come to pray
Not only mind the words I say,
But let me seek with earnest care
To have my thoughts go with my prayer.

Recreation

By Joseph Smith (III)

"The object of amusement should be to instruct and improve as well as recreate. This taken as a guide, may keep us from permitting amusement to degenerate into the complete absorption of all the faculties of the mind and body, thereby, becoming a business to be followed as such, to the exclusion of that which is of more essential character.

"We would suggest to the minds of the Saints this truth: The surest way to keep the little ones with the larger youth at home, is to make that home to them a home indeed; the best, the brightest, the holiest and the happiest spot in all the wide earth; where all that is lovely, all that is good, all that is desirable may be allowed to concentrate; where the chief object kept in view by both father and mother with regard to the children is to make them better, wiser and holier. Everything then of a tendency to cultivate the mental and the physical would come under the observation of the parent, or guardian of the little ones. Too much carelessness has crept into our habits upon this subject, and that which is often uppermost in our minds is how to get rid of the trouble incident to the care of the children, and obvious duties are avoided altogether, or only half discharged, so that when our children left to themselves acquire those pernicious habits tending to death, we lift our hands in holy horror, and cry, Oh, the depravity of man! Oh, the instability of human hope! Oh, the ingratitude of our children, when the fault is more than half our own. We remember, . . .

"The minds of the young are easily impressed either for the good, or the evil, and first impressions, are oftentimes the hardest to efface, and if for evil, what a world of mischief is the result. It is also a well-implanted principle in the young to be impatient of restraint, and when positive law is laid down for their guidance, unless made conscious of its efficacy for their good, or given to understand that to command implies obedience, they are inclined to rebel. The necessity then is to be enforced by the resident power, by the exercise of physical restraint, or by moral culture.

"That there is need for an immediate and decided step in advance in this direction, among the Saints, none are so blind as to deny; therefore let us step forward, not to the rear, but abiding in the faith let us work cheerfully and manfully to place ourselves foremost among reformers, the place where we ought to be.

"Amusement, to be lawful in the sight of God, must be innocent, and of this nature are many that are tabooed among very sanctimonious people, who have had the life crushed out of them while young, and who seem to think that human nature requires to be contracted by the same narrow views. Care will be necessary in the selection to exclude those really obnoxious to the spirit of the work of the last days.

"They must also be instructive, calculated to develop some faculty of mind, or body, not brought into play by either close study, or labor. That they should be of an amusing character is a self-evident fact, else a part of the purposes of recreation is lost.

"To sum the matter up then in the limits of this article, we can only say: provide for your children, little ones and large ones; suitable, innocent and instructive amusements, making home the center of their joys; and by this means prevent them from seeking amusements in the streets first, and finally in the haunts of vice."

(By Joseph Smith, in "Advice to Parents," in the first Herald he edited, May 1, 1865, page 130. He confessed, "We cannot speak from experience concerning the bringing up of children, not having as yet attained to the years necessary to acquire such experience." But he had been requested to provide such instruction through the Herald.)

"Hear Ye Him"

An Easter Sermon
At Stone Church, Independence

By John F. Sheehy

A FEW YEARS AGO a world disarmament conference was held in the city of London and the King of England was to deliver a speech to be broadcasted. Definite time had been set up for a world hook-up for the King's message was to have the right-of-way. While thousands of people waited in America, a young mechanic—a man in his twenties—discovered a break in the line in one of the principal relaying stations just outside of the city of New York. There was no time to lose; there was no time for repairs. The tick of the clock—it was time the King was on the air and the young man caught the two wires in his hands and held them together. The current bent him double. It seared his flesh. He suffered agony; but he held on with a deathlike grip until the last word of the King's message had come and had been heard in all the sections of our land. A brave young man, devoted to the science of radio broadcasting, one who was working, not for what he could get but what he could give.

But I can tell you of one this morning who did far more than that for you and for me. There was an awful break between God and man. There was but one who could fill the gap. That one was Jesus. Every bit and every whit a hero, he stretched himself out upon the cross to make the connection between God and man. The fact that he did this was the only thing that has enabled you and me to hear the message of the King of kings as it comes from heaven, for "God so loved the World that he gave his only Begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him might have life."

Then, again, it was Jesus who said: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Immediately upon saying those words he turned to his disciples—it was just a few hours before the crucifixion. They were uttered during the last week of his life, when he well knew that death and the cross were just a few hours away from him. And then he turned to his disciples and said to them, "Henceforth I call you no more servants, but friends."

I once visited a paper mill in the little town of Kennebunc in Maine, and I saw colored rags from all over the State. Girls were at work carefully sorting out these rags, throwing them off into piles; and I said to the superintendent who was showing me through, "Why all this waste of time and money? Why not take these rags as they come in and throw them into this great vat of chemicals and let it go at that? This is so insanitary, these rags are so unclean; why do you waste your time on these dirty old rags?" And he answered "We aren't concerned about the rags as to whether they are cotton or silk or woolen; but we are very much concerned as to whether or not there is any color of red in the rags.

Every piece of rag that has any red is thrown out to one side. The chemist has found a way to bleach all the black and blue and green and all other colors of cloth so they can be made into paper as white as snow." Then he turned to me and said, "Would you like to make a fortune?" Well, who wouldn't? He said, "Here is one way in which you can make a name for yourself and a fortune: If you can discover some means of bleaching red rags or any rags with the color of red so that we can take the red out and make beautiful white paper, you will have made a name for yourself, for to this very day no man has discovered any means whereby the red can be removed. So all the rags that contain any taint of red or crimson or scarlet in them are thrown aside to be used in the making of other than white paper."

So, only God could discover a process to remove the red stain of sin, the most costly the world has ever known. Oh, at what a price! You can take your bulletin now and turn with me to the price that was paid in this discovery of God to remove the red stain of sin from the world and from the lives of men. "The Garden, the judgment hall, the crown of thorns, the cross, the tomb." They caused pain of mind and body; they caused sorrow as well as suffering. Each one has its own particular story to tell: The Garden which was a place of prayer, is swiftly, suddenly turned into a place of betrayal. The Garden, where Jesus with his disciples would spend a few hours in worship; and though they had fallen asleep, he still communed with God. Now this sacred place has been invaded by the howling mob, thirsting for his blood; and Judas leads the mob, and it is the place of betrayal.

JOHN F. SHEEHY
Pastor, Independence, Missouri

The crown of thorns! What mockery! King of the Jews? And so they crowned him as such with a crown of thorns that pierced his brow and commenced the agony of physical pain.

The judgment hall of Pilate! Was ever a man called upon to endure such humiliation? There wasn't anything to be said, and so He opened not His mouth, deeply humiliated. They stripped him of his clothing; they put upon him a robe, a royal robe, and for the symbol of power and authority and kingship they put a reed in his hand; and they mocked him. Instead of bowing in reverence and respect, they smote him, they spat upon him! The judgment hall of Pilate; the crown of thorns; the mockery and humiliation. It is the Son of God.

Then came the cross, death, the tomb.

WE commemorate the day of crucifixion with our Good Friday, and we have gone far with our commemoration of the resurrection; but the day between is the day of death, the day of silence in the tomb, and we go madly rushing on in our preparation for Easter. No time was spent in silent, reverent meditation to commemorate the day of sorrow and gloom that spread over the world. The day of death!

Then came the dawn, and with the dawn the resurrection. It was the beginning of a new week. It gave new meaning and vision to all the events of the last week: the garden, the cross, the tomb became beautiful symbols to help us to understand the meaning and the purpose of the resurrection, of the crucifixion.

In the garden, Jesus said to God, "Thy will be done." They made him wear the crown of thorns, to stand alone before Pilate, to die on the cross. "Thy will, O God, not mine, be done." Why? Because God so loved the world.

EASTER MORNING, and Jesus stood before Mary—the immortal, glorified Jesus; the evidences of the great suffering he endured were seen in the scars in his hands and in his feet and in his side. Alone he bore it—all alone. He gave himself; he suffered, bled, and died, alone. It required the cross. The process of removing the red stain of sin was unfinished without the cross.

I remember reading some time ago that back in the days of the Renaissance, when the great protest movement against the predominate religion of the day was sweeping over the world, how men were breaking away from the rituals and the customs and the traditions. Ah, they went too far. They lost the wonderful sacred, saintly vision of the beautiful symbols of the religion of Jesus. One man was burned at the stake because he refused to bow and kiss the cross, and he said, "I would rather worship him who died on the cross, than the cross on which he died." Noble words coming from a noble soul, but coming from a soul that was so filled with protest that he failed to see the place of this beautiful symbol in the religion of his Redeemer. It stands symbolic of the supreme love of Jesus Christ for the world. Without the cross, there is no resurrection, for without the crucifixion the price that God discovered would have to be paid never could have been paid.

You can see strange things in a little building at Evansburg, Pennsylvania, and many go through this building every day, a little historical museum, one of the State buildings of Pennsylvania. In a glass case there are exhibited all of the ropes that have been used in hanging convicts. What a gruesome sight it must be to have the sheriff point out to you the rope that hanged some famous criminal of the state, and say, "This was the rope that broke his neck. "And the sheriff says that many people shrink away from this case. They have no desire to see these instruments of death and torture.

BUT it is not so with the cross. We turn to the cross. It has become sacred to us and a part of our religion. A new hymn has been written. Part of the ministry of Jesus is told in this hymn. I will read it. Notice how rightly they have named it. The title of the hymn is "Borrowed":

"They borrowed a bed to lay his head
When Christ, the Lord, came down;
They borrowed the ass in the mountain pass
For Him to ride to town.

"He borrowed the bread when the crowd he fed
On the grassy mountain side;
He borrowed the dish of broken fish
With which he satisfied.

"He borrowed the ship in which to sit
To teach the multitude;
He borrowed the nest in which to rest:
He had never a home so rude.

"He borrowed a room on the way to the tomb
The Passover lamb to eat.
They borrowed the cave for him a grave;
They borrowed a winding sheet."

Let me call your attention again to the Scripture reading of this morning. Standing before Pilate was Jesus the Son of God; and standing before Pilate was Barrabas, the convict, the murderer, already tried and found guilty and condemned to death, death on the cross, the capital punishment of the day. But it was the custom to release one of the prisoners at this

The Financial Obligation of Youth to the Church

By Ammon Andes

Warrensburg, Missouri

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments."

THUS Christ taught us that in order to become citizens in his kingdom we have certain duties to perform. Christ's mission was one of love, to lay the foundation of the kingdom toward whose building we have pledged our services. At the time of Christ's birth and mission on earth, he found the leaders of his "chosen people" keeping and stressing certain points of his law, but forgetting other points of equal or greater importance. They kept the law of tithes and offerings, sacrifices, etc. quite stringently but forgot to exercise love and its fruits. True giving must be done with love and the right intent of the heart. The Christ condemned these men because of their wicked hearts and said, "These things ye ought to have done but not to have left the other things undone." Christ's mission was one of love, to lead men through a change of heart. Yet, though he stressed his message of love, he said, "If ye love me keep my commandments;" he never excepted any of God's gospel principles.

Perhaps we of this age are inclined to go to the other extreme of thinking, to think only of the building of good moral characters with the love of God and our fellow men uppermost in our hearts, forgetting the financial side of our obligation to our God which should be operated through our church. Certainly, we must build on love, and by the uplifting of character, but if we have the love of God in our hearts we will be willing to keep his commandments concerning our financial obligation to the church.

"Property must not be regarded as an earthly treasure but should be recognized as a heavenly trust," for we are told that, "Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property." Thus God in his infinite wisdom placed us here to work out our own soul's salvation, and gave us earthly possessions that we might live. But he intends that we shall worship him and recognize the fact that everything we have belongs to him, "Every good and perfect gift cometh from God, the Father of light." Saint John writes, "Without him was not made anything that was made." Thus we cannot truly worship him without recognizing the law of stewardship as found in the Doctrine and Covenants.

If we, as young people, wish to fulfill our duty to the church, which is the same as the duty of any other member of the church, we must become God's stewards. But by becoming stewards we have something to do other than merely keeping the "Golden Rule" and admitting that God created all and hence owns all. If we are to redeem Zion there are certain steps that we must take. We are told in these latter days to, "Remember the poor, consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which cannot be broken. And inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me; and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors. . . . And it shall come to pass that after they are laid before the bishop of my church, and after that he has received these testimonies concerning the consecration of the properties of my church, that they cannot be taken from the church agreeable to my commandments; every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property." We should thus make out applications for stewardship with God, through the church, and have our names on its records as consecrated stewards.

In order to qualify as a recognized steward there are certain of God's laws as given in his gospel that we must obey. We must live a life that is good and useful, so that we may be recommended by our branch and stake officers; we must consecrate of our properties unto the church, all of it if God says so, pay our tithes and offerings, pledge all our surplus to the church, and agree that all consecrated property that we hold belongs to the church and cannot be taken away by us in case we sin or are severed, or wish to sever ourselves from the church. It is a pledge to God to keep his financial law which is none other than our true obligation to him because, "The tithe and surplus is not a question of alms giving—it is a question of ownership—yours or God's.

We should be willing to pledge as did Abraham and Jacob, "And of all that thou giveth me, I will surely give a tenth." We need not fear that our tithes which we give to the church will not be recognized by God or that they will be misused. If we do our part by giving, God is able to take care of the rest. Christ told his disciples, and again we are told in latter-day revelation, "He that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer." God is just and there is wisdom in his principle that requires us to give the (Continued on page 403.)

The White Masque Players

By Alice M. Burgess

A dozen years ago a group of Independence folk met to formulate a very simple basis of organization. "As a group of people interested in dramatics," they stated, "we wish to be known as White Masque Players. The organization will be subject to the advice and suggestions of the proper church authorities." Thus began the organization that has made some remarkable history during the past decade. Conference visitors will remember this club as the group responsible for a number of General Conference productions: in 1923, the pageant Revelation; in 1925, The Fool, by Channing Pollock; in 1928, The Glory of 1830; in 1930 the big pageant, Fulfillment.

Though the ideals of service and of artistic achievement were set very high by the founders of this club, a glimpse into the achievements of the passing years would stimulate rather than discourage such idealism. The club has accumulated costumes, properties, sets, lights, and make-up which have been used by all the churches in Zion. Even community enterprises have, at a low rental, drawn upon this store of dramatic equipment which at one time amounted to several hundreds of dollars in value. Though of late, because of inability in these depression years to replace broken, worn, or lost articles, the number and the value of these supplies has diminished; yet most of our own religious dramatic productions still rely upon White Masque assistance in costuming, lighting, setting, and directing.

The Pastor in Zion is an honorary member of the club and this year the club reaffirmed the statement of 1922, expressing desire for direction from the proper church authorities.

This winter, at the Stone Church, three Sunday evenings of religious drama have been provided by the club. These services have each been centered about a one act religious drama, with music and a fifteen minute inspirational talk, both leading to the play as a climax. Two of these dramas Why the Chimes Rang, and Dust of the Road, will be reproduced in April for the entertainment of General Conference visitors.

Though White Masque Players are proud of past records, they still have many unrealized ideals, projects which had a definite place in the vision of the founders of the club. Some of these are: the organization of a permanent junior dramatic club in Zion which shall act as a feeder to the senior club; the organization of church-wide dramatic clubs which may develop a circulating supply of producible plays, valuable costumes, lights and sets; and the production on the radio of church history and scriptural drama.

It is their hope that White Masque Players may continue to grow in grace and in service to the church as a whole as well as to Zion.

The Railroad a Safe Means of Travel

There has been no let up in the campaign of the western railroads to protect passengers.

This is indicated in an announcement issued yesterday by the safety department of the Milwaukee Road in which it points out that the year 1933 has been added to the list in which no passenger was fatally injured as a result of an accident involving its trains.

In the past 16 years only one passenger was fatally injured in a train accident on the Milwaukee Road although during that period more than 157 million passengers were carried, their journeys totaling over 10 billion miles, according to the announcement. The road operates more than 11,000 miles of railroad in 12 western states.

Complete figures for 1933 are not as yet available but in 1932 on all the railroads of the United States only one passenger was fatally injured as a result of collisions or derailments and 27 passengers were fatally injured getting on or off or being struck by trains. In motor vehicle accidents approximately 30,000 persons were killed in the same year, according to the National Safety Council, while civil aviation accidents were responsible for the death of 158 passengers.

When it is considered that passenger trains carry an average of 40 to 50 persons while automobiles ordinarily carry but two or three the contrasting figures have added significance.

Eternal vigilance brought about the railroad's safety record, according to J. T. Gillick, vice president of the Milwaukee Road.

"Although quick to avail themselves of modern safety devices and appliances the railroads, because of the nature of the work, must depend almost entirely upon safe practices being followed by their employees. The record is a tribute to every employee and evidence of the effective work being done by our safety department," Mr. Gillick said.

A constant educational campaign is conducted by trained supervisors on all sections of the railroad to train employees in safe methods. Each mishap is investigated to prevent recurrence. Injuries to railroad employees are decreasing, according to the announcement.

"Many a man grows hair waiting for a chance which some other fellow has gone out and grabbed."

Curious Sensations

"But, Larry! I wish you knew how I feel! It's the queerest sensation! A sort of hollow, roll-around-until-you-hit-something feeling right in the pit of my tummy! I can hardly eat because of it!" The two girls were bending over the bed on which lay the newest addition to Sallie Ruth's "trip to Europe wardrobe," as they jokingly spoke of her new clothes. This was Mrs. Keithley's bon voyage gift, a dove-colored suit with a blouse of Chinese blue crepe embroidered with bright red, jade green and gold. Sallie Ruth touched them lovingly. After a breathless moment: "Isn't it wonderful?"

"What, the tummy ache or the suit?" Larry's voice sounded much more matter-of-fact than she felt. She was imagining herself in the younger girl's place, about to leave for New York, soon to see the Goddess of Liberty fade away in the smoke and land mists. She did not blame Sallie Ruth for having the "queerest sensation." Almost she wished it were she going after all. Mrs. Keithley was being very considerate of the girl whom she chose to term her protegee rather than her companion and secretary.

"Silly! the suit, of course. I think it's too wonderful to be true for Mrs. Keithley to get my clothes and take the money out of my salary later on. Isn't she peachy, Larry?" But before Larry could reply, she rushed on: "Oh, Larry, I'm just too happy and too scared for words! And so grateful to you!" tempestuously she flung her arms about the other's neck and covered her face with kisses. "—I think I'm the luckiest girl in the world, just when I was about to decide I was the unluckiest!"

This was to be their last evening alone, just Carmen, Sallie Ruth, and Larry. Tomorrow Mrs. Blaine would be home, and in less than a week, Sallie Ruth would leave Independence with Mrs. Keithley on their way East. When Mrs. Blaine had been appraised of her younger daughter's plans after a council held in Eldred Hampton's living room, she had promptly declared her intentions of returning home to look into the matter.

The girls' plans for the evening were necessarily quiet and private. They were going to have dinner, Sallie Ruth's last culinary flourish, and spend the rest of the time sewing, talking, and listening to the radio.

That afternoon Sallie Ruth had been excused from school, and Larry had left the office in order that with Doc and Eldred they might attend Mr. Harvey Peterson's funeral.

It had been a small funeral, very simple of program, music and a brief sermon. And the girls had been surprised at the amount and beauty of the flowers banked about the casket.

Mr. Peterson had no relatives other than his cousin and partner, and so Doc and Eldred and the girls sat with Mr. Horace Peterson. Solemnly then, when the service was over, they bore the body to the grave, and as if in good omen, the sun shone brightly upon the group gathered at the graveside as the preacher voiced the prayer of farewell.

"Didn't he look peaceful?" Sallie Ruth's whisper was awe-struck. Then louder: "He looked as if—well, as if he were expecting something." They were driving home from the cemetery.

"There," Eldred Hampton spoke from the front seat, "you put the words in my mouth, Sallie Ruth. I've been trying to think how to express it. He did look as if he expected something."

"Sort of as if he were in a calm sleep about to waken to eternal things," put in Doc.

"I wonder if he has found what he expected yet, if he has found his Lois of twenty years ago," mused Larry. "Does it sound horrible to say this?—Somehow I feel that while his death was a great shock to all of us, it was a joyous passing. He didn't suffer, and you said, Mother Eldred, that he's wanted to go for years."

"He was a blunt, rough fellow, shrewd in his business," observed Doc; "but he was good as gold. He was a man of his word, a loyal fellow. How he must have loved that wife of his!" The man's tone was intense. Larry noticed the quick glance Eldred Hampton flung at him.

"I imagine Mr. Horace Peterson will miss him more than any of us are aware," Eldred said after a moment. "The two of them were always together. Won't it seem odd just to have one with us now, and not to have to call him Mr. Horace Peterson to let him know we're speaking to him?"

"I'll bet we do," returned Doc. "Do you suppose Mr. Horace Peterson—see, there I go—will conduct his business alone?" And then the two in the front seat were discussing business matters.

Left alone to her thoughts, Larry settled back into the corner of the car to reflect on the funeral. She was glad they had flowers at funerals—the symbolism was so beautiful. She was happy that she had gone to the show with Mr. Harvey Peterson that evening weeks ago;

now she could appreciate something of the fineness of him, his sensitiveness, his loyalty, his love. "I wonder," she pondered to herself; "I wonder if he has met her yet—and if things are still the same; if they still love each other. I wonder if somewhere out beyond the sunset they have joined hands never to be parted again."

Carmen was working late this week, and Larry and Sallie Ruth were waiting dinner for her. When Larry had arrived, the young cook and housekeeper was just finishing setting the table. She had used the daintiest family doilies. The candlesticks that were a part of Carmen's hope chest treasures held tapering white candles in place. Flowers Jeff had sent, formed a centerpiece—he had sent Sallie Ruth a great many flowers recently.

On the menu in addition to Sallie Ruth's own concoction of clam chowder were scalloped potatoes, Carmen's favorite fruit salad, and the dessert was to be generous slices of angel food cake smothered with whipped cream. That was the first angel food cake the girl had baked, but it was a tremendous success.

Everything was finished in the kitchen and dining room, and all there was left to do until Carmen arrived, was to keep the victuals warm. The two drifted into the bedroom and began a thorough inspection of Sallie Ruth's wardrobe. Meanwhile, they were exchanging confidences.

After considering the wisdom of it for several days, Larry had decided to tell Sallie Ruth the information she had won from Rowe McCarley concerning Bill Heckel. It would be a good thing for the girl to know what she had escaped. And now she was relating that part of her talk with Rowe which determined the identity of Bill Heckel, alias Tom Johnson.

"I was such an idiot!" choked Sallie Ruth, "and you didn't tell Rowe anything about me?" wonderingly.

"I had promised you that I wouldn't," simply.

"Larry, darling, you're a wonder! I think Mrs. Keithley is nice, but you're ten times nicer! And I'm so grateful! I hope I can do something for you sometime!" She went to the closet to bring out more dresses. "Carmen thinks you're wonderful, too. Do you know it's funny how I used to watch you and envy you, Larry," the blue eyes were frankly reminiscent. "I've watched you and Greg go away so many times, and even before I knew you, I used to think you were lovely."

"Don't—don't," blushed Larry; "honestly, you'll make me conceited. I'm not wonderful—I'm not lovely. I'm just me." Then she turned her attention to the dresses: "How—pretty!" she was holding in her hands a fragile tea gown of sea blue.

"Isn't it?" agreed Sallie Ruth; "I just get lost in superlatives when it comes to my new clothes. The only thing is I hate to begin wearing them for fear I'll wear them out." She laughed.

On the bed were strewn sports sweaters, white and blue flannel skirts, a demure gray crepe frock. But most gorgeous of all was the ivory satin evening gown, simply and cunningly cut, and having a deep yoke of cream-colored lace.

"Funny thing, you and Carmen and Mrs. Keithley are alike. She insisted on this dress. Told me I could give my black net to Carmen, that young girls looked better in white, that black was too sophisticated for them."

Larry nodded approvingly. How happy the child looked! Well, this was a gala time for her with farewell parties from her schoolmates, gifts from everyone, Mrs. Keithley's tasteful selection of her wardrobe, and the prospect of seeing the world soon! She had many reasons for being happy, reasons that even her mother could not change. Larry did hope that nothing would happen to dampen her joy; that her mother would do nothing. If there was a shred of nobility in Mrs. Blaine's make-up, Larry prayed that it would be apparent now.

Dinner was awaiting Carmen in the kitchen. The radio was tuned down to just the right musical tone, and the only electric light burning in the apartment was that in the floor lamp of the living room. Larry and Sallie Ruth after having put the wardrobe away were sitting on the couch together.

"Do you know," Sallie Ruth hesitated a moment and patted Larry's hand with a swift impulsive movement, "you've done so much for us, Larry, that the Blaine family will never know how to express its appreciation, but—" she seemed about to stop.

"Yes," encouraged the other.

"—there's one more thing I wish you'd do. I wish you'd look after Carmen a little."

"Now don't you worry about Carmen. She has many friends. John and Eldred and Doc would all give their little fingers for her if it were necessary."

"But I want you to keep an eye on her, too, Larry. With mother here Carmen's apt to hide herself in a sort of rut. You're the best one to keep her out of it."

"Well, of course, I'll be thinking after Carmen's interests—she's a friend of mine, you know." How trite the statement sounded. "She's helped me a lot." Larry felt that she always stumbled when she tried to express the extent of her feelings. She found it impossible now to tell this stunning little creature before her just how much Carmen did mean in her life.

And then the third of their party arrived. How pretty she was tonight in that vivid orange blouse and tan suit! On her head she wore a straw hat with a tiny brim and a single brown ribbon. Her necklace, pocketbook, and shoes all matched the exact shade of that ribbon. Carmen was like that; she was tasteful in the details of her dress.

"Just saw Eldred in the hall," she spoke to Larry, for Sallie Ruth had fled to the kitchen to dish up the dinner, "and she said they missed you downstairs at dinner. She may drop in on us later. Isn't it just my luck to have to work late these days when Sallie's having such heart-throbs over her trip?"

"But look what you come home to," laughed Larry, then she lowered her voice meaningly: "Sallie Ruth's worked awfully hard to make things nice tonight."

The other girl nodded quickly. There was rare understanding between those two. Sometimes words were unnecessary between them. This particular nod meant that Carmen had already noticed the care with which her little sister had planned the evening, and she would be sure to say something appreciative.

"Aren't they lovely? I'm so glad Mrs. Keithley supervised the choice of the clothes. She's been so generous with Sallie, and I don't believe anything Mamma says or does will make the least difference with her. I was talking with her about it last night, and she is very pleased with the arrangements."

"Gee, just think what I'll be doing a week from tonight!" breathed Sallie Ruth as she balanced a spoonful of chowder at a precarious angle; "only a week from tonight I'll be in New York!"

"It's going to be super-wonderful for you, my child—I simply run out of words to express myself when I think of that trip," declared Larry.

"There's one thing I can't understand, Larry—"

"Only one? You're fortunate."

"Now, don't tease; I was serious."

"No! Well, then I will be serious, but before you floor us with questions or prognosticate our futures, permit me to observe, Miss Blaine, that the chowder is excellent."

"Tastes just like the seaside," chimed in Carmen.

"How many seashores have you ever gnawed on?" giggled Sallie Ruth.

"Now who's being silly?" from Larry. "But what was that you didn't understand?"

"Why did you let that little dinky job of yours at Shooley's keep you from going with Mrs. Keithley? This was a perfectly grand chance for you, and she really wanted you." The questioner's eyes were grave.

"Well, I—I—" stammered Larry.

"That's a pretty pressing and inquisitive question, Sallie Ruth," broke in Carmen. "Larry may have reasons of her own in turning down such an opportunity, reasons which she does not care to tell."

"But, gee, I tell her everything!" protested the girl. "Why can't she tell me just that?"

"A hostess always talks of unembarassing subjects," reproved Carmen, ignoring the question.

Shortly after that they were deep in a discussion of the itinerary the travelers were to follow—Liverpool, London, and as soon as business would permit, to France. They would land in Calais, of course, then go to Amiens and Paris. Probably then they would migrate to Geneva, Switzerland, for the summer. Sallie Ruth could scarcely suppress her eagerness to see Switzerland.

"Is there anything I can do for you Larry, when I'm abroad?" Sallie Ruth feigned importance.

"A thousand," grinned Larry; "take a camera along and get some pictures of a few old English castles, really old ones now mind you, and send them to me. I'd like a stamp collection, too, from all the countries you visit, and a little doll dressed in the costumes of French, Swiss and Italian peasants. From Paris you might send me the Eiffel Tower in miniature, and from Switzerland, I'd like a pair of skis, please—"

"Larry, you can be the silliest when you try!"

"But seriously, my child, and above all other things, I want you to take care of yourself. Do what Mrs. Keithley tells you, and don't go tumbling in love with some young foreigner who is after American money but has no scruples about taking a pretty American girl with it. I'm going to ask Mrs. Keithley to keep an eye—"

"That won't be necessary. Henceforth and forever, Larry, I'm going to be hard-hearted. I've had my experience. I don't care about men—"

"Not any more than a mouse does for cheese," solemnly put in Larry.

"Your parallel is fine," agreed Sallie Ruth, "for I think some men aren't anything but great big cheeses."

"Don't be foolish, dear," remonstrated Carmen.

"No, remember that your sister doesn't approve of this man versus the woman stuff," teased Larry.

"I think it's unnecessary," declared Carmen a little warmly. "I think it's discussions of that kind for which we are going to have to account someday as 'idle words' that revelation warns us against. Men not always have so many important things to do together that they should not always be bickering as to which sex is cleverer or more beautiful. They weren't constructed in the first place to be rivals. Each is supreme in his or her sphere. They are complete."

Sunday 31st, gave lectures one and two morning and evening. Dinner at Hy Kemps. After evening services held prayer and testimony meeting till 12, then knelt in silent prayer while the Old Year passed away and the New Year dawned for us.

1877

January 1st—Spent with friends, conversing and singing good old English tunes, as many English were there. From the 2nd, through Sunday 14th, I gave the fifteen lectures. Usually large audiences, but, it being from eight to ten degrees below, two or three nights smaller ones. Thursday 11—Bro. Norman W. Smith came and we have spent most of the time while he is here on music. Monday, January 15th, at evening had a Sunday school sociable. Not many out but for such a fearful stormy night it was well attended. Snow was waist deep in many places and the cold cutting. Wednesday good prayer meeting and many out. Thursday, Saints held a surprise party on us, bringing many useful and needed things for our sustenance. Also brought food to be served that evening. They gave a box in which when I opened it, was found $13. We were greatly affected at their generosity and I could hardly express myself, but asked our heavenly Father to bless them all. January 19th—Accompanied by Ruby and Sister Ella Mott went to Barney and to Bro. Jamisons, where I held forth four times. Took cold and was very sick. Wife nursed me but I was confined to my bed till Friday when I was much better. . . .

Remained home until Saturday, February 3rd, when I left for St. Joseph. Met Bro. Burlington and Bro. Robert Winning. Sunday 4th—Attended Saints hall and delivered my first two of a series of twelve lectures. Monday, February 5th—Bro. J. F. Kinnemon and I spent some time on musical matters, trying tunes written and selected for the new hymn book. Tuesday delivered lecture number three. Wednesday and Thursday music during day. In going to meeting, as it had rained last night and today, roads and streets very bad. I fell down in the mud. Looked a sorry subject for public scrutiny but still had good liberty. Friday delivered lecture number five; good audience and excellent liberty. Saturday evening practiced with Saints and friends music for tomorrow. Sunday 11th—Morning lectured, afternoon sacrament and at evening lecture number seven. God's Spirit was present. Tuesday 13th—Gave a lecture on "Eternal Judgment." Day in music. Thursday again spoke to a good crowd with excellent light. Friday evening number ten, which was much disturbed by a Spiritualist meeting in the next room. Sunday 18th—Wife came. Attended meetings and gave lectures number eleven and twelve on the Book of Mormon. Large audiences and wonderful and enlightening liberty. Monday 19th—Wife and I took evening train to Stewartsville. Spent day in music. Preached to large congregation with good liberty. Home at Bro. Kinnemon's. Wednesday spoke on "Moral Agency"; fine spirit. Thursday 22nd—Spent day in music. Evening small crowd and only fair liberty. Rained all day. Friday 23rd, Congregation poor, roads bad, weather cold, so preached with poor liberty. Sunday 25th, held meetings in the Union Church and talked on the Book of Mormon, giving scriptural evidences. Fair liberty in the morning and splendid at night. Bro. Kinnemon drove us to Stewartsville where wife took train for Kansas City and I for Brevier. . . .

I that still pray at morning and at eve
Thrice in my life have truly prayed,
Thrice stirred below my conscious self, have felt
That perfect disenchantment which is God.

Notice of Proposed Action on General Conference Resolutions

A Communication From the First Presidency
By Frederick M. Smith

The compilation of General Conference Resolutions at present issued by the church contain many actions having relation to local or temporary conditions or which have become obsolete through the passage of time or changed practice or by the enactment of fresh legislation. It also includes a number of resolutions defining mission and district boundary lines which the conference of 1930 provided shall henceforth be determined by administrative action. The conference has already instructed that further compilations of conference resolutions shall be prepared with the idea of guidance in conference and branch legislation and administration. The Presidency now therefore gives notice of intention to request the General Conference of 1934 to authorize elimination of resolutions listed in the following groups:

1. Resolutions covered in subsequent revelation.
2. Resolutions changed by subsequent enactment.
3. Resolutions dealing with district and mission boundaries.
4. Resolutions of a temporary nature or the provisions of which have been fulfilled.
5. Resolutions having become obsolete with the passage of time or changed practice.
6. Resolutions of historical interest only.

Resolutions affected by our first recommendation are listed here together with the revelations concerning them:

Lesson Two—April 8

The Prophecy of the Government

At the time of this writing the whole political arena is in a state of ominous turmoil. Austrian wounds are bleeding. Russia and Japan are growling at each other with veiled threats. In the United States of America "dictatorship" is a specter to those whose political and financial dominance is jeopardized by current governmental trends. Wherever we look, there is dissatisfaction and discontent with governmental situations in their bearings upon economic concerns. Government is in a mess.

This is the age in which, for the first time in the history of the race, all the peoples of all the world are distressed by a miscarriage of governmental function. Don't overlook this fact because it has meaning. Prophecy says this is the day of the Government. The last three centuries are The Age of experiment in government. No such cataclysmic changes in governmental institutions ever took place before. Review this overturning briefly, for it is a significant fact. Human necessity points to The Government.

Industry is abortive because governmental institutions do not match the economic aims of the race. That is the reason Uncle Sam is making a desperate effort to reshape his public policies and to set up new governmental machinery with new political powers. Somehow, if "civilization" is to be saved, governmental institutions must be reconstructed to match the world's economic aims.

This is the need of the world: a politico-industrial set-up adapted to the common aims of all peoples. It is The Government which is the theme of prophecy. And, therefore, in judging whether or not "The Kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ," we must apply this test: viz. Does the Zionite set-up match this need?

WHAT GOVERNMENT IS

Government is the authoritative administration of the affairs of peoples; i. e., of the whole body of persons who live together in communities. It is the control, direction, and restraint exercised over men in association. The essence of government is (a) Law, (b) Order, and (c) Office. Law is a rule of behavior. Order is the conduct of affairs in accordance with law. And office is the right or power to regulate or administer the affairs of society in accordance with law. Government is the whole body of people in action working out their common or public purposes. It is not a group of citrus fruit growers, or whatnot, with their business associations for improving their private lots within the community. It is not the kind of thing certain Latter Day Saints have planned here and there when they have talked of redeeming Zion.

Government is the management of the affairs of the body politic. It is the business of peoples—i. e., of the whole mass of persons who live together within a given area and who have set up some mode of self-government. It is the instrument of the moral will of all the people acting as a body. That is government. And that is the kind of thing the prophets said "shall be upon His shoulder."

RELIGION AND GOVERNMENT

What do religious peoples as such have to do with government? Not ecclesiastical government, which need not concern itself with territorial or economic questions at all, but with civil government—the kind of government that yields peace because it eradicates the causes of warfare and strife.

In what manner, then, are whole bodies of church peoples destined to concern themselves with government? Is this the mission of church peoples, viz. to inspire its men individually to enter "politics" for the purpose of exerting their personal influences there? That church men should do this as citizens of the State, perhaps few will deny. But is this the kind of thing the prophecy of The Kingdom is about? Is this the manner in which Zion, the Economic Commonwealth, is to be established by the peoples of the church?

Look at the prophecy of the Government again. This "child" is to be a political leader. "The Government shall be upon his shoulder." "To order it and to establish it with judgment and with justice." And "the zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." This government is to be an adventure by a religiously motivated group. It is to be God's Government. It is to be set up by his people, under the leadership of his Son. This is something more than the mere personal presence of church men discharging their duties in political circles as citizens of the State. It is to be a distinct, specialized, and partly separate adventure in governmental institutions by church peoples.

WHY THE CALL OF THE CHURCH IS MISUNDERSTOOD

Because the time of Christianity's adventure in government was set for the last days, the peoples of the church have come to believe that the sole task of the church is to influence personal behavior—to win men to good intentions, patience, generosity, and the like. And they have expected personal goodness to make up for social badness. But now we are beginning to see what the prophets were talking about. There is more to do than to be well-intentioned, etc. Men are to be set in right relations as members of society. And the people's of the church are to set the pace for the right ordering of human relations. That is the meaning of Isaiah's prophecy of the Government.

It is true that wrong social situations would disappear if men individually were morally right. But that is to say that the test of the righteousness of the men of the church is their interest in the manner in which the affairs of the community are governed "Seek ye first the Kingdom" gives us a rule by which to measure our love of God.

THE FINANCIAL LAW

A law is an obligatory rule of action. It is a rule prescribed by authority. We speak now of law in relation to government. The true financial laws of the Church are those rules which have to do with the government of the temporal affairs of the church. The bearings of these laws are economic. They have to do with property "rights."

THE GOVERNMENT IN RELATION TO PEACE

Peace comes only because the conditions of peace have been fulfilled. Peace will not come to Zion as an accident. It is not a gift from another: it is the fruit of Zion's behavior. God will not bestow peace upon Zion arbitrarily. Peace can come to Zion, as it can come to the world, only as the natural outcome or effect of godly government. If the peoples of the Church never order and establish their government in the righteousness of the kingdom they shall never have peace.

Zion shall be at peace (1) because the rights and obligations of men under her code are the essence of justice; (2) Because these relations are the incarnation of good will; (3) because this code gives men a sense of security; and (4) because the efficiency of Zion's economic organization enables each, by his own industry, to rise to his own standard of living.

A PERPLEXING PROBLEM

We need only to attend a few open forums in which the problem of government is discussed to be convinced that it is perplexing. To shape governmental institutions to such aims as the Church has—which are spiritual and moral as well as economic—is a task which thus far we have not proved ourselves competent to accomplish. Besides the problem of shaping a polity which matches purely economic aims, there is still the problem of the attitudes and capabilities of governmental officials to deal with. And there are those in the Church who say that this is the one great obstacle to the redemption of Zion. They believe that the hierarchy are so incompetent and so untrustworthy in economic situations that the mass of men would be tyrannized by them if, in this stage of personal development, we should attempt to set up the Kingdom mode of government.

If that be true, it means that the day of Zion's redemption is still somewhat in the future. But we wish to remind those who entertain these fears that personal motives which operate under the present set-up will not operate under the Kingdom mode of government. And men who fall short of our expectations might easily make good under the new set-up. If that be true, then we should have no trouble in understanding the meaning of "The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this."

NEW GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS

The NIRA of 1933 would have been impossible in 1833. And yet in 1833 the prophet of the Restoration gave us a pattern of government which provided for the extension of governmental functions to include every principle of sound economy incorporated in the Act of 1933.

THE STOREHOUSE

During the last two years the Federal Government has been taking over the function of banking credit. These trends enable us to understand better the implications of the Storehouse principle set out in Doctrine and Covenants. One day all functions of credit, insurance, commerce, and finance will be made to conform to this Storehouse doctrine of the Restoration.

"WITH JUDGMENT AND WITH JUSTICE"

Justice is the right ordering of human relations. Judgment, in this relation, is reasoning concerning governmental behavior based upon a knowledge of the factors that work in community organization. Obviously, government can be established in justice provided only that men have the intelligence to judge the facts of economic life.

"To order" the government means to determine its form, constitution, and method—i. e., to adjust the scheme of governmental institutions to the purposes for which men associate. "To establish" the government means to give it an existence in fact; to bring it into being. And "He shall be called The Prince of Peace" tells us by implication what the nature is of "The Government."

Zion, the Kingdom, the Government, is to be builded, never to be thrown down. It is to become a fixed institution. "A permanent and everlasting establishment." It is to be the "Standard" according to which the governments of the whole world are to be refashioned. "All nations shall flow unto it." "The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ."

A PROPHETIC OUTLOOK

The message of Isaiah 9:6, 7, is the outlook of a prophet of God. It is a forward look to the time when bodies of religious peoples as such would be free to build economic institutions to match their convictions of what is right before God. It tells us what the task of the Church is today. It summarizes the hope of all the prophets. And that hope is Zion, the Kingdom, the Government!

THE ROYAL ROAD

mentary rather than competitive in the business of living."

"I hope you've heard of double standards," Sallie Ruth's observation was arch.

"They're gradually growing into a single standard."

"Do you really think so?"

"Certainly. Look at the emancipated woman, in business—"

"Yes, just look at her," mimicked the younger girl—"do look."

"When you two feminists or whatever you call yourselves, get to arguing," broke in their guest, "I always know its time to take a nap. It's a quarter of eight now. Wake me up when you're through." She liked to hear these two friends of hers talk. Sometimes in their arguments Carmen's earnestness and superior information won; at other times Sallie Ruth's slangy, youthful vivacity overwhelmed her sister's more thoughtful observations. She was thinking of them so intently that she forgot to listen to what they were saying. It wasn't until Carmen asked a question rather sharply that she noticed the trend of the conversation:

"She what?" Carmen asked.

"Larry's made me a promise about you," mysteriously bobbing her head in Larry's direction, Sallie Ruth arose to serve the dessert.

"So you're organized," smiled Carmen.

"Hafta be with mother coming home," glibly returned the younger sister.

"Sallie!"

"It's the truth. You let mother bully you—"

"You mustn't talk like that!"

"No, I suppose not, but anyway Larry's made me a promise."

It was toward the end of the evening that Carmen looked up from a dainty piece of lingerie she was making for Sallie Ruth to observe: "We're all behind the times, my dear." She was speaking to Larry who with Sallie Ruth bent over a jigsaw puzzle of Europe, presented to the latter by her schoolmates as a farewell gift. "This comes from our being so busy. Remember that quarterly business meeting of Zion we didn't go to last month?"

"Uh-huh."

"Well, something almost happened there."

"What do you mean?" for some reason Larry's heart was beginning to do curious things. There had been something significant in Carmen's tone.

"Well, you know it's the custom of the pastors and supervisors to submit names of men they've passed on for ordination to the quarterly conference. I remember reading in the Herald the names of those recommended and approved. Those from the Stone Church were ordained at the young people's prayer meeting last Wednesday night. I was afraid you'd miss something when you didn't go—"

"But what almost happened and didn't?" burst in Larry. She was impatient to know all that Carmen knew, for, she couldn't explain what it was—she didn't take time—but a great fear began to grip her. She must know what the other knew and at once.

Evidently her face betrayed these emotions, for Carmen answered without further delay: "I can't tell you who it was told me, but she knows—this isn't Grapevine news. A woman was talking to me in the store today. And she said that a certain young man was called to the office of priest, and his name was to have been submitted to the conference. But he refused the office, turned it down flat to the pastorate. Said he couldn't think of it at all."

There was little need for the speaker to name the "certain young man." Larry knew. Greg had been called, and he had refused! But he shouldn't have done that. He had been called—why, it was his duty to accept. To the office of priest? . . . Somehow she didn't like to think of Greg as dodging responsibility.

"Who was he, the young man that didn't accept, Carmen?" inquired Sallie Ruth, the light of intelligence shining in her eyes—"was it Larry's Greg?"

The world cannot be regenerated by any of the old panaceas—peace propaganda, international diplomacy, autocracy, democracy, education, art, religion, philosophy and whatnot—but by love and by love alone. Humanity has been made sick by love's deprivation, and—similia similibus—only by love can it be cured. In the purged sanctuary of the dedicated heart a new ideal of love must be enshrined—still the Christ ideal, though not the impaled pale Galilean of Pauline Christianity, but the Christ born of woman, "the honey of all beings," He who said, "I command you that ye love one another."—Claude Bragdon, in The New Image.

time of the year. Who would it be? Three men had been found guilty; three men had now come to the end of their earthly scenes; three men who had sinned against society must now suffer for their crimes; three men must die on the cross—and one of the three Barrabas. But in this judgment hall today is Jesus, brought before Pilate, with the religious leaders of the day crying for his blood and stirring up the people so that they cried out, "Crucify him!" "Who will I release unto you?" "Barrabas!" Pilate says, "What strange thing is this? I find no fault in Jesus. Barrabas is a thief and a murderer. What, then, shall I do with Jesus if I release unto you Barrabas?"

Jesus, why do you not speak? In all Heaven's name, why not say something in your own defense? Hearst thou not that these men accuse thee?

They witnessed many things against Him, but how strange the historian can only record, "He answered never a word." The Governor marveled greatly. "What is this? Speak, and you can go free! There is no need that you should die; there is no charge that they can prove against you!" But he never uttered a word. Pilate turned him over to the soldiers. The people say, "Crucify Him!" and they led him away to be crucified—not on his own cross, not on any cross that was made for him; but on a cross that was made for Barrabas.

He could have spoken; he could have saved himself from such a death; but only the night before he had prayed to his God, he had made his vow, and his vow he would keep: "Thy will, O God; if it has to be, to wear a crown of thorns; if it has to be to be thus humiliated; thy will, O God, if it is to die on the cross, Thy will not mine, be done."

Christ died for Barrabas; he took Barrabas' place on the cross, on the cross that was made for Barrabas—and there he died.

But, more than that, he not only died for Barrabas, but he died for you and he died for me.

What does Easter mean to you? Then came the dawn. "Hear ye him," was the voice that spoke from heaven when John baptized Jesus in the waters of Jordan. The voice from heaven spoke and said to all the world, "Hear ye Him."

Now you shall hear him. Hear him now, after the crucifixion; hear him now, after the stone had been rolled away from the tomb by angelic hands; hear him now, when he speaks and says: "I am he that was dead and am alive forevermore; and because I live you, too, shall live."

If there is a call that comes ringing clear and loud and strong unto our souls today, it is "Hear ye the message of the Redeemer: A new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another."

FINANCIAL OBLIGATION OF YOUTH TO THE CHURCH

means whereby his church work may be carried out. The church is but an organization of God's consecrated people for the redemption of mankind. Hence, we should pay our tithes, offerings, and surplus unto it so that mankind may hear the gospel and in obeying it, be saved for God's kingdom.

We cannot accomplish our mission as a church unless we young people, as well as the older people, are willing to be fair with God. Certainly, if we withhold from the church our financial support our hearts are not right or we do not understand the law. We young people are going to have to do the church work of tomorrow. How can God's work be advanced by disobedient servants? We are a part of the church and if the church advances it must advance as a whole, hence, it is necessary that we each do our part.

Finally, we are told, "Save all the money that ye can, and obtain all ye can in righteousness that in time ye may be enabled to purchase the lands for an inheritance, even the city." Thus it is our duty and privilege to prepare for Zion, both financially and morally. We may not all be able to possess the same financial means, but if we all do what we can for the church by paying our tithes on all of our income above our just wants and needs, and consecrating our surplus to the church there will be an abundance of the material things necessary for the redemption of Zion. One young person may help in the field of music, another with his life of loving service and with his small means, another with his abundant means. And thus together we may fulfill our obligation to the church by becoming stewards accountable unto God, and thus we may bring about the building of Zion. As Emerson says, "No one can cheat you out of ultimate success except yourself."

On Making a Speech

I make it a rule never to go before an audience, on any occasion, without asking the blessing of God upon what I want to say.

I always make special preparation for each separate address. No two audiences are exactly alike. It is my aim to reach and talk to the heart of each individual audience, taking it into my confidence very much as I would a person.

I believe that one always does himself and his audience an injustice when he speaks merely for the sake of speaking. I do not believe that one should speak unless, deep down in his heart, he feels convinced that he has a message to deliver. When one feels, from the bottom of his feet to the top of his head, that he has something to say that is going to help some individual or some cause, then let him say it.

Nothing tends to throw me off my balance so quickly, when I am speaking, as to have someone leave the room. To prevent this, I make up my mind, as a rule, that I will try to make my address so interesting, will try to state so many interesting facts one after another, that no one can leave. The average audience, I have come to believe, wants facts rather than generalities or sermonizing. Most people are able to draw proper conclusions if they are given the facts in an interesting form on which to base them.

In meeting crowds of people at public gatherings, there is one type of individual that I dread. I mean the crank. I have become so accustomed to these people now that I can pick them out at a distance when I see them elbowing their way up to me.—Booker T. Washington, in Up From Slavery.

To do something, however small, to make others happier and better, is the highest ambition, the most elevating hope, which can inspire a human being.—Lord Avebury.

Zion—When?

By H. E. Depew

This church, whose rolls our names embrace,

Has vision greater far
Than ken of worldly folks who grace
This onward hurtling star.
Among the deathless truths we teach
Is that of Zion's day;
Yet how we hesitate to reach
It,—seems we'd rather play.

For many years the story great
Has been within our minds;
The saddest part,—we hesitate
To draw aside the blinds
Of jealousy, and selfish pride,
Which seem to hem us in;
And hide from sight the path to stride
To keep us from all sin.

What gain to spread the glorious tale
To others in the land,
When we, who know the truth, still fail
To ever make a stand
To bring to pass the oft told ways
Of Zion's fabled gain.
How futile seem the weary days
Our men have preached, in vain.

"For Zion is the pure in heart,"—
That's how the story reads;
"But when," I ask, "when will we start
To sow the noble seeds
Of aims, and deeds; of words, and thought,
Which must bear fruitage grand;
'Fore refuge sweet can e'er be sought
In Zion's promised land?"

Thankful for Rich Blessings

From the time I was a little girl until I was married in 1923, I had to go to the Lutheran Sunday school. My husband belonged to the Christian Church and would not go to my church for he thought there was too much pride in the church; nor did I care to go to his. The result was that we attended neither.

In 1924 our little girl, Marqueen, was born, and when she was five years old our neighbors (Pealers) who were Latter Day Saints, invited her to their Sunday school. It was only two blocks away, so I consented, and she became very interested and soon a member.

December 13, 1930, she was hit by an automobile, and suffered a fractured skull. Patriarch George W. Robley, Elder Walter H. Lewis, and Elder H. A. Cunningham were very interested in her and came to administer from time to time. She was in the hospital three months, and many times when they administered to her, the fever left almost immediately. The doctors and nurses were astonished. But in March, 1931, she passed into the great beyond. God had showed us that he had power to heal as well as to take away. We went to the Lutheran minister and asked him to assist Brother Robley with the funeral, but he said that he did not care to work with the "Mormons," and he hoped we would not join them.

After we laid the child away, our home seemed empty, desolate. She was the only child we had, and I was very lonely and the trial seemed more than I could stand. I asked God to take me also. The doctor warned me not to grieve, however, for I was again to become a mother in a few months.

The Saints were wonderful to us. We began to attend all their meetings. We realized that with them we found comfort and strength; we were associating with people who shared our sorrow with us. While in prayer meeting in the latter part of April, I was almost overcome by the power of God, and I arose and asked for baptism. As soon as I sat down, my husband arose and also asked for baptism. Brother Robley performed the ordinance, and God's Spirit came to us in abundance. We felt that it was through our little daughter that we had been led into the glorious light of the gospel. How many times since then have I rejoiced that God spared my life for I realize how little prepared I was to meet him.

I am thankful for the personal testimonies I have received. I know this is the work of the Lord; I am not ashamed of the gospel for I know that it is the power of God unto salvation. Surely it is the Comforter which Jesus said would come! Many times in prayer meetings I have felt that I was sitting in heavenly places. I am striving to make my life reflect Jesus Christ. I am taking him for my example. I can see him in those who helped me to find the gospel. While I am poor in material things, I feel rich in the things of the spirit.

Brothers and sisters, if you must pass through trials, remember that many times they are blessings in disguise, and try to feel that God's grace is sufficient. We may enjoy the blessings of heaven here on earth, but we receive only such as we fit ourselves for.

On the first of October of that same year, our second little girl was born. She has been a blessing from heaven. Now a little past two years old, she raises her baby voice and helps to sing many of the songs of Zion. Pray for me that I may be a living example for her to follow, and that like the Master I may be humble, kind, and full of love.

A Personal Inventory

How do you feel about your church? Do you feel as though you had a right to be at its services, a business right? There is business for your King that only you can do; it needs your personal presence and supervision.

The way you conduct yourself in its services and with regard to its program are expressions of your own individuality. You either do or you do not do things for it, just as you think best. This freedom is found, too, in matters pertaining to contributions.

We have an organization with a vision. Vision of what? Of Zion, the kingdom of God here on earth and the coming of Christ to rule that kingdom.

Do you take pride in being able to say that we are different from other churches? Enough pride to know the reason for our difference and to explain it to others when the occasion presents itself?

Are you active in church and civic work? Energetic and wide awake in all things pertaining to your home, your community, and your town? Dependable and at all times on the side of right? Respected and loved by those with whom you come in contact?

In fact, as a part, a member of this great organization, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, how do you rate yourself? Are you above par?

Prayer Is Answered in the Midst of the Storm

A group of Baltimore Saints have a wonderful testimony of the Lord's goodness to them. Brother and Sister James Givens and their small son, Phillip, Sister Anna Edwards and son, Adolphus, very recently left Baltimore to attend the funeral of Sister Dena Winship, of Wheeling, West Virginia.

While they were driving through the mountains a severe blizzard came up. The little group kept on their way until the car froze up and they were forced to stop by the roadside. The temperature was below zero, and the car was covered with ice.

For four hours they sat there, the men folks getting out in the cold all the while and trying to hail passing cars. At last, giving up the attempt, they crawled back into the car. They had no blankets with which to keep warm, and it was a terrible sight for the sisters to sit there and watch their loved ones slowly freezing to death. They were going to sleep and would not rouse when shaken; it is a well known fact that one freezes more easily when asleep. Then Sister Edwards began to go to sleep, and Sister Givens knew that unless help came soon they would all freeze to death out there miles from anyone. She also knew that there was only one power that could save them, so she raised up her voice to the Lord.

About ten minutes later a car came along and stopped. The rescuers could not see into the stalled automobile, for it was thickly covered with ice. They called and finally received a faint reply. They had to half carry all the occupants to the other car for they were so nearly gone. It was six miles to the nearest town where they found shelter in a small hotel.

These Saints are very thankful because their lives were spared, and they are going forward with another wonderful testimony of the Lord's goodness.

He Knew Mark H. Forscutt

The various letters and articles in your paper have prompted me to write. In some of the former I see mention of your biographical publications, and among the latter I find the biographies. For my own part I have a very intense interest in biography, especially spiritual biography. During my last mission to Australia I came into possession of thirty bound volumes of the old Heralds and at least half that number of unbound volumes of more recent issues. The possession of all this historical material induced me to follow up the lives of a number of our pioneer ministers, including that of Elder M. H. Forscutt. The result was I checked up very carefully on their lives, especially "Uncle Mark's," for Elder Forscutt captured my imagination to an unusual degree. I, therefore, decided to write a number of biographies and wrote to President F. M. Smith to that effect. He wrote back in approval. I should have probably carried out that intention ere now were it not for my return to America. I did not care to bring all these Heralds back with me. Since they had already been sent to Australia, and constituted the only set in that country, I thought it wiser to leave them there. I still have my references to the Herald and all my notes but have been too far away from my original sources to proceed with my plan.

I first met Elder Forscutt at the General Conference of 1895, which was my first. It was held in the Stone Church at Independence. At the business session one afternoon Brother Joseph announced: "Tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock Elder M. H. Forscutt will be the speaker, assisted by A. C. Barmore." We had arrived on the platform at the appointed time when Elder Forscutt suddenly turned to me and in his precise English manner said: "Brother Barmore, I am not feeling very well this morning and I am sure that if I attempt to preach my effort will be a failure. Will you please take my place." Without any hesitation I consented to do so. I thus missed my first chance, as I supposed, to hear "Uncle Mark." For aught I knew at the time it was my last chance, but I heard him several times in subsequent years. He was then fresh from California where he had stopped while on his return from the Society Islands. I met him in at least two General Conferences after that. On one occasion he was surrounded by a group of very young men, including myself. We were calling out some of his experiences. He was congratulating himself on having spent his life with the Latter Day Saints. Among other things he said: "They are the best people in the world." In one of the old Heralds he said: "I would rather spend my life as a minister of this church than to spend it in some other way." Brother Joseph once said of him: "From conviction and choice Elder Forscutt is a representative of the Latter Day Work." I well remember thinking, and afterward saying upon hearing him make the aforesaid remark: "If such a man as Mark H. Forscutt can afford to spend his life in the ministry of this church, I can afford to do so."

The first time the existence of such a man came to my knowledge was when I was a very small boy. He came to Southern Indiana and held a debate at a place called Lilydale, about twenty-five miles south of our home. His opponent was Reverend W. B. F. Treat, of the Christian Church. My father attended this debate. I often heard him and others who were there refer to it. It was held in March, 1876. In after years I met and heard Reverend Treat. I got close enough to him to ask him about the debate, and his opinion of Elder Forscutt. He replied: "Elder Forscutt is a clever man, a man of good reading." At the time I was attended by an old friend of mine, Willard M. Sigler, who afterward joined our church. We were both interested in what Reverend Treat had to say, for we had just read: "The Forscutt and Shinn Discussion."

When President Smith wrote me, as aforesaid, he suggested that my manuscript be modified by the official record, which, of course, would have been a very fine complement to my work. I also thought of getting into communication with the Forscutt family for whatever original matter the relatives might have. I had all their names, but I was rather too far away for such an effort to be practicable. When I returned to this country my mission was too far away from headquarters for me to get into touch with the church papers, and I have not found any sets elsewhere.

I am pleased to see the disposition of the church to do honor to our pioneer representatives. Others do so, hence why should not we? I have witnessed, their passing both painfully and joyfully. The former for what we lose and the latter for what they gain. Brother Forscutt died the next year after I went to Australia the first time. I well remember the impression made by his decease. On every hand I heard: "Uncle Mark is dead," or in more classic language: "Elder M. H. Forscutt has passed away."

Enjoys Photographs of Officers

My step is growing slow and my eyesight is becoming dim, yet the Lord blesses me with the ability to read his Holy Word. Some of my happiest hours are spent when I sit reflecting upon the beautiful words of our Savior, or thinking of the lines of our fine old hymns such as "How Sweet the Name of Jesus Sounds," or when I read the Herald.

It is a privilege to find in our paper the pictures of elders and officers whom we have seen in days that are gone. These faces recall to memory the difficulties our ministers have faced in their work for the Lord. I so much enjoy these photographs, and think it is good for the Saints to see these men in the Herald even if they cannot meet all of them in the flesh.

When I finish reading my Herald I pass it on to others. That seems about all that I can do now for the Lord.

The Master has been good to me, and I am grateful for his watchcare. I hope to live worthy to be gathered on Mount Zion with his jewels. I am sure that eye has not seen and ear has not heard what he has in store for the faithful.

Request Prayers

Mrs. Fred Pieplow, of Aurora, Iowa, requests prayers for her granddaughter, Joyce Loene McMillan, of Vicksburg, Mississippi, that she may be healed. The child suffered severe burns three weeks ago, and her left foot and ankle are in a serious condition. If Herald readers know of church elders near Vicksburg, Mrs. Pieplow wishes they would communicate with Joyce's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. McMillan, Route 2, Box 59C, Vicksburg, Mississippi.

Saints are asked to pray for Mrs. Maurice P. Baker, of Lansing, Michigan, who is now in the hospital.

Mrs. Alberta Eaton, of Little Deer Isle, Maine, who has been in poor health for some time, requests prayers that she may be relieved of her suffering and healed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Explain Doctrine and Covenants 85:37, about light speeches, laughter, etc.

This command was given in connection with instructions concerning the school of the prophets, though some of it doubtless might apply to the members in general. It appears that many had become careless and had not conducted themselves as Christians in certain body or church organization. God would care for his own even though they be alone, and this disorganized and scattered state of his saints, continuing 1260 years, represented the time from the apostasy to the restoration, it is believed.

Why was the passover lamb eaten with bitter herbs?

The bitter herbs memorialized the bondage of Israel in Egypt. They were to eat in haste, with their shoes on and their loins girded, in memory of their flight from Egypt. The lamb was a type of Christ the great Deliverer and divine Sacrifice, and the bitter herbs evidently foreshadowed the bitter death by which he atoned for their sins.

Is the Book of Mormon the stick of Ephraim, or of Manasseh?

Ezekiel 37:16, 19 is believed to refer to the book, which is there called both the "stick of Ephraim" and the "stick of Joseph," explaining that the stick of Joseph "in the hand of Ephraim" is meant. The Book of Mormon apparently was written mostly by descendants of Manasseh (son of Joseph), though by marriage there may have been some descendants of Ephraim in the Nephite tribes. Patriarchal blessings point out many of our church members as of Ephraim, and as the book is now in the hands of the church, it would in this sense be in the "hand of Ephraim," and hence the stick of Ephraim, but not written by Ephraim, apparently.

Should the sacrament be administered before confirmation?

The usual procedure is to confirm members before administering the sacrament, but I know of no law specifying either way, though Doctrine and Covenants 17:18 states that members should be instructed before receiving the sacrament and confirmation. Jesus gave the sacrament to his disciples before the Holy Spirit had fallen on them, though they had probably been confirmed before then. Giving bread and wine prior to confirmation is recorded of the members at the first organization of the church (Church History, volume 1, page 77), but is an exceptional instance.

A. B. PHILLIPS.

respects. Hence they were cautioned:

"Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and light-mindedness, and from all your wicked doings. Appear among yourselves a teacher, and let not all be spokesmen at once."—85:37.

Evidently the background of this command was preparation for the school of the prophets, and indicated the sober attitude of those to engage in the solemn service, and also the purity of character required of those who should be worthy to participate in such meetings. It was not designed to teach that one should never laugh under any circumstances, though it is clear from paragraph 19 that "excess of laughter" should not be indulged in. A previous revelation (59:4) had stated that "much laughter" is sin, but that God's people should have cheerful hearts and countenances. The word was a rebuke to those who had become proud, sinful, covetous, or idle, as the context shows, and demanded sober and consistent conduct.

What does Revelation 12:5, about the woman in the wilderness, mean?

The early part of this chapter is believed to portray the church and the severe persecution it suffered. The woman referred to is understood to represent the church, of which we read:

"And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she had a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand and two hundred and threescore years."—Revelation 12:5 Inspired Version.

Probably the most consistent interpretation of the "wilderness" would be the loneliness or desolateness of the saints who had ceased to exist as a recognized

Nauvoo, Illinois

Mississippi River at Low Stage

The first snowstorm of the season arrived on Saturday, February 24, and continued throughout Sunday. No services were held at the church on account of the storm, and radio listeners who have never been able to listen on Sunday morning because of attending their own services, experienced a real thrill when they were permitted to listen to the Stone Church services.

Winter in Nauvoo has been very mild, and because of a lack of moisture many wells and cisterns went dry. The Mississippi River at this point was lower than it had been since the dam was built. The marginal lines of the river were where the lines of the old river used to be. Huge mud bars were out of water two or three feet, extending from the ferry landing down the river for more than half a mile below the big stone bridge and exposing several hundred acres of ground. The ferryboat in the harbor is resting on mud.

Four Chicago architects were in Nauvoo the first week in February, working on a C. W. A. project, surveying houses of distinctive architecture, among them the Wilford Woodruff house and the Mansion House. They were accompanied by an official photographer, who took pictures of the houses surveyed from different angles. The surveys of the houses in blue-print form with descriptions and photos will be filed in the Library of Congress at Washington.

Sister Lucinda Marshall, wife of William D. Marshall, passed away February 2, after a lingering illness that caused her intense suffering. Her death occurred a day after her fifty-eighth wedding anniversary. Brother and Sister Marshall left Nauvoo in 1878, in a covered wagon to take up a homestead in Kansas. They returned in 1923 in a Buick touring car. Sister Marshall was held in the highest esteem by all who knew her. The funeral services were held at the church, Elder James A. Page officiating.

On December 13, Brother Page was called to Lomax to conduct the funeral of Brother Wyatt and on February 1, went to Rock Creek to officiate at the funeral of Mrs. Robert Salisbury and again on March 12, for the funeral of Richard Lee, infant son of Maurice and Frances Ellison.

The local priesthood take turns in occupying the pulpit. Speakers during the winter have been J. C. Page, J. W. Layton, L. H. Lewis, A. L. Sanford, Arnold Ourth, and John Williams.

Nauvoo Branch broadcast a program over Carthage radio station WCAZ from 1:15 to 2 p. m. Sunday, March 25. Elder James A. Page spoke on "Truth," "We Come With Truth to Teach You," and "Tis a Glorious Thing to Be," were sung by a chorus and the Wallet Trio, of Warsaw, furnished several musical numbers.

Chicago, Illinois

West Pullman Church, 11926 Parnell Avenue

The activities of this congregation during the winter have been varied but enjoyable and inspiring. Services have been well attended with a gradual increase of attendance.

The priesthood, from both Central and First Chicago Churches, have ministered to the needs of the members, C. A. Edstrom, H. P. W. Keir, Ray Hurst, and Ralph Swanson, also D. H. Smith and C. Ellis, of Hammond, Indiana.

Sunday evening, February 4, the young people's Sunday evening club of Central Chicago Branch had charge of the evening service which consisted of music and a short sermon by Clem Evans. A large congregation enjoyed the service and their support was much appreciated.

The evening of February 3, was the scene of a pretty church wedding, when La Verna Fields was united in marriage to Warren Dewey. The young couple are making their home in Chicago.

Elder Roscoe Davey held a series of meetings during January for a fairly large crowd, considering weather conditions.

The choir sponsored an entertainment and box social at the park field house Monday evening, March 12. Proceeds were used for the benefit of the branch.

Mrs. Paralee Dallas Sublett, one of the oldest members of the church, and the oldest of this branch, was found dead by her daughter, January 1. She went to bed the evening before in good health. Much of her life had been spent in isolation from the church of which she was a member for about sixty years. Such characters as hers are an inspiration to the younger generation in the church.

Holden Stake Conference

Unity and Progress Reported in All Departments

Saints of Holden Stake met at Atherton, Missouri, March 9, 10, and 11, to participate in the forty-seventh conference of that stake.

Friday evening the visiting young people were entertained at a banquet by the members of the Atherton young people's division. Vernon Lundeen acted as master of ceremonies and introduced the other speakers of the evening, Lloyd Coffman, Ammon Andes, Emily Blackmore, and Stake President W. S. Macrae. A musical program was presented after which Robert Thistlethwaite announced the winners in the essay contest recently sponsored by the young people's council on the subject, "The Financial Obligation of the Youth to the Church." Those placing in the contest were Gladys Beebe first; Ammon Andes, second; and Vernon Lundeen, third. Twenty-five essays were entered in the contest and each was judged eligible for the eight points of credit offered by the department of religious education toward a leadership certificate. Approximately one hundred and thirty persons were present at this reception.

Saturday morning a goodly number of Saints met for prayer service with G. R. Wells and Joe Martin in charge. The theme, "Working Together With God," was carried through the service.

The business session of the conference met at ten-thirty Saturday morning with G. R. Wells presiding temporarily. "Redeemer of Israel," was sung and prayer was offered by Charles Martin, of Grandview. By action of the conference Stake President Macrae and President F. M. Smith were asked to preside; Brother Smith acted as chairman. Reports were read from the following: the stake president, Brother Macrae, reported that the membership of Holden Stake has nearly reached 2,200. He also observed that baptisms should increase as they have not reached the number to be expected from such a group. The keynote to his report to the Saints was, "Let us find our place and do our best." The stake bishop, J. A. Koehler, reported that the tithes and offerings during the past five months ending March 1, have totaled $1,909.36, while twenty-four dollars has been paid into the building fund and thirty-three dollars into the operating fund. A report was received from the secretary of the elders' quorum, G. F. Baker.

The president of the young people's council asked that some action be taken by the conference for financing the projects of that division, and suggested that if the conference did not wish to take such action that the young people be allowed to form their own treasury. G. R. Wells, supervisor of religious education, stated that there is a church school in each branch and that all except one are organized under the new plan adopted by the General Conference of 1930. A number of interesting and progressive projects are being conducted and planned by local schools and pastors.

The resignation of F. A. McWethy, who has acted as a member of the presidency of Holden Stake for the past eighteen years, was read and accepted by the conference. The stake presidency had been asked to report as to the advisability of holding a reunion, and expressed it as their opinion: "We have serious doubt as to the advisability of holding a reunion in the stake in 1934." Action upon this matter was postponed until the next conference. The conference moved to ask the stake bishopric to make arrangements for a Holden Stake booth at the Harvest Home Festival this fall. After some discussion as to ways and means of financing the projects of the young people's division the motion prevailed that the high council and bishopric of the stake be constituted an appropriation committee to allocate the stake funds among the several departments of the stake as needed.

The following were chosen as delegates to General Conference: W. S. Macrae, J. A. Koehler, J. A. Thomas, Vernon Lundeen, Amos Allen, J. T. Smith, Charles Mengel, O. W. Sarratt, H. B. Thompson, C. F. Scarcliff, Roscoe Moorman, Charles Martin, G. R. Wells, A. H. Wintermeyer, G. W. Beebe, Frank Ford, D. R. Hughes, Otho Clark, Roy Kleckler, S. M. Andes, and Wendell M. Van Tuyl.

At the close of the business session President Smith addressed the conference for a few minutes. He admonished the Saints to keep clean, alive, and alert; and stressed the fact that they should pray for charity to overcome selfishness.

Following the noon recess recreational activities were conducted under the leadership of Robert Thistlethwaite. The elders and all other members of the priesthood who cared to attend, assembled for their quorum meeting at two o'clock. At the same hour those interested in musical activities met with the director, Sister A. F. Haus. Apostle J. A. Gillen was the speaker Saturday evening.

Sunday morning the conference met in two prayer services, the adults with Brothers Sarratt, Thomas, and Wells in charge, and the young people under the direction of Amos Allen, Vernon Lundeen and Ammon Andes. The latter part of the young people's service was devoted to matters of business. This division voted to adopt a plan of organization providing for an executive committee composed of president, vice president, and secretary, and an advisory council composed of the presidents and supervisors of young people in the local branches. The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Robert Thistlethwaite; vice president, Ammon Andes; secretary, Genevieve Smith.

The activities of the church school hour were under the direction of Brothers Wells and Woodstock. Brother Woodstock chose for the subject of his lecture "Preparation for Service," and outlined plans for such preparation.

Sister Edith Koehler conducted a junior church service for the people of junior age at the eleven o'clock period. At the adult service Sister Bernice Hampton directed a rendition of the "Holy City" by the combined choirs of Holden, Blue Springs, and Atherton. Bishop A. B. Phillips then spoke to the Saints.

In the afternoon short meetings were held by the young people, the elders, and the parents. This last group was addressed by Sisters Edith Koehler and Grace Krahl.

The closing service of the conference was one of consecration to the ideals of the church. President Macrae had requested the young people to sit on the platform and his request was so well heeded that it was entirely filled, many could not find room to sit there. Short talks were made by representative members of this group concerning the ideals and ways in which they may work toward their accomplishment. The conference then pledged itself by singing two hymns, "Where He Leads Me I Will Follow," and "Consecration," and also in the closing prayer by Brother Vernon Lundeen.

Spring River Singers to Broadcast Over KGGF

Singers of Spring River District, led by Victor L. Krucker, district chorister, will present an Easter cantata, "Our Living Lord," by Wilson, over the radio station KGGF, Coffeyville, Kansas, at 4 p. m. Easter Sunday afternoon. The chorus will be composed of forty-five voices mostly from choirs of Joplin and Webb City, Missouri, Coffeyville, Parsons, and Independence, Kansas, and Fairland and Miami, Oklahoma. The cantata is of so sacred and fitting a nature that Webb City Branch has decided to dispense with the usual sacrament meeting routine and have the cantata presented by the chorus immediately following the passing of the sacrament on Easter Sunday morning. Mrs. Ethel Gaston, of Miami, will accompany the chorus for both presentations.—Raymond E. Troyer.

Western Michigan Young People Organize Christian Legion

Elect Regional Officers

A large number of the young people, also several of the older members of the Western Michigan District met at Cadillac, March 4, to organize the Christian Legion under the direction of Apostle D. T. Williams. The constitution of the Christian Legion was adopted until final action could be taken by the State convention which was held at Saginaw, March 25.

The following officers were elected: divisional commander, Jay C. Doty, Traverse City; secretary and treasurer, Helen Bennett, Freesoil; director of solicitation, Cecil Morgan, Traverse City; director of socialization, Mrs. David Olinay, Cadillac; director of publicity, Ray Dick, Traverse City.

It is the wish of the older members that every young person in the district will have a desire to get into this organization. Here is his opportunity to serve the church while he prepares himself for future responsibilities.

Douglas, Arizona

Two Branches Unite Fast Day Exercises

Though sometimes the way seems hard, the small group of members here is traveling Zionward.

The following officers were elected at the local business meeting: Branch president, A. O. Corley; Sunday school superintendent, Lillian Simpson; secretary-treasurer and superintendent of the department of recreation and expression, F. M. Dearborn; superintendent of women's department, Tee Taylor.

The pastor has been preaching a series of missionary sermons the past six weeks and the attendance of nonmembers has been encouraging. It is hoped that new members may be added and that the branch will grow.

Bisbee Branch, twenty miles from Douglas, came to Douglas for a day of fasting and prayer March 4, and a wonderful sacrament service was enjoyed. The two branches fasted from Saturday sundown, and Sunday shortly before sundown, the women spread a picnic lunch in the park. Just as the sun dropped over the hills, prayer was offered that God would receive the thanks of his people for past blessings and would continue to guide his church onward to Zion. This day of fasting will long be remembered by Saints of Arizona.

Douglas people are feeling better of late although times still are hard with many without work and several dismissed from CWA work. The Saints have been able to pay off their debt on the roof of the church and meet a few other obligations. They had an oyster supper, Brother J. W. Taylor the chef.

Far West Stake

Cameron Branch

Elder Howard C. Timm, of Saint Joseph, occupied the pulpit recently and gave a splendid message. Another good sermon was given a short time ago by Elder John Hovenga, of Stewartville.

The women of the branch entertained the men with a covered-dish supper at which time plans were discussed for the payment of the church debt there. Not to be outdone, the men gave an oyster supper with the women as their guests. Part of the entertainment of the evening was a style show put on by the men who were dressed to represent various celebrities.

The branch has been divided into the east and west divisions for the contest, to see which will gather the most money to pay on the church debt. Deacons are soliciting the members for funds and hope to realize quite a sum this way. Other plans are under way to raise money but as yet are not completed. The side which loses will entertain the winners at some future date.

Several families have recently moved to Cameron from Iowa and their addition is welcomed by the branch. The branch is sorry to lose its church school supervisor, Brother Clifford Constance, and his family who have moved to Saint Joseph where he has employment.

James Flanders, one of the old-time members of the Gospel Hill church near Maysville, now a resident of Cameron, has been seriously ill but has recovered sufficiently now to be up and around the house. He likes to recall the sermons of such former missionaries as T. W. Chatburn, W. S. Pender, and S. L. W. Scott who stayed at his home.

A class of girls has been organized as Blue Birds by Sister Bessie Flanders. They meet regularly under her leadership.

Fortescue Branch

Fortescue Saints are much pleased with their new pastor for the coming year, Brother Carl Jensen, of Saint Joseph. They were favored with a visit from Brother and Sister Jensen and daughters, Ruth and Margery, on March 4. The sacrament service was well attended and a good response was had from the Saints.

The O. T. Z. group held a business meeting at the church the evening of March 7. Officers were elected for the year as follows: Mrs. Grace L. Brown, supervisor; Lucile Chuning, president; Opal Dunn, secretary. They are planning an Easter program at the church and a picnic at Big Lake. Some of the young people plan to attend General Conference.

The adult division, in charge of Sister Lena Dunn, sponsored a soup supper and Valentine party at the church, February 14.

The O. T. Z.'s gave the worship service to the young people's council meeting at Bigelow Christian Church the evening of March 8. They presented the theme, "Making Our Lives Heroic." After the worship, games were played. They enjoy the meeting with other young people.

The Young People's Religious Council of Education is composed of four churches, Fortescue Methodist, Napier Christian, Bigelow Christian and Fortescue Latter Day Saint. They have worship services, social and business hours and usually serve refreshments. They find it very interesting and the Latter Day Saint group are endeavoring to "Let our light so shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven." They are striving to show others, through their worship services and other work, the beauty of the Restored Gospel.

Oakdale Branch

The Oakdale-Kingston O. T. Z.'s held their March party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dodge Dunlap. The usual games and good comradeship were enjoyed by all. They meet alternately each month at Kingston and Oakdale, and are finding the joint organization very successful.

Cold weather and bad roads have hindered the services in recent months. Curtis Vernon, of Osborn, preached to a fair-sized audience Sunday morning, March 18. At the service the infant son of Brother and Sister Cecil Hawley was blessed by his grandfather, Elder O. C. Dunlap, and Elder Warren E. Peak. He was given the name of Robert Paul.

Saint Joseph Branch

First Church

The sacrament service the first Sunday in March was impressive. The theme, "Why do We Fast?" was carried out and the coming General Conference was remembered in special prayer. The congregation was unusually large and a quiet and worshipful attitude characterized the entire service. The infant sons of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Denton and Mr. and Mrs. Chris Ruoff were blessed by Elders John Ruoff and T. E. Hale.

The Sunday evening series of doctrinal sermons was brought to a close March 4, by Elder O. Salisbury who was the speaker for six weeks. His final topic was "Our Task."

First Church entertained the Far West stake conference March 9, 10, and 11, an account of which has already been given.

Elder H. C. Timm preached at the morning hour Sunday March 18. Pastor Ward A. Hougas spoke at the vesper service. A large attendance marked both services that day.

The O. T. Z.'s held their monthly social meeting on Tuesday evening, March 13. At this meeting the resignation of the president was accepted, and Miss Alma Hale was elected president and Herman Johnson was elected vice president to fill Miss Hale's place. The former president's work takes him from the city.

The Wednesday evening prayer service on March 14, was a happy occasion. Elder H. C. Timm baptized Thomas A. Jackson at the beginning of the service. The confirmation took place later. The prayer services each week are drawing good attendance with some interesting themes. The choir rehearses each week following the prayer service and is working on "Olivet to Calvary," to be given Easter Sunday evening. The children's division of the church school is also working on an Easter program.

The O. T. Z.'s have taken over the fourth Sunday evening of each month to provide the service. John F. Sheehy of Independence, delivered an excellent sermon, which was well received by the congregation.

Second Church

Second Church is proud to report that its attendance has increased fifty percent in all departments this year. The young people are taking active part each Sunday. The prayer services are well attended.

A series of meetings was held throughout the last week of February. Elder Salisbury and Bishop Milo Burnett were the speakers. After the service on Friday evening, all members adjourned to the lower auditorium for a birthday surprise party on the deacon, Hallard Felch.

The ladies of the church are meeting each Thursday to prepare for a bazaar to be given in April. The third Thursday in every month, a covered-dish luncheon is served and regular business meeting held. Dinners are being served the last Friday of each month by the Women's Department.

The Lo-Se-Jo Society meets each Sunday evening under the direction of the president, Hallard Felch. This society is taking up the study of the Doctrine and Covenants. A dramatic club for old and young is being taught by the pastor, Brother O. Salisbury, each Monday evening.

The Saints are enjoying the sermons by their pastor and were glad to have Roscoe Peterson with them the evening of March 4. All enjoyed the special singing by the choir which is directed by Vern Goodenough. A number of nonmembers are attending.

Stewartville Branch

The young people met with their supervisor, Leonard G. Ehlers, Friday, February 23, and elected their officers for the year's activities. Miss Mona Armstrong was chosen president, Willard Hinderks, vice president and Miss Beulah Powell, secretary-treasurer. A pleasant social time followed. The young people's regular meetings will be held on Friday night, semi-monthly. They expect to take up a study course. At present they are working on a pageant, "The Half of My Goods" which will be given Easter Sunday.

An inspirational meeting of the women's group was held March 1. Their program theme was "Prayer" in keeping with the month of March. Beautiful and helpful thoughts on the subject were given and a solo, "Leave It With Him," was rendered by Miss Doris Young with Miss Cleata Hinderks at the piano. Book of Mormon study preceded the worship.

The continuance of the weekly envelope offering system for the general church is proving a success. Creating the habit of giving is one of the important features.

Sunday, March 4, the Saints were happy in attendance at communion service and the special fast end prayer participation. Elder A. E. McCord gave one of his good sermons at 7:30 p. m.

Elder J. L. Bear, of Saint Joseph, gave a forceful sermon on the eighteenth on the subject, "What Must I Do to Establish Zion?"

Waverly, Michigan

Missionary J. J. Ledsworth conducted a very successful series of meetings in Waverly recently. The services were held in a schoolhouse and the congregation varied from fifty to one hundred and twelve, about nine tenths being non-members. In spite of the weather conditions, deep snow, and extremely low temperature, they came to hear the gospel taught by one who preaches with power and much assurance. A marked degree of the Spirit accompanied each sermon.

About twenty people are awaiting the return of Brother Ledsworth in the spring, to be baptized.

Fargo, North Dakota

Bungalow Church 1423 First Avenue South

Apostle J. F. Curtis was a welcome visitor. He preached two spiritual sermons. Apostle Curtis attended the district conference at Minot.

The delegates appointed from this district to attend the General Conference are, Brother and Sister Charles Young, of La Moure; Sister William Sparling, of Minot; Brother Frank Stowell and Courtney Rotzien, of Fargo.

The children were entertained at a Valentine party in the junior Sunday school room, while the young people enjoyed a Saint Patrick's party given at the home of Sister Arlie Peterson.

Elder O. W. Okerlind, on his way home from his mission in Canada, stopped in Fargo to visit the Saints. He preached an inspiring sermon, using as his text, "And they led them forth by the right way that they might go to the city of habitation," Psalms 107: 7.

Other recent speakers for this congregation have been Brother Charles Young, of La Moure, his subject, "The Word of Wisdom." Elder H. E. Ratcliffe, subjects, "The Need of a Specific Church," "Prayer and Determination," and "The Restored Gospel." Brother Frank Stowell admonished the Saints regarding the Doctrine and Covenants, and Courtney Rotzien spoke on "Keep in Step With Yourself," and "Honesty."

The cottage prayer meetings are well attended on Wednesday evening. The young people's devotional service is held every third Sunday, at 6:45 p. m.

District Young People's Conference at Sperry, Oklahoma

Community Cooperation Insures Successful Meeting

The night of Sunday, March 11, marked the close of the first district conference of young people to convene at Sperry. It had been thought that owing to limited facilities, a district conference at Sperry would be out of the question. But it was successfully carried through, thanks to the splendid cooperation of local members and those from neighboring branches.

The conference opened March 9, with a series of four one-act plays presented by groups of young people from Tulsa, Skiatook, Teriton, and Sperry. After this, an entertaining feature presented by Brother Skinner, of Tulsa, was highly enjoyed. Music was furnished by the conference orchestra.

Guest speakers throughout the two days of convention were President F. M. McDowell, Apostle Roy S. Budd, and Mrs. Alma Adams, district chorister. Recreational activities were under the supervision of Howard Harpham. There were basket ball games and a motor trip through Mohawk Park.

The lectures began at 9:30 a. m. March 10, President McDowell's subject being "Our Spare Time—Its Use and Misuse." Apostle Budd's topic was "Our Church, Its Beginning, Its Purpose, Its Goal." The subject "Our Music—Leadership and Appreciation," was ably presented by Mrs. Adams.

The Holy Spirit manifested during the entire series, was especially present in the Sunday morning worship period. The infant son of Brother and Sister Luther Harper was blessed. The charge of the blessing and President McDowell's sermon afterward were most impressive. The influence of the Spirit was felt by all. The hymn, "Take Time to Be Holy," was beautifully sung by four young women.

In the afternoon President McDowell held a priesthood meeting in the church after the lectures. Brother Budd spoke to the Saints in the evening, following a thirty-minute period of song and music by the conference orchestra and choir.

The various branches of the district were well represented at the conference. Four hundred and nineteen people had registered by Saturday noon and it was estimated that approximately seven hundred were present Sunday evening. Sleeping accommodations were provided in the homes of the community, and the Saints are grateful to those not of the faith who graciously opened their homes to provide sleeping quarters for visitors. They thank also the board of education for the use of the high school building, heat, and light, and all who contributed to the success of the conference. Special thanks are due O. A. McDowell and Emmett Lancaster, of Tulsa, and Ward Rumsey, of Sperry, who worked untiringly to bring it about.

To provide food for a delegation of this size presented a problem, but the spirit of helpfulness was shown here, too. A Tulsa baking firm donated half the bread needed and furnished the rest at cost. The food was bought at wholesale by branch president Ward Rumsey, and only a nominal charge was made for meals, enough to cover cost. The food was prepared and served by Sister Ivy Sigars and her corps of workers.

The association and worship were elevating, and the truths presented will help the members to come nearer the goal toward which they are striving. A number from this district now look forward to attending General Conference, and the "stay-at-homes" will be there in spirit and prayers.

Rich Hill, Missouri

Ninth and Park Avenue

Rich Hill members feel that they have splendid opportunities for moving Zionward.

Gladly they heard the call to fast on March 4, issued by President F. M. Smith, and began at once to prepare for the day's observance.

District President Birch Whiting was present on that day and gave a message of commendation, hope and cheer as well as warning and council. Three young men were admonished to prepare for priesthood responsibilities.

The prayer and testimony meeting following the sacrament service was so uplifting and filled with the Spirit that three or four were blessed with the gift of prophecy.

Besides the regular classes in the church school one is taught Sunday morning by a member of the priesthood the lesson being taken from the Priesthood Manual. Another class is held Tuesday evening on "The Seven Laws of Teaching." Others have availed themselves of the opportunity to study leadership and training by attending a series of lectures at the high school presented by three of the leading ministers of Rich Hill.

Priesthood meetings are held once a month, and reflect the attitude of the people to obtain a working knowledge of the church.

The young people's group are very active both locally and in district gatherings. They are real workers.

The series of missionary services conducted by Elder J. Charles May a short time ago were greatly enjoyed, and have produced good results.

The Stone Church Boys' Choir, directed by Richard Dadney, gave its first annual concert in the Dining Hall to a large crowd of interested listeners last Friday night. On this occasion the boys wore their new robes, and made an impressive appearance in their processional as well as in every number they rendered. In the concert they were assisted by Arthur Storms' String Ensemble; by Billy McPherson, piano soloist of Second Church; by R. S. Budd, reader; by Andrew Klapis, boy soloist of Kansas City; by Julian White, violinist; by Kathryn Cato, accompanist, and by a trio of boys from Kansas City: Andrew Klapis, Julian White, and Jack Shepard. This is the third year for the boys' choir the purpose of which is to prepare better singers for the church. It is sponsored by J. Glenn Fairbanks of the Stone Church, and its director, Mr. Dadney, is musical instructor at Kansas City Central Junior High School. The choir will furnish music at the Sunday school hour at the Stone Church on General Conference Sunday, April 8.

Miss Helen Grace Bishop, daughter of Mr and Mrs. Charles A. Bishop, of Independence, and James A. Gardner, son of Elder and Mrs. John A. Gardner, were married at eight o'clock Saturday morning in the parlor of the First Christian Church, the service being read by the Reverend Lyndon W. Harper, in the presence of the immediate families and a few close friends. Shortly after the wedding breakfast at the home of the bride, the bridal pair left for a wedding trip to Saint Louis. After April 1, they will be at home in Kansas City, Kansas.

Latter Day Saints of Independence will observe Good Friday this week with a twelve-to-one-o'clock-service at the Stone Church. There will be an organ program in charge of Mrs. T. A. Beck; Scripture reading; a solo, "He Was Despised," from "The Messiah," by Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, and prayer by Pastor John F. Sheehy.

Second Church

Patriarch T. C. Kelley, the Sunday morning speaker, chose for his theme "What Fruit Are We Bearing?" The choir, directed by Earl Audet, sang "O, Lord, I Will Praise Thee," Mrs. Will Inma and Mrs. Guy Mintun singing the duet parts. John S. Devereaux sang "Nearer, My God to Thee."

Gordon Cable was in charge of the junior services downstairs in which the Easter story was told by Mrs. Totty. Bernice Wisemore also told a story, and there were musical numbers and a reading by some of the young people. An interesting picture study was conducted by Geneva Edmunds.

The six o'clock Doctrine and Covenants Class, taught by Patriarch A. Carmichael, was well attended.

Pastor Will Inman was in charge of the evening service, and Elder Leonard Lee, the speaker, talked on "Our Preparation for Conference." Two numbers were sung by a ladies' quartet from Enoch Hill.

Walnut Park Church

Sunday was home-coming day at Walnut Park, and beginning with the eight o'clock prayer service and continuing throughout the day, good attendances were reported and a fine spirit was manifested.

Elder Lyman Smith presided over the early prayer service, being assisted by Elders George Jenkins and Welton Wood.

Among the four hundred and seventy-two who attended church school were many who formerly were active at Walnut Park, but who have moved to other fields of endeavor. Following a welcome to visitors by Elder W. T. Gard, one of the pioneer members of the congregation, Superintendent Closson called for all of those who were members of the congregation at its beginning and ten persons stood up. A history of Walnut Park, written by Elder Welton Wood, was read by Jessie Anderson; a solo, "The Prodigal," was sung by Sister Bernice Griffiths, and a poem, "The Little Old House in the Rear," written by Sister Laura Mosier, was read by Ruth Bryant.

An organ interlude followed, Drexel Mollison playing during the transition period from church school to morning preaching service. The speaker of the morning was Apostle John W. Rushton, and the upper auditorium was filled; there also was a junior service in the basement in charge of Elder Welton

Wood. Preceding Brother Rushton's sermon a mixed quartet composed of Arlon Chapman, Delta Nace, Evelyn Phillips, and Milford Nace, sang "The Royal Banners Forward Go."

Elder Thomas Newton was the speaker Sunday evening. Special music consisted of an anthem by the choir, "My Jesus, I Love Thee," and a violin and cello duet, "Andante Cantabile," (Tschai-kowsky), played by Eloise Higgins and Milford Nace.

Funeral services for Sister Evaline Grimes were held at the Walnut Park Church Friday, March 23, at ten o'clock in the morning. Pastor Frank McDonald preached and was assisted by Elder George Jenkins. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Grimes was the mother of B. O. Grimes, adult superintendent of the church school.

Brother Walter C. Chappelow, who resided in the Walnut Park district died Friday, March 23. He is survived by two daughters, Miss Gertrude Chappelow and Mrs. Oscar Pinney, and one son, James Chappelow.

Liberty Street Church

The marriage of Elizabeth Reveill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Reveill, and Henry Butler took place Sunday, March 4. The ceremony was performed by Elder John Soderstadt at his home.

The Liberty Street Choir, under the direction of Fred Friend, will present an Easter cantata "The Thorn-crowned King," by Fred B. Holton. In this the story is told of the persecution of Christ, his crucifixion, his burial, and the ascension. Each chorus is beautifully arranged, and the choir is working hard to present the cantata at its best. Everyone is invited to hear this rendition at seven-thirty next Sunday evening.

A number of Liberty Street's singers are members of the General Conference "Elijah" Chorus, and will have part in the performance April 8, in the Auditorium.

Spring Branch Church

About seventy young people enjoyed a Saint Patrick's party at the church last Tuesday night. There were Irish songs and other entertainment and for refreshments Mulligan stew was served. The event was in honor of the service which Sister Irene Roberts has given the young people of this district. The young people, Velma Jones their spokesman, presented Sister Roberts, a book of Doctrine and Covenants, on which her name was inscribed in gold lettering.

At the Sunday morning prayer hour A. J. Tankard read the story of Jesus' triumphant entry to Jerusalem. At the eleven o'clock service the choir sang "My Soul Exulting Sings," and R. Fish was the speaker.

Preceding the evening preaching service, the congregation sang old-time songs. Jesse Smith, Grace Smith, Ethel Fish and Jake Andes sang "Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown?" and Frances Tankard and Fern Belk sang "Is My Name Written There? A double quartet of young people sang "The Way of The Cross Leads Home." The speaker was Apostle J. F. Curtis who read from Luke concerning the sower and the seed. He used a chart of the vineyard and the hours or periods of the gospel upon the earth.

Unusually large attendance was given every service of the day.

The Wednesday night prayer meeting in the south group last week was at the home of a nonmember, Mrs. Scheuseck, and thirty-four were present. J. S. Andes and C. J. Bixon were in charge. Brother and Sister R. J. Lambert were there and Brother Lambert made the opening remarks.

Enoch Hill Church

The class of Busy Workers, taught by E. H. McKean, was in charge of the church school worship period. The girls' quartet, Pearl Chrestensen, Pauline Alexander, Beth Collins, and Helen McDonald, sang. Harold Inman read "My Prayer." Harold is home on a furlough but will soon return to the Navy. The boys' quartet also sang.

Elder H. L. Barto, a former pastor, was the morning speaker. The congregation welcomed him happily and gave good attention to his words. The choir sang "Loyalty Unto Christ," and Sister Amos Allen sang "Father, Comfort Me," assisted by the male quartet, E. H. McKean, Lawrence Martin, David Allen, and Edmond Allen.

Each Sunday morning a member of the conducting class, takes charge of the music of the church school. It is hoped that much good will come from this method.

Patriarch U. W. Greene preached a most interesting sermon on "Passion Week" in the evening.

East Independence Church

Recent speakers at East Independence have been Bishop G. W. Eastwood, Elder Robert Fish, of Spring Branch, and Elder H. J. Friend and T. W. Thatcher, of this district. J. J. Teeter, a former pastor but now of the Stone Church congregation, also spoke recently, and local people were glad to hear him again and to visit with him.

A large gathering of Saints met at the home of Brother and Sister C. Edgerton Monday, March 5, and spent the time in conversations and music. Refreshments were served. Brother and Sister Edgerton have moved to Atherton, and are much missed in this locality. They were faithful and earnest workers.

Our World

Love like a child around our world doth run,
Happy, happy, happy for all that God hath done,
Glad of all the little leaves dancing in the sun.

Even so say I:
Even so say I.

—Alfred Tennyson.

Wabash, Ontario

Grateful for Help of Visiting Priesthood

Members in this city have been happy to have as speakers this year Elder R. T. Brown, of Merlin and Elder Percy Farrow, of Sarnia. Their sermons and kindly advice were much appreciated as was also the musical help of Sister Farrow. Elder Brown came the first of the year and preached for a week. He was followed by Elder Farrow who preached thirty-seven sermons. He baptized eight, and others are near the kingdom.

Brother W. H. Taylor, seventy-four years of age, passed away January 3, after having been a member of the church more than fifty-years. His son, John Taylor, and wife, came from Independence to attend the funeral.

Thayer, Missouri

Appreciate Help of District Workers

Thayer Branch was glad to join with the rest of the church in a day of fasting and prayer March 4. The members felt that they were helped by fasting and by cooperating with the President of the church. They wish to stand ready to do their part in carrying forward the church program.

District President W. E. Haden and Elder Walter Chrestensen were there for the conference which convened March 3 and 4. On Saturday night a program, prepared under the leadership of Sister Aggie Adams, was enjoyed. At this conference seven delegates were selected to represent Southern Missouri District at General Conference. Branch officers for the following year were chosen as follows: Pastor, George Davis; assistant pastor, J. W. Adams; superintendent of church school, Chloe Miller; branch clerk, Bertha McLain; solicitor, Clarence Mayo, and deacon, Elton McGuire.

The sacrament service March 4, was one long to be remembered. The gifts of the gospel were enjoyed, and gladness prevailed. Everyone was edified and greatly blessed.

Thayer Saints appreciate the help of Elder Haden who has been devoted to the interests of all in Southern Missouri District. They hope to see him returned to this district for they feel that he is one of them and is needed to guide and direct.

The Saints were glad to welcome E. C. Shelley and family, from Kennett, Missouri, into their midst, and hope the branch will continue to grow, bringing in new members, and developing new activities.

In presenting their play in November they met with such wide-spread approval, that it was decided to organize a dramatic club. They hope to present one or two plays a year to help raise money. This organization is known as the Nautilus Dramatic Club. It is now preparing for its second attempt at presenting a play. For all this, credit goes to Sister Aggie Adams whose help is deeply appreciated.

Kansas City Stake

Central Church

This congregation was happy to renew its acquaintance with Apostle John W. Rushton at the church period, March 18. As always, Apostle Rushton preached a most instructive and uplifting sermon. The choir furnished special music, "One Hundred Fiftieth Psalm," Franc, under the direction of Eugene Christy. The attendance was fine and the service worth while.

The Central Church O. B. K. Chorus is rehearsing each Sunday evening at six-thirty in preparation for the coming annual music festival.

The Fellowship Study Class has been chosen as the name for the group of young people who meet once a month for educational purposes. The class met Tuesday night at the home of Miss Olive Bricker in Independence, with Cyril Wight as their teacher. They are now studying "How the Bible Grew." Attendance is growing and the combination of study and fellowship with other members makes each meeting an enjoyable one.

Ontario, California

Four Baptized on First Day of Year

God is blessing the members of his church in this place. He has heard the prayers of those who were afflicted and has restored them to health.

Four were added to the church roll the first of this year by baptism. Floyd Swain, of Ontario, and a family of three, Richard H. Peterson and wife, Harrietta, and their daughter, Lucille, of Pomona, were baptized by F. J. Lacey and confirmed by George H. Givens and Brother Lacey at a special service held on the first sacrament Sunday of the year.

A group of girls who have organized as the Tamalia Club, have been doing good work. They are trying to secure funds for classrooms which are much needed. During February they gave a pie supper at the home of the president, Mrs. Fern Roberts. Forty-four people were there and many pies were eaten. This month a box supper was held at the home of Miss Mary Swain. Every two weeks the girls have a candy sale downtown and this is proving a profitable undertaking.

A Bible class is being conducted by F. J. Lacey at Pomona one evening a week, and all other activities are functioning as usual.

Frank Enix, pastor of Fresno Branch, was speaker here Sunday morning, March 11, and gave a good talk. He was visiting friends at Pomona.

The fast and prayer period called for by President F. M. Smith, was observed by many at Ontario and a good spirit prevailed at the sacrament service.

This group enjoyed the visit of Apostle M. A. McConley January 20. He gave them an inspiring message.

Two candidates for baptism were inducted into the church February 18, by Elder S. D. Condit. They are Mrs. Bessie Ultican, wife of Leon Ultican, and William Roy Vreeland. They were confirmed the following Sunday by Elders S. D. Condit and Cecil Gilmore, and in uniting with the church completed two family circles in the gospel.

The work of the women goes forward. An all-day meeting was held February 22, time being spent in quilting and doing other work. A covered-dish luncheon was served at noon. The women meet at the homes of various members twice a month, and the second meeting honors those whose birthdays occur during the month. These workers are preparing for a bazaar to be held later, and are considering other enterprises to help in a financial way.

April Prayer Meeting Themes

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4
Theme: "Fear Not"

"Fear not, let your hearts be comforted, yea, rejoice evermore, and in everything give thanks, waiting patiently on the Lord: for your prayers have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, and are recorded with this seal and testament; the Lord hath sworn and decreed that they shall be granted."—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 1. Given August, 1833.

This revelation was given a little over one hundred years ago, but its admonition applies to us today. We should not burden our hearts with useless fears. The Lord has brought us through other trials, and he will bring us through the trials we have now, if we are faithful. He hears our prayers, and though he may discipline us for our mistakes and transgressions, and to teach us humility and righteousness, yet he will preserve us.

Suggested Hymns:

- 232—"God will take care of you."
- 234—"My times are in thy hand."
- 230—"God is my strong salvation."
- 239—"Where wilt thou put thy trust?"

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11
Theme: "Cleave Unto God"

"And I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall forsake all evil and cleave unto all good, that ye shall live by every word which proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God. . . and whoso layeth down his life in my cause, for my name's sake, shall find it again; even life eternal."—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3.

Though the sacrifice of Christ has redeemed us, and though through the working of faith and repentance and baptism we have received the forgiveness of our sins, we are slow to give up the ways and habits that stained our lives and characters. With every morning's prayer we must renounce evil afresh, and with every evening's worship we must ask God once more to straighten out the tangled threads of our living.

Suggested Hymns:

- 62—"Safely through another week."
- 260—"There's an old, old path."
- 267—"Tenderly, tenderly, lead thou me on."
- 266—"Guide me, O my Savior, guide me."

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18
Theme: "All Things for Good"

"All things wherewith you have been afflicted, shall work together for your good, and to my name's glory saith the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 1.

Even our trials shall result in good, for they shall purify us and purge us of the dross that has hindered our development. When we know that God is working out his purposes for us, the trials are not so hard to endure.

Suggested Hymns:

- 72—"Met in thy sacred name, O Lord."
- 276—"Lord, for tomorrow and its needs."
- 280—"Rock of Ages."
- 281—"My faith looks up to thee."

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25
Theme: "Obedience"

"It is my will that my people shall observe to do all things whatsoever I command them, and that law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me; therefore, I, the Lord, justify you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land;"—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2.

The spirit of rebellion and law breaking that is abroad threatens not only the law, but also our peace and security. It behooves us to lend our strength to all who support the law, the sacredness of life and the security of property.

Suggested Hymns:

- 76—"Sovereign and transforming Grace."
- 294—"I would be true."
- 292—"T'il go where you want me to go."
- 82—"Lord, dismiss us with thy blessing."

The Climber

There is joy in the heart of the climber
That the valley plodders ne'er know;
There's a view from the top of the mountain,
Not seen in the vale below.

There are hazards the climber is taking,
There are pitfalls and snares by the way

That will never be known to the people
Who down in the lowlands stay.

But there's life and clearness of vision,
There is air that exhilarates,
And reward for the toiler's efforts
At the top of the mountain waits.

—Ida M. Thomas.

The district president presided over the conference, and the following were chosen as delegates to General Conference: Elder Hubert and Mrs. Alice Case, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Lena Grice, Mrs. Blanche Northrup, and Mrs. Pauline Brown, Saginaw; Mrs. Emma Rosevear, and Ralph Methner, Beaverton; President and Mrs. F. M. McDowell and Apostle and Mrs. D. T. Williams, Lamoni, Iowa; Elders Eyrton Bartlett, Mrs. Mary Bartlett, Harry Runkler, and Ralph Methner, Midland; Mrs. Winnie M. Hulbert, Bentley; Allen Yager, Coleman; Elder N. A. Carrick, Houghton Lake; Theo Banks, Independence. These delegates were empowered to cast the full vote of the district and in case of division cast majority and minority vote. Motion to approve the sale of Greenbush church property prevailed, the proceeds to be applied on Mikado church property. A communication relative to reunion, from L. E. Grice, secretary of reunion committee, was then read to the assembly for consideration. The conference adjourned to the call of the district president.

Our Departed Ones

TOWNLEY.—Anna Marie Festerson was born at Korp, Denmark, October 18, 1835. Hearing the gospel preached by Latter Day Saint missionaries, she was baptized in 1866. Desiring to be with her church people, she left her native land in 1867, and came to America. Met William Townley in Utah, and was married to him January 15, 1868. Not being satisfied with church conditions in Utah, they moved to Iowa in 1870. A home was established in Sioux Township, Monona County, where they lived until 1906, when they retired and moved to Moorhead. Six children were born to them three of whom, William, Harry, and Aggie, with the father preceded her in death. Mrs. Townley had always had excellent health and was ill only five days preceding her death. She passed from life January 2, 1934. Surviving are three children: Joseph, of Sioux City; Etta Jennings and Will, of Moorhead; eight grandchildren, seventeen great-grandchildren, and many friends. Funeral services were held January 3, at the Saints' church in Moorhead in charge of Elder T. O. Strand. In harmony with her request Elder Mark Jensen was the speaker. Interment was in Spring Valley Cemetery beside her husband and sister.

VANCE.—James L. Vance, son of Perry and Margaret Weese Vance, was born November 10, 1845, in Jackson County, Ohio. He died August 25, 1933, at his home at Jackson, Ohio. He was baptized into the church September 6, 1884, by T. J. Beatty and confirmed by James E. Moler and L. R. Devore. He was well liked by all who knew him, and his desire to serve his Master brought him in contact with such noble men as U. W. Greene, James Jefferies, Gomer Griffiths, L. R. Devore, and others. He was ordained a teacher May 15, 1901. Married Sarah E. Hooton September 3, 1868, who preceded him in death just a few weeks. They spent nearly sixty-five years in happy wedlock and were nearly forty-nine years together in the church. To them eight children were born, two passing away in infancy. Left to mourn are two sons, Eugene, of Jackson, Ohio; Harley, of Chillicothe; four daughters: Lucinda Baileys and Emma Burns, of Limerick, Ohio; Mrs. Minnie Rowland, of Jackson; Mrs. A. H. Overley, of Joliet, Illinois; his grandson, Rolla Vance, and family, with whom he lived; one brother, J. M. Vance, of Jackson; twenty-two grandchildren, thirty-four great-grandchildren, and a host of friends. Funeral services were held in the Saints' church at Limerick, Ohio, A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, preaching the sermon, assisted by Floyd Rockwell, of Dayton. Interment was in Limerick Cemetery.

SCOTT.—Bertha Mariam Paxton was born at Wheatland, Missouri, December 17, 1879. She was married to Herbert Scott, February 12, 1901, at Wheatland, and was baptized a member of the church August 31, 1901, by F. L. Sawley. Passed away March 9, 1934, at Sarcoxie, Missouri. Funeral services were held at the home at Sarcoxie and at Wheatland, Elder A. W. Duemler, of Springfield, officiating at the latter place. Mrs. Scott leaves besides her husband, seven children: Esther, Theodore, and Ora, of Independence, Missouri; Walter, Elmer, and Kenneth, of the home, and Anna Belle Long, of Lawrence, Kansas; one grandchild, one sister, and three brothers.

BROWN.—Nettie Brown, of Vinalhaven, Maine, was born August 24, 1867, and departed this life February 6, 1934, after a long illness. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, July 25, 1912. She had been an invalid for years, but was faithful to the church. Leaves to mourn, her husband, Alfred Brown, and a host of other relatives and friends.

CLIFT.—Richard Clift was born in London, England, July 10, 1853, and died at his home in Toronto, Ontario, February 21, 1934, after a long illness. His first wife died a few years after their marriage, leaving a young daughter. He then married Matilda Newton who survives him, along with one daughter, Mrs. Hockaday, of Guelph, and three daughters and one son in Toronto. Fourteen years ago he came to Guelph, and after a few years took his family to Toronto. He joined the church in 1891, and was ordained a priest soon after. He was then ordained an elder, an office that he honored until his death. He was a personification of all that is Christian. Funeral sermon was by Elder James Pycoc, assisted by Elder James Wilson.

MARSHALL.—Charles Edward Marshall was born at Manchester, England, February 2, 1880, and died at Willowdale, Ontario, March 18, 1934. When a young man he married Gertrude Wake and resided in Hazel Grove, Cheshire, England, from where he brought his family to Niagara Falls, Ontario, about twelve years ago. While there he joined the church, and was ordained a deacon, which office he held until his death. For the past few years he resided in Toronto. He suffered from heart trouble for some time, which caused his death. He leaves one daughter and three sons, as well as his wife, and many friends. Funeral sermon was by Elder James Pycoc, assisted by Elder W. J. Bavington.

The Pigeonhole

■ Let's Be Cheerful!

By Alma M. Coombs

He had no time, this friend of mine,
No time for fun or frolic;
Life being short, his soul's confine
Was labor melancholic.

My life is not so long for me
But that it might be longer;
Yet, if the days pass cheerfully
Each night I seem much stronger.

This sad old world, so I've been told,
Is filled with troubles many;
Yet for a trouble, new or old,
I'd give not e'en a penny.

Oh, life is hard, I must admit,
And days are not all sunny;
But feeling sad and liking it
Seems anything but funny.

So why go 'round with solemn face;
Behold! The sun is shining.
Bring out a smile, put it in place;
Bring out your silver lining.

I tell you folks, a pleasant word
Beats sermons by the dozens;
And handclaps, too, so I have heard,
Makes strangers feel like cousins.

■ A Missionary Story

Arthur B. Taylor, of Independence, gave us the following story of an experience had by Arthur Leverton, for many years a staunch defender of the faith. While Brother Leverton was preaching, an intoxicated man came on the platform and dared him to "command the Lord to throw me off this platform."

Brother Leverton looked at him calmly and said: "I never ask the Lord to do what I can do myself." And seizing the fellow, tossed him off the platform and out into the crowd.

(There are a good many missionary stories known among church people that, if properly told, would be very interesting for publication. Perhaps other readers could furnish us with stories.)

Welcome, Conference Visitors

Coming to Zion From various parts of the world the delegates and ex-officio members of the General Conference are gathering. The Saints are coming to Zion! (How significant the expression!) They come to participate in the legislative, educational, and religious activities of the conference, and to enjoy social intercourse with friends, relatives and those drawn close in the bonds of fraternity; and from all these to draw encouragement and have hope revived that we draw near with a degree of certainty goals and objectives as a people. It is well that they do all this, for the discouragements inevitably to be met in any great progressive work must not be allowed to remain to hinder.

Greetings Extended The Herald Editors extend greetings of welcome to the General Conference visitors, and join them in anticipating a conference which in its spirituality and careful and prayerful religious activities and ceremonies will build us up towards greater achievement in fulfilling the purposes of the church. Few peoples have had either a more attractive or ever present incentive towards closely cooperative endeavors along definite lines. Divine illumination has pointed out the goal and crystallized the gospel of the Master into social purposiveness. Divine commandments have indicated the road we should travel and the manner of our work in doing so.

Conditions That Have Hindered But unfortunately for us, especially so under present conditions, we have been hesitant to move into our tasks and slothful in our efforts, and disunity of purpose has resulted, with the inevitable slowing up of our march.

Future Improvements These unfortunate conditions can be changed for better ones, if in the spirit of humility, love, and religious fervor we unitedly determined to delay no longer in obeying the commandments given us and listen to the oft repeated entreaty, "Enter in, my people, to your tasks and the blessings to follow."

Our Opportunity A sense of humility cannot but accrue from a realization of our wonderful opportunity to represent God in bringing about the needed social reforms which will follow the application of Christian philosophy and principles to our interrelationships. To sense this responsibility will also engender greater determination to carry on.

So we approach this conference with the belief that the demands of the hour are to reevaluate the instructions of the past, take careful inventory of our resources, combine our forces in unified efforts, remove the handicaps under which we labor, catch a new vision of our goals, and move onward.

Welcome, Saints, delegates, and officers of the conference!

F. M. S.

The Seventy-sixth General Conference

A Cordial Welcome Our readers will have already covered the welcome issued by President Frederick M. Smith to the visitors and delegates of the General Conference beginning this Friday, April 6. Local people and friends are planning to do their best to make visitors feel comfortable and at home during their stay. There are adequate facilities in the city to provide good accommodations for all who come. It is only necessary for visitors to make their wants known.

Outstanding Aims Conversation with the officers at the Auditorium reveals three dominant interests in their minds: an improved missionary method, a prepared priesthood, and an intelligent devoted people. These aims are practical, and it is necessary to realize them in order to make progress toward our goal, Zion. It is another statement of the aims expressed on another occasion by President Smith: "to evangelize the world and to Zionize the church." To the accomplishment of these objectives the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric will devote themselves assiduously. They will figure strongly in church literature and news in the coming months.

Auditorium Ready The Auditorium will be in better shape to provide the space needed for the convenience of the conference than ever before. Improvements and decorations have been installed to make the building more pleasant, and the generous seating capacity will give space for all who come. It requires but little imagination to picture what this great building will be when, inside and out, it has been given its final decoration.

Historic Significance It will be one hundred and four years on the opening day, April 6, since the organization of the church under the leadership of Joseph Smith; and it will be seventy-four years since "Young Joseph," his son, came to the Reorganization at the General Conference in Amboy, Illinois. Each of those efforts required great courage for the men who participated to go ahead with the work they were destined to do. Joseph the founder, in 1830, brought the organization into a world that was deeply opinionated and contentious, not far removed in spirit from the dark ages of religious intolerance and persecution; and he tasted of both during his career as a church leader. Thirty years later, Young Joseph also faced a world fanatically prejudiced against the religion he espoused and against the name of his father. In his fifty-four years as president of the church he lived to see much of that prejudice die down, and the name of his father vindicated. The years 1830 and 1860 were significant for the fact that they ushered in a new era,—of increased light in one case and of increased tolerance in the next.

Another Era Begins Now There is a widespread feeling that a new era is opening before the church today. Perhaps it is best not to try to characterize it with a name. But we know that it is bringing us new humility, new wisdom. We have been made to open our eyes to realities. And we know our power and the power of the church to endure. For every power which could act to weaken and destroy the church during the past dozen years has exerted tremendous pressure. If the church could have been broken, it would have yielded under the strains to which it has been subjected in these years. But it has survived, and our faith has survived with it, and we are now ready to go forward with our new work toward new accomplishments.

Slowly and Surely When the Lord wanted to arrange for a chosen people, he did not select a whole tribe or nation for the purpose. He started with one man—Abraham. He was in no hurry. He had plenty of time. It was a part of the destiny of Abraham's descendants to spend a few generations in Egypt as slaves to learn humility; it was a part of their schooling to wander in the heat and barrenness of the desert to learn frugality, and it was a part of their discipline to wait at the very gates of their Promised Land for a period of forty years to learn patience. The Lord was taking a long time to develop that people for a work that he had appointed for them. But through those centuries he did develop a people that the persecutions of centuries and being scattered across the world could not overcome or change. And he is still working with them toward his own ends.

Impatience We sometimes become impatient at the slowness, with which events move, and the little progress that is made, but we may also see that any sure growth is generally slow. Quick developments are often impermanent. Why do we chafe at a hundred years when the Lord works in thousands? Yet the slowness is ours, not his. Saint Paul said of the children of Israel, waiting forty years at the gates of the promised land: "So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief."

The church will go from this conference with a clearer perception of its missionary aims and methods, with a greater feeling of responsibility for its priesthood, and with a deeper devotion on the part of the people. These realizations are steps toward the ideals which are our goals.

The Whole Church One thing should not be forgotten: this is the General Conference of the whole church, not of the delegates nor of the officers alone. The faith, the sympathy, the prayers, and the interest of the whole body of the membership are necessary to make the conference a success and to carry out its determinations. The officers appeal to the members everywhere to so remember the conference, feeling that they are a part of it, and that its success is depending in no small measure upon them.

Take charity, a choice fruit of the Christian spirit and one of the characteristic virtues of individualism. Well, whatever other good uses we may have made of charity, we have overlooked it to cover a multitude of sins. What a convenient cloak it has been to hide the arrogance, hardness and injustice developed in the unrestricted scramble for profits. We have received money from the labor of children with one hand, and with the other endowed schools for the education of children! And not only so, we have discovered that our charity, no matter how genuine, can no longer be relied upon to meet human need. There was a time when destitute families in any community could be cared for by the common bounty of the citizens, but that time has passed. Charity is not enough; we must develop a more adequate virtue. Perhaps this new virtue will be imagination, or cooperation, or a sense of justice.—Charles H. Heimsath in "New Times—New Virtues!" The Christian Century.

The old moralities seem mere foolishness now to many of our younger people who are testing every ancient law by new experience with a rash but rather splendid courage, as though they were new Adams and Eves without any past or any guidance. The present phase of civilization is ending, as a new page is turning over in the book of life. It is passing from us before our eyes, though many do not see. In a little while it will have been replaced by something else—better or worse. Who knows?—Sir Philip Gibbs in If I Could Preach Just Once.

Blue Birds and Temple Builders

Complying with an insistent demand on the part of a number of girl leaders in many parts of the church, new emphasis is being given to the former Blue Bird and Temple Builder programs. This is being done through the Department of Religious Education, under the advice of the Girls' Headquarters Committee.

The Blue Bird Band is a purely local program for girls of 8 to 12 years of age. A supplement is being prepared to accompany the Blue Bird Manual. It will be helpful if leaders of junior girls will write to the Headquarters Committee, reporting their organization. The committee desires to make such changes in the activity program as will make it most serviceable.

Temple Builders are girls' clubs organized locally, within the young people's division, to meet the needs of girls from 16 to 20 years of age. Mimeographed materials will be provided by the Girls' Headquarters Committee, offering a wide range of club activities, especially in the line of culture and skill which form an important part of a young woman's equipment for life. The committee will appreciate word from young women or their leaders, which will help them to discover the improvements needed in the former Temple Builder program.

Men You Ought to Know

A. NEAL DEAVER
The New Business Manager,
Graceland College

Since the selection of N. Ray Carmichael as one of the counselors to the Presiding Bishop, it has been necessary to find someone to take Brother Carmichael's place as Business Manager at Graceland College.

A happy choice has been found in the person of A. Neal Deaver, a former Graceland student, who has his degree from the School of Commerce in the University of Chicago, specializing in business administration. Besides his academic qualifications, he has had long experience in practical business affairs, and during his student days at the university was assistant to Professor Dinsmore, head of the University of Chicago hospital system.

Graceland and the church will be happy to bring to their service so able a man.

Real action is in silent moments. The epochs of our lives are not in the visible facts of our choice of a calling, our marriage, our acquisition of an office, and the like, but in a silent thought by the way-side as we walk; in a thought which revises our entire manner, and says, "Thou hast done, but it were better thus."—Emerson

The Women's Work

One of the women of the church, who for a number of years has been actively interested in its work, on being addressed concerning the women's department or the need of some form of organized expression for the women, wrote me a personal letter giving her reaction to my request for participation in some of the council work of the organization. I feel sure that the women of the church, as well as others, will enjoy reading her comments and hence present an extract from her letter, feeling sure that our readers will enjoy it. She says:

"I remember many years ago hearing you address the Women's Department, maybe it was the old Daughters of Zion, and a story you told then. Perhaps I remember it imperfectly but it was something about someone, probably Cousin Ruth, going into a shop with you to buy shoes, and objecting because the ones shown her 'looked like a man's shoes,' and you quoted the clerk as saying, 'After all, there is nothing that looks quite so much like a man's foot as a woman's foot.' You made the point that there was nothing quite so much like a man's mind as a woman's mind, a sentiment that I applauded from the very depths of my radical young soul. I still feel something the same way, and if ours were any other kind of organization than the one we have with its fixed priesthood groups, I would say emphatically that present tendencies are away from 'wholly woman's groups to organizations enrolling both men and women.' But as long as all the real activities of the men of the church (unfortunately for the lay member) seem indefinitely scheduled to take place behind closed doors in the so-called 'priesthood meetings,' there will need to be some outlet for the public-minded woman, who loves to have some opportunity for self-expression.

"I might also suggest that whatever evolution the new women's work may take, that it may be away from the great complex, unwieldy efforts of some of our past years, in which we attempted to compass all the fields of women's interests in departments, committees, purposes and what not. I would like to see a simple, flexible organization, with a purpose synonymous with the purpose of the church, a machine that could be adapted to any work asked of it in connection with the great purposes of the church, and localized whenever necessary to community needs. In common with all who have worked in foreign lands, I have had great difficulty in adapting organizations admirably suited to independence, Missouri, to the needs of the Saints in Australia and Hawaii. And in my opinion the women are not the only blunderers in this respect. If a mere woman can criticize the missionary policy of a great church, I would say that our insistence upon using such methods as the itinerant preacher and the protracted meeting (two purely American religious developments) in an effort to evangelize the world accounts in part for our failure as foreign missionaries. I would not be so bold as to mention this except that on one occasion when I was talking to one of the apostles upon what I considered very revolutionary ideas of foreign missions, this man answered, 'Why, those are F. M.'s ideas!' I think Canadian women should be so organized that they may whole-heartedly cooperate with any movement, even purely Canadian, for the betterment of society; and the same with Australian and English women. There are many times when local women's departments might well throw the weight of their entire influence and spend their whole time in purely local affairs. For instance in movements which will now be made to keep saloons out of certain communities. At such times of crisis I believe our women should be urged to put their entire forces at the disposal of those who are fighting for righteousness and good-citizenship."

Volunteer Missionaries

In a recent letter from Brother A. E. Anderton, the alert president of the Southern Ohio District, he comments upon the fact that the net gain for the district is 134, which he feels is fairly good under the conditions existing. Speaking of this gain he says:

"Our gain of 134 net was made possible by the consecrated local men and I am very happy to be associated with men who show by their lives that they want to learn the real meaning of life.

"Southern Ohio again salutes you, and pledges their support."

We congratulate the Southern Ohio District on the showing made and trust the coming year will see a still further increase.

On the Death of Patriarch W. H. Greenwood

The Herald Editors and the officers of the church are grieved to learn of the passing of Patriarch W. H. Greenwood, of the British Mission. Their feelings could not be more fittingly expressed than in the following memorial and tribute by Apostle John W. Rushton, who knew the departed brother so well:

The unexpected news of the passing of William H. Greenwood, patriarch of the British Mission, came as a shock. Since 1892 I have known Brother Greenwood personally and through the years of ministerial work developed a rare friendship with him. I share with many who have known him, many pleasant memories. In 1932, on my return to this mission, it was a great pleasure to renew my associations with him, and his cheerful support was a great help. He was always ready to do his part in sympathetic counsel and kindly service to those who needed his help brought many under his influence. His ability as a preacher was highly esteemed and his loyalty to the Cause of Christ won the affection and esteem of those who enjoyed his pulpit ministry.

His name is revered throughout the mission, not only in England but in Scotland and Wales, where he has done missionary work. We express to his immediate family, as well as the wide circle of friends our deepest sympathy and hope that the fine example which he left will stimulate others to carry on now that he has been called to his rest. I am sure the people in Great Britain will indeed have Brother William Henry Greenwood "in their hearts always."

"Elijah" Soloists

Those who will sing solo parts in the General Conference oratorio, "Elijah," are Arthur Oakman, of Berkeley, California, who will be Elijah, and four Independence singers: Mrs. Pauline James Arnson and Miss Fern Griggs, sopranos; Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, contralto, and George Anway, tenor.

Last Saturday Albert N. Hoxie, director of the oratorio, rehearsed the soloists in the studio of Paul N. Craig at Independence. Sunday he met with the Auditorium Orchestra which will assist in the performance, and later in the afternoon rehearsed the massed choirs of Independence, Kansas City and neighboring points. This week all musicians are directing their efforts to assure the excellence of the General Conference performance April 8, in the evening.

John A. Judd Thirty Years Pastor of Enfield

"Being favored with good health, our brother has not missed twelve meetings, including departmental work, during the past thirty-three years. During these years he has been able to carry out work for the church, some of these activities including, ten years as general superintendent for Sunday school work in the British Isles, and assisting at the various mission conferences and reunions, together with much useful missionary work, and traveling many miles to visit the scattered Saints," writes William T. Goullee in "An Appreciation" to John A. Judd who this year and month, March, celebrates his thirtieth anniversary as pastor of Enfield Branch, England.

The March issue of The Southern England and Wales District Herald commemorates this anniversary, printing tributes to Brother Judd from his sons, from church officials in America, President F. M. Smith and Apostle John W. Rushton, and from fellow workers in the British Isles.

Trio of Patriarchs Attend Kirtland District Conference

Patriarchs George W. Robley, John F. Martin, and J. A. Gunsolley attended the Kirtland conference held at Youngstown, Ohio, a gathering remarkable in many respects. Each of these veteran ministers made a definite contribution to the conference. Brother Gunsolley gave a sermon early Saturday evening which was full of sound advice. Brother Robley was the Sunday morning speaker, and Brother Martin ministered in the evening. All three presided over a Sunday afternoon prayer meeting which was inspirational to all.

W. H. Greenwood, English Patriarch, Is Dead

Patriarch William H. Greenwood, beloved of the Saints of the British Isles, passed quite suddenly to the beyond March 16, after a few days' illness. He had taken an apparent change for the better, then suddenly collapsed, his heart being affected.

Born at Stafford, England, April 9, 1867, Brother Greenwood entered the church in 1879, being baptized by J. Dewsnup. He held various offices in the priesthood, and devoted years of service to the latter-day cause. He was the friend of many. Was ordained a priest in 1890, an elder in 1894, a seventy in 1903, and a patriarch August 3, 1930. His wife, Elizabeth A. Greenwood, preceded him in death in 1926. The funeral was held at the James Street Church, Bradford, and interment was in Philips Park Cemetery.

Early Conference Arrivals

A number of General Conference delegates and visitors arrived in Independence last week, and now they come hourly, seeking to establish themselves before the conference sessions begin.

Among the early arrivals was Albert N. Hoxie, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, who will direct the General Conference oratorio, "Elijah"; Arthur Oakman, from his pastorate of East Bay and Danvers Street Branches, Berkeley and San Francisco, California, who will sing in the role of Elijah; Evangelist and Mrs. J. A. Gunsolley from their New England Mission; Elder and Mrs. Arthur Ferret, delegates from Australia and parents of Colin Ferret; Mrs. Emma McDole, of Seattle, Washington, director of religious education of Seattle and British Columbia District and director of the Seattle church school, with her son, Marvin, and her sister, Mrs. Charles Meeker, of Sumner, Washington; Elder Stanley J. Fout and wife, of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. Brother Fout is president of Spokane District, and Sister Fout is director of religious education for the district; Carlyle Kueffer, of Oklahoma City, student and teacher of church hymnology; Joseph Nuckles, of Los Angeles, pastor of Inglewood Mission in that city, and others.

Young People

By Lottie Clark Diggle

NO ONE had spoken for several minutes at the Bentley dinner table. The boarders most of whom were young people of both sexes, were concentrating on Ma Bentley's famous chicken and noodles. The monotonous click of knives and forks was suddenly interrupted by "Ma," who began belligerently.

"I don't know what young people are coming to nowadays. I went out in the storm this afternoon to get a ball of crochet cotton to finish my centerpiece, when who should I meet but Allison Ried. She had on a ratskin coat and was bareheaded, but I suppose she might as well be, as wearin' one of them hats that look like a teapot stand. My land! She hadn't a thing to keep the calves of her legs warm but a pair of silk stockings. I wore a pair of cashmere and one of silk and wool, and was none too warm," continued Ma virtuously.

"And talk about paint! Her mouth looked for all the world like a piece of raw beef steak. Besides, I should think a girl would be ashamed to be seen walkin' down the street with a young whippersnapper, that had one of them poison cigarettes stuck in his mouth. When I was young, no well mannered young man would smoke when he was walkin' with a girl; but Allison was smilin' as broad as could be expected, considerin' that her face was stiff with the cold. That fellow was bareheaded too and his hair was standin' straight on end and was full of snow."

Here Ma paused to sniff contemptuously.

SUDDENLY Pa Bentley, who had become meek, timid, and self effacing from long years of living with Ma, brought his clenched fist down with such force upon the table that the crockery rattled violently and the green glass vase of sweet peas toppled into the cabbage salad. The worm had turned at last. If Ma's deceased great uncle Jeremiah had appeared in their midst, she could not have been more dumb-founded.

"Look here!" yelled the little man. "I have listened to that kind of talk all my life. When I was young, all the narrow minded old maids and bigoted grown ups harangued about what saints they were when they were young, and declared positively that we were all going to the dogs. But they weren't and we didn't," continued Pa, rather incoherently.

"And you, Ma," declared the erstwhile timid soul, fixing her with a relentless glare, "know that the girls of your generation were not one whit better than those of today. I don't approve of cigarette smoking. It is a filthy habit and ruins the health of any boy or young man who indulges in it, but what about your old beau, Ben McFadden? I've seen him thrust his chew of tobacco in his cheek many a time when he was talking to you."

"And the nice girls didn't paint their faces in those days but they wore unsanitary rats in their hair, and pulled in their waists until they looked like human dumb bells. They tied a contraption about their waists, which was a cross between a roasting pan and a tea cosy. I think they called them bustles. Their necks were imprisoned in stiff collars, three and a half inches high and only a couple of dozen women could walk behind one another in a block at one time, because of the length of their trains. Then didn't need any street sweepers in those good old days. I can tell you."

TALK ABOUT HATS!" Pa went on, vindictively. "They called one kind 'peach baskets' but they closely resembled the old time milk pan and were skewered through with hat pins that were a menace to suffering mankind. Another thing which I recall vividly is that the tender hearted females of those days went about wearing poor, slaughtered feathered creatures on their head gear."

"Their leg of mutton sleeves were so stiffened with canvas that a fellow couldn't get near enough to propose. I've heard it took twelve yards to make a dress, and what with steels and skirt binding, braid, hooks and eyes, stiffening and linings, it was an expensive and fatiguing process to have a new dress in the good old days."

"No doubt," continued Pa, more gently, "there are more girls who go astray nowadays than when we were young; and it is sad but only too true that the majority of those in our corrective institutions are young men, but the major portion of our young people today are actuated by an idealism and genuine religious fervor that was practically unknown among the youth of our day. We were all about an average—the luke warm kind—materialistic, self centered, negatively good. Today righteous young people want to be good for something to serve humanity. They are assets to the community, to the church and to the nation."

"And if they want to wear socks and pancake hats or go bareheaded, I for one, say 'Let them.' I cannot see that it harms anyone but themselves. However I have noticed that those who come down like sledge hammers on the failings of others, usually do so to cover their own short comings. So there!"

Ideas, Discussion and News for the Young People of the Church

AND Pa Bentley sat down amid a silence that to say the least, was electrifying.

"Well, Pa," gasped Ma, at length, "I must say I didn't think you had it in you."

"Will you all rise and drink a toast with me?" cried sweet faced Shirley Blythe, holding her glass of water high in the air. "Here is to Mr. Thomas Bentley, Defender of the Oppressed, who has not forgotten the days of his youth! May he ever have courage to uphold those who are misjudged."

With one accord the group arose, clinked their glasses and drank with enthusiasm.

"And here's to Mother Bentley, the best cook and the most efficient nurse that ever blessed a homeless group of boarders!" volunteered Edgar Sparling, who thought Ma looked a trifle down-cast.

"Hurrah for Mother Bentley!" they shouted simultaneously.

"It does beat all," said Ma, glancing appealingly around the table, "what a difference it makes when we hear both sides of a story! I declare I'm ashamed of myself when I think how blind I've been all these years."

At the conclusion of this humble little speech, the boarders joined hands and whirled merrily around Pa and Ma Bentley, singing lustily. "For they are jolly good fellows."

Toronto Branch has a team known as the Latter Day Saints' Maple Leaf in the Toronto Inter-church Athletic Association. Brother Bertrum Williams is first vice president of the association this year. The organization includes almost all denominations. When Brother F. M. ## God's Care

A traveler, in an inn one evening, was thanking God for his wonderful care during the day. He told how, while he rode, his horse stumbled and fell in a dangerous place, but the rider had been unhurt. A fellow traveler said it was good, but God had been better to him than that. All day he had ridden over a rough country, and not once had his horse stumbled.—Young People's Leader.

The Financial Obligation of Youth to the Church

By Vernon Lundeen

THE RELATION OF WEALTH to the kingdom of God is an important consideration. The founder of our religion, Jesus, clearly presented the principles of economics which must control those who are seeking that desirable condition of social righteousness, Zion. Most important, basic, fundamental of these principles is that wealth is not a primary object of desire. Wealth is purely instrumental: the values in religion and character are intrinsic. Hence, in the contemplation of the financial obligation of the youth to the church, we deal with the most instrumental of values, those which are worth while only insofar as they are used correctly and their use motivated properly.

Because our Latter Day Saint philosophy is but a reiteration of the teachings of Jesus we draw directly on his works for principles. He saw in his own day what is so evident in ours, that a large part of the greed, cruelty, insincerity, and hardship which plague society arises from the fact that wealth is regarded as a primary good. Then, as now, men said that they wanted money, not for its own sake but for what it would procure. Our own people use that thought content to excuse a great variety of economic abuses, but the issue is only confused thus. For wealth is not gold or silver or bank notes. Wealth is what money procures. That is the only way in which the church as an organization finds value in money. Men and women have greatly desired things always—houses, lands, flocks, herds, jewels, furniture, automobiles, luxuries. But Jesus ever insisted that life does not consist in the possession of things. Their value is secondary. Succeeding in learning this basic principle, our generation will have gained that which every other has failed to recognize and appreciate until too late.

WE WISH to be served. Money can obtain all kinds of service; it can remove the disagreeables from our path, and supply us with all those conditions that make life easy and pleasant. Jesus found for himself and taught us out of his experience that the richest blessings in life consist in rendering service than in securing it. Men in all ages have proved the truth of that principle for themselves.

Christ spoke quite as much to those who greatly desired money as to those who possessed it. He said that the kingdom of God does not come—that is to say, the right social order does not come—because men are so engrossed with money getting that they are not willing to give attention to preparing for it. The supreme good, the far values, are lost because we are so busy with subordinate goods. Hence, and speaking negatively, the financial obligations of the youth to the church is not primarily the payment of monies, the filing of inventories or the consecrating of surplus. Although these are important they are secondarily so, and should follow and come as a result of the proper knowledge of the instrumentality of wealth and the trusteeship of possessions.

In further consideration of the teachings of Jesus, we learn that wealth was not of any object to him personally. He spent himself in the endeavor to bring men into such relations with one another and with God that love should obtain among them and “all the fruits of selfishness should disappear.” He urged as the supreme end, “Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness.”

IT IS for our generation and each other one to decide what is involved in a social order founded on the great principle of love and then to bend every effort to bring it to pass. We cannot go to the teachings of Jesus to find the details for organizing industry, but we can derive from his life and words that the supreme considerations must not be dividends, but must be “the manhood of the workers, the sweetness of their homes, the womanliness of their wives, the hopefulness of their children.” We can quote no teaching of Jesus on the subject of the tenure of the land, but the principles of generous justice and love make it clear that we must use the land to grow men, the while speculative profits and enormously large financial returns to a few people are unimportant, are fatal to the success of the company. Our financial obligation to the church includes the recognition and appreciation of this principle.

Invariably, whenever a human good and an economic one were in opposition, Jesus' policy was to choose the human good. The practice of no other principle which affects us is so desirable and much needed today. It is the fundamental obligation, financial or otherwise, of the youth to the church today. Were it being realized we should be well along the way toward that satisfactory condition, Zion. And Jesus believed that this would prove a practical doctrine, just as the men of our church have so firmly believed it that they have and are giving their lives for it.

It is important to remember the second member of the great sentence, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Jesus expected that the kingdom of God would have an economic phase. He knew that the people required food and clothing and did not expect them to forget the use and need of these. He insisted that "a rightly organized society, careful of human values, would be an economically prosperous one."

HEREIN lies the problem the solution for which men have searched always yet only Jesus found. The urgency of the kingdom of God is not felt by those whose lives are guarded and surrounded with comfort. The very possession of wealth constitutes the moral danger. It is human to care more for them than for great social interests. It is the great danger, selfishness. While Jesus regarded wealth as involving danger he recognized its power, and consequently the responsibility of its administration. In the strange parable of the unjust steward he taught how that shrewd man employed money to make friends. But good men can and should use wealth in such a way that the great human friendship, Zion, may be builded. In a complex society like ours, this principle of the trusteeship of possessions must have varied and great applications. Jesus' conception of the fraternal character of the society of the children of God led to the conclusion that the wealthy brother must care for the poorer. That care was to be intelligent and loving in purpose. He believed that wherever there was need, there also was responsibility. Thus when Zaccheus caught the spirit of Jesus' work he became generous with his money. Pausing for a moment, let us give attention to the seeming difference in principle illustrated by the action of Jesus toward Zaccheus and the rich young ruler. To Zaccheus Jesus is recorded as having said no word as to what Zaccheus should do with his wealth. He recognized perhaps, by the power of his discernment, the change that was being wrought in the attitude of the man. There came a recognition and appreciation of his stewardship. Undoubtedly, the rich young ruler was no wealthier than Zaccheus but he refused to recognize the instrumentality of his wealth and Jesus' efforts to show him his great opportunity to achieve satisfaction were lost. Had the young man grasped the opportunity held out to him he would have been led to use his wealth to purchase that for which he searched, happiness. He turned away sorrowing, the experience of the human race.

Jesus did not deal with the problem of the danger of making men shiftless by liberal gifts (a danger which is apparent and feared today). His faith compelled him to believe that men would respond to love, "love begetting love, sacrifice begetting sacrifice." As one author of a book on moral values has so aptly said, "It is as necessary for us to apply our sociology and economic science to the conditions of our life as to make use of antiseptic surgery for the wounded instead of pouring in oil and wine." Thus when we have the spirit of the good Samaritan we follow Jesus.

OUR GREAT NEED OF TODAY is to put person above wealth. We wonder just how far our church will climb in its attempt to build a social order if its youth forgets or never learns the relative value between men and things.

Jesus laid down the Golden Rule of justice. He placed persons on the upper level; wealth and possessions on the low level of instrumentality. He did not denounce the rich but rather, laid the responsibility upon the rich to meet the conditions created by the institution of wealth. He reminded the man suffering from injustice that his clamorous demands for his share had likewise their moral dangers. He expected that the kingdom of God would be economically sound, not by an uprising of the poor to confiscate the possessions of the rich, but by the generous realization of the rich that the responsibility of removing all injustice was in their hands. These things are our best hope for our new social order of today.

We have endeavored to consider our financial obligation to the church in such a way that emphasis would be placed, not primarily upon the filing of inventories or the exact payment of tithes due, but rather on our gaining an appreciation of the whole purpose behind the work of the church. Since 1830 our people have filed inventories and paid tithes yet we do not enjoy a zionic situation today. Perhaps our people have felt that God needed our money. Can we hope to establish Zion with just wealth or will it be the result of a people so giving of themselves that Zion's economic realm will succeed of a natural consequence. God owns all things. That which He most desires is the obedient hearts of men.

For clarity let us catalog the steps that we should follow to fulfill our financial obligation to the church:

1. Examine the teachings of the church to determine their social value and significance.
2. Study the entire (Continued on page 435.)

Lesson Three—April 14

The Stone Cut Out of the Mountain

Daniel 2 is one of the prophecies in interpreting which we need to be on our guard against confusing symbols with the thing symbolized; or truth with the means used to express or reveal it. Throughout the lessons of this quarter we should relate the major prophecies of the Bible to one another frequently—the "mountain of the Lord's house" to "The Stone cut out of the mountain" or to "The highway of the people" and the rest. Take time to contemplate the text of the prophecy.

Verse forty-four of this prophecy sheds more light, perhaps, than any other single verse. And we have reason for using it as a key passage because it so evidently sets out the theme of prophecy, which is Godly Government. "The God of heaven shall set up a kingdom."

EVOLUTION IN GOVERNMENT

It is not difficult to see in the history of governmental institutions a movement toward a popular electorate—an age in which governments generally are to be embodiments of the free moral will of free peoples. Of course the movement has not been steady. Society does not evolve that way. Democracy of one sort or another has left a spotty record. Nations have shifted back and forth from one mode of government to another. But the outcome of political evolution is to be, as some think it is now in spots, government of the people, by the people, for the people.

FORMS OF GOVERNMENT

"It was not until the 12th century that anyone thought of choosing a smaller number of men to speak and act in behalf of all in matters of government."

In the 16th century, the seven provinces of The Netherlands, on their revolt against Spain, adopted the republican form of government. Since then there have been many shifts to this form of government. Switzerland, Great Britain, and France, each in turn adopted the representative form of government. And since the World War most of the European governments shifted to this form of government. In spite of certain reversions, this is the age of representative democracy, which, as we now know it, is a distinctively modern institution. This is the age of "miry clay" government—the age when "the stone" is to be cut out of the mountain. This is the age of The Government of God.

IRON AND MIRY CLAY

This iron—miry clay prophecy is no puzzle once we take the time to analyze it. Our own nation is a good example. It is divided territorially for political purposes. The voters of each division choose what they call "representatives." The senators, congressmen, aldermen, or whatnot, chosen in this manner, become the principal organs of federal, state, county and city government. In practice, no one, with the possible exception of executives and judiciary, is chosen to represent the nation or realm; but each is spokesman presumably for a territorial division; and his business is to see that regional interests are safeguarded. That the interests represented are in conflict is evident from the corn blocs and cotton blocs and all the other blocs formed for political power in our legislative assemblies. They will not "cleave one to another." They are like iron and miry clay.

Those isms which propose that vocational representation shall be substituted for territorial representation offer us nothing essentially different from iron-miry clay government. For many territorial representatives are in practice already representatives of business or financial or producing classes; and that means, of conflicting interests. Republics are houses divided against themselves in this matter of economic, industrial, or financial interests.

