THERE IS MORE than enough room for us all in the great and beautiful plan of the Master, and he can use all the creativity of which we are capable. There is no dearth of honors or of satisfaction in his work well done; his blessings are endless to those who work for him. So why should we strive to discredit each other or withdraw our co-operation and our support from others who perhaps need it sorely. Aren't we then, indeed, delaying our own progress? A pack train carrying supplies into the mountains for the sustenance of lost individuals can travel only as fast as its slowest pack animal will plod along. The church, too, can go along the road to Zion and carry the light of the gospel to others only as effectively as our slowest members will allow us to, for we must help them along the way. Yet none of us really want to be a hindering member. Only the perversity and the wrong attitude, which are the delight of Satan, make us so.

Surely it is a simple thing to say to each other, "What is your idea? Share it with us. Let us hear it and consider it. We will not be resistant and contentious over it. We will be kind, thoughtful, and prayerful about it. We will not condemn it simply because it is new or a different approach, or because it is something we did not think of ourselves. If we reject it, it is not on the basis of prejudice, but on the basis of wisdom and discretion. We all love each other. We share each other's hope for the future. We are working toward the same thing. Let us labor in harmony, in understanding, and with the best methods that we are able to develop through the pooling of our knowledge and experience, that we may, everyone together, realize the fulfillment of our dreams."

Why Be a Porcupine?

I ONCE became excited about a pile of rubbish, and spoke, in a loud and angry voice, to the man responsible for the mess. He met this assault with a smile, promised to remove the trash, and said something rather unintelligible and incoherent to the effect that his religion was love. This novel reception so upset me that I felt a little ridiculous, and bought him a soda. We drank from bottles, seated side by side on a log.

Whether or not the rubbish was ever removed I cannot remember—nor does it matter. The real point is that this man succeeded in winning an argument by avoiding the issues and just being friendly. It was so unfair that I am still mad about it.

The meek have not yet received title to the earth, but they are occasionally handed a bottle of pop. Nobody donates anything to a truculent person.

I never heard of a pet porcupine. He would be an inconvenient pet. He resents every approach, and would not like to be patted. He stands on his own feet and tells the world to go hang. As a result he receives nothing that he does not dig out of a hostile environment, and he is obliged to defend his gains with surly hostility.

It would be easier to throw a cat out a window than to throw a porcupine, but cats seldom take such involuntary flights. They are more likely to be stroked and given a saucer of milk.

It all boils down to this: it is often easier to win your way through kindness than it is through force. We all set up our defenses in the direction from which attack is expected. Kindness flanks this bristling armament and makes it useless and ridiculous.—Paul E. Wylie.

terworth sat between Brother Siegfried and me and interpreted for our benefit.

I regret that I cannot remember all that Horahitu said. The emotion one experiences under such circumstances perhaps takes the edge off of one's memory. But a few things I recall:

Horahitu, after salutations to us, the chairman, his associates in the ministry, and the audience, related that for the first time in the history of the mission they had in 1948 sent a woman delegate, Sister Mervin, to the General Conference, and she had accomplished what no other delegate had ever done—that was to get a promise from the president of the church to visit Tahiti. Pursuant thereto, here he was in person in their midst, and with him came one who represented the temporal arm of the church, Brother Siegfried. He was referred to as Mareto, Tahitian for Mark, and I soon learned that "bishop" in Tahitian is epitetopo—interesting to note that the word "bishop" comes from episcopos, meaning overseer, and here the word begins with epi, Latin for "over."

Hirahitu drew a vivid picture of the peresideni and perēpheta and his traveling companion coming through the air and the clouds and dropping down out of the sky to visit them, and "here they are before you" in "our midst," and how happy all of them were! We were greeted with sincere joy.

He related how, as our plane circled the harbor and came down to rest on the water, the wind was blowing violently and the clouds hovered over the city; but the instant I set foot on the shore, the wind subsided and the sun began to shine again. We did recall that the air was quite "bumpy" and the wind was turbulent, but under the excitement of coming ashore we had not noted the change.

These natives, who live close to nature and have read the portents of the sky and water and storm all their lives, noted what entirely had escaped our attention at the time, and it is an evidence of their faith in God that they do note and attach spiritual significance to the manifestations of nature.

My diary shows that after speeches of welcome and brief response by Brother Siegfried and myself refreshments were served in the tabernacle (in the church yard).

Dinner that evening was served by Sister Butterworth; those present were Elder Horahitu and wife, Elder Paia and wife, Elder Breckenridge, Abraham Fauura (a great grandson of John Hawkins), Brother Siegfried, and myself.

Sister Breckenridge at this time was convalescing after the birth of a baby girl. The advent of this baby completed the Breckenridge household, a boy, David, and now the little sister. And the score was balanced at the Butterworth home, where little Garrett has a baby sister who was taking her first steps the day we arrived at Papeete.

While we were in Tahiti, except for the week spent at Taravoa, we were housed at the home of Alexi and Deda Variaarua, where we again "had the run of the house," they with their little girl and boy staying with Deda's parents, the Mervins. Here we could relax perfectly, and we thoroughly enjoyed the privilege. Most of our meals away from "home" were taken at Butterworth's and Breckenridge's, and we shall ever remember the kindness of Lilly Ray and Jean.

In the evening we again assembled in the tabernacle. This was the time of welcomes and gifts. We were at the long pulpit, and group after group from the respective islands came forward, someone, generally their pastor, addressing us, singing songs, and then, passing us to shake hands, leaving presents. The gifts were unwrapped and exhibited to the congregation. Of these I shall write more later.

The Tahitian salutation is Aorna. As it is pronounced, it sounds much like "Your honor," the customary way for a lawyer to address "the court." In Hawaii it was Aloha, both for greeting and good-by.

Aorna means, "May you have life," and when one addresses a congregation or a group or an individual, it is always Aorna. When these spokesmen came forward it was, "Aorna to peropheta," "Aorna to epitetopo" (Siegfried), "Aorna" to other ministers associated with us, and "Aorna" to the congregation. Then comes the speech.

Could this greeting be improved? I think not.

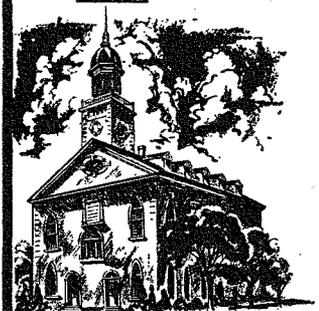

A brother Maru and wife approached and, after the usual greeting and a speech of welcome, they handed a gift to us, this time a jewel case made of pearl shell. "This," he said, "we went down to the bottom of the ocean, and brought up with our own hands to give to you." This certainly added much to the sentimental value of the gift.

Brother Siegfried and I left Tarona church that Friday night with many presents.

ENGAGEMENTS

Pickens-Westwood

Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Westwood of Wichita, Kansas, announce the engagement of their daughter, Gay, to Sergeant Bill J. Pickens, son of Mrs. William E. Pickens of Durant, Oklahoma. Miss Westwood is a graduate of Graceland College; Sergeant Pickens is serving in the United States Air Force. The wedding will take place in October.

WEDDINGS

Pickett-Anway

Carol Lee Anway, daughter of Mrs. George E. Anway of Independence, Missouri, and Ellis B. Pickett, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elbert E. Pickett of Independence, Missouri, were married at the Stone Church on October 8 by Elder Howard C. Timm. They are making their home in Little Rock, Arkansas.

Yerrington-Ragsdale

Ann Guyton Ragsdale, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Allan Kenneth Ragsdale of San Antonio, Texas, and Foster Charles Yerrington, son of Elder and Mrs. E. F. Yerrington of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, were married September 9 in a garden ceremony at the home of the bride's parents. The groom's father performed the double-ring ceremony.

BIRTHS

A son, Michael Claude, was born on July 18 to Mr. and Mrs. Claude Dayton, Jr., of Brentwood, Missouri. He was blessed on September 24 by his great-grandfather, Elder Charles J. Remington.

A daughter, Janice Yvonne, was born on July 19 to Mr. and Mrs. William Mason of St. Louis, Missouri. She was blessed by her great-grandfather, Elder Charles J. Remington. Mrs. Mason is the former Thelma Remington of Brentwood, Missouri.

Mr. and Mrs. Thurston R. Schoff of Independence, Missouri, announce the birth of a son, Kenneth Mark, born September 15 at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Schoff is the former Olive Peterson.

DEATHS

SEAVER.—Judith Lee, daughter of Donald and Dolly Lewis Seaver, was born June 3, August 10, 1950. She is survived by her parents; her maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Lewis of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and her paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph L. Seaver of Independence, Missouri. Services were conducted by Elder John T. Conway at the Wilder Funeral Home in Philadelphia. Interment was in Northwood Cemetery.

ODLE.—Etha May, daughter of David and Amanda Adkins, was born May 21, 1883, at Clinton, Missouri, and died September 1, 1950, at her home east of Coodys Bluff, Oklahoma. She moved with her parents to Indian Territory about forty-five years ago, settling in the Ruby community. On December 16, 1904, she was married to Ralph Odle; three daughters were born to them. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since February 5, 1911.

Surviving are her husband; three daughters: Mrs. W. A. Long of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Mrs. Frank Vandergriff of Alton, Illinois; and Mrs. Thelma Dawson of the home; a brother, W. C. Adkins of Yale, Oklahoma; six grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Services were held at a funeral home in Nowata, Oklahoma, Elder Lee Quick and E. R. Caldren officiating. Burial was in the Nowata Memorial Park.

HOSKINS.—Edsel Milton, son of Richard B. and Pearl E. Hoskins, was born June 15, 1926, at Independence, Missouri, and died September 19, 1950, at the Independence Sanitarium following an automobile accident. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on September 14, 1934, and always attended Stone Church. He was also a member of Boy Scout Troop 223 Stone Church, for several years. Following graduation from William Chrisman High School in Independence, he enrolled at the University of Missouri, but after a few months was called into military service. For twenty-two months he served in the United States Army, becoming a technical sergeant. Surviving are his parents; two sisters: Mrs. Selma Gibson of Kansas City, Missouri, and Mrs. Ida Marshall of Independence; a brother, Richard Hoskins of Independence; and his paternal grandmother, Mrs. Nannie I. Muers of Independence. Funeral services were conducted at the George C. Carson Chapel, Elders Carl Mesle and Glaude A. Smith officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

LOVELAND.—Leubin H., was born (date not given) near Elkhorn, Wisconsin, and died at his home near Lee's Summit, Missouri, on September 20, 1950, following a long illness. At the age of four he moved with his parents to a farm near Oelwein, Iowa; here he joined the Reorganized Church and was ordained to the office of priest. In 1912 he married Laura Myrton, and a year later they moved to a farm east of Lee's Summit where he spent the remainder of his life. His parents and a brother, John, preceded him in death.

He is survived by his wife; a son, Merton, of Grain Valley, Missouri; five sisters: Cera Spear of Kalispell, Montana; Emma Renz of Waterloo, Iowa; Hannah Jellings of Kansas City, Missouri; Geneva Allin of Independence, Missouri; and Carlotta Davis of Vallejo, California; and three grandsons. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Lee's Summit, A. G. Hougas and Otho Clark officiating. Burial was in the Lee's Summit cemetery.

LEE.—Lela Jean, daughter of John and Grace Kendrick, was born February 22, 1925, at Essex, Ontario, and died September 1, 1950, at Holden, Missouri. On October 23, 1946, she was married to Charles Warren Lee at Essex and moved to Holden the following year. After her husband's death in 1947 she completed her high school education at Holden and then went on to Graceland College. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since she was eight years old.

She is survived by her parents; a sister, Marion; and three brothers: Marvin, Floyd, and Gordon, all of Holden. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Holden, Elder E. P. Darnell officiating. Interment was in Fairview Cemetery, Holden.

MANN.—Laura, daughter of Hibbert Daniel and Cleda Matilda Simpson, was born February 2, 1881, in Delhaven, Nova Scotia, and died September 27 at the Independence Sanitarium after suffering a heart attack. At the age of five she moved with her family to Washburn, Maine, where she lived until she was seventeen. She then moved to Boston where she was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church. Three years later she married William Ruggles and went to Florida to live. Mr. Ruggles and their adopted son, Hibbert, died, and in 1925 she married Lee J. Mann, a lawyer. They lived in Louisville, Albany, Cincinnati, and Pensacola. Following Mr. Mann's death in 1942, she made her home in Independence, Missouri, with a relative, Mrs. Lillian Farr. For the past two years she had been a semi-invalid.

Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith, Ephraim Brown, and George Anderson officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BEARD.—Edith, daughter of Peter and Nancy Fitzpatrick McCoy, was born in Appanoose County, Iowa, on August 11, 1876, and died at her home in Independence, Missouri, on September 28, 1950. On November 11, 1896, she was married to William Lee Beard; four children were born to them. In 1902 she moved with her husband and children to Stillwater, Oklahoma, where she was baptized into the Reorganized Church the following year. In 1918 they moved to Cameron, Missouri, and in 1934 to Independence. Here she was an active worker at the Campus Shop and later at the Social Service Center. She enjoyed writing poetry and often sent her friends original greetings. Mr. Beard and a daughter, Alberta McEldery, died in 1938.

Surviving are two daughters: Anna Barger of Brunswick, Maryland, and Pansy Stone of Burbank, California; a son, Claude Beard of Chicago, Illinois; seven grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at Stone Church, Elders Donald Lents, Glaude Smith, and H. Russell Roland officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

Correction

The obituary of John Robert Hackee which appeared on page 23 of the October 2 Herald should be John Robert Hacker, and there are seventeen grandchildren surviving rather than fourteen as previously stated.

P.S.

 IT TAKES THE CAKE

Here is an object lesson in something-or-other. Whenever Cousin Lutie plans to go on a diet, she makes a big super-special chocolate cake. Chocolate is her favorite flavor. She eats just one slice of it, and the next day it is forbidden. The rest of the cake remains for her husband, Bill, to eat. Bill always does his duty.

But Bill's favorite cake is vanilla, with white frosting.

 COTTAGE MEETINGS

The fine thing about cottage prayer meetings is the fact that you get to visit the people in their homes, and you often learn many good things about them you would never know in church. It is at home that their hobbies, interests, intelligence, and character are revealed.

A very fine couple attends one of our churches. I had always liked them, just on the basis of their friendly attitude, conversation, and manner. Last week I attended prayer meeting at their home. It is well-furnished, in excellent taste. There is a lightness and cheerfulness about it that makes one happy on entering. On one stand there was a vase of roses. They were not of the hot-house variety. Fresh spray, indicating wise care, showed on the leaves. The buds were perfectly formed, and beautiful. The man grew them in his own garden, even late in September. This home represented the best standards of our people.

 A WORD DOES IT

The "Lamoni Chronicle" doesn't have an "Obituary" column. For loved ones who have died, it says, "Journey's End." It seems rather fine.

* "A hat goes off, and a cigaret goes out when God walks in."—Buck Harris.

 REFORM

I see that Victor Hugo once said, "To reform a man you must begin with his grandmother." Victor Hugo tried to reform the French nation, and he tried to reform the world, with limited success. But did he ever try to reform a grandmother?

* If you must talk to yourself, say something pleasant.

 SAFETY

It was a beautiful new Ford, a pretty chartruse (and please don't call it "shart-roose") with black aprons. It was the kind of a thing that makes you green with envy when you have been on foot two years following your divorce from the 1935 model Cost-Plus six. There was only one trouble with it: the front end was caved in, and there was a hole in the windshield the size of a human head—bulged outward. The hole was on the passenger side.

As expensive as cars are, this is a terrible waste. As nice as some people are, it is a shame to batter them up that way.

Some drivers forget: that they have an obligation to save the lives of their passengers; that there are speed laws for the protection of life and property; that the brakes are no better than the ability of the tire to cling to the road; that speed kills, maims, and destroys.

"Unto the ends of the world."

—D. and C. 1:4

"Unto the ends of the world"

"... that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world; that faith also might increase in the earth; that mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers."

The above quotation is taken from section one of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the section often called "The Lord's Preface." In it the Lord tells why he has chosen to speak again in the latter days through his servants.

On the cover of this week's Herald is a photograph of students using the facilities of KGRA, Graceland's student-operated radio station established in 1949. This is one of hundreds of opportunities for experience and growth extended to the young people of the church who attend the church college. Already, former Graceland students who obtained experience in broadcasting on KGRA have won places for themselves elsewhere in the field of radio broadcasting. With the magic of radio, their voices may be heard "unto the ends of the world."

Introducing...

LEROY EDWARD HARRIS, San Jose, California (page 14), was born, baptized, and educated in San Jose. In 1900 he married Olive Amy Bates. To them were born two daughters, Mrs. Ruth Olive Bradley and Mrs. Leah Minnie Thompson. He was graduated from high school in 1917; then took four years in St. Joseph's College. Later studied at the College of Divine Metaphysics in Indianapolis, Indiana, where he received two degrees.

He worked in the mechanical department of the San Jose Daily Mercury from 1894 to 1898. He also did newspaper work in Portland for two years and was shop foreman of the Redwood City Times Gazette for four years and the San Mateo Times for fourteen years. In 1924 he and his wife established the Menlo Park Recorder and did job printing until her health failed in 1942. Sister Harris died about a year ago.

He saw overseas service in the Philippines in 1898. He finished his high school course in night sessions and also took an International Correspondence School Course. He was ordained a priest in 1914 and an elder in 1939. He served as assistant pastor of the San Jose Branch, and seven years as its pastor; also four years as pastor of the Salina, California, Branch.

RUSSELL F. RALSTON, Salt Lake City (page 5), was born in McClave, Colorado, May 20, 1913, and was baptized at the age of eight in Wiley, Colorado. He was graduated from Richmond Union High School, Richmond, California, in 1930 and from Graceland in 1934. He also took part-time work at the San Francisco State Teachers College in 1946 and '47, and summer school work from the University of California and Western State Teachers College in Colorado. In 1936 he married Florence M. Gamet. They have two children: Alan F., 6, and Lynne Rae, 4. Brother Ralston taught public school music from 1934 to 1942 when he joined the Armed Forces and served four years. Following this he went under church appointment.

He was ordained a priest in 1933, an elder in 1937, a Seventy in 1948, and a member of the Council of Presidents of Seventies in 1950. He has served as counselor to the district president four years, youth leader three years, church school director two years, and has been associate minister in charge of Utah and Western Colorado for a year and a half. His hobbies are athletics and drama.

News & Notes

ATTEND DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Apostle D. T. Williams and Bishop Walter N. Johnson attended the Southern Nebraska District Conference held in Lincoln, Nebraska, on October 14 and 15. Brother Williams presided over the business meeting on Saturday afternoon and the prayer meeting on Sunday afternoon. He also taught the general class on Sunday morning and preached Sunday evening. Brother Johnson preached both Saturday evening and Sunday morning. He also taught an afternoon class on Sunday. They report that the district conference was well attended.

ANOTHER BRANCH

On October 10 at Ottawa, Illinois, a new branch was organized by Apostles D. O. Chesworth and Paul M. Hanson. Others taking active parts were Evangelist Henry Castings, High Priest Herbert Scott, both of Des Moines, Iowa; District President Lloyd Cleveland, Counselor Richard Wildermuth, branch supervisor of young people, and Arnold Settles, pastor of the Aurora Branch.

REPORT FROM BISHOPS

The office of Presiding Bishopric reports that the general financial income for the first eight months of 1950 is 8.25 per cent above that of corresponding period of last year. The number of tithing statements filed for first nine months shows an increase of 12.46 per cent over same period in 1949.

GIRLS' WORK

Over fifty women attended the afternoon and evening classes held at the Women's Center for the purpose of receiving training in the Skylark Program. Over twenty-five of the women completed all the written requirements of the course. Helen Elledge taught both classes.

Similar classes are being offered for women who desire to receive training in the Oriole program.

ANOTHER'S REPORT

The October 9 issue of "The Cleveland Press" carried a column by Press Reporter Frank Stewart, telling about the High Priests' Conference held at Kirtland, Ohio, on the second week end of October. Mr. Stewart gave a frank and honest discussion of the gathering as he witnessed it, and told how he was impressed by the high personal standards of those attending the conference.

MUSIC

The final tryout for participation in Handel's "Messiah" was held in The Auditorium on the afternoon of October 15. About 275 people will take part in this musical presentation at Christmas time. A number of those taking part are new members this year.

THE MOVE HAS BEEN MADE

Bartholomew Hall has become the Center Stake office building. The building has been renovated and decorated for its new use. The offices of the stake officers have been moved from The Auditorium to the new location.

Thanksgiving and Praise

"In the days of David and Asaph of old there were chief of the singers, and songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God."—Nehemiah 12: 46.

You may not think this is much of a time for thanksgiving. War and trouble are in the world, and fear and uncertainty at home. There are heavy taxes, and an incomprehensibly great national debt. There are and the list could go on almost endlessly.

And yet and yet

* * * * *

I met an acquaintance who was grumbling and growling.

"We ought to be thankful," I said to him shortly.

And then in an expansive gesture, he spread his hands apart and asked, "What have I to be thankful for?"

I looked at him. He had on a good suit that was clean and well pressed. (I saw a picture recently of a young child, naked on a road in Korea, hungry and cold and crying—its parents dead in the ditch.)

This ungrateful man would ride home in his own car that evening. (In the great rice fields of the world there are many thousands of poor coolies who spend the day in mud to their knees and walk home to grass huts at night, carrying heavy burdens.)

That man would go to a substantial and comfortable home that evening. (American soldiers were sleeping in rain-sodden foxholes under stormy skies and artillery fire that night in a foreign land, just to protect his right to do business.)

There would be a good meal waiting for him at home. (In a letter from an American in India, I read of a Hindu mother who had fallen dead of famine in a filthy gutter, one of thousands, and her small baby was trying to draw nourishment from her poor, empty breast.)

A good wife would meet the man at home and be his companion for the evening. (I remember that in the concentration camps of the world there are more than twenty million people being worked and starved to death, and many of them will be beaten till their bodies are stained with their own blood.)

I looked once more at this man with his sour, repulsive, self-pitying face, and I could say nothing. He made me sick. In my heart I said, "Oh, God, how long will you permit this kind of a creature to disgrace your earth?"

* * * * *

One should think every day of what he has to be thankful for. For his work, and for the good people he works with every day. For his home, and the comfort, love, and companionship he has there. For his good wife, and for her loyalty and kindness. For his friends and neighbors, and for his fellow citizens who make America strong and great. Above all, one should be grateful for daily blessings from God—for health and strength, for sight and hearing, for good feet on which to walk and for shoes to put upon them, and for the opportunities of every day.

It reminds one of a Chinese saying: "I complained because I had no shoes until I met a man who had no feet." We ought to think of things like that.

* * * * *

When any person loses his sense of gratitude, he has nothing of any importance left in his life. He had just as well be dead, for all the good he will be to the world.

Man and the higher animals are capable of gratitude. In Aesop's Fables, there is the story of Androclus and the lion. In the desert, Androclus removed a thorn from the paw of a lion. Years later in the arena, when the man was to be sacrificed, the same lion saved his life. Then there is the story of the snake that was frozen, and was brought into a cabin and warmed by the fire. When it revived, it bit the hand of the man who had saved it. These are symbolic of the idea of gratitude.

* * * * *

Some of the greatest blessings of life have become commonplace to us because we take them for granted, and have never known what it is to lack them.

Consider the plight of the cripple, who must walk on crutches. Are you thankful for two good feet?

Consider the case of the blind man. Are you thankful for sight?

Consider the person who is weak and sick. Are you properly grateful for good health?

"In all things give thanks," said Paul, and he was right. No matter what the conditions of our life may be, there are many things for which we should be grateful. Let us think, not of what we have lost, but of all that we have left.

Let us be grateful for the gift of the Son of God and of the hope of eternal life he gave us. Let us be grateful for the gospel, for the church, and for the friendship and fellowship of so many good and noble people. Let us be thankful for the spiritual and physical blessings of every day. Let us be thankful to God, and to our fellow man.

The High Priests in Conference Assembled, to The Church of Jesus Christ:

IN RESPONSE to the invitation of the First Presidency, two hundred high priests came together in Kirtland Temple. We were conscious of the prayers of Saints all over the world that the assembly should be blessed with an endowment of the Spirit of God. These prayers have been answered. Through worship, instruction, and fellowship, we have known high communion together with God. The counsel of prophecy has been heard. The spirit of wisdom has abounded. We have been moved to contrition as we have sensed the high stewardship of ministry to which we have been called. We have been strengthened against temptation to self-centeredness and official exaltation. We have reinterpreted the endowing Spirit of God in terms of equipment for ministry.

As we leave the Temple, we carry these affirmations: There is urgency for a ministry of understanding that will equip and motivate the membership to higher levels of participation. There is need that we engage in activities that are significant in realizing the church's mission. We bear witness that the Spirit of God has stirred us to go forth in this kind of ministry. Under the spiritual atmosphere of these days, values of lesser worth have fallen into a secondary position, and the satisfactions of righteous living and effective service to others have risen to their rightful place.

Once again the living Christ has been elevated to the center of our communion. The inspired message of our patriarch of the church brought us this call anew, and we listened to His voice. We have seen how men can share common problems and concerns as we have searched for insights and solutions. Truly can we say our unity is in Christ.

We call upon the Saints everywhere to join us in a rededication of our lives and a revitalization of the life of the church, that we may individually and collectively be equipped for our mission in these times. This conference testifies of the readiness of God to add strength and develop vision in those who will respond.

Kirtland, Ohio

They Attended the High Priest Conference October 5 - 8

TWO HUNDRED THREE high priests registered for the first High Priests' Conference of the Reorganization. Early church history shows that the high priests were called into conference occasionally, and some momentous experiences were enjoyed. This gathering represented better than 50 per cent of all of the high priesthood in the church. Among those attending were five pairs of brothers: G. E. and P. E. Farrow, J. E. and L. E. Landsberg, W. W. and Israel A. Smith, O. C. and R. A. Henson, and A. F. and W. L. Shotwell.

There were four father and son pairs: E. J. Gleazer, Sr. and Jr., F. T. and Frank Mussell, J. F. and A. W. Sheehy, and E. L. and Ephraim Squires.

The following high priests who attended had grandfathers or great grandfathers who were high priests: J. D. Anderson, whose grandfather was Alpheus Cutler, Charles R. Hield whose grandfather was Willard Woodstock, C. F. Scarcliff whose grandfather was Willard Woodstock. This same ancestor was a great-grandfather of Lyle W. Woodstock who was in attendance. Presidents Israel A. and W. Wallace Smith and Patriarch Elbert A. Smith all had a grandfather and great-grandfather who were high priests: Joseph Smith, junior and senior. Leslie S. Wight's grandfather was Lyman Wight.

The Detroit International Stake was represented by all but three of the high priests living in the stake. Two of these were ill and unable to make the trip. Those present were: W. Blair McClain, Dr. L. O. Brockway, and E. V. Osborn of the Stake Presidency; L. W. Updike of the Bishopric; D. E. Dowker, R. W. Moore, J. E. Lancaster, C. T. Heaviland, B. E. Brown, Randall Hulse, Herbert Voltman, Willard Shotwell, Alma E. Grant, and William Garnier of the high council. Evangelist George Booth and High Priest J. E. Bishop were also in attendance.

Graceland College sent five high priests who are members of her faculty. Almost all of the men teachers are ministers—something rather unique in a liberal arts college.

The youngest high priest present was Clinton Saxton, of Los Angeles, California, who was thirty last March. The oldest member of the order in attendance was Frederick A. Smith who was eighty-eight last January.

On Sunday morning when the Conference met for a final prayer meeting in the Temple, about thirty high priests resident in Independence who were unable to make the trip gathered in the Auditorium choir room to lend support to the purposes of the Conference. These were presided over by Howard P. Andersen, Henry L. Livingston, and A. Neal Deaver. This gathering was between seven and eight o'clock; good fellowship and spiritual light were enjoyed by these brethren.

Baptism for the Dead

By RUSSELL F. RALSTON

THE POSITION of the Reorganization as to the so-called doctrine of baptism for the dead is well known because of our General Conference enactment on the subject. In 1886 the Conference spoke in the following terms:

Adopted April 9, 1886. No. 308 And the committee are of the opinion that the matter of the presentation of individual opinions by elders, or others of the body, such opinions not having been affirmed by the body as a rule of faith or practice, does not make them a part of the faith or belief of the body; but relate to us individually upon the issue of toleration, which toleration we believe as was manifested in the action of Jesus while dealing with men here in his ministry, should be so broad as to make no occasion for persons to wish to withdraw from the body by reason of these individual differences of opinion.

The committee noticing specifically some of the alleged entertained views set forth in the reasons given, state:

That as to the alleged "temple building and ceremonial endowments therein," that we know of no temple building, except as edifices wherein to worship God, and no endowment except the endowment of the Holy Spirit of the kind experienced by the early Saints on Pentecost Day.

"Baptism for the dead" referred to belongs to those local questions of which the body has said by resolution:

"That the commandments of a local character, given to the first organization of the church are binding on the Reorganization only so far as they are either reiterated or referred to as binding by commandment to this church." And THAT principle has neither been reiterated nor referred to as a commandment.

On account of continual agitation of the question by elders of the Mormon church, it is a matter in which we have interested ourselves occasionally.

That it—at best, or most—was but permissive, in no way a cardinal doctrine or compulsory in its nature, is undisputed, so far as we are concerned.

Recently Elder Russell F. Ralston has given much research to the question, and the following is his treatment of the subject. A careful reading of it is recommended to all our members. ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Preface

THE QUESTION of baptism for the dead has given rise to an increasing concern on the part of many in the past century. Some have passed it off lightly without a thorough examination of its portent, some, after a brief study have been left wondering, while others have fallen prey to the deceptive teachings of man. Because of this, it has seemed particularly important to me that I should spend many hours in study and prayer on this subject. I have been concerned that in my study I should not circumscribe God and his power of revelation, that I should not bring an undue amount of doubt concerning the leadership of the first Prophet of God in the Restoration Movement, and that above all I should not permit myself to compromise the eternal principles of the gospel of Christ. As a result of such study, I present this article prayerfully and humbly for the consideration of all who may be interested. In my research I have greatly appreciated the work of Brother J. W. A. Bailey whose former study has been most helpful.

A doctrine so complicated as this cannot be considered in a few sentences but requires a thorough exploration of all its possibilities. For those interested in getting the broadest understanding of the subject, I suggest a study of the following Scriptures.

A Basis for Study

In studying the word of God, one must first recognize certain fundamental facts. These are particularly important in this matter, so we present them here.

1. In Christianity, Christ is the standard. Regardless of what men might say, regardless of what a prophet or even an angel might say, if that which is said is contradictory to the teachings of Christ and the nature of God, either it is false or we misunderstand it. God, his Son, and his laws are unchangeable. We note the following: "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips."—Psalm 89:34.

2. Inasmuch as the servants of God in times past have warned us as did Paul when he wrote, "But though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1:8. Also Christ spoke to the scribes and Pharisees saying, ". . . in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."—Matthew 15:9. It is necessary that we not only study this doctrine but compare the interpretations of men with the known Gospel of Christ that we might be sure there is no discrepancy, that we might know we are not worshiping in vain.

3. If any principle of the gospel is to mean anything to us in eternity, we must not only thoroughly understand it but likewise know its proper application. It is not sufficient merely to know the laws of mathematics if we are to reach the correct solution of a given problem in arithmetic. We must know the laws, and we must also know the proper application of these laws toward the solution desired. This is equally true with the laws of the gospel of Christ. Even though a law may be true, if we apply it for the wrong purpose and without a knowledge of its proper application, it will be without effect for good. For example we know that water has an effect on fire, but if we try to use water to make fire burn, our efforts fail. Thus, baptism for the dead will avail us nothing if used for the wrong purposes or in a way that makes its use contradictory to the laws and power of God and his Son, Jesus Christ.

With these principles in mind, let us examine carefully all that we can find concerning the principle of baptism for the dead. We note that some of the prophet's writing on this subject was the result of revelation, some was personal opinion. If the two conflict, we must give precedence to that which he claims as revelation.

Limitations

In our study of baptism for the dead, we find that it was to be practiced under strict limitations: (all Scriptures here quoted are from Reorganized Edition, for like quotes from Utah Editions, see preface to article).

1. It was to be practiced in "my house" and after a sufficient time was granted for the building of "my house" (the temple), it was not to be acceptable elsewhere. (Doctrine and Covenants 107:10.) The Lord gave a definite period of time for the completion of "my house," (the Nauvoo Temple), which house was to be built because of the revelation of God and in accord with the plans given of God.

The Nauvoo Temple was never completed before its destruction by fire. There is much evidence available on this subject; however, we here quote only Brigham Young as he spoke at the dedication of St. George Temple in Utah.

I have been spending the winter in St. George. Our temple there is finished, which is the first temple built to the name of the Most High in which the ordinances for the living and the dead can be performed, since the one built by Solomon in the land of Jerusalem, that I have any knowledge of.—Journal of Discourses, Volume 19, page 220.

We shall not discuss in detail all matters concerning the instruction of God with regard to "temples" and "temple-building." However, inasmuch as baptism for the dead can be performed only in a temple of God, we must establish one point, temples of God can be built only by his specific command. God gave specific commandments to Moses to build the tabernacle in the wilderness, to Solomon to build his temple, and to Joseph Smith to build the temples at Kirtland and Nauvoo. When the people of Far West began to plan the building of a temple there without specific commandment, the prophet stopped them by his counsel, and they voted unanimously that ". . . the building of the house of the Lord be postponed till the Lord shall reveal it to be his will to be commenced."—Millennial Star, Volume 16, page 89. That the early leaders of the church clearly understood this is indicated in the statement of Orson Pratt in 1848:

The "house of God" could not be built without new revelation to give the pattern of its various apartments The "house of God" never was in any past age, and never can be in any future age, built without express commandments or new revelations being given to the people who build it.—Millennial Star, Volume 10, page 264.

Thus we see that no temple should be built without direct revelation. Yet, here is what Brigham Young (who commanded many of the temples of the Utah Church to be built) said:

Some might query whether a revelation had been given to build a house to the Lord, but he is a wicked and slothful servant who doeth nothing but what his Lord commandeth, when he knoweth his master's will. I know a temple is needed, and so do you; and when we know a thing, why do we need a revelation to compel us to do that thing? If the Lord and all the people want a revelation, I can give one concerning this temple.—Brigham Young speaking at assembly on Temple Block, Great Salt Lake City, February 14, 1853, recorded in Millennial Star, Volume 15, page 391, taken from the Deseret News.

Brigham Young did not depend upon the revelation of God for his instruction in building temples. Thus it is evident that there is only one temple on the earth today built by the specific command of God, and that is Kirtland Temple, owned by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. In this temple God made no provision for baptism for the dead, thus there is no temple on earth, where baptism for the dead can be practiced. This is the first limitation on the practice of this ordinance as stated in Doctrine and Covenants 107.

2. The ordinance of baptism for the dead was only to be permissible in Zion, her stakes, and Jerusalem (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 11). This raises the questions: "Where is Zion? Is it all of America? Where are the Stakes of Zion?" Let us examine the word of God for our answer.

Hearken, O ye elders of my church saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints: wherefore this is the land of promise, and the place for the city of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.

A reading of the revelation given through Joseph Smith the prophet, at Kirtland, Ohio, in August, 1831, shows that in a number of places the Lord commanded the people at Kirtland to "go up unto the land of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 8, 10-13. Kirtland, Ohio, is a part of the land of America but was not Zion, for her people were commanded to "go up unto the land of Zion."

The Prophet Joseph Smith writing about Zion said:

The season is mild and delightful nearly three quarters of the year, and as the land of Zion, situated at about equal distances from the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, as well as from the Alleghany and Rocky mountains, in the thirty-ninth degree of north latitude, and between the tenth and seventeenth degrees of west longitude.—Times and Seasons, Volume 5, page 450.

Thus, there can be little doubt that in the days of the prophet, according to the word of God, Zion was not the whole of America, but, "the land of Missouri." Further references reveal that Independence, Missouri, is the Center Place (Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1; 83: 1). However, let us consider more of the word of God.

Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

... behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains or the strength of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 98:4.

There is no temple in Zion (as appointed by God), or in any of her stakes (as appointed by God) or in Jerusalem, where baptism for the dead can be practiced. Therefore, under the second of the limitations of the ordinance, placed by the revelation of God, there is no place on earth where this ordinance can be legally practiced.

Is Baptism for the Dead Essential to Salvation?

We come to a most important aspect of this ordinance, for the question arises; "Is baptism for the dead essential to the salvation of either the living or the dead?"

Considering this logically, I believe that if baptism for the dead is essential to their salvation, then God is unjust. My grandfather, who may have been a very good man but who had no opportunity to hear the gospel and thus was not baptized, does not need to depend on me for his salvation! I am not his savior; there is but one Savior, Christ the Lord. If my grandfather had to depend on me and if I were a rascal, then his judgment would not be by his works but by mine. This not only is unjust but is not in accord with the teachings of Christ.

Joseph, the prophet, had a vision concerning his brother Alvin who had passed away without having the opportunity of being baptized. We quote from this vision as found in Church History (Reorganized) Volume II, page 16, or History of the Church (Utah) Volume II, page 380, as follows:

All who have died without a knowledge of this Gospel, who would have received it had they been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die hence forth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom, for I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desires of their hearts

Joseph, in this vision beheld his brother Alvin in the celestial kingdom, and no one had been baptized for him.

On this same subject the Psalmist has said, "None can by any means redeem his brother: nor give to God a ransom for him that he should still live for ever, that it ceaseth not for ever to see corruption. For the redemption of their souls is through God . . ."—Psalm 49: 7-9.

Referring to the Book of Mormon, (II Nephi 6: 51-55, and Moroni 8: 13-28) we note these facts:

1. Those who knew no law can have no punishment.
2. Those who have no punishment have no condemnation.
3. Where there is no condemnation, they are saved by the atonement of Christ, ". . . for the atonement satisfieth the demands of his justice upon all those who have not the law given to them . . . and they are restored to that God who gave them breath." To postulate that baptism for the dead is part of the atonement of Christ is a very questionable supposition.
4. To those who have no condemnation, baptism serves no purpose for, ". . . the power of redemption cometh on all they that have no law, wherefore, he that is not condemned, or he that is under no condemnation, can not repent; and unto such baptism availeth nothing."

5. In this case, baptism is (baptism for the dead), “. . . mockery before God denying the mercies of Christ, and the power of his Holy Spirit, and putting trust in dead works.”

6. And definitely, “. . . this thing ought not to be.”

Furthermore, Moroni says that little children who die without baptism are saved just the same as those who were baptized, and he says, “. . . he that supposeth that little children need baptism is in the gall of bitterness, and . . . should he be cut off in the thought, he must go down to hell.”

In connection with this, Moroni says, “. . . all little children are alive in Christ and also all they that are without the law.” Thus he makes no difference between the salvation of little children who die without baptism and the salvation of adults who die without the law. This being true, baptism for the dead is not essential for the salvation of the dead who died without a knowledge of the law. In fact, Moroni says, “it ought not to be” because “it is mockery before God” as it “denies the mercies of Christ and the power of his Holy Spirit” and “puts trust in dead works.”

7. For those who die having had a knowledge of the truth and rejecting it, we find that their state is awful. From that which is found in the Book of Mormon, we find no indication, much less a commandment, that baptism for them after they are dead will have any effect upon them. Peter indicates (I Peter 4: 6), that Christ went to preach to the spirits in prison (some of whom were disobedient in the days of Noah [I Peter 3: 18-20]); that these, though they must be judged according to men in the flesh, yet might live according to God in the spirit. There is no indication here that would cause us to believe baptism for the dead would have any part in this action. We also know (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7), that these shall at best inherit the terrestrial glory, thus they shall not inherit the kingdom of God

(celestial glory) but rather the kingdom which receives not of the fullness of the Father but of the Son (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6).

Nowhere in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, or in the revelations of God to man today do we find a commandment that someone living should be baptized for these or that such baptism would alter the effect of the judgment.

Considering the above facts, we can but conclude that baptism for the dead is not essential to the salvation of the dead.

Is Baptism for the Dead a Basic Principle of the Gospel of Christ?

In modern revelation God has told us a number of times that the Book of Mormon contains the fullness of the gospel. We refer now to Doctrine and Covenants 17: 2; 26: 2; 34: 3; 42: 5. These references leave little doubt that the Book of Mormon as we now have it contains the fullness of the gospel, and that Joseph Smith brought forth the fullness of the gospel in 1830. We quote again:

“I have sent forth the fullness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph Smith.”—Doctrine and Covenants 34: 3. This statement was made in December, 1830. The fullness of the gospel had been sent forth at that time, however, baptism for the dead had not been mentioned.

“And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel. . . .”—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5. Neither the Bible nor the Book of Mormon “. . . in the which is the fullness of the gospel” teaches baptism for the dead.

In the Bible, Paul mentions the fact that some people practice baptism for the dead (I Corinthians 15: 29). A careful study of this chapter will reveal that Paul was not talking about Christians. In this fifteenth chapter, Paul is expounding the truth of the Resurrection. Talking to the saints (members of Christ’s church) at Corinth, he says, “. . . Else what shall they do, which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?” You will note carefully that Paul does not say, “. . . why are you (members of Christ’s church) baptized for the dead,” but specifically talks about they. Who are they? There is no indication that they are Christians. Inasmuch as in all the rest of the gospel of Christ, as it is found in the Bible and Book of Mormon, there is no mention made of baptism for the dead, and as the Book of Mormon, which God tells us contains the fullness of the gospel makes no mention of it at all, the assumption that Paul was teaching baptism for the dead to the Corinthian saints is a far stretch of imagination.

After a consideration of these Scriptures, and with a knowledge that God is unchangeable, the same yesterday, today, and forever, we feel the only logical conclusion is that baptism for the dead is not a basic principle of the doctrine of Christ.

What of Sections 109 and 110?

In the Doctrine and Covenants (110: 15), Joseph Smith referred to a statement made in the King James Version (Hebrews 11: 40) which says “. . . they without us can not be made perfect . . .” This statement is sometimes used in support of the necessity of baptism for the dead as a means of salvation for the dead. However, we note that in the Inspired Version of the Bible, which comes to us through the inspiration of God to the Prophet Joseph Smith, God has caused the verse to be corrected to read “. . . without sufferings they could not be made perfect.” The word “sufferings” being substituted for us removes any possibility of interpreting this Scripture to indicate that we must be baptized for the dead. Thus God himself has clarified that Scripture for us.

It is important to note that the only writing Joseph Smith did concerning baptism for the dead which he claimed as revelation is found in Doctrine and Covenants 107. Other sections of the Doctrine and Covenants on this subject are letters of Joseph Smith and not the revelations of God. In Doctrine and Covenants 109, he does say God commands that a recorder be present to make records of the baptisms for the dead. However, we note that in no revelation has the Lord said that baptism for the dead was essential, in no place has he made it a commandment. Where Joseph speaks of it as being essential he does so as a man, not in the name of the Lord.

In this regard we would like to quote the last writing recorded by the prophet concerning baptism for the dead. His statements found in the Doctrine and Covenants were written in 1842, but we find this statement in the Millennial Star dated May 12, 1844, "We may be baptized [for our relatives or] for those whom we have much friendship for; but it must first be revealed to man of God, lest we run too far."—Millennial Star, Volume 23, page 487. This statement would indicate that the prophet, after two years of observing baptism for the dead in the church, saw danger in that the church might ". . . run too far" with this matter. Thus he said that baptism for the dead should and could be performed only when God revealed this specifically to an individual (to man). If this be the case, there is no need of geneological research in connection with this ordinance, no excuse for its promiscuous application.

Young Joseph, the son of the martyr, and the second prophet of the Restoration Movement, made this statement in agreement with the last statement of his father on the subject of baptism for the dead.

Those who were baptized for the dead should live so nearly in accord with the spirits in the better land, that there should be revelation of a desire that the living should personate for the dead. If anyone supposes that an indiscriminate and careless administration . . . would answer the end of this complicated theory, he certainly mistakes the ordinance and its effects.

Baptism for the dead is not commanded in the gospel; it is at best only permitted; was so by special permission, and we presume that should we ultimately prove worthy, it may again be permitted.—True Saints' Herald, Volume 21, 1874, page 435.

Was Elijah to Teach Baptism for the Dead?

Since Malachi 4: 6 is often misunderstood and sometimes used to indicate that Elijah would come in the last days to turn the "hearts of the children to their fathers," that is, cause the children to be baptized for their fathers, it is well for us here to consider this Scripture not only as it is found in the Bible but also as it was quoted by the angel Moroni to Joseph Smith in the vision of 1823. This is found in Church History (Reorganized), Volume 1, page 13, and Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1-3, Utah Edition. Moroni's interpretation of this Scripture puts it in quite a different light; it reads as follows:

And he shall plant in the hearts of the children the promises made to the fathers, and the hearts of the children shall turn to the fathers. If it were not so, the whole earth would be utterly wasted at his coming.

The children here referred to are the Jews and the children of Israel. The fathers are the prophets. Thus the Scripture really reads: "The hearts of the children [Jews and lost sheep of the house of Israel who departed from the ways of the Lord] will be turned again unto the promises God made to the fathers [his prophets and early leaders of the house of Israel]. This being true the children [Israel] will turn their hearts to the fathers [prophets] and accepting their leadership again, will be saved the destruction that comes to those who reject the teachings and laws of God.

Summation

Since we have discussed a number of things in connection with this subject let us now sum up our findings.

1. Baptism for the dead at best is very strictly limited, as it can be performed only in a temple built by the specific command of God—such temple to be in Zion, her stakes, or Jerusalem.

2. Kirtland Temple is the only temple now in existence built by the express command of God. Inasmuch as it is not in Zion, her stakes, or Jerusalem, and since God made no provisions in its planning for baptism for the dead, there is no temple on the earth where baptism for the dead can be practiced according to the limitations of God.

3. Baptism for the dead is in no way essential to the salvation of either the living or the dead. Its practice for this reason causes men to worship in vain and trust in dead works. The teachings of the Book of Mormon, ". . . in which is the fullness of the gospel," establish clearly that baptism for the dead thus practiced ". . . is mockery before God, denying the mercies of Christ, and the power of his Holy Spirit."

4. The doctrine of baptism for the dead is not a basic principle of Christ's gospel for the Book of Mormon, which contains the fullness, does not teach it.

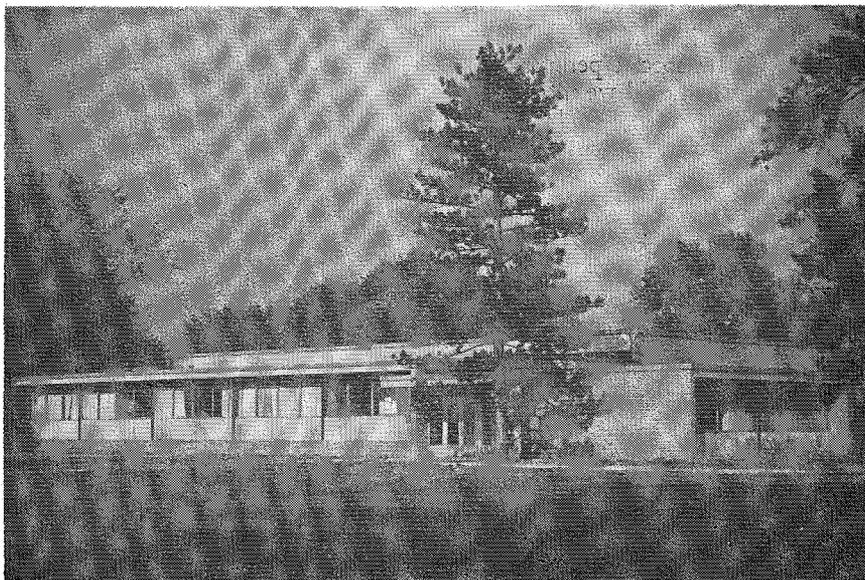

5. This doctrine is at best permissible, and this only under very specific conditions. Its obedience has never been commanded.

6. Inasmuch as God has called the world (through the Restoration) to come out of confusion and vain worship by hearing the voice of Christ ("This is my beloved son, hear him"), and since at the present time there is no interpretation of this ordinance and its purposes that can be made consistent with the voice of Christ, members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints cannot feel justified in accepting or practicing it, nor can we rightfully do so unless God in his wisdom shall reveal it in such a way and with such a purpose that it will be completely consistent with him, his Son, and his gospel.

The MEMORIAL STUDENT CENTER represents the most tangible evidence of what Graceland Day gifts do for Graceland. This serviceable modern structure was entirely the result of gifts from alumni, members of the church, and friends of the college who contributed to the Graceland Day offerings in recent years. This building is now Graceland's assembly hall. In it are her bookstore, post office, "snack shop," and lounge. Here the student council meets. Here all-school parties are held. Here the students meet on Sunday mornings for church services, and on Wednesday nights for the traditional Graceland fellowship services. Today's student feels that it would be difficult to get along without the Center. If he is not in his dormitory, in the classroom, or in the library, you will probably find him in the Memorial Center.

The preliminary CAMPUS PLAN is presented to give evidence of the kind of changes that have already occurred or may be expected to occur soon. This is not a final plan. It represents preliminary study on campus needs. You will note that the old Administration building is not shown. Does this mean that this historic structure will be torn down? Not at all. Probably it will stand as long as it can safely stand and adequately serve. This is preliminary study number one. Other studies may show the "Ad" building left in the center of things. This preliminary plan is meant to be provocative, to promote discussion and further study, so that as the campus changes and expands, it will be an orderly expansion and a progressive change. Already the Center and the men's dormitory have been located according to this plan... Before other needed structures are erected in the future, further study is needed. Graceland Day offerings of this year will finance these studies.

Graceland Day offerings will do other things for the youth of the church who come to Graceland. It is hoped that the offering will be substantial enough this year for the college to do the following:

The MEN'S DORMITORY looked like what you see in the picture, when the photograph was taken on October 8 of this year. As you read these lines, the building will have grown. This structure is being made possible by church appropriation. It is presented here to give you background for the present Graceland Day gift. It gives evidence that the college is growing. With growth comes the need for careful planning. With growth comes wear and tear on the campus. With growth comes changes which are needed to meet changing times. All of these things require money.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Some people believe that, according to Doctrine and Covenants 17: 13 (and other passages), delegates to Conferences are to be elders (elders as explained in passage 125: 8). We have the Rules of Representation in Doctrine and Covenants 125: 7-9, and because of these are led to believe God intended a somewhat different procedure. Please explain and cite passages referred to in the first line of 125: 7.

Indiana

Mrs. B. C.

ANSWER:

My servant was directed to present to the church rules of representation, and he so stated to the body at different times that he was so led; but the conferences of my people saw proper to change these articles and rules of representation, and propositions are pending that they be still further changed.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 7.

The question to be decided is, what were the rules of representation the prophet of the church presented to the "conferences of my people" which the conferences rejected?

After an exhaustive searching of back numbers of the Herald containing General Conference minutes, I failed to find the original statement. I appealed to Patriarch F. A. Smith, Elder Hubert Case, and Historian A. B. Phillips for help. The following is the history of the delegate system as supplied by these brethren.

History of the delegate system of the church:

At the General Conference of April, 1880, Joseph Smith named H. A. Stebbins, E. L. Kelley, M. H. Forscutt, and

J. R. Lambert to serve with himself as a committee on rules of representation.—Church History, Volume 4, page 310. At the September, 1880, Conference, Joseph stated the committee was not ready to report. At the April, 1881, Conference he gave the report which was adopted with some amendments (shown on pages 352-354 of Church History, Volume 4). The resolution is number 234 of General Conference Resolutions.

At the April, 1882, Conference, a committee composed of Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, J. W. Gillen, J. C. Crabb, and W. C. Caldwell, was appointed to revise and enlarge rules of representation and make them adaptable to districts and branches (Church History, Volume 4, page 402). At the Conference of April, 1883, Joseph Smith as chairman reported (Church History, Volume 4, pages 420-422, with footnote number 1). This report was adopted with changes named at the Conference of April, 1884, and is General Conference Resolution number 278. The 1882 Conference amended the rules as to delegates to one vote for each six members instead of twenty (Church History, Volume 4, page 392).

After the 1901 revelation was given (Doctrine and Covenants 125) the April, 1913, Conference adopted resolution number 703 on basis of representation. In 1922 resolution number 821 on discontinuing alternates was adopted. In 1923 resolution number 831 on excess delegates was adopted, also resolution number 832 on certifying delegates by the Credential Committee. The 1920 Conference resolution number 811 on limiting number of votes per delegate was adopted.

In Church History, Volume 4, pages 352, 353, at the General Conference held at Plano, Illinois, on April 6, 1881, the committee on representation reported. The first two sentences are as follows:

"Whereas, the method and fact of church representation in General Conferences, as at present practiced, seem not to be within the law, and are made inadequate to secure the common consent contemplated in that law, therefore, be it resolved that a more clearly defined method of representation should be adopted, and to secure that method your committee recommends the adoption of the following rules of representation."

Then follows six paragraphs of recommendations. Joseph Smith, chairman of the committee, signed the report.

This report was adopted at the Conference of April, 1884 (General Conference Resolution, number 278).

None of the brethren could locate the original recommendation made by the prophet of the church regarding the delegate system. If it was ever written, it apparently has been lost. Elder Hubert Case remembered that Brother Floyd T. Rockwell, president of Southern Ohio District, had made a study of the subject and wrote to him. The following is his reply:

Some years ago, after considerable research on the subject, I came to the conclusion that the only conference provided for by resolution is the elders' conference. Section 17: 13 seems to be the only inspiration on the subject on record preceding section 125: 7. Here I am dependent upon personal testimony which I fear was never documented. Elder Gomer T. Griffiths informed me that the references to previous statements by the prophet were recommendations of elders' conferences. Incidentally Elder Griffiths was strongly in favor of elders' conferences. Subsequently the Southern Ohio District adopted this form of conference.

In the presence of Bishop Evans of Grand Rapids, Michigan, President Smith said, "I agree with you that we should have elders' conferences; but we have a long tradition to overcome." Again, "I think we should start this movement in Independence."

If these references do not fully answer the question, it is because we do not have the rules of representation presented by the prophet to the church upon which to comment. It would be interesting to know who rejected the prophet's professed inspired recommendation regarding elders' conferences. Was it the priesthood or the laity?

Evidently our present rules of representation are not perfect, but we practically do have elders' general conferences today. The responsibility for conducting the affairs of the church lies largely with the Melchisedec priesthood. The Joint Council is composed of the Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, and the Presiding Bishopric. Weeks before a General Conference, these quorums meet and carefully and prayerfully consider the various needs of the church. Nearly all legislation presented to the General Conferences originates with this Council of the Melchisedec priesthood. Still it is possible in our present delegate system for the delegates to out-vote the priesthood at General Conferences. The rights of the people are not ignored.

The Preliminary Campus Plan

- (1) Remodel and redecorate Walker Hall reception room.
- (2) Beautify the campus, worn and torn by the building program and heavy enrollments.
- (3) Expand the library and its services to students.
- (4) Improve and relocate roads and sidewalks.

Certainly these are projects worthy of the generosity of the people of the church. May you be blessed as you give on Graceland Day by the knowledge that others will be blessed by your gift.

Experiences of a Missionary - Part X

Visits to Historical Places

IT is a splendid privilege to visit places in which outstanding events have occurred in the history of the church. It has been my good fortune to visit some of these places. I am happy to present a brief description of them and relate some of the experiences that came to me.

Kirtland, Ohio

Several years ago Brother and Sister Gard Kirkendall of Columbus, Ohio, invited me to attend a reunion at Kirtland, the Mount Sinai of Latter Day Saintism. It was a pleasure to accept their invitation and to visit this historic place.

I shall not forget the first time I was permitted to enter the Temple, the only one standing in all the world today that was built by divine command. Other temples have been built, some at the command of God, but these have been destroyed. As I entered in the dusk of the evening, there came over me the warmth of the Spirit of Christ, and I felt I was on holy grounds. I walked up the aisle to the pulpits in the west end of the building, and there bowed down before the Lord and earnestly sought his favor. I pleaded for strength that I might be permitted to accomplish all he had desired of me. In doing this I dedicated my life to the service of my Master. I felt a divine assurance that this was acceptable to the Lord, and if I would remain faithful to the covenant I had made, I would succeed in my ministry. I am sure the same spirit that was present at the dedication of the Temple was present then—not in the same degree, but sufficient to permit me to understand the wonderful manifestation of the power of God which characterized the dedication of that holy house. As the reunion convened, the same divine power was present and was felt by those in attendance. A different time as I have attended other reunions held in this place, I have witnessed this same outpouring and know men under this enlightening power of God have spoken words which penetrated the hearts of those present and caused them to examine themselves and put away all things that were out of harmony with the will of Christ.

In Kirtland the church owns the former home of Hyrum Smith. It stands south of the Temple and is used as a residence at the present time. Just across the street from the Temple is the home of Sidney Rigdon. This church-owned home is in fine condition and is occupied by the guide of the Temple and the district missionary. Another historic building is the store formerly owned by Bishop Whitney. It was in this building that Joseph Smith III was born on November 8, 1832. It is located northeast of the Temple not far from the Chagrin River.

Niagara Falls

Leaving Kirtland, Brother and Sister Kirkendall, their daughter, and Jesse Harden, president of the Northwestern Ohio District, and I journeyed toward Niagara Falls, New York, reaching that city late in the evening. We found it difficult to find lodging for the night but after some effort succeeded. The next day was spent in viewing the falls and other places of interest in that vicinity. We saw the barrel in which a man passed over the falls some years before and was taken out of the river alive.

One of the most interesting things we saw was a flatboat which at one time was towed by a steamer on the Niagara River above the falls. Its history was related to me by an aged man who was very much concerned that the facts might be made known. This flatboat was used to haul freight on the Niagara River and Lake Erie. One day it broke loose from the steamer and began drifting down stream toward the great falls. Six men were aboard the boat, and their fate depended on their being able to stop the boat before it reached the falls. The steamer made a desperate effort to rescue the men but failed. Swiftly the the boat continued down the river. The sun was fast setting in the west, and soon darkness would prevent anything being done for these men. Nearer and nearer they drifted toward the falls. It became apparent no earthly hand could save them from destruction. They could hear the roar of the mighty cataract in the distance and knew they soon would pass over the falls, thus ending their mortal existence. These men were not religious and had never asked their Creator for help before. However, one of them suggested that they call upon God, knowing no other power could save them from destruction. They bowed on board the flatboat and, for the first time in their lives, pleaded for divine favor that they might be spared to their families and friends. Evidently God heard their prayer and when the boat was less than a mile from the falls it suddenly ran upon a large rock in the stream. With the forward end of the boat high in the air and the back part in the water they continued to call upon their Maker for deliverance through the silent watches of the night. The boat was tossed back and forth, but the rock seemed to hold it secure. Minutes seemed like weeks, but finally streaks of gray began to illuminate the eastern sky. This gave the men new hope and courage. Surely the Lord had extended their lives for a few hours.

On the Canadian side was a life-saving station. As some of the officials looked out over the river that morning, they saw the boat anchored on the rock and the six men on board. No boat could go out as it would be swept over the falls, yet if these men were left marooned, they could not survive long. Finally an air gun was used to shoot a rope across to them. Directed, no doubt, by the hand of Divinity, the rope fell across the boat and one end was made fast. The other end was tied to the life-saving station. A basket was sent out, and when it reached the boat, a man was placed in it and pulled back to the station. Thus they were rescued. As I stood looking at the boat, I could not help believing the Lord had heard the prayers of these men and had come to their rescue.

I have visited the falls several times since then, and each time I have looked up the river and the old boat is still there. It continues to bear witness to mankind of the value of prayer and how the Lord came to the rescue of these men, saving them from destruction because of their faith in him. The aged man who related this story has no doubt gone to his reward, but the story still lives, and future generations will repeat it to those who may have the privilege of seeing the boat.

Hill Cumorah

From Niagara Falls we drove to Palmyra, New York, and for the first time I visited some of the historic grounds that mark the Restoration Movement. Going to Hill Cumorah, we climbed to the crest. Not far from where tradition tells the plates of the Book of Mormon were found, we bowed before the Lord in prayer. There we thanked our Heavenly Father that we had been permitted to live in the land where the marvelous work and a wonder had come forth. There was not a dry eye in our group as we stood that day on historic Cumorah. We tried to picture the scenes related in the history of the church when Joseph came to this place once each year that he might meet with the Angel Moroni and receive further instructions regarding the coming forth of the work, until 1827 when the plates were given to him for the purpose of translation. Leaving the Smith Homestead we went to the home where Joseph and his family lived. It was our privilege to see the fireplace under which the plates were hidden so as to escape being found by evil and designing men who sought to destroy the work of God. We entered the room where Joseph talked to the Angel Moroni during the greater part of the night on September 21 and 22, 1823, Joseph receiving further instructions regarding the work in which he was to have such an important part. Among other things the angel informed Joseph that his name would be had for both good and evil; this has been literally fulfilled. As I stood in this room, I could not keep back the tears. It was one of the most solemn moments of my life, and I felt to thank the Lord that I had lived to see the coming forth of this wonderful work.

Sacred Grove

From the Smith home we went to the sacred grove where the young boy in his fourteenth year went to pray in the spring of 1820. He had a desire to serve God, but he did not know how to do so acceptably unless he was given light. In going to the grove, we crossed a stream in which some of the early baptisms in the church took place. On reaching the grove we found the spot pointed out as the place Joseph prayed. Here we again had prayer, and again we felt the enlightening Spirit of the Master testifying to us that the experience as related by Joseph was true. Many thousands have been made to realize that they have not followed "cunningly devised fables," as the truth of the Restoration Movement has been verified to them. It was here where the Father and Son appeared in answer to Joseph's prayer and gave instructions as to what he should do. We felt as Moses must have felt when he was told to remove his shoes as he was on holy ground. Here in the silence of the forest, where only the voice of God was heard, the great Restoration had its beginning. It was a glorious privilege to visit the place and to relive as far as possible, the story that tells of the coming forth of the work.

Oakland, Pennsylvania

Among the places of historic interest is Oakland, Pennsylvania. This small town lies just across the Susquehanna River from the town of Susquehanna, Pennsylvania. At the time Joseph resided there, the town bore the name of Harmony. Here was where he first met Emma Hale. Their friendship grew and finally resulted in marriage. Joseph's father-in-law sold him thirteen acres of land where he and Emma made their first home. It was in Harmony he received the first ten revelations. Joseph went from his father's home in western New York to Harmony, taking with him the plates of the Book of Mormon. Here the translation of the Book of Mormon began with Emma and Martin Harris serving as scribes. Soon after this beginning, Oliver Cowdery, acting under divine impulses, joined Joseph, and from that time until the work of translation was finished did the writing.

On our arrival in Harmony, in company with President John F. Garver, we began a search for the location where Joseph lived. We were helped by an aged man who had lived in that community many years. We found in our investigation that the house where Joseph and Emma lived had burned some thirty-five years before. The foundation, however, was plainly visible. The Susquehanna River lies to the west about two hundred yards.

During the translation of the Book of Mormon, Joseph and Oliver came to a place in which baptism was mentioned. Not fully understanding the statement they decided to go to some secluded spot and seek light. Leaving the house they went down to the river, and there in a small grove engaged in prayer.

They had not prayed long until a heavenly messenger appeared. This messenger announced that he was an angel sent from God, and that his name was John, the same as is known as John the Baptist in the New Testament Scripture. He laid his hands upon Joseph and Oliver and ordained them to the Aaronic priesthood. He gave further instruction that they should baptize each other. Joseph was to first baptize Oliver, and then Oliver was to baptize Joseph. This instruction was faithfully carried out. Following the baptism, Joseph ordained Oliver and in turn Oliver ordained Joseph, for they were so commanded.

After they were baptized the gift of prophecy was given to both men, and they prophesied of many things that would shortly come to pass, especially the rise of the church. History further records that Samuel H. Smith, brother of the prophet, was baptized the same day by Oliver Cowdery. The following is part of his description concerning this wonderful event:

The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us, while the veil was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously-looked for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance! What joy! what wonder! what amazement! While the world was racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard. As in the blaze of day, yes more—above the glitter of the May sunbeam which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature! Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, "I am thy fellow servant," dispelled every fear. We listened—we gazed—we admired. 'Twas the voice of the angel from glory—'twas a message from the Most High! and as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were rapt in vision of the Almighty! . . .

But dear brother, think, further think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hands the holy priesthood, as he said, "Upon you my fellow-servants in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon the earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness!" . . .

Man may deceive his fellow-man; deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may have power to seduce the foolish and untaught, till naught but fiction feeds the many, and the fruit of falsehood carries in its current the giddy to the grave; but one touch with the finger of his love, yes, one ray of glory from the upper world, or one word from the mouth of the Savior, from the bosom of eternity, strikes it all into insignificance, and blots it forever from the mind! The assurance that we were in the presence of an angel; the certainty that we heard the voice of Jesus, and the truth unsullied as it flowed from a pure personage, dictated by the will of God, is to me, past description, and I shall ever look upon this expression of the Savior's goodness with wonder and thanksgiving while I am permitted to tarry, and in those mansions where perfection dwells and sin never comes, I hope to adore in that day which shall never cease.

I have given the words of Oliver, believing they will help the reader to understand more fully how we felt that day as we visited this place where the priesthood was restored and where the first baptisms of the Restoration took place. Certainly it was a day well spent.

Feed My Sheep — By LeROY E. HARRIS

AT THE LAST General Conference many fine reports were heard, but none caused more joy than the one giving the number of baptisms for the past year. The Conference was not informed that over a period of say ten years only one out of four of this 4,738 total would still be active members, and that many of these would not be members at all.

There may be reasons for this loss of new members, or the children of old and faithful members, or even the old and faithful members themselves. It would be well to study these reasons which in many cases can be corrected. The Master tells us in Matthew 10: 12 that if one sheep is missing those that are safe should be left and the missing one sought out and returned to the fold. This task is the work of the priesthood in general and the pastors in particular. In many cases a visit or two by the pastor will save the drifting member to the church. These visits need not be long, but a word of love and an attitude of patience will work wonders.

BROTHER JOHN W. RUSHTON was asked on one occasion how he preached and taught, and he answered something like this: "By my experiences." That is what all members of the priesthood should do.

A family meets with the sorrow of having one of its sons sent to a state penal institution. Does the pastor regularly visit and try to assist this good father and his family over this rough spot?

Another family, feeling that it is estranged from the branch, owing to unfortunate circumstances, fails to come to church. Does the pastor, as head of the branch, visit them and help get them straightened out?

New members, especially those just baptized, move into the branch, and their names are transferred to the local branch records. Does the pastor make it his business to visit them or call them on the telephone and encourage them or inquire about their health and welfare?

Does the pastor visit the sick and administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper to them when they are confined to their homes? One good sister who was very ill for several years was seldom visited and never had the Communion brought to her.

These are but a few of the reasons why members, especially new ones, drift away from the household of faith, but they can all be corrected. On one occasion Christ told Peter: "When you are converted strengthen the brethren."—Luke 22: 32. So our priesthood must be converted in order to strengthen the lay members. Again we find in John 21: 15-17 that Christ asked Peter if he loved him, and on Peter's reply that he did, Christ gave the instruction, "Feed my lambs." On two succeeding times the instruction was repeated: "Feed my sheep." There is no doubt that the lambs referred to are those who have not entered the waters of baptism and need some help; but the instruction to "Feed my sheep"—members of the fold—is given twice.

WHEN WE ACCEPT a call to the priesthood and are ordained, God and the church have first claim on us and our services. If the job is too big, we should not take it. Men of God, let us rise up and stop this loss which is due to our lack of effort. Let us "render unto Cæsar that which is Cæsar's and unto God that which is God's"; this is our just and "reasonable service."

And for these many generations, even since the day that I created them, have they gone astray, and have denied me, and have sought their own counsels in the dark; and in their own abominations have they devised murder, and have not kept the commandments which I gave unto their father Adam. Wherefore, they have forsworn themselves, and by their oaths they have brought upon themselves death. And an hell have I prepared for them, if they repent not.—Genesis 6: 28-30, Inspired Version.

Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so to do, he shall in no wise be saved in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach these commandments of the law until it be fulfilled, the same shall be called great, and shall be saved in the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 5: 21, Inspired Version.

Brethren, let us do all we can to prepare the people to redeem Zion, that we may set them as a light on a hill to guide the honest in heart to that city where there is no night and no tears. Let us take Christ's admonition, "Go your way and sin no more," that we may all work together in harmony and brotherly love to that great purpose for which we were called and ordained.

The Church School

Here's to the parent on whose heart we trace,
The lines of love and care;
A partner with God, reproducing the race,
An infinite privilege you share.

Here's to the one who superintends
The work of the school as a whole;
Who guides in plans toward desirable ends,
And leads the school toward the goal.

Here's to the one who writes in a book
The record of each precious soul;
Who knows every child, gives each a kind look,
And credits each step toward the goal.

Here's to the one who plays or who sings,
Whose heart is in tune with the Word;
Who leads in the praise of the Father, and brings
Great joy to the house of the Lord.

Here's to the teacher, who, faithful and true,
Comes to his task well prepared;
In mind and in heart, full service to show,
In teaching the truths of his Lord.

Here's to the pastor, the shepherd of all,
Who guides in the path toward the right;
Whose heart is aflame with the Great Shepherd's call,
And who seeks to lead all to the light.

Here's to all those in the school of the church,
Who would always be true to their trust;
Who are willing to see, and to hear, and to search,
And who say with a will, "I MUST."

Briefs

MOLINE, ILLINOIS.—Election of officers was held August 16. Officers are Richard W. Martens, pastor; John Harrington, director of religious education; Joyce Sheppard, secretary; Leslie Davis, treasurer; Helen Olson, department of women's leader; Jack Waddell, librarian and attendance recorder; Ruth Shock, minister of music; Lillian Gamet, supervisor of children; Leo Sheppard, supervisor of young people; George Waddell, Sr., supervisor of adults; Melville VanBuskirk, Jack Waddell, and Donald Mitchell, auditing improvement and finance committee; Inez Martens, flowers for the sick; George Sheppard, solicitor; Leslie Davis, book steward; Florence Cady, historian; Edna Sheppard, W. E. Shaffer, flower decorating committee; Richard Martens, publicity agent; Ora Burgess, Herald correspondent.

George Waddell, Jr., will attend Graceland College this year.—Reported by ORA BURGESS.

DAVIS CITY, IOWA.—The women's department has a threefold purpose for the year: to study, to be friendly, and to earn money for the church basement. They have set a goal of $500 for the basement fund.

Meetings are held twice a month. At each meeting there is a short devotional, a study period of "Each One Win One," and a quilting and sewing period.

Nine food and handwork sales have been held, cookbooks have been published, and three Stanley parties have been given. At the annual business meeting the women's department gave $500 to the basement fund.

The women's department adopted a girl in Germany. They gave her a bridal shower last fall and a baby shower this summer. Besides these gifts they have sent her six boxes of food, soap, and clothing. They have remembered sick members of the department with flowers, fruit, or gifts, sent flowers and served dinners when there were deaths in the branch, and gave a gift to each new baby.—Reported by IDA MAE HILL.

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE.—Ronald Vance Link, son of Dr. Vance E. and Margaret Katherine Link, was blessed October 1 by Elder Glaude Smith and Dr. Charles F. Grabske.

GULLIVER, MICHIGAN.—District President Rexe Stowe was in charge of the annual business meeting held September 5. The officers elected were George Backman, pastor and publicity agent; Mrs. Evelyn Backman, branch clerk and women's leader; Leroy Swayer, church school director, adult supervisor, book steward, and custodian of building; Mrs. Hilma Bauers, treasurer; Perry Rosebush, young people's leader; Mrs. Eula Ann Rosebush, music director; Margaret Swayer, children's supervisor; Loretta Swayer, librarian.

An all-day meeting was held September 17. Brother Stowe presided. Brother Kesmick of Kirtland Lake, Canada, spoke at the 9:00 a.m. prayer meeting that day. Elder Edwards of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, spoke on the Restoration at the evening service. Dinner was served by the women's department at noon.

The afternoon was devoted to classwork. Brother Stowe was in charge of the men's class, Sister Oris C. Flood of the women's class, Sister Dorothy Routledge of the young people, and Margaret Swayers and Sister Welch of the children. Following the classes, a spokesman from each group presented a report to the combined groups.

There were several people administered to at this time. Branches represented were Gladstone, Sault Ste. Marie of Michigan, Sault Ste. Marie of Ontario, Grand Marias, and Kirtland.

A harvest supper was held September 26 at the church when 114 meals were served at one dollar a plate. The proceeds are to be used for the lining of the church with celotex.—Reported by GEORGE BACKMAN.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Officers elected at the annual business meeting on September 11 are Frank McDonald, pastor; Paul Counts and Charles Johnson, associate pastors; James Myers, church school director; Charles Johnson, young people's director; Winsome McDonald, director of women; Elde Amick, branch secretary; Wayne Dillion, branch statistician; Eldon Woodery, treasurer; Eugene Fox, Floyd Moore, J. Cedric Evans, William Sterling, Lloyd Parker, finance committee; Henry Eilers, book steward; Lovie Oelklaus, music director; Don Hunstein, Hevald correspondent; Elston Lotz, Lila Gough, Virgil Noakes, C. L. Archibald, Eugene Fox, building committee; Helen Blackwood and Mathel Archibald, flower committee and decorations; Charles Johnson, Edward Joy, Herb Tourville, auditing committee; Mathel Archibald, chairman of special days committee composed of heads of departments.

District young people's activity was finished for the church year by a retreat at Belleville, Illinois, the week end of September 23, 24.

A Saturday afternoon and evening of games began the retreat for some thirty-five Leaguers at Bellevue Park. The balance of Saturday evening was given to a songfest and campfire circle devotional led by Seventy Cecil Ettinger. The Leaguers had spent the night in the homes of Belleville Branch members.

Brother Ettinger led the early Sunday morning fellowship service. A large percentage of the group participated in the testimonial section of this service. Elder Charles Johnson, young people's director of St. Louis Branch, conducted the class following on the theme of the retreat, "Fall In." The group then joined the Belleville congregation at the church to hear Brother Ettinger's 11:00 sermon.

The closing session Sunday afternoon was held at the East St. Louis church, under the direction of District Young People's Supervisor Eldon Dickens, who also planned the retreat. Hymn and picture interpretations were given by League members, and Brother Ettinger ended the retreat with a summary of the two days' activity.—Reported by DON HUNSTEIN.

FAIRLAND, OKLAHOMA.—At the annual business meeting held September 6, the following officers were elected or sustained: Elder C. D. Wilson, pastor; George Moore, church school director and branch auditor; R. L. Montgomery, branch treasurer; Georgia Blaylock, branch secretary; Juanita Moore, church school secretary; Dorothy Shepherd, women's leader; Fleyce Dale, young people's leader; Esther Wilson, special day program chairman; Patsy Moore, publicity agent; Oka Montgomery, music director; and George Moore (chairman), R. L. Montgomery, Henry Matthews, Joe Jones, and Albia Hudson, building committee.

The Zion's League elected their officers September 17. Those elected were Bill Radford, president; Argel Gross, vice-president; and Virginia Matthews, secretary-treasurer; Betty Goins, worship service committee chairman; Orson Goins, study-recreation committee chairman.

The women's department elected officers September 19: Dorothy Shepherd, president; Minnie Roberson, vice-president; Mae Gross, secretary, and Lorene Moore, treasurer. The committee chairmen haven't been selected.

Elder C. D. Wilson baptized five children at the Spring River district reunion grounds at Racine, Missouri: Sherry and Laverne Wilson, Gary Lee Shepherd, and Ralph and Roland Williston.

"Forward With the Living Christ" was the theme for a youth retreat September 23, 24 at Cedar Bluff Lodge near Coffeyville, Kansas. Stephen Black, district president, and Arthur Dixon, district youth supervisor, were in charge of the services. Six young people from Fairland attended.—Reported by PATSY MOORE.

KANSAS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—The Wichita, Kansas, Branch was the hostess of the Kansas District Conference, September 30 and October 1. Conference opened at 7:30 Saturday evening with Apostle D. T. Williams as speaker. A social hour concluded the evening.

Sunday morning services began at 6:15 when the young people met in a prayer service that was outstanding. General services began at 8:30 and included a period of meditation; the confirmation of three new members to the Wichita Branch: J. C. Thorstenberg, Raymond Gann, Jr., and Marilyn Gann; the sacrament of the Lord's Supper and a period of testimonies. Bishop Walter N. Johnson of the Presiding Bishopric was speaker at the 10:45 service. A wonderful spirit prevailed throughout these meetings.

The conference assembled in business session at 2:30. Seventy James Daugherty presided over this session which included the annual election. The reunion committee as elected is Elder Earl Sheppard, Elder Clyde Shannon, Deacon Frank Westwood, Sr., and Elder Virgil England. The finance committee as sustained includes Elder C. S. Gose, Deacon Westwood, and Evon Kueker.

The following ordinations were approved: Dale Cohen to office of priest, Ralph Cohen to the office of deacon, John Fariss to the office of teacher, and Ernest (Bill) Hardy to the office of deacon.

Elder Ronald Manuel was elected district president. His choice of Elder Clyde Shannon and Elder C. S. Gose as counselors was approved by the conference. Dorothy M. Sheppard, district secretary; Frank Westwood, Jr., sustained as district treasurer; Marian Manuel, district director of religious education; Mary Robinson sustained as district director of music; Elder J. J. Wilson as district auditor; Hazel Gose sustained as district women's leader; Priest Francis Vickery, district Zion's League supervisor; Deane Holder recommended as district historian.

Kansas District conference was adjourned with the conclusion of the business session.—Reported by DOROTHY M. SHEPPARD.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA.—At the annual business meeting held September 6, the following officers were elected: Peter S. Whalley, pastor; Gladys Hawley, secretary; Russell Tooze, church school director; Ann White, treasurer; Alice Clow, musical director; Thelma Curtis, supervisor of young people; Mae Gillen, women's leader; Joe Curtis and Ralph Thompson, public relations, and Ruth Hada, bulletin editor.

Brother Engle, district president, David Carmichael, and Brother Whalley were in charge of the meeting.—Reported by JOE CURTIS.

GOODLAND, KANSAS.—At the annual business meeting, August 13, the following officers were elected: Dick Marolf, pastor; Inez Been, branch clerk; Ken Stobaugh, treasurer; Dorothy Graybill, director of women; Ken Stobaugh, music director; O'ella Marolf, publicity agent; Glen Middleton, youth director; Bob Cowan, caretaker; Shirley Cowan, librarian; Conrad Graybill, solicitor; Bob Cowan, church school director; Byron Graybill, assistant church school director; Libby Stapp, church school secretary; Gertie Ingram, branch historian.

Elder J. R. Graybill has been pastor for approximately thirty years. Although he will no longer be actively in charge, his service will in no way be lessened except by the relief of some of the detailed tasks he has formerly performed.

The branch is looking forward to a new church building as the present facilities have been outgrown.—Reported by O'ELLA MAROLF.

RICH HILL DISTRICT.—The conference convened at Rich Hill, Missouri, September 24. The opening service was in charge of the district president, Donald L. Kyser. A boys' quartet sang a hymn and Apostle D. O. Chesworth brought the evening message with an illustrated lecture with slides on "Stewardship."

Sunday morning at 9:00 a.m., the Saints assembled for the prayer service. The theme was "Fall In." Following the prayer service, Elder Chesworth delivered the conference sermon to a congregation of 335 people. Because of the lack of seating accommodations, chairs were placed outside and a public address system was used. At this service a quartet, composed of Maxine Beckham, Bertha Rogers, Lawrence Beckham, and Wilbur Smith, sang. A basket dinner was served at noon in the church annex.

The business session was called to order by Apostle Chesworth at 2 o'clock. Reports of the district officers were read. An election of the reunion committee was held, and the following were elected: Brother Melvin Ingram, Elder B. F. Kyser, and Elder Donald Kyser, district missionary. The budget for the next year was approved. The following men were approved for ordination: Homer McAllister, teacher; Algie Sutton, Arthur Goettle, and Dewey Stukesbury, priests. Large charts concerning the number of baptisms over a period of ten years, four years, and for 1950 to date, were made by Elder D. L. Kyser and helped the Saints to get a clearer vision of the increase or decrease.

The election of the district officers was then held. The chairman announced that due to D. L. Kyser's ordination to the office of seventy, he would not be available as district president, and he, representing the First Presidency, submitted the name of Elder LeRoy Beckham, pastor of Butler Branch, who was elected unanimously. A rising vote in appreciation of his services as district president was extended to Brother Kyser. The other officers elected were: counselors to district president, Elder Marion Goodfellow, pastor of Nevada, and Elder Arthur Dennis, pastor of Mapleton, Kansas; director of religious education, Dale Crown; young people's director, Arthur Goettle; leader of women, Sister D. L. Kyser; secretary, Sister Melvin Ingram; treasurer Carmie Burg; music director, Sister Kenneth Rogers; auditor, Harry Allen; bishop's agent, Arlie Allen, was sustained and the historian, Sister Frank McCollam, was also sustained.

The business session was then closed, and the services continued with the ordinations of the men mentioned above. Sister Alice Milligan of Nevada sang a solo before the ordinations.

A week's series of gospel sermons was begun by D. O. Chesworth.

A Labor Day week-end gathering of the Saints in the Southern Missouri District was held at Kennett, Missouri, September 1 to 4. Approximately 200 attended the gathering, and visiting Saints from Memphis, Tennessee, points in Arkansas and St. Louis came for the Sunday and Monday services. Apostle D. O. Chesworth was in charge and was assisted by Seventy Cecil Ettinger, Seventy Donald Kyser, Elder Sylvester Coleman, and Elder G. Wayne Smith of the general church ministry, Elder J. A. Phillips, president of Southern Missouri District, and Brother Gomer Malone, district director of religious education.

Prayer services were held each morning and divisional classes were held following the prayer service and in the afternoon. Sister Marie Malone was in charge of the children's division and was assisted by a corps of workers from the district. Sister Hazel Kyser, Miami, Oklahoma, was leader of the women's classes.

"Witnessing for Christ Through the Restoration" was the theme used, and sermons were preached by Elders Chesworth, Kyser, Ettinger, Coleman, and Smith.

ODESSA, TEXAS.—On February 12 the isolated Saints in and near Odessa gathered at the home of Brother Iral Parker. Meetings will continue to be held here until a church can be secured.

After Brother and Sister Parker returned from General Conference, there was a temporary organization to help get the church school started. Later this was officially organized into a mission by Brother Ralph Wilt and under the direction of Apostle Reed M. Holmes. Brother Wilt appointed Iral Parker as pastor. Elected officers are Otis Baker, church school director; and Sister Pauline Parker, women's leader.

Present membership is twenty-four, but attendance has been averaging about forty. The ways and means committee of both the church and the women's department are working toward the building fund.

Guest speakers have been Douglas Church and Carl Lenard of Station, Texas; Ralph Wilt of Claude, Texas; and W. F. Page of Andrews, Texas.

Four babies have been blessed. Jean Griffis and Mr. and Mrs. Otis Baker have been baptized.

Nine members attended the Central Western Oklahoma reunion. Otis Baker was ordained to the office of priest at the reunion.

Saints who are interested in attending this mission should contact Iral Parker, 1335 South Alleghany, Odessa, Texas.—Reported by EDNA BAKER.

HOUSTON, TEXAS.—The annual business meeting was held August 30, and the following officers were elected: Roy Vandel, branch president; Elsie Hedgwood, secretary; Burdette Root, treasurer; Fred Banta, church school director; Clarence Wright, adult supervisor; Vera Barksdale, young people's leader; Dorothy Lilleux, children's supervisor; J. V. Suggs, junior church pastor; Crete Arnold, women's leader; Nell Funk, book steward; Jessie Banta, music director; Lucile Crooker, publicity agent; Jimmie Grubbs, librarian; Margarite Crooker, church school secretary; Lynn Mitchell, branch solicitor.

Brother Arthur L. Funk was ordained to the office of elder at the August Communion service.

Twenty-three Houston young people attended the youth retreat at Bandera over the Labor Day week end. The retreat was climaxed by the baptism of Jautassa Bishop.

Apostle Farrow visited the branch on the week end of June 11.

A dinner is given each Friday evening at the home of Brother and Sister Charles Tischer with the building fund as the main objective.

Brother Alfred Yale, missionary for the Central Texas District, and his wife and three daughters are now living in Houston.

Church school, worship, and preaching services are being held in the home of Brother and Sister Roy Vandel.

Brother John G. Wight, missionary for Southwest Texas District, was guest speaker on August 31.—Reported by LUCILE CROOKER.

KNOXVILLE, IOWA.—The election of officers was held September 18, and the new officers are: Gerald Toney, pastor; Don Slocum, church school director; Mrs. Delbert Moelher, secretary; John Caswell, treasurer; Mrs. Don Slocum, women's leader; Mrs. Jack Jones, music director; Jack Jones, young people's leader; Mrs. Ervin Ultican, Zion's League leader; Mrs. John Caswell, book steward; Mrs. Archie Dixon, flowers; and Mrs. Charlie Emry, publicity agent.

Mrs. Jack Jones, music director, is fifth grade teacher in the public schools at Knoxville. Mr. and Mrs. Ultican are newcomers to the city. Mr. Ultican is a deacon in the church and also a coach and teacher in the public schools.

The women's department held its election of officers September 21. New officers besides the leader are: Mrs. Gerald Toney, assistant leader; Mrs. Wilber Fee, secretary; Mrs. Charlie Emry, treasurer; Mrs. Ed Willets, worship; Mrs. Charlie Hull, teacher; Mrs. George Smith, membership and invitations; Mrs. Harry Willets and Mrs. Fred Box, foods and bazaar; and Miss Mildred Noftsgger, cards.—Reported by FRANCES EMRY.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.—On September 16 the church school picnic was held in Assiniboine Park. The weather was perfect, and prizes were given for games.

On September 19 Seventy Z. Z. Renfroe visited and approved a house suitable for a place in which to hold church meetings. Brother Renfroe was also in charge of the Wednesday evening prayer service.

On September 24 the annual business meeting was held instead of the usual preaching service. Brother Reginald Gosling was sustained as treasurer; Brother Jim Pike, church school superintendent; Sister Marian Pike, book steward; Brother Cyril Clark, publicity agent; Sister Irene Gosling, women's leader; and Sister N. Gloyns was appointed as secretary.

After the business session, Brother Jim Pike was called to the office of teacher.—Reported by CYRIL CLARK.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.—Election of officers was held September 12. New officers are A. F. Shotwell, pastor; Homer Harvey and Alma Dieterman, counselors; S. M. Newman, pastor at Galewood Mission; Alma Dieterman, treasurer; Grace Fitch, librarian; Leah Smith, branch clerk; Ray Smith, church school director; Fred Kuhn, co-ordinator of activities; Keith Harvey, young people's supervisor; Grissa Griffin, children's supervisor; Dorothy Willoughby, church school secretary; Gladys Hodge, auditor; James Grutter, Fred Kuhn, L. Burch, Charles Babb, finance committee; Fred Curtiss and Glenn Wright, custodians; Fred Kuhn, publicity agent; Gressa Griffin and Joy Earl, church reporters; William Webber, music director; Garnett Smith, solicitor; Frances Osborne, women's leader.

Elder and Sister James Phillips and their children have moved to Grand Rapids from Sandusky, Michigan.

Work on the building of the new church was started a few weeks ago. At the present time the basement is completed. Pledges have been taken, and many fund-raising activities are going on to raise $13,000 for the building fund by March, 1951.—Reported by GRESSA GRIFFIN.

SIOUX CITY, IOWA.—The annual business meeting was held September 6. Brother C. E. Burnett was sustained as pastor, his new assistants being Charles Smith and Frank Smith. The new choir director is Mrs. Nadene Law Howard, and new women's leader is Mrs. Ruth Kilker. Other officers were retained.

Brother Burnett was ordained high priest by F. H. Edwards on September 4.

The theme for the coming year is "I will grow spiritually this year."—Reported by VELMA FLOYD.

He Enters College

By a Mother

MY EIGHTEEN-YEAR-OLD SON went out last week in the way of a man. He finished high school last spring. I am glad he did not have to go to war—not yet anyway—because he is so young.

He was thrilled to begin a new phase of life; youth is vivacious, active, excited, happy, and hungry for new adventures. That is the way God wills it.

Being without my son in the home is not quite as I thought it would be. I anticipated being lonely, and I do miss him, but knowing he must be happy is a compensation. As he has a multitude of tasks and pleasures to fill his days, so I can spend my time in worth-while and enjoyable activities.

MY SON IS A MAN NOW, though as yet a very young man, tender in years and with only a few experiences in life. I hope he will be able to act wisely. I have tried to train him to be clean, frugal, sympathetic, and Christlike. Now that he has gone from his parental home to do his work and choose his companions, I do not worry too much. If he chooses to continue living the way I have tried to show is best, I shall be happy. If he chooses another way, I shall be sorry. But if that be his choice, he will still be my son, and I shall hope to be ready to help when he needs help.

He has reached the point in life when he will, of necessity, make his own decisions, but that does not mean he must do so without seeking advice from his parents or others qualified to help him. He has been taught to balance facts and evaluate results before making decisions. No doubt he will make some mistakes; I only hope they will not be too serious and that they can be used as steppingstones toward his ultimate goal.

"God, bless my son and be with him wherever duty may call him to go. Amen."

Example - By MRS. H. I. VELT

THE IMPORTANCE OF EXAMPLE in the lives of growing children cannot be overemphasized.

The home must provide the fertile soil of good environment. Like a seed that must live in good soil in order to produce its best flower or plant, a child must have a good home environment if his inherited qualities are to develop to their full extent. A small amount of care given lovingly each day produces better results than long periods of neglect followed by violent weeding which bruises the roots of plants and may even uproot them out of the ground. Plants that are transplanted take longer to grow and produce than those left in their original bed of seeding.

The scriptural instruction, "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it" (Proverbs 22:6), should have the same meaning and significance to us today as in the day it was spoken.

It is an accepted fact that in education the closer one gets to the cradle, the greater is his opportunity to influence more effectively the growing child. It is too late to wait until Mary is fifteen years old. The making or marring of the child is in the hands of his parents from the day of birth; or as some writers have said, it dates back even to his grandparents. We dream of what we want our children to become, but their future is now in the making. The foundations through example we are laying today in our homes will determine largely the quality of life tomorrow.

THE EXAMPLE OF PARENTS—those the child knows and loves best—is of utmost importance. They are his ideals of life. Through them he sees life at its best or worst. He wants so much to be like Daddy or she to be like her mother. And why shouldn't he or she? The first conception of God's love comes through the love of parents. One's whole life pattern is woven into his very soul from what he sees, hears, and feels. Children are very sensitive to reactions of their elders.

Patience, calmness, poise, serenity, and control of self under trying circumstances are caught and imitated as surely as temper, irritation, and impatience. In listening to our children play, many times to our amazement we not only hear the tone of our voices, but see in them our actions and attitudes as well.

A child surrounded with the virtues of truthfulness, honesty, refinement, correctness of speech, faith in God, prayer, and regular church attendance is very fortunate indeed. In the formative years he absorbs the goodness of that home until it is a natural part of him. It is only because our children associate with us that they learn the language we speak and acquire our habits. It is as natural for them to follow the family pattern as it is for them to breathe.

WE HAVE THE CONTRAST of examples in the Book of Mormon (Jacob 2:46) and Bible (Timothy 1:5; 3:15). The Nephites, because of their wickedness, "did break the hearts" of their "tender wives" and "lost the confidence" of their children, because of their "bad example before them." Timothy because of his home environment, was ready to be used of the Lord at an early age. Paul wrote, "When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; I am persuaded that in thee also." From childhood he had known the Holy Scriptures which Paul said had made him "wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

Sister Stephen Black once told a class that her little girl had been to see the play, "The Family Portrait." In the play the people were very hateful and unkind to Jesus. This disturbed the child very much, and when she arrived home, she asked her mother why people were so unkind to Jesus. Her mother told her that all people had not been taught as she had been about Jesus. She said, "Why Mother, you did not teach me; I have always known." She had unconsciously absorbed the Spirit of Christ that had been in her home since her birth. No greater compliment could have been paid to her parents than hearing her say that.

IT IS NOT EASY to set the right example always before our children. It requires self-discipline, energy, consistent effort, and hard work day by day. It takes faith in God and lots of prayer. It takes intelligent understanding of child nature, and the awareness of the needs during the ever-changing years of the child's life.

There is one thing that should give us courage and that is that God does not wait until we have learned all of life's lessons before he gives us the opportunity to teach our children. We grow in spirituality as we give. We gain as we use what we have. We develop faith in the very day we are training our children to have faith.

We have heard the saying, "He is a chip off the old block." This can be interpreted in two ways. It may mean the child has inherited traits similar to those of his parents, or that he is imitating the parents. Too often it is believed that all the traits of behavior are inherited, and the parent mistakenly believes that the child's behavior is, therefore, not controllable. As a matter of fact being "a chip off the old block" is the result of imitation as much as inheritance. To convince yourself of this, notice how many of your mannerisms are duplicated in the behavior of your child.

Children are responsive to smiles and frowns. If a mother arises for the duties of the day with a prayer in her heart, a song on her lips, and a smile on her face, her disposition will radiate through the whole household from father down to the smallest child. On the other hand if she is not feeling well and it is reflected in her disposition, making her grouchy, irritable, frowning, and unhappy, it is not long before she has ill-behaved children. They are only imitating her.

Teachers in elementary schools notice that children in their classes adopt gestures, words of expression, and even methods of walking from their teachers. It is very important that parents and teachers discipline themselves, make good models, and set good patterns for their children.

Care should be taken in the choosing of hired help and baby-sitters. Many children in their formative years are left with associates about whom the family knows very little. Their behavior is often undesirable. As a result these children develop undesirable behavior traits, which, unless corrected in the early stages, may prove to be the foundation for adult behavior. The need of wholesome example cannot be treated lightly. It is beautifully expressed in the poem—

LITTLE THINGS

By Naomi Russell

Two little ears can hear a lot,
So think before you say
The smallest thing you wouldn't want
To hear again some day.

Two little eyes can see a lot,
And everything you do,
By some small someone, someday will
Most surely be done too.

Tonight the little lad that waits
To climb upon your knee,
The man you used to be.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

Crisp fall days are here; most families are home from vacation travels, and the children are back in school. Many homemakers feel the urge to do something about the house, and most of us have more ambition for cooking. October magazines cater to these interests, and others, too.

American Home offers several "How To" articles, among them "How to Re-upholster a Chair," and "How to Make a Lamp Shade."

If you are planning any redecorating or furniture buying, you'll enjoy "Our American Way," Woman's Home Companion, which shows color illustrations of new ideas in furnishings. "Handbook of Home Decorating," Good Housekeeping, is especially good also, for it contains thirty-one pages of suggestions for all tastes.

If you are the least bit less-than-professional as a seamstress, "Sewing Know-How," Woman's Home Companion, and "Finishing Touches in Making Dresses," Good Housekeeping, will give you some sewing tricks that will help you to turn out a speedier, better job, and make it easier to do.

"The Obliging Casserole," Woman's Home Companion, gives several recipes for new and different casserole dishes. Other delicious-sounding recipes for spaghetti and desserts occupy the following pages. "Quick Toppers for One-Dish Meals," Family Circle, contains some variations for old favorites.

"The Golden Coin," Good Housekeeping, deals with the blessedness of giving. The golden coin which makes you richer than you think you are is appreciation.

All parents should read "Cad's Paradise," Good Housekeeping, which is a pretty forthright article about young people and the way they make love.

Just for fun—are you a little bit "fed-up" with experts who tell you what is wrong with you? If so you will feel a certain kinship with the author of "Get in There and Relax," Women's Day.

If, however, you feel a truly righteous indignation, an excellent little article is "The Art of Getting Angry," Woman's Day.

"I Think You Are Wonderful," Woman's Day, is a nice reminder that "children, as well as men and women, dogs and cats, like to be praised."

One of the most important recent articles on any subject is "Are We Letting Television Go To—?" McCall's. Its implications are much greater than the title suggests and concerns every one of us.

"Leave It to the Kids," McCall's, tells the story of the growth of a revolutionary kind of playground that every community should have.

Dr. Arthur H. Compton is the author of the thought-provoking article, "God and the Atom," American Magazine.

If you missed out on college, and don't know how to start self-education, "Get a College Education at Home," Parents' Magazine, will help you.

"Be Glad to Let Them Grow Up," Parents' Magazine, is for parents of adolescents or near-adolescents. Wise parents know when to keep hands off.

"How to Encourage Self-reliance," Parents' Magazine, suggests that even very small children should be allowed to help with household tasks. They need to feel useful and appreciated.

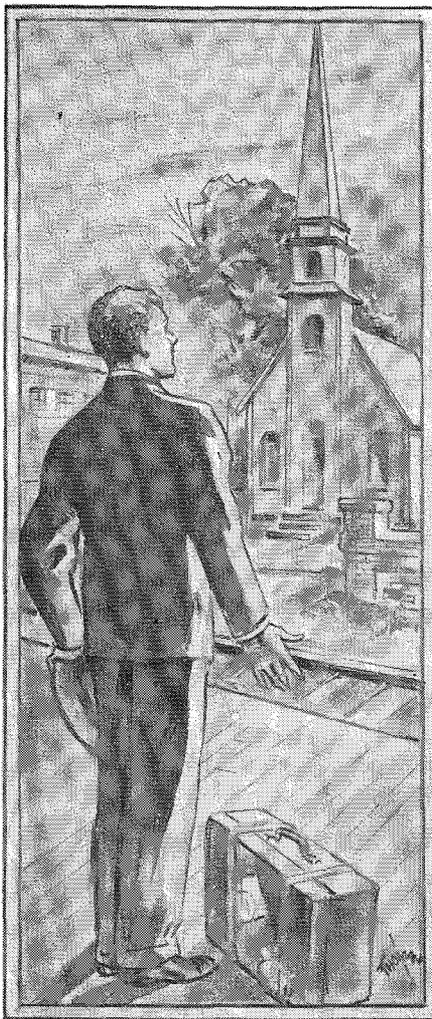

MOTHER LOVE

The love of a mother is never exhausted. It never changes, it never tires. It endures through all; in good repute, in bad repute, in the face of the world's condemnation, a mother's love still lives on.

"Welcome Home, Son"

By CHARLES KORNMAN

THIS IS A TRUE STORY. It is a story of a mixed-up young man who wanted to know. He listened to ministers—to a lot of them (just like another young man of another century)—and most of the things they told him were good, but none seemed to be able to answer the questions he had in his heart. The questions weren't about doctrine—those were to come later.

What he wanted to know had to do with a strange feeling that somewhere just beyond his grasp was something that was being hinted at, even promised, but never fully realized. He wanted to feel the peace "that passeth understanding." He wanted to know and not just hear someone talk about it. He was alone and lonely—even when he was with his girl friend. He wasn't satisfied even though he was vice-president of the young people's group of the church he was attending. He wanted to feel secure—he wanted to know whether THIS was what God wanted him to do. And he didn't feel that way. Insecure, restless, undecided about life—this young man came to reunion at Nauvoo. He came expecting to find just another convention—another round of activities to keep a person busy. He came expecting another series of classes on the Bible, afternoons of volleyball, and evenings with other young people. He came seeking—but not especially expecting—to find the real thing he was looking for.

Charlie came in that eternal quest for the Spirit of the Almighty. He came expecting the "usual" sort of thing, but he found the Spirit of God.

This feeling of insecurity and loneliness that Charlie felt—and countless thousands like him—has its genesis in the great spiritual truth that we are made for fellowship with the God of heaven. And we are restless and dissatisfied until we find that companionship with him. He has made us for himself, and as we wander along, walking beneath our possibilities, sensing something of the greatness of creation, it is no wonder that we feel lost and alone until we realize there is a power in the universe that we can utilize to transform us into a son of God.

And so it was with this kind of a search that the reunion began for Charlie. He saw something in his friends. He felt something in their very presence, and before the reunion was over, he gave his decision.

CHARLIE'S BACKGROUND is that old familiar story of a branch that couldn't get along with itself. His concept of the Restoration was one of dissension and argument, and it didn't taste right. God is a God of peace—the spirit of contention does not come from him. Yet these people claimed to be followers of Jesus Christ. Something was wrong somewhere. And so Charlie began going to another church. He became interested in a girl in that church, took an active part in the young people's activities, and was elected vice-president. Finally he was urged to unite with them and become a member, but his folks were good Latter Day Saints. They believed that the Spirit of the Restoration would do for their son what it had done for them, and so they asked Charlie to wait for a while. He was an obedient son and took their counsel.

Then he came to reunion. The young people met for their classes and talked about things that mattered. They talked about the "little" stewardships that are theirs—including the stewardship of dating. Apparently nothing of real vital importance was discussed, and yet the very stuff out of which life is made was the subject for discussion. As the reunion progressed, the young people began to feel something—to sense that this business of God and man working together had some meaning for them. They came to an early morning prayer service, and the Spirit of God was there to greet them. Charlie felt it. He was spoken to under the inspiration of the Almighty and told something of the great work ahead of him if he is obedient to the counsels of God.

On Thursday he gave his decision to join the church of Jesus Christ. He went home from reunion full of the wonderful things he had felt and came back a week later to be baptized at the place where he had found God.

THAT SUNDAY was a peaceful day. The Spirit of God pervaded the atmosphere, making it a privilege to breathe and even more of a privilege to recognize that this thing had divine approval. The baptismal serv-

God Is Concerned - By GERALD GABRIEL

For God so loved the world, that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish; but have everlasting life.—John 3: 16.

A FEW YEARS AGO a mother visited her son before he went to the gallows. She went crushed with grief as any mother would be. Each time in the preceding years when he had made headlines for some crime he committed, she was heartbroken. She was concerned when he was just a lad, for it was then his father died, and upon her shoulders rested the responsibility of earning their daily bread and rearing her boy to become a good citizen and a child of God. Now she would gladly give her life if her son could have another chance. When Christ came into the world to give his life to redeem man, it was not a last-minute attempt, neither were the three years of ministry here on the earth an adequate portrayal of the true love and concern of a Heavenly Father. He has been continuously concerned because of sinful man. Jesus was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Revelation 13: 8). He made his presence and teachings known even to the first man which would bring about everlasting life. He was concerned in the time of Adam, and when mankind drifted from these teachings, it became necessary for him again to make an appearance and re-establish the work. And so he did in the time of Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Joseph Smith, and many others.

ice and the confirmation service all gave evidence of the stamp of Divinity. But perhaps the final touch of the Master Artist in this poignant scene from the kaleidoscopic canvas of Charlie's life was when his father greeted him following the confirmation service with, "Welcome home, Son."

God in heaven must have smiled at that moment and echoed those words: "Welcome home . . . my son."

Still Concerned

Now when our world is threatened with cancerous outbreaks, when our communities are torn with disintegrating influences, when our family circles become mere segments, when our individual lives become a hodgepodge of inconsistencies, God is concerned. He is concerned about the salvation of individuals, groups, and nations—concerned enough that he gave his Only Begotten. Too often we think of this giving in terms of martyrdom alone. He not only gave his physical life on the cross, but he gave his life in living. He gave it in living from the very beginning of time and is giving still today.

We are reminded of others who have given their lives as martyrs also. Stephen's choice of physical death was testimony of the real thing for which he lived. Abinadi chose to die to remain true to his testimony—that Christ would come and that there is a hope in the Resurrection. Joseph Smith's death is a living testimony of the thing for which he gave his life in living and the willingness in which he gave it in physical death. Each of these with many others gave their lives, knowing that God was and is concerned. We, likewise, need to be concerned enough to give our lives in living—and if need be, in death.

The Full Price

Ananias and Sapphira also gave their lives, however, they gave short of their all; withholding for a rainy day. They gave in part, hoping for a full return. They made several mistakes: (1) They sold a possession (not possessions) which was probably a surplus; this was as it should have been according to law, but they gave only a part for the furtherance of the work of the church. (2) They lied to God and mankind. We would say today that they were pharisaical, wishing to appear as devoted church members but unwilling to pay the full price. However, the offering they made must have been a considerable amount. (3) Probably they were unwilling to take the remaining possessions and become good stewards over them. Had they done so, they would have had their "just needs and wants" plus tithes, offerings, and surplus which in turn would have furthered the work of the church in the years ahead. (4) Probably they wanted a reputation of giving liberally so in time they could be on the receiving end—to be cared for by the church without going to the trouble of becoming good stewards over that which they possessed.

In the junior church morning service the children became intensely interested when the teacher asked what they would do if she gave each of them three dollars. One little girl said the first thing she would do would be to pay her tithing which would be thirty cents. That would, of course, leave two dollars and seventy cents. Most of the children had visions of the candy, ice cream, pop, and shows that the remainder of the money would buy. They were then asked if it might not be better to invest that money in some stewardship project. One might take the money to purchase a small pig, another a few chicks, another a rabbit or some garden seeds. Then after six months of good management and with God's help the three dollars might grow to thirty dollars—ten times the original amount. In the meantime there may be some expense for feed and other necessary items—perhaps ten dollars for that—which would leave twenty dollars. One of the children then said he would owe two dollars for tithes, leaving eighteen dollars, which would be an increase of sixfold—even better than the men in the parable of the talents. Now such a project with so great a return in many cases would be only wishful thinking. It is, however, challenging to know that these children are concerned. At the close of the class, they expressed a desire to give the first fruits to God and to shoulder their responsibility as stewards over what God had made them possessors.

(1061) 21

www.LatterDayTruth.org

All for the Building of the Kingdom

The thirty cents these children wanted to give would be consecrated to the building of the kingdom. Then when they accepted the responsibility of stewardship, the two dollars and seventy cents also became consecrated, whether it be a pig, chickens, rabbit, small garden, or homemade garment.

All our time must become consecrated to this cause—every twenty-four hours, every 1,440 minutes of each day must be devoted toward this great cause of kingdom-building. The time we spend at rest must be for the renewing of our bodies for greater participation. The forty or seventy-two hour work week, or whatever it might be, must be consecrated too. If that work is kingdom-promoting or has a place in the kingdom, it becomes more than the mere giving of time and talents in return for a salary to purchase things desired. If that work does not lend itself toward kingdom-promotion, then it is time to begin looking for something that will, and to the extent that it can be fully consecrated. The same would be true of education, recreation, and worship. It should become a criteria for the movies we attend, the social life we live, where and how we spend our vacations, the hobbies we enjoy. It should find itself interwoven into all of life. This would be true consecration—paying the price as Christ paid, and wants us to pay. It would be the price that Paul pleads for in his Roman letter, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." That reasonable service is the consecration of our all.

Good for Evil

It is, of course, the most easy and understandable impulse to return blow for blow, and lie for lie. But no man can strike his neighbor without suffering from the blow himself, in some measure. The one who returns evil for evil suffers from the evil he returns as much as the one for whom the evil was intended. There is but one safe procedure, if we really care for our own soul, in any case, and that is to accord better treatment to the world than we receive from the world.

All of the Wheat Flour

Since the publication of the Word of Wisdom articles in recent weeks, we have had a few inquiries from persons desiring to know where such wheat flour could be obtained. One of our readers has suggested that those interested might write to Nu-Meal Mills of Apple Creek, Ohio, for a price list. The owner represents his as "organically grown products." The Herald does not endorse commercial products but gives this for the convenience of readers.

 THE HELPER

This story is brought to us from the Enoch Hill congregation by Herman Fultz. The pastor, Sanford Downs, is justly proud of his son Howard who has just received his Master's Degree. Howard preached his first sermon at the church, and Sanford introduced him. Herman says it was an excellent sermon, and those who know Howard will believe it was.

At the end of the service, Sanford said, "Well, I'll have to admit I helped him," and left a long pause. Then he finished, "I mowed the lawn while he studied!"

 SHOP TALK

Lillie has just accepted a name for her typewriter—"Alpha Betty." . . . Typewriters sometimes coin new words, and this one came in from a contributor: "Troubulations." Like it? Use it the next time you want to toss a dash of color into your vocabulary. . . . We have just figured' out a meaning for the term "Free Verse." It is the kind nobody wants to pay money for. And please don't criticize that "preposition-at-the-end-of-a-sentence." Webster and others say it's all right. . . . Now we are scanning the literary market for a small, sharp ax to split infinitives with! But we can never split an infinitive without the guilty feeling of a small boy coming into the house without wiping the mud off his shoes! . . . Perhaps this is the time and the mood for reading Browning's "A Grammarian's Funeral."

 FATHERS AND CHILDREN

A few days ago a father was playing with his children early in the morning. He was pushing them in a swing, and they were having a very happy time. It made a lovely family picture.

A passing friend called, "That looks wonderful!" But he grumped, "It would be okay if I had time for it."

This man was missing something. He regarded this as an unpleasant duty. He was missing all the splendid fun he might have been enjoying. He was robbing himself of the pleasure that belonged to him. Nothing he had to do that day was more important than those few minutes spent with his children. Nothing else could have such lasting value.

There are parents who do not seem to love their children. They provide food and shelter a-plenty. But they spank and scold too much, and are always cuffing the little ones around. They lack the graciousness of love and kindness. They live and govern too harshly.

That attitude creeps into other relationships. Sometimes one meets a man who does not love his wife enough. He brings home the money, but he does not bring home love and kindness. He does not speak gently. He expects too much work and service. He is often rough and critical.

One thinks how much these people are missing, and how much they could enrich their lives and the lives of their families, if they would add love and kindness to all the rest that they do.

The last paragraph of the Old Testament contains these significant words: "And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to the fathers." John said, "Little children, love one another." There is no better advice.

Testimony of President Joseph Smith

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1910

In commemoration of the 118th anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith III, the "Herald" is publishing this testimony. It speaks with firm conviction which was typical of Brother Joseph.

I AM THANKFUL for this opportunity to meet with you and partake of the solemn ordinance of the Sacrament on my birthday. I may never again be permitted to do so, and I do not remember when this has occurred before.

I desire to manifest by my presence and by my partaking of the Sacrament with you that I have nothing to prevent me from offering a gift at the Altar. I have no remembrance that I have wronged anyone. I have no remembrance that others justly have cause for complaint against me. If they have, they have failed to make manifest to me in order that there might be a reconciliation.