LESSENING EFFICACY

It is representative Democracy in a free lance industrial society; a pecuniary, competitive acquisitive society; a capitalistic society, which has destroyed the former economic efficacy of government.

The recent upheavals in European governments are typical iron-miry-clay situations. Not only is The State divided in its thinking, but it is divided in its vital interests. The elements of which it is composed are both incompatible and actively antagonistic to one another. It is a disunity within a unity.

WEAKNESS AND STRENGTH

What a travesty on government! We vote for what, we know not. We do not even know the character of the men for whom we vote, much less do we know their fitness for the particular offices to which we elect them. "We make us crooked paths." "There is no judgment in our doings." And none who walk in the paths we make can find peace.

The addition of the foolishness of the fool to the sagacity of the sage does not yield the omniscient glory of the gods.

And don't forget, industrial strife and economic distress are not accidents; they are the natural fruits of modes of conducting the business of peoples. A bad form, constitution, and method of government in a given set of circumstances is bad as certainly for saints as for sinners. Possibly not so bad; but nevertheless bad. I say this, because the forward look to a government of God means a forward look to a godly form, constitution, and method of government, i.e. a godly polity.

But representative democracy has its iron as well as its clay; it has its strength as well as its weakness. Its strength is this, that the populace believes the government to be its own. These are "our" representatives. It is "we" who decide the issues of The State. The Government, exists for "us." And because under representative democracy peoples of the modern state believe themselves to be "self"-governing, they take the consequences of national blundering upon their own shoulders, and strive to correct through one administration the evil they wrought under another. So long as peoples believe this, we can do in an election what under other circumstances it would take a revolution to do. But when peoples believe they suffer because government is no longer "theirs," then revolutions are easily instigated. This is the weakness and the strength of representative democracy.

GOLD VERSUS MIRY CLAY

Contrast the Babylonian form of government with many of our modern governments. Of course the circumstances of the people were different. But that is only to say that government is to be judged good or bad according as it does or does not match the needs of the times. Government under Nebuchadnezzar knew what it was about. When a "Daniel" was chosen to manage the affairs of the realm, it was certain that a man of wisdom and understanding in matters of State was being chosen. And "jesters" were not admitted to the governmental family in order to procure the services of a "king."

When laws were made, there was no bartering with venal lobbyists. What seemed proper was done. And what seemed inimical to the welfare of the kingdom was forbidden. And that is all there was to it. "Thou art this head of gold."

THE EVOLUTION OF THE STATE

We should not be too sure that monarchial government always was bad. There may have been times when that form of government was just the thing needed. What is needed in the form of government depends upon the circumstances of peoples. The state in its modern form has evolved because the circumstances of peoples have changed. Under mass production and the division of labor, together with the development of communication and transportation, and whatnot, the activities of a wide circle of interdependent communities need to be synchronized and coordinated. And out of this modern necessity arose the modern state.

A DIVINELY INSPIRED MESSAGE

Here is the place to make an observation. What political and industrial data did Daniel have from which to infer the development in government forecasted in this prophecy? Here is a prediction of developments covering a period of more than twenty-five centuries. If this prophecy was the product of Daniel's unaided thinking, he certainly was a most remarkable man. Nevertheless it seems that Daniel was the personality type from which such a message might be expected to emanate. This message concerns itself not only with the instrumentality through which The Kingdom mode of government was to be set up, but also with the time and manner and scale upon which it was to be set up, together with an estimate of the value and force of this example of godly government.

If this prophecy is right, then the methods of state socialism, communism, anarchism, syndicalism, et al. are wrong. These are national movements. They seek control of the governmental machinery of The State, or else its abolition, as a means to their ends. Whereas this prophecy says that The State is to reshape itself under the force of the example of a constituent group going about its own business of making its own social behavior conform to the will of God.

LIBERTIES OF THIS AGE

That directs our attention to the liberties which representative democracy secures to constituent groups. The Shaker colonies at Mount Lebanon, Harmony, and about fifteen other places in the United States; the Amana Community; The Bethel Community; the communities at Aurora, Icaria, Zion City, Oneida; the Christian Commonwealth, et al, all witness the right of constituent groups under our form of government to block out sectors of governmental functions for themselves and to establish economic commonwealths.

WITHOUT HANDS

How many cases can you recall where one part of a state was permitted to sever its political connections peacefully—i. e., "without hands"—and to set up its political independence? States are jealous of territorial jurisdictions. Certainly the South did not succeed in getting out from under the authority of The State even with hands. It is only when the seceding party is too strong to be challenged that the authority of The State is upset and its domain divided into independent political jurisdictions "without hands."

AN ECONOMIC COMMONWEALTH

The important point about all this is that it gives us a clue to the nature of the "stone" to be cut out of "the mountain." That it is to be an economic commonwealth is witnessed by the fact just stated as well as by the economic setting which the major prophecies give The Kingdom. And, granting that the Restoration Movement is what it claims to be, that question is positively settled by the prophet of The Kingdom of this age. Our Zion is without doubt an economic commonwealth. And that is the only aspect of The Kingdom that may be cut out of the mountain without hands, for The Mountain out of which we say the stone is to be cut does not concern itself with ecclesiastical government.

But whenever and wherever ecclesiastical concerns were governed by The State, freedom to competing religious groups to set up economic commonwealths was denied.

IT SHALL BREAK IN PIECES

That part of Daniel's prophecy which has to do with breaking in pieces the gold and silver, etc., has not yet been fulfilled, though it may be in the process of fulfillment. The fulfillment must wait until The Kingdom is builded; until Zion is redeemed; until the world has been given the needed example of Godly Government.

But that all these governmental situations symbolized by gold, silver, et al., shall be broken in pieces by the force of this example of godly government, is not difficult to believe when we contemplate the present instability of governmental institutions.

OUR TASK

The important thing about this prophecy is that it tells us much in a general way about our task. And that this prophecy is a light destined to shine in a dark place does not seem an extravagant claim when we contemplate the economic blundering of the peoples of both The Church and The World.

As a person stands beneath the mighty falls of Niagara and looks upward he feels a strange elation, an impulse to broaden out and expand. As a person stands within the mighty influence of God's intelligence, he feels a strange pull, an impulse to broaden out and expand.—Religious Thought for This Week, in Call to Worship (Madison, Wisconsin).

No Divorces There

One of the provinces of Canada, Prince Edward Island, has had only one divorce in almost 400 years. Only 24 hours by train from Boston, its people read American magazines and newspapers, buy American automobiles and radios, and see American motion pictures. In summer they entertain American tourists. Virtually every family on the Island has relatives or friends in the United States. It has been a notably prosperous community. And yet, there is no divorce problem on the Island, though its laws permit divorce and more than half of its 88,000 inhabitants are Protestants.

"Divorce is looked upon as an admission of failure here," said Chief Justice Mathieson, in explanation. "It is a mark against a man's record, a thing he must explain. The divorced man has failed in his duty as a home-maker, a husband, and a father, and few duties in life are higher than these three. Public opinion on Prince Edward Island demands that a man give the same attention and effort to marriage that he gives daily to his business. Consequently, divorce does not exist on the Island."

I talked with Governor Heartz about divorce.

"When a community is overwhelmingly against a thing, you simply have none of it," said the governor.—William S. Dutton, in American Magazine. Quoted by Readers Digest.

Animal Husbandry and War

Why have nearly all the great breeds of domestic animals that are now scattered all over the earth, the horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, been originated and perfected in England?

Because of the English Channel.

That strip of water but twenty miles wide has done it. It is narrow, to be sure, but enough to keep the restless armies of continental Europe off the island since 1066. It was enough to keep England free from invasion for eight hundred years, while armies, including English Armies, were trampling over Europe, eating and destroying the cattle, sheep, and goats and using up the horses in their cavalry. Poland, Germany, Austria, Italy and France have had enough wars to knock out each and every attempt at animal breeding as fast as it was made. It is a wonder they have any animals at all.

America is today becoming the capital of the animal-breeding world. If peace on one little island, has brought forth these splendid breeds of animals that have served the world for centuries, what may it not achieve on this great continent if no recurring animal slaughters prevent? The horse, the cow, the hog, and the sheep all call for disarmament.—Sydney Hillyard, in the Scientific Monthly.

Finding Lost Sylvia

How quiet the house was! The only sounds which came to Larry as she lay on the couch in Mrs. Hampton's living room were the fluttering of the canary in his cage, the gentle ticking of the low clock on the buffet, and the slow, padding footsteps of Aunt Annie as she cleared up the dinner things in the kitchen.

It was Thursday evening and Larry as she settled back with her book gave expression to her feelings in one profound sigh. There was no one to hear that sigh and misinterpret it. In it were mingled relief and disappointment.

The relief was born of the fact that the family had listened to her pleas and had gone on without her to attend the commencement exercises at Graceland. Tomorrow night they would see John and Nancy formally graduate from the college. The disappointment in the sigh came from the fact that Larry, too, had counted on going to Lamoni for the last days of school functions, but a sprained ankle had disabled her to the extent that she had been forced to cancel her plans with Nancy. All year she had counted on the trip, and now here she was planted safely on the couch in the living room while Doc and Eldred and Carmen drove north. They hoped to arrive at their destination by nine o'clock.

It had taken considerable talking on Larry's part to persuade them to go and leave her.

"But, Larry," protested Mrs. Hampton, "I don't feel right about leaving you here all alone when you're sick—"

"I'm not sick, Mother Eldred, just this cuckoo ankle of mine. I'll be fine and dandy, and you must see John get his sheepskin," declared the girl. "Sallie Ruth will be here and Mrs. Blaine and Dorothy Cameron will help if I need anything, and Aunt Annie will be a veritable watchdog. Probably she'll literally scare me into getting well. Now, for heaven sakes, go on!"

"Sure you won't get to cavorting about and taking rides with desperados?" teased Doc, at which remark Larry had the grace to blush.

It was Sallie Ruth who decided the matter: "Of course you're all going. Don't be silly! John wouldn't know how to graduate without his family looking on. And don't you 'spose I know how to take care of Larry after all the sweet things she's done for me? Give me a little credit, won't you? Don't worry, I'll see that she keeps quiet and has her milk and graham crackers an' everything!"

And so they had gone, planning to return, bringing John with them, on Saturday morning.

How simply the accident had happened. Yesterday shortly before lunch Larry had been running errands. In the hall as she hurried to catch the elevator she had turned her ankle. It had been painful, of course; but then—she had turned her ankle before, and so she went on with her work. But the pain had increased. The injured member had swollen alarmingly, until in the middle of the afternoon she had had a doctor look at it. He had put something soothing on it and bandaged it. By evening, however, when she reached home, the ankle was twice its normal size, and aching so that she could scarcely touch her foot to the sidewalk. Another doctor was called, and he had ordered Larry to remain quiet for the rest of the week. She would have to stay off the foot entirely if she expected to return to her work next week. She had strained two ligaments, and the injury that had seemed mild at first, was really rather serious.

As she lay there thinking, Larry had visions of how pretty Nancy would look tomorrow night, and how happy she would be. She was sorry, oh, very sorry, that she could not see her friend receive her diploma.

On the reading table at the head of the couch lay a copy of Doctrine and Covenants opened at the one hundred and second section. Larry had been reading the revelation given to the Saints on Fishing River. And in the first volume of Church History, she was hunting the historical background of the revelation. How persecuted the Saints had been! How they had suffered!—and yet hadn't some of their sufferings and discomfiture been brought on by their own disobedience? Wasn't that what the revelation said? Several times she and Carmen had discussed the revelation and its significance in and application to present-day needs of the church. And once a speaker for the W. H. Y. Class had taken this revelation as his theme.

But she found it hard to keep her thoughts on her study. Frequently she caught herself hoping that Mrs. Blaine's good temper would hold out until after Tuesday, the day when Mrs. Keithley and Sallie Ruth set out for New York. Since returning home two days before, Mrs. Blaine had behaved admirably, had agreed with the plans already made and even offered some fine, motherly suggestions. Larry was doubtful as to how long this state of affairs would continue. After all, perhaps the woman's unusual agreeableness was the product of her personal gratification at having her favorite daughter accompany a wealthy woman to Europe.

Where could Greg be tonight? Her mind wandered back to a familiar theme. Strange how when she tired thinking of other things, she always turned to Greg. Was he having a date? Was he studying? How did he feel—he was looking thin and worried. Had he understood the glance she had given him when he had helped her out of Dart Moody's car last Saturday? And could he have misinterpreted the pressure of her hand? Did he think her bold or changeable, or just plain nervy?

Then back to Nancy. Larry had not heard from her at all recently. Evidently a great many things were happening up at school. She was very anxious to hear Nancy's vivacious account of the last few weeks. It would be lovely to have her home once more! Had Nancy stopped worrying about Rowe, or had they patched things up again?

How happy Sallie Ruth would be traveling this summer! Larry hoped that Mrs. Keithley would persuade the girl to remain abroad for her schooling next winter. Sallie Ruth was a sweet child, and her association with Mrs. Keithley and her friends would develop her socially and culturally.

Was Greg thinking about her now? How she had wanted to put her arms around him that Saturday? She had been utterly foolish ever to suppose that she would get over caring for Greg—one didn't do that where he was concerned. And the being without him as time passed had grown no easier. Sometimes she was dumb with misery because she wanted to see him, heartsick, lonely. It was awful. And then again, she would throw up her head, and assure herself that it was best so; that he didn't care for her or he would have insisted on seeing her. . . . Why couldn't it all end? He still loved her—she knew that. . . . If only she could get to the telephone, she might call him. Surely he would come if he knew she was hurt; nothing could prevent his coming. But no, Aunt Annie had ordered her to stay off her feet, and would be sure to find her out if she disobeyed. Someday maybe she would telephone Greg when nobody was around. It was always a strong temptation, and she was very weak.

Resolutely she centered her attention on the book in her hands. She must finish what she had set out to do, study this revelation and its setting. She turned a page or two.

Suddenly a small object slipped from between the leaves and fell under her hand. It was an old photograph, the picture of a pretty young woman.

Curiously Larry stared. Where had she seen that face before? Those eyes—there was something familiar about them, and that tilt of the head! No, it couldn't be Mr. Harvey Peterson's Lois, for she was fair and not so vivacious appearing.

The girl studied the photograph intently, racking her memory. Where? She knew she had seen that woman. . . . It was almost as if she had talked to her. Provocatively the dark eyes returned her scrutiny. That dimple—she had seen it, too, and the pretty nose, and the short upper lip! They belonged to somebody.

Then recognition came to her rescue. This woman in the photograph could be none other than the woman whose picture hung in Dorothy Cameron's apartment, Dorothy Cameron's mother, Sylvia! Of course it was—the same features, the same expression! But how?

Hastily she looked at the back of the picture. Dimly and delicately words were written in purple ink, these words: "To my husband, Joey. With love from Sylvia."

In her excitement Larry forgot her bulky, painful ankle and started erect. She had made a discovery! Fascinatedly she continued to stare at the lovely face, then she turned the picture over and examined the writing again. Yes, it was a woman's handwriting: "To my husband, Joey. With love from Sylvia."

"My husband," she mumbled, and then thoughtfully, "Joey." Now who was Joey? And how did this picture of Dorothy Cameron's mother happen to be in Mrs. Hampton's sitting room? Something very mysterious about the whole affair! What could it mean?

Another thought and she snatched up the book from which the picture had tumbled, turned hastily to the flyleaf. There in plain, upright writing was the name, "Joseph Dockerly."

Yes, the book belonged to Doc. Eldred Hampton had mentioned something about not being able to find her volume one of church history when Larry had asked for it. Probably she had loaned it out and the borrower had not returned it. This was Doc's book. Ah, yes—light! He had forgotten and left in this book the picture of his wife!

The young discoverer was so excited that her hands were cold and yet her heart was racing. She simply couldn't believe it, yet here was the proof in her hands! This woman—the same woman whose picture hung in the apartment next door—had been Doc's wife, and she had also been Dorothy Cameron's mother. Was Doc then Dorothy's father? No, surely not. Dorothy had once spoken of her father as Hugh somebody—Larry had forgotten the last name. How queer? Then evidently Dorothy Cameron's mother had been married twice! the first time to Joe Dockerly!

Feeling suddenly very weak and amazed, Larry lay back down, her mind reeling with questions and problems. Joe Dockerly had been married, had had a wife, and that wife was Sylvia, mother of Dorothy Cameron! . . . Light was beginning to break—no wonder, he had been startled that night when he had first seen his wife's child who looked so astoundingly like her. Perhaps he had thought it was his Sylvia returned in the flesh, his lost Sylvia. No—no, she couldn't believe all this—it was a fantasy. Still—why did she doubt?

The purple-inked words: "To my husband, Joey. With love from Sylvia," tormented her. How much of this did Eldred Hampton know?

How she wished that Greg were there to help her thrash out this mystery! He would help her decide. He—

"Oh, hello, angel," a gay voice called from the hall, and Sallie Ruth came in closely followed by Jeff Porter.

With assumed nonchalance Larry thrust the picture back into the book, and dropped the volume on the couch beside her.

"—How's the girl? Look what I brought you," and the girl holding two dark red roses of perfect form in her fingers, dropped down beside Larry. Jeff immediately appropriated a big cretonne-covered chair.

"—These are some of the flowers Jeff brought me tonight," chattered Sallie Ruth, "aren't they gorgeous?"

"Here's some candy, Larry," offered the young man; "the girl friend thought you'd rather have the roses, but I insisted on your sampling both."

"Yes, isn't Jeff good to me—roses and candy all in one evening, and it's not my birthday?" Gaily Sallie Ruth patted Larry's shoulder.

"Well, a guy whose about to lose his girl friend to the business of globe trotting has to do something or other," argued the boy. "This is going to be hard on us, having Sallie in our Alley gone, isn't it Larry?"

"You bet it is," agreed Larry between bites of chocolate, "but it's going to be good for her so we'll try to bear up, won't we?"

"How's the foot?" queried Sallie Ruth a moment later. Then between them she and Jeff began to tell about another farewell party held in the girl's honor on the night before. According to their story the "blow-out" was a "whiz," a "daisy," a "corker," and "the cat's whiskers." It was even more.

Larry's mind was in a whirl. Outwardly she was listening to their animated conversation. Inwardly she was thinking about Doc and the lost Sylvia. What had happened between them? Why had she and Doc separated, as evidently they did, for she had had another husband? There was a lure in the story that she was unable to resist. And now—how was she going to ferret out the rest?

"Darling," Sallie Ruth's blue eyes were alight with concern: "you must remember that you're my ward and patient and itsy bitsy bebee, and everything else. Well, I'm providing for your comfort and entertainment. Jeff and I have to go out tonight for awhile, but we have a surprise for you." Something in her tone made Larry start.

"Now you wouldn't take advantage of a poor cripple, would you?" she asked.

"No, but we're going to surprise you."

"What are you going to do?"

"Just wait and see," and she smiled mysteriously. "The surprise will be evident in at least an hour—"

"Or maybe an hour and a half—" put in Jeff.

"What is it?" curiously. What could these two youngsters be up to? Somehow their secretive air set Larry's pulses throbbing.

"You'll see." Sallie Ruth was whistling softly to the canary and tantalizing holding up her fingers.

"But—" began Larry.

"How would you like a visit from Mrs. Keithley?" whispered Jeff.

Larry smiled gratefully. So that was to be their surprise! They were going to bring Mrs. Keithley to see her. Well, she would be happy to talk with her once more before she and Sallie Ruth left for New York. Larry nodded understandingly.

They were gone. Again she turned to the picture of Sylvia, the lost Sylvia, Doc's Sylvia. Did Eldred Hampton know anything, or did she know everything about Sylvia? Perhaps if she did know all, that was why she had looked—so—well, rather stricken on that night when they had sung the song, "Sylvia."

Once outside the front door Sallie Ruth turned quickly to Jeff: "That was a smart idea of yours about Mrs. Keithley, Jeff. I'm proud of you for thinking of it. Now she won't worry with suspense. I believe she really thought we were going after her. If she knew what we are going to do, she'd work herself into a fever wanting to slay us!"

Quickly they hopped into the car at the curb. "I don't know what happened to them, but Larry's awfully proud, and he ought to know about her ankle, and she won't tell him," the girl went on incoherently. "I've seen this thing go on long enough. She and Carmen think I don't know much about it, but you wait and see what little sister does!"

"Attagir! When she gets organized, she gets organized!" declared Jeff admiringly, "and I don't mean maybe! But I'm not acquainted with this gentleman. Pray where does Gregory Spurgeon live?"

"At 1220 West Prosper Street. We'll tell him she's sick, and take him down there and park him. Well—she can't run away, and if he has any sense he won't want to. And so—so?"

"Well, yes, and so—so?"

Another Debate

Friday, October 5th—Left with Amy for home; business poor. Spent the time around home, to Shenandoah, Glenwood and around till October 15th when we attended the debate between Elder Wm. H. Kelly and Prof. Jamison. Sunday October 21st, the Southern Nebraska District Conference. No strangers here; not much business but pleasant time. Wednesday 24th—Bro. George Kemp came for me to go to Bartlett as Elder Wm. Denton had been lecturing against the Saints. Found Mr. Denton preaching his thirteenth lecture. The first thing heard was a falsehood. I spent the next ten days studying, and Friday evening answered Mr. Denton's statements. Challenged me to debate and spent the evenings till November 1st answering Mr. Denton's statements.

On December 17th we went to Bartlett ready for debate. Mr. Denton was there but the Disciples chose Mr. Bush of Lincoln to meet me. Debate opened on the proposition: Resolved—that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God and received the Melchisedic Priesthood after the order of the Son of God. I affirmative and Mr. Bush negative. Two speeches each morning and afternoon. Tuesday attended debate again two meetings. Closed debate on first proposition. Mr. Bush is a very gentlemanly and able disputant but failed to establish a point against us. Wednesday, second proposition also affirmed by me. Resolved—that the Book of Mormon is a true record and contains the fulness of the Gospel. Two days; two meetings each day. On account of miserably muddy roads, closed the debate. Even a number of their own members acknowledged they had failed to meet the issue, and the Saints were happy. To God be all the praise, for the victory was his. Saturday went home weary but happy. Spent Christmas week and until Friday at home.

1878—In Business Again

January 4th till June 8th in Council Bluffs in the Master's cause. Received offer from S. Lockwood and Co. of St. Joseph, so went home to consult wife, for while I love the ministry more than all, feel that I must help my family as my wife has had to use the money needed to pay her bills to provide for our children's necessities. Decided to accept altho I had never travelled and sold goods before. Went over to Shenandoah till Thurs. Jan. 17 when I returned home. Evening we attended Leslie Waldsmith's birthday party. I went on the road as salesman for the firm the 1st part of Feb'y and remained with them till Jan. 1st. 1879. During all this time I had preached whenever opportunity presented itself. My wife and I consulted each other and agreed that the ministry is my field. Rec'd a letter from Bro. Blair that he, Joseph and Israel would be glad to have me in the field. Wrote him somewhat of our circumstances. I prayed the Lord to open my way and show me what he desired that I shall do. Called to Magnolia but had no means to go, wrote Bro. Codwell why I could not go—My wife had started a small store in Shenandoah and Amy was running it so the girls could be with me, and the Saints were very good to us, with food and other help, and I pray God's choicest blessing upon them. Spent much of my time on music and copying same for the new music book. Bro. Knight also copying for me. Tues. Jan. 11.—Last night my daughter had a dream that seems to lighten my heart and I feel that God will answer my prayers. Today I sold an insurance policy so had the means to leave. While in Magnolia I gave a series of 12 discourses. At the end of this time a vote was taken and a unanimous request made for me to continue. Preached Monday, but Tuesday received a wire from wife that her mother had died. When I arrived in Kansas City I was requested to conduct the funeral services. Mother Unsworth was one of God's own children, a faithful Latter Day Saint.

1879

Lambert to Nauvoo, visited the graves of Joseph, Hyrum and Emma, also the wife of the present prophet and two of his children and others. I felt sad—Major Bidemon seemed grateful for my commemorative sermon on Sister Emma. Back to Rock Creek and preached through Sunday nite to very large crowds with fine liberty. To Nauvoo Monday and baptized 7—assisted at confirmation and blessed two. Sat. 16—Preached funeral sermon of Sister Matilda Zeve—Sunday 17 preached funeral service of Sister Esther L. Wallace. . . .

Friday, called to Bro. Hink's and administered to his child; she will be blest. Then to Brighthouse's where I conducted services for their little child. Sunday, July 4th, after preaching on "The Reign of Christ," I baptized Mrs. Brighthouse and Mrs. Stewart and assisted by Bro. Mentze, confirmed them. Thurs. 29th—Preached our noble Bro. Frank Culver's funeral sermon at the home to a large crowd. Sat.—Dear little Pearl, Frank Culver's daughter, was taken sick today—Sunday administered to Pearl, no testimony. Tues., Aug. 3rd—While studying in the afternoon, Bro. Culver stood before me in my study. He told me he wanted Pearl with him—I said, "Submit yourself to the will of the Lord. I will see your wife and beg of her to do the same." I went to her house and told her this. Thurs. spent last night sitting up with Pearl. Fri.—Little Pearl died at 7 today. Saturday I preached her funeral sermon. . . .

complimentary ticket, accompanied some of the Saints to the Exposition. 27th—Called by telegram and went to Burlington, Wis., to preach funeral sermon of Bro. Lyman Hewitts, a member of the High Priest's Quorum.

November—Went to North Freedom, Wis., met by several friends and home with Bro. Bronson, preached Friday and Sat. evenings to full houses. Sunday—Started with Bro. Frank Hackel by horse and buggy to Sandusky, a distance of 20 miles, in 10 below zero weather for the home of Sister Lee, whose late husband's funeral sermon I have come to preach.

December—Spent back in Chicago, in the work, baptized four. Saturday, December 25—Christmas Day, I preached on the Savior's birth and life. Sunday morning, felt very ill before meeting, was wonderfully blessed while speaking and free from all pain. Friday—Very busy all day. New Years Eve. an "Old English Tea Party" at night—an excellent time.

1881

Spent time in visiting, administering and all the work of the church, doing to the best of my abilities all things in my charge. Towards end of the year I received word from home that things were very stressed and on consultation with Bro. Joseph, (as a position had been offered me) and the church being unable to help, decided I had better go to St. Joseph. So left Chicago during Feby, and engaged in secular business, but helping in the Lord's work all I was able.

Later in 1883 went to Nebraska City to assist Bro. Waldsmith and be with my family. There I was placed in charge of work, and as at St. Joseph gave all my spare time to the Lord.

1884—Stone Church Dedicated

In April of 1884, I was assigned again to labor, but remained with Bro. Waldsmith until he replaced me in my work. On July 5th, I went to Independence, as the Stone church was to be dedicated on the 6th. Having been one of the 1st, if not the first missionary there I desired to be present. Brethren Joseph and Alexander Smith, T. W. Smith, Wm. H. Kelley were there. Joseph being in charge, asked my assistance I offered the dedicatory prayer and Joseph the dedicatory sermon. He also spoke in the afternoon, and I in the evening. Monday 7th—Bro. Maloney took the visiting ministry on a drive to Warm Springs—enjoyed a wonderful talk and discussion on "The Second Coming of Christ." 8th—Visited with the Saints and felt the presence of God's Spirit. Brother James has a beautiful home, it is Zion there both as to surroundings and the spirit of the place.

July—Back home, and on 19th, to Shenandoah where I held a series of meetings with good liberty—baptized 7. 26th—Went to Jewel City, Kansas, and Sunday, August 3rd, commenced a series of discourses in the Baptist church—many turned away unable to get in church. Music was excellent. Stayed with Mr. and Mrs. Manifold. Wednesday—Today I went to the country with Mr. Hills and Manifold and a bird dog. They hunted prairie chicken and brought back twenty-five. Spent the rest of the week preaching for meetings and on Monday returned home. I stayed there until Saturday when I left for my Eastern mission, where I pray God, I may do much good. To Omaha, where I was met by my son-in-law, George Parr, thence to their home to visit Amy. Sunday to Wed.—Preached in Omaha, then over to Council Bluffs where I preached that evening. Thurs. 21, to Chariton, missed connections and Friday to Davis City and with Bro. Zenas H. Gurley. He feels badly and strangely. Rained very hard and so evening congregation was small. From Davis City I went to Lamoni, where to my pleasant surprise I found my wife at Bro. Wick's home, she had taken an opportunity to visit Lamoni and arrived before I did. The Saints here are building a larger auditorium which is badly needed. . . .

Dec. 2nd—To East Liberty—visited Richard and Zaide Salyards. Blessed their child, grandchild of Joseph. Sunday, preached—had splendid liberty. "I thank the Lord for his blessed Spirit."

January 1st, 1885—Spent the night in prayer. Feel poorly this morning, but full of high resolves. Will I, can I, shall I be aided to keep them unbroken, honored and sacred? . . . Tues. 27th—Relaxed and rather wearied. Sunday's subjects were all of higher than ordinary pitch and I am somewhat weakened by the expenditure of force and I feel more than ever, that it is God's own hand that helpeth me, and to Him can I only apply the borrowed and beautiful thought, "Thine is the power, and the wisdom and the glory, forever and ever. Amen."

Feb. 2nd—Prayer meeting of the young people—interesting. Young people desire me to infuse some spirit of activity into them. I am pleased and will try. After they left I had an open vision and feel that Bro. Hulmes' son, Ralph, will pass away. Tues. 3rd. Sister Mary Hulmes called this a. m. I asked how is Ralph? She answered, "He seems some better." I did not tell of my vision, but another forcible impression came. "He is going home." Wed. Spent the day in duty—evening learned from Bro. Criley that Ralph was worse. Bro. Richard Salyards came in and we knelt in prayer and prayed the Lord earnestly for the lad. That he might be spared nevertheless His will be done and if he must go, that he might depart in peace, and the hearts of his parents be comforted. Brother Ralph passed away Friday. . . .

Another Contribution on Young People's Organization

The Kansas City Stake O. B. K's.

By C. G. Mesley

HISTORY OF DEVELOPMENT

The Kansas City Stake O. B. K's. were organized early in 1929. At first each of the fourteen groups in the stake elected a councilor, and these elected representatives composed the stake O. B. K. council, which had two primary objectives. First the sharing of ideas for programs and activities suitable for young people; and second, the arranging of activities that would include the young people from all fourteen groups, thereby increasing fellowship, and developing talent.

During their first year members of this council were divided into several committees, which made a thorough study of denominational young people's organizations such as the B. Y. P. U., the Epworth League, the Westminster Guild, etc., and the inter-denominational Christian Endeavor. As a result of this study three principles were adopted as a basis for the development of the O. B. K. program.

- (1) The Organization should be simple and free from an elaborate constitution, that would hamper its effort to meet the needs of our young people.
- (2) The organization should be all inclusive. Any young person who was eligible for membership in the church school should also be eligible to participate in its activities.
- (3) The organization should not be separate from the church but rather a part of its total program.

The name was adopted as a convenient designation of an activity program to avoid a frequent mentioning of the age limits, which were selected. In all other denominations the age range of the young people's activities is 15-24. Because of the size of the young people's group in many of our smaller churches our age range was set at 13-30.

After this study each local church elected a young people's cabinet composed of a councilor, vice-councilor, and secretary-treasurer. This cabinet was to be responsible for arranging young people's activities in each local group. The councilor from these groups was continued as a representative on the Stake O. B. K. council.

In 1930 when the general church adopted the present church school organization, we found that it placed the responsibility for all young people's activities in the care of a young people's supervisor, who was at liberty to seek the assistance of a cabinet elected by the young people themselves.

This type of suggested organization was in exact accord with the basic principles that we had studied and approved. When the stake adopted their new program, our activities came under the care of the various young people's supervisors that were chosen and our simple organization of elected representatives became their local cabinets. The young people's supervisors were invited to become members of the stake O. B. K. council. Since June 1930 (nearly four years) we have successfully worked under this program and organization. We have found it adequate to meet all our needs for church expression, fellowship, and activity.

PRESENT FUNCTIONING IN THE LOCAL BRANCH

In each branch there is a local young people's cabinet in the young people's division of the church school. This cabinet is composed of the young people's director nominated by the pastor and elected by the entire group and a councilor, vice-councilor, secretary and treasurer, elected without nomination by the young people themselves. All the young people's recreational and expressional activities are planned by this cabinet which meets as often as needed. These activities include an extensive participation in all local church services as well as special events for young people. The study activities of the young people are arranged by the pastor's church school cabinet. The O. B. K. officers may act as chairman of four permanent committees whose duties are here defined:

- Young People's Director*—advisor in all activity planning.
- Project Committee*—Chairman, councilor. General supervision of all stake council projects. General supervision of local program.
- Recreation Committee*—Chairman, vice-councilor. Recreation, social activity, program planning.
- Service Committee*—Chairman, secretary. Membership lists, stimulate attendance at services, service to local church, missionary help.
- Finance Committee*—Chairman, treasurer. O. B. K. dues and funds, transportation, and all financial efforts.

The local program can be as extensive, as few, or as varied as the needs of the young people demand. Because of the close proximity of all the churches in the stake these local (Continued on page 435.)

The Comforter

By Charles H. Arven

THE saddest, yet sweetest farewell address I have ever read, was Jesus bidding good-bye to his disciples. The pathos, the tenderness, and above all, that great love that went out from the Master's soul, must have touched the disciples to the verge of tears. Even though the shadow of the death cross was hovering o'er him, Jesus was concerned for the welfare of his disciples. "I go," said Jesus, "but I will send you the Comforter."

Jesus knew he was soon to leave them, to prepare for that terrible ordeal which he must go through, and knew the disciples would be scattered, persecuted, and put to death; yet he could not leave them without speaking words of love and comfort, and the promise of the Comforter which would be with them in their last hours of sorrow and trial. No wonder Jesus has stood the tests and storms of centuries. Always kind and loving, with sympathy and sorrow for the afflicted, He was the only model of perfection the world has ever seen.

The life of Jesus was not one of continuous preaching. He found ample time to minister and administer to those in sorrow and sickness. Jesus was human in his contact with fellow beings, and always was trying to show men the better way. Jesus was tolerant, too much so he seemed to some. But they did not understand as he did that the Father is love and the whole system of creation is based on the law of love. "Love thy neighbor," said Jesus. A union of perfect love between mankind, and the world would soon reach perfection.

If we obey the teachings of Jesus, we can rise to the realm of the spiritual; the spiritual life is by itself; it is the life that leads earnest Christians to perfection. Giving up the frivolous things of the world is of little moment to one who is trying to live a spiritual life, for if we love the spiritual life the most, we will be glad to give them up for the life that is eternal. "You are not alone," said Jesus, "I will send you the Comforter."

There are writers who have pictured our Lord as an aggressive man. However, the statements of Jesus prove the contrary, and the most of us would believe Jesus to be the meek and lowly One who taught that "Love thy neighbor" was one of the highest principles of life. Jesus taught that religion was for everyday use, and that it was practical. He demonstrated this fully by administering to the sick, and extending sympathy, love and forgiveness to those who had need of it, and was an advocate of peace on earth and good will to all men.

There are men living who at some time in their lives have gone down to the lowest depths of despair; so far down that they didn't care whether they lived or died; yet for some strange reason they suddenly rose from the depths and carried on. Just what was this compelling power that gave them the courage to go on? It appears that our Lord does sometimes send the Comforter to save people from themselves, when hope seems to be a vanished dream. The Comforter comes to us more often than we think. If we were more spiritual, we might detect the visitation when we are blue and discouraged, by the sudden rush of hope and gladness that springs up in our hearts and gives us courage to keep on. No Christian ever appealed to our Lord in vain, if the appeal did not conflict with the natural law of life and death. He that keeps the faith shall have his prayer answered.

How beautiful and comforting were the words that Jesus uttered in his farewell prayer, for his disciples: They are not of the world even as I am not of the world. And the glory which Thou hast given me I have given unto them; that they be one, even as we are one; I in them and Thou in me, that they may be perfected into one; that the world may know that Thou didst send me, and lovest them, even as thou lovest me. Father, I desire that they also whom Thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory, which Thou hast given me; for Thou lovest me before the foundation of the world. I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for those whom Thou hast given me; for they are Thine: Holy Father, keep them in Thy name which Thou hast given me, that they may be one, even as we are.

Let us take these beautiful words and comforting assurance into our hearts and nurse them; they are words that lead us to the higher and better life to come; for we know that God and life are eternal and that God has the power to consummate all things.

Centuries ago Jesus uttered these thrilling words: "He that believeth on me though he were dead yet shall he live." What a glorious statement! It carries with it the sweet consolation that if we keep the faith we shall enter the eternal gates to that glorious and everlasting life. We complain sometimes that our span of life here is too short; that we cannot develop our mental faculties. It is short; and we must wax and wane like the moon and the stars; yet as we grow old we (Continued on next page.)

begin to know more of the meaning and the purpose of life, and to glimpse somewhat of the life to come. What we put into this life for its good, we will take out again with big interest; we are slow at times to realize this, but Jesus said, "If ye give but a cup of cold water in my name, ye shall in no wise lose your reward."

If, as we grow old we have consecrated our lives, our time, and thoughts to our Lord and the better life to come, no one can take this happiness from us; it is our reward for well doing and no matter how hard the trials of our closing days may be, this consolation will never leave us. I once read a little book which was called In Tune With the Infinite. It said if we were in tune with the Infinite, we would receive favors and blessings that we never would have dreamed possible. The question arises can we rise to that spiritual realm? Religious history tells us that many have risen to this pinnacle of happiness sustained by the power of the Comforter.

We're lacking in spiritual perfection because love for humanity is lacking; Jesus taught that love was the dynamo from which the world must run if perfection was to be gained. The law of self-preservation seems to be uppermost in the human mind and it will predominate until man can learn that love is the higher law. The marvelous glory of God's creation is all around us; its functions tell us that death and the resurrection of life are absolute realities; and through the maze of life and the puzzle and wonder, over the long stretch of dust-covered centuries, comes the thrilling message: I will not leave you alone, but will send you the Comforter.

"financial" law of the church to determine the developmental value upon the person.

3. Determine in your experience which values are intrinsic, of worth in themselves, and which are instrumental, of worth in use.

4. Gain a recognition and appreciation of the trusteeship of wealth and possessions.

5. Remember ever that we must share the mutual financial burden of ushering in the kingdom of God.

The great human motives of mutual respect and mutual friendship, the emphasis of duties above rights, the supremacy of persons over property—these things come of Jesus. These are the urgent needs of the social life of today.

programs are supplemented by a number of stake activities.

PRESENT FUNCTIONING IN THE STAKE

The young people's directors and the councilor constitute the stake O. B. K. council, to share ideas that would be helpful in the local groups and to plan in advance a year's program of stake activities. This program is an integral part of the general program which is approved by all the pastors in the stake. For convenience the council elects an executive committee and places the responsibility for its various activities on five vice-presidents. These people call in committees, many of whom have special training in the fields in which they are asked to serve.

This council has sponsored several inventory filing services where over two hundred fifty young people have filed inventories. It supports the stake leadership school and annual series of meetings and sponsors a monthly stake prayer meeting in the various churches. It sponsors annually a drama tournament, a four day music festival, an interesting forensic program of debates, oratory etc., an annual stake picnic and summer volley ball tournament. These have resulted in the discovery and development of talent and in an enriched stake fellowship among our young people.

The organization is not perfect, but it is flexible enough to grow and change. It is organized as a definite part of the young people's division of the church school, in fact, it is that division in action. Like every other organization, its success, either locally or in a district, is dependent upon the quality of the leadership that is given to the program. It is discovering and developing many fine leaders. It works.

Consolation

By Mary E. Gillin

After the journey is ended,

After the day is done,

When we catch the view from the hill-top

And the goal we sought is won—

Forgotten—today's heart-breaking,

And yesterday's grief and pain;

Tomorrow will bring the sunshine

That always follows the rain.

Then gird up your loins—be hopeful—

There is joy in the task well done;

The heart full of love finds "kindred"

Though he travel from sun unto sun.

Like the monks in the Alpine Mountains

The angels of God stand guard

With help for the foot-sore climber

Who tries but is pressed too hard!

A Doctor Discovers the Sun

Finding myself within a few hours run of Leysin, Switzerland, famous for its sun-clinics, I determined to investigate them. Accordingly, after an interesting climb of four thousand five hundred feet in the mountain railway I arrived in the tiny station. There one donned spectacles and snow boots, for outside the sun was blinding and the snow deep and slippery.

In but a few moments I was in Doctor Rollier's consulting room, face to face with the celebrated doctor himself. Genial and bronzed, as became a high priest of the sun, he gave me a little sketch of his work on joint and gland tuberculosis. He told me how he established himself in Leysin in 1903 as an "ordinary mountain doctor." There he noted the extraordinary effect of sun treatment on his cases. Then he abandoned operative methods, complicated surgical appliances, everything—in favor of the sun cure. When Doctor Rollier speaks of the sun he is a poet. "When there is sunshine in my clinics all is well," he says. "Old glandular swellings melt away; tubercular joints become flexible and painless; deformed spines are gradually healed and straightened. But come, you must see for yourself. . . ."

As we entered the children's clinic, I was aware of a general feeling of good cheer. Overhead some choir invisible was joyfully rendering a Swiss glee. The shrill childish voices made the most of this strange yodeling refrain. When we ascended on the balcony this was replaced by a chorus of "Bon Jour, Docteur," "Bon Jour, Ma'm'selle!"

The little patients were taking the sun cure. Such patients I have never seen out of this village of miracles; the richly bronzed bodies with their beautiful muscular development. One does not expect these in the tuberculous ward.

I was struck by the simplicity of the treatment. Just a minimum of strapping on the faulty limb, and then the long sun bath. One could compare the children with photos of themselves taken on arrival. Improvement is no name for such transformations! It would be out of place here to discuss fully the scientific basis of the sun cure.

Later on I was shown some of the celebrities of the place; the girl who came to Leysin with her right arm useless from the disease, now an efficient masseuse; the strong hewer of wood who arrived an apparently hopeless victim of spinal trouble; the . . . But enough! One would need a large book to record all the miracles.

With adieux to my courteous guide I descended the funicular, sorting my memories; . . . the "ordinary mountain doctor" who had discovered the secret of the sun; . . . the rose flush of sunset across the Alps; . . . "lithe children lovelier than a dream!"—C. Scally, in The Irish Statesman.

The Church a Great School

The longer I live upon the earth and the more I come to know about the beauty and perfection of the gospel of Christ, the more I am convinced that this church, God authorized, is a great school in which every member is an enrolled student. The Holy Ghost is the teacher of all. Daily we must be discovering new truths of the everlasting gospel and seeking to exemplify them in every deed. For it is only by action and usefulness that any truth may be made manifest.

God is made manifest by his actions toward us, and it is by our actions toward him and our fellow men that we make our inner self truly known. True, the flesh is weak and we are often misunderstood and misjudged, but we must not become discouraged. We must work else the enemy of our soul will begin to prevail against us. We must follow our teacher. We must study to show ourselves approved unto God (not man) "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." For if our work be approved of God, it will in time be approved by just men, and God will judge the wicked.

Let us seek to press onward. Let us prepare ourselves that we may be able to pass every test, knowing that if we are faithful the Lord will not suffer us to be tempted beyond that which we are able to bear. He is faithful who has set before us the promise of eternal life.

Therefore let us go on. Let us act wisely and we shall receive. Let us use to the honor and glory of God that which we obtain and let our lives be a continual blessing to those about us. Then shall the shackles be torn from our feet and our hands be set free in the service of our God. Then, too, shall the mighty angel of the Lord be near us to lead us whithersoever he will. Zion shall put on her beautiful garments. She shall be no more ashamed for she shall be clothed in righteousness and her people shall be free.

We Must Be Diligent and Obedient

God has been very merciful to me. Many of my prayers have been answered, and I have also experienced the fulfillment and reality of dreams. In my darkest hours when gloom lurked everywhere and I seemed to be rejected of the Lord, I learned my need of God's help. I know that in the midst of our despair, God is very near and ready to lend a hand if we continue to seek him in the right manner.

I have not been as faithful and as diligent as I could have been during the nine years I have been associated with the church. Recently, because of discouraging conditions, my efforts seemed to be in vain, my prayers seemed to be unavailing. I found myself overcome with gloom and despair. In this state of mind I found myself standing at the head of two roads. I was trying to decide whether to continue the fight for right against wrong, or to allow myself to drift into careless and indifferent ways.

While I was thus puzzled a missionary came among us and his inspiring sermons and advice and hopes of the completed Zion revived my hope and vision of the gospel. They caused me to become acutely aware that worldly gain and pleasure are only fleeting and nothing compared to the vision and consolation one receives from the gospel. I believe that the effort and joy of sharing in the task of building Zion is more to me than anything the world has to offer.

My hopes are in the gospel. I believe that we as a people should be diligent in preparing ourselves to be instruments in God's hands for the spreading of his plan of salvation.

Sometimes we think that the little we can do would not amount to much and for that reason we see some who apparently fail to realize that a good example means much for our own benefit and the encouragement of others.

May God help us to realize the value and importance of keeping his law.

Some Reasons Why I Am a Latter Day Saint

I read a bit of Scripture recently found in 1 Peter 3:15. "But sanctify the Lord in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." I wondered just how many Latter Day Saints were qualified to give an answer, should they be asked a similar question. I shall give you just a very few reasons why I am a Latter Day Saint. They may be helpful to others.

1. Because through obedience to the gospel there has come into my life the testimony of Jesus, that God is and that Jesus lives and the gospel is true.

2. Because it has given birth in me to the great thirst for knowledge and understanding of spiritual and material things which have been, which now are and which are to be and, that through the operation of the Spirit of God with me and in me this thirst is being satisfied.

3. Because it has supplanted selfish desires and evil temptations, with honorable ambitions and a hungering desire to make a worthy contribution to society that the world may be better for my having lived, and that some thereby may be brought to know and love God.

4. Because it gives me a love of things divine—a love of purity, virtue and chastity, and it compels me to respect and cherish those who are noble and pure. It makes me love the children of God.

5. Because it gives me power to withstand, and to overcome temptation, and tempers me with mercy and charity for those who are tried and tempted.

6. Because with the presence of the Spirit of God which has come in response to obedience to the gospel I have received greater self-possession in the control of my passions, and there has been enthroned reason, patience and forbearance, in the place of hatred, weakness and intolerance.

7. Because it has given me the more abundant life in that where once the life beyond the grave was once a dark and hazy mystery, through the operation of the Spirit of God upon me, it has become a bright and certain reality.

8. Because it has removed from me the fear of death. The sting of death has been swallowed up in the positive assurance of the resurrection and of a life with Jesus in the millennium.

9. Because it gives me breadth of understanding of, and a love for, my fellow men.

10. Because it gives me part in, and identifies me with, the greatest thing that can come to man—the solution of his temporal welfare and his eternal salvation.

Remember, no one is bad because he is a Latter Day Saint, a Catholic, Methodist, or a Jew, but, if he is bad, it is because he has deserted his religion.

God Fulfills His Promise

I was a cripple wearing a caste at the time I heard the gospel fourteen years ago. I had worn the caste for eight years. I spent one year investigating the truth of the latter-day gospel, and then I decided to give myself to the work. At my baptism I was promised that my injury would be healed. In one year I discarded the caste and have never worn it since.

I could relate many other instances of God's blessings which have been granted to me and others.

The gospel has taught me forgiveness. Through it I have become acquainted with God's power to give peace and joy.

We have a small branch which is trying to do its bit toward the redemption of Zion. We are few in number and meet in a sister's home, but the members are faithfully looking onward and upward. A young servant of the Lord, Brother Holland, though a business man who is away most of the week, tries to be with us on Sunday, and keeps us together. His discourses are inspiring and spiritual. They help to keep the truth of the gospel always before us.

My advice to Herald readers is to file each issue of the Herald, for they will make reference books for the future.

Let us all pray and work in harmony and fit ourselves to serve the Lord.

Busy in the Lord's Work

I was baptized into the church thirty-two years ago at Fontanelle, Iowa, by J. H. Baker. The angel message was the most wonderful thing that ever came into my life, for it came not in word only but with assurance.

We came to Alberta, Canada, twenty-four years ago, and during that time I have been isolated from church privileges and the association with Saints except when I went on visits to places where there are branches. Our nearest branch is at Calgary, about two hundred miles away, so I cannot often attend, but I thank God that I am holding to the faith and that the gospel is dearer to me than all else.

I have not done all that I might to interest others in the restored gospel, but I want to do all that I can now so as to lose no more time. I take the Herald and give it to others to read. Also I have loaned my Call at Evening for several years, and all who read it say it is a fine book. I have a new copy of the book now ready to go out to any who will read it. It is the joy of my life to give the gospel to people who are honest.

Ten years ago Elder J. D. Stead came to my home place near Pincher Creek, Alberta, and preached a few sermons to large crowds. The people thought he was a wonderful speaker, and often asked me if he was coming back; but no elder of our church has been there since. There are many opportunities for preaching in this part of Canada if only there were more missionaries.

For the last three years I have been living at Skiff, Alberta, with my son who is teaching school. In January, this year, Elder O. W. Okerlind came this way and preached nine evenings to good crowds. Several seemed interested in the gospel. Two are ready for baptism and others are investigating. We hope Brother Okerlind comes back to Canada after conference, to baptize those who are ready and explain the gospel plan to others. We wish he could come to Pincher Creek where Brother Stead preached, for we believe there are honest people there who will accept the truth.

To isolated members I should like to say: Don't be discouraged. God has a work for you wherever you are. Perhaps it may be giving out our church books and papers for people to read so that they will be more willing and ready to receive our missionaries when they do come. Let our lights shine wherever we are, and God will bless us with opportunities to do good in his cause.

Would Give His Best to Bring God's Kingdom

On a recent Sunday I arose early for a trip to Decatur, Nebraska. The sun was just coming up as I crossed the Platt River and went on through Omaha. As I passed through Blair I went by the site where used to stand our little church, and memories, some bright, others sad, crowded my mind. As a boy, more than a quarter of a century ago, I remember that my father had charge of the work at Blair. The Saints used to meet in our home. Then we purchased that little church, and I am quite sure that father preached the first sermon in it. A short while ago, just before it was torn down, I preached the last sermon in it, the funeral sermon of the father of some boys and girls who used to attend Sunday school at Walthill while I was pastor there.

While at Decatur I baptized six. Brother Steele, of South Omaha, and Brother I. Lewis, of Decatur were there to help confirm the members. Brother Steele preached a splendid sermon.

I pray that I may be guided in all I do and say in this work so that when I petition "Thy kingdom come," God will know I mean it and am doing all I can to make this place ready for his kingdom.

A short time ago I was called to administer to five different sick ones on the same day. They were scattered in three different towns in this region. I was glad to do it and know that my time was well spent. I should be glad to hear from friends and acquaintances who read this.

Are There Saints Near Melfort?

Sister H. W. Jackson, of Pathlow, Saskatchewan, wishes to know if there are Saints living in the vicinity of Melfort. She lives twenty miles south of that city, and has not had the privilege of hearing a Latter Day Saint sermon since her first husband, Allen Vance, was killed twelve years ago last fall. She would like to communicate with her brothers and sisters of the Reorganized Church.

Request Prayers

Sister Rose McClincy, of Santa Cruz, California, requests remembrance in prayer that she may be healed of affliction and blessed with health.

Mrs. Clara J. Young, of Dover, New Hampshire, requests prayers for herself, that she may be relieved of a growth on her left side. She also desires the Saints to remember her daughter who is afflicted with stomach trouble.

Will there be any animals in the next life?

The Inspired Version, in Genesis 2:5, 11, states that all things were created spiritually before they were naturally on the earth, and says of every tree that it "became a living soul," after it had been made to grow naturally. The plain inference of this appears to be that the spirit of life is a part of all animated creation, as well as of man. Isaiah 11: 6-8, which is generally believed to refer to the millennial reign, mentions about ten animals to be there. Some however, think they are used in the text figuratively. Isaiah 65:25 indicates that animals will be in the new earth. But perhaps one of the most convincing texts is the statement of Solomon:

"That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; . . . as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast";—Ecclesiastes 3: 19.

This is construed by some that both men and beasts are wholly mortal and have no conscious spirit after death. But many texts prove that this is not true, hence it seems to mean that the beasts live in the next life as well as man. So also Job, after mentioning animals, says (12:10) "the soul of every living thing" is in the hand of the Lord. While the church has not officially declared it, this view seems reasonable, and is supported by such great men of the past as Tertullian, Rabbi Manasseh, Menander, Agassiz, Canon Wilberforce, John Wesley, and many others.

What was the doctrine of the Nicolaitans?

Most of the cyclopedic works do not state with any assurance what this sect taught, except that things offered to idols were to be eaten. But Buck's Dictionary of 1826 states that they allowed "a community of wives." Tertullian states that they changed their name to "Cainites" in later times. Ethan Smith's work on the book of Revelation (1837) states that they were "a sect of Antinom-ians who, under the notion of Christian liberty, pleaded for a licentious community of wives."

Did our preexistent spirits rebel with Lucifer, or why are we on earth?

From the words of the Inspired Version (Genesis 3:1-4) it appears that man had already been given his agency ere Christ and Satan offered to redeem men. This was before Satan fell. The Book of Abraham, which is not accepted by the church as inspired or authority in any way, indicates that the spirits of men were sent to earth to prove them and determine whether or not they would keep the commands of God, but that certain intelligences were declared good before the world was, and that God determined to make them his rulers, Abraham being one of the chosen ones. On this matter the church has not made any specific declaration, and it would doubtless be unwise to do so with the meager information at hand.

What proof is there that Mary was of David's seed?

The only proof at hand appears to be the promise of the Scriptures concerning Christ's lineage, as Jeremiah 23:5, 6 and other texts, and the testimony of the New Testament writers to the fact. The genealogies of Matthew and Luke are not complete, it is admitted, but no evidence appears that Christ's lineage was ever questioned even by the Jews of that period, which would certainly have been done if it was not correct. Paul, who was notably learned in such matters, declared that Jesus was "of the seed of David according to the flesh" (Romans 1:3). Peter at Pentecost affirmed the same fact (Acts 2:30). The author of Hebrews, who had an intimate knowledge of such questions, affirmed "it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda" (7:14). Such witness seems sufficient.

What was the lineage of Lehi?

The Book of Mormon (335:3) states that he was a "descendant of Manasseh," who was a son of Joseph. His sons married various women of whose lineage little is said except that they were daughters of one Ishmael, who with his family came into the wilderness with Lehi.

Southern New England District Conference

Spirit of Harmony and Progress Encourages All

One of the most outstanding conferences held in this district in many years convened at Providence, Rhode Island, March 9 and 10. From the opening service at three Saturday afternoon until the close of the Sunday evening service a marked degree of the Spirit of God was manifested. A greater degree of unanimity and the desire of work together for the building of the kingdom were never more clearly manifest at any previous district gathering. If this conference is any criterion, the Southern New England District is due to make a notable advance in spirituality and worth-while contribution to the church.

Conference opened Saturday afternoon at three, the district presidency in charge. The usual routine business was transacted with a one hundred percent from the branches announced by the secretary. The first outstanding feature of the conference came when the names of ten young men from Boston, Providence, Haverhill and Onset were presented for ordination to the priesthood. It is of noteworthy importance and interest to say that nine of these young men are graduates of Graceland. Following the business session several papers were read by some of these recently called young men. Edward L. Traver, jr., of Boston, read a paper entitled, "Duties and Responsibilities of a Deacon." This was followed by, "Duties and Responsibilities of a teacher," by Elmer Dobbins, of Onset, and "Duties and Responsibilities of a Priest," by Sidney Thompson, of Providence.

Supper was served by the women of Providence Branch and at seven-thirty the business session was resumed with the district presidency, E. L. Traver, D. F. Joy, and Ray Bradshaw, in charge. A paper was read by Wallace Sinclair, "What I May Do for the Church as a Priest." The following officers were elected: District president, E. L. Traver; counselors, D. F. Joy, and Ray Bradshaw; secretary, F. S. Dobbins; treasurer, M. C. Fisher; chorister, Helen Coombs; historian, Laura Sears; director of religious education, Harold Cash. It was voted to hold two conferences at Onset each summer instead of the March conference and the November conference. Also regional services throughout the district will be held, the time and place to be decided by the presidency.

Sunday services opened with church school at nine o'clock in charge of Sanford Fisher. The adults were divided into two groups, Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley taught the older people, and Preston Hinderks, the young people.

The prayer and testimony service in charge of the district presidency was a time long to be remembered by all who were fortunate enough to be present. The Spirit of God was present in great power. The young people were moved to express earnest desires to assist in the work of God.

An impressive ordination service followed the prayer meeting at which five of the young men were ordained to the priesthood. Bishop M. C. Fisher officiated in the ordination of his son, Albert Fisher, to the office of priest; Elder E. H. Fisher officiated in conferring the office of priest upon his son, Mortimer Fisher; Doctor W. A. Sinclair bestowed the priesthood upon his son, Wallace Sinclair, to the office of priest; Havalin Jordan was ordained to the office of deacon by his father, Elder Leon Jordan. Sidney Thompson was ordained to the office of priest. All of these young men are Graceland graduates except Sidney Thompson who is a young man only baptized a little over a year ago, but who has made rapid progress in the church. Elder E. L. Traver gave the official welcome into the ranks of the priesthood to these young men, and Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley delivered the charge to them.

The afternoon session at two-thirty was favored with an anthem sung by a women's chorus directed by Sister Helen Coombs. Two papers were read, "The History of the Reorganization," by John Whipple, of New London; "Distinctive Features of the Church," by Ralph Power, of Attleboro. Sister Helen Coombs sang a solo. Patriarch J. A. Gunsolley enjoyed excellent liberty in his sermon, "Our Greatest Asset."

As Brother and Sister Gunsolley are heading westward after nearly two years in the district, a rising vote of thanks and appreciation was given them for their devoted and untiring service to the district. The conference came to a close with a sermon by Elder E. F. Robertson at seven o'clock.

This world that we're a-livin' in
Is mighty hard to beat:
Of course there's thorns in every rose,
But—ain't the roses sweet!

Washington, District of Columbia

Count Helpful Visitors Among Them

The first Sunday in March was remembered by this group with fasting and special prayer for the coming General Conference. The happiness and consolation derived from services of this type are inspiring to all and the source of encouragement to undertake higher and better things.

The Saints in this city, though few in number, are loyal and eager to progress with the general church. None in this mission will be able to attend General Conference, but many expect to keep in close touch with the happenings there through the Herald. The Saints mingle their prayers with those who are permitted to attend.

H. L. Livingston, president of New York and Philadelphia District, was a welcome visitor to Washington during February, and delivered some helpful addresses to the members. He attended the sacrament gathering in the morning and conducted preaching service at the William Froyd home in the evening.

Another visitor was Doctor J. E. Slocum, of Webster City, Iowa, March 11, who gave a good sermon. He is in Washington at various times in the interests of his profession. He is a member of the National Chiropractic Association.

Brother and Sister Harry Maltas and two daughters have moved to Worcester, Massachusetts, where Brother Maltas has accepted a position as violin instructor. They will be greatly missed by Washington Saints.

Brother William Froyd has asked Brother George Wilcox to take his place as teacher of the Book of Mormon class. Brother Wilcox is a young man well qualified for a place of this kind and seems happy to be of service. Brother Froyd plans to help the young people assume their responsibilities so that they will know definitely their place of service.

The New York and Philadelphia district conference convened March 17 and 18, at Philadelphia. The weather was suggestive of spring and attendance was good. Washington was well represented. It will interest members of Holden Stake, Missouri, to know that three ex-members of that stake were in attendance at this conference: Harry Moorman, of New York City, and Ethel Macrae and El Marie McCormick, of Washington. Visitors to the conference commend the work of those responsible for the good programs and the women who served the meals.

Ironton, Ohio

Pay Off Church Debt

This small branch is much elated at paying off its church debt. The building was finished in 1924, under the leadership of such men as Charles Kinstler, B. B. Holland, and U. B. Chambers. Brother Kinstler has passed away, and Brothers Holland and Chambers have moved to other places; but the small group of faithful ones—they number less than a dozen—has toiled long and hard to clear the building of debt. And they now have a church home of which they are proud.

Ironton Saints have enjoyed some spiritual meetings. They have an active women's department who have given effective help in canceling the church debt and who have just finished paying for an insurance policy on the building.

Regular Sunday school and services are held, J. W. Williams acting as president of the branch.

Most of the members are scattered quite a distance from the church and some have grown cold and indifferent. Attendance is not large at services, but the faithful workers are trying their best to let their light shine.

Providence, Rhode Island

Organize Dramatic Society

Seeing the need of a dramatic society in this branch, the young people organized the Laureate Dramatic Society, September, 1933, under the direction of the church school. Since its organization, this group has become an active part of the religious program, as well as the recreational department of the branch. The following are the officers of the society: president, Herbert D. Floyd; vice president, Hazel G. Garlick; secretary-treasurer, Dorothy Sinclair; coach, Dorothy Elliott Joy; assistant coach, Hazel Gates Garlick; property manager, John Colbun. George M. Spinnet is in charge of the membership committee, and Dorothy Elliott Joy is in charge of the social committee. Business meetings are held once a month. The club has sixteen members, and has dramatized plays from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Church History.

Plays on church history include the first four of Brother Elbert A. Smith's "Conversations." The Book of Mormon play, "Faith Rewarded," was written by a local member, Elder Herbert D. Floyd, and presented in Providence chapel, also at the 1933 Southern New England reunion, at Onset. "The Wife of Judas," a Bible play, was portrayed Palm Sunday, March 25.

Other active clubs in the branch are the Excelsior Club, which meets at the home of Sister George Spinnet, the teacher, every other Monday night for a Book of Mormon lesson. Refreshments are served and games played after the lesson. Attendance is increasing each week, with some of the young people and nonmembers.

The Men's Club will hold a fish supper, in the basement of the church, April 3.

High Priest D. F. Joy, on account of illness, has temporarily been released of his pastoral duties. Assistant Pastor G. F. Robley, assisted by Elder E. M. Brown, will have charge until Brother Joy's health returns.

Minnesota District Conference

Young People and Their Interests Play Prominent Part

The Minnesota district conference convened March 9 to 11, at Minneapolis. It was an inspiration and an uplift to everyone present. The young people took a prominent part in all activities.

Minneapolis young people gave a play Friday evening, March 9, "The New Minister." It was well rendered and appreciated. The speakers, Apostle F. Henry Edwards and J. F. Curtis, confined their talks to the theme of the conference.

The sacrament service Sunday afternoon, in charge of the conference presidency was a service which will long be remembered. The young people had their part in the success of the meeting.

A vesper service was given by Duluth young people, and appreciated by other young members.

Ada Carlson, in charge of the young people's activities of the State, with her supervisors and group of willing workers, was responsible in a large measure to the success of the conference.

Young people from many parts of the State were there. It is believed that they will carry to their home and branch inspired actions and thoughts which will help in the furthering of the work of God.

The business session of the conference convened Saturday afternoon. The following people were elected as delegates to General Conference: Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Johnson and Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Elone, Minneapolis; Lester Whiting and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Peek, Clitherall; Apostle J. F. Curtis, Independence, Missouri.

Elder Lester Whiting, of Chitherall, was elected district president to fill the vacancy caused by Elder Vernon Lundeen's resignation. L. S. Wight was chosen by Lester Whiting as his counselor, after a season of prayer, and was sustained by the body.

Ada Carlson resigned as district secretary, that she might give all her time to the young people of the district. W. C. Stauty was chosen to fill the vacancy.

A fine spirit of unity was manifested throughout the conference. Minneapolis Saints are to be congratulated on the hospitality shown to the visiting Saints.

Houston, Texas

This Year Is Eventful

Since the first of the year Houston Branch has had many things for which to be thankful. One of the outstanding events for Central District was the conference held in Dallas in February. Twenty-four Houston members attended, and were grateful to Dallas Saints for their fine hospitality.

Elder Lee Quick conducted a series of inspirational meetings not long ago at Houston which were much appreciated. His sermons had that "old-time gospel ring."

All church school classes, except the beginners, are organized and competing with each other to see which can be of the greatest service to the church. Even the task of cleaning the church is no longer avoided, the classes vying with each other for the privilege.

Prayer meetings are held at the church every other Wednesday night, and on alternate Wednesdays cottage meetings are enjoyed, members being divided into groups according to location. These are proving successful and tend to make contacts for Saints with their neighbors and promote a feeling of good fellowship besides stimulating interest in and attendance at other services.

Kalamazoo, Michigan

450 Maple Street

A rented store building, 450 Maple Street, just off South Westridge, provides a new meeting place for members of Kalamazoo Branch. They have the full use of the building, and are hoping to see the branch grow.

The opening service in this new location was held March 18, with a few people from the neighborhood visiting the church school.

Saints were fortunate in being able to sell some of their funds in a Building and Loan Association, where it could not be drawn out, and thus secured money to buy seats.

Members of this branch have appreciated the many visits of Apostle D. T. Williams, and wish that he could come again.

The children of the church school are preparing for an Easter program.

Northern California Conference

Harmony and Good Will Prevail

The young people of the district met for prayer service and social and discussion period under the direction of Sister Gladys Carmichael the morning of February 24.

This conference was called primarily to elect delegates to represent Northern California at General Conference, and President Guy P. Levitt officially opened the afternoon business session, having with him in the stand Apostle John W. Rushton, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, Elder W. H. Dawson, and Elder J. Damron. He called upon Elder Howe, president of Modesto Branch, to welcome the delegates to conference. Apostle Rushton was welcomed to the meeting by the district president as was also Apostle Gleazer. Both apostles responded briefly. Elder Arthur Oakman was asked to speak. He has lately held several series of meetings at Modesto, and expressed his joy in working with the people of the West.

The conference concurred in Elder Edwin Burdick's appointment as bishop's agent of the district.

After considerable discussion the Saints heartily indorsed Brother Levitt's proposal to hold a reunion at Irvington this summer. Details of the organization and administration will be left in the hands of the district presidency and bishop's agent.

Approval was given by the conference to Apostle Rushton's suggestion that a committee be appointed to frame a word of thanks to a former officer, Bishop Edward Ingham, for his services in this district.

At seven-thirty Saturday evening, G. P. Levitt conducted a song service. At eight Sister Hazel Blohm, district director of religious education had charge of the service and the following spoke: Sister Elva Petz in behalf of the children's division; Sister Gladys Carmichael for the young people; Guy P. Levitt for the laity; Arthur Oakman in behalf of the women's department, and lastly, Brother Rushton was invited to relate recent experiences in foreign lands.

Arthur Oakman conducted an eight-thirty morning prayer service Sunday, which was largely attended and of a spiritual nature.

A class for young people and adults on "Financial Law" was in charge of Elder Levitt at ten o'clock.

Apostle Gleazer spoke during the eleven o'clock hour, and the district choir sang the anthem, "The Radiant Morn," directed by Sister Birdie Clark and accompanied by Sister Christiana Waller.

The letter of appreciation to Brother Ingham was read and approved at the opening of the afternoon service. Apostle Rushton was the speaker at this hour.

The conference was adjourned at the close of the afternoon service, and a rising vote of thanks was given Modesto Saints who so successfully cared for the unexpectedly large conference attendance.

Eastern Colorado Conference

Good Attendance—Inspiring Speakers—Make Plans for Summer

The Eastern Colorado district conference, held at Denver, March 2, 3, and 4, was very well attended from the opening session on Friday evening to the closing service on Sunday evening. This is the most uniformly good attendance they have had at any district gathering for some time. Members from Cheyenne and Albin, Wyoming, and from Fort Collins, Brush, Otis, Wray, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, and Lamar, Colorado, were present at the services, some of them arriving in time for the first service on Friday.

The theme of the conference, "Laborers Together With God," was stressed by all speakers, including those who had charge of prayer services.

Elder Lee Quick, seventy, sent to the conference by the missionary-in-charge, preached fine, stimulating sermons. This was Brother Quick's first visit to Eastern Colorado, but in Denver, Fort Collins, and Cheyenne, he found friends with whom he had become acquainted during his years of service as a missionary for the church.

Other speakers whom the Saints heard with joy during the conference were J. D. Curtis and E. J. Williams, of the district presidency, who each gave a splendid and encouraging talk at the banquet on Saturday evening. Brother Curtis spoke again on Sunday morning at the church school hour, dividing the time with F. H. Engstrom, district director of religious education, and G. A. Smith, district president.

The speakers emphasized the need of the Spirit of God in the work, that the Saints may have constant assurance that God is recognizing them as laborers together with Him: The Father helped in the conference with the presence of his Spirit.

The women of Denver served the banquet on Saturday evening and other meals, and the Saints of Denver Branch provided sleeping quarters for visitors from out of town.

Sister Inez Schrunk, district chorister, ably assisted by Sister Alice Milligan, of Denver, organized the musical talent of the district and furnished an abundance of good music. From Cheyenne, Wyoming, Fort Collins, Colorado, and Lamar, Colorado, as well as from Denver musicians, came vocal and instrumental solos, duets, quartets, and choir numbers.

The conference passed upon the ordinations of eight men to offices in the priesthood, four of whom, George Fletcher, of Lamar, elder; Milton J. Clow, of Lamar, priest; Vernon C.

Young, of Denver, priest, and Burrell Shupe, of Denver, teacher, were ordained at a special ordination service held Sunday afternoon. The other four men were not present at the conference, therefore their ordinations remain to be cared for by the district presidency at their earliest convenience.

The following delegates were elected to represent Eastern Colorado District at General Conference: G. A. Smith, Cordelia Anderson, Ida Myren, Elsie Harper, Sister M. A. Cooper, Ruth E. Robertson, Dorothea Buffehr, N. E. Berry, Alzina Fritz, C. A. Ralston, Anna Korf, Wilma Graybill, Milton J. Clow, George E. Fletcher, Sally Conway, Zaide Salyards, Ralph E. Vincent, Fenner Bullard, and Florence Bullard.

The question as to whether or not a reunion should be held in Eastern Colorado in 1934 was decided very emphatically in the affirmative. The Saints of the district want a reunion, and plans are now under way for holding one at the grounds in Colorado Springs the latter part of August, this year. All members are urged to begin planning to attend.

Los Angeles, California

East Church

Pastor L. L. Sutherland, assisted by J. C. Stuart, is rapidly advancing the work of this congregation. The subject, "Zion," seems to be uppermost in the minds of all members.

Visits from Apostles John W. Rushton and E. J. Gleazer have been appreciated.

Glen Holmes, in charge of the church school, has proved an able leader. The adult division is fully organized, with Sister Nell Sutherland as supervisor. The women are working and studying in groups, having organized the Thursday Club. Meetings are held on Thursday of each week with two projects in view, namely helping with branch expenses and fitting up the kitchen. A social committee plans one social each month. During February the adults enjoyed a "kid" party. The decorating committee has charge of decorating the church and the care of the lawn and shrubs. The social and visiting committee is on the alert for those who are sick or absent for other reasons. During the fall, this group communicated with nearly all members of the branch, and as a result, attendance has greatly increased, ranging from one hundred and sixty-six to one hundred and eighty-six.

The adult group has seven study classes, three held Sunday morning, one of which is a missionary class; three Sunday evening, a credit class with Glen Holmes as teacher, and one on financial law Wednesday evening. A program once a month is sponsored by the adults for the Sunday evening church school. During January a pot-luck supper was held, at which time leaders discussed plans for the year.

The children's department, under the leadership of Sister Alta Stuart, has been steadily advancing. Junior church is held each Sunday morning. The contest on care of quarterlies, study of the lesson, and deportment has helped the children. Each Sunday morning one child is given the privilege of taking charge of the service. They are now sponsoring a drive to raise money with which to buy curtains for the annex.

Although few in number, the choir is striving to do its best. Their motto is, "An anthem every Sunday." Brother Joseph Farley has charge of the music. The Christmas cantata was impressive. The orchestra meets Tuesday evenings at different homes.

Sister Laura Packard is the leader of the young people. They are sponsoring a Bible reading contest for the next three months, which is proving to be not only interesting but helpful as well. Another project of this group is that of making points for the Honor Society. Eight have already qualified for pins for the first quarter.

The young people's glee club, which sings fifteen minutes before the church school hour every Sunday morning, has been a help in beautifying the services. On the evening of March 17, a Saint Patrick's party was given at the home of Rex Clayton.

Oriole work is progressing rapidly. The W. W. B. T. Circle was organized last November with Opal West as monitor. Their first initiation was held in January when nine girls became Orioles. They have a number of projects which they hope to complete before the district reunion in July, one of which is a mother's and daughter's banquet to be held in May.

Seattle, Washington

Many Activities in February

February was a busy month for Seattle Branch. It began with a district conference and young people's rally February 2 to 4, attended by Apostles E. J. Gleazer and M. A. McConley. Attendance was exceptionally gratifying with a good representation from all nearby points. Classes were conducted Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday evening a young people's banquet was held in the church basement. Women of the branch served luncheons both days and out-of-town visitors were cared for in the homes of Seattle Saints.

February 11, National Boy Scout Sunday was marked by services for Troop 120, sponsored by the branch. Elder Alma Johnson preached the sermon. This troop on Monday evening, April 2, will hold a charter presentation party in the church for troop committeemen and parents of the boys.

The women's department which last year arranged for repainting the church building and very successfully put through a number of other noteworthy affairs for the branch, has taken upon itself the raising of funds to replace the rugs. If possible, they plan also to do some refinishing work.

A splendid spirit of cooperation and a desire to push ahead toward zionic ideals has been manifested in the various departments of the branch. All eyes are now fixed on the August reunion at Silver Lake.

Kirtland Conference

Fewer District Officers Will Work on "Pay as You Go Plan"

The first district conference to be held in many years at Youngstown, Ohio, opened March 17, and proved to be one of the remarkable conferences in the history of Kirtland District. Special preparations assured a good program and accommodations for all visitors. In these preparations the young people participated with zest and purposefulness. The commissary department and housing problems were well handled by Sisters Margaret Unger and Sister Jane Johnson.

Conference opened with a business session at 2 p. m., and a good spirit prevailed while items of business were transacted. The district president recommended, in view of many local financial burdens, that the workers seek to build up each community in which there is an organization. District officers were reduced in number to four. James E. Bishop was elected district president, and the work of religious education was referred to that office. The bishop's agent, John L. Cooper, was sustained. Sister Edna Rhodes was selected as secretary-treasurer and Sister Amy Glassford was elected district chorister. The officers are to be financed on the "pay as you go plan." All this to avoid a top-heavy district organization. A committee of William F. Webbe, Mrs. Mabel Dixon, Brother Fenner, and Amy Glassford, was selected to study the various young people's organizations now in operation in the church and develop plans for an organization suitable for Kirtland District. It was suggested that after their study and research was completed, a convention be called in the early summer, to effect an organization.

That evening Evangelist J. A. Gunsolley gave a sermon full of sound advice. This was followed by a cantata given by Youngstown Choir. Less than two years ago no one thought of a choir at Youngstown, but now they sing well. Much credit is due Sister Amy Glassford who has spent years in training in various branches of music.

Early Sunday morning the priesthood enjoyed prayer hour and a talk by A. E. Anderton, president of Southern Ohio District.

After a period of devotion and class work which began at 9:30 a. m., a sermon was delivered by Patriarch George W. Robley. Special music was by the Youngstown Choir.

In the early afternoon prayer and testimony meeting was presided over by Patriarchs George W. Robley, John F. Martin, and J. A. Gunsolley. Many inspirational messages were spoken to individuals and the entire assembly, the Spirit of the Lord being present in power.

The Saints reassembled at 6:30 p. m. to hear a sermon by Patriarch John F. Martin. The announcement that this brother who has suffered ill health so long, would speak was one of keen interest to all. The manner in which his ministry was received by the conference and the way in which he met the demand augurs well for the future ministry of Brother Martin. There was special music by Sister Annie McNeil, of Cleveland.

Nineteen delegates were elected by the district to attend General Conference. Recommendations from Kirtland Branch that John T. Curry be ordained to the office of priest, and from Lorain Branch that Lee Minkler and Earl Crawford be ordained priests, Joseph Koches, teacher, and Lee Clement, deacon, were approved.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Nineteenth and Washington Avenue, South

Milwaukee Branch is progressing, and unity prevails. Pastor J. A. Maas drives forty-five miles from Watertown every Sunday. He has stressed the need of unity in many of his sermons, urging it as an important factor in advancing the kingdom of God.

The young people have their meetings in the church basement every Saturday night. Marlin Moe presides and is always busy keeping the young members together and interested.

Eddie Ford, church school director, is back from his Missouri home, where he underwent an operation.

Two surprise birthday parties have added to the social life of this group. One was given Sister Daisy Kirshner, branch clerk and chorister and a tireless worker. For her faithful help she was presented a silver sandwich tray from the branch and a bouquet of roses from the young people. The second party was that held for Sister Alvina Peterson who also received some lovely presents.

Sunday, March 11, directly after the church school, Eddie Ford sent for Brother Maas, who was still in his study, and presented him a Doctrine and Covenants bound in Morocco leather in memory of his forty-fourth birthday. Brother Maas thanked the branch for its gift.

Independence

Easter Sunday, crowds at the various churches in the city revealed the presence of numerous General Conference visitors. This was particularly true at the Stone Church from the six-thirty Easter morning prayer and worship hour for young people to the closing sermon of the day by Apostle John W. Rushton.

The Easter, city-wide prayer service at two-thirty in the afternoon, at the Stone Church, in charge of President Elbert A. Smith, Apostle J. A. Gillen, and Apostle Paul M. Hanson, was largely attended. Members of the Quorum of Twelve and others were called upon for short talks regarding the spirit and works of Saints in their missions and districts.

Physical aspects of the Auditorium plant are being improved and arranged for the convenience and comfort of conference visitors. During the last week many workers have cleaned, decorated and assisted in other ways. The Laurel Club is prepared again to serve meals to the General Conference in the lower room of the Auditorium and in the lunchroom upstairs. Church women are planning to lend their services wherever needed during the ten-day conference session, and the girls and boys are gladly promising their services outside of school hours. There will be a "General Conference post office," a check room, and an information desk in the foyer of the building in addition to counters and rooms representing various church organizations.

Indeed this is a busy week for the Saints in Independence, with conference visitors arriving hourly, and plans and programs are fast being completed for the official opening of the Seventy-sixth General Conference of the church Friday morning.

It is optional with pastors and church school directors in the nine congregations of this city whether they hold separate church school sessions during General Conference or dismiss to meet with the special conference classes at the Auditorium. Seven classes for adults will be held there April 8 and 15 as follows: "Church Finance and the Gathering," taught by G. L. DeLapp; "The Patriarch in the Work of the Church," F. A. Smith; "The Missionary in the Work of the Church," E. Y. Hunker; "The Book of Mormon," J. W. A. Bailey; "The Doctrine and Covenants," John F. Sheehy; "Inspiration in Church History," Inez Davis, and "Pastoral Work in the Work of the Church," H. L. Livingston. All young people and members interested in young people's activities, will meet in the Stone Church upper auditorium for inspirational services and young people's discussions.

There will be no other church services in the various congregations here during conference except church school sessions. All local members and workers are urged to study with the General Conference classes each week-day morning of the conference. The classes are named elsewhere in this issue.

Stone Church

Pastor John F. Sheehy talked to the young people of Zion on the theme, "Can God Depend on Me?" at their six-thirty Easter Sunday morning prayer service, and an effective and stirring service of testimony, prayer, and song followed. In spite of early morning rain a large number was present to benefit from the inspiration of the hour.

The Easter communion service, the largest yet this year, began at eleven o'clock, the following ministers in charge: C. Ed. Miller, G. L. DeLapp, Elbert A. Smith, John F. Sheehy, H. G. Barto, R. T. Cooper, and J. Stanley Kelley. Robert Miller played the organ.

The rostrum, banked with ferns and lilies, furnished a beautiful setting for the service, and President Elbert A. Smith centered the sacrament talk about the resurrection.

At the same hour, a second sacrament service was held in the lower auditorium for those who were turned away upstairs. This service was in charge of Albert Brackenbury, Ammon White, John W. Rushton, T. A. Beck, R. V. Hopkins, and G. W. Eastwood.

In the evening the Easter sermon was by Apostle J. W. Rushton who chose to base his discourse on readings from John 20 and Romans 6. With him in the stand were Pastor John F. Sheehy who was in charge of the service and Apostle J. F. Curtis.

The Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, gave a special Easter program of anthems and solos. Mrs. Minetta Isaacks and Mrs. Pauline James Arnson, sopranos, and Albert Brackenbury, bass, soloists. Robert Miller played the organ.

Columbus, Ohio

Third Church, South Wheatland Avenue

The sacrament service the first Sunday of March was one long to be remembered. Previous to the opening Pastor Welsh requested all members of the priesthood to meet with him for prayer. When assembled there were four elders, four priests, one teacher, and two deacons. In the quiet of the room they knelt in prayer with Elder Schaeferberg and Priest Lewis Waltus. During the time they prayed, the congregation sat quietly in their seats and silently prayed in behalf of the meeting.

A good spirit prevailed during the full service, but it was not until the last minutes of the meeting that the Father spoke to his people using Elder Schaeferberg as mouthpiece. The priesthood received a word of comfort as did also the congregation. Theodore Welsh was given a wonderful blessing, being told that there was special work for him to perform. Brother Welsh has been a faithful worker for the church. Peace and comfort were given to Sister Albright who recently lost her daughter, and Brother Robert Albright was spoken to regarding his future in the church.

District President A. E. Anderton was the speaker in the evening.

March 11, members of this congregation visited at First Church with Saints of Southern Ohio District assembled in conference.

The last person inducted into the church in this group, was the first to be taken to the beyond. Brother Stermer who was baptized a little over a month ago by his grandson, Robert Bohlen, was called to rest March 11. Elder Welsh had charge of the funeral services. Brother Stermer was seventy-four years old February 22.

On March 22, a "tell your age" party was enjoyed. This was a potluck supper, and each person attending paid a penny for each year of his age.

Third Church looks to the future with greater determination. Each member realizes the task lying before him. The young are active, each having a definite task to perform.

Speakers during the month were Elders Welsh, Schaeferberg, A. E. Anderson, and Priest Robert Bohlen.

Reunion Notices

Attention, Kirtland Singers! An effort will be made at the Kirtland reunion, August 9 to 19, to conduct a reunion choir. All singers interested in joining, are invited to participate. It is hoped that all branches in the Kirtland Reunion Association composed of Kirtland, Pittsburgh, Southern Ohio, Northwestern Ohio, Wheeling and West Virginia Districts, will be well represented. We also invite any members from branches outside the association who expect to attend the reunion, to sing with us. The reunion choir will sing at four services, the following anthems, which can be purchased direct from publishers: "Hear My Prayer," W. James, G. Schirmer, Inc., 3 East Forty-third Street, New York City, price 12c each; "How Beautiful Upon the Mountains," F. F. Hacker, G. Schirmer, Inc., 3 East Forty-third Street, price 18c each; "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," J. Galbraith, Oliver Ditson, Boston, Massachusetts, price 15c each; "Thanks Be to God," W. Spence, Oliver Ditson, Boston, Massachusetts, price 15c. We would appreciate the cooperation of district and branch choristers in this undertaking, and suggest that these anthems be purchased and work started on them as soon as possible. These anthems are easy enough for the most inexperienced choirs. If there is no choir organized in the branch, perhaps several individuals could secure and learn the anthems. Several rehearsals will be held at the reunion which will prepare all to sing together in our large and inspiring chorus. The same efforts will be made along instrumental lines. All instrumentalists are urged to come and bring their instruments. Those who are planning to attend are asked to register with the director of the reunion orchestra, Byron Neville, Willoughby, Ohio. This will enable him to order enough music for all. The Temple Choir at Kirtland, Ohio, under the capable direction of Mrs. William Householder, has pledged its hearty support, and will form the nucleus of the reunion choir. Their contributions at past reunions have been deeply appreciated. If there are questions concerning the purchasing or preparing of the above-named anthems, please write to the Director of Music for Kirtland Reunion, 1934, Amy Glassford, 44 West Delason Avenue, Youngstown, Ohio.

Conference Minutes

KIRTLAND DISTRICT.—Conference convened at Youngstown, Ohio, March 17 and 18. Elder James E. Bishop, district president was in charge of business session at 2 p. m. Ministerial reports were read. Statistical reports were read. James E. Bishop was elected president; Edna Rhodes, secretary and treasurer; Amy Glassford was elected chorister. Moved and seconded that Conneautville Branch be disorganized. Carried. Recommendations by James E. Bishop entitled "Lines of Proce- dure," were adopted. Read as follows: "Conditions: There are some branches that are balanced so far as a proper number of officers are concerned. There are other branches that have a surplus of officers. There are still other branches that lack talent. We recommend that the branch and district officer make a survey of each branch, objectives be set and modes of procedure established. The branch presidents should seek the help of various preachers of the district that they feel can render help. If after genuine effort no results are obtained the branch should be disorganized. We should seek for a condition wherein each community is worked to the uttermost and avoid a top-heavy district organization with heavy overhead." Recommendations as follows were adopted: "1. In view of the lowering of church incomes we suggest an economy program made up of two parts: (A) Reduction of district officers to a minimum number, namely, a district president, who shall also have charge of religious education. A district secretary and treasurer and sustaining the work of the bishopric and a district chorister. (B) Adoption of a plan of financing the officers which we may call, 'The pay as you go' plan. When a branch is visited by a district officer the branch will do its best to meet the expenses of the officer. (C) At district conference a district offering shall be taken and shall be divided as follows: the traveling expense of church appointees and district officers; after this a portion shall be set aside as a fund to care for postage, stationery and advertising." Adopted the advisability of the election or appointment of a committee to cooperate with the district president with a view to studying the various young people's movements in the church, formulating some plans and some time during the early summer calling a convention with a view to organizing a district young people's organization. The recommendation concerning a delegate conference be adopted, was carried: "Delegate Conference—We suggest and recommend that our next business conference be a delegate conference. The ex officios shall be the general church authorities the missionaries appointed to the district, the district officers and the elders of the district. Each branch shall be represented on a basis of one to twelve members. The delegates shall be elected by the branch at a regular or special business meeting. The election of the delegates shall be attested by the branch president and secretary on forms provided. It shall be the duty of the district secretary to mail the blank delegate forms and see that the report is returned in time for the district conference. A credential committee shall be appointed to examine and report on credentials." It was moved and seconded that the nonresident group shall be given a vote on the same basis as branches, one to twelve delegates, to be selected after arrival at conference. Substitute—that nonresident members at conference get together and elect one delegate, but if number exceeds twelve they elect one for every twelve members. Motions carried. Delegates to General Conference were elected: James E. Bishop, Sister James E. Bishop, Edna Weddell, Richard Baldwin, Sister Richard Baldwin, John L. Cooper, Sister John L. STRICKLAND.—Harry Floyd Strickland, son of Nelson and Susan Eliza Strickland, was born near Ellsworth, Kansas, May 13, 1880. Shortly afterward, he accompanied his parents to Denver, Colorado, where he lived a few months. Thence they moved to Illinois in which State they lived in several places. In 1898, he was married at Fresno, California, to Miss Carrie Paulsen, who preceded him in death, November 12, 1920. Three children were born to this union all of whom survive. Mr. Strickland and his family lived in various places in Oregon and Idaho. About twenty-five years ago, he returned to Illinois, the family locating at Plano which was his home until a short time ago. During the World War, when the call for volunteers came, he enlisted and valiantly served his country overseas. The last few years of his life were spent in the Veterans' Administration Home, near Leavenworth, Kansas, where he died of pneumonia, February 24, 1934. Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Daisy Reynolds, of Plano; Mrs. Susie Perkins, of Independence, Missouri; one son, Floyd Strickland, of Aurora, Illinois; three sisters: Mrs. Lizzie Brunson and Mrs. Maud Black, of Independence; Mrs. Nellie Blakey, of Plano; one brother, Louis H. Strickland, Portland, Oregon; six grandchildren, other relatives and friends. Funeral services were held at Plano March 1, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Bert Reynolds, and at the Saints' church. The Plano Leon Burson Post of the American Legion were in charge of the funeral services, six of its members acting as pallbearers. Elder J. M. Blakely officiated, assisted by Marion Blakely.

DAWSON.—John E. Dawson was born at Preston, England, January 29, 1852, and departed this life March 11, 1934. He came to the United States with his parents and brother in 1864. Two years later the family moved to Jefferson City, Missouri. His father purchased a farm in the eastern section of Cole County, where John E. Dawson grew to manhood. After living in Saint Louis for some time, he moved to California. On account of failing health he returned to Missouri and spent the remaining years of his life in Jefferson City. He leaves to mourn his aged companion, Sister Selma Roberts Dawson; two daughters, Lee Edna and Jane, of Tulsa, Oklahoma; a daughter-in-law, Christiana Dawson, wife of Bert, who preceded him in death in 1929; a brother, William S. Dawson, and a great number of relatives and friends. His grandmother, Ann Dawson, was the first woman baptized into the original church in England, in the city of Preston, by Elder Joseph Fielding, when the missionaries went to the British Isles in the days of Joseph the founder. Brother Dawson was a faithful member of the church for forty-five years, in which he held the office of teacher. He and his wife contributed greatly to the needs of the church in Saint Louis and in Jefferson City. Funeral services and interment was at Jefferson City, Elder August Wintermeyer in charge. Elder R. S. Salyards preached the sermon.

WILSON.—Elsie Marie Fritz was born October 30, 1899, at Canton, Ohio, and departed this life March 6, 1934, after a few hours of illness. She was united in marriage to Edward F. Wilson, June 27, 1928, at Warrensburg, Missouri. August 9, 1932, she became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by Elder W. A. Teagarden, at San Bernardino, California. She leaves to mourn her departure, her husband; a daughter, May; three sons, James, Charles, and George, of Ohio; her father, of San Bernardino, California; her mother, one sister, and two brothers, all of whom reside in Ohio. Elder W. A. Teagarden preached the funeral sermon.

SHEDD.—Amy Elizabeth Bost was born at Mazeppa, Wabasha County, Minnesota. She married Morrel E. Shedd, of Porcupine, Wisconsin, October 11, 1889, and to them four children were born: Marshall, Owen, Fred, and Edna. Fred preceded her in death at the Veterans' hospital in Milwaukee, in 1933. She united with the church in 1885 and lived a highly exemplary life. Passed away at her home near Ladysmith, March 10, 1934, after a lingering illness. Leaves to mourn, her husband; two sons, Marshall, of Ladysmith, and Owen, of Dallas, and one daughter, Edna Lafferty, Eau Claire; one sister, of Denver, Colorado, eleven grandchildren, and a host of friends. Funeral services were held at the Saints' church at Chetek, March 13, Elder F. A. Atwood officiating. Interment was in Lakeview Cemetery.

The Spirit of the Conference

Conference

This conference is the best and most constructive general gathering held by the church in recent years. The people are hopeful and optimistic, they meet and work together harmoniously, and they are bound together by a spirit of understanding and fraternal good will.

They bear few marks of the depression in their faces; whatever trials they have are resting lightly upon courageous spirits. They feel that the worst is over, and they look forward with hope.

The Pigeonhole

■ Conference Gossip

Are you one of the curious souls who are agitated by secrets? Then put this one among your teasers: watch out for some interesting news to break concerning Apostle Myron A. McConley almost any time now, the "grapevine" telegraphers inform us. Yes, it will be in the Herald.

Brother Gomer T. Griffiths, in his inimitable way, saying a good word for Henry L. Livingston, who is to be ordained a bishop, told the delegates that "anybody who can succeed as a pastor in Philadelphia can stand storm, hail, and fire!" And right quick F. M. S. came back that "such a man ought to be in the Presidency!"

One of the liveliest yarns is the parrot story that Brother McDowell brought out of the deepest recesses of Michigan. A certain male singer was very vain about his basso profundo voice, and was practicing with much gusto on a certain song that required him to a phrase, "O Lord," in a subterranean tone. For twenty minutes the basso practiced this phrase in a room where a sailor's parrot was confined in a cage. Finally the poor parrot, tortured to despair, could stand it no longer and broke out with hysterical screams and some of the very best marine imprecations. The lady of the house rushed in to quiet the parrot, who subsided, shaking his head and muttering to himself, "O Lord. O Lord."

One of the best introductions to a speech at the business session was that by President George N. Briggs, of Graceland College. It runs thus: a minister was addressing a large crowd of boys. One in the back of the room held up his hand and said: "Please speak louder, sir, I can't hear you." Another boy on the front row turned around and asked, "Are you sure you can't hear him?" "That's right," was the reply, "I can't hear him." The other boy rose to his feet and said, "Then shove over. I'm coming back!"

■ Religious Bargain Hunters

Some people select their religion as they do their bargains. They look for something that promises the most for the least money. And when they get it home they find that it was manufactured on a skimpy pattern from inferior materials, and that it can't be worn with either satisfaction or comfort.

People who came into this church tightly clutching personal salvation and vowing exclusive fidelity to the "six principles" while leaving out entirely tithing, stewardships, and the goal of Zion, are among the bargain hunters.

■ The Real Truth

The test of our faith is our works.

It is better to build a modest little home than to talk vainly about mansions.

It is better to be found at work today than to talk about what we are going to do tomorrow.

It is more worthy to build character and righteousness in our own homes than to tell the whole world how to run its business.

It is more important to show that the gospel has really regenerated our lives and made us better men and women, than to proclaim what it will do for others.

The Spirit of the General Conference

A Picture of Conference We were sitting at the press tables Saturday afternoon watching the crowd of more than 4,500 delegates and visitors assemble in the big Auditorium. Opposite us, at the west end of the wide platform, the Quorum of Twelve were already in their places. Very near us, at their little table, were Bishop Curry and his counselors; we could hear his voice as he talked to them quietly. The members of the Presidency were working on a deep pile of papers for the afternoon's business, and the secretaries and stenographers were getting out pencils and notebooks. We were glad to be near the beautiful bank of ferns and lilies across the front of the platform. We ourselves were ready to get the write-ups of business for the daily and weekly Herald.

A Friend's Comment A friend who is a reporter working on one of the big Kansas City dailies leaned over towards me and said: "I've watched several of your conferences, and I think that the people at this conference are the best you have had among those I have seen. They appear hopeful. To look at them you wouldn't know there had been a depression. It's rather good to see so many cheerful faces in times like these." A comment like that from an outside observer, entirely unsolicited, gave me a glad feeling of confirmation for my own observations.

A Happy Experience It is all right now for me to confess that I approached this conference with some apprehensions. Past conferences have had their trying and disappointing features. We had been through weeks of hard work getting ready for this one. But this has been a new and happy kind of conference experience for us. The good will, the friendliness, the fine quality of people in attendance, the spirituality of the prayer meetings, the absence of contention and bitterness, and the spirit of earnestness and peace have contributed toward making this conference a happy experience for those who must do the work.

I believe that any man's life will be filled with constant, unexpected encouragements of this kind if he makes up his mind to do his level best each day of his life—that is, tries to make each day reach as nearly as possible the highwater mark of pure, unselfish, useful living.—Booker T. Washington.

The Seventy-sixth General Conference

THE FIRST DAY—FRIDAY, APRIL 6

The morning classes and services on the first day of General Conference began with the cloudy skies and cold wind that followed a very heavy rain, but by the time lunch was over and the afternoon business session was ready to begin, the sun was shining brightly, and the crowds in the Auditorium were in a jovial mood.

Business session began at 2 p. m. with an estimated number of four thousand five hundred delegates and visitors present. There was a brief song service with Roy Cheville of Graceland leading.

President Frederick M. Smith rapped the gavel on the table and the large audience stood, waiting at attention. Two Boy Scouts came marching down the aisles, one bearing the national flag and the other the church flag. At a given signal the flags of many nations were unfurled around the balconies, and the audience was led in the singing of the first stanza of "America." This ceremony of presenting the colors made an effective introduction.

President Elbert A. Smith offered the invocation, giving thanks for blessings received and petitioning for Divine aid to the church and the world in their difficulties. "Redeemer of Israel" was sung, and President F. M. McDowell gave an impressive reading from the Church History of the original account of the organization of the church in 1830.

President Frederick M. Smith was chosen to preside over the conference, and he began the delivery of his address at 2:20. The text of the address is given elsewhere in this issue of the Herald. The three members of the First Presidency, the three of the Presiding Bishopric, and ten of the Quorum of Twelve were in attendance. Apostle Clyde F. Ellis is completing some special work in the Society Islands, and Apostle George G. Lewis is in charge of the Australasian Mission. I. A. Smith, General Church Secretary, is secretary of the conference, and Frank McDonald and O. W. Newton are the assistants.

President Smith's address, as on other occasions, looks forward in a constructive way. Reviewing the present situation, he went quickly to the presentation of a series of suggestions for the future of our church work: increasing the stake type of organization in the church; the increased use of volunteer help as an auxiliary to local leaders and conference appointees; the gathering of the people into approved centers where they may have the advantages of church privileges; the calling and training of new talent for the expanding duties of church work; the necessity of making the stakes more than self-supporting; the importance of preserving our philosophy and ideals intact from the infiltration of contrary and opposing ideas met on every hand; a plan for greater flexibility in the employment of the higher officers of the traveling ministry; and other items which may be seen in detail in the speech.

A number of reports, as given in the Conference Daily Herald, were directed to be spread upon the minutes, in order to be taken up later for discussion.

Friday evening, April 6, the Presiding Bishop, L. F. P. Curry, addressed a large and attentive congregation in the Auditorium on the subject: "The Gathering: Its Handicaps and Possibilities." We hope to present his entire address in a later issue of the Herald, but will give a few notes from it here. At the climax of his speech he said that there are five things that we can do immediately while we are waiting for the opportunity and the means of realizing our greater goals. The immediate activities he suggested are as follows: (1) Keep the law; (2) Train the talent that you have for doing something; (3) Save towards the stewardship for which you hope; (4) Do well the work where you are; (5) Invite all to come to Christ. These five things, Bishop Curry suggests, ought to keep us fairly busy while we are paying off the debt of the church and working for our chance to go ahead with our ideals for Zion.

It may be interesting to our readers to know that there were twenty-six separate meetings and classes, if not more, on the first day of the General Conference, and that every other week day of the conference will be very much like it. These included addresses to the Melchisedec and the Aaronic Priesthoods, seven classes, prayer meeting, preaching services, five quorum meetings, women's meeting, young people's meeting, song service, business session, and rehearsals for conference music.

THE SECOND DAY—SATURDAY, APRIL 7

By Saturday morning the classes were a little better settled, and visitors who had spent the first morning visiting were ready for study. In the Stone Church there were the regular daily addresses to the priesthood, the prayer meeting, and the preaching. Quorum meetings also occupied part of the time as they will each day during the conference.

At the afternoon business session the crowd was even larger than on the preceding day, easily passing the 4,500 mark. President George N. Briggs was called to the microphone to discuss the Graceland College report. Three men were approved for ordination as high priests: Justin L. Verhei of Portland, Oregon: Monte E. Lasater, of Seattle, Washington; and F. L. Whiting of Clitherall, Minnesota. N. Ray Carmichael was approved as the second counselor to Presiding Bishop L. F. P. Curry. The following men were directed to be ordained as patriarchs: F. E. Dillon, of Oklahoma, John A. Hanson of Iowa, and Frank Van Fleet of California. Superannuations were recommended and passed for George W. Thorburn, Amos Berve, A. M. Chase, G. T. Griffiths, W. A. Smith, George Jenkins, J. A. Gunsolley, and George Robley. The report of the Appropriations Committee was approved, of which something will be said at a later time.

Saturday evening President McDowell spoke in the Stone Church on "At Grips With Realities."

THIRD DAY—SUNDAY, APRIL 8

It was an inspiration, Sunday morning, to watch the throngs of people filling the great Auditorium nearly to its capacity. Not many of the 7,000 seats were left vacant by the people, who occupied a part of the choir space at the back of the speaker. President Frederick M. Smith addressed the congregation on the subject "Whither the Church?" He pled for an observance of the church law on some rather specific points, as given in our church literature; and pointed out that if we are to accomplish our goals for the common good, we must all curtail our individual desires, and live by a program that will conserve our resources of life and character as well as of property for the interests of the church.

A most imposing spectacle and an inspiring experience was the sacrament service in the afternoon. Two hundred and fifteen men engaged in taking the oblation and serving the emblems, each time marching down through the choir loft, across the platform to receive the trays, and out through the congregation. At the close of this service Brother N. Ray Carmichael was ordained as second counselor in the Presiding Bishopric.

At seven-thirty in the evening the Auditorium was again filled to hear the rendition of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" under the direction of Albert N. Hoxie of Philadelphia. Large numbers of friends not members of the church were present on invitation. From the audience, this performance was very impressive, the women singers of the chorus being all dressed in white, and the men all in dark suits. The combined choirs, trained under Paul N. Craig, Mabel Carlile, Gene Christy, Louise Evans, and others, responded well to the able and commanding direction of Brother Hoxie. The choruses revealed the enormous power and the control of the singers. The solo parts were ably handled by Pauline James Arnson, Alice M. Burgess, Fern Griggs, George Anway and Arthur Oakman.

For a Qualified Priesthood

James A. Wilson unites in terms of praise of Brother F. M. McDowell's efforts in Toronto in behalf of better activity among the priesthood, and expresses the belief that as a result of the work, there will be increased activity. He finds his hope in the ultimate success of Zion, and is encouraged to face what is in store for us. He says:

"Any branch with a cold and indifferent priesthood will not get very far towards the goal set by the general officers of the church, and it is time that some weeding out was done, for I am of the opinion that any branch big or little would be better with one man whose heart was in his work than with six who did not care what the program of the church was. And worse still, we have met men who were a hindrance; they seemed to believe that their mission and ordination gave them the right to grumble, find fault, and hold back. No intelligent farmer would be bothered with horses who would continually kick over the traces and balk, who would not pull together. He would soon get rid of them, for after all it is not the horse but the work that counts. So it is in the church, it is the work and progress of the church towards the finished task set here by the Lord, and no man or set of men should be allowed to hinder the accomplishment of this thing. I believe that when we get a priesthood who are dedicated, consecrated, and converted to God and his work, that then and only then will Zion arise and put on her glorious garments of salvation and not before.

"On our last evening together with Brother McDowell the priesthood met for a prayer and testimony meeting which was good. At the close of the meeting, we all with uplifted hands pledged ourselves to renew our oath of priesthood and expressed to our brother our appreciation of the good he had done us. And also at our suggestion we, as a priesthood, raised our hands to heaven in token of our confidence in the First Presidency of the church and our willingness to be led by them, which act we asked Brother McDowell to convey to you, which no doubt he has already done. There were present at that meeting about forty members of the priesthood from Toronto, Humber Bay, and Woodbridge. May God enable us all to keep our solemn pledge to him and the church."

That sounds good, and I am sure we shall see results from a closer working together of the priesthood of Toronto District.

Twenty-four Years a Pastor

H. E. C. Muir, presiding elder of the Valley Center Branch, Michigan, sends us copy of his report for the year which sets out in statistical form the activities of the branch as well as his own. In the letter accompanying he says he sends the report because he is assured that I, as President, am "vitaly interested in the activities of the local priesthood as well as the missionary arm of the church."

Yes, I am, and I am always glad to see reports which indicate earnest activity on the part of the local branch authorities. It is sure to be reflected in better conditions. Then Brother Muir adds:

"I might add that at this business meeting, the writer was re-elected as pastor for the twenty-fourth consecutive year, not a bad record, is it? How many pastors have you, I am wondering, who have a longer record as pastor than that? Of course I am frank to confess you have many who are filling the office possibly much better, no doubt. However we are moving in right direction I trust, and we believe 'gaining ground' or 'making progress' with the church program. We have not been without two or three elders active in branch work, also priests."

I am wondering how many presiding elders have had a longer continuous record.

Effective Teaching of the Word of Wisdom

Here is something which will interest those who hope to see our people giving more heed to the Word of Wisdom. Dr. Teel, our genial and earnest as well as efficient church physician, whose interest in the teaching of the Word of Wisdom has been steadily growing, and who delights to teach it in his scientific way, recently wrote me telling of a visit he made to the Lennox Mission in Los Angeles. The mission is under the care of Brother W. J. Nuckles, who seems to be ambitious to put the Saints of that mission to the fore in instructions on church ideals and endeavors. Dr. Teel says he was invited to the mission and spoke to the Saints, "a nice congregation," as he termed it, at the eleven o'clock hour and again at 2:30 p. m. "At the noon hour," says Dr. Teel, "the ladies served a Word of Wisdom luncheon without charge to the guests." He speaks of the lunch as being extraordinary and to speak of it as "delicious is to express it mildly."

To have the church physician discourse for two periods on the Word of Wisdom and between the lectures or sermons have a demonstration by ladies on how to prepare a luncheon in accord with the teachings strikes us as being a very fine way of teaching that important document. We congratulate Brother Nuckles and his coworkers on the success attained; for Dr. Teel speaks of their efforts as being that. He modestly refrains from speaking of his own efforts, but I can guess his part measured up to the standard. So we congratulate him and the Lennox Saints. And I find myself wishing that more instances of this kind of teaching of the Word of Wisdom might be experienced.

More Years to Serve

Here is a spontaneously expressed wish from a man who is on the sunset side of the journey of life, in a letter received recently. After telling somewhat of the work going on under his jurisdiction, and expressing a prayer that God might "bless all," he exclaims:

"How I wish that I had twenty years more to live so that I might spend them in this work!"

Well, that's about how we all feel when we in retrospection see the short road we have traveled in our progress, and in prospect see the greatness of the task that still lies before us. But it is something to be willing to work, and carry on. So brother, let us carry on while we may. And lest our time may perchance be short, we might well be constantly at our tasks as opportunity comes to work.

The Weight of Responsibility

One of our long-time missionaries and General Conference appointees, as the late holiday season approached, evidently fell to meditating upon the mutations of time wrought in its passing, and gave expression to some thoughts I want to pass along. He writes:

"Our lives have been extended until we have come almost to the close of this year of grace 1933, and I believe it has brought, along with the joys and sorrows that time always brings, a sense of the greatness of our tasks, and the importance of our responsibilities, to most of us.

"Progress has been made along many lines, and I believe we are coming to the close of the year with more confidence in each other, and more faith in the ultimate achievement of our goals than we had at its beginning

"I trust that it has brought to you many satisfactions, and much hope for the future. At the holiday season I extend hearty felicitations, and trust the coming New Year may be the best one in your experience, thus far, as the leader of the church, and that hereafter the years may become better and better."

That reflects deep concern for the progress of the church—a concern which chafes and saddens at delay in reaching our ideals which brings sorrow at the slowing up of progress—and yet which in the face of obstacles will lift one to greater effort and closer application to work. I find myself heartily reciprocating the good wishes of the brother.

IN A RECENT LETTER from Bishop E. L. Traver, written just after the close of the recent Southern New England District Conference, he says that the conference was very successful and that there was not a single ripple or disturbance of any kind during the whole conference. He also says: "Because of the ordinations of five young men to the priesthood, and six others that were not present to be ordained later; and further, because of the spiritual endorsement of the ordinations and the very high spiritual atmosphere all through the conference, it marks an epoch in the history of this district."

Photographs Wanted!

Illustrations Will Be Used for the Herald

The Herald Publishing House is pleased to announce to its patrons and to the church at large that our church publications, the Saints' Herald, particularly, will soon be launched upon a new policy which will permit the more extensive use of good photographic and drawing illustrations. This change will make a more valuable, interesting, and modern publication, and will give the Herald greater possibilities for recording events of current importance, as well as preserving records of historic landmarks.

One thing is necessary: we shall need some help from our readers and friends. We need good photographs—snapshots will not do—regular photographs give the best results.

Has your women's department recently made a large contribution to the church? Send us a good photograph of the group. Has some young man or woman been given an important and responsible position in the church? Send us a photograph. Do you have a fine church building of which you are proud? Send us a photograph!

Anything may be of interest to Herald readers. We cannot promise to use everything, but we would be glad to have a picture of whatever you have to show. The Herald management and editors will have to be the final judges of suitability of pictures for printing. Most readers will understand why.

We hope to be starting in about a month, and we must begin to collect pictures now. Remember, photographs, not snapshots. Editors, Saints' Herald, Independence, Missouri.

Any individual who learns to do something better than anybody else—learns to do a common thing in an uncommon manner—has solved his problem, regardless of the color of his skin.—Booker T. Washington.

NEWS BRIEFS

Sixty-five Hundred Hear Oratorio, "Elijah"

A throng of sixty-five hundred, probably the largest to assemble in the main room of the Auditorium during General Conference, heard a powerful rendition of Felix Mendelssohn's oratorio "Elijah" given by a chorus of approximately 450 voices and by the Auditorium Orchestra, both under the direction of Albert N. Hoxie, of Philadelphia.

Sunday night hundreds of music lovers left the Auditorium with the reassuring message of the closing chorus number ringing in their hearts, "Be not afraid, saith God the Lord. Be not afraid; thy help is near."

The performance, which some have said was stronger and better executed than previous General Conference oratorios, was dedicated to the memory of Mrs. Louise Robinson, who for many years gave her time, talent, and hearty support to the music of the church. At the opening of the hour the great audience stood in silent tribute to this friend of music.

The excellency of solo interpretations Sunday night was not overshadowed by the strength and power of chorus numbers. Arthur Oakman singing in the role of Elijah, stirred his audience. Other soloists were Mrs. Pauline James Arnson, soprano, Miss Fern Griggs, soprano, Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, contralto, and George Anway, tenor. Robert and George Miller were pianists.

This performance represents many weeks of intensive work on the part of musicians and singers in various parts of the church. There were singers in the chorus Sunday night from Michigan, Pennsylvania, California, and other states, and some from across the line in Canada. One hundred and fifty singers came from Lamoni and the A Cappella Choir sang a special part in the oratorio. Too much credit cannot be given local directors who have worked on the oratorio throughout the past winter, and to nonmember friends who assisted in the concert. Rehearsals of orchestra or chorus were held nightly from the opening of conference until the final performance.

All who took part in the presentation of this great musical composition think with Brother Hoxie, that its message of reassurance is particularly significant and appropriate at this time. They hope that those who heard will carry home with them from conference new fearlessness and courage born of the knowledge that Divine help and succor are near.

Florence Thompson Dies of Injuries Received in Accident

Miss Florence Thompson, head of the Speech Department at Graceland College, was fatally injured last Thursday evening when the car in which she was coming to General Conference, plunged over an embankment ten miles north of Excelsior Springs, Missouri. Several other members of the party received minor injuries.

Miss Thompson passed away at the Independence Sanitarium early Monday morning where she had been in a very critical condition since the accident. She has been a member of Graceland's faculty a number of years, and was highly respected by all with whom she came in contact during her years of service.

Apostle John W. Rushton Addresses Independence Students

Students of William Chrisman High School were happy to welcome as their guest speaker, April 6, at their regular assembly, Apostle John W. Rushton, who is attending General Conference. Brother Rushton returned from his mission to Europe last December.

He was introduced to the student body by Elder John Blackmore, a member of the faculty, and confined his talks to his travels in Australia, New Zealand, the Society Islands, England, and various countries in Europe.

Easter Season Baptisms Impressive

Twelve young people were baptized at Mount Washington, Missouri, in Kansas City Stake, on Easter Sunday. The superintendent of the children's department, and her assistant, arranged the service. Confirmation and communion service occurred at eleven o'clock in the morning.

Seven candidates were led into the font banked with ferns and lilies at Rock Island, Illinois, on that day, the branch president officiating.

Three were baptized on Good Friday at New Philadelphia, Ohio, by Pastor John Carlisle.

As a result of a week of pre-Easter services, seven persons were baptized into Quindaro congregation, Kansas City Stake. This series of meetings composed one of the most successful events of its kind ever enjoyed in the stake; it is the fifth annual series conducted by Quindaro's pastor, Elder H. A. Higgins.

Youth's Forum

At General Conference

The Young People's Forum

The large young people's room in the Auditorium has been packed to overflowing with a large gathering of very fine young people and their leaders, so that C. B. Woodstock, who is chairman of the meetings, has been pleading for a larger space in which to meet. There is not even standing room for all who wish to attend. It is a joy to meet these splendid young people and observe their cleanliness, their intelligence, and their keen interest in church affairs. In every way, they are normal, healthy, vigorous young people who are trying to give their lives to the realization of their ideals. Some brief notes on the meetings follow:

APRIL 6—CHURCH GOVERNMENT

Apostle F. Henry Edwards gave, in his usual thorough manner, as complete a description of church organization and government as could be packed into the time available for his speech. The details cannot be presented here for lack of space, but the presentation was much appreciated by the young people, as was attested by their comments and by the large numbers who returned to the forum the next day.

APRIL 7—TASKS AND PROGRAM

E. E. Closson, director of the Young People's Division of the church, also an instructor at Graceland College, delivered a frank and practical talk on activities. Here are bits from his comments: "Our problem is no different than the problem of the whole church." He emphasized the necessity of doing something rather than talking about doing it.

There is a need for activities that will lead to something useful, and worth-while accomplishment. Mere activity is not enough. "It is no use to try to do God's work if you are fighting God's people. If young people can't get along with older ones, it is their own fault. They should be able to make allowances and adjustments." It is foolish to complain of being misunderstood—young people are well enough understood. The trouble with them is that they spend too much time wanting to do the wrong things.

"We need leaders—but we need something else far more—we need to realize that we can be leaders. And we ought to be leaders. Don't try to be a leader of the whole world right away, but try to do well in leading a few. No one is too young to go ahead, and assume responsibility."

RECEPTION AT 4 P. M. SATURDAY

The young people of Independence and Kansas City Stake were hosts to a large number of young visitors in the lower room of the Auditorium, and entertained them at a reception. Friendship, good will, and fraternity were in evidence at this gathering. There was a program, a get-acquainted "mixer" and refreshments were served. The activities were in charge of Roy Settles of the Independence Young People's Council and George Mesley of the Kansas City Stake O. B. K's. It is to be hoped that these friendly gatherings will be a part of future conferences.

YOUNG AND OLD ON EQUAL TERMS

The young people are no "race apart." They carry no chip-on-the-shoulder attitude, and they mingle with older people in all sorts of classes and activities. In fact, there hardly seemed to be such a thing as "age consciousness," which is as it should be. One of the finest things that has happened in the church in recent years has been the disappearance of interest in the "age line" between young and old.

A rich man is not necessarily a man with a whole pot of money but a man who is really happy. And I am that.

The really rich man is the man who has fewest wants.

My idea of success in life is Happiness. Happiness, as Sir Henry Newbolt says, is largely gained by "Happifying."

A thing that many young fellows don't seem to realize at first is that success depends on oneself and not on a kindly fate, nor on the interest of powerful friends.

I was asked the other day if I could define in a few words, say fifty, my idea of the best step to take in life.

I replied that I could do it in three—make a happy marriage, meaning that he who succeeds in gaining the lasting affection of a really good wife has won the biggest step in life.

By happy marriage I don't mean a jolly honeymoon of a few weeks or months and then mutual toleration, but a honeymoon that lasts through the years. Experto Crede. Yet one more item is needed to complete success, and that is the rendering of service to others in the community. Without this the mere satisfaction of selfish desire does not reach the top notch.—Lord Baden-Powell in Lessons of a Lifetime

He who is happy is rich but it does not follow that he who is rich is happy.—A Cingalese proverb

"Watchman, What of the Night?"

A Sermon

By Dwight D. W. Davis

THIS EVENING I have no desire to be either light-hearted or facetious. Rather, I am impressed with the serious import of the slogan adopted by the young people of the Seattle and British Columbia District. That slogan has served as our convention theme; it is the theme for this evening's banquet: "Zion Must be Redeemed."

As I sat here listening to Apostle McConley speak to us on this subject, there came to memory the words of a man, long since dead, who "was too honest, too uncompromising, too courageous, to conceal his convictions in order to retain his prestige or win the favor of posterity"—Thomas Paine.

The setting is the American Revolution. Hope, in the ultimate victory for the Whigs, who were the staunch friends and loyal supporters of the American Revolution, was at a low ebb. Even the soldiers, under the inspired leadership of the great general, George Washington, were despondent. But there was one man who, through his writings, incited a new faith in the Whigs—Thomas Paine. Many of his phrases became clarion calls to action. One in particular stands out—this is the one I thought of while Apostle McConley was speaking to us.

In his series of pamphlets on The American Crisis, Thomas Paine opened the first sentence of the first number with these stirring words: "These are times that try men's souls."

If that were true in the days of the American Revolution, when mankind fought for political freedom, it is no less true today when mankind is fighting for economic and social freedom. The national crisis through which we have been passing has presented us with "times that try men's souls." It was President Roosevelt who, in his message to the 73rd Congress, said in part:

"I congratulate this congress upon the courage, the earnestness and the efficiency with which you met the crisis at the special session . . . I venture to say that the task confronting the first congress of 1789 was no greater than your own."

And yet, we have not passed through the valley: neither politically, economically, socially, nor religiously. This should be of especial significance to Latter Day Saints, for God has said that He would have a tried people. Cognizant, in a small way to be sure, of the rapidly changing order about us, I am led to exclaim: "Watchman, what of the night?"

JESUS took with him to the garden of Gethsemane, Peter, James, and John. To them He said: "tarry ye here, and watch with me." Leaving them, the Savior went a little farther and prayed. When Jesus returned to His disciples He found them fast asleep and exclaimed: "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?"

Christ has asked each of us who has named His name to watch with Him one hour through the night. The night is the chaotic turmoil about us; the hour is our life; the watch is the light of the gospel. We have been asked to "let the lower lights be burning! Send a gleam across the wave!" Perchance "some poor, fainting, struggling seaman you may rescue, you may save."

Watchman, what of the night? Shall it find us asleep, as were the three apostles, or thoroughly alert to the magnitude of our calling?

FOR YEARS we have been preaching Zion and its redemption. I sometimes wonder whether, as a group of Saints, we really know what Zion is, what its problems really are, what zionic life really entails. My hope is that if we are like the man whose loyalty to the Monroe Doctrine was questioned, we shall change.

"'What!' remonstrated an incensed patriot—one hundred per cent American. 'You don't believe in the Monroe Doctrine.'

"'I never said any such thing,' answered the suspected man. 'I believe in the Monroe Doctrine with all my heart. I would gladly lay down my life for it. What I said is that I haven't the slightest idea what it means.'"

Do you find yourself in that position: thoroughly believing in the principle of Zion; willingly ready to lay down your life for Zion, and yet not having more than the faintest idea what Zion means? If you do, remember that we cannot be intelligently consecrated to that with which we are not familiar.

The Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, recently wrote: "The intelligence of a nation is the sum of the intelligences of all of its citizens . . . The individual American must be educated not only that he may be able to enjoy a happier and fuller life; he must be educated in order that, in cooperation with other educated Americans, he may do his part toward sustaining and upbuilding an intelligent and beneficent and capable government.

AND WHAT IS TRUE of the nation is true of the church. The intelligence of the church is the sum of the intelligences of all of its membership.

For this reason latter day revelation counsels us to "study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people . . . and a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion." Watchman, what of the night?

The need of the hour, as always, is for leadership. We need men and women who have "courage, honesty, common sense, knowledge and vision." We need men and women who will never "compromise principle for prestige" and who will never "sacrifice honor for gain." We need men and women who will not let the forces of stupidity turn the clock of progress backward. We need men and women who are willing to dare to press forward realizing that when they get to the place where they accept the attitude of the status quo, their days of usefulness are greatly curtailed. We need men and women who realize that we get life blood for our institutions by looking forward, not backward, and adjusting our methods and teachings in the light of future goals. To quote again from President Roosevelt's 73rd message to Congress:

"Lines have been rightly drawn between those to whom this recovery means a return to the old methods and those for whom recovery means a reform of many adjustments of many of our ways of thinking and therefore of many of our social and economic arrangements.

"Civilization cannot go back; civilization must not stand still. We have undertaken new methods. It is our task to perfect, to improve to alter when necessary, but in all cases to go forward."

SINCE 1930 many changes have taken place in the policy of our church. We find a complete change in the personnel of the Presiding Bishopric, and concomitant with the change, a different policy. We behold the evolution of the Department of Religious Education with a new emphasis upon, and different methods in accomplishing, "the building of men and women for the kingdom of God, and equipping them in an organized way to carry on the work of that kingdom among men." We discern the rapidly budding growth of a new "youth movement" within the church in which this institution, as never before, is seeking to enlist most effectively youth in the responsible work of the church.

It is well that these changes are taking place for, in the words of the editor of The Journal of Education, "Every generation requires a different training from the last." Yet there are those who will deny this. Many play safe by seeking to preserve the status quo, for the past only is known; the future is a mystery. Timidity, and lack of faith, prevent their venturing forward.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, in his annual report to the university's trustees last December, made this statement:

"The people are everywhere preferring the man who will get something done to him who sits mournfully and helplessly by, saying that things will be shortly much better."

Lest there be those who erroneously conclude that I'm for changing everything more than a year old, let me state that none of us should be interested in change for change sake alone, neither for "goodness sake." But we should be interested in change for life's sake. Were we not able to learn, vicariously, by the experiences of the race, we'd be in a sorry state of affairs. Progress, for us, would be nonexistent.

Indeed, we must learn the lessons of the past. I have tried often to help you understand that your contribution, as well as mine, to the church, as well as any other institution, is contingent upon either your enriched or your impoverished apperceptive background.

We must "prove all things and hold fast that which is good." At the same time we should endeavor to appreciate that the past offers us something to build upon; not something to be content with. The very fact that Christ gave those who received Him the "power to become the sons of God" implies a dynamic, not a static, order. How dynamic are you willing to become? Watchman, what of the night?

I am told that many animals pass the winter months in close quarters in a torpid or lethargic state. This "wintering" process we call hibernation. With the first signs of spring these animals come forth, thin and ravenously hungry. It usually takes some time for them to fill in the "hollows" of a winter's starving and develop into their prime again.

Sometimes, in a religious sense, I think we follow the habit of these hibernating animals. Only with us the results prove far more disastrous. My thinking in this connection has codified itself into the following statement. I want you to think about it, remember and apply it to your own life.

To hibernate in the caves of religious inactivity is to become spiritually emaciated. Jesus expressed it differently when he said, "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." Watchman, what of the night?

The evening of December 26, 1933, James R. Wedell was asked if he would fly five month old Sue Trammel, who had water on the brain, from Houston, Texas, to Baltimore, Maryland. There was a bare possibility that a famed brain surgeon in Baltimore could perform a delicate operation upon the child's brain and save her life. Within an hour James Wedell, together (Continued on page 468)

Run the Race

By E. B. Hull

PAUL gives us an illustration of the Greek and Roman athlete having to discard everything that would hinder in his running the race:

"Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but only one receiveth the prize. And every man that striveth for mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible. I therefore so run, not as uncertainty; so fight I not as one that beateth the air: But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."—1 Corinthians 9:24-27.

"Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."—Hebrew 12:1.

In this illustration it shows that Christians should use the same formula if success is to be achieved. Many of these weights that we adopted in the days of our carelessness, such as the "lust of the flesh, lust of the eyes, pride of life," hate, jealousy, indulgence in worldly things, are weights that hinder in our Christian advancement. Man will only advance in so far as he sees the need for advancement—hence qualification must be considered.

The first thing that is needed to give intelligent service in anything is qualification and skill. No one can render proper service until they are trained and have skill. Qualification means preparation in church work as in all other kinds of business. There are two elements to be considered in being qualified: First, we must know how, and that is skill. Accuracy in knowing is truth, and that is divine. Second, integrity, that is accuracy in feeling. You may teach your boy to be a locksmith, and he may qualify, but if he is minus integrity, he may be a skilled lock-breaker as well as a lock-maker.

Character and not genius is what this age is short of today. Greatness of character is independent of genius. Genius must be developed by activity, but great characters arise from suffering and determination.

CHARACTER is the great thing in life. Reputation is not a true guide. Your friends may make you appear better than what you are. Your enemies may give you a reputation which makes you appear worse than what you are. Character is the thing you build yourself, the house you have erected. No one can do this for you. You cannot dream yourself into a character, you must hammer and forge one for yourself. Many people are known by what is seen on the exterior of their lives; but man is not always what he appears to be when dressed up. Many people lead double lives, one is the invisible life (what you are to yourself) and this life may be altogether different from what you are on the outside, (what you are to others). The surface life is trivial, unimportant unless the life within is expressed on the out life. Your character tells what you are. Your personality is the you that is inside of you.

Paul says, "that every man that striveth for mastery is temperate in all things." To be temperate one must abstain from all harmful things, and use in moderation all good things.

Connie Mack, baseball manager of the Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, "Athletics," at one time had a very efficient pitcher by the name of Waddell. This man was very good when he was sober, but he would dissipate, stay up late nights drinking with friends, then the next day his muddled brain would cause him to lose the game—as a result he had to be released. Last year Connie Mack said, "Five years ago I would take a man who drank, provided I thought I could handle him and gradually break him of the habit. Now, I wouldn't bother with a youngster who drinks. That's my fixed policy. Booze," says Mack, "slows a man down and keeps him from thinking as quickly as he ought to. So booze must go. It isn't a matter of morality, it's a matter of efficiency."

IN the Greek and Roman contests those that were to compete had to be temperate in all things. The same rule should prevail in our sport games today. Bad habits and abnormal indulgence of worldly things have destroyed the success of many men. The Greek athletes were required to take an oath that they would play the game fairly, and the only reward for victory was a garland of leaves or a palm branch. It was real sport with them. In this oath the Greek athlete said: "I will never bring disgrace to this our nation, by any act of dishonesty or cowardice on my part . . . I will revere and respect our nation's laws, and do my best to incite a like respect and reverence in those . . . who are prone to annul and set them at naught. I will strive unceasingly to quicken the public's sense of civic duty; thus in all these ways I will transmit to this nation, not less, but greater, better and more beautiful conditions than were transmitted to me."

We must also play the game of life fairly, fairly to ourselves and to (Continued on page 468)

The Fate of the Morrisites

By Mrs. E. E. Eliason

I AM another reader who enjoys the Herald from cover to cover and then looks anxiously forward to the coming of the next issue.

When I read in the biography of Mark Forscutt the account of the massacre of the followers of Joseph Morris at Weber Canyon, I wonder if some of the Herald readers would be interested in knowing what became of those who survived that cruel attack.

I have not a complete account of their travels, but I do know that after a time they settled in the Deer Lodge Valley in Western Montana where they engaged in such occupations as farming and stock raising. Here they built a little church edifice where they continued to worship and endeavored to put into practice the teachings of their murdered prophet. Here large families were reared to manhood and womanhood. Some, like Brother Forscutt, after hearing the message of the Reorganization, united with this church and are among our most staunch defenders today.

Within a radius of perhaps one mile of the little white church reside the last half dozen, or less, of the followers who still cherish the name of Joseph Morris. It is to these I wish to pay tribute. Nearly all have reached the fourscore mark. Some are well past that figure, but no more highly respected citizens are to be found anywhere. Their lives have been an inspiration to all who have had the privilege of their acquaintance. They "are going down the valley, one by one, Going toward the setting of the sun," and with the passing of each one the people of the Deer Lodge Valley experience a great loss.

Within the little white church silence reigns. The door has been securely locked and the windows neatly boarded up, but it will stand as a memorial to the honest, upright lives of those pioneers of the Deer Lodge Valley for many years to come.

For fourteen years I lived a close neighbor to these people of whom I have written. I doubt if many of our church people know a remnant of the Morrisites still exist so I felt impressed to write this little account feeling it would be of interest to some of our aged readers at least.

President Smith was very much interested in the little group when he visited our reunion several years ago and I believe he took a picture of the little church building.

The Standard of Daily Living

By Mrs. Elsie G. Wettengel

In these days of confusion I wonder how many of us realize the necessity of Christian influence in our everyday life. Are we living Christ or merely professing him.

Jesus taught by example rather than by precept. He did not tell the multitude how to live and let it go at that. He showed them how to live.

Zion cannot be attained if we represent Christ and the church he established, but fail to follow his teachings in our daily living. He was prayerful, meek, and tolerant. His last thought was of self.

A class in art was grouped around a model, and the instructor went from student to student, correcting the work according to the model from their viewpoint. When he came to one student he said, "Sir, I believe you are doing too much copying. You are watching the work of your neighbors, rather than your subject. The main point is to draw the model as it appears to you. The student on the other side has an altogether different view. What is true to him may not be true to you."

Creed in business, politics and our daily routine is destructive, but that which Christ exemplified is constructive. My brother has as great a right to free thinking as I myself. He may view the model from a different angle. There is always the possibility that I may be wrong.

Christ set the standard for our daily living. No one is perfect, but if we fail to live up to the standard we must adjust our lives accordingly. A guide goes ahead, paving the way for his following. As Latter Day Saints we claim to represent the church Christ established. We must not fail in our representation.

During my teen age a Sunday school teacher presented the seventh chapter of Matthew to her class in such a forceful way that I have never been able to forget it. We need that chapter in our daily living. Too often we condemn our neighbor while we ourselves are worse. We are known by our fruits, not by our leaves.

Christians professing Christ only, build their house upon the sand. Christians living Christ build their house upon the rock. My fluent speech may lead converts to accept the gospel, but if I fail to live as I have taught, I fail my Lord.

Many professing Christians are living a dual or two-sided life. Pretense is remote from Christ's teaching. If I am a Christian, the world must know Christ in me; the world must see Christ in me. I must serve him at all times, in all places, and under every circumstance; in my home and among my daily associates as well as in my church.

Conversational Filigree

After Sallie Ruth and Jeff's departure, Larry had pondered for a long time over the strange things she had stumbled upon. Only an old picture mislaid in a book, and yet how much light it had brought to her! It had told her so much in fact that she was exhausted with discovering and thinking.

And so, after a time, she fell into a light doze to dream that the Sylvia hanging in a picture on Mrs. Cameron's wall, stepped out from her frame, and was talking to Mrs. Hampton. Their conversation was earnest, and they gestured frequently. Larry was trying hard to hear what they were saying. She could see them look at each other now enviously, now sadly; but not one word of the matters they were discussing came to her ears. It would have been interesting to have heard what these women who were both in love with dear, white-haired Doc, could be saying about him and about each other.

Then the scene changed. Larry was not conscious of her surroundings; she was aware of only one thing. Greg was bending over her, his eyes concerned, even anguished, and he kept repeating: "Larry, are you hurt? My darling, are you hurt?" She wanted to assure him that she was all right, that it was just a silly little sprain in the ankle, but it was so wonderful to see him there, that she just didn't take the trouble to speak.

"Larry, it's awful to have you suffering! Why didn't you let me know sooner?" The dream voice choked with reproach.

"But—I'm not—hurt," she managed to say as she lay in an apparently semi-hypnotic condition. Then she realized that this wasn't a dream at all. She had spoken the words aloud, and Greg was actually bending over her.

"Why—why!" her voice trembled to a whisper. Surely her imagination was doing unheard-of things to her sanity!

Then he sat down on the couch and, being very gentle so as not to twist the injured ankle, he raised her in his arms.

Oh, the exquisiteness of having his arms about her? To Larry it was more lovely than the most beautiful dream she had ever had. Greg was there—at last! He had come to her! He was concerned about her hurt! He wanted to be with her more than anyone else! She hoped he would never leave. She hoped, too, that something had happened to prevent Mrs. Keithley from coming. It would be too bad to spoil the children's surprise, but well—Greg was here!

Larry's world seethed with emotions. She was laughing with joy and yet she was crying, too, and Greg was wiping away her tears and kissing her. It was several minutes before she could talk coherently. She seemed unable to control her voice. It insisted on hitting the strangest off-keys!

But how like heavenly music were Greg's words as he whispered how much he had missed her; how he had suffered; how many times he had wanted to be near her; how he loved her; how he was never going to let anything come between them again.

In answer all she could do was twine her arms about his neck and cry harder than ever.

"But come," he said finally, his tone growing lighter; "you must account for yourself, young lady. I want you to tell me everything you've been doing. I'll admit I've kept pretty close track of you all the time, but I want to hear you tell it. . . . How have I kept track of you? Well, I've talked to Doc a number of times and Dart has told me a lot about you—he thinks you're a swell kid! Then once I met Mrs. Hampton on the street and asked about you. And a few days ago Rowe McCarley gave me a tip that nearly bowled me over. Until then, Larry, I thought you really didn't care for me any more—but when he told me about that time you cried—well, I knew better; I knew that you wanted me just as much as I had wanted you all the time." Here his voice grew softer and he pressed his lips to her hair: "It was horribly hard, Larry, staying away from you!"

"And it was worse than that staying away from you," she whispered back, then raised her lips for a kiss.

"Now, what am I going to do to entertain an invalid tonight?" demanded Greg a few minutes later as he walked about the living room inspecting all the familiar objects. He had just observed that it seemed like getting back home to be at Mrs. Hampton's again.

"Just sit and let me look at you," Larry's voice was ecstatic. "It's so wonderful to see you that—"

A step in the front room interrupted her. "Well, look whose here!" It was Mrs. Blaine. "Why, Gregory, I haven't seen you since I came home from Iowa. How are you?" and she shook his hand languidly.

The young man sent an appealing glance toward Larry which said: "Why did she have to butt in now?" But he cordially offered her a chair.

"—But of course you would be taking care of Larry," she went on accepting the seat; "now I do hope you two have been behaving," and she beamed knowingly upon them. "Larry," turning toward the couch, "Sallie Ruth has been downright worried because she had to leave you tonight, but she and Jeff promised some of their friends days ago to go to a theater party." Complacently she folded those idle white hands of hers.

"Sallie Ruth and Jeff called for me," mumbled Greg, "as they were on their way to the party."

"Oh," thought Larry, "so that was how he found out about my ankle! And—why, I'll bet that was the children's surprise, too! It wasn't to be Mrs. Keithley, after all. That was just a stall! How clever and sweet of them!"

"I'm glad they did," rambled on Mrs. Blaine; "those children seem so much more thoughtful of others than they used to be. Guess that's a sign that they're growing up. Seems to me that I can see where they've both improved a great deal since I left Independence."

"Yes, and that was the reason they did improve," grimly thought the girl on the couch.

"Well, Larry, I haven't had a chance to see you very much since I came home. Carmen says you're real busy these days with your Sunday school class and other work. She's proud of you. I'm glad you're doing something, too. What got you started anyway? You used to have such a don't care attitude about the church."

Greg's face looked as though it was only his idea of modern chivalry that restrained him from putting this woman out of the room.

Frantically Larry was trying to think of some means of sending the visitor on her way. Wasn't there some errand she could do?

"I thought I ought to drop in and see how you were this evening, because, naturally, with Mrs. Hampton gone, I feel sort of responsible for the house and all. She did so hate to leave you behind, and Carmen—why she actually cried about it, though of course she was dying to see John graduate."

"That's right," Greg seemed to be struggling between disgust and a desire to be polite. "John does graduate this spring, doesn't he?"

"Well, I hope to tell you he does!" reproachful surprise. Sometimes Mrs. Blaine affected high school slang, and at such moments Larry writhed with dislike of her affectation.

"I suppose you're proud of a daughter who'll soon be going abroad," surmised Greg, his eyes telegraphing to Larry the hope that soon they might induce this woman to leave.

"It's nothing more than I expected," positively. "Sallie Ruth deserved every good thing that comes to her. Goodness knows, I've always tried to bring her up so that she could mingle with the best of people and not be ashamed!"

Larry wanted to shout her derision.

"—She's always been so interested in the finer things of life—in etiquette and in travel. That has always appealed to her just as it has to me. Now I told my sister Anna, that lives up in Des Moines, that I supposed Sallie Ruth would get to go to all the places I've always dreamed of visiting and couldn't 'cause we didn't have the money." Her voice quavered with self-pity. "But I'm glad she has the opportunity to do it. That's mother love, Larry, when a mother is willing to see her daughter do some of the things she herself has longed and longed to do!"

"There must be a lot of work to getting a girl ready for a trip like that," Greg's venture was desperate; "you mustn't let us keep you from doing anything you should. I'll be here with Larry until the kids get home."

"Oh," she cocked a surprised eye at him, "practically everything's done. Mrs. Keithley even helped the child select her wardrobe. About all I have left to do is put in a few of the little things that only mothers think of," and she laughed pridefully.

In her soul Larry groaned aloud. Couldn't Mrs. Blaine see that she was in the way? That her absence was preferred to her presence? Was she blind? Was there no way to induce her to go? But as if unaware of the two young people's concern, the woman blandly sat on, talking, always talking.

"Been studying?" the question was directed at Larry as Mrs. Blaine's eyes roved over the books on the reading table.

Larry nodded.

"You're getting more like Carmen every day of your life. She reads the Doctrine and Covenants until you'd think it was a love story—odd girl, Carmen, anyway. I never could understand her as I do Sallie Ruth—she's more like her father, studious and serious; but Sallie Ruth and I prefer to get a little joy out of life."

Would she never run out of something to say? thought Larry, and then she started. Idly Mrs. Blaine was turning through the volume of church history which she had picked up. The girl caught her breath—if only she would not find that picture! But it was a vain hope.

"Well, I declare," exclaimed the woman, "if this isn't a picture of Doc's wife! Now who'd a thought he'd have been so careless as to leave it in here? Pretty isn't she?"

"Doc's wife!" ejaculated Greg.

"Certainly. Didn't you know he was married once," smirked their informer.

"She ran off and left him. She was a lot younger than he and a giddy sort. Ran off with another man."

Wishing as she had been for further information concerning the picture, Larry found herself listening unwillingly. She didn't want to hear about it from this woman. Anyway how did she happen to know? But probably she had found out as so many dealers of gossip do, heard something and made up the rest. The girl groped for something to say to change the subject.

But the other went relentlessly on: "Yes, she ran off with a fellow for his good looks and his romantic, love-making ways. He was a good-for-nothing lot, and I guess Doc always worried for fear she would come to actual want. He spent years trying to find her, and never has got over it. Sometimes I think he's so forgiving he'd have taken her back after all she'd done. But he never found her."

"Did you enjoy living in the country with your brother?" deliberately asked Larry.

Mrs. Blaine gave her a sharp glance. "Yes, for a time, but I always kept thinking of the girls and how they'd be missing me. Tim's wife—Tim's my brother, you know—was sick and they couldn't spare me for days."

"Well, now it's nine-thirty," Greg hopefully inspected his watch. "It's getting late, Mrs. Blaine, and I imagine you're still tired from your recent trip. If you want to go to bed, I'll stay with Larry."

"Now, don't you worry about me, Greg," coyly—"aren't you the most thoughtful boy! But I ain't a mite sleepy! I'm used to late hours. There's just that difference between my brother and sister. Tim lives in the country where they have to get up early, and so the whole family is in bed by nine o'clock. But Anna is just the opposite. Her family is never in until after midnight. I got so used to late hours there that I'm almost an owl."

Larry's heart sank.

"Besides," the woman continued, "it isn't often I get to see you two—you're so busy," winningly, "and I enjoy talking to you. I always enjoy talking to young people."

Then Larry's eyes fell on a jigsaw puzzle which Doc and Mr. Horace Peterson had been working the day before. "Do you like puzzles," she queried. Perhaps if Mrs. Blaine became interested in a puzzle, she would leave them alone. Try that one. It's named the "Trail's End," or something like that. Doc says it's good and hard. He always carries the board in and puts it on the end table next to his chair. Would you like to do it there in the front room? Greg, would you fix it for her—"

"No, no, don't trouble, Greg. I don't work puzzles," virtuously. "I have all the puzzles I can appreciate in life. Such foolishness as this jigsaw craze anyway!

Why I've burned half a dozen or so up since I came home!"

Greg who had sprung up at Larry's suggestion, reluctantly resumed his place.

"Now I've done a lot of the talking," declared Mrs. Blaine; "tell me something of yourselves. The girls have been so busy they haven't had time to talk, and I'm behind on affairs here at home." Then playfully: "Larry, let me look at that left hand of yours. What, no diamond yet!"

The girl could have screamed with irritation and resentment, and Greg's face slowly grew a brick red.

"I must say, Greg, you aren't the fast worker I thought you were," teasingly; "I—"

"Please let's don't discuss it," broke in Larry coldly. "Mrs. Blaine, I can't see that this is any of you—" then she caught herself. Far be it from her to do anything to ruffle Mrs. Blaine's good nature until after Sallie Ruth was gone. There was no way of telling what might happen to the young traveler's plans if her mother grew peeved at any or all of them. Larry bit her tongue.

"Well, I'm sorry if I intruded," adroitly apologized the woman; "but I'm so interested in the happiness of the people I care about, that naturally, with my own girls disposed of for the present, I think of Larry." She was explaining it to Greg. "I just supposed you two would be engaged and deep in plans—"

"There goes a mouse!" Greg made a quick movement.

"A mouse!—o-oh, where?" The visitor started up.

"Ran behind the buffet," the young man's tone was cool and calm.

"Uh—er—well, I don't like mice a little bit—!" How the hopes of her watchers sank as slowly and warily the woman sat down again. "Now up at Tim's they had more mice in their barn—"

The telephone interrupted what she might have had to say concerning the mice in Tim's barn. "I'll answer it, Larry," obligingly she jumped up.

While Mrs. Blaine was in the hall, Greg leaned over the couch and held Larry very close to his heart. "Hear it beating?" he tenderly inquired: "Sweet-heart, it's beating for you."

"I'm so sorry," Mrs. Blaine's voice broke in on their tete-a-tete; "for I've enjoyed the chat so much, but I must go home now. That telephone call was for me on a matter of business. I'd forgotten all about it."

Conference—And a New Home

Apr. 4th—Left for Independence. To Bro. T. James, home where I was made thoroughly at home. 6th—Conference convened. Joseph Smith, pres.; W. W. Blair, associate; Hy Stebbins, Secy.; W. C. Cadwell, ass't.; Bro. Besbee, chorister; Bro. Gillin, speaker for the evening. Thurs. 9th—Fasting and prayer today that the Lord might speak concerning David and the 1st quorum of the church. 11th—A good quorum meeting at Bro. C. Mills. In conference afternoon on motion of Bro. Robinson, I was called to the chair during the sustaining of authorities. Joseph Smith and Bro. W. W. Blair were sustained. On motion to sustain David, Bro. Joseph stated that "The voice of the Spirit" to him was that David shall be released. We are left with 8 apostles and 2 of the first presidency. In the afternoon I had the pleasure of marrying Mr. Guy C. Smith and Emma E. Johnson at the home of her sister and brother-in-law, Thomas James. Bro. Joseph and a goodly number of Saints were present. Back in St. Joseph --20th—Reached home and found all well—thank God for home. While home Col. Shuster offered me the home in which we live for $1,000—$100 down and the rest on payments. Decided to accept and worked on it till Sat. Went to Shenandoah and preached on Daniels prophecies and the Latter Day work.

June—Journeyed to Omaha where I visited my daughter Amy and husband, and my son Zenas. Twice during my visit I felt that only through the miraculous care of God, our lives are spared from danger. The first was a serious run-away, and the other a terrible storm while driving with a friend. Much damage was done. Mon. 15th—I received a letter from the 1st presidency permitting me to remain in the west, till my health is improved enough to go on my mission. Today President Smith, Alexander and Joseph Luff came to see me. They were on their way to Utah and California. They stayed with us and were pleased to find my health improving. 27th—Went to Fremont—passed the old trail near there where we traveled with ox teams and hand carts 25 years ago. Peculiar thoughts crowded my memory. I felt like a culprit for having drawn a handcart in just such sultry weather as this across this region in my anxiety to gather to Zion and yet I felt happy in the thought that, culprit as it made me feel for my credulity and overweening confidence in men, I did it because I had faith and love, faith that I was serving the God of Israel, love for him and his work more than myself.

July 1—Very poorly indeed. Better toward evening. Went to church, prayer meeting. Spoke a short time by the spirit, and about half the night after I retired was in the spirit. 6th—Spoke on "Angelic Ministrations," with the attention and interest of all. 7th—Rec'd telegram from E. T. Dobson to go to St. Joseph on next Sunday and assist Bro. McDowell in opening new Hall there and answered I would go. 12th—Conference at Elmwood—a great day of camp meeting from 750 to 1,000 present. Back to St. Joseph. Sunday preached morning and evening at new Hall with good liberty—fair congregation—was soaking wet both morning and evening, overheated and so suffered. Weds.—Visited at Bro. Neidorfs. Last evening Bro. Neidorf fell while unhitching his horse from his buggy and was kicked by the horse, twice on the back, on the arm and grazed on the forehead. I went at once to see him and he would not have a doctor so I administered to him. When Bro. Dodson came home we went over, after gaining silence Bro. D. led us in prayer, then he held Bro. Neidorf up while I anointed his back, praying that as my hand and the oil placed over the wound, all pain, swelling, and soreness might disappear. When through Bro. Neidorf was with tears of joy, spread forth his hands and said "Thank God I'm so much better." Bro. Dodson confirmed the anointing. This morning, the good health of the stricken brother is such, he told me, as he has not had for months. "Praise the Lord, oh my soul—in humility and love." . . .

Oct. 28th—Borrowed organ from Sr. E. Holmes, Bro. Criley sent me down table from church, and these make me comfortable to work on music and writing. Lord give me ability to write, to preach, to compose music in which thy Saints shall delight and let thy wondrous love permeate my soul so I shall be an influence always for good.

Nov.—Rec'd letter from Bro. J. W. Waldsmith, telling of taking a homestead and tree claim in Kansas and wishing me to do the same—it has been an earnest thought with me, but I cannot see my way clear to do so now, although I realize the church cannot take care of me in my old age, and I do not desire to be an object of charity.

December.—Work around Knoxville—20th—preached on baptism—came home at noon and had a marvelous manifestation. I have foes whom I know not, and friends I suspected not—there is to be an increase and much opposition in consequence, but a glorious triumph awaits me. At the afternoon meeting the spirit was visibly and markedly manifest to spiritual sight. . . .

Sunday, 10th—Attended services but was sick. Bro. Thomas preached—home and lay down—a little before three I was bidden to "Rise and go to the meeting, for I have a message for them from thee." I went but was so sick when I arrived had to call on the elders to administer to me. The Saints all knelt while the elders administered. God bless their loving hearts. Soon after, I arose meekly and had just finished saying that I had been bidden to come, but I knew not what the message was, when the Spirit came to me like a flood and carried or impelled me up the aisle, to the elders and down the other, my eyes closed in going and my voice uttering an unknown tongue, what to me as to all others unintelligible. As I sat down I felt weak, Bro. Thomas, then gave a prophecy. When he had taken his seat, the spirit again rested upon me and led me to give the interpretation as it had the tongue, and in the same manner was I impelled forward. When I reached Brother Criley I laid my hand on him, uttered a few sentences, then resumed march till opposite the bulk of Saints—spoke to those on the right then to those on the left, thence to the communion table where I laid hands on Elder Reese, then on to Elder Thomas; and returning finished tongue opposite last seats, opened my eyes after amen and amen and took my seat—To me it was a wonderful display of the Spirit's power and many faces were wet with tears. Administrations were then held at which there was a wonderful display of power and blessing. "Dear Lord thy glory and majesty are thine, we can only give thee thanks."

Feb.—Bro. Wm. H. Kelley came to see me and said there was complaint because I did not travel more as some did. In a letter from this same Wm. H. Kelley, dated Dec. 18th—he wrote me, "There is doubtless great need of your labors in Pittsburgh and other places, also, if time and circumstances would permit you to visit them. I have been in that district so little that I cannot advise very satisfactorily to myself as to where the most urgent calls are at present. I hope to spend some time next month in Ohio. There is great need of work being done farther east, but every step in that direction is attended with increased expense. This old hindrance is a great drawback, yet must be consulted. You will doubtless find plenty to do for awhile at least where you are or in adjacent places. Aside from Pittsburgh you would doubtless enjoy laboring in the Massachusetts district for awhile, the best of any place in the East. But want of means and it being so near the April conference it seems out of the question to try to reach that. The finances are down low just now, so I learn, we will have to keep near home." When I received this I was glad that I was as busy as I could be opening and trying to open other new places. Bro. Kelley advises me that I close my work here and go elsewhere. 2nd—This morning Frank Reese came to see me and after a talk he went. Then I wrote a letter of resignation to the branch enclosing my reports of labor and moneys left in my hands on committee work, with accompanying vouchers. 4th—Bro. Frank Criley came to see me to talk over the resignation. He said at one time there was not more than four, at another six disaffected towards me, and they only at my presenting personal views in preaching, though he admitted that I did not give them as anything but my views, which I did not ask the people to receive. He expressed the conviction that my resignation at that time would injure the cause. I agreed, he took my resignation and put in the fire. 6th—Had a conversation with Sisters Salyards and Creese, and felt very sad, as did my master. "Oh! My God, hast thou forsaken me?" Satan has been very busy and it seems some of the Saints have been his emissaries. I hid as much as possible my grief and after praying with them, went up to my room and poured my soul's deep entreaties before God for guidance and light in my hour of need.

April 1—Arrived at Burlington—found a suit of clothes from my dear daughter, who, with my wife, paid for them. I need them badly as I am worse clad than for many years. God bless them both. Fri.—Took train for Lamoni and conference. April 6th—Conference convened today at 10 a. m. Pres. J. Smith and W. W. Blair, Sect. H. A. Stebbins, and John Scott. Reports, read, taking all time of both sessions. Bro. and Sr. Waldsmith accompanied by my wife came on the 8th and left the 15th. A petition from Nebraska City and District was received, asking that I be sent there—with 208 signatures. This was handed to Bro. Cappel on the first day of conference and by him handed to and read before the quorum of Apostles; but never acted upon. When names were read for appointment, no high priests among the appointments, the Apostolic quorum report said that no report had been received from the H. P.s, stating they were ready for duty; hence no appointments made. My report was read in conference the 2nd day, I believe it was, and I expressed my willingness to continue and yet "no report." Like the Nebraska petition it was pocketed. On the 14th this report of the Apostolic Quorum was received and the H. P.s held that evening and the matter taken up and it was found to be unknown to all its members except the secretary, who was also the church secretary, that such a rule had ever been passed by the Apostolic quorums to the other quorums. But we gave in our names Bro. C. Derry, R. W. Elvin, and M. H. Forscutt as willing to take the field. On the 15th the Apostles again reported this time giving missions to C. Derry and R. M. Elvin but none to M. H. Forscutt, claiming he had not been recommended for a mission. Many of the brethren and especially those from Nebraska, were indignant at the treatment I received, and on motion of two of the H. P. the Twelve were asked to give the reason why they had not given me a mission, in the afternoon they gave their reason and I presented my resignation. I have given my best years of my life to this church and my baptismal registers show upward of 500 baptized converts. I have loved and labored for God, have tried to do my duty, been blessed of the Lord, and have been comforted and sustained by him, when doubts and troubles have assailed. I am compelled under the accumulated presence of secret influence for years operating and by the public action of today to either sacrifice my manhood or my standing as a public missionary in the church. Returned to my home in Nebraska City. Later I went to Omaha where I secured a position for the Union Pacific R. R. and where I worked in the local branch, preaching and working with the young people as I love to do as much as I was able. Stayed there till April, 1888, when I left to go to Lamoni where I accepted a position as Editor of the Harmony. Entered on Editorship last week in April, 1888. Finished work in March 1889. When through I turned over to the church all manuscripts, music as well as song books from nearly all nations which I had gathered together during my life time—The work upon which I had with others spent weeks, months and years was finished and given to the church, from which I received both praise and disapprobation, which I have found always accompanied our efforts.

April, 1889—Attended conference—First Presidency appointed me as minister to St. Joseph for which place I left and entered upon my duties the same month.

1890

Jan. 1, 1890—Weather fine and clear—administered to child and at 2:30 attended meeting again called for child and then to administer to Sr. Neidorf, who was greatly relieved. 7:30 to prayer meeting, the largest one ever held here, 10 prayers, 10 songs and 45 testimonies, short, but to the point. Prophecy to Bro. Bacus and David Krahl—adm. to 3—Bro. Wight's child has scarlet fever. 2nd—Slept none last night so at 2 arose and began writing and continued till 9 a. m. Letter from Joseph—he commends my work on the Harmony, as do many others, even if I am severely criticized by some. Preached at Bro. Clay's. 3rd—Wrote till 3 p. m., then visited at Bro. Ennis, after which I went to Young People's Mutual Improvement Society, which I organized last summer and presided till in working order then resigned.

March—Worked on revision of Harmony and finished the revision the 19th—also worked in ministerial duties.

April 1—With Bro. Luff and E. L. Kelley went to Lamoni met by son of Sister Wicks, Peter Luff and I on auditing committee, worked on auditing Thurs. and Wednesday. Conference convened on Apr. 6th, with President J. Smith and W. W. Blair in charge—H. A. Stebbins, John Scott, sect. Conference about as usual.

1892—"Zion's Ensign" Begun

Jan. 1, 1892—Evening to Oyster supper at church—ill so did not stay long. 4th—Evening birthday party of Chas. Eldredge and wedding anniversary of Bro. and Sr. Gardener. 16th—With Bro. Winning met Bro. J. A. Robinson at the St. Charles—Robinson and Pitt have commenced a new paper, Zion's Ensign.

June 19—58 years old today—J. W. Smith preached in the morning and Pres. Joseph Smith in the evening. Ruby brought me 6 shirts and Bro. Atwood a book. Lord help me to grow in thy likeness as age increases. Baptized 2. . . .

Unruly Members

By H. E. Depew

Our tongues are active little things
That often hurt, with many stings,
The very folks we love so well;
But when these tongues begin to tell
The latest bit of gossip, fair,
Consideration isn't there.

Unruly members of these frames,
That often fan consuming flames
Of jealousy, and envy, too;
There's nothing they won't stoop to do
As gossip's path they often pace—
To set at odds the human race.

With such a wealth of good, and cheer,
Stored up for listening ears to hear,
It seems a waste of time, and breath,
To rail and criticize to death
The earnest plans, or humble voice,
Of one deserving better choice.

Those thoughtless words we speak so oft
Are spread abroad, and go aloft,
To make a record which, I fear,
At some far day will cost us dear.
So now, while yet there's time to spare,
Let's train our tongues to be more fair.

Lesson Four—April 22

The Highway of Economic Justice Isaiah 58-62

(Each person must do his own contemplating of the text.)

The goal of peoples is peace, prosperity, and happiness. Whether or not peoples reach this goal depends upon the highways they travel—i. e., the courses they pursue; it depends upon how the business of peoples is managed. "Make straight in the desert a highway for our God," (Isaiah 40: 1-10) is a call to the peoples of Zion, or "Jerusalem," the "New Jerusalem," in the latter days, to embody the will of God in their social institutions.

This prophecy of The Highway is identical with the message of Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2: "The union [the social union] required by the law of the celestial kingdom." And as you compare section 102 with Isaiah 58-62, note how it concerns itself with the question of economic organization.

The yoke shall not be broken; the burdens shall not be undone; the bands of wickedness shall not be broken; the oppressed shall not go free, until this highway of economic justice is builded. Who, then, have more responsibility to build The Highway, and a greater urge to do so, than the peoples of the Church who cannot sleep in peace because the direction of their travel inflicts such needless and cruel suffering upon the objects of their love?

This prophecy looks forward to the cutting of the stone out of the mountain. It is the prophecy of The Government in another form. No less than four times does Isaiah repeat this prophecy. (See Isaiah 2: 1-4; 9: 6, 7; 40: 1, 10; 62: 10-12.)

This prophecy is a forward look to the age of industrial achievement combined with economic and political distress. Note the intimation: in the end, government shall be designed to serve The People. The whole burden of this prophecy is the rights and welfare of The People.

THE AGE OF ADVENTURE IN GOVERNMENT

See now if the cataclysmic and world-wide changes in government of this age are not setting the stage for the building of The Highway. Everyone is thinking and talking about the economic set-up. And when propaganda takes on the proportions of Father Coughlin's nationwide broadcasts, it augurs great changes in the economic highway.

It seems odd to me that so many Church men are apathetic in the matter of economic reconstruction. Surely they are not prophets. Any man who wants the happiness that comes from devotion to a worthy cause should try to catch the prophetic vision of The Kingdom. Once it grips us, we can't help working for it. And if we work for it, nothing can rob us of happiness. The martyrdom of Bakunin, and many other champions of economic reform, is easily explainable to the man who is gripped by the prophecy of The Kingdom.

THE THEME

Social justice is an effect of which godly government is the cause. However well-intentioned people may be, a complex society, such as ours is, cannot be made orderly, efficient, and just without government. Personal righteousness alone will never bring order out of this world of chaos.

GATHER OUT THE STONES

"This people must be organized according to my laws; if otherwise, they shall be cut off." (Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1.) "The union required by the law of the celestial kingdom." (Ibid. 102: 2.) The peoples of this church are called to shape their economic course in the light of the experiences of the race as they are guided in their judgment by the Spirit of Truth. (See Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21.) And one of the benefits to be derived from the study of the prophecy of The Kingdom is the identification of some of the bad stones that must be kept out of Zion's highway. Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5 is an instance of what I mean. "What man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith to the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just."

What question is this? It is the general question of economic justice; and of the justice of our wage system in particular. It is the same question which lies beneath the prophecy of The Highway: "I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast labored: But they that have gathered it shall eat it. . . . and they that have brought it together shall drink it. . . ." (Isaiah 62: 8, 9.) And then follows the statement of the means by which such injustice shall be overcome. "Cast up, cast up the Highway."

ECONOMIC HIGHWAYS

It is conceivable that the products of industry might be equitably distributed under more than one form, constitution, and method of government. There may have been plantations in slavery times on which slaves were treated with due consideration in the matter of providing them with bread and shoes and shelter. But there is more to economic and social justice than that. Personal freedom to dispose the products of one's own labor as he wills; freedom to manage one's own affairs as he himself wills; individual responsibility; and such like—these are as important items in social justice as a mathematical division of commodities based upon either individual worth or individual need, or costs of production, or whatnot. All these are rights which do not inhere in certain forms and methods of government.

To cast up the highway of justice is to establish an economic code or mode of economic government which yields justice as a natural consequence; and which does not depend upon distributing charity to make up for "wages held back by fraud."

Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1, 81: 4, 51: 1, et al, all deal with this question of casting up the Highway. And yet there are many Church members who talk as if social chaos, waste, and injustice would disappear if only men were not selfish, inconsiderate of others, careless in their personal habits, lazy, and whatnot. They do not see the necessity for godly government in a complex economic society as a means to social order, efficiency, and justice. For all such, this prophecy of The Highway has a message of especial importance. It is such people who expect to redeem Zion without instituting godly government; or to correct the evils of Babylon the while they incorporate the causes of these evils in their own economic behavior.

THE END

The identity of the message of the prophet of the Restoration with the prophecy of Isaiah surely has meaning to a people who believe they are the called of God in this age to bring to pass The Kingdom.

The political atmosphere was coming to be permeated with zionic principles of economic organization at the time the prophet of the Restoration appeared upon the scene. Now then, does that fact tend to credit or to discredit the prophetic claims of that prophet? Must a plan of economic government be out of accord with the trend of the times to be divine? Must it be something of which no one else has thought? Does it follow that a prophet is a copyist because his message incorporates principles of economic organization promulgated by contemporary thinkers?

There are in this church those who contend that The Highway plans of the prophet of the Restoration have become obsolete because industrial conditions have changed since he gave his plans. This contention raises the question of whether or not the changes in the industrial situation which have taken place have decreased or increased the need of that highway. If Zion's plan of economic organization has become obsolete since 1834, then all the talk about "a permanent and everlasting establishment" and about the preparation for the coming or reign of Christ, and of the general shift that is to be made to this mode of economic organization, is not good sense. Those who care about the reputation of The Truth should give some thought to such questions.

WEIGHING ISMS

To give a reason for the belief that our Zion rather than some other "ism" is The Highway of Isaiah's prophecy, it is necessary to have some notion of the essential differences between Zionism and other "isms." Just an instance of what I mean: Zionism is directed from above, whereas Communism is directed from below. Zionism trusts its men, whereas Communism trusts no one. Zionism distributes goods in accordance with individual needs and just wants, whereas Technocracy apportions to each an equal number of units of good. (Of course Technocracy groups men according to age or whatnot.) Zionism imposes an obligation to labor upon those who would eat, whereas Anarchism grants to everyone without any consideration whatsoever as much of the ordinary commodities as he cares to consume. And so on—a study of the "isms" must provide the people of God with a reason for the hope that is within them.

Don't forget—proposed highways of vastly different worth as instruments of social justice may contain certain identical rules. It is The Plan of economic organization; it is The System of principles; it is The Polity that determines its worth. No "ism" should be judged to be The Kingdom mode of government because it has some of the marks which characterize The Highway. The elements of CO and CO<sub>2</sub> are identical in nature. But the ratio in which they are combined produce widely different results.

PUBLIC VERSUS PRIVATE CHARITY

Public charity is organized charity. Private charity is unorganized charity. The first effort to systematize charitable relief was made in New York in 1842. Today there are many public charities: Welfare Boards, Provident Associations, Red Cross Societies, Helping Hand Institutes, Sisters of Charity. You know the story.

But whether charity is public or private, it does nothing to lift the burdens of toil that oppress the weary traveler. It does nothing to make the highway safe for the unsuspecting or uninitiated traveler. It leaves the highway as unsafe afterward for the victims whose wounds it heals as it was before. At best, charity in any of its forms is social patchwork. It is not the highway building process. There is no substitute for the right ordering of human relations. The breach must be repaired. The Standard must be lifted up. The Paths must be restored. His Work must be done. This is the message of Isaiah's prophecy.

WE ARE OUTCLASSED

Other people have outclassed us in the business of charity. Latter Day Saints are no match for the Salvation Army in the business of organized charity. Why is that? Is it because that is not the field in which Latter Day Saints are to make their contribution to the welfare of society? Is it because this Church is constituted for another purpose? Is it because a failure to let the greater light of The Kingdom shine has resulted in the dimming of the lesser light? How can a people who believe God has called them to set up The Standard of right economic behavior for peoples compete successfully with those who see in organized charity their supreme opportunity to bless society?

"Say ye to The Daughter of Zion," "cast up, cast up the Highway." This is the calling of the Church today as revealed in this prophecy: to lift up The Standard; to order and establish "The Government" in judgment and in justice.

Resurrection

Jesus was the first man in history to make the absolute continuity of life seem real. There were scattered hopes of it among the Jews. To the Jew death seemed abnormal and irregular. He never associated his great men with it. Enoch escaped it. Elijah passed by it. Moses had a hidden grave. The Bible does not record the death of a single one of its prophets. The reason suggested by Matheson, is that in the thought of the Biblical writers, the prophet dwelt with things that were eternal, and they felt that his image in the record ought to be timeless as his message was timeless. The Jew, like the Greek, had a horror of death. But the teaching of the continuity of life is not found in Jewish or pagan literature before the time of Christ. Jesus made it the cardinal question of belief. When Martha came to him on the death of her brother and was not satisfied with a far-off resurrection but asked for some present comfort, he said, "I am (now) the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on me shall never die; believest thou this?"—Henry E. Jackson, in Great Pictures as Moral Teachers.

Salvation of Souls

Plano, Illinois, January 9, 1869.

Let the Saints bear in mind the object for which the gospel is preached—the salvation of souls.

Those only are saved who are freed from sin; therefore let all who desire to be saved free themselves according to the law of Christ. The law of spiritual unity and strength is for men and women who have wisdom sufficient to yield to that law without contention and strife.

For while we declare that God purposes to force none to accept of his grace, he will give ineffable peace to those who, by reason of wisdom, and a will to do good, accept the offer which he makes, and become heirs with Christ.

The witness of the gospel borne to us becomes a testimony against us, whether for good or for condemnation, as it is written, "it is a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death."

Who then desiring to bear witness of the truth, if willing that the testimony which he bears shall be the one by which he is to receive his honor when the Judge rewards the children of men, after the judgment, must depart from evil, not only in name but in fact.

For us, brethren, let me assure you as an ambassador from a far land, there can be neither rest nor safety till the Master of the field sends out his servant to tell us that the harvest is over.

And if, when these stewards shall find us reaping, they so report, as of those found worthy, their testimony will prevail over the testimony of those who have idly waited the call to cease from labor.

So, then, let the profession of faith be the practice of the gospel teachings. . . .

He then that is wise will seek not to abuse this liberty of the gospel to the perversion of the pure in heart but weak in the faith; nor yet for the purpose of excelling in word. But will, accounting it as the grace of God, be content to do all that lies in his power for the good of man, to the glory of God; leaving the height of his exaltation and the excellency of his honor to the mercy and the justice of God, who doeth all things well. Herein is an exceeding great faith exemplified. . . .

But death must reign until his power is broken by the Lamb who taketh away the sins of the world; and this he will not do until his work upon the earth is perfected.

And a people prepared for his coming, who shall be pure in heart, clean in appearance, robed with the garments of peace, and sanctified by the love which has been shed abroad for all his saints.

Be watchful, be prayerful, be sober.—Joseph Smith, in "The Restorer," volume 3, pages 213, 214; Church History, volume 3, pages 515, 516.

Looking at Boulder Dam

By M. A. McConley

The dam site is about twenty-two miles by road from the Las Vegas, Nevada, at the mouth of Boulder Canyon. From Lookout Point on the Nevada side, one may see the whole works and yet not be put to the danger of having something fall on him or of falling off a ladder or something else.

Huge cables cross the canyon. The construction is being done from the Nevada side, though of course the Arizona side of the canyon and dam is being developed. But the materials, etc., are all assembled and Boulder City, where the administration of the works centers, is on the Nevada side.

Up on the rim a city has been built by the government with cabins for married men and dormitories for single men and a huge dining room, a large recreation room where one may get a new suit made to order, get his hair cut, his shoes repaired, his laundry done, smoke, play pool, work a slot machine, get an ice cream soda, etc. No alcoholic drinks are served or allowed sold on the Federal Reservation which stretches for twelve miles from the river on each side. So when the boys want to "tank up" they must go to Las Vegas, twenty-two miles distant.

At the entrance to the reservation, unless you are a workman with a properly provided pass, you must get a permit from the ranger at the lookout station on the road, telling your name, business, etc. This has to be signed and is your identification while around the works. And only workmen or officials can go down on the works proper. I was down in the bed of the river a year ago January on the works with the men—a government official having taken me down there. It is much more dangerous now. At first we had planned on going down but when we considered the risk and trouble we discarded the idea and I went simply as a visitor.

They are working about four thousand men on the dam now, divided into three shifts. The men ride down in huge transport trucks—one truck hauling as many as one hundred and fifty men. One of the biggest trucks has three engines, and is a double decker.

A shift leaves the works at Boulder City at 2.30 p. m., and we watched them load into the trucks to go down. They wear helmets to protect them from falling rocks or anything which might fall in the way of tools, or from bumping their heads around the place. They report that the helmets have saved many men's lives, including our Roscoe Hampton, in whose home I stayed while in Las Vegas this time. And a man's helmet saved his life too when a sledge hammer slipped from Brother Hampton's hand and fell and struck another man on the head. About twenty men have been killed on the job this last summer. And two of our boys have had close shaves. Robert Hampton is the priest in charge of the group.

The cement for the dam is let down in huge buckets carrying eight cubic yards of concrete each. The concrete and the bucket must weigh twenty tons. The buckets are let down on a cable from the main cable crossing the canyon above. The man who operates the bucket cable cannot see over the canyon into the place where he is letting the bucket, but is guided in this by phone from down below. These buckets have been the most dangerous things and when a bucket comes down you see the men scatter until it is dumped and up again out of the way. Well, one of these full buckets swung against the side of the canyon where the train sets on which the buckets are brought around to be hoisted down, knocking an empty bucket over the cliff. It fell in the form next to where Robert was working, killing a man instantly. He was the first man over to pick up the dead man and it sort of spoiled the job for him for a time.

Another form of danger where several have been killed is from falling off the high ladders where one has to climb and as the dam gets higher these are increasingly dangerous.

One day Roscoe fell backward fifteen feet down and came down on his head and shoulders. But fortunately it was just where a bucket of concrete had been dumped, and he went in about two feet. Had he not had on a helmet, even then it might have fractured his skull for even "soft concrete" is not very soft, for it has big rocks in it. But anyway if you want to fall on concrete, I recommend it rather than that which has set.

The most dangerous place now is the "slot." This is a gap eight feet wide directly in the center of the dam which is being left so that the dam as it hardens can contract or expand as it needs to do. This is on the division line between the two states. It is now two hundred and fifty feet deep and will be over seven hundred feet before the dam is finished. One day a timber gave way and Robert fell into the slot. But he jumped and caught a piece of timber down some ten feet and hung until rescued. So it is a dangerous piece of work.

Scalers hanging onto the side of the cliff are also doing some dangerous work, getting all the loose rock dynamited off so what is left where the dam connects with the canyon is absolutely solid rock of the best sort.

The State automatically insures every man against accident or death—that is it pays compensation therefor. But the two states do not agree so if one is hurt on the Arizona side he gets more compensation and if killed his folks get seven thousand, five hundred dollars on the Arizona side, but only five thousand dollars on the Nevada side.

Watching the men go down in the transports you would almost think they were going out to the front line trenches. One realizes that no one would be there unless he had to be for a job. It is not child's play in which they are engaged. Personally, I hope I am not a coward. But I am thankful I do not have to undergo the physical hazard hourly which those men do while on that job. They, each one, deserve a medal.

A ledge is being built where the power houses will be down on the Nevada side. The whole thing is too big to comprehend. When it is finished there will be a lake five hundred and fifty feet deep, backing up for one hundred and twenty-five miles. In some places it will be thirty miles wide—making quite an inland lake.

A great piece of engineering—greater they say than the Panama Canal. What great advancement has been made in science and invention. If we had but advanced as far in social engineering, what a world we would have.

The thing the world needs now is social and spiritual engineering. The challenge is ours! Are we big enough for the task? Will we risk and sacrifice what is necessary for its accomplishment?

The years just ahead of us will give answer. I hope and pray we may, and with God's help believe we will.

The Art of Successful Living

Every individual owes it to himself, and to the cause which he is serving, to keep a vigorous, healthy body, with the nerves steady and strong, prepared for great efforts and prepared for disappointments and trying positions.

As far as I can, I make it a rule to plan for each day's work—not merely to go through with the same routine of daily duties, but to get rid of the routine work as early in the day as possible, and then to enter upon some new or advance work. I make it a rule to clear my desk every day, before leaving my office, of all correspondence and memoranda, so that on the morrow I can begin a new day of work. I make it a rule never to let my work drive me, but to so master it, and keep it in such complete control, and to keep so far ahead of it, that I will be the master instead of the servant. There is a physical and mental and spiritual enjoyment that comes from a consciousness of being the absolute master of one's work, in all its details, that is very satisfactory and inspiring. My experience teaches me that, if one learns to follow this plan, he gets a freshness of body and vigor of mind out of work that goes a long way toward keeping him strong and healthy. I believe that when one can grow to the point where he loves his work, this gives him a kind of strength that is most valuable.

When I begin my work in the morning, I expect to have a successful and pleasant day of it, but at the same time

I prepare myself for unpleasant and unexpected hard places.

I try to look after the little ills, with the idea that if I take care of the little ills, the big ones will not come. When I find myself unable to sleep well, I know that something is wrong. If I find any part of my system the least weak, and not performing its duty, I consult a good physician. The ability to sleep well, at any time and in any place, I find of great advantage. I have so trained myself that I can lie down for a nap of fifteen or twenty minutes, and get up refreshed in body and mind.

I have said that I make it a rule to finish up each day's work before leaving it. There is, perhaps, one exception to this. When I have an unusually difficult question to decide—one that appeals strongly to the emotions—I find it a safe rule to sleep over it for a night, or to wait until I have had an opportunity to talk it over with my wife and friends.

The kind of reading that I have the greatest fondness for is biography. I like to be sure that I am reading about a real man or a real thing. I think I do not go too far when I say that I have read nearly every book and magazine article that has been written about Abraham Lincoln. In literature he is my patron saint.

But, after all this is said, the time when I get the most solid rest and recreation is when I can be at Tuskegee, and, after our evening meal is over, can sit down, as is our custom, with my wife and Portia and Booker and Davidson, my three children, and read a story, or each take turns in telling a story. To me there is nothing on earth equal to that, although what is nearly equal to it is to go with them for an hour or more, as we like to do on Sunday afternoons, into the woods, where we can live for a while near the heart of nature, where no one can disturb or vex us, surrounded by pure air, the trees, the shrubbery, the flowers, and the sweet fragrance that springs from a hundred plants, enjoying the chirp of the crickets and the songs of the birds. This is solid rest.

My garden, also, what little time I can be at Tuskegee, is another source of rest and enjoyment. Somehow I like, as often as possible, to touch nature, not something that is artificial or an imitation, but the real thing. . . . I pity the man or woman who has never learned to enjoy nature and to get strength and inspiration out of it.

I keep individually a number of pigs and fowls of the best grades, and in raising these I take a great deal of pleasure.

Games I care little for. I have never seen a game of football. In cards I do not know one card from another. A game of old-fashioned marbles with my two boys, once in a while, is all I care for in this direction. I suppose I would care for games now if I had had any time in my youth to give to them, but that was not possible.—Booker T. Washington, in Up From Slavery.

WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

with the parents and nurse of Sue Trammel, was flying to Baltimore in a borrowed airplane. Eleven hours later, after having flown a distance of 1,400 miles through a terrific Atlantic storm, the plane landed safely on an ice-covered airport. Prompt action, skill, and courage, both on the part of the aviator and the surgeon, saved the life of that baby.

Yes, Zion must be Redeemed; but were the call to establish Zion given us, as the call was given to James Wedell to fly this child to Baltimore, would we be willing and as well prepared to move courageously forward in spite of the obstacles?

We shall do well to remember that Zion is as near redemption as we are willing to make it. If there are those who doubt the statement, let them read section 102 of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Zion, indeed, must be redeemed—not a hundred years hence but today by this generation of youth. In the light of this message—Watchman, what of the night?

RUN THE RACE

others. It is easy for a losing team to quit the field of contest; it is easy for a defeated army to surrender; it is much harder to go forward and "carry on," regardless of discouragements. We are today what we are because of the choices we made yesterday.

At one time a man was heard to relate a story of a running problem. He said that he had spent considerable time trying to find out why a rabbit could out-run a dog. But after a long time in observing, he finally concluded that the dog was only running for his dinner, but the rabbit was running for his life.

WHEN WE DECIDED to enter the Christian race, did we really consider the cost—the cost of being in the family of God, and the cost of staying out of the family? Just running for our dinner will not amount to much, the race for eternal life is the larger quest.

Opportunity is knocking at our doors desiring to introduce us to responsibility. No growth is made toward any given goal, without accepting responsibility when offered, and working with all our might toward success. One's strongest opposing force to progress is always within one's self, and as one strengthens his desire to grow, he eliminates the opposition to growth. Growth is not always noticeable to the one that is growing; many times when we feel the most discouraged, we are growing fastest, and are on the verge of a new burst of conscious realization.

No one who is incapable of making a great decision and ordering his life accordingly can ever become a great character. We like to become acquainted with things and try them out. As you grow you become aware of your ability to create things and conditions which you desire.

No one aspires to greater things than he is capable of attaining; anything that one has a definite urge to accomplish, can be accomplished by him, else he would not feel that urge. As a matter of fact, there are no direct limitations placed on any individual, except the ones he chooses and fixes on himself.

When one actually desires a thing, one usually finds time for that thing, even though it means the sacrifice of other things. The only thing that is really a definite stumblingblock to progress, is lack of determination, which is in reality lack of desire, and not until the individual has a definite desire will he push forth with the necessary determination. In many cases the lack of accomplishing comes from or is caused by a lack of desire to change. We close our minds to things new and strange.

Charles R. Hield once said, "The limit upon our capabilities is often caused by the limit we place upon our desires. You've got to get up every morning with determination, if you're to go to bed that night with satisfaction."

"We shape, ourselves, the joy or fear
Of which the coming life is made,
And fill our future atmosphere
With sunshine or with shade.

"The tissues of the life to be
We weave with colors all our own;
And in the fields of destiny
We reap as we have sown."

THE STANDARD OF DAILY LIVING

the Christian army, if I expound Christ and live Judas. A traitor has no place in the Christian Army.

He may "get by" for awhile, but when his trickery is discovered, he has hurt not himself alone, but the cause which he represented.

There is no better time than today to examine ourselves. If we fail to discover our flaws after prayer and fasting, we are in great danger. When we do discover our mistakes, let us make haste to remedy them.

The world is watching us. They expect us to be perfect, because we represent the true gospel. We all make mistakes, so the world pardons us once, but a repetition of the same mistake is not excusable.

If Christ isn't exemplified in us, we have hurt him and the church we represent. I realize my many shortcomings and ask for an interest in your prayers, that I may better serve Christ.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Can one who never heard the gospel in life, but accepts it after death, have celestial glory?

The Doctrine and Covenants, Section 76, deals with the subject of the different glories to come, and seems to indicate that those referred to by the questioner will have terrestrial glory, though the matter is not stated exactly as put in the question. Of those to receive terrestrial glory it states:

"These are they who died without law; and also they who are the spirits of men kept in prison, whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, who received not the testimony of Jesus in the flesh, but afterwards received it."
—76:6.

So far as I know, the purposes of God in placing man on earth have never been wholly made known, though many things have been revealed. Why some hear the word in youth, others in old age, and others not at all, is not easily explained. Why some have been miraculously converted and led to the truth, while others have had no such experiences, is a mystery to most of us, though we can sometimes find a few suppositions that help to clarify it, perhaps. Jesus said, "work while it is day," and our duty to present the gospel to men is here and now. Even those who receive it may suffer final condemnation if they are negligent of their duties. But one thing we may well remember: God is just, merciful, all-wise, and full of love to his creatures, and will give each one the highest and best he is capable of appreciating and properly using.

Where was Samuel the Lamanite when he foretold signs of Christ's coming?

He appears to have been in the land of Zarahemla, at the city of Zarahemla, which is located by the church committee on archeology in the southern part of the land. Zarahemla was located by the committee along the western portions of Columbia and Venezuela, extending westward and northward to the Pacific and Atlantic Ocean, respectively. The Book of Mormon states that Samuel came into the land of Zarahemla (586:2), and got upon the wall of the city (586:5), which was the city of Zarahemla (587:15), and preached upon the walls, warning of the great destructions to come to the land and cities.

Did Christ visit both paradise and hell before his resurrection?

There is no certain answer to this known to me. Some hold that the words of Peter in which he quotes David concerning the resurrection of Christ, "that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption," refers to Christ. Others believe the first part of the quotation refers to David, that his soul was not left in hell, and that the latter part refers to Christ, whose flesh did not see corruption (see Acts 2:29-31). Jesus said to the sufferer on the cross: "Today shalt thou be with me in paradise" (Luke 23:43), hence it is clear that he went there that day, but how long he remained is uncertain, unless the Book of Mormon statement that the righteous remain in paradise till the resurrection (449:47) be held to apply to Christ also.

Is hell a literal place of fire?

From our present knowledge of the spirit it would not appear that it would be subject to literal fire, and it is probably not the intent of Scripture to so teach. The word fire is used many times in the Bible as a figure of speech, and there is no reason to suppose otherwise in its use to describe the punishment of hell. We read: "God is a consuming fire" (Hebrews 12:29), and James 3:6 says the tongue is a fire. The Book of Mormon says of those in hell: "their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone" (108:40), and this is doubtless the scriptural meaning of the term.

Did Zacharias baptize John the Baptist?

The only text which mentions his baptism, so far as I remember, states that he was baptized in his childhood (Doctrine and Covenants 83:4), but who officiated is not stated.

Forty-six Years in Church Service

I have just passed my forty-sixth birthday in the church. What changes and history those years have witnessed. And many tests of our endurance, that we had not expected, have helped to make those changes and history.

I have never been more busy, answering so many calls for service. Our meetings at Wichita, the account of which has already appeared, was a fine revival. Going to Hutchinson, Kansas, for ten days we had services each night, baptizing two fine young men. We could, no doubt, have stayed another week with interest and profit.

At Winfield, Kansas, we found the weather and sickness hindering the attendance, so our stay there was cut for a week including two Sundays.

Our next stop was at Alva, Oklahoma. We were pleased to meet with the fine group of young people that had prepared for our three weeks' visit with them. We held fine services, with large crowds. Alva has a teachers college, and we had the pleasure of meeting quite a number of students not of our own faith.

At the request of a family of Saints, I came to Byron, Oklahoma, to hold services in a community church. It seemed to be right out in the sand hills; one could see only three or four small homes, but when the hour of meeting arrived, I was surprised and astonished at the crowd. One hundred and twenty-five were present, including about seven of our own members.

At the close of the first service, a Latter Day Saint mother said that she had waited long to have her two daughters baptized. For a week I continued meetings there, and every night the crowd was large, ranging between one hundred and fifty and two hundred nonmembers. The weather and wonderful sunshine helped to make the meetings full of interest. On the closing day of the series I baptized seven candidates, completing two family circles in the gospel.

Another Comment on Church Department

Recent Herald articles on church department have led me to reflect on some of the things I have seen occur in our congregations during services.

I assisted a young minister a few Sunday nights ago in a preaching service. While this young priest was preaching an elder's wife and the speaker's wife were busily engaged in an apparently very funny conversation. This held the attention of the audience far better than the speaker did.

One time I was in a prayer meeting and a brother was asked to preach a funeral sermon that afternoon. He interrupted the service a number of times to make arrangements for the funeral three hours away. He ignored the present meeting for the benefit of the one to come which brought to my mind a scriptural statement: "This ought ye to have done but not left the other undone." He might have remained until after the prayer meeting had closed and then made arrangements for the funeral.

I have been in prayer services when if anyone opened the door (which is very noisy on account of the construction) while the worshipers were praying, the majority of those kneeling would rise slightly and turn on their seats to see who it was.

Frequently I have seen people far more interested in the cunning actions of their children than in the service they were attending. We cannot always have our children do as we would like them to, but we can keep from giving them our attention in a silly, "that's-so-sweet" attitude. We can refrain from playing hide and seek with the baby around the end of a seat, or from behind a book.

Brother Blunder always makes it a part of the service to get up about midway through the program and stalk out. Sister Whoopee begins her coughing just when Elder Tellum goes to clinch a point about which he has been expounding for an hour. Miss Fidgety gets entirely too cool where she is and must move nearer the stove. Brother Rumble takes advantage of this and gives the old stove a good shake-up until everybody is so confused that he is glad he did not bring his neighbor, Mrs. High-Stepper, with him. He did not ask her because he was afraid the service would have just such a climax.

In the face of such behavior we profess to the world that we know we are the true children of God. Our ministry tells us that the love of God is intelligence, that it makes us see, hear and know of a surety that we are His true followers. To all this I heartily agree. But let us turn to Matthew 13: 3-9, and see where we really are and to what extent we have profited by Christ's teachings. Are we bringing forth fruit an hundredfold, sixtyfold, or thirtyfold? Let us remember also that a tree is known by the fruit it bears (see Matthew 12: 33).

The sectarian churches have all the discipline necessary to insure good deportment in their services and are commended for their orderly way of rendering service to the Lord. But we need to be tutored by our ministry concerning deportment, especially in the house of the Lord.

Do We Appreciate the Privilege of Being a Saint?

Sometimes I wonder if the Saints of today appreciate or value the privilege they have of being Saints. God has given us this privilege, guided us into contact with the truth, given us understanding hearts and minds so that we believe the gospel story. It was by obedience to the first principles that we took upon ourselves the name Latter Day Saint. In my blessing I was told that when I heard the gospel it had a cheering effect on my heart and mind, also that if I fully valued the privilege which was mine, the gospel should always have that effect on me.

We Saints of today have a heritage from our forefathers to leave to our sons and daughters. If we follow the advice and teaching we receive from God through his servants, and the enlightenment he gives us from time to time, we shall leave our heritage richer by our example and influence; we shall leave something of lasting benefit to those who have been associated with, or follow after us.

If on the other hand, we ignore his teachings, if we fail to live up to the light given us, we ourselves will not be the only losers, but those who have come under our influence will be losers also. If we fail to live near to God, we shall fail to radiate his wonderful influence. We may not be called upon to go among strangers, nor to make any special sacrifice, but wherever we are, we shall be required to follow as nearly as we can the example given us by the Master of men.

A great deal can be said about being a light to the world, and there are many who wish to be such, but did you ever stop to think how much trimming and work is put on some of the things which give us light? It must be wonderful to be a light unto the world, but some of us need considerable trimming before we can give much light, and the trimming is the part against which we protest and rebel at times. Let each one of us be alert to his responsibility to God and man.

RUTHILDA, SASKATCHEWAN.

The Lord Blesses With Healing

I have much appreciated the letters on different subjects, but especially those telling of healings through faith and prayer. I know there are many in the church today who can tell of times when they have been physically restored.

When my mother was suffering with a broken ankle several years ago, the doctor in attendance told her that it had not been set right and that it would have to be re-broken and re-set. She asked him to wait as that evening Elder Fred Pitt was to come to our home. "Then you think you will be healed?" the doctor laughingly questioned. "Yes," she replied, "I know I will be healed."

The elder came and administered to her in the evening. Next day the doctor called and examined the ankle. "Here is a miracle," he said, "this ankle is set perfectly and it is healed!" He was an earnest Christian, a man respected by the entire community.

Mother got up, and, using judgment and care, was soon about her house. Her ankle never bothered her again though she lived to be seventy-eight years of age. Her name was Mrs. Mariam Woodstock.

We have had another outstanding case of healing in our family. When I was a baby about a year old, I was taken severely ill at Holden, Missouri, now the center of a large stake of the church. My parents were not members of the church, but father's mother had told them of the use of the consecrated oil and administration. Mother said that when I fell ill the words, "Use the oil in faith believing," came to her over and over. She wrote to my grandmother at Janesville, Wisconsin, asking her to send some oil. This she did, and mother gave it to me and bathed me in it, exercising all the faith she could. From that time I gained steadily. My strength returned, and the doctor and others marveled, for many babies in that community had died of the disease that summer.

Saints, do we appreciate as we should the great blessings God has promised to his people who are faithful?

Blessings Gold Cannot Buy

Over thirty years ago God saw fit to heal me of poisoning caused by eating what I thought to be mushrooms. I was instantly healed after an elder administered to me. I know this blessing was made possible by the power of God and I give him praise for his mercy.

I feel as Sister John Teeters, of Alexander, Kansas, has written, that the gospel is more precious than gold. We have many blessings which gold cannot buy. I am thankful for the gospel and am trying to live righteously and to break down prejudice about me so as to be of use in the work of the Lord.

Please pray for me, that I may be humble, true, faithful, and obedient.

Recounts Marvelous Blessings

As I read the blessings of others I am greatly encouraged, and so I wish to relate some of the blessings which have been given to me and my family, in order that others may be helped.

Twenty years ago one of my sons was very low with typhoid fever. The doctor had given him up, said there was nothing more to do, that we could not save him. But my wife, a Latter Day Saint, exclaimed, "Then I know what to do!" She sent for Elder Sam Henry to administer. Brother Henry came, anointed the lad, and began to pray. Before the prayer was finished the boy opened his eyes, and the fever left his body. When darkness arrived two or three hours later, he was much better, and by the next morning he could turn over and eat what was given him. When the doctor entered the room, he said to my surprise: "Your boy is going to get well." The lad was up and about the house in a few days.

When the "flu" epidemic was sweeping the country, there were seven of us ill, and no one was able to wait on the others. Of three of us who were sick I hardly knew which would go first. We called Elder Finken who administered to me. I never felt so peculiar a feeling as swept over me at that moment. When he finished his prayer, he said to me: "You are not going to die. You will recover and be called to serve in the priesthood." On that occasion I and my family were instantly healed.

Since then I have served as a teacher in the priesthood, and now am a priest.

Last March, I hurt the bone below my knee in an effort to save myself from a trailer which had broken loose from a car. A growth came on the bone. The doctor said it would have to be removed. I was administered to several times, and received relief. But the growth continued to trouble me. At the sacrament service in September Elder O. A. Rexroad administered to me under the influence of the Spirit, and I was healed.

I am grateful to God for sending the gospel with its gifts and blessings back again in these last days.

Greetings From Veteran Member

Having been at the Saints' Home at Lamoni, Iowa, for nearly five months, I am prepared to say that we like the Home here, the branch, and Graceland College. We hope Holden Branch and Stake which we left this last year are prospering greatly.

The Home Saints are strong in the faith and hoping and praying for the welfare of Zion. We hope that the prayers of the Saints from now until General Conference will be such that the conference will be the best thus far in the history of the Reorganization.

LAMONI, IOWA.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

Request Prayers

A Latter Day Saint woman living in Kansas desires the prayers of the Saints for her father-in-law, that he may have strength to overcome the drink habit and the tobacco habit. She prays that he and other members of his family can be led to know the beauties of the latter-day gospel. Her husband is the only member of his family who belongs to the church.

Sister Lizzie Neumann, of Brewster, Nebraska, desires the prayers of her brothers and sisters in the faith.

New Philadelphia, Ohio Three Baptized on Good Friday

Good Friday was observed in an unusual manner. Three candidates chose this day on which to be baptized by Pastor John Carlisle. They were Mrs. Margaret Vance, of Uhrichsville, Ohio, and Mrs. Bessie Swihart and son, Curtis. The baptismal ceremony occurred at the Baptist Church, and confirmation was at 2 p. m. in the Saints' chapel, Elders John Carlisle and Charles Cramer officiating.

A sunrise service ushered Easter in, the program being arranged and given by the young people. Music directed by Wayne Thomas was much enjoyed. Among those taking part in this program were Jean Briggs, the choir, Betty Stein, Mary Cramer, a double quartet, June Goudy, Sister Dorothy Briggs, Edith Reese, Madge Thomas, and Richard Watkins.

Sacrament service was observed at ten o'clock, Elders John Carlisle and Charles Cramer in charge, assisted by Elder William Goudy and Richard Watkins. This was a service characterized by spiritual unity and many good testimonies were given.

Local members were sorry to lose from this branch Sister Hazel Noble and family who will live at Canton, Ohio.

A serious accident befell one of the young members, Sister Daisy Harper, causing her to lose one finger and suffer severe injuries to her hand while she was at her place of employment at the Dover Manufacturing Company.

Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths was a visitor here January 24 to 28, and his excellent sermons and wise counsel made his visit much appreciated.

New Philadelphia Saints extend sympathy to Brother W. F. Lathwell and family, of Lorain, Ohio, in their recent loss of wife and mother. They also sympathize with the family of Brother Clarence Warner, age fifty-two, who died March 21, following an emergency operation. Brother Warner united with the church January 22, 1899, and was ordained a deacon November 7, 1909 in which office he served faithfully for several years. Funeral services were held March 24, Elder William L. Goudy officiating, assisted by Elder John D. Carlisle. Interment was in East Avenue Cemetery. Brother Warner is survived by his wife, one son, his aged father and mother, four sisters, and three brothers.

The young people's organization has enjoyed many pleasant social gatherings. A Saint Valentine's party was had February 16, at which time a fine program was enjoyed and wedding gifts were presented Mr. and Mrs. Gomer Watkins and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Maurer, recent bridal couples. The presentations were made by Elder William Goudy. The young people also enjoyed a Saint Patrick's party March 16, an entertaining program of quartet numbers, readings and a play being presented by members of the Excelsior Club.

During February and March one Sunday each month was given to the junior church to take charge of the services. The junior quartet, Vida Angus, Wayne Thomas, Anna Watkins and Hal Rennels, provides special numbers. At the March 18, service the theme was "Believing the Angel Message," as outlined in the Herald. Brother Charles Cramer delivered the sermon and Sister Anna Cramer told the story of Emma Hale Smith. June Goudy also told a story depicting the trials of early Saints.

Missionary Glimpses in Montana

Good Support to Meetings From Saints and Friends

We were especially blessed in a series of missionary meetings at Fairview, Montana, in February and March. Though we continued five weeks, the interest and attendance increased to the end. Officers and members of the church gave splendid support and nonmembers, both old and young people, helped in the special instrumental and choral numbers. We are sure that much good was done there, and that as a result there will be several additions to the church at a later date. Patriarch George Thorburn was with the writer the last two weeks of the meetings, and his help was appreciated.

At a meeting at Miles City at the home of Brother and Sister Ingalls, a special outpouring of the Spirit was felt. One fine woman, eighty-three years old, not yet a member but much interested, rejoiced with all present and exclaimed: "The peace and power of God are here!" She wishes to obey the gospel.

On the following Sunday, I met with Great Falls Saints in their cozy little church. The Lord is surely blessing the fine group of workers there under the supervision of Elder N. P. Coleman.

Brother Coleman baptized the wife of Brother Herbert Graybill early on Sunday morning, and at the confirmation service which followed the church school session, the Spirit of God was present causing all to rejoice. Surely the Lord is blessing his people with his confirming Spirit, helping them to accomplish his work!

Another recent event was the marriage of Sister Vesta Graybill to James Sherwood, well known business man of the Twin Cities and Great Falls. These two young people, Brother Herbert Graybill and Sister Vesta Graybill whose parents are old-time Latter Day Saints, have the good wishes of all. In one case they have completed the family circle; in the other they are making their home in the East.

LESTER O. WILDERMUTH.

Rock Island, Illinois

Something New—an "Appreciation" Program

Interest in Rock Island Branch has been rapidly increasing since the initiation of the Zionics Order of Noblemen.

Friday evening, April 6, this group of young people gave an appreciation program for sponsors, parents, and friends. A play, "The Discovery," by Sister Winifred Stiegel, was presented under the direction of Lucille Hegwood.

On Easter Sunday a beautiful program was enjoyed. At nine-thirty in the morning a baptismal service was conducted, the font being decorated with lilies and ferns. Joann Gray, Earl Price, Raymond Jones, Mildred and Inez Willetts, Verne Richards, and Harry Lindley were the candidates baptized by Branch President Leonard Stiegel.

At ten-thirty an Easter program of recitations and songs was given by the primary and junior departments. Lilas Jean Mercer, daughter of Brother and Sister Alonzo Mercer, and John David Hinkle, son of Brother and Sister Warren Hinkle, were blessed at the morning service.

The junior choir of twelve intermediate girls offered a program of Easter music. They made an attractive appearance in their black and white choir robes which the women's department made for them.

The newly-organized orchestra under the direction of Leo Murphy presented three numbers, "On Easter Morn," "The Flower Song," and "Faithful and True," Sunday evening. This group includes not only Rock Island musicians, but some from Davenport.

Wesley Richards, of Davenport, is leading a Book of Mormon study class every Sunday evening at 6:45. Attendance is increasing.

Brother and Sister Don Cassiday and Brother and Sister Clarence Beil, of Clinton, Iowa, visited Rock Island not long ago. The Cassidays are former residents of this place.

Sister Marcene Jacobs was recently married to Mr. Richard Kirby, of Moline, where they are now living.

Kansas City Stake

The stake church school sunrise prayer meeting announced for six o'clock Easter morning, at the Scout Point, in Penn Valley Park, was held at Central Church, on account of rain. A fair-sized crowd occupied the time in a spiritual meeting. Many reverently rededicated their lives and all to God's work.

Central Church

Easter services were impressive. Classes preceded the worship period, and at ten-twenty all convened in the main auditorium for the sacrament service. A large congregation was present. Central Choir, under the direction of Eugene Christy, and the junior chorus, with Mrs. C. E. Wight as leader, presented a beautiful concert of Easter music. The choir sang numbers from "Olivet to Calvary," which were interspersed with scriptural readings of the Easter story by T. B. Dunn. Soloists were Mrs. Elizabeth Tanner Hitchcock, Estella Moore, Clayton Wolfe, and Charles Stilson. The music was well rendered by both choirs and at the close they sang, "Unfold."

In the interlude the junior chorus marched from its place in the balcony to the lower floor seats which had been reserved, and the presiding and assisting officers took their places for the sacrament. Pastor C. E. Wight was in charge, assisted by J. A. Gardner, who read the Scripture, and by Bishop C. A. Skinner.

The study of the hymns of the church replaces the evening sermon the first Sunday of each month. Four appropriate hymns were presented by Pastor Wight and as a surprise the girls' chorus sang two numbers.

Quindaro Church

Quindaro congregation and friends recently enjoyed one of the most outstanding spiritual feasts ever to be experienced in that church, as a result of its fifth annual series of pre-Easter services held from March 25, to April 1, inclusive, by Pastor H. A. Higgins. His sermons were outstanding in quality and those privileged to attend not only received added spiritual strength but a more appreciable understanding of the privileges and opportunities that lie ahead of them if they but conform to the teachings and doctrine of Jesus Christ.

The total number attending the services for the week was 1,330. This is thought to be an outstanding attendance record for any such series of meetings in the Kansas City Stake.

The topics of the sermons were, "Man's First Need," "Contact With Truth," "The Master Builder," "Christ Made Men," "The Oneness of Love," "The Scarlet Robe," "Ye Shall Live Also," and "The Enthronement of Christ."

As a result of these services seven persons were baptized: Bonnie Rose Simpson, Freddie Rider, Bertha Carmichael, James Skaggs, Louis Wilkinson, Nadine Penticuff, and Thomas Moss.

Special music was enjoyed by all throughout the week. Those contributing to this part of the services were the Men's Glee Club, from the Grandview Christian Church; the Quindaro Choir; the Chelsea Church Choir; a mixed quartet from the Grandview Church; a duet from the Central Church; a trio by Ruth Higgins, Ester and Mildred Lungwitz; duets by Gladys and Marjorie Hawkins, and Aileen Pemberton and Otis Swart, and solos by Vivian Palmer, Avis Judd, and Mona Gross.

An Easter cantata was rendered by the Quindaro junior church school, directed by Mrs. H. A. Higgins and Thelma Carmichael, entitled, "Why Didn't You Tell?"

The entire Quindaro church cooperated with their pastor in making these pre-Easter Services one of the most successful events held in Kansas City Stake.

Mount Washington Church

The themes chosen by the church school and for the morning and evening worship services during March, blended nicely, climaxing in special services on Easter Sunday.

The adult division used as their theme, "Hope of Eternal Life," stressing this hope in Christ's day, in our day, through group righteousness, and through individual righteousness. The children's division used "Preparedness" for their theme. In this they were presented the principles of the gospel, and were given an explanation of baptism and the duties of church members. For the month Pastor Will Bolinger chose the subject, "Jesus the Master Teacher," and used specific topics as follows: "The Personality of Jesus, the Teacher," "The Authority of Jesus, the Teacher," and "Go Ye and Do Likewise."

Elders R. L. Bishop, J. W. A. Bailey and U. W. Greene were the speakers for the evening services. The O. B. K.'s had charge of the services the first Sunday evening, furnishing excellent music. Brother Greene was their speaker. Brother Bishop used the life of Christ as the basis for his discourses, March 11 and 18, and Brother Bailey gave illustrated lectures on the life of Christ in America and Palestine, March 25 and April 1.

The Cantanina Chorus, under the direction of Mrs. H. C. Burgess, presented a twenty-minute program of vocal and instrumental numbers the evening of March 18.

A fitting program for the baptismal service on Easter was arranged by Mrs. Frank Mitchell, superintendent of the children's division, and her assistant, Miss Irene Hunter. The following young people were baptized: Kelmer Ross, Charles Hall, Eugene Hansen, Melvin Sturman, Pollyanna Bolinger, Marjorie Winegar, Henrietta Gibson, Marion Davis, Jeanette Hansen, Alvin Sturman, Kenneth Jefferies, and Wayne Qualls. The confirmation and communion service occurred at eleven o'clock.

No services are being held at Mount Washington during General Conference.

Zion's Christian Legion Convention

Favored with the ideal weather conditions of a blue sky and Michigan's bracing northern breeze, hundreds of young and old from Ontario, Canada, Michigan and Northern Indiana assembled at Saginaw, March 24 and 25 to effect an organization which aims to cement the lives of the young of these regions to attain zionic purposes. This movement owes much to the initiative and untiring efforts of Apostle D. T. Williams who, for many months, has spent considerable time and effort to stimulate desires for church goals through this organization.

Successful Banquet Saturday

Attendance at the banquet Saturday evening exceeded the most sanguine expectations, and at the last moment the regular banquet hall on the third floor of the Masonic Temple was substituted for the more commodious but less convenient main auditorium on the first floor. Apostle D. T. Williams was toastmaster of this genial gathering, and President F. M. Smith was the guest speaker. Elder L. E. Grice, of Saginaw, gave a toast "To the Church," to which J. Charles Mottashed, of Detroit, responded. Lloyd Heaviland, of Detroit, gave a toast "To Zion's Christian Legion," and William Patterson, of Port Huron, responded. President Smith evaded the conventional after-dinner speech with its levity, and assumed the attitude of dignity and gravity befitting his calling and the momentous times through which we are passing. Viewing world conditions, and dwelling upon the insecurity of our own nation he warned his auditors that the prophecy frequently quoted by the elders "... that every man that will not take up sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety," was nearer fulfillment than many imagine, and he pleaded for a preparation for those times by a more strict application of the principles of the restored gospel. Summing up these world conditions, he said, "I would go down into the slough of despondency and despair were it not that Zion beckons us on."

President Smith on Word of Wisdom

The large hall was fast filling for the morning prayer service, (which was marked by sincerity and devotion) and when President Smith began his lecture on "The Word of Wisdom" at 11 a. m. the main floor and galleries were filled. President Smith is convinced that "the Lord gave the revelation known as 'The Word of Wisdom' to develop a more healthy and whole-hearted people." Dwelling at length on the phrase in Section 86:1 "In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days," the speaker warned the Saints against the insidious advertizing of cigarettes, strong drink, and so-called effective remedies which are supposed to give strong nerves, healthy lungs and vigorous bodies. He further stated, "we ignorantly violate God's counsel, and then turn to him for healing." As a part of our zionic preparation we must more strictly observe the Word of Wisdom, and he hoped the time was not far distant when qualified members of the church would prepare health literature based on the Word of Wisdom.

Organization of Zion's Christian Legion

At 2 p. m. the convention business session convened with Apostle D. T. Williams chosen to preside. Apostle Williams was the sole nominee for the position of legion commander, and this nomination was made unanimous upon motion of President F. M. Smith. By motion the office of treasurer was to be filled by joint action of the first presidency and the presiding bishopric. Other officers chosen were: secretary, Miss Blanche Engle, Midland; director of solicitation, Elder S. Gordon Brown, Lansing; director of socialization, Elder Allen Pohly, Flint, and director of publicity, Elder William Patterson, Port Huron. The following motion was unanimously adopted: "We, the young people of the Church in the States of Michigan, Northern Indiana, Ontario, Canada, in Zion's Christian Legion Convention at Saginaw, believe the time demands a more intensive preparation for the establishment of our zionic society; and, further, believing that this preparation is not possible without a strict observance of the spirit and letter of the Word of Wisdom. Therefore, be it resolved that we make the keeping of the Word of Wisdom a moral and physical obligation; and, further, we request the first presidency to appoint and urge those qualified to prepare for our guidance such literature based on, the said Word of Wisdom." The ultimate goal of the Zion's Christian Legion is Zion. The immediate aim of the organization is to assume the responsibility of helping to pay off the church debt by a membership fee of $3 per year. This fee is paid into the general church treasury. In a greater manner the legionnaires are pledged to prepare their lives by righteousness and efficiency to work in church and secular occupations for the Kingdom of God's sake.

Music a Special Feature

The combined choir under the direction of Sister Louise Evans of Grand Rapids, Michigan and Harry Runkle of Midland, rendered solos and choruses which enlivened the gathering Sunday. They look forward with this leader to the elaborate musical program which aims to perfect a choir of six hundred voices, and to develop an imposing orchestra and junior choir. This region has much musical talent from which to draw.

Columbus, Ohio

Second Church—Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The Spirit of God was present to a large degree at the March sacrament service. Elder R. E. Madden and Patriarch J. E. Matthews were in charge.

The women's department met Thursday, March 8, for a potluck dinner. A program of Irish verse and song was entertaining, each individual taking part.

Visitors for the month of March included Brother and Sister Samuel Wigton, and daughter, of Roseville, Ohio; Brother and Sister T. R. Burke, of Circleville, Ohio; District President A. E. Anderton.

The following men delivered inspirational sermons during this month: Elders W. B. Reeves, G. H. Kirkendall, R. E. Madden, A. H. Nieman, A. E. Anderton, Priest Harry J. Hoffman, and Patriarch J. E. Matthews.

The women's department entertained their husbands with a dinner in the social room of the church, March 27. Vera M. Hunter was toastmistress, and the speakers were Mrs. J. E. Matthews, Mrs. A. H. Nieman, Mrs. H. J. Hoffman, C. H. Hamilton, A. E. Anderton, and R. E. Madden. Solos were sung by Carl E. Turvey, Lucinda Madden, J. E. Matthews, and Hazel Gribben. A piano solo was rendered by Dorothy Hinkle, and a piano duet, by Vera M. Hunter and Hazel Gribben.

The basket ball results for 1934 were recently announced. The senior boys won class "B" championship of the South Church League, for the third straight year. Intermediate boys were winner up to class "A" champions in their league.

The two girls' teams, while not standing so high in their leagues, gave a good account of themselves and maintained a reputation for good, clean, sportsmanlike playing. Elder W. B. Reeves has recently been appointed branch athletic director, and this will help the young people achieve their goals.

Race Track, Montana

Easter Services Bring Members Together

A joint meeting held at the Race Track pavilion, Easter Sunday, proved to be enjoyable for Deer Lodge, Anaconda, and Race Track Saints. With Sister George Thorburn in charge, the church school convened at 10:30 a. m. Immediately following, a most impressive sacrament service was enjoyed. The spirit of prayer and testimony was wonderfully manifested in special petitions for the General Conference. Prayers were asked for Sister Thorburn's mother, who had the misfortune of falling, and due to shock, has been confined to her bed. At the close of the day's activities, a play was presented, "The King Eternal."

Brother and Sister E. E. Eliason, of Great Falls, were Easter guests at Race Track.

During the month of March, the women's department presented a play which proved very successful both socially and financially. With the proceeds, they have purchased a piano to be used for the district gatherings, as well as for local needs. The same play was later presented for the patients at the Galen Sanitarium.

Brother and Sister George Woodside left for their home in Jefferson Island, after spending the past few months in Race Track. Friday evening, March 30, the Saints gave them a farewell surprise party.

A son has been born in the home of Brother and Sister Harley Lorance. He has been named Richard Harley.

Gladstone, Michigan

Besides regular services, Gladstone Saints are holding a special study class on the Book of Mormon, once each week.

Easter Sunday was a day long to be remembered. The Saints, young and old, met at six o'clock for a sunrise prayer service, where a goodly portion of the Spirit was enjoyed.

Church school at ten o'clock, sacrament service, at eleven o'clock, and an Easter program presented by the young people of the branch, at seven-forty-five, were well attended. The spirit of the early morning meeting remained throughout the day.

The presence of two young men, non-members, was enjoyed at all of these meetings. They have been attending regular Sunday evening services, and their contributions with the violin have been greatly appreciated.

Pastor Edward R. Carter is still carrying on at Ford River every other Sunday afternoon, and several honest-hearted souls have been added to the kingdom. This is due to a great extent to the untiring efforts of Brother and Sister Joseph Wellman, whose lives are surely consecrated to the work.

Saints of Gladstone are thankful for the many blessings that have been theirs to enjoy.

Calumet, Oklahoma

Praise Pastor O. G. Owings

"Community Stewardship" is the study recently adopted by the young people of this branch. They hope to make it a profitable theme.

An egg hunt was enjoyed by the children Easter Sunday morning. A program was arranged for the entertainment of the congregation during the evening service.

Pastor A. G. Owings was the morning speaker, delivering a most inspirational sermon. He did not dwell upon the tragedy of the crucifixion, but upon the beauty of the resurrection. Saints of this branch feel fortunate to have so sincere, conscientious, and diligent a man as Brother Owings as their pastor. He senses his responsibility and is intent upon the growth and progress of the branch.

Central Michigan Is Growing

Saints Are Awakening to Opportunities

Getting acquainted with one's field is no small task, and learning the needs of a particular district is another problem. Such considerations involve a study of men and methods. As I become better acquainted with the people of Central Michigan, I am convinced that the men who were pioneers here were men of God and that this field has been and is one of the richest harvest fields of souls to be found in any State.

Our real task, of course, is building men for God. Bringing them into the fold is one of the lesser problems. I feel that we are now at the crossroads of the forward move to Zion. The last two years have demonstrated the wisdom of the Prophet in setting the goal and objectives of the church for the next few years. When I left this district to attend this General Conference, men of experience, Brother Burt among them, told me to tell President Smith: "We are behind you one hundred per cent to move the cause of Zion."

The general fast in March was observed more rigidly by the Saints than I have ever seen. In the past three years this district has made wonderful spiritual growth, making for the betterment of the church in every way. The sacrament day in March at Beaverton was the best I ever attended. The Lord was with us in power.

The leader of this people told the church a few years ago, "If the forces of opposition are to be met, a greater degree of unity must obtain." This unity is felt in many places. Contention, strife, bickering are less in evidence, to the good of all.

The movement among the young people—Zion's Christian Legion—will surely yield the leadership needed to meet the greatest opportunity we have yet seen. Prejudice is giving way. An open door seems to await the church on every hand.

President F. M. McDowell's four-day visit to the district did much to give the Saints new vision and hope.

Central Michigan District has enjoyed several excellent conferences in the past three years. Some of the branches are growing. All are looking to General Conference with hope in their hearts and a prayer on their lips.

HUBERT CASE.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Young People Organize

Another Division of Zion's Christian Legion

The young people of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District met at Lansing, Michigan, March 17 and 18, to organize as a part of the movement among Michigan youth now known as Zion's Christian Legion. In this district both young and old have caught the new spirit which is prevailing throughout the church and which speaks well for the future of God's work here on earth.

The convention opened Saturday with a prayer service at 10 a. m. At 2 p. m. a lecture was given by District President A. C. Barmore on "Religious Education" and a short talk and open discussion by Elder A. J. Dexter. Elder Barmore preached at 7:30 p. m.

Sunday services were well attended and commenced with a prayer hour at 9 a. m. Apostle D. T. Williams preached at 10:30 a. m., and at 2 p. m. organized the Zion's Christian Legion among the young people of this district. The following officers were elected: divisional director, Elder A. J. Dexter, secretary, Wanda Ferguson, treasurer, Bishop Elmer C. Evans; director of solicitation, Elder S. Gordon Brown; director of socialization, Elder D. H. Smith; director of publicity, John Wiley. With these workers the young people will take an active part in furthering the cause of Christ and Zion. Apostle Williams preached a fine sermon at 7 p. m. to close the convention.

What to preach is a perennial problem to every conscientious minister. No matter how brilliant his mind, nor how much good material he may have ready to present to his people, yet what will be the best for them, what will bring the greatest results in soul growth and Christian service? Like a good physician the preacher studies his people and endeavors to diagnose the moral health of his people and then applies remedies, seeking the growth of their stock of ideas and progress in the development of mature Christian attitudes. The largest room in the world is the room for improvement and this gives the minister his opportunity and challenge.—George D. Owen, in Church Management.

Holden Stake

Post Oak, Missouri

Saints and friends were saddened when the message came from the West coast that Wilma, wife of Ray Beckett, passed away March 11, at her home at Pineville, California. They lived at Post Oak two years and she was baptized there into the church. She was loved by everyone. Leaves three children: Joyce, six, Raymond, four, and Janice, two. Her family have the sympathy of all. Brother and Sister W. T. Beckett have gone to California to assist their son to care for the little ones. About eighty Saints and friends gathered at their home the evening of March 19, to bid them farewell. Brother and Sister Beckett and Robert and Marjorie are greatly missed. They were good workers in the branch.

Sister James Duffey who has been quite sick was taken to Independence for treatment.

After suffering from heart trouble for several months, Brother William Hutchinson is out at services again to the joy of his friends.

Mr. Raymond Anders, of Clinton, has purchased the dwelling and store at Post Oak, and will put in a stock of groceries. He is a son-in-law of Brother and Sister Robert Daugherty. The Saints welcome Raymond, Florence, and their daughter, Louise, to this branch.

Some from here are attending General Conference. Others are reading of it in the Daily Herald.

Sonnet

My world is quiet. I have never heard
The deep-toned oaths of cannon when they roar
Death and destruction. All I know of war
Is hearsay. Travelers say all hell is stirred
By furious earthquakes past the shivering seas.
I have not faced those torments—but that shore
Is deep-drenched with my brothers' blood; no more
Come letters from my father, and—God ease
My loneliness!—my lover. Yet I know War only as a word. Why, when the play
Parade of college soldiers marches by
With stirring music, does my heart's blood flow
In icy veins, and tears blot out the day,
And death's hand hover o'er the tired sky?
—Alice Good, in the Christian Century
for July 19, 1933.

The Child's Problem of Development

By Harvey C. Clark

The problem of child development that we are facing daily is not given the serious consideration it should have in view of its importance. Many a child may live in a warm comfortable home and have plenty of good food and clothing. He may be given better than average educational opportunities. Yet he may have only a small chance of becoming a balanced, useful adult.

Beginning with the early stages of childhood it will be helpful to us if we assume an attitude of coordinating our thoughts with those of a child, reliving with him a few of the experiences of the formative years. When a child reaches the age of artistic and creative development, he naturally makes known his desires to those to whom he looks for guidance and encouragement. A lack of thoughtful consideration at this time may cause a false sense of inability. Why? Because older people unthinkingly discourage the child.

As an example, a child approaches his father, who is constructing something about home requiring mechanical skill. The child is naturally curious; he wants to do something big; he would like to duplicate the thing that strikes his fancy. But the father, not understanding, feels more or less naturally that what he is doing just then is too important; he can't be bothered. He tells the child to go out and play; he can't understand such things; he is too young. He will have to wait until he grows older and learns more.

Lacking foresight, a father or any adult fails to see what this attitude will do. It will cause a child to feel that he is incapable and shouldn't even try anything beyond what he already knows. The result is that the child gradually withdraws into himself. He learns that he cannot express himself without being made to feel inferior. As he becomes older this notion becomes "set." Yet he may have invaluable qualities lying dormant. He may be a deep and intelligent thinker, only waiting for an opportunity for expression.

Again, the same effect may result from an opposite cause. Too much praise may lead to an unfounded feeling of superiority. The "false standards" eventually come down with a bang.

In the first instance this type of person is often misunderstood because of his many peculiarities. He may have a backward, overly quiet disposition. He may give short, blunt, unsatisfactory responses in conversation, or perhaps to questions asked in Sunday school or similar gatherings, or fail to take part in a prayer service.

This increasing sense of inferiority experienced in the growth of such a person may result in his losing interest almost entirely in his own development along any line. In spite of educational advantages he may fail to progress or even hold his own, because there is no impelling desire. One apparent result is that he becomes slack in his use of English and consequently expresses himself poorly and is sometimes sadly misunderstood.

A child living in this environment until maturity becomes an inexpressive person. But, "believe it or not," he still has some unsuspected qualities that could be beneficial not only to himself but to those with whom he comes in contact. The key may be some understanding soul who, seeing these qualities, has the insight to impress the individual with an idea of his own possibilities, to create within him a desire to give them expression and to help him to see for himself how he can bring about that expression. He will also show him why it is important that he change his attitudes. He will help him to see that his ability is equal to that of those he has for so long considered unattainably above him.

The important part that lies before the person who has undertaken to help the child is to learn how these different qualities lie. Then he must tactfully bring about a reconstructed gathering of these qualities so there will be more unity and emphasis of expression and more boldness in response. By having each talent explained, the individual can reach a clear concept of its value. The person who would help must successfully convince the individual that his talent is worthy of expression and may be beneficial to others. He must create an eager desire not only for outward expression of this talent but for development to its highest degree.

We are assuming that from childhood this person has been living under conditions which have made it necessary for someone to use influence in order to bring about an adjustment. If in the early days of his youth his parents could only have foreseen the results of their mistake, an adjustment would not be necessary.

One compensation which such an individual may find is a quiet, solitary contentment that comes when he is away from irritating contacts. He learns to live within himself because he is compelled to. This is valuable. Too many socially developed persons never learn it. While even so repressed, such a life has its satisfactions.

Yet wouldn't it be (Continued on page 478)

The Leader's Measuring Stick

By Leta B. Moriarty

I REALLY WANT to help the church. I would like to teach a Sunday school class, or lead a group of girls," said a woman to me some time ago, "but children make me nervous. I just couldn't endure having the girls in my home, mussing up the furniture and getting fingerprints on things!"

How my heart ached for that woman! I was glad that she does not realize the joy she is missing because of her "nerves." A woman destined never to know the happiness of informal little gatherings with girls around her own fireplace, stories, exchanges of opinion on things which interest girls, laughter, jokes, popping corn, roasting apples—Oh, how sorry I was for her! Nor could I encourage her in her aspirations to be a teacher or leader: I was using my leader's measuring stick rather fast just then, and the measurements did not suit.

There is no obligation more sacred than that imposed on the leader of girls. Leadership of young and unfolding lives is not to be accepted lightly or selfishly. For leading involves more than just meeting a certain group of girls once a week, bossing them about, talking over the things you hope to do with them, and adding to the glamour of your own reputation by your work with them. It involves a wealth of understanding, love, sympathy, wisdom, consecration, and a continuous prayer to God for the strength to live as well as to teach high ideals.

THE LEADER'S MEASURING STICK? It is not an ordinary thing—it does not measure your height or circumference in inches. Instead it measures soul size and largeness of intellect and consecration.

When I begin to enumerate to myself the qualities of a good leader, I like to recall Paul's second letter to young Timothy, especially the second chapter of that letter. Well might all of us study that chapter. Listen: "Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus." I believe that we might effectually substitute the words "my daughter," in that bit of admonition. And there are other things the apostle tells this new, young minister for Christ: "Commit thou to faithful men," "endure hardness," "consider what I say," and "the Lord give thee understanding in all things." In that chapter also is found one of my favorite verses of Scripture: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Also, "Follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace."

Do not these instructions form a wonderful measuring stick? Dare you grade yourself by it?

For the sake of convenience I should like to divide our measuring stick into two parts. First, I would say if a woman would be a good leader of girls, she must have a heart crowded with love for them, a love big enough to understand girlish hopes and problems, to overlook blunders, to correct mistakes constructively, to help, to bless, to build.

Hers must be the love born of maturity, a wise and intelligent love. By this I mean that the leader herself must have grown up, must have matured to the point where she has solved her own adolescent problems—the problem of to dance or not to dance, to pet or not to pet, to brag or not to brag, to pose or not to pose, to gossip or not to gossip. It is absolutely necessary that the leader be a mature individual. She must decide upon her own code of social ethics before she tries to lead others.

The leader's must be an honest and true love. No one discovers hypocrisy quicker than Lula or Jane or Sarah, and no one has a greater contempt for it, or one who practices it.

In the good leader, too, we find the love of kindness, justice, peace, loyalty, tolerance, cheerfulness, good humor, self-control, and activity.

The leader's should be a giving, helpful love. The gift of her own good example is the greatest gift a leader may give her followers. It is a noble thing to love, but it is nobler to give as you love. One who hopes to be a wholly acceptable and successful leader of girls should be prepared to serve the girls in many capacities, to teach her Bible or Book of Mormon if that is her need; to take her out of doors and inspire her with God's greatness and goodness through the wonders of nature; to advise her about tasteful dress and face make-up; to help her decide on decorations for her room; to work out a difficult school problem or experiment with her; to suggest ideas for special occasions and entertainments; to remind her of thoughtfulness and social courtesies. The leader's love should be so great and compelling that she is constantly on the alert to improve herself for the helping of her charges.

A leader's love is enduring. It is not the thing of a moment, now here and now gone. It trusts the girl even beyond the point where trust is merited. It is loyal. Never does a good leader gossip about her girls or their confidences; never does she betray the trust they place in (Continued on page 477.)

much better for a child to grow up so there would be no need of a violent readjustment in later life?

Let us give our children a chance.

her. Her love for them is too big.

And the second part of our measuring stick is that the leader should be a good member of the church, a whole-hearted, whole-souled Latter Day Saint, her life ascribing to the high ideals of our faith.

She should keep the law, all the law of the church. And, of course, before she can keep the law, she must know it. She must therefore be a student of the beliefs and principles of the church. She must also be a church attendant, exerting herself to keep in touch and step with the forward movements of the group.

Not only must she be able to give a reason for her faith to her girls, but she must be proficient in explaining points of church history, fundamentals of our belief, and in helping the girls to sources of gospel information and defense. In addition, she must have determined her code of conduct as a Latter Day Saint in good standing. She must be a responsible member of the church, recognizing authority, exercising good judgment, and being loyal to its ideals.

If she is all these, she will cherish the missionary fire which glows in the heart of every active Latter Day Saint, the intense desire to tell others the gospel news. She will think of other people before she thinks of herself. She will stretch her hands to girls of all faiths and nationalities. And, too, she will be consecrated to the immediate objectives of the church—the evangelization of the world and the zionizing of the church.

Always remembering that by example is one of the most effective methods of leading and teaching, she will heed the admonition of latter-days: "Be patient; be sober; be temperate; have patience, faith, hope, and charity." (Doctrine and Covenants 6: 8.)

When You Come to Church

Do you cultivate an eye to detect the stranger? He is always there. He does not always have the nerve to hunt you up and introduce himself. You must not blame him for being backward.

It is your privilege and duty to make at least one stranger glad that he made his way into this house of God.

If each one of us would do this much, what a reputation our church would have for friendliness.

Let us be brave enough to neglect each other whom we meet so often, while we cultivate the acquaintance of one whom we have never met.

Let us study the art of making the stranger feel at home with us.

What ideals have we at present? Happiness in a future life. If there be a future life for the individual, shall we find it repaying if we have not striven for quality in this; nor had that kind and free and generous philosophy which belongs to the cult of beauty, and alone gives peace of mind? The pursuit of beauty includes, then, whatever may be true in the ideal of happiness in a future life. We have another current ideal: wealth or comfort in this life. But the cult of beauty contains all that is good in that; for it demands physical health and well-being, sane minds in sane bodies, which depend on a sufficiency of material comfort. The rest of the ideal of wealth is mere fat, sagging beyond the point of balance. . . .

To give the devil his due, ours is the best age men ever lived in; we are all more comfortable and virtuous than we ever were; we have many new accomplishments, advertisements in green pastures, telephones in bedrooms, more newspapers than we want to read, and extremely punctilious diagnosis of maladies. . . . The age is most thorough and accomplished, but with a kind of deadly practicality. All for today, nothing for tomorrow! The future will never think us mad for attempting what we do attempt; we build no Seville cathedrals. . . . —From John Galsworthy's Castles in Spain, by permission of Charles Scribner's Sons.

Kindness is the golden chair by which society is bounded together.—Goethe.

■ Dedication

"When I was a boy twenty years of age I dedicated my life to God and the service of this church. I have done whatever and gone wherever you have requested me. I want to continue to do that as long as I can. If it is your pleasure to approve, I shall be happy to accept."—Amos T. Higdon, to the General Conference, when asked to make a statement concerning his willingness to accept ordination as a high priest.

■ Courage

There is a story of a happening at Niagara Falls. The water there freezes in the wintertime, and very often extends from bank to bank in a great sheet of white ice. It is a glorious sight—I have seen it. And the people walk out upon this ice to obtain a better look of the falls.

The story goes that one Sunday afternoon in late spring, a group of people were inspecting the falls from the ice when, with an ominous cracking sound, a large piece broke away and started down toward the falls. On it stood one young man.

A throng of people pressed to the shore gasping with horror. Frenziedly one man dashed out before them carrying a rope: "A thousand dollars!" he shouted, "to the man who will tie this rope about his waist and swim out to that piece of ice!"

No one responded. Fascinatedly they stared at the floating cake. "Two thousand dollars!" came the desperate bid. "Three thousand!" Still no one moved. The ice cake was nearer—nearer death!

Then frantically the father of the young man began to tie the rope about his own waist. "Isn't there a man in this crowd who has the courage to tie himself to me to save the life of that boy?"

There was. A dozen stepped forward. None had responded to the monetary offer; but the courageous ones were eager to save a human life.—Told by Apostle R. S. Budd at General Conference.

■ It is easy to talk; it is easy to be here and to be enthusiastic, it is easy to go home and say that we had a good conference, but unless we go to work I doubt very much if we can pay our church debt. We are in bondage and debt because we have failed to do what the Lord would have us do.—E. J. Gleazer in a speech to the General Conference, 1934.

■ Not alone must we look to the next two years, that is until the next General Conference, but we must have a longer look; we must think of the generation that will follow us and take up the work where we leave it.—Blair Jensen.

■ The biggest business of this church is the business of spreading the gospel, but we must see to it that the channels are left free through which the gospel is spread.—D. T. Williams.

■ This may not be the day in which Zion will be redeemed, but it is the only day in which you and I have opportunity to make our contribution to it.—J. A. Koehler.

■ We need better homes in our church. We need the missionary spirit in every heart, and we need to pray for our neighbors.—J. O. Dutton.

A Splendid Conference

The Seventy-sixth General Conference which closed late Sunday afternoon will be regarded in all its major aspects as an unqualified success; it will be hard to find a single dissenting voice on this opinion within the ranks of the church. In legislative work it was peaceful, determinedly purposeful and constructive, and dignified. With one exception, there were no freak proposals made, and that was regarded humorously and speedily set in its place when, after a windy presentation by its proponent, the body was given an opportunity. The church is to be congratulated that its representative body was so well informed as to essential facts, so clear in its conception of what action the circumstances required, and so nicely balanced in both judgment and restraint. This was clearly a body with a corporate will of its own, not to be stamped by extraneous or insignificant considerations.

Here are what may be regarded as the fine contributions of this conference: a more closely and affirmatively coordinated leadership under the Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric; the excellent educational work for the priesthood under the direction of the Presidency; the great missionary program set forth in the report of the Quorum of Twelve; the splendid appeal of the Presiding Bishopric regarding our financial program; the spiritual uplift of the people in the beautiful worship services; the declaration against war; the strongly manifested popular support for efforts to develop the practical and educational work of the conference.

Appointments and Final Minutes

Since it was impossible to include the appointments and final minutes of the conference in the Conference Daily, these items will be included in next week's issue of the regular weekly Herald, in a form that can be taken out and inserted for binding with the Daily.

Jesus is easily the dominant figure in history. A historian without any theological bias whatever should find that he simply cannot portray the progress of humanity honestly without giving a foremost place to a penniless teacher from Nazareth. A historian, like myself, finds the picture centering irresistibly around the life and character of this simple, lovable man.—H. G. Wells.

The Seventy-sixth General Conference

FOURTH DAY—MONDAY, APRIL 9

In the morning the lectures to the priesthood, the classes, the prayer meeting and the daily preaching services settled down to their routine for a week's work. Attendance was large and steady. At the afternoon business session the discussion of the Bishop's report had to be delayed one day because a speaker secured the floor and spent the better part of the afternoon attempting to put through a resolution opening the Sanitarium to others than standard medical practitioners. The motion was referred to the Sanitarium Board.

Amos T. Higdon was recommended for ordination as a high priest, and accepted.

After the business session S. A. Burgess, Church Historian, displayed rare and important manuscripts, including that of the Book of Mormon, the Inspired Version, and many other items.

The conference was saddened on this day by the death of Miss Florence Thompson, head of the department of speech at Graceland College, who had been injured in a car accident while on her way to the conference. Her tragic and unnecessary loss was a blow, and she cooperated bravely with the doctors in an effort to save her life. She continued brave when she knew death was inevitable.

In spite of this sad circumstance, the A Cappella Chorus of Graceland, directed by Miss Mabel Carlile, did beautiful work with their program on Monday evening.

FIFTH DAY—TUESDAY, APRIL 10

Bishop L. F. P. Curry spent some time discussing the financial report. It is hoped that the material he covered will be the subject of some articles in the Herald at some future date. C. A. Edstrom of Chicago was recommended for ordination as a high priest. Members of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College were reelected for new terms. The Board of Publication was reelected.

The official banquet and reception was held in the basement of the Auditorium at 6:30 in the evening, the dinner being served by the Laurel Club.

SIXTH DAY—WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11

Arthur Oakman and Fred A. Davies were recommended for ordination as seventies, and were approved. The conference authorized the Presiding Bishopric to renew bonds in order to carry on the financial work of the church. The conference authorized a new compilation of general conference resolutions, eliminating a large number which for various reasons are now ineffective. This matter is explained on page 19 of the Conference Daily. The new compilation should be very helpful in teaching the church law.

SEVENTH DAY—THURSDAY, APRIL 12

Brother Arthur Ferrett and Sister Ferrett, of Australia, were asked to stand for identification, and Brother Ferrett was invited to the tribune, where he delivered a fine greeting from the Australian Saints. Three men were recommended for ordination as high priests: E. M. Kemp, C. W. Tischer, and Lester E. Dyke.

On this day the church settled what has been an irritant in church councils for a long time: a positive program for dealing with the question of recreation and amusements. A document was presented by the High Priest Quorum and approved by the conference stating the attitude of the church. While problems in recreation will continue to arise, this action gives the church a sane and reasonable basis for dealing with them. This constructive piece of legislation deserves comment and treatment in later articles.

Charles Fry presented his resignation from the office of bishop. He will continue in the church service in other lines of work.

The limit for the introduction of new business was set yesterday for 2:15 today.

EIGHTH DAY—FRIDAY APRIL 13

J. L. Verhei and J. F. Wildermuth were ordained high priests, the first in order to be ordained a bishop on Sunday, and the second because he had to leave early.

The memorial service for deceased church officers was changed from Sunday as scheduled and was given this day. President Frederick M. Smith read the names of twelve who had died prior to the 1932 conference and of eighty who have passed on in the interval since that conference.

Milo Burnett was approved for ordination as an evangelist.

A resolution from the Quorum of Twelve against war brought a great deal of discussion. The resolution was so stated as to oppose "war as an instrument of international adjustment." It will not compromise the real loyalty of our people. It was carried by a great majority. Visitors enthusiastically indicated their approval. Thus the church takes its stand with other Christian peoples against the horror and injustice of war.

James A. Gillen, President of the Twelve, offered his resignation from the Quorum on account of age and physical inability.

NINTH DAY—SATURDAY, APRIL 14

Although only one business session fell below the three thousand mark in estimated attendance, and the average was a little under four thousand, the Registration Committee's report indicated that only 1,090 had registered. These included: 282 delegates, 222 ex officio delegates, totalling 504 delegates; 103 ex officios; 143 hosts, and 340 visitors. The following were released from the lists of seventies because circumstances had caused their return to secular life, although most of them still serve in church work on a voluntary basis: A. H. Christensen, John R. Lentell, T. W. Curtis, E. L. Ulrich.

The report of the Board of Appropriations was approved. Apostle Paul M. Hanson, elected president of the Quorum of Twelve, was approved, and there was general rejoicing at his selection. The general officers and departments of the church were sustained.

Saturday evening there were two dramatic programs for out of town visitors. In the Stone Church upper auditorium, The White Masque Players presented a model church Christmas entertainment, "Why the Chimes Rang." In the Stone Church dining hall three dramatic groups put on a play each: "The Bishop's Candlesticks," by the Kansas City young people, "Dust of the Road," by the White Masque Players, and "Jephthah's Daughter," by the Independence young people.

TENTH DAY—SUNDAY, APRIL 15

It will be impossible to record here the details of the morning program of the last day of the conference; the young people's service in the Stone Church from 7:30 to 9:00, the priesthood prayer meeting at the same hour, and the Sunday school period that followed, with large groups filling the Stone Church and the Auditorium. At eleven o'clock in the Auditorium, President Elbert A. Smith delivered the final conference sermon on the theme: "Hear Ye Him," bringing the utterances of Jesus on a number of world problems.

At 2:30 the conference assembled to witness an ordination service. Apostle F. Henry Edwards spoke on the duties of seventies, and Arthur Oakman was ordained a member of that body. Ward A. Hougas spoke on the duties of high priests, and Amos T. Higdon, Monte E. Lasater, Francis L. Whiting, and Lester E. Dyke were ordained to that body. Presiding Patriarch F. A. Smith spoke on the duties of evangelists, and F. E. Dillon, John A. Hansen, and Milo Burnett were ordained evangelists. Bishop G. L. DeLapp spoke on the work of bishops, and Henry L. Livingston, and Jerome F. Wildermuth were ordained to that order. Apostle Paul M. Hanson was set apart as president of the Quorum of Twelve. Harold I. Velt was set apart as a president of seventy. C. L. Olson, recorder, was introduced to distribute the certificates of ordination.

After an intermission of fifteen minutes, the people gathered again at 4:30 for further services. President Frederick M. Smith pinned buttons on the men who were honored in a ceremony of superannuation, including the following: Amos Berve, A. M. Chase, W. A. Smith, George Jenkins, G. T. Griffiths, J. A. Gunsolley, George W. Robley, George W. Thorburn.

Then President Smith read the list of appointments for the work in the coming conference period. This list will be published in next week's issue of the Herald. The men gathered to the platform. President F. M. McDowell offered prayer and President Elbert A. Smith delivered a charge of duty to the men, and "Consecration" was sung.

After the reading of the final minutes, President Frederick M. Smith declared the conference adjourned until April 6, 1936.

Religion enables a man to believe that there is in this world something worth while, something worth living for and dying for inasmuch as it has at least a fighting chance to succeed. It begets in him the all-essential conviction that his labor is not in vain. It encourages him to labor for needed reforms even though there is hardly a chance that they may be brought about in his own lifetime. It stretches his horizon, extends the range of his vision. In so doing it gives him at least a chance to discover some great impersonal interest or cause which may take him out of himself. It is then for him to decide whether he will go on living in a little circumscribed, self-centered world or move out and up into a vaster world. But religion, having stretched his horizon, may also quicken his desire to live for ends which reach beyond any personal, private ambition so that he will be glad to labor for the improvement of mankind, irrespective of what fate may have in store for him. In that event not only will he find himself strangely fortified against the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune, he will find that he is the captain of his soul, for all his instinctive cravings, being directed toward some great and commanding end, will no longer fight among themselves.

Religion provides a faith that life is worth living. It reveals ends that are worth living for. It nourishes desire to live for such ends. It creates the vision and inspires the devotion needed to achieve unity in divided and tormented lives. Religion, therefore, is to happiness so essential that without it no deep and abiding happiness is ever likely to be found. —Ernest Fremont Tittle, in "We Need Religion."

Background of the Cross

I recall one never-to-be-forgotten evening in mid-summer at Lake Junaluska in North Carolina. I was returning along by the shore of the lake walking toward the Mission Building. Darkness was falling from the surrounding mountains upon the quiet bosom of the waters beside me. In the far distance storm clouds had gathered and great thunderheads, black and menacing, rolled up on the horizon at the far end of the lake. As I watched them coming with darkening intensity suddenly there flashed on a high hill before me the emblazoned cross that we all know so well. I had seen it lighted before; it always impressed me as it did that summer night when it became a luminous spot silhouetted against the black background of threatening thunderclouds.

The clouds served but to bring out more sharply and impressively the outlines of the cross. We never quite understand the love of God until we see it against the background of sin. Forgiveness shines with new glories when men recall the hopelessness of the far country and the bleak and starless night when they knew not God.—Paul B. Kern in The Miracle of the Galilean.

Memory, Loyalty, Appreciation

In one of our Scottish country mansions which was owned by a lady of great wealth, there was one room which she valued above all else. She beautified and adorned it in every way. One day by accident a big blot of ink fell upon the wall and it was an eye-sore. At the time one of the great English artists was living in her home, and he took the matter in hand. He wanted to be allowed to stay in the room alone for some days, and what happened? He worked on that blot until he made a glorious picture of it, so that it became the most wonderful thing in the whole building. He changed a blot into beauty. He made a glory of a shame.

It is a mistake to think that sin came into the world as if God were unaware of it. The Lord knows his business, and he took the risk. He knew well that men would sin, and he believed that when the great day comes God will be ultimately vindicated and glorified in all his dealings of mankind, and that where sin abounded, in the wonderful language of Paul, "grace shall much more abound." It may be a fancy of mine, but I like the fancy that in heaven itself glorified men who were saved by grace shall be able to see their past in the light of God's wonderful dealing with them, and of Christ's wonderful love, with an intensity and passion that shall make heaven sweeter, and the music of their hearts more precious to God.—Donald MacKenzie, in Church Management.

— NEWS BRIEFS —

Evangelists Are Busy

"As long as I have breath, I expect to work for this church," declared Patriarch Gomer T. Griffiths, of Ohio, one of the four members of the order of evangelists who were superannuated this spring. Brother J. A. Gunsolley says, "I am glad to think I can rest when I want to, though I do not expect to be idle much of the time." This is indicative of the spirit of these men of the quorum who range in age from forty-four to eighty-six. G. W. Robley, of Rhode Island, and G. W. Thorburn, of Montana, are others of the superannuated list, who were released from General Conference appointment, but who will be permitted to labor locally as they wish.

Flint Michigan, Young Adults Organize

The young adults—about fifty strong—organized a separate class for themselves in the church school two months ago, appointing a committee to devise a plan of study and secure teachers. They decided to have six-week courses in a variety of subjects, and started with a review of Wiggan's "The Marks of an Educated Man," and now are studying "Church Fundamentals."

Nor is the class neglecting social activities. These come in the form of regular meetings, pie suppers, plays, parties, all centering on the aim to raise funds for refinishing and repairing the church building.

Church Has Teacher's Placement Bureau

Because many school-teacher members of the church have written to the Department of Religious Education for information regarding vacancies in the teaching staffs of schools around Independence, a Teacher's Placement Bureau has been organized under the supervision of W. Earl Page. This bureau will file all applications of teachers who are members of the church, locate as many vacancies as it can, and then act, without fee, as a clearing house for the two parties.

All members of boards of educations, all school officials and all church officials or members are asked to communicate with this bureau when they learn of vacancies anywhere in the United States. Please give the position, grades, or subjects to be taught, location of school, name and address of the person to whom application should be made, and any other information available. Teachers who are members of the church and wish to file their application with the bureau should write for blanks. Address letters to W. Earl Page, The Auditorium, Independence.

Leonard Lea Heads Graceland Alumni

Leonard Lea heads the Graceland Alumni for the coming conference period. Half a hundred alumni were present at the Monday evening business meeting, April 9, over which Doctor Charles F. Grabske, past president of the association, presided. Dorothy Emmerson Houghton, of Kansas City, was chosen vice president, and Doris Nelson, of Des Moines, was selected as secretary-treasurer. Charter membership in the association ended with the closing hymn of General Conference.

Conference Youth's Forum Enthusiastic

Outstanding at General Conference for its enthusiasm, hopeful outlook, and real purposefulness was the young people's forum held each morning in the lower Auditorium of the Stone Church. The following topics were presented in lecture form, and there was generally time for questions, too: "Fundamentals of Church Government," "The Task and Our Program," "Principles of Worship," "Fundamentals of Our Belief," "Use of Leisure Time" "Youth and the Home Partnership," "Organization and Projects," and "A Vision and a Challenge."

Saint Thomas Women Give Spiritual and Financial Help

The women have been a strong factor in building up Saint Thomas, Ontario, Branch in a spiritual sense during the last year. They have given support to all services.

Financially they have been of much help, too. Their total sacrifice offering for the year was $147.67. In addition, they aided the local church financially, making repairs on the building, and helping with socials, teas, food sales, and suppers.

A Cappella Program a Conference Event

Graceland's A Cappella Choir added to its good name and standing by its excellent program Monday night at General Conference. Throughout the entire program hundreds of visitors sat enthralled by the high quality of every number, the fine leadership of Miss Mabel Carlile, and the splendid execution of the singers.

Address to the Conference

By President Frederick M. Smith

The conditions under which we meet at this conference are perhaps not greatly different from what they were when last we assembled, but such change as has taken place appears to be for the better; at least we may hope so, and thus be encouraged to carry on. Many of the factors going to make up the equation of well-being are evasive of evaluation being so definitely psychological that it is difficult to say just how much progress we have made towards more-to-be-desired conditions; yet in the realm of human affairs occupied by the church, the emotional factors loom so large that the general euphoria prevailing is perhaps a dominating one. From this viewpoint, then, we may safely say we are onward and upward in our tendencies; for it cannot be denied that a better feeling of spirituality prevails among us, though here again we deal with qualities somewhat elusive of measurement, though it cannot be gainsaid that there is a more pervasive presence of the feeling that after all to be on better terms with and more interested in Divinity and His will concerning us is better than riches without the knowledge that God is with us, though this view does not exclude the envisionment of a people highly blessed spiritually and at the same time enjoying physical, economic, and industrial well-being. For this desideratum we should ever try. It is our goal.

To whatever extent the condition of our finances reflect our true condition (and this again is not easy of determination, though in the minds of large numbers it may be the factor which looms largest) we take some comfort, as it bespeaks an improvement. A scrutiny of the report from the officers of the financial department (and it is the duty of every delegate and officer to study the report carefully) will reveal the fact that we have made definite progress towards the lowering of one of our greatest hurdles. The substantial reduction of the interest-bearing debt in the past two years is not only encouraging but bespeaks the tireless attention given by the Bishops to the work of their department as well as the general support which has been given them by the priesthood, workers, and members. The debt continues to be one of our highest hurdles, and to the solution of this problem we must continue to give our best attention, not forgetting, however, that this is but one of our problems and that there are many others which bear upon it, and to neglect them would but make that one more difficult of solution. To maintain this stable equilibrium is a task to which the general authorities, including the Bishopric, are zealously applying themselves, and what they shall bring to the conference in the form of appointments of men, recommendations concerning the work, and specific enactments, has been envisaged in the light of these factors. It is far from an easy task to scrutinize the expenditures of the church with the purpose in view being to keep them at the minimum and at the same time carefully to avoid passing below the threshold of efficiency to the point where deleterious effects upon income will be had. Between Scylla and Charybdis lies a difficult course for our financial pilots; yet that they are laying it skillfully is so far quite evident. The Saints must still and will gladly, I am sure, heartily support them in their task.

Upon the Presiding Bishopric lies not only an arduous burden in administering the finances, but an equally heavy one is that imposed by the rapidly growing desire of our people to move into the regions about the Center Place, to which I have elsewhere alluded. This duty cannot safely be side-stepped and I unhesitatingly say that now this burden rests heavily upon the Presidency and Bishopric demanding thoughtful, persistent, systematic attention from this leading council without further delay. And as has been suggested elsewhere in this address the stake authorities must enter into this work cooperatively with the men of the Presidency and Bishopric.

With this as one of the functions of stake work, the Presidency has suggested to the Council of Presidency, Quorum of Twelve and Presiding Bishopric that stake organizations should be fortified as rapidly as possible, made more permanent in character, unaffected so far as possible by shifting of workers, and the entire corps of priesthood as well as membership awakened to the opportunities of the moment and the need for a more consistent expression of the saintly life and work. And acting on these suggestions, steps have been taken to effect whatever strengthening of the stake forces can be had under present conditions, and to survey the man power of these divisions with larger missionary activities as the goal, and a wider cooperation in those activities which lead onward to Zion constantly in view.

THE STAKES

And of the stakes we may say that the general conditions prevailing are fairly well reflected in the reports to the Presidency and published in the Daily Herald, and indicate that the local authorities of the stakes are alert to the needs and are trying to stimulate and hold larger interest and activity on the part of ministers and members, and particularly of the younger people. It is encouraging to note the comments of stake officers on the enlarged activities of the youth. It is needless to say that such should be stimulated and directed towards still larger and wider activities on the part of the youth.

I cannot refrain from here expressing the firm conviction that now is the time when the activities in the stakes should include and emphasize two lines of endeavor somewhat widely separated and yet well within the scope of stake functions. The whole of the forces of these organizations should be mobilized towards greater and well-sustained, that is to say continuous, missionary efforts. To reach the desired goal in this direction will mean to fire with missionary zeal not alone every member of the priesthood, but the Saints in general throughout each stake, and the development of a plan or plans whereby this zeal once engendered may be properly nurtured and given direction. To improve upon and widen the scope of work of this class now being done in the stakes should be the first care and concern of those to whom has been intrusted the care of missionary work; and in this the local forces and officers should give whole-souled support and cooperation. The care and nurture of the Saints in their journey upward to perfection will be enhanced and made easier, if a larger and more active missionary zeal shall have been developed.

The other line of activity which must be developed and carried on within the stakes is that of preparation for the proper, and I might even say profitable, reception of the Saints from outlying places who desire to move into the "regions round about" the Center Place. This work has been too long neglected or indifferently handled. It is true that there has been a definite increase of the numbers of Saints who desire to make such move, and an increase of the numbers who have made moves in this direction, but there has not been a pari passu development of the ability to properly receive and locate such movers. I cannot too strongly express my opinion that this task is one of the most pressing and should be undertaken at the earliest moment possible. A glance at the report of the statistician will disclose some figures presenting the problem rather concretely and startlingly. In the tabular comparisons the figures for 1933 show that 5,156 transfers were issued, and in another place it is stated that "there are still 5,338 names for whom we do not have the present correct address." We may well assume, therefore, that somewhere about 10,000 members of the church have made recent changes in domiciles, more than half of whom have thus become lost. What percent of this large number of transfers and change of home locations has been by Saints moving into the "regions round about" is not known and could only with great difficulty be ascertained if at all; but it is quite likely that the number is small. And this, too, in the face of the fact that we have been told where are the places toward which as members of the church we should move. It is high time our nomadic tendencies should receive direction.

In saying this, I have not lost sight of the fact that in the preparation for the gathering of the Saints there are a large number of factors to consider, and that economic and industrial bearings should be paralleled by those of the spiritual and religious development both of persons and localities. Gathering to Zion and the regions round about should not be capricious, but systematic and orderly. To do otherwise would be to disobey Divine commands.

I appreciate, I think quite adequately, the difficulties of this great task; but we cannot refuse to undertake it merely because it is a heavy responsibility. We have been commanded, and it is our duty to obey. The Presidency and Presiding Bishopric cannot alone perform this labor. It will require the careful, prayerful, and faithful coordination and collaboration of outlying district and branch officers with stake and general officers to carry on the gathering with the purposes of the church always in view. And in the accomplishment of the task there must be brought into play our firm belief in Divine inspiration. I urge the stake and general officers to move forward in faith to make the gathering an orderly reality; for not only are we under the impulsion of divinely imposed duty, but there are blessings to follow its accomplishment which we can ill afford in any degree to miss.

Outlying districts should be stimulated to enlarge their activities along missionary lines as well as caring for the members, and at the same time keep all their activities closely coordinated with what has been said about the general work of the church and stakes. With this in mind in a paper to the Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric, the following was stated:

As at several times in the past, I suggest the urgent necessity of organizing and stimulating our forces for a more vigorous and systematic campaign of missionary work and that of "strengthening the Saints." To augment missionary work at this time when our list of "missionary" appointees under general church support is at a minimum, while at the same time developing a more definite and pervasive effort to bring the Saints to a higher comprehension of their duties and saintly opportunities, will demand a larger utilization of the forces of the local priesthood than has been had in recent years. To do this there must be instituted a method of awakening the members of the priesthood throughout the entire church to a keener sense of their priestly responsibility, and a more active supervision by general authorities of the activities of local workers in the interests of greater efficiency and continuity.

This may and doubtless will require that the men under appointment as missionaries spend much of their time in supervising and planning missionary work by local men in branches, districts, or organized territory, assisting and stimulating the local workers in their efforts.

The first step towards the larger utilization of local members of the priesthood in the suggested activities should be taken by strengthening the stake organizations to the point where they can carry on general activities, both those of "caring for the Saints" and doing "missionary" work. A factor in strengthening the stakes is to free them from the annual or conference-period shifting of the officers. The stakes must be more permanent in personnel and organization, else they lose their efficiency and one of the chief reasons of their creation is violated. Ordination to stake office and responsibility generally presumes life tenure or during good behavior or efficient official functioning.

It is important that at least the president and bishop of a stake should be "full-time" men so far and as soon as possible; and as the work grows and duties thereby multiply, the presidency and bishopric of stakes should devote all their time to their work.

Here again supervision of the work of the "local" men looms large in importance. Officers should constantly be engaged in stimulating men to activity in their priesthood duties, urging development towards larger individual initiative, pointing out objectives near and ultimate, even planning details of methods in accomplishing individual tasks, where such planning is necessary because of individual inability to systematize efforts.

This suggests and will require classification of local men as to talents. Observation of the work of local men should be constant, to discover leading or dominant talents or capacity. Largest individual achievement will be had where functioning in consonance with outstanding qualifications. Such efforts at classification of workers will reveal where are our missionaries of greatest promise and the identity of those best qualified for the care and nurture of the Saints. Our efforts in this line in the past have been too much by chance.

Where persons manifestly possess talents in both directions then suggestions should follow as to where labor is most needed, or as to division of time in both lines.

The great objective to be had continuously in view in our efforts to strengthen the stakes is to make the stakes self-sustaining and more; to develop the ability to care for all classes of church work within their limits, with proper coordination with and support of general church activities.

The stakes must all be impressed with the necessity of greater activity in missionary work. The elan of this church is closely connected with the desire to tell the story of happiness in religious social regeneration. To accomplish a higher order or type of systematic and cooperative missionary work will demand more intensive educational activities with the development of activity and talent well and constantly in view. This must have special attention at the hands of the Presidency that there may be organized and systematic educational activity for the priesthood members. In this task the members of the Twelve should give whole-hearted support and cooperation.

This educational work should always be carried on in such way as to augment and cooperate with the divine inspirational help we have been promised in selecting, training and equipping our ministry, in finding and drawing out the priestly talents our youth possess. This work of priestly instruction might well first be stressed and organized in the Center Place and the present stakes, and as facilities therefor grow, extend to outlying strategic points and larger branches, with the goal always in view to eventually place before every member of the priesthood the opportunity to have every needed help before him in his efforts to qualify and to magnify his calling.

The appointment of general men with these objectives in view will as a logical consequence require a shifting upward of the standard of qualifications for priestly position or office; and may and probably will sift out some who are already under appointment. All of this will throw upon all of us heavier responsibilities and burdens. Are we willing to assume them? All of this must be accomplished by keeping alive and nurturing the proper traditions of the church, and keeping our theology free from the contaminating influences of infiltrations of impurity from the false and insidious philosophies with which we are surrounded. We must remain safely fundamental in outlook and belief to avoid the pitfalls of radicalism.

And above all we must never lose sight of the fact that the great ultimate goal is to free Zion from her bondage and bring into play in practical and everyday life the beauties, efficiency, and glory of Christ's social philosophy. Zion must be unreservedly converted to Godly service and the Saints thoroughly turned away from the tainting and retarding influence of selfishness. We need a faith which includes God and our brother.

A Radio Message on Easter Sunday

By John W. Rushton

EASTER DAY celebrates the "all-important fact" of our Christian faith—as cataloged by Saint Paul: "Christ died for our sins in accordance with the Scriptures; that he was buried; and that he rose to life again on the third day in accordance with the Scriptures."

So short a creed, yet so charged with eternal meaning!

The Lenten season beginning Ash Wednesday, through Holy Week, with its memories of Gethsemane and Golgotha, finishes with the radiant joy of this glad day. Around the earth, church bells, organs and choirs blend with the tidal wave of heavenly music giving unto Him, "Blessing and honor, praise and power forever and forever."

We reverently join with these countless multitudes in adoration and thanksgiving for the victory over death and the opening of the Gateway of Life through Him "who is alive forever more."

How significant it is that we celebrate Easter when winter is finished and spring is here! Everywhere we see that life is breaking through the cold blackness of death, and, in new greenery, fragrance and bloom, our faith in the promise—is gloriously vindicated.

"Life is ever Lord of Death And Love shall claim its own"

With Tennyson we can exultingly say:

"Faith sees the best that glimmers through the worst.
She feels the sun is hid but for the night.
She spies the summer through the winter's bud,
She tastes the fruit before the blossom falls.
She hears the lark within the songless egg
And finds the fountain where they wailed mirage."

Truly, for such as have this faith—"If winter comes, Then spring is not far away." Lift up your hearts, all ye who mourn. "Sorrow endures but for the night and joy cometh in the morning."

It needs faith and love to penetrate the immediate loss and grief, and blinded with tears we, like Mary, may see only the Gardener, when we may see "My Lord!—He was dead but is alive forever more!"

How brief seems the span of thirty-three years which Christ lived in the flesh, yet how marvelously His grace and glory have filled the generations since that day!

Never was Christ so much alive as now, never was His word so universally authoritative! The grave could not hold Him, and the promise that He shall fill all things in heaven and earth is being fulfilled.

Christ lives in all that is glorious, noble and worth while in every nation, kindred, tongue and people.

His thoughts, words, actions and ideals throb and pulsate through the whole fabric of human experience and history as real as life itself. It is impossible to subtract Christ from our civilization, its art, science and advancement without bringing down the whole in chaos. With Richter we must agree—"This Man with His pierced hands has lifted empires from their hinges and turned the course of history into new channels and still controls the ages."

The meaning of Easter for us interpreted through the multiplying centuries by seers, prophets and artists, through the revelations of science, and even the drab experiences of men and women through life's sorrows and bereavements is expressed by one who said in the light of his own nation's history—"They endured because they saw the Invisible."

In the last two decades we have seen the upheaval which has deluged the nations in the baptism of blood, fire and vapors of smoke, and "love's hope seemed dead;" but there is still life with its hopes and aspirations. And, we may believe that in the life, death and resurrection of our Lord the history of our race is recapitulated. That some day this present gloom will break and there will emerge a finer humanity with nobler character, which will usher in the new world. The world will be made new because we dare to believe in a new heaven.

Easter Day means the triumph of the spiritual ideals over that which is earth-born and fleshly. It points the way of our destiny. Though beginning with the "dust of the earth" the "breath of God's life," in the human soul will rise above the things of "time and sense," and find its way through tears and strife, death and the grave to its place with God.

"Thou hast made me for Thyself and I am restless until I rest in Thee." So said Saint Augustine.

With the increasing hosts of the Church Triumphant, the Church Militant we join in this glad morning to acclaim Him who is "the resurrection and the Life."

"He is risen—Alleluia."

Church School Organization

By D. M. Wiesen

The following should be helpful to other branches where a more complete organization of church school forces is anticipated. The change from the former three departments to a single program of the church school under a director who is responsible to the pastor, has proved a decided improvement wherever tried consistently. Faith, vision, courage and tact and a spirit of cooperation are necessary to make the plan effective. Philadelphia is considered one of our most successful schools. The same plan, on a smaller scale, has been found equally successful in small branches. For detailed instruction and helps in building your program, see The Church School Handbook, 35 cents, Herald Publishing House.—C. B. W.

IT HAS BEEN SAID that "no business can escape change." I wondered at one time if this would include the "Lord's Business." Observation and experience have taught me that it does. While the fundamentals remain unchanged, our methods of administration must continually be improving, and improvement means change.

When I first became interested in church school administration in 1928, I noticed that, while everything seemed to be running smoothly, yet the business end of our school was being neglected. In consultation with the pastor I set about some minor changes, but nothing very noticeable was done until the call came for unified services, grading of the church school, and abolition of the departments. We in Philadelphia decided that we would answer the call with an affirmative gesture. We presented the plan to the body and it was accepted. There were just a few dissenters, who felt the change wasn't warranted. But it is to their credit that they agreed, that as long as the church asked for it they would fall in line and support the movement. They have never been sorry for this stand.

And so we were to grade the school as soon as possible. Everything pointed to the end that was desired, and we soon began to notice progress.

Under the old schedule each entire department was using the same one course of study. It appeared very clearly that the contemplated change could not take place overnight. It would have to be a process of development. Then came the stabilized courses, which we immediately adopted.

The following example will give, briefly, an idea of how we accomplished the grading:

We will use the junior department for our example. This was to be a three-year course. According to the plan we were following this would mean six junior classes. There would be three age groups each, of boys and girls. The first year the entire group used the one course of study, junior department, first year. The second year the two oldest classes moved up into the intermediate department. This left four classes to take the second year junior course, and two classes entering from the primary department to start the first year junior course. The third year the two oldest classes again moved up to the intermediate department and two new classes moved in from the primary department, completing the grading, and all with the new stabilized courses.

Following the same plan throughout the entire church school, it now gives us a completely graded organization. Of course, in the young people's department and the entire adult division, most of the classes elect their courses.

In following this plan of strict grading, one condition developed which seemed to present a problem. The plan necessitated dividing strictly into age groups. After doing this we found that some of the classes had only two or three members left in them. One or two of the teachers, whose classes had been reduced in numbers, resented the condition at first, but were soon able to see that it was the only way to guarantee the pupils a complete course of study.

Having a smaller class also presented an opportunity and an incentive for some missionary work, to build the class up again.

The plan also created a greater number of classes, which meant, of course, more teachers. Again we seemed to be confronted with a serious problem. Eleven new teachers were needed. Again the Lord blessed the effort we were making. We appealed for teachers. The result was—every vacancy filled.

Then there were the classes meeting on different evenings during the week, cooking, sewing, recreation, sports, study, dramatics, sand table, research, etc., which, under the plan adopted, came under the supervision of the church school. Some were already organized. Others had to be organized and leaders found. This also was soon accomplished.

When we reached this point we settled back to look at our organization and found we had: Meeting at the church on Sunday mornings: 2 nursery, 4 kindergarten, 6 primary, 6 junior, 6 intermediate, 4 senior, 2 young people's, 7 adult classes. At the Italian Mission: four classes, primary, junior, senior, and adult. At the Camden (N. J.) Mission, five classes; primary, junior, senior, young people's, and adult. Meeting at the church and various other places on different

The Beauty and Significance of Prayer

By V. D. Ruch

(A synopsis of a sermon preached at Oslo, Norway.)

Scripture reading: Genesis 32: 13-32.

YOU are all more or less acquainted with the story of Jacob and Esau, of how Jacob through his selfish scheming purchased the family birthright from Esau, and later through deception obtained the blessing from his almost blind father. The unfair procedure caused enmity and hatred to exist between these two brothers.

Jacob was going to meet Esau now and he feared that Esau would attack and perhaps kill him and his entire family. He prayed for deliverance from the hand of Esau. God heard his prayer and came to him that night in the form of a person and struggled with him all night. Jacob feared Esau, but God wanted him to understand that he was in a much greater danger. He had God against him. It was an accounting with God that was forced upon Jacob that night. God desired to bless Jacob. He had chosen him to be the father of Israel. But the blessings of heaven were withheld because of the sins of Jacob; sins against God, against Esau, and against their aged father Isaac. It was about this that God wanted to talk that night. While the outward wrestling match was in progress a settlement for these sins was made in the heart of Jacob.

Jacob thought that God was unwilling to bless him. Many of us think the same and we struggle with him trying to win a victory over him. Jacob used that characteristic expression: "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." The blessings of God were ready for Jacob the very moment he became worthy to receive them. And he received more than he asked for. He prayed for help in his conflict with Esau, but God gave him more than that. He gave him an experience with God which he never forgot. This experience made such a deep impression that all Israel retained it in memory. From that time on they never ate the sinew which was on the thigh of any animal, because God had touched Jacob there and caused him to limp. Jacob was humbled for life. But that humility always caused him to feel his dependence upon God, and that quality was his best protection against his enemies which he had made for himself by his deceptive, sinful and uncontrollable nature.

PRAYER is a struggle—not with God, but with ourselves. There may be things in us which prevent God from answering our prayers. The spirit of prayer will point these out to us. If we are disobedient, proud, or selfish we can't expect an answer to our prayers. Solomon has said, "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." (Proverbs 28:9.) Are your prayers an abomination to God?

"Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshiper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth,"—John 9:31.

"Behold the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear: But your iniquities have separated between you and your God and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear. For your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity; your lips have spoken lies, your tongue has muttered perverseness."—Isaiah 59: 1-3.

Prayer is the means through which the power of heaven is carried down to earth. If we wish to send electricity from the power station to some factory there has to be a connection made between those two points. The greater the amount of electric power to be sent, the stronger the connection or cable must be. The more of God's power we wish to experience in our life the stronger must be the connection and communion we have with God. Prayer accompanied by fasting will strengthen this communion for us.

The true spirit of prayer will help us to understand what we should pray for in the various difficult problems which arise. At the same time it will serve to cleanse our souls from impure causes which lie back of our prayers, and we see ourselves as we really are. We discover the selfishness, desire for personal glory and other things which are hidden in our prayer-life. We obtain grace enough to pray: "Do not allow me, by my impure thoughts and selfish purposes, to dishonor thy name and make prayer unholy."

We have an example of misused prayer in Matthew 20:21 where the mother of James and John came to Jesus and said, "Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on the right hand, and the other on the left, in thy kingdom." This mother and her two apostle-sons thought only of themselves. "The best for myself and family!" Jesus could not grant this selfish prayer.

JAMES wrote to the church later: "Ye ask, and received not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." (James 4:3.) When we in selfishness and for self-satisfaction misuse prayer we do not receive the answer we desired. A brother at the Kirtland Reunion in 1927 testified that he came to the reunion one year praying for a blessing for himself. He went home without receiving it. He brought some nonmember friends with him in 1928 and came praying that they would receive a blessing. The result was that both he and his friends were blessed.

If one is to be the speaker at a church service or take part in some other way, he prays that he will be blessed and that the meeting will be a good one. If his brother is to be the speaker he may not give the meeting a thought. When a matter of importance is to be decided we pray that our thought or opinion may prevail. We perhaps never think of praying to find out what God's will is in the matter.

If one ever catches himself in the very act of misusing prayer in this manner he will feel more humbled in his prayer-life than ever before. He will see the selfishness of his heart and discover just how much that has saturated his prayers. He will then cry out in his humility, "Father, teach me to pray!"

We cannot command God, dictate to him or even force him to fulfill his promises. Even if God has given us a promise there may be something in our life of which we may be ignorant which hinders the blessing from coming. Our prayer should always be that God will grant that which will glorify his name. A man prayed that God would heal a sick person and then added: "but if it will glorify thy name more for him to be sick, do not heal him, but give him grace to glorify thy name in his sickness." When we use prayer aright, namely: that God's will may be done and his name be glorified, then the wonderful promises which have been given in connection with prayer will be experienced by us.

WE are privileged to pray to God about everything. (Philippians 4:6.) Yes, even for things pertaining to ourselves—the many small things in our daily lives. If you have lost your key and need it at once, ask God to help you find it. If your child is out playing and you wish him to come in but can't go after him, ask God to send him in. But do not forget that that for which you pray for yourself must be to glorify the name of God. Our prayer should be that if receiving that which I have prayed for will not glorify thy name, then let me remain in this dilemma, but help me to glorify thy name in it.

Prayer admits God into our need and if we will let him have his way with us and not try to force our will through, we will soon have peace and quiet in our heart. Nothing makes us more courageous in our prayers than when we can conscientiously say to God, "Thou knoweth that I am not now praying for my own profit, my own benefit, not that my will shall be done, but that thy name may be glorified in this matter."

Much could be said about unanswered prayers. Many reasons could be given, but I will mention just one tonight. God knows what is best for us and often withholds what we pray for because it would be harmful to us to receive it. A little boy asked his parents for a rifle and they gave him one. Sometime later, through accident, he shot himself. It would have been much better if those parents had denied their son his request. Our heavenly Father, who knows all things, often denies us things which we in our ignorance pray for.

We have a strong tendency to believe that our wisdom is great, that we know how everything should be arranged and what is for our best good. When God has another viewpoint in the matter we suspicion that he is not interested in us.

PAUL did not receive all he prayed for. He had a weakness which he called a thorn in the flesh. He prayed three times that it might be removed, but it was not. In that season of sincere prayer he learned the great secret of cooperation with God. He expressed his new thought in these words: "For when I am weak, then am I strong." (2 Corinthians 12:7-10.)

Even Jesus prayed a prayer which was denied him: "O my Father, let this cup pass from me." In this one moment, under the strong attack of Satan, Jesus seemed to lose his otherwise clear vision of his mission. But he came from this experience victorious. The prayer in his prayer was this, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt." We have a right to pray for what we wish but the will of God must always be taken into consideration. We should unreservedly place ourselves in his hands allowing him to do with us as he pleases.

Prayer may take different forms. It may be audible or silent; a sigh or just the upward glance of the eye. It may last a few seconds or many hours. It may be a prayer of asking, of thanking, or of praising. It may be a conversation with God or a prayer without words.

PRAYER admits God into our life and we can converse with him and he will guide us into all truth but we must be willing to change our opinions when they are in conflict with his. We may have such an intimate communion with God in prayer that we can hear him speaking to us. We should be confidential with God about the different things we experience during the day. We may tell him when we are sad, glad, worried, doubtful or anxious. He expects this of us because he loves us. He is willing to share everything with us, our sorrow as well as joy.

Prayer is the breath of the soul. Our bodies are constantly renewed by the air we breath. We eat three or four times a day, but we breath all day long, yes, at night, too. We cannot breath a few minutes in the morning and sustain physical life until noon. Neither can we pray in the morning and sustain spiritual (Continued on page 502.)

The Mountain of the Lord's House

The question of which is the correct interpretation of prophecy is not to be settled by some interpretation of prophecy; for that is simply to say that such and such is the correct interpretation because so and so has interpreted it that way. And that is sheer nonsense. I am loth to quote Bible Commentaries and lexicographers to establish the meaning of prophetic symbols and other figures of speech. Commentators and lexicographers, for the most part, belong to the old school of theology. The essential Zion-redeeming ideas of the Restoration Movement were foreign to their ways of thinking. And there is no reason to expect the prophetic interpretations of the old school to be the interpretations of the new.

Meanings of prophetic symbols are not determined by dictionary definitions. They are determined by their settings in prophetic situations. There may be no dictionary definitions at all corresponding to the ideas which the prophets sought to express with symbols. And the meaning of figures of speech is one of the principal questions to be answered in judging which is the correct interpretation of prophecy.

The light of prophecy has grown brighter and brighter with the approach of the perfect day. The Restoration Movement has given new meaning to prophecy—meaning which it did not convey to our minds before. How much more meaning prophecy is to come to have, no one is able to say.

Why then, should we say that new questions about prophecy are to be settled by old opinions? Why should opinions which are in dispute be taken as the final word in settling those disputes?

Let an opinion about prophecy be as good as it may, let it be absolutely correct; it is, nevertheless, bad business for men always to be accepting ideas second-hand, upon the authority of others, with no thinking of their own. It traditionalizes us. It ape-ifies us. Each man must be able to give his own reason for his own hope; otherwise he has no reason.

Cannot we do some thinking on our own account without disdaining others thinking? Without denying the values handed down to us in the thinking of the past? and without turning a deaf ear to the discourse of the present?

To interpret prophecy, somehow we must get the feel and the viewpoint of prophecy. And that is a possession which comes to be ours from contemplating prophecy as a whole in the spirit of truth-seeking—not in the spirit of theory-proving.

"THE MOUNTAIN," "JUDAH AND JERUSALEM"

The meanings of these terms are determined by their settings in prophecy. This prophecy concerns itself with a day when warfare between nations shall come to an end: ". . . neither shall they learn warfare any more." That it is a day future and remote is implied in the clause: "it shall come to pass in the last days. . . ."

Of course, "in the last days" is an ambiguous phrase; it may be relative to any set of circumstances. But if the reference to the cessation of warfare has any meaning at all, it is that "in the last days" refers to a time when the causes of warfare shall have been eradicated, and nations shall have learned to live in peace. And without question that is a time future to our day. In that case is it unreasonable to infer that "Judah" may be a type of other peoples of God? in other times? And may not Jerusalem typify other places of abode of God's peoples? Note how the prophet shifts from the use of the symbol "Judah and Jerusalem" to the emblem "Zion": the abode of God. And what is the meaning of that shift?

"Mountain" is a term used with a wide range of connotations. And, I repeat, for it is a truth that must not be lost sight of if prophecy is to be interpreted correctly, the meaning of "The mountain" must be judged from its setting in the prophecy. See now if this is not the setting:

(a) "He will teach us his ways." A lesson in right social behavior is to be taught.

(b) "We will walk in his paths." The example is to win the respect of peoples.

(c) They shall learn warfare no more. Swords shall be beaten into plowshares. The wastes of warfare shall be converted into the savings of industry.

Now, if we may not infer the meaning of "The mountain of the Lord's house" from the whole body of stipulations in this prophecy, then there is no use at all to talk about the interpretation of prophecy. It would mean that prophecy is an incoherent jumble of words.

"And all nations shall flow unto it." Does this mean that the geographical positions of nations shall shift with some sort of liquid movement? Or is this the same idea expressed in the words: "The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our God and of his Christ?"

Is it not but a restatement in another form of the idea: "He will teach us his ways; and we will walk in his paths?" Is not this the peoples of God saving the world by the force of their example of godly government?

MUTUALLY EXPLANATORY DETAILS

List now the ideas of relations in this prophecy which, in any reasonable interpretation, must be mutually explanatory:

- (1) He will teach us his ways.
- (2) We will walk in his paths.
- (3) Out of Zion shall go forth the law.
- (4) He shall judge among the nations.
- (5) Warfare shall cease.
- (6) Industry shall be promoted.
- (7) It shall come to pass in the last days.

How are these ideas related each to the others? And when the total meaning of this whole body of relations is unfolded, shall we not have the meaning of "The mountain of the Lord's house?" and of "Judah and Jerusalem?" and of "Zion?"

CHRISTIANITY IS PRAGMATIC

Christianity has said over and over again that the test of its truth is its practical utility. "Seek ye first the kingdom and to establish its righteousness," and economic ills will pass away automatically (Matthew 6:33), means that Christianity makes the test of its authority its outcome in practical life situations.

"Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord. . . ." Malachi 3: 8-12, means that the test of the code is its practical utility. "To what purpose" is pragmatism. That is the force of Isaiah 58: 6-11; and of Doctrine and Covenants 94:5, et al. Christianity is a way of life; and being a way of life, the test of its truth is how it works out in life situations.

LIMITATIONS OF LAW

Now in which field must Christian truth lie in order to compose the affairs of nations? Is it not contrary to the nature of things that the establishment of "The mountain of the Lord's house" should eradicate the causes of strife unless that "mountain" has to do with setting right the wrongs which cause strife? And are not the things which cause strife principally economic?

Ecclesiastical government, "The Church," in the common acceptance of that term, has to do with "religious" activities. Its concerns are doctrines, ethics, sacraments, ordinances, functions of priests, duties of members, and the like. Now then, does the management of a sacrament service, for example, have anything to do with correcting inequitable distribution? or with equality of economic opportunity? or with economic planning and all such like?

Reasoning on the principle of the limitations of law, we must conclude that "all these things shall be added unto you," "Zion shall prosper," "there was no poor among them," and all such like, mean that the business of "The Lord's House" does take us into the field of economic truth. And the establishment of "the mountain" of the Lord's house, which fulfills the conditions of economic justice, order and peace, therefore, must be taken to imply an economic adventure on the part of the religious group.

THE TESTIMONY OF THE LATTER DAY PROPHETS

And this is the testimony of the latter-day prophets: that the goal of the ecclesia is an economic commonwealth—we call it Zion. Our prophets have said to us that economic problems must be solved by the establishment of right economic relations; and that means simply godly government in economic life. And that is the message of Isaiah 2: 1-4. The peoples of the church are to establish an economic commonwealth which is grounded in righteousness and truth—economic righteousness and economic truth. And that truth shall yield peace.

A MARVELOUS WORK

This is the thing which we are told cannot be done. Industrial crises occur in the regular order of things. Men are too human to live together in zionic relations. It sounds good, but it is impracticable. All such things are dinned in our ears from the beginning of life to the end. Look at the political and industrial blundering and economic distress of nations. "They are drunk." "They stagger." The prevision of this situation was the inspiration for Isaiah's designation of the mountain: "A Marvelous work and a wonder."

BRING THE LIGHT

"All things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets." "A light that shineth in a dark place." Isaiah 29 is a prophecy upon which we need to bring to play the light rays which come from the whole mass of prophetic testimony. It is difficult prophecy to analyze because it is a medley of ideas. But, however confusing the message in the form in which it has been handed down to us, the particulars are items in one prophetic situation. And unless we judge some particulars to have crept in in error, we must conceive ourselves to be under the necessity of relating each part to the others and to the whole. We must put them together in such manner as to form a consistent whole.

When we classify the particulars of Isaiah 29, and relate them, we shall find the same story as that told in Isaiah 2: "The Lord's house" is to "establish a mountain." The peoples of God are to set up "a standard" of economic behavior. It is to be Marvelous; Wonderful; so much so that "all nations shall flow unto it."

COMPARISONS

In contemplating Isaiah 29, do not overlook the fact that comparisons can be made only between things having the same general nature. We don't compare apples with spraying machines, however much sprayers must be used in producing good apples. We compare apples with apples; or, from the standpoint of food values, or other properties which they have in common, we may compare apples with peaches or plums. But we do not compare apples with wagons.

Look now at Isaiah's prophecy. "Their wise men" have staggered. They have acted as if they were drunken. Their turning of things upside down is esteemed as the potter's clay. They have failed. Therefore—for this reason—"I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a Marvelous Work and a Wonder." "For"—which means that the following sentences give us the reason or the cause for the preceding one—"the wisdom of their wise men shall perish," and "the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."

Now then, in the face of this reason for doing this marvelous work, of what nature must we judge that marvelous work to be?

Isaiah 29 sounds like Isaiah 62: 10-12, which describes the esteem in which the builders of The Highway shall be held by peoples in the latter days. "And they shall call them, The Holy People, The Redeemed of the Lord: and thou shalt be called, sought out, a city not forsaken." What is the "sought out" of their wise men whose wisdom has utterly failed them? This "mountain of the Lord's house"—it shall be "A Marvelous Work and a Wonder" in the eyes of those whose appreciation of the problem enables them to put upon it a proper evaluation.

AS A DREAM

The fight against the righteousness of the kingdom is to prove futile. Not all the Hitlers and Mussolinis, The Nazis, and the Fascists, can defeat the purposes of God. One time righteousness and truth shall sweep the earth as with a flood; the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ.

Look at the isms of this age: Communism, Socialism, Syndicalism, Anarchism, Bolshevism, Industrial Unionism, Technocracy—all of which have for their goal the substitution of a new regime for the present economic order. Whatever their follies, these isms are a prophecy of a new mode of governing economic life. And one day a religiously motivated group will "gather out the stones" that are usable for the purpose and "make straight in the desert a highway for our God." "The mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountain."

Obey the Spirit of the Laws

"Obey the spirit of the traffic laws as well as the letter—and be courteous," said a certain official regarding a campaign to make the streets of San Francisco safe. "Even if you have the right of way, pretend you haven't, stop and wave the other fellow on—and watch him smile."

If all motorists would do this, accidents would be well nigh impossible. The fraction of a minute spent in consideration of others would pay big dividends in traffic safety. It would create a feeling of friendliness in both you and the other fellow.

How much better than blindly dashing through traffic, completely ignoring the rights of others. Naturally that is unsafe for all concerned; and certainly the feeling left in the wake of such an individual would have no relationship to brotherly love.

Perhaps Latter Day Saints could profit by that advice. "Obey the spirit of the law as well as the letter"—and be more considerate of others.

They would enjoy greater harmony and unity as a result. Not only "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," but do it with such a feeling of brotherly love and kindness that they cannot help reciprocating.

It is contagious. One person in a group who has such motives can, like yeast, leaven the whole lump.—Editorial, San Francisco Zion Builder.

What Friendship Is

By Molly Richmond

A hand-clasp that's a little stronger,
A smile that lasts a little longer,
That's what friendship is.
A word that makes the sun brighter,
A deed that makes the load lighter;
A love that draws heart-strings tighter
That's what friendship is.

The way of keeping hearts from aching,
More of giving, and less of taking,
That's what friendship is.
More of shielding, less of blaming,
More of praising, less of shaming;
Just a thought of others reigning,
That's what friendship is.

Just a loyalty that is true,
Just a comfort when days are blue,
That's what friendship is.
Just a faith above all things,
To make hearts with laughter ring—
Just the love taught by our King,
That's what friendship is.

Nancy Takes Second Choice

"You, Larry?" a jubilant, girlish voice demanded over the telephone.

"Home already, Nancy darling?" flashed back the question. "Why I didn't expect you for hours yet!"

"Just got in," Nancy replied; "and naturally I want to see you pronto. How soon can I come over—Carmen says you're laid up with a twisted ankle."

"Come over right away! The sooner the better! I'm crazy to see you!" joyfully Larry placed the receiver in its hook without saying good-by, and turned to look at her reflection in the hall mirror. Nancy home from Lamoni already—and it wasn't ten o'clock yet! She had expected her at noon at the earliest. The dear girl. And she was coming right over!

Breathlessly, Larry hurried back to the living room as fast as her lame ankle would permit, and began to pick up papers and magazines. It would be so good to see her, and they would have a long chat. Maybe Nancy could be prevailed upon to stay to lunch. Already Larry was picturing to herself the pleasant times she and Nancy were to have this summer. Other friends were nice, but none was gayer than light-hearted Nancy.

At the other end of the telephone wire Nancy spoke to a fair-haired young man: "She was surprised I was here so soon. Wanted to know if I flew. I told her yes, that I came in my private airplane. You can take me over right away, can't you dear?"

"Suttinly, anywhere you want to go, darlin'."

"Well, then, let's get going, but you mustn't go in with me. Say you drive around for half an hour and give me a chance to break the news gently. Is that agreeable?"

"Okey by me," gravely.

"You see, Teddy, this is going to be a shock to the girl friend. And you don't have a ringside seat for this show in spite of all that you are to me." Her eyes glowed with a softer light for a moment as she looked at him.

"Nancy, dear, this is heavenly," cried Larry flinging open the Hampton door. I didn't expect you until noon at the earliest. How did you make it so soon?"

"Goodness, I'm tickled to death to have such an open-armed greeting!" gasped Nancy. "Same old place," as she glanced about the room, "and same old girl, isn't it?" teasingly. "You're just as pretty as ever, Larry. I wonder that Greg doesn't eat you!"

"Foolish! But come—let's talk about you. What time did you leave Lamoni? How did the commencement exercises go? Tell me what they did—oh, I haven't heard any news from you in ages. Tell me everything."

"Pretty big order," laughed the other. "Well, we left Lamoni at four this morning and took plenty of time coming, so don't worry about that. You see I'm all whole. The commencement was one big thrill after another. I wouldn't have missed it for a lot." Nancy was removing her hat and jacket. She paused before the mirror to pat her hair into place while Larry regarded her indulgently.

"We were in a rush to get home," Nancy went on feigning a nonchalance she did not feel; "because we aren't staying in town long. But we had to see the rest of the family—Mother and Dad and Ellen came up for yesterday's services—before we went on South."

"What are you talking about?" gasped Larry. "You aren't going to be here long? But, darling, where are you going—to school?" Consternation crept into Larry's voice. "Why—oh, Nancy, I was counting on seeing you so much this summer—and now you have to go to school!"

"Who said anything about going to school?" demanded Nancy, "I'm not going to school. I'm going South to see Teddy's folks, my in-laws." She paused to brush an imaginary bit of dust from her skirt.

"Your what? dizzily cried Larry.

"In-laws," demurely.

"Nancy Bart!—"

"There's some more to it now, Larry. Put on Shively."

"Nancy! What have you done?" Larry's question was little short of a dismayed shriek.

"Don't get so excited, my dear," reproved the visitor; "can't I get married if I want to without your staging hysterics? Come over here and sit down while I give you all the gore."

"I shan't sit down until you tell me what's happened," excitedly declared Larry. "What are those rings on your finger?" she pointed at her friend's left hand.

"According to generally accepted custom and convention they are an engagement ring and a wedding ring," replied Nancy looking down at her hand.

Limply Larry tumbled into a chair, pounded a pillow in place at her side, and groaned "Go on." She had been standing on that ankle quite a time and it was still very weak. But she wasn't thinking of a lame ankle; she was suffering from something that felt like a consuming fever about her heart.

"It's this way, Larry—I couldn't write it all to you because things happened so fast I hadn't the time. And I knew you'd be so doggoned excited if I told you only part of it." The story-teller prowled restlessly about the room as she spoke. She seemed unable to relax long enough to talk quietly. "I broke my engagement with Rowe weeks ago, just decided he didn't care as much about me as I did for him. I wasn't going to be an old sack of potatoes for him to take about when he wanted to and then dump overboard at other seasons. I had heard a number of things about him, and they weren't all gossip either. Some were facts I got through the school authorities—I can't tell you all the details about that—but worst of all, I heard how he was carrying on with that show-girl" her voice took on a metallic ring. "At first I thought I'd keep the ring and return it to him when I came home; then I decided that I'd best send it to him with a note telling him how I felt. That would save me seeing him here in Independence. I did and believe me, I made that note brief!" She paused to examine Mrs. Hampton's ferns in the window.

"Go on," Larry gave the crisp command.

"After I was through with him—well, you know I've been going with a southern boy all winter. His name is Ted Shively and he's from Mississippi. Well, that's about all there is to tell. We were engaged, and yesterday was the day of days for us. Really, Larry, there wasn't much reason for my not marrying him."

"Except that you don't love him," tersely.

"Oh, but I do in a way. He's a keen pal and playfellow. Of course he knows I don't love him in a wifely way, but who knows!—maybe some day I shall. Anyway, Teddy's willing to risk it—"

"You ought to be ashamed," hotly broke in Larry. "Nancy, you're a counterfeit!"

"Don't be adolescent, my darling," glibly. "Don't you know that in this day and age you seldom marry one you love; that's storybook stuff! What is love anyway—nothing but an emotional channel through which to satisfy the biological urge."

"If that's all college has taught you, then you've wasted your money, Nancy."

"Your opinion, my dear," politely; "everyone is entitled to his own opinion you know. But perhaps I'm boring you?"

"Go on with the story."