I need not say that I love the gospel. I believe that it is the power of God unto salvation, and if my belief is sufficiently strongly grounded, I feel that I have no cause to fear. What my merit may be at the close of my life and when the judgment takes place, I do not know. It is not for me to say; it will be for the Judge that sitteth upon the throne and before whom I must answer, to determine whether I am to receive the reward of merit or whether I am to suffer the loss of demerit, having come short of doing what I should have done in my day and in my calling.

Now, praise God, I have eaten with you the bread, I have drunk with you of the wine, emblems of Him whose service we thus record. It witnesses to you that I have no charges to prefer against any of you, either in public or in private. I have no word of faultfinding, I have no right to speak ill of you, or to call your defects up in private conversation with any, by which it might be possible to hurt you. I have publicly partaken of the emblems of peace with you. None of us have a right to carry out from this assembly any cause of faultfinding, any cause of ill will or any reason to bring the church or the courts of the church against a brother or a sister, or reiterate any tale of evil that we may have found or heard, of which we have not made a practical complaint before the proper officer.

Too many of us forget that in this sacred ordinance we put to our hands and witness before God that we not only remember him whose flesh suffered upon Calvary's Cross for us, and whose blood was shed for us, but that we should also remember those with whom we are associated, and blessing them by our life, by our precept and our example as we were striving to walk uprightly, fully answering unto the understanding that we have, that in thus partaking of the emblems before each other and before God and the angels, we have partaken of that that increaseth and sustaineth our spiritual life, and retaining thereby a remission of our sins from Sacrament time unto Sacrament time. I believe that to partake of this Sacrament service is for the purpose of giving us spiritual food, partaken in the

FIRST PRESIDENCY

President Israel A. Smith and Patriarch Frederick A. Smith attended the home-coming held at DeKalb, Illinois, on the week end of October 21, 22. Both participated in the services.

APOSTLE MAURICE L. DRAPER

The Cincinnati, Ohio, Branch was reorganized on October 22 at a large gathering held in the Sinton Hotel. Apostle Maurice L. Draper and District President Floyd T. Rockwell were in charge of the meetings assisted by local elders. Many visiting Saints from other branches attended the services. Everett L. Smith was made the pastor of the branch. Other offices were also filled.

APOSTLE D. O. CHESWORTH

A series of six evening meetings was held at Rich Hill, Missouri, during the first of October by Apostle D. O. Chesworth. The average attendance was 168, many of whom were nonmembers. Four decisions for baptism were given at these meetings.

Brother Chesworth also reports that Elder Sylvester Coleman has recently baptized thirty-six people in the Southeastern Illinois District. During a two-weeks series of services in Springerton, Illinois, twenty people were baptized. At a series of services at Brush Creek, Missouri, sixteen were baptized. Baptisms to date in the district total eighty-six. During the year of 1949 there were only twelve baptisms.

PRIESTHOOD IN ZION

Elder Charles V. Graham, president of the Independence Stake, reports that the attendance at the priesthood schools is constantly increasing. When the schools opened on October 2, there were 140 members of the Melchisedec and 220 of the Aaronic priesthood enrolled. Meetings are held every Monday evening at the Stone Church and in the Kansas Street Church.

OUTSTANDING

The "Des Moines Register" of September 10 carried an article and photograph of O. Kelley Anderson, formerly of Lamoni, Iowa, and now a prominent broker in Boston. He is the son of Oscar Anderson, and the grandson of Apostle William H. Kelley.

LECTURE ON SOUTH PACIFIC

Mark Siegfried spoke at the October meeting of the Men's Club held in the Laurel Club dining room of the Auditorium. He used colored slides he had taken on his recent trip to the South Pacific to illustrate his lecture.

Five Hawaiian girls who are student nurses at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital participated in the program.

"Go Away, Jesus!"

"And, behold, the whole city came out to meet Jesus; and when they saw him, they besought him that he would depart out of their coasts."

—Matthew 8: 34.

We find it difficult to believe that even the Gergesenes would come in a body to ask Jesus to go away. We may think, perhaps this is one of the errors that has crept into the King James version. Perhaps a modern translator would clear it up. There must be a mistake.

But no, the moderns have it the same way. Goodspeed says, "They begged him to go away from their district." Moffatt says, "They begged him to move."

The people of Gergesa didn't want Jesus. They were afraid of him. They didn't know what would happen next.

* * * * *

It seems incredible now that anybody would reject Jesus. He healed the sick. He comforted the discouraged. He taught people to love each other. He helped those who were overburdened. He even restored to life some who had died. But to the people of Gergesa, on the east shore of the Sea of Galilee, where he had caused the devils to enter into the herd of swine and destroy them, Jesus was not welcome. The people respected his power, but they did not like what he did with it. Although they knew he did some good, they didn't want him around. He had destroyed the source of so much ham and bacon, spareribs and sausage, that they didn't think they could afford to have him at work in their community.

* * * * *

Who were those people who wanted Jesus to go away? The commentaries say that they were mostly Gentiles. They would have no aversion to the eating of pork, which explains the presence of the large herd of pigs in the vicinity. To the Jews, the pig and his meat were unclean. The act of Jesus came into conflict with local interests. The destruction of the pigs was a loss. Therefore the people came out in a body to say, "Go away, Jesus."

* * * * *

There are many businesses in the world that say, "Go away, Jesus!" Some are: the liquor and tobacco businesses, the narcotics traffic, gambling and vice, some patent medicine concerns, false advertising, fraud, deception, dishonesty, and exploitation of all kinds. One could include a certain kind of politics, and some of the traffic in arms. If the list were specific, the entries would run into the thousands.

I once lived in a large city where I saw something in a shop window and went in. Inside was a sickly looking child, barely of school age, but with a face prematurely old, carefully paying to the proprietor a number of pennies for a few capsules that were taken from under the counter. I thought something was wrong, and afterward learned that this was a kind of narcotics traffic in which some shopkeepers made victims of school children. Certainly, that was abominable. Such a man would say, "Go away, Jesus!"

* * * * *

In considering standards of personal conduct, morality, and ethics, there are many people in the world who, if approached on the subject of their sins, would say, "Go away, Jesus!" They could not reconcile their conduct with Christian standards. They are not willing to make a change in their way of life. They do not recognize the harm they do to others. They do not face their own sins. When the Master comes toward them they see that in his presence their way of life is in danger and under condemnation. And so they say, "Go away, Jesus!"

* * * * *

Perhaps there is some part of your life in which you are saying, "Go away, Jesus!" At first you will reject the idea. But have you examined yourself honestly? Have you admitted your mistakes? Have you considered those areas in your experience where the ways of the world still prevail—the unredeemed parts of your character and personality?

It may be the business you follow. It may be the way you conduct your business. It may be the way you treat your employees, or the way you talk and act in public. It may be the way you treat your wife and children. It may be the way you fail to get along with the people at church. Your manner of life may be such as to say, "Go away, Jesus!"

Even in the lives of good people—those who appear to be pious and kind—there are things that one dare not bring before Jesus. There are dark stains of sin that would look terrible in the light of his love. As long as we cling to these things we say, "Go away, Jesus!"

We hurt each other. Some of us hate each other. We say things that are mean and petty. The dark hand of hell has a firm hold upon some corner of the heart. It is in an area like this that we say, "Go away, Jesus!"

For every one of us repentance is possible. The spirit of evil can be cast out of us, so that we shall say, "Come, Lord Jesus!"

Organization of Benton Harbor, Michigan, Branch

The Northern Indiana District Conference on October 15 approved the recommendation of the district president that the mission at Benton Harbor, Michigan, be organized into a branch. This has the concurrence of the apostle in charge of the field, and the necessary steps will be taken for completion of the organization at an early date.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By W. Wallace Smith.

Book of Mormon Institute

This will serve as an official announcement of the proposed Book of Mormon Institute to be held January 7 to 14, 1951, inclusive, in Independence, Missouri. The majority of the meetings will be held in the Stone Church, and attendance will be limited only by the seating capacity of the church.

It is not our intention that this should be considered a church-wide call for attendance at a Book of Mormon Institute, but we are not going to refuse anyone admission who cares to come from whatever area in which he may live.

It is not intended that we shall attempt to make arrangements to house or feed those who come from a distance, as there will be no registration fees, no attendance records kept.

Later announcement will be made of detailed programming and subjects to be covered, but there will be many distinguished speakers who are well-versed in Book of Mormon facts and information, both from its internal and external evidences of the authenticity of the book, and considerable attention will be given to the archaeological significance of the evidence supporting the historical background of the writings in the Book of Mormon.

Apostle Hield will be in charge of the detailed arrangement and carrying out of the program. Any additional information which may be desired can be gained from writing direct to the office of the First Presidency.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
By W. Wallace Smith.

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent, London District

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Elder William George Leney, 4 Louise Street, Stratford, Ontario, as bishop's agent of the London District. In this office he will labor under the general supervision of Bishop Joseph E. Baldwin.

Solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of October and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother Leney at the above address.

We are pleased to have Brother Leney accept this responsible office. We have appreciated the support given Brother Leney in his excellent services as solicitor of the Stratford Branch and take this opportunity of commending him to the Saints for their support as he enters into a wider field of responsibility in the London District.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC,

Death of N. T. Chapman

We regret to learn of the sudden death of High Priest Nephi T. Chapman of Santa Barbara, California, on August 3. Brother Chapman served in the Melchisedec priesthood for forty-eight years. In 1926 he was ordained to the office of high priest. He was under General Church appointment as a missionary to Oregon and Southern California from 1916 to 1920, though he gave much more time to missionary endeavor while traveling at his own expense. At the time of his death he was pastor of the Santa Barbara, California, Branch. We hope to get a more extended statement soon for publication.

This excerpt is from a letter from Brother A. W. Powell, president of the Washington, D. C., Branch:

We are now happy to report that a contract has been entered into for the purchase of a church site located in the 3500 block on Massachusetts Avenue, Northwest, Washington, D. C. This location is just one block west of the spacious grounds of the United States Naval Observatory. The large British Embassy is located in the first block east of the Observatory grounds. Massachusetts Avenue is referred to locally as "Embassy Row."

Special factors and unique opportunities which we have considered wherein each might share as an ambassador of the Restoration and good will in the world's busiest capital, will be, in addition to providing a suitable place of worship for the immediate congregation:

(1) Leading representatives from every nation in the world are a part of our immediate community.

(2) Many visitors from home and abroad will have an opportunity to see and visit these new quarters.

(3) Because of the nature of employment in such a large government center, many families from over the nation will have an opportunity to worship and serve in this location.

Thus we envisage widespread interest, and hope and trust that the many who will come under the influence of this endeavor will assist in the work toward its completion and find a true satisfaction in the work of the Master of all mankind.

This item received from Alma C. Andrews, Berkeley, California, indicates the growth of the work in that place:

On September 24, a Rally and Decision Day was observed. I spoke in San Leandro and Brother Lynn spoke in Berkeley, with a baptismal service being held in the afternoon for Berkeley, San Leandro, Vallejo, and Richmond. There were four baptisms from Berkeley, three from San Leandro, and one each from Richmond and Vallejo. On another day two were baptized from First San Francisco and one from Golden Gate as a result of the missionary effort of Elder Herbert Lynn.

Seventy George Njeim will begin his services in First San Francisco on November 12, and will continue through December 17.

Zion and the Birthright Heritage

By W. E. WAKEMAN

THE DOMINANT EMPHASIS of The Restoration has always been Zion. The kingdom of God in our day has been the hope and dream of our grandfathers and our fathers as well as of the present church membership. However, while our goal eludes us, we are "saved by hope." It keeps us striving for that perfect social order, that "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

This article deals with some of the reasons why the early Saints failed, and why all those who have followed them have had their hopes deferred. The Fishing River revelation (section 102) makes it clear that disobedience and disunity were the twin evils of offense. In December, 1833, the Lord (section 98:10) pointed out that the failure to build the kingdom was not the lack of money nor of material stores, neither was it due to insufficient man power. Many of the same shortcomings exist today as hindered the coming of the kingdom in the days of the Martyr. In a general way these might be classified as:

1. The tendency to blame others, and
2. Putting all our hopes in external forces.

It is so easy to see where the branch officers and others on up through the administrative line to Bishopric and Presidency have miserably failed until we, by the grace of God, are able by spiritual understanding to stand where their feet are planted, and to see with their experienced eyes. This is not to say that their work has been done without mistakes, but that we will become less critical and less inclined to create disunity.

Even more subtle but just as harmful is the tendency in which many indulge to build up their hopes through wishful thinking rather than disciplining themselves according to "the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom." This expectancy from external sources stems from certain misunderstood scriptural prophecies. Prominent among these are:

1. The endowment of spiritual power to come near the end,
2. The belief that the Indians will come with wealth and spiritual power, and that
3. The people from the north country shall march down prepared to dwell in Zion.

It is not our purpose to discuss the place nor value of these three aspects of kingdom-building at this time. We do feel there is need to point out that only harm can come to the church by expecting others to do those things the Lord requires of each one of us. The hopes of "Zion in our day" are sure to be deferred until each church member seriously asks, "What can I do now to advance the cause of Zion?" Therefore we shall try to show that the reality and fortunes of the kingdom are in the hands of those who have been called out from the many nations of the earth and are in fact latter-day Israel.

IN THE "Pilgrim's Vision," Oliver Wendell Holmes seemed to have some prophetic vision.

*O trembling faith, though dark the morn, a heavenly touch is thine
While feebler races melt away and solar orbs decline
Still shall the fiery pillars ray along thy pathway shine
To light the chosen tribe which sought this western Palestine.*

The "pathway" still is lighted to the people of the chosen tribe. "Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified" (Isaiah 49:3), pledged the Lord through his prophet Isaiah. The "chosen tribe" still persists; the promises of Israel's God are unchangeable and immutable.

The people of Israel were chosen for service to all humanity. God still calls Israel to convey the blessings of peace, happiness, and true progress to all mankind. While performing that service, Israel is guaranteed the reward which every faithful servant should receive—the benevolence and protection of the Master. The Lord says, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper . . . this is the heritage of the servants of the Lord and their righteousness is of me."—Isaiah 54:17.

God chose a family to do "a marvelous work and a wonder" in the latter days or near the time of the end of the world. This family was to descend from Abraham and Sarah. God covenanted with it in his unchangeable way: "I will make of thee a great nation . . . and in thee shall the families of the earth be blessed."—Genesis 12:2, Inspired Version. The father and mother were to be of a posterity to whom a saving work for all humanity of the latter-day generations would be entrusted. Peter referred to this when he wrote of this racial heritage: "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood . . . a peculiar people: that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light.”—I Peter 2: 9.

LET US TRACE this racial priestly heritage. Isaiah was the only son of Abraham and Sarah. To him was transferred the promises of this priesthood which under God’s authority would continue to confer spiritual blessings upon mankind. Latter-day revelation informs the reader that “Abraham received the priesthood from Melchisedec: who received it through the lineage of his fathers, even till Noah.”—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2. The Lord renewed this covenant to Isaac, saying: “I will perform the oath which I swore unto Abraham thy father . . . in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.”—Genesis 26: 3, 4.

This birthright heritage, in due time, was given to Isaac’s son, Jacob. One memorable night he was given a new name. An angel said to him: “Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed.”—Genesis 32:28. Later God appeared to him again, saying, “Israel shall be thy name, and . . . a company of nations shall be of thee.”—Genesis 35: 10, 11, Inspired Version. He received the same blessing and priesthood as his father and grandfather.

Jacob was the father of twelve sons. The sacred records tell us that Israel conferred the birthright on his beloved son Joseph. Judah was accorded the scepter or kingly line, and Joseph was given the priesthood of his fathers. “Judah prevailed above his brethren,” and of him came the chief ruler; but the birthright was Joseph’s. Reuben was Israel’s firstborn son, yet the record states: “His birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph the son of Israel.”—I Chronicles 5:1, 2. Though Judah was given a glorious blessing, the priestly birthright was given to Joseph which was to be the dominating force in blessing the nations. This spiritual birthright was to hold the “Keys of the kingdom of heaven” (Matthew 16: 19). In addressing his son Joseph, Jacob prophesies that his brethren “shall bow down unto thee from generation to generation unto the fruit of thy loins forever.”—Genesis 48: 10, Inspired Version.

In tracing the descent of this birthright, we come to the scene where Joseph presented his two sons, Manasseh and Ephraim, to their grandfather Jacob for his blessing. In conferring this blessing Jacob placed his name upon his two grandsons and gave the birthright to Ephraim the younger. (Read Genesis 48: 13-26, Inspired Version.) Thus he set Ephraim before Manasseh. This act had divine approval. Under divine impulsion nine hundred years later, the prophet Jeremiah stated that God approved Jacob’s blessing. “For I [God] am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first born.”—Jeremiah 31: 9. This and other similar assurances indicate the Lord showed a preference for Ephraim.

We know that the twelve tribes were scattered because of sin throughout the earth. After a long period of captivity and punishment, they were to be gathered again in the latter days. The responsibility of this latter-day regathering of Israel would be upon the shoulders of Ephraim, the birthright people. Moses, the man of God, blessed all the tribes of Israel before his death. He spoke at length regarding the house of Joseph and its latter-day mission.

“His horns are like the horns of unicorns [wild horses or bulls]; with them he [the Lord] shall push the people together to the ends of the earth; and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh.”—Deuteronomy 33: 17.

The prophet Zechariah states: “They of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man.”—Zechariah 10: 7. Ezekiel promised that in the latter days Israel would be restored or gathered again. He clearly prophesied that the sacred records or covenants would be combined in one hand—that of Ephraim and his descendants (See Ezekiel 37: 16-27). The glory of the house of Joseph (Ephraim and Manasseh) would reside largely in the posterity of Joseph’s son, Ephraim.

THE BOOK OF MORMON describes clearly the destiny and heritage of Ephraim the birthright people. They are referred to as the house of Israel. Nephi the son of Lehi was shown many visions, some of which are related to the present inhabitants of North America. In one vision Nephi saw many waters (the Atlantic Ocean) which divided the Gentiles from the posterity of his brethren. He saw the Spirit of God work upon multitudes of these Gentiles who went forth out of captivity, crossed the many waters, and stood upon the land of promise. In explanation of this event, Nephi perhaps saw the migration of people from Europe cross the Atlantic Ocean and colonize North America. This is the partial fulfillment of Isaiah’s prophecy (Isaiah 27: 6) “that Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit.” Also the prophecy where it says: “thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will . . . cause to inherit the desolate heritages.”—Isaiah 49: 3 and 8. In a vision Nephi saw part of this promise to Israel fulfilled many generations later (Book of Mormon, page 34, paragraphs 145 to 155).

Jesus Christ the redeemer of Israel, after his crucifixion and resurrection first visited the descendants of Nephi upon this hemisphere. These people were the children of the covenant, a part or branch of the house of Israel. (Book of Mormon, page 660, verse 64.) Jesus explained to the Nephites that after their blessing the covenant the Father made with Abraham would be fulfilled which was, “in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.” (See verse 65). He referred to the latter-day Restoration work to come to pass many generations after the Nephite Zion.

This later blessing was to be accomplished by the outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon the Gentiles among whom would be the seed of Ephraim. At this time Christ would gather his people from their long dispersion to the four corners of the earth into one fold. The sign of the gathering would be that the Gentiles would be given the things Jesus was prophesying to the Nephites. At that time he promised to establish among them "my Zion" (Book of Mormon 662: 86).

THE SAVIOR explained that it would be "wisdom in the Father that they [the Gentiles] should be established in this land" (Book of Mormon 662: 89). The wisdom of this establishment of the Gentiles upon the North American continent was later explained by Jesus. He said to the Nephites, "My people, who are a remnant of Jacob [the twelve tribes] shall be among the Gentiles."—Book of Mormon 663: 99. This statement is very important for a correct understanding of the latter-day work. The Lord told the prophet Amos, "I will sift the house of Israel among all nations."—Amos 9: 9.

They (the children of Israel) would be "set up as a free people by the power of the Father that these things [true points of my doctrine] might come forth from them [the House of Israel] unto a remnant of your seed."—Book of Mormon 662: 90. By saying "your seed," Jesus meant the descendants of the Nephites, the modern-day Indians or Lamanites.

The children of Israel sifted among the Gentiles would come to a knowledge of their identity and responsibility, and if they would "repent and hearken unto my words and harden not their hearts, I will establish my church among them."—Ibid. 664: 1. Then he promised that they (the Gentiles) shall assist his people to build a city "which shall be called the New Jerusalem" (664: 2, 3). The correct interpretation of this latter-day work must revert to Deuteronomy 33 in which Moses promised the gathering of Jacob would be brought to pass by the ten

Experiences of a Missionary

Part XI

By L. G. HOLLOWAY

Historical Tour

THE OFFICIALS of Lamoni Stake arranged for a tour of some of the points of interest in Far West Stake for the young people of Lamoni. Leaving town early on the morning of June 15, 1947, nine cars wended their way toward Independence. The caravan was well-organized with Stake President Robert Farnham and Bishop Lewis Landsberg in charge. I accompanied them.

Fishing River

Our first stop was on Fishing River about six miles from where the Saints made their camp in 1834. Highway 69 crosses the river at that place. Since the site of the camp is off the main highway, those in charge thought it unwise to attempt visiting the exact place where the Saints were located. However it may be of interest to give some history of what took place at Fishing River.

While the early Saints were in camp, cholera broke out among them and many died. It was under these trying conditions that the Lord gave them what is known as the Fishing River thousand of Ephraim and the one thousand of Manasseh.

The Lamanites (of tribe of Manasseh, Book of Mormon 335: 3), if they will repent will be privileged to assist Ephraim of the birthright to build up this city, the New Jerusalem, in that place where the house of Israel gathered from their long dispersion. Here they would gird up their loins and be looking for the return of Israel's God, Jesus Christ (Book of Mormon 750: 4-8). Therefore because of the unchangeable covenants of the Lord to the house of Israel (Ephraim and Manasseh) the modern-day Indians or Lamanites are destined to have only a minor role in the building of Zion, Ephraim still has the birthright, and it was among them the Lord established his church in 1830.

revelation found in Doctrine and Covenants 102. This is regarded as one of the important communications affecting Zion's redemption and the gathering of the Saints.

Independence

Our stop was a brief one, and soon we continued on our way to Independence. Arriving at the headquarters of the church, we visited the Auditorium. Apostle George Mesley and Elder Gomer Wells were kind enough to pilot the young people through that edifice. These two brethren gave much information concerning the Auditorium. Just across the street they pointed out the place dedicated on August 3, 1831, for the building of a temple. That temple has never been built, but someday it will be erected, and the glory of God will rest upon it. There are many points of interest in the Center Place, but time would not permit us to remain there long.

Liberty

We returned to Liberty, Missouri, which stands on the north bank of the Missouri River and there visited the site of the old jail where the prophet was restrained for many long and weary months. The old jail has been torn down and a modern home erected in its stead. However the basement still remains. It was on the stone floor of this basement that Joseph made his bed of straw. Here Emma, Joseph's faithful wife, visited him with Young Joseph. During one of these visits, Joseph blessed his son who would some day be his successor in the prophetic office. It was not for committing crimes that Joseph was arrested and thrown into jail but rather for the testimony he had borne to mankind. Sometimes we think our lot is hard and much is asked of us, but as we go back over the history of the church and its people, we soon discover we have been favored and are most fortunate in not having to pass through many of the trying times that were the heritage of the early Saints in the formation period of the church. Where once the Saints were persecuted, now they are respected.

Richmond

During this tour we visited Richmond, Missouri, where David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses of the Book of Mormon, lived and is now buried. On the monument that marks his last resting place appears this inscription: "The Record of the Jews and the Record of the Nephites are one. Truth is Eternal." Located in the northeast part of Richmond is an old cemetery where many of the early Saints are buried. In this cemetery is the grave of another of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon—Oliver Cowdery. He was not only a witness but also the scribe who wrote the greater part of the Nephite record as it was translated from the plates by the power of God. On the monument that stands at his grave is engraved the testimony of the three witnesses found in every copy of the Book of Mormon. These men in the very sunset of their lives bore testimony to the divinity of the sacred record of the Nephite people. As these young people visited the graves of these men who never under any circumstance failed to testify of their knowledge concerning the Book of Mormon and the truth of the message it contained, they were happy in knowing these men had remained true to that testimony. If there is ever a time when people will be honest with themselves and with God, it is near the end of their lives. These men on their deathbed gave as a dying testimony what they knew regarding the truth of that record. Since they knew that in a short time they would stand in the presence of the Great Judge at the eternal bar and answer to him, it is reasonable to think they were honest and sincere and believed that testimony.

We were deeply impressed at what we saw and have every reason to feel grateful for the experience of that day.

Far West

Leaving Richmond we drove to another place of historic interest, Far West. At one time many homes of the Saints were located here, and a temple was contemplated. The excavation where it was to be built is still visible.

When Joseph arrived from Kirtland, Ohio, he advised the Saints to cease building for the reason no temple should be built without a commandment from the Lord. Since such a revelation had not been received, the people immediately stopped work on it. One of the stirring scenes of the early church was the arresting of some of the leading men, including Joseph. An order was given that these men, without trial, should be shot on the public square in Far West. It was through the kindness of General Doniphan, who refused to carry out this murderous plot, that their lives were saved. During this time Governor Boggs issued his famous "Extermination Order" in which General Lucas was told to either drive the Saints from the state or exterminate them. At Haun's Mill, located about sixteen miles from Far West, some of the Saints were shot down in cold blood. Today all is peace and quiet, and the Saints are regarded as among the best citizens of that community. The words of the prophet, "I will give unto you favor and grace in their eyes, that you may rest in peace and safety," has been literally fulfilled. At the present time there are several farm homes on the original site of the town site where Far West stood. Near the temple site we have a church in which regular services are held.

The Inspired Version

After the Saints had been driven from Jackson County, they settled in some of the counties north of the Missouri River. Persecution continued until they were forced from the state, and took up their abode in Nauvoo. Emma with her children clinging to her skirt and the manuscript of the Inspired Version of the Bible safely tucked away in her clothing, made her way to Quincy, Illinois, where she was later joined by Joseph. Wading the snow over the prairies of northern Missouri with her little children was not an easy task. Joseph had entrusted her with the manuscript, and to this trust she ever proved faithful. She kept it in her custody until 1867 when she turned it over to a committee appointed by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to be published to the world. The Lord had instructed Joseph as follows:

Thou shalt ask, and my Scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety: and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment that then ye shall teach them unto all men: for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.

Emma Smith

Were it not for Emma, it is possible that we today might not have the Inspired Version of the Bible. She protected the manuscript until she was convinced the church would publish it to all the world. She carried the manuscript from Kirtland to Missouri and from there to Nauvoo, where it was given to the church.

She was one in whom the Lord placed his trust. She is the only one referred to as "an elect lady whom I have called." During the period in which the Saints suffered persecution in Missouri, she was true not only to her companion but also to the church. After they had reached Nauvoo, one of the children died from exposure suffered while in Missouri.

Alexander Smith

Alexander was born at Far West in 1838. For many years he was one of the leading men in the church, occupying in the Quorum of Twelve where he was called by revelation in 1873. He was also president of that Quorum from 1890 to 1897. In the latter year he was called to act as counselor to his brother Joseph in the Presidency and also to act as Presiding Patriarch. He was released as counselor in 1902 but continued as Presiding Patriarch until his death on August 12, 1909, at Nauvoo. It was under his hands that I received my blessing on February 27, 1904. In this blessing are many prophetic statements that have been of great help to me in my years of ministry.

Nauvoo

After the Saints were driven out of Missouri, they sought shelter in Illinois. It has been my privilege to labor in Nauvoo at different times over a period of years. Perhaps a brief description of it will be of interest to those who have never visited this historic place.

The original tract of land was purchased by the church from Hugh White. On it is located the building known today as the Homestead. At one time this building was an Indian trading post called the Blockhouse; it was occupied as early as 1805 when Zebulon Pike visited the place. As far as we know it is the oldest building in Nauvoo at the present time. Joseph and his family occupied it from 1839 to 1842 when they moved into the Mansion House across the street. During the time Joseph resided in the Homestead, he built an addition to the house. The old blockhouse was built of logs but the part added by Joseph is frame. Just east of the Homestead is a well that was used by the Smith family. It still affords an abundance of good water. This building is now owned by the church and is used as a museum.

Relief Society

On the northwestern corner of the Homestead tract is the site of the store of Joseph's. When I first visited Nauvoo nearly forty years ago, this store building was still standing; today nothing remains but the basement, which is clearly marked. It was in the upper room of this building that the Relief Society was organized with Emma Smith as its first president. Some years ago I was in a Masonic library in Cedar Rapids, Iowa; while there I examined a daybook used in this store. This book is now the property of the Masonic lodge and is regarded as a very interesting and valuable document. I spent several hours examining its pages and found many interesting items recorded there. Men such as Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Parley P. Pratt, and others had accounts in this book. One item I am sure some of the ladies of our day will be interested in was an entry showing that in 1842 Emma Smith purchased two pairs of silk hose for $1.25 per pair.

One important matter took place in this store which we must not fail to mention. Joseph blessed his eldest son to take his place as president of the church. There were other times the father blessed his son, and at different times he pointed him out as his successor. Had the church heeded this call it would have protected many thousands of Saints who were deceived by false leaders. The Utah Church asked consent of our church to erect a monument commemorating the organization of the Women's Relief Society, which was granted; as a result there stands near the site of this building a creditable marker giving some of its history.

Old Graves

Located on this same block are several graves, some of which are marked. The graves of the father and mother of Joseph the Seer are to be found here. The exact location of many of the other graves is unknown.

It was by accident several years ago that I learned of the exact location of these graves. In company with Mr. Kendall, a brother-in-law of Alexander Smith, I visited these burial grounds. He took me to the spot where Joseph and Lucy Smith are buried. It was identified at the time by a grave dug for Emmeline Smith, first wife of Young Joseph, son of the Martyr. While digging, Mr. Kendall found another grave and took from it some of the articles in the casket. These articles he showed to Emma, wife of the Martyr, who said they had belonged to Lucy who was buried beside her companion. Mr. Kendall informed me that he did not disturb these graves but simply started digging the new one about four feet west. This grave is clearly marked, so we have the identity of the last resting place of the father and mother of the prophet. The home of Lucy Smith still stands in Nauvoo and is in a very good state of preservation, being occupied as a residence at the present time. However she died in 1855 at the Mansion house where she had moved so that Emma might take care of her. Her husband died on September 14, 1840, as a result of exposure suffered in Missouri. It was indeed fortunate that these graves were discovered as no one in the family was familiar with their location.

Graves of the Martyrs

Each year many hundreds of people visit Nauvoo. Among the places of most interest are the graves of the Martyrs located only a short distance from the Homestead. Often I have stood before their graves and related the story of their martyrdom to many visitors. I have seen tears course down the cheeks of some who listened.

Joseph and his brother Hyrum were shot to death in Carthage; then their bodies were brought back to Nauvoo where they lay in state in the Mansion House. Some of the enemies declared they would have the head of Joseph. To prevent this Emma had the bodies buried in the basement of the Nauvoo House which was being constructed at the time. For a short time they were permitted to remain there. Emma, fearing they might be molested, decided to have them removed to a more secluded place. This work of transferring the bodies was entrusted to an old colored man who worked for the family. In the darkness of night he made a grave in the basement of the spring house several feet below the surface of the ground; then the bodies were taken from the Nauvoo House and placed in the grave side by side, Joseph on the south, and Hyrum on the north. The only persons present at this second interment, as far as is known, were Emma, Lucy, Young Joseph, possibly Alexander, and the old colored man.

Here the bodies lay for nearly eighty-five years. In 1928 they were transferred to the spot where they now rest. Those who knew where they were buried kept the secret.

As I have related this story with other items of interest concerning these servants of Christ I have witnessed a marked impression on the visitors, and I have every reason to believe many have gone away believing Joseph to be a true prophet of God. I consider Nauvoo to be one of the finest places to tell the gospel story.

The Mansion House

The Mansion House, home of Joseph Smith, Jr., and his family, still stands and is visited by nearly all who come to Nauvoo. It was in this home that Joseph lived from 1842 until the time of his death. Emma continued to reside there for several years, but when her sons were married, she let them have the home and she moved into the Nauvoo House where she died on April 30, 1879. The Mansion House is a well-preserved frame structure of Colonial style. At the present time it is not as large as it was during the life of Joseph, as a part of it has been removed.

Other Property

The church owns the following properties in Nauvoo: The Homestead, William Marks property, Joseph Smith home, Nauvoo House, and the Sidney Rigdon home which also served as the first post office in Nauvoo. Some of the homes of the leading men in the early church are owned by present members. The following homes, still standing, are owned by nonmembers: Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, John Taylor, the Snow Brothers, Orson Hyde, and the Masonic Temple. Most of these homes were built of brick, and although over one hundred years old they are still well preserved. There is every evidence that the Saints expected to remain permanently in Nauvoo. Following the death of Joseph and Hyrum, the church broke up in factions and scattered in different directions. In one of the revelations given to the church, the Lord said:

"If my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, They shall not be moved out of their place." It was the false leaders who led them away from Zion, while Young Joseph gathered up the broken fragments and lead them back to Zion.

At one time not one Latter Day Saint could be found in Nauvoo, but today a thriving branch is there, and the waste places of Zion are being built up as the Lord has said. As one walks the streets of Nauvoo, he feels sad as he realizes some of the terrible mistakes that were made; but he also can feel happy to know the work is being permanently established once more, and Nauvoo will yet become a cornerstone in the building of Zion.

Finding God Through Neighbors

THERE IS AN OLD FABLE that tells about God's creation of man. All the angels in heaven helped God create man in his own image, and from them came all the gifts and abilities that man has today. One angel touched man on the lips and gave him the gift of speech. Another touched his throat and he could sing. Another touched his fingers, and into his hands came the power to make things. Every gift the angels had they gave to man, except one. They withheld from him the gift of contentment, because, as God is supposed to have said, "If man is content, he will be satisfied with his lot, and will not seek after higher things."

That is supposed to be the reason why we are never satisfied with what we have, but are always striving after something else and constantly yearning after higher things. This is the reason we are constantly seeking God and his righteousness, finding him in many ways and in many places.

This yearning after higher things is reflected in the lives of men like Columbus, Sir Francis Drake, and Captain Cook, whose discontent took them over the horizon to new worlds. It is found in the lives of people like Madame Curie, Louis Pasteur, and Dr. Reid of yellow fever fame, whose search took them into the unknown fields of the healing power of medicine. It is found in the lives of men and women like David Livingstone, or Mary Slessor, Joseph and Beatrice Burton of latter-day fame whose divine discontent took them, and the light of God with them, across the horizons of ignorance to reveal the truth to those who were hungering after righteousness, or those who were quite unaware that righteousness existed.

This yearning is reflected also in the lives of people today who look for satisfaction and contentment in their search for God through worship and communion with him.

WE ALL KNOW that the pinnacle of our aim is to love God. This is the greatest commandment. But in order to love God we must know him, and before we can know him, we must find him.

There are many ways in which we can find God. We can find him through our neighbors if we wish. It is a well-known fact that our lives are very closely tied with those of our neighbors. We can't live without them in material things. They help supply our food, our clothes, our homes, our every need. We, in turn, help to supply their needs by the things we do and make.

It is also a well-known fact that our instinct draws us close to our neighbors. A person who goes away into isolation to live by himself is regarded as odd. Robinson Crusoe's whole outlook on life was changed when Man Friday came to the island where he had lived for many years in solitude and loneliness.

Spiritually, too, we must live close to our neighbor. We need each other. There is a story told of a monk who was so disgusted with the sordid conditions of life in the city where he lived that he went to live on a mountaintop to be near God. But Christ, who came to this man in a vision, told him that only by going back and giving ministry to the people in the valley could he serve God. Yes, to find God, we must help our neighbors.

Consider the parable of the sheep and the goats, as recorded by Matthew. "Lord, when saw we thee hungry, and fed thee?" the righteous asked. And the answer came, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren [your neighbors], ye did it unto me."

THERE IS A BEAUTIFUL PAINTING by Harold Copping called "The Healer." It shows a missionary with his kit of medicine and bandages attending to the needs of a sick African boy. The boy's mother is there helping him. Near by are two other natives, watching anxiously. All around is the thick African jungle. Overshadowing all is the visionary figure of Jesus, the Great Healer. As we gaze upon this painting, we can sense that through the helping hand of one of God's servants stretched out to succor a neighbor in need, Christ can be found.

THOU SHALT LOVE THE LORD thy God . . . and thou shalt love thy neighbor." On every hand we get constant reminders that through service to our fellow men we can reach God. The philosophy of the Good Samaritan is as applicable today as when the story was first told. The example of Jesus, who went about "doing good," is a constant reminder to us who are so often satisfied with "just going about." The whole aim of the church, the establishment of Zion, is bound up in this fact—that we can find God through our neighbors.

Who is thy neighbor? He whom thou
Hast power to aid or bless;
Whose aching heart or burning brow
Thy soothing hand may press.
Thy neighbor? 'Tis the fainting poor
Whose eye with want is dim.
Oh, enter thou his humble door
With aid and peace for him.

Fire and Spirit

You can quench a fire in one of three ways. You can leave it alone. You can pour water on it. You can put on it what will not burn. Just so you can quench the Spirit by neglect, by willful sin, and by a life of selfishness and worldliness.

The Auditorium

A Measuring Stick for Church Growth

By JOSEPHINE MONTGOMERY

PERHAPS NO OTHER BUILDING in the church is so well known or has caused so much perplexity as the Auditorium in Independence. When it was first begun in February, 1926, men shook their heads and wondered how we could ever use it to get our money's worth.

They had good grounds for their apprehension. In 1926 the church was getting along all right in small quarters. Conference crowds were beginning to overflow, but it would be extravagant to build a huge meeting place that would be used only once every two years or so. Office space could stand to be expanded a little perhaps, but certainly not to the extent of a building with a frontage of 250 feet and a depth of 270 feet. The gaping basement hole looked like a chasm into which would be thrown good money to erect a white elephant of brick and cement and steel.

But the years between 1926 and 1950 have given the Auditorium time to prove itself. Today Conference crowds are again beginning to overflow so that two services are necessary for the Communion on opening Sundays. Between Conferences the main auditorium does stand idle for long periods of time, but there are several occasions each year when it must be used for community projects which no other building is large enough to house. Each spring high school graduation exercises are held here, and the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra programs for the school children can be accommodated in no other building in Independence. In 1945 when President Truman "came home" to Independence for the first time since he had moved into the White House, the tremendous civic welcome was held in the Auditorium.

Other parts of the building are used more frequently. The lower auditorium is left open for volleyball and other recreational activities, and the rooms surrounding it are used every Sunday morning for classes from the Stone Church. The dining room, which many Conference visitors will remember because of good food and the throngs of hungry diners, is used many times each year as the Laurel Club of Independence caters for church and civic groups.

AND EVERY WEEK DAY the offices of the General Church are open for a busy eight hours in the Auditorium. There are between fifteen and twenty suites of offices, with about fifty people on the staff. In addition to these employees, thirty-five general church officials occupy the offices. "But," says Bishop Johnson, "it's a rare occasion when we have all thirty-five of them in the building at one time."

This year it became increasingly apparent that the office space was getting cramped again as it had in 1926. Many of the offices were in temporary quarters, and parts of the building intended for office space had never been completed to useable form. As soon as General Conference was over in April, a large-scale program of revamping the Auditorium was begun. In a grand "shift to the left" a new and larger suite is fitted up, the department moves in, and the old quarters thus vacated are fitted up for the next department.

At present one corridor is blocked off as a temporary record room while the old record room is getting a much-needed face-lifting before it becomes the new library. A look at the "before" picture showed a bare room with ugly red tile walls. Along two sides were rough wooden shelves filled with dusty books and bundles of unbound Heralds wrapped in brown paper. The center space was filled by a long table piled high with old ledgers, quarterlies, reports to General Conferences, Autumn Leaves, and one book entitled: A Study of 985 Widows Known to Certain Charity Organization Societies in 1910. A feather duster lay across one end of the table, but from the look of the rest of the room it had not been used recently.

The "after" picture will be much different. The walls will be plastered and tinted a light color. The rough shelves will be moved out. (One workman lost two bottles of coke betting on whether or not they would have to be dismantled before removal through the narrow passageway.) They will be replaced by finished bookcases built into the walls and tables to hold the books on church history and the rare, out-of-print documents and books, as well as a complete file of church periodicals.

THE MILE OF RAMPS is busy with workmen coming and going all day. A small, motor-driven vehicle passes pedestrian workers while the driver grins and calls "Taxi?" as he moves files of old business records down to the new records' room in the basement. Meanwhile, as soon as the library is complete, the old suite of rooms will be fitted up for the new offices of the Quorum of Twelve. Their old offices will be overhauled and given over to the Department of Religious Education. And so on down the line until the job of revamping and reallocating offices is completed.

In spite of the activity and rush of getting the job finished, a stranger in the building will be tantalized at ten o'clock in the morning and three o'clock in the afternoon as the employees take a friendly few minutes out for sandwiches and coffee.

In the midst of renovating these offices, a few new ones will be set up to heighten the efficiency of work being done. The Central Stake offices are being moved out of the building completely, a storeroom for maintenance and repair supplies is being set up, and the new record room will make it possible to file away business papers from the office of the Presiding Bishopric for several years without crowding or confusion. Plans also call for improvements to be made on the dining room in the lower auditorium—putting in a new ceiling, new lighting system and air conditioning. And on the fifth level there is to be a council room at the front of the building.

IN JUNE of this year the job of putting the stonework around the dome was completed after almost thirteen months of labor. The work of putting the copper covering on the dome is now in process. A few sheets are already in place and approved by the architect. All the sheets will be fitted in the shop and then brought to the Auditorium and put in place. The biggest job will be to get the permanent covering put on the exterior. At present it is just brick with concrete piers, and the material for the permanent finish has not been chosen. Architects have submitted studies showing alternate methods of treating the front of the building. These were hung in the lobby during last General Conference, and so varied are the ideas that the sketches look as if they are of entirely different buildings.

Inside the auditorium is a hodgepodge of complete and incomplete portions. The labyrinth of corridors with their rough tile walls seems even uglier in contrast to the finished offices. The walls of the corridors and both upper and lower auditoriums must be plastered. The permanent platform must be built in the upper auditorium and permanent seats installed to replace the rented chairs which are used at Conferences. And the uneven cement floors of the ramps must be covered with asphalt tile so that visitors won't have to stumble over the rough spots as in the past.

THE task of completing the Auditorium to the state of beauty in which it should be will take both time and money. Funds already appropriated are expected to finance the alterations planned for the present, but the greater task of finishing the exterior and interior appointments will still remain. At the last General Conference action was taken to authorize the Presiding Bishopric to raise money toward the completion of the building. This fall the fund-raising campaign will begin. No more improvements will be possible without the immediate help of the membership.

One of the thrills for the General Church officers in Independence through the years has been the active interest taken by Conference delegates and visitors in the gradual changes being made in the Auditorium. The happiness expressed by visiting members as they walked through the halls noting what had been done in the intervening time since the last Conference has been a big factor in encouraging the church officers to push the work forward as rapidly as possible.

Much has been done since February, 1926. Much can be done. Much will be done.

The Stars Are Still Shining

By Marcella Schenck

FOR THREE MONTHS nature came to me—an abundance of flowers in the hands of the aged, the youth, the children, and the babies! I appreciated this loveliness of God's handiwork and the thoughtfulness of my friends. It was an additional joy when I could step outside to see it growing.

At the end of the fourth month I had the privilege of riding with some good neighbors to attend the church services at Liberty Home where there are no steps to climb. When we returned, darkness was settling over the town, and I looked up and saw the stars for the first time in many nights. They were so beautiful that I caught my breath and exclaimed, "The stars are still shining!"

My good friend Chloe answered, "They have been shining all the time." I said good night with, "They are still pretty."

Then I walked into the house and enjoyed King David's appreciations again. I felt like saying:

I will sing of the mercies of the Lord . . . I will make known thy faithfulness.
The heavens are thine, the earth also is thine: as for the world and the fulness thereof, thou hast founded them.

And the heavens shall praise thy wonders, O Lord.

I hope, too, that God's faithfulness shall be spoken of "in the congregations of the saints." But if you are not one of those who can stand and speak before many others, maybe you can do what several have done for me this past summer: sit by a bedside and bear a testimony that will give strength and courage to the one who needs that trust and faith which is within you.

Let us not leave it to the heavens and the stars, the flowers and the birds to do all the praising. And if you happen to be feeling a little low, go out in the velvet darkness of night and look up. The stars are still shining.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Do you understand the Ten Commandments to be those found in the twentieth chapter of Exodus? Do you believe them to be carnal? Do you believe they are done away with?
Saskatchewan J. A.

ANSWER:

Yes, the Ten Commandments are found in Exodus 20. They are also found in Deuteronomy 5. In the latter place they are stated as written by the Lord (verse 22, also chapter 10: 3-5).

A little difference may be noted; especially as to the reason assigned for keeping the Sabbath of the fourth commandment. In Deuteronomy 5:15 it reads:

And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day.

This position is supported by Exodus 12:16, 17, 42; 13:3; 20:2; 31:17; Deuteronomy 5:2-6, 15, 16; 6:20-24; and II Chronicles 2:4.

The ten-commandment law with its precepts, statutes, and judgments does seem to be referred to as the law of a "carnal commandment" (Hebrew 7:16).

Apart from the gospel law, it was "weak," "imperfect," and "unprofitable" (Hebrews 7:18, 19). It did not contain the power of regeneration, therefore was not intended for salvation in the kingdom of God. (See Galatians 2:16; 3:11, 21; and Romans 3:20.) It was especially designed as a check against sensuality and carnality.

Death by stoning was the penalty for breaking any of the Ten Commandments. It was therefore called by Saint Paul, "the law of sin and death." He said, "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."—Romans 8:2.

The gospel law was preached before the ten-commandment law was given. "But the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." (See Galatians 3:8; Hebrews 4:2.) The ten-commandment law was given for the first time in Sinai. "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day."—Deuteronomy 5:3. (See Exodus 34:27, 28.) The words are the covenant, the Ten Commandments. It was an "added" law of enforcement—a "schoolmaster" to discipline people who had not faith to do right.

Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions till the seed should come to whom the promise was made But before faith came we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come we are no longer under a schoolmaster.—Galatians 3:19-25.

As a code to be enforced, it was not intended to remain after Christ. People no longer are stoned to death for breaking the law. The following Scriptures are significant: Matthew 5:17, 18 (fulfilled in Christ); Galatians 3:25; 5:18 (no longer under); Hebrews 7:18 (disannulled); Romans 7:6 (delivered from); Romans 10:1 (ended); Romans 8:2 (freed from); II Corinthians 3:7 (done away); Romans 7:6 (dead). See also II Nephi 11:45-51.

However, all the sentiments of self-discipline and restraint contained in the Ten Commandments are embodied in the gospel law with its higher objectives and ideals.

QUESTION:

Who was the last known apostle or person holding the Melchisedec priesthood between the time of Christ and the latter-day restoration of the gospel?
Missouri E. F.

ANSWER:

Who last held the Melchisedec priesthood between the days of Christ and the Restoration is not recorded, so far as I know. The apostasy was apparently a gradual process over a considerable period of time, the details of which are not fully stated either in Scripture or history.

A. B. PHILLIPS.

QUESTION:

Please explain the priesthood from Moses to Christ. Was Aaron, who was the head of the Aaronic priesthood, later made a high priest of the Melchisedec order? Who could enter the holy of holies?

F. S.

ANSWER:

Normally there are two orders of priesthood operating together in the church of Jesus Christ, these priesthoods having been given to Adam and coming down by lineage when not under suspense. In the founding of the Israelite nation at Sinai, these two priesthoods were established in Israel, the Melchisedec having been previously given to Moses through his father-in-law, Jethro, under which he officiated as leader of Israel; and the secondary order being conferred by divine direction upon Aaron and his sons, from whom it was called the Aaronic priesthood. Because of Israel's sin and rebellion against the higher law of the gospel, the Lord permitted the higher authority to lapse with the death of Moses, no successor being appointed for that office, thus leaving the Aaronic priesthood dominant until Christ came. (See Doctrine and Covenants 83:2-4)

Aaron and his successors were high priests but not of the Melchisedec order. The leading officers in both orders were called "high priests" but held differing powers of authority. We know of no Scripture which suggests that at any time the high priests of Aaron became high priests of Melchisedec. The Scripture noted shows that the Lord caused the Aaronic priesthood "to continue with the house of Aaron among the children of Israel, until John."

The inner sanctuary of the tabernacle, or holy of holies, was first entered by the Moses who heard the voice of the Lord speaking to him (Numbers 7:89), and since Hebrews 9:7 speaks of the high priest entering there once a year, it is probable that men of the Aaronic order were privileged to officiate there. Whether their functioning was the same as that belonging to the Melchisedec order we do not know.

Letters

Notes of Thanks

I wish to thank the Saints for their cards, letters, and prayers for my recovery while I was in the hospital at Nogales, Arizona. Since there were no elders near, I wrote and asked Sister Knussman of St. Louis to have the members at church to pray for me. From then on I suffered little pain, and my fractures began to show immediate improvement. I know God answered those prayers.

I am not completely well yet, however, and I ask for continued prayers that, if it be God's will, I may recover entirely. I could then go about encouraging others to see the light.

I have a son in Prescott, Arizona, who is trying to start a mission there. If anyone has some tracts or other church literature he could use, he would be glad to get it. (Address: W. C. Welch, Box 15, Prescott.) I should also appreciate having the Saints pray for my other son who is suffering from a lung infection and is now a patient at the Elks Hospital in Tucson, and for my daughter who is at Mayo Clinic for treatment of anemia. They do not belong to the church yet.

I wish to thank my many friends in the United States and Canada for their prayers, get-well cards, and letters during my recent illness. I am sorry I can't reply to all of them.

I am now very much improved and have been assigned to labor as district president in the state of Maine.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them

When the child was born, she appeared to be a very normal baby. Her parents were happy, of course, and so was the grandmother, who said she should be named "Mary" because that is a blessed name. However, when little Mary reached eight months old and still could not sit up, her mother began to grow apprehensive, and her silent prayer was ever, "Please, God, I have tried to do thy will, so grant this one request. Spare my daughter the tragedy of being an invalid." But two months later a specialist said there was no hope for her. "Is there nothing that can be done? We'll get the money—somehow—" pleaded the young parents, but the physician again said, "I am sorry. There is no hope." They took the helpless child in their arms and walked down the corridor, their hearts filled with a sense of futility. Alone in her room that night, the mother poured out her grief to God. Then came the words: "Let not your heart be troubled. Ye believe in God; believe also in me."

The next evening she asked her husband, "Dear, why don't we take God at his word? We've tried everything but the Great Physician—why not call on him? We are told to call the elders of the church when there are any sick among us."

Later two of God's servants anointed the child and, placing their hands upon her head, sought a blessing for her. It was not a spectacular incident, but it left the conviction with those young parents that whatever happened, God would love and care for them and their child.

The next morning Mary smiled—the first smile since she had been born. As months passed she continued to grow and develop, and when she was six years old she, like other children, said elatedly, "I'm going to school!" Tears of gratitude welled up in the eyes of her mother as she watched her child leave for her first day at school, and her prayer was one of thanksgiving to the Savior who had said, "Let not your heart be troubled . . ."

Sweet Home, Oregon

Report on Bend, Oregon

Last year about this time I visited the Saints at Bend, Oregon. There were only fifteen or sixteen at the service, and one elder to prepare and serve the Communion emblems. This year there were forty in attendance and four officers on the stand—two of the Melchisedec and two of the Aaronic priesthood. It made my heart rejoice to see such growth in the group.

A VISITOR.

A New Life

Thirty years after I first met a member of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church, I was baptized by that same man. The example he set has lived in my heart ever since he brought the true gospel to me during a round-up we rode in together. I was troubled because I had nearly killed a man while trying to protect the interests of my employer. As he wavered at death's door and I feared my freedom was almost over, I felt that I didn't have a friend in the world. Then I met this young cowboy who taught me to pray and sing when we were alone on the hills at night. At first I thought he was a reckless, scrappy kid, but I later found that he was brave and kind—a true follower of the Nazarene. The more I read his books and tried to pray, the more I wanted to be like him and his Christ. When he left the outfit, he gave me his pocket Bible and promised to pray for me always. I found many markings in that little Bible, and I often wept as I read over those passages. I had hoped to see the boy again, but each year my desire to make money and keep busy kept me from looking him up. I did continue to study, though, and I visited church people whenever I could.

This spring my health suddenly gave out. I sold my business and went to the Springs to rest. There I was advised to go to the specialists in Minnesota. First, however, I decided I wanted to see Independence and visit The Auditorium. I was too weak to stay long, but while I was there I learned that the Latter Day Saint cowboy I had known on the range lived in Iowa. My driver took me to the town where he lived, and we asked directions at the city hall. He seemed to be well-known and respected by those we asked. I called him on the phone, and he came for us and took us to his country home. His wife and son were away, but he showed me their pictures and I felt as if I knew them too. How much sweeter my life would have been if I had had a home and loved ones to care for instead of living only for myself.

My friend looked younger than his years. As he fed me toasted homemade whole wheat bread with honey and gave me milk to drink, we talked of the Word of Wisdom. We also reminisced about our first experience together on the range. I told him how I had studied and how much joy I had received from trying to be as kind to others as he had been to me,

He seemed surprised that I knew so much about the church yet had made no attempt to join. I told him I was waiting to retire so I could live near one of the churches. I proved to him that I knew all the standards of Saint-hood and asked him to take me to the pond in the woods I had seen as we drove in to his place and baptize me there. He said that he could baptize me but could not confirm me a member as he held the Aaronic priesthood. He tried to call his pastor but could not get him, so he said he would baptize me and sign a statement to that effect so someone of the Melchisedec priesthood could confirm me when I returned—if God so willed.

I put on some clothes that were much too large for my wasted body, and we walked over to the beautiful spring-fed pond. After I was baptized, he picked me up as if I were a child and set me on a log, wrapping an old army blanket about me to keep me warm. Then he told me that it was one of the blankets he had loaned me the first night of the roundup.

I felt that I was at last a true brother to him, and asked him if he would sing something as he used to out on the range. He sang the Lord's Prayer. Never have I heard anything so wonderful. As his great voice echoed through the woods, I felt that angels were there with us. Then he prayed, and every word he said went deep into my soul. I was happy—happy whether I lived or died.

In parting he asked me to return and make my home there so I could worship with them. This is my earthly desire; my other desire is that I can someday be with God.

From a Michigan Member

I can look out to the road and vividly remember the cold March day when I and my young wife drove a team hitched to a covered wagon to Rose City. That summer we heard David Smith preach the restored gospel in the old Chase schoolhouse and listened to the Scott-Braden debate. Two dozen of the town's leading citizens were baptized after hearing Brother Scott's rebuttal. Things have not always gone well for the branch since then. As in other groups, the members must strive to "come up higher" if they would hasten the redemption of Zion. I ask the prayers of the Saints for my loved ones and myself. My prayers are ever for God's people.

From a Free-lance Missionary

I shall appreciate having the Saints pray for the people I have given church literature to that they may see the gospel light and accept the Restoration Message. For the past four years I have been in more than a hundred homes and left our books for people to read. There have been three baptisms as a result of this. I need to be remembered in prayers also that I may have the physical and spiritual blessing I need to carry on this work.

I should like to hear from any members who care to write.

Letter of Appreciation

On October 17 I celebrated my thirty-first birthday, and I want to thank all the Saints who remembered me with cards and letters. They mean a great deal to me and give me courage. I cannot answer each one individually as I am totally paralyzed. I have not walked nor used my hands for four years. Perhaps someday, if the Lord sees fit to heal me, I shall be able to acknowledge the mail I have received. I believe the prayers in my behalf are being answered as I feel better and strength seems to be coming back in my legs. May God bless you all.

Grateful for Prayers

It has been a long while since I wrote and asked the Saints to pray for me—almost eleven years. Recent X rays show that my lungs are completely normal now. Another blessing has come, too; both our daughters have been baptized. I hope they will go to Graceland when they are old enough for college.

There are over 11,000 members of the Utah Church in this area, and we have found several good friends among them. We attend their church suppers, bazaars, and special activities, but not regular services. We also know a nice couple that belong to the Christian Science Church. They are good musicians, and although they are sold on their present faith, we can't help wishing that someday they will join our church.

We hope that if any of our people are living in this territory they will contact us.

Finds the Gospel in America

I came about four thousand miles from Sweden to America to hear the gospel. I was brought up in the Lutheran faith, but after living some years in Detroit, Michigan. I met a member of the Reorganized Church who asked me to attend services. In a short time I was baptized in the Detroit River. It was in January, and the ice on the river was about six inches thick. Following the baptismal service, Elder John Shippy and I walked about two blocks, and many people thought we would take cold, but we didn't. I am glad I found the gospel. It has saved me from lots of trouble, and I feel that I owe my very life to it. I am now seventy-five years old, and although there is no church in the city where I live, I go as often as I can to Buffalo Branch. May God bless all the Saints and save them for his kingdom.

Gardner Lake Retreat

During the Labor Day week end I had the opportunity to attend a city-wide Zion's League retreat at Gardner Lake not far from Independence. I noticed that the first two days were used mostly for recreation but on Sunday was different. At 11 o'clock Apostle Charles Hield delivered one of the best sermons I have ever heard; he spoke on faith in the time of trial, pointing out that we cannot expect God always to intervene and save us from suffering, because we have the free agency to do as we will. If we do not choose to live in harmony with the laws he has placed in the world, we cannot know the joy of obedience.

Climaxing the retreat was a fellowship service attended by more than two hundred young people. Nobody seemed to be lingering outside the tent. At first we did not seem to be in the right spirit for such a service, but after one young man arose and said that he realized the reason for this feeling of darkness in him was his reluctance to do God's will, others expressed similar shortcomings and humbly resolved to do better. This seemed to change the whole meeting, which lasted for two hours. Near the close of it, a member of the priesthood stood and delivered a spiritual message in which we were admonished for our slothfulness and indifference. We were also told that God was wanting to send the endowment promised us, but that we were not yet ready to receive it. There were many sincere testimonies, dedications, and re-dedications. I left feeling that I had gained much knowledge and spiritual strength I would not have received had I decided to work instead of attending the retreat.

Why I Believe in God

I believe in God because my parents taught me to do so, because of the testimony of others, and because of my own experiences. I look at the beauties of nature and see the work of God. I know he has placed these things on the earth for our good and that each has its proper place. When danger arises, I know God has the power to answer a prayer for protection. Once I watched a tornado change its course as I prayed for the safety of my family and neighbors. I have seen loved ones receive administration, and, whether they lived or died, I have sensed that God's will was being fulfilled. I have walked into God's house and felt that he was meeting me there. Such peace and assurance could come only from a loving Heavenly Father.

Tribute to California Groups

The members of Santa Ana Mission were a real inspiration to me when I was associated with them, and I found it difficult to leave there. However, since I have worshiped with the Saints at Santa Paula, I have come to feel very close to them also. Their love and devotion to the church, as well as their concern for each other, is a challenge. These virtues plus their tireless work has meant rapid growth for the congregation. The mission started with only one family several years ago, but now the group is hoping to build a church. The hall in which it meets is becoming quite inadequate. Surely the devotion, sacrifice, and prayers of these good people will be rewarded.

Much to Be Thankful For

We are enjoying our work in the Ozarks and meet with the scattered members of the church as often as is possible to talk about the gospel. With the reactivation of Fort Leonard Wood, we are having another influx of "temporary residents"; and in the past few weeks we have found several couples who are members of the church.

God has been good to us and is still good to us, and we find much to be thankful for all about us.

Appreciates Church Publications

I wish to express my appreciation for the Herald and Daily Bread. Many times I have found the answer to a question or been strengthened in an hour of weakness by reading them. Daily Bread is a splendid means of establishing family worship in the home, and the Herald helps to keep all followers of Christ in closer contact with each other.

Whatever Is, Is Best

"All things work together for good to those who love God." Sometimes when we have to face the loss of loved ones, the destruction of our homes, or the failure of things we have worked hard for, we may not find it easy to believe that whatever happens is for the best. However, if we want God's purpose to be fulfilled in us, we must trust his wisdom. If Abinadi had not been burned at the stake, Alma and the people he led out of captivity may never have known the teachings of this great man. If Paul had been delivered from prison, his epistles which now appear in the New Testament may never have been written. Often the things we suffer help us to develop sympathy for others who are enduring troubles. Christ himself was made perfect through suffering.

Whatever our misfortune, others before us have had similar trials to bear. We can allow our troubles to make us despondent and miserable, or we can use them to help build foundations for more perfect lives. We must learn to pray, "Nevertheless thy will be done." If we waste our years in rebellion and self pity, we shall eventually look back on them with regret.

A Healing

Through the kindness of our Heavenly Father I have received a great blessing. For the past fourteen years, following a thyroid operation in which my parathyroid glands were accidentally removed, I've taken calcium intravenously. Because of this, other organs in my body were disturbed causing the tendons in my right arm and leg to contract. Gradually this condition grew worse, and my physician urged me to go to the University of Michigan Hospital at Ann Arbor to have these tendons stretched and my arm and leg placed in a cast. However, while attending Park of the Pines Reunion, I received administration and was healed of this affliction. The report of calcium determination in my blood following reunion showed a little above normal. I no longer need to take additional calcium, and my arm and leg are now perfectly straight.

This has been an outstanding experience for me and a testimony to my friends and neighbors.

BETH JOHNSTON.

Onaway, Michigan

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Accompanying the letter was this statement from the writer's physician: "I treated Miss Johnston every two weeks for about a year. Her fingers were developing contractures and tendons were shortening. Calcium was the only thing that gave her relief. Then all at once the shots were unnecessary, and the calcium level was normal. Only a miracle could have brought this about.")

First Things First - By LOUISE WRIGLEY

*God set small children on the earth
To play,
And then by night and day
He set his shining angels at a watch
. . . . And mothers too, you know,
To love them, keep them, guide them,
As they grow.*

*But sometimes, danger strikes with speed,
And square!
And even with the angels close about
Sometimes their mothers, first,
Are there.*

MOTHERS HAVE SOMETHING to do. God has given them, outright, the most marvelous gift of all—children. Rearing them in love and obedience to his commandments is the most important single contribution that member-mothers can make to the growth and progress of the church.

They are, in effect, being given the privilege of helping to shape the church of tomorrow.

However, when they are sidetracked by too many other responsibilities, sometimes the finished product is not as desirable as one might wish.

As some mothers assume for their first task the caring for their children in all phases of their development, this fact is naturally and easily accepted by all. When other young mothers who have been very active in church work do this same thing, there seems to arise the feeling that they aren't trying hard enough to serve when they are needed.

DO WE FAIL TO CONSIDER that these mothers, to keep up with their active little ones, need extra rest? They also need freedom from too close schedules so that they may be flexible to respond to the sudden whimsies of their growing, searching children. Who doesn't remember with warmth, the mother who would play make-believe for a cherished hour, or sweetly and graciously find the time for an extra story, very often one of the boy Jesus and his sweet, charitable way toward every man?

This is not to say that the mother of young children wants to cut herself off completely. Certainly there are services she can render, peculiar to her situation as a mother. There are many small things she can dispatch with ease, and yet avoid the constant demand which drains her of much-needed strength. This is not to say that she intends or desires to forego the joy of church attendance or that she would deny for an instant the blessings of fellowship. Naturally, she wishes to continue to be a pulsing part of church life, encouraging by her attendance, and in many cases, still assuming moderate responsibilities in accordance with her abilities to make time for these things. She will not readily find time. There is probably little actually "left over." She is glad to make time, knowing there is nothing more richly rewarding than this.

THERE IS UNDENIABLE EVIDENCE that God gives us all the strength we need. Yet, is it fair for us to ask this mother to push her physical body out of all proportion to her human resistance? God's laws govern these things, too. Is it wisdom to break down in youth the health which she will find a priceless asset for service in her freer years?

Certainly many a mother is active—and blessed beyond measure by the welling up in her heart of the desire to do still more. Sometimes though, in spite of her careful planning, there seems not quite enough time for proper attention to the children, so these children suffer in some inexplicable way. It is rarely physical neglect. It is so much more often mental or spiritual neglect which is harder to isolate. We wonder how such a lovely mother could have such mixed-up children. Perhaps it is because she failed to recognize the most important task God set for her. Perhaps it wasn't as much to her liking as public appearances, as counseling others—perhaps she felt she really didn't have the talent for it. She forgets that she was created, first of all, to care for the Zionite home which results from the combined efforts and aspirations of the whole family.

THEN THERE IS THE MOTHER, also really desiring to be of tangible help, who takes on too much because some people make her feel that by turning down their appeal for assistance she has been guilty of inflicting a personal injustice, that she is failing the branch membership and is a slothful laggard for not making enough more time to include this task. Is it right to make young mothers feel ashamed and hurt that they haven't the physical strength to accept and discharge every obligation every person would require of them? They should be helped through this period until their children are definitely growing in the right direction and thriving as the flower thrives in the warmth of the sun. Then they can again, safely and happily, channel their energies into the more varied aspects of church service.

Of course there are many projects which really need the mother's special kind of support or talent. But what is the wiser thing, her support of all these church activities to the point of frazzled nerves and discontented children, improperly nourished in a more subtle sense, or making her feel free to give to her home the balance it needs and let her open her heart in the quiet of her meditation to God's Spirit that it may course through her to bless her family? Her able help may be missed. It is dif-difficult to find far-sighted, spiritually endowed people who will willingly, happily, and gratefully accept the opportunity to help keep branches going forward. Yet there are always people everywhere, wanting in their hearts to help, hoping to be asked, too timid to volunteer or without confidence in their own training or suitability. They need help. These are the reserves that must be tapped. In the tapping a branch may discover a whole new reservoir of potentiality.

IN A VERY PRACTICAL VEIN, have you ever transported a twenty-pounder, wiggling and jumping in his baby exuberance, to a baby-sitter that you might fulfill a need in branch work? The trip to the baby-sitter involves also carrying bottles, diapers, toys, training seat perhaps, blankets, a change of clothing in case of an accident. It is to be remembered that all of these things have to be planned for and gathered in advance.

If you are driving, Precious leans precariously out of his car seat, grabbing the wheel in a tremendous baby grip. This is one way not to prevent an accident. Or perhaps he wants to love you, which is a warming thought, if a little out of place. He throws his arms jubilantly around your head, completely covering your eyes. It is hard to drive in this fashion. Or, if you put his car seat farther away from you, he knows a fascinating game to play called "Throw it out the window." This is played with diaper bag, bottle, or just any old thing handy—like Mother's purse, especially, or her notes for the Daughters of Zion council meeting. This, somehow, seems unsettling to the nerves.

Roll up the window? Precious can roll it down again. After months of rushing from baby-sitter to engagement, Mother is probably not as effective as she should be any place along the line.

Nor should one expect to rely on good old "Mom" as a baby-sitter all the time. This is quickly run into the ground. She needs to participate herself. These are her bountiful years.

THIS IS ONLY THE HUMAN side of a serious question. Where do a mother's loyalties primarily lie—with the church God gave her or the children God gave her? For the mother who has such a hard time saying, "I'm so sorry. I just can't right now," it presents a real problem. The answer is not just "Do what you feel you can do." Sometimes the need is so great and the desire so strong and the leaders so insistent that she accepts unwisely, unable to do anything else and feel right in her heart.

Can we, then, develop more understanding of her problems? Surely we cannot help being cognizant of her opportunities for training her little ones. Surely we realize what a wonderful privilege she might be denied if she spreads herself too thin. Let us not, in any way, spoil or take from her her own special ministry. Let us say, in all sincerity and love, "We will have a place for you when your more pressing obligations are discharged. Help as you can, and where you will. We welcome your assistance, but as far as devoting the majority of your time right now, we'll wait—because you will come back into active service a better mother, a better member."

Traitors

By Ella Lambkin

AN ALIEN has to go to a lot of bother and work before he can become a citizen of the United States. This is probably true of other countries as well. He must know something about the government before he can be sure he wants to become a citizen and before he can become an active citizen.

The final act of the alien is a pledge of allegiance and loyalty to the country of his choice. This pledge is a serious thing. After it is taken, if the person should work with the enemies and against his adopted country, he is a traitor.

Just so, we who join the church of Jesus Christ have some work to do. We must know of its organization and doctrine: we must know what will be expected of us before we can be sure we want to join. We make our decision carefully, prayerfully. In our baptism and confirmation, we pledge our allegiance to God and his way of life. If, after we take the pledge of allegiance to God, we let ourselves slip back into the enemy camp and work against God, we are traitors.

You Can Take It With You

By MARGARET BURKEY

MANY TIMES you have heard the expression, "You can't take it with you." Your first reaction might be that of doubting Thomas, or you would think, "Here is a miser, or an atheist." Actually, that person could be right, because there are some things you can take with you.

Remember the time your neighbor next door was in bed with a new baby and there was no one to care for the other children? You went to help and also took some food along. Or perhaps in your constant witnessing for Christ, you "won one." And the member who never had time to come to church until, because of your patience and understanding, he decided to put first things first and became a devout worker. There are the children you taught in church school, and because you took time to prepare their lesson and make it interesting for them, you helped them to build on the rock. These are the things you can take with you.

Let's each live and pray so we shall have such experiences to take with us as our passports to heaven.

BRUSH CREEK, ILLINOIS.—The reunion, held south of Xenia, Illinois, August 5 to 13, was better attended than any previous year. Approximately 250 people camped on the grounds in cabins, tents, and dormitories. Many others attended the services each evening and especially on week ends. Over 400 were present for the Sunday services.

It is the general opinion that this was not only the best attended but most uplifting reunion ever held at Brush Creek. The St. Louis, Southeastern Illinois, and Central Illinois Districts were represented.

The staff, headed by Apostle D. O. Chesworth, included High Priest F. M. McDowell; Seventy Cecil Ettinger, Nauvoo, Illinois; Seventy Donald L. Kyser, president of Rich Hill District in Missouri; Sister Donald L. Kyser, leader of women in the Spring River and Rich Hill Districts in Missouri; Elder Sylvester Coleman, president of the Southeastern Illinois District; Sister Sylvester Coleman; Sister Aleta Runkle, Independence, Missouri, and Brother Alcide M. Pelletier, Lamoni, Iowa.

Apostle Chesworth brought to the reunion a great ministry, not only in his preaching services, but in conducting the general class on "The Restoration Story," at 11:00 a.m. each morning and also in conducting the general prayer service each morning at 8:30 a.m. He was also in charge of the priesthood meeting on Sunday afternoon.

Dr. F. M. McDowell taught the men's class for one period each day, and brought to them a new experience in the meaning and functions of the priesthood.

Brother McDowell, assisted by Brother Coleman, was in charge of the young people's early morning prayer service which was held on the bluffs, about three quarters of a mile from the reunion grounds. The theme was "What Does the Church Mean to You?" Afterwards breakfast was cooked out in the open.

Seventy Cecil Ettinger directed the evensong activities, and was assisted by Sister Aleta Runkle. The recreation for youth and the entire camp was under the capable leadership and direction of Seventies Ettinger and Kyser, and consisted of: softball, horseshoe, pingpong, volleyball, and swimming. Brothers Ettinger and Pelletier shared in instructing a class at 6:45 p.m. each evening on "Stewardship Opportunities and Responsibilities."

Brother Pelletier preached and operated the Herald Bookstore, and he gave the reunion a ministry through that avenue that was appreciated. He and Brother Kyser assisted each other in teaching the young people's class each morning on "Witnessing for Christ Through Stewardship." Brother Pelletier also acted in the work of the Bishopric at the reunion and surpassed his quota in filing inventories.

The church school for children was under the leadership of Sister Glenna Jackson, and a large group of teachers and assistants. The achievements of the children were presented in a program Saturday evening. The children numbered approximately seventy.

The women's class was under the direction of Sisters Aleta Runkle and Donald L. Kyser. The women also enjoyed their annual tea during the week.

Sister Aleta Runkle instructed a class on "Congregational Singing" every afternoon, and shared with Brother Ettinger and Sister Chesworth in directing the inspirational singing each evening before the preaching service.

Evangelist O. C. Henson was present during the entire reunion and was kept busy giving blessings. He was also in charge of the experience meetings held several afternoons during the week.

Each Sunday, the young people had their early morning prayer service under the direction of Brothers Coleman and Kyser, respectively.

Sister Coleman supervised the special music numbers for the various services, and Sister Arthur Henson directed the choir. Doctor Roy Mortimore, instructor at Graceland College and Graceland representative, was present with Sister Mortimore.

A ladies' quartet composed of Sisters Coleman, Chesworth, Runkle, and Kobler furnished several inspirational numbers.

Nine candidates were baptized in an impressive service Saturday afternoon in the pond near the Harry Henson home. Brother McDowell gave the opening remarks, and the quartet responded with a beautiful number. Those baptized were: Noel Feather, Deloris Feather, Joyce Walker, Harlene Kyes, Raymond Henson, Phylis Cocke, Lewis Wolfe, Clarabelle Wolfe, and Wanda Allen.

Brother and Sister Coleman brought a great ministry. Their teachings and leadership were such that a calm sense of peace and security settled over the entire camp.

Seventy Cecil Ettinger, Seventy Donald Kyser, and Elder Sylvester Coleman assisted in the preaching. Brother F. M. McDowell closed the reunion with an inspiring sermon.

The general theme was, "We Witness for Christ in the Restoration." The daily themes were: Saturday, "The Testimony of Christ in the Restoration;" Sunday, "The Kingdom of God in the Restoration;" Monday, "The Holy Spirit in the Restoration;" Tuesday, "The Church of the Restoration;" Wednesday, "Authoritative Priesthood in the Restoration;" Thursday, "The Scriptures of the Restoration;" Friday, "Revelation in the Restoration;" Saturday, "The Just God of the Restoration;" and Sunday, "The Restoration in Prophecy and History."—Reported by BERNIECE ANDERSON.

ESCONDIDO, CALIFORNIA.—The annual mission business meeting was held September 21 with Pastor Peter S. Whalley in charge, assisted by Associate-pastor Benjamin Sanders. Officers elected or appointed were Benjamin Sanders, pastor, treasurer, bulletin editor, tract committee, and building fund committee; Lee K. Day, bishop's solicitor, auditor, custodian, and tract committee; Mildred Arkley, church school director and secretary; Ethel Tarling, music director; Mary L. Wing, women's leader, reporter, and building fund committee; Clarence Zickafoose, Zion's League director; Kenneth Arkley, auditor, and tract committee; and Cora B. Dumphy, historian.—Reported by MARY L. WING.

JACK'S CREEK, TENNESSEE.—A series of services conducted by Seventy J. H. Yager ended on September 3. Nine people were baptized during the series: Georgia Beecham, Mr. and Mrs. Alton Johnson, and Kathy Bailey were baptized August 27 and confirmed at the evening service; on September 3 Mr. and Mrs. Robert O. Bailey, Mr. and Mrs. Irey Bailey and Peggy Pollock were baptized and were confirmed that evening. The six children blessed by Brother Yager during the series were Janice and Jerry Wayne, children of Mr. and Mrs. Alton Johnson; Larry Don and Carolyn, children of Mr. and Mrs. Irey Bailey; and Diane and Darlene, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. George Pollock. There was a record attendance throughout the series.—Reported by MINNIE BAILEY.

MADISON, WISCONSIN.—The following officers were elected at the Wisconsin District conference: Frank Mussell, district president; Elders Fred Moore and Philip Davenport, counselors; Leda Colbert, secretary; Mrs. Frank Mussell, director of women; Marlin Moe, church school director; John Longsdorf, young people's leader; Harry McCornac, district treasurer; Marabeth Ford, music director. The name of Alma Brookover was recommended to the general historian for district historian.

Apostle Paul M. Hanson, Missionary Merle Guthrie, and Evangelist Harry Wasson were present at the conference.—Reported by LEDA COLBERT.

MARLIN, TEXAS.—Elder Alfred H. Yale of Independence, Missouri, and Houston, Texas, conducted a series of preaching services September 10 to September 17.—Reported by MRS. RAYMOND RENEAU.

WICHITA, KANSAS.—Bernice Clark, Minnie Flynn, and Bobbie Westwood were baptized by Elder Myron LaPointe at Lake Afton on July 28 during the Kansas District reunion.

Dennis Earl Padberg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Padberg, was blessed by Elders Myron LaPointe and Chester Richards on August 6.

Mrs. Orpha Myrtle Jantzen, Mrs. Vivian Gould, Jacqueline Corey, and Calvin Newman were baptized at the morning services, August 27, and were confirmed that evening by Elders C. R. Richards, Myron LaPointe, Earl Shepard, and Ronald Manuel. Ivan and Dolly Lloyd were also baptized at the morning service and were confirmed at the Wednesday evening prayer service by Elders Myron LaPointe and Ronald Manuel. Sheryl D., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Knight, and Jess Albert Queen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Queen, were blessed by Elders LaPointe and Manuel at the evening service on Sunday.

Phyllis Jeanette, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Omer Prather, and Gregory Dean Dawson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Dawson, were blessed at the morning service on September 10, by Elders Manuel and Richards.

A co-op supper was held September 13 in the church basement, followed by the annual election of officers for the branch. The following were elected: Elder Myron F. LaPointe was sustained as pastor; Lindon Robinson, director of religious education; Mrs. Essie Shepard, adult supervisor; Frank Westwood, Jr., young adult supervisor; the branch presidency will supervise the young people's group; Mrs. Marian Manuel, children's supervisor and publicity supervisor; Clayton Marker, branch clerk and statistician; Ralston Jennings, branch treasurer; Mrs. Vera Westwood, music supervisor; Mrs. Katherine Slawson, dramatics supervisor; C. C. Jacquith, church auditor; Kenneth Ward, branch historian; Loyd Martin, Herald book agent; Virgil Weaver, branch solicitor; and Virgil Weaver and A. C. Seery to the building committee. The following committees were appointed with the approval of the branch: Oriole committee, Mrs. Roma Richards, Mrs. Erma Stillwell, Mrs. Donna LaPointe, with Mrs. Marian Weaver as the leader; Skylark committee, Mrs. Aletha Tilden, Mrs. Betty Dunham, and Mrs. Goldie Rowlett, with Mrs. Vera Allen as the leader.

J. C. Thorstenberg, Raymond Gann, and Marilyn Gann were baptized at the Wednesday evening service, September 27, by Elders Manuel and LaPointe, and arrangements are being made for their confirmation.

The Zion's League presented a half-hour radio program over KFJH on September 3 on the "Youth Church on the Air" program. Their theme was on the Holy Spirit, and Mrs. Elaine Cavin was the director of the group.

Promotion day exercises were held on September 24, and Paul Mengel presented certificates to those children being promoted. Mrs. Grace Tennery, children's supervisor, was in charge.—Reported by MARIAN MANUEL.

BRENTWOOD, MISSOURI.—Election of officers for the coming year was held September 15. District President Frank McDonald was in charge. The officers are: Elder Edwin C. Kent, pastor; Pat Dayton, secretary; Charles May, treasurer; Larry Watson, church school director; Lucille Miller, women's leader; Vi Dickerson, music director; Naomi Langguth, dramatic leader; Marge Kent, publicity director; Blanche Cook, flower chairman. As yet a young people's supervisor has not been chosen.

On October 1 Lillie Harms was baptized at Sullivan, Missouri, by Elder David Cooke. She was confirmed by Elders Cooke and C. J. Remington. Thirty-seven Saints and friends, some from St. Louis and Brentwood, were there for the occasion.

At the 11:00 service on September 24, two babies were blessed, Janice Yvonne Mason and Michael Claude Dayton. They were blessed by their great-grandfather, Elder Charles J. Remington.—Reported by MARGE KENT.

UTAH-IDAHO DISTRICT.—The youth conference was held at Ogden, Utah, on September 23, 24. Thirty-five young people from Provo, Salt Lake City, Ogden, Utah, and Malad, Idaho, attended. James Everette, Beth Fife, Adda Marie Smith, Jean White, Barbara Knight, and Lorraine Vaughn, from the Ogden Branch, were on the committee for planning and organizing the activities.

The conference started Saturday at three in the afternoon when the young people met at the Ogden R. L. D. S. Church to register. After the registration had been completed, the group went to the Ogden mountains where they played a number of exciting games. Later, they went on a "treasure hunt." The "treasure" consisted of stage money, jewelry, curious looking figurines, a rubber spider, and a variety of candy suckers.

After the "treasure hunt," a wiener roast was held. When the group had finished eating, they sat around the campfire and sang songs and a number of young people, representing various cities, put on skits.

Sunday morning, prayer meeting and church were held in the church. After church, dinner was prepared and served by the women's group. When everyone had eaten, the young people went to Salt Lake City to attend the baptism of Lorraine Vaughn, from Ogden, which was conducted by James Everette. After the service was over, class was held and the group was allowed to view the books which are in the custody of Russell Ralston. They saw the Millennial Star, Journal of Discourses, Times and Seasons, and many others. They also saw an original photo of Joseph Smith, Jr.

When class was over and they were ready to depart to their cities and homes, many expressed the desire to attend the next Zion's League conference which will be held sometime during the Christmas holidays.

BRITISH ISLES.—Well over 300 people traveled from various branches throughout the British Isles to attend the Mission Day services held at Nuneaton on Sunday, September 17. The Nuneaton church is quite small. The Saints fortunately were able to hire a large hall to accommodate the people and were glad of the opportunity to meet with so many.

The opening thirty minutes was a period of hymn-singing led by Gertrude Allen. This united the thoughts and paved the way for the prayer and fellowship service. Inspired by the theme, "Launch Out Into the Deep," three of the presiding ministry led the prayers, followed by many earnest and reviving testimonies.

Apostle Blair Jensen then made known the call and approval for ordination of Brother Arthur Munslow, pastor of the Birmingham Branch, to the office of an evangelist and, under his hands, assisted by Patriarch J. W. Worth, Brother Munslow was ordained.

The afternoon program was divided. For the first hour the children were taught by Violet Worth, the young people by Eric Rowe, and the adults by Doris Oakman. For the second hour, Sister Oakman had a combined group of children and young people and showed them a most interesting series of films, mostly taken by herself, of the church and some of its personnel and activities in the Center Place. Brother Frank Fry addressed the adults in keeping with the theme.

The evening preaching service was at 5:30, when Apostle Jensen gave the address. He drew some vivid word pictures of conditions in the German Mission as compared to those in England.

Lunch and tea were provided by the Cogans, as well as beverages and cakes for the return journey. The canteen facilities at the hall are most convenient and help tremendously in serving a large group in a short time.—Reported by VIOLET WORTH.

GRAND ISLAND, OREGON.—A mission was organized September 15 by District President J. L. Verhei. The name, Grand Island Mission, was selected temporarily. Elder Charles H. Asher is pastor in charge and Brother James Clevenger is the church school director. Brother Clevenger and Brother Tim King are in charge of the building committee. They have made arrangements for the use of a schoolhouse in which services will be conducted. The meeting at which the mission was organized was held at the Tim King home near Grand Island. A sermon was delivered by J. L. Verhei and was followed by a general discussion and the electing of officers. Mona Worthington was made secretary and Martha King, treasurer.

Services at present are cottage meetings being held in the homes under the direct supervision of the district president. In the near future, services will be started in the schoolhouse which has been obtained for this purpose.—Reported by MONA WORTHINGTON.

FLINT, MICHIGAN.—An addition to New-all Street Church was agreed upon at the annual business meeting on September 20. This addition will provide more classroom space, a new chancel including baptistry, choir, and priesthood rooms, and a new entrance to the church with roomy narthex. Tentative plans were also made for a community building to be used for dramatics, recreation, banquets, and dinners. This building will be a city-wide project for the use of all our churches in Flint. Apostle C. G. Mesley was in attendance at the meeting.

Eighteen have been baptized in Flint thus far this year. Recently three young adults were added to the church.

Six young people are attending Graceland College: Nancy and Gordon Sears, Kent Bennetts, Barent Eliason, Herbert Hutchins, and Reta Russell. Carl Pohly is a senior at Michigan U., and Gerald Riegle will soon attend DeForest Training School in Chicago. The choir recently held a dinner honoring those of their members who were leaving, most of them to enter college.

"Your Church and Mine," a regular half hour Sunday afternoon radio feature over Flint radio station WMRP, was recently in charge of Pastor R. Melvin Russell. The story of our church was told, with appropriate music by Gladys and Ellen Langdon. Many good comments were received.—Reported by ELEANOR RUSSELL.

FIRST CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—Officers for the coming year are: Elder E. W. Chandler, pastor; Robert O. Brown, director of religious education; and Miss Velva Castins, Herald correspondent.—Reported by RUTH SKINNER.

MOBILE, ALABAMA.—Members of the priesthood and their companions met in the annex auditorium on September 15 for the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Elder J. A. Pray, pastor, presided, being assisted by his two counselors, Elders Franklin Steiner and Brewton Greene, with Elder R. L. Booker, church school director, reading the call to worship. Following a hymn of consecration, the prayer of invocation was offered by Brother Steiner. Priests Jarvis Grace and A. V. Peavy served the Communion. The pastor gave an address to the ministry regarding their responsibilities as undershepherds of the flock. After the singing of "I Would Be True," Elder Steiner gave the charge to the companions present. A concluding hymn of affirmation was sung, and Elder Greene offered the benediction.

Missionary endeavor in outlying areas is increasing and especially in the vicinity of Chic-asaw, a suburb of Mobile. A weekly prayer service has been conducted there since last November, and the average attendance has been fifteen. Elder Alma Dungan is in charge of missionary cottage services, and Priest J. Grace the visiting program in that area.

A series of sermons will be preached at the church by Apostle Percy Farrow, October 29 through November 5.—Reported by JULIA M. WILSON.

HUMBER BAY, ONTARIO.—On September 3, Phyllis MacLean, wife of Brother Jack MacLean, was baptized by Elder James Daddon.

On September 23, the annual harvest home services were held. Speakers were District President John Booth, Elders Fred Long, and J. L. Prentice, all of Toronto. The senior and junior women's departments served the meals.—Reported by DORENE MOORE.

PROTON, ONTARIO.—A series of meetings was held during the month of September by Bishop Joseph C. Baldwin and Elder Louis Zonker of London. There was one baptism performed.

Several from the branch attended the Port Elgin reunion during the latter part of July.

Many members of the priesthood have visited and spoken at services during the summer months: District President Gordon Farrow of Warton, J. L. Prentice of Toronto, Bartley Farr of Woodbridge, Aubrey Mason of Warton, and Harry Davis of Ravenna.

On June 11 Wendy Georgina, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Batchelor, Dundalk, was blessed by Elders Gordon Farrow and Robert Black.

The business meeting was held October 4. On account of ill health, Elder W. P. Ellis was forced to resign and Elder Robert Black was appointed branch president.—Reported by DELL BLACK.

CORRECTION: In the Freesoil, Michigan, report in the October 19 issue the name Saugle River should be Sauble River and the name Floyd Tubbs should be Lloyd Tubbs.—Reported by BLANCHE HILL.

Minus Into a Plus - By RUTH SELZER

WHEN MARGARET FULLER SAID, "I accept the universe," Carlyle's retort was "Gad! She'd better!" Accepting the universe is for most of us a very simple matter as compared to the more difficult task of accepting ourselves. The beginning of all wise ambition lies in our power to accept ourselves as we are and not as someone else, and in trying to make the best of what we actually are. Always behind a personal triumph lies an act of self-acceptance. Too many times personal triumph is thwarted by tension between our actual and desired selves, and unhappiness results.

There are various causes for this tension. Parents often project aspirations into the imaginations of their children's ambitions which are utterly out of keeping with the abilities and aptitudes of their progeny.

Apart from the influence of unwise families is social pressure. We all desire to be appreciated, and no matter what the culture might have been in our span of life, we desire to meet its demands and succeed according to its standards. But despite the fact that culture makes us do a lot of things, we may discover we do not want to swim the middle of the stream, and so we deny everything we were meant to be and do. Tension thus caused is as much a tragedy as unwise parental influence. Fortunately in a free country where one may identify himself with various groups whose appreciations may be sought, the wise individual can handle this problem. Once a psychologist found a farmer, whose father was a farmer, who was born a farmer, who expected to always be a farmer, who was trying to be a good farmer but who wanted ever so much to paint pictures. When he was past forty, he dared to accept himself; he did paint pictures, and they were exhibited in leading galleries.

TENSION ALSO ARISES between our actual and desired selves from high moral ideals. To have high moral ideals is commendable, but they, too, are projected pictures of ourselves as we feel we ought to be or strongly want to be. We might aspire to be of public service. We might read all we can about our ideal, study, and prepare—yet be as poorly fitted for the job as

Here Is the Writer . . .

Ruth Meehan Selzer, a native of Washington, attended high school and college in Iowa, was married in Florida, and then returned to her home state. For four years before her marriage she taught school in Boone County, Iowa. She and her husband, Joseph, and their two children, Richard and Donna Jean, make their home in Seattle and attend Rainier Branch, where she is director of religious education. She also serves her congregation by arranging special programs. For relaxation she writes poetry and skits, plays the piano, and does fancywork.

basswood to a battleship. Disappointment often looms in the face of misfitted idealism. Granted there are general ideals that apply to Peter, James, and John. Yet, if Peter tries to be John, or James to be Peter, trouble begins. Each accepted himself to begin with. Didn't Jesus say to Peter when he inquired about another man's lot, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me."

AND QUITE APART from the influence of families, social pressure, and high moral ideals, tension between the actual and desired selves becomes poignant in the presence of handicaps. The human story has nothing finer to present than to the lives of handicapped men and women who have illustrated what Dr. Alfred Adler called "the human being's power to turn a minus into a plus." Alec Templeton entertains millions over the radio, and he is stone blind. Dr. Edward Livingston Trudeau, driven from his profession in New York City by tuberculosis, wrote, "The struggle with tuberculosis has brought me experience and left me recollections which I never could have known otherwise and which I would not exchange for the wealth of the Indies!" Gunga Din in Kipling's poem was a humbly situated man of lowly endowment, but he was a real person. "You're a better man than I am, Gunga Din." To say Demosthenes became a great orator in spite of his stammering is an understatement. He became a great orator because he stammered. As the story goes he filled his mouth with pebbles and spoke against the noise of the waves until he actually orated. Theodore Roosevelt started with a frail physique and so successfully overcame it that he became a Rough Rider and a lion-hunter. And who in our day will deny that infantile paralysis can keep a man from becoming president.

New Horizons

Security With Peace - By STEPHEN BLACK

A RECENT NEWS RELEASE proclaimed to the world that men no longer want to be rich, no longer want to be famous or to have power over others. What men want today is security. Security means different things to different people, but if you ask the average man who talks about security what he means by the word, he'll probably tell you he wants to experience the feeling of being secure from hunger, the elements, sickness, danger, and all physical discomforts. He wants an assurance of safety or certainty; he wants freedom from anxiety and doubt. Now if that is what man wants, what are his possibilities of obtaining that kind of security? What would happen to him if he had it?

Everywhere you go you hear people talking about security—"security from the cradle to the grave." But do they really want this? I don't think they do? Would you want it at the price of freedom? Would you exchange your God-given agency for it? No, you wouldn't. You start to resist the efforts of your parents to keep you safe and secure at a very early age.

Would you have, for instance, security in childhood? True, a child likes to feel secure as to his home and his physical comforts, but try to protect him from all danger, and you will find childish rebellion even to the extent of leaving home. Not always does a child's rebellion result in his giving up security, but that thought is perhaps uppermost in his mind from the moment he becomes conscious of his right to choose for himself. Absolute security is in opposition to God's law. The child senses this and instinctively turns against parents who try to keep him too secure. Parents who try to do the thinking for their children in an effort to keep them secure find later that they have spoiled them and left them unprepared for life. The late historian, Hendrik Willem Van Loon, said that if he desired anything special for his grandchildren, it was that their early life may not be too easy. He knew the harm that might come of letting children feel too secure.

WOULD YOU BE SECURE in your religion? When you accept the creed of a church, does it give you a feeling of intellectual security? Do you feel that you have the whole of God's law, and God can reveal no more to man than that which is contained in one book? Or does the Bible teach you that what God has done in the past and what he has revealed in former times he can reveal today or at some future time? If your creed in any way limits God, then you do not have intellectual security; you have intellectual stagnation.

Perhaps this illustration will clarify the point. Two artists were asked to paint pictures portraying their conception of security. The first chose for his scene a lake hidden among the mountains. The second painted a thundering waterfall, with a fragile birch tree bending over the foam. At the fork of a branch, almost wet with the cataract's spray, a bird sat on its nest. The first painting showed only stagnation. The lake was beautiful to behold in its mountainous setting; the waters were securely hemmed in by the towering peaks, but they were stagnant. Only when the waters were released to tumble down over the boulders and fulfill their God-given purpose were they really at peace. They found security as they irrigated the parched plains and valleys below. But more important in the second painting was the position of the bird on its nest in the frail birch tree which extended out over the foam below the gigantic falls. Here was real security, for in spite of the precarious position of the nest, the bird felt secure. Few of its enemies would dare disturb its home beneath the ever-crashing falls, and as the bird sat on its nest its instinct assured it in some mysterious way that God's purposes were being wrought. Here was portrayed security with peace.

DO RICHES BRING SECURITY? Two men were moderately wealthy during the boom days of the late nineteen twenties. Neither one needed to work another day for the rest of his life. They believed they had security in this world, but when the stock market crash came, they tried desperately to hold on to their security; as a result they lost their entire fortunes. Was their security gone? It was for one of them, because he jumped from a window on the twenty-sixth floor of the office building that was named after him. When he lost his worldly security, he had no peace. However, the other man after the first shock of finding himself broke once more, was quite relieved—he found greater peace than he had ever known before. He re-evaluated his life and its purpose and started over again—a wiser man than he had ever before been. He learned from bitter experience that it is useless to have security without inward peace.

WHAT IS IT, then, that men really want? Is it security? A certain kind of physical security, yes. But I believe there can never be real security without inner peace—the kind of peace that comes to each of us when we know we are like the bird in the slender birch tree beneath the pounding waterfall; the kind of peace that comes to us when we obey the laws of God. "Great peace have they which love thy laws: and nothing shall offend them." As long as there are men who do not accept the perfect law of liberty as proclaimed by Christ, there can be no physical security. We find security with peace as we find our true mission in life and work at it in harmony with the law that governs all things.

The security that is talked about in political speeches, in sociology classes, and on street corners is a security without peace. It is unstable and stagnate. Men could not bear it; they would become useless and be as miserable as a child tied to his mother's apron strings. Jesus saw this truth and tried to teach his disciples not to trust in the things of this world. His message was one of social righteousness, not worldly security. He said, "He who doeth the works of righteousness shall receive his reward, even peace in this world and eternal life in the world to come." The man who does righteousness will find security with peace, for he will have the peace Jesus promised those who kept his commandments. "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." The peace that comes to men when they break loose their worldly fetters and live in harmony with God's eternal law is the only real security possible to man. If you want security, find your godly purpose in life, work at it, and you will find peace.

spirit of the emblems and the office work of the Holy Spirit in attending upon it. I believe that.

Hence, today, I renew my covenant before God and before my brethren, and hope to stand steadfast whether my life now be long or short from this time; and so, desiring that I may walk carefully the ways of life with each and every one of you and when the time shall come for my departure I shall be able to look up, and conscious of all my defects, of my shortcomings, of my secret sinning, I have the confidence to put myself in the hands of a just God and trust him for what may await me.

May God, in his infinite mercy enable each one of us to understand the sacred character of the work we have been doing this day in thus partaking of these emblems, that they may be blessed to each of us, that we may walk the ways of life with such carefulness that we may indeed witness to them that are without and those that are within, that our lives are before Him and that they may be known and read of all men—all things of lovely repute, things that are lovely, of good repute and of good report, that we may think upon them and make them a part of our inner life and our manifest life before each other and the world. May God add his blessings as he sees that we need, in Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

Dr. Torrey's Prescription for a Revival

I can give you a prescription that will bring a revival to any church or community or any city on earth. The prescription is as follows: First, let a few Christians (they need not be many) get thoroughly right with God themselves. This is the prime essential! If this is not done, the rest that I am to say will come to nothing. Second, let them bind themselves together to pray for a revival until God opens the heavens and comes down. Third, let them put themselves at the disposal of God for him to use as he sees fit in winning others to Christ. That is all!

This is sure to bring a revival to any church or community. I have given this prescription around the world. It has been taken by many churches and communities, and in no instance has it ever failed. And it cannot fail!

 FLOORS

The church I was visiting was prettily decorated, and the floor was waxed until it shone. It was so slick I skidded, but managed to keep my feet. Then an elderly sister came in, slipped, and fell. She was in great pain. When the ambulance took her to the hospital an X ray revealed a fractured hip. . . . Do you suppose that the people who waxed that floor will think for a minute that they are responsible for the woman's broken hip? No, the type of mind that indulges in that kind of vanity rarely thinks of others. Such people go right on waxing floors so that others may break their bones. Why is it necessary for a public building—or a home either, for that matter—to have a dangerous floor? . . . These may seem like harsh words, but shouldn't something be said to remind people of their responsibility to others?

 HOW TO PREACH

Young men entering into the ministry could do worse than consider this advice by an old preacher: "Bred'ren, I tells you how I does it. I takes ma tex' and I 'splains hit; den I mystifies hit and sprangles hit out for a while. Den I puts in de rousements!"

 THE HUMAN ANIMAL

This was at Union Station. A little man with big whiskers and an enormous broom was sweeping up an area of the floor. Dust and dirt, mingled with all the odd little items a civilized life makes it necessary for us to discard, littered the floor. He was gathering it up for his trash can on wheels. There were containers where the public could put these things, but few bothered. They just threw them on the floor. What would their homes look like? Behavior in public reveals what kind of people we are.

A big man with heavy jowls, his eyes set in a porcine stare, crossed the place. He dropped some torn tickets and a gummy cigar stub. There was something about him like the fourth prize in the hog exhibit at the county fair. A small boy romped at his mother's side, dropping popcorn; he was definitely a frisky pup. Then a girl in her teens, as perky and nervous as a squirrel; she could have climbed a tree right then. She dropped some Kleenex smeared with lipstick. A young woman, twenty-odd, slick as a model in a store window, flitted by like a canary; all she lacked was a cage. A faint, bewitching perfume trailed hauntingly behind her, disturbing nothing but the senses, and them violently. Finally a collegiate youth, scattering gum wrappers, smiles, a cigarette butt . . .

The little man with the broom looked back at the floor, so soon dirty again. He sighed, said nothing, and swung his big broom.

How much like animals—coarse and untidy—some human beings are. In South Africa, hunters judge what kind of wild creatures have passed by the character of the "spoor"—the traces and signs on the trail. What would the people of the future judge of us by examining our "spoor"?

How to Be a Church School Missionary

WHEN JANE PARKER went to call on her new neighbor, Mrs. Fields, she found that someone had been there before her.

"I've heard about you, Jane," said the lady, speaking gently so as not to disturb her six-month-old daughter who lay in her crib by the window. "Mrs. Porter who lives next door has told me what a wonderful faith you had when your baby was so sick and everyone was afraid he wouldn't pull through."

Jane Parker stood back on her heels. Sister Porter certainly hadn't let any opportunities slip by her to bring in something about the gospel.

Mrs. Fields was talking. "I have never lived any place where I've found such a good neighbor as Mrs. Porter is. She took my washing last week and did it for me when my baby was cranky with her teething. And she has talked to me about your church. I'm going to start coming to church school and bring the kiddies. Any religion that makes as good a neighbor as Mrs. Porter and creates as strong a faith as you have must have something to offer."

Jane lost no time in offering her own invitation and giving some information about where to take the kiddies. She made plans to come and go with Mrs. Fields the next Sunday so she would know just what to do.

COULD YOU BE A MISSIONARY LIKE MRS. PORTER AND JANE?

THE HOOVERS were isolated. That is to say that in a young city of 50,000 they were the only members of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint family. There was Dad Hoover and Mother, and the four daughters, ranging in age from seven to fifteen. The Hoovers were sold on their religion and were not going to let it become a nonentity in their lives, even if they couldn't associate with other Saints.

The first Saturday after they got settled in their new home in Ebansville, Mother Hoover came up with the suggestion, "Let's go to church school tomorrow."

Everyone looked at her as if they thought she were crazy. But that's just what the Hoovers ended up doing. All six of them dressed up in their Sunday best, and they had a church school class and a worship service too, right in their own living room, taught by Dad Hoover.

Before more than three Sundays had passed, one by one the girls began to bring their friends to their home. Then the parents of the friends came too.

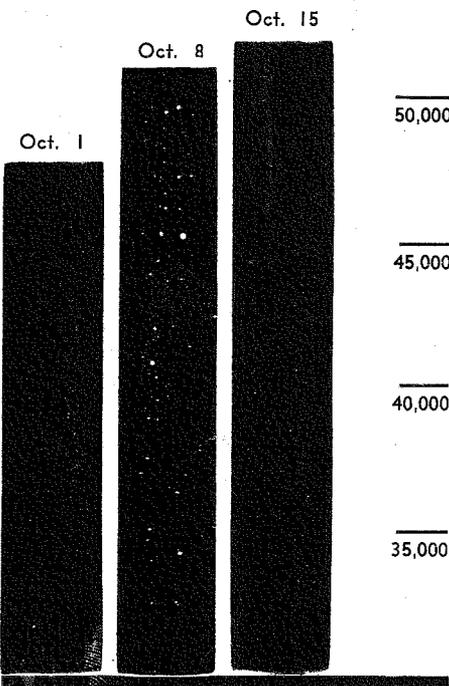

That was just the beginning. By bringing one and two and three to their home church school, they soon filled the room.

The next step was the family worship. At first it was just a family affair, but soon, as the neighbor children stopped in on the way to school to walk with one of the Hoover girls, they were invited to join in. After a while they came early on purpose. Then the parents called to find out what the Hoovers had at their house every morning that was such a big attraction.

And that is the beginning of how there came to be a branch in Ebansville today. The best part of this story is that it is true.

PRESIDENT W. WALLACE SMITH writes:

Information comes to us from the Statistical Department that baptisms in September total 505, which is the largest number for September since 1929. This leaves us, however, a few short of the total for the same period last year.

We all know that in our great work of evangelizing the world, there are many other things to consider along with baptism. It alone is not enough. But other things, without baptism, are not enough either.

Let's think of it this way. When someone is converted, and his baptism is delayed, his blessings attendant upon membership are delayed too. We are keeping him separated from the Lord.

Conversion is a continuous experience. It should not be interrupted for a long period of time, or it has to be commenced all over again. We do not stand still and wait. The candidate grows, or withers. There is no logical stopping point until maturity is reached and the candidate has obeyed the spiritual law.

God is reaching for the hearts, and seeking for the souls of all the people in the world. Their fullest blessings await the time when they have obeyed the gospel and accepted Christ. When they accept him, he accepts them. The time is when baptism and confirmation have taken place.

If you were rescuing a cold and hungry child on a winter day, you would not leave him standing on the steps outside the door in front of your home. You would swing the door open and urge him to come in.

There are people near you standing at the door of the church, exposed to the spiritual cold of the world. Bring them in—now!

Introducing...

GLADYS MARIE PARKS, Independence, Missouri (page 16), was born, baptized and educated in Independence, Missouri. EDUCATION FORWARD

Apostles Edmund J. Gleazer and Reed M. Holmes have just completed holding two Religious Education Institutes. The one at Spokane, Washington, was held October 14 and 15, and the other at Portland, Oregon, was held October 21 and 22.

Brothers Gleazer and Holmes' agenda calls for Religious Education Institutes at Seattle, Washington, and Vancouver, B. C.

NAUVOO DISTRICT

Apostle D. T. Williams attended the Nauvoo District institute and conference held at Nauvoo on October 28 and 29. Brother Williams taught the three general classes that were held on Saturday. They were directed primarily to the priesthood members, but everyone was invited to attend.

Elder D. J. Williams, who is pastor of the Burlington Branch, was re-elected district president at the conference.

A NEW EVANGELIST

On October 15 at Louisville, Kentucky, Apostle Percy E. Farrow and Evangelist Arthur Gage of Indianapolis ordained Wesley H. Burwell of Louisville to the office of evangelist.

ORDINATIONS OF FATHER AND SON

On October 22 at Logan, Iowa, Apostles D. T. Williams and Charles R. Hield ordained Elvin Baughman to the order of evangelist and his son Alma to the office of elder. A special service was held for the occasion.

GRACELAND

The annual Alumni Association business meeting was held October 28 in the Memorial Student Center. Dr. Robert Brackenbury of Ann Arbor, Michigan, was elected president to succeed Mrs. Dean Butler Edwards. Dr. Brackenbury is an educational counselor at the University of Michigan and also travels throughout the state of Michigan examining schools for accreditation purposes.

The two vice-presidents elected were Harry Lorange and Ruth York, both of Lamoni. Brother Lorange is the superintendent of schools in Lamoni and was recently ordained to the office of high priest. Miss York is a member of the Graceland faculty. Mrs. Jack Mercer of Creston, Iowa, was elected secretary. Jerry Runkle, instructor of economics and business at Graceland, was elected treasurer. R. Edwin Browne, public relations director of Graceland, was elected the executive secretary.

SOLOISTS SELECTED

The four people who will sing the solo parts in the local presentation of the "Messiah" this Christmas season are Eldoralynne (Mrs. John) Dunaway of Joplin, Missouri, soprano; Donna (Mrs. Frederick O.) Weddle of Independence, contralto; William Ferguson of Independence, tenor; and Robert Downs of Kansas City, Missouri, baritone. The Independence Symphony Orchestra will accompany the 280-voice chorus when the local performance of the "Messiah" is presented in The Auditorium on the afternoon of December 24.

The Kingdom of God - Now ?

"When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power, and after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me."—Acts 1: 6-8.

The saints of the early days, like some now, were so anxious about the goal of the church that they forgot there was work to be done to reach it. They would by-pass the work and go immediately into the glory. They didn't realize there were changes to be wrought in their minds and spirits, as well as in the political and military situation in Palestine. It is one thing to dream of the Golden City; it is quite another to go there from wherever we happen to be.

On two Sundays two different types of preachers spoke at a church. One of them told the people what God was going to do. In glowing words he presented pictures from the drama of the ages. The people were to sit on the sidelines and watch God work. There wasn't much for them to do. They had given their names. They had been baptized. They were to wait for the glory to be ushered in. Being a Christian was a spectator's job. Christ had done it all. The people were washed in the blood of the Lamb. That was what he thought. He made a good lively show of the gospel story. The people loved it, many of them sitting on the edge of their seats. A few thoughtful ones, cold and unmoved, sat back.

The other preacher was an intelligent, devoted type. He had a clear vision of what the people were to do to carry out God's program for the world. He knew that they must improve themselves to become fit material for citizenship in the kingdom.

He told them of great opportunities for study, work, growth, and achievement that would lay the foundations of the kingdom. Those who had been most interested in the other preacher went to sleep. Some who managed to keep awake remained indifferent. They let the message go over their heads by the simple process of psychologically ducking. But there were also members in the congregation who were alert with hope and anticipation. This was a message they could appreciate. They knew it was practical. Though they were in the minority, they were people who could be trusted in the business of the kingdom.

These are two types of people in the church, and it depends on which takes the lead, whether the kingdom of God will remain a beautiful dream, or become a practical reality.

* * * *

It is hard for people to accept the statement: "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons." Goodspeed translates this passage: "It is not for you to know the times or the dates which the Father has fixed by his own authority." People are always trying to circumvent that principle. They think that, in spite of it, they have received special knowledge and understanding. They conveniently forget the barrier, leap over it, and ask innocently, "Lord, is it now?"

* * * *

Here is something to remember: We are not working on a timetable;

we are working on a chart of progress. Our task is not to mark off certain days and years on the calendar. It is to develop specific conditions and qualities in ourselves and in our society.

* * * *

Jesus didn't answer the question. He reminded the people of their job. He said, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me."

* * * *

What a challenge lies in those few words. How many of us realize their implications—the task that they put upon our shoulders?

What is a witness for Christ?

He is one who tells the story of the gospel—the story that Christ himself taught—the story of God's love for his children, of the fall, and of the plan of redemption and salvation.

The witness is one who lives a changed life, conforming to the obligations of the gospel plan.

The witness is one who dedicates himself to the task of helping to build the kingdom of God.

The witness tries to educate others and recruit them to the work.

The work of the witness may seem easy. It is not. Even if it is confined to talking, it is sometimes hard. It is not easy to reach cold and reluctant hearts and minds with the message. But witnessing must carry over into life if it is to bear fruit. "Truth has consequences," as one of our philosophers has said. "Truth is for consequences."

* * * *

Is the kingdom of God coming now? Will Zion be built? Many people will ask those questions.

God's plan is complete. It is all ready, at any time, for a people who can give it life. The kingdom of God waits, not for him, but for his children.

Missionary Work Among Spanish - Speaking Peoples

The First Presidency has been working very closely with Apostle C. R. Hield in an attempt to make contacts with and promote missionary work among the Spanish-speaking peoples in accordance with appointments made at the recent General Conference. We commend this article to "Herald" readers as reflecting ways in which this attempt is being made and solicit their co-operation.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY.

Other sheep I have which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.—John 10: 16.

STUDENTS OF BIBLE and Book of Mormon prophecies have long looked forward to the time when this church would be in a position to give further attention through missionary activity to the descendants of Book of Mormon peoples, as well as others anywhere in the world who speak the Spanish language. The Nephites once had the "fullness" of the gospel.

The last General Conference approved the appointment of the First Presidency, placing Elder Charles R. Hield as apostle to supervise this missionary activity looking toward the establishment of the truths of the Restoration, as preserved in the Reorganized Church, among our friends and neighbors south of the Rio Grande. Elder Wayne Simmons, who has spent several years in Central and South American countries, has been assigned by the Joint Council to assist in this challenging endeavor.

We have a number of church members in several of the countries south of the border: Mexico, Cuba, Venezuela, Argentina, Panama, etc. Correspondence through letters and tracts is being maintained with a number of other people yet not members of the church, in these countries, also in Spain. No doubt there are many others in these countries who are members of our church whose addresses we do not know. The leaders of this project would like very much to be able to contact these people, and we also hope that friends and relatives will encourage such members in Latin-America to write us, and also will urge them to become active where they are in the telling of the gospel.

STUDENTS OF THE REORGANIZATION attending our United States universities have accepted the task of winning some of their student friends from Spanish-speaking countries to the message of Christ. It is the "Pearl of Great Price" to us, and many of our students on these college campuses have organized themselves with a project leader and are finding ways to interest their friends from neighboring Latin-American countries in the truths of this church. They are eager to share it. Several groups have written, telling of the power of God's Spirit which has accompanied their efforts, and also how they have felt the destiny of such endeavors, as they think of the future expansion of the ancient Nephite message through Mexico, Central and South America, as also, of course, Cuba, Spain, etc. Many district and branch officials, priesthood members as well as the membership, are assisting the students at these college centers.

Several of our branches already have Spanish-speaking members. These branches are being recontacted, and plans are being made to visit and hold cottage or home meetings in several localities. Three such homes were offered for use in Kansas City as soon as it was announced the missionaries would be available. It is hoped each branch will arrange for at least one home meeting a week among Spanish-speaking peoples if such live in the community. Most of these Spanish-speaking people in the United States have relatives south of the border.

One devoted young lady, with ardent missionary zeal in her heart, wrote and wanted to know how she could assist. She is now in a capital of a Spanish-speaking country, where she has a fine job, is furthering her education, and writes of the joy and thrill she has received recently, for she has interested a number in her church and its truths. Would that we had hundreds more like that!

Each nation has a different set of laws governing its church activities. In Mexico for instance, "Only a Mexican by birth may be a minister of any religious creed" (Mexico constitutional law, 1917, article 130). This means that only native Mexicans may baptize, administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, perform marriage ceremonies, take charge of religious services, etc. All church property must be deeded over to the government, and then the government assigns it back to some trustees for church use, for as long as the laws are obeyed. These trustees must be natives of Mexico. The need of converting citizens of these countries is readily apparent. Therefore, the project continues among Spanish-speaking students, and among Spanish-speaking families in the United States, particularly along our southern border. All our people are called to assist in this endeavor wherever they may be.

Tracts are being prepared in Spanish. Also the translation of the Book of Mormon continues. A number of devoted and intelligent Spanish-speaking converts could assist in these translation projects also.

Elder Wayne Simmons is directing a project whereby students in the United States will correspond with young people and Latin-Americans studying English in American Cultural Centers in cities throughout Central and South America. Some of these may learn of Graceland this way, and, it is hoped, attend our church college. These and other students won to the church may well

Fully Persuaded -

By EMERY E. JENNINGS

President of Far West Stake

TODAY, when the hearts of many people are troubled, when their souls are heavy and concerned about the destiny of mankind, we become more anxious about the future of our church and the responsibility it has to bring to pass the purposes of God. Especially is this true when the church has the task of bringing to humanity the way of life not only in theory but also in actual practice.

On every hand we find crime, hate, and bloodshed. Around us everywhere men, women, and children are suffering the results of sin, and some are compelled to endure atrocities and indignities which are more dreadful than death.

Recently I have been reading about the tremendous cost of World War II. The best authorities are saying that the combined sum of money spent on the war effort by all the belligerent nations is one thousand billion dollars for armaments alone. They also say that in the late war the value of the property destroyed equals the sums spent for armaments, and accumulated expenses that must be paid in the future as a result of the war will amount to at least a billion dollars or more. Thus the cost of the warmongers actually amounts to over three thousand billion or three trillion dollars. What three trillion dollars would do if used constructively for the people of the world is illustrated by enumerating things that amount of money could buy for mankind. Three trillion dollars would: (1) build a comfortable, $5,000 house for each of the world's families, (2) provide a four-year college education for five million young men and women, (3) build a million dollar hospital for over 50,000 communities of 2,000 people or more. There is no question but that when the German people accepted the strutting Hitler, they made the costliest mistake the world has ever known.

IN SPITE OF THIS TREMENDOUS LOSS, however, if money were the only thing war is costing us, we could feel quite fortunate. But men all over the world who seem to know are saying that there have been at least fifty to seventy-five million people killed or destroyed, either through actual combat or by privation or starvation. What a tremendous loss—the equivalent of a whole nation the size of England completely destroyed!

Yet the world has lost more than money and life. It has lost much of its culture and refinement. Morality is on the decline. Appreciation for the better things is being destroyed. The delinquency of youth is on the increase, and many sociologists are saying that the home is being invaded to the danger point. They fear that with the deterioration of the home the very foundations of all nations are being undermined.

It seems the world may be again rapidly approaching another world war. Let no man be deceived, we are actually fighting Russia in Korea and surely no intelligent person believes that peace shall come in our day. Already in this new outbreak, the United States alone has spent ten billion dollars and thousands of lives.

THE FUTURE LOOKS BLACK. But against this darkness the church stands out more brightly than ever as the great task of building the kingdom of God on earth becomes more vital and indispensable. Men and women are becoming increasingly concerned about a new social order, a civilization in which the needs of man may be supplied. As Latter Day Saints we know that the only hope for mankind is the kingdom of God, a kingdom brought about by a group of people willing to subordinate their all to the divine purpose. They will be willing to consecrate not only their monies and properties but their talents to this kingdom we call Zion.

As we sense more keenly the great need for Zion, we must evaluate two types of thinking. There will be the sincere liberal who will rightfully contend for an immediate Zion program that will give our people economic security, and the conservative who will rightfully question the moral, economic, and spiritual ability of our people to sustain any broad Zion program successfully. The idealist will say that something must be done immediately, and many suggestions will be presented; some of these suggestions will not have been well-thought through.

The realist will be reluctant to accept these plans or suggestions and will contend that before anything can be done much study should be given to any proposed program before it is inaugurated.

I think that neither of these types of thinking will contain the ultimate solution; both will be needed to build Zion. In this task we face problems of economics, sociology, and government. In our attempt to show the way in these fields of social relationship all will be needed—the theorist, the dreamer, and the individualist who possess vision and are ahead of the rest in thought and conviction. Consequently he will need the pragmatist to temper the zeal of the theorist or dreamer. The thinking person will not allow any theorist or idealist or man of vision to claim his allegiance and devotion without much consideration, but he must not lose sight of the fact that it is the task of this church to heal the wounds of a war-torn world.

This is the mission of our institution, and there is too much at stake for us to be dilatory. The church must be victorious and lead the way. Therefore the church must respond to her work with a rapidity that will give the dying world the hope and guidance it must have. We ask ourselves, Do we possess the moral integrity, the spiritual stamina, and physical courage to make our church the light and beacon, the haven of security, and the instrument of redemption God desires it to be? Do those of us who are leaders possess the spiritual qualities necessary for this type of ministry? Do those who are followers possess the loyalty necessary for the accomplishment of such a great work?

I SEE CERTAIN DYNAMIC IMPERATIVES in the life of Jesus Christ and other great men that are indispensable in the development of such leadership and for the building of the kingdom of God. These virtuous imperatives are costly, so much so that few people have been able to acquire them, nevertheless through constant effort we must develop both as individuals and collectively as a church the spiritual virtues that will make us qualified for our common task.

The life of Jesus exhibited certain definite qualities which, if we acquire them, will make our adventure successful and will give the world the leadership it needs. Jesus really believed that God had given him the responsibility of redeeming mankind. He appreciated this responsibility and clearly saw what it would cost him to carry out his mission, but he made up his mind that regardless of what it would cost him he would remain loyal to what he knew to be true.

Never for a moment did Jesus question his mission. He knew God had chosen him to teach the way of life and to lead humanity back to God. Herein lay the power of his success, and he could not be diverted. He did not dissipate his energy by one day being loyal and determined to carry on and the next day not being sure whether or not he could hold out. With steadfastness of purpose, early in life, Jesus settled that question once and for all, and after he had decided to represent God, all the forces of organized evil could not change his mind. Jesus could speak with authority because his relationship with God became one of unity and complete understanding.

The people soon recognized that here was a man who actually spoke with authority and were therefore impelled to respect his teachings. Jesus knew, too, that he possessed the message of truth, and that no other philosophy or ideology would save either him or mankind. His own assurance of the truth of what he proclaimed gave him the stamina, will power, and determination to teach all who would listen to him the message of salvation. He was converted to his way of life. Because of these two great factors—first his conviction that God had made him responsible for mankind, and second his unshakable belief in the truth of the message he brought—it was possible for him to go forward with a spiritual power that moved people to activity, swayed the skeptics, and made sinners repent. Jesus' concern for the welfare of humanity was so deep that he was willing to subordinate his all to what he knew was true.

His magnetic love became irresistible. The four Gospels say that all the people marveled at him. More than that, the people were astonished and "amazed at the mighty power of God." They had never seen any teacher "after this fashion," and asked themselves "What kind of man is this?" His enemies thought he was mad, and even his friends accused him of being "beside himself."

ESUS ENDURED every insult man and devil could conceive. Mark tells us, in chapter three, verse seven of his book, that no sooner had Jesus started his work than the "Pharisees went forth" and straightway took counsel with the Herodians against him that they might destroy him. From then on Jesus was a marked man. He was spit upon, stoned, cursed, and humiliated in public. He was called an illegitimate child, a glutton and a wine bibber.

He was mocked, smitten, and subjected to every mean, devilish, and contemptible trick known in that day. Jesus endured these things because he was convinced that God was his Father and that this persecution was part of his appointed task of helping his Father in the saving of men.

I don't think Jesus was a superhuman in any physical sense, and I don't think he wanted to die. He enjoyed living and loved to be among men of good will. In fact, Jesus would have liked a good home with whatever conveniences and luxuries that were available. Undoubtedly Jesus would have been successful in any field of endeavor in business or in the professions because of his knowledge of men and their weaknesses as well as their strength. But he did not lose sight of his main mission. He willingly passed up all other fields of endeavor to fulfill the destiny for which he was born—the saving of mankind. He put first things first, and the pathway for him was no more easy than it is for us. He suffered the agonies of the flesh and spirit many times, so that we could live. This quality of consecration is indispensable to real discipleship as well as to leadership, and people who have actually accomplished things for God not only have believed as Jesus believed but have had the courage of their convictions.

LET US LOOK at the disciples who paid the utmost price for standing in the defense of the gospel. They were not timid souls but men of courage. James and John were called the sons of "thunder." Thomas, the doubter, cried out, "Come, let us go and die with him," and all the apostles except John were eventually called on to die for the gospel's sake.

Paul, the most interesting and spectacular follower of Christ, met the people of the world head on and in his enthusiasm to tell them about Christ endured many persecutions. Once he was stoned in the city of Lystra in Asia Minor (now Turkey), dragged outside the limits of the town, and left for dead.

On another missionary trip Silas and Paul were preaching in Philippi, the chief city of Macedonia, which is now in Bulgaria. A woman, possessed with a spirit of divination, tormented Paul and Silas for many days, and Paul commanded the spirit to leave. Because this woman had been making gain for her masters, they arrested Paul and Silas and brought them before the magistrates. The multitude rose up against the disciples and beat them with many stripes.

Five times Paul was beaten with thirty-nine lashes, and three times he was beaten with rods. He was shipwrecked while being taken to Rome from Caesarea. The ship was wrecked at the island of Melita, now called Malta. While there Paul was bitten by a poisonous viper and would have died had the Lord not saved him. This miracle caused the natives to consider him a god. Two other times Paul was shipwrecked; once he spent a night and day clinging to a floating spar.

In the days of the early church, the disciples, with headquarters at Jerusalem, traveled over the Roman Empire and the world, proclaiming everywhere that their Master was the author of everlasting life. These men who came from a despised nation preached with such boldness and proclaimed the word of God with such spiritual fierceness that the very people who had most despised them were converted and joined hands in the great religious movement. A new people, a holy nation, was formed upon the earth, and the astonished world beheld in the disciples of the lowly Nazarene a purity and self-denial, a charity and heroism, the spirit of which it had no power to resist. Yes, the world slaughtered the followers of Christ—murdered thousands of men, women, and children who refused to deny their Lord—but in doing so sealed the success of the Christian movement.

TODAY we are called to a task that is sure and certain—a task parallel to the one the saints faced nineteen hundred years ago. It isn't that we do not understand our personal responsibilities and what we must do individually to make our lives the temples for divine expression. It isn't that we do not understand the general goals and objectives to which we should give ourselves. We know we have the responsibility to build spiritual lives worthy of God's approbation and blessings; that we are to erect the stately towers of righteousness in our businesses and professions. We know that we should reveal the love of God and Christ in our society. Moreover, we have the commandment to preach the gospel to all the world, beginning with our neighbors and friends. We clearly comprehend that commandment. Every member of this church knows he should do all in his power to prepare himself for service; that he should live a clean, upright life; that he should study, go to church, invite his friends to go with him, and support the local congregations by contributing to the budget; that he should pay his tithing and refrain from indulging in those things which are of secondary nature. As a matter of fact we know the Lord has commanded us to prepare and organize every needful thing and to take this world's goods and use it as designed by God.

It isn't that we do not know what to do to assist in the many objectives of the church. What we do lack, however, is the courage of our convictions and the power of the Holy Ghost. We need to develop the spirit of self-denial and courageous living for God in our personal devotion and allegiance to our institution; we need to make our church what God wants it to be. We can do this by emulating the courageous example as set forth by Christ, his disciples, and other men who have been able to bring about great things for God. We can have spiritual power. We can demonstrate to the world the potency and efficacy of our gospel. We can build the kingdom of God on earth if we but live courageously by putting into practice the teachings of our Lord.

It is our privilege and responsibility to be the light to a sin-sick world. It is ours to "bring forth and establish the cause of Zion." The world awaits a people who dare to make discipleship real and authoritative, their lives a revelation of goodness, their institutions the embodiment of right and truth by submerging all they have to the will of God and by living the convictions which they have.

Thanksgiving - Nature's Sunset

By W. Blair McClain

ONE of the most impressive things I know is the miracle of our daily sunrise. The promise of new opportunity is blessed with the light of a new day. When the efforts of our day are accomplished, nature's sunset gives the benediction of divine approval in the preparation of another dawn.

Sandwiched between summer and winter is the time of harvest, for the gathering of the sheaves, the sunset of our season making ready for the new dawn in the spring. It is a time especially designed by our Creator for remembering, for counting our blessings, rejoicing, and giving thanks.

Thirty-four hundred years ago Moses instructed his people: "Seven days shalt thou keep a solemn feast unto the Lord thy God; because the Lord thy God shall bless thee with thine increase, and in all the works of thine hands, therefore thou shalt rejoice."—Deuteronomy 16:15. Is there any wonder our Pilgrim Fathers should initiate their existence on this continent with the giving of thanks?

Summer is over, the leaves have fallen, the corn once green is now in shocks, the grain is in the bins, and the bloom of summer has been tucked to bed with the divine blessing of nature's sunset, harvest time. It is not a time for despondency or sorrow, but for rejoicing and getting ready for the new dawn.

Sketch of Life of Nina G. Smith

NINA GRENAWALT SMITH was born on the sixteenth day of August, 1886, in Harrison County, Missouri, about seven miles from the town of Lamoni, Iowa. Her parents were John Grenawalt, of rugged German parentage, and Fannie Robinson Grenawalt, daughter of William Perrine Robinson, one of the best known and most respected citizens of Bethany, Missouri, who, during the Civil War, served as colonel of the Twenty-third Missouri Volunteers in the Union Army.

When she was quite young, her father died and her mother took the children to live in Lamoni; her only sister Nellie, Mrs. Moroni Traxler, then living in Canada. Here at Lamoni, Sister Nina was reared, attended the public schools, and in 1902 was graduated from the music and elocution departments of Grace-land College. She then for a time continued her music and art work at Christian College, Columbia, Missouri, and took a course in domestic science in Kansas State College at Manhattan.

She was married to Israel A. Smith at Lamoni on the fourteenth day of March, 1908, the late President Joseph Smith officiating at their marriage, and she has shared the professional life and labors of her husband up to the date of her death which came suddenly, though greatly feared for many months, during the early hours of Sunday, October 8.

There were born of this marriage two sons: Joseph Perrine, named after his paternal and maternal grandfathers, born on September 7, 1912, and who died when he was a junior in the University of Missouri; and Donald Carlos who was born on March 4, 1916.

With her infant son Joseph Perrine and husband, she came to live in Independence in May, 1913, and since March of 1916, they have maintained residence at 1214 West Short Street in this city.

After coming to Missouri, Sister Nina continued her studies with instructors at Independence and Kansas City, and her life was devoted, next to her home, to musical and cultural activities. She was a charter member of The Independence Music Club, was its president at times, and served on some of its boards continuously to the time of her death. She also was a member of The Mothers' Club for nearly thirty years and served as its president.

From the spring of 1916-1924, following the death of their mother, she took into her home and mothered the three younger brothers of her husband: Richard, Wallace, and Reginald. For a number of years Sister Smith served with exemplary diligence and faithfulness as director of the Stone Church Women's Department.

When World War II began, she became a Navy Mother and worked with the Red Cross as a Gray Lady until her health failed early in 1946.

She was actively engaged in the work and study of the Delphian Literary Society.

By virtue of her husband's service as a member of the General Assembly of Iowa, she was a member of the Ladies Legislative League of that State, and since coming to Missouri attended some of their reunions.

She had been a member of the Presidents and Past Presidents of Women's Clubs of Jackson County for several years.

When Sister Nina was quite young, her mother became a convert to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and although she died a few years afterwards, she had brought all of her two daughters and five sons into the church. All of them retained their membership and interest in the church during their earthly tenure. Sister Nina was the last of the family to pass to the beyond, and the loss of brothers and sister—the latter only a few months ago—brought much sorrow to her during recent years.

Sister Nina's outstanding achievements were in the realm of music and song; she became quite proficient as a vocalist and gave freely of her talents to church choral work at Lamoni and Independence. She sang in the Independence Stone Church Choir for a great many years, and took leading roles in the Messiah and other recitals rendered by that fine organization for nine of its thirty annual renditions. And she rendered a ministry to the sorrowing by singing at hundreds of funeral services.

In May, 1946, while working with the church women at what was then called the Campus or Commodity Shop, she was stricken with a heart attack, an ailment which terminated her ministry of music, though she maintained her interest in musical activities to the last, attending in person as an auditor the recent Messiah recitals and broadcasts.

Her decline in health caused her family and friends grave concern, not knowing when death might strike, but she continued to preside over her household, and insisted on her husband's carrying on his work as president of the church although it often took him from home for various periods, and he was in a distant city when death came silently in her

If Amos Spoke Today

By EDWARD H. ROBERTS

The following paraphrase of chapters of the prophecies of Amos was read by Reverend Edward H. Roberts, associate professor of homiletics, Princeton Theological Seminary, as a Sunday morning Scripture lesson. We are reprinting it, with permission from "Current Religious Thought" for March, 1949 (page 4). The preparation of paraphrases like this is a difficult task, and must be checked at every point to see that the spirit of the scriptural message is faithfully maintained. But when it is well done, Scripture paraphrasing is a rewarding spiritual exercise. Some of the key Book of Mormon Scriptures lend themselves very readily to this kind of study.

CHAPTER I.

The words of Amos, which he saw concerning America in the days of Truman, President of the United States, and in the days of Attlee, Prime Minister of George VI, King of Great Britain, in the years after World War II.

Thus saith the Lord: For the overflowing number of transgressions of Germany, of Japan, of Italy, of Russia, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have oppressed the peoples, and did cast off all pity: but I will send a fire upon Stalin, which shall devour the palace of the Kremlin.

Thus saith the Lord: For the overflowing number of transgressions of Britain, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; for words of freedom have been in their mouths while they have kept men slaves for their profit; they cry of democracy, yet go trafficking with the hirelings of tyranny: but I will kindle a fire in the wall of London.

CHAPTER II

Thus saith the Lord: For the overflowing number of transgressions of the United States, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they have exchanged personal integrity for bribes; they pant after the wages of the poor, and take advantage of the innocent; they go, each man in his own way, and jealously guard their blind spots concerning the evil that lies on their doorsteps; they are skilled in their shirking of responsibility, and leave others to solve the problems of their day. And they use to their own advantage gifts laid on the altar, and they drink their liquor in defiance of the house of their God.

I brought you up from lands of oppression, and led you from ocean to ocean, to possess the land of the Indian. And I raised up of your sons for preachers, and of your young men for ministers. Is it now even thus, O ye children of the Pilgrim Fathers? saith the Lord.

But ye gave your sons money to squander, cars to drive, liquor to drink, while all the time ye commanded your preachers saying: Stick to the simple Gospel. Behold, I will take from you your luxuries and will break you beneath my righteous judgment like debris under the wheels of a heavily loaded truck.

CHAPTER III

Hear this word that the Lord hath spoken against you, O children of America, against the whole family which I brought out of the lands of Europe, saying:

You of all the families of the earth, have I cared for; therefore I will punish you for your iniquities. Can two walk together, except they be agreed? No.

Proclaim from pulpits and platforms, in the market place and in the temples of government and commerce, in factories and on farms: The day of judgment is at hand.

Hear ye, and testify in the Christian Church, saith the Lord God, the God of hosts, that in the day that I shall visit the transgressions of America upon her, I will also visit your churches. I will smite him who speaks empty words.

CHAPTERS IV-VIII

Hear this, O ye that would say: When will holidays be done that we may sell our goods? and the Sabbath be over that we may set our wares, making the dollar big?

Thus he showed me: and behold the Lord said: Behold I will set a plumb line in the midst of my people in the United States; I will measure their conduct as against the principles they profess to follow.

Then great and influential men in the Church and in the State sent to the President saying: Amos hath conspired against thee. He hath gone about proclaiming his denunciations and un-American ideas: the people are not able to bear his words! So the preacher was told to hold his tongue, for America is a great power in the world, and none can equal her.

Then answered Amos: No preacher am I, but a layman. The Lord God took me as I followed my flock of sheep and said to me, Go, speak the truth to America. Now, therefore, thus saith the Lord, Follow your immoralities and sins; continue in your unchristian ways, and America will go the way of nations who by their iniquities have come to a tragic end.

Then Amos went about the land and came into a place where many Americans thronged and milled about in their passionate pursuit of pleasure. And the name of the place was Times Square where he spoke.

Then he went about the land and entered into churches, and temples and cathedrals. And the Lord God spoke thus: Woe unto you that desire the dawn of the new world order! To what end would ye have

Experiences of a Missionary - Part XII

By L. G. HOLLOWAY

CONCERNING THE HEREAFTER

There are times when we look back over the years and realize God has been very good to us. I wish to relate an experience that affected my father and mother and has been of great consolation to me.

For many years mother suffered from lung trouble. Each time I went to my field of labor I would wonder if I should ever see her again. Father many times talked to me regarding mother's condition and dreaded the experience when she would be taken from him. All of a sudden he ceased to talk to me about her passing, and I thought he had become reconciled to her going.

One day he was talking to Brother Garver and asked him to preach his funeral sermon when he died. Brother Garver informed him he would comply with the request, but suggested that he make the request known to me. Some weeks later Father visited us, and when we were hitching up his team to go home, he asked me to see that Brother Garver should officiate at his funeral. I told him I would see that his wish was carried out, but no doubt it would be a number of years before that event took place. He replied by saying it would not be long. He seemed to have a premonition that he would soon die.

it? Shall not that day be darkness, even very dark, and no brightness in it?

CHAPTER IX

Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful nation, and I will destroy it from the pages of history; save that I will not utterly destroy my people, saith the Lord. For lo, I will command, and I will sift the United States among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve.

In that day I will raise up all the just and righteous out of the ruins of a world laid waste in the destruction their sin has brought, and I will build as in the days of old. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall walk in the ways of righteousness; saith the Lord thy God.

A DREAM OF ETERNAL LIFE

Not long after this I had a dream that stands out vividly in my mind. I had worried somewhat concerning father and mother. I knew them as honorable and upright in all their dealings. They had been faithful in their church relationship, but I had heard them pray audibly only a few times in their lives. In the dream father came to me and asked me to go with him to see a home that was nearly completed where he and mother were soon to reside. He took me to a most beautiful grove of trees that made a wonderful setting for a home. He pointed out the new building being made of the finest material that could be found. The general appearance was beautiful. After looking it over carefully and admiring its beauty, father asked me to go on the inside with him which I did. While I had admired the exterior, I found the interior even more wonderful. As I gazed at its furnishings, I could not help wondering when this place had been erected. I turned to my father and congratulated him and mother on the wonderful home they had constructed, and asked him, "When did you build this home?" He replied, "We have been working on it for years." Then a voice from an adjoining room said to me, "Your father and mother built better than you knew." After I admired it for some time, father informed me that he was going to move in shortly, but mother was to move in a little later on. I said to him, "That is rather a peculiar arrangement. Why don't you both move in at the same time?" He replied, "It has been arranged differently. I am to move in first."

DEATH OF PARENTS

It was only a few months after this while I was working in eastern Iowa that a long distance call came from my wife, informing me that father had suffered a paralytic stroke and he wished to see me. I hurried home and went to his bedside, but he had lost consciousness and never recognized me before he died. From the time this dream was given to me, I never worried regarding the future of my parents. Mother lived two years after father's death. I have thanked the Lord for this dream many times and have every reason to believe that in the final day they will inherit the celestial reward.

LIFE AFTER DEATH

While on this subject I should like to give another experience that may be of help to those who read these pages. Some years ago while I was holding a series of services in Clinton, Iowa, I was using as a topic, "The Destiny of Man." As I entered into a discussion of this subject, a keen desire came to me to know the state of the dead between death and the resurrection. I sought the Lord in prayer and asked that, if it be consistent with his will, he make known to me the condition of my loved ones who had died. Each evening as I retired for the night, I would repeat this request, hoping some light might be given me. After praying each evening for nearly a week with no results, I decided it perhaps was not wise that I should know the state of the dead so wondered if I should continue to ask for this information. I decided to ask one more time, and if I did not receive what I desired, I would cease to ask. During the night I was granted an answer to my prayer. I saw father and mother and my daughter who had died. As I saw them I knew who they were as readily as I would have known them while in life. My daughter threw her arms around me and was happy to see me. I said to her, "No doubt time passes slowly while here waiting for us to join you." She said, "No, time is measured out to you; but time is not measured to us who have passed the vale."

I was made to realize these loved ones were conscious and understood many things that are mysteries to those of us in mortality. In the final day we will be permitted to associate with them. There the celestial will minister to those less fortunate who inherit the terrestrial glory, and those of the terrestrial will minister to those of the celestial. The love we have for each other will continue on the other side.

My mother for many years dreaded and feared the time of her passing. Turning to me she informed me that had she known the beauty and grandeur of the paradise of God she never would have had any fear. It is impossible to convey to the human mind the joy and happiness that come to those who have entered into a covenant with Christ and remained true to that covenant as they enter into that rest prepared for the children of God.

I was told this dream was given in answer to my prayers. The Lord had respected my desire and had given me something that satisfied my mind. While many things are still mysterious to me, I do thank the Lord for at least making known to me some things that have given me a better understanding of the state of the dead. I have not the slightest doubt that we will be permitted to meet our loved ones and be associated with them in the final day. I can say in the language of the apostle Paul, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

This experience has helped me, and I have no fear of the future, but shall await the day when I too will enter into rest.

THE MISSIONARY'S FAMILY

The experiences of a missionary who must be away from his home and family are often unpleasant for both him and his companion. His wife must meet the many problems that confront her without his advice and counsel. Sometimes she is at a loss to know what to do. She does not want to interfere with his work, so she must solve some problems alone. If the children are sick she must, as a brave mother, minister to them. As they grow up she must ever give them proper advice so they will be honorable men and women. In a very great measure she must assume the responsibility of bringing them up to respect not only her but the church as well.

It is with pride that I can say my wife did a good work in the rearing of our children. Under trying circumstances she was able to govern them so well that all of them had a desire to unite with the church. In order that the reader may sense some of the responsibility that comes to the wife of a missionary, I relate some incidents that occurred in our home.

THE FAMILY ALTAR

From the beginning of our married life, we made it a practice to gather around the family altar each day for devotions. When children came into our home we continued this practice. After prayer, each of the children would come and kiss us good night. Then they went to bed, believing the protecting care of the Master would be with them during the night. After some time as the children grew up they were also taught to pray, and many times when I was far away in the mission field, they would bow and present their humble petitions to the Lord.

On one occasion our oldest daughter Esther was offering her prayer. She remembered me and asked that I might be blessed in preaching the gospel to those outside the church, and that I might be protected from harm and permitted to return home safely. She prayed for one of her neighbors who was sick and suffering much. She prayed for her mother and sisters and for her playmates. While praying for one of her sisters, she said, "Dear Lord, please help sister to stop sucking her thumb." The prayer was finished and all at once sister began to cry. Her mother, wondering what had happened, turned and asked, "Dear, what is the matter? What are you crying about?" Between sobs she replied, "Mama, I don't mind you and Dad correcting me about sucking my thumb, but I don't want Esther telling Jesus about it." From that time on, without any further correction on our part, the little girl never sucked her thumb again. Each of us may have his own opinion, but I feel that had it not been for Esther's prayer, it may have taken many months to correct this habit.

THE SAINTS OF MAINE

It was my good fortune to labor in Maine for a number of months. I visited all the branches of that district and met many fine Saints who made life pleasant for me. And here I want to pay tribute to the Saints in all the fields where I have labored who have contributed to my welfare and ministered to my needs.

I shall never forget one of the incidents that took place off the coast of Maine that even today causes me to shudder. I was invited by a fisherman friend of mine, Brother Barton of Vinalhaven, to go on a tour of his lobster traps. I gladly accepted, and early one morning we went out to the places where lobsters were to be found. We visited trap after trap and pulled them from the bottom of the ocean. Some of them were well filled with lobster, while others contained all kind of fish and crab of the smaller variety. We worked nearly all day and accumulated a fine amount of lobster.

As we passed over a buoy that had a rope fastened to it which led to a trap, the propeller caught it and wrapped it around the shaft. The propeller was pulled out of the engine. We were several miles at sea, and it would take hours to row our boat into harbor. The tide was fast coming in, and Brother Barton worked hard to get the rope removed from the shaft but could not succeed. There was very little I could do to help him. I tried to protect him by holding on to him as he hung over the side of the boat working on the rope on the bottom of the boat. After some time I noticed in the distance a low reef of rock. If our boat drifted upon this reef, it would be broken into kindling, and we would perish. We had two oars, but no oar locks so we had to labor at a disadvantage. Never did two men work harder to keep the boat from going on this reef than we did. The tide kept taking us nearer and nearer to the reef, and after one of the hardest battles I ever fought in my life, we succeeded in steering the boat around the end of the reef. I drew a sigh of relief when the danger was past and offered up a silent prayer of thankfulness for the preserving care of our Heavenly Father. Not long after we had passed around the reef Brother Barton's father, also a fisherman, came to our rescue and towed us into harbor. There the rope was removed that had caused us the trouble. There are hundreds of monuments in the cemeteries of Maine erected to the memory of men who have died at sea and were buried in the depths of the Atlantic. The next day we went out again; this time we exhausted our gasoline supply, but good fortune favored us, as a brother came along and towed us into harbor. The life of a lobster fisherman is a most strenuous and dangerous one. Quite a number of the Saints are employed in this industry on the coast of Maine, and even with the dangers which confront them, they enjoy their work

THE MAINE REUNION

Maine reunions are among the finest on the Atlantic coast. Hundreds of Saints from all parts of the country gather there year after year for a season of spiritual uplift. Those who attend the reunions will never forget the bushels of blueberries brought into camp, converted into pies, or eaten with cream and sugar. One member has a large sailing vessel and takes the entire camp out for a sail during reunion. There is no charge made, but an offering is taken up which is used to help defray expenses of the reunion. Many of the leading men in church are retired captains who have braved the dangers of the sea many years. During the reunion they tell of some experiences in which divine intervention has preserved their lives for a wise purpose. It is indeed interesting to hear them relate these experiences, and one cannot help seeing the evidence of God's protection as they relate the many thrilling adventures through which they have passed. These things make Maine reunions outstanding, and no one will ever regret attending them. I shall always remember the happy hours I spent there. It was indeed a happy privilege to labor with these good people at their annual gatherings, and I trust the ministry rendered was beneficial to those who were in attendance.

GRACELAND FIELD MEETS

I have always enjoyed Graceland field meets. Several times when I have been home, I have had the opportunity of attending these. From some of the activities participated in, I have been able to draw illustrations that were helpful in preaching the gospel. The one I am about to give is typical. Graceland usually has some outstanding athletes who become proficient in different sports. On the occasion I have in mind, Graceland was meeting one of the schools of Iowa that had won the championship the previous year.

THE RELAY RACE

The relay race was one of the closing events, and one that would determine which of the two schools would win. Four young men had been selected to represent their respective schools in this race. These men were stationed at equal distances around the track, and each man was to carry a baton that he would hand to his teammate ahead of him. In this way all four men would carry that baton. The first young man to carry the baton for Graceland was from Wisconsin. I knew him well. He was a clean living student, had no bad habits, and could be depended upon to give the best he had toward winning the race. A pistol shot marked the beginning of the race, and immediately this young man ran down the track. His opponent was not his equal in speed, and when the baton was handed to the next young man, our boy was at least thirty feet ahead. There was a shout from Graceland students as they witnessed what seemed would win the race. When the two second men took the baton, Graceland's man was not as fast as his opponent. In a few short seconds he was overtaken, and by the time the third man was to take the baton, the Graceland representative was several feet behind. Would the third man for Graceland be able to overcome this distance and close the gap between himself and his opponent? Seconds ticked away and, to our great dismay his opponent ran faster. When the baton was handed to the fourth and last man, he was some considerable distance behind. Apparently Graceland would lose this race and the meet as well. The moment the fourth man received the baton, he started down the track with all the speed he could make. While he knew he had a very great distance to overcome, he would not give up in discouragement. I stood near the finish line where I could witness the end of the race. As I looked at the distance between the two men, I thought it useless for Graceland's man to try to win. I discovered, however, this fourth man was faster than his opponent and if he had only a few more feet of an extension he might win. As these two men came down the track that day, each was doing his best to win. Foot by foot the gap was closing and, oh, how I did wish the track might be lengthened, but I knew that was impossible. Little by little the gap closed and when the end was not more than ten feet away from the wire the Graceland man was less than one foot behind. In an instant a great shout went up. Every student from Graceland it seemed to me gave vent to his feelings. Graceland had won!

Many times I have compared this relay race to the work of the church. Each man gave to the limit of his possibility. Had any one of the boys who carried the baton failed to do his best, the last man could not have succeeded. Each man doing his bit made it possible for the one who carried the baton for the last time to win.

THE WORK OF THE CHURCH

Each generation must build on the foundation laid by its predecessors. It has to begin where the last one leaves off. Joseph, the founder of the church, and those associated with him carried the baton for the first time and advanced it as far as it was possible for them. The time came when they had to lay down the baton or hand it to those who were to carry on. Then Young Joseph carried the baton for more than fifty years before handing it to Frederick M., who carried it until the Lord saw fit to call him to his reward. Other men helped them of course. Today President Israel A. Smith and his co-workers in the ministry carry the baton.

The church must succeed, or the hope of man perishes. Graceland won, and so will the church win. It has been my happy privilege to labor under three different presidents of the church, and I can see much advancement has been made.

LINES OF ADVANCEMENT

This advancement has been along many lines. The church today is upon a much sounder basis financially. Only a comparatively small number of the members were paying tithing fifty years ago, and stewardship was hardly mentioned. The families of the missionaries were receiving a very meager sum to take care of their needs. During the first year of married life, my wife received $18.00 per month; this had to take care of rent, clothing, groceries, and all other living expenses. Gradually as the family grew larger, the allowance was raised. Today each family is provided for on the basis of a budget. There have been times when the treasury of the church has been empty and nothing was sent to provide for the wife and children for months. Under these conditions they often were in need of the bare necessities of life. I well remember not too many years ago I came home and found my wife in bed crying. She had no money, there was no food in the house, and the children were hungry. It had become necessary for the business firms to adopt a cash policy, which left my family in a desperate condition. During the years when the church was on the verge of bankruptcy, the families of the men who were devoting their entire time to church work suffered under this handicap. No reserves had been built up to take care of these periods of depression. I have said and believe it to be true that if the church were not divine it would long ago have ceased to exist. The same divine hand has continued to care for it, and no power on earth can destroy it if the Saints continue to do their duty.

Looking back over the years of the past, we see many evidences of advancement and growth in all departments of church work. While there are still many things that hinder our progress, as we have been able to overcome these, so will we succeed in overcoming the ones that stand in our pathway in the future. Perhaps what we need most is a consecrated and devoted people who will sacrifice and share with Christ for the saving of the world. The church has grown as men and women have done this. From my own observations I know that many have sacrificed and the church has gone forward until we are today on a much higher plane than we were years ago. Our Zion program is slowly advancing, and some day we will see the fruitage of that state of society it produces, and Zion will be a living reality. I believe we are nearer that goal today than we have ever been. Since I was baptized more than fifty-five years ago the church has grown in numbers and spirituality. At that time we numbered about thirty-five thousand. Today there are more than one hundred forty thousand members. It is true our progress has been slow, but even though we have not gone forward as rapidly as we might desire, yet there has been a steady climbing upward, and the goals set by the hand of God will some day be reached. We are living in the hastening time. Speed in transportation and communication has changed the affairs of the world, so why not in church work? Surely we are living in a wonderful age.

QUESTION:

Please give your interpretation of the identity of the beasts mentioned in Revelation 13. Are they individuals or organizations one might know by name? Do they exist today?

Idaho

Mrs. B. H.

ANSWER:

In attempting to identify the "beast" of Revelation 13, it is necessary to give consideration to the other prophecies dealing with the same matter.

Daniel 7: 1-25 speaks of four beasts that were to rise, representing four great kingdoms—the lion, the bear, the leopard, and a wild beast. The wild beast had ten horns coming out of his head; and after the ten horns had risen, another little horn with eyes like a man's and a mouth speaking great things was to rise up. This horn was to subdue three kings, representing three of the other horns. It was to make war against the saints and prevail against them, was to think and to change times and laws and was to continue, without any divine intervention, for a time, times, and a dividing of time. Daniel was chiefly concerned about the fourth beast, especially this little horn.

When we turn to history, we find these four beasts represented by the four great kingdoms that came on the earth: Babylon, Media-Persia, Greece, and the Roman Empire. The latter was to be divided into ten lesser kingdoms, as signified by the ten horns that were to rise out of the head of this fourth beast. When the Roman Empire was finally destroyed and divided into these ten lesser kingdoms, this little horn was to arise. The disintegration of Rome into these ten kingdoms was finally accomplished when the Lombards invaded Italy, sacked and destroyed the city of Rome, and with it the last vestige of the Roman Empire. Then they returned to the northern part of Italy and set up the Lombard kingdom, the last of the ten to receive its crown. This was approximately A.D. 570.

The historic stage was now set for the rise of the power represented by the little horn that was to take control, subdue the three kings, have a mouth speaking great things, make war on the saints (or the church of Christ), prevail against them, and continue for a time, times, and a dividing of time. According to Michavelli, a historian of the Middle Ages (History of Florence, Book I, page 6) and Cardinal Manning, one of the chief officials of the Roman Catholic Church in England, during the latter part of the nineteenth century (The Independence of the Holy See, page 13), it was the papal power of Rome that came to the fore and took control at this time; "The pope took this opportunity to begin to hold up his head."

Did the papal powers subdue three kings? Yes; they were King Henry IV of Germany, who submitted to Pope Gregory VII in a struggle over the grant of investitures about A.D. 1,000; King Philip Augustus of France in a struggle with Pope Innocent III over the matter of his setting aside his wife, Ingabourg, and marrying Agnes of Moran; and King John of England in his struggle with Pope Innocent III over the filling of the vacancy caused by the assassination of the Archbishop of Canterbury. These three kings, as the prophecy indicates, clearly represent three of the ten horns into which the Roman Empire was divided.

This power was to continue for a time (one year), times (two years) and a dividing of time (one-half year) making, altogether, three and one-half years, forty-two months, or 1,260 prophetic days. That this interpretation of the time specified is correct is verified in Revelation 12: 1-6, 14. Here John sees the early Christian church represented as a woman clothed with the glory of the sun. She was to be driven into the wilderness or into oblivion by the power of the Devil, where she was to remain for 1,260 prophetic days or years. In verse 14, this time of 1,260 days is spoken of the same as in Daniel.

Revelation 13 says John saw this beast with the body of a leopard, the feet of a bear, and the mouth of a lion, having seven heads and ten horns, all crowned, rise up out of the sea.

According to Scripture, this beast has identically the same characteristics and is to do the same things as the little horn of Daniel. It came to the fore when these ten kingdoms all had received their sovereignty; it was to have a mouth speaking great things, to make war against the saints, and overcome them, and to continue forty-two months, or 1,260 prophetic days. Undoubtedly, this beast also represents the rise of the papal power of Rome.

The second beast mentioned, beginning with verse 11, very likely represents the rise of the Jesuit Order, presided over by what is often called "The Black Pope." One of the particular functions of this order for many years was to compel obedience of the papal power by means of persecution and carrying on the deadly work of the inquisition.

ROSCOE E. DAVEY.

QUESTION:

Is it possible to believe and have faith that this is the church of Christ restored, and still not know it? Can one who thus believes, but does not know, be a valuable and acceptable servant of the church?

Ohio

W.T.C.

ANSWER:

Yes. But why stay on that level of belief when knowledge is promised? Special knowledge has been received by various persons, such as Moses, Jesus, Paul, Joseph Smith, and others. Hearing or reading of them one may believe, not merely on their say-so, but by a peculiar manifestation of the Spirit.

To some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world; to others it is given to believe on their words, that they might also have eternal life, if they continue faithful.—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 5.

Outside of this provision, everyone is entitled to the assurance of the purposes of God, both as to himself and to the whole family of God. When a person accepts the gospel, it is usually done on the basis of belief, which may even be inspired, and then come the promises and their fulfillment indicating that a person knows what he is about. Finally he has a testimony and becomes a witness.

Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.—John 8: 31, 32.

Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7: 16, 17.

This unsigned article was addressed to the editor. It carries such a fine spirit and so much wisdom that we feel we must share it with our readers. While we do not choose to appeal from the decision of the writer—some do specialize in remembering to their own disadvantage the seamy side of our life garments—it is possible that the author is too modest. Unless the identity of writers of articles is revealed to the editor, we usually feel that it shows a lack of sincerity.—EDITOR.

LAST NIGHT as I lay down to rest after a hard day's work, involuntarily I murmured these words, "Lord, I thank you for work and rest and loved ones and health and home." Then, before sleep came, I got to thinking—the things I offered thanks for are ordinary things. Most of us have them, or at least some of them, and therefore think little about them. Yet they are not small gifts, they are big and wonderful, bestowed by One who knows what it takes to make us happy.

We have all heard people say, "Oh, if I just didn't have to work!" implying, "Then I would be happy." But such is not the case—idleness never brings contentment. These people would be miserable with no point or purpose to their living. They may think they could fill their days happily with travel or pleasure, but these soon grow old. Most people long for something constructive to do—they need to be needed.

If we will think of the really happy people we know, we will realize they are not idle—the rich—or those who are forever dashing here and there looking for diversion. The happy people are the busy folks—those who have a job to do, and glory in one well done! No satisfaction can compare with knowing we have done a good day's work, and that the task we accomplished was worth while.

ALL OF US have experienced many times the blessedness of rest and the privilege of momentarily laying down our tasks and relaxing mentally and physically. It is a necessary and enjoyable part of our lives.

Then comes the precious gift of loved ones and the joy of belonging to a family to which we can turn for comfort and companionship. There are those alone in the world who would give their every possession for this one beautiful privilege.

There is no need to dwell on the blessing of good health, a very brief illness is all that is necessary to bring this forcibly to mind. We can get along without many things if each night we are able to sleep soundly, and rise each morning refreshed with zest and vigor for the day ahead.

And then, as we come to the end of our little list is that magic word, "Home." No matter how small or unpretentious, no matter where it is,

ANOTHER FOURSORE and seven years have passed since the day when a tall, lean man stood on Gettysburg's battlefield, where so many had "given that last full measure of devotion" and proclaimed, not only as he had thought to those who then stood by, but to all men for all time those immortal words beginning "Fourscore and seven years ago."

Once again this same tall figure, in spirit, is standing upon another battlefield. Let us crowd closer so we may hear his words.

Eightscore and fourteen years ago, our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation; conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Fourscore and seven years ago, your fathers were engaged in a great civil war testing whether this nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, could long endure.

Thrice, now, within this generation, your sons and your grandsons—the grandsons and the great-grandsons of both the blue and of the gray, no other place can ever look as good to us. Sometimes I think that the real value of taking a trip is in the increased appreciation it gives us for our home. Personally, I've not had to leave home to learn this. Twice lately I've been faced with the prospect of a long journey, and at the last minute, in each case, the plans had to be given up. My feelings of relief and thankfulness were not well concealed, and those who were prepared to sympathize were left with nothing to say when they saw the look of happiness on my face.

So, in accordance with the old hymn my mother sang many years ago, let us "count our blessings, name them one by one," and in no wise think them common. Those not so richly blessed would consider any one of them a treasure beyond any price.

of those then in slavery, all united under one flag—have joined with free men of all lands to prove to all peoples for ages yet to come that, just as truly as one nation could not long endure half slave and half free, neither can one world long endure half slave and half free.

We are come that we might here dedicate the whole earth to these honored dead. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But, just as we could not dedicate, we could not consecrate, we could not hallow the field at Gettysburg, neither can we dedicate, consecrate, nor hallow our present far-flung battlefield. It is rather for you, the living of this generation, to dedicate yourselves to the unfinished tasks they have so nobly begun—the task of establishing world peace, and world brotherhood within your lifetime—so that these brave men, two generations of our best youth who here gave that last full measure of devotion, shall not have died in vain. May you highly resolve that civilization, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

NEW LISKEARD, ONTARIO.—Elder Marvin Wickett of New Liskeard has been appointed pastor. He was ordained an elder on September 24 of this year by Evangelist B. H. Hewitt, Albert Shepherdson, and Patrick Bolger. Brother Shepherdson was the former pastor.—Reported by ALBERT SHEPHERDSON.

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—During the last nine months there has been an average attendance of sixty-four for church school, sixty for Communion services, sixty-six for morning preaching services, twenty-six for evening services, and sixteen for prayer services.

Dianna Kay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Englehardt, was blessed May 21 by Elders E. R. Williams and F. C. Bevan; and Susan Jo Nichols, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gale Nichols, was blessed September 17 by Patriarch W. W. Richards and Elder Richard Martens.

On June 18 Mr. and Mrs. Howard Smeds and Robert Erwin were baptized in the Lend-A-Hand Pool by Elder Charles S. Shippy. Confirmation services were held that evening. Elders F. C. Bevan and Charles Shippy confirmed Mrs. Smeds; Elders Charles Shippy and F. C. Bevan confirmed Howard Smeds, and Elders E. R. Williams and F. C. Bevan confirmed Robert Erwin. On September 17 Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Vaughn and their daughters, Patricia Vaughn and Mrs. Mary Collins, were baptized by Elder E. R. Williams at the Rock Island, Illinois, church. At the confirmation services held in the evening at the mission, Mr. Vaughn was confirmed by Elders E. R. Williams and Charles S. Shippy; Mrs. Vaughn by Elders Charles Shippy and E. R. Williams; Patricia by Patriarch W. W. Richards and Elder F. C. Bevan, and Mrs. Collins by Elders F. C. Bevan and W. W. Richards.

The priesthood and men of the group meet once a month to study "The Restoration Story." One night a month is set aside for special priesthood visiting. On August 6 this group had a breakfast at the home of George Shippy, provided by Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Bevan.

In April Mr. Claire Weldon of Iowa City presented his slides and lecture on Book of Mormon archaeology proofs. Special music for the occasion was furnished by Mr. Alan Tyree, also of Iowa City, on his saxophone, accompanied by Miss Doris Gray.

The church school under the direction of Miss Etta Cosner and her assistant, Warren J. Hinkle, has grown and interest is fine with classes in all age groups at present. Mrs. Bonnie Shippy, leader of the children's department, has done an outstanding job and a fine Children's Day program was presented, along with other activities.

Zion's League, under the sponsorship of Gale Nichols, has held regular meetings, sponsored outings, an ice cream social, and presented a program of stunts at a wiener roast sponsored by the women's department.

The Orioles under Mrs. Henry Steinecke have met regularly, made visits to local utilities, visited a farm, and had several handcraft projects.

All the local priesthood have participated in the preaching services and Communion services, and out-of-town speakers have included Roy Benson of St. Louis and B. A. Howard of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

The mission has been well represented at the General Conference, and the various Rock Island District gatherings: young adult retreat, reunion, youth retreat, and the visual aids meeting, as well as the young people's camp at Nauvoo, Illinois.

Miss Doris Gray has been leading the choir which meets regularly each Sunday evening.

The women's department, Liahona Circle, have had fifteen study classes and business sessions, seven craft classes, two bake sales, one chicken supper, four baby showers, one plastic party, and sponsored two picnics and one wiener roast for the mission. They also sponsored the women's tea at the reunion.

On May 19 and 20 the Liahona Circle sponsored a Woman's Day for the Rock Island District women. The two-day session opened with a banquet on the evening of the 19th with ninety-seven present. The theme "Follow the Gleam" was carried through in the decorations with a lighted lighthouse as the centerpiece. Miss Etta Cosner was toastmistress, and a program of music and stunts was presented by the Orioles, Miss Doris Gray, and Mrs. Helen Hinkle. Mrs. Doris Woodstock led the community singing. The high light of the banquet was the talk on "Women's Work in the Branch" by Mrs. Lydia Wight of Chicago, Illinois, guest speaker. Miss Etta Cosner gave the benediction, drawing attention to the Christ as the "gleam we must follow."

Saturday's services opened with an inspirational worship service arranged by Mrs. Bonnie Shippy. Music was furnished by Mrs. Helen Hinkle and Miss Jeanne Hinkle. A poem, "Follow the Gleam," written especially for the occasion by Elder Charles Shippy, was read by Mrs. Woodstock. Mrs. Wight's instruction in three class sessions helped all to see the Zion's home and women's part in it. After the luncheon at noon, a short memorial service was given for Mrs. Myrtle Sims whose funeral was taking place at the same hour. Woman's Day was brought to a spiritual climax at a fellowship and dedication service.—Reported by GEORGE C. SHIPPY.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA.—An ordination service was held September 8. Russell Rumsey and Leonard Lee Hicks were ordained priests; W. R. Bigler, a teacher; and Loyd Williamson and Morton Hampton, deacons.

Church school attendance has reached 147. More classrooms are needed.

The women's department meets every Thursday. On the last Thursday of every month, a birthday dinner is held for all those who had birthdays during the month. Attendance is increasing. Twenty-one attended the last meeting. A quilt is quilted at each meeting, and there is a lesson period and circle prayer held at each meeting.

Attendance is good at the Zion's League meetings. Attendance is also increasing in the music department. Russell Rumsey is director. Nearly eight-five members attended the Wilber-ton reunion.

Evangelist Castings plans on holding a series of meetings soon.

Sister Sally Harper, 83, died on October 25.—Reported by MRS. T. P. GREENWOOD.

PASCAGOULA, MISSISSIPPI.—High Priest Franklin Steiner of Mobile was in charge of the branch business meeting. The new officers are: Elder J. L. Barlow, pastor; Mrs. Gladys Furby, church school director; Mrs. Nina Lea Mason, branch clerk, historian, and publicity agent; Robert Barlow, young people's leader and music director; Clyde H. McCormick, church custodian and auditor; Mrs. J. L. Barlow, treasurer; Mrs. Clyde McCormick, women's department leader; and Pastor Barlow as chairman, Mrs. Gladys Furby, Oscar Goff, Mack Hawley, and Clyde H. McCormick, building committee.

Recent visitors have been Mr. and Mrs. Joe L. Johnson, Mrs. C. O. Taylor, Mrs. Esty Smelzer, all of Independence. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson had the privilege of hearing their son, Captain Joe Johnson, preach his first sermon.

Obie Hawley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mack Hawley, is still in the Veterans' Hospital in Biloxi, Mississippi. He is much improved now.

A special memorial flag service was held at the morning service of October 15. The congregation made a circle around the flag pole on the lawn of the church where the service was directed by High Priest Franklin Steiner of Mobile. Mrs. Leroy Pigg of Rockford, Illinois, presented an American Flag to Elder J. L. Barlow for the Pascagoula church in memory of her son, John Carroll LeFevre, a Marine. He was killed on Marshall Island at the beginning of World War II. He was seventeen years old and a church member. The congregation stood with heads bowed as Elder Steiner read part of a speech by Abraham Lincoln. The Flag was raised by Mrs. Pigg's nephew, Wayne Hawley, and Captain Joe Johnson. "America" was sung, and the benediction was given by Elder Steiner. Following the service, Brother Steiner spoke on "Am I My Brother's Keeper?"—Reported by NINA LEA MASON.

SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA.—Branch business meeting was held September 24. High Priest Robert L. Bishop presided with Walter Budworth as secretary. New officers are: Hyrum Crownover, pastor; Mrs. Rolma Hinton, director of religious education and historian; Mrs. Dolly Turtchel-Kynock, secretary; Walter Budworth, director of young people; Mrs. Edna Warren, leader of women's department; Mrs. Frieda Budworth, director of music; Ira Merrick, treasurer; Glenvil Crownover, auditor and book steward; Mrs. Elsie Crownover, publicity agent; Eva Purcell, librarian; Herbert E. Walker, solicitor; and Glenvil Crownover, assistant solicitor.

At the close of the business meeting the congregation gathered in the dining hall and asked Brother Herbert Walker to join with them. He thought it was some special meeting. When they began singing "Happy Birthday," he discovered it was a celebration for his eighty-first birthday. High Priest R. L. Bishop gave a short talk. A pair of slippers and numerous cards were presented. Lunch was served.

At the August Communion service, Sanford Twitchel, eldest son of Mrs. Ida Twitchel, Hamilton, was ordained to the office of priest by Elders Herbert E. Hinton and Hyrum Crownover.

At the September Communion service, the twin baby boys of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd De-Laughtee of Los Angeles were blessed by High Priest R. L. Bishop and Elder Crownover.

Two work days were held at the church recently when the church was painted on the outside and redecorated on the inside and the front walks widened and cemented. This was under the direction of Elder Lloyd Cline.—Reported by H. E. WALKER.

FIRST CHICAGO BRANCH, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—Theme for the month of September, "Fall In," was carried out in the Communion service. Pastor Elbert Chandler presided. Organ interlude was by Miss Ruth Skinner, invocation by Elder A. O. Skinner, Communion message by Elder Buren A. Lenox, and benediction by Brother Skinner. The pastor had special prayer for the boys in military service, and for Harold C. Schultz, the first to leave. He is now at Norton Air Base, San Bernardino, California.

The pastor reported that fifty people from the branch attended the Chicago and North-eastern Illinois Reunion at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. Apostle D. O. Chesworth presided.

Annual business meeting and election of branch officers took place on July 30. District

President J. C. Stuart and Elder E. W. Chandler presided over the meeting. New officers are Elbert W. Chandler, branch president; H. T. McCaig and Buren Lenox, counselors; Paul Gouty, religious education; Ruth Gouty, children's division; Emerine Gunderson, women's leader; H. T. McCaig, Jr., business administrator; Alfred Wilcox, supervisor of young people; Ruth Skinner, secretary; J. Louis Gauthier and Orville Studtman, auditors; Hulda Edstrom, branch solicitor; Velva E. Castins, Herald correspondent; Edward Kohn, adult supervisor; Bob Pawley, book steward; and Junita Stuart, music director.

Speakers for the month were Elder Buren A. Lenox and Patriarch Leslie S. Wight.

On September 24 the children's department under the supervision of Ruth Gouty presented the promotion day services at 11:00 o'clock. There was a processional of nursery, kindergarten, primary, and junior departments. Promotion certificates were presented by Ruth Gouty. Eleanor Chandler was the narrator for the pageant "Sunday Past, Sunday Present." Those taking part were Dick Gunderson, Sonja Rawley, Danney Jones, Frances Mercalino, and John Stuart. Ruth Skinner was the organist for the trio of Barbara Lenox, Delores Jones, and Diane Jones. Benediction was by Elder Elbert W. Chandler.

The women are working hard on the building fund. The Ssenippah held an ice cream social on the lawns of the Henry Herlett and Velva E. Castins homes on July 23. Proceeds were $50. The North Side Circle sponsored a Sunday night supper on the same lawns September 10. Proceeds were $109. A book review, "The Way West," by Guthrie, given by Mrs. Harry Hoppe on September 21 was sponsored by the North Side Circle. Proceeds were $47.

Eleanor Stuart, president of the Ssenippah Circle, was hostess to the guild September 5. A handkerchief shower was given in honor of Bertha Seck, former vice-president, who has moved to Homewood. The guild is studying Bible Studies, by Thelona Stevens. The teacher is Veta Kent.

Nancy Jo Hinkle, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Hinkle, was blessed July 9 by her grandfather, Elder A. O. Skinner, and by Elder Elbert Chandler.

The interior of the church building was re-decorated several months ago by Brother Leo Callaci.—Reported by VELVA E. CASTINS.

SCAMMON, KANSAS.—On September 18 Elders Stephen Black, president of Spring River District, and T. W. Bath, pastor of Pittsburg Branch, attended the business session. Brother Bath has had the supervision of the Scammon group the past year. He declared Scammon a mission with authority to transact business. He then recommended Priest Herald E. Summers of Pittsburg, Kansas, as the pastor. He was elected. Other officers are: Melba Moorehead, secretary and superintendent of church school; Ada Westervelt, treasurer; Mary Featherstone, music director; Alice Jones, publicity agent and historian; Opal Dibble, young people's leader; Rose Renolds, superintendent women's department; and Cecil Dibble, bishop's solicitor.—Reported by ALICE JONES.

BERRYDALE, ALABAMA.—On October 3 the women's department met at the church to install its new officers. Mrs. Nathia McCall played soft music for the candlelight service. Pastor J. S. McCall gave the invocation. Elder Ben Jernigan gave a reading, "The Keys of the Kingdom." Bernice Blocker gave a solo. Sister Lula Jernigan, Gulf States district women's leader, gave the charge to the new officers:

Jackie Taylor, president; Faye Bales, vice-president; Bertie Gunter, secretary and treasurer; Wilma Mixon, devotional chairman; Beulah Powell, ways and means committee; Emma McArthur, friendly visitor; Bessie McCall, teacher. Elder L. I. McDonald gave the benediction. Lunch was served.—Reported by BERTIE GUNTER.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.—On Children's Day Pastor Charles H. Pillsbury, Jr., baptized Emily Heap and her three sons, John, Russell, and Raymond. Others baptized were Nancy Eleanor Holt and Mary George. Elder Almer W. Sheehy baptized Charles O. Baldwin at Boston.

At recent business meetings John Foster and Sanford Fisher have come from Boston and assisted the pastor. Brother Sheehy attended the October meeting, and plans were discussed for a new church. It is the desire of the pastor to acquire a large residence with enough land to build a church on later.

Recent speakers have been Eugene Carter and Ralph Hardy from Boston, Patriarch Frederick W. Roberts, of Onset, and Brother Sheehy. George and Beatrice Sinclair are occasional visitors from Onset.

At the September Communion service, Elder Frank H. Dippel from Hazleton, Pennsylvania, blessed his granddaughter, Debra Ann Pillsbury, the pastor's daughter. Elder Dippel always leaves a message when visiting the branch.—Reported by MRS. GLADYS V. COOMBS.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.—At the annual business meeting held September 20, these officers were elected: Myron R. Schall, pastor; Elders John Gann and Robert Nephew, counselors; Elma Rolfe, director of religious education; Celia Schall, leader of young people; Mary Honeychurch, women's leader; Edna Burdick, director of music; Mabelle Nephew, director of drama; Myrtle Burdick, secretary-clerk; Ives Honeychurch, treasurer-solicitor; Marjorie Damitz, historian; Hazel Damron, book steward; John Dawson, auditor; Edwin Burdick, James Damron, and Ella Dawson, finance committee. These and the appointive officers were installed by Elizabeth Schall, assisted by Leroy Burdick, at an impressive candlelighting ceremony following Communion service on October 1.

In his annual report to the branch, President Myron Schall notes encouraging progress has been made during the past year. Attendance figures show improvement, but it is hoped that under the slogan, "Each one bring one," the membership will assist in the effort to increase attendance still further, especially at the church school. Eighteen new members have been added through baptism. There has been one ordination, that of John Robert Dawson to the office of deacon.

During the year the branch has had the ministry of Seventy George A. Njeim, Evangelist William Patterson, Apostles Paul M. Hanson and E. J. Gleazer, and Bishop J. Stanley Kelley of the general church. Other guest speakers include Elders Robert L. Bishop of Santa Rosa, Douglas Wright of Stockton, and Priest Robert Colville, also of Stockton. Pastor Schall has been guest speaker on six occasions at other branches in the district in response to invitations; he also spoke to a group of young people from Davis and Dixon in the Community church at Davis, and addressed a group of foreign students known as the International Forum at the University of California at Davis.

An important project of the women's department each year is the operation of a lunch counter at the state fair. This year, although an unusual amount of expense was incurred by the purchase of additional equipment to meet the growing needs of the project, a net profit of some three thousand dollars was realized.

The choir under the direction of Edna Burdick opened the fall season with a special program of music and readings at the 11:00 o'clock service on October 8. Bishop E. C. Burdick spoke on "The Spirituality of Music." The evening speaker was Deacon Lawrence R. Schall who is leaving for active duty in the army.—Reported by LENA SWANEY.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON.—District conference and institute was held in Spokane, October 13, 14, and 15. Speakers were Apostle R. M. Holmes, Bishop M. E. Lasater, and District President C. E. Hammel.

Brother Holmes conducted classes Friday evening, all day Saturday, and one on Sunday, and preached at the 11:00 hour.

Bishop Lasater taught class Sunday morning. Sister Evelyn Hight, district women's leader, taught two classes for women on Sunday.

Business meeting and election of officers was held Sunday afternoon. The names of eight young men were presented for priesthood ordinations. For priests: Charles Emslie, Dale Johnson and Ammon Powell; for deacons: Joe Love, Ernest Sprecker, Jack Worthington, and Al Fuller; for teacher, Floyd Dobson.

Basket dinner was served in the lower auditorium of the church on Sunday.

The conference and institute closed with a dedication service conducted by Apostle Holmes, Bishop Lasater, C. E. Hammel, and R. V. Webb.—Reported by ORPHA V. CURTIS.

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA.—District President S. A. McDonald was in charge of the business meeting held September 17. Officers elected and re-elected are E. E. Workmon, branch president; Calvin Nephew, church school supervisor; Walter Eastwood, Zion's League supervisor; Jay Smith, treasurer; Nellie Acker, music director; E. E. Workmon and Eathen Godfrey, adult class teachers; Calvin Nephew, young adult class teacher; Gertrude Slover, junior class teacher; Alice Harrell, primary class teacher; Flora Workmon, kindergarten teacher; Jean Smith and Jane Milla, nursery.

The pastor has recently taught two courses, Each One Win One and The Restoration Story. Some cottage meetings have been held. Elder William Patterson held a series of meetings in March. Nine have been baptized during the year.

Officers for the women's department are Esther O'Brist, president; Gertrude Slover, vice-president; Opel Godfrey, secretary; Nellie Acker, treasurer; Beckie Nephew, music director; Marguerite Eastwood, ways and means; Martha Madden, social chairman; Charlotte Richardson, sewing chairman; Alice Harrell, hostess chairman; Anne Frank, flower committee; Flora Workmon, visiting committee; Marjory Godfrey, corresponding secretary; and Gertrude Slover, teacher.

The council of women put on a progressive dinner September 24. Meetings were held at the homes of Brothers and Sisters Calvin Nephew, W. A. Slover, Casper Frank, and Austin Eastwood. Proceeds were thirty dollars. So far this year the council of women has earned $769.75 for the building fund.—Reported by W. A. SLOVER.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—Among the officers elected at the annual branch business meeting on September 12 were Elder Charles D. Neff, pastor; Betty Paterno, secretary; Eddie Gool, treasurer; Esmond Crown, church school director; Millard Gollehon, young people's leader; Frances Neff, music director; Valeria Fredrickson, department of women chairman. The following men were approved for ordination:

Esmond Brown, elder; Marlin Constance, priest; John Hansen, teacher. These men together with Ervin Coolman (priest) of Plattsmouth, Nebraska, were all ordained at Omaha Central Church on October 9.

The annual Northeast Nebraska District conference was held in Omaha on September 17. Apostle Arthur Oakman spoke at the 11:00 service to one of the largest audiences ever in the church. Lunch was served in the lower auditorium. At the afternoon business meeting, Brother Neff was re-elected president of the district.

Several young men have left for the service. They were all members of the ushers staff and included George Baker, Richard Oehring, and Duane Finch. Richard Oehring received his Eagle Scout award shortly before leaving.

The first monthly fellowship dinner of the fall season was held on October 6. It was appropriately called "New Members Night" in honor of all who had joined the church during the past year. Each new member was presented with a copy of A Church Member's Manual. The attendance was the largest on record, and there was scarcely room to accommodate all.—Reported by C. B. CONSTANCE.

SPRING RIVER DISTRICT, OKLAHOMA.

—Spring River conference was held in Miami, Oklahoma, the first week end in October. Apostle D. O. Chesworth was in charge of the 11:00 service on Sunday morning. Other services of the conference included a presentation of the restoration story illustrated with slides by Missionary G. Wayne Smith of Kankakee, Illinois; a general class on the work of the church school by District President Stephen A. Black, and children's services in the lower auditorium conducted under the supervision of Ruth Ramsey.

The following officers were elected at the business meeting: Stephen A. Black, district president; C. C. Wilson and F. M. Bishop, counselors; Lela Parkhurst, secretary; Norman W. Grav, bishop's agent; B. F. Kyser, treasurer; Arthur Dixon, young people's leader; Sister T. W. Bath, women's leader; Clifford Browne, music director; George Doublee, non-resident pastor; Inez Smith Davis, historian; Lois Shipley, publicity agent; Charles Cadmus, auditor; E. G. Gilbert, director of religious education; Frank Kyser, C. D. Wilson, and Mark Mink, reunion committee; Marjorie Gilbert, F. M. Bishop, Herman Plumb, T. W. Bath, and Mark Mink, finance committee.

Lee Kirk of Miami, Oklahoma, was recommended for ordination to the office of deacon. The recommendation was approved.—Reported by LOIS SHIPLEY.

CRESCENT CITY, CALIFORNIA. — On October 8 the scattered Saints in southwestern Oregon and northwestern California met at Brookings, Oregon. District Missionary Elwin Vest was speaker. Basket lunch was held at the noon hour.—Reported by MRS. OLCOTT CUMMINS.

ALVA, OKLAHOMA.—On October 7 the Zion's Leagues of Western Oklahoma and Eastern Texas Districts met at the Forum for a banquet, the first ever to be given in these districts. Several drove a distance of 500 miles to attend.

The theme for the meeting, "Ambassadors for Christ," was impressed upon those attending by purple banners pinned across their breasts. Upon these were pinned ribboned gold medals for the visiting Leaguers, silver medals for the home Leaguers, and gold star medals for the priesthood. There was a white card attached to each ribbon upon which the wearer wrote his name and home branch.

From a pan of navy beans each person took five beans in order to play a game of answering questions. Beans had to be forfeited if a question was answered with "No." At the close, the beans were counted and the one with the most beans was awarded a small bag of beans attached to a ribbon as a medal.

The banquet menu was prepared by the women's department and served by the local Zion's League. Fun songs were sung while the young people were finding their places at the tables. Each person introduced himself to the others. Mrs. Margaritte Campbell sang "My Cathedral." Several other special numbers were given.

Pastor Paul Lee introduced the speaker, Bill Dollins, the new missionary from Wilburton, Oklahoma.

Brother Dollins retained the theme, "Ambassadors for Christ," and read Ephesians six for his Scripture. Benediction was offered by District President Ralph Wilt.

A sunrise prayer service was held at Hatfield Park on October 8. The same theme was used. There were sixty present. Several prayers were offered and twenty-five testimonials were given, many of them from the younger ones. After the service a breakfast of bacon, eggs, and fruit juice was served. An outdoor grill was used to prepare it.—Reported by MRS. OSCAR GUSTIN.

CANTON, OKLAHOMA.—On October 15 the Canton group attended services at Eagle City. Leland Diamond, son of Elder and Mrs. Ray Diamond, was ordained a priest.

On October 7 and 8 several from the branch attended the district conference at Alva, Oklahoma. Elder Ray Diamond and his wife accompanied them.

The two branches of Canton and Eagle City held a surprise party for Sally Bateman and Authur Demass, both over seventy years of age, who were recently married. Gifts and a large wedding cake were presented to them. Lunch was served by the women's departments of both branches.—Reported by NINA GOODMAN.

WEST VIRGINIA DISTRICT.—New officers are Samuel M. Zonker, president; Otto Melcher, bishop's agent and counselor; Wayne Wilson, church school director and counselor; Mrs. Blanche Martin, women's department leader; Lawrence H. Phillips, young people's leader; Mrs. Anna Schoenian, music director; Mrs. Margaret Pack, Herald correspondent; Mrs. May R. Griffin, secretary-treasurer, historian, and nonresident supervisor.—Reported by MAY R. GRIFFIN.

SANTA PAULA, CALIFORNIA.—Following the Communion service on October 1, a mission picnic was held in a near-by park. Later the group again gathered at the meeting hall where the annual business meeting was held. Rodney Engel, district president, presided. Brother C. C. Burdick was re-elected pastor, and the other officers are: Jack Evans, church school director; Laura Hice, adult leader; Hugh Kensler, young people's leader; Brother and Sister Aubry Merrell, leaders of the young married group; and Bobbie Nell Hice, children's director.—Reported by VERA M. HAVEN.

SWEET HOME, OREGON.—Seventy Arthur F. Gibbs taught a class on personal evangelism on September 13. He also gave a demonstration on missionary material.

The women's group met for their first fall meeting and enjoyed a potluck dinner at the home of Sister Virginia Phelps. Plans were discussed for a bazaar and rummage sale. The study to be taken this fall will be "A Growing Person," by Francis Cole McLester.

Elder and Mrs. Larsen from Portland and Elder Earl Wilcox from La Grande were visitors on September 17. Elder Larsen preached an inspiring sermon at the 11:00 hour. In the afternoon a basket lunch was held in the Sweet Home Park honoring Sister Mildred Sparks who has been here on vacation from the Independence Sanitarium. She left the next morning and will resume her nurse's training.

The annual business meeting was held September 28 under the direction of Elder J. L. Verhei, district president. The following were elected: Elder Cleo Thompson, pastor; Priest Paul O'Dell, church school director; James Phelps, young people's leader; Shirley Thompson, music director and secretary; Nellie Walberg, social leader and librarian; Vergie Barr, auditor; Virginia Phelps, publicity; Maud Bowser, women's leader; and James Phelps, Paul O'Dell, and Clifton Sparks, building committee.

Brother Verhei spoke at the business meeting.—Reported by NELLIE WALBERG.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS.—A baptismal service was held at the church September 10. Ralph Largent, James Diedrick Largent, and Linda Marie Largent, of Rock Island, and John Francis McGimpsey, of Coal Valley, were baptized by Elder Leonard W. Stiegel. This brings the total of baptisms to twenty-seven for the church year.

The annual branch business meeting was held September 13. The following officers were elected: Elder L. W. Stiegel, branch president; Elders Seibert A. Chesnutt and Orville Short, counselors; Rose Bowen, secretary; Erwin Gunlock, treasurer; William Seline, attendance recorder; Edward Boyd, custodian; Clyde McKee, church school superintendent; Harold Braun, young people's leader; Virginia Short, women's leader; Dorothy O'Leary, children's supervisor; Maida Seline, director of music; Margaret Braun, historian; Dorothy O'Leary, Herald reporter; Laurel Jordan, junior church pastor, and John Stiegel, auditor.

The branch budget was approved at a special meeting held September 27. The branch received its largest income on record and has advanced the goal for the coming year.

Because of increased membership and improved attendance of the branch, the building fund will be the special theme for the year. The branch will add to the church building this year in order to accommodate the increased activity and provide greater facilities.

Elder Clarence M. Beil of Clinton was guest speaker on October 8.—Reported by DOROTHY O'LEARY.

CENTERVILLE, IOWA.—On October 4 Elder John A. Boden, pastor, baptized and confirmed Mrs. Margaret Jean Benz and Kathryn Metz. On October 8 he baptized six more young people who were confirmed as follows: Mrs. Doris Williams by John Boden and Wilbur Prall, Evaloy Freeborn by L. G. Holloway and William Collins, Iladean Freeborn by William Collins and Wilbur Prall, Wesley Metz by Wilbur Prall and L. G. Holloway, Kenneth Metz by L. G. Holloway and John Boden, and Paul Williams by Wilbur Prall and William Collins.—Reported by JESSIE GILLASPIE.

SULT STE. MARIE, ONTARIO.—Mrs. J. Corbett, Marlene Corbett, Margaret Edwards, and Richard Robinson were baptized on June 11 by Elder G. A. Edwards at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario.

Lorne Mitchell of Thessalon, Ontario, was baptized on September 10, 1950, at Thessalon by Elder W. O. Bushilla.

On September 22, the social committee put on a potluck supper.—Reported by WINNIFRED SPENCER.

The Ministering of Angels

A Story Based on True Experience

By GLADYS PARKS

GRACE ANDERSON sighed wearily as she entered the front door of her home and dropped into the closest chair. At a glance she quickly surveyed the tumbled house with part of the ironing still in the basket waiting to be ironed. "Dear Father," she prayed, "how will I ever have the strength to get this work finished?"

It was Saturday evening. She had spent the greater part of the past two days contacting Saints to help prepare and serve dinner for friends who had lost a loved one. The fellowship and opportunity for service had more than repaid her for what she had given, but here it was six o'clock Saturday night and company was to come for dinner tomorrow. Besides that, she always tried to attend the Sunday morning prayer service at eight, so it didn't give her much time.

She had been sick for several months now, but with the help of her husband Jack and their two little girls, she had endeavored to do as much as her strength would permit. Many days she relied alone on the promise that God would give her sufficient strength as she labored to fulfill the duties of wife and homemaker. "I surely will need strength tonight," she thought, and she prayed again that God would direct her how to do her work in an organized way.

"I must prepare supper first," she thought and jumped up quickly. "I know God can't help me while I sit in this chair."

After supper, Grace brushed and set Judy's hair, while her older daughter, Sharon, set her own hair. She was especially thankful tonight that she had started Sharon early in learning to care for herself; now at eight she did a very nice job.

After the girls were bathed, and the family had had prayer, Grace tucked the children into bed. "Now what shall I do next?" she thought, as she entered the living room and sat down for a minute. As she tried to make her body and mind co-ordinate, such a feeling of despair came over her that she turned to her husband and said, "Jack, please pray that God will send angels to minister to me." This was not the first time Grace had turned to her husband for ministry. He held the office of priest, which office is said to hold the keys of the ministering of angels. "I feel so bad I cannot go on unless I receive help from God." With that, they knelt in prayer. When they had finished, Jack turned to her and said, "You go to bed now, and I'll finish the work."

"You can't possibly do all that has to be done," she protested, but Jack was so firm she yielded.

IT SEEMED as though she went to sleep immediately. Suddenly, as if someone had touched her, she awoke. From somewhere she heard a man singing a sacred song. "That's so beautiful angels must be here," she thought. Then the Holy Spirit came to bear witness. She noticed the light under the bedroom door and jumped up. When she entered the living room, she heard a man singing on the radio. She glanced at the clock. She had been asleep only a short time, but she felt rested and refreshed. Jack had finished the ironing and was in the kitchen doing the dishes. "Jack," she began, "I don't know what it is about that man's singing, but I've been ministered to. I feel so much better. Come to bed now, won't you? I can get up early and finish the rest of the work."

"What a wonderful husband," she thought as they went to bed.

The next morning Grace arose early. She was surprised at how much better she felt, and how easy it was to finish the work and begin dinner.

She and Jack were a little late for the prayer service, but they found seats beside Elder Johnson. During the prayer service, Grace arose to give her testimony. "I can't explain exactly how, but I know I was ministered to by angels last night," she said.

At the close of the service, Brother Johnson turned to Grace, "As you gave your testimony, the Spirit bore witness to me that you had been ministered to by angels."

"Thank you, Brother Johnson, I can't tell you how much it means to have an additional witness like yours," she said.

As Grace went down to prepare for her church school class, she kept thinking to herself, "That just couldn't have been the man on the radio I heard. He was singing popular songs, and the song I heard was sacred. Dear Father," she prayed silently, "I know it's selfish to ask you for more, but it would be wonderful to know just whose voice that was."

After class, Grace left Judy in the nursery room and Sharon in the junior church and went upstairs to find Jack. He was waiting for her in the lobby, so they entered the chapel together.

As she glanced at the bulletin, she noticed a familiar name. "Why look, Jack, Frank Evans is going to sing this morning. We haven't seen him for a long time. It will be nice to hear him sing again."

The service progressed with a beautiful, peaceful spirit. Then it was time for the special musical number. As Frank began his song, Grace leaned forward to listen. It was a selection she had never heard before—that is until he began on the second line. Grace's heart leaped with excitement. "That voice! That song! It's the one I heard last night!"

As a final testimony, the Spirit of God once more burned within her to confirm the glorious truth. Happiness flooded her soul as Frank continued singing, "I'm singing for I'm happy, I'm singing for I'm free, His eye is on the sparrow, and I know he watches me."

"Truly God's mercy and love are over each of his creatures, no matter how small or humble," thought Grace. "What wonderful comfort and assurance it gives to know he always watches over us."

With a fervent prayer in her heart, she thanked her Heavenly Father for his wonderful love.

PLAYERS NOT PUPPETS

By EDITH G. BEGGS

He who says that life is drab must surely be color blind—a cynic who has not discovered the beauty of God's creation, nor realized the wonder of his wisdom nor the immensity of his love. To such, this existence must indeed be colorless.

Shakespeare said that all the world's a stage and men and women are merely players.

Players not puppets! What a difference! We have free agency, the right to choose.

If we were but Charlie McCarthys, speechless and motionless until our creator pulled the strings, what a farce this life would be.

But our great Producer has willed it to be otherwise. He has given us intelligence, sent his only begotten Son to teach us the way, and then left us to work out our own destiny. Yes, but not alone. This great Producer and Manager will stand by, constantly prompting in the still small voice of the Spirit. The life drama enacted under this divine management will have a happy and successful continuation in the life beyond, for we are truly players, not puppets.

Begin Now - To Teach the Children

By MAY RICHARDS HAMM

Inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes, which are organized that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ, the Son of the living God; and of baptism, and of the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the heads of the parents They shall be baptized when eight years old.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

The Lord advises us to teach our children these things before they are eight years old—before evil crowds into their minds. Children who bring the greatest worry and grief to their parents are the ones who are taught "too little, too late."

We may try and try and not make much impression. It seems as if a child must be enticed to do good or evil. When he reacts to the stimuli we provide by expressing himself, then he has begun to learn.

Children can learn by feeling before they understand what we say to them. When a baby huddles down in its mother's arms because the mother is frightened, it senses her feelings. And if a mother enjoys a prayer service because of the good Spirit there, a very small child may feel that, too. Most of us can remember things in our early spiritual development that were influenced by "how mother felt about it."

Child musicians, actors, and even "boy preachers" are children like ours that someone has succeeded in teaching before their minds got cluttered up with other things. It is surprising how great an understanding of music little tots can absorb, under the right conditions, before their fingers are developed enough for them to express it.

I once heard a little girl repeat all of a first reader. Her older brother had read his lessons to her, and she had memorized every word.

I knew a mother who played with her little son, pinning cut-out pictures on a piece of drawing paper. He colored around them with crayons. Although he could hardly hold the pencil with his fingers, when she unpinned the picture he had a rabbit, or something, that he felt he had made himself. No one tried to teach him anything more, but later his teacher in school discovered he had quite a talent for drawing.

I cared for a little girl an hour or so every day for some time. She could say only a few words and was backward. I began having her repeat what I said, first words, then nursery rhymes, songs, and stories. Soon she was memorizing new ones every day. She began expressing herself, and her family decided she was very bright. She had two older brothers who were slow in learning at school, but she began taking honors her first year and eventually became a high schoolteacher.

Some children are considered "dumb" because no one ever took the time to teach them to talk or to express themselves in any way. They will find self-expression later, probably, in ways society frowns on.

When we have little children, we can find wonderful opportunities to develop their self-expression in ways that are good, including all the things the Lord wants them to know. But when we spank a child, we may be admitting that we have failed to teach soon enough. He has already reacted in that particular thing and started the wrong way.

Let us hope for the time to come when children will not have to be punished—when parents will be given wisdom to teach them. "And their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

Keep Your Balance - By HERBERT C. LIVELY

HOW IS THE PRESENT WORLD CRISIS affecting you?

Has a loved one or a close friend of yours been a casualty in Korea? Will you or one of your family soon be called upon to enter the armed services? Perhaps you are fortunate to be bothered only by rising costs and prospects of price controls and rationing. We all share some fear of the possibility that the atom bomb will be used on our cities. If you are a normal person, you feel with millions of us this impact of world turmoil and confusion.

Let us go back in history to another time when the world was also in great turmoil. Palestine had vivid memories of death and destruction from armed aggression when Jesus was born. First one great world power and then another had captured her people, tortured them, committed them to slavery, and then imposed heavy taxes on those who remained. Rome held Jesus' people in subjection, and their emotions boiled in hatred of their captors and of the collaborators who helped the Romans to further their own prestige and profit.

The world as far as the people of Jesus' time were concerned was just as troublesome and dangerous as our world is for us today. Hardship and fear of personal harm were really closer to them than it is to us. Yet, into a world torn with war and hatred, Jesus came teaching a peaceful way of life. He taught the people to love even their enemies. He came proclaiming an "abundant" life in the midst of hardship and cruelty.

DOESN'T IS SEEM APPARENT to you that either Jesus didn't know what he was talking about, or else that same message of peace and the "abundant" life can apply to us today? As believers in Jesus Christ we know that what he taught was of God and that God's truths are eternal. We know also from experience that there is peace and the "abundant" life to be found in living under the influence of Christ's spirit of love and righteousness.

But don't let the word "abundant" misguide you. The abundant life of Jesus Christ is not dependent upon physical comforts and work-saving

Here Is the Writer

Herbert Lively, now pastor of Central Church in Kansas City, Missouri, was born in Detroit, Michigan. Following graduation from high school he attended Graceland, Wayne University, and the Detroit Institute of Musical Art, from which he obtained his Masters Degree in music. He also has spent two summers at the University of Michigan. For three years prior to his pastoral assignment he served as an instructor at Graceland. He and his wife, the former Mary Ellen Skinner, have three children: Joan, five; Judith, three; and Brent, one month.

As hobbies he lists, "putterin' and fixin'."

appliances. One may or may not be blessed with these and still be living with a wealth of spiritual satisfaction which makes life abundant for him. In the Doctrine and Covenants we are assured "he that hath eternal life is rich." Under the leadership of Jesus Christ, the reversals of fortune are unimportant compared with the eternal qualities of life which a man may so exercise that they become a part of his soul. I know some people who have lost most of the things of life for which some of us are willing to sell our souls, but they are rich in love and in the fellowship of service.

THE PROBLEMS we face in this world crisis are real. As a nation, we must not live in a world of make believe. We must meet the cold facts of national and international problems with well-calculated solutions supported by a loyal people. Even more so, the problems we face as individual personalities in this crisis are real. The dangers and fears of our times will break the minds and nerves of many and will sap the strength of other thousands, making life for them a drab existence rather than a challenge and a triumph of the soul. The solution of our personal problems must be just as real and well-calculated as any solution we might offer to solve the problems of nations. The solution Jesus Christ offers is the most real thing that has ever been offered to mankind. It is real and of proved effectiveness, because it is God's solution offered to his own creation. It is effective because it is based on our own natures, both in physical and spiritual aspects.

Last year I purchased a window fan in order to keep my house more comfortable in hot weather. This year I thought I had better check to see if it needed oiling. I got out the instruction sheet sent by the manufacturer in order to find out when and how it ought to be oiled. I have no fear now that my fan might be burning out, because I am caring for it in the way the manufacturer prescribes. I have faith that he knows how the fan is made and therefore knows what to do to care for it. God did not leave his creation, man, without instructions. Jesus came to show men how to take care of themselves. Therefore, especially in this time of strain, we must follow the Builder's recommendations and face our problems with the tried and true methods revealed by Jesus Christ.

New Horizons

IN THIS CRUCIAL TIME we are likely to be thrown off balance. It's difficult to maintain sure footing when fear destroys our confidence. For example, the chimney of my house needed repairing last fall. It didn't appear to be a job big enough to warrant calling in an expert, so I decided to fix it myself. I had been on roofs before and I had no fear of them. After climbing up a valley between the main roof and a dormer to get to the chimney, I sat astride the peak of the roof and looked down. Then I realized that the pitch of my present roof is much steeper than any I had been on before. I thought of what would happen if my feet slipped while I was coming down—I'd slide right off the roof, because there was nothing to stop me. Then I was scared. The more I thought of what might happen, the more hesitant I was to try to get down. Going up was much easier than going down because going up I had more confidence.

True faith in Jesus Christ brings confidence into our lives. To the people of his time he spoke words of faith and confidence: "Fear not, little flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." More than what he said, his life radiated faith and confidence. He faced the worst that cruel men could do to him, confident in the ultimate triumph of love and righteousness. By getting to know Jesus Christ and his way of life, we can witness to others the power of God to bring stability to human life.

THERE IS ANOTHER REACTION to the world crisis which destroys abundant living for many thousands. Inwardly these people also fear, but outwardly they assume the bravado role. They say to themselves and to others, "What's the use?" Their philosophy is one of, "Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die." I used to have a vivid mental picture whenever I heard this quotation. I could see people out drinking and carousing, giving no thought to the consequences of their riotous actions. But I have since learned that this attitude creeps into the lives of each one of us if we are not very careful. While we may not go on drunken sprees, we may do things without being concerned over the consequences.

Have you wanted a new car or some expensive appliance when you knew that you really couldn't afford it? At such a time haven't you entertained the thought that since the future is uncertain, why not go ahead? "Why worry? Maybe I won't even be here next year to pay for it. . . . I might as well enjoy these things and trust to luck. . . . I'll get through all right." To such thinking, Jesus Christ gives us true perspective. He said, "I say unto you that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

Now by "idle words" Jesus did not mean that there should be no laughter and fun. Jesus himself apparently participated in the lighter activities of his time. I think by "idle" he meant that which is wasteful—that which serves no worthy purpose and may even be at someone else's expense. It seems to me he was warning against this whole carefree philosophy of "What's the difference what we do?" To him what we do has eternal significance. The salvation of souls is not an idle matter.

THE DANGER IS REAL. You and I are surrounded by forces which can easily throw us off balance. It is important that we have something to depend upon, something to help us keep our footing over the rough places in our pathway. Fellowship with Jesus Christ and the commitment of our lives to the cause of his kingdom is the means of keeping our balance and living the abundant life.

Have you ever taken some children to the circus? If so, you'll know that it's about as much fun to watch the children as it is to watch the performers. That was my experience when I took my two youngsters and some neighborhood children last winter. One of the acts, however, impressed me as much as the reaction of the youngsters. Two men went out on a high wire, each on a bicycle. Between them was a pole. On the pole another man balanced a chair, and then performed on it. Think of the skill required to keep that chair balanced on the pole, the pole on the men, the men on the bicycles, and the bicycles on the high wire.

Of course, the act would have been next to impossible without the aid of long balancing poles which each performer held in a horizontal position. As they felt themselves leaning to one side, they instinctively lifted one end of the pole, which brought them back into balance.

You and I need a "balancing pole" just as surely as those high-wire performers. Like them, we are surrounded by danger and need something to keep us sure of our footing. We have that "balancing pole"—the gospel of Jesus Christ. His presence in our lives gives us stability and courage to go forward in the face of uncertainty and hardship.

However, we cannot take hold of this "balancing pole" and thus keep our balance all by ourselves. We need help. We can get help. How? By entering into the work and fellowship of Christ's Church with wholehearted loyalty and devotion. In the Restored Church are the insights, ordinances, and challenges to serve, which make Christ a real and vital influence. He is our "balancing pole"—our savior in these most difficult days. Our watchword might well be the verse from II Timothy: "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power and of love, and of a sound mind."

sleep, her son, Donald, and grandson, Joseph Perrine, being the only others of the family at home.

She had been able, however, to accompany her husband on some of his missions since her illness began.

There are surviving her, her husband, her son Donald and his wife Darlene and the young grandson, Joseph, who came into her life near its ending and who brought her much happiness and whom she loved dearly. All these are resident at the family home in Independence.

* * * *

In the loss of this godly woman, the church mourns the passing of the beloved companion of its President. The community loses a civic-minded leader and patron of the arts, and friends mourn the loss of one who never lost the common touch.

Among the clippings found in her scrapbook is this poem by Harriet Beecher Stowe. Not only is there comfort in its lines but a prophecy of better things to come.

THE OTHER WORLD

It lies around us like a cloud,
A world we do not see;
Yet the sweet closing of an eye
May bring us there to be.

Its gentle breezes fan our cheeks
Amid our worldly cares;
Its gentle voices whisper love
And mingle with our prayers.

So still, so soft, so sweet they glide,
So near to press they seem,
They lull us gently to our rest
And melt into our dream.

Thus in the hour of rest,
It's easy now to see
How easy and how sweet to pass
The hour of death may be.

To close the eye and close the ear,
Wrapped in a dream of bliss;
And gently drawn in loving arms,
To swoon from that to this.

be the missionaries as well as the priesthood potential whom God will use to carry on the work in their own countries after their return.

Some students in Latin-America find the adverse rate of money exchange between the United States and their country presenting a handicap for their attending Graceland. One young lady was to come from Quito, Ecuador, this year, but is having to remain home to work another year in order to earn more funds. It would be of assistance to our project if some tuition scholarship could be made available and granted to worthy South American students.

This is a church-wide project, not just the task of a few. The prayers as well as the active assistance of the Saints everywhere is asked for this task. The Lord promised the Nephites that his doctrine would, in the latter days, be brought to their descendants. We are the people commissioned with that responsibility.

How will you help?

Address all mail to the "Mission to Spanish-speaking Peoples," to Apostle Charles R. Hield, or to Elder Wayne Simmons, care of the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

The Columbia Broadcasting System has set the date of Sunday evening, December 17, and approved our Independence Messiah Chorus, in preference to a number of major choruses which have requested the opportunity, to present the Messiah to the people of this country and Canada. The hour has not yet been set.

The chorus, under the able direction of Franklyn S. Weddle, has been rehearsing since the first of October. Soloists are being chosen, and once more selected members of the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra will assist.

As it is one of the major missionary and cultural efforts of our church presented on a national scope, this broadcast should be brought to the attention of our friends and neighbors. It is once more our plan to send to each congregation in the United States a supply of postal cards in the proportion of one card to every two members upon the church roll. We are not sure that we can ship these materials into Canada.

Folder announcements of the broadcast for limited distribution to newspaper editors, professional people, and others in a position to spread the good will also will be made available this year with two being sent to each pastor.

We would appreciate it if pastors desiring a greater or a smaller number of cards or folders would notify the Radio Department, the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, promptly so that the most effective distribution of publicity materials may be made.

Bishop L. W. Kohlman has received word from Elder Eugene Theys that has General Church interest. Brother Theys says:

"Information has come to us here in Berlin that it is better if we do not send any packages or letters into the Eastern Sector of Berlin or East Zone-Germany. Conditions are very tough here on our people."

Brother Theys suggests that all those who wish to contact members in the Eastern Sector of Berlin or East Zone-Germany mail their letters to him. He "will see that they reach them sometime."

Brother Theys address is: Annasstraat & Concordia Avenue, Rotterdam, Holland.

Mailing of Tithing Payments

It is recommended that payment of tithing and general offerings be made through the regularly appointed solicitors in the branches and bishop's agents or bishops of the various stakes and districts.

However, when these officers are not available and contributions are mailed to headquarters, the remittances should be by check, postal note, or money order made payable to the Presiding Bishopric. The letter should be addressed to The Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Across the Desk

The following communication has been received from President F. Henry Edwards:

Mulheim, British Zone, Germany
October 17

Our flight from New York was without special incident, and we were met at Amsterdam by Elders Jensen, Theys, and Johnson, who took us to the Rotterdam headquarters. Here we found Sister Theys, Mickey, and Cherril, and Sister Johnson and Glenda Fern. They make a happy and representative missionary household.

In Rotterdam we attended to some official business and had some pleasant and helpful contacts with the Saints. Elder John Miesterdyck was ordained a high priest and evangelist—the first to either office on the continent, I believe. Arthur Compier and Jac DeWild, elders, are giving good local leadership. In the Friesland area, similar good progress is being made.

Yesterday we crossed the border and came into the Ruhr where we have some very promising new openings and some fine Saints. The contrast between the Germany of today and that of three years ago is almost beyond belief. Evidences of destruction are all around. Some towns around Essen were 80 per cent destroyed. But the ruins have been cleaned up, and a surprising amount of rebuilding has been done. The people in Rotterdam have done wonders and have a fine modern city. But here results are even more impressive. Food and personal goods are abundant, although the margin between wages and necessary living expenses is quite small. An average wage here in Mulheim is thirty cents an hour, with a forty-eight hour working week. Eggs cost about a half-hour working time, bread forty minutes, suits two to three weeks.

Brothers Jensen and Theys are our guides and mentors here in Germany and are very helpful. Brother Theys had to serve as interpreter last night—an exacting job—and did very well. Everywhere we stop we find the Saints grateful for the help they have received, well disposed toward the church, and with a strong missionary testimony. Problems in the fields of leadership, literature, buildings, etc., are imposing, but we have confidence that the good Lord will enable us to solve them.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are requested for eighty-six year old W. T. Mathews, 1807 Drake Avenue, Centerville, Iowa, whose eyesight is failing, and for his eighty-four year old wife who fell and broke her hip. She is now in the hospital.

WEDDINGS

Essex-Hargitt

Betty Ann Essex, Independence, Missouri, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Essex, Pleasant Hill, Missouri, and Glenn Arthur Hargitt, Kansas City, Kansas, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Hargitt, Quinter, Kansas, were married September 24 at the Walnut Park Reorganized Church in Independence. Evangelist Milo Burnett performed the double-ring ceremony. They are making their home in Independence.

BIRTHS

Elder and Mrs. Bruce C. Jones of Pensacola, Florida, announce the birth of a daughter, Margaret Ann, born October 5. Mrs. Jones is the former Margaret Orr of Mobile, Alabama. Elder Jones is pastor of the Pensacola Branch.

A son, William Ross, was born to Chester and Ramona Gregory of Portland, Oregon, on November 20, 1949. He was blessed on Christmas Day by Elders Albert Nelson and L. G. Hoisington. Both parents are graduates of Graceland College.

A son, Mark William, was born on August 29 to Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Adams of Atherton, Missouri, at the Independence Sanitarium. Mrs. Adams is the former Janann Haden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Haden of Independence.

DEATHS

MURRAY.—Emily, died suddenly on April 15 in Dundalk, Ontario, at the age of sixty-eight. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for forty-seven years. Her husband preceded her in death a number of years ago.

Funeral services were conducted by Evangelist Benson Belrose at the Reorganized Church in Proton, Ontario.

HODSON.—Jedediah Hyrum, son of John H. and Rebecca Marriott Hodson, was born June 24, 1883, at Warren, Utah, and died September 30, 1950, in Plain City, Utah. At the age of twelve he moved with his family to Independence, Missouri, for three years, then returned to Utah. On January 20, 1909, he married Chloe Cragun. Of the eight children born to them, five survive. His wife Chloe died on November 25, 1935, and on December 6, 1938, he married Lottie Fernelius. A member of the Reorganized Church, he lived his religion by being kind and helpful to those about him.

He leaves his wife Lottie of the home; four daughters: Mrs. Dale Constance, Mrs. R. S. McGuire, Mrs. Harley Downs, and Mrs. Norbert Phillips; and a son, Eugene, all of Independence; a stepson, Conrad Fernelius, of State College, Pennsylvania; four sisters: Mrs. James Peterson of Red Wood City, California; Mrs. Parley Taylor of Plain City, Utah; Mrs. Ella McFarland of West Weber; and Mrs. Lizzie Danley of Salt Lake City, Utah; a brother, Ben Hodson of Plain City; and eleven grandchildren.

BATCHELDER.—Havilah, daughter of James and Rebecca Gadd Doan, was born July 26, 1858, at Dale, Ohio, and died October 2, 1950, at her home in The Plains, Ohio. On January 16, 1881, she was married to Nathan F. Batchelder; six children were born to them. Mr. Batchelder and two sons preceded her in death. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1911 and supported it wholeheartedly. Her home was a haven for missionaries and friends. Because of the outstanding lives she and her family lived, the local branch was often referred to by townspeople as "the Batchelder church."

Surviving are two daughters, Sarah and Ethel Batchelder of the home; two sons: John of Shade, Ohio, and Edward, address unknown; one brother, I. W. Doan of Tampa, Florida; and a grandson. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Earl Caldwell at The Plains Reorganized Church. Interment was in the Torch, Ohio, cemetery.

DION.—David Carl, son of Charles J. and Rebecca Ann Dion, was born May 23, 1887, at Independence, Missouri, and died October 12, 1950, at his home in Commerce, Oklahoma, where he had resided the past eighteen years. He joined the Reorganized Church when he was twelve years old, and was married to Minnie May Sanders on October 16, 1910. Three children were born to them; a son, Charles, preceded his father in death.

Besides his wife, he leaves two daughters: Mrs. Virgil England of Chilocco, Oklahoma, and Mrs. Jim Mullen of Commerce, Oklahoma; two sisters: Mrs. Ethel Jester of Wichita, Kansas, and Miss Alice Dion of Kansas City, Missouri; three brothers: Walter of Denver, Colorado; Fred of Kansas City; and Irion of Waterloo, Iowa; and five grandchildren. Services were conducted by Alvin Smith at the Mitchelson Funeral Home in Commerce. Interment was in Highland Park Cemetery, Pittsburg, Kansas.

* KIRTLAND THE BEAUTIFUL

As the train rolled across the hills toward Cleveland in the early morning light, the editor felt infinite luxury in gazing at the landscape from the bed of his comfortable roomette. Here were people up, waiting in their cars at the crossings, motors purring impatiently, and he hadn't shaved yet. After Cleveland was past, he hastened so that when the train stopped at Willoughby he would be ready. All the while the melody of "Beautiful Ohio" was running through his mind.

Willoughby is a pretty town with many old houses kept in good repair, and neat and tidy streets. U. S. 20 runs through it, and the traveler follows this highway a little to the east, finds the intersection with Ohio 306, and turns south—total distance three miles.

Kirtland Temple is seen by this approach across the valley of the east fork of the Chagrin River (Why did they name it that?) and it is a beautiful sight standing on the crest of the opposite hill. The pictures do not show the busy highway running in front of it.

Across the road from the Temple is the reunion dining hall, and the lovely old Sidney Rigdon house, now occupied by W. E. Williams, minister of the Temple, and Ray Ashenurst, district president. Across the street to the north is an old cemetery with many interesting grave-stones in it, reminiscent of the early history of the place. Besides these there are numbers of homes, a few stores, and about 700 people in the village; 1,500 in the township.

Brother Tommy Thomas kindly gave us a tour of neighboring places, showing us the beautiful Holden Arboretum, the pretty country drives, estates of Cleveland millionaires, and many places of beauty and interest. Ohio is a wonderful state for the tourist, and no section contains more pretty things than the Kirtland area.

Kirtland Temple is three stories high, the first two almost identical auditoriums, the third consisting of five classrooms. Melchisedec priesthood pulpits are on the west side, Aaronic on the east. The first floor is more elaborate than the second. Seats in the pews may be changed so that the audience faces either west or east, as the occasion may require. President Edwards informed us that it was designed as a stake temple. It is organized around the quorums of the priesthood.

One is a little shocked to find patches of gum stuck here and there in the pews—surely not appropriate to a holy place. For this and other reasons the Kirtland congregation is planning its own meeting place, which seems wise. The Temple should be treated reverently.

Concerning the splendid experiences of the Conference of High Priests, an official report must come in another department. Suffice it to say here that we felt we were standing shoulder to shoulder with those who built the Temple, and shared with them the glorious vision of the future of the church.

* PRODUCTS

Every cook has moments of annoyance when she is tempted to put too much vinegar in the salad dressing.

Editors have to look out for that weakness, too. It always brings an unhappy reaction.

"It's a temptation to make pickles," says Nomie. "But our orders call for sweet preserves!"

Critics may scoff at Matthew Arnold's "sweetness and light," but the great majority of readers will tolerate nothing else.

Witnessing for Christ Through Efficient Teaching

THESE ARE DAYS when individually we are becoming more and more conscious of the fact that all members of Christ's church are witnessing something, whether it be for Christ or otherwise. Likewise, all are teaching something, if not by word, certainly by example. What kind of a teacher am I? What kind of a teacher are you? How are we witnessing?

Sometimes members profess before one another in prayer meetings how much love they feel for Christ and his work, and how willing they are to do anything that can be done for the sake of the gospel. Some of these zealously-sounding individuals do not prove their statements when they are given opportunity to witness through teaching. On the other hand, no one dares challenge the statement that one who teaches for Christ, after the pattern of his teaching, is doing a great and splendid work for him—is witnessing powerfully for Jesus!

Throughout the church school system there are literally hundreds of teachers. These teachers wield powerful influences. Are you one of these teachers? What influence are you wielding? Is it that of a truly consecrated teacher, who comes punctually, on time, each time your class is scheduled to meet, with a well-prepared lesson? It would be a wonderful thing if we could hear a chorus from all chanting, "Yes, yes!" But this is not the case. While there are many who are conscientiously and efficiently serving, continuing to study and grow themselves in order that they can measure up to the unforeseen demands, not by any means are all doing this.

HAVE YOU EVER WATCHED a hungry little sparrow open its mouth wide as the mother bird approaches with food? Hungry little "birds of promise" flock to our church schools each Sunday morning, and the teacher "bird" comes with food for their minds—spiritual food which these young souls are hungering to receive.

Are you one of those who come charged with food of this type to give them, or by chance were you too busy during the week to make preparation and so appear before these hungry little tots without the food they have come to receive? In many, many places this is repeated week after week, and all the while little children are maturing physically but not always spiritually because someone has been starving them when they came to be fed. The years roll swiftly on, and soon these "children" are heading families, entering into responsibilities in the local branches, as priesthood members, women workers, and even teachers. What foundation have you helped to give them for the duties they are thus assuming? The same scene is re-enacted over and over again—a responsibility is laid upon one pathetically unprepared to assume such responsibility. Who has contributed to his lack? Too frequently it was his church school teachers all along the way when he faithfully attended the church school.

One who is asked suddenly by a friend about his church, who lacks a ready answer of the fundamentals he should be able to give spontaneously is failing in his ability to witness for Christ through the teaching of this inquiring friend. Had his teachers fulfilled their functions adequately, perhaps his teaching-answers could win his friend speedily to Christ.

Ask yourself seriously: "What kind of a teacher am I?" Meditate upon the thought. Are you really pleased with what you are doing week after week for your class? Do you want to continue in the same pattern which your teaching has thus far followed? Or do you believe you can improve the quality of the teaching?

If you are sincerely willing to improve your efficiency, why not follow the course which many others have successfully followed and testify freely that it has been the means of enlarging their scope of knowledge, understanding, and ability to impart this knowledge wisely and effectively to others? Why not write to The Department of Religious Education, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri, for a free copy of Bulletin No. 103? This bulletin presents a plan for developing teachers and leaders as well as all members of Christ's church, and lists courses of study and materials which are designed to help those who are willing to apply themselves more diligently in study that they may the more effectively witness for Christ to those many visitors and friends who are attending church school now under special invitation, as well as the regularly attending membership.

The Greater Power

WE DO NOT ASK for a religion which we can explain in every detail. We want to feel ourselves part of a movement that is infinitely greater than we are—one which has much more than ordinary resources. We want to see God at work in the world and to feel that we can be his assistants.

Because of this we are glad that the gospel, as we have been taught to believe it, gives definite place to present-day miracles. We expect to see the power of God displayed in the lives of men and women who trust him. We do not look for our Father to do our work for us.

But we do expect that—like our earthly fathers—he will bring his great wisdom and strength to bear on problems which are too great for our present strength. When we see this actually happen, it strengthens our faith and makes us more willing than ever before to do his will.

We do not reject the gospel because of its miraculous claims. We gladly accept it because here we have evidence that the power of God is available to do the work of God.

Announcements

Some people dislike announcements in church. It is true that in some places and at certain times there are too many of them. But the congregation should think of this: A church with nothing to announce is a dying church. A church with a real program must have meetings and events to announce. We should be glad of this, not annoyed.

Some say, "All announcements should be in the branch bulletin." In general, this is true. But while it is presumed that everybody can read, not everybody does. Some people will do anything to avoid reading. Routine announcements can be printed in the program notes or put on the bulletin board. But special late and important announcements must receive attention from the stand.

General dislike of announcements may come from the fact that so many of them are too long, often inaudible, or delivered in a dull, dispirited manner, as if they are not really important. No announcement should be made in an apologetic manner. If it has to be made, it is important.

In general, it is good for the pastor or the minister in charge to make the announcements, though special reasons may make an exception advisable. He should select an appropriate time in the service, usually near the offering, for the announcements. They should be brief, specific, adequate, and delivered in a clear manner that everyone can hear. They should be made interesting and be given the importance they deserve. An announcement should not be read like an obituary, unless it is desired to bury the project.

Announcements are a necessary part of the life of the church. They do not need to be tiresome and boring. They must be good if the church is to be built up.

News & Notes

AMONG THE DIGNITARIES

Special services were held November 7 in front of the Memorial Building in Independence when a replica of the Liberty Bell was dedicated. The bell was presented on behalf of the people of Annecy, France, by Georges Volland, mayor of Annecy. Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder was the principal speaker of the service. President Truman talked briefly.

President Israel A. Smith was among the dignitaries on the platform who were introduced at the time of the dedication. President Smith was also at the speakers' table in the large banquet that was held in The Auditorium.

Charles Hield, president of the student body of William Chrisman High School and son of Apostle Charles R. Hield, rang the new bell.

NOW A BRANCH

Apostle Daniel T. Williams and District President Lyle Woodstock were in charge of a meeting held November 6 at Davenport when the mission became a branch. Elder Charles Shippy was made branch president. About seventy people attended the meeting.

Church meetings are now held at the Lend-A-Hand Club, but a fund of about $1,000 has been created for the building of a church.

SERIES IN OMAHA

Apostle Arthur Oakman held a series of services in Omaha, Nebraska, during the week of October 22-29. He preached at the Sunday morning service and again at the Wednesday evening service. During the week a class was held for the priesthood and general public. There was excellent attendance at all meetings.

MICHIGAN

Apostle C. George Mesley reports in a letter to the First Presidency that Elder James C. Phillips was made the district president of the Southern Michigan District at the district conference held October 21 and 22 at Lansing, Michigan.

DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Over 400 people attended the district conference held November 6 at Rock Island, Illinois. Apostle Daniel T. Williams was in charge of the afternoon business meeting and spoke at the forenoon service. Lyle Woodstock was re-elected district president.

AUDITORIUM DOME

The snow guard railing around the lower edge of the dome is now completed and the copper panels are being installed on the dome. The work is creating considerable interest, and many visitors to the city inquire about it.

I. The Conquest of Fear

“Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.”—I Corinthians 15: 57.

Jesus recognized fear as one of the enemies of mankind. His gentleness and compassion were never more apparent than when he found people afraid. How many times he spoke to them to give them reassurance and courage.

On the Mount of Transfiguration, three of his most trusted disciples were overpowered by the presence of the Spirit of God, and he said to them, “Arise, be not afraid.” When he walked on the water near the little ship that carried some of his followers across the Sea of Galilee, they thought he was a ghost and trembled, but he comforted them with the words, “It is I, be not afraid.” Fear touched their hearts again when he met them after the resurrection, but he said, “Be not afraid.” The ruler of a synagogue sought him for the healing of his sick daughter. Then news was brought that she had died, and Jesus said, “Be not afraid, only believe.”

If you are normal, there are probably memories of some childhood terror that linger like the memory of a nightmare in your mind, and still cause you to shudder when you think of them. And there are things today that can make you afraid: the dread of injury to your children, the fear of incurable disease striking your wife, apprehension for the safety of a son in the military forces, thoughts of war, of atomic bombing, and questions of security. You often have reasons for fear.

The passing of superstition has not relieved us of fear, for the same science that exploded the myths of supernatural forces and terrors has substituted new causes of fright, many times worse.

The pagan religions often used fear as a power over the minds and lives of the people. Bear that in mind: fear belongs to paganism. The gospel of Christ is meant to conquer fear.

* * * *

One member related this experience some years ago. She said, “I knew I must have an operation, and I was very much afraid of it. I was afraid I would die. First I prayed to be healed, but my prayer was not granted. Then one day as the time drew close, I called the elders for administration. I prayed that my fear might be taken away, and it was. I went to the hospital without a worry. I took the anaesthetic, and it did not bother me. When the operation was over, I knew that I had been helped and blessed.”

Fear itself is an enemy, and it can be conquered. We may not be able to conquer it ourselves, but through Christ we can overcome it. It is a wonderful blessing to be free of fear, as it is a painful trial to be subject to it.

Unfortunately, a sense of shame that often comes through the ridicule of others has been associated with fear. This intensifies the suffering of the individual, especially young children. It can make life very miserable, a living hell for the innocent. Paul wrote, “For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.”—Romans 8: 15. We know that God is our Father, that he is all powerful. He can meet anything. That breaks the chains of fear upon our minds and hearts.

It is not shameful to be afraid. Fear comes because we do not understand. Sometimes we cannot escape from situations of danger. The soldier on the battlefield cannot go home to a place of safety. But he can free his mind of fear. Many have done it.

* * * *

Fear comes from the sense of danger that arises when we feel that we are subject to a power greater than ourselves, a sinister power that threatens our lives, a power that can inflict pain and death. Fear comes when we cannot control the situation. There is only one escape from such a fear: that is to know to the depth of our beings that there is a greater power—the power of God—and that it is on our side. God is the greatest power in the universe. No evil or danger can be equal to him. When he protects us, nothing else can hurt us. The body is not the last reservoir of life. It can be destroyed, but we continue on. It is the soul that endures, and the soul belongs to God. We are safe in him.