"Well, since you seem to be interested," she made an elaborate gesture; "here are the circumstances in a nutshell. I wanted a school for next year, and schools are not easy things to get, especially when you have had no teaching experience. But it so happens that Teddy's father is one of the trustees of a little school near their home in Mississippi. I bargained with the dear old boy that if his father would get me that school, I would marry him—Teddy I mean. That's all there was to it. The contract arrived three weeks ago, and I signed it. I'm going to teach there next winter."

A swift intake of the listener's breath was the only answer this part of the story evoked. But Larry's hands were trembling and her throat was dry.

"The job was neatly and skillfully done," Nancy's voice was amused; "Mr. Shively must be an efficient fellow. I think I'm going to like him. Of course he didn't know anything about his son's contract with me. He knew we were engaged."

"Which is more important, Nancy, tell me honestly," Larry's voice was low, tense, "your contract for the school or your contract of marriage?"

The other grinned: "Wait till you see Ted and answer that yourself. And for heaven sake, Larry, don't act as if doom had cracked all over you! This isn't my funeral—it's my wedding—I mean the day after my wedding. I'm in for congratulations." Airily she tripped to the piano and began to play a lively popular song.

Larry was so stunned that she could only sit and think over and over: "Nancy is married! Nancy is married! Nancy is married! And this way—oh, how could she!"

"I don't want you to feel hurt, Larry," the other ceased playing abruptly, "because I didn't tell you. My folks didn't know either. They didn't get to the hill until four yesterday—Dad couldn't get away any sooner. Well, Ted and I were married at three, and only Eleanor and her boy friend witnessed the ceremony. But the folks have taken it sportingly. They always expect the unexpected from me! Besides they couldn't storm and rave when Ted, dear old thing, was standing right there listening. So they gave us their parental blessing."

Larry shifted her position. That ankle was paining her again.

"Really, old dear, you'll like Ted, I know," Nancy babbled on. "He's slow and very southern and nice to look at. Hasn't any money, but none of us have these days. And he has a lot of modern ideas." The speaker chose this moment to plump herself on the arm of Larry's chair and playfully pat her head. Silently Larry examined the modest wedding ring and the diamond, a rather expensive appearing stone for a college student to give his lady love. "Come on, do snap out of it," pleaded the dark-eyed bride, "and give me a kiss for good luck."

"I'd give you a dozen for good luck, Nancy," Larry replied with a convulsive hug, "but I'm afraid you haven't given Lady Luck a chance!"

Then to take Larry's mind away from the thought of her marriage, Nancy began to describe the commencement exercises. It was vividly done; in fact almost anything Nancy undertook was vividly done. Before she was half through Ted Shively parked his Ford coupe at the curb and came in.

Sitting on the other side of the room from him, Larry took surreptitious notes of his appearance, his mannerisms. There was something pleasant and really serious about his face. The look he gave his lively young wife was one of appreciation and devotion. Perhaps, after all, harum-scarum Nancy had picked a happier fate for herself as the wife of Ted Shively than she would have shared as the wife of Rowe McCarey.

Unconsciously Larry was allowing herself to be won over to Ted Shively. Either he must be very humble or very brave to take a girl like Nancy on the rebound from a previous love affair. Did he know he was second choice? Would he always be as devoted to a wife who regarded him only as a good playfellow? Or would Nancy learn to love and respect him? Larry hoped they would continue as happy as they were at this moment. They planned to set out on the road for Mississippi that afternoon.

"I'm crazy to go South," gurgled the bride; "I've never been any farther south than Joplin, and it must be so romantic down there!"

Ted chuckled and drawled: "Pretty everyday place, darlin', Mississippi. Nevah was anythin' excitin' down theah that I know of except the comin' in of the railroad train."

Nancy declined the invitation to lunch: "Just don't have time, Larry, you understand—because it's as essential for Ted to get acquainted with my family as it is for me to know his. He has to make it snappy this time—and that's one thing he can't do, make things snappy. It takes him half an hour to wish you a pleasant good morning—my dear, he's positively exhaustive!" The look which accompanied this speech was mischievous. "Besides mealtime is the most advantageous time for one to get acquainted with my tribe—it's the only time they're all together."

When they had whisked themselves away in their little car, Larry dropped into Doc's chair: "Oh, Nancy," she groaned aloud, "you funny, impetuous, imperious girl, I do hope you'll be happy! But—"

Shining Armor

Why doesn't somebody discover the glory of doing your job and the romance of loving your wife?

Fred is a New York linen salesman. He has never earned more than $40 a week in his life, and on this salary he and Clara have bought and own their home in New Jersey, and have sent two boys through college. When I met him one day on Fifth Avenue he was shabbily dressed in a shiny old suit of blue serge—and you know how blue serge can shine, and where. I asked him why he couldn't treat himself a little better, now that the house was paid for and the boys were doing well.

"I'm carrying a lot of life insurance," Fred answered. "I've got to be awfully sure that Clara's all right when I'm gone."

He turned away rather shamefacedly. A stray sunbeam fell across his shoulders, and suddenly, I saw, not shiny serge, but shining armor. Not Fifth Avenue, but Camelot, and a plumed knight with a sword at his side, and his lady's colors worn across his coat of mail. . . .

The real romance and adventure are in every little flat and cottage, and in every office and on every farm in America. . . .

Heroism? Take all the gunmen out of the newspapers, and still you'll read of 20 heroes a day, and there'll be 20,000 who never got into the newspapers—everyday men and women. And yet one-third of the novels published, one-half of the plays produced and nearly all the motion pictures seem devoted to the glorification of crime and the gratification of sex.

Don't tell me there isn't material for fiction and drama in my kind of heroes. Most of the world's best literature deals with them and their stories. . . .

I hold no brief for a literature made up of prigs and ingenues, but there seems no better reason for a literature of gunmen and camps. And even that isn't the major danger. The major danger is the inoculation of the idea that only the spectacular can be worth doing, and that only the satin and the six-cylindered can be worth striving for, that heroism is a triumph of brawn or marksmanship, "sophistication" a flouting of all the sober decencies, and success merely materialistic acquirement. . . .

Sentiment and nobility and love are immortal. That may be hokum, but it's true. Tenderness and loyalty, and patience, and self-sacrifice, and devotion to duty—these are life's natural aspirations. The Freds are all round us. Thousands of 'em go to work every morning; to them the whistle of the 8:20 train isn't really a whistle. It's a trumpet, calling them to battle. . . .

It's the wood haulers and the rail splitters who matter, and we shall be no worse off for a return to the knowledge that they are the wearers of shining armor—"the little men fighting behind, who win wars."

A literature that makes their example glorious is the literature that makes men and women fine, and nations great.—Channing Pollock, in Ladies' Home Journal.

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt . . . . .

Arranged from his diaries by his daughter, Mrs. Ruby C. Faunce

A Mission to the South Sea Islands

On my return to Lamoni, fully occupied by auditing books, quorum meetings, etc., till conference convened on April 6th. During this conference I was appointed on a mission to the South Sea Islands. Returned to St. Joseph about the 20th and found all seemingly glad to see me, and many expressed their sorrow that I was to leave, especially among the young people. I loved the dear Saints of St. Joseph, both old and young, and it is not merely a niche they will occupy, but a room in my heart, and my soul was touched when at the last meeting of the Young People's Improvement Society they handed me a beautifully written book, "Resolution of Respect from the Young People's Mutual Improvement Society to Bro. Mark H. Forscutt—as follows:

"Whereas, our beloved brother, Mark H. Forscutt, as missionary in the city of St. Joseph, has labored faithfully and diligently for the past four years to establish and build up the work of the Lord, and whereas, by the appointment of General Conference, he is about to make his departure for a foreign mission to regulate, set in order, and establish the affairs of the church among the South Sea Islands, and whereas, our brother was the founder and first president of the Young People's Mutual Improvement Society, and by his wisdom, prudence and consideration has endeared himself to our hearts, and by his instructions guided our steps in the onward way, and whereas, this organization through the blessing of heaven and the wise counsel of our brother has been and promises to be a powerful means, in the development of the young spiritually and intellectually, here and elsewhere, therefore be it Resolved—that we hereby express our highest estimation of the ability and earnest devoted service of our brother, and our deepest regrets that we should be called to part with him, while bowing in submission to the call which takes him from us.

"Resolved: that we will unitedly endeavor to so act that the good work begun among us may never be impaired, and that the seeds of truth planted may spring forth bearing fruit, some thirty, some sixty and some an hundredfold, to the glory of God and the satisfaction and joy of our brothers. Out of our sad, tearful, but we trust unselfish hearts, we say, 'Go, dear brother, on thy blest mission; may the Holy Spirit comfort thee; may thine angel attend thee; and may thou return safely to thine adopted land bringing with thee the blessings of the Islanders, as thou hast the united, heartfelt prayer of the young people of St. Joseph."

May God bless them, now and always.

Held meetings there and around about till some time in May when I left for my home in Nebraska City to get ready for my departure to the Islands. Found wife and daughters very busy in the store, as it was their busy season. They left the house at 7 and it was from 10 p. m. to 2 a. m. often, when they finished their work, so saw but little of them except on Sundays. We managed to get my things in shape, my good, dear wife adding many things for my comfort and seeing that my clothing was in good condition. Then on the 30th of May went to Independence, where with the other missionaries we left on June 1st, bidding farewell to a group of loving, warm-hearted Saints. Among them were Bishop E. L. Kelley, Apostle Joseph Luff, and others in life's meridian, whom I had led by the hand when tiny tots, and numerous others. The tear of genuine Saintry affection glistened as the last farewells were spoken, and the thought came—"It is pleasant to reflect that those who have known us longest and most intimately love us best." This farewell was almost as hard as leaving my loved ones at home, but I leave all with my Lord and Master. The dear Saints had provided liberally for the body, and soon we ate our supper and caught naps as we could.

Arrived at Denver about 6 p. m. and were met at depot by our young appointees to Australia, Bro. Kaler, who escorted us to the pretty home of Bro. Joseph S—, where we were made warmly welcome. Bro. Newton and I stayed there while Bro. Gilbert went elsewhere. We stayed at Denver over Sunday and till Thursday, when we took cars for Ogden. Were met there by my wife's brother, Rev. Samuel Unsworth, who took us to the Rectory of the Good Shepherd, where at his hospitable board we dined. I remained with him, while the brothers, although invited to remain, thought they would hunt up some of the Saints. Dinner over, however, my old friend Elder Eli T. Dobson drove up with a spirited team and conveyance and took us all for a pleasant ride around Ogden. On Saturday we went to Salt Lake, which I was glad to look over. I found the presiding Elder's place of business, when soon my companions arrived, and then, bringing joy and gladness to my heart, dear Bro. R. J. Anthony and his son-in-law. We took a trip to Salt Air, which we greatly enjoyed, and we all admired the magnificent new building and the fine beach. Sunday Bro. Anthony preached in the morning and I at evening. Among the congregation I saw some whom I knew thirty years ago, one of them being Samuel H. Smith, Joseph's cousin. The congregation gave very flattering attention. In the afternoon we attended the Tabernacle and heard Mr. Roberts, whom Bro. Anthony thinks their most eloquent man. The effort was a good one. The music was beautiful and wafted one's thoughts on high.

On Monday returned to Ogden and at evening started for San Francisco. The ride through Nevada brought back the time I spent in the Army there. After two night's travel we arrived in San Francisco, the land of fruit and beauty (after Nevada). Leaving my two companions to guard the baggage I started on a tour of exploration, and succeeded in finding the store of Bro. Parkins, to learn he had gone to the wharf to find us. I returned, but the brethren had been approached by no one except cabmen. I escorted them to the store, where we met the branch president, who appointed us to our homes in which to tarry till we leave for the Islands. My place was in the cheerful home of Bro. and Sr. Anthony, theirs at the hotel kept by Sister Livingston. We were all made to feel at home.

We remained in San Francisco and its suburbs until July 1st, when we embarked on board the Tropic Bird, Captain Burns, commander, bound for Tahiti, which we reached on the 23rd, although the harbor pilot did not come on board until the 24th when we steered into the beautiful Bay of Papeete. Long before we reached it, however, we saw our predecessor and his wife, Bro. and Sr. Devore, with a number of native Saints, awaiting us, to give us the hearty inspiring welcome which true Saints excel all others in giving. The welcome here was almost an exact response to the good-byes given us at the pier, by the dear Saints of San Francisco and Oakland. Many of them became very dear to me in a short space of time. We have found loving ones wherever we have been sent. May the Lord bless them. The Lord had been with us on our journey, and manifestly, as the Tropic Bird made the quickest passage she had ever made. Although we were delayed from two to three days by calm and seven hours in repairing the sails, owing to heavy winds. On the third day of the calm pained by the oaths I heard, I retired to my room, shut the door and bowed in prayer, and I prayed the God of Elijah to have mercy upon us and cause the wind to rise and waft us on our journey. I especially asked him, as evidence to me, to have it start within twenty minutes. In less than twenty minutes, we were making twelve knots an hour. I gave God the praise and went out into the cabin to find gladness all around. Later Bro. Newton told me he also made a petition. Our passage was a pleasant one, Bro. Newton had one short spell, but neither Bro. Gilbert nor I were sick an hour. The Captain refused to have religious services on board.

It was a beautiful sight as we landed at Papeete on July 24th. The beautiful trees and foliage, flowers and fruits, the natives dressed in white or light hues with their long black hair, sitting or stretched out on the earth, watching their little ones, and occasionally casting a glance on us as if to see what manner of men we were. We landed and met Bro. and Sr. Devore, who in time introduced us to the natives. Following this there was a babel of voices, which we learned was their passing their opinions on us. It was probably well for our peace of mind that we did not know what they said. On Aug. 6th, I called a mission council, Bro. Hankins being interpreter. Bro. and Sr. Devore agreed to remain, their health being better, and he agreed to take a mission. Many of the natives are unable to help with money and we find it hard to live on what we get. When we first arrived the natives gave us their Oraha, or thanks offering, $24, which, divided among the three missionaries was $8 each, and we have to buy what we eat, except for an occasional fish and some fruit. We bought some rice, two or three cooking utensils, some window curtains and some lumber to fix our room. We do our own cooking as a native would neither eat with us, nor have us eat with them. They will wash for you if you furnish soap. This is the 20th of September, and we have had only the $8. A broom costs 80c, calico for curtains 18c a yard, rice 22c, bread 10c, butter 70c sugar 20c, potatoes $2.50 a bushel. Can get oranges at 20c for one half bushel, and nice water cress. I bought some rice, oranges and water cress, and that with bread, salt and occasionally a fish, I get along. Bro. Gilbert did the cooking and not till he left were we conscious of how much more he did than his share. He is a fine young man. Our room or house has three makeshift beds, three chairs and one rocker. The natives have their beds on the floor. Some have one chair for those who write. Whether sitting, sleeping, eating, working or playing it is all done on the floor. Many of them, both men and women dive for pearls and oyster shells. The women do not take their husbands' names, and all are addressed by their given names, even the missionaries. They do not help the feeble, but allow them to stumble along, and laugh heartily if you desire them to do so.

The first conference or Mission Council, under my administration was held at the church at Fareute, Papeete, Tahiti on Aug. 5, 1893. Council was called to order by M. H. Forscutt at 10:30 a. m. A secretary was appointed for each language, Bro. Gilbert in English and Bro. Pouiti in Tahitian. Bro. Hankins asked the guidance and presence of the Spirit in Tahitian and Bro. Newton in English. Bro. Devore was chosen my counselor, Bro. Hankins as interpreter, and Bro. Meluare Bishop's agent, if the conference so willed, but he desired all to feel free to speak fully and freely on the question. The following is the list of appointments: To Manihi, Elder Wm. Newton; to Niau, Elder Devore, J. W. Gilbert; to Tubuai, Elder John Hawkins; to Ravaniu, Elder Tapuni; to Aictutuke, Elders Parau and Koehauri; to Tahiti, M. H. Forscutt. Use the missionary boat when it arrives and take charge thereof, Elder Metuaore, he to expound the law of tithing and go as captain of the boat, Elder Williams as mate. Elder J. Coffin visit on the boat and set in order the several records of the churches and instruct the secretaries in their duties and go with the boat when it reaches here—Elder Hotu. On Monday, Aug. 14th, Elder Wm. Hankins sailed for Tubuai and Elder Tapuui on same vessel for Ravanai. On entering upon the charge of the South Sea Islands Mission, Elder Pohemiti, secretary, reported that the mission embraced twenty-one islands on which members of the church are found. There are thirty organized branches; two divisions, Tahitian and Takarawa, each having a president. Two conferences are held a year in each district and all at the same time. The district conferences are held Jan. 6th or July 6th, the division conferences Oct. 6th, and the Mission conference on April 6th of each year. There is no limit to their duration because no specified time of closing. One of the difficulties of baptism in this mission is the custom of cohabitation without marriage. They seem to see no wrong if they are true to one another and can hardly understand the attitude of the church. The appointments were all ratified and all expressed their willingness to fulfill their duties to their best ability. I spoke in the name of the Lord and gave them a blessing contingent on their faithfulness. All felt the presence of God's Spirit and the meeting closed with a benediction by Bro. Devore. The natives call me "Marketo" pronounced by them "Mar-a-toe."

A one-roomed house was furnished us. This has two recesses in it for beds. We do our own cooking and housework. The second evening some thirty or forty came to pay a visit of welcome. An interpreter was with them. They seated themselves on the floor, the first close to the wall, then another line, with as many as possible in the center. The doors and windows were filled. Then came songs of praise and songs of welcome and through their interpreter words of cheer and glad welcome to the missionaries who had come to labor with them, so that my heart was surcharged and my eyes overflowed so I could scarcely answer their welcome. Bananas, oranges and cocoanuts were brought with other things for us to live upon. We have never tasted such luscious fruit. Fruit is very cheap and we use it and bread mostly for our living. We preach through the interpreter and can see by their expressions when we please them. There are many beautiful islands and sights to be seen here. Many things we do not approve but the people are childlike, trusting and love their leaders.

Sept. 6th—It has been impossible yet for me to get a grammar or dictionary of the language, so have borrowed Bro. Newton's occasionally when not too busy. Therefore have not made as much progress as I would desire, altho I am beginning to understand many words that sounded a jumble before. This place is rightly named the "Gem of the Pacific" and is certainly beautiful scenery. On Sundays we have preaching at 7 a. m. at 10 a. m. and at 7 p. m. Sunday school at 11:30 and fellowship meeting at 3 p. m. Five services. Three on week nights, and I teach school two nights. Ten services a week. A great handicap in this mission is the trouble to secure passage on some boats, and on others no accommodations whatever, not even covering to get out of a storm. By a letter from Bro. L. D. Devore dated Papeete, June 27th, 1891, in Saints' Herald of Sept. 5th, 1891, it is stated—"I am satisfied the mission will never prove a success until the church furnishes us a boat for the use of the missionaries. There is no certainty when one will arrive taking passage on these trading vessels, which is perplexing to say the least." Bishop E. L. Kelley told us when parting from us, Wm. H. Newton, J. W. Gilbert and I that means were sufficient for the purchase or building of a vessel and we might expect it at Papeete almost as soon as we. Elder Newton has waited here eight weeks for the chance to go to Manilui. It is badly needed.

The Paths of the Stars

Down through the spheres there came the name of One

Who is the Law of Beauty and Light;
He came, and as He came the waiting
Night

Shook with gladness of a Day begun;
And as He came, He said: "Thy Will be Done

On Earth"; and all His vibrant words were white

And glistening with silver, and their might

Was of the glory of a rising sun.

Unto the Stars sang out His Living Words

White and with silver, and their rhythmic sound

Was a mighty symphony unfurled;
And back from out the Stars like homing birds

They fell in love upon the sleeping ground,

And were forever in a wakened world!

Zion's Christian Legion

By D. T. Williams

Note: Zion's Christian Legion is an organization which has grown up in the Great Lakes Mission under the sponsorship of Apostle D. T. Williams. It is one of many experiments in organization being made today within the church. Because its members are scattered over a wide territory, we are devoting this space to a statement of their aims and objectives in order that copies may be made available to all members.

We shall be glad to have notices and material concerning activities of any organization of church young people if a sufficient number are interested, providing it shall also have some value for those not a part of the organization. Material which should appear at any definite time should be in our office at least two weeks before it is intended to reach interested parties.—Editors.

CHURCH SCHOOL ORGANIZATION

evenings during the week, ten classes covering the items mentioned in the last paragraph.

Only one department of our entire church school has seemed to lag behind a little in efficiency—the library. The system and the contents of the library have been put in good running order, but we seemed unable for awhile to get anyone whom we could rely upon as librarian. However, we now feel that this branch of the work is in competent hands, and will function with all the other departments.

When the plan of grading, etc., was entered into, it became evident that such an organization as we were aiming at would require an adequate system of administration. I began planning, and then, one day, while telling some of my plans to Brother Woodstock, he dropped a few words of advice which have served as a guide since. He said, "In building your system, do not allow it to become too complicated or you will have a machine on your hands which will require all your attention to get it to operate and you will have no time left to get any place." Good advice.

And so I set about my task with this thought in mind: "Any system of administration that shall be set in operation must be such that at any time another director may step in and carry on without having to build up another system."

In the little space remaining it may be well to mention a few of the "gears" in the machine.

One thing that has proved very helpful is a report blank for the teachers and officers of the church school (F2) based on the general outline of the priesthood report blank. On this they report monthly all their activities, tell of their problems, and ask for any help they may need.

Another wonderful help is an absentee report, (F9). These are issued each Sunday to the teachers with the name of the absentee, and a request that the pupil be visited during the week and a report of the visit written on the reverse side and turned in the following Sunday.

Then we have a permanent record card, on one side of which is an application for membership in the church school, and on the reverse a complete history of the member's progress in church school and church. This is an elaboration of Herald's No. C-305. This is (F12).

Many other things, of which lack of space will not permit mention, have been of great help in maintaining an efficient organization in our church school. A corps of able and consecrated workers make the task really enjoyable. And we would not forget to mention that we get plenty of assistance from the pastor.

If anyone reading this should be interested in any of the things that have been of help here, I will be glad to tell them in detail of any part of our organization and its manner of operation. I will also be glad to send samples of the forms mentioned, numbers in parentheses. Address D. M. Wiesen, 164 West Ontario Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

The Presidency has as usual made appointment of individual members of the Twelve to specific fields. But with us now, as in the past, is the belief that we have fallen in erroneous custom here. To correct it will require some time perhaps; but present conditions will demand, in my opinion, concentrated group activities of the Twelve in various places and at various times. And when and as such need becomes apparent, I shall feel free to act accordingly as President. And this may at times suggest the wisdom of the President and Bishop collaborating with the Twelve at times and in specific places.

The work and group activities suggested in the foregoing will throw upon the Twelve a heavy responsibility which may demand a shifting of endeavor as well as joint effort at times and in places. This has been quite thoroughly discussed in council sessions with that quorum and we feel that a working understanding is had which promises the necessary close cooperation towards the objectives outlined.

Of the work of the members of the Quorum of Twelve in the past conference period, there is little need to say more than is presented in the various reports submitted to the Presidency and which are issued in the Daily Herald, and hence already in the hands of the delegates. As will appear therefrom two of the members, John W. Rushton and George G. Lewis have had supervision of foreign fields during the conference period, the former in Europe the latter in Australasia; the time given to each will appear in their reports. A few months ago it became necessary to ask Clyde F. Ellis to go to the South Sea Islands to adjust difficulties which had arisen. He is there now, not having completed his work to his satisfaction, and is staying a while longer, though he was compelled to miss attending conference as a result.

The work accomplished by the members of the Twelve speaks for itself. The working relationship between Presidency and Twelve has been cordial.

GATEWAYS TO ZION

The foregoing suggestions lead to at least one other. That is that there be concentration of effort, missionary as well as efforts to build saintly character and stamina, in strategic points, so that "Curtains" or supports to Zion and the contiguous stakes may be strengthened as contemplated in divine instructions long ago received, and may be raised as soon as possible, first regard being given to those places likely to be permanent so far as our work is concerned, or where industrial or commercial centers justify such permanency. The gateways of Zion have too long been neglected. For some time past I have been urging upon the Twelve the necessity of locating these points by careful observation and the study of trends and conditions, and I have to them suggested a number of places for such study and survey.

And in this connection I feel strongly inclined to state to the conference that in the document presented to the Joint Council I stated my conviction that the time has come in the interests of better organization and concentration of effort at strategic points as well as to improve the morale of the whole church, to organize two new stakes, and give careful consideration to another. The two points as nuclei indicated were Detroit, Michigan, to include at least a part if not all of what is now Chatham District, Ontario; and Council Bluffs, to include Omaha and other nearby branches.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

As is shown in the report of Graceland College, that institution under the able leadership of George N. Briggs has put forth fine effort to adapt its work to the demands of changed conditions, and has kept as its goal the greatest good to the youth of the church in preparation for citizenship both in the kingdom of God and the Nation or nations of which they may be parts. I cannot too strongly recommend this school to the youth of the church; and it is to be heartily desired that more of them were attending it and participating in its life.

It is my opinion that Graceland College has not yet been permitted to make her maximum contribution to the church; for I view her work not only as that of helping our youth towards better understanding of the meaning of citizenship in nation and kingdom of God, but also that of helping in the preparation of our youth for the work of the ministry and improving their work in its activities. Of this we have spoken before, and some incomplete efforts have in the past been made in this direction; but the matter comes to the fore now when attention must be given to finding and forming the material from which to reconstruct our ministerial forces when the time comes to expand them, a time which we hope is really nearer than it now appears.

Of the work and activities of the members of the First Presidency the church has been to some extent informed through the columns of the Herald, and it is not necessary to say much more than that we have been kept busy at the tasks imposed, and it has appeared wise to do rather more than the usual amount of traveling, perhaps more than has in the past been done ordinarily by the members of that quorum; but we believe that the contacts with the various branches and districts visited have not been without value to the church. These frequent absences from headquarters have compelled us to leave local work there largely to our assistants, and such have given almost tireless attention. To say that conditions are entirely to our satisfaction would be to blink some conditions which are to be regretted; yet to be discouraged would be to overlook the signs of well-being in other directions. There may be an inclination on the part of some to want to pass legislation, hard and fast rules of conduct striking at some of the things which might be thought to be signs of lowered spiritual standards, but such move would in my opinion be ill-advised and hinder rather than improve spiritual reform.

To bring the Saints upward to perfection will require the attractive and impressing presentation of the Christian philosophy and standard of moral ethics in such manner as to grip our people, all of them, young as well as old, with a keen desire and firm determination to cling to ideals and carefully and prayerfully avoid contact with those influences which tend toward lower social and ethical ideals and standards. When people are compelled by forces extraneous to themselves to be good, they are prone to be on the alert to watch for an opportunity to defy the "powers that be" and so, as they think, declare their independence; but where the tendency to cling to ideals springs from the impulses of love of ideals and devotion to cause or institution, then taboos are accepted cheerfully, and social pitfalls are avoided without any notion that restrictions placed upon personal liberties are either undesirable or evidences of spiritual serfdom. Sacrifices are made by persons impelled by love and devotion; and when so made engender happiness rather than otherwise.

It is hoped that these facts will be kept in mind by any who might be disposed to present resolutions or legislation bearing upon the matter of personal conduct.

The program above suggested in my opinion puts before the church a task the greatness of which will challenge the best the Saints have in the way of devotion and talent, and it is greatly to be hoped that this conference and all the Saints after its adjournment will move positively towards its achievement.

THE BEAUTY AND SIGNIFICANCE OF PRAYER

life until noon. That is why Paul admonished, "Pray without ceasing!" Send your prayers up to God all day long, either silent or audible, as circumstances may permit.

Prayer is also an attitude of heart toward God. As such it finds expression without the use of words, just as two lovers may express themselves to each other silently. It is necessary that we use many words in life, but there are some things for which we cannot find expression. They must be experienced. We may say many things to God in words, but there are other things for which we cannot find words. Paul speaks of "groanings which cannot be uttered." (Romans 8:26.) A little boy stuck his head in his father's workroom and, fearing he might disturb his father at work, he said: "Father, I will sit so still, so still, if you will give me permission to just sit in here with you." Isn't it just that way we so often feel about our heavenly Father? We desire so much to be "in with him," just sit quiet "in with him." And the best of all is that we never disturb him when we come. We are always welcome and he never tires of us.

PERHAPS we haven't anything else to talk with God about, but we long to be in his presence—without words. In the presence of people whom we know well we may be silent. Not so with strangers. We have to entertain them; talk about everything. With our loved ones we may talk about important or insignificant things, and with them we may also be silent. It is the same with God. We need not entertain him. We can just sit in his presence and rest.

A child, in the evening, finds its place on its mother's lap, and tired after playing all day, it rests, without saying a word and is soon fast asleep. We can also be tired, so very tired, of ourself, of the others, of the world, of life, of everything. Then, how wonderful it is to know a place where we may lay our tired head and heart on the bosom of our heavenly Father and say to him: "I cannot endure any more now. I do not have a word to say to you, but just let me lie still here and rest." Your whole being may cry out to God in prayer without your saying a word.

What is the condition of your prayer-life with God? Have you communion with your heavenly Father? Are you using diligently the means he has provided for you to admit him into your life? He will help you examine yourself in prayer and find the weaknesses which have to be removed. He will help you to see your pride, stubbornness, selfishness, impatience. You will understand that you may not ask God to bless your family unless you are doing all you can for them. You will comprehend that you have no right to pray for the progress of the church unless you are doing what you can to help it forward. You will see that it is impossible to expect God to forgive your sins unless you are willing to forgive others. You cannot ask for comfort and encouragement unless you are attempting to give these things to your fellow men. Oh, prayer is a wonderful power and blessing in our life if we will use it right.

Prayer

Why are we so seldom taught anything of the life of prayer? "Prayer" for most people means only petition—asking God for things and hoping, but not expecting, we will get them. Who knows anything about the technique of prayer?—its development from vocal prayer to mental prayer, from mental prayer to the loving silence of the gazing soul? Who knows and who cares? And yet most of our modern difficulties about prayer are due to the fact that we persist in regarding it merely as petition. They would vanish if we were taught to see prayer as our conscious relationship with God, involving petition as conscious relationship with an earthly father will involve occasional requests, but involving far more of loving intercourse and silent companionship. — Sheila Kaye Smith, in If I Could Preach Just Once.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Was the baptism of Jesus a Jewish or a Christian ordinance?

Under the Jewish law water was sprinkled upon the individual as a symbol of purification. This custom, however, appears to have applied more specifically in connection with circumcision and sacrifices, particularly so after the destruction of the temple. Just when immersion was first used by the Jews is not clear in history, but when John the Baptist came with his announcement of the new dispensation, all converts were baptized, and in no instance did John employ the ceremony of sprinkling.

It was evidently understood among the Pharisees, who were close students of the Scriptures, that the ordinance of baptism would mark the Christian dispensation, and when John declared that he was not the Messiah, they asked him:

"Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet?"—John 1:25.

As the prophet of the new dispensation, John declared that he came to prepare the "way of the Lord." He clearly stated that he had been sent of God for this purpose, hence the conclusion is inevitable that baptism was divinely commanded as an ordinance of the Christian faith. It differs from the old Jewish ceremony in one important respect: the Jewish ceremony applied to those who were already numbered among them as a people, while the rite of baptism was performed solely upon new converts about to enter covenant relations with the Lord. The old sprinkling was a general symbol, but the new baptism was a personal rite which meant a complete cleansing and a new birth, showing that the convert was born into the household of the Lord, a new creation.

Where do the spirits of the dead go?

Those who are righteous, whose sins have been forgiven them in this life, are received into paradise, which is a place of rest and peace. Here they are to remain until the time of the resurrection of their bodies from the grave, at which time the spirit and body will be reunited. The spirits of the wicked are at death consigned to hell, a place of restraint and punishment corresponding to the character of the individual. Here they remain until their resurrection, when the spirit and body will be reunited and consigned to the state which is merited. Those who desire to study the scriptural teachings may find material in the Book of Mormon, 106:11-21; 107:28-37; 448:39-46. Luke 23:43. Ecclesiastes 12:7. Luke 16:22, 23. Psalm 9:17; 55:15. Revelation 20:13.

What does the sacramental covenant to "always remember him" mean?

When administering the bread and wine, the one officiating in the prayer of consecration asks God to bless the bread:

"That they may eat in remembrance of the body of thy Son, and witness unto thee, O God, the eternal Father, that they are willing to take upon them the name of thy Son, and always remember him and keep his commandments which he has given them, that they may always have his Spirit to be with them."—Doctrine and Covenants 17:22.

This language signifies that those who partake do by that act witness to God that they are willing to take upon them his name and always remember him and keep his commandments. To be willing to do this means that one desires to continue in covenant relations with him and to observe his law at all times. To keep his commands is evidence of always remembering him, the term always being connected with the term keep his commandments by the conjunction and, thus indicating that this remembrance is concerned with the keeping of his law. When one is tempted to disobey God, the remembrance of Christ will thus keep him loyal to the divine commands.

Of course this does not mean that one's thoughts are to be on nothing at any time except Christ. One must think of many duties and activities from day to day, but all of them are to be regulated by the divine will, which should be remembered to that end.

From Heart of Michigan's Cherry Country

The Herald brings us much joy, and especially of late has it been of help. We live thirteen miles from the church and our car has been out of commission, preventing our attending services as often as we should have liked.

It is wonderful to read of God's blessings to his children everywhere. Many divine gifts have been my portion, too, and I am humbly grateful for his watchcare.

We live in the heart of Michigan's cherry country, but some reports have it that the cherries have been hurt by the frost. It was extremely cold this past winter, the temperature ranging as low as forty below zero. Every year the National Cherry Festival is held here, and people come from far and near to take part. A Cherry Queen is crowned and a happy time is enjoyed by everyone. Thousands of acres of cherry orchards are in this county, and when the season is a good one many tons of fruit are sold and packed at the canneries. There are also apples and other fruits.

Manifestation of Holy Spirit's Power

One Sunday early in January, I was given a spiritual experience which seemed to me to be a warning concerning my baby. The child was at that time in perfect health, but I watched her carefully. Later in the month she contracted bronchial pneumonia which almost immediately developed brain fever.

My husband is not a member of the church, but he was willing to do anything in his power for the little one. He went at two o'clock in the morning to the home of Brother Melvin Charles and took him up to Highland Branch for Brother Woods. The latter being ill, they returned home with Brother Carol Rhoads.

The baby had had no rest for three days and nights, but after the administration, she knew me, was able to take a little orange juice, and went into a sound, restful sleep for eleven hours.

But in the midst of our rejoicing, my spiritual experience came back in memory, and I felt as though it was preparing me for an ordeal which I was called to face.

The child grew worse again, and we sent for Brother Carol who brought with him Brother Chester Simmonds. Each prayed that God would relieve her of her pain. Brother Simmonds told me to keep on praying, but he added: "God knows best, and we must say, 'Thy will be done.'"

A few hours later as I was sitting by her bedside, I was given assurance that the child would be better; even the day and the hour were given to me when this improvement would be, Thursday night between ten and ten-thirty. Some thought that she would pass through the crisis at that time. On Thursday evening Brother and Sister Charles came over, and I asked Sister Charles to stay with me. When she saw how low the baby was, she asked why we did not send for the elders. But my husband said, "No, nothing can save her now." So I asked Sister Charles to pray with me that the Lord would send some of the elders to her, to pray that she might die peacefully. Then there came to us, shortly after ten o'clock, a wonderful blessing, a divine ministration, and the child rested peacefully. At four-twenty the next morning, she slipped quietly away to her heavenly Father who sent his messenger to ease her pain and anoint her for his own.

I was baptized into the church when a girl of thirteen, but have never had the opportunity to live close to a branch where I could attend regularly, except for about two years, 1912, and 1913, when I was in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and attended church at the chapel in Beechview. Many happy memories of my youth cluster around that little church, and if Sister Nettie Dougherty is still there and remembers Sadie Colvin, the lonely little girl from Ohio, who used to be in her Sunday school class, I would like to hear from her.

Being isolated from the church and closely associated with those not in sympathy with the latter-day faith, I have all too often failed in my duty; but I have always felt an unseen hand guiding me, and heard the still, small voice calling me back when I strayed in forbidden paths. Life has brought many trials, but it has brought blessings also for which I am thankful.

The greatest desire of my heart is that the time will come when we can live close enough to a branch of the church so that my family may attend services and learn of the gospel and where I, too, may have part in church work.

Would Live Her Thanks

The testimonies, sermons, and other articles in the Herald are food for my soul and make me think of the hymn, "Take Time to Be Holy."

I appreciate my membership in the church. I came in contact with the faith when I was sixteen years of age, shortly after the death of my parents. It was hard to be an orphan, but I lived in the homes of Latter Day Saints, among people of godly walk and conversation. What a great blessing that was! I appreciate it more now as I look back upon life and realize the snares and pitfalls awaiting the young and innocent who have no one to guide them. God moves in mysterious ways his wonders to perform, and sometimes we are not aware of our blessings until later years.

I have been greatly blessed. My two brothers also belong to the church. Both are members of the priesthood. Since God has been so merciful to me in my younger years, and still continues his blessings, I feel that the least I can do for him is to show my appreciation in trying to live the life of a Christian. This I wish to do.

Let Us Put On the Whole Armor of God

It has been five years since I have been privileged to hear a Latter Day Saint minister, but in those years of isolation my heavenly Father and the Herald have been the sources of much strength and encouragement.

As I read the letters in the Herald I feel that the depression through which we have been passing has made many of us realize the truth of the words of our Master, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matthew 6:33.)

In these days of economic insecurity and international distrust we feel the need of Zion.

I ask your prayers that I may do my bit in proclaiming by precept and example the glorious work in which we are engaged, to those outside the household of faith.

I pray God's richest blessing upon our leaders, the coming General Conference, and also our isolated members.

Let us put on the whole armor of God and move forth as a great united band that Zion may soon be redeemed.

Likes Biography

I am thankful for the latter-day gospel. I was baptized a good many years ago. As I look back, I can see God's hand guiding me all through my life, and for this I give thanks to the heavenly Father.

I enjoyed reading the biography of Mark H. Forscutt. It has helped to make me realize the many difficulties through which some of the Saints have passed for the cause they loved. Indeed I read all departments of the Herald with interest and profit.

Would Be True to Neighbors, Friends, and Church

Each week finds me looking and longing for the Herald, always a welcome visitor in my home. The testimonies of the Saints are a source of strength to me.

Although there seems not much I can do in this work, I can be true to my neighbors, my friends, and my church. I can study and help and ponder on the things of life. I can give more than lip service to my Lord; I can follow Christ in my daily living and so help my associates by the power of a good example. Several years ago I had a spiritual experience which vividly taught me concerning the trials through which we must pass and their relationship to the precious things of the Lord.

Will the Saints pray in my behalf, that I may be faithful all of my days. The Lord has helped me greatly, and my prayer is that all of us will conduct ourselves as Saints and that the church will grow.

Urges Obedience to Law

My faith in the latter-day cause grows stronger each day. I have many testimonies that this is the true gospel of the Lord.

A short time ago I paid my tithing and as I was considering the work of the Master and my services to it, I wondered if I had paid enough—my share. The Holy Spirit came to me in power assuring me that God was pleased with my effort. Saints, if we will pay our tithing and comply with his whole law, a blessing will be ours to enjoy.

Let us forget our little differences and unite our efforts in the work the Lord has given us, serving him harmoniously, zealously. It is up to us to make Zion a reality. We have talked and dreamed and sung and prayed about it for many years; now is the time to indulge in serious introspection, to ask ourselves, each one of us: Am I worthy to assist in building Zion? This is no time for wasting our effort, no time for flippancy regarding the great work of the Lord. We have the law and we have God's promised help and watchcare, all his wonderful blessings, why not be about our duty?

Elder A. M. Baker just closed a week's meetings here. His sermons were wonderfully helpful. We, as a group, desire the prayers of the Saints for those living here in Chatham.

Unity of Thought and Purpose

I am glad that our God is a God of the whole earth, that wherever we go, we still have him to pray to and to watch over us. He is a wonderful Father. Many times he has blessed me spiritually and physically.

The testimonies of others always help me. After all, our testimonies are much the same, for we have the same loving Father to bless us. He is no respecter of persons. He gives to us today apostles and prophets as he did to his children in former times. For these I am deeply grateful.

I believe the church is more united today than for some time in the past, and unity and love for each other are qualities that will make Zion. Often I meditate concerning certain subjects, and when I receive the Herald, I find those very things written up and presented. Our thoughts as Saints seem to run together though we are miles apart.

Let Us Live and Work for Zion

To me a prophecy given the Saints here on the general fast day, was wonderful evidence of God's love for his children. He warned us of his near approach that we might live better lives and draw nearer to him; that we might forsake the pleasures of the world and get down on our knees and pray earnestly for forgiveness of past wrongs and for his direction in the way that leads to life eternal.

Let us brush off the dust which has accumulated on our Bible and Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, and seek therein the precious truths which are for us.

Let us keep constantly in mind the thought of Zion. Let us sacrifice, if needs be, to send the Bishop a contribution to aid in the Lord's work. It is only by the consecration and sacrifice of God's people that Zion will be redeemed.

Let us pray for one another, pray for those across the ocean, on the Islands of the Sea, that we may all be brought to a unity of the faith and a greater knowledge of the Son of God.

Isolated Ones Seek Physical Blessing

Though isolated we are privileged once in awhile to attend church services at Alva, a distance of fifty-two miles. Less frequently we go to church at El Reno, ninety-two miles away. Last summer we spent one day at the Calumet reunion.

Neither my husband nor I are physically strong, and so we desire the prayers of our brothers and sisters of the faith. Not long ago I suffered a gathering in the head, but was healed by administration. We are grateful to God for the many blessings he gives us.

Wheeling District Goes Forward

Priesthood, Young People, and All Are Busy

The first quarter of 1934 noted an upward trend in a number of the branches in this district. A visit by Patriarchs G. T. Griffiths and John F. Martin to Moundsville Branch, in February, and the meetings conducted by them were beneficial in quickening spiritual activities.

The district conference was held with Moundsville Branch March 3 and 4. Attendance on Saturday was small, but much better on Sunday. For the early morning service a program prepared by the Moundsville priesthood, was unique as a priesthood meeting, and elicited favorable comment. The Easter sacrament service drew an increased attendance, and at night Brother John F. Martin preached his final sermon before leaving for General Conference.

Wheeling Branch was favored with a sermon by Brother Martin just after the sacrament service on Easter, the attendance at these meetings being larger than usual. A baptism Wednesday before Easter added a new convert to Wheeling Branch, Brother Horace M. Blakely, who has been attending meetings for some time. The family of Brother J. F. Martin, located in Wheeling for some time, will move to Kirtland, Ohio.

Easter Sunday was a red letter day for the Wellsburg Branch. Beautiful weather and a large attendance furnished an appropriate setting for the program prepared by the Sunday school, under the guidance of John Treiber and capable assistants. Immediately following this was a baptismal service, when Brother R. E. Rodgers baptized five candidates and Brother Paul Lannum baptized four. These men are branch priests. Those baptized consisted of one woman, Sister Clark, and eight young persons ranging in age from eleven to eighteen. They were confirmed by Willard Allen and O. J. Tary, branch and district presidents, respectively.

At 2:30 p. m. the sacrament service opened and was marked by a peaceful encouragement of the Holy Spirit under which many bore testimony. At the closing service of the day the sermon was by O. J. Tary.

Wellsburg Branch with a membership of ninety-nine, made an average attendance during the quarter of eighty-two at Sunday school, thirty at Wednesday night prayer meeting and fifty at Sunday night preaching.

The reports of the visiting officers, deacons, teachers and priests, show a commendable activity that is bearing fruit. This branch is blessed with a fine group of young men in the priesthood who are active in their offices. It also has a goodly number of young workers, willing and capable, in the branch and Sunday school, giving pleasing prospect for the future.

Escatawpa, Mississippi New Purpose and Energy Here

The Mobile district conference convened at Escatawpa January 27 and 28. The various branches of the district were well represented. Four young men were ordained in an impressive service: A. N. Barnes, Escatawpa, elder; Raymond Booker, Mobile, priest; Alma Tillman, Bayou-LaBatre, priest; Brevton Green, Mobile, a deacon. The following men officiated: Amos Berve, Franklin Steiner, and Albert Miller. The influence of the Spirit was manifested during the meeting.

Under the leadership of Branch President A. N. Barnes, Escatawpa Branch is progressing rapidly. They were happy to join with other church members March 4, in special fasting and prayer.

March 11, a group of Saints from Escatawpa chartered a school bus to convey them to Mobile, to attend services conducted by Patriarch Frederick A. Smith. After a severe breakdown, and chartering a second bus, they arrived in Mobile too late for the morning meetings, but remained for the evening service. Patriarch F. A. Smith delivered two wonderful sermons to the Saints March 15 and 16. Kreole, Pascagoula, Vancleave, and Mobile branches were well represented. At the close of the services Friday, a song, very fittingly revised by Amos Berve, "The Little White Church in the Pine Wood," was sung.

The children were given an Easter party at the home of Delia Davis, March 29, sponsored by their Sunday school teachers.

For the purpose of raising funds for the church, an ice cream social was held March 31 by the women. Games were played by all, under the supervision of Sister Dorothy Mizell.

Easter morning the juniors presented a program during the church school hour, under the direction of Sister Verna Breeland, supervisor of their department.

Young Adults Organize

For some time there has been talk of a separate class for the young adults of the church school. Such a class was organized about two months ago. A committee was appointed to devise a plan of study and to secure teachers. It was decided to give six-week courses in a variety of subjects.

Allen Pohly started with a review of Wiggan's, The Marks of an Educated Man. Pastor A. H. DuRose is following with a six-week course of "Church Fundamentals." This will be followed by a course on "Home Building," taught by a nonmember, Mr. W. W. Norton. Other courses and their teachers are: "Etiquette," Mrs. Lucille Provost; "Church History," L. E. Flowers; "Music as a Cultural Background," Franklyn Weddle.

The class has an enrollment of about fifty active members. The raising of funds for the refinishing and repairing of the church building is the present high aim of the class. Special Sunday offerings, a pie supper, plays, and parties are some of the means of raising the necessary amount.

The officers of this class are as follows: president, Lucille Provost; vice president, Herbert Lauthen; secretary-treasurer, Franklyn Weddle; recruiting manager, Rolland Provost.

Social meetings are held every second Monday at some member's home.

H. A. Dayton Arouses New Interest— Four Baptisms

Elder H. A. Dayton, president of the Owen Sound District, has been missionary visitor here for the past two months, engaging in a series of services. The first month was spent in the local branch, during which time the attendance at the meetings was very good. As a result of his efforts, two souls were brought into the church February 25 and 28.

Meetings were then moved outside of the city in the township of Korah, conducted in the Prince of Wales School with good interest among nonmembers. Two more members were baptized into the church April 4, and meetings are still being carried on.

Saints of this congregation were happy to hear that Sister Flood, who underwent an operation for appendicitis, is improving.

Baltimore, Maryland

Interest Grows—Young People Develop Dramatic Talents

A large group of Baltimore Saints was present at the recent district conference held at Philadelphia. Much progress was noted, as each branch and mission in the district was represented by a good report. All present were fired with new zeal and enthusiasm.

The young people of the district met and organized. They are planning to hold a young people's reunion this summer at Deer Park. The Spirit of the Father was present at all of the meetings and the whole conference was a success.

Much interest is being shown in Baltimore Branch. Although few in number, each member seems fired with new zeal, and unity abounds. The young people are active and willing to be of service. It has been made known that there is a great work to be done in the city of Baltimore and that every available one will be used.

The young people enacted an Easter play entitled "Easter Dawn." There were visiting Saints from Brooklyn, New York, Washington, and Philadelphia. The young people of Baltimore are talented in dramatics, and intend to use this talent for the furthering of the Lord's work.

Enfield, England

Celebrate Pastor's Thirty Years of Service

Elder John A. Judd, who has completed thirty years of service as pastor of Enfield Branch, was the guest of honor Saturday, March 17, when a congregation met between 5:30 and 6 p. m. to celebrate his long and valued service.

On entering the church, one's eyes gazed upon finely decorated tables loaded with all that is good to eat. The center table contained a large two-tier cake, with thirty candles, which denoted the length of service rendered. Tea being over, the remainder of the evening was spent in an enjoyable manner. There were several short speeches, interspersed with selections by the orchestra, and one or two solos. About half way through the evening's entertainment, the congregation stood and sang, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds." Following this, Bishop A. T. Trapp delivered a short address, conveying the sentiments of appreciation of the members. Elder Judd was presented a wallet, and a hand bag was given to Sister Judd.

During the course of the evening, R. W. Goulee, unveiled two beautifully colored pictures, "The Light of the World," and "The Good Shepherd," which were presented to the branch by Brother and Sister Judd, as a remembrance of the occasion.

The evening's program was in charge of Brother William T. Goulee, to whom credit goes for the success of the occasion.

Independence

General Conference—Nurses' Commencement—Marriages—Deaths

"It was a wonderful General Conference!" That is what everyone is saying, and the people of Independence who acted as hosts to the great gathering are happy because of their opportunity thus to serve the church, glad to have met so many good and enthusiastic workers from over the church.

With the exception of Sunday morning church school sessions in several of the congregations all local services were dismissed in favor of General Conference gatherings at the Auditorium and Stone Church. Great crowds assembled for almost every service; the old Stone Church was crowded from wall to wall at the early morning prayer meetings on week days and Sundays. People thought themselves fortunate to find space to sit on the floor; many stood throughout entire services. Here the spirit of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man seemed to unfold in all its beauty and comfort, offering conference members inspiration which they found nowhere else. The nine-fifty sermon hours at the Stone Church each week-day morning were also excellently attended as were meetings of priesthood quorums, all class sessions, the young people's forum, and the women's eleven o'clock meeting. Sundays, of course, boasted the peak attendance of the conference, particularly the first Sunday when Saints from neighboring places found it possible to drive into Independence to spend the day.

A retrospective view of the conference reveals several out-standing events—the opening business session April 6, 2 p. m. when President F. M. Smith delivered his address to the conference. All of Sunday's services, April 8, but especially the performance of Mendelssohn's oratorio, "Elijah," in the evening, Albert N. Hoxie, of Philadelphia, directing. It is thought that seventy-five hundred people heard this. The A Cappella Choir concert the night following, Monday. The official reception and banquet Tuesday beginning at 6.30 p. m., given by the women's department, and attended by several hundreds of Saints. The debates on the church's stand for peace at the Friday afternoon business session, April 13. Dramatic entertainments on Saturday night presented by the young people of Independence and Kansas City and the White Masque Players, and demonstrating what part drama can play in worship and in recreation. The closing services of ordination and dedication on Sunday afternoon, April 15.

And now that many of the visitors have already gone home, and numbers are leaving daily for points North, South, East, and West, Independence people feel a little newer, a little more inspired, to go at their task of making this the real center of Zion. Their homes have been open to conference guests. They have given unstintingly many hours to help the conference, numbers of them serving almost more than their strength would permit: but all rejoice in the spirit which this the seventy-sixth conference of the church has left with them.

It was fitting that the opening of another General Conference period (two years) should be celebrated with commencement exercises Sunday night, April 15, the graduation of the class of nurses of the Independence Sanitarium. "The Science of Service" was the theme of Elder R. A. Cheville's commencement address, and diplomas were awarded by President F. M. McDowell, and "R. N." pins were pinned on the graduates by Miss Gertrude Copeland, superintendent of the Sanitarium.

Music for this occasion was by the Stone Church Choir, Mrs. Nina Smith and Albert Brackenbury, soloists; Robert Miller played organ music; Eloise Higgins contributed a violin solo, and Colin Ferrett sang "The Lord Is My Light."

Twelve young women composed this year's graduating class: Edith E. Wingett, of Nebraska; Kathryn Anne Madson, Colorado; Ella V. Epperson, Missouri; Wanda Lee Wolfe, Arizona; Nathalie Pearl Butterworth, Iowa; Edith H. Ehlers, Missouri; Mary Ann Storm, Oklahoma; Mary Gough, Missouri; Stella Mae Eskridge, Missouri; Perle V. Carnahan, Oklahoma; Lucy G. Jennings, Nebraska; and Martha E. Criley, Missouri.

During the conference there were several weddings which will be of interest to friends elsewhere. On the first day, two delegates from California, James Peat, of Berkeley, and Mrs. Maud Hamilton, of Alameda, were married. Brother Peat is seventy-four and his bride is sixty-three. The ceremony was read by Apostle John W. Rushton.

On the night of April 6, two Independence, young people were married, Miss Alice Chappelow and Paul Kelsey, President F. M. McDowell officiating. The bride is a former Graceland girl.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell D. Etzenhouser, of Independence, announce the marriage of their daughter, Muriel to Reuben N. Seroy, of Kansas City, April 8. Patriarch John F. Martin officiated.

Two members of the conference delegation from Decatur, Illinois, Mrs. Jessie F. Simpson and Walter D. Slack, were married April 13, at the home of Elder and Mrs. R. L. Fulk, of Lees Summit.

A pre-conference marriage was that of Miss Mary Melissa Hobart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Hobart, of Webb City, Missouri, and Ellis W. Rauh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Rauh, of Independence, which took place at the Saints' church at Webb City March 24, Elder Frank McDonald, of Independence, officiating.

Independence mourned with all the church at the death of Miss Florence Thompson, member of Graceland's faculty, who was fatally injured when the car in which she was coming to conference was wrecked near Excelsior Springs, Missouri, April 5. Her funeral was held at Lamoni April 11, and interment was in Rose Hill Cemetery.

The funeral services for Elbert Teeter, eighteen-year-old son of Elder and Mrs. J. J. Teeter, of Independence, were conducted Thursday afternoon. The young man died Tuesday evening, April 10, at Seldon, Kansas, of pneumonia and complications. Patriarch Ammon White was in charge of the service, assisted by Elder J. D. Showers. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Liberty Street Church

The prayer service held April 4, was well attended, the prayers offered being mostly for the success of the General Conference. Many prayers were offered in behalf of the conference visitors, that their visit in Independence might be made more pleasant and enjoyable.

The merchants of Independence, most of whom have their business houses in this district, reported a favorable increase of sales during the conference.

Walnut Park Church

Walnut Park joined with the other congregations in Zion Sunday in dispensing with all services with the exception of early morning prayer meeting and the church school, in order that all might attend the sessions of the conference. In spite of the fact that many attended the classes at the Auditorium, three hundred and forty-eight, were present at the local church school session. Following the class period a banner was presented to the class of intermediate girls taught by Fay Brown. Each quarter of the year competition is engaged in by the intermediate classes upon an assigned project. This quarter the basis of judging was attendance at the morning preaching service, the members of Miss Brown's class being most regular in attendance. Emily Taylor received the banner and responded in behalf of the class.

Immediately following the morning prayer service, Edith Rosalie Badder, daughter of Brother and Sister Ammon Badder, was baptized by her uncle, Elder C. W. Badder. She was confirmed by Elder Badder and Pastor Frank McDonald at the close of the church school.

The church school secretary, Audrey Horn, was surprised by the members of the Swastika Class at her home Tuesday night, April 3, the occasion being her eighteenth birthday. Eighteen members of the class and the teachers, Brother and Sister Fred Horn, were present. Games were played and refreshments served.

A few families of friends surprised Brother Fred Horn, the bishop's agent, with a dinner at his home Sunday noon. The occasion was in celebration of the approaching birthday of Brother Horn.

Spring Branch Church

A union prayer service was in charge of R. Fish, Jesse Smith, and J. Andes the evening of April 4, and many came fasting in behalf of the General Conference. The large number of young people and the testimonies they bore, proved an inspiration to the congregation.

Hammond, Indiana

Branch Responds to Easter Season

The Easter season brought a rather unusual and effective response from members of the Hammond Branch. On Thursday evening preceding Easter the choir rendered an Easter cantata, "The King Triumphant," to an appreciative audience. This accomplishment marked a surprising advancement of the choir, and the program was blessed by the presence of the Holy Spirit. Branch chorister D. H. Smith feels he has good material to offer Sister Louise Evans, the district chorister, in her project of a six-hundred voice choir.

Easter Sunday services were beautiful and inspiring both morning and evening. Sister Eleanor Myers capably presented the play, "Life and Love Triumphant," and a special Easter offering service in the morning and an Easter pageant, "The Cross of Light," in the evening. Her work is to be highly commended.

Prior to Easter the members of the branch, and particularly the priesthood, were inspired by a visit from President Floyd M. McDowell.

Portsmouth, Ohio

Branch Is Growing

The message of Elder O. A. Rexroad, Sunday, March 25, came with power and much assurance. He chose his subject from Doctrine and Covenants 37.

A short address on "Repentance," was the evening sermon by Martin L. Crabtree. Special music was furnished during the evening. A degree of God's Holy Spirit was present at this meeting. In spite of the snow, attendance has been increasing during the past few weeks.

Thursday evening, a few Saints gathered at the home of Charles F. Monroe for a prayer and praise service. They felt well rewarded for their efforts.

Elder E. E. Williams spoke to McDermott Saints the evening of February 25. Poor attendance has been had at the mid-week prayer services.

Elder G. H. Kirkendall, of Columbus, and his father-in-law, E. Cross, of Portsmouth, were guests here March 4. Brother Kirkendall taught the Sunday school lesson. Elder May was the speaker for the evening of March 9.

Elder James Cheffin was the speaker Sunday morning, March 11, using a part of the eleventh chapter of Saint John for his subject. Elder Walter Culp was the evening speaker.

The women of this branch have been quilting and sewing to a great extent. They held a box supper a short time ago and cleared over fifteen dollars. Sister Nellie Rexroad is their leader.

Muskegon, Michigan

Inspiring Services on Rally Day

Muskegon Branch held a rally day, Easter Sunday, April 1. Attendance was exceptionally gratifying with a good representation from other branches: Grand Rapids, Niles, and Hesperia.

Elder C. Riley Garnett, of Grand Rapids, was the speaker at 10 a. m. A baptism service was held at the same hour, thirteen candidates uniting with the church.

Prayer meeting, sacrament, confirmation, and an ordination service followed. Brother Vern Swager, was ordained to the office of priest. A great degree of God's Spirit was present throughout this meeting, in charge of Elders A. Whitehead and E. Loomis.

Dinner was served at one o'clock by the women's department in the basement of the church.

Other inspiring services were held throughout the day, including several musical numbers, contributed by visitors from Grand Rapids.

The Easter program was presented in the evening, followed by a short talk by Elder A. Whitehead.

A splendid spirit of cooperation and a desire to progress toward zionic ideals have been manifested in the various departments of the branch.

Several representatives from this congregation were able to attend the young people's convention held at Saginaw.

Saint Thomas, Ontario

Splendid Support From Women's Department

The women's department has been doing a splendid work both spiritually and financially. At the beginning of 1933, a motion was carried that sacrifice offerings were to be made each month. Through the inspiration of the Father they immediately began their work. At the end of the year a sum of $147.67 was sent to the bishop. Besides giving this offering, they also did their bit in helping the general church.

In addition to aiding the church financially, they have made extensive repairs on the local building. Their work consists of quilting and sewing. Meetings are held each Tuesday for sewing from 2:30 to 5 p. m. They also enjoy afternoon teas, food sales, and hot suppers.

Repent for the Kingdom of Heaven is at Hand

By Frederick A. Kuhn

THE DOCTRINE OF REPENTANCE is no new teaching nor is it found in any one book or place. It goes back far enough to convince us that God instituted repentance as a means whereby man can realign himself as a citizen of His kingdom.

When Jonah came to Nineveh he called its people to repentance in no uncertain manner, and emphatically told them to repent or they would be destroyed. In these latter days the revelations from on high teach a doctrine or gospel of repentance, such as—"Say nothing but repentance unto this generation." (Doctrine and Covenants 10:4.)—"more blessed are you because you are called of me to preach my gospel; to lift up your voice as with a trumpet both loud and long, and cry repentance unto a crooked and perverse generation. . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 33:1.) In fact, part of the mission of Christ's ministry is definitely set aside—to call men back to the fold and to lead others to it. As ministers—"and of tenets thou shalt not talk, but thou shalt declare repentance and faith on the Savior. . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 18:4.) Furthermore—"thou shalt go forth unto the regions round about and preach repentance unto the people. . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 44:2.) "—and I give unto them a commandment that they go forth—declaring my words as unto angels . . . and ye shall go forth baptizing with water, saying, repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 42:2.)

If we were to go off on a tangent for a moment to apply the binoculars to the Book of Mormon as a whole, we would find startling teachings, most of which we know very little of. Barring some omissions—the Book of Mormon contains two hundred and twenty-one clear-cut statements calling upon the early Americans to repent; twenty different ministers, Lehi, Nephi, Jacob, King Benjamin, Abinadi, Alma I and II, Amulek, Aaron, Ammon, Helaman, Moronihah, Nephi, Lehi, Aminadab, Samuel, Nephi, Mormon, Ether, Brother of Jared; besides prophets, angels, and Jesus himself.

With the specified introduction before us, if we were to introspect, we might be lost in a maze as to what procedure to follow. Following introspections comes action, but, first there must be a conviction of the need of a right-about-face. Do you have daily religious thoughts? By that is meant a religion that "carries-over" causing your mind to revert to the noblest things of life. How many church papers do you read? It was not very long ago that the latter day prophet told us that seven years after B. R. McGuire left the Presiding Bishopric, a letter came to the office addressed to him with the ex-title. Somewhere that person (and there are many of them) must have waited for the smoke of the battlefield to rise and bring forth a new light. How many religious books do you read in a year? Likely, if the question were answered by counting the fingers, five would remain uncounted. Just imagine the executive of some large modern factory who never perused an up-to-date machine manual or who never went to machine displays or kept up on mechanical improvements. That person would be an obsolete number in three years. In Christ, we are building up an experience which slowly but surely is pushing back and conquering the pioneer border of sin. That same living is militant, it will remain militant as long as spiritual fires blaze up to produce the much-needed reserve force. While we are too busy living to have a daily religious thought, to read church papers, or to read books of religion; yet when reverses occur cowards come out of their hiding when no one looks just so Jesus can be implored. We all know—Jesus is a good spare tire to take along, just in case we have a blow-out. Or if we start on a tour we think too often of the need of an extra five-dollar bill, if something happened to go wrong. While everything goes well, often we are found placing God in the rumble-seat, the mother-in-law seat, yes, the back seat of our actual living. Somehow He is relegated to a back seat, but when in dire need it is good to have a savior which is close enough that he can be reached.

On the other hand we have an active side of life weighted in the balances at the fatal hour of seven p. m. That is the hour of musing—what does the evening hold in store, a wasted evening or an invested evening? Surely sitting by a radio listening to jazz bands or crooners would not raise our asset standing while such elevating music as "Mother Machree," hymns, good instrumental, or vocal numbers are chased out by improper dialing. To be specific, I have yet to find any way that would kill more time and do more harm than to sit by the hour in raptured gossip; at each setting covering every person in the church and every fault he or she has.

One economist has said no one can afford an automobile weighing 3,000 pounds unless he has an annual salary of $5,000. If that be true, why do we have so many trying to keep up with the Jones? Share with your local financial collector in trying to pry up a coin from such a one. For the benefit of pleasure seekers—you who place your coppers and an occasional nickel in the collection plate you can't expect much in return. In fact, a 10c show (twice what is given to the church) isn't worth the time wasted in seeing it. To spend 25c, 35c, or 50c for a show is not unusual but to hear of a patron asking the manager for a refund, irrespective of how putrid the show may have been, is a thing unheard of. Ah! but if a nickel is dropped in the collection plate with a bang, a howl is set loose which reverberates throughout the parish. When members of the church of God are identical to their neighbors who profess nothing, then they are in the same grip of hell as their heathen associates.

No matter what sermon we listen to, it is worth more than a nickel. Religion is supposed to be a free item, and still is, if we go after it, but when it is piped unto us a charge can be expected. In all sobriety I would like to inaugurate a new system of offering. Pass the collection plate at the opening of the service, then again before closing; if those present did not get their money's worth, allow them to deduct the difference; if more was received than paid for, square up.

In continued interrogation—have we need of repentance? As far as religious teachings are concerned, yes! without a doubt. Only a few public schools have a vestige of character and spiritual teachings. Some go as far as completely banning the teaching of all religions. What less do they have in colleges or universities, no required courses but a few elective courses and those taught by instructors who believe learning to be a substitute for inspiration.

Sad it is but true, churches today are commercialized and compromised with the world to such a measure that they cease to be the haven of rest for which they were originally instituted. What else can be expected when the pusillanimous ministers of the day are molded like clay by public opinion instead of being the molders. They should cry out unto this pleasure-mad world by warning it of its doom. Why not stand up like Billy Sunday does when he denounces the dance halls as—"The cesspools of hell." It appears entirely logical that the ministry should interpret the handwriting upon the wall. During this period of social collapse the law is bowing to crime, yes to the devil. That international hero, Lindbergh, while resorting to the greatest remaining force that could return his own babe to him, asked the law of the land to withdraw while he bartered with gangsters; evidently the underworld carried hopes greater than the organized law. The church appears to be surrendering, to the contrary notwithstanding, even though every Sunday we are reminded that the world is growing better and better.

If we can be convinced of the need of repentance we will be able to move on to the manner of teaching repentance. According to the Book of Mormon, everybody taught this teaching, "For there was nothing preached in all the churches except it were repentance and faith in God." (Book of Mormon, page 281, volume 101.) The prophets taught it, "And there came prophets in the land again, crying repentance unto them; that they must prepare the way of the Lord or there should come a curse upon the face of the land; yea, even there should be a great famine, in which they would be destroyed, if they did not repent." (Book of Mormon, page 738, volume 32.) Angels taught it, "—neither have angels ceased to minister unto the children of men... their ministry is to call men unto repentance. . . ." (Book of Mormon, page 766, verses 30 and 32.) Besides acting as a teaching repentance was commanded. "... I have given you the law and the commandments of my father, that ye should believe in me, and that ye shall repent of your sins and come unto me. (Book of Mormon, page 637, verse 66.) Lastly the Master pleaded for repentance, "... O ye house of Israel, whom I have spared, how oft will I gather you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings if he will repent and return unto me." (Book of Mormon, page 629, verse 58.) Jesus continues his pleadings by saying, "repent of your sins, and be converted that I may heal you." (Book of Mormon, page 628, verse 32.) The quotations already given sound like the old hell fire and brimstone or like, Come out of Babylon O my people.

While the world is pacifying itself and its people into believing all is well and we are getting better every day, there still is cause for alarm even though told day by day in every way we are growing better and better.

God has bestowed a mind upon us that should function. If he wanted us to be mimics he would have left key-holes and strings in us so we could be first-class puppets in which he could glory over his handiwork. As it is we are called to stand out in all of our color and glory: let those who will be diluents and compromisers, but for us is to interpret the handwriting upon the wall and save the day. If a choice is to be made between the pusilanimous optimist and the devout pessimist allow me to follow Alma when he wrote as follows—"I say unto you, Nay; he would rather suffer that the Lamanites might destroy all this people who are called the people of Nephi, if it were possible that they could fall into sins and transgressions, after having had so much light and so much knowledge given unto them of the Lord their God; yea, after having been such a highly favored people of the Lord; yea, after having been favored above every other nation, kindred, tongue or people; after having had all things made known unto them, according to their desires, and their faith, and prayers, of that which has been, and which is and which is to come; having been visited by the Spirit of God; having conversed with angels, and having been spoken unto by the voice of the Lord; and having the spirit of prophecy, and the spirit of revelation, and also many gifts; the gift of speaking with tongues, and the gift of preaching, and the gift of the Holy Ghost, and the gift of translation . . . and now for this cause, that ye may not be destroyed, the Lord has sent his angel to visit many of his people, declaring unto them that they must go forth and cry mightily unto this people, saying, Repent ye, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is nigh at hand." (Book of Mormon, pages 332, 333, verses 27-31 and 39.)

In conclusion—the existence of sin is self evident, and so are the ways of the world. Next, parents, teachers, and the ministry should be actively engaged in halting the tide which rolls on to destruction; this can best be achieved by crying repentance, be it in the pulpit or be it at home. Now that the matter is laid before you, it is up to you to decide as to the disposition thereof.

When men endeavor to teach an easier way, or a shorter route to heaven than the way our Lord and Master taught and walked in, they must do so at the displeasure of God, and suffer the consequences. This is done by some through ignorance, by others to court favor with the people.—D. E. Tucker, in "The True Way Is the Gospel Way."

Desired Destiny

A man is never able to do in this world what he wants to do. We all lay down our work before it is half completed . . . If we are intended to grow into the image of God, we must have another life in which to do it; we can make only the beginnings here. Before we have chiselled out the statue, the chisel falls from our hand . . . We are made upon too great a scale for such a world as this, and there is down deep in us a quenchless desire for a fuller expression of our powers. —Charles Edward Jefferson, in Things Fundamental.

NEWS OF CHURCH AND HOME

Every fall an annual "Jigg's Supper" is held. Their slogan is "The Best Ever."

Sometimes they each brought something to the afternoon meeting to be served at supper time, and invited all the branch members or as many as wished to join and have a potluck meal.

Sister I. Kinsman, who has been president for a number of years, has worked with and for the department to bring love and unity to all. Because of ill health, she is unable to continue, and Sister L. Berger has been chosen to take her place. With the help of coworkers, she hopes to carry on this work.

The youth will be properly chaperoned, and will be cared for free of charge, after their arrival in Columbus. Columbus members are working hard to raise funds for defraying the expenses incident to the convention. We definitely announce that Apostles D. T. Williams and Roy S. Budd will be the leaders in the convention. A committee of young people has been appointed to report recommendations for the organization of a district young people's association. Mark your calendar for May 25 to 27, and plan to be present from the start to finish.—A. E. Anderton, district president.

Conference Minutes

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—The conference of New York and Philadelphia District was held at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, March 17 and 18. As usual conference began with a supper prepared for the visitors. At 7 p. m. a snort prayer meeting was held, after which the business session was in charge of District President Henry L. Livingston, Thomas M. Carr, of Elk Mills, Maryland, and R. J. Hawkins, of Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania. The minutes of the last conference, held in September, were read and approved. Reports naming activities and goals to be achieved, were read from the various officers and from each branch. The following officers were elected: district president, Henry L. Livingston, Philadelphia; counselor, Thomas M. Carr, Elk Mills, Maryland; secretary Elizabeth Teal, Philadelphia; director of religious education, David M. Wiesen, Philadelphia. The bishop's agent, Samuel Worrell, was supported as district treasurer, and the appointment of a director of music was left with the district presidency. It was moved and carried, that the next district conference be held at Elk Mills, over the week-end including Labor Day, 1934. At 9:40 p. m. the housing committee had the names of the visitors, and read where they were going to stay for the night. At 9:50, the young people of Philadelphia Branch produced a "Paddies" day program in the form of a broadcasting station. Sunday morning, March 18, an early prayer meeting was held, in charge of H. L. Livingston and W. Lewis, of Scranton, Pennsylvania. Breakfast was served at nine o'clock. At 9:30 a. m. Sunday school program started. D. Wiesen spoke on "The Need for God," and Brother Lewis, on "Our Need for God." Brother Hardy, of Washington, District of Columbia, assisted throughout this service. At eleven o'clock, church service was held. Brother Hield, of Brooklyn, was the speaker. His sermon was on "The Life of Christ." At one o'clock, dinner was served. At 2:15 p. m. a baptismal service was scheduled. It was in charge of H. L. Livingston and R. J. Hawkins. Brother Livingston spoke on the "Responsibility of Entering the Kingdom of God." The candidates were Brother Cludery, of Philadelphia, and Sister Grace Edwards, of Baltimore. At 2:50 p. m. the young people held their business meeting in the lower auditorium while the older folks held a prayer service in the upper auditorium. The prayer meeting was in charge of Thomas Carr, Edward Lewis, and William Floyd, of Washington. The young people's meeting was in charge of District President Livingston. The leaders of each branch were called upon to say something that would enlighten the group. Brother N. Preusch spoke on "To Be Prepared." "The Possibility of Holding a Young People's Institute Up in Deer Park," and "Missionary Work." Brother Hield also spoke to the group. Plans were made to have week-end institute in the near future, and to invite President F. M. McDowell. The place and time of the institute were left to the officers of the district. At 5:30 p. m. luncheon was served. At seven o'clock, the evening service was held. H. L. Livingston, and T. M. Carr, were the speakers. The theme of the hour was "We Cannot Do Anything in Our Own Light."

Our Departed Ones

THOMPSON.—Florence Lenore Thompson was born August 12, 1890, at Little Sioux, Iowa, and departed this life April 9, 1934, after a short illness. When she was but five years of age, her parents moved to Lamoni, Iowa, where she spent the remainder of her life. She graduated from Lamoni schools and taught there several years. She was baptized May 6, 1899. After attending Graceland College, she finished her course in dramatic arts in Iowa City. Returning to Graceland, in September, 1925, she took up the work of instructor in dramatics at the college, where she had continued until the accident which caused her death. She was journeying toward Independence to participate in and enjoy the General Conference when the accident occurred. She was brought to the Independence Sanitarium where everything was done that was humanly possible. She leaves to mourn her death, her father, F. L. Thompson, of Lamoni; two sisters, Mrs. Hugh Hunt, of Rosalie, Nebraska, and Mrs. James Thomas, of Atherton, Missouri; her aunt, Mrs. Grace Vredenburg, who has lived with her the past three years; other relatives, and a host of friends. She will be greatly missed not only in her home town and at the college, but in many other places where her influence has reached through the lives of former students. Funeral services were conducted April 11, 1934, at Lamoni, Iowa.

FLETCHER.—James Madison Fletcher was born in Indiana, February 10, 1861, and departed this life at his home near Lamar, Indiana, January 15, 1934. When seven years of age he moved to Iowa with his parents. September 1, 1871, he was united in marriage to Sarah Ann Baker. To this union were born eight children, five boys and three girls: Francis Henry, Elmer DeMaurice, John Leslie, George Edward, Arthur Eugene, who departed this life in infancy, Mary Rosabelle Gray, Idah Elizabeth McKim, and Dola Esta DeLang. Besides his children, he leaves twenty-two grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. His father, mother, brothers, and sisters all preceded him in death. Burial services were held from the Saints' church, at Lamar. The funeral was conducted by Elder J. R. Sutton. Brother Fletcher will be greatly missed by his many friends and relatives.

Remember the Poor

Now is the time to give a thought
To those who are poor and sad.
To give to those who have less than we
And make their hearts more glad.
If you cannot give your thousands
You can give the widow's mite,
And the least you do to help them
Will never be lost to sight.

Then go to the sick with a loving smile,
To the poor with an open hand.
And to the haunts of the lowly,
You will find them in ev'ry land.
And do not forget the children
Whose pleasures in life are few,
But give them a ray of sunshine bright,
'Twill cheer this young heart anew.

We pass each other as days go by,
But we seldom have time to heed,—
We who are filled with our own content,
How much our neighbors may need.
It costs so little, I wonder why,
We give it so little thought,
A smile, kind word, a glance, a touch,
What magic with them is wrought.

■ A Chance to Trade

During the recent General Conference a brother in Independence entertained three visitors. One was a livestock man from Colorado, one a cotton planter from Louisiana, and the other a corn grower from Iowa. They fell to talking about their work. They were all planning to reduce their output so that prices would rise.

"But who is going to pay the higher prices?" asked the host.

It appeared that their plans would merely mean a rise in the cost of living for each other.

"Instead of destroying your surplus production, why couldn't you trade?" pursued the host.

The man from Colorado needed corn and cotton goods, and the man from Louisiana would be quite glad to have meat for his table and corn for his mules. The Iowa man, too, was willing to trade.

Why not trade? Why not?

■ Crop Reduction

A newspaper article reveals that the great sandy wastes of Tibet once held a teeming population, highly advanced in the arts and civilization; they were a blue eyed and fair people. Today the land is covered with wandering dunes and inhabited only by sunburned and primitive nomads who barely subsist. Why? The country formerly had a moderate rainfall, but Mother Nature decided to shut off the water supply and the land became desolate.

A parallel, but perhaps not related fact is that the central part of the United States used to be marked in the old geographies as "The Great American Desert"; the further fact that for three years we have had drouth conditions, and the final fact that we have had only one respectable rain since last October. Some people are ready to call it "The Great American Desert" again. Unless there is rain there will be no crops worth mentioning.

In view of the situation the proposal to plow up a percentage of the crops to boost prices looks a bit rash. A people so thankless for nature's bounties may be crying for famine relief in another year. Some punishment would be well deserved.

The Use of Leisure Time

Church Attitude on Dancing, Cards, Liquor, Tobacco, etc.

During the early days of the recent General Conference, reports were broadcasted from some unauthorized source through two large press services that our church had "lifted the ban against liquor, tobacco, dancing," and other things that have hitherto been the subject of disapproval by church people. These reports were published before the conference had even considered the new resolution on leisure time.

Nothing could be farther from the truth than to say that the church has "lifted the ban" on harmful amusements. The resolutions concerning dancing and the use of liquor and tobacco are still on the records, and they have not been rescinded. We may add that there is little possibility that they may be. The church stands where it has always stood in its attitude towards harmful amusements.

It should be carefully noticed that the church position on the question of amusements has never been extreme or fanatical. In reading the resolutions one can detect nothing but an attitude of Christian kindness, looking to the welfare of the members of the church. It would be good for members who are interested in the problem to read the following General Conference Resolutions: 92, 217, 235, 329, 362, 377, and 463. The spirit of these documents is not severe or intolerant.

A step forward in the statement of a constructive attitude towards the whole problem was made in a document proceeding from the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, on April 14, 1932, and was adopted by the General Conference.

Now the church is to be congratulated that the General Conference of 1934 has placed on our books a fine and enlightened statement of our attitude. The document deserves a careful reading and thoughtful consideration by every member of the church. No one of any intelligence can possibly mistake the intent of it. We are giving it in full below for the benefit of our readers and for the church records. It was first printed on page 118 of the Conference Daily Herald.

THE RESOLUTION ON LEISURE TIME

Presented by the Quorum of High Priests and Adopted by the Seventy-sixth General Conference

Whereas the problem of the wise use of leisure time concerns human life and conduct ranging from questionable commercialized amusements to creative church service, and

Whereas the Seventy-fifth General Conference of the church, acting on the advice of the spiritual authorities of the church, adopted a document urging an educational and spiritual approach to this problem under the direction of the ministry, and

Whereas the members of the church have pledged by their baptismal covenant to follow Jesus Christ through good and evil report to the end of their days implying a wholly consecrated life in body, mind, spirit, and

Whereas it is impossible to specify all the ways in which leisure time may be used not in harmony with the ideals of the church, and therefore the futility of attempting further to secure righteousness by legislative action,

Therefore be it resolved: That we urge the First Presidency through the proper channels of administrative and priestly authority, to direct and nurture, in home and church the Saints in more creative educational and spiritual use of leisure time, and,

Be it further resolved: That the pastors, members of the priesthood, and all others (especially parents) having direction of the activities of the Saints reaffirm their belief in the wisdom of restraining our activities so as to exclude any and all forms of amusements and uses of leisure time which in any way tend to break down our moral standards or which would hinder our spiritual development and that we further be urged and trained to give special attention to developing creative interests and abilities which will lead to the realization of ideals of the church in the daily lives of its members.

The church may well be proud of this document. It puts us all, young and old, "on our honor." It is our responsibility to try to live up to the spirit of our laws in a conscientious way; certainly there is no room for young people to try to see by what ingenuity they can "get around it." The test of righteousness is not alone in the things we don't do; the real test is in the things we are doing.

The problem is a recurrent one. We have no illusions that it will stay permanently settled. Fathers and mothers will often be embarrassed by children who want to follow worldly customs—by sons who want to smoke and by daughters who want to dance. They will find it hard to teach young people to make their own decisions to refrain from these things and do other and better things. It will always be easier to try to make the decisions for the young, and then try to compel them to obey the decisions; but such decisions, as always, will be circumvented by some. It is a hard task to implant moral controls in young hearts and to teach them positive ideals. But it is the most important thing we can do.

The wise prove, and the foolish confess, by their conduct, that a life of employment is the only life worth leading.—Paley.

Blue Pencil Notes

A CORONER'S JURY in Jackson County, Missouri recently returned a verdict, in the case of a man killed in the wreck of his own automobile, that "he came to his death through inability to drive his car while intoxicated." That is another thing the Government should have thought about and sent out experts to teach men how to drive while intoxicated.

A HOLLYWOOD ACTRESS asked divorce on the grounds that her husband had called her the "dumbest woman" he had "ever known." The judge took one look at the husband and concluded that the woman must be even as the husband had said, else why marry the man—but granted the divorce. The husband is now looking for another. Cupid and stupid and the divorce courts have pretty close harmony these days.

DURING THE DAYS when I was a paste dauber in the book bindery in Lamoni, I had a working mate who was learning to ride the bicycle. The old-time bicycle was hard to master. This young man was practicing his art along one of the old board sidewalks in the south edge of town when he met a girl (daughter of our missionary, Elder Stedman). The girl, being justly apprehensive, stepped from the walk and set a bucket of water that she had laboriously carried from a distant well in a safe spot. The rider wobbled along, fixed one eye on the bucket and one on the girl, resolved to miss both, ran off the walk and ran over the bucket in its "safe place," spilling all the water. Thus in life we sometimes do the very thing that we have resolved to avoid. "The thing that I feared has come upon me," is an old saying. Fear tends to defeat our precautions. When we master ourselves, under divine guidance, we have confidence and steer a straight course.

OLD TRADITIONS of childhood still persist. This spring I saw the boy next door (Elder Amos Higdon's grandson) out in the back yard with a big box of table salt. He was following a cock robin that kept always about ten feet in advance of the boy. Seeing me the boy said: "Brother Smith, how do I get near enough to put the salt on his tail?" Someone had been "spoofing" the lad. I told him that I could not help solve that problem as I had never been able to work it out when a boy. That seems to be the crux of the whole matter, all through life,—if you get near enough to put the salt on the bird's tail, you do not need the salt.

*Some lives are like a sonnet,—
So many lines, no more, no less,*

*The accent here and here and here,
Formal, conventional, precise,—
God only knows how tedious.
And some are like a burst of jazz,
Tumultuous, now high, now low,
No rhythm or pulse to march by,—
Or like a flare, dazzling, then gone.
. . . But some are like a hymn,—
Music and poetry and light,
Free, harmonious, and sustained,—
And at the end, "Amen!"*

E. A. S.

Photographs Wanted

In response to an earlier note requesting photographs, some old pictures were sent us by friends, which time and exposure to light have dimmed to the extent that they will not reproduce successfully for printing. What we intended to ask for was pictures of historic places and persons of importance in the church work. These photographs should be new and clear. Snapshots ordinarily do not make good "cuts" for printing, although exceptionally clear ones can be used.

Readers and friends will help us to make the Herald more interesting and useful by sending pictures of persons or groups who have done something of importance in branch and district work. Our Business Manager tells us that the new photo-engraving equipment will soon be in shape and ready for production. We need the pictures now. Send to The Editors, Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

"Conference Daily" Completed

Due to the plan of publication this year it was impossible to get the account of the final conference procedure into the last issue of the Conference Daily Herald. To make the information available we have devoted the center section of four pages in this week's issue of our regular Herald to the last daily edition. This section can be detached from this issue and bound with your Daily Herald for preservation. This will not interfere with the regular Herald material. The section contains the final news and minutes, and a list of appointments corrected to date. A final and complete list of all appointees will appear later.

There is a higher law than the constitution.—William H. Seward.

ACROSS THE DESK

By F. M. S.

— Informal Chats From the Office of the President —

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH

BROTHER Lester O. Wildermuth who has for a number of years been active as a missionary in the quorums of Seventy recently wrote us commenting on the editorial which was recently published in the Herald in regard to the need for young men to carry on the work of the Seventy. Brother Wildermuth writes:

"My grandfather, Otis Shumway, was one of the Seventy in the time of Joseph the Seer, your grandfather. My father, Eli M. Wildermuth, was a charter member of the Reorganization and one of the first Seventy ordained. And I have tried to carry on the work as a missionary and Seventy for nearly thirty years."

Brother Wildermuth enclosed a clipping from a religious paper which indicates that other churches are having trouble in maintaining their lists of appointees. The clipping is from a column called "Weekly News Letter" but the paper from which it is taken is not clearly indicated. The clipping is as follows:

"Churches: Plan Seeks Single Men for Episcopal Mission

"Clifford P. Morehouse, vigorous editor of the Episcopal weekly, The Living Church, last week presented a plan to aid the struggling missions of his financially embarrassed church. In addition to steps in reorganization and economy, one novel idea was proposed. Mr. Morehouse would like to see organized a 'flying corps' of young unmarried priests for replacement and extension work in the missionary field.

"The young bachelors would promise not to marry during a three-year period to be spent in foreign lands. Mr. Morehouse feels the cause of missions would benefit by the bachelors' low salaries, low expenses, and youthful enthusiasm."

This is interesting in the light of our own experiences.

IN A REPORT from Brother J. L. Verhei of the Portland District there is reflected a condition which promises definite progress for the work in that field. The priesthood generally are working together on a concerted plan for the advancement of the work. Brother Verhei feels that good gains in the financial work of the district have been made as well as an improvement along spiritual lines. He says that the priesthood in that area continues intensely active and that all are bending all their energies to the advancement of the work. The young people's organization is functioning at top speed, and he speaks of the day of fasting and prayer on the 4th of March as being outstanding because of its observance by both adults and youth and even children. All the branches of the district seem to have kept the fast.

A discouraging note creeps into his report when compelled to state that at least one of the branches in the district is inactive. In spite of this he feels encouraged and adds:

"We have much to be thankful for, but above everything else, are we thankful for the knowledge that Zion is nearer to us today than ever before, and as we near the end of this generation with but a few short years separating us from its close, we thank an almighty God that the people of this field have realized it with us and have fixed their eyes upon the goal, determined to swerve neither to the right nor the left until it is attained."

BROTHER George G. Lewis recently wrote from Australia saying that Sister Lewis has just been released from the hospital after a siege of scarlet fever but was returned to the hospital on the physician's discovering that she had a form of nasal diphtheria which would require treatment to prevent her becoming a carrier of the disease. Their little girl was convalescing from an attack of diphtheria. But Brother Lewis was confined even more closely to the home and its duties by reason of the fact that a brother-in-law had, as a result of an accident, suffered a fractured skull. Brother Lewis says:

"Our troubles have been many during the past year but we are looking for brighter times in the near future and trust that there will be a possibility of renewing activities."

We know that Brother Lewis will have the sympathy of his host of friends and we know how restless he will be under the inability to carry on his church work. Even in the midst of his trouble Brother Lewis finds opportunity to remember the men of the Council and the General Conference in his prayers and he wishes for them the blessing of the Father in abundance for the benefit of the church.

To Zion's Christian Legion

An open letter to all officers and members of Zion's Christian Legion:

My dear friends and fellowworkers:

The General Conference is now a matter of history and there lies ahead of us a definite period of two years with its opportunities for labor. We have before us a program such as we have never had in this or any other regional territory. The prosecution of our plans will bring such success to the work of the church as we have little dreamed possible. Now is the time to arise to the occasion. The church needs and in its need cries for our immediate assistance. We can show the Saints the way out of the problems of the present if we will only work together.

We are expecting, therefore, with compliments to Nelson, that every man will do his duty. It is anticipated that every Divisional Commander will arise to the task of creating in every branch in his territory a company of the Legion. Moreover, we are expecting that these companies will be actual working units. The formality of organizing is not enough. Every Commander will accept it as his definite responsibility to see that these units are an operating section of the divisional territory. Work not worry is the motto for the moment. Let us get down to business.

Let us accept seriously the challenge of President Smith when he said: "Show me!" Every member of this organization must be a worker. Shirkers are not wanted. If you have an ambition to make a contribution to the church here is your opportunity. None are too young, none are too old to assist in this great cause. If your Divisional Commander is not on the job of getting you organized stir him up to the fact that you want to get busy in the task of helping redeem the church from its present bondage of indebtedness.

It is required that every Legionaire possess a tithing card and become a systematic tithe payer. It is likewise required that he pay his dues of twenty-five cents a month as set out in the objectives and outlines appearing in the last Herald. If we will, as well, engage ourselves in our social work and study the ideals of the church and the Legion we will discover that a program of interest will be developed and our church will have a new meaning for us and the light of God's spirit will surround us.

We are inviting you to watch this space each week for instruction and advice regarding the operation of the Legion. Cut out the page in last week's Herald containing the "Outlines and

Worship

(From notes taken on an address by Roy A. Cheville to the young people at the recent General Conference.)

What is worship? It is fellowship and communion—fellowship with God. It varies between the two extremes, the formalism of the Catholic and Episcopalian churches, and the informality and lack of regularity in the "Holy Roller" meetings.

Some worship doesn't go anywhere. It creates excitement aplenty, but attaches to no purpose and sets no goals. If we are to make our worship amount to anything we must attach it to the necessities of life. Some worship services merely entertain us and give us aesthetic satisfactions.

Real worship experience can do four things for us:

1. Real worship purges and refines life.
2. It gives us a sense of Divine support.
3. It gives us the stimulation and help of the fellowship of others who are traveling along the same path with us.
4. It places upon us the compulsion of service to a great cause.

We are engaged in a world-wide project—a great cause.

It isn't always whether you believe in God, but how you believe in him that counts. Some conceptions of God will make you selfish. Your concept of God must be big enough—big enough for the universe, but intimate enough for personal fellowship.

There are laws of human friendship that we have all learned to understand and observe. We must be loyal, we must not offend, we must be honest, we must give more than we get. The laws of worship are the laws of friendship with God.

For real worship, you need something to pray about—a great wish, a task, a purpose—something specific. You can't pray in general and get any feeling into it. Worship is an answer to a need.

Objectives of Zion's Christian Legion so you will have it for future reference. We will get out in the near future a small pamphlet setting out the duties of officers and members as well as the objectives of the organization. Watch this space for the announcement of this contribution.

Sincerely,

D. T. WILLIAMS,
Legion Commander

For Women Only

Once, when I was in one of the Shubert productions, there was a girl in the cast who was the envy of every woman who laid eyes on her. One night Mr. Ziegfeld brought a friend of his, a well-known artist, to rehearsal.

"Isn't she the most beautiful thing you ever saw?" proudly demanded the producer.

"No," said the artist bluntly, "she isn't even pretty. She has a middling good figure but she carries herself superbly. And she feels beautiful. That is all. Darn clever girl! Do you know," he added seriously, "I have a theory that every woman in the world should say to herself at least once a day with great pride and even greater humility: 'I have a secret. I am beautiful; I am beloved.' And then she should carry herself as if she believed it!"

Very few women can have a perfect figure. But any woman, if she is willing to take the trouble, can have something which is much more valuable. And that is a beautiful carriage.

The first principle of good carriage is pride. To begin with, the head should have a proud lift. The chest should be carried high. Find a full-length mirror and practice walking toward your reflection. Remember that no woman is more youthful than her walk. I can follow a woman down the street for a block and guess within five years of her age without ever seeing her face.

We do, in a very real sense, live by faith. The only people who manage to live without faith are the insane. # The Meaning of Our Message

A Radio Address

By A. B. Phillips

A NUMBER of inquiries have come to me concerning the nature of our message, its distinctive features, and reasons why people should concern themselves in it, or should affiliate with the church which bears this message to the world. It is not possible in a brief time to answer these questions to the extent that might be desirable, but I desire to show some of the features of interest that will help toward that end.

Religion is as old as the annals of human nature, and its need has been just as insistent. It may not be universally recognized, but the fact is that religion has practically made the recorded history of man. Without it, and without its influence in the world, no nation could have arisen to a dominant position anywhere on earth with the prospect of becoming a stabilized power for the upbuilding of humanity. The efforts which have been made under religious influences in past ages have a distinct bearing upon the conditions found in the world today, and we are all indebted to the beneficent efforts of those who preceded us for the existence of our most worth-while activities and institutions.

CONNECTING THE PAST AND PRESENT

God has been working for the good of mankind from the beginning of human history. He has sought to lead upward toward higher and better things, but in order that man may be a free agent and have some credit for his own progress, it has been necessary to enlighten before leading him to any great extent. Therefore those who prefer the things in life that debase and injure must learn the lessons of life through the suffering and defeat that result from improper purposes and indulgences. While many are seemingly prevented from attaining all that should be reached, others have made remarkable progress and have been a source of inspiration to a great portion of humanity.

Various statements in the Scriptures reveal the fact that the gospel of a coming Messiah and Savior was preached in the early morning of human history. The coming of the law of Moses is distinctly declared to have been the result of disobedience on the part of men in that era, and therefore God added the law in order to enforce necessary discipline upon the Jews until they should be better prepared for the coming of Christ.

It was not long after the departure and ascension of Jesus before false doctrines arose in the New Testament church, and many evils crept in among the membership that endangered the church. Paul forewarned Timothy that the time would come when they would not endure "sound doctrine," but would pervert the truth and introduce many heresies that should lead men astray. History shows that this prediction was literally fulfilled, and in the course of time many religions arose that were largely perversions of the message presented by Jesus.

The reformations of the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries were attempts to correct errors that were but little understood in many instances, and those who attempted these reforms often fell into errors quite as grievous as those which they repudiated. It was largely because of these mistakes and disagreements that religious controversies became so apparent during the early part of the nineteenth century, at which time the movement now represented by the Latter Day Saints came into prominence.

COMING OF THE RESTORATION

This early movement by the Saints was known as the Restoration of the gospel and the church which Jesus had directed to be established, but which had not been maintained at all times in complete harmony with his teachings. This departure from the faith, and also the restoration which should come to pass afterward, were foretold by the inspired writers of the Scriptures.

The purpose of the Restoration was to bring back again into the practice of the Lord's people those doctrines that had been neglected, and to restore the church according to the original organization that had been authorized. Those who went forth with the restored message declared that they had been divinely called to present anew the old Jerusalem gospel as formerly preached by the New Testament apostles and ministry of our Lord. The remarkable claims of these men spread throughout the nation and even among other nations in foreign lands, until many thousands of people accepted the message and united with the newly restored church.

The message presented aroused much controversy among the people, particularly among those who were leaders of other religious movements. Misunderstanding and misrepresentation were quite common in those days, and many were astonished when they learned how simple and plain were the principles of Jesus, and how great were the promises that he made to those who would receive him and his message. These pioneers of the true faith did not need to make apology for their teachings, but could point to the Scriptures to prove their truth and their importance.

DOCTRINAL BASIS OF THE RESTORATION

In order to make clear the doctrinal basis of the Restoration, which we now teach, let us remember that Jesus himself informed his disciples that an Elias should come "and restore all things." The doctrine that God gives revelation to his church from time to time was a part of the ancient faith, but in the course of time it appears that revelation ceased, due to a departure from the original faith. By the Restoration the church was again given the privilege of a message from God to guide into all truth, and the Saints therefore believe that God speaks to his church in this age, as well as in the ancient days. By this means those who are to minister for the church are designated, and in this way is made known the divine will on important matters of concern to the church.

Jesus and his disciples also established the doctrine of baptism by immersion as an obligation required of all who would follow him. Afterward individuals arose who taught that this was not required, and therefore many sought to enter the church by sprinkling or pouring. The message of the Restoration teaches that man has no right to disregard the word of the Lord, or to attempt to introduce any forms or ceremonies as substitutes for those originally commanded by our Lord. Jesus declared:

"Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men . . . And he said unto them, Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition."—Mark 7: 7, 9.

The religion of Christ is designed to accomplish a definite work in the hearts and lives of those who will receive it, but willingness to observe his will is essential to this end. To substitute human notions and methods for the perfect plan of God is to come short of the divinely established goal. By observance of his will, it is possible for man to obtain remarkable gifts of the Holy Spirit. The parting instructions of Jesus to his disciples are of great interest to us all, for he declared that those who would observe all things as he commanded them, should receive the gifts of the Spirit which guides into all truth.

PROMISE OF THE DIVINE WITNESS

One of the outstanding evidences of divinity in the mission and teaching of Jesus is the power of God. It bore witness of him from the beginning, both by the descent of the Spirit upon him at his baptism, and by many manifestations in the course of his ministry. This heavenly power was not only given to Jesus and his disciples, but it was repeatedly promised to those who would obey the gospel and become a follower of the great Master Teacher. On various occasions our Lord informed his disciples that this priceless gift should continue forever with his people, if only they would sincerely observe his will. John records one of these occasions, in which Jesus stated:

"If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: . . . But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me:"—John 14: 15-17; 15: 26.

The Apostle Paul presents very clearly this same promise to the people of God. It was understood as a divine heritage, and was a power in their lives designed to encourage them in Christian development and growth. To the saints at Corinth he said:

"Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. . . . Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. . . . But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."—1 Corinthians 12: 1, 3, 4, 7.

It was by the Holy Spirit that the sick were healed and the voice of prophecy and tongues was manifested in the ancient church. If we were to take away the many divine evidences of God's confirming grace upon the New Testament church, it would remove one of the most precious features of the Christian religion that influenced its establishment and greatly aided its spread among the nations of the world.

SOCIAL MEANING OF THE CHURCH

The gift of the Holy Spirit was designed of God to be a most powerful factor in establishing the social influence of the church. By its divine presence all believers feel the tie of an eternal brotherhood, and a divine Fatherhood over them. This was the teaching of the Savior, who solemnly informed his followers:

"But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your teacher, and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father on the earth: for one is your Father, even he who is in heaven."—Matthew 23: 8, 9. Revised Version.

The kingdom of heaven was to be established on earth, according to the teachings of Jesus, and it represented the social ideal of a united brotherhood under the Fatherhood of God. This was the thing of most importance in the Savior's message, and therefore he instructed his followers to take no anxious care for the perishable things of this life. He declared:

What of the Morrow?

By Arthur B. Taylor

FOR YEARS the family of nations carried on the affairs of the world in a more or less accepted way. Each nation seemed to be progressing about the same as they had done for several generations. So confident were the nations that civilization throughout the entire world had risen to a higher plane, and that arbitration of national disputes would take the place of war, that the Hague Tribunal was designated and established where all national differences were to be adjusted and settled by a Board of Arbitrators appointed by the family of nations. The plan was generally accepted. But its practicality was doubted by profound students of Biblical history who had carefully read its prophetic utterances, and by the followers of Karl Marx, and other exponents of socialistic government. The one believed that permanent peace could not be realized because greed, coupled with desire for power, would bring about wars from time to time, until the Prince of Peace should declare the end and bring in the millennium. The other group believed monarchial and/or capitalistic systems couldn't continue, but would fall beneath their own top heavy load; that the system of the holding of property and/or the distribution of wealth was unsound; that the following of the monarchial or capitalistic forms of government meant the final concentration of wealth in the hands of a few people; that as a nation protected its citizens' property rights against citizens of other nations, national friction would result; that national might would become national right, and nations would refuse the interference of other nations in the settling of disputes.

SCARCELY had the Hague Tribunal been set up and its praises sung throughout the world, when the veneer of our civilization was suddenly stripped off by the news that Germany had invaded Belgium. Within a few months almost the entire family of nations had taken sides and entered the great combat. In practically every instance each nation chose its fighting ground by reason of some secret alliance or trade relations, and in several instances to preserve the national existence.

When the war was over we found that many governments were compelled to give way to one of a different form. In each nation the free thinkers predominated and in accordance with the school of thought at the moment, that type of government was inaugurated. Year after year we have seen various types of government being set up. During the last few years dictatorships seem to be the most popular. Even in our own country we have seen vast changes. The people seem to have almost discarded party allegiance, except those who more or less depend on a political organization for their livelihood.

AS a people we are very much interested in the America of the future. What were the causes of our present political and economic quandary? What has brought about the present mental attitude of the American people? During the war millions of men were taken out of commercial life. As a result of the war there was a great demand for everything. Man power to produce was in demand. A premium was offered for it. So great was the demand that women, for the first time in American history, began to fill the white collar jobs. Wages in many instances doubled and trebled. The prices of raw materials and manufactured articles increased, as well as the volume, to meet the ever-increasing demand. America raised its standard of living. Men of ordinary means and ability became capitalists. After the war was over our soldiers had to be put back into civilian life. The demand, created by the war for raw materials and manufactured articles ceased to exist, and a new demand had to be created.

America had become not only the greatest creditor during the war, but also the wealthiest of the family of nations. Practically all other nations were bankrupt, especially those nations which had been participants in the war. In order to protect and make safe our already large loans to foreign countries we again loaned billions more in an effort to assist them to reestablish a sound financial basis, and also make possible an export trade for ourselves. Foreign bonds were floated and sold to every possible investor throughout this country. In order to give employment to our soldiers reentering civilian life, a market had to be found for our products. Large finance corporations were set up and a campaign of selling America everything and anything was organized. This campaign continued for almost ten years, until almost every home in America had in it all the modern conveniences, although but few of them were paid for. These finance corporations held the paper. In reality we had a paper inflation.

ABOUT the year 1929 the real crisis came. Our foreign bonds proved worthless, the stock market crashed, the American people had been oversold and couldn't pay off. In 1930 the entire American nation was taken in the throes of the world crash, commonly known as "the depression." For four years we have labored through it, each year a little worse off than the previous year. The last few months undoubtedly have been the hardest yet. Not because of the smallness of the sales volume, but because of the smallness of the cash reserve to carry on. From present indications, we can look for a change within the next few months. Just how materially that change will effect us time only can tell. It is a self-evident fact that in this machine age in which we are living we can produce considerably faster than we can consume. For a short period of time every man in America could be kept busy at his chosen profession or occupation. Almost without exception every home in America is destitute of many necessities. If every American home were reasonably supplied with the average conveniences and necessities, we could easily produce, under present conditions, on a three-day week, more than enough to supply our entire need. With rare exceptions foreign markets are almost a thing of the past. We have sent our engineers into every country of the world and taught them how we do things in America. Within the next fifteen or twenty years the majority of the nations will be self-supporting in the things they can produce, and will have reciprocal trade agreements for the things they can't produce. America must change its economic order. America must call for a change in its method of distribution. America must socialize industry to the extent that labor will receive a fair portion of the increment, or earnings from the machines which have replaced labor.

We are daily witnessing changes in our agricultural and industrial set-up. It is to be conceded that the old system is passing; that we are entering a new era. The various plans and ideas now being expressed are yet in their experimental stage. Some will fail, and maybe all of the present experiments will fail, but in spite of our failures we will yet evolve a new order of things. With the present mental attitude of the people it is doubtful if any plan can last any great length of time without being revamped to meet new conditions. Men will continue to devise ways and means, by invention and otherwise, to do what we are doing by a shorter method. At no time in the history of our land have we witnessed so many inventions and new methods to replace the old, as there are today. The old established ways of doing business or producing the finished product must give way to the new, which is a labor saving device.

THAT WHICH affects the world at large or the country to which we have sworn allegiance, affects us as individuals and as a church. The young prophet of Palmyra in the early days of his ministry brought the message of the gathering. Through him the Lord, by revelation, declared the necessity, and outlined the underlying principles on which it was to be carried out. At no time has that command been revoked, but on several occasions it has been affirmed. The events and developments of the past fifteen years are proof of the wisdom of the command. It is additional evidence of God being in this work, and our duty to work out the solution according to the rules laid down. Various attempts have been made, but each has ended in what might to some be called a dismal failure. It is improper to so label it, for the Nauvoo experiment almost succeeded. The Reorganization has made various attempts, but none of them have as yet proved entirely successful. Are we going to abandon the project? God gave us the principles of the gospel, but to us as individuals was given the task of working out our own salvation during a lifetime. Lives worth while are the result of adverse as well as favorable experiences. Likewise the church will fail in the "Movement of the Gathering," until it has worked out the elements which defeat it. It is a command, we must not abandon it. Each failure, and the causes, in the light of existing circumstances must be considered. If we are falling over the same obstacles we are open to criticism, but if it is a new hazard we should be slow in criticising.

Those whose duty it is to organize and supervise the gathering should be given the most loyal support, after they have laid down a comprehensive plan of the general principle under which they intend to operate. The gathering is as fundamental to Latter Day Saintism as any of the doctrine we teach. During the ministry of the Master He mourned because of the failure of the people in His day to comprehend His mission. While standing on the Mount of Olives looking over Jerusalem He said, "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens, but ye would not." In Latter Day revelation the Lord spoke as early as 1833 and said that there were enough even then to redeem Zion if they but would. The gathering is a process in the building of Zion. Zion is the result of the gathering. Zion is first a condition, and second a geographical location. The proper condition is the primary requisite. The location is of secondary importance, but essential because we are material beings and occupy space. The condition may be divided into three essential divisions as affecting the Gathering: (1) Spiritual, (2) Social, and (3) Econo- (Continued on page 526.)

To the Stars

As Larry walked swiftly from the street car line to her home, she was thinking of Sallie Ruth Blaine's last words to her before her departure from the Union Station at Kansas City with Mrs. Keithley. How sweet the child had looked standing there in the train compartment, smiling at them above an armful of roses, Jeff's parting gift. "No one will ever realize, Larry," she managed to whisper as she kissed her good-by, "all you've done for me. I'll be eternally grateful. And I do hope you can arrange your own life as happily as you have mine. Be good to Greg, won't you?"

That had set Larry pondering. Were her friends' lives so filled with problems as her own? Perhaps they were but the problems were not so apparent because of more skillful, more courageous handling. There was Nancy who almost on the spur of the moment had chosen to make a contract. Still she, Larry, couldn't arrange her life in Nancy's way. Eldred Hampton and Joe Dockerly were strong characters, but she knew that their world was crowded with uncertainty. People didn't understand them—she was sure no one did—and they were gossiped about. Still they were faithful to their ideals; they were likable, and not bitter. Next came John and Carmen, two happier people she had not observed for many months. Carmen's face simply glowed and sparkled nowadays. And when John had found work in Mr. Horace Peterson's printing shop, they seemed more than contented. This opening of work had been a heaven-sent blessing to the Hampton household, and Mother Eldred had hinted to Larry that it might mean a wedding along about Christmas-time.

But Greg—what of him? It seemed to Larry that a deeper appreciation and understanding of each other had sprung up between them since the night he had come to see her when her ankle was injured. Still she was worried. He was different. He never mentioned the church; avoided the subject whenever he could. He seldom went to services except when she insisted that he go with her. Complete indifference toward the needs of the Sunday school, of the W. H. Y. Class, and everything pertaining to church, seemed to rule his life. And to make it worse, he only smiled at his disinterest: "Just got tired of all this religion business," he grinned.

All this troubled Larry. He wasn't like the old Greg, and she was at loss to know what to do to wake him up. Should she mention his call to the priesthood sometime and ask him to tell her about it? or should she pretend that she knew nothing about it?

"Oh, Larry, is that you?" Mrs. Hampton's voice called from the floor above just as the girl was about to enter her own room.

"Yes, Mother Eldred, where are you?"

"Up here in the attic, come on up when you get time."

Hastily throwing off her hat and linen coat, Larry picked her way up the narrow attic stairs. Up there in a low-ceilinged room Mrs. Hampton was searching through some boxes. Her face was smudged with dust and her white hair was in disarray.

This was the first time Larry had ever been in the attic, and so she looked about curiously. Everywhere was an amazing quantity of trunks, little, big, round-topped, and flat-topped. Pieces of old and out-of-date furniture filled the corners of the room. There were stacks of boxes and music and magazines, ropes, odd assortments of old rugs, raincoats, lamps, jars, and a hundred other things.

"Looks like the Old Curiosity Shop," laughed Larry, "are you little Nell?"

"I don't feel very little," retorted the woman, "especially I didn't a minute ago when I cracked my head on a beam down under those eaves over there. But I thought, Larry, you'd be interested in hearing the latest news—"

"Yes, what is it?" eagerly.

"If everything goes as it ought to, Mr. Horace Peterson is going to take John as his partner—oh, of course, it will be some little time before we know for sure." There was motherly pride in the declaration.

"Goody!" ejaculated the girl.

"John's so tickled he couldn't eat lunch today. He's worried a lot about work. Hoped to get a school this summer, and hadn't had any encouragement in that direction. Well, maybe you think the idea of working right here in town where he can be close to Carmen and the church, doesn't appeal to him!"

"Wonderful, Mother Eldred!" cried Larry. "Do you think there is a possibility of their being married soon then?"

"Not soon, but if this work lives up to its promises, they might be married within a year. Goodness knows, the children deserve it."

Larry was so elated that she hopped about in little girl fashion. "My but you have a lot of stuff up here," she observed as she untangled her feet from some baling wire.

"Quite a lot," returned Mrs. Hampton, her voice issuing from the depths of an old trunk. "So many things of my mother's. And some of this furniture is Doc's; that old side-board over there belongs to him. I let him store his stuff up here to save storage costs."

"Furniture!" Larry stopped short.

"Yes, furniture he began housekeeping with when his wife was with him."

"Mother Eldred," Larry felt very bold and inquisitive as she spoke, "would you mind my inquiring about that? I've heard some gossip, and while you were at Lamoni, I happened to find a picture in Doc's book. It was the picture of the same woman whose picture hangs in Dorothy Cameron's apartment unless I'm awfully wrong. Then Mrs. Blaine got started about Doc's wife—it was the first time I'd heard that he had a wife. Naturally I'm curious. I'd—I'd like to know the straight of it now that I've heard several things—"

"There isn't much to tell, Larry, but you should know the facts—"

"I've been wondering about Doc since the night of our house party. Don't you remember when he acted so queer about Dorothy Cameron? Then later I saw the picture of her mother. What is it all about?"

Deliberately Mrs. Hampton brushed off the top of a wooden box and sat down as if she intended to relate a long story. In her hands, however, she continued to hold her dustcloth and a brush she had removed from the box.

"I expect you do have a hodge podge of information then, child—but tell me, Larry, what does Dorothy Cameron think about it," sharply.

"Why—nothing. She doesn't know anything. Just the other evening, she was asking me if I supposed Doc had known someone who looked like her mother."

Mrs. Hampton pursed her lips thoughtfully. Then she smiled wanly: "She's getting pretty warm as the children say when they hunt the thimble. It's this way Larry—I don't like to talk about it, but I do think Doc would want you to know the truth. He thinks a lot of you. Thirty years ago he married a girl named Sylvia Duclet back in New Jersey. She was younger than he and very pretty; she was of French origin. For a time they were wonderfully happy, then I presume Sylvia found Doc too quiet and sober. She seemed to have a great craving for romance, and she began to find it in one of their mutual friends.

She paused as if the story were too burdensome to finish, but her listener nodded encouragingly, and she went on: "Their home must have grown very unhappy, and that unhappiness was more stinging because of the sharp contrast to life as it was at first for them. Finally—after two years—Sylvia ran away with this mutual friend who wasn't that any longer." Larry shivered—this story bore too comfortable a similarity to one inseparably connected with her own life, that of her mother and father and Mr. Harrison.

But Mrs. Hampton was going on: "She left a note for Doc when he returned from work in which she told him that she didn't love him any more, and that she had gone away for good. She never wanted to see him again."

"How—how perfectly casual!" Larry's voice shook. She remembered another note.

"Cold-blooded, I'd say," Mrs. Hampton amended, "especially when she knew that her husband was crazy about her. In the note she asked him not to try to find her, and said that she couldn't endure him. He bored her. He was too religious, too sober, and that she wanted to be free and happy once more. Of course he was frantic! And he began a search for her that only ended a short time ago. A year or two after her disappearance, he got trace of them through a detective agency in the Middle West and came to Kansas City, but here he seemed to lose complete track of her. Sometimes, Larry," the story-teller lowered her voice almost to a whisper, "I think the only thing that has kept him alive has been his hope of finding her. He loves her still—I suppose she will always be his ideal and dream in spite of the injury she inflicted on him! That's the way life is, girl!" There was a quiver in her voice.

"You said something about the search coming to an end," ventured the girl.

"He found out quite accidentally that she had died. You see the Camerons coming here helped him in that, for Larry, Dorothy Cameron's mother, Sylvia, and Doc's Sylvia are the same woman!"

"Then—then it wasn't my imagination!" Larry managed to stutter. "They are the same!"

The woman seated on the box nodded. A tear had furrowed a clean path through the dust on one cheek. "Dorothy was her child by this second husband, for he must have been considered her husband; a common-law marriage, you know. Doc never knew of her getting a divorce from him. He has spent hundreds, perhaps thousands of dollars, trying to find her for fear she was in want. It's been his dream to find her, not to claim her if she was happy as she was, but just to know that all was well—and now she's gone! Poor Doc—when he learned that she was dead!" The tears were flowing freely now.

"And he hasn't told Dorothy?" Larry spoke her thought aloud.

"Of course not!" fiercely. "He's not that kind! It would kill him to have Dorothy think little or meanly of her own mother. He intends if Dorothy ever broaches the subject, to pass it off by saying that she reminds him of a woman he used to know—and that will be the truth."

"Glorious!" breathed Larry. "I'd expect just that sort of thing of Doc. He's a noble man, Mother Eldred." Her heart yearned for the woman before her. She wanted to press more questions, only they would have seemed impertinent. She wanted to say: "But he loves you, Mother Eldred. I don't believe Doc realizes how much he depends on you—how much you are his life. And now that his wife is dead, won't he forget and after a time marry you?" But such thoughts were cheap! People like Doc and Eldred Hampton didn't arrange their lives that way. They lived a long time helping other people, smiling, making the least of their own troubles, always the more sympathetic with others because of their own heartaches.

"I do thank you for telling me, Mother Eldred, "Larry's tone was reverent, and then she kissed the dust-stained forehead. "I shan't mention it to anyone unless you say I may to Greg. But I think both you and Doc are wonderful!" Quietly she slipped out of the attic leaving Mrs. Hampton alone with the furniture that had once belonged to Doc's Sylvia. The girl felt as if she had worshiped at some shrine.

"It's a gorgeous night," blissfully sighed Larry; "I love June nights, Greg." They were driving toward Crest Lakes, one of the prettiest spots in the country. There are several lakes in this natural park, some being used for boating and some for bathing. But Larry and Greg were only riding that night.

"This is great," he replied. "Look at that moon!" and he pointed at the crescent sliver of reddish orange just about to drop behind the treetops.

"Uhhuh," she murmured.

His right hand turned her face to him: "Love it?" he asked. And when she did not reply in words, only looked at him, he kissed her. "It's wonderful driving with you like this Larry. You're awfully sweet!"

After a long pause she whispered: "Greg, I want to talk to you tonight."

"Do you?" tenderly, "I'm glad."

"Yes—I want to ask you something."

"All right. Shoot."

They had driven in near the bank of one of the lakes. Ahead of them the north star seemed to wink and blink at them through the leafy branches of the trees.

"The stars are pretty tonight, aren't they?" Larry irrelevantly demanded. "I like stars, Greg. Sometimes I wonder if we'll ever know more about them than that they're just great bodies like the earth floating in space. There's something about stars that I love. When I'm happy I feel as if my soul were headed for the stars.

"Then you're not like the little Boor boy—I believe that was his nationality —in Olive Schreiner's Story of an African Farm. Ever read it?" She shook her head. "Well, he's a strong but rather lonesome character—main character in the book if I remember it correctly; it's been a long time since I read it—and he goes out and looks at the stars after all have gone to bed and thinks how ageless they are; how many tragedies they have witnessed on the earth, and probably how many they will yet witness. He compares his insignificance to their great significance in the universe, and right there on the barn roof star gazing, he senses some of his own obscurity, humility and dependency on the Great Omnipotence."

"No, I don't feel that way about stars. I love them. Come, Greg, let's get out and look at them." Secretly Larry was frightened at the prospect of plunging into the subject nearest her heart. How would he answer her? What would he do about it?

"But you wanted to talk to me," he reminded.

"After we've looked at the stars," hurriedly.

For several minutes they stood on the turfy bank of the pool, the waves lapping softly at their feet; the cool wind coming across the water fanned their cheeks and lost itself in the treetops with a companionable murmur.

"Now," Greg's tone suggested expectation as he settled himself comfortably in the car once more.

"I—I don't know how to begin, "stammered Larry, feeling quite shy and lost. He smiled. "Greg, do please try to understand me! And I want you to tell me the truth, will you?"

"I'm not in the habit of lying to you, Larry," solemnly.

"Oh, silly!" her laugh broke the emotional tension under which she was laboring, and she could speak more freely. "Well, then, please, Greg—why did you refuse to accept your call to the priesthood?" When he did not open his lips to speak at once, she went on in explanation: "I didn't know you had until just before I hurt my ankle. I mean I didn't know anything about it."

For a full minute there was nothing but the sounds of the woods about them. Then Greg spoke as he looked intently at his hand resting on the steering wheel: "I wasn't interested, Larry. There are several reasons why I can't see my way clear to do priesthood work."

"But Greg," she was distressed, "it doesn't seem right! Calls to the priesthood are supposed to be divine, and you're—oh, Greg, if you knew I wanted you to be interested in it, would you?"

"Why—Larry—"

"I know, I know. It's all my fault. I told you that I hated the idea of your ever serving in the priesthood. But Greg—I said that months ago! Since then I've been studying about that matter and a lot of others. Carmen, the jewel,

Lesson Six—May 6

The Church the Hope of the Kingdom

THE INSTRUMENT

There are many Scriptures which indicate that the church is the instrument chosen of God to bring forth The Kingdom. Over and over again, in the book of Doctrine and Covenants, the task set before the church is to bring forth Zion, which is The Kingdom. To this we should add the testimony of the Bible prophets: "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you The Kingdom." "The mountain of the Lord's House." Ye shall be called, "Sought out. . . ." "Say ye to the daughter of Zion," "prepare ye the way of the people." "Seek ye first the kingdom, and to establish its righteousness . . ." All these, in their settings, make it the task of the church to seek to bring forth The Kingdom.

THE THEME OF PROPHECY

This purpose to use the church as the instrument to bring forth The Kingdom, together with the belief of Christian peoples that God has called them to this task, accounts for the fact that The Kingdom is the theme of prophecy. "In the days of these kings shall the god of heaven set up a kingdom." "The government shall be upon his shoulder." "The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ." Thus runs the theme of prophecy.

KINGDOM-BUILDING MEN

"Except your righteousness exceed . . . ye shall in no wise enter the Kingdom." "No one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope and charity. . . ."

"It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." "We must through much tribulation enter the Kingdom."

The building of The Kingdom is no ordinary or commonplace task; and such Scriptures as the above mean that not all men are the kingdom-building type. According to Jesus, it takes born-again men to "see" the Kingdom. One thing is certain—there is a wide disparity in philosophies of life among even men of the church. A political theory which seems godly to some seems devilish to others. How shall the Kingdom be realized through the labors of men whose viewpoint of life is not The Kingdom-building point of view? This fact bears heavily upon the question of whether or not the church is the prospective builder of The Kingdom.

OPPOSITE PULLS

Because Christianity has had to postpone the building of The Kingdom to the building of Kingdom-building men, many church members have come to believe that the whole task of the church is to build men; that its sole concern is "personal" behavior. To build The Kingdom, to establish A Government, is beside their thoughts. "Social" behavior is none of their concern, they say. And many such men are included in the membership of the church.

To this fact add the fact of the rule of Common Consent in the church, and it is not difficult to see why the church has failed to bring forth The Kingdom. Those who believe that the church has nothing to do with Economic Government set themselves in opposition to such an enterprise. An opposite pull of moral wills ensues. Under these circumstances the forces of the church are not focused in the Kingdom-building business.

Granting that the number of church members who believe that "this people must be organized" for economic adventure, "otherwise, they shall be cut off" (Doctrine and Covenants 51:1) may be greater than the number who do not believe, the opposite pull of moral wills delays the building of The Kingdom. One reason is that church people dread schisms. It is un-Christian to be divided. And so, the day of The Kingdom is put off to a time when there shall be more nearly "a unity of the faith."

The church, like society at large, is a mass of interacting wills. It is certain that its course is shaped by the moral tone of the mass. And what is back of this opposition of wills is a question to which church men need to give serious consideration.

RELATIVE MORAL UNPREPAREDNESS

How does the attitudes of church leaders toward social reconstruction which aims at one economic status for all compare with the attitudes of political leaders? Which inclines to the belief that "in your temporal affairs you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly?" Which inclines to an economic set-up under which men are to have "equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships . . . ?" And which, because of its devotion to the welfare of man, is most likely to apprehend the Kingdom-building implications of such principles?

OUR MISTAKE

No higher economic code has been conceived than that given by the prophet of The Restoration. It embodies the moral sentiments of all the prophets of the Kingdom of the past. And yet, somehow, a large proportion of "believers" have not conceived that code in relation to the world's economic problem. We have not related religious principles to economic institutions. And because we have failed in this, we have been incapable of the moral judgment in which "The Government" must be established. Whether or not our mistake is a mistake of the head or of the heart is a question on which opinions differ.

PRESENT TRENDS

If our mistake has been a mistake of the head, it bids fair to be corrected, for the educational program of the church is being recast; it is being made to bear more directly and heavily upon the moral issues of economic life. We are talking now of a divinely constituted economic commonwealth. Add to this fact the motivations to which such studies give rise, and you have a combination that no nonreligious society can match.

A COMMON ETHIC

The citizenry of The State could not agree, even, on what to do with such a palpably ungodly institution as The Liquor Traffic. And because it could not agree, in actual practice, the Eighteenth Amendment could not be made the rule of The Nation. No test of prohibition could be made.

Now suppose the citizenry of The State facing questions of property institutions out of which our economic ills arise. What chance would there be of a common ethic which could serve as a basis for the reconstruction of economic life to make it conform to the will of God? What chance would there be of a graceful universal acquiescence in a new public policy which would uproot financial and industrial imperialism and make the basis of initial distribution the actual proportionate contribution of the individual to social well-being? Compared to other agencies, what promise does the church give of a code that will make its economic institutions the embodiment of the righteousness of The Kingdom?

THE CHURCH SELECTIVE

While we have paid almost no attention to it whatever, the rules governing membership in the church (see Doctrine and Covenants 17:7, 18) are calculated to make church membership selective on the basis of fitness for The Kingdom.

And equally important with these rules are the rules laid down in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7. Six times in this paragraph the church is instructed to "cast out" material that is unfit for the Kingdom-building business.

And again, add to these rules the rule of Doctrine and Covenants 85: 21, apply them to the affairs of the church, and it is not difficult to see how it would easily outclass any other agency as the hope of The Kingdom.

TWO PERIODS OF DISCIPLINE

There are two aspects of religious discipline for church members. The first is the period of preparation. This is the time of saturation and of personal discipline; it is the shaping of material with which to build the structure. Christianity teaches before it administers its sacraments. This is the meaning of Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7, 18.

The second aspect of religious discipline is the adjustment of personal works to social aims. A member is a functioning part. To be a member individual behavior must be adjusted to corporate enterprise. Following a brief period of saturation came the command to build the material into the structure: The Kingdom. Let the church govern itself by these principles and nothing can match it as an agency for bringing together the Kingdom-building manpower of the world and for shaping its common life into The Kingdom.

AUTHORITATIVE GUIDANCE

Under the rules of the church, we have as much assurance as we can hope to have that its affairs shall be guided in a Godlike manner. The great good men of the race who have given us the road map of the church are our prophets. They offer us the best leadership of which they are capable. It is a quality of leadership of which none but the church may boast. We are coming to realize that this leadership can have its value only as it comes to be the sentiment of the body. And as this leadership comes to have deeper meaning, the church becomes better fitted for the business of building The Kingdom.

WORLD LEADERSHIP

It is probably true that the present administration has mobilized as much wisdom as any political party is likely to bring to bear upon the problem of the Nation. The devotion of some to the welfare of the Nation is beyond question. And it is doubtful if any one could have done a better job in the face of the forces which operate in governmental circles than our esteemed President of the United States has done. But that is simply to say that a set-up which makes it necessary for a good man to pool his policies with the bad is not adapted to the purposes of instituting The Kingdom of God.

Compare the politics of nations with the polity set out in the books of the church. Regard the polity of the church from the standpoint (a) of a selective official personnel, and (b) of the responsibility for devising Zion's economic code. If the church would make the conduct of its affairs conform to its rules, how would it compare with the Nation as the prospective builder of The Kingdom?

ADMINISTRATIVE INTEGRITY

Motives which operate to prevent judgment under present circumstances will not operate under the Kingdom set-up. The church cannot hope to be entirely free from some things that seem now to perplex some, until social and financial factors which operate now fade out of the picture. Whatever administrative shortcomings there may be under the present economic set-up, they do not lessen the prospects of administrative integrity and efficiency under Zion's economic set-up. No such liabilities inhere in the game of Authors as inhere in the game of Poker. So long as the fortunes of individuals hinge on fickle public opinion or on private money gains, that long is the conduct of office liable to be influenced by such considerations. Under such a set-up "A gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of righteous." Government must be established in "justice" to insure "judgment."

Two facts must not be lost sight of in judgment whether or not the church is the hope of The Kingdom. One is its discernment of the nature and purposes of God in relation to the needs and problems of man. And the other is the spirit of the peoples of the church. And these facts, it seems, are related to each other.

WHAT OF THE MORROW?

The laws governing each must be strictly adhered in order that the individual may be properly developed. There must be both individual and mass development so that each individual may understand the fundamental principles of life. Because of our different mental actions and reactions to a given problem, the methods used must of necessity be different as to the details, but the fundamental principles of any of the divisions under which we have divided "condition" must be rigidly observed. The spiritual welfare of the individual and the group must be of a high order. The social relations must be such that makes for individual independence, as well as for community and group loyalty. Economic conditions must be such that the problems confronted, whether by the individual or the group, may be viewed in the light of known economic laws. The element of guess should be removed as far as possible. It is our belief that the world and the fullness thereof is the creation of God. Every known law, economic or otherwise, is for the use and advancement of the human race, and should be applied whenever possible. Each of the divisions of the "condition" should supplement the other, and whenever anything developed under one division tends to retard any of the others, something is wrong with the thing developed or its presentation.

The gathering when completed will produce Zion, with individuals measuring "to the fullness of the stature of Jesus Christ;" and a group, "of one heart and one mind," properly understanding the underlying principles of living together, duly observing individual rights. The initiative of the individual must always be protected, but its expression must always have in view the betterment of the community.

Graceland Students Stand Against War

Straw Vote Shows a Great Majority of Students Who Are Unwilling to Support a Foreign War

The Graceland student body took a firm stand for peace at chapel last Friday, when they made a straw vote on the subject of willingness to participate in the next war. The Peace Club in conjunction with the Tower, sponsored the vote, which showed some interesting results.

The three questions which were asked on the ballot with their results for both men and women are as follows:

1. I would not go to war under any circumstances. 20 percent of the men and 37 percent of the women checked this statement.

2. I would go to war only if a foreign enemy invaded the United States, was checked by 62 percent of the men, and 46 percent of the women.

3. I would go to war whenever my country called, brought forth a positive response from 18 percent of the men, and 17 percent of the women.

From the above statistics it is clear that the Graceland student body is strongly behind the peace movement, and that the majority of them would refuse to enter military service unless the territory of the United States was invaded. Other colleges over the country have received similar results from similar surveys. If the students of the country take a positive stand against war, it will undoubtedly have a terrific influence upon the rest of the nation. The figures above show our attitude—do we have the courage of our convictions?—Graceland Tower.

There is no way out of the world's misery but the way of Christ's will.—Bernard Shaw.

CONFERENCE DAILY EDITION

Number 9

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

April 24, 1934

LAST DAY THE BEST

Conference Adjourns in Happy and Hopeful Mood

In many ways the last day of the Seventy-sixth General Conference of the church was the best. It brought the spiritual and ceremonial climax of all the work done by the business sessions, and provided a fitting end for a conference at once so peaceful and constructive in all its aspects.

President Elbert A. Smith gave the final sermon of the conference Sunday morning at 11 a. m., taking as his text, "Hear Ye Him." Starting with the early spiritual experience of Joseph Smith, the speaker admonished his audience and the church at large to hear the word of Jesus on questions which are perplexing the world, touching on such fundamental topics as peace, stewardships, self-control, temperance, divorce, missionary work, and the gathering. In his own inimitable way he told a story of seeing a mountain, determining to climb it, the labor of the ascent, and the final realization of the goal, and applied the story effectively to the course of the church.

A large congregation, estimated at about 4,500 people, maintained a reverent and dignified silence throughout the long afternoon ordination service, except for the occasional songs that were sung. The details of this service are covered in the minutes of this issue. President Frederick M. Smith gave a moving talk on the matter of respect for the priesthood just before the certificates of ordination were distributed. The meeting was dismissed at about 4:15 p. m., and a recess was allowed for refreshments and rest.

The last service began at 4:30, and the first ceremony was that of honoring the men selected for superannuation. President Smith pinned the gold buttons on the men, and Apostle J. F. Garver expressed the appreciation of the church in a prayer of thanksgiving.

President Smith read the list of appointments for the coming period of activity, the audience sang, "God is Marshaling His Army," while the men

242 MEETINGS FOR THIS CONFERENCE

The 1934 General Conference made a commendable record for activity, if evaluated only on a quantitative basis, disregarding the fine quality of the meetings. There were 242 meetings scheduled in the official program, which, with one exception, were carried out as planned. This makes an average of better than twenty-four meetings a day, with a high point of twenty-nine meetings on one day. Of course there were many special meetings not listed which would add materially to the total, but they cannot be counted. There were 80 classes, 18 sermons, 20 prayer meetings, 9 business sessions (counting the brief business on the second Sunday), and 64 quorum meetings, not including those of the Quorum of Twelve. Obviously one

PAUL M. HANSON NEW PRESIDENT OF TWELVE

Resignation of James A. Gillen Due to Failing Strength

Apostle Paul M. Hanson was selected as President of the Quorum of Twelve by that body, and his election was approved on Saturday, April 14, by the conference.

The conference and the church are very happy in this selection. We are fortunate to have available for that important office one of such experience. He is especially well qualified for the place of responsibility in missionary affairs by his many years of service in foreign fields as well as at home. Brother Hanson is known as a thorough Latter Day Saint, as well as an enlightened and cultured Christian gentleman. The affairs of the quorum promise to proceed upon a high plane under his leadership.

Brother Hanson's travels in the interests of the church have taken him to Australia, England, Europe, Palestine and the Near East, and to Mexico, as well as other parts of the North American continent. In Mexico he made notable contributions in his archaeological researches and investigations. In all his work and travels he has been an able, fearless and dignified representative of the church, and we may well be proud to have him in his new position.

For some time now Brother J. A. Gillen, recently resigned as President of the Twelve, has fought a painful battle against failing health, and has found it necessary to discontinue his membership in the quorum.

Brother Gillen's years of service have brought him a host of friends whose love for him will follow him wherever his activities for the church take him.

person could not begin to take in the whole conference, and many found it hard to decide what they would rather do.

"No wonder people were all tired!" says the Assistant Editor.

MINUTES OF SEVENTY-SIXTH GENERAL CONFERENCE

Final Sessions—April 15

The closing sessions of the conference were held in the Auditorium beginning at half past two in the afternoon of Sunday, April 15, 1934, under the direction of the First Presidency.

"Soldiers of Christ, arise," was sung, benediction was pronounced by President F. M. McDowell, and at 4:15 p. m. the conference recessed to meet at 4:30 p. m.

The conference reassembled at 4:30 p. m. "Guide us, O Thou great Jehovah," was sung, and the prayer was offered by Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith.

President Frederick M. Smith presided over the session.

On the platform, on one side, were a number of those who had heretofore been placed upon the superannuated list, and on the other side the following were seated, who were placed upon such list at this conference: Amos M. Chase, W. A. Smith, Amos Berve, George Jenkins, J. A. Gunsolley, and George W. Thorburn.

After making a statement in regard to the order, President Smith read the record of the priesthood history of each, and then placed upon the lapel of the coat of each the emblem of the order.

Apostle John F. Garver then offered a prayer in honor of the men on the superannuated list.

"O Jesus, I have promised," was sung.

The following appointments of the Quorum of Twelve by the First Presidency were read:

(See page 123.)

The General Conference appointments were announced as follows:

(See page 123.)

As the hymn, "God is marshaling His army," was sung, those whose names had just been read congregated on the platform, where they were commissioned by President F. M. McDowell and charged by President Elbert A. Smith.

The "Consecration" Hymn was sung, all standing.

On motion of Elders R. S. Salyards and A. C. Martin, the appointments as announced were approved.

Minutes of conference sessions up to the moment were read and approved as read.

"Glorious things are sung of Zion," was sung as a closing hymn.

President Smith then declared the Seventy-sixth General Conference of the church adjourned to meet on April 6, 1936, in accordance with prior enactment of the body.

The closing benediction was given by the president of the Quorum of Twelve, Apostle Paul M. Hanson.

(Secretaries' Note: During the entire session of the General Conference there were many activities provided for as shown in the Conference Program, including preaching services, prayer meetings, and numerous church classes, etc., and these were carried out, with very few exceptions, precisely as the printed schedules indicated.)

From Within and Without

My soul leans toward Him; stretches out its arms,
And waits expectant. Speak to me, my God,
And let me know the living Father cares
For me, even me; for this one of His children.
Hast Thou no word for me? I am Thy thought.

Lord of Thyself and me, through the sore grief
Which Thou didst bear to bring us back to God,
Or, rather, bear in being unto us Thine own pure shining self of love and truth!
When I have learnt to think Thy radiant thoughts,
To live the truth beyond the power to know it,
To bear my light as Thou Thy heavy cross,
Nor ever feel a martyr for Thy sake,
But an unprofitable servant still—
My highest sacrifice my simplest duty
Imperative and unavoidable,
Less than which all were nothingness and waste;
When I have lost myself in other men,
And found myself in Thee—the Father then
Will come with Thee, and will abide with me!

—George MacDonald.

When War Shall Be No More

Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals and forts.

The warrior's name would be a name abhorred!
And every nation, that should lift again
Its hand against a brother, on its forehead
Would wear forevermore the curse of Cain!

Down the dark future, through long generations,
The echoing sounds grow fainter and then cease;
And like a bell, with solemn, sweet vibrations,
I hear once more the voice of Christ say, "Peace!"

Peace! and no longer from its brazen portals.
The blast of war's great organ shakes the skies!
But beautiful, as the songs of the immortals,
The holy melodies of Love arise.
—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

Four things a man must learn to do
If he would make his record true;
To think without confusion clearly,
To love his fellow men sincerely,
To act from honest motives purely,
To trust in God and heaven securely.
—Henry Van Dyke.

Presiding Officers

Presidency over an organization carries no authority to make rules for the government of that organization. Where such are or seem to be needed, consultation should be had with those who are to be affected thereby, that they may have voice in deciding as to their character. Otherwise dissatisfaction is almost certain to ensue, resulting in loss of confidence in the wisdom of the president. Should any departure from this order of procedure be indulged it is the privilege and duty of the organization to veto the movement of its president, should the movement be considered ill-advised or improper. And no officer whose love for the cause is greater than for himself would try to find ground for complaint in such action.

Members should always honor the officers of the church, notwithstanding the occupants of those offices fail at times to wisely perform the functions thereof. A refusal to so do is equivalent to withholding due service from God because a fellow being has taken undue license in office. No government can long be maintained where such support as is properly due is withheld. Within the church we are under obligation to God to uphold his appointments. This does not require, however, that we shall sustain officials in anything but the performance of that which the law enjoins upon them. If the judgment of a lay member is at variance with that of the presiding officer, and the matter involved is serious enough to require a decision in settlement, such decision can be had upon respectful application to the leading quorums of the church. Meantime the ruling of the officer should be respected, at least so far as to abate all disputings.

A presiding officer is the servant of the body over which he presides. His duty is to execute the will of that body and when he is no longer willing to so do, he should resign and thus permit the selection of one who has a better conception of such an official's duty. When once a branch, district, or general assembly has disposed of a matter in settlement, the members should avoid agitation of it again, and should seek to enforce the rule indorsed, thus allowing the virtue of the rule to manifest itself while in operation. . . .

In organizations where the membership is large, varieties of opinion are almost certain to exist, and a presiding officer need not be surprised if he fails to please all. If a goodly majority approves of his course he should be willing to proceed, always however manifesting a spirit of toleration and showing a decent respect for the views of the minority. Arrogance is as unseemly in an officer as is churlishness in a member. The disposition to dominate is entirely out of character with the gospel work. The body owes to every member respectful hearing and a consideration of the views he presents. Every member owes to the body graceful submission should his position be overruled.—Saints' Herald, volume 42, page 179.

What I Do Not Want

I do not want money.

I do not want fame.

I do not want a life of gaiety.

I do not want possessions, in the sense of jewels, motor-cars, villas on the Riviera and town houses, slaves, or gold and silver plate.

I do not want innumerable acquaintances.

I do not want contentment.

I do not want "For he's a jolly good fellow" to be sung when I rise to my feet.

These I say, are a few of the things I do not want. Other people want such things. To many, these are the prizes of life. Very well, if that is so, we shall know how to distribute such prizes; for if they want them steadfastly enough, these people will get them all. But as far as I am concerned, others may have every one of the blessings I do not need. . . .

There are human beings who wish the visible trappings of success, the automobiles, the applause, the servility of hotel employees, the consciousness of opulence and distinction in the world's eyes. How short-sighted are these people! They may have all these blessings, may carry them everywhere, but they may never know the love and respect of their fellow-creatures. As soon as their backs are turned they may be forgotten. As soon as their purses are empty they may lack even hospitality. They may have toadies, but they may never have friends. What a world to live in!

The reason I do not want wealth is that money is only useful in so far as it buys ease and comfort and the regard of those whose regard is not worth having. As for ease and comfort—once one has attained a reasonable degree of comfort, the rest is a superfluity. Luxury is good for nobody except the manufacturer of luxuries. And habitual luxury is a bore for it kills enjoyment of the occasional rare treat. . . .

And I do not want fame. Of what use is it? It may tickle the vanity for a time, but it becomes an intolerable nuisance. The film star is probably the most famous kind of person now living; and the film star—like a royal personage—has no private life to speak of. There is no privacy for the famous. Every action of theirs is seen and judged; together with some actions which have been only rumored, invented by some gossip as a topic of sterile conversation. As one famous man once said to me, "Much worse than the worst is known of me."—From Frank Swinnerton's Tokefeld Papers.

Constructive Methods Against Evil

Handley Page, the airman, tells a great story. When, he says, he was making his eastern flight in one of his best machines, he and his companion descended at Kobar, in Arabia. There a large rat, attracted doubtless by the smell of food, managed to get into the aeroplane. When Mr. Handley Page was in mid-air, he discovered its presence by the sickening sound of gnawing behind him. The airman thought with horror of the damage that those pitiless teeth might effect and of the disaster to which they might lead. Some vital part of the machine could be destroyed in a moment, and a dreadful death result. What could he do? He suddenly reflected that a rat is not made for high altitudes. It is made to live on the surface or to burrow beneath it. So Mr. Page determined to soar. He rose and rose till he himself found breathing difficult. He listened and to his delight the gnawing ceased. After a while he ventured to descend to a lower level. And when, at length, he alighted, he found the rat lying dead beneath the engine? It is by constructive methods that we invariably surmount our most obstinate difficulties. If we can only rise to a loftier level of Christian living and of Christian attainment, the pests that molest our souls will be suffocated by the rarity of the air in which we live.—F. W. Boreham, in The Blue Flame.

French Peasants

Those going home at dusk,
Along the lane
After the day's warm work,
Do not complain.

Were you to say to them,
"What does it mean?
What is it all about,
This troubled dream?"

They would not understand,
They'd go their way,
Or, if they spoke at all,
They'd surely say:

"Dawn is the time to rise,
Days are to earn
Bread and the mid-day rest,
Dusk to return.

"To be content to pray,
To hear songs sung;
Or to make wayside love,
If one is young. . . ."

One who had questioned all
And was not wise,
Might be ashamed to meet
Their quiet eyes.

All is so clear to them,
All is so plain,
Those who go home at dusk
Along the lane.

Worship Suggestions for May, 1934

The Church School

Prepared by Arthur Oakman and Elva T. Sturges

(S. H. refers to our latest hymnal; O. S. H. refers to the earlier publication, and Z. P. refers to Zion's Praises.)

THEME FOR MONTH: "KEEP MY COMMANDMENTS"

FIRST SUNDAY, MAY 6

Theme: "Forsake the World."

Instrumental Prelude: "One hour with Jesus," 325, S. H.

Call to Separation: Revelation 18: 1, 2 and 4.

"I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

"And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

(S) Hymn-Response: S. H. 412, verses 1, 3 and 5. "I saw a mighty angel fly."

Scripture Reading: Matthew 16: 25-30.

Hymn: S. H., 298, verse one, "O Jesus I have promised."

Talk: There is no room in the life of any man for God and Mammon. The two are at constant warfare against each other both claiming his allegiance and devotion. He who serves Mammon thereby hinders his possibilities for service to God, and he who resists the temptation to give himself to lesser things, strengthens himself for service to God. Sometimes we are keenly aware of the struggle we have in striving to do righteously. The fact of the struggle in itself ought to be a means of encouragement to us, because he who loses his power to feel the dire consequences of sin, is lost, while he who endeavors to do right, and yet recognizes the opposing forces as his enemies, still has his opportunity to rise above evil.

It is one thing to face temptation and suffer while doing so, but it is quite another thing to pay heed to the enticings of the evil one. If we face temptation, and choose rightly in the face of it, we may, in the language of James, "count it all joy when we fall into many afflictions, knowing this that the trying of our faith worketh patience."

Hymn: S. H. 298, verses 2 and 3.

Leader Reads: Doctrine and Covenants 45: 2.

(S) Hymn: 298, verse 4.

(S) Prayer.

(S) Benediction.

SECOND SUNDAY, MAY 13

Theme: "Turn Unto Me."

Instrumental Prelude: "Jesus calls us," S. H. 337.

Call to Worship: Jeremiah 2: 11-13. "Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit. Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water."

(S) Hymn: "O Lord of light, and love, and power," S. H. 299.

(S) Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3, 4.

Hymn: "Sovereign and transforming Grace!" S. H. 76, O. S. H. 131.

Suggestive Meditation:

On the urgency of the message of God.

On the need in the world for God.

On the need in our own lives for Him.

On the invitation extended to us.

On the cost of discipleship.

On the consequences of our choice.

(S) Hymn: "Jesus, I my cross have taken," S. H. 295; O. S. H. 350.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 4.

(S) Benediction: "Now unto Him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory in exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen." (Jude 24, 25.)

THIRD SUNDAY, MAY 20

Theme: "Warn Thy Neighbor."

Instrumental Prelude: "O reapers of life's harvest," S. H. 387; O. S. H. 98.

Call to Service: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 22. "Behold, I sent you out to testify and warn the people, and it becometh every man who hath been warned, to warn his neighbor; therefore, they are left without excuse, and their sins are upon their own heads. He that seeketh me early shall find me, and shall not be forsaken."

(S) Hymn-Response: "Hark the voice of Jesus calling," S. H. 344.

(S) Prayer.

Talk: Jesus Christ died for us. He died for all men. He did so because He loved those who were wicked enough to reject his message and prefer their own way. Yet Jesus had an invincible faith in the power of His message. He felt that if only people could be brought to see how much God loved them, and how much better His way of life was than the way they were living, they would gladly respond. It was in this belief that Jesus lived and worked and died.

That same spirit is needed today. The message of Christ is the only message of life. Any other message brings death. To the message of Christ we must witness, for only through our testimony can others be won. Who brought us the gospel? What did it cost to bring it? Are we willing to allow the testimony of Jesus to envelop us and take us out to tell others? Jesus Christ has died a thousand deaths because of the sins of the world, and perhaps because we have failed to witness for Him. His ability to appeal to men is tied up in our willingness to witness. What shall we do about it?

Period of Meditation and Song:

Reader:

Christ has no hands but our hands
To do his work today;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in his way;
He has no tongue but our tongues
To tell men how he died;
He has no help but our help
To bring them to his side.

Hymn: "Unto God who knows our every weakness," S. H. 293, verse 1.

Reader:

We are the only Bible
The careless world will read;
We are the sinner's gospel,
We are the scoffer's creed;
We are the Lord's last message
Given in deed and word—
What if the line is crooked?
What if the type is blurred?

Hymn: "Though the task be great that lies before us," S. H. 293, verse 2.

Reader:

What if our hands are busy
With other work than his?
What if our feet are walking
Where sin's allurements is?
What if our tongues are speaking
Of things his lips would spurn?
How can we hope to help him
Unless from him we learn?

(S) Hymn: "Lord, accept the humble consecration," S. H. 293, verse 3.

(S) Benediction.

(N. B.—Poem is by Annie Johnson Flint and is taken from Quotable Poems.)

FOURTH SUNDAY, MAY 27

Theme: "Walk in My Spirit."

Instrumental Prelude: "Breathe on me, Breath of God," S. H. 191.

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 85: 16, 17. "Draw near unto me, and I will draw near unto you; seek me diligently and ye shall find me; ask and ye shall receive; knock and it shall be opened unto you; whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name it shall be given unto you, that is expedient for you; and if ye ask anything that is not expedient for you, it shall turn unto your condemnation. Behold, that which you hear is as the voice of one crying in the wilderness; in the wilderness, because you cannot see him: my voice, because my voice is Spirit; my Spirit is truth: truth abideth and hath no end; and if it be in you it shall abound."

Response: Psalms 119: 149, 151. "Hear my voice according to thy loving-kindness, O Lord, quicken me according to thy judgment. Thou art near, O Lord, and all thy commandments are truth."

(S) Hymn: "Break thou the bread of life," S. H. 70.

Talk: If we look at the commandments of Christ merely as a code of morals or ethics to be lived, and nothing else, they are impossible. Without Christ, his teachings are too stern. But we are not asked to follow a code of ethics such as philosophies lay down. We are offered a Divine Friendship in which we may grow like the person who gave the law. In this communion, we may lose our old self, and be made new. We may partake of Christ, not merely practice His ethics.

This fellowship is offered through His Spirit. It is given to those who really want it, and who ask for it. Under this influence old things are passed away, and all things become new.

If we try to do the will of God our way, we will find it is impossible. If we do it under His Spirit it becomes as the yoke that is light, the burden easily borne.

Hymn: "Gracious Spirit, dwell with me," S. H. 192, verse 1. Opportunity for Statement: By those who have tried to walk in the Spirit.

(S) Hymn: "Gracious Spirit, dwell with me," S. H. 192, verses 2, 3, 4.

(S) Communion: "Doubt not, but be believing, and begin as in times of old, and come unto the Lord with all your heart, and work out your own salvation with fear and trembling before him. Be wise in the days of your probation; strip yourselves of all uncleanness; ask not, that ye may consume it on your lusts, but ask with a firmness unshaken, that ye will yield to no temptation, but that ye will serve the true and living God."—Mormon 4: 93, 94.

(S) Prayer and Benediction.

The very heart of Jesus' message was caught up in "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done." Where was this to happen? Let Jesus answer "On earth as it is in heaven."—E. Y. Hunker Weber, April, May, June, 1931; The Department Journal, June, 1930, page 184.) "Laying on of hands" is the fourth step on the gospel ladder. Explain why this is called "the baptism of the Holy Spirit." (See Sermonette, "Laying on of hands," Stepping Stones, January 24, 1932.) If there is sufficient time, add the other two principles, explaining briefly.

Stories told by Juniors: "The baptism of Jesus," Matthew 3: 13-17. Of Paul, Acts 9: 1-20. Of Cornelius, Acts, tenth chapter. Of Lydia, Acts 16: 12-15. Of the Philippian jailer, Acts 16: 20-40.

Hymn: "The Gospel Ladder," by entire group or junior choir.

"We're glad to tell you something,
It should make your hearts rejoice;
How to climb the gospel ladder,
If heaven is your choice:
For ev'ry round leads higher
To the realms of endless day;
We must start right at the bottom,
And go up all the way.

"We must have faith in Jesus,
And in His gospel, too;
For the law of God is perfect,
And to it we must be true.

Repentance is the next round
In our upward flight;
For without it we would not be Climbing upward right.

"Baptism is the next round,
As in days of old;
Our sins should be remitted,
How oft should you be told?
Thus did the saints of old, friends,
In their ladder flight;
We must be born of water,
And the Spirit to be right.

"And now the very next round,
We find in God's commands,
'Tis the birth of the Holy Spirit,
Through the laying on of hands.
Aim high for the first resurrection,
That in judgment we may stand,
With the faithful of all ages
To reign at God's right hand."

THE ROYAL ROAD

has helped me. I—I don't feel the way I used to. I—Greg—" the words were muffled in his lapel, "I wish you would."

"Do you, Larry?" half-incredulously.

"Yes, can't you see that it makes me miserable to have you dodging responsibility; to have you refuse to go to church because you feel you're shirking your moral and spiritual responsibility? Oh, Greg, I know you too well to think this indifference of yours to all things you used to consider sacred and important, is real. Truly, I want you to—" She smiled mistily at him.

"Larry," he held up her chin with his forefinger and looked a long time into her eyes: "are you sure you know what you are saying? I don't believe you would deliberately torture—" his voice broke.

"Oh, no!" her tone was horror-stricken as she sensed his thoughts. "I should have told you all about it at first—when we were discussing it months ago—but I couldn't bring myself to it. I seldom mention it any more. This was my biggest reason for my dislike for the priesthood—and I can see now where I was illogical, prejudiced, adolescent." Then briefly she told him the story of her mother's elopement with Mr. Harrison; pictured the anguish her father had suffered, and her own childish loneliness. "Don't you see?" she pleaded, "I felt that she had disgraced us for always and that Mr. Harrison, who was a priest and an active one, was the cause of all our unhappiness. Then when I came here I saw Rowe McCauley and the things he did—why, I didn't know until just the other night that his license had been taken from him. I've been too quick to judge an institution by the actions of one member—and a weak member at that—of that institution. Until recently I didn't know—oh, I couldn't realize, how really sacred certain things are—and one of those things is priesthood!" quietly she was sobbing.

"Don't cry, dearest—I think I understand." Greg's voice was not quite steady either.

Presently the girl raised her head and looked at him. Her cheeks were still wet with tears. "I want you to go to the pastor as soon as you can—tomorrow—and tell him you will. Then I'll feel so relieved, so happy, Greg. And I'll be sky-high proud of you!"

"I'm glad you feel that way, Larry," he confessed, "because there is a lot you can do to help me. I've felt pretty mean about not doing what I was asked to do, but I thought it would be putting an insurmountable barrier between you and me—"

Larry uttered a penitent little choking sound.

"—Mother was so disappointed about my refusing to do it, too; but I didn't feel that I could go through with it then, Larry. Now—with you backing me—why, it's altogether different!"

"Oh, I've made you so miserable!" wailed the girl. "I've bungled so dreadfully!"

"No you haven't, Larry," stoutly. "We've both learned a lot—it was good for us. You've helped Sallie Ruth and Dorothy Cameron and Carmen, and you've learned to appreciate Mrs. Hampton for what she really is. And now with your class and other interests—why you're so busy, you make me feel like a—"

"Do hush," she ordered promptly. "All that was my way of redeeming myself. I realized how unworthy I was, and I was trying to make myself worthy of the church and you, Greg."

"Worthy of me!" wonderingly, "don't make me laugh."

"It's not a laughing matter," she warmly declared; "I decided that I'd just have to put my foot down and say: 'Now, Larry, my dear, from here on you begin to grow up and act your age.' I've spent so much time being mad at myself for wasting time, Greg, and so—well, I've just been getting busy at the things nearest my hand to do."

"Larry," gently, "you've asked me a question. Now's it's my turn. Will you marry me, priesthood and all?" softly.

Not a sound except the dull slapping of the waves on the grassy bank and the sigh of a tiny breeze lost in the trees.

Then the girl turned her face toward her lover, lifted her other hand to pat his cheek, smiled: "Yes, Greg, I will."

(The End.)

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Where did the black race come from?

From a statement in the Inspired Version it appears that blackness was first placed upon Cain and his descendants, for the text (Genesis 7: 29) informs us that "the seed of Cain were black." The next information given in the book is, that Enoch saw, evidently in vision, that "a blackness came upon all the children of Cainan, that they were despised among all people." At what time in the world's history this occurred is not stated. In sequence of the narrative it would be prior to the flood, but events were not always given in this order, hence the question is not positively answered.

After the flood, however, Ham had a son named Canaan who appears to have been guilty of an act that caused Noah to curse him and declare that he should be the servant of Shem, and that "a veil of darkness shall cover him, that he shall be known among all men." (Genesis 9: 29, 30.) The meaning of the name of Ham, or the Hebrew word Cham, is hot, or warm, which suggests dwelling in a hot country. It is generally believed, in harmony with these facts, that the black race are the descendants of Ham.

What should a Saint answer, when asked if he is saved?

Perhaps it might be well to ask the questioner to explain what he means by the term, or in what sense he is using it. In the Bible it is used in several ways, each of which is intended to convey different meaning. Noah was saved in the ark (2 Peter 2:5), which means that his life was saved while others died in the flood. Yet Noah died afterward, so the fact that he was saved did not insure that he would never die. On a number of occasions Jesus said to certain persons, "Thy faith hath saved thee" (Luke 7: 50; 18: 42), but in one instance the person was saved from sins, and in another instance the sight of the blind was saved.

In some places the term is used of the present only, and in others it applies to the future life, being used in the future tense. Hence we find Paul speaking of God "Who hath saved us" (2 Timothy 1: 9), and in 1 Corinthians 1: 18 he refers to "us who are saved." Such texts evidently refer to the fact that those who repent and obey the gospel are saved from sin and the penalty of sin. But in the same letter (5: 5) he speaks of such as shall be destroyed in the flesh, being delivered to Satan, that "the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." Again he warns the saints (15: 2) that they are saved by the gospel "if ye keep in memory" his message to them. This salvation indicates something conditional or a state to be retained on condition, or as Jesus promised (Mark 13: 13): "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."

Why did men call themselves "sons of God" in Genesis 8: 9, Inspired Version?

These were wicked men who possessed an exalted opinion of themselves, probably using this term because of their descent from Adam whom God created, and to claim such liberty of action as would assert their independence of the preaching of Noah, refusing to heed his commands. They thus implied that they were entitled to deal with God only, repudiating Noah as God's messenger.

Will the Saints reign on earth, or in heaven, during the thousand years?

Doctrine and Covenants, 85: 6 states that the earth shall be inherited by the righteous, for though it shall die, it shall be quickened again. The Inspired Version is even more clear (Genesis 7: 73), and states that Christ shall come to dwell on the earth a thousand years. But the Authorized Version is also plain, and states that the saints shall "reign on the earth" (Revelation 5: 10). The time is definitely declared to begin when the saints are resurrected (20: 6-9), in the first resurrection, to continue a thousand years, and that in that period the "camp of the saints" will be on the earth.

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt

Arranged from his diaries by his daughter, Mrs. Ruby C. Faunce

The church at Papeete, three miles from town, was dedicated on May 31st. To be near and watch over them, I have had a mission house built near the church. There has been a new branch formed at Papaoa. The mission house is the one we occupy. In the Tahiti Division there are thirteen branches and in the Takarau Division, sixteen. In the Mission are ten frame churches and three of stone. Other places have churches built of cocoanut matting with good strong frames made of cocoanut timbers, generally. These churches should, with the land attached, be dedicated to the general body, but the government does not allow any church to own property as a church. It must be held in the name of some individual, generally the head of the church in those parts. The church is Papeete is held in my name as president of the Mission here. Bro. Devore states that "the General Conference held on April 6th for the two days was considered one of the best ever held. There were twenty-two Elders present and I was pleased with their actions, for they tried to observe the Rules of Order in their deliberation. The next General Conference was appointed for April 6th, 1892, at AUSA, 250 miles from here. We have concluded to visit Tubri by the first boat we can get, as they desire us. Elders Hawkins and Tapunu will accompany us. We organized a regular Sunday school in this branch. They were pleased with it."

(From a letter to us dated Sept. 6th, 1893, our father says:)

"I am learning the language slowly, and understand much more than I can speak. The natives speak very rapidly, so makes it difficult to catch."

(In a letter of Nov. 30th, 1893, he says:)

"I find there is no certainty of getting our gospel boat much before the April conference and without it this mission is handicapped. I was very sick when boat went out November 8th. I find this climate is very bad for my old complaint, as it is greatly aggravated by the heat and mode of living. Sr. Devore was very kind to me, as were the natives during my sickness. The natives looked very doleful and sorry, and never before did I realize to its full extent "when the head is sick, the whole body is faint." The natives look up to me as a father, and by God's grace, I hope to prove to be one to them. Six weeks ago I left on an eight-ton boat to go to conference on the Island of Takahow. I was not sea-sick but the close quarters with no privacy made me sick. I ate only one small meal of cocoanut and fish in the four days en route. We caught about 400 fine fish, looking like mackerel but tasting differ-ently. Their mode of cooking fish and fowl is the primitive one. After killing and wrapping them in green leaves, they are placed in a hole in the earth, at the bottom of which are heated stones covered by large green leaves. On these have been placed cocoanuts or breadfruit for roasting. The fish or fowl are laid on these and again covered with large leaves. Then more hot stones are placed on them, followed by dirt and small stones, till all is covered and the heat kept in. Sr. Devore gave me a cup and saucer, a knife and fork, and two plates from her scanty store. She has been a sister and her husband a brother to me indeed. God bless them. We cannot obtain milk here except by owning a cow. Have only tasted meat and potatoes twice since landing. I am considerably better and hope to continue to improve. There, I just looked up to see who was drumming in front of my door. Seven little boys and girls are so glad that Marketo is up again. Everyone must shake hands and say "saoraua Mareto" ("Health and all good to you, Mark.") They are dear little fellows and show their love and veneration for me always.

From this time our father traveled to the different islands, doing whatever he could for the upbuilding of the church, but as the rainy season came on, his illness was so greatly aggravated that he had to leave the South Sea Isles in February, as "chronic cholera morbus," from which trouble he had suffered off and on ever since the Civil War, was one of the dread diseases prevalent then. He was released and sent to northern California, leaving Bro. and Sr. Devore there. On Feb. 27, we take from a letter written by Sr. Ella Devore the following:

"As you will be anxious to hear from this place, and should I go to conference it might be long ere you would hear, as you were so loath to leave the Mission, you will be interested in hearing from me. Many thought it strange your leaving without the usual Ia ara na and arolia, but I told them the best I could. Harra and Poris wife and I took our Bibles and sat under that tree at the corner to see the vessel start out and to wave to you our fond farewell, which you answered. They both wept and as we came back to my house, passing the back part of yours, we saw your things as you had left them, but no Bro. Marketo. A rush of weakness and feeling overwhelmed me. I hurried into my house and gave vent to my feelings, weeping and walking the floor; then out on the veranda to watch the ship carrying you away, then back to look at that lovely house. There were some of your books and other things, but no brother—our head, our elder brother, gone—gone from the Mission. I could not help but weep and moan. Alevira sat upon the floor, with her babe, weeping. Faithful Harra followed me in my walk, crying out loud, yet trying to comfort me. For an hour or more we wept, and were just calming down when Moe and Torua came. Moe burst out and cried aloud, and throwing himself down he wept like a child. This started us all afresh. It was indeed a house of grief. Finally rallying, we watched the vessel out of sight. It was well we had given vent to our grief as it relieved the burden, and I was ready to take up my duties again. The grief was indeed sincere, and our hearts refused to be comforted, yet I would not have called you back to suffer again. I have been very busy doing what I promised you I would and surely it is bringing them out."

In a letter dated April 16, 1894, we see she was chosen for the Sabbath school work, foretold in a blessing placed upon her head before father left for America. She writes that she had the request read before conference, so they might understand that blessing, as it would deepen their respect for her and give them more confidence, knowing what he had done. It so proved to be the best thing to do, as the Sunday school was a new step to the natives. The next day she was requested to take charge of the school and make it as the one in Papeete. Do not know just when father arrived in California, but find that in April at conference he was appointed to labor in northern California, and did so as health permitted, but find no record of his labors until Jan. 1, 1895.

1895—In America Again

The year opens with unsettled weather. Watch meeting last night at Bro. Anthony's. By request I presided. Prayer meeting from 10:40 to 11:55, then silently engaged in prayer on our knees till the clock stopped striking. Then closed. Am relieved of the dread disease that preyed upon me at the Islands, but do not seem to regain my strength. Jan. 5—Letter from Bro. Daly, acting missionary. Tomorrow is the day for organizing the Berkeley branch and this letter leaves me free to attend.

Praise ye the Lord: for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely. The Lord doth build up Jerusalem: he gathereth together the outcasts of Israel. He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds. He telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names. Great is our Lord, and of great power: and his understanding is infinite. —Psalm 147:1-5.

Southern California's Council of Young People Meets

The young people's council of Southern California District met at Long Beach, March 10 and 11, beginning with a banquet in the basement of the church the evening of March 10. At this event the members of the council and their companions were guests. After the singing of "Consecration," Elder D. B. Sorden, of Los Angeles, offered a prayer of blessing on the food and the meeting to follow. The evening's theme was "What Shall Youth Give to the Church?"

R. C. Leibold, president of the council and supervisor of Long Beach young people, introduced J. L. Milner, director of religious education for the Southern California District, and his topic was "Why Are We Here?" Brother Sorden and James B. Burdick were also speakers, the latter a member of Santa Barbara Branch, talking on "What Joseph Smith the Martyr Gave." Sister Winifred Miller gave a reading preceding a talk, "What Emma Hale Smith Gave," by Sister Natalie Miller. Rodney Engel, of Santa Ana, presented the topic "What did Young Joseph Give?" impressing the thought, "he gave himself, a living sacrifice." In his speech Brother Holmes, representing East Los Angeles congregation, said that men are most happy in serving their fellow men. There were also short talks by Brothers Ostertag, Sacrey, and Austin. The principal talk of the evening was by Lawrence Brockway, whose theme was "The Call of the Church Today."

Music at the banquet was supplied by June Leibold, pianist, Margaret and Fern Taylor, who sang a duet, and by the congregation.

The theme of the early morning prayer service Sunday for the young people, was "When Shall I Give My Life to Christ?" Richard and Felix Hacker were in charge, and many branches of the district were represented. Following this hour the visitors attended Long Beach's church school and preaching service, and Pastor J. L. Milner, the speaker, addressed his sermon to the young people. Lunch was served at the park.

At 3 p. m. the student council of the district met at the church for business. Because of the election of new officers in Long Beach Branch, it was necessary to elect a new secretary for the council.

Sister Natalie Miller was chosen. They discussed plans for the reunion and future activities for the council. At the close the visitors departed for their homes feeling that they were better prepared to go forward in the church.

Eight people have recently been added to this branch by baptism.

They have organized a credit class with Pastor J. L. Milner as teacher. Much interest has been shown in this movement, and officers hope to enlarge their staff of efficient workers.

Niagara Falls, New York

Enjoy Special Services

This year Niagara Falls Branch tried something a little different in the way of a sunrise service commemorating Easter. At 7 a. m., horns sounded a call to worship and for half an hour horns and organ music blended in a tribute to the risen King.

At seven-thirty a prayer service opened, and for an hour Latter Day Saints, young and old, under the soothing influence of His Spirit, gave thanks to their heavenly Father. Then a light breakfast was served in the church basement.

After that came the greatest triumph of the day for the Savior when three young boys made the sacred covenant with God and were baptized by the pastor of the branch, Elder George Landes, making many a heart glad and restoring wavering faith.

During the next hour the Sunday school, eager to do its part toward the success of the day, presented a pageant entitled, "The Cross of Life."

It was at first intended that the final meeting of the morning should be the administering of the sacrament, but so great was the Spirit upon the members that another prayer and testimony meeting was held and many who had not borne their testimonies and others who had been unable to attend the early service were given the opportunity to voice the thanks in their hearts.

As a fitting climax to the day the senior choir in the evening, under the capable leadership of Sister Catherine Lambert, with Sister Anna Landes as accompanist, presented the Easter cantata, "The Risen King," by Schneckner.

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan

Young People's Rally Is Inspiring

Sunday, April 8, was young people's rally day at Saskatoon, a day of spiritual awakening and mental stimulus for all who attended.

It began with a prayer service at 8:45 which was followed by the usual church school session. At the eleven o'clock service several young people gave talks which furnished food for thought. Lily Anderson spoke on "Church Music"; Effie Ziegler's subject was "Those Who Live Below the Standard of the Group Will Be Held Responsible." "The Contribution of the Reorganization to the World" was Mabel Cruce's topic, and Averil Diggle chose for her subject, "What the Church Requires of Its Young Women." Violet Cruce read a poem and gave a short talk on "The Observance of the Sabbath." Harry Neufeld and Brother Christy sang a duet, "The Old Wayside Cross," and the choir contributed two numbers, "Sowing the Seeds of Truth," and "The Song Prayer."

The entire congregation enjoyed a banquet at noon. Irma Denton and Violet Cruce were in charge of the food and Averil Diggle, Effie Ziegler, and Marvin Diggle arranged the program. Dainty souvenir booklets were used as place-cards. These were passed around to be autographed by the guests. Henry Piedt, supervisor of young people, was toastmaster. Community songs were accompanied by Sister Steeves. Pearl Denton, Percy Kelly, and Frank Ward gave readings, and Irma Denton and Effie Ziegler spoke on "Youth's Right to Happiness" and "Youth's Opportunities."

At two-thirty the congregation reassembled in the auditorium to listen to a debate on "Resolved, That Loyalty, Devotion, and Consecrated Active Service Are of More Value Than Faith Even to the Removing Mountains." Harry Neufeld and Marvin Diggle upheld the affirmative while Henry and Frank Piedt spoke on the negative. The judges, Mrs. Eric Boland, Sister J. A. Beckman, and Irma Denton, announced a victory for the affirmative, the score being thirteen to twelve.

A historical "Conversation," "Joseph's First Vision," followed the debate. Ray Anderson as Joseph, was earnest and appealing, and Mrs. Boland and Mr. Burton Asay portrayed the characters of a worldly reverend and his henpecking wife. At this service two trio numbers, "Day Is Dying in the West" and "That Beautiful Land" were sung by Mr. Asay, Mr. Neufeld, and Brother Christy. Pearl Mogenson played an accordion solo and the choir sang "Work, Watch, and Pray."

At seven o'clock another historical "Conversation," "Young Joseph Takes His Place," was staged. Arthur Gendron took the part of Joseph and Irma Denton that of Emma Smith. Others taking part were Henry Piedt, Frank Piedt, J. A. Beckman, C. E. Diggle, and Marvin Diggle.

A duet, "Moments of Prayer," was contributed by Messrs. Christy and Neufeld and Brother Christy discoursed on "An Infallible Remedy." As a fitting close to a perfect day the choir sang, "Loving Goodnight."

For several weeks Brother Christy lectured to the women of the branch on social problems, and Sister Christy has been teaching a class in story-telling in religious education.

The adult group has been meeting fortnightly to study problems of parenthood. Talks are followed by interesting discussions after which musical numbers are enjoyed.

The young people held an interesting "poverty party" last month in the church basement. Each member, on pain of a one-cent fine, was obliged to come on time, to wear unadorned shoes, come without jewelry or other adornment and minus ties or other unnecessary. Gunnybags, binder twine, and nails were used in abundance. Beans and hardtack were refreshments. The evening opened with a march of the unemployed on the city hall. Several arrests took place, and the vagrants were tried and convicted.

Brother and Sister Diggle and family, accompanied by Mr. Harry Neufeld, motored one hundred and forty-five miles north to their summer cottage, Leisure Lodge, for the Easter holidays. They found three feet of snow on the level and five feet surrounding the cottages. They report thrilling rides behind train dogs, tobogganning, skiing, fighting snow battles, and an interesting hour watching huge spruce logs being sawed into lumber. All this was remarkable when it is realized that in Saskatoon at Easter dust was flying.

In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust: let me never be put to confusion. Deliver me in thy righteousness, and cause me to escape; incline thine ear unto me, and save me. Be thou my strong habitation, whereunto I may continually resort: thou hast given commandment to save me; for thou art my rock and my fortress. Deliver me, O my God, out of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man. For thou art my hope. O Lord God: thou art my trust from my youth.—Psalm 71:1-5.

Kansas City Stake

Argentine Church

The Argentine congregation has not been idle. Better attendance is noted at all services, preaching hours, church school, prayer meetings, and study classes, and interest is growing.

Those who have preached to this group in past weeks were Elders C. C. Babb, Doctor Charles F. Grabske, Berwin Lungwitz, H. Arthur Koehler, G. E. Harrington, J. Charles May, D. P. Cooper, Edward Baker, C. E. Wight, C. George Mesley, Roy E. Browne, W. S. Brown, Ammon White, and Deacon Bondie Shireman.

The O. B. K.'s have sponsored two evening services, arranging for speakers and music.

Easter was observed with a program by the smaller church school pupils each one of whom was given an Easter card.

Sister Rebecca Brown, a former attendant at meetings, is making her home with her granddaughter at 118 West Wilson Street, Salina, Kansas. For two months she has been ill, but is now recovering. She is eighty-seven years old.

The death of Mr. Frank Smith, husband of Sister Carrie Smith, 1150 Douglass Street, was mourned by this group last October. His funeral was held from the home October 30, Elder John F. Sheehy, of Independence, officiating. Mr. Smith was a long-time resident of this city and had a host of friends. Interment was in Maple Hill Cemetery. His wife, two daughters, and five sons were the chief mourners.

The family of Lloyd E. Lemberger were baptized into the church by Pastor Roy E. Browne not long ago. They are Brother Lemberger, Sister Virginia Lemberger, the mother, and Dorothy Jane, John Oliver, Joseph Mitchell, and James Woodrow, all fine people.

Quindaro Church

Under the leadership of John Gross, Albert Hallier, and H. A. Higgins this congregation, within the past seven months has inaugurated a man's organization that is properly functioning to meet their needs and to provide for a more successful realization in helping to zionize the church and evangelize the community. The object of this organization is to promote sociability, increase church attendance, create increased interest in all church services and church activities, visit the sick and secure aid for the distressed, and to aid the church, both locally and generally, in its financial program.

The women's department, headed by Rebecca Green, has done outstanding work throughout the past year. Among various activities they have sponsored successful dinners and bazaars. During the summer and fall they canned a large quantity of fruits and vegetables that were distributed among needy Saints and friends in the Kansas City Stake the past winter. Sister Green has been bending her efforts toward a successful year in this department not only financially, but she has also generated within the lives of the women a deeper appreciation of the giving of service to others to accomplish God's purpose.

Regular Thursday afternoon cottage prayer services are being held by E. N. Palmer in the Saints' homes each week. Brother Palmer has been doing some outstanding missionary work in this field and has been freely contributing spiritual food and enlightenment to hungry souls of this community.

Borger, Texas

Carry On in Gospel Endeavor

There is a small group of Saints at Borger, and each one is willing to do what he can to help forward the latter-day cause. They have Sunday school at ten o'clock each Sunday morning, Brother Von Carriker superintendent, and Brother Russell A. Carriker and Brother Johnson make short talks each Sunday. The group has enjoyed short visits from Elder Glaude A. Smith and Elder I. N. DeLong, of Colorado; Elder Monroe and Elder Howard Carpenter, of California, and others.

If there are isolated members living in or near Amarillo, Panhandle, Pampa, White Deer, Stenett, and Dumas, Borger priesthood members would like to get in touch with them and make arrangements to visit them. Please write L. A. Johnson, Box 162, Borger.

Not long ago the group at Borger drove to Spearman, Texas, and held usual services at the home of Sister Lizzie Simmons.

The Texas group will appreciate the visit of the traveling ministry of the church or any of the laity who are passing through this region.

Santa Ana, California

Seven Easter Baptisms

Santa Ana Saints enjoyed the finest Easter service in several years. During the morning sacrament meeting the Lord spoke to the Saints by his Holy Spirit, urging greater faithfulness and promising his blessings on those who did his will. Preceding the sacrament service, the congregation witnessed the baptism and confirmation of Bernice Mutz, Brother Louis J. Ostertag baptizing and Brother D. B. Carmichael confirming. In the evening, the choir, under the directing of Sister Stella Best, presented a splendid musical program, followed by the pastor's sermon on the reasonableness of Christ's Resurrection. As a pleasant Easter surprise to the children of the branch gave a supper in the rec-had the downstairs rooms freshly tinted so that everything looked beautiful for Easter. The children themselves take care of the decorating, one child from each room responsible for his or her class, while young Sister Merida Best decorates the main assembly room.

Several events of interest in the past month have kept the branch busy. The children, under the direction of Sister Charles Calkins, gave a social, inviting the older members of the congregation. They entertained their guests with songs, and later, ice cream and cake. Sister Louis J. Ostertag has been put in charge of the young people as Sister Lola Mitchel has had to resign because of ill health. The young people are well organized and meet regularly.

On Friday evening, April 6, the women of the branch gave a supper in the recreation room of the church. Sisters Muriel Cliff, and Hope Boze were in charge of the kitchen, while the young girls of the branch served as waitresses, later selling home-made candy. The money earned will go for local expenses.

On the Sunday after Easter, the Saints witnessed the baptism of six into the church, Mr. and Mrs. Earnest Martin, Mrs. Rosa Clapp, Newell, Barbara, and Doris Martin. Brother Ostertag performed the baptisms and confirmations followed, Brother John Inman and Brother D. B. Carmichael assisting.

Providence, Rhode Island

Hope to Accomplish Many Things

This branch is ambitious to accomplish many things this year. The congregation has voted to support the young of its number in purchasing a baby grand piano. Sister Gladys Burdick, a new member, has been appointed chairman of this movement and has already set in operation a unique system which with the assistance of the Providence Ladies' Choir, will insure the necessary funds for the piano payments.

They have also appointed a committee with Deacon Charles Cockcroft as chairman, for the installation of an oil-burner before the winter of 1934 sets in.

The drama written by Sister Blanche Edwards entitled "Judas' Wife," was received so well when presented by the local Laurette Dramatic Society on Palm Sunday, that they were asked to present it a second time at Attleboro April 15. There, too, it was very well received. May 6, this group of talented young people will present the play, "Lost Church," at the Providence chapel.

Recent prayer meetings have been very spiritual, and the local priesthood, assisted about once a month by one of the district presidency or the district bishop, have given some splendid sermons.

The marriage of Eusebius Wilkes and Olive Wadsworth took place April 4. Elder Wilkes, formerly of Westerly, and his bride, will live at 18 Adelaide Avenue, Providence.

Sister Beatrice Brissman and son, Arthur, have recently returned to this branch after an absence of one and one half years.

Easter Sunday evening, following the children's concert, the ladies' choir, assisted by organ, piano, and violin, rendered the cantata, "The Dawn."

Independence

Stone Church

James Moses, priest, was awarded his gold seal certificate in religious education Sunday morning, April 15, during the young people's special church school session at the Stone Church. Participating in the ceremony were Elder C. B. Woodstock, associate director of religious education for the general church and Elder W. Earl Page, director in Independence. Brother Moses is superintendent and pastor of the junior department.

A large congregation gathered last Sunday morning to listen to Elder F. G. Pitt as he delivered a sermon full of good counsel and cheer. Brother and Sister Pitt have many friends in the center place, and their visits here are always welcome.

The musical program was given by the Stone Church Choir assisted by Mrs. Alice M. Burgess, contralto soloist.

A group of beautiful hymns was presented by the Æolian Chorus Sunday evening. This was young people's night and a section of seats was reserved for classes from that department. Elder T. A. Beck, superintendent of the young people's division, was in charge. President Elbert A. Smith, for many years a favorite speaker, chose for the topic of his discourse, "The Prodigal Son."

Some clubs and classes of the Stone Church are happily winding up a successful program of work for winter and spring, while others have launched upon an intensive program of summer activities and accomplishments.

Second Church

Elder Hubert Case was the eleven o'clock speaker Sunday, and his theme was "Our Gospel Came Not in Word Only." The choir furnished appropriate music and a special number, "The Beautiful Garden," was sung by Mrs. Will Inman.

Downstairs at the junior service A. H. Thompson used as his topic, "Carrying On the Master's Work." Margaret Cato played a piano solo and Letha Hershey told a story. Picture study on "The Ascension" was conducted by Geneva Edmunds.

Elder A. C. Martin, missionary from the Northwest, spoke Sunday evening on "Workers for God." Special musical numbers were a piano solo, "The Pines," by Billy McPherson, and two vocal solos, "The Rosary," and "If God so Clothed the Grass of the Field," by John Devereau.

Liberty Street Church

Activities have been resumed at Liberty Street Church after a most enjoyable conference. Three persons, Mrs. Nanny Hale, and her son, David, nine years old, and Lena Zion, nine-year-old daughter of Brother Ralph J. Zion, were baptized in the Walnut Park font Tuesday night by Pastor John R. Lentell. A confirmation service preceded the prayer service Wednesday night, Elders John R. Lentell, Chester Young, and Jess Roberts officiating.

At the religio program Sunday night John Soderstadt gave an interesting review of his experiences at the C. C. C. Camp at Little Rock. Though there was no branch near, John succeeded in finding one Latter Day Saint who was from Wichita, Kansas. Others on the program were Joseph Frick, Harold Buseth, Mrs. Willis, Ethel McLees, Effie Mae Zion, and Sister Bernard Hurshman.

Immediately following the religio program a half-hour hymn service was enjoyed and this was followed by one of the most stirring and impressive sermons by the pastor Liberty Street members have heard for some time. His theme was "Christ Will Make You Free."

Walnut Park Church

Everyone was back in place Sunday morning following the conference interval and excellent attendance was reported at all services. A change in the administrative officers of the church school was voted, Odess Athey, who has been young people's leader, becoming assistant general superintendent, and Kenneth Morford, who has been acting as assistant, taking his place in the young people's department. It is believed that this change will prove beneficial to the school as a whole.

At the eleven o'clock hour, preceding the sermon by the pastor, Ruby Lenora Mann, baby daughter of Brother and Sister Carrol Mann, was blessed by Elders Benjamin Bean and James N. Mann, the latter being the baby's grandfather.

The sermon by Pastor Frank McDonald, calling the Saints to a life exemplifying the ideals of Zion, was an inspiring and moving message. Many in the congregation were moved to tears in contemplation of the possibilities of the great task that lies before the church.

The junior service in the lower auditorium was addressed by Elder Welton Wood and a story was told by Margaret Chapman.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey was the speaker Sunday evening.

The funeral of Brother John A. Stowell was held at Walnut Park Church Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. Brother Stowell died Friday morning, April 20. Although he did not reside in the Walnut Park district, his son, Gomer Stowell, has attended here for several years, being president of the Swastika Class of the church school and a representative in the young people's council from Walnut Park for two years. The deceased is survived by five sons and three daughters. Funeral services were in charge of Elder Harold Hattey, assisted by Elder William Inman.

On Tuesday evening, April 10, the Swastika Class surprised its teacher, Fred Horn at his home, the occasion being his birthday. About twenty members of the class were present.

During the past week Walnut Park lost by removal one of the oldest members of the congregation, in point of continuous residence. Elder William T. Gard had been a resident of the district for the past twenty-one years, having been a leader of the young people as well as the older members throughout that period. At the time of his removal he was teacher of the A. W. Z. Class of young people of the church school. This class attended in a body the group prayer service held at Brother Gard's home last Wednesday evening, and presented him with the inspired version of the Bible and the Book of Mormon, as tokens of their appreciation of the work that he had done among them. Brother and Sister Gard left Friday, Sister Gard to visit with her daughter, Sister Clyde Bullard, in Chicago, and Brother Gard for their new home in Johnson County, near Holden. The A. W. Z. Class will be taught by the pastor, Frank McDonald.

Religio officers for the next quarter were elected Sunday evening as follows: President, Duane Fish; vice president, Vernon Sackman; secretary, Fern Fric; chorister, Melba Moorman; pianist, Lavona Crabb.

Enoch Hill Church

The passing of General Conference found Saints of this congregation busy again, attending all local services. Some attended conference regularly while others did their part keeping conference visitors in their homes. Those who were able to participate in conference sessions were greatly strengthened.

Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Thomas are happy to announce the birth of a son.

Saints here were very much concerned when they heard of Elder H. E. Winegar's accident during conference, and they rejoice to see him up and about again.

This congregation was saddened at the death of Alexander McCullum, who passed away April 13. Funeral services were in charge of Elder C. S. Warren. Elder W. J. Brewer preached the funeral sermon. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

During the church school worship period Sunday, Sister Leonard Crowl sang a solo and Elder E. E. Thomas gave a talk on church department.

Pastor E. A. Thomas, the morning speaker, selected for his topic Sunday morning, "Let Us Wait on Our Ministry." Apostle J. F. Curtis was the evening speaker. Much good will result from both of Sunday's discourses.

Local musicians contributed helpfully to the success of the day's services with choir and solo numbers.

Brother John A. Stowell, formerly of this congregation, passed away April 20, and his funeral was held at Walnut Park Church Sunday afternoon.

Spring Branch Church

One hundred and eight people gathered in the union prayer service at the church last Wednesday evening in charge of the local pastor M. C. Jacobsen. John F. Sheehy, pastor in Zion, talked on the missionary responsibility of each member.

Elder E. Y. Hunker whose missionary field is in Iowa, but whose home is Independence, spoke encouragingly Sunday morning on "The Light Has Come," taking his text from Philippians 2:5. The choir sang "Arise and Shine."

Alma Dixon gave a talk earlier in the morning just following the close of the Sunday school lesson period.

The night church school program was presented by the class of Sister Ethel Fish, and consisted of instrumental music, a reading and the plays "Mother's Flowers," and "The Doctor's Visit."

Before the preaching service the young people's choir sang "Day Is Dying in the West." Elder J. A. Gillen, the evening speaker, read from Psalms: "God is our refuge and strength," and related many of his experiences in the work of the ministry; he bore a strong testimony to the truthfulness of the latter-day work.

Next Thursday the women of this district will meet all day at the church.

Junior Department Progressing

Sister Effie Verhei, the superintendent of the junior department, reports unusual progress in her work, and gives much credit to her able, consecrated teachers, and to her assistant, Sister Ardene Byers.

Outstanding worship services during the church school hour have increased the children's knowledge and appreciation of the three church books. The superintendent realizes the great need of juniors to become more familiar with these books, and has used that as her objective during the past year. Her efforts in this direction have been reinforced by the cooperation of other departments, especially the priesthood, who furnish speakers, and the music department.

A goal that the juniors undertook and achieved last year was putting on a harvest festival to raise money for new Hymnals for their lower auditorium. Attractive booths, a good program, and refreshments of pumpkin pie and cider were featured and a total of fifteen dollars and eighty-five cents taken in. The juniors are justly proud of their fifteen new songbooks.

Sister Verhei has chosen as her objective for the coming year the establishing of church consciousness in the minds of the juniors. She is consecrated to her work, and loved by all the children. In a talk she gave in a recent series of teachers' classes she said, "We like to

The Readers Say---

First Read Herald Letters

I enjoyed reading Herald letters before I became a member of the church. In fact these letters were the first thing I read consistently and were a real factor in my accepting the faith. Brother George Lewis, now of Australia, and Brother A. C. Martin, of Seattle, did much to help me understand and love the gospel.

I was privileged to attend the Silver Lake reunion in 1932 and again in 1933, and while there experienced such peace and joy as I have never felt elsewhere. Mere words cannot describe the tranquillity and joy which permeated my soul. Worldly cares and worries seemed to be forgotten. Others felt as I did and so testified in prayer services. One of these meetings was outstanding. The Spirit was there in great power, speaking comfort to those that grieved for their loved ones who had passed on, warning of trials and tribulations to come, and tenderly reminding those who remain faithful and steadfast that they will never be alone.

I have given out literature, loaned books and given tracts to many friends and neighbors. Sometimes I thought much of these things were never read, and so I was thrilled through and through when a widow to whom I had given tracts and a Herald or two, told my husband that she had read them and knew of at least six others who also had read them and had revised their opinion of Latter Day Saints.

I love the latter-day work. I want to see Zion redeemed. And yet many, many times I fail to measure up to the standards of Sainthood. I am weak. Humbly I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be a more worthy member.

Mary Ann's Healing

When four years of age I was a frail child and very ill. Neither mother nor the doctor expected me to live. Mother was greatly worried. Isabella, my eldest sister, then sixteen years of age, had joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. She begged mother to let her take me to prayer meeting. Mother, feeling sure that there was no hope for my recovery, consented. My sister carried me.

When we arrived, prayer meeting had closed. A few men were still there talking, among them Charles Derry. Isabella took me in and asked them to administer to me. "Do you think she will be healed?" an elder asked. "I know she will," replied my sister. After the administration the elder inquired, "Do you want us to administer again?" Isabella assured him that she did not, and picking me up, started home.

After going a short distance, she asked me if I could walk. "I'll try," was my answer. I walked a short way and then she carried me. We proceeded in this manner until we were almost home. Then my sister said, "I'll run on ahead and you follow."

Upon her arrival home, mother asked, "Where is Mary Ann?" "She's coming," answered Isabella. Soon I pushed open the heavy door, and mother caught me up in her arms saying, "I can't stay out of a church in which such wonderful miracles are wrought!"

Next morning she put a clean dress on me and I was out in the yard playing when the doctor arrived. "Where is Mary Ann," was his first question. "Out in the yard playing," mother happily informed him. He looked out of the window and reverently exclaimed, "My God, a miracle has been wrought! I came this morning according to our agreement, but I expected to find her dead!" With that he turned on his heel and left the house.

No Room for Doubt

God has always blessed and taken care of me in time of trial and trouble. I feel unworthy the gifts of his goodness, but he continues to bless me. I want to live and do all the things that are pleasing in the sight of my Master.

Last summer death took from us our three-weeks-old son. How we grieved! But the Lord sent his comforting Spirit to us, and we were caused to realize that though it is hard to lose our loved ones, God knows best.

I have read the Book of Mormon and am now reading the Doctrine and Covenants. I often wonder how people can doubt such wonderful books as these. They bring abundant help and comfort to the reader, and are rich with promises if we obey God's will. I pray that many will hear and accept the wonderful gospel of latter-days and that Zion will soon be redeemed. Pray for my husband and me and also for my parents at Breckenridge.

Would Be Faithful to Trust

Being a constant reader of the Herald, I realize the value of its contents. I scarcely know what part I most enjoy, although I always open the paper to the News of Church and Home. I am greatly interested in the progress of other branches, especially of places where I have visited.

Then I turn to the page, "Across the Desk," and when I read of the activity and progress of one brother and then another, I almost become discouraged with my own feeble efforts. Realizing, however, that I am young in the work, I determine to go on. I like the motto presented by Brother Marcus H. Cook, "A winner never quits, and a quitter never wins."

I was born and reared at Grand Valley, Ontario, being brought up as a Latter Day Saint and taught by a mother whose love for the church was as great as her love for the home. I was baptized by Elder John H. Taylor who has been the faithful pastor of that branch for forty years and with whom I also had the pleasure of associating in ministerial work a year ago. I was called to the office of elder at Senlac, Saskatchewan, by Apostle J. F. Curtis, and ordained by Elder J. J. Cornish, November 6, 1933.

I have received many blessings both temporal and spiritual. Several spiritual manifestations as to the truthfulness of the gospel have been mine.

Like Paul of old I am endeavoring to press toward the mark of our calling—Zion in her beauty and splendor. I would to God that more of our young people could catch a glimpse of the heavenly vision!

Knowing the financial condition of the church and answering the call for every local man to do what he can, I came back to the northern part of Saskatchewan to a branch called Loon Lake organized last August by Elder Ward L. Christy. Here I found an energetic people with Elder Louis Gendron as their leader. Though the Saints are scattered, they drive many miles to meet together. Eleven were brought into the fold last year. There are many golden opportunities here. Never before have I realized to what extent "Truly the harvest is great, the laborers few."

Inexperienced, knowing my inability, I have gone forth among strangers and preached. Many souls are hungering for the gospel. My greatest desire and ambition are that I might bring men and women to know Christ. God has been true to his promises, letting his Spirit rest upon me in my time of need. Will you pray that I may be faithful to the work intrusted to me?

Knows That He Has Found the Truth

I am a new member of the church, having joined some five months ago. About five years ago I was converted into the Salvation Army movement from the Pentecostal people. At that time I was convinced that the Salvation Army people composed the only true church of Christ.

But two Utah elders came to our mission one night, and, being very confident and positive in my belief, I talked with them. They presented many things concerning their faith and teaching which I was unable to fathom. I began to realize that I lacked the knowledge of some fundamental truths. After meditating and searching the Scriptures, I was convinced that I had found the truth only in part.

Some time later I was able to get in touch with a member of the Reorganized Church, and by reading the Angel Message Tracts I was greatly enlightened concerning the truth. Then I made my way to the church and requested baptism and was inducted into the kingdom of God on earth. Since my baptism I have been given assurance confirming the truth and broadening my vision of the task before us.

Let Us Treasure Up His Words

I am still thankful for the many choice blessings God has given, still pleading for power to control and govern self, still trying to sow the good seed of the kingdom, remembering that "he that sows sparingly, reaps sparingly." I have some faith, hope and charity, but know that I am not "clothed with charity as with a mantle." Many times I wonder what we would do without faith. Numbers of us do not live by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God. We have failed to treasure up his word, and hence have not qualified, and have been deceived many times. Our eyes are not single to the glory of God, neither are we full of light.

God protect us from evil and danger,
 Keep us from going astray.
 Help us to live like the babe in the manger,
 Growing in grace every day.
 Teach us to say, "Thy will be done."
 Feed us on manna divine.
 Help us to live as each day was our last.
 Our Father, we would be thine.

It will interest the Saints to know that about 1886 Joseph Smith, President of the Reorganized Church, came to Bevier, Missouri, to lecture on temperance at the solicitation of Mrs. Adams. He walked six miles from Mason City to Bevier. Stayed at the home of my sister, Mrs. J. B. Jones. The lecture was well liked. He dealt in facts, and there were many favorable comments. He received five dollars for the lecture. He then preached to the Saints. My sister, now Mrs. G. W. Fry, of Moberly, Missouri, may remember this visit. Her home was always open to the missionaries. She is still firm in the faith of the angel's message and an old subscriber to the Herald.

Centerville, Iowa, is in Lamoni Stake and has over eight thousand population. It is the county seat of Appanoose County. There are a hundred and eighteen coal mines in the county, a gypsum mine five hundred and fifty feet deep. The town has creameries, a daily and weekly paper, a poultry house, brick and tile plant. There is also a splendid Latter Day Saint church here. The town lies in the midst of a good farming country. Two highways, No. 3 and No. 60, pass through. We are forty miles from Ottumwa, and nine miles from the Missouri line.

Happiest Year of Her Life

Although I have been sorely afflicted, I can truly say that this year has been the happiest year in my life. I have learned to love the gospel dearly.

It took years of praying by my Latter Day Saint mother to bring me into the church, but God was merciful and spared my life. Her prayers were answered, for I was baptized April 9, 1933.

I have been in a tubercular sanatorium for sixteen months. God has blessed me in many ways, my lungs being now, practically healed.

I was terribly discouraged, being sick not only in body, but also in soul, but after I sought Jesus with a contrite heart, for forgiveness of my sins, I found peace.

I have had some wonderful administrations in which God's Spirit has been manifested. The greatest among these happened just before Labor Day of last year. The doctor told me I had a cavity in my right lung. I was not expecting such bad news, but God's grace was sufficient. The doctor told me that I would have to go to Ann Arbor, Michigan, for a slight operation, which might save my lung. Before I left, I asked the elders to come to administer. My lung was healed, and when the doctor came again, he exclaimed that a miracle had been wrought. God has given me wonderful faith.

Pray for me, that I may continue to grow stronger and soon be able to go home.

MRS. MYRTLE YATES.

LANSING, MICHIGAN, Ingham Sanatorium.

Request Prayers

Mrs. James Vanmeer, of Burk's Falls, Ontario, requests the prayers of the Saints, that she may be healed and relieved of suffering. She has neuritis, and can get little rest. The doctors seem unable to help her. For twenty years she has belonged to the church, though isolated most of the time.

Mrs. M. E. Atwood, of Du Bois, Pennsylvania, desires the Saints to pray in behalf of her daughter, Mrs. Jessie Glick, 101 Monument Street, Baltimore, Maryland, that she may be restored to health and strength.

Mrs. Lanie Salter, of McKenzie, Alabama, Route 2, desires the Saints to pray that she may be healed of an affliction for the healing of which the doctor says an operation is necessary. Sister Salter has much faith in prayer.

THE MEANING OF OUR MESSAGE

"But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6: 33.

The history of the world proves conclusively that it is selfishness and sin that cause the privations, misery, and injustice we find around us. There is enough in the world for every one, but greed and dishonesty have cursed the human race in every age. Until the seeds of evil have been uprooted from human hearts, therefore, no government of universal equity and brotherhood can endure. We send legislators to our State and National capitols to enact laws for all, but the poor are being sunk deeper and deeper by the unjust taxes laid upon them, while many who hold comfortable positions of employment will not willingly submit to any decrease in their large salaries, but selfishly demand as much as they obtained when the cost of living was at least twenty percent higher than it is today.

This is but an illustration of what is being done in a hundred ways in divers places. We need the religion of Christ in the world today more than we need any other thing. Many of these so-called public servants give little attention to the millions in want, in direct contrast to the example of Jesus and his teachings. It is the mission of the church today to lead back to the old path in which He walked, and to bring again in human hearts the real spirit of the brotherhood of man.

ECONOMIC AIMS OF THE RESTORATION

Had the message of Jesus been lived by all who have professed his name, the whole world would now be converted to him, and his kingdom would bear rule over the earth. This would mean that equity, righteousness, prosperity, and happiness would now be found everywhere, instead of crime, misery, and injustice in divers places. While we are benefiting today from the influence of Christian teaching, we ought to be profiting even more from the practice of Christian living. All too many in the world are become like those of whom Jesus warned his disciples, when he said: "but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not."

But the situation in the world today would not be fairly represented, if we did not mention the many noble men and women whose lives have been sources of inspiration and hope to those who know them. We have shown something of the great task which Jesus desires the church to accomplish, and God is moving mightily upon the hearts of many people who are now being called upon to take up the cross and follow in his steps. It is by an increasing army of Christian soldiers that the great battle of right against wrong shall finally be won.

The religion of Jesus Christ will not only save the souls of men by spiritual regeneration through repentance and reform, but it will also bring economic justice and sufficiency through a brotherhood united to serve God and mankind. It is this economic sufficiency that forms the test of Christian principles to the extent that they are applied, whether in a group, a community, or over all the earth.

Wherever a body of Christians live within the rules of Christ, there the supremacy of the ideals which center in his coming kingdom will be manifested. To establish his kingdom and its principles in the hearts of men, is the supreme duty and privilege of all who desire to be admitted at last into the glorious joys of its universal triumph.

think of the small child as an individual of the greatest importance, for haven't we seen from a study of the Word that they are truly considered the greatest in all the kingdom? Children are the bridges from one generation to another. Children may be our problems of today, but they are our leaders of tomorrow."

Riverside, California Organize for Growth

This group of Saints is not yet organized as a mission, but Priest Arden D. Logeman was reappointed to act as their leader, and received the hearty approval and a promise of loyalty from every member in the group. Sister Inez Peck was elected to act as secretary-treasurer while Sister Vida Peck was chosen to act as chorister.

The women's department continues to work under the direction of Sister Angie Peck; Sister Dora Murphy, secretary-treasurer. The women meet for an all-day session on Thursday at the home of the different members, working diligently on bazaar articles, holding cooked-food sales, and adding to their funds which are to be used to further their work. At a recent food sale their day's activities netted them the sum of twenty-seven dollars. Approximately half their good workers are nonmembers, and much friendly interest is created among neighbors. Those who have the work at heart in this city have great hopes for its future growth.

Elder Frank Lacy, of Ontario, continues occasionally to lend his support, and Elder Will O. Boren, of San Bernardino, is giving his time as well.

The choir of the latter branch attended a meeting at Riverside recently, contributing to the success of the service with an anthem.

On March 27, a sacrament meeting was enjoyed, and much of the evening was devoted to special prayer for the success of the General Conference. The Spirit of the Master was there to witness to the fact that their prayers were accepted. The testimonies were full of thankfulness for blessings and faith in the future of the gospel program.

The church-wide "Keep the law" period found the active membership of Riverside one hundred percent in accordance with the law, their financial statements filed and their tithing paid or arrangement made for its payment.

Our Departed Ones

LORANCE.—Jacob Lorange, fifth child of Jacob and Eliza Lorange, was born in Knox County, Illinois, August 8, 1851. He died at his home at Dahinda, Illinois, April 4, 1934. For forty-one years he lived in the home where he died. His wife, Alice Bradford Lorange, preceded him in death twelve years. Surviving are four children, seventeen grandchildren, and seven great-grandchildren. He was baptized into the church in May, 1904, and was ordained a teacher a few years later. His home was the home of the traveling ministry, and he was a kind neighbor and friend, a man true to his covenant till the end.

SNIDER.—Della Oma Miller was born at White Cloud, Kansas, February 24, 1872, and died March 11, 1934. She married J. H. Snider August 30, 1891. To this union one daughter was born who with her father survives. Sister Snider was baptized by Elder I. N. White at Coal Hill, Missouri, and was a faithful Saint all her life. She was very kind to her neighbors in sickness, was a hard-working woman, greatly beloved by her neighbors. The esteem in which she was held was shown by the large number of friends at her funeral. The sermon was by Elder W. T. Moreland.

BURR.—Martha Safford Burr was born in Schohany County in the State of New York, July 5, 1842, and passed away at Chicago, April 3, 1934. In 1866, she married Charles H. Burr at Delavan, Wisconsin. This union was blessed with five children, one of whom survives, Mrs. Estella Hare, of Independence, Missouri. Mrs. Burr was baptized into the church May 8, 1881, and ever remained a faithful member. In 1899, the family moved to Plano, Illinois, where they made their home for twenty-five years until Mr. Burr's death in 1924. During her long residence there Mrs. Burr won a host of friends with her pleasant and kindly personality. She was actively interested in the church. After her companion's death, she went to Chicago where she made her home with her sister. The funeral was held at Plano, Elder J. M. Blakely, officiating, assisted by Marion M. Blakely, and Ray Hurst, of Chicago. Interment was in Plano Cemetery.

Alone

By Arleen Blakeman

I'm all alone this afternoon;
I'll sit here on this clod,
And hands stretched out on earth I'll feel
The heart-beat of the sod.

Strange mystery fills the earth today
And thrilling tremors throbb
Through bird and "burning bush" alike
And willows as they nod.

I'm all alone, and over me
The weeping willows sob;
I'm all alone—oh, 'tis not true,
Right next to me is God!

The Pigeonhole

■ Longevity in the Ministry

Many people were impressed by the advanced ages of the men of the ministry who died during the period between the conferences of 1932 and 1934. Several have kindly sent in computations based on the figures read. Checking up on the printed list, we find that seventy-eight men passed away in the two-year period with a total of five thousand four hundred ninety-seven years to their credit. Their average age was a tiny fraction under seventy and one half years each. There were five in their nineties, fourteen in their eighties, and twenty-four in their seventies, making a total of sixty-three of the seventy-eight who were seventy years or older at their deaths. For fullness of days and length of years, we recommend the ministry!

■ Pigeonette

Looking at the spring antics of her children, Pobelem and Sponsibility, says: "There are too many mysteries in the world for me to try to understand all of them!"

■ Mark Twain's Satirical Prayer for War Time

"O Lord our God, help us to tear their soldiers to bloody shreds with our shells; help us to cover their smiling fields with the pale forms of their patriot dead; help us to drown the thunder of guns with the shrieks of their wounded, writhing in pain; help us to lay waste their humble homes with a hurricane of fire; help us to wring the hearts of their unoffending widows with unavailing grief; help us to turn them out roofless with their children to wander unfriended through waste of their desolated land—for our sakes, who adore Thee, Lord, blast their hopes, blight their lives, protract their bitter pilgrimage, making heavy their steps, water their tears, stain the white snow with the blood of their wounded feet. We ask of one who is the Spirit of love and who is the ever-faithful refuge and friend of all that are sore beset, and seek His aid with humble and contrite hearts. Grant our prayer, O Lord, and Thine shall be the praise and honor and glory now and forever. Amen." (Sent by E. L. Acord.)

■ We may pass a negative conference resolution on recreations and leisure time, but our young people will not read them, and if they do, they will ask: "Why is dancing wrong? Why does it hurt to have a little card game," And there you are right back where you were before you passed the conference resolution.—Elbert A. Smith.

■ An Irishman was riding in a street car when a woman got on. There was no place for her to sit. She stood. After a time the Irishman arose and said: "Take this seat, lady. My only object in waiting was to see if there was another gentleman around."

■ Almighty God gave Ten Commandments, but we have about eight hundred conference resolutions.—Elbert A. Smith.

■ Pigeon says: "Must your branch wait for your obituary before it can go forward? Or will you write its obituary first?"

In the Line of Our Work

Children's Day Once again the officers of the church wish to emphasize the necessity of instruction for the children who are to be candidates for baptism on Children's Day, June 10. Every effort should be made to see that they understand so far as they may the significance of the church and their entry into it. In next week's Herald we are presenting an article by Arthur Oakman on this subject; it should be read by all parents and church workers. There is a regrettable tendency noticed to entertain children rather than to instruct them in the essentials of faith. In being baptized, they should know what they are doing and why. Pastors should see that adequate teaching is provided.

A Graceland Contribution Next week's Herald will also contain another item of importance—the first of a projected group of articles of an informative nature sponsored by Graceland College and written by members of the faculty. At the invitation of President Frederick M. Smith, the college authorities are furnishing these educational articles. The first one to appear will be "Permanent Prosperity" by A. B. May, Professor of Economics and Business Administration. It is believed that these articles will help our readers to continue a critical interest in world conditions and movements, and create a bond between the intellectual life of the college and that of the church.

Adult Education We know that the education of an alert and progressive individual is never completed. Learning continues to the end of life. The possession even of a college degree is only the real beginning of knowledge. Today the universities of this country are encouraging their graduates to continue their studies, besides offering educational opportunities to those who have had no chance to take residence studies. Graceland College is taking this means of offering an opportunity to church people through the Herald. It is offered gratis as one of the many services that Graceland is performing for the church. We are sure that church people will appreciate the value of this service.

After the dust storm comes the rain;
After the harrow springs the grain;
And peace comes after the long pain.

What is in a name? Perhaps a salary. A great many men have lost good political jobs because their party had two too many letters in its name.

Question: What does a preacher do at times when he would become angry if he were not a preacher.

Answer: He becomes righteously indignant.

—————
Prayer of a young man: Lord, give me my chance in life, honorable work, and service in the church; that my life may have meaning and purpose. Make me brave for the battle of life and strong for its burdens. Give me clean love and help me to build a good home. Keep me true to all my covenants. Amen.

—————
Prayer of an old man: Lord, give me courage to bear cheerfully the bodily pains of old age and its spiritual loneliness and disappointments. Give me wisdom that may not fail amid the decay of my mental and physical forces, so that I may do no folly in my age to mar the record of my past service. Help me to hold steady and to serve while I yet may; and when I may not serve, let me depart in peace nor remain a burden to anyone. When I shall need it, set a light on the far shore. Amen.

—————
Probably there is merit to Japan's assertion that China needs to be stabilized and regulated. America deemed it necessary at times to set certain small houses to the southward in order. The difficulties before Japan and the world are twofold. First, no great nation is willing to be stabilized and regulated by an outside power. Second, if China were willingly to fall under Japan's plans a power would be created in the Far East that could aspire to world dominion. Kaiser Wilhelm's old time vision of a "Yellow Peril" would be a reality. The "Christian" nations, having taught these "heathen" the noble arts of modern warfare, would be compelled to fight for existence. Having taken up the sword they would find that their great Master knew what he was talking about when he said: "He that taketh up the sword shall perish by the sword."

1934 Reunions

Chairmen of local reunion committees who have not yet done so, should immediately notify the First Presidency regarding the time and place of reunions which are to be included in the 1934 schedule. It will not be possible to include reunions for the current season unless particulars are received at an early date.

Christian Legion: Attention!

All members of Zion's Christian Legion, the young people's organization of the Great Lakes Mission, are informed that the Herald will carry communications for them in a special column devoted to their activities, and they are urged to watch the issues carefully for such communications. In this issue there is a letter from Apostle D. T. Williams, the Commander. It will be found near the regular Bulletin Board department.

An Apology

Some weeks ago there appeared in the Herald a notice concerning Leonard G. Hoisington stating that as his whereabouts was unknown therefore notice of his silence was inserted. The publication of the notice was an error, for it is known where Brother Hoisington is, and that he is carrying on in a commendable manner. We regret the error and give due apology to the brother.

F. M. S.

This present hour our world is being flung back into those old divisive, antagonistic, conflicting nationalisms from which it seemed the idealism of the Great War had delivered us. Our political peril, our economic peril, our industrial peril, our commercial peril, our religious peril is just here. The Christian church is feeling this keenly in the present collapse of missions. The thing which we have lost from missions is only another form of what we have lost from evangelism. We have lost a passion sufficiently worth while to justify the cost of missions, to impel us to win our fellow men. If the Kingdom of God idea could seize upon modern men as a commanding spiritual passion, then we would have the spiritual dynamic for which our world is waiting and without which our world is plunged back into the conflicts and the hatreds of the bitter past.—Church Management.

EDITORIAL NOTE: PHOTOGRAPHS WANTED

A new engraving service for the publishing interests of the church will permit us to use good pictures of persons and places. We especially want pictures of church executives, accompanied by a brief biographical note. Photographs are better than snapshots. If our picture of you is not up-to-date, would you send us your latest one?—Herald Editors.

The Anointing of Nonmembers

At the bottom of page 40 in the Priesthood Manual, the latest edition, appears the sentence, "Do not anoint nonmembers." This sentence should be marked out, as the prohibition it contains is not approved by church authorities. Someone, among the number who reviewed the copy for the revised edition, wrote the sentence into the copy; but since the one who did it cannot be identified there is no explanation for its appearance. Members owning copies should mark the sentence out. Copies now being sold are so amended.

ACROSS THE DESK

By F. M. S.

— Informal Chats From the Office of the President —

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH

Death Takes Rosemary Lewis

Sad news has come to the desk. Brother George G. Lewis under date of March 24 writes:

"It grieves us to report that the grim reaper visited our little family circle on Sunday last, March 18, taking our little child, Rosemary. For the past two weeks the babe (9 months old) was in the Newcastle Hospital in the Isolation Ward suffering from Diphtheria (laryngeal) and Otitis Media. She seemed to be progressing well according to hospital reports but the day previous to her demise, she took a sudden change. The secondary cause of death was a lung abscess and broncho-pneumonia.

"Sr. Lewis is still in the isolation hospital suffering from diphtheria as a carrier of the germ. We are hopeful of her return soon, but there is no telling when that will be. She is very weak and thin, having suffered various sicknesses since January 8. It will be necessary for me to take her away for some time to have a complete change and rest until she can get adjusted to conditions as they are. She is bravely struggling along. No one is permitted to visit her in her hour of grief which makes it doubly hard to bear.

"We hope that things will soon brighten for us as we are desirous of getting to work and helping the Saints in this Mission. With the Lord's help we will strive to carry on to a successful issue in the work that we love so dearly."

Our hearts go out in sympathy to our Brother and Sister Lewis, and our prayers arise that they may be comforted in their sad hour. That they are bravely facing the situation is indicated in the last paragraph, and we join them in hoping that the sun will soon break through the clouds.

Looking Ahead

Blair Jensen in a recent letter writes:

"We find that the conference was helpful to us in many respects, but are also aware of the fact that the coming two years will determine whether the benefits derived are sufficient for the tasks and responsibilities that the next two years will bring."

It is our hope and even belief that the fine work and splendid feeling of the last General Conference will be converted into a period of great activity in which we will see results reached that will bring joy and happiness to the hearts of the Saints.

A Challenge to the Priesthood

In a report from Brother C. A. Estrom, President of the Northeast Illinois District, I find that he is interested in ascertaining the reasons why at the morning preaching service there is an attendance throughout the district of twenty-nine percent; at the evening service, sixteen percent; at the prayer service eight percent, and at the sacrament service thirty-one percent. He has attempted to analyze the underlying causes and then will attempt to find a solution for the problem. It is interesting to note that his first attempted solution will be to develop one hundred percent active priesthood.

Speaking of the conference he expresses the hope that "out of it will come a clear-cut program that will demand action on the part of the membership and priesthood if they are to remain aboard the good ship 'Zion.'" He is looking forward to the presentation of that which will challenge us to greater things.

The Liquor Evil

Brother Marcus H. Cook, writing from Willapa, Washington, makes comment relative to one of the effects of the Eighteenth Amendment, which one is likely to see in other places besides the one of which he writes. He says:

"We have a vivid picture here of the benefits (?) of the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. Boys as young as eighteen years old are frequenting the beer parlors and are often drunk on the streets in Raymond, only about two miles from Willapa. It is quite apparent that the legalizing of liquor has not stopped the bootlegger, but seems to have given him a new impetus. A party was held only last week, a stag party, at which I am told that a man furnished beer for the party that was home-made. What seems to me to be a tragic feature is that most restaurants are serving beer and girls who work in such places are required to be bartenders. I am not as a rule a pessimist, but such things look bad to me. When will we establish a place of safety from such conditions?"

Let us hope that the time for the establishing of such a place of safety as Brother Cook indicates is close at hand.

Education is not learning; it is the exercise and development of the powers of the mind. There are two great methods by which this end may be accomplished: it may be done in the halls of learning, or in the conflicts of life.—Princeton Review.

Mother's Day Program Helps for Churches

A Mother Speaks

"I hold aloft the torch and set it farther on.

"I have gone down to the brink of dark waters and from the cold shadows brought back warm and precious life.

"I am an inspiration and a victim.

"I have known reverence and ingratitude, adoration and neglect.

"I have drunk of joys that heaven will not make sweeter.

"I have felt griefs that endless torment could not make more keen.

"I have been borne aloft on wings softer than those of angels.

"I have seen in loving eyes the light that never was on sea or land.

"I have known the callous cruelty of indifference, the pain of being left behind on the path of life, the agony of 'superiority.'

"I have known the joy of being told that my white hairs are the beauty of undying youth.

"I have known the anguish of being told that I was never young.

"I have known the gladness of sacrifice and its sweet appreciation.

"I have known the happiness of remorse for unmeant indifference, of regret that 'they did not realize.'

"I have slept on pillows softer than down, in which no unfilial hand had ever placed a thorn.

"I have received tributes, nobler than any paid to kings and warriors, from those who testified that what they did and were they owed to me.

"I have seen stalwart sons grow into the likeness of him I loved, and sweet daughters become what I longed to be.

"I have known the glory of fulfillment, the fame of contented obscurity, the humble renown of a completed mission, the overflowing repayment for having given myself.

"I AM A MOTHER."—Frank A. Marshall, in Kansas City Journal-Post.

My Mother

We read about the mothers of the days of long ago,

With their gentle, wrinkled faces and their hair as white as snow;

They were "middle-aged" at forty,
and at fifty donned lace caps,
And at sixty clung to shoulder shawls and loved their little naps.

But I love the modern mother who can share in all the joys,
And who understands the problems of her growing girls and boys;

She may boast that she is sixty, but her heart is twenty-three—

My glorious bright-eyed mother who is keeping young with me.

—Florence Howard Wolcott.

Mother's Day

Every day is Mother's day;

Every day we are placing
The light of joy upon her face,
Or lines of sorrow tracing.

Do we note the worried look
More oft now appearing?
As we leave childhood's estate
Are we with her sharing

All our joys and hopes and fears?
Till "the time just biding
Till the load with her we bear,"
To our friends confiding.

Now our joy to make her glad
With buds of love oft blooming;
O long delay that dreadful day
Without her in the gloaming.

Yes, every day is Mother's day,
This we are gladly keeping
As a pattern for the ones
That through the years come creeping.

—Rose Francis, from the Independence Examiner.

The mother in her office holds the key coin of character, and makes the being cares, a Christian man! Then crown her queen of the world.—Old Play.

Truly God is good to Israel, even to

A Tribute to Mother

There is one great journey in this life and one only. It starts with the cradle and ends with the grave.

The greatest word is God. The deepest word is Soul. The longest word is Eternity.
The swiftest word is Time. The nearest word is Now. The darkest word is Sin.
The meanest word is Hypocrisy. The broadest word is Truth. The strongest word is Right. The truest word is Love.
The sweetest word is Home. And the dearest word is MOTHER.

How poor the man who has never felt the presence of a mother's kiss, and in the corridor of whose memory there lingers no sound or echo of a mother's voice.

Gladstone, in Parliament, gave a touching instance of a mother's devotion, referring to the death of Princess Alice.
Her little boy lay stricken with diphtheria.
Stretching out his arms he cried, "Mamma, kiss me." Though strongly cautioned to keep away from her babe, she answered the boy's appeal and took him in her motherly arms, and they laid them to rest in the same grave.

John Randolph, the southern statesman, wrote: "I should have been an atheist but for one recollection, the memory of that time when she, who has now passed away, took my childish hands, and on bended knees taught me to say, 'OUR FATHER.'"

To many a boy and girl thousands of miles from home, the name of mother has the value of religion, pure and undefiled, enshrined in a living personality.
—Locomotive Engineers Journal.

East or West?

To you does the East mean gladness
And joy and all things new?
Does the setting sun mean sadness
And the end of things to you?

I've seen joy and hope and gladness
Spring up with the rising morn;
I've seen the eve bring sadness
And a sense of impending storm—

A storm of brain and impulse—
A reflex of the Soul of man;
"What was it?" I've said, and I ask you
To explain this thing if you can.

If to you the morn means beauty
And the beginning of tasks aright,
Let's reverse the plan and endeavor
To make them begin with the night.

Let not time nor the task beginning,
Make a difference in anything;
Let us work and know we can do it,
And leave the finish with HIM!
—Ruby Stedman Cummins.

Priesthood and the Problem of Leisure

By F. M. McDowell

"Our leisure, extending to millions instead of to a small privileged class, comes from the turning of wheels, the whirring of spindles, the swinging of great cranes, the hammering of power riveters, the grinding drone of great turbines revolving endlessly. They give us a leisure that is almost terrifying, a leisure from which we might shrink back appalled if we were to believe that man is to play always as the animal and not more and more as the man. How shall it be filled with play, beautiful, rich, satisfying to what is largest and most human in us? The question is immediately upon us. The question cannot be delayed too long."—The Christian Century, July 19, 1933, page 934.

AS HERE IMPLIED the problem of leisure is intimately related and arises out of some of the most momentous revolutionary changes of history. The mechanization of industry followed by the mechanization of life, increased unemployment, increased facilities and opportunities for play, the commercialization of recreation, the profit motive, the growing philosophy of libertinism—all combine to present thinking people with a situation that is indeed "terrifying."

We have here a problem of first rank, one that has vitally to do with civilization itself. Because the fundamental values of civilization center in human worth, the sacredness of personality, character, righteousness, the salvation of men and society, we find therein a problem of major concern to the church. Alert students are keenly aware that in the opportunities which leisure or free time affords are to be found that which may make or break civilization, that which can, if misused, nullify with amazing rapidity and thoroughness the work of such agencies as the home, the school, and the church.

The first contribution which the priesthood may make to the solution of the problem of leisure is to develop a clearer understanding and a much more sane and intelligent attitude towards this problem than has usually characterized our approach to it. May we state somewhat dogmatically that we have here, therefore, a problem and an opportunity that cannot be met by mere neutrality or indifference. Trying to convince ourselves it isn't so is utter folly. Our knowledge of human nature and the clearly recorded experiences of the past should convince us that neither the negative repressions of Puritanism nor the licentious practices of libertinism may be expected to cope with the issue involved. Leisure is not unqualifiedly bad, neither is it unqualifiedly good. It is preeminently a doorway which may lead either to the good or the bad. We should fool ourselves no longer. We have here a problem which cannot be met by legislation alone. To content ourselves with formulating a few conference resolutions and then to forthwith cease our thinking and permit to go unheeded the call for courageous leadership constitutes unforgivable folly.

The priesthood should take the initiative in a program of teaching and leadership calculated to lift the recreational and leisure-time activities of the church and of those within its influence to an ever higher level of expression and creative worth. A splendid suggestion as to the stages of such development is found in the following analysis of the various levels of expression of leisure-time activities which one may seek to cultivate. This analysis is furnished by H. A. Overstreet in his book entitled, We Move in New Directions.

1. Leisure-time activities on the animal level are characterized by licentiousness and libertinism, the stimulation and gratification of passions, etc.

2. These leisure-time activities are characterized by what Mr. Overstreet calls the leisure of escape—a getting away from that which is significant and finding release in movies, vaudevilles, intense riots of noise and movement, that temporarily delight the eye and ear. In other words effortless, passive, temporary pleasure.

3. The leisure of fulfillment.

a. Leisure that supplements and enriches life in some measure, the leisure of hobbies, such as music, reading, gardening.

b. Here one over a period of years has, aside from his work, become something of a master in some branch of science, art, or history. Leisure that leads one to share in the great achievements and triumphs of the race.

c. A still higher leisure is found when the line between leisure activity and work has altogether disappeared, where one "desires for his leisure only more time to give to his creative work." For such, work becomes a beloved activity and life becomes creatively integrated."

d. The highest level mentioned by Overstreet is found when such creative activity is shared and is lifted up into a community of interests, "which is perhaps the most essential condition of happiness and growth."

The priesthood should give intelligent direction and moral support to the endeavor being made in several branches to develop a church-centered recreational program. Such would require consideration being given to the following major problems:

1. The development of standards for individual choices in the matter of recreational and leisure-time activities. There is space only for a suggestion here. To lead the individual to question each recreational activity in terms of its effect upon his life: What does it do to my health? What does it do to my likes, interests, ideals? Does it take me toward or away from my program? Does it increase or decrease my influence for good? Does it make me more or less interested in better things? Does it make me more or less interested in the church? The writer will furnish a complete outline of such standards if desired.

2. Standards for organized group activities within the church. Certainly such activities should be a part of the definite church program, supplementing the total church endeavor and leading toward the goals of the church. Certainly such should place the emphasis upon personality, character, and life, and not on amusement or profit. They should be for all and not a select few. They should emphasize creative participation rather than mere witnessing. They should promote the highest type of cultural, moral, and spiritual life. They should encourage self-expression on the higher spiritual levels of meditation, worship, etc.

3. The furnishing of suggestions for the organization and supervision of leisure-time activities within the branch.

Why should not, for example, the local church make an analysis of its membership, their various needs, interests, etc., this to determine the type of recreational activities which the church might very well undertake.

Why not make a survey of the wholesome leisure-time opportunities in the community and furnish a list of such from time to time so that individual members as well as classes and groups may have such a list to choose from when arranging their recreational programs?

Why not get behind the program which the church has already set forth for adolescent boys and girls, which includes programs for Oriole Girls, Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, etc?

Why not become informed as to the materials that are available both within and without the church to be used in the building of a balanced program of recreational activities, including drama, music, group games, social gatherings, sports, contests, etc?

Why not encourage individuals and groups to enter upon a leadership training program to make sure that the recreational activities of the church will be at all times under the direction of a high type of intellectual and spiritual leadership?

Altogether too frequently this major problem has been left to youthful and unskilled leaders. May we not in all kindness and yet earnestness suggest that here we have one of those problems which require the attention of God-inspired personalities—a problem which after we have done our best to solve we shall be justified in petitioning God for an additional revelation of his will.

Graphic Arts Bureau

Recently the department has secured some very interesting photographs of historical value. Through John A. Robinson, San Antonio, Texas, a large photograph was secured of the Sunday school class of Sister Lebrada Menchaca who was born in Paras De Lafuente, Mexico. Her class consisted of twenty-four pupils. She bears a very faithful testimony to the truthfulness of this latter-day work.

Florence Fisher, Boston, has turned over to the department three very valuable photographs in a very good state of preservation, of a conference held in Fall River, Massachusetts in 1888. We note among those in the picture Albert Hoxie, sr., Frank Sheehy, William H. Kelly, Hiram Robinson, M. H. Bond, Alonso Parsons, G. F. MacDowell, and John Smith. In one of the other photographs among those present we note the late Joseph Smith, Alexander H. Smith, U. W. Greene, George W. Robley, Robert Bullard, George H. Gates, Holmes J. Davidson, Brother Toombs, E. H. Fisher, John Robertson, and M. C. Fisher.

Elder L. G. Holloway has furnished us with a picture of Charles H. Jones, the first president of the Lamoni congregation. Brother Jones was a Seventy and did missionary work in St. Louis. W. H. Deam has given the department several pictures which merit further mention.

The department is anxious to obtain such pictures as these and we hope the Saints will send them to us for preservation.

The More Excellent Way

From "Lessons From Life"

By Gladys Mae Smith

A FEW YEARS AGO, he was the average American business man. His sons went to college, and between terms, flaunted the extreme in sport cars and bell-bottomed trousers. His daughters' dinner parties and vacation tours turned the feminine element of the little town green with envy.

His home was extremely costly both within and without, and his General Merchandise establishment commanded the services of some eight or ten assistants.

Then came the slump. Quietly—oh, so quietly—he dropped from sight. First it was reported that he had taken a vacation; later that a legacy to which he had fallen heir required his attention. When a loan company took over his pretentious home and the merchandise from his shelves was sold at sheriff's auction, we understood with something of a shock that he was bankrupt.

Recently quite by chance, I met him on the streets of a nearby city. "Thirty five years ago, I invested in a family," he said, "It's the only investment I have left. Now I'm collecting dividends." This was his whimsical way of telling me that he was living among his children.

"It took a year and a half to swallow the lump," he continued with a wistful smile, "For forty years I chased the almighty dollar. Now in the twilight of life, now when it is too late to rectify my mistake, I find there is a more excellent way."

LATER, I watched as he went down the street, and there was a lump in my own throat difficult to swallow. A hunter whose prey at the end of a forty year chase had eluded him; a pilgrim whose wanderings into a world of investment had eventually brought him back to his original one—his bed and board the only dividends from a lifetime of labor. Yet to me, the saddest note was sounded when he said: "Now when it is too late to rectify my mistake, I find there is a more excellent way."

There is resident within the soul of mankind a desire to achieve, to excel. Since man was created in the image of God, we can conclude that this desire had its origin with the Father himself and is handed down to His children. It is therefore fitting and proper that man should bend his energies, his talents, his ambitions toward that sometimes elusive something which we call success. The tragedy lies in the duplicity of popular opinion which defines success all too often in terms of dollars and cents.

The worship of the golden calf has long ceased to be a symbol; it has taken on the form of twentieth century reality. The urge to possess has so entirely dominated man that he has lost sight of the original purpose of his creation.

On every hand we witness the living results of man's aggrandisement—years of futile struggle and sacrifice, blasted hopes, the bitter dregs of learning too late of a "more excellent way." What, then, is man to do with his inherited sense of supereminency?

The answer comes to us in two words: "Obey God." Our heavenly Father has foreseen the consequences of selfishness and greed. He has given rules to govern the ambition of man—a sort of a guy-rope, as it were, to hold our desires in check.

Through the first given Ten Commandments, through the scriptural admonitions of spiritual men, through His prophets and latter-day revelation, including the financial law, God has prepared the way for our full and lasting success. Wise indeed is the man or woman who accepts the challenge of Paul who said: "And now show I unto you a more excellent way." For what greater satisfaction, for what greater success could one ask, than to know at the twilight of life that one had found and followed "the more excellent way"?

Let Us Learn to See

I wonder whether any of you have ever taken a course in biology and, if so, whether you remember your first clumsy efforts to see a Paramecium or Infusoria on the slide underneath the lens. If so, you will remember that perhaps for hours you looked through that glass and could see nothing at all, except blurs and blotches that meant nothing to you. So it is with religion. It takes time and patience and a quality of life, before one can see clearly the realities that are truly there.

If this is the point at which religion begins, it is also the point at which all great achievement begins.—Elliott Speer in Church Management.

"One who frankly confesses himself to be in the wrong when he is, will be found mostly in the right."

"He is the truly courageous man who never desponds."

"Help Me!"

By C. J. Lant

Many times my heart has been made to ache, when I saw men and women suffering in the different branches, because of misunderstandings, at a time when things were running the smoothest and we were bound to do some worth while things in the branch, only to see the spirit leave and be gone for weeks and sometimes months.

From observation, I have noticed this in almost every branch in the church that I have visited, and had decided that the condition was general in the entire church. It grieved me very much, because I knew that God did not intend anything like that to exist.

I had prayed many times that the reason for this would be made known to me, but somehow it was withheld; until finally one day I determined to withdraw myself from any hindering cause or causes and seek God as I had never sought before; I went on my knees in earnest prayer and prayed an unselfish prayer.

Immediately after arising from the prayer, I walked straight to the bookcase and got my Doctrine and Covenants and automatically turned to "section 85 paragraph 38" and began to read—"See that ye love one another—learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires—cease to be idle—cease to be unclean;"—up to this point there had been only the usual interest, which has manifested itself to me; almost every time that I opened my Doctrine and Covenants—but at the next line the letters seemed to be magnified many times their true size and they appeared to me as if in a revelation;—"Cease to find fault one with another !!!"

It seemed to shout itself from the pages of that book and I feel sure that God made it known to me.

Suddenly I was made to realize that that is just what has been the trouble with me as with many others that I have met. We have often wondered, all of us, just what was the trouble. Many times we would try to find the solution to the problem and possibly did not have the courage to go to the proper source to find the answer.

Many times we have heard the remark that, we were all just children "grown big" and have taken the stand that because we have reached adulthood that that was the last verse in life's drama; but day by day we are learning that there were so many things that we did not learn, while growing up that we need to go back and review from the first lesson.

We hear considerable about visual education and a few days ago we had a lesson in visual education.

It was a picture of a small child who, being angry with her mother, had thrown herself on the bed and was crying as if her heart would break, and yelling at the top of her voice, at her mother; saying "I hate you! I hate you! etc.," and beneath the picture were the words, "What she really means, is 'Help me.'"

And in thinking back over the thought in the beginning of this article and knowing that faults of one are the faults of many; we want to be one that will be understood properly when we say the wrong thing at the wrong time, but all the while meaning; "Help me."

Belief or Conviction?

By Dwight D. W. Davis

Today there are too many people in the world who claim a belief in religion. But that's just the trouble, it stops with belief. This is the lazy man's way out. This is the attitude of the person who agrees with everything you say and then does nothing about it. It was against this attitude that James directed his remarks when he said: "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only."

When belief transcends intellectual assent, it becomes conviction. But conviction in a cause is not enough; it must be directed consciously along intelligent lines. Latter Day Revelation informs us that "the glory of God is intelligence."

Saul of Tarsus was convinced that the Christians were in need of "soul persecution"; but who can say that the persecution administered by him was intelligently directed? The converted Paul, however, no longer doubted the cause of Christ. His writings abundantly manifest the intelligence with which his later efforts were directed. His was a passionate conviction in the divinity of Christ.

Conviction, then, is always more than lip service. It is always more than placid assent. A passionate conviction in the divinity of Christ and the purposefulness of His message never stops with vocal renditions of "Hallelujahs and Amens."

The message is, "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments." Love, without service, is inconceivable; hence a conviction in Christ will not rest contentedly until it finds expression in Christian service. "Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind."

In one sentence let us summarize the thoughts presented.

Religion with us must become more than a belief; it must become an intelligently directed, passionate conviction in the divinity of Christ and find its logical expression in the field of Christian service.

Signs and Times

By James E. Bishop

AS MAN PASSES through his temporal estate, God causes to come to pass certain signs or events, some of which are foreshadowed and written in the Scriptures, before the signs are manifest. This places God on record and when the signs are fulfilled the responsibility is lodged with man to search into the things of God. This searching must be done in faith and with a willingness to be taught of God.

The word "sign" occurs many times in the Bible. Sometimes, because of man's perversity. It refers to untoward conditions. But in the main, the word is used to designate an event that is to happen. This event indicates the intervention of God and gives satisfaction, to those of faith, that God is at work in his creation and among men.

The word "time" likewise occurs many times in the Bible and is applied in various ways. Many of these ways are applied to the incidental and regular affairs among men. Others refer to certain times over which God holds and exercises supreme power. As an example of this we cite the following: "and hath determined the times before appointed." (Acts 17:26.)

It is within these two aspects of signs and times, which bespeak the intervention of God, that we wish to develop this theme.

The life of man is conditioned in time. "Time and tide wait for no man" seems to be as true as "now is the day of salvation." However, man gives greater heed to the former than he does to the latter. Man has to be on time at his work, to catch a train, bus or boat. The split second seems to wreck or allow escape. When persons or groups have had their inning, time is called. If the same promptitude were used by man in spiritual things as he is obliged to observe in material or physical things, this world would be transformed very soon. The Psalmist said: "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." (90:12.)

Some have said that time is measured duration. But that is only using other terms, with the same meaning, to define the first term, "time." Physicists of the eighteenth and nineteenth century considered time, matter and space fundamental aspects, to which they could apply their mathematics. It was thought that great advances were being made in man's understanding of the solar and stellar universe. Its depths were being sounded. New planets and asteroids were brought to light. The "milky way" is considered to be a sort of a band that dimly outlines our universe. Outside of its limits are other gigantic nebulae. To all of this there seems to be no beginning or end. Yet some of the vast spaces are spoken of in terms of light years. The laws of gravitation seemed to be solidly founded in the nature of things.

Relativity arose and questioned whether or not there should be considered another factor, such as the event. Are time and space objectively real? Investigations seemed to show that what was called space was filled with an imponderable ether and that time was more or less a human necessity. It seems to be shown that time, when compared with large proportions, is not absolute.

This concept of time, when compared with signs and the great consummation, which God reveals in His word, gives to what is called eschatological, (the doctrine of last things) a meaning that should be duly considered. The usual acceptance of the term implies that there is something going to happen in the future, which may be sudden in its appearance, or gradual in its development; that has little actual bearing on what we ought to do right here and now.

It is true that men have disassociated themselves from the actualities of life and put themselves in places, "and let the rest of the world go by." But all such men do not live in monasteries. One may be very active with a philosophy and develop a theory, or have someone develop it for him. He may be very zealous in its propagation. But if he is not careful in his interpretation of the Word of God, he is likely to take that part which fits his theory. If he does that, his view of human nature may be one-sided. Is it logical to think that the vast amount of Scripture on the so-called "last things" and the descriptions of human nature given in the Word of God are incidental and immaterial? Of course everyone who has read on the theme to any extent knows that the attempt to get to the "historical Jesus" has emasculated the accounts given of Jesus by Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. Such work has left the Christian religion without a standard, and while it may be the best yet developed, some other may be expected. On such a basis there could be no proselyting; one man's word would be just as good as another's when it comes to the great questions of life, death, salvation and immortality.

What success has come to the Restoration Movement, has come because of the conviction men had that they were delivering the Word of God; because they had heard the Word of God.

The meaning of eschatological is twofold: first, there is the common idea that has to do with a succession of events that will culminate in the return of Jesus Christ to this world. Second, there is that aspect of eschatology that refers to human nature as it is, as it may be refined, and as it confronts the problem of death. Present life is conditioned in time. But life is related to what is called eternity. The following statement from the Doctrine and Covenants presents this aspect of the eschatological and indicates how it relates to human needs here and now. "Wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in a twinkling of an eye; wherefore, for this cause [italics mine] preached the apostles unto the world the resurrection of the dead." The entire paragraph, from which that is quoted, Doctrine and Covenants 63:13, gives the complete eschatological setting—that which is to come upon the earth and that which is ever present, so far as affecting man here and now is concerned. This latter aspect is touched upon by Tennyson in his poem, "Crossing the Bar."

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark;

For tho' from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crost the bar.

On the question of time there are two interesting passages of Scripture. "Time shall be no longer" (Revelations 10:6.) "Time is measured only unto man." (Book of Mormon, page 448, verse 38.) The teachings that Christ came in the "meridian of time" is found in the Inspired Version and in the Doctrine and Covenants. Jesus condemned some of his contemporaries because they knew the signs, by which they foretold the next day's weather, but did not know the signs of the times. (Matthew 16:3.)

On the question of the time of the Lord's return to earth there is much Scripture that requires a detailed and prayerful study. The fact that such Scriptures has been, and is misinterpreted is not evidence that sometime and somewhere the right interpretation may be had. Further, the fact that some men in their zeal have dated the time of the return of Jesus, is likewise not evidence that all students are going to do that. In fact the careful student will not do that, for to Latter Day Saints has come the following: "But the hour and the day no man knoweth, neither the angels in heaven nor shall they know until he comes." (Doctrine and Covenants 49:2.) It is equally true that the desire, on the part of men to have general understanding of the signs preceding the return of Jesus, is treated with respect, sympathy and with a desire and an effort to reveal that to them, by Divinity. See section 45, Doctrine and Covenants, Matthew 24, Mark 13, Luke 21 and a multitude of other statements in the New Testament, which make that glorious event basic to sundry admonitions to faithfulness, etc. One of the great themes of the Old Testament is the "Day of the Lord" which is to be preceded with signs and great events. Events that are superhuman and involve the direct intervention of God.

At this time we wish to give a summary, only, of what is found touching the question of the return of Jesus Christ and the signs preceding that event.

Section 45 of the Doctrine and Covenants indentifies the actual events connected with the restoration of the gospel as coincident with the "time of the Gentiles" which has come in. This would seem to indicate a sort of an opening up of an unusual opportunity. It also plainly says, "and in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." The word "time" is first singular and next plural. This section then goes on to describe the events preceding the millenium and events within that period, and then declares, "And now, behold, I say unto you, it shall not be given unto you to know any further concerning this chapter [this section seems to be a sort of review and expansion of Matthew 24] until the New Testament be translated, and in it all these things shall be made known; wherefore I give unto you that you may now translate it." This evidently refers to the Inspired Version. (See "An Introduction to the Inspired Version," Zion's Ensign, October 30, 1930.) To that book students of the question of the return of Jesus Christ turn, and when it is associated with section 45 and the general Scripture in the Bible we find light and inspiration. From what we have gleaned we summarize.

The length of a generation is likely to be as long as there is a representative of that generation living.

There are two generations in the last days indicated in the general Scriptures.

There are three com- (Continued on page 556.)

Lesson Seven—May 13

Economic Inefficacy

TRUTH is whatever accords with the requirements of nature and being.

To live, plants require light as well as moisture; i. e. all the higher forms of plant life do. It is the nature of plant life that it cannot maintain itself by moisture alone. It lives, not by light; not by moisture; but by light and moisture in interaction. This will illustrate the truth relating to human life set out in the statement: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God."

One step further. Man shall not live by bread and word in wrong combinations. "CO" contains nothing different from "CO," and yet one will promote life and the other destroy it.

Isaiah 1: 11-19 and 58: 1-12 are accounts of religious disappointments growing out of unbalanced or one-sided moral menus. These people were devout enough. But the multitude of their sacrifices and fasts went against them rather than for them because their devotions were not coupled with right economic relations. It was as if a plant had an abundance of sunlight and heat, but no moisture—their souls shriveled up under rays which otherwise would have enlarged them. Man shall not live by bread alone.

This truth is stated in Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3 in this manner: "Nevertheless in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld." See also the last verse of Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2. Also 51: 1. The church shall not live by devotions alone, but by doing the will of God in economic relations. Of course Matthew 4: 4 may have been stated with an application in another relation, and that is in relation to industry and government. At least it is applicable to this relation. The thought is that no amount of economic power and material wealth can bring life unless it is made effective by right economic relations.

Matthew 4: 4 is a prophecy of what has happened to the race in this age. All the autos and glutted granaries and hard surfaced roads we can manufacture and grow and build are not the way of life. Without godly government (which is "The Word") the purposes of industry will miscarry. That needs no proof, for it has proved itself.

Then there is the other application of this truth and that is this: Economic concerns are not the greater part of life.

The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment. The greater part of life is to be found in music, art, literature, science, and social activity. The man who has little or none of these is miserably poor, whatever his holdings in stocks and bonds, and however abundant and rich the viands and delicacies in his larder.

Just now we are inclined to stress economic concerns in our planning because our economic plans have miscarried. But economic plans have not miscarried because we lack economic power but because men are not in right relations.

FOUNDATIONS

"Man shall not live by bread alone." Let those materialists who scoff at the idea that civilization must be built upon a spiritual foundation to endure—let them witness the imminence of the collapse of the civilization of their own building. Let them witness the fate of a race that tries to live without the word of God.

TECHNOCRACY

Technocracy is bread-ocracy. It pays no attention to differences in personalities. Its concern is units of energy and of goods. It distributes without regard either to differences in individual requirements or temperaments, or to differences in "sowing"—i. e., to personal application to economic tasks. It talks in terms of machines and factory products and physical fitness. It does not talk in terms of fulfillment of personality. Its concern is "meat and drink." And that is not "The Kingdom." "The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."

I mention this because Technocracy sets itself up as the latest contribution to political theory. That it has good features, none may deny. But it attacks the problem at the wrong end. "Seek first The Kingdom, and to establish its righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," is the Christian attack. Technocracy plans to convert this world into heaven by attention to meat and drink. Christianity plans to build men who will seek "righteousness" which is the truth of human conduct—each of his own free moral will.

Technocracy would convert society into an industrial mechanism. Christianity would convert it into a governing organism.

And so with certain other "isms." The fulfillment of personality, which is the principal test of "life," is their last concern. Meat and drink, production, is their first concern. While they resemble "The Word" in some particulars, just as carbon monoxide resembles carbon dioxide in the number and kind of constituents, they do not fulfill the conditions of life, because their elements are in "wrong" combinations.

IN JUSTICE

"The government shall be upon his shoulder . . . to order it and to establish it in judgment and in justice." Justice is the right ordering of human relations—I say, of human relations. It is not the adjustment of movements of cams and pistons and triggers to mechanical principles. The right ordering of human relations, or "righteousness," or "the word," involves considerations of right of economic opportunity, the right to reap what one has sown, freedom for personal expression in economic situations, and the like; but it does not involve considerations of sizes of wheels in relation to horsepower, with sizes of pans in relation to sizes of lumps, and the like. Government does not need to concern itself with such questions. The individual will do that if the stage of economic life is set "right."

"THE WORD" VERSUS "BREAD"

That the family set-up involves considerations of sex expression perhaps no one will deny. But to make sex the essence and crux of family relations would be to destroy life. Companionship, mutual aid, sympathy, fellowship, and the like, are as important considerations in the family set-up as is sex. And we already know from a million experiments that those families which make sex the sole basis of organization will be failures. But this is a fact to which sex pressure often blinds men. They think "heaven" will come if only a set-up is adjusted to satisfy that want. Well, any one whose brain is not muddled by a demand for sex expression knows that experience has proved that theory to be a gross fallacy.

And so, under the pressure of economic want, technocrats and others imagine that "heaven" would come if only the social set-up were adjusted to the satisfaction of economic wants. If men were barnyard animals, that might be true. But man happens to have emotional and æsthetic and social and devotional and moral sides to his nature as well as an intellectual and physical side. And this prophecy of economic inefficacy says that the very abundance of "bread" which "scientific" economic planning would make available to all will prove to be nauseating if "meat and drink" is made the sole basis of determining the social structure, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God."

AND WE TOO

But our principal concern is our own thoughts about Zion, The Kingdom. So long as we attempt to redeem Zion with corn cribs and grocery stores, we will continue to share the fate of others who make the same blunder.

We ought to know by now that man cannot live by bread alone. He cannot make a highly mechanized industry a means of life in the face of wrong human relations. And yet how obstinately church men have made places of residences, better farms, bigger business profits, and the like, the basis of their Zion-redeeming planning. It is hard to understand such moral obstinacy.

Given friendships and justice, and the like, men may live on a frugal fare of bread. Not so well as with an abundance. But better than with an abundance of bread without those other highly prized goods. No amount of "bread" can yield "life" without "the word." That is the message of this prophecy.

HARMONY OF THE PROPHETS

"Using the things of this world in the manner designed of God; that the places where the saints occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 128: 8. "They might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they . . . are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom."—102: 2.

Here we have the prophet of the Restoration reaffirming the truth of the prophecy of the Prince of Peace—the author of godly government. The social set-up must be right; otherwise man shall not live. This advice of the prophet of the Restoration is identical with the advice of Jesus: "After these things do the gentiles seek." But don't do it that way. It won't work. "You seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Economic emancipation, even, is not to be effected through scientific industrial planning; much less are the major and higher goods of life to be made available by a mere "bread" yielding set-up.

Peace, prosperity, and happiness in Zion is not an accident. It is the fruit of righteousness. And righteousness is a matter of social relations, and not of machine management or of business combinations to beat the world at its own game. Magic and charm will not bring heaven. Man must live by the truth—Social world truth and nature world truth in right relations.

If you intend to be happy, don't be foolish enough to wait for a just cause.—Selected.

Should Capital Punishment Be Abolished?

Anyone who honestly and carefully tries to know about either natural or social phenomena, must start with a certain open attitude of mind. He should first ascertain, so far as possible, what are the facts; and he should then seek to find the cause of the facts, and the cause of the cause. In the investigation he should trace causes as far backward as possible, until he gets somewhere near the basic difficulty, and then endeavor to cure or remove the evil. . . .

DRASTIC PENALTIES

It is beyond doubt that many kinds of crime have markedly increased in the last few years. It is the duty of society first to discover the cause before looking for the remedy. Until this is located and understood, it is folly to talk about, or prescribe, treatment. . . .

The world has so long been taught that there is absolute good, and absolute evil, that it is not easy to dislodge the barbaric notion that there exists in some men a "wicked and malignant heart," and this notion is stubbornly adhered to despite students and scientists proclaiming that there is a clear cause for all so-called crime, racketeering, kidnaping, bootlegging, killing, etc., just as definitely as there is a cause for organizing large corporations, controlling the market, putting up prices, etc. . . .

It is certain that no act ever occurs without a cause preceding. When anything important must be dealt with, we need to look for the cause, and the remedy should be directed to the cause. Without taking the time and labor necessary for exact conclusions, it is safe to say that serious crimes rooted in property have doubled, probably, in the last three years. It is also true that other acts until lately almost unknown have been developed within this same period. No thoughtful, right-feeling man can be less than shocked by the new offense of kidnaping, and, like many other forms of misconduct, it requires considerable investigation and reflection to determine its cause. Sometimes the most patient and expert research leaves us baffled and despairing in the effort to satisfy ourselves as to what leads to conduct, although we know that all animal life moves in accordance with certain stimuli, and the cause is there, and can be found.

The crimes mentioned are not the only kind that lead us to think and investigate. In the past three years, more banks have failed than ever before. More inflated bubbles of stock-companies have burst, leaving thousands and even millions of people crushed and destitute in America. From one end of the country to the other, towns, counties, cities, and even entire States, have been left without a single bank. Many of these failures have disclosed the gross violation of the rights of the depositors, and for that matter, of the public in general. . . .

BIG CRIMINALS

These huge defalcations and thefts have driven millions of men and women and children to want and desperation. The misery that has fallen upon our people from such sources makes the loss by racketeers and the like less than a drop in the bucket. . . .

POVERTY AND INSTINCTS

For more than three years, men and women have been confronted with want for themselves and their families. One may marvel at the depth of affection that so-called desperate characters feel for their children, and, there, again, is the resemblance between the human and the other animals. . . .

Men cannot enforce laws so drastic that they will interfere with the primal emotions that preserve the race. Automatically, man shapes his conduct to preserve himself and the family. Many of the intelligent, and most of the ignorant, do not think of the power and purpose of this instinct, but it never sleeps. . . .

People never can cease questioning why some are rich and so many close to dire want, and whether it is right to be deprived of so many comforts, to say nothing of pleasures. These thoughts and queries are not so apt to haunt one when he and his have enough but they are sure to disturb the mind when the wolf is scratching. . . .

One reason so many rich and so many poor violate the laws is because all modern life has made property the first concern of living. . . .

DO AWAY WITH INCENTIVES

We can lessen crime only when we overcome the incentive to crime which, in the last analysis, is poverty, the dread of want, and the desire to live. It may be difficult to trace all crime directly to poverty, for sometimes the connection is not direct or distinct, but almost all crime leads back to one source: having known privation in the midst of plenty for others. . . .

FAILURE IN DEALING WITH CRIME

It is plain that our present method of dealing with crime is a failure, for it takes no account of cause and effect, but acts entirely from hatred and fear and vengeance. Until calm study of the subject and scientific understanding is introduced in dealing with those charged with crime, organized society cannot run smoothly. When some such plan is worked out and set into operation, crime, as we know it, will gradually disappear.—Clarence Darrow, in The Modern Thinker.

Biography of Mark Hill Forscutt

Arranged from his diaries by his daughter, Mrs. Ruby C. Faunce

Here the diary records a great amount of routine work in California, beginning with the organization of the West Berkeley Branch. Ill health continued to make the author's labors difficult.—Editors.

Left for conference, going south and on the next Sunday, March 24, preached at Los Angeles morning and evening. Large congregations and good liberty. Spent part of the week visiting old-time friends. On Thursday I left for Denver, where I spent Sunday, and then on to Kansas City and Independence for conference. In Kansas City I was met by my beloved wife, and great was my rejoicing to see her. Conference convened on April 6th, and I attended as I was able. On account of my not having regained my strength, it was thought wise to place me near home, so I was appointed to labor in southern Nebraska. Returned home to my beloved family, and pray God that I may be able to do all I can in and for his work. April 17th, performed a marriage ceremony, and at evening attended prayer meeting. For the next week or two, was busy unpacking and arranging my books, and getting my clothing in good order.

At this point we are again omitting much that is of a routine nature. However, we present what seems to be the last records of his missionary work in his diary.—Editors.

Thursday back to St. Joseph, then back to Nebraska City. All well at home. Preached then and in the nearby cities and towns, spending my time in the work of the church until the first of March, 1896, when I went to Lamoni, where later with two others I worked on the auditing of the Bishop's books. Wednesday, April 1st—Pres. J. Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, Richard Salyards, and others, left for conference to be held at Kirtland, Ohio. On Sunday, prayed with Sr. Banta, the last time I expect to do so in this life. Worked on books till noon April 9th, when our work, so far as now possible, was done and report sent to Pres. J. Smith. Evening, prayer meeting. While Sr. W. W. Blair was praying, I saw two pass down and across death's dark stream; these were met by two shining ones. I told the Saints in meeting that two were about to be taken by death, but not together, as one was a little behind the other. The next morning word reached us that Sr. Banta had passed away at 6:30. In the evening Bro. Bailey and I administered to Margaret Wicks and Sr. Viola Blair. Preached Sunday evening. Worked in office all week. Saturday about 11 o'clock a telegram came announcing the death of Pres. W. W. Blair. The telegram came from the conductor of the train, to his sons, stating he had died near Chariton. A wire from Bro. Weld confirms the sad, sad news. Sunday, the 19th—A large assembly of people was at church and sorrow was on every countenance, and during the afternoon prayer meeting, it seemed impossible for the Saints to testify without referring in tones of affection to the dear one, gone from them. Tuesday we laid all that was mortal away to await the resurrection of the blest. Remained in Lamoni most of the summer, working on books and helping when and wherever needed until Sept. 15th, 1896, when I took up my duties as Dean of Graceland College. Stayed there doing, or at least trying to do, double duty, as Dean in the morning and bookkeeper in the afternoon and evening, daily becoming weaker in body and less fitted for duty, but persisting in spite of it, until, on what date I cannot remember, but think Feb. 13th, when I awakened and found myself lying on the floor, having fallen from my chair. I undressed and got into bed and when I again became conscious, my wife, Amy and Lee were there. In a few days they with Dr. Stafford took me home to Nebraska City. In March as I was gradually improving, I went to the kitchen for a match, and mistaking the cellar door for the hall, fell down steps and again was laid up. Did little until March, 1898, when I went to April conference and again took mission appointment, this time S. E. Nebraska Mission, to last till April 21st, 1900, as conference adjourned for two years. My 1898 report shows: services 194; sermons 85; administrations 33; marriages 3; children blest 18; funerals 5; confirmations 5; ordinations 1. No baptisms owing to physical inability. During 1899 I preached and conducted services in and around Nebraska City and sent my report to J. Caffel: services 220; sermons 106; administrations 44; marriages 6; children blessed 7; funerals 7.

His Last Days

By his daughter, Ruby C. Faunce

We have no further record of father's activities, but know by his certificates of appointment that his place was still Southeastern Nebraska, with Nebraska City objective point. He did all he was able to do and answered all calls for whatever came. He was the president of the branch from 1898 till his death in 1903. As ever, in his life, he was interested in the young people, assisting them in their society, music and anyway he could. He was a deep student, a great lover of good books, good music and always encouraged the love of the same in others. His life was spent in trying to serve and help others, and even at the cost of friends, loved ones, or even life itself, he would not compromise what he knew to be right. In September, 1903, the health of his wife and his own not being good, they with their daughter, Ruby, and family were arranging affairs, to go to California, and were nearly ready, when September 30th, Sr. Forscutt was taken ill and on the following Monday, October 5th, passed away. She was a woman of sterling character, strong personality and very greatly beloved by nearly everyone. The following Thursday Pres. Frederick M. Smith came and preached her funeral sermon, his first, I believe he said, but a beautiful one, and of great consolation to the family. During the ensuing week Papa kept on with his preparations to go to California. On Wednesday night he went to prayer meeting and offered his resignation as branch president. The congregation sat and neither accepted nor rejected, nor said a word till Father got up and left the building. They said afterwards they felt as if chained to their seats. On Thursday morning they called me and said Papa was ill, so taking the baby, I went to the house. All day he was restless but toward evening seemed much better, and would not hear of my sitting up with him. About 2 a. m. Amy and I both heard a noise and each started from our rooms. We met at the head of the stairs and found him lying against the closet door. He was unconscious, but when we tried to lift him he came to and said, "What are you girls trying to do?" "You have fallen, Papa, and we are trying to lift you." "You can't. Let me help." Putting his hand on the railing, with our help we took him in his room. Amy made his bed, and I sat down on the floor to remove his shoes. Looking down at me, he asked, "Ruby, where was I last night?" "Why, here," I replied. "No, I was not." "Well, dear, where do you think you were?" "If I knew I'd not ask you, but I saw Mamma, Bro. Blair, Bro. Caffel and someone else." I asked, "Did you talk to them?" "Yes, I asked them why I had to go back there, where I was so desponded and so miserable." Then I asked, "Was the answer satisfactory, dear?" He looked at me, and slowly nodding, said, "Yes, I guess it was. Yes, it was. They said, it wouldn't be long, it wouldn't be long." All day he was restless, but did not seem to suffer, and about 6 p. m. he became unconscious and failed again to rally. He passed away at 3:15 Sunday morning and the morning paper announced, "The Finger of God touched him, and he slept." Again our home was stricken but not like those without hope. We sent for Uncle Joseph (Pres. Joseph Smith) and on Tuesday morning he, accompanied by Bro. George Hilliard came to preach the funeral sermon. Sorry indeed, are we that it was not taken down, for Bro. Joseph said "Mark and he" had agreed, many years ago, that whichever went first, the other would perform this office. It was a wonderful tribute he paid and tears dropped on the desk from his dear eyes often, as he spoke. We laid him beside his beloved wife, and our dear mother, in beautiful Wyuka to await the glorious resurrection morning. (The End.)

ings of Jesus Christ taught in the Scriptures. The first was in the meridian of time—his earthly mission when he offered the great and absolute sacrifice. The third is when he will come and set up the thousand years' reign. The second is when he "shall suddenly come to his temple." This coming is preceded by, "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue and people." (Revelation 14:6.)

The preaching of the gospel is associated with the redemption of Zion "So shall they fear the name of the Lord from the west, and the glory of the Lord from the rising of the sun. When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him. And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord." (Isaiah 59:19, 20. See also Psalm 59:19, 20 and Revelation 19:7-9.)

Latter Day Saints believe that a Temple would be erected in Independence, Missouri, and that Jesus would come to that temple and to His Zion and thus fulfill Malachi and Isaiah and other prophecies.

The temple has not yet been built, but the promise of the Lord is that it will be built. When the Word comes to build that temple, which will come in God's own way, which is a way of order, it is bound to have a unifying effect on all people who have any appreciation of God moving among men. There will, in all likelihood be scoffers who, like the opponents of the Latter Day Saints around Kirtland, called the temple that the Saints built there, "The Mormon Folly." The scoffers are dead. The Kirtland temple still stands. It is admired by multitudes that come each year to look it over.

The times of the Gentiles are being fulfilled. The period of deterioration may take many years. During this period of deterioration of civilization there are many events, spoken of as signs in the Scriptures, to be made manifest. Among them we list:

Complete filling of the times of the Gentiles. (Luke 21: 33.)

Again—the abomination of desolation. (Matthew 24: 33.)

Destruction of Gentiles in last days. (Matthew 21: 55, 56.)

Gospel to go to Jews in power. (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3, 4.)

Darkening of Sun, falling stars, etc. (Matthew 24: 34, 35.)

Zion flourish on the hills. (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 5.)

The War against the Jews at Jerusalem. (Zechariah 14.)

The Son of Man appears with his holy angels. (Matthew 25 : 31.)

The references given to the New Testament are in the Inspired Version. The writer has not listed those events in the order that they will occur and does not claim to know in what order they will occur. But it seems to be clear that the coming of Jesus that is imminent is to His church and temple. Then there follows a series of events which will culminate in the "third watch." See Luke 14:41, 42, Inspired Version.

Who is there that can look out on the troublous times and not realize that all that man can do it to steady things momentarily; who is there, that having his heart touched by the Divine Spirit, which came to him in fulfillment of the promises of God, but what can have confidence in all of the promises of God? Small wonder that our forefathers sung with the spirit and the understanding:

Lift up your heads, ye heirs of glory,

Cast aside your doubts and fears;

He who called you to his kingdom

Soon will reign a thousand years.

And the last stanza:

Come, Jesus, come and reign victorious,

Come with prophets, martyrs, seers;

Come and take us home to Zion;

Come and reign a thousand years.

"Go Forward"

By C. L. Munro

Just two words, but they mean a lot. Sometimes they mean success: it depends on what our goal is. Sometimes we set our goal high and then things happen that obstruct our view of the goal set, and when all about us is dark, we hesitate, not knowing whether to go ahead or backward.

There was a time, and a people who had to decide whether to go back or go forward, when the children of Israel had been led out of Egypt by Moses, after many signs and wonders and miracles had been performed they traveled through the wilderness. But the King of Egypt changed his mind, and ordering his army to get ready, and with six hundred chariots and men he pursued the Israelites, determined to bring them back.

The route of the Israelites was new to them. They had never traveled it before, so God sent a pillar of cloud to go before them by day and a pillar of fire by night to guide them. Thus they were led to the shore of the Red Sea. They could go no farther, and their courage soon gave way to fear: for behind them was the Egyptian army, before them the Red Sea, and on either side mountainous wilderness. There was no escape. Then they began to murmur against Moses and Aaron, saying because there were no graves in Egypt, "hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness?"

That was ancient Israel. How about modern Israel? What was Moses' reply? Listen—hear the message that sounded over that vast host. "Stand still, and see the salvation of God."

There seemed to be no escape, what was God's salvation that they were to see? Then Moses' voice rang out loud and clear, "Go forward." God knew what he was going to do. As they neared the shore of the sea, Moses stretched his rod over it, and to the surprise of the Israelites, the water divided, and stood as a wall on either side till all had gone over dry shod. Here was faith made manifest. Although they had murmured against Moses, they obeyed his command to Go forward. God knew what he was going to do, for the Egyptians in their mad haste, followed after, and perished in the sea. If some of the people had refused to obey the command to go forward, they would have been captured, and taken back to Egypt. But they all obeyed. Here is a lesson for us as a church. That is what we want to do, Go Forward. The priesthood going before, and the congregation following. If we do this, God will open the windows of heaven and shower down blessings on us. Those who refuse to obey the command to go forward, shall perish in spiritual Egypt.

Members of the church, awake, and gird on the armor of God, and put on the "robe of righteousness" and support the church and trust in the promises of God, who is the great head, and put your money where it belongs; not in man made institutions, for they will fail. But if all members of the church would deposit the money they put in banks and insurance companies, in the church, then in times of need the church would have the means to care for all the needy ones.

It, the Church, is God's insurance office, and guaranties life eternal by obedience to his law: Go Forward.

Fame is a pearl many dive for and only a few bring up. Even when they do, it is not perfect, and they sigh for more, and lose better things in struggling for them.—Louisa May Alcott.

Faith in God is an emerging essential to us every day we live. It is ever coming forth even when we least expect it. —Lyman P. Powell in The Better Part.

Larry's Philosophy

The last few years my ideal of an all-around man or woman has been that he or she should be strong mentally, physically, and spiritually. When I first joined the Boy Scouts, I was proud to pledge myself "on my honor to keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight." The three divisions have always appealed to me; I have measured my friends and acquaintances by them. But while they are separate and distinct each from the other, I think that one's religion is the effect of their combined causes—that is, you can always tell a man's religion by the way he treats his body, his mind, and his soul. Show me the way a man dances, let me hear him talking at a stag party, let me play golf with him, take me through his place of business and bring his employees to me; tell me what he reads, and what he does with his idle hours, if he votes, if he gives himself to his community—and then I'll tell you what his religion is!

I agree with Glenn Frank in his emphatic statement that "there is no distinction between the sacred and the secular." Emerson said that a man's action was only the picture book of his creed. Surely a man's religion is the way he lives!

Some people, however, say, "Whose business is it how I live? I can do as I please." Which leads me to believe that the greatest need in the world today (with the exception of a spirit of love), especially in our own country, is Responsibility. I have always felt that my body, my mind, and my soul were given to me to use for the betterment of my associates, my community, my nation; that I am the trustee of a personality, and that I must regard it as a sacred trust. How else can I explain my presence here?

I cannot understand the spirit which prompts some people to withdraw into themselves, like the friars of antiquity, and watch the misdeeds and heresies of their contemporaries through a telescope, and pray for their souls. . . . Only when sensible Christians get into the common run of things will the other crowd come to its senses. It's got to come about by doing the thing, by action, rather than by the drawing away of skirts and the praying for souls.

Responsibility in the largest sense means to me self-sacrifice; and yet, I believe that we must give ourselves to others if for no other reason than selfishness, paradoxical as that may seem. . . . The churches have not yet learned the psychology of the masses. They are teaching that war is naughty, immoral, useless; all of which is true, but the same old story. Should they spend half as much time and energy in campaigns showing the loss of money to the people through war, and the increased prosperity which would undoubtedly result from a warless world, they would realize more rapid results, I am sure. A grocer said to me the other day, "Hit a man in the pocketbook, and you hit him everywhere else." Selfish, sordid? Yes; but if it accomplishes the altruistic and the spiritual, should we complain? That is what I mean by our responsibilities to others being prompted by selfishness; "cast your bread on the waters"—and it will come back cake!

We desire happiness because we are human, we know that we cannot be happy until we give ourselves unreservedly to the task of making others happy, and so we do that—and find our pot of gold. This is selfishness, but in the higher sense.

The average is always mediocre, by definition. Psychology has given us the normal curve, holding true for large numbers of individuals, and the maximum height is always at the fifty-percent level, the average, tapering down to the subnormals on one side and the abnormals on the others. So we have this large middle group, this mediocre body, the criterion of dress, ethics, manners, intelligence, morals—at once the teacher and critic of the younger generation, who are taught that the acceptance of social pressures rather than the dodging of them, is the pathway to happiness and success.

Naturally, this control exercised by the majority is not the worst thing happening to the youth of today. A certain amount of convention is absolutely necessary, of course. Because of better living conditions, a higher standard of intelligence, and a code of ethics which is progressing all the time, this mediocre body is rising gradually to a new level, and their control is making for better and finer life—slowly, to be sure, but steadily. The common folk are on the upward trend. There is no question that the mediocre is leveling up the standards of the world, bettering conditions in all walks of life.

But certain as it is leveling up the lower strata of society, it is leveling down the upper! It seems that the sands of progress are running into a huge glass piling up to a peak, like a cone; but when the cone is nearly pointed, the sand slips down the sides, and while the average level is raised, the cone has lost its peak.

It is of no use to criticize existing conditions unless a remedy is suggested, for to break away from the old pressures without a definite objective is obviously as radical and detrimental as accepting them blindly or willingly. So I want to make my plea, a plea for personality and individuality. I am not advocating the overthrow of responsibility, but the realization of a greater responsibility to one's self, one's contemporaries, and one's nation.

First, a man must have his eyes open to the pressures exerted on him. If he conforms to the prevailing mode of dress, he must realize that he is conforming, and that all those who do not are probably as intelligent as himself. He must watch himself to see that he is not being forced into accepting the standards of thought and action of those about him. He must not compromise his conscience.

And as he must see the present clearly, so must he see the future; he must have vision. He must put first things first; see life in its true perspective; have no delusions as to the relative value of things. And if he has a vision, let him keep it sacred and well guarded; if he wants to be a musician or a bricklayer, a painter or a minister, an architect or an ornithologist—in God's name, let him carry on in spite of criticism and ridicule, fitting himself for the task, dreaming, planning, working—dodging the pressures of society.

Larry was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Foster, of Ridgewood, New Jersey. He was active in school life, the Hi-Y Club, the Boy Scouts and the Methodist Episcopal Church School. When he was eighteen he entered Lafayette College. At the close of his sophomore year he went to Arizona for his summer's vacation.

A few days before he was to return home, he started to ride out to watch a beautiful sunset. When he did not return a search was made. An accident had occurred which took his life. In loving memory of their classmate, Larimore Foster, the Class of 1927 dedicated the Senior Section of its "Melangé," saying, "Larimore Foster's personality and sincerity in work, play, friendship, made him an object of love and respect. He was an acute thinker, but intensely practical; he was genial, but honest and straightforward in all his relations."

A few of Larry's letters, some pages from his diary, and his philosophy have been combined in the book entitled Larry, printed by the Association Press.

The Coming Era of Human Rights

In the midst of this welter of depression and world heartbreak, it seems fantastic to state that, despite it all, I did find the faint murmurings of a new rhythm. It moves in varied accents—but it moves. It is alive. There is a strange stirring in the hearts of men.

And I am positive that there is a great current of unrest and dissatisfaction flowing over the world, one that nothing can permanently check. It carries with it a demand for change—for what our own great President Roosevelt calls the New Deal. And over the whole world the Little Men—the under dogs, the broken middle classes and the ruined common masses—cry out for a new and better break.

I have found that we live in a complicated world of cross-purposes and divergent ambitions—a vast and seething world, yet a mutually dependent one. . . .

The uncontrolled Machine Era now draws to a close. The machine, if it is to continue in private hands as a profit producer, must hum to the new song of Human Rights. It will have to be divorced from the banker-speculator. It will have to be removed from the gamblers who play with marked decks and loaded dice. It will have to become primarily an instrument to be used in the making of things and not in the making of money.—Frazier Hunt, in Liberty.

Development

By B. H. Thomas

If we are to conquer and reach the height of our calling, it will be from a greater development of faith than exists at present. Faith and confidence can only come from a knowledge of strength gained by our extra efforts. Confidence comes from faith and the right kind of faith comes from activity. Activity, faith and confidence defy all obstacles. There is no confidence and no security in standing still. It was unified confidence that built the Salt Valley of the West. Success and efficiency of any kind lie in the activity of right direction. Our greatest need at present is the establishment of a reformed social condition that will help us to reach a higher degree of intelligence. Greater spiritual blessings will not come until we have earned them. But when this people has redeemed Zion, greater accomplishments will come by the development of a higher degree of Spirituality. If we are to attain those heights it will be done by those who have enough active faith to know that it can be accomplished. If we are to lose in the fight to gain those accomplishments, it will be lost by those who are lacking in vision and cannot see the need for improved performance, and when we think there is no room for improvement, then we have failed most miserably, because it is just as much of a failure not to seek for that improvement.

If we choose to stand still we lose opportunity. God will never help us unless we help ourselves. Our status today is just what our performance in the past has made us.

Taking Jesus as an example, Christianity can be defined as an inexhaustible power of Christian activity in the service to God and each other, and the reward of one act is the power to fulfill another. If this be so we cannot stand still and develop. God has given us the plan of Zion so we could flee to a place of safety. All for the sake of our Spiritual development. In our spiritual activity we are promised the endowment of Perseverance in as much as we shall run and not grow weary. But it's only natural and just, not to expect any more for our service unless there is an improvement, and so long as we are satisfied without Zion then we must be satisfied without spiritual development.

When we are baptized we hear the words, "Receive ye the gift of the Holy Ghost," and often people are disappointed at not witnessing a great spiritual blessing. Those words mean very little to us unless we have or can reach that state of development to exercise the gift. The gift of faith can only come through the exercise and work in believing of the things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen.

That same principle applies to every other gift and to every member of the church who will qualify and develop, because God is no respecter of persons when we show merit. Merit is measured by its rise. But God merits the measurements of man through the means by which he seeks to rise.

Strict obedience to the Law is the only way we can rise and develop, and by our results are we rewarded and blessed. We cannot develop and stand still. Why should our reward be any greater this year for doing the same things we did last year? Our next important move should be Zionward. What more can he say unto you than he hath said? We can never graduate from Spiritual experience. Activity in the service of the church should teach us something new every day. After the Millennium and even after our change to a spiritual being we are to go on and on throughout all eternity. We can never be on a par with God, and for that reason there can be no end to Spiritual development. If we are to serve, then, our covenant means that we are subject to development even beyond our expectations. But we cannot expect to develop unless we fulfill our promise of allegiance to support the church, promote and obey the law to the extent that we will live and die in defense of its cause.

Most of us are born with five senses. But Brawn, Brain or Spirituality will not develop without exercise. To seek development is the next thing to possessing it. Zion is a necessity, and it's better to conquer a necessity than it is to escape it.

Defeat in any cause is about the worst thing that any human could expect. But even worse than defeat is dishonor by performance, which is caused by the lack of Vision or active faith. We have been shown the way and it is our own decision that is holding us back.

A just and strong people should not fail before their destiny. If we keep the law today the future will take care of itself. But our law today has a command. We cannot, just when we please, assume our obligations. Zion must be redeemed. We are entitled to our own free agency, but that does not signify that we are above the law, up to the time of when action is demanded, it is our privilege to weigh the wisdom of decision. We have the right to either act or criticize. But when God commands, our choice and our preference are canceled. Service is obedience.

The Readers Say---

Has Received Much

Sometimes I feel very much ashamed because of the little I have given in return for the much I have received.

My first experience in divine healing came to me as a lad shortly after I united with the church. I was very ill with typhoid fever. Everything had been done for me that the hands of loving parents and medical science of our locality could do, and I had been administered to several times by local elders with very little relief. We were becoming somewhat discouraged.

Finally I was administered to by Elders J. A. Gunsolley, Hale Smith, and Moroni Hawkins about ten o'clock in the morning and by night my fever had gone entirely never to return again.

Afterwards my father told mother that it was he who hindered the blessing at previous administrations; he could not make his will submissive to God's—he could not say "Thy will be done."

I have had many wonderful experiences in the church and have been blessed many, many times when I sought God in faith. There have been instances of immediate healing in my own family. We had a little daughter instantly healed through the administration of her uncle, Elder C. T. West. Often my prayers in times of sickness have been answered, also my prayers over my work as a teacher in the schools of Florida. I humbly ask an interest in the prayers of God's people that I may be able to repay in part, through service, the blessings that I have received.

JAY, FLORIDA.

Still Serves After Sixty-one Years of Membership

I am over eighty-two years old. Have been a member of the church sixty-one years. During that time I have served actively in different offices—was president of the San Francisco Branch over twenty years. A few years ago I became very deaf and could not enjoy the church services. I quit going out in the evenings, but attended the morning meetings though I could not hear the sermons. I began to wonder if my days of usefulness were past and I grew quite sorrowful considering the future. I was still called to preach occasionally but that seemed the only thing I could do for the cause I love. Still I enjoyed the Spirit, and was much blessed in administering to the sick.

One day I had the privilege of speaking to the Park-Presidio Branch. Elder Edward Nelson then asked me to meet with them in prayer meeting, saying that he would call for me with his machine and take me home after the service. I went and greatly enjoyed the spirit of the meeting. They meet at the home of Brother and Sister A. L. Holling and since the room is small I could hear most of what was said; I was happy. I had found a place where I was needed, and I needed them. Brothers Nelson and Holling are the only officers in the branch, and they needed help. We have worked hard and so have the sisters, keeping the work going.

I have preached a number of times for them and am always at their prayer meetings. We enjoy much of the Spirit, and are blessed with the gift of tongues and prophecy, visions, and the gift of healing to a wonderful extent. God is surely with this little branch.

The officers of San Francisco Branch are all young people, faithful and energetic under the presidency of Elder Arthur Oakman. The spirit of love and unity prevails among them. I am still with them in spirit and hope.

I read in the Herald about Mark H. Forscutt and the Morrisites. At the time of their massacre I was in Salt Lake City where the bodies of Joseph Morris and John Banks, of their presidency, were laid in a temporary morgue. I saw them. Next day when the prisoners were brought in, I saw them march through the street, and from what "Uncle Mark" says, he was among them. Later, in San Francisco, I became acquainted with George S. Dove and his son, also with John Parson, all leaders in the Morrisite movement.

Instances of Divine Blessing

I know this to be the only church of God on earth. Thirty-five years ago I asked a minister friend in this church to explain to me from the Bible the divinity of the Book of Mormon. Very soon I was convinced of the truthfulness of the gospel, and asked for baptism immediately. The Spirit was exceedingly strong, urging me not to delay. We went to the water, and while I was taking off my shoes at the water's edge, my husband was baptized. Then our oldest son, A. R. Toovey who is now an elder and president of Betland Branch and bishop's agent for Southern Saskatchewan District, was baptized. All of our children are members of the church. Our home branch at that time was Pleasanton, Iowa. We moved to Weyburn, Canada, two years after, and have done all we could for the church.

Brother Alvin Knisley held services at a neighboring schoolhouse and baptized a number of honest-hearted people. Now there are one hundred and fifty members in the Weyburn Plains Branch.

Just prior to the time we came here, I was not expected to live. We sent for the elders and I earnestly prayed to God for relief from suffering according to his will. At this time I was given a spiritual experience which brought much comfort and assurance to me; I was given to understand that I yet had a work on earth to do. I was satisfied, and was perfectly well the next day.

On another occasion our ten-year-old son had his leg broken. He would not consent to our calling the doctor and so we called the branch president, Brother William Fisher, who administered to him, and all the branch prayed for him. But he still suffered pain. For three days I prayed that all would be well and on the morning of the third day, an experience was mine in the room of the suffering boy which assured me that if all of us would be faithful to the Lord, all would be well.

How I do praise God for all his blessings! Once my husband was taken suddenly very ill at Weyburn where he was working. I brought two doctors to him. Both said there was no hope for him. Then I sent to our branch, several miles from town, asking them to meet and pray for him. They did so and while they were praying, the fever left. He whispered to me that he thought he was too weak to live, but I told him that the prayers of the Saints were answered and that he would be well soon. In three days we rode in a buggy ten miles home. He was well.

On another occasion we were lost in a blizzard at night and nearly froze to death. We gave up trying to find home, and both prayed God to lead us. A light appeared not more than half a mile away, and we found shelter and board there.

Please pray for us that our every deed may from sin be freed till Zion we redeem.

Let Us Do Our Part

I am happy in this church, and I want to let others know of my gladness, for the latter-day cause grows sweeter to me every day. Though I have many trials, I attempt each day to do my best, and I know that if I will be faithful, the Lord will help me. I have proved his promises true many times, and with God's help I want to be faithful to the end.

At this time when the world is distressed, we are called upon to endure many things which we think are hard, but before thinking too much about ourselves, let us remember Christ and what he suffered for us. Then let us go forward in his church and do our part and he will bless us. Let us be willing to bring more tithes and offerings to help him.

The sacrifices we are required to make are small indeed compared to those that have already been made by others for this church.

My husband is an elder of the church and is trying to keep the work going forward here, but prospects are not as bright as we would like to see. I hope the time will come when more of God's servants will be sent here, and the work built up. My prayers are for God's people the world over, that they may be blessed, and that the church will prosper.

Search for Truth Has Its Reward

When a boy I attended Sunday school. Like many others I was interested in my soul's salvation, I wanted to be saved, and so I attended revival services as they came and went in our home town. But after a disappointing session at the mourners' bench, I ceased to attend these services. I was given to understand that these people had not the faith and church of the Lord our Master. I studied my Bible seeking out the true gospel of Jesus Christ, acquainted myself with his teachings, and always looking for his church on earth.

In 1930 a Latter Day Saint elder, Brother O. J. Hawn, was holding services in the church of our branch. I did not go to his services at first. I lived just seventy-five feet from the building and heard him preaching a few nights. Thus I realized that he preached a different gospel from other preachers, and so I went over to the church one night, to find out if he was getting his sermon out of the Bible. I listened to a few sermons and considered the principles he advanced. On November 16, 1930, I obeyed the gospel, being baptized by Brother Hawn along with some other candidates. I knew that the Lord had at last showed me the right way.

When I came into the church my family came with me. I had a few habits of which I had been wanting to break myself; I had tried unsuccessfully in the past to do this. Among these habits was the use of tobacco. One day at my work, after my baptism, I paused to pray to the Lord that he would help me stop using tobacco, and his answer was almost immediate. I am grateful to God for the blessings he has given me, health, strength, and a knowledge of his goodness to mankind. May I honor his name the rest of my life.

Invites Elder to Hold Services

I live eighteen miles from the nearest branch of Latter Day Saints, and wish that an elder passing through this part of the country, would stop to see us. My husband belongs to the Baptist Church and is one of the trustees, so any Sunday except the first of the month, one of our elders could preach in the Baptist Church. My husband enjoys hearing our ministers preach.

For thirty-six years I have belonged to the church, and I have felt on many occasions the power of God. Often I find myself wishing that we might attend the services of the church.

A number of Saints know me by the name of Sister Matson. I was in Independence a few years ago, stayed with Sister Reaves, and attended the eight o'clock Sunday morning prayer services. To my friends there and also in Nevada, Missouri, I send regards, and ask their prayers that I may again live in a branch of the church.

There are a number interested in the gospel here, and if we could secure the services of an elder, I believe we might organize a group. I go once in awhile to Marshall, but that is quite a distance, and we are aged.

MRS. PAYNE.

Like the Disciples We Sleep

I believe the gospel of Jesus Christ is the only way whereby man can obtain eternal life.

When Jesus left his disciples and went forth to pray, he returned to find them asleep. That is what is wrong with the Saints today, the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak.

I can say truthfully that this is the church of Jesus Christ, for at the time of my ordination it was given to me by the inspiration of God's holy spirit through Elder J. D. Showers, that if I would live faithfully I could be called to the priesthood, and this prophecy has been fulfilled.

There has been much good accomplished here from the work of Brother J. D. Showers. We now have a branch of eighty-four members.

Tithe Every Dollar Earned

We have adopted a system by which we pay our tithing. We pay ten percent of our gross income, and we seem to get as much good as if we had used it all, because the Lord adds blessings.

We do not mean to violate the law of the church, hence we adopted this rule in order that we might give the Lord something of our meager income.

The laboring class of Saints, those who are working at common labor and receiving from thirty to forty cents an hour and have only two or three working days a week, can never have an increase to pay the bishop.

If every Saint in the church would pay or give the bishop ten percent of all their gross income, the church would be out of debt in one year, and have money left in the treasury.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

It appears that from time to time attention has been called to the matter because some indulged in the practice and have in that way fallen in evil company, in some instances immorality having resulted. It is for this reason, probably, that the church has warned against it.

What connection has fasting with prayer?

The practice of fasting is of very ancient origin, and sometimes it included abstinence from both food and drink for a definite period. It was commonly a means of humbling the soul at a time when one desired to approach God with a much desired request. In times of mourning it was customary among the Jews to fast, and sometimes to put on sackcloth and ashes. Moses is said to have fasted from both food and water for forty days while he was with God (Exodus 34: 28). In modern revelation fasting has been given the following significance:

"And on this (Lord's) day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 3.

Were the ninety-nine sheep of Christ's parable saved?

This parable was used by Jesus because the Jews complained when he visited and ate with sinners. The parable shows that God cares for those who are lost and desires to save them. The ninety-nine sheep were safely shepherded, but so great was the Shepherd's desire to save the stray one, that he is represented as leaving the others for that purpose.

Does the church approve of dancing?

Conference resolutions have been adopted by the church dealing with this form of amusement, in one of which it is disapproved in the following words:

"Resolved, That we consider the practice of dancing and card playing as unbecoming true Christians, and should be avoided by all Saints."—Number 377.

It does not mean that he endangered them to save one, but that his care was devoted to the one most in danger, even though all the rest were safe. I do not think the number mentioned has any significance further than this. It is but natural and proper that attention should be specially given to one of the flock or herd that strays away from the others, and in this way it would be reunited with them.

Were the twelve apostles chosen by Jesus all Jews?

All available evidence appears to support this view. It is true that Matthew had been employed by the Romans as a tax-gatherer, an occupation detested by the leading Jews of that time; but Jews were employed for this purpose, hence no other significance necessarily attaches to the appointment. Jesus had also said that he was sent only to the "house of Israel" during his ministry on earth, and it was only after his crucifixion that much conversion of Gentiles took place, if we may determine by the astonishment of "they of the circumcision" when Peter and his associates observed the conversion of some Gentiles to whom he had preached. The vision of Peter (Acts 10) of unclean beasts of which he was commanded to eat is said to have been the turning point at which conversion of Gentiles was sought.

Whom did Cain marry?

The Authorized Version is silent on this subject, but in the Inspired Version the following statement is found:

"And it came to pass, that Cain took one of his brother's daughters to wife, and they loved Satan more than God."—Genesis 5: 13.

Did Joseph Smith give a revelation favoring polygamy?

While some Utah elders have so claimed, many of the old time officials of the church deny that Joseph gave any such revelation. No such revelation was known to the church until Brigham Young introduced one in 1852 that he asserted he had kept locked up in private since Joseph's death. It is believed to be spurious.

Vancouver, British Columbia

Unique Observance of Branch Organization

March 11, was the twelfth anniversary of the organization of this branch. Prior to the branch organization this group was a mission under the direction of New Westminster Branch.

This year the anniversary celebration was enjoyed by a large number. About one hundred invitations were sent out to Saints and friends. New Westminster Saints responded as a group, closed their own church, and came to Vancouver. Everyone enjoyed the services from the nine-thirty morning prayer meeting, Elders M. H. Cook and G. E. Miller in charge, throughout the day.

At the eleven-thirty services Sister Emily McMullin read the minutes of the branch organization meeting. Brother J. M. Terry was in the chair on that occasion and Brother S. S. Smith was the acting secretary. Following the reading of these minutes Brother Isaac McMullin gave the early history of the branch starting from 1899 when Elder Dan Macgregor first came as a missionary to British Columbia. He baptized several at Chilliwack. From there Brother and Sister McMullin came to Vancouver, and were the first Saints to locate in the city. However, in New Westminster there were several members and a branch was organized by R. C. Evans and Dan Macgregor.

About 1922 Brother A. Clark and family moved to Vancouver giving assistance to the mission. Then came good Sister Gerty McMullin and several other families to build up the work among them, Brother and Sister Reed, Sister Qwigley, Sister Dunlap and family, Brother Joseph Spargo and family, and Brother and Sister Johnston. After this the branch was organized.

Such missionaries as Dan Macgregor, Alex McMullin, Gomer T. Griffiths, Fred A. Smith, Ammon White, T. J. Bell, George Thorburn, J. D. Stead, W. S. Pender, J. W. Davis, R. D. Davies, and President Joseph Smith were among the missionary visitors to this city in early days. Apostle R. S. Budd had this region as part of his first mission. Nor will local members forget their esteemed brother who was a familiar figure in and about the branch, the late William Johnson, of Seattle.

Brother J. E. Johnston gave the history of the branch since its organization, sketching the meetings in hired halls here and there until the Saints purchased their present property, a nice church home with good grounds for social gatherings. This church was dedicated five years ago by President F. M. Smith and Bishop J. A. Becker.

Brother Johnston paid tribute to departed Saints who while here on earth contributed nobly to the upbuilding of the work.

Vancouver is proud of its position in the Northwest. The Saints are taking their responsibility seriously, and when the local is called upon, they are not slow to answer. Their desire to be Zion builders is great.

On Sunday afternoon Brother Pope let the members look into his diary, and it was filled with joys and sorrows and simply overflowing with happenings of interest. Here is a sample excerpt from the diary: "Attended union sacrament service at Vancouver and enjoyed the blessings of the Spirit. Baptized Madie Dunlap and Stanley Spargo. Blessed the baby of Vida Butterfield." Brother Pope was glad when he read these names that they were in the congregation listening and are still actively engaged in the work. He read that twenty-one years ago at Vancouver he preached on his fiftieth birthday.

The young people chose for the theme of the vesper service which they conducted for all in the early evening, "The Pioneers," and paid tribute to the older members of the branch.

Elder M. H. Cook delivered the closing address at seven-thirty.

The women's department received thanks for their splendid meals. They served three hundred, and demonstrated what real working together means.

A number of visitors are here from the prairies, among them J. Dallyn and wife from Ribstone; Sister Woldroff and Miss Margery Woldroff, from Edgerton, Alberta, and Sister Ivan Duckworth and son, Clyde Ellis, from Delisle, Saskatchewan.

Brother Cook was here a short time ago holding some cottage meetings.

Deer Grove, Illinois

Elder C. A. Beal, of Clinton, Iowa, has been holding cottage meetings in this vicinity for the past two years with good interest.

Sunday, April 15, an all-day meeting was held at the home of Brother and Sister L. E. Burgess. Ninety-two were present. One baby was blessed during these services.