The famous playwright, Channing Pollock, gave a series of radio talks, one of which was entitled, “Haunted Houses.” He told how he and a young friend, reporters in Philadelphia at the time, decided to make a feature story of sleeping one night in each of seven haunted houses. He said:

Nothing happened—either that night or the other six. If there was anything except emptiness in those houses, we didn't see it. But—soon afterward, the editorial policy of my newspaper required that I write what I didn't believe to be true, or give up my job. Of course, I knew what was the decent and honest thing to do, but I was the chief support

Recent communications from President F. Henry Edwards follow:

Hamburg, British Zone, Germany

October 20

We have been visiting among the Saints in Hannover, Springer, and Elms-horn. Some excellent work has been done in the area since I was here three years ago. The Springer group is composed mostly of refugees from Poland and Latvia. Some were once comparatively well off, but now they must work very hard for a living. They seem to value the gospel highly and to find happiness in their association together and in the promises of the gospel. Elder Wilhelm Leutsfer is doing a nice job with these people. The group now has more young people than before and shows promise. Brother Theys baptized three while we were there.

Meetings are called in Berlin over the week end, and we hope to meet some of the East Germany Saints. We hope to see Brother Otto Smolney there. He was still a Russian prisoner when we were here three years ago.

Everywhere we go we find that Brother Theys is doing an excellent piece of work under the direction of Brother Jensen, who has conducted the work wisely and with deep concern for the people.

October 23

This week end in Berlin was outstanding, a continuation—I think—of the Kirtland experience. The good work of the Berlin Saints in securing their building, their deep gratitude for American help, the able translating by Otto Smolney, the presence of an excellent group of young elders, the hospitality of the West Berlin Saints to us and to those from East Berlin, all combined to provide an excellent background for the blessing of the Spirit. Leslie did very well, rendering fine spiritual ministry. We ordained Elder Thum an evangelist, preparing the way by first ordaining him a high priest, and this was very well received. Altogether it was an excellent experience.

We are happy to receive this information from President Edwards. It bears out that which is taking place throughout the church since the Kirtland Conference.

When looking over a letter from Apostle D. O. Chesworth, several things struck us as interesting for the "Across the Desk" column, and as a consequence we quote the following:

I am happy to report that baptisms in my area for the year 1950 have already surpassed those of 1949. Elder Sylvester Coleman has taken the lead in this respect, having baptized twenty in a two weeks' and two days' series at Springerton, Illinois. This was followed by a three weeks' series at Brush Creek, where sixteen were baptized. Of the eight districts under my jurisdiction, five will exceed the 1949 baptismal record, and the other three may equal it.

Next to the Southeastern Illinois achievement is that of the Spring River District where Elder Stephen Black is taking hold splendidly and has caught the missionary spirit, as noted in a recent letter from Brother Black: "It is strange, but I have not had too much of the missionary spirit before, but since coming down here I have learned that it is the missionary spirit and the desire to win people to Christ that makes our church live."

We are happy to report this kind of activity from Brother Chesworth's mission.

We have a letter from Brother Ralph Wicker, president of the Des Moines District, in which we find this paragraph:

We had set as our goal for this church year 150 baptisms. We not only obtained this goal but had a total of 162 baptisms for the year. This is, as far as I am able to determine, the largest number to be baptized in this district in one year. However, we realize that this brings a challenge to us if we are to maintain this high standard.

I think Brother Wicker has issued a call and a challenge to the district and to the church that we must maintain this high standard of baptisms if we are going to accomplish the thing we are trying to accomplish—that is the onward progress of the church in all its departments.

The following is contained in a letter recently received from Elder Luther S. Troyer of Northern Indiana District:

During the twelve months' period from October 1, 1949, to September 30, 1950, we had fifty-two baptisms in our district. This ratio of baptism is not due to any one man's ministry but can be traced directly to the consciousness of the branch presidents and the priesthood in their discipleship in witnessing of our Lord. Most of the baptisms have been secured by the standing ministry in this district.

This is very commendable on the part of those who have been active in spreading the work of the gospel in this district.

We extract the following paragraph from a letter received from Stephen Black:

We are very happy with the progress at Joplin as our attendance at church school and all services is on the increase. We are baptizing three this Sunday. We have also organized two missions in the district.

We are happy to report this kind of progress not only in this area but in other areas throughout the church.

Corrects Misleading Statement

Bishop D. A. Alberts has replied to an article published in the Sydney Herald of September 29, which carries a misleading statement on the origin of polygamy. The writer's name is not given, though it is under the simple by-line, "A Staff Correspondent in New York." The occasion for the article is the death of Mrs. Mabel Young Sanborn, "last survivor of Brigham Young's fifty-six children." The writer gives the usual propaganda line from Utah, but fails to document any of his factual statements. Bishop Alberts, on the other hand, labels the statements concerning Joseph's connection with polygamy as "untrue and based on claims made by the Mormon Church." He then quotes from court decisions and history to inform the Australian people that this propaganda linking Joseph Smith, Jr's., name with the doctrine has been repudiated by the courts of our land.

Experiences of a Missionary

Part XIII

By L. G. HOLLOWAY

PERSONAL TESTIMONY

THE Lord has been good to me all the days of my life. His Spirit led me to unite with the church. When I was careless and indifferent, he continued to feel after me. When standing on the very brink of eternity, he preserved my life. When I needed strength to carry on the work he had given me to do, he did not fail me. When I lacked wisdom and needed divine guidance so that I might do the things that would be beneficial to the work of Christ, there have come some of the most sublime experiences of my life. Surely I have every reason to thank God for the blessings he has granted to me.

GIFTS OF THE GOSPEL

One of the things that I was promised in my patriarchal blessing was the gifts of the gospel. Whenever I went these gifts were to be mine if I would appeal to the Lord to receive them. This wonderful promise has been verified to me many times. These gifts helped not only me, but many who came under my ministry.

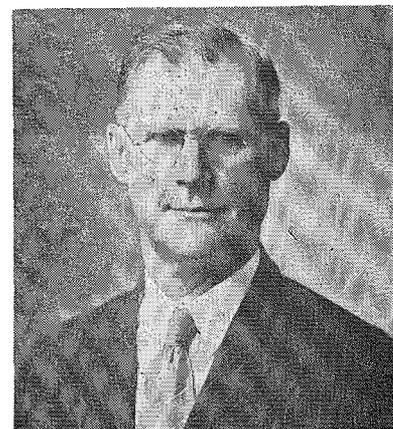

PROPHECY

It might be well for me to name some of the gifts I have received. On many occasions the gift of prophecy has been granted to strengthen and edify the Saints. One of the things I have always feared in the receiving and exercising of this gift was that in some manner I might misrepresent God. It is a most delicate experience to be able to discern that which is in the mind of our Heavenly Father and to find language that would properly represent him. Many times when I have received light, I have prayed earnestly that I might find words to correctly represent him. When that gift is given, it does not destroy one's right of agency or intelligence, but rather increases the ability to understand. There have been times when the Lord would give the subject matter, but the words to be used in revealing the mind of the Master have been left to the one delivering the message. On a few occasions the exact words have been given, and from these the spokesman was not permitted to deviate. Many times in administering to the sick, God has granted the gift of healing. One of the sad things that has come to me, as I have administered to the sick, is to discern that the individual administered to would not get well. I recall one occasion when I was in company with another elder administering to an aged woman, there was given me to know that she would live only a short time. After thinking the matter over, I was convinced I should make this known to her daughter, which I did. Later this daughter told me it prepared her for the change, and she was thankful for the light received.

DISCERNMENT

I have found the gift of discernment of spirits of considerable benefit, especially when spurious gifts have been manifested. The adversary many times has attempted to deceive by means of counterfeit gifts. It is on such occasions as this when the gift of discernment is greatly needed and it protects the interest of the Saints in revealing whether the gift is genuine or comes from another source. I shall not enter into detail, but suffice to say many times this gift is needed, and the work is protected by its use.

Generally speaking it is given by right to the presiding officer, and he is able to correct situations that arise which make it necessary for someone to protect the work.

INTERPRETATION OF TONGUES

On a few occasions I have received the gift of interpretation of tongues. As far as I am able to explain it, this gift is very much like the gift of prophecy. The only difference is the fact that one knows it is the revelation of what has been presented in the gift of tongues and not simply the gift of prophecy.

MAJOR GIFTS

The major gifts such as wisdom, faith, and knowledge make the minor gifts of greater value in the work of the church. All the gifts have their place in the church and its work and are needed if men are to be perfected. As these gifts are received, they cause the one receiving them to become humble and full of love, drawing him divinely near to Christ. Such has been my experience, and I bear this testimony, hoping it may in some manner draw men into closer association with Christ.

On many occasions when these gifts have been received, especially the gift of prophecy, those who have been present have testified concerning the truth of them. For this I am truly grateful. Were it not for the receiving of this testimony, the gift would be of little value. At no time in my life have I ever desired to receive any gift for my own gratification, but only that others might be benefited. It remains to be seen in the final day how much mankind has been helped by the manifestation of these gifts. I take no pleasure in making claim to having received them, but I do know that despite my imperfections and weaknesses the Lord has blessed me with the gifts as found in the gospel, and I shall hold in grateful remembrance the experiences that have been mine in receiving them.

VISIONS

During the early days of my ministry, I had a spiritual night vision in which I found myself out on a large body of water. There were many kinds of crafts on this water, each different from the other. Aboard these boats were men engaged in fishing. Some of them caught a large number of small, uninviting fish. The vessel I was on was a sturdy ship and had the appearance of being built so strong that it could withstand any storm which might arise. The interpretation of this vision was made clear. The water represented the world. The boats were different churches at work in the world. Among others I was to preach the gospel and bring people into the church. I have found this true in my experience in the mission field. I have not baptized as many as some others have, but I am happy in knowing that many excellent people have come into the church through my ministry.

At another time an open vision was given to me which represented the church and the conditions to be found in it. I saw a very large boat that seemingly had withstood the storms of centuries. There was a fierce storm raging at the time, and it looked as if the boat would sink to the bottom of the sea. Some moments it would sink in some trough and almost disappear from sight. Then it would ride the waves, and I could see the Captain in the pilot house. I marveled as I watched him handle the boat. It was very evident that he was a skilled pilot and would not fail in bringing the boat safely into the harbor. On board the vessel were three classes of people. One group was given to dancing and pleasure. These people did not seem to realize that their lives were in danger and paid no attention to the raging storm. Another group was excitedly shouting for help, believing the boat was going down and all on board would perish. The third group was composed of an entirely different type of people. They, too, realized there was grave danger as the storm raged, but they were calmly manifesting wisdom and caution. As I watched all these groups, I asked myself which group I would identify myself with. That question was an easy one to answer. The only ones who appealed to me were the ones last named. The boat was the church, and it had been able to survive regardless of the powers that sought its destruction. The pilot was Christ who had directed the course of the vessel throughout the centuries. The boat was finally brought into harbor where its anchor was cast in smooth waters and it would remain in peace and quietude. The vision closed and it was never made known to me what became of the two different classes found on board the vessel. This vision came as I was attending a prayer service in the old brick church in Lamoni, Iowa, where I assisted in presiding over the meeting. It is with regret that we do find in the church those who enter into covenant with Christ and then drift away. We are in a sifting time, and all things that offend will finally be sifted out. It is only that which meets the approval of Christ that will remain in the final day.

MINISTRY IN THE HOMES

The work of a missionary carries him into many strange fields. At times he finds himself ministering to those blessed with the luxuries of life. Again he is called to carry relief to the poor and distressed of earth. He may find lodging in homes where plenty abounds, then again he must share the privations of those who possess very little of this world's goods. I well remember being invited into homes where little children half clothed and poorly fed were ready to give to the missionary the food they so badly needed. Even in homes of this kind I have found a commendable warmth and welcome for the servant of Christ. Many times little children have climbed on my knee and have listened to stories I would tell them concerning the gospel. Having children and being separated from them for many months at a time, I enjoyed being in homes where I found youngsters of about the same age as my own. Good children who were quiet and obedient to their parents always appealed to me, and I cultivated their friendship. Many of the boys and girls I have met in these homes have grown up and come to my home town, Lamoni, Iowa, to attend Graceland. It is always a real treat for me to meet them again. Nothing brings a greater feeling of satisfaction than to know these young men and women are preparing themselves for a life of usefulness in a busy world.

TEMPORARY HOMES

A missionary never forgets the homes of those who take care of him when he is out in the mission field. These are his "temporary homes," and he is made happy when he knows he finds a welcome there. Some people have wondered how they could entertain the missionary while he is staying with them. The average missionary does not care for entertainment. He wants to be treated as one of the family. There are times when he is busy studying or preparing a sermon or engaging in other work that requires thought and meditation; then he wishes to be alone.

Nothing causes a missionary to feel worse than to know he is not wanted in the home. Only twice in my forty-one years of missionary work have I found myself in homes where I was not wanted. It is safe to say a missionary will not remain long where his presence is unwelcome. It has been my privilege to stay in hundreds of homes and with these two exceptions just noted, I have found a warm welcome. The missionary often carries a great influence with him in both his private and public ministrations. If he uses his influence wisely, it will become a blessing to those he is associated with. If not it will cause people to lose confidence in him, and his work will be greatly hindered. Those who minister to his needs in a multitude of ways bless him. In turn he contributes something worth while to affect the lives of those he meets.

SUPERANNUATION

For a number of years as age has advanced, I have believed that a missionary should not wait until he is entirely unfit for missionary labor before asking for a release from active work. With that thought in mind as I approached my seventieth birthday, I wrote the appointing powers and suggested if they thought best I would gladly accept superannuation. I had previously asked my good friend and fellow minister, John Garver, to tell me when, in his opinion, I should cease my active ministry. I was to do the same regarding him. Without waiting for Brother John to suggest this, I made the decision for myself. However, it was he who made the motion before the Joint Council for my superannuation, and I have understood it passed that council unanimously. When the news came to me that my request had been granted, no one except those who have passed through the same experience can know just how I felt. A feeling of loneliness and regret came to me as I realized that my work in the great gospel plan, in which I had spent the greater part of my life, was drawing to a close. While I expected to continue to do local work as long as health would permit, I also knew I could not give my full time to it. Since my superannuation I have tried to make adjustments, and in this I have partially succeeded. No one can spend more than forty years in one vocation without finding it difficult to make such an adjustment. One of the things that affects me most comes at the close of the General Conference when the appointees are assigned to their different fields. Every missionary listens with intent interest that he might know where he will labor. We who have attended every conference for nearly half a century and heard our names and fields read year after year cannot help feeling a deep and lasting regret when we are no longer assigned a field.

Many more of my personal experiences could be related, but I have endeavored to give those in which the public would be especially interested. I trust they will serve to strengthen the faith of those who read them. Many times under different conditions there has been granted spiritual light that has left a marked impression on my mind. Sometimes these experiences have come as I walked across the prairies or in the quietude of the forest where no one could hear except the Heavenly Father. I have received divine inspiration, making clear the mind of the Master to me. These moments of inspiration have drawn me closer to God and have given me a greater understanding of his work.

The Lord deals with us according to our own personality. We judge everything in the light of our own experience, and not in the experience of another. I recognize, therefore, there are limitations to the good that may come to those who read this, but it is my earnest prayer that some may be drawn closer to the Master as a result of reading it.

The sublime experiences that come to one who believes in God are of more value to him than to anyone else. Even though this is true, I also know that many lives have been affected by relating them through the years.

MY TESTIMONY

I wish to leave my testimony for the benefit of my neighbors, friends, and more especially my sons and daughters so that in the years to come when I have "crossed the bar" they may benefit from it.

I have no reason to make complaint concerning my ministry. I have been blessed beyond measure, not for my sake alone, but for the good of mankind in general. The Lord has blessed me in preaching so that I might make plain the gospel of Christ. He has blessed me in administering to the sick, and many have been healed because of their faith in Christ. I have been blessed in making decisions that affected not only me but other people as well. For these and many other blessings I now give thanks to Him who amply supplies our every need.

I have an assurance based upon experiences that have come over a period of many years, removing every doubt: I know that some day Zion will be. When that day will come I do not know, but it will come just as surely as day follows night. Zion will be built by the pure in heart. This has been revealed to me by the Divine One. There is no reason why I should change my mind concerning the establishment of this glorious condition. Man may fail and his work come to naught, but the work of the Lord never fails. Man of himself cannot produce Zion, but man with God can and will succeed in building that state of society known as Zion.

Weighing well the evidences given, even though I may find weaknesses in it, I am prepared to say this church is the work of Christ and will endure until he shall come and receive it unto himself. Had it been the work of man, it would have long ago ceased to exist. Since the days of its restoration, it has been sustained by divine power. Men in all ages have received testimony of its divinity, and of the

Uncle Albert Did It

THAT'S THE MOST INTERESTING EXPERIENCE I've had for a good long time!" said Elder Crawford David as we drove away from the little post office serving the community of Solromar, California.

We had been visiting with the postmaster, Mr. George B. West, his wife, and seven children. We had heard of the Wests through Uncle Albert Davis who attends our branch in Los Angeles. He had spoken of his nephew, Mr. West, to whom he had related the story of the church. He was certain that this man and his family were ready for baptism, for they were eager to make the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints their church home. He had asked me to visit the West home, which was actually in another district of the church organization, but barely over the line.

After setting the date, I asked Brother David to accompany me on the trip. We drove along leisurely until we came to the little post office—which is a bit difficult to recognize as such—and then stopped. Mrs. West greeted us first, then Mr. West and the children came out. They were not all at home that day—one son was working, the married daughter was busy at her own home, and two adolescent boys were at a youth camp. The conversation ranged from the surrounding hills with their wildlife to stories of the Book of Mormon; from the children's hobbies to the activities for little children at the church in Los Angeles; from the school life offered in Solromar to the tracts Uncle Albert had left for the family to read. We discovered that these people had found the secret of rich family living and rugged resistance to worldly affairs. They had developed a keen determination to serve God—for which they gave Uncle Albert credit.

WHEN ON SUNDAY, September 10, father, mother, and seven children came to be baptized, Uncle Albert was one of the happiest men in all California. It was a happy day to be remembered—each of the Saints who attended the baptismal service agreed to that.

The confirmation service followed, Mr. West having hands laid on his head first, then Mrs. West, then George, John, Eric, Rock, Starlita, Jonathon, and Sharon.

There are many other interesting things which might be said, but for now we say simply that this can be credited largely to the work of one man, Uncle Albert, who is now eighty-six years old. He is not a pastor, not an officer, not a full-time appointee—but he is one of the most effective missionaries the church has. He is willing to tell the story.

Congregation.

The Art of Giving Thanks

ONE DAY as Jesus was traveling over the countryside, he passed through a small town. People crowded around him on the streets. Some were curious, some were reverent, and some were openly hostile. Children crept shyly after him along the edges of the courtyards, and housewives looked out the windows, forgetting their work when they heard his voice in the square. Out of the crowd of followers, ten men stayed aloof, their bodies marred with the hideous marks of leprosy and their eyes wistful. Here was the amazing man about whom all Israel was talking—the healer who dealt in faith, the preacher who taught love. A story was whispered that one woman touched the hem of his robe and had been cured. But the unclean could not go close enough to hope for such a miracle. In desperation one of the men shouted over the noise of the crowd, "Master, have mercy on us." Jesus turned when he heard the voice and went through the crowd as close to the lepers as the law allowed him to go. Then he spoke, "Go," he said, "show yourselves unto the priests." In faith the lepers turned toward the synagogue, but they had not walked five paces before they saw that the marks of the filthy disease had disappeared. In great happiness they shouted the good news to the people and broke into a run. As soon as the priests had seen them, they would be able to return to their wives and families again. Nine men hysterical with happiness ran down the street with a crowd of friends surging after them. Only one man went back and, dropping to his knees in front of Jesus, gave thanks to the glorious and kind God who had healed him.

In the pathetic years of isolation, these ten men had developed the virtue of faith because of their great need. But only one of them had developed the virtue of appreciation and gratitude. We find the same thing in our everyday lives. In the midst of plenty and happiness, we are sufficient unto ourselves. In trouble and misfortune, we depend on the mercy of God to pull us through. But once it has pulled us through, we neglect to pay our debt of appreciation. We neglect to pay God the compliment of including him in our lives when we have no immediate need of his help. It may be true that there are no atheists in foxholes, but it is also true that there are no true Christians if their Christianity depends on the foxhole.

Real thankfulness is more than the act of saying "thank you." Gratitude is a way of life that honors God.

Program Planning in the Rural Church

THERE IS NO CHURCH SO SMALL that its program should be thrown together hastily. A small rural church with an effective, well-balanced and planned program will hold all ages and is assured of growth. Though the program be planned by the laity or the untrained, it can be made effective by a little previous time and thought.

Church programs should be of vital interest to everyone, based on the interest and needs of those attending. If the program is an integral part of the lives of those it serves, it reaches them personally and is motivating. The program planner having well in mind what he wants a service to do for those attending, reaches them where they are and leads them to a higher plane of living—toward God. Those who participate in the program have a better understanding of God's purposes and are motivated to commit themselves to the divine will. It inspires and awakens in them a desire to serve, it guides life in life situations.

An effective program is planned on a practical as well as a theoretical basis. Programs are planned to entertain, educate, and inspire. The theme chosen for the program will determine which of these three it wishes to emphasize and should do some of all three. People are motivated by action, emotions, and ideas in the order named. Motivation is the strongest when there is a combination of all three, but the greater part of the program should be in action, the next in emotion, and ideas—though important—should be last. If the theme chosen cannot be adequately covered in one meeting, it may be broken down into phases and presented in a series of meetings.

In program planning it is wise to observe folkways. They may seem silly, but it is better to fit in with them than to attempt to run counter to them.

GROUPS HAVE POWER over people. People themselves change very slowly, however, they do change when the power of the group is exerted upon them—when experiences are shared. When programs are formal, participation is low (this includes prepared programs). Participation that is passive lacks motivating power.

The novice planner frequently makes a mistake of trying to pick out talent in the group and trying to fit it into a program according to special abilities. It is far better if the planner first organizes a well-balanced program to fit the service and to serve its purpose, then find talent to fit each number already in the program. If the talent cannot be found, it must then be developed.

The program is limited to the time it should occupy. It is planned at the time of day, week, and season so that as many as possible may attend without interfering with work or other planned activities of the community. The program itself should be confined to not more than one-and-one-half or two hours, started on time, and closed on time; schedule calls for habit. Although country people will tolerate longer programs than city people, the length of the program should be guided by (1) "fatigue of the congregation, which is conditioned by the interest and nature of the program, (2) the conventional length of the program to which they are accustomed, and (3) the extent to which the people are attending similar programs." — Dr. Lively, Some Fundamental Principles of Program Planning.

Members actively participate in order to be a part of the program and to make it "theirs." The program should include as many people as possible, since this widens the basis of interest; more ideas, more participation, and more satisfaction result. Some training or practice may be required that all may be able to perform their parts smoothly; this training is important. Participation creates a fellowship. Active participants have less time to criticize others, hence more time is spent on individual preparation. Active personal participation means a clarifying of one idea, provides a medium for expression, and causes one to sense the needs of others. It also develops leadership ability that becomes valuable to the church and community. The word "planning" suggests the sharing of ideas. Passive participation is common and of little effect—a contributor to the dying rural church.

A BALANCED PROGRAM is needed for the rural church. In general, the first part of the program sets the theme; the second part broadens the theme; the third part reaches a climax; and the last part gathers up that which has happened, or links together the missing fragments. The program is built to sustain interest and progresses toward some goal. It should be so appealing to the people that they lose their personal identification and become absorbed in the progress. The first numbers should have a unifying effect upon the people and set the mood for what follows. It should clear the listeners' minds of matters unrelated to the program and focus their attention on what is at hand with an air of expectancy. This feature should be short, "light," and of such nature as will not be disturbed by late comers. A musical number makes an excellent starter.

The remaining program may be composed of both light and "heavy" numbers. The latter are those that require close attention, careful thinking, or emotional tension. These should be followed by lighter ones to relieve the tension and relax the people. Emotional tension cannot be prolonged without detriment to the program. It is more satisfying if any one number, heavy or light, does not exceed twenty or twenty-five minutes. If more time is taken, a "stretcher" should be arranged for.

Every program has a climax. This is planned near the end, and the total program is built around it. All numbers are arranged in an ascending series of their importance (in logical order), alternating heavy and light numbers, until the climax has been reached. If the last number is the climax, the people are allowed to depart with their mood undisturbed. Quiet music will permit them to relax and leave each with his own thoughts. If that mood is going to be disturbed, as is often the case, by visiting after the program, a relaxer number is imperative. If the program has a happy ending, the listener leaves with a desire for more. It is much better to have the program short and interesting than to have it loosely organized and "drawn out," making people wish they had not attended or that the meeting would soon close. A variety of action should be planned for, but at the same time arranged for unity. Mimeographed programs, when possible, placed in the hands of the people let them know how the program is progressing. It certainly has an important place in many different kinds of programs.

PEOPLE ATTEND MEETINGS because they expect something to happen that will be of interest to them. They like to go to services where they feel wanted and welcome; where they get ideas they can use; and where they can have an enjoyable time. Well-prepared programs do this.

Good programs can go unappreciated by an uncomfortable audience. Comfortable chairs (and seats for children so their feet can touch the floor) good ventilation, adequate lighting and heating are necessary for thorough enjoyment. If the church is large; welcoming committees are helpful in acquainting visitors with the church and making them feel at home.

The test of a good program is the effect it has on those attending. If their lives are made happier or they are caused to grow, it has been a successful program. The best immediate criteria for judging programs is whether or not they are discussed favorably in the visiting following the meeting and for sometime afterward.

Mr. H. N. Morse of the Board of National Missions for the Presbyterian Church in the United States gives the following as obvious tests of a sound program.

First, whether it advances and strengthens the long-term constructive forces that make progress possible;

Second, whether it resists the disintegrative forces that undermine and prevent progress;

Third, whether it utilizes fully our best knowledge of organization, methods, techniques, so that the institution is a means and not an obstacle to the achievement of our ends; and Fourth, whether it fully expresses our highest social and spiritual ideals.

A good outline for the church program is as follows:

1. Prelude—This is important, it quiets the people and sets the mood.

2. Call to Worship—This focuses attention on the purpose and the theme. It places the leader and people on common ground and establishes unity.
3. Hymn—Hymns are important and should be chosen in accordance with the theme. All actively participate in this part of the program.
4. Opening Prayer or Invocation—An approach to God places God at the head. This needs to be short, to the point and in coherence with the theme.
5. Scripture—This gives the people a representative of authority, a better understanding of divine truths.
6. Main Number—1. Story, sermon, or pictures, etc. (The climax should be included in one of these, near the end.)
7. Special Music—Adds time for people to meditate silently and collect their thoughts. It should be a relaxer.
8. Poems—These can sum up in short, heartfelt words the theme and challenge listeners to follow the given theme. Poems can say what one does not find words to express himself. They should be well read and in perfect harmony with the theme. This can be another climax in the program.
9. Benediction—This should tie up the feeling and expression of the people.
10. Postlude—A final relaxer.

Come and Be Thankful

By JENNIE Z. ELLIOTT

Three hundred twenty-nine years have gone by since our Pilgrim Fathers kept that first thanksgiving within the fastnesses of New England's forest. In that first year, after their landing they knew hunger, want, and fear, such as we, their children, can never dream of, except we see Mother Europe's starving hordes. But now they had freedom from want, for God had given them a bountiful harvest; he had given them freedom from fear, by making their Indian neighbors friends instead of foes. In gratitude for all these blessings, these strangers in a strange land set aside a special day to feast and to give thanks to God.

In those more than three centuries since the coming of the Pilgrims we have turned not only the wilderness of New England, but the wilderness of a whole continent—the vastness of which they had never dreamed—into a land filled with "amber waves of grain, fruited plains, and alabaster cities."

Here, amid fields and orchards, in these towns and cities, the oppressed of all the earth have sought and found refuge. The fruit of our fields and orchards, the products of our towns and cities, have made ours such a land of plenty that all mankind has looked to us for daily bread.

Come, then, let us give thanks to God, who has shed his grace upon us and "crowned our good with brotherhood from sea to shining sea."

Alcohol a Momentous Problem

By GRACE L. KRAHL

THE MINISTER was pacing the floor, discouraged over the slow progress he was making in his church work. A friend near by asked, "Why are you so restless?" "Well," said the minister, "I'm in a hurry, and God isn't."

However worthy our cause, God cannot hurry its fulfillment until men are ready for it. We may think of it as God's leisureliness, but in reality he is just as much in a hurry to see right and truth prevail as we are.

Napoleon, in the shadow of the Pyramids, said to his men, "Forty centuries are looking down upon you." And there may have been more, for even in the days of Moses no one knew how long the Egyptian Empire had existed. It took forty years of Egyptian life for Moses—forty years of training in the desert—before he was ready for the task of delivering Israel. God has to adapt himself to man's capacity, and it depends upon man how soon God can bring about his all-wise purposes.

Those of the abstemious public have waited long to see the liquor traffic abolished in our land. They wonder why God does not destroy the breweries and distilleries, take away the appetite for liquor in men, and be done with it all at once. No, in his beneficent "leisureliness" he waits for men to choose the wholesome way of life. But on the other hand, when men will not be persuaded to make choices for their own sake, they must be deprived of their indulgence by force and prison bars to protect them from further harm to themselves and others.

BUT BETWEEN the total abstainer and the confirmed alcoholic is the problem of the moderate drinker, the one who says, "I can drink or let it alone." But all too often it is obvious that he does not let it alone. Alcohol, being of a dehydrating nature, demands more and more quenching of the thirst it creates.

We are told that "horizons have been enlarged, and prejudice has given way to tolerance" regarding the use of alcoholic beverages. This assertion is the outcome of the Yale School Movement in the minds of its leaders who have the idea of modification of public school temperance teaching. Now appears the textbook for training classes of prospective teachers; it is entitled Alcohol and Social Responsibility. It contains representations of the harmlessness of the action of alcohol upon the human body for which unquestioned evidence to the contrary exists. There are many misrepresentations and half-truths in this textbook such as: "Alcohol is a good." "Physical disease from excessive use of alcohol is . . . the least of all dangers." "Ninety-five per cent of those who drink are unendangered." "The Bible recognizes alcohol as a gift of God and therefore good."

Should this equivocal teaching, together with the theory of moderation in drinking, be taught in public schools, parents who have taken great pride in rearing their children, who have planned and dreamed and sacrificed to educate and prepare their offspring for useful lives, will, I suspect, rise up in wrath against such perversion.

This teaching of moderation in drinking in the public schools finds approval by the Pennsylvania School of Alcohol Studies which describes this book as "the best textbook that has appeared."

Alcoholic beverages in military camps is another phase of the problem, and a serious one. The following incident shows a poor example for the building of morale of the young recruits from temperance homes who were taken to Korea—a strange land where they were lonely, heartsore, and frightened:

Major General Hobert R. Gay issued an order awarding "a decoration and a bottle of champagne" to "go to each member of every First Cavalry Division Bazooka squad that gets a North Korean tank." So said an Associated Press dispatch of July 27, from an advanced command post in Korea.

The dispatch continues: "Major General Gay will buy the champagne himself and will have it flown here from Japan."

These boys are ordered to face almost sure death with the promise that if they go a little farther into danger they will receive an award—not a "crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge shall give . . . in that day," but a bottle of champagne.

Could anything be more terrible? Champagne that would make them less fit as soldiers, less fit as men, less fit as Christians, and might start them on the road to a far worse death than that of the body—the death of the soul!

IN CONTRAST to this unprecedented proposition, we have another example, this for the nation, for which we can give highest commendation. It was recounted in the Kansas City Star that three supreme court judges among whom was Chief Justice Fred Vinson, two other judges, and five senators, shut themselves off from the hustle of government one morning and clasping hands—Democrats and Republicans—shoulder to shoulder in a circle, bowed their heads in prayer. Afterward the group turned to religious topics. Senator Stennis clearly stated: "We are trying to rebuild the world on a materialistic basis to offset the materialism of Communism. But we must balance our planning with spirituality." May the "Capitol Prayer Circle" be resumed frequently.

Alcohol tolerance is gaining momentum in the minds of many people. It is not a problem exclusively of a chemical substance; it is a social problem, a community problem, a church problem—and it is very important. That which will help in its solution is alcohol education, the wise use of the ballot, and the support of and co-operation with the agencies that work unceasingly for the extermination of alcoholic beverages.

A Good Soldier and a Corrupt King

By JAMES E. BISHOP

THE GOOD SOLDIER was Uriah the Hittite who lived in the kingdom of David, the second and greatest monarch of Israel. He was not an Israelite in blood. He was a descendant of a people who inhabited Canaan prior to its occupancy by Israel. But he had the spirit of a true Israelite, and of him and his kind it may be said that he was an Israelite—inwardly.

When his nation was challenged in war, he did not wait for a draft order to enlist. He typified all the heroism of modern nationality as expressed in such hymns as, "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and the beautiful "Marseillaise." In the Psalms, possibly of his own day, there was harmony for his spirit; "Blessed be the Lord my strength, which teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight; my goodness and my fortress."—144: 1.

For his wife he had won Bathsheba, the daughter of Eliam who possibly was of the tribe of Benjamin. If that were the case, she was an Israelite. The prohibition of an Israelite marrying a Canaanite had been weakened by this time because of the close association of the people. She was a beautiful woman and if tempted into disloyalty to her husband on the solicitation of King David, she possibly excused herself because of the source of the temptation; moreover the mores of her time were not too exacting. She had executive ability and after the death of her husband became the king's wife and the mother of Solomon. All through David's life she was close to him and had great influence over him.

THE FALL OF DAVID was not to be wondered at. He might have done much worse. Few have exercised power who have not abused it. His child life and youth were a joy to behold. When Samuel came to the house of Jesse to anoint the successor to Saul whom the Lord had rejected, he refused the older and upstanding sons. Jesse never gave his young son David a thought for the anointing, but Samuel's refusal was not of his own making, for he was impressed with the looks and stature of the son Eliab and said, "Surely the Lord's anointed is before him. But the Lord said . . . look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature . . . for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." After passing by seven of the sons, Samuel asked if there were others. Then Jesse sent for David, who was tending sheep. When he came, Samuel saw a ruddy youth, "of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to. And the Lord said, Arise, anoint him; for this is he."

BEFORE ASSUMING THE KINGSHIP, David spent many years in trial and tribulation. After sometime as musician at Saul's court, he was an outcast, and his life was sought, but because of his anointing and exploits, he had a loyal following, and after the death of Saul he became king.

He worked out a strong centralized government and had some years of peace and prosperity. There were wars but the reign of David was in the long run successful. He reunited Israel, established a well-organized, wisely administered government, and developed a new national spirit. He led Israel to a sense of national significance among the small nations of southwestern Asia. He established a capital city, a central government, a standing army, a court, and a supreme court of justice. If in his private life he sinned atrociously, in his public life he was sincerely loyal to Jehovah in whose name he fought and won all his battles. For those who believe the Bible and seek to justify David in his polygamy, a closer study of that Book is needed. It is well to consider, "Behold David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was an abomination before me, saith the Lord."—Book of Mormon, page 171, verse 33.

David sinned against the good soldier Uriah. One day when Uriah was at war, David—well fed and at ease—went to the top of his house. He espied a woman in the nude at her bath. He sent for her and sinned. To cover his sin he had her husband brought from the battle front. He ordered him to go home and spend the night with his wife. This Uriah refused to do, saying that he would not indulge while his comrades were at war. David then fed him and made him drunk, believing that in that condition Uriah would find his way home. But the moral principles of Uriah were so strong, he did not do that, and lay all night on the step of the palace. When David learned this he sent him back to the front with a note to be delivered to his captain. This contained an order to place Uriah in the hottest part of the battle. And thus the good soldier was killed.

Subsequently Nathan appeared before David and with a graphic parable illustrated his sin. David, not knowing he was the culprit pictured, was incensed and said such a deed deserved death. Then came the cry of the prophet, "Thou art the man."

For this sin David was sorely punished as all sinners are, and as he contemplated his destiny, he cried, "For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell" (Psalm 16: 10). Without doubt the good soldier found his peace, which David lost and which could not come back to him, "until he had paid the utmost farthing."

QUESTION:

Explain in detail so a nonmember may understand, Moroni 8:21, "And he that saith that little children need baptism, denieth the mercies of Christ, and setteth at naught the atonement of him and the power of his redemption."

Iowa

ANSWER:

As one reads the eighth chapter of Moroni, it is apparent that the people were divided in their opinions about the baptism of children. Mormon, Moroni's father, explains the matter and quotes Christ:

Behold, I [Christ] came into the world not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance; the whole need no physician, but they that are sick; wherefore little children are whole, for they are not capable of committing sin . . .

Further on the explanation is made that children need no repentance. This explanation is in harmony with Christ's statement as mentioned in Matthew 18:10, ". . . That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Again Jesus speaks, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." It is clearly stated that children are without sin. They have not reached the age of accountability. Carrying the discussion further, the rite of baptism must be preceded by two things, belief in Christ and the gospel, and also repentance. Mark 16:15, 16, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" indicates that intellectual and conscious belief must precede baptism. Peter on the Day of Pentecost said (Acts 2:38) "Repent and be baptized," to the multitude. Children are not capable of fulfilling these two requirements and are therefore in the divine justice of God relieved of responsibility.

It is evident from Christ's statements that children are innocent and without sin. Therefore, as baptism is for the remission of sins, it would be fundamentally wrong to baptize innocent, pure children who have never sinned. The person who claims that children need baptism denies the mercy and teachings of Christ and denies also his power of redemption. Christ plainly said, "In heaven their angels do always behold the face of his Father." John Blackmore.

QUESTION:

Doctrine and Covenants 16:4 says, "Contend against no church save it be the church of the devil." What church is that?

Illinois

E. C. G.

ANSWER:

It is hard for us, even in this day of liberalism, to escape the conclusion that Christ built one church (Matthew 16:18); that he prayed for her unity during his first followers' lifetime (John 17:11), and during the lifetime of subsequent generations (John 17:20-22); and that he detested divisions (Luke 11:17, 18). He also knew that in this world his church would be persecuted, but he did not fear that. His only fear was the Evil One (John 17:15). Evil "scattereth the sheep" (John 10:12).

Paul also understood that the church should be one and united (I Corinthians 12:12-27; Ephesians 4:3-5; 5:21-32), and that if division should come, it would be the result of "wolves entering in among the flock," and of ministers who would teach "perverse things" to draw away disciples after them (Acts 20:28-30).

In Doctrine and Covenants (1:5) we are told that there is one church, and the only one with which the Lord is pleased.

These statements bring us to the conclusion that there is only one church of Christ, and that the foundation of other churches is based on evil.

The answer to the question, however, is not as simple as that. We believe that the foundation of the church is of God, and about that there is no doubt in our minds. But the foundation is one thing, and the people who make the church is another thing. We may boast, and boasting is definitely evil, that other churches are of the devil, but in them there are many honest and righteous people. The same thing is true of the church of the living God, in it there is many a devil. So when we speak of the church, we speak of the foundation.

The purpose of this statement in the Doctrine and Covenants is not for the test of our knowledge as to which is the church of the devil and which is the church of God. The purpose is to warn us against contention. The Lord is telling us to make our message affirmative and escape from the easy way of debate which accomplishes nothing but hard feelings.

QUESTION:

Please explain the promise made to the Saints in Doctrine and Covenants 86 that by keeping the Word of Wisdom "The destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them." California

J. C. C.

ANSWER:

Many errors in living and especially in diet, involving some injurious habits which tend to weaken and break down the physical powers, were seen and foreseen by the Lord, as affecting detrimentally the welfare of his Saints and their preparation for meeting the unusual and important events of the last days. The work laid out for his Saints will require a people of sound health, clear and strong of mind, of great faith, and of high spirituality. It was not to be presumed that they would indulge in the grosser things of sin, but the danger was great that by the multitude of little errors in daily living, not serious enough to be called sins, indulgence would so undermine the physical powers as to threaten failure in attaining the spiritual ideal.

The Word of Wisdom is the gentle counsel of a loving Father advising his people how to live in these matters and how to prepare for the greater things. The land is already threatened with biological warfare whereby dread diseases may be spread by germs dropped from the air, and with other diseases probably resulting from famine; if or when such things come to pass it will be only the willingly obedient who will have close touch with the Spirit of God and power to claim his protection. The unwilling and neglectful and disobedient cannot at that time require of him deliverance from the destroying angel as he passes by.

A faithful and whole-hearted observance of this counsel by the Saints, in addition to their "walking in obedience to the commandments," puts them under the divine promise of health, wisdom, great knowledge, strength, and deliverance from the power of the destroying angel.

Reflections at Thanksgiving Time

By W. BLAIR McCLAIN

WHILE DELIBERATING on a message for Thanksgiving, the traditional story of our Pilgrim Fathers became dim.

My mind seemed to center on these United States, three million square miles of God's most fertile and choice land, bordered by the Pacific on the west and the Atlantic on the east, supported by two friendly neighbors—Canada on the north, and Mexico on the south. What is more pleasant than to have the companionship of good neighbors? I then realized that to have good neighbors demands that we be good neighbors—sympathetic and understanding of each others' needs.

The "Goddess of Liberty" standing in our eastern front door bids a welcome to the wayward and homeless, and the friendliness symbolized at our golden gate entrance gives us the assurance that this is "God's promised land."

I thought of the sunshine in the southland, the orange groves and inviting beaches; the eastern seaboard and beautiful New England with its hills and forests and lakes cradled in picturesque and virgin splendor. My vision flashed around 13,000 miles of coastline where over 3,000 beacons guide us safely back when we got out in the water. I thought of the great midwestern and western states with their miles of tasselled maize and cattle-specked-ranches.

I saw the oil fields of Texas, Oklahoma, California, and Pennsylvania; the beauty of the "land of many waters" revealing God's provision for our needs, as the two good neighbors engaged in friendly commerce in the channels of our own Great Lakes.

I envisioned numerous rivers with boats and spanning bridges; schools and churches with laughing children going in and out, living and growing.

I looked at the long and beautiful streets of my own town, Detroit, with its thousands of houses of all kinds. These houses faded from my view and in their stead were homes, for within the walls were people from all walks of life, protected by a symbolism of safety. In America a man's home is his castle, and his agency is protected by the Stars and Stripes of Old Glory; our national life is undergirded by four words: "In God We Trust."

Meditating upon these things, I breathed a prayer to the Heavenly Father, "Yes, God, I am thankful."

divinity of Jesus the Christ. It was this testimony that made men like Peter and Paul outstanding witnesses for Christ and his work. The greatest testimony that can be given to mankind is to know that Jesus Christ is indeed the Son of God and that he lives. To some it is given to know that Christ lives, but to others it is given to believe on the testimony.

At different times and under different conditions spiritual enlightenment has come to me through the Holy Spirit to know this greatest of all knowledge—that Jesus is the Son of God. For this light I feel indebted to my Heavenly Father and believe that the only way that I can in any degree repay him for this favor is by bearing my testimony of that which I have received to those with whom I am associated. Knowing that some day I must give an account before the heavenly tribunal to the Judge of all the earth for the things I do and say, I humbly and reverently testify to all men that there has been given to me by the Spirit of God this testimony of Christ. I have seen him in vision. I have heard his voice. I have felt his divine influence in my life as it has penetrated my very being. I know he lives and pleads the cause of fallen man. If reason can be depended on for making clear to the understanding of men the things that are true, then I surely know that to which I have testified is true.

The Life and Ministry of Jesus

By F. Henry Edwards

This text provides both a background study of the geography and times in which Jesus lived, as well as of the things Jesus did and said. Each member of the church should become more familiar with Jesus from this viewpoint. This is a book, too, that you can be happy to present to your friends. It contains a vital message in beautiful and understandable language.

The Case of the Missing Persons

CASE NUMBER 54125—Gundinkle, Eliza, age 32, married, blue eyes, brown hair, 5' 5", plump, last seen wearing brown silk suit and hat with pom-pom in a Book of Mormon class in 1944.

Perhaps what the church needs is a file like this of "missing persons" who are on the "don't see you any more" list. There are many, and the sad part of it is that they are depriving themselves of the advantages they might reap through church school attendance. They are just as truly cutting themselves off as if they had actually disappeared from our midst.

Some may take exception to this, saying indignantly, "I go to church," and feel that they have certainly discharged their duty toward church and themselves. Right now, we are not talking about duty. This is a privilege we are discussing.

IF YOU WERE INVITED to a fine dinner, would you plan your arrival so that it corresponded with the serving of dessert? Well, in a sense, church school is the main meal . . . church is the dessert. It is at church school that you have the privilege of studying, of sharing ideas, of finding out things you didn't know, and straightening out things which confused you. It is there you may add knowledge upon knowledge upon knowledge from a never-ending source. No matter how many times you study a certain subject, scholars will tell you that if you truly want to know and have the desire to find out, you will discover new angles, new truths, new understanding each time you study about it. If that is true with any academic subject, then what a promise it holds when you are studying the things of God, knowing that God himself is willing to bless you, is pleased with your interest and is just waiting to send new light as soon as you are ready for it.

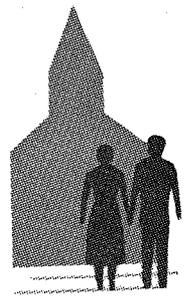

This is not meant to belittle the value of the sermon. It is an added time of inspiration—the church service—a time for quiet thought, a time of real help from a speaker who has things to offer his listeners from his experience. Taken in the light of your having already started your day right by attending church school, and, having begun the process earlier of opening your mind to light and truth, doesn't the sermon mean more? You can sense more nearly what the speaker is talking about. You can grasp more nearly the beautiful plan all are working for.

Do you realize the drama, the heartache, the adventure contained in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in the history of the church? Can you feel what those people suffered, how they lived, their hopes and dreams? Do you know what happened to them? These were real flesh and blood people with problems such as people today have, with families and homes, with friends and enemies. Bible people were not pure or perfect always. Nor did they lead dull lives. Book of Mormon people worked and lived and loved, wept and sinned just as men and women do today. And of course, the fascinating story of Restoration leaders and their flocks, their flight from place to place, their determination, their vision, reads like a historical novel—a good historical novel. It has all the color and vivid detail, all the fortitude, courage, and bravery of those pioneer times wrapped up in one package. It is good literature!

DON'T STOP US if you have heard this one—"There is always room for one more." We hesitate to suggest it, but is this you, staying away from all these wonderful feasts which are offered? Is this you with your head stuck in the sand like the ostrich? Is this you, making excuses not to be there? Extra Saturday preparation so that you and the children can go together is worth every minute you spend. Incidentally you are better equipped to increase the understanding of your children as they study . . . and strangely enough, parents want their children to learn even if they themselves are too lazy to do so. Or perhaps you work, and Sunday is your only free day. You probably plan something that is satisfying and uplifting for a portion of your rest day. Let this be it. If you try it for a while, you will never again find a satisfactory substitute.

Yes, there is always room for one more. Or two more. Or ten more. You won't be turned away at church school. True, our church schools are thriving, but we are friendly and cooperative, and we can manage to dig up one more chair which will accommodate you nicely. Don't worry about standing room only . . . you can sit comfortably and rest your feet and your soul at the same time.

You may not have realized that you are being offered a very special educational opportunity, absolutely free. This is a chance to learn about the most vital, life-giving plan there is . . . and you seem to lack interest. Of course, we can't honestly add the usual "no strings attached." We realize happily that once you learn, you will want to learn more, unless your mind has gone to sleep entirely. Our strings not only pull you gently and lovingly in, they are something to hang onto as well.

Now you may be sure in your own mind that you already know these things which are being taught in church school classes. You may be in for the surprise of your life when you discover how sharing viewpoints can broaden your own.

Last Message

By MARTHA JUDKINS

Shortly before her death on June 5, 1950, the author shared these thoughts with her sisters of Wodeas (taken from women's department auxiliary). She was a teacher in the church school and women's department for a number of years. Her pastor says of her, "She was one of the most devoted women of the branch, and during her long illness of cancer was literally waited on hand and foot by her sisters in the branch who did more for her than many of them would have done for their natural brothers and sisters. Martha's life was one well-lived; she firmly grounded her children in the church and was responsible for inculcating the principles of Christ in her husband so that he has accepted the call to the office of teacher."—Editor.

LATELY I HAVE HAD TIME for a lot of serious thinking, and I would like to share some of my thoughts with you. In the past few months it has been necessary for me to count my blessings again and again—and as usual when we count our blessings, we are surprised and humbled by the multitude of things we have to be thankful for. For one thing, I had never really appreciated the fact that Thanksgiving and Christmas are all in the same season. One starts the season and the other brings it to a climax—which is as it should be. If Thanksgiving is a time for remembering our blessings, surely one of the first blessings we think of is the church. From that it is just a step in thought until we think of the Founder of the church and how He came to be born, which leads us to Christmas. Or we might list God and Christ as the first things for which we are thankful, which again leads from Thanksgiving to Christmas.

For many of us this is the busiest, most hectic time of the year. It should be the sweetest and most peaceful. Much confusion could be avoided if we used a little forethought and planning. This month should be calm or the true spirit is apt to be lost. We should have time to read and meditate about the birth and life of Christ and why he came to earth. We should enjoy beautiful Christmas music with our families.

The sweet story of Christmas bears repeating, rereading, resinging and reacting. With the Thanksgiving holiday as our beginning, we should gradually attune our hearts and minds to higher planes until by Christmas we and our families have reached a greater climax than ever before. Only when we do this will we truly appreciate Christmas and its real meaning, the Christ whose birthday we celebrate, the needs of his church, and where we fit into the pattern.

WHEN WE GET A GENERAL VIEW of Christ's work, we see that it is being carried on by such a few people. I realized this more than ever at reunion this summer when our leaders pictured for us the wonderful work being done in England, Germany, and the Society Islands with only nine out of one hundred of our membership paying for it.

Only 9 per cent love the work Christ died for enough to keep the law! Could people really be converted and not want to keep the law? All my life I've heard members say, "Well, I know I should pay my tithing, but one more or less won't make any difference." But one more does make a difference. If just one more out of each hundred people helped, many more missionaries could be sent out, and many new countries could be reached. As I looked around the big tent on that reunion ground into hundreds of good people's faces, I thought of other reunions and conferences with their good people—all really wanting to help the church go forward, all having a burning love for this Jesus whose birthday we are celebrating. I felt as if these people and others who were not obeying the law of tithing surely somewhere along the way had not thoroughly understood—perhaps they had not been taught properly. At any rate their desire to help the church go forward radiated from their faces. If our prophet should suddenly tell us that God had revealed to him that He wanted each family in the church to sacrifice something big for Him that the work of the church might go forward—maybe one day's salary a month, maybe a week's work, maybe a meal a day, I imagine each family would be glad for the chance to do something like that to help. Yet he has already revealed his will, and all he asks is 10 per cent of our increase. He even allows us our just needs and wants before figuring his. How simple—yet only nine out of one hundred of us have really understood and loved enough to do that.

It brings us right back to love and Christmas and giving. If we as mothers are going to teach our children the true meaning of Christmas, we will have to realize ourselves that it is far more than a gay exchange of gifts and cards. The true spirit of Christmas is made up of love—first, last, and always—and this love cannot stop at the cradle in Bethlehem or even at the cross of Calvary. It must be more than love for our family and friends; it must include Christ's mission, the work of the church.

Christmas is Christ's birthday, but do we observe it as such? If he should come into our homes for his birthday celebration, what kind of love or Christmas spirit would he find in us and our children?

WE ARE APPROACHING the beginning of a new year, and many of us will again make resolutions. As long as we resolve and really try, we can't help growing some. There are two things I would like for you to resolve this year. If they are already habits of yours then resolve to keep them, for they are good.

First: Resolve that you will take at least ten minutes a day to read, meditate, and pray. I find early morning the best time for me. Find your best time and keep plenty of reading material handy to study during this time. Daily Bread is good; when you read it you get reading from The Three Books as well as other books. The Herald is good; it keeps you up with church affairs as well as presenting the best writings of our leaders. There are other good books and pamphlets. Whatever you read, be diligent about it; and pray—even if it is just a few words. In times like these, we must keep building our faith and spiritual strength. As mothers and wives we need to be towers of spiritual strength for our families. If you will do this, you should find it easier to do this second thing I'm going to ask of you.

Resolve to keep the financial law. Down deep in your heart decide that you are going to be numbered among those who care enough to file inventories and pay tithing.

I have shared many of my thoughts with you, but one more seems necessary. It is this poem which has been going over and over in my mind for the past few months. See how you feel about it.

If suddenly upon the street
My gracious Savior I should meet,
And he should say, "As I love thee,
What love hast thou to offer me?"
Then what could this poor heart of mine
Dare offer to that heart divine?

His eye would pierce my outward show,
His thought my inmost thought would know;
And if I said, "I love thee, Lord,"
He would not heed my spoken word,
Unless my daily life should tell
That verily I loved him well.

Saints' Hymnal.

A More Meaningful Holiday Season

By MRS. J. HARRY PAXTON

AS MOTHERS, wives, and women's department workers, let us approach the holiday season this year by taking stock of our time, talent, and resources, and by planning wisely, starting early, spend within our means. If we neglect to do this, we may find ourselves with so many tasks piling up at the last that we are tired, confused, and not too happy. Christmas and Thanksgiving should be a happy time for the family and the church, and each member should have a part in it. The responsibility rests largely on the women.

People are most enthusiastic over the things they have helped to plan and execute. Let's get away from the habit of putting commercial values on our gifts and activities, stressing instead good fellowship, good taste, and careful spending. In America we have made Thanksgiving a day on which to eat turkey, but the Pilgrim Fathers intended it to be a day on which to give special thanks to God for his bountiful harvest.

Christmas Day is usually a very busy one, and as members of the family grow older their interests are often divided. A breakfast for the immediate family with a simple worship center brings all closer together and sets the tone of the day on a high level.

FRIENDLY VISITING

Volumes could and have been written on this topic. The late President F. M. Smith said, "Keep it friendly visiting." First, no matter how little time you have, do not rush in or out, or make one feel that it is a duty you have to perform; be gracious but not condescending; have a cheerful bit of news. Don't wait until people are ill or hungry; maybe they are lonely. Just because you see people at church every Sunday, don't think they wouldn't appreciate a friendly call. If you do not find them at home, always leave a card with a message, and they will know you cared enough to come.

During holiday seasons, every member of the church should be a friendly visitor. Every home should be visited and families invited to share in Christmas activities. Christ said, "I call you friends."

FRIENDLY GIVING

In most of our branches there are those who need help. Christmas giving to the needy should be done in the true Christmas spirit. Foods and gifts should be well chosen to meet the needs of the ones to whom they are being given. Food should be attractively packed in baskets and gifts wrapped to look gay and festive. Two or three women should deliver these packages, extending Christmas greetings and best wishes plus an invitation to attend church.

The Indispensable "Daily Bread"

During my reunion work this summer, I was much encouraged by the widespread use of Daily Bread. Two of the reunion staffs used these devotionals as an early morning worship, broadcast to the camp on a public address system. From conversations with the campers, I learned that many used the stories in their church school departments, some adapted the illustrations to their needs for worship talks, and others found good prayer service themes in Daily Bread. Everywhere I heard appreciative comments about this devotional magazine, and found that many homes feel it is indispensable.

WELLSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—The thirty-sixth anniversary of the branch was celebrated on October 14 and 15. On Saturday evening an impromptu get-together was held with local talent participating. The service was in charge of Ray Hanes.

On Sunday morning a fellowship service in charge of Missionary James Menzies and District President S. M. Zonker was held. Eugene Chadwell was in charge of church school which followed. At the 11:00 service Brother Menzies spoke. Lele Dubois sang "Man of Galilee" accompanied by Helen Phillips on the organ.

Lunch period was held at noon. At 2:00 an experience meeting was held in charge of Otto Melcher. Three charters members were present: Sisters Cora Melcher, Mary Allen, and Brother Williard Allen.

Vesper services in charge of Evangelist R. E. Rangers concluded the day's activities. Brother Menzies spoke in the evening. Pastor John Treiber sang the solo, "Dear Lord and Father."

Zion's League recently presented a radio show. Roy Hanes, youth leader, wrote the script. The variety program consisted of a radio "serial" of solos, news reports, and instrumental music.

Three young men were recently ordained: Don Treiber to teacher, Neil Nixon and Keith Zonker to deacons.—Reported by RUTH CHADWELL.

SINKING SPRING, OHIO.—At the business meeting held September 17 these officers were elected: Carroll Rhoads, pastor; Heber Woods, associate pastor; Charlie Turley, secretary and treasurer; Opal Woods, pianist; Blanche Garuian, statistician; Velma L. Rhoads, publicity agent; Dwight Crum, Norma Ann Rhoads, Freddie Rhoads, librarians; Eugene Crum, church school superintendent; Opal Woods, church school secretary and treasurer.

Following the Communion service on September 3, Robert Michael Sheppard was blessed by Elder Rhoads, his grandfather, and by Elder Woods.

Pastor Carroll Rhoads died suddenly on October 17. Funeral services were held October 21 at the church. Elders Floyd Rockwell of Dayton and Elder Huton of Springfield officiated. Interment was at Marshall, Ohio.—Reported by VELMA L. RHOADS.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—Officers elected at the business meeting on August 29 are Leslie Lynch, pastor; Warren Wolfe and Gordon Bennett, councilors; Paul Staffeld, church school director; Elsie Bennett, music director; Warren and Valli Wolfe, Zion's League leaders; Thor Altuedt, secretary; Sadie Anderson, women's leader; Wayne Lynch, junior church leader; Frank Parsons, Roger Lundeen, Paul Staffeld, Dayle Sundell, and Sylvester Roberts, finance committee; Dick Elvin, book steward and librarian; Lill Wolfe, historian; Howie Champion, building custodian; and Vivian Shippy, correspondent.

District conference was held September 16 and 17. Elder Merle Guthrie was the speaker. Nearly all branches were represented.—Reported by V. SHIPPY.

OAK HILL, KENTUCKY.—A series of services was conducted by Elder J. H. Yager, October 1 through 12. The following were baptized: Patricia Rasner, Linda Caltharp, Opal

On September 17 the pastor, Elder C. L. Ross, baptized Sylvester Fuller and Sarah Shupe. Glynn Caltharp was ordained to the office of elder on October 8 by Elder J. H. Yager and assisted by Pastor Ross.

Betty Lou and Barbara Sue Caltharp, twin daughters of Elder and Mrs. Glynn Caltharp were blessed October 15 by Pastor Ross and assisted by Elder Caltharp.

Church school is held every Sunday with an average attendance of forty-five. Communion service is held on the first Sunday and preaching service on the third Sunday of each month. Prayer service is held every Sunday evening.—Reported by FREIDA CALTHARP.

SOUTH GATE, CALIFORNIA.—Southeast Mission, located at 10022 California Avenue, was organized January 18, 1948. High Priest Albert Knowlton was the first pastor.

The second pastor was Elder Virgil E. Shepard, who was succeeded by Elder R. L. McRae. When Southeast Mission was organized, it was under the direction of Los Angeles Metropolitan District. It has a membership of about 110 and is now a part of the Los Angeles Stake.

During the past year there have been seven baptisms: Bert Aslin, Ronald Finger, Margaret Waldheim, Joseph and Irene Ivory, Sandra Bacon, and Gloria Martin. Two babies have been blessed: Teresa Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Miller, and Harry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hutchins. Brother David Davis was ordained a teacher.

The annual business meeting was held on August 27 with Counselor Glen Holmes of the stake presidency in charge, assisted by Pastor R. L. McRae. New officers are Elder R. L. McRae, pastor; Leroy Hamilton and Arthur Hawkes, counselors; Dorothea Hawkes, secretary-recorder; Ruth Aslin, church school secretary and historian; Leroy Hamilton, treasurer; Russell Finger, church school director; John Lee, book steward; Alice Savage, correspondent; Grace Davis, women's leader; Ora McRae, dramatic and music leader; Norma Jean Smith and Alberta Downey, assistant leaders, and Mildred Finger, junior church director.

The women's department held a rummage sale which netted sixty-five dollars for the building fund.—Reported by ALICE SAVAGE.

BAYOU LA BATRE, ALABAMA.—The annual business session was held September 21 with Elder O. O. Tillman in charge. Elder Tillman offered the invocation and then recognized High Priest Franklin Steiner. The meeting was turned over to Brother Steiner who presided throughout the business session. The minutes were read and approved.

Brother Steiner read a recommendation from the pastor in which he presented the name of Delbert Tillman for branch approval for ordination to the office of elder. The branch approved unanimously. The presiding officer said that Delbert Tillman's name would be presented at the district winter conference for ratification by the district.

Officers elected to serve during the coming year are as follows: Elder O. O. Tillman, pastor; Delbert Tillman, counselor; Irma Tillman, church school director; Audrey Tillman, secretary and statistician; Robert Pendarvis, treasurer; Frank Deakle, youth leader; Louvenia Sutton, women's leader; Hazel Ruth Nelson, publicity agent and book steward; Audrey Tillman, music leader.

Brother Steiner presented the budget for approval. The vote was unanimous to accept the budget. Benediction was by Delbert Tillman.

Marie and Bernice Ankerson, sisters, were baptized October 8.—Reported by HAZEL RUTH NELSON.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—Twelve ordinations have been recently made in the St. Louis District.

The business meeting of the district conference held at St. Louis, October 14, 15, voted approval of ordination of the following men, already approved by their home branches: to the office of elder, Roy I. Benson, Tom S. Gough, Dalton Nordyke, James W. Myers, and Edward M. Joy; to office of priest, Herb Tourville and Lawrence Watson; to office of teacher, Wayne Dillon and Herman I. McCutcheon; to office of deacon, Charles May, Virgil Noakes, and William Tarrant.

District officers elected at the meeting are Frank McDonald, president; Cedric Evans, treasurer; Elde Emick, secretary; Ben Clark, church school director; Charles Johnson, young people's supervisor; Mathel Archibald, director of women; and Herb Tourville, publicity director.

It was also agreed in the business meeting that henceforth we follow a plan of separate departmental district-wide meetings—for example, young people—and leave calling of district conferences to the discretion of the president, rather than hold them on a three- or four-times-a-year schedule.—Reported by DON HUNSTEIN.

EVANSVILLE, INDIANA.—On October 22 Elder I. C. Glenn of the Derby Branch was guest speaker for the morning service. A basket dinner was served at the noon hour. At the 2:00 service Brother C. L. Gritton of Henderson, Kentucky, was ordained a priest by District President Chester Metcalf of New Albany, Indiana, assisted by Elder Glenn.

Immediately following this service a business meeting was held, and $1,300 was pledged for the building of a church.—Reported by MRS. ODIE ELLEN CAMPBELL.

VINITA, OKLAHOMA.—District President Stephen Black, assisted by Elder C. D. Wilson of Fairland, conducted the business meeting held October 4. Steps were taken to organize the group into a mission. The following officers were elected: Elder Lea Lamons, mission president; Bert C. Parkhurst, director of religious education; Avo Davis, secretary; Lela Parkhurst, treasurer and public relations director; Rita Wilson, music; Roy and Velma Raffety, young people's leaders, and Avo Davis, women's department leader. A building committee was elected: Howard Clark, Bert Parkhurst, Orville Lightfoot, the pastor, and treasurer.

Regular visiting ministers are: first Sunday, Elder Arthur J. Dixon of Miami; second Sunday, Elder B. M. Howard of Miami; third Sunday, Elder Earl Phillips of Joplin; fourth Sunday, Elder Clarence Rook of Miami; fifth Sunday, Alby Hudson of Fairland assisting with junior church.—Reported by LELA PARKHURST.

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE.—The Towasi Circle of Orioles had an outstanding achievement in the Girls' Award Service held in the basement of the church on October 26. Ten girls of the circle and their monitor, Mrs. Pearl Wilcox, received their first rank building awards. Wanda Johnstone, who had completed the first rank requirement, had the honor of pinning the rank on Mrs. Wilcox. Wanda has received six awards in the Light of Life, and will receive her pin soon.

MONTROSE, IOWA.—The first fall meeting of the Emma Burton Circle was held at the home of Mrs. Myrl Phillips on September 12. Election of officers resulted as follows:

Mrs. Myrl Phillips, leader, Mrs. Leona Sills, assistant; Mrs. Vallie Strange, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. Lily Jordan, cards and flowers. "Serve in Love" was chosen as the motto and "To Make Our Best Better" as the goal. I Witness for Christ, by Blanche Mesley, was selected as the course of study, and each member will take her turn as teacher. A traveling basket has been a means of bringing money into the treasury, and this year each member will have a specific month in which to promote a small project to raise funds. The Circle sponsored a needlework and refreshment booth at the annual Watermelon Festival, August 18 and 19, and the proceeds, which amounted to $332, went toward the building fund, which is being used to remodel the church.

On September 18 a potluck supper and wiener roast was held on the lawn of the R. N. Smith, Sr., home.

Branch election was held on September 24 and the following officers were elected: Elder B. F. Strange, branch president; Mrs. O. T. Miller, secretary; R. N. Smith, Jr., treasurer; Mrs. Maurice Phillips, church school director; Dale Jordan, librarian; Elder O. T. Miller, custodian. Mrs. O. T. Miller was appointed as assistant church school director and Ruth Ann Sills as church school secretary. Pianists are Yvonne Shofer and Ruth Ann Sills.

A two weeks' series of missionary services were conducted in February by Elder Cecil Ettinger of Nauvoo, missionary in the district. On May 21 Wanda Beery was baptized by Elder Ettinger and confirmed by O. T. Miller and William Pike.

Mrs. Albert Jemison, one of the oldest members of the branch, died on June 26 after an extended illness. Funeral services were held at the church on June 28 with Elder O. T. Miller officiating.

Members of the young adult class are in charge of the Sunday evening services. Patriarch Elbert A. Smith's Exploring the Church is the course of study.

The entire branch holds a potluck supper and social hour once a month during the winter in the basement of the Maurice Phillips home.—Reported by MRS. MAURICE PHILLIPS.

EVERGREEN, IOWA.—On September 29 a six weeks' series of weekly cottage meetings was started under the direction of Seventy Virgil Billings and a series of evangelistic sermons on Sunday evenings by Philip Beckman was also started. Seventy W. E. Shakespeare is pastor of Evergreen Branch which is located six miles southwest of Lamoni, Iowa.

At the annual business meeting on September 21, the following officers were elected: W. E. Shakespeare, pastor; W. H. Thomas and Alma Heide, counselors; Harvey Campbell, church school superintendent; Mrs. Marjorie Thomas, women's leader; LaVern Lingard, music director; Everett Neilsen, Zion's League supervisor; Donna Marie Gardner, librarian and Herald reporter; Henrietta Shakespeare, local reporter; Mildred Thomas, clerk; Elbert Thomas, solicitor; Harvey Campbell, treasurer; and Lawrence Vogel, historian.—Reported by LAWRENCE VOGEL.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.—On September 10 unusual happenings took place for the small group of Saints. The group, although not officially organized under priesthood leadership, had been meeting under the leadership of Aubrey Miller. Through the efforts of Elder Joseph Martin of Independence, Missouri, and the officers of the Gulf States District, the group was officially organized. Elders Franklin Steiner and Brewton Greene of Mobile, Alabama, presided over the meeting. Aubrey Miller was ordained a priest and was placed in charge. This was under the direction of Apostle Percy Farrow who is in charge of the Southern Mission. Elder Ammon Calhoun of Miami, Florida, was present.

Elder Jim Best of Buchanan, Michigan, recently moved to Atlanta to take charge of a nursing school.

Any isolated member of the church who lives near Atlanta should contact A. G. Miller, 1123 Brookdale Drive, East Point, Georgia, phone CA 5578.—Reported by A. G. MILLER.

I Am Thankful

By MRS. HARLEY NAGEL

"I just sent Harley away this morning—" and I apologized for the trunks and boxes which were packed ready to be shipped to Columbus where Harley was the new pastor.

Their faces were serious as they sat down.

"Sadi, there's been an accident," Fred said quietly.

My heart stopped beating. "Harley?"

"Yes," he answered.

"Has he been hurt?"

Fred nodded.

"Is he dead?"

"Yes."

It was impossible. Harley couldn't be dead. He was too much alive. We had everything to live for. God surely wouldn't permit it.

"The rain—a slippery pavement—the others are all right—just Harley—he didn't know what happened."

I thought of my unborn baby, of Harley's new appointment, of his parents who had lost his brother just six years before in the war. Had God been taken unaware?

No, it was real. And suddenly in the face of death, I found things to be thankful for. God had not been taken by surprise. I knew that immediately—as soon as the question had entered my mind. I was grateful that Harley had not suffered. For hadn't the Lord permitted me to know even before we married that sometime he would give his life in the service of Christ? And I had feared for how he might die. But God had been good to him and me.

Harley had gone from one happy state to an even happier one. This was something else to be grateful for. For Harley himself there was no grief, for he was one who had tried to live the laws of Christ. Assurance was mine that he indeed was acceptable to our Heavenly Father. How thankful I was that he was a righteous man. Our prayers of that morning were answered. When the accident had happened, God could have preserved Harley, but he didn't. To his honor and glory, God could use Harley in his work in the immortal sphere. And how about my prayer for his protection? It hadn't been God's will to protect Harley that morning. Simply that. It wasn't necessary in God's economy. This young man had fulfilled his purpose on the earth and was prepared to meet his God.

And for those who were left behind? What about us? God had considered us also. As Harley was a chosen instrument in the hands of God, so was I. God wanted to use me for his work and his purposes. In this I rejoiced. It was a happy thought to know that to our God each of us is more important, more loved, and more

I LOOK INTO THE EYES of my baby daughter and consider how good my Heavenly Father is to me. "Consider and hear me," he tells us, and the past three months have caused that to come about in my life with a greater force than I could have dreamed. This is my testimony of thanksgiving.

On a rainy August morning my husband and I knelt to pray in our family worship, asking God to use us where he would for his work. Harley asked that I might be blessed as I prepared to become a mother very soon. I asked that if it were God's will, Harley might be protected as he traveled that day. We were both happy. He was going to Kirtland! It was a life-long dream. He was going in service to our Heavenly Father, to teach a class and participate as a member of the reunion staff. He was launching into the sea of service for which he had prepared since his baptism as a lad. What a wonderful thing to be able to give his whole life to the service of Christ! And I joined him in the joy.

In a few days we would become parents. And we knew nothing but happiness as we looked forward to that experience.

He waved cheerily and smiled as the car drove away in the rain. I turned back into the house, my heart full of peace.

Three hours later my pastor, Brother Fred, and his good wife Sister Frances, and Harley's mother came to the door. I invited them in.

a matter of concern than we could possibly be to ourselves and our loved ones.

NOW, THREE MONTHS LATER, I have many, many things to thank God for. This Thanksgiving season finds within me a greater capacity for thankfulness, for I have come to know many things of great worth.

The baby, born six days after Harley went to serve in another sphere, is a lovely daughter. She is one of God's blessings. When I needed the baby most, she came into my heart. And it was a girl. Already she is my little friend, a cheery companion with a sweet smile and distinctive personality of her own. It's good to have a child to love. I've learned more about love than I ever dreamed. And I realize the story has just begun.

I'm glad that I can tell little Doris that her father was a good man. He was a father of whom she can always be proud. As one friend expressed it—"one of God's noblemen." He loved her and sent on to her a rich heritage, even though she was unseen. She is a fortunate child to have such a fine father. I am thankful for that.

I am thankful for the good things I can tell her: that her daddy put Christ first in his life and was happy for it; that he loved his home and looked forward to her and that she was wanted and planned for.

I am thankful for that one year of married life. One year, even, brings a growth in the human personality that is God planned and God given. I am thankful for what I have learned about God's love through the love of a good companion.

I HAVE SEEN the towers of Zion shining on the horizons of my own life. I have found the loving kindness of Christ demonstrated in the lives of friends, family, and people throughout the world whom I have not seen. I have felt the power of their prayers—for God blessed me with peace and understanding and faith in his purposes. Their prayers, sent up in sympathy and love, have been answered and are being answered. It makes me feel humble.

Not only prayers but words and deeds have I to be thankful for. Only those who have suffered tragedy in their lives can truly know the kind hearts of the Saints. Day after day and week after week they have shown their love and concern as I adjust to my new life. There were the families who helped me establish myself in my little apartment—spending days, not just minutes or hours, but days in effort. There are the many who pray with me as I seek to make decisions in life. There are the many who provide their companionship. There are the priesthood members of my congregation and of the other congregations of the Center Stake who provide their varied ministry.

I AM THANKFUL, more than ever, for Christ's church, where I can find avenues of service, of personal strength, of vision, and hope. What a joy it is to take my little daughter to the house of God, to watch her wide, blue eyes as she listens when the people sing, to see her smile as friends come to make her acquaintance, to know that among the Saints she is considered their responsibility as well as mine—for she, as is true of all babies, is kingdom material. And others feel more particularly now that their lives are important examples for her life.

It's good to have all that the church has to offer as I look forward to teaching my child. It carries the gospel—that same gospel which has brought peace and joy and happiness to my life and to her father's life. It carries with it the promise of all things good. I'm thankful beyond expression that I have the gospel to teach to my child. Nor am I alone in that instruction. There are the priesthood members, and the Saints as well as God's own Spirit of instruction.

How wonderful it is that there is a God who wants the best from each of us! And because he wants the best, he gave us the gospel which demands the best and at the same time shows the best. The gospel bears with it the message of eternal life, of God's purposes, and of the kingdom. For these things I am particularly thankful now.

I AM THANKFUL for something else that is difficult to express. It is for the manner of woman this experience of death and birth is making of me. If I permit it, through this experience God can weave golden threads into the pattern of my life, which will make me qualified to live with him. God didn't have to use this particular way of drawing me closer to him, but he is making of it an opportunity for that purpose. In other words, nothing is wasted in his economy. That which seems tragedy, God can turn into great blessing. For wasn't the crucifixion of Christ a tragedy—God's own son ignobly killed by evil men? Yet God—all powerful and all loving—turned that incident into a thing that has brought to the world its greatest blessing.

Similarly, by using that which has happened in my life, God can make it the very tool to bring about his purposes in me. That knowledge itself is something to thank God for.

I AM THANKFUL for the increased knowledge of eternal life which has come to me. What a glorious thing the universe is with the numberless beauties of God's physical and spiritual creations! It's all part of the eternal life.

I am thankful for the gift of faith and hope and the increased understanding of the sureness of God's plan. I have seen that all things can be turned into the channel of creativity by the hand of God. I can teach my child that whatever will come to pass in her life can become a beautiful thing—for I am seeing it in my own.

I am thankful for the way in which I can see God working with me, teaching me the very things I need most in my life—love for others, trust in him, humility. God is forcing into fruition the latent graces which might otherwise have taken years for development. I pray that I may learn quickly—for there is much to be done in the work of the kingdom.

And I am grateful most of all that I am invited to share in this great creation—the kingdom of God. Because God wants me to help, he is aiding me to qualify as a worker and contributor. I want to place my life and the life of my daughter, insofar as I am responsible for it, in the hands of this God who has been so good to me. "Consider and hear me." Yes, as I consider with my heart the beautiful things of God, and as I listen to the leading of his voice, I have more to be thankful for at this Thanksgiving than ever before.

of my family, and jobs were scarce. We should probably starve to death, I thought—and then suddenly I remembered those haunted houses, filled with horrors that never came to pass, and decided that this specter of starvation was the same kind of ghost, exactly; I resigned my position that night. If I hadn't, I might still be an underpaid drama critic in Washington.

Channing Pollock went on to wealth and fame because he wasn't afraid of a "haunted house." He continued:

Many, perhaps most of our minds are haunted houses. In them are evil spirits of fear or envy or hatred or jealousy that drive us to foolish doubts and dreads, and unworthy compromises. If and when we face these ghosts, they melt into thin air.

Jesus summed it up when he said, as he did so many times, "Be not afraid."

Be not afraid! It is a wonderful message. It is meant for you.

DEATHS

UTTERBACK.—Annie J., daughter of James and Harriet Fry, was born April 28, 1865, at Devizes, England, and died September 30, 1950, at Tabor, Iowa. At the age of seventeen she came to America to make her home with her uncle and aunt, Elder and Mrs. E. C. Brand, near Tabor. After studying music she became a teacher and taught until a few weeks before her death. A member of the Reorganized Church, she was an active worker and won many friends to the gospel. In 1905 she was married to Oliver Franklin Utterback, a farmer; in 1923 they moved to Hemingford, Nebraska; one son, Paul, was born to them. Following Mr. Utterback's death in 1928, Paul carried on the farm work until 1943 when the family moved back to Tabor.

Besides her son she leaves three brothers: Charles Fry of Tabor, and two brothers in England (names not given); a sister, Margaret, of England; and four grandchildren. Elder Morrell Cottew was in charge of the funeral service held in Tabor. Interment was in the family lot at Glenwood.

PARSONS.—Martha, daughter of James and Liddia Gale, was born at Mt. Ayr, Iowa, on August 7, 1859, and died October 15, 1950, at Resthaven in Independence, Missouri. On January 26, 1875, she was married to Alonzo H. Parsons; three daughters were born to them. Two died in infancy. Reared in the United Brethren Church, where her father was a minister, she and her husband joined the Quaker Church following their marriage. Then, after hearing of the Restored Gospel, they joined the Reorganized Church on July 23, 1880. Brother Parsons, who served the church as elder, seventy, and high priest, died on October 27, 1933. For the past fifty-eight years Sister Parsons has made her home in or near Independence.

She leaves her daughter, Mrs. Veneta June Gardner of Flint, Michigan; a sister, Dora Bacon of Pennsylvania; two grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren. Services were conducted at the George C. Carson Funeral Home, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Harry J. Simons officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HILLIARD.—Frances Emily, daughter of Thomas and Mary Plant Williamson, was born March 20, 1861, in Pittsfield, Illinois, and died October 11, 1950, at the home of Mrs. William Williamson in Independence, Missouri. After the death of her mother in 1891, she made her home with her brother, William, until her marriage to George Hilliard on May 15, 1907. Five years later her husband died, and although she had no children of her own, she mothered three of Mr. Hilliard's grandchildren whose mother had died. At another time she took in three other homeless children. She also cared for a younger sister, a niece, and a great-grandchild. A member of the Reorganized Church, she was active in church school work and was a charter member of the Hawthorne Society, which later became the Laurel Club. For the past eight years she had lived at her brother William's home. A brother, Charles H. Williamson, survives her. Services were held at the Stahl Funeral Home in Independence, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Arthur E. Stoff officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

CRUM.—Alfred Bishop, was born October 4, 1879, at Chico, California, and died June 21, 1950, at Yosemite National Park, California. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 19, 1903, and was ordained a teacher on September 8, 1912, which office he held at the time of his death.

He is survived by his wife, Jennie, of Temple City, California; two sons: Hollis C. of Long Beach, California, and Alfred B., Jr., of Temple City; four daughters: Jane Wheeler of Arcadia, California; Mabel McGill of Delhi, California; Pearl Shirk of Glendora, California; and Velaria Sherman of Long Beach; a sister, Mabel Green of Los Angeles, California; four brothers in Seattle, Washington, and one brother in Wausau, Wisconsin (names not given); and five grandchildren. Services were held at the Turner Stevens, and Turner Mortuary in Alhambra, California, Pastor Elaine Bender officiating. Interment was in the Inglewood Park Cemetery, Inglewood, California.

BURGOON.—Edward O., died July 18, 1950, at the home of a son, Don E. Burgoon, in Independence, Missouri. He was eighty-two years old. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church for fifty years.

He is survived by his wife, Lurella, of the home; two daughters: Mrs. F. A. Munden, Salina, Kansas, and Mrs. Ted Dexter, north Las Vegas, Nevada; two sons: Don, and A. T. Burgoon of Bellflower, California; a sister, and three brothers. Funeral services were held at the Quindaro Church, Lester Fowler and John Tucker officiating. Burial was in Evergreen Annex, Memorial Cemetery, Kansas City, Kansas.

DOUGLAS.—Charles E., son of Charles E. and Mercy Douglas, was born April 23, 1880, in Plymouth, Massachusetts, and died October 3, 1950.

He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on October 1, 1905, and ordained a teacher on June 18, 1916. He was an only child and never married. Services were conducted by Elder Benjamin W. Leland at the Beaman Funeral Home in Plymouth. Interment was in the Oak Grove Cemetery, Plymouth, Massachusetts.

RENEAU.—Anna Lee Roberts, died October 13, 1950, at her home in Waco, Texas, at the age of seventy-five. She was married on October 16, 1890, to David Allen Rneau, who preceded her in death by seven weeks. She was a member of the Reorganized Church.

Surviving are seven sons: William H., M. B., and Ralph of Waco; Jack of Corpus Christi, Texas; Virgil C. of Aransas Pass, Texas; Horace of Austin, Texas; and Raymond of Marlin, Texas; three daughters: Mrs. Ruth Lowery of Lorena, Texas; Mrs. Mattie Atkins of Corpus Christi; and Mrs. Cammie Allen of Marlin; four sisters: Mrs. Mollie Sewell of Liberty, Texas; Mrs. Minnie Tucker of Aransas Pass; Mrs. Lou Gumm of Houston, Texas; and Mrs. Mattie Gumm of Chilton, Texas; a brother, Ben Roberts of Nederland, Texas; forty-three grandchildren, twenty-seven great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held in Waco, Elder Preston M. Wheeler officiating. Burial was in Waco Memorial Park.

HUFF.—Grange W., was born October 26, 1925, in Sioux City, Iowa, and was killed in action on September 21, 1950, in Korea. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on June 9, 1935. He attended Central High School, after which he served thirty-eight months in the Navy during World War II. In April, 1949, he re-enlisted for service as a member of the Thirty-eighth Infantry Regiment. On August 2, 1950, he was sent overseas, landing at Pusan on August 19 and going immediately into battle.

He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Edward Kilker of Sioux City, and a sister, Mrs. William Baker of Chicago.

HEDRICK.—Emma Rose, daughter of Josiah D. and Elizabeth Wilson Price, was born March 31, 1877, near Fanning, Kansas, and died August 3, 1950, at her home in Atchison, Kansas. At the age of eight she became a member of the Reorganized Church, and on October 21, 1896, she was married to Frank G. Hedrick—the first couple to be married in the Reorganized Church in Fanning. For ten years Brother Hedrick was presiding elder of the church in Northeast Kansas, and she was in charge of women's work in the district. She had been in ill health for the past year.

Surviving are her husband; a son, Gilbert F. of Atchison; three sisters: Miss Daisy Price of Troy, Kansas; Mrs. Etta Graves of Long Beach, California; and Mrs. Margaret Dittmore of Atchison; three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Reorganized Church in Fanning, Evangelist Orman Salisbury officiating. Burial was in the Fanning cemetery.

HARRINGTON.—Charles Barton, was born at Magnolia, Iowa, on September 4, 1886, and died at Mercy Hospital in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on October 29, 1950, after an illness of several months. He was a member of the Reorganized Church, but after his marriage, he united with the Lutheran Church.

Surviving are four daughters: Mrs. Marcella Williams of Council Bluffs; Mrs. Twila Carter and Mrs. Eileen O'Neal of Bakersfield, California; and Mrs. Velma Shaw of Honolulu, Hawaii; two sons: Stanley of Seattle, Washington, and Lyle, now home on leave from the Air Corps station in Iwukuni, Japan; three brothers: Lee of Council Bluffs; Roy of Paw Paw, Michigan; and Earl of Memphis, Tennessee; five sisters: Mrs. Sadye Benson and Mrs. Iva Harding, both of Council Bluffs; Mrs. Elsie Ochsner of Lincoln, Nebraska; Mrs. Maude Hinkle of Logan, Iowa; and Mrs. Florence Green of Dunlap, Iowa; and eight grandchildren. Elder V. D. Ruch was in charge of the funeral service held at Logan, Iowa. Burial was in the Magnolia Cemetery.

DARRINGTON.—William J., was born December 10, 1865, at Willard, Utah, and died October 13, 1950, in Council Bluffs, Iowa, following an illness of several weeks. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on December 27, 1895, and was ordained to the office of priest on February 22, 1899. His wife preceded him in death on February 5, 1945.

Surviving are two sons: William of Persia, Iowa, and Howard of Neola, Iowa; four daughters: Mrs. Adah Hall of Los Angeles, California; Mrs. Hans Petersen of Neola; Mrs. Don Anderson of Honey Creek, Iowa; and Miss Lillian Darrington of Boomer Township; four brothers: Herbert and Alfred of Council Bluffs; George of Missouri Valley, Iowa; and Nathan of Neola; two sisters: Mrs. Vina Powell of Gregory, South Dakota, and Mrs. Amy Thomas of Council Bluffs; and ten grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the Woodring Mortuary in Council Bluffs, Elder V. D. Ruch officiating. Burial was in the Grange Cemetery.

HORNER.—Zora, daughter of Frank and Lois Reams, was born June 18, 1906, in Big Run, Pennsylvania, and died October 22, 1950, in the Adrian Hospital. She was married on January 18, 1927, to Thomas Horner, who survived her. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church since girlhood.

Besides her husband she leaves six daughters and one son. Funeral services were held in the Jordan Chapel in Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, Elder Earl H. Brennan officiating. Interment was in the Carey Cemetery.

 THE HURRICANE

During the Conference of High Priests at Kirtland, Brother Gene Wilder of Rio Grande, Texas, had his worries about a hurricane that was on a rampage in the Gulf area. Skies were fair in Kirtland, but hundreds of miles away there was trouble in the air.

Brother Wilder is responsible for many miles of electric power lines in "the Valley." If that storm came there, many miles of lines would be torn down. Pumps that furnished essential water would stop. Lights would be out. Refrigerators would stop, and food would spoil. Great losses would result.

Cleveland weather reports did not include the movements of Dixie's hurricanes. So Brother Wilder put in a long-distance telephone call. The hurricane died somewhere in the Gulf. The Valley was safe. Once more, Brother Wilder could relax and enjoy the conference.

 KIRTLAND CEMETERY

Every visitor takes a little stroll in the old cemetery to the north of Kirtland Temple. Oldest grave there—and some of the markings are so dim that it is hard to tell the true age—seems to be that of Philo Ingersoll, born December 2, 1794, died October 23, 1827. Other early ones are: Eunice Thompson, died September 26, 1831; Tarbel Gates, died May 8, 1832; and "Polly C., wife of S. Russell," died August 5, 1834. All of these were before the dedication of the Temple. The Saints didn't remain long enough to leave many illustrious dead there, but the families are represented, such as one of the Cahoon family, of which Reynolds was a member of the building committee.

Gomer T. Griffiths, once a president of the Council of Twelve, is buried there, beside his first wife, Harriet, and his second wife, Mary. John H. Lake, 1828-1914, also rests there.

 DROOL DEPARTMENT

If you don't want to become ravenously hungry, don't read this. If you're dieting, shut your eyes and pray for strength. Pastor H. Dean Hintz, 132 West Second Street, Chico, California, has just sent a copy of the official recipe book, "Ways With Peaches," containing sixty-three fine formulas, which was sold to help raise money for enlarging the church. Here, with abbreviations, are some worth shouting about: Deep Dish P. Pie, Graham Cracker P. Pie, P. Chiffon Pie, P. Meringue Cake, Upside Down P. Cake, Wriggles, Baked Crispy P's, P. Leather (!), P. & Pecan Salad, Stuffed P. Dumplings, P. Betty, Ozark Bakeless Pudding, P. Strudel, P. Crisp, P. Cobbler, P. Crumble, Topsy Turvy, P. Fritters, Fried Pies, P. Butter. The booklet is indexed, nicely printed, bound in a handmade cover.

 THE SORRY GAME

Aunt Molly originated a little game that she and Uncle Joe enjoy very much, and it does a lot to make the small tragedies that occur at home so much easier to bear.

If she burns her finger, or anything happens that calls for immediate sympathy, she calls Joe. The signal for the game to begin is a lifted eyebrow. Then they say in unison: "Poor Molly! We feel sorry for Molly." Then they both laugh, and everybody feels better.

"From Cover to Cover..."

News & Notes

MANY READERS have written to us at various times, "I read everything in the Herald, from cover to cover." We know that to some church members this will seem to be a beautiful but indiscriminating loyalty.

But there is more to it than that. Those who "read from cover to cover" get everything, including all the announcements and information intended for them. They do not have the embarrassment of learning about an important event too late, or finding that they have missed some important news.

In reading "from cover to cover," you may undertake to read a number of articles that at first may not appear to be of interest to you. But before finishing them you will find something of value.

The reader who reads only what he likes gradually narrows the channel of his life. He misses some things that he ought to have. They would be good for him. The "cover to cover" reader will steadily increase the range of his interests and information. After all, he is the wisest and best reader.

Introducing...

ROY WELDON (page 5) was introduced August 15, 1949.

DOROTHY EASTWOOD ANDERSON, Marseilles, Illinois (page 9), was born and baptized in Independence. She was a member of the Walnut Park congregation until her marriage to Robert H. Anderson last June. She was graduated in 1946 from William Chrisman High School in Independence as valedictorian, and from Graceland in 1948. Here she was associate editor of the yearbook, received a silver seal in journalism, ranked in the top ten in scholarship, and had a dormitory scholarship. While attending the University of Kansas she was a member of the Theta Sigma Phi. Her hobbies are writing and playing the piano, and she is much interested in sports. Before her marriage she worked as stenographer in the Department of Religious Education and for an automobile dealer. Her husband is pastor of the Mission, Illinois, Branch.

A. LUCILLE (BARKER) BACON, Flint, Michigan (page 10), was born in Onaway, Presque Isle, Michigan, and was baptized in Bay City. She was graduated from Flint Central High School in 1932. Her special interests are music and literature, and she enjoys composing hymns. In 1942 she married Paul J. Bacon. They have three children: Rose-Anne, 3; Paul, Jr., 2; Jan Garver, nine months. She plays piano, violin, and pipe organ for church services, is a vocal soloist, and also sings duets with her husband. She has directed the boys' choir, children's choir, and adult choir. She says: "I take pleasure in gardening, writing, sewing, cooking, music, decorating, and, yes, even a little carpenter work."

WILLIAM PATTERSON (page 11) was introduced June 26, 1950.

LEROY F. OLIVER, Louisville, Kentucky (page 12), was born in 1918 and baptized ten years later by Elder J. O. Dutton. In 1939 he married Minnie Lucile McGough. They have three children: Robert, 10; Carol, 4; and Johnny, 15 months. During World War II he served two years in the Army Air Corps. Brother Oliver taught in the church school for four years, was ordained a priest in 1947, and is one of the trustees of the Louisville Branch. He is also a member of the choir and does solo work. He is a real estate broker.

PRESIDENT W. WALLACE SMITH

On November 11 and 12 President W. Wallace Smith and Mrs. Smith visited Chariton, Iowa. While there Brother Smith blessed Bonnie Lou, infant daughter of Seventy and Mrs. Virgil J. Billings. He was assisted by Elder J. C. Cackler.

Brother Smith preached at the 11:00 o'clock service on Sunday, using as a topic, "Basic Principles of the Gospel."

APOSTLE MESLEY

Apostle C. George Mesley has been attending the fall district conference of northern Indiana and of Michigan.

Brother Mesley reports the organization of two new branches, one at Benton Harbor, Michigan, and one at Rollins, Michigan.

REPORT FROM SOUTHLAND

Elder John R. Darling, Associate Director of the Department of Religious Education, has just returned to Independence after attending priesthood and church school institutes in the southern states. He worked in connection with Apostle Percy E. Farrow, Elder William J. Breshears, and Elder Jack A. Pray. Among the places Brother Darling visited are Louisville, Kentucky; Memphis, Tennessee, and Mobile and McKenzie, Alabama.

Brother Darling was much impressed with the Southland and very pleased with the rapid expansion of the church there.

PUBLICITY

The "Kansas City Star" of November 5 carried a lengthy article by Ray Heady concerning Zion's League activities on the grounds of the old Campus Building in Independence. The article told how the young people, under the leadership of Carl Mesle, have rejuvenated and improved the grounds so that many types of sports can be enjoyed there by the people of Independence.

The article repeated the story of the history of the building, and told how the building later became "The Campus."

YEARS OF SERVICE

The Saints of Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, held a reception at the church in October in honor of Elder Walter H. Lewis who has served as pastor of the branch for twenty-five years. A purse containing silver dollars was given to him. Special services were held on a Sunday.

Following Brother Lewis' retirement, the new pastor is Elder William Hyde.

CONGREGATIONS UNITED

The London Branch is now known as the London-St. Thomas Branch. Recent action on September 22 by the congregations of St. Thomas, Maitland Street and Highbury Congregations of London, brought about an amalgamation of the three congregations consisting of what is now known as the London-St. Thomas Branch. The meeting was presided over by Apostle C. George Mesley and C. E. Muir, District President. Elder C. E. Muir will continue to serve as pastor over the three groups, and an elder will direct each congregation: Elder D. A. Campbell at Maitland Street, Elder Lorne F. White at Highbury, and Elder Frank H. Gray at St. Thomas. Each will work under the jurisdiction of the pastor.

II. The Conquest of Sin

“Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.”—Romans 7: 20.

The implication of this Scripture is clear. Sin is an agent outside of ourselves. It is a representative of another power—a dangerous power—that has a purpose of its own, a way of operating, and a final end.

Sin is like the lamprey, which nature designed to live as a parasite. It has a great sucking mouth to attach itself to other fishes, and sharp, rasping teeth to cut away the skin and suck the life fluids of its host. The only way the fish can get rid of the lamprey is to die.

There is a terrible kind of cannibalism in sin and in the power back of it. But sin differs from the lamprey in one respect: it does not have the power to cling until it causes our death, though it can if we let it. We can put it off and be rid of it. We can be free. As Paul said, “For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.”—Romans 8:2.

* * * *

A thorough discussion of sin is found in Paul’s letter to the Romans. In it, one lesson stands out: sin is separable from the personality. It is not a fate, not a doom, riding the soul down to destruction. Through Christ we can be freed of it. Through him we can repent and be forgiven, wipe the slate clean, and make a fresh start. We can return to God, but we cannot take our sins with us.

Sin is not freedom. It is a burden that some people carry because they do not know they can put it away. It is a burden that grows in weight and eventually crushes the soul to the earth. Paul indicates that it is a burden we can put down, go away, and leave.

Sin is not pleasure. It is a forbidden fruit; as John said, “It was in my mouth as sweet as honey; and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter.”

Sin is like Shylock, who obtained Antonio’s signature to a bond on the pretense that it was an innocent, fanciful bit of fun; but when the bond was signed, Shylock demanded his price, and it was for Antonio’s life. At the very last, sin makes its demand for your life. But Christ can break that bond.

* * * *

This idea came from my neighbor, after a local prayer meeting. There had been a good spirit of testimony. People were thinking of the war in Korea and our young men fighting there. My friend called me over the next day.

“When any of our young men fall in battle,” he said, “it brings the problem of sin closer to the sinner. War is a result of sin on a large scale, and sin on a large scale is an outgrowth of sin on a smaller, individual scale. . . . The sinner must realize that he is a sinner. He must realize that these young men fall in vain unless he does something about it. And the only thing he can do is to turn against sin and toward righteousness.”

These young men go down as a sacrifice to the sin of others, just as surely as Jesus did, and as it is expressed in Hebrews 10: 10, 12: “We are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, sat down on the right hand of God.”

Those who have experience in sin will have with it an increasing feeling of regret. They learn that the sin is staining their own souls and contaminating them. They learn that it is hurting others and making them suffer. Sin also hurts the innocent. And the sinner’s conscience rises like an injured and offended spirit (what else was Banquo’s ghost confronting the blood-stained and guilt-laden Macbeth?) to condemn and denounce him.

What must the sinner do? As the prison keeper cried, “What must I do to be saved?” He has a choice of two courses: either to drown his conscience in drink or other drugs—a temporary and destructive expedient; or to repent and find freedom from sin in the forgiveness of Christ.

Whenever we do anything wrong, there is an invisible accuser standing near, speaking to us in a “still, small voice,” and pointing a finger of shame at us. We cannot turn away from the finger, nor can we silence the voice. Some try to avoid the accuser by numbing themselves with poison of some kind. But when the poison wears off, they have added a new sin to the list, the voice speaks louder, and one must seek oblivion again to avoid regret.

We may not escape the consequences of past sin; but we can separate ourselves from it. “Go thy way, and sin no more,” said Jesus.

* * * *

Our victory through Christ will include the conquest of a number of great and terrible enemies of the human race. We must conquer sin in our own lives if we are to have that victory.

Credit of Interest to Houses of Worship Fund Deposits

Branches and districts having cash deposits in the Houses of Worship Fund will be interested in this announcement that the loaning of a portion of these funds now makes it possible to credit all depositors with a small dividend for the year 1949. An interest credit of one per cent of the average cash balances as of December 31, 1949, has been made to each branch and district having cash on deposit in the Houses of Worship Surplus Restricted Fund.

Until recent years these funds have not been used extensively for loaning to other branches and districts; however, the demand for funds to purchase or build new churches and the inadequacy of the Houses of Worship Revolving Funds to meet all these demands for low interest loans has resulted in a greater use being made of the funds deposited with the Presiding Bishopric. Only a portion of the cash deposits can be loaned, as adequate cash reserves must be maintained at all times to meet the calls of depositors.

Loans from these trust funds are made at three per cent interest and part of the interest income has been used to establish a reserve to protect the fund principal. As of August 31, 1950, twenty-three branches and districts have borrowed $101,298.28 from this fund. We believe the condition of this fund justifies the distribution of a 1 per cent dividend, based on the average cash deposits of 1949. While this is a small amount in most instances, we feel sure the depositors will be happy in the knowledge that the use of a portion of these funds has made it possible for some church properties to be purchased which could not have been obtained without this assistance.

Branch pastors or treasurers desiring to know the exact amount to their credit on the books on the Houses of Worship Surplus Restricted Funds may receive this information by directing their inquiry to the Presiding Bishopric, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

General Council of Women

The First Presidency are pleased to announce that upon nomination of Sister Pauline J. Arnson, chairman, we have appointed Sister Bertha Johnson and Sister Aarona Kohlman members of the General Council of Women. They have signified willingness to serve, and we congratulate Sister Arnson on these splendid accessions to her council.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

Notice of Change of Agent for the Northwestern Ohio District

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Bishop J. F. Wildermuth, 29617 Lake Shore Boulevard, Willowick, Ohio, c/o Willoughby, Ohio, to serve as bishop of the Northwestern Ohio District succeeding Brother C. V. Holmes whose resignation has been received. Solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for the month of November and each succeeding month thereafter to Bishop Wildermuth at the above address.

Brother Holmes has served in this office for ten years, and we take this opportunity of expressing our sincere appreciation to him for the devoted and consistent service he has rendered in this respect.

We have also appreciated the support given Brother Holmes by the Saints of the Northwestern Ohio District during the period of his service. Bishop Wildermuth is known to many of our members in this district, and we commend him to the Saints for their favorable consideration and support.

Through inadvertance, in my Travelogs a mistake has been made. On page 22 of the Herald of September 25, second column, the statement is made that I placed Elder Crownover in nomination for bishop's agent. No such action was taken, and the error is wholly mine. Brother Miyamoto, who has served as bishop's agent, is still acting in that capacity, and I apologize to him and trust this explanation will be satisfactory.

Across the Desk

Elder H. T. McCaig picked up a folder while traveling through the East and sent it to us, calling our attention to the concern which the Friends (Quakers) show in a revival of spiritual contact with God. This organization seems to be dying out, and only as they are able to obtain some prophetic guidance is there much hope of survival. In this folder they quote this prayer by John W. Rowntree, written in 1895:

PRAYER

God grant to our church the spirit of understanding which shall give her the eye of a seer, the voice of a prophet, the place and power of a leader.

Is there indifference to the higher life?
Then, O Christ,

convince us by thy Spirit, thrill us by thy divine passion, drown our selfishness in thy invading love, lay on us the burden of the world's sufferings; drive us forth with the apostolic fervor of the early church! So only can thy message be delivered: Speak to thy people that they go forward.

Moroni to Columbus

Problems of America's Dark Ages

By ROY WELDON

Part One—The Serpent Symbol

The views expressed in this article do not commit the "Herald" or its editors but stand on their own merits. Should other views on this topic be offered for publication, they should be affirmative, free from personal references, and possess literary merit.—Editors.

MORONI, the last Book of Mormon prophet, wrote the final words in his record in the year A.D. 420. Columbus discovered the New World in 1492, or 1072 years after Moroni. The American dark ages covers a greater length of time than the entire history of the Nephites from Lehi to Moroni.

Hidden behind this curtain of over a thousand years are many secrets. A millennium of time allowed great tropical jungles to cover large areas so thoroughly that there are still vast sections unexplored. All iron and steel have disappeared by oxidation. The accretion of dust and debris of a thousand years has literally buried all but the largest of the Nephite temples, palaces, and pyramids, and even these, when first discovered, were almost completely covered with only small parts of the buildings protruding from the tops of great mounds. So great has been the effect of a thousand years of jungle growth, earthquakes, hurricanes, and Lamanite devolution that it is now no easy matter to identify Nephite cities, determine Book of Mormon geography, or evaluate the true meaning and value of such a great and widespread symbol as the "Feathered Serpent." In this article we wish to present some facts and also theories which we hope may be helpful in eventually finding a solution to the question of the origin of the serpent symbol as applied by the American Indians to Jesus Christ.

Is the Serpent a Symbol of Jesus Christ?

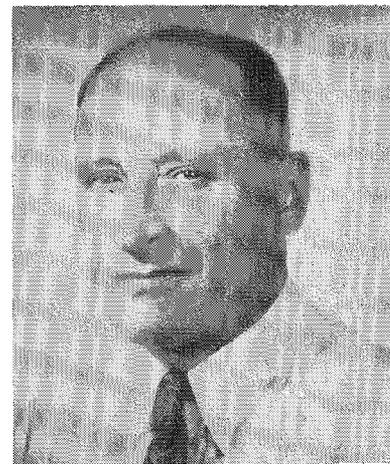

Whether it pleases us or not, when Columbus discovered the New World, all the great legends and archaeological findings of Mexico and Central America referred to Jesus Christ as the "Feathered Serpent."

Edgar L. Hewitt says, "The being pictured as a flying serpent was the most potent and most widespread of all conceptions of deity of the Indian race."¹

Paul M. Hanson, peer of all Book of Mormon archaeologists and mentor of our own Society for Archaeological Research, has well stated, "When or by whom, the feathered serpent was first employed as a symbol of Quetzalcoatl is not known." In the Land of the Feathered Serpent, page 26.

So long and dark is the night that stretches between Moroni and Columbus, and so vast are the areas of unexplored jungles, unexcavated mounds, and buried cities, it is, in my opinion, impossible to solve at present with certainty problems whose final answer lies hidden behind this black curtain of America's dark ages.

In such a vast area of conjecture and lacking complete information, students in this field naturally will develop divergencies of opinion and theories. Divergence of opinion properly directed is beneficial. Two schools of thought tend to intensify research and further investigation where one of the general acceptance would result in the subject's being pigeon-holed and forgotten.

It is a matter of great satisfaction to me that my brethren who have divergent theories on the question of the serpent symbol are open-minded, fair, and considerate in their discussion of the subject.

The Brazen Serpent of Moses

The greatest and strongest evidence we have that the serpent may be a genuine symbol of Jesus Christ is found in the statement of Jesus himself: "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John 3: 14, 15.

If we could accept the brazen serpent as an unquestioned symbol of Jesus Christ, it would give us a tremendous boost in proving the Book of Mormon, because the mythology and archaeology of Mexico and Central America present Jesus Christ to us in the name and form of a feathered or flying serpent. Both the Aztec and Maya names for Jesus Christ (Quetzalcoatl and Kulkulkan) literally mean feathered or bird serpent.

Desirable as it might be to use the serpent as a symbol of Christ in promoting our proof of the Book of Mormon, we must nevertheless limit ourselves to facts, and the cold, hard facts indicate there are monumental hurdles that stand in the way of the theory that the brazen serpent on the cross is a symbol of Jesus Christ.

The Serpent, a Symbol of Satan

John 3: 14, 15 does not say that the serpent on the cross is a symbol of Christ. It merely says as Moses lifted up the brazen serpent, so must the Son of Man be lifted up. There are various interpretations of this passage which we will present from renowned authorities. The theory that the serpent symbolizes Christ is only one of several interpretations.

The Three Standard Books all declare Satan to be the serpent, and they do this in clear-cut language which permits no other interpretation. "And he [the angel] laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years."—Revelation 20: 2. "Neither was there found place in heaven for the great dragon, who was cast out; that old serpent called the devil, and also called . . . Satan."—Revelation 12: 8. The Doctrine and Covenants also refers to Satan ". . . that old serpent, even the devil" (76: 3); ". . . that old serpent, who is called the devil."—85: 35. The Book of Mormon also refers to Satan as ". . . that old serpent that did beguile our first parents, which was the cause of their fall."—Mosiah 8: 74.

It is also worthy of note here that one of the signs and powers of the priesthood is power over serpents—"they shall take up serpents [accidentally]." Paul accidentally picked up a poisonous serpent along with some sticks. It bit him. The onlookers expected him to die. When he did not, they considered him a divine being. Power is granted over serpents because power is granted over the evil one, and the serpent has been the symbol and tool of Satan from Genesis to Revelation.

The analogy of the serpent on the cross has its limitations. The analogy was in the lifting up and not in the serpent. The serpent on the cross was a replica of one of the venomous and foul vipers then biting and destroying the people. Obviously, the brazen serpent itself had no similitude to the person, purpose, or ministry of Christ, but rather to the person, purpose, and ministry of Satan.

A Symbol of Sin

The Reverend W. Robertson Nicoll, M.A., L.L.D., editor of the highly authoritative Expositor's Bible, says:

The serpents that lurked in the Israelites' way and darted suddenly upon them are always felt to be analogies of the subtle sins that spring on man and poison his life. He (Moses) was to make a serpent of brass, an image of the foe, and erect it on a standard full in sight of the camp, and to it the eyes of the stricken people were to be turned . . . The serpent of brass was nothing in itself, was, as long afterwards Hezekiah declared it to be, Nehushtan . . .

And when our Lord recalled the episode of the healing of Israel by means of the Brazen Serpent, he certainly did not mean that the image in itself was in any sense a type or even symbol of Him.²

There are other interpretations of this passage. Paul says, "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin." Some of our own theologians take the position that the serpent on the cross represents sin. Christ took upon himself the sins of men and was lifted up on the cross.

The Abingdon Bible Commentary offers another interpretation:

A serpent of brass . . . For Christian readers this brief incident has found its chief significance in the reference made to it in John 3: 14, which in principle is the same sort of use that the ancient writer made. In both cases the incident is pressed into the service of a later theology, and both tend to obscure the fact that it is but one illustration of a practice well known outside the Bible as well as within it, namely, making an image of a pest or affliction and presenting the image to the Deity, who, in turn, would banish the pest (I Samuel 6: 5), and also in the words of the Apocryphal Wisdom of Solomon (16: 7): "He that turned toward it was not saved because of that which was beheld, but because of thee, the Savior of all."³

Moses, at the command of God, lifted up the serpent on a pole. So was the Son of Man lifted up and set forth on the Cross of God. The serpent itself was a visible likeness of the evil from which Israel was suffering. So Christ was made "in the likeness of sin's flesh," was made sin for us . . . The children of Israel were called upon to gaze upon the symbol of their enemy . . . Ibid., page 1144.

The Westminster Commentaries on the Book of Numbers says:

The connection of serpents with the preservation or restoration of life is a common-place of pagan mythology . . . The use of the image of the serpent to cure serpent bites is perhaps a piece of sympathetic magic. Frazier refers to the device of the Philistines of making an image of mice when their land was infested with such vermin.⁴

I am not attempting to point out which interpretation of John 3: 14, 15 might be correct, but I do raise what seems to me to be a very important question.

Shall one of several assumptive and presumptive interpretations of this Scripture be required to harmonize itself with what the Three Standard Books clearly say about the serpent, or should the Three Standard Books bow to and be required to be subject to a disputed interpretation of John 3: 14, 15?

The serpent is and has been a symbol of sin. "Snake in the grass" and other such expressions indicate that mankind regards the serpent as a symbol of degradation. Christ himself used one such epithet against the Pharisees: "Ye serpents and generation of vipers! How can ye escape the damnation of hell?"—Matthew 23: 30.

If Jesus considered the serpent as representative and symbolic of himself, why did he call the Pharisees a generation of serpents and vipers?

The person and name of our Savior is most sacred and holy. We are only to speak his name with great care and reverence. The name of the Holy Priesthood was changed to the Melchisedec priesthood in the words of Doctrine and Covenants 104: 1: "Out of respect or reverence to the name of the Supreme Being, to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name, they, the church, in ancient days called the priesthood after Melchisedec or the Melchisedec priesthood."

In view of these facts it seems we ought to think twice before daring to add the serpent symbol to the lamb symbol and the bright and morning star.

A Product of Apostasy

It is my opinion that the key to the origin of the Feathered Serpent in Mexico and Central America is to be found in II Kings 18: 4, rather than in John 3: 14.

Hezekiah, who "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord" and "trusted in the Lord God of Israel; so that after him there was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor any that were before him . . . For he clave to the Lord, and departed not from following him, but kept his commandments, which the Lord commanded Moses." This great king who "kept the commandments of the Lord" and "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord" made a house cleaning of the idolatries and abominations which were among the people. He removed the high places, and broke the images, and cut down the groves, and brake in pieces the brazen serpent that Moses had made; for unto those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it; and he called it Nehushtan. Burning incense to the brazen serpent was an apostate form of religion in ancient Israel.

The Book of Mormon, coupled with II Kings 18: 4, indicates who originated the serpent symbol as applied to Jesus Christ. In ancient Israel the leading of the children of Israel to make idols was the work of Satan.

Hezekiah "who did that which was right in the sight of the Lord" recognized the worshiping of the brazen serpent as an apostate and idolatrous practice. He tried to stamp it out.

Idolatry in America

Later on Lehi and his colony came to America. Laman and Lemuel rebelled. They became a lazy and idolatrous people (see Mosiah 6: 15). What forms of idolatry could they practice except those forms they had known in Israel? The brazen serpent was one of those forms. Sun worship, moon worship, human sacrifice (Baalism), and phallic rites were other forms of Old Testament abominations. These are found among the American Indians.

The Nephites also worship idols. Abinadi warned the priests of Noah about their breaking the commandments of the Law of Moses: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image or likeness of anything . . ."—Mosiah 7: 97.

The Book of Mormon indicates that the Nephites again and again relapsed into idolatry.

Alma 1: 48—Sorcerers, idolaters.

Alma 5: 12—Nephites worship idols.

Alma 16: 78—Nephites under Zoram bow down to dumb idols, refuse to keep law of Moses (Verses 85, 86). A little later in the chapter, Alma refers to the brazen serpent and few understood:

Behold, he was spoken of by Moses; yea, and behold a type was raised up in the wilderness, that whosoever would look upon it might live. And many did look and live. But few understood the meaning of these things, and this because of the hardness of their hearts.—Alma 16: 191, 192.

In ancient times people didn't understand the meaning of the lifting up of the brazen serpent. The big question is, Do we understand it today?

As we peruse the Book of Mormon down to the coming of Christ, we find that the worshiping of idols among the Nephites—not to mention the Lamanites—continued to persist.

Helaman 2: 150-158 informs us that the Nephites built up to themselves idols of gold and silver. In the Museo de Oro in the Bank of the Republic at Bogota, Colombia, there is a dazzling collection of ancient gold artifacts. In this museum there is a showcase containing gold serpents. Helaman says the Nephites made idols of gold and silver. I believe that the serpent was among these idol forms and that it traces back to II Kings 18: 4.

The ugly, revolting, loathsome forms of serpents which adorn the temples of the Aztecs and Mayas in Central America and Mexico, are, in my opinion, images and idols of the worship which flourished among the Lamanites during the American dark ages. All this traces back to Old Testament times.

The Expositor's Bible, commenting on II Kings 18: 4, says that serpent worship was prevalent among the Jews for eight centuries (Kings, page 292). On page 227, Volume 5, of Ancient Monuments and Ruined Cities, Stephen D. Peet, noted Ohio archaeologist, lists serpent worship as one of the forms of worship of the American Indian suggestive of Eastern influence.

Daniel G. Brinton, authority on the mythology of the American Indian, clearly indicates that the Hebrew word for serpent is directly related to Satan, not to Christ. Mr. Brinton says, ". . . In both Arabic and Hebrew, the word for serpent has many derivatives, meaning to have intercourse with demoniac powers, to practice magic, and to consult familiar spirits."⁵

The Feathered Serpent

On our recent trip to South America, we found the serpent motif on archaeological artifacts in Nicaragua, Panama, Colombia, Equador, and Peru. These serpents were without feathers. As we understand it, the brazen serpent was not feathered. My theory is that the feathered serpent symbol which now applies to Jesus Christ did not originate in America until the Nephites entered into apostasy in the third century A. D. This viewpoint is strengthened by the fact that the feathered serpent predominates in those areas known to have been occupied by the Nephites when they went into apostasy, turned again to idolatry, and introduced abominations into the church. The Spirit of God no longer strove with them after this, and they were led about by Satan to do his will.

The American Apostasy

The Book of Mormon refers to the apostasy in the Old World (I Nephi 3: 219) as the great and abominable church whose founder is the devil. The Doctrine and Covenants and the Inspired Version of the Scriptures use surprisingly strong language on the same subject—"whore of all the earth," "filthy and full of all manner of abominations," "whose founder is the devil," etc.

The apostasy in the Old World was a fountain of pure water in comparison to the apostasy in the New World. The abominations and degenerate religious rites the Spaniards found in the New World are such as to stagger the imagination.

It is utterly erroneous to treat aboriginal forms of religion in America which have survived the dark ages between Moroni and Columbus as anything else than apostate forms over whose origin and development the devil has had undisputed sway and control.

Christ himself said, "But behold, it sorroweth me because of the fourth generation from this generation, for they are led away captive by him, even as was the son of perdition."—III Nephi 13:9.

The apostasy commenced in the New World in A.D. 201 (IV Nephi 1:25-30). A new church arose. One of these churches "did receive all manner of wickedness, . . . and this church did multiply exceedingly, because of the power of Satan who did get hold upon their hearts." It would seem logical for Satan to seize upon the already existing apostate form of the brazen serpent rite and embellish it with the feathers of the beautiful Quetzal bird. The fact that archaeologists have found the feathered serpent in the oldest stratas of construction at Monte Alban and elsewhere and estimated to date back to the third century A.D. would seem to corroborate our deduction that Satan launched the feathered serpent cult in the wicked and apostate innovations introduced among the Nephites at the beginning of the Third Century A.D.

A Dark and Loathsome People

One hundred eighty years after the commencement of the Nephite apostasy (A.D. 201), as the Nephites were preparing for their last death struggle with the Lamanites, Mormon had this to say, "For this people shall be scattered, and shall become a dark, a filthy, and a loathsome people . . . and this because of their unbelief and their idolatry. Now, behold they are led about by Satan, even as chaff is driven before the wind."—Mormon 2: 44-47.

The Nephites had completely turned away from Christ to idols, and the feathered serpent must have been the chief among these idols. Inasmuch as both Nephites and Lamanites were completely within the power of Satan, "led about by Satan, even as chaff before the wind," it seems therefore inescapable that the feathered serpent had the blessing and backing of Satan to have achieved the prominence it did in the religions of the Mayas and Aztecs.

Mormon says they should become dark, filthy and loathsome because of their turning to idolatry (idols). The most loathsome, ugly, and revolting image of the Maya and Aztec temples is the figure of the feathered serpent.

Unlikely Symbol of Christ

How can we or how dare we accept the feathered serpent as a genuine symbol of Christ in the face of the very apparent fact that this revolting symbol of idolatry was originated by Satan to besmirch the fair name of our Lord and to hide and cover up the fact that Jesus had ever come to the new world?

The theory that the serpent is an orthodox and acceptable symbol of Christ and that the feathered serpent traces back to Book of Mormon times and usage is worthy of careful examination.

Archæology proves that the feathered serpent does date back, as at Monte Alban (A.D. 200), to Book of Mormon times, but archæology does not prove that these earliest carvings of the feathered serpent were then symbols of Jesus Christ.

The Lamanites hated Christ. They put to death every Nephite that would not deny Christ. How then could they have applied the feathered serpent symbol to Christ at that time?

H. H. Bancroft in his Native Races indicates that there were reformers (one of them an Aztec king) who attempted to turn the people back to the original religion of their forefathers.

It is my candid opinion that during the dark ages of America, one of these reformation movements restored what was left of the knowledge of Jesus Christ and combined it with the apostate feathered serpent cult. When we consider the confusion of the apostasy in the Old World (and these people had the Bible), it is little to be wondered that the religious ideas of the Mayas and Aztecs about Jesus Christ should be confused and mixed up with the symbols of barbaric religion.

Serpent Worship Among the American Indians

It should be worthy of note that the theory of the serpent as a symbol of Christ would be strengthened if it could be proved that the natives of the New World did not worship the serpent so laboriously and liberally carved on their temples, but merely recognized it as a symbol (like the cross) of their God.

One authority supports the proposition that the serpents were not worshiped. Dr. George B. Gordon of the University of Pennsylvania says, "There does not exist the testimony of a single witness whose statement can be regarded as authoritative, to the effect that serpent worship was known in Mexico at the time of the conquest"⁶

Mr. Gordon's statement about the nonexistence of serpent worship apparently is not substantiated by other authorities on the subject.

We quote first from the president of the Archaeological Institute of America: "Ohio has two serpentine mounds These have attracted much attention, because they bear on the theory that the serpent worship of Mexico was introduced into this northern region."⁷

The Encyclopedia Americana says: "Serpent worship is still extensively practiced in India. Among no people has the mystery of this worship weighed more than on the aborigines of America. In Mexico, sculptured images of serpents are found as large and carefully wrought as those of India the serpent appears to have been worshiped more than any other creature." (Subject: "Serpent Worship," page 598.)

Stephen D. Peet, eminent Ohio archaeologist (now deceased) and for years editor of the American Antiquarian, wrote an entire chapter on serpent worship (see Prehistoric America—Emblematic Mounds, chapter XIII, "Serpent worship") among the mound builders as well as the Dakotas and other U. S. tribes.

Daniel G. Brinton, eminent authority on New World mythology, in his book Myths of the New World, (pages 129-143) gives extensive treatment to the subject of the veneration and reverence paid the serpent by the American Indian.

George Ephraim Squier has written a book dealing with serpent worship in America, The Serpent Symbol, and the worship of the Reciprocal Principles of Nature in America.

There are numerous books and scientific treatises on the subject of serpent worship among the American Indians. Some authors who write on the question of the serpent symbol do not use the word "worship" but its synonyms (honor, respect, venerate, and reverence).

Lewis Spence, noted British authority, says, "The rattlesnake was the serpent almost exclusively honored by the Red Race."⁸ Concerning the festivals of the Hopi and Moqui tribes, Lewis Spence says, "These ceremonies have their origin in the universal reverence shown to the serpent in America."—Ibid., page 135.

These quotations should suffice to indicate that the statement of some authorities that serpent worship did not exist in America is not substantiated by other authorities and is out of harmony with generally accepted viewpoints.

Insufficient Evidence

In view of all these facts if we are not willing to wash our hands of the doctrine of the serpent as a symbol of Christ, we at least ought to be reluctant in accepting it until we have more evidence to support it.

In all fairness to those who are naturalists and herpetologists, I wish to make it understood that this treatise deals with religious symbolism and is not intended to cast any reflection on those who are trying to promote a better understanding of the many harmless garden and field snakes whose habits and activities are so beneficial to the interests of farmers and agriculture.

I shall be glad to receive and respond to any suggestions and comments either for or against the facts and theories advanced in this article.

As noted in the beginning of this article, two schools of thought have developed in the church as to the meaning of the feathered serpent symbol.

At the present time good authority can be quoted that the natives in Mexico and Central America did not worship the serpent. Equally good authorities (Stephen D. Peet, Lewis Spence, Daniel G. Brinton, etc.) can be quoted that the red race worshiped, honored, and revered the serpent in the New World. Other approaches to the problem are equally inconclusive. Dating of the feathered serpent carvings and archaeological sites are inconclusive. Archaeologists themselves disagree on dates. I recently received information from Melvin R. Fowler, archaeology graduate from the University of Illinois, to the effect that a new scientific method of artifact analysis has been developed which bids fair to revolutionize the entire field of dates. It is anticipated that this new system of dating will make a difference of several hundred years in some of the dating of New World artifacts and sites.

A Matter of Opinion

The Book of Mormon indicates that the Lamanites would become "dark, filthy, and loathsome." To some the serpent and the serpent carvings on the Maya and Aztec temples are repulsive, loathsome, and revolting. To others they are the artistic, beautiful, orthodox symbols of Christ. Some regard them as idols and images of the barbaric and apostate Lamanites. Others regard them as authentic symbols of Christ and believe that the serpent should spearhead our presentation of Christ in ancient America to the world. Material can be marshaled to the support of both viewpoints, which of course leaves the entire matter an open question.

In my opinion the most formidable, conclusive, and irrefutable evidence that exists against the serpent as an authentic symbol of Christ is found in the unchallenged fact that all Three Standard Books of our Church call Satan "the old Serpent" and the opening scene of biblical history reveals the serpent as the deceptive and cunning tool of Satan. The final scene of the Bible (Revelation 20: 2) also pictures the serpent as the symbol of Satan.

Mission, Illinois, Branch Observes Anniversary of First Church Built in Reorganization

HISTORY TO CHILDREN in school is not often fascinating. It's much the same to them as the old rhyme found inevitably on the cover of any Latin book. "Latin is a language dead as dead can be, first it killed the Romans and now it's killing me." Not every student takes Latin now, but history is still on the required curriculum, and the word "history" could be substituted in the place of Latin in the minds of many "kids" going to school.

But to members of the Mission Branch congregation in Miller Township near Ottawa, Illinois, history has come to life as the result of the celebration they had on October 8 to 15 to commemorate the founding of their branch and the construction of their worship home.

There are few groups in the whole Reorganized Church so steeped in tradition as this small branch located on the corner of a cornfield on a country road, a piece of land kindly donated by one of the charter members.

Perhaps there is nothing so significant in this fact alone. There are probably other branches built on pieces of a cornfield, but this one has the honor of being the first to construct its worship home in the Reorganization of the church.

For eighty-nine years the members of this congregation have been faithful to the church and have held in their hearts this fact which distinguishes them from all the rest, giving them something of which to be very proud. Other churches have more elaborate buildings and others have much larger congregations, but no other can boast of being the first of the Reorganization.

These people felt that with the advent of the year 1950, a good opportunity was presenting itself to publish this fact to the world. The first building was constructed eighty-eight years ago, but the present one was built in 1900, making the celebration of a golden anniversary possible.

WITH THE TRADITION and history of this branch brought into the open, to the attention of nonmembers and friends as well as those who belong in the branch, a new push has been given the people. Realizing their heritage, a new feeling of importance and responsibility comes to them. And that, after all, is the purpose of history. It is not to emphasize the past, but to show relationship of the past to the present and to give encouragement and impetus to the future.

To establish the idea that the celebration of this event of history was not an end but only a means, and that the restoration of the gospel itself was not the end but rather a beginning or a process in the establishment of God's kingdom here on earth, the theme, "Restoration: A Process in Eternity," was chosen.

Lloyd Cleveland, president of Northeastern Illinois District, opened the week's celebration on Sunday morning as he presided over a prayer service which was blessed with God's Spirit as the people presented "These Things I Bring" in testimony and dedication. Brother Cleveland was also the speaker at the preaching service and set forth the spirit of the week.

Thirty men, women, and young people presented the history of the general church and Mission Branch in an hour-long pageant Sunday evening. Songs, narration, tableaux, graphic illustration, and colored slides related the events and causes of the exciting history of this church.

MEMBERS OF THE CONGREGATION descended from the charter members of Mission Branch were honored in an anniversary reception Monday evening. Sister Alice Anderson, eighty-two years old and sixty-seven years a member of the church, one of the oldest living members of Mission Branch, was presented a copy of the Doctrine and Covenants. The youngest member and the newest member were also presented remembrances. These were Joseph McLennon, eight years old and baptized in July of this year, who received a Bible Storybook for Children, and Mrs. Silas Anderson, baptized the week preceding the celebration, who received a copy of The Restoration Story. The William McLennon family also received a copy of The Restoration Story, in honor of its being the largest complete family, having six members in the church. The grandchildren of Austin Hayer, Andrew B. Hayer, and Thomas Hougas all received golden chrysanthemums in remembrance of their forefathers who were the organizers of Mission Branch. A musical program, group singing, a short talk by Apostle Donald Chesworth, a description of events and anecdotes of the early church by Elder Orrin Hayer of Bloomington, Illinois, a former pastor, and refreshments completed the evening's program. Brother Richard Wildermuth, pastor of the Plano, Illinois, Branch was master of ceremonies.

Elder Wayne Smith, missionary in the district, and Apostle Paul M. Hanson, together with Pastor Robert Anderson, presided over the prayer meeting Wednesday evening as the members of the group met during the week of their special anniversary to "strengthen thee, my brother."

Brother Wayne Smith was the speaker on Thursday evening. He presented Christ as the center of the Restoration Story as his theme expresses, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, HEAR HIM."

New convictions of truth sprang forth in the hearts of the hearers of Apostle Hanson's sermon on Friday night as he spoke "Unto the Convincing of All Men."

Saturday evening Apostle Hanson lectured on the Book of Mormon, using colored slides of his journeys into the archæological ruins of Central and South America especially Mexico.

The opening service Sunday morning was a devotional service based upon the passage of Scripture in Revelation, "Behold I Set Before Thee an Open Door." It centered around a beautiful picture of Jesus Christ knocking upon the door to the heart of men. This picture was banked with white lighted candles and golden chrysanthemums.

Apostle Hanson brought the week's celebration to a fitting close as he set forth the challenge of the open door in his sermon at the morning preaching service.

A DISPLAY OF RELICS of the early church days interested many who were present during the week. It included an old kerosene lamp taken from the first church built in 1862-63. Besides pictures of the old church and members of its congregation, was a churn dated 1844 belonging to Austin Hayer, one of the very early workers in Mission. The Thomas Hougas Bible, now in the possession of a grandson, was in this display. Brother Hougas was men-

Spending My Light -

By A. LUCILLE BACON

I WAS PRIVILEGED to attend but one service of the entire reunion period at Michigan's Bluewater Camp. We had set out early in the morning with the intention of enjoying the entire day's activities. We took a short cut, encountered a detour; got lost, and arrived in time for only the last class of the reunion. A few minutes later, our little girl became so restless I had to leave with her.

During the course of the day I broke my glasses. This didn't increase my peace of mind, as I had looked forward with pleasant anticipation to the children's service scheduled for 6:30 p.m. However, I reconciled myself with the plan to sit close to the front of the tabernacle. Upon arrival at the service, we discovered the front rows filled with children. It hadn't occurred to me to wonder where all of those children would be seated during the service.

Again I consoled myself with the thought that at least my hearing was unimpaired, and I could listen to everything spoken and sung. But somehow, I couldn't resist a little self-pity on the side. When the children marched up on the rostrum to sing their earnest songs of Jesus, tears came to my eyes because I could only see a blur of moving figures.

In that moment I thought, "At the rate my eyesight is failing it won't be long before I am totally blind. That is something I can never, never endure." Through my mind quickly passed flashes of endearing memories. Memory of beauty in rural scenes, of starlit nights, of little children playing in the back yard, of the look of almost holy sweetness on my little girl's face as she knelt in evening prayer, of a certain mother's face. My life would be futile and empty if I could no longer see these and other scenes of beauty.

For a moment it seemed that my thinking stopped, and into my mind came the impression of words not of my own willing: "Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus."

Although the full import of the words did not come to me at the time, I felt a sudden release from the tension of anxiety. I turned my attention to the service then in progress, making the most of what I could hear.

FEELING IMPRESSED to leave early for home, rather than remain for any further services, we started on our way. We had gone but a few miles when a tire blew out. It so happened that we hadn't even so much as a flashlight, so while my husband struggled with his self-control and tire changing by starlight, I paced back and forth in the road (to keep the mosquitoes from over-eating).

In a few moments, the peaceful silence of the night-enshrouded countryside penetrated my inner consciousness, and I relaxed in reverie. The evening's brief moment of inspiration returned. At first I considered the thought that God's greatest gift to mankind is the mind. The power of the mind is almost limitless. By utilizing it man can elevate himself from something vile to something divine.

Then I considered the apparent contradiction between man's actions and his capabilities. If man is truly made in the image of God, then why does he so often go through life with little or no effort to develop and exercise so great a power at his disposal? Why does he stoop to use this power to destroy, degrade, demoralize? Why does the end of a man's journey often find him in a degenerate condition rather than in the exalted stage of fulfillment ready for the wonderful experience of life beyond?

THESE QUESTIONS led me to believe that God must have blessed man still further than in the power of the mind. What could it be? What determined whether a man used this power to design evil purposes rather than good? Again words from the Scriptures impressed themselves on my mind?

"Take heed, therefore, that the light which is in thee be not darkness."

It is in the degree of light within that determines how a man shall utilize this mental power. Then what determines the degree of light within? Is it education? No, it couldn't be that. One man, let us say, is a lawyer, yet he may be an evil person. Another man has but a grade school education, but he is a living example of consideration for the rights and needs of others. He is a skilled carpenter by his own efforts, and a gentleman by his own choosing. The lawyer has wasted his years of light by turning toward the darkness. The carpenter has increased and intensified his years of light by using them as God ordained they should be used—for good. Why? Because each chose to do as he did.

Why do people choose darkness rather than light? Here Satan enters the picture. This Prince of Darkness, with his whisperings of deception and enticement, has designs on the mind of man. He knows there are many ways to approach people, and he does so with one ultimate goal in mind—their destruction. He knows that one will listen to the wrong voices because he is mentally lazy; another is easily bribed because he hasn't exercised self-control and is weak willed as a result; another has allowed himself the habit of discontent and has thus displayed fertile ground for the seeds of hatred.

Yes, without the darkness there would have been no point in God's blessing us with the privilege of choosing between darkness and light. Only Satan could deceive us into feeling the darkness is a thing to be preferred. It is amazing how many different methods of deception he employs. It is small wonder so many of us are led away from the Light. We give such little thought to the reason for existence that our minds are dulled.

MY EARLY YEARS were spent in almost total indifference to thinking of either light or darkness. At first it seemed that I hadn't actually chosen to waste those years. Across my mind flashed the memory of a canoe trip up a large river. We paddled against the current in the direction of the falls—and it was the first time in my life I had ever paddled a canoe. I became exhausted, but when I ceased paddling, the current caught the canoe, swung it sideways, and rushed it zigzag back in the direction from which we had come. We could have said we wouldn't choose any definite plan of action and just let the current decide whether we would be dashed against the tree-lined shore or be carried back to our starting point at the cabin. We would have made a choice in doing even that. However, we kept on paddling until we reached the path at the foot of the falls.

Life is like that. We think sometimes we won't try to decide or choose what we shall do; we'll just let events work out naturally. The truth is that we have made the choice already. We have been too lazy to exercise the power of the mind in seeking the light that illumines the pathway of life and makes each pitfall, obstacle, enticement, deception, and wrong spirit stand out clearly and understandably. If we are deceived by the Prince of Darkness, it is because we have chosen to drift and our light is spent in mental and spiritual inactivity. The soul shrivels with long inactivity and reaps the harvest of weakness and deterioration.

*When I consider how my light is spent Ere half my days in this dark world and wide,
And that one talent, which is death to bide,
Lodges with me useless. . . .*

I am deeply moved—to repentance!

The Little Martyr — By WILLIAM PATTERSON

It is not the church we want; but the sacrifice; not the emotion of admiration, but the act of adoration; not the gift, but the giving.—John Ruskin.

THE OBSCURE and unimportant village of Palmyra, New York, was the scene of an excited religious revival in the second decade of the nineteenth century which was to mark a new era in religious thinking as the discovery of steam and electricity marked an epochal age of science.

Little did the Palmyrans know that a neighbor's son would revolutionize historic Christianity by the revelations of God to him, and convert their inconsequential town into a place of world renown.

The strange things which happened to this youth could not be confined and soon spread to remotest places as a wind-blown prairie fire. The news of those strange things sped before the emissaries of the Restored Gospel, and everywhere curiosity urged consideration, or prejudice, persecution.

There is no neutrality in Divinity. "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad" (Matthew 12: 30), says the Son of God. People sensed a divinity in the message of the Palmyra Prophet, and knew that it demanded acceptance or rejection. The words of the Angel Moroni to the youthful Joseph Smith, "Your name shall be both good and evil spoken of among all people," has had an amazing fulfillment to this late date. As far as Christ is concerned, there are only two kinds of people—those who accept and those who reject his gospel.

AMONG THE EARLY CONVERTS to the Restored Church was a John F. Boynton who was baptized by Joseph Smith at Kirtland, Ohio, in September, 1832. This man was soon ordained an elder by Sidney Rigdon and became an itinerant minister among the New England people where he was born, and where resided his relatives, many of whom later joined the church. J. F. Boynton was one of the first apostles of this dispensation. He and other Boyntons followed the misfortunes of the church in Missouri in that crucial period between the Jackson County exodus and the glory of Nauvoo. Men and women were torn by uncertainty and fear, and the veritable fires of hell seared their minds, causing estrangement and misunderstanding on the one hand, and consuming love and mercy in the hearts of officialdom on the other. Many stalwarts, including Apostle J. F. Boynton, were expelled from the church. However many survived the persecutions of Missouri and the wrought-up feelings from within, and with the church enjoyed the brief glory of the "City Beautiful."

Among those who remained faithful at Nauvoo until after the death of Joseph and Hyrum were A. H. Boynton, his wife, and family. Being driven from Nauvoo in the winter of 1846, they returned to their former surroundings in Massachusetts. With them was their new born son, Charles. The savagery of their enemies was too much for little Charles, who became another martyr to the cause of Christ. Bigotry and intolerance were as brutal in the nineteenth as in the first century of the Christian Era, and had no respect for age or condition.

Walking through a cemetery in Groveland, New Hampshire, on the wintry day of February 24, 1928, I copied the following from a tomb stone of local notoriety:

IN MEMORY OF

CHARLES, son of A. D. and H. M. Boynton, who were driven by a ruthless mob with the Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. Saints from Nauvoo, Ill. Feb. 1846; who died in Mass. Oct. 13, 1846. Aged 10 months.

LOVE

Based on a sermon preached at Louisville,
Kentucky, on September 17, 1950.

By LEROY F. OLIVER

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. . . . for God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.—John 3:16.

PERHAPS THE SUBJECT most misunderstood in all the Scriptures is love! Some call it charity. I prefer the word "love," for to me it conveys best the thing Jesus stood for.

There is the love of God for man, the love of man for God, and the love of man for man. Love is not possessiveness. Love does not make another person over. Love is closely related to friendship, an unending thing that encircles a person for all he is. This love Jesus spoke of when he said, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another," must be instilled in our lives and in the nations of the world before peace or security can be achieved.

It is the lack of this love that has long kept Zion from becoming a reality. We say, "I can't agree with Brother or Sister So-and-So. How can I love him?" And because we haven't actually learned how to cultivate this love, we cannot love those with whom we disagree. We fail to realize that love can overcome any disagreement. When a person is loved, his life shows it to an amazing degree. Because we are human, it is hard for us to love someone with whom we can't see eye to eye, and we know that we are far short of the perfection of Christ. In I Timothy 1: 15, we read, "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief."

THIS IS THE TIME of year when branch elections are held. Many times we hear a Latter Day Saint remark, "If that person gets in office, I'm going to quit working." Where is his Christian charity and brotherhood? On this love hinges the destiny of Zion. In I John 4: 20 we read, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he who loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" True, it is easy to love someone with whom we agree in all matters, who sees things as we do, but where is the reward?

Jesus brought a new philosophy to the earth when he tried to instill in men that they must love their enemies. But it does work, if people only try it. The story is told of a Mrs. Smith who moved into a new neighborhood. Immediately her neighbor, Mrs. Jones, began to circulate rumors and malicious gossip about her. Wondering what to do about such unkindness, Mrs. Smith made it a point, at one of the club meetings, to praise Mrs. Jones, saying that she was a fine neighbor and how much she would like to know her better. This news reached the ears of Mrs. Jones, who promptly felt her guilt and realized her sin. She visited Mrs. Smith, apologized for her unfairness, and offered her friendship.

LOVE IS THE CURE for most ills that confront us. In a recent Reader's Digest is an article entitled, "Scientist Discovers Real Love." In this we are told that doctors are discovering love can cure many physical ailments that nothing else can help. This is the love Jesus spoke of when he said, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

"Love thy neighbor as thyself." Have you ever noticed that this statement carries with it the presumption that we must love ourselves before we can love our neighbors? To love ourselves, of course, we must live lives worthy of self-respect.

Could this not be what the great poet meant when he said, "To thine own self be true; and it must follow, as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man"? If we think well enough of ourselves to live clean, humble, godly lives every day of the week, and not just on Sunday, if we actually believe we are our brother's keeper and act accordingly, then this love of which we speak will work its miraculous power in our lives.

Sometimes we have wondered if the church has not missed the boat when it comes to loving our brothers. This is the foundation of the message Jesus brought and for which he died. In the thirteenth chapter of Corinthians, we clearly see that unless we have love, nothing else matters. Our salvation rests upon this virtue, for unless we love both friend and enemy enough to spend our lives in service to them, we may lose our own salvation.

THE CHURCH must build men and women of love, not hate; of action, not word. Today in a world so filled with greed, jealousy, and suspicion, the church could stand out like a light in the darkness, pointing the way unto Christ, if its members were any different from those outside the church. If love motivated their lives to the fullest extent, it wouldn't take the world long to see that the way of Christ is not only workable but is powerful and wonderful.

As Latter Day Saints, we must overcome our lethargy. We must realize that time is running out, that God is waiting on us. We must begin to build lives of Christian character, based on the example of Christ. We must begin to love our neighbors as ourselves. We must love our enemies and do good for evil. Only when enough of this love permeates our church people can righteous living be achieved to the degree of perfection that is necessary to build Zion.

Now abideth faith, hope, and love, these three . . . but the greatest of these is LOVE.

QUESTION:

Where would you place such "healers" as for instance one W. M. Branham who had meetings July 3, 4, 5, and 6, 1949, at Bismark, North Dakota? He did heal many and did it in Jesus' name.

Minnesota

C. C.

ANSWER:

All healing is a divine process. God has established the "laws" of life which are operative under varying circumstances. For instance, a person by accident cuts a gash in his hand; the physician may sterilize the wound, he may sew up the gash, but the miraculous processes of God's law must heal the wound. There is no healing outside of God's eternal and divine laws of life. Man does not heal a sick person, he merely prepares the individual so that certain laws of nature may operate. In fact, nature's laws are God's laws in operation. In the study of healing, even in the scriptural practice of the "laying on of hands," the element of the faith of the individual must not be neglected. Faith is an element of intelligence and in some measure is always operative.

The so-called "faith healers" as W. M. Branham, by his psychological methods arouses or induces the faith of the individual until it becomes operative in the field of healing. The scriptural statement by James, "The prayer of faith shall save the sick," is a universal law and will always be operative. Christ's statement to the afflicted woman who touched the hem of his garment ". . . thy faith has made thee whole," is of universal and eternal significance, indicating the operation of an eternal law of living. Applied faith is of healing potency. To call these men "faith healers" is a misnomer. They are simply men who have discovered the laws of faith and, by invoking the operation of these laws in the field of healing, secure results that appear miraculous. It is a fact that people do experience healing in such situations. God recognizes, through his operative laws, the faith of the people. More accurately explained, the law of faith becomes operative.

I would classify W. M. Branham as a "psychologist" in the field of religion, specializing in the faith that heals. He is not necessarily a representative of God. He merely brings into focus a law of God. Christian Scientists and others who specialize in the healing potency of faith follow the same law even though the modus operandi of inducing the faith may be different. Satan may by working through the laws of God bring to pass an apparent miracle in healing. Let me repeat, there can be no genuine healing outside of the divine and eternal law of God. As a church we are definite in our teachings that there is healing power in the "prayer of faith," regardless of the religious denomination to which the individual may belong.

As a church we teach and practice the healing power of prayer by following the instruction as set down by James 5: 14, 15:

Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up.

In the philosophy of our church, this is the better way.

John Blackmore.

QUESTION:

Will only righteous Latter Day Saints inherit the celestial glory? If so, who are the "righteous," and could those of other denominations be included? Ohio

W. T. C.

ANSWER:

First, let us turn to the Scriptures to see how we shall be judged at the last judgment:

And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God . . . and they were judged, every man according to their works.—Revelation 20: 12, 13. (Also see Matthew 7: 31, I. V.; II Corinthians 5: 10; II Nephi 11: 30; Mosiah 1: 125, 126.)

Many people seem to think they will receive the highest glory because of their membership in the church, or some other factor. Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6 does not promise this. It says concerning the "celestial kingdom" that "the righteous shall inherit it." The righteous, we infer from Scriptures cited above, are those whose works indicate that they do the will of God. "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever."—I John 2: 17.

If we are judged and saved by our works, some ask, what use is the church?

The ordinances of the gospel are a means of spiritual grace and strength. The ordinances are administered by the church. The gospel itself teaches us the will of God. The association of the Saints strengthens us in our efforts to do the good works God requires of us.

We cannot presume to limit God's love and mercy. The decision on anybody's salvation must be His, not ours. We know that we need all the help of the church and the gospel to strive for our own salvation.

Jesus warned his disciples that righteousness was the test of their salvation:

Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 5: 20.

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 7: 21.

It is difficult, even for those who accept the gospel, to be "righteous." It is more difficult for those who do not. For many, it would be impossible. A true understanding of the difficulty of the task, and a true apprehension of our own weakness, must lead us to the conclusion that we need the gospel and the church to strive effectively for salvation.

L. J. Lea.

QUESTION:

If the Mormon Church is wrong why has it prospered so much and grown so much larger than the Reorganized Church.

Colorado

E. C. D.

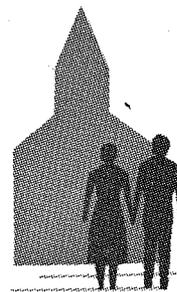

ANSWER:

Numerical strength has never proved the rightness of a proposition. Neither does a majority prove anything to be right. It is the principles taught and their practices that matter. The Mormon Church has always had more missionaries in the field than this church. These missionaries were not taken care of by the church but by their families and relatives. Their financial program has been on the basis of compulsion rather than upon that of voluntary compliance. Their tithes are computed on the basis of 10 per cent of the income, not of the increase.

A Testimony by Garland Tickmyer, President of Los Angeles Stake

A FEW MONTHS AGO a little boy came to our Central Los Angeles church school leading a blind, old man. He wanted to be baptized. "Grandpa has told me all about it," he said, as his bright eyes surveyed the sanctuary with a look of appreciation expressive of the thought, "It's just like grandpa said it would be."

My mind spanned the years to a summer night at Grandma's home on the farm when my brother Roy and I sat on the floor and listened to stories that never grew old—how Sister Tucker had been directed by the Spirit to Grandmother's door; how she had resisted this new doctrine when it was first presented but had been overpowered by the spirit and logic of its presentation. She related experiences of divine visitations, visions, spiritual dreams, healings. She told us of God's paradise in which the lions and the lambs played together, and little children played on harps and sang praises to God. Grandma was a literalist in the most absolute sense of the word, but her method was effective. My own mother added her testimony, and the church loomed out in my mind as the most wonderful thing in the world. I dreamed dreams of the things I would do for it someday. A visit of Seventy Harvey Minton to our home gave me a sense of direction, for he patted me on the head and told me that I would someday be a missionary for the church.

The day came when we moved to town for three short years, and my lifetime ambition was realized. We started to our own church school at Marshall, Missouri. It was small enough that every person was important, and the Saints went out of the way to make us feel at home. It was wonderful. I don't remember any particular thing I learned. We giggled and poked each other in the ribs to the exasperation even of our unusually patient teacher, Sister Mitchell. I can't remember whether the services were orderly or not. I do recall that one of our talented boy musicians used to keep the congregation in impatient suspense for about three minutes while he tuned his violin before his special numbers. I have a vivid recollection of getting through only the first line of my first vocal solo and giving up in breathless fright even though my back was turned to the congregation so that I could look at the music on the piano. My favorite preacher used the word "ain't" so often that even I noticed it.

I doubt very much if our little church school would have merited a grade A rating by any standards, but to me it was wonderful and fulfilled my every expectation. Its influence took up where Grandma left off and so permanently tied me to the church that my faith has never wavered.

CONFRONTED with the problem of the religious training of my own children, I am sometimes hard put to translate what seems to me now to be more mature concepts of religion into the simple and symbolic language of childhood, and I wish Grandmother were around to do for them what she did for me. However, when the boys come home from church school and tell us what the teacher said, I rejoice to know that there are those good women in the church schools who can tell the story just as Grandma did.

Yesterday I visited a family with two young daughters who are interested in the church. They want to start attending church school. The nearest church is a little mission meeting in a union hall next door to a combination dance hall and saloon. My first thought was to send this

PLANO, ILLINOIS.—Five girls from the Camp Fire organization and one girl from the 4-H organization are working for their Light of Life awards. The Camp Fire girls are Judith Pierce, Norma Tripp, Betty Roche, Cynthia Wildermuth, and Ellen Cummings. Mary Busey is from the 4-H organization. Mrs. Dale Pierce is the leader of the Camp Fire group.

CANTOR, OKLAHOMA.—On October 15 two records containing sermons of Elder Hubert Case were played to the congregation. The records were made especially for the congregation and were sent to Brother and Sister Bateman.

On October 25 the young people held a lawn party at the church, Sister Mable Diamon was in charge.—Reported by NINA GOODMAN.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON.—A considerable amount of work was done in the departments prior to the beginning of the church year. In co-operation with the other branches of the district, the Everett Branch made a comprehensive study of its present status and has set goals for the immediate future and for the next five years. All of the departments are adjusting their activities to meet the needs of the branch.

October 15 was Rally Day. The church school is in a growing condition. New classes are organizing and this year there are more willing teachers available than ever before. High Priest Carl Oliver preached at the 11 o'clock hour. Rally Day was a good start for the year.

Each Wednesday evening the fellowship service is well attended. Children and young people are participating.

A class for priesthood meets each Monday evening for instruction under the direction of High Priest Carl Oliver.

The first meeting of the Women's Club was October 12 at the home of Sister Agnes Johnson. Sister Johnson presented the yearbook and gave a talk on "The History of the Women's Organization in the Church." Sister Ada Rossart reported a sizeable profit from the concession at the Evergreen State Fair.

The Women's Club had a rummage sale in the lower auditorium of the church on October 19 and 20. They served lunch to those who patronized the sale and made some new friends for the church.—Reported by HELEN GILBERTS.

GRAVETTE, ARKANSAS.—Brother L. V. Aldrich drove many miles to locate the isolated Saints in the area. He arranged for services, the first of which was held in September in the city park. It was an all-day service. Later with the help of Brother A. R. Tannehill, he secured the Legion Hut where all-day meetings are held twice a month. There is a Bible study at 10:00 a.m. with Sister Elzy Burgess as teacher. At 11:00 there is a sermon by Brother Aldrich. A social hour with lunch is held at noon. At 2:00 p.m. there is a prayer and testimony meeting. Communion is served on the second Sunday.—Reported by MRS. ARTHUR WILSON.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.—The following are the new officers: Ammon Andes, pastor; Merle Harmon, church school director; R. O. Kelley, treasurer; Esther Ortleb Giblin, secretary; Florence Erickson, children's department supervisor; Nell Ellithorpe, young people's supervisor; Eddie Jones, director of music; Mildred Goodfellow, historian; Clifford Alfrey, custodian; and Calla Kelley, publicity agent.

The women's department sponsored a lunchstand at the Kansas Free Fair the week of September 9-15, profits going toward the new church.

Pastor Andes teaches at the University at Lawrence, and it has been somewhat of a sacrifice on his part to meet with the Saints once or twice a week.

Brother Alan Zirkle and Harry Pitchford have both undergone appendectomies recently and both recovered rapidly.

Seventy James C. Daugherty made several visits lately. Other speakers have been Walter Chapman and Arnold Ellsworth of Independence, Missouri. Brother Ellsworth performed the baptism of Judy Hendricks, the nine-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Collier Hendricks. This was the initial baptism performed in the font of the new church. Vernon Montgomery of Lawrence was a guest speaker recently.

Eddie Jones, his wife Leota, and son Billy have moved from Longmont, Colorado. Brother Jones is with radio station KJAY. They are taking active part in church work.

A son was born to Brother and Sister Clifford Alfrey.—Reported by CALLA KELLEY.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.—Seventy William T. Guthrie of Norwalk, Connecticut, conducted a two weeks' series of missionary services from October 1 to 15. Each evening, during the second week, he presented "The Greatest Story Ever Told," illustrated with color slides portraying the life of Christ from the paintings of old masters. These services were well attended, and the branch benefited greatly by Brother Guthrie's ministry.

Barton Masgillivray, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred W. Macgillivray, and Eloise Grange, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Grange, were blessed October 15. Elders William Guthrie and George Robley officiated. Russell Joy, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Joy, Jr., was blessed on October 29, with Elders Daniel Joy, Sr., and George Robley officiating.

An ordination service was held Sunday evening, October 22, at which Brother H. Clifton Hallgreen was ordained to the office of priest. District President Almer Sheehy was in charge, with Elders George Robley and Sydney Thompson assisting.—Reported by JEANNE M. HALLGREEN.

MODESTO, CALIFORNIA.—Installation of new officers was held in the evening of October 1 at a special Communion service. The tables were set to represent the "Lord's Supper," the tables being lighted by the candles of the officers installed. A solo was given by Eva Mae Davis before the service.

Nelda Horton was presented to represent an angel and gave the charge to the pastor; he in turn called his assistants, John A. Moffet, Sr., and Bill Hays to accept their duties. Each assistant and the new officers lighted their candles from the pastor's candle. Other officers are Burton Woodruff, director of religious education; Naomalee Rose, women's leader; Florence Davis, director of music; Betty Carlson, librarian; Iah Rose, publicity; Bill and Mae Hays, young people's leaders; Fred Kettner, book steward; John A. Moffet, Jr., treasurer; Elsie G. King, secretary; Eva Stark, auditor; and Ida Moffet, historian. Each person pledged his faithfulness at the time he lighted his candle.

The junior high class sponsored a travelogue by Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Petz, to which the branch was invited. Brother Petz showed the pictures of their recent trip to Mexico while Sister Petz explained them. Before the pictures Patricia Elliott played a piano solo, and Mrs. John Davis sang "In the Garden of Tomorrow," accompanied by Eva Mae Davis at the piano. At the close of the lecture, dessert was served by the girls of the class, and a freewill offering taken which netted the class over $11.00, their contribution to the branch budget. Mrs. Eva Stark is the teacher.

Mrs. Emma Appel of Stockton, California, presided over the installation of officers for the women's department on October 6. Officers are Mrs. Naomalee Rose, leader; Mrs. Eva Stark, assistant leader; Mrs. Ida Moffet, secretary; and Mrs. Pearl Hansen, treasurer. A solo was given by Mrs. Florence Davis entitled "This Is My Task," accompanied by Miss Eva Mae Davis. Yearbooks were presented to all present. The theme for the year is "Each One Bring One." The study of the group will be "I witness for Christ," by Blanche Mesley. A social hour was held in the lower auditorium. Mrs. Marilyn Elliott was in charge.—Reported by ILAH ROSE.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS.—District President Donald Kyser was in charge of the annual election of officers held September 11. Those elected were Elder Dale Crown, pastor; C. C. Martin, counselor; Arthur Goettle, church school supervisor; Marie Hawley, children's supervisor; Lloyd Feagins, Zion's League leader; Leah Williams, women's leader; Lavone Hill, music director; Wilma Crown, clerk; Lloyd Hill, secretary; Roy Graham was sustained as bishop's agent; Susie LeNeve, publicity agent; Clara Hawley is branch historian. Donald Kyser occupied the pulpit both at the eleven o'clock hour and the evening service of September 10.

On August 6 Gery and Dickey Crown were baptized by their father, Elder Dale Crown.

During the summer the inside of the church building was made more beautiful by the men of the branch who redecorated the walls and refinished the floors. The women assisted by helping clean the church after the redecorating was completed. An ice cream social was held on the church lawn sponsored by the women's department, the proceeds going into the building fund. A committee of three were chosen to purchase calves to help swell the building fund. The calves were placed with different church members who are willing to look after them and who have the pasture to care for them. At a suitable time these calves are to be sold. Zion's League sponsored watermelon feeds, wiener bakes, and swim parties. Several of the members attended the reunion of the Ozarks.

August 20 the 11:00 hour was given over to Dr. and Mrs. Glenn LeBaron of Seattle, Washington. They told of many interesting historical places they had visited the previous two months, Dr. LeBaron connecting herbology with Divinity and Mrs. LeBaron stressing the need of prayer and the need of each member attending prayer meeting.

On August 26 Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Martin assisted by Gloria Shadel, all of Independence, Missouri, conducted a class on flannelgraph at the Hale Hawley home. The following Sunday morning, August 27, at the eleven o'clock hour, E. J. Martin assisted by Mrs. Martin gave a very interesting talk, using the flannelgraph, on "The Restoration." The same evening Arthur Dennis of Mapleton, Kansas, occupied the 8:00 o'clock hour.

The blessing of Cynthia Jane, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gene Farmer, was held during the Communion service by her grandfather, Elder C. C. Martin. Solo was by her aunt, Rosalee Newhouse of Tulsa, Oklahoma.

At the Rich Hill District conference, Arthur Goettle was ordained priest by District President Donald Kyser and Apostle D. O. Chesworth.

On the evening of September 5 fifty friends and church members gathered at the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Gene Farmer for a farewell party honoring Ruth LeNeve and Don Graham before leaving for Graceland. Many outdoor games were played, wieners and marshmallows were roasted. A short talk was given by Pastor Dale Crown. Useful gifts from the branch were given the honored guests. Ruth and Don left for Graceland September 8.—Reported by SUSIE LENEVE.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—The First Church held their annual election of officers on September 12, and Elder Elwin Vest, missionary to the Oregon District, was unanimously re-elected to the office of pastor. Elder Vest was appointed last year as missionary to the Oregon District and also served as pastor to the First Church during the year. Brother Vest, with his companion Peggy and their two children Charles and Virginia, has assisted greatly in the work of the First Church as well as devoting time to the district missionary work.

Associate pastor chosen to assist Brother Vest is Elder Fred W. Hawes, and their three counselors are Elders Elmer Larson, Clifford Bryson, and Gordon Lampard. Other officers elected are as follows: Albert Gardner, secretary; Stanley Stoyloff, treasurer and business manager; Claude Young, church school director; Arthur Minor, Zion's League leader; Peggy Vest, women's department leader; Caroline Larson, branch social leader; Eula Stoyloff, publicity agent; Faye Hawes, dramatic and music director; Albert Gardner, book steward; Fred Hawes, Forrest Moore, and Morris Nelson, building committee. Fred W. Hawes is branch solicitor. The branch also voted to accept the recommendation of the pastor and district president that Clifford Bryson and Gordon Lampard be ordained to the office of elder and that Arthur Minor be ordained to the office of priest.

At the branch business meeting held October 3, reports from all departments were presented and accepted, and the budget for the coming year was discussed and approved. Sister Viola Young was appointed as flower chairman for the coming year. The building committee submitted a set of plans for adding a junior church chapel and additional classrooms to the present building, and a discussion was held regarding them. The group approved of the plans and asked that they be submitted to the apostle-in-charge, and the bishopric for their approval.

A new member was added to the First Church when Arlene McFarlane was baptized recently by Elder Vest during a youth retreat at the new reunion grounds on the Lewis River.

Craig, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Allen, was blessed on Communion Sunday, October 1, by Elder Elwin R. Vest and Evangelist Walter H. Barker.

The branch sponsored a bridal shower on October 16 honoring Mr. and Mrs. James Mackwood who were recently married. The bride is the sister of Sister Betty Fletcher.

Rally Day was observed by the adult church school with a morning worship in which three members of the congregation gave short talks on how they were first contacted and became members of this church. A solo was sung by Carol Lampard, as well as a trio by Clifford Bryson, Claude Young, and Fred Hawes. A poem was read entitled "Rally Day," which was written by Albert Gardner for the occasion. The theme, "Each one bring one," was emphasized, and the group was encouraged to build up its membership this coming year.—Reported by EULA STOYNOFF.

INDEPENDENCE, KANSAS.—Elder Guy G. Cadwell was re-elected branch president at the annual business meeting held at the church, August 20. Other officers elected for the coming year are: Eldon L. Kastl, Jr., church school director; Mrs. J. M. Mercer, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. G. Tom Crossan, music supervisor; Mrs. Price Cochran, adult supervisor; Mrs. Eldon L. Kastl, Jr., Zion's League supervisor; Mrs. John H. Wright, children's supervisor; Mrs. Howard D. Griffiths, women's leader and publicity.

The Zion's League elected Miss Rosalie Cochran as their president, Gail Garrison, vice-president, and Louise Matthews, secretary.

Ten young people attended the Western Retreat at Camp Cedar Bluff north of Coffeyville, September 23 and 24. Stephen Black, Arthur Dixon, and Vern Montgomery had charge of the program and Mrs. Howard D. Griffiths had charge of arrangements for the camp and the food. Her helpers were Mrs. Price Cochran, Mrs. W. O. Linthicum, and Howard D. Griffiths.

Officers for the Ssenippah Guild are: Mrs. Howard D. Griffiths, leader; Mrs. John H. Wright, assistant leader; Mrs. Eldon L. Kastl, Jr., secretary; Mrs. W. O. Linthicum, teacher; and Mrs. John H. Wright, assistant teacher. They are studying I Witness for Christ, by Blanche Mesley.

Patricia Elaine Wright, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Wright, was blessed by Elders Guy G. Cadwell and Charles L. Anderson on August 6.

October 8 was the annual Rally Day. Elder Dave Wilson of Fairland and Elder Lee Quick of Mapleton, Kansas, were guest speakers for the day. Gail Garrison was baptized by Eldon Kastl, Jr., and was confirmed by Elders Wilson and Quick. Basket dinner was served at the Y. W. C. A.

The Zion's League invited the Coffeyville Zion's League to a Halloween party, October 23, at the Price Cochran home north of town.

Mrs. John H. Wright and Mrs. J. M. Mercer entertained the children's department on October 26 at the Cochran home with a Halloween party.

The older women of the women's department, who like to quilt, have formed the "Luckey After All 406 Club" and spend their meeting time quilting or sewing quilt blocks.—Reported by MRS. HOWARD D. GRIFFITHS.

ENFIELD, ENGLAND.—An "Inventory Service" in January has now become an annual feature. At this year's service Bishop Trapp was the speaker, and through his ministry it was made known that the Lord was pleased with the efforts put forward. There are fifty-two tithepayers in the branch, including three junior stewards.

On February 26 Apostle D. Blair Jensen visited the branch and gave two inspiring addresses. "The Purpose of Life," as contained in Philippians 3:10, was the morning subject. In the evening he took for his text, "Be still and know that I am God," explaining how this can be applied to life in the present day.

A "Music Sunday" was held on March 18. Elder Dover A. Judd, music director, was the morning speaker on the subject, "Serving Through Music." In the evening Elder W. T. Goullee gave a most informative discourse on "Latter Day Saint Hymnology."

A prayer meeting for General Conference was held on April 3. Preceding the prayer period Sister Merle North and Sister Lily Carr, together with Patriarch John W. Worth, gave brief reminiscences of the General Conferences they had attended. This helped to impress the reality of that gathering.

On Good Friday evening a Communion service was held. Easter Day speakers were Teacher W. S. Wicks on the subject, "Christ Is Risen," and Elder F. W. Judd on the subject, "Christ Lives."

Under the title, "Our Life—A Testimony of Christ," five testimonies were featured at the evening service on April 30, as follows: "In the Home," by Sister Edith Lawrence; "In the School," by Sister Dora Oakman; "In the Office," by Sister Rose Worth; "In the Hospital," by Sister May Oakman; "In the Priesthood," by Elder Frank Judd.

Mother's Day was celebrated on May 14. Mrs. W. N. Arrowsmith and Mrs. C. Allen, visiting sisters from Birmingham, were the speakers.

An "Organ Fund" has nearly always been running at Enfield, but during the past two years the branch has made special efforts for the acquisition of a new organ. Socials, concerts, etc., have been held to raise funds, augmented by monthly "envelope" contributions.

In May of this year the goal was realized, and with very little difficulty a suitable instrument was found. It is a two-manual electric model of simple design in natural color oak, which tones with the interior paneling of the church. Although the organ is not new, it is in extremely good condition. On the first Sunday morning in May, a dedication service was held. Patriarch John W. Worth offered the dedicatory prayer, Elder Wm. T. Goulee had the honor of first playing the organ, and Elder Frank Fry gave the address.

Appreciation is due to Brother John Judd, Jr., whose consistent service has been largely responsible for the old organ having served so well for many years; also to Pastor Schofield for the impetus his leadership has given in the attainment of the new organ.

To assist the local ministry with missionary contacts, Elder Frank A. Fry made a six weeks' visit to Enfield, from the first week in May. Some of the seven baptisms performed at the morning service on Children's Day, June 11, were the result of these labors.

The candidates were: Mrs. Edna Givens (wife of Elder David Givens), Mr. and Mrs. William Tearall (Mission Reunion location contacts), Margaret Judd, Phyllis Folkes and Paul Lawrence (children of members), and Sheila Greenwood (church school contact). All except the first of these were baptized by Elder Fry, Mrs. Givens being baptized by her husband. The confirmations were carried out on July 7, when presentations were made of Church Members' Manuals to the adults and Junior Manuals to the children.

In the afternoon of Children's Day, the church school presented a pageant entitled, "The Road of Joy." The platform in the school hall was decorated to represent a road through a garden. Certain children, who wished to gain entrance, were shown by the character "Truth" that only through the gates of "Love for Jesus," and "Service in His Name," could they enter the Road of Joy in the beautiful Garden of Life.

District President F. A. Fry, the evening speaker, took for his text, "Behold your little ones," showing the importance the Savior attaches to the matter of ministering to children.

In June a special effort was made to remove doubts as to the identity of the church in Enfield. This took the form of leaflet distribution in the neighborhood of the church and local newspaper advertisements concerning a two-Sunday series of addresses on the subjects: "The Church of Christ Has Been Restored," "Why Re-organized?" forum (open discussion), and "Why I Am a Member." Twenty-seven copies of the tract, "This Is Our Church," and fifty-eight personal letters were also sent.

Enfield Saints were very happy to have the privilege of accommodating the Midland and Southern District Reunion in August. On Sunday morning, August 6, Pastor J. F. Schofield was ordained to the high priesthood under the hands of Apostle D. Blair Jensen and High Priest F. A. Fry.

Visitors to Enfield during 1950 have been: In January, Elder and Mrs. Theys and family, who brought good news and greetings from the German Mission. In March, Pastor and Mrs. Jenkins of Hamilton, New South Wales, Australia. Since April Elder David Givens of the U. S. Air Force, his wife and their two children have been worshipping with the branch. In June the branch was happy to welcome home Sister Doris Oakman and to make the acquaintance of Sister Irene Rannie. Many happy memories of their stay remain, and as a result of their visit the link with the "Center Place" has been made stronger. The gift of a hymnbook for the branch pulpit was much appreciated.

Two "Women's Days" have been held, when the sisters have had entire charge of the services. "Thanksgiving" was the theme of the first, on January 22, when Sister G. Allen of Birmingham spoke at both services. The second was on July 23, when Sister Doris Oakman spoke at the morning service, concerning women's work in Independence and the States generally. Sister Allen spoke in the evening on the text, "Lift Up Thy Voice Like a Trumpet."

A potato pie supper was served by this department on May 13, proceeds in aid of the crockery and cutlery fund. "Bring and Buy" sales have also been held, and the fund now stands at nearly fourteen pounds.

The department leader, Sister Nellie Wicks, has been considerably handicapped by continued sickness, but is now progressing under hospital treatment.

The Zion's League, under the leadership of Brother Roy Oakman, has given willing and able support to branch projects. They very materially assisted in raising the organ fund, and carried out the catering for the August reunion.

On Sunday, February 10, a "Zion's League Day" was held with the theme, "The Call of Zion." This commenced with a 10 a.m. prayer meeting, led by the president, Roy Oakman. At the morning and evening services, papers by Leaguers were presented.

The League study course for the year was Comparative Religions, by C. B. Hartshorn.

Other cultural and social activities have been engaged in, including visits to Madame Tussauds' Waxworks and to the National Gallery; also two Saturday afternoon country rambles, which were followed by tea and vesper services. To these latter activities all branch departments were invited.

One child, David Frost, has been blessed.

His parents are James and Annie Frost, who were baptized in November, 1949.—Reported by LILY E. A. OAKMAN.

ST. THOMAS, ONTARIO.—Officers for the coming year are Carl Muir, pastor; Frank Gray, associate pastor; Mrs. Hazel Ford, recording secretary and book steward; Miles Rock, treasurer; Stanley Moore, church school director; Myrtle Cosan, women's department leader; Margaret Ford, music director; Edith Stephens and Miles Rock, Zion's League leaders; Sister Nelson Kelley, branch solicitor; and Ruth Millard and Hazel Johnston, auditors.

KIRKLAND LAKE, ONTARIO.—Many of the Saints were able to attend the Northern Ontario Reunion held at Park Royal, July 2 to 10. Those speaking were Brothers Baldwin, Zonker, Mesley, and Hewett. The women's classes were taught by Sister Mesley. Sister Dobson of Port Elgin was in charge of the children's classes.

Those ordained to the ministry were Bruce MacGregor, elder; Graydon Feilder, teacher; William Bucke, priest; Thomas Ridley and Fred Dyer, deacons.

Those baptized were Mrs. E. Doupe; Roger, Marie and Lorraine Doupe, Gerard and Roland Mortineau, Doreen Dyer, Donna, Albert, Shirley, and Joan Shepherdson.

Brother Pat Bolger was appointed as priesthood supervisor for unorganized districts.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Shields of Timmins was blessed. The baby is the great-granddaughter of Elder John Shields.

The annual election of officers was held on September 15. Pat Bolger was again elected as pastor and Harvey Wagg as church school superintendent.

Rally Day was held September 26 in the Masonic Temple with services in charge of Brother B. Hewett of Toronto. Many Saints from New Liskeard and Timmins attended.

Marvin Wickett of New Liskeard was ordained an elder.

Saints in Kirkland are looking forward to a series of missionary services next month in charge of Brother L. Zonker and Brother McMurrey.—Reported by G. DYER.

The Word of Wisdom - Part V

THIS SPRING I had the happy privilege of attending General Conference for the first time. I was eager to take in everything and get all I could to bring back to our home branch. I was not thinking in terms of material for Word of Wisdom lessons, but the first testimony given in the first prayer service of the Conference was by a brother from California who wanted to express his thanks for health and the Word of Wisdom. He said a year ago he had been in very poor health, and he came to realize he would never be any better until he gave up drinking coffee. It had been a hard habit to break, but he had finally conquered it. He said he felt this was the greatest victory he had ever won.

A few days later I was visiting with Sister Winifred Stiegel of Moline, Illinois. She said, "I want to tell you of the experience of one of our women, Sister Selene, who had enrolled in one of our leadership training courses. She was finding the material very difficult to learn and was quite concerned about it. Somehow she was made conscious of the fact that she was disobeying the advice in the Word of Wisdom as to the drinking of coffee. But the habit was so strong she was afraid it would be impossible to break it; so she had prayed earnestly about it. The Lord answered her prayer by making coffee very distasteful to her, although she tried drinking it several different times. As a result her powers of concentration were increased, and the material became easy for her.

Then, early on the Saturday morning that we were to leave the Conference to return home, the phone rang. It was Sister Lucy Marie Land extending an invitation for us to have Sunday dinner at her home. I was sorry we were leaving and could not accept the invitation. Then she mentioned reading the Word of Wisdom articles in the Herald and said, "Before you hang up I want to tell you of the experience of my neighbor. His daughter had been very, very sick. At last the doctor told him there were no hopes for her recovery. After the doctor left, he went into the kitchen to pray, and being quite shaken by the doctor's words, made himself a cup of coffee to steady his nerves. Just as he was ready to drink it, a voice said, 'How can you expect me to bless you when you disobey my will?' Instead of drinking it, Brother Martin poured the coffee down the sink, then he prayed in faith and power, and his daughter recovered."

These were outstanding testimonies to me, because three times before General Conference I had a lesson prepared to give at the women's department on tea and coffee, and each time something had come up that prevented my giving it. Never having used tea and coffee myself, I had not realized that the material I had gathered would not be sufficient without the strong support of these testimonies.

I THOUGHT OF THIS AGAIN when I read in the August Reader's Digest the article, "What Does Coffee Do to You?" by Roger William Riis. He tells us:

Coffee is the most popular beverage in the world. We in the United States consume half of the world's production, in nine hundred different brands. If yours is one of the ninety-two out of one hundred American homes where coffee is a daily beverage, you are probably drinking between two and half and three and a half cups a day.

I regretted the fact that the article rather upholds the use of coffee as not particularly harmful to most people. Yet both tea and coffee contain very objectionable elements—tannin in tea, and caffeine in both tea and coffee.

Caffein (formerly known as theine) is the alkaloid of tea, and is identical with that of coffee. It is closely allied to theobromine, the alkaloid of cocoa, and also to uric acid. In large quantities it is a poison, but in smaller quantities it acts as a stimulant.—Encyclopedia Briannica, Eleventh Edition, volume 26, page 479.

Dr. Roberts, an eminent English physiologist, published in the British Medical Journal the results of a series of experiments with tea, coffee, cocoa, chocolate, wine, and other stimulants. He states:

Tea, even in minute quantities, paralyzes completely the action of the salivary secretion upon the food. Tea also retards stomachal digestion when the infusion amounts to one fifth of the entire contents of the stomach. Coffee and cocoa have little effect upon the salivary digestion, but interfere with the digestion of the food in the stomach to as great an extent as does tea.

S. T. Bundeson, M.D., says:

There is danger to the heart in using tea and coffee. Both give the drinker a false feeling of well-being for the time, especially when he is tired, with the result that he takes coffee instead of resting as he should and unwittingly he draws on reserve strength that he will need in later years, and when those later years arrive, he suddenly goes to pieces and thinks he is overworked or simply unlucky. As a matter of fact, he has been culpably careless.

Dr. Robert G. Jackson says:

Caffein does not wait long to leave upon the drinker the impress of its untoward effects. The coffee drinker is not long in becoming the coffee habitue, which means he "feels the need" of it. Or he "has a headache without it." Or "he is nervous and cannot concentrate." Or he "needs a bracer" and coffee supplies it. Stimulant drugs and caffein from tea and coffee are active alkaloids and do supply a "pick-me-up," a "bracer to the nerves." But in proportion as the nerves are forced or urged to function by an artificial, that is to say unnatural urge or stimulant, they become exhausted and cannot respond to a natural urge or stimulus. In this exhaustion from artificial stimulation, the conscious sensation of the habitue is that of discomfort, disinclination, weakness, and irritability, depending upon the extent to which the nerves are exhausted by the degenerating and disintegrating drug. Nor will the disability and irritability disappear until the habitue receives another "shot" of his dope, his drug, be it in the form of cocaine, morphine, or caffein from coffee or tea.

MILDRED NELSON SMITH tells us that the cola drinks contain large amounts of caffein and are often habit forming. Chocolate and cocoa also contain small amounts of caffein and large amounts of theobromine. Although the quantity of stimulant is much less in chocolate and cocoa beverages than generally used in tea, coffee, or cola, they should be used sparingly if at all, especially for children. In contrast to tea, coffee, and cola drinks, however, chocolate and cocoa are otherwise nutritious foods. When used in beverages, they are almost always combined with milk providing nutritious drinks. Chocolate and cocoa-flavored beverages cannot, therefore, be classed strictly with other stimulating beverages. If served, they should, of course, be of moderate temperature and of mild strength.

Roger William Riis says: "By way of comparison, the same table which reports caffein to the extent of ninety milligrams in a cup of coffee, reports that in a cup of tea there are sixty-seven milligrams of caffein, in a ten cent bar of sweet chocolate seventy-eight milligrams, in a six ounce bottle of a cola drink fifty-four milligrams." The American Medical Association is often requested to place its seal of approval upon chocolate flavored milk drinks or beverage bases for making them. Approval is granted for the product to be advertised as a healthful component of children's diets if the finished product contains fifteen milligrams or less total stimulant in a four-ounce cup.

The Lord gave us warning concerning the dangers that might come from using these drinks when he said in section 86 of the Doctrine and Covenants, which is a word of wisdom showing forth the order and will of God, "hot drinks are not for the body."

SOME HAVE ASKED if the term "hot drinks" refers to tea and coffee. Elbert A. Smith answered this in an editorial titled "Hot Drinks" published in the Herald for April 1, 1914:

There is no doubt in our mind that the term "hot drinks" was intended to include tea and coffee. True, the words "tea" and "coffee" do not appear, yet they are covered by the general term. In a similar way whiskey and brandy are not specifically named, yet their use is discouraged under the clause which refers to "strong drink."

In a sermon in Nauvoo, May, 1842, Hyrum Smith, who at that time was presiding patriarch, formerly a member of the First Presidency, said:

"And again, 'Hot drinks are not for the body, or belly'; there are many who wonder what this can mean; whether it refers to tea and coffee or not. I say it does refer to tea and coffee."—Times and Seasons, Volume 3, page 800.

Hyrum Smith was in an excellent position to know the understanding that the church had of the meaning of this revelation at the time when it was given. And so far as we know, his interpretation was never challenged by the early church or by any quorum or prominent leader of the church. It was consistent with the action of the church in Missouri in discouraging the sale of tea and coffee in the community. The following is from the minutes of a General Assembly of the church, November 7, 1837:

"The congregation, after a few remarks from Sidney Rigdon, unanimously voted not to support stores and shops selling spirituous liquors, tea, coffee, or tobacco."—Church History, Volume 2, page 120.

President Joseph Smith, who was "to teach those revelations which you have received" is on record as follows:

"Tea and coffee are not named in the Word, but they are included in the sentence, 'Hot drinks are not for the body or belly.'"—Saints' Herald, volume 49, page 1170.

As far as we know, no quorum or leading church officer in the Reorganization has ever challenged this decision by President Smith. While he is not presented as an infallible authority, for we know of none such among the human membership of the church, he is by virtue of his office, calling, experience, and personal qualifications as good an authority as we know of on such a matter of interpretation.

Tea and coffee were the beverages in common use at the table at the time when the revelation was given, and they were almost universally served hot. Evidently the term "hot drinks" was, to a degree at least, merely a term of convenience used in referring to them, just as the term "strong drink" was a term of convenience used to designate alcoholic beverages of various kinds.

It is fair to state, however, that it is argued by some that all liquids taken hot have a tendency to relax and weaken the stomach, and that for this reason all such drinks should be avoided.

J. E. ANDES, M.D., in the Saints' Herald of August 14, 1943, says:

In the Word of Wisdom it is stated that "hot drinks" are not for the body. The heat of the drink undoubtedly causes more trouble than the drug itself. The stomach and the esophagus have no temperature sense; hence they cannot react when hot drinks are hurriedly gulped to avoid burning the mouth. Instead, the normal cells are gradually destroyed or their function is altered. If animals are fed hot water at the same temperature the average person drinks coffee, within a few months the stomach cells stop their secretion of digestive juices never to start again. Since tea and coffee are usually taken hot, we have the combined effect of the harm of the drug with that of the heat. Hot soups, hot foods, hot cocoa are in this category.

Dr. A. W. Teel says in an article in the Priesthood Journal of January, 1937:

My dentist informs me that the use of "hot drinks" is one of the chief causes of tooth decay, and pathologists give us the information that in many cases it is the cause of cancer. Hot drinks such as tea and coffee are no doubt the most objectionable on account of the drugs they contain. These drinks being used over a long period of time cause an overstimulation which results in depression, wakefulness, indigestion, palpitation of the heart, headache, and trembling. Therefore we can believe that we have been wisely cautioned that "hot drinks are not for the body or belly."

An article on gastric ulcer in the American Medical Journal, September 25, 1915, by that eminent surgeon, William J. Mayo, states:

Thirty per cent of all cancers in civilized man are in the stomach. The relative infrequency of the disease in primitive man and the lower animals suggests that there is some cause for their preponderance; that is, since the food of man and the lower animals is of the same character, there must be something in its preparation or method of taking which predisposes civilized man to gastric cancer.

There are many well-known illustrations of the fact that chronic irritation from heat disturbs the peithelum (the lining membrane), thus making malignant disease possible. It has been shown that when a considerable quantity of fluid is taken into the stomach, it passes by the canalis gastricus (the small end of the stomach) and directly to the duodenum (the first division of the small intestine) without mixing with the food mass in the fundus (the large end of the stomach).

This is exactly the situation of 85 per cent or more of all ulcers and cancers of the stomach and ulcers of the duodenum.

Food is cooled during mastication, but liquids are often swallowed hotter than can be borne comfortably in the mouth. One can not help thinking that hot drinks may be one of the most important irritative causes of chronic ulcer and precancerous lesions. Extreme cold may have the same effect. Primitive men and animals do not take their drinks hot and seldom have gastric cancer.

FOR THOSE WHO FEEL the need of a warm drink, the Lord has provided "barley for mild drinks, as also other grains." Among my mother's old letters I find this from Sister Lula Mae Jackson: "We made our own coffee, we get the grain cracked at the mill, about two-thirds barley and a little wheat and corn and brown it in the oven. This is a fine thing for keeping up the milk supply in nursing mothers." A mother in our group said different ones had told her to drink tea to keep up the milk supply, but Dr. John Bartram in his article, "Nurse Your Baby if You Can," which appeared in May Country Gentleman, says there is no evidence that tea is especially helpful. Nutritionists tell us foods supplying high quality proteins, needed vitamins, minerals, and calories, and an ample supply of liquids are the essentials. Milk is excellent in meeting these requirements. A barley drink provides additional liquids with some food nutrients instead of the stimulation provided by tea.

We, in Nauvoo, have been unable to get barley grain locally but have been using a prepared barley drink of which there are several on the market. The Bernard Galbraiths like the brand, "Hollywood Cup." They get it by the case of twelve packages from H. W. Walker and Company, 918 Armitage Avenue, Chicago, 14 Illinois.

In the Herald of January 3, 1948, appeared this letter from Sister Flo Whittemore:

Nearly three months ago I became suddenly very ill. Consulting a doctor, I learned that I had developed a serious toxic condition. His first instruction was "Don't drink any more coffee." I didn't recover speedily. Instead, after a month's medication, I went to the Sacred Heart Hospital to receive the costly streptomycin drug every three hours day and night, for a week. I am still not entirely well. I learned the hard way that it is wise to heed when God speaks and says it is a "word of wisdom" for our physical well-being.

Brother Cecil Ettinger told us in a recent sermon: "God's laws are laws of freedom and not laws of limitation. The Word of Wisdom is not a law saying you cannot have this and cannot have that, but through having the things God wants us to have, our bodies gain freedom."

HAPPENSTANCE

Henry Ward Beecher, the famous preacher, and Robert G. Ingersoll, the agnostic, were warm personal friends—although, of course, they disagreed on religious matters, and especially on the question of the creation of the universe.

A friend of the preacher's presented to him a beautiful celestial globe, showing the sun and moon, the planets and the stars. It was a wonderful piece of work, and Ingersoll admired it greatly. He said to Beecher, "Who made it?"

"Nobody," said the minister. "It just happened." —Charles N. Lurie

In a New Light

By IONE SARTWELL

*So often we criticize and reject
What we could—with a little work—perfect.*

IT WAS AN ENORMOUS room with a high, vaulted ceiling and a skylight through which the sun streamed down on the misty drops of a little fountain as they spilled over the edge, bathing tropical plants below.

This was not the chief attraction, however, for it was the opening day of the art show, and the walls were lined with beautiful paintings—paintings by eager young artists in need of recognition and money.

The show had just opened, and already people were wandering in and gathering in little groups around the various pictures, admiring and exclaiming or commenting and criticizing. One picture seemed to be drawing more than its share of these would-be critics:

"The features are much too sharp," said one young man with a studious frown.

"And the colors are so drab," replied the girl at his side. "Why, a picture of Christ ought to radiate light, but this is dull."

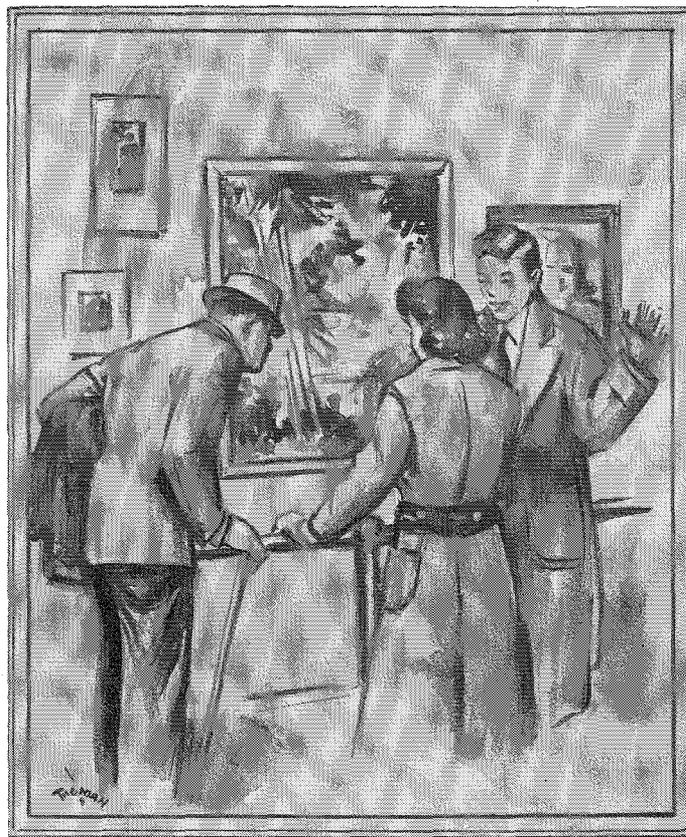

As they spoke, others murmured in agreement: "Yes . . . that's right . . . not good art." All except one old man who stood gazing at the picture completely unmindful of the conversation going on around him. When the critics moved on, he remained, his withered hands clasped loosely behind his back, his bright eyes fixed firmly on this picture of the head of Christ. After a while he sat down and appeared to be resting, but his eyes showed that he was thinking.

MANY PEOPLE came and went in front of the picture that afternoon, and all made disparaging remarks about it. Consequently, that evening when the attendants went about locking the doors and putting the place in order, one of them suggested to the other: "Whaddeya say we throw this one out. Nobody'll buy it. It's so bad it's detracting from the show."

"I think so, too," agreed his partner. "We can stick it in the back room for the time being and fill in with—" He stopped short, for the old man who had been sitting near by all afternoon was standing in front of him, shakily offering a dollar bill.

"I'd like to buy it," he said simply.

The attendant looked shocked. "You'd like to buy it? Why, this—"

Many people came and went in front of the picture that afternoon, and all made disparaging remarks about it.

"I know," interrupted the old man, "but—"

"O.K." The attendant decided to humor him. "Sure, you can have it."

THE OLD MAN carried away his treasure to a little shack—his home. Here there was no skylight, no fountain—only the homely furnishings of an old man who had lived alone for many years. He studied the room for a long time. Then he set to work. First, he climbed up on chairs and got down off chairs, trying to locate just the right spot to hang his painting. Next, he rummaged through the scraps of material he was fond of saving and chose a dark piece of heavy cloth which he cut and hemmed to make a backdrop. Then, having hung it in the chosen spot, he took his old-fashioned lamp and set it here . . . there . . . no, over here . . . or maybe there . . . until finally he found what he was working for. Then he sank into his battered rocker. His legs were tired and shaky from climbing up and down; his hands were pricked and smarting from sewing the heavy cloth; his face was hot and flushed from bending over the lighted lamp. But the picture? Now the dark background had softened the too-sharp features. Now the light shining from just the right angle had transformed the drabness into warm, glowing colors. Now the eyes of Jesus were full of life and love, and they seemed to smile as the old man shifted his weary legs and sighed—tired but content.

New Horizons

Sin and Salvation - By JOSEPHINE MONTGOMERY

LIKE EVERY OTHER RELIGIOUS CONCEPT, ideas concerning sin and salvation have undergone many stages of development both from the time of the early prophets to the time of Christ, and from the time of Christ down to our own day. Since my scholarship does not permit me to trace the ideas of sin and salvation from early times, I shall limit my discussion to those beliefs which are prominent in the modern world.

In any church there are the conservatives and the liberals, and to clear the air of suspicion that I have a doctrinal ax to grind, let me say that conservative Protestants are closer to conservative Catholics than they are to liberal Protestants and vice versa.

The conservative stand is well known. For the Catholic, sin is anything forbidden or denounced by ecclesiastical authority; for the Protestant it is anything expressly forbidden in the Scriptures. Under these come the familiar "do's and don'ts" and hell-fire warnings which were taught to many of us in our childhood and are still being taught today. On the matter of salvation Catholics and Protestants disagree, the former believing in faith and good works while the Lutheran doctrine leans on faith alone, but both place the emphasis on the death of Christ and the doctrine of atonement as being the means of salvation. It would be pointless to go any deeper into the differences in the views of justification; the important thing is that conservatives of either kind believe that salvation is a piece of negotiable goods purchased for us by the death of the God-man. As to what we are saved to, conservatives point toward another world, a nebulous heaven in which we are to reap the harvest of a good "Christian" life lived in this one. Briefly then, conservatives believe that sin is that which is forbidden, salvation is a commodity bought by Christ's death, and the reward is everlasting life in heaven.

LIBERAL RELIGIOUS THINKERS are not satisfied with anything which resembles dogma or which seems to them irrational. Sin must be something more fundamental than a list of biblical "don'ts"; salvation must have more to do with the moral influence of Christ's life than with his death; and they like to think that the rewards of salvation may be apparent to some extent in this life as well as in the next. Liberal Protestantism seems to provide more answers to modern theological, philosophical, social, and economic problems than any other single force in the world today.

Discarding the conservative definition of sin, liberals are faced with the necessity of providing a definition of their own. Ideas here may differ to some extent, but in all cases the emphasis is placed squarely on the principle of moral responsibility. The old Greek word for sin means to "miss the mark," and in modern thinking this is carried on to mean that to sin is to miss the greater good by choosing the lower ideal when a higher ideal is possible. Elastic as this definition is, it stretches to include all of the conservative taboos against breaking the laws of God; yet it puts the responsibility on the moral life of man rather than on dogmas. "To sin," says Harkness, "is willfully to choose to be ungodlike."¹

Rall phrases it differently when he says, "Sin is evil in man seen in the light of God."² All sin can be described or accounted for in three ways. The negative sin is man's refusal of good—his "No" to the highest. When a man refuses to develop his soul to the fullest and noblest proportions of which it is possible, he is guilty of disloyalty and betrayal to himself, his fellow men, and God. Behind this lies the sin of selfishness. We refuse good and the higher self because we prefer to obey our own will in the pursuit of pleasure or satisfaction. The motivating sin of selfishness sets loose the sins of hatred, jealousy, deceit, greed, cruelty, envy, murder, lust, inertia, and indifference. Sin is also actual wrongdoing seen in relation to God. Under this come all the active evils of individuals and nations—crime, war, poverty, political corruption, disease. Sin, then, leads to sin. Our refusal of the good leaves us open to the sin of selfishness, and selfishness results in all of the sins that surround us in the world. Sin is our failure to live the full, rich life which is possible for us.

IN THE LIGHT of this concept of sin, it is impossible to place the emphasis of salvation on the death of Christ, but on his life and its moral influence in our lives. If the sins we are to be saved from are actual, down-to-earth realities like poverty, war, and disease, then our salvation from them must be just as down to earth and have more to do with us than with the Crucifixion. The first step is the realization and cessation of the refusal of good, of selfishness, and the resultant active sins. The second step is faith and active participation in good. It is not enough merely to stop doing evil; we must start doing good.

I do not believe that liberal Protestant thinkers mean to discredit the value of Christ's death, but rather to emphasize the value of living his teachings. Similarly, in expecting part of the reward of salvation in this life they are not denying the belief in a heaven and a heavenly reward. If, by the process of salvation as liberals see it, we eliminate the sins of selfishness, war, poverty, disease, and the rest, then we will have established the kingdom of God on earth, and surely that may be considered as a reward.

Christ said, "I came that ye might have life and have it more abundantly." Sin is failure in living. Salvation is the way of abundant life.

Picked From the Periodicals

By Aarona Booker Kohlman

WITH THE APPROACH of our two big holidays, Thanksgiving and Christmas, no one will be surprised to learn November magazines place a great deal of emphasis on food, decorations, and gift ideas. Nevertheless, there is also "food" for thought.

"Your Family—the Key to Happiness," American Magazine, tells of the world's first scientific study of human kindness and the conquest of hate, and of the supreme importance of the family in this process.

"How to Develop Responsibility," Parents' Magazine, is a very important article for all parents. Probably every parent will uncomfortably recognize himself in some points of the discussion.

"How to Choose the Right Toys," Parents' Magazine, will help you in making your Christmas toy selections, and in avoiding giving toys that are either too young or too old.

"Your Personality Predicts Your Disease," McCall's, aims at helping you to recognize, predict, and avoid your own particular "poison."

Have you ever wondered why you have so little time? If so you'll enjoy "Where Does a Woman's Time Go?"

and "What Is Woman's Work?"—two points of view in Family Circle.

By the time you read this, you probably won't have time to send for any patterns or instructions, but if you'd still like to make some Christmas gifts, get a Woman's Day, and hunt up "59 Christmas Gifts to Make," for all directions are right there.

"Everybody's Doing It," American Home, expresses my own views so well that I feel anyone would enjoy it!

You may be startled by the title, "Don't Call Me Broad-Minded," Woman's Home Companion, but you will probably agree with most, at least, of what the author has to say.

An enchanting little piece that will bring back memories to most of us is "That Friend," Good Housekeeping.

"Sorry, We Can't Afford It," Good Housekeeping, is a straight-forward discussion concerning a situation that should bring us no embarrassment.

"Let's Face It and Get On," Ladies' Home Journal, is an article requiring serious thought, and discusses the why and how of the mistakes the United States has made in Asia.

To "leave a good taste in your mouth," finish off your reading with the charming essay, "Why I Like Women," Ladies' Home Journal.

tioned as one of the founders of the branch. His Bible was worn and fell open in several sections, showing his favorite biblical passages. Also contributed to the collection was a copy of a revelation given in 1898 to a district conference held at the Mission Church, and the original record of the subscribers to the building fund for the first building.

This celebration was especially commemorating the golden anniversary of the rustic, white frame church which is now the worship home of the Mission congregation. Constructed on the same plot of ground as the original church, it seats about 250 and is beautifully decorated on the interior with wine colored curtains and rugs, with blending walls and woodwork. The church still has the steeplelike front with the bell which many older members remember calling them to Sunday school. But included in the celebration was a remembrance of the original church built in 1862-63, just a year after the organization of the branch and two years after Joseph Smith III became successor to the martyr.

Such a week of services as Mission Branch has completed has increased the realization of its members of their heritage, and their responsibility to pick up such an illustrious history where it now stands and carry it forward to new and greater heights so that fifty years from now as its members celebrate the centennial anniversary they will have a still greater heritage to carry forward in the marathon of time.

Recalling, however, that my happiest days in church work were spent in the little congregation at Marshall and at Fourth Kansas City, where my services were most needed, I told these folks, "I'd like for you to go up to the little mission at Ninety-seventh and Main. They need you there."

Church schools are generally better organized today than they used to be; materials are better, and new converts reassure me that it is the devoted spirit of the people and the teachers that has won them just as it nurtured me and has won thou-

Without the influence of the church school, the training of the home will be incomplete and may be largely lost through failure to provide an avenue for continual growth through an enlarged service which only the program of the church can provide.

The Little Martyr

The words on that cold stone were warm in comparison with the bleak tragedy of Nauvoo; and in my heart there welled a sympathy for those who at the death of the shepherds wandered from the verdant pastures and became lost to the fold. Tragically stalked tragedy, and one is at a loss to know which was the more cruel—the hand of persecution from without or the kiss of Judas from within?

Who can measure the depth of sorrow and disappointment these people plumbed as they fled with their baby from the scenes of destruction and apostasy at Nauvoo, only to lay his emaciated body in that distant cemetery at Dover, New Hampshire.

Has "The Little Martyr," and others like him, died in vain? They shall have if we fail Christ in building Zion.

Kaw River Valley District

Organization of the Kaw River Valley area into a district will take place on November 26 at the church in Lawrence, Kansas, under the direction of Apostle D. T. Williams and Seventy James C. Daugherty. The following schedule has been planned: prayer service, 8:30 a.m., general class by 9:45, sermon by Apostle D. T. Williams, 11:00; basket lunch at noon; organization of district, 2:00 p.m. Groups included in this district are Manhattan, Emporia, Ottawa, Topeka, Bonner Springs, Lawrence, Leavenworth, and Osawatomie.

Notice to Servicemen at Sheppard Air Base

Elder R. W. Bunch, now of 4313 Faith Road, Wichita Falls, Texas (Post Office Box 1510), will make provisions for men stationed at Sheppard Air Base in Wichita Falls to attend church. Those knowing of members in the Air Corps who may not see this notice are requested to send names and addresses of servicemen to Elder Bunch.

Heralds Wanted

Mrs. Lalue Curtis, Wellington, Utah, will appreciate receiving copies of the October 30 issue of the Herald containing Russell Ralston's article, "Baptism for the Dead." She wants to use them in missionary work.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Ivor Surrudge, Bevier, Missouri, asks to be remembered in prayer when she enters the hospital on November 20 for treatment for cancer.

Josephine Green, 827 Fourteenth Street, Rock Island, Illinois, requests continued prayers and correspondence from the Saints. She is grateful to those who have remembered her in the past.

Zolan M. Bramhall, who has been transferred from the hospital in Wadsworth, Kansas, to the O'Reilly Veterans' Hospital in Springfield, Missouri, asks to be remembered in prayer. He will appreciate being visited by members who live in Springfield. Although he had an operation quite recently, it may be necessary for him to undergo another soon.

Mrs. W. A. Simmons, Route A, Spearman, Texas, requests prayers for herself. She is seventy-three years old.

ENGAGEMENTS

Carlson-Fife

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Fife of Ogden, Utah, announce the engagement of their daughter, Elizabeth Ann, to James H. Carlson, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Carlson of Hagerman, Idaho. Both are graduates of Graceland College. The wedding will take place in the near future.

Holman-Ralston

Mrs. Irene S. Ralston of Willapa, Washington, announces the engagement of her daughter, Ruth, to Robert R. Holman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Myron L. Holman of Independence, Missouri. Both are graduates of Graceland College. Miss Ralston, a graduate of the University of Washington, is a member of the Graceland College faculty. Mr. Holman is attending the University of Kansas. The wedding will take place in June.

WEDDINGS

Jenkins-Diaper

Donna Eve Diaper, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil O. Diaper, was married to Robert Leslie Jenkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Jenkins of Bon Accord, Alberta, on October 14. Elder David K. Larmour performed the ceremony. They are residing in Bon Accord.

Trotter-Chambers

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd L. Bowles of Portland, Oregon, announce the marriage of their daughter, Marilyn Jessie Chambers, to Pleasant Ray Trotter, son of Mr. and Mrs. Orman Salisbury of St. Joseph, Missouri. The wedding took place November 4 at the Reorganized Church in St. Joseph, the groom's father officiating. Both are graduates of Graceland College.

Seviand-Wager

Dollie Mae Wager, daughter of Elder and Mrs. W. N. Wager, and Claus Seviand, both of Granville, North Dakota, were married at the home of Priest Orrin R. Wilcox in Fairview, Montana, Priest Wilcox officiating. (Date of wedding not given.)

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Elvin Wayne Burgess of Sweet Springs, Missouri, announce the birth of a daughter, Shirley Jeanne, born November 7.

DEATHS

GIST.—Francis R., died September 6, 1950, in Toledo, Ohio, at the age of seventy-five. For many years he lived in St. Joseph, Missouri, where he worked for Swift and Company and later was in the poultry business. Four years ago he and his wife moved to Toledo, where they made their home with their son, Russell. He was a member of the Reorganized Church and held the office of elder. He is survived by his wife, Lena M., and his son Russell. Elder Lloyd Lynn conducted the funeral service. Burial was in Toledo.

WARREN.—Charles S., was born February 16, 1886, in Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, and died at the Independence Sanitarium on September 26, 1950. In 1908 he was married to Lilla M. Bullard who preceded him in death in 1948. He had been actively engaged in church work since his youth.

Surviving are four sons: Charles of Auburn, California; Harland, William, and Myron of Independence; a daughter, Mrs. D. A. Gage, of Independence; and a sister, Mrs. Madge P. MacKay of Los Angeles, California.

If You . . . and You . . . and You . . . haven't seen a copy of the Book, "The Graceland Idea," you have missed something. Here is an interpretation of beauty, and of a spirit of service, and of that eternally wonderful thing, Youth, that ought to fill your heart with music. As you look at the scenes in these pages you think, "These are our own . . . these are our own young people, and this is the place we send them to prepare for life, and for service. . . . Thank God!"

It is particularly meant for our young people who are now trying to decide what college to attend—for the parents who will be sending them—and for the younger brothers and sisters who will be deciding later. . . . If you haven't a copy, write to R. Edwin Browne, Director of Public Relations, Graceland College, Lamoni Iowa. To You, and You, and You, of course, it's free!

 NORMA ANNE KIRKENDALL HONORED

One of our well-known church women, Norma Anne Kirkendall of Columbus, Ohio, was recently elected international president of the Mail Bag Club, Inc. Some years ago she began listening to the radio programs of this service organization, which devotes its efforts to promoting friendship and providing opportunities for the physically handicapped to support themselves. At present there are forty chapters of the organization in eleven different countries. Many people who have no handicap participate in the organization work, as Sister Kirkendall does, purely in a spirit of service. Full of energy and good will, she has no handicap that anybody has ever been able to discover. She has a tremendous interest in people, in church work, and in all efforts for human good. She has spent many summers in Mexico, furthering her interest in the language and culture of the people.

 POETIC NAMES

A letter has just arrived from Shirley Bishop of Ashtabula, Ohio, we almost attended the Conference of High Priests at Kirtland, but lacked an ordination or two to qualify.

Have you ever heard of borrowing a child? "We decided to go to Kirtland to try to persuade the Ashenhursts to let us borrow their daughter (she is twelve, and we're very fond of her) for the week end." It's a lovely idea for those who don't have children—to borrow one occasionally! Would anybody like to lend us a really nice child? We would love it and take good care of it.

And, to make our digressions really complete, have you ever heard a prettier, more musical sounding name than Ashtabula? It ranks almost with Winona, a Minnesota town. Have you any specially pretty town names you like? Down here on the Missouri border we have "Blue Eye."

 NEW WORD

This one came in our correspondence: "sadsified."

Now there is a word Uncle Joe can use when he has the mulligrubs and is feeling very sorry for himself.

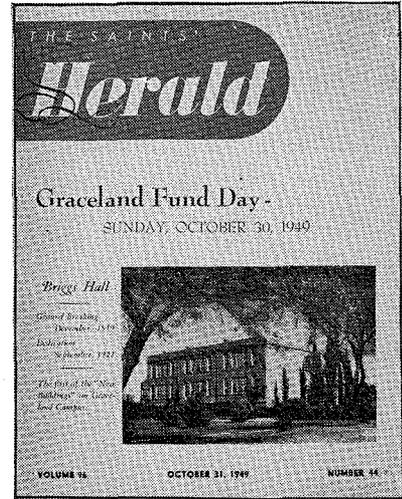

Maybe you would like to borrow it too, sometime. Think it'll help?

Debatable Topics

MANY OF THE ARTICLES that appear in the Herald are purely inspirational or explanatory, a statement of facts and recognized principles. The editors agree with them. The readers will agree with them. They involve no difference of opinion. They are simply published for the good they include, with no comment or criticism.

But sometimes an article is received dealing with a subject that has caused differences of opinion. It represents one side, but not the other—or others. The editors can see good in it, but they can also see that other people may have some different ideas. The article is thought-provoking. It should encourage other readers to write and express their views. So the editors present it in a forum department, with the words, "A Department for Debatable Topics," and the statement that "The views expressed in this article do not commit the Herald or its editors, but stand on their own merits." If it is to be published at all, it must be presented in this way.

We believe there are benefits in certain kinds of discussion. We believe that the truth is served when good people talk things over, either in groups or in print. When they are honestly presented together, we believe that truth will always prove stronger than error. At the same time we must avoid argument that serves no good purpose or develops ill will.

May readers accept and consider articles of this kind in a spirit of tolerance and good will. We appreciate the friendliness and courtesy always observed by the great majority of our people.

Introducing...

GRACE RIGGS SHERMAN, Cameron, Missouri (page 19), was born near Mason City, Iowa, and baptized at Greene, Iowa, where she was graduated from high school and later took a normal course. For a time she studied at Iowa State Teachers' College. She taught public school for three years. In 1917 she married Ernest O. Sherman. They have two sons: Lyle E. and Glenn E. She is a member of the Women's Extension Club, and her special interests include psychology, biographies, and history. She is active in the women's department and church school of Cameron Branch.

PAUL M. HANSON, Thurman, Iowa (page 5), was born near Council Bluffs, Iowa, January 8, 1878, and was baptized at Logan, Iowa, in 1893. He was ordained a priest in 1896, an elder in 1902, and later that same year a seventy. In 1913 he became an apostle and now serves as president of the quorum. At the General Conference of 1900, he was assigned to full-time ministry in the church.

Brother Hanson has traveled much in the interest of the church. He took his first mission abroad in 1902 when he went to New Zealand with Elder D. E. Tucker. He has visited Egypt and Palestine twice and also ministered in Australia and Europe. He has made several trips to the Latin American countries in his study of archaeology and as a result has given the church two scholarly books: Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans, and In the Land of the Feathered Serpent. He has accumulated a library of over three hundred volumes on archaeological subjects. In 1911 he married Sadie Leeka. Much credit is due Sister Hanson for her many years of supporting encouragement and sacrifice when it meant being alone while her companion was serving the church.

EVAN FRY (page 18) was introduced October 24, 1949.

News & Notes

S. A. BURGESS DIES

After some weeks of poor health, Elder Samuel A. Burgess died at the home Saturday night, November 25. He was once president of Graceland, editor of the "Herald," and church historian. In recent years he has served as research assistant to the Presidency.

PRESIDENT EDWARDS

Communication from Brother Edwards, dated November 14, advises that they would be leaving Rotterdam on the 15th and would meet Brother Jensen in Birmingham the following day. This will give Brother Edwards a chance to meet with his own people in Birmingham where he was born.

The week end will be spent in Manchester, the following week in northern branches with the next week end being spent in Nuneaton, which is the home of the Coggans.

The present plans for Brother Edwards will return him to the United States on Wednesday, December 6, and to Independence a day or so later.

PRIESTHOOD

Dr. Floyd M. McDowell, Supervisor of Priesthood Education, has returned to Independence after spending a month in Ontario. While there he conducted priesthood institutes in four districts: Chatham, London, Toronto, and Owen Sound. Each was a three-day institute consisting of fellowship, social, worship, lectures, and panel discussions. Brother McDowell contacted approximately two hundred and sixty members of the priesthood in Ontario.

He reports that he "met with uniformly encouraging response from pastors and members of the Ontario priesthood."

ANNIVERSARY

Brother and Sister C. Ed. Miller celebrated their fifty-fourth wedding anniversary on November 19 at their home in Independence. Their daughter, Mrs. F. E. Wendleburg, gave a buffet supper at the home. The guests were all former friends from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Brother Miller, who is 83 years old, recently returned from a tour of museums in New York, Washington, D. C., Kirtland, and Philadelphia where he completed photographic research.

ATTENDS INSTITUTE

Bishop L. W. Kohlman has returned to the Auditorium after attending the Eastern Illinois District institute and conference. While there he preached a Sunday morning sermon and conducted classes. The institute was in charge of Apostle Donald O. Chesworth and District President Sylvester Coleman.

GRACELAND COLLEGE VISIT

Dr. Floyd M. McDowell spent the week of November 11-16 at Graceland College interviewing the seventy members of the priesthood who are enrolled there. He met each man personally in an interview from fifteen to thirty minutes in length.

Brother McDowell reports that he is enthusiastic over the opportunities provided at Graceland for the training of priesthood members both in classwork and in practical projects.

GOING FORWARD

Henry Anderson, a church artist who lives in Lamoni, Iowa, has had another of his cartoons published in the "Successful Farming" magazine.

Overcoming Racial Prejudice

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16: 15.

Dr. Ashley Montagu, chairman of the Department of Anthropology at Rutgers University, is the author of an article, "Antidote to Barbarism," in a recent issue of the Saturday Review of Literature, which deals with the troubled problem of race relations.

One has only to remember how five million Jews were exterminated in Europe during the last war just because they were Jews. In our own country millions of African Negroes were captured and brought here to be sold, possessed, and treated like animals or commodities. Some people thought they had a "right" to treat other people that way.

One terrible idea is still doing infinite harm in the world: the idea that some races are inferior to others and have fewer rights; that some one race is superior. In 1949 Dr. Montagu and a number of scientists representing other countries were asked to draft a statement for UNESCO on this question.

Here are some quotations from that statement:

"There is no proof that the groups of mankind differ in their innate mental characteristics, whether in respect of intelligence or temperament . . . the range of mental capacities in all ethnic groups is much the same."

"Genetic differences are not of importance in determining the social and cultural differences between different groups."

"Biological studies lend support to the ethic of universal brotherhood; for man is born with drives toward co-operation, and unless these drives are satisfied man and nations alike fall ill. Man is born a social being who can reach his fullest development only through interaction with his fellows. The denial at any point of this social bond between man and man brings with it disintegration."

Those are excellent statements. But they only say in different language what Paul told to a crowd of curious people at Athens: "God . . . hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth."

* * * * *

When Jesus gave his disciples the Great Commission, he said, according to Mark, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." He made no mention of a segregation of the races according to color, nor did he imply that there was any one race more precious to God than any other. There was no "Jim Crow" clause in the Great Commission. Nor is there anywhere else in the gospel.

Remember how "the angel of the Lord" told Philip to go down south along the route from Jerusalem to Gaza, where he found the Ethiopian eunuch who asked for baptism.

* * * * *

We were talking with a very talented and well-educated colored girl on a university campus, where people of many races are welcomed and given equal treatment. A fine atmosphere prevails there.

She was speaking of the problems of her people. "Colored people must find most of their recreations in their homes and cars. They never know when they will be humiliated by being denied admission to a lecture, a concert, a dining place, or a theater. I have been hurt so many times that I hesitate to try any more."

Let us ask ourselves, How would we feel if this were happening to us? Is it right? Is it necessary? Is it fair?

In all respects, this splendid young woman appears as fine as anybody—intellectually, morally, spiritually. Her color is made a handicap by the misunderstanding and cruelty of another race—our race.

* * * * *

Social conditions in various parts of our country are different. In some regions, an attempt to disregard the rule of segregation could result in mob action and destruction of property. It would not be possible to go against prevailing feeling in those places. In other parts of the country, segregation can be abandoned. It seems to be breaking down steadily. Some day it will disappear, but it will come more slowly in some parts than in others.

There is nothing to prevent us from being kind and considerate. We can contribute a little bit here and there, whenever we have an opportunity, to allay prejudice, to promote good will and understanding. We can help to see that everybody gets a fair chance.

There are some kinds of white people you wouldn't allow to enter your home. There are some splendid colored people you would be glad to have come. So, it isn't a matter of color at all. The important things are character, personality, intelligence, and culture. People should be judged as individuals, not by externals. Each should stand on his own merits. It is unfair to let something a person can't help count against him. It is unwise to let something so insignificant as color prejudice us.

We are all human beings. We have the same hungers, the same aspirations and hopes. There is no color in virtue, intelligence, humor, happiness, charm, or righteousness. There is no color in a soul. Someone has said, "God is color-blind." Christians should be color-blind too.

E d i t o r i a l

BY THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

This item comes to us in a letter from Apostle Percy Farrow:

I have just completed a four-weeks' trip through the eastern part of my field. This ministerial tour began with a priesthood and workers' conference at Louisville, Kentucky, at which John R. Darling and Joseph Yager assisted.

Together again the next week end (October 20-22), we conducted a similar institute in Memphis for the Kentucky-Tennessee and Arkansas-Louisiana Districts.

Later we spent some time in Indianapolis, helping the Saints work out their building program. It was decided that the present building should be remodeled for continued use.

From there we went to Mobile where, assisted by W. J. Breshears and Jack Pray, we conducted another priesthood and workers' conference. I followed this with a week's series of meetings at which attendance averaged one hundred seventy-three.

Following the Mobile series, Brother Pray and I went to New Orleans, where we held services in the home of Sister Greenwood. Her husband is a Catholic, but proved most friendly and hospitable, and readily concurred in the suggestion that their home be made available for Sunday services.

This gives a fairly clear picture of the activities of the Saints in the Southern Mission, and I think it is indicative of activity throughout the church.

The following is an excerpt from the letter of Luther S. Troyer of Northern Indiana District:

On October 29 I organized the Branch Mission (Buchanan, Michigan, Branch) of Oak Grove, Michigan. Elder Leo D. McCarty was made pastor.

During the two weeks from October 30 to November 12, I held a series of meetings at Hibbard, Indiana, Branch. We reached twenty nonmembers in our cottage and church services in this series. The work at Hibbard is growing much in stability and numbers under the consecrated leadership of Elder John Smelser, nephew of Apostle Davy.

We note from Brother Troyer's report that baptisms in that district have reached a total of fifty-eight which is 6.39 per cent of the total membership. This is somewhat ahead of the General Church average.

Catholics "Modernize" Psalms

By courtesy of The Washington Post we are permitted to publish Mr. Tom Schlosinger's article in that paper on August 11 last, entitled "Catholics Publish New Psalms Version" which we believe will be of interest to our readers.

A new Roman Catholic version of The Book of Psalms—written in twentieth century language—was published yesterday.

Its publication marks the second step of a project started in 1943 by American Catholic bishops to produce an English translation of the Old Testament that

PSALM 22 (23)

The Lord, Shepherd and Host

1 A psalm of David

I

The LORD is my shepherd; I shall not want.

2 In verdant pastures he gives me repose;

Beside restful waters he leads me;

3 he refreshes my soul.

He guides me in right paths for his name's sake.

4 Even though I walk in the dark valley I fear no evil; for you are at my side

With your rod and your staff that give me courage.

II

5 You spread the table before me in the sight of my foes.

THE REVISED PSALM 22

might be more readable than the Douay, or Catholic version.

The "thee's" and "thou's" are now "you"; "hath" is "has"; and "hast" is "have." In the Douay version, the psalms were printed in columns of solid type, broken only by verse numbers. The new text prints them in poetic format, reproducing the balanced phrasing of the original Hebrew text both in literary structure and in arrangement of lines.

Different spacing, the elimination of Latin headings, the use of centered titles of the psalms and summarizing headings are innovations, along with fresh interpretations.

For instance, the Good Shepherd Psalm, 22, is so drastically revised that it now appears closer to the Protestant than the Douay Version.

Formerly it began:

"The Lord ruleth me: and I shall want nothing.

2. He hath set me in a place of pasture. He hath brought me up, on the water of refreshment.

3. He hath converted my soul"

Now it goes:

"The Lord is my Shepherd: I shall not want.

In verdant pastures He gives me repose; Beside restful waters He leads me; He refreshes my soul"

The Messianic Psalm, 21, stressed in the church's devotions on Good Friday, and the first verse of which was quoted by Christ from the Cross, is changed in many respects. The old-style lament in verse 17, that "They have dug my hands and feet; They have numbered all my bones"

Now becomes:

"They have pierced my hands and feet; I can count all my bones."

Church sources said it is not Catholic practice to make any vernacular edition of the Bible official in the sense that its use only is compulsory for public or private readings. It is expected, however, that the new psalms will gradually supplant the Douay version.

Thirty translators from the Catholic Biblical Association are currently engaged in the translation of the Old Testament. The psalms were translated from Hebrew material dating back to 200 B. C. A version of the Book of Genesis was the first result of the project. It appeared in 1948. The last of the 46 books of the Old Testament is expected to be published in 1955.

This will be the first time Catholics have translated the whole of the Old Testament from the original scriptural language into English. The Douay version is from the Latin Vulgate, a translation of the fourth century. The Douay version was published at Douai, France, in 1609-10.

Seven American bishops who form the episcopal committee of the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine in the Catholic Church set out in 1943 to obtain a new translation of the Old Testament. In that year Pope Pius XII issued an encyclical. It told Catholic scholars

Dominus regit me.

God's spiritual benefits to faithful souls.

¹A psalm of David.

The Lord ruleth me; and I shall want nothing. ²He hath set me in a place of pasture.

He hath brought me up, on the water of refreshment: ³he hath converted my soul.

The Feathered Serpent in Mexico and Central America

By PAUL M. HANSON

A department for replies to debatable topics printed in the "Herald." The views expressed here do not necessarily reflect church policy nor commit the "Herald" or its editors. Our limited space will not permit us to print many articles on the same subject.—Editors.

THE RECITAL in the Book of Mormon of the visit and ministry of Jesus Christ among his people in America soon after he rose from the dead is as startling and wonderful, or more so, than anything that has developed in the field of science since the publication of the Book of Mormon in 1830.

In the realm of religion, as in the field of science, the investigator who diligently engages in research and follows clues is richly rewarded.

In the New Testament there are at least eleven recorded personal appearances of Christ after his resurrection to his disciples in widely separated areas of Palestine. On one occasion he appeared to "five hundred brethren at once."¹ In these appearances, which occurred during a period of forty days, the Son of God engaged in conversation, expounded the Scriptures, gave commands, and spoke of "things pertaining to the kingdom of God."²

Christ indicated to his disciples that his ministry was to extend beyond Palestine:

And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.³

The ones to receive such ministry were of Israel, for Jesus was "not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel."⁴

To what country can we turn for Christ's ministry reaching beyond Palestine? In the thirty-third chapter of Deuteronomy is this record of the blessing by Moses of the tribes of Israel:

And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land [Italic mine, P.M.H.]

for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath.

And for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon.

And for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills,

And for the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren.

THE BOOK OF MORMON gives a history of three colonies divinely led from Asia to America: the first from the region and time of the building of the tower of Babel, the others from Palestine about 600 B.C. Represented in the second colony was the tribe of Manasseh, a son of Joseph to whom uniquely among the tribes was to be given a "land."

It is as reasonable to believe that the resurrected Christ visited a remnant of Israel in America, as that after he rose from the dead he appeared and ministered to his disciples, who were Israelites, in Palestine, as stated in the New Testament.

Among the deities worshiped by the Indians in Mexico, at the time of the arrival of the first Spaniards, was Quetzalcoatl. According to the traditions of the Indians, this deity was a white and bearded man who in person visited and ministered to their ancestors and before mysteriously disappearing promised to return.

The name, Quetzalcoatl, is composed of two words, "Quetzal" and "coatl." The quetzal is a beautiful bird, and so highly esteemed were its plumes that the word was extended to describe what was peculiarly precious. Coatl, in the Nahuatl language, means serpent. Quetzalcoatl is usually translated Feathered Snake, or Plumed Serpent. It can readily be seen in such a literal translation that without a knowledge of the quetzal and the position of this deity in the minds and hearts of the people, much of the rich symbolism in the name is obscured.

Quetzalcoatl is portrayed in the Codex Vaticanus B, sheet 73, seated back to back with Mictlantecutli, the Mexican devil, a picture of which appears in my work, Jesus Christ Among the Ancient Americans, Plate IV. Dr. Eduard Seler says, "In the position seated leaning back to back, expression is given to a difference of direction between these two persons, or to the antagonism that exists between them. The difference of direction between these two persons means the above and below, the antagonism life and death."⁵

The interpreter of Codex Vaticanus A says, "Mictlantecutli signifies the great lord of the dead below in hell He is represented with his hands open and stretched towards the sun, to seize on any soul which might escape from him."⁶

May not the picture from Codex Vaticanus B help to explain some of the meaning in the name, Quetzalcoatl, and symbolism of the plumed serpent emblem of Quetzalcoatl found richly adorning temples in Mexico and Central America? In this picture Quetzalcoatl is represented in direct conflict, back to back, with Mictlantecutli. May it not be that in the name of Quetzal-coatl, the beloved white and bearded deity and Mictlantecutli are symbolically associated—the precious and beautiful plumes of the quetzal symbolizing the peoples' love, adoration, and appraisal of the deity, and coatl (serpent), the devil, Mictlantecutli? The death-god is shown on sheet 42 of Codex Vaticanus B, destroyed by Quetzalcoatl, which means the victory over the powers of death.

WHAT IS THE ORIGIN of the feathered serpent symbol among pre-Columbian American Indians? It is clear it did not have its origin in a period of Nephite apostasy in the third century, A.D., for a sculptured feathered serpent in stucco, about sixty feet long, is among the earliest excavated ruins of Monte Alban, Mexico, reaching back to a period preceding the Christian Era, a picture of which appears on page 42 of In the Land of the Feathered Serpent.

It appears to me that the origin of the serpent as a religious symbol in ancient America is to be found in the lifting up of the brazen serpent by Moses in the wilderness among the Israelites. God commanded Moses:

Make thee a fiery serpent and set it upon a pole: and it shall come to pass, that everyone that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live. And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived.⁷

Jesus said of this divinely-commanded action:

As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.⁸

Moses had a deep and clear understanding of Christ and his mission, and doubtlessly understood in what respect the lifting up of the serpent on the pole prefigured something relating to the Savior. It is written that he esteemed the reproach of Christ "greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward."⁹

THE SECOND COLONY that came from Palestine to America, brought with it the Scriptures possessed by the Jews in Palestine. In these the peoples in America would learn of Moses lifting up the serpent among the Israelites. In the Book of Mormon, we read that Alma, a noted prophet of God, declared:

But behold, this is not all; these are not the only ones who have spoken concerning the Son of God. Behold, he was spoken of by Moses; yea, and behold a type was raised in the wilderness, that whosoever would look upon it might live. And many did look and live.

But few understood the meaning of those things, and this because of the hardness of their hearts. But there were many who were so hardened that they would not look; therefore they perished.¹⁰

Nephi, another distinguished American prophet, explaining the "type" employed by Moses, taught:

Did not he [Moses] bear record, that the Son of God should come? And as he lifted up the brazen serpent in the wilderness, even so shall he be lifted up who should come. And as many as should look upon that serpent should live. Even as many as should look upon the Son of God, with faith, having a contrite spirit, might live, even unto that life which is eternal.¹¹

These texts make clear that the serpent in some sense was associated symbolically with Christ.

At the time the serpent was lifted up on a pole among the Israelites, some objected and would not look upon it, though the one who lifted it up was a prophet of God of unusual renown. Possibly they thought and declared it was an ugly and revolting symbol. Perhaps if just a dove, or some flowers, had been placed on the pole, there would have been no objection to looking. They did not see in the combination of the serpent on a pole anything in the nature of a "type" of what was to come—the pole symbolizing a type of the cross on which the Savior of the world would be crucified, the serpent symbolizing the treatment he would suffer, and evil and Satan vanquished.

Hezekiah's destruction of the brazen serpent lifted up in the wilderness, as related in II Kings 18: 4, does not in any sense mean Moses made a mistake. It was destroyed, as the record shows, because the people made the relic an object of idolatry. Confusion results unless a distinction is made between the perversion of the symbol and the symbol itself. The origin of the serpent symbol among pre-Columbian American Indians is not traceable to the perversion of the symbol in the days of Hezekiah. As has been shown from God's command, the act of Moses, reference to it by Christ, and its teaching in America by Alma and Nephi, the serpent symbol is of divine origin—therefore we are on safe ground in emphasizing such fact, and not portraying it as a vile and loathsome symbol.