Webb City, Missouri

Oronogo and Second Streets

Webb City church was the scene of a pretty wedding the evening of March 24, when Mary Malissa Hobart, daughter of Brother and Sister C. H. Hobart, became the bride of Ellis W. Rauh, of Independence. The ceremony was performed by Elder Frank McDonald, of Independence. The wedding march was played by Cleda Spencer and Mrs. Hazel Bogner sang, "I Love You Truly." The bride and bridegroom were attended by Miss Ruth Hobart, sister of the bride, and by Earl Howe, of Independence. The newly-wedded couple will make Independence their home.

Sacrament service April 1, was well attended and an impressive hour. Seated on the rostrum were fifty singers from different parts of the district, also District President Amos T. Higdon and Pastor Ira O. Waldron. Under the direction of the district chorister, V. L. Krucker, the singers sang old-time hymns while the emblems were served by Priests Albert A. Cobb and Roy G. Oehring. After this the Easter cantata, "Our Living Lord," by Wilson, was given, V. L. Krucker directing.

Immediately after the service, the singers were served luncheon at the church. They then drove to Coffeyville, Kansas, where the cantata was broadcast at 4 p. m. over KGGF. Returning by way of Pittsburg, Kansas, they gave the cantata at 8 p. m. Mrs. Ethel Gaston accompanied the chorus in each presentation.

A number of the local membership are unable to attend services on account of sickness. Among these are some aged members, Brother and Sister George Jones, and Brother W. R. Virgin.

Those who were fortunate enough to be able to attend General Conference have returned home, reporting a wonderful get-together, which gave satisfaction and courage to their souls.

At a special business meeting April 18, Dorothy Mottet was elected branch church chorister for the remainder of the year. The former chorister, Mary Hobart Rauh, has gone to Independence. Ruth Hobart was chosen as church school chorister.

Local Saints gladly welcomed Brother and Sister Wolfe and family, of Cameron, Missouri, who lately came to Webb City.

Briefs

Delegates Are Enthusiastic

From many branches and districts in the church comes word that General Conference delegates have arrived home reporting a good time at conference—excellent class study, splendid sermons and lectures, spiritual prayer meetings, new ideas, and happy hours spent with friends of the faith, old and new.

Spring River District Choir Sings

The Spring River District Choir of fifty voices, directed by V. L. Krucker, presented the beautiful cantata, "Our Living Lord" three times on Easter Sunday. The first rendition followed the sacrament service in the morning at Webb City, Missouri, the second was broadcast over KGGF at Coffeyville, Kansas, at 4 p. m. And the third performance was given at Pittsburg, Kansas, in the evening.

Little Rosemary Lewis Is Dead

Rosemary Lewis, the baby daughter of Apostle George G. and Sister Edith Lewis, born to them in Australia nine months ago, passed away March 18, from diphtheria. At the time of the baby's death Sister Lewis was in the isolation hospital suffering from the disease, and no one was permitted to visit her in her hour of grief.

Sunday Evening Bible Study Popular

The Bible study hour instead of the Sunday evening sermon is almost as popular with nonmember friends as it is with Saints of Colorado Springs Branch. Everyone brings his Bible, the text is read and discussed verse by verse, and opportunity is given for questions. Elder J. D. Curtis is in charge of the study.

Back to Missionary Fields

The missionaries who gathered for General Conference, have returned to their fields. Members of the Quorum of Twelve have scattered to various parts of the United States to resume their work as missionaries in charge. With them they take new courage, new hope, new zest, and new consecration.

Bible Starts Something

To her sister, a little girl once said: "Barbara, I tell you the Bible does not end in Timothy; it ends in Revolutions."

She was right. The Bible always starts something in the mind of the impressionable. No man opens his Bible, and remains what he was before. —Lyman P. Powell in The Better Part.

Gaylord, Michigan

Church School Is Growing

Gaylord Branch is moving forward. In spite of the long, cold winter, they had very good services. The church school is steadily improving under the leadership of Elder Elmer Parkes.

The young people of Northern Michigan District met at Gaylord, March 11, for the purpose of organizing the Zion's Christian Legion. About two hundred people came even though the temperature was ten below zero, and all were enthusiastic.

Apostle D. T. Williams was in charge of the service. At noon the women's department served dinner to about two hundred and seventy-five. Then a musical program was presented, each branch contributing vocal or instrumental numbers. This was followed by a business meeting. Officers elected for the coming year are: Divisional commander, Elder Hector McKinnon, East Jordan; secretary, Iah Schreur, Gaylord; treasurer, Harvey Sheffer, Cheboygan; director of solicitation, John Schreur, Gaylord; director of socialization, Joseph Hale, Gaylord; director of publicity, Donald Swan, Gladstone. Northern Michigan is behind this organization and determined to do its part to make it a success.

Several carloads of young people attended the general convention at Saginaw the latter part of March.

The delegates to General Conference have returned, reporting a very good time, excellent class work, and study periods. Everyone is enthusiastic to render more consecrated service to the church.

Dow City, Iowa

Growing in Number and Purposefulness

Friday evening, March 16, was young people's night at Dow City, and marked the close of a series of sermons preached by Elder E. Y. Hunker to an attentive congregation. The membership were much encouraged by the admonition of this consecrated missionary. Five were baptized, making nineteen additions to the branch membership by baptism in a little over a year.

Saints at Dow City have received additional strength during the past year from several families who have moved into the branch, including some who hold the priesthood.

A number of members living at Dunlap have been coming to Dow City to church in a bus, and have made a material showing in the morning services.

Dow City has a group of active young people who are organized and functioning in branch activities, and from whom workers expect much encouragement and effective help. The missionary services just closed were held at their request.

The church school is functioning under the direction of Brother Frank Fry, assisted by an able group of department heads.

The priesthood have united in a program of visiting and have set as a goal the visiting of, or contact with, every member on the rolls in a constructive, consistent effort along this line.

Seattle, Washington

Greater Spiritual Liberty—Greater Determination to Go On

At the suggestion of Pastor Alma Johnson, Seattle Branch has undertaken a series of Sunday evening sermons by the local priesthood. In February Elder Carl Crum started the series with "What We Believe About God," and occupied the pulpit for three consecutive Sunday evenings, then Elder Alma Johnson followed for two weeks on "What We Believe About Man," after which Elder Dave Coleman discoursed for two more weeks on "What We Believe About Jesus Christ." Elder Alma Johnson has occupied two more and will perhaps go to the third week on "The Mission of Jesus Christ." Following him, Priest E. A. Davis will discuss the "Need for the Restoration," and then Priest Charles Powers will preach on the "Message of the Restoration."

The series has been interesting and instructive, and has given the local priesthood an opportunity to get valuable experience in research work as well as in preaching.

Seattle Branch has been enjoying a greater degree of spiritual liberty of late, and many are expressing a determination to press onward toward Zion. Attendance at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting has been increasing.

On Friday evening, April 13, the young people's organization, under the leadership of Sister Grace Emslie, gave a "spring frolic" at the Green Lake Field House, a civic building for recreational functions of local clubs and organizations. A nominal charge is made for light, heat, etc. This makes a very desirable place for large parties, entertainments, etc. No admission is permitted to be charged and all functions must be free. The "frolic" was very much of a success and about one hundred members, their families and friends, were present. A contest was conducted in which a series of nine games were played. There were credits given for each game or contest, and the one having the highest number of points for the evening received a prize. Punch and cakes were served for refreshments.

The public is quick to discover when any church takes seriously its responsibility for its members.—Lyman P. Powell in The Better Part.

Fulton, Iowa

Enjoy All-day Meeting

Saints and friends enjoyed an all-day meeting two weeks ago. Brother C. A. Beal, of Clinton, Iowa, was the speaker in the morning, afternoon, and evening. Eighty-five were present for the morning service, after which a cafeteria lunch was served.

Eighty-three people, including many nonmembers, listened to an inspiring sermon preached by Elder Beal in the evening, on "The Church at the Present Time."

Brother John Heide handed in seventy-six pennies as his birthday offering. A few weeks ago a group of relatives and friends gathered at his home to help him celebrate his birthday.

The ladies' aid met at the home of Mrs. John Heide. A small group was present, spending their time sewing. Nearly everyone is busy with her spring work.

Colorado Springs, Colorado

Appreciate Their Blessings

Saints of this city feel that God is very good and that he is blessing them. They were glad recently to welcome a new sister, Mrs. Manigold, into their group, and a short time after, her husband followed her into the waters of baptism. He is the oldest candidate for this ordinance that this branch has ever had.

Local members were thrown into consternation about Christmas time to learn that the church roof was about to fall on their heads, and they were a little discouraged, too, as they wondered where the means was coming from for a new roof. But Branch President Ebeling does not hesitate when he sees a duty that needs doing. They started to work, and now the new roof is on and the inside is newly calcimined.

The Saints appreciate the help of a part-time member of this group. He comes from Independence, Missouri, and rolls up his sleeves and helps like a veteran in local work and problems. Colorado Springs members are glad to see him every time he comes, and their prayer is that united faith will prevail and Sister Katschkowsky will be made whole once again.

Local young people are a sincere, faithful group, and the branch is proud of them. They are a busy people, but have taken time to prepare and present several dramatic entertainments and to sponsor jolly social affairs.

For some time now the Sunday evening sermon hour has been converted into a Bible study hour. Everyone brings his Bible, the text is read and discussed verse by verse, and free opportunity is given for questions. This is in charge of J. D. Curtis and is proving attractive to members and nonmembers.

The women's department is making comforts for reunion visitors. The reunion will probably be in August, and comforts are needed then in this mountain country.

Denver, Colorado

Attractive Services There

Easter Sunday worship began with a sunrise service at six o'clock, attended by a large number of Saints. A short sermon was delivered by the pastor. A dramatic service, "Light of Life," directed by Mrs. Fred Black, was presented by the following: Mrs. Leo Shupe, Mrs. Farr Kemp, Mrs. Clive Harper, Mrs. Ray Lucas, Herbert Merriman, Elaine Salyards, Burrell Shupe. Music was furnished by a quartet consisting of Wilma Graybill, Betty Newlands, E. W. Fishburn and E. J. Williams, and by Mrs. Alice Milligan and Wilma Graybill, soloists. Readers were Glaude Smith and Howard Sheehy.

The theme for the church school, "What Hast Thou Given?" was carried out in scripture readings by Mrs. Emma B. Lewis and in songs by the school.

At 10:45, the choir, directed by Mrs. Alice Milligan and accompanied by Inez Schrunk at the organ, gave the cantata, "The Living Christ," by Stultz. Soloists were Wilma Graybill, soprano, Glaude A. Smith, tenor, Harry Almy, bass.

At the close of this service, the wedding of Una May Holmes and Vernon C. Young was solemnized. The simple but impressive ceremony was read by the pastor, Glaude A. Smith. Inez Schrunk was at the organ. Brother Smith sang "Because," and Sister Milligan sang "Oh, Promise Me." The young people have the sincere wishes of the congregation for their happiness.

Communion service at 4 p. m. concluded the worship of the day.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Sheehy are the parents of a son, Howard, Junior, born March 19.

Harrison B. Coon died very suddenly Wednesday, March 28, at the age of sixty-five years. He had been a member of Denver Branch for many years, and will be greatly missed. He leaves to mourn, his daughter, Mrs. Edward Petsch, of Denver. His wife passed away last September. Funeral services were conducted Saturday, March 31, by the pastor, assisted by E. J. Williams.

Anderson, Indiana

About fifty members of the Indianapolis Branch met with the Anderson group at the home of Brother and Sister Tice, to celebrate the birthday of Brother Arthur W. Gage, sr., pastor of Indianapolis Branch, on March 17. The evening was spent in singing songs, playing games, and participating in contests all of which partook of the spirit of Saint Patrick's Day. At the close of the party refreshments carried out the green and white color scheme. A beautiful birthday cake and gift were presented to the guest of honor as a token of the sincere wishes of his friends.

Unique Observance of Branch Anniversary

British Columbia Saints gathered March 11, in large numbers, to help Vancouver Branch celebrate its organization twelve years ago. Features of the day were the reading of the branch organization minutes, the story of its early history, and many reminiscences concerning the local's growth. In the afternoon Samuel Pope read portions of his diary giving intimate glimpses of the branch's progress, and in the evening the young people paid tribute to older members in their vesper service theme, "The Pioneers."

"Guard within yourself that treasure kindness. Know how to give without hesitation, how to lose without regret, how to acquire without meanness."

Seek Prayers

Sister Lizzie Parrish, of Pekin, Illinois, seeks the prayers of all. She is seriously ill with erysipelas of the head. Her brothers and sisters are praying that she may be healed, and able again to carry on her work as superintendent of the church school.

Jenny Lind, when asked the secret of her marvelous power as a singer, said: "I sing to God." She forgot the people and looked into God's face and sang.—R. J. Miller.

Members Ask Prayers

Mount Washington Saints ask the prayers of all for Sister Amos B. Tomlinson, that she may have strength to make the trip to Alley, Missouri, where her husband is in the Civilian Conservation Corps. She has been dangerously ill with a nervous collapse.

Words of Commendation

"The Herald is the one thing that keeps the isolated members in contact with the church," writes Sister Howard Westerman, of Center, Colorado. "I especially liked the article about prayer in a recent issue. It did me much good."

"I have confidence in our leaders, and my prayers go up to God daily for them and for the whole church, that we may go forward and redeem Zion."

Independence

The last of the March and April series of Graceland broadcasts over KMBC, went on the air Sunday evening, April 29. Next Sunday evening KMBC will return its listeners to the former 5 p. m. vesper service. At the ten o'clock L. D. S. service in the evening the Central Church Choir, of Kansas City, will sing, Eugene Christy directing. Last Sunday night at this hour the Guilford, Missouri, Girls, directed by Oma Ross, gave the musical program, assisted by Harold Jobe, tenor. Bishop A. B. Phillips was the speaker.

Stone Church

Brotherhood Sunday was observed at the Stone Church in the morning, Pastor John F. Sheehy, in his eleven o'clock sermon, addressing an earnest plea for true brotherhood to a large congregation. For a Scripture lesson he read Matthew 28: 19, 20.

The Stone Church Choir furnished special music, Paul N. Craig directing, and Hazel Scott Withee playing the organ. Mrs. Nelle Kelley, soprano, sang a solo.

The early morning and the two-thirty afternoon general prayer meetings Sunday were greatly enjoyed by the Saints, who went to their homes, refreshed, encouraged, and inspired for a new week of endeavor to serve the Lord.

Following the evening church school session Sunday, a good-sized crowd assembled to hear Elder J. A. Gillen preach, and no one was disappointed in his words of counsel. His entire sermon was an earnest exhortation to the Saints to exercise faith in the living Christ. Feelingly he portrayed the need for such a faith, the benefits of its exercise, and the wondrous blessings in store for all who strive for the life more abundant and for the living Christ. For Scripture lessons he read and explained Psalm 19, and portions of Doctrine and Covenants 85.

Music for the evening was supplied by the Guilford, Missouri, Girls' Chorus, directed by Oma Ross and assisted by Harold Jobe.

The To-Ko-Lon Class of the young people's division of the Stone Church enjoyed a fellowship meeting at three o'clock Sunday afternoon at the home of their teacher, Mrs. Della Haberlein. A fine program, discussion of class business with emphasis upon some projects to be undertaken soon, and refreshments caused the afternoon hours to fly.

Steady attendance is accorded the young people's Wednesday evening prayer service in the lower room of the Stone Church. Last week the opening talk on "Enduring Convictions—Do We Have Them?" was given by Earl Higdon. Almer Sheehy was in charge of the service, and Evan Fry led the songs.

Friends in Independence were grieved to learn of the death of Rosemary Lewis, infant daughter of Apostle and Sister

G. G. Lewis, now in Australia. For many months prior to their going to Australia, Brother and Sister Lewis lived in Independence, where he was director of religious education for the city, and Sister Lewis was in charge of the women.

Walnut Park Church

Another beautiful Sunday saw splendid turnouts at the church school and morning preaching service. The program period of the church school was given over to a special number by the orchestra, directed by Orlando Nace.

At eleven o'clock Evangelist Albert Carmichael was the speaker, his sermon being preceded by an anthem, "Remember Now Thy Creator," sung by the choir under the direction of Minnie Scott Dobson.

Apostle J. F. Curtis was the speaker Sunday evening.

The monthly priesthood meeting of Walnut Park congregation was held at two-thirty Sunday afternoon. The pastor spoke of his desires for the future progress of the work at Walnut Park, after which a round-table discussion was held on a number of matters of local interest.

The troop of Boy Scouts sponsored by the Walnut Park congregation attended the annual round-up of the Covered Wagon Area at the American Royal Building in Kansas City Friday and Saturday evenings. Ammon Badder is scoutmaster and Paul Anderson assistant.

Enoch Hill Church

There was large attendance at all services of the day on Sunday. The beautiful day invited everyone out to worship.

Elder W. J. Brewer's class contributed well to the worship period, in the morning giving a most interesting program. The Pilot Class was happy to have H. E. Winegar out again after his injury and illness.

Apostle E. J. Gleazer was the eleven o'clock speaker and read as the basis of his sermon Isaiah 32: 17, 18.

Elder J. W. A. Bailey was the speaker Sunday evening, his theme being "Restoration." Instrumental numbers by Alfred Waters and William Worth were appreciated by the congregation.

Sister Sarah C. Thomas, mother of Pastor E. A. Thomas, is seriously ill at her son's home. Sister Thomas is known to the Independence Sanitarium and to many others as "Mother" Thomas. She was matron of the Nurses' Home for a number of years.

Englewood Church

Sunday morning, April 22, Apostle J. F. Curtis was the speaker. In the evening Apostle E. J. Gleazer delivered the sermon.

At eleven o'clock, Sunday, April 29, the pastor, Elder R. W. Howery, spoke.

At seven-thirty the young people had charge of the service. Doreen Hougas was the song leader, and Wilma Clow the pianist. Sister Mary Hiles sang, "We've a Story to Tell," accompanied by Olive Peterson. The speaker was Brother Cecil Walker, president of the Independence Young People's Council. His talk was based on the problems of young people in Zion.

The women under the leadership of Sister Bernice Stobaugh met at the church Wednesday, April 25, and devoted their time to cleaning the building.

The monthly social of group 36-East was held Friday night, April 20, at the home of Brother and Sister Moore. Brother U. W. Greene told of some of his spiritual experiences.

Group 35-West held a friendly meeting at the home of Brother and Sister Alma E. Rannie Friday night, April 27. Brother Ammon White favored the twenty-six present with a talk about some of his experiences.

These group gatherings are a new feature started at Englewood, and it seemed quite fitting that both of the get-togethers recorded above should be held in the homes of the respective group elders.

Gudgell Park Church

On Easter Sunday, April 1, the church was well filled for sacrament service. At the close, the congregation gathered on the plot of ground just south of the church where they are planning a community garden. They were joined here by Brother and Sister Charles C. Koehler and a short dedication service was held. Prayer was offered by Brother Koehler and an inspiring talk was given by Sister Koehler. The majority of this group is working on the project, putting in four acres of garden for the use of those who will need it.

This undertaking is in charge of the women's department, but many others outside of the department are giving willing assistance.

The Easter sermon in the evening was by Pastor Walter Chapman. Two songs were sung by the junior choir lately organized by Sister Roy Martin.

Sunday school was held at Gudgell Park during General Conference, and the Sunday following Elder A. C. Martin, of Seattle, Washington, was the morning speaker. His subject was "Faith" and he said among other things that faith builds highways out of obstacles. It makes molehills out of mountains, and faith makes God seem nearer than trouble.

At seven-thirty Elder E. Y. Hunker spoke on "Repentance," and the need of the Saints' still continuing to cry repentance, not only to the world, but to the church. "This church has need to go on its knees in repentance," he said, "and to be reconciled to God and our fellow men."

Speakers the last Sunday in April were Elder Herbert Barto and Elder Walter Self. Brother Barto chose for a text, "I am come that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly," and he showed how God's plan takes care of every phase of human life, spiritually, physically, and socially. Brother Self's sermon was on the power of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Spring Branch Church

At the close of the Sunday school class period last Sunday Brother Ira Weeks talked on "Prayer."

Elder Robert Fish was the speaker at eleven o'clock, and the choir sang, "Burst Ye Emerald Gates and Sing."

As usual a large crowd attended the night church school. The young people presented the program, and their theme was "Reverence."

"The Necessity of Revelation from God" was the topic of Apostle E. J. Gleazer's fine sermon in the evening. For a text he used part of Elijah's prayer: "Let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel." "The world needs this revelation," he declared, "more than anything else."

The young people's choir sang "Oh, Help Me Walk With Thee." Pastor M. C. Jacobson presided over the service, assisted by G. W. Eastwood.

The Wednesday night and Sunday morning prayer meetings continue to help this district. When gathered in services of this nature the worshipers remember the sick and all who ask for prayers.

Second Church

"The Purpose of Our Creation" was the sermon theme of Brother Roy Settles, of the local priesthood, Sunday morning. The choir sang the anthem, "O Be Joyful."

Stereopticon slide scenes vividly presented the life of Christ to the juniors downstairs at the same hour.

A short song service opened the evening hour. Pastor W. N. Inman was in charge. Special music was furnished by the Misses Mabel and Ruth Tignor, from Liberty Street, accompanied by Mrs. Gertrude Davis. Elder W. I. Fligg was the speaker and his theme was "Sleeping on Our Opportunities."

Miss LaMita Ferne Page, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Page, of Independence, and Vollie T. Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Jones, also of Independence, were married at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Roy E. Settles, the evening of April 27. The ceremony was performed by Roy E. Settles, brother-in-law of the bride. The bridal pair were attended by Mrs. Roy Thompson, sister of the bridegroom, and Roy Thompson.

Honest toil is holy service; faithful work is praise and prayer.—Henry Van Dyke.

Far West Stake

Far West Branch

The members of Far West Branch are feeling encouraged by the addition of some new members from other places. Elder J. E. Hovenga, of Maple Grove Branch, gave a splendid sermon on March 18, leaving all with a strong determination to press on in the good work. On the twenty-fifth Elder C. E. Wood of Kingston occupied the pulpit and gave a fine sermon on the subject, "Faith."

The sacrament service on Easter Sunday was not so well attended on account of muddy roads, but in the evening the young people of the branch gave a play, "The Lost Church" to a full house.

Saint Joseph Branch

An impressive ordination service was held Easter Sunday afternoon at the Second Church with all four churches represented in the congregation and in the candidates ordained. Three priests were ordained to the office of elder, Roscoe D. Peterson, of Third Church; L. Warren Hill, of Fourth Church, and A. J. Moffet, of Second Church. Emery J. Benjamin of Third Church was ordained to the office of a priest and four deacons were ordained as follows: Deyo Edwards, of Third Church; Hallard W. Felch, Second Church; Donald Hale, of First Church, and Dewey Anderson, of Guilford branch. Those officiating in the ordinance were Elders Ward A. Hougas, F. L. Hinderks, Milo Burnett, and O. Salisbury. Special music added to the effectiveness of the service and Elder Hinderks delivered a charge to the men. At the close all joined in singing "Consecration."

Easter being the first Sunday in the quarter, the amalgamated sacrament service for the city was held at First Church with a fine attendance and spirit.

First Church

Easter Sunday was a full day for First Church Saints and a happy one. An early morning prayer service was well attended. The church school hour that followed was given to the children's division who presented a colorful Easter pageant.

It was most appropriate that the Saints from all four churches should gather together to partake of the sacrament on this Easter Day. A quiet peace pervaded the service and Bishop Milo Burnett gave the theme talk.

One young man, from First, was among those ordained at the city-wide meeting in the afternoon at Second Church.

The day was climaxed by the beautiful rendition of the cantata, "Olivet to Calvary," given by the choir under the direction of Evan J. Ehlers. The soloists were Mrs. C. E. Haden, soprano; Miss Pearl Kinnaman, contralto; Mr. Carmen Nelson, tenor; and E. J. Ehlers, baritone.

Miss Kinnaman, also accompanied on the piano and Mrs. E. J. Ehlers on the organ.

All services except the church school were dismissed the two Sundays of General Conference, and many took advantage of the opportunity and spent the day in Independence.

The O. T. Z.'s have taken over the fourth Sunday evening of each month to provide the service. On April 22, they presented an effective program with the theme, "Who Is My Neighbor?" Music was furnished throughout the program by the girls' chorus. The program included several poems, a talk on the theme and a story adapted from "The Vision of Sir Launfal," and was brought to a close with a dramatization of the parable of the "Good Samaritan."

The morning speaker was Elder H. L. Barto, of Independence, who formerly labored in Saint Joseph. One of the church school classes had a home-coming celebration and a number of visitors worshiped with the present members and enjoyed renewing old friendships.

The O. T. Z.'s held their regular monthly social meeting on Tuesday, April 10, at the church. Games were played and refreshments were served.

The Dramatic Club held their regular meeting Thursday, April 26, at the church. A program of skits was enjoyed by a large group and a Mother's Day program was planned.

The women's department had an interesting program at their Thursday meeting, April 26, including a report on the conference class work and the women's meetings by Mrs. Wallace Smith and Mrs. Emma McPike, of Boise, Idaho, who is visiting here since conference.

Casey, Illinois

Disorganized Group Would Like Missionary Series

The five or six families of Saints still living at Casey are trying to obey the gospel. They have Sunday school in their little church, but their branch has been disorganized, and they have had no elder among them for more than four years. For six years Brother H. M. Curtis was their pastor. He and Brother E. L. Ulrich brought the gospel to this group in 1924, and about fifty people were baptized. But several have moved away, and the local is no longer organized.

The Saints are eager for gospel sermons, and would be glad to pay the expenses of an elder who could come and hold services for them. Casey members are all laboring people and work has not been plentiful, but they know that the gospel is true, and they want to live as the Lord wishes them to. They would enjoy the privilege of renewing their covenant with God.

The Saints desire prayers for a sister who is losing her eyesight.

Kansas City Stake

The classes, held the second and fourth Sundays of each month by Bishop J. A. Koehler on the "Constitution of Industrial Zion," and Elder R. L. Bishop on "Latter Day Saints In Business," were conducted Sunday, April 22, at two-thirty and three-thirty, with a fair attendance.

Central Church

This congregation was most happy to have as its speaker, Sunday, April 22, Apostle E. J. Gleazer. The choir sang, "Seek Ye The Lord," as the morning anthem, assisted by Charles Stilsen, soloist.

Although the membership enjoyed visiting General Conference for two Sundays, all seemed happy to be back to the home branch once again.

The young people were in charge of the evening service, and plan to hold one evening service each month. The chorus, quartet, and solo numbers which are to be entered in the coming music contest, were presented, after which Pastor C. E. Wight, gave a short talk.

Gladstone Church

The order of worship for Easter Sunday was as follows: a story by Sister C. A. Skinner, soprano solos by Miss La Rena Bullard, Easter selections by the local young people's chorus, and the sacrament message by Pastor S. S. Sandy.

During the month of April this group had an old-fashioned social at the home of Sister Witte, forty-one attending.

Brother Eugene Zink has been holding cottage preaching services with about twenty nonmembers attending. Good interest is being shown.

The Kansas City Stake O. B. K. young people's prayer meeting was held the evening of April 25, with Gladstone group, one hundred and fifteen being present.

A few years ago one frequently met the idea that religion is not an essential element in the making of the modern world. The circulation of that idea seems to have declined with the circulation of money. The jaunty, self-sufficiency and cockiness of yesterday are no longer the vogue. The prophets of "unyielding despair" have few followers. It is one thing to talk objectively about unyielding despair while driving down the avenue in the latest "eight"; it is another thing to hold it as a philosophy when trudging from one place to another looking for a job. Conditions to create an attitude of unyielding despair are here, but men find it unsatisfactory as a philosophy to live by. They want to hope. Today many are faced with the dilemma—faith or suicide. They are turning to the church for courage and many a preacher is accomplishing more today through his sermons than he ever did before."—William K. Anderson, in Federal Council Bulletin.

Zion's Christian Legion

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE LEGION COMMANDER

By D. T. Williams

A few words concerning the responsibility of the one who stands at the head of Zion's Christian Legion may be not only a matter of interest but a matter of necessary instruction to the officers and members of the organization. To quote the Statement of Outlines and Objectives: "The Legion Commander shall preside over the general activities, such as the Legion Convention and other general meetings, and have oversight of all Legion activities."

Having oversight of "all general activities" will of necessity mean much to the success of the organization if the work it seeks to accomplish is achieved. It will be the responsibility of the chief officer of such an organization as this to see that the machinery is kept running as smoothly as possible that it may thereby realize its purpose with the least degree of friction. This will make necessary the elimination of those elements of trouble that may stand in the way of success.

It is the understanding that this is a service organization to be operated for the good of the church. We will seek therefore to administer the enactments of the conventions in such a manner as will reach out to a realization of the objectives we have set before ourselves. In light of these facts the Legion Commander will expect that every Divisional Commander as well as every Company Commander will render a full meed of cooperation.

Further, it will be the special task of the Legion Commander to suggest the ways and means through which the specific objectives we have set before our institution shall be realized. He will recognize this as a special responsibility and will give his time and attention to the accumulation of such material as will help all officers and members in their immediate and future problems.

We will set up in the near future a general headquarters which will act as a clearing house for the ideas and suggestions sent to us by those working out problems of interest to all. Watch this space in the Herald for the announcement of headquarters address. Also watch this space in the future for suggestions of ways and means of realizing the victory necessary to make the work of Zion's Christian Legion a success.

○ God, thou art my God; early will I seek thee: my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and thirsty land, where no water is; to see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary. Because thy loving kindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee. Thus will I bless thee while I live; I will lift up my hands in thy name. My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips: when I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches. Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice. My soul followeth hard after thee; thy right hand upholdeth me.—Psalm 63: 1-8.

The Restoration---God Sets His Hand to Build

By C. A. Edstrom

SINCE the dawn of creation God has been trying to build, with the aid of man, a social order, "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." But man in his own wisdom has sought to set aside the counsel of God and build according to his own plans.

That there is a need for a system of human living together which will provide equal opportunity for physical, mental, and spiritual development requires little argument. Such a need is evident from the fact that all around we see the spirit of discontent, misery, and poverty.

Man is a social being and as such cannot live unto himself. He craves companionship. This inborn craving forced him in early times to seek the association of other men. His families grew into small tribes; then he built villages and towns which grew and expanded into large enterprising cities, finally culminating in a definite national life. This raised barriers whose roots were buried deep in the soil of nationalistic idealism. Now, due to the inventions of our modern day, one nation has become so involved in the affairs of other nations that man is forced to the necessity of thinking in terms of a universal type of society. God knew that eventually man would be faced with such universal thinking, and consequently has urged man time and time again to "seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God . . . , and all these things shall be added unto you."

JESUS REEMPHASIZES THE PLAN

Jesus when inaugurating his movement for the establishment of an ideal society emphasized the fact that "life is more than meat, and the body than raiment." He hoped to divert the attention of his disciples from a narrow vision of endeavor to one of such proportions as would reach into the life of man wherever he was found. This was the thought Jesus would plant in the soul of these men when he said, "I will build my church. . . ." For a moment let us look at that church. Its philosophy is built upon three basic fundamental principles: faith, love, and forgiveness. Upon this foundation must be raised the superstructure of an institution that will withstand the stress and strain of life. Out of these three life principles spring all the other attributes of a life exemplified by a true follower of Christ. "If ye continue in my word then are ye my disciples indeed."

Faith in God means a conviction, deep within the soul, that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. It further means an abiding confidence in the manifold promises made by God; and that within man lies the possibility of realizing the hope of God's majestic kingdom, providing he subscribes to the laws of its founder. Faith in God and faith in man go hand in hand. Neither can live without the other. God has intended that this work of building His kingdom be a cooperative project, for "we are laborers together with God."

The test of discipleship and of men's right to have a part in the rearing of this new social order was love. Love is the great commandment. Jesus said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Their willingness to teach the hands to work, the mind to think, and the heart to love in the interest of this universal achievement was the determining factor in fitness for the kingdom.

From the well of love is drawn the waters of forgiveness. Out of the heart of man springs both good and evil. It is the source of the acts of beneficence as well as the acts of sordid thinking. From it comes the seeds of suffering, crime, poverty and kindred ills. Jesus knew how great a matter a little fire kindles when he said, ". . . if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave thou thy gift before the altar, and go thy way unto thy brother, and first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." These men were taught that within the borders of this kingdom there were no class, racial, or color lines. All men were brothers. Jesus pointed them to the perfect life.

To further the teaching and the exemplification of this more perfect life, Jesus chose twelve men, and other seventy, and commissioned them, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel. . . ." These men were pioneers. Into a world of idolatry, superstition, and self-righteousness they went to proclaim a gospel of faith and love and forgiveness. They met the attacks of false friends, ambitious men and political animosities, yet they continued on, sowing the seed of truth. The price they paid for the truth they had espoused was their life. As the work grew it became necessary to increase the ranks of their organized forces to care for the needs of the people added daily. The church that Jesus builded had apostles, seventies, evangelists, bishops, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. It was a church with divine authority to represent God. It was a church of power, much assurance and the Holy Ghost. It was a church of miracles, gifts of healings, helps, governments, and diversities of tongues. But designing men were not satisfied with the simple teachings of Jesus, so changes were proposed.

MAN INTERRUPTS THE PLAN

Jesus knew that his philosophy would meet with opposition from unscrupulous men—men whose hearts were filled with hatred, desire for power, and the love of wealth. Of this condition Jesus warned his disciples and prepared them to meet it.

"From the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."—Matthew 11: 12.

"Then Jesus said unto them, Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you; for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth."—John 12: 35.

Men not in sympathy with the simple teachings of Jesus tried to put an end to the spreading of his message. They thought that with the death of Jesus on Calvary the light of the gospel would surely be extinguished, but they failed to reckon with the power hidden deep within the confines of this message. The disciples caught up the torch of truth and in the face of dangers upon every hand carried on.

The apostles ceased not to warn the church of its impending danger from forces, both without and within.

"For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them."—Acts 20: 29, 30.

"For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; . . ."—2 Timothy 4: 3.

Persecution of the church continued with increasing bitterness.

"They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins and goat-skins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth."—Hebrews 11: 37, 38.

Reference to the historian Mosheim reveals interesting facts bearing on the overthrow of this primitive church:

"The Christian church was scarcely formed when in different places, there started up certain pretended reformers, who, not satisfied with the simplicity of that religion that was taught by the apostles, mediated changes of doctrine and worship."—Chapter 5, paragraph 1, First Century, Part 2.

"... They, however, acquired strength by degrees."—Paragraph 2.

"The Gnostics corrupted the doctrine of the gospel by a profane mixture of oriental philosophy with its divine truths."—Paragraph 3.

Of the second century he writes in Part Two:

"Its beauty was gradually effaced by the laborious efforts of human learning, and the dark subtleties of imaginary science."—Chapter 3, Paragraph 3.

Of the fourth century he wrote:

"At the conclusion of this century there remained no more than a mere shadow of the ancient government of the church."—Part 2, chapter 2, paragraph 2.

He further states that in this century "pride, arrogance, luxury and vice increased greatly. . . ; but first among the ministers." In the sixth century he says "learning was neglected, and intemperance, luxury, and love of power increased among the clergy."

We can readily see that the church which was designed to bring salvation to men gradually lost its beauty, majesty and power and was no longer adequate for the task of lifting men to heights of spiritual development. Men substituted a form of godliness but denied the power thereof. The people were left to wander to and fro in darkness, ever seeking but never finding.

But God had not forgotten the children of men. He bided the time when men should become sick of priestly corruption and in the power of faith come out against the evils of that perverted church. Strong men, such as Wickcliffe, Lollard, Huss, Luther, Melancthon, Tyn-dale, Knox, Calvin, Wesley and others declared themselves in opposition to the spiritual slavery which held the people in subjection to priestly authority. They preached against the evil; they circulated printed matter and openly exposed their pernicious acts and idolatrous teachings. For their boldness they paid with their lives. Thus was prepared the way when God should again set his hand to build his majestic kingdom.

Luther looked forward to the restoration of the primitive church; Wesley visioned the choosing of the new apostles from Abraham's seed, and the coming of the last prophet.

Roger Williams, Baptist founder, once said, "There can be no recovery out of that apostasy till Christ shall send forth new apostles to plant churches anew."

Alexander Campbell gave utterance to this statement, "The primitive gospel in all its effulgence and power is yet to shine out in its original splendor to regenerate the world."

Sir Isaac Newton said, "About the time of the end, in all probability, a body of men will rise up, who will turn their attention to the prophecies, and insist upon their literal interpretation in the midst of much clamor and opposition." Little did he realize the profoundness of the statement, for that is just what God proposed should happen.

GOD'S PLAN AGAIN OFFERED TO MAN

Until the beginning of the nineteenth century the restoration of all things had not yet been born, but was looked forward to with expectancy by prominent men of the age. Then when God did proceed to do a marvelous work which caused men to wonder they proclaimed it of the Devil. In that day of spiritual darkness the Lord said the wisdom of the wise would perish and out of the mouth of an unlearned man should come the law of a new social order.

During the excitement of a religious revival at Palmyra, New York, in March of the year 1820, a young lad, Joseph Smith, then less than fifteen years of age, was deeply moved to render obedience to the will of God. His mind was confused as to which denomination he should become affiliated with. One day he read in the Epistle of James that if anyone lacks wisdom he should ask of God, who is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. Hear him.

"During this time of great excitement my mind was called to serious reflection and great uneasiness; . . . my mind became somewhat partial to the Methodist sect, . . . but so great was the confusion and strife among the different denominations that it was impossible for a person young as I was and so unacquainted with men and things to come to any certain conclusion who was right, and who was wrong.

"I at length came to the determination to 'ask of God,' . . . I retired to the woods to make the attempt.

"My object in going to inquire of the Lord was to know which of all the sects was right, that I might know which to join.

"I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong, and the personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupts; 'they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof.'"

Between the years 1823 and 1827 Joseph Smith was visited upon several occasions by the Angel Moroni, who was the last writer and custodian of the plates containing the record of the Jaredites, Nephites and Lamanites. Joseph received lengthy instructions from Moroni concerning the translation of this record. This first edition of this record, the Book of Mormon, was received in 1830.

In May, 1829, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were ordained to the Aaronic priesthood under the hands of John the Baptist.

In April, 1830, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood at the direction of Peter, James, and John.

In June, 1830, Joseph received direction from the Lord to begin the work of translating the Jewish Scriptures. This work was delayed for a time but was started again in September, 1831, and finally completed in July, 1833, approximately two years later. The first edition of the King James Version required forty-two scholars, students of Greek and Hebrew, and masters of English, two years and nine months to complete the work. Due to many mistakes a revision of the King James Version was necessary requiring fifty-two English scholars two more years at an expenditure of one hundred thousand dollars, to produce the English Revised Version of the King James Version.

Under the inspiration of the Spirit of God this young Prophet, Joseph, gave to the world a translation superior in quality and completeness—The Inspired Translation.

By divine intervention there was ushered into the world a restoration of all things; the law of a new social order. That social order has its roots firmly set in the soil of divinity. It reaches back into the recesses of the ages and gathers from holy men a rich heritage. You and I are afforded a priceless opportunity to make the philosophy of the kingdom of God become flesh. With a heritage so rich for our ground work we cannot, we must not, we will not fail to build.

Our bodies are temples in which God purposes to dwell by his Spirit, and while that Spirit is in us we know God, and the Spirit gives us life. But God's Spirit will not dwell in unholy temples, and if we defile the temple of God, he will destroy us by withdrawing the Spirit that "giveth life." The life does not die, but we lose it, are separated from it, if we "willfully" rebel against God after having received "the knowledge of the truth." And as man may lose "eternal life" by rebelling and turning away from God, the source of life, so the sinner may be freed from "everlasting punishment" by repenting and turning to God.—Elder Isaac M. Smith, in "The Atonement of Christ and the Final Destiny of Man."

She was an earnest and tireless church worker and could always be seen at services regardless of conditions. She was a teacher in the church school for many years. Hundreds of friends came to pay their respects at her death and many of them to leave a floral offering. Funeral services were from the church at Belleville, Saturday April 7, at 2 p. m. and were conducted by Elder Edward Nicholson, branch pastor. Interment was at the Walnut Hill Cemetery. ## The Indwelling God

Go not, my soul, in search of Him;
Thou wilt not find Him there—
Or in the depths of shadow dim,
Or heights of upper air.

For not in far off real of space
The spirit has its throne;
In every heart it findeth place
And waiteth to be known.

Thought answereth alone to thought
And soul with soul hath kin;
For outward God he findeth not
Who finds not God within.

And if the Vision comes to thee
Revealed by inward sign
Earth will be full of Deity
And with his glory shine!

Thou shalt not want for company
Nor pitch thy tent alone;
The Indwelling God will go with thee
And show thee of thine own.

Oh, gift of gifts, Oh, grace of grace,
That God should condescend
To make thy heart His dwelling place—
And be thy daily Friend!

Then go not thou in search of Him
But to thyself repair;
Wait thou within the silence dim—
And thou shalt find Him there!
—Frederick Lucian Hosmer

when we are too busy to be miserable.—

The Pigeonhole

■ I Life—10c

A note on the hard times is contained in an incident that happened at a local shop a few days ago.

Two men argued about the payment of a ten-cent debt and quarreled. One struck the other, knocking him to the concrete floor, the injury thus received causing a fracture to the skull that resulted in death.

It is easy for others now to see how greatly the quarrel overshadowed the small debt, and how the loss of a life now overshadows the quarrel. The man who will face a second-degree murder charge and probably a prison sentence will have a long time to contemplate the intricate and sometimes tragic relationships between little causes and great effects.

Great troubles often start from little things. Light a vindictive spirit with a flash of bad temper, and there are enough powder magazines in human nature to blow society to useless little bits. World wars, rifts between nations, church fights, political feuds, apron-string vendettas, back fence spats, and even childhood hair-pullings can all start from inconsequential beginnings.

Each of us contains a dangerous powder magazine full of trouble, and each the detonating cap of a possible bad temper. They are nothing to be proud of, though many people like to boast of them. They are like tails—nearly all of the monkeys have them.

If given the opportunity to relive the whole experience, neither man would probably have gone so far as to sacrifice a life for a dime, but fate does not give us the opportunity to do things over, especially when life is involved. We need to use our imaginations and look ahead to the final consequences of any act before we start the work.

Oh, yes! We forgot to add that both men were reported to be drunk.

■ Mother's Knee

Pigeon, looking over the sheaf of Mother's Day contributions, observed: "I gather from these documents that the principal part of a mother is her knee. If that were true, almost any old saw horse, padded and quilted, could substitute for her. Personally, I think the sentiment about the mother's knee is just a little bit soft. It takes far more than a knee to make a good mother: brains, character, loyalty, strength, ideals, religion, and a lot of other great and admirable things. These, too, are worthy of adulation.

"And why is it," he continued, "that around about this time every year the mothers are treated to a bath of tears by people who practically forget them at all other times? Mothers laugh and are happy, too, like other people. There is nothing inherently sad in motherhood, if the rest of the family are decently kind and properly considerate of her. Certainly a tearful mother is no ideal for us to hold up to the people. And I am in favor of putting this drivel about 'mother's knee' on the shelf with the asafetida bag, the bustle, the hoop skirt, the rabbit's foot superstition, and the scratchy old red flannel underwear."

Four Great Church Programs

Post-conference Enthusiasm As a result of the fine spirit that prevailed at the General Conference in April, a great many of the members who were present have returned to their home branches rededicated to the work of the church, and determined to do everything in their power to push it forward. Nor is this spirit of consecration confined to those who were in attendance at the conference. Many letters coming to headquarters indicate that it is also with those who saw the conference chiefly through the columns of the daily and weekly Herald and heard of it from their friends.

Four Great Programs We go forward from this conference with four great fields of endeavor now well opened for us. Other fields, too, are in preparation, and will be treated in these columns when material is ready. But for the present there is plenty for us to do in these four. They offer sufficient opportunity for the united efforts of the church for years to come.

Missionary Program At the General Conference the members of the Quorum of Twelve presented a series of statements concerning their dedication to the missionary work of the church which was indeed encouraging to those who see in the missionary work the principal task of the church. Numbers of calls for the printing of this statement have already reached the office of the editors. We are hoping that they may be made available for us to print, in part at least, in the near future. Meanwhile, the church calls upon the membership for loyal and devoted support to be given to the members of the Twelve in their endeavor to carry forward their work.

The Financial Program No matter how we feel about it, the ultimate success or failure of the church as an organization will depend upon how we meet and handle our financial obligations. Let us entertain no delusions: our debts must be paid or we are wrecked as a church. More than any other institution, a church rests upon moral and spiritual foundations that are wholly incompatible and irreconcilable with failure to meet obligations. No doubt exists as to our desire to make good, but making good will depend upon a day by day saving and obedience to the law. The Presiding Bishopric will need our fullest support. We have every conviction that they are capable of doing their work and consecrated to their task. Now we must "Keep the Law" in order to insure the success of the church and the meeting of its responsibilities.

Priesthood Work For many months President McDowell has been devoting his time to the work of the priesthood, traveling to meet them in all places, lecturing, arousing, and inspiring them. This good work is already bearing fruit in the increased consciousness of responsibility among the priesthood, and it should bear further fruit in their more adequate preparation for their tasks. The church is faced with a great necessity of lifting both its spiritual and its intellectual standards to new heights. The priesthood should lead the way, and it is believed that they can and will prove equal to their great task of church leadership. Insofar as it is possible, members can help by encouraging and following the priesthood in their new endeavors.

The Young People One prominent church man has said that if we could hold our own young people for a few years, and engage their loyalty to the church, we should have a growth in active membership phenomenal in its proportions. There are some fortunate and active branches of the church where nearly all of the young people grow up with the church and remain faithful to it through adult life. But there are all too many where the largest part of our Sunday school harvest—the children—are lost. Sons and daughters of church people are lost to the world and to other churches. Most of this loss can be traced to lack of adequate local leadership, social program, and recreational opportunities. A strong effort will be made to provide both program and activity material that will help local churches to build a good program for holding the young people.

All Working Together The successful realization of the aims of these four programs will require all church members to work steadily, consistently and devotedly together. The spirit of the recent conference demonstrated that the people have the faith and the will to drive toward their goals. It remains for us as a church to demonstrate that we have the power, the staying power to accomplish the heavy tasks that confront us.

L. L.

Christianity has been termed a good many times a religion of joy. In this it is different from all the other religions in human history.—J. D. Robins.

In his own strong quiet way, he bests a flashy rival, wears down a worldly and unprincipled employer, tames a high spirited girl for the mature tasks of life and brings her at last to an understanding of its realities. You'll like Daniel Eldon, sympathize with his sufferings, and want to see him through to the end of the story.

Money Dominance or God Dominance?

A missionary described to me a volcanic eruption and earthquake in the New Hebrides, of which he was an eye-witness. A volcano some miles distant was in eruption and the air was electric with fear that an earthquake would follow. Each laid hold of his most prized possession ready to rush to the sea shore to be evacuated in the waiting boats. The expected happened. The whole hill against which the city was built, split wide open. Part of the city was submerged and the sea began to boil. Everybody fled to the shore. As the last boat was about to draw out they yelled to a woman who stood holding a bag of yams to leave the yams and jump into the boat. They could not take both. She stood hesitant for a moment, then refused to give up her yams, and the boat pulled out. They got away just in time, for the land sank into the sea and the last thing they saw was the woman going down under the water, still clinging to her yams. To give the picture a modern setting substitute for the ignorant South Sea Island woman, holding on to her bag of yams, the intelligent business man holding on to his money bags, and letting God and life go. The time comes in every man's life when he has to decide whether there shall be money-dominance or God-dominance in his life,—E. Stanley Jones in The Christ of the Mount.

Anonymous Letters

People sometimes write us of conditions in their local churches with the very worthy purpose of effecting needed improvements in services and deportment. Often such writers do not sign their names.

Sometimes these letters contain veiled attacks on local persons who could be easily indentified by other local readers. We find that the writers of these anonymous letters may be not correctly informed as to the facts they allege. To print their letters would do harm and perhaps great injustice.

People who write these letters will understand why we cannot print them, even where the cause is just. Questions of conduct, and all charges and complaints concerning members and officers should be taken up with local or district officials whose duty and right it is to deal with such matters. The Herald, naturally, cannot be used as an instrument of punishment by anonymous writers.

People You Ought to Know

S. A. BURGESS
Church Historian

At the recent General Conference Brother Burgess exhibited a number of rare documents of historical interest to church people. He is taking the best possible care of these things in order to preserve them for the future. There are many important books and documents in private hands that would be much better preserved if committed to his care. Rare articles left in private hands, too, are often lost by children who do not know their value.

As historian Brother Burgess is carrying on an important piece of work for the church, searching for the facts of our early history.

ACROSS THE DESK

By F. M. S.

— Informal Chats From the Office of the President —

PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH

BROTHER Birch Whiting, one of our active district presidents and who has had to contend against the disadvantages of some physical disabilities, writes that he is improving in health for which he is very grateful. He says, "But I am geared too high for the road I have to travel. I think the Lord asked a lot when he told us to be temperate in all things."

Brother Whiting, it is evident from the above, experiences what many others do who have an ever-present ambition to do all in their power to promote the cause. He finds time too short, strength too small, and talents too few to do all he would like to accomplish, but after all it is necessary for us to know our limitations and keep within them.

More Than Forty Years' Service

In a letter recently received from Elmer C. Evans of Grand Rapids he told of having written to a sister asking reasons for her request to be released as solicitor, and in response to his letter he received a communication which I am sure will be read with great interest by our readers. The sister mentioned is Mrs. C. A. Clark of Galien, Michigan, who will be remembered by many of our readers as the daughter of George A. Blakeslee. Under date of March 20 she wrote Brother Evans as follows:

"Your letter of March 18 just received and in reply as to my wishing to be released from the office of solicitor of the Galien Branch, I thought it time I was put on the retired list. Having served in that office for more than forty years and being eighty years old, with only a reasonable degree of good health, I thought it best to resign as I sometimes grew weary in well doing. I certainly am pleased to know the branches throughout the district are coming to the front once more. We have taken our church Herald since 1876, never having missed one Herald, and in that way keep fairly well posted in the church work. You will please accept my thanks for your very kind letter."

We congratulate Sister Clark on her splendid record and hope that she may have many years yet to enjoy association with the Saints she has so faithfully served in the one office. We congratulate her too on having been a continuous reader of the Herald since 1876, just two years longer than the span of my life. May your days be blessed, Sister Clark.

A Cooperative Effort

A letter from Brother E. F. Robertson expressed the belief that the reunion at Brooksville this past reunion season was one of the best opportunities offered the Saints of Maine to demonstrate in a collective way our zionic philosophy. He said:

"Much has been said about the achievements already gained along this line. Well, at the close of the last reunion, it was found that we had not only fed the multitudes at ten cents per meal, and given them splendid meals, and found them some sort of a place to sleep at no charge, but we had a small balance of perhaps seventy-five dollars left over, after meeting the expense of general church workers and recognizing in a small monetary way the services of some of the local workers that had given most freely of their time and effort."

This extract of Brother Robertson's letter we sent to one of our brethren of the Bishopric, and he commented on it by saying that the zionic example of the reunion was impressive as to spirit, but not so convincing otherwise. He suggested that the meals at ten cents undoubtedly cost more if labor and contributed materials and equipment were properly entered, and that the beds where people slept were paid for by somebody, and then he made a comment which is worth considering, which was that "Zion would quickly break down were it to be erected on such an economic basis." Then, feeling that perhaps we might misunderstand his comment relative to the essential economic basis of zionic development, he added that this statement does not lessen the appreciation of the cooperative spirit of the people and workers as reflected by the achievement at the Maine reunion.

While it is true that zionic activities must be based on a sound economic basis, yet without the spirit of cooperation and inter-helpfulness manifested by the Maine Saints, Zion will be impossible of achievement. We are happy to know that not only are the Saints learning the spirit of reciprocal and mutual helpfulness, but that they are manifesting a willingness to put it into operation.

Youth's Forum

Announcements of Young People's Activities

Where stake and district young people's leaders have large numbers to reach, the Editors will be glad to have them use the "Youth's Forum" for sending out announcements, letters, or communications. We make the request, because of space considerations, that these announcements be condensed.

Such communications should reach us in time for publication so that there shall be no disappointment. They should be mailed in time to reach our office on the Thursday before publication. Our publication day is Tuesday of each week. Allow sufficient time for handling in the mails.

Thus the Herald can be of service to the young people's organizations in carrying on their work. Will you cooperate with us? We shall appreciate your help.

Branch announcements, of course, can be handled locally, and need not be inserted in the Herald. News of young people's activities, however, is welcome. This, also, should be written up briefly.

Holden Stake Young People's Activities

Volley Ball Season Opens May 11

Holden Stake young people will see the opening of their volley ball season on May 11, and all young people are urged to be present at the nearest game:

Warrensburg at Sedalia
Atherton at Lexington
Holden at Lees Summit

May 13 is the date set for the regional meeting at Warrensburg. Next Sunday, in case you might forget. The regional meeting at Sedalia was held last Sunday, and a week earlier one was held at Blue Springs. These meetings are proving excellent for making the young people acquainted. Eight branches were represented at the Blue Springs meeting. Morning prayer meeting in charge of O. W. Sarratt, pastor at Blue Springs, assisted by Ammon Andes and Lawrence Martin, brought a good response on the theme, "Fill the Breach. Let Us Prepare." Special prayers were offered for Gladys Beebe, ex-president of the stake organization, who is recovering from an operation. G. R. Wells lectured, stressing the importance of permanence and stability in the membership of the stake. "Take Root!" was his theme. Vernon Lundeen spoke at eleven o'clock on "Know Thyself," giving the thought that each one must find his best qualities and develop them. At two o'clock there was music by the Blue Springs Orchestra, led by Orlando Nace. At two-thirty the business session began under Robert L. Thistlethwaite, president of the stake young people's organization. Mildred Lundeen will have charge of plans for the Harvest Festival exhibit in the fall. Ammon Andes was appointed to complete plans for an institute in June. Genevieve Smith will take charge of plans for a banquet at the institute.

Holden Stake is to have a young people's chorus, and has already had its first practice. Bernice Hampton, director, is hoping for good support for this venture.

The Tenth Legion

Recent additions to the ranks of the Legion who are active in church work are as follows:

Lella Palmer, Springfield, Missouri.
Mary Ellen Whalen, Rockford, Illinois.
Raymond Sprague, Rockford, Illinois.
Eva Purcell, Santa Rosa, California.
Ben Budworth, Sebastopol, California.
Robert Purcell, Santa Rosa, California.
Leveta Bell, Santa Rosa, California.
Barbara Budworth, Sebastopol, California.

One of these, a girl of fifteen years, reports an active service in church work, having invited twenty-five nonmembers to attend church, and using her personal influence to acquaint fifteen with the ideals of the church.

A young man of twenty years has given a subscription to the Saints' Herald, and a copy of each of the Book of Mormon, the Bible, and the Doctrine and Covenants in his missionary endeavor. He reports inviting fifty nonmembers to attend services, and explaining the gospel to two hundred of his friends who do not belong to the church.

This is real work of the Legion.

Zion's Christian Legion

A communication for the Zion's Christian Legion, young people's organization of the Great Lakes Mission, is contained in a special column at the back of this issue of the Herald. Members of this organization are urged to watch the Herald regularly for announcements concerning their organization and activities.

A careless man is just an accident going somewhere to happen.—Royal Neighbor.

Behind the dim unknown standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.—J. R. Lowell.

Graceland A Cappella Chorus to Kansas City

Chorus Will Sing at Kansas City Central Church Next Friday Evening

On Friday, May 11, the A Cappella Chorus will embark on its annual spring tour with Miss Carlile at the helm. The tour this year will be a short one due to the fact that the chorus went to conference.

The occasion for the trip is an invitation from the Central church to Miss Carlile for the chorus to come and sing at the end of the Kansas City music festival. The awards of the festival will be given and the A Cappella will be the main attraction of the evening.

The chorus will be the guests of Kansas City people Friday night and will return home Saturday morning.—Graceland Tower.

Oriole Registration

The following Oriole Circles have registered since our report in March:

New Liskeard, Ontario, Jane Caswell, monitor.
Mobile, Alabama, Mrs. Myrtle Scarcliff, monitor.

Fort Madison, Iowa, Pearl Herrick, monitor.

This makes a total of nineteen active circles, with some two hundred girls.

Independence Orioles assisted Girl Scouts in maintaining a check stand at the recent General Conference. They also conducted a nursery daily, and had on display a variety of attractive handwork done in their training. Two of the girls block printed initials on souvenir handkerchiefs and earned a neat sum to be contributed by their circle to payment on the Auditorium debt.

Best Society

Best Society is not a fellowship of the wealthy, nor does it seek to exclude those who are not of exalted birth; but it is an association of gentle-folks, of which good form in speech, charm of manner, knowledge of the social amenities, and instinctive consideration for the feelings of others, are the credentials by which society the world over recognizes its chosen members.—Emily Post.

Standards for Pastoral Missionary Work

By Henry L. Livingston

HENRY L. LIVINGSTON
Bishop of Far West Stake

"Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

IN contemplating standards for our pastoral missionary work let us view briefly the work of the early church; analyze its phenomenal growth from 1830 to 1840; ascertain what elements contributed to its success, for it is extremely desirable that these same elements may form the basis of our own work.

Let us first note that the movement was evangelical. The ministry whole-heartedly responded to the Divine command to carry the gospel to "every creature." Back of this tremendous missionary urge lay that which gave rise to it, namely, their outstanding spiritual experiences with God. It was these amazing revealments that sent them forth with such spiritual power that they shocked the religious world. Their testimonies, supplemented with the presence of Divine Power, moved the honest in heart to a realization and conviction that God was again speaking to his people and that the gospel message was true. The ingathering of many people was the natural result of this kind of work.

THE ANALYSIS OF OLIVER COWDERY'S TESTIMONY

Oliver Cowdery's testimony will serve to reveal the elements which not only made his work successful, but which also gave "being" to the church. (We are quoting only parts of the testimony, the balance of which may be read in Church History, volume 1, pages 37-39.)

"On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us, while the veil was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance. What joy! What wonder! What amazement! While the world was racked and distracted, while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard . . . 'twas a message from the Most High! . . . Where was room for doubt? Nowhere: uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled forever! . . . We received under his (the angel's) hand the holy priesthood, as he said, 'Upon you my fellow-servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood and this authority.'"

The vital elements in this testimony are to be noted as follows:

1. Divine Revelation
  - a. The Redeemer spoke to them.
2. Divine Revelation
  - a. The voice of the Redeemer spoke.
3. Anticipation and Expectancy
  - a. It was a long looked for message.
4. Need for the Message
  - a. The world was racked and distracted.
  - b. Men everywhere were resting upon uncertainty.
5. Priesthood and Divine Authority Received
  - a. "Upon you . . . I confer this priesthood and this authority."

THE MISSIONARY WORK WAS SOON STARTED AFTER THESE EXPERIENCES

The church was organized in April, 1830, and in October of the same year, Oliver Cowdery, who had received this marvelous testimony, with three other young men, Parley P. Pratt, Peter Whitmer, jr., and Ziba Peterson, left on a missionary tour to the West, preaching the "good news." They left home without purse or scrip, neither were they equipped with any special scholastic training for their ministry, but they did have a message—it was a unique message!

This missionary journey proved valuable to the church for what it accomplished.

1. At Mentor, Ohio, they met Sidney Rigdon and converted him. He was later one of the pillars of the church, occupying the position of counselor to the President.
2. At Kirtland their presence caused much excitement. Large gatherings attended their preaching and in a few weeks 127 were baptized into the church. Parley P. Pratt says that the number "soon increased to one thousand."
3. In addition to the conversion of Sidney Rigdon, there were others converted who became prominent in church affairs. Isaac Morley, John Murdock, Lyman Wight, Edward Partridge and others were baptized and ordained.
4. Elder Pratt left his Book of Mormon with Simeon Carter which did missionary work on its own account. Having read the book, Mr. Carter traveled fifty miles to Kirtland to investigate the gospel. He was converted, baptized and ordained an elder and returned to build up a branch of sixty members in his homeplace.

From this beginning the work increased rapidly until in the short period of ten years elders were not only pushing to all parts of the United States but to many foreign lands as well. The British Isles were quick to accept the gospel. In April, 1840, the minutes of the English General Conference show that there were 1,681 members and 132 members of the ministry. In October, of that year there were 3,626 members and 403 officers in the ministry. Letters written to the editor of the Millennial Star give us some insight as to the progress of the work there. Elder Willard Richards wrote:

"After visiting several places . . . preaching daily, talking night and day and administering the ordinances of the gospel as directed by the Spirit . . . We find there has been in these two weeks about 112 baptized, 200 confirmed: 2 elders, about 20 priests and one teacher ordained . . . There are many doors open which we cannot fill; calls for preaching on almost every hand which we cannot answer. Oh! that the saints would pray to the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers." (Volume 1, 1840.)

Elder W. Woodruff wrote:

"We continued preaching, and baptizing, and administering in the ordinances of the gospel daily unto such as would receive our testimony, and obey the gospel of Jesus Christ. Truth was mighty and prevailed; the work prospered and multiplied on every hand, until several hundreds, including more than fifty preachers of the various sects, were rejoicing in the fulness of the everlasting gospel . . . The Lord still continued to bless our labours, and added daily unto the church; new doors were opening on every hand—a multiplicity of calls constantly reached our ears, many of which we could not answer for the want of labourers." (Volume 1, 1840.)

Space does not permit an extensive review of the progress of the church's missions, but these few sketches will serve to show the zeal and spirit had by our forefathers in the church. Their letters also reveal the regard they had for the responsibilities which came to them through membership in the church. Their tireless work and sacrifices may be understood in light of their experiences with God. He spoke to them. He gave them a message and sent them forth to labor in his vineyard. (See Doctrine and Covenants 83: 10, and 108: 3.)

THE CHURCH IS OUR RICH SPIRITUAL AND SOCIAL HERITAGE

The church with all its opportunities and promised blessings comes to us as a rich spiritual and social heritage. It comes to us with a unique historical background, revealing God at work with his people. It comes with tremendous missionary and membership responsibilities and with many yet-to-be-achieved objectives in the building of the Kingdom. It calls for both the men of the ministry and men and women of the laity to become in fact "labourers together with God" in its two-fold task of (1) preaching the gospel, and (2) building Zion. Adverse conditions in the world and the crying needs of men make imperative the proper discharge of our duties as members of Christ's church.

THE BRANCH'S FUNCTION IN THE TASK OF THE CHURCH

All of us should understand that the branch is not an independent church within the church, but is merely a part of the whole church. Its organization is for the purpose of perpetuating the work of God within its jurisdiction, both in the missionary and pastoral or Zion building aspects. In view of this fact, it stands to reason that no branch can long endure in peace and harmony by living entirely to itself. It would do well to realize that its attitude toward the missionary task and that its conception of Zion both have a vital relationship with its welfare and growth. Any branch that does not have enough spiritual vision to take others in and fails to see the need of Zion, does not have sufficient insight to solve its own problems. This may be one of the reasons why the provincially minded branch is usually a seat of trouble for both the general church and for itself, because it overlooks the purpose of its existence, to preach the gospel and to build Zion.

Spirituality in the individual or in the branch is not passive but active—in the truest sense it is love in action. In order, therefore, for the branch to maintain its highest levels of spiritual power and effectiveness, it must constantly spend itself in service for others and seek the great source from whence cometh its strength.

ELEMENTS FORMING THE BACKGROUND FOR STANDARDS IN OUR MISSIONARY WORK

Why should we think of standards for our work? First, because this work in reality is the work of God and what we do should be representative of Him, and second, because carelessness, indifference or haphazard work is too costly to humanity, to the church and to ourselves. Therefore, let us look again at the elements, from our own point of view, noted in the testimony of Oliver Cowdery and see how nearly they form the background for our own great task, "evangelizing the world and zionizing the church."

(a) The Need.

Today the world is "racked" and "distracted" and is resting upon "uncertainty," so much so that even the wisest of men are not able to foretell the outcome of the dilemma. Men need the gospel, its comfort and its hope, and the church must awaken to a sense of its responsibility to carry the gospel to them.

Permanent Prosperity

By B. A. May

Professor of Economics and Business Administration
Graceland College

THERE is an ancient proverb that the devil is God upside down. Economic maladjustment of recent years have so upset our political and social life that we may rightfully feel this ancient maxim may have some bearing on these days of seething world-unrest.

The root of world unrest is economic. Solve the Economic Problem and your riddles of world peace, crime, juvenile delinquency, and a host of other social maladies will rapidly approach the minima. The problem of want and poverty, however, and the economic struggle between classes and nations—in short, the Economic Problem—is a transitory and unnecessary muddle.

North America in particular has all the resources and technique for reducing the Economic Problem to a position of secondary importance—to the backseat, where it really belongs. All that is necessary to bring about this desirable culmination is the right kind of organization. We have the raw materials, the power and the technicians, but we lack in the proper type of mechanism with which to bring all three together and distribute the product.

Recent calculations show that the modern man is 630 times more able than was Adam. Buckminster Fuller calculates that by eliminating wasteful forms of work, it would be possible for four million Americans to produce the basic necessities for the entire nation by working only one hour per day. Charles P. Steinmetz, America's electrical genius of the last decade, predicted a two hour working day for the production of necessities and comforts. Last year the technocrats announced that a proper economic organization would make available an income of $20,000 per year for every family in North America. This would involve a sixteen hour week and complete utilization of our power and raw material resources and technical knowledge.

OUR RAW MATERIAL RESOURCES for reducing the Economic Problem to a backseat are more than sufficient. We have one billion acres of farm land; only fifty million acres of this farm land, however, would be necessary to grow all the sugar, wheat, oats, barley, cotton, potatoes, rye and corn now produced on 350 million acres. Operating on a three-shift basis we have present capacity to produce twice our normal textile requirements. In the shoe industry the plant capacity is 900 million pairs per year; we consume only 300 million pairs per year. We have an automobile plant capacity of 8 million cars per year and our capacity for producing radios is 15 million sets annually. In brief, the plant capacity of United States is a little more than double our normal consumption.

Any program designed to bring about stable recovery and eventually a society wherein a high standard of living is available for all must include four significant phases: one, a permanent public works program; two, a shorter work week; three, heavier income and inheritance taxes, and four, a planned economy.

We must not fool ourselves into believing that our present unemployment is temporary. If in 1935 we find the United States back to 1929 price levels there will still remain five or six million men out of work, due to technological advances made since 1929. Unemployment—under our present type of capitalistic system—is part and parcel of our economic order and is here to stay. Hence, the need for a permanent public works program.

The following equation will present clearly the situation:

$$P=T \times L \times R.$$

P represents production or the output of industry. T represents time and L labor, or the number of workers in industry. R equals the rate of work. New inventions, increasing efficiency in plant organization, and productive processes and many other technical skills constantly increase R. Hence, T and L (Time and Labor) must relatively decline as R continues to increase. The A. O. Smith Corporation, manufacturers of motor-car frames, shows the functioning of the above equation. Their old plant in turning out 10,000 frames per day required a force of 2,000. When they built their new plant only 200 men were needed to turn out 10,000 frames per day because of the installation of some up-to-the-minute devices. Later they doubled their production by increasing their working force only 10%.

In the face of this evidence, such prescriptions as a decreased work-week and a permanent public works program are clearly necessary, the cost of the latter being taken care of by means of heavier income and inheritance taxes. It is socially desirable that inheritance taxation should be made progressive not only as to size of the estate and the distance of the relationship of the heirs, but also as to the number of generations through which the estate has been transmitted. For example, when an estate passes from father to son it should be taxed moderately, but when the son bequeaths it to his heir a much heavier tax should be placed upon it. No bequests should be permitted to a third generation. Such a program not only would help defray expenses for public works but it would also assist in correcting the present inequality of wealth without materially discouraging men of ability from amassing a moderate-sized fortune.

A PLANNED ECONOMY is coming whether we like it or not. The only alternative is to slip back into the economic morass from which we seem to be gradually emerging. The principle of economic planning does not call for supervision of people's morals or modes of living. The object is to provide abundantly the population with food, clothing, and shelter. A National Planning Board must be set up. It must have the power to control both the financial structure and the technological processes. Furthermore, it must have available a nation-wide system of accounting, or in other words, a mechanism for the gathering of pertinent statistics. Practical functioning of the Board will necessitate regional planning boards, possibly twelve in number. The primary task of the National and Regional planning boards with their sub-administrative units would be to secure the supplies and move them to the proper distribution points, thereby coordinating community consumption with production. The problem of economic planning, however, is too gigantic to dismiss it with a mere paragraph.

The Economic Problem is temporary. We know how to build an economic system wherein food, clothing, shelter and the other good things in life will be available for all. The big problem is primarily the education of sufficient numbers to make the transition possible. Graceland College is conducting a fine laboratory in which students from all over America are studying these pertinent problems. The change is coming and many Graceland-trained young men and women are going to help bring it about. It is not unduly optimistic to believe that the Economic Problem will disappear within fifty years.

"All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name"

By L. B. M.

Generations of Christian peoples have loved and sung this hymn which is now one hundred and fifty-five years old. Today it continues to be a favorite among singing congregations. Its summons to worship Jesus "and crown him Lord of all" is all-inclusive: "All hail the power of Jesus' name!" "Let angels prostrate fall;" "Crown him, ye martyrs," "Ye chosen seed of Israel's race," and the sweeping fourth verse:

"Let every kindred, every tribe
On this terrestrial ball
To him all majesty ascribe,
And crown him Lord of all."

No one is left out. All are to worship the Lord. The power, dignity, and strength of this hymn have challenged wayward souls, have comforted the weak, have inspired those seeking hope. Caring for the hymn as we do, it is hard to believe that it was written by a man whose career, taken as a whole, was one of thwarted plans and disappointed hopes.

Latter Day Saints sing the hymn frequently, but I believe our appreciation of it will be increased if we know something of the hymn's setting—its author, his life and the times in which he lived.

Edward Perronet, son of Vincent Perronet, a clergyman of the Church of England, was yet in his teens when Methodism, the work of John and Charles Wesley, was born. Eleven years later he became a traveling Methodist preacher. He was a high-strung, sensitive young fellow full of hopes and ambitions. In 1756, he published The Mitre, a satire in verse ridiculing Episcopal church government. This he suppressed at the earnest appeal of both his father and the Wesleys. In 1771, he joined Lady Huntingdon's connection differing from Methodism in doctrine, but when the Countess remonstrated against his bitterness a short time later, he left her and ended his days as the pastor of a small independent congregation at Canterbury.

"All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" was written in 1779, and appeared anonymously a year later in The Gospel Magazine. At a later date Rippon added the stanza beginning, "Oh, that with yonder sacred throng," and gave the hymn a much more personal touch and application than Perronet.

Edward Perronet is gratefully remembered today for this one remarkable hymn.

"Toward Children's Day"

By Arthur Oakman

" . . . little children also may receive instruction before me as is pleasing unto me."—Doctrine and Covenants 55: 2.

THE MAIN FUNCTION of the church is to share the revelation of Divinity with all people. This means we ought to testify of what we have received both by word of mouth, and by the incarnation of God in our lives. Without a desire for people, a wanting them to share in the good things we have, we cannot claim to be the people of God. If the spirit of revelation possesses us, then its normal expression will be in missionary work. If the missionary spirit is lacking, then the spirit of revelation does not burn within our hearts and minds. A good Latter Day Saint cannot keep quiet about his God, he must exemplify and tell of His goodness.

SCOPE OF MISSIONARY ENDEAVOR

The father who knows God is eager to share his knowledge with his family. The mother who knows of His ways teaches them to her children. The church school director and pastor who has deep convictions and certainties about the place of the church and its program in the lives of those to whom they minister will find every available opportunity to teach an appreciation of the things that are revealed in the ministry of Jesus. There should be no limit either to the scope, the method, or to the intensity of our missionary activity. Everything within the church should be planned so as to make those participating more like Christ. Nothing has any place in the church otherwise. Sometimes we have thought of missionary work specifically as it is related to the work of the traveling minister whose duty it is to baptize nonmember adults. This is only a small part of our evangelistic endeavor.

While talking with a friend a man made the observation that he wanted his children to be of age before they were baptized. Hardly without comment his friend took him into the garden and showed him two garden beds. One was a bed of young roses, beautifully chosen.

"That is a beautiful bed of roses," said the man.

"Yes," replied the gardener.

"It must have required lots of hard work and careful cultivation."

"It did," rejoined his friend, "but look over here—here is a real garden."

"But that bed is a mass of weeds," said the man perplexed. "How is that a real garden?"

"That," said his friend thoughtfully, "is the kind of garden you want to make of the church. These weeds are mature, they cannot be changed, nor can this bed be weeded without being turned over and replanted."

Had we held our own natural increase over the period of the last twenty years, had we taught our children light and truth, and to "walk uprightly before the Lord," the total aspect of our church life might be vastly different today from what it is. When a normal child comes into a Latter Day Saint home and fails to receive those appreciations which would lead him to give his life in service to the church someone has blundered badly. There is no greater field for missionary endeavor than in our own homes among our own children.

The purpose of the church is to teach the revelation of God. A continuous process of conversion to our growing understanding of him. Children may be immersed without being baptized. They may be baptized, and yet later on, fail to be converted. Conversion is a process, not an act. One of the normal expressions of this conversion process is revealed in the number of people—children or adults—who are led to express their devotion to God and humanity by submitting to the ordinances of the church, baptism and confirmation. Decision Day should not be an end in itself, however, but an indication that the other ends of the gospel are being realized. The church has set June 10 as a definite time when children, especially shall express their desires to serve God by being baptized. In this venture, both the home and the church should combine their efforts.

DECISION THROUGH WORSHIP

Between now and then, the worship service in the junior department should be carefully planned so as to give an appreciation of the life of Jesus as it was expressed in his submission to baptism. Children ought to feel that in this act they are following a very dear friend, and by so doing are coming much closer to Him. Indeed this will actually be their experience if they are baptized with the right appreciations. The worship service is an excellent place for them to be made to feel this. Eight years' old is normally the time when heroes are being chosen for their appeals, and the influence of these heroes is being revealed in the lives they touch. There is no greater hero than Jesus. He can be made so appealing, if the people who plan the worship service of the children between now and Decision Day give careful attention to this objective.

Worship for children should be planned so as to touch their everyday life. No amount of philosophical talking, or memorization of the six principles as we are fond of reciting them, will necessarily help children to enter the waters of baptism with the spirit of Jesus. Their worship must be rooted in their experiences, so that the everyday things they come in contact with will speak to them of the necessity of walking with Jesus in obedience to God. If there is to be an adult baptismal service between now and then, it can be made an excellent opportunity of teaching these values. An alert worship leader will gain the "leads" for his services from the lives of the children under his care. Let the people who make talks in worship service be those who understand how to talk to children, people of rich spiritual conviction, who are willing to spend a week if necessary in preparation for a ten-minute talk. No worship service, especially a children's service, can be successful on a hit-or-miss basis. The suggestions in the Herald may be helpful. They need not be followed in an iron-clad way, but moulded so as to meet the particular needs of each group.

Provision should be made for special class work offered to those children of age who are not yet baptized. This work should touch such themes as, "What It Means to Follow Jesus"; "The Church a Place Where I can Serve"; "The Church As a Place Where I Can Share My Friendship With Jesus"; "The Way We Join the Church"; "Why We Are Baptized and Confirmed"; etc. This class work should be related with the worship of the juniors so as to ensure a unity of endeavor and impression upon the students.

THE HOME MAY HELP DECISIONS

There should be a continuous relationship between the church and the home in this matter of Decision Day. Some mothers refuse to allow their children to be baptized because, even though the children manifest a desire, the parents feel that they "do not know enough about it yet." This seems to be the most frequent objection manifest by some parents. The church may exercise a helpful ministry here through the teachers in the church school or through her general pastoral ministry. There are also superstitious parents who think that immersion is a charm and that just because a child is baptized on Decision Day the major responsibility of teaching in the home is discharged. Again the spiritual authorities of the branch should seek to minister to such, that their understanding of the place of the home is adjusted and enlarged. A parent-teacher meeting may be helpful in this direction.

In the sharing of experiences in home and church there is much profit.

PASTORAL MINISTRY

The pastor should see that his visiting officers are alert to the significance of Decision Day, and try to plan his visiting so that these families may be ministered to. The visiting officers should be chosen with care, because not every man has a gift of being tactful about his approach in this matter. Specific attention should be given each home involved, and suggestions as to approach, methods and objectives of the visit made. If the branch has a junior pastor, he should counsel and assist the pastor in motivating this work. Toward Decision Day should be a movement of the total activities of the branch.

We do not want a wholesale inundation of children for June—The number we baptize is not half so important as the way they are baptized. We do not want any baptisms at all in the church, either children or adults, unless people understand their need of baptism and the purposes for which the ordinance was instituted and the spirit it should express. The ordinances of the church are the acts in which people, children or adults, have an opportunity of expressing the power of Godliness. Rightly understood and rightly approached they actually become channels through which God comes into human life. They are unrighteous and ungodly to the extent they are participated in devoid of the Spirit of God. We should not hesitate to baptize children because they do not understand all there is to know about it. We ourselves are constantly finding new values in baptism. On the other hand we should not baptize them unless they are conscious of the place of the ordinance in their lives and have some appreciation of what they are doing.

We desperately need something to bring us to where the real battles lie. We may be militantly guarding emptiness and pompously sacrificing on dead altars, while all the time the battle center has moved on. The damnation and elimination of the Pharisees lay in this; they were earnest religious men, but they tithed mint and anise and cummin while a world of human need demanded justice and mercy. If religion is eliminated from the thinking of many, it will not be because it is bad but because it is not worth while.—E. Stanley Jones in Christ of Every Road.

The happiest people are those who do the most for others; the most miserable are those who do the least.—Booker T. Washington.

Mary, the Mother of Washington

By Edith M. Hower

MOTHER'S DAY, and thoughts of her whose presence makes the home. Shall we not, for just a moment, pause to give honor to her who ranks among the most worthy and the most illustrious of our famous American mothers: Mary, the mother of Washington.

More than one thousand books have been written about George Washington based upon his lineage, his character and his achievements, but not many have felt the urge to seek for data relating to the life of his wonderful mother.

Mary Ball Washington lived in a time when the life of a woman merged in that of her family, and we have been content that the mother of our first president should bask in the reflected rays of her son's glory. But let us look briefly into the very interesting events of the life of Washington's mother, and we shall learn the secret of George Washington's success as a man of national and social affairs.

MARY BALL was descended from an old English family who belonged to the landed gentry of England, having the right to call themselves gentlemen. Her first American ancestor, Colonel William Ball, came to Virginia in 1650, establishing himself in Lancaster County, on the Rappahannock River, naming his estate, Millenbeck. Being a very public-minded man, he was appointed colonel in the militia by Governor Spotswood, in 1710. Colonel Ball was united in marriage to a very popular young lady of Williamsburg, to which union was born two sons, William and Joseph. To William was bequeathed the family estate, Millenbeck, while Joseph received Epping Forest, named for a notable hunting park near the English homestead of the Balls.

The coat of arms of the Balls is a crest showing a lion rampant, with a ball in his paws. The motto is a Latin inscription, (Coelumque tueri), meaning: "And look to Heaven," or, "Seek the things which are above."

Mary Ball, the daughter of Joseph Ball, and his second wife, Mrs. Mary Montague Johnson, was born in 1708. When Mary was three years old her father died, and in his will he bequeathed to his little girl, later called, The Rose of Epping Forest, four hundred acres of land lying in the freshes of the Rappahannock. This was a part of his patent, of one thousand acres.

IN THE DAYS when Mary Ball was growing from her childhood to her woman's estate, the colleges were not open for the education of women, but under the mother's careful training the little Mary was given all of the educational advantages available to girls of her time. She was taught all of the arts of the gentlewoman of that period—to dance the minuet, curtsy, to know the catechism, embroider, paint, sew a fine seam, and be a fine horse-woman and to handle her slaves—these and the skill in housewifery were placed far above book learning, and in all of these accomplishments Mary Ball became wisely and artfully proficient.

After the death of Mary's father, Mrs. Ball married Captain Richard Hewes, a vestry-man of Saint Stephens parish, and Mary and her mother left Epping Forest to live in the home of the stepfather at Sandy Point. Captain Hewes lived but a short time after his marriage, and his wife passed away soon after his death, leaving Mary an orphan at thirteen.

We gather from the provisions set forth in the will of her mother, that Mary Ball had always lived in a state of very comfortable circumstances, such as were found only among people of affluence and high social standing of that time.

Perhaps, of all the tributes laid at the feet of Mary Ball Washington, none has been more sincerely significant of her than legacies of her mother's last will and testament, written, as they were, entirely unconscious of her daughter's future distinction.

In her will, Mrs. Hewes first calls on God to witness her will, then she gives and bequeaths her soul to God, and then proceeds to name the articles of the will which she wishes Mary to have as a legacy. She then chose John Johnson, her son by a former marriage, and her esteemed friend, Captain George Eskridge, as executors, and appointed Mary to be under the guardianship of Captain Eskridge during her minority.

Though there were older children in the family it is quite evident that Mary was a favorite, not only with her mother, but also with her stepbrother and sister, they also naming the winsome little step-sister in their wills. Even a stepbrother-in-law esteemed her so highly that at his death he bequeathed to the Rose of Epping Forest, his dapple gray riding horse.

So we see that at the age of eighteen, Mary Ball, though not rich, was well endowed with Virginia land, had several good riding horses, a handsome saddle, her own maid, some jewels and enough suitable household articles for any young lady of her social standing.

Captain Eskridge, Mary's guardian, who lived at Sandy Point and who had a daughter of Mary's age, was a very prominent lawyer; and, dividing her time as she did between the home of her guardian and that of her stepsister, Mrs. Bonum, her associations were among the very best of the colony's residents.

AS MARY grew into young womanhood, her beauty and cultural graces blossomed forth like the unfolding of a lovely rose, and she was called, "The Belle of the Northern Neck." So desirable a young lady, of course, had many suitors, but Mary Ball remained heart-whole until she was past twenty-two years of age and people were wont to predict spinsterhood for her. But she met and married the genial Captain Augustine Washington, a widower and an old neighbor, and she went to live in her husband's home at Bridges Creek, which he had made beautiful for his first wife, Jane Butler, who had been dead for two years. The innate fineness of Mary Ball's character made it possible for her to assume gracefully the duties devolving upon her, and she soon fitted herself into her new life and made a real home for her husband and her stepchildren.

Mary Ball Washington was an expert horse woman, and as she sat upon her fine horse with her stylish saddle, dressed in her English habit of scarlet cloth, very wide in skirt and with a tight fitting bodice; her loving face beaming under a black beaver hat with long, handsome black plume, she presented a beautiful, distinguished and graceful figure as she paced through the lanes and roads of the countryside.

SHE WAS, indeed, a remarkable woman, and in after years, typified the highest type of American motherhood, and was very happy in her lovely home (Wakefield), at Bridges Creek. This property was one purchased by John Washington for his homestead soon after coming to America. It was situated on a point of land formed by two creeks and the Potomac River, with its lawns sloping down to the river's edge, and having great stretches of forest for a background. The house was large and comfortable with commodious rooms and great fireplaces having Dutch tiles in blue, and on them were biblical scenes which we may imagine formed the theme for many a bedtime story for the Washington children. Mary had, with the rest of her responsibilities, a staff of slaves to direct in the domestic affairs of her house.

In looking over the contents of closets, storerooms and shelves, Mary became acquainted with the habits of the first Mrs. Washington, who had been mistress of Captain Washington's home for thirteen years. She found some of her books, among which was a copy of Mathew Hale's Contemplations, Moral and Divine. On the flyleaf she found the name of the first wife, "Jane Washington," and at once wrote beneath it, "and Mary Washington." She put this book among her most prized collections and studied it all her life. From this book Mary gleaned a knowledge of the methods used by the children's mother in their training, and the beauty and depth of the great soul of Washington's mother, may be understood when we find that she took up the threads of everyday life, which the first wife had laid down at death, and went forward with her system in the training of the children she had left motherless.

Heaven came close to the earth for Mary when, on the 22d of February, 1732, at beautiful Wakefield, her first son was born. George Washington was a red-headed, blue-eyed little boy, sturdy and high tempered as a boy should be, especially a boy who was to make such a record in life as did Mary Ball's first baby. When he was a few weeks old, George's adoring parents took him to visit some relatives and while there, on the 3d of April, 1732, according to the custom of the Episcopal Church, of which the Washingtons were members, the baby was christened. For this very important ceremony, Mary had prepared an elegant christening robe of creamy brocade, lined with a soft rose pink silk of the very finest quality. It is a wonder the baby George ever grew up, so cumbered was he with godparents, or, was it because of all this safeguard about his youthful years that he was brought to so successful a maturity. Who could have prepared the glorious future of the chubby babe in his fond mother's arms? He was named for his mother's beloved guardian, George Eskridge. The beautiful christening robe and the silver bowl, used as a font are, to this day, in the National Museum at Washington, District of Columbia, and may be seen by those to whom the relics of our beloved country are precious.

Mary Ball, in marrying Captain Augustine Washington, became the mistress of a large plantation, and their social station in life and the numerous relatives who loved to go visiting, according to the custom of those times, demanded that she entertain extensively, and there was drawn about their fire-side and board, the very elite of colonial society. It was in this noble atmosphere that George's first years were spent. Meanwhile, in 1733, Mary's motherly heart was again made to rejoice at the birth of a little daughter, whom she named, Betty.

CAPTAIN WASHINGTON, believing the air about Wakefield was not suited to the health of his family, moved them to the Epsewasson plantation, a portion of the land grant given to Colonel John Washington, the immigrant, by Lord Culpeper, for his efforts in colonization in the New World. The location of the place which Captain Washington chose for the new home is thought to be the same as that occupied by the Mount Vernon Mansion. Here, under the wise supervision of Mary in the training and education of her children, George and Betty grew into a healthy, happy boy and girl. But feeling that he wished his children to enjoy the privilege of a higher education, Captain Washington brought home with him from one of his trips to England, a tutor, whose name was William Grove, and to him was entrusted the education of the Washington children. But Mary never relaxed her supervision over the children, and was personally concerned with their religious training, so they grew into manhood and womanhood with deeply religious natures, having a great reverence for God and appreciating and prizing the higher and better things of life. They were taught the value and pleasure of outdoor sports, and one of the joys of Mary's life was to ride with her little son, with her hand on his bridle, until he was old enough to handle his pony alone.

WHEN GEORGE was seven years of age, Captain Washington again moved his family to a new home, this location being on the Rappahannock River, opposite Fredericksburg, in Stafford County, about a mile below Falmouth. It was here, in 1743, when George was eleven years old, that the first great tragedy of his life occurred. The big, genial, lovable Captain Washington died, and George was bereft of his father. The manner in which the grief-stricken Mary assumed the responsibilities of the future are indicative of the great reserve forces stored away in her wonderful being, for she brought to this mighty task an almost spartanlike attitude. I never read of the wonderful mother of Washington that my mind does not revert to our own beloved Emma Hale Smith. They were so alike in mind, in spirit and in body, and their tasks in life were so similar, for to Emma was given the divinely appointed office of bearing, nurturing and developing the prophet of God in the latter days, while to Mary Ball Washington was given an also divinely appointed task of bearing, nurturing, training and developing the splendid being who should become the great leader of men, the first president of the New Union and the Father of His Country. Unconsciously, George Washington was engaged in the task of preparing a place for the building of the Zion of God in the latter days, and under the guidance of the enlightening Spirit of the Almighty, he went deep and built his groundwork on the bedrock of eternal truth and righteousness, that those who should come after him might have a firm foundation upon which to rear the superstructure of the New Republic. By prophetic vision he saw far into the future and discerned that this New World would reach out and embrace the islands of the sea. He also saw, with a pained concern, the dark shadow of the fearful conditions that have swept over his beloved country in this troubled age. If he could return to walk up and down the length and breadth of this land:

His head would bow in sadness,
His heart would grieve full sore,
Should his feet return to stray,
By Potomac's murmuring shore.

It was in these sad days, after the death of her husband, that Mary found comfort and strength in her life-long custom of rising at dawn to spend the first hour of the day in prayer and meditation, which gave her mind the proper poise for the family worship and the strength to meet the events of the day. At the death of his father, Mary required George to conduct the family worship, and offer the blessing at table.

The education in domestic and independent customs, which characterized the Virginia matrons in those far-away days, prepared the widowed Mary, when she found herself confronted by the cares of her young family, and the responsibilities of conducting the affairs of the farm home, to face, calmly and serenely, the stern realities of a life, which, by their nature, claimed the aid and control of the stronger sex. But this wonderful woman, by methods of education and discipline most peculiar, was able to form in the character of her son, during his youthful years, those great and essential qualities which led him forward to his glorious afterlife.

The home, in which the Washington children grew up, was a pattern of perfect order, for Mary, always the mistress, was careful that the light-heartedness of youth, though not suppressed or condemned, was tempered by a reverence and a restraint, and was kept within the confines of moderation and the propriety suitable to their station in life. So Mary taught to her son that most essential lesson—obedience—which prepared him to become the future commanding chief. Never did her reserve store of authority depart from her, but always, even after her children grew to their adult estate, did they remember that she was their mother and that it was she who had given them being and had cared for them in their helpless childhood, and by her wisdom had brought them to an honorable and even glorious life. Even after George became the great chief did he yield to his much revered mother the most implicit and loving obedience.

WHILE Mary Ball Washington was a woman of so high culture and splendid courage, she was also very plain, dignified, sincere and strong

Lesson Eight—May 20

The Fall of Babylon

IN FEUDAL TIMES power to influence the life of the community or to decide the economic fate of others was derived from direct ownership of land. Land ownership or control was the principal social determinant always in a simple industrial society. But in our complex industrial society, credit control has superceded land control as a social determinant. The reason is because now we are more dependent upon the working of our financial organization and less upon primary production.

Now, primary production—i. e. agriculture, lumbering, mining, fishing, and the handicrafts—add naturally to the wealth of a people and in this way promote well-being. It is difficult to imagine a people distressed by such activities. But concerning many secondary business activities, and chiefly the money business, the conviction of their evil effects is forced upon us. And just because the money business as we carry it on obstructs not only the flow but also the production of goods; and because its effects are so rapidly cumulative and disastrous; it is destined to come to an end. Babylon must fall.

This does not mean that money in itself is an evil. Certainly when properly used it facilitates the exchange of the products of industry, and gives us a convenient measure of values in trade. But is is not money that concerns us in this discussion; but the character of institutions—the behavior of peoples. And current literature and oral discussion is so pregnant with exposures of the moral badness of monetary and financial institutions as to make a detailed discussion on our part unnecessary.

What we may need to stir up our pure minds about is the truth that all ungodly institutions ultimately must perish. And the effects of Babylon's monetary institutions are so disastrous and so universal that they must fall.

THE TIME OF BABYLON'S FALL

Until the age of mass production and a division of labor on a world wide scale, it was possible for both persons and peoples to go on promoting their own well-being through their own industry, even though monetary institutions were bad. But the industrial revolution, the advancement in the arts and sciences, is bringing our monetary institutions to judgment. And while counsel for the defendant is stubbornly resisting the prosecution, the judgment of the race is predetermined by the necessities of the case. And the verdict that finally shall be rendered is the message of this prophecy: "Babylon shall fall."

In other words, the time of Babylon's fall may be inferred from the time of the reign of God; for it is the shift to The Kingdom mode of government that shall mark the end of Babylon. "And I heard the voice of a great multitude . . . saying, Allelulah! For the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." (Revelation 19: 6.) Allelulah! The good news. The Kingdom has come.

Babylon has not yet fallen. However, H. G. Wells and many others are saying that civilization is collapsing. But whether Babylon is falling or is yet to fall, the time of her fall must be judged not to have been before our day, for it is but a few years since the merchants of Babylon attained the heights of their power.

NOT THE AGE OF MONARCHY

That "the kings of the earth", i. e. those whose concern is to manage the affairs of peoples, the governors, should stand afar off, helpless, and weeping, is itself an index to the time when Babylon shall fall. The factors in her fall could not have brought about her fall in the ages of monarchy. It is difficult enough, even in this age of democracy, to bring Babylon's institutions to judgment. In spite of the world-wide attack upon monetary institutions, they still dominate the present order of society; laws still are passed in her favor; democracy has not yet had its day. But when democracy's day does come, it is inconceivable that Babylon shall not fall.

This is an age of universal culture; peoples are gaining knowledges and skills through experience in self-government; a new and deepening sense of social justice is being born; and it is certain that when these forces of regeneration have done their work, Babylon shall fall.

THE GATHERING HOSTS

And don't forget that Technocracy and Syndicalism and the rest are movements born of the servitude to which peoples have been reduced by Babylon's reign. Essentially all these isms are revolts against Babylon. They are modern developments. Their birth coincides exactly with the time set for Babylon's fall.

And last of all, though not least of all, is the spread and deepening of the sentiment which we call zionism: the ism of the Restoration movement. An ism which has within itself power to destroy Babylon by the very force of its inherent worth.

A NEW LIGHT

The cause of Babylon's fall is not set out explicitly in John's prophecy. But the first verse of his revelation says: "I saw another angel come down from heaven. . . and the earth was lightened with her glory." Section one of Doctrine and Covenants may throw some light on John's statement. Verse four, in particular, is a warning to the world of the consequences that attend Babylonian misbehavior; and it puts the prophet of the Restoration Movement in the light of an evangel (or angel) whose mission it is to lighten the world with God's glory.

Whether the prophet of the Restoration Movement is the angel of which John spoke; or whether that "angel" is a symbol of The Knowledge of the Lord, or of the Truth (see Isaiah 11: 9), which is to spread over the whole earth as the waters cover the sea, it matters not. What does matter is that the minds of men shall be flooded with light; they shall come to understand The Kingdom-building business. That this is The Age of this enlightenment seems evident. But even if a brighter age is yet to follow, and other means of enlightenment are to be promoted, it is certain that it is this enlightenment that will result in the political and industrial changes that will mark Babylon's fall.

SELF CONSUMPTION

"The merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more." That is to say, Babylon's subsistence shall be no more. It will be with Babylon as is would be with our own bodies if deprived of nourishment; they would perish by their own self-consumption. The "flow" of the nations to Zion's mode of government (see Isaiah 2: 2) will leave Babylon forsaken. Her "merchandise" or financial "services" will have no further value. The foundations of Babylon will be no more. And, as a consequence, she shall fall.

Already, "the merchants of these things," "which were made rich by her," are worrying about the next trick to turn to keep the business of Babylon going. While financial interests dominate legislation, more tricks can be turned. But it begins to look as if the trick-turning business is soon to come to an end. And then Babylon shall be no more.

In place of confusion, wastes, and injustices, righteousness and truth shall reign. The bands of wickedness shall be loosed. The heavy burdens shall be lifted. The oppressed shall go free.

Every yoke shall be broken. No more shall men go hungry in the midst of plenty. The poor shall be properly housed. "Light shall break forth as the morning." (See Isaiah 58:8.) "And thine health shall spring forth speedily. And men shall say with the prophet, John: "Allelujah! The Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

MARY, THE MOTHER OF WASHINGTON

in the possession of the old-fashioned, homely virtues of her time. She was devoid of anything like vanity or ostentation or frivolity, but was quite reticent though free from self-consciousness, to the degree that she was a thoroughbred lady in her homespun, and in this plain garb as much at ease as though dressed in the habiliment of royalty. Then, too, the poise of mind and soul, which she had practiced all of her life, gave to Washington's mother a perfect control over her temperament, so that she never gave way to hysterical excitement, but under all circumstances, found it possible to observe a dignified reserve. Even though she was so almost spartan-like, Mary Washington's nature glowed with a finely controlled fervor, which was inherent within her son and became in him a power for endurance, a passion for command and an ambition to take part in the daring adventures of the Colonial wars, and finally developed within him the qualities of the great leader and commander of men. All people, finding themselves in the presence of either the stately Mary Ball Washington, or her famous son, felt the force of the fiery energy which was their very natures. It was from his mother that Washington inherited his features, his strong self-reliance, courage to endure long continued suspense and heavy responsibilities, and the ability to face unpopularity and misrepresentation without losing heart. Also, from his mother, came his great executive ability and the supreme power which was his to awe and control others.

Mary Washington was the mother of six children, four sons and two daughters—George, Elizabeth (Betty), Samuel, John Augustine, Charles, and Mildred, the last dying at the age of fourteen months. So strong was the mother's influence over her children that they always addressed her as "Honored Madam," which was the formal fashion of those times. Though she was so austere, Mary loved her family and was devoted to them. At times, when in pursuit of adventure, George was guilty of boyish pranks natural to a boy of his temperament, she was wise and farseeing and secured from him his own story, and forgave the act because he told the truth, thus fostering in the growing boy the code of honor.

MARY was very much alive to the dangers in the military service, and did not want George to enter the war, and, though he had been earning his living since he was sixteen years old, he still deferred to his mother's wishes in his affairs, until it came to the question of his military service. She suffered a great deal of anxiety while he was with Braddock. The distances were so great and means of communication so inadequate, that she very thankfully received a letter from him telling her of his welfare and his miraculous escapes. She hoped that would be the end of his war experiences, but when she learned that he was about to enter upon another expedition, she drove all the way to Mount Vernon to try to persuade him to give up the idea. He did not give her his answer at that time, but after she returned to her home, she received a letter from him in which he addressed her as "Honored Madam," and said that if it was within his power to avoid going into the war again he would do so, but if the command was pressed upon him by the general voice of the country, and offered upon such terms as could not be objected to, he thought it would reflect dishonor upon him to refuse and that, he felt, would give her greater pain than for him to accept an honorable command, and he assured her that he would accept a command upon no other terms than that of honor.

Washington's mother was greatly pleased over his marriage to Martha, and was delighted when the bridal pair stopped to visit her as they traveled to Mount Vernon, which became the home of the George Washington family. She hoped so much that the wife would keep George out of the war and induce him to stay at home, but, for once, Mary's ambitions for her splendid son were ill-founded, for his destiny was the army, the command of men and finally, the haloed office of, "Father of His Country."

Mary enjoyed her life on her farm on the banks of the Rappahannock, her son George had presented her with a comfortable, low-swung carriage, a good driving team and the best of trappings, and it is said that her one man servant sat very stiffly erect as, neatly liveried, he served as coachman. Mary used her carriage as she made her daily visits to the different parts of her estate, directing the work and giving personal supervision to her crops, and for her visits to relatives and friends. She engaged in a great deal of charity and church work, and was active in the social affairs of her little country community, and when driving out on these visits she wore a dark, broad-brimmed straw hat with low crown, tied under her chin with black strings. Her son George had given her a very splendid purple cloth cloak, lined with silk shag, which she wore in winter. This cloak is mentioned in her will as follows: "Item. I give and devise to my daughter-in-law, Hannah Washington, my purple cloth coat lined with shag."

Mary became godmother to many of her grandchildren, and sponsored the children of other relatives and friends. Upon such very important occasions, she wore a handsome black brocade silk over a satin petticoat, and her ceremonial garments were often called into service as there were many weddings, christenings, church meetings, sick visits, charity calls and relief work. She enjoyed frequent visits from the children of various relatives, and to keep herself from suffering with loneliness, she kept continually busy with some kind of work or reading.

Before George left Virginia, he purchased for his mother a large and comfortable house, with garden and lots, in the city of Fredericksburg, near the home of her son-in-law, Fielding Lewis, called Kenmore, and both houses are still standing.

While Washington's mother was a sincere American patriot, it was with much regret and considerable apprehension, that she saw her son enter the great struggle for independence. As the war progressed and the anxiety became more pressing, she spent much time seated on a large rock near her home where she read her Bible and the book, Mathew Hale's Contemplations, and devoted herself to prayer and silent meditation. She was continually knitting and making garments for the soldiers, and when the news of the successful crossing of the Delaware was brought to her, she received her friends' felicitations with a gentle calmness, expressing pleasure at the encouraging outlook for her beloved America. It was with true paternal pride that she heard her glorious son praised for his splendid leadership. If the news from the battlefield was bad, she would sustain her own courage by saying, "The mothers and wives of brave men must be brave women." Her daughter, Mrs. Lewis, had four sons in the war, and one day when the news rung a cry of anguish from her, Mary murmured, "The sister of the Commanding General must be an example of fortitude and faith." Whatever the news from the war, Mary never lost her serene calmness and was often heard to say, "George is apt to succeed in anything he undertakes. He was always a good boy."

After George entered the war, his mother did not see him again until, accompanied by Rochambeau, he passed through Fredericksburg on his way to the Yorktown campaign. The news of the surrender of Cornwallis, was received by Mary with a feeling of great thankfulness, for she felt that it presaged peace and independence for her native land.

STANDARDS FOR PASTORAL MISSIONARY WORK

A PLEASING STORY is told of Lafayette's visit to Fredericksburg, for the purpose of calling upon and paying his respects to the mother of Washington. Guided by one of Mary's grandchildren, the marquis found her busily at work in her garden. In her graciously serene manner, devoid of embarrassment, Mary greeted her distinguished visitor, and turning toward the house said, "I can make you welcome to my poor home without the parade of changing my dress." Then her maid served spiced gingerbread and home-made wine. Upon leaving, Lafayette asked Mary for her blessing, which she gave with her characteristic sweet gentleness.

When General Washington received word that he had been elected to the office of President, he went, on horseback at once, to see his mother, and then left immediately for New York. He found her in very poor health. An accidental blow on the breast had developed into cancer, which caused her several years of great suffering, and George found her greatly altered by the ravages of her affliction. He told her that so soon as his official duties would permit, he would hasten back to her, but she replied that he would see her no more, her age and her illness would soon take her out of this life. Then she gave him her blessing, and urged him to hasten on to the fulfillment of the great destiny which God seemed to have designed for him. So grief-stricken was General Washington at what he knew to be their last farewell, that for a while he could not collect his thoughts in a manner to think correctly. Mary died on August 25, 1789, and to the great sorrow of her illustrious son, he could not be present at her funeral. In paying tribute to his mother, Washington said that he owed to her all of his moral, intellectual and physical training, and he also gave her credit for all of his achievements and successes. Mary's greatest tribute lies in the immortal fame of her son, and so long as she lived he never failed to reverence and honor the maternal hand that led him to manhood.

To commemorate the last resting place of the wonderful mother of Washington, a grateful and loving public placed over her grave a monument with the simple, but eloquent inscription, "Mary, the Mother of Washington."

You can buy a lot of happiness with a mighty small salary, but fashionable happiness always costs just a little more than you're making.—George Horace Lorimer.

The time to work is now. The way to succeed is to forget yesterday, keep busy today, and expect great things tomorrow.—Selected

(b) Expectancy.

God wants us to expect big things of Him and to act accordingly. Saints have always anticipated the Lord's return; they have had hope of seeing Zion in her perfection and beauty; they have desired to participate in building the Temple and have longed for an inheritance in the eternal City. These and many other things they expected of God furnished dynamic and power for effectual church work. Check the status of our own expectancy with relation to these things. Has it diminished any? If so, what effect has it had in our church work?

(c) Revelation.

Whenever the voice of God ceases to be heard in the church, that ceases to be his church. The need of continued revelation is apparent. The church cannot build for stability or character without it, for it is the foundation and the life of the church. In light of this fact, what relationship exists in our obeying the revelations of the past and our ability to listen attentively to the voice of God to the church today? Do we lose our capacity for inspiration by failing to do the will of God?

(d) The Message.

The revelation of the gospel in its fullness is the message of God to humanity. It is the "good news" of the kingdom, and in it are the principles of truth by which men may become free indeed. The preaching of the gospel to a very needy world is the stewardship of the church.

(e) Priesthood Authority.

One distinctive feature of our church is its claim to Divine authority to represent God through priesthood in administering to the spiritual need of humanity. This right of priesthood authority is our heritage in the church and the most serious attention to the discharge of its duties should be given by those who have received it from God.

IDEALS AND RESPONSIBILITIES IN PASTORAL MISSIONARY WORK

Having, therefore, these elements of spiritual power and authority as a background for our work, we must move forward intelligently to accomplish the work of God. Branches cannot expect the church, under present conditions, to send them missionaries, so this task must be shared by members of the local ministry and laity.

Experience teaches us that a movement so far reaching in its intent cannot be carried far forward by spasmodic storms of enthusiasm. Its success will depend upon adequate vision and deep moving currents of spiritual conviction and increasing experience. There has, unfortunately, crept into some of our thinking the idea that missionary work is not the responsibility of the branch but that its only task is the nurture and care of the Saints. Where this point of view predominates there is little probability of arousing immediate interest in missionary work but we can begin to correct it by teaching the younger men of the ministry to appreciate both the missionary and pastoral points of view. Changing the lives and thinking of people is not an easy task, it cannot be accomplished over night, and we may be thankful that it cannot, for while we may not always make the progress that we should hope for, growth is the thing for which we should persistently strive. It may be that our missionary movement will have a small beginning but it should increase in strength and efficiency as experience helps us to create greater opportunities.

One of the common faults of our local organization is that the willing man is over worked. We expect him to be church school superintendent, sing in the choir, visit in his priesthood work, preach occasionally, attend mid-week classes and take care of other incidental tasks that may arise. No man can be efficient with his mind burdened with many diverse things. It would seem wise therefore, whenever it is possible, to assign individuals work which will require the same line of thought, for instance, those who are giving the missionary task should confine their efforts to this line of work. They may deliver tracts, prepare missionary sermons, visit prospects, look for new openings and other things which naturally falls into the missionary line of thinking. This will materially increase their efficiency for they will be occupied with problems relating to that work and it will make them alert to sense improved ways of doing it. This is true of all other lines of branch work.

The growth of the church is not determined by the great number baptized, but by the quality of our converts. We are not sent out just to baptize people, but we are sent out to find material with which to build the Kingdom of God. It is not a question of how many people attend our church, or how many young people are at the services, as much as it is a question of what we are doing to their lives and how they are reacting to the call of the church. It is very unwise to baptize a man simply because he asks for it without understanding his purpose. There may be several reasons why he wants to join which do not meet membership requirements. He may want to join to satisfy his wife, or to have the opportunity to play on the basket ball team. He may think it an opportunity to get material help or there may be a dozen reasons of like character without his seeing the real value of the church. God wants men and women who are potential Zion builders for it is this material that shall build the Kingdom. We

Play Fair With Your Child

By Harley A. Morris

From parents one sometimes hears this expression: "I am not going to teach my child anything about religion. When he is grown will be time enough to make his own choices." Fortunately, this expression is heard more frequently from those outside the church—seldom from those within. Yet in an important way, church members frequently take attitudes, form habits of conduct and live lives in their homes that are as unfair to their children as is the thoughtless remark just quoted.

Whatever we know or sincerely believe about life, God, religion, or anything, for that matter, is the acquirement of centuries. That these truths of whatever nature prevail from one generation to another is proof of their worthiness. By neglecting the teaching of them to our children, we deprive them of the experiences of the ages in this phase of their lives. Such action is unfair and unworthy of parenthood.

Are you playing fair with your child in your attitude toward life? Your teachings concerning life may be faultless. You may tell him of the worthwhileness of endeavor; of the necessity for preparation if he would be ready to grasp future opportunities, of problems that will need solution. You may educate him; and when all this is done, you may still have been unfair with him. How?

What are your attitudes toward life? Are you optimistic? Do you expect the triumph of right? If you do, with all your soul, face the future with faith, you still must carry that attitude into your home with you. Your child must feel that while the future will bring its problems, there shall also come the opportunities for solution. The parent who habitually worries himself and the family about a remotely possible calamity is unfair with his child. Teaching to the contrary will not cover up the object-lesson before him. Perhaps we need to differentiate between worry and preparation, caution, thrift, and other admirable qualities that look toward the future. Worry, Webster says, is a state of disturbance. Thrift and these other positive qualities, on the other hand, bespeak of calmness: Visioning the future with its possibilities for opportunities and adversities, the soul sets about a preparation. Joseph, in Egypt, never worried about the coming seven years of famine. He prepared for them. Worry is not forethought or foresight. Worry is the product of a misdirected imagination deprived of the light of faith. It can and does become a habit that works adversely to progress because it uses up so much vital energy that might otherwise be utilized in constructive activity.

Play fair with your child. Robert Burns says:

"But human bodies are sie fools,
For all their colleges and schools.
That when nae real ills perplex them,
They make enon themsels to vex them";

If this describes your nature—if worry is habitual with you and you cannot overcome it—go off alone to indulge it. Don't carry your worries into your family circle. Let the children grow up with a normal faith in divine providence.

What are your ideals and ambitions for yourself and your family? Have you evaluated life so that you seek those things that are eternal? The apostles displeased Christ by seeking honors in the kingdom of God rather than opportunities for service. We can do the same thing today.

Listen to a group of ten-year-olds boasting about the importance of their fathers. Honor, authority, physical or mental greatness, money—all these things will be mentioned in exaggerating terms, but not one word will be said about the good they do, the service they render. We laugh when we happen onto such a discussion. We say, "How typically boyish." But we never wonder why it is "typically boyish" to mention some things and omit others. We have forgotten the glowing moment when we recounted to the family how we told somebody or other "what's what." The boy has not forgotten. He sees his father in the halo of a hero, and seeking something to bolster up his ideal, these are the things he hears. He does not mention the other: services and the like, because he does not hear about them. They are not discussed around the family circle.

What does your boy say of you to this friends? Remember, you are his ideal. The attitude toward life that you assume in your home will very likely be his attitude when he reaches maturity. Are you playing fair with him?

Honor, authority, money, glory—these things and their attainment have no place in the family discussion. Christ came to serve. He spurned glory. We are no better. If our own nature continually urges us toward these transitory achievements, let us hide that nature from our children and instead hold up before them the ideals of service.

STANDARDS FOR PASTORAL MISSIONARY WORK

have heard the old saying when an undesirable member has been discovered within our ranks, "The net cast into the sea brings in all kinds of fish." It is true that the preaching of the gospel will attract men and women of all kinds but we should think a man peculiar to carry home fish which are of no use to him, simply because his net caught them—he casts them back into the sea. This matter of selection should be done with much prayer and fasting, looking into the lives of the candidates, and remembering that it is God who should add to the church such as should be saved. Let Him direct us more with wisdom and intelligence in this important matter.

We have not attempted to deal with methods in pastoral missionary work but have tried to view the background of the missionary movement, to see its spirit and objective, and to fit the branch into its place in the great missionary task today. Some standards have been briefly cited; all of which we hope will be helpful.

PLAY FAIR WITH YOUR CHILD

Two parents were recently discussing a musical career with their son. Urging him to give more diligence to his practicing, one said: "Think of the money you can make when you become a great musician." What a pity! The very attitude of self-seeking will rob that boy of the opportunity of ever becoming a great musician. Greatness is still measured by service, even in this materialistic age. The great businesses, the enduring businesses of this country, were builded on a superior service. Play fair with your child. Give him a chance to succeed by instilling in him the spirit of serving.

What are your convictions concerning marriage? Do you believe in its value? Do you believe in the family as the unit of society? Most everyone will answer in the affirmative to these questions. But are you playing fair with your child? Young people today do not marry with the same spontaneity they once did. Why? One young man told me he probably would never marry—"Marriage is all right if you get the right girl," he said. "But if you don't, it's quarrelling and finally divorce. I am not going to take a chance." We laugh that off. We say, he just has not met the right girl yet. That is probably true. But the fact remains: his attitude toward the conjugal relationships is not healthy. And who is to blame? Newspaper and movies, to some extent, perhaps. But if his own family life had been congenial, their influences would have been minor.

Every parent knows better than to quarrel before his children. He knows that it militates against essential discipline. Still too many continue to flare up. But show me a home where harmony prevails and I will show you children who grow up looking forward to the establishment of a home of their own—outside influences to the contrary. The divorce disease is contagious and, to an extent, hereditary. All the teaching in the world about the sanctity, and eternity of marriage will not atone for one example of a broken home if that example is in your own family.

Any discussion of incompatibility on the part of married relatives or friends has no place in the presence of growing children. The assumption so often indulged in that these things can be discussed with freedom because children do not understand is often erroneous. And since there can be no positive value in such a discussion, why take the risk of giving the child an unbalanced view of so sacred a relationship. A positive home-life, besides being fair play with the child, will react toward a richer, more joyous association between parents.

A Consecrated Life

By Mrs. Clyde Price

"I have chosen you and ordained you that you should go and bring forth fruit."

There is no life so unhappy and discontented as a life that is aimless. For life, to be satisfying, must have a goal, the path to which leads upward. To one that aims low success can never come, for it is only when we approach near to that which God intended, that is the very best within us, that real success can be obtained.

We, in our natures, are not altogether earthly. There is in us a nature that craves to be in tune with heaven. If we give our life, or if we work to satisfy this craving for God, it will bring us soul rest which everyone desires. That is why we should think about the "Consecrated Life"—the life given in humble, willing service to God.

Now the service of God is counted only that service which comes from a sincere and consecrated heart. For we are to be fully the Lord's for all time. Not giving a portion of our time and affection to the world and sin, and to the following of selfish purposes.

This kind of life is expected of every true Christian. No person can live a conscientious, Christian life long without finding such a life necessary.

God chooses his helpers by his own wisdom and these he calls for the work he would have them do.

There are many kinds of work that are the Lord's. One is work among the poor and needy, visiting them, especially the sick and ministering to their needs. This work is to be found everywhere, and for those who will do it humbly and gladly there is a rich reward in heaven.

Another service is to be found in music, especially in song, the singing of praises from the heart. God has given some voices to be used in winning souls to him and in encouraging those who may be down-hearted. This is a wonderful work.

Some are called to preach the gospel. There is great responsibility in this calling, and much will-power is needed to make it successful in the fullest sense.

The most wonderful calling of all would seem to be that of a missionary. For in no other work can one so fully give his all for Jesus.

If you are called to help in this great Latter Day Work, set yourself to your task. Study the word of our Lord and Master, as well as all other good books that will give the knowledge needed for your work, all the while keeping ready to do the little things you find by the way, which need to be done.

One that is called to do any of these little things for Jesus, should not look upon it as a hardship, but should go forth gladly, willing and ready to suffer and die for the cause he loves.

Many of you who are girls, God will call for service. Let him find willing servants who will fully yield their whole lives to him. But those who may not be called and whose lives may follow the ordinary channels, those who make the home women of our land should not think that in special service only is consecration needed. Every act of their lives can be a consecrated service to God. Those who make good homes where others are encouraged and strengthened, who speak kind and encouraging words and who keep up humble and quiet everyday service to God, are glorifying Him just as much as those who are sent on special missions.

Therefore let us work with consecrated effort at our mission no matter what it may be, and remember: "I have chosen you and ordained you that you should go and bring forth fruit."

Worry is always one of two things: it is idiocy or insanity. You may take your choice; there is no third. Worry depresses the physical vitality, destroys courage; dims the vision of the ideal, weakens the will; stands in the way of realizing anything worth while; and the human being who hopes to accomplish something will get worry under his feet at the earliest possible moment. Work, on the other hand, good, honest hard work, when in right relation, builds vitality and gives increased power.—By Edward Howard Griggs, in Independence Examiner.

The Challenge of Present Hour

I rejoice in bearing witness to the power and efficacy of the church and gospel in my own life as well as in the lives of others. I am glad to be a subscriber to the Herald, and you will find me on your subscription list as long as I can break a dollar loose from some other expense and it is within my power to receive the weekly messenger.

My grandfather, my two sons, and I and the boys' grandfather have all borne testimony to the angel's message and if it be his will, we will not cease to proclaim the glad tidings of Zion.

I am now serving my third enrollment in the veterans' unit of the Conservation Corps. Twelve months is the limit for one man to serve. The present camp is to be abandoned shortly, and my time being almost expired, it is my decision to remain in Hays City for the present.

I believe that the challenge of the present hour is for a genuine and positive Christianity and that those who would bring in and associate uncleanness in any form with God's body of believers, his church, should be debarred from Eden and denied entrance to Zion.

There are those who would trace almost every evil to the church, but generally it is apparent that they have the evil heart of unbelief from which most evils originate.

I request your prayers that I may discharge every obligation to God and man and do those things that serve his will. My prayers are for all true followers of the Lamb.

The Lord Is Good

The Lord is all-powerful, his goodness never fails. He does hear and answer the cry of his needy children, unworthy though they may feel. I wish to write this experience for the benefit of the Herald readers.

December 30, 1933, I came home from the hospital with my baby girl, then ten days old. For the following few weeks, I suffered intensely, and the doctor said that I must have an operation. I was much concerned and afraid. The month of February brought no relief, in fact, the suffering had grown so intense that the doctor said an operation was imperative if I wished to live. I went to bed February 2, 1934, with my mind filled with the fear of the impending danger, and in my usual evening prayer, I asked the Lord earnestly that he would give me evidence as to whether I should submit myself to an operation.

About four o'clock in the morning, a divine personage appeared at my bedside and extending his hand towards me said: "Fear not; I will be with thee." I awoke immediately, and so great was my joy that others in the house were awakened by the sound of my sobbing. I went to the hospital and entered the operating room free from fear.

When the incision was made, the condition was found worse than the doctor had anticipated, and the prayers of the Saints in the branch were earnestly solicited by my husband. The first three days I was in a very critical condition. February 9, about two o'clock in the morning, I was wrapped in a vision, in which I saw myself in a room with a group of Saints, all of whom seemed to be anxiously waiting for and expecting something, I suppose an answer to the prayers that had just been offered.

Presently I saw the Lord as if walking across some water. He approached and came into the room; then stopping in the center of the room, he looked at each individual, scanning each face carefully, but did not speak until his eyes came to my face, when, looking directly into my eyes he said, "I have spared your life for a purpose."

From that time I began to know that I was recovering, and in seven more days I was able to go home. I was soon able to help with light household tasks and the care of my baby. At this time, I am rapidly gaining in strength, and I am desirous to prepare myself that the Lord may use me in the carrying out of the purpose of which he spoke.

God Guides and Blesses

I am convinced that God cares for and keeps his children. I joined the church in 1900 through the ministration of William H. Kelley, sr., of Kirtland, Ohio. My wife and children joined eight years ago. My mother, Brother Andy McAdams, and I were the only members at Painesville nine years ago, and now we have a branch of forty-two members.

I want to write a message of cheer and assurance to Herald readers and especially to the Saints of San Antonio, whom we met while in their city. We left San Antonio, Texas, quite suddenly some time ago for we felt that we were staying there against the Lord's will. When we planned to go from here (Ohio) to Texas, almost everything happened to prevent our going. Then after we arrived there we had bad luck all the time until we determined to return to Lake County, Ohio. Of course we lost everything we owned while we were gone except our old car in which we came home. We slept outside on cots or in the car on the way back home and were nine days making the trip. Our old tires kept us so busy some of the days that we made only a hundred miles.

Arriving home safely, we remained with our oldest daughter, Mrs. Roy L. Lockwood about six weeks before we found a place to stay with an old man. He gave us our rent and fuel for his board and we stayed with him about two years; then we moved where we now live.

Though times have been hard, we have not been in want since returning home. We are known here to old neighbors and friends, and that helps greatly.

As I look back now upon our trip to Texas, I can see where the guiding hand was working to turn us back and to save us much that we lost; but we would not. We continued stubbornly on our way.

We are grateful for the Lord's blessings at various times in our lives, especially since my wife had such a remarkable blessing and healing from injuries which she suffered in an auto accident. We were returning home late one night when we failed to make a sharp curve, crashed into a telephone pole, and turned over. Wife received a skull fracture, and two main arteries were cut. The doctors held little hope for her, but God is good. She was administered to, and the doctor was baffled to see how fast her wounds healed. He thought he had done a wonderful piece of surgery and said that she was one in a hundred to pull through a smash-up like that. We did not explain to him that this was God's work, for we thought he would not fully understand.

Wife and I are alone in a home on a six-acre plot about one and one half miles from town. Despite adversity our faith has grown stronger, and our trust is now more fully in God.

I would like some Saint in San Antonio to call on our two neighbors whom we interested in the church while we were there. G. H. Wixom held two meetings in our home, and these neighbors came, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Karcher and family and an elderly couple by the name of Kinnerly. Both families live on Colebra Road. Mr. and Mrs. Karcher write to us now and then, and they would appreciate a visit from the Saints.

The Readers Say---

May God's blessings rest on all who are trying to spread the gospel. Please remember me in your prayers that we may always have the courage to drop the good seed of the gospel where it will take root and flourish in these latter days.

Trusts the Lord

I am aged and nearly deaf, and have been a cripple since I fell and broke my right hip September 17, 1930. I have to spend many hours sitting in my chair. Even if there are others in the room, few people like to talk with a deaf person. Nevertheless, I am hopeful of my condition; I can walk a little and am gradually improving.

I love to tell the beautiful gospel story. Have given out many tracts and loaned my books. I used to love to send the Ensign to nonmembers; have sent many subscriptions to it and given away individual copies as well as church books. This I cannot afford to do now, the depression having taken everything from us.

Still I trust the Lord. He has been with me through all my difficulties and has seen my faith and patience, and he will be with me till the end. I have been a member of the church since 1901, and always have tried to do my whole duty. Eleven have come into the church through my work with the home department of the Sunday school, and others, I feel, will come in later.

Since I was eighty years old I have sold one Book of Mormon and a Call at Evening to nonmembers.

I enjoyed Brother Fred A. Severy's letter in a recent Herald. I knew him at the time of which he speaks, also the brothers he mentions who held meetings at Santa Cruz. Later the church met at my mother's home. I was not a member then.

Please pray for my children that they may soon see the truth of the gospel and come into the church. I want to be faithful to my calling as Saint and helper.

"Men Trained in Every Walk of Life"

I am one of the older members of the church, and I am much concerned about what God meant when he said for us to build Zion, or to prepare to build it. To me his words are of deep significance when he said also for us to be in the world but not of the world. I believe that he means for us to be prepared to take care of all our own products, so that we will not be compelled to rely on the world for certain things which we must have and use.

Let me illustrate my point. We have men among us who know how to raise cattle and prepare them for food, but what of the hides? I have never heard of one of our young men training to be a tanner to make leather from these hides. We have many uses for leather every day, and if we ourselves cannot produce it, we are losing a big business.

I believe that we must have men trained in every walk of life, and when our men and women are able to supply the necessities of life, we shall begin to gather home. When we are prepared to take care of everything, I believe God will bless us and make it possible for us to raise everything which the people of God will need. I am wondering what other Herald readers think about this matter.

"More Should Be Said of Our Stanch Workers . . ."

I have belonged to the church since 1894, when I was baptized by James Kemp. My parents joined the church in the early days, about 1846, and were among those who were deceived into going to Utah with Brigham Young. They were persecuted and driven from place to place. In time they moved to California where they found a branch of the Reorganized Church. They were soon baptized by Elders D. S. Mills and Joseph Clapp. We children followed them into the true church.

Best of all the articles appearing in the Herald I like the biographies. They give us knowledge of outstanding people of the church. It seems to me that more should be said of our stanch workers while they are yet alive.

I deeply enjoyed the wonderful article written by Brother M. A. McConley which appeared in the Herald of January 23, "Our Privilege and Opportunity for 1934." Every word of that article is so true that it should stir up the minds of all who read it. I wish there could be more such articles.

Concerning Spiritual Blessings

The only way I can repay my heavenly Father for his goodness to me, I feel, is through service to others, and here I hope to write something which will help others—I should like to discuss dreams and spiritual blessings.

From where do our dreams come? Many times, it seems, this is God's way of making known to us things to come and his will concerning us. Who can interpret our dreams? I learned long ago (as I think did Daniel and Joseph) that only One can give the true interpretation to our dreams.

An important thing to remember is that God is love, and if our dreams come from him, we must not allow them to influence us to use other than love in our actions toward other people. My own dreams have been a great source of comfort and help to me. I have found that one's own interpretation of his dreams is not always to be relied upon. When praying for divine interpretation, I try always to remember that God's way is as much higher than ours as the heavens are above the earth.

I have received almost every kind of spiritual blessing one could imagine, but I seldom tell them to the world for it would be like telling a person blind from birth what is red or what is blue. He would not understand; he could not believe. The world cannot believe these things. But the blessings for God's people are manifold if we but live for them.

I cannot forget Brother Edwards' sermon on sacrament Sunday at our 1933 reunion at Columbus, Kansas. He said, "This is only the Church of Jesus Christ as we live the Christ life." May we strive to do this.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

A statement in the Book of Mormon is sometimes cited to show that the fall resulted in man's agency, which states the reasoning of Lehi as follows:

"Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy."—86: 115

However, it has been suggested that the meaning of this statement may be simply that as Eve transgressed she would have been driven out of Eden alone unless Adam had also transgressed and went with her. In this even he would have remained alone in Eden and the earth would not have been populated by man as actually came to pass. It is argued that knowledge of evil gave man the capacity of a joy greater than would have been the case if he remained in ignorance. This view is disputed by some, but there seems to be no divine answer specifically recorded which would settle the question.

Did Jesus fulfill Matthew 12: 40 as to "three days and three nights?"

This text contains the prediction of Christ concerning the time to elapse from his death to his resurrection. It declares:

"As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and nights in the heart of the earth."—Matthew 12: 40.

It is generally conceded that he was crucified on Friday and rose again on Sunday morning, which would be less than two whole days of twenty-four hours each. But the Jews did not always mean a whole day of twenty-four hours when referring to a day (see Genesis 42: 17, 18; 2 Chronicles 10: 5, 12; Esther 4: 16; 5: 1). It might mean any part of each

Did Adam's fall produce man's free agency?

Adam had his agency before the fall, according to the Inspired Version and the history of that event. After commanding Adam not to eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, God said to him:

"Nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but remember that I forbid it."—Genesis 2: 21.

day included in the time specified, and this was the case with the time Jesus referred to: the days being Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

It will be remembered that Jewish time began with evening, though each day might be referred to with respect to daytime. Jesus was crucified before sundown Friday, and the night before Sunday morning was evidently reckoned with Sunday. But the Roman time was reckoned from midnight, hence there were actually parts of three nights, as well as three days.

What means 1 Corinthians 13:8, that prophecies "shall fail"?

This text is impliedly explained by the verse following, which states that we know in part and prophecy in part. In other words, prophecy does not reveal to us all truth, but truth imperfectly or partially given. For this reason, prophecy fails to include much that actually occurs, but when "that which is perfect is come" these partial helps will be no longer needed and will therefore be "done away" or superceded by the perfection which is at hand.

Explain Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1, about being "called to the work."

This revelation was given in February 1929 to Joseph Smith Sr., the father of Joseph who gave the revelation. It particularly applied to him if he had "desires to serve God." But the same thought is stated in 6: 2 to "whoso desireth to reap", and such were to thrust in their sickle and reap. This probably does not mean that all who desire to help are thereby called to the priesthood, but it does mean that there is work for each to do. A later revelation (119: 8) informs us that "all are called according to the gifts of God unto them," and that all may labor together whether in the ministry or in business. There is a place for every talent and willing heart in the work of God for the upbuilding of his kingdom.

How can the Book of Mormon be the stick of Ephraim, and its people of Manasseh?

It has been termed the stick of Ephraim, perhaps from Ezekiel 37: 16, which refers to the stick to be "for Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel," but the text shows it to be also the "stick of Joseph" (verse 19), and for all Israel.

Pontiac, Michigan

Gift of Three Books to Branch

The adult department of the church school presented copies of the three standard books of the church to Pontiac Branch in an impressive service the morning of April 22. Brother Otto Berndt, president of the class, presented the books to the pastor, Lorne O. Pearson, who accepted them for the group, thanking the branch for the gift and issuing a challenge to the priesthood to seek diligently to teach the people the truths these books contained.

The district presidency were in attendance during the day and discussed the gifts as follows: Brother Blakesly Smith, the Doctrine and Covenants, Brother Kenneth Green, the Book of Mormon, and Brother M. J. Crowley, the Inspired Version. The Saints were strengthened by these talks and joined in the hymn, "Let Us Shake off the Coals From Our Garments" at the close of the service.

Proceeds from a pie social at the home of Brother and Sister Bernard Kenyon made the gift possible. Clifford Venard, teacher of the adult class had charge of the service.

The entire Pontiac group, under the leadership of the pastor, is completing arrangements for the centennial celebration beginning May 15.

Beloit, Wisconsin

A contest was instituted Sunday, April 15, for the increasing of the church school attendance. On that day Pastor Harry A. Wasson appointed leaders for the contest, which is to close the last Sunday of June. The losers are to give a party for the winners.

District President Henry Woodstock was the speaker Sunday, April 22. His subject was "Our Need of Righteousness."

The women's department will meet at the church during the summer months. Previous meetings have been held at the home of Sister F. A. Dobbins.

Elder E. W. Dutton, of Janesville, spoke to this congregation April 8, and blessed the small son of Mrs. Lillian Bales. Following the service he administered to Sister Irvin Townsend, at her home. This sister has been confined to her home for some time.

An Easter program was enjoyed during the church school hour, April 1. The communion service which followed was very inspiring.

March 4, communion service was in charge of Brother Noah Johnson. Elder H. A. Wasson was the speaker March 11 and 25. His topics were "Unity in Action," and "The Unstable Soul."

February 9, Zelma Martin entertained the junior young people at a Valentine party at her home. The young people at this time surprised her with a handkerchief shower in honor of her coming birthday.

Speakers for the month of February were Harry A. Wasson and Cleo Heide.

With Ranks of Priesthood Growing This Group Presses Forward

The Easter services are still fresh in the memory of Shenandoah members. Observance of this holy day began at 10 a. m. with an impressive Easter program by the choir, in a setting of lilies, munions table with Elders J. O. Rennie and R. E. Pratt. Also in the stand were Priests A. M. Taylor and C. O. Martin, Teachers C. C. White and O. J. Topham, and Deacons Hugh Shoemaker and Frank Wilcox.

The hymn, "Organize My Church and Kingdom" opened the service, and the pastor offered prayer. Elder J. O. Rennie gave the charge to the three candidates and Priest A. M. Taylor, one of the counselors to the pastor, gave the charge to the membership. Then the young men were called to three chairs placed in front of the communion table for ordination, Brothers R. E. Pratt, J. R. Epperson, J. O. Rennie officiating, assisted by C. O. Martin and A. M. Taylor. Following the ordination the pastor extended to the three new priesthood members a hearty welcome into the general priesthood and especially into the ranks of Shenandoah's ministry, and

With a quick change of seating, the choir taking its place in the audience and the priesthood coming to the rostrum, the service passed into an ordination meeting at 10.45. At this time three talented young men, Rolland Schneider, Floy Patience, and John Topham, were ordained to the office of priest. Pastor J. R. Epperson was seated at the com-invited them to occupy chairs on the platform.

Then followed the singing of the hymn, "Consecration," which led directly into the sacrament service. A number bore earnest testimonies of renewed consecration and devotion, and among these were the young men ordained.

Mere words fail to describe the sweet influence of the Spirit felt throughout this service. Workers can only say that with the addition of these three devoted young men, together with young Brother Hugh Shoemaker, ordained a deacon last fall, the future of Shenandoah Branch looks bright, and all are expecting some

Have Summer Projects—Xenia Group Forges Ahead

The young people are reorganizing their class in the church school and preparing for real service. The young married people are also organizing a class with Brother Joe Hoover as teacher.

Recent services have not been very well attended on account of rain and bad roads.

The group of Saints at Xenia are steadily pushing forward with Brother Harry Henson as their leader. They have church school at ten o'clock on Sunday and a Bible study class on Tuesday nights. Elder O. C. Henson was the speaker there the night of April 22.

Brush Creek Branch was saddened to learn of the death of John Phillips, April 16, a member of the church for several years. He will be greatly missed.

The women's club served lunch at a sale early in April and cleared sixteen dollars to be used for branch expenses.

A son was born to Brother and Sister Glen Hoover February 14.

The intermediate, junior, and primary classes enjoyed a party at the home of Brother and Sister Ancil Burroughs February 12, in honor of their daughter Imogene's eleventh birthday. Fourteen children and their teachers, Eva Henson and Pearl Jones, were present.

Charles Wesner, district bishop's agent, came from Odin, to speak the morning of February 11. Brother Harry Henson, recently ordained a priest, was the evening speaker.

Laura Burgess, one of the young members, was married to Willie Bennett February 17 at the home of Elder William Clements. Ruby Henson and Oakley Burgess were the attendants. The young couple will make their home near Brush Creek as he is teaching the New Hope School.

March 9, the young adult people met for a social evening. An illustrated lecture on "Astronomy," was the attraction.

The Z. B. A. initiation was held on the evening of March 11. This was a most dramatic service. The theme was "Living Water," and Elder Arthur Oakman was in charge. Twelve new members were taken into the organization.

On the afternoon of March 17, some of the men of the young adult class met for work on the vacant lot next to the church. A dinner was prepared by the women. This work is continuing.

Parent teacher meetings are regularly held, and on March 23, Brother Joe Wilson, the children's pastor, talked on the teaching being done in the church school, and how the homes can help. Sister Carlotta Davis, a primary teacher, talked on the method and content of her teaching, and Brother William Collins, from the father's viewpoint, told what he and his wife are trying to teach in their home, and how the church school can help.

The young people's fellowship service was held on the morning of March 25. The organ began playing at 8 a. m. The service began at 8.15, Arthur Oakman in charge.

The evening service was held in the lower auditorium. This was family night, and the theme was "Loyalty." A most touching story was told by Mardel Holden, a sermonet was preached by the pastor, and a play, "Ruth and Naomi," was presented by Ruby Strand's drama class.

A church history social for the entire congregation on the evening of March 30 was sponsored by the young people. Nearly every class took part in the evening's entertainment, and close to one hundred were present.

On the morning of Easter Sunday, three children were baptized. This was followed by the sacrament service which was in charge of District President Guy P. Levitt. The Saints had been asked to sacrifice, even as Christ sacrificed for them, and as a result, a sum of $309 was brought in. Of that amount, twenty-three dollars was given by the children, who are being taught what it means really to sacrifice.

In the evening, a cantata, "Our Living Lord," was presented under the direction of Sister Ethel Godfrey.

Myron Schall, of Stanford University, met with Roy Weldon's boys of the Health and Hygiene Club, on the evening of April 13. He gave them a most interesting talk and demonstration.

On the evening of April 8, the play, "Simon the Leper," by Dorothy Clarke Wilson, was given under the direction of Bonnie Connally. This play was full of teaching value, and is one of the finest presentations of its kind given in this church.

The young people held a hobo party at the church on the evening of April 13. The older children were invited.

Brother Burdick, of Sacramento, preached on the morning of April 15, and Brother Eli Bronson was the evening speaker. He recently returned from Washington. Sister Hazel Blohm, district director of religious education, visited the church school.

During the absence of the pastor, the associate pastors, M. F. Ralston and Joseph Wilson, have kept things moving. Brother Ralston preached at the morning service of April 22, and in the evening Roy Weidon occupied the pulpit.

The women held their regular monthly guest day meeting at the church on the afternoon of April 24. Interesting reports on recent federation meetings were read, showing that the big need there is for the unified efforts of women.

Bedison Branch

A week's series of missionary services was held here by Elder O. W. Okerlind, following General Conference. Interest increased from night to night and attendance ranged from forty-five to fifty. Brother Okerlind used a large chart and his forceful and convincing sermons interested both members and nonmembers. By the middle of the week, four had given their names for baptism and three more names were added before Sunday.

The baptisms took place about five miles from the church and Brother Okerlind performed the ordinance which completed the family circle in five homes in the branch. The candidates were two small boys and two small girls and three young mothers. Brother Okerlind had charge of the confirmation service in the afternoon when the presence of the Holy Spirit was felt in power.

The entire branch has been drawn more closely together and those holding the priesthood were made to feel keenly the added charge of caring for and feeding the flock of Christ. All have a greater desire to tell the story of the glorious gospel to others that they, too, may rejoice.

Brother Okerlind left Monday for his home in Independence, and will soon go to his mission in Canada. The Saints wish him much success in his labors in that land.

Fourth Saint Joseph Church

A series of Sunday night sermons on Latter Day Saint doctrine was commenced April 22, to continue throughout the summer with various speakers. Elder Virgil Sheppard, of Fanning, Kansas, was the first speaker on the subject, "Man and His Creator." The following Sunday night Elder E. A. Gurwell spoke on the subject, "The Tower of Babel and Its Results." The subjects have been so arranged as to cover the vital points of the gospel in the four months. Interest has been good thus far.

Among recent Sunday morning speakers were Brother O. J. Barr and Elder Roscoe D. Peterson. One Sunday night recently Elders J. L. Bear and T. E. Hale blessed the infant daughter of Brother and Sister Floyd Wheat at this service.

A prayer service is held each Sunday evening at six-thirty preceding the evening preaching service. Interest has been increasing.

The women's department meet every two weeks on Thursday at different homes. The afternoon is spent in quilt making and a short program is given. Refreshments are served.

Trenton Mission

Interest in the work at Trenton has increased quite favorably since the beginning of the year. The social gatherings held every third Tuesday in the month have been a source of encouragement by the increase of nearly fifty percent in attendance and a more active interest is manifest. The program varies from an evening of games with a few readings and musical numbers to a slide program. The last one was "The Passion Play" with appropriate special numbers.

The stake bishopric gave much needed help and encouragement in conducting two profitable services recently when Bishop Milo Burnett and his two counselors, Elder M. H. Hinderks and J. E. Hovenga, visited Trenton. On April 22, Elder Hovenga, accompanied by Brother Parsons, made another visit here and gave substantial food for thought in two good sermons. The Saints appreciate the interest shown by the stake officers in their problems and extend a welcome to them at all times.

On Easter morn, the young people gave a worship program, consisting of readings, musical numbers and a pageant, "Easter Dawn," followed by "The Life of Christ," an illustrated lecture. The regular sacrament service was held in the afternoon with good attendance.

Efforts are being concentrated largely on the young people who have shown by their attendance that they are interested.

Maple Grove Branch

Maple Grove Branch has been greatly strengthened by the addition of five young men to the ranks of the priesthood. The ordinations were taken care of at a special service on March 25, by Elders Ward A. Hougas and F. L. Hinderks, of the stake presidency, Stake

Test of Success

The real test of success is whether a life has been a happy one and a happy-giving one.—Sir Henry Newbolt.

Nauvoo Young People's Camp

This year's camp for young people of the church will be held at Nauvoo, August 6 to 17, and committees are making plans and programs to insure the success of the camp.

During their eleven days of camping in this historic spot the young men and women will be given opportunity to practice the principles of true Christian living. Their daily program, according to the Lamoni Chronicle, will be similar to that of last year—classes in health, music, dramatics, recreation, and other fields of leadership training in the morning; at ten o'clock, assembly periods with topics covering the program of the church and discussion of historic events of special significance. The afternoons will be devoted to recreation—auto trips, hikes, boating, swimming, organized games and competitive sports. Evenings will be spent around the campfire or in specially planned activities. E. E. Closson will be the camp director.

"Fortune to Share"

Every man truly religious has something he cannot keep however he may try. Vash Young calls it a "fortune to share." Unless religion is given away it will not keep.—Lyman P. Powell in "The Better Part."

Fresno Priesthood Serve Three Groups

Priesthood of Fresno Branch are endeavoring to be true laborers together with God. Besides taking care of their local group, they are helping the gospel cause at Dinuba Mission, which is included as part of Fresno Branch, and have responded to calls for services at Bakersfield, California.

Fresno Saints are enjoying a strong feeling of unity and brotherly fellowship.

Bishop Milo Burnett and Elder Z. J. Lewis, a member of the Stake High Council. The service was solemn and impressive and not only were the young men made to feel their responsibility but the congregation also was made to sense their responsibility.

Kenneth Piepergerdes and Norman Piepergerdes and Norman Hinderks were ordained to the office of priest. Brother Hinderks is continuing his preparation at Graceland now. Brother Hubert Ehlers was ordained to the office of teacher and Quentin Marks and Kenneth Wood were ordained to the office of deacon. Brother Wood is a member of Kingston Branch.

At the morning service, Stake President Ward A. Hougas delivered a forceful sermon to a large congregation.

Growing Spiritually—Priesthood Serving in Three Groups

Those in a position to know are glad to acknowledge the advancement made by faithful attendants of this branch in the spiritual progress demanded by ministers of the church as they visit at Fresno. During the past six months a greater degree of unity and brotherly fellowship has grown up than for many years.

Pastor Frank Enix has assumed his rightful place as leader, and the workers are loyally assisting him in carrying out a program of spiritual uplift. The short but much-needed visits of President F. M. McDowell, Apostle E. J. Gleazer, and Missionary Arthur Oakman were of great help. Their forceful messages made very apparent the need of each individual's incorporating in his life the fullness of God's law.

Pastor Enix made two long drives to visit Saints of Ontario, in southern California, not long ago.