If it be affirmed that the analogy of the serpent erected on the pole by Moses was in the lifting up, and not in the serpent, one may ask, "What composed the type raised in the wilderness?" A serpent of brass set upon a pole. It is not written that what healed the people was looking at the "lifting up," but in beholding the brass serpent on the pole.

THE EMBLEM OF THE FEATHERED SERPENT is found not only amid the ancient ruins in Mexico and Central America, but also in the books, or codices, sculpture, and buildings of the Aztecs at the time of the Spanish conquest.

Evidence that rich, beautiful, and profound symbolism is contained in the feathered serpent—symbol of Quetzalcoatl—is found in what was known by the Indians of this deity at the time of the Spanish conquest.

No statement should be made without clear, attendant proof that the serpent symbol in use in ancient America, and down to the time of the conquest was originated by Satan to besmirch the fair name of our Lord. Jesus, in referring as he did to the serpent as a part of the type lifted up by Moses (John 3: 14), indicated clearly it was not Satan who originated the emblem and disclosed that it possessed meaningful religious symbolism. Since the serpent symbol is of divine origin among the Israelites in the Eastern Hemisphere and relates to Christ, it should not be stated without proof that the origin of the feathered serpent in the Western Hemisphere, relating directly to Quetzalcoatl, was of Satanic origin. The feathered serpent in itself is no more a revolting symbol of idolatry than was the serpent lifted up in the wilderness of Sinai. It should not be asserted it was chief among the ancient American idols, as it was not an idol. It is a well known fact that the people worshiped Quetzalcoatl, not his symbol. Doubtless in the centuries following the destruction of the Nephite civilization in A.D. 385 and continuing down to the Spanish Conquest, the feathered-serpent symbol assumed degenerate forms.

An apostasy of far-reaching proportions followed not only the setting up of the church by Christ and his ministry in Palestine, but also the establishment of his church in America. As fragments of Christianity continued through the centuries until and after the Reformation in the Old World, so vestiges of Christianity most certainly survived the apostasy in America. Here are features that prove there was considerable spiritual enlightenment in Mexico even as late as the conquest: the entrenchment of Quetzalcoatl the deity in the hearts and faith of many people; the knowledge that he was white and bearded and had appeared to and ministered to their ancestors, had come from the East and was born of a virgin, had priests who were called Quetzalcohua, which appellation signified "priests of the order of Quetzalcoatl," forbade the offering of bloody sacrifices, was believed to be identified with the Creator, and before his departure from the people, foretold that he would return and resume his sway.

At the time of the conquest he was expected to return.

In the light of the foregoing precise information concerning Quetzalcoatl, it is obvious that his symbol—the feathered serpent was not a “revolting symbol of idolatry,” but embodied rich symbolic meaning.

It is not difficult to understand why Lamanites and Nephites after the destruction of the Nephite civilization (A.D. 385) employed the feathered serpent symbol relating to the white, bearded deity who had visited their ancestors. In addition to the wondrous appearing of Christ when a “great multitude” of people saw him descending out of heaven, and then were personally ministered to by him, we further learn:

And it came to pass that the multitude went forth, and thrust their hands into his side, and did feel the prints of the nails in his hands and in his feet; and this they did do, going forth one by one, until they had all gone forth, and did see with their eyes, and did feel with their hands, and did know of a surety, and did bear record, that it was he, of whom it was written by the prophets should come. And when they had all gone forth, and had witnessed for themselves, they did cry out with one accord, saying, Hosanna! Blessed be the name of the Most High God! And they did fall down at the feet of Jesus, and did worship him.¹²

FOR ABOUT THE FIRST TWO HUNDRED YEARS following the appearance and ministry of Christ among his people in America, there were no Nephites, Lamanites, or “ites” of any kind; all were converted to Christ. Such a personal visit of Christ, and period of unprecedented unity, high spiritual attainment, prosperity, and happiness following his appearance would not be entirely lost in the history of the people. Some knowledge of the foregoing marvelous experiences would be retained in writing and traditions. The people in moving to various regions would carry with them some knowledge of Christ and of the period when their ancestors were wondrously blessed in the early centuries of the Christian Era. This helps to explain the statement of J. Eric Thompson: “His worship as the feathered serpent was very widespread over Mexico and the Maya country.”¹³

It was as appropriate for the serpent symbol to be employed with religious meaning by professing Israelite Christians in America, as it was for Moses to employ the symbol in relation to Christ among Israelites in the Old World.

It was not a mark of apostasy, but evidence of divine light on the part of the Israelites in the Eastern Hemisphere, in accepting and looking toward the serpent lifted up on the pole, as a “type” of Christ and his work; and it should not be thought that it was a mark of apostasy in worship for Israelites in the Western Hemisphere to employ the emblem of a serpent adorned with precious and beautiful quetzal plumes as a symbol of Quetzalcoatl and his work. The symbol looms up not as a product of apostasy, but as possessing definite religious meaning.

WHAT IS THE EXPLANATION of the quetzal feathers attached to the serpent? Quetzalcoatl was greatly beloved by his worshippers. Daniel G. Brinton, an authority of Sahagun, says that when the Aztecs “first beheld the fair complexioned Spaniards, they rushed into the water to embrace the prows of their vessels, and dispatched messengers throughout the land to proclaim the return of Quetzalcoatl.”¹⁴ They thought their beloved god had returned.

Since the people in America had been publicly taught by accredited servants of God that the lifting up of the serpent on the pole by Moses was a “type” having relation to the Son of God, it appears probable to me that an understanding of some of the meaning of this “type” led the people in Mexico and Central America to employ the emblem of the serpent, which they embellished with quetzal plumes.

It is not remarkable that the Quetzalcoatl symbol is found somewhat in profusion in southern Mexico and Central America, the lands in which the evidence seems to indicate most of the events took place recorded in the Book of Mormon.

There is no known proof of serpent worship in ancient Mexico and Central America. George Byron Gordon, former Director of the University Museum of the University of Pennsylvania and an authority on Middle American archæology, in an article titled “The Serpent Motive in the Ancient Art of Central America and Mexico,” says:

There does not exist the testimony of a single eyewitness whose statements can be regarded as authoritative, to the effect that serpent worship was known in Mexico at the time of the Conquest. . . . I have not found in any of the old authors a single distinct reference to serpent worship as a part of the native religion. We have no historical evidence of a reliable nature that serpent worship in any form was practiced in Central America or Mexico at the time of the Conquest or at any time prior or subsequent to that event.¹⁵

Lord Kingsborough says that although the Mexicans carried the figure of a serpent in their religious processions “and wore it on their persons as a sacerdotal ornament, . . . they did not adore it except as the type of Quetzalcoatl.”¹⁶

Hubert H. Bancroft says, “It does not appear . . . that the serpent was actually worshiped either in Yucatan or Mexico.”¹⁷

Magoffin, author of Magic Spades, the Romance of Archaeology, is reported to have said the serpent was worshiped in Mexico. However, he was a popularizer, mainly interested—as his book shows—in the Old World, and with very superficial knowledge of America.

Similarly, the knowledge of the author of “Serpent Worship” in the Encyclopedia Americana, also evidently was very superficial. Gordon’s authority is better than either of these, and also more in agreement with modern scientific opinion.

It is known that in Mexico and Central America the worship was of the Fair God, Quetzalcoatl, of which the plumed serpent was a symbol.

Nowhere in the Book of Mormon is it even remotely hinted that serpent worship was practiced in America in any period of the people’s history.

Anyone who says serpent worship was practiced in Mexico and Central America at the time of or before the conquest should reinforce his statement with evidence from early authoritative writers who came in direct contact with the peoples of those countries at the time of or soon after the conquest. Without such evidence, the bare statements of individuals that serpent worship was practiced are worthless.

Motolinia (Toribio de Benavente), who went to Mexico very soon after the conquest in 1523, says of Quetzalcoatl:

This Quetzalcoatl is now held as a deity and called the god of the air; everywhere an infinite number of temples has been raised to him, and everywhere his statue or picture is found.¹⁸

There is no one in the traditional background of pre-Columbian American nations, other than Quetzalcoatl, whose person, life, and works provide corroborative support of the record in the Book of Mormon of the visit and ministry of Christ in America.

Ministry to New Members

I. The Search for the Lost Sheep

What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine and go after that which is lost, until he find it?—Luke 15:4.

By LEONARD LEA

AN IMPORTANT PROBLEM is giving concern to the church today. It has been with us for some time. But only recently have we become acutely aware of it. Now we want to do something about it.

What would you think if you should see this advertisement in the daily paper?

"Lost, strayed, or stolen—several new members who were baptized in recent months. When last seen they were going quietly out the door of the church, with nobody paying any attention to them. A rich reward awaits anyone who will give help in securing their return.

"A Shepherd, Pastor of Anychurch."

Such an advertisement might appear almost any day in any newspaper in the country, if churches confessed the truth. It could be your church or mine.

Members are being lost every day. Missionaries bring them in, and we let them get away. Isn't it true that all of us are responsible, to some extent?

For generations we have baptized large numbers of our children and young people. Then, for one reason and another, many of them grow up to go away and do not come back to the church. Why?

For years this has been a familiar pattern of too much of our evangelistic work. A missionary goes into a community where the gospel has never been heard. He holds a series of meetings. Then opposition arises, and there is a debate. Against heavy odds, he overcomes the opposition and wins a goodly number of converts. Then, feeling that his work calls him on to other fields, he leaves the "lambs" to be fed by other hands. And too often they starve and are lost. Something should be done about that. Something has been done in the effort to bring these new converts to a place where they can meet with a branch or group and so receive sustaining help in their growth as members.

Now we find that even where we have churches and congregations, numbers of people who have obeyed the gospel have been lost. Some are being lost now.

What good is it for Peter, the Big Fisherman, and his innumerable followers, to make great hauls with the gospel net, if you and I and many others let them slip back into the sea?

What profit is there in going into all the world to preach the gospel if the new converts do not find love and care when they come to church?

How does it build the kingdom of God to bring numbers of new people into the front door of the church if they are allowed to depart forgotten and unnoticed out of the back door where they will not be missed until it is too late?

We do not have too much trouble in winning new members, although it is a costly and slow process. Cost what it may, we do not consider the price too high. We are not haggling about costs in this matter of saving souls.

Our real trouble is not in winning the souls, but in keeping them. Too many get away.

Many church men have said, "If we could keep our natural increase, the church would grow very rapidly." If—But many new members get away.

Like this:

At one church, young missionaries went out and conducted meetings, resulting in a number of baptisms. These people were enrolled and joined church school classes, seemed pleased with the work and were happy in the newly found faith. The Spirit of God blessed them

And then an old church quarrel flared up again. There were bitter words. For a while the church was a battle ground. When the excitement died down, the survivors looked around and found that something was missing. The new members were gone! And some of the old ones, discouraged, went with them.

Some of the more thoughtful ones should reckon up the cost of that fight.

Or this:

A family moved into the county from a distant state. They were not located near a church, and they had no car. The parents were members, the children were not. So the missionary forces went to work, conducted cottage meetings, and baptized the children. Then everybody went home satisfied, and the family was forgotten. The children didn't get to church school, but nobody noticed. . . . The Baptists (whom God must love for their diligence) were sending a bus around to pick up children and take them to their

God Will Not Forsake Thee

By ADDIE SPAULDING STOWELL

IT WAS ONE OF THOSE EVENINGS in the early spring of 1870 when all nature was rejoicing in the glad awakening from its long winter nap. The sun was casting long shadows through the treetops as a weary traveler, footsore and hungry, knocked at the door of a small cottage nestled in a grove of hemlock and pine in Trempleau County, Wisconsin.

A middle-aged man opened the door and said, "How-do-you-do, Sir," then waited for a response from the stranger.

"Are you Mr. Charles Howery?" the traveler asked.

"Yes, sir, I am."

"I am Elder Carl W. Lang. I represent the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I was told you are a member of the church, so I have come to you."

"Come right in, Brother Lang. We are members of the Reorganized Church." After a hearty hand shake, Charles turned to his wife who had come up behind him, "This is my wife, Elizabeth, Brother Lang."

Elizabeth Howery extended her hand. "Yes. We have been in the church a long time, but you are the first elder we have seen around these parts."

Brother Lang stood, hat in hand, an expression of dejection on his face. He was the son of rugged German pioneers, and privations were not new to him, but the recent days of weariness and often hunger were beginning to tell on him.

"Hang your hat there on the hall tree," Charles said. "We were just getting ready to eat. Have you had supper?"

"Thanks, Brother Howery, I have not eaten since morning."

"Well, we haven't much to offer a stranger—especially one of our elders," Elizabeth said, "but I'll put on another plate."

THE BOYS, George and Bub, came in and were introduced to Elder Lang. Then they washed up and soon were seated around the table. Everyone was quiet and seemingly bashful in the presence of the stranger. To break the silence Charles spoke up. "How did you know about us, and how did you get here? I suppose you came into Osseo on that three o'clock train and then walked out."

Brother Lang smiled, "That would have been the logical thing to do. But I had no money for that means of transportation. I have walked the hundred and fifty miles from where I have been holding meetings. I have had to ask people along the way for food and lodging. Sometimes I have been turned down; sometimes I have been given a good meal. I had a fairly good breakfast this morning; but I was getting so tired and hungry, I stopped back here a few miles and asked the lady for something to eat. She said she didn't have anything in the house. When I asked, "Not even a crust of bread?" she answered, "No," and closed the door. "I knew I would find you somewhere in the vicinity of Osseo as I have your name and address on my list of members in this district."

"But whatever prompted you to make such an effort to come here?" Charles asked.

Elder Lang hesitated a moment before he spoke. "One night as I was praying the Lord gave me a commandment to come to Osseo. As my faith is in God, I wished to obey his command. I put a change of clothing in that little bag, and with less than a dollar in my pocket I started out on foot. I believed I would get here, because I know God is with his ministry. Why I have come is a mystery, but I believe God will lead the way to what I must do."

"Well, I don't think you will have much success preaching around here," Elizabeth spoke up. "Everyone is pretty bitter against the Mormons."

"That's right," Charles said, "but now that I think about it, there is a man named John Spaulding who lives about twelve miles from here. He and his wife came to see me the other day. He said he heard I was a Mormon and he knew his mother had been called a Mormon when he was a boy back in Maine. I told him what I could about the church in the short time they had to stay, and I gave them some tracts and Heralds. Mr. Spaulding said he had sent a letter to his sister back in Maine asking her to send him his mother's Bible because he knew she had it all marked, and he thought from the markings he could determine something about the belief. He and his wife had become religiously inclined and so were persuaded to join the Methodist Church. But he still had a feeling that his mother's church was the right one. They would probably be glad to see you."

"I shall make it a point to see them," Elder Lang said.

SUPPER WAS FINISHED and the boys went outside. Elizabeth began clearing the table. Charles invited Elder Lang into the sitting room and offered him an easy chair, taking one for himself near by.

"Would you please excuse me if I take off my shoes? My feet are sore," the elder said.

"Go right ahead. Let me get you some warm water to put them in." Charles went out and soon returned with a foot tub half full of water. He placed it in front of Brother

Lang and noticed there were blisters on his feet.

"Lizzie, Lizzie," Charles called. "Come here and see what we can do for this man's feet. They're all blisters. You said you had walked a hundred fifty miles. No wonder they're blistered."

"Yes, and I didn't see anyone to give me a lift."

Lizzie came carrying a cup of salt and poured it into the tub. "There's nothing better than a soaking in salt water."

After a couple of days' rest, and the nourishment of Elizabeth Howery's good cooking, Elder Lang thought he should go to see Mr. Spaulding.

"No! I'll not hear to you walking on those feet yet," Charles protested. "I would be glad to take you, but all I have is a yoke of oxen, and they are not much good on the road. Spaulding has a team of Indian ponies and a light wagon, why don't we send for him to come to get you?"

"But how can we send?" Brother Lang asked.

"There's a store and post office over here about a mile. You write a letter to him, and I'll have one of the boys take it over there. Let's see . . . this is Wednesday—they pick up the mail and take it into Osseo Tuesdays and Thursdays. If we can get a letter over there today, it will go to Osseo tomorrow. They don't live very far from Osseo. I imagine with that team of ponies they go into town quite often."

THE LETTER WAS WRITTEN and mailed. Saturday while sitting in the doorway, Elder Lang saw the little Indian ponies being driven into the yard. John Spaulding and his wife Martha greeted Elder Lang cordially. John towered so far above him, he almost lifted Brother Lang off his feet in their handclasp.

The Spauldings were in time for dinner; and after several hours they, with Elder Lang as their guest, started for home.

The next day was Sunday, so the Spauldings and Brother Lang spent the day searching the Scriptures—the Spauldings listening at times with breathless eagerness while the gospel story was told to them.

"And you say your church believes in healing?" Martha asked. She picked up the hem of her apron and started to gather it in folds—her habit when she was excited.

"Yes, we believe that God will heal our sickness if we have faith in him."

"There is a neighbor here," Martha pointed to a house a short distance from their home, "by the name of Mrs. Whitaker. She has been bedfast for the past fifteen months, and the doctor says she can't live much longer. I have been going over there and helping with the work. I have sewed for the children and done what I could to relieve the strain on the family. She has told me so often that she had a dream, a very plain dream. A man came and baptized her, and she was healed."

Brother Lang was thoughtful for a moment. "Yes, Sister, we believe all the Bible teaches, and we find the gift of healing is taught in many places, but especially, will you find it in the fifth chapter of James, verses thirteen to fifteen."

"Will you go and see Mrs. Whitaker and tell her the beautiful story you have told us? She is in a deplorable condition, and I am sure your words would cheer her."

"I shall be glad to see her; perhaps we can arrange to go tomorrow."

"I am so glad. I will see her and tell her about you so she will be prepared and expecting you."

"That is the right thing to do. I am eager to have a talk with her. But right now I am most anxious to get some meetings started. Brother John, do you think there would be any chance of obtaining the schoolhouse for me to preach in?"

"Yes, indeed! I'm president of the school board, and I think the other men would be willing."

THE NEXT DAY arrangements were made for holding meetings each evening in the schoolhouse. That same afternoon Martha Spaulding and Elder Lang went to see Mrs. Whitaker.

Martha approached the bed and spoke, "Mrs. Whitaker, here is the elder I told you about." Mrs. Whitaker wearily reached her hand toward him.

"I'm so glad to see you," she said feebly. "Martha has told me about you and says your church believes in healing. I dreamed a man came and baptized me, and I was healed, so I want you to baptize me."

"But, my dear lady, you don't know anything about our church—what we believe or how it came into being. You have to have an understanding of the gospel and have faith in God and in the ordinance before I can baptize you."

"Can't you tell me all about it?" the woman asked.

Elder Lang told her a great deal that afternoon, then he went back each afternoon and talked to her until the time came when he was to baptize other converts. Among those to be baptized were John and Martha Spaulding, and the woman and her husband who had refused Elder Lang bread on his way to the Howery's. She said that all she had in the house was a couple of cold biscuits, and she was ashamed to offer them. She knew by his looks he was not a tramp.

A little stream ran close to the Whitaker house where the baptisms were to take place. Elder Lang and John went down along the stream in John's little boat and found the best place. It was where the path led to it from the Whitaker house.

THE NIGHT BEFORE the eventful day, Brother Lang was pacing the floor of the sitting room, his hands clasped behind his back and his head bowed.

"Why are you so disturbed?" John asked. "I'm so happy I could shout the tidings of this glorious gospel to the whole world."

"There are times, Brother John, when depression is bound to overtake us. You know the sentiment of the people. If I baptize Mrs. Whitaker and she dies in the water, they will kill me. Our church members have suffered much at the hands of mobs—even Joseph was killed—so I know they will carry out their threats. I have prayed and prayed for God to give me light on what I should do. If only I could know her heart. If she wants to be baptized because she believes the gospel and has faith in the Lord and his promises and teachings, all will be well. But if her only thought is to be healed, I am afraid the result will be disastrous. It seems as though I am up against a darkness I have never encountered before, and I feel to cry out, 'Has God forsaken me?'"

"It seems to me this experience is for a trial of your faith," John said. "If you have faith in the promises of Jesus, do your duty and leave the result with God."

The next afternoon—May 29, 1870—was bright and beautiful. A large crowd assembled at the river bank to witness the ceremony. Many were apprehensive—many were seething with "righteous indignation" and vowing they would kill the man who would take such a sick woman into the water if she should die.

Martha, and some of the other women who were going to be baptized, got Mrs. Whitaker ready, and John and Jeff Gordon, Martha's father, lifted her from the bed and placed her in a large arm chair. They took hold of the arms and carried her down the path to the river. The women followed close behind to help support her. They set the chair down on the bank, and left her in charge of the women.

All the candidates were baptized, and Mrs. Whitaker was left until the last. Tenderly they carried her into the water and gave her into the hands of Elder Lang. John stood by to hold her, as it was impossible for her to stand. The crowd waited —a hushed stillness, as in the presence of death, seemed to pervade the assembly. Elder Lang placed his left arm about her and, with his right hand raised toward heaven, pronounced the words of the ceremony and baptized her. Eager arms were stretched out ready to receive her and carry her out of the water.

The baptismal service was over and in dripping wet clothes Elder Lang and the candidates proceeded back up the path to the house. When they arrived just inside the door, Mrs. Whitaker said, "Now, Mr. Gordon, and John, set this chair down! I'm going to walk to my bedroom."

The men were very reluctant to obey her command, but after some parleying they set the chair down. She arose and walked through the kitchen and sitting room to her bedroom, shouting, "Glory to God! Glory to God!"

The news soon spread, and the muttering crowd slowly dispersed as was often the case when someone had been made well through the ministrations of Jesus.

THE NEXT MORNING Jeff Gordon drove into Osseo. He was just entering the general store when the doctor, who had been Mrs. Whitaker's physician, met him. The two men exchanged greetings. Then, as an afterthought, the doctor said,

"Oh, how is Mrs. Whitaker? I haven't had time to get out there for a few days."

Gordon said, "I think she's doing pretty well. I saw her out in her garden this morning as I came by."

The doctor looked him in the eye for a second, then, declared: "Gordon, you lie!"

"That's pretty strong language, Doc. But I guess under the circumstances I'll have to overlook it."

"I'm sorry, Gordon, but I'm going right out there to see."

The doctor wheeled on his heel and went back home, hitched up his team, and drove out to the Whitaker home. After a thorough examination, he found Mrs. Whitaker perfectly well.

The doctor shook his head. "But I can't understand it."

"I tell you the Lord has done it," she said.

"Well, it's a mystery I can't solve," was his only answer.

And how could the doctor solve such a mystery when miracles are only for believers?

Ministry to New Members

Sunday school. Immediately there was consternation in the flock. Now the ironical part of it was that this group would have left those children sit there with no church privileges until Prohibition comes again. But they became aroused when the Baptists tried to do something for the children. It is a peculiar outlook that will deny the gospel to children, and become interested only when somebody else tries to help. . . . Now for a time transportation is being furnished, and the children are in our own church school. It is hoped that the folk do not forget this lesson.

Here is a problem of major importance. We must investigate it and study it. We must find out what can be done about it. We wish to hear what our experienced pastors, seventies, missionaries, and departmental workers have to say on the subject. Something that is said here may stimulate you to write a letter, however brief, that will give help to others. Here is a problem where experience counts. This is something out of the field, not off the desk. Your experience may help someone else.

A New Church Home for Pascagoula Branch

By NINA MASON

MEMBERS OF THE RECENTLY ORGANIZED BRANCH in Pascagoula, Mississippi, are proud of their new church home located at 1500 Lincoln Avenue, and they are grateful to Apostles M. A. McConley, Charles R. Hield, and Maurice Draper who pointed out this field of work as "ready for harvest" during the years of 1935 to 1946.

A small mission was first organized in the Bayou Casotte community near Pascagoula in 1889. The first move in Pascagoula to establish the work was in September, 1947, when a number of members met at the home of Elder J. L. Barlow to talk with District President W. J. Breshears. On November 2, 1947, this group was organized with Elder Barlow as leader. The Saints had no church but were fortunate in being permitted to hold services in different government buildings. Cottage prayer meetings were held in the homes of members. The church school, women's department, and Zion's League were organized and went to work with a prayer for a permanent church home.

On September 5, 1948, the group became a branch. Three months later a government building known as Lincoln Hall was purchased at a cost of $6,000. It stands on two and a half acres of land which make a beautiful lawn. The building contains a large chapel, recreation hall, classrooms, pastor's study, nursery, workshops, library, rest rooms, closets, and storage space. It is also equipped with an automatic heating and cooling system. Chairs and tables have been purchased for the chapel and classrooms, as well as equipment for the recreation hall.

IN ITS NEW HOME the branch has made commendable progress. Enrollment now totals eighty, with church school attendance averaging between sixty and seventy. All departments are fully organized and working. Recently a junior church was added.

Neighboring branches—Mobile, Vancleave, Escatawpa, Bayou Le Batre, and Ocean Springs—have sent speakers to help out on special occasions. Presidents Israel A. Smith and W. Wallace Smith, Apostle Percy Farrow, and District President W. J. Breshears have given their inspiration and help also.

A memorial flag service was held on the lawn of the church, October 15, with High Priest Franklin

Steiner of Mobile in charge. Mrs. Lillian Rogers Pigg of Rockford, Illinois (formerly of Vancleave) presented a flag to Elder J. L. Barlow for the church in memory of her son, John Carroll LaFevre, who was killed at the beginning of World War II. The above picture was made on this occasion.

* * * *

Pascagoula, located on the Gulf of Mexico, has a population of 15,000 and is the seat of Jackson County. Its chief industries include fishing, shrimping, shipbuilding, papermaking, and garment production. It is on the L. and N. and M. E. Railroads and on Highways 90 (along the coast) and 63 (leading through the state). The church is two miles southeast of the court house in a quiet part of the city.

The name Pascagoula is of Indian origin, and the Pascagoula River is often called "Singing River." In the city are two spots of historical interest: Longfellow House, where the poet wrote "Building of a Ship," and a Spanish fort built around 1600.

the original Hebrew text had more authority and greater weight than any translation.

So the scripture scholars abandoned their plan to revise the Old Testament from existing English translations. Instead they went directly to original sources.

The Psalms were composed largely by King David around 1000 B. C. Some were set to music and were used in the Temple at Jerusalem and in synagogues. They became the prayer of the Jewish people.

How to Cultivate Faith - By LeROY E. HARRIS

FIRST LET US CONSIDER the meaning of faith. This will put us in a position to see how we should cultivate it.

The dictionary says that faith means "Belief; the assent of the mind to the truth of what is declared by another, resting solely and implicitly on his authority and veracity; reliance on testimony." In Hebrews 11: 1 we find this:

"Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." From these definitions we can clearly see that life itself is composed of faith in some form. A man without faith in anything would be miserable indeed.

If a man wants a house built, he hires a carpenter because he has faith that one skilled in this field can do the work. In other words he knows the work can be done because it has been done before; thus he expresses his faith in material things.

For a better understanding of faith in things of a spiritual nature, we turn to the Scriptures and see what faith in God has accomplished and will accomplish.

"By faith they passed through the Red Sea as by dry land: which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned."—Hebrews 11: 29. From this we see that faith has accomplished miracles in the past, and what has been can be again.

"And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamore tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you."—Luke 17: 6. This shows how little faith any of us have and what a grand thing it would be to bring ourselves to the standard Christ has set.

We are told by all of the prophets that we must have absolute faith in God and in Christ to obtain salvation, a reward well worth striving for. "And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God." And in Hebrew 11: 6, "But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

We know the result of having faith and what we must have faith in; now we shall find out how to cultivate it.

THE ONLY WAY we can acquire faith, as recorded in Romans 10: 14 is by hearing: "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher." In other words God is to send preachers among his children to aid them in understanding his word. If we wish to cultivate faith, we must listen to the words of those who are called by God and inspired to explain the commandments he has given. Verse seventeen says, "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," which makes it plain that the only way to cultivate faith is by hearing. We are told in James 1: 5-7, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." After hearing the word of God preached and thereby coming to a belief that God is, and wishing to come nearer to him, but lacking wisdom as to how to proceed, we are told to ask in faith firmly believing that he will answer our prayers liberally and not upbraid us for our lack of wisdom or understanding. He will give us the power to discern between the true and the false, thereby strengthening our faith. But if we waver and do not believe there is a God who answers our prayers, it will do us no good to ask.

THERE ARE SOME who will say that faith alone will save the soul. To substantiate their claim they quote John 3: 16: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." I agree with them in this point, but not in the belief they have. Belief and faith are practically the same, and if we have absolute faith in Christ we will live up to all of his gospel and will see that we must accept his teachings in their entirety.

I do not see how any human being can doubt that there is a God after looking over the earth and sea and the wonders of the universe. The seasons continually changing, bringing forth their fruits, the forests and mines, all given to man for his betterment speak of a divine mind. We also have the Scriptures; by reading them and comparing what has been prophesied and fulfilled and what is being fulfilled every day there is no reason to doubt that God is. I say let those who wish to cultivate faith come nearer to God, hear the word as it is preached in its fullness, thereby searching the Scriptures and adding their earnest prayer that they may know and be brought nearer to him, believing that he is a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God. The cultivation of faith need not be difficult, but it is important. Faith is the prime essential to salvation. All who have found it should live by it in its purity and entirety. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according as his work shall be."—Matthew 16: 27.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Can flesh and bones enter the kingdom of God?
West Virginia J. H. S.

ANSWER:

Perhaps the question springs from Paul's utterance, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God."—I Corinthians 15: 50. Paul uses the words "flesh and blood" as applying to the body in its present sinful and mortal state, as made clear by the rest of the sentence, "neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." In this chapter he is preaching the fact of the Resurrection, the very thing which takes the human body into the kingdom of God where Christ, by his resurrection, led the way. He tells of the change it undergoes from mortality to immortality, from a natural body to a spiritual body, but changed though it may be, in substance and form it is the same. Alma wrote, it "shall be restored to its proper frame, even as we now are at this time," inasmuch that "not a hair . . . will be lost," and "the whole becoming spiritual and immortal." We see no other conclusion than that the resurrected body will be complete with its skeletal frame, its muscular flesh, and its circulating blood, all glorified.

QUESTION:

The Scriptures say that at Jesus' coming the saints will be caught up to meet him. How long will they be caught up, and will this be to spare them from Armageddon or some similar calamity on earth?
Oregon G. F.

ANSWER:

For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven . . . then they who are alive, shall be caught up together into the clouds with them who remain, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord.—I Thessalonians 4: 16, 17.

The Lord is coming to the earth to reign with his people. He will bring with him the resurrected righteous of past generations. Those who are still in their graves will be raised and together with the living saints, who are changed, will be caught up to meet the Lord, more as a manifestation of great joy and gladness at his coming than in fear of danger on earth. Armageddon will have passed before that time, and the earth made ready for his coming. Nothing is said about the Lord and his saints remaining in the air; the earth is their destination.

QUESTION:

Does the church take the position that there is, or is not, an opportunity for repentance after death for those who have not had an opportunity to receive the fullness of the gospel in this life?
Michigan C. A. H.

ANSWER:

Since the Scriptures plainly teach that "the gospel is preached to them that are dead," and that Christ "preached to the spirits in prison," the assumption is that repentance is possible, otherwise there would be no purpose to the preaching of the gospel which is a gospel of repentance. Concerning those who perished in the flood, the Lord said he would "shut them up; a prison have I prepared for them," where they would remain until he should visit them after his crucifixion. Opportunity for repentance would come to them:

Wherefore he suffereth for their sins, inasmuch as they will repent, in the day that my chosen shall return unto me; and until that day they shall be in torment.—Genesis 7: 45. (All Bible references are from the Inspired Version.)

This is with especial reference to those of the terrestrial order. Again the Lord speaks of them:

And after this, another angel shall sound, which is the second trumpet; and then cometh the redemption of those who are Christ's at his coming; who have received their part in that prison which is prepared for them, that they might receive the gospel, and be judged according to men in the flesh.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 28.

As to those of the telestial world, we recall no text specifically stating that the gospel is preached there, but since it is stated that they receive "of the Holy Spirit through the ministration of the terrestrial," and also "of the administering of angels, who are appointed to minister for them," and that "they shall be heirs of salvation," it is a safe assumption that the gospel is preached to them and repentance offered. (Ibid., 76: 7.)

SOME WITHOUT THE GOSPEL

There is a group to whom the gospel is not preached in the spirit world, and to whom the opportunity of repentance does not reach. They are the unpardonables—the sons of perdition—who have had full opportunity to know the gospel in this life, and who under the Spirit of God have been made to know that the gospel was divine, yet have refused it. They knew their sin and sinned willfully; having crucified Christ to themselves, they have forfeited their right under the gospel to eternal life. Their sin is against light and truth, and is unremittable. Repentance is impossible for them. Of them the Lord has said:

Many have believed not, and have perished in their sins, and are looking forth with fear, in torment, for the fiery indignation of the wrath of God to be poured out upon them.—Genesis 7: 1.

The residue of the wicked have I kept in chains of darkness until the judgment of the great day, which shall come at the end of the earth; and even so will I cause the wicked to be kept, that will not hear my voice but harden their hearts, and woe, woe, woe is their doom.—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 1.

Abinadi, speaking under the Spirit of God, taught:

The Lord redeemeth none such that rebel against him, and die in their sins; yea, even all those that have perished in their sins ever since the world began, and have willfully rebelled against God, that have known the commandments of God, and would not keep them; these are they that have no part in the first resurrection. . . . For salvation cometh to none such; for the Lord hath redeemed none such.—Mosiah 8: 61-64.

[He] saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father has revealed him; these shall go away into everlasting punishment, . . . to reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

Many in this life have incidental contacts with the gospel without receiving a definite knowledge of it or having conviction under the Holy Spirit. If such fail to obey they cannot be classed with the group just mentioned. It is only when the Father has revealed the Holy Spirit that men can commit the unpardonable sin of rejecting him. In this we should not judge our fellow men.

NEWS AND NOTES

Brother Anderson has sold cartoons to a number of leading national magazines. He is also a faithful contributor to church publications and at present is working on a Book of Mormon drawing book for children.

BAPTISMS IN ZION

So far this year there have been 288 people baptized. During the year of 1949 the total baptisms in Zion was 276, the highest record ever established to that date. West College congregation, which was organized just last December, had thirty-seven baptisms, the greatest number of any of the congregations in Zion. Blue Ridge Mission, which started one year ago last August with sixteen members, had eighteen baptisms during the year and now has a membership of 150. Walnut Park had thirty-five baptisms, Stone Church had thirty-five, Englewood had thirty-two, and Liberty Street had twenty-one.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

After two moving sessions, President E. J. Gleazer and family are now happily settled in their new home, just west of the campus.

The new home which is of modernistic architecture is the first home in Lamoni to have radiant heating.

HONORED

A special reception was held in honor of Sister John R. Lentell on November 19 at the Women's Center by the Clematis Chorus of the Stone Church. In 1931 Sister Lentell organized the chorus. Since then the chorus has been singing regularly at the Stone Church and in other congregations. Once a year they have given a concert. There are seventy-five ex-members of the chorus and sixteen active members. Sister Lentell was presented a gift at the reception.

TEXAS MISSION

Brother Jack Wight is holding a series of cottage meetings in Rio Grande Valley. He is also preaching each Sunday morning and evening in the church.

PREPARING FOR NEW BUILDING

About seventy-five people met at the Walnut Park church on November 19 and approved the selection of a site for a mission. The place selected is about 400 by 225 feet and is located on the southwest corner of R. D. Mize and Holke Roads. The vote is subject to the approval of the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric.

WELL AGAIN

Elder John Sheehy has regained his health and is now at Jonesport, Maine, serving as district president. Sister Sheehy will remain for the winter in their home in Independence, and will go to Maine in the spring.

CHILDREN'S CONCERT

On November 14 the Kansas City Philharmonic orchestra under the direction of Hans Schweiger presented a concert in the Auditorium to a gathering of 6,000 school children. This is the fifth consecutive year that the Junior Service League of Independence has brought the orchestra to Independence for the presentation. During one part of the program, the children sang special numbers to the accompaniment of the orchestra.

NEW OFFICERS

Dick Cheville, son of Dr. and Mrs. R. A. Cheville, was elected president of Graceland's freshman class at Graceland. In the liberal arts curriculum, Dick is a member of the Tower staff and the concert choir. Other freshman officers elected are Les Gardner, vice-president, and Arlo Baughman, secretary-treasurer. Les Gardner is from Wallsend, Australia.

NEW BUILDING

The Saints at Springfield, Missouri, are now using their new church building known as the Scenic Chapel. John Sparling was chairman of the building committee. Most of the labor on the building was donated.

The interior walls are finished with knotty pine and variegated wallboard, and the floors are polished oak. The auditorium is lighted with ceiling and side-wall fixtures to give various effects for each type of service to be held. The pews and pulpit are of red gumwood. It is estimated that 768 hours of labor were donated in erecting the building and $5,820.67 spent for material.

NEWS FROM APOSTLE PERCY FARROW

Reunions this summer were held at Santa Claus, Indiana; Brewton, Alabama; Hot Springs, Arkansas; and Bandera, Texas. Besides the local workers and appointees in the field, Bishop and Mrs. Leslie Kohlman were among the workers at Brewton; Brother and Sister J. C. Daugherty, Roy Cheville, and Mrs. J. H. Yager at Hot Springs, Arkansas; Sister Aleta Runkle at Santa Claus and Bandera; Brother and Sister Warren Chelline and Mrs. J. H. Yager at Santa Claus, and President F. H. Edwards at Bandera, Texas.

Since the close of the reunion roundup, Brother Farrow has visited the Rio Grande Valley in Texas and several other points in Texas and Arkansas.

Brethren J. H. Yager and James Renfroe held a series of meetings in Caraway, Arkansas, where nine were baptized. Brother Renfroe also held a series of meetings at Little Rock. Brother Yager held a series at Jack's Creek, Tennessee, where there was a large attendance of non-members.

When the new church in Pensacola, Florida, is completed, it will be one of the finest of our church buildings in the southern mission. It is a brick structure and will have a large annex for church school work. There is a seating capacity of about three hundred. Most of the work on the building was done by volunteer labor. Elder Bruce Jones is the pastor. A new building is also under construction for the Negro mission at Pensacola. Elder W. T. Blue is in charge of the mission.

The church building that the Saints of the Ecatawpa, Mississippi, mission have been building during the summer is now being used. The building, when completed, will be a fine frame structure covered with asbestos shingles and will have a seating capacity of about two hundred. The basement will be used for the educational unit. Elder A. N. Barnes is the pastor.

A church building is under construction at Bayou La Batre. It is a brick building and will probably be completed within the next two months.

At Paris, Tennessee, a new church building of perma stone is being built. There will be a seating capacity of about two hundred and fifty, and the basement will be used for educational work. The former church building burned about a year and a half ago.

Arrangements have been made recently to have Elder Jack A. Pray, pastor of the Mobile, Alabama, Branch, hold regular services in New Orleans, Louisiana. Meetings will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Greenwood, 6343 Catina Street, New Orleans.

A new mission has been opened at Little Rock, Arkansas. This was largely made possible because of the baptisms of Brother and Sister Robeen Cowen at the Hot Springs reunion last summer. Twenty-five or more families or parts of church families have been located at Little Rock. Regular preaching services and school services are being held. Priesthood members of the surrounding branches are assisting with the work.

SASKATOON, SASKATCHEWAN.—The theme of the Zion's League Rally which was held on October 29 was "God's Purpose." Priest Kenneth Fisher presided at the early morning prayer service. Testimonies centered around the subject, "A Living God." A most interesting class on "Witnessing for Christ" was taught by Priest Blake McLean after which Walter Postnoloff told of his recent visit at Graceland College. The Daughters of Zion served a delicious potluck dinner to the Leaguers. District President Howard Fisher preached an inspiring sermon on "God's Purpose" in the afternoon, and in the evening the pastor, Elder J. A. Gendron, spoke on "The Real Gospel." Among those who contributed musical numbers were the Saskatoon choir, Hazel Schmidt, Jean and Edna Peterson, Joy Fisher, Amy Powell, and Rita and Patsy Gore.

A signal honor came to Gryron Laverty, fourteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Laverty, when he won the provincial prize for the best reference book compiled according to the outline submitted by the National W. C. T. U.

Dr. Charles Jenkins, his wife Doris, and two little daughters, Wandie Lou and April Doris, have recently moved to Saskatoon. Dr. Jenkins is professor of Field Husbandry in the School of Agriculture of the University of Saskatchewan.

A "Good Cheer" committee has been appointed by the Daughters of Zion. The duties of the committee are to arrange for contributions of home cooking and other assistance in times of prolonged illness and to serve refreshments to relatives and friends in the event of a death.

The La Da Sa group is sponsoring a class in leadership training, the subject, "Zion's Homes." This interesting and well-attended class is being taught fortnightly by Priest Blake McLean.

George William, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Hitchings, was blessed on October 15 by Elders J. A. Gendron and Roy Bowerman. April Doris, infant daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Jenkins, was blessed on November 5 by Elders Gendron and Almer Powell.

MARION, MICHIGAN.—Evangelist Edward R. Carter held a series of meetings from October 29 to November 5. At the close of the series, five adults and one girl of nine years of age presented their names to Brother Carter for baptism. The baptism service was conducted in the Midland church as there is no font in the church at Marion. These services were well attended by the Saints, nonmembers, and several from the Cadillac Branch were in attendance each night. Evangelist Carter did a lot of visiting in the homes of the Saints and their friends while here. He also blessed one baby and spoke to the department of women. Brother Carter stayed at the home of Pastor Sidney Vanderwal. — Reported by PEARL AUSTIN.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—Recent baptisms have been Mrs. Boyd M. Brollaie, Joan Bratcher, and Vista Ann Moore.

Barbara Louise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Fordham, was blessed at the reunion by Elder Raymond Booker.

Speakers have been Apostle Percy E. Farrow, Elders Linden E. Wheeler, C. A. Green, H. E. Davenport, R. F. Moore, Alfred Yale, John Wight, and W. C. Chapman, and Priest Roy Clark.

Elder Alfred Yale held a week's series of sermons, several nonmembers being present. Elder Yale also visited in the homes of the Saints.

The Zion's League under the supervision of Evelyn Logan is very active. They have sponsored an organ concert, ice cream social, swimming and picnic parties, attended the youth retreat, and are now busy selling Christmas cards.

Nancy Mottashed is enrolled at Graceland College and Weddell Tey at North Texas State College.

The women's department with Eunice Wages as leader is preparing for a bazaar near Christmas time. The department donated many articles to the reunion bazaar. A rummage sale cleared a nice sum for the building fund. For family night in September a music appreciation program was given.

Pastor Linden E. Wheeler and most of the officers were re-elected at the annual business meeting.

Several families of Saints have moved to Dallas. The Dallas Branch extends them a hearty welcome. — Reported by CHATTIE EVERETT.

LONDON DISTRICT PRIESTHOOD INSTITUTE.—London was again the scene of a district institute for the priesthood under the leadership of Dr. Floyd M. McDowell. Associated with him was Bishop Joseph E. Baldwin. This institute was held in conjunction with the London District conference. A banquet took place on Saturday evening with Dr. McDowell as guest speaker and Bishop Joseph Baldwin as master of ceremonies.

The business meeting was presided over by C. E. Muir, the district president. New officers are C. E. Muir, district president; Howard Schlotzhauer of London and William Leney of Stratford, counselors; Cleone Duesling, secretary; Dalton Culp, treasurer; Beatrice McMaster, women's leader; Winnifred McCoy, music director; Maxwell White, young people's leader; Ruby Wilbur and J. Cohoe, auditors; William A. Alford and L. E. Shaw, reunion committee; A. G. Hodgson, district church school director and historian.

The district budget was approved. The following names were presented and approved as calls to the priesthood: J. Albert MacGregor, Cecil Beemer, and Alex Smith as elders; Lawrence E. Shaw, Maxwell White, Douglas Muir, and Victor Burns as priests.

Elder C. E. Muir announced that during the past few months a new group had been organized in Brantford under the jurisdiction of the district president. There are eleven families located in Brantford who are members of the church. Victor Burns of Brantford is in charge of the church school there.

THE ONTARIO RELIGIOUS EDUCATION INSTITUTE convened in London, September 22, 23, and 24. Apostle C. George Mesley and Apostle Reed M. Holmes conducted the institute which began Friday evening with a social get-together and classwork, followed by classwork and counseling all day Saturday. Following the worship service at 8:30 Sunday morning, there was a class conducted by Apostle Holmes, and a sermon at 11 o'clock by Apostle Mesley, his subject being "Someone Planted a Seed." Associated with these brethren were Elwood Smith of Chatham, William McMurray, and C. E. Muir. The institute closed after the 2:30 service of dedication on Sunday afternoon.

THE ONTARIO YOUTH CONFERENCE was held at the Erie Beach reunion grounds on September 2, 3, and 4 with 150 young people in attendance, representing the various branches in Ontario. Dr. Floyd M. McDowell was the guest instructor and gave an excellent ministry. The program included classwork, dedication service, preaching, and recreational program. The theme for the gathering was "He Calls, We Serve." Other appointees who assisted in the instruction and preparation for the conference included Bishop Joseph E. Baldwin, Wil-

ZION BUILDERS' SERMONS

BY ELBERT A. SMITH

Even though these sermons were preached a number of years ago, they still have a freshness and vitality of Brother Elbert's very best speaking and writing years. He takes up a number of the questions that concern young people in relationship to their life and the church, and deals with them effectively especially in relation to the decisions the young people must make. liam McMurray, Louis Zonker, John Booth of Toronto, Elwood Smith of Chatham, and C. E. Muir of London. Doris Green of Toronto was campfire leader and the McDonald brothers of Petrolia operated the refreshment stand. The ladies of the Chatham District prepared all the meals for the conference.

COLDWATER, MICHIGAN.—District conference of the Northern Indiana District was held October 14 and 15 at Buchanan. Conference was in charge of Apostle C. G. Mesley and District President L. S. Troyer. District officers' reports were approved. The district budget of $2,095 was approved. The following were approved for ordination: Marion Blanchard and Arthur Middleton as elders; Donald Porter as priest; Virgil Trimm and Andrew Barnhouse as teachers; Charles Blanchard, Jack Drader, and Edward Boehm as deacons.

The following officers were elected: Elder L. S. Troyer, district president; Elders E. J. Grigg and V. L. Coonfare, counselors; V. L. Coonfare, bishop's agent; Glenn Cease, historian; Myrtle Johnson, secretary and auditor; Rolland Dirrim, treasurer; Muriel Collins, women's leader; Charles Blanchard, Jr., director of religious education; Harriette Schrader, music director; and Geneva Swaim, young people's leader.

The organization of a branch at Benton Harbor-St. Joseph was approved.—Reported by MYRTLE JOHNSON.

WEST VIRGINIA DISTRICT.—The annual fall conference was held at Parkersburg. Apostle Maurice Draper and District President Samuel Zonker were in charge. A study class, fellowship service, two sermons, ordination service, and business meeting well occupied the Saturday afternoon and Sunday sessions of the conference.

Nine men were ordained to the priesthood: from Steubenville, Ohio, John Oliver, Sr., to the office of elder, and John Oliver, Jr., to the office of priest; from Parkersburg, Orval Cottrill, teacher, and Earl Smith, deacon. From Wellsburg, Don Trieber, teacher; Keith Zonker, deacon, and Neal Nixon, deacon.

Members elected to hold office for the current year are: Samuel M. Zonker, district president; Elders Wayne Wilson and Otto Melcher, counselors; Lawrence Phillips, young people's leader; Wayne Wilson, church school director; May R. Griffin, secretary-treasurer; Anna Schoenian, music director; Blanche Martin, women's department leader; May R. Griffin, historian and nonresident supervisor; and Margaret C. Pack, Herald correspondent.

The Parkersburg Branch made an outstanding contribution to the conference by the well-organized and efficient way in which they provided meals and housing for the largest number of persons ever attending an assembly of this kind in this district.

Saturday and Sunday, October 28 and 29, a Zion's League Rally for the youth of the West Virginia District was held at the Parkersburg Branch. Following registration on Saturday afternoon, the rally began with an open forum for which each person had been requested to bring a question in writing for discussion at this meeting. Many such questions were presented and as many discussed as time permitted. Great interest was manifested in this portion of the program, and splendid advice and counsel were given.

Class session, fellowship service, preaching service, short talks by young men of the priesthood, were all of important significance to the young people of the district, and much good was accomplished through these services.

Of special interest, too, for all those attending, was the recreational phases of the conference, which included a "Nose Bag Lunch" on Saturday afternoon, and a wiener roast that night.

Two priesthood institutes are scheduled for November, one to be conducted at the Wheeling Branch and the other at the Parkersburg Branch. Apostle Maurice Draper will be in this state for both meetings, and that important work will be accomplished is the expectation of all those awaiting the time of those assemblies.—Reported by MARGARET C. PACK.

GULF STATES DISTRICT.—The priesthood and other workers of the district met on October 27 for the opening service of a two-day conference of worship and study, the Saints of the Mobile, Alabama, Branch acting as hosts. Elder Percy E. Farrow addressed the assembly of 178 persons, using as his topic, "The Witnessing Church."

The activities of Saturday began with a worship service at 10 a.m. There were 131 persons in attendance. At 10:30 a.m. Elder J. A. Pray, pastor of the Mobile Branch, taught a class of the priesthood on "The Importance of Worship." At the same hour, Elder John Darling, associate director of the department of religious education, taught the other workers about "Worship in the Church School." Following these sessions, Elder Darling spoke to the priesthood on "The Ministry of Teaching," and Elder W. J. Breshears, president of the Gulf States District, taught the other workers on "The Principles of Worship."

Lunch was served by the women's department of the Mobile Branch. The afternoon sessions began at 2 o'clock; Elder Farrow teaching the priesthood on "Priesthood in Branches" and Elder Darling, the other workers, on "The Importance of Leadership in the Church." At 3 o'clock Elder Darling taught the priesthood on "Priesthood Leadership in the Church School" and Elder Farrow taught the other workers on "Evangelism in the Church School." At 6 p.m. Elders Farrow and Breshears showed colored pictures on the screen of places of interest they had visited.

In the evening there was a fellowship dinner served to 160 persons by the Mobile women's department. Elder Breshears acted as toastmaster. In lieu of the accustomed address, there was a panel discussion with Elder Breshears discussing "Why Branches?"; Elder Pray, "How to Develop Missions Through Branches"; Elder Darling, "What Shall We Do to Make the Branches Evangelistic?" and Elder Farrow bringing the "Summary."

Sunday services began with an organ prelude at 8:15 a.m. A worship and fellowship service followed immediately. At 10 a.m., Elder Darling taught a general class on "The Call to Discipleship." Elder Farrow preached the concluding service at 11 o'clock and used "Go Ye Therefore" as his subject. The meetings were all well attended, there being 290 persons at the last service and a smaller number at the two earlier ones.—Reported by AUDREY B. TILLMAN.

ROCK ISLAND DISTRICT.—On November 4 the young people of the district met in a Youth Institute at the Lend-A-Hand Club in Davenport, Iowa. Elder Carl Mesle, director of young people's work for the general church, was in charge of the classwork. Youth leaders and officers met with the young people for an afternoon of classwork on the organization and administration of the commission plan of Zion's League organization. Brother Mesle told what the Independence young people are doing and conducted a workshop which gave opportunity to all to help in planning programs using the Zion's League Annual. About sixty young people attended the classwork.

On Saturday evening the young people attended a banquet at the Lend-A-Hand Club. Brother Wayne Newport of Iowa City, Iowa, was master of ceremonies and Brother Mesle concluded the evening's program with an inspiring talk, "Serve Where You Are." There were seventy-seven present at the banquet.

On Sunday morning, November 5, the young people concluded their activities with a prayer service at the Rock Island church. District President Lyle W. Woodstock was in charge.—Reported by LYLE W. WOODSTOCK.

Bring Forth Fruit With Patience — By EVAN A. FRY

Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and bath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.—James 5: 7, 8.

I SPENT SEVERAL HOURS once talking kindly and earnestly to a boy who was on the wrong track and headed for trouble as surely as water runs downhill. Nothing I could say seemed to arouse his interest in any way. He was not antagonistic—just indifferent. He was enough of a gentleman to give me the respect he felt was due a minister, but it seemed to me as I sat pouring words into his ears that they bounced back without ever getting inside his consciousness at all. Finally, feeling beaten and frustrated and disappointed, I left him. Not far away, I encountered an old colored man—a devout Bible student and church member with a simple faith and a kindly disposition that made him respected and loved by all who knew him. He knew something of my mission and of the events that had made it necessary, and from the look on my face he guessed that I was not too cheerful about the outcome of my conversation. When he asked me how I had come out, I replied simply by shaking my head. Then he said a very simple thing I shall never forget. “Now don’t you fret yo’self, Reverend. You has done sowed the good seed; now give it time to grow, and de good Lord will help it to bear fruit.”

I am happy to report that the good seed did grow, and may yet some day bear fruit. But it took this wise advice from a very humble colored man to remind me that I was falling into a mistake impatient people make quite often—the mistake of expecting fruitage as soon as the seed is planted. The seed I planted that day fell on at least moderately good soil. I knew that it was good seed. I knew God would do his part in making it sprout, take root, and grow. Yet because I did not see the fruit before my eyes immediately, I lost faith in the soil, in the seed, and in God who gives the increase.

THIS IS THE SEASON when we give thanks for a harvest of fruits and grains and vegetables that have been produced in the good soil of earth during the past summer. It is an obvious truth that we do not plant the seed one day and enjoy the fruits the next. “First the blade and then the ear; then the full corn doth appear.” It would be a foolish farmer who turned under his young corn about the first of July because it was not yet ready to pick, or who plowed under his winter wheat about the first of May because it had not yet headed out and turned to a ripe brown.

We cannot always tell what the harvest will be at the time when we sow the seed. Many things may intervene before the time of harvest to increase the crop or to destroy it altogether. But he who withholds his seed—who does not sow because he fears that something will happen so he shall not reap—will never know the fruitage of an abundant harvest. And he who has not the patience to wait until the time of harvest will never reap. There are, of course, some precautions which can be taken—some things we must do if we expect a full return at the time of harvest. We must be sure, first of all, that the seed sown is good seed. We must make as certain as we can that it is sown on good soil, though sometimes we have to sow the seed anyway, and simply hope the soil is good. Once it is sown, we can do some things to protect the seed as it grows, to give it proper moisture and sunlight and cultivation.

MANY PEOPLE TODAY proceed on the assumption that they do not need to sow good seed at all. They are content to let their children grow up without making any planned or organized or continued effort to see that the good seed of the word of God is planted in their hearts. If the ground is good, it will grow any kind of seed put into it. The devil has plenty of laborers abroad sowing tares in the field of this world, planting them even in the midst of the fields of God, while the husbandmen sleep, secure in the thought that God is taking care of his field, or that somehow the seed will sow itself—that in due time the child will make up his own mind what he wants and start developing it. No child or young person ever brings forth fruit in the kingdom unless someone, somewhere, sometime sows the seed of the word of God, trusting that the soil is good, trusting that God will do his share and provide what is necessary to give the increase.

The test of good seed is whether or not it will sprout and grow. The test of good ground is whether or not it will sustain the life of a growing plant and bring it to fruitage. The test of a good farmer is whether or not he has faith and courage enough to plant the seed, skill and knowledge enough to cultivate it, tend it, and perhaps water it, and patience enough to wait for the fruitage of it. There are some things which must be left to God. Man cannot place the spark of life which makes a good seed good—which makes it burst forth into life and eventually into fruition. Only God provides the stimulating rays of the sun, without which no plant can grow.

In some things, then, we must trust God and wait with patience. Yet we cannot trust him for the things he has assigned to us. We must plant the seed. He will supply the sun and rain. Millions of souls, not only abroad but right here at home, have never received the seed of the word which, when it comes to fruition, brings eternal life.

TO EACH OF US falls the responsibility of sowing the good seed in the lives of others. But perhaps even more important—at least to ourselves—is the responsibility of seeing that the good seed which falls into our lives falls on good ground, where it may sprout and take root. Then comes the responsibility of seeing that that seed is not choked out by thorns and briars or tares—that it has full access to all the facilities which God has provided for its growth and development. Good seed, planted in good soil, must still be exposed to God's sunlight and air and water, or it cannot bring forth fruit. Fruitage cannot be born in His spiritual kingdom unless he is allowed to do his part. But with each one doing his share in patience, there shall be an abundant harvest.

Overcoming Racial Prejudices

If this color problem is to be solved, it must be done on the personal and individual level. Committee meetings and resolutions are all very well, but do they make any difference in our behavior?

You can do something about the problems of our colored minority. You can always be kind. You can think and speak courteously. You can help to see that justice and fair-play are observed. You can make the lot of the colored people you meet a little easier. You can teach your children the same ideals.

Eventually, equal treatment and opportunity must come in this country, or we will perish as a nation. We cannot perpetuate the evil we have imposed on the colored minority and live. We would not be worthy. Some day God's justice and righteousness must be observed, or his judgment will overtake us. It is getting late, but it is not yet too late for us to do something. L. J. L.

Making Room for Jesus

By MRS. ERNEST O. SHERMAN

NO ROOM IN THE INN" is a theme the world and many Latter Day Saints spend much thought upon at the Christmas season. Many of us wonder, "Would we have blundered as did the innkeeper?" He seemingly did not know, but we know.

How many of our one hundred forty thousand church members have room in our hearts for the man Jesus? He grew in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man. He ceased to be a babe and became a man, an example, a guide. This should be remembered when we celebrate his birthday.

One Christmas custom—the sending of Christmas greetings—has reached stupendous proportions. I have no quarrel with Christmas cards or the sending of them. I love Christmas cards, their beauty, apt verses, and their varied designs. In fact I started a hobby over twenty years ago to save one card containing a signature from each friend. In addition I started to save the unusual and the nativity scenes. Through the war years cards came from the far ends of the earth, so my hobby and my books of cards grew and widened in their scope.

FOUR YEARS AGO this same hobby set me thinking. I was going through my card collection of the year before, and I noted with dismay that several friends had passed on. Never again could I send them a Christmas card and letter. That was not the deepest hurt. The tragedy was that I had never reached them with the gospel story. As President Edwards says, "The greatest enemy of the best is not the worst, but the second best." For years I had contacted them with the second best.

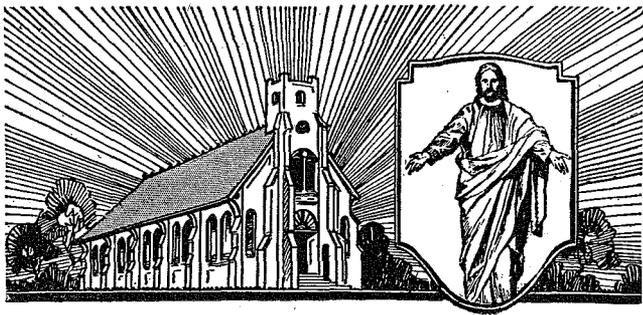

My husband and I began to think, to plan, and to do. We selected thirty-five names of friends and relatives to whom we would send a tract in place of a Christmas card. But what tract? We finally decided on Faith of Our Fathers. Each tract was accompanied by a personal letter of testimony explaining what this "Faith of Our Fathers" meant to us and why we had become residents of Missouri twenty years before. A sheet of heavy typing paper, cut and pasted, made an adequate envelope.

A few days before Christmas, we put these in the mail. We had already received our annual letters and cards from these friends and expected no answer or comment. But almost to a person, we received a second letter commenting on the message they had read. We used the Church Directory to write the address of our church home, if there happened to be one in their town or near by, and some of them also wrote that they already knew of the local branch. Our plans went even a little beyond the tracts. We selected eleven people from the list of thirty-five, and on New Year's Day, we were mailing The Call at Evening to them as a follow-up. Then after a while, we sent a dollar edition of the Book of Mormon. Again we received a splendid response from our reading friends.

The next year we planned to send books to eleven more, but illness in our home made it necessary for us to postpone our follow-up for a while.

EVER SINCE THAT EXPERIENCE, we have felt dissatisfied with ourselves if we have made no effort with our nonmember or disinterested acquaintances to help them make a special place in their hearts for Jesus. So we have made a resolution that in 1950, we will have a definite plan for Christ's birthday celebration each year so those who have not known the precious truths that have been given to us by his Spirit may receive them

A Democratic Religion

By GEORGE YOUNG

IT MAY BE that because I'm a citizen of the United States of America, I've believed so strongly in the brotherhood of man and the great power of love of man for his fellow men. The idea of democratic living was my heritage. It thus became my responsibility to take that idea and apply it to life. To do this I had to look about me and examine critically those institutions which were my life. I had to probe into the meanings of the things which were handed down to me by various authorities. I had to determine what democratic living actually meant, what I had to do to insure my heritage for my children. If my probing indicated a change in living must be made, then I would change. If any part of my life were in opposition to what democratic living meant, then I must divorce myself from it.

The greatest democrat of all—the One who knew everything that was involved—said, even while dying, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." At another time he said, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies." Forgiveness, love, compassion, understanding, open-mindedness—these are the criteria by which the true democrat is measured.

Jesus sets the pattern into which, if I believe in him, I must at least approximately fit. He has made a promise for my attempt to fit the pattern—a promise too good to be passed by. He has said, "Ye shall have great joy, and be exceeding glad."

NOT MANY YEARS ago when I was yet a little fellow, my brother and I would leave home early in the morning, walking toward the outskirts of town and the countryside to where luscious big, blackberries grew. We would leave before the sun was up with our pails and the lunch mother had given us, making little swirls in the early morning fog as we swung our feet along. Our jacket collars were pulled high and close about our necks to keep the morning coolness out.

After an hour or so of walking, we would reach a patch of berries and begin picking. Soon I'd feel a warm sensation on my back, and I'd look up to see the fog gone and the sun smiling an apology for its lateness. All over the fields diamonds of dew sparkled, reflecting the glory of the sun. I felt good, wonderfully alive, happy with life. In those days I must have been very close to God.

IN 1942 I was seventeen and a sailor in the U. S. Navy. After a period of training, I was put aboard ship and sent to North Africa. During the year that followed, I toured North Africa, Sicily, and Italy as far north as the Anzio beachhead. I was amazed and saddened by what I found, especially in Sicily and Italy. I had never realized that such poverty existed. I had thought my family was poor, but compared to these people it was wealthy. If they could have attained the standard of living common in America even during the worst of the depression years, they would have been eminently better off.

In the midst of this abject poverty, there was unbelievable wealth. This was held by the Catholic Church, to which I then belonged. Magnificent gold crusted cathedrals—monuments to the enslavement of the people—dotted the cities. The church took everything as its pay and gave the people nothing but an empty promise of salvation in return.

These poor people were doing what they thought was right. They were fulfilling what they believed to be the requirements of God. But they were not "exceeding glad," neither did they have "great joy." Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." The only thing in life these people had in abundance was sorrow. If they were correct in their beliefs, then God had misled them, for keeping his law did not bring joy or happiness. If God did not mislead them, then the beliefs of these people were wrong. And if that were true, then I was wrong also.

IT BECAME increasingly apparent that the Catholic Church was one institution in my life which could not possibly be in harmony with democratic living, with the more abundant life. It took from man his most precious God-given right—his agency. Such things as freedom of conscience, freedom of worship, freedom of the press, freedom of education, freedom of assembly are named pernicious by the church.* This allows man no choice. Pope Pius XIII in his Encyclical on Human Liberty in 1888 wrote: "It is quite unlawful to demand, to defend, or to grant unconditional freedom of thought, of speech, or writing, or of worship." Such things are in direct conflict with democratic living. Nowhere in the Testaments can there be found any justification for such actions as these. If these things were required by God, then the Catholic people should be glad and joyful and they should have an abundance of the things of life. They are not and they do not.

New Horizons

The people of the Catholic faith are led to believe that this life is truly a vale of tears, and that such is the price we pay for living. This is not democratic living—it is not living at all.

I finally reached the point at which my beliefs concerning God, his nature, and life were too much at conflict with the published policies of the Catholic Church. This was one part of my life which was in opposition to what democratic living meant, so I divorced myself from it. The threats of punishment for such action became hollow echoes ringing about the dark cavern of ignorance out of which I had stumbled.

The action was yet incomplete. The next step was to determine what it was that I did believe concerning God and the lives of men. I found that though I had come out of that dark cavern, I was not yet in daylight. That strange half-light of the predawn in which I found myself made vision difficult. However, though my specific beliefs were hard to determine, I did know what I could not believe. I must belong to Christ's church, but as far as I could tell, that church was not in existence among men. The ones with which I was familiar were merely sprouts of the Catholic Church. Their expressed beliefs were shallow and concerned merely the relationships of man with man instead of those of man with God. I was slowly but certainly coming face to face with an issue, the resolution of which I knew would greatly disturb me. That was, I could belong to no church.

I, who did believe that God truly loved his children and gave his only Son for their salvation, still could belong to no church.

By the time I reached this conclusion, I had been discharged from the Navy and was attending the University of Kansas. Here it was that I heard of a church which was organized exactly as Christ had organized his church. A church which taught that God speaks to man now as he did thousands of years ago—a God who was loving and kind and forgiving.

Man's agency is a priceless thing, and this church would allow no price to be placed upon it. This church named freedom of thought, speech, writing, and worship as gifts from God to be used by man for his enlightenment. This church had as its goal eternal life and the establishment of the kingdom of God here on earth.

I felt again the warm emotion I had experienced as a child. It stirred my heart, and my heart believed. Its logic stirred my mind, and my mind believed. This was a God-made plan, as immense as the universe and as lasting as eternity.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—Christ's church—is now my church. The happiness which came after my baptism and confirmation can be surpassed only by that which is yet to come. I truly have great joy and am exceeding glad. I have found the abundant life.

"—And So Good for Our Morale"

By CARL MESLE

FOLLOWING the "Messiah" broadcast last year, we received a letter from a girl "back East" whose comments ran something like this: "Listened to the broadcast of the 'Messiah.' It was wonderful—and so good for our morale." This young lady is not only the choir director for her branch but also holds an excellent position in a large city where she meets many people outside of the church, including some notables. Knowing her, I could better appreciate what she meant by its being good for their morale. There are so many people who know so little about our church that it is good for our morale to have something of quality recognized nationally to which we can point and say with pride, "That's my church."

If listening in to the "Messiah" broadcast was good for the morale of some, it would seem that we ought to encourage all of our young people and their friends to listen in. It is true that not everyone appreciates the type of music represented in Handel's "Messiah," but for those who are interested in trying to appreciate it, there are so many beautiful passages both in words and in music that it would be difficult for them not to gain something of value from it. Here is a bit of missionary work into which Leaguers might sink their teeth. The "Messiah" takes the church into the homes of people all over the country. We have nothing to apologize for when we invite our friends and neighbors to listen.

THIS WILL BE the twelfth year in which our Independence Messiah Choir will have broadcast the "Messiah" on a national network. It may make it more interesting to know that, while each broadcast costs the church nearly $3,000, it costs the Columbia Broadcasting System, which provides the time free of charge, a great deal more, and national networks do not throw away valuable time. We are told CBS has been approached by a great number of choirs, many of wider fame than our own and some of whom have offered to pay for the time on the air in order that their choir might gain the opportunity to have the national spotlight each year.

When asked by professional directors as to the requirements expected of those who try out for the chorus, Franklyn Weddle, the director, answered, "They must have enthusiasm and the ability to carry a tune." There are many young people in the chorus with average or good voices who contribute much to the performance and, in their own words, get a genuine thrill out of taking part. There are also represented more mature and experienced singers, including some of the finest in the greater Kansas City area.

Mr. Weddle, who is church director of music and radio, is intimately acquainted with the musicians of the Midwest and selects carefully the forty-two members of the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra who will accompany the choir this year. Two of the four soloists: Josephine Crinklaw Mader and Garland Tickemyer are members of the church and have sung the soprano and tenor parts for some years. A substitute is being sought for our own Anna-jean Brown, contralto, who is singing in Europe at the present time. The bass soloist will not be a member of our church. Here, incidentally, is a challenge to our aspiring basses.

WITH ALL THIS PREPARATION, here is an excellent opportunity for a League or young people's group which will render a service to itself, the church, and the community. For those interested, here are some ideas:

1. Tell your friends about the broadcast personally.
2. Send out the announcement cards that will come to the pastor. Request more if necessary. Get them to friends, including teachers and business associates who might listen.
3. Make up posters to put in store windows about town, on the church and school bulletin boards, and in the shops.
4. Organize League listening parties, unless the branch has its own, and make it a social occasion with refreshments and with someone telling the story of the "Messiah" beforehand.
5. Provide a League meeting program about the "Messiah," including the story and selected music by soloists or a quartet. (See Zion's League Annual, No. 4, page 62.)

6. Clear all ideas with your pastor.

The broadcast will be presented on most CBS stations, Sunday evening, December 17, from 10:30 p.m. to midnight, Central Standard Time. Some stations will rebroadcast it later, so check with your local station before making your posters.

Good luck and good listening!

at a time when their hearts are filled with love and tenderness at the celebration of his birth.

It is an opportune time to reach out and bring their attention to a greater vision—the vision beyond the cradle to the adult Jesus, to his teachings, his precepts, the church which bears his name.

These tracts bring them a vision of the living Christ whose spirit moves upon his priesthood that they may write his teachings for mankind to read, study, and profit by. As the Wise Men brought precious gifts to the babe, so can we give precious gifts—the teachings of the living Christ to a world that needs him.

Apostle Oakman says:

"If twenty thousand people in our church would spend fifteen minutes every day in studying the word of God, at a time of the day when they were at their best, untold power would flow to the church."

Paraphrasing a little:

If twenty thousand members would select fifteen nonmembers and send them God's Word at the time of year when they were at their best, what a harvest there might eventually be for the church from the seed sown.

Let's cease to worry about no room in the inn and concentrate on the desire that there will be room in our hearts for Christ, and then help to make room in our neighbor's hearts also.

DEATHS

CROWL.—Andrew Ethan, was born October 11, 1860, at Oak Grove, Wisconsin, and died July 22, 1950, at his home in Butler, Missouri. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1894, and held the office of priest. He is survived by his wife Bernice of the home; four daughters: Edith Brotherton of Lamoni, Iowa; Blanche Kinsfather of Independence, Missouri; Hazel Miller of Opheim, Montana; and Mrs. Wilbur Smith of Butler; three sons: Leonard of Lowry City, Missouri; Theodore of Osceola, Missouri; and Edwin of Sugar Creek, Missouri; thirty-seven grandchildren and thirty-six great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at Butler, and burial was in Floral Hills Cemetery near Kansas City, Missouri.

FERRELL.—Edward Elgin, was born March 4, 1878, at Burford, Ontario, and died October 30, 1950, at Nora, Saskatchewan. He moved to Rosendale, Manitoba, about fifty years ago, and ten years later moved to Bethune, Saskatchewan. Since 1931 he had made his home in Nora. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since September 11, 1904, and was also a member of the Loyal Orange Lodge. He is survived by his wife Mary; seven sons: Elgin, Elmer, Charles, Frank, Earl, Bert, and Clayton; and two daughters: Madeline and Coral. Funeral services were conducted at Nora Hall, Elder Howard Fisher officiating. Burial was in Rose Valley Cemetery.

ROBERTSON.—Ruth Evangeline, daughter of I. N. W. and Melvina A. Cooper, was born January 29, 1891, at Lamoni, Iowa, and died November 10, 1950, at Independence, Missouri. In the early 1900's, she and her mother homesteaded near Valier, Montana, where she met and married George A. Robertson, a neighboring homesteader. Three children were born to them. Later the family moved to Colorado, where Sister Robertson was a faithful worker in the women's department and a member of the choir. She was also interested in welfare work, serving on the Community Chest drives and other local projects, and held membership in the American Literary Society in Denver. She had belonged to the Reorganized Church since September 12, 1900. Mr. Robertson preceded her in death three years ago.

Surviving are two daughters: Pauline B. White of Berkeley, California, and Mariamneh Klusman of Richland, Washington; a son, Raymond D. Robertson of Berkeley; a sister, Pauline Smith of Kansas City; a half-sister, May Mather of Los Angeles, California; and five grandchildren. Services were held at the Dixon Kepley Funeral Home in Independence. Elders Glaude A. Smith and Arthur E. Stoff officiating. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

HANSEN.—Annie Louise Rasmussen, was born March 20, 1883, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and died November 17, 1950, at the Independence Sanitarium after an illness of several months. On February 24, 1904, she was married to John A. Hansen; five children were born to them. Mr. Hansen preceded her in death in May, 1935. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 12, 1899, and was very active in the women's department.

Surviving are two sons: John Arthur of Fargo, North Dakota, and Francis of Council Bluffs; three daughters: Mrs. Leona Handlen of Council Bluffs; Mrs. Ruth Hough of Underwood, Iowa; and Miss Estella Hansen of Independence; four brothers: Herman and Walter Rasmussen of Council Bluffs; Arthur Rasmussen of Salina, Kansas; and Rasmus Rasmussen of Seattle, Washington; two sisters: Mrs. Howard Swanson of Sioux City, Iowa, and Miss Mable Rasmussen of Omaha, Nebraska; and five grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Woodring Mortuary in Council Bluffs, Elders Charles F. Putnam and V. D. Ruch officiating. Interment was in Hazel Dell Cemetery.

TURNER.—Pearle, daughter of Oliver E. and Emma Brackenbury Flanders, was born May 18, 1895, at Stewartville, Missouri, and died November 4, 1950, at her home in the McClellan Hotel, Wichita, Kansas, where she had resided since 1943. On July 1, 1918, she was married to John Harris Turner at Independence, Missouri. A member of the Reorganized Church since her youth, she was active in the women's department in Wichita Branch, and with her husband often visited isolated Saints in Kansas and Oklahoma. She was also a member of the Maywood Mercy Hospital Club and will long be remembered for her kindness to elderly people.

Besides her husband she leaves three brothers: A. Douglass Flanders, Lake Lotawana, Lee's Summit, Missouri; O. E. Flanders, Jr., Elsinore, California; and L. E. Flanders, Independence, Missouri. Services were conducted by Elder Hubert Case at the Speaks Funeral Home in Independence. Interment was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

BYRNE.—Verna, died November 4, 1950, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ruth Wolfe, of Edwardsville, Indiana, at the age of sixty-one. She was a member of the Reorganized Church and had great faith in God. During her final illness, she often received relief from pain through administration and bore testimony of God's goodness to her. For several years before her health failed, she served as leader of the women's department and a teacher in the church school at the Bryneville, Indiana, Branch.

Surviving are two daughters: Mrs. Sue Brock of New Albany, and Mrs. Wolfe of Edwardsville; two sons: Ellis Byrne of Byrnesville and Jack D. Byrne of New Albany; four sisters; and two brothers. Funeral services were conducted at the church, Elder Edmond L. Fouts officiating. Interment was in the Byrnesville cemetery.

BENNETTS.—Arthur Pearce, was born at Downgate-Callington, Cornwall, England, on July 16, 1873, and died November 6, 1950, at Montague, Michigan. At the age of seventeen he came to the United States, spending three years in Colorado, Montana, and Arizona. In 1893 he made his home in Michigan where he was engaged in copper mining until 1920. When he left the mines he was mining captain over 500 men. Later he worked for the Buick Motor Company in Flint, Michigan. In 1895, he married Edith Foster; seven children were born to them. Following the death of his first wife in 1920, he married Emma J. Lamb. While living in Flint, he was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church. He also belonged to Flint Lodge Number 23, F. and A. M.

He is survived by his wife, Emma; a daughter, Mrs. Flora Christophersen of Marietta, Ohio; four sons: Wilbert A. of Muskegon, Michigan; Weldon J. of Fenton, Michigan; George E. and Kenneth W. of Flint; a sister, Flora Jordan of Butte, Montana; thirteen grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Two children preceded him in death. Funeral services were held at the Groves Chapel in Flint, Elder Arthur H. DuRose officiating. Burial was in Flint Memorial Park.

GENDRON.—Glen Arthur, son of Elder and Mrs. J. A. Gendron of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, died September 27 at the age of four. He had been ill for a year and a half. Besides his parents he leaves a sister, Frances. Elder J. A. Jordan was in charge of the funeral.

 THE ORPHAN

On our way home late last evening, something small and dark exploded in the bushes beside the walk, and bounded out in front of us. It was a kitten. He took a cat's ancient way of calling attention to himself. He simply got in front of us and stopped. When a cat does that, you must step on him, detour, or stop. But you can't fail to notice him.

This kitten followed us home, in spite of our efforts to lose him. He had very clearly begun adoption proceedings. It is a regular thing in cat life. He had been weaned, and it was up to him to find a new home. He had selected us.

I remember once seeing a mother cat leading her brood down the street. She had a determined look on her face. It was an important day for the kittens. She came to the top of the steps leading to our house.

She mewed just once. It was as if she said, "Tommy, this is your place. You'll have to get in the best way you can. It's up to you."

A small bundle of fur, charm, and hope came forward, never once looking back. He knew by instinct what he had to do. He looked up and mewed. It was some hours since he had been fed, and he was hungry. He took up the cat's ancient and universal language. He mewed. His voice was firm and insistent. He knew his rights. This was his home, and we were his people. Would we please, immediately, let him into the house and feed him?

We did just what you would have done. He lived with us and we loved him. We were sure he loved us, too, and we grieved when something happened one day that he did not return.

 THE FORM AND THE SPIRIT

In the times of Jesus the roads were dusty, and many travelers went on foot. They had no socks, and they wore open sandals. You can imagine how their feet looked and felt at the end of even a short journey.

When the tired traveler sat down at the inn, or at home, his most immediate need was to have his feet washed. A servant took care of this.

To signify humble service, Jesus got a basin, water, and a towel, and washed the feet of his disciples. It was a practical act.

Today, the traveler arrives with his shoes dusty, and the first thing he wants is to get them shined.

Jesus was practical and sensible. If he were living today, perhaps he would signify humble service by getting out a Shinola kit and polishing the shoes of the disciples.

Today, we should understand the spirit rather than copying the form of what Jesus did.

Britain forbade natives of India to make cloth, to keep the business for the home cotton mills. As a gesture of defiance and a demand for freedom, Gandhi and his followers spun cotton thread wherever they went.

Then Gandhi was killed, and India was made free. All reason for that spinning disappeared. But his followers solemnly met and continued the spinning. Gandhi would have regarded that as ridiculous. He would have done something new, appropriate to the changing needs and conditions of his people.

Anybody can copy a form. It takes intelligence to understand the spirit. Let us do what Jesus would have done now, rather than what he did then.

NEW HORIZONS

PERHAPS YOU NOTICED the powerful and dramatic article in the "New Horizons" department for young people in the issue of November 20—"I am thankful," by Mrs. Harley Nagel.

It all happened so quickly. Sadi was a happy bride for a year, then a widow, then a mother. Her magnificent courage has amazed even the friends who thought they knew her.

The article reveals to us the source of Sadi's strength and courage—her faith, her trust in God. It is something every young person should read.

Parents, your young people are so busy with school, with forming new friendships, they sometimes miss the very things that would help them most. As they grow, try to interest them in the publications of the church, and particularly in "New Horizons," which is meant for them.

They may find there something that will touch their hearts and help them to realize the great movements of life in which they have so important a part.

THE BULLETIN BOARD

This part of the Herald is a most important service feature. It brings to readers important district announcements, changes of address, requests for prayer, and notices of weddings, births, and deaths. Publication is free for announcements that do not exceed standard size. To give everybody fair treatment, it is necessary to condense the copy that is received.

How regularly do you read the "Bulletin Board"? Here is a means of keeping yourself informed on certain lines of church news. Your friends may be represented in this column almost any time. Some of those announcements may be important to you. You may wish to attend some conference or gathering, and you may need the information given here.

Give yourself a little training. See to it that you read the "Bulletin Board." It is more interesting than you have supposed. It contains the "vital statistics"—the most important of all news. One intelligent, well-informed woman once said, "I always turn to the vital statistics in the newspaper first."

"Vital statistics"—the death of a friend, the birth of a baby, the marriage of a fine young couple, a district or regional gathering—such things are very important to you.

Introducing...

LOYD ADAMS (page 5) was introduced on April 9, 1949.

H. JEANETTE NICHOLS, Independence, Missouri (page 11), was born and baptized in Detroit, Michigan, where she was graduated from Highland Park High School in 1930. Following graduation at Graceland College in 1932, she trained in the Detroit Institute of Musical Art and the Business Institute of Detroit where she completed a secretarial course. In 1935 she married William M. Nichols. They have two sons: William S., 14, and James E., 8. Before her marriage she worked as a private secretary. A member of the Independence Music Club, she is active in music circles and often appears as a contralto soloist.

News & Notes

JOHN SHIELDS DIES

Bishop J. E. Baldwin telegraphed us that Evangelist Shields died at London, Ontario, November 29, and was buried at Shelburne, Ontario, on December 2. He was ninety-one last May and had been under appointment since 1888. He was superannuated in 1928, but was requested to labor as health and circumstances would permit. A worthy tribute will appear in the "Herald" in due time.

SPANISH INTEREST

Apostle Charles R. Hield has been visiting groups of college and university students who are interested in spreading the Restoration message among the Spanish speaking people.

On November 10, 11, and 12 he was in Stillwater, Oklahoma; on November 14, in Warrensburg, Missouri; on November 18 and 19 in Columbia, Missouri; and on November 25 and 26 in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

DRAMA FESTIVAL

The first four of seventeen plays entered in the twentieth annual Zion's League Drama Festival were presented November 27 in the Little Theatre.

Each play is a one-act play about thirty minutes in length. Seventeen of the eighteen Leagues in Independence are presenting plays. This is the largest number presented since the festival began. John Smith, the Stake Zion's League study chairman, is in charge of the activities.

MISSIONARY ENDEAVORS

On November 17 Apostle D. T. Williams and Missionaries J. C. Daugherty and Alan Tyree left Independence for a series of missionary meetings in Kansas. They visited the group of Saints at Great Bend. On November 19 they were in charge of the organization meeting in which the Elkhart Mission became the Wilburton Branch. Ronald Manuel was made district president, and Earl Sheppard was made bishop's agent. The pastor is Clarence Owen.

On Monday Brothers Williams, Daugherty, and Tyree were in Alexander; on Tuesday in Topeka; on Wednesday in Leavenworth; on Friday in Osawatimie; and on Sunday in Lawrence, Kansas.

At Lawrence the Kaw Valley District mission was organized into a branch. Brother Daugherty was made district president and Bishop Howard Miller was made treasurer. Other officers are Gladys Andes, secretary; Clyde Johnson, church school director; Lyman Edwards, Zion's League leader; Kenneth Burns, young adult leader; Reta Miller, music director; Mrs. Kelley, women's leader. Four ordinations were approved: Kenneth Burns of Lawrence to elder, Eddie Jones of Topeka to elder; Merle Reed Harmon of Topeka to priest; Harry Pitchford of Topeka to teacher; and Clifford Alfrey of Topeka to deacon. The ordinations will be taken care of in separate branches.

THANKSGIVING SERVICE

Elder Glaude A. Smith, pastor of Stone Church, was the speaker at a special service held in the church on Thanksgiving morning. He selected as his topic, "The Lord of Hosts Shall Be With Us."

Bishop Leslie W. Kohlman sang as a solo "The Lord's Prayer." The prayer of thanksgiving was said by Evangelist A. K. Dillee. The invocation was by A. Neal Deaver and the benediction was by Howard W. Harder. The Stone Church Choir, under the direction of Paul N. Craig, presented several anthems.

The Failure

“And they bring him unto the place Golgotha, The place of a skull. And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh: but he received it not. And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, casting lots upon them.”

—Mark 15: 22-24.

The top of the hill was bare, except for three wooden crosses. They stood like stripped trees with rough-hewn branches, and the fruit they bore was death. A man was nailed to each cross.

The man in the center was a teacher. He had never drawn a salary, and he did not receive a government dole. He was a volunteer, and he lived by the contributions of his friends. He had taught a gospel of love and righteousness. He had talked of the Heavenly Father, and of his kingdom. He said that men and women could be the children of God. This was called blasphemy, and he was crucified for it.

The Roman soldiers, standing at the foot of the cross, thought he had failed. They gambled for his clothing. To them, he was just another troublemaker who would soon be forgotten.

The priests, standing a little farther away to keep themselves uncontaminated, thought he had failed. By their plotting they had stopped his mouth and put an end to his preaching. They sneered, “He saved others; himself he cannot save.”

The crowd that stood about the place was hostile. They were some of the same throngs that had welcomed him with palms and flowers a short time before. Now they were cruelly jeering, mocking him, and following the line of the priests. They who had sung the loud hosannas were turned against him now, and they had joined in the spitting, the smiting, and ribald laughter. They were sure he had failed. And the world hates a failure.

The disciples were standing afar off. They were so few, and the enemies were numerous and strong.

Perhaps they thought he had failed also. But they still loved him, and they feared the enemy. They did not come closer because they did not dare.

* * * * *

Did Jesus, too, think that he had failed? Perhaps, for a few hours, he could have thought so. He cried out to his Father: “My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?”

His hopes of winning the hearts of men by the gospel of love had come to this, that most men seemed to hate him. His hope of bringing peace for the Jews had brought a new kind of war among themselves. His hope of establishing a spiritual kingdom with his Father at the head of it had brought him only a cross for a throne. From that place of agony, could he see anything but failure?

And yet, he must have known that there was something more. The priests had not won the final decision. The mobs had not spoken the final word when they said, “Crucify him!” The Romans had not performed the final deed.

* * * * *

Then followed the earthquake, the rending of the veil of the temple, the resurrection, the darkening stormy sky—grim omens that something was wrong; that the deeds of the day had not pleased a Higher Power.

And when the disciples came on the morning of the first day to the door of the tomb to pay honor to their dead friend and teacher, they were confronted with the living form of the resurrected Savior.

He had not failed.

* * * * *

Every man carries two pictures in his mind. They have strong resemblances, and sharp differences. One of them bears a title: “The Man I Might Have Been.” The other, “The Man I Am.” And scrawled across the bottom of the latter picture, in the man’s own handwriting, is a single word, “Failure.” It is his own judgment on himself. He thinks he has failed.

Others who view his life may think differently. They count his achievements as everything that rises above the zero from which he started. He measures his failure by how far he has fallen short of his ideal.

* * * * *

Joseph Smith in Carthage jail may have thought he had failed. His enemies surrounding the prison, waiting savagely to kill him, were determined that he should fail. Perhaps Emma, waiting at home in Nauvoo, may have thought his life-long efforts to win peace and security, to build a righteous community of the Saints, had all failed. Perhaps the world thought he had failed. But this was not the end of the story. There was more to come.

The work went on, led by his son. He had not failed.

* * * * *

A man was nearing the end of his life, sick in bed, unable to rise. “I am afraid I have been a failure,” he said. “I’m not leaving very much for my family.” He had worked hard all his life. His home was free of debt. There was a little money in the bank. He had reared some splendid children, with his wife’s help, and educated them. They were fine citizens, and he had the happiness of seeing beautiful grandchildren in their homes. He had left moral and spiritual values in the world. He had not failed. L. J. L.

Second Semester at Graceland

Graceland is making another call to the young men and women of the church. The time of opportunity is here again for certain qualified persons to enroll for work at the church college.

Graceland is now accepting applications for admission from students who desire to enroll for the second semester of this school year. The second semester begins on January 25, 1951, with registration at the college. Classes begin on January 29.

This year the college will have room for about twenty new students at the semester. It is customary for about that many to enroll at the semester each year.

The college courses are not arranged to permit as great flexibility in enrollment the second semester. Not as many courses are open as is the case in the fall, since many courses last for two semesters. However, the student can enroll in such courses as beginning psychology, hygiene, and such social studies as geography, history, and sociology; he can also take some language courses, if he has had sufficient language background in high school, some secretarial science courses, and general college mathematics. Special arrangements can be made for students who enroll with advanced standing—that is, students who have had previous college work at Graceland or elsewhere.

For full details the prospective student should write the Director of Public Relations, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

The open door to a new life and greater opportunities for service await the student who accepts the challenge to obtain a Graceland education!

Notice of Appointment of Bishop's Agent, Chatham District

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Elder Thomas Glen Atkinson, Rural Route No. 1, Charing Cross, Ontario, as Bishop's Agent of the Chatham District. In this office he will labor under the supervision of Bishop Joseph E. Baldwin, who is appointed to serve as a General Church representative in this district.

Solicitors are hereby notified to send their reports for December and each succeeding month thereafter to Brother Atkinson at the above address.

We are pleased to have Brother Atkinson accept this responsible office and take this opportunity of commending him to the Saints for their support as he enters into this field of responsibility in the Chatham District.

Gavel of Historic Origin

The Presidency are recipients of a gavel made from a building erected at Preparation, Iowa, in an early day by some of the members of the church who became scattered after the difficulties in Illinois. Here is the story, as published in The Lamoni Chronicle:

PIECE OF WOOD BRINGS A STORY OUT OF THE WEST

A piece of unimportant looking wood, deteriorated by age and the elements, is all that remains in the possession of the A. E. Lewis family to remind them of an interesting but sad story of the past.

It is part of a building erected in 1857 at a place called Preparation, where a few of the scattered and confused members of the RLDS Church gathered in a colony, to form the "gate of entrance into the land of Ephraim."

The piece of wood is a mute reminder to at least two residents of Lamoni that, through the curious circumstances of the past, they were cast to play a minor role in one of the scenes in the colorful parade called history. They are E. R. Outhouse and Mrs. A. E. Lewis. Mr. Outhouse lived in the building with his mother when he was a boy, and Mrs. Lewis recalls that part of her early childhood memories are associated with the same building . . . now gone.

The story of Preparation dates back, as so many phases of early church history, to the death of Joseph Smith, the Seer and Revelator of the Latter Day Saint Church. Under the sponsorship of one, Charles B. Thompson, who at various times called himself "Chief Steward of the Lord's House" and "Father Ephraim," founded an order and laid out the town of Preparation. It was an experiment in holding all property in common and likewise a common treasury. Needless to say dissatisfaction arose among the members, and the "perpetual order" was eventually dissolved.

Thomas Lewis, the grandfather of A. E. Lewis, was one of the members of the order who became dissatisfied, and his son, Earl's father, was one of the boys of the community who joined a band of horsemen and "chased" Father Ephraim out of the settlement and across the country to . . . parts unknown.

The old piece of wood, which has served to bring this story out of the dimness of the past into the present, is now being worked over into gravels and batons, suitable mementoes of a doomed but persistent dream of mankind . . . a perfect society . . . an "all for one and one for all" existence.

The gavel has been presented to us by Brother A. E. Lewis, Lamoni, Iowa.

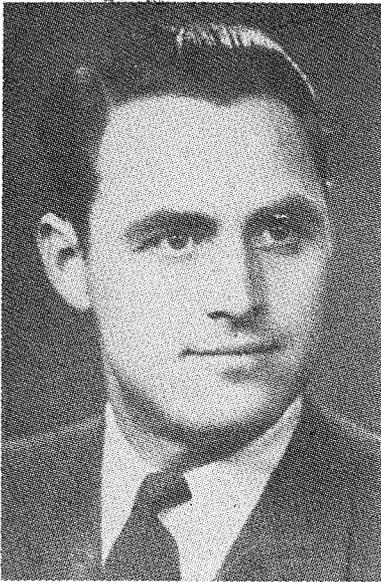

ISRAEL A. SMITH.

Worth Quoting

In catching up on some of my neglected reading a few evenings ago, I ran across the March, 1949, issue of Current Religious Thought and was attracted to the following aphorisms adapted from the writing of Reverend Benjamin Whichcote, D. D. (1609-1683). These are used by permission of its editor, Herbert D. Rugg.

1. Religion is not one thing in doctrine and another in practice.
2. Men have an itch to devise doctrines rather than to practice them.

"Let This Mind Be In You"

By LOYD ADAMS

yet somehow that last line almost haunts us as we insist on maintaining, "a mind of my own."

There are many statements from the prophets referring to the discipline of the mind, and I am suggesting contemplation on the three following:

For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he.—Proverbs 23: 7.

Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts higher than your thoughts.—Isaiah 55: 7-9.

Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others, LET THIS MIND BE IN YOU, WHICH ALSO WAS IN CHRIST JESUS.—Philippians 2: 3-5.

The mind of Christ was so trained and disciplined that he had control of himself at all times. With the power that comes from such divine discipline, he manifested his right as Master and King. We are different from him not in the manner of our temptations, but in the manner of our response. The oft-quoted passage from Hebrews says, "For we have not a high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was on all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."

LET US EXAMINE a few of our potent problems which frustrate the work of God's kingdom.

Take the problem of success or popularity. Even as the ancient Hebrews, many of us measure God's love and pleasure toward us in terms of crops in the barn, money in the bank, or praise on the lips of men. We constantly manifest through our actions that we seek the help of God when we are in trouble more than when we are sailing smoothly, more in times of sickness than in health, more during war than in times of peace. In fact, through a revelation given in 1833 (section 98) God reminded us of this tendency "In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel; but in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me." Let's note how Jesus met this problem.

There is an experience related in the sixth chapter of John which serves as a good illustration. Jesus had been teaching and healing in Galilee. His fame had spread far and wide. No modern bobby sox idol was more sought after or discussed. Thousands followed him, clamoring for his attention and favor. Early one morning he tried to slip away with his twelve by boat, but a tremendous throng ran around the end of the lake to meet him on the other side. Jesus spent the day there with them, teaching in the solemnity of nature. After spending the entire day the people were hungry, and it was in such a setting that Jesus fed them from five barley loaves and two fishes.

Many have sought to explain away the miracle of this event, but the men who wrote the experience left little to be explained. Five loaves and two fishes had suddenly become enough food to feed thousands and leave over twelve baskets full. What do you suppose the people talked about after they had eaten? The weather? The price of fish? The latest ball scores? No, it seems evident that there was only one topic of conversation, and that was Jesus. Were they saying, "Crucify him"? Hardly. John records, WHAT'S THE MATTER, don't you think I have a mind of my own?" How often I have heard that response; in fact, it seems I can remember using it myself on more than one occasion. There will probably be as many different minds as there are people who read this article. We pride ourselves, to a point of almost boasting, in the fact that we have minds of our own. "It makes us different from the beasts," we say. Many are the advocates of the philosophy that it would not be good for the country if we all were of the same opinions. This difference is suggested in the fields of politics, religion, finances, business policies, and recreation. "God gave us our mind and our agency and intended that we use them," we say. . . . This makes us different from the beasts, yes, but it also makes us different from God.

I have not found the situation within the church to be any different. It is true that we talk about the same goals and to some extent share the same dreams. In fact we join lustily in singing

Glorious things are sung of Zion
Enoch's City seen of old
Where the righteous being perfect
Walked with God in streets of gold.
Love and Virtue, Faith and Wisdom,
Grace and Gifts were all combined
As himself, each loved his neighbor,
All were of one heart and mind

Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This is of a truth that Prophet that should come into the world . . . Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force to make him a king. . . .

What do you suppose he was thinking about when he perceived this? Do I desecrate the Scriptures by suggesting you use some imagination at this point? He was tempted in all things as are we. If you had been in his place, what would you have thought? We know that a righteous king could have accomplished great good. A king with the powers of persuasion Christ possessed could have builded a strong and righteous nation, the influence of which would have been felt throughout many centuries.

Christ might have been thinking this that day on the mountain. He might have prayed, as many righteous men would, . . . "Father, these people respect me. They will follow me as their leader; endow me, therefore, with wisdom and perseverance that I might not forget as David and Solomon. Grant that my reign may be an eternal example for the rulers who shall come after me." Christ was a young man; his reign would have been a long one. As king, he would have commanded their attention much more readily. Undoubtedly the prospect was tempting. In fact it was probably just such a temptation as had come to him in the wilderness after his baptism. But the Scriptures say, "When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force and make him a king, he departed again into a mountain himself alone."

WHY WOULD CHRIST run away from a crowd who sought to glorify him (at least it was so by their standards) but later submit so quietly to a crowd seeking to crucify him? Perhaps he did not trust his own judgment; he might have been afraid that under the influence of the moment as things appeared, he would allow himself to be moved to do something contrary to the will of his Father. But he did remember what we so often forget in times of popularity . . . that wherein he might be weak or short of vision, in his Father was all wisdom and power. He undoubtedly felt the need of communion with God.

Perhaps the poet, thinking of the struggle, was inspired to write the words of the hymn which we sing so often, but many times with little understanding of the power expressed within its message.

Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile,
Weary, I know it, of the press and throng,
Wipe from your brow the sweat and dust of toil,
And in my quiet strength again be strong.

Come ye, and rest, the journey is too great,
And ye will faint beside the way and sink:
The bread of life is here for you to eat,
And here for you the wine of love to drink.

Then, fresh from converse with your Lord, return
And work till daylight softens into even;
The brief hours are not lost in which ye learn
More of your Master and his peace in heaven.

Whatever doubts might have prevailed in the mind of Christ while he was with the multitude—whatever temptations might have confronted him—were erased when he returned from his rendezvous with his Father. He was so full of the Spirit when he came down from the mountain, that he walked on the water out to the boat in which his disciples were crossing the sea. Once again he was calm and in possession of the great assurance of his mission. He returned to the people, and amid their clamor told them, "You are not following me because of what I teach; you are thinking only of the loaves and fishes which filled you. I am the bread of life, if you eat my flesh and drink my blood you shall live forever." They could not understand, for their minds were on things physical while his was on things eternal. You can almost hear them saying, "What sort of mumbo-jumbo is this?" "'Tis a hard saying. Who can hear it?" The story closes with this observation: "From that time many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him."

Of what value is health or wealth or the acclaim of men if, due to our misuse of them, they make us selfish or arrogant or blind or indifferent to the purposes of God? It all depends on how we think about the creations of God. Is it any wonder, then, that Paul recognized the importance of the way we think and said . . . "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus"? Suppose thousands upon thousands suddenly began to join the church, and millions of dollars swelled the potential of its service. Unless we become ever more fully consecrated to the cause of the kingdom, these seeming evidences of God's good pleasure could be the means of our failure and destruction. If we insist on our own mind, then we also insist on our own way which, though it "seemeth right unto us," is the way of death.

OUR MINDS are cluttered up with so many things. How often have you heard such statements as: "I have a splitting headache, I've had so much on my mind all day," or, "I forgot all about bringing those clothes from the cleaners, I've had so much on my mind all day"? "So much on my mind" seems to be the mark of a busy man in our world. It's so hard for us to make decisions, for there are so many things to consider. Decisions for Christ were relatively simple, for on his mind was but one thing. Always he was possessed by this one thought—to do the will of his Father with all of his devotion, all of his time, and all of his energy. There was no thought of vacation, no thought of salary, no thought of retirement. How different from us. . . .

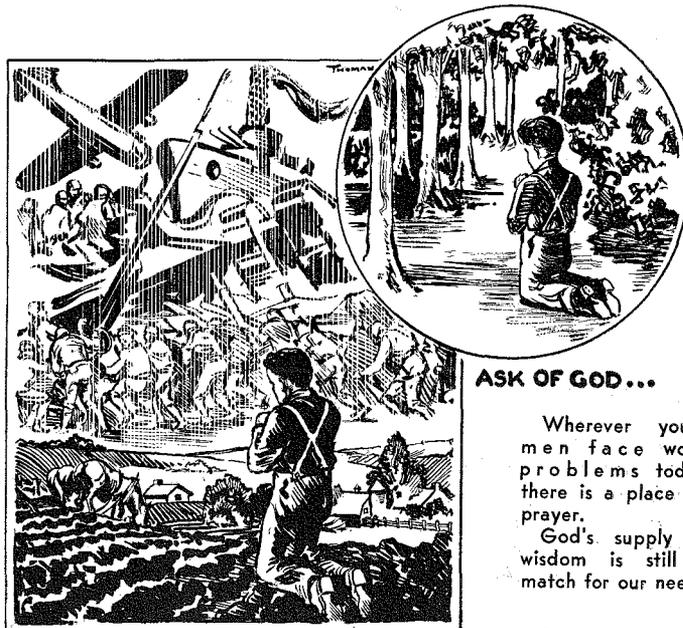

Glibly and with such deep conviction, I hear many say, "I think the church is important, but of course my work must come first." Why of course! Who among us thinks otherwise? So our time and our devotion and our energy go into our labor for earthly things with the hope that by diligent effort and good luck we might secure a better job, a bigger store, a larger farm, a house of our own, or a new television set. We long for the day when, because of our good fortune, we are permitted to spend more of our time on vacations. We work with passionate effort and sacrifice that our families may enjoy more of the comforts of life. We labor with prayer that we might be able to lay some aside so that in our old age we shall be secure.

Christ knew that in the very nature of our creation, such thinking would rob us of the power to build his kingdom: and so in his wisdom and love he pleads with us, saying:

Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or What shall we drink? or Wherewithal shall we be clothed? . . . After all these things do the Gentiles seek. Behold I say unto you that your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. Wherefore seek not the things of this world but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matthew 6: 35-38.

And with the same assurance, Paul continued to instruct the Philippians:

Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing. Brethren be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an ensample. (For many walk . . . as enemies of the cross of Christ, whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and who glory in their shame, WHO MIND EARTHLY THINGS.) For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.—Philippians 3: 16-21.

ASK OF GOD...

Wherever young men face world problems today, there is a place for prayer.

God's supply of wisdom is still a match for our needs.

...IF ANY MAN LACK WISDOM LET HIM

LET THE MIND OF CHRIST dwell in you, and you will be transformed. You will be in contact with the divine laws by which the Savior lived. You will have the secret of his power. It does not come by making the kingdom second or third in your thoughts. As many have pointed out, the greatest enemy of the kingdom is not the worst type of living but the second best. It is much harder to choose between the best and second best than it is between the second best and the worst. Only a mind that has been trained to think continually on the plan of the Father in heaven will have the vision, desire, or fortitude to make such a choice.

A mind cluttered up with careless or selfish thinking would have neither the desire nor ability to choose the way of the celestial kingdom. Christ found that to waver even for a moment from his purpose would weaken him. A most interesting illustration of this is related in the sixteenth chapter of Matthew:

. . . . From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day. Then Peter took him aside and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee

Lord; this shall not be done unto thee But he turned and said unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan, Thou art an offense unto me, for THOU SA-VOUREST NOT THE THINGS THAT BE OF GOD, BUT THOSE THAT BE OF MAN.

Peter undoubtedly pointed out to his Master that it was unnecessary for him to die, that there were other ways in which he might go about building his kingdom. They were probably good solid ideas—to us today, Peter's ideas would without a doubt have been considered sound, secure, and intelligent thinking. But Christ rebuked his friend. . . "Peter, please keep still. The things you say are not without appeal, but they are the thoughts of man. I must keep my mind filled with the thoughts of God." (Please don't confuse this with thoughts about God.)

Then our Savior, sensing the divine manner even better by virtue of his decision, turned to his followers and voiced this bit of eternal wisdom:

. . . . If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.

The interpretation of this might well be, "If you want to follow me, you must stop thinking about yourself. You must thrust in your sickle with your might for the benefit of others, but in the final culmination, you shall be rich indeed . . . in this life a hundredfold and in the world to come, eternal life."

The Apostle Paul was proclaiming that thought when he wrote these words:

. . . . Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than himself. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST reveals that our thinking must take on not only a new quality but also a new consistency. What terrible faculties of memory most of us have. How often we are forced to come humbly back to God and say, "I'm sorry, I forgot." Most of us are still like elementary school children who are punished for whispering, not because they deliberately want to break the rules but because in thinking about themselves they forget about the laws governing the larger group of which they are a part. Every Communion service, every dedication service every fellowship is filled with thoughts and testimonies of our forgetfulness. Not for a moment did the Master forget his Father's purpose in him.

During the momentous hours preceding the crucifixion, it was hardly possible for anyone to remain composed and rational. Yet, Christ conducted himself so that it seemed all others were on trial and he was the judge. Not so, however, with the disciples who had not yet trained their minds to think as did their Master.

They had vowed to stick by Jesus, and when the mob came against them, Peter drew his sword and by his Master's side faced the angry crowd. One fellow ventured too close and Peter cut off his ear. Christ rebuked Peter and commanded him to put up the sword, then he healed the ear of the wounded man. That was more than the disciples could stand, and Matthew records, "Then all the disciples forsook him and fled."—Matthew 26: 55.

Had they remembered his efforts to make them see that this time would come, they undoubtedly would have gone with him. Had they remembered for the moment the occasion on which he quieted the sea, or the time he raised Lazarus from the dead, they would have had greater courage. If, in place of physical safety, Peter and James and John had thought of their experience on the mount of transfiguration, they would probably have gone cheerfully with Christ to the cross. The pressure of the moment, however, on minds not trained to think always of others was too great, and they gave way to desertion which they probably regretted the rest of their lives.

WHAT A DIFFERENCE the course of history would have been had Christ forgotten at this moment to think of others. Taken by the soldiers of the governor and beaten, spit upon, and mocked with a purple robe and taunts of "Hail King," he must have been doing some serious thinking. What do you suppose his thoughts were of? Himself? No, thoughts of himself would never have produced the silent composure he maintained. He was probably thinking of his disciples and wondering if they would understand more clearly because of these events, and feeling that they would, he probably smiled with satisfaction.

What do you suppose Christ was thinking about while hanging on the cross with nails in his hands and spikes in his feet, a crown of thorns on his brow, and vinegar to drink? What do you suppose was on his mind? Himself? No, he was thinking of those around the cross—his mother and those who hanged him there. And in his divine love he was making intercession for them with his Father. He was thinking of generations yet unborn, of our parents, of you and me, of our children, and of the joy that would be ours through obeying the truth he was revealing. The power of such thinking made him able to endure the pain. Such power will be ours also when we dedicate all we have to the building of God's kingdom for the benefit of others.

AFTER HIS RESURRECTION, Christ walked with two of his disciples on the road to Emmaus, and, as the story is told, they did not recognize him. Noting that they were sad, he inquired of their trouble. They told him how Jesus had been crucified and then . . . sadly, almost as if all hope was gone, they concluded . . . "But we trusted that it had been he who should have redeemed Israel." They had forgotten his prophecies and divine power; they could remember only that he had been crucified. Christ realized that he must do something about their memory, so after he had taught them the Scripture once again and through his ministry revealed himself to them and to the rest of his disciples for forty days, he left with this commandment:

Tarry ye in Jerusalem until ye shall be endued with power from on high . . . for the holy ghost which the Father shall send in my name will guide you into all truth and BRING TO YOUR REMEMBRANCE all things whatsoever I have said unto you.

How desperately we need the Comforter today to make us remember. Of what tremendous need is the ordinance of the laying on of hands that we might have the ministry of the Holy Ghost, for without it we shall not be able to remain steadfast in the faith. During an especially inspiring worship experience, we have felt very full of the good Spirit, and under its influence we have seen the path of service opening before us. But the next day many of us have forgotten and have once again engaged in the self-

Ministry to New Members

II. Suggestions to Pastors -

Arranged From Notes by PRESIDENT F. HENRY EDWARDS

"It is important to minister to those we have loved enough to win."

INTRODUCTION

Before his departure on his visit to the European Mission, President Edwards gave an assignment to Managing Editor C. B. Hartsorn, to hold a seminar on the subject, "What is happening to the new members?" President Edwards left some notes to assist the discussion, and these appeared so useful, and especially helpful for pastors, that it has been considered best to present them as a part of this series, with a few adaptations, but no significant changes. Though the notes are concise, we believe that they are very clear. —L. J. L.

DURING THE YEAR 1949 we baptized 4,738 people. Some of these are in your branch. What are they doing? Are they still enthusiastic? Have you made a place for them in your church activities?

One of the major tragedies of the past—and it is as much a sin as it is a failure to witness—is that we have cooled in our ardor for the new convert soon after his baptism. This is like starving a newborn babe or leaving him on the doorstep.

It is time now for us to check up and to keep informed about where our new members are. And, for that matter, we must be interested in older members too.

We must recognize the fact that very few members—and new ones especially — are self-sustaining. Nearly all of them require nurture, friendship, guidance, and Christian love.

Here are some suggestions that will help:

1. Go through the branch record and make a list of the names of those who have become negligent, those who have not been attending church, and those who have moved elsewhere.

2. Solicit the help of the priesthood and selected members in visiting all who have been absent from church too frequently during the past year. In this visiting program it would be well to give immediate attention and ministry where there is evidence of the more urgent need.

3. If you haven't given public recognition to those baptized in the past year and a half, plan a real occasion for them. One woman who had prayed and worked many years for her husband's conversion, had the happiness of seeing him baptized. After that, she had a special birthday party for him each year on the anniversary of his baptism. A church birthday party could be arranged.

4. Arrange classes for new members. Let them become really well informed about the history of the church and its beliefs. You can use the new book, The Restoration Story, as a project course—and the new members, after learning it, can go out and tell the story to their friends. The Church Member's Manual and a number of texts and quarterlies can be used also.

5. Secure enrollment for these classes. Talk to new members individually about joining them. It is not enough to provide a class; members must be found for it. If politicians can go to the effort to "get out the vote" for themselves, we should "get out the vote" for Christ.

6. Select and keep available some of our representative church literature. There are many excellent books and tracts.

7. Distribute the literature where advisable. It should be presented with proper explanation to arouse interest. Generally, not more than one or two pieces should be given at a time. Keep in touch with the member to learn if he is reading the material. When he has, discuss its significance.

8. Try to get a good "sponsor" for each new member, someone to guide him through the first few months of membership, giving encouragement, helping him to understand the doctrine, and leading him into active fellowship with the Saints.

9. Arrange for friendly visits at the home of each new member. Let them know that priesthood visits are to be expected and anticipated with pleasure.

10. Arrange social occasions for new and older members to get together. Friendship is a strong "tie that binds" the hearts of members in Christian love.

11. Make sure that new members get into the church organizations such as Zion's League, the women's department, the men's club, or whatever may be appropriate to their needs.

12. Give each new member some task in the church. And above all, teach and encourage him to witness to others. Branch offices may be limited, but witnessing is unlimited.

13. Explain stewardship and secure a financial statement and tithes from each new member in addition to a pledge of local support.

14. Let each one feel that he has a part in the cause of Zion and in the building of the kingdom of God.

It will take some effort to make these suggestions effective and productive of good results. But it is important to minister to those we have loved enough to win. And we should remember that we grow by the number we keep!