The assistant pastor, Elder A. S. Votaw spoke, a short time ago, on the message of the late General Conference, emphasizing that if the Saints are truly workers together with God, there will be no idle time in which the allurements of the world can draw them away from their tasks of active, energetic sainthood. He also stressed the importance of the young people of the branch becoming associated with the youth movement of the church.

Brother Votaw also reports an enthusiastic welcome and reception from Modesto Saints to whom he spoke April 8.

The Dinuba Mission, a part of Fresno Branch under the leadership of Elder Abe Heinrick, is advancing spiritually. Lately others have been baptized.

Early this year a "Macedonia call" came from Bakersfield, California, and like Paul of old Elder L. W. Roberts and wife, both enthusiastic workers, answered that call. They moved to Bakersfield, and since that time have successfully responded to the needs of the members. He has baptized several, and there is splendid prospect of branch organization there. It is the prayer of Fresno Saints that Brother Roberts will find secular employment there sufficient to supply their needs so that the group may have a permanent leader.

In all three places occupied by Fresno priesthood, the responses to the financial call of the church during the past two years, have been pronounced, and there has been an increase in the number of tithepayers together with a corresponding increase in the spirituality of the members.

The work which is being carried on in the junior department by Sister Lillie Jennings and Sister Maxine Godfrey is a labor of love. The cooperation they are receiving from other workers is holding together the youth of the branch and bringing joy to the hearts of the parents.

The women's department, in charge of the pastor's mother, Sister Louise Enix, is doing its part in branch endeavor, and has brought material aid to those in need as well as helped in branch undertakings where money was required.

Full Week for Missionary

Weir, Kansas, Church Burns

I went to Carthage, Missouri, April 24, to be present at a young people's meeting. I wish you could have heard some of the expressions made by a number of the young members relative to their desire to assist in this great work of God. When we see such a group, we know that the future of the church is assured.

Brother Tom Bath, of Pittsburg, informed me that the church at Weir had burned the Sunday previous and that the Saints wanted me to come there as soon as possible. Brother Wilson, of Miami, was at Carthage for the meeting, so I went home with him that night, and then on Wednesday we went up to Weir.

The building was completely destroyed and all its equipment. None knew the cause of the fire. They had met for the morning services, and shortly after noon the building burned. It was insured for one thousand dollars, but that is not enough to put it back as it was, and besides that they had a well-equipped church.

Several townspeople have said that they would help in the rebuilding of the structure. For the present the Saints think they will be permitted to meet in the Methodist Ladies' Aid rooms.

I returned to Carthage Friday and talked to the women that afternoon and at night conducted two classes for the priesthood and two more Saturday evening and two Sunday. Besides that I preached two sermons, made seventeen pastoral calls, blessed two children, assisted to bless two others, administered to two sick people, and consulted with two members of Webb City Branch with regard to some administrative affairs of their local. AMOS T. HIGDON.

Alva, Wyoming

Nine members make up the present church membership near Alva. It is their hope that before long they may have a leader so that their group may be organized.

Elder Frank Cohrt has met with this group several times, preaching helpful sermons.

These Saints find that when they are faithful and prayerful, as they should always be, they have the Comforter to guide and direct them. It is their desire to be faithful to the teachings of the gospel and to help build up God's kingdom on earth.

Stake Music Festival

Not to win a prize
Nor defeat
An opponent;
But
To pace each other
On the road to Excellence.

This is the motto of the fourth annual Kansas City Stake Music Festival held April 30 to May 2, at Central Church. The movement was sponsored by the Stake O. B. K. Council, George Mesley in charge, assisted by Lloyd Siebert.

In this year's contest eight of the churches were represented. Due to the proximity of the meeting of General Conference, there were not as many individual entries as last year, however, the standards of participants was not changed. All numbers this year were rated A B C or D, according to the merit rather than competition.

On Monday, April 30, the following classes were presented and their ratings are given: Junior vocal, Jean Dunn, B; Myra Goold, C. Soprano solos, Fay Sneed, C; Ve Loise Martin, B. Contralto solos, Anna Decker, A; Esther Lungwitz, B. Tenor solos, Harold St. John, B; Garland Tickemyer, B. Baritone solos, Victor Hill, C; Edward P. Nelson, C; Junior Marmoy, B. Male quartet, Central, B. Girls' quartet, Malvern Hill, B; Northwest, B; Northeast, B; Armourdale, C; Gladstone, B; Central, A. Mixed quartets, Gladstone, B; Central, C; Fourth Church, B.

The second half of the contestants were presented May 1, and their ratings are as follows: Sacred solos (men): Garland Tickemyer, A; Edward P. Nelson, C; Harold St. John, C. Sacred solos (women): Esther Lungwitz, C; Dorothy Goodfellow, D. Elementary piano, Mary Louise Weeks, C. Medium piano, Dorothy Burge, A; Avonel Davis,

B; Marian Freeman, B. Advanced piano, Ruth Ringer, A. Advanced violin, Ona Comer, A. Choruses: Central, B; Gladstone, C; Malvern Hill, B; Quindaro, B.

In each section the contestant chose one number from a list prepared by the committee and one selected number, for which the judges might ask to assure a better decision. The choruses sang under student directors. The contests are succeeding in their purpose to discover and develop new talents in youthful circles.

The Memorial Choir of Grace and Holy Trinity Church with Mabelle Glenn, director, assisted by Darwin Bowen, baritone, and Edna Scotten Billings, accompanist, were the guest artists at the festival, singing on the closing night, May 2. Fifty boys' voices of unusual quality gave a program of difficult, sacred anthems including such as "It Shall Be Light" and "List the Cherubic Host" by Gaul; "Angus Dei," by Bizet, and "Listen to the Lambs," arranged by Dett. Interspersed were entertaining secular solos by Darwin Bowen, young Kansas City baritone, and former member of the boys' choir. These boys were splendid in their phrasing, shading, and precision. Central was honored in having this vested choir which is one of the finest boys' choirs in the city. The director is in charge of the music in the Kansas City School System.

After the concert the winners of the festival were made known. Central ranked first with seventy-five points; Fourth Church, second, having fifty-six; Malvern Hill, third, with thirty-one, and Gladstone, fourth, receiving twenty-six points. George Mesley presented the loving cup to Norman Anderson, Central O. B. K. Councilor. And so with the spirit of good fellowship, the festival closed, each participant determined to increase his ability and do better next year.

At a meeting of pastors, bishops, and solicitors, held the evening of April 30, steps were taken to raise seven thousand dollars, representing several items of debt on stake churches, holders of which demand payment. Pledge cards are being issued to the membership with the urge that they respond adequately to the present need.

Central Church

The worship period Sunday, April 29, was conducted by the young men's class. Billy Babb offered the opening prayer and Robert Alter presented the scripture and the theme talk. A special baritone solo by Larry Siegel provided the incidental music. The class will be in charge for one month, and these men are taking an active interest in promoting the church services.

An excellent program of sacred and classic numbers and Negro spirituals was given by the Wahdemna Choral Club of Independence on the evening of April 29, under the leadership of Paul N. Craig, assisted by Hazel Scott Withee, accompanist, Fern Griggs, soloist, and Dorothy Nace, violinist.

Elder John A. Gardner gave the short talk for the evening. As an effective close the choir sang "Open Our Eyes," Palmer Phillips, soloist, and "Beautiful Savior."

This congregation is happy to report that Fred Anderson, who has been ill, has been able recently to attend church and is well on the way to recovery.

Quindaro Church

The O. B. K. Young People's Choir of this church has been accomplishing splendid results through the able direction and sincere efforts of Otis Swart. The choir practiced twice a week for some time, to enable them to enter in the Kansas City Stake Music Festival which was held April 30 to May 2.

Joe Davis, Berwin Lungwitz, Irvin Luke, Earnest Hawkins and Charles Graham sponsored a hike to Elizabeth Falls on Saturday, April 21, for the boys between the ages of twelve and eighteen, of this congregation. At meal time Brother Hawkins proved his skill in cooking, by barbecuing the spareribs. Those privileged to go on the outing were: Gene Hallier, Louis Wilkenson, Donald Davis, Leonard Graham, Richard Rider, Clarence Penticuff, jr., Charles Hallier, Charles Deller, Donald Hallier, Jimmie Hare, Troy Smith, John Bryant, and Winfield Bryant.

Thursday evening, April 26, the young people held a farewell party in the lower auditorium of the church in honor of Avis Judd, who has spent the winter months in Kansas City. She has returned to her home in Oklahoma, and is greatly missed among the young people.

Heathwood Church

A History and Covenants Class was recently organized by Bishop Richard Bullard, to meet every week at the church. The second week seventeen women were present. They intend to make some sacrifice to help liquidate the church debt. Their last lesson was from Doctrine and Covenants 36, concerning Zion in Enoch's day. It was an inspiration to all.

Argentine Church

The morning speaker April 29, was Elder R. L. Bishop, who chose for his subject "Growth." Development, advancement, standards, and life moulding were some of the terms stressed, and the large crowd present was highly pleased with his effort.

The evening speaker was Pastor R. E. Brown, whose effort was to instruct with regard to the work of the recent General Conference.

Brother Benjamin B. Brown, aged sixty-eight years, passed away March 4. His widow five sons, three daughters, other relatives and friends mourn his departure. Elder R. L. Goold was in charge of the funeral. Interment was in Maple Hill Cemetery.

The stepmother of Sister Hazel Shireman, Mrs. Amanda Hunt, died April 6, and was buried April 8. Elder R. L. Goold preached the sermon. Her husband, other relatives, and many friends mourn her death.

North East Church

This congregation was happy to resume regular church services once again after General Conference. The wonderful counsel from the leaders of the church has given them much encouragement.

Elder William I. Fligg was the morning speaker April 22. Elder Berwyn Lungwitz occupied the pulpit during the evening.

Elder James Baggerly recently delivered a series of sermons and in a forceful manner presented the results of violating God's laws.

This group of Saints is pressing on with much courage. The prayer meetings are well attended, many taking part.

Independence

Apostle E. J. Gleazer addressed a group of about three hundred Independence priesthood members Sunday afternoon on the theme "The Local Priesthood in the Local Branch," emphasizing the part each must play in telling the gospel story. This was the regular sacrament Sunday priesthood meeting held in the main auditorium of the Stone Church.

Teachers of the church who are registering with the Teacher's Placement Bureau, in charge of W. Earl Page, the Auditorium, Independence, are expressing appreciation of the bureau's purpose and service.

Organized at General Conference time, the bureau is busy locating school vacancies and notifying teachers who have registered in the past three weeks. The service of this bureau is designed for Latter Day Saint teachers, and no fee or commission is charged.

All school board church members knowing of vacancies in their own schools, should so inform the bureau at Independence, and all teachers of the church seeking positions, are invited to register with the bureau. Their applications for registration blanks should be accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelopes.

Stone Church

"Father, hear the prayer we offer,
Not for ease that prayer shall be, . . ."

With a spirit of prayerfulness and harmony the large congregation sang the opening hymn of the May communion service. President F. M. Smith gave the sacrament talk, admonishing the Saints that their baptism and their renawal of it each month, should be the outstanding things of their lives toward the accomplishment of the church goals.

Associated with President Smith in the stand were the following men: President Elbert A. Smith, Apostle F. H. Edwards, Bishop J. Stanley Kelley, Elder C. Ed. Miller, Elder Harry Barto, and Elder R. T. Cooper.

Very fittingly Brother Elbert offered the invocation and the benediction. Robert Miller played the organ during the parts of service.

Choosing Hebrews 4:1, 2, for his Scripture reading, Apostle J. F. Curtis presented in his Sunday evening sermon at the Stone Church, a clear analysis of the New Testament church according to the teachings of Jesus and the writings of Paul and Peter, and applied this analysis to the church as it exists today. He stressed the fact that while many are content to follow Jesus part of the way, accepting his teachings, they will not go all the way with him. The congregation was renewed and reassured by this splendid discourse delivered in Brother Curtis's earnest, missionary manner.

Music was by the Stone Church Choir, directed by Paul N. Craig, and accompanied at the organ by Robert Miller. The opening hymn was "We Limit Not the Truth of God," the music of which was written by Sister Louise Hills Lewis. Sister Lewis, a faithful member of the choir, was present and in her place on this occasion. The hymn appears in the new Saints' Hymnal, and was one of those to which special attention was called in the church hymnology course at General Conference.

The funeral of Sister Rachel E. Self, wife of Walter M. Self, was conducted from the Stone Church last Tuesday afternoon, President Elbert A. Smith in charge. Sister Self, an ardent church worker until her last illness, passed away Sunday, April 29. She leaves four daughters: Mrs. B. C. Sarratt, of Independence; Mrs. Florence Champlin, Chanute, Kansas; Mrs. L. M. Sarratt, Collins, Missouri, and Mrs. Walter I. Chapman, Independence; three sons: Carl T. Self, Omaha, Nebraska; Owen Self, Genoa, Colorado; Warren H. Self, Nebraska City, Nebraska; two sisters, and many friends. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery. Sister Self was sixty-seven years old.

Second Church

A large group attended the eight o'clock Sunday morning prayer meeting.

An organ prelude by Mrs. Sam Inman opened the communion hour at eleven o'clock, and Pastor W. N. Inman was in charge. The oblation talk was by Elder B. C. Sarratt, and the pastor gave a stirring communion address. Elder F. L. Freeman offered a special prayer following a period of meditation and silent prayer. Then the emblems were passed.

Two veteran ministers of the church were the evening speakers, Elder C. E.

Blodgett and Elder S. S. Smith. Both related spiritual experiences given them in the missionary field. The choir sang the anthem, "Jesus Lover of My Soul," Hazel Clow singing the soprano solo, and the duet being taken by Mrs. Will Inman and Mrs. Guy Minton.

Liberty Street Church

A large number attended the young people's prayer meeting held at the church last Wednesday night. Pastor John R. Lentell was in charge, assisted by Cecil Walker and Lee Davis. Almer Sheehy was the main speaker. A fellowship meeting followed the prayer hour in the basement of the church, and a program of activity for the summer was formulated. The young people are eagerly looking forward to the missionary trips to be taken to outlying branches when the Sunday evening services have been discontinued for the summer at Liberty Street, and the congregation is invited to meet at the Campus.

The spirit that was felt at the early morning prayer service Sunday carried over into other activities and the sacrament hour. After the sacrament service had closed, Bishop's Agent Harry Blake gave a report of the financial conditions in this congregation, and presented a plan whereby the outstanding debts may be cared for. The most pressing need is that of repairing the stained-glass windows which are sagging because of the weakened condition of the lead holdings.

At the church school hour, a girls' chorus from the Ott School, directed by their principal, John L. Cook, sang two numbers. Church school attendance is increasing.

Apostle F. Henry Edwards was the Sunday evening speaker following a special half hour program by the Liberty Street Choir, directed by Fred Friend. Apostle Edwards chose for his theme, "We Walk by Faith and Not by Sight."

Walnut Park Church

For the past several months the church school has aimed at an attendance of five hundred. Several times the report of the secretary has shown more than four hundred and fifty, but never has attendance quite reached the goal. Sunday morning five hundred and eleven were counted, so a new goal will have to be set by the officers as a mark at which to aim.

Communion services were in charge of the pastor, assisted by Elders James A. Gillen and Benjamin Bean. Brother Bean spoke in behalf of the needy of the church prior to the taking of the oblation. The opening remarks by Brother Gillen were inspiring and demonstrated his devotion and faith in the work of the church. Brother Gillen was introduced by the pastor as spending the day with Walnut Park Saints; he was the speaker at the seven-thirty service Sunday evening. His counsel was well received by the Saints on both occasions.

The Walnut Park Young People's Council met at two-thirty Sunday afternoon for the regular monthly session. Wilma Smelser, secretary of the council, presented her resignation, due to her leaving Independence, and Helen Moorman was elected to succeed her. Future activities of the council were discussed, and a special meeting was ordered for next Sunday afternoon, to outline a program of activities for the summer months.

Enoch Hill Church

A good crowd of worshipers attended the union prayer meeting last Wednesday evening.

The women's department meets each Thursday afternoon for the study of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Brother W. J. Brewer and Sister McKnight are still confined to their sick beds, and are greatly missed at services. Sister Sarah C. Thomas, mother of Pastor E. A. Thomas, is recovering from pneumonia. She is seventy-eight years old.

A daughter, Frances Arline, was born to Brother and Sister Joe Rogers early in April.

The Garden Club has been chosen to decorate the church for Mother's Day.

At the early morning prayer service the elder in charge chooses a chapter to be read each week. This is helpful in directing the minds of the Saints, uniting them in testimony and meditation.

A spiritual feast was enjoyed at the communion service, the church being well filled.

Elder Alma C. Barmore was the evening speaker and for the basis of his sermons used Proverbs 4. His theme was "The Progressiveness of Spiritual Revelation." Brother Barmore and his wife left Monday for their mission field.

Variety of Local Events Interests Everyone

At a business meeting in January, a young people's division was organized to include the young married people, the senior young people, and the junior young people. B. H. Van Eaton was elected the director, and George Allen, president. A dramatic club was organized with Vivian Malcolm as president; Claire Van Eaton, director; Claire Chapman, secretary; Mickey Anderson, wardrobe mistress, and George Allen, stage manager.

February 9, the young people were entertained at a Valentine party at the Van Eaton home. The theme of a "heart clinic" was carried throughout the evening, with a doctor, a nurse, and a dietitian in attendance.

The evening of February 14, Apostles M. A. McConley and E. J. Gleazer stopped on their way to the youth's conference at Spokane. A special service was held at which Brother Gleazer spoke to the group.

A number from the young people's division, including B. H. Van Eaton, Ben and Lorena Nutley, Paul Anderson, George, Arthur, and Pearl Allen, Shirley and Tony Van Eaton, attended the youth's conference held at Spokane, February 16 to 18. Encouragement and a wider vision of the work to be done were gained. Paul Anderson was selected as head of the young people's division of the district.

Randall McSparin and Miss Dorea Deymonaz were married February 14 by Pastor B. H. Van Eaton at a quiet ceremony in the home of the bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Taylor. The bridegroom's sister, Anne Taylor, and George Cassatt attended the young couple. Only immediate relatives and friends were present.

A group gathered at the Van Eaton home, the evening of February 21, to sing, and to initiate the thirty new Saints' Hymnals which the branch had just purchased. Later in the evening the young couple, Mr. and Mrs. McSparin, were surprised by a kitchen shower, after which, refreshments were served.

The remainder of that week was filled with a series of parties. Thursday evening Pearl Allen held a surprise birthday party for her brother, George; Friday evening there was a handkerchief shower for Claire Van Eaton in honor of her birthday, and Saturday evening a surprise party to celebrate Ben Nutley's birthday.

The last week of February was occupied with a series of meetings held by Stanley Fout and Joseph Sandige. Brother Sandige was the speaker and the meetings were well attended.

The evening of March 2, the young people's class gave a colonial entertainment at the church. The program included a solo by Wesley Henderson, "There's an Old Spinning Wheel," which was illustrated by tableaux. Readings, "Important Moments in George Washington's Life," by Claire Van Eaton, and Hawaiian guitar numbers by Pearl Allen and Harriet DeVries were followed by a play, "When George and Martha Returned." After the program a silver offering was accepted.

In preparation for Easter, Miss Mary Roberts gave a lecture accompanied by lantern slides of the Oberammergau Passion Play for a number of young people who assembled at the Nutley home.

About twenty persons drove to Mount Clemens Easter Sunday morning, and hiked a couple of miles to reach the summit, where they had a short sunrise service. At the morning church school service, the younger classes gave a play portraying the resurrection. In the evening the Dramatic Club presented a pageant, "The Living Christ."

April 6, the young people's division met at the home of George Allen and discussed plans for publishing a youth's paper. Terry Buchanan was elected secretary for the division.

The cradle roll has been increased by two recent arrivals: a daughter, Patricia Nadine, in the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Anderson, on March 9, and a son, Hugh Frederick, born April 9, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Chapman.

An early morning baptismal service, at a beautiful and secluded spot on the Naches River, was held April 22. Nancy Claire Nutley, on the advent of her eighth birthday, was led into the water by her brother, Van Nutley. Alice Claire Van Eaton, also eight years old, was led into the water by her father, B. H. Van Eaton. The confirmation service held after church school, included a duet, "Just as I Am, Thine Own to Be," by Shirley and Tony Van Eaton; a poem "Consecration," by Alice Claire Van Eaton, and a solo, "I Belong to Him," by Nancy Claire Nutley. Then the two little girls were confirmed by Elder B. H. Van Eaton before an altar banked with early summer flowers.

The darkest hour in any man's life is when he sits down to plan how to get money without earning it.—Horace Greeley.

Living as a fine art—is really living in harmony with ourselves, and with others. It consists largely in keeping one's nature in tune with Eternal Principle, in tune with Infinite Love. Here is where our strength lies, in our conscious union with our Source. This is the secret of all power, poise, and harmony.—Selected.

Like a Personal Visit Every Month in Your Study

If five outstanding leaders like Cadman, Fosdick, McConnell, Morrison and Robbins came into your study and recommended a book, you'd want to own it, wouldn't you?

That's exactly what these men do every month for the members of the Religious Book Club.

Each month they appraise the large number of religious books submitted to them by the publishers. Those which are most worthwhile they recommend to the members of the Club through the medium of the Club Bulletin.

Members need not accept a book every month.

They may take as few as six during the year, and may examine each book before paying for it. Yet their total expense is only the regular retail price of the books plus a few cents for postage.

In addition, by joining the Religious Book Club now you will receive a book of genuine importance FREE to start your membership.

Zion's Christian Legion

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE LEGION DIRECTOR OF SOLICITATION

By D. T. Williams

To understand the responsibility of this officer it will be necessary to keep in mind the specific and immediate financial objectives of the organization. These are, first, helping pay off the Auditorium debt through the payment of twenty-five cents a month dues by every member of the Legion; second, to double the income of the church throughout The Great Lakes Regional Territory by means of a systematic collection of tithes and offerings.

To realize these aims there has been and is being supplied to every member of the church in the above-mentioned territory a tithing card which will be punched each week for the amount the holder is contributing. To every member of Zion's Christian Legion will be given a membership card which not only designates the holder as a member of the Legion but also through a receipting system attached indicates whether the card holder has paid his dues to date.

It is the responsibility of the General Director of Solicitation to see that the machinery performing this function is kept in operation. Under him as his helpers are the Divisional Directors each responsible for the successful manipulation of the forces in his district toward the ends indicated. Assisting these divisional officers of finance are the Company Directors of Solicitation in every branch these are directing the activities of Group Solicitors and Group Captains the first of which collect tithes and offerings from all the membership and the latter which has the responsibility of collecting the dues which will compose the contribution of the organization to the Auditorium.

Elder S. Gordan Brown, of Lansing, Michigan, is occupying in the responsible position of General Director of Solicitation. We invite in his behalf the fullest cooperation from every member of the church. Such cooperation can only be demonstrated through the assistance rendered to the local workers who are representing him and his department.

Let it be further remembered that all this work is being done in full coordination with the financial officers of the church both general and local. Those who have a responsibility in this connection are asked to work in full accord with such officers without exception.

More of personal religion back of all denominational differences! A clearer apprehension of the better part! These are on the way.—Lyman P. Powell in The Better Part.

Helps for Mother's Day

Mother's Day

By B. H. Thomas

Mother's day—what a small tribute for those who hold the most honorable and greatest profession on earth. If we blazoned her name across the midnight sky in everlasting honor of what she has meant to us we would still fall short of the mark. To praise and respect motherhood is but the recognition of one of God's greatest gifts to humanity, because mothers are the greatest lovers and the deepest sufferers. We are given but one mother and it is from her we receive the heritage of love. God must have known that mothers could love deeper, because it was to them that he trusted and gave his priceless jewels; he must have known that it took mothers to mould and develop characters; but one of the saddest thoughts is, we fail to reach the high and lofty station that should come from the teachings of our mothers.

It has been said that "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," and isn't it only reasonable to think that every person who ever became great must have reached his goal through the untiring efforts of a mother who deserved the praise for helping to build his character and giving him the fighting spirit of success. So when I see the statue of a great man, I always think of his mother, because none of us could ever be greater than our mothers expect us to be.

We are told that love is the fulfilling of the law. Is there anyone who loves deeper than the mothers who are always ready to give their lives for their children?

The only regrettable thing about the gift of a mother is, she leaves us too soon, and we fail to estimate the value of her love until the sweetness of her presence is missed. Mothers were only loaned to us for a short time to make us see the need to live nobly and honorably according to the ideals they taught us.

We are reminded that charity begins at home. "Yes, you will find it in the sweet influence of the nobility of motherhood." God in his wisdom must have seen the need to season our lives with pure warm and changless love. Although this always has been a world of suffering and sorrow, did you ever stop to think of what it might be without mothers?

On this the day, dedicated to mothers, if it is your privilege to wear the red carnation instead of the white, give thanks for the presence of a living mother and return to her some of the kindness and love she showered upon you in your earlier years.

■ Nauvoo Camp for Young People

Nauvoo Camp for Young People this year will be from August 6 to 17. It is being announced early so that young people and their parents can make plans. There will be a staff of nine people to take care of the various activities and interests. A good time is planned for everybody. If your young people haven't been there they should try it. If they have been once, they'll want to go again. Write to E. E. Closson, Lamoni, Iowa, for information and the registration blank.

■ A Sigh of Relief

Mother was nearly exhausted by Mother's Day festivities. The family planned a really great affair and of course there had to be a big dinner for the occasion. Grace and Annabelle were to get it, but Grace had quarreled with her beau after the movie Saturday night and it took them two hours to make up, so Grace was pretty tired the next morning and Annabelle had a sore throat, and mother had to get the dinner as usual, only it was more difficult because the girls had planned an elaborate one. Bill bought her a beautiful bouquet of roses, but by the time the girls had raided it for their corsages, and Bill, taking the hint, had retrieved a couple for his girl, there weren't many left for a centerpiece on the dinner table, and she filled it out with some columbine from the back yard.

In the afternoon it was planned, after Mother had got the dinner dishes washed (the family nearly perished from impatience waiting for her to get done) to go for a car ride—anywhere Mother wanted to go, just anywhere. It was a generous gesture, but when Mother suggested places she'd like to go they all objected and she finally gave up and went where they wanted to go, although it wasn't much fun for her. When they brought her home at four o'clock in the afternoon she was pretty badly tired out.

But Mother outwitted them after that. She sneaked out the back way to visit a friend who did not have the pleasure of possessing a large and charming family, and took a nice nap on her friend's sofa. Then they walked down town to the drug store and had some sandwiches and hot chocolate, and finished up with ice cream. They lingered around looking in the store windows until time for the evening service at church. They went early and just sat and rested, looking at the colored windows and thinking. The preacher—bless him!—did not even mention Mother's Day, clever fellow, but talked on a fine general theme.

When Mother arrived home she found some members of the family pretty peevish because she hadn't been home to get supper, but she answered rather gently, "You forget that this is Mother's Day!"

■ Money Matters

The Press Room Proletarian says: "It is better to have a fifty-cent dollar in your pocket than no dollar at all."

The Pessimist says: "The fifty-cent dollar is just as elusive as the old dollar was."

Tiny: "Dollars? Really, I think I've heard of them, but what are they?"

The Desire to Do

An Age of Criticism In these times nothing escapes criticism. The white light of publicity, through newspaper and radio, is turned on every important act. It has been so long since Americans have enjoyed anything like privacy that they are becoming inured to the rigors of chronic exhibitionism. Our doctors watch the operations of inward organs of famous people as they would inspect an engine, and issue reports. Our movie stars spread their love affairs across the pages of the newspapers just as ordinary people send soiled linen to the laundry. The breakfast food, the toothpaste, the informal attire, the differences of opinion and the family quarrels of the great are recorded in the spritely style of newspaper journalese. We habitually live a goldfish kind of existence. Nothing escapes observation—and criticism.

The Golden Age In the "good old times" it was an act of treason to criticize the government, an act of sacrilege to criticize the then dominant church. Critics' heads often adorned the iron spikes on the parapets of castles as a warning against the loose wagging of disrespectful tongues. The quaint custom of quieting criticism by the extermination of the critic still persists under our atavistic dictatorships, but in the lands where people still cling to civilization the critic, like other people, is permitted to live.

A New Determination The difference is that people today are not content with criticism. They desire to do something about the evils they assail. They apparently have faith that something can and will be done about conditions and that the world can be made better than the unsatisfactory place it now is.

A Necessary Agent The work of the intelligent critic is often unpleasant, as unpleasant for him as for the one under attack. But it is a very necessary work. Dictators may allege that populations are not intelligent enough to conduct their own affairs, which may be true enough. But it is also true that, people being what they are, the honesty and honor of dictators is equally under question. A system that cannot stand criticism will probably not endure, and perhaps it ought not endure.

The Conscience of the World Ever since the beginning of the Reformation, the Protestant group of churches has occupied a position as the unofficial conscience of the world. Because of its honesty, its fearlessness, and its ideals, it has been well fitted for this work.

The Place of Our Church It is our belief that our church has a special message to teach and a particular task to perform in the field of criticism of world affairs. It is our task to continue now the task that was begun in 1830, to bring the gospel of Jesus back to the earth, to criticize social abuses and economic evils, to stand for high political standards and high moral ideals. It is our task to point not only our own people but other people as well to the spiritual way of life. This is our work.

It is most encouraging that today our people show a determination to go forward with these tasks, a determination that shows a real faith in the gospel we have to teach, a faith in the ability of the church to grow into that strength with which it can accomplish its work. The immediate future will test our faith and our sincerity. May we be found equal to the demands that are made upon us.

L. L.

Blue Pencil Notes

When I was a boy cowboys were not our heroes. They had not yet been glorified by the movies and the novel. We saw them go by occasionally with herds bound for more open country. As a matter of fact we were our own cowboys with our own ponies and small summer herds. Our heroes were the railroad men. Every boy's ambition was to drive a locomotive or at least to be a brakeman and run along the tops of swaying cars. The railroad has lost some of its glamour along with its patronage. Boys today generally look elsewhere. They look up. Why be tied to two rails when you can soar in the sky? But even yet what sight more thrilling than to watch the overland limited go thundering by causing the very earth to tremble? The aeroplane up there in the clouds is graceful, like a big dragon fly; but here is power, and here is something that speaks of dominion. The railroad built empires. Along its steel rails civilization flowed westward to adventure and romance—to the gold fields, to free farms in the west. The new stream line trains may be the train of the future, but when they slip by like a greased nondescript they can never have the appeal that went with the big old mogul that towered far above one's head, from whose lofty cab the engineer looked down upon the awestruck small boy whose swelling pride was to know the engine by number and its driver by name.

The locomotive arrived contemporaneously with the advent of the restoration movement. It heralded a new day, a new era, a new dispensation marvelous in its development. It came with promise. It kept to its two rails and has been a builder. It never did take to soaring overhead dropping bombs upon the homes of noncombatants. These new contraptions that jostle the angels up above have a threat as well as a promise. They too herald a new era. Is it to be one of building? Or is it to be one of destruction?

J. A. Gillen Appointed

By some inadvertance the name of Elder J. A. Gillen was omitted from the list of General Conference appointments contained in the Herald for May 1, 1934. The Saints will please take notice that the appointment of Brother Gillen was referred to the First Presidency and that after due consultation with those concerned he has now been assigned to labor in Independence and vicinity.

ACROSS THE DESK

Readjustment After Bereavement

Brother George G. Lewis wrote from his Australian home on April 11:

"This is just a personal note to let you know that affairs are turning out all right. Sister Lewis is home from the isolation hospital. Although weak, she is able to get around. We have found that the sustaining grace of Our Father has been abundantly enjoyed during our sad trial. The Saints of the Mission have been very kind and considerate and we feel thankful to God for the great blessings of the gospel.

"I find it necessary to take Sister Lewis away for a vacation in order that she might get rested and adjusted. I plan to take her to the Blue Mountains, about seventy miles from Sydney where she can enjoy the beautiful quiet and scenery of our mountains. After she is located comfortably I will be able to leave her and go about my own church duties, but it would be unwise under present conditions for me to undertake long journeys and absences for a little while."

The Saints will rejoice because Sister Lewis has recovered her health sufficiently to leave the hospital. Brother and Sister Lewis have been sympathetically remembered at the Throne of Grace throughout their afflictions.

Z. Z. Renfroe, writing from Western Oklahoma, points out as indications of progress in his district, that the last district conference revealed that there had been an increase in the number of tithe-payers as well as in the amount paid in, and that the local priesthood had preached more sermons and baptized more than in previous years. This is encouraging and we trust that the renewed and increased activity of the priesthood will be continuous.

What Can I Give?

By Gladys Mae Smith

THE HUSH of early morning . . . Unclouded sunshine flooding rain drenched Missouri soil . . . The peace of God brooding over the land of His people's inheritance. The powerful engine throbbed gently, the wheels revolved, and I was homeward bound.

Homeward bound! Magic words with two meanings—bound toward earthly home and loved ones, bound in dedication, purpose and desire toward heavenly home and God.

Some hours before the last conference hand-clasp had been given, parting with new found friends reluctantly made, I was saddened to turn from the sweet ten day association, unwilling to break the spell of the miniature heaven of which I had been for so brief a time a part. Seventy-sixth General Conference, what have you given me?

Truly I was hungered and you gave me food—spiritual food, a store upon which to feast my soul when the daily strain of duty weakens me. I was thirsty and you gave me drink—drink from the crystal stream of eternal life that flows ever through the fountains of obedience.

You gave me a renewed feeling of security. The world may be in chaos but the truthfulness of the word of God stands changeless as immovable as a rock. When doubts assail me, when the worries of the world crowd too closely, I shall draw on the inspiration I have received from you.

You have given me evidence of men's ability to link themselves together in one common interest, one general good. You have shown me how nobly man can batter down his own personal opinions, imperfections, peculiarities, for the great good of a number of souls. You have permitted me an insight of unity, of genuine love. And therefore, you have renewed my faith in my fellow man. Beneath the differing surface technicalities of human nature, I have caught a vision of a glorious oneness of purpose.

You have given me a higher faith in the workability of the divine plan of God and His chosen servants ability to carry it onward. You have given me greater courage and fortitude with which to meet the battles of life. You have given me broader vision, a keener desire for knowledge. You have recreated confidence in myself, my fellow Saints, and God.

What can I give? Such span of service as God shall deem sufficient, a willing and consecrated presentation of time, talent, and whole-hearted effort. Surely, surely in the light of the blessings heaped upon me, I could not in fairness and honesty give less.

Time for Action

By E. J. Hayden

As we are confronted with another interconference period, we must find ourselves face to face with the necessity of determining what our own attitude is to be; not merely what we shall believe, and think, and say; but what we do about that which we believe, and whether our thoughts will bear fruit in active confirmation of that which we say.

While it must be admitted that those who were privileged to attend the General Conference comprise but a small handful, among the membership of the church, yet this handful was gathered from the entire membership, and are now again mingling with the Saints throughout the whole world. And as leaven hidden in the lump will permeate the whole: so that spirit which pervaded every prayer service, every business session, every quorum meeting, and every class, during the entire conference, is destined to instill new life, new hope, and greater zeal, into the heart and life of every true Latter Day Saint. And as life, hope and zeal, inevitably beget action, we may confidently look for greater solidarity in motive, and increased efficiency in achievement, that has been witnessed since the forces of Zion were disrupted by the death of the martyrs. But while these are things for which we may confidently look, and for which we should most earnestly pray: it still remains for us, each and every one of us, to determine what our individual share in this grand forward movement is to be.

The time is now past, if it ever existed, when any true Saint can use the third personal pronoun, plural, when speaking of the church, and her objectives and achievements, or lack thereof. If this is not a personal matter with me, it is nothing to me. And no man ever asks what they are doing, or will do, with regard to that in which he feels a direct individual interest, and definite responsibility. In such a case, the question uppermost in the mind will be: "What can I do about it?" Or if he be endowed with capacity for leadership: "Let us do something about it." All too long have we been singing: "Mould me and make me after Thy will, while I am waiting, yielded and still." It is time that we change the tune, and sing: "Not forever by still waters would we quiet idle stay, but would smite the living fountains from the rocks along our way."

There is a lesson which we may learn from two young men who once sat in a young people's meeting. The subject under consideration was "The Surrendered Life." And one young man who had served his country's flag arose and said, in substance: "I do not like the wording of the topic for this meeting. For it is my experience that one who surrenders quits the fight, delivers up all of the equipment of warfare, and is thenceforth wholly subject to, and at the mercy of any whose forces may chance to be in the ascendancy at that particular moment. Moreover, the thought of surrender carries with it the idea of having been overpowered, and forced to submit against one's will. And one who has thus been subdued cannot be trusted, but must always be kept under observation, lest he shall seize the weapons of his captor, and again join forces with the enemy. While if a man enlists, he is in a position to be trusted, because he is in harmony with the interests of his commander, and is therefore provided with all that is necessary for him to become an efficient soldier. And in his oath of allegiance he declares that he will serve against all enemies whomsoever. And this is the position which I desire to occupy: Not as a prisoner to be watched and guarded, but as a soldier in the army of the Lord, ready at all times to do battle for the cause which I love. Surrender may be the first step in the lives of those who have been, or are in open rebellion. But unless surrender is followed by enlistment there ensues no security, either for captive or captor."

To this the other responded, saying that he did not agree with this idea: but that he had surrendered to the Lord, and that it was the greatest surrender of his life. And this indeed proved to be true. For having surrendered, this young man was only a pawn in the hands of the forces with which he was surrounded, and soon fell into the grip of the adversary, (for he possessed neither weapons nor desire to give battle to the foe,) and finally died estranged from all that makes for righteousness. But the other, unwilling to surrender, and determined to enlist in the army of the Lord, has risen to heights that at that time he knew not of, and stands today as an officer in that army, commissioned by the King of kings, and certain of ultimate victory, only conditioned upon his continued faithfulness to his duty.

It may be that, as a church, we face the sea of an untried economic program, with the barrier of a reduced missionary force upon our right, and the rocks of limited financial resources frowning at our left, and a host of creditors pressing upon our rear. Yet never before has the clarion call sounded so clearly in the ears (Continued on page 635)

Spiritualize Temporalities . . . . .

By L. S. Wight

NEARLY EVERYONE who ever attended school has heard the story of the fight between the sun and the wind to see which could make a man remove his coat in the least time. Each argued that he could get the quickest results with his methods until they agreed to put their powers to a test. The wind tried it first and used every method he knew to force the man to remove his coat but with each gust or gale the man would button his coat the tighter and the wind gave up. He could not force the man to remove his coat. Then the sun smiled on the man, making it more pleasant to remove the coat than to leave it on so he took it off very quickly. Persuasion succeeded where argument failed. Love conquered when force failed.

In the interpretation of the financial law of the church we find an identical situation. To argue with a church member that he should obey the financial law of the church is too apt to emphasize the financial law as something separate from the spiritual law of the church. It is likely to emphasize finance to the point where the member will think more of the money than of what it will do. It will tend to emphasize money as an objective rather than as a means to an end. It is too much like the wind trying to force the man to remove his coat. If we follow the example of the sun and with gentle persuasion create a condition in which the member will find it more comfortable to remove part of the contents of his pocketbook he will do so without the use of any force. His money or wealth becomes to him a part of the whole plan of life. It ceases to be an objective. His temporalities become fused with his spiritual goals and the temporal law becomes only a part of the whole spiritual law. His understanding is increased and the natural result is that it becomes easy for him to recognize that after all temporal law is actually spiritual law.

Divine revelation emphasizes that there should be no distinction between spiritual and temporal laws. The ninth verse of the 28th section of Doctrine and Covenants reads as follows: "Wherefore, verily I say unto you, that all things unto me are spiritual, and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam your father, whom I created; behold, I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him; for my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual."

In spite of the language of this revelation Latter Day Saint thinking has too often expressed itself on the basis that spiritual law and temporal law are equal, separate things. Argument has too often been based merely on the question of the necessity of recognizing the temporal law without regard to spiritual law. Some have contended that to recognize spiritual law as a thing separate from temporal law is sufficient to insure personal salvation. As a matter of fact they are not two separate laws. Temporal law is merely one part of the spiritual law and is in itself spiritual law.

IF we spiritualize our temporalities by recognizing God's basic laws we will develop an understanding of temporal law and the right attitude toward it. It will be very much like the man who found it easier to remove his coat under the warm persuasion of the sun while he could button it closer against the force of the wind. This was the theory behind the teaching of Jesus Christ. The warm appeal of love always was more effective in his teachings than the force of cold logic. He made his disciples want to do the things necessary to attain eternal life. He left an example that will be just as effective when put into practice in the social relationship of human beings today. Nor did he forget man's current needs along with his obligations to God when he said to the Pharisees who were trying to trick him, "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things which are God's."

When rich little Zaccheus climbed into the sycamore tree to catch a glimpse of Christ on his way through Jericho he did so because of his spiritual attitude toward his temporal possessions. When the people objected to Christ being the guest of this man who in their eyes was a sinner, Christ rebuked them in his statement to Zaccheus when he said, "This day is salvation come to this house." Christ did not have to urge this man to use his possessions for the good of the group. The attitude of Zaccheus showed that he had spiritualized his temporal things. This was not true of the young man who had come to Jesus asking for further instructions as to how he could inherit eternal life. Christ sensed the lack of proper spiritual attitude and because this young man's possessions were standing in the way of his

Old Enfield and Its People

By William T. Goulee

THE TOWN of Enfield and its environs can justly be proud of its historical and literary associations. It is said by some to date back to prehistoric times when England was an immense forest and formed part of the continent of Europe. Relics of the Old Stone Age, Middle Age and the Roman era have been found there.

It is believed the name "Enfield" is of Saxon origin, although the spelling of the name has undergone various changes,—in the Domesday Book it was spelled "Enefelde." In 1399 the manor of Enfield became vested in the crown and was a favorite royal hunting ground. In the 15th century a royal palace was erected by Edward VI for his sister who afterwards became Queen Elizabeth. When these two were children they had resided at Elsynge Hall which was believed to have stood near Maiden's Brook Forty Hill. Tradition says that it was here that Sir Walter Raleigh threw down his cloak for Queen Bess to walk on. But to revert to the palace (which stood in the town as we know it), this was demolished a few years ago and some of the remains are now preserved in Little Park. In the grounds of the palace between 1662 and 1670 a young cedar tree was planted, and according to tradition this tree was brought from the mountains of Lebanon, and was considered to be the oldest cedar in England. This too has been sacrificed to make way for modern buildings.

Baker Street also, has a share of historic anecdotes, for it was in this street that the celebrated Dr. Abernethy, who established the famous Saint Bartholomew's Hospital Lectures, eventually resided. His manner was often commented upon, and as one, Sir Ashley Cooper said, "Abernethy's manner was worth a thousand a year to him." Some of his patients he would cut short saying, "Sir, I have heard enough, you have heard of my book, then go home and read it." To a lady complaining of low spirits he said, "Don't come to me, go and buy a skipping rope." We are told Abernethy made little distinction between rich and poor, many times he was more attentive to the poor. He lost a royal appointment to George IV, because he had promised to give one of his famous lectures at the St. Bartholomew's Hospital. After such a laborious professional life, this celebrated doctor came to reside in Baker Street, and we can easily picture him enjoying meditative walks around this locality. He was buried in the parish church-yard in 1831.

Not far from here was a school at which Captain Marryat, the author, was educated, who started life as a sailor, going on many voyages, thus realizing the many ups and downs some of us may have experienced. His novels and stories of sea life soon found favor with the public,—vivid lights and shadows, lighthearted fun, grinding hardships, stirring adventure, heroic action,—contrasting in his day to the historic romancer and the then fashionable novelist.

Then we must not forget John Keats, the poet, who was educated in Enfield, and it was really due to the headmaster's son who encouraged Keats in his literary tastes. A shop about a minute's walk from Edmonton railway station, shows where Keats was apprenticed to a surgeon, although eventually his indentures were cancelled. We see in his early days a life of suffering, although four years only, passed between the publication of his first poems and his death. But we know that in those four years the frail consumptive won his place in the first rank of English poets. His ever passionate craving for beauty, showed itself in one of the most splendid of English sonnets,—"On First Looking Into Chapman's Homer." During those four years Keats' poems added another contribution, which for pure beauty of language is unsurpassed in English literature.

It was in 1609 that Sir Hugh Myddleton, on realizing the inadequacy and poorness of London's water supply, commenced the construction of the New River, which was supplied from a spring near Ware, in Hertfordshire. This was completed in 1613. When traveling to church, via Baker Street, one passes over this river placidly flowing many miles around the great metropolis of London. From this little Baker Street Bridge, we see on our left the Enfield Grammar School. We are pleased to note that some of our present church member's children, who have won scholarships, are attending this fine old school.

As we travel further along this road, there are still some old buildings and shops to be seen, not forgetting some that have been demolished. The writer remembers some quaint old clock shop, with the usual clock outside, but alas, it had two faces and they told different times. Then there is an old fashioned butcher's shop with tiled front, a chemist's shop, also a baker's; as well as a draper's that bring historic remembrance to the atmosphere. Then there is the Baker Street Chapel, a building usually noticed by every visitor. We learn this is the third chapel built on this site, originally used by a congregation of Presbyterian Dissenters over 300 years ago.

As one gets near our old meeting place at 317, there are some cottages which are thought to be at least 200 years old, and one of them, I think, has a particularly fine semicircular bay window, and although it stands on the roadway, it has so far escaped the hands of the improvement committee. We must not forget to make mention of the orchard not far from 317, still in cultivation. When we remember the many fine old orchards around Enfield that have been sold for building houses, etc.,—it seems remarkable that this one still remains on what is now a very busy Baker Street. One wonders what history has been made behind these old walls and gardens—what hopes, joys and sorrows, have gone to make up that history, and what history shall we make for our church in the days to come?

He gets most out of life whose attitude is that of appreciation instead of criticism. The two words call to our minds the contrast. Criticism implies microscopes, calipers and dissecting knives; appreciation suggests open minds, open ears, open hearts, wonder, adoration and love. It is the difference between scanning verses for their meter and listening to poetry for its inspiration and charm. It is the difference between analyzing the chemical properties of pigment and canvas and looking enraptured upon a noble painting. It is the difference between weighing out the lime, fat and sulphur of a human body and enjoying a friend.—Frank B. Fagenburg in "The Sin of Being Ordinary."

Be Kind

By Mary E. Gillin

I think if I could travel
The way of life once more,
I would try to be more kindly
Than I've ever been before.
For, oh, so many heartaches
Each one of us must bear,
And it lightens heavy burdens
Just to know that others care.

Sometimes we walk a lifetime
With those we love most dear;
And fail each day to utter
A single word of cheer.
Yet every night when shadows
Lie thick upon the grass,
The precious hours are vanished,
And never more will pass.

And so along life's journey,
With each declining sun
I'd like to know that somewhere
A deed of love I'd done:
So swift the "hours of morning"—
The noontide rushes by—
And then the "shades of evening"
Are greeted with a sigh!

We know that soon tomorrow
Will be here and called today—
It lingers but a moment
And lo, 'tis yesterday!
Now is the time for kindness—
Speak now the word of cheer
For the sunset glow of evening
Will in every life appear!

Government by Intelligencia

By B. A. May

Professor of Economics and Business Administration
Graceland College

THE WORLD in its age-long quest for good government has instituted many forms. Among these are autocracy—a government dominated by a strong man like Mussolini; plutocracy—a government by the rich classes; bureaucracy—a government by an intricate system of commissions and bureaus; and democracy—a government supposedly by the people and for the people. But now we have a government which might be aptly called an “eduocracy”—that is, a government by experts skilled in such fields as economics, political science, sociology, finance, and agriculture—a government run by the intelligencia, men who a few short months ago were elucidating to groups of college students the mysteries and complexes of economic laws, the principles of government and the fundamentals of the social processes.

The Roosevelt revolution has initiated a radical change in governmental personnel. Where once an office was held by a good, faithful party man who had worked his way up from the job of precinct committeeman, there is now a busy, rather harassed college professor, his cap and gown and notes thrown aside, busily engaged in helping to work out the New Deal.

PROBABLY the most brilliant of the academic stars featured in the New Deal in the Washington theatre is Dr. Rexford Guy Tugwell, doctor of philosophy, college professor, writer and economist. He has been called the philosopher, sociologist, and prophet of the Roosevelt revolution.

Mr. David Lawrence, experienced observer at Washington, says that Dr. Tugwell is the most important man in the administration. Another shrewd observer, Congressman McGugin of the third Kansas congressional district, acclaims Tugwell to be the master mind in the administration's agriculture program. Tugwell for several years previous to entering the Roosevelt administration was professor of economics at Columbia University and a prolific writer of books in economics. He is convinced that the great American system is in need of a thorough remodeling, but he is no less convinced that the plans for the new machine cannot be found in any radical imported creed such as facism or communism. Neither can he see value in revolutionary force.

Tugwell is a liberal, not a radical revolutionary. To him we owe the useful differentiation of a modern liberal from a radical. “Liberals,” he says “would like to rebuild the station, while the trains are running, radicals prefer to blow up the station and forego service until the new structure is built.” Professor Tugwell is America's foremost eduocrat and the high priest of eduocracy.

ANOTHER important academic star in Washington is Professor Adolf Berle, professor of law at Columbia University, brilliant lawyer, master of prose, moralist. A recent book on corporations written by Professor Berle and Professor Means aptly shows the clarity and fearlessness of Professor Berle's mind. One paragraph in this fine book is particularly apt. It states (quote) “The rise of the modern corporation has brought a concentration of economic power which can compete on equal terms with the modern state. The state seeks in some aspects to regulate the corporation, while the corporation, steadily becoming more powerful, makes every effort to avoid such regulation. Where its own interest is concerned it even attempts to dominate the state. The future may see the economic organism, now typified by the corporation, not only on equal plane with the state, but possibly even superseding it as a dominant form of social organization.” (unquote) In other words, Professor Berle thinks that unless certain modifications are brought about, the law of corporations may become the constitutional law of the new state.

Other characteristics mark Professor Berle and Dr. Tugwell to be the brilliant stars in the Washington panorama. Tugwell is an advocate of bold and drastic action. The public works program was far too small to please him. When speculators went on their spree last spring, he would have closed the stock and commodity exchanges. He demonstrated what he meant by thoroughness by having two professors draft a Pure Foods and Drugs bill which paralyzed with fright every food and drug lobbyist in Washington. Professor Berle pleads for a new order of business men inspired by higher ethics. In speeches to lawyers and business men he warns them that only with higher standards of conduct, and a sense of social responsibility will capitalism survive, even in modified form. He tells bankers that in England it is a high social offense for a banker to make a large personal fortune. On the other hand, Tugwell does not believe that big business men will be different until the system in which they operate is changed. While others see repentant industrialists and financiers eagerly cooperating in creating a new era, he sees only a lot of badly scared men who will return to their habits as soon as they dare.

NO DESCRIPTION of eduocracy is complete without mention of Professor Raymond T. Moley, formerly professor of Public Law at Columbia, and now a magazine editor. Moley is a hard-headed realist, a straight clear thinker, and well prepared academically and from the standpoint of practical experience. Moley, Tugwell, and Berle make up the three of the Roosevelt eduocrats.

There are other academic stars helping to put over the New Deal, but of course they are not so important as the big three. In the agricultural eduocracy one finds such men as M. L. Wilson, former professor of Agricultural Economics at Montana State Agriculture College; Modcai Ezekiel, the brilliant economist, co-author of the revolutionary farm bill; W. I. Myers, former professor of farm finance at Cornell, chief author of the farm mortgage act; Gardiner C. Means, Berle's associate at Columbia; H. E. Babcock, professor of marketing at Cornell.

Professor Warren of Cornell, who is one of the leading authorities on the commodity dollar, is the most influential in the administrations monetary circles. Dr. James H. Rogers of Yale is his close associate.

The National Recovery Administration Staff includes many academic men. There are for example such men as John Dickinson, former professor of law at University of Pennsylvania; Isador Lubin, former professor of economics at University of Missouri; William M. Splawn, professor of economics at University of Texas; Arthur E. Morgan, former president of Antioch College and now Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Of course, these are only a few of the many brilliant academic men now serving their country at Washington.

To be a chemist, it has been said, you must study chemistry; to be a lawyer or a physician, you must study law or medicine; but to be a politician, you need only to study your own interests. This is no longer true of the national administration, thanks to the Roosevelt revolution.

THE GREAT EMPHASIS of the New Deal is the recognition that the political safety of the nation lies only with public servants, trained in the arts of state and economic-craft, the true essence of eduocracy.

A politician thinks of the next election; the statesmen of the next generation. A politician looks for the success of his party; a statesman for that of his country. The statesman wishes to steer, while the politician is satisfied to drift. In eduocracy, there is no thought of the next election, no subserviance to party, no drifting. The course is charted, and the ship must plow through, no matter how severe the tempest.

THE PLATFORM of eduocracy consists of ten important planks:

ONE

Universal education, including public schools, colleges, institutes for adult education, and libraries. After all, education is the cheapest defense of any nation.

TWO

Expansion of our social insurance systems to include unemployment, old age, sickness, and other hazards to civilized life.

THREE

National planning in government, industry, and agriculture to insure economy in the use of our natural resources, the sustaining of mass production sufficient to meet the need of all, and the proper distribution of the products of industry.

FOUR

Increasing the efficiency of air, waterway, highway, and rail transportation, thereby facilitating commerce and travel.

FIVE

Expansion of governmental public health units supplemented by better and more extensive hospitalization in conjunction with national program of preventive medicine and public safety.

SIX

Cooperation of the United States with the nations of the world in promoting world trade, travel, and friendly relationships, and in other ways which will help to insure world peace.

SEVEN

Development of national, state, and community parks and playgrounds; stocking of streams and lakes with fish; beautification of the countryside; and in general increasing other facilities for wholesome recreations in order to limit the pressure of commercialized amusements.

EIGHT

Encouragement of science, literature, drama, and the arts, making

The Attitude of the Church Towards War

"Sue for peace, not only the people that have smitten you, but also to all people; and lift up an ensign of peace, and make a proclamation for peace unto the ends of the earth;"—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 11.

Our Law of Loyalty

Read by Oliver Cowdery to the general assembly of quorums at Kirtland, Ohio, August 17, 1835.

We believe that governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man, and that he holds men accountable for their acts in relation to them, either in making laws or administering them for the good and safety of society. . . .

We believe that no government can exist, in peace, except such laws are framed and held inviolate as will secure to each individual the free exercise of conscience, the right and control of property and the protection of life. . . .

We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments, and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected, and should be punished accordingly; and that all governments have a right to enact such laws as in their own judgments are best calculated to secure the public interest, at the same time, however, holding sacred the freedom of conscience.—From Doctrine and Covenants 112: 1, 2, 5.

Our Responsibility

Nearly ninety-nine years of time separate the two great documents on each side of this page. But they are not separated in spirit. They point us to a uniform kind of life and action.

Our great responsibility is to be loyal. The government, in subscribing to the Kellogg Peace Pact, declared for peace. It is loyal, within the scope of these two great documents of our church for us to declare for peace.

It is loyal for us as citizens and as a church to do what we can to influence our government to work for peace.

Happy are we to live under a government in which it is possible for us to serve Christ and serve our country with no division of loyalty.

Happy is the church—the international church—the church of Christ—that in Him we have hope of peace and brotherhood with all men.

dence in their judicial ability, I do not believe that it would be proper to so inter this document. If it is to be referred to anybody, I would prefer to refer it, or a copy of it, to the heads of all the governments of the world and let them deal with it. But I am particularly concerned with our own church as claiming to be the church of the Lord Jesus Christ and with the attitude of this body which we are privileged to represent. Personally, I have not the least doubt as to what my duty is as a Christian minister, and I am very happy to join today with the nineteen thousand ministers of the gospel of the various denominations in this, our own country, who more than two years ago pledged themselves to be opposed to war as an instrument of settling international difficulties. I have some pride, also, with reference to the church to which I belong, and do not favor being a camp-follower and shouting after the procession as it passes by, what my sentiments are; I prefer that the church of Jesus Christ should be in the van and give the tocsin of alarm, the call to the mobilization of the forces of the Christian church on behalf of universal peace.

That the situation confronting our world today is exceedingly delicate and full of tremendous danger cannot be denied by any who have read the newspapers and magazines or have been in

The Resolution Against War

Originating with the Quorum of Twelve and adopted by the General Conference of 1934

Whereas, the Christian ethic definitely postulates the solidarity of the human race, and makes the universal fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man basic to the Christian philosophy of life, and

Whereas, among the duties imposed upon the individual Christian and the church collectively, is that of following peace with all men, and

Whereas, the present restless state of the world, politically, economically, and socially, is filled with menace to the peace of all nations, therefore be it

Resolved, that this Seventy-sixth General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints does hereby put itself on record again as being opposed to war as an instrument of international adjustment and calls upon all nations and especially members of this church to loyally and faithfully support the Paris Peace Pact initiated by the United States, and also known as the Kellogg Peace Pact, which repudiates war as an instrument for the adjustment and settlement of international misunderstandings and difficulties.

touch with any of the peoples who are concerned with general well-being. It may be because we are ensconced in comparative safety in the center of the United States and a long way from the tidal waves of public opinion which are even now hurling themselves on other nations, we conclude that what we do not see does not exist. The cost of the World War to the United States was more than forty billions of dollars, and we hear a chorus of dismay because the new budget as it is estimated for the cost of recovery will reach a total of thirty billions of dollars. These seventy billions just for the part America took in the mad whirl of war. I can assure

"EITHER—OR"

The following is based upon and includes the argument made by John W. Rushton on the preambles and resolution adopted by the General Conference, April 13, 1934, at Independence, Missouri.

I DO NOT ARISE either in the mood of belligerency or in the expectation that it will be necessary to use any propaganda to convert Christian men and women to the support of the preambles and resolution presented by the chairman of this conference. I am not in favor of referring this document to the high council. While I have confiyou that in other nations there is a tremendous feeling of concern over the world restlessness. There are mischief makers belonging to two distinct groups. One group of mischief makers is the sensational newspaper and press people. They exist in other countries besides the United States. I have read newspapers in other countries which seem unfortunately, to have made American sensationalism the standard of their proficiency, and their front pages are covered with these mischievous suggestions which arouse the worst passions of the masses, those who are not capable of rationalizing or thinking their way through problems, but always meet such conditions with an emotional judgment in preference to an intellectual judgment. There are many of these people and they are dangerous. Another is that group of commercialists who seem to take morbid delight in engineering the turgid emotions of these masses, so that there will be resultant war and the consequent encouragement of those engaged in the manufacture of armaments for the murdering of the victims of the conditions we are trying to eradicate. According to the statistics the costs of the last war in lives and treasure were appalling; and it is well to keep in mind that it is not quite twenty years ago since the world which then believed itself to be in a state of impregnable peace was lulling itself to sleep by these easy-going professions as late as 1913. In little more than a year later war came upon our unsuspecting race and that war endured for a period of four years and a little more, plunging the whole world into incalculable misery and loss. Statistics show that twenty-eight thousand bullets were needed at a cost of twenty-five thousand dollars to kill every soldier who died in that war. It is a great waste of money, looking at it from the standpoint of commerce and economics, because the gangsters of Kansas City and Chicago can do that job for less than one hundred dollars. Why spend twenty-five thousand?

But figure it again. If you want to train your son for any of the professions, the medical profession for instance, it will cost you not less than ten thousand dollars besides eight years' time to fit him for service as a practitioner to say nothing of the investment of six hundred dollars which the mother and father must pay for obstetrical purposes to get him into the world besides the years of preliminary care. It costs more than twenty-five thousand dollars to get your baby boy ready for professional service in the world yet for twenty-five thousand dollars in the name of war he is murdered. Isn't it time we began to look upon this question in the light of cold reason rather than in the lurid light of unordered and uncontrolled emotionalism? Of the men who were with the Central Allies one in six was killed. Of the allies one in eight. Of the British alone one in ten. On every one of the sixteen hundred days the war endured, seven thousand men were killed and fourteen thousand injured. These were periods for example from July to October, 1916, where in France alone each day nine hundred English soldiers were killed and three thousand wounded. When the war was finished and the armistice proclaimed on the eleventh day of November, 1918, the sum total of dead, so far as could be counted, totaled not less than ten millions dead. Besides, there were twenty millions wounded. Ten millions were permanent cripples which have to be taken care of out of the taxes we people pay. Our own country, the United States, lost eighty thousand killed and had about two hundred thousand wounded, crippled and maimed to care for. That was the contribution in terms of blood and fire and vapor of smoke, which the race made to the God of War.

This country to a large extent became the banker of all the allied nations engaged in this hysteria of war with the consequence that as nearly as can be computed the war cost in terms of money one hundred seventy-five billions to two hundred fifty billions of dollars. I have never been able to really grasp, with an imagination lighted up by all kinds of illustrations, exactly what these figures mean. We are told that of the casualties of the British armies, whose remains lie in French cemeteries, more than half of them could not be identified. Thousands were battered out of existence physically. That is what war means. Now, is there no other way we can settle our differences of opinion? This resolution registers our firm conviction that there is. It would be just as sensible to believe that when any of the representatives of this conference get into disputes over any question about which they feel very deeply the only way we could think of to settle such difficulties would be to fall upon each other in the spirit of assault and battery and claim the victory because we had succeeded in this manner in establishing the righteousness of our cause. We, as Christian people of the United States, are solemnly pledged with sixty-one other nations to discard war as a means of settling international differences. If we do not find some rational way of settling our international difficulties, there can be no doubt but what we shall again see our world torn and bleeding again. Since the war the world is spending annually on "peace" under the heading of "DEFENSE"—$4,250,000,000. And in armaments since the war there has been spent $65,000,000,000. In Europe alone the standing armies are not less than twenty percent bigger than they were in 1913.

I believe that this conference in this year of grace 1934 could not do a better thing to establish the place of this church of Jesus Christ in the public affairs of our own country and the world at large than to follow the lead of this quorum of apostles, who are the special witnesses of Jesus Christ, and stand immovably loyal and determined upon the policy of Jesus Christ that "war shall be learned no more." And let us honor the men and the pledges of the men the world over which are upon this side of this question. According to the Society of International Law in the history of man dating back three thousand four hundred twenty-one years we have only known two hundred sixty-eight years of peace. And in these years eight thousand peace treaties have been concluded. To change this ghastly record something must be done. If it is true that "peace is a state of mind," then we can only hope for better results through enlightened and aroused public opinion. The League of Nations, the Disarmament Conference and Paris Peace Pact cannot prevail unless they are strongly supported by the moral and intellectual courage of the masses. So far, politics and the greed for profits have stood in the way of peace.

Today, we have to find an answer to the question, Is war necessary? Can the League of Nations succeed in abolishing war, which everybody recognizes as wrong, futile, and totally ineffective?

If the Disarmament Conference fails what is the alternative? The London Spectator of December 1, 1933, says:

"The fundamental question is whether a world whose constituent states are thrust in upon each other—their interests intertwined, their possible collisions demanding regulation at any moment—as never before in human history, is to live organized or disorganized. The alternative is, indeed, fallacious, for without organization and order it cannot live at all. It must either exist in the form of an ordered society or perish in swift and disastrous anarchy."

Must we believe that the League of Nations has failed? "Is there no hope for survival of that political philosophy which renounces war as an instrument of national policy and which sixty-two nations are pledged to preserve under the Pact of Paris? Must it be admitted that it has been demonstrated that in the conferences of civilized peoples covenants vital to the peace of the world cannot be openly arrived at? Is Hell the alternative to Utopia?" asks H. H. Raley in the Forum for March. Mr. Arthur Henderson, the secretary of the British Labor Party and president of the Disarmament Conference, says of the Leagues:

"The League is a league of governments, and it cannot be effective as an instrument of peace and justice unless the governments of which it is composed are honestly determined to use it for these ends. It is upon the governments, therefore, and not the League, that the blame for recent failures must fall. It

Lesson Nine—May 27

The Good News of the Kingdom

THE RISE of The Kingdom in the latter days was predicted no less than five times by Isaiah alone. (See Isaiah 9: 6, 7; 2: 1-4; 29: 14; 40: 1-10, and 62: 10-12.) The vision of the government which the peoples of the church are to establish in this age was the inspiration for most of the major prophetic messages. And this is the good news which the prophecy of Matthew 24 says is to be proclaimed to all nations as an accomplished fact.

The Kingdom cannot come until men are converted to the ways of God. That conversion implies that men have been taught, by one means or another, the ways of God. While trials and errors are means of teaching us the good, there is little doubt in the minds of Christian peoples that God has raised up men to teach us the good by the preaching of The Word. And this prophecy of the Good News of The Kingdom is believed by us to mean that God shall send forth teachers in the latter days who shall point the way to The Kingdom; and shall lead us in the building of that Kingdom. So that Matthew 24 is a prophecy, not only of the thing to be accomplished, but also of means to be used to accomplish it.

Of course, Matthew 24 is more than a prophecy of the thing to be accomplished and of means to be used. Like Daniel 2, it is a prophecy of the age in which The Kingdom is to be realized, and of the effects the establishment of this mode of government shall have upon political institutions generally. It shall be regarded as Good News; Glad Tidings. And, naturally, since it shall be regarded universally as The Way to govern the affairs of peoples, the outcome of the whole business shall be that The End of all ungodly government shall come. This is what all the major prophecies of The Kingdom have said in one form or another.

IDEATIONAL ANTIPTATHIES

One of the principal obstacles to the apprehension of the truth of prophecy is the obstinacy with which men cling to ideas in which they have long professed belief. Foolish as it is, we feel like we must prove those things to be true which we have always said were true. And how often, when some are trying to get us to see new aspects of a question, do we say: The point I am interested in is so and so. Yes; and how true it is, we are not easily interested in things it has been our habit to think about. These ideational antipathies—they are the principal obstacles to the apprehension of the truth of prophecy.

KINGDOM INACTIVITY

The principal evil that has grown out of the interpretation of Matthew 24 which imputes to that prophecy only a "preaching" content is that it has caused us to spend energy in preaching that should have been spent in building. We have been "talking" about Zion, The Kingdom, for more than one hundred years. If we had conceived, Matthew 24 to be a prophecy of the "building" of The Kingdom, no doubt we would not have been content to do so much talking and so little building. The Kingdom would have come by this time and the good news of that Kingdom would have reached the nations. And by the present time the race might have been well on its way to godly government.

UNPREPAREDNESS

How little the disciples of Jesus understood the Kingdom-building business may be judged by their question: "Wilt thou at this time restore The Kingdom to Israel?" Think of it; they had not yet learned that God is no respecter of persons; much less did they conceive the economic implications of "Our Father," and yet they imagined themselves to be fit for The Kingdom-building business. And, moreover, that question implies that the old Judean Kingdom, or the Kingdom of Israel, was identical in the thinking of the Jews with The Kingdom about which Jesus talked. Little did they realize what changes had to be made in political and industrial institutions before The Kingdom about which Jesus prophesied would become an accomplished fact. To them The Kingdom would have been a fact if only Israel instead of Rome had been supreme.

And so it is with us. Whereas today the good news of The Kingdom should be witnessed, whereas the fact of its establishment should have been authenticated; our traditions and conceits have blinded many of us even to the fact that the building of The Kingdom is our proper task. We still quote this prophecy of The Kingdom as if it meant nothing more than the preaching of certain doctrines which we call The Gospel. And many of us, like the Jews of Jesus' time, believe that The Kingdom would be a fact if only WE instead of others were the dominant power in industrial and mercantile life. Little do some of us realize what changes we must make in our economic institutions before The Kingdom, ZION, about which Jesus prophesied, can become a fact.

IT WILL COME

Now the tragic thing about all this is that it has undermined the faith of many in the idea of a Zion about which the Latter Day prophet talked from beginning to end. This situation may have been in the mind of Jesus when he asked, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke 18: 8. This is the thing which may have been in the mind of Jesus when he said, "The love of many shall wax cold." And if the present sleeping time was in anticipation, it might account for the reassurance of the coming of The Kingdom that is given in this prophecy. That The Kingdom will come in spite of infidelities and betrayal of trusts, and what-not, is the message of this prophecy.

The path over which the peoples of The Church, in common with the peoples of The World, must make their way to The Kingdom may be thorny; distress may lie in our course; follies of many sorts may mark our misbehavior; but the end shall come—the good news of The Kingdom is yet to reach the nations.

TWOFOLD PROPHECY

The prophecy of The Kingdom comes to us in two forms: (a) in the messages of the prophets; and (b) in the trends of the times. The signs of the coming of The Kingdom began to make their appearance about the time of the break-up of Feudalism. It was about the fifteenth century that the modern state began to take on its shape. Here was a decided turn in political affairs. From that time on industry began to take on its modern aspect; and the problems which industry in its new form presented turned men's thoughts to the question of Government. This is the age of political theory. Lock, Bentham, Mill, Spencer—a whole galaxy of intellectual stars began to shed their lights upon the problem of government. All this is a prophecy of what is in store for the race. The Kingdom is to come.

Social institutions are instruments of the moral will of men. We put into our governmental institutions what is in us. We have nothing else to put into them. And, therefore, to cause the thoughts and feelings of men about government to become godly is the first step to The Kingdom.

These changes in human nature are brought about by combinations of factors: examples, imitations, suffering, interactions of ideas, and whatnot—all such things are factors in the personal regeneration that must take place before the social reconstruction that will give rise to The Kingdom can take place.

The race has moved forward under the influence of its "saviors." It is the comparatively few really good, far-seeing, self-sacrificing men and women of the race who have been the chief factors in its progress. It is this class of men and women who, under God, will catch the vision of The Kingdom and who, through their teaching or preaching, will be His instruments of winning others to this governmental ideal—the righteousness of The Kingdom. This, too, is implied in the prophecy of Matthew 24.

We hold that The Church is the rallying place of such men and women; and that, through this institution, the forces of righteousness are to leave their impress upon The Kingdoms, or governments, of this world. First it will teach; second it will build. Through the activities of The Church the good news of The Kingdom is to come to all the world.

The implications of this prophecy of The Kingdom are far-reaching. The work to be done involves much more than the preaching of the word. The Church is not the only institution that is to have part in the building of The Kingdom. Besides the changes that need to take place in the peoples of The Church, there are changes to take place in the peoples of The World. All of these things must work together to bring to pass the fulfillment of this prophecy of The Kingdom. And some have missed the mark almost entirely in their attempts to interpret this prophecy because of their ideational antipathies—they have been interested only in this or that particular of the situation; they have had a distaste for other particulars of the prophetic situation; and they have not caught The Message of this prophecy.

But the leaven of The Kingdom has found its way into our political and industrial lumps. Our ideas about The Gospel and The Church and The Kingdom and The End of the world are in process of evolution. And discerning minds see in these things a witness to the truth of the prophecy: And this good news: that The Kingdom has been realized is to come to the nations in such manner that they shall know it is an accomplished fact. And then shall the end of all ungodly government come!

Some ingenious gatherer of statistics tells us that during a recent year thousands of letters from children, addressed to Santa Claus, reached the Dead Letter Office before Christmas, but in the whole month after Christmas only one letter came addressed to Santa Claus with a message of thanks. Ten lepers were cleansed, all receiving the same blessing, but only one of the ten returned to thank the Healer.—J. B. Miller.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE CHURCH TOWARDS WAR

follows that the remedy for recent failures lies not in scrapping the Covenant, but in resolving that it shall be properly applied."

Here, again, is what Mr. Henderson says in speaking for the British Labor Party:

"The Labor Party does not believe that war is inevitable. Never again, if Labor can prevent it, shall the peoples be thrown into another conflict in support of the false ambitions and sectional interests which national and reactionary governments pursue, never will the Labor Party agree that Great Britain shall make herself, or help others make, any war for purposes such as these. With the other civilized nations of the world, Great Britain has signed the Pact of Paris; she has renounced war as an instrument of national policy, every section of the Labor Movement is determined that that pledge shall be honored to the full. If any government should seek, in violation of that pledge, to involve Great Britain in war, it would be opposed by the united strength of the whole Labor Movement."

Can the Church of Christ dare to be less positive or less urgent in this vital matter? I believe today there can be no question in the minds of those who love Jesus Christ this resolution ought to be approved here and now, and when it is approved you can refer it to anybody you wish to so far as we are concerned.

it possible for these to become organic parts of the life of ordinary citizens.

NINE

Elimination of poverty, decreasing of excessive incomes, increase of inadequate incomes, prohibition of excessive holdings of wealth. This is not socialism of course, but merely enlightened capitalism.

TEN

Increase of a reasonable opportunity for men and women to unfold and develop their talents and to win the reward and appreciation of the public.

These ten basic principles constitute the platform of eduocracy. Already the present administration has gone far in making these ideals actualities. Above all, we must remember that the sure foundations of the state are laid in knowledge, not in ignorance; and every sneer at education, at culture, and at book-learning which is the recorded wisdom of mankind, is the demagogue's sneer at intelligent liberty, inviting national degeneracy and ruin.

Zion's Christian Legion

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE DIRECTOR OF SOCIALIZATION

By D. T. Williams

Zion's Christian Legion will have before it as one of its principal objectives the social life of its members. The activities engaged in in this connection will have a dual significance. By far the major emphasis will be placed on the purely social aspect for the purpose of developing the cultural life of those participating. However, at stated occasions the chief object will be to create means through which the operating expenses of the organization will be met.

The full dues of the organization as provided in the action of the general convention will be diverted to the purpose of helping pay the Auditorium debt. Thus twenty-five cents from every member every month will be sent to headquarters to realize this goal. In light of this fact there will be noted the necessity of using our social avenues for the creation of the necessary funds for operation. If every company were to set aside one day in the year to be utilized in this manner and would send the monetary results to the general office there would be sufficient to meet the operation expenses for the year succeeding. The same procedure could be followed to advantage in realizing funds for the operation of the divisional organizations.

To the tasks indicated in the suggestions set out above the director of socialization will give his time and talent. The work of this office will prove of the utmost value in the vitalizing of the institution. There will be the constant necessity of stimulating the membership through their social contacts and through these measures keeping them alive to the real tasks we have undertaken. Constant and consistent encouragement will be an essential factor in this connection and for this work every director of socialization should prepare himself.

Our advice to this officer is to seek preparation as the revelation suggests "by study and by faith." If he will consult the local library, if he has access to one, he should find some excellent helps. Don't be afraid to ask the ones in charge—they are there for that purpose and will be glad to assist; also seek suggestions from the experience of others. Here is an opportunity for service. Let us work together.

Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before . . . I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.—Philippians 3: 13, 14.

Theme: "Study My Law."

Call to Worship: Doctrine and Covenants 95: 3; 85: 36. ". . . (S) Hymn Response: "The Lord Jehovah Reigns," S. H. 120.

(S) Prayer.

Scripture Reading: The nineteenth psalm.

(S) Hymn: "'Lamp of Our Feet," S. H. 404.

Talk: One of the greatest needs in our church today, is the need for an enlightened church membership. Church history is replete with instances of peoples who have failed in the day of their greatest opportunity because they have been ignorant. Bunyan consigns ignorance, with many other people, to hell. There is no other place fit for it. To be ignorant, in this day, when the revelations of light and truth have so abundantly been given, is not Christian, and he who remains ignorant is an enemy to the kingdom of God.

If the revelation of Deity is to be made effective, it must be shared as well by the people as by the leaders of the church. One of the ways we may make this revelation effective is through a constant study of His law, and also through a study of the work of the Lawgiver.

Everywhere He is revealed. In nature, in the heavens, as the psalm says, in the lives of good people, and in the three books of the church, and also through His Spirit which is given to "those that love him and purify themselves before him." We should be the best-informed people in the world. We must be if we are to intelligently follow the leaders of the church. We can be if we study the law of God and pray that His Spirit may guide us in our meditations. "Knowledge is power," said Bacon. Knowledge of the word of God will bring the power of God down among us.

(S) Commission: Doctrine and Covenants 32: 3.

(S) Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, JUNE 24

Theme: "Be Valiant in Testimony."

Instrumental Prelude: "O reapers of life's harvest," S. H. 387; O. S. H. 98.

Call to Worship: John 6: 44. "No man can come unto me, except he doeth the will of my Father who hath sent me. And this is the will of him who hath sent me, that ye receive the Son; for the Father beareth record of him; and he who receiveth the testimony, and doeth the will of him who sent me, I will raise up in the resurrection of the just."

(S) Hymn: "Breathe on Me, Breath of Life," S. H. 191.

Scripture Reading: Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5.

Hymn: "Faith of Our Fathers," S. H. 291, verse 1.

Story: Of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. This occurred on June 27, 1844. The story may be found in Church History, volume 2, page 741ff. They gave their lives in witness of the Truth. Conclude with Doctrine and Covenants 113: 5-7.

(S) Hymn: "Faith of Our Fathers," S. H. 291, verses 2, 3, 4.

(S) Benediction: "And now may God grant unto these my brethren, that they may sit down in the kingdom of God; yea, and also all those who are the fruit of their labors that they may go not more out, but that they may praise him forever. And may God grant that it may be done according to my words, even as I have spoken. Amen." (Alma 15: 68, 69.)

NOTE: This service could very well be tied up with the midweek prayer service of the 27th. The theme of the martyrdom presents an opportunity for a moving worship service.

Picture appreciation, "Christ Blessing Children," by Plockhorst. This should be given by an adult.

Hymn: "I Think When I Read That Sweet Story of Old," Saints' Hymnal, 150, by junior choir.

Sermon Talk: This should be a message to the children who are to be baptized, and should be given by the pastor. See "The Two Ways," Stepping Stones, March 27, 1932; "Follow Directions," Stepping Stones, December 4, 1932. Jesus was our example; he was baptized, so if we desire to follow him, we too must be baptized. Then we must continue to follow Jesus by doing the things he wishes us to do. Some of these things are mentioned in the article, "What Is Your Objective?" in the Stepping Stones, December 24, 1932.

If baptism is to take place at this time, "Let the Children Come," Zion's Praises, 108, may be played softly as the candidates go to the font. If baptism is to take place later, the service may proceed as follows:

Story: "Perry Makes His Decision," Zion's Hope, June 12, 1932, or play given by the children. (See suggestions below.)

Closing Hymn: "Let the Children Come," Zion's Praises, 108.

Benediction.

Prayer.

Scripture: Mark 1: 16-20.

Sermon Talk: Texts: John 12: 26, Ephesians 5: 1. The men whom Jesus called to be his apostles in the early days left whatever they were doing and followed Jesus. The apostles today spend all their time in the work of the church. Tell briefly of some of the persecutions the early followers of Jesus had to endure. (Acts, chapters 4, 7 and 16) but emphasize the fact that they received so many blessings, so much joy and satisfaction in working for Jesus, that they were brave and courageous. Paul says he counted it a pleasure to endure persecution for Jesus. (2 Corinthians 12: 10.) Then there were many people who followed Jesus, who did not actually leave their homes and go with him as he went about teaching and preaching; they did it by living right in their homes and among their friends and telling others about Jesus.

Story: "Four Fishermen of Galilee," page 46, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw, (Luke 5: 1-11) or "The Boy Who Became a Friend of Jesus," page 58, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw. (John 6: 1-15.)

Hymn: "Jesus Calls Us," Saints' Hymnal, 337.

Story: "Timothy, the Boy Who Followed Jesus," page 38, Knights of Service," by Emerson O. Bradshaw, or "Paul, a Follower of Jesus," adapted from the story appearing page 89, Knights of Service, by Emerson O. Bradshaw. (Acts, chapters 9, 13, 14, 16 and others.)

Closing Hymn: "Onward and Upward," Zion's Praises, 232. Benediction.

FOURTH SUNDAY, JUNE 24

Theme: "Latter Day Followers of Jesus."

Prelude: "Jesus Is Calling Today," Zion's Praises, 111, Saints' Hymnal, 332.

Call to Worship: "Praise Ye the Lord. . . . Praise the name of the Lord." (Psalm 113: 1.)

Response: "Blessed be the name of the Lord from this time forth and for evermore." (Psalm 113: 2.)

Hymn: "Blessed Be the Name," Zion's Praises, 113.

Prayer.

Scripture: Proverbs 21: 21; John 8: 12.

Hymn: "Jesus Is Calling Today," Zion's Praises, 111; Saints' Hymnal, 332.

Sermon Talk: There were at the time God established his church in the latter days, and there are now, many followers of Jesus as faithful as those in the early days, about which we talked last Sunday. Tell of the experience of Joseph Smith the first time he visited the place where the plates were hid; he was shown the difference between good and evil, and the consequences of both obedience and disobedience to the commandments of God, in such a striking manner that the impression was always vivid in his memory; that a short time before his death he said that "ever afterwards he was willing to keep the commandments of God." (Page 90, Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, by Lucy Smith.) Tell of others who worked faithfully in the early days of the church. Mention ways the boys and girls of today can help in God's work. Urge them to be faithful in doing their part.

Story: "A Boy Who Followed Jesus," (Joseph Smith. Church History, volume 1, chapter 2; Young People's Church History, chapters 1 and 2.) Told by a junior boy.

Edward Partridge, Church History, volume 1, pages 158, 170, 171, 202, 660; Vision, May, 1929, page 237.

Department of Religious Education

Religious Education in 1934

By C. B. Woodstock

The passing of a General Conference marks the close of a two-year period of church endeavor and the opening of another similar period with abundant challenge and promise of achievement. The period just closed was marked with the uncertainty and distress of a financial depression on its physical side, but with a definite turning of humanity to God and a searching for the enduring certainties of spiritual life. In all churches there has been a definite turning toward spiritual values, in sharp contrast to the widespread reign of evil forces in the world manifest in low morals, license, corruption and banditry. In the face of these conditions the church must enter with vigor upon a constructive educational program calculated to reach and inspire all who will listen to its message.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION MUST BE PLANNED

The church school has an unusual opportunity. It is the organized effort of the church to reach and help its membership to meet and overcome many of the insidious obstacles which lay in the road of growth and progress. It must constructively build the ideals and character necessary to true and fruitful Christian living. In this the church school must effectively supplement and enhance the divinely appointed work of the priesthood. It must minister to little children, to youth, to adolescent, to middle and advancing age. It must carry the message of the gospel with truth, earnestness and conviction. Its message must be clearly defined in terms comprehended by each age range, and carried by teachers and leaders of skill and power.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION MUST BE AGGRESSIVE

As we look forward into the coming months we realize that our program must be ordered to definitely carry forward the message and programs of the church. We must effectively teach the principles of the gospel to our children and open to them opportunities which will permit them to engage at once in activities as individuals and as groups, giving growth and development in true Christian character. We must make possible a genuine, churchwide participation in the work of the Restoration, through which those who share its tasks shall attain spiritual vision and stability and find a realization of their finest, noblest selves. We must not only seek this growth and satisfaction for ourselves, but the influence of the Restoration, as an actual demonstration of God's truth and power among men, must permeate every community where the name of Latter Day Saint is known.

OUR GOAL IS ZION

Thus in time shall Zion become a reality, and the gospel be preached in all the world. The church school is concerned with the educational development, the means of mental and spiritual growth so necessary in achieving our concept of Zion. To this end are our materials gathered. For this purpose is all our emphasis upon method. And to achieve this objective are all the consecration and devoted effort of teachers and leaders.

EMPHASES FOR THE YEAR

Early in the year a series of emphases were determined and broadcast to pastors and church school workers.

These are tersely set out in the inset on this page. They should be helpful in making up local and district programs. These will receive further discussion in succeeding copies of the Saints' Herald.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATIONAL STAFF

As formerly, the work of Religious Education will be directed by F. M. McDowell, of the First Presidency. His chief concern as general director of religious education is the administration of this phase of the total church program in the stakes, districts and branches of the church.

The immediate work of the office, general correspondence, supervision of quarterly preparation and direction of the training program will continue under the charge of Charles B. Woodstock, associate director.

The work of the adult division is to be supervised jointly by C. B. Woodstock and Mrs. Eunice Smith Livingston. Mrs. Livingston is also the representative of the general Women's Committee of the church, and will bring to the work of the women of the church the inspiration and direction resulting from the general committee's action.

The young people of the church are fortunate in securing the joint direction of E. E. Closson and C. G. Mesley in determining their program. These brethren are both very busy in other assignments but will give such assistance in conference as may be possible. Their wide experience in young people's work and their concern for the future guarantee much help.

For the Children's Division Mrs. Fern Weedmark and Mrs. Mildred Goodfellow of Topeka, Kansas, have been chosen as joint directors. These sisters have already made splendid contributions in general institute work and in the Children's Division Worship Programs. For a year Sister Goodfellow has edited our primary quarterly. From their joint leadership we may expect encouraging and helpful direction.

Members of the staff plan to provide a continuous supply of suggestions, directions and helps through the columns of the Herald. Letters of inquiry should be addressed to the general office, Auditorium, Independence, Missouri. Since the budget of the department is limited letters requiring a reply should enclose a stamp.

Values of Home Life and its Relations to the Church

By Mrs. Bernice Reed

THE HOME is the foundation of all society. Home from the Anglo-Saxon, denoting originally a dwelling, came to mean an endeared dwelling as the scene of domestic love and happy and cherished family life.

Home's not merely four square walls,
Tho' with pictures hung and gilded;
Home is where affection calls—
Where its shrine, the heart has builded.

The home is of importance only as a tool, a means to the final ends of the family life. The test of its efficiency is not whether it maintains traditional forms, but whether it best serves the highest aims of family life. The family is more important than the home, just as the man is more important than the clothing. The form of the home changes; but the life of the family continues unchanged in its essential characteristics.

Before church or school the family stands potent for character. We are what parents, kin, and all circumstances that have touched us daily and hourly for years have determined we should be. Stronger than memories that remain are the marks of habits, tendencies, tastes, and dispositions acquired in our homes. The great work of the family is the development of Christian persons in the home. Principles will have little value unless translated into practical methods, and records of actual experiences.

CENTRAL in religious education is the life of the family. The church has always realized its duty to exhort parents to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Students in religion and morals should be observers, and investigators using materials that will help them to build up right attitudes, appreciations and understandings. Individual parents are becoming more and more interested in the rational performance of their high duties, and theirs is a general desire for guidance. Religion in the family is not to be a wistful memory of the past but a most vital force in making of the better day that is coming.

Homes are wrecked because families refuse to take home living in religious terms, in social terms of sacrifice and service. They who marry for lust are divorced for further lust. Selfishness, even in its form of self-preservation is an unstable foundation for a home. What we call the "home problem" is more truly a family problem. It centers in persons; the solution awaits a race with new ideas, educated to live for more than dust—for personality rather than for possessions.

WE NEED young people who establish homes, not simply because they feel miserable when separated, nor for a boarding-place, but because the largest duty and joy of life is to enrich the world with other lives and to give themselves in high love to making those other lives of the greatest possible worth to the world. Everywhere men and women are answering to higher ideals of life. We seek a better world for the sake of a higher degree of perfection, taking the life of Jesus as the perfect example.

We are under the highest and sternest obligations to discover the laws of the family, that will by their nature and purpose, find right standards for family life, to discriminate between the things that are permanent and those that are passing, between those we desire to conserve, and those we discard. Methods of securing family efficiency will not be discovered usually by accident. There is a science of home direction and an art of family living; both must be learned with patient study. It is a costly thing to keep a home where honor, the joy of love and high ideals dwell ever. It costs time, pleasure, and so-called social advantages, as well as money and labor. It costs thought, study, and investigation. It demands and deserves sacrifice; it is too sacred to be cheap.

THE FAMILY as the child's life-school is thus central to every social program and problem. Interest in the child's welfare is for the sake of the child himself. To fail at the point of character is to fail in God's great and wonderful plan. We fail altogether, no matter how many bathtubs we give a child, how many play grounds, medical inspections, and inoculations unless that he in himself be strong and high-minded, loving truth, hating a lie and habituated to live in good-will with his fellow men, and with high ideals for the universe. We acknowledge the importance of the physical as the very soil in which life grows. But personality is not solely or even chiefly physical, but rather spiritual, and the fruits are more than the soil, and a home exists for higher purposes than conveniences; these are but its tools to its great end. For the purpose of social well-being we must raise our thinking of the family to the aim of the development of efficient, rightly minded characters. The family must be seen as making spiritual persons. Taking the home in religious terms means then, conceiving it as an institution with a religious purpose, that of giving to the world children who are adequately trained and sufficiently motivated to live the social life of good will. The family exists to give society developed, efficient, children. It fails if it does not have a religious, spiritual product. It cannot succeed except by the willing self-devotion of adult lives to this spiritual personal purpose.

A family is the primary social organization for the purpose of nurturing and training the young, but its duties cannot be discharged on the physiological plane alone. This elementary physiological function is lifted to a spiritual level by the aim of character and the motive of life. Families cannot be measured by their size; they must be measured by the character of their products. The family needs a religious motive. It demands sacrifice. To follow lower impulses is to invite disaster. The home breeds bitterness and sorrow where men and women court for lust, marry for social standing, and maintain an establishment only as a part of the game of social competition. To sow the winds of passion, ease, idle luxury, pride and greed is to reap the whirlwind. A family is humanity's great opportunity to walk the way of the Cross. In homes where this is true, where all other aims are subordinated to this one of making the home count for high character, to training living into right social adjustment and service, the primary emphasis is not on times and seasons for religion, but religion is the "life" of that home. The good man comes out of the good home, the home that is good in character, aim and organization. Of course, there are exceptions to all rules, but this is true in the majority of cases.

THE BUILDING OF A HOME is a work that endures to eternity, and that kind of work was never done with ease or without pain and loss, and the investment of much time. No nobler social work, no deeper religious work, no higher educational work is done anywhere than that of men and women, who set themselves to the fitting of their children for life's business, equipping them with principles and habits upon which they may fall back in trying hours, and making of home the sweetest, strongest, holiest, happiest place on earth. With ideals such as these what a great work God can accomplish with the young people of the church! United in one cause, to serve God with their all. Surely we would be climbing toward the mountain top. Heaven only knows the price that must be paid, and heaven only knows the worth of that work.

The first great element to be preserved in all family life is that of the power of the small group for the purpose of character development. The family is the ideal democracy into which the child is born. Here habits are formed, ideals are pictured, and "life" itself interpreted. Our age needs men who think in terms of spiritual values, who rise above the measure of pounds and dollars, and weigh life by personal qualities and worth. This is what the true home does. It prizes most highly the helpless infant. Its riches do not depend upon that which money can buy, but on the personal qualities of love, goodness, and kindness. The true home gives to every child-life the power to choose the things of the world on the basis of their worth in personality. Only the mistaken judgments of later years, the short-minded wisdom of the world makes youth gradually lose the habit of preferring the home's spiritual benefits, to the material rewards of the world. The family is the primer in the moral education of the race. Here the new-born begins life in an atmosphere saturated with love. The family is the most important religious institution in life today. It ranks in influence before the church. The higher the type of family life, the more holy it discharges its functions in the training of its children.

Christianity today makes an ideal family; it makes family life holy, sacramental, religious in its nature. The family exists for personal and spiritual ideals, and in Christianity, it is inseparably connected with the teachings of Jesus.

Religious education means the development of character, it includes the parents' aim to bring their children up to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. And that it cannot be accomplished in some single period, some set hour, but is continuous through all the days; that it pervades not only the spoken words, but the actions, organizations, and the very atmosphere of the home.

NORMAL PERSONS never stop growing. Just as children grow all the time in their bodies, so do adults and all others grow all the time in mind and will and power of the higher life whenever they live normally. We grow spiritually not only in the church and under the influence of song and prayer, but we grow when the beauty of the woods appeal to us, when the face lightens at the face of a friend, when we meet and master a temptation, when we brace up under a load, when we do faithfully the dreary daily task, when we adjust our thoughts in sympathy to others, when we think by ourselves. The children in the home are being moved, stimulated, every instant, and they are being changed in a minute, but nevertheless, real and important degrees by each impression. There is never a moment in which their character is not being developed either for good or for ill. Moral training is not a matter of cultivating honesty today, purity tomorrow, and kindness the day-after. Character cannot be separated into a list of independent qualities. We seek a life that, as a whole lives and follows truth, goodness, and service.

By every possible means parents should help children to think of God as the great and good Father of all. God in terms of Fatherhood is the sum and source of all that is ideal in personality. The questioning child is the parents' rare opportunity to give the great truths of life and creation, and it should be remembered they are vital to the child's moral development. Children need more than rules for living; they must feel motives and see ideals, as in doing the right for reasons of love as well as a duty and profit. Children learn to live through the lives they are now living. Real preparations for the world of business and larger responsibilities come by the child's experiences in his present world of play, schooling, and family living.

The home organization as a social community will give every member, according to his ability, a share in its guidance and will expect from every member a free contribution of his powers. Its rules will be made by the will of all, and its affairs governed not by an executive board composed of the parents, but by the free participation and choice of all. When this is carried on into your home church it creates a desire to serve. We are making progress when the young are interested in religious work and want to serve. It strikes a keynote for uplift and advancement. Lessons learned by doing, are never to be forgotten. The home and church can work together so well in this course, that children will hardly know where home duties stop, and church duties begin. The church really is just coming forward in the work, that a true home has begun.

The greatest unkindness that we can do our children is to train them to lives that do not play their part. Do not let your child's duties become a farce, let them exact as much of him as the world will later do; that is efficiency, accuracy, thoroughness, and fidelity. Are not these qualifications to be commended in the church? The life and work of the home ought to train religiously for citizenship by causing each to bear his due share of the burdens of all. Where no voice speaks for the higher things, where no ties of indignation against wrong sweep into language, where the children never feel that the parents have great normal convictions, "where no vision is the people perish."

A child's play is nature's best method of education. Play is idealized experiences. Therefore the family should find space and time for the child's need of spontaneous, free-activity in play. The religious value of play lies in the fact the child is learning the art of living with other lives. The home will not lose its harmony and beauty if it is filled with playing children. Playing together is the closest living, thinking, and feeling together. Where games are shared, confidences, secrets, and aspirations are shared also. Nothing seems more beautiful than the sight of an entire family playing at home, in the park or off in the woods, or in the fields in the country. Life is strengthened, ideals are lifted, and family ties knit closer, gratitude is quickened and courage stimulated by play of this kind.

A home without books is like a home with only one window. Good books will help to build up high ideals, while bad books tear down. Here the church can help in placing before its young members books that will feed their souls. Sunday school teachers can recommend right reading for the different grades and cause the titles of good books to be placed before the young of the church to stimulate interest in the better things of life. Love is the motive and atmosphere of the true home, but love blossoms into words and bears fruit in a thousand deeds.

The period of family worship is most valuable in interpreting the spirit and meaning of religion. It makes definite tangible and easily remembered, the general impressions of religion. Family worship lifts the whole level of family life. We can always afford to do that which is most worth while. We tend to set the making of a living before the making of lives. But we need to see the development of the powers of personality, the richness of character, as the ultimate dominate purpose of all well being.

Sunday should be kept as a day of personal values, sacred to that life of love, friendship and joy in the presence of one another, which is the essential life of the family. Keep the day as one of family unity, go to the place of worship together, where the children can find expression for spiritual ideals. The going to worship together on the Sabbath is one of God's richest blessings to a family. Activities of this day should not be carried beyond the rest and refreshment stage. The dynamic of youth must go somewhere and do something. Fundamentally it would rather go to the good than to the bad. It waits for leadership, friendship, and for a life's task. What a great responsibility this challenge is to the districts and branches of this church of Jesus Christ today! Are we going to be big enough to see ahead of self and willing to submit our all to the cause, with God's divine guidance?

Both church and home are agencies of religious education. There should always be a blending of the highest and best of family life with that of the true church. The family cannot afford to take the attitude of hostile criticism, for it is fighting its first and most natural ally. If the forces for spiritual character be divided, how easily do the opposing forces enter in and occupy! The family needs the cooperation of the church in its task of developing Christian lives. The family needs the power of this larger social body controlling social conditions and making them contribute to character building purposes.

The church needs the cleansing powers of kindly, wise, creative criticisms. And anyone can find fault, but he is wise who can show us a better way. It is our business to aid the church to greater effectiveness. Our church today in some sections awaits the services of the chosen men of priesthood in the re-dedication of their lives, talents, their all to this "marvelous work and a wonder." We should think of the organization and mission of the church in terms of family life, and of the ideal of the Divine Family.

The true church will exist to grow lives to spiritual fullness, and to this end, all buildings, adornments, exercises, teachings, and organizations, will be as tools, as means serving that purpose. Just as a home gives its best and exists for the child and holds to itself all other lives, so does the church exist for the little ones, and so holds and uses all other lives. The church, just like our own family, exists not to minister to our taste, but that we may all minister to others. The business of the church should be the training of the young, to become Christian school boys, Christian voters, and later Christian parents. The fundamental need of our young people today is a new vision, and a new passion, for the home and family. The church is the prophet, the interpreter, revealing the spiritual meaning of all daily affairs and quickening us to right feelings, to highly directed passion for worthy ideals. Parents' criticism of the activity of the church is reflected in their offspring. What the church of tomorrow will be, is determined very largely by the parents' attitude today.

Let the church be to the family that larger home where families live together their life of fellowship and service in the spirit and purpose of religion, where there is a natural place for everyone. The family must aid its young people to see the opportunity which the church offers for ideal social relationship, which direct themselves to high and attractive service. The church must bring religion to our hearths and homes; worrying less about a "home over there," and showing how truly "heavenly homes" may be made here. It must not only get lives ready to die, but it must prepare them to live. To live together in peace, and harmony, and with true brotherly love for one another. When we can really do this, we as Latter Day Saints can truly sing, "We're Marching Onward to Zion."

Our Father, may we not seek to find how close we can stay in our own homes and to our own selfish interests, but how far we can go in unselfish service into a needy world.—Young People's Leader.

The Readers Say---

Thankful for Gospel in Her Childhood

I have been a member of this church nearly twenty years, having been baptized at eight years of age. I remember vividly the day of my baptism and of how Elder George Morris who baptized me impressed upon my mind the fact that I was to be a "Latter Day Saint," and that I was to be careful how I acted so that no reproach would fall on the church through my conduct. I had good teaching at home and in the Sunday school and church by good men and women and this fact further impressed itself upon my mind.

I do not mean to say that I have been nor am perfect, but I have always tried to conduct myself as a real Latter Day Saint should. I truly believe that because of my early baptism I have been kept from many of the evils that are in the world.

I have had many beautiful spiritual experiences and blessings of health. My mind has been enlightened often to glories of the gospel. The past week I have had a beautiful experience and a feeling of just how those who have lived in the world feel when they find this gospel of Christ in their maturity. I had often wondered if I could enjoy the gospel more had I been older in years when I joined. I am truly thankful that the gospel found me when I was young and tender in years because it has saved me much.

Each day that I live makes me more desirous of following in the footsteps of Jesus, and adhering to his principles in my life, that I might do good to those around me and be of service to my fellow man.

Here is a little motto from which I get much comfort:

"When trials are greatest,
And all goes wrong
Just buckle your armor
And trudge along.
The way that is weary,
Dark and cold
May lead to shelter
Within the fold;
These trials are meant
To make you strong
So buckle your armor
And trudge along."

Herald Brings Her Good News

I want to congratulate the editors for the good reading that is found in the Herald, and for the pictures of our leaders which are now appearing. It is wonderful to look upon the faces of those with whose writings one is familiar. When I read of the good works of these leaders, I wish that I was able to put all their photographs in a frame and place them in the church.

For many years I have wanted to meet the President of the church and to attend General Conference, but as each conference comes, and I am unable to be there, I am glad to read a report of it in the Herald. I pray that the church may accomplish much good in the year to come.

Please pray for me.

Take It to God in Prayer

It is twelve years since my wife and I were baptized into the church. My companion was taken ill in April, 1932, and died in May. In my weak and imperfect way, I still strive to go on in the work which I know to be true. Not by the testimony of man alone, but by his many blessings has God proved his matchless power to me in time of sorrow, doubt, danger, and great need.

Experience has taught me that if I go to the heavenly Father with the problems of life, he will aid me in solving them. Sixteen months ago I had a spiritual experience which troubled me exceedingly. After praying continually over the matter, the meaning was given to me, and took a great burden off my mind. No matter how small or large the problem we may have, if we take it to God, he will help us.

I often think that if the brothers and sisters of the church would take the matter of choosing a life companion to God in prayer, asking his direction and his blessing, we would have no need for the divorce court. Marriage was ordained of God in the beginning, and God is unchangeable.

I want to serve my Master and my fellow men in whatever way I can. May his Holy Spirit be with the church.

PUEBLO, COLORADO.

God Cares for Us Through Kindness of Others

Through the kindness of one of the Saints I am again receiving the Herald. It is indeed a welcome messenger, as I am unable to attend church services owing to illness. It is the only means I have of getting church news except when the Saints come to visit. I have been shown that God is ever caring for us by the many kindnesses done me by Saints and friends, even by people I scarcely know.

My sincere wish is that sometime I may, in a measure, be able to show my appreciation for my many blessings.

During my illness I have had much time for meditation. Before this I did not realize the definite and vital importance of a right attitude toward our so-called "small sins." Few of us realize the responsibility we share as a church in setting a proper example before the world.

BESSIE GUYER.

PORT ELGIN, ONTARIO.

Sister Mary Clark, formerly of Oklahoma, wishes to notify her friends that they have moved from Bailey, Oklahoma, to Fort Worth, Texas, where they have Sunday school and church each Sunday. Saints living in Fort Worth will find them gathered on Sunday at 2550 Eferom Street. Catch the Main Street and Roscoe Heights bus and get off at Schoot Store.

Her son, Roy, and daughter, Mary, were baptized in November and December at Dallas, Texas. The family also attended conference there in February.

Mr. and Mrs. John T. Mahoney, of Alva, Wyoming, requests Saints living in San Antonio, Texas, to make the acquaintance of their son, Joe A. Morris, who is in the 67th Squadron at Randolph Field, Texas.

QUESTION TIME

A. B. PHILLIPS

Does taking the sacrament of bread and wine renew our covenant with God?

This is the real significance of that part of the sacramental prayer which calls upon those partaking to:

"Witness unto thee, O God, the eternal Father, that they are willing to take upon them the name of thy Son, and always remember him and keep his commandments which he has given them, that they may always have his Spirit to be with them."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22.

This is the same covenant that we take when we obey the gospel and are baptized into covenant relations with the Lord. Man is liable to change and to fall away from his covenant, and therefore when we take the sacrament we signify anew that we are willing to observe the obligations made when we became parties to the divine covenant. The gospel covenant provides that we on our part covenant to keep the commandments, and the Lord on his part covenants to give us his Spirit in witness that he acknowledges the validity and force of the covenant with him. When we take the sacrament we "witness" again to him that we are willing to observe our part of the covenant made, that we may "have his Spirit to be with" us—the divine Witness to the covenant. This is truly a renewal of our covenant.

However, the partaking of the sacrament does not of itself renew the covenant, for we must partake "Worthily" and must in worthiness bear witness to God that we desire to observe its obligations. Otherwise there is no actual renewal of covenant made, and the sacrament becomes a condemnation to us. We must partake with right motives and full purpose of heart, which means to renew spiritual strength and communion. Jesus said: "Except ye eat the flesh and drink the blood" ye have no life in you; which is a comparison with eating food to renew strength, something we do regularly. We "always remember him" with a view to the keeping of his commandments.

Does Matthew 6: 17, 18 mean that anointing for a fast is necessary, for a reward?

I do not think this was the intent of the words used, but rather a warning against fasting for an outward show. Jesus had noted that hypocrites were wont to "disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast," but it was customary for the Jews of that time to anoint their heads as a part of toilet operations, hence to continue to do so while fasting would not make them so conspicuous. This explains why he said to them.

"But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly."—Matthew 6: 17, 18.

This indicates that it is a right attitude and heart which entitles one to a reward, and not necessarily that one is to be rewarded simply for anointing the head with oil. The anointing here mentioned was not in the nature of a church ordinance, but rather of a general custom of the times.

Should we always kneel when praying?

In the Bible prayer is referred to more than five hundred times, but there is no command which requires any particular posture during prayer on most occasions. The church is commanded to kneel when the sacramental prayer is offered, which is a special occasion for a special purpose. Kneeling is an act of homage, and was customary before rulers and certain men of great authority. Seven instances are mentioned of persons who prayed kneeling, it being a special occasion in each instance. Several instances are also recorded of those who prayed standing. Jesus impliedly indorsed prayer standing, if done with a right heart, for he commanded:

"When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses."—Mark 11: 25.

From the evidence and illustrations available it seems that the occasion should largely govern, and the posture adapted to the occasion may be assumed.

New Enthusiasm and More Cordial Fellowship

Flint Saints are showing renewed enthusiasm and vigor this spring. Church attendance is increasing in all departments, and a more cordial fellowship in the social activities is in evidence. The classes of the adult and young people's departments are organized and are sponsoring many services and activities. The goals set by these organized classes create new meanings in the tasks of the church and renew the spirit of endeavor and consecration.

"The Amazing Cosmopolite," a one-act religious drama, directed by Allen C. Pohly, was presented on February 25. March 16, the young people's class gave a Saint Patrick's party at the church. The young adult class sponsored a pancake supper on March 23. The manufacturers of the pancake flour made and served the pancakes as an advertisement. This increased the profits from the supper which are to be used for building repairs.

Easter Sunday was a day of special services. A baptism and confirmation service was arranged for the morning hour. Four children, two young men, and an adult entered the church. In the afternoon a union sacrament service was held at the Newall Street Church with Stanley Shears at the organ for both services. The special feature of the evening service was a program of music "The Christ Triumphant" directed by Ruth Wallace with Zola McNamara at the organ and Beth Notter at the piano. The soloists were A. H. DuRose, Ruth Yager, Lucile Provost, Beth Notter, Roland Provost, Bessie Little, Lucile Barker, and Allen Pohly. The church was made beautiful with flowers presented by members and friends.

On April 13, a pot-luck supper, sponsored by the adult class, was followed by a one-act farce comedy "Soul Vibrations" directed by Mr. and Mrs. Allen C. Pohly. On April 20, a chop suey supper was given by the women's groups at the church. The young people gave a miscellaneous shower for Evelyn Haviland whose marriage to Mr. Percy Lang occurred April 14.

Wage earners of Flint branches were asked to contribute one day's wage or salary during the month of April. Of the one hundred thirty-four wage earners solicited, sixty-six responded. The pastor is making a like request for May since the funds collected are not sufficient to do the great amount of repair-work necessary.

Two deaths have occurred here recently, Mr. Thomas Wood, husband of Sister Elizabeth Umphrey Wood, and Sister Emil Palmer.

The Newall Street congregation enjoyed a sermon from Elder J. Charles Mottashed the morning of April 22.

Thayer, Missouri

Priesthood Are Leading the Way

Of late this branch has been wonderfully blessed, the priesthood sounding a high note of spirituality.

Elder S. W. Simmons preached several nights, his sermons being most uplifting, and the Saints rejoiced at the inspiration he brought them.

Brother Keir, of Independence, stopped there and preached one night.

Elder Ross and wife were also here one night and presented the Saints good advice and a fine talk on duty.

Elder A. M. Baker has given the members some excellent sermons when he has been home from his mission field.

The Saints are expecting soon to see Elder W. E. Haden. They rejoice in his coming for he brings strength and courage.

A baptismal service is expected very soon.

Everyone works in this local. There is responsibility and an opportunity to serve for each member.

The branch is growing and the members are planning greater activities especially for the young.

Workers regard Thayer as the center place of activity in this region and are going out to preach at surrounding points. They have more calls to preach than they have members of the priesthood.

Seven Baptized at Santa Ana

Pastor Louis J. Ostertag reported seven baptisms in his branch, Santa Ana, California, to Apostle E. J. Gleazer, a short time ago, as follows:

"We had seven baptisms, one on Easter and six on April 8. Sister Bernice Mutz, twelve, was baptized Easter, and a family by the name of Martin on April 8. He is forty-five, she is forty, and their three children. Sister Rosa Clapp, wife of Rollin Clapp, was baptized too. Brother Inman visited this family at their request down at Escondido, eighty miles south of Santa Ana, and they know the work."

Park-Presidio Church, 405 Arguello Boulevard and Clement Street

A group of Park-Presidio Saints had the pleasure of welcoming Patriarch Gilbert J. Waller on his arrival from his home in Honolulu on the steamer Malolo. Having had advance information of his visit, officers of the congregation called upon him to be speaker the following Sunday morning. Elder George S. Lincoln offered the opening prayer, making a special plea that this brother be imbued with the Spirit so that his message might be an inspiration to all present. The writer has had the pleasure of hearing Patriarch Waller on numerous occasions, but can testify that never before had he witnessed such a pronounced evidence of the Spirit. All expressed the same opinion.

Brother Waller occupied the pulpit for Los Angeles Central Church April 22, and that evening he addressed members of Santa Ana Branch. April 29, he spoke to the members of the San Francisco congregation which meets at Danvers Street and Casselli Avenue. Brother Waller is a true representative of God, and wherever he goes, he imparts the beautiful spirit which the Master wants his disciples to display.

The Wednesday evening prayer services held at the home of Brother and Sister Holling have been greatly enriched by the presence of Elder George Lincoln. The Saints have witnessed wonderful healings through the ministrations of Elders Lincoln and Edward W. Nelson as well as other gifts of the gospel.

Sister Dutie Goff has been a regular attendant at these meetings and testifies of her healings. She is planning to go South, but the membership hope to see her return in due time.

Sister L. B. Shippy surprised the members with a visit recently. The principal reason for her presence was that on April 17, her daughter, Miss Luella Shippy, and Mr. Jack Hurst were united in marriage by Pastor Edward W. Nelson. Sister Shippy took advantage of the prayer service the following Wednesday and testified of her blessings in years gone by, especially those during the past few years of depression. God has been with them, and it is the prayer of the Saints that they may continue to be blessed, and carry on their good work in the Southland.

Patriarch G. J. Waller Again Visits Mainland

Patriarch Gilbert J. Waller whose home is in Honolulu, Hawaii, was gladly welcomed by California Saints upon his arrival on the steamer "Malolo," in April. His presence in San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Santa Ana branches as well as in other groups, strengthened the members. Wherever he goes Brother Waller takes the Spirit of Christ with him. His sermons have inspired the Saints on the Western Coast.

Thayer Man Advises Saints

The World Waits—

The world is not waiting for more eloquent preaching, nor smoother organization, nor more beautiful buildings, nor a united church, much as we desperately need all of these; the world is waiting for a demonstration of Christ in our living.—Frank B. Fagerburg, in "The Sin of Being Ordinary"

Columbus, Ohio

Second Branch, Rinehard and Twenty-second Streets

The primary department presented an Easter program of recitations and dialogues. The juniors' contribution was a beautiful anthem. Each child was presented a marshmallow egg. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and palms, the church school having a membership of one hundred and sixty-five.

The sacrament meeting was in charge of Elder R. E. Madden and Bishop H. E. French. The Spirit of the Master was present to a marked degree.

The choir sang an Easter cantata, "The Thorn-Crowned King," in the evening. They wore robes of black with small white collars. The choir was assisted by Vera M. Hunter, organist, and a trio composed of Margaret Dragoo, Lucinda Madden, and Marie Cheeseman.

The women's department met April 12, at the church. A paper on "Patience," was read by Blonde Carey, and one on "Our Birds," by Grace Zellars. A poem, "Dandelion Greens," was read by Mayme Morgan.

A minstrel show sponsored by the three Columbus congregations, was given at the Knights of Pythias Hall, for the benefit of Missionary John R. Grice. Carl E. Turvey was interlocutor and there was a chorus of twenty-four voices. The end men were C. B. Turvey and Nathan Weate. The end women were Bertha Hinkle and Dolly Overby. ### Third Church, South Wheatland Tabernacle

On Easter Sunday the church was well filled at all services. The sacrament meeting was one long to be remembered. Before the service was opened the priesthood retired to an outer-room and there they prayed that God's Holy and Divine Power might be present to bless his people. The congregation prayed silently in accordance with the vocal prayers.

Elders Welsh, Scharfenberg and Vickroy were in charge, and Priests Walters and Dougherty administered the emblems. Elder G. P. Myers, formerly of Third Church, was present. He is now working in another part of the city. The Lord spoke comfort and assurance through his servants to certain of his people, to the congregation as a whole and to the priesthood.

The Easter sermon in the evening was by Pastor F. C. Welsh.

During the past month Sister Dougherty had as guests her daughter, Sister Martha Smith, of Parkersburg, West Virginia, her two children, and her husband, Elder Harry Smith. Brother Smith is pastor of Parkersburg Branch, and Sister Smith was formerly a worker in Third Church.

During the past month the Saints have had visits and sermons from Elder G. P. Myers; District President A. E. Ander-ton; Elder Harry Smith, and District Missionary John R. Grice. Other speakers were Elders Welsh and Vickroy and Priest Ted Dougherty.

On Friday, April 20, the Zion Service Club of Third Church enjoyed a potluck dinner in the evening, and at this time each guest confessed his height by paying five cents for each foot. An hour of story-telling and singing followed.

The priesthood have been busy spreading the gospel wherever opportunity presented.

There have been many sick to visit and Pastor Welsh has been a good example to others in this work. Each Sunday afternoon and many nights in the week the priesthood carry the light of the gospel to friends of the faith. On the afternoon of April 28, Elder Welsh held service at the Home for the Aged, Elder Scharfenberg and Priest Ted Dougherty assisting. Sister Mary Welsh played the piano for the service.

Cleveland, Ohio

Actively Progressing—Honored With Guests and Visitors

Cleveland is moving forward. Much has been gained from the district and General Conferences. Many have been especially blessed in the recent past. The members rejoice at the baptism of Sister C. R. Bennett who attended General Conference with her family.

The women have served two suppers and sponsored a play given by the Kirtland Dramatic Club. The money raised is for repairs on the church building. These workers are now selling a silk quilt the top of which was donated by Sister Lindsay, now of Kirtland.

Cleveland local held a reception in honor of Brother and Sister Lindsay's golden wedding anniversary May 9.

Lately they have enjoyed visits from Patriarch George Robley, Patriarch and Sister J. A. Gunsolley, Brother Leon Burdick, Brother and Sister George Lindsay, and Brother Hammond, of Akron, and family. While visiting here Brother Gunsolley ordained Brother L. Vanderwerf to the priesthood.

The Mother's Day program in charge of Floyd Kelsey, was attended by the Lockwood Cliffe-Kelsey concert pianist and composer, who presented her latest composition, "Mother Mine," specially written for Mother's Day. This beautiful song was sung in Cleveland's leading churches on that day.

Holden Stake

Holden, Missouri

A very good representation of members from here attended the General Conference and were decidedly benefited by the spirit and uplift of all the services. The young people were well represented in the attendance, and interest has been stimulated.

Two recent deaths here have saddened the Saints. Mrs. Wayne Lycan, formerly of West Virginia, passed away at Oakley Sanitarium following an operation. The funeral was preached by Brother John Sheehy, assisted by Brother C. F. Scarcliff. Sister Bertha Meggers, of Pisgah, Iowa, was visiting her sister, Sister C. A. Silsby, and with her husband was attending the General Conference. She was stricken with rheumatic fever and passed away Thursday, April 26. The body was taken to the home at Pisgah for interment. They were accompanied by Brother and Sister C. A. Silsby.

Miss Martha L. Burr departed for Cameron, where she will make her home. She came to Holden in 1925, to enter the Holden Home as nurse, and filled that position till the removal of the Home family to Lamoni in October, 1933. She declined a request to continue with the Home in Lamoni, deciding to return to her former home at Cameron. Miss Burr has given good support to the local church work, and will be missed at Holden.

Miss Lucille Burroughs, church school supervisor, assisted by H. B. Thompson and Robert Dillon, is directing a campaign to increase attendance at the church school and all services. Two new classes have been formed to provide for the increase.

The young people's cottage prayer services continue to draw a large attendance.

The present stake officers of the young people's organization are continuing the pace set by their predecessors. Three regional meetings are provided for. These are preparatory to a general gathering which will be held, possibly at Holden, some time in June.

Elder W. S. Macrae came home from the Independence Sanitarium week before last, much improved but is advised by the doctor to refrain from any responsibility for an indefinite period.

Holden Stake makes another contribution to the group in Washington, D. C., in the person of Sister Myrtle Carr of Holden. She accompanied Sister El-Marie McCormick to Washington, following Sister McCormick's visit.

President F. M. Smith and Apostle F. H. Edwards were in Holden last week in consultation with stake officials. Elder H. B. Thompson, of the stake high council, is assisting with pastoral duties to relieve Brother Macrae for a season. Brother Robert Dillon, newly-elected member of the board of education, is learning that there is a liberal supply of applicants for each position on the faculty.

Warrensburg, Missouri

This year the young people's division, supervised by Charles Johnson, has sponsored a variety of activities. During January and February a group of twelve students met regularly once a week at the home of Sister Walter A. Johnson for study and practice in extemporaneous speaking.

The dramatic club gave a one-act play at the Warrensburg High School at the chapel hour which was enthusiastically received. The play was coached by Mary Thistlethwaite, and later was presented to the Saints at Jefferson City.

In the inter-church tournament at Warrensburg, eight churches competing, the Latter Day Saint Warrensburg young men's team, skillfully led by Robert Thistlethwaite, not only won the championship but also the admiration and respect of the spectators by their good sportsmanship. At the termination of the season a reception was given the players by the young women at the home of Jewel Banks.

In a second series of contests sponsored by the Warrensburg W. C. T. U. Kenneth Andes was awarded the silver medal for declamation. The selection given was "A Race for Life," which he presented in an appealing and effective manner.

A Mother's Day program will be given at the eleven o'clock hour May 13. A candlelighting service will come in the evening.

Those from Warrensburg attending the General Conference the full time were S. M. Andes, Ammon Andes, and Sister Jonnie Raville. In recent sermons Brother Andes has been giving the congregation the benefit of some of the good thoughts gleaned there.

Strasburg Mission

The Saints in this community are laboring diligently in the service of the Master and though they have not gained new members recently, feel that as a group, they are progressing rapidly. They are reaching out to grasp each opportunity the church offers for study and development, and are looking forward to studying for credits in the church school.

Strasburg members thank all who have come to lend them assistance and to instruct them from time to time. Brother W. S. Macrae, stake president, has been of special help.

Through the combined efforts of the group, Strasburg Mission is steadily growing spiritually and numerically. Four years ago only two families of Saints lived in this community. Now there are eight families, and other families expect to move here.

On the night of March 28, a large group of young people from Holden, with their leader, Brother Hampton, met with Strasburg members and conducted prayer service at the home of

Elder and Mrs. Arthur Ferrett to Return to Australia

Elder and Sister Arthur Ferrett will conclude their visit of several weeks in America when they sail for their Australian home on the S. S. "Montrey" May 30, from Los Angeles.

Brother and Sister Ferrett first arrived in Independence and glimpsed the Stone Church and Auditorium March 4. Since that time they have visited extensively with the church in America, seeing Lamoni, Nauvoo, Carthage Jail, Kirtland, viewing Niagara Falls, and crossing into Canada to visit Windsor in company with their son, Colin. They came to this country to realize the dream of a lifetime—to attend a General Conference of the church, and how they rejoiced in the spirit of this event!

Now these two travelers are going home, taking with them the best wishes and friendship of many in the church. Bon voyage, Brother and Sister Ferrett.

Jerome F. Wildermuth Bishop of Lamoni Stake

"The first gesture of the church in its work of rehabilitation and support of the central places" is the way Apostle J. F. Garver described the special service at Lamoni, Sunday afternoon, April 29, in which Jerome F. Wildermuth was set apart by Presidents F. M. Smith and F. M. McDowell as bishop of Lamoni Stake. Present on this occasion were the two members of the First Presidency, Bishops G. L. DeLapp and N. R. Carmichael, Apostle Garver and stake officers.

Sister Essex, where the mission still holds weekly prayer service. Their theme was "Pray for Righteousness." The total attendance was forty-five, and the feeling of unity and high purpose was greatly enjoyed. Strasburg Saints thank the Holden young people for their thoughtfulness, and urge them to come again.

The Saints gathered at the home of Sister Essex April 1, at nine o'clock for sacrament service. It being Easter, also, Pastor Roy Kleckler, gave as a theme talk a vivid word picture of the crucifixion and resurrection of the Lord. Following this good service the members hurriedly repaired to the school building nearby where they held church school and preaching service. They have been using the themes for worship suggested in the Herald. Following the church school a short musical program accompanied the bringing of sacrifice offerings to the altar. All had made special preparation for this service, and were repaid by the beautiful spirit there.

Pastor Kleckler, who for two months has been preaching at Holden, is at home again, and the members gladly welcome him and his family.

Since the last letter from this group, there have been two weddings, Virginia Shannon, formerly of East Independence, and Howard Satterlee were married early in the winter, and just recently Blanche Smith and Heber Hoover were married by Missionary S. S. Smith at the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

A few of the members here had the privilege of attending General Conference throughout the sessions, and brought back a fund of knowledge that is proving of great benefit to all.

Bates City, Missouri

The little church here is filled every Sunday morning, and the group has an interesting Sunday school.

Two weeks ago F. A. Russell, of Independence, was the speaker in the morning. Elder J. A. Koehler was also a recent speaker.

On the second Sunday night in June the young people of Bates City have been promised a treat. The "Village Choir" from KMBC is coming to sing for them and F. Alden Russell (Ted Malone) will be the speaker. This service will be held at the Methodist Church as the Saints' church is not nearly large enough to hold the crowd which will be there.

The young people's class, with their leader, F. E. Ford, spent last Sunday in Blue Springs and came home feeling that the day had been profitably spent.

Institutions and men in the mass, like delinquents, unless adequately led, invariably sacrifice the future to the present gain.—Jesse S. Dancy, "Contributions Not Controversy," in the Christian Century.

Lennox, California

This Mission Is Active

Saints of this mission feel that they are receiving daily the blessings of God.

A pretty wedding was solemnized on the evening of March 22, when Miss Fay Hutsell became the bride of Earl Woods, son of Brother and Sister E. M. Woods, of Lennox. The ceremony was performed by Elder W. J. Nuckles, in the presence of many relatives and friends. The best wishes of this congregation go with the young couple, who will live at Inglewood.

On Sunday, April 1, six classes were presented in an appropriate Easter program. The entertainment, in charge of Sister Henrietta Root, included the efforts of those from the beginners to the young people's classes.

Pastor W. J. Nuckles has returned from General Conference reporting a wonderful gathering, excellent class work, and study periods.

Hibbard, Indiana

Series of Meetings Comes to Effective Close

Many branches in Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan District were represented in an all-day meeting, May 6, at Hibbard, which brought to a close a series of meetings conducted by Elder A. W. Whitehead.

Services Sunday, May 6, began at nine o'clock, at which time sacrament was served to over one hundred members. At ten o'clock local Saints were happy to witness the ordination of two of their members, which was the fulfillment of prophecies given by several visiting elders. Immediately following the confirmation services, a cafeteria luncheon was served, after which the adults presented a short play, "Las' Daze of School." Eighteen men and women took part.

At three o'clock, two candidates were conducted into the waters of baptism, being confirmed immediately following.

Eighty-three guests remained for the evening service, to whom hot sandwiches and cake and ice cream were served at six o'clock. The day's services were in charge of Elders Forest E. Meyers, of Mishawaka, Indiana, William Hardy, of Niles, Michigan, and W. C. Whitehead.

During the prayer and testimony meeting, a great number of inspiring prayers and testimonies was given.

Sister Irene Crum requests the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her mother-in-law, who is suffering from a severe affliction.

A number of this congregation attended the evening services in Mishawaka, conducted by Apostle D. T. Williams, and all were overjoyed to hear the report of Apostle C. F. Ellis's appointment. He has the good wishes of the many Saints, and the sincere gratitude of them for bringing the true gospel to them over twenty years ago.

Members of this congregation have recently suffered the loss of two of their number, an only son of Brother and Sister Stevens, Ernest Clive, and Sister Ellen Risby.

Northwestern Ohio Young People Hold Conference

"Why I Am a Latter Day Saint" Theme of Contest Which Culminates in This Event

The young people's conference of Northwestern Ohio District was held at Saint Marys, Ohio, April 28 and 29. Visiting young people from branches throughout the district and from Dayton, of Southern Ohio District, brought up the attendance of the meetings.

The theme of the gathering was "Why I Am a Latter Day Saint," and the conference brought to its culmination a contest on that subject sponsored throughout the district in the form of competing essays. A number of these were read at the Saturday evening meeting. They challenged the gathering to the high ideals of Latter Day Saintism and made plain their appeal to the youth of the church.

All meetings of the conference were marked by a spirit of progress and God's benediction was with his people. Real determination to live the assertions of the conference is found in the heart of each member who attended.

Elder Sly, of Bradner, and Elder Ulrich, of Dayton, addressed the young men and women, urging them to accept the inheritance of their fathers and begin the work they are to do in the church.

Vinalhaven, Maine

Young People's Motto: "Onward to Zion"

The home of Elder Archie Begg was the scene of a beautiful but simple wedding ceremony April 16. Helen Arey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Irwin Arey, and Gerald Webb, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Webb, were married, Brother Begg performing the ceremony. Immediately following, a shower was given in their honor at the church. Refreshments and the evening's entertainment were in charge of Mrs. Stephen Webb.

On Easter Sunday, a program of songs, musical selections, slides, and other special numbers, was enjoyed.

The following Sunday evening, the young people were in charge of the service, which was composed of music, speeches by young members, and other numbers.

Prayer meetings in this congregation are much enjoyed. The Saints are trying to live up to the young people's motto: "Onward to Zion."

Biloxi, Mississippi

There are some faithful members living at Biloxi, and they rejoice to hear the good news of growth and progress in other branches. They have a good Sunday school, and Brother Albert Miller comes every second Sunday and preaches for them.

Biloxi members would be happy to have traveling elders of the church visit and speak to them. They pray for the church, that it will continue to go forward.

Lamoni Stake

Special Conference Installs Bishop Jerome Wildermuth

At a special stake conference April 29, Jerome Wildermuth was installed as bishop of Lamoni Stake. The event was of importance to both the people of Lamoni Stake and to the general church; to the former it meant the coming of a "full-time" bishop; to the general church it signified the beginning of the program, emphasized at General Conference, of strengthening the center places in the work of developing Zion.

As the congregation gathered at ninety-three for the worship of the church school, the theme of the day was seen in the motto on the stage, "Lamoni Stake, A Gateway to Zion." That idea prevailed throughout the day with the spirit of strengthening the stake as an integral part of the work of the gathering.

In the sermon of the morning President F. M. Smith challenged the congregation to their unique place and great responsibility in the work of the church. Especially did he stress the task of the stakes in developing for the occupation of the Saints who would gather to the central places.

An assembly representative of all parts of the stake gathered in the lower auditorium at two o'clock. Seated in front were Presidents F. M. Smith and F. M. McDowell, Bishops G. L. DeLapp and N. R. Carmichael, Apostle J. F. Garver, and the members of the stake presidency, D. Blair Jensen, T. S. Williams, and Roy Cheville. The stake president reviewed the recent history of the stake bishopric; the necessary departure of Bishop DeLapp to assume his work in the Presiding Bishopric; the impossibility of appointing his successor because of the shortness of appointees, and the patient waiting of the members of the stake. A quartet sang softly, "Take My Life and Let It Be Consecrated," and then the two members of the First Presidency set Bishop Wildermuth apart for his special work. With warmth and conviction Bishop DeLapp spoke of his fellowship with Lamoni Saints and of his reluctance in leaving for the larger field. Apostle Garver described the service as the first gesture of the church in its work of rehabilitation and support of the central places. He challenged Lamoni Saints to receive this responsibility with gravity and understanding.

This was an inspiring service. The hopeful outlook and the presence of spiritual fellowship were auspicious of good work ahead.

Since the conference Bishop Wildermuth and the stake president have been touring the stake, visiting the several branches, making friendly contacts and surveying their field.

Lockwood, Missouri

Telling the Gospel Story

There are twelve members of the church in this little city of eight hundred people, and they are doing all they can to inform the people of the latter-day message. The townspeople are friendly, and the Saints hope to add to their little group.

They met at the home of James Hancock the evening of May 5, to witness the marriage of Sister Cordelia O. Dobbin and Brother D. L. Hancock. J. W. Hancock, father of the bridegroom, officiated.

The Saints note with pleasure the return of Apostle J. F. Garver to this mission, and know that with his assistance the work will be well cared for.

Lockwood lies one hundred forty-seven miles from Kansas City, in the midst of a fertile region of timber and prairie country. It is in Dade County.

Rock Island, Illinois

The monthly adult party was held out of doors at the home of Brother and Sister L. A. White. Games were played after which refreshments were served.

Brothers F. C. Bevan and W. W. Richards have been preaching some interesting sermons. The former spends every third Sunday in Galesburg, preaching to the Saints. His services are appreciated. Brother E. R. Davis, district president, and Brother W. W. Richards gave interesting talks on the General Conference, which they attended.

Miss Marcene Webber, of Davenport, former president of the Zionie Order of Noblemen, will leave soon for Des Moines, Iowa, where she has accepted a position.

Several young people of the branch are anticipating the pleasure of attending Nauvoo camp this summer.

The young people of Rock Island Branch are sponsoring a Memorial Day picnic, May 30, at Jens' Grove, Fifth Street and Thirty-first Avenue, for every member of the district. Extensive plans are being made by the various committees, and it is hoped that a large crowd will attend. The general chairman is L. W. Stiegel, branch president, assisted by L. A. White.

Independence

Of the two hundred fifty-five seniors in this year's graduating class of William Chrisman High School, one hundred eight are members of the church. It was announced at this meeting that sales from the General Conference handcraft booth of the women amounted to $217.35, which sum was turned over to the Bishopric after a sum of $21.73 was designated as tithing on the amount. The workers have about thirty-five dollars' worth yet outstanding, quilts to be delivered, etc.

Stone Church

The young people's department of the Stone Church has undertaken a project to do some finishing work on their meeting room, known as the "choir" room in the Auditorium. A sum of one hundred dollars has been set aside for the purpose of tiling the walls. Other work under contemplation includes plastering the walls, erecting a platform, and purchasing curtains. Toward this finishing work the To-Ko-Lon Class has voted to raise a sum of forty dollars.

Fifty guests sat down to a pleasant meal when the women of District 1 A had a covered-dish luncheon May 3, at the Dining Hall. Officers present in addition to group workers were Mrs. Ephraim Brown, supervisor of Stone Church women; Mrs. Charlotte Koehler, supervisor of women in Independence, and Mrs. D. J. Krahl, in charge of friendly visiting. Women of the various districts in the city hope to meet frequently to discuss their undertakings and problems.

"We love our mothers because they first loved us" was the theme-thought of Apostle F. Henry Edwards' sermon Sunday morning which he dedicated to the mothers. His address was inspiring, and the congregation left with a deeper appreciation of the meaning of Mother's Day. Apostle Edwards was assisted in the services by Elders H. G. Barto and A. M. Chase.

The Stone Church Choir provided music under the direction of Paul N. Craig, Hazel Scott Withee at the organ. The choir was assisted by Albert Brackenbury, baritone, and Mrs. Alice M. Burgess sang a solo appropriate for the day.

In the afternoon many Stone Church fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, and other relatives and friends of William Chrisman graduates crowded into the Memorial Building to listen to

This will be their sixth and concluding concert of the season. Since April 29, the chorus has sung at Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri; at Grandview, Kansas, at the Baptist Church at Liberty, Missouri, at Richmond, Missouri, and at the Stone Church, besides giving time to intensive rehearsals. There are fifty singers in the club.

On Sunday night the chorus was assisted by the following soloists: Fern Griggs and Delta Nace, sopranos; Opal Swalley and Alba Simms, contraltos; Jack Shephard, the boy tenor from Kansas City; Dorothy Nace, violinist. Mrs. Leonard Lea's reading, "God's Man," was an effective part of the program.

Walnut Park Church

A rainy Mother's Day brought out a below-average attendance at the session of the church school, but a comparatively good audience was present by the opening of the morning preaching service at eleven o'clock.

Special features were given on both occasions in honor of the mothers of Walnut Park. The church school program consisted of a talk dedicated to the mothers by Pastor Frank McDonald; an organ and piano duet by Drexel Mollison and Delta Nace; a reading, "Mother," by Jessie Anderson; a vocal duet, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," by Melba Moorman and Carlene Norman, and "Mother Machree," played by the orchestra. The program was arranged by a committee composed of Violet Chase, Melba Moorman and Bethene Barnhardt.

The sermon at eleven o'clock was by the pastor, and was preceded by appropriate music, consisting of "That Wonderful Mother of Mine," by the orchestra, with vocal solo by Erwin Moorman, a vocal number by Delta Nace, and "Dear Little Mother of Mine," by a ladies' quartet composed of Helen, Alta June, Thelma and Melba Moorman.

A special meeting of the Walnut Park young people's council was held at two-thirty Sunday afternoon. A program of summer activities was adopted by the young people at this meeting.

Forty-seven members of Group 28, South, met at the home of the group elder, John Taylor, on Wednesday evening, May 9, in the first prayer service held in Brother and Sister Taylor's new home. The service was in the nature of a dedication, the pastor speaking on the subject of "Home," and offering a prayer of dedication.

Enoch Hill Church

During the worship period Sunday morning the Mother's Day program was furnished by the Dorcas Class, and there were vocal and reading numbers appropriate for the occasion.

Apostle J. A. Gillen was the eleven o'clock speaker. Sister Clara Frick read a letter from a young man away at college to his mother, and Margie Thomas sang "Bless This House."

Sister Esther Kramer, a lovely little mother revered by all the Saints, sat on the rostrum in a rocking chair while this program was being given. The church was beautifully decorated for this occasion by the Garden Club.

Evangelist Ammon White was the evening speaker. Brother Dick Bullard sang "I Love to Tell the Story."

The women of Group 33 North, have planned to meet one day each week besides the regular meeting day to quilt and give help wherever it is needed.

Enoch Hill congregation was happy to have Pastor E. A. Thomas back again. He has been unable to attend services of late on account of the illness of his mother.

Spring Branch Church

At the opening of the Sunday school May 6, Almer Sheehy talked on character building, and at the close of the service Velma Jones gave a talk.

The sacrament service was in charge of Pastor Jacobsen, assisted by Robert Fish, J. S. Andes, and A. J. Tankard. Sister Corrine French sang "Blessed Are They That Do."

The men's class gave the program at the evening church school, a talk by Brother Spaulding, Hawaiian trio selections by Hollis Andes and two young men from Independence, and a talk by C. J. Dixon.

The 7:45 p. m. service was in charge of Pastor Jacobsen. After a tenor solo by George Anway, Russell Keck was baptized.

F. A. Cool, the evening speaker, preached on "Zion," and Russell Keck was confirmed a member of the church. Two more solos by Brother Anway were much appreciated.

Following the Sunday school class period May 13, a Mother's Day program was presented by Sister Nelson.

A. J. Tankard, the eleven o'clock speaker, talked on "The Debt to Motherhood," reading Romans 13: 7 as his text. There was a number, "His Love and Care," by the choir, and Gladys, Imogene and Alma Dixon and Fern Belk sang "Nobody Knows But Mother."

At the evening church school Bishop C. J. Hunt talked on "Mother." Benson Brown gave a musical reading, "Mother," after which the young people's choir sang "Home." Almer Sheehy was the speaker and his theme was "A Good Mother's Power."

Sugar Creek Mission

This mission was the scene of a pretty wedding May 6, when Miss Irene Shupe, gil Palmer, son of Mr. Sam Palmer. The daughter of Mrs. Mabel Shupe, of Independence, was united in marriage to Virceremony was preceded by a sermon on the marriage covenant by Elder Ammon White; solos, "When Song Is Sweet," by Mrs. H. C. Burgess, "Just A-wearyin' for You," by Virgil Woodside, and "I Love You Truly," by the Cantanina Chorus of which the bride is a member. The bride was attended by her sisters, Miss Mildred Shupe and Mrs. Ralph Flournoy, and the bridegroom by his brothers, Edward and Glen Palmer. Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the officiating minister, Elder Ira G. Clutter. These young people are active workers in the mission; the bridegroom is superintendent of the Sunday school, and the bride, director of music.

developing the necessary spiritual conditions Christ knew the only solutions for him was to divest himself of these possessions. It was too much for this young man who could think of his temporal things only in an objective sense. He had not learned how to spiritualize his temporalities. Zaccheus was happy in his giving because he had done this, but the rich young man turned away sorrowing because he had not learned this vital lesson.

While we may find it easy to agree on what a certain standard should be, it is sometimes a hard job to determine an easy method by which any of us may reach that standard. With all that has been given us through revelation certainly there should be some key as to method which will make it possible for all of us to spiritualize the temporal side of our daily life. That key I believe is found in the 8th verse of Section 42 of the Doctrine and Covenants: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed

Like a Personal Visit Every Month in Your Study

If five outstanding leaders like Cadman, Fosdick, McConnell, Morrison and Robbins came into your study and recommended a book, you'd want to own it, wouldn't you?

That's exactly what these men do every month for the members of the Religious Book Club.

Each month they appraise the large number of religious books submitted to them by the publishers. Those which are most worthwhile they recommend to the members of the Club through the medium of the Club Bulletin.

Members need not accept a book every month.

They may take as few as six during the year, and may examine each book before paying for it. Yet their total expense is only the regular retail price of the books plus a few cents for postage.

which cannot be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose."

If we love Christ we will keep all his commandments. We will remember the poor and impart of our properties that which we have to give. When we know what we have to give we will lay such report before the proper officers, which is the bishopric. In other words we will give to these officers an inventory of our possessions. In this way we will be carrying out the principle expressed by Christ when he told the Pharisees to render unto Caesar that which is his and to God that which is God's. But we cannot know what to give, nor can we lay before these officers a record of that which we have to give unless we have in some way kept an accounting of our possessions. To my mind the key to the success of Zion building activities will be found in the ability of our people individually and collectively to keep such a record of their affairs that they can always know which way they are going, whether up or down, and whether or not their energies are being used in the proper balance.

There is not an individual member of the church, I care not how old or young, how rich or poor, whether gaining or losing in his work, but who can if he will, keep some kind of check on himself. This is the only way in which we can know our strength and resources. It is the only way in which we can show the Bishopric our potential strength. It is the only way in which we can know whether our interests and activities are in balance. And if they are not in balance we cannot hope to have the proper spiritual attitude toward those things which we commonly accept as being only spiritual in nature, let alone those temporal things toward which we should strive to develop a balanced spiritual attitude.

The Bishopric is urging us to keep the whole law, all the time. That is one of the most wholesome moves ever made in the history of the church. It is well known that constant dripping of water will wear away a stone. It is regularity that gets results. The same principle applies to spiritual building of human lives. The steady, regular fulfillment of the temporal law makes those things a constant part of our daily lives. It makes it possible for us to look down on them from the high standard of Christ-like spiritual understanding so that they become in a natural way a part of the whole spiritual attitude. This is much better than having to look up to fulfilling the temporal law from the standpoint of special drives which must of necessity have as their goal the "getting" of certain funds. Spiritualizing temporalities means that we can get the same or better results in a natural law-ordained way without upsetting the routine plans of social living together.

If we succeed in fully spiritualizing our temporalities we will be in no danger of becoming religious bargain hunters as described in the Pigeonhole column of the Herald recently. Bargain hunters are interested in temporal things objectively. They want to "get" as much as possible for as little as possible. Bargain hunting cannot (in the very nature of it) be motivated by a feeling of social responsibility which is demanded of us by Christ. Many bargains created by the depression have come as the result of loss by someone. Perhaps many of our good women in the church who have proudly exhibited some dress bargains within the last two or three years little realize that some of those bargains actually cost the virtue of helpless girls. It is a known fact that some itinerant dress manufacturers have gone so far as to advertise for help insisting on a week's work as a tryout without pay. A new group of such workers each week made it possible for costs to be kept so low that a profit could be made at the same time that so-called bargains were being offered. The proper social attitude would have been first concerned to make sure that each individual giving his time to creating that bargain dress would receive a just share. This would be spiritualizing temporalities in a practical way. It is the only way we can obtain eternal life. Christ has emphasized the thought that we get salvation through giving as we go. Bargain hunters try to "get" as they go and thus lose eventually the very thing they are bargaining so hard to find. When we spiritualize our temporalities we will want to use all our energies, talents, and possessions to build our great zion objective.

Attention, Michigan Musicians!