Most of all, it is our desire to build a church membership that lives its religion in a genuine way—a living revelation of the word of God. In this is the real hope of mankind.

3. When the principles of our religion become the temper of our religion, then we are truly religious.
4. Wisdom consists in the search after God and contemplation of him; religion consists in our worship of God and our obedience to him; our happiness consists in both of these.
5. In all moral perfections God is imitable by us; we may resemble God; God is communicable to us; we may partake of him.
6. There is no better way to learn than to teach.
7. He that never changes any of his opinions, never corrects any of his mistakes; and he who is never wise enough to find out any mistakes in himself will not be charitable enough to excuse what he reckons are mistakes in others.
8. It is repugnant that God should take pleasure in us till we do harmonize with him; which is by our regeneration, being made like him and conformable to him.
9. Conscience without judgment is superstition; judgment without conscience is self-condemnation.
10. No man is wise enough for his own direction, powerful enough for his own defense, or good enough for his own satisfaction.
11. To believe there is a God is to believe the existence of all possible good and perfection in the universe; and it means to be resolved upon this, that things either are or finally shall be as they should be.
12. It is not to be expected that another man should think as I would to please me since I cannot think as I would to please myself; it is neither in his nor my power to think as we would but only as we see reason and find cause.
13. Men's understandings are often closer to agreement than their words; they may mean the same thing when they seem not to say the same thing.
14. Every mis-government of ourselves is a punishment of ourselves.
15. The right of the case is the law of heaven and should be the law of the world.
16. Every sin is voluntary and either has the consent of the mind or follows upon the neglect of the mind.
17. A natural deficiency is pitiable; a moral depravity is adominable.

A New Church for Topeka, Kansas, Branch

By MILDRED GOODFELLOW

TOPEKA BRANCH was organized October 13, 1895. Charter members were James, Janet, Jessie W., and Anna S. Baillie, Charles E. Tillinghast, and Nathan S. Dunnington. James Baillie was the first pastor.

On March 1, 1896, a meeting was called to organize a "Sabbath school." Charles Tillinghast was elected superintendent; James Baillie, assistant superintendent; Mary Hopkins, secretary, and James Duffie, treasurer. There is no record of the number present that day, but the next Sunday sixteen were in attendance.

Meetings were held in homes, in a hall, and in the State Street schoolhouse until February 19, 1905, when the first services were held in the new church, a white frame building on Rowley Street in Oakland.

Because a majority of the members had moved to the west part of town, arrangements were made in the fall of 1917 to exchange the Rowley Street church for the property at the northeast corner of King and Clay Streets, on the west side of Topeka. The move to the new location was made early in January, 1918. For the next twelve years, services were held in the store building at King and Clay; the first floor was utilized as an auditorium, while the second floor was rented. The building was razed in January, 1930, since it had become unsafe for use, and the Saints rented space in the hall at 621 Jackson for Sunday morning services. The next summer they decided to move into the residence on the lot adjoining the corner lot at King and Clay Streets. That house was purchased in 1920 for rental purposes. Brother George E. Harrington came from Independence and assisted in the remodeling. This served as a meeting place from July, 1931, until January, 1944, when the church at 914 Topeka Boulevard was purchased from the Unitarian organization. It was a beautiful, English type building, and the members regretted very much to see it torn down. In the spring of 1948 the state took over the church with the other property in the block, as a site for a state office building.

Elder M. E. Cheeseman was pastor when the Topeka Boulevard property was acquired. He passed away April 28, 1948.

The owners of the Penwell Funeral Home (located just north of the church) were kind enough to permit the group to hold Sunday morning meetings in their chapel during the next eight months, after which Sunday morning services were held in the V.F.W. Hall on West Sixth Street, and Wednesday evening prayer services were held in the homes of the members.

Lots were purchased at the northeast corner of Huntoon and Medford, and a ground-breaking ceremony was held June 26, 1949, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. President F. Henry Edwards turned the first spade of earth, followed by Pastor E. C. Christenson, and other branch officers.

On December 18, 1949, a consecration service was held in the new church. Guest speakers were President Israel A. Smith and Bishop G. L. DeLapp. This building of variegated pressed brick has been referred to in a newspaper column as "the most beautiful church in Topeka"—and members of Topeka Branch agree. The worshipful atmosphere of the sanctuary is enhanced by the stained glass window at the west end featuring the Twenty-third Psalm, and the maroon colored broadloom carpet covering the entire floor of the auditorium. Adding to the beauty and dignity of the worship services are the choir members' robes, also maroon, the gift of Brother Charles J. Sheets.

Elder Ammon Andes of Lawrence, Kansas, is the present pastor.

She Talked With God

And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity preventeth a multitude of sins. Use hospitality one to another without grudging. As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God.—I Peter 4: 8-10.

THIS WAS ONE of the marked passages found in my grandmother's Bible and most representative of the life she lived.

Nannie, as everyone affectionately knew her, was a friend to all. She was born in the northern woods of Michigan, her father a pharmacist and her mother a schoolteacher. Her early years were rugged and trying. The family suffered losses in the great fires of 1871 and 1881.

At the age of eighteen she married and later became the mother of four children. The family settled on a farm near Port Hope, and it was here Elder John Cornish first contacted them. There was no established Reorganized Latter Day Saint church within hundreds of miles, so they met in a schoolhouse on the opposite corner of my grandparents' farm. The missionaries always stayed with them when they were in that section of the country.

On Sunday the farmers for miles around came to the church service in the schoolhouse. After the meeting, they all went to Nannie's home for dinner. She arranged two long tables, and not having nearly enough chairs, had the men place long boards across chairs for adequate seating space. The spirit of hospitality reigned. Preaching followed in the afternoon, and later all went back to the schoolhouse for the evening service.

It was shortly after this first visit by Elder Cornish that grandfather died during a typhoid epidemic. Nannie was a widow at thirty-two with four children to support. In spite of her straitened circumstances, her home was still the center place of church activities, and she had a sincere welcome for the missionaries. They shared what she had and never left without a gift, which she gave wholeheartedly regardless of her own need.

Recognizing the impossibility of farming by herself, she moved to Bay City. While her small daughter, then in her early teens, managed the affairs of the home and children, Nannie worked as a practical nurse. Through the succeeding years, she kept her family fed and clothed by sewing, working in a mattress factory, serving as a meat chef in a hotel, and selling various merchandise. The Saints in Bay City had a meeting place, and each Sunday Nannie walked with her children about five miles to services. Sometimes she had carfare one way, which made it easier.

WHEN HER CHILDREN had grown, Nannie took them to Detroit. She bought a large rooming house and managed it successfully. The church was already well established in Detroit. Her duties limited her activities, but she was able to attend the evening services regularly. The women's department was small at the time, but Nannie was happy to have meetings held in her home. The ladies arrived at ten o'clock in the morning, placed their quilting frames in the living room, and worked as they discussed the gospel. At noon Nannie served a hot lunch, and they continued their work until late afternoon.

At the time of her husband's death, many friends wished to adopt her children, but with determined courage she said they would all succeed together, or starve together, but none would have more than the other. This attitude cemented a family tie that was never broken. Help was always happily given in time of sickness, financial trouble, or any family worries. As success later came to one, he shared it freely with his sisters and generously gave to the mother who had sacrificed for them all.

Nannie was a thorough Bible student and constantly urged us to study by ourselves. Her genuine hospitality, merry heart, complete family loyalty and devotion, wholehearted service to all, and spirit of friendliness were qualities seldom seen to such a degree. She never became embittered when some took advantage of her generosity, nor did she remember the gifts which she continually gave. She thought first of others. Her greatest happiness was in giving, whether it was an unexpected toy to a child or a freshly baked angel food cake to a neighbor. I never heard her say she could not do something. Last Christmas she planned to fly down to surprise me until her doctor heard about it.

She overcame mountainous obstacles but stood with patience through trials of sorrow and death. God was very personal to her. I remember running to the kitchen when I was small to see with whom

Celebrate Sixty-fifth Wedding Anniversary

ELDER AND SISTER O. J. TARY of Wheeling, West Virginia, observed their sixty-fifth wedding anniversary on October 1. Elder Tary, who served many years as president of Wheeling District, was born on March 20, 1863, in a log cabin in Tyler County, Virginia. He joined the Reorganized Church on February 25, 1881, when persecution was strong; his family and many of his friends were displeased with him for doing so, but he remained steadfast in the faith. During the first ten years of his membership, he was without church privileges; after moving to Wheeling, however, he became active in the work and on August 27, 1891, was ordained a priest. Serving as church school superintendent until 1896, he was then ordained an elder and made branch president. On June 20, 1909, he was called to the office of high priest. While serving as pastor, he frequently encountered strong opposition. It was a time when preachers often lectured on "Mormonism," without making distinction between the Reorganized and Utah Churches. Busy during the day as a postal clerk and unable to reach personally those who listened to these attacks, he began to review each lecture in the columns of the local newspaper. His articles also appeared in other publications. Although he claims credit for having made only a modest number of converts, he is particularly pleased with one who was baptized after several years of investigation—his father.

Sister Tary, the former Lovina Jane Patterson, born on January 29, 1863, was deprived of her parental home at an early age. Her mother died a few weeks after her birth, and her father died when she was eight years old. Necessity demanded that she learn frugality and good management as a young girl, and much credit for the measure of success in the home affairs of the Tary family is due to her wise use of material things. Both she and Brother Tary are staunch supporters of the financial law and have endeavored to keep it throughout the sixty-five years of their marriage.

Only one of the three children born to them survives—Mrs. Minnie V. Moser. They also have three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Brother Tary's general health is good, but his hearing and sight are failing, and he is no longer able to read the Herald for which he used to write. Sister Tary has been confined to the home for nearly five years because of poor health. Both request the prayers of the Saints and would appreciate hearing from any who care to write. Mail should be sent to them c/o Mrs. Minnie Moser, 2200 Richland Avenue, Wheeling, West Virginia,

The Bottom of the Basket

By Edith Grace Beggs

OUR POTATOES were not ready yet, so my husband brought a basket of them home from the market. They looked lovely (at least on top)—nice, large fellows with a film of black dirt still clinging to them.

"New potatoes and mint," I exclaimed, eagerly reaching for a pan and the salt jar. There is nothing like coarse salt to clean potatoes, old or new. When I was a youngster we used to put them in a pail and stir them around with a broom handle. I whisked one or two of those beauties from the top of the basket into my pan, and giving the basket brisk tipup, discovered that the bottom was covered with small potatoes. No run of the patch mixture, just painstakingly placed small grade ones. Of course I was indignant, and my husband didn't feel too pleased about it either. Since growing vegetables is our line of business, we know the wrong of this sort of thing. We grade ours and sell the small ones for less. The time spent by that fraudulent shipper in hiding those small potatoes under the larger ones was, no doubt, not taken into consideration at all.

Do we as gospel salesmen make a great display (the top of the basket) of our best "fruits," keeping the less matured ones out of sight, and even allowing diseased ones room sometimes?

We should get these fruits which are not of the good Spirit out of the "basket." A diseased potato takes up unnecessary time and room and will make the others rot if left long enough.

The fruit and vegetable grower must be constantly on the lookout for things of a detrimental nature which consume the crops and profits; if left undisturbed, they will retard growth and spoil flavor and sales.

So must we be ever on the alert and constantly diligent in our "husbandry" in God's vineyard, keeping out the weeds and diseases which are robbers of spiritual growth.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." He who is "shopping" for these fruits expects them to be as advertised and represented on the top of the basket. When that Great Inspector comes he will tip the basket. Let us be ready!

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Please harmonize Doctrine and Covenants 76: 3, 5 with regard to resurrection. In what resurrection do the honorable men of earth have part? Where will Satan be at the time of the second resurrection?
Minnesota

E. E. F

ANSWER:

We find no conflict in the texts referred to. However some confusion of thought might easily arise by failure to keep the different resurrections distinct, for they differ in point of time and circumstances.

Section seventy-six, known as "The Vision," reveals humanity in the future world as divided into four distinct groups, each in a different place, and under greatly different conditions. The resurrection is divided into two main divisions, one at the beginning of the millennium and the other at its close. Little is said here of the resurrection, but in section 85:27-30, the resurrection of each group is separately described. Some other Scriptures added to these make the story complete.

The first trump sounds the call for those of the celestial order to come forth from the dead; that is just before the coming of Christ, for they are caught up to meet him. At the sound of the second trump comes the second group, elsewhere termed the terrestrial, who rise, according to section 45:7-10, just after Christ comes. They are not caught up to meet him. So the first resurrection is in two parts, and includes the celestial and terrestrial groups.

At the sounding of the third trump the spirits who are to be judged are reviewed. They are the wicked but not the unpardonably wicked, and they remain in misery until their resurrection at the end of the millennium. They are of the celestial order and are heirs of salvation (76:7). Then the fourth trump calls the last group. They are the unpardonably wicked, sons of perdition, who remain filthy and at the judgment are sent away with the Devil and his angels. Thus the second resurrection is in two parts also.

Keeping in mind these divisions will help to clarify the subject.

The honorable men of the earth are resurrected with the terrestrial group as shown in Doctrine and Covenants 76:6.

Since Satan is to be loosed at the end of the millennium for a season, ending with the judgment, he will evidently continue on earth until the judgment sends him away with his angels.

QUESTION:

Do I sign all my property over to the church if I join?
Colorado

E. C. D.

ANSWER:

No, you don't sign anything over to the church when you are baptized. You are a steward over your property, and God expects you to function as such. As members of the church of Christ we are expected to pay our tithes and offerings in order that the work of building the kingdom may go on. WARD HOUGAS.

QUESTION:

Doctrine and Covenants 107:1 states, ". . . this stake which I have planted to be a corner stone of Zion."

Doesn't this refer to Nauvoo? Was Nauvoo a cornerstone at one time, or will it be in the future?

Illinois

ANSWER:

It does refer to Nauvoo. The verb "to be" indicates the will of God expressing opportunity for his people and his great blessing they may realize. However all of the blessings of God are conditional, and the specific condition for their prosperity and general welfare and the development of the stake was given in the following language:

But I command you, all ye my saints, to build a house unto me, and during this time your baptisms shall be acceptable unto me. But, behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms shall not be acceptable unto me; and if ye do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God.—Doctrine and Covenants 107:10, 11.

The temple was never completed. The privilege of baptizing in the river for the dead was revoked, and finally the church was rejected. Therefore, the promise regarding the cornerstone function of Nauvoo Stake was not achieved or realized.

It is implied that the work of the church, in a general way, would also prosper on the basis of the obedience of the people of God and that Zion would be redeemed. This was never done; so we have the condition of no Zion. Hence there could not be a cornerstone in a building that did not exist.

With the passing of time has come a clearer idea as to stake organization. There should be a minimum of 2,000 members. The Detroit-International had 3,150 members before its organization, but more territory was taken in, increasing the membership to about 3,750. There were also enough high priests to furnish two counselors to the president and seven other high priests to form a quorum of the high council. There was also a bishop available to become counselor to the stake bishop.

The latter part of the question, "Will it be in the future?" is definitely answered in the light of these facts. If there is such material that meets these requirements, then a stake is possible; on the other hand if such material is not available, there can be no stake until those requirements are met or are changed by action of the General Conference.

JAMES E. BISHOP.

QUESTION:

I've been baptized once. Can I join the Reorganized Church on this baptism?

Colorado.

E. C. D.

ANSWER:

No. We believe that men who perform the ordinance of baptism must be called of God; men who have been authorized by God through revelation to act for him. Baptism is one of the six principles of the gospel of Christ—a command of God (Matthew 28:19, 20). Christ told the men who were ordained by him to "go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost." These men were commissioned by him to perform this ordinance, authorized by direct command of God. "I give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 16:19. Authority is needed if one is to function for God. (See also John 1:6.) John was a man sent of God, who also baptized with water. This man had the pleasure of baptizing Jesus Christ. Jesus himself recognized authority in coming to John and demanding baptism of him.

A Tribute to the Presiding Evangelist

There is little one can say in tribute about Brother Elbert A. Smith that has not been said already. He has written so many fine articles and given so many outstanding sermons that even those of us who have not met him personally feel we know him.

I was fifteen when I first heard Brother Elbert speak. I was immediately impressed by his penetrating eyes, his humble manner, and his dignified carriage. His subject that night was "The Lord's Prayer," and as he spoke, his voice became a gentle but commanding call to those who listened. I prize the notes I kept on that sermon because I cherish the truth he brought to me in it.

I have seen him lay his hands on children's heads with what seemed to be almost a caress. I have watched his lips move and knew that the children were receiving his words with expectancy and understanding. There was love shining from their eyes as they listened to him.

I have seen him enjoying some joke—perhaps on himself—with a chuckle that made me feel merry within myself. I've seen him standing, his thin body straight as a young pine, on a busy street corner in Independence, pondering over which direction he should take—or perhaps it was over some church business or a sermon he was to give. I've seen him visit with his fellow men on these same corners, and his manner displayed a deep interest and concern in their welfare. I have observed him discussing weighty matters with other church leaders, and I have seen him with his head humbly bowed in prayer as he asked a blessing of his Heavenly Father for the church and its members.

Truly this good man serves in the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ.

ONE WHO IS GRATEFUL.

Notes of Thanks

I want to thank all the Saints for their prayers and letters. I am feeling much better now and am able to do my housework. I know the Heavenly Father heard and answered the prayers offered for me.

From an Invalid

I have been bedfast for nearly three years. The Daily Bread, Herald, and church books mean much to me. I have a devotional each day. I miss going to church services, as I was always active when my health permitted me to be, but the gospel still is dear to me; I would not want to live without it. Despite my illness, I have received many blessings, and God may yet see fit to heal me. I am eighty years old.

A Search Rewarded

Truth is of God who is the same today, tomorrow, forever. Man cannot make truth, but with God's help he may discover it. So it has been with my wife and me. Since our marriage we had hungered for the true gospel of Jesus Christ, but we did not find it until recently. Having found it at last, we feel new spiritual strength flowing through our souls, and we are satisfied.

In our search we came in contact with the false doctrines of the followers of Brigham Young. Confused by their adulteration of the truth, we continued to look for the pure and wholesome teachings of our Lord. These we found in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I pray that we may ever be worthy of receiving the wisdom and blessing of this church, and that we may live by God's truth forever.

A Great Blessing

In the past two years I have received a wonderful blessing in building my health back to where I can work again. When I think of having gone through a cancer operation and heart attack all within one year, and of having received such a blessing, I can never forget to be thankful that I have known the gospel.

The Challenge Is Great

The birth of our grandson this year was to us as rays of the sun piercing the storm clouds to bring light and warmth to earth. His coming into our lives brought love, joy, and hope to us. Although he was born prematurely and weighed only two pounds seven ounces, he began to grow under the care of skilled hands. After six weeks at the hospital he was given to his parents, who cared for him with a devotion beautiful to see. In six more weeks he weighed over eight pounds, but a condition developed which necessitated an operation. He did not survive.

At the funeral Pastor Frank McDonald, who had lost his own son several years ago, spoke with sympathetic understanding. He told us that this small child had served his purpose here and that God had taken him into a far better condition than we could ever hope to provide for him on this earth.

The following Sunday I awoke feeling very tired. There were many things for me to do—breakfast to prepare, children to get ready for church school, dinner to start—and although I knew it was my duty to tend to these, I dreaded doing them. Then as I closed my eyes I saw in vision our little grandson beckoning me to come on. That was all the stimulus I seemed to need.

I want to be able to have love in my heart for all mankind, to forgive those who wrong me, to obey the commandments of God, and to treat others as I would be treated. The challenge is great, but the reward, when we are again united, will be sweet.

Appreciates the "Herald"

I receive much comfort from reading the Herald, and I am grateful to all who write for it. It means much to me, especially since I am not well. I am happy to pray for those who request prayers, as I know the Lord can grant wonderful blessings. Although I tried not to tell people of my illness, word soon got around and many have come to visit me. Several members of the priesthood have come to administer and inquire how I am feeling. I should like for Herald readers to remember me in their prayers.

Blessings to a Shut-In

I have been unable to walk for nearly three years on account of a broken hip. I am slowly improving, and for this I am very thankful. I have never suffered with it, which seems almost a miracle.

I have so many blessings they are almost countless. The Herald and the radio are two great blessings to the shut-ins.

Blessed Through Administration

Two years ago my daughter and her husband were seriously injured in an automobile accident, and the doctors thought they would never recover. However I called for the elders and finally got the doctors' permission to have them administer to my loved ones. Before the elders left the hospital, both the doctors and nurses agreed they were welcome to come again any time of the day or night. One doctor said later that without God's help neither my daughter nor her husband would have made the recovery they did. My son-in-law does not belong to the church yet, but I am in hopes he will join soon as he believes the gospel. My husband has been a member only since June of last year.

Enjoys Missionary Series

I want to express my thanks for the printing of "Experiences of a Missionary," by L. G. Holloway. I found the series intensely interesting, especially the account of the debate held at Burlington, Colorado, as that is where I was born.

I also wish to express my appreciation for the work the "Town Mothers" of Lamoni are doing for college students.

“Church Schools Banned”

AN EDICT went forth from “American Party” Headquarters forbidding all church school services in the churches of North America.

Word came to us over the radio, and that evening we read it in the papers with consternation. We had voted against the superintendent at the last branch business meeting, and we rarely went to our Sunday class because the teacher used quarterlies only, seldom referring to the biblical or Book of Mormon text. His lessons were short on illustrative material from history or experience or reading, and he had just had his teeth out. Why should we either take our friends out to our class or go ourselves? Then, too, we were usually tired on Sunday morning, particularly after a late theater on Saturday nights. Most important of all, Sunday morning starts helped get us out of the worst traffic if we wanted to go on a drive or a picnic.

Just the same, we resented this abolition of church school. It was just the place to send our little cousins and small sister. They had to learn something of our church’s history and teaching before becoming eligible for baptism, and they picked up other useful information there we couldn’t give them. They learned the fine old hymns, too, and the junior choir director was discovering what a good voice Ruby Ann had. Singing in the choir had taken away much of her self-consciousness and had sharpened her sense of time.

We remembered the inspiring addresses we had heard from visiting church celebrities in the years gone by, the grand swing of the familiar hymns, and the moving accent of a hundred small voices repeating the Lord’s Prayer in unison. We remembered the early Sunday sunshine filtering in through the stained glass windows and shining on little new heads and on fine old gray heads we had worshiped with for years. We thought of the jolly and informative lessons in classes we had spent other years in, and the basketball and softball practices of class teams. It seemed too bad to think that there would never again be any of this, and that now we would simply have no choice but to stay in bed or go motoring on Sunday mornings. Somehow the prospect of this and nothing more had suddenly become dull and uninteresting.

The dismal premonition of further Party orders bothered us, too. In other countries the abolition of services for the young people had barely preceded the stoppage of all church worship. Would our churches themselves soon be closed down by Party command? That really brought us up with a jolt.

We wanted sermons—once in a while—and anniversary suppers and conferences and choir anthems and marriages and funerals. We wanted to see the elders continue to bless new babies and to baptize new members. When church was there we could attend or not, as we had inclination and opportunity. But take church away and—well, there was no substitute, was there? Church was really a part of our lives, and anchored close to the core of us, a pleasant memory of morning bells in the sun, of cheery greetings at the church door, of noble hymns and swelling organ music, of uplifting and stirring sermons by elders we knew and apostles we revered, of the comfortable words over the dead, and prayers for the bowed heads of all ages.

THEN I WOKE UP—and decided to go to church school this lovely autumn morning. It was good to have the chance; our fathers had died for what we had long taken too casually. Never again, though. That dream of a closed church had taught me where we stood.

EASTERN MICHIGAN DISTRICT.—The annual conference was held at Sandusky on October 15. The conference was in charge of High Priest Melvin Russell, Flint, Michigan (representing Apostle C. George Mesley), and Elder J. V. Pement of Sandusky, Michigan. Bishop T. A. Beck of Lansing was visiting teacher. General prayer service was held at 9:30 with a good representation of the district membership present. Brother Russell spoke at the 11:00 service.

At 12:00 a basket lunch was held in the lower auditorium of the church. At 1:30 Bishop Beck instructed a large group of solicitors and many other priesthood members. At the same hour Sister Sunshine Beck gave a very challenging talk to the women of the district on "Witnessing for Christ."

At the business meeting held at 2 o'clock, the following officers were elected: J. V. Pement, district president; John Rogers and Archie Harder, counselors; Ruth Rogers, secretary; Herb McFarlane, treasurer; John Rogers, religious education director; Eldon Winters, supervisor of priesthood training; Iva Horton, women's leader; Florence Schufelt, music director; Jennie Booth, publicity agent; O. J. Campbell, auditor. Those sustained in office were O. J. Campbell, bishop's agent, and Maud Wilson, historian and auditor. The following recommendations were approved; Alma Davis, Robert Richards, and Kenneth Rich for priests; Elmer Morin and Donald Richards for teachers; Aaron Haley and E. J. Morin for deacons.

Both Robert and Donald Richards are attending Graceland College and their ordinations will take place there.

Brother Pement gave a report on plans made and goals outlined for the work in the district during the coming year.—Reported by JENNIE M. BOOTH.

PEORIA, ILLINOIS.—Many of the members attended the recent district conference held November 4 and 5 at Rock Island, Illinois. Several of our young people attended the Young People's institute.

Under the capable leadership of Brother Elvin Duke, Peoria young people have attended several special retreats and institutes arranged by district officers during the year, and are becoming better acquainted with those of their own age from other branches.

The Communion service, deferred because of the district conference, was held at the church hour, November 12. Elder and Mrs. J. O. Dutton of Galva, Illinois, were invited to sit with the presiding priesthood and have a part in the service. In the evening, the second branch fellowship supper was held in the church room with Sisters Wayve Frye, Ella Gabriel, Ann Lynn Hatton, and Marjorie Brooks as hostesses.

Peoria Saints still have one goal, the building of a suitable church home, and all departments are working toward that end. The women have made some notable contributions, handing over to the building fund at the annual branch business meeting held October 17, a check for one thousand dollars. At the recent bazaar held by the women on November 6 in the church room, a chili supper was served, and a net profit of $332 was realized. Members of Zion's League were the waitresses and rendered most efficient service.

There will be a special Thanksgiving service with Elder Raymond Wrigley as speaker, November 26. A benefit concert that afternoon in the church room will be given by Mr. Jay Hatton who is a very talented violinist and a soloist with the Peoria Symphony Orchestra. A charge will be made and the money turned over to the branch building fund.—Reported by GLADYS L. HEGWOOD.

SINKING SPRING, OHIO.—In the "Briefs" of the November 20 issue, a name was spelled incorrectly. The name appeared in print as Elder Huton. The name should have read Elder Orval M. Hooten.

ROCK ISLAND DISTRICT.—Following the district business meeting held on November 5 in Rock Island, Illinois, which provided for the organization of a branch in Davenport, Iowa, the Saints of Davenport met on Sunday evening in the Lend-A-Hand Club for the purpose of organization of the Davenport mission into a branch. District President Lyle W. Woodstock was in charge of the service. After the singing of "The Church's One Foundation," Elder E. R. Williams gave the invocation. Sister Jean Hinkle played during the offertory which was in charge of District Treasurer John Stiegel. A period of musical meditation and prayer followed, after which Lyle W. Woodstock yielded the chair and presented the mission to Apostle D. T. Williams for the business of the hour. A motion was made by E. R. Williams that the action of the district conference be accepted and that this group of the Davenport Saints proceed to organize as a branch. The motion was seconded and unanimously passed. The election of officers followed with Elder Charles Shippy being elected as pastor.

After the election, the officers were called to take seats immediately before the presiding officers, and Apostle D. T. Williams delivered a charge to the officers and the branch. Evangelist W. W. Richards, member of the new branch, offered a prayer of consecration and blessing on the new branch and its officers. Seventy F. C. Bevan led the congregation in singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and Elder C. M. Beil, member of the district presidency, offered the benediction.

District President Lyle W. Woodstock was re-elected as were John C. Steigel, treasurer and bishop's agent; Winifred Stiegel, director of religious education, and Leonard Hendricks, young people's leader. New officers include Lillian Gamet, secretary; Ruth Shippy, director of women, and Jean Hinkle, music supervisor.

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE.—Two babies were blessed on November 12 at the church. Reed Lynn Darmon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lee Darmon, was blessed by Elders Glaude A. Smith and Lewis J. Richards. June Maureen Shakespeare, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Everett L. Shakespeare, was blessed by Elders Lewis J. Richards and Glaude A. Smith.

SAULT STE. MARIE, ONTARIO.—On October 13 a cottage meeting was held at Sister Dorothy Fletcher's house. Elder L. C. Zonker showed slides on the "Life of Christ." A second cottage meeting was held at Sister Fletcher's home on October 20. Brother Zonker and Elder William McMurray were both present. A third meeting was held on October 24 after which the young people had an enjoyable evening of singing. A lunch was served with a birthday cake for Brother Zonker. A final cottage meeting was held on October 31 with Brothers Zonker and McMurray present.

On October 24, the young people from the Canadian and American Saults enjoyed an evening of games and songs, after which a lunch was served. They were very pleased to have Brothers Zonker and McMurray there.

The district conference opened with prayer service November 4. At 11:00 the priesthood and women's classes were held. At 2:00 was the business meeting. The following officers were elected: R. Stowe, district president; W. A. Bushila and V. Charlton, counselors; Sister B. McKiddie, secretary; A. Nott, treasurer; Sister Backman, women's leader; Sister O. Flood, music director; Brother Beaudin, church school director; F. H. Edwards, young people's director; Sister B. Beaudin, historian; Brothers O. King and G. A. Edwards, auditors; and V. Charlton, visual aid librarian. On Saturday evening the church was packed to capacity to see a movie on "Alaska, the Land of the Midnight Sun." Apostle Mesley took these pictures.

Communion service was held Sunday morning, followed by a sermon by Apostle Mesley at 11:00. In the afternoon Brother Mesley conducted a round-table discussion and a devotional service. During the devotional service Janice Irene, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Nott, was blessed by Apostle Mesley. A very large combined choir assisted in two services during the conference.

In the evening a preaching service was held by Brother V. Charlton of Little Current, Ontario.

LAWTON, OKLAHOMA.—A meeting was held November 12 at the home of Major and Mrs. Marvin Lindmark. Following a basket dinner, Elder R. W. Bunch, Wichita Falls, Texas, spoke. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Johnson, J. R. Johnson, Mrs. Karr, Sergeant and Mrs. Seth Osborne with Seth, Jr., Mrs. Marie Detty, Mrs. Deane Edwards, Morris Bunt, George Rummel, Marvin and John Lindmark. The plans are to hold similar meetings in the future.—Reported by MRS. BETTE LINDMARK.

PONCA CITY, OKLAHOMA.—On October 15, the group of Saints were organized into a mission. Officers are: Paul Storm of Shidler, mission pastor; Bob Cavanaugh, religious education director; Grace Crocker, secretary; Bill Bozart, treasurer; Edith Padget, women's department leader; Ruby Hart, solicitor; Mary Sternenzke, music director; Graham Hart, historian; Bob Cavanaugh, Cecil Jackson, Clark Bowker, Graham Hart and Bill Bozart, building and finance committee; and Clark Bowker and Bob Fender, auditors.

At the 11:00 service Brother Cavanaugh was ordained a priest. Priesthood has long been needed in this little group, and there was cause to rejoice over his ordination. Until then the only priesthood member did not live in Ponca but has driven faithfully some thirty-five miles on Sundays and Wednesdays to meetings.

The group shows a marked progress. Having been meeting together only a little over a year, the organization meeting brought out the fact that $2,100 has been obtained for a building fund. Only $700 more is needed, and the lots will be paid for and the building can be started. Reported by GRACE CROCKER.

ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO.—Apostle Paul M. Hanson and Seventy Russell Ralston visited this group August 28, and ordained Alvie A. Barrett to the office of priest, and Paul A. May to the office of deacon. Apostle Hanson appointed Alvie Barrett as pastor of the group. Evangelist Wm. Patterson conducted a ten-day missionary series in September. Mrs. Ruth Clear of Socorro, New Mexico, was baptized, and seven patriarchal blessings were given. Elder Harry Sheffer of Tucson, Arizona, spent four weeks in October with the group, ministering to the Saints and also conducted the group business meeting. Other officers to serve in the coming year are as follows: Priest Ott Jones, church school director; Mrs. Zelma Schrader, secretary; Max Jones, treasurer; Loretta Jones, music supervisor; and Ruth Barrett, publicity agent. Meetings are being held in the V. F. W. Hall Sundays, with church school at 10:00 a.m., preaching services at 11:00 a.m., study class at 6:30 p.m., and prayer service at 7:30 p.m. "Exploring the Church," by Elbert A. Smith, is the subject being taught by Max Jones in the study class.

Recent baptisms include Clyde, Claude, and Jeanetta McNew of Cuba, New Mexico.

Visitors in this community are urged to contact the pastor, Alvie A. Barrett, Phone 3-3616.—Reported by RUTH BARRETT.

STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE.—Georgianna Lynn Winfrey, daughter of James and Louise Augusta (Harrison) Winfrey was blessed at the church on November 19 by Elder Glaude Smith and Howard W. Harder. Brother and Sister Winfrey who live in Colorado were visiting relatives in Independence.

WILBURTON, KANSAS.—On November 19 the mission was organized into a branch. Those assisting with the organization were Apostle D. T. Williams, District President Ronald Manuel, and Missionaries J. C. Daugherty and Alan Tyree. Visitors and members were present from several surrounding towns, some driving more than two hundred miles for the occasion.

Officers elected were: Clarence Owen, pastor; Maxine Coen, secretary; Wendell Coffman, treasurer; Floyd Coen, church school director; Pauline Coen, women's leader; Richard Coen, young people's leader; Ethel Coen, children's supervisor; Bonnie Coen, music director; Dale Coen, bishop solicitor; Rena B. Coen, historian; and John Farris, auditor.

Services began Sunday morning with Alan Tyree in charge. J. C. Daugherty taught a class on stewardship. Church services were at 10:45 when Apostle D. T. Williams spoke.

A basket dinner was prepared in the church basement at noon. At 1:30 there was an ordination service. Dale B. Coen was ordained to office of priest by Ronald Manuel and D. T. Williams. John H. Farris was ordained to office of teacher by Clarence Owen and Ronald Manuel. Ralph W. Coen was ordained to office of deacon by Earl Sheppard and J. C. Daugherty.

A Communion service was held. A basket supper was served in the basement. Elder Clarence Owen was in charge of the evening service. Elder J. C. Daugherty spoke.—Reported by RENA B. COEN.

SAVANNA, ILLINOIS.—Business meeting was held October 25, and the following officers were elected: Donna Sweeney, secretary; Lucille Sweeney, treasurer; Merle Welch, church school director; Iva Welch, women's leader; Donna Sweeney, music leader; Jo Scott, young people's leader; Wilma Phillips, book steward; Iva Welch, solicitor; Eldora Sweeney, Herald correspondent; Ed Sweeney, and Floyd Welch, auditors; Floyd Welch, Bill Scott, Ed Sweeney, Franklin Troester, Lucille Sweeney, and Lyle Woodstock, building committee; and Lucille Sweeney, historian.

The women's department held its election of officers October 12. New officers are: Lucille Sweeney, president; Jo Scott, vice-president; Rose Lister, secretary and treasurer; and Iva Welch, teacher.—Reported by ELDORA SWEENEY.

RIDGEFIELD, WASHINGTON.—The annual business meeting was held October 15 under the direction of Elder J. L. Verhei, district president. The following were elected: Elder Milton Becker, pastor; Roy Becker and Ralph Chapman, associates; Waldo Lasley, church school director; Roy Becker, young people's leader; Phyllis Snead, secretary; Robert L. Snead, treasurer; Earl Phillips, auditor; Norma Becker, music director; Francis Roth, publicity; Elsie Becker, social leader; Ralph Chapman, librarian; Marguerite Kemp, dramatic leader; Ralph Chapman, Robert L. Snead and Hans Roth, building committee.

Brother J. L. Verhei spoke in the evening.

The women's group met at the home of "Kit" Chapman, October 27, for the election and installation of officers. New officers are Ruth Phillips, president; Kit Chapman, vice-president; Phyllis Snead, secretary and work chairman; Frances Roth, treasurer; Marguerite Kemp, friendly visitor; Letha Hayes, social leader; Norma Becker, program chairman; Pat Musgrove, cradle roll worker.

Roycie Chapman, district women's leader, presided over the meeting. Carol Chapman assisted in the installation service.

The study to be taken this fall will be "I Witness" by Blanche Mesley.—Reported by FRANCES ROTH.

The stock of the cloth bound Book of Mormon is exhausted. More will be available in March, 1951. The limp leather binding at $5.25 and the flexible leather binding at $5.75 are in stock and can be shipped immediately.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

In Memory of Nina Smith - By ALICE BURGESS

ON MAY 15, 1946, acting on the suggestion of our council chairman, the General Council of Women voted unanimously to invite Sister Nina G. Smith, as "First Lady" of our church, to become an honorary member of the council and to attend our meetings whenever it was possible. President Smith's answer was as follows:

"I am pleased that you desire Sister Smith to be an honorary member of your General Council of Women. You honor her, and you honor me. I am pleased of course to concur, and I trust Nina may be spared many years to help the women whose interests have been close to her heart.

"In bonds,
"(Signed) I. A. Smith."

It is sincerely regretted that Sister Smith's health did not permit her to attend our regular meetings. However, her lovely presence and well-chosen words of greeting always added luster to our General Conference teas and socials. Her gracious personality will be sadly missed by the women of the church in such future greetings.

At a women's class of the 1948 Conference, Sister Nina gave a poem, "My Treasure," by Winifred E. Garrison, which mirrored beautifully the richness of her inner life and thought. An excerpt of this poem follows:

O I am rich in treasure stored away,
Old ecstasies and half-remembered joys;
Prismatic dawns that faded to white
noons,
Knowledge forgotten; songs my mother sang;

—Grant me, Lord, new songs;
New mirth and wisdom, that my soul
be fed,
Give me this day my spirit's daily bread.

On Thursday morning, April 6, 1950, following the presentation of a dramatic sketch picturing the personalities of five leading women of the Restoration, Sister Israel A. Smith was introduced as our own "First and Elect Lady" of the church today. She responded with a very humble, beautiful statement of her personal interest in and devotion to the women's work of the church and her appreciation of the lives of the great women of the past. Some of her words at that time were reported as follows:

In the early years of our dramatic club, we dramatized these same things. I was chosen Emma Smith, and later the mother, Lucy. Those were interesting days, but this morning I have realized how rich my life has been. I was not able to enjoy some of the Saints that were dramatized, but I remember Marietta Walker well. Ruth Smith was very dear and close to me, and one time she said, "Nina, we understand each other."

The life of Emma Smith was made more interesting to me by hearing her oldest granddaughter, Emma Smith McCallum, tell of the years she spent in her grandmother's home.

The years have passed since Emma Smith was a girl and a noble woman, and we all wish to emulate her virtues.

My greatest desire is to be faithful to my responsibility. I ask your prayers that the Lord will continue to bless.

MRS. ARNSEN opened this year's October meeting of the General Women's Council with a memorial service to Sister Nina Smith. Her expressions of her deep love and appreciation of the life of Sister Nina were brought to a close by these familiar lines as a true characterization of Sister Smith's life:

Somebody did a golden deed,
Somebody proved a friend in need,
Somebody sang a beautiful song,
Somebody smiled the whole day long,

Somebody thought, 'Tis sweet to live,"
Somebody said, "I'm glad to give,"
Somebody fought a valiant fight,
Somebody lived to shield the right.

—Anon.

Blanche Edwards Mesley then read three beautiful poems also very appropriate to the memory of Sister Nina. Excerpts from these poems follow:

MARGARITAE 'SORORI

A late lark twitters from the quiet skies:
And from the west,
Where the sun, his day's work ended,
Lingers as in content,
There falls on the old, gray city
An influence luminous and serene,
A shining peace.

So be my passing!
My task accomplish'd and the long day done,
My wages taken, and in my heart
Some late lark singing.

—William Ernest Henley.

BECAUSE WE HAD A FRIEND

Life never would have been so rich,
To us so well worth-while;
But for the friendly words she spoke,
But for her cheery smile.

—Flora B. Walker.

OH, MAY I JOIN THE CHOIR INVISIBLE

Oh, may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence; live
In pulses stirred to generosity,
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
Of miserable aims that end with self,
In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars,
And with their mild persistence urge men's search
To vaster issues.

So shall I join the choir invisible,
Whose music is the gladness of the world.

—George Eliot.

"All Good Books"

By MAURINE GREENE COTTEW

THE SIX BLIND MEN of Hindustan like the God Book." They make and their wall-to-fan-to-rope estimates of the elephant's appearance led my three year old and me into quite a discussion recently. The question, "Who got them blind?" was followed by one about how it feels to be blind. After quite a bit of talk, she finally drew the comparison to the Bible story of Bartimaeus—the six men were "just like in the God Book." There was nothing unusual in her thinking, but the words stayed in my mind—"just like the God Book."

I have always been—and still am—an advocate of the advice:

Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning by study, and also by faith.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

... study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5.

Many books have given me knowledge, inspiration, and an insight into the lives of other people. Those with beautiful prose and poetry have prompted me to enjoy their loveliness aloud. Some have provided refreshment and laughter. Surely these are included in the "good books" which help to make the good life.

Through the years I have enjoyed books on the psychology of living—in recent years many of them have been written by ministers with emphasis on applying religion to living. Among these are Dale Carnegie's How to Win Friends and Influence People; Take a Look at Yourself by John Miller; Fulton Oursler's The Precious Secret; Try Giving Yourself Away by David Dunn; Brochman's Humanity and Happiness; The Art of Real Happiness by the minister, Norman Vincent Peale, and the doctor, Smiley Blanton. Interesting as they all are, varied in anecdote and illustration, addressed to all who will read and heed, still the good thoughts they express are simply those of the Bible. They are "just fine, inspirational reading. If we derive good from them and feel that they help us to form better habits or better attitudes toward life, they are good for us to study, but we should be aware that we will find no rule for righteous living that was not first given in the Bible.

Even Marjory Wilson's How to Live Beyond Your Means (which, by the way, does not advocate increased installment buying) is only an extension of such advice on thrift as that found in Proverbs, or on ways of happiness from following the Golden Rule or Christ's Sermon on the Mount.

Many of us women feel at times that there are so many Martha duties to be done that it is difficult to live a Mary life. For those times Miss Wilson's works and such books as Time Out to Live (especially the last chapter) by Tomlinson may be helpful.

I am reminded of the humorous couplet my mother used to toss at me sometimes,

So now get down in all this muss,
And thank the Lord it ain't no wuss.

Crude as it is, it was not meant to be sacrilegious. Isn't that really what Paul meant when he said, "be filled with the spirit . . . giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ"?

THROUGH THE YEARS I have read my Bible and used it in church work, but I am far from my idea of what a student of the Bible should be. Perhaps I have spent some time on other good books that I should have divided more evenly among the Three Standard Books.

Rather than casting a reflection on the Bible, I am really admitting its superiority, even while dividing my time on it with many other books. In effect, I have been saying, "These books have something good to offer me. They are attuned to the present age. I want to read them now. I can always study the Bible."

The thing I need to recognize is that I shall not always be here. I may literally have no tomorrow to study the Book of Life. I should start today to give the Bible a more rightful share of my time. I might well begin by rereading Matthew 5, the Sermon on the Mount. To broaden my understanding of it in the light of present-day thinking, I shall turn to The Psychology of Christian Personality by Ernest M. Lignon. A combination of "the God Book" and one with thoughts "just like the God Book" should increase my knowledge and acceptance of Christian teachings.

The Best Compliment

By Mrs. Lela Parkhurst

The lady said, "What nice children you have. You should be very proud of them."

We wanted a new living room suite, but we decided we didn't need it as much as we needed a piano so the children could take lessons. We wanted a new car, but we decided to make the old one do a while longer and not be put in such a pinch to pay for a new one.

We wanted to have a nice flower bed about the house, but Frisky our dog and Skippy the neighbors' dog liked to wrestle in just that very spot, so we enjoyed the flowers at the front side of the bed. The frost killed them all the other night anyway.

We wanted an attractive, well-kept yard, but by the time the children were through playing, there were boxes, wagons, and miscellaneous articles scattered about.

No. The lady didn't say, "What lovely new furniture you have," nor "What a beautiful new car you have," nor "How lovely your flowers and yard are." She said none of these things. But the lady did say, "What nice children you have. You should be very proud of them."

And my heart was made to rejoice.

By ELAINE OLSON

While the Olson by-line is new, the writer is not. Elaine Carson, now Mrs. Merlin Olson, has written several times for New Horizons. Following her marriage, she gave up her work with the Saskatchewan Department of Social Welfare and moved to Porcupine Plain where she and her husband, with one Latter Day Saint family, conduct regular church school services and look to the day when a mission will be established in their community. On October 1 they met with other "scattered Saints" in that territory at a town called Bjorkdale for an all-day service. Of it she says, "There were thirty adults and five children. After the service we socialized over a potluck lunch and enjoyed an experience we'll be repeating as soon as roads and weather permit." The article is her reflections on the meeting.

IN A SENSE it was not a spectacular service. The speakers were not eloquent orators. They did not speak in tongues nor through the gift of prophecy, but they did speak with sincerity and with the ring of truth. The prayers of the laity were not long, but were straightforward communion between Father and child, spoken in faith, believing. It was not a spectacular service, but it was good to be there. To the priesthood members it brought a sense of ministry, a feeling of pastoral responsibility; these were their people. To the rest of us it brought a sense of oneness with God and with each other. Some were meeting for the first time, yet they arose with the feeling of brotherhood that usually comes only from long years of acquaintance.

The first thing noticeable about the service was the youthfulness of those in charge, yet they were not boys. A veteran of World War II spoke with clarity and philosophized on the quality of our thankfulness in this season of harvesting and thanksgiving. All we wanted? No, we did not have that—the frosts prevented it, but we had enough for our needs and maybe more. In comparison to peoples of famine-scourged lands, we had much for which to be thankful. Then he mentioned the oblation. "We should give to our less fortunate brother," he said, and then asked, "Who was the less fortunate? The widow who gave her mite, and received God's richest blessing, or the wealthy man who gave an almost negligible portion of their worldly goods, doing so openly to be praised of men and finding in that their complete recognition?"

He concluded with a personal testimony of his belief in the fullness of the gospel and of God's watch care over him while he was serving in Europe. He said that he had been told in prophecy while attending a prayer service in England that he would come back, if he were faithful, to minister to his people. He knew not, he said, as to the completeness of his faith, but he stood before us—clean cut, physically strong, appealing in his admonition for a better quality of Christian living. It was a good sermon. It made us think; it made us thankful.

A veteran of World War II spoke with clarity and philosophized on the quality of our thankfulness.

THE NEXT SPEAKER told us of his General Conference experiences. He relayed advice from the bishops on down-to-earth problems such as loans. He expressed confidence in the leaders of the church and shared with us his joy in seeing the "bigness" of the church. Many of us had experienced nothing larger in church gatherings than the present service. To see thousands of Latter Day Saints assembled at once is almost beyond our conception. He brought us a touch of the general church, even though we were hundreds of miles from the Auditorium.

THE THIRD of the young priests conducted the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and the brief fellowship service. It was an enriching, joyful experience, as through the spirit of his own calling, he renewed in our consciousness the fact that God's work on earth can be done only by those who accept their call and shoulder their responsibility. "God's richest blessings always flow through hands that serve him here below." He called for prayers and in humble, earnest, response, we all shared in supplications for strength, understanding, faith, and comfort for our brother and sister in another branch, who had lost their little son. We prayed for those who were ill; for those who were confused spiritually; for those who were weak. In benediction, this young minister raised his voice to God and expressed a feeling of sharing with Christ the power of his ministry and his passion for the souls of men, of sharing with God the deep joy of doing his will and "feeding his sheep."

THIS WAS NOT A BRANCH in regular service. It was a gathering of scattered Saints. Some "refugees" from the drought-stricken sand hills of Senlac had come

Everybody's Dictator - By NAOMI RUSSELL

AT THE CENTER of every personality is a dictating motive which cracks the whip and drives a person to either good or evil. Its power over thought is as compelling as fear, and its will to be satisfied as demanding as hunger.

Many of history's tragedies and triumphs have been the result of these motives. A man whose craving for victory drove him and his army of slaughterers from country to country wept when he had no more worlds to conquer. A sickly lad in Corsica whose schoolmates pushed him aside because he wasn't their physical equal swore he would make them someday bow to his will. He did, and thousands more with them. Yet for all the power and wealth he gained, he died owning only a pair of boots. A young American watched a slave being beaten and resolved that someday he would do all in his power to put an end to such injustice. Years later he was killed because of the action he took against this wrong, but his Emancipation Proclamation wrote a new chapter of freedom in the nation's history. Another young American—the descendant of a slave—saw a chance to help his people to a better life through science, and in so doing benefited the entire world. But these are "big" examples of the effect of motives. Less obvious are the ones that lead to happiness or frustration in individual lives and make a heaven or hell of the small sphere these lives touch.

A FATHER who thought he personally would have to pay in the hereafter for any "unrighteousness" on the part of his children set his sights on celestial glory and proceeded to make his sons and daughters toe the same rigid mark he drew for himself. He several years ago to carve out a living in a bush country that had to be cleared before it could be developed into an agricultural country. Some were pioneers, almost from birth, in this same school of "hard knocks," but through perseverance in hardships almost inconceivable, they were now "on their feet." Some had "gathered" after lifelong isolation and were beginning to appreciate the joy of meeting with Saints. One member from England contributed richly to the spiritual benefit of the gathering. Others feasted once more from the "full cup" of blessings so often enjoyed in branch fellowship.

To some this service was a rich reward for the experiences and clean living that had gone on before. But to most of us it was a vision of what can be done. It was a beckoning light. God had moved upon his people to gather, even though briefly, and in so doing they found strength.

didn't go to movies, he didn't waste time on sports, he didn't spend money on automobiles or radios or magazines—and neither did anyone else in that household. He believed in sober faces and plain clothes, and those two characteristics set every member of his family apart from the rest of society. Actually he didn't enjoy living this way, and he didn't like having his wife and children be unhappy when they looked around them and saw that they were missing out on the good things their neighbors took for granted, but his goal was celestial glory and, according to his standards, this was the only way to attain it.

THE YOUNGEST DAUGHTER in a family of seven grew up to realize that she was not welcome. The other six had been born during prosperous years when the parents were younger, but the seventh . . . well, the mother felt she was too tired to have another baby; the father resented the extra expense, especially since the depression had already necessitated a revision of the budget, and the older children, particularly those in high school, didn't look forward to having a "squalling baby" around the house. So the youngest daughter had three strikes against her before she was born. When she became old enough to know how things stood, she began to fight. At first it was for a place in the hearts of her parents, brothers, and sisters. She brought home model report cards, thinking they would give her a better rating with the family. But there had been "A's" on the others' report cards, so she failed to make much of an impression. She made small gifts—bookmarks and hot pads and calendars—for her nearest of kin at Christmas time, but her childish gifts were not appreciated. Whatever she tried was met with indifference, and each year she grew more lonely, more desperate for attention from those who should have loved her. Then she decided she would have to hurt them, somehow, as they had hurt her. If they didn't want to be proud of her, she would make them so ashamed of her they themselves would suffer. By the time she was eighteen she had five arrests on her record, had attempted suicide, and had brought home an illegitimate child for her parents to care for. Her motive became the will to get even, and what she did mattered little as long as it made trouble for her family.

ANOTHER WOMAN, disappointed in love, resolved never to marry. Instead of establishing a home, she went to New York and studied music. At first she dreamed of Europe and concerts, but hers, like many a young artist's dream, did not materialize. Returning to her home town, she began to teach. "Since I didn't make the grade myself," she told those who asked about her plans, "maybe I can at least start someone else on the road to fame." And for forty years she stood beside her piano and counted "One and two and three and four and . . ." while clumsy little fingers pounded out the simple rhythms in Thompson's Graded Series. Some weren't able to pay for their lessons, so Miss Louisa took an occasional pound of butter or dozen eggs as reimbursement. Sometimes there was no remuneration at all except a child's, "Thank you for the lesson," and that was enough. Too old and tired to teach now, this good woman looks back over the years and realizes that her second dream—fame for one of her pupils—was never realized either. But she did produce many proficient pianists, and the world of music is richer for the effort she made.

VERY NEAR THE HEAD of the list of people whose purpose in life is service to others is a cowboy who, between rodeos, spends much of his time riding the range for God. He visits isolated Saints from Texas to Wyoming, and never leaves them without giving a very special ministry exclusively his own. And he doesn't stop at talking the gospel in their homes; he provides transportation for them to district meetings and even to General Conference. He is at home on the campus at Graceland and in the wards of the Sanitarium. Wherever he goes, he carries with him the warm spirit of good will and genuine interest in people that makes him a missionary extraordinary. To those who know him, heaven is a place of halos . . . maybe harps . . . perhaps, and certainly a ten-gallon hat.

Motives are good or bad as the individual wills—and it is a matter of will. Powerful as they are, motives are not unchangeable. One has but to analyze the underlying source of his urges—the "big reason" why he acts as he does—to determine if he's on the high road to happiness and purposeful living or the down grade to bitterness and frustration. Once uncovered, this whipcracking taskmaster may appear as a directing angel or a monster.

It's everyone's privilege to decide which it will be.

She Talked With God

she was visiting. With complete frankness she told me she was talking to God. It was not until many years later that I understood.

As I attended her funeral last summer, two weeks before her ninety-third birthday, I thought of the complete life she had lived. The large group of friends who gathered to pay tribute to her memory were from every walk of life. And I wondered what great gift had kept so many persons close to her at an age when most are forgotten. As I reviewed the Scripture reading, it was plain. She had successfully ministered her gift of charity and Christian love to all.

Of One Mind

Along with a crowd of soldiers I was making my way through a station in Chicago; we moved slowly, for hundreds of relatives and friends swarmed at the gates. A clean-cut young soldier in front of me called out suddenly, "Hi, Mom, how are you?" In response, a well-dressed woman cried in the same spirit, "Hi, there, son," and she promptly gave him a vigorous bear-hug.

Then I heard her whisper, with a faraway look in her eyes, "I wish you were!"

And the soldier, as he moved on, said, "So do I, lady!"

"Let This Mind Be in You"

fish pursuits of our own fancy. How quick we have been to forget the admonition given at our last General Conference. How quick we are to forget the instruction and inspiration that came during the reunions of the past summer.

"Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus" means how much or how often we think of the kingdom as well as what we think. The Doctrine and Covenants speaks plainly and strongly in this regard.

*Verily, I say unto you, who now have my words . . . Blessed are ye inasmuch as you receive these things; for I will forgive you of your sins with this commandment, THAT YOU REMAIN STEADFAST IN YOUR MINDS in solemnity, and the spirit of prayer, in bearing testimony to all the world.—*Section 83:9.

And further in the fourteenth paragraph: "Treasure up in your minds continually the words of life."

And so we might say that Paul suggested to the Philippians: "You must be of one heart and one mind, and that mind must be after the pattern of the Son of God. It must match his in content and consistency." He sums it up by saying,

*Finally brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, THINK ON THESE THINGS.—*Philippians 4:8.

The challenge of our day is not for great churches and multitudes of people and millions of dollars, but as ever since the world began, it is the challenge of regenerated people through whose bodies and minds the will of God might be manifested in power. For when God's will is prevalent in the mind of man, his money, his home, his business, his time, his family, and his life belong to the kingdom.

Let this mind be in YOU, which was also in Christ Jesus.

NEWS AND NOTES

ZION'S LEAGUE SERVICE

A Thanksgiving Communion service was given in the Stone Church by the Zion's Leagues of Independence for the college and university students who were in Independence over the holiday.

Those taking part in the service were Oliver Houston, Wilda Nelson, Elmer Sloan, Cebert Young, Esther Salonimer, Robert Akers, Forest Leibold, Dave Myers, James Ross, Marvin Talcott, Amos Hart, Charles Hield, and Kenneth McLaughlin. Carl Mesle, General Director of Young People's Work, presented a challenge to the gathering.

Two long tables were used for the Communion service. Between the tables was the worship setting, a quantity of fruit and a silver grail on a white cloth.

After the Communion service in the Stone Church, the young people gathered in the Little Theatre for a few social minutes. Refreshments were served, and the local city-wide League officers were introduced.

AUDITORIUM SERVICE

On November 22 a Thanksgiving service was held in the choir room by the employees of the Auditorium. President W. Wallace Smith was the speaker.

Both opening and closing prayers were said by Elder Charles Graham, president of Independence Stake. Roy Stearns sang a solo. Miss Gladys Gould gave a Thanksgiving reading. A quartet composed of Mrs. Norma Smith, Miss Mae Jorgensen, Bishop L. W. Kohlman, and Roy Stearns, sang; Mrs. Rosamond Sherman was at the piano.

The worship center was covered with a purple satin cloth. On it was a cornucopia and a display of fruit. Mrs. Thelona Stevens and Frances Hartman prepared the program.

HERALD HOUSE SERVICE

Elder Leonard Lea was in charge of the Thanksgiving service that was held November 22. Mrs. Jeanne Miller made the opening remarks, and Elder Chris Hartshorn read the Scriptures. A girls' quartet composed of Mrs. Julia Allin, Mrs. Ardith Curtis, Irene Beemer, and Marjorie Smith, sang a special number. The Thanksgiving message was given by Elder Amnon Badder. A poem, written by Mrs. Naomi Russell, was read by Mrs. Emma M. Phillips. The closing prayer was by Keith Stokes.

REQUEST TO WRITE

Katheryn C. Metz, editor of the "Lamoni Chronicle," has been asked to write an issue of the "Palimpsest," the official monthly magazine of the State Historical Society of Iowa. Sister Metz will record for the historical society her impressions of Mexico which she gathered during the months she worked in Mexico as the first exchange editor between the United States and that republic.

LEADING

Mrs. Myron C. Fisher, Jr., of Boston, Massachusetts, has just completed a program of teaching forty different Brownie handcrafts at the College of Girl Scouting in Boston. Twenty-nine councils sent in about 600 leaders for training in better and more interesting ways to help in girl scouting. Sister Fisher is the religious education director of the Southern New England District.

RECOGNITION

The "Vancouver Sun" newspaper of Vancouver, B. C., of October 15 carried a long article concerning the sermon given in the local church by Brother William Pugsley. The article presented a number of interesting facts about the history of the church.

Tenos-Raisbeck

Dorothy Raisbeck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Raisbeck, and George A. Tenos, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Tenos, were married October 28 at the Reorganized Church in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Elder Ray Ashenhurst officiating. They are making their home in Lamoni, Iowa.

BIRTHS

A son, Robert Daniel, was born on November 7 to Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Anders of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Mrs. Anders is the former Lahonta Davis of Moine, Illinois.

A son, Phillip Edward, was born on June 11 to Elder and Mrs. Orville E. Rowlett of Wichita, Kansas. He was blessed on November 26 by Elder Myron F. LaPointe, assisted by his father.

DEATHS

HULSE.—Warren A., son of Joel P. and Emma Hulse, was born April 12, 1876, in Johnson County, Missouri, and died October 15, 1950, in El Dorado Springs, Missouri, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Chella Smith, with whom he had lived for the past four years. He was married to Dovie Lorne on March 10, 1907; three children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church since early in life.

He is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Chella Smith; and Mrs. Novella Thompson of North Hollywood, California; a son, Elder Randall Hulse of Pontiac, Michigan; two sisters: Miss Emma Hulse of Peru, Kansas, and Mrs. Gertrude Lewis of Correctionville, Iowa; a brother, Walter, of Irwin, Missouri; and five grandchildren.

Funeral services were held at the Methodist church in El Dorado Springs, Elder John Noyes officiating. Interment was in Mount Pleasant Cemetery near Dederick, Missouri.

FRYXELL.—Doris, daughter of Henry H. and Mahala Hawkins Teeter, was born near Belknap, Iowa, on February 15, 1878, and died November 21, 1950, at Independence, Missouri. The family moved to Nebraska in 1880, and here she received her education; later she taught school for three years in Kansas. On December 4, 1901, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church and was ever faithful to her covenant. On June 20, 1905, she was married to John Fryxell; one son was born to them. Both her husband and son preceded her in death. In 1940 she moved from Omaha, Nebraska, to Independence, where she spent the remainder of her life.

Surviving are four brothers: James J., John A., and Charles Teeter of Independence, and Willis H. Teeter of Lee's Summit, Missouri; and three sisters: Mrs. Edith Trask of Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Belle Caulk of Pleasant Hill, Missouri; and Miss Olive Teeter of Green Bay, Wisconsin. Funeral services were held at the Roland Speaks Chapel, Elders Glaude A. Smith and Hubert Cemetery.

Case officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove

SWIFT.—Richard Kimball, was born April 3, 1883, at Stanwood, Michigan, and died October 17, 1950, at Flint, Michigan, where he had made his home for the past thirty-six years. On July 24, 1917, he was married to Lillian Baxter; five children were born to them. He had been a member of the Reorganized Church for twenty-six years and was an ardent student of the Bible. An employee of the Buick Motor Company, he was greatly respected by those with whom he worked and was often referred to as "Counselor."

He is survived by his wife; a daughter, Evelyn; and four sons: Roy, Edward, Robert, and Richard. Funeral services were conducted by Elder R. Melvin Russell at Flint. Interment was in the Sunset Hills Cemetery in Flint.

WILSON.—Emma Elvira, daughter of Warren and Elma Turner, was born August 3, 1865, in Potsdamville, New York, and died October 28, 1950, in Santa Barbara, California, where she had made her home since 1918. She was the oldest member of the Reorganized Church in Santa Barbara. Her husband, William Purl, preceded her in death on May 21, 1927.

Surviving are two sons: George A. and William W. of Santa Barbara; three daughters: Elva Branstetter, Santa Barbara; Ora Horn, Wilmington, California; and Olive Bishop, Murietta, California; four sisters; eleven grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren. Services were conducted by Elder James Burdick at the Welch and Ryce Chapel in Santa Barbara. Interment was in the Goleta Cemetery.

HILL.—Frank, was born April 25, 1870, at Magnolia, Iowa, and died October 13, 1950, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Elbert Dempsey, in Independence, Missouri. On October 5, 1890, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church, and on February 28, 1898, he was ordained to the office of priest. For a time he served as pastor of the congregation at Logan, Iowa, and all his life he assisted in the work as he was called upon. On June 10, 1897, he married Carrie Emmerson, who preceded him in death on August 26, 1936. After that he made his home with his daughter and her husband.

Besides his daughter he leaves three grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Funeral services were held at the Henry Stahl Chapel, Elders L. J. Lea and Glaude Smith officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

 ABBREVIATIONS

A letter came to our order department, saying, "I want to order a copy of that book named 'Ibid.' Writers are always quoting from it, and I'd like to have one."

"Ibid." is an abbreviation of a Latin word, "ibidem," and means "in the same place." It is a convenience and a space saver for writers and publishers to refer to a book that has been identified previously by author and title.

Some publishing houses use another abbreviation for the same purpose, "op. cit." This comes from "opere citato," meaning "in the work cited."

In Scripture references, footnotes, bibliographies, and indexes, "f." will mean "the following verse," or "the following page," according to the circumstances. The abbreviation "ff." indicates more than one verse or page.

Abbreviations are useful to writers and publishers, and will be equally useful to readers who take a little care to know what they mean. Only recognized standard abbreviations should be used, as others are likely to lead to uncertainty and misunderstanding. The good writer will not invent abbreviations, unless for purposes of humor. Too great use of abbreviations is in poor taste, and the receiver of a letter containing many of them may feel that he is being given scant respect.

One author, sometimes lazy on the typewriter, often abbreviated according to her feelings, and so caused much trouble and extra correspondence. When we remonstrated, she said, "Everybody knows the meaning of that," which was untrue. Everybody didn't know what she had in mind, and had very little time for guessing. Irregular abbreviations cause trouble for editors and readers.

In the last century, before the general use of typewriters, letter writers employed many improvised abbreviations to save time and space. Today many of them look funny. In modern correspondence there is a tendency to spell most words out in full, even in business letters, and abbreviations are limited to those which are standard for the country, or recognized and used commonly in the writer's business.

 FORGIVE IT, PLEASE!

An anonymous friend in San Francisco writes a protest: "We are hurt when our city is called Frisco, and we do not have smogs." We are sorry, and the worst is that it occurs again in another issue. Will you forgive it, please?

The passing of the years brings changes and improvements, of course, even, it seems, the abolition of smog. . . . Old memories arise of mornings we rode the ferries across the bay as they poked cautiously along through dense fogs, visibility zero, with deep-throated foghorns sounding to avoid collisions. Smoke from city chimneys added to the gloom. The air was raw and chill, cold penetrating to the bones. We are happy to learn that all that is gone now, part of a nearly forgotten past. Thanks to the folk who performed the miracle.

But to give up "Frisco!" San Franciscans once took pleasure in the crisp, tangy abbreviation. Why did they change that? We loved the sound of it, and still do.

Use of the Concordance

IT'S THE SIMPLEST THING in the world—if you know how. Because I can't remember the time when I first used a concordance of the Scriptures, it is hard to sense the problem of one who asked recently, "How do you go about using a concordance?"

The one essential element in using the new Book of Mormon Concordance, or Cruden's Concordance of the Bible is to be able to recall some significant phrase or exact words of a text you need to locate. Having this in mind, you turn alphabetically to the word selected. Then run down the list of context statements until you find the one you want. The chapter and verse will follow the key-word statement. Turn to the text to assure yourself that this is the passage you really want.

Many of the key words may be broken down into subdivisions. Glance over the subheadings first until you find the exact phrasing of the text, as the citation is not likely to appear in any other form. Take the word "earth" as the key word to locate the passage in the Book of Mormon which says that "the face of the whole earth became deformed."—III Nephi 4: 14. The Concordance has nearly eight columns of citations about the earth. Near the bottom of the third column there begins the subheadings. "All the earth," "in the earth," "of the earth," "to the earth," "end, -s of the earth," "face of the earth," "face of the whole earth," and "four quarters of the earth," follow in that order. Thus if you have the exact phrase, you can save time.

Often memory fails to give proper clues for our search and then the only course is to try other words in the phrasing as we recall it. Usually the verbs, nouns, and adjectives will yield the best results.

Careful writers and speakers will not be satisfied to use scriptural "quotations" that are only close. A teacher or minister who is safe to follow will take the time to be sure that he is properly quoting Christ or Paul. I have heard many speakers quote Paul, "The things I once loved I now hate and the things I now hate I once loved." However, chapter and verse on that passage have never been found. It takes more time to look up scriptural sources, but the results will justify the effort.

Introducing...

Stanley White Johnson, Spokane, Washington (page 5), was born in 1928 and baptized in 1937. He is the grandson of Apostle I. N. White. After graduation from Spokane High School in 1946, he attended Graceland, graduating in 1948, and Whitworth College in Spokane, where he received his Bachelor of Arts degree with a Bible major. He worked for a publishing firm before he entered the mission field last Conference. His present assignment is New York District. His special interests are music, public speaking, journalism, and photography. He was ordained a priest in December, 1947, and an elder in May, 1950.

James Albert Everett, Salt Lake City, Utah (page 14), was born at Alton, Illinois, in 1928, and was baptized at Salt Lake City in 1938. He was graduated from the Pleasant Grove (Utah) High School in 1946 and from Graceland in 1948. Then he attended the University of Utah and Brigham Young University, receiving his B.S. degree in 1950. He edited the high school paper, and at Graceland was a member of the Lambda Delta Sigma. Ordained a priest in 1946 and an elder in 1949, he has served as young people's leader, counselor to the district president, district youth supervisor, and pastor of Ogden Branch. He was appointed as missionary to the Utah District at the last General Conference.

SPECIAL SERVICE

On December 3 President Israel A. Smith and Apostle D. T. Williams attended the special services held for the opening of the new church at Ottumwa, Iowa. President Smith had charge of the morning service, preached at 11:00, and spoke at two afternoon services. Brothers Smith and Williams worked with Brothers Edward Stark and Byron Barker at the services.

The Volunteer Relief Corps of the Grand Army of the Republic presented an American Flag to the congregation. The local newspapers and radio stations carried announcements of the opening services. The new building is free of debt. It will probably be dedicated next spring at a special service.

SPANISH INTEREST AT IOWA UNIVERSITY

Apostle Charles R. Hield was in Iowa City on December 2 and 3, speaking to R. L. D. S. college students on the subject of taking the Restoration Story to Spanish speaking peoples. Brother Hield spoke once on Saturday and three times on Sunday. Forty-five students were in the group, eleven of them priesthood members.

SNOWBOUND

Apostle Maurice L. Draper announces that the institute planned for November 25 and 26 at Parkersburg, West Virginia, and the institute planned for December 2 and 3 at Wheeling, West Virginia, had to be canceled because of the heavy snowfall. Brother Draper, himself, was snowbound for four days. The snow was ten inches deeper than has ever been recorded for the district.

Brother Draper attended building committee meetings during the week of November 19, at Brooklyn and New York City, New York, and Washington, D. C. The sale of the Brooklyn church has been completed. While in Washington, D. C., Brother Draper attended the State Department Foreign Policy Conference.

INSTITUTE

On December 2 and 3 Apostle Reed M. Holmes and Bishop W. N. Johnson attended a priesthood institute held at Tulsa, Oklahoma, for the Central Oklahoma District. They worked with Elder Victor Witte, pastor, and Seventy W. C. Haden, missionary of the district. Brother Johnson preached at the 11:00 hour on Sunday. Brother Holmes was spokesman at the ordination of Ottis J. Stephens to a high priest.

"THE MESSIAH"

General Church Youth Leader Carl Mesle, who is supervising the publicity for "The Messiah" has been instrumental in sending out 65,000 publicity cards to pastors, appointees, and district presidents. Pastors were sent cards to be given to congregations, and sample copies of write-ups for the local papers.

OCTOBER STATISTICS

Sister Carpenter has provided us with the following facts which should be of interest to our readers:

Baptisms for the month total 409, and for the ten months of 1950, 3,916. This lacks only seventeen of being as many as the entire previous year. Thirty-one of these come from our European Mission. Eighty-six are from the six stakes; Los Angeles leading with twenty-five.

"We Have Seen His Star"

"We have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him."—Matthew 2: 2.

THE CELESTIAL GLORY that attended the birth of Jesus is as far beyond our imagination as it is beyond our description, and not to be compared with any earthly events. But of all the human pageantry of that occasion, one of the most fascinating and colorful was the visit of the Wise Men from the East. Some called them the "Magi," after the priests and scholars of Persia. Some called them kings, and truly they brought kingly gifts—precious gold, sweet frankincense, and healing myrrh.

One thing the Wise Men said echoes lingeringly in the chambers of memory: "We have seen his star," they announced. "We have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him."

These men who came the farthest and made the greatest effort brought the most precious gifts.

* * * * *

We can imagine those ancient sages—students, scientists, and astronomers of the time—looking up into the cobalt blue of the evening sky, surprised at finding a strange light in the heavens, a new star.

Wondering, they turned to their books and searched the prophecies to see what this phenomenon might mean. If they were Persians, as some have thought, they would not have found the answer in the literature of Zoroaster, the deity of their people. Wherever they lived, they must have had access to the sacred writings of their neighbors to the west, the Hebrews. It was there that they found their answer.

They followed that star over the deserts to the west, coming first to Jerusalem, then to Bethlehem.

"We have seen his star," they said.

We cannot tell exactly what the Star of Bethlehem may have been. The description is not accurate enough to help the astronomer. It was a fulfillment of an ancient promise:

"I shall see him, but not now: I shall behold him, but not nigh: there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel."—Numbers 24: 17.

Whatever the star they saw may have been, it brought a spiritual light over the horizons of the world that has never since been dimmed.

To those who knew the meaning of the prophecy and believed in the promises of God, the shining of that star came as the light of a great hope—the hope of the world.

* * * * *

The world was in darkness then, as it is now. The shadow of a Roman sentry fell athwart the crossroads of life. Israel had been carried away into captivity long before, dispersed among the gentiles, never to return. Judah, too, had sung,

By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down,
Yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion.

They had been permitted to return to the ruined city, to rebuild its walls, and see it flourish again, only to have a new conqueror come.

Yet Wise Men from the East had seen a star, a light, a radiance of new hope—the Star of Bethlehem!

The world crouches under a new kind of darkness now. The shadow of the Roman Legionnaire is gone, but there are new, more barbaric, and more ominous shadows, falling across our world today.

It is said that the Third World War has already begun, and that we are in it. Its clouds have rolled up on the western Pacific. The searing flame and the acrid smoke of battle have been seen and felt by our young men, and their flesh has been torn in the conflict.

But even in our land and in our times, there are some who "have seen his star" and who, in worshiping him, live in hope of a better day.

* * * * *

You have noticed, probably, that a common street light very near you will seem more brilliant than a distant star that is many times greater than our sun. Move away a few blocks, and the street light is lost, but you will still see the star.

A bomb could put out all the lights of your city. But no bomb in the world could touch a star, not even an atomic bomb.

Nothing can put out the Star of Bethlehem.

Here in America, and in all the other countries where freedom is a word with uncorrupted meaning, we need a realization that God sent his Son into the world for an eternal purpose, and that it will not be frustrated.

We, too, have seen his star and are come to worship him.

And if in this world we could bring all men to see that star and to kneel and worship the Son of God, we would find an armor of defense against fear in the hope of eternal life.

E d i t o r i a l

We are encouraged by a letter just received from Apostle Chesworth giving us the record of his baptisms in the area for the year. We notice that Brother Chesworth indicates his mission had an increase of eighty-one over last year, and he states, "The year is not ended for us in baptisms." We feel to commend this area and Brother Chesworth for his good work so far this year.

Here is another item gleaned from a letter from E. E. Jennings which has to do also with baptisms:

Shortly after the first of December, we will send a detailed report for the missionary work of Far West Stake, but here I just want to say that we baptized 107 in Far West Stake proper, with a baptismal service scheduled for Cameron this Sunday when, I think, six or seven will be baptized. A baptismal service is scheduled for Sunday afternoon, December 3, for St. Joseph. Already we have eight to be baptized at that time with a good chance of having five or six more. We are sure to hit a 135 mark for the year for Far West Stake, and a good chance of getting more than that.

From Elder Virgil J. Billings:

You would be interested in the service we held in Lamoni last Sunday. There were twenty people baptized in a most impressive service. Sixteen of these were from Lamoni Branch, and four from near-by branches. These sixteen and two other candidates who were unable to be present last Sunday, along with five baptized at an earlier service, makes a total of twenty-three baptisms as a result of our recent missionary emphasis in Lamoni. This effort has covered the period since reunion, the middle of August. I started the work with a six-week series of cottage meetings in Lamoni. The members were very responsive to this series, and a total of sixty-nine nonmembers attended with an average of fifty-two each week. At the conclusion of this service, there were twelve decisions for baptism, with only five being baptized at that time.

Following the cottage series, some very effective follow-up work was done by Brother Robert Farnham in a visiting campaign, and a series of preaching services by Brother Roy Cheville on Sunday and Wednesday evenings. I did some visiting also, and some interest was continued in my missionary effort in the near-by branches where further Lamoni contacts were carried on. All in all we had a very fine response, and Lamoni Branch has been richly blessed.

We certainly enjoyed the recent visit of Brother Wallace Smith in our home and the fine ministry he rendered in Chariton Branch.

In a recent letter to Elbert A. Smith, Brother A. V. Arnold, secretary of the Order of Evangelists, had good news concerning the work of his home branch in Houston, Texas. He says there has been a marked "spiritual awakening" with an increased spirit of unity and peace. There has been the largest number of baptisms in the branch of any year up to the present. A mission has been opened, and attendance is good. Sunday evening attendance at the church has about doubled. He reports the baptism of a grandson of F. G. Pitt and the call to the office of priest of the youngest son of Brother and Sister Albert Banta. He adds that the loyalty of the young people of the branch is especially encouraging.

"A Stranger Goes to Church"

THIS IS THE TITLE of a series of special articles in The Cleveland Press by feature writer Frank Stewart.

We were privileged to meet Mr. Stewart at Kirtland on our visit there to attend the high priests' meetings. It was on Sunday, October 8, just after the sad news about the death of Sister Smith reached me; but I recall Mr. Stewart's solicitude and earnestness.

It is with much interest I have read what Mr. Stewart said about our ministers at Kirtland, and I believe Herald readers will appreciate his article, under the above caption, in the Press for Monday, October 9:

HIGH PRIESTS RETURN TO MORMON TEMPLE

Many of you old geezers, like myself, recall the days, when as kids, we used to sneak behind the coal shed and puff on corn silk or dried leaves of grapevine.

Jimminy, I felt like ducking out of sight for a few minutes yesterday to get a few sniffs of cigar smoke. But it couldn't be done, and I'll tell you why.

I was standing with a group of 200 men in front of the historic Mormon Temple in Kirtland—that's on Route 306 in Lake County—between church services and there wasn't a single cigaret, cigar, or pipe in sight.

The men were High Priests of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the Saints do not use tobacco in any manner, shape, or form. For that matter, some do not drink coffee, but that is not forbidden by the church.

Can you imagine any gathering of 200 Clevelanders at ease—just standing around talking during an intermission at a public meeting—and nobody smoking?

It was the first time in 112 years the High Priests had assembled in Kirtland since the Saints moved westward in 1838 under leadership of Joseph Smith, first prophet and founder of the church.

There are two groups of priesthood in the church—the Melchisedec and the Aaronic. The High Priests are Melchisedec, representing spiritual administration of the group, while Aaronic priests are charged with direction of temporal affairs. Conference discussions were based entirely on religious themes.

The High Priests came to Kirtland from all sections of the United States and Canada. Cars parked along the highway in the vicinity of the Temple resembled a parade of states.

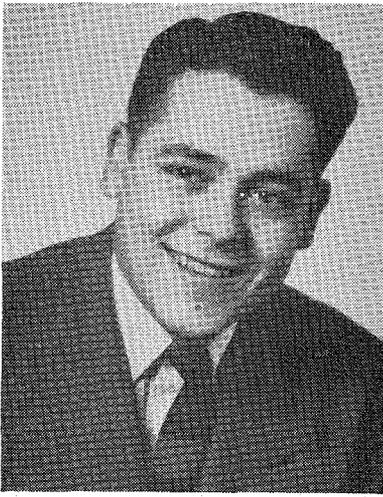

My guide, Elder G. E. Tickemyer of Los Angeles, Cal., introduced me to the High Priests who were a remarkable group of men. There were a nuclear physicist, college president, executive of the Fruehauf Trailer Corp., lawyers, doctors, psychologists, and what not.

I met the four grandsons of Joseph Smith, the founder. They were: Israel A. Smith, now president of the Latter Day Saints and fourth successor to the office; Frederick A. Smith, who is 88; Elbert A. Smith and W. Wallace Smith, all of Independence, Mo., headquarters of the church.

A note of sadness spread over the conference of High Priests when word was received from Independence that President Smith's wife died of a heart attack. He left at once for home.

We had a chance to renew acquaintance with Elder John F. Sheehy, who formerly ministered the Latter Day Saints Church at 1428 E. 110th St. He is now located in Toronto, Canada, but expects to transfer soon to Maine.

The good folks of Kirtland—Latter Day Saints and nonmembers alike—housed the 200 visiting High Priests in their homes. And women of Kirtland Temple, with direction of Chef Huber Herroon, member of the church, served meals in an adjoining hall. Elder William Williams is in charge of Kirtland Church.

And my soul shall be joyful in the Lord; it shall rejoice in his salvation.—Psalm 35: 9.

A SAD MISSIONARY cannot be a good one!

This seems to be the message of the Scriptures as they continually bear testimony of the joy of the gospel and the happiness of those who have followed Christ. In no other religion and in no other literature is joy so conspicuous as in Christianity and the Bible.

As every year rolls around to the fall months and then the winter months and finally approaches the Christmas season, the whole attitude of the nation seems to change. People smile more often. The windows of stores are gayer. The harsh sound of auto horns in downtown traffic is softened somehow by the sound of chimes or Christmas carols. Why is it that people really change during these weeks? Is it the weather or the calendar that mysteriously twists their faces into smiles and lightens their hearts? Of course not. People simply begin to think of each other more frequently. Their thoughts are turned to happier things than the doldrum pattern of their lives, and the whole thing is contagious.

A Jewish friend of mine told me last year, "The whole thing amazes me. It is like catching a cold. We as a people have no reason to celebrate your Christmas holidays, but what do we do? Why my family goes out and buys a Christmas tree and then decorates it with silly baubles of glass and tinsel. I do not understand it. People go crazy, including myself. I spent three weeks' pay buying presents to make my family happy on a holiday we should not even bother celebrating."

Missionary Joy

By S. W. JOHNSON

WHILE IN COLLEGE I was talking one day with a psychiatrist, and somehow the conversation worked around to how people have commercialized Christmas, making it a business enterprise instead of a sacred holiday. I mentioned that it would be nice if things could be changed so we would just recognize the religious holiday and not the commercial one.

"You shouldn't even think of such a thing," my medical friend surprised me by saying. "Christmas is the best medicine the human race has ever had. If I could put Christmas up in bottles or could prescribe it in pills like a medicine, I would empty most of the mental institutions and a lot of the hospitals in the country. Then we could tear them down or use them for schools, because we wouldn't need them any more. Christmas is wonderful. People forget their troubles and are happy—and do you want to know why?"

Of course I did, so he continued, "Simply because people forget themselves. I'm not a Christian, but if there ever was a master psychologist, it was Jesus of Nazareth. He knew how to make people healthy and well and happy and contented. This abundant life is more than just a few verses in a book. It's a fact. If you don't believe me, look at people's faces when they start handing out gifts around the tree on Christmas morning."

I looked, and I certainly believed.

But I had seen that look before. I had seen it in the faces of the missionaries as they had traveled around to my branch when I was a small boy. I had seen it on the face of people as they left the baptismal font of the church at home. And then I began to realize just what it was. It was more than pure happiness. It was the Spirit of God shining in those people's eyes. They were seeing the Spirit of Christ in their own lives and in the lives of other men. They were seeing this thing called Christianity in action, and they were happy because of it. That is why I say, a sad missionary cannot be a good one.

THE VERY GOSPEL we seek to teach as missionaries in the church of Jesus Christ is a gospel of joy and happiness, a story of hope. Think of the principles of the gospel as Apostle Paul taught them.

Faith in God. This in itself is enough to bring unlimited joy to the hearts of men. It should result in our realizing that we are not alone, that the task of just living, which seems so insurmountable at times, is not ours alone but is shared by an ever-loving God. This in itself is sufficient motive for joy. But faith in God brings something else. It brings us faith in ourselves and in others.

Faith as taught by the Scriptures is a positive thing. "In the beginning God—" we read in Genesis. Faith had its origin in the beginning with God, and from there through all eternity the hand of God goes, and nothing is left to chance. Err though we may, God's will shall be done. Even the name given to the Christ is a message of faith—Emmanuel, God with us—a promise of security and hope.

Repentance from dead works is taught from the pulpits of our churches. This certainly is not a thing of discouragement or dismay.

This is another promise of happy things and joyful days ahead. The happiness in the home of the Prodigal Son was a testimony of that. He decided that he had to repent and build live works upon the crumbling foundation of his dead works, and his own joy was matched by that of his family. Zaccheus' face must have shown brightly when Christ announced the entrance of the spirit of salvation into his home that day. He, too, had repented and had looked to Christ and was rewarded, not with sorrow, but with joy and gladness. A promise of a wonderful future was his, and he went his way a happy man. These people were happy in the gospel of Christ.

Baptism, the first sacrament which the new member of the church experiences, is itself an ordinance which brings pure joy of heart and soul. Out of the waters of regeneration, a person may come with a cleansed soul, a new life, and certainly a new hope. In what other theology is there a single act that can bring such comfort and satisfaction to a believer's mind? Continually the pattern of Christianity runs through the principles—a pattern of better things to come, a better life, a happier life, a more complete life, a life of joy and happiness.

In the beautiful ordinance of the laying on of hands is expressed the deep, rich tones of God's love for us, unequalled by any love of earthly nurture. The gift of the Holy Spirit at the time of confirmation comes as a comforter, a promised messenger of God, to help us in times of difficulty to rise to greater heights. It is also a promised companion as we walk the path which God directs. In the simple ceremony of the blessing of a child through this ordinance, there is a beauty all its own. A promise is there in the pureness of a young creature, weak and humble, yet strong and powerful in all the strength and promise of a mighty God directing its way personally. The mercy of God in the gifts of healing and comfort is often expressed in administration to the ill. God glories with those who are joyful in him, yet never forgets those whose ways are hard and trying; he seeks to lift them to a plain of happiness also. And in the ordination to the priesthood comes a feeling of gratitude and humbleness. It is a wonderful thing to be allowed to minister in the name of Christ, and the happiness which comes from ministering, as God himself would have done, is the epitome of all happiness. No greater joy can any man ask or receive.

EVEN WHEN THINKING OF DEATH, the follower of the gospel of Christ can be joyful, because for him there is no real death. That which man calls death, the end, is in reality the beginning of a state which is better than the best he knows in this life. It holds the hope of happiness for those who have not known happiness on earth, and even greater joy for those who have been joyful here. Such is the beautiful story of the resurrection from the dead.

The last of the principles, eternal judgment, is also a testimony of the love of God and the fairness of One whose every desire is the happiness of man. No one needs to anticipate that time with terror. Only he who has not sought the true joy here on earth needs fear the sorrow of the future. The promise of God is life, not death, and every opportunity is given man to achieve that life.

These are the principles our missionaries have been preaching for one hundred thirty years, and the testimony of these men is that they are happy. They have walked with God, have felt his hand, and have known he loves them, and they are joyful because of it. There is no reason why Christ's church today should not share in a pentecost of the Spirit of God. We are bringing to the earth the thing it is seeking—a message and promise of true and eternal happiness.

But first we ourselves must air this joy that is within us. We must tell our friends of our happiness. A song of gladness should be on our lips at every moment. We must rejoice in the power of the Lord and in his gospel.

THE STORY we bring is a story not of defeat but of victory, and we must not become bogged down in the throes of defeatism. The task is not too great; there are not too many obstacles. The Spirit of God is contagious and will spread among all peoples just as surely as the spirit of Christmas spreads throughout the land every year. People are seeking happiness, and they should be able to find it in our faces and in our story. We cannot be a discouraged people, for we have as much to be joyful over as any other people who have ever walked this earth. We must always sing a hymn of triumph. We must always bear the spirit of victory before us. As children of God, we must always be a happy people and share this happiness with a sorrowing world.

Grace

We are apt to put the main stress on the products of our minds. We often think, plan, and act as if the results were guaranteed by our own efforts. We ought to remind ourselves that all our efforts are useless unless they be rooted in and sanctified by the grace of our Lord.

By his grace we are liberated from the powers of darkness and brought into the realm of light, cleansed from our sins, and given strength to overcome our self-conceit and self-complacency.

By His grace we can be brought back to the very foundation of the new life: the spiritual contact with our Lord.

Deacon Goodentart Has a Night Before Christmas Dream -

By ELBERT A. SMITH

AT THE CHRISTMAS MORNING BREAKFAST TABLE, Deacon Goodentart said to his wife, "Last night I dreamed that you and I appeared at the pearly gates."

"You mean we, that is we had . . ."

"I suppose so. Anyway we were there. Saint Peter seemed different than I had expected. He seemed quite human—in fact there was a sort of twinkle in his eyes at times. He said, 'Deacon, I think you can get in, and we may have some work for you. There are not so many deacons here as you might think. But how about your wife? What can she do?'"

"Did he ask that about me?"

"Yes, and I said, 'Well, she might help at the gate. I have read in the Bible that many come here through great tribulation, and she would be right handy to comfort them. She would be fine to look after timid newcomers who feel lonesome and afraid. She is a good friendly visitor. Trouble is she would let everybody in—she never could turn anyone away from her own door.'

"Then Saint Peter looked rather sad, and said to me, 'That is one hard thing for me to do. But there are a lot of people who would not be happy here if they got in. We don't have the sort of life they like—no road houses, highballs, Sunday ball games, crooked politics, and no one steals the gold off the golden streets. Anyway, if we let them in, they would turn heaven into—a different sort of place.'

"Then Saint Peter said, 'Can your wife sing?' And I said, 'Probably she would not make a soloist in your big heavenly choir, but if you sing old-fashioned hymn tunes here like "Rock of Ages," or "The Old, Old Path," she will do fine. She was always singing at home about her work. If you have any of the very little angels who miss their mothers, she would be a master hand at singing lullabys; and if any of them tear their little white robes, she is fine at mending. You would never know they had been torn!"

"Did you talk to him about my mending?"

"Why, yes, Christ talked about mending garments, a cup of cold water—all that sort of thing. Then I said, 'I have read about many mansions up here, but I don't know about a mansion—maybe you have a little white cottage or a bungalow we could occupy. On earth my wife always put a little bit of heaven into her home—and I don't see why she might not put a little home into heaven.'

"Then Saint Peter said, 'I wrote a couple of epistles once, I never could write like my friend Saint Paul, he loved to write, and he went to school to Gamaliel while I fished, so he was better educated. But I did write two epistles. Do you remember the first chapter of my second epistle?' And I said, 'Yes, that is one of my favorite chapters. It has a sort of problem in mathematics—one in addition, add to your faith, and so on.' And Saint Peter said, 'Yes, the cross of Christ is the sign of addition.' So I said, 'Well, I have tried to add one to another of all those virtues, and as for my wife, she's always had them since I have known her, which is quite some time now. You know how I first met her?' But Saint Peter interrupted me, 'Yes I know all about that; what I was about to say is that in that chapter I wrote: "So an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly.'" And I said, 'That is the way we want to enter, or not at all. We never were any hands to go where we were not welcome.'"

"What was I doing all this time?" asked Sister Goodentart.

"Now that is rather singular; you had discovered a poor cripple who was trying to climb up the slope to the pearly gates. You called me, and we got one on either side of him and put a hand under his armpits and helped him along. When we stood before Saint Peter, he looked at the poor cripple and said to him, 'Come in and bring your crutches with you.' So the gates were swung wide open, and we stepped inside. I had one good look at the Heavenly City. I saw some people that I knew. Brother F. G. Pitt was teaching a few people to sing 'God is so good to me,' and I saw Brother Joseph and others.

"But a funny thing had happened: the poor cripple had vanished, and in his place stood a man very tall and straight. A better looking man I had never seen. He had brown hair and beard and clear blue eyes. I noticed on his white robe a few clean pine shavings, such as sometimes stick to a carpenter's apron. I have seen his picture somewhere. He said to both of us, 'Inasmuch'—then I woke up, right here in our own home—and it was Christmas morning."

"I wish I could have seen that little white cottage," sighed Sister Goodentart.

"Well, so do I, and still I am quite happy here in this little cottage—as long as you are here. Besides it is Christmas morning and our children will soon be here to have dinner with us. I hope the Man with shavings on his white robe will smile upon us."

Selected Readings for the Church and Home

The Prophet Foresees the Messiah

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God; The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.

"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever."—Isaiah 9: 6, 7.

The Anunciation

"And in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth,

"To a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary.

"And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women.

"And when she saw him, she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be.

"And the angel said unto her, Fear not Mary: for thou hast found favor with God.

"And behold, thou shalt bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus.

"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David:

"And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. . . .

"And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word."—Luke 1: 26-38.

The Birth of Jesus

"And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed. . . .

"And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

"And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem; (because he was of the house and lineage of David:)

"To be taxed with Mary his espoused wife. . . .

"And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

"And she brought forth her first-born son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn."—Luke 2: 1-7.

The Angel Chorus

"And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

"And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

"And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

"For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

"And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

"And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."—Luke 2: 8-14.

The Visit of the Shepherds

"And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even into Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

"And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger.

"And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child.

"And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds.

"But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart.

"And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them."—Luke 2: 15-20.

The Tribute of the Wise Men

"Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem,

"Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. . . .

"And lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was.

"When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.

"And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh."—Matthew 2: 1, 2, 9-11.

A Messiah Choir Member Reminisces

By EVELINE BURGESS

CHRISTMAS APPROACHES in Independence. And with the rich associations of music in the air, the strains of Handel's Messiah bring a link with the personal past and the individual future to those who sing and those who listen. If you are in the choir, there is a rush of memory, and the notes stick in your throat. You remember, as a child, sitting in on rehearsals, eagerly looking toward the day when you too might join that great choir. Today you are here, with parents and children singing together the story of the Prince of Peace, giving with all the emotional energy that is in you, because you love the director, because you love the music, and because you love the message of the Messiah, before whom "every valley shall be exalted and every mountain and hill made low."

The year 1916 was a long while ago—maybe before your time. Mrs. "Cordie" Hulmes, following a General Conference performance under the direction of Albert N. Hoxie, directed the choir in an initial Christmas performance as a gift to the community. In the accompanying photo you may see Paul Craig sitting with the bass section today. He was the first bass soloist and also directed the performances from 1923-1943 after Mrs. Hulmes gave up her responsibility. As a matter of fact, that is Mrs. Hulmes herself sitting on the top row with the sopranos, where many a former soloist sits next to a youngster, because she feels that the stronger singers are apt to be pushed forward to make a good showing and that the back row sometimes needs help. If you have sung under both these conductors, you appreciate the heritage Franklyn Weddle took from them and to which he added something peculiarly his own. Remember last year's broadcast? All the performers sang their hearts out because the conductor of the Kansas City Philharmonic was present, and they wanted him to know how the Messiah could sound when "Franklyn" directed.

SOME OF THE ARIAS bring back memories of other soloists and great moments in Messiah Choir history. You are reminded of the late Nina Grenawalt Smith who, with her gracious presence and her silvery tones, sang the soprano solos nine times, and you hear the sweet invitation in her rendition of "Come unto Him." Pauline Arson sang those same solos six years, and you are moved again as you remember that after her mother's death in 1935, she sang with brilliant conviction, "I know that my redeemer liveth." Apostle Arthur Oakman was a veteran of five pre-war appearances from 1928-1937, but you remember most poignantly his glorious bass on "Why do the nations so furiously rage together?" upon his return from the Battle of Britain in 1946. And your heart hears again the late George Anway, giving of his ebullient hope for five years in the prophetic "Every valley shall be exalted." And then there are the great passages which remind you of a procession of Jewish refugees seeking somewhere a place of safety and of their new-found faith in the State of Israel, and you feel to cry unto her that "her warfare is accomplished, her iniquity is pardoned."

YOU SIT IN THE CHOIR and listen to the singers talking. One is an Englishman who began singing the Messiah as a boy in England, where every member of the audience held a book, and every note was sung from cover to cover. Here is one who started singing it in the University of Utah. Here is a brother of the director. Here is a great-granddaughter of Joseph Smith, Jr.; here a prominent Independence Mormon; here former soloists; here prominent vocalists from all faiths from miles around.

Rehearsal begins and you realize you have seen the choir go from the magnificent organ accompaniment of Robert Miller in the Stone Church to rich, warm symphonic accompaniment in the Auditorium;

Christmas Shopping - By MRS. A. A. ESSEX

THIS IS THE STORY of a small boy who went shopping on a Saturday afternoon with his dad. He was a little fellow with big, brown eyes a-sparkle in his chocolate-colored face. The father was a mountain of a man with an expression of deep-seated kindness.

The door of the neat, little white cottage opened, and the father smiled widely as his son raced to the front gate, trying to make his feet keep time with his bubbling chatter. As they left the yard, there was an air of habitual reverence in the way the man gently closed the gate as if he feared his powerful hands might crush it should he be careless. With an illumining smile of understanding for the boy's excitement, he took the little hand held up to him and moved toward the glitter of downtown Christmas time. The street was sparkling and wet from snow that seemed to be falling in obedience to human desire for traditional scenery during the yuletide season.

As the two neared their destination, they began to feel the crowd-humor more strongly. That is one of the wonderful things about Christmas. At all other times of the year, crowds on the street have their mass or united moods. Sometimes it is an air of bustling business. Sometimes it is brittle, self-centeredness. At other times it is good humor or ill temper that seems to touch, in varying degree, each individual who has made himself a part of the mass. But at no other time of year is there quite such a special crowd-humor of festivity and general love of all humanity. Walking in the midst of these hundreds, anyone must sense a warming glow of brotherhood. Even a tiny boy in bright cap and mittens trotting proudly beside his daddy must sense something.

He did. For a moment, his eyes held a bewildered question, but the reassuring smile and wink his daddy gave him erased that doubt immediately. Daddy's judgment could be trusted always. And they went on their way, walking slowly as near the buildings as possible so that Joey might feast his eyes upon the wonderful sights there.

A PORTLY MATRON sailed heedlessly through the throng, bestowing gracious smiles all about and discoursing at great length to a companion on the delicacies which were a must for her Christmas table.

"We always mold the cranberry sauce in the molds that my grandmother brought from the Old Country, you know," she said, impressing her friend with the fine standards her sauce must meet and disregarding the quality of mold in which a small boy must be set.

As the two women passed, a warm hand steadied little Joey on his feet then set his cap straight again. The bump didn't hurt, and the cap could be put right again, but the question couldn't be so easily answered. Even a very little boy has eyes to see and ears to hear when someone utters a disdainful gasp and brushes swiftly at a garment that has touched him as though the contact were somehow contaminating.

JOEY AND HIS DADDY walked on, but Joey's excited shrills of, "Look, Daddy, I want that for Mamma. Let's get it, please. Please, Daddy," were silenced. He still looked at countless beautiful things in an endless procession of store windows, but his little face wore a somber expression. Many times the glory of shop window fairylands was obscured by the buffeting sea of legs that surrounded him. He avoided as many as possible and learned very quickly not to look up, for when he did he often encountered a smile frozen in repudiation or disdain when he unavoidably bumped into someone.

At last, father and son entered through the great flapping doors and found themselves in the midst of a crowd much denser than any yet encountered. Joey's hand was wrenched free of its steady anchor in the pushing, shoving mass, and he was sharply alone. For a moment he stood paralyzed, not knowing what to do. The swirling movement all around caught him up, carried him away from the door and deposited him in a small open space at the end of a counter much higher than his head.

He paused and looked about, the first faint taste of fear prickling the back of his throat. Then hesitantly he put his foot out and took one step, searching with widened eyes. Two steps . . . three steps . . . four. More and more quickly his feet beat against the wooden floor.

Down one crowded aisle he searched. Up another. Panic grew, and he began to run—a small, desperate animal darting in and out among the legs. Once a rough hand seized his shoulder with bruising force and a voice uttered an unintelligible abuse. But in rising terror, he wriggled loose and ran blindly on not knowing any more where.

Suddenly, his headlong flight was brought up short against rough, woolen covered knees and, fighting to gather his breath for a scream, he heard a deep, familiar voice.

"Here, Son. Here I am. I waited right here for you." And the arm of Joey's father pressed the little boy close, until the small body began to relax, and Joey looked up with a brave effort to smile, "I got losted, Daddy," he whispered.

"You're not lost now, though, boy," said his father. "Here, let me hold you up where you can see the

Christ Is Still With Us

By WARREN L. VAN DINE

THIS IS THE CHRISTMAS SEASON—the time when we celebrate the birthday of a penniless preacher who lived in an obscure corner of the world two thousand years ago. He was born in a stable, grew to manhood in a village carpenter's home, had no place to lay his head during his brief career in the ministry, and was executed on a cross with common malefactors.

History's first glimpse of this poverty stricken preacher shows him wrapped "in swaddling clothes" and "laid in a manger" (second chapter of Luke). Joseph, carpenter of Nazareth, and his wife Mary, who was "great with child," had come eighty miles from their home town of Nazareth to Bethlehem to be registered with their family—the house of David of the tribe of Judah—in a tax census ordered by Augustus Caesar, Roman lord of the world.

Mary's condition made their journey a slow one, so that when they finally arrived in Bethlehem "there was none to give room for them in the inns." The only shelter available was in a stable attached to an inn where horses, mules, camels, and cattle were kept.

pretty things. Those counters are 'most too high for you." Joey nodded mute gratitude.

LATER, in the warm peace of home with confusion and bewilderment shut out, Joey listened to his daddy read the story he knew he would hear every night until Christmas. It was such a pretty story. Everything seemed silvery quiet when he listened to it, and he loved it better even than the one about the brave old rooster and the smart little fox. He snuggled closer as he heard his father read, ". . . and there a little baby boy was born."

"Daddy," Joey murmured sleepily, "who was that little boy?"

Here in a manger Joseph and Mary laid the baby Jesus after he was born. Here, or perhaps under the open sky on a hillside, his shepherd ancestor David had tended sheep a thousand years before. Here, weary from their journey and among strangers, Joseph and Mary and the infant Jesus spent the first Christmas.

History's last glimpse of this itinerant preacher (Luke 24) shows him standing on a hill near the town of Bethany where his friend Lazarus lived. He spoke a few words of comfort to a handful of faithful friends who stood near by. "And when he had spoken these things," the same writer states in Acts 1: 9, "while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight."

WHYY DO WE CELEBRATE the birthday of this man? The story is told how Napoleon Bonaparte after the loss of his empire and his exile to the island of St. Helena, commented one day that he had lost an empire after having all Europe in his hands, that he had let the world slip through his fingers like Charlemagne and the Roman Caesars

"You'd best always be asking that question, Son," his father answered. "Keep asking who was that little boy that he could grow up to look at a man and not see that his skin was black for seeing the black or white in his heart. Son, you find out who he was and never be sorry for any man 'cause he's black on the outside."

That night Joey's sleep was full of troubled pictures. There were pushing legs, sharp words, a manger, and . . . yes, a star! A silvery quiet filled the air, but there were rough hands reaching and clutching at him. Then, through the confusion of it all came a voice saying, "Good will toward men." In his sleep little Joey cried out, "Who are you?"

had done, but that he could name one ruler in history whose kingdom would never fail. "Who?" his listeners asked. "Jesus Christ," he answered. "His rule is based on love, and all must eventually bow before it."

We celebrate his birthday because he was destined to rule the world from the cross on which he died. The cloud still rolls between us and our Savior. But the eye of faith can pierce it. The words of true prayer can penetrate it. The clear tones of the voice that Lazarus heard while he was in the damp of the tomb can be heard by the righteous through the regions of darkness that separate mortal men from the world to come.

WE CAN BE AS HAPPY in his presence as Joseph and Mary were when he lived with them in their humble home in Nazareth. We can feel as safe with him near us in this life of stress as the apostles did when they wakened him in the boat on the lake of Gennesareth, and without one sign of confusion or of alarm, he commanded the tempest to stop in those immortal words, "Peace, be still!" We can be as near to him as the beloved disciple was when he laid his head on his breast at the Last Supper.

In ears that are closed, his voice may not sound. The call of politics or of pleasure may drown out his gentle, "Follow me!" But to all who will listen, he is still preaching the gospel of the kingdom that he declared during the three troubled years of his ministry. It is related in the second chapter of Matthew that an angel appeared to Joseph in a vision and quoted an ancient prophecy about Jesus: "Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which, being interpreted, is God with us."

This preacher who was born in a stable on the first Christmas is still with us. The fact that we are celebrating his birthday proves it.

Ministry to New Members

III. Ministry by the Aaronic Priesthood

By LEONARD LEA

*This is now the third time that Jesus shewed himself to his disciples, after that he was risen from the dead. * So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs.—John 21: 14, 15.*

The Aaronic Priesthood

As we search for the means of ministry to the new members, we find that the gospel makes provision for their welfare in the work and organization of the church.

Ministry to new members is basically a personal ministry, much of it in the home. In the restoration of his church, the Lord has planned a very complete ministry to the home.

One of the reasons that so many of our new members are forgotten and lost is that the program of home ministry is not made effective and administered by that part of the priesthood to whom this work is assigned.

When an adequate program of visiting is conducted by the church, through the ministry of well-qualified and devoted members of the priesthood, it appears certain that the losses of new members will be reduced.

The responsibility for ministry in the home—that is, the actual visiting—should be carried on rather largely under the direction of the pastor by the members of the Aaronic priesthood. Other members of the priesthood will visit occasionally as needs arise. The Aaronic priesthood should visit systematically. Its responsibility is to minister to the people. Its ministry will be especially needed by the new members.

The New Member in His Home

It is only in his home that the new member can be seen and understood most clearly. There he is surrounded by the kind of home life that has formed his character and personality. His home is also an outgrowth of his desires, his cultural and spiritual standards, and his character. The minister can learn to know the new member best in his home, understand his problems and needs, and know how to counsel in meeting them.

That is why ministry in the home is so very important—as important as any other branch of ministerial service.

Visits in the home reveal facts about people that will never be learned anywhere else. It is the duty of the visiting priesthood to know and understand the people.

If there is no ministry in the home, or at best an ineffective ministry, the church cannot exercise its maximum power for good in the lives of the people, and particularly in the lives of the new members.

The Ministry of the Priest

Among the duties of the priest listed in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10 are these: “visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties.”

As a visiting minister, the priest should be, first of all, well-qualified to give new members instruction in the life of prayer and the practice of prayer. To qualify for this work, he should be a careful and diligent student of prayer, and should practice it in his own private life as well as in his ministry. Only by doing so can he understand the depth and the meaning of prayer and teach others how to pray and what to pray for.

Until the new member knows the meaning of prayer and the purpose of it in his life, he cannot fully receive the ministry that the gospel should hold for him.

Another duty of the priest is to teach members “to attend to all family duties.” As there are many family duties, it would take a long list to include all of them. Briefly, it is the duty of the father to love his wife and children, be kind to them, support them, keep them from evil ways, and lead them to good citizenship and church membership. The mother shares these duties, in addition to many special tasks of her own. The children have many family duties, especially to the parents who have loved them and the home that has protected them. The priest will know many of these duties from his own experience and can become familiar with others by study. He should become an expert in knowledge of family life. It is not too much to expect that some will attend universities to make advanced studies of family life for this purpose. Others will benefit by their studies, and all will search the books of the church for help.

The priest shares a particular duty with the elder in relation to the new members. “The elders or priests are to have a sufficient time to expound all things concerning the church of Christ to their understanding, previous to their partaking of the sacrament, and being confirmed by the laying on of the hands of the elders.”—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 18.

It would appear wise here for the priest to consult with the elders concerning this duty before undertaking to act, to be sure that harmony is observed in the matter. If the elder can take care of the matter, it will be well for the priest to defer to him. If the elder cannot act, then the priest may, with the elder's consent, perform this service.

The Ministry of the Teacher

The duty of the teacher is outlined in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11 as follows: "to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty."

The work of the teacher for the new member is thus made clear. He should be an expert in human relationships, in the relationships between individuals, between families, and in the community. He will find help in his work in the study of a subject that is very important at the present time: public relations. The importance of this factor, just coming into prominence in the world, was realized in the very beginning of the gospel work.

The words "and be with" suggest personal fellowship and companionship between the teacher and the new members as well as older members. The teacher, like the priest, is to know something about family and domestic relations.

Further, the teacher is placed on the "attendance committee" by the Lord's instructions. He is to see that the people get to church. In case transportation is needed, he might even be expected to furnish that. If he did nothing more, he could do a wonderful work for the church in this way. The church can minister to the members, new and old, only if they attend the services. It is the work of the teacher to see that they are there.

The Ministry of the Deacon

While the greater burdens of the ministry of the deacon are concerned with the church building and property, he also has some responsibility in ministry to the home, and thus to the new member. It is quite possible that the bishop's agent may be one of the deacons. In this office, he may explain the financial law to the new member.

The deacon is one of the "standing ministry" (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 22), and he is informed that the teacher "is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons" (17: 11). This appears to indicate that instruction in the financial law is always to accompany the spiritual and social ministry of the church.

Conclusion

It will thus be observed that the members of the Aaronic priesthood will have more frequent opportunities for contact with new members than any other branches of the priesthood. It is apparent that they should "study to shew themselves approved" in the work and responsibility that belongs to them. It may depend upon them whether the church can continue to hold the new members or not. With their full help, the problem of ministering to new members and keeping them should be brought under full control in the church.

Saved by Grace - By VIVIAN J. BELMONT

IN A WORLD distressed by fear and conflict, we hear far too little of salvation through grace and mercy.

Hearts of people are burdened with hate, distrust, anxiety—with sin—yet so little is being said to give them hope and comfort in Jesus Christ.

The greatest story ever told, the story of Jesus, is still the light and hope of the world. The Restoration story, because it is true and beautiful, is too often told first. The light of the gospel story thus presented is sometimes obscure. It should not be used as a curtain raiser. Rather, the light should be used to focus upon the truth of the Restoration story. The world needs Jesus!

It is far easier to believe and understand the Restoration story after one has received the spirit of truth through Christ.

Business administration too often has first place over administration to the spiritual needs of people. Ministering to the sick and poor and needy in spirit, and conferring the Holy Ghost is the way of Jesus.

How often doctrine is misused to oppress and burden and offend. How often it is used to confuse a weary mind, a tired heart, a torn soul. An important part of the doctrine of Jesus is mercy and justice. It was meant to bring peace, joy, comfort, and hope.

THE SWORD PRICK OF CONSCIENCE will cause the believer who has accepted Christ to obey the law through love of God. He will obey the first commandment or bear the burden of guilt. The only way he can possibly be free of the burden is by bringing it to Jesus in prayer.

Sometimes we boast of our own will power and determination. These are rather self-righteous attitudes. The only safe way is power to overcome through Jesus Christ. Sometimes we do not even mention his name and give thanks for this God-given power. And yet, in our hearts, we know that any other power may let us down.

Not one of us may be saved except through Jesus Christ. No man has power to save himself. Our only hope of redemption is to be found in God's grace and mercy.

Joseph Smith was a prophet but Jesus is the Savior, the Prince of the World, the King of kings. We are saved, not through Joseph Smith, but by faith, confession, hope, grace, mercy, and baptism through Jesus Christ.

The Book of Mormon is a marker on the road of time, pointing the way. It is further evidence that the gospel is true.

Through all our pain, our griefs, our problems, Jesus whispers softly and tenderly. At the altar of our inner beings, he pleads, "Oh, sinner, come home."

Who Is Keeping Whom From Church?

By JAMES A. EVERETT

QUITE OFTEN I hear the trite excuse, "I'm not going to attend church so long as Sister So-and-So and Brother Blank are there, because they have failed in their Christian responsibility to treat me right." It is not my intention or desire to justify the misconduct of these people. All too often perhaps their behavior has not been in accordance with high Christian ideals, but more often they are guilty of being just plain human. As such they have unfortunately failed to see all of the angles involved and have inadvertently transgressed some individuals' rights, sphere of authority, personal areas, or the imagined counterparts of these.

It has always been my sincere belief that Zion is within the physical possibilities of man today, providing we are willing to abide by the God-given requirements for its creation. However, I am unable to divorce Zion from everyday existence, including both advancements and mistakes which have occurred in our daily living. There seems to be an unmistakable tie with the preparatory role of the church, especially the contribution of the local branch and the building of this Zion.

God never intended to build Zion alone, nor did he expect us to build it alone. Even the name—the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—signifies a unique partnership. God knows, and so do we, that human behavior is not a spontaneous result, but the culmination of years of previous actions and reactions. Truly it has been said that when we are young we make our habits, and as we reach maturity our habits make us.

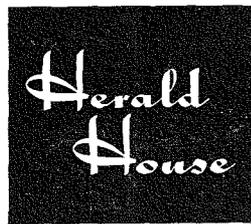

THE RECORD of the trials of Israel and Book of Mormon peoples, also our own latter-day record (the Doctrine and Covenants), is a story of God's attempt to patiently deal with men via their free agency and intellect to accept the peace, joy, and harmony he has in store for them. It is also a story of man's dealing with man, and as a church we are committed to the task of converting the people of the world to live as brothers.

If this be the case and we have a belief in Zion, can we continue to mislead ourselves into believing that our behavior is suddenly going to conform to the standards set for the Zion era? Are we going to go on dreaming of the day when peace is a characteristic of Zion, believing that God is going to do it all for us? There are no spectators in Zion, only participants, and the participants are to be as well-trained to conform to the rules as a football or basketball squad is trained to conform to the rules of the game. And, similarly, it takes practice for people to know and conform intelligently to those rules. Just as the football field and the gymnasium are the areas for developing sports ability, so is the chapel of God the proving ground for those who would build and inhabit Zion. There can be no transgressing of the rules nor intermittent attendance in either area if the result must be a winning team. It is not on the field of battle, but on the practice field, where the decisions are made as to who will most adequately represent the team.

WE ARE A TEAM, and we are going to build Zion. One of the first requirements in teamwork is to be able to give and forgive; to work in our place and support those in other areas, to minimize the errors, and be charitable toward those who make them; and to capitalize on our strengths and successes. We must first be big enough to learn to live together in the local branch—wherever it may be and whatever its size—in love, forgiveness, and understanding before we ever dare hope for or intelligently dream of Zion.

QUESTION:

What Scripture can we use to show there were priests, either Aaronic or Melchisedec, in the New Testament church that was set up by Christ?

Missouri

I. M. G.

ANSWER:

There is very little written in the New Testament about priesthood. This fact makes it absolutely necessary for additional revelations to be given on the subject. We have these revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants. But the few incidental statements we have in the New Testament show that the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods were in the church and recognized by the writers.

In I Peter 2: 5 we read, "Ye also, as lively stones are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices." The church is here represented as a "spiritual house" with or containing the "holy priesthood." Verse nine adds, "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people."

This verse also presents the fact that the church has or is governed by "a royal priesthood," which is the Melchisedec priesthood. This does not mean that all the members are to hold the priesthood as some claim, but is to be understood as presented in Exodus 19: 6: "And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests"—that is, the priests were to be the ruling authority in the church.

Christ was "called of God an high priest after the order of Melchisedec."—Hebrews 5: 10. And he said to his apostles, "Peace be unto you; as my Father sent me so send I you."—John 21: 21. Christ sent his apostles with the Melchisedec priesthood as the Father sent him.

"For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a perfect hope did."—Hebrews 7: 19. "If perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law) what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec and not be called after the order of Aaron. For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change of the law."—Hebrews 7: 11, 12.

When the gospel displaced the Law of Moses, this change "in the law" made it necessary for a change to be made in the priesthood. The priesthoods were not abolished, but remained, however, now the Melchisedec priests took the lead, as the Aaronic took control under the Law of Moses. Now both priesthoods remained, each doing the work of its order.

QUESTION:

What is our belief about pre-existence? Have our spirits occupied other bodies? California

R. G. V.

ANSWER:

Occupancy of other bodies is nonscriptural dogma. It is a part of Oriental religious teaching and is not even recognized in the history of philosophy. I know of no reputable philosopher who taught it. It is foreign to western thought and tradition.

Pre-existence is unrelated to that doctrine and is taught in various passages of Scripture in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. The gist of this teaching is that the spirit which houses the intelligence of man is made by God, but intelligence is eternal. Bringing both together, God effected the spiritual creation in the eternal world before the creation of the earth. When he did this he did not make imbeciles, idiots, or morons. All spirits were equal and existed in a state of innocence. But there arose one among them, Lucifer, the star of the morning, who started an insurrection. He led one third of the hosts with him; these were cast out of heaven and are forever barred from the privilege of mortal existence and the concomitant probationary states. They are the enemies of all men, having power to tempt, to afflict, to cause accidents, war, and death. Christ overcame these adversaries and made it possible for his disciples to do likewise.

During the war in heaven, some fought valiantly and overcame by the word of their testimony and gained the privilege of the probationary state with the possibility of celestial glory in the eternal world. Others did not fight so manfully and some were neutral, but did not lose the high privilege of the probationary state and some degree of salvation in the world to come.

Properly seen, the doctrine of pre-existence is philosophical and there is nothing in science against it. In fact, the scientist does not deal with such questions. As Mr. Ward says, "Science nowhere begins at the beginning nor ends at the ending, but leaves a vast field where prophet and poet may expatiate freely." It is not a principle of salvation like baptism or the Communion, but it has theological implications. Jesus, the true pattern of all men, said his glorious prayer: "Give unto me the glory I had with thee before the world was."—John 17.

JAMES E. BISHOP.

QUESTION:

Please explain the meaning of the phrase, "six hundred three score and six," of Revelation 13: 18.

Ontario

I. M.

ANSWER:

The number 666 pertains to the second beast described in Revelation 13. It seems clear that the first beast symbolized civil Rome in its unrelenting and bitter persecution of the Christians, whereas the second beast represents the embodiment of an ecclesiastical power that is universal and an expression of total apostasy. Both of them, in their different forms and time, are anti-Christ.

The Jews sometimes used numbers as a symbol for names, when they desired to restrict the information to a few. A general view of the number, 666, is that in its threefold manipulation of six, it falls short of the sacred number, seven, and as such it is a symbol of the universal apostasy.

An attempt has been made to apply the number to Nero. It is argued that if Nero Caesar be written in Hebrew and the letters be given their numerical value the result is six hundred sixty-six.

On page 177 of A Marvelous Work and a Wonder (fourth edition), there is this quotation from Flemming, on the Papacy, page 48 (A.D. 1701):

But a still more probable explication may be found in the title which the Roman Pontiff has assumed, and which is inscribed over the door of the Vatican: "Vicarius Filii Dei" (Vicar of the Son of God). In Roman computation this contains the number 666.

This would appear to be a more reasonable interpretation than the application to Nero since he lived in the period covered by the first beast.

On the basis of obscurity too much importance should not be attached to the meaning of this number. This is the only instance of its use in all of the New Testament, making comparison impossible. Besides that, the number is only one item among many by which anti-Christ is made manifest.

With God's Help - By ELSIE TOWNSEND

STILL IN THE BAND-LEADER UNIFORM, I hurried from the stage and through the crowd to find my children. People stopped me on all sides to tell me how beautiful the operetta had been and how much they enjoyed the band. Fretting with the delay, I managed to nod, smile, and say "Thank you," but always I edged closer to the seats where I had placed my five children at the beginning of the program.

When I reached them, four pairs of round eyes looked up at me expectantly.

"Where's Jimmy?" I asked, automatically taking an account of them. Joan, his two-year-old twin, looked at me sleepily.

"We don't know. He must've gone when we weren't looking," seriously explained six-year-old Beverly, my oldest. "He was here; then I looked around and he was gone."

"Mother, we liked the dancers in the black boots," the four-year-old twins chattered almost simultaneously.

"That was the Spanish dance," I answered, but my eyes were scanning the crowd hurriedly to see where my son might be.

The gymnasium was still filled with the audience. Doors were opening and closing. I must find him before he slipped out unnoticed. Calling to another teacher to stay with the children, I wove in and out of the heavy coats, brushed against leather jackets, cowboy hats, heard the scraping of high-heeled boots, felt the gusts of frosty air as the doors opened and closed.

Near the doors I saw a group standing about some object on the floor. With a sigh of relief I wormed my way into the circle. There on the floor sat my son placidly eating his Christmas candy.

"Jimmy, Jimmy," I said, "why did you get yourself lost?"

"Your son's not lost," explained a man whom I recognized as the father of my French-horn player. "It's you who are lost."

The laugh that followed was comradely. It warmed my heart. Besides here was my son. Picking up Jimmy as I talked to the people around, I held his sticky hands away from the band uniform and soon found my way to the four waiting children.

Snow suits were soon on and zipped, overshoes on—Beverly could do her own, thank goodness! They were now warmly clad. The teacher who was helping me offered to stay a moment while I brought my car around to the door of the gym.

Friendly school parents helped me get the children to the car. With a few words to the janitor about costumes to be put away, I was through for the evening—for the Christmas vacation—to go home with my sleepy family.

THE CHILDREN were almost asleep when I helped or carried them into the house. My mind was busy with the successful evening as I tucked them into bed. The operetta was lovely. The performance had been almost perfect. No one but the teachers knew that two other teachers and I had written all the script ourselves, combining songs and folk dances with our original narrative. Over two hundred children in the program and not a hitch!

With the children asleep, I was free to relax and think. The house was spotless. My housekeeper had already gone home for the two weeks' holiday, but her work had been well done. What a quiet time I'd have the whole vacation! How I needed the rest! This job of teaching music in a school along with rearing my five fatherless children was exhausting. In the morning I would plan our Christmas. We'd drive down to the valley to visit friends and relatives. We'd stay a day or two, go to our own church in Bozeman . . . I was asleep before I could think more.

With the morning, came a resuming of household duties. About ten o'clock two high school boys knocked at the door.

"Hey, teacher, do you have your Christmas tree yet?" they called. "No, you haven't, have you?" they answered themselves as they glanced around the room. "Well, here's a dandy, just the right height. We put a base on it too."

I tried to pay them, but they laughingly refused and were on their way again. The children were delighted with trimming the tree. Of course Jimmy broke one silver ball and Joanie tripped and fell against the tree, but they "helped" too. Together we went to the little store near by to get a set of Christmas tree lights—our first one. Their eyes glowed almost as brightly as the little lights did when they were turned on.

Toward evening I left long enough to run next door to engage a girl for next morning to stay with the children while I went across the river to the Episcopal church to play for an early morning Christmas service.

WHEN I RETURNED, the cheerful lights of my home warmed me as I stamped off the snow before entering. Christmas Eve! Beverly was excited about Santa Claus. She helped the four-year-old twins hang their stockings on the back of the davenport. She hung her own and one each for Jimmy and Joan. We sang a few carols, and I read them the story of the Christ child. They protested they were not sleepy, but soon I was putting them into bed. First Jimmy and Joan, each in a small bed with sides that fastened up. Joanie could say a little prayer, but Jimmy left out most of the words. The older twins were seriously trying to get their sleepers on. Helping them into their big bed, I kissed them as I assured them, "Yes, Santa will be here soon," "No, he won't have trouble finding our house."

"But, Beverly, why aren't you getting your sleepers on?" I noticed her scratching her arms. "My arms itch and my head hurts and I'm sick, I guess." Her face puckered as she tried hard not to cry.

"Why, Beverly, dear, come here to me." I held her close a minute, then looked at her bare arms. Why hadn't I noticed before? Her soft skin was broken here and there by small red eruptions. Hurriedly undressing her, I found more marks on her body. Chicken pox! We had had a few cases at school. I explained to her what it was, calmed her by telling her that they would soon disappear as Anne's, the little neighbor girl's had, talked about Christmas morning, tucked her into bed, kissed her, turned out the lights, listened for her quiet breathing, and escaped into the hall.

I couldn't have been cheerful another moment. As I walked slowly into the living room, the tears were coming into my eyes. Now I could cry if I wanted to. It wasn't fair—it couldn't be fair! Now I'd be tied in the house the whole vacation with a chicken-pox quarantine. I couldn't do it! No trip to the valley. No one to talk with the whole two weeks.

Oh, why had I taken this job of teaching in the mountain town sixty miles from home? All strangers around me. Yes, I knew it was the only vacancy in my field of teaching, and of course I had to support my children. But why did my husband have to die, leaving us so alone? I couldn't do it—couldn't

I DROPPED TO MY KNEES in despair. Then my eyes were drawn to the only light in the room, the tiny bulb in the star shining on the tree.

My Christmas Card List - By RUTH E. BRONSON

I KEEP A LIST of names of the friends to whom I send Christmas cards. This simple list has shown me year after year that nothing is certain but change. After all my cards are mailed out, I make a new list, including all the changes that have taken place during the past year. But before many weeks have passed, I find myself getting the list out to make another change on it. I would venture to say there is not a month goes by in which changes are not made. This is what I mean.

A couple we know who used to live close by have had to move many miles away because of the husband's work.

Another friend has had an addition to the family, and I note that change on my list—being sure to put down the correct name so I can include it on the next Christmas card.

Not long ago an old lady who has been on my list for many years died, so I had to mark her name off.

Then there is the sweet little girl who just got married. I mustn't forget to change her name and add her husband's.

My Christmas card list tells a real story—a story of life. It goes on year after year—the same things happening to different people. And each time I look at it all marked up from changes made during the years, I think of life and how this list brings out the constant changes taking place.

WHAT DOES ALL THIS MEAN to me? I think of our friends who found it necessary to move many miles away and wonder if we fully enjoyed them while we had them near. Were we kind to them? Did we help them? Did we make the most of our friendship while we could? The friend who had a baby—did we do all we could to help her while she was not feeling well? Or did we wait until she was back from the hospital and then stop by to play with the baby? And the old lady who passed away. Many times a little visit from us would have cheered her, and we kept saying we must stop to see her, but we never did. And now we can't.

See what I'm trying to say? We must do things when we can! Tomorrow or next week or next year or when we have more time may be too late.

A Christmas Reverie - By JENNIE Z. ELLIOTT

THE PEOPLE of the world into which Jesus was born knew war and feared the threat of it. And yet, on the night that he was born, angels from the throne of God, hovering between heaven and earth, joyfully proclaimed him to be "Christ the Lord." They sang that first Christmas carol of "Peace on earth, good will toward men," while the star burned its way across the sky until it had guided lowly shepherds to his manger cradle, where they knelt in homage and adoration at his feet.

We, too, know war, and the threat of future wars makes us afraid. But to us to whom faith is given, again on this Christmas Eve, the angels fill earth and sky with their triumphant proclamation, "For unto you is born this day a Savior, which is Christ the Lord," and sing their glad hymn, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," while above and around them the star of peace shines, pointing all men and all nations to that day when war shall be no more, when men of good will shall dwell together in peace with Christ through all eternity.

Briefs

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—On July 25 a sacrifice chicken dinner was held to increase the local offering fund for the sick and needy.

On July 29 and 30 the district youth institute was held in Lincoln.

At the annual business meeting the following were elected: Elder John Schunk, pastor; Priest E. P. Oehring, church school director; Joyce Savage, secretary; Elder George Gates, music director; Dave G. Krahl, treasurer; Eunice Fulton, librarian and publicity agent; Veva Allen, church school secretary; Priest Grover Wall, adult supervisor; Grace Gates, young people's supervisor; Deacon Vinton Wight, custodian; Iola Wright, Earl Flowers, and Art Thompson, auditing committee; Norman Pruks, I. E. Madsen, D. G. Krahl, Vinton Wight, Capitola Mechling, and John Schunk building committee.

The older adults met and elected Ethel Spalding as president and Susie Tabler as her assistant and secretary.

Zion's League meets every other week at the church. A class is being taught by Capitola Mechling. A university party was held September 22 at the home of Mrs. Warren Baller.

Church school promotion exercises were held September 24.

Zion's Leaguers went to Nebraska City on September 24 to spend the day with the church League there.

The priesthood meet every other Tuesday. They are studying a course on priesthood helps.

A parent-teacher meeting was held October 9 for the primary department.

Word was received of the death of Mrs. Henry Bailey. The Baileys were great workers in the Lincoln Branch before going to California to live.—Reported by EUNICE FULTON.

CLIO, MICHIGAN.—On the afternoon of November 5, the priesthood and their wives gathered at the church for a period of devotion. The service was in charge of Elder James McBride, pastor, and Elder Elwood Hester, associate pastor. The service was opened by a very appropriate song, "O Reapers of Life's Harvest." Elder Hester offered the invocation.

The women's leader, Lydia Bechtel, gave the devotional lesson taken from the Doctrine and Covenants with instructions on making our homes Zion. A challenge was given to undertake the responsibility of becoming "a reaper of life's harvest."

A personal test which could benefit all was the question, "In what way can I serve my God the best?"

A period of silent prayer and meditation provided an interlude followed by a devotional prayer by Ida Mae Ross, assistant women's leader.

Elder James McBride led in a discussion on having the priesthood and their wives meet together. Since the home is a unity of one, so also should the priesthood and their wives be as one in God's work.

Elder James McBride concluded the meeting with a paragraph from the Priesthood Manual on teaching through love for our fellow men. The closing benediction was offered by Elder Elwood Hester.—Reported by ANN PHILLIPS.

SALEM, OREGON.—At the annual business meeting, Pastor Charles H. Asher, who has served faithfully for many years, retired from office. George Speed was elected the new pastor. Very few other changes were made.

The Saints in and around McMinnville and Dayton have formed a mission. Brother Asher is serving as pastor. These Saints formerly attended the Salem Branch.

Brother and Sister William N. Swain have recently moved to Salem because of a transfer in Brother Swain's position with the telephone company. Sister Swain will help with the music department. Brother Swain is a priest and will help in the young people's activities.

Brother Kenneth W. Slover was recently ordained an elder.

Improvements are being made on the building. The building has been insulated and windows have been added. Venetian blinds and drapes have been purchased. A nursery room is also anticipated.—Reported by WILLIAM C. SWAIN.

LENNOX, CALIFORNIA.—At the annual branch business meeting the following officers were elected: Albert M. Pearson, pastor; Perry L. Woods, director of religious education; Mrs. Nellie Woods, adult supervisor; Clarence Harmon, young adult supervisor; Bill Webb, Senior Zion's League supervisor and bishop's solicitor; Bob Birch, Junior Zion's League supervisor and custodian; Mrs. Joyce Pearson, children's supervisor; Mrs. Bina Pearson, secretary; Glenn Lawson, treasurer; Ray Webb, children's pastor; Mrs. Inez Smith, music director; Mrs. Dorothy Slater, women's leader; Don Pike, drama director; Mrs. Jeanett Reaves, book steward; Mrs. Harriet Glaze, librarian and publicity agent; Ralph Root, bishop's solicitor.

Five former Gracelanders and a prospective student were responsible for the special Graceland College Day program given at the twelve o'clock hour on October 29. A symposium entitled "THE OLD ACACIA" was presented which included talks on "What I Expect of Graceland," by Barbara Woods; "Religious Training at Graceland," by Glen Holmes; "Academic Training at Graceland," by Bill Webb; "Graceland and the Business World," by Mary Reeves, and "Graceland and the Home," by Mrs. Olive Ensley Harmon, interspersed with a commentary by Mrs. Harriet Jordan Glaze and appropriate musical numbers.

At the evening service on November 5, a lecture accompanied by colored slides on "Archaeology in Mexico Today" was given by Mr. Gordon Boll and Mrs. Emma Boll of the Pasadena Branch.—Reported by MRS. K. C. GLAZE.

CADILLAC, MICHIGAN.—Evangelist Edward R. Carter from Lansing held a series of meetings October 8 to 19. These services were attended by the Saints and several non-members. Brother Carter gave eight sermons, presided over two fellowship services, addressed the women's department, blessed one baby, administered to the sick, gave five blessings, and made twenty visits among the Saints.—Reported by MILFORD FREY.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.—District conference and priesthood institute was held November 4, 5, and 6 at Taylorville, Illinois.

Priesthood classes were taught Saturday and Sunday by Apostle D. O. Chesworth and Seventy Cecil Ettinger.

Apostle Chesworth was in charge of the opening prayer service, assisted by District President Arthur Henson, Seventy Ettinger, and Evangelist O. C. Henson, Sr. Apostle Chesworth also spoke at the 11:00 hour, and was in charge of the business session.

Officers for the coming year are: Arthur Henson of Taylorville, district president; Gilbert Elam of Decatur, treasurer; Helen H.

Hunt of Taylorville, secretary; Joe Williams of Springfield, music director; Billy Poor of Danville, O. C. Henson, jr., of Decatur, and Melvin Fowler of Springfield, finance committee; Melvin Fowler, auditor and young people's leader; Eva Henson of Decatur, women's leader; William Banfield of Taylorville, religious education; E. E. Thomas of Beardstown, nonresident pastor; Harold Walker of Beardstown and William Spicer of Decatur, counselors; O. C. Henson, sr., evangelist; Kenneth Newton of Decatur, bishop's agent; and Pearl Jones of Beardstown, historian.—Reported by HELEN H. HUNT.

SPRINGERTON, ILLINOIS.—District President Sylvester R. Coleman held a series of meetings from September 11 to 24. They were climaxed by a baptismal service in which twenty new members were baptized. Elders W. W. Colvin, Hallick Milner, Harry Hinson, and Rufus Rockett assisted in the confirmation service. All services during the series were well attended.

Response has been very gratifying in the "Each One Bring One" campaign.

At the annual branch business meeting, the following officers were elected: Willard Thomas, pastor; Carl Hare, church school director; Bernadine Walker, secretary; Frank Bensing, treasurer; Kenneth Thomas, young people's leader; Ethel Stallings, women's leader; Rufus Stallings, music director, and Pauline Rush, pianist.—Reported by GILBERT WILSON.

SASKATOON, SASKATCHEWAN.—The priesthood institute was held the week end of November 11. Missionary Z. Z. Renfroe was in charge.

The Daughters of Zion catered to the banquet Friday evening. A variety program in which much youthful talent was displayed concluded the evening.

The theme of the Saturday morning general prayer service was: "I am determined to let nothing separate me from the communion of the Holy Spirit." This was followed by a priesthood class in charge of Elder Renfroe and a women's class in charge of Elder Roy Bowerman.

A social time was held at the noon hour when dinner was served to priesthood, their wives, and visitors.

A short business meeting Saturday afternoon was in charge of District President Howard Fisher. The matter of a reunion grounds was discussed to some length and finally tabled.

Sister Rose Fisher of Adanac was chosen as district cradle roll supervisor.

The previous budget was increased by $40.00 for the purchase of tracts to be used in district work and for the cradle roll supervisor.

Saturday evening Elder Renfroe used "Forgiveness" as his sermon theme.

"I am determined to minister to the needs of the people" was the theme of the priesthood prayer service at 8:30 a.m. Sunday which began a day of spiritual worship and fellowship.

Following the general class in charge of Elder Renfroe, Communion was served. During this service Loretta Marion, infant daughter of District President Howard and Mrs. Virginia Fisher was blessed by Elders Renfroe and Gendron.

The closing service was a sermon by Elder Renfroe, choosing for his subject "Unanswered Prayer."

Sister L. Diggle was in charge of the music. A number of Saints came from isolated places. Brother Fisher has been visiting among the isolated, and at Nora found that after twenty years without a visit from church officers there was faith there. He administered to the sick, baptized, confirmed, blessed children, and was later called back to officiate at the funeral of an aged brother. Brother Fisher is continuing his visits to the isolated now that the institute is over.—Reported by AMY POWELL.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—The Oregon district conference and institute was held October 19 to 22, at Portland, Oregon, with the services the first two days at the Central Church, S. E. 25th and Madison, and the last two days at Washington Masonic Hall, E. 8th and Burnside.

A buffet dinner was held at 6:30 p.m. on the 19th for the district officers and the priesthood and their wives. All day classes on religious education were held Friday, and one class each on Saturday and Sunday with Apostle Reed M. Holmes as the instructor. Apostle E. J. Gleazer was also present as apostle in charge of the district.

Apostle Holmes was the speaker at the eight o'clock hour on the 19th and also the evening of the 22nd. Apostle Gleazer was the speaker at the eight o'clock hour the 20th and at the eleven o'clock service on the 22nd.

The annual election of officers was held Saturday afternoon with the following officers being elected: High Priest J. L. Verhei, district president; Elders F. E. Chapman and Miles Whiting, counselors; Matie A. Young, secretary; Elder Milton Becker, treasurer; Elder Fred Hawes, auditor; Elder Harold Carpenter, director of religious education; Roycie Chapman, women's leader; Carolyn Larson, music leader; Chester Gregory, Zion's League leader; Leona Carpenter, dramatic leader; M. E. Lasater, bishop; Elder Paul Fishel, bishop's counselor; and Lillian Livingston, historian.

The following men were ordained on Sunday in a service held at 6:30 a.m. in the Central Church. To the office of priest: Milton Petrie, Sunny Valley, Oregon; Kieth Kintart, Camas, Washington; Harry Ruchaber, Roseburg, Oregon; Ephrum Barnhart, Springfield, Oregon; Arthur Minor, First Church, Portland; Earl Petrie, Central Point, Oregon; John Wier, Medford, Oregon (now an Air Force Captain somewhere in Korea); Harold Crooker, Klamath Falls, Oregon. To the office of teacher: Lyle Lawler, Central Church, Portland. To the office of deacon: Doyle Mathewson, Delmar Ray, and Ralph Auld of Central Church, Portland; Tolbert Murphy, Grants Pass, Oregon; Waldo Lasley, Camas, Washington; Rodney Polly and Kenneth Moye of Bend, Oregon.

Ordained to the office of elder at Washington Hall at 8:30 a.m. were the following: Wayne Lapworth and Lloyd Shannon of Central Church, Portland; Clifford Bryson and Gordon Lampard of First Church, Portland; James Davidson, Medford, Oregon; Kenneth Slover, Salem, Oregon; Malcom Whiting, Forest Grove, Oregon, and Samuel Morris, Roseburg, Oregon.

The following were baptized at 1:30 Sunday at Central Church: Robert and Mary Welk and Virginia Holmes, Central Church, Portland; Howard Worthington, Grand Island, and Albert Sharp of South East Portland.

The attendance at this conference was very good. Members came from all over the district. About 150 were present at the dinner Thursday night, and over six hundred members attended during the entire conference.

The district conference voted to hold its own reunion this year on the newly purchased Lewis River Camp Grounds. The reunion committee consisting of District President Verhei, Bishop Lasater, Elders Miles Whiting, F. E. Chapman, Milton Becker, and Lester Comer were authorized to raise the money to pay for the grounds and arrange for the reunion.—Reported by MRS. KATHLEEN LAWLER.

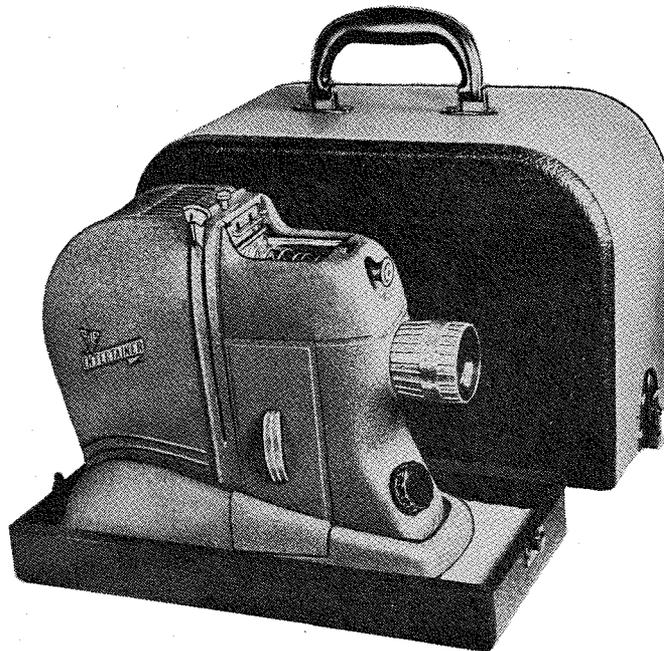

ST. HELENS, OREGON.—November 12 was organization day in Scappoose and St. Helens, Oregon. A new mission church school is in the making. The following members came from Portland to assist in the forming of this new group: District President J. L. Verhei, Elder Wayne Lapworth, and District Church Superintendent Carpenter. Brother Carpenter's wife and family from Vancouver, Washington, were present at the meeting.

The following members from the surrounding vicinity were Brother and Sister Hopen, Brother Bilyeu, Mr. and Mrs. Ted Ostrem, Mr. and Mrs. Adrian Klick and family from Scappoose, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Popejoy and daughters Jo Anne and Ruby, Sister Ruby Buvik, and grandson Dennis Reynolds all from St. Helens.

Sister Klick was chosen church school director, Sister Popejoy, treasurer; Sister Ostrem, secretary; and Jo Anne De Long, publicity agent.

The McNutty school, one mile south of St. Helens, has been obtained for the church school. Elder Wayne Lapworth, pastor of the group, assisted by the district officers, will provide speakers and soloists for the meetings. The church school will meet every Sunday at 9:45 a.m.—Reported by JO ANNE DE LONG.

The Carpenter of Fifth and Hardy

By ELBERT DEMPSEY, JR.

EVERYBODY IS FEELING LIKE CHRISTMAS. But, like Mrs. Seevy says, it is too bad if all we can do is celebrate what happened 2,000 years ago. Mrs. Seevy wishes she had been there on the front row when it all happened. She says she would have thrown herself at the Lord's feet. The only trouble is that there wouldn't have been room for the three Wise Men to get in.

I'll bet it would have been a good idea for someone like Mrs. Seevy to be around to help, because all the grownups say the people back then treated Jesus something awful. One night at prayer meeting they got to talking about it. Brother Holly said every time he thought about poor Jesus being born in a manger, he wished he could have let Joseph and Mary have one of his apartments. Everyone told how he wished he could have stood by Jesus's side in his trials. I was looking for Brother Paris to stand up any time and order God to give us the chance. Sure 'nuff, he did. After Brother Paris's prayer everyone got real excited, thinking how wonderful it would be to stand shoulder to shoulder with Jesus in his great work.

THE NEXT MORNING a new carpenter opened a shop down at the corner of Fifth and Hardy. That night after school Sam and I stopped by to see what it was like. The man was real friendly and was showing us around when we heard a big racket outside. We dashed out and there was Mrs. Seevy pointing her finger at Belle Hanson and really telling her off. There was quite a crowd and they looked mad. The new carpenter stepped into the middle and asked what they were doing. Mrs. Seevy sputtered, "That—that hussy has been drinking and flirting with a married man!" The new carpenter said, "Sooo?" Mrs. Seevy said, "So we are not going to stand for it." The new carpenter looked mad, and Sam and I were scared for him, cause Mrs. Seevy isn't the kind of woman you get mad at. He said, "And what would you do?" Mrs. Seevy blinked and said, "Are you defending her actions?" "Of course not," said the new carpenter. "So let's figure out some way to help the poor girl. But whatever you do, don't make a public disgrace of her so that she can never hope for anything better."

Mrs. Seevy was so huffed up she was speechless, so the crowd left. Belle Hanson had tears in her eyes and told the new carpenter that was the first real kind thing anyone had done for her since she was a little girl. She wanted to know what she could do to thank him. He just smiled and went back into his shop.

SAM SAID, "Say, Mister! Do you want to help somebody else? Joe Miller needs a place for his wife and little baby to live."

The new carpenter asked if we had any ideas. I remember our prayer meeting the night before, so I told the carpenter about how Brother Holly said he wished he could have given Mary and Joseph an apartment. I said Millers needed it as bad as Mary and Joseph, so Brother Holly should be glad to let them have it, especially since Mary and Joseph couldn't pay as much as Millers. The new carpenter laughed and went with us to see Brother Holly. Sam and I kept kinda quiet while the new carpenter and Brother Holly talked about how to fix apartments. Then they started talking religion, and the carpenter got Brother Holly to talking about what he would have done for Jesus. He asked Brother Holly why he would want to give an apartment to Mary and Joseph.

"Why—because they were to have the Lord, and they needed a place, I guess."

"It wasn't because of the honor that would come to you?"

"Oh, no."

"You just wanted to be of service?"

"Yes. It makes me burn to think of those people turning Mary out into the cold.

"Fine, Brother Holly. And you know, there is just as much need for men like you today as there was then. Why, Joe Miller needs a place just as bad as Joseph did.

"See here, I can't take in every pauper who needs a cheap home. I have to pay taxes and upkeep and—"

"And so did the innkeepers of Bethlehem—so they didn't have room for the tired travelers.

Brother Holly's eyebrows were shaking. That is a bad sign that Brother Holly is about to explode. He did. On the way back to the carpenter's shop, we passed Joe Miller. He stopped us with a grin and said, "I owe you boys a free ice cream cone. Belle Hanson heard you tell your friend here that I needed a place to stay, so she moved into a hotel room and gave us her apartment. She said with the baby we needed it worse than she did.

I saw the carpenter with a happy smile, and I knew that Belle Hanson had thanked him.

THE NEXT TIME I SAW HIM was Sunday morning at church. He sat behind Mrs. Seevy. She looked around and snorted. Brother Holly looked over and one eyebrow shook. The carpenter just smiled at everyone. When the priesthood walked in, he went to the front and told the pastor he wanted to say a few words.

New Horizons

Then he turned around with a sad look. He sat on the pulpit rail. He looked like he was thinking of something a long way off. Then he said slowly—

It has been a long time since I walked into a meeting unannounced and sat down for a face-to-face talk.

Do you know me? No, you do not because I dress as one of you; I talk as one of you; I appear as one of you. If I appeared in long robes and a beard as you see me in the picture on the wall—then would you know me? No—you would call me a fake. Suppose you saw me with the halo? Then you might accept me. Why? Because of the halo—the magic halo. But the people who saw me long ago saw no halo. How would you have known me then if you do not know me now?

Brother Paris jumped up and said, "See here, are you trying to tell us you are Jesus Christ?"

You prayed that he come to walk among you. Are you of so little faith you don't believe it could happen?

"Oh, it could happen—but look at you. You are just like one of us. When Jones moved here, I didn't fall down and worship him; I can't see any more reason for worshipping you."

Then you would deny Christ if he appeared as a normal son of man. How would you have him prove himself?

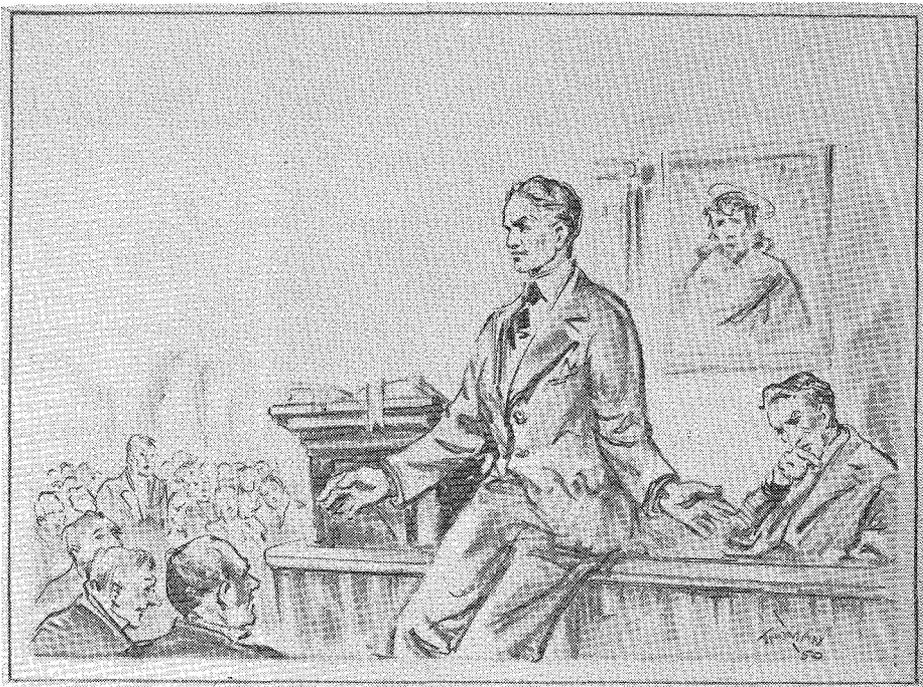

"Why—give us a sign."

Yes, if I gave you a sign, you would fall at my feet. But if I turned this book to gold, how would you know you had not fallen at the feet of Satan?

You prayed for the chance to labor with me—and you gloated that you would not fail me as many did when I lived as a man among men. But, I have come to you, my own, and you receive me not.

I cannot blame you for not recognizing me as the Son of God. It is most unusual to face your Savior. You are wise to be cautious in accepting anyone as the Christ.

But I have invited you to join in your Master's work. I asked you to help me save a sinner instead of destroy her. You despised me for it. I asked you to show the generosity today that you wished you had the chance to show 2,000 years ago. You feared me for it. For three days I have moved among you asking help. Often you have given. But many of you have failed to have your greatest prayer answered. You have failed to work by my side because you were more concerned about working in a glorified presence than you were in doing my work.

There is nothing magic in my physical presence. If there were, the whole world would have flocked to me—a magician—and the world would be better off if I had never lived. Instead, I left behind perhaps 500 believers, 120 actually baptized. It was after I was gone in the flesh—after my disciples had the faith of the resurrection—that they went out and performed a wondrous work in my name.

My power is still available to those who strive. My work is still with you. It is the responsibility of any man whose eyes can see suffering and sin.

As you worship this Christmas Day, remember you do not celebrate a life that began and ended centuries ago. That life is with you yet. Indeed, if you will really honor me, you must honor the unending opportunity that was born to this earth that day. Otherwise you worship a name without meaning.

Now I must go, and most of you still doubt me. This is best. I would rather you believe what I have said because you can see it is right, than to have you accept it because you can see it came from Christ.

I didn't understand all this but I sure got the idea. Boy, was that church quiet as he left! Even Brother Holly's eyebrows quit shaking. They froze in the up position.

The next morning was Christmas vacation, so guess what Sam and I did. Right! We ran down to talk to the carpenter and figure all of this out.

The carpenter shop was empty. "Well, what do ya know," said Sam, "he left without a trace."

Just then we heard Mrs. Seevy outside talking to Belle Hanson. She offered Belle a job at Mr. Seevy's store, so Belle wouldn't have to work at the saloon any more.

Sam nodded his head when I said, "Looks like he left a trace after all."

top. The significance of that light slowly penetrated my consciousness, my mind, and my heart. What did I have to cry about? My selfish fears, worries, troubles, dropped away from me. Then I was filled with a peace "that passeth understanding." The tears dried on my cheeks unheeded. My heart overflowed with thanksgiving to God for the blessings of health, for the ability to earn a living for my children, and for our love for each other. What a marvelous opportunity I had of proving my worth! What did I have to fear? With God's help—of course I could do it.

from a local affair to a CBS nationwide broadcast with the Kansas City Philharmonic. The chorus you are practicing bogs down, and the conductor smiles and suggests that the tenors might try that note as a flat instead of a natural next time; it was written that way, and they might find they like it after they got used to it. You are relaxed yet quivering with the excitement of the music as you sing.

The soloists begin to go over their numbers: Here is Garland Tickemyer, celebrating his fifteenth consecutive year with the choir as tenor soloist. Here is Josephine Mader, giving of her smooth soprano for the tenth year. And in the tradition of the Messiah, here are two new soloists: Maurice Nord, of Springfield, Illinois, bass, and Virginia McClelland Ehwa, Kansas City, Missouri, contralto. The voices are new; the melodies and the texts are old.

HOW CAN YOU DESCRIBE what it means to sing in the Messiah? It is more than music and more than custom. The inspiration of its composition shines through. It leaves the singer at once exalted and weak from emotional expenditure. It means a chorus of soloists and youngsters alike, blending and subordinating themselves to a vivid spiritual experience, which as one former soloist put it, "always does something to you." And as you sing, echoes of the past and prophecies of the future reverberate in your music until you can believe that "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ."

The Meaning of the Savior to the World

"In him was life; and the life was the light of men.

"And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehendeth it not. . . .

"He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

"He came unto his own, and his own received him not.

"But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name:

"Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

"And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth."—John 1: 4, 5, 10-14.

DEATHS

SMITH.—Harry Burwell, son of James Bert and Adella Burwell Smith, was born September 23, 1894, at Manistique, Michigan, and died September 29, 1950, at Kansas City, Missouri. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church at the age of eight in Independence, Missouri. During World War I he served overseas for one year, and in 1918 was married to Norine Matthews. For the past twenty years he was employed by the J. C. Nichols Company in Kansas City.

He is survived by his wife Norine; a son, Courtland Smith; one granddaughter; his mother, Mrs. Adella Ingoldsbey; and three sisters: Mrs. Estella Moore and Mrs. Irene Wolfe of Independence; and Mrs. Eulala Sinclair of Chicago, Illinois. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Glaude A. Smith at the Stine-McClure Chapel in Kansas City. Burial was in Mt. Moriah Cemetery.

BAUMAN.—William, was born July 11, 1881, in Kansas and died September 14, 1950, at Greenville, Michigan. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on May 31, 1916, and ordained a teacher on December 12, 1948. At the time of his death, he was serving as church school director of his branch.

He is survived by his wife Maude; three sons: Harold, Varian, and Lyle, all of Greenville; a daughter, Mrs. Lois Hargrove of Greenville; three brothers: Fred, Bert, and Henry; and one sister, Mrs. Agnes Hess. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Sigmund Spencer. Burial was in the Greenville cemetery.

DEACON.—Alice, was born March 24, 1863, at Almont, Michigan, and died at the age of eighty-seven at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Effie Elliott, in Frankfort, Michigan, where she had resided the past few months. In 1879 she was married to James Deacon, who preceded her in death in 1937. She was a member of the Reorganized Church and the Daughters of Rebekah Lodge.

An even one hundred descendants survive: her daughter, Effie; a son, John Deacon, of Sheridan, Michigan; eighteen grandchildren, seventy-two great-grandchildren, and eight great-great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted at the Stebbins Chapel in Sheridan, Elder Sigmund Spencer officiating. Burial was in the Sheridan cemetery.

JENSEN.—Henrietta Fulton, was born March 28, 1874, near Red Bluff, California, and died November 14, 1950, at Chico, California. A member of the Reorganized Church for many years, she had attended both Chico and Honolulu Branches.

Surviving are two sisters: Mrs. Florence Cory and Mrs. Sarah Boydston. Another sister, Mrs. Mary Hackett, preceded her in death three months ago. Elder H. Dean Hintz officiated at the funeral.

HACKETT.—Mary Evaline Thompson, was born April 25, 1860, in Carthage, Missouri, and died August 7, 1950, in Chico, California. She moved by train to California in 1869, the year the first west-coast railroad was completed. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for fifty years.

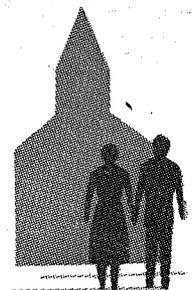

Surviving are a son, William Welch, and two sisters: Mrs. Florence Cory and Mrs. Sarah Boydston. Elder H. Dean Hintz conducted the funeral service.

MOORE.—Edith Kate, died November 20, 1950, at St. Margaret's Hospital in Biggar, Saskatchewan, at the age of seventy-two. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church for twenty-eight years, having been baptized on February 26, 1922, in Sandusky, Michigan.

Surviving are two sons: Frank of Vanscoy, Saskatchewan, and Albert of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. She also leaves a sister in Miami, Florida. Funeral services were held at the United Church in Cando, Saskatchewan, the Reverend Levan officiating.

For New Adventures With God

A Testimony by Barbara Peavy, a Zion's Leaguer of Independence, Missouri

WHEN WE'RE FACED with questions pertaining to church doctrine, when we endeavor to "belong" to our church group, when we sense the thrill of discovering a new truth as we study together, the value of the church school is apparent.

This past summer our church school class was one of the highest quality. Not only was attendance good, but students prepared for the class and participated. There was a sense of belonging that came to those who attended regularly, and there was a oneness in their efforts to become acquainted with the subject matter. During the summer it happened that the teacher could not be present one Sunday, so I was asked to teach the class and given ample time to prepare for it.

This was not the "You read the next paragraph, Susie" type lesson. It would require effort, study, prayer, and a constant concern that it would be worthy of the time of the class. In the course of the two weeks' preparation, a new meaning to the church school was revealed to me. Teachers had spent many hours preparing for these hour classes each Sunday—and I had taken that one hour for granted so many years. Perhaps at one time I might have gone just in obedience to parental desires or even for the social contact it offered. Now, though I regretted not giving more in an effort to learn, I was thankful that the "Sunday school habit" had been developed in my home. It is impossible to feel so inadequate and yet desire so much to put the meaning of a lesson across on one Sunday and not sense the importance of the church school in following Sundays.

THE CHURCH SCHOOL CLASS can be a rich spiritual experience when the gift of knowledge is administered and the struggle for understanding is rewarded. A great teacher once said, "The church should be a laboratory for living, not an exhibit." Church school is one of the most interesting functions of that laboratory, offering a chance for us to know each other better as we learn basic principles of righteous living. Church school offers us the blueprint in our living experiment.

Just as our concepts develop and grow, so do our interests and needs. Where once the church school might have seemed just the introduction to Sunday's activities, it now is the chance to discover, to study, to grow. No one is satisfied with just the first course of a three-course meal. A well-balanced diet makes for a healthy kingdom builder, and better foundations are laid by those who participate in the church school. It offers the chance to new adventures with God in his church.

 GRACE

Our friendly Radioman Al Boos sends this:
"I spotted the following story in 'The American Legion Magazine,' contributed by a Dave Castle."

—quote—

A little boy of six was invited to lunch in a friend's home. As soon as they were all seated at the table, the food was served. The little visitor was frankly puzzled. With all the forthright honesty of a child he asked his host:

"Don't you say any prayers before you eat?"

"No," mumbled the host, uncomfortable over the boy's blunt inquiry, "we don't take time for that."

The little visitor thought silently for a moment, and then he said:

"You're just like my dog! You start right in!"

—unquote—

 SURPRISE

You meet God in the strangest places Recall that peculiar character in the Dick Tracy strip, B. O. Plenty, who has a face like the business end of a dust mop? Where would the artist get a face like that? I found out the other day, plowing through the pages of a little book on European Art. Did you ever see the self-portrait of Pieter Brueghel the Elder, a Flemish artist of the sixteenth century? Well, there is your original of B. O. Plenty

Now, back to the subject. B. O. Plenty was badly hurt recently, and mighty near death. It is hard to see why they shouldn't just toss him to the cats and have it over, but he seems to be precious to somebody. Doctors in the strip solemnly announced, "We have done everything possible." But Dick Tracy said, "Not quite everything," and asked permission to go in the room alone. In the next picture he was kneeling at the bedside of the stricken man, praying.

There are times when small things that seem very funny rise to heights of solemnity. Looking at that picture, it is possible that little children who have never been in Sunday school in their lives will learn something about God and the meaning of prayer.

 NICEST COMPLIMENT

A lady member of one of our congregations recently said before a visiting minister, "When Brother X— looks at you, you just know he loves you!"

There couldn't be any nicer people to work for than that!

 SONGS

If you listen, even inadvertently, to popular music on the radio these days, you will observe that there is a vogue for songs of sadness and failure. "Irene, Goodnight," is as full of corn as a government grain bin, but it reflects the real experience of too many young men and women who have tried to find happiness in marriage and have failed. We may think this is a modern trend. But forty years ago, a very maudlin, sentimental thing called "Two Little Girls in Blue" represented exactly the same situation and the same feeling: a man who had left his wife, and crying into his cup over it.

The song represents a real social situation. With a little thought and care, it could have been so different.

And then, of course, there would have been no song.

Singing In Church

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING is often a barometer of the spiritual condition of the church. If the singing is slow and lifeless, the branch is dead. If everybody sings and appears to enjoy it, if the song leader seems to like his job, and the singing is in good time, there is excellent hope for the branch.

Almost anybody can sing in the church. You hear the beautiful strains of the organ, the clear tones of the choir and members of the congregation around you. You identify yourself with all these beautiful sounds. You sing and enjoy it because the rest of them drown out the sound of your voice. The result is beautiful in spite of you. For the moment you enjoy pretending you sing well. It's fun.

A man has a more difficult time singing in church than a woman does. She can sing the dominant melody. If he is untrained, he cannot follow the part that fits his voice. If he sings the melody, he may squeak. It will help him to train his ear to listen for the bass or tenor notes of the organ, and he will find that he can learn his part for some of the simpler hymns. Then if he will take a Hymnal at home and pick out his part on the piano, he can learn. This takes patience and persistence, but he will find a new joy in worship if he can sing his part.

The songs of the church touch the heart. They have converted people and sometimes lift them from despair. They carry with them a beautiful power of blessing, faith, and release from care. We should try to sing if it is possible.

Singing is self-expression. It is freedom and power. It is participating with others in something fine and beautiful. Our people should be a happy, singing people. We have every reason to sing because we have hope.

News & Notes

RETURNED

President F. Henry Edwards and Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp returned to Independence on December 8. During their trip in Europe, they visited most of the branches in Holland, Germany, England, and the Scandinavian countries. On their way back, they discussed plans for a new church with the building committee in Washington, D. C.

Brother Edwards spoke about his trip at the forenoon services at the Stone Church on December 10. Brother DeLapp will speak on December 17.

CONFERENCE IN WASHINGTON

Carl Mesle and F. M. McDowell attended the "Mid-Century White House Conference on Children and Youth" which was held in Washington, D. C., December 3 to 7. As official representatives of the church, they were two of 5,000 delegates sent there to represent 464 organizations from every state and territory and from several foreign countries. Several other members of the church were in attendance representing other organizations—educational, state, local, etc. The brethren report a most interesting and profitable time, and promise a more extended report to the readers of the "Herald" later.

INSTITUTE

On December 9 and 10 Apostle Donald O. Chesworth and Apostle D. T. Williams attended a district pastors' conference held in Des Moines, Iowa. Endeavors were made to find ways and means to cause disinterested members to become interested in the affairs of the church.

Brother Chesworth spoke to the Des Moines congregation at the Sunday morning service, and Brother Williams spoke at the evening service.

Organization of the pastors' conference was held under the direction of the district president, Elder Ralph Wicker.

On Sunday afternoon a meeting was held for the pastors, their wives, and the department heads of the district.

WORK IN FIELD

Apostles E. J. Gleazer and R. M. Holmes have returned from holding institutes and conferences in the Pacific Coast Mission. Apostle Holmes commenced his work in the Spokane district where he was warmly received, since this was his home district before going under church appointment. Brother Gleazer joined Brother Holmes in Portland the following week end, and they labored together in the various centers of the Oregon, Seattle, British Columbia, Northern California districts, and the Los Angeles Stake. At the conclusion of the institute in the Los Angeles Stake, Brother Holmes returned to Independence while Brother Gleazer continued to minister in the Southern California district.

Both report excellent interest and attendance in all of their meetings, and were very much impressed with the increased missionary activities upon the part of the local priesthood. They were also encouraged by observing the number of young men who have been called and ordained to various priesthood offices.

PLAY CONTEST

Seventeen different plays were presented by the young people at the Annual Zion's League Drama Festival during the first of December. Excellent ratings went to College Street Teen-

God's Country

"They were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. Now they desire a better country, that is, a heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city."

—Hebrews 11: 13-16.

A small handful of tracts came to the office early this last month. One of them was entitled, "God's Country."

The first paragraph was about America the beautiful, which seemed a sweet tribute, considering what we have done to it.

But very shortly the writer switched his talk to another land. The real "God's Country" he wanted to talk about was heaven. God's country, he thought, is not for now; it is for the hereafter. We will have to wait until we die to get there.

We should concede that we cannot look for perfection in this world. But God has some holdings here, and he has plans for his world. There is no reason that we should resign it all to the Devil. God has some bridgeheads on the earth, and we do not want to give them up. He thinks they are worth fighting for, and so do we.

* * * * *

How many pioneers, moving westward, looking out over the prairies with their lush green pastures, their flowing streams and peaceful rivers, stood for long moments as they gazed and said, "This is God's Country!"

And then forthwith, people moved in and labored with might and main to change it into something else. There are beautiful homes, modern stores, large public buildings, and fine highways. There are also the eroded, exhausted land, the piles of trash, city slums, and cheap shacks.

There are fewer places in the world now than there used to be where one would feel like saying, "This is God's Country." The shadow of bombers and the smoke of war may have something to do with that.

God indicated his intentions about his own country rather early in the history of Israel. "Get out of thy country," he told Abraham, "unto a land that I will shew thee."

Later he spoke to Moses, as he tended a flock of sheep for Jethro, and told him to lead the children of Israel "to a good land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey."

Caleb's report, when he returned from the survey trip in the Promised Land, included samples of the grapes and figs of the country, and he said, "We came unto the land whither thou sentest us, and surely it floweth with milk and honey; and this is the fruit of it."

It was God's Country, and he was turning it over to Israel. They would have to fight for it, but it was to be theirs.

* * * * *

We should remember one thing: when the right people occupy the land, they will make it God's Country. It will have beauty and abundance. It will bear the marks of a superior culture and civilization. It will be clean. There will be peace.

We do not have to wait for heaven to live in God's country; but if our procrastination continues, we may wait that long for it. God does not cause the delay; we do. He is willing for us to have it here and now. He has furnished the land—that is his part. We must develop the people—that is our part. All we need to do is to prove that we are God's people, and that we have the strength and determination to make this world what it should be—God's Country.

Now try to imagine that you have been asked to help the Lord by drawing up plans for what God's Country should be. You would have to clear out a lot of things. First to go would be the saloons and liquor stores, the gambling places, the dives, the places of sin and shame. Next would be the trash, the piles of refuse, cans, and rubbish. God's Country must be physically clean and attractive. There would be landscaping and gardening to do. You would attack the slums and the rows of ugly little houses that stand too close together to admit sunlight and fresh air.

So much for the physical side of things. But to keep it clean you would need also to work on the people. You would need to teach them moral and social standards, spiritual ideals. You would find plenty to do.

* * * * *

Whether this land, or any land, belongs to God depends on the kind of people who live in it. Only God's people can make God's Country. It is not an easy task to be God's people. If we were to try it seriously, we would learn how hard it could be.

Whenever we plan to build anything or to do anything, let's ask ourselves a question: "Will this fit into God's Country?"

You might ask yourself that question now. What is the answer?

This brings us back to a familiar theme. Some people might say it is a hobby, and they sometimes become a little tired of hobby-riders.

The "Great Society" can be built only by a great people. A Christian world can come about only through the concerted efforts of multitudes of Christian citizens. Zion can be built only by those who have the standards of saints. We can build God's Country if we are willing to try to be God's people.

Papal Bull Proclaimed

THE VATICAN has proclaimed a new article of belief for Catholics. A Reuters dispatch on November 8 says the papal bull has been issued by which he proclaimed the dogma of the bodily assumption of the Virgin Mary into heaven.

The decree, which will be preserved in the Vatican archives, recorded the full reasons for the proclamation of the dogma and ended with the words, read out by the Pope in St. Peter's square last week, by which the dogma was irrevocably defined as an article of belief for Catholics.

The whole skin of a sheep went to provide the parchment for each page of the 6,000-word, hand-written document.

The foregoing is published for its news value: but there is a deep significance attached to it that is far-reaching, as the action of Pope Pius XII will provoke controversy that will last indefinitely.

Already a tract, attributed to the Lutheran Church, finds its way to our desk which raises the old question of authority of the Pope in fixing dogma on his followers.

It also gives some history, and we believe we can well give space to this document which is called "Proclaiming Fiction a Fact."

HOW FICTION BECAME "FACT"

On November 1, 1950, Pope Pius XII declared "the assumption of the Virgin Mary" an official doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church. Since that day any Roman Catholic who wants to remain in good standing with his church and continue to receive its ministrations must believe that the mother of Christ was taken bodily into heaven.

Whether he wants to believe it or not, doesn't matter. His church has spoken. And that's that! He'll believe it—or else! From now on—that is, since the morning of November 1, 1950—every good Catholic is "sure" of something concerning which millions of Catholics were not so sure before. Sounds preposterous, doesn't it?

This is how it happened. Some time around the year 400, a Roman Catholic bishop named Epiphanius included in his writings a reference to the legend that the body of Mary had mysteriously been taken to heaven. That is the first known reference to any such supposed occurrence. Queer, isn't it, that nearly four centuries should elapse between the alleged event and the first known reference to it?

Approximately 200 years later, in the sixth century, Gregory of Tours filled in the outlines of this legend a little more by stating that when Mary was at the point of death and the apostles were assembled around her bedside, Christ himself appeared and committed her soul to the archangel Gabriel, but her body was "taken away in a cloud." Nowhere are we told where Gregory got his information.

By the eighteenth century, the legend of Mary's bodily assumption into heaven had been spread so generally throughout the Catholic Church that Pope Benedict XIV, who occupied the papal throne from 1740 to 1758, declared the assumption of Mary a "pious opinion" which none of the faithful were permitted to doubt.

Year after year the legend was repeated—and believed! And so it was not at all surprising that on November 1, 1950, Pope Pius XII, after consulting with key figures in the Roman hierarchy, proclaimed this fiction a fact! From now on—"the Virgin Mary was taken bodily into heaven," and no good Catholic dare entertain a doubt about it!

REALLY, NOTHING NEW

This process of transforming fiction into "fact" by a mighty "presto" from Rome may sound preposterous to Protestant ears, but it really is nothing new. The Pope of Rome, as the alleged vicar of Christ on earth, has assumed the right to declare what the faithful are to believe. At different times he has decreed new dogmas for the church.

In 1854 Pope Pius IX proclaimed the doctrine of the immaculate conception of the mother of Christ. Since that day every Roman Catholic must believe, under pain of excommunication, that Mary was conceived and born without sin. Why? Not because the Bible says so (indeed, it doesn't), but because the church, through its head, has spoken. And he has the unquestioned right to determine what Catholics are to believe.

In 1870 the Pope of Rome proclaimed the doctrine of papal infallibility—that is, the doctrine that the Pope when speaking in "the divine right" of his position as head and teacher of the church (ex cathedra, they say) can make no mistakes. Whatever he says is true—because he says it. It is just this doctrine, now about eighty years old, which makes the circle so intolerably vicious.

For if the Pope insists that he is infallible when speaking in the divine right of his position, then the faithful must believe him when he says that Mary was conceived and born without sin, and they also must believe him when he says that she was taken bodily to heaven. They have no other recourse. Their church has spoken. And fiction, by a diabolical alchemy, has for them become a fact.

THE GREAT DIVIDE

In proclaiming the doctrine of the assumption of the Virgin Mary, Pope Pius XII has unwittingly rendered a distinct service to all of Protestantism. He has shown the average intelligent Protestant exactly where the Roman Catholic Church divides from the rest of Christendom.

That fork in the road—where Roman Catholicism departed from early Apostolic Christianity—is the doctrine of authority in matters of religion. Ask the average faithful Protestant where he "gets his religion," and he will answer simply: "From the Bible." Ask the average faithful Catholic where he gets his religion, and you will get an altogether different answer.

The Catholic has been told that Christ, before his ascension into heaven, instituted "the teaching Church." He has been taught to believe that Christ committed the entire body of divine truth to this "teaching Church," that only part of this truth was recorded in the pages of the Bible, and that the rest was entrusted to the church to be passed on down through the ages in the form of tradition, decrees of church councils, and official pronouncements of the popes.

When the Pope, therefore, speaking in "the divine right" of his position, says that Mary was taken bodily into heaven, the faithful Catholic actually accepts that statement as divine truth. He accepts it as a part of that "deposit of faith" which God revealed to the apostles, but which was not recorded

Christmas Greetings

Message From the First Presidency

THE YEAR DRAWING TO ITS CLOSE has brought the usual quota of hard trials and pleasing victories, the difficulties of ministry, and the reward of duty well performed, we trust, in all of which we have felt the help of the Master whom we are serving.

In all our labors in 1950 as members of the First Presidency and as editors in chief of the Herald, we have been ably and willingly supported by the members of the Council of Twelve, the Presiding Bishop and his council, and our assistants who have immediate charge of the Herald, for which we are deeply grateful.

The work of the church goes onward, in spite of world conditions that cause the stouthearted to fear for the security of civilization.

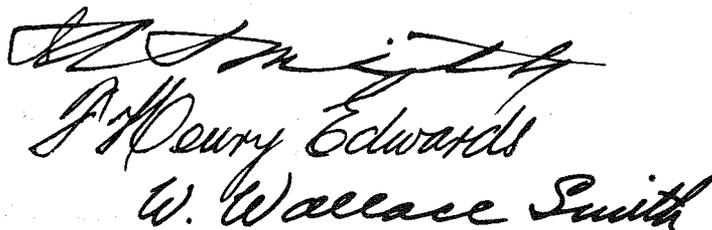

Sentiments expressed years ago by a predecessor appeal to us, and realizing the reading may be enhanced by a knowledge of their source, we quote from the greetings by President Joseph Smith three-quarters of a century ago, as being representative of our feelings:

We have been climbing the "hills of difficulty" so long—they have risen so grandly one above another as successively we have surmounted their steep—that we, if we do not enjoy climbing, have become somewhat reconciled to that mode of progression. . . . Indeed we feel rather invigorated; as, pausing in the steady, onward march, we lift our bowed head and look upward to the clearly definied outlines of the mountaintops as they stand out in the blue expanse above, and see the brightness and the glory into which they who gain the heights will be permitted to enter; and feel the quickening impulses of the spiritual life the victors will enjoy after the long struggle is over. And those who are engaged with us in the arduous labors of the Latter Day Work are not less interested in the success of that work, because the care of publication does not fall on them, than are we who are so burdened. The one cannot possibly succeed without aiding in the success of the other; nor can the general work well go on without the success of the publishing interest.

To some, the hours, days, and months of the past year have been seasons of profound enjoyment—rich in treasures of love; mental, moral, and spiritual stores, with a fair proportion of temporal blessings—their lives have passed along upon the stream of time, as floats the richly laden argosy up from her traffic in the eastern seas, before the pleasant trade winds. They have learned to watch, without fear; to pray, without dissembling; to work, while yet they waited, and have found in their labor an ever-coveted and always-prized peace. To them, the hours have been golden; the days, but opportunities for good; the months, seasons of restful employment—and now, they look back without regret, and forward without fear. The future holds no dread, they have learned the value of today—and the ever present is fraught with lessons to be learned, duties to be performed, and these in their accomplishment make the time—past, present, and to come—the ever-blessed now.

We salute you, dear Saints, and wish for you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

Greetings From the Netherlands Mission

DURING THE VERY BRIEF but significant years of his ministry on earth, Christ promised to his followers the Holy Spirit. This spirit came on the day of Pentecost and continued for several years. It was to inspire men to seek first the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness on the earth, but that great task was only partially accomplished.

The purposes of God and Christ through the church were lost when the emphasis of the kingdom in and among men was forgotten. The shift from men to the mass was an evidence of apostasy and spiritual decay. Thus, through traditional Christianity, this Christ-Mass was practiced—symbolized in ritual and forms of worship contrary to the original intent. Christ came to be seen in the mass and not in the lives of men.

In the struggles to regain the original intent in the life and ministry of Christ, the reformers made many bold changes in forms of worship. These men were trying desperately to bring Christ back into the lives of men—and who can deny their basic integrity?

Then came to the earth again the restoration of the Original Intent. By direct upreach of faith from man to God, the young prophet was told "This is my beloved Son, hear him." The spirit of Christ was again moving among men. The pleasure of God concerning his Son was expressed when he said, "in whom I am well pleased" to Joseph Smith, in former times at Christ's baptism, and on the Mount of Transfiguration. This "in whom" business was to be the measure of God's pleasure regarding us. And all this for the establishing of his kingdom on this earth. The spirit of Zion is Christ's Spirit, and in this God finds pleasure in men. Thus we of the church celebrate a new meaning in the birth of Christ. He lives today, and we witness his purposes being fulfilled in the lives of many men and women, youth, and children of the church.

We of the church in the Netherlands Mission, desire to set our hearts to celebrate the birth of Christ in the spirit of a divine rebirth toward Zion. In this spirit we send our best greetings to the whole church.

GLEN H. JOHNSON,

Missionary to the Netherlands.

Greetings From Scandinavia

CHRISTMAS DRAWS NEAR, and many minds and hands have for weeks been in action. The custom is known to all that we give each other different, useful things on Christmas Eve, which is the day of greetings and gifts to people of all ages, perhaps mostly to the children. The example of the visitors to the birthplace of Jesus Christ has had consequences up to our day. They brought gifts to the infant Savior and honored him in that way, and we today are bringing each other good things because we celebrate the coming of Christ.

When Jesus Christ is the central point in our Christmas celebration, there is no danger that temporal things will overshadow the real meaning of Christmas.

In the Scriptures we find, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only Begotten Son." That is why we have the holiday in remembrance of the night when God's great and wonderful gift was given that all men might have eternal life. Circumstances in the world are changeable, as we have learned—a time of peace can be turned into a time of combat and sorrow. Therefore, it is of importance to know that God is unchangeable—that his promises will be fulfilled—that he is interested in the welfare of all men.

The shepherds in the fields near Bethlehem were witnesses to the angels' song, "Glory to God in the highest; and on earth, peace, good will to men." What they did was in itself a promise from God to mankind.

Certainly, many will think that peace on earth is not possible at all, for there exist many barriers among people which seem too hard to break down. Many problems need to be solved, but there lies still a promise in the angels' message to the shepherds—"On earth, peace." If men are willing, peace can be established—first in individual souls, then in the group of those who have accepted the gospel of Christ.

If peace on earth cannot be established on the foundation laid by God—the fault is man's. In the Scriptures we are told that one day God will establish the promised peace on earth, in spite of those who are not doing his will. Certainly there is meaning and promise in the angel message from the field of Bethlehem.

WE, THE SAINTS IN SCANDINAVIA, are sending our best greetings and wishes to readers of the Herald.

The customs of celebrating Christmas in the Scandinavian countries are much alike. We have two days of celebration—the first and second day of Christmas. Christmas Eve is the time for family circles. The children are thrilled about the gift packages which are placed under the decorated needle trees. Those trees are now usually electrically illuminated. This has a great advantage over burning candles which easily can put a tree on fire.

The gang or walk around the tree is a custom here. The children especially like to walk around the tree and sing Christmas hymns in company with their parents and other adults.

Christmas in itself is extraordinary, therefore it is a rule that the food is extraordinary, too. The time before Christmas is very dangerous for pigs; they are not safe anywhere, for ham steak is what people like to have for Christmas food.

Many people in Scandinavia have never heard about the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church. Therefore, it is our hope that the time will come when the Restored Gospel may be heard over the whole of Scandinavia.

May God's peace and blessings be with you through the Christmas season, and may the new year be a happy one to each of you.

Greetings From the Church in Hawaii

IT IS A NATURAL THING for Hawaii to want to send Christmas greetings to all nations because people of all nations are residents of Hawaii. While there are, of course, many native Hawaiians here, there are also many Japanese, Chinese, Filipinos, and haoles (Caucasians), as well as people of other races. The ties have become more real and beautiful by virtue of the fact that our people have found the church that is engaged in winning the souls of those who reside in all these nations. Our people believe that "many nations shall be joined to the Lord" (Zechariah 2: 11), and they also believe "it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations" (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 14). From the land of perpetually blooming hibiscus, from the paradise of the Pacific, from the crossroads of the world, from the melting pot of nations, comes a most sincere and cordial greeting.

Christmas will not be quite the same here that it is in some places. We will be dreaming of a white Christmas, but we will have no snow nor cold weather, and we will not sit around a fireplace. The temperature here will probably be above seventy degrees. Many of the other distinguishing characteristics of Christmas that are enjoyed elsewhere will not be in evidence here. However, this does not mean that Christmas will not have its effect and be enjoyed just as much in Hawaii as in the rest of the world. Santa Claus, flying in his supersonic plane, will find the boys and girls in Hawaii just as he does in other places, and the same Christmas spirit that is in evidence elsewhere will be in abundance here.

A genuine part of the true Christmas spirit is the expressed and evidenced love for all peoples. Here in Hawaii, where the gathering of Israel is already apparent, that love is shown continually. To say that there is no racial prejudice in the Islands would be an error. As long as there are different races that do not have the full love of Christ in their hearts and have not realized the social standards of the kingdom, there will be racial intolerance. We may accurately say, however, that there is less of that feeling here than anywhere else in the world. Therefore, we may properly state that these people, who understand all nations better than any other people in the world, cordially express from the bottom of their hearts "A Merry Christmas to all."

May the richest blessings of our Heavenly Father be vouchsafed to all peoples everywhere that the day may soon come when we shall not only observe Christmas with memories and reverence for the Christ, but shall actually have him with us. Then every day will be Christmas Day.

A. ORLIN CROWNOVER,
District President of Hawaiian Islands.

Greetings From the British Isles

AS WE APPROACH THE SEASON in which the birth of Christ is commemorated, we wish to withdraw our thoughts from the uncertainties of the present and let our minds and hearts contemplate the message of peace announced by the angels on that night so long ago.

The Lord has been good to the Saints of the British Isles. The spirit of fraternity and fellowship has been renewed and strengthened with the church in other lands by visitors from Australia, Canada, and the United States. Two of our families were privileged to attend General Conference and returned with new zeal and vision.

Our needs have been well supplied, and the Lord has graced our gatherings many times by the presence of his Spirit. For the manifold manifestations of his love we wish to express our sincere thanks.

That the peace which "passeth understanding" may be yours this Christmas and throughout the coming year is our prayer.

FRANK A. FRY,
Missionary to the British Isles.

Greetings From the German Mission

I AM HAPPY to take this opportunity on behalf of the members in Germany to wish everyone throughout the church this season's best wishes. It is with thankful hearts that we look back upon the last twelve months of this year and count our blessings—blessings which many outside this mission take much for granted. Permit me to recount some of the blessings as we have learned to count them here in our endeavors.

Brother and Sister Steiner are thankful for the return of their son who has recently returned after being a prisoner in Russia five years. Yet another son was killed, and one is still missing. They have just completed building a small three-room house and have asked that we plan a service of dedication in it. But before we do this, they would like to make their first financial inventory since the war, and to tithe this along with their other blessings.

Brother and Sister Fidelak are counting their blessings, too. This year they feel their greatest has been getting to move out of the basement of their home to living quarters upstairs. Grandmother Fidelak's bedroom was the former coal bin; she died in the hospital one week before she had the pleasure of moving into her nice, clean room upstairs. Still the Fidelaks count their blessings one by one.

Brother and Sister Nass have taken their small daughter to the hospital several times this year, but despite the sickness in the home, Brother Nass drives back and forth each week on his motor cycle to Dusseldorf, a distance of twenty-five miles, to conduct services in another mission group there. Through his efforts alone, many new members have been won to the church. The Nass's too have been able to count among their many blessings this year, a new and somewhat larger home.

TIME AND SPACE will not permit me to tell you of the many hundreds of families in this mission that have been blessed this year, but along with other blessings has come renewed health as a result of the food and clothing which came from friends in the hour when lives depended upon another crust of bread or a pair of shoes to keep some small child's feet dry. I have watched our people during those difficult months nibbling on pieces of dry bread to keep back the hunger pains which were a constant threat to all. Those who were gifted and talented, but unable to work because of ill health or the lack of employment, are now able to provide for many of their needs. It was a pleasure to go into the homes of these good people and see the joy on their faces when they could offer a knife and fork to eat with rather than a big tablespoon, or to see one of our dentists proudly showing the new X-ray machine he had long hoped and prayed he could again add to his practice, or a member who has his degree in pharmacy using rubber gloves again after mixing strong chemicals with his bare hands.

Now things are being changed, not too rapidly, but fast enough for us to see that progress is being made on every hand. Some of our branches have found better rooms to hold their services in, while one of our groups has built a fine new church out of the ruins where a bomb once hit. Organs are being added to our churches, mimeographed church school material is becoming available, and a fine eight-page mission paper named The Deutscher Herald is being published regularly.

I know that if any one of our German members was called upon to write this expression of our season's greetings, he would want me to say to every member and friend of the church:

Thank you again for your help and assistance and above all the true brotherly love that went into every package sent to us. We want to so live and carry on the work of God's kingdom that the Restored message of Christ and his church will ever go forward in this mission.

May the spirit of the Christ child go with all of us in every mission throughout the church, and as we lift our voices in song in every language where the gospel has gone, our hearts exclaim,

"Joy to the world! the Lord is come,
And earth receive her King;
Let every heart prepare him room,
And Saints and angels sing."

EUGENE A. THEYS,
Missionary in charge of German Mission.

Greetings From the Australasian Mission

AS ANOTHER CHRISTMAS draws near and we look back over the past year, we are happy that, along with this greeting, we can report that progress has been made and prospects for the future are bright. Of course, our progress has not been as great as we would have liked. There have been the shadows as well as the lights, but the net result has made discernible advancement possible.

The high light of this year, and for the whole of the history of the church in Australasia, was the visit of President Israel A. Smith. He and Bishop Siegfried, his traveling companion, were able to spend one week end with the Saints in New Zealand and eight days, including the following week end, in Sydney. The only regrettable fact was that his visit was all too short, due to the urgency of his return to the United States.

There were Saints from nearly all of the branches in Australia present in Sydney for his week-end visit. His humility, sympathy, and understanding won for him the hearts of the people. Bishop Siegfried also made a very fine contribution and won the respect and confidence of the Saints. This will always be a high spot in the experience of the Saints in Australia, and we all feel very grateful that our Heavenly Father so ruled that this visit was possible.

We join with the church throughout the world in re-dedicating ourselves to the ongoing work of Jesus Christ, our Lord, as we extend our Christmas greetings to the household of God.

May the coming year see still greater progress made toward the realization of the Zion of our dreams.

Your fellow laborer,
R. E. DAVEY,
Mission President of Australasia.

A New Seating Shortage

One leader reports:

Isn't it wonderful? We're almost bursting the seams already. So many are coming to church school that the instructors can scarcely find a place for them to sit. For two Sundays some of the classes increased so much that they kept borrowing chairs from the kindergarten and primary departments. Finally those two could spare no more. As the kindergarten teacher tried to find some place other than the floor for her little ones, she suggested, "I'm going to change that church school motto to read, 'Each One Bring One Chair.'"

New Edition of the Book of Mormon

Ministry to New Members

IV. What the Departments Can Do

*"The law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ."
—Galatians 3: 24.*

The Pastor

The pastor should meet and talk to every new member personally. In this visit, he should invite and urge the new member not only to attend church services, but to become active in the church school.

The church school can give more personal attention than can be found in the large worship service. It affords an opportunity for questions to be asked and answered. The new convert needs special instruction and receives it here. He also needs friendship and social life. The church school helps to serve all these purposes.

The pastor can see that information concerning the name, age, and address of the new member reaches the superintendent of the church school, so the new member can be enrolled and put in contact with the class that is best for him.

Superintendent of the Church School

The superintendent of the church school need not wait until someone sends him the name of the new member. He can go and get it. He should give the new member a cordial invitation to attend the church school, and introduce him to others who are attending. Then he can discuss the various courses and help the new member to select a class. The new member may wish to visit the classes and make his own selection. In this case, the superintendent can introduce various teachers to the new member if they are not already acquainted.

After this, the superintendent should be watchful to see that the new member is happy in the association, that he finds a satisfactory class, and keeps attending.

In some cases, it may be advisable to start a special class for a group of new members.

The Teacher

When the new member is brought to the teacher, the latter should receive him cordially and invite him to visit the class or join it as may seem advisable. It is not necessary to exert pressure, but it is good to make the invitation urgent and sincere.

The teacher can introduce the new member to others in the class if they are not already acquainted. Then he can tell briefly what the course is about. The teacher should be alert to any questions that may arise or any explanations that may need to be made for the new member.

At the same time, care should be exercised that a timid new member is not kept too continuously in the spotlight of attention. A wholesome atmosphere of friendliness and equality should prevail in the class. Much depends on the tact and consideration of the teacher.

Zion's League

Zion's League can render a special service to the young person who has become a member of the church. At this time in the life of the individual, friendship is very important. It is the age for making friends. It is good that the church can provide friends for the new members.

Young people, even in Zion's League, have a tendency to form cliques. It is important that they should avoid this. Nobody should be left out. The circle should be opened to include the new member especially. He should be invited to parties and social affairs. He should be made to feel a part of the group.

By LEONARD LEA

The officers and more thoughtful members among Zion's Leaguers can take care of this.

The Women's Department

One of the most important groups in the congregation is the women's department. Its members carry many responsibilities and have access to much of the information about the church. If the new member is a married woman, the officers and members can help her to find happiness in church service by inviting her to join their group activities in study and work. The friendly association they can provide will be an important tie binding the new member to the church.

Value of the Departments

In many of our churches the congregations are so large that it would be impossible for a new member to establish a relationship of close friendship with all of the people. In some, it would be impossible to become acquainted soon with all the members. The departments are valuable in this situation because they break the congregation up into smaller groups organized around special interests that members have in common, and they bring together on an intimate friendly basis those who are working at a common task.

Each department or group thus provides a tie of close friendships that links the new member with the congregation and with the church at large.

Guiding the New Member

The new member will be anxious to find the work God wants him to do. He will want to make a contribution. If he is really converted he is willing to work. It is very dif-

Big Moments at Christmas - By ELEANOR RUSSELL

HAVE YOU EVER WONDERED how a minister's family celebrates Christmas? Now that my husband and I have celebrated twenty of them together, we can reminisce a bit. We were settled in our little furnished apartment barely four months when our first Christmas drew near. It didn't seem much like home to us, as we had spent most of our time traveling through Central Nebraska District. My husband's people live in Canada, so we settled on a Christmas in Wichita, Kansas, my home town. It was a very quiet Christmas, the last one my mother was with us.

The second Christmas was the beginning of several very meager holiday seasons for us. The minister had been released because of lack of general church funds, and we were Christmas guests of some friends in Omaha, where we were then living.

By the time another year rolled around we had done some traveling, searching for that will-o'-the-wisp of the nineteen thirties, a job. Christmas found us in Detroit, and still no job. Kind friends gave us the use of their upstairs apartment, relatives and friends sent us surprise boxes containing a ham, fruit, a pretty dress for the dimpled little girl. Our friends downstairs on Christmas Eve brought up a rocking chair and a doll for our daughter. They loved her very much. We had some toys for her stocking. My husband and I both thought neither had bought a gift for the other, but on Christmas morning he brought from its hiding place a small, covered sauce pan I was needing badly; for him I had a pair of socks. We were so surprised and delighted we had no words. We just hugged each other and laughed and cried together. It doesn't take a lot of money to make a good Christmas.

THERE FOLLOWED years of financial struggle. We settled in Wichita. Christmases were simple but good, as we had children to help us enjoy the Christmas spirit, and my two sisters and families were either with us or we with them. We taught the children from the age of three that "Santa Claus" was just a good fairy story such as "Cinderella" or any other make-believe story. We brought out that the old fellow, "Santa," depicted the spirit of giving. We told them it would soon be Jesus' birthday, and since we couldn't give gifts direct to him, we should give gifts on that day to those we love. The children received small allowances and were urged from the first of November on to set aside each week a few pennies with which to buy gifts for the home folk, as that was their world when they were small. The gifts weren't much, maybe a ribbon for sister, a thimble for mother, but they were learning to save their money to give to others. We wanted them to get the thought, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Big brother still insisted on sucking the Christmas tree bulbs, and wanted to use the brightly colored ornaments as balls the year we got our first tree, but we have had one of some size every year since. Each year we saved a few pennies for another couple of brightly colored baubles. We still have some of those bought that first year, and they are highly prized for the memories they bring. Sitting around a lighted Christmas tree gives us a feeling similar to that of watching a log burn itself out in a fireplace. Our very souls are touched.

Sharing Christmas with someone less fortunate is a wonderful way to spend the day. One year when the family was having Christmas dinner in our home, a niece in nurses' training asked permission to bring a little boy with her who had been in the hospital many months suffering from malnutrition. His parents were in another town and could not afford to come for him so that he could be home for Christmas.

A FEW YEARS PASSED, the church began to progress in a material way, and took on three more ministers in 1938. My husband was sent to Des Moines, Iowa, as pastor. The Christmas season approached in Des Moines, and after having been kept at home with the children most of the time previously, I was looking forward to a glorious time. Anyone who has lived in Des Moines knows of the many Christmas festivities—music, programs, parties, et cetera. What a blow it was to me when four-year-old David broke out with scarlet fever the day after the bazaar, the thirteenth of December! Three of the children took the disease, all of them but the baby, and we were quarantined five weeks. I counted seven different lovely functions

I was going to miss. The children were not very sick, and I had time to feel sorry for myself. Since their daddy was a minister and associated a good bit with children, the health department ruled that he had to find another place to stay, and we didn't like that either!

As the days went along, we found out how good Latter Day Saints can be to those in trouble. Every once in a while someone would come to the door with a dressed chicken or some other delicacy for the shut-ins. One sweet young mother, Elizabeth Chandler, spent a lot of her valuable time and energy in making dainty Christmas cookies, beautifully decorated, for our holidays, at a time when one would think she would be thinking of herself, for just four days after Christmas, I believe it was, her second son was born. One evening when I was feeling quite lonesome, a big truck drove in our driveway and stopped. Soon I heard Christmas carols. It was the Des Moines Choir. I was touched.

Christmas came on Sunday that year. How glad we all were when we found out that the husband and daddy had received permission from the health department to come home Sunday evening and stay through Monday, providing he would not go near any children for twenty-four hours after going back out. Our third child began being ill that day, but that didn't dampen our spirits. We had the family circle complete for Christmas! We thought gifts would be scarce, but the Pro-To Club (a group of the department of women) had sent us a big package the day before. We opened it, and there were gifts for all. I shall always remember how beautifully they were wrapped. The gifts were very lovely and lasted a long, long time, but the memory of them will never fade.

WE MOVED, as ministers' families must, and Christmas in Omaha will be remembered for the beauty of the services and the kindness of the Saints. We had fun, too. One women's group had its Christmas party in our home. Gifts were put on the tree for the "mystery pals," but unknown to others, May Wellman had put on some extra packages, such as the one which proved to be two white soda tablets labeled, "Take one before and one after eating Christmas dinner." We all need an occasional bit of fun. Our second year in Omaha, we were invited to spend Christmas in the Norwegian fashion with Brother and Sister Ruch and Velma across the river in Council Bluffs. We had a beautifully appointed dinner and then sang carols, listened to the Christmas story, and sang some more. It was a memorable occasion for the Russells.

Up until this time we had done very little toward having any serious worship thoughts or Bible reading on Christmas Eve or Christmas Day. Children in a minister's home hear a lot of Christmas Scripture reading, sing carols for weeks and weeks ahead at church, and we wondered if that weren't enough. But the first Christmas in Saint Joseph, Missouri, when we were living in the parsonage at Third Church, David the second boy, said he thought we should sit around our tree, sing carols and read from the Bible on Christmas Eve. We had a wonderful tree that year. Third Church was through with their tree before Christmas Eve came, and we arranged to buy it for half price. How we enjoyed those carols, sitting around the lovely tree. One of the children read the Christmas story from the Bible.

The following year we had our own home. The high point that year was the Junior Zion's League party held there. First they had devotions, then games and gifts for each other.

TWO YEARS AGO was a good Christmas to remember. As usual gifts were simple. We do not believe in buying extravagant ones. It was the Christmas Eve worship service that we remember. We had purchased from Herald House just before Christmas, a copy of the painting, "The Arrival of the Shepherds," by Lerolle. We trimmed the edges, mounted it on heavy cardboard (using rubber cement) then waxed the picture with paste floor wax. The picture, flanked by lighted candles, was our worship center. We turned off all the lights except those of the tree, sang a Christmas hymn, read the familiar story from Luke, and my sister Margaret, who was our guest, told us the story of our picture, which is one of the best-loved Nativity paintings. Just as we finished the last song, the doorbell rang. A messenger boy was there when I answered the knock, and he handed me a package. Wonderingly, I opened it. Inside was a large box of luscious chocolates. The donor? A lovely lady who has a son in the missionary field. At that very moment her son, his wife and baby, were in San Francisco awaiting passage to the South Sea Islands to be gone from their homeland for a period of years. Yes, Nelle Breckenridge, hoping someone would be kind to her loved ones away from home, was sharing her Christmas with the minister and family at home.

Until it actually happens in your own family, you do not know the meaning of having a member of the family absent from home for months. Last Christmas, in Flint, Michigan, where we are now living, we rejoiced to have our daughter Reta home with us from Grace-land College for the holidays. We were all together again.

IN LOOKING BACK, we feel we have been blessed because we have striven to make our Christmas a religious experience. We have tried to think of Jesus even in the purchasing of Christmas decorations. Once in selecting a centerpiece for our table, we looked over a large display of wax Santa Claus candles of all sizes. Away in the background almost hidden by this colorful array were a few choir boys with white and red choir robes, holding up sweet little faces as though singing carols. I chose the choir boys. Each year they grace our dining table during the Christmas season, backed by an outdoor scene which varies from year to year. After the holiday season they are carefully wrapped in tissue and put away for another year.

When teaching a kindergarten class one time, we asked the children, "What is Christmas?" One said, "Christmas is when Santa is good to us." Then to our great delight one of them said triumphantly, "That is Jesus' birthday!" We hope that more and more Latter Day Saint parents will plan for their families a Christmas season in which Christ is the theme, love is the motive, and a beautiful spiritual experience is the result. Those are the big moments at Christmastime.

Religious Discrimination

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS in recent weeks has contained several references to President Truman's announced intention of appointing an ambassador to the Vatican. At a recent meeting of the United Lutheran Church in Des Moines, Dr. Franklin C. Fry, its president, made this statement:

America's top-ranking Protestant leaders have completed plans for an agreed-upon, united, nation-wide campaign to oppose vigorously the establishment of diplomatic relations between the Government of the United States of America and the Vatican, as well as any other ecclesiastical or religious group.

The campaign would contain the two following items:

(1) A request, now in the hands of President Truman, that the Chief Executive receive a large group of Protestant church leaders and that this group would be "more representative than any other delegation that has waited upon any President at any time in behalf of the Protestant Church of the United States."

(2) A petition to be signed by the heads of all Protestant churches in the nation "and other churches if they still co-operate." Additional signatures would be those of "moderators, stated clerks, district superintendents, and other administrative heads."—Scottish Rite News Bulletin.

Question Time

Any sincere question from our readers will receive consideration from the editors. If it is of general interest, it will be referred to the Question Time panel, and the answer will be printed. Please keep the question short—fifty words or less should be sufficient. Your personal problems, the answers to which concern you alone, will be answered by letter. Address questions to Herald Editors rather than panel members. We shall try to take all questions in the order they are received. Be patient, there may be several ahead of yours. Only signed questions sent by contributors will appear here.—EDITOR.

QUESTION:

Is there any proof that a person in the flesh has entered the kingdom of heaven?
Ontario I. M.

ANSWER:

Yes, in the following Scriptures:

By faith, Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him; for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.—Hébrews 11: 5, Inspired Version.

Of the city of Zion, of which he was leader, we read:

And it came to pass, that Zion was not, for God received it up into his own bosom; and from thence went forth the saying, Zion is fled.—Genesis 7: 78, Inspired Version.

The prophet Elijah also had the same experience of which we read in II Kings 2: 11:

And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven."

QUESTION:

Please explain the significance of the church seal. Who designed it? When was it adopted?

Missouri

R. and M. S.

ANSWER:

There are two or three seals regularly used in the church. One is used on "legal" documents requiring the dates of incorporation. The others are used on church stationary and on such documents as baptismal and blessing certificates that do not have on them the dates of incorporation. The seals are also a little different in design.

The first reference for the authorization of an official church seal is found in the Conference Minutes of 1874. "A Committee of three was appointed to draft a style of church seal." The committee reported back the same day, a recommendation of a seal with legend, date, and motto as follows:

Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Emblem, a lion and a lamb lying down at rest. Motto, "Peace." Incorporated 1872.

The report was adopted, and the committee empowered to purchase the seal.

Changes have been made in the detail of the seal as the years have passed, but the motif has been maintained. The symbolism of the lion, the lamb, and the child together is expressed in the word, "Peace." I believe it is based on the prophetic statement contained in Isaiah 11. The "lion," the symbol of power; the "lamb," the symbol of meekness, and the "child," the symbol of innocence, will dwell together in love and peace.

QUESTION:

Does our church still practice the ordinance of washing the feet? If so, when was the last time it was practiced and by whom?

Missouri

E. S.

ANSWER:

Doctrine and Covenants 85: 44-46, contains the instructions regarding the "ordinance of the washing of feet." It is to be "administered by the president or the presiding elders of the church." It is to be administered in the "School of the Prophets."

The ordinance was performed at the dedication of Kirtland Temple. To be more accurate the dedication was on Sunday and on the following Tuesday, March 29, 1836, "at a meeting of some of the leading men of the church the 'washing of feet' was attended to." On the Wednesday 30 instant—"official members of the church to the number of about three hundred met and attended to the ordinance of feet washing, continuing all night in session."—Church History, Volume 2, page 46.

As far as we know this is the only occasion when this ordinance was practiced. It has not been practiced in the church since the Reorganization. It is definitely a sacred ordinance in the belief of the church. We may rightly expect that when the "School of the Prophets" is established and the proper time arrives, it will again be practiced. It is a sacred ceremony with a depth of meaning in terms of enduring brotherhood and humble fellowship.

QUESTION:

When will the City of Enoch return to the earth? Will it be when Christ comes to reign a thousand years, or will it be after that reign is over? Is this City of Enoch, Zion, the Holy City, and the New Jerusalem all one and the same?
New York Mrs. P. B.

ANSWER:

Enoch records this event of the return of his city in Genesis 7: 70-73, Inspired Version, showing it is to occur at the time of the Lord's coming. However another holy city is to be built up in the last days by the gathering of God's people in preparation for his coming, which will be called Zion; a New Jerusalem, to which the Lord will come according to the words of Isaiah (59: 20) that "The Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord." David refers to this in Psalm 102: 16, "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." Of this city prepared upon the earth to which the elect shall have been gathered, the Lord said to Enoch,

"Then shalt thou and all thy city meet them there; and we will receive them into our bosom; and they shall see us, and we will fall upon their necks, and they shall fall upon our necks, and we will kiss each other; and there shall be mine abode, and it shall be Zion which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made; and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest."

Moroni, writing in the Book of Mormon, speaks of these things in Ether 6: 2-11, telling of the holy city, New Jerusalem, which would be built up upon this land in the days of the gathering of God's people, before the coming of the holy city of Enoch, the New Jerusalem, from heaven, which is further described as "the holy sanctuary of the Lord."

Enoch's city will come with Christ to meet the city built upon the earth, and they will be one during the millennium. Both are called the holy city, Zion, the New Jerusalem. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 83: 1, 2.)

In Appreciation

By LOUIS J. OSTERTAG

Brother Chapman, I shall ever remember our association together as constituting a bright chapter in my experience. You were always congenial, jovial, helpful and dependable. It may help you in your time of physical depression and perhaps mental discouragement and despondency to remember that during your ministry you were always faithful at your post and commanded the love and respect of the Saints everywhere. You had no trail of gossip behind you, no scandal, no cloud upon your record, and during the time of internal struggle within the church you stood fast, and, perhaps more than any other one, held your district to the standard of the church. I am but one of the many who extend to you sincere gratitude and affection.

THUS Brother Elbert A. Smith wrote to Elder N. T. Chapman on December 3, 1934; and this can very well be called the summary of a life well lived.

Brother Chapman, who recently passed away, was born in Persia, Iowa, on February 9, 1876, of grandparents who were members of the church as far back as 1839. His father, Nephi Chapman, who was born in Wilshire, England, in 1848, immigrated with his parents to the United States in 1860 and settled in Salt Lake City, Utah. He had been baptized at the age of 12, shortly before he left England. His mother, Elizabeth Green Chapman, was also of English parentage. Her parents immigrated from England in the early 1850's. She was born at Kaysville, near Ogden, Utah, in 1856, but did not join the church until after she had married Nephi Chapman. It was from this union that Nephi Thomas Chapman was born in 1876.

Rejecting the claims of Brigham Young and his associates, both families joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1864, after which they migrated back east—first to Council Bluffs, Iowa, then to Florence, Nebraska, and finally to Persia, Iowa. It was at Persia that Thomas was blessed by Apostle James Caffall. He started school after he was twelve years of age, but had to leave at sixteen due to financial necessities. Later he went to high school and would have graduated with the class of 1895 in June but for the fact that he again had to leave school in March of that year. In April, 1898, he moved to Oregon and lived at Portland, then at Hood River. In 1915 he moved to Long Beach, California, and stayed until 1941, at which time he went to Santa Barbara, California, where he resided until his death.

HIS CHURCH LIFE started at his mother's knee. She taught him the "Lord's Prayer." And his first interest in the church was awakened when his father took him at the age of ten to hear Elder J. F. Mintun. This sermon made an impression upon him that lasted until the fall of 1893 when, at seventeen, he attended the "World's Reunion at Logan, Iowa," the only reunion held by the church at that time. Shortly after that he had his first real spiritual experience. Here is his testimony in his own words:

I was husking corn for an old gentleman, a member of the church, when I heard a voice say to me, "You ought to go to Logan and be baptized." I turned to see who was speaking but saw no one. I looked in the field and in the wagon, but no one was there. I was sure then the Lord was speaking to me. I was very much impressed and kept repeating, "You ought to go to Logan and be baptized." I walked five miles to my father's house to be sure to go with him to Logan on Saturday.

When we arrived there the prayer meeting was in session, the gifts were manifested, the power of God rested on me, and I was overcome by it. About all I remember of the message is "There are young men present in the congregation whom the Lord has called to the work; their voices will be heard preaching the gospel in distant places, even upon the isles of the sea." I was so overcome by this power that I found myself weeping. Feeling ashamed of my tears, I left the meeting and retired to the woods to analyze my feelings, for I wondered what had happened to me. Then the still, small voice spoke again and said to me: "If you are baptized you must behave yourself. You must quit using tobacco and liquor, and cease going with worldly companions." I had to think it over, and one year later, after making preparation and having heard such men as "Our Joseph," Alexander H. Smith, Frederick A. Smith, J. R. Lambert, J. S. Roth, and many others preach the gospel of the kingdom with power and much assurance, I returned to Logan, and on September 14, 1894, I was baptized.

THUS OUR BROTHER obeyed the voice and fulfilled the desires of his Heavenly Father. He was ordained an elder by Elder Charles E. Crumley at Hood River, Oregon, on March 17, 1902, and a high priest on February 21, 1926 by Apostle James A. Gillen and High Priest D. A. Dowker.

"Uncle Tom," as he was lovingly called, was under appointment from April, 1905, to January 1, 1920. He served in the capacity of pastor and branch president in Portland and Hood River, Oregon; Vancouver, Washington; Santa Ana, Long Beach, and Santa Barbara, California. He also served as president in the following districts: Portland, Oregon; Western Oregon, Eastern Oregon, Northern California, and Southern

ELDER N. T. CHAPMAN

California. He held all of these positions with honor and the esteem of those to whom he ministered. His official resignation from general church appointment, due to ill health, only slowed down his activities, for in the period between 1937 and 1941 he was the instigator of the change that was made when the Long Beach, California, Branch moved from a small building on Orange Avenue to the present location at Ninth and Olive.

BROTHER CHAPMAN had many spiritual experiences that have been the strength of his ministry. His testimony was evidenced by his staunchness and faithfulness to the church. During the last week of July, 1950, he attended the Southern California Area Reunion held at Pacific Palisades. On Tuesday, July 25, by invitation of Apostle E. J. Gleazer, he assisted in presiding at the morning prayer meeting. In the course of the meeting, he arose to bear his testimony, feeling that perhaps it would be his last public utterance. He assured those present of his faith in the gospel of the kingdom and expressed his knowledge that this is the work of God. Brother Gleazer then arose in the power of the Spirit and commended him for his faithfulness and for his contribution to the work. The next day Uncle Tom took sick, lingered between life and death until the next Tuesday—exactly one week later. By a strange coincidence his brother, John Andrew Chapman, passed away one hour before he did in the same hospital at Torrance, California.

Dual services were conducted by Elder John P. Davis, pastor of the Long Beach church, on August 5, 1950. Interment was at Goleta, California, near his last pastorate at Santa Barbara.

Briefs

SAULT STE. MARIE, MICHIGAN.—New officers elected at the annual business meeting are Orval G. King, pastor; Wesley Brady, church school director; Elizabeth Brown, women's department leader, young people's leader, and teacher of adult class; Alma King, music director; John Tomlinson, treasurer and deacon; Donna Tomlinson, librarian; Orval King, publicity agent and book steward.

Apostle C. George Mesley, Missionaries Louis Zonker and William McMurray have recently visited the branch.

The women's department sponsored a bake sale, a rummage and fancywork sale.—Reported by ORVAL KING.

WABASH, ONTARIO.—Anniversary services were held November 12. District President E. E. Smith, Elder James Kelley, and Bishop J. E. Baldwin were the speakers.

On November 14 a chicken supper was served by the sisters of the branch. Over three hundred people attended.

On November 20 Bishop Baldwin spoke at the church.—Reported by MRS. C. W. BADDER.

JACKSON, MICHIGAN.—Three young people: Dorothy and Dorris Leverett and Ervin Blosser were baptized by Pastor Robert Smith at services held in the Y.M.C.A. building. Brother Monroe gave a short message.

The group returned to the church for the preaching and confirmation service. Brother Stanke was guest speaker. Brothers Stanke, Cox, and Price confirmed the young people.

All the Jackson group attended the district conference held at Lansing, Michigan. Two young men from the group were called to the priesthood, and the calls were approved.

Evangelist E. R. Carter will conduct a week of missionary services beginning November 26. The priesthood are making special efforts to visit all members.—Reported by CHARLES BOBBETT.

ROCKLAND, MAINE.—Annual business meeting was held October 15. Brother Donald Harvey presided and explained proper procedure and parliamentary rules to the group. The last report was read and accepted. The treasurer's report was given and approved.

Brother and Sister Harvey Wass from Machias were welcomed as new members of the branch. Officers sustained were George Woodward, branch president, Pearl Billings, counselor to branch president; Hazel Woodward, secretary; Pearl Billings, treasurer; Ernest Heath, church school director. Those elected were George Woodward, Pearl Billings, and Sister Harvey Wass to finance committee; Sister Edna Harvey, women's department leader; Coleman Woodward, young people's leader and custodian; Edna Heath, publicity agent. ROSEBURG, OREGON.—On November 18, 19 District President J. L. Verhei, Sister Effie Verhei, Bishop Monte E. Lasater, and Elder Miles Whiting and Sister Clara Whiting, conducted an institute. Saturday evening a class was held at the home of Pastor John Rodley. Brother Verhei was in charge.

Sunday meetings were held in the Seventh Day Adventist Church. Brother Harry Ruchaber was ordained to the office of priest by his father, Elder J. F. Ruchaber, assisted by Elder John Rodley and Jasper Giberson. Following the ordination, a prayer meeting was held with Brother Verhei in charge.

Sister Effie Verhei was in charge of the church school and Brother Verhei was in charge of the 11:00 service and Bishop Lasater spoke.

A basket dinner was held at noon at the home of Pastor John Rodley.

At 2:00 p.m. a round table was held to discuss the various activities of the church. The district officers were in charge. Following the discussion, the annual business meeting was held. New officers are John Rodley, pastor; Ana Laird, secretary and treasurer; J. F. Ruchaber, auditor; Harry F. Ruchaber, church school director; Thelma Ruchaber, women's leader; Sam L. Morris, young people's leader; Amy Ruchaber, music leader; Maxine Rodley, publicity and social leader; Irene Morris, librarian and historian; J. F. Ruchaber, bishop's solicitor. Elder J. F. Ruchaber was elected for a three-year term on the building committee. Elder Miles Whiting preached in the evening.—Reported by JOHN RODLEY.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI.—Missionary J. Charles May held a series of services October 10 to 24 at the new Scenic Chapel. As a climax to Brother May's meetings, a city-wide rally was held at the Central Church. Preceding the rally five people were baptized, making a total of twenty-three for the year.

Following a song service and a movie shown by Mr. J. E. Hermann of his recent tour of Europe, refreshments were served in the lower auditorium.

The branch had a part in the Spring River district retreat held October 27-29 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Boles of Chadwick, Missouri. Ninety-eight registered for the retreat.

District President Stephen Black, Cecil Ettinger, and Arthur Dixon were in charge of classes and all activities.

On Sunday evening Sister Charlcie Yoeman presented a drama entitled "Great Women of the Book of Mormon."

December 3 will mark a day of progress for the Saints in Springfield. At this time the new Scenic Chapel will be dedicated with Apostle Chesworth and District President Stephen Black in charge.

Elder Francis M. Bishop, who has served as pastor of the Robberson Avenue church for many years and whose effort and guidance greatly aided in completion of Scenic Chapel, spoke at the opening service. The new church is located at 2722 W. Mt. Vernon Street, and Elder Glenn Yoeman is serving as pastor.—Reported by HELEN NYE.

MUSIC

On December 10 the Messiah Choir held the final rehearsal with the Independence Symphonic Orchestra for the program on December 24. The rehearsal was held in the main room of the Auditorium.

TRAINING

A church school institute stressing leadership education was held in Chicago on December 8, 9, and 10. Those on the staff were Mrs. Mattie Bell, Mrs. Lydia Wight, J. C. Stewart, and John Darling.

ENDEAVOR

Mrs. Edith Ross last April obtained some quarterlies and songbooks from the Santa Ana, California, Branch and started a Community Sunday school at Wilsona Route, Lancaster, California. There are now about sixteen in regular attendance with kindergarten, primary, and junior classes. There are four families who are church members. Now there is a need for an adult class. Sister Ross is to be commended for her work in organizing this Sunday school group near Lancaster.

AT STONE CHURCH

The Independence Music Club presented its annual Christmas Vespers Program to an audience of some five hundred people at the Stone Church on December 10.

Papal Bull Proclaimed

in the pages of the Bible. To him the assumption of Mary into heaven was always true, but it was not given the position of an official doctrine of the church until the Pope proclaimed it so.

A TRAGIC HOAX

The tragedy of this hoax is apparent to anyone who examines the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church today. The "teaching Church" has led its unsuspecting members so far away from the foundation of the apostles and prophets that in one of its official pronouncements it has actually cursed all those who still believe the simple message of the Christian Gospel (The Canons and Decrees of the Council of Trent, Session VI, chapter XVI, Canons ix and xii).

Of such a church the Church's Founder still insists: "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."—Matthew 15:9. "Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that use their tongues, and say, He saith."—Jeremiah 23:31.

To find the truth about any point of Christian doctrine, God directs the Christian to his Bible, not to "the teaching Church." Christ says: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth; and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

WHAT DOES THE BIBLE SAY?

But what does the Bible say about the Virgin Mary? It tells us that she was a pious Jewish girl whom God selected to be the virgin mother of his Son (Luke 1:26-38). That, and little more.

It does not tell us that Mary was born without sin. Indeed, it does tell us that Mary rejoiced in God her "Savior" (Luke 1:47) and thereby took her place with the host of sinners whom Christ, her Son, had come into the world to save.

It does not tell us that Mary had any part in Christ's great work of redemption. In fact, among the few references to Mary which the Bible does record, one pictures her as not fully understanding the mission of her divine Son (Luke 2:48-50), and another shows her inviting his tender rebuke for presuming upon his ministry (John 2:4).

Of her declining years, her death and burial, the Bible tells us next to nothing. All that we know is that after the Savior's crucifixion the Apostle John "took her unto his own home" (John 19:28). Beyond that, no one, not even the Pope of Rome, has any accurate knowledge.

Protestants are happy to remember Mary as the one woman whom God has honored above all others—by selecting her to be the human mother of Jesus Christ, his only Son. But Protestants refuse to share in the idolatry of the Roman Catholic Church which down through the ages has added fiction to fiction until today the mother of Christ has been exalted to a position almost equal to that of her divine Son.

Protestants still believe that fiction remains fiction, no matter who proclaims it a fact!

Thus again Protestantism resumes the role of Martin Luther in disputing the right and authority of the Papacy to impose new doctrines on the faithful.

Ministry to New Members

difficult for the new member who is asked to sit and listen and do nothing else for the church.

Wisdom indicates that we should find something good and useful for new members to do. They have many and varied talents. The church has many tasks. The capacity to serve and the need for service should meet in the life of the members.

A mild warning is indicated—that we should not overload or overwork the new member. But work is good for him within reasonable limits.

The new member who works for God will find it easier to be loyal and consecrated.

Mrs. Sharp, the former Tresa Condit, attended Graceland College and is a graduate of Drake University. Mr. Sharp recently joined the church.

DEATHS

COOPER.—Alwilda, died November 19, 1950, at her home in Nettleton, Arkansas, at the age of seventy-six. She had been a member of the Reorganized Church the past thirty-two years.

She is survived by one son, Eddie Cooper of Lake City, Arkansas; a daughter, Mrs. Marvin Wingfield of Nettleton, Arkansas; two half-brothers: Rufus Cate of Bloomfield, Missouri, and R. W. Cate of Kirkwood, Missouri; seven grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren. Mr. Cooper preceded her in death on December 19, 1945. Funeral services were conducted at the Gum-point church, Brother Giles Turner officiating. Burial was in Bowman cemetery.

CULVER.—Charles Erwin, son of Elisha G. and Octavia Dexter Culver, was born October 28, 1860, in Hartford, Vermont, and died November 15, 1950, at the home of his sister, Mrs. Maude Lum, in Independence, Missouri, where he had been staying the past two years. He was baptized a member of the Reorganized Church on August 1, 1880, and on August 12, 1900, was ordained a deacon, in which office he served until his death.

He leaves a daughter, Mrs. Sue Bogue of Holt, Missouri; a stepdaughter, Mrs. Florence Wood of Oak Grove, Missouri; a stepson, Forrest Ballinger of Grain Valley, Missouri; his sister, Mrs. Lum; and two grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the H. W. Stahl Chapel in Independence, Elders C. W. Clark and Arthur E. Stoff officiating. Burial was in Mound Grove Cemetery.

WHILE SOFT MUSIC was played, members of the congregation filed one by one down the center aisle of the church bearing neat, white gifts which they placed in the bright colored baskets. Some of the Saints dropped bills or crisp white checks in the blue urn that stood above the baskets. The pastor stood on the edge of the platform, smiling at his flock with love in his eyes. These good people were giving out of their need; he knew that to be true of not just one, but of many. They were true Saints, humble, sincere, united in their purpose to bring about the work of the kingdom of heaven on earth.

The good pastor couldn't help noticing two small boys in the group. Both were simply dressed. Their sleeves were a little short around the wrists and neat patches were on their knees. Brother Emerson recognized one as the little Hutchins boy, a regular attendant at church school who listened earnestly in class and at worship. Brother Emerson swallowed a lump in his throat. That lad had nothing to bring surely. His mother needed every morsel for her family, and Frank was too small to earn money by himself. But the wide-eyed boy, grasping Frank tightly by the hand, was a stranger. Brother Emerson had never seen him before.

As Frank and his little friend approached the basket and the urn, Frank cast a long look at them and then turned his gaze to Brother Emerson. The pastor leaned down to catch his words.

"I didn't have any money or any gift to bring to Jesus today," he said in a low voice, "but I brought my friend Jimmy. I've told him about Jesus, and I thought maybe you'd let him be my gift this Christmas. He wants to come with me all the time."

The lump grew larger in the pastor's throat, and glistening tears coursed down his cheeks as he said simply, "Thank you, Frank, yours is a very precious gift indeed—more precious than any other you could have brought."

 CHAGRIN RIVER

A November 13 P. S. carried a question as to why the Chagrin River, near Kirtland, was so named. Brother Earnest A. Webbe, a student and long-time resident there, sends this interesting explanation:

"This northeastern portion of Ohio is still known as the Western Reserve, having been purchased from the Indians by the British, and came into the possession of the United States with the Revolutionary War, its broad lands being sold to indemnify victims and veterans of that occasion. Kirtland township of five square miles was bid for and sold to Jared Kirtland, the naturalist, for $3,000. The Connecticut Land Company was formed to handle these matters, and Moses Cleveland, a surveyor, was commissioned to come here and lay out the city of Cleveland. His party, guided by Indians, arrived at the mouth of the river now known as Chagrin, where camp was made, and a number of days' heavy work accomplished only to learn that the river they sought was twenty miles further west, the Cuyahoga. Moses was peeved and gave the local river the name of 'Chagrin' as known today.

"Another common story of the time is of interest: The first white child born hereabouts was the child of a young couple, settlers from New England—the Abbots of Massachusetts. The Indians of several villages took great delight in borrowing the infant for hours at a time. The mother wished to have a "christening" for the child. An aged chief learned of this and offered his services as a high priest, took the child in his arms to an open spot in the forest where the sunlight streamed down, and pronounced the name "Shi-ne-a-ah" upon it, meaning "Little Flower of the Forest." Cleveland itself was long known as the "Forest City." Book of Mormon students may see some significance in the episode of the Lamanite high priest blessing the first white child so near to Kirtland. Then again the wonder of the Temple is still that it was made out of the virgin forest and rocks—everything but the glass, some later from the first glass factories near Erie, New York."

 JOKES

A nice thing about telling stories from "Reader's Digest" is that everybody has already read them, figured out the point, and knows when to laugh. The subdued chuckle of warmed-over appreciation is better, in general, than the cold silence of one who doesn't get it. *

 LAMONI

"The Chronicle" carries the news that Grace-land Yellow Jackets have ended this season with no defeats, first time since 1936. This is the fourth time in five years that Coach R. A. Carter has piloted his team in taking the Interstate Conference football championship. They trimmed Kemper 32-7. . . . Your friend, KCM, back from Chicago, thinks the home town looks fine by comparison. And doesn't home always look better than other places? . . . Patronage is up at the public library, where they'd rather lend than borrow. . . . Young Johnny Marsh plans a hitch in the Navy as a prelude to a teaching career. Is teaching that rugged these days?