At this period of the development of the Michigan choir movement, it seems to be an advantage to amalgamate with the Zion's Christian Legion, therefore, we are now coming under the auspices of this organization, and will be known as the Legion Choir. At this juncture in our efforts for a six-hundred-voice choir, we are planning on taking a two-hundred-voice chorus to the General Conference in 1936. Watch for further announcements regarding this in the Saints' Herald. We are presuming that all the musicians have become thoroughly familiar with the two anthem, "New Every Morning Is The Love" and "Lead Kindly Light." Now we shall begin work on two more namely "The Heavens Are Declaring" by Beethoven, and arranged by Dudley Buck; the "150 Psalm" by C. Franck. Order from Lyon and Healy, Chicago, Illinois. In learning these two numbers, that we may attain a degree of accuracy, it is well to divide the practice periods, devoting some time to separate practice for the men and the women, followed by work on combining the two. Kindly do not slacken your interest in choir rehearsals during the summer season, as it will take all our time for preparation in reaching our goals. For further information write to the undersigned.—Louise Evans, 240 Travis Street North-east, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Our Departed Ones

MEGGARS.—Bertha Olive Beecham, youngest daughter of James and Hattie Beecham, was born May 17, 1873, near Pisgah, Iowa. She passed away April 26, 1934, at Holden, Missouri. In the spring of 1880, she moved with her parents to Little Sioux, Iowa, where she grew to young womanhood. While visiting in South Dakota she made the acquaintance of George J. Meggars. Between them there grew up a strong bond of friendship which resulted in their marriage, September 13, 1899, at Little Sioux, Iowa. For thirty-five years Brother and Sister Meggars shared a beautiful and happy partnership in the work of their church and home. Together they won the love and esteem of the entire community. She was baptized in 1889, by Elder J. F. McDowell, and all her life remained an active earnest member of the church. Sister Meggars passed from earth life at the home of her sister in Missouri, where, with her husband, she had gone to attend General Conference of the church. Overtaken with her fatal sickness, she was patient and courageous to the last. All that tender hands, physicians' skill and the ministrations of the church could do were of no avail. She fell peacefully asleep on April 26, surrounded by her loved ones. She is survived by her husband, George J. Meggars, of Pisgah; one sister, Mrs. Amy Silsby, of Holden, Missouri, and a host of other relatives and friends. Her father and mother preceded her in death in 1919. Funeral services were conducted at Pisgah, in charge of Mark Hutchinson, sermon by C. B. Woodstock. Interment was at Little Sioux.

MILLER.—George Miller was born at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, April 3, 1862, and departed this life February 19, 1934, at Saint Louis, Missouri. In 1909, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Rat, Missouri. He leaves to mourn his wife, Caroline, and one son. The funeral sermon was from the Odd Fellows Home, at Liberty, Missouri, Elder Glaude A. Smith officiating.

Aside from laboring locally, he, under missionary appointment, labored in various counties of western Iowa, eastern Nebraska, Colorado, and California. Of late years he of necessity worked in earning for home needs, but he labored locally and in the district. He is survived by his widow; two sisters, Mrs. Flora Benson, of Newton, Iowa, Mrs. Mabel Hansen, of Persia, Iowa; four brothers, Thomas, of Bonesteel, South Dakota; William, of Persia; James, of Pisgah, and Robert, of Los Angeles. Interment was in Chambers Cemetery, near Persia.

GROVER.—Charles C. Grover was born September 3, 1888, at Anderson, Indiana; departed this life April 7, 1934, at his home in Nowata, Oklahoma. Brother Grover moved to Oklahoma about twenty-five years ago, where he met his wife, then Miss Anne Caldern. They were married December 24, 1915 and to this union were born four children. His wife was a member of the church when they were married, and his home was always open to the missionaries. He leaves his wife, four children, and a host of friends. The funeral was conducted from the Saints' church April 10, Elder Lee Quick preaching the sermon. Interment was in Nowata Cemetery.

The Pigeonhole

■ Back to the Land

I have just read a book which tells how one captive escaped from the factory system. It is a heroic story, and may encourage others.

The hero of the story (his heroism is of the quiet sort) lived in New York City. It cost him nearly half of his salary for a place to live. With the other half he lived a precarious and barren existence in a city that was filled with cultural opportunities—for the rich.

It was in 1921 that the landlord informed him he must move because the apartment building was to be torn down to make room for a larger building.

The memory of his last search for a dwelling in that era of housing shortage sickened him. He could not face again the long hard search for a place he could afford in a period of rising rents.

He decided to move to the country. It took courage to go, for he knew little about the country. But he and his family went. The house they acquired was old; the seven acres of land was full of stones. But they went to work with a will, doing their own work, raising their own food, repairing their own buildings.

Thirteen years later they are found with land and buildings worth more than $15,000. They do a great many things for themselves. They have a fine home built of rocks picked up on the place. They still raise their own food, can it with their own pressure cooker, and till the land with their own machines. They even weave their own cloth and fashion clothing from it. In as many ways as possible they are independent of the wage slavery system from which they have escaped.

Today they are emancipated. They cannot be fired from their jobs, for they make their own jobs. They cannot be dispossessed of their land, for they owe no debts on it. They need very little that the world is likely to deny them. Culturally and educationally they enjoy more advantages and have made further progress than they might have in the noise and confusion, and with the limited financial means afforded them in the city.

They believe in machines, and they use them wherever possible to lighten labor, to increase production, to improve the quality of their output, and to give them more leisure time for the planning of their work and the enjoyment of life.

A back to the soil movement like this can set a nation free of factory slavery, can make agriculture a dignified and interesting occupation, and can give life anywhere a freedom and independence that will make worth-while people like it.

It is quite possible that this book would be of interest to church people.

■ Honest comment from a new film star who has been rocketed to fame by the Hollywood merry-go-round: "Hollywood and I have been together, in all, for about five months; one of us is certainly crazy." (Margaret Sullavan in the American Magazine.)

"And having seen a few of the products of Hollywood," says the Pigeon, "I think the crazy one is not the young lady."

■ An ordinary man loses with his own money. A financier loses with other people's money.

Reunion Time

The Changing Reunion In recent years the reunions have been undergoing many changes which make them quite different from the district gatherings of earlier times. Once they were very like the "camp meetin's" held by other denominations, with a prayer service and preaching in the morning, preaching in the afternoon, and more preaching in the evening. They ministered to members who were isolated from church privileges for weeks and months at a time, and who were hungry for the gospel message.

Fewer and Better The number of reunions held at present is greatly reduced from former figures, and it was thought by some that they would disappear entirely as a type of church activity. But they have showed the vitality to persist and to keep up with modern requirements and modern ideas. It would seem that the church and church people would never outgrow the need to "meet together oft."

Physical Improvements The new reunion is no mere "camp meetin'" in a tent city thrown up anywhere. Many reunions have acquired permanent grounds and improvements. Some are acquiring better sanitary facilities, comfortable and substantial auditoriums, and even pleasant cottages. Some families have bought permanent vacation homes on or near them. A great deal of hard work has been done to make the modern reunion ground a beautiful, comfortable, and hygienic place. It must be admitted that much remains to be done in some places.

New Programs for Old If the reunion has changed its physical character and appearance, it has changed its procedure even more. Modern reunions provide, in addition to the solid background of preaching and prayer services, a rich and varied program of interest to many types of persons. There is the recreation, the young people's work, the kindergarten, the music, the drama, and many other things. Reunion officers are doing more thinking and planning today for the comfort and welfare of their people than ever before.

A Costly Labor Reunions are now scheduled so that the members of the Quorum of Twelve and other leading church officers can attend them and thus minister to the people. It is an arduous task for these men, and it hardly need be said that these men often approach the end of the reunions season nearly exhausted by their labors. But they are confident that the work realizes many benefits for the church, and they give themselves willingly and generously. Because of their efforts, we are rapidly approaching a point where we attain our desire to say that any reunion is a good reunion. The time will come when we can conscientiously say that.

The point is that enormous labors go into the reunion work, and they ought not to go unappreciated. Since the church people have to pay the cost of these reunions, and are willing to do so, and church officers give them so much of time, thought, and labor, they should be used to the best advantage. They will be there, this summer for us to enjoy. Why not go to them when we can?

Attend Reunion! If you are having a vacation this summer, attend one of these fine reunions. Arrange ahead of time to leave your work in safe hands so that you need not worry about it; you can then devote full thought and interest to hearing the church message and gaining the greatest possible benefit from it. You will feel vastly better for the reunion experience. You will see other church members in a new light. You will gain a greater appreciation of the church and its officers. Attend reunion! If you have a hankering to visit a distant or different reunion from the customary one, do that. In any case, attend reunion!

Take Your Choice We greatly regret that our Herald space will not permit us to advertise the merits of each of these fine reunions. Some are connected with the earliest history of the church. Others are noted for fine natural beauty. Some build reputations (well almost) around good bathing beaches, either fresh or salt water. A few can appeal to the intellectuals with a stiff educational program, while others rely outright on old-fashioned spirituality—not a bad quality to feature.

Thoughts for Today

A MOST ENCOURAGING MOVEMENT in many a day is the campaign of the Catholic bishops, recently undertaken, to use boycott methods against dirty film entertainment. Movie magnates have proved themselves conscienceless in the kind of films they produce and, through their pernicious system of "block booking" which keeps local exhibitors helpless to choose their films, have fastened a system of lewd entertainment on the country. Pleas and prayers alike having died on their deaf ears, they are now awaking when they find that a crusade is being organized against them.

Such is the solidarity of the Catholic world that when their leaders start moving against unclean movies, they will do some damage to the business and probably some real good for the American people. Our own church people could well help in this fine effort.

IN AUGUST, 1930, a young woman was attacked and slain, and her body left in Swope Park, Kansas City, with her torn clothing scattered on the ground near her. On two trials a young man with a criminal record and a list of bad marriages behind him was convicted of the murder. Now he is scheduled to hang on June 29 of this year. It will be lacking only a little of four years since the crime. He may yet escape if the luck of other criminals is with him. There is no certainty that justice may not be cheated in this case as in many others.

PEOPLE CRY about the disrespect for law. Nothing could create greater disrespect for it than it creates for itself, through its practitioners. The delay in the case of Paul Kauffman is only one instance. Justice must be both swift and certain to be respected. When justice creeps along with the pace of a tortoise and the indecision of a rabbit, what can be expected?

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT will always arouse opposition. It should. In a good society there would be no capital punishment, because a good society would protect its citizens from the criminals and the criminals from themselves. But ours is not a perfect society. It cannot or does not adequately protect its citizens. It ties the hands of its police. It tangles the processes of its courts. No safe means exists now for dealing with desperate criminals but capital punishment. While the Dillingers can escape, no prison is secure against the outbreak of criminals.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT may not deter other criminals in their terrible work. But one thing is certain: a hanged murderer will kill no more. Society is safe from him forever. It is pertinent to note that crime rates are lower in countries where justice is swift and sure. As an example, it may be noted that English police can catch criminals, English courts can convict them, English prisons can hold them, and they don't play with them for four years.

AN IDEAL SOCIETY would have to care for its children, clean up its slums, provide parks and educational facilities for poor people that would raise their standard of living and increase their opportunities to a point where poverty would no longer be an incentive to crime. It would have to clean up the narcotic traffic and the vice business that constantly feed a stream of victims into the maw of professional crime. It would have to sterilize the unfit and so prevent the breeding of hundreds and thousands of morons whose lack of intelligence and control continually makes them the operatives in crime. When these things are done, or on the way to being done, it will be time enough to remove the provisions for capital punishment.

THE CHARGE that the government is going in for a program of regimentation seems to be disproved, for the present at least, by the frequency of strikes of late. Things are getting back to normal. A longshoremen's strike on the west coast is tying up shipping, and Minneapolis is being starved out by a truck driver's strike. It is encouraging to note the effect of the government's insistence that industry recognize the unions whenever and wherever they are formed; strikes are gradually eliminating the long drawn out contests, the bloodshed, the bitter hardships. Settlements in many cases are coming quicker. If this peace and conciliation could only be extended to the troubled coal mine areas, the country could begin to look up.

It is to be hoped that employers and employees can find a ground for agreement that will prevent a plunge into the chaos of labor war. When conditions are wavering on the edge of improvement it would be easy to destroy our advantage.

Somebody may be looking at you to know human life at its noblest, and religion at its best, the life of a living God in the soul of a living man.—Frank B. Fagerburg in The Sin of Being Ordinary

Leaving for Australia

MR. AND MRS. ARTHUR W. FERRETT

It was their life ambition to visit a General Conference, and they also wanted to see their son, Colin, and his wife, formerly Miss Rae Lysinger of Lamoni. After seeing his choice, they happily admit that their son's judgment in selecting a companion is good.

They have spent a period of several months in America, visiting, traveling, and enjoying a real vacation from a long life of church work and business occupation. They have been in the church forty years, and Brother Ferrett now holds the office of elder.

They left Independence May 15, stopping at Lamoni to add their daughter-in-law Rae to their party, who, with son Colin, will accompany them on a motor trip to the west coast. The route will lead them through Omaha, Lincoln, Denver, Salt Lake City, endless miles of space in the southwest, and end at Los Angeles, where they plan to attend a final church service before taking ship for Australia. There they will turn the car over to Colin and Rae for the return trip and say good-by to them and all America.

Brother and Sister Ferrett leave America with a store of happy memories, having made many friends. They have been charming and gracious guests. It has been a great pleasure to have them here. We wish them a pleasant voyage, a safe arrival home, and long and happy days.

Undivided Service

If you work for a man, in heaven's name work for him. If he pays wages that supply you your bread and butter, work for him, speak well of him, think well of him, stand by him, and stand by the institution he represents. I think if I worked for a man, I would work for him. I would not work for him a part of his time, but all of his time. I would give an undivided service or none. If put to a pinch, an ounce of loyalty is worth a pound of cleverness. If you must villify, condemn and eternally disparage, why, resign your position. . . . So long as you are a part of an institution, do not condemn it. Not that you will injure the institution—not that—but when you disparage the concern of which you are a part, you disparage yourself.—Elbert Hubbard.

Photographs Coming In

Our patrons and subscribers have responded generously by sending in photographs for use in the Herald, and many of them are very good ones. Such as are suitable will be used soon, and it is hoped that others will come. Once again we state the requirements.

(1) Pictures of local and district officers, and church workers, especially in connection with current news or accomplishments.

(2) Pictures of women workers. This service is not a man's monopoly, and we are interested in women's pictures too.

(3) New photographs. Even if the place or the person is old, the picture should be new to give the strong contrast and the sharp, clear detail necessary for good cuts. (Historical photographs, even old ones, are of interest to Brother C. Ed. Miller of the Graphic Arts Department.)

(4) Send a picture with your news, if you have something unusual to show. A new building, a church improvement, a class or group that has really done something for the church. We want the pictures to be significant.

Spiritual Leadership

The great need of the world is spiritual leadership.

The tragedies of a thousand years have been crowded in the past few months. The collapse of nations and social institutions, the bankruptcy of business and finance, the breakdown of sophisticated paganism have brought humanity to the brink of despair.

Society, today, wavers at the stream of dismal fear as a suicide stands by the black waters which he hopes will cover his wrecked plans and failures.

But the saddest picture of all is that of the impotency of organized religion. In a period when men naturally turn to God, religious leadership appears to have been liquidated.

"Where shall wisdom be found and where is the place of understanding?"

Business shakes its head. It has no answer. Science turns a deaf ear and retires to its laboratories.

Shall religion, likewise, refuse leadership?—William H. Leach in "A Plea for Spiritual Leadership" (an open letter to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America), published in Church Management.

Plano Zion Builders Raise Funds

The Zion Builders Class of Plano, Illinois, presented a play, "The Mystery of the Masked Girl," at the high school auditorium, with special numbers between acts, which netted a sum of thirty dollars that they turned over to the branch building fund. This will be used for improvements to the church basement. Every one of the nineteen girls in the class took part in some way. These young people have no trouble finding something to do for the church.

On May 16 the girls entertained their mothers at their first mother-daughter banquet. Speeches, songs, toasts and, of course, a good dinner, occupied the time. The Plano young people are doing things.

Regional Meeting Idea Taking Well in Holden Stake

Further reports on the regional meetings in Holden Stake from Robert L. Thistlethwaite, president of the young people's stake organization, indicate that the idea is stimulating social contacts and furthering participation in the church services by the young people. Prayer meeting, a special message by a visiting speaker, a basket dinner, a short business session, are features of the Sunday's activities. The young people have voted to continue the plan of regional meetings at which young people from various branches gather.

Choices for Girls

It may be said that every girl is known, first by the choices she makes, second, the company she keeps, and third, by the things she laughs at.

Some plants thrive best in dark and slime. A pig seeks its wallow, but a butterfly or a bird prefers sunshine, flowers, and trees. So a girl has the ability and the right to choose her environment and the associations that are most congenial. It is hers to choose whether she will run the streets, seek low companions, drink, and smoke cigarettes, or whether she will find her happiness and pleasure in books, music, and in good clean company.

"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," said Joshua, "but for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

When a girl reaches the age of accountability she must choose whether she will serve God or Mammon. She must decide on her ideals. She should acquire habits and standards of right and wrong that will build up a character of strength. She must choose whether she will worship I, Myself, and Me, or whether she will give her time to the service of others.

As to the second qualification by which a girl is known—the company she keeps—she cannot be too careful in making right choices. Girls are naturally adaptable and imitative. They love to be popular. If their chosen companions have a low standard of morals, if they habitually use slang and profanity and are irreverent in their attitude toward spiritual things, the girl is rare indeed who can retain her high standards under such associations. Rather than risk unpopularity or ridicule, she will go with the crowd; she will trail her standards in the dust. Then, too, many a girl's character has been blackened for life because she has been found associating with those who are immoral even though she could not bring herself to stoop to the sins of her companions.

And third, people of discernment often judge a person by the things at which they laugh. A girl may make a profession of being pure, but if she cannot listen to the story of the origin of life, beautifully and purely told without blushing or giggling, she has not attained the standards cited in the Bible, "To the pure, all things are pure." Also, a girl who is kind will not ridicule a person for an infirmity or a weakness; nor will she enjoy the spectacle of another person's discomfiture or embarrassment. A well-bred girl laughs with others and not at them. Girls who are pure in heart are not aroused to hilarious mirth by obscene stories. They see no humor in ridiculing the aged or the unfortunate.

"It is a poor joke

When some women blushes with embarrassment;

When some heart carries away an ache;

When something sacred is made to appear common;

When a man's weakness provides the cause for laughter;

When profanity is required to make it funny;

When a little child is brought to tears;

When everyone cannot join in the laughter."

A Story From Life

While out motoring the other day we passed two trucks. One was loaded with produce for the market. The boxed fruits and vegetables made a pretty appearance, and it was pleasant to imagine that some of them would appear in the stores and be purchased for the tables in our own city.

The other truck was loaded with junk: a rusty, broken stove; some worn-out tires; shoes past mending; a disabled chair; a mattress bursting through its soiled and torn covering; old wire, and a lot of other derelicts. It was a sorry sight.

What sort of load are you carrying in your truck? Something good and useful? Or something that is weighting you down? Shiftless, idle companions? Slang? Profanity? Cigarettes? Dancing in the public halls? What else?

Or are you carrying something like this: a steady devotion to your job, a real determination to improve, an artistic or useful hobby, friendship with the right kind of people, training for a better occupation or for better mastery of the occupation you have, a definite contribution of service and financial support to the church. This is the kind of load you ought to be carrying.

Discussion Topics

Leisure Time Occupations

The resolution passed by the recent General Conference on the subject of leisure time gives us the definite challenge to go forward with constructive ways of employing ourselves profitably in hours not used in work or sleep.

1. Recreation.
2. Self-improvement.
3. Social service.
4. Worship and church activity.
5. Companionship and friendship.
6. Home improvement.

Each of these items will be given separate treatment in future short articles in this department. Each one offers great possibilities for development, growth, work and service.

Being good does not mean sitting still in a corner doing nothing. On the other hand, you don't have to be bad to have fun. It is not enough to be good: you must be good for something. The passively negative and inoffensive person may be "good" but entirely useless.

The New Deal in Education

By G. N. Briggs

President of Graceland College

(Editor's Note: This address was delivered over Radio Station KMBC as the first of a series of Graceland broadcasts. Because the series was the subject of a contest, we have delayed the printing of the article until now.)

GEORGE N. BRIGGS

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Radio Audience:

I am very happy again to open a series of Graceland broadcasts which are to continue during the months of March and April.

Our chief purpose in these programs is to enable those of you who may be interested in a college education either as prospective students or parents or friends of young people who may attend college next year, to become somewhat acquainted with the members of the faculty and our present students who may have part in these programs. We hope also that you will learn something of the courses, opportunities and advantages offered at Graceland. Our present student body is made up of representatives from thirty states and several foreign countries, thus bringing together a very cosmopolitan group of young men and women with varied interests and abilities.

It was just one year ago today, March 4, 1933, that the present administration officially began putting into operation the machinery looking towards the "New Deal" for all of us. We have heard much of the new deal for agriculture, the new deal for the common laborers, the new financial deal. We are in the midst of a most tragic world-wide breakdown of an economic system. Our country has never been so dangerously affected by numerous elements of instability. The social, economic, and political considerations affecting mankind require adjustment—all these influences have called loudly for the new deal. The new deal will be fully successful only if and when the great masses of the people are fully prepared to take advantage of not only the temporary adjustments now being made, but also of whatever permanent values may come out of this vast experimental social program now in operation on such a stupendous scale as has never before been attempted by any people. If that is true, the element of enlightenment and education on the part of the people is the fundamental basis for the success of the New Deal in all of its phases.

I am therefore most happy to speak on the topic assigned to me: The New Deal in Education.

With Paul in his second letter to the Corinthians, we may very well say, "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

Education as represented by the schools and colleges of the land have been effected by the social, economic and political changes throughout the world as never before.

These unprecedented changes in our environment and in our condition of life have brought a challenge to those charged with the education of our youth such as this generation, at least, has not experienced. These situations involve a change in our thinking so deep and so fundamental that the ordinary activities of a normal life have been swallowed up in economic, social, and political developments of unusual import.

The national importance of these changes is clearly evidenced by the various studies made within recent months by the Federal Government and National Associations and reported to the country. Some of these investigations were: The White House Conference on Child Health and Protection, the report of the President's Research Committee on Social Trends, the report of the Wickersham Committee on Law Observance and Enforcement, and the more recently published report on Desirable Social-Economic Goals for America.

These surveys, made at a time in the national life so critical that the destiny of future generations is at stake, give direction to the efforts of all social institutions, including especially the colleges of the country, to teach the facts of social, economic, political and religious life and lay the foundations for a new outlook in the total life of the people.

During the past year the word "new" has received extraordinary emphasis. In newspapers and magazines, the platform and pulpit, over the radio and upon the silvered screen, we constantly are remind that the old order is dead and that upon its ruins a new civilization is to be built. Especially are we told that rugged individualism is a thing of the pioneering past and that a sense of social responsibility stronger than any such idealism we have ever known, must be developed in order that national and individual welfare may be saved from complete catastrophe.

Those who have great responsibility in the guidance of public opinion seem to think that the evolution which is to prevent revolution will be brought about by legislative and executive planning and activity. And what has been done along that line during the past twelve months in our country is amazing, almost bewildering, in its variety and rapidity. At the same time, the one great, fundamental principle of democracy has not been forgotten, namely, that good government rests upon the uncoerced consent of the governed, that law-making bodies and elected officials cannot change the social order to a degree beyond that which free citizens will approve and support. In other words, a democratic government cannot be greater than the general level of the intelligence and moral character of the people of the country. After all, it is the training of individuals in the duties and responsibilities of citizenship that determines the ultimate fate and destiny of a nation.

And it is just here that teachers play their part. What has the new year for them? Reduced income, increased cost of living, heavier teaching load, fear of further decrease in financial support of schools? Alas, too true in many instances. But millions of others have had similar distressing experiences without the teacher's inspiring opportunity to forget individual difficulties by becoming absorbed in the great work of instilling new ideals of life and service into the minds and hearts of children. If there is to be in the future a more altruistic attitude of mind, if good will toward all men is to become more prevalent and cogent, if we are to substitute considerate cooperation for ruthless competition, these conceptions of duty must be inculcated chiefly in the educational institutions of our land.

As always, one of the chief phases of a teacher's work will be the instruction of youth in regard to their heritage from the past. The best that has been achieved in science, literature, art, philosophy, and religion must be preserved and perpetuated. This is essential for any worthy effort of the present or the future. But, as Lowell sang, "New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth." The teacher must keep abreast of the times, must be informed in regard to new movements for the betterment of society, must be able to distinguish between valid ideas based upon unselfishness and mere propaganda for personal advantage. Unquestionably the necessity for a wide and discerning knowledge of public affairs will be greater in 1934 than ever before in this country. This means self-improvement for teachers, one of the greatest joys of human life.

Fortunately, just as we enter the new year, a spirit of confidence and courage, a renewal of faith and hope, seems to be displacing the previous melancholy mood of millions of our people.

Education is to experience a new deal in its evaluation of the fundamental objectives and ideals set for the youth of the land. As was expressed by President Butler of Columbia University recently, "If profit, and profit alone, be the end sought by human effort, then society must reconcile itself to steady disintegration, constantly increasing conflict between individual groups and nations, and eventual destruction. It is only when men rise above domination by the profit motive and learn to subordinate profit to service that social, economic, and political order begin to come in sight of a firm foundation and a continuing existence with peace and happiness assured to the great mass of mankind." It has remained for the happenings for the last generation to force their fundamental truths upon the attention of men everywhere, which will result in a prosperity socially controlled for the common good. As President Roosevelt calls it, "a prosperity built on spiritual and social values rather than on special privileges and special power."

Colleges can unite with the churches of the land as President Roosevelt says "to teach their millions of followers that they have a right to demand of the government of their own choosing, the maintenance and furtherance of a "more abundant life."

Public opinion is moulded by the leaders and the leaders are those who go ahead of the people in their thinking. The problem then is to mould public thinking toward a higher state for humanity, and to stick by that policy and make it seem desirable to the people in spite of short-time political pressure to the contrary. The new educational deal calls for a social machine which will not break down because it is not inspired by motives with a larger vision than the hard driving profit motives of the past. More than that the new educational deal demands that the man in the street must change his attitude concerning the nature of man and the nature of human society. He must develop the capacity to envision a cooperative objective and be willing to pay the price to attain it.

America has had her great development because she has put her faith in democracy; because she has given the people a chance to share in the management of their own government and in the management of their own lives; and because through popular education she

Beautifying Zion

By Grace L. Krahl

It was one of those, probably all too rare mornings when one rises refreshed with a full night's sleep, with cares and worries still in the background, feeling at peace with one's self and all the world. Looking out of the open window all nature seemed serenely beautiful and the dewy freshness of grass and foliage added to the charm of an early midsummer morning.

Finding it necessary to go on an errand I passed down the stairs and out of the front door where to my surprise "Uncle John" Terry (in whose house my son and I occupied an apartment) was bending low over the walks, cutting away grass and weeds and digging neat little trenches all around them. As I passed I commented on the fine piece of work he was doing and looking up with a roguish twinkle in his eye he said, "I am beautifying Zion." All the way as I walked along these words passed and re-passed through my mind. Little did I think they were to become so personally meaningful in a very short time.

Returning from the errand I set about preparing breakfast in the usual manner. But perhaps I was not as wide awake as I thought I was—certainly not very alert—or was I reveling in a fanciful day dream suggested by the words of Uncle John.

Sniff! sniff! What was that? I turned about quickly and hastened in the direction of the toaster from which clouds of blue smoke were filling the room and sailing gracefully toward the ceiling. Rescuing uselessly two charred pieces of bread I supplied two more slices chiding myself vigorously the while for such inattention.

Turning to the stove I attempted to transfer a delicately poached egg, when with such alacrity and speed as I have never quite witnessed that egg descended to the floor utterly demolished.

While I was "gathering" up the egg I suppose I jostled the stove whose shelf with an unwarranted tilt held a box of matches which insisted at that particular moment on demonstrating the law of gravitation.

Scanning the offing to discover if I could whether any more "disasters" were impending and being reasonably satisfied none were imminent. I soliloquized: Now who would burn up two perfectly good pieces of bread in these days when we are warned to be frugal? And to waste an egg—choice above all other eggs for had they not come from one of the stewardship farms? And who but a paragon of patience could sweetly and amiably pick up a thousand matches (more or less) in the course of preparing a meal—my spirit was turbulent. Was there ever a time in my household when so many things went wrong in so short a time. The serenity of my soul and that of nature which I had enjoyed to the full that early morning, had disappeared. The beautiful day so full of promise for almost any conquest was already a failure with such a start.

And then the words, Oh yes, those words "I am beautifying Zion" came again. They were not so pleasant now—somehow they had a challenging ring to them, for they were reproachfully reminding me that there was also another way in which Zion was to be beautified, and that was in our spirits. I had in fancy dwelt upon Zion with its homes set in a beautiful landscape; well kept lawn, flowers brought to their fullest development, plants of rare foliage, avenues of trees, pools and fountains—forgetting in those moments that which is most important of all—the spirit of those homes surrounded with such loveliness.

If "Zion is to be redeemed by the homes of the Saints" surely it does not mean the exterior only. We can think of beautiful parks, civic centers, boulevards, etc., in our large cities, that can display all of the engineering architectural and horticultural skill procurable, but these alone in relation to Zion would be meaningless. So it would be in the center place of the gathering if it were not for the spiritual background that must find its expression in the homes of the Saints.

How easily we are disturbed and annoyed over the small happenings in our domestic life—how quickly discouraged. The impetuous words we speak, the rebuke that leaves a sting. It would be well for us if we were more familiar with the fruits of the spirit as enumerated by Paul, and no finer place to exhibit them, once they are possessed, than in the home circle. And so in working toward the great objective of this people let us first look to the spirit of our homes—whence cometh Zion.

Pith and Point

Only in the dark night do the stars shine.
Tomorrow is a soft couch on which many lie down never to awaken.

It takes a man to forgive. Anyone can hate.
One can shift the blame but not the responsibility.
No one ever found the hour which was lost.
No man sees his shadow who faces the sun.
Shall God treat you the way you treat God?
It's a queer religion that operates in good weather only.
Are you giving the church a square deal?
Take one day a week to look up and get your bearings.

From the Heart of Canada

By Ward L. Christy

Seeing the faces of a number in the Herald suggested to me to send a late picture of one to whom fate dealt a blow of real disappointment when it decreed that I was not to attend the 1934 General Conference.

Unless one has been away from headquarters, home, and loved friends for a long time, he cannot understand how the heart and soul long for association of Saints at the time of the conference.

Long years ago in Salt Lake City in the Hot Springs, and under the hands of Joseph Luff, I was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Following the sacrament, as a result of earnest prayer, I saw a beautiful vision and heard an audible voice that I shall never forget. In vision I saw myself distinctly as in a clear mirror. I looked and wondered for I was clothed in a beautiful white robe, exquisite, pure. As I admired the robe, a voice spoke: "This is the robe of righteousness put on through obedience to the ordinances of the gospel."

This exceptional assurance of the divinity of the latter-day work came, I am sure, as a result of my earnest desire for an evidence of the promise of God to which I had often heard the elders refer in their preaching, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."

After this assurance of the divinity of the work, my soul was lifted up in ecstasy and I was in another world until a very rude awakening came. Fate dealt our home a very severe blow. Our first little baby boy was stricken with illness from which he never recovered, and when fourteen months of age he was claimed by death and his little body was buried at Pleasant Grove, Utah. I have never seen the little mound that represents the place where his ashes lie.

It is almost impossible for me to tell just how I was impressed when I received a letter from President F. M. Smith announcing that the wife and I were to go to Utah for the next conference year.

Following the death of the baby, I was out of employment for some time and when employed, wages were small and the experiences were trying and hard. We had Bishop E. L. Kelley and other men interested in the prosecution of the Temple Lot Depositions taken in the Templeton Hotel so many years ago, stopping with and visiting us during that time. Brother Alexander Smith, Joseph Luff, R. J. Anthony, and H. O. Smith, were frequently in our home while there. It was in the Salt Lake Elevator and Mill Companies mill, under the supervision of Patriarch F. A. Smith, that I learned to sew flour sacks.

I was in Salt Lake on the occasion when Brother F. A. was blessed of God in an outstanding way. His sermon was spelled out before him by the power of God, undoubtedly because his body was overtaxed by physical exertions caused by the unusual demands of his business responsibilities.

It was in this mill one afternoon when everything seemed to be running along smoothly, that a piercing cry of agony was heard. Everyone rushed to discover that David S. Anthony, brother of Mrs. Christy, was caught in the machinery. Quick action on the part of the men saved the lad from losing an arm and possibly his life. He was rushed to the hospital and the surgeons removed the two middle fingers from his left hand.

After these and other experiences I lost interest in and love for the place. I have never wished to return, save to see the wife's sister, Mabel, and her family. We made one visit there some four years ago. We enjoyed the visit, and at that time I did some preaching in Ogden City. From there we drove north over the mountains and trekked our way to the great prairies of the north.

For five and one-half years we have been located at Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. For five full winters and a part of six we broadcast the gospel from Stations CJHS and CFQC to the people of the northland. During this long period of effort at presenting the distinctive features of the work of the church we made many friends. I was checked up a few times for speaking too fast, but it was marvelous how well the work was received, and surely it was encouraging to receive the hundreds of letters bearing witness to benefit and uplift as a result of listening to the services. We have made many very substantial and loyal friends, the richest and best possessions a man ever had.

As is to be expected, we did not walk into the open hearts of everyone in and out of the church, but we have occasion to rejoice in the extensive percentage of beautiful, wholesome and loyal friendships established.

Now we have come to the end of another of the experiences incident to missionary life—the parting of the ways. It is not easy. Many of the young folks of today were wee boys and girls five and one half years ago and we have seen them grow to be promising young men and women, and do you think the heartstrings are not torn when we must leave these dear ones behind? Old-time missionaries know what I am talking about.

It is good when Saints dwell together in love and union, and we feel even away up in the frozen North, a great measure of the Spirit of God that moved the General Conference to a successful and profitable consummation. God bless his people and His ministry.

We expect to be off to Utah as soon as we can arrange to dispose of the little nest that has kept us snugly through four very severe winters the coldest day of which was fifty-four below zero. May God ever bless his faithful people.

Noise

By H. E. Depew

The things that make the biggest noise
Don't always do the most;
Just like the folks who talk and talk,
They use up steam to boast.

It's not the noise that does the work,
As well we ought to know;
But often times the noise quite hides
One's failure here to sow.

You'll likely find the great machines,
Which furnish untold power,
Are sure to be the noiseless ones
That purr on hour by hour.

Some folks we meet are just like these,
Aworking with their might,—
With not a bit of fuss, or din,
To cast abroad their light.

Upon the other hand we find
The noisiest machine
Is very apt to be quite weak,—
Its earnings very lean.

The chaps, so oft, who make the noise,
Are throwing up a screen
Of ifs, and ands, and buts, and whens,—
To idle in, unseen.

Missionary and Pastoral Work

By C. D. Jellings

This article was not originally intended for publication, but rather for a quorum discussion. So much good, however, is contained in these pungent, thoughtful lines, that we considered it good material for examination by Herald readers.—EDITORS.

As we look back to the time of the organization of this church it appears to have been characteristic of the times that people lived simply, were for the most part believers in God and Jesus, but did considerable groping around for the proper way to worship.

Our missionaries went out for the purpose of promulgating our particular interpretation of the proper method and organization, and to introduce some basic features which were not commonly recognized then, such as the idea of a personal God, a multiplicity of rewards, possibility of communication with the forces of God, priesthood, etc.

Because these features had scriptural foundation, and because the masses in those days were limited in educational privileges, the principal qualification required of the ministry was a fervent enthusiastic belief in the message. The very fervency and enthusiasm of many of those early day men convinced considerable numbers of the listeners who united with the church.

A hundred years later we find an entirely different picture. Instead of a simple trusting age, it is one full of skepticism, doubt, demand-for-proof, and a wide-spreading disapproval of the "holier than thou" attitude of church organizations and church people in general. There is also a vastly increased percentage of persons who have at least a speaking knowledge of certain scientific beliefs which tend to question many of the traditions and beliefs common to church members.

In the meantime also most of the basic principles that were peculiarly exclusive to us in the beginning have in some degree been adopted into the personal beliefs of many of the other denominational ministers. It may be that we have been carrying on a leavening process of much greater extent than even we are aware of.

The statement has been made frequently that ours is a "missionary church." To many this has meant a continuation of the old type of work, in new fields, along the lines of the church a hundred years ago. Real missionary work should have as its first objective, the education of men and women in the attributes of Jesus, and through a demonstration of them in our own lives, convince these men and women of their value and necessity. We have been concentrating almost entirely on an argumentative presentation of the mechanics of religion, i. e. doctrines, ordinances, rituals and methods, which in the very nature of things gives an impression of an egotistical attitude to the nonbelieving listener.

As a result of the pioneering type of missionary effort, today we have churches in many scattered locations with neither equipment or personnel to carry on a type of service that is even respectable, to say nothing of being properly representative of the dignity and supremacy of God's message.

Were we able to send out a multitude of workers, some of this work should still be carried on and further effort spent on some of the outlying, struggling branches; but because of limited resources, we should concentrate our efforts on the most important and productive activities, in anticipation of the development of a more Christlike social and economic order, with a literal demonstration of it.

Statistics show that most new members are acquired through established locations, but more important than the acquisition of new members is the continued conversion and education of those who have already become members.

We cannot overlook the competition furnished by our neighboring churches. From an argumentative doctrinal standpoint we may not feel they can influence our membership. However, we cannot overlook the fact that many of their ministers are not only as devoted and consecrated as we, but have the benefit of special training. They are able to conduct a service that provides for those worshipping a reverential feeling of pleasure that is attractive, and who will say there is not a spiritual atmosphere present that must have a degree of sanction from God. These ministers are trained also to be of real assistance in the personal problems of their membership.

Contrast with this a large percentage of our churches cared for by men who must spend a large part of their vitality in earning a livelihood, and who have not had the privilege of training in the many problems needing attention.

There is one phase of so-called missionary work with which all district and stake officers are too familiar and that should be definitely curbed. To illustrate: A man is ordained to the priesthood. He does not deserve and is not given desired prominence, or for some reason becomes dissatisfied. We soon hear of him preaching a few sermons in a friend's home, or in some outlying isolated section. A Sunday school is started and soon a mission, with himself as the chief. It is rare that much permanent good comes from such a movement, for with a perverted idea in the first place, it is most likely to attract persons of similar type, and sooner or later trouble develops.

The type of message many have been preaching is almost entirely of a controversial nature. The most serious result, therefore, has been that too many of those attracted by the message have been of controversial disposition, not easily led except in their own way, and as a consequence we are not yet beyond the conversational stages of our long anticipated Zion.

We should change the sermon content and preach the affirmative message of Jesus the Christ. At present a large part of our sermons carry an undertone, and not generally very subdued, of self-praise or self-exaltation. That very attitude is repulsive to many persons, and should be eliminated immediately and instead teach the principles Jesus taught as the way to live a better life. The aim should be first to help our members (and the community) to a better understanding of God and the way he would like to have us live, and help them to meet and solve the problems we all experience. Then Zion would have the basic factor for its realization, a spiritual people. Anyone who is thoroughly converted to the beauty of the virtues taught by Jesus will have no difficulty in finding and following the proper "mechanics" or expression of those virtues, i. e. tithing, helping others, repentance, etc.

It is my opinion that we should change our missionary approach, and appoint men to serve as pastor missionaries at well established locations, for the definite primary purpose of building up the present membership and gaining such new membership as is possible. There is an unlimited field for an energetic full time pastor in either the small or large population centers.

Too much has been said about the great sacrifices required of the missionaries, and not many young men are being attracted to the ministry. To be a traveling missionary is but little different from being a traveling salesman who is necessarily away from home for extended periods. But if that field is chosen by a man of his own volition, or if he is convinced God wants him to follow it, it should be quite agreeable. The talk about hardships, etc., sounds too much like a search for sympathy and the self-respecting young man doesn't want to put himself in that sort of a position. So far as remuneration is concerned the average missionary family has had compensation about equal to that of the average family engaged in secular work.

The missionary who doesn't like the vocation should change. I believe also that officers should exercise more direction and supervision over their men and when necessary replace them instead of carrying inefficient men until they become a burden to the church, spiritually, morally and temporally. Many men could be helped to make good with proper help from supervising officers.

The young man who is looking for a field containing opportunity will find none better than the ministry, although I believe he must have some tendency and aptitude for that kind of work, and perhaps some certain qualifications, to make a genuine success. There is no better opportunity to study human behavior and to be a good influence upon people and communities. Our particular financial system precludes the likelihood of great wealth, but there is no reason why a modest accumulation cannot be made, and of course with a hope that our ideal of Zion might yet be established to make the temporal feature of less prominent importance.

It seems to me the most urgent thing to do now is to adapt all appointees, either through education or replacement, to a type of program that will build our present membership to a higher standard. Then a selection of a certain number of the already strong or medium strong locations where it will be most advantageous for these men to work. I would suggest reducing to a minimum the men doing general or supervising work and putting every possible man into productive fields as outlined above.

We must accept the fact that the most productive missionary work is through the pastoral effort in established locations where we not only may reach nonmembers, but even more important build present members into the kind of Christians needed to bring about Zion. And we must adjust the tenor of our message to meet the needs of the people of today.

Young men should consider the ministry in the light of a vocation and make just as earnest preparation as for any other field of activity. This should include college where possible, or if not, a considerable period of "apprenticeship" under capable direction, with home study particularly adapted to this work. There is no vocation promising a more interesting and soul-satisfying experience in return for continuous diligent effort.

If I must suffer I want the joy of knowing that my suffering is invested on the side of right and God. Jesus does not ask us to accept a way which, different from all others, is filled with briars and thorns. His challenge is to choose that our cross shall be, not like the one laid on Simon Cyrene, or those of the two thieves, but like the one that he himself chose to carry.—Frank B. Fagerburg in "The Sin of Being Ordinary."

Lesson Ten—June 3

Zion: The Kingdom. The Government

What each of us seeks through association is the satisfaction of our individual and personal wants. That is the object of association for men universally. Whether these satisfactions are realized through association, or not, depends upon the manner in which men associate.

To satisfy our wants we must associate whether we want to or not. There is no other way. But bad forms of association defeat our common purposes. And for that reason, at the present time, the race is making a life and death struggle to reshape its governmental institutions to adapt them to the purposes of association.

There is nothing that the race is so desperately in need of as the answer to the problem of government. William Allen White expressed a widespread conviction recently when he said that Washington is "The Kingdom of Confusion." And Washington thinks it is not so bad as most of the rest of the world. Nevertheless the political experiments of the present are a confession of confused thinking on the problem of human association. What shall happen to us if light on that problem does not break forth soon from some quarter, heaven only knows. Almost certainly there will be another swing-back to another dark age.

"A LIGHT SHALL BREAK FORTH"

But the message of prophecy is that "A light shall break forth"; the peoples of The Church are to institute a government under divine guidance; and the light that shall shine forth from this government, Zion, shall be the answer to the problem of government.

Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4 is a reaffirmation of what the prophets of old have said, which is that "The Government shall be upon His shoulder," "to order it and to establish it with judgment and with justice." "The God of heaven shall set up A Kingdom." "The mountain of the Lord's house shall be established." "Zion shall be redeemed." And through the establishment of the cause of Zion all nations shall be taught the way of peace. Zion shall be "a standard" of behavior for all peoples. "A Light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." (Daniel 2; Isaiah 2; Doctrine and Covenants; Isaiah 62; Luke 2: 32.)

A GREAT AND MARVELOUS WORK

What an undertaking! What an enterprise! What an accomplishment—this Zion!! It is a work that cannot be accomplished by a people with small-time notions of the mission of The Church. The builders of Zion must think and plan and adventure in terms which make them appear to be consummate egotists to the unbelieving world. But once the peoples of The Church have answered the call of God to them, "The kingdoms of this world shall be constrained to acknowledge that the Kingdom of Zion is in very deed the Kingdom of our God and his Christ." (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 9.) This is one of the claims of Latter Day Saintism, that Zion shall become The Standard of governmental behavior for all nations.

A LIGHT TO "LIGHTEN"

To light a candle or a coal oil lamp in the presence of the noonday sun helps nothing. We see our way without such contrivances when the sun shines. To invent an ordinary coal oil lamp in this age of electric lights helps nothing. No conception of government which does not outshine other conceptions can be "A light to lighten the Gentiles." A lesser light cannot be "The glory of thy people Israel." This Zion mode of government is to outshine any and every other conception of right human relations. It is to be a light that will "lighten."

"ALL NATIONS SHALL FLOW UNTO IT"

What is there about the small time talk, the childish business devices, of so many Church men that can command the admiration of all nations and cause them to make such conceptions of human relations the form, constitution, and method of their government? Nothing!

Nations are destined to "flow unto" either Technocracy, Syndicalism, Zionism, or some other mode of government. Which direction nations shall give to their affairs will depend upon which ism seems to them to be best adapted to the purposes of association; that is to say, to be the best proposed form of government.

A PROPHET OF THE KINGDOM

What is one of the principal tests of the claim of Latter Day Saints that their prophet was divinely inspired? Is not this the age set for the rise of The Kingdom? Do not all the major prophecies say that this is the age in which the peoples of The Church will establish a Government under divine guidance? What then is one of the tests of the claim that our prophet was sent of God? Is it not this: That he spoke and planned and endeavored in terms of The Kingdom?

Which of all present-day religious groups regard it as their business to be "The light of the world" in this matter of Government? Latter Day Saintism says its Zion is The Government. If Latter Day Saintism has competitors, if there are others who claim this to be their calling, then, in reason, we must weigh these several claims and judge in the light of reason which promises to give us the answer to the problem of government—which is to be the builder of The Kingdom.

Zion is a government that governs. That is to say, if there were a Zion it would govern. Contemplate now the message of our prophet as set forth in Doctrine and Covenants. See sections 51: 1-4; 77: 1; 81: 4; 101: 12, and all the rest, and say whether or not this is material for The New Economic Code: The Government. Here is law and order and office. Here is matter out of which to construct a system of relations for men in association. Here is a guide to a code which, once adopted, would really govern.

Here you have the distinguishing mark of The Restoration movement—its Kingdom-building idealism. From its very inception its aim was to "bring forth and establish the cause of Zion."

MISCARRIAGE OF PURPOSE

One hundred years has passed. There is no Zion. Many are not even sure that there is to be a Zion—i. e., A Government of God; much less have they formed any judgment of whether Zion lies in the direction of Syndicalism, Individualism, Communism, Technocracy, or in some other direction. Why is this?

On the one hand, we have had an inadequate conception of prophecy of old. Because our conceptions of the old were confused, or whatnot, we have not been able to interpret the new. We have interpreted Bible prophecy as if it anticipated little more of The Church than to talk; and therefore we have not seen in the prophecy of our day the revelation of what there is for us to do.

Again, many of us have been afflicted with a carry-over—Calvinistic conception of God—a personal being without body, parts, or passions. His Kingdom, to many of us, is a government without Law, or Order, or Office. Of course, there can be no such government. And those who have felt in terms of such a Zion, instead of winning the world to their ways, have made themselves ludicrous when venturing to deal with the problems involved in practical life situations.

INDUSTRY IN RELATION TO GOVERNMENT

The evolution of industry has left in its wake new questions of justice and, therefore, new problems of government. There are problems of economic opportunity, personal liberty, distribution, and whatnot, which former industrial conditions did not raise. This Government, about which the prophets spoke, must be now the answer to these problems. And if we could be sure that Zion is in truth the mode of government which matches the need of this age, then we could be sure that Zion is The Kingdom of prophecy.

HOW CAN WE BE SURE?

We cannot say, in reason, that the Zion mode of government is the remedy for our social ills because it is the government of God, for that is precisely the proposition that is in question. The only way to be sure that Zion is The Kingdom mode of government without putting it to the test is to contemplate Zion until we come to perceive in its polity the conditions of universal satisfaction of individual and personal wants under modern modes of production.

Unless we are prophets; unless we can discern the purposes of God to establish a Zion in relation to the needs and problems of men, we have no reason for the hope that is within us. And, in that case, until Zion is actually built, we cannot say with certainty that Zion is indeed The Kingdom.

And if we Latter Day Saints have been prophets, we would not have talked such small-time stuff when speaking of Zion. And we could not have been content with such purposeless activity.

"The gathering" has meant little more to most of us than a shift in places of residence; and the storehouse little more than a repository for goodwill offerings. Had we discerned what bearings these things have upon the needs and problems of men, we should have been in a fair way to order and establish The Government.

NO LIGHT IN THE LIGHT

Instead of seeking to set up A Standard of Government for the Nations, we have wasted much of our time inventing small-time, ineffective business devices for individuals or classes or groups of individuals.

What does the promotion of an insurance agency or the operation of a bank or a planing mill or a coal mine or a farmer's marketing association have to do with setting up A Standard of Government? Nothing. And no people who are content to think and endeavor in such terms can be The Light of the World; they cannot be the builders of The Kingdom of prophecy.

GOVERNMENT. NOT INDUSTRY

Government is the behavior of peoples; it is not the behavior of individuals or classes as such. Government is social discipline; it is not mere personal discipline. Government is the course The Community pursues to reach its public ends; it is not the course that physicians or farmers pursue to reach their private ends.

The Government of prophecy is a mode of community behavior to be realized under divine guidance. We do not need a hierarchy or an ecclesia to teach us how to bake bread or rotate crops or operate a factory or coal mine. We do need some sort of guidance to teach us how farmers and physicians, and all other persons who make up the community, should live together in association to satisfy the common wants of all. We do need guidance in government.

GOVERNMENT IS RELATED TO INDUSTRY

Farmers and merchants and all must be set in right relations to each other as members of an economic unit if the natural purposes for which industry is promoted are not to be defeated. But the setting of men in right relations to one another as organs of an economic body is quite another thing from managing the processes of production. The former can be done only by peoples as communities; the latter can be done—and best done—by persons acting in their several capacities as individual stewards.

The business of government is to maintain order and to dispense justice in social situations—to regulate the affairs of society. It is not to regulate the expenditure of the family income or the preparation of the noon-day meal. Zion is not an industrial mechanism; it is a governing organism.

IN THE LATTER DAYS

The traffic code of ox-cart days cannot possibly serve this age of auto trucks and airplanes. Industrial revolution has made all political institutions obsolete. The new factors which have come to work in the economic life of this new age demand a new mode of government if economic endeavor is to promote the peace, prosperity, and happiness of all. And it is to this new age with its new demands that the prophets looked when they predicted the rise of a new mode of association: The Kingdom. "It shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established. . ."

TO ESTABLISH IT WITH JUSTICE

There are three classes of human relations that we should contemplate in relation to this question of government: (1) Charity; (2) business devices; and (3) justice. Under these three heads list in parallel vertical columns the several mass activities which have been promoted by the membership of our Church—such activities as The Harvest Home Festival, lending tithes to the financially distressed, campus pictures, and all the rest. How many of these activities come under the general head of charity? How many under business devices? And how many under justice?—that is, the right ordering of human relations? And, finally, which of all these have to do with the establishment of The Government?

Now, that is not to say that these are not profitable activities in our present circumstances. So is the pulling of an ulcerated tooth. That is not the question. The question is: Are these Kingdom-building activities? How much lending of tithes must we do to build Zion? How many festivals must we hold to set up The Government?

Latter Day Saintism is essentially A Government of God building enterprise. And in that fact you have one of the indications of its divine origin. What other religious movements can match Latter Day Saintism with its Zion-building objective?

SECURITY VERSUS TRUTH

Most men want security more than they want truth. Give most men economic security and they care little about economic truth. That is one reason "my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer." And it is not uncommon for men to regard as friends those who deceive them into a feeling of false security; whereas they regard as enemies those who tell them the naked truth.

Now the Monitors of our souls keep reminding us that it is not profitable to be on the wrong track in matters of religion any more than in any other matter. And because we Latter Day Saints feel that we can't afford to be wrong, that is, insecure, in this matter of building The Kingdom, we have invented various excuses for our present unsatisfying and truth-discrediting circumstances.

Some say (1) that Zion is not to be redeemed until after Jesus comes. And in that case the prosperity of Zion is a heritage of the future. Some say (2) that Zion is the pure in heart; that is, that it is a personal relation to God. And since mere personal goodness cannot possibly make up for social badness; since it cannot fill the need for godly government, it is not to be expected that our purity should yield the glory of Zion. Some say (3) The Kingdom is to come through the personal influence that Latter Day Saint men are able to exert upon political and industrial institutions in society at large. And, since we are not strong enough to reshape the social institutions of The Nation, it is not to be expected that we should escape the common fate of her citizens. In this manner we feed ourselves soporifics and seek security rather than truth.

"THY KINGDOM COME"

But the prophets of God looked forward to the coming of The Kingdom; that is to say, to the establishment of A Government under God. And "Thy Kingdom come" not only tells us what is the prayer of the truly pure in heart, but it is also a prophecy of what is to be the outcome of such purity. These

Use the Quarterly

By C. B. Woodstock

THIS is the first of a series of brief discussions setting out in bold relief the specific emphases which seem necessary if we are to accomplish the task of religious education. Because of its importance, first and primary emphasis is placed upon a more general and more adequate use of our quarterlies.

1. Because they are our own. For many years the best that could be written has been gathered by lesson writers and organized for study purposes in the church school curriculum. This has been done under the urge and inspiration of the Latter Day Message. Time and again the lessons are revised and improved in the light of further research. More modern teaching method is introduced as we keep pace with the advance of educational technique. But especially is care taken that the materials shall fully and adequately teach for each age group the gospel of Jesus Christ. This is the supreme test. We must teach the facts contained in the gospel as it has been revealed in latter days. These must be used as background and structural material with which to build appreciations and loyalties in sturdy Christian character, in personalities willing and able to give noble service in the work of the church. Our presentation of the message and witness of the faith, history and program of the church must build the Kingdom of God as we are called to build it.

2. Because it is an organized course of study. We cannot afford to leave to chance the selection of the materials taught to our children. For every year there is a specific range of informations and experiences carefully selected to meet the interests, needs and capacities of each age group. Our course of study provides in cycles of two and three years for each of the departments from the kindergarten to the advanced adult courses. These are so arranged and published that with care every pupil and group may be securing the class work for which he is best fitted and which most nearly meets his needs.

3. Because our quarterlies contain the most vital, timely, and authentic informations possible to be gathered. At least this is our most urgent effort. As each quarterly is prepared for printing each lesson is carefully weighed to check up on its materials to be sure that it carries the most vital informations available. Especially are the new quarterlies of the adult and older young people's series built about themes of paramount current interest and need in the church.

4. Because our quarterlies are prepared by specialists in their respective fields. This makes possible the placing of carefully prepared materials in the hands of each teacher and student in the church. The quarterly serves as a guide and ready source book to both teacher and pupils. They have the advantage of the author's thought and organization. From that vantage point they go forward together in the learning and building process.

Church School Emphases

—for 1934—

NUMBER ONE

A more general use of our Gospel Series Quarterlies, especially current issues. So far as possible each member of a class should have a quarterly and should be expected to make personal study of the lesson.

USE THE QUARTERLY

It is axiomatic that the best of materials do not work of themselves. Lessons are inert except as their facts and suggestions are seized upon and used in the thinking processes of teacher and student. Quarterlies must be used to be of any value.

1. Quarterlies are prepared primarily as a teacher's guide in directing class study and discussion. They afford the advice of specialists in the particular field of the subject, both in outlining the course, and in providing resource material. A quarterly if so used should serve to keep a class going forward in an orderly, aggressive manner, in a definite course or series of subjects.

2. Quarterlies afford opportunity for regular pupil study. Lesson materials are gathered at great expense of time and effort and made readily available for student use. If all of the class is provided with quarterlies, all have access to the same information. If the lesson has been given consistent study the value of the class experience is multiplied many times. We grow only as we gain in experience. Without personal effort there is little value in class attendance. Our teaching method must stimulate maximum pupil activity. (See page 654.)

Approaching Children's Day

The following material was written by Miss Myrtle Weber in the Departments' Journal for May-June, 1930. It is reprinted here for the benefit of church school workers who need some definite guidance in planning their class work and worship in preparation for June. The two class studies here represent an attempt to approach these two themes of Discipleship and Baptism from the point of view of children. This is the type of study and worship which ought to be planned for the coming weeks. Other themes may be chosen, such as were suggested last week, and made the basis of class study.

How We Can Be Disciples of Jesus

Materials and Illustrative Materials:

Blackboard and chalk; dictionary; Bible; pictures of some of the apostles of our church or of early day disciples; picture of Dorcas.

Teacher's References:

Bible: John 8: 31, 32; Luke 14: 27; Matthew 4: 18-22; 10: 2-4; John 13: 35.
Dickens's Christmas Carol.

Aims:

To stimulate the boys and girls to be more conscious of their acts and thoughts and their effects upon others.

To direct the children's activities so that they will find pleasure and satisfaction in following in the footsteps of Jesus.

To lead the children to the point where they are ready and desirous of pledging themselves to Jesus and his ideals.

Method of Approach:

Write the word disciple on the blackboard. Have some child pronounce it. Ask: "What is a disciple?" (Have some child look up the word in the dictionary, another look up John 8: 31, 32, and another, Luke 14: 27. As each of these is read, interpret it for the children and help them to get some idea of what it means to be a disciple.) Who can name some of the men whom Jesus called to be his disciples when he was here on the earth? (Matthew 10: 2-4.) How did Jesus call his disciples? (Matthew 4: 18-22.) What officers in our church today compare with the first twelve disciples of Jesus? (Quorum of Twelve—the Apostles.) Do you know the names of any of the apostles in our church? (Show pictures of some, if possible, and allow the children to name them.) The apostles are really disciples, you know; and we, too, can be disciples. But Jesus chose the apostles to go out and preach as special messengers for him.

Method of Development:

Tell the following incidents, and allow the children to discover for themselves which of these characters were disciples of Jesus, and why.

There was an old, old man who lived in a hut by the side of the road. For years he had lived there, alone. The winds and the rains of many years had beat upon his hut. The warm, bright sunshine, too, had played about his door and windows, trying its best to get inside. But the door was seldom opened, and the windows were coated with the dirt of many seasons.

On cold and stormy nights, travelers often knocked upon the hermit's door, but their knock was never answered. When the warm, sunny days came, the children used to come to gather the wild flowers that grew about the old man's yard, and always they were frightened away by his fierce threats.

One warm summer day while the old man was working in his garden, he was overcome by the hot rays of the sun. A neighbor passing by saw the old man lying on the ground. He went over to him, picked him up, and carried him into the dingy little hut. The neighbor placed the old man on his cot and went home to get his wife. In a very short time both man and wife were back to the little old hut. They worked with the old man until he opened his eyes; then they made him as comfortable as possible. Immediately the good wife set about to tidy up the little hut. She opened the door to let in some fresh air, washed the few dirty dishes that still sat on the rickety old table, swept the floor, and washed the windows till they fairly shone. The old man lay quite still and watched the woman as she worked about the room, singing softly all the while.

Something was happening to the old man. Within his very soul he longed more than he had ever done before to be alive. Before, he had not cared whether he lived or died; he was content to live a selfish life in the dingy little hut. But now, how he wanted to live—to live to be a friend to all. The good woman had finished her work and prepared a lunch for the old man. Placing the tasty meal upon the rickety table and pulling it over close to the old man, she bade him eat. "I must be going now," she said, "but if you have need of me, send for me." So saying, she left the cottage, and the old man was alone once more.

That afternoon the old man sat outside his door to watch the passers-by and greeted each with a happy smile. The children, he invited to come into his yard and gather the flowers there. Who do you think was the true disciple in our story? Why? What effect did her discipleship have upon the old man? Do you think our little deeds of kindness ever help anyone to be a little better? Allow the children to tell some of their experiences. If they can think of none, the superintendent or teacher should recall some personal experience of something she has seen the children do which brought joy and happiness to another.

How many know the story of Dickens's Christmas Carol? Do you remember Scrooge, who shouted, "Humbug," to everyone who wished him a Merry Christmas? (It may be necessary for some of the incidents connected with Scrooge to be recalled.) Do you think he acted like a disciple of Jesus? But did he learn to do the things that a disciple of Jesus would do? Explain. Which way do you think Scrooge found the most happiness, on Christmas eve when he frightened everyone by his ugliness or on Christmas morning when he shared Christmas with his nephew?

Read the story of Dorcas from the Bible (Acts 9: 36-41), or tell the story in your own words. If possible show a picture of Dorcas going about doing good. By questioning, help the children to discover why Dorcas was considered a disciple of Jesus.

Conclusion:

It may not be possible for us to be a Dorcas and do the things for folks that she did; we may not have the money to be able to do what Scrooge did; nor may we be able to do for someone what the good wife did for the old hermit. But there are ways in which we can be good Samaritans and show our discipleship. Can you think of some things that we, as boys and girls, can do? As the children make suggestions, list them on the blackboard. The list should look something like this:

Go without ice cream sometime and spend money for flowers to take to a sick friend.

Play fairly.

When we come home from school, do mother's errands before we go out to play.

Be careful of any little children who might be around when we are playing.

Be happy and cheerful and help others to be the same.

Use our money wisely and keep our Stewardship Record Books and pay our tithing.

Be obedient.

How can we tell that a person is a disciple of Jesus? (Read John 13: 35.)

Activities:

1. Paste pictures of past or present-day apostles in their books.

2. Help the children to illustrate in their books, by the use of jettis, acts of discipleship which they can perform; or, have them do this illustrating during the coming week after each act of discipleship in which they have engaged. Next Sunday allow one or two of the best ones to be put on the blackboard.

3. Plan with the children to go and sing some songs to at least one shut-in this afternoon.

The Principles of the Gospel

Materials and Illustrative Materials:

Ladder of the principles—chalk drawing, dictionary, Bible (enough for each child, if possible), blackboard and chalk, small pictures of Christ for each child—Perry Pictures Company, Malden, Massachusetts, paste.

Teacher's References:

Bible: Hebrews 6: 1, 2; Matthew 22: 36-40.

Aims:

To make our children conscious of the fact that our church is based upon certain fundamental principles.

To acquaint our boys and girls with the six principles of the gospel.

To help our children see how these principles may be applied in their lives and the significance of the same.

Method of Approach:

Write the word principle on the board. Have some child pronounce it. Get the children to define the word as best they can. Have some child look the word up in the dictionary. Be sure to explain the definition as a settled rule or law to govern action or conduct.

Method of Development:

Our church has special principles or laws, and we call them the principles of the gospel. If we obey these principles, they will help us to live the very best kind of a Christian life. These principles of laws Jesus taught when he was here on earth; more than that, he practiced them and lived according to them. If we follow in the Jesus way, then we, too, will enjoy God's blessings and be able to some day live with the heavenly Father.

There are only six of these principles. That is not many to learn, is it? I like to draw a ladder and on each step write one of these principles, because if we keep these laws they will help us to climb closer to God. When I want to reach very high I have to climb a ladder. So when I want to reach to God I try to climb this ladder of life. (Either draw a ladder on the blackboard as you talk or refer to one that you have previously drawn on the board.)

Where do you suppose we would find these principles of the gospel? What book do we think of as The Book of Life, or God's Book? Do you not think, then, that we could find these principles in our Bible?

You remember last week we said that Paul was one of Christ's very best soldiers. One time when he was on a missionary journey he wrote a long epistle, or letter, to some of his friends in another country, the Hebrews. This was such a wonderful letter, telling the people how to follow in the Jesus way, that it was included in our Bible. Let us find Paul's epistle to the Hebrews. Have you found it? Now turn to the sixth chapter. Here in the very first two verses we find "the principles of the doctrine of Christ," as the Apostle Paul calls them; or, in other words, the principles of the gospel. Let us read them together very softly. (If it is not possible to have enough copies for every child to read from, have these two verses written on the board.) Can you pick out the principles, the things which we are to do in order to "go unto perfection"; that is, to follow the examples of Jesus? As the children pick them out, write them on the board regardless of order.

I am going to tell you which is the very first principle, or step of our ladder. Write "FAITH" on the first rung of the ladder. What do we mean when we say we must have faith, or be faithful? What do we mean when we say, "The dog was very faithful to its master"? Yes, it was true to him; it was loyal. What do we mean when we say, "I have faith in what my mother and father say"? Yes, we believe what they say, and we trust them. So in the gospel, we have faith in God. We believe that when we pray to him he will hear and answer our prayer as he thinks best. When we have faith in God, we will be loyal to him, and like the Apostle Paul we will be his soldiers, ever striving to do the right things and even the hard things when they come our way. Too, we will ask God to help us to be strong so we can do the right.

If we are faithful to our parents, and we should do something that displeased them, would we not be only too anxious to make it right and ask to be forgiven? Surely we would. And so it is, if we do something that displeases God we try to do better and in prayer ask him to forgive us and help us to do differently. Name some ways in which we might displease God. When we make these things right, we say we have repented. True-hearted, loyal, faithful people are always ready to make wrongs right—to repent. The next step on our ladder, then, is REPENTANCE. When we forgive each other and repent of any wrong we may do, then we have climbed that much nearer to God.

Our third step is BAPTISM. If we are faithful and true to God and are really sorry and repent when we make mistakes, then are we not ready for baptism? Already some of you have decided to be disciples of Jesus. Have you climbed the first two steps? I am sure you must have, else you would not have asked for baptism, because after baptism we are going to expect you to be even better boys and girls than you have been so far.

After folks are baptized, do you remember what follows? What do the elders do? Yes, they lay their hands on the heads of those who were baptized and bless them. We call this the confirmation. The next step in our ladder is—what? LAYING ON OF HANDS. Why do you suppose this is done? When a person is baptized, he is a member of the church, but not until he is confirmed does he receive God's special gift of the Holy Spirit. This is the gift God has promised to his children who do his will and keep his commandments. It comes to them to comfort them and to help them over the hard places. It is God's Spirit, and it helps us to know the difference between the right and the wrong and to make wise choices.

The last two principles, or steps, in our ladder are RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD and ETERNAL JUDGMENT. Christ was resurrected. He arose from the dead. So we, too, will be raised from the dead. When we are baptized we bury in the waters of baptism our past life and rise to a new and more beautiful life, a child of God and a member of his church here on earth. When we cease to do wrong and forget our bad habits and form good and better habits, we are resurrected (reborn) into a higher, purer, lovelier life. And so daily, as we "cease to do evil and learn to do good," we are being resurrected (reborn). However, the great resurrection day shall come, when Jesus comes to live on the earth again, and those who have lived good, clean lives and kept God's commandments, shall rise out of their graves and live with Jesus for a thousand years at the end of this thousand years God shall come and all the dead shall rise, even those who have not lived very good lives, and God shall judge us, and we shall live forever with him.

Conclusion:

Help the children to discover that behind these principles is the great element of love. Within our very hearts there must be kept burning a passion for the souls of our fellow men. We must ever love and live for others. Love is essential before we are able to build up a faith, a loyalty to Jesus. Without love there can be no true repentance. So the side pieces that hold your rungs together must be wrought of love. On the one side bar of your ladder write, "Love the Lord with all thy heart," and on the other, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

Activities:

Have the children put the ladder in their books and label it. At the top of the page, above the ladder, a small picture of Christ may be pasted.

BAPTISMAL SERVICE

The memory of anything is based upon the intensity of the experience connected with it. If we would have the children remember their baptism, their allegiance to Jesus, their experience should be made intense. Therefore, in planning this program strive to have this service particularly for the children.

For the past six weeks we have been trying to build up to this service. Through this service we aim to impress upon the minds of our children the sacredness of baptism. We want to help our children realize to some extent the importance and meaning of such a decision. It should tend to stimulate those who are baptized at this time to determine to be loyal to the allegiance they have just made, and to arouse a sincere interest in the children who have not yet made the decision to be baptized, to think seriously about doing so.

A Suggested Program:

Quiet Music: Twenty-third Psalm, by Mendelssohn (or any other appropriate piece of music which would be conducive to reverential meditation).

Call to Worship: The Twenty-third Psalm quietly repeated in unison.

Hymn: "Jesus, my Shepherd," Zion's Praises, 117.

Prayer.

Scripture Reading: Luke 3: 21, 22.

Hymn: "The Child of Galilee," Zion's Praises, 36.

Offering: Have soft music played while the offering is being made. Following the taking of the offering (which this Sunday may be taken by junior boys), have it brought to the front of the church and, while the soft music still continues, have a prayer of thanks offered for it.

Talk by the Pastor: This should not be more than four or five minutes long, and should be woven around the topic of the day—Baptism and Church Membership. Special seats should be reserved for the children to be baptized and their parents. The pastor should have talked with the candidates sometime during the previous week. At this time the talk should be addressed particularly to the parents, calling their attention to the extra charge which is now theirs after their children pledge themselves to be disciples of Jesus. He should appeal to the congregation, making them conscience of the responsibility which is theirs toward these new members. It is for them to be examples and to befriend these children who are taking upon them the yoke of their Master, not to "police." They should give evidence of their faith and interest in these young folks and help them to discover their better selves.

Baptism: The candidates should all be seated in a conspicuous place in the front of the church. If it is possible, have them wear regular baptismal robes; if not, at least try to have them dressed uniformly—the boys wearing white shirts and dark trousers; the girls, white dresses.

As each candidate goes down into the waters of baptism and as he comes out, either No. 90 in the Saints' Hymnal or No. 207 in the Zion's Praises may be played very softly. As the minister raises his hand, there should be a hushed silence, broken only by the voice of the elder administering the baptism.

Hymn: After the last candidate leaves the font, the congregation may sing either of the following:

"All Hail the power of Jesus' name," Saints' Hymnal, 92.

"Shout the tidings of salvation," Saints' Hymnal, 21.

Musical Number: A piano or violin solo may be effectually used at this juncture. Have this part of the program sufficiently long to allow the candidates time to dress and get ready for the confirmation service. (It is better to have a special service for the confirmation if it can be conveniently arranged.)

Confirmation: A few brief remarks may be made concerning this ordinance.

Hymn (choose one of these):

"Stand up, stand up for Jesus," Zion's Praises, 71.

"Anywhere with Jesus," Zion's Praises 19.

"Lord's prayer," Saints' Hymnal, 112. Benediction.

USE THE QUARTERLY

3. More and more our quarterlies must come to serve as authoritative textbooks of our religion. As these materials are more searchingly prepared they become of increasing value to students as reliable sources of information. When properly used a quarterly should become a companion volume with the cherished books of the church. Marginal notes and underlined passages make a text one's own for ready reference. Our quarterlies provide excellent source material along many lines for the use of the priesthood and others who desire training for active service in the church.

USE THE CURRENT QUARTERLIES

Quarterlies are published one quarter at a time as we progress around each age group cycle. One may be sure of having an order filled with the freshly printed quarterly, especially if ordered by the year. Quarterlies of other years of the cycle are usually kept on hand and will be supplied when ordered, if not entirely sold out.

A current "Course of Study," listing all available materials and advising their use, is prepared each year in July and may be had on request at the Herald Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

Each year we are becoming more aware that our scorn of the finer points of polite behavior is very like the attitude of the old Negro woman who, unable to read or write, declared that "them lil' black marks all over the paper am jes' foolishness!"—Emily Post.

Economy in the Kitchen

AN ABUNDANT use of whole-wheat flour is one of the best economies possible in the kitchen. Whole-wheat flour has all the advantages of white flour plus large amounts of vitamins, beneficial mineral salts and laxative roughage; and it has a richer, better flavor than white flour.

Once your family form the whole-wheat flour habit, they will never be satisfied with anything less, and you will have to use it always and for everything, in cakes and pies, puddings and sauces. Even that supposed-to-be delectable white sauce is better when made with whole-wheat flour. Of course it will not be white, but an enticing, nut-brown color, and it will have a rich, individual flavor that cannot be matched by any seasoning or herb. Meat gravies, too, are richer and better when made with whole-wheat flour.

Whole-wheat bread can be bought in most grocery stores and the better bakeries, but it is still more economical to make it at home, and in most cases much better. We women have always thought of bread making as an enormous piece of labor, drudgery entirely unworthy of the modern woman in this age of commercial bakeries, canned vegetables, and women's clubs.

It is quite true that if bread had to be made in the old-fashioned way it would be unwise for most women to undertake it under present conditions, but making bread today has become a very different matter. In the first place, a bread mixer, which eliminates the drudgery of kneading the dough, can be bought for a very small price. In the second place, we have learned to make bread successfully with only one mixing and rising, thus eliminating the long waits and frequent muss of repeatedly working down the bread and letting it rise again in the old-fashioned way.

Made in the modern way, I regard whole-wheat bread made at home as the most worth-while food I prepare. It costs so little, takes so little time and tastes so good; and it comes as near being a complete food as any article in the diet except milk. I start the bread after breakfast and have it all out of the oven, ready to eat before lunch-time, and it all requires less than twenty minutes of actual working time. It requires no bread board, or any of the usual muss attendant upon the customary ceremony of bread-making, and it needs to rise only once. This is the easiest and the best recipe I know:

3 yeast cakes
 ¾ cup lukewarm water
 2 cups boiling water
 2 cups milk
 2 tablespoons salt
 2 tablespoons honey or brown sugar
 3 tablespoons salad oil or vegetable shortening
 4 pounds whole-wheat flour

All measurements are exactly level. If home-ground flour is used, the amount of flour may have to be altered according to its fineness of grinding. The dough should gather in a ball around the paddle of the mixer. You might knead this dough by hand, but I personally think it better not to try to make this bread without at least a hand-turned mixer.

Begin by putting the yeast to dissolve in lukewarm water. Set it in a warm, not hot, place for ten minutes. It is safest to test the yeast by dropping one quarter teaspoon of sugar into the cup with the yeast. If the yeast is fresh, it will gradually foam up. If it fails to do this, don't use it, the bread will be a failure because it will not rise.

Grease three pans and collect the other materials. When the yeast is dissolved, put the boiling water and the milk into the bread-mixer together, thus making a lukewarm mixture. Then add the dissolved yeast and the other ingredients in the order given. Stir the liquids to mix them well before adding the flour.

Turn the mixer seven minutes. Then lift one-third of the dough at a time out of the mixer, mold it with the hands to approximately the shape of the pans and place it in the pans. Be careful to have the dough well filled out at the ends. Don't worry too much about making it smooth and evenly shaped. It will smooth out into a well-rounded loaf as it rises. To insure a tender upper crust, grease the dough when it is put in the pans.

Keep the pans in a warm place and let the dough rise until about double the original size, one or two hours according to the temperature of the bread and the condition of the yeast. During the entire process of mixing and rising, the dough must be kept at a uniformly warm temperature. Chilling the dough at any time during the whole process of making means certain failure. By lukewarm I mean a temperature of about eighty degrees. This is the temperature most favorable for the growth of the yeast which causes the bread to rise.

Bake one hour, the first twenty minutes in a moderate oven between 325 and 350 degrees F., the next twenty minutes in a hot oven, about 400 degrees, and then again twenty minutes in a moderate oven. Remove from the pans and, for a soft crust, grease the top of each loaf while hot.

This bread bakes much better in a long, narrow pan, as it is hard to get a "fat" loaf done in the middle. My pans measure 12 inches long, 3 inches across and 3 inches deep. If you cannot find such shaped pans in the stores and intend to make bread often, it would pay you to have a tinner make them up for you according to these measurements.

Try mixing one part butter with two parts honey, spread it on freshly toasted whole-wheat bread, sprinkle with cinnamon and serve immediately. You won't need cake or cookies on such an occasion.

The above article is from the pen of Jane Randolph, it is an excerpt from "Whole-Wheat Flour Always" in the current number of Physical Culture for May, 1934.

It seems to me that here we find the wisdom of the ages combined with the simplicity of Christ; it is in line with the teachings of Dr. Teel, and the health program of the church as taught in the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants.—E. C. Barnes, Burton, Washington, April 15, 1934.

The Habit of Scientific Thinking

By Victor H. Noll

(An extract from an article of the same title appearing in the Teachers' College Record, October, 1933.)

A study of the literature on the subject and a careful consideration of the characteristics of the scientific attitude as they appear to the writer, resulted in a description which consists of six fundamental habits of thinking. These habits are:

1. Habit of accuracy in all operations, including calculation, observation, and report.
2. Habit of intellectual honesty.
3. Habit of open-mindedness.
4. Habit of suspended judgment.
5. Habit of looking for true cause and effect relationships.
6. Habit of criticism, including self-criticism.

The first habit, that of accuracy in all operation, including calculation, observation, and report, is not only an indispensable part of the scientific attitude but a very desirable habit in any case. It seems fairly obvious that inaccuracy in calculation, observation, or report is incompatible with high-grade scientific research. This habit is no less desirable in everyday life, and inaccuracy there is often fraught with much more undesirable consequences. If the chemist makes a very small error in the determination of the exact atomic weight of an element, the population as a whole may be little affected. However, if those responsible for the ill-fated Akron had judged weather conditions differently, perhaps seventy-three lives could have been spared. The switchman of packed subway trains may by a slight inaccuracy endanger the safety of several thousand persons. The inaccuracies of bankers and investment houses, willful or otherwise, have caused thousands to lose their homes and the savings of a lifetime. Inaccurate diagnosis of economic conditions has contributed to the existence and continuance of widespread misery.

The second basic habit is intellectual honesty. It is the habit of sticking to the facts and refraining from exaggeration, of admitting being in the wrong when proved so. It involves submerging personal bias and prejudice. There is an intellectual honesty, an honesty in matters of property. No man is intellectually honest nor has he the scientific attitude if he permits personal pride, bias, prejudice, or ambition to cause him in any way to pervert the truth.

Censorship of the press and the deliberate perversions of fact by that same press are common examples of intellectual dishonesty. The distribution of bank statements, either unintelligible to the layman or so arranged as to give misleading impressions without actually falsifying, is an example of the type of intellectual dishonesty with which many of us have lately come face to face. Examples are not confined to politics or business. Individual researches and even large-scale inquiries have been undertaken and carried out to "prove" that a certain thing is true or that something else is not true. Under such conditions it is extremely difficult for intellectual honesty to prevail. It seems desirable from every standpoint to cultivate in our pupils the habit of not compromising with truth, at least in so far a truth can be established.

The third habit is that of open-mindedness. It is one of the habits most generally mentioned in descriptions of the scientific attitude. It is taken here to mean a willingness to consider new facts, a sort of "eyes-and-ears-open" policy that precludes the acceptance of any solution as final and ultimate. It involves the constant revision and editing of opinions and conclusions through the reception and assimilation of additional data. If the physicist had stopped twenty years ago and assumed that his science was complete and closed (as indeed some did), if he had believed that there were no new facts to be discovered, our present-day concept of the nature of matter would probably still be unknown. However, he kept his mind open, did not accept the atom as the final and ultimate indivisible unit of matter, and consequently we have today a greatly revised notion of the nature of matter and of the universe. How much better to teach the habit of open-mindedness, of willingness to consider new facts, than to have minds closed to the study of new evidence, secure in a bigotry that knows the answer to everything!

In the social situation, open-mindedness is particularly needed. We are usually so bound by tradition in politics, finance, and other matters dealing with public welfare that it seems impossible at times to get anything done except as it has always been done. Campaigns have been made many times on the principle of upholding the good old traditions at any cost. Often reports of survey commissions that included in their membership the best minds available have been discarded because they did not agree with the convictions of their sponsors.

There are some who decry the danger of making persons so open-minded that they lack convictions on anything. No doubt there are individuals of this type for whom training in open-mindedness would be harmful rather than helpful, but the vast majority of our "average citizens" are seldom characterized by lack of positive opinion or definite conclusions on any subject.

Closely related to the foregoing habit of open-mindedness is the habit of suspended judgment. Open-mindedness implies a willingness to consider new facts more or less thrust upon one; suspended judgment implies the habit of actually looking for such facts and of waiting for all available ones before coming to a final conclusion. It means holding in the tendency to make snap judgments or to jump at conclusions. This habit seems especially dependent upon mental maturity for its development. Children are notably prone to jump at conclusions without sufficient facts to substantiate them. The child sees its mother don a hat and immediately concludes that she is going "bye-bye." The young city lad has heard much about the "hick" from the country; consequently he despises everyone who comes from a farm as being "dumb." Most of us are guilty of making snap judgments at times.

By experience that is not always pleasant, one learns not to jump at conclusions. One learns that a warm day in April is not always an indication that it is safe to go outdoors without hat or coat, and that filling the gas tank of the family car today is not to be taken as proof that it will not be necessary to do so again tomorrow. The "hunch" of the scientist which often leads to significant findings may appear on the surface to be a snap judgment, but as a matter of fact it is, in all probability, the result of the synthesis of much previous experience and training, being more in the nature of a scientific hypothesis. Making snap judgments is a costly process that often results in misery and suffering. Many of the greatest wars of history can be traced directly to ill-considered decisions. If most of us had more of the "scientific caution" as part of our habit systems, the majority of our cure-alls, personal as well as social, would die a quick and painless death.

The fifth habit is a functioning conviction of the universal operation of the law of cause and effect. Kilpatrick has pointed out that most of our false thinking about getting rich quick is due to failure to appreciate cause and effect relations. A young man who tries to achieve a fortune without working for it, even though he succeed, is going against a fundamental principle of science as well as of life. There is no way by which stocks can be made to increase in value forever, as we were assured they could be a few years ago. More common examples of such unscientific thinking are to be seen in our store of unfounded beliefs. Is there a rainbow after the thunderstorm? If so, is it a sign of a covenant with Jehovah, or is it the bending of light rays as they pass through droplets of water? Children and people with childlike minds are notably superstitious. Lucky pieces, walking under a ladder, horsehairs turning into snakes, falling stars, black cats, and the myriads of other superstition-ridden phenomena of everyday life are strong evidence of wrong habits of thinking. These, as well as many more harmful ones, may be removed by substituting correct habits of thinking with respect to causes and effects.

Finally there is the habit of criticism, including self-criticism. The habit of looking at suggested explanations, natural occurrences, proposed remedies, and the like, with a critical eye is certainly a desirable characteristic. This is not what is commonly known as the habit of fault-finding. It means rather the habit of exercising all the powers of careful judgment and evaluation. It is highly important that this habit be developed to displace the laissez faire attitude which exists today. If more of us had the habit of criticism, it seems fairly certain that racketeering, corrupt politics, oil scandals, and all the rest would soon be out of business. We should have, instead of a forty percent vote at elections, twice that much or more.

Self-criticism is a no less desirable habit. Criticizing one's own behavior is perhaps even more fundamental than criticizing that of others. Binet regarded the power of self-criticism as one of the three fundamental attributes of intelligence. We do not propose to demonstrate that the individual's power of self-criticism can be increased. We are here concerned entirely with the matter of increasing his disposition to use the power he has by forming the habit of doing so. From our point of view, it seems better to have individual A, who possesses five units of critical power, form the habit of using all five properly and to the fullest extent, than to have B, who possesses twenty-five such units, use them improperly or not at all.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

pure in heart people are to serve God in establishing The Government.

The Physician of the race knows what is necessary to save his patient. And his judgment is expressed in the command to "Seek first The Kingdom," That means, of course, "to establish its righteousness." That is our task. God waits for us. The voice of The Son entreats us to join hands with him to make Christianity's supreme contribution to the welfare of the race: Zion, The Kingdom Government!

Church Trials

One of the most difficult things that general church officers meet with in their ministry, is the attempting to reconcile and set right questions of dispute and quarrel in branches; strifes between brethren. And indeed it is not only most difficult, but it is also one of the most unthankful. . . .

Our opinion is, and on this we think we have a portion of inspiration, that if we were as willing to follow the advice and submit to the finding of the judges to whom we appeal for the settlement of our grievances, as we are anxious, willing and certain that others should be, the settlement of troubles would be made much easier than they now are. . . .

Personally the editor thinks that continued wrangling on the part of church members in respect to their rights, is unbecoming, and indicates clearly that those who do so are lacking in the charity that "covereth a multitude of sins." While the right of appeal is granted, we think that in six cases out of every ten the better way of procedure, if brethren go to law before the brethren, is for them both to submit to the decision first had if both sides have been fairly heard and there let the matter drop. If a brother should say, "Well, that may be your notion Mr. Editor; but as for me, I am not made of such soft stuff. The brother wronged me, and if the church cannot compel him to make it right, I want nothing more of the church." We answer; the church cannot compel either of you to do anything, he to make amends, or you to forgive him. It is a question of Christian qualities, that is all. He who is the better follower of Christ will choose the wiser, and more noble part.—Saints' Herald, volume 33, page 449.

God is Not Far!

God is not far from any one of us:
The wild flower by the wayside speaks
His love;
Each blithesome bird bears tidings from above;
Sunshine and shower His tender mercies prove,
And men know not His voice!

God is not far from any one of us:
He speaks to us in every glad sunrise;
His glory floods us from the noonday skies;
The stars declare His love when daylight dies,
And men know not his voice!

God is not far from any one of us:
He watches o'er His children day and night;
On every darkened soul He sheds His light;
Each burdened heart He cheers, and lends His might
To all who know his voice.

—Thomas Curtis Clark, International Journal of Religious Education.

The Readers Say---

Happiest Hours Reading Herald

The letters and articles in your paper have promoted me to write. I love the Herald. Some of my happiest hours are spent reading the good news, and it is a privilege to see the pictures of elders we have seen in days gone by. Their faces recall sweet memories of gospel work.

The few Saints at Caseville are faithfully carrying on the work, and the Lord has blessed us many times. Best wishes to all who have brought us the gospel message in days gone by.

My step is growing slow as I grow older, but my love for the gospel is stronger than ever. Eye has not seen and ear has not heard what God has in store for the faithful.

God's Goodness

Not long ago I was at work in the woods cutting poles, getting up my next year's wood supply, when I was suddenly taken quite ill. The pain was so intense that I was unable to stand.

As I sat down on the edge of the pile of poles I had just finished cutting, I felt strongly impressed to pray, so I knelt and at once offered a simple prayer. It was answered immediately and the pain left me, and I began working again.

I had not been working long when the pain came back. I was impressed to start for home. Before I had gone far, the Spirit of God told me to go and be administered to, and so I made my way to the home of Brother Grinnell. Before we were hardly through the ordinance, the pain left me, and has not come back again.

I wish I were able at all times to live and do the things God wants me to do, that I might at least be worthy of part of the blessings he has bestowed upon me.

I have many weaknesses which I wish to overcome. I have enjoyed the presence of the Holy Spirit many times during our meetings in our church, even though we are few in number.

We are God's children and I am thankful that I know for myself that I belong to the church of God.

I wish to thank my heavenly Father for blessing me financially. He has blessed me for paying my tithing.

It is my desire to cling to that rod of iron and be faithful and endure unto the end. If any patriarch passes through here, I hope he will stop to see us.

A Singular Blessing

When I read of others' faith in the gospel and of the blessings they have received, my whole being is filled with the Spirit of the Master. I, too, have been healed many times through administration and prayer.

Let me relate one experience. My hands used to grow numb until I used them with difficulty. They grew worse until I could do no sewing, not even sew on buttons. I could not peel the potatoes or other vegetables to prepare the family meals.

One evening I was alone. My husband did not belong to the church and he and the girls were at his church. I was reading some of the hardships and trials through which the early Saints had passed and what faith they had. The Spirit seemed to tell me to pray about my hands.

They were so bad at that time that when I laid down I could not sleep except for a short time, then I would have to get up and rub them. So I went into the bedroom and bowed in prayer, asking the Lord to give me one night's sleep and rest.

That was ten or twelve years ago and I have been troubled with my hands only two different times since. Then I rubbed them with consecrated oil. I always tried to keep the oil in the house for it has been of great help to me and my family.

I have many things for which to be thankful. I have reared a family of nine and have seen them all come into the church. I am the oldest daughter of Patriarch J. J. Bailey. If Sister Hattie Mast, formerly of Brown City, sees this, I wish she would write to me.

How We Can Help

I have just read the article, "Watchman, what of the Night?" by Brother Davis in the Herald, and it is soul inspiring. I have tried to help build our little church spiritually. In a measure we have succeeded in improving, for we have established a church school with good attendance, and since its beginning the first of the year, there is more unity and interest among the members that I have ever seen here before.

In self-improvement we must not forget our church and its needs. We have brought our little church out of debt and have been progressing. We are not clear of personal debts yet, but we have endeavored to pay our tithes and small offerings. I mention the personal debts because to me they are as important as the rest.

But, all this, brothers and sisters, is not enough if we have the strength and courage to help more. Let us get our church out of debt while we have the opportunity to help. Let us pledge our services to God and get to work.

"Our Faith Will Increase"

My testimony is that God lives, and if we are observant, we constantly see evidences of his glory. When we see the lightning, we see his power. When we see it, do we not fear him? To fear God is the beginning of wisdom.

I was led into the waters of baptism in 1891. This is my forty-third year in the true way of life, and nowhere have I found a resting place where one can sit down and take it easy. There is no place for the idler in God's kingdom.

David says, "The Lord loveth the gates of Zion." Since I first came into the church, I have longed for the time when we could dwell in Zion, but later, my desire seemed to be less intense; it appeared to me that Zion was not possible in my time.

I love the latter-day cause, and though I have been tested, I still cling to the truth. If we work as we pray, our faith will increase as sure as the grass grows from moisture and sunshine.

QUESTION TIME

Note: All inquiries requiring speedy or individual answers should be accompanied by a three-cent stamp, or an envelope stamped and addressed.

A. B. PHILLIPS

Should members of the priesthood lead in prayers and testimonies, or wait for lay members to occupy?

So far as I recall, there is no rule requiring any particular method, unless one so construe the command for the elders to "take the lead of all meetings." But this evidently refers to supervision of the service rather than to prayer itself. However, it doubtless would be appropriate for a member of the priesthood to occupy in prayer or testimony at the beginning of a service if members should delay doing so, and he might do so in any event if so led when on one else was occupying. It does not seem inappropriate for the priesthood to set a good example of diligence and promptness in such matters, particularly when others are slow to occupy. It might encourage others to take part.

Why were three witnesses at first required for the Book of Mormon, instead of eight?

It was stated that three witnesses were to be provided who should behold the plates by the "power of God," and this may have been pursuant to the general rule that "in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established." The other eight witnesses did not view the plates under the same miraculous circumstances as did the three, and their testimony did not include this divine aspect of the matter. The eight were permissive witnesses of the actual existence of the plates, but the three witnesses testified to the divine circumstances attending the matter as well.

In commanding soldiers: "Be content with your wages," did John support war?

John was doubtless loyal to the government under which he lived, just as are subjects of other governments, so far as laws were equitable and just. All governments must be maintained by the exercise of proper authority, in order to become effective and beneficial to those governed, and the Roman government had enforced its rule by the use of soldiers under legates, representatives who were made responsible to the Emperor. But John's instructions to the soldiers could hardly be construed as in support of war when he said:

"Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely; and be content with your wages."—Luke 3: 14.

In giving this command, John pointed out three chief faults of the soldiers; for they were often given to violence and false witness against those who could not protect themselves, and discontent with their wages was of common notoriety among them. To be content with their wages and to perform honestly their tasks would tend to more equitable government and better social conditions among the governed. John's advice therefore was wise and just.

What does Lot's wife becoming a pillar of salt mean?

It is believed that this miracle or remarkable event was designed of God to signify the sterility of all goodness of those who disobey his law. She did not obey the command which forbade looking back while fleeing from the wicked city. It may have been her desire for the things she had left behind which caused her to disobey, but the result was in any event the result of disobedience. Salt was often strewn upon ground by conquerors of a people to make it unproductive, and thus she became a symbol of sterility and barrenness.

Was the name of Lehi known among the Jews, or only in the Book of Mormon?

As Lehi was a descendant of one of the tribes of Israel, it might be expected that the name could be found among the Jews or at least be known to them prior to the time when Lehi and his people came to America, as described in the Book of Mormon. In the time of Samson (cir. 1100 B. C.) there was a place in Judea named Lehi, and Samson named a place where he cast away a jawbone Ramath-lehi. The name must therefore have been more or less familiar to the Jews.

Midland District, England

Spring Reunion Is Beneficial

Saints of Midland District assembled at Claycross for their reunion April 21 and 22. With them were Bishop A. T. Trapp and two general church appointees, Elder Fred O. Davies, missionary to the British Isles, and Elder Peter S. Whalley, pastor of Birmingham Branch, along with over sixty-five visiting members from Gloucester, Birmingham, Leicester, Sutton-in-Ashfield, and Nuneaton.

Saturday evening brought the first session, and business was attended to.

Prayer service opened Sunday's meetings at 9:30 a. m., Missionary F. O. Davies in charge. A beautiful spirit prevailed, and the day was started well. Then came the local Sunday school until 10:35 a. m.

Bishop A. T. Trapp was the speaker at the morning preaching service, taking for his subject, "Spiritual Relationship of the Financial Law." He particularly emphasized the necessity of each member's regularly paying his tithing to fulfill the financial and spiritual law. For a Scripture lesson he read Luke 10. Sister Ada Davies, wife of Missionary Davies, sang two solos, "Ivory Palaces," and "Higher Ground."

The church school was the next service, and Brother Raymond Holmes read the Psalm 143. After a solo by Sister Kathleen Holmes, Elder Fred Davies was the speaker. His theme thought centered on how the duty of the church is to evangelize the world and zionize the church. He urged the young people to put the Tenth Legion into operation in this mission.

A wonderful spirit of inspiration was present during the fellowship service, and all felt greatly blessed.

The closing session of the day was a preaching service at 6 p. m. The district president was the speaker, and he clearly portrayed the need of the members' living closer to Jesus. Sisters Ethel and Nellie Schofield sang a duet number, "Guide Me to Thee," and Sister Davies sang "My Mother's Prayer." "O Jesus, I Have Promised" was the closing hymn, and the benediction was by Bishop Trapp.

San Antonio, Texas

Rockwood Court and South Cherry

A short program was given on Easter Sunday during the church school hour by the children, under the supervision of Mrs. Fay Hall and Zita Rievers. At the close of this service two candidates were baptized, Chorinne and Lorane Kuykendall, daughters of Brother and Sister Andrew Kuykendall. Their uncle, Elder G. R. Kuykendall, officiated.

Immediately following the baptisms, the sacrament service was conducted, at the beginning of which the confirmation took place. E. L. Henson and T. J. Jett, jr, officiated in this ordinance.

On the table from which the emblems were served, was a beautiful white Easter lily, sent by Sister Sophia Ferguson, in memory of her late husband, W. H. Ferguson. Pastor R. W. Jett, who presided over the service, asked E. L. Henson to give a sketch of Brother Ferguson's life. He responded, paying a splendid tribute to the deceased brother's memory. Sister Ferguson fell and broke her knee cap, and for that reason was unable to attend the service.

A cantata, "Life Eternal," was sung by the choir at 5:30 p. m. Miss Emma Jackson directed the choir, and was assisted by Lavon Jackson, accompanist. Those taking special parts were Mrs. Mary Hall, and Mrs. Floyd Jett, sopranos; Mrs. Evva Richardson, contralto; Claude Reaves, tenor; and Glaud Kuykendall, bass. The cantata was repeated at Bandera, April 8, to an appreciative audience.

The confirmation service was held in the evening, Elder Robertson presiding. He was assisted by Elders John Hall, A. C. Wardle, J. C. Conyers, and E. H. Lohmolder. A number of nonmembers were present and were much impressed with the service.

The young people of Utah District met April 28 and 29, for a rally day at Malad, Idaho. On Saturday night a district program served to make the young people better acquainted with each other. Miriam Winholtz, president of the district young people, was in charge of this event. Brother Jones, of Malad, greeted everyone and gave all a welcome. Solos, chorus numbers, readings, and talks were contributed by the young people.

Sunday morning at eight-thirty the adults met in the class rooms for prayer meeting, and the young people assembled in the chapel for a worship service of their own. The latter group was in charge of Elder Edward Moe, of Provo, assisted by Silas Egan, priest, of Salt Lake City, and Gerald Winholtz, priest, of Ogden. Utah District is proud of these three young men. The service was uplifting, and the Spirit of God was given them.

Sunday school at 10 a. m. was followed by preaching at eleven by Elder R. R. Robertson whose subject was "Youth." The Malad Young People's Chorus sang "Take up Thy Cross."

The young people are grateful to Malad women who served the lunch. Indeed all Saints of that city are to be thanked for their hospitality.

At 1:30 p. m. the young people's council met with the pastors of the district and the district president, to organize the district's young people. Miriam Winholtz was elected president of Utah District young people at the district conference held March 11. The officers' council is composed as follows: Miriam Winholtz, of Ogden president; Silas Egans, of Salt Lake City, vice president; Elmer Lohmolder, of Salt Lake City, secretary; Genevieve Chase, of Ogden, treasurer and Edward Moe, of Provo, director of all recreation of young people's gatherings.

At 3:15 p. m. everyone assembled. "One Day When Fell the Spirit's Whisper" was the opening song, and Elder R. R. Robertson offered the invocation. Sister Robertson talked about the General Conference, then Theda Jones, of Malad, sang "Somewhere a Voice is Calling." "Prayer in the Home," a talk was given by Silas Egans, Ann Thomas, of Malad, sang "Teach Me to Pray," and Gerald Winholtz talked on "Faith." Then Adda and Farrell Lusk, of Malad, sang "I Can Never Forget," and Madonna Herbert, also of Malad, played a piano solo. A reading, "The Challenge of Youth," by Genevieve Chase, preceded a talk, "Discover God," by Elder Edward Moe. A solo, "Heed the Voice," by Miriam Winholtz, was followed by a solo by Mrs. S. G. Winholtz, of Ogden, one of her own composition. Elder R. R. Robertson talked on "Go to God in Prayer." Before the closing song the young people sang "Youth's Prayer."

That evening Elder Edward Moe spoke to the Saints.

Everyone is looking forward to the next young people's gathering to be held at Ogden in June.

Last week Salt Lake City Branch was favored with a visit from Elder Arthur Oakman, who was returning to his field of labor in California. His inspiring sermon was well received.

Both the bride and bridegroom are members of the church, the latter being baptized just a few months ago. They are making their home in Baltimore.

A shower was given the bride by the women's department at a recent meeting. She received many useful articles for her home.

Three candidates have asked for baptism, Mrs. Lucille Powell, wife of Brother A. W. Powell; Emma Givens, age nine, and Gloria Germon, eight. While this congregation is happy to have these new members, they are sorry to lose two of their workers, as Brother and Sister Powell are moving to Washington. They have the best wishes of Baltimore Saints.

Easter Sunday, Miss Cleo Copeland and Edmond Johnston were united in marriage at Colorado Springs, Elder Joseph Ebeling officiating.

Sister Viola Chick, one of the faithful members, suffered a stroke of paralysis March 17, and passed away May 3. Pastor T. J. Nutt conducted the funeral service. The large attendance and the beautiful floral offerings testify of the respect of those who knew her.

This movement is in accord with general and local officers of the church. Bishop G. L. DeLapp, Pastor John F. Sheehy, and J. S. Kelley, local bishop, were present and spoke regarding the undertaking.

The women will renovate, equip, and maintain the building as headquarters not only for themselves but for various church clubs and for the girls. Having proved their ability to raise money through sacrifice, these workers are eager to relieve the church of the Campus financial burden, and led by their supervisor, Sister Charlotte Koehler, they are busy formulating plans to help pay off the mortgage principal and interest and to maintain the building. This is a big undertaking, but the women of Independence want no small task.

Success for Every Man

The great thing that strikes you on looking back is how quickly you have come—how very brief is the span of life on this earth. The warning that one would give therefore, is that it is well not to fritter it away on things that don't count in the end; nor on the other hand is it good to take life too seriously as some seem to do. Make it a happy life while you have it. That is where success is possible to every man.—Lord Baden-Powell

At the eleven o'clock hour, Patriarch Ammon White preached an inspiring and helpful sermon. Elder J. W. A. Bailey was the speaker at seven-thirty.

May 20, at eleven o'clock, Elder James A. Gillen occupied. Brother Gillen was endowed with the Spirit, and all present were benefited by hearing this sermon, which was based upon the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy, using a present-day application to the promises contained therein. At seven-thirty the Y. P. A. was in charge of the service, Brother A. G. Hougas being the speaker.

May 12, the Y. P. A. gave a banquet in honor of their mothers. There were forty-nine present. Those taking part in the program were: Address of welcome, Lucile Middleton; response, Sister Hazel McConnell; violin solo, George Stowell; trumpet solo, Elbert McConnell; vocal duet, Delmar Goode, and J. R. Closson; address, Sister Mary Hiles.

Friday night, May 18, both group 36-E, and 35-W. held social evenings. They were at the homes of Brother and Sister George Willis, and Brother and Sister George Anway, respectively. The speaker at the first place was Brother Swen Swenson, and at the second, Brother James A. Gillen.

Kansas City Stake

Stake conference was held May 18 to 20. There was a reversal of the usual order of meetings, business meeting being held on Friday evening at 7:45 instead of on Monday following the devotional Sunday services. The morning speaker on Sunday was Stake President C. E. Wight, and at 7:45 p. m. President Floyd M. McDowell occupied the sacred desk. Luncheon was served shortly after the morning service and at six in the evening. A dedication service at 2:30 p. m. and a concert at four-thirty occupied the afternoon.

On Friday, May 11, the A Cappella Chorus of Graceland College, under the direction of Miss Mabel Carlile journeyed to Kansas City and gave a splendid concert at Central Church. The performance was sponsored by the Heart of America Chapter of the Alumni Association in their endeavor to boost and advertise Graceland, and raise a yearly scholarship for a worthy Kansas Citian. Miss Carlile is head of the music department at Graceland and most proficient in her field. Recently the chorus won in a contest at Creston, Iowa, with colleges of Southwestern Iowa participating, and it was acclaimed the outstanding performance of the entire event which included all types of instrumental and vocal music.

As is customary the program was divided into two parts, the sacred and secular. Linna Timmerman Hunt, head of the voice department, and the male quartet charmed the audience with their special numbers. Between the groups, Bill Gould, one of the choir, read two entertaining selections. The superior precision, shading, quality, and absolute blend of this chorus, under the guidance of their skillful director, make it one of the finest a cappella choirs of the Middle West. This was one of the best performances the A Cappellas have ever given in Kansas City, and the audience was most appreciative. Kansas City was delighted and honored to have them make this special trip to sing here.

Central Church

Central members commemorated Mother's Day at the church period. Under the direction of Eugene Christy the choir sang, "Mother—Angel and Queen," with Elizabeth Hitchcock, soloist. As a special Mother's Day tribute Charles Siltens, tenor, sang "Mother O'Mine." The morning speaker was the pastor, C. E. Wight. He gave an impressive talk, inspiring a greater mother appreciation.

At the evening service Elder J. A. Gardner chose for his theme, "The Sin of Being Ordinary." He presented in his informal manner such thoughts and illustrations as would kindle a desire for increased individual development. As her solo, Jean Dunn, youthful soprano, used "The Stars Sang in God's Garden," and then at the request of Brother Gardner, she sang at the closing, "Pass Me Not, O Gentle Savior."

The church decorations are always lovely and much above the ordinary due to the thoughtful and earnest efforts of Brother Fred Furness.

Attendance was unusually large at the May sacrament service. The peaceful spirit of unity and brotherhood present at this meeting was most enjoyable. A sincere desire to serve more earnestly was the expression of many.

Heathwood Church

Mother's Day was observed at Heathwood Church with a pageant, "Mother Love." Eighteen young women took part. Sister Virginia Cummings took the part of mother. The pageant was directed by Sister Lela Eskridge.

The young people presented an interesting Easter play entitled "The Alabaster Box," also directed by Lela Eskridge.

Recent Sunday night speakers have been Elders Ammon White, John Tucker, and Lester A. Fowler.

Argentine Church

There was an attendance of forty-eight at the church school on a recent Sunday. Forty-two partook of the sacrament on the first Sunday of the month, and felt the sweet influence of God's Spirit.

In the evening the services were in charge of the O. B. K.'s who were assisted by the Armourdale Church Orchestra. The orchestra is composed of twelve pieces and is led by Brother James Hawkins. Brother Vernon McCann, the speaker, chose for a lesson, 1 Kings 19. Brother William Browe was master of ceremonies.

How to interest children in a sermon has been the problem of many local churches. This is the way Argentine does it. The Sunday morning study hour at 9:45, forty-five minutes long, is followed by a worship period which includes a story for smaller ones. The worship period is also forty-five minutes long, and this, in turn, is followed by a thirty-minute sermonet. Thus in a two-hour service are incorporated three services without intermission. The needs of the young are nicely taken care of in a session of this kind. They hear the gospel story told so that they can understand. There is no confusion or visiting between services, and only a few leave to go home; a number come in for the sermonet. All this is cared for in a single room twenty-two by thirty-five feet.

Today the country is bathed in the radiance of the sun, moon, and stars. Heaven favors only those who are virtuous.—Emperor Kang Teh of Manchukuo.

Far West Stake

Stewartsville Branch

Thirty-five young people were given a party in the church basement April 23, by their supervisor, L. G. Ehlers. Inside games were enjoyed as well as volley ball on the lawn. The young people's choir gave two anthems for the morning service April 22.

The branch was disappointed April 29, when Elder Ward A. Hougas, stake president, was unable to fill his appointment on account of illness. That night at eight o'clock the congregation joined with other churches in the town in a union service sponsored by the Better Homes Movement, of which Sister Madge Head has been local chairman for the past six years.

May 6 was the regular communion service. Attendance was not large because of a number of cases of whooping cough and measles. In the evening the young people gave a religious drama, "The Half of My Goods." The leading parts were played by Emerson McCord and Mona Armstrong. They gave the play at Cameron, May 20.

The monthly educational meeting of the women was held Thursday, May 3. The program was arranged by Sister Anna McCord. Brother A. E. McCord conducted the lesson study on the Book of Mormon. The women served the junior-senior banquet of the high school in the church basement Saturday night, April 27. They will serve the Sunday dinner for the Stake O. T. Z. Convention to be held here, June 3.

Mother's Day, May 13, was appropriately observed. A tribute to mothers was given by Miss Bernice Worden. Mrs. Z. J. Lewis and E. J. Armstrong gave two beautiful duet numbers, "My Mother's Prayer" and "Mother's Prayers Have Followed Me." Elder A. E. McCord presented an impressive sermon, using for his theme thought this Mother's Day prayer, "Dear God, there are so many things I ought to do and be—but please now, make me do what's right, so she'll be proud of me." Pastor Z. J. Lewis was in charge and gave a beautiful prayer.

At night the congregation joined with the other churches in the baccalaureate service at the Presbyterian Church. President F. M. McDowell gave the address which was forceful and inspirational. His theme was, "As a Man Thinketh, So Is History." Brother McDowell has been invited repeatedly for a number of years to give the baccalaureate sermon. He always leaves a message for thought and for constructive building.

Guilford Branch

Church members at Guilford were made happy over the ordination of Brother Dewey Anderson to the office of deacon which took place at the special ordination service at Second Church in Saint Joseph, on Easter Sunday afternoon. Brother Dewey is the church director and an efficient helper in every way.

The O. T. Z. Class under the direction of Miss Neva Ross, presented the play, "Paying the Fiddler," in the I. O. O. F. Hall on March 17 and 24. The proceeds were used to pay the expenses of a trip to General Conference. On the first Sunday of conference, a group of twenty-four were permitted to attend. This was a wonderful experience and, for the majority of the group, was their first General Conference. Miss Neva Ross was the official delegate and Mrs. Emma Nelson was also in attendance most of the time.

During the month of April, Elder L. A. Keck, of Saint Joseph, and Elder John Hovenga, of Stewartville, visited the Guilford Branch and preached.

On April 29 a girls' chorus, under the direction of Miss Oma Ross, assisted by Harold Jobe, tenor, and Miss Wilma Lewis, violinist, broadcasted from KMBC from 10 p. m. to 11 p. m. They also sang at the Stone Church, in Independence, at 7:30 p. m. The group attended the eleven o'clock service at Central Church, in Kansas City, and visited the Nelson Memorial Art Gallery.

On Mother's Day a program was given following the church school and Elder Ross, the pastor, gave the sermonet. On account of rain a number were not permitted to attend.

Children's Day exercises will be held Sunday evening, May 27. The program is in charge of Mrs. Dewey Anderson, Lavota Jobe, and Neva Ross. On Saturday night, May 26, the women of the adult department will serve the Guilford High School alumni banquet. The young people are looking forward to the O. T. Z. Convention to be held at Stewartville, June 2 and 3.

Saint Joseph Branch

First Church

May 6, the young people held an early morning prayer service at Bartlett Park. Elder H. C. Timm, supervisor of the young people, was in charge, assisted by J. Gilbert Bowser and Donald Hale. It was decided to hold the prayer services out of doors during the summer months.

The sacrament service was well attended and a splendid service was enjoyed. Elder H. C. Timm gave the theme talk. At the vesper service Elder Timm gave an inspiring sermon.

On Tuesday evening the O. T. Z.'s gave a scavenger party which proved popular and interesting. The children's division of the church school gave a banquet for the mothers and fathers Friday night, May 11. About one hundred twenty-five were served and an interesting program was given by the children.

Mother's Day was observed May 13, and a good program was carried out all day. A special worship period and special music added to the services in the morning. Evangelist Milo Burnett delivered a practical and impressive Mother's Day sermon at the morning hour. In the evening the UI-Lik-Us Players presented a pageant, "Women of the Bible." They were assisted by other women and a children's chorus. Mrs. Olive McLean directed the production.

Second Church

Second Church reports seven baptisms since the first of April. Brother A. J. Moffet was ordained an elder on Easter Sunday afternoon and baptized his twin boys that evening together with several other candidates. Brother H. W. Felch was ordained to the office of deacon at the same service.

A special Easter program was given in the evening with a sermonet by the pastor, Elder O. Salisbury. The program was arranged by Mrs. Mae Goben.

Second Church is enjoying the church school hour. Special numbers are arranged each week by Mrs. Eva Erler.

The women's department meets each Thursday at the church. A depression supper was given in April by the women and they cleared about twenty-two dollars.

One night a week the priesthood meets and visits the Saints and friends. They are spreading the gospel whenever the opportunity is presented. The Saints have enjoyed special sermons by Carl Ruoff and Brother Lennox, of Omaha, Nebraska.

Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

To Dedicate Church Soon

Under the leadership of Pastor E. L. Kemp, the Saints of this congregation are growing in attendance and interest. A deeper spirituality is evidenced by the growing attendance at prayer and communion services.

Members of the church here, as well as old friends, were happy to welcome Elder Dan Sorden and family, of Los Angeles, California. Brother Sorden made the stop to visit with his mother and father before returning to the West Coast after attending General Conference at Independence. He spoke to the Saints on Wednesday and Friday nights and both morning and evening on Sunday.

The services for the dedication of the church building are outlined, and the dedication is planned to be held June 24, pending the sanction of the church officials in Independence.

Saints of Oklahoma City are happy in the addition of a new member to its priesthood, as well as the recent general church ordinations. Ralph E. Vickrey, who was called to the office of priest, and Elder R. L. Kemp, to the office of high priest, will be ordained during the dedication services, June 24. Brother Vickrey has also been elected as branch solicitor, to fill the vacancy created by the ordination of Brother F. E. Dillon to the office of patriarch.

There is still serious sickness among the Saints here. Russell Rough is still in the hospital, recovering from severe burns, and Sister Ed Dillon is in the Independence Sanitarium where she recently underwent a serious operation. They desire the prayers of the Saints.

Members of this congregation were saddened to hear of the sudden death of Brother H. K. Rowland. For many years he was a resident of El Reno and Piedmont, Oklahoma, moving to Oklahoma City about a year ago. He spent the greater part of his life in the service of the church, and gave unstintingly of his time, efforts, and money to the spreading of the gospel in Oklahoma. At the close of an inspiring sermon, the morning of Sunday, April 8, he collapsed and suffered a stroke of paralysis, from which he never recovered. Funeral services were held at Piedmont, and the sermon was by Pastor E. L. Kemp. The sympathy of the Saints is extended to Sister Rowland and son, Rex, and family in their sorrow.

Rock Island, Illinois

Growth in Young People's Organization Stimulates Interest of This Branch

With steadily growing attendance, Rock Island has enjoyed many interesting services during the past month. They have also entertained several visitors from neighboring branches.

The last Sunday in April was a memorable day for many of the young people. Following the regular Sunday school service, the Zion Order of Noblemen held their quarterly Court of Honor to which six new members were presented. This makes a total of forty-four who have been admitted into the organization since November. The service was doubly impressive because twelve of these young people have completed the work required for the first degree, and were honored for their attainments. Pastor L. W. Stiegel, L. A. White, superintendent of religious education, and Sister Nellie White, general sponsor of student Noblemen, presided at the Court of Honor.

"Working for the Endowment" was the theme under which Elder L. W. Stiegel presented the charge to the young people.

Sister Nellie White presented each graduate to the Court of Honor with due commendation, and a certificate of graduation and a charge were given the new student Noblemen. They are now privileged to wear the SN pin which will be awarded for completion of the first degree. To earn this honor one hundred and seventy questions from the Bible, Book of Mormon, Church History, Doctrine and Covenants, etc., were correctly answered, and a minimum of fifty credits were earned in social activities. The next degree will include more questions and other social requirements.

The men's club enjoyed a fine evening a few days ago. More than thirty men were present, and Brother Albert Sackfield was chosen president for the coming term. Harry Lindley was chosen vice president and Harold O'Brien, secretary-treasurer.

At a special priesthood meeting on Sunday afternoon Wesley Richards gave an interesting resume of his observations at General Conference. He was happy to report excellent services and the spirit of forward-looking enthusiasm. Brother Richards also conducts a Book of Mormon Class each Sunday evening which is given good attendance and interest.

On a recent Thursday afternoon a double post-nuptial shower was held in honor of Sister Florence Lindley Golosky and Sister Marcene Jacobs Kirby. A pleasant time was enjoyed, and the two brides received many pretty and useful gifts.

At the regular Noblemen meeting last week the following officers were elected: Mildred Willets, president; Harold O'Brien, vice president, and Orville Short, secretary-treasurer. A talk on "Appreciation of Mother" was given by Sister Ada Williamson, of Moline, and program numbers carried out the Mother's Day theme. Refreshments were served in banquet style at a long table with candles for lights. About forty-five young people were present.

A few evenings preceding this meeting young people met at the church at six o'clock and did a fine piece of work. They cleaned the lawn and planted grass seed, and greatly improved the appearance of the place. All of this was received as credit on their Noblemen achievement score. The boys and girls are having a paper-gathering contest to earn money for the treasury.

District President E. R. Davis was here a short time ago, and gave a splendid talk on Sunday evening. He expects to be back in the district some time in June.

Plans are being made for a Memorial Day picnic which is to be sponsored by the Rock Island Branch of the Zionie Order of Noblemen. All the young people of the district and all the adults, who feel young, are cordially invited to spend the day with local Saints at Gen's Grove, at Thirty-first Avenue and Fifth Street, Rock Island.

Goodland, Kansas

Their Friends Are Interested, Too

Saints at Goodland are feeling encouraged, and are striving to build up the latter-day work in this little city. Many of their friends are interested, and workers hope to accomplish much good in the near future.

Among recent events was a surprise pound party given in honor of Brother and Sister J. R. Sutton, a large quantity of goods being presented to them on this occasion.

A fine program on Mother's Day was enjoyed by more than one hundred. On the Sunday previous, seventy-five attended Sunday school, Brother Clarence Young, superintendent. Elder J. R. Sutton usually preaches Sunday morning and evening, being greatly aided by local men.

Saints driving through Goodland are invited to worship with this congregation at the Park Shelter House or at the home of Brother J. R. Sutton, 514 West Eleventh Street.

Niagara Falls, Ontario

Rejoice Over Five New Members

Members of the priesthood of this congregation are showing themselves approved. They are studying to carry on the work intrusted to them.

The young people are also active. Recently they organized their group. They realize the responsibility that will soon be theirs.

Sunday, April 22, five candidates were baptized into the church, Branch President Martin Ware officiating. Elder George Towers, of this congregation, and Elder D. Clatworthy, of Fort Erie, pastor of Lowbanks Branch, assisted in the confirmation. A little girl was also blessed.

There is not room enough for self and Jesus in the same heart. He himself said that if we are to come after him, we must deny our self-life.—Thomas H. Lawson, in Christian Standard.

Heroic Goodness

On Captain Scott's last expedition to the Antarctic, he and two companions set out on a final dash to the Pole. One of these companions, an officer in the Dragoons, Captain Oates, finding himself exhausted and with one foot so swollen and constantly frost-bitten that he could not hope to go on, in order to spare his companions any further trouble with him said to them, "Well, I am just going outside, and I may be sometime," and walked out of their tent into the blizzard and was seen no more. That was calm self-sacrifice, with no applauding public, prompted by something to which he bowed as supreme. We cannot withhold our admiration. His act was heroically good. Courage, loyalty, self-control, love are good—good for us and good for all men.—Henry Sloan Coffin in What Men Are Asking; Cokesbury Press.

has created a high level of intelligence. The time has now come and the New Deal in Education requires a still higher level of education with an insistent demand that the people shall have the essential facts necessary to the wise management of their affairs. On this basis our people will be able, through cooperation to solve the problems which they now face.

The New Deal in Education demands an answer to the questions, "What kind of society is it into which the educated person is to fit? What kind of society does America want?" The answer to these questions is fundamental to any reasonable understanding of the place of the educated man or woman in this new program of social planning. The schools must provide the machinery for the interpretation of social facts and statistics of the people. In this New Deal the schools of the country are to assume their share of responsibility for building an ordered society based on such goals as the country sets up for itself.

We are emerging from an era where continuous hard work has been not only an individual virtue, but an effective social means of control. Children were kept hard at work in school, partly, at least to keep them out of mischief. Grown to adulthood, they worked or starved, and in either case gave little cause for trouble. The leisure of the few was considered mere idleness, disparagingly condoned in the case of the wealthy, condemned and berated in the case of the hobo.

It is now increasingly obvious, however great our faith in the curative powers of work, there cannot be enough of it to go around. Either some must be condemned to continuous idleness, or the measure of leisure enjoyed by all must be increased. In decency and common sense the latter course must be chosen.

The New Deal in Education is a challenge to the leaders in our colleges and universities to prepare our youth for this new leisure, so suddenly thrust upon an unprepared generation, so that it will not degenerate into mischievous idleness with great harm to the next civilization.

Will this new deal find us ready to meet the challenge world conditions have placed upon us? The answer to that question determines the future of the race.

The demands to be made upon education by the coming generation are sure to be greater than in the past, and different from anything yet experienced. Whatever we may hope or expect from the new deal or the new day, and whatever may actually come of it, it is evident that, for better or for worse, a new society is in the building. As in all such movements for change, the forces of dis-intergration and chaos have additional opportunities to set at naught all the efforts for advancement. Regardless of any present attitude towards education, the American people will be compelled to turn to their educational leadership to protect themselves against the disintegration, and to prepare, not the oncoming generation only, but the whole body of citizens, for the richer opportunities that, under proper guidance, may be opened to them.

The people must have new power to choose with enlightened discrimination between new values and old, and to preserve and maintain, with intelligence and authority all values, new and old, that will promote the development of a better society.

For this, the people will demand, and adequately reward, trained, intelligent and courageous leadership in the field of education. The leadership cannot be the function of the few. This problem, as it dimly looms ahead, is too vast, multi-form, complex, to be solved through the efforts of a single master mind or of a limited number of geniuses. It will challenge the intelligence and the understanding of us all. Failure will not be tolerated; those unprepared will of necessity fall by the wayside.

Where will you, my listeners of the air, young or old alike, be found in this new deal, in this new day, the rising sun of which is just beginning to show above the horizon? You must answer the question for yourself and upon that answer hangs the future of society.

The Price

By Mary E. Gillin

You'd like to be a Milton—
Have you a pair of eyes
To barter for his vision—
To give for such a prize?

Columbus found a New World,
But paid the price in chains—
A lifetime's ceaseless longing—
With loneliness and pain.

Life has no "gifts" to offer—
What most we prize is ours
When pain, and loss, and sorrow,
Have filled our weary hours.

The hungry man stands pleading
For bread to feed the poor;
And he that's homeless—singing—
Longs for the old home's door.

For they whose eyes are "opened"
Have paid the price with tears—
Have walked by faith in darkness,
And companied with fears.

Perfection waits—inviting—
With increased power and skill;
The price—a "cross" to carry,
To plant on Calvary's Hill!

Zion's Christian Legion

Notice to District Solicitors

The outstanding appeal of the Zion's Christian Legion is the attention and help given to the individual (regardless of age,) to the end that its members may be assisted and developed to a fuller and more rounded Christian life. As solicitors we are especially concerned with the financial law which is our specific duty in this organization.

The financial objective of this organization is "every member a tithe payer." According to the accepted constitution there are other obligations, namely, that to remain a member in good standing, dues must be paid monthly, the accumulation of these moneys to be used toward the paying off of the Auditorium debt, thus freeing our church from such bondage and giving free reign in its work of establishing Zion.

As we are only one of several agencies interested in such a worthy objective, we urge the closest and most congenial cooperation with all financial agents, local, district and general. In such unity of purpose we can only hope to succeed, as such an undertaking is no task for a weakling, but rather, demands the best that is within us and gives us a challenge as citizens of the kingdom of God.

Tithing cards have been issued representing from $1.00 to $25.00, which obligates the holder to pay. These are to be furnished to all members according to their ability and willingness to so obligate themselves. To facilitate this work and to assure regular collections, each district solicitor should keep in close touch with all local solicitors, urging the necessity of weekly visitation to the homes of every member in the various communities. (These visitations not merely for the collecting of tithing, but to also establish friendly relationships, which is far reaching in the good it can accomplish.) We are establishing this system of collection because we feel that the smaller offerings will be a much easier method for all concerned. We too have in mind the advice from the Lord as found in Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2: "... Thou shalt offer a sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in righteousness; even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit. And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day . . . but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, . . ." —A weekly offering!

Personal letters will shortly be forwarded to all district solicitors. Also kindly watch the Herald for further instructions. Start today on your task. Success is before us. We have pledged ourselves.—Gordon Brown, State Director of Solicitation.

He also leaves two sisters, Mrs. Edna Mahan, of Fisher, Minnesota; Mrs. Kate Pruett, of Council Bluffs, Iowa; one brother, Riley McIntosh, of Council Bluffs, and a host of friends, who with family mourn his untimely death, April 12, 1934, at Saint James Hospital, Perham, Minnesota. The funeral was conducted on Sunday, April 15, by Harry E. Ratcliffe of Fargo, North Dakota.

MORTIMORE.—Sarah Julia Baker, daughter of Henry and Matilda Baker, was born near Hamburg, Iowa, January 4, 1860. She passed from earthly life at her home at Hamburg, March 3, 1934. All of her life was spent in the vicinity of Hamburg, with the exception of one year, which as a young wife, she spent in Otoe County, Nebraska. January 11, 1882, she became the wife of Nathan Lorenzo Mortimore. To them were born ten children, the youngest of whom died at birth, nine grew to maturity. Of them eight survive: four sons, Howard, of Palmyra, Nebraska; Floyd N., Morris E., and R. H., of Lamoni, Iowa, and four daughters, Mrs. Nellie Black, of Canon City, Colorado; Mrs. Arch Claiborne, of Tabor, and Mrs. R. E. Hiatt and Mrs. John Whipple, of Sidney. Another daughter, Grace Ellen, the wife of David Jones, preceded her in death six years ago. The early years of her church life were spent as a member of the Baptist Church. On August 29, 1890, she became affiliated with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and was a most devoted member throughout her life. With her, religion was not only her daily need; it was the sustaining influence of her life. From it she drew strength to endure many sorrows and hardships. When the deepest sorrow of her life came upon her, she said, "I have it in hand," and those words characterized her life. To meet her troubles and surmount them, to be faithful to every duty, to live as her maker lived, these were her ambitions, and her attainments. She is deeply mourned by those who remain, her husband who has been her

The Pigeonhole

■ The Pigeon's Own MRA* Code for Happy Marriage

The Pigeon, viewing with alarm all the current talk and excitement about marriage and the home, submits his own code for the promotion of marital felicity:

TRIOS FOR THE MARRIED (And the nearly married)

THREE DON'T'S

1. Don't razz or tease.
2. Don't always try to win the argument.
3. Don't both get angry at once.

THREE DO'S

1. Speak kindly, smile, and give your partner a kiss first thing every morning.
2. Continue to be as polite as you were when you were trying to catch your partner.
3. Every day go out of your way to do or say something good and kind:

THREE RULES FOR QUARRELING

1. Don't quarrel.
2. If you are right, be very careful. You can lose your happiness by being too absolutely right. It is unchivalrous. Better apologize for it and make up.
3. If you are wrong, ask forgiveness before retiring at night. You'll sleep better.

THREE THINGS TO REMEMBER

1. Those who give the most love and service to married companionship enjoy the greatest happiness.
2. The tiniest chip of selfishness will grow into a great wedge, which, driven between you, will wreck your home.
3. There is no success of greater importance than the maintaining of your home, no failure more disastrous than losing it. You must determine from the start to make a success of your marriage.

"And," adds the Pigeon, "no matter what others may say, the foundation of a successful home is real and abiding love."

(Note: MRA means Married Relations Accord.)

"Be Still and Know That I Am God"

All beauty whispers to the listening heart:
Love does not shout, and ecstasy is still;
The friendly silence of infinity
Forever broods above a lifted hill.

A flower leaps to life—the quiet clod
Has uttered music; noiselessly a tree
Flings forth green song; the snow breathes
Soundless prayers;
And stars are vocal with tranquillity!

—Mary Hallet, The Christian Century.

Priesthood Leadership

Priesthood and Members Two principles must be observed in the church: leadership by a qualified priesthood, and a readiness to follow among the members. Neither of these alone can build a great church. Simple docility among the members is not enough; the ability and desire for leadership among the priesthood are not enough. The success of the church and the realization of its ideals depend upon the recognition of the interdependence of these two great powers for success in church work.

Qualifying of Members The ablest generals in history could not make great armies immediately out of hords of untrained peasants, even though the principal duties of soldiers are such simple things as marching, shooting and obeying. In the vastly more complex work of the church, where so much greater intelligence is required, and so many more difficult human problems requiring intelligent solutions are met, we must expect that a long period of training will be necessary and that a high degree of skill and proficiency must be attained. One of the first necessities before the church today is to lift the standards of education among our people in order that there may be available a body of people that the priesthood may not only lead, but they may lead them somewhere.

Qualifying of the Priesthood It is a special work to which President F. M. McDowell is devoting his time to raise the standards of ability among the priesthood and to increase their devotion to the church and its work. Theirs is a greater task and a heavier burden than are imposed upon the members. They are expected to lead, but the church has been unable, so far, to give them adequate equipment with which to lead. Large numbers of men have accepted the call to the priesthood without doing anything to qualify themselves for the tasks and responsibilities which priesthood imposes. They have conceived of priesthood as an institution conferring upon them a set of special privileges. With this attitude they have made no progress. Properly considered, priesthood is an institution that confers responsibilities and the vision to reach up to them. The church can go forward no farther and no faster than the priesthood are willing and able to lead it. Much depends upon their willingness to learn and readiness to study their duties, to spend themselves not only in service, but in preparation for service.

Spiritual Qualifications The highest qualifications of the priestly office are of a spiritual character. There are few who will say that the priesthood have anywhere near approached the high ideals of spiritual power and righteousness. It must be accepted as an unchangeable principle that those who do not follow the ways of righteousness and set a high standard for spirituality for themselves cannot serve God and cannot serve the church. There are many whose lives are blameless and whose energies are dedicated to the church, but there are others who, though called to the tasks of priesthood, have not undertaken their responsibilities nor yielded their lives in service. By these the church is held back. All members admit the necessity of spiritual qualifications. Our problem in this field is one of compliance and performance.

Intellectual Qualifications Concerning the matter of training for the priesthood, there has been much doubt and some controversy. The last rumblings of century-old arguments on this question have not yet died away. There are still some in the church who believe that ignorant righteousness is the best righteousness, and who think that God can make better use of an uneducated man than of an educated one. All this, despite the fact that from the very first the church was dedicated to a program of enlightenment and education, and the fact that some of the strongest commandments of latter day inspiration are those which set before us the ideals of education and enlightenment.

The missionaries of the church who went out to convert the world a century ago, were men of fifth grade educations who spoke to a people of fifth grade educations. They were on a level of cultural equality with the world about them. Today the gospel has not changed, but conditions have changed. It would be tragic today to send out men as missionaries equipped with only fifth grade educations to speak to a world in which high school and college educations are the rule. No more severe handicap could be imposed.

Looking to the Future The fate of the church for the future rests in the hands of the ministry. Our pastors, our missionaries, our district officers, the whole range of our ministry from the humblest teacher to the highest quorum of the church need to be educated as well as spiritually minded men. The church must carry on with the best officers it can call to its service. Many of those who are now

Thoughts for Today

THERE ARE many demands, since the advent of the depression, for a new type of education throughout the full range of our school system. Some call for an education that will get the young people jobs. Some call for an education that will make them better citizens. Others want provision for instruction in home-making. Still others demand that education return to its simple original purpose of providing a superior culture. In a large sense all these demands are legitimate, and those who make them should be answered with at least respectful attention. The strongest of all these is, perhaps, that which comes from the rank and file of American citizens. They see children graduated from schools and unable to get jobs, and they want something done about it. Since they pay the bills it is only reasonable to believe that their demands should be respected. The schools are expected to guarantee for their students success in jobs, success in politics, success in love, success in almost everything, but always success.

THIS DEMAND for success arises out of a misconception of the purpose and the possibilities of education. True education can guarantee nothing but personal development for students who have a capacity for it. Today, everything depends upon the individual and his capacity and energy just as it did in the days before there was any such thing as formal school education.

THERE WAS A TIME not very long ago when the great educational theory was, that there was some single course of study that all students could be made to follow that would guarantee them the maximum of cultural and individual development. But as we have entered upon the modern age, it has become more and more apparent that a diversity of instruction is required to make growth possible for an almost infinite variety of minds. We now recognize that no single basic course—outside of those elementary studies dealing with the mechanics of language, which are keys of all learning—that can meet all needs. There can be no such thing as the regimentation of minds. Minds may be crushed into a single mold, but they will not develop there.

VISUAL EDUCATION is recognized as one of the most effective means of imparting knowledge and instruction to young people. Owing to its expense, it has been used in only a limited degree in our present school system. President Elbert A. Smith has already pointed out that every community has a school which is teaching the ideals of Hollywood to our young people. These schools are the movie theaters. They are open every day, and they have large classes. It is needless to say that young people attend the schools of Hollywood with vastly more interest and appreciation than they do either church or day schools. It is a sad commentary on our civilization that the agencies which are teaching the very worst of ideas and ideals should have the best and the most modern means of education.

One father has his own solution to the problem. It is fortunate for his family that both he and the mother have an unusual educational equipment and great resources for planning the lives of their family. Their children love books. They also love to play. Their leisure time is always well occupied between indoor activities and outdoor sports. They rarely go to the movies, and then only to carefully selected ones. Their lives are consequently clean and wholesome. They are admirable children prepared for a decent and wholesome citizenship which is now before them.

BEFORE THE MOVIES had become so strong an educational influence, before they were teaching their message of low ideals and debased home life, we thought in this country that co-education in schools was a safe and sensible thing. Recent trends in affairs show that the movies have not only corrupted the adult minds of the nations, but they have also corrupted the minds of many of our school children, until it looks today as if moral conditions in the schools would make it necessary for us to abandon the efforts to hold to the co-educational system for students under the college age. Some of these conditions are scandalous. The combination of licentious movies and the freedom of our school grounds is something that is being maintained only at a terrible cost to our young children. Either the movies, as an educational factor, must be closed, or co-education in our secondary schools will have to be admitted a failure, for we are rapidly approaching a condition where the schools provide a setting in which morals are disregarded and character is broken down.

The Mysterious Present

Man is imprisoned in the external present; and what we call a man's religion is, to a great extent, the thing that offers him a secret and permanent means of escape from that prison, a breaking of the prison walls which leaves him standing, of course, still in the present, but in a present so enlarged and enfranchised that it becomes not a prison, but a free world.—Gilbert Murray.

Leaves for European Mission

APOSTLE JOHN W. RUSHTON

Apostle John W. Rushton leaves this country to take charge of the European Mission, departing next June 9 from New York on the "Leviathan." Sister Rushton is accompanying him on the journey, and will be with him in his work for the first time in a number of years. Brother Rushton has been very busy with farewell speaking engagements in recent weeks. His latest sermon, delivered to a packed congregation at the Stone Church, Independence, brought many favorable comments.

Glorifying the Commonplace

In his etchings James Whistler drew lime burners at their kilns, rag gatherers on city streets, fish-mongers in their markets and dingy old barges on the river Thames. He seemed to specialize on these deplorable surroundings and found the intrinsic Holy Ground in all of them. Nothing escaped his subtle eye. A smoking old factory chimney by the magic of his artistry became an arresting picture and a mere blank wall breathed a spaciousness the minute its likeness was transferred to his canvas. He could glorify the commonplace in a most unusual manner because there was a charm and loveliness in his soul.—John Luke Gehman, in The Ceaseless Circle; Fleming H. Revell Company.

He who is plenteously provided from within, needs but little from without.—Goethe.

District Changes

By administrative action, with approval of Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric in council, the following changes have been effected in district organization:

The Eastern Oklahoma District has been discontinued, and the Haileyville, Wilburton and Fanshawe Branches have been attached to the Central Oklahoma District. Shawnee Branch at Dalby Springs, Texas, has been transferred to Central Texas District, and Winthrop Branch in Arkansas has been transferred to the Arkansas District.

The Goodland Branch located at Kanorado, Kansas, in the Northwest Kansas District has been transferred to the Eastern Colorado District.

Changes have been made in the Clinton (Missouri) District, which will hereafter be known as the Rich Hill District, whereby a number of counties in the eastern portion of the district have been eliminated, leaving only Bates and Vernon counties, and the western half of Cedar and Saint Clair counties in Missouri, and Bourbon and Lynn counties in Kansas, comprising the district.

Hammond, Indiana, has been transferred from the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District to the Northeast Illinois District.

1934 Reunion Schedule

A tentative list of the reunions for 1934 is given in the back of this issue of the Herald. All reunion officials are requested to examine this list carefully and to check up on their dates. If any errors are noticed, or if any corrections need to be made, they are further requested to send proper information to the First Presidency so the corrections may be made. We urge promptness in this matter in order that the list may convey accurate information to those who are interested.

carrying great burdens have done heroic work under severe handicaps. Their loyalty and service will be needed to the end of their lives. New men coming into the church work will face new conditions and meet different and more difficult problems. They will need the best equipment that we can possibly give them to enable them to withstand the assaults of the world and to maintain the standing and credit of the church.

Standards of Recreation

All young people are faced with the necessity of choosing their recreation from a great variety that the world offers. Some of it is good, and some of it is bad; some is harmful, and some is beneficial. The following points suggest a set of standards for choosing recreation.

1. Recreation should be enjoyable. If there is no interest and delight in it, one should just as well not do it, but put his time in working. Even if the crowd is doing something and it is not fun, one shouldn't be bothered with it.

2. Recreation should be beneficial to both mind and body, and should leave no harmful effects. Games or recreations that keep one cooped up till late hours bent over tables are harmful, no matter what the name of the game may be, whether it is bridge, chess, dominos, or cross word puzzles. Clean, healthy outdoor recreation is best for those whose work keeps them in an office. Moderate sedentary recreations will naturally be chosen by those who must do manual labor.

3. Recreation should be morally innocent. It should not lead one into temptation nor expose him to the efforts of designing people to profit by his downfall.

4. It should be socially harmless. Drinking and smoking are not only bad for what they do to the person who does them, but also for the bad example that they set to others and for the fact that they make one's company in society in a degree offensive to others and sometimes even harmful.

5. Recreation should help and not hinder the realization of one's best ideals and objectives in life.

6. It should be diversified to include recreations for the mind as well as activities for the body. The intellect needs to play also.

7. Recreation should not occupy too great a proportion of your leisure time; there are other uses for leisure time besides simply having fun.

Her Turn to Eat

In a Pennsylvania school a little girl fainted. When the child regained consciousness the teacher asked if she were ill. "No," was the reply, "I am hungry." "Why, child," said the teacher, "go right home and get something to eat." "No," replied the child, "today is not my turn to eat, it is my sister's."—Frank B. Fagerburg, in The Sin of Being Ordinary.

Ideals for Young People

1. Personal development.
2. Church service.
3. Creative leisure.
4. Alert citizenship.

The Spirit of Youth

The spirit of youth is well illustrated by the words of a young hero who visited our country a few years ago. His name was George Leigh Mallory. Somebody said to him, "Mallory, why do you want to scale Mount Everest?" He replied, "Because it is there!" Somewhere on the frozen slopes of Everest are the bodies of Mallory and his brave companion, Irvine, a young Oxford graduate. Youth hears the mountains taunting, "Climb me!" and he is restless until he is answering that challenge. We have today even as decent a world as we do because of a few splendid spirits who kept hearing the taunt of the mountains of difficulty and never rested until they scaled their inhospitable heights.—Frank B. Faberburg, in The Sin of Being Ordinary.

What Makes a Happy Marriage?

As a neglected garden is soon invaded by weeds, so a love carelessly guarded is quickly submerged by unkind feelings. Everything threatens it: ennui, monotony, illness, the spitefulness of third parties. Against these I know of only two remedies. The first is that which makes the very essence of marriage—the vow: "I will not give up; I will defend our union and happiness; I will tie up again every broken thread; I will reconstruct, untiringly, faithfully, each part of the fallen wall." The second is a sincerity without reserve. Mystery may be compatible with transient loves. Marriage must live in confidence and certitude. Treachery has no power against two beings who confide all. Thus only is it possible to form an admirable affection, incomprehensible to those who do not know by experience this strange mixture of love and friendship, of sensuality and respect, of indulgence and admiration, an amazing blending of the human and divine, which constitutes the true marriage.—Andre Maurois, in Scribners. (Quoted from the Readers' Digest for May, 1934.)

June—the Month of Weddings

The month of June is significant for two fine things, weddings and flowers. It is appropriate that they should go together for their beauty brings to people so much happiness. Of late years young people have allowed themselves to indulge in secret marriages and elopements, which provide a temporary thrill, but do not make lastingly beautiful memories.

It is not so long ago that a young couple were married secretly. They had a plain little wedding by a justice of the peace, with no ceremony to remember, no particular surroundings of beauty. The time came when they had to announce their marriage to their families and friends. By that time they were very sorry that they did not have a beautiful wedding experience to remember.

The secret marriage is not a happy or wholesome experience. Sudden marriages are likely to be fraught with grave difficulties and dissatisfactions.

A marriage ought to provide some of the happiest memories and experiences in life. It can be made happy only by taking family and friends into confidence, for they furnish much of the atmosphere which makes marriage a happy and memorable occasion.

A new home established by young people is of great interest to the community and the community should be invited to celebrate with those who are married, their happy event. The church affords a fine background for the decorations of flowers, for the processional, and for the ceremony of marriage. The sacred influence of the church, too, is felt to add its sanction to the marriage.

For those who have but few friends in a city, a home wedding may be best, but young people should never resort to a justice of the peace wedding. A wedding is something to remember all your life. So long as your marriage endures—and it should endure through life—you will remember it. Therefore, you should make it as memorable and beautiful an occasion as possible.

The world is in a hole. Inflationists, debt repudiationists, nostrum venders, program builders and civilization planners are deafening the world with advice more or less appropriate. Practically all our advisers tell us how to get out of the hole we are in but they do not show us how to keep out of the next hole which may be ahead of us.—Lyman P. Powell in The Better Part.

Opportunities for Missionary Work in Local Branches

By Ray Whiting

I OPPORTUNITIES

There perhaps has never been a time attended by more favorable circumstances, at least since the Reorganization, in which to do local missionary work than at the present time. Four or five factors converge to make opportune such endeavor.

First of all, the Depression has jarred many people out of their creed-bound ruts with sufficient shock to make them think seriously about God and His purposes among men.

Second, due to the hardships through which we are and have been passing, many are becoming conscious of the need of an intervening power hitherto unappreciated. With the collapse of our pagan social and economic system the necessity for an order of stability and righteousness is becoming increasingly apparent.

With the helplessness of the churches in the present crisis and their utter lack of any plan or method of establishing a real Christian order upon the earth multitudes of thinking people are awakening to the fact of the futility of much of the religion being promoted by most of the churches. This awakening is causing a falling away from the churches and a searching for something which will meet the needs.

And then, because of this dissatisfaction and unrest, and the evident need for a genuine Christian order our particular message has an appeal which heretofore has not been appreciated.

And lastly, there is a Spiritual unction in our midst and accompanying our preaching that is not commonly felt in other churches. Perhaps this has always been true to some extent, but due to the peculiar conditions of the times and the set of men's minds, the Spirit is making an increasing appeal.

II METHODS

The Church School

1. Fortunate indeed, is the branch that is conscious of the missionary power of the church school. I fear that throughout the church we have been slow in taking full advantage of this opportunity to reach old and young with the message of this church; for the church not only has contact with people from early childhood to old age, but in practically every school there are children and young people coming from homes where the rest of the family know little or nothing about our work, yet feel kindly enough toward the church to permit their children to attend. If these leads are followed up contacts can be made which ultimately will result in baptisms.

The Sunday Service

2. At least one of the regular Sunday services should be dedicated to missionary endeavor. With a missionary-minded membership, a little advertising and plenty of visiting these meetings can be made a source of continual ingathering.
